4. Not be engaged in or propose to engage in petroleum exploration and production, mining, or other extractive industries;
5. Not be a development stage company that either has no specific business plan or purpose, or has indicated that its business plan is to engage in a merger or acquisition with an unidentified company or companies or other entity or person; and
6. Not be disqualified by "bad boy" provisions.ⁿ⁶⁰

There are other conditions and limitations on SCOR, although they vary from state to state. Typically there is a minimum per share offering price, and the issuer must agree not to undertake stock splits or stock dividends within a prescribed period of time following effectiveness of the U-7 registration statement.ⁿ⁶¹ A SCOR registration in the Maryland, for example, is specifically conditioned on an undertaking by the issuer not to split its common stock, or declare a stock dividend, for two years following effectiveness of the registration.ⁿ⁶² SCOR issuers in Maryland are further required during the course of the offering to file quarterly reports with the administrator containing prescribed information, as well as annual financial reports for a period of three years following the effective date of the registration. Sales and advertising material must also be filed.

States that have not specifically adopted the SCOR procedure nevertheless make provision for small corporate offerings. Georgia, for example, makes specific provision for "Small Issue" registration by an issuer or an affiliate of an issuer when the following conditions are met:

- The aggregate amount of the total offering, within or outside the state, does not exceed $500,000; or
- The aggregate number of persons in the state purchasing the securities registered under this provision from the issuer and all affiliates of the issuer during any 12 month period does not exceed 50 persons, including those person who acquire such securities in transactions that are otherwise exempt under a specific Georgia limited offering exemption. Securities issued in a Small Issuer registration in reliance on the numerical limitation on the number of investors may not be resold or transferred except pursuant to a registration statement or exemption for a period of one year from the date of issuance.ⁿ⁶³

The content of a Small Issuer registration statement in Georgia is prescribed by the Act, as well as the use of a prospectus that is a part of the registration statement. Although not prescribed as such, the form and content of the registration statement tracks Form U-7.ⁿ⁶⁴ Other requirements may be imposed. In Minnesota for example, the Commissioner is granted discretion in regard to SCOR registrations to issue stop orders for any of the following reasons in addition to those applicable to all registrations:

- The issuer's principal place of business is not in Minnesota, or in North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa or Wisconsin;
- At least 50% of the issuer's full time employees are not located in Minnesota or in the contiguous states identified above; or
- At least 80% of the net proceeds of the offering are not going to be used in connection with the operations of the issuer in Minnesota or the contiguous states.

The Commissioner is also empowered to impose suitability requirements for investors in SCOR offerings.

The intent of the SCOR registration option for states is to offer a vehicle for development stage companies to raise capital, to provide investment opportunities to local investors, to streamline the regulatory process, and also to provide a tool for economic development. It is thus particularly compatible with the intrastate offering exemption under the Federal Securities Act of 1933. The main barrier to reliance on the SCOR offering process is the maximum $1 million offering limitation. However, the advantages of SCOR lie in the minimization of compliance costs. There are, for example, no purchaser limitations, either as to number or sophistication. On the other hand, SCOR offerings are subjected to merit regulation in those states that continue to apply it. There is no special review treatment accorded SCOR offerings in these states, and the application of merit guidelines will determine whether the offering may proceed.

[3] Other Limited Offerings

[a] Regulation A Offerings Regulation A has long been a part of the federal securities laws, and creates a limited or "conditional" small issues exemption pursuant to section 3(b) of the Federal Securities Act of 1933 for offerings up to $ 5 million, but subject to fairly rigorous procedures.ⁿ⁶⁵ Regulation A is comprised of SEC Rules 251 through 263 under the Federal Securities Act of 1933. Since the adoption of Regulation D, so-called "Reg A" offerings are less common. While promulgated pursuant to an exemption provision of the federal Act, Regulation A offerings involve a form of registration filed with the SEC, and the process is more akin to a conventional federal registration. For that reason, offerings made in reliance on Rule 505 of Regulation D, which is available to cover the same maximum amount as Regulation A, and which exempt the issuer from any federal filing other than a notice filing on Form D, more often presents the cost-efficient approach to an offering up to $5 million. However, advantages of Regulation A over Rule 505, and Regulation D generally, include:

- (1) There is no restriction on the resale of the securities;
- (2) Advertising and sales literature may be used in the offering;
- (3) "Testing the waters" is permitted in accordance with an applicable rule; and
- (4) There are no purchaser qualifications or limitations.

The main feature of Regulation A offerings impacting small business capital formation is the requirement for preparation, filing and use of an "offering circular" containing specified information. Yet, as seen earlier in regard to Rule 505 offerings, the information requirement for non-accredited investors incorporates Regulation A requirements in any event. Thus, essentially the same information would be required in either manner of offering, the only difference being that in Regulation A there is an SEC filing and review procedure.

Regulation A does not interface with state law exemptions under the ULOE or otherwise. Thus, in states making no provision for "testing the waters" by solicitations of interest, for example, use of that procedure under Regulation A may well violate the applicable Blue Sky law. A considerable number of states do not make provision for solicitations of interest, although others, such as Iowa,ⁿ⁶⁶ expressly permit solicitation of indications of interest for the purpose of indicating interest in receiving an offering circular or its equivalent. In states where solicitations of interest are permitted, there is normally a prescribed form and an advance filing requirement. Conditions also apply regarding issuers eligible to engage in the process.ⁿ⁶⁷

Use of Regulation A is made subject to issuer qualification criteria, which are essentially the same "bad boy" disqualifications that are now apart of Regulation D and ULOE analogs in the states. Besides the SEC filing, there are other procedures that add to the compliance burden. Sales and advertising literature must be filed with the SEC, and there are reporting requirements regarding sales and use of proceeds. Because there is no coordinate state law exemption for federal Regulation A offerings, they will in many cases be subject to state registration by qualification. The utility, however, may be the greater amount limitation than would be available under Rule 504 of Regulation D and the absence of any restrictions on purchasers, particularly in those states that do permit testing the waters.

[b] Other State Alternatives The universe of limited offering exemptions under state Blue Sky laws is considerable. Although substantial uniformity is achieved in regard to federal Regulation D offerings through the ULOE or equivalents among the states, and SCOR, there is a considerable array of other limited offering provisions. These include the various "private" offering exemptions or procedures that were in place prior to Regulation D and the ULOE. Other approaches to limited offerings include that illustrated by Michigan, which includes among its provision an exemption for sales of securities to promoters and other persons actively engaged in or reasonably expected to be engaged in the management of the issuer.ⁿ⁶⁸ The exemption extends to sales to persons who are related by blood or marriage to the promoter or person who is actively engaged in management, and who purchase with investment intent. Although the Michigan exemption is limited to sales to no more than ten persons in any twelve month period, the utility for small business capital formation is apparent. These issuer "relationship" exemptions are premised on the fact that the purchasers involved have access to all material facts with respect to the securities either by being actively involved or related to a person who is actively involved.ⁿ⁶⁹

Intrastate "issuer" exemptions have previously been discussed in regard to their utility in coordinating the federal intrastate offering exemption.ⁿ⁷⁰ These are useful alternatives in small business capital formation and impose only a minimal regulatory burden.ⁿ⁷¹ Several states simply exempt "small" offerings, usually up to $500,000 when certain conditions are met.ⁿ⁷² These states may or may not also provide for a de minimis exemption in the manner discussed

As reflected in the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, all states make some meaningful provision for facilitation of small business capital formation through either outright exemptions or limited offering procedures. Thus, the 2002 Uniform Act itself provides an exemption for limited offering transactions to not more than 25 non-institutional purchasers during any twelve consecutive months, when certain conditions are satisfied.ⁿ⁷⁴ The drafters note that this provision would also apply to preorganization limited offerings as well as operating company limited offerings.ⁿ⁷⁵

Each of the State Guides summarizes the limited offering alternatives available in that state. The critical consideration in each instance remains, however, its coordination with an available federal exemption. The avenues available for small business capital formation under Blue Sky laws are numerous and varied. They do not operate independently of federal securities regulation, and for that reason the practical emphasis in small business capital formation militates to transactions which satisfy either the federal intrastate offering exemption or qualify under one of the provisions of Regulation D under the Federal Securities Act of 1933. One Regulation D alternative remains to be addressed, namely, reliance on Rule 504 which, although generally not exempt from registration at the state level, may provide needed flexibility. State level treatment of Rule 504 offerings is considered further in § 10.05 below.

This reference in the 2002 Uniform Act comments also serves as a reminder that many Blue Sky laws exempt offers (but not sales) of preorganization subscriptions when certain limiting conditions are satisfied. In Pennsylvania, for example, there is an exemption for offers and sales of preorganization subscriptions or securities of a newly formed entity to no more than five persons as part of its initial capitalization. 70 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1-203.

In most other states the availability of an exemption relating to preorganization subscriptions may be meaningful in the process of identifying sources of capital. However, the exemption does not extend to actual sales of the securities, and no funds may be collected in connection with the offers.

CHAPTER 10 Regulation of Small Business Capital Formation

§ 10.05 SEC Rule 504 Offerings Under Blue Sky Laws.

Rule 504 of Regulation D under the Federal Securities Act of 1933ⁿ⁷⁶ creates an exemption from federal registration requirements for limited offers and sales of securities not exceeding $ 1 million. There are issuer qualifications,ⁿ⁷⁷ and the conditions specified in Rule 501 and Rule 502(a),(c) and (d) applicable to all Regulation D offerings apply with equal force to Rule 504 offerings. However, the conditions contained in Rule 502(c) --limitations on the manner of offering-- and 502(d) --limitations on resale-- do not apply to Rule 504 offerings that are made:

(i) Exclusively in one or more states that provide for the registration of the securities, and require the public filing and delivery to investors of a substantive disclosure document before sale, and are made in accordance with those state provisions... [or]

(iii) Exclusively according to state law exemptions from registration that permit general solicitation and general advertising so long as sales are made only to "accredited investors" as defined in § 230.501(a).ⁿ⁷⁸

Securities offered and sold pursuant to Rule 504 are not federal covered securities, and in most states are not within the ambit of the ULOE or its equivalent.ⁿ⁷⁹ Thus, Rule 504 offerings generally must comply with registration requirements under Blue Sky laws, and indeed, in most cases are subject to registration by "qualification," although in some instances special provision is made to limit the scope of merit review or application of merit guidelines in those states that that engage in the process. The State of Washington, for example, applies only the following among its merit review standards to offerings that qualify for small corporate offering registration in that state:

- Promotional shares, but limiting the escrow requirement that would otherwise apply;
- Loans and material affiliated transactions;
- Options and warrants;
- Impoundment of proceeds;
- Specificity in use of proceeds;
- Unsound financial conditions;

- Preferred stock; and
- Unequal voting rights.ⁿ⁸⁰

To facilitate this process, and with a view to minimizing the burden and expense imposed on small business issuers, many states implemented the Uniform Limited Offering Registration (ULOR) protocol, designed specially for compliance by small business issuers seeking up to $1 million in capital in conformity with SEC Rule 504.ⁿ⁸¹ ULOR and SCOR may be referenced interchangeably, and both are grounded in use of Form U-7-the SCOR registration form.

State registration of offerings made in reliance on SEC Rule 504 in some states involves a filing by the issuer on Form U-1-the Uniform Application to Register Securities-- accompanied by Form U-7, which serves as the disclosure document in the offering, along with various other documents and materials.ⁿ⁸² More often, however, only Form U-7 and designated attachments or included materials are required. While the filing procedure is not simple, the overarching intent among the states is that it be expedited. Thus, there may be a specific provision for automatic effectiveness or expedited review. In Iowa, for example:

Unless the administrator issues a stop order denying the effectiveness of the registration as provided in [the Act] the registration becomes effective on the fifth business day after the registration has been filed with the administrator, or earlier if the administrator permits a shorter time period between registration and effectiveness.ⁿ⁸³

On the other hand, New Mexico makes clear that the issuer should expect comments and questions concerning the answers set forth in Form U-7, and that changes may be required to be made before the registration is declared effective.ⁿ⁸⁴ Once effective, by whatever procedure, Form U-7, when used for registration of offerings exempt under Rule 504 of Regulation D may be used in lieu of the offering circular or other disclosure document or documents that would otherwise be required.ⁿ⁸⁵

In the wake of NSMIA, state authority to regulate capital formation activities through securities registration requirements is largely confined to offerings carried out in reliance upon the federal exemption accorded by Rule 504 of Regulation D, although in states without the ULOE or an equivalent, SEC Rule 505 and Regulation A offerings also remain subject to that authority. Much has been accomplished to ease the burden of small issuers who remain subject to state Blue Sky registration authority, and to support their ability to access capital efficiently. Nevertheless, if the only practical means of securing an exemption from federal registration requirements is Rule 504 of Regulation D, the small business issuer must, in most cases, face the burden of registration by qualification. The burden is ameliorated only to the extent that SCOR procedure is available, and the extent to which, if any, a state has made special provisions for small business capital formation beyond acceptance of Form U-7 as the required form of registration statement and offering document.

Rule 504, as with each of the exemptions available under Regulation D, is non-exclusive. A small business issuer may rely on any other applicable federal exemption, including section 4(2), outside of Regulation D, or more often, section 3(a)(11), the intrastate offering exemption. Many small offerings will qualify for more than one federal exemption. Nevertheless, an offering exempt under any of these provisions remains subject to state registration requirements unless a coordinate exemption is available. Even though Form U-7 will likely be available in the states for small issuers relying on these other federal exemptions, the flexibility afforded by Rule 504 in regard to the number and nature of purchasers will in many cases outweigh any other limitations in those situations in which the offering is subject to state registration in any event.

1-10 Blue Sky Regulation § 10.06

§ 10.06 Integration and Continuing Capital Formation

Integration of securities offerings occurs when separate sales of securities by an issuer are deemed to be part of "an issue." Integration operates to make separate sales of securities part of the same offering, and when it occurs the consequences are generally negative for issuer that have relied upon exemptions from federal or state registration that are based upon limitations that are exceeded or violated as a result of the integration of two or more offerings.

The process of small business capital formation is often carried out in stages, proceeding initially from "seed" capital to broader financing initiatives. While such stages may be quite separate and distinct undertakings, they may in some cases be seen as in fact part of a single plan of financing. In other situations an abandoned initiative, such as a registered offering in a state in reliance undertaken in reliance upon Rule 504 of Regulation D at the federal level that is abandoned and later followed by another form of limited or private offering in the state, may raise the prospect of integration. In such cases the abandoned registered offering might be considered a part of the later limited or private offering, so as to preclude availability of an exemption for the latter.

To determine whether ostensibly separate securities offerings should be integrated, several elements have been developed by which administrators assess whether there are compelling reasons to treat either a prior or subsequent sale or offering as part of another offering. The elements to be considered are:

- (a) Whether the sales are part of a single plan of financing;
- (b) Whether the sales involved issuance of the same class of security;
- (c) Whether the sales are made at or about the same time;
- (d) Whether the same type of consideration is received; and
- (e) Whether the sales are made for the same general purpose.ⁿ⁸⁶

For offerings made in reliance upon any of the provisions of Regulation D under the Federal Securities Act of 1933, integration is specifically addressed in SEC Rule 502(a),ⁿ⁸⁷ which provides:

All sales that are part of the same Regulation D offering must meet all of the terms and conditions of Regulation D. Offers and sales that are made more than six months before the start of a Regulation D offering or are made more than six months after completion of a Regulation D offering will not be considered part of that Regulation offering, so long as during those six month periods there are no offers or sales of securities by or for the issuer that are of the same or a similar class as those offered or sold under Regulation, other than those offers or sales of securities under an employee benefit plan as defined in Rule 405 under the Act.

The question of integration for purposes of Regulation D offerings is otherwise a factual one, determined on the same elements identified above as are applied at the state level. However, consistent with the mission of Regulation D to provide for "safe harbors," the Rule 502(a) six month forward and backward looks makes possible a more objective assessment. State level assessments are more difficult.

In many instances of small business capital formation, initial or "seed" capital may be raised via an available state de minimis or other limited issuer exemption that affords maximum freedom in selling securities to a small number of people in circumstances that satisfy criteria for the intrastate offering exemption at the federal level. The operative notion is that initial capital formation is a discrete event, and not part of a continuing process. In practical terms, however, the process may actually proceed on a continuum, and the consequences of integration become apparent when subsequent sales of securities made ostensibly in reliance upon the same or another combination of federal and state exemptions are determined to be part of the same or "single" issue, for which the combined components do not qualify for an exemption.

Integration must, therefore, be carefully considered in any capital formation initiative. The exemptions from state and federal registration procedures are based upon specific sets of circumstances in which there is either no need for the protection afforded by the registration process, or in which the objective is accomplished by other means. However, as a cautionary note to Regulation D of the federal Securities Act makes clear:

In view of the objectives of these rules and the policies underlying the Act, Regulation D is not available to any issuer for any transaction or chain of transactions that, although in technical compliance with these rules, is part of a plan or scheme to evade the registration provisions of the Act. In such cases, registration under the Act is required.ⁿ⁸⁸

In the exercise of their enforcement authority state securities regulators will examine a series or chain of transactions in the same manner. Additionally, individual state exemptions themselves may contain an integration element in regard, for example, to the manner of counting purchasers in determining compliance with the numerical limitations on purchasers.ⁿ⁸⁹

Small business issuers must also be aware of special considerations for integration regarding an abandoned offering. As noted above, limitations on the number of offerees or purchasers in connection with various state level exemptions may provide for integration of all offers within a specified period, regardless of whether any sales actually took place. The decision to abandon a particular capital formation initiative does not mean that the small business issuer is free to pursue a subsequent effort without regard to the prior abandoned one. Each state exemption on which an issuer relies must be examined closely to determine whether any prior activity impacts the current availability of that exemption.

At the federal level the Securities and Exchange Commission has taken steps to lessen uncertainty regarding integration where abandoned registered or private offerings are either followed by or preceded another registered or private offering. In Rule 155ⁿ⁹⁰ under the Federal Securities Act of 1933 a "safe harbor" is established for issuers. Under Rule 155, an abandoned private offering followed by a registered offering, or conversely, and abandoned registered offering followed by a private offering will not be integrated when certain criteria are satisfied. Small business capital formation will not likely involve any registered offering under the federal Act, however, and the Rule 155 criteria afford no help to issuers in those circumstances in which only exempt transactions are involved. As an accommodation for multi-state offerings conducted pursuant to Rule 504, however, offers and sales may also be made in states that do not require registration and use of an offering circular, provided purchasers in those states without such requirements also receive the offering circular prior to any sales being made to them, see 17 C.F.R. § 230.504(b)(1)(ii).

CHAPTER 11 Regulation of Intermediaries: Broker-Dealers, Investment Advisers and Associated Persons

§ 11.01 Intermediary Regulation Generally

In Chapters 5 and 6, registration and other elements of Blue Sky regulation in the distribution of securities were examined. Although the role of state securities regulation in the distribution of securities is significantly diminished in the wake of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 ("NSMIA"),ⁿ¹ the mission of state Blue Sky laws to regulate the quality and conduct of market intermediaries who engage in business of selling securities or advising others in regard to their purchases has taken on greater importance. Indeed, as to investment advisers and their agents, NSMIA shifted registration and regulatory authority over large numbers of smaller investment advisers who no longer meet quantitative business requirements for registration with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ² As for broker-dealers and securities salespersons, NSMIA addressed certain practical elements of individual state regulation in a nationally mobile society, and mandated uniformity in various operational and capital requirements.ⁿ³ However, the important licensing and qualification standards imposed by the states were left fully intact, along with all antifraud enforcement powers. It can be fairly said that in the post-NSMIA era, intermediary regulation has become the central feature of state securities law.

Here and throughout this chapter "intermediary" is the functional descriptor for brokers, dealers, broker-dealers, investment advisers, representatives, agents, salespersons, associated persons and any other functionary by which or through whom securities transactions are made or facilitated. On a larger scale, intermediaries range from entire markets themselves to clerical assistants in the office of an independent financial planner. Mutual funds (investment companies), insurance companies offering investment products and banks are all intermediaries, and to varying degrees they and other financial institutions are subject to regulation under federal and state securities laws. For state securities administrators, however, the focus day-to-day is on broker-dealers, investment advisers and their respective representatives or associated persons who interface with citizen investors, and who by their position may cheat, mislead or otherwise abuse a trust placed in them.

Consistent with the historic paternalistic mission of state Blue Sky laws, intermediary regulation by states has always been grounded in qualitative standards for licensing of those persons who, functionally, "engage in business" as such. The Uniform Act,ⁿ⁴ for example, simply defines "broker-dealer" as: "[A]ny person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others or for his own account."ⁿ⁵ To be sure, there are several exclusions from the definition,ⁿ⁶ but, subject to application of the "engaged in the business" element, the functional definition is broad enough to reach a variety of non-traditional market intermediaries. Similarly, the definition of "investment adviser" that is widely adopted among the states brings within state regulatory authority any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others as to the value of securities, or the advisability of investing in or purchasing securities.ⁿ⁷ And an "agent" of either a broker-dealer or investment adviser is defined in terms of a "representative" effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities, or, where advisers are involved, a supervised person advising others as to purchases and sales or investments generally. State licensing requirements for individuals acting as agents are commonly phrased in terms of "salespersons" in the broker-dealer setting, and "investment adviser representatives" in that context.ⁿ⁸

The dual system of federal-state regulation of intermediaries involves both "registration" and licensing. Registration of intermediaries is a function of federal law, for broker-dealers under section 15(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,ⁿ⁹ and for investment advisers under section 203 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ¹⁰ "Registration" of a broker-dealer with the SEC under the federal securities laws does not equate with licensing as a matter of state law. The SEC does not "license" broker-dealers or investment advisers. For broker-dealers, the Exchange Act and SEC rules adopted under it provide only for a registration application process but prescribe no qualitative standards or criteria upon which an application for registration is to be evaluated. Once an application on Form BD is filed, the SEC is empowered under section 15(b) of the Exchange Act formally to "institute proceedings" within a specified period of time in which to determine whether registration should be denied. Otherwise, if "requirements" are satisfied, registration must be granted.ⁿ¹¹ For investment advisers, the process is much the same under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

"Licensing" is the principal mechanism of state regulation of market intermediaries. Broker-dealers, investment advisers, salespersons and representatives must, absent an exemption, be licensed in each state in which the intermediary does business. Licensing of intermediaries has certain key components. For broker-dealers to become licensed, there are particular financial responsibility, organizational and operational requirements which they must meet. For individuals who are associated with broker-dealers or investment advisers in managerial or supervisory positions, there are examination requirements, as is also the case with salespersons and investment adviser representatives. Significant interpretive issues may arise in the assessment of what persons associated in some capacity with an intermediary are subject to licensing requirements. Investment advisers, for example, often enter into arrangements with "solicitors" who interact with potential advisory clients and make compensated referrals. In both broker-dealer and investment adviser settings, clerical and support staff may have meaningful interactions with investment or advisory clients that must be evaluated under "engaged in the business" definitions in Blue Sky laws. These particular issues are considered in more detail elsewhere.ⁿ¹²

Licensing under Blue Sky laws also involves an application process built around SEC Form BD and, for investment advisers, SEC Form ADV. The essential components of licensing are (1) demonstrated competency and (2) application of a qualitative standard. Competency is demonstrated by passing a National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. (NASD) examination applicable to the position and nature of securities activities of the person involved or, alternatively, where investment adviser representatives are involved, by attaining certain professional designations or qualifications. Typical qualitative standards involve a determination of "good business repute" or some like assessment based upon a review of one's prior securities activities and the presence or absence of issues reflecting on character and conduct.ⁿ¹³ As part of the licensing process states also impose operational and financial responsibility requirements. However, the fundamental distinction between state and federal processes is the qualitative assessment made by state administrators whether to grant the privilege to engage in business as a securities intermediary within their borders.

Once licensed, broker-dealers, investment advisers and their respective representatives remain subject to continuing state regulatory authority, including continuing financial responsibility as applicable, financial reporting, periodic inspections, and the full range of administrative and antifraud enforcement powers provided under Blue Sky laws. As to the last of these, NSMIA made clear that state securities regulators retain antifraud enforcement authority over all broker-dealers, investment advisers and their respective representatives within their state without regard to federal preemption of other aspects of regulatory authority.ⁿ¹⁴ NSMIA also assured the ability of the states to require initial and renewal fee payments and "notice" filings for those intermediaries otherwise exempt from registration and licensing requirements in a particular state. Thus, SEC-registered investment advisers remain subject to notice filing, annual renewal procedures, and payment of fees to states in which they engage in business.ⁿ¹⁵

Limitations on the scope of state regulation of intermediaries come by way of NSMIA preemption and by statutory exemptions. NSMIA imposed certain limitations with the goal of achieving uniformity in state and federal regulation, and also to eliminate unnecessary state intrusion in the dynamics of national markets in instances where there is no genuine need. Thus, NSMIA limits the ability of a state to regulate de minimis transactions by associated persons of a broker-dealer. The effect of the limitation is to permit representatives of licensed broker-dealers to effect transactions for existing customers in other states without being licensed in those states. There are meaningful requirements for this limitation on state authority to apply.ⁿ¹⁶ However, the objective of permitting continuity of service to a transient client population is clear enough, and legitimate state regulatory objectives are seen as being met through home state compliance.

State Blue Sky laws themselves expressly exempt several categories of persons from the key definitions. As noted earlier, for example, section 401(c) of the Uniform Act excludes several functional and institutional categories of persons from the definition of broker-dealer. Likewise, all state laws prescribe exclusions from the definition of "investment adviser" for certain institutions, professionals and others whose advisory activities are either secondary to other activities, or which are of a nature or scope as not to amount to being engaged in the business.ⁿ¹⁷ Even where not excluded from the definition of broker-dealer or investment adviser, intermediaries may be expressly exempt from licensing requirements based upon the scope of securities activities or the particular type of transactions in which the intermediary is involved. Some states, for example,ⁿ¹⁸ have adopted variants of section 202 of the Revised Uniform Act, which provides exemptions from the broker-dealer registration requirements for certain intermediaries who have no place of business in the state and meet other limiting criteria such as dealing exclusively with institutional investors.ⁿ¹⁹ And, after NSMIA, SEC-registered investment advisers are exempt from state registration and licensing (other than notice filing and fee payments) so long as they remain eligible for registration under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. Other statutory exemptions operate to exclude certain investment adviser representatives whose business is limited to a small number of clients and is otherwise limited in scope.

The burden of compliance by intermediaries with registration and licensing requirements in and among states has been lessened considerably, and the efficiency of regulation significantly raised, by the degree of process uniformity that has been achieved. The universal adoption of SEC Form BD as a uniform application for registration as a broker-dealer; the use of SEC Form ADV for registration of investment advisers; and the use of Form U-4, as the universal base form for registration and licensing of representatives, all combine with the automated processes made possible by the Central Registration Depository (CRD) and the Investment Adviser Registration Depository (IARD) to streamline multiple state compliance in a national market setting.ⁿ²⁰ A central examining authority is responsible for the administration of all securities industry qualification tests, and the examination requirements themselves are today substantially uniform among the states.

For broker-dealers, uniformity in regulation of important financial responsibility and operational requirements has been achieved under NSMIA, which, among other things, established a national standard for net capital requirements. States may not impose net capital requirements on broker-dealers that are different from or that add to those applicable as a matter of federal law.ⁿ²¹ Uniformity is also mandated for broker-dealer and investment adviser books and records requirements, to the extent that no state may require an intermediary to maintain more than what is required in the state in which the intermediary is licensed and maintains its principal place of business.ⁿ²²

The dual federal-state system of intermediary regulation is thus today, more than ever before, a coordinate system of registration, licensing and enforcement authority.ⁿ²³ Before considering all aspects of Blue Sky law in this system in greater detail, however, it is also necessary to understand the important role of self-regulation in the process. As briefly discussed earlier, federal registration of broker-dealers includes the requirement of Exchange Act Rule 15b7-1 that all associated persons who effect or are involved in effecting securities transactions be registered or approved in accordance with the standards of training, experience, competence and other qualification standards established by the rules of a self-regulatory organization or national securities exchange of which the broker-dealer is a member. Taken together, the effect of coordinate provisions in federal and state securities laws and their respective rules is a mandate that all broker-dealers licensed in a state be members of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. (NASD). The NASD, as the only "registered securities association" in operation under provisions of section 15A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,ⁿ²⁴ is itself charged under the Act with establishing and enforcing rules which, among other things, are designed to prevent fraud, promote just and equitable principles of trade, and, in general, to protect investors and the public interest.ⁿ²⁵

Collectively, FINRA and the national securities exchanges are Self-Regulatory Organizations (SROs), which focus on business practices and conduct of members and associated persons, as well as supervision of associated persons. They are membership organizations, selective in accordance with their own constitutions, by-laws and established standards. Through FINRA-administered mechanisms, "registration" of various classes of securities industry functionaries is accomplished by a series of qualifying examinations. All SROs have conduct rules under which their members and associated persons are bound to act, and the rules are enforced through ongoing inspections along with structured administrative and adjudicative processes. In this the SROs are fully subject to SEC oversight powers established under the Exchange Act.ⁿ²⁶

As a matter of state regulation of intermediaries, self-regulation plays a particularly important role by encompassing within the membership and ongoing operational and business conduct requirements large numbers of small broker-dealers and their "registered representatives" operating on a local or regional basis, as well as representatives who may be resident and conducting business in the state but whose affiliation is with a broker-dealer having no other meaningful presence in the state. FINRA membership entails important supervisory responsibilities of members over the conduct of business by representatives, and state securities administrators rely on the system of self-regulation not only as a critical adjunct in the administration of their own laws and regulations, but also as adding a large measure of investor protection. As a practical matter, state administrators are dependent upon the strength and efficiency of self-regulation in the allocation of their limited resources. In the entire scheme of state regulation of intermediaries the role of self-regulation should be neither missed nor overestimated.

Against this backdrop, this chapter examines the mechanics of Blue Sky regulation of intermediaries. The licensing process for broker-dealers, investment advisers and their respective representatives or associated persons, in addition to the scope of state licensing authority in that process, is considered. Ongoing, or post-licensing, compliance requirements are also addressed. Although some aspects of administrative and enforcement authority regarding intermediaries are discussed here, fuller consideration of those areas appears elsewhere in the treatise.ⁿ²⁷

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. "NSMIA" here and throughout this chapter and treatise refers to the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-290, 110 Stat. 3416 (1996), which re-defined state and federal securities regulatory authority, and substantially preempted state authority over distributions of securities that are national in character. The scope of federal preemption in this area is fully considered in Chapters 5 and 6, above, which examine the extent of remaining state authority in securities registration and merit regulation processes. As discussed below, however, NSMIA left the role of the states in intermediary regulation, that is, regulation of broker-dealers, salespersons, investment advisers and their associated persons, largely untouched. Indeed, as to investment advisers and their agents, the role of state regulation was in fact substantially advanced.

(n2)Footnote 2. By adding new section 203A, NSMIA amended the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 to preempt state regulation of investment advisers with more than $25 million in client assets under management, as well as all advisers to investment companies that are registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80a-1, et seq. Conversely, investment advisers falling below the threshold assets under management test no longer qualify for SEC registration, and regulatory authority has been shifted to the states. Note, however, as discussed below, that all investment adviser representatives are subject to state regulatory authority regardless of federal preemption as to the adviser itself.

(n3)Footnote 3. National standards in these areas, and the uniformity mandated by NSMIA generally, are considered in more detail in § 11.02[1].

(n4)Footnote 4. As used throughout this chapter and treatise, the "Uniform Act" refers to the Uniform Securities Act, as promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1956. The Uniform Act has been substantially adopted in a majority of states. The Uniform Act was revised in 1985, with that version thereafter referred to as the Revised Uniform Act. The Revised Uniform Act was incorporated piecemeal into a small number of state Blue Sky laws. The Uniform Act was again completely revised in 2002, and is now the Uniform Securities Act (2002), which has been adopted in several states, and is under consideration in a number of others. In this chapter and elsewhere in the Treatise, the Uniform Securities Act (2002) is referred to as the "2002 Uniform Act."

(1) an agent, (2) an issuer, (3) a bank, savings institution or trust company, or (4) a person who has no place of business in this state if (A) he effects transactions in this state exclusively with or through (i) the issuers of the securities involved in the transactions, (ii) other broker-dealers, or (iii) banks, savings institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trusts, or other financial institutions or institutional buyers, whether acting for themselves or as trustee, or (B) during any period of twelve consecutive months he does not direct more than fifteen offers to sell or buy into this state in any manner to persons other than those specified in clause (A), whether or not the offeror or any of the offerees is then present in this state.

[A]ny person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. ...

This definition restates that contained in section 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-2(a)(11), which is now the benchmark definition in all state laws as well. However, in several states, particularly those adopting the 2002 Uniform Act, the definition of investment adviser is broadened to include "financial planners" or other persons who "as an integral component of other financially related services, provides investment advice to others for compensation as part of a business that holds itself out as providing investment advice to others for compensation." 2002 Unif. Sec. Act § 102(15).

(n8)Footnote 8. Blue Sky law definitions of "investment adviser representative" are commonly grounded in the definition of "person associated with an investment adviser" set forth in section 202(a)(17) of the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-2(a)(17). Thus, for example, Section 102(16) of the 2002 Uniform Act defines investment adviser representative as:

[A]n individual employed by or associated with an investment adviser or federal covered adviser and who makes any recommendations or otherwise gives investment advice regarding securities, manages accounts or portfolios of clients, determines which recommendation or advice regarding securities should be given, provides investment advice or holds herself or himself out as providing investment advice, receives compensation to solicit, offer, or negotiate for the sale of or for selling investment advice, or supervises employees who perform any of the foregoing.

The "solicit" reference is not contained in the federal definition of investment adviser representative, and is a matter dealt with under federal law with specific rules governing solicitors. State securities laws approach the "solicitor" matter in different ways, in many cases adopting the federal rules governing solicitors rather than including them directly in the definition as in the 2002 Uniform Act.

Several states have adopted the definition of "investment adviser representative" contained in SEC Rule 203A-3 under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 17 C.F.R. § 275.203A-3(a). The variations among state definitions are considered in more detail in § 11.03[3].

(n9)Footnote 9. 15 U.S.C. § 78o(a). Excluding a broker-dealer whose business is exclusively intrastate and who does not make use of any facility of a national securities exchange, section 15(a) makes it unlawful for any broker-dealer to make use of means or instrumentalities of interstate commerce to effect transactions in or to attempt to induce transactions in non-exempted securities without being registered with the SEC.

The SEC may also deny an application for registration as a broker-dealer if it appears that the applicant, if registered, would be subject to suspension or revocation under section 15(b)(4) of the Act. Disqualifying criteria under this section include false or misleading statements in the application, certain criminal convictions, other administrative proceedings, and violations of the securities laws generally.

(n13)Footnote 13. Particular state standards are considered in more detail in § 11.04[3]. The Uniform Act provides, among other criteria, that an administrator may deny an application for licensing as a broker-dealer or investment adviser on a determination that the applicant or any of its principals "has engaged in dishonest or unethical practices in the securities business," or "is not qualified on the basis of such factors as training, experience and knowledge of the securities business." Unif. Sec. Act § 201(a).

(n14)Footnote 14. Regarding broker-dealers, for example, section 18(c) of the Securities Act of 1933, which was added in NSMIA's complete revision of section 18, provides for the preservation of state authority as follows:

(1) Fraud authority--Consistent with this section, the securities commission (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State shall retain jurisdiction under the laws of such State to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions.

(n15)Footnote 15. Section 222(a) of the Investment Advisers Act, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-18a(a), provides:

Nothing in this title shall affect the state of the securities commissioner (or any agency or officer performing like functions) of any State over any security or any person insofar as it does not conflict with the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

Blue Sky laws and regulations today combine to require that investment advisers registered with the SEC must make annual notice filings with state administrators typically comprised of copies of all forms and papers filed by the adviser with the SEC, along with an annual fee and consent to service of process.

"Investment adviser" does not include (1) a bank, savings institution or trust company; (2) a lawyer, accountant, engineer or teacher whose performance of these services is solely incidental to the practice of his profession; (3) a broker-dealer whose performance of these services is solely incidental to the conduct of his business as a broker-dealer and who receives no special compensation for them; (4) a publisher of any bona fide newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general, regular and paid circulation; (5) a person whose advice, analyses, or reports relate only to securities exempted by section 402(a)(1); (6) a person who has no place of business in this state if (A) his only clients in this state are other investment advisers, broker-dealers, banks, savings institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trusts, or other financial institutions or institutional buyers, whether acting for themselves or as trustees, or (B) during any period of twelve consecutive months he does not direct business communications into this state in any manner to more than five clients other than those specified in clause (A), whether or not he or any of the persons to whom the communications are directed is then present in this state; or (7) such other persons not within the intent of this paragraph as the [Administrator] may by rule or order designate.

(n21)Footnote 21. Section 15(h)(1) of the Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78o(h)(1), added by NSMIA, prohibits states from imposing minimum capital and bonding requirements on broker-dealers that differ from or are in addition to the requirements established under the Exchange Act. Section 222(c) of the Investment Advisers Act, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-18a(c), establishes the same limitation on state authority as to investment advisers, with the baseline being the requirements in place in the state in which the adviser is licensed and has its principal place of business. Net capital and other financial responsibility requirements applicable to broker-dealers, and intermediaries generally, are considered further in § 11.02[3][c].

Note, however, that under the federal regulatory structure there is presently no provision for any SRO for investment advisers, and none exists.

CHAPTER 11 Regulation of Intermediaries: Broker-Dealers, Investment Advisers and Associated Persons

2-11 Blue Sky Regulation § 11.02

§ 11.02 Licensing of Broker-Dealers and Associated Persons

[1] Preliminary Licensing Considerations

Broker-dealer regulation generally, and state licensing requirements in particular, are conduct-driven. As defined in the Uniform Act, "broker-dealer" means "[a]ny person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others or for his own account."¹ An "agent" under the Uniform Act is defined to be any individual "who represents a broker-dealer or issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities."² Other definitions in place among the states address securities "salesperson" or "representative" in like functional terms. In Illinois, for example, "salesperson" means:

Administrative and criminal enforcement activities by state securities regulators focus heavily on conduct amounting to engaging in business as a broker-dealer without being licensed. In many instances persons who assist issuers of securities, or who play integral roles in the offer and sale of securities, provide information and assist investors, or who arrange transactions and receive fees, are subject to broker-dealer licensing requirements.⁴ The scope of conduct driving Blue Sky licensing and enforcement authority in this area is considered elsewhere in the Treatise.⁵ It is essential in any consideration of the specific licensing provisions and processes of Blue Sky laws, however, to appreciate their impact on any intermediary activity that falls within the ambit of extremely broad "engaging in the business" definitions.

Many states have requirements which potential registrants as intermediaries must meet before even filing applications. Some regulations, for example, specify minimum age requirements for persons engaging in the securities business,⁶ and while knowledge of the securities business is always a prerequisite, specific requirements indicating such knowledge may be imposed. For example, minimum experience in the securities business may be required before an application will even be considered. The requirements used to prove such experience differ. In some states, if the applicant is a nonresident individual, she must be registered or qualified to engage in the securities business in the state of her residence, or, if the applicant is an out-of-state corporation, in the state of its principal place of business.⁷ Other states require that applicants have securities experience for a given number of years,⁸ and, in most cases, FINRA membership is a prerequisite.

A number of general rules are applicable to licensing of salespersons or representatives. First, in most states, not only is it unlawful for an unlicensed person to sell securities, but it is also unlawful for a broker-dealer or issuer to employ an agent who is unlicensed.ⁿ⁹ Further, states generally provide that an agent's registration is valid only while he or she is in the employ of a broker-dealer or issuer,ⁿ¹⁰ and that the appropriate authority must be notified upon the termination of a representative's employment or association by that broker-dealer.ⁿ¹¹

As a general rule, states discourage "dual" licensing, that is, the registration or employment of a representative by more than one broker-dealer,ⁿ¹² and in some states it is simply prohibited.ⁿ¹³ However, there are exceptions. Some states permit dual registration where the broker-dealers or issuers are under essentially the same management and control.ⁿ¹⁴ In some states, dual licensing is permitted with the consent of the principals for whom the agent will be working.ⁿ¹⁵ The concern in all of this is to ensure that responsibility of supervision over the representative or associated person will be assigned, and that supervisory procedures will be in place. Blue Sky laws and regulations generally mandate that broker-dealers must exercise reasonable supervision over the securities activities of their associated persons. Divided responsibility for supervision, though not unworkable in some settings, is undesirable. Thus, in several of the states in which multiple licensing is permitted, a specific request must be addressed to the administrator, and must contain not only the consent of each broker-dealer or employer involved, but also an undertaking that each will be jointly and severally liable for the acts of the dually licensed representative, and also a finding by the administrator that multiple licensing will not impair a determination of the supervisory responsibilities of each employer.ⁿ¹⁶

The Uniform Act provides that "[r]egistration of a broker-dealer automatically constitutes registration of any agent who is a partner, officer, or director, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions,"ⁿ¹⁷ and while a number of states have enacted a comparable provision,ⁿ¹⁸ such provisions usually have no more effect than to relieve the registrants from separate filing, and sometimes separate registration fee, requirements. Notwithstanding whether a given state provides for automatic registration, the agents in that state who are in management positions in a broker-dealer firm may still have to meet other qualifications expected of agents, such as passing a securities examination.ⁿ¹⁹ One state provides for automatic registration of a salesman if the salesman in question is licensed by FINRA to a broker-dealer who is in good standing with FINRA, is employed by a broker-dealer who is licensed in the state, and is not otherwise disqualified by the Blue Sky regulations of that state.ⁿ²⁰

Preliminary licensing considerations most often involve close examination of definitions. For example, although the Uniform Act does not require issuers to be licensed, some states do require licensing of issuers or their associated persons selling their own securities and/or the securities of others.ⁿ²¹ Since registration is required in some situations, and because the Uniform Act excludes issuers from registration by specifying that they are not within the definition of "broker-dealer," identifying the issuer can be important. The Uniform Act provides:

"Issuer" means any person who issues or proposes to issue any security, except that (1) with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors or persons performing similar functions or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which the security is issued; and (2) with respect to certificates of interest or participation in oil, gas, or mining titles or leases, or in payments out of production under such titles or leases, there is not considered to be any "issuer."ⁿ²²

The extent to which this definition has been adopted varies,ⁿ²³ and it should be kept in mind that although the Uniform Act does not require issuers to register, agents of issuers, with certain exceptions discussed below, are subject to registration requirements.

[a] Broker-Dealers

Every Blue Sky law provides for the licensing, or "registration," of broker-dealers.ⁿ²⁴ Although "broker-dealer" is broadly defined in terms of any person engaged in the business of effecting transactions for the account of others or her own account, typically several categories of institutions or persons are excluded from the definition. The Uniform Act is illustrative. Section 401(c) provides that broker-dealer does not include:

(1) an agent, (2) an issuer, (3) a bank, savings institution, or trust company, or (4) a person who has no place of business in this state if (A) he effects transactions in this state exclusively with or through (i) the issuers of the securities involved in the transactions, (ii) other broker-dealers, or (iii) banks, savings institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trusts, or other financial institutions or institutional buyers, whether acting for themselves or as trustees, or (B) during any period of twelve consecutive months he does not direct more than fifteen offers to sell or buy into this state in any manner to persons other than those specified in clause (A), whether or not the offeror or any of the offerees is then present in this state.ⁿ²⁵

The Revised Uniform Act definition, adopted in a handful of states, simplifies the set of exclusions to:

- (i) a sales representative;
- (ii) an issuer, except when effecting transactions other than with respect to its own securities;
- (iii) a depository institution; or
- (iv) any other person the [Administrator], by rule or order, designates.ⁿ²⁶

In the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, which has now been adopted in several states and is under active consideration in others, the exclusions are:

- An agent;
- An issuer;
- A bank or savings institution if its activities as a broker-dealer are limited to those specified in subsections 3(a)(4), 3(a)(5)(B), and 3(a)(5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78c(a)(5), or a bank that satisfies the conditions described in subsection 3(a)(4)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78c(a)(4);
- An international banking institution; or
- A person excluded by rule or order.ⁿ²⁷

The exclusion of agents, issuers, and banks, savings institutions, or trust companies from the original definition of "broker-dealer" exists for very straightforward reasons. Agents are distinguished from broker-dealers under the Act just as they are distinguished from principals under common law. Moreover, agents, under the Uniform Act and every state's Blue Sky law, must be licensed in their own right and not as broker-dealers. They do not, however, exist independently. As discussed further below, every agent, whether characterized as a representative, salesperson or associated person, must be licensed in affiliation with at least one broker-dealer that is also licensed in the state.

As previously noted, the Uniform Act does not require the issuer of securities to be registered. Since, subject to exemption or exception, both the security involved and the issuer's agent selling the security must be registered, the requirement of issuer registration would cause a needless duplication of filings. The exclusion granted to banks, savings institutions, or trust companies is based on the extensive regulatory system each state has for such entities.ⁿ²⁸

The Uniform Act also excludes persons who have no place of business in the state and would otherwise be required to register as broker-dealers, except that they are involved in transactions with issuers, broker-dealers and institutional investors. The exclusion for transactions with the issuer of the securities is self-explanatory, since it is unlikely that the issuer would need the full protection of the Blue Sky law. The same is true for transactions with other broker-dealers or with the specified institutional investors. With regard to these latter two groups, the protective provisions of the Uniform Securities Act are limited to its antifraud provisions, since the securities that are the subject of transactions with such purchasers are exempt from registration under the Uniform Act. Thus, neither the out-of-state broker-dealer nor the security is subject to the Uniform Act's registration provisions, as such parties are deemed sophisticated investors who do not require the protection of those provisions.

The final exclusion is also available for persons having no place of business in the state, and who have a number of transactions over and above the number of sophisticated investors. Under the Uniform Act, an out-of-state broker-dealer is permitted to direct up to fifteen offers to buy or sell securities in the Uniform Act state in any twelve-month period without being required to register as a broker-dealer.ⁿ²⁹ However, in computing the number of offers, it does not matter whether or not the offeror or any of the offerees is then present in the state. This rule would allow a broker-dealer in one state to deal with a few out-of-state customers without the necessity of registration. This provision is especially significant for a broker-dealer who has up to fifteen clients in each of several states that have adopted this particular provision of the Uniform Act, since the filing and registration fees can be considerable.

Blue Sky laws vary in the manner of labeling persons associated with a broker-dealer who are engaged in the securities business for purposes of licensing requirements. Whether such persons are identified as "agents," "representatives," or "salespersons," the individual licensing requirements are applicable to any person engaged in covered activities. Because individuals are not normally licensed in sales or representative capacities unless they are associated with a licensed broker-dealer, the common regulatory reference to "representative" or "associated person" is used here to encompass agents and any other label attached to those persons associated with a broker-dealer who are subject to individual licensing.

The Uniform Act and many state laws define "agent" simply as "any individual other than a broker-dealer who represents a broker-dealer or issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities."ⁿ³⁰ However, to better understand the scope of intended licensing requirements for individuals, the definition of "representative" adopted by the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) for purposes of its own registration requirements is more useful. Rule 1031 of the FINRA Membership and Registration Rules provides:

Persons associated with a member, including assistant officers other than principals, who are engaged in the investment banking or securities business for the member including the functions of supervision, solicitation or conduct of business in securities or who are engaged in the training of persons associated with a member for any of these functions are designated as representatives.ⁿ³¹

Broker-dealers often confront the issue of who within their organization is subject to individual licensing requirements, and a case-by-case functional assessment in terms of involvement in supervision, actual solicitation activities, or training is necessary. However, Blue Sky laws do in most instances make certain express exclusions from the basic definition. Under the Uniform Act, for example:

"Agent" does not include an individual who represents an issuer in (1) effecting transactions in a security exempted by clause (1), (2), (3), (10), or (11) of section 402(a), (2) effecting transactions exempted by section 402(b), or (3) effecting transactions with existing employees, partners, or directors of the issuer if no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting any person in this state. A partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, is an agent only if he otherwise comes within this definition.ⁿ³²

The Uniform Act also excludes "agents of issuers," but not agents of broker-dealers, with respect to certain transactions.ⁿ³³ First among such transactions are those made on behalf of an issuer involving the following exempt securities:

(1) any security (including a revenue obligation) issued or guaranteed by the United States, any state, any political subdivision of a state, or any agency or corporate or other instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing; or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing;ⁿ³⁴

(2) any security issued or guaranteed by Canada, any Canadian province, any political subdivision of any such province, any agency or corporate or other instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing, or any other foreign government with which the United States currently maintains diplomatic relations, if the security is recognized as a valid obligation by the issuer or guarantor;ⁿ³⁵

(3) any security issued by and representing an interest in or a debt of, or guaranteed by, any bank organized under the laws of the United States, or any bank, savings institution, or trust company organized and supervised under the laws of any state;ⁿ³⁶

(4) any commercial paper which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and which evidences an obligation to pay cash within nine months of the date of issuance, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal of such paper which is likewise limited, or any guarantee of such paper or of any such renewal; andⁿ³⁷

(5) any investment contract issued in connection with an employees' stock purchase, savings, pension, profit-sharing, or similar benefit plan if the [Administrator] is notified in writing thirty days before the inception of the plan or, with respect to plans which are in effect on the effective date of this act, within sixty days thereafter (or within thirty days before they are reopened if they are closed on the effective date of this act).ⁿ³⁸

An exclusion is also provided for persons representing issuers who effect any transaction which would constitute a transaction exempt from securities registration.ⁿ³⁹ The nature of the exempt securities and exempt transactions is such that the protective purposes of Blue Sky laws are not served by requiring issuer representatives to be licensed in order to sell such securities.

The last exclusion of issuer representatives is for those who effect transactions with current employees, partners, or directors of the issuer on the condition that the agent receives no compensation for soliciting persons in the state. Protection to employees in such a case is provided by the Uniform Act, since offers of securities to employees are not exempt from registration. Consequently, licensing of the person representing the issuer would afford little additional protection.

The definition's final exclusion, of partners, officers, and directors of issuers and broker-dealers who are not otherwise acting as agents, is not surprising. Those who are partners, officers, or directors of a broker-dealer are automatically registered anyway, except in the case of de minimis transactions, and logic argues against a separate registration apparatus. Issuers, of course, are not required to be registered under the Uniform Act.

As discussed further below, and as reflected in the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, many states deal with the scope of licensing requirements for agents or sales persons by way of exemptions from the registration requirement rather than exclusions from the basic definition. Whatever the particular statutory scheme, whether by certain activities a person falls within the basic definition of agent or salesperson is a common question. Often, the focus is on persons who act as "finders." The inquiry is well illustrated by the 2009 Colorado Court of Appeals analysis in Black Diamond Fund, LLP v. Joseph,ⁿ⁴⁰ in which individuals who facilitated investment transactions and received transaction-based compensation were held to be unlicensed sales representatives.

In Black Diamond, an individual located prospective investors, discussed the securities with prospective investors, obtained signed subscription documents and checks, and sent the agreements and checks on to the issuer. The Colorado Securities Commissioner concluded in an administrative proceeding that the individual had acted as unlicensed securities sales representatives, and issued a cease and desist order against them. On an appeal from that order, the Court of Appeals upheld the Commissioner's action, concluding, among other things:

Individuals who solicit investors by phone and in person, and who distribute documents and prepare and distribute sales circulars in the hope that potential investors will deposit money in the account, are seeking to effect securities transactions.ⁿ⁴¹

The fact that the individual did not actually accept subscription agreements was of no consequence. The Court of Appeals agreed with the Commissioner's conclusion that at a minimum, the individual was effecting or attempting to effect sales of securities, which is all that is necessary under the Colorado Blue Sky Law.

Black Diamond also involved the payment of transaction-based compensation--a hallmark of broker status. The administrative record showed that the individual had an oral agreement to receive a 5% fee upon completion of each subscription. He received compensation from the issuer based solely on the amount of securities sold to the parties he had located. The receipt of transaction-based compensation will invariably result in "broker," or as is the case here, agent or sales representative status. The conclusion is supported by a consistent line of SEC No-Action Letters under the parallel broker-dealer registration provisions of the federal securities laws. Compensation is indicative of whether one is a broker because such compensation is triggered by "effecting" a sale.ⁿ⁴² In Black Diamond, the court also pointed out that effecting transactions in securities is shown by actively soliciting clients, selling securities to the clients, and participating in securities transactions at key points in the chain of distribution.ⁿ⁴³

Solicitation of potential investors in Black Diamond involved "free meal" investment seminars conducted by the finder. So-called "free lunch" and "free dinner" marketing programs have proliferated and are the subject of regulatory scrutiny on various levels. In Black Diamond, the seminars were presented to people invited by mail, most of whom had no preexisting relationship with the issuer on whose behalf the finder presented the program. In these circumstances, advertising and general solicitation directly impact the availability of an exemption from registration for the securities themselves, as well as the intermediary licensing questions that inevitably arise when the programs involve an unlicensed presenter.

One state has addressed the "finder" issue directly by rule. Texas defines "finder" as an individual who receives compensation solely for introducing an accredited investor to a company issuing securities and/or introducing an issuer to accredited investors.ⁿ⁴⁴ Finder registration is limited to individuals. A Finder must submit an application on Form BD as a sole proprietor and pay a fee of $275. The application must be filed in paper form with a cover letter stating that the application is for registration as a finder, and upon approval a certificate will be issued specifically limiting the individual to those activities.

[d] NSMIA De Minimis Limitation

NSMIA added a number of provisions to the Exchange Act which limit the authority of a state to regulate de minimis activities of associated persons of a broker-dealer.ⁿ⁴⁵ Persons associated with broker-dealers may effect de minimis transactions for existing customers in other states without being licensed in those states. For the limited exemption to apply, however, a person associated with a broker or dealer must not be ineligible to register in the state and must be registered with FINRA and at least one other state, and the broker-dealer must be registered in the state.ⁿ⁴⁶

The exemption applies for transactions on behalf of a customer who has had an account with the broker or dealer for at least thirty (30) days before the transaction, and for which one of two conditions is met. The first condition is that the customer must have been present in the state where the broker-dealer of the associated person is registered for at least thirty (30) consecutive days of the year prior to the transaction. The associated person must have been assigned to that customer for at least fourteen (14) days before the transaction, and must have been registered in the state in which the customer was resident or present for at least thirty (30) consecutive days during any time during the year preceding the transaction.ⁿ⁴⁷ However, this provision is contingent upon the associated person applying for registration in the new state within ten (10) days after the latter of the date of the transaction and the date of discovery of the presence of the customer in the other state for thirty (30) or more consecutive days or the change in the customer's residence.ⁿ⁴⁸

The second condition is that the associated person must have filed an application for registration in the state where the transaction is effected for an existing customer within the preceding sixty (60) days, unless the state has notified the associated person that the application has been denied or stayed for cause.ⁿ⁴⁹

The exemption for de minimis transactions by associated persons of a broker-dealer added by NSMIA allows for the movement of existing customers of a broker-dealer from one state to another without the necessity of the customer having to obtain the services of a new registered representative. Most states have amended their statutes and regulations to comply with NSMIA.ⁿ⁵⁰

[2] Exemptions From Licensing Requirements Generally

As introduced above, exemptions or exclusions from state licensing requirements for broker-dealers and representatives are based on either the nature of the broker-dealer's business or the limited extent of business within a particular state. There are variations among Blue Sky laws, as some establish exemptions as such while others make exclusions within key definitions.

The 2002 Uniform Act serves to illustrate the modern, post-NSMIA approach to the exemption of broker-dealers from licensing under Blue Sky laws. As adopted in Georgia, for example, the following broker-dealers are exempt from registration:

(1) A broker-dealer with no place of business in the state if its only transactions effected in the state are with:

(A) The issuer of the securities involved in the transactions;

(B) A person registered as a broker-dealer under this chapter or not required to be registered as a broker-dealer under this chapter;

(C) An institutional investor;

(D) A nonaffiliated federal covered investment adviser with investments under management in excess of $100 million acting for the account of others pursuant to discretionary authority in a signed record;

2-11 Blue Sky Regulation § 11.02

(E) A bona fide preexisting customer whose principal place of residence is not in the state and the person is registered as a broker-dealer under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., or not required to be registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., and is registered under the securities act of the state in which the customer maintains a principal place of residence;

(F) A bona fide preexisting customer whose principal place of residence is in the state but was not present in the state when the customer relationship was established, if:

(i) The broker-dealer is registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., or not required to be registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., and is registered under the securities laws of the state in which the customer relationship was established and where the customer had maintained a principal place of residence; and

(ii) Within 45 days after the customer's first transaction in this state, the person files an application for registration as a broker-dealer in this state and a further transaction is not effected more than 75 days after the date on which the application is filed, or, if earlier, the date on which the Commissioner notifies the person that the Commissioner has denied the application for registration or has stayed the pendency of the application for good cause;

(G) Not more than three customers in the state during the previous 12 months, in addition to those customers specified in subparagraphs (A) through (F) and subparagraph (H) of this paragraph, if the broker-dealer is registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., or not required to be registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78a, et seq., and is registered under the securities act of the state in which the broker-dealer has its principal place of business; and

(H) Any other person exempted by rule or order;⁵¹ and

(2) A person that deals solely in United States government securities and is supervised as a dealer in government securities by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or the Office of Thrift Supervision.⁵²

The 2002 Uniform Act also reflects the post-NSMIA approach to exemptions for agents and representatives from registration requirements. Here again, Georgia is illustrative in its exemption for:

(1) An individual who represents a broker-dealer in effecting transactions in the state limited to those described in Section 15(h)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. Section 78(h)(2);

(2) An individual who represents a broker-dealer that is exempt under subsection (b) or (d) of Code Section 10-5-30;

(3) An individual who represents an issuer with respect to an offer or sale of the issuer's own securities or those of the issuer's parent or any of the issuer's subsidiaries and who is not compensated in connection with the individual's participation by the payment of commissions or other remuneration based, directly or indirectly, on transactions in those securities;

(4) An individual who represents an issuer and who effects transactions in the issuer's securities exempted by Code Section 10-5-11, with the exception of paragraphs (11) and (14) of that Code section;

(5) An individual who represents an issuer that effects transactions solely in federal covered securities of the issuer, but an individual who effects transactions in a federal covered security under

Section 18(b)(3) or 18(b)(4)(D) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. Section 77r(b)(3) or 77r(b)(4)(D), is not exempt if the individual is compensated in connection with the agent's participation by the payment of commissions or other remuneration based, directly or indirectly, on transactions in those securities;

(6) An individual who represents a broker-dealer registered in the state under subsection (a) of Code Section 10-5-30 or exempt from registration under subsection (b) of Code Section 10-5-30 in the offer and sale of securities for an account of a nonaffiliated federal covered investment adviser with investments under management in excess of $100 million acting for the account of others pursuant to discretionary authority in a signed record;

(7) An individual who represents an issuer in connection with the purchase of the issuer's own securities;

(8) An individual who represents an issuer and who restricts participation to performing clerical or ministerial acts; or

(9) Any other individual exempted by rule or order.ⁿ⁵³

This provision reflects the existing pattern of exemptions among the states. Exemptions, or exclusions, for representatives from licensing requirements are based primarily upon activity involving only certain types of transactions or securities which are themselves exempt from Blue Sky registration, or circumstances in which the intermediary activity evokes less regulatory concern. While exempt securities and exempt transactions are not subject to Blue Sky registration, states are divided as to the extent to which statutory exemptions should apply to determine licensing obligations of broker-dealers and representatives. Some, such as Arizona, take the position that any broker-dealer or agent involved exclusively with exempt securities, or in exempt transactions, need not be licensed.ⁿ⁵⁴ Nevertheless, the Arizona Corporation Commission is empowered to require licensing of dealers and salespersons dealing with certain exempt securities or engaging in certain exempt transactions.ⁿ⁵⁵ Pursuant to this authority, the Commission adopted a regulation requiring the registration of dealers engaging in certain transactions involving private offerings, certain isolated transactions, transactions involving certain domestic and foreign governmental securities, transactions involving securities of certain non-profit organizations, and transactions involving securities which are listed on certain stock exchanges or concerning which information appears in a recognized securities manual.ⁿ⁵⁶ However, Arizona exempts from registration dealers or their agents who do not principally and primarily engage in making a "series" of private offerings, i.e., more than four private offerings in any consecutive 12-month period.ⁿ⁵⁷

Other states exempt broker-dealers and representatives from licensing only with respect to exempt transactions,ⁿ⁵⁸ while still others exempt only with respect to exempt securities.ⁿ⁵⁹ Still other states provide no exemption at all. This is the approach of the original Uniform Act.ⁿ⁶⁰ However, an amendment to the Uniform Act does provide exclusions under the Act for persons involved in specified securities transactions,ⁿ⁶¹ and to an extent, this approach has been adopted in several states.ⁿ⁶² These exclusions are generally accomplished by defining "persons"ⁿ⁶³ trading and dealing in securities in various capacities, and then excluding from the definitions persons involved in specified securities transactions.

The area of exemptions or exclusions from broker-dealer and representative licensing based upon exclusive involvement in exempt transactions is perilous for those intermediaries operating in multiple states. As noted earlier, many states provide some form of exemption from licensing requirements for dealers engaged exclusively in transactions with "institutional" investors. Yet, in Ohio, no person other than an issuer selling its own securities to institutional investors is exempt from licensing.ⁿ⁶⁴ Thus, variations in key definitions and licensing exemptions must be tracked closely. Blue Sky laws generally establish rights of rescission and other recovery for unlawful transactions, and extend liability to the key participants in the transaction. Intermediaries may be susceptible not only to regulatory action, but also to the full range of private remedies a state securities law may provide. When the unlawful element of a transaction is a failure in licensing the consequences for an intermediary are multi-dimensional.

[3] Broker-Dealer Licensing Procedures

[a] Filing Requirements

The substantial uniformity in forms required to be filed in the various states for registration of broker-dealers,ⁿ⁶⁵ agents or representativesⁿ⁶⁶ and, where required, investment advisers,ⁿ⁶⁷ has been of great benefit to those who wish to be registered in a number of states. Transaction costs for these filings are relatively low. Moreover, the development of the Central Registration Depository (CRD)ⁿ⁶⁸ has made work in this area simpler. In addition to the principal form(s) required by each state, a number of supplemental forms and documentsⁿ⁶⁹ are also usually required, as are requirements for submission of photographs and/or fingerprints.

There are also filing fees. Initial applications for broker-dealer, agent, and investment adviser must be accompanied by the required filing or registration fee. Similarly, fees are required to be paid for renewal of broker-dealer, agent, and investment adviser registration, although the renewal fees in many states are lower than initial fees.ⁿ⁷⁰

States differ on the issue of whether fees are refundable when an application is withdrawn or denied.ⁿ⁷¹ Without stating a specific amount, the Uniform Act recommends that a portion of the fee be refunded in such cases.ⁿ⁷² However, a number of states, echoing the Revised Uniform Act,ⁿ⁷³ expressly provide that fees are not refundable under any conditions.ⁿ⁷⁴

As a general rule, applicants wishing to engage in the securities business, whether in the capacity of broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser as a sole proprietor, or investment adviser representative, must first pass one or more examinations testing the applicant's knowledge of various aspects of the securities industry and of securities law. When the applicant is an agent, there is no trouble in determining who must take the exam, because agents are individuals by definition.

For agents or representatives of broker-dealers, NASAA developed a uniform securities agent examination (Series 63) designed to satisfy the license testing requirements of every state. A person seeking to be registered to do business as an employee of a broker-dealer (or in some cases, as a broker-dealer) may take the single test developed by NASAA, rather than a separate examination in every state requiring a test.ⁿ⁷⁵ However, states have adopted different requirements for broker-dealers organized in a business form other than a sole proprietorship.

In a few states, examination requirements do not apply to broker-dealers unless they are sole proprietorships.ⁿ⁷⁶ However, the definition of "agent" in each of these states includes partners, officers and directors of broker-dealers who are performing agent activities for their broker-dealer firms.ⁿ⁷⁷ An arguable conclusion is that all such "agents" would be required to pass all required examinations.

Other states have reached similar results through different methods. These states require all broker-dealer officers or partners,ⁿ⁷⁸ and in some states directors,ⁿ⁷⁹ to take exams. Examinations are sometimes required of those designated as principals,ⁿ⁸⁰ managers,ⁿ⁸¹ or supervisors.ⁿ⁸²

The purpose of these provisions is not to require every such member or every broker-dealer to meet the examination requirement. Regulations often exempt officers or partners not engaged in sales or solicitation of securities, or those performing only administrative functions,ⁿ⁸³ or persons not participating in managerial or sales activities or in supervising sales personnel.ⁿ⁸⁴

Broker-dealer examination requirements in some states are made applicable to "representatives" of the firm. These states specify that at least one person who occupies the position of officer, director, partner, etc. must take and pass all required examinations before registration of the broker-dealer will be approved.ⁿ⁸⁵ In a few states, the broker-dealer exam is required only of persons designated by the administrator. If no designation is made, registration may be granted without testing.

Similar rules are applicable to investment adviser examinations. Generally, the examination is required of any investment adviser's representative doing any acts which make the applicant an investment adviser.ⁿ⁸⁶ These rules often call particular attention to persons who are officers or partners of the investment adviser firm as being in a position of performing such services. The Uniform Act contains a provision to the effect that when tests are required of investment advisers, they may be required of "persons who represent or will represent an investment adviser in doing any of the acts which make him an investment adviser." Some states which require tests of investment advisers, and whose rules do not designate specific persons required to take the exam, have adopted this statutory provision.ⁿ⁸⁷ In all states where the statutes or regulations are unclear as to who must take the exam, administrators should be interrogated as to requirements.ⁿ⁸⁸ One state leaves it up to the administrator to choose one or more directors, officers, partners or employees to take the exam.ⁿ⁸⁹

Securities examinations involved here generally cover the applicant's familiarity with the overall nature of the securities industry and knowledge of the particular state's securities law. A few states have issued outlines indicating the type of material which will appear on the exams created by, and unique to, the respective state. As for those states who depend either partially or totally on uniform examinations both created and administered by FINRA, those topics likewise are set out in study outlines.ⁿ⁹⁰ FINRA, upon request, makes these outlines available to applicants.ⁿ⁹¹

[c] Net Capital and Bonding Requirements

All states have financial responsibility requirements for broker-dealers. These requirements are separate from requirements imposed as a matter of federal law or by FINRA as a condition of membership. Prior to NSMIA, broker-dealers could be subjected to multiple requirements as a condition to qualification and licensing in any state. To address this burden, NSMIA added new section 15(h)(1) to the Exchange Act, which prohibits states from imposing on broker-dealers minimum capital and bonding requirements that differ from or are in addition to the requirements established under the Exchange Act.ⁿ⁹² Previously, states had varied minimum capital requirements for broker-dealers which generally put a maximum limit on the aggregate indebtedness of broker-dealers and placed a floor on the amount of net capital which must be maintained. Some states had already adopted Rule 15c3-1 under the Exchange Act.ⁿ⁹³ Even after the passage of NSMIA, there are still a few states which have no net capital requirements for broker-dealers.ⁿ⁹⁴

Some states grant an exemption to broker-dealers who are in good standing and subject to the capital rules of FINRA or specified national securities exchanges.ⁿ⁹⁵ However, because FINRA membership itself involves net capital requirements scaled to the nature of a broker-dealer's business activities which fairly match the net capital requirements imposed in most states, the absence of a requirement, in any state, or the existence of an exemption based upon FINRA membership, does not in practice represent any lesser standard of regulation. Some states also permit an exemption where the administrator is satisfied that the broker-dealer has an established financial position and procedures in place for safeguarding the funds and securities of its customers.ⁿ⁹⁶

Bonding requirements may be imposed in addition to net capital requirements. However, in some states an overlap exists between minimum capital requirements and bonding requirements. These states allow the posting of a surety bond instead of maintaining an amount of minimum capital which would otherwise be required, and vice versa.ⁿ⁹⁷ Other states require surety bonds of broker-dealers in addition to minimum capital requirements.ⁿ⁹⁸ In lieu of posting a bond, an appropriate deposit in cash or securities with the administrator is acceptable in a number of states.ⁿ⁹⁹

Since agents or representatives of broker-dealers are individuals who are not in business for themselves, there are no minimum capital requirements imposed upon them. Nevertheless, it is not unusual for a state to require agents of broker-dealers and issuers to post surety bonds.ⁿ¹⁰⁰ Some states, however, require bonding only with respect to agents of issuers.ⁿ¹⁰¹ In certain cases, statutes have authorized administrators to promulgate rules requiring agents to be bonded.ⁿ¹⁰²

A few states have unique requirements in this area of agent regulation. Missouri, for example, prescribes that if the broker-dealer is exempt from bonding requirements because it maintains a prescribed minimum capital, then its agents are similarly exempt.ⁿ¹⁰³ In any event, not all similar-appearing bonding requirements are the same. There may be substantial differences in coverage, cost and ease of obtaining fidelity bonds, which principally deal with dishonesty, as opposed to surety or so-called "Blue Sky bonds," which principally provide coverage for violations of securities laws.

[d] Effective Dates and Duration of Licensing

In the main, applications for licensing as a broker-dealer, agent or securities salesperson become effective on an order of the administrator. Varying time periods and procedures among the states are discussed further below. However, a central element in all of this is the evaluative process carried out by administrators to determine whether an application should be granted. State authority to deny an application for licensing, together with the correlative power to revoke, suspend, or cancel a license, is considered in detail elsewhere.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ In considering the effectiveness and duration of licensing discussed below, it is essential to recognize that for an application to become effective is first dependent upon a determination that it should not be denied.

Although effective dates for initial registration vary from state to state, the effective dates within a single state are usually the same regardless of whether the applicant is a broker-dealer, an agent, or an investment adviser.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ The Uniform Act provides that initial registrations become effective at noon of the thirtieth day after the application is filed, unless a denial order has been issued or a proceeding which could result in registration denial is pending. This section also gives the administrator the power to accelerate registration, or, if an application amendment is filed, to delay it to noon of the thirtieth day after the filing of the amendment.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ The Revised Uniform Act, while eliminating the "clock" exactness of its earlier counterpart, retains the "calendar" exactness in the form of the 30-day effectiveness provision. The Administrator under this provision still has the power to accelerate the effective date, but the 30-day period is otherwise measured from the date of the filing of the last amendment to the application.ⁿ¹⁰⁷

A number of states have adopted one of these provisions both as to the effective date of registration and as to acceleration or delay of effectiveness.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ A few states have variations of these two provisions.ⁿ¹⁰⁹ In Alabama, for example, the effective date and time is five o'clock p.m. on the sixtieth day after filing, and effectiveness can be deferred until five o'clock p.m. of the sixtieth day after the filing of any amendment.ⁿ¹¹⁰

A few other states have effective dates which reasonably give applicants some idea of when they may begin to act in the securities business. Virginia, for example, requires affirmative approval or denial of the application within thirty days after filing, allowing up to three extensions of up to ninety days if written notice is given to the applicant.ⁿ¹¹¹ Texas requires a final decision on the application within fourteen days of the Dealer Registration Division's recommendation or receipt of complete responses to any remaining comments, whichever is later.ⁿ¹¹² But getting to these points is a complicated process, and there are several exceptions where exceeding this time period is allowed.ⁿ¹¹³

In all cases, registration as a broker, investment adviser, or associated person is subject to there being no order in effect, and no proceeding commenced or pending by which the registration could be denied, restricted, conditioned, or limited. The 2002 Uniform Act is illustrative:

If an order is not in effective and a proceeding is not pending under section 412, registration becomes effective at noon on the 45th day after a completed application is filed, unless the registration is denied. A rule adopted or order issued under this [Act] may set an earlier effective date or may defer the effective date until noon on the 45th day after the filing of any amendment completing the application.ⁿ¹¹⁴

Unfortunately, the statutes in most states are not clear with regard to the details of any exceptions to the stated time period. Washington, for example, provides only that when an application "meets the requirements" for registration, as the director may by rule or otherwise determine, and no other denial order or proceeding is pending, the director shall make the application effective.ⁿ¹¹⁵ These states' statutes provide, or in some cases only suggest, that registration becomes effective on administrator approval, without any requirement that the application be acted upon within a specified time.ⁿ¹¹⁶

As for the term of licensing, under the original Uniform Act and virtually all state laws, registrations expire after one year from the effective date unless renewed. As reflected in section 406(d) of the 2002 Uniform Act, registrations for broker-dealers, investment advisers, and associated persons are effective until midnight on December 31 of the year in which the application for registration is filed. Thus, unless an order is in effect, a registration may be automatically renewed each year by filing whatever record may be required by rule or order, and by paying the requisite renewal fee, which in most cases is the same as the initial application fee for broker-dealers and investment advisers.ⁿ¹¹⁷ Some states follow this practice but vary the expiration date in accordance with the type of registration being sought, be it broker-dealer, agent or investment adviser.ⁿ¹¹⁸

[4] Reporting and Record Keeping Requirements

Most states have an affirmative requirement for the filing of broker-dealer financial statements subsequent to registrations. Some states provide that the financial statements be submitted with registration renewals,ⁿ¹¹⁹ while others require that the report reflect financial condition as of the close of the broker-dealer's fiscal year and be filed within a prescribed number of days after the close of such year.ⁿ¹²⁰ A few states allow the broker-dealer to select its own filing date,ⁿ¹²¹ but in such cases usually provide that reports filed in two consecutive years must be at least four months apart.ⁿ¹²² Where reports are required as of a fiscal year ending, and filed in accordance with such date, little danger exists of the information therein becoming outdated. To overcome the problem of a financial statement becoming outdated in a state requiring filings according to renewal or a self-selected date, states often require that the financial report be dated as of a maximum number of days prior or subsequent to the filing.ⁿ¹²³

A few states require additional financial reports throughout the year on a semi-annual basis.ⁿ¹²⁴ In fact, some states which do not have an annual report requirement require financial statements to be filed several times in any given year,ⁿ¹²⁵ and a number of states require monthly filings of financial information whenever the broker-dealer's minimum capital or aggregate indebtedness fails to meet specifications established by the state.ⁿ¹²⁶

For purposes of annual financial reporting, many states will accept copies of reports filed with the SECⁿ¹²⁷ or a recognized national securities exchange in satisfaction of or in lieu of financial reports required by that state. In a number of instances where filing deadlines cannot be met, reasonable extensions of time may be obtained.ⁿ¹²⁸

Not all broker-dealer post-registration filing requirements deal strictly with financial statements. Some requirements include filings whenever control of a broker-dealer firm changes handsⁿ¹²⁹ and immediate notification of the Administrator whenever a theft or mysterious disappearance of any significant amount of securities or funds has occurred.ⁿ¹³⁰

New York requires perhaps the most unusual post-registration filing. Basically, the state requires securities registration only in the case of real estate securitiesⁿ¹³¹ or intrastate offerings.ⁿ¹³² However, any time a dealer offers securities which were not previously offered, the dealer must file a "Further State Notice."ⁿ¹³³ These notices are no more than slips of paper calling for the name, business, or post office address and place of incorporation (if incorporated) of the dealer or the names of the partners if a partnership, the name of the security or securities, the name of the issuer, the issuer's post office address and the state or country of organization.ⁿ¹³⁴ Two or more dealers may jointly file such notices.ⁿ¹³⁵

NSMIA established national standards for broker-dealer record keeping requirements. As a result, states are barred from imposing record keeping requirements on broker-dealers that differ from or are in addition to those established under the Exchange Act.ⁿ¹³⁶ Prior to NSMIA, post-registration record keeping requirements for broker-dealers in most states were based on the rules issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission pursuant to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. These regulations require the keeping and maintaining of itemized blotters, ledgers and ledger accounts. Blotters, or other records of original entry, are required to contain the following:

- (a) itemized daily records of all purchases and sales of securities;
- (b) all receipts and deliveries of securities (including certificate numbers);
- (c) all receipts and disbursements of cash; and
- (d) all other debits and credits.

Such records shall show the account for which each such transaction was effected, the name and amount of securities, the unit and aggregate purchase or sale price (if any), the trade date, and the name or other designation of the person from whom purchased or received or to whom sold or delivered.ⁿ¹³⁷

Ledgers required to be kept are to reflect, among other information, all assets and liabilities, income and expenses, and capital accounts, in addition to securities in transfer, dividends and interest received, securities borrowed and loaned, money borrowed and loaned (including a record of collateral and substitutions in such collateral), and securities failed to receive and failed to deliver.ⁿ¹³⁸ Other separate records are generally required to include ledger accounts showing cash and margin accounts of each customer; ledgers giving long and short positions of the broker-dealer; memoranda reflecting customer transactions and separate memoranda showing details of sales and purchases made by the broker-dealer for his own account; copies of confirmations of each purchase and sale; records of cash and margin accounts; records of option transactions in which the broker-dealer has any interest or which have been granted or guaranteed by the broker-dealer; and a record of proof of balances of all ledger accounts in the form of trial balances. The Exchange Act requires broker-dealers to maintain their records for a period of not less than six years for some records, and not less than three years for other records.ⁿ¹³⁹ Records must be kept in such a manner as to be accessible for inspection by Administrators.ⁿ¹⁴⁰

[5] Securities Activities of Banks

On November 12, 1999, the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act ("GLBA"), popularly referred to as the Financial Services Modernization Act, was signed into law.ⁿ¹⁴¹ GLBA made landmark changes to the laws governing the operation and regulation of the banking, securities and insurance industries, and was designed to permit financial service providers to affiliate with one another in providing a wide range of financial services under one roof. Among changes made by GLBA, the definition of "broker" contained in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934ⁿ¹⁴² was amended so as to permit banks to engage directly in certain securities activities without being deemed to be brokers, and thus without being subjected to federal registration and other requirements for broker-dealers generally discussed above.

In many instances, the exceptions added by GLBA to the definition of broker only codified pre-existing administrative orders and rules of federal banking regulators that had permitted banks to engage directly in a number securities transactions and activities. More significantly, however, GLBA also provides that banks may enter into "third party brokerage arrangements," that is, contractual or other written arrangements with SEC-registered broker-dealers to engage in the offer and sale of securities on or off bank premises, without the bank itself being deemed to be a broker.ⁿ¹⁴³

Although GLBA operates to exclude banks from the definition of broker in the context of third party brokerage arrangements, many Blue Sky laws prohibit a licensed broker-dealer from sharing commissions or other transaction-based compensation with any unlicensed entity, such as a bank.ⁿ¹⁴⁴ Thus, while a bank may undertake such arrangements directly without federal broker-dealer registration under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, state broker-dealer regulation may still be fully applicable. Some states have themselves dealt with the issue by providing limited relief, by rule, to bank and third party broker-dealer relationships under critical definitions.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ However, these provisions may not permit arrangements involving or amounting to commission-sharing between a bank and third party broker-dealer. After GLBA it is certain that greater attention will be focused on the utility of third party brokerage arrangements to expand services available to customers of smaller or community banks that have not previously pursued brokerage activities or services through the bank holding company affiliate structure mandated by previous laws and regulations. It is essential that in evaluating and establishing third party brokerage arrangements both the bank and the broker-dealer must closely assess the extent to which individual state securities laws will impact the desired relationship despite the GLBA changes at the federal level. Leases by third party broker-dealers, for example, providing for rent payable to the bank for space on premises based upon the level of revenues, gross commissions, or any other formula directly linked to securities transactions may run afoul of Blue Sky laws and regulations despite being a GLBA contractual or other written arrangement for the provision of third party brokerage services.ⁿ¹⁴⁶ GLBA does not preempt any state regulatory authority over broker-dealers and associated persons. And in all cases it is also certain that both federal and state antifraud rules and standards remain unaffected.

The court found that there were genuine issues of material fact as to whether the lawyer's activities subjected him to broker-dealer licensing. The lawyer received referral fees for introducing investors to the other defendants. He provided the investors with written information and forms to assist in setting up investment accounts, and assisted some investors in completing the forms. The court viewed these activities as going far beyond merely recommending the investment to a friend. The court characterized the attorney's role as essential in marketing and referring investors.

(n21)Footnote 21. Not all states requiring issuer licensing require it of all issuers. California, for example, requires licensing of only certain issuers. The usual method of requiring issuer registration is to include the term within the definition of "broker-dealer" and then to require the registration of the broker-dealer. See, e.g., Cal. Corp. Code § 25004, where persons issuing options with regard to securities not of their own issue are deemed issuers.

(n23)Footnote 23. For example, the definition of "issuer" in the Uniform Act has been substantially adopted in Maryland, while in Wyoming subsection two of the Uniform Act provision, dealing with oil, gas and mining interests, has not been adopted. Compare Md. Corps. & Ass'ns Code Ann. § 11-101(i) with Wyo. Stat. § 17-4-113(a)(vi).

Other states have adopted a definition of "issuer" other than that contained in either the Uniform Act or the Revised Uniform Act. While the definition itself is basically the same, the difference occurs in the exceptions to the definition. Often, these exceptions are a mixture of the various incarnations of this provision. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 517.021(13). The provision includes a promoter for a corporation, trust, partnership, or unincorporated association as an issuer. Also, the exceptions to the Uniform Act definition have not been adopted. See also Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 581-4(G). The provision omits all exceptions to the Uniform Act definition.

In contrast, New York, which requires issuers to be registered, does not define the term either by regulation or by statute.

Reflecting variations that appear in Blue Sky laws, the 2002 Uniform Act defines "issuer" simply as "a person that issues or proposes to issue a security," but, in particular circumstances, subject to the following:

(A) The issuer of a voting trust certificate, collateral trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, or share in an investment company without a board of directors or individuals performing similar functions is the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the trust or other agreement of instrument under which the security is issued.

(B) The issuer of an equipment trust certificate or similar security serving the same purpose is the person by which the property is or will be used or to which the property or equipment is or will be leased or conditionally sold or that is otherwise contractually responsible for assuring payment of the certificate.

(C) The issuer of a fractional undivided interest in an oil, gas, or other mineral lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty is the owner of an interest in the lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty, whether whole or fractional, that creates fractional interests for the purpose of sale.

Other states have adopted a definition of "broker-dealer" other than the Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act versions. Differences usually occur in the exclusions from the definition adopted, and are often hybrids of the two versions. See, e.g., Cal. Corp. Code § 25004. The exclusion for out-of-state persons who make limited offers into the state is omitted. The definition also excludes registered broker-dealers who are involved with certain exempted securities and transactions, as well as non-exempt securities and exchanges required to be registered with the Commissioner of Corporations when issuing or guaranteeing options.

A person who, on a commission basis, negotiates the sale of a corporation's entire stock on behalf of the purchaser is a broker-dealer within the meaning of the statutory provision. See Nationwide Inv. Corp. v. California Funeral Serv., Inc., 40 Cal. App. 3d 494, 114 Cal. Rptr. 77 (1974) .

(1) Securities of the United States government, the Canadian government and those of certain other foreign governments.

(2) Securities consisting of interests in real estate subdivisions.

(3) Mutual capital certificates or savings accounts issued by savings and loan associations.

(4) Securities issued by specified non-profit organizations, chambers of commerce or trade or professional associations.

(5) Life income contracts issued by specified non-profit associations.

(6) Short term commercial paper.

A further exclusion is provided for out-of-state persons dealing exclusively with broker-dealers. An additional proviso is given that an issuer's officers and similar functionaries are agents only if they receive securities transaction-related income. In California, subdivision three of the Uniform Act provision is omitted.

The 2002 Uniform Securities Act does not provide specific exclusions from the definition. Rather:

"Agent" means an individual, other than a broker-dealer, who represents a broker-dealer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities or represents an issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of the issuer's securities, but a partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer, or an individual having a similar status or performing similar functions, is an agent only if the individual otherwise comes within the term. The term does not include an individual excluded by rule or order under this [Act]. 2002 Unif. Sec. Act § 102(2).

(n60)Footnote 60. See Unif. Sec. Act § 201. The reasoning for this position was stated in an opinion of the Utah Attorney General:

The fact that a security may be quite sound and exempt under the law from registration does not guarantee that any persons who may be engaged to sell such security would not by their sales methods and representations, present such security for sale in such a way as to damage the public. Perhaps it is for this reason that there is no provision in the code exempting agents or broker-dealers dealing in such a security from registration.

(n68)Footnote 68. T The CRD system is a computer network which was initially designed to permit salespersons associated with broker-dealers to register with FINRA and in all the states in which they wish to conduct business by filing a single license application. The system is operated by FINRA under an agreement with NASAA. 1 Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 6531 (July 1993). The registration, transfer, termination, and renewal filings of agents are accomplished by filing the appropriate Form U-4 or Form U-5 (Uniform termination notice) with the CRD.

The CRD has been expanded to include the registration of broker-dealers, with most Form BD filings and amendments made through it.

An ancillary program for expediting the transfer of salespersons between participating firms via the CRD began in July 1984. Under the Temporary Agent Transfer Program ("TAT"), a salesperson may begin doing business as soon as the salesperson's new employer provides required information to the CRD Communications Center. FINRA member firms who execute and file a Broker-Dealer Undertaking may participate. Individuals who have a disciplinary history or are not qualified for the registration category requested in the transfer are not allowed to use the transfer program. To qualify for temporary registration under the program, an agent must have terminated registration from a member for other than disciplinary reasons within the preceding seven calendar days and have a clean disciplinary history. The agent must give the employing member a completed Form U-4 and must already be registered in each state where registration is being requested. The temporary registration will expire in twenty-one days unless the CRD receives a Form U-4.

(n69)Footnote 69. As a result of joint regulatory initiatives by FINRA, NASAA (the North American Securities Administrators Association), the New York Stock Exchange and the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, nearly all of the basic forms involved in broker-dealer license filing today are uniform. These include Form BD, and other forms relating to consent to service of process, bonding and other particular requirements. Most recently, a joint regulatory initiative has produced uniform Form BR, for registration of broker-dealer branch offices, and to file notice of branch office openings and closings. Form BR was implemented on October 31, 2005, and provides for centralized branch office registration through the CRD System based upon a uniform definition of "branch office." Historically, states and the various regulatory bodies defined the term "branch office" differently. Disparate definitions resulted in conflicting requirements, and produced significant redundancies for broker-dealer firms.

Not all states require all uniform forms to be filed. Form BR, for example will be utilized only in those states that require branch office registration. The particular form filing requirements in every state is included as part of the individual State Guides in Volumes 3 and 4, of this Treatise.

2-11 Blue Sky Regulation § 11.03

§ 11.03 Licensing of Investment Advisers and Investment Adviser Representatives

[1] State Investment Adviser Regulation Generally

Prior to 1996 and the enactment of NSMIA, a large majority of states provided in their Blue Sky laws for regulation of investment advisers and investment adviser "representatives" or agents. Nevertheless, principal regulatory focus on these securities market intermediaries was a matter of federal law, and the authority of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. The federal act establishes a regulatory scheme based upon registration (but not licensing) of investment advisers, utilizing SEC Form ADV not only as a registration form but also as a structured disclosure document, and providing broad antifraud enforcement authority. The federal act imposes no minimum competency or qualification standards for either investment advisers or investment adviser representatives, and involves no licensing as such. Rather, federally registered investment advisers are subject to various rule requirements for disclosure; for the keeping of certain prescribed categories of books and records; and to SEC periodic examinations and ultimate enforcement authority.

"Investment Adviser," as defined in the federal act, means:

any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities; n1

The Uniform Act definition of investment adviser is taken almost verbatim from the federal act, modified only to the extent of adding a limited exclusion from the definition for certain persons having no place of business in the state.n2

The basic definition of investment adviser thus involves three distinct elements: (1) providing advice or analyses concerning securities; (2) being engaged "in the business;" and (3) receiving compensation. In SEC Release IA-1092 under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,n3 the SEC offered guidance on each of these elements for determining whether a person is an investment adviser, and also sought to clarify the application of the Act to persons who provide investment advice in conjunction with other financial services. According to the SEC, such persons include financial planners who advise individuals or families based on individualized assessments of needs and objectives; pension consultants in certain circumstances; and sports or entertainment representatives who are involved in planning and money management services.n4 Providing advice or analyses concerning securities is interpreted broadly enough to encompass persons who advise concerning general categories of investments without making specific recommendations. Being engaged in the business is determined by the degree of advisory activities, and generally connotes holding oneself out as an adviser for which specific compensation is received. Receiving compensation means deriving any economic benefit as a result of providing advice.ⁿ⁵ The SEC cautioned, however, that whether a person providing financially related services of the type addressed in its interpretive release is an investment adviser within the meaning of the Act always depends on the particular facts and circumstances.

Every state has, for the most part, adopted the federal definition of investment adviser, and several have expanded it specifically to encompass the activities of financial planners. Washington, for example, adds to the core federal definition the following:

"Investment adviser" also includes financial planners and other persons who, as an integral component of other financially related services, (a) provide the foregoing investment advisory services to others for compensation as part of a business or (b) hold themselves out as providing the foregoing investment advisory services to others for compensation. Investment adviser shall also include any person who holds himself out as a financial planner.ⁿ⁶

Specific exclusions from the definition of investment adviser include: "[A]" lawyer, accountant, engineer, or teacher whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the practice of the person's profession."ⁿ⁷ Although some regulatory uncertainty may arise in the determination of what is "solely incidental" to the practice of one of these professions, identifying a qualifying profession is facially a straightforward task based on common usage of the terms. However, consideration of the "teacher" exclusion from investment adviser registration requirements under the Texas Securities Actⁿ⁸ by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit illustrates that the qualifying status is not so easily determined. In S & D Trading Academy, LLC v. AAFIS Inc.,ⁿ⁹ the "trading academy" defendant relied on the teacher exclusion from the definition of investment adviser under the Texas Act in providing training on "day trading" of stocks to Chinese citizens working as traders for a U.S. based investment company. The arrangement for training terminated, and the training academy sued for payment for its services on breach of contract and other grounds. The District Court granted summary judgment against the training academy because it was not registered as an investment adviser under the Texas Securities Act, and could not base a suit on an alleged agreement the performance of which violated the Act.ⁿ¹⁰ The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed summary judgment, rejecting the contention that the investment advisory services involved were performed solely incidental to the primary purpose of teaching.

In its defense, the training academy asserted that the court should have simply given the term "teacher" its common meaning. It argued that a teacher need not be a professor or lecturer at an accredited or certified institution, and that the teacher exclusion should apply broadly to any person whose occupation is instructing. Embracing SEC no-action letters interpreting the teacher exception to the federal Investment Advisers Act definition,ⁿ¹¹ the Fifth Circuit concluded that the teacher exception to the definition of investment adviser is narrow. A teacher in this context is not, said the Court, anyone who teaches. As to the S & D Training Academy, the Court observed:

Neither Cleary nor Comper [its principals] were professional teachers. They were not associated with an accredited school or course, and their training was not part of a program regularly offered by an educational institution. Moreover, their training was not academic in nature. They provided the traders with market research, stock recommendations, and trading strategies for a particular day or particular stock. The goal of the training was to influence the investment decision making of the Chinese traders and to enable them to maximize their profits.ⁿ¹²

To interpret the exception otherwise would undermine the investor protection purpose of the Texas Securities Act. S & D Training Academy well illustrates the point that any statutory exclusion from regulatory coverage under securities laws must be examined in relation to the investor protection goal, of securities laws in general, and state Blue Sky laws in particular. If an exclusion or exception from a key definition applies, it is because there is no need for the special protection registration that would afford in a particular context or setting. The further exclusion from the definition of investment adviser under federal and state securities laws for "a broker-dealer or its agents whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the conduct of business as a broker-dealer and that does not receive special compensation for the investment advice,"ⁿ¹³ for example, presumes not only that the broker-dealer intermediary is otherwise regulated, but also that the common agency function involving transaction-based compensation does not trigger the need for additional protection that would be afforded by registration and regulation under investment adviser laws. However, the business of a broker-dealer and the nature of compensation associated with it have evolved significantly, and presumptions of the 1940s have been severely tested, with resulting regulatory controversy that remains unsettled. The steady functional convergence of investment advisers and broker-dealers, and the need for harmonizing the regulation of each will bring the point well illustrated by S & D Training Academy into continuously sharper focus.

As for investment adviser representatives, many states have likewise adopted the federal definition of "investment adviser representative" in their statutes and regulations. The federal definition provides that "investment adviser representative" of an investment adviser means a supervised person of the investment adviser who has more than five clients who are natural persons (other than excepted persons) and more than 10% of whose clients are natural persons. However, a supervised person is excepted from the definition if that supervised person:

- (a) Does not on a regular basis solicit, meet with, or otherwise communicate with clients of the investment adviser; or
- (b) Provides only impersonal investment advice.ⁿ¹⁴

Although the federal Investment Advisers Act includes a definition "investment adviser representative," there are no specific registration or regulatory provisions aimed at representatives in the federal act or SEC regulations promulgated under it. That is not the case, however, in state laws, which, as will be seen, impose licensing requirements based upon minimum competency standards much in the same manner as with state-licensed salespersons or representatives of securities broker-dealers. State laws likewise impose licensing, and concomitant qualification standards, on investment advisers themselves. In these important respects federal and state regulatory approaches to investment adviser regulation differ markedly, though in a manner quite consistent with the historic distinction between state and federal securities regulation generally.

With the enactment of NSMIA, and the realignment of state and federal securities regulatory roles that it brought about, state regulation of investment advisers is of vastly greater significance, as large numbers of smaller investment advisers previously registered with the SEC under the federal act have been rendered solely subject to state regulation. An important aspect of NSMIA was the literal divestiture from SEC regulation of investment advisers whose scope of operations, defined in terms of "assets under management" or the national character of business activity, is such as to no longer meet a threshold for SEC registration and regulation under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. These investment advisers, together with their "investment adviser representatives," must comply with state investment adviser laws in each state in which their activities are such that no exemption or exception is available. In some states, hundreds of formerly SEC-registered investment advisers are subject to state licensing and regulatory requirements where none existed before NSMIA.

The realignment of federal and state roles in securities regulation means that state securities commissioners and agencies will devote greater resources to the activities of smaller investment advisers not only in licensing, but also in active ongoing oversight through examination and enforcement authority. Investment advisers and their representatives are critical market intermediaries who enjoy direct interaction with and involvement in the investment decision-making of vast numbers of individuals and small institutions. They are positioned such that the potential for fraud and the abuse of trust relationships is constantly present. State securities regulators, mindful of their historic protective mission, will increasingly police investment adviser activities armed with broad qualitative standards and a considerable arsenal of enforcement weapons in the post-NSMIA era.

This section examines the common aspects of state regulation of investment advisers and investment adviser representatives in the wake of NSMIA. Unlike other aspects of state securities regulation, commonality among the states in this area is not a function of the Uniform Securities Act, but rather the large-scale adoption at the individual state level of the statutory and administrative scheme of the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, modified today to accomplish particular regulatory objectives, and also to satisfy the NSMIA-prescribed limitations on the scope of state authority where activities in a national market setting are involved. The discussion below examines the common elements of investment adviser regulation now in place among the states, along with a thorough consideration of the limitations on the scope of state authority that are necessary in practical assessments and applications of these newly important elements of Blue Sky regulation.

[2] Investment Adviser Licensing

In the wake of NSMIA all states except Wyoming have licensing provisions governing investment advisersⁿ¹⁵ and their representatives.ⁿ¹⁶ NSMIA divided the regulatory authority between the SEC and the states based on the level of assets under management. Investment advisers with assets under management of $25 million or more and advisers to registered investment companies are exclusively regulated by the SEC.ⁿ¹⁷ Additionally, advisers without a principal office or place of business in a state in which they are regulated or required to be regulated are subject to SEC registration without regard to the level of assets under management. Currently, only investment advisers in Wyoming and the U.S. Virgin Islands are thus left subject to SEC regulation. All other investment advisers fall under the exclusive jurisdiction of the states, although the SEC has preemptive authority to permit other investment advisers to register federally if it determines that state registration would be unfair, a burden on interstate commerce, or otherwise inconsistent with the objectives of NSMIA.ⁿ¹⁸

NSMIA impacted state authority in the licensing of investment advisers in two ways. First, Congress established a national de minimis standard, by which states are precluded from requiring registration, licensing or qualification of any investment adviser if the investment adviser does not have a place of business within the state, and if during the preceding twelve-month period the investment adviser had fewer than six clients who are residents of the state.ⁿ¹⁹ States typically provide de minimis exceptions from licensing requirements for investment advisers who have no place of business within the state, and who meet certain criteria not only in terms of the number of clients who are residents, but also in situations in which an adviser services particular types of clients. Ohio, for example, excepts all investment advisers who have no place of business in the state and who have during the preceding twelve-month period had no more than five clients, and also those advisers who have as clients only certain "institutional" clients.ⁿ²⁰ However characterized, the types of advisory clients commonly included by states as the basis for a licensing exception are: (a) other investment advisers; (b) broker-dealers; (c) banks; (d) trust companies; (e) savings and loan associations; (f) insurance companies; (g) employee benefit plans of a certain size; and (h) governmental agencies or instrumentalities.ⁿ²¹ These exceptions are self-executing, meaning that no filing with the administrator is required, thus eliminating even "notice" filings.

NSMIA further preempted state regulatory authority over investment advisers having more than $25 million in client "assets under management," as well as advisers to investment companies (mutual funds) that are registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940. As noted above, "assets under management" means the aggregate value of securities portfolios with respect to which an investment adviser provides "continuous and regular supervisory or management services."ⁿ²² The $25 million asset divider for purposes of federal preemption is made subject to SEC authority to prescribe a higher amount that the Commission may deem appropriate. Pursuant to that authority, the SEC has, by Rule 203A-1 under the Act, established a threshold for SEC registration of $30 million in assets under management for an investment adviser who is subject to licensing in the state in which it maintains its principal place of business. For advisers having between $25 million and $30 million in assets under management, and who are licensed under an investment adviser statute of the state in which they maintain their principal place of business, registration with the SEC is optional.ⁿ²³ As investment advisers with $25 million or less under management are now exclusively regulated by the states, these smaller advisers are subject to the full range of state licensing and enforcement powers. Licensing of investment advisers under state Blue Sky laws mirrors the process applicable to licensing broker-dealers. Licensing involves initial competency and fitness determinations by state administrators, as well as ongoing inspections, significant record keeping requirements, and a considerable array of enforcement powers. It is important, therefore, at the outset to identify the scope of state authority as determined by critical definitions and associated exemptions or exclusions.

As with broker-dealers, licensing of investment advisers is commonly addressed in Blue Sky laws in terms of "registration." The Uniform Act provides:

It is unlawful for any person to transact business in this state as an investment adviser unless (1) he is so registered under this act, (2) he is registered as a broker-dealer without the imposition of a condition under section 204(b)(5), or (3) his only clients in this state are investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940 or insurance companies.ⁿ²⁴

The registration requirement today is straightforward. Any person other than a federal covered adviser who transacts business as an investment adviser must be registered. "Investment adviser" generally means a person that, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities or that, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analysis or reports concerning securities. In several states, the term includes a financial planner or other person that, as an integral component of other financially related services, provides investment advice to others for compensation as part of a business or that holds itself out as providing investment advice to others for compensation. This is the definition contained in the 2002 Uniform Act.ⁿ²⁵ As with the definitions of each intermediary and associated person, post-NSMIA, there are certain exclusions from the definition. For investment advisers, these are:

- (A) An investment adviser representative;
- (B) A lawyer, accountant, engineer, or teacher whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the practice of the person's profession;
- (C) A broker-dealer or its agents whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the conduct of business as a broker-dealer and that does not receive special compensation for the investment advice;
- (D) A publisher of a bona fide newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general and regular circulation;
- (E) A federal covered investment adviser;
- (F) A bank or savings institution;
- (G) A credit union; or
- (H) Any other person excluded by rule or order.

All states have necessarily adopted the substance of the 2002 Uniform Act provisions to accommodate federal covered advisers under NSMIA and, as discussed below, the NSMIA de minimis requirements.ⁿ²⁶

Although there are variations, state investment adviser laws today provide exemptions from the registration requirement for those investment advisers whose scope of business activity is limited. This is driven not only by the need to accommodate NSMIA as to federal covered advisers, but also to implement the national de minimis standard mandated by NSMIA. Thus, with certain variations, there are exemptions from registration, as reflected in the 2002 Uniform Act, for:

(1) A person with no place of business in the state that is registered under the securities act of the state in which the person has its principal place of business if its only clients in the state are:

(A) Federal covered investment advisers, investment advisers registered under the Act, or broker-dealers registered under the Act;

(B) Institutional investors;

(C) Bona fide preexisting clients whose principal places of residence are not in this state if the investment adviser is registered under the securities act of the state in which the clients maintain principal places of residence; or

(D) Any other client exempted by rule adopted or order issued under the Act;

(2) A person without a place of business in the state if the person has had, during the preceding 12 months, not more than five clients that are resident in the state in addition to those specified under paragraph (1) above; or

(3) Any other person exempted by rule or order.ⁿ²⁷

[3] Representative Licensing

Although NSMIA preempted state licensing authority over those larger investment advisers that remain eligible for registration with the SEC under the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, it preserved state authority with respect to all investment adviser representatives, including those of SEC-registered advisers, by providing that a "State may license, register or otherwise qualify an investment adviser representative who has a place of business located within that State."ⁿ²⁸ Thus, unless specifically exempt from registration, all investment adviser representatives are subject to state licensing regardless of association with or employment by an SEC-registered investment adviser that is not itself subject to state authority. As discussed earlier, SEC-registered investment advisers are subject to "notice" filing in those states in which they engage in business. Their identified representatives in those states, however, must be licensed individually.

States adopting the 2002 Uniform Act provide the exemption from registration for investment adviser representatives that contained in section 404(b) of the Act, such that the following individuals are exempt from registration:

(1) An individual who is employed by or associated with an investment adviser that is exempt from registration under section 403(b) or a federal covered adviser that is excluded from the notice filing requirements of section 405; and

(2) Any other individual exempted by rule or order issued under this [Act].ⁿ²⁹

The effect of this provision is to provide a limited exemption for representatives of investment advisers which themselves meet the criteria for exemption in a particular state in which it has no place of business discussed above. That is to say that one who is an investment adviser representative of an investment adviser having no place of business in the state, and who meets the requirements for exemption as to the clients serviced, or the de minimis criteria, is also exempt. Importantly, this is not to say that representatives of a federal covered adviser generally are exempt from registration. The exemptions from registration for investment adviser representatives in each state necessarily assume that a representative will in fact be registered under the law of the state in which the federal covered adviser has a place of business and does not transact de minimis business or limit its business to institutional or other permitted clients.

In states that have not adopted the 2002 Uniform Act, the requirement is in many cases clearly stated. In Maryland, for example:

An investment adviser representative who has a place of business located in this state may not transact business on behalf of a federal covered adviser, unless the investment adviser representative is registered or exempt from registration under this subtitle.ⁿ³⁰

NSMIA did not define "investment adviser representative," nor did it supply guidance as what constitutes a "place of business." The definition of investment adviser representative varies from state to state. As noted earlier, however, the starting point in the post-NSMIA era is the definition of investment adviser representative set out in Rule 203A-3 under the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, which provides:

"Investment adviser representative" of an investment adviser means a supervised person of the investment adviser:

- (i) Who has more than five clients who are natural persons (other than excepted persons ...); and
- (ii) More than ten percent of whose clients are natural persons (other than excepted persons ...).ⁿ³¹

Newer investment adviser provisions in Blue Sky laws adopt definitions of investment adviser representative that are virtually identical to the federal definition, and focus on the role of a "supervised person."ⁿ³² Others have adopted a more functional definition that is inclusive of any partner, officer, or director, or a person occupying similar status or performing similar functions, or anyone else employed by or associated with an investment adviser who:

- (a) Makes any recommendation or otherwise renders advice regarding securities;
- (b) Manages accounts or portfolios of clients;
- (c) Determines which recommendation or advice regarding securities should be given;
- (d) Solicits, offers, negotiates for the sale of or sells investment advisory services; or
- (e) Supervises employees who perform any of the above functions.ⁿ³³

In general, an investment adviser representative is a natural person who gives advice on behalf of an investment adviser to a certain minimum number of natural person clients through regular meetings or communications.

Because several state definitions, like the federal definition, broadly define investment adviser representative in terms of a "supervised person," all supervised persons would be subject to state licensing registration or qualification requirements under those definitions. However, NSMIA preempted state regulation of "supervised persons" of SEC-registered advisers, except those persons who are in fact investment adviser representatives. Supervised persons who do not, on a regular basis, solicit, meet with, or otherwise communicate with clients of the investment adviser, or who provide only impersonal investment advice, are thus excluded from the definition of investment adviser representative,ⁿ³⁴ as are supervised persons who provide only "impersonal" investment advice.ⁿ³⁵ The exception for "impersonal" investment advice operates to exclude persons who provide advisory services only by means of written materials or oral statements that do not purport to meet the objectives and needs of specific individuals or accounts.ⁿ³⁶

[4] Filing Requirements

Compliance with state Blue Sky laws entails either a "notice" filing in the case of SEC-registered advisers operating within a state, or full licensing procedures in the case of all others. As discussed above, investment adviser representatives must qualify for licensing regardless of the filing status of the advisers with which they are associated.

The Uniform Act provides that an applicant for licensing as an investment adviser "shall file with the [Administrator] an application for licensing and a consent to service of process The application for licensing must contain the information that the [Administrator], by rule, requires."³⁷ In practice, licensing of investment advisers and investment adviser representatives is accomplished through completion and submission of SEC Form ADV--"Uniform Application for Investment Adviser Registration"--prescribed under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. Form ADV is formatted both for a paper version and for electronic filing through the Investment Advisor Registration Depository (IARD). SEC-registered investment advisers must submit their initial registration through the IARD. Participation in the IARD requires establishing account access to the system through FINRA. IARD also accepts filings by state-registered investment advisers, who must pay the same fees as SEC-registered advisers. Nearly all states now mandate electronic filing through the IARD.

Form ADV consists of two parts. Part 1 collects information concerning the adviser and associated persons. It is comprised of various questions and schedules addressing business practices, ownership and control of the adviser, persons who provide investment advice on behalf of the adviser, and detailed disciplinary histories. Part 2 is itself divided in two parts. Part 1A includes information to be provided by all investment advisers. Part 1B, prepared by the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) on behalf of state securities regulators, contains additional items to which state-registered advisers must respond. Part 1B includes bonding and capital information, and information concerning financial planning services, custody of client funds or securities, compliance personnel, and arbitration claims. Part 2 contains information required to be disclosed to prospective advisory clients, and doubles as a disclosure document for compliance with the "brochure" rule under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, governing dissemination of information.³⁸ Part II functions as the current brochure of an adviser, to be continuously amended as necessary, delivered to prospective clients, and annually offered to current clients. States have substantially adopted the SEC brochure rule into their own investment adviser statutes and regulations.³⁹

For SEC-registered investment advisers required only to make "notice" filings under Blue Sky laws, Form ADV is combined with a form of consent to service of process and a fee to complete the filing. Notice filings in states are annual, and must be renewed prior to expiration. Form ADV amendments are made electronically through the IARD.

Filing requirements for investment advisers subject to licensing under state laws involve an application generally consisting of not only a complete Form ADV filed electronically, but also certain other items including the identification of a designated "principal" of an adviser that is not itself a natural person, a schedule of all persons who will act as investment adviser representatives in the state, certain background and qualifying information on those identified representatives, and standard fingerprint cards to the extent a representative is not already on file in the Central Registration Depository (CRD). Most states also provide for direct submission of other materials or information as may be required by the administrator, such as prescribed financial statements, the extent of the requirements for which differs according to whether the adviser expects to have custody or possession of client funds or securities, or requires prepayment of advisory fees. In Florida, for example:

Investment adviser applicants shall file financial statements as of a date within ninety (90) days prior to the date of filing for registration, which statements may be unaudited financial statements defined in paragraph (2)(d) of this Rule. However, each investment adviser who has custody or possession of clients' funds or securities; requires prepayment of advisory fees six months or more in advance and in excess of $500 per client; or computes net capital pursuant to SEC Rule 15c3-1 for purposes of compliance with Rule 3E-600.016(3), shall file [audited] financial statements.⁴⁰

In Hawaii, the requirement also illustrates incorporation of the NSMIA mandate that intermediaries not be made subject to multiple, varying burdens for advisers whose principal place of business is in a different state. Having prescribed the financial statement similar to Florida set out above, Hawaii goes on to provide:

If the investment adviser maintains its principal place of business in a state other than this state and the investment adviser is registered in that state and in compliance with its financial reporting requirements, this requirement [for financial statements] shall be deemed satisfied by the investment adviser filing with the commissioner a copy of those financial statements, if any, that are required to be filed by the adviser in the state where it maintains its principal place of business.ⁿ⁴¹

Investment adviser representative licensing is accomplished through filing an application consisting of prescribed items including a complete Form U-4--"Uniform Application for Securities Industry Registration or Transfer." Form U-4 collects personal, employment and disciplinary history information and, coupled with such other evidence required by states concerning attainment of a minimum competency standard, serves as the basic means by which administrators determine the fitness of a representative for licensing under the applicable qualitative standard. Representatives must also submit standard fingerprint cards if they have not already been submitted through the CRD in connection with a prior securities registration or license. States may also require additional items specifically dealing with satisfaction of the minimum competency standard discussed below and, where applicable, certain notification evidence in the event a representative will act for more than one investment adviser. There is a separate fee for investment adviser representative license applications, and licensing and fees for representatives are annual, as they are in the process applicable to the advisers themselves.

The filing requirements supply the sources of information used by administrators in measuring an applicant for licensing as an investment adviser or investment adviser representative against the particular standard for granting licenses. Forms ADV and U-4 in particular present considerable securities industry background information, and allow for a determination of the worthiness of an applicant to engage in business in the state. Regulations under Blue Sky laws typically list particular factors taken into consideration, which in all cases encompass the same factors applied to licensing of broker-dealers and their associated persons. In some states specific factors applicable to investment advisers and representatives are included. In Hawaii, for example, specific issues bearing on an applicant's worthiness include a series of adviser-specific factors such as charging unreasonable advisory fees, failing to disclose material conflicts of interest, guaranteeing results and advertising violations.ⁿ⁴²

In general, administrators rely on this information to assess whether an applicant has engaged in fraudulent conduct or has been found liable for conduct constituting incompetence in financial activities. The information also discloses whether the applicant has been subject to administrative, civil or other disciplinary action by regulatory authorities or has failed to satisfy any judgment or ward. Administrators may also learn whether an applicant has been found guilty of a felony, or of any misdemeanor involving theft, deception or moral turpitude; and, in general, whether the applicant has engaged in any conduct which would reflect on the applicant's reputation for honesty, integrity, and competence in business and personal dealings.

As illustrated by the Uniform Act,ⁿ⁴³ states utilize the filing requirements as the basis for summary orders denying an application (or in some cases notices of intent to issue such orders), which trigger the right of an applicant to initiate a hearing.ⁿ⁴⁴ The hearing procedure effectively places the burden on the applicant to demonstrate that the indicated basis for denying the license is insubstantial, or that the public interest would not be served by denial.

Applicants for state licensing as investment advisers or investment adviser representatives must demonstrate that they are qualified by training and experience to engage in the advisory business. There are generally three ways in which an applicant may satisfy the minimum competency standards for investment advisers and representatives under Blue Sky laws: (1) by being continuously registered for a prescribed period of time as an investment adviser with the SEC under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940; (2) by achieving a passing score on one of the designated "series" of examinations administered by FINRA; or (3) by achieving and maintaining a certain professional designation such as that of Certified Financial Planner, Chartered Financial Analyst, Chartered Investment Counselor, Chartered Financial Consultant, or Certified Public Accountant/Personal Financial Specialist.

In the wake of NSMIA, prior continuous SEC registration as an investment adviser makes for a relatively simple transition from federal to state regulation for those advisers no longer eligible for SEC registration. However, because SEC registration does not extend to investment adviser representatives, satisfaction of the minimum competency requirements in many, if not most, instances involves passing one of the Series 6, 7, 8, 22, 24, 26, 39, 62, 63, 65 or 66 examinations administered through FINRA. For individuals previously employed in the securities industry, the requirement does not mean new or additional testing. An individual who has at some time passed one of the designated examinations may not be required to take it or another again in connection with an application for licensing as an investment adviser representative, or as the designated principal of an investment advisory firm. Thus, individuals previously qualified under securities industry standards, whether or not current in that qualification, may meet state minimum competency requirements.ⁿ⁴⁵

To facilitate the examination requirement for individuals having no prior securities industry registration, the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA), in conjunction with FINRA, created the Series 65 Investment Advisers Examination specifically for this purpose. Series 65 is a limited purpose examination focusing on the basic ethical responsibilities of investment advisers, the Uniform Securities Act, and the federal securities laws, especially the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. It is a two-hour, 75-question computer-based exam. A passing score is 70%. The exam is available for individual investment advisers and designated principals of advisory firms, and it is also used for the qualification of investment adviser representatives.ⁿ⁴⁶

Minimum competency for advisers and representatives may also be satisfied, and examination requirements waived, for individuals holding certain professional designations. There are minor variations in specific accrediting requirements attached to some of these provisions, but the Oregon list of qualifying professional designations is representative:

(A) Chartered Financial Analyst (CFA) granted by the Association for Investment Management and Research;

(B) Certified Financial Planner (CFP) issued by the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards, Inc.;

(C) Chartered Financial Consultant (ChFC) awarded by the American College, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania;

(D) Chartered Investment Counselor (CIC) granted by the Investment Counsel Association of America; or

(E) Personal Financial Specialist (PFS) administered by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.ⁿ⁴⁷

[6] Post-Registration Requirements

Subject to section 222 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,ⁿ⁴⁸ which was added by NSMIA and mandated a national standard, states may establish minimum financial requirements, requirements for reports and recordkeeping and other requirements for investment advisers on an on-going basis.ⁿ⁴⁹

[a] Reporting and Record Keeping Requirements

Once licensed, investment advisers are subject to current information reporting requirements,ⁿ⁵⁰ and such further annual or periodic financial reports as an administrator may prescribe. States also impose specific record keeping requirements. With few exceptions, state books and records requirements for investment advisers track--indeed in many cases, incorporate by reference--those contained in the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940. Records generally required of all investment advisers include: (1) general journals (including at least a cash receipts and cash disbursement journal); (2) general ledger; (3) order memoranda (for brokerage orders); (4) bank records; (5) bills and statements; (6) trial balances and financial records; (7) written communications (business correspondence sent and received); (8) a list of any discretionary accounts; (9) trading authority or powers of attorney; (10) written agreements pertaining to the business of the adviser; (11) advertising materials; (12) representatives' personal transaction records; (13) principals' personal transaction records; (14) solicitor agreements and client acknowledgments; (15) record of providing disclosure statements; and (16) backup data for performance reports or claims.ⁿ⁵¹ Additional items or categories of records may be required depending upon the particular nature or scope of an adviser's business. Advisers with custody of client funds or securities generally must keep additional records such as a separate ledger for each client showing all purchases, sales proceeds, and deliveries of securities for the account of the client, with dates and prices, copies of transaction confirmations, and securities records showing the names of clients who have positions in those securities.ⁿ⁵² And advisers who provide supervisory or management services must keep separate records for each client showing securities purchased and sold, including date, amount and price, as well as a listing of client names by security positions.ⁿ⁵³

As a general matter, ongoing financial reporting requirements for investment advisers are similar to, if not the same as, those required of broker-dealers in the same state, especially with respect to reporting and filing dates.ⁿ⁵⁴ However, in one state the investment adviser must file reports only when the investment adviser has discretionary authority with respect to transactions in a client's securities or has custody of a client's funds or securities.ⁿ⁵⁵ Some states mandate financial reporting if the investment adviser either has custody or possession of clients' funds or securities or requires advisory fees in excess of $500 per client to be paid six months or more in advance.ⁿ⁵⁶ In other states, investment adviser reporting and filing requirements differ in other ways from those applicable to broker-dealers.ⁿ⁵⁷

Akin to reporting requirements, the State Corporation Commission in Virginia has authority to require the dissemination of information about an investment adviser when doing so is in the public interest.ⁿ⁵⁸ Information given to clients or prospective clients under the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940 and rules promulgated thereunder may be used for this purpose to the extent allowed by the Commissioner.ⁿ⁵⁹

Pursuant to the NSMIA amendments to the Investment Advisers Act, states are prohibited from imposing record keeping requirements on a state-registered adviser whose principal place of business is not in that state if those requirements are in addition to those required under the laws of the state in which the investment adviser maintains its principal place of business and with whose applicable books and records requirements the adviser already complies.ⁿ⁶⁰ Generally, these records include journals containing receipt and disbursement records; general and auxiliary ledgers reflecting asset, liability, reserve, capital, income and expense accounts; memoranda of orders given by the investment adviser to buy or sell customers' securities, together with any instructions given by the customer; checkbooks, bank statements, canceled checks and cash reconciliations; records of bills and statements, paid or unpaid, relating to the business of the investment adviser; trial balances, financial statements and internal audit working papers; communications received or dispatched relating to any investment advice, the receipt, disbursement, or delivery of funds or securities, or the placing or execution of orders to buy or sell securities; a list of all discretionary accounts; copies of all powers of attorney; copies of all written agreements with customers; copies of advertising material; and records of transactions in which the investment adviser obtains any beneficial ownership.ⁿ⁶¹

The rules requiring record keeping for investment advisers generally prescribe that records be kept for a stated minimum period of time, although the period not only varies from state to state, but often varies within a single state depending on the type of record.ⁿ⁶²

[b] Minimum Financial Requirements

Unlike broker-dealers, there are no blanket minimum financial requirements among the states for investment advisers. Minimum net capital, net worth, or bonding requirements, if imposed at all, are generally keyed to whether the adviser maintains custody of client funds or securities, or exercises discretionary authority. In Iowa, for example, an investment adviser who has custody of client funds or securities must maintain a minimum net worth (as defined in the statute) of $35,000. Every investment adviser who has discretionary authority over client funds or securities, but who does not have custody, must maintain a minimum net worth of $10,000.ⁿ⁶³ In all cases where such requirements are imposed, however, NSMIA forbids any state from requiring an adviser to maintain a higher bond or net capital amount than would be required by the state in which it maintains its principal place of business and with whose bonding and capital requirements it complies.ⁿ⁶⁴

Only a handful of states have investment adviser minimum capital requirements applicable under all circumstances.ⁿ⁶⁵ Others, like Iowa noted above, impose minimum requirements only when the investment adviser is in possession of clients' funds or securities, or has discretionary authority over client funds.ⁿ⁶⁶ And some of these states prescribe a minimum ratio between minimum net capital and aggregate indebtedness which must be maintained.ⁿ⁶⁷

Some states provide for a surety bond in lieu of a minimum capital requirement.ⁿ⁶⁸ And many states have general requirements that investment advisers post surety bonds.ⁿ⁶⁹ However, as with net capital or net worth requirements, a number of these provide that the bond is needed only when the investment adviser has custody of funds or securities of one or more clients.ⁿ⁷⁰ Additionally, in several instances the surety bond requirement is not applicable to investment advisers who continuously maintain net capital of at least $100,000.ⁿ⁷¹

States may impose a time limit on the effectiveness of a prior passing score. In Pennsylvania, for example, persons registering as investment advisers or investment adviser representatives must have passed a designated examination within two years of filing an application. However, Pennsylvania also expressly provides for "grandfathering," i.e., waiver of the examination requirement, for applicants who received a passing score on designated examinations sometime prior to January 1, 2000. *Pa. CHAPTER 11 Regulation of Intermediaries: Broker-Dealers, Investment Advisers and Associated Persons

§ 11.04 Denial, Suspension, and Revocation of Intermediary Licensing

State authority to deny, suspend or revoke the license of an intermediary extends uniformly to broker-dealers, investment advisers and their respective associated persons or representatives. Blue Sky laws identify several grounds upon which state administrators may deny licenses to firms and persons engaged in the securities business. Under the Uniform Act, the Revised Uniform Act, and the Blue Sky laws of most states, an order denying or late depriving a person of a license may be entered if it is in the public interest, and if either the applicant has demonstrated certain disqualifying criteria or the administrator makes certain findings. The bases upon which an application for licensing may be denied are the same as those controlling authority to suspend or revoke a license once granted. A denial, suspension or revocation judged to be in the public interest is, a fortiori, necessary to protect the investing public.ⁿ¹

All of the common criteria for denying, suspending or revoking the license of an intermediary are discussed in more detail below. As a practical matter, in the initial application or periodic renewal or transfer processes, the principal criteria fall under the heading of character and fitness, or good "business repute." Although ultimate judgments are subjective, they are based upon an assessment of an applicant's regulatory history, satisfaction of applicable examination requirements and complete submission of required application documentation. The denial of a license involves an order of the administrator that is the product of an administrative procedure and findings. Although administrative procedures vary among the states, the denial of a license is typically preceded by a notice of intent identifying grounds, and affording the applicant an opportunity to be heard and to present evidence in support of the application.ⁿ² The procedure is the same where a suspension or revocation is involved.

The ability of state administrators to respond to applications with institution of appropriate proceedings to deny, or later to suspend or revoke, has been rendered far more efficient through the mechanism of the Central Registration Depository (CRD) for electronic filing of basic and continuously updated information for broker-dealers and their registered persons. The CRD represents a one-stop electronic filing system readily accessible to state regulators, as well as the investing public. All state licensing procedures for broker-dealers require filing with the CRD of Form U-4 for those persons who are to be registered representatives of a broker-dealer, and thus licensed as salespersons, agents or associated persons, and of Form BD for the broker-dealer itself. Forms U-4 and BD are "evergreen," that is, subject to continuous amendment and updating.ⁿ³ The creation of the Investment Adviser Registration Depository (IARD) system will eventually accomplish the same result with regard to investment advisers and their representatives. These databases permit the more or less continuous monitoring of licensed intermediaries by state regulators, and represent the main resource for assessing continuing fitness for licensing. For that reason, an essential aspect of initial licensing of an intermediary in any state is entry by the applicant into the CRD or, eventually, by investment advisers and representatives into the IARD.ⁿ⁴

The overall "public interest" requirement attached to licensing determinations is intended to assure that minor or technical issues will not mandate denial of an application or institution of a suspension or revocation.ⁿ⁵ However, it is also clear that the fact that no member of the investing public suffers injury does not mean that adverse action on an application or a license is unwarranted.ⁿ⁶ The crucial distinction is substantially technical or inadvertent violations versus willful ones.

The statutes, as noted, apply to denial, suspension and revocation of registrations. Suspensions constitute temporary remedies applicable where there is a need for a drastic change in the methods of conducting business before a level of unfitness is reached. Two states put outside limits on the period of suspension, usually one year.ⁿ⁷ But in one case, where no maximum time period was indicated by statute, a five-year suspension was deemed proper.ⁿ⁸ A few states provide for the less harsh penalty of censure.ⁿ⁹ However, it has been held that even where the statute does not specifically provide for such a remedy, it is implicit that the administrator who has authority to suspend or revoke registrations has the implicit power to impose lesser sanctions such as censure or reprimand.ⁿ¹⁰

The Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act specify numerous grounds for denial, suspension or revocation of registrations.ⁿ¹¹ In the discussion below, particular criteria identified in the Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act as the bases upon which to deny, suspend or revoke licenses are addressed. Not all states, of course, adopt each or all of these categories. Nevertheless, an attempt has been made to broaden each concept so that as many state provisions as possible may be included. Other non-Uniform Act criteria are similarly included. An important caveat is that administrators may take action against persons in the securities business even where the prohibition is not expressly set forth in the statutes or regulations. The rationale for this is simply that general statutory language, when read in the light of interpretive cases, is sufficient to set forth disciplinary grounds not spelled out in statutes or regulations.ⁿ¹²

[1] Incomplete, False, or Misleading Application

The Uniform Act and many states provide for disciplinary measures against, broker-dealers, agents and investment advisers making false or misleading statements and omissions in their respective licensing applications. As illustrated by the 2002 Uniform Act, specifically, these statutes give Administrators the power to deny, suspend, or revoke registration whenever the applicant (in the case of denial) or registrant (in the case of suspension or revocation):

[h]as filed an application for registration in this State under this [Act] or the predecessor act within the previous 10 years, which, as of its effective date or any date after filing in the case of an order denying effectiveness, was incomplete in a material respect or contained a statement that, in light of the circumstances under which it was made, was false or misleading with respect to a material fact;ⁿ¹³

In a suspension or revocation proceeding the application must have been false or misleading as of the effective date of licensing. The fact that events occur subsequent to this date which change the nature or accuracy of application information is not grounds for administrative action under this provision.ⁿ¹⁴ If, however, the registrant is required to file corrections to information contained in the original applicationⁿ¹⁵ and fails to do so, the registrant may be subject to suspension or revocation, not under this section, but under provisions which punish noncompliance with the statute.ⁿ¹⁶

In a denial proceeding, the effective date cannot, of course, apply. Consequently, the date of filing is used in such cases.ⁿ¹⁷ In one state, the provision has been altered to allow denial, revocation or suspension if the application is materially inaccurate as of the effective date or as of the date an order of denial, suspension or revocation is issued.ⁿ¹⁸ This provision seems automatically to pick up the requirement that application amendments be filed to correct outdated information.ⁿ¹⁹

A few Blue Sky laws contain a provision comparable to the provision in the Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act, minus the chronological benchmarks. These statutes simply provide for denial, suspension or revocation if the applicant or registrant has made a materially false statement in the application for registration.ⁿ²⁰ Some states carry their provisions beyond the registration application. These statutes apply also to any material information contained in any report filed with the Administratorⁿ²¹ or to any information supplied in any proceedings. Again, the lack of a specific provision in other statutes does not mean that such actions would not be punishable. To the contrary, they would likely fall under disciplinary measures permitted for non-compliance with any provision of the Blue Sky law.

The willingness of state administrators to revoke registration for material misstatements or omissions contained in an application was demonstrated in a New Jersey caseⁿ²² where an agent responded in the negative to application questions dealing with arrests or convictions for crimes, disciplinary proceedings by administrative, governmental or regulatory bodies, or charges of violations of statutes or rules of any such body. The agent had been convicted pursuant to a military court martial for desertion, grand larceny and resisting arrest. In explaining why he omitted these details from the application, the agent argued that the questions constituted an illegal invasion of his privacy and that since he was seeking admission to a civilian occupation, he was under the reasonable belief that only matters bearing on his civilian record were being questioned. The court answered these points by stating first that admission into a licensed profession requires that the state look "into those portions of the applicant's private life which affect the public interest."ⁿ²³ Second, the court pointed out that the application clearly called for a record of "convictions" and "disciplinary action, past or pending, by any administrative, governmental or regulatory body." The court asserted that "[t]he questions are sufficiently clear to convey to anyone intelligent enough to act as a securities agent the nature of the information sought to be elicited."ⁿ²⁴

[2] Non-Compliance with Statutes or Rules

Perhaps the provisions giving the broadest grounds for revocation, suspension or denial of registrations of persons in the securities business are those which permit such actions for non-compliance with any statutory provision of the Blue Sky law or any rule or regulation promulgated under it. The Uniform Act and Revised Uniform Act provide that the administrator may take action whenever an applicant or registrant "has willfully violated or willfully failed to comply with any provision of this [A]ct[,], or a predecessor act[,], or any rule or order under this act or a predecessor act."ⁿ²⁵ Apart from those portions of the provision referring to predecessor acts, a majority of states have adopted this provision substantially intact.ⁿ²⁶ Differences generally occur because a state has dropped the requirement that the violation or failure to comply be willful,ⁿ²⁷ or because the statute is silent with respect to violations of administrative rules.ⁿ²⁸ Delaware takes a unique approach in retaining the Uniform Act language for violations of the statute, but providing in a separate section for violations of the Commission's regulations or failure to comply with an order of the Commissioner.ⁿ²⁹ Among the states that have adopted the Revised Uniform Act,ⁿ³⁰ not only is willful violation of the statutes or rules grounds for revocation, denial or suspension, but so are breaches of the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, the Investment Company Act of 1940, and the Commodity Exchange Act of 1974.

The requirement that violations be "willful" is closely tied to the public interest factor, which is generally indispensable to a denial, suspension or revocation. The drafters of the Uniform Act intended the concept of willfulness to restrain administrators from pouncing on every technical or inadvertent violation of the statute or rules. However, in order for a failure to comply or a violation to be considered willful, the complainant need not prove that the registrant had knowledge of the violation or the intent to commit a violation. All that is needed is a showing that "the person acted intentionally in the sense that he was aware of what he was doing."ⁿ³¹ Cases examining administrative proceedings support this view.ⁿ³²

Several states emphasize that certain acts constitute non-compliance by specifically listing them as grounds for denial, revocation or suspension, even though such actions are also warranted under the broad provision on non-compliance.

These statutes stress such infractions as failing to file required financial statementsⁿ³³ or other reports,ⁿ³⁴ failing to keep required books and records,ⁿ³⁵ not permitting administrative examination of such books and records,ⁿ³⁶ and failing to maintain minimum capitalⁿ³⁷ and/or bonding requirements.ⁿ³⁸ A few states provide for broker-dealer discipline where the registrant is dealing in securities through an unregistered agent.ⁿ³⁹ The use by a broker-dealer of an unlicensed agent is an unlawful act in most statesⁿ⁴⁰ and would therefore fall under the general non-compliance provisions.

Specific acts of non-compliance have been the subject of disciplinary proceedings. In Mayflower Securities Co. v. Bureau of Securities,ⁿ⁴¹ for example, the Securities Administrator had ordered a twenty-day suspension of a broker-dealer for trading in securities through an unregistered agent and failing to keep required records. The charge of using an unregistered agent arose from practices of both the broker-dealer and the Administrator, which the court described as "loose at both ends."ⁿ⁴² The Administrator's practice was to send agent renewal applications to broker-dealers, who would complete one portion of an agent's form and then turn the form over to the agent to complete the balance. In this particular instance, the agent returned his completed form to his manager for filing, but for some reason it was never filed. Unknown was whether the form was ever submitted to the Administrator or was lost in the Administrator's office. The situation came to light when the agent, believing he was registered, applied to have his registration transferred to another broker-dealer employer. The Administrator then sent a representative to the broker-dealer's office to examine the latter's files to see if the agent had engaged in securities transactions in the state. Unfortunately, the broker-dealer was in the process of moving and could not locate the records, and this gave rise to the second charge. The records, however, were in existence and were subsequently offered to the court. In view of the circumstances, the court reversed the suspension,ⁿ⁴³ noting that the violations, at most, were technical and not willful, and that a reprimand of the broker-dealer by the administrator might be more fitting under the facts.ⁿ⁴⁴

The facts of this case are rather unusual in that the administrator may have been at fault for not licensing the agent, and that the records could not be located due to the unhappy coincidence that the offices were being moved. But not all administrative proceedings arise due to happenstance. Most, in fact, involve serious charges that the exercise of proper care would have prevented. In another proceeding,ⁿ⁴⁵ an agent was also in charge of keeping various records for his broker-dealer employer. Unfortunately, because he was too concerned with the commissions he could earn as an agent, he slipped badly in his record keeping duties, particularly in keeping track of margin accounts. This lapse not only cost his customers many thousands of dollars, but forced his employer out of business. The agent received a rather light punishment. The administrator took into consideration his youth and lack of maturity, the fact that his actions were neither intended to defraud nor in intentional disregard of appropriate standards, and the fact that his service as agent was otherwise generally satisfactory. Accordingly, instead of outright revocation, the administrator suspended the agent's registration for five years.ⁿ⁴⁶

The registrations of broker-dealers have also been revoked as a result of such conduct as failing to maintain minimum capital as required by statute and regulations,ⁿ⁴⁷ selling unregistered securities,ⁿ⁴⁸ and trading in securities through unlicensed agents.ⁿ⁴⁹ In one instance, the license of an investment adviser was revoked for, among other things, acting as an agent of an issuer and selling its unregistered securities.ⁿ⁵⁰

[3] Character and Conduct Determinations

[a] Dishonest or Unethical Practices and Fraud

Securities administrators are broadly empowered to deny, revoke or suspend a license under provisions such as that contained in the Uniform Act triggered on a finding that the applicant or registrant "has engaged in dishonest or unethical practices in the securities business."ⁿ⁵¹ While many states have adopted the Uniform Act provision,ⁿ⁵² some have refined or supplemented it in various ways. The District of Columbia, for example, empowers the Commissioner to act in circumstances in which a registrant has shown himself or herself to be "incompetent, untrustworthy, or financially irresponsible."ⁿ⁵³ Two states focus on conduct involving one taking "unfair advantage of a customer."ⁿ⁵⁴

Three others apply their provisions to all "dishonest or unethical" practices without the proviso that they occur in the securities business.ⁿ⁵⁵

In other states, the basis of administrative action is often fraudulent conduct, or at least "fraud" is often the pivotal word in these provisions even where the statutory language is embellished to include other comparable standards.ⁿ⁵⁶ The criteria in some states are even more ambiguous, where persons in the securities business are required to possess "integrity"ⁿ⁵⁷ or are not permitted to be of "bad business repute"ⁿ⁵⁸ or to have demonstrated "unworthiness" to engage in business.ⁿ⁵⁹

Fortunately, one can read most of these terms in the light of more specific statutory provisions and regulations that give examples of the types of behavior which, if not fraudulent, are certainly dishonest or unethical.ⁿ⁶⁰ Such acts include market manipulations,ⁿ⁶¹ sales of securities at unconscionable variations from current market prices,ⁿ⁶² the charging of excessive or unreasonable commissions or markups,ⁿ⁶³ the making of fictitious or pretended sales or purchases of securities,ⁿ⁶⁴ and unreasonable delays in turning over securities to those persons entitled to them.ⁿ⁶⁵ Regulations in a number of states set out considerable lists of acts and practices that are specifically labeled dishonest, unethical, or fraudulent, or which establish at least a presumption that an applicant is not of good business repute.ⁿ⁶⁶ Administrators may use such acts and practices as the basis for denying, suspending, or revoking registrations.

Administrators have, in fact, acted in disciplinary proceedings on such grounds as charging unfair prices,ⁿ⁶⁷ making misleading statements or material misrepresentations with respect to securities being sold,ⁿ⁶⁸ treating a customer's account as a discretionary account without written authorization,ⁿ⁶⁹ and inducing customers to purchase securities that are unsuitable to the customer's financial resources.ⁿ⁷⁰ On the matter of suitability, the Maryland Securities Commissioner adopted the pertinent NASD rule to find that an agent who gave an unsuitable recommendation had committed a dishonest or unethical practice, and the Commissioner's decision was upheld on appeal.ⁿ⁷¹ One state administrator deemed unethical a combination of an agent's inducing excess trading, making unauthorized use of a customer's funds, and borrowing money from a customer.ⁿ⁷²

In addition, the North Dakota Securities Commissioner has issued an advisory that industry professionals participating in media talk shows and giving recommendations concerning specific securities may be deemed to be engaged in unethical solicitations of business.ⁿ⁷³

[b] Criminal Convictions

In Higgins v. New Jersey Bureau of Securities,ⁿ⁷⁴ the court addressed the scope of securities administrators' consideration of criminal history in licensing determinations:

Convictions have a bearing on a determination as to the applicant's character. We see no justification for the argument ... that the Bureau must confine its inquiry to an applicant's conduct directly relating to the security business in searching for indicia of character and may not inquire concerning the applicant's life in general.ⁿ⁷⁵

Although the quoted language indicates that the states have broad authority in looking into criminal convictions of securities business applicants and registrants, the Uniform Act and Revised Uniform Actⁿ⁷⁶ place limits on the convictions to be considered for purposes of denial, suspension or revocation of a license. The Uniform Act authorizes Administrators to act whenever the person or firm involved "has been convicted, within the past ten years, of any misdemeanor involving a security or any aspect of the securities business, or any felony."ⁿ⁷⁷

within the last ten years, has been convicted of an offense that the [Administrator] finds:

(i) involves the purchase or sale of a security, taking a false oath, making a false report, bribery, perjury, burglary, robbery, or attempt or conspiracy to commit any of these offenses;

(ii) arises out of the conduct of business as a broker-dealer, investment adviser, depository institution, insurance company, or fiduciary; or

(iii) involves the larceny, theft, robbery, forgery, counterfeiting, fraudulent concealment, embezzlement, fraudulent conversion, or misappropriation of funds or securities or an attempt or conspiracy to commit any of those offenses[.]ⁿ⁷⁸

Some states have added additional factors. One, for example, requires the Administrator to consider rehabilitation of the applicant or registrant before licensing can be denied.ⁿ⁷⁹ Since criminal convictions serve only as a basis, not as a mandate, for disciplinary proceedings, administrators arguably could and would consider rehabilitation before acting negatively on an application or registration, with or without a specific statutory command. Only two other states, which have a provision differing from the Uniform Act, direct the administrator to consider rehabilitation of offenders.ⁿ⁸⁰ Two states, which otherwise have adopted the original Uniform Act provision, authorize disciplinary action if a charge is pending involving unlawful conduct in connection with securities or an aspect of the securities business.ⁿ⁸¹

A few states alter the Uniform Act provision by eliminating the time period during which misdemeanor convictions involving securities or the securities business are applicable.ⁿ⁸² In other aspects, these statutes are substantially the same as the Uniform Act.ⁿ⁸³ Elimination of the ten-year period would, of course, act to the detriment of the applicant or the registrant, for the administrator would then be entitled to review an open-ended record. One jurisdiction expands the Uniform Act provision by allowing the administrator additionally to consider any offense, felony or otherwise, within the past ten years if it arises out of a fiduciary or financial services position.ⁿ⁸⁴

Other states with provisions dealing with criminal convictions vary in their approaches. Most prescribe administrative action for any felony conviction committed at any time.ⁿ⁸⁵ A few, however, are interested in only certain felony convictions. The named felonies are those involving securities or an aspect of the securities business,ⁿ⁸⁶ those involving fraud as an essential element,ⁿ⁸⁷ or those involving moral turpitude.ⁿ⁸⁸ One state requires only that the Commissioner find that the conviction has a "direct bearing" on the registrant's ability to serve the public,ⁿ⁸⁹ while another mandates that the crime "indicat[e] a lack of fitness to engage in the securities business."ⁿ⁹⁰ New Jersey authorizes the Bureau Chief, after a hearing, to bar from acting as a broker-dealer, agent or investment adviser any person convicted of designated crimes under federal, state or foreign securities, banking, insurance, commodities trading or antifraud laws.ⁿ⁹¹ Three states allow consideration of only those felony convictions which occurred in the past ten years,ⁿ⁹² and two consider only those occurring within the last five years.ⁿ⁹³

More often than not, the states having criminal conviction sanctions other than those contained in the Uniform Act or the Revised Uniform Act will follow the Uniform Act's example and authorize licensing discipline only for certain misdemeanor convictions. The most common ground is the one contained in the Uniform Act: a misdemeanor conviction involving a security or an aspect of the securities business.ⁿ⁹⁴ Some, however, include broader categories of misdemeanors, specifically those involving moral turpitude,ⁿ⁹⁵ breach of fiduciary duty,ⁿ⁹⁶ fraud,ⁿ⁹⁷ or those labeled "infamous crimes."ⁿ⁹⁸

Two states have provisions governing administrative consideration of both felonies and misdemeanors which differ from the statutes in all other states.ⁿ⁹⁹ In these states, denial, suspension or revocation of registration is permissible if a criminal conviction (1) involved the purchase or sale of a security, (2) arose out of the conduct of the business of a broker-dealer or investment adviser, (3) involved theft, or (4) involved mail fraud under federal statutes.ⁿ¹⁰⁰ These states further provide that a finding by a court of civil liability for any of those grounds may also serve as the basis of a disciplinary action, although in one of them any such finding, civil or criminal, must have been made during the preceding ten years.ⁿ¹⁰¹ A similar provision with respect to time exists, as mentioned, in most states.

Although only a few states have taken the position that Administrators may treat a plea of nolo contendere as the equivalent of conviction for disciplinary purposes,ⁿ¹⁰² others would likely reach the same conclusion.

Some statutes contain no provision mentioning criminal convictions, but do contain authorization for the denial, suspension or revocation of registration if the applicant or registrant "has been guilty of any fraudulent act in connection with the sale of any securities."ⁿ¹⁰³ This provision deserves special mention because although a conviction is certainly equivalent to guilt, statutes of this kind do not make it plain as to whether or not conviction is a necessary element. Although there may be no precedent for such action, an administrator may conceivably make a finding of "guilt" for purposes of this provision without having to look for a criminal conviction.

[c] Injunctions and Previously Issued Orders

Judicially-imposed injunctions are a common ground that may be used by state administrators to deny, suspend or revoke licenses. The authority to so act under the Uniform Act arises whenever the applicant or registrant:

is permanently or temporarily enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction from engaging in or continuing any conduct or practice involving any aspect of the securities businessⁿ¹⁰⁴

and under the 2002 Uniform Act when the applicant or registrant:

is enjoined or restrained by a court of competent jurisdiction in an action instituted by the administrator under this [Act] or the predecessor act, a State, the Securities and Exchange Commission, or the United States from engaging in or continuing and act, practice, or course of business involving an aspect of a business involving securities, commodities, investments, franchises, insurance, banking, or finance.ⁿ¹⁰⁵

Although some differences in language exist, mostly as a result of the Uniform Act version selected, most states have enacted a provision which permits similar administrative enforcement. These provisions are fairly straightforward and warrant few comments. Note, however, that these provisions refer to injunctions issued by "any court." Thus, administrators may look beyond the courts of their own respective states. Injunctions issued in other states, or even other countries, arguably are sufficient for the taking of administrative action.

The fact that these statutes are written in the present tense is also pertinent. If the administrator is going to act, such action must be on the basis of an injunction that is currently in effect. The basis for administrative disciplinary proceedings vanishes if the injunction expires or is vacated.ⁿ¹⁰⁶ Nevertheless, a prior injunction would clearly bear upon assessments of good business repute or other character and fitness standards applied in the licensing process.

Once an administrator has denied, revoked or suspended a registration, the possibility exists, albeit not a very serious one, that the subject of the order will reapply for registration either in the same capacity or in some other aspect of the securities field. The drafters of the Uniform Act acknowledged that even in the absence of a statutory provision authorizing the denial of the new application, the administrator would probably have the power to act on grounds such as res judicata.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ However, both the Uniform Act and the 2002 Uniform Act make the power clear with a provision that most states have substantially adopted, authorizing the administrator to deny an application submitted by any person who "is the subject of an order of the [Administrator] denying, suspending, or revoking registration as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser [or investment adviser representative]."ⁿ¹⁰⁸ The drafters explained the provision as follows:

Its inclusion here is designed to make it clear that, when a person who has had his registration revoked applies for a new registration after an interval, the Administrator does not have to establish again the ground which led to the earlier denial or revocation order. The only question in such a case would be whether it is in the public interest to enter a denial order in view of the period which has expired since the earlier order and any interim circumstances; and presumably the Administrator could deny a new application summarily without even going into the public interest question if the interval since the earlier order was quite short.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

Both Pennsylvania and California have a slightly different provision. Pennsylvania specifies that a person who has had a registration denied, revoked or suspended may have a new application denied if the person seeks registration in another capacity.ⁿ¹¹⁰ However, one should not assume that a reapplication to resume business in the same capacity will not be denied. Similarly, the California provision applies only to agents who are applying to become broker-dealers. If the agent is under a currently effective order of denial, suspension or revocation, an application to be a broker-dealer is subject to denial.ⁿ¹¹¹ In Tennessee, the Commissioner may also deny, suspend or revoke an application or registration if the applicant or registrant is the subject of a Commissioner's order to cease and desist from violating any provision of the state's securities laws.ⁿ¹¹²

Under the Uniform Act and the 2002 Uniform Act, administrators may consider denial or revocation orders entered by the SEC or securities administrators of other states as the basis of denial, suspension or revocation orders in their own states.ⁿ¹¹³ Similarly, an administrator may base a disciplinary proceeding on an SEC order of suspension or expulsion of an applicant or registrant from a national securities exchange or a national securities association, or on a fraud order of the United States Post Office. The administrator, however, is subject to certain limits. First, any such order relied on must be currently in effectⁿ¹¹⁴ and must have been entered within the past five years.ⁿ¹¹⁵ Second, under the Uniform Act provision, if any such order is to be the basis of a revocation or suspension proceeding, such proceeding must be instituted within one year of the date of termination of the order being relied upon.ⁿ¹¹⁶ Finally, under the Uniform Act provision, if the order serving as the basis of the proceedings is of another state, the grounds for that order must also be grounds under the statute of the state where the Administrator is now acting.ⁿ¹¹⁷

The vast majority of states have enacted the Uniform Act provision in one of its various incarnations,ⁿ¹¹⁸ but some have made alterations. However, the general pattern of the Act's provision has been followed. The sole exception to this is Arizona, whose provisions defy cabining into one of the Uniform Act versions. Arizona provides that the registrant or applicant will be subject to administrative penalization if it is subject to an order of the SEC denying or revoking registration under the Exchange Act; or is subject to an order denying or revoking membership in a national securities association registered under the Exchange Act; or has been suspended for a period exceeding six months or expelled from membership in a national securities exchange registered under the Exchange Act.ⁿ¹¹⁹

[4] Lack of Training, Experience, or Knowledge

Most Blue Sky lawsⁿ¹²⁰ provide that licenses of persons in the securities business may be denied, revoked or suspended whenever the applicant or registrant "is not qualified on the basis of such factors as training, experience, and knowledge of the securities business."ⁿ¹²¹

The risk of ever licensing such persons is, of course, addressed to a great extent by requiring applicants to pass one or more securities examinations. This is true even in states not having a statutory provision comparable to that of the Uniform Act. Nevertheless, there are certain constraints on administrators in the exercise of authority to deny a license on this basis. The Uniform Act provides:

The [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer on the basis of the lack of qualification of any person other than (A) the broker-dealer himself if he is an individual or (B) an agent of the broker-dealer.ⁿ¹²²

Similarly, action based on lack of qualification of an investment adviser must be due to such lack in the investment adviser himself, if an individual, or employees performing investment advisory services.ⁿ¹²³ These provisions take into consideration the fact that broker-dealer or investment adviser firms may have directors or limited partners who are inactive in the business, and that such persons need not have the otherwise necessary qualifications.ⁿ¹²⁴

Although some states have specific qualification requirements with emphasis on experience in the securities business, the dictate of most Blue Sky lawsⁿ¹²⁵ is to force administrators to give the same consideration to an applicant's or registrant's training in the securities field as they would give to prior experience.ⁿ¹²⁶ These provisions do not allow the denial, suspension or revocation of a registration "solely on the basis of lack of experience if the applicant or registrant is qualified by training or knowledge or both."ⁿ¹²⁷

Representatives, agents or associated persons, of course, must generally be in the employ of a broker-dealer or issuer in order to be licensed. Administrators generally assume that broker-dealers will provide training for these persons.ⁿ¹²⁸ Consequently, Blue Sky laws often provide,ⁿ¹²⁹ as do the Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act,ⁿ¹³⁰ that an agent's qualifications to engage in the securities business need not be as great as the broker-dealer's. Specifically, the Uniform Act provides:

The Administrator shall consider that an agent [a sales representative] who will work under the supervision of a registered [licensed] broker-dealer need not have the same qualifications as a broker-dealer.ⁿ¹³¹

In 1986, NASAA amended the provision to give the same treatment to investment advisers and their representatives.ⁿ¹³² Under most circumstances, a registered broker-dealer is presumed to be able to act as an investment adviser in some capacity and does not have to have additional registration as such.ⁿ¹³³ However, administrators may find that a broker-dealer is not qualified to act as an investment adviser in such activities. Therefore, the Uniform Act and a number of Blue Sky lawsⁿ¹³⁴ provide that:

The [Administrator] shall consider that an investment adviser is not necessarily qualified solely on the basis of experience as a broker-dealer or agent. When he finds that an applicant for initial or renewal registration as a broker-dealer is not qualified as an investment adviser, he may by order condition the applicant's registration as a broker-dealer upon his not transacting business in this state as an investment adviser.ⁿ¹³⁵

The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws amended the provision in 1988 by omitting the second sentence,ⁿ¹³⁶ and a number of states have adopted the provision as thus modified.ⁿ¹³⁷

[5] Failure to Supervise

The failure of a broker-dealer to reasonably supervise agents,ⁿ¹³⁸ or of an investment adviser to reasonably supervise representatives,ⁿ¹³⁹ constitutes grounds for the denial, suspension or revocation of the registration of the broker-dealer or investment adviser. Responsibility of securities industry principals for the acts, practices and conduct of agents in connection with securities activities may be the subject of a specific mandate, as, for example, in Virginia.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ However stated, it is certain that a finding that a broker-dealer or investment adviser applicant or registrant that has agents or representatives has failed reasonably to supervise will, coupled with a public interest finding, be sufficient to deny a license.ⁿ¹⁴¹ This is particularly meaningful for applicants licensed in one or more states who seek additional licensing in other states. Even when the application is a new one, such an intermediary has some history of business and operations elsewhere, and historic supervisory issues may be explored in each new state in which a license is sought. Information leading to supervisory inquiries in the licensing process is readily available through the Central Registration Depository (CRD), which discloses all reportable complaints and proceedings involving a broker-dealer or registered person. The Investment Advisor Registration Depository (IARD) provides the same information for advisers and representatives.

A few Blue Sky laws set standards for supervision, providing, for example, that no person shall be deemed to have failed in supervisory responsibility if established procedures and a system for applying them are in force.ⁿ¹⁴² Any such procedure must be of a nature that would prevent and detect, as far as is practicable, violations of Blue Sky laws and regulations. The person responsible for supervision must reasonably enforce the procedures and have no reasonable cause to believe that they are not being complied with by persons for whom the supervisor is responsible.

A number of states have promulgated regulations requiring broker-dealers, and in some cases investment advisers,ⁿ¹⁴³ to establish written procedures for supervising agents and employees. For broker-dealers, these procedures must provide for such actions as the review and written approval of the supervisor of the opening of each new customer account; the periodic examination of all customer accounts; review and written approval of all securities transactions; the review of the currency and accuracy of required books and records; the review of all correspondence pertaining to securities transactions; the review and written approval of any authority given by a customer delegating discretionary authority; and the review and written approval of the handling of any customer complaint.ⁿ¹⁴⁴ For investment advisers the requirements may be more generally stated.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ In all cases, however, the requirement that there be no demonstrated failure to supervise (or likelihood of failure) as a basis for granting a license is clear.

Insolvency of an applicant or registrant is almost a universal ground for the denial, suspension or revocation of registrations. Many statesⁿ¹⁴⁶ have adopted the Uniform Act provision, which permits Administrators to refuse or terminate registration when the applicant or registrant:

[I]s insolvent, either in the sense that [the applicant's or registrant's] liabilities exceed [the applicant's or registrant's] assets or in the sense that he cannot meet his obligations [cannot be met] as they mature; but the [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer or investment adviser under this clause [subsection] without a finding of insolvency as to the broker-dealer or investment adviser.ⁿ¹⁴⁷

Under this provision, if insolvency is to be used as grounds for an administrative proceeding, the applicant or registrant itself must be insolvent. In other words, the fact that a partner or director of a broker-dealer or investment adviser firm is insolvent is not sufficient in and of itself to make a finding of insolvency against the firm.ⁿ¹⁴⁸

A certain amount of uniformity exists also among states that have not adopted the Uniform Act provision in that in several of them, a finding of insolvency may not be used as a ground for denying, suspending or revoking an agent's registration. These statutes specifically refer to the insolvency of broker-dealersⁿ¹⁴⁹ and, where appropriate, investment advisers.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

Other states have provisions that are basically comparable to the provision in the Uniform Act, but these statutes do not include the Uniform Act provision that a specific finding of insolvency must be made against a firm itself.ⁿ¹⁵¹ Other states provide for insolvency by referring to the registrant's failure to comply with net capital or aggregate indebtedness requirements.ⁿ¹⁵²

[7] Non-Payment of Fees

As a technical ground for denying licensing, the Uniform Act provides for administrative action when the applicant:

[H]as failed to pay the proper filing fee; but the Administrator may enter only a denial order under this clause, and he shall vacate any such order when the deficiency has been corrected.ⁿ¹⁵³

About half the states have substantially adopted this provision,ⁿ¹⁵⁴ but even where not enacted it would seem clear that as a practical matter, licenses would be denied when prescribed fees are not paid.ⁿ¹⁵⁵ Other states have adopted the Revised Uniform Act version, which requires the applicant to pay the fee within 30 days of notification by the Administrator of the deficiency and drops the denial order proviso.ⁿ¹⁵⁶

The Administrator may by order deny, suspend, or revoke any registration if he finds ... that the applicant or registrant ... is the subject of an order entered within the past five years by the securities administrator of any other state or by the Securities and Exchange Commission denying or revoking registration as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser, or the substantial equivalent of those terms as defined in this act, or is the subject of an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission suspending or expelling him from a national securities exchange or national securities association registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or is the subject of a United States Post Office fraud order; but (i) the [Administrator] may not institute a revocation or suspension proceeding under [this clause] more than one year from the date of the order relied on, and (ii) [he] may not enter an order under [this clause] on the basis of an order under another state act unless that order was based on facts which would currently constitute a ground for an order under this section.

In 1986, NASAA amended the provision to provide for administrative action against any applicant or registrant who:

[I]s the subject of an adjudication or determination within the past five years by a securities or commodities agency or administrator of another state or a court of competent state that the person has violated the Securities Act, the Exchange Act, the Investment Advisers Act, the Investment Company Act or the Commodity Exchange Act, or the securities or commodities law of any other state.

Section 204(a)(2)(F) of the Uniform Act (1986 NASAA amendment). In 1987 NASAA again amended the provision to provide for administrative action against any applicant or registrant who:

[I]s the subject of an adjudication or determination, after notice and opportunity for hearing, within the past 10 years by a securities or commodities agency or administrator of another state or a court of competent state that the person has willfully violated the Securities Act, the Exchange Act, the Investment Advisers Act, the Investment Company Act or the Commodity Exchange Act, or the securities or commodities laws of any other state.

NASAA modifications of this provision eliminated the facet dealing with pre-existing administrative actions by private organizations and other states. The main thrust of these versions of the provision is the violation of the law of fellow states or of federal securities law, namely the Securities Act, the Securities Exchange Act, the Investment Advisers Act, the Investment Company Act or the Commodity Exchange Act.

Administrators may well take formal or informal positions on particular areas of supervision. CHAPTER 11 Regulation of Intermediaries: Broker-Dealers, Investment Advisers and Associated Persons

2-11 Blue Sky Regulation § 11.05

§ 11.05 Cancellation or Withdrawal of Licensing or Application

The end result of a cancellation of a registration or applicationⁿ¹ to engage in the securities business, at least under the Uniform Act and the Revised Uniform Act, is the same as a revocation or denial. However, in the case of cancellation, no taint of wrongdoing exists on the part of the applicant or registrant. The grounds for cancellation arise when the applicant or registrant:

- (1) is no longer in existence;
- (2) has ceased to do business;
- (3) is subject to an adjudication of mental incompetence;
- (4) is subject to the control of a committee, conservator or guardian; or
- (5) cannot be located after a reasonable search by the Administrator.ⁿ²

A number of states have adopted these grounds for cancellation,ⁿ³ although a few, which otherwise have the same provision, consider such action by the administrator a revocation or denial.ⁿ⁴

Both the Uniform Act and the 2002 Uniform Act also allow registrants voluntarily to withdraw their registrations upon application. Under ordinary circumstances, the withdrawal of an application becomes effective thirty days after it is received by the administrator, or within a shorter time if so permitted. However, a registrant may not use a withdrawal to escape administrative proceedings. In Florida, for example:

The department may deny any request to terminate or withdraw any application or registration if the department believes that an act which would be ground for denial, suspension, restriction, or revocation under this chapter has been committed.ⁿ⁵

If a proceeding is pending when the application is filed, the application may be denied or conditions may be imposed upon its effectiveness. Similarly, denial or imposition of conditions may come into play if a revocation or suspension proceeding is instituted within thirty days after the withdrawal application is filed. Even if withdrawal becomes effective, the Administrator may still start a disciplinary proceeding within one year of the effective date.ⁿ⁶ But in such a case the grounds for action must be the registrant's willful violation of or willful failure to comply with the state's Blue Sky law or regulations.ⁿ⁷

While some statesⁿ⁸ have substantially adopted the Uniform Act withdrawal provision, others have made variations. The most common change is to allow administrators to institute disciplinary proceedings in the one-year period following effectiveness of withdrawal for any ground indicated under that state's Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁹ A few states add some additional grounds in such cases. Others have created their own unique or not so unique (statutes that borrow selectively from the Uniform Act) provisions for withdrawals.ⁿ¹⁰ At least one state places no condition on withdrawal or "cancellation."ⁿ¹¹

Withdrawal of an application for licensing often occurs in response to an administrator's notice of intent to deny the license. As discussed earlier, Blue Sky laws provide for notice and the right to a hearing prior to issuance of a final order of denial, and upon receipt of the notice of intent to deny an applicant may choose to withdraw rather than proceed with a hearing. However, because administrators may at that stage of the process deny the request for withdrawal based upon the particular grounds involved in the intended denial of the license, an applicant faces the risk that an adverse determination will issue, and the further consequences of such a determination on a pending or intended application in another state. It is essential to assess potential grounds for denial well before making application for licensing in a state rather than attempting to avoid the undesired result of a denied request to withdraw followed by a denial of the license itself. State administrators are generally available informally to assist in these pre-filing assessments.

§ 11.06 Post-Licensing Intermediary Regulation and Enforcement

Once licensed and operating in a state, intermediaries are subject to the full administrative and enforcement authority of the designated state regulatory agency. Rulemaking, interpretive processes, investigative authority and the available arsenal of enforcement weapons are reviewed in detail in Chapter 14 of this treatise.ⁿ¹ The ongoing reporting and financial responsibility (net capital) requirements for broker-dealers, plus annual license renewal procedures, books-and-records requirements and periodic on-site inspections of both broker-dealers and investment advisers (all of which have been covered earlier in this chapter) are augmented by substantial authority regarding administrative enforcement proceedings, judicial enforcement actions and criminal prosecutions. There are certain aspects of intermediary post-licensing operations that may form the basis for such actions and that merit particular consideration here. Each is discussed in more detail below.

[1] Broker-Dealers and Associated Persons

[a] Supervision Requirements

The responsibility of broker-dealer management to establish and maintain an effective supervisory system to safeguard against possible violations of the Blue Sky law, federal securities laws, and various rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the self-regulatory organizations is a cornerstone of intermediary compliance responsibility in many states.ⁿ² The responsibility is typically imposed via rules or regulations under the Blue Sky law. In these states, a broker-dealer is required to subject every agent or employee to the oversight of a supervisor. A broker-dealer who is a member of a self-regulatory organization such as FINRA would, of course, also have to comply with rules of the organization as well as the rules of the states in which it is licensed.

As seen earlier, some states require that each broker-dealer establish, maintain, and enforce written procedures that will enable it to supervise the activities of its associated persons.ⁿ³ A FINRA Conduct Ruleⁿ⁴ serves as the model for these provisions, but no state has specifically adopted it. Many, however, have incorporated the following essential features of the rule: (1) that a copy of the procedures be kept at each business office,ⁿ⁵ and (2) that a partner, officer, manager or some qualified person or employee be designated to discharge the supervisory function.ⁿ⁶

Closely related to basic supervisory responsibility, several states require the review and written approval by the designated supervisor of the opening of each new customer account.ⁿ⁷ At this time the supervisor can ensure that adequate information has been obtained regarding a customer's objectives, needs and finances. The review of new accounts will assist the broker-dealer in complying with the suitability rules of any self-regulatory organization of which the broker-dealer is a member.ⁿ⁸

[c] Accounts and Transactions Generally

The frequent review of customer accounts and the prompt review and written approval by the designated supervisor of all securities transactions are part of a broker-dealer's supervisory responsibility in some states.ⁿ⁹ These regulations also include a provision for the review and written approval of all correspondence pertaining to the solicitation or execution of securities transactions.ⁿ¹⁰

The review of accounts would necessarily involve a check for churning and switching of securities in customers' accounts. Churning or switching occurs when a broker-dealer or agent, acting in his or her own interests and against those of his customer, induces transactions in the customer's account which are excessive in size and frequency in light of the character of the account. Many states have adopted regulations prohibiting such a pattern of trading.ⁿ¹¹

[d] Discretionary Accounts

A discretionary account vests authority in a broker-dealer or salesperson to effect securities transactions without first obtaining an order or the approval of a customer. Because such authority is so vulnerable to abuse, the SEC and the self-regulatory organizations have imposed specific and stringent requirements for the handling of discretionary accounts.ⁿ¹² Only a few states, however, have adopted their own regulations providing for the review and approval of such accounts.ⁿ¹³ The provisions in those states generally require review and written approval by a designated supervisor of a customer's delegation of discretionary authority, and the prompt written approval of each discretionary order entered in the account.

A larger number of states have adopted provisions prohibiting merely the exercise of discretionary power without written authority.ⁿ¹⁴

[e] Sales Practices

Some states have adopted provisions either prohibiting certain sales techniques and methods of salespersons, or, in the case of their correspondence with customers, providing for supervisory review. The following subsections deal with those sales practices that have been specifically addressed by regulations.

Boiler Rooms. A boiler room operation is a high-pressure selling campaign for the promotion of generally speculative or low-priced securities that is usually carried out by telephone. The prospective purchaser, normally not known by, and not having an account with, the broker-dealer or salesman, is encouraged to buy the security regardless of investment needs and objectives. Several states specifically prohibit "boiler room" operations.ⁿ¹⁵

Suitability. The self-regulatory organizations have requirements regarding the suitability of recommendations made to customers, and a majority of the states have followed suit.ⁿ¹⁶ FINRA rule, for instance, requires that the broker-dealer, in recommending to a customer the purchase, sale, or exchange of a security, must have "reasonable grounds for believing that the recommendation is suitable for such customer upon the basis of the facts, if any, disclosed by such customer as to his other security holdings and as to his financial situation and needs."ⁿ¹⁷ Three states have adopted FINRA rule.ⁿ¹⁸ A NASAA pronouncement goes farther, and imposes a duty of inquiry in order to determine the suitability of recommendations. The provision prohibits:

Recommending to a customer the purchase, sale or exchange of any security without reasonable grounds to believe that such transaction or recommendation is suitable for the customer based upon reasonable inquiry concerning the customer's investment objectives, financial situation and needs, and any other relevant information known by the broker-dealer.ⁿ¹⁹

A large number of statesⁿ²⁰ have adopted this rule.

Several states prohibit the making of false, misleading, deceptive, exaggerated or flamboyant representations in the solicitation or sale of a security.ⁿ²¹ The following representations serve as examples:

- (1) representations that the security will be resold or repurchased;
- (2) representations that the security will be listed or traded on an exchange or established market;
- (3) representations that an immediate or extensive increase in value, market price or investment return will result;
- (4) representations that there is a guarantee against risk or loss; and
- (5) statements with respect to the issuer's financial condition, anticipated earnings, potential growth or success.

[f] Operations Generally

Supervision over sales practices in some states specifically includes the review of all correspondence sent to customers relating to the purchase, sale, or solicitation for the purchase or sale of securities.ⁿ²² Some also have specific requirements relating to record keeping and handling of customer complaints. FINRA defines a complaint as "any written statement of a customer or any person acting on behalf of a customer alleging a grievance involving the activities of those persons under the control of the member in connection with the solicitation or execution of any transaction or the disposition of securities or funds of that customer."ⁿ²³ FINRA requires each member to maintain a separate file of all written complaints of customers and the action taken by the member, if any.ⁿ²⁴ Several states have substantially adopted this requirement,ⁿ²⁵ or at least require that a record or file of complaints be kept.ⁿ²⁶ Others provide for the prompt review and written approval of the handling of customer complaints.ⁿ²⁷ Some also include the failure or refusal to furnish to a customer information to which the customer is entitled or to respond to a formal written demand or complaint as a ground for the denial, suspension or revocation of registration.ⁿ²⁸

"Back office" operations of a broker-dealer revolve around the currency and accuracy of the transactional books and records that the broker-dealer is required to maintain.ⁿ²⁹ Few states, however, have specific provisions for the review of back office operations as part of their supervisory procedures.ⁿ³⁰ These provisions include the currency and accuracy of books and records and the status and causes of "Fails to Receive" and "Fails to Deliver," net capital, credit extensions, and financial reports.

FINRA requires its members to review the activities of each office and to conduct at least an annual inspection of each "office of supervisory jurisdiction" (OSJ).ⁿ³¹ FINRA mandates that an office of supervisory jurisdiction be directly responsible for the review of the activities in that office, in other offices, or both.ⁿ³² Three states have incorporated FINRA requirement into their regulations.ⁿ³³ Six others require broker-dealers periodically to inspect each business office to insure that the written supervisory procedures are being enforced.ⁿ³⁴ Indiana requires that every branch office located in the state be open for inspection and examination by the Division.ⁿ³⁵

[g] Compensation-Related Issues

Licensing under Blue Sky laws entitles both broker-dealers and agents to be paid transaction-based compensation, whether in the form of commissions or fees. However, only licensed persons may receive such compensation. A licensed broker-dealer or agent may not pay or share any portion of fees or commissions from the sale of securities to or with an unlicensed person or entity. Rules under Blue Sky laws prohibit dividing or otherwise splitting commissions, profits, or any other compensation from the purchase or sale of securities with any person who is not also licensed, or registered, as an agent of the same broker-dealer, or another broker-dealer with which the agent is licensed or registered in accordance with a dual licensing provision, if permitted under the state's Blue Sky law.ⁿ³⁶ Thus, broker-dealers may not pay referral, finder, or solicitation fees to unlicensed persons.

The SEC, the self-regulatory organizations, and a few state securities commissioners have emphasized the review of methods of recruiting and training of salespersons as part of an overall broker-dealer supervisory system.ⁿ³⁷ Apart from the procedures incident to registration itself, however, the states have not incorporated such a review process as part of their regulations.

A number of states do require, as part of the books and records to be kept by broker-dealers, that a questionnaire or application for employment be executed by each salesperson and that the document be approved in writing by an authorized representative of the broker-dealer.ⁿ³⁸ In addition to the usual statistical information, the document generally must include a complete listing of business connections for at least ten years, a record of any denial, suspension, or revocation of registration or any disciplinary action taken, and a record of any injunctions, arrests, indictments, or convictions. At least one state requires a broker-dealer to investigate potential representatives.ⁿ³⁹

[2] Investment Advisers and Representatives

[a] Advisory Agreements

States have established minimal restrictions on advisory agreements by largely adopting the restrictions imposed on SEC-registered investment advisers under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. Thus, an investment advisory agreement must provide that the contract may not be assigned without the client's consent.ⁿ⁴⁰ Regulations define "assignment" generally to include any direct or indirect transfer of an advisory contract by an investment adviser, or any transfer of control or management of an investment adviser.ⁿ⁴¹ However, regulations also make clear that a transaction that does not result in a change in actual control or management of the investment adviser will not be deemed to be an assignment requiring consent of the client.ⁿ⁴² Thus, reorganization or other corporate transactions that do not effect continuing responsibility for investment advisory or management functions will not normally be considered an assignment. It is essential nevertheless that every advisory contract include the provision.

States also impose restrictions on advisory contracts by requiring disclosure of fee arrangements and the precise nature of services the adviser will render; restrictions on the manner of providing compensation to an adviser; and requirements mandating notification of changes in the membership of an investment adviser that is a partnership.ⁿ⁴³ Particular compensation-related issues in advisory relationships are discussed further below. All of these contract requirements are framed as prohibitions, so as to provide that an adviser may not enter into, extend or renew any advisory agreement, or in any manner perform an agreement which either includes or fails to include a covered provision. A review of advisory agreements is a standard element of field examinations of investment advisers.

Advisory fees and compensation of investment advisers generally are addressed under Blue Sky laws in two ways. First, under the general heading of dishonest or unethical practices,ⁿ⁴⁴ states prohibit charging an advisory client a fee that is unreasonable in light of the type of services to be provided, the experience and expertise of the adviser, and the sophistication and bargaining power of the client. These prohibitions may be augmented by a specific disclosure requirement relating to charging fees for advisory services that will involve additional compensation to the adviser through commissions on executed transactions. Financial planners licensed as investment advisers who are also independent contractor registered representatives of broker-dealers through which recommended transactions are effected, or who would be entitled to receive other transaction-based fees or compensation in connection with a client's securities purchase must be particularly cognizant of these restrictions under state and federal securities laws. The fact that a fee will be charged for rendering investment advice when a commission for executing transactions pursuant to such advice will also be paid is considered to be a material conflict of interest which could reasonably be expected to impair the rendering of unbiased and objective advice.ⁿ⁴⁵

States also address compensation specifically in terms of prohibiting "performance" fees. Tracking prohibitions under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,ⁿ⁴⁶ state Blue Sky laws and regulations generally prohibit advisers from receiving any type of advisory fee calculated as a percentage of capital gains or appreciation in a client account. Several states address the point as an advisory contract prohibition. In California, for example, no investment adviser may enter into a contract which:

Provides for compensation to the investment adviser on the basis of a share of capital gains upon or capital appreciation of the funds or any portion of the funds of the client, except as may be permitted by rule or order of the commissioner.ⁿ⁴⁷

There are exceptions to the prohibition against performance fees. Rules and regulations allow contracts for performance fees with (1) certain "qualified" clients, if specific conditions are met; (2) an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940; and (3) clients that are not U.S. residents. These are exceptions also made in the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ⁴⁸ They are expanded in several states to include clients meeting certain other qualifying criteria. In Ohio, for example, clients with at least $750,000 assets under management with the adviser, or more than $1.5 million net worth, may enter into performance-based arrangements, as well as clients who are "qualified purchasers" under section 2(a)(51)(A) of the Investment Company Act of 1940, and certain knowledgeable employees of the investment adviser.ⁿ⁴⁹

The general prohibition against performance-based fees does not mean that investment advisers may not determine advisory fees based upon the value of assets under management. Here again, the states have generally adopted provisions of the federal Investment Advisers Act,ⁿ⁵⁰ in which a set-percentage advisory fee periodically calculated and charged on the value of assets under management, which necessarily reflects both gains and losses during the period of calculation, is permitted. As provided in the federal act, the general prohibition against compensation based on a share of capital gains or capital appreciation shall not be construed to prohibit an advisory contract "which provides for compensation based on the total value of a fund averaged over a definite period, or as of definite dates, or taken as of a definite date."ⁿ⁵¹

State-licensed investment advisers and representatives who service employee benefit plans must also consider broader requirements relating to fees applicable to their activities under the federal Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).ⁿ⁵² ERISA imposes certain fiduciary obligations on investment advisers involved in the management of benefit plan assets and, in general, obligates advisers to act solely in the interests of plan participants and beneficiaries, to exercise prudence, to maintain adequate diversification of plan investments, and to act consistently with controlling plan provisions. ERISA fiduciary principles impact advisory fees by addressing certain "prohibited transactions" between plans and persons who are defined as "parties in interest," or involving self-dealing by fiduciaries. For broker-dealers and affiliated investment advisers involved with ERISA-covered plans it is essential that services fall within an exemption to prohibited transaction provisions. ERISA itself includes a "necessary services" exemptionⁿ⁵³ from prohibited transactions for parties in interest who provide services to plans if: (a) the services are necessary for the establishment or operation of the plan; (b) the services are furnished under a contract that is reasonable; and (c) no more than reasonable compensation is paid. Additionally, subject to certain conditions, a Department of Labor Prohibited Transaction Class Exemptionⁿ⁵⁴ further permits the receipt of commissions by a broker-dealer affiliated with a plan fiduciary for effecting or executing transactions on behalf of the plan.

Investment advisers dealing with benefit plans are thus not only subject to Blue Sky laws and regulations addressing the reasonableness of fees in relation to services provided, but also face the prospect of federal scrutiny under ERISA. Under ERISA the Department of Labor has enforcement authority, and private rights of action are created for plans and plan participants.

[c] Advertising

Investment advisers and investment adviser representatives are prohibited under all state Blue Sky laws from making untrue statements or misleading statements of material facts in the solicitation of advisory clients. As the District of Columbia Blue Sky law declares:

In the solicitation of, or dealings with, advisory clients, a person shall not knowingly make an untrue statement of a material fact, or omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading.ⁿ⁵⁵

Advertising by investment advisers and representatives receives special attention, and several states have adopted SEC Rule 206(4)-1 under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,ⁿ⁵⁶ which provides that an advertisement may not:

- (1) use or refer to any testimonial (which includes any statement of a client's experience or endorsement);
- (2) refer to past, specific recommendations made by the adviser that were profitable, unless the advertisement sets out a list of all recommendations made by the adviser within the preceding period of not less than one year, and complies with other, specified, conditions;
- (3) represent that any graph, chart formula or other device can, in and of itself, be used to determine which securities to buy or sell, or when to buy or sell such securities, or can assist persons in making those decisions, unless the advertisement prominently discloses its limitations and the difficulties regarding its use; and
- (4) represent that any report, analysis, or other service will be provided without charge unless the report, analysis or other service will be provided without any obligation whatsoever.

"Advertisement" is broadly defined in the federal rule to include any notice, circular, letter or other written communication addressed to more than one person, or any notice or other announcement in any publication or by radio or television, that offers any investment advisory service.ⁿ⁵⁷ In order to narrow the definition sufficiently to take into account the nature and scope of cyberspace communications, Arizona provides that a communication over a computer on-line service, including an electronic bulletin board, will not be deemed to be an advertisement when an investment adviser or investment adviser representative either is engaged in a "discussion" regarding securities and does not receive any compensation from any person for the discussion, or simply responds to unsolicited inquiries regarding the provision of investment advisory services.ⁿ⁵⁸ Other states, such as Alaska, make specific provision for advertising on the Internet by investment advisers, subject to requirements,ⁿ⁵⁹ or, as in Rhode Island, create an exemption for the use of the Internet for general dissemination of information on products and services by investment advisers.ⁿ⁶⁰ A critical element in these flexible approaches is that the Internet communication may not involve rendering personalized investment advice.

Investment adviser advertising often includes information concerning past performance. Advertising past performance, whether actual performance or hypothetical or model results, is generally permitted so long as the advertisement also discloses all material facts necessary to avoid any unwarranted inference that past performance implies future success. Such advertising must also disclose the effect of material market or economic conditions on the results presented. It must also state whether and to what extent the advertised results reflect the reinvestment of dividends, and it may not make or suggest claims about the potential for profit without also disclosing the potential for losses. Additionally, examiners regularly challenge advertising based on gross performance data, that is, data that does not reflect the deduction of advisory or other fees and expenses that a client would pay.ⁿ⁶¹

To permit review of all advertising material utilized by investment advisers, regulations under Blue Sky laws typically provide that advertisements be retained either as part of required books and records, or under specific requirements, for set periods of time. In Connecticut, for example, every investment adviser must maintain "[a] separate file containing copies of all advertising published, circulated or broadcast in or from Connecticut by the investment adviser in the conduct of its investment advisory business."ⁿ⁶² Retention periods vary from three to five years. However, in all cases, after NSMIA retention requirements are subject to the limitations prescribed by section 222 of the federal Investment Advisers Act.

[d] Disclosure Requirements

For investment advisers and representatives the principal disclosure requirement is most often identified as the "brochure" rule or requirement.ⁿ⁶³ By it, investment advisers must furnish each advisory client and prospective advisory client with a written disclosure statement, or "brochure," containing prescribed types of information about the adviser and its business practices. The brochure rule is typically satisfied by dissemination of Part II of Form ADV, or another written document containing at least that information. An adviser must deliver the brochure either: (1) at least forty-eight hours before entering into any written or oral contract with a client or prospective client; or (2) at the time of entering into the contract so long as the contract permits the client to terminate the contract without penalty within five business days after entering into it. Advisers are also typically required either to deliver or to offer to deliver a brochure to existing clients on an annual basis, without charge.ⁿ⁶⁴

There are exceptions to the brochure rule. In many states advisers are not required to deliver a brochure to clients for whom they provide advisory services under a contract for impersonal investment advice for a fee of less than $200. An adviser entering into a contract for impersonal investment advice for a fee of $200 or more is required only offer to deliver a brochure at the time of entering into the contract.ⁿ⁶⁵

There are other disclosure requirements in the adviser/client relationship. Ohio, for example, imposes additional disclosure requirements on investment advisers and representatives who have custody of or discretionary trading authority over client funds or securities; or who require prepayment of more than $500 of an advisory fee.ⁿ⁶⁶ Custody of client funds or securities triggers specific regulatory notification and disclosure requirements in many states, as well as specific account segregation requirements. Notification to state administrators is normally accomplished through the appropriate response on Form ADV. Requirements for particular notification and disclosure to clients in these circumstances vary. However, North Carolina is representative in requiring notice to clients of the place where and the manner in which the client's funds or securities will be maintained. Any changes in the place or manner of custody must also be reported, and at least once every three months the adviser must send an itemized statement showing the funds and securities in custody, and all debits, credits and transactions in the account during the period.ⁿ⁶⁷

States address other particular information to be disclosed, as, for example, specifically requiring disclosure of all material facts regarding the financial and disciplinary history of an adviser, as required by Rule 206(4)-4 under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ⁶⁸ Under such targeted standards of conduct or general antifraud provisions, investment advisers and representatives may also specifically be required to disclose information regarding compensation, as, for example, whether the adviser's fee is higher than that typically charged by other advisers for similar services; or whether the potential exists for any conflict of interest between the adviser and the client. These kinds of disclosures are encompassed in Part II of Form ADV, and advisers electing to supply clients and prospective clients with a copy of the form in satisfaction of the brochure rule will normally satisfy such other specific disclosure requirements in that manner.

Payments to unlicensed third parties of referral fees or fees for solicitation of advisory clients may be prohibited under state investment adviser laws or regulations. North Carolina, for example, declares by rule that it is a dishonest or unethical practice for an investment adviser to "utilize" any unlicensed agent or subagent who meets the definition of investment adviser representative.ⁿ⁶⁹ The latter is defined by the Blue Sky law specifically to include any person associated with an investment adviser who solicits, offers or negotiates for the sale of or sells investment advisory services.ⁿ⁷⁰ Other states address the issue in terms of Rule 206(4)-3 under the federal Investment Advisers Act,ⁿ⁷¹ limiting the payment of referral fees or payments generally for client solicitations. Under this approach investment advisers or investment adviser representatives are prohibited from paying a cash fee, directly or indirectly, to an unlicensed third party for referring clients to the adviser unless the arrangement complies with a number of conditions.ⁿ⁷² Requirements under these provisions include a written agreement with any solicitor detailing the referral fee arrangement, a written disclosure statement by the solicitor to persons solicited, and a written acknowledgement by the solicited client that the disclosure statement and a copy of the adviser's brochure have been provided.

SEC Rule 206(4)-3 under the Investment Advisers Act is explicit in prescribing the content of the written agreements required between advisers and solicitors, as well as the requisite disclosure statement of the solicitor. Every adviser is obligated to make a bona fide effort to ascertain, and to have a reasonable basis for believing, that a solicitor has complied with the agreement. Retention of these documents, including the client's written acknowledgment, is specifically added to the array of books and records that the adviser must maintain.

An investment adviser registered under this [Act], a federal covered adviser that has filed a notice under Section 405, or a broker-dealer registered under this [Act] is not required to employ or associate with an individual as an investment adviser representative if the only compensation paid to the individual for a referral of investment advisory clients is paid to an investment adviser registered under this [Act], a federal covered investment adviser who has filed notice under Section 405, or a broker-dealer registered under this [Act] with which the individual is employed or associated as an investment adviser representative.ⁿ⁷³

This provision, which is new in the 2002 Act, adds a degree of flexibility in the payment of referral fees by investment advisers by clarifying that it is not necessary for the paying adviser to employ or associate with the individual who is to be paid for referrals, so long as the referral fees are paid to a registered investment adviser with which the individual is in fact associated. This, however, does not address the more common situation in which an adviser pays referral fees to an unregistered person, who is not affiliated with any other investment adviser. In those situations, the solicitor provisions or rules, which in most cases mirror SEC rules under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, will control.

[f] General Antifraud and Ethical Considerations

Often under the general heading of "dishonest or unethical practices," rules and regulations under Blue Sky laws address a variety of conduct requirements for investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. Prominent in many states is an express suitability responsibility. As fiduciaries, investment advisers are charged with the duty to provide only suitable investment advice. This duty generally requires that the adviser or representative determine that the investment advice given is suitable for the client on the basis of information furnished by the client, and after reasonable inquiry concerning the client's investment objectives, financial situation and needs, and any other information known or acquired by the adviser after examination of financial records.ⁿ⁷⁴ By these provisions suitability is made into an active obligation or duty, that is, advisers must undertake a reasonable inquiry and information-gathering process on which to formulate and dispense investment advice.

Other specific matters commonly addressed under the heading of unlawful, unethical or dishonest business practices include:

- (1) Exercising discretionary authority in the purchase or sale of securities for a client account without obtaining written authority, or permitting the exercise of authority by a third party without written trading authority;
- (2) Inducing trading in a client account that is excessive in size or frequency in view of the financial resources, investment objectives and character of the account;
- (3) Borrowing money from or loaning money to a client except under certain conditions;
- (4) Charging unreasonable fees;
- (5) Failing to disclose any conflict of interest;
- (6) Guaranteeing specific results which will be achieved on the basis of advice rendered;
- (7) Disclosing information about a client to others without the consent of the client, unless required by law;
- (8) Providing a report or recommendation to any client prepared by someone other than the adviser without disclosing that fact;
- (9) Misrepresenting qualifications of financial condition of the investment adviser; and
- (10) Failing to obtain "best execution" of clients' transactions.ⁿ⁷⁵

Overarching general antifraud provisions found in all versions of the Uniform Actⁿ⁷⁶ are also common. In Indiana, for example, the Blue Sky law spells out investment adviser responsibility first and foremost in terms common to all general antifraud provisions, namely, employing any "device, scheme or artifice to defraud" another person, or engaging in any act, practice or course of business that would "operate as a fraud or deceit" upon the other person.ⁿ⁷⁷ State rules and regulations may also include express adoption of section 206(4) of the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, which declares that it shall be unlawful for an investment adviser to engage in any act, practice or course of business which is fraudulent, deceptive or manipulative.ⁿ⁷⁸ In Montana, for example, advisers are prohibited from:

[E]ngaging in any act, practice or course of business which is fraudulent, deceptive, or manipulative, or contrary to the provisions of Section 206(4) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, which is hereby adopted and incorporated herein, notwithstanding the fact that such investment adviser is not registered or required to be registered under Section 203 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. ...ⁿ⁷⁹

Whether addressed under the heading of fraudulent, unethical or deceptive business practices, or separately considered, two further specific aspects of business and operations of investment advisers are commonly referenced. The first is a prohibition dealing with principal transactions and "agency cross" transactions. State regulations addressing these matters flow directly from SEC Rule 206(3)-2 under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,ⁿ⁸⁰ which prohibits an investment adviser, acting as a principal for its own account, from selling any security to or purchasing any security from an advisory client unless the client is notified in writing and has given consent to the transaction prior to its completion. An adviser who is also a broker may under these rules act as broker for both its advisory client and the party on the other side of the transactions (an "agency cross transaction") without obtaining the client's prior consent to each such transaction if the adviser obtains prior consent for these types of transactions and complies with certain other conditions.ⁿ⁸¹

Drawing again on the federal Act,ⁿ⁸² state rules and regulations also specifically mandate that investment advisers establish, maintain and enforce written policies and procedures reasonably designed to prevent the misuse of material non-public information by the adviser and any of its representatives. Written "insider trading" policies are thus adopted by investment advisers, and prominently included among books and records for inspection by examiners.

Investment advisers are also charged in most states with specific supervisory responsibility regarding all activities performed on the advisers' behalf. Approaches vary from requiring designated (and examination-qualified) supervisors on site at principal and branch officesⁿ⁸³ to more general provisions imposing a more general duty of supervision.ⁿ⁸⁴ Indiana not only prescribes an overarching responsibility for investment advisers to diligently supervise the advisory activities of representatives and employees, but goes further to require a designated supervisor for each investment adviser representative and office employee, and written procedures. Required procedures specifically include administrative review and written approval of all new client accounts; periodic examination of client accounts "to detect and prevent irregularities or abuse;" prompt review of all complaints; review of correspondence; and frequent review and specific written approval for the delegation by any client of discretionary authority.ⁿ⁸⁵ Advisers must periodically inspect each office location to assure that written procedures are being enforced, and are further charged with the duty to ensure that all employees are properly trained regarding disclosure requirements and the administrative, civil and criminal liability provisions of the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁸⁶

All accounts, books, internal working papers, and any other records or documents that are necessary to form the basis for or demonstrate the calculation of the performance or rate of return of any or all managed accounts or securities recommendations in any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper article, investment letter, bulletin or other communication that the investment adviser circulates or distributes, directly or indirectly, to 10 or more persons (other than persons connected with such investment adviser); provided, however, that, with respect to the performance of managed accounts, the retention of all account statements, if they reflect all debits, credits, and other transactions in a client's account for the period of the statement, and all worksheets necessary to demonstrate the calculation of the performance or rate of return of all managed accounts shall be deemed to satisfy the requirement of this paragraph.

Recommending to a client to whom investment supervisory, management or consulting services are provided the purchase, sale or exchange of any security without reasonable grounds to believe that the recommendation is suitable for the client on the basis of information furnished by the client after reasonable inquiry concerning the client's investment objectives, financial situation and needs, and any other information known by the investment adviser.

N.M. Admin. Code, tit. 12, § 11.3.10.2(A).

(n75)Footnote 75. Under general fiduciary principles applicable to investment advisers, an adviser must not cause the client to enter into any transaction at an unreasonable price, or one that is not reasonably related to the current market price of the security. In meeting this obligation, an adviser must secure execution of client transactions in such a manner that the client's total cost or proceeds in each transaction is the most favorable under the circumstances then existing. This requires that an adviser investigate the range and quality of brokerage services available when placing orders, taking into account factors such as execution capability, commission rate, responsiveness, financial responsibility and the value of any research services provided.

In practice, it is common for investment advisers to establish relationships with a particular broker-dealer, to which advisory clients are referred for establishing advised accounts. These practices must be fully addressed in Part II of Form ADV, or whatever brochure is utilized, and it is further expected that the adviser will set out the basis upon which it has determined that the costs associated with the selected broker-dealer are competitive and justified in terms of services provided for the benefit of the client.

§ 11.07 Financial Privacy Standards for Broker-Dealers and Investment Advisers

Certain provisions of The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act ("GLBA"), enacted November 12, 1999,ⁿ¹ have been considered earlier in regard to exceptions from the critical Securities Exchange Act definition of "broker" for certain securities activities of banks.ⁿ² With GLBA Congress also established as national policy that each financial institution has an affirmative and continuing obligation to respect and protect the privacy of its customers, and to protect the security and confidentiality of those customers' nonpublic personal information.ⁿ³ "Financial institution" is defined in GLBA as any institution the business of which is engaging in certain financial activities, including banking, securities underwriting, investment advisory and insurance services.ⁿ⁴ "Nonpublic personal financial information" means personally identifiable financial information either provided by a consumer to a financial institution; resulting from a transaction with the consumer or any service performed for the consumer; or otherwise obtained by the financial institution.ⁿ⁵

The Act directed regulatory agencies to establish standards: (a) to insure the security and confidentiality of consumer records and information; (b) to protect against any anticipated threats or hazards to the security and integrity of such records; and (c) to protect against unauthorized access to or use of such records or information which could result in substantial harm or inconvenience to a customer.ⁿ⁶ For broker-dealers and SEC-registered investment advisers, the SEC was charged under GLBA with rulemaking and enforcement authority. For state-licensed investment advisers, by virtue of a catchall provision, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) was given such rulemaking and enforcement authority.ⁿ⁷ As for all designated agencies, GLBA mandated consultation and coordination for the purpose of ensuring, to the greatest extent possible, consistent and comparable regulations. As a result, the operative provisions of privacy rules issued by the SEC and the FTC are virtually identical.ⁿ⁸

Rules applicable to broker-dealers and investment advisers provide as follows:

- (1) Broker-dealers and investment advisers must develop a privacy policy, and disclose it initially to consumers and annually to customers.ⁿ⁹
- (2) Consumers must be given the right to opt out of the transmission of their nonpublic information to non-affiliated third parties.
- (3) There are no limits on sharing information with affiliates. Also, information may be shared with agents and service providers for purposes of marketing the broker-dealer's or investment adviser's own products and services (as long as the agent or service provider is not authorized to initiate changes to the account directly).

(4) Broker-dealers and investment advisers must adopt procedures that are reasonably designed to protect customer records and information.

Subject to limited exceptions permitting delayed delivery, the notice provisions direct that a clear and conspicuous notice accurately reflecting a broker-dealer's or investment adviser's privacy policy and practice must be provided to customers at the time a customer relationship is established. As for consumers, notice must be given before any nonpublic personal information is disclosed to a nonaffiliated third party, although initial notice is not required if the broker-dealer or investment adviser does not share nonpublic personal financial information with nonaffiliated third parties, and does not have a customer relationship with the consumer. Annual notices to customers must also contain clear and conspicuous statements of privacy policies and practices. All notices must contain specific information including the categories of nonpublic personal information that are collected and disclosed, as well as the categories of affiliated and nonaffiliated third parties to whom nonpublic personal information is disclosed.

The "opt out" notice to be provided by broker-dealers and investment advisers must state that the broker-dealer or investment adviser discloses or reserves the right to disclose nonpublic personal financial information to nonaffiliated third parties. It must also provide that the consumer has the right to opt out of that disclosure, and provide a reasonable means by which the consumer may exercise that right. There are limited exceptions to the notice and opt-out provisions that permit disclosure of information in connection with joint-marketing, processing or servicing arrangements, and also for compliance with legal requirements.

The SEC rules include various examples and sample privacy policy disclosures for use in privacy and opt-out notices.ⁿ¹⁰ Commentary accompanying the FTC rules applicable to state-licensed investment advisers states that compliance by a state-licensed investment adviser with applicable examples contained in the SEC rules will constitute compliance with the FTC rules.

CHAPTER 12 Blue Sky Laws and the Internet

2-12 Blue Sky Regulation § 12.01

§ 12.01 Introduction

The role of state securities regulation in cyberspace was first introduced in Chapter 4, where the issue of the scope of state administrators' jurisdiction under Blue Sky laws over offers and sales of securities undertaken via the Internet, and related intermediary activities, was considered.ⁿ¹ Defining individual state regulatory jurisdiction in an age of worldwide indiscriminate electronic communications instantly disseminated to tens of millions of people presents a significant challenge. On one hand, state securities administrators regularly confront violations of Blue Sky laws on the Internet including the offer and sale of unqualified securities, unlicensed broker-dealer and investment adviser activities, and, above all, fraudulent offers and sales of securities. As a vehicle for committing securities fraud, the Internet is cheap and easy to use. Websites, news groups, chat rooms and e-mail messages are effectively utilized to tout investment schemes and offers of speculative "microcap" stocks. Given the historic mission of Blue Sky laws, state securities regulators have understandably focused great attention on policing the Internet for such investment scams, and on defining the scope of their jurisdiction in a manner that gives the greatest protection. On the other hand, the Internet represents a powerful tool in legitimate capital formation, particularly by small businesses. The Internet dramatically lowers the cost of reaching prospective investors. It is a particularly effective means of linking entrepreneurs needing capital to investors. A prime example is the Angel Capital Electronic Network (ACE-Net), sponsored by the U.S. Small Business Administration. ACE-Net is an Internet-based system designed to match entrepreneurs with "accredited investors" who subscribe to the system.

Today there are direct offerings of securities through issuer websites. There is electronic delivery of required disclosure materials, electronic proxy voting, and a proliferation of online intermediary services. Investors enjoy instant access to a wealth of research data and financial news that was previously available only to Wall Street professionals. The access is reciprocal, and investors are alarmingly vulnerable to Internet-based fraud. Blue Sky regulation in cyberspace is principally challenged because technology has outpaced laws. The Uniform Securities Act, the Revised Uniform Act and the Blue Sky statutes in non-Uniform Act states are products of a different age, in which the evolution of the Internet and its special regulatory challenges could not have been foreseen. Yet the concerns for investor protection are the same.

This chapter examines the major challenges posed by the Internet both for state regulators and for the market participants operating under the scrutiny of such regulators. The manner in which states have sought to balance competing policy concerns is considered in each of the three main areas of Blue Sky regulation, namely, offerings, intermediary licensing, and fraud. From the baseline issue of the scope of state securities regulation in the world of e-commerce, the perspectives of issuers, intermediaries and investors are considered. Structural changes in markets that test the limits of state regulation, and the evolution of electronic global securities markets generally, round out a cyberspace assessment of the impact of Blue Sky laws today and into the future. Because the Internet is fundamentally changing the relationship between investors and intermediaries, special attention is also paid to the role of Blue Sky regulation in policing online trading, and to state investor protection initiatives. Finally, the particular impact on Blue Sky regulation of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act,ⁿ² enacted in June 2000, is examined.

CHAPTER 12 Blue Sky Laws and the Internet

2-12 Blue Sky Regulation § 12.02

§ 12.02 Blue Sky Regulatory Authority in Cyberspace

At the baseline, the exercise of Blue Sky regulatory authority is grounded either in an act amounting to an offer or sale of securities, or in conduct amounting to engaging in the securities business. Critical definitions control, and section 414(c) of the Uniform Act thus sets the scope of Blue Sky regulatory authority broadly:

[A]n offer to sell or to buy is made in this state, whether or not either party is then present in this state, when the offer (1) originates from this state, or (2) is directed by the offeror to this state and received at the place to which it is directed (or at any post office in this state in the case of a mailed offer).n1

Drafters of the Uniform Act addressed electronic offers and sales of securities only in terms of excluding from the key definition of "offer" such radio and television programming which is received within a state but which originates from a different state.n2 Although the Revised Uniform Act expanded the exclusion in 1985 to cover offers by "other electronic communication" originating outside the state as well as radio and television broadcasts,n3 and may thus be said at least to contemplate something akin to Internet communications, it is certain that neither the drafters of the original Uniform Act nor those of the Revised Uniform Act could have envisioned the extent to which the Internet has emerged as a dominant means of electronic commerce and communication, and the extent to which it today allows access to investors. It is certain, however, that Blue Sky administrators have historically acted on the basis of purposeful activity and communications directed into their states. In setting the scope of regulatory authority, the Uniform Act expressly defines authority in terms of "any act instrumental in effecting prohibited conduct" being done in the state, whether or not either party is present in the state at that time.n4

The vast potential of the Internet in the establishment and support of eventually seamless worldwide securities markets carries an equally vast potential for the fraud and abuse that drive Blue Sky regulation. State regulators have therefore set out to respond effectively and efficiently to meet the dangers while fully recognizing that there are practical and proper limits on the scope of their authority in cyberspace.

In the simplest sense, the Internet is a medium of communication.n5 Any communication amounting to an offer to sell a security that is directed into a state, by any medium, triggers application of Blue Sky laws and regulations as to issuers and all intermediaries involved in it. Unless preempted by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 (NSMIA),n6 or eligible for an exemption, an offer triggers state registration and qualification requirements for issuers, and licensing requirements for intermediaries; offers are also subject to scrutiny under antifraud provisions in all cases. A major challenge posed to state regulation by the Internet is the extent to which an electronic communication available generally to anyone having access to the Internet is in fact directed to recipients within a particular state, who may act on it, and thus fall within the ambit of protection under that state's Blue Sky law.

Long ago the so-called "red herring" legend, or disclaimer of an offer, was embraced by states in the context of the dissemination of certain preliminary offering documents or announcements relating to distributions of securities pursuant to registration under the federal Securities Act of 1933, or otherwise in "tombstone" announcements in multi-state print media. Such a disclaimer of an offer is, of course, a fiction, as a printed advertisement, or even a "red herring" prospectus, that is widely circulated is available, if not disseminated, in states in which there is no Blue Sky law qualification. As will be seen below, state Internet rules or regulations, with some common grounding in published guidance of the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA), have applied the same fiction to Internet communications that plainly "offer" securities to all persons who have Internet access, but which disclaim the offer to any person in a particular non-qualifying state. Offers of securities are allowed on the Internet providing that a disclosure is made stating that it is not specifically directed to any person in a particular state. An indirect offer, however, is in fact made where information on a website may be accessed by anyone interested. The key consideration, of course, is that notwithstanding the offer disclaimer, no sales of the securities may be made unless the securities are properly registered.ⁿ⁷

Outside the offering context, state securities regulatory concerns also arise in the use of the Internet by broker-dealers and other market intermediaries for general dissemination of information on products and services. Here too, communications made on the Internet through postings on bulletin boards, displays on home pages and websites, or similar methods involve communications made generally to anyone having access to the Internet. By distributing information on available products and services through Internet communications that are available to persons in any state, broker-dealers, investment advisers, and their agents or representatives may be deemed to be transacting business within the ambit of Blue Sky licensing provisions. With further NASAA guidance, many states have promulgated policy statements or interpretive rules prescribing parameters that will allow such intermediaries to make Internet communications without being deemed to be "transacting business" in the state. Compliance with these requirements, coupled with other screening methods, is being employed successfully by intermediaries in the establishment and management of websites so as to limit access to individuals residing only in those states in which the intermediary and its associated persons are licensed.

Internet-based referral services that link customers to financial service providers through a website "portal" involving general advertising of those services and their availability are now common, and raise a separate set of regulatory issues relating to both advertising and broker-dealer licensing requirements. Referral services typically include general advertising of services and no direct solicitation of customers or special compensation for referrals. As discussed further in section 12.02 below, such website portals will not generally be deemed to be transacting, or engaging in, securities business in circumstances involving no direct or active solicitation in an effort to effect or attempt to effect sales of securities.ⁿ⁸

Electronic publications can also implicate Blue Sky investment adviser regulatory requirements. Daily publication of financial information and stock predictions on a website, for example, may constitute advising others as to the value of securities, or amount to issuing or promulgating analyses or reports concerning securities, activities that meet the definition of investment adviser if the requisite compensation element is present.ⁿ⁹ Whether an exemption or exclusion from the definition of investment adviser based on a bona fide "newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general, regular and paid circulation" as used in Blue Sky laws is available for an Internet communication is also a matter for further consideration. As a practical matter, such information presented on the Internet can be downloaded and printed in hard copy by the user if desired in such a format. Internet users would most often simply read the information from their computer screens without printing it, but the option is always available. As such, there is no real conceptual difference for purposes of Blue Sky regulation between a message sent via the Internet and one printed on paper and mailed. The "bona fide publications" exemption or exclusion that is a part of state and federal investment adviser laws may thus operate to keep Internet postings outside the scope of regulation when requisite criteria are met.ⁿ¹⁰

Internet-spawned developments in e-commerce impact state Blue Sky laws in other ways. Notably, the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act ("E-Sign"),ⁿ¹¹ enacted in June 2000, directly impacts state securities laws and requirements relating to the use of offering circulars and prospectuses, and record-keeping requirements for intermediaries. E-Sign opens the door to new state provisions for maintenance of electronic records, and addresses standards for accuracy, integrity and accessibility of such electronic records. There is also continuing development and implementation of the Securities Registration Depository (SRD) system for electronic registration of securities offerings in multiple states. The SRD is based on current Internet technology.ⁿ¹² And state regulators are themselves reaching out to enhance regulatory and enforcement effectiveness through Internet websites and in the implementation of Internet-based filing and retrieval systems.

In defining the scope of regulatory authority, however, the challenge in the application of Blue Sky laws and regulations in cyberspace lies in dealing with basic definitions that have set the threshold from the beginning. In the discussion below the two most common and critical issues regarding Blue Sky authority and use of the Internet are considered. Subsection [1] examines how states have grappled with the baseline notion of an "offer" of securities effectively broadcast across all boundaries. Then, subsection [2] focuses on the extent to which regulatory objectives of the states in licensing securities market intermediaries are balanced with the realities of the online environment.

[1] "Offers" in Cyberspace All of state securities regulation is a function of definitions. The scope of state regulatory authority under Blue Sky laws has been shown throughout the previous chapters to be set by the literal and contextual application of statutory definitions, constrained to the extent of the federal-state regulatory duopoly that is today prescribed by NSMIA. Blue Sky regulation in cyberspace is no different. An "offer" or "offer to sell" communicated via the Internet is no less an "attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security"ⁿ¹³ than one made via a telephone solicitation, newspaper advertisement or mailing into the state, if it is purposely directed there. As the California Corporations Commissioner has opined:

As a general rule, every attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security for value made by communication on a proprietary or electronic delivery system such as the World Wide Web, otherwise known as the Internet, is an "offer" or are "offers to sell" securities "in this state."ⁿ¹⁴

Although Blue Sky law definitions of "offer" are all qualified by the "for value" element, use of the Internet to distribute "free" unregistered securities will not escape regulatory scrutiny. In a series of no-action letters, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission has considered several proposed Internet-based programs by which issuers wished to give away unregistered securities over the Internet to persons who visited their websites. The SEC staff has made clear that the issuance of unregistered securities in consideration of a person's registration on or visit to the issuer's website would amount to an offer or sale under the like definitions of offer and sale contained in the federal securities laws.ⁿ¹⁵ State administrators would likely come to the same conclusion. Issuance of "free" securities over the Internet, where tied to some action associated with an issuer's website, or where shown to involve some element of value to the issuer, would thus violate state registration provisions in the absence of an available exemption.

Use of Internet websites to advertise investment opportunities, or in any manner to solicit investors or the referral of investors, represents an offer subject to Blue Sky registration requirements.ⁿ¹⁶ As regulatory actions taken at the federal level illustrate, use of the Internet amounts to general solicitation or advertising for the sale of securities. The Securities and Exchange Commission has, for example, addressed postings of offerings to sell securities by individuals on an independently operated Internet auction site. In two 1999 administrative proceedings,ⁿ¹⁷ the SEC found violations of the registration provisions of the federal securities laws where individuals offered securities for sale over the Internet auction site run by eBay, Inc. Although no sales of the securities were ultimately made, the postings attracted several bids that were communicated through the auction website. Both offerors consented to the imposition of a cease-and-desist order. In other administrative proceedings the SEC has addressed "free" stock promotions on the Internet as amounting to offers within the ambit of the registration provisions where it is evident that the donor succeeds by the giveaway in advancing some economic objective.ⁿ¹⁸ Clearly, the broadest notion of an "offer" broadcast through the Internet will be applied by regulators, and the critical issue becomes whether an Internet offer, solicitation or communication is targeted to persons in a particular jurisdiction.

Internet postings are not, by themselves, targeted communications if measures are taken that are reasonably designed to prevent them from being acted upon in a jurisdiction. The SEC has, for example, focused on the global character of Internet communications to deal with offshore offers of securities or investment services that by their terms are not made to U.S. persons. In that context the Commission has opined:

[A]pplication of the registration provisions of the U.S. securities laws depends upon whether Internet offers, solicitations or other communications are targeted to the United States. We would not view issuers, broker-dealers, exchanges, and investment advisers that implement measures that are reasonably designed to guard against sales or the provision of services to U.S. persons to have targeted persons in the United States with their Internet offers.ⁿ¹⁹

For state securities regulation, the key is understanding whether a communication is in fact purposefully directed into a state. While a communication made on an Internet website is directed generally to anyone who has access to the Internet,ⁿ²⁰ it need not be construed as constituting an offer of securities, or an activity making the sender subject to licensing, if it is not specifically directed to any person in the state and the need for investor protection accorded by Blue Sky laws is not present.ⁿ²¹ Thus, in Indiana, the Commissioner determined as early as 1995 that it is not necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors in that state to require registration of securities offered by an issuer on the Internet, but not directed and sold to persons in Indiana.ⁿ²²

Recognizing that the goals of investor protection and access to capital markets can and should be reconciled with the use of the Internet, in 1996 the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) adopted a resolution calling for the exemption from registration for offers and sales of securities made over the Internet if certain conditions are met. Starting from the premise that an Internet offer may be construed as an offer to any person having access to the Internet, the NASAA Resolution encourages states to take appropriate steps to exempt Internet offers from the registration provisions of their securities laws when the following conditions are met:

A. The Internet offer indicates, directly or indirectly, that the securities are not being offered to the residents of a particular state; and

B. An offer is not otherwise specifically directed to any person in a state by or on behalf of an issuer of the securities.

Following on, the NASAA Resolution encourages appropriate steps to permit sales of securities that are the subject of Internet offers under these further conditions:

A. No sales of the securities shall be made in any state until the offering has been registered and declared effective, and [a final disclosure document] has been delivered to the investor prior to such sale;
or

B. The sales are exempt from registration.ⁿ²³

The NASAA Internet Resolution has been adopted in thirty-one states,ⁿ²⁴ with most others signaling an intention either to adopt or to apply it.ⁿ²⁵

The impetus for the NASAA Internet Resolution was a 1995 order of the Pennsylvania Securities Commission addressing Internet communications regarding securities that do not result in sales in the state. Pennsylvania was the first state to provide an exemption for Internet communications if: (1) offering documents indicate that securities are not being offered to persons in the state; (2) the securities are not in fact being offered to persons in the state by any other means; and (3) no sales of the securities are made in the state as a result of the offering. If these conditions are not satisfied, Pennsylvania takes the position that an offer made on the Internet constitutes a mass mailing, publicmedia advertisement, and general solicitation that is subject to registration requirements under the Blue Sky law.ⁿ²⁶

Some states have followed the Pennsylvania lead by crafting a specific Internet exemption from registration and advertising requirements. In Alaska, for example, an offer on the Internet by an issuer is exempt from that state's registration requirements and advertising regulations if:

(1) the offer directly discloses, in a format and at a prominent place in the offer and in an advertisement of the offer on the Internet, that the securities are not being offered to persons in this state;

(2) the offer is not otherwise specifically directed to a person in this state by or on behalf of the issuer; and

(3) a sale of the issuer's securities is not made in this state as a result of the offer.ⁿ²⁷

Wyoming likewise enacted a specific Internet exemption in its Blue Sky law, such that any offer (but not a sale) of a security made on or through the Internet is exempt from registration and literature filing requirements if it satisfies the Pennsylvania criteria.ⁿ²⁸

There are subtle variations in language among the states in regulations or exemptions, the impact of which is largely unnoticed, but which affect the construction and scope of an Internet offering disclaimer. The Pennsylvania approach, for example, not only requires the disclaimer of any direct or indirect offer to persons in the state and stipulates that neither the issuer nor any person acting on its behalf may otherwise specifically direct the offer to anyone in the state, but also blocks any sales in the state as a result of an Internet offer. Thus, unlike the NASAA Internet Policy, which clearly contemplates sales being made at such time as the offering has been registered and declared effective in the state, Pennsylvania clearly prohibits any sales "as a result of the offering."ⁿ²⁹

Regardless of subtle differences, to qualify under any available exemption or policy statement in a particular state, an Internet website offering must indicate that the securities are not being offered to residents of that state. The Ohio Division of Securities determined that a website home page available to all residents that included an investment introduction, and permitted access to an online prospectus or subscription materials at another website location that was not restricted, constituted an illegal offer under Blue Sky laws despite an express, general disclaimer that the prospectus was not a solicitation to "Residents of the United States of America or the citizens of individual states of the United States of America."ⁿ³⁰ The "solicitation" disclaimer was plainly offset by the fact that the investment introduction on the website was entirely unrestricted, the introduction included a company representation that "you will be able to purchase shares of common stock directly from us," and the link to the website prospectus and subscription agreement permitted state residents access without any restriction.

Internet home pages and websites which provide interested parties the ability to electronically access information related to the business activities of an issuer and which describe or reference an offering of securities constitute offers or solicitations to the general public. Providing such access will usually run afoul of Blue Sky laws if the home page or website is simply a conduit for a general solicitation and these securities are not registered or express restrictions are not included.ⁿ³¹ However, where Blue Sky laws or regulations allow for some form of notice referring or relating to a securities offering, or the website or home page acts as a link between it and some permissible general announcement regarding an offering,ⁿ³² so long as an issuer's website does not contain information that is inconsistent with that allowable pursuant to the notice or general announcement provision, the posting itself should not be a concern.ⁿ³³ "Gateway" technology used to direct interested persons to a website where a permissible notice or general announcement appears, and further screening mechanisms then operate to restrict access to further information in accordance with state laws and regulations, is entirely consistent with the approach taken with outright Internet offers.

Screening mechanisms must be meaningful, and effective. In CGI Capital, Inc.,ⁿ³⁴ a broker-dealer sent e-mail communications containing preliminary information about two private placement securities offerings to thousands of individuals for whom the firm had obtained e-mail addresses through various Internet promotions. The securities offerings were restricted by federal exemption criteria to sophisticated or accredited investors. The e-mail messages contained a link to CGI Capital's website, which required users to enter a password to access the offering presentation. However, the password had been supplied to every recipient of the e-mail solicitation, and there was no warning or restriction that prevented recipients from forwarding the password to other potential investors. On the website, CGI provided a sales presentation and a subscription form. Accepting an Offer of Settlement in this administrative proceeding, the SEC found that CGI had engaged in a general solicitation to thousands of individuals, some of whom had no pre-existing substantive relationship with the firm, and had failed to verify whether those persons met criteria for availability of an exemption from registration. The password-protected website, said the SEC, allowed potential investors to access the offering materials before any determination was made concerning their eligibility.

The access issue in CGI Capital was more complex than would normally be involved at the state level because the screening related to particular criteria needed to establish a federal exemption from registration. Nevertheless, the case underscores the point also made by the Ohio Division of Securities in Kevin G. Duffy, discussed above,ⁿ³⁵ that restrictions must be meaningful. A preliminary or general disclaimer appearing on a page that links to an entirely unrestricted offering site may easily run afoul of Blue Sky laws if an individual is in fact able to view offering documents that have not been qualified for offering in his or her state.

One effective approach to restricting access is shown through an Illinois Securities Bureau Statement of Position. In Investment Management & Research, Inc.,ⁿ³⁶ a gateway designed to be exclusive means of access to a website containing offering information included the following message:

Due to various state registration requirements concerning the solicitation of securities, we are required to limit access to the following pages to individuals residing in states in which these securities are currently properly registered. In order for us to meet this requirement, please enter the state in which you are currently residing: _____

Further access is not permitted until the user's state of residence is entered. If the user resides in a state in which the security is registered, access is permitted, with the following message appearing on the first page:

This information is only intended for use by individuals residing in the following states: _____, _____, _____, ... [the states in which the representative and security are registered]. This security may not be offered by us to individuals accessing this information from any state not listed above.

If the user resides in a state in which the representative or the security is not registered, further access is denied, and the following message appears:

Unfortunately, the securities about which we are providing information are not currently registered in your state, and therefore we will be unable to distribute this information to you at this time. Please press _____ to return to the previous menu. n37

As a further consideration, for an Internet offering properly qualified by restriction to be made only in a particular state, the website offering must indicate that the securities are being offered only to residents of that state, and that it is not directed specifically to any person outside the state except pursuant to an applicable qualification.ⁿ³⁸

The operation of issuer-sponsored Internet "bulletin board" services or platforms to provide information to prospective buyers and sellers of stock, and thereby facilitate trading, presents hybrid issues under federal and state securities laws. In Real Goods Trading Corp.,ⁿ³⁹ the SEC staff considered the proposed establishment of a passive bulletin board by an issuer of thinly-traded common stock under registration provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. The company's Internet platform allowed for listing names, addresses and telephone numbers (or other contact information such as e-mail addresses) of interested buyers and sellers; the number of shares offered for sale or desired to be purchased; the price; and the date on which the information was entered into the system. Participants could enter this information directly through the company's website, or by otherwise sending it to the company to be entered for the participant. The bulletin board displayed only information, and neither it nor the company played any role in effecting transactions. Any and all transactions would be effected only through direct contact between participants.

The establishment and maintenance of such a bulletin board or platform specifically designed to facilitate securities transactions triggers concern whether the posted offers and resulting sales made through the system would violate registration provisions. Additionally, the platform itself could be deemed functionally to be an exchange, or the company operating it a broker-dealer or investment adviser. On the matter of registration, the SEC staff concluded that the operation of the bulletin board would not require registration of the offers and sales effected through it. The staff was satisfied that the entirely passive character of the system, coupled with several notices and procedures built into it (including a restriction that neither the issuer nor any of its affiliates could use the system to buy or sell securities except in compliance with the securities laws) sufficed to take it outside the ambit of the registration provisions. The staff also concluded that the system would not be subject to registration under federal law as an exchange or as a broker-dealer.ⁿ⁴⁰

The SEC no-action letters stand for the proposition that there is no general solicitation or attempt to dispose of securities in the operation of a website that merely allows potential buyers and sellers to become more easily known to each other. Every resulting transaction must, as with any securities transaction, be exempt from federal and state registration requirements. However, the establishment and operation of a passive Internet platform that facilitates those transactions will not, even where operated by the issuer of the securities, themselves amount to an offering subject to registration requirements. The principle is equally well applied under state Blue Sky laws, and the fact that such websites are generally accessible should not be seen as an offer subject to registration requirements.

Use of the Internet by investment professionals to transmit or distribute general information about available products and services is most often considered by state securities regulators under the aegis of broker-dealer, investment adviser and representative licensing requirements. The common issue is whether such Internet postings amount to engaging in or transacting securities business in a state, so as to trigger licensing requirements. Such activities by representatives or dealers are also scrutinized under offer definitions and, unless properly restricted and limited as to content, may be held to be violations of registration requirements. By regulation, Illinois thus provides that salespersons or dealers who use the Internet to distribute information on available products and services will not be deemed to be engaging in the offer of securities provided that:

- (1) The communication contains a legend clearly stating that the salesperson or dealer may only transact business in those states where he, she or it is registered or otherwise excluded or exempted from State registration;
- (2) The sender of the communication has taken reasonable measures to insure that any subsequent interaction between prospective customers or clients residing in states where the salesperson or dealer is not registered is limited so as to not otherwise require State salesperson, dealer or securities registration;

(3) The communication does not involve the actual effecting of securities transactions or trades for compensation over the Internet but is limited to the dissemination of information on products or services; and

(4) In the case of a salesperson, the affiliation with a dealer is prominently disclosed within the communication; the dealer retains the responsibility of reviewing and approving the content of the Internet communication; the dealer has authorized the distribution or dissemination of information on products and services via the Internet communication; and the salesperson is acting within the scope of his or her authority in distributing or disseminating the Internet communication.ⁿ⁴¹

As noted above, to consider whether Internet posting of information constitutes an offer or attempt to dispose of a security under Blue Sky laws often involves the tandem issue of whether the persons doing so become subject to broker-dealer, salesperson or other intermediary licensing requirements. As discussed in section 12.02[2] below, states have taken a practical approach designed to avoid unnecessary extension of those requirements. Nevertheless, use of the Internet in such a manner that an offer results in a particular state will almost invariably lead to the conclusion that the persons directly associated with that offer are subject to licensing.

[2] Intermediary Licensing Issues Blue Sky licensing requirements for broker-dealers, salespersons, investment advisers and intermediaries generally are triggered by activity amounting to "transacting business" or "engaging in business" as such.ⁿ⁴² The Internet has spawned creation of websites, "platforms," and "portals" that are designed to facilitate communication and/or dealing between issuers and investors, particularly in those markets dominated by institutional investors. At the same time, "Alternative Trading Systems" (ATSs) or, as more popularly known, "Electronic Communications Networks" (ECNs), have effectively become electronic exchanges, providing for order routing, order matching or "crossing," and price discovery. Trading systems vary from single-price auction systems such as the "Arizona Stock Exchange," to those that collect and disseminate continuous quotations, and provide for automatic execution of orders to buy or sell. The development of such systems has progressed to the point that several have undertaken to register under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 as national securities exchanges in their own right.ⁿ⁴³

Alternative trading systems and ECNs will be regulated as a matter of federal and state law either as exchanges or broker-dealers. However, from a Blue Sky law perspective there is a different level of Internet platforms which are designed to facilitate securities transactions, but which involve no trading systems or other clearly market-oriented functions such as matching. These types of facilities serve an informational or listing function, by which buyers and sellers, or issuers and investors, may find each other and deal, independent from the Internet facility that brought them together. In Prescient Markets, Inc.,ⁿ⁴⁴ the Colorado Securities Commissioner considered whether such an Internet platform met the definition of broker-dealer under that state's Blue Sky law, such that licensing would be required. The sponsoring corporation sought to operate a password-protected Internet website designed to allow direct issuers of commercial paper to interact with institutional purchasers. The Internet platform allowed issuers to post their rates for commercial paper, and afforded the opportunity for institutional investors to browse the rates and issuer information, and communicate offers online. Acceptance, confirmation or rejection of the proposed transaction was entirely between the issuer and the investor, with the Internet platform sponsor having no role in effecting transactions.

The Prescient Internet platform operated effectively on a subscription basis. The sponsor entered into separate service agreements with each direct issuer of commercial paper desiring to post rates on the site. For designing the Internet platform, providing the software, and operating the platform by electronically transmitting all communications between issuers and investors, the sponsor received compensation from each issuer in an amount equal to a fixed percentage of the dollar amount of the issuer's commercial paper processed through the Internet platform and outstanding on each day during the relevant billing period. Institutional investors were permitted access to the website and, by online registration, were entitled to designate specific issuers to whom they would like to submit offers. Investors were also required to enter into an offline access agreement with the sponsor of the Internet platform, acknowledging, among other things, that the sponsor provides only access to the program and has no role in any ultimate transaction.

Beyond the initial execution of agreements with issuer and investor participants, Prescient had no contact with either. It did not provide advice or make any recommendations. It did not accept orders or carry accounts. It did not receive, transfer or hold any investor funds or securities, and it played no role in clearance and settlement. Based upon its limited intermediary role between commercial paper issuers and institutional investors, Prescient requested an order excluding it from the definition of broker-dealer, and likewise excluding its officers, directors and employees from the definition of "sales representative" under the Colorado Blue Sky law. The Commissioner agreed, concluding that the platform for Internet postings regarding commercial paper in these circumstances did not trigger investor protection concerns, and that an order excluding the sponsor and its executives would be consistent with the public interest.ⁿ⁴⁵

Prescient illustrates the role of an Internet platform as an information provider, to facilitate transactions that may not have otherwise occurred by efficiently establishing direct interaction between issuers and investors. Prescient performed a facilitative role, not the intermediating role that is the hallmark of a broker-dealer. The Colorado order excluding the sponsor of the Internet platform from the key licensing definition instructs that simply providing an information resource, even where compensation is ultimately a function of resulting transactions, will not amount to "transacting business" as a broker-dealer in circumstances where the sponsor of the Internet platform has provided only a medium through which issuers and investors may enjoy direct access to one another.

States have also responded favorably to the operation of Internet platforms that involve expanded functions. In Internet Stock & Securities Exchange,ⁿ⁴⁶ the Utah Division of Securities granted no-action advice in regard to a business plan for creation of an Internet-based stock listing service and brokerage. Under the multi-phased business plan, an Internet platform was proposed to allow issuers whose securities were registered under state and federal securities laws, but not exchange-listed, to gain greater exposure and liquidity for their stock. In the first phase of the undertaking a listing service was to be implemented, to operate as an electronic bulletin board. Thereafter, it was proposed to add a brokerage or trading function, by which "crossing" of buys and sells of participants would be effected. In this phase of operation the sponsor of the platform intended to become licensed under Utah law as a broker-dealer, and eventually introduce an underwriting capability, by which it would assist Utah companies in preparing for and making Internet offerings of securities.

Responding favorably to the business plan, the Utah Securities Division emphasized the sponsor's intention to comply with state and federal regulatory requirements as each phase of its plan is implemented. The Division staff premised its view on the assumption that regulatory requirements, including any requirements of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission regarding the licensing of securities exchanges, would be followed. It is clear, however, that the first, bulletin board, phase of operation of the Internet platform (which was to be referred to only as "Internet Stock & Securities Listings") could be undertaken without licensing under the Utah Blue Sky law.

As a general matter, the major consideration in assessing Internet-based intermediary activities in light of broker-dealer registration requirements is the extent of one's participation in securities transactions at the key points in the chain of distribution. The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission has addressed several situations in which a company, as part of its business, assists issuers in structuring proposed securities transactions; helps issuers identify potential investors; or advertises, or otherwise helps issuers in order-taking or order routing processes. The SEC has taken the position that companies engaged in these activities are effecting transactions in securities for the account of others, and are subject to broker-dealer registration requirements under the federal securities laws.

In MuniAuction, Inc.,ⁿ⁴⁷ the SEC staff concluded that an auction company bringing together buyers and sellers of securities through its website for a fee would be engaged in the business of effecting transactions for the account of others, and would be required to become registered as a broker-dealer under the federal securities laws. The company was not involved in active solicitation of investors, did not advise investors, and received only "hosting" fees rather than any transaction-based compensation. Nevertheless, the Staff determined that in bringing together buyers and sellers for a fee, MuniAuction was in fact engaged in business as a broker-dealer through its website auction. The company conducted extensive participant solicitation and advertising efforts, and participated in the order-taking process through purchasers' submission of their bids on securities through the website. In declining to grant no-action advice, the SEC staff offered the following guidance in applying the key definition, whatever the setting:

A person effects transactions in securities if he or she participates in such transactions "at key points in the chain of distribution". Such participation includes, among other activities, assisting an issuer to structure prospective securities transactions, helping an issuer to identify potential purchasers of securities, soliciting securities transactions (including advertising), and participating in the order-taking or order-routing process (for example, by taking transaction orders from customers). Factors indicating that a person is "engaged in the business" include, among others: receiving transaction-related compensation; holding one's self out as a broker, as executing trades, or as assisting others in settling securities transactions; and participating in the securities business with some degree of regularity. In addition to indicating that a person is "effecting transactions," soliciting securities transactions is also evidence of being "engaged in the business."⁴⁸

The operation of Internet platforms designed to facilitate direct interaction between issuers and investors is subject to the same analysis. State securities administrators (as well as the SEC) can be expected carefully to assess whether a non-intermediating, information resource role in a transactional setting is in fact a designed step in the chain of distribution.

Intermediary licensing requirements in Blue Sky laws focus on the competency, quality and financial responsibility of persons and firms that actually deal with the investing public. The regulatory construct is based upon agency relationships and intermediary filters in which there are inherent conflicts of interest and overall concerns for fairness in dealing. Broker-dealers and their representatives enable investors to access markets, but in so doing occupy a position that involves more than passive facilitation. The operation of fair and orderly markets is dependent to a significant degree upon the integrity of the essential intermediaries who make them work. Even more the concern at the state level is the intermediary role in capital formation, and the responsibility of those persons and firms who interact directly with the investing public on behalf of issuers in the distribution of securities. Prescient, discussed above,⁴⁹ illustrates the potential of the Internet in providing the means of direct access between issuers and investors in the capital formation process. To be sure, the Internet platform there involved controlled access by institutional investors, and securities that were exempt from registration under the Colorado Blue Sky law in any case. Nevertheless, the concern for investor protection so central to the notion of "transacting business" that is the heart of Blue Sky licensing definitions was missing where the sponsor was a passive facilitator of direct, non-intermediated interaction between issuers and investors. Likewise, considering the proposed Internet Stock & Securities Exchange,⁵⁰ the Utah Securities Division responded favorably to the staged implementation of a facility that would progressively meet regulatory concerns as functions expanded significantly.

The Internet will increasingly serve as a medium for direct interaction in capital formation, by-passing traditional market intermediaries. Use of the Internet for direct access to potential investors, however, produces no less concern over content and quality of communication. In In re James H. Penfield,⁵¹ a foreign corporation advertised on its Internet website seeking "joint venture" and "equity financing" partners, which the Texas Securities Commissioner determined to be securities. The securities were not registered under the Texas Blue Sky law, and the individual respondent was not registered to offer and sell them. Principal focus, however, was placed on the Internet advertisement itself, which the Commissioner found to be materially misleading or likely to deceive the public because it failed to disclose facts concerning the individual respondent, and deceptively portrayed a prototype facility.⁵² An order to cease publication, dissemination and use of the Internet advertisement in the State of Texas issued. The order to cease publication, issued under the Commissioner's authority to regulate advertising and sales materials, was the simplest approach in these circumstances. Because it was expressly made broad enough to encompass any "substantially similar" advertisements or sales materials of the issuer, the order effectively interdicted the Internet offer and sale of unregistered securities, and the role of the individual respondent as an unlicensed salesperson.

Penfield involved the direct offer of securities via the Internet. There was no question regarding the objective or intent of the respondents in their website posting, and if a broker-dealer had been involved in the process there would have been no question that the intermediary had in fact been transacting business in the state by virtue of the unrestricted Internet offering. The issue for intermediaries becomes more clouded, however, in circumstances involving use of the Internet only to distribute information concerning available products and services.

The NASAA Internet Resolutionⁿ⁵³ does not address intermediary licensing issues that may arise by reason of Internet communications. NASAA has, however, issued a Model Interpretative Order concerning intermediaries utilizing the Internet to distribute information about their products and services. Use of the Internet for this purpose will not be deemed to be "transacting business" in a state for purposes of licensing requirements if certain conditions are met.ⁿ⁵⁴ The Model Interpretive Order is once again premised on the fact that under Blue Sky laws the distribution of information on available products and services via Internet communications available to persons in a state could be construed as an intermediary "transacting business" in the state regardless of the intent of the person originating the communication. The goal is thus to avoid application of the critical definition in circumstances where it is clear that no actual activity is being undertaken. The methodology established relies principally on a legend, along with "firewall" technology to assure that no purposeful activity is in fact directed into the state. Thus, as the NASAA Model Order has been adopted as a Policy Statement in Alabama, for example, Internet communications by intermediaries must contain a legend in which it is clearly stated that:

- (1) The intermediary may only transact business in the state if it has first been licensed, or has been excluded from licensing requirements; and
- (2) No follow-up, individualized responses by the intermediary that involve either the effecting or the attempt to effect transactions in securities, or to render personalized investment advice for compensation, will be made absent compliance with applicable intermediary licensing provisions, or an available exemption or exclusion.

To the legend requirement are added the following requirements:

- (1) The Internet communication must contain a mechanism, including and without limitation, technical "firewalls" or other implemented policies and procedures designed reasonably to ensure that prior to any subsequent, direct communication with prospective customers or clients in the state, the intermediary is first licensed or qualifies for an exemption from licensing; and
- (2) The Internet Communication does not involve either effecting or attempting to effect transactions in securities or the rendering of personalized investment advice for compensation in the state.ⁿ⁵⁵

The NASAA Model Interpretive Order imposes certain further requirements on broker-dealer agents/representatives and investment adviser representatives who may originate Internet communications. The individual's affiliation with a broker-dealer or investment adviser must be prominently disclosed; that affiliated broker-dealer or investment adviser must authorize the particular distribution of information and retain responsibility for reviewing and approving its content; and, finally, the agent or representative must act within the scope of the authority granted by the broker-dealer or investment adviser.ⁿ⁵⁶

An example of a "gateway" or "firewall" mechanism designed to permit access to websites only by individuals residing in states in which a broker-dealer and representative are licensed is presented in section 12.02[1] above with regard to limiting offers. The series of access steps discussed there is augmented by another, which appears if the user resides in a state in which the representative is not licensed, as follows:

Unfortunately, we are not currently registered in your state, and therefore will be unable to distribute our investment information to you at this time. Should you desire further information on the ways in which our firm may be able to meet your investment needs, please feel free to write us at [Branch Address] (or e-mail us at [E-Mail Address]) briefly explaining the information you desire. We may be able to refer you to a representative in your area, or we may become registered in your state, at which time we would be able to further discuss how our services might meet your needs. n57

In Communications Over the Internet,ⁿ⁵⁸ the South Dakota Division of Securities responded favorably to a broker-dealer registered representative's proposal to establish a website without being licensed in that state. In doing so, the Division observed that the following procedures, which supply a succinct amalgam of requirements in the conduct of Internet activities by an intermediary, constitute all of the procedures in place necessary to meet that state's rule:

- (1) The registered representative would not be located in, or have an office location in, the state. In addition, the registered representative would in no way hold out to the public any location in the state as providing securities products or services.
- (2) The registered representative would establish a website from another state, which would be accessible from all states, which would be used to distribute general information on the products and services offered by the registered representative.
- (3) The website would contain a legend clearly stating that: (a) the registered representative may only transact business in the state after first complying with the state's applicable licensing requirements; and (b) individualized follow-up responses to persons in the state by the registered representative will not be made without first complying with applicable licensing requirements.
- (4) The website would contain a mechanism or other implemented policies and procedures designed reasonably to ensure that prior to any subsequent direct communication with prospective customers or clients in the state, the registered representative is first licensed or qualifies for an exemption from licensing.
- (5) The website would be limited to the dissemination of general information on products and services offered by the registered representative, and it would not involve either effecting or attempting to effect transactions in securities, or the rendering of personalized investment advice.
- (6) The registered representative's affiliation with a broker-dealer would be prominently disclosed within the website.
- (7) The broker-dealer would review and approve the content and layout of the website for compliance with all NASD, SEC, and state rules pertaining to communication with the public, and would authorize the distribution of the information on the registered representative's securities products and services through the website.
- (8) The registered representative is properly registered with the NASD and other states, and would not transact any business or provide any individualized, direct communications regarding securities products or services with any prospective customers or clients in the state without first complying with applicable licensing requirements.ⁿ⁵⁹

These procedures combine to satisfy all state rules and requirements addressing Internet activities by intermediaries, whether formulated in terms of the NASAA Model Interpretive Order or otherwise. The procedures enumerated have general application to Internet activities of any intermediary. Where investment advisers are involved, however, there is an added dimension for consideration in regard to the Internet dissemination of information.

The NASAA Model Interpretive Order is made applicable not only to broker-dealers and their representatives who use the Internet to distribute information, but also to investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. State investment adviser licensing provisions, like the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940, exclude from the definition of investment adviser the following persons:

A publisher of any bona fide newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general, regular, and paid circulation.ⁿ⁶⁰

Some states make clear that the publication exclusion applies to communications whether in hard copy form or by electronic means.ⁿ⁶¹

In SEC v. Lowe,ⁿ⁶² the U.S. Supreme Court interpreted the "bona fide publications" exclusion from the definition of investment adviser as establishing three criteria to be met in order to qualify. First, the publication must be "bona fide," in the sense that it contains disinterested commentary and analysis rather than promotional material. Second, it must be of "general and regular circulation," meaning that there be no indication that the publication is timed to affect a particular industry or specific market activity. Finally, the communications between the publisher and subscribers must remain "entirely impersonal" and cannot develop into personalized advice attuned to a client's personal investment concerns.ⁿ⁶³

Even those states which have not expressly incorporated electronic delivery of information have opined that publication of information in electronic form rather than print media presents no conceptual difference in determining the availability of the exclusion. As the Kentucky Division of Securities has observed:

The information presented on the Internet could be downloaded and printed in hard copy by the user if the user desired such a format. Although most Internet users simply would read the information from their computer screens without ever downloading or printing it on a hard copy, the option is certainly always available. As such, we can see no real conceptual difference for purposes of securities regulation between a message sent on the Internet and a message printed on paper and mailed. The operative facts are that the message or communication was sent and that it was received.ⁿ⁶⁴

Those who publish investment information electronically on the Internet normally do so seeking paid subscribers. Nevertheless, the information is disseminated to the general public, and is the same for all who access it. Such information is not tailored to any particular investor's wants or needs, and no information is gathered with respect to any user's specific investment needs, risk tolerances or financial position. Just as importantly, there are no "touted" stocks. That being the case, such electronic publications will normally qualify for exclusion from the definition of investment adviser, and thus not be subject to any state licensing requirement.ⁿ⁶⁵

All of the foregoing discussion suggests that state regulators focus principally upon whether a person or entity has undertaken some purposeful or targeted Internet securities activity in their states. The scope of state jurisdiction over some market intermediaries may nevertheless turn on more esoteric notions than purposeful activity versus passive posting of information on a website accessible to users in any state. In Rollin v. William V. Frankel & Co.,ⁿ⁶⁶ an Arizona appellate court held that Arizona courts could not assert personal jurisdiction over defendants who were market-makers in the Nasdaq Stock Market simply because those market-makers post electronic quotations that are available nationwide. The case did not involve claims under the Arizona Blue Sky law or any issue concerning the scope of regulatory authority. Rather, the case was a class action that derived from the plaintiffs' purchase of stock of an issuer in bankruptcy that continued to trade in the Nasdaq Stock Market for a period after the bankruptcy court extinguished all of the shares. The Arizona plaintiffs sued the two New Jersey-based market-makers in the stock, who they alleged were negligent in executing the transactions for the plaintiffs' brokers. The trades between the plaintiffs' brokers and the market-makers all took place outside of Arizona, and neither of the market-maker firms engaged in business in Arizona.

Market-makers maintain continuous two-sided markets in securities by entering "bid" and "ask" quotations that are displayed in an electronic network operated by the Nasdaq Stock Market. The display of quotations represents a willingness either to buy or to sell a particular quantity of the shares at the displayed quote. Market-maker quotes are broadcast through the system to the investment community, but are not accessible by the general public. In Rollin the court of appeals affirmed the trial court dismissal of the case against the market-makers for lack of personal jurisdiction. The court concluded that although the market-makers' quotes were electronically accessible to broker-dealers throughout the country who could effect transactions for their customers, the posting of quotes did not amount to a purposeful posting directed to customers in Arizona. The plaintiffs claimed that the market-makers had conducted a continuous and systematic business in Arizona through participation in the electronic Nasdaq Stock Market. The court, however, declined to accept the broad proposition that when an entity intentionally uses an electronic medium to reach beyond its boundaries to conduct business, the exercise of specific jurisdiction is appropriate. The market-makers, said the court, did not purposefully avail themselves of Arizona based on specific contacts or intentional, directed, solicitation there.

Rollin injects a degree of uncertainty into the assessment of the extent to which participation in an Internet-based electronic market will constitute engaging in business sufficient to trigger regulatory authority under Blue Sky laws. The issue is perhaps most significant in projecting what role states may play in policing Internet trading platforms, matching services, and their operators as electronic markets continue to evolve. If Rollin is widely embraced, critical Internet activity for purposes of Blue Sky regulation may be only that which can be identified as specifically targeted into the state, or which amounts to actual solicitation. As the court observed:

As best we can determine from the record, Frankel's and HTM's connection with Arizona was limited to the chance that a broker-dealer located anywhere in the country might have accessed their quote for a particular stock on NASDAQ's computer system and, finding the quote satisfactory, might have purchased some of that stock from them for an Arizona customer. As that scenario reflects, Frankel and HTM had no way of controlling to whom they sold stock or of knowing what customer base their stock purchasers represented.ⁿ⁶⁷

The court was satisfied that Nasdaq market-makers' automated listing of bid and ask quotations was more akin to passive Internet activity than to interactive conduct, open solicitation, or "doing business" on the Internet.ⁿ⁶⁸ As applied in the particular setting, in which the market-maker function of the de-centralized, dealer-based Nasdaq Stock Market clearly does not involve investor solicitation and agency activities, the conclusion may be sound. Still, the evolution of electronic communications networks that perform both passive and interactive functions will test the notion, and state securities regulators may be inappropriately impeded if Rollin is fully embraced. There are significant challenges ahead for state securities regulators in dealing with the dramatically changing market landscape and the extent to which direct access to electronic trading facilities becomes the norm, and the competition for investor orders increases. The role of Blue Sky laws and regulations in the evolving electronic marketplace must yet be defined.

But see Rollin v. William V. Frankel & Co., 996 P.2d 1254 (Ariz. App. 2000), in which the court held that Arizona state courts could not exercise personal jurisdiction over Nasdaq market-makers where it could not be shown that the market-makers had purposefully directed their activities toward Arizona. Rollin did not involve a challenge to the scope of regulatory authority under the Arizona Blue Sky law; however, the focus in the case on the role of electronic networks in connection with offers, purchases and sales of securities raises questions concerning the scope of that authority, particularly in regard to intermediary regulation and the emergence of electronic exchanges and Internet-based securities trading platforms. These issues, and Rollin, are discussed further in section 12.02[2], infra.

NSMIA preempted much of state regulatory authority over securities offerings that are national in character.

The impact of NSMIA on Blue Sky laws in the offering context is discussed in detail in Chapters 5 (Registration) and 6 (Merit Regulation), supra. Where applicable, NSMIA preempts state authority to impose registration requirements, and the enforcement of related qualification standards. It does not, however, affect the enforcement of antifraud provisions and regulations, nor does it in any manner limit state authority under Blue Sky laws in regard to licensing of intermediaries.

SRD allows for instant access by state reviewers to record filings, and reduces file status uncertainty.

Some states have set out to develop their own electronic filing systems. Pennsylvania, for example, has implemented an electronic Uniform Investment Company Notice Filing system, and in Ohio the Ohio Automated Securities Information Submission system (OASIS) is designed, like the SRD, eventually to be a complete filing system.

The California Commissioner concluded that under the Blue Sky law, making information available via the Internet also constitutes "publishing" the information for purposes of requirements relating to general announcements regarding securities offerings and "written document" issues. Textual, "readable"-only information on a website generally accessible to the public was determined to be information "published by written document only" for purposes of a California exemption. More importantly, a "general announcement" communicated over the Internet was determined to be an "advertisement" under the Blue Sky law. Internet posting of general announcements and information and advertising issues generally are considered in more detail in section 12.02[2], infra.

(n33)Footnote 33. Hyperlinks, which allow for immediate connection to information within and between websites, present a further set of liability issues, separate from just the question whether an unrestricted offering is made. The use of hyperlinks may, for example, make an issuer responsible for the content of material on a third party's website under an "adoption" theory. Hyperlinks could also be used to provide apparent legitimacy to fraudulent information or activities, and, in general, to cause confusion concerning information and its presentation. These are issues properly addressed under Blue Sky antifraud regulatory authority.

LEXIS 18 (Jan. 13, 1998), the website operator proposed establishing a passive bulletin board to provide information to prospective buyers and sellers of companies participating in the service.

Although the operator of the system would be paid by those companies for the service, no transaction-based compensation was involved, and no information concerning the advisability of purchasing or selling any of the securities was provided. The securities involved were all listed on one or more national securities exchanges or the Nasdaq Stock Market, although as with Real Goods Trading Corp., discussed above, the stocks were thinly traded. The SEC analysis focused on intermediary registration issues, and did not address the question of securities registration. Significantly, however, in seeking no-action advice the bulletin board sponsor represented:

State Securities Laws. Any offer made or transaction consummated using the Bulletin Board is subject to compliance with applicable state securities laws. Offers may be made or accepted only to the extent lawful in the states involved. Each participant is responsible for ascertaining the availability of its own state securities law exemption.

See also Angel Capital Electronic Network, SEC No-Action Letter, 1996 SEC No-Act. LEXIS 812 (Oct. 25, 1996). The Angel Capital Electronic Network was organized and is operated by several universities and non-profit entities under the general sponsorship of the U.S. Small Business Administration. The network allows qualified accredited investors to access a listing of small corporate offerings. The SEC staff concluded that registration as a broker-dealer or investment adviser would not be required where no securities services were provided other than a listing or matching service.

The Angel Capital Network, or ACE-NET, has received favorable consideration at the state level as well. See, e.g., Pennsylvania: Securities Offerings On the Angel Capital Network and the Pennsylvania Securities Act of 1972, Pa. Sec. Comm'n Rel. No. 99-CF-3, 3 Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 86,101, 1998 SEC LEXIS 2794 (Dec. 8, 1998) ("Regulation of Exchanges and Alternative Trading Systems"), the SEC adopted new rules (including new Regulation ATS, 17 C.F.R. §§ 300-303) and amended existing rules to determine the extent to which regulation shall be applied to ATSs, and, where applied, to provide for an election by an ATS whether to register as a national securities exchange, or as a broker-dealer subject to additional requirements under the rules based upon their activities and trading volume. For those ATSs electing not to register as national securities exchanges, Regulation ATS establishes three levels of requirements. If a system has less than five percent of the trading volume in all securities it trades, it is required only: (1) to file with the SEC a notice of operation and quarterly reports; (2) to maintain records, including an audit trail of transactions; and (3) to refrain from using the words "exchange," "stock market" or similar terms in its name. If the system has five percent or more of the volume in "national market system securities," it must be linked with a registered market in order to disseminate the best-priced orders in those national market system securities displayed in their systems into the public quote stream. Finally, if a system has twenty percent or more of the trading volume in any single security, whether equity or debt, it must (1) grant or deny access based on objective standards established by the ATS and applied in a non-discriminatory manner; and (2) establish procedures to ensure adequate systems capacity, integrity, and contingency planning.

CHAPTER 12 Blue Sky Laws and the Internet

§ 12.03 Securities Fraud on the Internet

Although surveillance of the Internet by state securities administrators for illegal offers of securities, and for securities activities by unlicensed entities and persons, involves significant enforcement initiatives in and of itself, the primary mission of Blue Sky regulation in cyberspace is the prevention of fraud. Armed with general antifraud enforcement authority,ⁿ¹ state administrators confront Internet frauds and investment scams ranging from the sale of shares in non-existent enterprises by con artists, to sophisticated pyramid schemes, international transactions, and investments touting high guaranteed rates of return. In 1998 the NASAA Internet Committee conducted a survey of all member jurisdictions and reported securities being offered and sold in the following types of enterprises as involving the most suspected investment frauds: ATM machines, "prime bank" schemes, Internet gambling, advance fee schemes, oil and gas interests, and entertainment ventures.ⁿ² Through the Internet, scam artists can instantly reach millions of people at little cost. E-mail, "newsgroups,"ⁿ³ and websites are vastly more efficient than the telephone "boiler rooms" of old in touting investments and promoting investment schemes. Running investment scams over the Internet also provides numerous other benefits to scam artists. For example, Internet promoters can effectively hide their identities. Also, the interactivity of the Internet allows investors to effectuate their investment decisions immediately through websites that are graphically impressive. In addition, the use of hyperlinks allowing for immediate connection to information within and between websites can add the appearance of legitimacy to fraudulent information.

On the other hand, Internet fraud is more visible. The Internet is subject to on-going monitoring by federal and state securities regulators. A state agency, for example, can establish e-mail addresses to go "shopping" for fraudulent Internet solicitations to obtain information to pursue in enforcement cases.ⁿ⁴ In Ohio, the Division of Securities, which was one of the first state agencies to establish a formal program to monitor the Internet, identifies and lists online securities offerings not in compliance with Ohio law on its own website.ⁿ⁵ The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, through its Division of Enforcement, also has undertaken to place warnings in newsgroups and securities-related areas of commercial online services to alert investors to enforcement actions affecting stocks under discussion. The objective is to inform Internet investors of concerns with regard to particular securities, and to demonstrate active SEC monitoring.

In a 1997 report to Congress on the impact of technological advances on the securities markets, the Securities and Exchange Commission noted that fraudulent offering cases may involve the Internet either as the means by which representations are disseminated, or as the subject of the misrepresentations. As to the latter, the SEC observed that fraud artists often purport to offer an interest in "hot" new areas that are already the subject of extensive media coverage, and which can be promoted as involved in high technology ventures whose likelihood of success few members of the public would be able to evaluate.ⁿ⁶ More common issues, however, arise today out of the use of the Internet and related methods of electronic communication to disseminate fraudulent solicitations about entities not otherwise involved with the Internet. These schemes, the SEC Report noted, may be seen as a predictable evolution from the more traditional methods of reaching investors through cold calls and mass mailings. They often promise high rates of return on investments described as risk-free, but instead often represent interests in non-existent businesses in which the proceeds are simply misappropriated.ⁿ⁷

It is this area with which state securities regulators are most concerned. The SEC has led the way with enforcement cases brought under antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws against promoters operating "Ponzi" schemes over the Internet;ⁿ⁸ fraudulent promotional activities involving the "hyping" of new products never developed beyond a concept;ⁿ⁹ and a variety of phony investment programs involving looting of investor funds.ⁿ¹⁰ States have followed with a significant number of enforcement actions against online investment offerings that involve false or materially misleading advertisements or solicitations. In BJO Enterprises, Ltd.,ⁿ¹¹ for example, the Texas State Securities Board issued a Cease Publication Order in regard to an Internet advertisement seeking to sell stock and evidences of indebtedness that the Board found intentionally failed to disclose facts concerning the criminal background of the promoter and other business history information. Similarly, in Tri-West Investment Club,ⁿ¹² the Ohio Division of Securities cited numerous false and misleading statements contained on a website offering "prime bank" instruments in issuing a Cease and Desist Order. Among other things, the website failed to disclose information concerning other state enforcement actions taken against the promoter on the basis of fraud. The Division also found that the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission had repeatedly announced that such offerings of "prime bank" programs are non-existent and fraudulent.ⁿ¹³

Advisory publications over the Internet are subject to Blue Sky antifraud authority whether or not the adviser is itself subject to licensing. State administrators can be expected to follow the lead of the SEC in pursuing instances of "touting" of stocks over the Internet by persons who pose as objective third parties, but who are in fact only paid promoters. In SEC v. Chelekis,ⁿ¹⁴ for example, the Commission sued the publishers of certain Internet "Hot Stocks" newsletters who failed to disclose their receipt of at least $1.1 million from more than 150 issuers, and 275,000 shares of stock from ten issuers, as compensation for making "buy" recommendations in their newsletter. The defendants consented to an order enjoining them from future violations and requiring the payment of disgorgement and civil money penalties.

Despite the antifraud enforcement weapons available to state and federal securities regulators, the most significant initiatives, particularly at the state level where the range of remedies is more limited, have undertaken to prevent Internet fraud through investor education, largely because after-the-fact remedies for Internet securities fraud are far less effective than preventive measures. The international and potentially anonymous qualities of the Internet add impediments to obtaining return of investor funds once they are paid. As the SEC has observed: "An Internet address may be a mere electronic blind concealing individuals who are not readily traceable after their fraud comes to light, who are located outside the United States, and whose domestic bank accounts are no more than conduits for transmission of investor funds to foreign financial institutions."ⁿ¹⁵

2-12 Blue Sky Regulation § 12.04

§ 12.04 Online Trading Issues Under Blue Sky Laws

The proliferation of online brokerage firms and online trading by individual investors creates special concerns for state securities regulators. Many online investors are new both to investing and to the Internet, and many of these people have turned to Internet trading because they do not trust brokers to give them accurate, impartial advice. State securities regulators have identified the major issues associated with online trading as falling into three categories: (1) execution; (2) investor suitability; and (3) surveillance.ⁿ¹

Trade execution concerns focus on the risk of technology failures. Typical technological problems of this kind include a failure in an online trading system resulting in an inability to execute a trade, or the inability of an investor to access Internet trading websites during times of market volatility. Such risks are magnified under circumstances in which increasing numbers of persons are trading highly volatile stocks on margin and the timing of their trades, indeed the passage of mere seconds, can have a tremendous impact on the results. At the same time, despite the risks and limitations in the current system, constant technological innovation portends greater speed and accuracy. Inexperienced investors need to learn how these innovations work, and online firms must be willing to provide them with the tools to do so.ⁿ²

In the context of licensing and inspections, state regulators can be expected to focus on the capacity of online firms, that is, whether a particular broker-dealer has the infrastructure to allow for continued growth. The concern is particularly acute given aggressive marketing initiatives by online firms seeking to sign up ever more accounts. At the same time, investor education as to both the technological risks and the rewards of online trading will be increasingly addressed with the objective of ensuring uninterrupted market access by a more aware clientele. "Speed bumps" increasingly are utilized to provide information to investors about potentially serious consequences or situations before a trade may be executed.

Investor suitability--the obligation of brokers to "know" their customers and to match recommendations with investment objective, financial profile and risk tolerance--has risen to a new level of regulatory concern for online trading. Most states include among Blue Sky regulations an affirmative suitability obligation for brokers modeled after NASD and stock exchange rules.ⁿ³

The rules regarding suitability are triggered when a broker-dealer makes a recommendation. The difficulty presented by technological advances in online trading lies in defining the parameters of a "recommendation" where there is no personal interaction between a broker and an online customer. Generally, suitability is not an issue for unsolicited transactions. However, online trading firms increasingly offer research on their websites, and also avail themselves of so-called "push technology" that enables a firm to send investors information based on previous transactions and expressed interests. Non-traditional "recommendations" might be found on the basis of information being made available, particularly information or research that is a result of such push technology. Investment-related messages posted on broker-dealer-sponsored forums or chat rooms made available on a website may also be seen in terms of non-traditional recommendations when the broker-dealer effects trades in the securities for the customers involved.ⁿ⁴ Yet, overly strict application of suitability rules would discourage the dissemination of useful information, and state regulators focused on investor protection in the online environment face the challenge of striking a balance to accommodate both protection and innovation.

Suitability concerns under Blue Sky laws also abound in regard to "day trading" and the firms that promote it to individual investors by offering desk space, high-speed market access, and loans. State regulators are concerned about day-trading firms operating as unlicensed broker-dealers, making false, misleading or unrealistic advertisements about the profitability of day trading, and running firms that are undercapitalized.ⁿ⁵ Several states have pursued enforcement actions against day-trading firms for a variety of reasons, all, however, grounded in the baseline concern that inexperienced investors have been lured into day trading with promises of false profits, and have consequently incurred losses that they can ill afford.ⁿ⁶ Online trading in general has been heavily advertised, suggesting that trading is easy and produces quick returns. Marketing in regard to day trading has caused particular concerns relating to inadequate risk disclosure and suitability. A Massachusetts enforcement action, for example, focused on the alleged falsification of financial information on a customer's new account documents to create the impression that day trading was appropriate for the customer, and to support loan arrangements to pursue such trading.ⁿ⁷

What promotes or pushes investors in online trading generally, and day trading in particular, will certainly be the subject of increasing initiatives by state regulators in surveillance, and in policing the Internet. Investor education, suitability assessments, and close attention to the role of operators or sponsors of Internet platforms who effectively engage in the securities business without being licensed are initiatives closely tied to the historic investor protection mission of Blue Sky laws. All of this, however, is more often subsumed in the dominant role of Blue Sky regulation in cyberspace, namely, the prevention of fraud.

(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Testimony of G. Philip Rutledge, Deputy Chief Counsel, Pennsylvania Securities Commission, U.S. Senate Permanent Committee on Investigations, NASAA Reports (CCH) P 17,037 (Mar. 22, 1999) [hereinafter Rutledge Testimony].

(n2)Footnote 2. A 1999 report of the New York Attorney General highlighted a variety of concerns expressed by online investors regarding access to online firms and accounts, technical glitches, downtime and outages. The report recommended that online firms do more to educate their customers about the online trading process, and take steps to address capacity issues. See "From Wall Street to Web Street: A Report on the Problems and Promise of the Online Brokerage Industry," Office of New York State Attorney General Eliot Spitzer (Nov. 22, 1999).

(n3)Footnote 3. In Ohio, for example, no securities dealer or salesperson shall:

Sell, purchase, or recommend the sale or purchase of any security without reasonable grounds to believe that the transaction or recommendation is suitable for the customer, based upon reasonable inquiry concerning the customer's investment objectives, financial situation and needs, and any other relevant information known to dealer or salesperson.

(n4)Footnote 4. Evolving "data mining" technology will likely add still another dimension to suitability responsibility in e-commerce, as online investment firms develop the capability to map a customer's account history, patterns, goals and the like to discover gaps and automatically send a notice or suggestion to the customer in regard to filling those gaps.

(n7)Footnote 7. Id.

Regulators have expressed concern that certain aggressive advertising by broker-dealers could lead investors to have unrealistic expectations about the risks and rewards of online investing. In a September, 1999 Report concerning the advertisement of online brokerage services, NASD Regulation Inc. opined:

NASD members have a duty to manage investor expectations about the risks and rewards of online investing. Advertisements that mislead or confuse investors about the risks and rewards of online investing, or that attempt to incite a trading frenzy, harm the investing public and undermine investor confidence in the integrity of the markets. They even will dampen interest in the very online services that these investors are being asked to use, and thus could impede further development of those services.

Report of NASD Regulation: Public Policy Sessions Concerning the Advertisement of Online Brokerage, available at <<<http://www.nasdr.com/3810-sessions.htm>>> (Sept. 21, 1999).

NASDR has taken initiatives to ensure that the advertisement of online brokerage services is fair, balanced and not misleading. These include Notices to Members and Regulatory and Compliance Alerts reminding member firms of the need to portray accurately the manner in which trades are executed online; to disclose the risks associated with online trading; and to fairly present the fees that will be charged.

In October 2000 the NASD also adopted Conduct Rules requiring member firm approval procedures in the opening of day-trading accounts, and mandating specific risk disclosures concerning day trading. NASD Conduct Rule 2360, "Approval Procedures for Day-Trading Accounts," NASD Manual (CCH) 4296-97 (Oct. 16, 2000), now requires that any member firm directly or indirectly promoting a day-trading strategy must, among other things, have reasonable grounds for believing that the strategy is appropriate for the customer, and exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain facts concerning the customer that support the determination. The rule further requires that any account opened for a non-institutional customer who intends to engage in day trading must be approved for such by the member firm, and that a record of the basis for approval must be maintained. Rule 2361, "Day-Trading Risk Disclosure Statement," Id. at 4297-99, mandates that a member firm may not open an account for a non-institutional customer who intends to pursue a day-trading strategy promoted by the firm unless that customer is first provided with a risk disclosure statement containing prescribed content describing risks and other considerations attendant to day trading. The application of Rules 2360 and 2361 is triggered when a firm is deemed directly or indirectly to be promoting a day-trading strategy. However, simply promoting efficient execution services or costs based upon multiple trades, or providing general investment research or advertising its quality or availability does not amount to promoting a day-trading strategy for the purpose of the rules. Nor does having a website that provides general financial information or news that allows the multiple entry of intra-day purchases or sales of the same security amount to promotion of the strategy.

CHAPTER 12 Blue Sky Laws and the Internet

2-12 Blue Sky Regulation § 12.05

§ 12.05 Federal E-Sign and Blue Sky Regulation

With the enactment in June 2000 of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act ("E-Sign"),ⁿ¹ Congress declared that information in electronic form relating to a transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce "may not be denied legal effect, validity or enforceability solely because it is in electronic form." E-Sign places electronic records and signatures on a legal par with their paper and ink counterparts. It provides that records and signatures relating to transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce may not be denied legal effect, validity or enforceability solely because they are in electronic form or because an electronic signature or electronic record is used in forming them.

E-Sign contains specific provisions restricting state enactment of conflicting laws, and preempts state law governing issues of electronic commerce. The Act ensures a large degree of uniformity among electronic transactions, enabling financial institutions and other e-commerce entities to transact business on an interstate basis more efficiently and predictably. However, E-Sign does allow states to "modify, limit or supersede" the Act by adopting the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (UETA), as approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1999. Nevertheless, states may not act under UETA to create exceptions beyond those that are allowed by E-Sign, unless they are not inconsistent with E-Sign and are technologically neutral. Nor may states override E-Sign under provisions of the UETA by preserving non-electronic delivery requirements as a means of requiring non-electronic transactions and handwritten signatures. E-Sign also includes a provision permitting state regulatory agencies to interpret its key provision, and to provide guidance or issue regulations that are consistent with the Act.ⁿ²

Many state securities statutes, rules and regulations require a physical signature on contracts and other official documents. These rules and requirements generally mirror the requirements of the NASD and the New York Stock Exchange. However, technological developments, particularly in the area of online trading, called into question the efficiency and regulatory value of handwritten signature requirements and generally challenged the necessity for manual delivery of documents. Those same advances also prompted an assessment of record-keeping requirements and the manner of both generating and retaining books and records. By creating an overall federal framework for electronic commerce, E-Sign principally impacts state Blue Sky requirements relating to delivery of an offering circular or prospectus by sellers of securities, and requirements that broker-dealers, investment advisers and/or issuers generate and maintain certain records. Each of these areas of impact on state securities regulation is examined more closely below.

disclosure documents has received increasing attention since being first specifically addressed by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission in 1995, and again in 1996.ⁿ³ By its releases the SEC outlined the manner in which prospectuses, proxy statements and other disclosure documents may be delivered electronically, with a key requirement being the consent of the recipient to receive such information by electronic means. In April 2000 the Commission addressed the subject again in an interpretative release,ⁿ⁴ confirming that, subject to certain conditions, issuers, broker-dealers and other intermediaries may obtain "global" consents from investors for electronic delivery of all documents for any company. The SEC recognition of global consent procedures is particularly meaningful for underwriters and dealers who have responsibilities to furnish disclosure documents in the offering context.

In its April 2000 release the SEC did not specifically address electronic delivery of disclosure documents in the offering context. However, through a combination of the definitions in the Securities Act of 1933 and the SEC rules under the Act, electronic communications are equated with written communications.ⁿ⁵ Thus, as a matter of compliance with the prospectus provisions under the federal Securities Act, electronic delivery of such "written" materials as are permitted in the course of an offering poses no issue where requisite consent is in place. However, states maintain their own requirements for delivery of disclosure documents in the offering context, generally referring to delivery of prospectuses or offering documents that are in writing or recorded, but providing no broader definitions that clearly encompass electronic communications.ⁿ⁶

At the state level, section 304(b)(12) of the Uniform Securities Act, governing registration by qualification, provides that a copy of any prospectus, pamphlet, form letter, advertisement or other sales literature intended to be used in connection with an offering of securities be filed as part of the registration statement. Section 304(d) of the Uniform Act further provides:

The [Administrator] may by rule or order require as a condition of registration under this section that a prospectus containing any designated part of the information specified in subsection (b) be sent or given to each person to whom an offer is made before or concurrently with (1) the first written offer made to him (otherwise than by means of a public advertisement) by or for the account of the issuer or any other person on whose behalf the offering is being made, or by any underwriter or broker-dealer who is offering part of an unsold allotment or subscription taken by him as a participant in the distribution, (2) the confirmation of any sale made by or for the account of any such person, (3) payment pursuant to any such sale, or (4) delivery of the security pursuant to any such sale, whichever first occurs.

States commonly incorporate NASAA Form U-7, the uniform Small Corporate Offering Registration Form ("SCOR"), as prescribing the content of a required offering document or prospectus.ⁿ⁷ They make no provision, however, for electronic delivery of the document as satisfying a "sent or given" or similarly stated requirement. The requirement of E-Sign that information in electronic form relating to a transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce may not be denied legal effect, validity or enforceability would appear to require that states permit prospectuses or offering circulars to be delivered electronically when the issuer and investor agree to that means of delivery. The key consideration under E-Sign is consent.

An overarching consideration in the application of E-Sign is whether securities transactions are "consumer" transactions. Key provisions of E-Sign regarding consent to electronic delivery of documents and information focus on whether "a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that information relating to a transaction ... be provided or made available to a consumer in writing."ⁿ⁸ "Consumer" is defined in the Act as "an individual who obtains, through a transaction, products or services which are primarily for personal, family, or household purposes."ⁿ⁹ If securities transactions are not in fact "consumer" transactions, states would be free to continue to apply their own disclosure and consent requirements regarding the delivery of documents. On the other hand, assuming E-Sign is applicable, and that there is no issue concerning the form of consent mandated by E-Sign, state requirements and regulations will necessarily be superseded, and issuers and intermediaries may deliver offering documents electronically without regard to particular state requirements. State administrators can be expected further to address the implications and application of E-Sign to their Blue Sky laws.

[2] Broker-Dealer Records Requirements Broker-dealer record-keeping and retention requirements under Blue Sky laws are discussed in Chapter 11.ⁿ¹⁰ All states require that broker-dealers generate and retain certain records. E-Sign now mandates:

If a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a contract or other record relating to a transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce be retained, that requirement is met by retaining an electronic record of the information in the contract or other record that--

(A) accurately reflects the information set forth in the contract or other record; and

(B) remains accessible to all persons who are entitled to access by statute, regulation, or rule of law, for the period required by such statute, regulation, or rule of law, in a form that is capable of being accurately reproduced for later reference, whether by transmission, printing, or otherwise.ⁿ¹¹

States must therefore permit broker-dealers to retain required records by electronic means, and the preemptive language of E-Sign will likely require state agencies to revise and reissue rules allowing broker-dealers and investment advisers to generate and retain records electronically. However, E-Sign also prescribes that state regulators may "specify performance standards to assure accuracy, record integrity, and accessibility of records that are required to be retained."ⁿ¹² State securities administrators are thus permitted some discretion to require paper, specific technologies (e.g., non-rewriteable, non-eraseable formats), or both in connection with their record retention requirements. Rules and regulations for electronic record-keeping will likely follow the guidance of the NASD already available, such that permitted systems:

(a) Will allow examiners immediate access to required records and will contain appropriate indexing and cross-referencing capabilities to assure access to all relevant documents;

(b) Will permit examiners to download documents, records and information, and permit printing these documents in hard copy; and

(c) Will provide for adequate security and restricted access to authorized employees and principals only.ⁿ¹³

Interpretive authority granted under E-Sign also allows agencies to require retention of records in a "tangible printed or paper form" when there is a compelling government interest in law enforcement for imposing such a requirement. Where broker-dealers are required to keep and maintain certain originally executed customer account documents, for example, the continuing paper mandate would be appropriate. This would not, however, require manually signed documents in order for agreements to be valid, effective and legally enforceable. Thus, online brokerage agreements, for example, are no less effective in the enforcement of obligations between a broker and customer.

CHAPTER 13 Fraud and Prohibited Practices

§ 13.01 The Scope of Blue Sky Fraud--Generally

The historic mission of state Blue Sky Laws has always been to protect individual investors from fraud and abusive practices.ⁿ¹ Every aspect of state securities regulation has that singular purpose. Registration of securities, though now significantly preempted by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 (NSMIA),ⁿ² is regulatory intervention aimed at assuring the quality of securities offered and sold regardless of the extent and manner of disclosure. The most common standard for judging the "merit" of offerings in that process is whether the offering would work or tend to work a fraud upon purchasers.ⁿ³ Intermediary licensing requirements are likewise aimed at assuring that persons of integrity and good repute interact with potential investors in the actual offering process. Over-arching all of this, every version of the Uniform Securities Act, and every other Blue Sky Law, contains a broad antifraud provision typified today by section 501 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, which provides:

- (1) to employ a device, scheme, or artifice to defraud;
- (2) to make an untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in the light of the circumstances under which it is made, not misleading; or
- (3) to engage in an act, practice, or course of business that operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon another person.ⁿ⁴

The operative notion was explained early in the history of state securities regulation:

While certain practices are declared by the act to be fraudulent, the definition of a fraudulent practice goes not further than to say that a fraud or violation of law which would operate as a fraud is a fraudulent practice, which may be enjoined, and we must gather from other sources the meaning of the word "fraud." In a broad sense, the term includes all deceitful practices contrary to the plain rules of common honesty.

The purpose of the law is to prevent all kinds of fraud in connection with the sale of securities and to defeat all unsubstantial and visionary schemes in relation thereto whereby the public is fraudulently exploited... . The words "fraud" and "fraudulent practice" in this connection, should therefore be given a wide meaning, so as to include all acts, although not originating in an actual evil design or contrivance to perpetuate fraud or injury upon others, which do by their tendency to deceive or mislead the purchasing public come within the purpose of the law. People v. Federated Radio Corporation, 244 N.Y. 33, 154 N.E. 655, 657 (1926) .

The 2002 Uniform Act also makes clear, by definition, that "fraud," "deceit," and "defraud" are not limited to common law deceit.ⁿ⁵

The general antifraud provisions in state Blue Sky Laws apply to any securities offer, sale and in many cases purchase, of a security. Registration exemptions for particular securities or transactions do not exempt any transaction from coverage of antifraud provisions. Likewise, even where NSMIA "covered securities" are involved, the antifraud provisions of state securities laws continue to apply by reason of the NSMIA "savings" clause,ⁿ⁶ which provides:

Fraud Authority--Consistent with this section, the securities commission (or agency or office performing like functions) of any State shall retain jurisdiction under the laws of such State to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker-dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions.

It is NSMIA, with its express preservation of state antifraud enforcement authority that best puts the scope of fraud addressed under Blue Sky Laws in perspective today. There are no limitations imposed on the states' antifraud enforcement authority that is preserved by NSMIA. Legislative history confirms that none was intended. Indeed, there are repeated statements making clear that the preemption language in NSMIA was "subject to" the savings clause. For example, the report of the House Committee on Commerce states that "Section 18(a) prohibits State governments from requiring the registration of, or otherwise imposing conditions on, offerings of "covered securities" as defined in Section 18(b), subject to Section 18(d), which preserves State authority to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit... ." ⁿ⁷ Prior to NSMIA, of course, states were free to bring enforcement actions to redress fraud, and private civil remedies were available in the same context, without regard to what would become "covered securities" after NSMIA. It is thus certain that the preservation of authority under and application Blue Sky Laws is a particularly powerful notion.

The scope of preserved of state antifraud enforcement authority after NSMIA was examined in Capital Research and Management Company v. Brown, ⁿ⁸ in circumstances in which the exercise of authority by the California Attorney General to address disclosure deficiencies in the offer and sale of mutual fund shares clashed with NSMIA preemption regarding the use of offering documents prepared by or on behalf of an issuer of covered securities.ⁿ⁹ In Brown the Attorney General brought an enforcement action for injunctive relief against Capital Research and Management Company (CRMC), which is the investment adviser for 29 mutual funds comprising the American Funds mutual fund complex, and the American Funds Distributors, Inc. ("AFD"), the broker-dealer wholesale distributor of shares of those constituent mutual funds. The Attorney General alleged that the defendants were participants in undisclosed "shelf space" or "revenue-sharing" agreements" that the mutual fund complex had entered into with broker-dealers, and which involved the payment of additional compensation to broker-dealers in the offer and sale of the fund shares in order gain heightened visibility and access to broker-dealer sales representatives. The Attorney General alleged among other things that the failure to disclose these agreements or arrangements prevented prospective mutual fund investors from recognizing a potential conflict of interest, and prevented mutual fund directors from effectively regulating their funds' distribution practices to protect shareholders.

The Attorney General did not sue the issuer, and did not directly claim that the issuer's offering documents contained false or misleading information, although in its opinion the Brown court noted that the shelf-space agreements were not accurately or fully disclosed in the American Funds disclosure documents.ⁿ¹⁰ Rather, the Attorney General alleged that CRMC and AFD had connived in making oral shelf space agreements with broker-dealers, and that in selling the mutual fund shares AFD and CRMC, they failed to disclose to purchasers the facts about the shelf space agreements that would allow purchasers to understand the import of statements that were made by the issuer in its disclosure documents.

At the same time, CRMC and AFD brought an action against Attorney General for declaratory and injunctive relief concerning the legality of certain commissions and fees paid to broker-dealers selling shares in the American Fund complex mutual funds. Responding to the Attorney General's enforcement action against them CRMC and AFD demurred, contending that NSMIA expressly or impliedly preempted any enforcement action challenging the adequacy of disclosures made by or on behalf of the issuer of covered securities. The Attorney General, on the other hand, relied upon the NSMIA savings provision, and claimed free reign to bring an enforcement action against CRMC and AFD, as intermediaries who were alleged to have engaged in fraud. Both cases were consolidated in the trial court, where the NSMIA preemption issue was the entire focus. The trial court concluded that NSMIA implicitly preempted the Attorney General's enforcement action against CRMC and AFD and did not fall within the NSMIA savings provision. On the Attorney General's appeal, the Court of Appeals reversed the trial court determination, concluding instead that the enforcement action was plainly within the NSMIA savings clause:

The plain language of the savings clause and its legislative history persuade us that Congress intended to preserve the states' antifraud authority to control the conduct of brokers and dealers, notwithstanding that the exercise of such controls might prospectively influence the disclosures made by a covered security. Put another way, the Attorney General's action has all of the attributes necessary to bring it squarely within the ambit of the savings clause. It is (1) an enforcement action (2) brought by a state officer performing the functions of a securities commission, (3) under California law (4) with regard to fraud and deceit (5) in connection with covered securities transactions.ⁿ¹¹

NSMIA preemption of state enforcement action with respect to offering documents prepared by or on behalf of an issuer of covered securities encompasses any direct or indirect prohibition, limitation, or condition upon use. It was apparent in Brown that at least indirectly the Attorney General's enforcement action sought relief that would impact the use of the issuer's offering documents by its investment adviser and wholesale broker-dealer, and if successful could, as the court noted, indirectly "encourage" the issuer itself to modify its offering documents.ⁿ¹² Nevertheless, the court concluded that the Attorney General's enforcement action, which challenged broker-dealer conduct, could not reasonably be construed as an effort to regulate the non-party issuer. Responding to the assertion that permitting the enforcement act would render NSMIA preemption provisions superfluous, the court declared:

We agree with CRMC and AFD that NSMIA must not be construed so as to render any of its provisions superfluous, but observe that it is their construction that would do precisely that by rendering the savings clause superfluous. Noticeably absent from their brief is any suggestion about what it is the savings clause might permit if construed to permit a challenge to a distributor's failure to disclose the existence and effect of its own oral shelf-space agreements and the conflicts allegedly created by such agreements. The accepted purpose of NSMIA is to prevent the states from subjecting covered securities to registration requirements, whereas the purpose of the savings clause is to allow the states, in an exercise of their historic police function, to take such action as is necessary to prevent fraud in the sale of covered securities.ⁿ¹³

A Connecticut state court also examined the scope of preserved state antifraud authority after NSMIA. In Papic v. Burke,ⁿ¹⁴ plaintiff, the co-manager of an investment company, appealed in court from a cease-and-desist order and civil money penalty imposed in administrative proceedings by the Commissioner of the Connecticut Department of Banking with respect to the offer and sale of limited partnership interests. The parties agreed that the securities were exempt from federal and state registration requirements by Rule 506 of Regulation D under the federal Securities Act, and were thus NSMIA covered securities. The Commissioner acted on the basis of a "Confidential Offering Circular" provided to actual and prospective investors, which he found violated the antifraud provision of the Connecticut Uniform Securities Act by failing to inform investors regarding several material facts. Challenging the Commissioner's order in court, plaintiff argued NSMIA preemption. The enforcement action directly related to the offering document of an issuer of a NSMIA covered security, but the plaintiff more broadly alleged that the Commissioner was not permitted to find a Blue Sky statutory violation based upon an omission of a material fact in the offering of a federal covered security.

As the California Court of Appeals had done in Capital Research and Management Company v. Brown, discussed above, the court in Papic concluded that the state's authority to enforce its securities law in connection with fraud and/or material omissions which would mislead investors in connection with the offer, sale or purchase of NSMIA covered securities remains intact. While NSMIA prohibits state regulators from commenting upon or imposing requirements on the contents of prospectuses and other offering documents, legislative history makes clear the intention not to alter or limit state law with respect to fraud or deceit. The court went on to conclude that there was substantial evidence to support the Commissioner's findings that the Confidential Offering memorandum omitted material facts and made untrue statements of material facts. After rejecting other due process challenges, the court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

These cases illustrate that the scope of fraud under Blue Sky Laws has not been constrained by NSMIA. In fact, the NSMIA savings provision is a clear statement by Congress that the protections against fraud in state securities laws, and the enforcement powers of state administrators, must not be impaired. Both Brown and Papic demonstrate that the preserved authority of state securities regulators to deal with fraud and deceit prevails over asserted federal preemption, even when the exercise of that authority impacts the disclosures made or being made in regard to NSMIA covered securities. To be sure, the exercise of authority as to fraud may not be a means to circumventing basic NSMIA preemption of state regulation of offering processes and procedures in regard to federal covered securities. However, it is just as clear that fraud under Blue Sky Laws will be defined for purposes of regulatory authority in a way that is consistent with the historic mission of investor protection that has always defined the reach of Blue Sky Laws.

As broadly defined as is the notion of "fraud" under Blue Sky Laws, civil remedies for fraud under Blue Sky laws are also more liberal and, on balance, more easily proved than common law tort remedies for fraud and deceit. They too are liberally construed so as to assure effectuation of the broad remedial purpose of Blue Sky Laws.ⁿ¹⁵ Thus, for example, substantive elements of common law fraud and deceit such as scienter, reliance and causation are prescribed, if at all, in civil remedy provisions. Section 509(b) of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, for example, establishes civil liability of a seller to a purchaser for false or misleading statements as follows:

A person is liable to the purchaser if the person sells a security in violation of Section 301 or, by means of an untrue statement of a material fact or an omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in light of the circumstances under which it is made, not misleading, the purchaser not knowing the untruth or omission and the seller not sustaining the burden that the seller did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care, could not have known of the untruth or omission.ⁿ¹⁶

Section 509 likewise prescribes the extent of what may be recovered as, for example, "actual damages" in the amount that would be recoverable upon a tender of the security less the value when the purchaser disposed of it, along with interest, costs and reasonable attorneys' fees.ⁿ¹⁷

An important goal of the Uniform Securities Act in all of its iterations is to effectuate uniformity in securities matters among federal and state authorities and self-regulatory organizations.ⁿ¹⁸ As the scope of activity encompassed within the antifraud provisions of state Blue Sky Laws has evolved, so too has federal regulation and jurisprudence expanded the scope of coverage of general antifraud provisions in both the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, principally section 10(b) of the Exchange Act and SEC Rule 10b-5 adopted under it. As discussed earlier, SEC Rule 10b-5 was the model for general antifraud provisions contained the Uniform Act from the outset.ⁿ¹⁹ Blue Sky Law general antifraud provisions likewise have roots in section 17(a) of the Securities Act of 1933,ⁿ²⁰ and most general antifraud provisions in state securities laws are in fact amalgams of the two federal provisions. The scope of fraud, fraudulent, or manipulative acts and practices coming within the ambit of the federal securities laws, and determinations of essential elements of liability thus contribute significantly in defining the scope of fraud under Blue

Sky Laws. In TriVectra v. Ushijima n21 for example, the Hawaii Supreme Court relied on federal jurisprudence to determine the requisite state of mind required to prove a violation in a civil enforcement action brought by the Commissioner of Securities. State courts will do likewise when looking to define the scope of conduct or activity that amounts to fraud, or the sufficiency of allegations made in regard to it.n22

This is not to say that everything defined by federal courts to be fraudulent, deceptive or manipulative conduct must automatically be considered as such under general antifraud provisions in state securities laws. It is certain, however, that the scope of fraud or fraudulent activity that is recognized as actionable under the federal securities laws will, if for no reason other than mandated attention to uniformity, weigh heavily in state court or regulatory agency assessments. And clearly in those states such as Ohio and Texas, where fraud is essentially defined as anything courts have determined it to be, federal authority will directly shape the boundaries of antifraud provisions.n23 It is against this backdrop that particular fraudulent and abusive acts and practices directly addressed in Blue Sky Laws are considered below. However, the scope of Blue Sky Law antifraud provisions is not determined by what is or is not specifically addressed in a statute. These are general antifraud provisions. In the same manner that general antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws have been applied to a full range of fraudulent, deceptive or manipulative acts and practices occurring in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, the breadth of state securities law antifraud provisions is limited in most states only by the necessity of a security being involved, and the requisite connection between fraud or fraudulent activity, whatever they may be determined to be, and the offer, sale or purchase of that security.

(n2)Footnote 2. Pub. L. No. 104-290, 110 Stat. 3416 (1996). NSMIA and its impact on state securities regulation are addressed throughout this treatise. NSMIA amended section 18 of the Securities Act of 1933 and other elements of the federal securities laws by providing for limited preemption of state regulatory authority where securities and markets are national in character. The legislation preempted state authority to require registration of "federal covered securities" and limits state regulation of securities disclosure documents and certain intermediaries.

(n4)Footnote 4. 2002 Unif. Sec. Act § 501; see also Unif. Sec. Act § 101; Rev. Unif. Sec. Act § 501.

Section 501 of the 2002 Uniform Act, like general antifraud provisions in both the original and revised Uniform Securities Acts is modeled on SEC Rule 10b-5 adopted under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and, to a somewhat lesser extent on Section 17(a) of the Securities Act of 1933. These are broadly stated general antifraud provisions that, without defining "fraud," proscribe any act, practice or course of business that operates or would operate as such.

(n5)Footnote 5. 2002 Unif. Sec. Act § 101(9); see also Unif. Sec. Act § 401(d); Rev. Unif. Sec. Act § 101(6).

None of the versions of the Uniform Act defines fraud in any way other than to make clear it is not to be limited by the common law. This is intentional. The drafters of the original Uniform Securities Act deemed it prudent not to attempt any more exacting definition, so as to give courts greater latitude in ascertaining fraudulent practices and applying the law consistent with its remedial purpose. See Draftsmen's Commentary to Uniform Securities Act § 401(d); see also L. Loss, Commentary on the Uniform Securities Act (Little Brown & Co. 1976).

In Ohio the scope of fraud addressed under the Blue Sky Law is evidenced by the definition of "fraud," "fraudulent," "fraudulent acts," and "fraudulent practices" as meaning: "[A]nything recognized on or after July 22, 1929, as such in courts of law or equity." See Ohio Rev. Code § 1707.01(J). With that open-ended incorporation of anything determined by a court to be fraud, the Ohio definition goes on specifically to include:

[A]ny device, scheme, or artifice to defraud or to obtain money or property by means of any false pretense, representation or promise; any fictitious or pretended purchase or sale of securities; and any act, practice, transaction or course of business relating to the purchase or sale of securities that is fraudulent or that has operated or would operate as a fraud upon the seller or purchaser. Id.

In Columbus Skyline the Ohio Supreme Court concluded that the definition of fraud derives from all securities cases defining fraudulent conduct in both state and federal courts. The Court added this observation:

This is sagacious for several reasons. First, the securities market is constantly evolving. By incorporating into the statute a larger body of law by which to define fraudulent conduct, the General Assembly has provided for inevitable changes in market structure that might otherwise require redrafting of the statute. This has the desirable effect of preventing Ohio securities law from developing in a vacuum, and furthers the goal of unifying securities laws. 74 Ohio St. 3d at 499.

Moreover, said the Court, federal standards on certain points are more well developed than state standards, and that:

Federal courts and administrative tribunals like the Securities and Exchange Commission have a greater experience with, and a more continuous exposure to, the complicated field of securities fraud cases and, consequently, provide a more extensive body of law to draw from in defining fraud. Id.

CHAPTER 13 Fraud and Prohibited Practices

2-13 Blue Sky Regulation § 13.02

§ 13.02 Prohibited Acts and Practices

[1] Introduction

The general antifraud provisions in state Blue Sky Laws, particularly those in non-Uniform Act states, may expressly address particular fraudulent or deceptive practices. In Florida, for example, after broadly stating the basic prohibitions against devices schemes and artifices to defraud, the antifraud provision goes on to declare it is unlawful:

To publish, give publicity to, or circulate any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper, article, letter, investment service, communication or broadcast which, though not purporting to offer a security for sale, describes such security for a consideration received or to be received directly or indirectly from an issuer, underwriter or dealer, or from an agent or employee of an issuer, underwriter, or dealer, without fully disclosing the receipt, whether past or prospective, of such consideration and the amount of the consideration.ⁿ¹

And it is likewise unlawful:

In any matter within the jurisdiction of the department, to knowingly and willfully falsify, conceal, or cover up, by any trick, scheme, or device, a material fact, make any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation, or make or use any false writing or document, knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or entry.ⁿ²

In New York, under the Martin Act:

It shall be illegal and prohibited for any person, partnership, corporation, company, trust, or association, or any agent or employee thereof, to use or employ any of the following acts or practices:

(a) Any fraud, deception, concealment, suppression, false pretense or fictitious or pretended purchase or sale ...

(c) Any representation or statement which is false, where the person who made such representation or statement: (i) knew the truth; or (ii) with reasonable effort could have known the truth; or (iii) made no reasonable effort to ascertain the truth; or (iv) did not have knowledge concerning the representation or statement made; where engaged in to induce or promote the issuance, distribution, exchange, sale, negotiation or purchase within or from this state of any securities or commodities, as defined in section three hundred fifty two of this article, regardless of whether issuance, distribution, exchange, sale, negotiation or purchase resulted.ⁿ³

California specifically addresses conduct by a broker-dealer:

If such person is a broker-dealer or other person selling or offering for sale or purchasing or offering to purchase the security, to make, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security by others, any statement which was, at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to any material fact, or which omitted to state any material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading, and which he knew or had reasonable ground to believe was so false or misleading.ⁿ⁴

Many states today also specifically address unlawful conduct by an investment adviser. The 2002 Uniform Securities Act includes under the heading "Prohibited Conduct in Providing Investment Advice" the following:

It is unlawful for a person that advises others for compensation, either directly or indirectly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities or that for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports relating to securities:

- (1) to employ a device, scheme or artifice to defraud another person; or

A particular state securities law may, of course, spell out numerous violations or prohibited acts or practices without reference to an antifraud provision.ⁿ⁶ All versions of the Uniform Act identify conduct that is unlawful or prohibited, but is not necessarily fraudulent.ⁿ⁷

On the other hand, the scope of antifraud provisions enacted in many states is not as clear cut. California courts, for example have held that a seller impliedly represents that the security is sold in compliance with the law, and it is a negligent misrepresentation actionable in fraud if the security should be registered and is not.ⁿ⁸ Similarly, in New York the Martin Act makes any violations, including violations of the registration provisions, fraudulent acts. The Martin Act lists many activities which are declared to be "fraudulent practices." Breaking the statute down, these encompass the purchase or sale of securities by:

- (1) Any person employing "any device, scheme or artifice to defraud or for obtaining money or property by means of any false pretense, representation or promise";
- (2) Any person making "fictitious or pretended purchases or sales of securities";
- (3) Any person employing "any deception, misrepresentation, concealment, suppression, fraud, false pretense or false promises";
- (4) Any person engaging in "any practice or transaction or course of business ... which is fraudulent or in violation of law and which has operated or which would operate as a fraud upon the purchaser"; or
- (5) Any broker, dealer or salesman, or employee or agent thereof selling or offering securities in violation of the registration provisions for such persons or in violation of any other provision of the Blue Sky laws.ⁿ⁹

It is clear that what constitutes fraud in one state may be an unlawful act in another, but may not constitute fraud. Further, a number of states that have enacted the basic element of the Uniform Act's antifraud section have extended the provisions to include additional specific practices deemed "fraudulent" or "unlawful."ⁿ¹⁰ It is probable that many, if not all, of these specified practices would be similarly prohibited by the broad language of the Uniform Act provision.

[2] Information Failures: The Elements of Blue Sky Fraud

State securities statutes tend to expand the definition of securities fraud to include acts not considered fraudulent under the more traditional common law concept of fraud. Of course, the traditional common law "misstatement of a material fact" concept of fraud could not anticipate today's sophisticated market place or complex securities schemes. The antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws, however, are applicable "whether or not the artifices employed involve a garden-type variety of fraud, or present a unique form of deception ..." and the use of novel or atypical methods will not provide immunity from their coverage.ⁿ¹¹ Nonetheless, most securities fraud, even in a complex and sophisticated investment environment, involves a misrepresentation of one type or another by a person seeking to induce another to purchase a security and thus falls within the traditional common law concept of fraud, albeit with statutory enhancement.ⁿ¹² Accordingly, a review of the elements of common law fraud as they apply to securities law transactions is essential to further understanding the scope of Blue Sky fraud and its elements.

For purposes of this discussion, the elements of common law are reorganized and consolidated into the following:

- (1) What constitutes a misrepresentation;
- (2) What is materiality;
- (3) Scienter, that is, knowledge of the speakers that there is a misrepresentation and the speaker's intent that the misrepresentation be acted upon by those who receive it;
- (4) Reliance on the misrepresentation by those who hear it; and
- (5) Proximate cause of loss or injury.

The degree to which the person seeking relief must show each and every element of fraud depends in part on the type of relief sought. Generally, in order to obtain injunctive relief or impose criminal sanctions in securities cases, there is often no need to prove reliance or an injury proximately caused by the violation.ⁿ¹³ Rather, the party seeking relief (most often the state administrator) need only show fraudulent conduct in connection with the sale of securities which presents a potential for damages.ⁿ¹⁴ The Uniform Securities Act adopts this approach by making it unlawful "to make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading..."ⁿ¹⁵ This provision does not make reference to the elements of reliance or injury nor does the express language of the statute require an intent to defraud. A strict reading of Section 101 of the Uniform Act, therefore, makes securities fraud a strict liability offense with regard to criminal sanctions and requires that no intent or damage occur before courts in those states adopting the Uniform Act may grant injunctive relief.ⁿ¹⁶

In contrast, if the remedy sought is money damages in a civil suit, the Uniform Act makes the proof more difficult. The Act provides that:

Any person who ... offers or sells a security by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading (the buyer not knowing of the untruth or omission), and who does not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission, is liable to the person buying the security from him... .n17

This provision, substantially adopted in a number of states,ⁿ¹⁸ alters the elements necessary to prove common law fraud and shifts the burden of proof to the person defending the action. However, the traditional elements are retained to such an extent as to warrant their discussion as they apply to civil actions for the fraudulent sale of securities.

"[I]n every case either civil or criminal arising under the ... 'Blue Sky' laws the essential element of the offense is either an affirmative misrepresentation or a concealment of material fact or silence amounting to fraud."ⁿ¹⁹

Obviously, an "affirmative misrepresentation" or an "out and out lie" will, when other elements of proof are met, sustain a fraud action.ⁿ²⁰ Misrepresentations concerning material existing facts are the easier type fraud cases to prove. However, when there is something less than an affirmative misrepresentation, two questions immediately arise. Does silence or failure to disclose constitute a misrepresentation? Can promises or opinions as to future events rise to the level of misrepresentation?

To some degree, an affirmative misrepresentation and a failure to disclose overlap. For example, a lie about the value of stock is necessarily nondisclosure of the stock's true worth.ⁿ²¹ The same is true of misrepresentations about financial conditions and the character and value of property.ⁿ²² The section of the Uniform Securities Act making it fraudulent to omit "a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading,"ⁿ²³ is intended to bring the "half-truth" within the scope of the Act.ⁿ²⁴ However, the Act's reference to omissions does not impose an affirmative obligation to disclose except where there is an express or implied statement having the effect of a half-truth unless something is added.ⁿ²⁵ This principle applies in both the Uniform Act and non-Uniform Act states. One court applied this concept by stating that the duty to disclose does not arise unless affirmative representations would become misleading in the absence of the information not so stated.ⁿ²⁶ Similarly, there exists "a duty to make full disclosure in these circumstances where such disclosure is necessary to dispel misleading impressions that are or might have been created by a partial revelation of the fact."ⁿ²⁷ The purpose for such a disclosure requirement is to make sure that all parties are on equal footing with respect to the transaction.ⁿ²⁸ If a person voluntarily makes a statement concerning a securities transaction that is correct when issued, that person has a duty to update the statement if it becomes materially misleading in light of subsequent events.ⁿ²⁹ Examples of omissions constituting misrepresentations include:

- failure to reveal that the issuer is operating at a loss;ⁿ³⁰
- failure to deliver a prospectus to a solicited purchaser;ⁿ³¹
- failure to disclose the existence of prior SEC or securities regulatory enforcement proceedings;ⁿ³²
- failure to disclose prior existing litigation;ⁿ³³
- failure to disclose a prior bankruptcy;ⁿ³⁴ and
- failure to disclose compensation to management.ⁿ³⁵

The courts, in at least a few states, have held that there is an implied representation that securities are registered under the state's Blue Sky law and that failure to disclose that the securities are not registered is a misrepresentation actionable in fraud.ⁿ³⁶

Opinions and promises as to future events to induce the sale of securities, while not always considered material misrepresentations, are generally frowned upon.ⁿ³⁷ A few states have attempted to enact legislation against such statements, but for the most part these provisions make such practices fraudulent or unlawful only if they consist of "any promise or representation or prediction not made honestly or in good faith"ⁿ³⁸ or when "any promise or representation as to the future which is beyond reasonable expectation or is unwarranted by existing circumstances."ⁿ³⁹

Again, not all promises or opinions constitute misrepresentations. The Mississippi Supreme Court has held statements that business is "good," "growing," "successful," or "going to be a million dollar proposition" to be merely opinions expressing relative terms upon which reasonable men may differ. According to the court, such statements are "vague, indefinite and uncertain" and "fall far short of proving false and fraudulent statement of existing material facts."ⁿ⁴⁰ However, the same court, twenty years later, opined that a promise that a future market for the stock would be created constituted a misrepresentation.ⁿ⁴¹ The court noted that a promise for future fulfillment will be considered a misrepresentation where there is a present undisclosed intention of not performing it.ⁿ⁴² Further, in view of the liberal interpretations given Blue Sky laws, if a question exists as to whether a statement is of fact or opinion, the statement is likely to be found to be a statement of fact.

The state court decisions, however, are far from uniform on the issue of when an expression constitutes misrepresentation. For example, a Florida appellate court held that a representation that stock was being sold at bottom dollar and the price would triple in six months was no more than an expression of opinion relating to a future event which could not be the basis of fraud.ⁿ⁴³ On the other hand, an Illinois appellate court said that although "statements of opinion which have a firm historical or factual basis are not actionable ... unfounded predictions of future performance are impermissible."ⁿ⁴⁴ The Illinois court cited the growing recognition that specific predictions of price increases or dividends may be in violation of antifraud provisions and held that a promise of a fifteen percent return on stock in a business not yet started was a fraudulent misrepresentation.ⁿ⁴⁵

The distinction between liability for the misrepresentation of a fact and the mere expression of an opinion is important if sometimes difficult to discern. The courts have expressed reluctance to permit any person to escape antifraud liability by recourse to the opinion-fact dichotomy. Under the existing testsⁿ⁴⁶ a reasoned and justified statement of opinion, one with a sound factual or historical basis, is not actionable. Where there exists a gross disparity between prediction and fact, the courts have not been loath to find predictions or opinions to be actionable.ⁿ⁴⁷ Nor have they been reluctant to find predictions of future events and statements of opinion actionable when they are part of a scheme to defraud.ⁿ⁴⁸

In several cases courts have been confronted with arguments that the seller's representations were mere "puffing" and therefore constituted nonactionable opinion.ⁿ⁴⁹ The doctrine of "puffing" as an excuse for misleading statements has found little application in a securities context. The puffing notion is derived from the doctrine of caveat emptor and most often arises in connection with the sale of goods where the purchaser's ability to examine the goods will tend to temper the salesperson's or seller's opinion. In light of the securities acts notion of materiality, the "puffing" doctrine should have little application to the offer, purchase and sale of securities.

All of the discussion above suggests that "misrepresentation" as fraud under Blue Sky Laws involves scienter, that is, a mental state embracing intent to deceive or defraud. Scienter is an element of Blue Sky fraud, and is discussed specifically in § 13.021 below. However, it is important to note that states also recognize common law claims for negligent misrepresentation.ⁿ⁵⁰ Negligent misrepresentation may also be actionable fraud under Blue Sky Laws. As already discussed, for example, many civil liability provisions in state securities laws include a reasonable care or reasonable diligence defense for secondary actors or intermediaries named as defendants in connection with another's violation of antifraud provisions. Moreover, the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, in its prescription of liability of a seller to a purchaser, or purchaser to a seller, for false or misleading statements includes a reasonable care defense. As in the case of liability of a seller, for example, § 509(b) of the 2002 Uniform Act provides in pertinent part:

A person is liable to the purchaser if the person sells a security in violation of section 301 or, by means of an untrue statement of a material fact or an omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in the light of the circumstances under which it is made, not misleading, the purchaser not knowing the untruth or omission and the seller not sustaining the burden of proof that the seller did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care, could not have known of the untruth or omission. n51

Courts employ a variety of language to define "materiality."ⁿ⁵² However, despite the divergence, a common theme runs through all the definitions: the representation must be one which a reasonable person would consider in determining his or her course of action. The cases reveal various representations as being material or not material. For example, to one federal court (applying state law), the failure to reveal the true liabilities of a company in which securities are sold is the suppression of a material fact.ⁿ⁵³ Similarly, a balance sheet which inflates the true worth of the issuer and fails to disclose that bare legal title to claimed real property has been transferred (but equitable title retained) contains misrepresentations of material facts.ⁿ⁵⁴

In an Illinois case,ⁿ⁵⁵ the seller represented to the purchasers that the issuer had a capitalization of $190,000. However, the seller did not reveal that the issuer had entered into a repurchase agreement for its securities for $25,000 with another shareholder. The court found that in view of the fact that there were only six subscribers to the stock and that one of them had serious doubts about proceeding with the venture, there was a material fact which should have been disclosed to other investors. In a fraud action brought by a seller of securities, a Washington court held that the failure of the buyer, a corporate insider, to reveal that outside buyers had made offers to purchase a controlling interest in the company constituted a misrepresentation of a material fact.ⁿ⁵⁶

The more interesting cases are those where the courts have held that although a misrepresentation may have taken place, it was not of a material fact and therefore a fraud action would not lie. In Guyann v. Shulters,ⁿ⁵⁷ the Mississippi Supreme Court examined a situation in which an outstanding loan was not revealed to investors in a corporation and the loan agreement pledged part of the corporate assets as collateral. In holding that failure to reveal the loan was not a misrepresentation of a material fact, the court noted that the entire loan was used in the business, the pledge of assets was not legally binding and that the loan was also secured by the outside earnings of one of the principals.ⁿ⁵⁸ The court also considered pertinent that more than half of the loan had been repaid and no financial loss resulted to the business as a result of the transaction.ⁿ⁵⁹

In a Washington caseⁿ⁶⁰ a contract for stock representing a controlling interest in a nursing home stated that the facilities of the home were in accordance with all governmental regulations. However, the purchaser subsequently discovered that emergency electrical equipment required by the Social Security Administration was not installed. The court held that the lack of equipment was not a material contractual misrepresentation since the home had been certified by both state and federal governments and neither certification was imperiled due to the missing equipment. The Court also considered pertinent the facts that the operators could obtain a waiver of the equipment purchase requirement from the applicable official and that from the purchasers examination of the premises, it should have been apparent the equipment was missing.ⁿ⁶¹

Not all omissions or misstatements are actionable under the blue sky laws' antifraud provisions. Those provisions do not prohibit the making of any misstatement. Instead, they only prohibit the making of material ones. Whether statements of opinion or predictions of future events are material statements must be decided in the context of the offer made.

Usually, a jury decides whether a statement is one of fact or opinion.ⁿ⁶² Seemingly, the United States Supreme Court has resolved the question of the test for materiality in its 1976 decision in TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway, Inc. ⁿ⁶³ In time the distinctions between would or might consider important will be resolved. It is, however, important to note that there are some facts which have been deemed to be so obviously material that to omit them constitutes fraud.ⁿ⁶⁴

[c] Scienter

In civil actions for fraud, the Uniform Securities Act does not dispose with the common law element of scienter. Instead it lifts the burden of proof from the shoulders of the securities buyer and requires that the seller prove that he or she was unaware of any material misrepresentations or omissions and "in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known" of the untruth or omission.ⁿ⁶⁵ Theoretically, if the seller sustains this burden of proof, he or she will escape liability even if there were material misrepresentations or omissions made in connection with the sale.ⁿ⁶⁶ Equally important, the "reasonable care" clause has the effect of extending scienter to include not only intent to defraud, but mere negligence as well.

In states adopting the Uniform Act provisions a number of courts consistently hold that a defrauded purchaser need not show that the seller acted with fraudulent intent.ⁿ⁶⁷ However, with respect to a defendant's avoiding liability due to negligence or lack of intent to defraud, there is at least some difference of opinion. A few courts hold to the letter of the Uniform Act provision and agree that recovery is not warranted where the sellers are able to show that any material misrepresentation or omissions they may have made were made without negligence, innocently and in good faith.ⁿ⁶⁸ Other courts apply common law equity principles in these cases and conclude that there can be liability even where the statement or omission which ultimately proves to be injurious is made without knowledge or reason to believe that injury would result (in other words, a form of strict liability).ⁿ⁶⁹ This divergence is especially apparent in Arkansas where a federal court, interpreting the state statute, opined that a seller who can prove that statements and omissions were made innocently and non-negligently is not liable.ⁿ⁷⁰ However, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that a buyer may rescind a sale even where the seller's statements were made without knowledge of falsity and without moral guilt or evil intention.ⁿ⁷¹

There is, as one can readily see, a similarity in the Uniform Act sections making misrepresentation and omissions of material fact unlawful and the section imposing civil liability for such representations and omissions. The latter, Uniform Act § 410(a)(2) describes elements of proof which must be met by the parties in a civil action alleging such actions. Nevertheless, at least one state that has substantially adopted the Uniform Act section making fraud generally unlawful has not adopted the section spelling out the elements of proof required in civil cases, but rather provides that a private civil action may be brought for any violation of the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁷² This statute, in effect, allows private civil actions for any fraudulent act affecting the sale of securities as well as those based on untrue statement or omissions of material facts. In actions based on the latter concept, the statute is silent on questions of whether a fraud action may be based on negligent misrepresentation or omission and whether or not there is a shift in the burden of proof.ⁿ⁷³

A federal court looking at virtually the same provision in the Connecticut Blue Sky law determined that proof of negligence will not suffice to hold a seller liable; the purchaser must prove actual scienter on the part of the seller.ⁿ⁷⁴

In Washington, which has adopted the Uniform Act's antifraud provision,ⁿ⁷⁵ and which permits private civil suits for any "fraud or misrepresentation" involving securities,ⁿ⁷⁶ the courts have ruled that any material misrepresentation or omission is fraudulent per se.ⁿ⁷⁷

California, which requires a level of proof in civil actionsⁿ⁷⁸ comparable to that required under the Uniform Securities Act, has declared that fraud actions may be maintained for negligent misrepresentationsⁿ⁷⁹ even where the wrongdoer did not profit by his actions.ⁿ⁸⁰ The Florida provisions making it unlawful to sell securities by means of material untrue statements or omissionsⁿ⁸¹ may also be the basis of a civil action under a statute permitting such proceedings for any violation of the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁸² A federal court interpreting Florida's statute noted that it would appear that under the provisions, the common law element of scienter had been relaxed, although fraud by means of negligence had not yet reached the level of official policy.ⁿ⁸³ A Florida appellate court later indicated via dictum that scienter was not essential to recovery under the Florida Blue Sky law and suggested that mere negligence might be an acceptable criterion.ⁿ⁸⁴ In a similar vein, a federal court decision ruled that common law principles of fraud would apply to actions under the state Blue Sky law, but that the common law of Ohio had developed to such an extent that proof of wrongful intent is not required in fraud actions.ⁿ⁸⁵

Before leaving the subject of proof of scienter in civil actions, it should be mentioned that virtually all the decisions discussed so far deal with defrauded purchasers suing sellers.ⁿ⁸⁶ However, some states permit actions by defrauded sellers against their buyers. Generally, these statutes provide that the level of proof that defrauded seller must meet is no different than that required of a defrauded purchaser.

With respect to injunctive actions brought by state officials, recall that proof of scienter is not ordinarily required. New York especially has a long line of cases holding to this principle.ⁿ⁸⁷

In criminal cases, questions of scienter usually arise when a defendant is accused of "willfully" or "intentionally" or "knowingly" violating the statute. The usual argument is that there is no intention to defraud and that therefore the blue sky law was not violated. However, the courts have uniformly held that such terms refer to the acts of the defendant and not to the violation of the law. In other words, the proof required is that the defendant was aware of his or her actions; proof of intent to violate the law or of intention to defraud is not required.ⁿ⁸⁸

It is generally true that a more culpable mental state of mind is required in criminal cases than the courts require in civil cases under the state securities antifraud laws. While the state courts in criminal cases typically require some element of scienter or mens rea, proof of a specific intent, evil motive or guilty knowledge that the law was being violated is not the standard. Intent to deceive in criminal cases means "intent to say something that is expected to be relied on, that is not believed to be true by the seller, or, if strictly true, is hoped will be understood in an untruthful sense." This is expressed as a "willful" violation. A seller can willfully violate a securities law without knowing of its existence. Knowledge that the act is in violation of the securities laws, or that the instrument in question is a security, is not a relevant fact requiring proof by the state.

[d] Reliance

The Uniform Act requirement for civil actions sounding in fraud contains a statement to the effect that a defrauded purchaser of securities must not know of the untruths or omissions in order to recover.ⁿ⁸⁹ Any fair reading of this provision produces the conclusion that it is not intended as a requirement that the buyer prove reliance on the untrue statement or the omission. Rather he or she must show only that he did not know of it.

Of the states adopting this provision, some acknowledge that proof of reliance, as understood at common law, is not a requirement under the securities acts.ⁿ⁹⁰ On the other hand, courts in Washington have made clear that reliance is an element of a claim for misrepresentation under the Washington Securities Act, and, moreover, that reliance must be reasonable.ⁿ⁹¹ In either case, certain requirements bearing on reliance, aside from proof of the true facts, do come into play. For example, a buyer may not recover on the basis of misrepresentations upon which he or she had no concern and placed no reliance.ⁿ⁹² One state supports this position by saying that a party claiming fraud is presumed to be aware of all the facts which would have been discovered by a reasonably prudent person in the same position, and that total reliance on the honesty of the person against whom fraud has been alleged does not excuse the failure to exercise due diligence.ⁿ⁹³ However, the fact that a defrauded party can learn the truth by independent investigation does not defeat the action unless such person had knowledge of facts that would cause a reasonable man to be suspicious of the representation made to him. Thus, as a Texas appellate court observed:

Where one has been induced to enter into a contract by fraudulent representations, the person committing the fraud cannot defeat a claim for damages based thereon by a plea that the party defrauded might have discovered the truth by the exercise of proper care. There is no duty on the defrauded party to make any investigation as to the truth or falsity of the statements made to them... .n94

Knowledge of facts that would cause a reasonably prudent person to make inquiry which would lead to a discovery of the fraud is in law knowledge of the fraud. One cannot be charged with lack of diligence in failing to make inquiry until he has knowledge of some fact that should have aroused his suspicion.n95 That the defrauded party conducts an investigation does not necessarily mean that complete reliance was placed in the investigation and that no reliance was placed on the fraudulent statements.

In states adopting the Uniform Act provision, the courts of at least one state hold that a buyer of securities may accept statements made to him at face value and rely upon them.n96 However, where the buyers are knowledgeable of the type of business they are purchasing via the securities in question and conduct an inspection of the premises involved, they are no longer relying on representations made to them, but on their own judgment. Thus, they cannot recover on the basis of untrue statements or omissions.n97

Generally, in criminal actions and cases seeking injunctions, proof of reliance is not required.n98 However, one court has adopted the position that a criminal conviction for fraud in the sale of securities cannot be upheld where the allegedly injured party had the opportunity to and did in fact conduct an independent investigation.n99

Federal courts sitting in review of state antifraud civil securities litigation, too often attempt to force upon the state's remedial securities statutes the requirements of Rule 10b-5. Such attempts are misplaced and stem from an absence of understanding and appreciation of the statutory scheme, versus the implied right of action under Rule 10b-5, of state securities regulation. Consistently, state courts have rejected the imposition of Rule 10b-5 requirements upon state securities statutes. The scienter requirement has been rejected time and again. The policies reflected in the state securities laws are protective of investors and are expressions of the concerns of state legislatures whose residents often fall prey to peripatetic swindlers and con-artists

Attempts to constrain state securities civil remedies by imposing upon them the transaction causation and loss causation requirements of Rule 10b-5 fail to heed the fundamental distinction between the nature of implied causes of action and express statutory remedies adopted by legislators in each of the states. Additionally, the trend in recent federal cases to equate Rule 10b-5 requirements with state securities civil remedies miss the point manifested in state statutes. These statutes were designed to protect the general investing public from those who are too eager to divest them of their funds on the promise of profits. If the state law remedies appear harsh to unsuspecting swindlers and overly protective of resident investors when compared to the federal laws, it is because they were intended to be so. It is for this reason that they are devoid of references to scienter, proximate cause and other requirements of Rule 10b-5.

[e] Proximate Cause of Loss or Injury

Under common law, the injury suffered by a person claiming fraud must be consequently and proximately caused by the person against whom the allegation is made. It is not the purpose of this chapter to ascertain the amount or level of damages recoverable in fraud actions, but to see how this common law element applies to the Blue Sky laws.

It appears that, to an extent, the concept of proximate and consequent injury meshes with the Uniform Securities Act provision allowing a seller of securities to escape liability for fraud if the seller can prove that he or she did not know, or, by exercising reasonable care, could not have know, of any material misrepresentations or omissions made by him or her.n100 Under this provision, according to at least one court, a person selling securities cannot be liable for repeating information provided by others where the seller had no knowledge of its falsity.n101 If such a sale takes place through a principal-agent relationship, the principal who gave his innocent agent the false information has been held responsible.n102

In New York, where a causal link between fraudulent conduct and resultant injury is essential,n103 recovery for fraud will not be allowed where the practices complained of did not occur until after the person claiming fraud purchased the securities.ⁿ¹⁰⁴ A New York court reached a similar result where the purchaser did not buy the securities from the misrepresenting broker, but rather from another broker.ⁿ¹⁰⁵ In that setting the court observed: "To place the responsibility for the possible purchase of unlimited number of shares from an unlimited number of brokers on the defendants is unreasonable and unrealistic."ⁿ¹⁰⁶

A Utah court concluded that the purchaser of securities may not hold the issuer's accountant liable for negligently preparing financial statements relied on by the purchaser on the grounds that future purchasers of securities constitute an unlimited class who could not be reasonably foreseen as relying on the statements.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ In a particularly interesting Oregon case, the plaintiff, a minority stockholder and former employee of the defendant, brought an action for damages on the grounds that he was fired because he refused to sell his stock to the defendant at a price below the market price.ⁿ¹⁰⁸ He claimed that such actions on part of the defendant were fraudulent under the Oregon Blue Sky law and demanded damages for loss of earnings and retirement benefits. In affirming dismissal of the case, the court said that the recovery sought by the plaintiff is consistent with his status as an employee, but not as a stockholder. The Blue Sky law allows for recovery for fraud in the purchase and sale of securities, not for loss of employment.ⁿ¹⁰⁹

It may be that injury is not always essential to a civil action for fraud. In a fraud suit brought in federal court under the former Maine Blue Sky law alleging that a prospectus relied on by the plaintiff contained untruths and omissions,ⁿ¹¹⁰ the defendant sought dismissal of the complaint on the grounds that the alleged omissions were beneficial to the plaintiff. Refusing to dismiss the complaint, the court held that the provision in the Act allowing civil suits for fraud is an express liability provision. Allegations of material omissions or misstatements are all that are needed to establish a prima facie case under the statute, and there is no requirement that causation be alleged or proved.ⁿ¹¹¹ Maine has since adopted the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, but its former provision is substantially the same as the Uniform Securities Act provision allowing civil actions for fraud.ⁿ¹¹² Thus, the decision may continue to carry weight. A nuanced change from the Uniform Securities Act to the 2002 Uniform Act is the qualification for recovery of "actual" damages rather than simply damages. The actual damages qualifier appears in a number of other state securities laws, and arguably implies a causation element.

[3] Specific Acts by Intermediaries and Issuers

The prohibited acts and practices discussed in the preceding section are directed to any and all persons involved in the offer, sale or purchase of securities. A number of states, however, have enacted additional antifraud provisions intended to apply to persons who are in the business of dealing in securities. These statutes and regulations are specifically directed toward broker-dealers, investment advisers, and issuers.

A note of caution is warranted. The subject of fraud in this chapter deals with fraud as an unlawful act which may result in criminal conviction, civil liability or injunctions. Concomitantly, under the Uniform Securities Act, registration of broker-dealers, agents and investment advisers may be denied, suspended or revoked if the person "has engaged in dishonest or unethical practices in the securities business."ⁿ¹¹³ Several states have also promulgated rules or regulations which set forth acts that are deemed dishonest or unethical practices for the purpose of denying, suspending or revoking registration, or imposing discipline on intermediaries.ⁿ¹¹⁴ Many of these practices would probably be deemed fraudulent under the general antifraud statute enacted in the state as well. However, a discussion of fraudulent practices relating to the registration provisions exclusively is omitted from this chapter.

Similarly, securities registration can be denied, suspended or revoked if "the offering has worked or tended to work a fraud upon purchasers or would so operate."ⁿ¹¹⁵ Acts and practices which are considered fraudulent for purposes of denying, suspending or revoking a securities registration are also separately covered in this Treatise.ⁿ¹¹⁶

[a] Broker-Dealers

The Blue Sky laws in several states contain antifraud provisions specifically applicable to broker-dealer transactions. These statutes prohibit broker-dealers from effecting transactions or inducing or attempting to induce the purchase or sale of securities "by means of any manipulative, deceptive or other fraudulent scheme, device or contrivance."ⁿ¹¹⁷ Despite the intent of these provisions to thwart certain broker-dealer practices, there does not seem to be anything in these statutes which would not be included within the general fraud prohibitions of the Uniform Act applicable to all persons. Nevertheless, three of the states adopting the broker-dealer antifraud section have also enacted the Uniform Act's general antifraud section.ⁿ¹¹⁸

Broker-dealer practices are governed in several states by regulations promulgated under either an antifraud provision applicable to broker-dealers only or the more common general antifraud provision applicable to all persons. These regulations are often modeled after rules promulgated by the SEC under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934. For example, some states have regulations based on the former SEC rule making it a fraudulent practice for a broker-dealer to fail to make written disclosure to a customer of the capacity in which the broker-dealer is acting in executing transactions.ⁿ¹¹⁹ This rule requires disclosure of whether the broker-dealer is acting solely for the customer, as a dealer for his or her own account, for another person, or for both the customer and another person.ⁿ¹²⁰

In addition, a broker-dealer must disclose to its customers when it recommends a stock in which it is a market maker.ⁿ¹²¹ The failure to disclose such a fact indicating the possibility of adverse interests would deny prospective investors of an opportunity to make an informed decision about the recommended investment. The investor must be permitted to evaluate possible conflicts of interest in such recommendations. Facts which would reveal or tend to reveal the lack of objectivity on the part of the broker-dealer will be deemed material facts, the nondisclosure of which may render the broker-dealer liable to his or her client.

Such disclosure, however, may not be required where the securities involved in the transaction consist of U.S. government obligations.ⁿ¹²² California also provides an exemption where the transaction involves specified securities issued by certain companies registered under the federal Investment Company Act of 1940.ⁿ¹²³

States have also adopted SEC Rule 15c-1-5 under the 1934 Act,ⁿ¹²⁴ making it a fraudulent practice for a broker-dealer to fail to make written disclosure to a customer when the broker-dealer is controlled by, controlling or under common control with the issuer of the security.ⁿ¹²⁵ Similarly, Rule 15c-1-6 under the 1934 Act,ⁿ¹²⁶ which requires disclosure of any participation or financial interest which the broker-dealer has in a transaction, has been adopted by some states.ⁿ¹²⁷

These approaches illustrate that the philosophy embodied in the antifraud provisions of the states' securities laws is that decisions by investors be based upon an analysis of all material facts--or at least an opportunity to make such an analysis. To effectuate this purpose broker-dealer nondisclosure of their economic self-interests which are at variance with an investors' are deemed to be material, and, if withheld, actionable.

The practice of "churning" discretionary accounts is also deemed to constitute fraud by both state administratorsⁿ¹²⁸ and the SEC under the federal securities laws.ⁿ¹²⁹ Churning is the practice of controlling or influencing the volume and frequency of trading in an account by purchasing or selling securities which are excessive in size or frequency in view of the financial resources and character of such account. Further, the failure of a broker-dealer to keep records of any trading in a discretionary account is considered fraudulent under state¹³⁰ and SEC rules.ⁿ¹³¹

The giving of a fictitious quotation by a broker-dealer has been specifically banned by a few states.ⁿ¹³² Similarly, the sale of a security at a price not reasonably related to the market price constitutes fraud in one jurisdiction.ⁿ¹³³ Another, more common, rule under state¹³⁴ and federalⁿ¹³⁵ securities laws is to deem fraudulent a representation by a broker-dealer that a security is being offered "at the market" unless the broker-dealer knows or has reasonable grounds to believe that such a market exists without it being created or controlled by the broker-dealer or by any person associated or in a control relationship with him.

The SEC rule against the hypothecation of securities, Rule 15c-2-1 under the 1934 Act,ⁿ¹³⁶ has been described as perhaps the most complicated of all SEC rules.ⁿ¹³⁷ The basic purpose of the rule is to prevent broker-dealers from pledging or disposing of securities they are holding for customers (or other persons) as collateral or for safekeeping. There are numerous exceptions to these prohibitions and notice and certification requirements when exceptions are used.ⁿ¹³⁸ This rule has been substantially adopted in the regulations of some states.ⁿ¹³⁹

A far less complicated provision making hypothecation of customers' securities unlawful has been enacted in New York.ⁿ¹⁴⁰ Under the Martin Act, it is unlawful for a broker-dealer in possession of a customer's securities, without a lien on them or a special property interest in them, to pledge or dispose of the securities without the customer's consent. Even when the broker-dealer has a lien on the securities, it may not pledge or dispose of them for an amount greater than the amount owed by the customer without the customer's consent. However, such a pledge or disposal may be made when the broker-dealer has possession or control of the same type and kind of securities which can be delivered to the customer in the event that the customer tenders the amount of the debt owed to the broker-dealer and demands the return of the securities.ⁿ¹⁴¹

Rule 15c2-4 under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 Act is partially aimed at broker-dealers acting as underwriters.ⁿ¹⁴² The rule makes it a fraudulent practice for any broker-dealer to fail to transmit money received from the sale of securities to the persons entitled to it. Alternatively, if the broker-dealer is acting as an underwriter on a "best efforts" basisⁿ¹⁴³ and the securities are sold on an "all or none" basisⁿ¹⁴⁴ or in accordance with an agreement that the underwriter is not to turn over received consideration until some future event occurs, then the money must be placed in a separate trust or escrow account.ⁿ¹⁴⁵ Several states have substantially adopted this rule.ⁿ¹⁴⁶

Minnesota has adopted an additional rule affecting "all or none" or contingency distributions.ⁿ¹⁴⁷ Under this provision it is considered deceptive to make a representation:

[t]o the effect that the security is being offered or sold on an "all or none" basis, unless the security is part of an offering or distribution being made on the condition that all or a specified amount of the consideration paid for such security will be promptly refunded to the purchaser unless all of the securities being offered are sold at a specified price within a specified time, and the total amount due to the seller is received by a specified date.

Investors whose funds are not returned on a timely basis under the Minnesota rule may nevertheless lose the right to bring an action based upon the violation of the rule, if the seller delivers to the investor a written offer of rescission. Under section 410(e) of the Uniform Act no buyer of securities may bring suit if she has received a written offer to refund the consideration paid together with interest from the date of his or her investment. Section 607 of the Revised Uniform Act provides that the purchaser may not bring suit if he receives a written offer stating the basis on which liability may have arisen, apprising the purchaser of his or her rescission rights, providing all information necessary to correct any material misstatements or omissions made, and offering to repurchase the security for cash, equal to the consideration paid, plus interest (less income received), or, if the purchaser no longer owns the security, offering an amount equal to damages computed under section 605(a) of the Revised Act, and the purchaser fails to accept in writing within 30 days of receipt of the offer.

Most state regulators would consider such a written offer of rescission to require yet another investment decision be made by residents of their states. Some would require that the rescission offer be registered prior to permitting the offer to be circulated. Rescission offers which do not afford investors an opportunity to make an informed investment decision may be actionable. Persons who do not accept the offer to rescind their investment and elect instead to retain their investment may, by virtue of a purchaser-seller requirement, be denied an opportunity to bring an action based on the fraudulent rescission offer. They may, however, claim that the fraudulent rescission offer was but a part of an ongoing scheme to defraud.

Issuers and broker-dealers who may have violated both the antifraud and registration requirements of state securities law may not escape liability by use of a rescission offer which does not detail the basis of both violations. If only the failure to register the issue is addressed in the repurchase offering materials, the investor's ability to institute an action under the civil liabilities section of the state securities act is not cut off with respect to any fraud claim. To the extent, however, that the rescission offer materials embrace both the failure to register the issue and the violations of the anti-fraud provisions, an investor who retains his or her investment after the receipt of adequate disclosure would not be permitted to bring a subsequent state securities act claim.

Some states have adopted other federal rules applicable to broker-dealers as the basis for "fraud" determinations. These include making use of an inter-dealer quotation system without regard to established procedures,ⁿ¹⁴⁸ and the publication of quotations for securities by broker-dealers in the absence of appropriate filings by the issuer under the federal securities laws.ⁿ¹⁴⁹

Of course, states have their own rules regarding fraud by a broker-dealer outside of those under the federal Act. It has already been mentioned, for example, that a few states consider it fraudulent to offer or sell securities which are not registered or exempted by the state's Blue Sky law. Some state have a rule one step removed from this rather onerous provision. In these states it is considered a fraudulent business practice for a dealer to accept any compensation in connection with the purchase or sale of a security which is not registered or exempted.ⁿ¹⁵⁰

New York has a statutory scheme which specifically defines a number of broker-dealer practices as fraudulent. It is, for example, unlawful for a broker-dealer to intentionally trade against purchase or sale orders submitted by customers.ⁿ¹⁵¹ It is also unlawful for an insolvent broker-dealer to accept securities or money from a person ignorant of the insolvency unless such property is for liquidation of, or security for, an existing debt.ⁿ¹⁵²

Although other specific acts are condemned by statutes and regulations, it is readily apparent that such activities would properly belong within the broad antifraud provision of the Uniform Act applicable to all persons dealing in securities. In fact, the Supreme Court of Arkansas has declared that under the Uniform Act provision excessive markups in the price of securities and the churning of accounts by a broker-dealer constitute fraud.ⁿ¹⁵³

It should be emphasized that it is possible the acts described in this section as specifically prohibited by regulation would be equally fraudulent in states having no more than a general antifraud provision. The practices described are no more than examples of the many types of fraud capable of being perpetrated on the investing public. It should also be reiterated that the states may revoke, deny or suspend broker-dealer registrations for "unethical practices." A number of the activities described in this section are specifically included among the antifraud provisions prohibited by rule or statute in many states. There is little doubt they would also be considered fraudulent in most states having only the general antifraud prohibition.

[b] Investment Advisers

The provision most often enacted covering prohibited activities of investment advisers is taken from the Uniform Securities Act.ⁿ¹⁵⁴ This particular section is divided into three parts, each dealing with contemplated general practices which are deemed unlawful. The first portion of the section deals specifically with fraud, and provides:

It is unlawful for any person who receives any consideration from another person primarily for advising the other person as to the value of securities or their purchase or sale, whether through the issuance of analyses or reports or otherwise,

- (1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud the other person, or
- (2) to engage in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the other person.ⁿ¹⁵⁵

Of initial significance is the fact that this provision applies not only to "investment advisers" but to any person giving investment advice for consideration. Since there are a number of exceptions to the various statutory definitions of "investment adviser,"ⁿ¹⁵⁶ this provision has enlarged the group of persons covered to insure that there are no exceptions from the statute's antifraud provisions.ⁿ¹⁵⁷ Although a large number of states have adopted this provision substantially as recommended,ⁿ¹⁵⁸ many have changed it to make it applicable only to investment advisers, as defined under the statute.ⁿ¹⁵⁹ In one state, the statute deems it fraudulent if a person violates any provision of the blue sky law with respect to the giving of investment advice.ⁿ¹⁶⁰

A few states have supplemented the basic antifraud provision with a statement making it unlawful for an investment adviser "to engage in any act, practice, or course of business which is fraudulent, deceptive, or manipulative."ⁿ¹⁶¹ This seemingly redundant phrase has been used for the issuance of regulations prohibiting specific advertising practices by investment advisers that are deemed fraudulent, deceptive or manipulative.ⁿ¹⁶² Interestingly, these same prohibitions against deceptive advertising have been adopted by some states having the basic Uniform Act provision.ⁿ¹⁶³ In these provisions deceptive advertising is simply declared "a device, scheme or artifice to defraud,"ⁿ¹⁶⁴ or "an act, practice or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud."ⁿ¹⁶⁵

In relation to deceptive advertising, the prohibitions declare as fraudulent any advertisementⁿ¹⁶⁶ which contains a testimonial concerning the investment adviser or contains any advice, analysis, report or other service rendered by the adviser. Advertisements may not refer to past recommendations which were or would have been profitable, but they may set forth or offer a list to readers of all recommendations. Any such list must contain all the recommendations made within the immediately preceding twelve-month period. With respect to each recommendation, there must appear therein the name of the security, the date and nature of the recommendation (e.g., whether to buy, sell or hold), the market price at which the recommendation was acted upon and the market price of each security as of the most recent practicable date. In addition, the front page of any such list must contain a statement to the effect that future recommendations may not be as profitable.

The legend is to be in print or type as large as the largest print or type used in the body or text of the list. The required wording is: "It should not be assumed that recommendations made in the future will be profitable or will equal the performance of the securities in this list." The regulations also prohibit the advertiser from representing that any offered chart, graph, formula, or other device can be used by itself to determine which securities should be bought or sold. Nor may it be represented that any such chart, graph, formula or device can be used to assist in making decisions as to which securities should be bought or sold unless the difficulties and limitations in using such devices are prominently disclosed.

Investment adviser advertising may not contain a statement that any service will be furnished free unless such service is in fact free and without any condition or obligation. No statement in the advertisement may be untrue or otherwise false or misleading. Pennsylvania also disallows the advertisement from recommending the purchase or sale of any security unless it is coupled with an offer to furnish specified information about the security.ⁿ¹⁶⁷

Some states have added the following statutory prohibition to the first part of the Uniform Act's recommendation:

It is unlawful for any investment adviser, directly or indirectly, in this state:

Acting as principal for his own account, knowingly to sell any security to or purchase any security from a client for whom he is acting as investment adviser, or, acting as broker for a person other than such client, knowingly to effect any sale or purchase of any security for the account of such client, without disclosing to such client in writing before the completion of the transaction the capacity in which he is acting and obtaining the written consent of the client to such transaction.ⁿ¹⁶⁸

This provision, taken from the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940,ⁿ¹⁶⁹ was purposely omitted from the Uniform Act. In the opinion of the Act's drafters, such conduct would fall within the prohibitions of the investment adviser antifraud provision of the Uniform Act.ⁿ¹⁷⁰

Also omitted from the Uniform Act is a prohibition against an investment adviser holding himself or herself out as an "investment counsel." Under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, an investment adviser may not represent him or herself as an investment counsel unless "(1) his or its principal business consists of acting as an investment adviser, and (2) a substantial part of his or its business consists of rendering investment supervisory services."ⁿ¹⁷¹ This omission from the Uniform Act was based on two grounds. First, at the time the Act was drafted, only two states had similar provisions. Second, and perhaps more important, was the objection raised by some non-qualifying investment adviser firms that such a provision put them at a competitive disadvantage against smaller firms with a primary business of individual supervisory services.ⁿ¹⁷² Nevertheless, a few states currently prohibit the use of the term "investment counsel" unless the investment adviser is rendering, as a substantial part of his or her business, investment advisory services on the basis of the individual needs of clients.ⁿ¹⁷³

The second part of the Uniform Act's provision applies to investment advisers in particular, as opposed to those giving investment advice in general, and is related to the contents of the advisory contract executed between the investment adviser and his client. It provides that an investment advisory contract must provide in writing that:

(1) the adviser's fee will not be based on the capital gains or capital appreciation of the client's funds;ⁿ¹⁷⁴ (2) the contract may not be assigned by the adviser without the consent of the client;ⁿ¹⁷⁵ and (3) if the investment advisory firm is a partnership, the client will be notified of any change in membership within a reasonable time.ⁿ¹⁷⁶

These principles have been substantially enacted in a number of states.ⁿ¹⁷⁷

With respect to an investment adviser's compensation, the prohibition against basing the adviser's fee on capital gains or capital appreciation does not bar a contract provision "which provides for compensation based upon the total value of a fund averaged over a definite period."ⁿ¹⁷⁸ This Uniform Act provision has been extensively enacted by the states. In Illinois, the one state with an investment adviser compensation rule not based on the Uniform Act, the compensation must be "fair and reasonable and ... determined on an equitable basis adequately disclosed to each client in writing."ⁿ¹⁷⁹

California, which has substantially enacted the Uniform Act's compensation provision,ⁿ¹⁸⁰ has added a few exceptions by regulation. These exceptions make it possible for certain investment advisers to be compensated on the basis of capital gains or capital appreciation of a client's funds. The first exception is available if the conditions of Rule 205-3 under the Investment Adviser's Act of 1940 are met, including the requirement that the client be a natural person or company as defined in the regulation who has at least $750,000 under the management of an investment adviser, or who the investment adviser believes has a net worth exceeding $1,500,000 immediately prior to entering into the contract, and if the compensation formula, disclosure and arms-length transaction conditions of Rule 205-3 are met.ⁿ¹⁸¹ Compensation exceptions are also available to investment advisers contracting with most types of institutional investors.ⁿ¹⁸²

A handful of states that have enacted the Uniform Act provision have granted compensation exceptions if the investment advisory contract satisfies the exemptions under the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ¹⁸³ Pennsylvania will allow any fee arrangement permitted in the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 and any rules promulgated thereunder.ⁿ¹⁸⁴ Pennsylvania will also suspend the Uniform Act compensation rules when the investment advisory contract is with an institutional investor.

The second Uniform Act requirement for contract provisions, which makes it unlawful for an investment adviser to assign a client's contract without the client's consent, is a recognition that a person seeking investment advice is relying on the expertise of a particular adviser. An assignment of the contract deprives the client of the advice of the person on which he or she wanted to rely.

An interesting aspect of the assignment prohibition is the definition of "assignment" provided in the Uniform Act. Under the definition, an assignment will result not only when the contract is transferred or hypothecated, but also if the advisory firm is a corporation or other form of stock company and a transfer of a controlling block of the firm's outstanding voting securities by a security holder occurs. On the other hand, if the advisory firm is a partnership, the withdrawal or death of a minority of the partners or the admission of a new partner having only a minority interest does not constitute an assignment. Note, however, that under the third Uniform Act contract requirement, any change in the membership of the partnership means that the client must be notified of the same within a reasonable time.

The final prohibition under the Uniform Act section states that:

It is unlawful for any investment adviser to take or have custody of any securities or funds of any client if

- (1) the Administrator by rule prohibits custody; or
- (2) in the absence of rule, the investment adviser fails to notify the Administrator that he has or may have custody.ⁿ¹⁸⁵

Of the states enacting this provision,ⁿ¹⁸⁶ few have issued appropriate rules governing such a situation.ⁿ¹⁸⁷ It must therefore be assumed that in the states having no such regulation, possession of a client's securities or funds is permitted upon notification to the administrator. However, a state which has regulations promulgated under the Uniform Act provision prohibits investment advisers from taking custody of clients' funds or securities.ⁿ¹⁸⁸

In states with provisions that differ from the Uniform Act's recommendation, some permit an investment adviser to take possession of clients' securities or funds where the adviser is also a licensed broker-dealer.ⁿ¹⁸⁹ Others have regulations permitting investment advisers to have custody of client's securities and funds on the condition that such property is segregated by the investment adviser.ⁿ¹⁹⁰ In some states, however, the adviser need not meet the segregation requirements if he or she is also a broker-dealer.ⁿ¹⁹¹

Under the segregation rules, it is uniformly required that any client's securities held by an investment adviser be segregated and marked to identify the client having the beneficial interest therein.ⁿ¹⁹² Some states require the securities to be held in safekeeping in some place reasonably free from risk of destruction or other loss, and others require the investment adviser to comply with the requirements set forth in Rule 206(4)-2 under the Investment Adviser's Act of 1940, including that the securities are so segregated.ⁿ¹⁹³ If the property consists of funds of the client, each state, as well as the federal regulation, requires that they be deposited in one or more bank accounts containing only client's funds under the name of the investment adviser as agent or trustee for such clients. The investment adviser is then required to maintain a separate record for each such account showing the name and address of the bank for each account, the dates and amounts of deposits and withdrawals and the amount of each client's beneficial interest in the account.ⁿ¹⁹⁴

Whether the property consists of funds or securities, Rule 206(4)-2 under the federal Investment Advisers Act and some states require the investment adviser to give the client immediate written notice of the place and manner in which the property is held, and similar notice whenever there is a change in the place or manner in which it is held.ⁿ¹⁹⁵ All of these states require that a periodic report be sent to the client itemizing the funds and/or securities in possession of the investment adviser at the end of the period, and indicating all debts, credits and transactions in the client's account during the period, as does the federal regulation.ⁿ¹⁹⁶ In addition, the funds and securities are required to be periodically verified by an independent certified public accountant. A certificate of the accountant verifying the fact and nature of his or her examination is required to be filed with the respective securities administrators.ⁿ¹⁹⁷

[c] Issuers

Fraudulent acts by issuers would, of course, be subject to the general antifraud provisions of most states. However, Wisconsin has developed a series of regulations aimed specifically at issuers, which deserve separate consideration. The regulations deem it a fraudulent act for an issuer, and officers, directors or controlling persons thereof, to apply money received from the sale of securities to a use other than those specified in the prospectus offering the securities and not reasonably related to the business of the issuer as described in the prospectus.ⁿ¹⁹⁸

If the securities are registered by coordinationⁿ¹⁹⁹ or qualificationⁿ²⁰⁰ in Wisconsin, or are eligible for a non-issuer transaction exemption by virtue of the fact that they are registered under the Securities Act of 1933, or are securities exempted in non-issuer transactions pursuant to documents filed with the securities administrator, the issuer's failure to provide adequate facilities for transferring the securities either directly or through a transfer agent is deemed a "device, scheme or artifice to defraud the purchaser."ⁿ²⁰¹

States have addressed particular corporate acts or transactions in terms of antifraud prohibitions. A reverse stock split by a publicly held corporation seeking to go private, for example, can be unfair to stockholders. To control the possible damage to security holders, Wisconsin has promulgated a regulation which makes issuers seeking to repurchase their own equity securities meet fairly stringent standards if the result or intended result of the repurchase plan is to:

- (1) cause the securities to be delisted from a national securities exchange or the Nasdaq Stock Market;
- (2) cause the securities to be eligible for registration termination or cessation of reporting requirements under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; or
- (3) cause the securities to be no longer registered under the Wisconsin Blue Sky law.ⁿ²⁰²

The regulation is aimed at issuers who have, or have had, a class of equity securities registered under the Wisconsin Blue Sky law or Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, when one hundred or more record holders of such securities reside in Wisconsin, and such one hundred shareholders are equivalent to twenty per cent or more of the total number of shareholders of the same class of the issuer.ⁿ²⁰³ Issuers meeting this description who, through themselves or their affiliates,ⁿ²⁰⁴ are purchasing their securities for the purpose of "going private," must meet certain tests laid down by the securities administrator.

Basically, these tests require that the transactions be fair to the entire class of the security holders,ⁿ²⁰⁵ and contain the stipulation that security holders not affiliated with the issuer be treated not less favorably than those who are affiliated. Subject to notice requirements to shareholders and the securities administrators, going private transactions will be permitted if not disallowed by the administrator as fraudulent.

The Wisconsin approach to antifraud regulation in this area is not precisely aimed at issuers, but rather is directed to persons distributing, as a stock dividend, securities of another issuer. Unless the securities are registered under the Wisconsin Securities Law or the Securities Act of 1933, it is deemed a "device, scheme or artifice to defraud" the purchasers of the securities in broker-dealer transactions if the issuer of the distributed securities was organized, or the securities were acquired, by the distributor or controlling person thereof, strictly for the purpose of distribution or in connection with such a distribution.ⁿ²⁰⁶ It is equally fraudulent if the securities distributed as the stock dividend are of an issuer which has nominal assets or income at the time of the distribution.ⁿ²⁰⁷ In either case, the distribution is fraudulent only if the distributor has reason to believe that the distributed securities will be followed by transactions in such securities that are executed through broker-dealers. The obvious purpose of this regulation is to prevent unregistered securities given as a stock dividend from being offered to the public.

The states' ability, and flexibility, in defining acts and practices of issuers and intermediaries as fraudulent or deceptive for purposes of antifraud prohibitions are well illustrated in these examples of Wisconsin provisions. Antifraud protections under state securities laws have always been more directed at acts and practices than the content of disclosure documents or the dissemination of information generally. That, of course, is the essence of "merit" regulation of securities offerings which historically characterized state regulation of issuers in the distribution of securities, and which is thoroughly considered elsewhere in this treatise.ⁿ²⁰⁸ Broad approaches to defining fraud or fraudulent acts and practices as applicable to issuers produced tension in increasingly national and global financial markets, and ultimately led to the enactment of the National Securities Market Improvements Act (NSMIA), by which some aspects of state investor protection authority were preempted. The particular impact of NSMIA on state antifraud authority is discussed later in this chapter.ⁿ²⁰⁹ It remains certain, however, that "fraud" under state Blue Sky laws is still an expansive concept by which states, consistent with constitutional and jurisdictional limits, address the conduct and affairs of issuers and intermediaries.

[d] Senior-Specific Acts and Practices

Ongoing efforts by state regulators have been aimed at expanding protections under Blue Sky laws in order to protect seniors from investment fraud. As the population ages, seniors have increasingly been the targets of investment-related fraud and abuse. Among state securities regulators, regulatory initiatives aimed at specific acts and practices targeting seniors include the use of senior-specific professional designations, which create an impression that the salesperson has special qualifications or education in providing financial planning and other financial services to senior investors. Regulators have also placed special emphasis on sales of annuity contracts to seniors, and suitability considerations in particular. Legislation in Florida and Texas is indicative of the national trend to bring new discipline to the offer and sale of these products. All of these initiatives are discussed further below.

[i] Senior Certifications and Professional Designations

In March 2008, the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) adopted its Model Rule on the Use of Senior-Specific Certifications and Professional Designations.ⁿ²¹⁰ The Model Rule prohibits the misleading use by any person of senior and retiree designations, while also providing a means by which state regulators may recognize the use of certain designations that have actually been accredited. Specifically, under the Model Rule, the use of a senior-specific certification or designation in connection with the offer or sale of securities, or in advising as to the purchase or sale of securities that indicates or implies that the user has special certification or training in advising or servicing senior citizens or retirees, in such a way that misleads any person. Among specific certifications or professional designations, the Model Act prohibits:

- Use of a certification or professional designation by a person who has not actually earned or is otherwise ineligible to use such certification or designation;
- Use of a nonexistent or self-conferred certification or professional designation; and
- Use of a certification or professional designation that indicates or implies a level of occupational qualifications obtained through education, training, or experience that the person using the certification or professional designation does not have.ⁿ²¹¹

The Model Rule also prohibits the use of any certification or professional designation that was obtained from a designating or certifying organization that fails to meet certain standards. For example, an organization that does not have "reasonable standards or procedures for assuring the competency of its designees or certificants" does not qualify.ⁿ²¹² Also, there must be reasonable standards and procedures for monitoring and disciplining designees, and requiring their involvement in continuing education. The Model Rule does not, however, provide any specific guidance concerning the standards and procedure in each of these areas that may suffice. However, there is a rebuttable presumption in the Model Rule that a designating or certifying organization will not be disqualified when it has been accredited by:

- The American National Standards Institute; or
- The National Commission for Certifying Agencies; or
- An organization that is on the U.S. Department of Education list of "Accrediting Agencies Recognized for Title IV Purposes," and the designation or credential issued by it does not primarily apply to sales and/or marketing.ⁿ²¹³

The NASAA Model Rule is the basis for a senior-specific certifications and professional designations rule adopted in 2008 in Alabama, Virginia, and Washington. It is also the basis for senior-specific investor protection legislation enacted in 2008 in California and New Hampshire. Prior to the NASAA Model Rule, Massachusetts and Nebraska had adopted their own positions dealing with senior-specific certifications and designations.ⁿ²¹⁴ With the NASAA Model Rule now available as a straightforward approach to concerns over senior-specific designations and certifications, it is likely that it will be adopted by legislation or regulation in many more states.

[ii] Marketing and Suitability

State securities regulators, and indeed regulators generally, are aggressively pursuing what are considered to be abusive sales and marketing practices targeting seniors. The concern is fueled by demographics, and the fact that the number of Americans who are at or nearing retirement age is growing at an unprecedented pace. U.S. Census data indicate that the population aged 65 years and older is expected to double over the next 25 years, and that by 2030 nearly one out of every five Americans will be 65 years old or older. The data also indicate that those who are 85 years old and older are the fastest growing segment of the U.S. population.ⁿ²¹⁵ It is also the case that fewer and fewer retirees can rely on traditional company pension plans to provide for a meaningful portion of their retirement needs.

For senior investors, securities regulators place most of their focus on investor suitability. For example, FINRA--the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority--cautioned its member firms:

As investors age, their investment time horizons, goals, risk tolerance and tax status may change. Liquidity often takes on added importance. And, depending on their particular circumstances, seniors and retirees may have less tolerance for certain types of risk than other investors. For example, retirees living solely on fixed incomes may be more vulnerable to inflation risk than those still in the workforce, depending on the number of years those retirees are likely to rely on fixed incomes. Likewise, investors whose investment time horizons afford less time or opportunity to recover investment losses may be disproportionately affected by market fluctuations.ⁿ²¹⁶

A point underscored by FINRA is that these investors must fully understand the products recommended to them, and they must be given a fair and balanced picture of the risks, costs, and benefits associated with the product transactions that are recommended to them.ⁿ²¹⁷ Particular recommendations to seniors targeted by FINRA examiners are:

- Products that have withdrawal penalties or otherwise lack liquidity, such as deferred variable annuities, equity indexed annuities, some real estate investments, and limited partnerships;
- Variable life settlements;

- Complex structured products, such as collateralized debt obligations (CDOs);
- Mortgaging home equity for investment purposes; and
- Using retirement savings, including early withdrawals from IRAs, to invest in high risk investments.ⁿ²¹⁸

The particular focus on suitability of investment recommendations to seniors has increasingly been on the sale of annuity products, which involve high commissions that may drive sales rather than investor suitability. Particular suitability concerns for annuities include switching, in which a salesperson switches the customer's annuity, receives another commission, and may cause the customer to pay early liquidation penalties. Another suitability concern involves placing annuities in tax-deferred accounts such as individual retirement accounts. Other suitability concerns involve carrying costs, holding periods, and allocations in variable annuity sub-accounts.

In 2007, Texas enacted legislation requiring the application of suitability requirements to all individually recommended annuity sales, and which requires specific disclosures in annuity sales. Section 1115.051 of the Texas Insurance Codeⁿ²¹⁹ provides, among other things, that before the execution of a purchase or exchange of an annuity resulting from a recommendation, and agent, or the insurer if an agent is not involved, must make reasonable efforts to obtain information from the consumer as to financial status, tax status, and investment objectives, along with such other relevant information used or considered to be reasonable in making the recommendation.ⁿ²²⁰ This requirement applies to any recommendation to purchase or exchange an annuity made to a consumer by an agent or insurer, and which results in the recommended purchase or exchange of the annuity. In addition, in making a recommendation the agent or insurer must have reasonable grounds for believing the recommendation is suitable based on facts disclosed by the consumer regarding investments and other insurance products, and financial situation and needs.ⁿ²²¹

By the same legislative initiative, Texas also established disclosure and acknowledgment requirements applicable to the sale of annuity contracts as well as all insurance products. Under these provisions, if a prospective purchaser has existing policies or contracts, the agent must present the applicant with a required notice approved by the Insurance Commissioner that lists all the life insurance policies and annuities the applicant proposes replacing, the name of the insured or annuitant, and whether that policy will be used as a financing source for the new policy or annuity contract. The applicant and agent both must sign the notice and attest that the notice was read aloud to the applicant or the applicant waived reading. The notice must be left with the applicant. If the notice is presented to the applicant via the Internet, the insurer must mail the applicant a copy of the notice within three business days of receiving the application. The agent must also leave with the applicant all sales materials used in presenting the new life insurance policy or annuity.ⁿ²²²

At the national level, FINRA adopted a specific variable annuity sales rule, which became effective in May 2008. FINRA Conduct Rule 2821ⁿ²²³ creates recommendation requirements (including a suitability obligation), principal review and approval requirements, and supervisory and training requirements tailored specifically to transactions in deferred variable annuities. The FINRA rule requires that a registered representative have a reasonable basis to believe that the customer would benefit from certain features of deferred variable annuities, such as tax-deferred growth, annuitization, or a death or living benefit. Representatives also must have a reasonable basis to believe that the customer has been informed, in general terms, of the material features of a deferred variable annuity, such as potential surrender period and surrender charge, potential tax penalty mortality and expense fees, charges for and features of enhanced riders, insurance and investment components, and market risk.

In its legislation addressing suitability in the sale of annuities, Texas expressly provided that compliance with the FINRA conduct rules relating to suitability will satisfy the requirements applicable to recommendations of variable annuities in that state.ⁿ²²⁴ This approach is likely to be followed in other states.

Focusing more generally on senior-specific concerns, in May 2006, the SEC and the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) announced a coordinated national initiative designed to protect seniors from investment fraud and sales of unsuitable securities. The combined initiative includes three components: active investor education and outreach to seniors and those nearing retirement age; targeted examinations to detect abusive sales tactics aimed at seniors; and aggressive enforcement of securities laws in cases of fraud against seniors. An early coordinated initiative involved examinations of broker-dealers, investment advisers and other financial services firms that offer so-called "free lunch" sales seminars. These seminars are widely offered by financial services firms seeking to sell financial products, and they often include a free meal for attendees. The purpose of the examinations was to review firms that offer sales seminars targeted to seniors and retirees for compliance with securities laws and rules designed to protect investors

The combined regulatory examinations uncovered a number of major concerns leading to the conclusions that firms should redouble efforts to ensure that the investment recommendations they make to seniors are suitable in light of the particular customer's investment objectives. They were particularly concerned that senior investors should understand that these are sales seminars--that is, they are intended to result in the sales of financial products, and they may be sponsored by an undisclosed company with a financial interest in product sales. As a result of the examinations carried out primarily by state securities regulators, a significant number of firms received deficiency letters or letters of caution that outlined apparent rule violations and deficiencies and requested that the firms examined take corrective actions. A report issued based on these examinations²²⁵ includes a list of supervisory practices that were identified during examinations and that appeared to be effective, and which will assist firms going forward, but it also made clear that regulators participating in these examinations will continue to focus examination, enforcement, and regulatory efforts on the use of sales seminars targeted to seniors.

[4] Other Specific Prohibitions

With the focus on fraudulent and abusive practices that operate in a manner tantamount to fraud from the perspective of investors who are the intended beneficiaries of Blue Sky Law protections, there are certain other acts and conduct that have been addressed either directly as prohibited conduct or indirectly as fraudulent under Blue Sky laws. Securities market manipulation and insider trading, for example, have developed as a matter of federal securities law, and may not immediately be seen as falling within the ambit of Blue Sky laws that are primarily directed at the offer and sale of securities in the distribution setting. On the other hand, to the extent that such conduct is carried out so as to be directly connected to securities transactions of others who are defrauded in terms of the value of what they buy or sell; or where there is a cognizable legal duty owed to market participants, such conduct may fall within general antifraud provisions in Blue Sky laws or, as seen below, may be addressed more specifically.

[a] Market Manipulation

Although the original Uniform Act does not specifically prohibit it, the practice of market manipulation is deemed fraudulent and unlawful in a number of states. In New Hampshire, for example:

It is unlawful for any person to effect any transaction in, or to induce the purchase or sale of any security by means of any manipulative, deceptive, or otherwise fraudulent device or contrivance, including any fictitious quotation. The terms "manipulative, deceptive, or otherwise fraudulent device or contrivance" shall include, but shall not be limited to, the following practices:

I. Effecting any transaction in a security which involves no change in the beneficial ownership thereof, or entering any order or orders for the purchase or sale of any security with the knowledge that an order or orders of substantially the same size, at substantially the same time, and at substantially the same price, for the sale or purchase of the security, have been or will be entered by or for the same or affiliated persons, for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in the security or a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market for the security;

II. Effecting, alone or with one or more other persons, a series of transactions in any security creating actual or apparent active trading in the security or raising or depressing the price of the security for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of the security by others; or

III. Inducing the purchase or sale of any security by the circulation or dissemination of information to the effect that the price of the security will or is likely to rise or fall because or [sic] market operations of any one or more persons conducted for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of the security, if he is selling or offering to sell, or purchasing or offering to purchase the security or is receiving a consideration directly or indirectly, from any such person.ⁿ²²⁶

The Revised Uniform Act does expressly prohibit market manipulation.ⁿ²²⁷ A specific provision addressing market manipulation was not, however, carried into the 2002 Uniform Act. The drafters of the 2002 Uniform Act were satisfied that the general antifraud provision in section 501 of the Act, like SEC Rule 10b-5 under the federal Securities Exchange Act, reaches market manipulation, and that there was no reason to include the Revised Uniform Act provision in the new Act.ⁿ²²⁸

As indicated, market manipulation involves conduct designed to create the appearance of an active market in particular securities for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of the securities by others.ⁿ²²⁹ Market manipulation can result in the rise or fall of the price of the securities, thereby inducing others to buy or sell the security. Such practices are prohibited when they are for purposes of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in any security or a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market for any security. Specific prohibited practices include security transactions where there is no change in beneficial ownership ("wash sales"), and the placing of orders for the purchase or sale of securities with the knowledge that an opposite order at approximately the same time and same price will be placed by the same or affiliated persons ("matched orders"). California addresses such conduct explicitly by making it unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, in the state:

(a) For the Purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in any security or a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market for any security, (1) to effect any transaction in a security which involves no change in the beneficial ownership thereof, or (2) to enter an order or orders for the purchase of any security with the knowledge that an order or orders of substantially the same size, at substantially the same time and at substantially the same price, for the sale of any such security, has been or will be entered by or for the same or different parties, or (3) to enter an order or orders for the sale of any security with the knowledge that an order or orders of substantially the same size, at substantially the same time and at substantially the same price, for the purchase of any such security, has been entered or will be entered by or for the same or different parties.

(b) To effect, alone or with one or more persons, a series of transactions in any security creating actual or apparent active trading in such security or raising or depressing the price of such security, for the purpose of inducing the purchase or sale of such security by others.ⁿ²³⁰

Market manipulative acts and conduct need not fit within one of the specific categories identified in statutes. Some states effectively address market manipulation in terms of fictitious or pretended purchases or sales of securities in general antifraud provisions.ⁿ²³¹

"Touting" is another form of market manipulation and is addressed as actionable fraud under general antifraud provisions since it involves dissemination of false or misleading information.

Some of the more elaborate statutes also make it unlawful to tout a market manipulation, that is to say it is unlawful for a person who has knowledge of a market manipulation to induce others to buy or sell a security by informing them that the price is likely to rise or fall because of the manipulation.ⁿ²³² However, in New Hampshire the circulation or dissemination of such information is unlawful only when the person making the inducement "is selling or offering to sell or purchasing or offering to purchase the security or is receiving a consideration, directly or indirectly, from any such person." So called pump-and-dump schemes also fall within the ambit of market manipulation. In these schemes false or misleading information is disseminated to the marketplace with the intention of causing the market price to rise, or be driven down, to an artificial level, at which time the perpetrators "dump" their shares in the marketplace and realize substantial gains on holdings or short positions while other holders suffer as the share price drops to reflect true value. Pump-and-dump schemes may also be executed using other manipulative activities in combination with the dissemination of false or misleading information.ⁿ²³³

Virtually every manipulation case involves an antifraud violation. Seldom do the persons engaged in the manipulation disclose the existence of their scheme. As a practical matter, however, few state regulatory agencies possess sufficient investigative and prosecutorial resources to undertake market manipulation cases. These cases are left to the Securities and Exchange Commission for handling under the provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. In a few instances the state securities regulators have attempted, through the North American Securities Administrators Association and a liberal interpretation of section 412(b) of the Uniform Act, to pool their resources for the purpose of reviewing the multi-state activities of selected broker-dealers. The results of these joint state investigative efforts have not proven entirely successful, and some joint efforts have actually led to orders limiting state securities regulatory agencies' ability to share information.ⁿ²³⁴ The newly aggressive state and multi-state efforts directed at the integrity of securities markets and market-related conduct in general, as well evidenced by the 2003 global settlement of market analyst issues, in which New York and other state regulators played the prominent role, indicates, however, that joint, market-directed efforts can, and will, result in significantly broader applications of market-related antifraud provisions in state Blue Sky laws.

[b] Insider Trading

California,ⁿ²³⁵ New Mexico,ⁿ²³⁶ and Pennsylvanianⁿ²³⁷ have statutory sanctions against insider trading. Others address it under general antifraud provisions. By rule in Minnesota, for example, it is a "fraudulent or deceptive device or contrivance" for any person to:

[U]se information about an issuer, learned from the issuer's officers, directors, or key employees, which is not generally available to the public and which would significantly affect the market price of the issuer's securities for personal benefit, directly or indirectly, in the offer, sale or purchase of the issuer's securities.ⁿ²³⁸

All of these provisions prohibit insider trading by officers, directors, and other persons having a relationship with the issuer through which inside material information may be obtained. As to what constitutes inside information, this too is spelled out in the statutes. It must have the potential to significantly affect the market or the security price; and it must be known by the insider to be generally unavailable to the public. However, there is no prohibition against trading with a person who is reasonably believed to be in possession of the same information.

Although the Uniform Act does not contain a provision specifically prohibiting insider trading, it should be noted that the Act's general antifraud provision is substantially the same as Rule 10b-5, the general antifraud rule under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.ⁿ²³⁹ Rule 10b-5 has been broadly interpreted as being an impediment against the use of inside information in a variety of situations involving the sale or purchase of securities.ⁿ²⁴⁰ For example, it has been interpreted to prohibit the use of inside information by majority shareholders to the detriment of minority stockholders,ⁿ²⁴¹ a particular viewpoint adopted by the courts of one state as being a valid interpretation of the enacted Uniform Act antifraud provision.ⁿ²⁴²

[c] False or Misleading Statements In Filed Documents

Two states explicitly deem it a fraudulent practice to file documents with the state securities administrator containing false or misleading statements.ⁿ²⁴³ Under the Uniform Act:

It is unlawful for any person to make or cause to be made, in any document filed with the Administrator or in any proceeding under this act, any statement which is, at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it is made, false or misleading in any material respect.ⁿ²⁴⁴

In states that have substantially enacted this recommended provisionⁿ²⁴⁵ such acts are unlawful without necessarily being fraudulent. The same is true in a number of states that have enacted variations of the Uniform Act provision.ⁿ²⁴⁶ As a practical matter, whether such acts are declared fraudulent or unlawful, or whether the provision adopted is the Uniform Act's or some derivation thereof, the effect of these statutes is the same.

[d] Fraudulent Misrepresentation Regarding Registration or Exemption

A final example of a specific act involving fraudulent acts or omissions being deemed unlawful is the Uniform Act prohibition against fraudulent representations concerning the registration of securities.ⁿ²⁴⁷ Substantially enacted in most states, this provision prohibits a person from representing that the securities administrator has passed upon the merits of the securities offered for sale when the only basis for such a representation is the fact that the security has been registered or is subject to an exemption.ⁿ²⁴⁸ A representation by a seller of securities that registration of the offered securities is not required when no exemption from registration is available or that the offered securities have been registered when they have not, may result in seller liability under the antifraud provisions of the Uniform Act.

[I]n a statute which has well-developed provisions on registration of broker-dealers and securities, it is both artificial and pointless to say that every violation is also a "fraud." Something does not have to be fraudulent to be unlawful, and calling conduct "fraudulent" does not make it any more unlawful.

Rev. Unif. Sec. Act § 501 simply states: "a person may not ..." engage in the listed acts.

criminal sanctions of New York's Martin Act to insider trading, the Criminal Court of the City of New York held that Section 352(c) was applicable to a lawyer who, in breaching his fiduciary obligation, used confidential information about pending corporate takeovers to trade in shares of:

- (1) clients of his law firm,
- (2) targets his law firm's clients intended to acquire, and
- (3) an issuer in which a client of his law firm intended to liquidate its substantial investment.

The court held that Section 352(c) applied to insider trading and that criminal enforcement of this provision does not require a finding of privity between the buyers and sellers of securities. The court, in dicta, stated that proof of intentional or knowledgeable conduct on the part of the defendant rather than scienter is the standard of proof that would be required. *See also People v. Those claims had been dismissed on the identical grounds as had been applied to dismiss common law fraud claims. The Supreme Court concluded that dismissal of the common law fraud claim was inappropriate in light of certain fact discrepancies that should have been considered in the trial court. The same rationale was adopted and applied by the Court to vacate the dismissal of the Idaho Securities Act claim, with the Court noting that the same reasons would apply to either claim.

excluding a bond counsel or an underwriter.) The provision is retroactive to any action not final before July 27, 1985. For example, Broker-dealer XYZ borrows money to fulfill the escrow requirements in an "all or none" or "part or none" offering and thereby obtains the release of the escrowed investor funds. Through this device the broker-dealer receives a commission, the issuer obtains the investor's funds and the investors' expectation of the return of their escrowed funds is extinguished. In these cases the broker-dealer is usually affiliated with the issuer and expects to repay the loan with the proceeds of the recently released investor funds. The scheme may also involve the use of purchases through nominee accounts or purchases by persons with whom the issuer or the broker-dealer has agreed to guarantee against loss which devices are designed to create the appearance of a successful offering.

Act § 503, which is substantially similar to the 1956 Act provision, except that it is specifically applicable to investment advisers or persons who represent them in that capacity. Rev. Unif. Sec. The definition excludes employees of investment advisers; depository institutions; lawyers, accountants, engineers or teachers who offer advice incidentally to the practice of their profession; broker-dealers in the same circumstances if they receive no special compensation; specified media professionals if the information is made available to the general public and is not advice geared to the specific investment situation for each client; a person advising with regard to exempt securities only and others the state Administrator may designate.

Using a purported credential or professional designation that indicates or implies that a broker-dealer agent has special certification or training in advising or servicing senior investors, unless such credential or professional designation has been accredited by an accreditation organization recognized by the Secretary by rule or order. For the purposes of this subsection 12.204(2)(i), the term "senior investor" shall include a person 65 years of age or older.

Nebraska has done the same by an Interpretive Opinion that recognizes particular designations or certifications as being permitted, but as to any others declares that their use on business cards, stationery or advertising materials will be considered a violation of the Securities Act of Nebraska, see Interpretive Opinion No. 26, "Use of Certifications and Designations In Advertising by Investment Adviser Representatives and Broker-Dealer Agents" (Dept. (2) effect a transaction in a security which involves no change in the beneficial ownership of the security for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security;

(3) enter an order for the purchase of a security with the knowledge that an order of substantially the same size, and at substantially the same time and price for the sale of the security has been, or will be entered by or for the same, or affiliated, person for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security;

(4) enter an order for the sale of a security with the knowledge that an order of substantially the same size, and at substantially the same time and price for the purchase of the security has been, or will be entered by or for the same, or affiliated, person for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security;

(5) employ any other deceptive or fraudulent device, scheme or artifice to manipulate the market in a security.

The Official Comment observes that although the coverage of the general antifraud section of the Revised Act sec is comprehensive, section 502 was been added specifically to delineate the elements of market manipulation, but with a focus on remedies and sanctions with respect to securities primarily of an intrastate nature.

(n230)Footnote 230. Cal. Corp. Code § 25400. Cal. Corp. Code § 25500 creates a remedy for any person who purchases or sells a security at a price which was affected by such market manipulation. The California Supreme Court has held that the remedy is available to the general investing public, and that the "in this state" language of § 25400 does not preclude out-of-state purchasers and sellers of securities the price of which has been affected by manipulative activities from invoking it. (n241)Footnote 241. Speed v. Transamerica Corp., 99 F. Supp. 808 (D. Del. 1951) :

The rule is clear. It is unlawful for an insider, such as a majority stockholder, to purchase the stock of minority stockholders without disclosing material facts affecting the value of the stock, known to the majority stockholder by virtue of his inside position but not known to the selling minority stockholders, which information would have affected the judgment of the sellers. The duty of disclosure stems from the necessity of preventing a corporate insider from utilizing his position to take unfair advantage of the uninformed minority stockholder. It is an attempt to provide some degree of equalization of bargaining position in order that the minority may exercise an informed judgment in any such transaction. Some courts have called this a fiduciary duty while others state it as a duty imposed by the "special circumstances." One of the primary purposes of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 ... was to outlaw the use of inside information by corporate officers and principal stockholders for their financial advantage to the detriment of uninformed public security holders. 99 F. CHAPTER 13 Fraud and Prohibited Practices

§ 13.03 Liability for Blue Sky Violationsⁿ¹

[1] Scope of Liability--Generally

Liability under Blue Sky laws is most often considered in terms of the scope of private remedies, which generally address specific categories of persons who may be held liable in actions. Thus, under Section 410 of the Uniform Securities Act, the purchaser may sue the immediate seller of the security and all who directly or indirectly control that seller. A number of courts have defined as "sellers" persons who are a substantial factor in the sale or materially aid the sale, and these same notions have been typically applied to the scope of administrative enforcement authority. The Arizona Corporation Commission, for example, found that even though an insurance salesman was not registered as a securities dealer in the state of Arizona, his actions in concert with those of a broker-dealer require a finding that the insurance salesman was acting as an agent of the broker dealer, and therefore should be subject to penalties associated with the fraudulent sale of securities under the Arizona Blue Sky Law.ⁿ²

Commonly, civil liability under Blue Sky Laws extends to five categories of persons beyond the primary violator: (1) each person who directly or indirectly controls a person liable under the relevant provisions; (2) each partner, officer, or director of the person; (3) each person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions; (4) each employee of a person who materially aids in the conduct creating liability; and (5) each broker-dealer or agent who materially aids in the conduct. Only the latter two categories require actual facilitative participation in a transaction. Partners, officers, directors or controlling persons need not aid or participate to be liable.ⁿ³

However, although "control persons"ⁿ⁴ and others may be liable without reference to any participation in the sale, they commonly have the defense that they did not know of the fraud, and exercising reasonable care, could not have known of it.ⁿ⁵ The 2002 Uniform Securities Act amalgamates all common provisions for extending liability beyond primary violators under the heading "Joint and Several Liability."ⁿ⁶ The categories include control persons; executive officers and directors; persons employed or associated with a primary violator and who materially aid the conduct; as well as broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers or investment adviser representatives who materially aid the conduct giving rise to liability. The 2002 Uniform Act includes a reasonable care defense for each of these categories.ⁿ⁷ Providing for a reasonable care defense operates to establish a statutory standard for liability applicable to secondary actors. It has always been a part of the Uniform Act with regard to the liability of "non-sellers."

Secondary liability language in many Blue Sky Laws is phrased in terms of materially aiding or participating in a violation.ⁿ⁸ None, however, expressly addresses aiding and abetting liability, although in practical terms there may be no significant difference. Aiding and abetting, however, is a secondary liability theory derived from common law to the extent it is applicable in state securities law settings, and state courts differ in determining whether it should be available. This is particularly true in the wake of the United States Supreme Court decision in Central Bank of Denver, N.A. v. First Interstate Bank of Denver,ⁿ⁹ in which the Court held that in a private action brought under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and SEC Rule 10b-5, liability may not be based on aiding and abetting. Blue Sky Law antifraud provisions are based in large part on SEC Rule 10b-5, and thus the Central Bank holding carries considerable weight in determining the scope of civil liability for secondary actors when it is not clear that one of the specific secondary actor liability provisions in a state statute applies. State courts have differed in approaching aiding and abetting liability claims. In Grubaugh v. DeCosta ⁿ¹⁰ an Arizona appeals court concluded that in spite of Central Bank a private claim for aiding and abetting under the Arizona Securities Act should be allowed because Arizona courts have consistently viewed the state securities law as imposing broader liability than exists under the federal securities laws, and for that reason Central Bank should not be persuasive in limiting any liability.ⁿ¹¹ On the other hand, in Kamen v. Lindly ⁿ¹² a California court rejected a broad aiding and abetting claim for fraud that would be made in addition to other express secondary liability provisions. Because the California statute contains other secondary provisions, said the Court, the legislature was well able to do so with respect to liability for false and misleading statements in the inducement to purchase or sell securities if that was intended. The Supreme Court of South Carolina came to the same conclusion that an aiding and abetting claim for fraud was foreclosed because the South Carolina Uniform Securities Act expressly provided that although the rights and remedies provided in the Act are in addition to any other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity, the Act did not create any new causes of action not specified. Because a private plaintiff could not maintain an aiding and abetting claim under section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 of the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the claim would not be allowed under the Blue Sky law. An important element in the Court's decision, however, was the fact that a defrauded plaintiff was not without a remedy in the statute against one who materially aids another in the commission of securities fraud.ⁿ¹³

Under the original Uniform Securities Act, and in several non-Uniform Act states as well, those who are culpable in violations of antifraud provisions answer only to defrauded buyers of securities. Section 410(a)(2) of the Uniform Act provides only for liability of a seller to the person buying the security from that seller. Drafters of the original Uniform Act saw no need to provide for civil liability of buyers for violation of section 101--the general antifraud provision.ⁿ¹⁴ A majority of the states follow the approach of the original Uniform Act and provide a private civil remedy only to defrauded purchasers.ⁿ¹⁵ Some states, however, permit civil actions by anyone defrauded in a securities transaction: buyer or seller,ⁿ¹⁶

In New York, the Martin Act contains no provision for a private civil remedy for either a buyer or seller of securities.ⁿ¹⁷ and this is the approach taken by the 2002 Uniform Securities Act. The 2002 Uniform Act contains express civil remedies for both defrauded purchasers and sellers of securities.ⁿ¹⁸

As discussed earlier, buyers of securities seeking recovery under section 410 of the Uniform Securities Act, or its equivalent in their state, have a right of action against the immediate seller and every person who directly or indirectly controls that seller. In most cases the identity of the seller is readily ascertainable because he or she is the person who sold the securities to the buyer. In some states a right of action, whether for fraud, failure to register securities or the failure to obtain a proper license is limited to the person in privity with the buyer.ⁿ¹⁹ However, in these states it is common for courts, using an agency theory, to find an issuer liable for its agents' sales.

Secondary liability in these instances is based upon a party's relationship to the seller.ⁿ²⁰ When attempting to determine whether a party is a seller, some state courts have transposed onto Section 410 the federal court test adopted in Hill York Corp. v. American International Franchises, Inc.,ⁿ²¹ the so called "but for," or "substantial factor" or "substantial contributive factor" test.ⁿ²² While some secondarily liable persons would also be liable as sellers using this approach, not all secondarily liable parties would necessarily be sellers.ⁿ²³ An increasing number of states, however, have refined the somewhat unwieldy Hill York substantial factor test in favor of the broader interpretation found under the

"materially aided" standard.ⁿ²⁴

The difference between the two tests lies in the scope of their coverage. The substantial contributive factor in the sale test (the Hill York "but for" rule) focuses upon whether the inquiry to the plaintiff flowed directly and proximately from the actions of the person sought to be held liable. The "materially aids" in the sale test holds that a defendant need not be a substantial factor in the sale to plaintiff to have materially aided the sale.ⁿ²⁵

[2] "Control Person" Liability

Section 410(b) of the original Uniform Act imposes secondary liability upon control persons-partners, officers, and directors -without regard to whether they actually participate in a sale. "Control person" liability is the most frequently asserted basis for secondary liability under Blue Sky Laws. These provisions do not include any actual culpability requirement. Control person liability is, on its face, a status-based liability. Control persons are presumed to be so closely connected with a seller that they owe a duty of care to the buyer to prevent violations of the state securities law. To this end, Section 410(b) and most control person provisions in Blue Sky Laws generally, afford them an affirmative defense in fraud cases that they did not know and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known of the basis of the alleged fraud.ⁿ²⁶ It is not clear, however, whether a title alone requires passive partners or outside directors, for example, to assert the affirmative defense to Section 410(b) civil liability, or whether actual control over the seller in regard to the violation is required. The central question is whether the control person must possess the necessary mental culpability by either knowing, or failing to know by reason of recklessness or negligence, of the alleged wrongdoing.ⁿ²⁷

Arizona courts have answered the question with a strongly worded rejection of the argument that culpable participation in a fraud is required for control person liability: In Eastern Vanguard Forex, Ltd. v. Arizona Corporation Commission ⁿ²⁸ the court affirmed an administrative order that certain of the plaintiff corporate officers were liable under the control person liability provision of the Arizona Securities Act. The court declared:

As did the Commission, we reject the "actual participation" requirement as "too restrictive to guard the public interest as directed by our state legislature ..." First, § 44-1999(B) imposes presumptive liability for "every person who, directly or indirectly, controls any person liable for a violation of §§ 44-1991 or 44-1992" The plain language of the statute does not support a requirement that a "controlling person" must have actually participated in the specific action upon which the securities violation is based. Second, interpreting § 44-1999(B) to require "actual participation" in the underlying conduct would frustrate the intent behind the creation of controlling person liability: to impose accountability on those actors who had the authority to control primary violators but were not legally liable under extant legal principles.ⁿ²⁹

In Semrad v. Edina Realty, Inc., ⁿ³⁰ on the other hand, a Minnesota appellate court rejected any per se rule as to control person liability. That court instead elected to adopt a test articulated by a federal district court that rejected a culpable participation requirement, but nevertheless was based on actual participation by a control person to the extent of actually exercising control over the violator in general, and having the power to control the particular activity at issue:

[Plaintiff] must establish, first, that the defendant ... actually participated in the (i.e., exercised control over) the operations of the [violation] in general; then he must prove that the defendant possessed the power to control the specific transaction or activity upon which the primary violation is predicated, but he need not prove that the this latter power was exercised.ⁿ³¹

As illustrated by Semrad, an individual may be liable for fraud as a control person if she has either the power to control, whether or not exercised, or actual control.ⁿ³² Further, the control required to impose liability may be indirect as well as direct, and it is not limited to stock ownership or immediate managerial authority.ⁿ³³ More than one person can control a corporation.ⁿ³⁴ Persons acting together for a common purpose with sufficient power in the aggregate to be considered a controlling person will be deemed members of a controlling group. As a consequence, each group member is treated as a controlling person. Directors and officers, for example, would normally constitute a controlling group.ⁿ³⁵

While a majority shareholder might as a matter of law be held to "control" a corporation regardless of actual participation in management decisions and the specific transaction in question, the absence of a substantial ownership of shares does not foreclose liability as a controlling person.ⁿ³⁶ An attorney, for example, could be found to be a controlling person even though she is not the owner of a substantial number of shares of the corporation violating the securities laws.ⁿ³⁷ The issue is whether there is control in fact. In Felts v. National Account Systems Association, Inc.,ⁿ³⁸ an attorney who had no direct contact with the purchasers was held to have been a control person of the corporation because of his rendering legal services to the issuer and allowing his name to be used as "president" of the corporation when he in fact performed no management functions.ⁿ³⁹

Clearly, the issue of "control" is a complex fact question which requires an examination of the relationships of the various alleged "controlling persons" to the person or entity which actually engaged in the sale of securities. A director, for example, without any effective day-to-day control and without knowledge is not likely to be liable as a controlling person.ⁿ⁴⁰ However, as discussed earlier with regard to Arizona, where there is control there may be presumptive liability. Section 410(b) of the Uniform Act imposes liability on control persons, partners, and directors without regard to whether they actively participate in a sale. That is the case with the 2002 Uniform Act as well. There is ample support for the proposition that merely by holding a position of actual influence, officers, directors and controlling shareholders owe a duty to ensure compliance with securities laws, and will not escape control person liability for fraud simply because they do not participate actively or directly in the transaction or conduct.ⁿ⁴¹ But in any case the reasonable care defense will operate to assure that attention is focused on an actual failure by a control person to exercise his or her responsibility. It is also true that the acts or inaction of any person alleged to be secondarily liable under Blue Sky Law antifraud provisions will be assessed in the context of provisions, and case law, that deal with whether a defendant materially aids in a sale in violation of the Blue Sky laws,ⁿ⁴² or who "participates" in a purchase or sale. It may be that "participates in the sale" or "materially aid in the sale" can equate with an officer's or director's failure to carry out a duty; that is to say, but for the failure to act with due care, the securities would not have been foisted upon unsuspecting investors. As is the case with the control person liability provisions of the federal securities laws, the extent of culpability of a control person under Blue Sky Laws continues to evolve, albeit with the balance tipped in favor of the least strict standard.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The scope of liability under Blue Sky laws is considered here separately from culpability in a violation. Culpability standards applied in determining liability for violations of Blue Sky Laws is considered in detail in Chapter 14.06, as to criminal prosecutions, and Chapter 15-Civil Liabilities. In addition to expanded consideration of culpability standards and the scope of civil liability, Chapter 15 also includes extensive discussion of the defenses against civil liability claims that are available under Blue Sky Laws.

(n14)Footnote 14. The Draftsmen's Commentary to Uniform Securities Act § 101, explains:

[T]here is no clear need to create any civil liability against buyers as distinct from sellers. Although the lower federal courts have uniformly implied a civil cause of action against fraudulent buyers under the rule, the federal courts when applying federal law do not have at their disposal all of the common-law and equitable remedies of deceit and rescission which are available to the state courts without benefit of statute. In the area of civil liability, moreover, it seems not only unnecessary but unwise to disturb the general jurisprudence which has been developing with reference, for example, to the obligation of corporate insiders to make affirmative disclosure when purchasing from existing stockholders. On the other hand, the general law is not adequate to deal with flagrant cases of fraud by buyers on a criminal level, and there can, of course, be no public action for an injunction against such practices with specific statutory authority.

To insure that no implied cause of action arises under the Act in favor of defrauded sellers, it is also provided that the only civil causes of action permitted are those expressly provided for in the Act, see Unif. Sec. Act § 410(h). The purpose of the clause is to prevent civil suits against purchasers from being brought under the Act. See Official Comment to Unif. Sec. Act § 410(h), see also Rev. Unif. Sec. Act §§ 501, 609.

Every person who directly or indirectly controls a person liable under subsection (a), (b) or (b)(1) of this section, every partner, officer, or director of the person, every person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, and every dealer or salesman who materially aids in the sale is also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the person, unless able to sustain the burden of proof that the person did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist. N.C.G.S. § 78A-56(c)(1).

(n27)Footnote 27. To the extent that the "every person who directly or indirectly controls a seller" language of § 410(b) is based upon the federal securities laws, a review of the federal case law is instructive. Section 15 of the 1933 Securities Act, 15 U.S.C. § 77(o), imposes joint and several liability on persons who control other persons who are liable under the Securities Act. Section 20 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 73(t), imposes similar liability on persons who control other persons who violate substantive provisions of the Exchange Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder. Section 20(a) of the Exchange Act, 15 USC § 78t(a), provides:

Every person who, directly or indirectly, controls any person liable under any provision of this chapter or of any rule or regulation thereunder shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable, unless the controlled person acted in good faith and did not directly or indirectly induce the act or acts constituting the violation or cause of action.

The control person provisions of the Securities Acts are remedial and must be construed liberally. Myzel v. Fields, 386 F.2d 718, 738 (8th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 951 (1968); accord, SEC v. First Securities Co. of Chicago, 463 F.2d 981, 987 (7th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 880 (1972). Federal courts have held that the control person liability provisions require only some indirect means of discipline or influence short of actual direction to hold a "controlling person" liable. Myzel, 368 F.2d at 738; SEC v. First Securities Co. of Chicago, 463 F.2d at 987.

However, the extent of culpable participation, if any at all, required under the federal control person liability provisions is not at all clear. See SEC v. First Jersey Securities, Inc., 101 F.3d 1450, 1472 (2d Cir. 1996) (Plaintiff must show that a controlling person was in some meaningful sense a culpable participant in the fraud perpetrated by the controlled person); Suez Equity Investors L.P. v. Toronto-Dominion Bank, 250 F.3d 87, 101 (2d Cir. 2001) (Section 20(a) liability requires culpable participation by the control person in the perpetration of the fraud).

But see In re Paramalot Sec. Litigation, 414 F.Supp. 2d 428, 439 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) ("This court has repeatedly held that plaintiffs need not allege culpable participation by the controlling person").

CHAPTER 13 Fraud and Prohibited Practices

2-13 Blue Sky Regulation § 13.04

§ 13.04 Federal Limitations on the Scope of Liability Beyond NSMIA

Congress responded to the national, indeed increasingly global, character of investments and financial markets, as well as the explosion of litigation under antifraud provisions of both state and federal securities laws, with legislation impacting certain applications of state Blue Sky fraud provisions. The National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 ("NSMIA"), has already been discussed. Most importantly, although NSMIA significantly preempts state authority and the application of Blue Sky Laws to impose registration requirements on securities offerings that are considered national in character, under NSMIA the states retain their authority to bring enforcement actions with respect to "fraud or deceit" or unlawful conduct by intermediaries.ⁿ¹ In the wake of NSMIA states may not use their retained antifraud authority to circumvent preempted regulation. As discussed earlier in § 13.01, however, state courts interpret retained antifraud enforcement authority broadly.

NSMIA does not bar private plaintiffs from bringing state law actions predicated on common law fraud with regard to either federal covered securities or those that remain within the purview of state regulation.ⁿ² However, certain derivative or implied rights of action based upon other violations of Blue Sky laws preempted by the federal legislation may not be available to private plaintiffs.ⁿ³

While NSMIA substantially preempted state regulation of the distribution of federal covered securities, it did not interfere with state jurisdiction to prosecute fraudulent activity with regard to either state regulated or federal covered securities.ⁿ⁴ State regulators and the SEC have cooperated to coordinate enforcement and avoid conflict in potentially overlapping or unsettled areas of jurisdiction.ⁿ⁵

Congress also enacted the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 ("PSLRA"); and the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA"). Each impacts the application of Blue Sky fraud provisions and the scope of antifraud protection under state securities laws. Each is discussed further below.

[1] Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 ("PSLRA")

Congress passed the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995ⁿ⁶ in order to control the filing of frivolous federal class action suits for securities fraud. The statute amends the federal securities laws by instituting, among other changes, the following restrictions:

- heightened pleading requirements;
- discovery stay during the pendency of a motion to dismiss;
- a safe harbor for "forward looking" statements;
- criteria for lead plaintiff selection based on financial stake;
- a mandatory Rule 11 inquiry; and
- judicial scrutiny of settlement provisions.

The PSLRA has no preemptive impact as such in regard to state securities law fraud actions, and indeed, the PSLRA federal pleading hurdle resulted in a substantial increase in state law fraud claims filed in state courts. After PSLRA, state common law offered plaintiffs relaxed pleading requirements and lower scienter burdens, as well as alternative theories of recovery, such as negligent misrepresentation, constructive fraud and secondary or aiding and abetting liability claims that are foreclosed or limited by federal courts.ⁿ⁷ PSLRA thus changed the landscape of securities fraud litigation, with a new emphasis on the role of state claims, yet all the while the preemptive message of NSMIA loomed large. Until the passage of the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA"),ⁿ⁸ class action securities fraud plaintiffs bringing actions that were decidedly national in scope could avoid the PSLRA bar by filing in state court. SLUSA addressed the matter and is discussed in further detail below.

[2] Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA")

In 1998, to curb the perceived migration of class action securities fraud claims to state court, Congress enacted the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA").ⁿ⁹ SLUSA provides that no covered class action based upon state statutory or common law, alleging: (1) an untrue statement or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security or (2) that the defendant used or employed any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security, can be maintained by a private plaintiff in state or federal court

The legislation limits preemption to "covered securities" under Section 18(b)(1), (2) of the Act,ⁿ¹⁰ while retaining state court jurisdiction over class action securities fraud claims arising from the offer or sale of NSMIA sanctioned state regulated securities, as well as certain claims arising from transactions between an issuer and its security holders under the law of the issuer's state of incorporation.ⁿ¹¹ SLUSA also permits actions to be brought by states, state political sub-divisions and state pension plans involving covered securities on behalf of a class comprised solely of such entities, as well as allowing certain actions under contractual agreements between issuers and indenture trustees. The Act defines a "covered class action" as any single lawsuit in which:

- (1) damages are sought on behalf of more than 50 persons or prospective class members, and questions of law or fact common to those persons or members of the prospective class, without reference to issues of individualized reliance on an alleged misstatement or omission, predominate over any questions affecting only individual persons or members; or
- (2) one in which one or more named parties seek to recover damages on a representative basis on behalf of themselves and other unnamed parties similarly situated, and questions of law or fact common to those persons or members of the prospective class predominate over any questions affecting only individual persons or members; or
- (3) any group of lawsuits filed in or pending in the same court and involving common questions of law or fact, in which damages are sought on behalf of more than 50 persons; and the lawsuits are joined, consolidated, or otherwise proceed as a single action for any purpose.

The term does not include an exclusively derivative action brought by one or more shareholders on behalf of a corporation.

SLUSA also extends the discovery stay to state court, preventing the use of an individually filed state court suit to obtain discovery for use in the federal class action. And it specifically preserves the jurisdiction of state securities commissioners to investigate and bring fraud enforcement actions.

With SLUSA, Congress thus imposed national standards on, and mandated an exclusive venue for, virtually all securities fraud class action litigation.ⁿ¹² It has spawned robust debate on whether the problems the Act was designed to counter--migration of frivolous claims to state court and circumvention of the federal discovery stay--were in fact exaggerated. Additionally, one commentator has pointed out that such pre-emption of state law claims deprives plaintiffs of remedies that federal courts, in scaling back private rights of action under federal securities law, assumed to be available to plaintiffs under the explicit preservation of state claims in those same federal statutes.ⁿ¹³ In the end, however, it is clear that SLUSA effectively eliminates claims brought as class actions by private plaintiffs alleging violations of antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws. Considering the efficacy of the civil remedy provisions in state securities laws, SLUSA preemption of class actions is seen in its most meaningful light.

[3] Conflict Preemption

Under the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution, Congress has the power to preempt state law, and may do so either expressly through clear statutory language, or implicitly. "Conflict preemption" is a type of implied preemption, and occurs when federal law actually conflicts with any state law.ⁿ¹⁴ Conflict preemption analysis examines a federal statute as a whole to determine whether a party's compliance with both federal and state requirements is impossible, or whether, in light of the federal statute's purpose and intended effects, state law poses an obstacle to the accomplishment of congressional objectives.ⁿ¹⁵ In Whistler Investments, Inc. v. Depositary Trust and Clearing Corp.,ⁿ¹⁶ plaintiffs sued three registered clearing agencies on a claim that short sellers drove down the market price of Whistler stock without having stock available for delivery, and then intentionally failing to deliver the stock. The practice involved is known as "naked short selling." Plaintiffs claimed that naked short selling of Whistler stock was facilitated by alleged defects in a program operated by National Clearing Corporation. Plaintiffs sued the clearing agencies under various theories based on Nevada law sounding in misrepresentation and market manipulation.

Securities clearing agencies are creations of, and regulated under, federal law. Section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934ⁿ¹⁷ established a national system for clearance and settlement of securities transactions. Section 17A provides, among other things, for the registration of "clearing agencies" by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The defendant clearing agencies in Whistler asserted that with Section 17A, Congress intended to occupy the field of clearing and settling securities transactions, thus raising "field preemption" as a defense against state law claims. That argument was rejected on the basis of Section 17A itself, which, by its language, indicates that Congress did not intend to occupy the entire field of national clearance and settlement of securities transactions. However, the defendants also asserted that imposing requirements implicated by the state law claims made in the case would conflict with the purpose of Section 17A to regulate and control a national clearance and settlement system. Defendants thus asserted conflict preemption.

In the district court, the defendants' conflict preemption argument was upheld, and the case dismissed. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that imposing any state standards of efficiency would directly interfere with the federally approved procedures established by national clearing agencies to operate the "Stock Borrow" program that operates in regard to short sales of securities. This interference with the operation as federally approved, said the court, triggers conflict preemption of state law. The court saw other state law claims by plaintiffs as amounting to the same challenge to the SEC approved operation of the "Stock Borrow" program, and a direct challenge to clearing agency rules.ⁿ¹⁸

The federal securities laws, even after NSMIA, clearly preserve the role of state Blue Sky laws in the field of securities regulation. In the post-NSMIA world, the issue of conflict preemption in matters of state and federal securities laws should not arise except in specialized situations, as Whistler illustrates. That case did not involve the invocation of any remedy provision or right of action under the Nevada securities law, but the central point that state law can stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress in regard to the federal securities laws must be considered if the state remedy would operate to impose an obstacle to achieving congressional purposes for the federal law.ⁿ¹⁹

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.01

§ 14.01 Overview

In 2002, following an investigation and proceeding instituted by the Attorney General of the State of New York authorized under the New York Blue Sky Law (the "Martin Act"),ⁿ¹ an agreement of historic proportion in the administration and enforcement of state securities laws was reached between the Attorney General and Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (Merrill Lynch). By the agreement, Merrill Lynch agreed to implement major changes in practices and procedures relating to its equity research analysts, and to pay the sum of $100 million in settlement of civil claims brought by the Attorney General, a significant portion of which also to be distributed among all other states in resolution of civil claims of the states under their respective securities laws. The agreement to resolve claims involved requirements and undertakings regarding not only practices and procedures relating to equity research, but also specifically addressed research analyst compensation, the implementation of a Research Recommendations Committee, analyst participation in the solicitation of investment banking business, research related disclosure during solicitation of public equity underwriting, and specific ongoing monitoring of compliance with terms of the agreement.

This agreement in the context of enforcement of a state securities law was unprecedented in its sheer scope. Even more significantly, it demonstrated the power and effectiveness of Blue Sky law enforcement in achieving historic investor protection goals and fairness in markets. Indeed, in the wake of this action taken under New York's Martin Act, a task force of some 40 state securities regulators was formed to investigate possible misconduct associated with conflicts of interest at financial services firms. In this undertaking, a spokesperson for the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) characterized the investigation by the states in simple terms that convey the essence of Blue Sky regulation, that is, whether there was fraud committed against investors by analysts who issued recommendations that did not reflect how they felt about a stock.ⁿ² These actions evidence the vitality of Blue Sky enforcement, and underscore the need to examine more closely all aspects of enforcement authority under these provisions.

Enforcement of state Blue Sky laws is delegated by statute to designated state agencies, whether separately constituted securities commissions or divisions of other departments or agencies of government. The Uniform Act simply provides for enforcement of the Act by a "local administrative agency," the name and any related provisions for which are left to determination by individual states.ⁿ³ Enforcement powers include broad investigative authority and the authorization to proceed against violators in administrative and judicial forums, the latter including provisions for criminal prosecutions either directly or in conjunction with other law enforcement authorities.

Enforcement authority of state regulators is usually categorized in terms of administrative proceedings, civil injunctive authority, and criminal prosecution.ⁿ⁴ Important and widely employed "cease and desist" authority falls under the mantle of administrative proceedings that are governed by their own prescribed procedures and applicable administrative procedure statutes.ⁿ⁵ Broad investigative authority and associated subpoena power attaches to all three categories of enforcement activity.

Enforcement powers under Blue Sky laws derive from legislative authority in the exercise of state police powers. State securities laws were enacted with broadly-stated objectives for the protection of the public from exploitation through the sale of securities, and administrators for that reason enjoy considerable deference and discretion in the exercise of their powers. Indeed, the authority of a state securities administrator has been described as "pervasively discretionary." In Department of Corporations v. The Superior Court of San Diego County,ⁿ⁶ a California appeals court held that the Commissioner had no mandatory duty in regard to enforcement of that state's securities law. The court declared:

The Commissioner is required to find that his action is "necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and consistent with the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions" of the Act... This legislative command does not dictate any particular result, but rather explicitly calls upon the judgment, expertise, and discretion of the Commissioner to define what action, if any, is "necessary or appropriate"--again, strongly supporting the conclusion that there is no mandatory duty.ⁿ⁷

Because the Commissioner has no mandatory duty, the court held that no private claim could be asserted by investors that the Department of Corporations had failed to fulfill its duty to protect investors from fraudulent sales of securities.ⁿ⁸

App. 2006), in which the appellant banks asserted tort claims against the state, claiming the state was liable because a securities registration was approved despite the Commerce Department's knowledge that the offering did not meet registration requirements. Specifically, the banks alleged that the registration of debentures was approved despite the Department's knowledge that the offering would not meet registration requirements without the issuer including cash flow from borrowing, which is prohibited by Minn. R. 2875.3500, subp. 2A.

The banks asserted their claim under the Minnesota Tort Claims Act, under which the state could be liable in damages for torts caused by state employees acting within the scope of their employment where the state, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant. However, the Act provides an exclusion by which the state is immune from tort liability based on the failure of a person to meet the standards for a license, permit, or other authorization issued by the state or its agents. The court concluded that registration of securities for sale in the state amounts to a license, permit, or other authorization and that the type of regulatory failure alleged by the banks regarding securities registration was precisely what the legislature excluded from the Tort Claims Act. Moreover, the Department of Commerce made no express representation to the bank purchasers apart from approving the registration itself. That representation, said the court, comprised only the fact that the debentures had been registered for sale in Minnesota. Dismissal of the claims was thus affirmed.

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.02

§ 14.02 Enforcement Authority

[1] Generally

The Uniform Securities Act confers broad investigative authority on Blue Sky administrators, as well as the power to pursue civil injunctive actions and make criminal referrals to state and local law enforcement agencies. The 2002 Uniform Act expands specifically prescribed enforcement authorityⁿ¹ to include a range of administrative powers, most prominently, the power to issue "cease and desist" orders. In both Uniform and Non-Uniform Act states, cease-and-desist orders or their functional equivalents have become common elements of the enforcement arsenal of state securities regulators. In many instances, these orders may issue summarily, but are subject to follow-up administrative procedures.ⁿ² Administrative cease-and-desist orders may be reviewed through established judicial review procedures. However, if no review is pursued, an administrator may, if necessary, seek enforcement of a cease-and-desist order by converting it to a court judgment.ⁿ³

The scope of enforcement authority established under the Uniform and Revised Uniform Securities Acts is combined in the 2002 Uniform Act, now adopted in several states and under active consideration in others. The 2002 Uniform Act authorizes civil and criminal actions in the courts, as well as administrative proceedings. The securities administrator may, with appropriate procedures, also issue cease-and-desist orders for violations of the Act and obtain enforcement of those orders in court. As with the predecessor Uniform Acts, the 2002 Act also authorizes investigations and the issuance of subpoenas, and specifically provides for assistance to securities regulators in other jurisdictions. The antifraud provisions in the 2002 Uniform Act apply within the state equally to state-registered entities and persons, to federal covered investment advisers, and to anyone else in connection with transactions in any securities, including federal covered securities.

Whether or not grounded in any of the Uniform Acts, all states take an expansive approach in conferring enforcement options. Administrative remedies allow flexibility in enforcement actions, allowing for such thing as bar or suspension orders against intermediaries and associated persons, and in many cases, include the power to impose civil money penalties, including the assessment of the agency's investigative and legal costs in the matter.ⁿ⁴ Civil injunctive authority remains an important tool in the enforcement arsenal of Blue Sky administrators who are typically empowered to obtain temporary and preliminary injunctive orders whenever it appears that there is sufficient evidence of a securities violation.ⁿ⁵ Criminal prosecutions are common fruits of the considerable investigative powers provided under the laws. Still, in the contemporary Blue Sky enforcement environment, administrative remedies have shown themselves to be the most direct and efficient means of addressing those activities, most commonly, the focus of state securities regulation.ⁿ⁶

At the baseline, enforcement authority is defined by the scope of the Blue Sky law itself. The definition of "security" in each Blue Sky law is the single most limiting factor.ⁿ⁷ Variations in definitions among states can operate to preclude enforcement authority, for example, regarding variable annuity insurance products. The treatment of variable annuities as securities is not uniform among the states. A federal court applying the definition of security under the Kansas Securities Act granted summary judgment dismissing claims on the basis that the Kansas statute excludes from the definition of security "any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract under which an insurance company promises to pay money either in a lump sum or periodically for life or some other specified period." The court declined to inquire further whether the otherwise clear statutory language should be interpreted to allow variable annuities to fall within the definition of security for purposes of applying the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁸ The particular treatment in a state regarding "life settlement" contracts or other forms of viatical settlement contracts may also impact the scope of regulatory enforcement authority. It is certain that courts give deference to decisions and interpretations by state securities agencies in the application of their own statutes and regulations.ⁿ⁹ However, in all cases the parameters of enforcement authority must be established by the plain language of the Blue Sky law.

That being said, the scope of investigative authority under Blue Sky laws is not limited to investor protection in the particular state. Courts have described a dual state interest in the enforcement of Blue Sky laws. In Dolomite Energy, LLC v. Comm. ex rel. Dir. Off. Fin. Institutions,ⁿ¹⁰ a Kentucky firm challenged the authority of the administrator to issue an investigative subpoena when it was not established that the firm had solicited or sold to Kentucky investors. The court rejected such a limitation on subpoena power under the Blue Sky law:

Although the Commonwealth's subpoena was broad and requested an extensive list of documents under Kentucky's Blue Sky Laws, the Commonwealth has the power to request such extensive lists when the inquiry is within the authority of the agency, the demand is not too indefinite, and the information sought is reasonably relevant. The broad powers granted to the Commonwealth not only protect Kentucky investors but also serve to preserve the reputation of legitimate Kentucky companies and maintain national and international confidence in the Kentucky market.ⁿ¹¹

Thus, the court concluded:

[W]e do not find the residency of the investor to be controlling. Kentucky's adoption of the Blue Sky Laws clearly shows an intent to protect not only Kentucky investors but also to protect the reputation of the Kentucky marketplace by regulating the sale of securities to both Kentucky and non-resident investors.ⁿ¹²

The scope of investigative authority exercised by an administrator regarding conduct committed within the state but taking place outside the state is distinguished from the scope of authority to engage in investigative activity outside the state. Statutory authority most often provides for authority to investigate both within and outside the state. Section 602(a) of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, for example, makes clear that the administrator may:

Conduct public or private investigations in or out of this state that the administrator considers necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated, is violating, or is about to violate this act or a rule adopted or order issued under this act, or to aid in the enforcement of this act or the adoption of rules and forms under this act.ⁿ¹³

The execution of that authority, however, presents a different challenge. It is for that reason that numerous state Blue Sky laws contain provisions for the administrator to apply for and obtain enforcement of subpoenas in another state. With the 2002 Uniform Act, this has evolved into "assistance" and reciprocity considerations, which are discussed in more detail in § 14.04[6].

[2] The Scope of Federal Preemption

As discussed throughout this Treatise, the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 (NSMIA) significantly preempted state securities regulation in regard to federal "covered securities." NSMIA limits states, for example, from imposing registration or merit review requirements in the offer and sale of federal covered securities or imposing any conditions upon the use of offering documents prepared by or on behalf of an issuer of a federal covered security. While NSMIA was crafted by Congress as a direct preemption of state regulatory authority over securities offerings and transactions that are national in character, other federal regulatory schemes can also preempt state authority under Blue Sky laws. For example, a federal court held that regulations issued by the federal Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) expressly excluding "jumbo" certificates of deposit from the definition of "security" preempted a state administrator's construction of the Blue Sky law to treat those instruments as securities for purposes of state regulation.ⁿ¹⁴

On the other hand, the "Military Personnel Financial Services Protection Act," signed into law in 2006ⁿ¹⁵ expressly affirms state securities regulatory authority with respect to activities conducted on federal land or facilities of the United States and abroad, specifically military installations. Congressional findings cited the need for regulating the marketing and sale of securities (and life insurance products) on military bases and preventing abusive and misleading sales practices, including excessive sales charges. Section 8 of the Act, addressing state insurance and securities jurisdiction on military installations, provides that any law, regulation, or order of a state with respect to regulating the business of securities will apply to all securities activities unless it directly conflicts with any applicable federal law, regulation, or authorized directive, or would not apply if the activity were conducted on state land. The Act also prescribes the manner of determining primary state jurisdiction in instances in which multiple state laws would apply. It stands as a clear statement by Congress as to the importance of state securities laws and regulatory authority in dealing with abuse by persons engaged in the offer and sale of financial products.

Apart from these more oblique approaches to the extent of state authority, it is NSMIA that directly impacts state enforcement authority under Blue Sky laws. That being said, the scope of NSMIA preemption of state enforcement activity is limited in two important ways. First, NSMIA itself has an express savings clause that protects the jurisdiction of states under Blue Sky laws to bring enforcement actions for violation of antifraud provisions. The NSMIA Savings Clause provides:

Consistent with this section, the securities commission (or any agency or officer performing like functions) of any State shall retain jurisdiction under the laws of such State to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions.ⁿ¹⁶

Preservation of state antifraud enforcement authority encompasses both federal covered and non-covered securities alike.

Second, courts have increasingly recognized state authority to determine the validity of federal "covered security" status in the context of enforcement actions with respect to unregistered securities offered and sold in reliance on Rule 506 of SEC Regulation D under the federal Securities Act of 1933.ⁿ¹⁷ Under NSMIA, offerings covered by Rule 506 are "covered securities" for which state regulatory authority is preempted. Rule 506 offerings, which principally involve accredited investors, are unquestionably the most common form of large-scale exempt "private" or "limited" securities offerings. Including Rule 506 offerings as a category of NSMIA covered securities ostensibly eliminates state authority to impose registration and other requirements. These offerings would otherwise be open to state scrutiny and be subject to registration or to compliance requirements under particular state exemptions. The offer and sale of unregistered, nonexempt securities is a major target of enforcement actions under Blue Sky laws. State and federal courts have determined that for state regulatory authority to be preempted as to federal Rule 506 offerings, the issuer of the securities must show the actual validity of, and not mere reliance on, the federal exemption. These courts have also recognized that states may determine whether the exemption applies, and exercise enforcement authority where the exemption is ruled invalid. Each of these important limitations on NSMIA preemption of state authority is discussed further below.ⁿ¹⁸

[a] The NSMIA Savings Clause: Antifraud Enforcement Authority

The extent of state antifraud enforcement authority preserved by NSMIA via the savings clause is illustrated in Capital Research and Management Company v. Brown,ⁿ¹⁹ which upheld the authority of the California Attorney General to pursue an enforcement action under the California Securities Law against the wholesale (distributor) broker-dealer of a family of mutual funds based on alleged failure to disclose to purchasers and prospective purchasers of fund shares the facts concerning "shelf-space agreements" that increased shareholder costs and created conflicts of interest. The "shelf-space agreements" were undisclosed oral agreements entered into between the distributor and broker-dealers who received cash and directed brokerage for selling the fund's shares. The action was not brought against the fund sponsor, but the essential allegation was that the shelf-space agreements were not accurately or fully disclosed in the fund disclosure documents. The Attorney General sought injunctions, civil penalties, disgorgement of profits, and restitution to purchasers by the fund distributor and the investment adviser to the mutual funds that participated with the distributor in the agreements.

Relying on NSMIA, the distributor and investment adviser defendants in Capital Research and Management Company challenged the Attorney General's authority as amounting to impermissible regulation of the mutual fund family's disclosure documents. NSMIA prohibits states from limiting or imposing conditions upon the use of any offering document that is prepared by or on behalf of the issuer of a federal covered security.ⁿ²⁰ Mutual fund shares offered by federally registered investment companies, as was the case here, are federal covered securities under NSMIA. However, the Attorney General argued, and the appeals court agreed, that notwithstanding the fact that the enforcement action might prospectively influence the disclosures made by the mutual fund sponsor, it fell within the preserved antifraud authority of the state and the power to control the conduct of brokers and dealers. As the court explained:

What this means is that the Attorney General cannot sue AF Fund to force it to change its disclosure documents, but it can sue AFD [the distributor] and CRMC [the participating investment adviser] to force them to disclose their oral agreements with the shelf-space brokers. The savings clause is sufficiently broad to permit this action ... and as applied to this case, is entirely consistent with the purpose of NSMIA.ⁿ²¹

The result was the same in People v. Edward D. Jones & Co.,ⁿ²² where the California Attorney General also brought an enforcement action under an antifraud provision of the California Corporations Code against a broker-dealer on allegations that the firm failed to disclose that it was receiving additional compensation for selling certain mutual funds.ⁿ²³ As in Capital Research and Management Company, the brokerage firm was a party to "shelf space" agreements with preferred funds under which it was compensated for providing heightened visibility of the preferred funds within the firm's mutual fund distribution and sales system. Mutual fund prospectuses and other disclosure documents did not disclose the existence of shelf space agreements, and the brokerage firm also did not disclose them to investors and potential investors to whom the funds were offered and sold.

Challenging state authority, Edward Jones & Co. asserted, among other things, that the enforcement action was preempted by NSMIA. The firm claimed that by his action, the Attorney General was challenging the adequacy of the disclosures made in offering documents prepared by the mutual fund companies. The securities involved, mutual fund shares, were unquestionably NSMIA "covered" securities and NSMIA provides that except as otherwise provided in the statute, no administrative action of a state may directly or indirectly prohibit, limit, or impose any condition upon the use of any offering document prepared by or on behalf of the issuer of covered securities.ⁿ²⁴ Edward Jones maintained that the enforcement action was a straightaway attempt by the state to dictate and control the content of mutual fund prospectuses. The argument succeeded in the lower court, but was rejected on appeal.

The appellate court recognized that NSMIA expressly prohibits any state action that would even indirectly limit the use of a mutual fund prospectus. However, the court also recognized that the prohibition is not absolute and that NSMIA specifically qualifies it with the phrase "except as otherwise provided in this section." It was necessary therefore, said the court, to look to the remainder of NSMIA in order to determine the true scope of the prohibition. The NSMIA "savings" provision for state antifraud enforcement authority is an express exception to preemption. Thus, the court queried:

What does this savings clause tell us about the scope of the NSMIA's prohibitions as applied here? It tells us that the NSMIA prohibits any state action that would limit the use of a mutual fund prospectus, except for "enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions." In other words, an enforcement action of the type described in subsection (c) of 15 United States Code section 77r is expressly excepted from the prohibitions found in subsection (a) of the statute. Thus, an enforcement action with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions may limit the use of a mutual fund prospectus, notwithstanding the prohibition against effecting such a limitation by other methods.ⁿ²⁵

Based on the unambiguous language of NSMIA, the court concluded that the type of action brought by the Attorney General against Edward Jones was the type of enforcement action that NSMIA expressly excepts from its prohibitions. The action unquestionably, said the court, fell within the scope of the NSMIA "savings" provision because, at the very least, the Attorney General alleged "unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer" by alleging that Edward Jones's conduct in offering and selling certain mutual funds violated antifraud provisions of the California Corporations Code.ⁿ²⁶

[b] Determining "Covered Security" Status

State courts in other enforcement settings have also limited the scope of NSMIA preemption. In both Buist v. Time Domain Corp. ⁿ²⁷ and Blue Flame Energy Corp. v. Ohio Department of Commerce, Division of Securities,ⁿ²⁸ the courts determined that NSMIA does not prevent administrators from directly regulating offerings purportedly carried out pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D under the Securities Act of 1933, which are federal covered securities under NSMIA, when in fact the offering does not comply with Rule 506. States may thus determine whether there is a federal covered security in the first place by looking beyond the window dressing of an offering to determine the legitimacy of a purported Rule 506 exemption. The only way to assert federal preemption is first to show that the federal exemption actually applies.

Following the Buist lead, several state and federal courts, including the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Brown v. Earthboard Sports USA, Inc.,ⁿ²⁹ have held that the plain language of NSMIA preempts state authority only with respect to securities that actually qualify as "covered securities." These courts reject the notion that NSMIA preempts states from acting in regard to Rule 506 offerings simply because the issuer has attempted to qualify or purports to make the offering pursuant to the Rule 506 exemption.ⁿ³⁰

The key consideration here is simply that residual state enforcement authority is considerable after NSMIA. Significant assessments have come from state appellate courts and it is clear that they will continue to examine the preemptive reach of NSMIA in a manner consistent with congressional intent not only to preserve state authority to police fraud, deceit, and unlawful conduct by securities intermediaries, but also to ensure that NSMIA preemption is legitimately applied.ⁿ³¹

Once anchored in a reasonable belief that a violation has occurred, or is occurring, and that enforcement authority is appropriately exercised, broad investigative authority is provided for administrators,ⁿ³² which is considered in further detail below.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Although not specifically prescribed by the Uniform Act, a wider range of administrative remedies have been implied under its provisions relating to the power to conduct investigations and issue orders, which are considered further below.

(n2)Footnote 2. 2002 Uniform Act § 604(b), is representative in providing:

[Summary Process.] An order under subsection (a) is effective on the date of issuance. Upon issuance of the order, the administrator shall promptly serve each person subject to the order with a copy of the order and a notice that the order has been entered. The order must include a statement whether the administrator will seek a civil penalty or costs of the investigation, a statement of the reasons for the order, and notice that, within 15 days after receipt of a request in a record from the person, the matter will be scheduled for a hearing. If a person subject to the order does not request a hearing and none is ordered by the administrator within 30 days after the date of service of the order, the order becomes final as to that person by operation of law. If a hearing is requested or ordered, the administrator, after notice of and opportunity for hearing to each person to the order, may modify or vacate the order or extend it until final determination.

(n3)Footnote 3. See, e.g., 2002 Uniform Act § 603(f), which provides:

If a petition for judicial review of a final order is not filed in accordance with Section 609, the administrator may file a certified copy of the final order with the clerk of a court of competent jurisdiction. The order so filed has the same effect as a judgment of the court and may be recorded, enforced, or satisfied in the same manner as a judgment of the court.

(n4)Footnote 4. See, e.g., In re Thrasher Prospect #1, Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 74, 186 (Pa. Sec. Comm'n Apr. 7, 1999) (assessment of investigative and legal costs pursuant to section 602.1 of the Pennsylvania Blue Sky law).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Feigin v. Digital Interactive Assocs., Inc., 987 P.2d 876 (Colo. Ct. App. 1999) (Securities Commissioner may seek and obtain a temporary restraining order, without notice, whenever there is sufficient evidence of a securities violation and is not required to allege or prove irreparable harm or exigent circumstances to have the notice requirement waived).

(n6)Footnote 6. But see Olde Discount Corp. v. Tupman, 1 F.3d 202 (3d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1065 (1994), in which the court affirmed an injunction against the Delaware Securities Commissioner from imposing an administrative remedy for the benefit of two investors seeking rescission of transactions, where the investors were required to arbitrate their claims in accordance with broker-customer agreements. The court held that the Commissioner's administrative power to impose a remedy was preempted to the extent that it was in conflict with the Federal Arbitration Act. In doing so, the court noted: "Delaware ... retains many avenues for the exercise of its proper role in dealing with alleged violations of its securities laws."

(n7)Footnote 7. While there are some variations among state Blue Sky laws as to what is included in the definition of security, all definitions for the most part, track the definitions contained in the Uniform Act, as well as the federal securities laws. The statutory definition of "security" in the Delaware Securities Act, which is representative of definitions in all state laws, has been held not to be unconstitutionally vague. In Carlson v. State, 902 A.2d 1114 (Del.), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 687, 166 L. Ed. 2d 534, (2006), a defendant convicted on numerous counts of the sale of unregistered securities claimed that he was not given fair notice that it was illegal to sell certificates of deposit issued by an offshore bank and stock without registration. Rejecting the argument on appeal, the Delaware Supreme Court affirmed the conviction. The court noted that other courts had rejected void-for-vagueness arguments aimed at Blue Sky laws, and observed:

There is no reason to believe that an "ordinary person" cannot ascertain and understand the meaning of the term "stock." The meaning of "certificate of deposit" is equally comprehensible by an ordinary person. Certificates of deposit are specifically referenced in section 7309 as being exempt only when issued or guaranteed by the United States or a local government in the United States.

(n8)Footnote 8. Widmer v. Hallier, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43623 (D. Kan. July 29, 2005) . Widmer was a private action asserting claims under both the Kansas Blue Sky law and the Kansas Consumer Protection Act. The court's unwillingness to extend coverage of the Blue Sky law to variable annuities in the face of clear language of the statute that does not contradict legislative intent is equally applicable in administrative enforcement actions.

In particular, we consider two legitimate state interests to be particularly strong ones. First, preventing New Jersey companies from offering suspect securities to out-of-state buyers helps to preserve the reputation of New Jersey's legitimate securities issuers. States that have failed to monitor out-of-state sales by in-state broker-dealers have suffered in the past, as their legitimate broker-dealers suffered from association with suspect firms offering questionable securities... Although this state interest is heightened when the state can prove that the in-state firm has engaged in outright fraud, the interest is nonetheless legitimate when the state seeks to block the sales of securities that it believes might be associated with dubious or manipulative sales practices. (Citations omitted.)

(n14)Footnote 14. See State Farm Bank, F.S.B. v. Burke, 445 F. Supp. 2d 207 (D. Conn. 2006) .

The larger preemption question in State Farm Bank was the extent to which deference would be given to an OTS Opinion Letter interpreting the preemptive effect of its own regulations in regard to state licensing, registration, and other requirements applicable to exclusive agents of federal savings banks. However, an element of the controversy focused on the definition of "security" in the Connecticut Uniform Securities Act (CUSA), which the state administrator concluded was applicable to jumbo CDs. An OTS regulation provided that a "security" does not include an account or deposit insured by the FDIC. However, the CDs involved in the case were not fully insured by FDIC. Nevertheless, on a finding that the OTS regulation excluding jumbo CDs from the definition of security was consistent with federal law and policy evident in the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Marine Bank v. Weaver, 455 U.S. 551, 102 S. Ct. 1220, 71 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1982) , superseded by statute as stated in Trans Penn Wax Corp. v. McCandless, 50 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 1995) holding that a certificate of deposit issued by a federally regulated bank did not constitute a security, the court in State Farm Bank concluded that the state administrator's construction of the state securities law was preempted. The court observed:

The preemptive effect of OTS's regulations as to state statutes concerning the lending and deposit-related activities of federal loan associations applies here to the defendant's construction of CUSA because if defendant is permitted to construe CUSA to include jumbo CDs, all State Farm agents engaged in CD-related activities would be required to comply with various Connecticut registration requirements. As discussed above, according "controlling weight" to OTS's Opinion Letter, OTS's regulations preempt such registration requirements because they relate to the operation of federal loan associations. Thus, given the preemptive effect of OTS regulations in the field of lending and deposit-related activities of federal savings associations generally, defendant's construction of CUSA to include jumbo CDs is also preempted.

The court went on to explain:

It is the wholesale distributor's conduct that is at issue in this case (and the enabling conduct of the adviser), not the sufficiency of the disclosures made by AF Fund. In fact, the complaint alleges that AFD's and CRMC's disclosures were affirmatively false and misleading because the practice of entering shelf-space agreements was intentionally concealed from investors and also from AF Fund's directors. It is the conduct of the adviser and the distributor that violates [the Blue Sky law] because the purchasers are being induced to purchase AF Fund shares by means of manipulative, deceptive, and otherwise fraudulent contrivances... . The fact that this action, if successful, might indirectly encourage AF Fund to alter its disclosure documents does not affect the application of the savings clause.

Mar. 22, 2007) , in which the court concluded that the state's authority to enforce its securities law in connection with fraud and/or with material omissions which would mislead investors in connection with the offer, sale, or purchase of NSMIA covered securities remains intact. While NSMIA prohibits state regulators from commenting upon or imposing requirements on the contents of prospectuses and other offering documents, legislative history, said the court, makes clear the intention not to alter or limit state law with respect to fraud or deceit.

Taken together, as Rapp & Berckmueller note:

The decisions in Edward Jones, Brown, and Papic support the proposition that the "savings" clause not only precludes preemption in many circumstances but also permits a state administrator to exercise antifraud enforcement authority in a manner that might indirectly impact disclosures made in an offering document of a NSMIA "covered security." In Brown the court characterized the impact as prospective "influence." The court in Papic embraced that characterization and concluded that Congress intended for nothing in NSMIA to affect the state's authority to enforce its blue sky law in connection with material misstatements or omissions in an offering. In Edward Jones, the court concluded straightaway that an enforcement action for fraud may in fact limit the use of an issuer's prospectus because the NSMIA "savings" provision is an express exception to the prohibition against interference with the use of an offering document.

In the exercise of authority based upon a determination that a Rule 506 exemption is defective, one federal court applied the Younger abstention doctrine to decline review of a securities commissioner's desist-and-refrain order. Consol. Mgmt. Group, LLC v. Dufauchard, (N.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2006) . In federal court, the plaintiffs alleged that the California Corporations Commissioner and the Department of Corporations had acted beyond the scope of their lawful authority in finding that the plaintiffs failed to qualify for the federal Rule 506 exemption and in issuing the enforcement order. The federal court invoked the Younger abstention doctrine and concluded that state proceedings were on-going; that they implicated an important state interest; and that the state proceedings provided an adequate opportunity to assert the federal preemption argument. In Target, the subject of a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Division of Securities maintained that the subpoena exceeded the Director's authority on grounds, among others, that NSMIA preempted the Director's authority. Based on the NSMIA savings provision, however, the argument was rejected. The court concluded that even if NSMIA "covered securities" are involved, the Director is not precluded from investigating claims that a promoter may have misled purchasers.

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.03

§ 14.03 Investigative Authority

Section 407(a) of the Uniform Act sets the common parameters of investigative authority:

(a) The [Administrator] in [his] discretion (1) may make such public or private investigations within or outside of this state as [he] deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of this act or in the prescribing of rules and forms hereunder, (2) may require or permit any person to file a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the [Administrator] determines, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated, and (3) may publish information concerning any violation of this act or any rule or order hereunder.ⁿ¹

The administrator's authority is augmented by the power to

[s]ubpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, agreements, or other documents or records which the Administrator deems relevant or material to the inquiry.ⁿ²

Section 407 grants essentially the same power as given to the Securities and Exchange Commission by section 21(a) through (c) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. However, state administrators' authority is not constrained by particular limitations on the substantive scope of analogous SEC jurisdiction. In Carrington v. Arizona Corp. Commission,ⁿ³ for example, the authority of the state commissioner to enforce an investigative subpoena against a seller of viatical settlements was upheld despite the fact that federal case law holds that viatical settlements are not securities. Although federal law may supply guidance in the interpretation and application of state securities laws, it is not binding. Moreover, said the court, even if federal case law was deemed to be the law in the state, the Commissioner's authority to investigate in order to determine whether particular arrangements or transactions nevertheless fall within the Blue Sky law would not be impaired.

The subpoena power of state securities administrators is by no means unfettered. In Galvin v. Gillette Co.,ⁿ⁴ a Massachusetts court determined that subpoenas drafted by the administrator must be narrowly drawn to "touch the matter under investigation or in question." In Galvin, the administrator issued subpoenas demanding the production of a wide array of materials involving a merger transaction involving The Proctor & Gamble Company and Gillette. Among the broad categories of information and material to be produced under the subpoena, the administrator sought documents relating to fairness opinions involved in the transaction that were formulated and issued by registered broker-dealers. Responding to the subpoena, Gillette argued that mergers are excluded from investigative and enforcement authority under the Massachusetts Blue Sky law. The administrator, on the other hand, urged that his authority under the law clearly extended to investigating whether there had been fraud in connection with issuing the fairness opinions.

The Galvin court determined that the administrator did have investigative authority as to whether there was fraud by registered broker-dealers who issued fairness opinions. At the same time, however, the court opined:

An examination of the Subpoena issued to Gillette on March 23, 2005, reveals a breadth of information demanded that reaches far beyond the somewhat narrowly focused investigation that the Secretary announced to the Court in his opposition on April 22, 2005. Much of the mass of materials sought does not, facially at least, appear to touch on or be relevant or material to the matter under investigation or in question, i.e., whether fraud may be present in the UBS or Goldman Sachs fairness opinions based on information provided by Gillette. Consequently, in its present form the Subpoena reaches too far. Further, given its complexity, this Court cannot--and should not--attempt to apply a blue pencil to the sections that appear too far reaching. This is for the discretion of the Secretary, not that of the Court.ⁿ⁵

The court thus quashed the subpoena, but without prejudice to the Secretary to issue a new subpoena consistent with the legal principles recited by the court.

Constitutional considerations also operate to limit the scope of subpoena power under Blue Sky laws. In Lubin v. Agora, Inc.,ⁿ⁶ the Maryland Court of Appeals held that a subpoena served by the Commissioner of Securities on the publisher of an e-mail investment newsletter as part of an investigation into whether the publisher was acting in violation of the Maryland Securities Law was an impermissible intrusion on First Amendment rights. The Commissioner's subpoena sought disclosure of the publisher's subscriber lists, claiming that the information was relevant and would allow a thorough investigation into whether, among other things, the newsletter publisher was engaged in business as an unregistered investment adviser. The Commissioner argued that having access to subscriber information would facilitate questioning of those persons about their dealings with the publisher. After a thorough analysis of First Amendment jurisprudence, the Maryland appeals court concluded that to the extent the Commissioner's subpoena would require the publisher to disclose the identities of those who subscribe to or purchase its materials, the subpoena sought information protected by the First Amendment. Enforcement of the subpoena, said the court, would intrude upon the First Amendment rights of the publisher's subscribers and customers because disclosure of their status as subscribers and purchasers would destroy their anonymity.ⁿ⁷ In the end, the court concluded that the Commissioner failed to show an overriding and compelling state interest in obtaining the subscriber information. Moreover, no sufficient nexus was shown between the investigation into whether the publisher acted as an unregistered investment adviser and the demand for a list of those subscribers who received the e-mail.

Such limitations on subpoena power notwithstanding,ⁿ⁸ the statutory authority of state administrators is such that courts give administrators "wide berth" when reviewing the validity of investigations. In Carrington v. Arizona Corp. Commission,ⁿ⁹ discussed above, the Arizona court emphasized that an appropriately empowered agency can investigate merely on suspicion that the law is being violated "or even just because it wants the assurance that it is not."ⁿ¹⁰ Thus, said the court, the commission must be free without undue interference to conduct an investigation to adequately develop a factual basis to determine whether a particular activity comes within the ambit of regulatory authority.

The focus on viatical settlements in Carrington is particularly instructive because of the divergence in federal and state securities law. As a matter of federal securities law, viatical settlements, that is, the sale of life insurance policies of terminally ill persons at a discount, such that when the uninsured dies the purchaser receives the death benefit, were held not to be securities in *SEC v. Life Partners, Inc.*ⁿ¹¹ However, with virtual unanimity, state courts, legislatures, and Blue Sky administrators have defined such arrangements to be securities, either expressly or by way of investment contract analysis. State enforcement activity related to viaticals ranks near the top of Blue Sky enforcement initiatives generally and is a perfect example of the increasingly vocal notion that state securities administrators are the "cops on the beat" in the protection of investors.

As apt as the "cops on the beat" functional analogy may be, state securities administrators are not police officers. However, in the exercise of their investigative authority and particularly given their power to subpoena witnesses, compel attendance, and require production of relevant materials that may be used in prosecutions, they are assigned police powers. Thus, their investigative activities may impact constitutional rights and require compliance with protections against self-incrimination available to witnesses. Compelling attendance pursuant to an administrative subpoena has been held not to constitute custodial interrogation for purposes of Miranda rights.ⁿ¹² However, in some circumstances, state securities investigators may be required to give constitutional warnings.ⁿ¹³ In practice, such warnings are often given in circumstances where attendance and testimony is compelled, whether or not technically required.

The authority of state securities administrators to gain access to documents and information maintained by licensed persons and entities is also considerable. Blue Sky laws and regulations uniformly require registered broker-dealers, for example, to keep specified records open to examination by the administrator and to produce copies to the administrator on request. In First Providence Financial Group LLC v. Burke,ⁿ¹⁴ the court interpreted the examination provision of the Connecticut Blue Sky law as empowering the administrator, with or without advance notice, to enter the premises of any firm that has, by seeking to be licensed in the state, voluntarily submitted to its jurisdiction. Upholding the administrator's authority, the court opined:

The very nature of this examination provision requires that it be used to enable examiners to enter the premises of any firm that has voluntarily submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the Banking Commission by seeking registration to conduct examination to ensure that all statutes and regulations designed to protect the investing public are being complied with. If the commissioner were required to give notice or to defer to a firm's determination of a more convenient time for the examination, the effectiveness of these examinations would sharply decline and so would the degree of consumer protection afforded by the [Connecticut Uniform Securities Act].ⁿ¹⁵

The scope and force of "access" authority under Blue Sky laws is perhaps no better illustrated than by the 2002 investigative inquiry undertaken by the Attorney General of New York under that state's securities law with regard to the acts and practices of Merrill Lynch & Co. and others associated with Merrill Lynch in connection with analyst recommendations of stocks. Acting under authority of New York's "Martin Act," the Attorney General compelled access to internal information and documents relating to the "offer, sale, issuance, promotion, advertisement, exchange, marketing, distribution or transfer of, or investment advice for, securities in and from the State of New York."ⁿ¹⁶ The Martin Act is primarily an antifraud statute, the main feature of which is establishing the authority of the Attorney General to act, either upon a complaint or otherwise, and to investigate all forms of fraud and fraudulent practices involving securities transactions.ⁿ¹⁷ The New York statute empowers the Attorney General to investigate generally and to compel the production of all such data and information as he or she may deem relevant. Specifically, the Attorney General or a deputy or designated officer:

[I]s empowered to subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, examine them under oath before him or a magistrate, a court of record, or a judge or justice thereof and require the production of any books or papers which he deems relevant or material to the inquiry.ⁿ¹⁸

The exercise of this authority to gain access to, among other things, internal e-mails of the firm, produced an historic May 21, 2002 agreement between the New York Attorney General and Merrill Lynch regarding, among other things, research practices, analyst compensation, research recommendations, and disclosures during the offering process, and the payment of $100 million as a civil settlement.

Uniform Act section 407, or its equivalent, has been adopted in many states,ⁿ¹⁹ and, subject to constitutional and other reasonable limitations discussed earlier, courts have supported broad investigative authority and the exercise of subpoena authority under these provisions as matters of compelling governmental interest in identifying and rectifying violations of securities laws.ⁿ²⁰ Documents and information gathered in a current and on-going investigative process are generally privileged under state public records laws.ⁿ²¹

Non-Uniform Act states have prescribed their administrators' investigative authority in different ways. In Illinois, for example, the Secretary of State or an appointee is empowered to administer oaths, subpoena witnesses, and take evidence in the conduct of investigations. A state court may treat a violation of such investigative directives as a contempt of court.ⁿ²² In New York, the Martin Act empowers the Attorney General to investigate any fraudulent practices believed to have been carried out.ⁿ²³ The Ohio Securities Law declares that the Division of Securities may, in the best interests of the public and if necessary for the protection of investors, require statements or reports, examine any party under oath, require attendance at hearings, and initiate criminal proceedings.ⁿ²⁴ Oregon has adopted only part of the Uniform Act provisions,ⁿ²⁵ as is the case with Washington, New Mexico,ⁿ²⁶ New Hampshire,ⁿ²⁷ and Rhode Island.ⁿ²⁸ Virginia authorizes the Commissioner to investigate possible violations of the law and to require the person under investigation to pay the investigation costs.ⁿ²⁹

Multi-state investigations and inter-jurisdictional information sharing are increasingly prominent considerations in defining the scope of state authority under Blue Sky laws. The Revised Uniform Securities Act expressly addressed inter-jurisdictional sharing of information, that is, the product of investigative authority,ⁿ³⁰ and today an important element of the 2002 Uniform Act is to promote uniformity and cooperation among agencies. Section 608(a) of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act provides:

The administrator shall, in its discretion, cooperate, coordinate, consult, and subject to Section 607, share records and information with the securities regulator of another State, Canada, a Canadian province or territory, a foreign jurisdiction, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the United States Department of Justice, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities Investor Protection Corporation, a self-regulatory organization, a national or international organization of securities regulators, a federal or state banking and insurance regulator, and a governmental law enforcement agency to effectuate greater uniformity in securities matters among the federal government, self-regulatory organizations, States, and foreign governments.

Cooperation specifically includes sharing and exchanging information and documents.ⁿ³¹ The original Uniform Act contains no specific sharing or inter-jurisdictional cooperation provision. Rather, it only addresses disclosure of information "when necessary or appropriate in a proceeding or investigation under this act."ⁿ³² Some states adopting the Uniform Act have modified the provision to empower administrators more broadly. Michigan, for example, provides for disclosure of information when necessary or appropriate in a proceeding or investigation, but also "[t]o federal, state, local, or foreign governmental agencies for their own official use."ⁿ³³ New Hampshire provides for generalized "interstate cooperation" so far as it will enhance the purposes of the securities laws.ⁿ³⁴ Louisiana provides that the commissioner "shall cooperate with the administrators of the securities laws of other states and of the United States with a view to assisting those administrators in the enforcement of their securities laws."ⁿ³⁵ Although the Uniform Act does not clearly authorize inter-jurisdictional information sharing, the absence of any prohibition has been interpreted to mean that an administrator should be permitted to do so. In Griffin v. S.W. Devanney & Co.,ⁿ³⁶ the Colorado Supreme Court opined that the disclosure of information concerning violations of that state's version of the Uniform Act would substantially contribute to the Act's goal of protecting the public from fraudulent and deceptive practices in securities transactions. Construing the Colorado statute to prohibit disclosure of information to other state and federal regulatory and law enforcement agencies, said the court, would impair this basic objective by shielding from scrutiny illegal practices committed on persons in other jurisdictions by persons acting within the state.

Attention to inter-jurisdictional cooperation and information sharing in cases like this and the specific focus on it in the Revised Uniform Act reflects growing recognition of the realities of mobility between jurisdictions and the multi-jurisdictional impact of conduct in a global marketplace. Joint federal-state and multi-state investigation and enforcement initiatives have shown themselves to be effective today and effective international cooperation among regulatory and law enforcement agencies is developing at a quick pace.ⁿ³⁷ (n1)Footnote 1. Unif. Sec. Act § 407(a). See also 2002 Uniform Act § 602(a)-(b), which is modeled directly on the original section 407. In Official Comments to section 602, the drafters added this further insight into subpoena power under the Act: The scope of subpoena enforcement in each state is a general matter for judicial determination. Under section 602, an individual subpoenaed to testify by the administrator is not compelled to testify within the meaning of these sections simply by service of a subpoena. Under section 602(b), an individual can be subpoenaed and compelled to attend. Once in attendance, the individual can assert an evidentiary privilege or exemption. See section 601(c), including the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. If an individual refuses to testify or give evidence, the administrator may apply (or have the appropriate state attorney apply) to the appropriate court for the relief specified in section 602(c). If the individual invokes the privilege against self-incrimination, section 602(d) allows the administrator to apply to the appropriate court to compel testimony under the "use immunity" provision barring the record compelled or other evidence obtained from being used in a criminal case. See People v. District Court, 894 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1995) . The phrase "directly or indirectly" in section 602(e) is intended to include testimony, other evidence, or other information derived from immunized testimony, statements, records, or evidence. Off. Comment No. 2, 2002 Uniform Act.

(n2)Footnote 2. Unif. Sec. Act § 407(b). The subpoena power has been held to include the authority of one state administrator to issue a subpoena at the request of a sister state administrator if the sister state administrator alleges conduct that violates the Blue Sky law of the subpoenaing jurisdiction, see American Microtel, Inc. v. Nevada, [1993-1994 Transfer Binder] Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 73,856 (Nev. Dist. Ct. 1991).

Subpoena enforcement authority is also expressly addressed in section 407 of the Uniform Act:

(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the [insert name of appropriate court], upon application by the Administrator, may issue to the person an order requiring him to appear before the Administrator, or the officer designated by him, there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered or to give evidence touching the matter under investigation or in question. Failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt of court.

In the exercise of their investigative authority, state securities regulators enjoy qualified immunity from suit for actions taken during an investigative search. See Karel v. Gee, CCH Blue Sky L. Rep P 74,741, at 79,943 (D. Idaho 2008) (although it was ultimately determined that the Department lacked authority to inspect certain documents, defendant regulators were entitled to qualified immunity because they were carrying out discretionary functions). Qualified immunity of state administrators in the exercise of their authority is discussed further in § 14.07[1].

The scope of investigative authority generally, and subpoena power in particular, typically relates to both public and private investigations. Administrators may conduct private investigations and impose a requirement of confidentiality. In State ex rel. Brant v. Bank of America, Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 74,236, at 78,084, 62 P.3d 707 (Kan. Ct. App. 2001) , the Kansas Supreme Court held that the Securities Commissioner is empowered to prohibit a bank from notifying customers that bank records have been subpoenaed. The court upheld the Commissioner's decision regarding what is required for an effective investigation in the securities field over the bank's desire to notify its customers that their bank records have been subpoenaed. A reasonable interpretation of the Commissioner's authority to conduct private investigations, said the court, includes the power to require confidentiality. As to the privacy of customer bank records, the court concluded that customers had no reasonable expectation of privacy as a matter of law and that the bank's privacy policy clearly informed customers that they could not always expect notification.

Rptr. 541 (1987) , in which the court rejected the claim that privacy rights were violated by a subpoena requiring production of names and identifying information of purchasers of coin investments. "[T]he Commissioner has sufficiently compelling governmental interest in identifying and rectifying violations of the securities laws to justify the de minimis intrusion caused by disclosure of coin collectors' names and addresses."

In Pecevich, the court also rejected a challenge to the administrator's use of e-mail subpoenas to obtain documents and information from third parties. On this point, although the court found the practice "troubling," the challenge was rejected because the petitioner had no standing to challenge the validity of a subpoena not directed to him. But see Slade v. Schneider, 212 Ariz. 176, 129 P.3d 465 (Ct. App. 2006) , in which the court determined that the Arizona Corporation Commission waived the protections that the Arizona Confidentiality Statute provides to names, documents, and information acquired during investigations. Two defendants, charged with securities fraud by the Commission, sought to compel discovery of investor names and other information obtained by the Commission's accountant and its investigator during their investigation. The Arizona Confidentiality Statute protects names of complainants, information, and documents the Commission obtains during an investigation from discovery unless they are made a matter of public record. The Commission identified the accountant as an expert witness and the defendants thus requested production of all notes, memoranda, and summaries the accountant and the investigator prepared, and which related to specific allegations in the Commission's complaint. The Court of Appeals concluded that the Commission had waived the statutory confidentiality afforded to investors' names, information, and documents by designating the accountant as a testifying expert. The court also concluded that the Commission waived confidentiality for information obtained by the investigator because it had been made a matter of public record by including the investigator's affidavit with the complaint it filed.

Furthermore, the burden is on the party objecting to the subpoena to demonstrate that the documents called for are utterly irrelevant to any proper inquiry.

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.04

§ 14.04 Administrative Enforcement Proceedings

In all Blue Sky laws, securities administrators are empowered to proceed administratively against persons or entities engaging in, or that have engaged in, conduct in violation of the law or any rule, regulation, or order issued under it. Administrative proceedings represent the most flexible and efficient means of addressing violations and include the power to issue cease-and-desist orders, to suspend licenses, and in some states, the power to impose fines or civil money penalties.ⁿ¹ These remedies are the product of administrative proceedings and adjudicative procedures that are less formal and considerably more expeditious than litigation conducted in accordance with rules or requirements established as a matter of administrative procedure acts.ⁿ² While procedural due process is an essential element of administrative proceedings under Blue Sky laws, securities administrators act under broadly stated authority in the public interest for the protection of investors. As stated in the Colorado Securities Act:

The purposes of [the Act] are to protect investors and maintain public confidence in securities markets while avoiding unreasonable burdens on participants in capital markets. This article is remedial in nature and is to be broadly construed to effectuate its purposes.ⁿ³

Procedural due process in this setting requires that there be sufficient administrative and statutory standards and safeguards to protect against the exercise of unfettered discretion by administrators. Nevertheless, the "public interest" standard under which administrators act sufficiently establishes the limits of discretion without any further definition so long as the criteria for determining public interest are based on statutory purposes and objectives.ⁿ⁴ Administrative procedure acts in all states prescribe specific notice, hearing, and review requirements applicable to Blue Sky administrators in this process. Given broadly stated legislative mandates, deference by courts to securities administrators in the exercise of their authority is considerable. Where actions are taken, or determinations are made that are consistent with the public interest and based upon reliable, probative, and substantial evidence, the likelihood of judicial reversal is small.ⁿ⁵ That is one factor explaining the prominence of "cease and desist" orders among the weapons in the arsenal of Blue Sky administrators over civil injunctive actions brought in state courts.ⁿ⁶

The most flexible of administrative remedies, the cease-and-desist order is an efficient substitute for civil injunctive proceedings in court. These orders, considered further below, are typically the product of an internally prescribed process and not necessarily subject to hearing requirements prior to issuance.

[1] Cease-and-Desist Orders

Blue Sky laws generally authorize the issuance of cease-and-desist orders, although with some variations in the scope or circumstances in which that authority is allowed. The Ohio provision is typical of those granting the broadest authority:

Whenever it appears to the division of securities, from its files, upon complaint, or otherwise, that any person has engaged in, is engaged in, or is about to engage in any practice declared to be illegal or prohibited ... or defined as fraudulent ... or any other deceptive scheme or practice in connection with the sale of securities, or when the division believes it to be in the best interests of the public and necessary for the protection of investors, the division may ... issue and cause to be served by certified mail upon all persons affected an order requiring the person or persons to cease and desist from the acts or practices appearing to the division of securities to constitute violations of [the statute].ⁿ⁷

The Uniform Act does not expressly provide for cease-and-desist orders, although the power to issue them might be fairly implied under section 412(a), in regard to issuance of such "orders as are necessary to carry out the provisions of [the] act."ⁿ⁸ The Revised Uniform Act does expressly empower administrators to issue the orders based upon a reasonable belief that a violation of the act has occurred or is occurring, but limits the authority to do so without notice and an opportunity for hearing to those situations in which securities are being, or have been, offered or sold in violation of the law, or in which a person is acting as a broker-dealer or investment adviser in violation of licensing provisions.ⁿ⁹ Adopting the broadest view of authority, the 2002 Uniform Securities Act empowers administrators to act summarily to issue a cease-and-desist order not only against any person that has engaged, is engaged, or is about to engage in an act, practice, or course of business that would violate the law or any rule, but also against any person that "has, is, or is about to materially aid an act, practice or course of business" constituting a violation.ⁿ¹⁰ The scope of permitted orders under the 2002 Act includes requiring any other action necessary or appropriate to comply with the Act.ⁿ¹¹ In one form or another, cease-and-desist authority is a feature in most Blue Sky laws.ⁿ¹²

The essential predicate to issuance of a cease-and-desist order is a reasonable belief that a person has engaged in, or is about to engage in, any act or practice (in some jurisdictions, any "transaction")ⁿ¹³ constituting a violation of the Blue Sky law or any rule or order issued thereunder. As the Ohio example above illustrates, the predicate need not be the result of a formal investigative process. Arkansas, another example, requires only "sufficient grounds or evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner" that the violation did occur or is about to occur.ⁿ¹⁴

Several states also expressly require the cease-and-desist order to be "in the public interest or for the protection of investors" as a prerequisite to issuance.ⁿ¹⁵

Cease-and-desist authority is most commonly and effectively employed to deal with the offer and sale of unregistered securities or with the offer or sale of securities by unlicensed persons. California, for example, expressly provides for issuance of an order to "desist and refrain" when the Commissioner is of the opinion that either: (1) the sale of the security is subject to qualification (i.e., registration) under the law and is being offered or sold without first being qualified or (2) any person is acting as a broker-dealer or investment adviser without the proper certificate to act as such.ⁿ¹⁶

Although many cease-and-desist orders are issued following notice and an opportunity to be heard, quick administrative enforcement action by way of summarily issued cease-and-desist orders in emergency circumstances is a means of protecting the public interest.ⁿ¹⁷ As a federal district court observed in response to a challenge to a summary cease-and-desist order issued by the Iowa administrator:

[T]he state has a very strong interest in quick action to protect the public from sales of securities which may violate [the law]. A large volume of securities can be sold in a relatively short period of time. The interest of protecting the public, as weighed against plaintiffs' interests in selling the securities, is paramount. Therefore, any damage to plaintiffs under these circumstances is outweighed by the public's interest of protection from possible illegal or even fraudulent sales of securities.ⁿ¹⁸

The Revised Uniform Act specifically provides for emergency administrative proceedings in situations involving an immediate danger to the public welfare requiring immediate action. Section 712 authorizes the administrator to take such action as is necessary to prevent or avoid immediate danger to the public welfare that justifies use of emergency procedures. With that limitation, however, the administrator may issue an order that is effective upon issuance, to be followed thereafter as quickly as feasible with complete proceedings that would otherwise be required under the state's administrative procedures act if the matter did not involve an immediate danger.ⁿ¹⁹ Some states place outside limits on the time in which some hearing must be held at which the merits of the order can be evaluated. On the other hand, the 2002 Uniform Act takes a more flexible approach, providing that within 15 days after receiving a written request the matter will be scheduled for hearing. However, if there is no hearing requested and none is ordered by the administrator within 30 days after the date of service of the order, the order becomes final by operation of law.ⁿ²⁰

Typical state procedures for cease-and-desist orders in urgent circumstances follow the Revised Uniform Act model. A "temporary" order may be issued without a hearing,ⁿ²¹ with some provision for notice to the person who is the subject of the order. Notice references vary. Alaska, Montana, and New Hampshire, for example, require "reasonable" notice. Texas, on the other hand, requires notice to each person affected by the order by personal delivery or certified or registered mail. Notice in all cases must include the right of the recipient to request a hearing on the order and, in most states, must also state the reasons for entry of the order. Typically, this procedure also involves a statement, or findings, that the public interest will be irreparably harmed by any delay in issuing the order.ⁿ²²

This is a common requirement for all cease-and-desist orders, not just summary orders. Florida, for example, requires that the order contain a statement of facts. Ohio requires the cease-and-desist order to specify the sections of the Blue Sky law that appear to the Division of Securities to be violated and the facts constituting the violation. Because cease-and-desist orders are predicated on what "appears" to the administrator to be acts or conduct in violation of the Blue Sky law, a more or less complete recitation of the basis for the administrator's conclusion is normal procedure, particularly since the right to a hearing is involved and, if requested, the administrator will be required to justify issuance of the order before an administrative hearing officer.ⁿ²³

An opportunity for a hearing is a critical consideration in the cease-and-desist order process. In most instances a hearing is not required. However, in all cases the opportunity for one is essential in the process and, as discussed above, must be part of the notice of the order. If a hearing is requested, Blue Sky laws generally prescribe time limits within which it must occur.ⁿ²⁴ If a hearing, once requested, is not held within the prescribed time, it may be rescinded by operation of law.ⁿ²⁵ On the other hand, if a hearing is not requested, the cease-and-desist order will typically become permanent and remain in full force and effect unless later modified or vacated. While cease-and-desist orders are highly efficient means of administrative enforcement action, they are not self-executing. As an administrative order they have the force of law, such that non-compliance is a basis for further action. The 2002 Uniform Act, for example, permits a final administrative order under section 604 to be filed with the clerk of any court of competent jurisdiction. Once filed, the order has the same effect as a judgment of the court and may be enforced or satisfied in the same manner as any other judgment of the court. However, the enforcement authority does not stop there as the Act goes on to provide:

If a person does not comply with an order under this section, the administrator may petition a court of competent jurisdiction to enforce the order. The court may not require the administrator to post a bond in an action or proceeding under this section. If the court finds, after service and opportunity for hearing, that the person was not in compliance with the order, the court may adjudge the person in civil contempt of the order. The court may impose a further civil penalty against the person for contempt in an amount not less than $[] but not greater than $[] for each violation and may grant any other relief the court determines is just and proper in the circumstances.ⁿ²⁶

This approach to enforcement of cease-and-desist orders is more direct than the common and more general, Blue Sky law provisions imposing penalties for violation of any rule "or order."ⁿ²⁷ Ultimate enforcement of a cease-and-desist order may also be a matter for civil injunctive proceedings or criminal reference. However, in those states in which administrative civil penalties or assessments are permitted to remedy rule or order violations, administrators have the intermediate authority to impose such assessments, essentially fines, for violation of cease-and-desist orders. Administrative civil penalties are discussed further in the next section.ⁿ²⁸ In many instances, final cease-and-desist orders are the product of negotiated settlements, entered by consent. Some Blue Sky laws expressly address such consent orders. In Connecticut, for example, at any time after the issuance of a cease-and-desist order, the Commissioner may, in his or her discretion, accept an agreement by any person charged with violating any Blue Sky law provision to enter into a written consent order in lieu of the adjudicative hearing process.ⁿ²⁹ The consent order must contain: (1) an express waiver of the right to seek judicial review or otherwise challenge or contest the validity of the order; (2) a provision that the order may be used in construing the terms of the consent order; (3) a statement that the consent order shall become final when issued; (4) a specific assurance that none of the violations alleged in the order shall occur in the future; (5) such other terms and conditions as are necessary to further the purposes and policies of [the Connecticut Uniform Securities Act]; (6) the signature of each of the individual respondents evidencing his or her consent; and (7) the signature of the Commissioner or of his or her authorized representative.ⁿ³⁰ Consent orders also often incorporate obligations on payment of costs associated with the investigative procedure and other affirmative undertakings by respondents.ⁿ³¹

A final cease-and-desist order is a final order of the Administrator, and Blue Sky laws provide for an appeal of an order by any person aggrieved by it. Indeed, section 411 of the Uniform Act provides:

(a) Any person aggrieved by a final order of the [Administrator] may obtain a review of the order in the [insert name of appropriate court] by filing in court, within sixty days after the entry of the order, a written petition praying that the order be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith served upon the [Administrator], and thereupon the [Administrator] shall certify and file in court a copy of the filing and evidence upon which the order was entered. When these have been filed, the court has exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, enforce, or set aside the order, in whole or in part. The findings of the [Administrator] as to the facts, if supported by competent, material and substantial evidence, are conclusive. If either party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional material evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce the evidence in the hearing before the [Administrator], the court may order the additional evidence to be taken before the [Administrator] and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such conditions as the court considers proper. The [Administrator] may modify his findings and order by reason of the additional evidence and shall file in court the additional evidence together with any modified or new findings or order. [The judgment of the court is final, subject to review by the (insert name of appropriate court).]ⁿ³²

Although cease-and-desist orders are reviewable in the same manner as any other administrative order, one that is supported by reliable, probative, and substantive evidence will generally be upheld,ⁿ³³ and several states mandate by statute that the findings of the administrator as to the facts, if supported by competent, material, and substantial evidence, are conclusive.ⁿ³⁴ Nevertheless, cease-and-desist orders are treated no differently than any other order and may be set aside through trial and appellate court review proceedings in accordance with the state's administrative procedures act.ⁿ³⁵ Blue Sky laws often control the process only to the extent of designating the court of general jurisdiction in which appeals from orders must be lodged.ⁿ³⁶ Normally, the designated court is that for the county in which the state capitol is located.

[2] Administrative Civil Penalties

Several states include civil money penalties as part of the administrative enforcement arsenal. Alabama, for example, provides:

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.04

(a) The commission may by order, if it finds such order to be in the public interest, impose an administrative assessment upon any person who violates any provision of [the Act] or any rule or order issued under [the Act].

(b) Any administrative assessment imposed under this section shall not exceed $5,000.00 for each act or omission that constitutes the basis for an order issued under this section, except that the amount of the administrative assessment may not exceed $50,000.00 for any person subject to the order.ⁿ³⁷

Alabama further provides that for purposes of determining the amount or extent of the administrative assessment to be imposed on any particular respondent, the commission is to consider specific factors including the frequency, persistence, and willfulness of the conduct constituting a violation and the number of persons adversely affected by the conduct.ⁿ³⁸

The Uniform Act makes no mention of civil money penalties. However, indicative of the trend to broaden administrative enforcement powers, the Revised Uniform Act expressly empowers a court, upon a showing by the state administrator that a person has violated the act, to impose upon violators:

[A] civil penalty up to a maximum of [$2500] for a single violation or of [$25,000] for multiple violations in a single proceeding or a series of related proceedings.ⁿ³⁹ The 2002 Uniform Act likewise expressly provides for the imposition of civil money penalties. However, unlike the Revised Uniform Act, it empowers the administrator to impose the penalty as part of a final order.ⁿ⁴⁰

Civil money penalties are, functionally, fines. Some states refer to them in precisely that manner.ⁿ⁴¹ However characterized, the availability of money penalties allows for valuable flexibility in shaping efficient resolutions of administrative proceedings.

Authority to seek court imposition of a civil penalty, as set out in the Revised Act, is preserved in the 2002 Uniform Act as one form of specifically available relief in a civil enforcement action. However, at the same time, as noted above, the power of the administrator directly to impose a civil penalty (including the costs of investigation) in an administrative enforcement proceeding is also made express in the 2002 Act.ⁿ⁴² In doing so, the drafters of the 2002 Act thus recognize the prevalence of administrative civil penalty authority in Blue Sky laws. Still, a number of states do not provide for such administrative money penalties. Fining authority is sometimes perceived as an opportunity for violators to "buy" their way out of more severe sanctions, such as license terminations or judicial enforcement proceedings. As a practical matter, however, short of license suspensions and revocations, the ability of state securities agencies to impose sanctions in the absence of fining authority is confined by the extent of resources largely to cease-and-desist orders or criminal referrals. As discussed further in section 14.07 below, civil injunctive proceedings and ancillary judicial remedies, although available to administrators, are not so widely employed. Administrative money penalties or fining authority bridge the gap in practical application of enforcement remedies.

Administrative penalties are subject to hearing requirements and procedures. Oregon is typical in requiring that an administrative civil penalty under the Blue Sky law may only be imposed after the filing of a complaint and a hearing (or other proceeding) before the Commissioner or his or her representative under rules or orders as adopted by the Commissioner.ⁿ⁴³

After an order for the assessment of a civil penalty becomes final, unless the penalty is paid within 10 days, the order is converted to a judgment against the party and may be filed with any county clerk in the state.ⁿ⁴⁴ After the penalty is entered on the judgment docket, it becomes "a lien upon the title to any interest in property owned by the person against whom the order is entered, and execution may be issued upon the order in the same manner as execution upon a judgment of a court of record."ⁿ⁴⁵ Any amount assessed and collected is to be paid into the general fund of the state treasury. This is typical where money penalties are allowed, although in some instances the money collected from fines or administrative penalties is dedicated to particular public interest purposes. In New Mexico, for example, civil penalties, costs of investigation, and any other administrative assessments collected by the administrator pursuant to enforcement actions is deposited to a fund used solely for education and training of the public in matters concerning securities laws and investment issues.ⁿ⁴⁶

Blue Sky laws such as these, which empower administrators to assess money penalties against violators, parallel section 21B of the Securities Exchange Act,ⁿ⁴⁷ which grants to the Securities and Exchange Commission the authority to impose a civil penalty (after notice and opportunity for hearing) when it finds that a person has willfully violated or aided, abetted, counseled, commanded, induced, or procured another in the violation of any provision of the federal securities laws. Older state penalty provisions generally do not address the matter of secondary violators, such as aiders and abettors, but rather define the authority as extending simply to those who willfully violate the Blue Sky law, or, tracking the Revised Uniform Act language, who simply are found to have violated it.ⁿ⁴⁸ The 2002 Uniform Act, on the other hand, reflects a modern approach, extending authority to persons who materially aid in an act, practice, or course of business constituting a violation of the Act.ⁿ⁴⁹

Administrative fines are punitive in nature. Administrators may therefore be required to present proof of the violation under a "clear and convincing" standard. In Dept. of Banking and Fin. v. Osborne, Stern & Co.,ⁿ⁵⁰ the Florida Supreme Court observed:

[A]n administrative fine deprives the person fined of substantial rights in property. Administrative fines, like the one imposed upon respondents in this case, are generally punitive in nature ... Because the imposition of administrative fines under section 517.221(3), like license revocation proceedings, are penal in nature and implicate significant property rights, the extension of the clear and convincing evidence standard to justify the imposition of such a fine is warranted.ⁿ⁵¹

Nevertheless, it has also been held that administrative fines are not to be considered "prosecutions" or "suits" such that a statute of limitations would apply. In Maryland Sec. Comm'r v. U.S. Securities Corp.,ⁿ⁵² a Maryland appellate court held that an administrative proceeding before the commissioner arising out of an alleged scheme to defraud investors had as its purpose the protection of the public from fraudulent and misleading practices of securities broker, and although "quasi-judicial," such a proceeding is neither a prosecution nor a suit to which the state's statute of limitations would apply.

Because civil penalties are punitive in nature, actions by state administrators may have constitutional implications. In United States v. Halper,ⁿ⁵³ the U.S. Supreme Court opined that administrative penalties could, under some circumstances, be deemed to constitute criminal punishment, and thus implicate the double jeopardy clause of the Fifth Amendment when there was a subsequent criminal prosecution arising out of the same circumstances. However, in Hudson v. United States,ⁿ⁵⁴ the Supreme Court determined that absent "the clearest proof" that a civil penalty or sanction was intended to be a criminal punishment, statutes authorizing civil penalties should be taken at face, that is, as a civil remedy not to be converted into the equivalent of a criminal penalty. The Court counseled that the inquiry begins with legislative intent. Unless it is clear that the legislature intended a particular sanction to be criminal, a civil remedy should not be transformed into a criminal penalty for double jeopardy purposes. In making that determination, courts should consider, among other things, whether the civil sanction involves some affirmative disability or restraint such as imprisonment; whether it has been regarded as a punishment in the past; to what extent a mental state embracing intent to deceive or manipulate is involved; and whether the sanction promotes the aims of "punishment," namely deterrence beyond that intended by normal regulation.

[3] Other Administrative Remedies

Whether or not expressly prescribed in Blue Sky laws, state administrators enjoy considerable freedom in crafting and imposing remedies through administrative proceedings that are consistent with the investor protection objectives of the laws. The imposition of conditions, remedial undertakings, or other case specific requirements is common in the resolution of administrative proceedings. Rescission offers, for example, are commonly imposed as a condition to permitting registration or qualification of an offering of securities previously carried out without compliance with registration provisions or by persons not properly licensed in the state. In the context of agreed orders or negotiated consent settlements, administrators, likewise, have the freedom to obtain investor remedies, such as restitution,ⁿ⁵⁵ special disclosure, supervisory procedures, monitoring, and specific undertakings.ⁿ⁵⁶

It is important to note that the ability in particular instances of a Blue Sky administrator directly to impose a financial remedy for the benefit of investors, such as restitution or rescission, is normally not the result of a specific statutory authorization. Rather, these forms of remedies fall within the range of court-ordered ancillary remedies available to administrators in the context of civil injunctive proceedings. However, there are exceptions, as in Montana, where the Commissioner is expressly empowered to order restitution as part of an administrative proceeding.ⁿ⁵⁷

Even where Blue Sky laws empower administrators to impose remedies such as restitution, they do not empower administrators to interfere with or impede private actions. In Whelen v. Securities Commissioner,ⁿ⁵⁸ the Delaware Chancery Court overturned an administrative order that suspended broker-dealer and salesperson licenses, imposed fines, and required restitution to investors who had purchased unregistered securities.ⁿ⁵⁹ The investors involved in Whelen had entered into customer agreements with the broker-dealer firm that required binding arbitration of claims against the broker-dealer. The Division of Securities Hearing Officer concluded that he could nevertheless award restitution against the president of the broker-dealer firm because the individual was not himself a party to the arbitration agreement. The Chancery Court held that to permit the administrative award of restitution against the individual would effectively "end run" the arbitration agreement and that the Delaware public policy would not support that result.

It may also be that through combinations of Blue Sky laws with other statutory authority, as for example with state anti-racketeering or consumer protection laws, Blue Sky administrators and attorneys general may, in some instances, join to pursue judicial remedies for the direct benefit of investors.ⁿ⁶⁰ However, these types of actions are based upon express statutory authority outside Blue Sky laws and are subject to entirely different procedures. Remedies available in purely administrative proceedings are those that are either specifically allowed by the Blue Sky law, imposed by regulation as necessary to carry out an express statutory authority or those that are achieved in negotiated settlements of enforcement actions.

Administrative enforcement remedies also include the power to suspend or to issue a "stop order," as to a registration statement for the distribution of securities. Section 306 of the Uniform Act empowers the administrator to issue a "stop order" denying effectiveness to, or suspending the effectiveness of, any registration statement when it is determined to be in the public interest, and, as an example of several available criteria, that the offering has worked or tended to work a fraud upon the purchasers.ⁿ⁶¹ An order suspending the effectiveness of a registration statement may be issued summarily, but subject to notification upon its entry and the opportunity for hearing thereafter.ⁿ⁶²

But for summary orders suspending effectiveness of a registration, the administrator may only act to issue a "stop order" after notice, hearing, and written findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Act thus makes a distinction between emergency administrative action taken to protect the investing public in the face of an on-going course of conduct pursuant to an already effective registration statement and an order simply denying effectiveness of a registration statement or revoking it.ⁿ⁶³

NSMIA's redefinition of state and federal regulatory roles in regard to securities distributions that are national in character adds another dimension to the significance of state administrative powers in that setting. As presented more thoroughly elsewhere in this treatise,ⁿ⁶⁴ NSMIA preempts state authority to impose registration or qualification requirements on the offering of securities falling within the "covered security" qualifications of the Act. Where a covered security is involved, no "registration statement" will be filed at the state level, and thus, administrative enforcement powers such as those prescribed in Uniform Act section 306, expressly premised on a registration in the state, are logically preempted as well. However, NSMIA also expressly preserves state antifraud enforcement authority and a state administrator might appropriately act against the offering of an NSMIA covered security in his or her state when it is determined that a fraud is being committed either by reason of the terms of the offering itself or by the conduct of an intermediary. Although state administrators may not act to suspend the registration statement of an NSMIA covered security, whether a cease-and-desist order may be issued against the issuer or an intermediary (or a summary suspension of a broker-dealer license under section 204(c) of the Uniform Act)ⁿ⁶⁵ when it is determined that the offering involves fraud or fraudulent conduct is a different issue.

The contours of state administrative enforcement authority in regard to NSMIA covered securities are yet to be shaped. However, it is clear as a matter of law that while antifraud enforcement authority is not intended effectively to allow the imposition of registration and qualification requirements by the states, the power to act in the face of fraud or fraudulent conduct remains intact. The power to act administratively against intermediaries will likely emerge as not only the logical, but the most appropriately exercised power in the national market setting.

[4] Culpability Standards for Administrative Actions

Blue Sky laws commonly prescribe the authority of the administrator to issue orders and impose administrative remedies or penalties against persons who "willfully" violate the law. Section 412 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, for example, outlines administrative sanctions that may be imposed on a party who "willfully violated or willfully failed to comply with [the Act]."ⁿ⁶⁶ However, Blue Sky laws do not define the term "willfully." In the context of administrative actions, state courts have thus grappled with the question whether "willfully" means knowingly and intentionally violating the law versus knowingly and intentionally committing the acts that constitute a violation. In Cox v. Garvin,ⁿ⁶⁷ the Georgia Supreme Court addressed the issue and concluded that to require proof in an administrative action that a person knowingly and intentionally violated the Blue Sky law would frustrate the objective of safeguarding investors by making it very difficult to impose civil penalties.ⁿ⁶⁸ The appropriate interpretation of "willfully" in the context of Blue Sky laws, said the court, is that the person intended to do the act prohibited by the statute. Thus, "willfully" simply requires the intentional doing of the wrongful acts--no knowledge of the specific provision or regulation is required. As discussed further below, this is also the approach widely taken in criminal enforcement actions.ⁿ⁶⁹

[5] Appeals

Although judicial appeals by aggrieved personsⁿ⁷⁰ from final administrative orders are provided in all Blue Sky laws,ⁿ⁷¹ the scope of such appeals is generally limited to the agency record to determine whether the order or determination was based upon substantial evidence.

"Substantial evidence" in this context means: "[T]hat quantum of probative evidence that a fact finder would accept as adequate to support a conclusion, without regard to the existence of conflicting evidence."ⁿ⁷² Courts will review the evidence presented to the administrator in order to determine, in traditional administrative law terms, whether the action of the administrator was arbitrary or capricious.ⁿ⁷³ In doing so, the administrator's determination is accorded considerable weight and the reviewing court will not substitute its judgment for that of the administrator as to the weight of the evidence on questions of fact.ⁿ⁷⁴ If a reasonable mind reviewing the evidence could determine that a violation of the Blue Sky law occurred, the administrative determination will not be upset in court.ⁿ⁷⁵

The range of administrative orders and determinations under Blue Sky laws is considerable. Some of the most significant orders from which judicial appeals may be taken are those issued on registration statements or licensing applications. Although not purely enforcement orders, the orders in these contexts have no less impact and the statutory standards on which administrators rely in making them (as defined by their own agency rules) leave little room for judicial review so long as the record discloses some evidence on which the administrator could rationally and reasonably rely. An Ohio appellate court well illustrated the point in Fehrman v. Ohio Div. Securities,ⁿ⁷⁶ in which the administrator's denial of a securities salesperson license was upheld. As in most states, the Ohio Division of Securities is empowered under the Blue Sky law to refuse a license based on broadly stated qualitative or character criteria ("good business repute"), which the administrator may specifically define by rule. An Ohio rule provides that an individual may be found to be not of good business repute if the individual has been the subject of any prior disciplinary action. In Fehrman, the administrator applied this criterion to deny a license to an individual solely on the basis of two NASD letters of acceptance, waiver, and consent entered into by the individual that contained no findings of any wrongdoing. The applicant asserted that the denial of a license was not supported by reliable, probative, and substantial evidence when the two letters in question made no specific findings. The court disagreed, holding that the letters put disciplinary actions consistent with the administrative rule into evidence and that nothing more was required. The administrator is not required, said the court, to make any independent findings where the only evidence needed is the fact that the prior letters, with or without findings of wrongdoing, constitute disciplinary actions as provided in the rule.ⁿ⁷⁷ Substantial evidence for purposes of administrative orders and determinations need not, therefore, be the product of investigative proceedings and independent fact-finding and administrators enjoy much latitude. Still, there are limits to the extent to which deference to administrative determinations is accorded. In Schwaemmie Construction Co. v. Michigan Dept. of Commerce,ⁿ⁷⁸ for example, the Michigan Supreme Court set aside an administrative order concerning matters that the court found to be unrelated to the issuance, offer, sale, or purchase of securities. The administrative action involved the imposition of conditions on release of impounded proceeds of an offering that the court found was an unwarranted intrusion into the internal affairs of an issuer, rather than a proper exercise of the protective mission of the Blue Sky law to protect investors from fraud.ⁿ⁷⁹ The case makes clear that the exercise of discretion by an administrator in issuing orders and determinations must bear reasonable relation to the legislative purposes of the authorizing statute.

[6] Reciprocal Enforcement and Cooperation

In the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 (SLUSA),ⁿ⁸⁰ Congress directed the Securities and Exchange Commission, in cooperation with the states, to take steps to encourage the adoption of state laws authorizing reciprocal subpoena enforcement in state securities investigations. Although the original Uniform Securities Act does not include any provision for reciprocal subpoena enforcement, the Revised (1985) Uniform Act did address this issue, to specifically provide:

If the activities constituting an alleged violation for which the information is sought would be a violation of this [Act] had the activities occurred in this State, the [Administrator] may issue and apply to enforce subpoenas in this State at the request of a securities agency or administrator of another state.ⁿ⁸¹

In 1987, the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) adopted this provision, with a minor rewording, as a NASAA amendment to section 407 of the 1956 Act. The NASAA amendment provides:

The (Administrator) may issue and apply to enforce subpoenas in this state at the request of a securities agency or administrator of another state if the activities constituting an alleged violation for which information is sought would be a violation of this (Act) if the activities had occurred in this state.ⁿ⁸²

Several states have enacted a reciprocal subpoena enforcement provision in their Blue Sky laws.ⁿ⁸³ Some of these states also include a further element found in the Revised Uniform Securities Act, providing:

A request for an order of compliance may be addressed to: ... (2) a court of another state able to assert jurisdiction over the person refusing to testify or produce, if the person is not subject to service of process in this State.ⁿ⁸⁴

None of these provisions was carried into the 2002 Uniform Securities Act. Instead, section 602(f) of the 2002 Act provides:

(f) [Assistance to securities regulator of another jurisdiction.] At the request of the securities regulator of another State or a foreign jurisdiction, the administrator may provide assistance if the requesting regulator states that it is conducting an investigation to determine whether a person has violated, is violating, or is about to violate a law or rule of the other State or foreign jurisdiction relating to securities matters that the requesting regulator administers or enforces. The administrator may provide the assistance by using the authority to investigate and the powers conferred by this section as the administrator determines is necessary or appropriate. The assistance may be provided without regard to whether the conduct described in the request would also constitute a violation of this [Act] or other law of this State if occurring in this State. In deciding whether to provide the assistance, the administrator may consider whether the requesting regulator is permitted and has agreed to provide assistance reciprocally within its State or foreign jurisdiction to the administrator on securities matters when requested; whether compliance with the request would violate or prejudice the public policy of this State; and the availability of resources and employees of the administrator to carry out the request for assistance.

The drafters of the 2002 Uniform Act concluded that this provision is consistent with SLUSA.⁸⁵ Thus, on a discretionary basis, an administrator may, through the exercise of enforcement authority in that state, provide "assistance" to the administrator of another state in carrying out an investigation. There is no provision, however, for direct application by another administrator for issuance and enforcement of a subpoena. On the other hand, the 2002 Uniform Act provides for assistance without regard to whether the conduct being investigated would constitute a violation of that state's law.

Other grounds for this administrative remedy include: (1) that the offering involves a violation of the Act by an intermediary or someone acting on behalf of or controlling the issuer; (2) that the issuer is engaged in an illegal business activity; (3) that the registration statement is incomplete or that it contains materially false or misleading information; (4) that the offering was not qualified for a particular type of registration; or (5) that the offering involves unreasonable amounts of intermediary compensation.

(n65)Footnote 65. Administrative power summarily to suspend a broker-dealer license or registration is a significant further administrative enforcement remedy in its own right. Section 204(c) of the Uniform Act expressly empowers administrators to issue summary suspension orders, subject to notification on its entry and opportunity for hearing thereafter.

Assertions that the accused party did not knowingly and intentionally sell securities in violation of the Act or that the party believed the securities were exempt from registration would be virtually impossible to overcome; a seller of unregistered securities would likely be able to avoid a finding of "willfulness" unless the seller had been the subject of a prior action for selling virtually the same securities. Cox v. Garvin, 278 Ga. 903, 907, 607 S.E.2d 549 (2005) .

In any prosecution brought under Sections 1707.01 to 1707.45 of the Revised Code, except prosecutions brought for violation of division (A) of Section 1707.042 of the Revised Code, the accused shall be deemed to have had knowledge of any matter of fact, where in the exercise of reasonable diligence, he should, prior to the alleged commission of the offense in question, have secured such knowledge.

(n70)Footnote 70. The securities commissioner has been held not to be an "aggrieved person" for purposes of an appeal under the state Blue Sky law. In Ropp v. Fletcher King, [2003-2008 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) P 74,643, 2007 Del. Ch. LEXIS 109 (New Castle Ch. Ct. July 25, 2007) , the Delaware Securities Commissioner appealed from the determination by a Hearing Officer appointed to act in a matter filed before (and by) the appellant Commissioner. The Hearing Officer determined that the respondents in the proceeding did not violate certain provisions of the Delaware Securities Act. On the Commissioner's appeal, and in connection with dismissing that appeal, the question posed by the Chancery Court was whether the Commissioner can appeal an order that, in essence, is his own order.

The Delaware Securities Act permits an appeal "by a person aggrieved by an order of the Commissioner." Appellate review is available only to persons satisfying the statutory standard. After a thorough analysis of the statute and case law, the court concluded that the Commissioner cannot be "aggrieved" for the purpose of seeking judicial review of his own decision. Any order issued by a Hearing Officer is by law an order of the Commissioner for purposes of judicial review. If an adverse decision is received by the administrative authority in the context of performance of its regulatory function, the appellate option will not be available.

In many instances this situation would be avoided by the provisions for acceptance, rejection, or modification of Hearing Officer's recommendations by the Commissioner that are part of the administrative process under many Blue Sky laws.

(n71)Footnote 71. The Uniform Act, for example, provides in section 411:

(a) Any person aggrieved by a final order of the [Administrator] may obtain a review of the order in the [insert name of appropriate court] by filing in court, within sixty days after the entry of the order, a written petition praying that the order be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith served upon the [Administrator], and thereupon the [Administrator] shall certify and file in court a copy of the filing and evidence upon which the order was entered. When these have been filed, the court has exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, enforce, or set aside the order, in whole or in part. The findings of the [Administrator] as to the facts, if supported by competent, material and substantial evidence, are conclusive. If either party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional material evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce the evidence in the hearing before the [Administrator], the court may order the additional evidence to be taken before the [Administrator] and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such conditions as the court considers proper. The [Administrator] may modify his findings and order by reason of the additional evidence and shall file in court the additional evidence together with any modified or new findings or order. [The judgment of the court is final, subject to review by the (insert name of appropriate court).]

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.05

§ 14.05 Judicial Enforcement Actions

[1] Civil Injunctions

The Uniform Act provides:

Whenever it appears to the Administrator that any person has engaged or is about to engage in any act or practice constituting a violation of any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, he may in his discretion bring an action in the [insert name of appropriate court] to enjoin the acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this act or any rule or order hereunder. Upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or writ of mandamus shall be granted and a receiver or conservator may be appointed for the defendant or the defendant's assets. The court may not require the Administrator to post a bond.ⁿ¹

Nearly every state expressly provides for the availability of injunctive reliefⁿ² and many have adopted, in whole or in part, the Uniform Act provision. The 2002 Uniform Act not only continues the provision for civil enforcement authority, but also prescribes the relief available in such proceedings.ⁿ³ By including specific relief provisions, the drafters of the 2002 Uniform Act identify what has become standard practice in civil enforcement actions, in which administrators seek and obtain relief as follows:

- (1) Restraining orders, temporary and permanent injunctions, and declaratory judgments;
- (2) An asset freeze, accounting, writ of attachment, writ of general or specific execution, and an appointment of a receiver or conservator for the defendant or the defendant's assets;
- (3) An order for the administrator to take charge and control of a defendant's property, including investment accounts and accounts in a depository institution, rents, and profits, as well as to collect debts and to acquire and dispose of property;
- (4) Civil money penalties, rescission, restitution, and disgorgement; and
- (5) Payment of prejudgment and post judgment interest.ⁿ⁴

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.05

The range of potential relief available in civil proceedings is conditioned on a proper showing and enables administrators and courts to tailor appropriate sanctions to particular misconduct. Whether or not a particular Blue Sky law spells out the available remedies in an enforcement action, in practice these are the remedies sought and which the courts have ample equitable jurisdiction to impose. Ancillary remedies, that is, the equitable remedies in addition to injunctions, are more particularly considered in section 14.05[2], below.

The authority of administrators to pursue civil enforcement remedies is a matter entirely separate from authority to pursue administrative remedies. As discussed in section 14.06, administrative remedies may be more efficient, but are not self-executing. Direct action in court allows the full force of the judiciary to be brought to bear in the enforcement initiative. However, it also requires the availability and commitment of resources. That reason alone often militates in favor of administrative cease-and-desist orders rather than injunctive proceedings.

Section 408 of the Uniform Act and most variants of it among the states are modeled on section 21(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,ⁿ⁵ which empowers the SEC to obtain temporary and permanent injunctions against persons engaged in or about to engage in acts or practices that violate the law or rules and regulations issued under it. In most states, civil injunctive actions may be brought directly by the administrator,ⁿ⁶ in contrast to criminal prosecutions, which are normally accomplished by referral under the statute to the state attorney general or an appropriate local prosecutor.

In bringing civil injunctive cases, a Blue Sky administrator is not required to make any special showing. Rather, injunctions may be issued upon a "proper showing." However, in Rondeau v. Mosinee Paper Corp.,ⁿ⁷ the U.S. Supreme Court counseled that securities laws which grant equitable jurisdiction to trial courts to enforce the laws through injunctions do not abrogate traditional equitable principles guiding a court in the use of its powers. Traditional equitable principles, such as a showing of irreparable harm and the absence of an adequate remedy at law should, said the Court, govern the issuance of injunctions to enforce securities laws. Among other equitable principles, said the Court, injunctions are designed to deter, not to punish violators, notwithstanding the public interest that is involved.

Nevertheless, applicable standards for issuance of injunctive relief vary among the states on matters such as irreparable harm, or whether demonstration of a reasonable likelihood of continuing or recurring conduct must be made. In Ohio, it has been held that the Commissioner must meet the burden of proving both irreparable harm through the inadequacy of legal remedies and a likelihood of future violations. Violations in the past do not support the need for injunctive relief reaching into the future.ⁿ⁸

This relatively heavy burden stands in contrast to the standard applied in SEC injunctive actions, in which the Commission is not required to present proof of irreparable harm, although some showing of a reasonable likelihood of recurrence is necessary. As evidenced by the decision in UV Industries, Inc. v. Posner,ⁿ⁹ which considered a request for an injunction by a private plaintiff under the Maine statute, courts are more likely to shape the contours of traditional requirements such as irreparable harm to give full effect to the remedial purpose of the Blue Sky law. In UV Industries, the court explained that the rationale for modifying requirements with respect to injunctions that are "creatures of statute" is that the party bringing the suit is acting to vindicate the public interest.ⁿ¹⁰

Whether a state administrator may appropriately obtain a court injunction solely on the basis of a past violation is, at best, uncertain. However, authority to issue cease-and-desist orders is not constrained by traditional equitable principles and the flexibility accorded to administrators in that process militates in its favor versus seeking injunctive relief from a court in situations where the issues of irreparable harm or likelihood of recurring violations might dominate. Although by definition a cease-and-desist order at least implies the interdiction of on-going conduct, the authority to issue them is also expressly premised upon a finding that a person "has engaged" in conduct in violation of the law. A cease-and-desist order addressing past conduct only plainly falls within the statutory authority, and, given the power to enforce it in the future, presents practical and attractive alternative to a civil injunctive case.

When an injunction issues, its scope must conform to the actual enforcement authority conferred by the Blue Sky law. In Shields v. State,ⁿ¹¹ the Texas Court of Appeals reversed a trial court judgment granting a permanent injunction which not only restrained the defendant/broker from future violations of antifraud provisions of the Texas Securities Act, but also restrained him from "selling, brokering, or dealing in securities in any manner," without reference to fraud or the terms of the act. The court of appeals held that the terms of the act did not authorize injunctions of such scope and that the issuance of this one amounted to an abuse of discretion. The court rejected the assertion that the broad charge to the securities commissioner in the act to take such measure as are necessary to prevent violations authorized an injunction so broad in scope. Such a construction, said the court, was unreasonable, and would authorize the commissioner and the state attorney general to misapply the law that they are instructed to enforce.

[2] Ancillary Remedies

Civil injunctive authority is augmented by the ability of administrators to obtain remedies such as rescission, restitution, or disgorgement against violators.ⁿ¹² In North Carolina, for example:

In addition to any other remedies provided by this Chapter, the Administrator may apply to the court hearing this matter for an order of restitution whereby the defendant in such action shall be ordered to make restitution of those sums shown by the Administrator to have been obtained by him in violation of any provisions of this Chapter. Such restitution shall be payable, in the discretion of the court, to the Administrator or receiver appointed pursuant to this section for the benefit of those persons whose assets were obtained in violation of this Chapter, or directly to those persons.ⁿ¹³

Section 603 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act reflects the full breadth of ancillary remedy provisions available under Blue Sky laws by empowering the administrator to obtain an asset freeze, accounting, writ of attachment, writ of general or specific execution, and appointment of a receiver or conservator that may be the administrator, for the defendant or the defendant's assets. Additionally, the administrator may obtain an order to take charge and control of a defendant's property, including investment accounts and accounts in a depository institution, rents, and profits; to collect debts; and to acquire and dispose of property, as well as an order of rescission, restitution, or disgorgement directed to a person that has engaged in an act, practice, or course of business constituting a violation.ⁿ¹⁴

The scope of the administrator's power under such provisions has been extended to the imposition of joint and several liability and recovery of restitution from persons who aid or abet violations of others.ⁿ¹⁵ Whether stated in express terms of secondary liability or more typically in terms of persons "participating" in unlawful conduct, the reach of statutory authority to obtain ancillary relief is considerable.

The California, Colorado, Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Washington Blue Sky Laws empower the securities administrators to bring an action for restitution or for damages on behalf of any persons injured by any acts or practices constituting a violation of the law.ⁿ¹⁶ These statutes give the courts in the respective jurisdictions (except California) authority to award such relief if the court finds that enforcement of the rights of such persons by private civil action, whether by class action or otherwise, would be so burdensome or expensive as to be impractical.

Provisions for obtaining restitution are often worded in disgorgement terms, that is, for restitution of ill-gotten money or gains. In Florida, the Department of Banking and Finance may apply to a court having another matter before it (e.g., an action for injunctive relief, appointment of a receiver, etc.) for an order of restitution for those sums shown by the Department to have been obtained in violation of any provision of the Act.ⁿ¹⁷ In New York, upon a showing by the Attorney General that a fraudulent practice has occurred, relief under the Martin Act in a civil or criminal action can include restitution of any monies or property obtained directly or indirectly by the fraudulent practice.ⁿ¹⁸ Delaware, on the other hand merely states the Commissioner may also seek (besides injunctive relief) "orders of restitution."ⁿ¹⁹ As the provisions in these states illustrate, restitution is a remedy normally sought in the context of a civil injunctive action. However, Montana empowers the administrator directly to require restitution through an administrative proceeding:

The commissioner may, after conducting a hearing ... require a person found to have committed a violation of [the act] to make restitution for all financial losses sustained by any person as a result of the violation. The commissioner may further require a person found to have violated [the act] to pay 10% annual interest on the amount of restitution from the date of the violation, reasonable attorney fees, and costs associated with bringing the administrative action.ⁿ²⁰

Restitution as an ancillary remedy is not nearly as common in civil injunctive actions by Blue Sky administrators as in criminal cases. Blue Sky laws generally create express private rights of action for purchasers to recover either damages or rescission in transactions involving a violation of the law. The express remedies are liberalⁿ²¹ and reflect an intention of state legislatures that investors harmed by acts and conduct in violation of Blue Sky laws be directly empowered themselves to seek and obtain meaningful relief. Private rights of action are also subject to varying limitations and requirements and courts are unlikely to circumvent these limitations through a broad order of restitution granted to an administrator in a civil action. On the other hand, the appointment of receivers, whose role includes the marshaling of assets for the ultimate benefit of injured investors, is common. State secured receiverships often work in tandem with private actions under Blue Sky laws.

The Uniform Act and most states provide for ancillary relief through the appointment of a receiver. For example, in Commonwealth v. Allamanda Investment Co.,ⁿ²² the court held that the Pennsylvania Securities Commission has the power under state law to seek judicial appointment of a receiver for an investment company, when limited partnership interests in the company were sold without proper registration and the promoter had left the state. In Arizona, an entire article is given to the discussion of the appointment of a receiver or conservator.ⁿ²³ Following the filing of a complaint by the State of Arizona, the court may, at the request of the attorney general, issue a preliminary injunction restraining the subject of the complaint from removing, encumbering, or otherwise disposing of any property located in Arizona.ⁿ²⁴ Thereafter, if a permanent injunction is issued, a conservator may be appointed and empowered "to do all things necessary in furtherance thereof to protect the rights of persons having a direct interest in the properties and affairs of the violator."ⁿ²⁵ The New Jersey Blue Sky law plainly spells out the scope of authority granted to receivers under these provisions:

If the court grants injunctive relief ... it may appoint a receiver with power to sue for, collect, receive and take into his possession all the goods and chattels, rights and credits, moneys and effects, lands and tenements, books, records, documents, papers, choses in action, bills, notes and property of every description, derived by any means or any practice constituting a violation of this act or any rule or order hereunder, including property with which such property has been mingled, if it cannot be identified in kind because of commingling, and to sell, convey and assign the same and hold and dispose of the proceeds thereof under the direction of the court for the equal benefit of all who establish an interest therein by reason of the use and employment by the defendant of any practices constituting a violation of this act or any rule or order hereunder. The receiver may retain an attorney with the consent of the Attorney General and the court.ⁿ²⁶

Some states impose limitations on the appointment of receivers. In Texas, for example, the Commissioner may request the Attorney General to bring an action for the appointment of a receiver only for persons or the assets of persons acting as dealers.ⁿ²⁷ If a person's activities do not qualify him or her as a "dealer" under Texas law, receivership is not an available remedy.ⁿ²⁸

In just a handful of states no provision is made for the appointment of a receiver.ⁿ²⁹ However, in these states, the statutes contain language from which the authority of the commissioner to seek the appointment of a receiver may be inferred.ⁿ³⁰ Moreover, there is ample authority in all states, augmented by a long history of SEC litigation in the federal courts, making clear that courts have general equitable authority to impose receiverships.

Although the appointment of receivers is the most common ancillary remedy sought by administrators under Blue Sky laws, some states make specific provision for other remedies. Michigan, for example, includes both accounting and disgorgement among the remedies that may be sought through an injunctive proceeding.ⁿ³¹ Mandated rescission offers are also often sought with regard to sales or purchases of securities determined by the court to be unlawful.ⁿ³² In the end, courts will respond to the full extent of their equity jurisdiction to redress acts and conduct in violation of Blue Sky laws. As reflected in the 2002 Uniform act provision discussed earlier,ⁿ³³ and evidenced in modern provisions such as that in place in New Mexico, prescribing the powers of courts to grant relief in the Blue Sky law setting,ⁿ³⁴ ultimately, courts may, and will, fashion such relief as is deemed just in the particular circumstances presented.

In Squibb v. State ex rel. Davis, 860 N.E.2d 904 (Ind. Ct. App. 2007) , the court upheld an order of prejudgment and garnishment obtained by the Indiana Securities Commissioner on findings that an individual had sold unregistered securities in a fraudulent and deceitful manner and was removing or about to remove property that would be subject to execution in an action that was brought by the Commissioner that constituted a claim for money. In those circumstances, without regard to any other authority, Indiana law authorized prejudgment garnishment.

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.06

§ 14.06 Criminal Prosecution

[1] Generally

Under the Uniform Securities Act:

(a) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act except section 404 [misleading filings], or who willfully violates any rule or order under this act, or who willfully violates section 404 knowing the statement made to be false or misleading in any material respect, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both; but no person may be imprisoned for the violation of any rule or order if he proves that he had no knowledge of the rule or order... .

(b) The [Administrator] may refer such evidence as is available concerning violations of this act or of any rule or order hereunder to the [attorney general or the proper district attorney], who may, with or without such a reference, institute the appropriate criminal proceedings under this act.

(c) Nothing in this act limits the power of the state to punish any person for any conduct which constitutes a crime by statute or at common law.ⁿ¹

Generally, criminal violations of the state securities laws are not prosecuted directly by the administrator, but rather are referred to the proper state prosecuting agency (e.g., state attorney general or county prosecutor). As the Uniform Act provides, most state laws allow the appropriate state prosecutor to decide whether to bring a criminal action. Even without referral by the administrator or commissioner, most states provide that attorneys general may directly institute criminal proceedings based on evidence gathered by their own agencies.ⁿ² As discussed below, in some states the administrator himself or herself has full or limited criminal enforcement powers.

In one form or another, all Blue Sky laws specifically provide for criminal referrals by administrators of violations to appropriate law enforcement officials.ⁿ³ As noted above, in some instances, the support role of administrators and employees is expressly addressed.ⁿ⁴ Alabama takes the process further by mandating the duty of the Securities Commission to assure compliance with the Blue Sky law and to take such measures and make such investigations as will prevent or detect violations. Violations involving evidence of criminality that are detected are to be at once referred to the appropriate District Attorney for action. In the event the District Attorney neglects or refuses to prosecute, the

Alabama statute empowers the Commission itself to institute a prosecution with full grand jury authority.ⁿ⁵

Other states mandate specific follow-up to a criminal reference. In practice, most criminal prosecutions under Blue Sky laws are the result of referrals by administrators and there is considerable reliance on the investigative efforts and expertise of administrators and their staffs in bringing these cases to trial.

[2] Culpability Standards

The Uniform Act specifies two standards of criminal culpability, depending on the violation involved. For violation of any provision of, or rule or order under, the Act other than for filing misleading statements with the Administrator (i.e., except section 404), the standard of culpability is whether the act was "willfully" done.ⁿ⁶ Willfully violating provisions of the Uniform Act requires proof that the person acted intentionally, in the sense that he or she was aware of what he or she was doing. Proof of evil motive or intent to violate the law or knowledge that the law was being violated is not required where the violation is, essentially, a strict liability offense, such as failure to register securities or to be properly licensed as an intermediary.ⁿ⁷ In these circumstances, it has been suggested by one state supreme court that state of mind is of as little relevance in a charge of sale of unregistered securities as it would be in a prosecution for a speeding violation.ⁿ⁸ The same court concluded:

Personal blame on the part of the actor, except in the general sense that he should have known better or exercised a greater degree of care, is not a necessary element of many offenses where the protection of the public against the harm which would result in the absence of regulation is the principal legislative concern.ⁿ⁹

However, in People v. Salas,ⁿ¹⁰ the California Supreme Court recast the mold for establishing criminal liability in a case involving the unlawful sale of unregistered securities. In Salas, the court overturned the conviction of a defendant charged with the unlawful sale of unregistered securities who claimed he incorrectly believed that the issuer had complied with a registration exemption under the California Blue Sky Law. The court held that a seller is not guilty of this crime if there is a reasonable doubt whether he or she knew that the security was not exempt from registration or was criminally negligent in failing to know there was no exemption. Although the court found that "guilty knowledge" as such is not an element of the crime, it nevertheless held that the absence of a "guilty mind" should be available as an affirmative defense. Thus, the defendant was entitled to a jury instruction on the affirmative defense of "absence of guilty knowledge," provided he had presented sufficient evidence to raise a reasonable doubt whether he knew, or was criminally negligent in failing to know, that the security was not exempt. In this assessment, and by effectively reading a guilty knowledge requirement into the California law regarding the sale of unregistered securities, the California Supreme Court departed from the generally accepted meaning of "willfully" under Blue Sky laws.ⁿ¹¹

Putting aside the Salas approach to criminal culpability in the unlawful sale of unregistered securities, for criminal penalties to be imposed for violation of antifraud provisions such as section 404 of the Uniform Act, which prohibits making or causing to be made a false or misleading statement in a document filed with the administrator, the Act requires proof of willfulness, and also that the person knew that the statement was false or misleading in some material respect.ⁿ¹² This heightened standard of culpability, specifically applicable to false or misleading statements in filed documents, introduces an element of specific intent where the nature of the violation logically should involve some degree of awareness of the actor as to an actual information failure. The notion of specific intent, or at least a heightened awareness element, has figured prominently in case law dealing with criminal prosecutions under the general antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws.

Criminal liability for securities fraud under Blue Sky laws is a matter quite different from the more technical registration or licensing violations that are characterized as strict liability offenses. Fraud is not easily construed as a strict liability offense and requiring proof of criminal intent may mean that scienter, a mental state encompassing intent to deceive or defraud, must be shown.ⁿ¹³ This does not mean that specific intent to violate the law must be shown. As with the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws, where scienter is required, it can generally be shown on proof of at least reckless disregard of the truth.ⁿ¹⁴ The role of knowledge or intent in criminal antifraud liability is discussed further below. However, requisite intent is only one element of liability. Because the antifraud provisions in Blue Sky laws more often than not closely parallel SEC Rule 10b-5 under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,ⁿ¹⁵ federal cases construing the elements of antifraud liability--materiality, for example--are instructive in state courts on other elements of an offense. Evidence must be presented to show all essential elements of the crime and that the defendant was the perpetrator of the crime.ⁿ¹⁶

Reliance on parallel federal jurisprudence can even extend to defining criminal behavior under Blue Sky antifraud provisions. In People v. Napolitano,ⁿ¹⁷ the conviction of an individual under the basic antifraud prohibition of the New York Blue Sky Law (the "Martin Act") for "insider trading" was affirmed. The New York court opined that insider trading, recognized as a violation of SEC Rule 10b-5 under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, also violates the Martin Act. Federal law relating to insider trading, said the court, indisputably provides important precedent for state courts "in determining the obligations of persons who trade in securities"ⁿ¹⁸ and the court was satisfied that the law established a duty not to trade on the basis of confidential information received by virtue of a position of confidence and trust. Whether based on "classical" federal corporate insider theory or the more recently developed "misappropriation" theory of liability,ⁿ¹⁹ the duty not to trade was established. Thus, criminal liability as a matter of general antifraud principals under the state Blue Sky law was imposed on the basis of a crime wholly defined by federal law.ⁿ²⁰ Napolitano is a further example of the efficacy of applying Blue Sky law antifraud provisions in contemporary market settings. In a narrower, but equally significant sense, it also illustrates the considerable flexibility available to prosecutors and courts under Blue Sky laws in order to achieve investor protection and market fairness objectives through criminal enforcement actions.

Blue Sky laws also play an important role in prosecutions under state anti-racketeering laws. State "RICO" laws typically include offenses under the Blue Sky law as predicate criminal acts for purposes of establishing a pattern of racketeering activity related to the conduct of an enterprise. To prove a RICO violation, the state typically must show that a defendant committed two or more predicate criminal acts of the type specified in the RICO statute as part of an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. The offer and sale of unregistered securities and engaging in securities activity without being licensed are common violations of state Blue Sky laws that become RICO predicate acts.ⁿ²¹ Some limits may be imposed on the extent to which violations of the Blue Sky law alone may suffice as RICO predicate acts. In Ohio, for example, for purposes of private civil actions, the requisite pattern of "corrupt" activity must include at least one other predicate act from the types specified.ⁿ²² However, the importation of Blue Sky violations into state RICO laws generally is a meaningful addition to the criminal enforcement arsenal.ⁿ²³

[3] Intent or Knowledge

As introduced above, provisions for criminal penalties in Blue Sky laws generally follow section 409 of the Uniform Act, which declares:

(a) Any person who willfully violates any provisions of this act except section 404, or who willfully violates section 404 knowing the statement made to be false or misleading in any material respect shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years or both.ⁿ²⁴

The key consideration in finding criminal liability is "willfulness" associated with the violation. The criminal intent standard for prosecutions under Blue Sky laws in most states parallels that prescribed in the official comments to the Uniform Act, such that:

[a]ll that is required is proof that the person acted intentionally in the sense that he was aware of what he was doing. Proof of evil motive or intent to violate the law, or knowledge that the law was being violated, is not required.ⁿ²⁵

This standard does not require a specific intent to violate the law.ⁿ²⁶ That is to say, when a person intentionally does that which the law declares to be a crime, he or she is acting with general criminal intent, even though the person may not know his or her conduct is unlawful.ⁿ²⁷ A case involving an unlawful sale of securities in violation of the Utah Blue Sky law illustrates the point. In State v. Larsen,ⁿ²⁸ the court explained that intent to violate the prohibition against selling unregistered securities is not necessary to sustain a criminal conviction. The court thus affirmed a conviction that was based on a jury instruction that:

[A] person engages in conduct intentionally or with intent or willfully, with respect to the nature of his conduct or to the result of his conduct, when it is his conscious desire to engage in the conduct or cause the result.ⁿ²⁹

This is the law in the overwhelming majority of jurisdictions. Although, as will be seen below, the issue is more complicated in cases involving antifraud violations, no specific intent is required to sustain a criminal conviction for the unlawful sale of unregistered securities.ⁿ³⁰

A markedly different approach was taken, however, in State v. Casper,ⁿ³¹ in which a Tennessee criminal appeals court reversed and dismissed a defendant's conviction for violating the Tennessee Securities Act by selling unregistered securities. The defendant had entered into an agreed order with the Tennessee Department of Commerce and Insurance, in which he admitted that he had engaged in the offer and sale of unregistered securities without being registered as a broker-dealer or an agent of a broker-dealer. He was then criminally prosecuted on the same charges, and at his trial the agreed order was introduced as evidence. The defendant was convicted, and on appeal he argued, among other things, that the agreed order was entered into as part of a civil proceeding that requires a different burden of proof than a criminal proceeding. The appeals court concluded that the agreed order had properly been admitted as evidence in the criminal trial, but found that it was not sufficient evidence to support the criminal conviction.

The Tennessee Securities Act, like others, provides for criminal prosecution of a defendant who acts "willfully."ⁿ³² The defendant in Casper argued that the evidence showed only that he acted in what he believed to be a lawful manner, and that when he was notified of improper actions, he ceased such actions. As with other Blue Sky laws, the Tennessee Act does not define "willfully." The appeals court concluded that because the statute expressly creates criminal liability for one who willfully violates the Act, the legislature must have intended that proof of something more than simply intentionally selling securities without being properly registered as a securities broker-dealer is necessary. Thus, the court concluded:

[W]e are persuaded that the distinction between criminal and non-criminal offenders means that the legislature intended only to criminalize the selling of securities by an unregistered broker-dealer when the person selling is aware that his or her conduct is prohibited by the [Tennessee Securities Act], and yet nevertheless intentionally sells the security knowing he or she is violating the law.ⁿ³³

Reversing the convictions, the court opined that the appellant had complied with the agreed order entered into with the regulatory agency, and that he did cease and desist from selling the securities. The court found from the evidence that prior to the agreed order, the appellant believed that the securities he offered and sold were exempt from registration, and that he was not required to register as a broker-dealer. Thus, according to the court, the state failed to carry its burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellant knew, prior to the agreed order, that his actions violated the law.ⁿ³⁴

In contrast to People v. Salas, discussed earlier, in which the California Supreme Court manifested its concern that an element of specific intent should be available for consideration through allowance of an affirmative defense of "absence of guilty knowledge," Casper makes it an element of the offense, on which the state has the burden of proof. It stands alone in that regard.

Where violations involve strict liability issues such as securities registration or licensing failures, general intent is a reasonable approach.ⁿ³⁵ However, as introduced earlier, the question of requisite intent for criminal liability is more complex in prosecutions for fraud under Blue Sky laws. In cases under antifraud provisions, a requirement that one have knowledge of the falsity or misleading nature of a statement or of the materiality of an omission, or at least be guilty of criminal negligence in failing to investigate or discover them, may logically be implied in the notion of willfulness.ⁿ³⁶ Separately or together they constitute the element of scienter and states are divided over whether it is an essential element of criminal antifraud liability. In People v. Simon,ⁿ³⁷ for example, the California Supreme Court held that "willful" means having knowledge of the false or misleading nature of a statement or the materiality of an omission. The court rejected a trial court jury instruction that only a general criminal intent was necessary to convict for the crime of willfully selling securities by means of material misrepresentations or omissions.ⁿ³⁸ But in State v. Larsen,ⁿ³⁹ noted above, the Utah Supreme Court determined that specific intent is not required for a securities fraud conviction and thus rejected good faith as a defense to criminal liability.ⁿ⁴⁰

As noted earlier, the Official Code Comment under the Uniform Securities Act speaks of "willfully" only in terms of a person acting intentionally in the sense of knowing what one is doing, rather than having an evil motive, specific intent to violate the law, or knowledge that the law is being violated. But willfulness and its analogs such as "knowingly" that are contained in Blue Sky laws are not defined. The judiciary has been left with the task of defining them--a process that, as Simon and Larsen illustrate, has led to differing approaches. There is tension between the notion of willfulness, as requiring no specific intent to commit an unlawful act, and scienter, a mental state embracing intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud. The latter has prominently developed as an essential element of liability for violation of section 10(b) and SEC Rule 10b-5 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.ⁿ⁴¹ Its role in prosecutions under state Blue Sky laws is addressed because many states and section 101 of the Uniform Act have modeled antifraud provisions on Rule 10b-5 and other antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws. Scienter is, effectively, a specific intent element of an offense.

However state courts may differ on whether proof of scienter is necessary in prosecutions under Blue Sky antifraud provisions, it is clear that in interpreting the willfulness requirement generally, criminal liability will not be imposed for conduct that is merely careless, thoughtless, or inadvertent.ⁿ⁴² That is not to say that ignorance is a useful defense. One court has made clear that "[w]hen one is charged with willful misconduct in a series of acts in the promotion or sale of a security, it is to be assumed that he is not devoid of intelligence on the subject of securities."ⁿ⁴³ Moreover, past acts may give rise to the inference that current statements or actions have been done willfully and knowingly. Thus, evidence of a permanent injunction enjoining the defendant consultants or legal advisers from participating in other fraudulent sales or purchases of securities was relevant to the determination of willfulness in a subsequent criminal prosecution.ⁿ⁴⁴

Even if only a general intent is required to convict, evidence of specific intent may be relevant to determining the gravity of the offense. Moreover, specific intent may be shown by circumstantial evidence. In one case, the court found a specific intent to defraud because of a substantial or significant disparity between the actual price of the securities and their selling price (a 3500% differential), coupled with other false representations.ⁿ⁴⁵

The level of culpability required in prosecutions under Blue Sky laws is commonly an issue when the focus of law enforcement is on secondary or peripheral participants in acts and conduct that violate the law. In California, for example, it has been held that an attorney who performed legal services for persons who engaged in the offer and sale of unregistered securities would not be criminally liable as either a participant or an aider and abettor for merely acting in the role of a lawyer. In People v. Yanez,ⁿ⁴⁶ the court admonished that "offering advice, giving opinions, and preparing documentation relating to securities offerings are staples in the stock-in-trade of lawyers in this specialized field." To subject them to criminal liability in these circumstances, said the court, "would have a chilling effect on legitimate professional conduct."ⁿ⁴⁷

Criminal liability for one who is involved in circumstances only in the role of attorney, or presumably any other professional service provider, requires a finding of subjective bad faith in the performance of those services. In the end, the Yanez court counseled:

We must avoid construing a statute to dispense with mens rea where it would outlaw a number of apparently innocent acts... . Of course, an attorney who participates in an illegal offering without a subjective good faith belief, or in a role as offeror or seller, certainly should not be shielded from criminal liability.ⁿ⁴⁸

On the question of criminal liability of secondary actors or participants generally, Illinois declares that all persons who in any manner knowingly authorize, aid, or assist in any unlawful sale or offering for sale are deemed equally guilty.ⁿ⁴⁹ Criminal aiding and abetting and secondary liability generally is problematic in the absence of a specific culpability standard such as the "knowingly" element in Illinois. The Illinois approach allows for greater flexibility in prosecutions, but in practice would not likely produce more indictments than straightforward application of the willfulness element of penalty provisions for direct or primary criminal liability.

In State v. Mehling,ⁿ⁵⁰ a Kansas appeals court endorsed the following jury instruction as to culpability for aiding and abetting a violation of the Blue Sky law:

A person who, either before or during its commission, intentionally aids, abets, advises, hires, counsels, procures another to commit a crime with intent to promote or assist in its commission is criminally responsible for the crime committed regardless of the extent of the defendant's participation, if any, in the actual commission of a crime.

Under this standard, aiding and abetting a securities violation is a specific intent crime. The court explained that if jurors find that a defendant acted as a principal in a scheme to defraud investors, then the mere doing of the act prohibited by the statute supports a conviction without a showing of specific intent. Aiding and abetting, on the other hand, does require specific intent.

The question of scope of criminal liability is also likely to be involved in fraud-based prosecutions, where a defendant's conduct is not clearly tied to the violation of the statute. Whether the notions of "in connection with"ⁿ⁵¹ or nexus are employed, the issue is whether acts and conduct of a particular criminal defendant are sufficiently linked to the subject purchase or sale transaction(s). Courts are willing to interpret the nexus requirement broadly. In State v. Harry,ⁿ⁵² for example, a securities salesperson was convicted of violating antifraud provisions of the Utah Securities Act by, among other things, "selling away" from his firm, that is, engaging in the offer and sale of securities outside the knowledge of the broker-dealer firm with which he was licensed. The defendant claimed that he could not be held liable because no fraud was perpetrated upon his firm, which was neither a purchaser nor a seller of the securities in question. The court disagreed, finding that the fraud worked on the broker-dealer firm could be sufficiently linked to the "away" transactions because the fact of those transactions and the fraudulent statements the defendant made to his firm in the course of concealing them subjected the firm to economic harm and the threat of civil liability to disgruntled investors.ⁿ⁵³

[4] Penalties

Criminal penalty provisions vary among the states. The Uniform Act provides for a fine of up to $5,000 and/or imprisonment for up to three years for a willful violation of the Act or any rule or order under it or for a misleading statement willfully made in any document filed with the Administrator or in any proceeding with knowledge that the statement was false or misleading in any material respect.ⁿ⁵⁴ Many states have adopted the Uniform Act provision nearly verbatim,ⁿ⁵⁵ while others have modified the provision to suit their particular preference.

In most instances, variance from the Uniform Act involves only the extent of the penalty. In Alaska, for example, the sanction is a $5,000 fine and/or imprisonment for not less than one year and no more than five years.ⁿ⁵⁶ Other states classify penalties into two groups, with a more severe sanction for a violation of the law and a lesser sanction for a violation of any rule or order. Alabama, for example, makes a violation of the Blue Sky law itself a class C felony, while violation of a rule is a class A misdemeanor.ⁿ⁵⁷ Some states impose a mandatory term of imprisonment for certain conduct. In Alaska, for example, the Blue Sky law specifies that for a felony conviction, the sentence must be "not less than one year."ⁿ⁵⁸ Montana provides that a one-year imprisonment is mandatory if the person convicted "has been previously convicted of a felony in any way involving securities."ⁿ⁵⁹ In New Hampshire, a violation of the provisions proscribing fraud, other unlawful activities, and misleading filings, and a violation of a cease-and-desist order or injunction, constitutes a class B felony.ⁿ⁶⁰ Persons violating the registration provisions or making unlawful representations concerning registrations or exemptions are guilty of a misdemeanor, but any subsequent offense constitutes a class B felony.ⁿ⁶¹

Specific offenses and the scope of an offense may be the basis for particular levels of criminal penalties. In Delaware, a fraud causing any investor to suffer losses of $50,000 or more is punishable by a fine up to $200,000 and/or imprisonment up to five years, while fraud causing losses of $10,000 to $49,999 is punishable by a fine up to $100,000 and/or imprisonment up to three years.ⁿ⁶² All other violations in Delaware are punishable by fines up to $100,000 and imprisonment up to two years.ⁿ⁶³ Delaware also expressly provides for an order of restitution to any investor or investors.

New Jersey uniquely sets the range of criminal penalties based upon whether the defendant acts knowingly or recklessly in committing the offense. A knowing violation in New Jersey is a second or third degree crime, depending upon the amount of loss involved. However, one who recklessly violates provisions of the Blue Sky law is guilty of a fourth degree crime.ⁿ⁶⁴

The 2002 Uniform Act follows the approach of the Uniform Act in imposing criminal penalties for any willful violation of the Act, without distinguishing between felonies and misdemeanors in the manner of the Revised Uniform Act. However, it does not specify maximum dollar amounts for criminal fines or maximum terms for imprisonment. Rather, section 508 of the 2002 Act allows for each state to specify appropriate levels of fines and terms of imprisonment, as well as setting a statute of limitations. However, section 508 preserves the bar against imprisonment for an individual convicted of violating a rule or order when the defendant did not have knowledge of the rule or order. The drafters make clear that the "no knowledge" clause of section 508 is relevant only in sentencing. The defendant has the burden to prove no knowledge at the time of sentencing.ⁿ⁶⁵

Florida builds flexibility into its provisions imposing criminal fines by providing for alternatives:

In lieu of a fine otherwise authorized by law, a person who has pleaded guilty or no contest to having engaged in conduct in violation of the provisions of [the Act] may be sentenced to pay a fine that does not exceed the greater of three times the gross value gained or three times the gross loss caused by such conduct, plus court costs and the costs of investigation and prosecution reasonably incurred.ⁿ⁶⁶

Provisions such as this add incentive for guilty or no-contest pleas in smaller criminal cases in which the defendant would otherwise face felony level fines without regard for the scope of the offense committed.ⁿ⁶⁷ Florida is unique in building this flexibility expressly into the Blue Sky law. Plea bargaining under the penalty provisions in other states is enhanced by tiers of offenses between misdemeanors, felonies, and classes of felonies. In a significant number of states, however, there are no tiers or gradations of offenses.ⁿ⁶⁸

By definition in most Blue Sky laws, "person" means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, and other forms of business organizations or associations of individuals.ⁿ⁶⁹ Thus, penalties applicable to persons generally for criminal violations of state securities laws are applicable to institutional defendants. However, because only fines (and ancillary remedies such as restitution) are possible for such defendants, Illinois has made special provision for fines applicable to them and also to deal with second or subsequent offenses by these defendants.ⁿ⁷⁰

Nearly all Blue Sky laws also include a provision taken directly from Uniform Act section 409(c) that:

Nothing in this act limits the power of the state to punish any person for any conduct which constitutes a crime by statute or at common law.

Acts and conduct in violation of Blue Sky laws may well violate other state laws dealing with consumer protection, theft, commercial transactions, and racketeering.ⁿ⁷¹ There is no preemption by Blue Sky laws as to any of these other offenses simply because securities are involved.

In most states, the Blue Sky law also provides that each criminal act specified "shall constitute a separate offense and a prosecution or conviction for any one of such offenses shall not bar prosecution or conviction for any other offense."ⁿ⁷² The effect of this provision is to preclude the notion of lesser or included offenses being a part of any criminal prosecution or any preemptive impact of a particular prosecution.

[5] Defenses

Exemptions. While the state must prove the elements of any offense charged beyond a reasonable doubt, when the charge involves the sale of unregistered securities, the defendant has the opportunity, albeit also the burden, to prove the availability of any exemption or exception from requirements of the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁷³ That is the case generally when a defense is based upon the availability of any exemption from, or exception to, any provision, rule, or regulation.ⁿ⁷⁴

However, once competent evidence suggesting entitlement to an exemption has been introduced, the burden typically shifts back to the prosecution. The Supreme Court of Nevada explained the relative burdens:

[T]he State is not required to prove the lack of an exemption until the defendant injects some competent evidence showing his entitlement to the exemption; however, once the defendant produces such evidence, the State bears the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the exemption does not apply.ⁿ⁷⁵

Advice of Counsel. In a criminal prosecution for a Blue Sky law violation, acting on the advice of counsel has been held not to be a defense. Thus, a defendant could not avoid conviction on the argument that he "acted under advice of counsel and did not know that the instrument he was selling constituted a security."ⁿ⁷⁶ Underlying the rejection of any defense based on advice of counsel is the fact that registration requirements in Blue Sky laws are essential, strict liability provisions. As discussed earlier, scienter or willfulness is not required to establish violations of registration requirements and good faith reliance on counsel is not a defense.ⁿ⁷⁷ Advice of counsel may be relevant to the charge of fraud in the sale of securities to the extent that scienter is an element of the offense. This element of criminal liability under Blue Sky laws is more thoroughly considered in section 14.05[3].

Good Faith. Much like reliance on counsel, good faith and an honest purpose on the part of the defendant will not be valid defenses.ⁿ⁷⁸ It is increasingly common in both criminal and administrative enforcement proceedings under Blue Sky laws that intermediaries who engage in the offer and sale of instruments or arrangements determined to be securities without compliance with registration and licensing provisions claim either good faith ignorance of the application of securities laws or reliance on other intermediaries who instructed that no security was involved. Conviction for transacting business as an unlicensed broker-dealer or salesperson and for selling unregistered securities is not dependent upon an individual knowing that his or her conduct violated Blue Sky law requirements. Honest mistake, good faith ignorance, and reliance on others will not relieve a person of criminal liability for what amount to strict liability offenses. Liability for violation of Blue Sky laws rests on conduct that is intentional with regard to the conduct, not that it is specifically unlawful. A Missouri appellate court perhaps best stated the point in affirming a criminal conviction for selling unregistered securities:

Our analysis of the law leads us ineluctably to the conclusion that the prosecution need not show that the accused seller was aware that he was acting in violation of the law in selling unregistered securities. It is as though a culpable mind (at least a reckless state of mind about the law) is conclusively presumed and may not be rebutted by the accused. "But, when an act forbidden by law is intentionally done, the intent to do the act is criminal intent, which imparts to it the character of the offense, and no one who violates a law he is conclusively presumed to know can be heard to say he had no criminal intent in doing it."⁷⁹

Although good faith or reasonable ignorance is not a defense to criminal prosecution under Blue Sky laws, they are considerations that bear on potential penalties resulting from a prosecution. The Uniform Act provides that, although a fine may be levied for violating a rule or order, no imprisonment will result if the person "proves that he had no knowledge of the rule or order."⁸⁰ This provision, relating only to violations of rules or orders, tracks penalty provisions in the federal securities laws and the Uniform Act drafters explained the rationale thusly:

Since not all states have an Administrative Procedure Act, and administrative rules and orders are not always easy to find, such a provision seems even more essential at the state level. The burden of proof here is on the defendant; he may still be subjected to fine in any event; and the clause is not applicable when the rule or order on which the prosecution is based has been issued under a provision which is self-operative regardless of the adoption of a rule or the entering of an order.⁸¹

Non-Uniform Act states have comparable provisions.⁸²

Statutes of Limitation. An applicable statute of limitations is a valid affirmative defense available to a criminal defendant. The Uniform Act contains an optional five-year statute of limitations for criminal prosecution.⁸³ Numerous states have adopted the five-year limitation,⁸⁴ while in other states, the period ranges from three to eight years. Illinois, for example, has a three-year statute of limitations.⁸⁵ Michigan, on the other hand, allows six years.⁸⁶ States without a specific statute of limitation for prosecutions under the Blue Sky law may rely instead on a general limitations period under other provisions of state law.⁸⁷ However, a specific statute of limitations contained in the Blue Sky law supersedes application of a general felony limitation included elsewhere in state law.⁸⁸ States also make various provisions for either determining how the time limitation is counted or for extending it in certain circumstances. Thus, in Michigan, the six-year limitation does not include any time during which the person charged was not "usually and publicly resident" in the state,⁸⁹ and Illinois provides for an additional two years to be added to the state's three-year limitation when the accused is found intentionally to have concealed evidence.⁹⁰

Preemption. The scope of state authority to prosecute Blue Sky law violations after NSMIA is subject to some uncertainty. The federal preemption of state authority to regulate in the context of NSMIA covered securities does not extend to enforcement actions under antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws and to the enforcement of most registration or licensing requirements applicable to investment intermediaries. States likewise retain authority to impose limited "notice" filing and fee requirements for securities distributions. Violations of post-NSMIA provisions, rules or orders in any of these areas may still be subject to criminal investigation and ultimate prosecution, as long as the exercise of state authority is not determined to constitute an indirect attempt to regulate if NSMIA preempted that authority. Under any Blue Sky law, NSMIA preemption is an available defense to state prosecutorial authority where covered securities are involved. There is much to be determined in the courts, and perhaps yet in Congress, on the question of how far antifraud enforcement powers in particular may legitimately extend into matters of "national" securities markets and transactions, but the 2002 investigation by the New York Attorney General into business practices of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc.⁹¹ under the umbrella of the Martin Act clearly demonstrates the intent of state authorities to proceed with an expansive notion. In that process, the defense of preemption will become increasingly meaningful.

Other Defensive Considerations. When multiple transactions are at issue, because each separate sales transaction constitutes a separate offense (at least when the charged fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation was made in each transaction as distinguished from being in the form of a general public advertisement),ⁿ⁹² the defendant must present any available defense to each separate sale.

Multiple transaction prosecutions raise other special issues for both the prosecution and defense. In People v. Rivera,ⁿ⁹³ the court reversed a defendant's conviction on one count of securities fraud in circumstances involving more than 20 potential transactions with more than two dozen different investors. In Rivera, evidence of multiple acts was presented to the jury, but the defendant was charged and convicted on only one count and jurors were not instructed that they must unanimously agree on the same transaction as the basis for conviction. Because there was substantial variety regarding the nature of the defendant's involvement in the various transactions, the court found there was a reasonable likelihood that jurors could disagree concerning the act or acts the defendant committed. Thus, absent an election by the prosecution or some form of acceptable unanimity instruction, the jury could have convicted the defendant while disagreeing over which acts supported the conviction. This cast serious doubt on the reliability of the conviction and mandated reversal.

Florida: Fla. Stat. Ann. § 517.302 ("violates" provisions).

Illinois: Ill. Stat. Ann. ch. 121-1/2, § 137.14(A), (B) ("violates" provisions). Nevertheless, the Illinois Supreme Court has held that "scienter" is an essential element of a violation under that state's securities laws, despite the absence of any reference to a standard of culpability. People v. Whitlow, 89 Ill. 2d 322, 433 N.E.2d 629 (1982) .

Oregon: Or. Rev. Stat. § 59.991 ("violates" provisions).

Rhode Island: R.I. Rev. Laws Ann. § 7-11-24 (except for statements constituting false representation, no standard).

Texas: Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. § 581-29 (except for certain untrue statements, no standard).

See Shappley v. State, 520 S.W.2d 766 (Tex. Crim. App. 1974) . In discussing the particular subsection of the Texas Blue Sky law (Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. § 581-29(B)) that prescribes no standard of culpability, the court imposed strict liability. Although this case dealt specifically with strict liability for the sale of unregistered securities, strict liability would appear to apply to other subsections of the Texas Blue Sky law that also do not prescribe any standard of culpability.

(n27)Footnote 27. See State v. Hodge, 204 Kan. 98, 460 P.2d 596, 604 (1969) , in which the court stated that "no specific intent is necessary to constitute the offense if one violates the securities act except the intent to do the act denounced by the statute."

Ct. 1978) (the Martin Act is directed at acts or practices, not at any particular mental state of the wrongdoer. A criminal violation of the state's securities law will lie regardless of intent to defraud); People v.

In State v. Temby, Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 71,754 (Wis. App. 1982) (reversed on other grounds and remanded), the court held that the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that it was not required to find intent to defraud as a necessary element of a criminal offense because the absence of the word "intent" from the statute indicated a clear legislative purpose that it not be an element of the criminal offense.

(n38)Footnote 38. Simon significantly predated *People v. The Salas court followed the lead of Simon, departing only to the extent of reallocating the burden of proof for the "guilty knowledge" requirement in the context of a prosecution for selling unregistered securities rather than committing fraud.

In any prosecution brought under [provisions of the Ohio Blue Sky law, with certain limited exceptions], the accused shall be deemed to have had knowledge of any matter of fact, where in the exercise of reasonable diligence, he should, prior to the alleged commission of the offense in question, have secured such knowledge.

This provision in Ohio has the general effect of defining "knowingly" more in terms of "negligently." Thus, for the purpose of fraudulent acts in selling securities in Ohio, a person is criminally liable if he or she represents facts to be different than he or she should have known them to be if he or she had exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain the facts. *State v. Va. 137, 298 S.E.2d 110 (1982) , in which the court concluded that the jury could infer that because the defendant was a former licensed broker-dealer who had once passed the NASD examination, he was familiar with the antifraud and registration provisions of the West Virginia Securities Act and, thus, "willfully" intended to deceive.

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.07

§ 14.07 Constitutional Considerations in State Enforcement Actions

[1] Qualified Immunity and Constitutionally Protected Rights

In the exercise of enforcement authority under Blue Sky laws by state administrators, the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution assures that absent an abrogation or waiver of immunity, agencies of state governments may not be sued in federal courts by the persons they regulate. However, the Eleventh Amendment does not prohibit actions against state employees sued in their official capacity for prospective equitable relief or to end a continuing violation of federal law.ⁿ¹ Persons or entities subject to regulation under Blue Sky laws may thus sue administrators for alleged violations of federal law or constitutional rights.ⁿ² However, governmental officials sued in their individual capacities have the protection of qualified immunity if their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights.ⁿ³ To claim the protection of qualified immunity, the state official has only the burden of establishing that he or she was acting within the scope of discretionary authority. Once that is established, the burden shifts to the complaining party to prove that qualified immunity is not warranted by showing that the right allegedly violated is clearly established.ⁿ⁴

The issue of qualified immunity of a state securities administrator from attack on federal constitutional grounds was thoroughly explored by a federal district court in Harris v. Borg,ⁿ⁵ where the plaintiff challenged an administrative cease-and-desist order issued by the Alabama Securities Commission. The Commission's order, signed by the Director, addressed a fraud in the offer and sale of unregistered investment contracts in various investment clubs promoted and operated by the plaintiff and others. As part of the administrative process, the Commission and the plaintiff entered into an agreement outlining actions to be taken in the liquidation of investor accounts and the pro rata distribution of available funds to investors as partial reimbursement. The plaintiff then commenced an action in federal court alleging that in issuing the cease-and-desist order, the Director violated the Takings, Equal Protection, and Procedural Due Process Clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. There was no issue in the case that the Director had acted within the scope of his discretionary authority under the Alabama Blue Sky Law. The question before the federal court, therefore, was whether the plaintiff's allegations set out a claim for violation of clearly established constitutional rights. Plaintiff in Borg alleged that the "forced" liquidation of investor accounts and seizure of funds amounted to a prohibited taking of property of the investors within the ambit of the Fifth Amendment.ⁿ⁶

The court rejected the challenge on the ground that the plaintiff did not identify any legally protected interest allegedly violated by the Director. The court observed that the Commission did not "take" investors' funds by returning to them what remained. Any investor losses on their initial investments could not be attributable to the Commission's Order. The court also dismissed the plaintiff's procedural due process claim on the same grounds. The plaintiff, said the court, was not deprived of any constitutionally-protected liberty or property interest. Plaintiff had no interest in the money of his investors, and any losses to the investor accounts were incurred by the investors, not the plaintiff. Notably as well, the court found that plaintiff had failed to take advantage of the hearing procedure that was made available to him by the Securities Commission. Finally, the court also rejected the asserted equal protection violation, finding that the plaintiff, an African-American, was not singled out by the Commission because of his race. Plaintiff failed to present sufficient evidence that the Director treated him differently from any similarly-situated individual because of his race.

[2] First Amendment and Commercial Expression

A challenge to an administrative enforcement order issued under the Massachusetts Securities Law based on the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was rejected. In Bulldog Investors General Partnership v. Galvin,ⁿ⁷ the plaintiffs, investment advisers to three hedge funds, sued the Secretary of the Commonwealth and the Chief of Enforcement of the Securities Division of the Office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth for a preliminary injunction against enforcement of an order to stop operating a website. Bulldog Investors maintained an interactive website that provided information about investment products offered by Bulldog. The website made certain information available to any visitor, including press articles and a printable brochure describing Bulldog's three investment vehicles. Certain representations were made on the website concerning performance and a visitor seeking more specific information about the funds and their performance could request such information by registering on the website and providing certain personal identifying information.

The enforcement section of the Massachusetts Securities Division filed an administrative complaint seeking a cease-and-desist order, an administrative fine, and other relief. The enforcement section asserted in its complaint that Bulldog had, via the website, offered securities for sale in the Commonwealth that were not registered or exempt under the Massachusetts Uniform Securities Act. While the administrative proceeding was pending, Bulldog commenced litigation in Massachusetts state court, alleging that the enforcement action violated the conduct forming the basis for the action protected by the free speech and free press guarantees of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, and that the administrative action chilled the exercise of those rights.ⁿ⁸ The court rejected the assertion and denied Bulldog's request for a preliminary injunction.ⁿ⁹

After concluding that the speech in question was clearly "commercial," the court applied the four-part test established by the U.S. Supreme Court in Central Hudson Gas & Electric Corp. v. Public Service Comm'n,ⁿ¹⁰ to determine whether the enforcement action in Bulldog infringed upon the constitutionally-protected commercial expression. Applying that test, a court must determine: (1) whether the speech in question provided truthful information about lawful activity; (2) whether the government has a substantial interest to be achieved by restricting the speech; (3) whether the regulatory technique was in proportion to the government's interest; and (4) whether the government's interest could be served as well by a more limited restriction on the speech.

The Massachusetts court rejected the assertion that Bulldog's website communicated untruthful or misleading information about an unlawful activity. However, the court also concluded that the regulation involved serves a substantial governmental interest, namely, the importance of regulation of the offer and sale of securities in protecting the health of the capital markets and of the economy. Thus, the central questions were whether the regulation was in proportion to that interest and whether the interest could be served as well by a more limited restriction. On these criteria, the court concluded that the regulation involved--prohibition of expression that limits solicitation of offers of securities to those who have made full disclosure in connection with registration--directly serves the government interest in issue and that ultimately: "It is certainly reasonable to conclude that indiscriminate advertising to the general public tends to increase the likelihood of sales to ineligible persons, who may be persuaded to invest without the full information that registration would provide."ⁿ¹¹

Whether the government's interest could be achieved in a less restrictive manner presented the more difficult question.

The court was satisfied, however, that the enforcement order at issue "fit directly within the longstanding aim of securities regulation that Courts have consistently accepted as permissible."¹² The court observed that there were no practical means of imposing less burden and that the attempt to do so would likely result in more, rather than less, burden on speech.

On the other hand, in Lubin v. Agora, Inc.,¹³ in which an administrative subpoena for production of subscriber lists, marketing lists, and other documents containing information identifying subscribers to investment newsletters could not withstand a First Amendment challenge if the Maryland Commissioner failed to show a compelling need for the material and if the demand was overbroad. In an investigation into potential violations of antifraud and investment adviser licensing requirements in Maryland Securities Act, the administrator argued that First Amendment interests were not implicated and the information being sought was relevant to the authorized investigation and would allow for a determination whether the Act had been violated. The Commissioner urged that enforcement of the subpoena would not restrict the respondent's publishing activities in any way and that the information constituted unprotected commercial speech. The respondent argued that no compelling need for the information had been shown and that there was no showing that the agency had no other means of obtaining relevant information.

The court agreed, observing that in order to compel production of the subscriber information, the Commissioner must establish a substantial relation between the information sought and an overriding and compelling state interest. Additionally:

To the extent that the Commissioner's subpoenas require Agora, a publisher, to disclose the identities of those who subscribe to or purchase its materials, the subpoenas seek information within the protective umbrella of the First Amendment. Enforcement of the subpoenas would intrude upon the First Amendment rights of Agora's subscribers and customers because disclosure of their subscriber status and purchase of the Report would destroy the anonymity that the Supreme Court has recognized as important to the unfettered exercise of First Amendment freedoms. If the names of Agora's readers were disclosed to the government, they might be subjected to questioning from investigators about their reading habits. Agora's subscribers may be discouraged from reading its materials if they are interviewed by government personnel investigating potential securities violations, even if the readers are told that, individually, they are not under investigation.¹⁴

Administrative subpoenas may raise other constitutional issues, as for example, Fourth Amendment privacy rights, discussed further below.

[3] Administrative Subpoena Authority

The broad scope of subpoena authority granted to administrators in state securities laws may impact privacy rights guaranteed by the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. In State of Washington v. Miles,¹⁵ the Washington Supreme Court confronted a challenge under both state and federal constitutions to an administrative subpoena issued by the Securities Commissioner to a bank, requesting certain records pertaining to accounts used by the defendant investment adviser or entities under his control. Miles, who was subsequently charged with securities fraud, witness intimidation and tampering, and theft, had not been given notice of the subpoena and at trial, sought to suppress the evidence obtained. The trial court concluded that the banking records fell within constitutionally-protected privacy interests under the state constitution and further concluded that because no notice had been provided, the subpoena lacked authority of law. However, the trial court denied the motion to suppress based upon a "pervasively regulated industry" exception to the constitutional requirement for a warrant to obtain the information. An immediate appeal was taken directly to the Washington Supreme Court, which held that the administrative subpoena was invalid and that a search of personal banking records without a judicially issued warrant or subpoena to the subject party violated the state constitution.

The Miles court specifically concluded that the Washington Securities Law is invalid to the extent that it authorizes the Commissioner to issue administrative subpoenas to third parties for otherwise private information. The court found that just because a person engages in a business that is pervasively regulated would not expose that person's non-business related private matters to public inspection.ⁿ¹⁶ The court rejected the argument that warrantless inspection of the records was necessary to effectuate the regulatory scheme and that everything offered in purported justification of the warrantless search in fact supported resort to judicial issuance of a subpoena or warrant and did not support any exception.ⁿ¹⁷

[4] Due Process--Generally

In Majors v. South Carolina Securities Commission,ⁿ¹⁸ the South Carolina Supreme Court considered a constitutional due process challenge to the summary issuance of an initial cease-and-desist order. The South Carolina Attorney General, acting as the Securities Commissioner, issued an order for the plaintiffs to cease and desist selling unregistered securities and engaging in securities fraud. Although issued summarily, the order gave notice of a right to a hearing, which plaintiffs requested and which was held. Based on a report and recommendation issued in connection with that hearing, the Commissioner issued a final order to cease and desist from offering or selling unregistered securities--investment contracts. However, there was no finding that the plaintiff was engaged in securities fraud. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming, among other things, that the Commissioner did not have lawful authority to issue the initial cease-and-desist order and that they were not afforded due process in the underlying administrative proceeding.

The plaintiffs' appeal to the South Carolina Court of Appeals was certified directly to the South Carolina Supreme Court, which affirmed the administrative orders. The Supreme Court first concluded that the Commissioner clearly had authority to issue cease-and-desist order prior to the commencement of a civil case.ⁿ¹⁹ Then, as to due process, the court concluded that the administrative process allowing summary orders was permissible so long as notice and opportunity to be heard was provided. It is not necessary, said the court, that there be notice and an opportunity to be heard at each step of the administrative process. Rather, it mandates notice and opportunity to be heard at some point before the agency makes its final decision.ⁿ²⁰ The court concluded that the respondents had been afforded due process because the initial cease-and-desist order provided them with the right to a hearing, which they requested and were afforded by an independent hearing officer. Thereafter, they were permitted to appeal the Commissioner's final cease-and-desist order and were allowed to post a bond to stay enforcement of that order pending appeal.ⁿ²¹

Due process concerns are always present in state administrative enforcement proceedings. In Trust & Investment Advisers, Inc. v. Hogsett,ⁿ²² for example, plaintiff brought an action in federal court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief as well as money damages for the alleged violation of its procedural due process rights in an enforcement proceeding brought by the Indiana Securities Division. Among other things, plaintiff asserted that the Division had an "indirect pecuniary interest" in the adjudication of the case, and that conduct of the Commissioner evidenced that the Division had prejudged the outcome of the proceeding. The U.S. District Court abstained and dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the Seventh Circuit reversed and remanded the case for further findings on whether the Indiana Commissioner's institutional bias in the proceeding denied plaintiff a procedurally fair hearing in the state forum. The Seventh Circuit called for a realistic appraisal of the effect, if any, that the alleged bias on the part of the Division would have on the adjudicator's capacity for fair and impartial decision-making.ⁿ²³

On balance, however, procedural due process in administrative proceedings under Blue Sky laws requires only that an individual be given adequate notice of the charges and an opportunity to be heard. In Schwalm v. Pa. Secs. Commission,ⁿ²⁴ the respondent alleged, among other things, that he had been denied due process in connection with an order to show cause, and a resulting determination that he be permanently barred from selling securities in the state and ordered to pay $350,000 as an assessment. Respondent claimed that the hearing process was not fair and impartial because he did not know he was allowed to call witnesses. The reviewing court found no due process violation, and in describing the particular process involved in the case, also described what is typical under all state securities laws:

In the present case, Schwalm was afforded all the process to which he was due. The original order to show cause clearly listed all the charges against Schwalm, and he was given adequate time to respond. The hearing notice sent by the Commission explicitly stated that witnesses could be called and that Schwalm could call his own witnesses in his defense. Moreover, counsel represented Schwalm during the hearing; any concerns he had regarding witnesses and evidence should have been discussed with his counsel at that time. There is nothing in the record to suggest that the hearing was not conducted in accordance with administrative rules and procedures, and Schwalm had every opportunity to be heard.ⁿ²⁵

[5] Constitutional Issues with Penal Provisions

The constitutionality of criminal penalties provided in Blue Sky laws has occasionally been tested. For the most part, such challenges are made on arguments that provisions under which a defendant is convicted are void for vagueness. In State v. Shepherd,ⁿ²⁶ for example, the defendant sought to overturn his conviction for selling unregistered securities, and without a license, on grounds that the provisions of the Utah Blue Sky law under which he was convicted were unconstitutionally vague. As with all Blue Sky laws, Utah makes it unlawful to offer or sell an unregistered security unless the security or transaction is exempt. Exempt transactions in Utah include transactions not involving a "public offering," which is not specifically defined in the statute. The defendant argued that because the key term is not defined, he was not provided with adequate notice to guide his conduct. The court disagreed, concluding instead that the term provides a "reasonable degree of common understanding" and that terms not defined in the statute are not only assigned a meaning commonly accepted in the business community, but is also a settled term as a matter of long-standing federal securities regulation, which supplies the business community with a common understanding. Thus, said the court, the term is definite enough to provide adequate notice of proscribed conduct:

The business community has had an operable definition of public offering for over forty years. When a businessperson operates in a highly regulated arena such as the sale of securities, he must make certain that he is complying with all technical requirements.ⁿ²⁷

Likewise, in State v. Woodington,ⁿ²⁸ the Wisconsin Supreme Court emphasized that given the purpose of Blue Sky laws to protect the public by preventing the sale of worthless or fraudulent securities:

[W]e have no hesitancy in concluding that no average person seeking registration of securities for the purpose of sale to the public could be unaware or confused as to the prohibitions of sec. 189.19(2)(d). The statute, with ample clarity, advises him that he cannot seek registration nor offer securities for sale if he in fact knows of the falsity or misleading nature of a material statement or representation in connection therewith. The statute advises him with equal clarity that he is obligated to use ordinary care to determine the falsity or misleading character of material statements or representations. Because of the legislative concern for the welfare of the public, the burden imposed--to exercise ordinary care--is neither ambiguous, uncertain, nor unfair. Where the substantial protection of the public welfare is concerned the legislature can, in the proper exercise of the police power, constitutionally prohibit, by criminal statute, negligent conduct which would be detrimental to this public interest.ⁿ²⁹

The constitutionality of the penal provisions in Blue Sky laws has thus generally been upheld.ⁿ³⁰

Although most constitutional challenges fail, a successful constitutional attack was mounted against the shifting in burden of proof that is involved in some criminal prosecutions for violation of Blue Sky laws. In State v. Powdrill III,ⁿ³¹ the Louisiana Supreme Court held that a provision in the Blue Sky law which effectively shifted the burden of proof in a criminal case to the defendant who was charged with selling securities by means of false or misleading statements was unconstitutional. The Louisiana securities law provided for criminal liability of one who willfully offers or sells a security by means of any false or misleading statement of a material fact. An available defense provided that a criminal defendant could prove lack of guilty intent by proving that he or she did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission. The burden of proof on the defense was squarely upon the defendant, and the court concluded that shifting the burden was impermissible because it negated the state's obligation to prove each of the elements of the crime charged.

The court admonished that proof of willful behavior requires the state to prove that a defendant acted knowingly and deliberately. The burden of proof, said the court, could not be shifted to the defendant via the statutory "defense" because it would actually shift to the defendant the state's burden to prove the willfulness element of the violation. The burden shifting language of the Louisiana law was thus held to be a prohibited reallocation of burden and a violation of due process guarantees under the state and federal constitutions.ⁿ³²

Finally, a criminal prosecution instituted subsequent to an administrative proceeding in which a civil penalty is imposed may impact constitutional protections against double jeopardy. The U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a civil penalty will not be treated as the equal of a criminal penalty for double jeopardy purposes except where it is clear that the legislature intended that treatment. The guidelines established in Hudson v. United States ⁿ³³ for equating civil and criminal penalties portend that few administrative penalties under state Blue Sky laws will be deemed to implicate the double jeopardy protection. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court made certain that traditional double jeopardy principles may still be applied to equate civil and criminal penalties if there is clear proof of the legislature's intention, as evidenced by the nature of the administrative sanction authorized, the elements and objective involved in imposing it, and its historical characterization as punishment.

Where double jeopardy is implicated, the impact on parallel proceedings is apparent. In Hudson, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency imposed large civil money penalties on board members of two banks who the agency found had made improper loans. The individuals were subsequently indicted for bank fraud stemming from the same transactions. Had the civil penalties been determined to be "punishment" for Fifth Amendment purposes, the criminal prosecution would have been precluded. The Supreme Court rejected the argument because, among other things, equating the administrative sanction with a criminal penalty would undermine the government's ability to engage in effective regulation.ⁿ³⁴

In the process of criminal adjudications under Blue Sky laws, definitional issues may arise concerning the role of judge and jury. In People v. Pahl, 169 P.3d 169 (Colo. Ct. App.) , modified, 2006 Colo. App. LEXIS 1775 (Oct. 26, 2006) , a defendant convicted of selling unregistered securities claimed the trial court erred by submitting to the jury the issue of whether a "security" was involved at all. The defendant maintained that the issue is a question of law for the court. The appellate court disagreed, noting in part that the defendant's motions for judgment of acquittal, which were denied, had been partially based on the contention that no security was present. The court was satisfied that a legal determination of whether the instrument involved in the case was a security was satisfied by the trial court's finding that there was sufficient evidence in that regard to send the case to the jury.

In Pahl, the court also upheld the trial court to allow expert testimony by the former Commissioner of Securities that the transaction was a security. Although calling it a close question, the appeals court concluded that it was not an abuse of discretion to permit the testimony and that the expert's opinion did not rise to the level of a pronouncement of law or exceed the role and limits of expert testimony.

The court held that the New Mexico Securities Act expressly provides that nothing limits the power of the state to punish a person for conduct that constitutes a crime under other law. Each crime with which the defendant was charged requires proof of elements that the other does not and the legislature intended that a prosecutor be afforded discretion in both charging the crimes and seeking separate punishments of such crimes. A defendant may be convicted and sentenced for both general fraud and securities fraud.

Miller*, 168 Ariz. 594, 816 P.2d 251 (1991) (administrative penalties that are not punitive in nature do not amount to double jeopardy in a subsequent criminal prosecution arising out of the same facts).

In the administration and enforcement of Blue Sky laws, state regulators are clearly state actors for constitutional due process purposes. However, self-regulatory organizations are not state actors for due process purposes, unless a governmental nexus can be established. In Scher v. NASD, Inc., 386 F. Supp. 2d 402 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) , the plaintiff was prosecuted and ultimately convicted of perjury in on-the-record sworn testimony given in an NASD (now FINRA) disciplinary proceeding. In her suit against NASD, the plaintiff alleged that she was not adequately advised that lying in an NASD proceeding could lead to criminal prosecution. The court dismissed the claim, holding that NASD is not a state actor and that without state action, constitutional guarantees of due process do not apply. For due process to apply, said the court, there must be a governmental nexus. The regulatory function of NASD may be viewed as "quasi-governmental." Nevertheless, there is no sufficient tie to government to make it a "state actor."

CHAPTER 14 State Enforcement Authority

2-14 Blue Sky Regulation § 14.08

§ 14.08 Principal Considerations for Regulatory Actions

Enforcement actions by state securities administrators focus heavily on activities of intermediaries. As outlined in Chapter 11, broker-dealers and investment advisers, along with their agents and representatives, are, in nearly all states, subject not only to qualitative standards in licensing, but also to conduct and business practice standards established by rulemaking under antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws. In many cases, specific prohibited or fraudulent acts and practices by intermediaries are identified. To that extent, there is at least a degree of certainty in identifying the circumstances in which an enforcement action in the context of intermediary activities and operations could be expected. However, the goal of enforcement is to create a culture of compliance in which those involved in the securities business institute effective, proactive measures to prevent problems from arising and to address them effectively when they do arise.

In an undertaking to encourage firms to self-police, self-report, and to act in a cooperative manner with state securities regulators, in September 2005, the Broker-Dealer Section of NASAA--the North American Securities Administrators Association--issued its "Report on Principal Considerations for Regulatory Actions."¹ The NASAA Report identifies particular considerations that state securities regulators may, in their sole discretion, take into account in determining what enforcement action, if any, should be taken against a broker-dealer when a violation has occurred. The considerations are not intended to provide formal guidance or serve as a basis for a firm to challenge the initiation of any enforcement action or proceeding. Rather, the objective is to encourage proactive steps and cooperation. Although directed specifically at enforcement decisions involving broker-dealers, the considerations presented in the NASAA Report are susceptible to broader application in all areas of enforcement under Blue Sky laws. The principal considerations are outlined below.

(1) Did the firm have adequate written supervisory policies and procedures in place to identify and prevent the misconduct at issue? Elements of this inquiry include whether the firm had qualified supervisory personnel assigned to implement these policies and procedures, and whether there is a "tone at the top" regarding the importance of an effective compliance program. An important consideration here is whether the misconduct at issue was discovered because of internal compliance procedures.

(2) Has the firm taken prompt and adequate measures to avoid future occurrences of the same type of misconduct? The inquiry here focuses on what assurances there are that the particular misconduct is unlikely to recur. This may be a function of new and more effective internal controls and procedures designed to prevent recurrence of the misconduct. A key consideration here will be the extent to which the firm supplies enforcement agencies with sufficient information to evaluate the measures taken to correct the situation and ensure that the conduct does not recur.

(3) Did the firm conduct a review of all facts involved in the misconduct and make a diligent effort to identify all parties involved? In this analysis, the simple question is whether the firm was committed to learning the truth fully and expeditiously. Regulators will consider whether the firm conducted a thorough review, the extent to which it was properly overseen, and whether it was subject to any scope limitations.

(4) Did the company promptly make available to state regulators the results of its review and provide sufficient documentation reflecting its response to the situation? Production by the firm of a thorough and probing written report may be an important consideration here. One concern is whether in its internal investigation, the company identified possible violative conduct and evidence with sufficient precision to facilitate prompt enforcement action against those who violated the law. The results and completeness of a company review will also be evaluated in terms of whether the company discloses information not directly requested by regulators and which might not have otherwise been uncovered. The overall degree of cooperation between the firm and the regulators is also a factor here.

(5) Was the nature of the misconduct of the employee or agent the result of inadvertence, inadequate training, error, simple negligence, reckless or deliberate indifference to indicia of wrongful conduct, willful misconduct, or unadorned venality? Whether timely and appropriate actions have been taken by the firm against wrongdoers will be considered, as will the extent to which such persons remain associated with the firm and in what capacities.

(6) Where appropriate, did the firm notify the self-regulatory authorities and federal and state regulatory authorities, and/or criminal authorities in a timely and appropriate manner? Part of this process of self-reporting also involves following up with timely notification and disclosure to the CRD and IARD systems, as applicable.

(7) Did the firm act promptly and fully in addressing client complaints and/or losses prior to the intervention by a regulatory agency? Part of a firm's internal review should include steps to identify the extent of damage to investors and other constituencies from the misconduct. The implicit expectation is that the firm will seek out persons or entities harmed by the wrongdoers and offer restitution without state or other regulatory intervention.

Other principal considerations in determining whether enforcement action should be initiated include whether the firm has any history of misconduct, and in particular, of the misconduct at issue, as well as whether the misconduct was a one-time event or lasted for several years. Additionally, what, if any, "red flags" were present that should have warned the firm of potential problems and whether the firm acted on those indications on a timely basis? How did the misconduct arise? Was it the result of pressure placed on employees to achieve specific results, or a tone of lawlessness set by those in control? Along those lines, consideration will also be given to where in the organization the misconduct occurred and to how high up in the chain of command there was knowledge of or participation in the misconduct. The effect of any proposed regulatory action on public policy concerns will also be addressed in deciding whether to commence an action against a firm, as well as how much harm the misconduct inflicted on investors.

The NASAA Report makes clear that a firm's cooperation and proactive steps as outlined will not necessarily absolve firms from responsibility or liability or preclude the initiation of any enforcement action. Moreover, as noted at the outset, NASAA member jurisdictions may choose in the sole discretion whether or not to take the principal considerations into account. However, it is plain that meaningful self-policing and self-reporting is seen as an important adjunct to Blue Sky regulatory authority and that the desired "culture of compliance" in an organization should be acknowledged and rewarded.

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.01

§ 15.01 Introduction

In the preceding chapter the considerable enforcement authority of state securities administrators was considered in detail. Major enforcement initiatives spearheaded by state regulators into such areas as securities analyst conflicts of interest and nationwide promissory note investment scams have demonstrated the vitality of Blue Sky regulation in the post-NSMIA era. Nevertheless, private civil remedies have always been an important part of the Blue Sky regulatory scheme, and the civil liability provisions in state securities laws play a major role in accomplishing investor protection goals by affording remedies for fraud and other misconduct that are more easily achieved than common law actions. The basic rescission and damage remedies that are part of every state securities law are markedly preferable to what is otherwise available as a matter of the common law. This chapter explores the scope and elements of civil liability and remedies available under these provisions.

Only New York has no civil remedy of any kind. New York's Martin Act, with an exception for real estate and theatrical syndications and intrastate issues, provides for liability based almost exclusively on fraud, and empowers only the Attorney General to bring actions.ⁿ¹ There is no private civil remedy unless one could be judicially implied. Although historically several courts recognized an implied private right of action under the Act for purchasers or sellers injured by securities fraud,ⁿ² the New York Court of Appeals held in CPC International, Inc. v. McKesson Corp. that "there is no private right of action to enforce the provisions of § 352-c"ⁿ³ and concluded that "an implied private action is not consistent with the legislative scheme underlying the Martin Act."ⁿ⁴ Courts have further recognized the preemptive impact of the Martin Act on various common law claims based upon conduct that falls within the scope of the Martin Act and the Attorney General's exclusive enforcement authority. The extremely broad fraud provisions in the Act may be violated without proof of scienter, or proof of intent to defraud.ⁿ⁵ Causes of action related to an individual plaintiff's securities fraud claim such as negligence or breach of fiduciary duty, which do not include scienter as an essential element, are deemed preempted by the Act in contrast to a claim requiring intent, such as a claim for common law fraud. Claims of negligent misrepresentation, negligence and breach of fiduciary duty have all been held to be preempted by the Martin Act.ⁿ⁶ Given the sole authority of the Attorney General to investigate securities violations, to permit a private plaintiff to go forward on any securities-related claim not involving proof of deceitful intent would in the eyes of these courts effectively permit a private right of action under the Martin Act.ⁿ⁷ Courts will also guard against "backdoor" private causes of action to enforce the Martin Act.ⁿ⁸

However, the Martin Act does not preempt claims of common law fraud resting on the same facts that would support a Martin Act violation as long as they are sufficient to satisfy traditional rules of pleading and proof.ⁿ⁹ In Kramer v.

W10Z/515 Real Estate Limited Partnership,ⁿ¹⁰ the court explained:

When a plaintiff pleads all the elements of fraud with particularity, no end run around the Martin Act would be entailed by granting the plaintiff an opportunity to prove the truth of the allegations. But to throw the plaintiff out of court merely because the Attorney General would be entitled to relief under the Martin Act on the strength of the same allegations, or a subset of those allegations, makes no sense. The Martin Act, of course, "was enacted to protect the public from fraudulent exploitation" ... and "has a broad remedial purpose to protect the public interest... ." To construe the Martin Act to have abolished the right of purchasers of condominium and cooperative interests (and purchasers of other securities) to sue sellers for common-law fraud is to give the Martin Act a construction that is antithetical to its remedial purpose. Nor does anything in the text of the Martin Act lend any support to such a construction.ⁿ¹¹

In states other than New York, which have express civil liability provisions in their Blue Sky laws, the question arises whether there may be any further implied causes of action for violations. For that analysis, the focus most often turns to paragraph (h) of Section 410 of the Uniform Act and those states that have adopted it, with or without the final clause: "[b]ut this act does not create any cause of action not specified in this section or section 202(e)." This clause was added to the Uniform Act specifically to exclude implied liability under the Blue Sky law,ⁿ¹² and the provision was carried into the 2002 Uniform Act.ⁿ¹³ The express, statutory rights of action are thus intended to provide the exclusive cause of action.

In states with an express civil liability provision that is silent as to whether the rights and remedies under the Blue Sky law are in addition to those at law or in equity,ⁿ¹⁴ it may be possible to imply a private right of action for violation of particular provisions of the Blue Sky law. However, to do so requires application of principles that have long governed the implication of private rights of action under the federal securities laws, not the least of which today is that there be a manifest intent of the legislature to allow such a remedy where none is expressly provided.ⁿ¹⁵

Civil liability and remedies under Blue Sky laws may be impacted by the National Securities Market Improvements Act, ("NSMIA"),ⁿ¹⁶ which amended section 18 of the Securities Act of 1933 and other federal statutes regulating the securities industry by providing for limited preemption of state Blue Sky laws. The legislation preempts state authority to require registration of "federal covered securities" and limits state regulation of securities disclosure documents and certain intermediaries. However, the states retain their authority to bring enforcement actions with respect to "fraud or deceit" or "unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer."ⁿ¹⁷

Private remedies to redress securities violations are not directly addressed by NSMIA. However, derivative or implied rights of action that are based upon violations of state securities law provisions that are preempted are necessarily also preempted. Accordingly, a civil action derived from a proscribed state regulation of covered securities or intermediaries would be unenforceable for lack of the requisite underlying violation. Against this backdrop, the private remedy provisions of state securities laws are considered further below.

In Kerusa, the New York Court of Appeals concluded that plaintiff's action would expand the already detailed disclosure requirements of the Martin Act, and base fraud claims on alleged omissions from filings required by the Martin Act and the Attorney General's implementing regulations. Merely alleging the elements of common law fraud, said the Court, does not transmute a prohibited private cause of action to enforce Martin Act disclosure requirements into an independent common law tort.

While NSMIA precluded states from regulating any national offering of securities, there was no indication that statute was intended to preempt state fraud actions, since it did not provide any civil liability or enforcement provisions and did not amend statutes providing that the federal remedy was in addition to other remedies. The court concluded that claims for common law fraud did not interfere with regulatory provisions of NSMIA and were consistent with the objective of federal securities law to deter fraud.

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.02

§ 15.02 Statutory Civil Remedies

With the exception of New York, which provides no private civil remedy, Blue Sky laws universally provide a statutory remedy of rescission, or to recover damages as a rescission equivalent, in a transaction which involves a violation of registration or intermediary licensing provisions, or which involves fraud or deception. This principal statutory remedy in Blue Sky laws may include a particular culpability element. For the most part, however, there is strict liability for a seller (and in several states a purchaser as well) in a transaction which violates the law. The statute of limitations is always a consideration, and there are defenses applicable in regard to non-sellers or others against whom joint and several liability may be imposed. On balance, however, the basic statutory remedy in Blue Sky laws involves no substantial obstacles, and is a much easier remedy to obtain in comparison to alternatives in common law or equity. In this section, the baseline remedy available under Blue Sky laws is discussed, and the scope of that remedy as, for example, to include punitive damages or other elements of loss or expense, is likewise presented.

[1] Purchasers and Sellers

The central statutory right of action in Blue Sky laws is that provided for a purchaser of a security to sue persons who "sell" the security, to obtain rescission of the purchase, or damages as a rescission equivalent, along with interest, costs, and attorneys fees. Based on what is today section 12(a) of the federal Securities Act of 1933,ⁿ¹ the basic right of action in state securities laws is triggered when an offer or sale of a security is made in violation of the law. Although "violation" may be more broadly or specifically defined in some Blue Sky laws, the basic statutory right of action addresses violations of: (1) securities registration requirements; (2) antifraud provisions;ⁿ² and (3) broker-dealer and agent licensing requirements. Thus, as prescribed by section 410(a) of the original Uniform Securities Act:

(a) Any person who

(1) offers or sells a security in violation of section 201(a) [Broker-Dealer and Agent Registration], 301 [Securities Registration], or 405(b) [Unlawful Representation Concerning Registration or Exemption], or of any rule or order under section 403 [Filing Sales Literature] which requires the affirmative approval of sales literature before it is used, or of any condition imposed under section 304(d), 305(g), or 305(h), or

(2) offers or sells a security by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the buyer not knowing of the untruth or omission), and who does not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission, is liable to the person buying the security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity to recover the consideration paid for the security, together with interest at six percent per year from the date of payment, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees, less the amount of any income received on the security, upon tender of the security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

The same civil remedy is carried into section 509 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, except that it has been expanded to also include a statutory right of action for a defrauded seller of a security to recover from the purchaser.ⁿ³ While the majority of states still limit the statutory right of action to purchasers,ⁿ⁴ the expanded 2002 Uniform Act provision reflects a more modern and broader view of antifraud remedies that extends protection to both defrauded purchasers and sellers. The broader statutory right of action that is now part of the 2002 Uniform Act is, of course, made a part of the Blue Sky laws of those several states that have adopted the Act.ⁿ⁵ Other states have done so as well.ⁿ⁶ Where a right of action is provided for a seller against a purchaser, the statutes also extend joint and several liability to control persons and others who materially aid or participate in the conduct giving rise to liability.ⁿ⁷

The statutory rights of action for purchasers, or sellers, addressing fraud in Blue Sky laws typically contain specific elements or defenses, not the least of which is a "reasonable care" defense. For other violations, however, subject to the applicable statute of limitations, there is strict liability. There is no defense in Blue Sky laws to a statutory claim based upon the sale of unregistered, non-exempt securities. Likewise, there is strict liability on the face of Blue Sky laws for the sale of a security by an unregistered broker-dealer or agent. Liability under these provisions in connection with the sale of securities must, of course, fall upon one who is held to be a "seller," or who falls within another statutory category of liable persons. The scope of strict liability is thus constrained by the requirement for some degree of culpability where a non-seller or secondary actor is involved.

In some states, the basic private civil remedy for purchasers is triggered in a transaction in which the seller violates any provision of the state Blue Sky law. These states commonly provide that any sale or contract of sale made "in violation" of the Blue Sky law is voidable at the election of the purchaser, who may then sue to recover from the seller.ⁿ⁸ The breadth of such provisions was criticized by drafters of the original Uniform Securities Act for several reasons. First, the seller has to search every substantive provision of a typically complicated statute before he or she knows whether the contract or sale is voidable. Secondly, there are so many substantive provisions, and they are often so technical, that voiding a substantial contract sometimes seems to be a remedy out of all proportion to the seriousness of the violation. The drafters questioned why, for example, a sophisticated buyer should be able to recover the purchase price from the seller when the market generally has gone down just because the buyer later discovers that the seller filed a required report a day late.ⁿ⁹ In some instances, this concern has been addressed by provisions requiring that the "violation" upon which a claim is based be one that materially affects the protection contemplated by the violated provision.ⁿ¹⁰ However, without such a statutory basis for limiting liability, any sale made "in violation" will make a transaction voidable against the seller, provided the claim is brought within the applicable statute of limitations.

The sale of unregistered, non-exempt securities is a specific ground for private civil action in almost all states.ⁿ¹¹ The vitality of civil remedies under Blue Sky laws in these circumstances is well illustrated by the 2005 Alabama Supreme Court decision in Buist v. Time Domain Corp.,ⁿ¹² in which the Court held that civil liability claims made under the Alabama securities law arising out of transactions alleged to be exempt by Rule 506 of Regulation D under the federal Securities Act of 1933, and thus federal "covered securities" were not preempted by NSMIA. Because no evidence had been presented that the subject sales of securities were actually made in compliance with Rule 506 of Regulation D, the transactions could not be deemed to be exempt and preempted from state regulation under NSMIA. They were thus subject to application of the registration requirements of the Alabama securities law.ⁿ¹³ Likewise, most states provide for civil liability when sales are made by unregistered broker-dealers or agents.ⁿ¹⁴

In sum, although even among Uniform Act states there is some variation, the array of "violations" for which the basic statutory private right of action by purchasers may be brought against "sellers" include the following:

- (1) acting as broker-dealers, agents, or investment advisers without registration;ⁿ¹⁵
- (2) selling unregistered securities for which no exemption is available;ⁿ¹⁶
- (3) representing that registration constitutes approval by the administrator of any person, security, or transaction;
- (4) failing to file with the administrator any advertising or sales literature that may be required;ⁿ¹⁷
- (5) selling securities without submitting a prospectus to purchasers in accordance with rules of the administrator;ⁿ¹⁸
- (6) failing to comply with escrow conditions that the administrator may order in connection with securities sold to promoters at a price less than the public offering price or sold for consideration other than cash;ⁿ¹⁹ and
- (7) failing to comply with the form of sales contract for the sale of securities as required by the administrator.

That a private civil action is not specifically allowed under a state's Blue Sky law does not necessarily mean that an injured party is precluded from bringing suit. As noted earlier, Uniform Securities Act § 410(h) provides: "The rights and remedies provided by this act are in addition to any other rights or remedies that may exist at law or in equity, but this act does not create any cause of action not specified in this section or section 202(e)." This provision continues as section 509(m) of the 2002 Uniform Act, and in one form or another is included in virtually all Blue Sky laws.ⁿ²⁰ Remedies at common law or in equity are specifically discussed further in section 15.03.

A caveat in the application of statutory rights of action in Blue Sky laws is that NSMIA may preempt all or some actions arising out of transactions involving federal covered securities. Certainly to the extent that the Blue Sky law of a state imposes civil liability or allows a right of action for registration-related violations of the law, the NSMIA preemption of state registration requirements for federal covered securities necessarily extinguishes any private remedy under those provisions where federal covered securities are involved.ⁿ²¹ NSMIA does not, however, preempt the operation of antifraud provisions in Blue Sky laws, and to the extent that violations of Blue Sky laws are defined in antifraud terms or arise under antifraud provisions, there is no NSMIA preemption regardless of the character underlying security or transaction. Any such action arising out of a transaction involving a federal covered security is nevertheless likely to be challenged on federal preemption grounds. Moreover, as discussed in Chapter 12, to the extent that any action is brought under Blue Sky antifraud provisions as a class or "mass" action, the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act (SLUSA)ⁿ²² will operate to preempt it if federal covered securities are involved and the claims are based on alleged false or misleading disclosures or fraud generally in the offer and sale of the securities.

The scope of civil liability under statutory rights of action in Blue Sky laws is expanding in terms of remedies available. Most often the attention on statutory rights of action is focused on the right to rescission, or to damages as a rescission equivalent, that is the common private right of action in state laws and which is rooted in the Uniform Act. Broader civil liability provisions in some Blue Sky laws today extend in many instances to investment advisers or "financial planners." Remedies may also include rights to obtain private injunctive and other equitable relief.ⁿ²³ Statutory civil remedies provided in many states for clients of investment advisers are discussed below.

[2] Advisory Clients

All states but one (Wyoming) impose licensing or registration requirements on investment advisers and investment adviser representatives who meet certain business activity threshold criteria. Investment advisers who are registered with the SEC under the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940 need not be licensed, as such, and make only "notice" filings in states in which they do business. Investment adviser representatives, however, must be registered or licensed in each state in which they meet the threshold business activity criteria, regardless of whether the investment adviser itself is subject to state registration or licensing.ⁿ²⁴ In addition to licensing requirements, states impose particular antifraud and business conduct requirements on investment advisers and representatives. In the enforcement of all elements of state regulation of these intermediaries, many states provide a specific statutory civil remedy for advisory clients. Thus in Ohio, for example, a specific civil remedy is prescribed as follows:

Whoever acts as an investment adviser or investment adviser representative in violation of Chapter 1707 of the Revised Code shall be liable for damages resulting from the violation in an action at law in a court of competent jurisdiction. Damages may include consideration paid for the advice, any loss due to the advice, and all court costs, less the amount of any income received from the advice. No person may bring an action under this division more than five years after the rendering of investment advice or two years after discovery of facts constituting the violation, whichever is the shorter period.ⁿ²⁵

The 2002 Uniform Securities Act likewise expressly imposes civil liability on unregistered investment advisers and investment adviser representatives, as well as liability for investment advice involving fraud.ⁿ²⁶ These specific civil liability provisions applicable to investment advisers and investment adviser representatives are important because the basic civil liability provisions in Blue Sky laws discussed earlier address the right of purchasers of securities to sue sellers, and to obtain rescission of a transaction or damages as a rescission equivalent. Specific investment adviser and investment adviser representative liability is not predicated on a transaction, and no "seller" must be present. While it is true that in some circumstances an investment adviser or investment adviser representative may be deemed to be a "seller" or a person who materially aids or participates with a seller in a sale that violates the Blue Sky law, in many instances the role of the adviser may not be connected to an unlawful sale. Moreover, one who engages in investment advisory activities in violation of licensing or registration requirements in a particular state, but who is not a "seller" of securities in an unlawful transaction will not face liability under the basic civil liability provision simply by reason of being unlicensed. The statutory right of action for advisory clients to sue advisers who violate licensing or antifraud provisions thus provides a civil remedy that in many instances would not exist.

Civil remedies provided expressly for advisory clients broaden the range of protection under Blue Sky laws. However, they also impose certain logical limits on the scope of liability of investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. There is in many provisions, for example, a culpability, or "willfulness," element.ⁿ²⁷ Additionally, damages are generally limited to those resulting from the actual violation by the adviser or representative. Broad recovery of investment losses may or may not be within the scope of liability that permits recovery of actual damages resulting from a violation. These are issues to be addressed on a case-by-case basis. However, it is clear that damage causation plays a greater role in liability assessments under specific advisory client remedy provisions than with the basic purchaser or seller rescission provisions in Blue Sky laws.

[3] Standing

[a] Generally

The common civil liability provisions in Blue Sky laws are derived from section 410 of the Uniform Securities Act, which provides that any person who offers or sells a security in violation of registration or broker-dealer and agent licensing provisions or who offers or sells a security by means of any untrue or materially misleading statement is liable:

to the person buying the security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity to recover the consideration paid for the security, together with interest at six percent per year from the date of payment, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees, less the amount of any income received on the security, upon tender of the security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.ⁿ²⁸

Modern variations of the original Uniform Act civil liability provision, as best illustrated by section 509 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, have added a provision for civil remedy of a purchaser to a seller in a transaction involving a false or materially misleading statement. The remedy is the same, namely, rescission of the transaction upon tender of the purchase price back to the seller, or actual damages.ⁿ²⁹ However, the essential predicate in both situations is that there is an actual transaction.ⁿ³⁰ Whether in a particular state Blue Sky law the remedy is available to just purchasers or also to defrauded sellers, the key event is obviously a transaction. Even as extended to unregistered broker-dealers or agents,ⁿ³¹ liability and the civil remedy are predicated on a sale or purchase of a security in which the unlicensed intermediary is involved. And the extension of liability to controlling persons or others who materially aid or participate in conduct giving rise to liabilityⁿ³² is likewise anchored in an actual transaction in which there is a culpable seller or, where addressed, a purchaser.

These provisions do not create a general remedy for conduct that violates a Blue Sky law. They do not, for example, provide a civil remedy against unregistered investment advisers or investment adviser representatives who do not actually sell a security or sufficiently participate with a seller in an actual transaction. To be sure, many states, and the 2002 Uniform Act, now include specific civil liability and remedy provisions for the benefit of clients of unregistered advisers,ⁿ³³ but these are separate remedies with their own elements and specifications as to permitted recovery. They are not predicated on a sale or purchase of a security made in violation of the Blue Sky law.ⁿ³⁴

In some non-Uniform Act states the basic civil liability provision is worded to provide that "any sale or contract of sale made in violation" of the Blue Sky law is voidable, and thus subject to rescission or damages as a rescission equivalent. In Ohio, for example:

[E]very sale or contract of sale made in violation of Chapter 1707 of the Revised Code, is voidable at the election of the purchaser. The person making such sale or contract for sale, and every person that has participated in or aided the seller in any way in making such sale or contract of sale, are jointly and severally liable to the purchaser.ⁿ³⁵

Clearly, however, this does not change the transactional focus of civil liability and the remedy for a purchaser. A sale or contract of sale must still be made in violation of the law. Persons who solicit or play a meaningful role in bringing about the sale or contract of sale may fall within the scope of liability, but the essential element is that the resulting transaction violated the Blue Sky law.

While it is manifest on the face of the basic civil liability provisions in Blue Sky laws that standing to assert them must be based on an actual purchase or sale transaction, it is also true that Blue Sky laws do not provide the only remedies under state or common law for aggrieved investors seeking redress for alleged fraud or fraudulent conduct. All states provide for survival of other rights or remedies that may exist at law or in equity.ⁿ³⁶ The phenomenon of "holder" claims in state courts emerged as plaintiff investors sought recovery under common law theories alleging that material misrepresentations or omissions caused them to retain ownership of securities that they acquired prior to the alleged wrongdoing. "Holder" claims are not made under Blue Sky laws for the obvious reason discussed above that there is no transaction connected to the alleged wrongdoing. The antifraud provisions in Blue Sky laws are broad, but civil liability for fraud or fraudulent conduct under them has a transactional predicate. Nevertheless, because "holder" claims are being asserted in state courts under other provisions of state and common law, it is important that they be considered and understood as part of the overall picture of civil liability for conduct addressed in Blue Sky laws. These emergent claims and the manner in which they have been treated, are discussed below.

[b] "Holder" Claims

As the previous discussion makes clear, with the exception of provisions specifically aimed at intermediaries such as investment advisers, the civil liability provisions of state securities laws all have a transactional focus. They protect actual purchasers of securities, and in some states defrauded sellers. Violations of registration or qualification requirements are addressed by civil remedies for rescission of an unlawful transaction. The transactional focus of Blue Sky civil remedies precludes "holder" actions. A "holder" action is one in which the plaintiff alleges that material misrepresentations or omissions caused him or her to retain ownership of securities that were purchased prior to the alleged wrongdoing. While "holder" claims may not be asserted under Blue Sky statutory civil liability provisions, all Blue Sky laws preserve other state and common law remedies. As noted earlier, section 509 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, which tracks section 410 of the original Uniform Act, preserves the "rights and remedies that exist at law or in equity."ⁿ³⁷ Thus, to the extent that "holder" claims may be recognized as a matter of other state or common law remedies, such claims are not precluded by the existence of specific transaction-based remedies in the Blue Sky law.

Under the federal securities laws, the U.S. Supreme Court held over a quarter century ago in Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores ⁿ³⁸ that because of the inherent difficulty in proving reliance and damages in such actions, holders of securities are not entitled to sue under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and SEC Rule 10b-5 adopted under it. The Court cited several policy reasons that weighed against a claim that would rely largely on a plaintiff's oral version of the facts, and which is not verifiable by documentation. Allowing such a claim, said the Court, would encourage frivolous and vexatious litigation that would be difficult to resolve on the merits without a trial.ⁿ³⁹

As a matter of state law, although it is settled that purchaser or (where available) seller status is necessary to invoke unlawful transaction civil remedies under Blue Sky laws, state courts have not widely addressed the question whether "holder" claims by investors might be maintained under common law fraud or fiduciary duty theories. Applying Connecticut law, a federal court rejected a common law claim for damages by plaintiffs who alleged that they had failed to sell stock or to hedge their position as a result of misconduct. The claim was rejected as too speculative, with the court further observing that holder claims violate the "established principle that a plaintiff cannot recover profits which might have been realized if he had not been deceived, unless there is evidence by which such profits can be estimated with reasonable certainty."ⁿ⁴⁰ Other courts have relied on principles of loss causation to reject holder claims. These courts concluded that persons who hold securities during an alleged fraud are unable to plead that the misrepresentations caused their loss.ⁿ⁴¹ A Delaware state court dismissed a putative class action brought on behalf of holders of securities alleging violations of Delaware law because of the impossibility of proving reliance.ⁿ⁴²

Where "holder" claims have been permitted to stand, courts have imposed heightened pleading standards, and have required plaintiffs to allege specific reliance on alleged misrepresentations by defendants. In Small v. Fritz,ⁿ⁴³ for example, the California Supreme Court found that a class action "holder" claim could be stated under California law, provided that the class could meet a heightened standard for pleading reliance. The Court held:

In a holder's action a plaintiff must allege specific reliance on the defendants' representations: for example, that if the plaintiff had read a truthful account of the corporation's financial status the plaintiff would have sold the stock, how many shares the plaintiff would have sold, and when the sale would have taken place. The plaintiff must allege actions, as distinguished from unspoken and unrecorded thoughts and decisions, that would indicate that the plaintiff actually relied on the misrepresentations. Plaintiffs who cannot plead with sufficient specificity to show a bona fide claim of actual reliance do not stand out from the mass of stockholders who rely on the market... . Such persons cannot bring individual or class actions for fraud or misrepresentation.ⁿ⁴⁴ requirements for reliance are virtually impossible to meet.ⁿ⁴⁵ They are more easily handled in individual actions, however. In a case applying New York and New Jersey law, for example, common law claims by individual holders were permitted to proceed where there were allegations of direct communications and specific reliance.ⁿ⁴⁶ The court found that an individual plaintiff may state a common law fraud claim against a defendant whose misrepresentations caused the plaintiff to hold securities which plaintiff otherwise would have sold. The plaintiffs alleged repeated, face-to-face contact with the defendants during which the defendants made verbal and written misrepresentations. This was a critical consideration for the court, which explained:

One critical feature of the present case is generally absent from the securities market as described in Blue Chips Stamps. Plaintiffs had direct dealings with defendants in which the latter made certain of the representations complained of. This case is, therefore, an "ordinary case of deceit" as characterized by the Supreme Court in that defendants made representations directly to plaintiffs. Such a case could not be brought by anyone who happened to own Howard stock at any time from April to December 1989.ⁿ⁴⁷

A Texas appeals court likewise found that individual holder claims could be brought under Texas common law when the misrepresentations were made in direct face-to-face or telephone conversations, and where the plaintiffs alleged that they had a specific plan to sell their shares on a certain date.ⁿ⁴⁸ The court made clear that there would always be a very narrow pool of plaintiffs who could satisfy requirements for holder claims. One factor of particular note here was that the plaintiff holders were the largest individual shareholders of the defendant company.

Although "holder" claims, to the extent they are recognized, have no transactional barrier to standing in the manner that civil remedy provisions in Blue Sky laws are limited, it is also clear that a "holder" claim must effectively be linked to an actual intended transaction that did not occur but for the alleged misconduct. Investor claims based on fraud or deception necessarily spring from an investment decision. A decision to "hold" a security may qualify when it is in fact a decision that is causally connected to the alleged wrongdoing. As seen above, the pleading requirements, and ultimate elements of proof, assure that if a holder claim is permitted, it will be based on a virtual transaction.

[4] Rescission or Damages

[a] Generally

Under the Uniform Act, the plaintiff in a private civil action may sue to rescind the sale of the securities that he or she purchased, or sue for damages if he or she no longer owns the security. In either case, the purchaser is permitted:

[t]o recover the consideration paid for the security, together with interest at six percent per year from the date of payment costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees, less the amount of any income received on the security, upon the tender of the security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.ⁿ⁴⁹

This provision has been adopted in many states,ⁿ⁵⁰ although there are variations. The most common variation is in the level of recoverable interest,ⁿ⁵¹ but a few statutes are silent on the recoverability of attorneys' fees.ⁿ⁵² Some states do not say whether costs are recoverable. In some states that allow actions for rescission or damages,ⁿ⁵³ as under the Uniform Act, interest is recoverable either upon the amount of interest due on the security, if it is an interest bearing obligation, or upon a statutory amount, if the security is non-interest bearing.ⁿ⁵⁴ These states provide for recovery of costs and reasonable attorneys' fees.

In other states, the only recourse is an action for rescission.ⁿ⁵⁵ In these states, plaintiff must retain possession of the securities so that they can be returned. An action for damages alone is not permitted. However, as illustrated by Illinois, although an action for damages is not permitted, a modified rescission remedy is allowed for purchasers who have disposed of the securities. The remedy is for damages, but only as a rescission equivalent.ⁿ⁵⁶ The equivalent amount recoverable in most of these states is the full amount paid for the securities (less any income received thereon), interest, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees.ⁿ⁵⁷ The amount of interest recoverable on interest bearing obligations is the amount specified in the obligation; for all other securities, recoverable interest is at a statutory annual rate.ⁿ⁵⁸ Section 509 of the 2002 Uniform Act, which forms the basis for civil liability provisions in an increasing number of states, more completely sets the parameters of the basic right of action for rescission or damages:

(b) [Liability of seller to purchaser.] A person is liable to the purchaser if the person sells a security in violation of Section 301 or, by means of an untrue statement of a material fact or an omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in light of the circumstances under which it is made, not misleading, the purchaser not knowing the untruth or omission and the seller not sustaining the burden of proof that the seller did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care, could not have known of the untruth or omission. An action under this subsection is governed by the following:

(1) The purchaser may maintain an action to recover the consideration paid for the security, less the amount of any income received on the security, and interest [at the legal rate of interest] from the date of the purchase, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees determined by the court, upon the tender of the security, or for actual damages as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) The tender referred to in paragraph (1) may be made any time before entry of judgment. Tender requires only notice in a record of ownership of the security and willingness to exchange the security for the amount specified. A purchaser that no longer owns the security may recover actual damages as provided in paragraph (3).

(3) Actual damages in an action arising under this subsection are the amount that would be recoverable upon a tender less the value of the security when the purchaser disposed of it, and interest [at the legal rate of interest] from the date of the purchase, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees determined by the court.ⁿ⁵⁹

Unlike the original Uniform Act, the 2002 Act also provides a corresponding right of action for a seller to obtain rescission or damages.ⁿ⁶⁰

Whenever an action for rescission is brought, the purchaser must be prepared to "tender" the securities to the seller,ⁿ⁶¹ and, if the statute allows only rescission, prior disposition of the securities will bar recovery of anything more than a rescission equivalent.ⁿ⁶² Generally, however, tender requirements, while enforced, are not difficult to fulfillⁿ⁶³ because there is rarely a narrow period of time stipulated within which tender must be made. The Uniform Act, for example, permits the tender of securities "at any time before entry of judgment,"ⁿ⁶⁴ and a number of states have adopted this recommended provision.ⁿ⁶⁵ Other states reach the same result by providing that the securities may be tendered directly to the seller or in open court.ⁿ⁶⁶ In a few jurisdictions, notice of willingness to exchange the security may be given by service, as in civil actions, or by certified mail.ⁿ⁶⁷ This latter group does not specify the time period in which tender must be made.

The situation in states not having a statutory provision that specifies the time of tender is unclear.ⁿ⁶⁸ In one state without such a provision, a plaintiff's attorney inadvertently neglected to deposit the securities with the clerk of the court, although the complaint alleged that this had been done. When defendant moved to dismiss on the ground of lack of tender, the trial court denied the motion when the securities were then submitted. It was also shown that a tender of the securities was refused by defendant prior to trial. In these circumstances it was held that sufficient tender had been made.ⁿ⁶⁹

Some states have provisions for notice to the seller by the purchaser of the intention to void the sale.ⁿ⁷⁰ Under these statutes, the purchaser, within six months after having knowledge that the purchase is voidable, must give written notice by registered mail to all persons he seeks to hold liable of his election to rescind the sale. These provisions are not tender requirements, since tender need not be made until after commencement of an action, nor are they statutes of limitations. In one state's interpretation, the provision has been called "an equitable feature built into the statute to protect against stale claims."ⁿ⁷¹ While this requirement is unusual, the principle behind the notice provision has been widely enacted. Thus, a purchaser receiving a written repurchase offer that promises to return the full price, plus interest, less any income paid on the security, must accept the offer within a given number of days from its receipt or be permanently barred from bringing an action.ⁿ⁷² A comparable provision in the Uniform Securities Act gives the purchaser thirty days to accept the offer or be barred from bringing suit.ⁿ⁷³ But since the Uniform Act also permits a damage action, the buyer, if he or she no longer owns the security, must reject the offer in writing within the thirty day period or lose the judicial remedy. The Uniform Act provision has been substantially enacted in most states.ⁿ⁷⁴ In some states, if the statute allows only a rescission action, there is no reference to rejection of the repurchase offer.ⁿ⁷⁵ It has been held in at least one state that any rescission offer must be made to all the purchasers whose names appear on the securities for the offer to be sufficient to bar suit.ⁿ⁷⁶

[b] Reliance and Causation

The rescission remedy in Blue Sky laws is applied in the most straightforward manner in circumstances involving violations of registration or intermediary licensing provisions. But for the applicable statute of limitations and operation of any tender requirements, there are no substantive conditions or elements to the rescission remedy once the violation is prima facie shown. At that point, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove an available exemption. That is not so clear, however, when the rescission claim is based on an alleged misrepresentation or omission in a securities transaction. Most Blue Sky civil liability provisions do not prescribe any element beyond materiality of the representation or omission. Whether reliance or causation is required has been left to consideration by the courts.

In Green v. Green,ⁿ⁷⁷ the Tennessee Supreme Court considered the question of whether the right of action for rescission in the Tennessee Blue Sky lawⁿ⁷⁸ requires the plaintiff to prove reliance on representations or omissions of the defendant. In Green, the plaintiff was the seller of securities seeking rescission from the defendant purchaser, who asserted that the plaintiff must prove reliance. As with all Blue Sky laws, the Tennessee statutory right of action contained no such requirement. The elements of the statutory claim were clearly stated in the law, and the Tennessee Supreme Court found no basis for engrafting such a requirement where the language is clear and unambiguous. In support of its conclusion, the Court, among other things, observed:

We also note that our interpretation ... is consistent with the prevailing interpretation of similar provisions in other states' blue sky laws. The drafter of the 1956 Uniform Securities Act has explained that "civil liability is an essential adjunct to a blue sky law." He has also pointed out that the civil liabilities provision of the Act requires only that the plaintiff prove that he or she did not know that a representation was untrue and that it does not require proof of reliance. The overwhelming weight of authority in states with statutes similar to Tenn. Code Ann. § 48-2-121(a) and Tenn. Code Ann. § 48-2-122(b)(1) is that reliance is not an element of a right of action for false or misleading statements in a securities transaction.ⁿ⁷⁹

In Green, the Court also cautioned against confusing the "closely related concepts" of materiality and reliance in the application of the Blue Sky rescission remedy. Materiality, said the Court, is the objective test of causation; whereas reliance is directed toward the impact of the allegedly false or misleading information. Materiality is an element of any claim based upon an alleged misstatement or misleading statement.ⁿ⁸⁰ Referring to it as an objective test of causation in the context of a statutory rescission remedy is important in cementing the point that there is an essential causation element built into the statutory remedy. A securities transaction wholly unconnected to a subsequently alleged misrepresentation or misleading statement in support of the rescission remedy is not appropriately brought within the scope of protection of the civil liability provisions. Materiality, however, supplies a causal connection between an information failure and the transaction based upon the substantial likelihood that a reasonable purchaser or seller would consider a misstated or omitted fact important in making the investment decision.ⁿ⁸¹

Charles Schwab & Co. n82 In Brown, the necessity to prove causation or reliance in an action under that state's version of 2002 Uniform Act section 509n83 was argued as a bar to certification of a purported class of persons asserting claims against a broker-dealer for materially aiding an investment adviser in the commission of a securities fraud. The defendant broker-dealer urged that causation or reliance is an element of proof, and that necessary individual determinations prevented requisite commonality for class action treatment. The district court flatly rejected the proposition.

The broker-dealer defendant in Brown maintained that plaintiffs must prove reliance and causation because those elements are required in an action under SEC Rule 10b-5 under the federal Securities Exchange Act, and that section 501 of the South Carolina law is modeled on Rule 10b-5. However, noting that section 501 of the South Carolina law does not contain the words "reliance" or "causation," the Brown court rejected the argument that these elements should be imported into the statutory text of the Blue Sky law. A private right of action under SEC Rule 10b-5 is implied, and federal courts have also implied its elements which include reliance and causation. But the Brown court readily acknowledged and embraced relevant case law, making the point that what federal courts have done in regard to a judicially created cause of action is easily distinguishable from what is statutory text.n84

[c] Scope of the Remedy

When a suit is brought, what constitutes appropriate recovery has occasionally been addressed. In a rescission for fraud action, it has been held that the purpose of permitting rescission is "to make the defrauded party whole" and to allow interest as a measure of recovery.n85 In Hofer v. General Discount Corp.,n86 the plaintiff bought securities from defendant and, on a subsequent occasion, exchanged them with defendant for other securities. When an action was brought to recover the purchase price, the defendant claimed that all plaintiff was entitled to was return of the securities she had exchanged. The South Dakota court, in examining the statute, which promised the return of "the full amount paid"n87 in a rescission action, held that, in view of the statutory language, plaintiff was entitled to recover her original purchase price. Interestingly, the court compared the state's statute with the Uniform Act provision and said that, if it were the intention of the legislation to allow only the return of the exchanged securities, it should have provided for a refund of the consideration, as under the Uniform Act.n88

Whether this is a correct view of the Uniform Act provision is open to question. In Washington, which has enacted the Uniform Act recovery provision,n89 an appellate courtn90 almost equated the word consideration (recoverable in a rescission action) with the word value (which, under the statute, plays a part only in an action for damages if the security has been disposed of), by saying that a purchaser is limited to recovery of his consideration whether or not she still has the securities.n91 However, unlike Hofer,n92 this situation turned on what is recoverable in an action for damages after the purchaser sold the securities at a loss. The answer was that the purchaser was entitled to recover his out-of-pocket or actual loss and that the "value of the security" for determining such loss was the price that the purchaser obtained on resale. Recovery in such an action was held to be the difference between the acquisition price and the resale price.n93

The decision in this case was reached despite an argument by defendants that such a measure of damages could cause gross injustice since the purchasers could increase damages by disposing of the security at an inadequate price. The court's answer was to remind the sellers that they could have made a repurchase offer, as provided by the statuten94 which, if rejected by the buyer while he still had the securities, would have barred the action. This, said the court, "is all the protection to which the seller is entitled under the statute."n95

Another state court similarly held that the purchaser need not mitigate damages.n96 Here, the seller had advised the purchaser to sell at a higher price and the purchaser failed to do so while the market for the securities was up. Again, the court held that it is the seller's responsibility to mitigate his own damages by making a repurchase offer.n97

[5] Punitive Damages

The matter of awarding punitive damages in civil actions under Blue Sky laws has not been fully explored, and no state includes punitive damages within its definition of "damages."ⁿ⁹⁸ However, under the Uniform Securities Actⁿ⁹⁹ and the "savings" provisions in states with a comparable provision, actions are permitted under the Blue Sky law that are in addition to other rights and remedies otherwise allowed by law or equity.ⁿ¹⁰⁰

In two states that have enacted the Uniform Act savings provision, Arkansas and Oregon,ⁿ¹⁰¹ the courts have come to opposite conclusions concerning whether punitive damages are recoverable. In Oregon,ⁿ¹⁰² the court held that the section on the calculation of damages was specific and did not include punitive damages. Thus, the case was decided without reference to Oregon's provision comparable to that in the Uniform Act. In Arkansas,ⁿ¹⁰³ however, the court cited its state's version of the Uniform Act as supporting the premise that there is "no merit in [the] contention that punitive damages cannot be recovered where the Securities Act applies."ⁿ¹⁰⁴ The court proceeded to state that

"[T]he authorities generally recognize that where an action is brought and sustained both under the Securities Act and common law fraud, punitive damages are recoverable."ⁿ¹⁰⁵

Finally, Texas, which has a statute similar to the Uniform Act, specifically addresses punitive or exemplary damages. The Texas savings provision declares: "The rights and remedies provided by this Act are in addition to any other rights (including exemplary or punitive damages) or remedies that may exist at law or equity."ⁿ¹⁰⁶

When punitive damages are recoverable, applicable state laws setting evidentiary standards and caps will operate. Most states require clear and convincing evidence of conduct constituting oppression, fraud wantonness or malice before punitive damages may be imposed generally. These standards are no less applicable to damage claims made under state securities laws.ⁿ¹⁰⁷ State limitations on punitive damage awards generally may also impact the scope of civil liability under Blue Sky laws.ⁿ¹⁰⁸

[6] Attorneys Fees

The recoverability of attorney's fees, generally permitted by statute,ⁿ¹⁰⁹ has been the source of some judicial debate. The Uniform Act provision on the award of attorney's fees as adopted in one stateⁿ¹¹⁰ was deemed permissive rather than mandatory and within the discretion of the court to grant.ⁿ¹¹¹ Similarly, when fees are part of the judgment, the amount is to be determined by the court,ⁿ¹¹² although a stipulation of amount by the parties will be accepted.ⁿ¹¹³ The granting of attorneys' fees has been allowed even where the arrangement between attorney and client is for a contingent fee,ⁿ¹¹⁴ but an award of attorneys' fees without an award of general damages will probably not be allowed.ⁿ¹¹⁵

[7] Taxes

There is little case law on the recoverability of taxes as part of the damages awarded. However, the question of taxes has been used both in an attempt by a plaintiff to increase the award of damages and by a defendant to reduce the plaintiff's recovery by the amount of the tax benefits to be received by the plaintiff. In one case,ⁿ¹¹⁶ the plaintiff sought the recovery of compensatory damages in part based upon lost tax benefits. The court held that "the alleged loss of future profits and tax benefits are not recoverable because they are based upon sheer speculation and guesswork." The court implied that the plaintiff might have been able to sustain his claim for lost future profits and tax benefits if evidence were presented showing a basis for measuring the losses with reasonable certainty. The damages sought, said the court, "must be susceptible of ascertainment in some manner other than by mere speculation, conjecture, or surmise." In this case, the court held that plaintiff had not met the burden.

In another case,ⁿ¹¹⁷ the defendant sought to reduce the recovery by the amount of the tax benefits received by the plaintiff, claiming it was plaintiff's object in purchasing the limited partnership interests to obtain tax losses. In denying that the valuation of the plaintiff's investment should depend on the tax benefits that he had received, the court stated that "[T]ax consequences as a result of the purchase do not enter into the computation of damages under the statute."¹¹⁸

[8] Actions on a Bond

The subject of bonds required to be posted by broker-dealers, investment advisers, and agents as a condition of registration has already been addressed elsewhere in this Treatise.¹¹⁹ These bonds are generally used for purposes of purchaser protection, and purchasers are permitted to recover against the bond if the broker-dealer or agent sells securities contrary to law. Although many of these bonding statutes have separate provisions for a statute of limitations,¹²⁰ the allowable statute of limitations period usually (but not always) coincides with the limitation period generally prescribed.

Similarly, a few states require persons registering securities to post bonds for purchaser protection.¹²¹ In these states, there is typically a two-year statute of limitations for bringing an action on the bond.¹²²

[9] Survival of Actions

Every cause of action under the Uniform Securities Act survives the death of any person who might have been a plaintiff or defendant.¹²³ Most states have a comparable survival provision in their Blue Sky laws.¹²⁴ In those states not following the Uniform Act, the survival statute, if it exists, will most likely be found in that state's laws of more general application (e.g., the code of civil procedure).¹²⁵

Under the 2002 Uniform Act provision "actual damages" means the difference between the price at which the security was sold and the value the security would have had at the time of the sale in the absence of the purchaser's conduct causing liability. It also includes interest at the legal rate, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees as determined by the court.

(n30)Footnote 30. *See Twin Fires Investment LLC v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter & Co., 2002 Mass. Super. (n34)Footnote 34. Civil remedies for fraud or other conduct by investment advisers in violation of the Blue Sky law may nevertheless be imposed in connection with the purchase or sale of securities by an advisory client, but the remedy may be limited to actual damages incurred by reason of the violation, see, e.g., N.H. Rev. Stat. § 421-B:25(II). New Jersey permits recovery of loss "due to the advice" of an investment adviser who has acted in violation of antifraud provisions, see N.J. Stat. § 49:3-71(c). Civil remedy provisions applicable specifically to investment advisers and investment adviser representatives are discussed in § 15.04[3], below.

All of the basic civil liability provisions are applicable to persons who "offer" as well as sell securities in violation of registration or antifraud provisions. Civil liability may thus be imposed when an "offer" violates the Blue Sky law even though the sale does not. But, as the drafters of the Uniform Securities Act made clear, the making of a non-exempted offer can create no civil liability to the offeree unless the offer results in a sale. Official Code Comment, Unif. In Rogers v. Cisco Systems, Inc., 268 F. Supp. 2d 1305 (N.D. Fla. 2003) , a federal court applying Florida law concluded that the reliance element was key in assessing a "holder" claim. Plaintiffs alleged that they had refrained from selling their stock after reviewing defendants' reports and financial statements. They claimed if they had known the true state of the company's financial position they would have sold their shares before a collapse in the stock price when the facts became known. The court dismissed the claim, finding that the allegations were too vague to satisfy the reliance requirement applicable under Florida law. Imposing a heightened burden of pleading reliance in "holder claims" is essential, said the court, in order to separate plaintiffs who actually and justifiably relied on misrepresentations from the general investing public who did not so rely, but suffered a loss due to the decline in share value. 268 F. Supp. 2d at 1314, n.18 .

(n45)Footnote 45. In the complex of cases comprising the In re Worldcom, Inc. Securities Litigation, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, analyzing Georgia law, dismissed claims of a putative "holder" class in Weinstein v. Ebberts, 336 F. Supp. 2d 310 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) . Named plaintiffs in the case alleged that material misrepresentations or omissions caused them to retain ownership of the subject securities that they had acquired prior to the alleged wrongdoing. The court found no basis to predict that the Georgia Supreme Court would permit claims of a nationwide "holder" class to go forward. Among other things, the federal court recognized that under Georgia law, certification of a class action requires that questions of law and fact common to the class members must predominate over any individual questions. The Weinstein court concluded that even if Georgia courts were to permit "holder" claims, they would require allegations of specific reliance in the manner addressed by the California Supreme Court in Manzo, above. This heightened pleading requirement would be virtually impossible to meet in the context of a class action. Thus, after reviewing authority from other states, the Weinstein court concluded: "Given the weight of this authority, and the sound policy reasons that underlie these decisions, there is no basis to predict that Georgia would strike out on a different path and countenance this lawsuit." 336 F. Supp. 2d at 323 .

A broker-dealer registered in New York and Connecticut but not in Florida was deemed to have executed a sale of securities in Florida by receiving in New York an order or check by mail from a Florida resident and acting on that request by purchasing securities on behalf of the investor in New York. Since the broker-dealer was not registered in Florida, the investor could rescind the transaction and recover damages.

(n60)Footnote 60. Section 509(c) of the 2002 Uniform Act provides:

(c) [Liability of purchaser to seller.] A person is liable to the seller if the person buys a security by means of an untrue statement of a material fact or omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statement made, in light of the circumstances under which it is made, not misleading, the seller not knowing of the untruth or omission, and the purchaser not sustaining the burden of proof that the purchaser did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care, could not have known of the untruth or omission. An action under this subsection is governed by the following:

(1) The seller may maintain an action to recover the security, and any income received on the security, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees determined by the court, upon the tender of the purchase price, or for actual damages as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) The tender referred to in paragraph (1) may be made any time before entry of judgment. Tender requires only notice in a record of the present ability to pay the amount tendered and willingness to take delivery of the security for the amount specified. If the purchaser no longer owns the security, the seller may recover actual damages as provided in paragraph (3).

(3) Actual damages in an action arising under this subsection are the difference between the price at which the security was sold and the value the security would have had at the time of the sale in the absence of the purchaser's conduct causing liability, and interest [at the legal rate of interest] from the date of the sale of the security, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees determined by the court.

(n61)Footnote 61. In at least one jurisdiction, a court has decided that a plaintiff who purchased securities through an unregistered broker-dealer was not required to set aside all the transactions, but could rescind selected transactions at his option, see Piantes v. Hayden-Stone, Inc., 514 P.2d 529 (Utah Sup. Ct. 1973) , cert. denied, 415 U.S. 995 , reh'g. denied, 416 U.S. 963 (1974) .

But see Cox v. Lemonds, 669 N.E.2d 23, 1995 Ohio App. LEXIS 5045 , [1996-1997 Transfer Binder] Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 74,138 (Ohio App. 1996) (partnership interest not a security and no rescission permitted); accord Roddy v. Alexander, Montgomery County App. No. 18503, 2001 Ohio App. LEXIS 4487 , Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 74,237 (Ohio Ct. App., Montgomery County Oct. 5, 2001) (Ohio Rev. Code § 1707.43 provides that sales violating Ch. 1707 are voidable at purchaser's election; however, before § 1707.43 can apply, the transaction must fit within definition of "security.").

(n62)Footnote 62. See, e.g., Sloane v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce Fenner & Smith, Inc., 221 So. 2d 451 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1969) ; Ansbro, above, 658 F. Supp. at 571 ; Tobey v. NX Corp., 323 N.E.2d 30 (Ill. Ct. App. 1974) .

(n63)Footnote 63. However, a tender must satisfy any peculiar statutory requirements of the jurisdiction. See, e.g., Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. §§ 581-33 (D), (I), (J). Thus, merely tendering two written assignments did not satisfy the requirement that the securities be properly tendered. Riggs v. Riggs, 322 S.W.2d 571 (Tex. Civ. App. 1959) . The offer must also comply with statutory mandates, see Binder v. Gordian Securities, 742 F. Supp. 663 (N.D. Ga. 1990) (offer of rescission failed to meet statutory requirements; accordingly plaintiff's cause of action not barred under Georgia law.). Moreover, there must be a complete tender. A buyer who has resold part of the securities purchased in a single transaction may not be permitted to affirm his purchase as to that part while tendering and rescinding as to the remainder, see Glen v. Dodson, 180 N.E. 393 (Ill. Sup. Ct. 1932) , cited as a benchmark decision in Tobey v. NX Corp., above; see also Mosler v. S/P Enterprises, Inc., 888 F.2d 1138 (7th Cir. 1989) (under Illinois law, plaintiff must tender securities sold); Windswept Corp. v. Fisher, 683 F. Supp. 233, 239 (W.D. Wash. 1988) (Washington Securities Act does not allow plaintiff to retain stock and seek damages). Since most states require that any income earned be deducted from the purchase price recoverable during rescission, all jurisdictions basically require the same thing.

But see Roger v. Lehman Bros., 621 F. Supp. 114, 119 (S.D. Ohio 1985) (formal tender of stock not a prerequisite to rescission under Ohio law when broker had already received securities and paid over value of shares and all that was required was to pay purchaser difference between original sale price and repurchase price); Trimble v. American Sav. Life Ins. Co., 733 P.2d 1131 (Ariz. App. 1986) (investors who failed to tender securities back to insurance company after receiving notice of insurance company fraud did not waive their right to rescind when tender and discontinuance of premium payments would completely devalue the original transaction and cut off any chance of return).

The six months rule regarding notice is not a statute of limitations. Rather, it is an equitable feature built into the statute to protect against stale claims. The issue of when a purchaser had sufficient knowledge to realize a sale is voidable against a particular defendant is a mixed question of law and fact on which a layman is entitled to acquire his first knowledge from an attorney.

See also Martin v. Orvis Brothers & Co., 323 N.E.2d 73 at 79 (Ill. Ct. App. 1974) : "Its purpose [the six month rule] is to prevent purchasers, who have sufficient knowledge of the remedy available to them, from waiting the entire statute of limitations to decide whether to elect rescission."

In Norville v. Alton Bigtop Restaurant, Inc., 317 N.E.2d 384 (Ill. Ct. App. 1974) , the court held that despite the statutory requirements of notice by registered mail, the service of a complaint alleging that less than six months had passed since knowledge of voidability had been ascertained was sufficient notice under the statute.

See also Renovitch v. Stewardship Concepts, Inc., 654 F. Supp. 353 (N.D. Ill. 1987) , in which the failure to notify defendants within six months of learning that the sale of securities is voidable under Illinois blue sky law as a matter of law required dismissal of a count under the Illinois Securities Act. The fact that defendants acted as counsel for defendant corporations that did receive the notice was insufficient. The statute creates an absolute requirement which was not satisfied by constructive notice.

(n81)Footnote 81. This is the baseline standard of materiality articulated by the U.S. Supreme Court in TSC Industries Inc. v. Northway, 426 U.S. 438, 96 S. Ct. 2126, 48 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1976) , in which the Supreme Court more fully articulated it as follows:

An omitted fact is material if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote... . It does not require proof of a substantial likelihood that disclosure of the omitted fact would have caused the reasonable investor to change his vote. What the standard does contemplate is a showing of a substantial likelihood that, under all the circumstances, the omitted fact would have assumed actual significance in the deliberations of the reasonable shareholder. Put another way, there must be a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the "total mix" of information made available.

The Northway standard arose out of litigation under the proxy rules of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. It has since become the standard in all settings in which materiality is an issue as, for example, its application by the Tennessee Supreme Court in Green.

In Merchant the court noted that it is difficult to characterize the remedy due a fraud victim as a "windfall," even if it exceeds total out of pocket loss. The court concluded that the legislature intended for a buyer of securities to recover damage for any sale of securities in violation of the statute regardless of whether the buyer happened to profit from other sales of securities in violation of the statute.

We conclude that if our legislature had contemplated only the return of plaintiff's original guaranteed debentures in the circumstances of the instant case it would have used the words "refund the consideration paid" as set forth in the Uniform Securities Act rather than the words "price equal to the full amount paid."

This is true whether the purchaser still has the stock and seeks to rescind the sale, or whether he has disposed of the stock."

However, the issue in this case was not the same as the one faced by the South Dakota court in Hofer, above. The question under the Uniform Act still remains whether if the purchaser is entitled to return of the property or rescission of its cash equivalent if he or she pays for the securities with consideration other than cash. The problem becomes even more complex if the seller has disposed of the non-cash consideration and this is what the purchaser seeks to recover.

[T]he broker, therefore, is able to limit its loss in most cases by prompt action so the argument that the broker should not have to bear the loss here when the buyer--by selling at the higher price--could have prevented it, is without substance. Moreover, we feel that the statute is clearly designed for the benefit of the buyer--not the broker who is presumed to have superior knowledge and is in a position to minimize his losses.

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.03

§ 15.03 Remedies at Common Law or in Equity

With the greatest focus here on statutory remedies, it is important to keep in mind that Blue Sky laws do not foreclose any other available remedies. Section 410 of the Uniform Securities Act and now section 509 of the 2002 Uniform Act form the core of any discussion of civil liabilities and statutory remedies under Blue Sky laws. However, any actions at common law or in equity, and any remedies and defenses that exist in addition to those expressly provided by statute, may be available by virtue of the savings clause found in paragraph (h) of section 410, and its equivalent in the various jurisdictions, which provides that the rights and remedies provided by the Act are in addition to any other rights or remedies that may exist at law or in equity. However, the same provision also makes clear that the Act does not create any cause of action not specified in the Act.

Because the Uniform Act and most states permit remedies available at common law and in equity in addition to those available under the Blue Sky laws, as an alternative to bringing an action for damages or rescission under the Blue Sky law, a defrauded purchaser, for example, may seek more complete relief in a common law suit for damages, alleging either fraud or negligent misrepresentation. Thus, for example, a plaintiff who may have suffered significant consequential damages as a result of a fraudulent transaction may wish to retain the securities and sue for damages rather than settle for rescission.ⁿ¹ In these circumstances, the plaintiff is allowed to affirm the transaction, retain the security (or consideration paid, if the seller is bringing suit), and sue instead for monetary damages.

The elements of common law fraud are discussed elsewhere in this Treatise.ⁿ² However, the measure of damages in a common law action for fraud is often based on the "benefit of the bargain" rule.ⁿ³ The "benefit of the bargain" is computed as the difference between the value of the security as represented and its actual value at the time of sale.ⁿ⁴ In addition, the injured party may recover consequential damages for losses proximately caused by the defendant's acts.ⁿ⁵ Thus, a comparison of type of suit (at common law or under the Blue Sky law) resulting in the greatest monetary recovery is possible.ⁿ⁶ Alternative pleading is permitted, and a plaintiff will not be required to elect remedies as between a Blue Sky statutory recovery and an available common law or equitable remedy.ⁿ⁷

An action for negligent misrepresentation is based upon negligence and not upon fraud. It arises when the defendant breaches a duty to exercise reasonable care in disclosing material facts relevant to the securities transaction.ⁿ⁸ Although actions for negligent misrepresentation in at least one state have arisen mainly in connection with sales of real property, the analysis of the elements of the action appears to be equally applicable to securities transactions.ⁿ⁹

The significance of preserving all forms of action available to a purchaser is illustrated by the decision of a New York trial court in Berman v. 283 Washington Avenue LLC,ⁿ¹⁰ in which a breach of contract action brought by the plaintiff purchaser was permitted to go forward despite the preclusion of any private remedy under New York's Blue Sky law--the Martin Act. There is no statutory private right of action under the Martin Act, and only the Attorney General can pursue and enforce its provisions. In Berman, the court concluded, however, that a plaintiff is not precluded from bringing a common law cause of action for breach of contract or fraud which is distinct from a claim under the Martin Act. The court stated:

[T]he Attorney General cannot adjudicate the plaintiff's breach of contract dispute which is not subject to Martin Act regulations, but pertain to a private dispute. Whether plaintiff's claims will survive a dispositive motion after issue has been joined remains to be decided. However, at this time, accepting plaintiff's facts, they support a common law action for breach of contract.

The significance of other remedies at common law or in equity is lessened overall by the fact that there are specific statutory causes of action which are generally easier to prove, it is well to keep the following remedies in mind: breach of warranty, tort action for deceit, reformation, specific performance, and declaration of a constructive trust.ⁿ¹¹

Although in Uniform Act states this manifest intent of the drafters, and legislatures adopting the Uniform Act, not to create any additional remedies likely precludes any judicially implied remedies, in states with an express civil liability provision that is silent as to whether the rights and remedies under the Blue Sky law are in addition to those at law or in equity, it may be possible to imply a private right of action for violation of particular provisions of the Blue Sky law. However, to do so requires application of principles that have long governed the implication of private rights of action under the federal securities laws, not the least of which today is that there be a manifest intent of the legislature to allow such a remedy where none is expressly provided.ⁿ¹²

(n7)Footnote 7. Courts will not require a plaintiff to elect remedies as between a Blue Sky statutory recovery and an available common law or equitable remedy. That being said, however, the fact that two remedies are mutually exclusive does not change the historical double recovery and one satisfaction rule. In Aegis Ins. Holding Co. v. Gaiser, No. 04-05-00938, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2364 (March 28, 2007) , the court rejected the contention that investors may be forced to make an election of remedies, as for example, between rescission of their investment under the state securities law and damages for breach of contract. The court concluded, however, while a party may assert alternative theories of recovery, there cannot be recovery on both theories because that is considered a double recovery. In Aegis, the plaintiff investors sued for rescission of their investment based on misrepresentation under the Texas Securities Act and also sued for damages equaling the amount of their investment alleging breach of an agreement. The court concluded that even though the investors sued on different claims, there was only one injury as a result of the defendant's actions. Awarding either rescission under the Texas Securities Act or damages for breach of contract makes the investors whole, and that accordingly, the investors are entitled to one recovery through either claim.

In the absence of the equivalent of Uniform Act § 410(h) from the Washington civil liability provision, the court stated: "While our legislature did not choose to incorporate § 410(h) into the Washington Securities Act, we do not think this omission is of sufficient significance to overcome the comprehensiveness and apparent intended exclusiveness of the remedies that are specified." 567 P.2d 663, n.8 .

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.04

§ 15.04 The Scope of Civil Liability

[1] Primary Liability

Primary, or direct, civil liability in private actions under Blue Sky laws is imposed on those persons who engage in or are directly involved in conduct that violates the law. In most states this encompasses persons who "participate" in the unlawful conduct, although participation is not a defined term. In Arizona, for example, section 44-2003(A) of the Arizona Securities Act provides that a private civil action:

[m]ay be brought against any person, including any dealer, salesman or agent, who made, participated in or induced the unlawful sale or purchase, and such persons shall be jointly and severally liable to the person who is entitled to maintain such action.ⁿ¹

Arizona courts have held that "participated in" for purposes of direct civil liability under the Act means "to take part in something" or "have a part or share in something."ⁿ² In Grand v. Nacchio,ⁿ³ the court examined the sufficiency of "participated in" allegations against defendants who were officers and directors of an issuer. Plaintiff trustees alleged that during the time the trust was purchasing shares in the public aftermarket of an initial public offering, the issuer was fraudulently inflating its earnings with fictitious revenue--a practice or course of business which operated as a fraud or deceit in connection with the trust's purchases. Plaintiffs claimed that the defendants participated in the trust's purchases of the stock by, among other things, sending reassuring written communications concerning market conditions and other favorable information, as well as favorable analysts' reports and misleading press releases. Plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were "information gatekeepers" who controlled disclosures that were made to the public.

Affirming dismissal of claims under the Act, the Arizona Court of Appeals concluded that these allegations fell short of demonstrating that the defendants had participated in the trust's purchases of stock in the aftermarket for purposes of section 44-2003(A). It would stretch the statutory language too far, said the court, to impose liability on persons as to aftermarket sales because to hold otherwise would be to impose liability on all publicly traded companies and their management without any showing of inducement, and only upon the showing that by creating an open market, they later necessarily participate in each and every sale conducted in that market. This is something far different from the direct involvement in a transaction which participation connotes.

Primary liability under the civil remedy provisions of Blue Sky laws is aimed at persons who actually offer or sell securities, or are directly involved in offers or sales in violation of the law. More often than not the scope of direct liability is considered under the heading of "seller" liability, which is imposed for all violations. The scope of "seller" liability under Blue Sky laws extends to any person who offers or sells a security.ⁿ⁴ "Offer" and "offer to sell" and "sale" are defined terms in Blue Sky laws, and broadly include every attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy a security for value.ⁿ⁵ Given the breadth of the definitions, "seller" status for purposes of civil liability under Blue Sky laws may be attached to all persons who solicit or directly participate in the process leading to a completed sale. The Court of Appeals of South Carolina illustrated this point in Cowburn v. Leventis,ⁿ⁶ in which summary judgment granted in favor of a lawyer against whom civil liability under the Blue Sky law was asserted for the sale of unregistered securities was reversed. The Court of Appeals found that the defendant lawyer had played an integral role in the program involving the sale of the securities. He had introduced investors to the program, and received a referral fee for doing so. The court further recounted the lawyer's activity as follows:

Leventis told potential investors about the Program and provided written information to them regarding the Program. Leventis persuaded potential investors to contribute to the program by telling them about other investors, including him and his mother, and their contributions. He also arranged trips for potential investors to meet with Gause and other principals of the Program. After individuals decided to invest in the Program, Leventis assisted them in making their investment by providing them with forms and information about how to set up a SDIRA. He even went further in some cases by filling out the forms for investors and assisting them with transactions.ⁿ⁷

To be sure, civil liability asserted against one in the position of the attorney in Leventis could also be based upon participation as that notion is described in Grand v. Nacchio above. As will be seen, it may also be seen as "aiding," and thus serve as the basis for liability when the particular statute contains such a broader provision for secondary liability. It is not necessary to do so, however, when the actions of a defendant constitute an attempt to dispose such that actual "seller" status may be found, and primary liability thus imposed. Perhaps the most useful standard for setting the scope of "seller" status is whether a defendant's acts were a substantial contributing factor in the sale transaction. In making that assessment, the Washington State Supreme Court identified three factors for a court to consider:

(1) The number of other factors which contribute to the sale and the extent of the effect which they have in producing it; (2) Whether the defendant's conduct has created a force or series of forces which are in continuous and active operation up to the time of sale, or has created a situation harmless unless acted upon by other forces for which the actor is not responsible; and (3) Lapse of time.ⁿ⁸

Other courts, influenced by the U.S. Supreme Court analysis of the scope of seller liability under section 12 of the Securities Act of 1933 in Pinter v. Dahl,ⁿ⁹ embrace a "financial benefit" test to determine seller status. Under that approach a seller is defined as one who is motivated by pecuniary gain. The definition extends to a person who solicits the purchase, motivated by desire to serve his or her own financial interests or those of the securities owner. The Supreme Court of Idaho endorsed this test as offering courts a clear line in deciding whether an individual meets the definition of "seller," while at the same time offering adequate protection to investors.ⁿ¹⁰

Against this judicial backdrop it is certain that in most cases the question of "seller" status for purposes of the civil liability provisions in Blue Sky laws will be one of fact. Indeed, in most cases, the issue has been considered in reviewing, and reversing, summary judgments granted in favor of defendants alleged to be sellers. It would be difficult under any of the common approaches to conclude that no material fact issue is presented in the necessary determination of the scope of "seller" status. However, it may be that boundaries based on clearly tangential and insignificant conduct of an actor can be discerned, and the three factors identified by the Washington Supreme Court discussed above may also provide a useful roadmap. More insight into the entire question of the scope of liability is available by considering approaches that have been taken in regard to non-seller or non-participant liability, that is, secondary liability of persons who do not actually sell a security in violation of or in a transaction that violates the Blue Sky law. That analysis follows below.

[2] Purchaser Civil Liability

Although the Uniform Securities Act does not provide for a suit against a buyer who by fraudulent means induces a sale by the seller, a few states permit civil actions by anyone, whether buyer or seller, defrauded in a securities transaction.ⁿ¹¹ The 2002 Uniform Act includes an express provision for antifraud liability of purchasers to sellers.ⁿ¹² Under this provision, a defrauded seller is entitled to recover the security sold, together with any income received on the security by the purchaser, along with costs and attorneys' fees. Alternatively, actual damages may be awarded, representing the price at which the security was sold and the value the security would have had at the time of the sale in the absence of the purchaser's conduct causing liability, plus interest, costs, and fees. This provision in the 2002 Act clearly reflects the modern trend in defining the scope of antifraud protections under state Blue Sky laws.

[3] Secondary Liability

[a] Statutory Joint and Several Liability

Statutory civil liability for sales of securities in violation of Blue Sky laws extends to certain categories of persons who do not actually sell (or purchase) the securities. Under section 410 of the original Uniform Securities Act, control persons, partners, officers, and directors of an actual seller who is liable, and employees, broker-dealers, and agents who materially aid in the sale are jointly and severally liable with the seller. However, non-seller liability under provisions based on section 410 is subject to the defense that the non-seller did not know and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist. Section 410(b) provides in pertinent part:

Every person who directly or indirectly controls a seller liable under subsection (a) [of Section 410], every partner, officer, or director of such seller, every person occupying a similar status or performing functions, every employee of such a seller who materially aids in the sale, and every broker-dealer or agent who materially aids in the sale are also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the seller, unless the non-seller who is so liable sustains the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist.ⁿ¹³

Although the 2002 Uniform Act more precisely spells out the persons who may be held jointly and severally liable, it encompasses the same non-seller classifications and includes the same defense.ⁿ¹⁴ Both Acts provide for contribution among jointly and severally liable parties.

Section 410 of the original Uniform Act has been interpreted to divide non-sellers into two groups for liability purposes. If the non-seller is in control of the seller or if the non-seller is an officer, director, or partner (or similar person) of the seller, liability automatically attaches unless he or she can prove lack of knowledge within the meaning of the provision.ⁿ¹⁵ On the other hand, if the non-seller is an employee, broker-dealer, or agent, the purchaser must bear the additional burden of proof that such person materially aided in the sale.ⁿ¹⁶ Again, lack of knowledge proved by the non-seller is a defense. Although this defense has been accepted by states adopting the Uniform Act provision, as well as by courts in states not having a comparable statute,ⁿ¹⁷ it seems to be established that lack of knowledge means that the non-seller, after the exercise of reasonable care, did not know of the facts that might lead to personal liability.ⁿ¹⁸

Most states have substantially adopted the original Uniform Act provision.ⁿ¹⁹ Section 509(g) of the 2002 Uniform Securities makes the secondary liability construct clear in applying the "materially aids" qualifier to employees, broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers, or investment adviser representatives. Thus, in Idaho, for example, which has adopted the 2002 Uniform Act, the following persons are liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as persons who are primary violators:

- (1) A person that directly or indirectly controls a person liable under subsections (b) through (f) of this section, unless the controlling person sustains the burden of proof that the person did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of conduct by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist;

(2) An individual who is a managing partner, executive officer, or director of a person liable under subsections (b) through (f) of this section, including an individual having a similar status or performing similar functions, unless the individual sustains the burden of proof that the individual did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of conduct by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist;

(3) An individual who is an employee of or associated with a person liable under subsections (b) through (f) of this section and who materially aids the conduct giving rise to the liability, unless the individual sustains the burden of proof that the individual did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of conduct by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist; and

(4) A person that is a broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser, or investment adviser representative that materially aids the conduct giving rise to the liability under subsections (b) through (f) of this section, unless the person sustains the burden of proof that the person did not know and, in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of conduct by reason of which liability is alleged to exist.ⁿ²⁰

There are variations on the Uniform Act provisions. In Virginia, for example, liability extends only to persons in control of the seller.ⁿ²¹ For others to be held liable, the purchaser must prove that the non-seller "materially participates or aids" in the sale. In Oregon, partners, officers, directors, and similar persons are liable as under the Uniform Act, but the statute makes any other person liable who "participates or materially aids" in the sale.ⁿ²² There is no specific reference to employees, broker-dealers, or agents. Iowa, which has substantially adopted the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, includes a variant on the 2002 Act employee joint liability provision to extend liability to any person--whether an employee of the seller or otherwise--who materially aids in the act or transaction constituting the violation, and who materially aids the conduct giving rise to the liability, who cannot meet the burden of the statutory defense.ⁿ²³

Some Non-Uniform Act state laws extend civil liability to any person that participates with or aids the seller in any way in making the sale. In Ohio, for example:

[T]he person making such sale or contract for sale, and every person that has participated in or aided the seller in any way in making such sale or contract of sale, are jointly and severally liable to the purchaser.ⁿ²⁴

The Texas Securities Act extends civil liability to "aiders"--any person who, directly or indirectly, with intent to deceive or defraud or with reckless disregard for the truth or the law materially aids a seller, buyer, or issuer of a security that is liable.ⁿ²⁵

Illinois makes persons liable strictly by virtue of their relationship to the seller. The Illinois statute imposes liability per se on the issuer, controlling person, underwriter, dealer, or other person by or on behalf of whom the sale is made.ⁿ²⁶ Other underwriters, dealers, or salesman who participated or aided in any way in making the sale may be held liable as may officers, directors, and similar persons of the issuer, controlling person, underwriter, dealer, or other organization by or on whose behalf the sale was made, but only if such persons participated or aided in making the sale.ⁿ²⁷

Civil liability in other states is imposed on directors, officers, agents or persons who personally participated or aided in any way in making the sale.ⁿ²⁸ Some statutes provide for liability of "any person" who "participated in or induced" the saleⁿ²⁹ or who has "participated or aided the seller in any way" in making the sale,ⁿ³⁰ but even where a statute names only specific persons who are liable, such provisions have been stretched to reach persons not otherwise covered by the statute.ⁿ³¹

Even when a statute does not provide for personal liability of a partner, director, or officer of a seller, the level of activity needed to make such persons participants or aiders in a sale is not great. Officers and directors of a selling corporation are charged with the duty of knowing the existence of facts with respect to corporate operations, or, at the very least, of exercising that degree of care toward their responsibilities required of prudent persons.ⁿ³² Consequently, officers and directors of the seller have often been held personally liable when securities were sold by the corporation in violation of Blue Sky laws.ⁿ³³ Accordingly, it has been held that ignorance on the part of corporate directors and officers does not relieve them from liability.ⁿ³⁴ It has also been held that state securities laws are "designed to protect the public not only from fraud and dishonesty, but also from incompetency [sic], ignorance and irresponsibility of persons engaged in the business of disposing of securities to the public."ⁿ³⁵ Thus, the scope of liability is always defined broadly.ⁿ³⁶

In addition to the types of non-seller liability already discussed under the Uniform Act, California has two provisions modeled after two sections found in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The first is patterned after rarely used section 9(e) of that statute, with respect to liability for violation of the manipulation provisions, and provides:

Any person who willfully participates in any act or transaction in violation of Section 25400 shall be liable to any other person who purchases or sells any security at a price which was affected by such act or transaction for the damages sustained by the latter as a result of such act or transaction. Such damages shall be the difference between the price at which such other person purchased or sold securities and the market value which such securities would have had at the time of his purchase or sale in the absence of such act or transaction, plus interest at the legal rate.ⁿ³⁷

Basically, liability is predicated on willful participation in any act or transaction that contravenes the general liability provisionⁿ³⁸ and that accordingly affects the price paid for the purchase, or received during the sale, of a security.

The other California provision declares:

It is unlawful for an issuer or any person who is an officer, director or controlling person of an issuer or any other person whose relationship to the issuer gives him access, directly or indirectly, to material information about the issuer not generally available to the public, to purchase or sell any security of the issuer in this state at a time when he knows material information about the issuer gained from such relationship which would significantly affect the market price of that security and which is not generally available to the public, and which he knows is not intended to be so available, unless he has reason to believe that the person selling to or buying from him is also in possession of information.ⁿ³⁹

This represents an attempt at codification of the doctrine of implied liability under federal Rule 10b-5 as applied to insider trading. In effect, the issuer and anyone in a control relationship with the issuer who is privy "to material information about the issuer not generally available to the public," and who uses such information to buy or to sell a security whose price would be affected by the general dissemination of such information, is liable to the purchaser or seller of that security.ⁿ⁴⁰ However, unlike under Rule 10b-5, the issuer or anyone in a control relationship with the issuer privy to inside information is not liable to a purchaser or seller of that security who is also in possession of the information. Damages would be "equal to the difference between the price at which such security was purchased or sold and the market value which such security would have had at the time of the purchase or sale if the information known to the defendant had been publicly disseminated prior to that time."ⁿ⁴¹ The statute of limitations in both instances is four years after the violation and one year after the plaintiff's discovery.ⁿ⁴²

Although what constitutes aid or participation is a question of fact, some cases have indicated general rules that may be applied.ⁿ⁴³ Thus, actual participation of officers or directors in a sale is not necessary for the imposition of liability if they aided in any way in making the sale.ⁿ⁴⁴ Applying this principle, it would seem that knowledge of sales in violation of the law, such as a director's knowledge of unlawful sales in general, would be sufficient for the imposition of personal liability although a director had no knowledge of a sale to a particular purchaser.ⁿ⁴⁵ Even a totally inactive director has been charged with the responsibility of knowing about the affairs of his corporation and has been held personally liable.ⁿ⁴⁶ Nevertheless, one court held that an officer-director who knew that sales in violation of the Blue Sky law were being made may escape liability if he had not known of a particular purchaser.ⁿ⁴⁷ In another case, it was held that even though the seller's officers were not liable under the statute, a corporate officer's signature appearing on an unregistered promissory note was sufficient to hold the officer personally liable even though there was no other participation in any sale of the notes.ⁿ⁴⁸ However, another jurisdiction reached the opposite conclusion under a similar statute. The court held that liability attached only when the purchaser was induced to invest by some act or acts of the defendant. In the latter case, the defendant was an attorney who assisted in organizing the corporation in which the plaintiff invested.ⁿ⁴⁹ The only knowledge plaintiff had of defendant's connection with the company was that his signature appeared as attesting witness on the securities that were purchased. Plaintiff testified that she knew defendant personally, that she had trusted his judgment, and that she was swayed by the defendant's signature on the securities. It was established, however, that defendant had no further contact with plaintiff with respect to the securities, and that the appearance of his signature on the securities was not sufficient to impose liability.

In addition, before a person can be held liable as materially aiding a sale, it must be established that there was a seller who would also be liable. In an Oklahoma case,ⁿ⁵⁰ where persons were held liable as participants who materially aided in the sale, the only persons involved who could possibly be the actual sellers were held not to be liable. On appeal, the judgment against the "participants" was reversed. The court stated: "as the prerequisite for liability by a participant or aider in a sale ... the person making the sale must be liable."ⁿ⁵¹

In assessing the scope of secondary liability under the civil remedy provisions of Blue Sky laws, questions relating to a particular type of actor sometimes arise. Attorneys, for example, may play a meaningful role in the structuring and execution of transactions for an issuer or other seller, and in that capacity may be open to secondary liability assertions. In other settings, specialized issues may arise as to promoters and agents. Civil liability approaches to these particular non-sellers are discussed further below.

Attorneys. Personal liability of attorneys as non-sellers in securities transactions has been the subject of a variety of cases. In an early case,ⁿ⁵² the attorneys represented the seller of securities and assisted the seller in issuing the securities by drafting and filing documents and performing other services normally performed by lawyers for their clients in similar circumstances. There was no allegation that the attorneys knew that sales were made in violation of the Blue Sky laws. The court held that the attorneys could not be held personally liable. The Oregon statute in effect at the time required the purchaser to plead and prove that the non-seller participant had knowledge of the violation of the Blue Sky law. However, the Oregon statute as amended is now based on the Uniform Securities Act, and the burden is on the defendant to raise the defense of lack of knowledge to avoid liability.ⁿ⁵³

In a subsequent case decided by a federal court applying then current Oregon law,ⁿ⁵⁴ the court recognized that a person may participate in a sale without communication with the purchaser and held that the sale could not have been made without the attorney who prepared the legal documents. It was then up to the attorney as a participant to prove that he had no knowledge that the sales were made in violation of the statute. When the Oregon Supreme Court examined this federal decision, it held that the statements therein "may be overly broad, if literally applied," and refused to be bound by the federal interpretation.ⁿ⁵⁵ In this case, it was held that an attorney who prepared, attended to the execution of, and personally delivered and filed documents to register securities was personally liable when he had knowledge that solicitation and sales had already been made.ⁿ⁵⁶

Promoters. On occasion, persons who are not direct participants in the activities of the seller will be held liable although they are not partners, officers, or directors. In one case,ⁿ⁵⁷ a promoter was permitted to register the securities with the state on the condition that all proceeds were to be placed in escrow until $25,000 was accumulated. If such amount was not obtained by a fixed date, the entire collected sum was to be returned to the subscribers. When it appeared that the required amount would not be raised, the promoter personally borrowed the amount needed from the defendant. Upon release of the escrow funds, the promoter began to repay the defendant from this money. When the corporation failed, the subscribers brought suit against the promoter and defendant. In holding defendant liable, the court found that there was sufficient evidence to believe that the loan was made for the purpose of obtaining defendant's assistance to circumvent the Securities Act.ⁿ⁵⁸

Agents. Personal liability has been found against an agent licensed to sell securities whose only participation was to mention to the purchasers that he had invested his own money in the securities, believing it was a good investment.ⁿ⁵⁹ The court found that the purchasers substantially relied on the agent's statements and such statements were decisive factors in inducing the sales. The fact that the agent did not know the securities were unregistered was deemed immaterial.ⁿ⁶⁰

[b] Civil Aiding and Abetting

The availability of private claims against aiders and abettors of violations of Blue Sky laws is extremely significant for aggrieved purchasers and sellers of securities today in the wake of the 1994 United States Supreme Court decision which eliminated such secondary liability claims under the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws.ⁿ⁶¹ As discussed above, under the civil liability provisions of Blue Sky laws, purchasers (and in some states sellers) of securities may seek rescission or damages from persons who "materially aid" or who "participate" with parties who commit primary violations of state registration and antifraud provisions. This is statutory secondary liability. Civil aiding and abetting may be available as a separate basis for imposing secondary liability for violations of Blue Sky laws.

Not all states recognize civil aiding and abetting as an independent cause of action in any context. Where allowed, however, the claim is premised on some degree of knowledge of facts and assistance in commission of the violation committed by another. The difference between aiding and abetting and statutory joint and several liability under Blue Sky laws was explained in State ex rel. Goettsch v. Diacide Distributors, Inc.,ⁿ⁶² in which the Iowa Supreme Court held the plaintiff to the burden of proving knowledge of a securities law violation by the alleged aider and abettor. In an action under the Blue Sky law for materially aiding in the conduct giving rise to the liability, the burden is on the defendant to prove that he or she did not know and in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have known, of the existence of conduct by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist.

The availability of civil aiding and abetting as an independent cause of action in a state in which the Blue Sky statutory secondary liability provision is limited is an important consideration. There is a certain universal approach, however, that will focus attention on the knowledge, or scienter, of an alleged aider and abettor. Culpability standards in assessing civil liability generally are discussed further below. It is certain though that a common assessment, whether an aiding and abetting claim is statutory or common law based, was expressed by an Iowa Court of Appeals in Pender State Bank v. Remington,ⁿ⁶³ in which the court affirmed summary judgment granted in favor of an alleged aider and abettor of violations of the Iowa Blue Sky law which had been presented in an administrative cease-and-desist order against the primary actor:

While Koerselman knew Harriett intended to invest in Columbia, a start-up company, we find no evidence in the record to show Koerselman knew, or should have known, the parties named in the cease and desist order were violating the Iowa securities laws. There was no evidence Koerselman had any contact with any of the parties named in the cease and desist order. The letter signed by Harriett at the time she signed the loan documents provides that the Bank 'has not studied nor have we endorsed in any way any investments.'ⁿ⁶⁴

On the face of basic civil remedy provisions of Blue Sky laws, the liability of one who actually offers or sells a security in violation of the law is virtually absolute, subject only to the applicable statute of limitations. There is, for example, no requirement that a seller "knowingly" or "intentionally" sell unregistered securities in order to be held liable for rescission or damages as a rescission equivalent. Similarly, as a federal district court applying Wisconsin law held, an issuer may be held liable for rescission and other statutory recovery to a purchaser when its agent is not properly licensed. The fact that the issuer did not know that its agent was required to be licensed as a broker was deemed irrelevant by the court, which ruled: "[A]n issuer violates [the Wisconsin Blue Sky licensing provision] if it employs an unlicensed agent who is not exempt from the licensing requirement, whether the issuer knew of the agent's unlicensed status or not."⁶⁵

On the other hand, an Ohio appellate court declined to impose civil liability under that state's Blue Sky civil remedy provision on an individual who unquestionably sold unregistered securities, but did so with a mistaken belief, after making a reasonably diligent inquiry into the issue, that the instrument involved was not a security. In Williams v. Guarnieri,⁶⁶ the plaintiffs purchased promissory notes, as investments, from the defendants. The notes were not registered under the Ohio Blue Sky law, and when the issuer defaulted, plaintiffs sued the defendant seller for rescission. The appeals court affirmed a lower court decision denying rescission. Although it was undisputed that the promissory notes were securities subject to registration requirements, the court concluded that plaintiffs should not automatically recover their investment. According to the appeals court, plaintiffs must show that the defendant knowingly sold unregistered securities. The defendant had testified that he had been advised by several individuals, including his broker-dealer, that the notes were merely debt obligations and not securities. The court found that despite this wrong conclusion, the defendant had exercised reasonable diligence in seeking to determine whether the notes were securities.⁶⁷

This approach in Ohio, which injects a culpability element into civil liability determinations that on the face of the statute would appear to be absolute, underscores an important consideration in assessing the scope of civil liability. The result in Guarnieri turned on the court's assessment of the "violation" involved. In the Ohio Blue Sky law, "violations" are defined.⁶⁸ The applicable "violation" provided that no person shall "knowingly" sell or cause to be sold unregistered or non-exempt securities. The "knowingly" element of the violation was read by the court in conjunction with another provision in the Blue Sky law so as to conclude that a reasonable inquiry was required and that, by extension, one who fulfills the obligation would not act knowingly when it turns out that the securities should have been registered. Civil liability, and thus the civil remedy, is dependent on there being a "violation," which in Guarnieri the court found wanting. In this, the court illustrated how a culpability element may be added to what by conventional wisdom is considered strict liability of a seller.⁶⁹

Civil liability provisions based on section 410 of the Uniform Securities Act separate violations of securities registration and intermediary licensing requirements from antifraud liability. These statutes do not impose strict liability on a seller for untrue statements or omissions. Instead, they provide a reasonable care defense, by which the seller may meet the burden of proof "that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission."⁷⁰ The seller's burden may be high, but the available defense establishes a baseline element of culpability in civil liability determinations. This is equally apparent in the manner in which secondary or aiding and abetting liability has been handled under Blue Sky civil liability provisions.

To the extent secondary, or aiding and abetting, liability is permitted under the civil remedy provisions of Blue Sky laws, it is predicated on a general awareness of the role of the secondary actor in commission of a primary violation in addition to substantially assisting the primary violator. In a 2005 decision, the Texas Supreme Court, for example, opined that in order to impose aiding and abetting liability under the Texas Securities Act, a plaintiff must show that the alleged aider "possessed a general awareness that his role was part of an overall activity that is improper."⁷¹ This, said the court, means that an aider can only be held liable if it rendered substantial assistance in the face of a perceived risk that its assistance would facilitate untruthful or illegal activity by the primary wrongdoer. Although several state Blue Sky laws extend civil liability under the basic remedy provision generally to aiders and abettors, or to persons who materially participate in an unlawful transaction, secondary liability extending beyond control persons, employees, and agents of a seller who aid in a sale is not the norm. Moreover, for those secondary actors who are expressly exposed to liability there is commonly a "reasonable care" defense provided, thus underscoring the element of culpability necessary to the imposition of civil liability.ⁿ⁷²

Where the focus is on secondary liability, or the violation alleged is fraud, a culpability standard clearly makes sense. When the violation is the offer or sale of unregistered, non-exempt securities, or the failure to be licensed as a broker-dealer or agent, the logic of a culpability element is far less certain. The mission of Blue Sky laws to protect investors through securities registration and intermediary licensing weighs heavily against denying recovery for innocent or "technical" violations of these provisions by any primary ("seller") violator. Still, as Guarnieri illustrates, courts may be unwilling to impose strict liability when a seller has in fact acted in good faith to assess the need for compliance and been misguided into a failure to comply.

The definitions of "sale" and "offer to sell" in the Securities Act of 1933, and those in the Uniform Act are nearly identical. In Pinter v. Dahl, the U.S. Supreme Court resolved a longstanding conflict among the lower federal courts regarding the standard for determining whether a particular person has "offered" or "sold" securities for purposes of liability under the 1933 Act. The Court held that liability extended to a "person who successfully solicits the purchase, motivated at least in part by a desire to serve his own financial interests or those of the securities owner." The Court concluded, however, that being merely a "substantial factor" in causing the sale was not sufficient in itself for liability.

Costs and attorney's fees are available for an issuer or person suing derivatively. The damages are reduced, however, by any amount recovered by the SEC on account of the insider transaction(s) and the state action will be delayed if a proceeding by the SEC has been commenced but not finally resolved. See also Berger, Issuer Recovery for Insider Trading Profits Under Section 25502.5 of the California Corporations Code, 21 Pac. The Supreme Court of Alabama rejected the position that a best efforts underwriter was not liable under the state's Blue Sky law unless it was a 'substantial factor' in plaintiff's purchase and instead upheld liability where the firm 'materially aided' the disputed sale. Foster v. Jesup & Lamont Securities Co., 482 So. 2d 1201, 1206-1208 (Ala. 1986) . The evidence supported findings that: (1) the offering material prominently identified the underwriter firm as the primary best efforts underwriter; (2) although the firm had withdrawn as underwriter prior to plaintiff's purchase, the firm's president told plaintiff's accountant after the withdrawal that the firm was 'involved' in the offering; and (3) plaintiff relied on the firm's participation in part in reaching his decision to purchase. The court considered it irrelevant that plaintiff did not directly communicate with the underwriter firm, instead discussed his prospective investment with the issue's promoter, and then delivered his check to the promoter.

The case involved a class action brought under Ohio Securities Act and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The investors were unable to establish that the attorney aided a securities fraud where evidence indicated that he had been kept in the dark by clients about their financial dealing and did not learn until much later that funds collected were not segregated and used as stated in the offering circular. In addition, the attorney was under no duty to correct offering circular upon learning that it contained misrepresentations; rather than advising clients to correct the circular, the attorney had insisted that they comply with its representations. See also Ahern v. Gaussoin, 611 F. Supp. 1465 (D. reflected in the contents of the documents that are 'material' to the sale.").

However, an attorney who promoted an issuer's unregistered securities on a radio show and was compensated by the issuer was liable to the purchaser of some of the securities. Perkowski v. By statute in Pennsylvania, an investment adviser that violates the registration provisions is liable to the client for all fees paid and an investment adviser that engages in specified prohibited acts including fraud is liable to the client (jointly and severally with the seller of the security) for consideration paid plus legal interest from the date of payment, less income received on the security. 70 Pa. Smith, 394 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 2005) , which involved summary judgment in favor of an associated person of a bankrupt broker-dealer that executed the sale of unregistered securities in violation of the Kentucky Blue Sky law. Plaintiff sued under the civil liability provision of the Kentucky Act, see Ky. Rev. Stat. § 292.480, seeking to recover the purchase price. The defendant broker-dealer had executed the transaction, for which it was paid a commission. Kentucky state courts concluded that a broker who merely executed the trade should not be deemed to be a "seller" for purposes of liability under the Kentucky Blue Sky law. The state court determinations were ultimately affirmed by the federal Bankruptcy Court, U.S. District Court, and finally the Sixth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals. Although none of the courts involved spoke in terms of a culpability element, a determination that one who merely executes a transaction and has no other interest than a brokerage commission will not be liable as a seller plainly signals that some meaningful degree of culpability must be a predicate to liability.

Every person who directly or indirectly controls a seller liable under subsection (a), every partner, officer, or director of such a seller, every person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, every employee of such seller who materially aids in the sale, and every broker-dealer or agent who materially aids in the sale are also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the seller, unless the non-seller who is so liable sustains the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist. There is contribution as in cases of contract among the several persons so liable.

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.05

§ 15.05 Defenses Against Civil Liability Claims

[1] Statutory Defenses

Several subsections of Uniform Act section 410 provide defenses to actions for civil liability. The first of these defenses is available to a seller who is alleged to have offered or sold "a security by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading (the buyer not knowing of the untruth or omission)...".ⁿ¹ If the seller sustains the burden of proof that he or she did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission, he or she will not be liable to the buyer. Many states have adopted a comparable provision,ⁿ² and it has been carried into the 2002 Uniform Act, applicable to actions by either a buyer or a seller.ⁿ³ However, in New Jersey, the buyer must sustain the burden of proof that the seller knew of the untruth or omission and intended to deceive the buyer.ⁿ⁴ In addition, the buyer must prove that she suffered a financial detriment. In Ohio, the "person who receives the profits must establish that "he had no knowledge of the publication [containing the untruth or omission] thereof prior to the transaction complained of, or had just and reasonable ground to believe such statement to be true or the omitted facts to be not material."ⁿ⁵ Finally, in some states that allow the seller to bring an action against a buyer who purchased a security by means of a false statement of, or the omission of, a material fact necessary to make the buyer's statements not misleading, the buyer has the same defenses and burden of proof as the seller in the converse situation.ⁿ⁶

Another available statutory defense is that the purchaser (and in those states that allow suit against the purchaser, the seller) knew of the untruth or omission. However, in those jurisdictions that allow this defense, regardless of whether it refers to the buyer or seller, two states specify who has the burden of proof.ⁿ⁷ It would seem, though, that even where not specified, the burden of proof that the plaintiff knew of the untruth or omission would be on the defendant.ⁿ⁸

Section 410(b) of the Uniform Act also provides a defense for the non-seller, who would under certain circumstances be jointly and severally liable with the seller. Thus, the Uniform Act provides that the non-seller will avoid the seller's liability if she "sustains the burden of proof that she did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist."ⁿ⁹

Another defense provided by Section 410 operates to bar a plaintiff (buyer or seller) from taking advantage of a fraud or known illegality in the contract of purchase or sale. This subsection states that:

No person who has made or engaged in the performance of any contract in violation of any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, or who has acquired any purported right under any such contract with knowledge of the facts by reason of which its making or performance was in violation, may base any suit on the contract.ⁿ¹⁰

This provision or one comparable to it has been adopted in most jurisdictions.ⁿ¹¹

As a caveat in the application of statutory defenses, the Uniform Act contains a statutory prohibition relating to the defense of waiver. Section 410(g) provides:

Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person acquiring any security to waive compliance with any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder is void.ⁿ¹²

This provision has been adopted in most states.ⁿ¹³ Likewise, this principle has been followed by the courts on the theory that agreements contrary to declared public policy, like contracts in violation of Blue Sky laws, will not be enforced.ⁿ¹⁴ This appears to be true regardless of whether the state has a statutory provision disallowing waiver.ⁿ¹⁵

As an equitable defense, waiver, or estoppel, will always be available to defeat claims when facts and circumstances support the defense. The anti-waiver provision in Blue Sky laws is not directed at the assertion of an equitable defense to civil liability claims. It does, however, limit the assertion of waiver, such that a plaintiff may not be barred from asserting a claim by reason of an alleged agreement or undertaking to waive statutory rights and remedies. A Washington appellate court illustrated the point in holding that so-called "non-reliance" clauses in subscription agreements are enforceable under the Washington Blue Sky law.ⁿ¹⁶ By the "non-reliance clause in the subscription agreement the purchaser warranted that he relied solely on the written offering documents and not on any oral representations of others in making his investment decision. Subsequently asserting civil liability for fraud under the state securities law the purchaser sought to avoid enforcement of the "no-reliance" provision on the argument that it amounted to a waiver of the securities law. The court rejected the argument. The subscription agreement did not contain any express or implied waiver of compliance with the securities law, and did not require the investor to waive any right under the law.

"Integration" clauses in subscription or transaction contract documents operate in the same manner as "no-reliance" provisions and are subjected to the same scrutiny. Typical integration clauses provide that the subject document contains the entire agreement between the parties, and that no other party or agent of a party has made any promise, representation or warranty not contained in the contract, and that there have been no inducements or understandings outside the contract. Such a clause may be offered to preclude a fraud claim under Blue Sky laws. However, as the Delaware Chancery Court concluded in such circumstances:

Stated summarily, for a contract to bar a fraud in the inducement claim, the contract must contain language that, when read together, can be said to add up to a clear anti-reliance clause by which the plaintiff has contractually promised that it did not rely upon statements outside the contract's four corners in deciding to sign the contract. The presence of a standard integration clause alone, which does not contain explicit anti-reliance representations and which is not accompanied by other contractual provisions demonstrating with clarity that the plaintiff had agreed that it was not relying on facts outside the contract, will not suffice to bar fraud claims. Rather, in that circumstance, the defendant will remain at risk if the plaintiff can meet the difficult burden of demonstrating fraud.ⁿ¹⁷

The application of equitable defenses to actions brought under civil liability provisions of Blue Sky laws is considered in more detail elsewhere.ⁿ¹⁸ The assertion of waiver or estoppel generally to bar civil claims under Blue Sky laws may be problematic in the face of broadly construed remedial statutes. However, it is at least clear that anti-waiver provisions in Blue Sky laws will not prevent the operation of integration or similar contract clauses when the contract provisions make unmistakably clear that a purchaser is not relying on any outside facts. The defense, if it applies, must be based on evidence of conduct or other traditional grounds for waiver arising out of facts and circumstances.

As a further statutory defense, section 412 of Uniform Act, pertaining to the rulemaking authority of the Administrator, provides a defense against liability for:

[a]ny act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, form, or order of the [Administrator], notwithstanding that the rule, form, or order may later be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.ⁿ¹⁹

This subsection or one comparable to it has been enacted in most states.ⁿ²⁰ In context it is clear that this provision is a defense against an enforcement action, but there is no reason to limit it to such settings. Indeed, the provision is a clear statement that good faith actions taken in conformity with a rule or order should not be the basis for any liability. The context also indicates, however, that the principal concern is for actions taken (or not taken) in conformity with rules or orders that subsequently change or which are invalidated, and thus it is unclear how broadly the defense would be applied in more conventional liability settings.

[2] Statute of Limitations

[a] Generally

Blue Sky laws impose statutes of limitations for both criminal and civil actions. With respect to civil actions, the Uniform Act provides that a private civil actionⁿ²¹ may not be instituted "more than two years after the contract of sale."ⁿ²² There are variations, however, applicable to actions based on fraud. The 2002 Uniform Act provision reflects the trend toward liberalization of time limitations on these claims by providing that an action based on fraud must be brought within two years after discovery of the facts constituting the violation, but no more than five years after the violation.ⁿ²³

The principle that the time be measured from the date of contract (or in some states, date of sale) has been enacted in most statesⁿ²⁴ although in a few states the maximum period is other than two years.ⁿ²⁵ Measuring the time from the date of contract precludes measuring the time from the date the violation was discovered or should have been discovered in the exercise of due diligence. However, most states look to discovery or reasonable notice of the violation for purposes of the limitations period.

The statutes are diverse, and the date on which a cause of action is deemed to accrue may depend on the nature of the violation. In Arizona, for example, suit brought because either the securities or the seller was not appropriately registered must be instituted within one year after the violation occurs.ⁿ²⁶ If, however, the cause of action is for breach of the antifraud provisions, action must be commenced within two years after the fraud is discovered, or should have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.ⁿ²⁷

Similarly, California will permit a fraud action to be brought within four years from the date of the act or transaction constituting the violation or within one year after the violation is discovered, whichever occurs first.ⁿ²⁸ An action based on any other violation, however, must be commenced within two years of the violation or one year after its discovery, whichever occurs first.ⁿ²⁹ Pennsylvania's provision is comparable to California's, except that in Pennsylvania the maximum four-year period applicable to fraud actions is also applicable to suits against unregistered broker-dealers, agents, and investment advisers.ⁿ³⁰ Again, the period is reduced to one year if there is, or should have been, knowledge of the violation. The period of limitations in other suits under the Pennsylvania Blue Sky law is the same as in California.ⁿ³¹

Florida requires an action based upon a violation of the Florida Securities Act to be brought within two years of the date the facts giving rise to the cause of action either were, or should have been, discovered with the exercise of due diligence.ⁿ³² However, no action may be brought more than five years after the violation occurred. Minnesota requires action for fraud to be commenced within three years of the act or transaction constituting the violation, or within three years from the date of sale if suit is brought on any other statutory ground.ⁿ³³ Iowa has one of the longest limitations periods for fraud actions. Claims there must be instituted within five years after the act of transaction constituting the violation or two years after knowledge of the violation is received or should have been received through the exercise of reasonable diligence, whichever occurs first.ⁿ³⁴ All other actions must be started within two years after the violation.ⁿ³⁵

Other variations include Maryland, which has a general provision allowing suits within three years after contract of sale, but with two limitations. If the suit is based in fraud, it is to be commenced within one year of the discovery of the untrue statement or omission or one year after it should have been discovered by exercising reasonable diligence. If the suit is based on any other violation for which a civil action is permitted, it is to be brought within one year of the violation.ⁿ³⁶ And in Montana, the limitations periods are two years from the date of the violation to enforce a liability on a registered securities claim, and two years after discovery of a misrepresentation or other securities fraud liability or after such liability should have been discovered exercising reasonable diligence, but not later than five years after the transaction on which the action is based.ⁿ³⁷

North Dakota requires the institution of suit within five years from the date of sale.ⁿ³⁸ Mississippi requires that actions for fraud be brought within two years after discovery of the untrue statement or omission or after the discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence.ⁿ³⁹ Suits for other actions must be brought within two years after the occurrence of the violation upon which the action is based. New Hampshire's statute is oddly worded, providing that "a person may not recover under this section in actions commenced more than 6 years after his first payment of money to the broker-dealer or issuer in the contested transaction."ⁿ⁴⁰

In the other states, the appropriate statute of limitations is not found in the Blue Sky law, but in statutes of more general application.ⁿ⁴¹ The limitations period is thus dependent upon whether the action is founded in contract or tort.

In all cases the criteria vary for determining when the limitations period begins to run, and this question has also been dealt with by the courts as a central issue.ⁿ⁴² When the statute of limitations period begins on discovery of fraud, much also depends on what constitutes fraud in a particular state. In a California case for example, selling unregistered securities was held to be a fraudulent act and the statute did not begin to run until the discovery by the purchaser that the securities were unregistered.ⁿ⁴³ When the period of limitations begins at the date of contract or date of sale, the time at which the contract or sale became complete is pertinent. In such a case, it was held that it is not the time at which a purchaser signs a subscription agreement that controls, but the time at which the agreement is accepted by the seller.ⁿ⁴⁴ In another case involving an investor who agreed to purchase stock on a "when, as and if issued" basis, the court held that, in an action for rescission for failure of the seller to register the securities, the statute of limitations period began on the date of the agreement, not on the later date when the stock was actually issued. The "when, as and if issued" condition relates to contract liability, not contract formation.ⁿ⁴⁵

Besides determining when the limitations period has begun, it is just as important to know when the limitation period has ended, thereby foreclosing further liability. Schumacher v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County ⁿ⁴⁶ involved an action under the California Corporation Code based upon sellers' material misrepresentations in the sale of unregistered securities. The court held that "an amended complaint will be deemed filed as of the date of the original complaint provided recovery is sought in both pleadings on the same general set of facts."ⁿ⁴⁷ Since both the originally alleged federal securities law violations and the action based upon the California Corporation Code were based on the same set of facts, the amended complaint related back to the original, timely filed complaint.

[b] Repurchase Offer and Notice

For the most part, the limitation periods are not absolute. Under many statutes, for example, the seller can reduce the limitation period by making a repurchase offer on which the purchaser must act within thirty days of receipt.ⁿ⁴⁸ In Illinois, which requires that actions must be instituted within three years from the date of sale,ⁿ⁴⁹ there is an additional requirement that the purchaser give those persons he seeks to hold liable notice that he elects to rescind the sale. The notice must be given within six months of the time the purchaser learned that the sale is voidable under the Blue Sky law.ⁿ⁵⁰ This, too, has the effect of reducing the limitation period, even though the six month notice rule has been held not to be a statute of limitations.ⁿ⁵¹

[c] Installment Payments

Installment payments for securities present interesting questions in the application of statutes of limitations. In one case,ⁿ⁵² the purchasers had paid for the securities in three installments, but did not receive the securities until after the final payment. The court held that each payment could be considered an individual sale and that the purchaser could have sued after any interim payment. The final transaction, at which time the rights of the parties became fixed, was a sale in itself and it was from this point that the statute began to run.ⁿ⁵³ However, when the purchaser obtains rights under a purchase agreement from the date of such agreement, it is from that date that the statute begins to run, although payments are to be made in subsequent installments.ⁿ⁵⁴

If the statute is clear that the date of contract or date of sale is controlling, the limitation period cannot be tolled by the subsequent discovery of fraud.ⁿ⁵⁵ Other events, however, may have the effect of halting the running of the statute. The bankruptcy of the seller, for example, has been held to toll the statute of limitations.ⁿ⁵⁶ Bringing a class action has also been said to have the effect of tolling the statute in favor of all potential plaintiffs who are members of the class.ⁿ⁵⁷ However, where suit was commenced in a court without jurisdiction, and the statute ran before action could be brought in the proper court, an Arkansas court has held that suit in the proper court was barred.ⁿ⁵⁸

In another case, the purchaser obtained a default judgment against an agent who unlawfully sold securities. When the judgment proved uncollectible, the purchaser brought suit on the bond posted by the agent's broker-dealer employer as a condition of registration. It was held that although the first action was timely, it did not stop the statute of limitations from running against any suit on the bond. Accordingly, the action was barred.ⁿ⁵⁹ Further, various state courts have held that equitable doctrines such as estoppel and fraudulent concealment of material facts can also serve to toll the limitations period.ⁿ⁶⁰

[3] Failure to Exercise Reasonable Diligence

Earlier, in considering culpability standards as part of the scope of civil liability under Blue Sky laws,ⁿ⁶¹ application of a reasonable diligence defense against a claim of "seller" liability was first addressed. In Williams v. Guarniere ⁿ⁶² an Ohio appellate court reasoned from the relevant definition of "violation" in the Ohio Blue Sky law that a defendant seller of unregistered securities would not be liable because he had made a reasonably diligent inquiry and as a result did not believe the instrument involved was a security. The court concluded that the defendant had exercise reasonable diligence in seeking to determine whether the instruments he sold were securities. Where fraud liability is asserted, Blue Sky laws provide a "reasonable care" defense, such that liability may be avoided when a seller sustains the burden of proof that he or she did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission. There is nothing on the face of any civil liability provision, however, that suggests liability for the sale of unregistered, non-exempt securities could, or should, be subject to a reasonable diligence defense. That is clearly so as well for intermediary licensing requirements. Likewise, in all of this reliance on the advice of counsel has never been a valid defense to a violation of Blue Sky laws.ⁿ⁶³

Recognition of reasonable diligence as a defense against what has historically been viewed as strict liability under Blue Sky laws for the offer and sale of unregistered, non-exempt securities was made easier in Guarnieri because of the Ohio statutory construct. The definition of "violation" involved in the case included a "knowingly" element, and when carried into the civil liability provision the court opined, in effect, that action ultimately determined to be in violation of the securities law, but which was the product of a diligent inquiry to determine otherwise could not be a knowing violation. This statutory construct is not involved in the vast majority of other Blue Sky laws. Nevertheless, Guarnieri evidences a willingness of a court to look more closely at good faith undertakings to inquire into and comply with Blue Sky requirements. In any case, "reasonable diligence" would necessarily involve a high burden to be satisfied, but at least as one court has thoughtfully considered it, it is a viable defense.

[4] Equitable Defenses

The civil liability provisions of Blue Sky laws are silent as to the availability of equitable defenses, and their status is uncertain. A Washington Court of Appeals flatly stated in 2005 that the equitable defenses of estoppel and waiver will not be permitted in actions under state's Blue Sky law, which is based directly on the Uniform Securities Act.ⁿ⁶⁴ Rejecting their application to claims under the Blue Sky law, the Court reasoned:

The flexibility of such defenses is inconsistent with our Act's foremost objective of protecting investors. The statute provides the clean and surgical remedy of rescission as the sole recourse for an investor who proves a violation. It would upset the balance struck by the statute to allow fact finders to evaluate the investor's conduct on a case-by-case basis to determine whether it excuses the violation.ⁿ⁶⁵

Other courts have permitted equitable defenses, particularly if a state statute makes a transaction voidable, rather than void, at the election of the plaintiff.ⁿ⁶⁶ If a statute contains no express void or voidable provision, some courts have held transactions in violation of the statute voidable and have permitted equitable defenses.ⁿ⁶⁷ The significance of the void/voidable distinction, however, is in doubt,ⁿ⁶⁸ and it will not prevent courts from acting "fairly."ⁿ⁶⁹

Under the federal securities laws, equitable defenses have been recognized as barring claims when circumstances make it unjust to permit investors to foist their losses upon defendants. In Royal Air Properties, Inc. v. Smith,ⁿ⁷⁰ the Ninth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals long ago opined that: "The purpose of the Securities Exchange Act is to protect the innocent investor, not one who loses his innocence and then waits to see how his investment turns out before he decides to invoke the provisions of the Act."ⁿ⁷¹ In Royal Air, the purchaser, after finding out the transaction violated the law, did not immediately move to rescind it, but instead became involved in management of the investment and then asserted the illegality only after the investment turned out to be unprofitable.ⁿ⁷² The scenario could just as easily play out under state securities laws, and those state courts that have specifically recognized the availability of equitable defenses also make clear that the civil liability provisions and remedies must not be misused to protect against errors of business judgment and other things not related to the investor protection mission of Blue Sky laws. The availability of equitable defenses in those circumstances makes sense from a policy as much as a legal perspective. It is quite a different thing, however, to deny a statutory remedy for purchasers by allowing violators to freely assert equitable defenses without regard to the investor protection mission of Blue Sky laws.

Against this backdrop, the most commonly asserted equitable defenses in actions brought under the civil liability provisions of state securities laws are considered in more detail below.

[a] Estoppel and In Pari Delicto

Sellers of securities who are defendants in civil actions for violation of Blue Sky laws may raise the defenses of estoppel or in pari delicto. While there is a difference between these two doctrines, some courts have referred to them interchangeably. A Florida case, for example, held that the defense of estoppel would defeat a claim by a securities purchaser who was also an officer and director of the selling corporation.ⁿ⁷³ When a similar fact pattern reached a Georgia court, the Florida case was cited for the proposition that in pari delicto was a proper defense.ⁿ⁷⁴

Estoppel as an equitable defense refers to barring a party from pleading or proving facts inconsistent with his or her own actions. In pari delicto, also an equitable defense, refers to the equal culpability of parties in violating the law.ⁿ⁷⁵ However, it does not matter what label is imposed by the courts.ⁿ⁷⁶ The issue concerns the conduct by a purchaser of securities that will bar him or her from bringing an otherwise valid suit under the Blue Sky laws.

Generally speaking, innocent purchasers of stock issued or sold in violation of the blue sky laws may recover by rescission or damages. On the other hand, a purchaser who is equally culpable will be denied equitable relief. In a Texas case, for example, where the plaintiff-buyers actively sought to buy securities they knew to be speculative, unregistered, subject to transfer restrictions, and not in the seller's name, the court observed:

[I]f the transactions were in fact illegal solely because the stock was not registered, plaintiffs, by knowingly joining with defendants in the illegal scheme, were equally culpable with defendants and, therefore, in pari delicto. As such, plaintiffs were precluded from an instructed verdict on the ground alleged by the provisions of [the Act].ⁿ⁷⁷

Total equality of culpability, however, is not always present. Frequently, courts must decide a case in the area between "innocent" and in pari delicto. In one such case,ⁿ⁷⁸ the court stated that "where the purchaser is less than innocent but not in pari delicto, the law will generally favor the purchaser, since the Blue Sky Laws are intended for his protection."ⁿ⁷⁹ Thus, for example, mere knowledge by the purchaser of the violation without the other elements of estoppel (or in pari delicto) is insufficient to preclude recovery.ⁿ⁸⁰

Probably the most common situation in which the defenses arise is when the purchaser participates in the management of a selling corporation as an officer or director. Under such circumstances, defenses of estoppel or in pari delicto have generally been held sufficient to defeat the purchaser's claim.ⁿ⁸¹ The courts in these cases do not seem to differentiate between whether the purchaser's participation took place before or after the purchase of the securities, but there is some authority for the proposition that acts of participation committed subsequent to the purchase cannot be considered to place the purchaser in pari delicto.ⁿ⁸²

Before a purchaser can be a participant, there must be a modicum of control over or contact with the issuing corporation.ⁿ⁸³ That the purchaser became an officer or director was held insufficient to hold him in pari delicto without a showing that he was active in organization or management of the company or took part in illegal securities transactions.ⁿ⁸⁴ Also, gaining employment rights as part of the transaction to purchase the securities will not bar the purchaser's action.ⁿ⁸⁵ In one case where the court found that the purchasers aided in the illegal sale of the same securities they themselves had purchased, the court refused to hold them in pari delicto unless it could be established that they were also officers, directors, or selling agents of the seller.ⁿ⁸⁶ However, participation in management by a single member of a group was held to bar recovery by any person so represented by the participant.ⁿ⁸⁷ In this instance, a group of buyers, as part of the purchase agreement, was permitted to designate one of their number as a director of the selling corporation.ⁿ⁸⁸ The person so designated was an active participant in management, and the whole group was estopped from bringing the suit.ⁿ⁸⁹

Because estoppel and in pari delicto are equitable defenses, one state has refused to recognize them as valid defenses in Blue Sky actions on the ground that only defenses specifically permitted by statute may be raised.ⁿ⁹⁰ However, in a subsequent case, another appellate court in the same state, without mentioning either defense, barred an officer-director from rescinding his purchase. In this case, the securities would have been exempt from registration except that a required report was not filed. It was the court's opinion that plaintiff's position in the company accorded him the responsibility to see that the securities laws were complied with.ⁿ⁹¹

Estoppel and in pari delicto have been raised in non-managerial cases with varying results. A California court decided that knowledge on the part of the purchaser that the securities should have been registered, but were not, was enough to place the purchaser in pari delicto with the seller.ⁿ⁹² In a Florida case,ⁿ⁹³ the securities involved were interests in an oil lease. The sellers were not the issuers and neither the seller nor the purchaser ever had any control over the enterprise. Nevertheless, the court allowed the defense of estoppel because the purchaser and seller had close relationships in various businesses. To allow the purchaser to recover would wrongfully injure the seller since the purchaser's own acts, conduct, knowledge, and business relationships at the time of sale were inconsistent with his acts, conduct, and knowledge in bringing suit.ⁿ⁹⁴ A dissenting opinion proffered that estoppel should be a defense only, "in those cases wherein the purchaser was on equal status with the seller insofar as control over the issuer of the security is concerned... ." ⁿ⁹⁵

Laches is an affirmative defense. The applicability of the doctrine is dependent upon whether: there is a delay in asserting a right or claim; the delay is excusable; and there is undue prejudice by the delay to the party asserting the defense.ⁿ⁹⁶ In an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of stock, for example, the purchaser must act promptly to repudiate the contract within a reasonable time after discovery of the facts entitling him rescission.ⁿ⁹⁷ However, in applying the doctrine of laches, the delay is measured from the date of constructive knowledge of the facts entitling the plaintiff to bring the suit. Thus, the plaintiff is charged with "such knowledge as he might have obtained upon inquiry, provided the facts already known to him were such as to put the duty of inquiry upon a man of ordinary intelligence."ⁿ⁹⁸

Generally, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances that would render inequitable the enforcement of petitioner's right after a delay, the laches doctrine will not bar a suit short of the statute of limitations period.ⁿ⁹⁹ One commentator takes the position, however, that when a state statute of limitations applies to equitable as well as legal actions it is clear that laches may still bar a plaintiff in equity before expiration of the statutory period, at last when the state statute does not provide otherwise and perhaps even when it does.ⁿ¹⁰⁰

[c] Unclean Hands

Often, unclean hands is a companion defense to in pari delicto. The defense of unclean hands is designed to deny equitable relief to a plaintiff who is guilty of unlawful or inequitable conduct arising out of the matter for which he or she seeks relief.ⁿ¹⁰¹ However, for the doctrine of unclean hands to bar an equitable claim, the misconduct alleged must be serious enough to justify a court's denial of relief on an otherwise valid claim.ⁿ¹⁰²

[d] Ratification

Ratification, the validation of a prior act and the relinquishment of a known right, may also be a valid defense to civil liability claims under Blue Sky laws.

In Morton v. Tullgren, 263 Ark. 69, 563 S.W.2d 422 (Ark. Sup. Ct. 1978), the court discussed the treatment to be given to any enlarging statute of limitations that calls for a longer period for suit than the existing statute. Stating that a split of authority exists, the court expressed the view that depending upon legislative intent, the new statutory period, rather than the old, may be applied to any cause of action that had not been barred at the time the new statute became effective. Although the majority view was stated to be that legislative amendments extend the period of the statute of limitations to causes of action accrued, but not yet barred, Arkansas follows the minority view and will not retroactively apply an amendment unless there is clear legislative intent to the contrary.

In a different situation, a court was asked to determine the constitutionality of a shorter statute of limitations based on securities fraud versus fraud in general. The court held that legislatures are free to make reasonable classifications, i.e., the classification has a reasonable relationship to the purposes of the legislation. In this case, the three year securities fraud statute of limitations was held to be constitutional even though other actions based on fraud were permitted five year statutory periods. Hutto v. Bockweg, 579 S.W.2d 382 (Ky. Ct. App. 1979). The court explained that "the lot of the seller is made more onerous by the Blue Sky statute in misrepresentation cases... . Some of the inhibiting strictures of the law of misrepresentation are relaxed and the price exacted is the shortened limitations period." 579 S.W.2d at 385. Based on this quid pro quo, the court held the classification reasonable and therefore constitutional.

For an action to arise under the securities laws based upon inadequate advice from counsel, the attorney's duty to his client must have resulted from the provisions of the applicable securities laws and not merely from the failure to advise in a legal capacity of the obligation to register securities. If counsel isn't liable to an investor under the securities laws themselves he may still be liable to his client under common law professional malpractice principles.

The court observed:

A judgment based on the 1933 Act performs a dual function. It redresses a private wrong and enforces public policy. Since one of the essential purposes of the Act is to protect investors by requiring publication of information about a security through its registration, enforcement of the Act by private litigation ordinarily should not be encumbered by defenses for which the statute makes no provision. 596 F.2d at 1291 .

In Pinter v. Dahl, 486 U.S. 622, 108 S. Ct. 2063, 100 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1988) , the U.S. Supreme Court held that the defense of in pari delicto was available in an action under Section 12(1) of the federal Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 771 (1).

(n76)Footnote 76. In one court, in pari delicto was considered grounds for the defense of estoppel, see Data Lease Financial Corporation v. Barad, 291 So. 2d 608, (Fla. Ct. 1974) , in which the court opined:

The instant action was not an equitable suit for rescission, but was brought to void the transaction under a statute specifically requiring registration and making sales of unregistered stock voidable where statutory requirements are not met. In such a situation, estoppel is applicable only where the purchaser himself is in pari delicto, participates in the management of the issuing corporation, or where some unusual circumstances exist justifying application of the doctrine of estoppel.

291 So. 2d at 612. In Hayden v. McDonald, 742 F.2d 423 (8th Cir. 1984), an action alleging violation of the securities registration provisions of the Minnesota Blue Sky Law, the defense of in pari delicto was available against investors with full knowledge that the securities were not registered and who actively promoted the securities to prospective new buyers; the defense of equitable estoppel, however, cannot be raised unless the investor has actively participated in the management and control of the fraudulent scheme.

But see Dunn v. Bemor Petroleum, Inc., 680 S.W.2d 304 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984) (neither estoppel nor in pari delicto are available to rescind the sale of unregistered securities because that would allow the seller to avoid liability by informing potential purchasers that the securities are unregistered; the state's interest in requiring registration overrides the possibility that a knowing purchaser will receive a windfall).

We know of no reason why the doctrine of estoppel should not be applied where the buyer, rather than participate personally, participates in corporate affairs through an agent. We cannot say that the public policy of Florida is that a purchaser of stock who participates directly in corporate affairs should be estopped to rescind the sale of stock and recover the purchase price but that a purchaser who designates a representative to act for him in corporate affairs should not be so estopped. 211 So.2d at 613 .

CHAPTER 15 Civil Remedies

2-15 Blue Sky Regulation § 15.06

§ 15.06 Class Actions After SLUSA

The assertion of civil liability claims under Blue Sky laws as class actions is entirely consistent with the remedial provisions, assuming the prerequisites for any class action are met. Several Blue Sky laws clearly imply the use of class actions.ⁿ¹ In those states, if the Commissioner brings an action for restitution or damages on behalf of parties injured by a violation of the state's securities statute, the court is empowered to award the appropriate relief if it finds that the enforcement of private civil actions, "by class action or otherwise," would be impractical.

As a general matter, the key to whether class action litigation is appropriate under Blue Sky laws will be a function of the applicable state procedural requirements for bringing such actions relative to the elements of particular claims asserted. To the extent individual adjudications are required in the determination of civil liability under any particular Blue Sky law, a class action may not be appropriate. Required individual defense assessments, for example, could predominate over common liability issues. These are matters for determination by courts under applicable procedural rules and case. There is nothing about civil liability provisions in Blue Sky laws generally that would preclude the assertion of class claims. There is, however, the important consideration of federal preemption of certain kinds of claims brought as class actions.

In 1998, to curb the perceived migration of class action securities fraud claims to state court, Congress enacted the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 ("SLUSA").ⁿ² With a few exceptions, SLUSA provides that no "covered class action"ⁿ³ based upon state statutory or common law, alleging (1) an untrue statement or omission of a material fact in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security or (2) that the defendant used or employed any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in connection with the purchase or sale of a covered security, can be maintained by a private plaintiff in state or federal court.

The legislation limits pre-emption to "covered securities" under Section 18(b)(1), (2) of the Act,ⁿ⁴ while retaining state court jurisdiction over class action securities fraud claims arising from the offer or sale of NSMIA sanctioned state regulated securities, as well as certain claims arising from transactions between an issuer and its security holders under the law of the issuer's state of incorporation.ⁿ⁵

Among other restrictions, the Act also extends the discovery stay to state court and allows for removal of covered class actions to federal court, as well as for remand to state court of a removed action if the federal court finds it to be maintainable in the state forum. SLUSA specifically preserves the jurisdiction of state securities commissioners to investigate and bring fraud enforcement actions.ⁿ⁶

Simply put, SLUSA federalized the law of fraud relative to covered securities in cases brought as class actions. No common law claims of fraud or deceit, or any Blue Sky law claim relating to false or misleading statements, in connection with the offer or sale of covered securities may be brought as class or "mass" actions. To that extent the preemption of Blue Sky law remedies and liabilities is complete, and the assertion of such claims, as "covered class actions" is confined to federal courts under the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws. SLUSA has no impact, however, on the individual assertion of civil liability claims under state law.

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

§ 16.01 Introduction

Although Blue Sky laws have been a part of the securities regulatory landscape since the early days of the Twentieth Century, practice and procedures under individual state securities laws for much of that past largely evolved as a matter of unpublished rules of thumb passed from administrator to administrator and varying considerably from state to state. In a practical sense, the mechanics of Blue Sky "law" actually developed more as "lore," reflecting the parochial approach to localized investor protection that grew out of populist reform initiatives of the times. As discussed elsewhere in this treatise,ⁿ¹ although early constitutional challenges to Blue Sky laws as impediments to interstate commerce were rejected, there was no sense of evolving national financial markets and the need for predictability and uniformity while carrying out the proper police power function of local investor protection. Consequently, there was little structure built into the administration of Blue Sky laws. State securities regulation was largely balkanized. Practice and procedures evolved in the same parochial manner, with meaningful local knowledge but little certainty and even less predictability for those on the outside seeking to access capital markets on a growing regional and national scale.

State administrative procedures acts rationalized rulemaking and adjudicative processes in the enforcement of Blue Sky laws and, eventually, widespread adoption of the Uniform Securities Act brought substantial commonality into the basic workings of state securities regulation. Still, for capital formation the separate administration of state securities laws did not become truly rationalized until the advent of common guidelines for merit review of securities offerings and other uniform procedures, largely resulting from initiatives of the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA), that eliminated unnecessary barriers to capital formation while assuring that the historic mission of Blue Sky regulation was not compromised. In earlier chapters, for example, initiatives such as the Uniform Limited Offering Exemption (ULOE) and the Small Corporate Offering Registration (SCOR) have been examined along with such practical approaches to regulation in cyberspace as the NASAA model policy on the advertisement of products and services on the Internet.

In this chapter, practical considerations in Blue Sky practice and procedures are explored. The assessment is grounded throughout in the Uniform Securities Act because what state administrators do, how they do it, and how practitioners effectively function in the process is most easily understood by keying on the provisions that form the basis for practice and procedures in most states. A few states substantially adopted the Revised Uniform Securities Act, and a growing number of states have now adopted the 2002 Uniform Securities Act. Others have not adopted any form of the Uniform Act. In practice, however, there is little distinction between Uniform Act and Non-Uniform Act states in terms of the authority and procedures of the administrator and the empowering provisions of the Blue Sky law under which they act.

Moreover, administrative procedures laws do not vary substantially among the states, and both rulemaking and administrative enforcement procedures are largely uniform, although as discussed in detail elsewhere in this treatise,ⁿ² specific remedial and other enforcement-related powers vary from state to state. There are as well important distinctions to be made in practice and procedures among those states that have abandoned "merit" regulation of securities offerings versus those that continue to require it in one form or another.ⁿ³ Nevertheless, at the baseline, procedures for qualification of securities for offering are in place in all states, and those procedures and the roles of administrators do not vary significantly from what is established in the Uniform Act.

Uniformity in practice and procedures today is perhaps most clearly evident in the manner of licensing or registration of intermediaries--broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. The Central Registration Depository system--today known as "Web CRD"ⁿ⁴--and the Investment Adviser Registration Depository (IARD) have streamlined these procedures to such an extent that a single gateway application procedure is available in any state.

In the same manner, "guidelines" or policy statements adopted by NASAA--the North American Securities Administrators Association--play an important role in the regulation of securities offerings by publishing available standards against which qualitative assessments are made in the merit regulation process, and in the interpretation and application of Blue Sky laws in particular settings. States have selectively adopted NASAA guidelines,ⁿ⁵ and where adopted, these published guidelines control critical determinations in particular settings, such as real estate or oil and gas-related offerings. NASAA, likewise, facilitates uniformity through the development and promulgation of Model Rules that are available to state administrators who address areas of shared regulatory focus and concern. The NASAA Model Rule on the Use of Senior-Specific Certifications and Professional Designations,ⁿ⁶ for example, is representative of initiatives to assure a uniform and effective approach throughout the states.

These processes and procedures are considered below with a view to guiding practitioners in achieving the most efficient and effective results. However, nothing below is a substitute for the detailed analyses of each substantive area of administration under Blue Sky laws that are found in other chapters. A complete understanding of Blue Sky practice and procedure is wholly dependent on a thorough knowledge of the substantive areas and the particular objectives in investor protection that each addresses. Armed with that knowledge, however, the practical points discussed below are particularly useful.

The Internet-based Web CRD supports all functionality of the former system, but is considerably more capable, using a relational database structure, based on uniform registration forms. Web CRD information is more useable and accessible through reporting and data downloads via the Web. It has also eliminated paper filings and duplicative information from amendments that streamline and expedite the licensing process. Throughout this chapter, as indeed throughout this treatise, references to the "CRD" now mean Web CRD.

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

1-16 Blue Sky Regulation § 16.02

§ 16.02 Administration

As in the Uniform Act,ⁿ¹ all state Blue Sky laws provide for administration of the securities law by a state agency, with primary management responsibility delegated to an individual "administrator," "commissioner" or "director" who oversees the work of a professional staff. Some states provide for overall administration of their securities laws by an elected constitutional officer. For example, Georgia,ⁿ² North Carolinaⁿ³ and Massachusetts,ⁿ⁴ among others, designate the Secretary of State as the securities administrator. However, whereas North Carolina and Georgia provide for the Secretary of State to delegate powers under the statute, Massachusetts does not. Delegation of the secretary's authority in Massachusetts is found in the rules of the Securities Division.ⁿ⁵ Similarly, in Indiana administrative authority for the Blue Sky law rests with the Secretary of State, but the law specifically provides for a securities division headed by a commissioner, appointed by the Secretary, and who serves at the will of the Secretary.ⁿ⁶

These examples illustrate the varying grants of authority that exist even within analogous state governmental offices. The state securities agency and its administrator may also be found under or within the authority of the state attorney general's office, as in Maryland, New York, Delaware and New Jersey. It may also fall under cabinet, sub-cabinet or independent agencies within the executive branch,ⁿ⁷ other elected officialsⁿ⁸ or multi-member commissions or boards.ⁿ⁹

The professional staff of a securities administrator's office can be broken down into several job categories: examiner/analyst, attorney and investigator. Examiners or analysts review securities offerings to assure compliance with a state's rules and regulations prior to allowing an offering to be registered. They also review applications for investment advisers, broker-dealers and agents. They may be lawyers, accountants, or otherwise possess financial or business training or experience. Some states have career employees performing this function who are often substantial repositories of knowledge.

The securities examiner has authority to offer comments to issuer's or underwriter's counsel, request and negotiate changes in offering documents and give approval to, or seek withdrawal of, an offering. These tasks are often performed under the supervision of a corporate finance chief, or other senior official, with responsibility for that area. In states with small staff, the administrator may perform that function. As noted earlier, because of changes in federal and state laws in recent years, staffing resources have shifted away from reviewing securities and moved into enforcement efforts.

The bulk of a state securities agency's resources are devoted to its enforcement program. Staff attorneys and investigators comprise an agency's enforcement unit. A substantial portion of the enforcement caseload of an administrator's office is likely to be derived from complaints submitted by investors. The public visibility of the securities agency may vary from state to state; nevertheless, most investor complaints will end up in the administrator's office. The complaints will range from outright fraud to dissatisfaction with the manner of or delays in processing customer funds and securities. The staff may monitor the frequency of such complaints to identify particular patterns or problems at a specific firm or to discern new types of investment scams.

Investigators review customer complaints, conduct interviews and assist in fact gathering. An enforcement attorney's responsibilities may include the investigative stage of a case, pleadings and brief preparation, prosecuting administrative hearings, court litigation and liaison with federal, state and local prosecutors. Supervision is generally provided by a chief of enforcement. Together with the attorney assigned to the case, the enforcement chief may make such critical decisions as whether or where to institute an enforcement action. To preserve the fact and appearance of impartiality of the administrative hearing process, the administrator, if he or she is also the hearing officer, may have no involvement in the preparation of an enforcement case.

The Securities and Exchange Commission, as a general rule, does not commit its limited enforcement resources to cases where the number of investors or the dollar amounts is not very large, unless the case contains an important issue or has broad national impact. Hence, state securities administrators are the primary resource for individual investor complaints, and are today viewed in very practical terms as the "cops on the beat" in investor protection.

The staff is also responsible for responding to inquiries concerning the application and interpretation of the state's securities law and rules. The inquiries may be of a general nature, specific requests for interpretive opinions or "no-action letters."¹⁰ Larger offices may have a general counsel to supervise these functions. The general counsel may also have responsibility for drafting the agency's rules and any proposed legislation. Securities administrators often become actively involved in state legislative activity. The administrator and senior staff are called upon to submit comments and testify on legislation pertaining to the securities law.

The securities administrator's office is a valuable resource in educating the public about financial fraud. Several states publish regular bulletins or newsletters reporting on their enforcement activities and recent developments in the law or policies of the agency, and also to publish notices of proposed rule-making. Today all states also operate Internet web sites through which a variety of information and investor education material is available in addition to easy access to laws, rules, policy statements and both current and archived enforcement actions.

Many administrators and staff speak frequently before bar and business groups and participate as lecturers and panel members for continuing education programs. Financial reporters regularly utilize the administrator's office for information and articles on recent financial trends, regulatory developments and investment fraud. NASAA likewise generates and actively disseminates information designed to enhance investor education initiatives by the states.¹¹

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

1-16 Blue Sky Regulation § 16.03

§ 16.03 Administrative Authority

[1] Mandated Authority

The scope of administrative authority and responsibilities under Blue Sky laws is characterized in terms of either mandated or discretionary authority. Under the Uniform Act and all state laws there are certain responsibilities of the administrator which must be satisfied and which do not entail the exercise of discretion. While certain subjective determinations may have to be made in carrying out legislatively mandated duties, the administrator must nevertheless act.ⁿ¹ Such mandated responsibility contrasts with the discretionary authority an administrator may exercise in deciding, for example, whether to institute an enforcement action for violation of the state securities law. Mandated authority is provided in the Uniform Act and all state laws in the areas of intermediary registration and licensing, and for registration of securities for distribution.

[a] Intermediary Registration or Licensing

Section 202 of the Uniform Act provides for registration of broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers and investment adviser representatives by filing with the administrator. Today the mechanical application process for these intermediaries is accomplished in almost all instances either through the Web CRD or the IARD. Both Web CRD and the IARD are centralized interactive computer databases, which capture, maintain and update information regarding intermediaries. For securities agents and broker-dealers registered with the NASD and the states all information is submitted through Web CRD. For investment advisers and investment adviser representatives the IARD functions in the same manner.ⁿ² The primary benefit of Web CRD and the IARD is that an applicant need not make a physical "filing with the administrator" as set forth in the statute. Rather, once an eligibility process is completed and a billing account is established, agent, broker-dealer and investment adviser registration forms indicating the desired state of registration are electronically completed and filed. The fees are then distributed to the appropriate states. State administrators maintain the registration records by easily accessing Web CRD and IARD data via a computer terminal located in the administrator's office.

It is important to note that this computerized registration processing system is not an abrogation of the administrator's statutory mandate to register or license intermediaries, and to renew those registrations. The administrator retains complete authority to approve or deny an application for registration. Web CRD and the IARD are only receptacles for the registration filings. Some states have enacted specific legislation directing use of Web CRD and the IARD, while most others have implemented the systems through rules or regulations.

NSMIA--the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996--bifurcated responsibility for registration of investment advisers between the states and the SEC. Generally, investment advisers who manage clients' assets that, in the aggregate, exceed 30 million dollars, must register with the SEC. An investment adviser who does not meet that threshold must register with the state where it maintains its principal office. The Uniform Act provides for investment adviser registration in the same section as that for broker-dealers and agents.ⁿ³ The definition of investment adviser in the Uniform Securities Act and in most state statutes tracks that found in the federal Investment Advisers Act of 1940.ⁿ⁴

After NSMIA, investment advisers registered with the SEC are federal covered advisers, with no substantive registration or licensing requirements at the state level. However, federal covered advisers are subject to notice filing and fee requirements in states, and under NSMIA they remain subject to state antifraud enforcement authority. There is no federal registration of investment adviser representatives, and they remain subject to state licensing or registration requirements without regard to whether the investment adviser with which they are affiliated is a federal covered adviser.ⁿ⁵

[b] Registration of Securities

After the NSMIA realignment of federal and state roles in offerings of securities that are national in character, most public securities offerings are no longer within the purview of state registration and review. The scope of state authority in regard to registration of securities generally is addressed thoroughly in Chapters 5 and 6, and it is beyond the scope of this chapter to discuss the intricacies governing the registration or exemption qualification provisions of state securities law. However, for those securities offerings which must satisfy state laws and regulations, failure to properly register a security or perfect an exemption can lead to enforcement action, civil liability and even criminal prosecution against the issuer and selling agents. Many experienced practitioners thus utilize "Blue Sky memos" or "surveys" that detail the requirements that must be met in each state in order for a security to be lawfully offered and sold. Moreover, even though the states' role in the registration of securities offerings has become limited, states nevertheless require notice filings of securities to be offered to their residents. Such filings usually require the payment of a fee.

[c] Records Maintenance

Section 413(b) of the Uniform Act mandates that the administrator maintain records of applications for registration and registration statements. Considerable statutory and case law has evolved pertaining to public records of government agencies, together with the parallel development of "fair information practices" or privacy laws. Access to a securities administrator's records, therefore, may be governed by laws that are not necessarily consistent with the securities statute. Other non-securities related mandated responsibilities of an administrator may be found in other general laws of a state covering such matters as fiscal affairs, personnel practices, administrative procedure and standards of ethics.

[d] Anti-takeover Laws

In the 1970s and early 1980s, in response to increased activity in the area of corporate takeovers, many state legislatures enacted laws designed to provide some regulatory control over hostile take-over attempts. Some of these laws were clearly designed to protect home-based corporations. Administration of these "tender offer" statutes was given to the securities administrator. The statutes were often aggressively used by target companies to petition the administrator in an effort to prevent or delay the hostile bidder. In response, at the same time it commenced a takeover bid, a bidder would ask a federal district court to enjoin the administrator's exercise of authority under the statute. Obtaining injunctive relief was often critical to the bidder since many administrators had authority to freeze all activity pending a hearing and ultimately prevent a take-over bid from going forward.

In 1982, the United States Supreme Court in Edgar v. MITE Corp. ⁿ⁶ ruled on the constitutionality of the Illinois take-over law. A divided court found the law to be an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. Since MITE, other federal court decisions have addressed other state take-over laws. While most take-over statutes still remain on the books, there remains little dispute as to their lack of constitutional viability. There are, however, new generations of state laws such as "control share acquisition" laws and others which do operate effectively in the takeover setting. These laws are discussed in more detail in Chapter 4-"State Investor Protection Authority."

[2] Discretionary Authority

[a] Rulemaking

Section 412 of the Uniform Securities Act provides in pertinent part:

(a) The [Administrator] may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules, forms, and orders as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including rules and forms governing registration statements, applications, and reports, and defining any terms, whether or not used in this act, insofar as the definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act. For the purpose of rules and forms, the [Administrator] may classify securities, persons, and matters within his jurisdiction, and prescribe different requirements for different classes.

The scope of rulemaking authority is prescribed as follows:

(b) No rule, form or order may be made, amended, or rescinded unless the [Administrator] finds that the action is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and consistent with the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of this act. In prescribing rules and forms the [Administrator] may cooperate with the securities administrators of the other states and the Securities and Exchange Commission with a view to effectuating the policy of this statute to achieve maximum uniformity in the form and content of registration statements, applications, and reports wherever practicable.ⁿ⁷

Rulemaking powers granted to an administrator are broad, but not limitless. In Council for Owner Occupied Housing, Inc. v. Abrams,ⁿ⁸ for example, regulations under New York's Blue Sky law requiring sponsors to cure building violations and dangerous conditions before converting to condominiums and cooperatives were held invalid as beyond the scope of the Act, which limits the powers of the attorney general to matters of disclosure. Regulations requiring disclosure of such violations and conditions, said the court, were invalid as an attempt to establish improper enforcement guidelines.

In all of this as well, the purpose of administrative rulemaking is to facilitate the agency's placing into effect the policies declared by legislatures through a state's Blue Sky law. The agency may not issue rules that are in clear conflict with the statute.ⁿ⁹ States may also not promulgate rules that are in conflict with federal law and national policy.ⁿ¹⁰

In the exercise of rulemaking authority under the Uniform Act or whatever variant is in place in every state,ⁿ¹¹ administrators' actions are governed as well by administrative law and procedures. The Uniform Act makes no provision for actual rulemaking procedures, but in Official Code Comments recognizes that state administrative procedure acts cut across the area, and may provide specific procedures for the adoption and publication of rules and forms.ⁿ¹² The Blue Sky Laws in several jurisdictions specifically incorporate administrative procedure acts as governing the rulemaking process.ⁿ¹³ Where administrative procedures acts apply,ⁿ¹⁴ there are normally requirements for filing and issuing public notice of proposed rulemaking and for public hearings at which affected or interested persons may appear. Once a rule is adopted in conformity with the requirements, the Uniform Act establishes a safe harbor for actions taken in good faith reliance on it, notwithstanding any subsequent amendment, rescission, or determination of invalidity.ⁿ¹⁵

Rulemaking by securities administrators is limited only to the extent that a rule must bear a reasonable relation to the legislative purposes of the authorizing statute and not be arbitrary, discriminatory, or in conflict with law.ⁿ¹⁶ The scope of rulemaking authority is considered in greater detail in section 14.02, below. Administrative proceedings must generally satisfy procedural due process, including reasonable notice of hearing as well as the opportunity to be heard, and administrative decisions imposing sanctions must be based on reliable, probative, and substantial evidence.ⁿ¹⁷

With varying degrees of formality, some states also provide for advisory input in the processes of administration and enforcement. Washington, for example, provides for a seven-member "State Advisory Committee," appointed by the Governor to advise the Commissioner on issues affecting securities regulation in the state.ⁿ¹⁸ The Ohio Division of Securities has established four "advisory committees," comprised of members of the Division staff, the bar, and the securities industry to advise the Division in the areas of registration, licensing, enforcement, and takeovers.ⁿ¹⁹

The rulemaking authority of the administrator must be exercised in accordance with whatever administrative procedure requirements apply in a given state. Most state securities agencies fall within the scope of an administrative procedure act requiring prior notice and publication of proposed rules, followed by a public hearing. The Uniform Act, in section 412(a), requires the administrator to make a finding that the rule "is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors" and that the rule is consistent with the Act.ⁿ²⁰ As a practical matter, most rules adopted pursuant to this provision will contain a preamble, preliminary statement, or finding by the administrator which addresses the requisite statutory premise. Unlike adjudicatory matters, however, regulatory findings are not required to be supported by specific findings of fact.

[b] Policy Statements and Interpretive Guidance

Less formal than the rule making and interpretive opinion process is the utilization by many jurisdictions of guidelines and policy statements. While no specific authority relative to the adoption of guidelines or policy pronouncements is found in the Uniform Act, the broad authority of the administrator to apply the statute consistent with its intent and purpose is, as a practical matter, sufficient to give import to them. In fact, many Blue Sky practitioners rely on guidelines and policy statements to provide advice to clients, most notably for securities registrations and exempt offerings.

Policy statements are employed by administrators to publicly announce how specific matters of concern will be addressed by the staff. From time to time, the administrator may notice a recurring problem, practice, or pattern that is not addressed by existing standards. Rather than undertake the time consuming process of promulgating a formal rule for what may be a temporary or not overly pervasive practice, the administrator may issue a statement of policy advising as to how a particular issue will be treated by the staff. Policy statements may also be used to signal the bar and industry about specific concerns or disturbing practices that will be given high regulatory or enforcement priority.

Guidelines and policy statements are also helpful to administrators. Less formal and cumbersome than the rule making process, the adoption of guidelines provides the administrator with a useful tool to adjust to creative capital raising techniques and the innovative products and services offered by financial institutions. Guidelines and policy statements also allow for administrative flexibility in addressing unique fact situations or circumstances, without having to worry about the circumvention of formalized rules or creating inappropriate precedents. A practitioner, therefore, may have a better opportunity to persuade an administrator to deviate from a guideline applicable to an offering than if the matter in issue concerned a rule.

In addition to policy statements, guidance is also available through interpretive opinions. Uniform Act section 413(e) provides: "The [Administrator] in [his] discretion may honor requests from interested persons for interpretive opinions." Many states have a provision based on the Uniform Act that grants to the administrator discretionary authority to issue interpretive opinions.ⁿ²¹ The 2002 Uniform Securities Act, now adopted in several states and under active consideration in others, continues the same discretionary approach.ⁿ²² The prescribed authority is in some cases more

Usually, informal opinions that are not in the nature of orders have no force of law, and are not subject to judicial review.ⁿ²⁴ However, that is not universally the case. In Virginia, for example, interpretive opinions are "official interpretations" issued by orders that are considered conclusive in any court, but subject to appeal.ⁿ²⁵ Georgia has a dual system that provides for both informal opinions and for determinations in the form of declaratory rulings. These rulings are available in actual controversies and on a formalized petition process initiated by any person whose legal rights will be interfered with or impaired by the application of the Blue Sky law or any rule or order under it.ⁿ²⁶

Declaratory or administrative "rulings" by administrators may or may not be formally published. However, when issued as formal orders resulting from a hearing process, publication will generally be required as a matter of administrative procedures. The Virginia provision expressly granting "official interpretations" issued by such orders the force of law is not the norm. However, any formally issued and published ruling of an administrator fairly implies such an application. As the Uniform Act itself provides, no act done or omitted in good faith conformity with "any ... order" that is later rescinded or amended may be the basis for liability.

Published rulings or statements of policy issued by an administrator in regard to the administrative process itself, as, for example, in establishing or defining alternative review procedures to be applied to registration statementsⁿ²⁷ are clearly intended to announce regulatory standards and promote general awareness of participants in the process. However, efforts by administrators to make policies generally available have produced certain tensions over what is or is not considered to be "rulemaking." The promulgation of rules is normally governed by state administrative procedures acts, whereas authority to issue administrative rulings or statements of policy operates independently of that process. Nevertheless, the promulgation of regulatory standards through policy statements or administrative rulings may amount to rulemaking and administrators must assess whether published interpretations or policy statements amount to a standard intended to have general application, and if so, whether its promulgation is subject to the state's administrative procedures' requirements.

On the issue of when a statement of policy by an administrative agency amounts to a rule or regulation subject to the administrative procedures act, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court provided guidance in Pennsylvania Human Relations Comm. v. Norristown Area School District,ⁿ²⁸ in which the "binding norm" test was adopted. The court explained:

The critical distinction between a substantive rule and a general statement of policy is the different practical effect that these two types of pronouncements have in subsequent administrative proceedings... . A properly adopted substantive rule establishes a standard of conduct which has the force of law... . The underlying policy embodied in the rule is not generally subject to challenge before the agency.

A general statement of policy, on the other hand, does not establish a "binding norm"... . A policy statement announces the agency's tentative intentions for the future. When the agency applies the policy in a particular situation, it must be prepared to support the policy just as if the policy statement had never been issued.

"Binding norm" means that the agency is bound by the statement until the agency repeals it, and if the statement is binding on the agency, it is a regulation. Additionally, in determining whether an agency action is a regulation or a statement of policy, one must look to the extent to which the challenged pronouncement leaves the agency free to exercise discretion to follow or not follow the announced policy in an individual case.ⁿ²⁹

The process of creating informal procedures must itself be consistent with the Blue Sky law of the state and informal procedures cannot be used to circumvent statutorily-imposed requirements for notice or opportunity for hearing, which are otherwise a part of a particular administrative function.ⁿ³⁰

In those states which do not follow the Uniform Act, and in which there is no express authority for issuing individualized interpretive or administrative opinions, administrators simply base their authority on the broad grant of regulatory and enforcement powers within their statutes.ⁿ³¹ States commonly condition the issuance of such opinions on there being an actual issue or controversy. Hypothetical questions or requests for advisory opinions are generally not entertained. Also, states commonly provide for a fee to be paid before an opinion will be issued.

Some states prescribe specific procedures to follow when requesting an interpretive opinion or no-action letter. States require specific factual information, not hypothetical situations, and appropriate statutory references. The request should also include the writer's interpretation and some discussion of the opposite side of the issue. Careful consideration should be given to addressing broad based policy implications, showing the administrator why the opinion sought is in the public interest and not likely to be harmful to investors. Finally, some states require that a fee be paid with a request for an opinion.

The rules governing interpretive opinions and no-action letter may provide specific disclaimers as to the precedential value of the opinion. For example, an interpretive opinion rendered by the administrator's office in the State of Washington is applicable only to the transaction identified in the request.ⁿ³² While interpretive opinions will not bind the administrator or serve as legal precedent, as a general rule, most administrators will take the opportunity to establish agency policy when rendering an opinion. The request may involve an issue that needs to be addressed because of the frequency in which it is raised or the important policy issue posed. More important opinions may be sent for publication to various legal and trade periodicals. Some administrators also produce monthly or quarterly newsletters where opinions may be published.

[c] Enforcement

Broad investigative authority is conferred upon the administrator so that there can be effective enforcement of a state's securities laws.ⁿ³³ The administrator is given discretion to conduct private and public investigations,ⁿ³⁴ issue subpoenas to witnesses and for recordsⁿ³⁵ and to publish information concerning violations of the statute or rules.ⁿ³⁶ Presumably, this last item was included so that an administrator can utilize the media to warn the public about pervasive fraudulent securities practices and to deter potential violators. In fact, many administrators routinely issue press releases reporting on actions they have taken to alert and educate investors about fraudulent securities activity. Division or departmental web sites are regularly used for the same purpose. Public exposure of securities law violators and fraudulent practices can have a far greater impact in deterring fraud than the issuance of an administrative order known only to the agency and the offender.

The investigative authority given to the administrator even extends in some states to the ability to provide transactional immunity.ⁿ³⁷ Having claimed the privilege against self-incrimination, a person may still be compelled to testify but may not be subsequently prosecuted, at least at the state level. This particular grant of discretionary authority, needless to say, raises several collateral issues for the practitioner, the prosecutor and the administrator. Any decisions contemplated under this provision of the Uniform Act should be undertaken only after due consideration has been given to applicable law at the federal levelⁿ³⁸ and the affected state.

Once a matter has gone beyond the investigative stage, the administrator or enforcement staff determines whether the issuance of an administrative complaint or order is appropriate. The discretionary authority to issue complaints or orders may be express or implied, depending upon the statute. Massachusetts, for example, gives express authority to the administrator to issue temporary cease and desist orders prior to hearing, as well as final orders after a hearing.ⁿ³⁹

Section 408 of the Uniform Act confers express authority upon the administrator to enjoin violations of and enforce compliance with the statute and its rules. Equitable remedies accompanying an injunctive order, such as the appointment of a receiver or conservator, are also authorized under some state laws.ⁿ⁴⁰ Although the administrator is authorized to seek injunctive relief, in many instances the action may not be commenced without the approval or representation of a state attorney general or similar government legal officer. This division of legal authority may not always be found within a state's securities law.

Administrators may also make criminal referrals to state prosecutors.ⁿ⁴¹ Some administrators, in fact, can initiate their own prosecutions for violations of their securities law. In the majority of states, however, matters are referred by the securities administrator to the state attorney general or appropriate local prosecutor for criminal action. Generally, criminal referrals are reserved for those cases involving clear cases of fraud, or theft of investor funds.

In enforcement and all matters generally, section 412 of the Uniform Act gives the administrator authority to make such "orders" as are necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.ⁿ⁴² The broker-dealer, agent and investment adviser section of the Uniform Actⁿ⁴³ specifically authorizes the issuance of orders to deny, suspend or revoke a registration. Of course, such orders must be preceded by prior notice, opportunity for a hearing and written findings of fact and conclusions of law.ⁿ⁴⁴ Express authority to issue orders is also found in the securities registration provisions of the Uniform Act. Under section 306, the administrator is empowered to issue stop orders to deny effectiveness to any registration statement in the event that it fails to satisfy certain statutory requirements.ⁿ⁴⁵ Some of the requirements may be specific, such as the security having been the subject of an administrative stop order or injunctive action.ⁿ⁴⁶ Other parts of section 306 contain more broadly stated standards which, arguably at least, confer considerable discretionary authority upon the administrator.ⁿ⁴⁷

Counsel should be mindful of the discretion given to the administrator to issue stop orders. A stop order can be issued prior to a hearing. Accordingly, the issuer could be subject to a "domino effect" whereby other administrators utilize the first stop order as grounds for denying the security effectiveness in their jurisdiction. The discretionary authority to issue stop orders is most apparent when issuers opt to withdraw their registration statement from a state, rather than force the issuance of a stop order. Administrators also typically have authority to suspend exemptions from registration, with the same practical impact as a stop order because in both instances failure to comply will result in immediate enforcement action. The same considerations apply in the process of intermediary licensing and registration. Administrators may act at any time to suspend or revoke a license, and in all states there are provisions permitting summary suspension procedures when necessary.

A final important consideration in regard to administrators' authority to make orders is that although the Uniform Act provides that certain securities transactions may be exempt from registration requirements,ⁿ⁴⁸ the administrator, exercising discretion, may deny or revoke some exemptions.ⁿ⁴⁹ Such a denial is accomplished by the issuance of a summary order, provided there is subsequent due process. The power of an administrator to suspend an exemption is most often exercised as a result of an "audit" of reports required to be filed with certain exempt offerings, or upon receiving investor complaints. The power to act summarily is considerable. However, orders denying or revoking exemptions under these provisions do not operate retroactively. Moreover, no person may be considered to have violated the law by reason of a transaction effected after entry of the order where it is shown that the person did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the order denying or revoking the exemption.ⁿ⁵⁰

[3] Legislative Oversight

Blue Sky administrators act in accordance with varying provisions among the states on the method of selection of the administrator, salary, term of office, budget, selection and compensation of personnel, and annual reporting requirements to the legislature or governor. As they typically head departments or divisions within a larger, cabinet level department or office, direct oversight of securities administrators is most often exercised at the cabinet level, with legislative oversight coming indirectly by way of overall department budgetary interactions. Appropriate legislative committees can and do call upon administrators for testimony and, as noted earlier, administrators often advocate directly with such committees on legislative matters. Oversight, as such, at the state level, however, is far less defined in comparison to congressional oversight of activities of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. Ultimately, of course, the state legislature may question any action or initiative by an administrator and may address legislation as seen necessary or appropriate to define the scope of administrative authority. Historically, however, there have been few significant legislative oversight initiatives. Rather, the greater oversight authority is exercised by the Executive branch, and is manifested more often in regulations and policies rather than statutory changes.

[4] Judicial Review

The Uniform Act and the Blue Sky laws of all states provide for judicial review of orders of an administrator. The process is examined more closely in Chapter 14--State Enforcement Authority. The key point for consideration in practice and procedure under these provisions is that deference is accorded to the determinations of administrators and to decisions and orders that are a product of the mandated administrative procedure. Courts consistently recognize the expertise of Blue Sky administrators in the exercise of investor protection authority, and do not overturn administrative actions on "arbitrary and capricious" grounds unless it is plainly shown that the administrative action is inconsistent with fundamental due process and other overriding constitutional concerns, or is clearly contrary to the proper exercise of authority. Thus, for example, intermediary licensing determinations are rarely overturned. This fact bears directly on the management of the application process by prospective licensees. In the securities distribution setting, judicial review of stop orders or denials of registration applications is rarely a practical option for issuers, and is infrequent at best.

On the other hand, judicial review of administrative enforcement orders, which are often based upon significant legal interpretations in the application of Blue Sky laws, and which carry broad consequences or impose civil money penalties or other ancillary relief, are much more often taken to judicial review. In these situations judges are more willing and able to review legal analysis rather than practical assessments and judgments of an administrator. If, for example, a significant administrative order is based upon the conclusion that a respondent offered and sold an unregistered security, the fundamental legal analysis that a "security" is present will easily be reviewed in the courts, and as the many cases illustrate, is perhaps the most often reviewed state securities law issue.

(n1)Footnote 1. Non-action by an administrator, or allowing a certain amount of time to pass without taking action, will cause some events to happen. For example, under section 202(a) of the Uniform Act the application for registration of a broker-dealer, agent or investment adviser becomes effective if no denial order is in effect and no summary postponement under section 204 is pending. In the securities distribution setting this may also occur, as with securities registrations carried out by "notification" or "description" procedures.

(n2)Footnote 2. All states participate in the Web CRD and the IARD system. Alternative provisions for filing hard-copy application materials directly with a state administrator remain generally available for broker-dealers that are not eligible to use Web CRD, although that universe of broker-dealers, comprised of broker-dealers who are not members of FINRA and whose business is exclusively intrastate, is very small.

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

1-16 Blue Sky Regulation § 16.04

§ 16.04 Federal Preemption

The scope of federal preemption of administrative authority under Blue Sky laws in the wake of NSMIA is examined extensively in other chapters, which focus on the distribution of securities, intermediary regulation and enforcement generally.ⁿ¹ As a practical matter, the NSMIA redefinition of federal and state roles in securities regulation to accommodate truly national markets has energized state administrators in refocusing attention to those things most consistent with the historical mission of Blue Sky laws. In the offering context administrators now address investor protection primarily in the context of small or limited offerings conducted on a localized or regional basis. They devote resources to regulation of the people directly involved in the process, and to protection against fraud.

NSMIA effectively reset national policy to make clear that state securities regulation remains an essential element of investor protection in the evolution of national and global securities markets. Blue Sky administrators have responded to NSMIA preemption with a renewed sense of purpose and commitment to the protection of "main street" investors.

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

1-16 Blue Sky Regulation § 16.05

§ 16.05 Administrative Process and Procedures

No security may be offered and sold in any state unless it is first qualified by a registration procedure, or it is exempt from qualification by reason of the type security or the transaction in which it is involved. Likewise, no person may engage in activities as broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser, or investment adviser representative without being appropriately licensed,ⁿ¹ unless that individual or the particular activities are excluded or exempted from licensing requirements. The process and procedures associated with qualification of a securities offering in a state, and regulation of the people who directly facilitate those offerings, and intermediaries bring about securities transactions generally, differ in subtle ways in some cases and more significantly in others. In the offering context, for example, even "uniform" forms may be modified to require additional or different information in different states. Filing requirements associated with exempt transactions, or applicable to particular limited offerings, also vary from state to state. Uniformity in these processes and procedures is not mandated, and despite great progress through widespread adoption of such uniform procedures as the Small Corporate Offering Registration (SCOR) and the Coordinated Equity Review (CER) program, there remain meaningful hurdles in qualifying an offering. For exempt transactions or limited offerings there is no lesser challenge in navigating through variances in both the availability of an exemption and in procedures in a number of instances to "claim" an exemption.

In the discussion below, practical considerations for participating in all of these administrative processes and procedures, as well as intermediary licensing and general enforcement procedures, are examined further.ⁿ²

[1] Exemptions

In Chapters 7 and 8 the considerable array of available exemptions for securities or transactions from full qualification or registration requirements under Blue Sky laws is presented. A critical consideration in regard to exemptions under state securities laws is that some of them require advance approval in some states. In California, for example, an exemption is available for an offer of securities and the execution and delivery of an agreement for the sale of securities pursuant to that offer, but only when a "negotiating permit" is first obtained.ⁿ³ In some states the exemption for offers and sales of securities by eleemosynary institutions is conditioned upon first filing a written proof of exemption with the administrator within a prescribed time for review.ⁿ⁴ "Limited" and "special" offerings are subject to various filing and notice requirements, in some cases amounting to prequalification or approval in addition to follow-up reporting requirements. Thus, it is essential to examine exemption requirements closely in each state in which an offer or sale is expected to occur, as subtle differences in common exemptions and the administration of those exemptions may have significant consequences.

It is also essential to understand the distinction between exemptions and exceptions from definitions, and distinctions between exemptions themselves, as to the application of antifraud provisions and remedies. Uniform Act section 402, for example, makes clear that enumerated securities and transactions are exempt from registration and advertising restrictions only. Exempt securities are nevertheless securities for all other purposes, and in particular the offer and sale of them, and any other securities in exempt transactions, remains fully subject to antifraud provisions. Purportedly exempt securities and transactions come under close enforcement scrutiny in response to investor complaints and in areas particularly ripe for abuse. As an example, offers and sales of promissory notes under the exemption for commercial paper arising out of a current transaction and which evidence an obligation to pay within nine months that is found in all Blue Sky laws⁵ have prompted aggressive enforcement action by state administrators across the country. Administrators attack both the validity of the claimed exemption and fraud that often pervades offers and sales of such securities.

In those situations in which an exemption must be claimed or noticed in advance administrators will look closely at the offering to be certain that it is consistent with the intent and operation of the exemption involved. All exemptions, whether for securities or transactions, are premised on the belief that particular characteristics of a security or the circumstances of a transaction are such that the protection of the Blue Sky law is not needed. Administrators do not hesitate to move quickly with temporary cease and desist orders or other provisional remedies when it appears that the premise is invalid in any situation. Unlike the administrative process and procedures involved in qualification of securities, with a few exceptions only notice filings and limited follow-up reporting may be involved in exempt transactions. Thus, ex post scrutiny is in most instances the only means of policing such offerings, and the consequences of non-compliance at that stage may prove devastating to an issuer or intermediary faced with making rescission offers, or worse. It is important, therefore, to seek out advance guidance from the office of the administrator in any state when there is any question concerning the interpretation or application of an exemption. It is in this area as well that policy statements and other published interpretations play a critical role and must be closely reviewed.

[2] Securities Qualification

The range of securities offerings subject to qualification procedures under Blue Sky laws today is substantially diminished in the wake of NSMIA. Blue Sky practice has changed significantly in this regard. Whereas in the past issuers and intermediaries were faced with the task of managing registration and qualification procedures in multiple jurisdictions, the process today is meaningful only in connection with much smaller offerings carried out on a local or regional basis. State authority to impose substantive qualification requirements on large scale, national, offerings is preempted by NSMIA, as nearly all such offerings involve NSMIA "covered" securities. On the other hand, state authority in regard to qualification of smaller scale offerings such as those conducted under Rule 504 of SEC Regulation D, or pursuant to the Small Corporate Offering Registration (SCOR) procedure, remains in place. These offerings, often by small start-up or entrepreneurial issuers and involving significant risk factors and potential for abuse, that are most appropriately subjected to traditional Blue Sky review and qualification procedures, and which justify that continued role as a matter of investor protection. Without regard to the size of an offering, "intrastate" offerings carried out pursuant to the exemption from federal registration provided by section 3(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933⁶ remain fully subject to state qualification procedures. For the offerings that remain subject to Blue Sky qualification procedures practical considerations in the process are discussed further below.

[a] The Review Process

As a general rule, securities offerings must either be registered with the administrator's office, or qualify as being exempt from registration, prior to being offered or sold within or from the state. Once the practitioner has assumed responsibility for obtaining registration or exempt status for a securities offering, organized and thorough files must be kept. During the course of registration, counsel may engage in discussions and negotiations with literally dozens of state securities agency staff. Notes of all conversations should be made, if only because of the possibility of confusion and error that exists in trying to manage a registration, particularly in multiple jurisdictions.

The first step is the filing of the offering materials, together with appropriate fees and forms. A checklist of the filing requirements for each state should be prepared in advance, reviewed and updated at least quarterly to monitor changes in state requirements. Counsel should determine the proper fee for the filing, the necessary forms, documents and number of prospectuses which must be filed.ⁿ⁷ Some states charge a flat filing fee, while others set the fee as a percentage of the amount of the offering to be registered in the state. Filing fees are generally not refundable. Many practitioners include a copy of the cover letter and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to be date stamped by the agency and returned so a record of receipt can be maintained. Since the number of days a securities offering has been on file with the agency often dictates when offers or sales commence, the date of receipt is critical. Counsel, however, should determine the method used by the agency to count the number of days.ⁿ⁸ Generally, filings are not treated as complete, and hence the counting does not begin, until all required materials have been received.

As a first step in the registration process, most states will review the offering to determine compliance with their filing requirements. Larger state securities offices may have this preliminary review performed by clerical staff, before the file is assigned to an examiner. If the filing is incomplete, it is likely to be put on hold and not substantively reviewed until all filing requirements have been met. The person who submitted the filing will be advised of the filing deficiency by phone or mail.

Once the filing is complete and passes preliminary review, the substantive review process begins. The depth of substantive review performed depends on such factors as whether a state engages in merit or disclosure review, staff size and expertise, regulatory philosophy, and priority allocation as to types of filings. Experienced Blue Sky attorneys usually have a good understanding of the intensity of review in a given state and the critical elements looked for by corporate finance staff. The novice may have to learn by trial and error or devote substantial time to surveying state securities examination staff to get a sense of the issues they are likely to focus on in their review.

There will be substantive standards applied by the examiner who is assigned to review the offering. Formal standards will be found in the statute and the rules or regulations. Less formal than rules, but often applied with equal force, are guidelines, policy statements and interpretive opinions. The guidelines most often utilized are those adopted by the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA). NASAA guidelines cover securities such as real estate, oil and gas, equipment leasing, commodity pools and several types of not-for-profit offerings. The guidelines are used primarily by merit review states. Some states promulgate the NASAA guidelines as rules, occasionally with modification. Other jurisdictions may issue formal statements indicating that they will apply the guidelines, while others may informally apply the guidelines without public statement to that effect. After surveying the published requirements of the states, counsel may still have to make further inquiry to determine a state's actual practice with respect to the guidelines.

The scope of review of a securities offering varies greatly from state to state. As a general rule, counsel can expect that merit review states with adequate staff will perform a more thorough analysis of an offering than non-merit review states or those states with small staff. However, the close relationships that exist among state regulators frequently result in a sharing of information. This network of state securities examiners even extends to a recognition that some state examiners are more expert and tend to focus on certain key issues, while leaving other elements of an offering to colleagues in other states. The Coordinated Equity Review (CER) procedure is a product of this multi-jurisdictional deference. Here again, however, the process is meaningful only to the extent that an offering is made on at least a regional basis and review is not otherwise preempted by NSMIA.ⁿ⁹

The assignment of offerings to specific examiners for review may be based upon experience, subject matter, expertise or random distribution. States with larger staff will often have examiner specialists in real estate, oil and gas and equipment leasing securities. Other specialist categories may be equity securities, debt securities, mutual funds, or public and private limited partnership investments. An administrator's office will usually have a senior person, often an attorney, in charge of its corporate finance section.ⁿ¹⁰ The title may be chief counsel, general counsel, assistant or deputy commissioner for securities registration or corporate finance. This person will assign files for review and may, in fact, screen some offerings that, in his opinion, do not necessitate review. This screening process enables the staff to devote their resources to potentially troublesome offerings.

Once a file is under review by corporate finance staff, any number of scenarios can develop. The staff may "clear" the offering without further comment. Some states will send out notices to that effect, although because of backlogs, not always in a timely fashion. In some states, counsel will have to telephone to learn the disposition of a filing. Since some filings are time sensitive, counsel should submit the filing to the state as soon as possible and expeditiously respond to requests for additional information. Under the Uniform Act, registrations by coordination,ⁿ¹¹ i.e., those which become effective within the state upon SEC registration, must be on file with the securities administrator for at least ten days. Some coordinated offerings may receive expedited treatment and obtain SEC registration with limited or no review. Being mindful of the ten day state requirement, counsel should file with the state at the same time as the SEC. Some states do not react favorably to requests for expedited review and registration if they receive a filing after the SEC and are then asked to move a file to the top of the pile at the expense of more timely submitted offerings.

Perhaps the cardinal rule that should be observed in dealing with securities registration staff is absolute candor at all times. Credibility, both individual and institutional, is an unwritten but very important part of the securities registration process. Securities examiners promptly develop a keen sense as to whether they are being dealt with candidly. Law firms and underwriting or other intermediary firms with solid reputations for fair dealing with state securities staff will generally find it easier to accomplish their objectives than those which do not meet the highest standards of integrity. Word spreads rapidly from state to state and reputations are quickly established. A good example might involve a common inquiry by an examiner to Blue Sky counsel asking about the status of the offering in another state. An inaccurate or obfuscatory response can permanently harm counsel's credibility since such answers are easily verified. Just as practitioners share their experiences in dealing with the state securities staff, so do state securities examiners swap anecdotes about counsel they encounter.

The first stage of review may be a request from the state for additional information or an explanation justifying representations made in an offering. Some requests are easily answered while others necessitate consultation with issuer's or underwriter's counsel or the client. If the examiner is seeking proprietary information which may be placed in a public file, be certain that the availability of that information is understood by the client. Some state public records laws exempt proprietary data from public access. Simply submitting the data with a cover letter requesting confidential treatment may not be enough to protect the information. Another approach is to suggest submission of information and having it returned after review, with a representation from the agency that no copies will be made or retained in any publicly accessible file.

Some states will provide formal comment letters indicating those elements of an offering which do not comply with registration standards or prevent qualification as an exempt offering. Some comments may refer to seemingly objective standards such as compensation, i.e. commission to be paid to underwriters or dealers. However, the issue of compensation or profits to promoters or underwriters might also be subjective. For example, the receipt of a particular fee might be treated as compensation and an appropriate comment will be made. The fee, in fact, may represent reimbursement for services or expenses and upon sufficient explanation will not be considered as excessive compensation.

Since comments about an offering may involve subjective judgments by the staff or interpretations of a rule or guideline, there is an opportunity for negotiation. If a promoter is a previously convicted securities swindler, the chance of getting the security registered in a merit state is probably small. However, for many other issues, a flexible and creative approach by counsel and client can often address state concerns. Some comments can be satisfied by volunteering additional disclosure, either by amending the prospectus or perhaps providing a "sticker" to offerees in the particular state. Corporate governance issues, such as loans to officers or shareholder voting rights, can also be resolved by satisfying state requirements if the client is willing. Often, such matters which are important to the regulator may not be critical to the issuer, who is primarily interested in raising capital.

The attorney should avoid the temptation to debate and try to win every issue. The client may be quite willing to make the necessary amendments to the offering in order to satisfy state regulatory concerns so sales can be made in the state.

[b] The Coordinated Equity Review Program

Notwithstanding the individual states' authority to review, comment upon and approve or reject a securities offering, in an effort to provide uniformity with respect to review of securities offerings, NASAA established the Coordinated Equity Review Program ("CER"). The stated purpose of CER is to "coordinate the blue-sky registration process in all of the states in which the issuer seeks to sell its equity securities." Basically, CER attempts to achieve simplification of the state registration process by designating a lead full disclosure review state and a lead merit regulation state for purposes of reviewing an offering. The lead states are responsible for coordinating full disclosure and merit review comments on behalf of all jurisdictions in which registration is sought. The two lead states then generate a comment letter on behalf of all of the jurisdictions and then proceed to negotiate such comments with the issuer. By participating in the program, the states agree that once an agreement is reached between the lead disclosure state and the issuer with respect to the offering, those states agree to clear the offering simultaneously.

There are specific procedures and forms to be followed for an issuer who wishes to avail itself of the CER. Accordingly, prior to commencing an offering in which the CES might be utilized, counsel should make inquiry of NASAA or a state jurisdiction as to the specifics of the program.

[c] Responding to Adverse Determinations

In the registration process an impasse may be reached, and the offering must either be amended, withdrawn or an appeal must be made to the examiner's superior. At this point, another important practical rule is worth noting. Until it is clear that negotiations with the examiner can go no further, higher review should not be initiated. Furthermore, always advise the examiner that an appeal to a superior will be sought and inquire as to the steps that must be followed.

Depending upon the internal structure and size of the securities agency, the appeal may be directed to the administrator or to a mid-level supervisor. Some states insist on a written appeal which sets forth and discusses the unresolved issues and may require a similar internal memorandum from the examiner. This more formal approach is most likely to occur in the larger states and when the administrator is hearing the appeal. The format used to appeal is usually a letter.

The appeal process can afford a real opportunity to resolve areas of disagreement which surfaced at the initial review state. The practitioner should focus upon the most critical issues from the regulator's viewpoint. If they can be resolved, accommodations are likely to be reached on the other matters. Some states give examiners little room for deviating from applicable standards and they may be instructed to adhere strictly to rules and guidelines unless otherwise advised by a supervisor. This internal approach, while perhaps frustrating to the practitioner, affords the administrator the opportunity to consistently apply agency standards and minimizes disparate treatment of offerings at the staff level.

Counsel should approach the appeal process prepared to respond to the concerns raised by the staff and to have in mind a flexible or creative resolution that may address those concerns. Always be mindful that the supervisor or administrator will not be quick to override the staff. The administrator deciding appealed offerings must take into account staff morale and motivation, as well as the precedential impact and policy ramifications of his decision. Too frequent reversals of staff positions can create a sense of futility among the examiners and undermine the standards upon which the offerings are reviewed. For these reasons, counsel who deal regularly with the administrator's office should carefully consider when to appeal a staff determination. Appealing, or threatening to appeal, staff decisions without a good faith effort toward resolution will only work against a client's interest.

An appeal may be heard by the administrator via telephone conference, a meeting of the parties, or simply a review of the file. Since the nature of the securities review procedure is usually informal, there is no due process at this point. The right to a hearing is triggered when a stop order is issued, or the effectiveness of the registration statement is postponed or suspended,ⁿ¹² or an order denying or revoking an exemption is issued.ⁿ¹³ Thus, the administrator or supervisor may meet or talk ex parte with staff or counsel for the issuer. He or she may decide the matter by reviewing the offering materials on his or her own, or may suggest a meeting with staff and counsel and seek to mediate the dispute.

As an offering moves through the appeal process of the agency, the time in which the administrator must act before the security is deemed registered may not always be met. The administrator or staff, to prevent the offering from being registered or effective and having to issue a stop order or order denying exemption, will ask counsel to waive the applicable time period and to do so in writing. There is little choice in the matter, since by law the administrator in most cases is compelled to issue an order.

If it appears at any point during the securities registration process that clearance is not likely, counsel may offer or be requested to withdraw the filing. This is invariably the end result of an unsuccessful attempt to obtain registration or exempt status for a security. The other alternative, forcing the issuance of an order, offers no real benefit to the issuer. Once a stop order or summary postponement of registration order issues, sales cannot be made without subjecting the issuer and selling agents to injunctive and prosecutorial action. Additionally, the issuance of the order is probably a material fact which should be disclosed to potential investors by amending the prospectus. By the time a hearing is held and a final decision rendered on the summary order, there is usually little left to sell of the offering and considerable money has been spent on the administrative litigation.

Since the issuance of a summary stop order also consumes the resources of the administrator's office, it is in the interest of both sides to permit withdrawal of the offering. For these reasons, stop orders are rare. Most administrators will issue them only in instances where offerings are believed to be truly fraudulent. The reason for issuing an order will be to alert other regulators and attract public attention to a serious threat of securities fraud. Under these circumstances the summary order may be accompanied by other enforcement action, such as a temporary cease and desist order or request for injunctive relief.

[3] Intermediary Licensing and Regulation

[a] Broker-dealers and Agents

In order to effect transactions in securities for the account of others, registration, or licensing, as a broker-dealer or agent must be accomplished at the state level. While there are some exclusions or exemptions from registration as a broker-dealer, their applicability is limited to rather specific types of activity.ⁿ¹⁴ Counsel must therefore review the laws and regulations of each state before advising a client as to whether registration as a broker-dealer or agent is required in connection with a particular transaction. All aspects of intermediary registration and licensing are considered more thoroughly in Chapter 8.

Most administrators have a specific person or unit assigned to broker-dealer and agent matters. Their responsibilities include responding to inquiries, reviewing initial applications, amendments and withdrawals for broker-dealers and agents, examination of broker-dealer operations, investment adviser registration and examinations and enforcement matters. Broker-dealer registration is one of the most critical regulatory responsibilities of the agency. By permitting a broker-dealer to transact securities business within the state, the administrator is, in effect, telling the public that the firm and its registered agents meet the agency's requirements. For this reason, a substantial number of states are quite rigorous in their review of initial broker-dealer applications.

The Application and Review Process--The first step in the initial registration process is a check to see that all appropriate materials and forms have been filed, completed and properly executed. Incomplete applications may be returned or the broker-dealer examiner will write or call the applicant advising of the deficiency. Since there is a thirty-day time limit in which the administrator must act before the application is deemed approved,ⁿ¹⁵ most states will not consider an application complete until all required submissions have been properly filed. For broker-dealers and agents the submission process today has been greatly simplified by Web-CRD and the ability to make "one-stop" electronic filings.

Though all states use uniform forms and participate for the most part in Web-CRD, there are some unique filing requirements from state to state, and so a checklist is a helpful tool. For example, some states have a surety bond requirement; government securities dealers may be exempt or excluded from registration in some states but not others; likewise for exchange floor brokers. If the statute or rules of a given state do not clearly address a given fact situation, inquiry of the staff should be made.

Broker-dealer and agent application review and monitoring constitute a major resource allocation within an administrator's office. As noted, most procedural aspects of broker-dealer and agent registration are managed today by Web-CRD, a national centralized computer system.ⁿ¹⁶ Each state accesses the system through its own computers. Every office, therefore, has at least one person assigned responsibility for reviewing applications and information updates filed with Web-CRD. Larger offices may have several people overseeing broker-dealer and agent operations, including professional and clerical staff.

Review of new Web-CRD data, responding to requests for information and assistance, registration status checks and ministerial matters may be handled by clerical staff in some states. Questions about whether an applicant with a disciplinary history qualifies for registration, statute and rule interpretations, routine or "for cause" broker-dealer branch office examinations and enforcement related matters will usually involve professional staff. A few states also monitor compliance with their net capital requirements and may assign accounting personnel to this task.ⁿ¹⁷

Since providing misleading or incomplete information can be grounds for denial of a registration application,ⁿ¹⁸ counsel must insist that the client be totally candid in completing the necessary forms. The Web-CRD data base is extensive and the likelihood of a prior disciplinary problem escaping a broker-dealer examiner's review is small. Failure to disclose a disciplinary event can have ramifications far greater than the disclosure itself. The disciplinary questions on broker-dealer and agent applications are usually the most important elements of an examiner's review. An affirmative response to a disciplinary question may trigger additional inquiry. The less information volunteered by the applicant in responding affirmatively to those questions, the greater the chance that the application will be delayed while the examiner obtains more details about the incident. Submitting pleadings, complaints, orders and decisions or other explanatory documents in anticipation of follow-up review may expedite the review process and create a positive impression.

In addition to disciplinary matters, an applicant's employment history may be carefully scrutinized. An applicant with a history of transferring from one troublesome firm to another may be subject to rather intense review. Administrators try to screen out actual or potential violators. An agent with an employment history with frequently disciplined firms may find it difficult to obtain state registration. Keeping such agents out of the state is considered a useful prophylactic enforcement tool.

Once it becomes clear that effecting agent or broker-dealer registration will be less than routine, counsel should endeavor to identify the reason for the examiner's concern. The problem might be just one incident, perhaps a fine or suspension that can be satisfactorily explained. The problem may derive from a series of similar incidents, i.e., investor churning complaints, which may evidence a pattern of less than ethical business practices. If an examiner cannot be persuaded to register the applicant, counsel should try to determine the statutory basis for denial. Certain sections of the law are objective disqualifiersⁿ¹⁹ that leave little room for legal debate. Other provisions are more subjectiveⁿ²⁰ and a convincing argument could be made to support an applicant's registration effort. Counsel should also review carefully the statutory time limitations which govern the ability of the administrator to assert or rely upon certain facts or events in support of a denial, revocation or suspension of registration.ⁿ²¹

Except in instances where an applicant is a repeat offender or has engaged in particularly egregious misconduct, counsel should be prepared to approach the administrator's office creatively. Some administrators use their broad authority to issue such orders "as are necessary to carry out the provisions ..." of their securities lawsⁿ²² to effect limited or conditional registrations of broker-dealer or agent applicants with whom they may not be totally comfortable in giving full registration. Thus, a registrant may be permitted to engage in only certain types of securities transactions or be required to submit regular reports to the administrator. Special broker-dealer supervision over an agent may be a condition of registration.

In addressing an administrator's concerns about an applicant, counsel should suggest terms that will satisfy the administrator that the investing public will be protected. There should be a time limit to the conditions imposed with a provision for automatic removal or modification upon petition to the administrator. Counsel must also be mindful of the possibility that a conditional registration may, depending upon the conditions imposed, be a reportable event and require an amendment to an agent's Form U-4.ⁿ²³

Some administrators may be more inclined to permit a broker-dealer to register if it has a place of business in the state. The rationale is that the registrant can be easily monitored and inspected to ensure compliance. Administrators are also sensitive to the effect of denying an individual applicant the opportunity to earn a living in his or her state of residence. Such sensitivity may not extend to an out-of-state applicant.

When it is clear that registration is not going to be permitted, counsel should suggest that the application be withdrawn. The staff may also make the suggestion. The alternative is the issuance of an order summarily postponing or suspending registration pending a final decision on the application.ⁿ²⁴ This should be avoided at all costs, unless the applicant believes it can prevail upon a full hearing, since the order could trigger a statutory disqualification in other states.ⁿ²⁵

Applicants and practitioners must be particularly mindful of this potential consequence of a registration denial in the context of subsequent or later applications for registration or licensing in an additional state or states. A broker-dealer or agent previously licensed in one or more state who applies subsequently to become licensed in another will be subjected to scrutiny without regard to prior registration(s), and particular as to intervening disciplinary or business conduct matters. The denial of a licensing application by the new state may adversely impact otherwise longstanding prior licensing and registration in others. The practical risk associated with proceeding to challenge a preliminary notice of denial or intent to deny registration through administrative processes must be evaluated very carefully.

Licensing and Registration Renewals--Broker-dealer and agent registrations must be renewed every calendar year. Renewals are processed through Web-CRD. State renewal fees vary, with some fees being the same as initial registrations, while others may be less. Part of the eligibility requirements for participation in Web-CRD is that broker-dealers maintain accounts, and the system simply debits the account based upon the number of registrations renewed in the various states for the firm and its agents. Fees are remitted to the states through the system.

A registrant that fails to renew its broker-dealer registration may be faced with a series of problems. First, some states may require a new registration application. Second, any securities transactions effected while the registration had lapsed may have to be rescinded. There are also significant civil liabilities which may attach.ⁿ²⁶ Third, an enforcement action could be instituted and disciplinary sanctions imposed. Similar problems could arise for failure to renew an agent's registration. Administrators approach failure to renew cases differently. Some require strict adherence to registration requirements, while others are more accommodating if the failure was not willful and can be reasonably explained. Contrition and candor can be helpful in minimizing the damage for failure to renew.

As previously noted, all states participate in Web-CRD. The system is operated by FINRA. Virtually every aspect of broker-dealer and agent registration is handled through Web-CRD, including initial registrations, amendments, transfers and withdrawals. An agent with no disciplinary history can complete a prompt transfer from one broker-dealer to another through the Web-CRD system's temporary agent transfer program (TAT). A transferring agent who has a disciplinary history may experience delays in effecting a transfer.

Post-Registration Requirements and Procedures--Once the registration or licensing process is complete, the securities administrator has broad authority to require broker-dealers to maintain such records that may be prescribedⁿ²⁷ and to file financial reports.ⁿ²⁸ As a practical matter, the extensive requirements of the SEC and the self-regulatory organizations generally encompass those which may be prescribed by the administrator. Registrants also have an ongoing duty to amend their registrations when the documents previously filed become inaccurate or incomplete. The Uniform Act, for example, requires that the registrant "promptly file a correcting amendment."ⁿ²⁹ While most administrators allow amendments to be filed within a reasonable time, undue and repeated delays may signal to the administrator a lackadaisical attitude toward compliance by the firm. Failure to amend, especially as to disciplinary information, is considered to be a serious violation.

Having been registered with the administrator's office, the broker-dealer's next contact will usually occur because of a problem. Routine and "for cause" examinations, investigations and investor complaints are the primary events which may trigger the administrator's interest in a broker-dealer. Several states perform routine broker-dealer and investment adviser examinations to monitor sales practices and assure compliance with record keeping, registration and other requirements. The administrator is authorized to cooperate with other governmental agencies and self-regulatory bodies in performing such exams.ⁿ³⁰ The examinations may be conducted with or without advance notice.

The examinations may be performed at principal or branch offices of the registrant. Employees of a broker-dealer receiving a surprise visit from state securities officials may be reluctant to cooperate without first consulting the main office or counsel. While the authority to conduct the exam without a subpoena is clear, most state securities investigators will give branch office personnel an opportunity to contact the home office or counsel. Resisting an exam, however, can be deemed a violation of the law subjecting the registrant to disciplinary action, an injunction or criminal prosecution.

States that do not perform routine exams will visit broker-dealer offices for cause. These examinations are likely to be generated by investor complaints, tips and referrals or requests from other regulators or law enforcement agencies for assistance. If the exam is likely to interfere with an office's operations, counsel should attempt to work out an arrangement in which the examination is performed so as to minimize the disruption.

If requested records are in storage or at another location, arrangements for prompt production should be made. Unless a decision is made to resist the investigative effort, a cooperative approach is advised. Counsel should be mindful that the reason for the examination may derive from a suspected and potentially serious violation. Exacerbating an adversarial relationship at such an early stage is not likely to be productive.

Investor Complaints--The administrator's office regularly requests records and information from broker-dealers pertaining to investor complaints.ⁿ³¹ Many complaints involve routine matters occasioned by back office delays or misunderstandings and are easily resolved. The first step in processing an investor complaint is an inquiry to the broker-dealer from the staff asking for an explanation in response to the complaint. More often than not, a response date is given. It is important to determine early on whether the response date can be met. If not, a request to the staff seeking more time should be made promptly. Most states will accommodate reasonable requests. Letting the staff know that the broker-dealer is anxious to cooperate cannot hurt and creates a good impression. Dilatory action may increase the problem and create unwarranted suspicions.

If, upon review by counsel or a firm's compliance officer, it appears that there is merit to the investor's complaint, an offer to resolve the matter is advised. Of course, satisfying the administrator's office may not necessarily end the matter with the complainant. While the administrator wants the law observed, the investor may want something more tangible.

A determination by the broker-dealer that the complaint has no merit, and so advising the administrator, may cause the agency to determine whether additional investigation is appropriate. If the staff believes serious misconduct occurred, a more formal investigation may commence. The investigation, in turn, could lead to the commencement of an administrative proceeding. The action may be brought only against the agent, or the broker-dealer may be included, either for substantive violations or perhaps a claim of failure to supervise.ⁿ³²

[b] Investment Advisers and Investment Adviser Representatives

Prior to NSMIA, investment advisers were subject to the registration requirements of both the SEC and those state jurisdictions that had provisions for investment adviser regulation. While there were de minimis exclusions or exemptions from state registration, the practitioner was required to review the specific statutory provisions for those states in which a client might seek to do investment adviser business.

NSMIA created a two-tiered system of investment adviser registration. Simply put, investment advisers with assets under management in excess of $25 million are subject to federal registration with the SEC. Investment advisers with less than $25 million under management are required to register in the state where they maintain their principal office. It is important to note, however, that NSMIA preserves for the states their ability to receive notice filings of all investment advisers doing business in their state and, not unimportantly, to continue to receive registration and renewal fees.

The practitioner must also be aware that associated persons of investment advisers may be required to obtain state registration if they maintain a physical presence in a particular jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that the investment adviser itself is a federal "covered" adviser, subject only to SEC registration. There is no exemption from the registration or licensing requirements for investment adviser representatives under state Blue Sky laws based on the federal registration of the investment adviser itself. As fully discussed in Chapter 11, an exclusion from licensing in a particular state may be available based upon the de minimis level of a representative's contacts or activities in the state, but such an exclusion is unrelated to the fact that the adviser itself may be registered only under federal law. Smaller SEC registered investment advisers and their representatives often fail to recognize the separate registration or licensing requirement for representatives in the mistaken belief that federal registration of the adviser supplants any need for state compliance beyond notice filings. The consequences of the error can be serious in terms not only of administrative enforcement action, but also private civil liability.ⁿ³³ Prior to embarking on a registration effort on behalf of an investment adviser, the practitioner is thus cautioned to conduct a careful review of any notification and/or registration requirements of applicable states, even if the adviser itself qualifies as an SEC registrant.

As Web-CRD has dramatically streamlined the registration and licensing process for broker-dealers and agents, implementation of IARD--the Investment Adviser Registration Depository--is having the same impact for investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. IARD mirrors the Web-CRD functions. However, an important practical distinction for investment advisers is that many states currently require manual submission, in hard copy, of at least Part II of Form ADV, which is the principal disclosure document utilized by many advisers to comply with disclosure or "brochure" requirements of both state and federal law. Part II is subject to the same updating and amendment requirements applicable to any registration filing. The content of Part II of Form ADV is always subject to scrutiny under antifraud provisions, and states have in large measure also adopted or embraced the federal prohibitions and requirements applicable to SEC registered investment advisers in or under their own regulations.ⁿ³⁴

[4] Enforcement

[a] The Enforcement Function--Generally

The handling of a state securities enforcement case varies somewhat in accordance with the procedures applicable to the administrator's office. Most states have a separate enforcement unit, usually headed by an attorney. Smaller offices may rely on support from the state attorney general's office or other personnel from a larger umbrella agency, of which the securities administrator's office may be a part. However the enforcement function is organized, considerable authority is conferred upon the enforcement staff. It is they who preliminarily determine whether a case should be brought, what allegations are to be made and the nature of relief to be sought. Likewise, counsel must negotiate with enforcement personnel throughout the case over matters such as discovery, subpoena issuance, stipulations and proposed settlements.

There are instances when a potential securities enforcement matter may first come to the attention of a registrant (issuer, broker-dealer or investment adviser) before it is uncovered by the state securities agency. Broker-dealers, for example, frequently uncover wrongdoings of their agents through the complaint of a customer who has not yet contacted a government or self-regulatory agency. The attorney advising the registrant must make some critical decisions at this point. First, is the event "material" within the context of Section 203(c) of the Uniform Act?³⁵ For issuers, the same question must be asked with respect to section 306(a)(2)(A). Precise guidelines are difficult here, but an administrator is not as likely to consider an isolated incident involving one agent as serious as a pattern of abusive or illegal practices occurring in a branch office or throughout the firm. Misappropriation of client assets or other sales practice misconduct by an agent might be viewed differently than a failure to follow a technical operational policy or procedure. For broker-dealers and investment advisers the reportable events categories on Forms U-4 and U-5 provide the most practical assessment of what type of "complaint" requires specialized attention, or action, in regard to reporting to regulatory agencies.

Counsel, at the early stage of the enforcement process, should always analyze the problem from the perspective of the administrator. State securities regulators view their statutes and rules as virtually sacrosanct and expect a higher standard of conduct from their registrants than may be found in regular business relationships. They strongly endorse the concept that the integrity of the nation's securities markets is based upon an ethical system that demands more than almost any other enterprise or profession.

While disclosing a potential enforcement problem to the administrator is no guarantee of absolution, it is bound to have some mitigating impact. For counsel representing a client who is likely to have a continuing relationship with the administrator's office, creating a reputation of integrity and candor for the long term may outweigh short term difficulties raised by initiating disclosure of an enforcement problem.

[b] The Investigative Process

The first stage in an enforcement case emanating from the administrator's office is likely to be a request for documents. Routine complaints may only generate a letter to the registrant enclosing the investor complaint and asking for a response by a certain date. If the staff has previously assembled material from other sources, such as a complaining investor, they may wish to speak to the registrant or others connected with the event.

Whatever the nature of the inquiry, a prompt reply is appropriate. If there is likely to be a delay in producing the sought after information, acknowledgement of the request should be sent asking for additional time, with an explanation as to the reason for delay. Section 407 of the Uniform Act gives the administrator broad authority to conduct investigations, and this power is a key part of all Blue Sky laws.³⁶ Since registrants are subject to sanctions for a willful failure to comply with the act,³⁷ it is unwise to try to impede an investigative effort. Pursuing such a course of action could conceivably generate an administrative enforcement case for that reason alone.

The recipient of an information request may not always be advised as to why the material is being sought. Naturally, counsel should try to determine the agency's interest in the matter. If this is not possible, other potential sources should be pursued. For example, an investigation may involve an agent who has since left the firm. Contact with the compliance personnel of the agent's current employer may prove fruitful. Indeed, the new employer may be unaware of the agent's potential regulatory difficulties.

When a client receives a subpoena from the administrator's office, counsel can comfortably assume that the enforcement staff regards the case seriously. The grant of subpoena authority is not taken lightly by most administrators and they will ordinarily be issued only for more important enforcement cases. Some administrators may, in fact, utilize an internal "probable cause" standard requiring staff to submit a motion or request justifying the issuance of a subpoena.

Subpoenas may seek documents, testimony or both. Unless compelling reasons exist to the contrary, such as a parallel criminal investigation or proceeding, counsel should offer to cooperate. Accommodations as to return dates for documents or taking of testimony can usually be reached with the staff. Since the subpoena authority is statutorily bestowed upon the administrator, the subpoena is likely to compel appearance before him or her. In practice, however, testimony will ordinarily be taken by the enforcement staff.

Subpoenas issued by the administrator may be very broad, often reflecting boilerplate previously used. Attempting to determine what the staff really wants and needs can help in narrowing the scope of the request. Negotiating to limit the amount of information initially subpoenaed can save a client considerable expense in producing records, many of which may not be necessary to the investigation. Counsel should be careful, however, in making clear to the enforcement staff that the objective is to expedite the request and avoid duplication and waste rather than delay or impede the investigation.

[c] The Adjudicative Process

The "adjudicative" process is determined by what type of enforcement proceeding is actually brought by an administrator. As discussed in more detail in Chapter 14, administrators usually have the option of proceeding within the agency itself or in civil injunctive proceedings. Criminal enforcement proceedings are always an option, but are subject to different process considerations and judicial procedures that are beyond the scope of this chapter. The easiest and most direct procedure to address violations is through an administrative procedure, typically focused on the issuance of temporary and final cease-and-desist orders, with other permitted ancillary remedies and money penalties. Civil injunctive actions are the less preferred enforcement proceedings under Blue Sky laws because they are far more cumbersome, time consuming and expensive. On the other hand, the extent to which administrators may seek and obtain meaningful remedies and penalties in the context of administrative proceedings varies considerably among the states, and in many situations the administrator may be compelled to proceed in the courts to assure a wider array of equitable and ancillary remedies such as receivers, conservators, and the like.

The investigative process leading up to an enforcement action will be largely the same whether the administrator proceeds within the agency or in a court action. The adjudicative process, however, will be much different.ⁿ³⁸ Practical considerations in the administrative context are discussed further below.

Once an order has issued from the securities administrator's office, the proceeding that follows will be governed by whatever adjudicatory rules are applicable within the jurisdiction. Some states may have rules applicable to all state administrative agency hearings, while others may have adjudicatory rules promulgated by the specific agency. The complexity of the adjudicatory rules varies state-to-state, as do the procedures employed during the hearing process. The rules may not always reflect the nature of the hearings ordinarily conducted by the agency. For example, some adjudicatory rules may contain little or no reference to discovery and motion practice. In reality, however, an agency may conduct hearings that allow for reasonable discovery and pre-hearing pleading. To determine the scope of a hearing, counsel should consider asking the hearing officer for a conference early on in the process. If held, a conference can help to acquaint counsel with the agency's hearing practice, set schedules for pleadings, simplify discovery and narrow the issues.

The initial pleading prepared by the enforcement staff will usually allege specific violations of the securities law, but not necessarily be replete with facts supporting the alleged violations. If the pleading does not contain sufficient facts, counsel should consider filing appropriate motions to compel greater specificity.

Because an enforcement case can easily turn into a protracted and expensive proceeding, particularly if counsel needs to create a thorough record in anticipation of a subsequent appeal, preliminary settlement efforts should be considered. The agency, too, has concerns about using limited resources to litigate a case and serious approaches to pre-hearing settlement will be considered. However, once the staff has committed time and energy to hearing preparation, one can expect they will be less inclined to settle.

Proposed settlements are generally submitted to the hearing officer (and perhaps the administrator if he is not the hearing officer) for acceptance and entry of a final order. In considering settlement, the reportability and disclosure implications of the final order should be taken into account. For issuers, the materiality of the order with respect to disclosure in subsequent securities offerings may be important. Similarly, an exemption from securities registration may be lost as a result of an enforcement order.ⁿ³⁹ Broker-dealers, agents and investment advisers may have to report the order to other regulatory authorities with whom they are registered.

If settlement is not reached and the case goes to a hearing, maintaining an adequate record in the event of an appeal is important. Determine in advance the manner in which the agency maintains the hearing record. Most jurisdictions do not have stenographic transcription available due to the expense. Instead, tape recordings are made. Since the quality of a tape recorded proceeding may not be very good and may be difficult to transcribe, counsel may prefer to provide a stenographer.

A review of a state securities agency's regulations and adjudicatory rules should reveal how the hearing officer is designated. Some jurisdictions have staff hired specifically for that task. Others utilize state-designated hearing officers to conduct administrative hearings. Still others employ independent hearing officers either on a contract or full time basis.

In many jurisdictions, the administrator or a senior staff member will serve as hearing officer in cases brought by the staff. Since maintaining the appearance of impartiality can be as important to due process as de facto impartiality, many states are careful to isolate the administrator from the specifics of an enforcement case. Accordingly, the administrator may know virtually nothing other than that the staff may be working on a particular case. While this procedure may enhance the prospect of a fair hearing, it can be a two-edged sword for the practitioner. For example, with the administrator isolated, except for the role as hearing officer, it may be difficult to complain about the staff's handling of the case. The only recourse may be through the formalities of the hearing process, i.e., the filing of motions and legal memoranda.

If counsel has reason to believe that the impartiality of the person hearing the case has been compromised, a motion to recuse may be appropriate.ⁿ⁴⁰ Consideration should also be given to requesting the appointment of an impartial hearing officer or seeking judicial relief. As noted above a number of states may designate, or be provided with, administrative law judges or hearing officers to hear the agency's cases. Counsel should find out how a given state provides adjudicators to the agency and whether the hearing officer is familiar with securities law.

A securities enforcement case is likely to be replete with documentary evidence, the introduction of which during the course of a hearing can be quite time consuming. Submitting stipulations with enforcement staff for the admission of documents and uncontested facts will expedite the hearing, perhaps clarify and narrow issues, simplify the record and save time and money.

At the conclusion of an adjudicatory hearing, consideration should be given to the submission of briefs and proposed findings of fact and rulings of law. The longer and more complicated the case, the more useful post-submissions can be to the hearing officer. If the subject is not raised by the hearing officer, counsel might suggest and request the opportunity to make such filings.

Some administrators make good use of the press in publicizing their office and the cases brought by the agency.ⁿ⁴¹ Since many work for elected officials, the opportunity for press coverage of an enforcement case is very tempting.ⁿ⁴² The ability of counsel to minimize adverse publicity will depend on the administrator's willingness to negotiate the contents of a press release. It is rare when the issuance of the release itself will be subject to negotiation. Nevertheless, it does no harm to try to control damage on behalf of the client. While it may be difficult to have any say in the language of the release, it might be possible to persuade the administrator to emphasize or include information favorable to the client: for example, reference to the fact that no customers were harmed by an infraction, or that the firm made whole all customers harmed by one of its agents.

The press is generally viewed as an ally by the administrator. Publicity about a specific securities fraud case or an endemic problem is probably the best method government can use to educate the public investor. Press coverage of the activities of the administrator's office also serves as a reminder to potential violators that they run the risk not only of being caught, but also being publicly exposed and embarrassed.

[d] Interagency Enforcement Coordination

A significant part of an administrator's job is developing and maintaining cooperation with other financial regulators and law enforcement agencies at the state and federal level. The growth of the financial marketplace, the loosening of interdisciplinary regulatory barriers in financial services, and increased public awareness of investments compel the administrator to look well beyond the confines of his or her own statute.

The importance of federal-state cooperation in securities regulation was recognized by Congress in the early 1980's when it promulgated Section 19(c) of the Securities Act of 1933.ⁿ⁴³ This new law stated that "there should be greater federal and state cooperation in securities matters, including (A) maximum effectiveness of regulation, (B) maximum uniformity in federal and state regulatory standards, (C) minimum interference with the business of capital formation." Today, section 608 of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act reflects a continuing commitment to federal and state cooperation by setting an express objective of uniformity among state, federal, self-regulatory organizations, and foreign governments. The 2002 Uniform Act further makes clear its underlying policy objectives:

(b) [Policies to consider.] In cooperating, coordinating, consulting, and sharing records and information under this section and in acting by rule, order, or waiver under this [Act], the administrator shall, in its discretion, take into consideration in carrying out the public interest the following general policies:

- (1) Maximizing effectiveness of regulation for the protection of investors;
- (2) Maximizing uniformity in federal and state regulatory standards; and
- (3) Minimizing burdens on the business of capital formation, without adversely affecting essentials of investor protection.ⁿ⁴⁴

Today multi-state and multi-agency task forces aimed at particular enforcement initiatives are increasingly common, with the states playing major roles in regard to such things as the widespread abuse associated with offers and sales of promissory notes, and the high-profile investigation into research practices of major broker-dealer and investment banking firms. NASAA is itself an Associate Member of IOSCO-the International Organization of Securities Commissions--and a key participant in evolution and development of investor protection measures and effective regulation across borders in global securities markets.

Investment scams, as well as traditional securities fraud, may bring the administrator into regular contact with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Postal Inspectors, the Department of Justice, and the Internal Revenue Service. There is also close cooperation between state agencies and the self-regulatory organizations, particularly the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA). Referrals of investor complaints are routinely made between state and FINRA district office staff. States with active broker-dealer office examination programs may also coordinate these exams with FINRA, which also examines FINRA member firms. There are relatively few broker-dealers registered or licensed in a state that are not also FINRA members firms.

Coordination with the Securities and Exchange Commission is accomplished through that agency's regional and district offices and Washington, D.C. Many state administrators participate in regular meetings with regional SEC officials to exchange information, refer complaints and coordinate investigations. Some enforcement cases may involve cooperation with the SEC Division of Enforcement. The passage of NSMIA, which gave the states exclusive regulatory authority over small investment advisers, provided the opportunity for the SEC's Division of Investment Management to work with a number of states to provide training in the area of investment adviser examinations. Periodically, the states and the SEC will conduct joint enforcement training conferences. These programs are well attended by state securities enforcement staff and assist in developing working relationships among state and federal regulators.

While the various securities exchanges have enforcement authority over their members, there does not appear to be much specific case coordination with state securities officials. However, as industry-wide issues arise from time to time, NASAA's leadership and relevant committees will exchange information and consult with their counterparts at the exchanges. Not surprisingly, the New York Stock Exchange is the most active in this regard.

At the state level, the administrator's office often works with state and local police and prosecutors. Having developed an enforcement case warranting criminal action, the administrator will seek a prosecution. The ability to interest a prosecutor in a securities fraud case varies from state to state and may depend on the prosecutor's resources. The lack of familiarity with securities matters may inhibit a prosecutor from taking a referral.

Securities administrators and staff are in constant communication with their colleagues in other states. While geographic proximity may result in frequent joint efforts by neighboring states, the mobility of securities law violators and the advent of the Internet transcends distance and hence, widespread investigations are not infrequent. It is now commonplace to have cooperative enforcement actions among several states, sometimes using the staff and financial resources of NASAA to coordinate the investigation in order to address pervasive securities fraud.

Web-CRD has also facilitated interstate communication. The states use their computer terminals to communicate with one another on a daily basis. Almost all states use the CRD to report enforcement actions they have taken, to elicit information and to survey other jurisdictions on particular practices or problems.

Administrators in those states with active securities registration programs regularly talk to one another and provide assistance in understanding and identifying troublesome issues which may be contained in a prospectus or offering memorandum. In response, in part, to industry complaints about lack of uniformity among the states in the standards applied to the review of securities offerings, the states, through NASAA, established the Coordinated Equity Review Program discussed earlier.ⁿ⁴⁵ The practitioner should be aware that inconsistent representations made to state securities examiners in different states are likely to surface eventually. When that occurs, the credibility of the attorney and law firm may be irreparably damaged.

[e] Judicial Review

As discussed earlier,ⁿ⁴⁶ the Uniform Act and all state securities laws provide for judicial review of administrative orders. Enforcement orders are most prominent among the orders taken to courts for review, and the subject is explored in more detail in Chapter 14--"Administration and Enforcement." Some, for example, provide for review by the administrator of decisions rendered by hearing officers, and permit the administrator specifically to affirm or reject the officer's determination, thus allowing a further opportunity in the process for advocacy. Administrators do not necessarily accord great deference to hearing officers who have no special expertise, and while fact findings are rarely disturbed, administrators with the authority to review such decisions are willing to exercise that authority to correct or modify legal and interpretive errors. States differ on the availability and procedure for internal administrative review as a prelude to judicial review, and thus as a matter of practice and procedure it is essential to evaluate, and to implement, all procedures for review within the agency itself prior to undertaking judicial review.

If the information contained in any document filed with the [Administrator] is or becomes inaccurate or incomplete in any material respect, the registrant shall promptly file a correcting amendment unless notification of the correction has been given under section 201(b).

(n36)Footnote 36. In Pennsylvania, for example, the breadth of investigative authority is illustrated by the provision that the administrator:

[M]ay, for a reasonable time not exceeding thirty days, take possession of the books, papers, accounts and other records, however created, produced or stored, pertaining to the business of any broker-dealer or investment adviser or pertaining to the activities of any issuer in connection with any transaction in a security, whether or not exempted under section 202 or 203 and the use of any proceeds therefrom, and place a keeper in exclusive charge of them in the place where they are usually kept... . 70 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1-510(ii).

(n37)Footnote 37. See Unif. Sec. Act § 204(a)(2)(B).

(n38)Footnote 38. Although beyond the scope of this chapter, practical considerations for the litigation process, whether an enforcement or private action, include the availability of such resources as the annotated Jury Instructions Under Securities Laws [©] published by the Enforcement Publications Committee of NASAA, and available on the NASAA web site (www.nasaa.org).

(n39)Footnote 39. For example, Most jurisdictions have adopted the Uniform Limited Offering Exemption (ULOE). Under the ULOE, what is commonly referred to as the "bad boy" provision bars use of the exemption for certain categories of persons found to be the subject of specified enforcement orders. Counsel should carefully review the ULOE of each jurisdiction in which a client, who is to be the subject of an enforcement order, anticipates doing business.

(n40)Footnote 40. Due process concerns are always present in state administrative enforcement proceedings. In Trust & Investment Advisers v. Hogsett, 43 F.3d 290 (7th Cir. 1994) , for example, plaintiff brought an action in federal court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief as well as money damages for the alleged violation of its procedural due process rights in an enforcement proceeding brought by the Indiana Securities Division. Among other things, plaintiff asserted that the Division had an "indirect pecuniary interest" in the adjudication of the case, and that conduct of the Commissioner evidenced that the Division had prejudged the outcome of the proceeding. The U.S. District Court abstained and dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the Seventh Circuit reversed and remanded the case for further findings on whether the Indiana Commissioner's institutional bias in the proceeding denied plaintiff a procedurally fair hearing in the state forum. The Seventh Circuit called for a realistic appraisal of the effect, if any, that the alleged bias on the part of the Division would have on the adjudicator's capacity for fair and impartial decision-making.

(n41)Footnote 41. In some states it is a matter of statutory authority. Pennsylvania, for example, provides specifically that as part of investigative authority the administrator:

[M]ay publish information concerning any violation of this act or any rule or order hereunder or concerning securities or practices in the sale thereof, which appear or tend to be unfair, inequitable or fraudulent, but only where it deems such publication to be in the public interest and for the protection of investors. 70 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1-510(iv).

(n42)Footnote 42. Note, however, that in Hogsett, above, one of the asserted constitutional infirmities in the state enforcement proceeding was the fact that the Commissioner had issued a public statement of her belief that the evidence in the case "established" liability. In remanding the case for further consideration, the Seventh Circuit concluded that an inquiry was necessary to determine whether the Commissioner had prejudged the outcome of the proceeding. The Court stated: "Depending on the degree of her involvement in the underlying investigation and the nature of her public statements about the case, it may be that Dant [the Commissioner] has prejudged this case." *Trust & Investment Advisers v. CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

§ 16.06 Resources for Practitioners

The primary resource in Blue Sky practice and procedure is the Internet. Today, every state securities administrative agency (as well as those for the territories of Guam and Puerto Rico) has an Internet web site providing direct access to statutes, rules and regulations, forms and, in many instances, available written interpretations, policy statements, no-action letters, administrative and enforcement orders. These web sites also typically include an agency directory, various investor education and fraud prevention materials, news releases, and access to newsletters or other materials published by the agency. Most web sites also provide a mechanism for submission of complaint to the agency on-line, and also have direct links to other web sites helpful to investors and practitioners. Through their web sites, administrators and staff may be contacted by e-mail.

Agency web sites have become a principal means of disseminating information to the investment and practitioner communities, although traditional hard copy media such as newsletters or periodic bulletins continue to be used, and remain available on a subscription basis. The Financial Regulators Gateway, sponsored by the Cybersecurities Law Institute of the University of Toledo College of Law¹ is a premiere site providing direct access to securities and other financial regulatory agencies throughout the United States and around the world. The web site accesses information on securities, futures, banking and insurance regulators, with links to the name, address, telephone and FAX numbers, e-mail and Internet web site addresses. Links to statutes and rules administered by the agency are also provided when available. The Financial Regulators Gateway is updated on a regular basis.

The North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) a highly visible and active organization of state securities regulators that is also an excellent resource in the administration of and practice under state Blue Sky laws. The expansion of NASAA's activities has involved almost all states in a variety of areas, and many staff members participate in committee work. State securities staff who serve on NASAA committees can often be a valuable resource for information as to the practices and policies of other jurisdictions. The NASAA web site itself² contains useful and important information concerning the administration of state Blue Sky laws, and in particular combined initiatives of states in enforcement and the areas. Like many state agency web sites, the NASAA web site also contains useful links to other financial regulators and useful Internet web sites.

With the goals of greater uniformity among the states and coordination with related federal regulation, state securities regulators are making greater use of information technology systems that may in the future produce a one-stop paperless filing of all state and federal forms. In Ohio, for example, the "OASIS" electronic securities filing system is available for investment company notice filings, with the goal in the future for the system to be used for all types of filings with the Division of Securities in a manner that will interface at the federal level with the Electronic Data Gathering Analysis and Retrieval System (EDGAR). Similar systems or initiatives are in place or underway in several other states, and administrative processes and procedures will be dramatically affected by these innovations as they are expanded into full-fledged electronic filing systems for the complete range of filings and reports required by Blue Sky laws.

Several states have also implemented or are developing electronic registration, exemption and notice databases to provide easy access to information concerning securities offered and sold in the state.

CHAPTER 16 Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

1-16 Blue Sky Regulation § 16.07

§ 16.07 Challenges in Blue Sky Practice and Procedure

Although significant progress has been made in bringing uniformity to state securities regulation, the principal challenge in Blue Sky practice and procedures remains the gaps in uniformity not only among state regulators, but also among the states, the federal government, self-regulatory organizations, and, to an increasing extent, foreign governments and regulatory agencies. Federal preemption under NSM IA has, for example, exposed the need for developing and maintaining a uniform exemption from Blue Sky registration for small issuers, and for other procedures designed to reduce the burden of raising investment capital by small businesses. Because state registration and securities qualification procedures today are limited to NSMIA non-covered securities, the process impacts almost exclusively on smaller local and regional financings. It is thus not surprising that the 2002 Uniform Securities Act expressly directs cooperation, coordination, consultation and sharing of records and information by administrators in order to accomplish, among other things:

- (1) Coordinating registrations and exemptions;
- (2) Formulating rules, statements of policy, guidelines, forms, and interpretive opinions and releases;
- (3) Formulating common systems and procedures;
- (4) Notifying the public of proposed rules, forms, statements of policy, and guidelines; and
- (5) Developing and maintaining a uniform exemption from registration for small issuers.ⁿ¹

These are some of the most significant practical challenges in Blue Sky practice and procedure affecting capital formation. There are others. In chapters 5 and 6 the merit review and non-merit review dichotomy among the states is discussed at length, and the differences in approach even among the merit review states, presents a continuing challenge. The absence of uniformity in "testing the waters" provisions and requirements, or the fact that some states make no such provision at all, is another factor directly affecting Blue Sky practice and the access to capital. All of these differences and many other individual state provisions, regulations, and forms that make for variations among even the Uniform Act states must be confronted, and managed.

It is also a simple truth that states historically have differed in degrees of "toughness" in the administration of Blue Sky laws. This has mostly affected the securities registration and qualification process, but it also impacts intermediary registration or licensing matters. As also discussed in chapters 5 and 6, the historical evolution of such differences is manifested today in formalized procedures by which some states defer to others in the merit review process on a regional basis. State by state, however, it is essential to learn and understand any differences in historical approach, and to undertake proactively to address them at the earliest stage. Fortunately, Blue Sky administrators and their staffs are more accessible than ever before, and they are willing to share insights and to offer guidance with a view to achieving mutual goals of investor protection and capital formation.

For intermediaries, while the mechanical process of registration and licensing has been dramatically simplified through implementation of Web-CRD and the IARD, every state applies fitness and qualification criteria independently. Testing requirements, for example, are not uniform. Most states require broker-dealers agents or representatives to pass the Uniform Securities Agent State Law examination (Series 63). However, certain others provide for acceptable alternatives. In the application of fitness criteria, or determinations of "good business repute," states are free to evaluate such things as prior disciplinary history or customer complaints and proceedings, subject only to hearing and deferential review procedures, in making licensing determinations. Because an adverse licensing in one state generally constitutes a reviewing, and in some cases disqualifying, criterion in other states, careful management of the application process is essential, with due regard for the importance of withdrawing an application if it appears from preliminary consultation and procedures that an adverse determination is more likely than not. The considerable mobility among investment intermediaries and their clients makes the subsequent or continuing licensing or registration process today more significant in many instances than the initial process, as administrators have multiple opportunities to review licensing and fitness criteria simply by virtue of renewal procedures as well as new applications in additional states by a currently licensed intermediary in another state.

State licensing or registration requirements are particularly significant for investment adviser representatives. Representatives of investment advisers who are subject only to notice filing requirements in the states by reason of registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission are, unless excluded by the limited nature of their activities, nevertheless fully subject to licensing or registration in the states in which they perform advisory activities. Although there is today considerable uniformity in the application of qualification, or "minimum competency" criteria for investment adviser representatives, administrators in this area as well have full authority in evaluating applicants under general fitness requirements, and have the same continuing opportunity to make determinations in the renewal or subsequent registration process as the business of an adviser or representative expands. Prior disciplinary history, for example, plays no lesser role in evaluating the fitness of an investment adviser representative for licensing or continued licensing than it does for broker-dealer agents or representatives.

All intermediaries must further understand that nothing in the dual system of federal and state regulation operating today after NSMIA alters the antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws and the authority of state administrators to act under them. High profile enforcement initiatives directed against intermediaries have shown the potency of this ultimate authority of state administrators to act in decidedly national market settings where the fundamental investor protection goals of Blue Sky laws are involved. Blue Sky practice and procedures will, going forward, be a part of national and indeed global capital and trading markets, with the emphasis heavily on regulation of the intermediaries who continue to have "main street" impact in making them work.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.01

§ 17.01 Introduction

The marketing of franchises and business opportunities to the general public has historically produced the same concerns for protection against fraudulent schemes and information failures that are the foundation for state Blue Sky laws. It is not surprising that through investment contract and "risk capital" analyses, state securities regulators took initiatives to apply Blue Sky law protections to the offer and sale of franchises and business opportunities that manifested the characteristics of investment risk that have defined the existence of a security under both state and federal securities laws.ⁿ¹ Investment contract and risk capital analyses have allowed the application of federal and state securities law protections, particularly antifraud provisions and remedies, to address selling abuses and information failures in situations in which ostensible business opportunities in reality masked passive investment schemes.

The proliferation of mass marketing of franchises or business opportunities ultimately led to widespread enactment of state laws specifically aimed at business franchises, several patterned after provisions of the original Federal Trade Commission Franchise Rule,ⁿ² to address unfair and deceptive practices or to set certain standards in the marketing of franchises and the relationships involved in them. Some of these state laws evolved directly out of state Blue Sky laws and are today administered as franchise "investment" laws under the same administrative authority as the state securities law. In California, for example, the California Franchise Investment Law,ⁿ³ is administered by the Department of Corporations under the same authority as is applicable to regulation of the offer and sale of securities and off-exchange commodities. State franchise investment laws in many ways parallel Blue Sky laws in terms of disclosure of information and protection against fraud, so much so that in 1993 the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) adopted specific Guidelines for a Uniform Franchise Offering Circular (UFOC). Several states adopted the UFOC Guidelines to directly regulate franchise offerings. Others have undertaken specific regulation of business opportunities, which involves a hybridized approach melding elements of securities regulation into a more targeted regulatory provision.ⁿ⁴

In 2007, after a twelve year regulatory review, the Federal Trade Commission adopted an amended Franchise Rule, together with a "Statement of Basis and Purpose and Regulatory Analysis."ⁿ⁵ The FTC 2007 Franchise Rule includes new requirements for franchisor disclosure documents. That rule is now the basis for updated NASAA Guidelines that substantially adopt the disclosure requirements of the FTC 2007 Franchise Rule as a successor to NASAA's previous UFOC Guidelines, and which include new instructions for filing a Uniform Franchise Registration Application in states.ⁿ⁶ The new FTC Franchise Rule and its incorporation into state regulation through the NASAA UFOC Guidelines is specifically discussed in more detail below.ⁿ⁷ It is clear, however, that fundamental concerns and objectives of Blue Sky regulation are generally present in regard to franchise or business opportunity offerings.

Although the emergence of specific state franchise or franchise "investment" laws has sharpened the focus of regulation and added a significant degree of predictability in the scope and application of regulation for those engaged in franchising, these laws have not supplanted state Blue Sky laws. Franchises and business opportunities may still be scrutinized under Blue Sky laws where they in fact create investment contracts or constitute securities under "risk capital" or any other analyses available under the definition of "security" that is a part of every state securities law.

This chapter examines the role of Blue Sky regulation in the areas of franchising and business opportunities. Although § 17.02 below discusses state regulation in the area generally, it is not intended to be an exposition of state franchise law. Rather, the essential point for practitioners is to understand both the interrelationship and the differences between targeted state regulation of franchise or business opportunity offerings and state securities regulation. As explained below, the critical consideration is the application of Blue Sky laws in these settings without regard to specific franchise or business opportunity laws, and to be aware of the elements of a "security" transaction as they continue to apply.

As a prelude to assessment of the role of state securities laws in the offer and sale of franchises or business opportunities it is also important to understand their application in the sale of a "business" generally. In that context the basic notion of investor protection that drives applications of Blue Sky laws today is best understood. Accordingly, in § 17.03 Blue Sky laws in the circumstances of a sale of a "business" generally are discussed, followed in § 17.04 by specific consideration of investment contract and risk capital approaches to the creation and offering of franchises and business opportunities.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The definition of "security" is thoroughly considered in Chapter 2, supra. The treatment of unconventional forms of securities under the broad notion of "investment contract" that is found in all federal and state definition provisions was spawned by the U.S. Supreme Court decision in SEC v. W.J. Howey Co., 320 U.S. 344, 64 S.Ct. 120, 88 L.Ed. 88 (1943), which became the benchmark for evaluation of many forms of business opportunities that in reality were passive investment programs that evoked concern for basic securities law protections. Howey and its "risk capital" state law progeny as applied specifically to franchises and business opportunities are discussed in more detail in § 17.03. infra.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.02

§ 17.02 State Regulation

As discussed throughout this treatise, the mission of state Blue Sky laws has always been to protect the public against "unsubstantial, unlawful and fraudulent stock and investment schemes."⁸ Myriad scams and schemes for separating people from their money have constantly mixed with legitimate undertakings in capital formation for the pursuit of worthy and desirable business ventures and the promotion of serious entrepreneurship. State and federal securities regulators have closely scrutinized "business" opportunities in which would-be entrepreneurs are lured to pay significant sums over to a promoter on the promise of high returns for little or no work. In chapter 2 many of the business schemes or programs that in reality create investment rather than entrepreneurial risk are examined under the catch-all categories of "investment contract" or "certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement" found in all statutory definitions of a "security" are examined. In carrying out the mission of Blue Sky laws, states have been especially cognizant of the difference between an entrepreneurial undertaking in which success or failure of an enterprise is a function of actual managerial control of the conduct of the business and what is, in contrast, a passive investment scheme in which the invested capital is subjected to risks over which the provider has no meaningful control. Indeed, the notion is written directly into some state Blue Sky laws. In the State of Washington, for example, the definition of "security" in the Blue Sky law specifically includes an:

[i]nvestment of money or other consideration in the risk capital of a venture with the expectation of some valuable benefit to the investor where the investor does not receive the right to exercise practical and actual control over the managerial decisions of the venture.⁹

This "risk capital" approach to defining the existence of a security is a mainstay along with investment contract analysis in state securities regulation.¹⁰

Franchises or business opportunities offered through mass marketing to the general public have in many instances demonstrated these characteristics that evoke concern for investor protection. As discussed below, although the greater focus today is on protection of purchasers through "Business Opportunity" laws, these schemes may still remain subject to Blue Sky protections under traditional investment contract and risk capital analysis when only a passive investment is evidenced. On the other hand, state courts were unwilling to extend securities law protections to franchise and business opportunity settings that involved some meaningful opportunity, or burden, upon the purchaser to be responsible in the operation of the business or enterprise and to devote time, energy and effort in making it a success. Thus, for example, in Burke v. State ¹¹ an Alabama appellate court reversed the criminal conviction of a defendant under the state Blue Sky law in connection with the offer and sale of satellite laboratory testing franchises in which it was claimed that the inexperienced purchaser/franchisees were dependent upon the managerial and technical expertise of the franchisor who would actually conduct testing. The court concluded that although responsibility and expertise in technical testing aspects of the business rested elsewhere, the franchisee was required to exercise effort in sales, marketing and operation of the collection station for tests to be submitted to the franchisor laboratory. While the operation of the business was dependent upon the ability of the franchisor laboratory to meet its obligations and essential functions, the success of the individual enterprise was a function of the marketing and selling initiatives of the franchisee.ⁿ¹²

Burke illustrates an evolving limitation in defining the scope of state securities law protections. Franchise and business opportunities may involve a clear community of interest between the franchisee/purchaser and the franchisor that is central to the success of the business, but the essential notion of risk capital or investment risk that is a function of the separation of the "investor" from the essential determinants of risk of the enterprise is missing. A dilemma follows, because the offer and sale of franchises and business opportunities often involved all other characteristics such as the absence of information, abusive selling practices and terms, and outright fraud that are addressed by securities laws. Thus today the state regulatory landscape includes a more targeted response to the potential for fraud and abuse in the franchise and business opportunity offering setting. The states' response with specific "franchise" or "franchise investment" laws recognizes that despite the community of interest that may be a central part of the relationship between a franchisee and franchisor, the concern for the type of protections afforded by securities laws are not substantially lessened.ⁿ¹³ State franchise or franchise-related laws thus extend the scope of protection through definitions such as in Minnesota, as follows:

"Franchise" means (1) a contract or agreement, either express or implied, whether oral or written, for a definite or indefinite period, between two or more persons:

(i) by which a franchisee is granted the right to engage in the business of offering or distributing goods or services using the franchisor's trade name, trademark, service mark, logotype, advertising, or other commercial symbol or related characteristics;

(ii) in which the franchisor and franchisee have a community of interest in the marketing of goods or services at wholesale, retail, by lease, agreement, or otherwise; and

(iii) for which the franchisee pays, directly or indirectly, a franchise fee.ⁿ¹⁴

"Community of interest" for purposes of applying state franchise protection laws is broadly defined. In Martin Investors, Inc. v. Vander Bie,ⁿ¹⁵ the Minnesota Supreme Court concluded that a contract entered into by a "consultant" with a company engaged in the sale of a computer service matching the needs of potential borrowers to potential lenders throughout the country was an unregistered franchise. Under the contract the consultant acted as an intermediary who sold the computer matching service to potential borrowers by gathering information and who, upon payment of a fee, submitted the information to the company for matching with lenders through the company's database. Holding that the contract between the intermediary and the company was a franchise, and thus affirming application of franchise law remedies, the Court concluded that there was a community of interest between the plaintiff and the company in the on-going relationship that was contemplated and from which each would share in fees from a common source. The computer databank was the common source of the service provided by the franchisor and franchisee. The fact that the franchisor company was entitled to receive only one per cent of the proceeds of any loan placed by the "consultant" did not defeat the community of interest, as no substantiality requirement is part of the statutory definition.ⁿ¹⁶

Some state level guidance in determining whether a particular arrangement constitutes a franchise is available, see, e.g., "When Does an Agreement Constitute a Franchise?," Cal. Dept. of Corporations Rel. No. 3-F (Revised) (June 22, 1994).

Although a majority of states have not adopted laws regulating franchising itself, several have adopted franchise registration and disclosure laws which in operation are not unlike Blue Sky laws applicable to the offer and sale of securities.ⁿ¹⁷ Other states have adopted legislation regulating aspects of the franchise relationship, including termination. Twenty-two states have adopted legislation regulating the offer and sale of a business opportunity and as discussed below these laws may also be applicable also to franchise agreements when there is no specific state franchise law. It should be noted that in addition to the above laws there is legislation in some states that is industry specific, such as that applicable to gasoline retail and distribution franchises. Where franchise laws exist, they have closed the regulatory gap by a registration and mandated disclosure process, by establishing antifraud protections, and by imposing civil and criminal liabilities. Registration or application procedures closely parallel state procedures under Blue Sky laws, and, absent exemption, involve the same kind of administrative review and authority.ⁿ¹⁸ State "business opportunity laws" evolved separately from earlier franchise laws, and more recently. Many states have enacted them to expand the scope of protection even more broadly in those areas in which Blue Sky laws would not be available.

"Business opportunity" is typically defined in state laws in accordance with the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) Model Business Opportunities Sales Act as:

[A] contract or agreement, between a seller and a purchaser, express or implied, orally or in writing, wherein it is agreed that the seller or a person recommended by the seller shall provide to the purchaser any product, equipment, supplies or services enabling the purchaser to start a business when the purchaser is required to make a payment to the seller or a person recommended by the seller of more than $500 and the seller represents directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that:

- (1) The seller or a person recommended by the seller will provide or assist the purchaser in finding locations for the use or operation of vending machines, racks, display cases or other similar devices, on premises neither owned nor leased by the purchaser or seller;
- (2) The seller or a person recommended by the seller will provide or assist the purchaser in finding outlets or accounts for the purchaser's products or services;
- (3) The seller or a person specified by the seller will purchase any or all products made, produced, fabricated, grown, bred or modified by the purchaser;
- (4) The seller guarantees that the purchaser will derive income from the business which exceeds the price paid to the seller;
- (5) The seller will refund all or part of the price paid to the seller, or repurchase any of the products, equipment or supplies provided by the seller or a person recommended by the seller, if the purchaser is dissatisfied with the business; or
- (6) The seller will provide a marketing plan, provided that this Law shall not apply to the sale of a marketing plan made in conjunction with the licensing of a federally registered trademark or federally registered service mark.ⁿ¹⁹

The offer and sale of "business opportunities" has most often involved the sale of seller assisted marketing plans associated with vending machines or work-at-home programs. Often the purchasers of seller assisted marketing plans are individuals who are inexperienced in business matters, and who use savings to purchase the plans in the hope of earning money in addition to retirement income or salary to become self-sufficient. Purchasers include the elderly who are seeking to supplement fixed incomes. Typical mechanics of a business opportunity involve purchasing equipment or products, often overpriced, in circumstances in which the purchaser has not received full and fair information regarding the seller assisted plan, the amount of money the purchaser could reasonably expect to earn, and the previous experience of the marketing plan seller.

Much the same as with franchises, state regulation of the offer and sale of business opportunities is aimed at providing prospective marketing plan purchasers with the information needed to make intelligent decisions regarding the seller assisted plans being offered. State laws thus require adequate disclosure, prohibit representations that tend to mislead, and prohibit or restrict unfair contract terms.

The central feature of state business opportunity laws is a mandated structured disclosure document. The disclosure document, clearly akin to a prospectus, must present various categories of information about the seller, people responsible for the seller's business activities, the business history of the seller and its financial condition. There must be a full and detailed description of the actual services that the business opportunity seller undertakes to perform for the purchaser. If representations are made concerning sales or earnings, or a range of sales or earnings that may be made through the business opportunity, information must also be included regarding the number of purchasers who have actually achieved such results relative to the total number of purchasers within three years prior to the date of the disclosure statement.ⁿ²⁰

State business opportunity laws also impose requirements for the contracts or agreements utilized in the programs. Requirements go to both content and form.ⁿ²¹ Contracts and agreements are a key part of the registration materials that are filed in connection with business opportunities, and there is overarching the process in many states the ultimate authority of the administrator to deny, suspend or revoke a registration on numerous grounds, not the least of which is a finding that the business opportunity or the offering of the business opportunity has worked or tended to work a fraud upon purchasers or would operate to work such a fraud.ⁿ²²

Administration of state business opportunity laws, as well as franchise laws, is often delegated to the securities administrator of the state, or to the cabinet level department in which securities regulation is also a part. Alternatively, some states assign administrative responsibility to the insurance regulatory authority, or to a consumer protection division of the state Attorney General's office. The common thread of regulatory mission and mechanics as between state securities regulation and regulation of the offer and sale of franchises or business opportunities is apparent. However, unlike the restrictions now imposed on merit regulatory authority of state securities administrators in the wake of NSMIA, state regulatory authority in regard to franchises and business opportunities is largely unfettered, and where registration requirements are imposed, state administrators approach them in much the same fashion as traditional Blue Sky law review of securities offerings.

In many states enforcement powers under state business opportunity laws also parallel those available under Blue Sky laws. Upon a determination that a person has engaged, is engaging, or is about to engage in any act or practice constituting a violation of the law (or any rule or order issued under it) administrators may summarily issue cease and desist orders, or orders requiring other affirmative remedial action. Administrators have public and private investigative authority, and may also pursue injunctive actions in which ancillary relief such as the appointment of a receiver or conservator is specifically available.ⁿ²³

Private remedies under business opportunity laws are equally meaningful and, again, in most instances track the remedies available to purchasers of securities in transactions violating Blue Sky laws. Rescission of contracts or agreements is available, as well as actual damages, plus interest and attorneys fees. Controlling person liability is often imposed, and some statutes permit a direct action against the surety of a seller's bond to recover up to the amount of the bond.ⁿ²⁴

The advent of state franchise and business opportunity sales laws has shifted attention away from application of Blue Sky laws in those settings. The offer and sale of franchises and business opportunities are significantly regulated, and in a manner much akin to securities regulation.ⁿ²⁵ However, Blue Sky laws continue to play a role in the area. First, the sale of a "business" that may be excluded from coverage of business opportunity laws may nevertheless be subject to state securities laws simply because it is effectuated with a sale of stock. Secondly, franchise and business opportunity laws operate to expand protections available to purchasers. They do not exclude coverage of Blue Sky laws where an application of "investment contract" or "risk capital" analysis independently dictates the presence of a security and the need for securities law protections. Each of these points is considered further in § 17.05.

In Brown, the franchise agreement provided that the only way for the franchisee to realize profits was to sell services. There was no right to participate in profits or losses outside of sales by the franchisee and, as a result, no investment contract was created for purposes of applying protections of the Georgia Blue Sky law.

(n6)Footnote 13. As part of the California Franchise Investment Law, the legislature included this specific statement of the need for regulation:

The Legislature hereby finds and declares that the widespread sale of franchises is a relatively new form of business which has created numerous problems both from an investment and a business point of view in the State of California. Prior to the enactment of this division, the sale of franchises was regulated only to the limited extent to which the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 applied to such transactions. California franchisees have suffered substantial losses where the franchisor or his representative has not provided full and complete information regarding the franchisor-franchisee relationship, the details of the contract between franchisor and franchisee, and the prior business experience of the franchisor.

It is the intent of this law to provide each prospective franchisee with the information necessary to make an intelligent decision regarding franchises being offered. Further, it is the intent of this law to prohibit the sale of franchises where such sale would lead to fraud or a likelihood that the franchisor's promises would not be fulfilled, and to protect the franchisor by providing a better understanding of the relationship between the franchisor and franchisee with regard to their business relationship. Cal. Corp. Code § 31001.

As defined in the NASAA Model Franchise Investment Act, "Franchise" means:

(i) an oral or written agreement, either express or implied, which:

(A) grants the right to distribute goods or services under a marketing plan prescribed or suggested in substantial part by the franchisor;

(B) requires payment of a franchise fee to a franchisor or its affiliate; and

(C) allows the franchise business to be substantially associated with a trademark, service mark, trade name, logotype, advertising or other commercial symbol of or designating the franchisor or its affiliate;
or

(ii) a master franchise

Business opportunity laws exclude certain transactions from the definition. For example, the sale of an on-going business is excluded when the owner of that business sells and intends to sell only that one business opportunity. Employment relationships are also excluded, as are memberships in bona fide cooperative associations. Additionally, offers and sales of a business opportunity by certain large, well-capitalized sellers that are publicly traded companies reporting companies under the federal securities laws are excluded, see, e.g., Georgia: Code Ga. § 10-1-410(2)(B).

The NASAA Model Rule, which forms the basis for many state business opportunity laws, is specifically discussed in § 17.03[3], infra.

(n13)Footnote 20. See, e.g., Florida: Fla. Stat. § 559.803.

Making such representations may also trigger bonding or security requirements. In Florida, for example, if the business opportunity seller makes any representation amounting to a guarantee that the purchaser will derive income from the business opportunity which exceeds the price paid or rent charged for the opportunity, or that the purchaser may secure a refund if not satisfied, the seller must have a surety bond, or have established a certificate of deposit or guaranteed letter of credit in the amount of at least $50,000. See Fla. Stat. § 559.807.

(n14)Footnote 21. In Iowa, for example, the required elements of a contract or agreement in connection with the offer and sale of a business opportunity must be set out in at least ten point type or equivalent size, see Iowa Code § 523B.2.9.

(n16)Footnote 23. See, e.g., Iowa: Iowa Code § 523B.8. The most broadly stated powers of the administrator are a part of those business opportunity laws derived from the Model Business Opportunity Sales Act, the provisions of which are expressly based on the Uniform Securities Act.

(n17)Footnote 24. The Indiana Business Opportunity Transactions Law creates a right to void the contract and to receive back all consideration paid to the seller within one year of the date of the contract if the seller engages in any fraud or deception, fails to deliver goods or services necessary to begin operation of the business, or violates the contract form and content requirements. Ind. Code, tit. 24, ch. 8 § 16. Indiana further provides:

Notwithstanding any other section of this chapter, a person who is damaged by a seller's failure to comply with this chapter or by a seller's breach of a contract may:

- (1) bring an action for recovery of his actual damages including attorney fees; and
- (2) bring an action against the bond required by section 3 of this chapter; to recover an amount equal to his actual damages. However, the liability of the seller under this section may not exceed the amount of the bond. Ind. Code, tit. 24, ch.8 § 17.

(n18)Footnote 25. Franchise investment laws are modeled directly on securities laws, and it follows that securities law principles are applied in the assessment of their scope and authority. In Courtney v. Waring, 191 Cal. App.3d, 237 Cal. Rptr. 233, 1987 Cal. App. LEXIS (Cal. App. 1987), for example, the court noted that the California Franchise Investment Law was modeled on the Federal Securities Act of 1933, and looked to federal precedent addressing the scope of "offer and sale" of a security under that Act to determine whether a franchise had been offered and sold in violation of the Franchise Investment Law.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.03

§ 17.03 The 2007 Federal Franchise Rule and NASAA Guidelines

[1] The FTC 2007 Franchise Rule

The FTC 2007 Franchise Rule,ⁿ²⁶ which became effective July 1, 2007, amended the Commission's Rule entitled "Disclosure Requirements and Prohibitions Concerning Franchising and Business Opportunity Ventures. The principal focus of the FTC 2007 Franchise Rule is on disclosure. Based on an extensive regulatory analysis the Commission concluded that misunderstandings about franchise relationships are prevalent, and that more disclosure is warranted to ensure that prospective franchisees are not deceived about the quality of the franchise relationship before they commit to buying a franchise. The original FTC Rule was also aimed at preventing deceptive and unfair practices through pre-sale disclosure of material information necessary to make an informed purchasing decision, and also to prohibit certain misrepresentations. The 2007 Rule expands pre-sale disclosures to address franchise relationship issues more effectively.

Another important goal of the FTC 2007 Rule was to reduce inconsistencies between federal and state pre-sale disclosure requirements. As discussed in § 17.03[2] below, the North American Securities Administrators Association (NASAA) had developed a standard disclosure document the Uniform Franchise Offering Circular ("UFOC") as part of Guidelines adopted in 1993. After NASAA adopted the UFOC Guidelines fifteen states required franchisors to follow the UFOC to comply with state franchise laws. The FTC, as a matter of its own policy, permitted franchisors to comply with the former FTC Rule by furnishing prospective franchisees with a UFOC, including in states that had not adopted the NASAA Guidelines. Use of the UFOC became widespread, and in its regulatory analysis ahead of adopting the 2007 Rule the Commission noted that the UFOC was in fact used by the vast majority of franchisors to comply with the federal rule, and that the UFOC had become a de facto national franchise industry standard.ⁿ²⁷ The new FTC Rule was designed to closely track the NASAA UFOC Guidelines, although it omits or streamlines certain UFOC disclosure requirements that the Commission believed to be unnecessary or overly burdensome. The FTC Rule also retained certain elements of the original Franchise Rule that are not contained in the UFOC Guidelines.

Key elements of the FTC 2007 Rule are the obligation to furnish a disclosure document and the content of the disclosure document. As an over-arching consideration, the disclosure requirements of the new Rule apply only to franchises to be located within the United States or its territories. Franchisors are obligated to furnish prospective franchisees with disclosure documents no later than 14 calendar days before the execution of a franchise agreement or the payment of any fee in connection with the franchise sale.ⁿ²⁸ The new rule specifies what actions constitute furnishing required documents, including the use of electronic media.ⁿ²⁹

The Rule provides specifically what substantive disclosures and attachments franchisors must include in their disclosure documents.ⁿ³⁰ Various items detailed for disclosure include:

- The franchisor and any parents, predecessors and affiliates
- Business experience of the franchisor's directors, trustee, general partnerships and certain executives
- Certain pending and prior litigation, injunctive or restrictive orders
- Prior bankruptcies, including any parent's bankruptcy
- Initial fees
- Other fees
- Estimated initial investment
- Restrictions on sources of products and services
- Franchisee obligations
- Financing
- Franchisor's assistance, advertising, systems and training
- Territory and sales restrictions
- Trademarks, patents, copyrights and proprietary information
- Renewal, termination, transfer and dispute resolution
- Involvement of public figures
- Financial performance representations
- Outlets and franchisee information
- All relevant contracts

The FTC Rule also requires that franchisors disclose three years of audited financial statements prepared in accordance with GAAP, and newly incorporates the UFOC requirement that financial disclosures be in tabular form that compares at least two fiscal years.ⁿ³¹ There is, however an audited financial statement "phase in" period for start-up franchise systems. There are updating requirements applicable to several of these disclosure subjects.

The FTC 2007 Rule also identifies nine prohibited acts and practices. They include four contained in the original Rule. Those are: (1) making statements that contradict the franchisor's disclosures; (2) making financial performance representations without a reasonable basis and written substantiation of the representation at the time the representation is made; (3) failing to make available written substantiation for any financial performance representations; and (4) failing to make promised refunds. Added to those in 2007 are two new prohibitions relating to furnishing disclosures. The first now prohibits franchise sellers from failing to furnish a copy of the basic disclosure document to prospective franchisees early in the sales process upon reasonable request.ⁿ³² The second addition prohibits franchise sellers from failing to furnish a prospective franchisee who has already received the basic disclosure document with a copy of any updated disclosure document or quarterly update to an existing disclosure document upon reasonable request before the prospective franchisee signs a franchise agreement.ⁿ³³

The Rule also adds two new antifraud provisions designed to preserve the integrity of the disclosure document and franchise agreement. The first prohibits franchise sellers from materially altering the terms and conditions of any franchise agreement presented to a prospective franchisee for signing, unless the seller informs the prospective franchisee of the changes at least seven days before execution of the agreement.ⁿ³⁴ The second prohibits sellers from disclaiming or requiring a franchisee to waive reliance on any representation made in a disclosure document or its exhibits or attachments.ⁿ³⁵ Finally, the 2007 Rule adds a new "anti-shill" prohibition designed to prevent the use of paid testimonials or shill references. The rule prohibits franchise sellers from misrepresenting that any person has purchased or operated a similar franchise from the franchisor, or that any person can provide an independent and reliable report about the franchise or the experiences of any current or former franchisees.ⁿ³⁶

The original FTC Franchise Rule separated the offer and sale of "business opportunities" from the franchise provisions.ⁿ³⁷ The FTC 2007 Rule continues to do so, but makes the separation more precise by including a new definition of "business opportunity" that eliminates all references to franchises. Now, under section 437.2(a) of the 2007 Rule, a "business opportunity" is a commercial relationship created by any arrangement that involves the sale of goods, commodities or services supplied by another person with whom the purchaser is either required to do business or where the third person is affiliated with the seller, and the seller secures outlets, locations, sites for vending machines, rack displays or other product displays. The definition also applies in circumstances in which the seller provides to the purchaser the services of a person able to secure retail outlets, accounts, sites or locations, and the purchaser is obligated to make a payment or commitment to pay the seller or a person affiliated with the seller.ⁿ³⁸ The disclosure requirements and prohibitions of the original Business Opportunity Rule all remain the same.

[2] NASAA UFOC Guidelines

The NASAA Uniform Franchise Offering Circular Guidelines were adopted in April 1993 as a disclosure format for use in states requiring franchise registration statements. These states mandate that franchise registration application include a disclosure document. After adoption of the NASAA Guidelines some 15 states required franchisors to follow the UFOC format, and most franchisors elected to prepare their disclosure documents in conformity the UFOC whether or not specifically required to do so in any state. As noted above, the UFOC became the de facto national standard for franchise disclosure documents. Following adoption of the FTC 2007 Franchise Rule, NASAA revisited its UFOC Guidelines with a view to harmonizing them with the new federal rule. In fact, NASAA adopted the disclosure requirements of the FTC 2007 Franchise Rule as a successor to the UFOC Guidelines. It did not, however, adopt an actual replacement for the UFOC Guidelines, and until such time as a replacement is adopted, NASAA issued "Instructions for Filing a Uniform Franchise Registration Application" for use after July 1, 2007.ⁿ³⁹

The NASAA UFOC Guidelines have been supplemented with the adoption of the disclosure requirements of the FTC 2007 Rule, which closely track the UFOC Guidelines that were already in place. However, the FTC 2007 Rule is not identical to the UFOC Guidelines. The FTC Rule is narrower, for example, in not requiring cover page risk factors, disclosures pertaining to brokers, or detailed disclosures to franchisees' computer equipment requirements. Also, the FTC Rule permits a phase-in of audited financial statements in franchise start-up situations. The FTC Rule further addressed a problem identified with the UFOC Guidelines in regard to disclosure of franchise statistics, which the FTC concluded resulted in inflated turnover rates. On the other hand, the new FTC Rule is broader than the UFOC Guidelines in certain respects. The FTC Rule requires greater disclosure of information concerning such things as (1) franchisor-initiated litigation against franchisees; (2) protected territories; (3) the use of confidentiality clauses; and (4) trademark-specific franchisee associations.ⁿ⁴⁰

NASAA has adopted the FTC 2007 Rule disclosure requirements with certain additional requirements that arise out of these differences. Most notably, the NASAA requirement for a state risk factor cover page to the disclosure document is retained. The state cover page must, in capital letters, disclose risk factors to the extent applicable. These are (1) That the franchise agreement includes a mandatory dispute resolution provision that may require out-of-state proceedings, which may affect costs and force a less favorable settlement; (2) Any other risk factor that is required by a state administrator as, for example, a choice of law provision that could alter protections available under local law; and (3) If one or more risk factors applies, a further statement that there may be other risks concerning the franchise.ⁿ⁴¹ Another additional requirement not contained in the FTC 2007 Rule is that which, if applicable under particular state law, requires a franchisor to provide the disclosure document earlier than the 14 days now provided in the FTC Rule, provided the franchisor adds a statement to the receipt page of the disclosure document to accurately reflect state law requirements to deliver the disclosure document.ⁿ⁴²

Consistent with its adoption of the FTC 2007 Franchise Rule disclosure requirements, NASAA has recommended that all states requiring registration statements or applications regarding franchises permit franchisors to file in those states using disclosure documents prepared in accordance with the FTC 2007 Rule in accordance with the NASAA Instructions. The NASAA UFOC Guidelines will remain available for use until July 1, 2008. Franchisors should note that compliance with the UFOC Guidelines involves more than using the prescribed Uniform Franchise Disclosure Document. Franchisors must continue to file application documents as prescribed by the NASAA Instructions, and which include:

- A Uniform Franchise Registration Application Page;
- Supplemental information page(s);
- A Certification Page;
- A Sales Agent Disclosure Form;
- An authorizing Resolution, as applicable;
- The UFOC;
- An Application Fee;
- Auditor's Consent; and
- Advertising and Promotional Materials (if required in the state).

[3] The NASAA Model Business Opportunities Sales Act

NASAA has specifically addressed state regulation of "business opportunities" through the Model Business Opportunities Sales Act adopted in 1984, and which serves as the basis for a number of state business opportunity laws.ⁿ⁴³ There are several exclusions from the definition of "business opportunity" in the Act as, for example, the exclusion for the sale of an on-going business operated by the seller and to be sold in its entirety.ⁿ⁴⁴ Unless excluded, but subject to certain exemptions,ⁿ⁴⁵ the Model Act requires registration of business opportunities and imposes disclosure requirements. Registration is made using the Uniform Franchise Offering Circular (UFOC) or other disclosure document prepared in accordance with federal or state requirements. Under the Model Act registration may be denied on various grounds including the that the offering would work or tend to work a fraud upon purchasers.

Other criteria for denial of registration (or suspension or revocation of an effective registration) parallel those in Blue Sky laws applicable to securities registration. However, there are no applicable NASAA "guidelines" as such applicable to business opportunity offerings. If no stop order is issued or proceeding is commenced, a business opportunity registration automatically becomes effective ten business days after a complete filing.

The Disclosure requirements of the NASAA Model Rule prescribe the format and content of a mandated written disclosure document that must be used in the offering. The Model Act also includes requirements for providing the contract or agreement, as well as certain format requirements and required provisions.ⁿ⁴⁶ There are minimum net worth and bond requirements applicable to sellers. The Model Act contains a general antifraud provision and prescribes administrative and civil remedies, as well as criminal penalties for violations of it and other provisions of the Act. In one form or another, twenty-two states have adopted legislation regulating the offer and sale of business opportunities, and the NASAA Model Rule provides a common frame of reference.

Part 437 of the 2007 Rule also adds a new exemption to the business opportunity regulatory provisions for business arrangements that comply with the Franchise Rule, or are exempt from compliance with the Franchise Rule, see § 437.2(3)(v). The change was designed to eliminate potential overlap and duplicative compliance burdens between the Franchise Rule and the Business Opportunity Rule as, for example, businesses exempt from the Franchise Rule pursuant to the "fractional franchise" exemption.

Franchise registration statements, which generally include substantial financial information regarding the franchisor are subject to review by the designated administrator and a determination, among other things, that the franchisor has the financial ability to fulfill its obligations to franchisees. Coordinated review for multi-state registration of franchise offerings under "CR-FRAN," a protocol established by NASAA. CR-FRAN is available to a franchisor filing an initial application to register its offering in two or more states. To be eligible for CR-FRAN, the franchisor's registration application must include audited financial statements.

In adopting the 2007 "Instructions" NASAA highlighted these differences as well:

The FTC's 2007 Franchise Rule adopts disclosure requirements that closely track the UFOC Guidelines. In some instances, however, the 2007 Franchise Rule omits or streamlines UFOC Guideline disclosure requirements, such as broker disclosures, cover page risk factors, and detailed computer requirements. In addition, the 2007 Franchise Rule incorporates new disclosure requirements not found in the UFOC Guidelines, including disclosures related to a franchisor's parent, franchisor initiated litigation, confidentiality clauses and the existence of trademark-specific franchisee associations. The 2007 Franchise Rule also substantially revised the UFOC Guideline disclosure of statistical information on franchisees and outlets (Item 20), adopting the approach suggested by NASAA in its comment to the FTC's Notice of Proposed Rulemaking. CCH NASAA Reports P 3947, at 2184 (July 2007).

(n17)Footnote 42. Id., Instruction III C.

(n18)Footnote 43. "Business Opportunity" under the NASAA Model Act means a contract or agreement between a seller and purchaser, whether express or implied, orally or in writing, in which it is agreed that the seller or a person recommended by the seller will provide to the purchaser any products, equipment, supplies or services enabling the purchaser to start a business, and where the seller represents that:

- (a) The seller or a person recommended by the seller will provide or assist the purchaser in finding locations for the use or operation of vending machines, racks, display cases or other similar devices, on premises neither owned nor leased by the purchaser or seller;
- (b) The seller or a person recommended by the seller will provide or assist the purchaser in finding outlets or accounts for the purchaser's products or services;
- (c) The seller or a person specified by the seller will purchase any or all products made, produced, fabricated, grown, bred or modified by the purchaser;
- (d) The seller guarantees that the purchaser will derive income from the business which exceeds the price paid to the seller;
- (e) The seller will refund all or part of the price paid to the seller, or repurchase any of the products, equipment or supplies provided by the seller or a person recommended by the seller, if the purchaser is dissatisfied with the business; or
- (f) The seller will provide a marketing plan. CCH NASAA Reports P 4202, at 3101.

The NASAA Model Act does not apply when the business opportunity involved meets the definition of a "franchise" as set out in the Act, provided the seller meets specific disclosure and contract delivery requirements. State regulation of offers and sales of business opportunities generally, including states with laws derived from the NASAA Model Rule, is discussed in § 17.02, supra.

NASAA has separately adopted the Model Franchise Act, CCH NASAA Reports P 4303, at 3145 (Aug. 30, 1990). The Model Franchise Act requires franchisors to provide a disclosure document containing the detailed information indicated above. In addition it requires state administrative agencies to review and approve the disclosed information and other information prior to all franchise offerings (n19)Footnote 44. Other exclusions include the sale of a business opportunity to an on-going business where the seller is to provide products, equipment, supplies or services sold by the purchaser in connection with the purchaser's on-going business, or the sale of a business opportunity which is registered (or exempt from registration) under the state's franchise law or registered under the securities law. Offers and sales of a business opportunity which involves a marketing plan made in conjunction with the licensing of a federally registered trademark or federally registered service mark are excluded provided the seller meets certain net worth requirements.

(n20)Footnote 45. See Model Act § 200.

Exemptions from the registration and disclosure requirements are provided, for example, for the offer and sale of a business opportunity for which an immediate cash payment of at least $25,000 is required, and that cash payment does not exceed 20% of the purchaser's liquid net worth. Another exemption applies when there is only a de minimis payment required. There are other exemptions based upon the seller's net worth, the purchaser's net worth, and the type of purchaser.

(n21)Footnote 46. The type of information that must be disclosed under state Business Opportunity laws generally is discussed in more detail in § 17.05[2], infra.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.04

§ 17.04 The Sale of a "Business"

The definition of "business opportunity" contained in the NASAA Model Act and all state business opportunity laws makes clear that the focus of intended protection is on marketing-induced expectations and the meaningful, if not essential, involvement of the seller of the business opportunity in supplying and/or supporting it. In this sense, the sale of franchises or business opportunities is different from the pure sale of an established business. Thus, as noted earlier, state business opportunity laws exclude certain transactions from the definition. The sale of an on-going business is typically excluded when the owner of a business sells and intends to sell only that one business opportunity. The sale of all or substantially all of the assets of an on-going business is also generally excluded.ⁿ⁴⁷

Business opportunity laws are clearly aimed at the widespread marketing of seller assisted programs for start-up business ventures, and not the conveyance of ownership of an on-going enterprise. It is important to understand, however, that although a transaction involving the sale of an entire "business" is normally outside the ambit of franchise and business opportunity laws, it may nevertheless be subject to Blue Sky laws if accomplished by means of a sale of the corporate stock of the acquired company.

Applying the literal, or "plain meaning" reading of the definition of security that was articulated by the United States Supreme Court in the companion cases of Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth ⁿ⁴⁸ and Gould v. Ruefenacht ⁿ⁴⁹ under the federal securities laws, "stock" possessing all of the traditional characteristics or attributes of corporate stock is a security regardless of the transaction context in which it is involved. Most state courts have embraced Landreth and Gould as providing guidance in the application of Blue Sky laws to transactions involving the sale of a business. If stock involved in the transaction is "traditional" stock, i.e., it bears the characteristics usually associated with corporate stock, a purchaser justifiably may assume that securities law protections will apply. Following the federal lead, a majority of state courts thus rejected the "sale of business" doctrine under which Blue Sky law protections were denied to purchasers of all or substantially all of a corporation's stock to acquire control of the business.ⁿ⁵⁰ The most immediate and meaningful consequence was the availability of Blue Sky antifraud provisions and private remedies in negotiated, private acquisition transactions.

Businesses are bought and sold, many as a result of intermediary activities and initiatives, in varied structural settings and in all sizes of transactions. Where accomplished by a transaction in corporate stock, the sale of a business may be subject to state securities law protections simply because the instrument of the transaction is a security. This type of offer or sale of a "business" is quite different from the mass marketing of franchises and seller assisted business opportunities more commonly discussed in regard to business opportunity sales laws. However, the sale of a "business" accomplished by a sale of traditional corporate stock falls within the scope of Blue Sky law remedies unless specifically exempt, excluded or otherwise determined not to involve a security.ⁿ⁵¹

In section 17.05 below the basis upon which Blue Sky laws may yet be applied to the offer and franchises and business opportunities using investment contact and "risk capital" analysis is explored. One must be cognizant, however, of the fact that without regard to either analysis the offer and sale of a "business" may fall within the protective cover of state Blue Sky laws simply by reason of the instrument involved and the legitimate expectations for securities law protection it engenders.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 47. States may address the meaning of "ongoing business" for purposes of this exclusion. In South Carolina for example, a business is not considered an on-going business unless it has filed income tax returns with the state for at least one year. Code S.C. § 39-57-20(4).

(n4)Footnote 50. The treatment of traditional corporate stock as a security, and the manner in which state courts have either embraced or rejected the notion that Blue Sky law protections should be available in business acquisitions is discussed in much greater detail in Chapter 2-Definition of Security--supra, and specifically § 2.02 therein.

(n5)Footnote 51. As discussed in Chapter 2, some state courts have applied a joint venture or partnership gloss to "corporate" relationships, and have held that corporate stock in a transaction, regardless of its characteristics, is insignificant in relation to the direct contributions to the success of the enterprise by the persons who combine resources in the shared creation and operation of an enterprise. These courts refuse to extend the protection of the antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws to the sale of corporate stock on a transaction that in reality involves only the creation of a partnership in corporate form.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.05

§ 17.05 Application of Blue Sky Laws to Franchising and Business Opportunities

In the context of franchises and business opportunities it is essential to identify the characteristics of a transaction and a set of relationships that differentiate "investment" transactions within the coverage of Blue Sky laws from straightforward commercial transactions involving the conveyance of property or the right to undertake an enterprise. This is, of course, the essential inquiry involved in determining the existence of any unconventional form of security using "investment contract" or "risk capital" analysis.ⁿ⁵² It is explored in depth in Chapter 2. However, in this specific context it is necessary more closely to examine subtle aspects of risk that bear directly on the determination whether Blue Sky protection will be available in the offer and sale of franchises or business opportunities.

The importance of isolating the essential element of risk is well illustrated by Rzepka v. Michael,ⁿ⁵³ in which a Michigan appellate court found no requisite element of "investment" risk for purposes of applying either the Blue Sky or Franchise Investment laws to transactions involving the sale of accounts receivable at a discount. In Rzepka an employment agency advertised high profit investment opportunities available from the purchase of its fee accounts receivable from clients at a discount. Purchasers entered into agreements with the agency under which they paid two thirds of the face value of the receivables in exchange for post dated checks of the agency in the face amount of the receivable plus an agreement by the agency to collect the receivables. By the arrangement the financially troubled employment agency was able to establish a six month payment program by which clients financed their fees. When the agency ceased operations and the receivables went uncollected, the purchaser sued for violations of the Michigan Franchise Investment Law and the Michigan Uniform Securities Law. Franchise claims were based on another aspect of the business relationship between the parties whereby the same persons who operated the employment agency also offered a "purchase option" by which purchasers were granted a first option to buy certain consumer discount books for resale in an assigned territory. Both claims were rejected.

In support of their securities law claims the plaintiff purchasers alleged that the receivables financing arrangement amounted to a security. Purchasers claimed that they provided capital to an enterprise, and were subjected to the risk of the enterprise failing. The court disagreed, and made a fundamental statement about the nature of risk that is essential to the presence of a security:

[T]he agreements at issue clearly set forth that plaintiff purchased, and Personnel sold, accounts receivable, with recourse, at a discount. Plaintiff received the accounts receivable in exchange for his capital. Regardless of what might happen to Personnel, plaintiff had a right to the proceeds of the receivables. The plaintiff did not subject his capital to the risks of the enterprise. Rather, plaintiff subjected his capital to the risks that the receivables listed in the agreements, or others of equal value, would not eventually be paid.ⁿ⁵⁴

Further assessing the arrangements under "investment contract" principles, the court observed that the purchase of the receivables was more of an investment in those accounts rather than in a common enterprise with the agency.

As to the second aspect of the relationship between the parties, claims under the Michigan Franchise Investment Law were rejected on the conclusion that the "purchase option" conveyed to plaintiffs for resale of the coupon books did not amount to a franchise. The arrangement did not amount to a "marketing plan or system prescribed in substantial part by a franchisor" within the ambit of the statute, and, moreover, nothing about the "purchase option" addressed any right to use the seller's trademark, service mark, trade name, logo, advertising or other commercial symbol that designated by the seller, and the "fee" paid by plaintiff was not paid in exchange for the right to enter into a business under a franchise agreement.ⁿ⁵⁵

In this unified analysis of securities and franchise law principles the Michigan court well illustrated the baseline factor that today determines whether Blue Sky regulation and protections will apply in franchise and business opportunity settings, namely, the nature and determinants of risk to which capital or value given up is subjected. To be sure, this is not a new proposition. It is a part of all inquiries into the definition of a security and the identification of one present in any set of circumstances. But where franchises and business opportunities are the focal points, as a practical matter today it is in fact the only determinant. This is easily seen below in further consideration of the investment contract and risk capital "tests" that have been relied upon, either separately or together, to establish the scope of Blue Sky law protections in this setting.

[1] Investment Contract and Risk Capital Analysis

In Chapter 2 the application of both "investment contract" and "risk capital" tests in determining the existence of a security under state Blue Sky laws is considered at length. The risk capital test is the more flexible approach, and evolved almost entirely from state court analyses in the franchise, business opportunity or "membership" settings. The risk capital test, which some states have expressly incorporated into their statutory definitions of "security," ⁿ⁵⁶ involves four specific elements: (1) an investment of money or value; (2) in the risk capital of a venture; (3) with the expectation of some benefit; (4) where the investor has no direct control in the venture. Investment contract analysis, on the other hand, rests on the fact that profits from an enterprise will derive from the seller's or some third party's entrepreneurial or managerial efforts. Where a purchaser is required to make some significant effort toward the success of the operation in such a fashion as to retain meaningful control over realization of an expected return, the requisite separation of the purchaser from the determinants of return is missing. Both risk capital and investment contract tests focus on the extent to which a purchaser has control over success of the enterprise, but the risk capital approach places lesser emphasis on the extent of control of the enterprise itself and more on the fact that the capital invested by the purchaser is essential to financing the seller's enterprise, on which the purchaser is then dependent to a meaningful degree.

Analyzed under securities law principles, there are three forms of franchises and business opportunities to be considered:

- (1) The purchaser of the franchise or business opportunity participates only nominally in the enterprise, and receives or expects to receive profits;
- (2) The purchaser or franchisee is an active participant and, in return for his or her investment, receives goods and/or services from the franchisor/seller. In this situation the purchaser or franchisee must rely only on his or her own efforts for a return on the investment. The consideration paid for the franchise or business opportunity is for the privilege of selling goods or services under the franchise name; and

(3) The circumstances are the same as (2) above, except that a substantial portion of the consideration paid by the franchisee/purchaser is to be used by the seller as capital without which the seller/franchisor could not supply goods or services, or otherwise meet obligations to the purchaser/franchisee.

These three settings form the basis of the discussion below, which explores the basis and extent to which Blue Sky laws afford investor protection in the offer and sale of franchises or business opportunities.

True franchises, which involve conveyance of the right to engage in a particular business enterprise with varying degrees of support and supply as well as intellectual property of the franchisor generally do not meet the investment contract test for the existence of a security because of the focus on the extent to which the franchisee is involved in the operation of the business.ⁿ⁵⁷ On the other hand, franchises in name only have been deemed to be investment contracts where the franchisee is in fact required to rely upon the franchisor or the efforts of others to generate profits.ⁿ⁵⁸

As between investment contract and risk capital analysis applied to franchises, the Oklahoma Securities Commission findings and conclusions in In re Barter Systems, Inc. ⁿ⁵⁹ are instructive. Barter Systems involved the offer and sale of franchise agreements under which the purchaser/franchisees were entitled to own a "barter trade exchange" in which participants could purchase, sell or exchange merchandise or services for "trade units" instead of money. The franchisor operated a nationwide network of the trade exchanges. The franchisor provided a training program designed to teach the concepts of barter trade to trade exchange franchisees and their respective employees. It also provided continuing consulting services and on-site training; a nationwide computerized trading network linking all of the franchised trade exchanges; a national marketing system to coordinate large-value trades; and a method of acquiring bulk quantities of imported and domestic products at bargain prices. Fees paid by franchisees obligated the franchisor to provide a computer terminal and access to the necessary software program, initial training as described above, advertising materials and a number of other resources. Franchisees were permitted to sell memberships and issue trade units. At the same time, the franchisor derived the vast majority of its income from the sale of franchises.

The Oklahoma Securities Commission concluded that the franchise agreements were securities under the risk capital definition provision contained in the Oklahoma Securities Act. Although the Commission found that it was not certain that a franchisee's initial risk capital, i.e., the franchise fees, was needed as the initial capital of the franchisor, it pointed out that in risk capital analysis attention is paid to continuing risk capital as well. The Commission embraced this observation of an Idaho appellate court:

[A] test which is restricted to the obtaining of initial capital only, is not a satisfactory test if the objective of the Securities Act to protect the investing public from unscrupulous promoters is to be served. Therefore, the term "Risk Capital" should not be construed to apply exclusively to "initial capital." The term should also apply to schemes to raise capital for existing but unproven business as well as schemes to raise initial capital.ⁿ⁶⁰

Following this analysis the Oklahoma Securities Commission opined that despite the fact that a franchisor has sufficient capital to furnish goods and services and to meet other obligations without the use of the capital invested by the franchisee, a security is still present if the franchisor would fail but for the continuing payment of money by franchisees from the sale of franchises. If the franchisor must use continuing invested capital to pay for the goods and services it is obligated to provide, or to repay debts incurred in meeting its obligations under the franchise agreements, then the franchisee's expectation of future success through the use of name and affiliation with the franchisor would have no meaning apart from the success of the entire franchise operation and the continued ability of the franchisor to meet its obligations.

Barter Systems illustrates the willingness of state securities regulators to probe more deeply into the notion of "risk capital" as needed to effectuate the protective goals of Blue Sky laws. An equal willingness has been shown in attempts to avoid application of risk capital analysis to franchise programs that do not involve entirely "passive" investments. A franchisee who acquires the right to offer and sell a product or service in an exclusive territory may be entirely in control of her business. However, if the subject of the franchise is dependent on continuing research and development effort of the franchisor, the value of the franchise is tied directly to the franchisor in a manner not at all unlike the fundamental notion first employed by the U.S. Supreme Court to find a security for purposes of the federal securities laws in SEC. V. C.M. Joiner Leasing Corp. n61 Thus, if a valuable benefit will accrue to a franchisee from successful research and development or other factors in the control of the franchisor that are critical to serial production of a product, for n62 example, n63 the fact that a franchisee maintains control over the ultimate sale or distribution is not so meaningful. This is particularly true if in exchange for payment of franchise fees the franchisee receives no ownership interest in research or development, or in design, patents or other intellectual property associated with the product or service.

Blue Sky enforcement initiatives today are much more likely to focus on "business opportunities" than franchises, as most franchises are today effectively regulated under specific state franchise laws. Still, what is offered as a franchise "investment" opportunity or program will in all likelihood be scrutinized under both sets of applicable laws and regulations. n64 More commonly today, however, the focus of Blue Sky laws is directed at the offer and sale of more generically defined business opportunities for which investment contract and risk capital analysis remain meaningful.

Although governing principles for application of investment contract or risk capital analysis remain the same, the Arizona enforcement action in In re Hotel Connect LLC's 100-1100 n65 typifies the setting in which cases more commonly arise. In Hotel Connect the respondents offered and sold "business opportunities" consisting of the sale of wireless cash ticket machines n66 together with service agreements. Purchasers were to receive monthly payments resulting from a share of the profits generated from the operation of their equipment. They exercised no managerial or entrepreneurial duties in connection with their purchase, and never saw the equipment they bought. Their profits were dependent upon the services provided by the service company. The Arizona Securities Commission found that the equipment and agreements constituted securities and were offered by means of false or misleading representations and other acts in violation of antifraud provisions of the Arizona Securities Law. Restitution and other administrative penalties were ordered.

"Business opportunities" like those offered in Hotel Connect, or pay telephone n67 and other similar programs that are marketed as involving no work and high returns, are in most instances simply new forms of investment contracts in the mold first articulated under federal law in SEC v. W.J. Howey & Co. n68 that has brought myriad schemes and programs within the ambit of securities law protections. These programs involve some outright conveyance of a property interest coupled with a service or other agreement to which any expected return on the purchase or acquisition is practically tied.

In other situations, business-related "memberships" may be offered which carry or convey the right to some valuable expected benefit that rests within the control of another. The Idaho Securities Division has, for example, opined that physicians' memberships in a limited liability company formed for the purpose of performing various services for its members, including billing, collections and marketing programs, are securities using either investment contract or risk capital analysis. In Eastern Idaho Physicians Organization P.L.L.C. n69 the Division made clear again administrators will broadly define the elements of a security transaction in order to effectuate Blue Sky law protections. In this instance the Idaho Division addressed the meaning of "expectation of profit:"

The primary attraction for physician members seems to be increased efficiency from the group health care approach, reduced costs from having billings conducted by another group, and increased new business from the joint marketing anticipated by EIPO. Each of these, if realized, will increase the profitability of the members. Thus, with the payment of a $1,500 initial fee, and annual dues, members can expect to be able to reduce staff, increase efficiency and quality, and benefit from additional patients.

In our opinion, these qualify as expectations of profit. It does not matter that the profit will show up in increased revenue rather than increased value of the ownership interest.ⁿ⁷⁰ Outcome-oriented expectations are most commonly the product of marketing initiatives, and it is not surprising that state securities regulators focus more consistently on business opportunities offered indiscriminately to large audiences. The Internet makes such widespread solicitations simple and cost-effective, and the economic incentives to offer and sell opportunities are substantial. Enforcement actions relating to the offer and sale of customer-owned coin operated telephones with related service agreements, for example, have shown that seller commissions of 10% to 12% are common.ⁿ⁷¹ Most often such opportunities are marketed with emphasis on "investment" and the passive role of the purchaser.

The application of investment contract and risk capital analyses to franchises and business opportunities will always require a fact intensive inquiry. Realities of the situation will control determinations whether there is truly a passive "investment" in which there is a need for Blue Sky law protections and remedies rather than a genuine business undertaking in which the efforts of the purchaser are a meaningful determinant of success. It is safe to say that a typical business franchisee is not presumed to be a passive investor. To be sure, history has demonstrated that true franchisees face the risk of information failure and outright fraud in connection with entering into franchise agreements and undertaking a business enterprise in reliance on the ability of franchisors to satisfy legitimate expectations and meet contractual obligations. Nevertheless, investor protection under state Blue Sky laws turns on the fundamental notion that the purchaser of a "security" is positioned differently than a traditional franchisee in regard to the ability to control the enterprise and thus directly manage the risk. Concerns for investor protection may still arise in what is otherwise a traditional franchise setting if it is clear that a franchisee is supplying the risk capital for a venture the success of which depends on factors separate and apart from any efforts of the franchisee. The inquiry as applied more generally to the offer and sale of business opportunities is the same.

To find that a franchise or business opportunity constitutes a security is to subject the offer and sale to the full range of Blue Sky registration, disclosure and intermediary licensing requirements. Aspects of the Blue Sky regulatory process particularly impacting franchise and business opportunity offerings are summarized below.

[2] Registration, Disclosure and Intermediary Issues

Blue Sky laws uniformly prohibit the sale of non-NSMIA covered securities in any state that are not exempt from registration requirements, or that are not the subject of an exempt transaction unless the issuer complies with one of the available forms of registration. Compliance with registration requirements, and indeed compliance with requirements involved with most transactional exemptions that would most likely be utilized to carry out a limited offering of franchises or business opportunities deemed to be securities, entails significant disclosure obligations through the use of a prospectus or other form of offering circular or memorandum.

Blue Sky laws and rules or regulations adopted under them do not address specific disclosure requirements applicable to the offer and sale of franchises or business opportunities. However, with the emergence of parallel business opportunity disclosure laws in many states, ample guidance is available regarding the type of information that must be a part of any such offering. At a minimum these categories include:

(1) Seller Information. In addition to all basic identifying information, including information regarding all trademarks and service marks associated with the products, equipment, supplies or services to be offered, the business experience of the seller's current directors, executive officers, general partners, general managers and any other persons charged with responsibility for the seller's business activities is essential. Background information for any these people who have been convicted of certain types of crimes, or who have been held liable in civil actions for fraud or for violating any state securities, franchise or business opportunity law must be included, as well as information concerning prior bankruptcies or insolvency proceedings. The business experience of the seller itself is required, including specific information regarding the length of time in which the seller has conducted the type of business involved, and the extent to which it has offered any other business opportunity or line of business. Very specific information concerning the seller's history with the specific franchise or business opportunity being offered is required, including such things as:

- The number of specific business opportunities being operated within a set historical period;
- The number of such business opportunities that were voluntarily terminated or not renewed by purchasers within a set historical period;
- The number of the business opportunities that the seller reacquired by purchase or otherwise, or that were cancelled or terminated by the seller during a set historical period, including general information concerning the reasons for reacquisitions, terminations, failures to renew and the numbers falling within certain categories.

Information concerning the seller also includes financial disclosures, such as the amount of revenue or consideration to be received by the seller or its affiliates from suppliers to purchasers in consideration for goods or services which the seller requires or advises the purchaser to obtain.

(2) The Business Opportunity. A complete factual description of the franchise or business opportunity must include a full and detailed description of the actual services or equipment that the seller undertakes to perform or supply to the purchaser, and the actual services which the purchaser undertakes to perform, including all that is required to comply with procedures established by the seller regarding the operation of the business. Disclosures in this area must also include material facts concerning any limitations on the goods or services that a purchaser may offer in the operation of the business, or on the customers to whom those goods or services may be sold. There must be clear disclosure of geographical or territorial limits, and the extent to which a purchaser is granted territorial protection and to what extent the seller may establish other franchises or business opportunities within a defined territory. A complete description of the franchise or business opportunity must also include a description of all real estate, services, supplies, products, inventories, signs, fixtures or equipment relating to establishing and operating the business.

Disclosure regarding the business opportunity must also include a full and accurate presentation of the total funds which the seller requires to be paid to start the business, and any recurring funds in connection with carrying on the business that the purchaser is required to pay to any person for any reason, including royalties, leases, advertising, training, signage, equipment or inventory purchases. Risk factors must also be disclosed. Specific risk factors which make the business opportunity one of high risk or of a speculative nature are particularly important, and may include even more information about the seller, its financial position, and its executives.

(3) The Agreement. Disclosure regarding the agreement to be entered into by a prospective purchaser/franchisee must fully and accurately describe:

- The term or duration of the agreement and whether and to what extent the term could be affected by any agreement other than the one in which the term is specified;
- The conditions under which the purchaser may renew or extend the agreement;
- The conditions under which the seller may refuse to renew or extend the agreement;
- The conditions under which the purchaser or seller may terminate the agreement;

- The obligations of the purchaser after termination of the agreement before or after the expiration of the term;
- The conditions under which the seller may repurchase and the terms on which any repurchase may occur;
- The ability of the purchaser to sell or assign all or any part of the business or the assets of the business, and on what terms;
- The conditions under which the seller may sell or assign any of its interest or obligations; and
- The provisions of any covenant not to compete that is associated with the business.

Disclosure must also be clearly made regarding the extent to which the seller requires or it is necessary that a purchaser must participate personally in the direct operation of the business.

(4) Promises or Representations of the Seller Associated With the Business Opportunity. Particular disclosure requirements associated with promises or statements made by a seller/franchisor that are critical in the assessment of the business opportunity being offered include, for example, if the seller offers an initial training program or informs prospective purchasers that it intends to provide such training: (a) the type and nature of such training; (b) the minimum amount of training that will be provided; and (c) the costs, if any, to be paid by the purchaser for such training. If the seller makes statements regarding estimated or projected business opportunity sales or earnings, full disclosure mandates including an explanation of all bases and assumptions underlying the estimate or projection and any supportive data. Also, statements concerning sales or earnings or a range of sales or earnings that may be achieved through the business opportunity must be accompanied by further disclosures regarding the number of other purchasers actually achieving such results in relation to the total number of purchasers during a set historical period.

If the seller promises specific services related to site selection or business opportunity outlets, particular information to be disclosed includes not only the full nature of those services, but also information concerning the seller's performance including, for example, disclosure of the range of time elapsed between signing an agreement and the commencement of a purchaser's business. As a general matter, where any start-up or initial services are to be provided by the seller, disclosure of time ranges with respect to each service in relation to actual start-up of the business is important.

Blue Sky law compliance would also entail the inclusion of various cautionary statements in regard to particular representations made by a seller as, for example, to make clear that there are no assurances that any purchaser will achieve projected sales or earnings, and that a purchaser must accept the risk of not achieving such results. Whether undertaken as a matter of Blue Sky disclosure compliance or under a state franchise or business opportunity law, this kind of structured disclosure enables a purchaser/investor to make an informed choice in the context in which there is a dependent relationship, to some meaningful degree, between the seller and purchaser/investors. The degree of dependence and the actual role to be played by a purchaser/investor in the operation of the business will ultimately depend whether the application of investment contract or risk capital principles will define the relationship as one involving the offer and sale of a security. As a practical matter, with the widespread adoption of state laws specifically governing the offer and sale franchises and business opportunities, there is, from both seller and purchaser/investor perspectives, little difference in the operation of the two sets of laws and compliance in either area. They are administered and enforced in the same manner, often by the same administrative agency, require registration, provide similar antifraud protections, and allow similar private remedies.ⁿ⁷²

State franchise and business opportunity laws do not involve any licensing requirement for intermediaries. Although for purposes of these laws "seller" is typically defined to include any agent or representative of a person engaged in the business of selling or offering business opportunities, there is no requirement that any agent or representative be qualified by registration or licensing. For intermediaries, the application of state Blue Sky laws to the offering and sale of franchises or business opportunities is thus more significant, and it is not surprising that enforcement actions by state securities administrators focus not only on the offer and sale of unregistered securities by an issuer, but also the fact that intermediaries in the process are unregistered dealers, agents or salespersons.ⁿ⁷³ Also, private remedies under Blue Sky laws generally allow for recovery from a broad class of persons who aid or materially participate in a transaction that violates the statute in addition to the actual seller of the security. Thus, the range of potential liability for intermediaries is broader under Blue Sky laws than would otherwise be the case if only "seller" liability is the focal point under a franchise or business opportunity statute.

The creation of investment partnerships or entities for the purpose of acquiring a franchise adds a further dimension to consideration of the scope of liability under Blue Sky laws. A limited partnership, for example, formed through the efforts of a sub-franchisor or intermediary, to purchase a franchise would in most instances be deemed to be a security, subjecting the intermediaries involved to the full scope of enforcement and civil remedies under Blue Sky laws. The focal point, however, is not the offer or sale of the franchise. Rather, it is the separate creation of the investment partnership, and the offer and sale of interests in it that triggers the application of Blue Sky laws. Thus, in Wade v. Skippers, Inc. ⁿ⁷⁴ a federal court of appeals applying the State of Washington securities law held that a restaurant franchisor would not be liable to purchasers of interests in a limited partnership formed by others for the purpose of acquiring interests in seven restaurant franchises. To be sure, the Blue Sky law applied to the offer and sale of the limited partnership interests, but the court held that purchasers were not entitled to assert claims under it against the restaurant franchisor whose conduct was not a substantial factor in bringing about the sales of limited partnership interests. The court concluded that there was no evidence that the franchisor had any personal contact with investors or had any involvement in the solicitation of investors in the partnership.

A franchisor or business opportunity seller may well become sufficiently involved in the creation of investment partnerships or other entities formed for the purpose of acquiring a franchise or business opportunity in circumstances in which it is in fact the promoter of the investment vehicle. The focus in these circumstances is also on the investment vehicle rather than the particular franchise or business opportunity. However, the intertwining relationship between a franchisor and the promotion or establishment of an intermediary investment entity may bring the entire program within Blue Sky law coverage, and subject all persons involved in the creation and sale of the program to liability coextensive with the persons involved directly in the creation of the investment vehicle itself.

(n1)Footnote 52. This type of inquiry may also be used in determining whether a particular relationship or transaction amounts to a franchise, or a marketing plan or system, for purposes of applying either franchise or business opportunity laws. As discussed in §17.02 above, franchise and business opportunity laws do not require the formality of an express written agreement to trigger protections under these laws. Much the same as in securities cases based on the allegation that an unconventional form of security is involved, plaintiffs may claim the creation of a "franchise" or "business opportunity" in order to invoke statutory protections. In these circumstances courts must determine whether statutory elements such as "community of interest" are in fact present, so as to convert what is otherwise a contract or quasi-contractual commercial right or transaction into a franchise or business opportunity that is subject to state regulation.

CHAPTER 17 Franchising and Business Opportunities

2-17 Blue Sky Regulation § 17.06

§ 17.06 Practical Considerations

The determination that a security is created in any arrangement or set of circumstances using investment contract or risk capital principles is based on the conclusion that there is a need for the special protection afforded by Blue Sky laws. The offer and sale of franchises and business opportunities is today substantially regulated at the state level outside securities laws, in a manner that affords the same kinds of protections that would be available under Blue Sky laws. Indeed, as discussed earlier in this chapter, state franchise "investment" laws, and many business opportunity sales laws, are derived from the NASAA Model Franchise Investment Act⁷⁵ or the NASAA Model Business Opportunities Act, that is specifically discussed earlier in § 17.03.

Franchisors and established promoters of legitimate business opportunity plans or programs are subjected to compliance with specific state laws and, for the most part need not be concerned about possible application of state securities laws.⁷⁶ As a practical matter, franchises and business opportunities that involve real roles and responsibilities of purchasers in the activities critical to success of a business enterprise will not create a security unless the purchaser is in fact committing risk capital to finance necessary start-up and continuing support by the seller of the franchise or business opportunity. Franchise and business opportunity sales laws otherwise provide the desired protection for prospective and actual purchasers.

The continuing role of state securities laws in regard to franchises and business opportunities is shown, however, when franchises in name only are offered, and business opportunities are merely passive arrangements involving an inducement to reap large rewards for little or no work. In these circumstances the investment characteristics of the arrangement, and the investment risk are paramount. These are not traditional franchises, and such business opportunities do not contemplate the active and substantial participation of the purchaser. State securities administrators have shown no hesitation to apply risk capital analysis in the broadest manner to extend the reach of Blue Sky law protections to investors, however they be labeled, who are in fact financing the enterprise of promoters and who are dependent on the success of the promoter to realize the success of any business opportunity or franchise undertaken. Blue Sky laws will be applicable to the offer and sale of such opportunities when it is shown that the overall success of plan or program is as much if not more dependent on the stream of payments by purchasers to the promoter or franchisor as any efforts undertaken by the purchaser in the direct pursuit of the business.

In these circumstances, applying investment contract or risk capital principles the threshold assessment of whether a security is created must always be undertaken. If the arrangement is such that a security is in fact created, the full range of transactional exemptions from registration requirements under Blue Sky laws is nevertheless available, and ample guidance on the extent and substance of necessary or appropriate disclosure for reliance on such exemptions is also available. The critical concern is that the assessment be made in the first place. The inquiry is well-suited for consideration through no-action letters or interpretive opinions available in most states.

CHAPTER 18 Blue Sky Regulation Of Municipal Securities

2-18 Blue Sky Regulation § 18.01

§ 18.01 Introduction

Broadly defined, municipal securities are debt securities--bonds and notes--issued by states, cities, and counties or their agencies to help finance public projects. Distributions of municipal securities involve underwriting, selling through dealers, and, in many cases, secondary market trading upon completion of a distribution. In the distribution process they are distinguished from other securities that are offered and sold to investors primarily by the credit worthiness and particular characteristics associated with the governmental or agency issuer involved. To a significant degree, municipal securities are exempt from registration requirements of federal and state securities laws. Additionally, many are today "covered securities" under the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 ("NSMIA"), and regulation under state Blue Sky laws is thus federally preempted except to the extent permitted by NSMIA. In this chapter the extent to which municipal securities remain subject to Blue Sky requirements is explored.

The municipal securities market in the United States is substantial. The Flow of Funds Section of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System estimated that at year-end 2000 there were approximately $ 1.6 trillion in principal amount of municipal securities outstanding.ⁿ¹ According to a joint report by the SEC Office of Economic Analysis and SEC Office of Municipal Securities, other estimates through the same period are as high as $ 2.0 trillion in principal amount of securities outstanding, involving 1.1 million different municipal securities from about 51,000 issuers.ⁿ² The SEC Report also noted that unlike the U.S. Government and many corporate issues, most municipal securities offerings contain securities with a number of different maturity dates. An offering might include a number of serial bonds maturing annually for a period of years, or several large term bonds with sinking fund requirements. Corporate issuers generally have relatively few types of equity or debt securities and a relatively low number of offerings. Issuers of municipal securities, on the other hand commonly have many offerings, each with a number of different securities.ⁿ³

The types of municipal securities are broadly characterized in terms of whether they are fixed or variable rate securities. Fixed rate municipal securities include fixed coupon securities that pay a specified interest rate over the life of the security. They also include zero coupon bonds, which do not pay any interest to holders until maturity. With these securities interest is accrued and compounded until the maturity date, at which time the principal and interest both become due. Most municipal securities are fixed rate, or "fixed coupon," securities. Variable rate securities comprise a small part of the market. They pay an interest rate which changes periodically. The rate may be linked to an index, or it may be reset periodically by the issuer or a third party. Variable rate municipal securities offerings may include the right to "put" the securities back to the issuer at a set price, usually the par value. Different characteristics among different types of municipal securities determine whether they are taxable or "tax exempt" securities, meaning that income is either includable in or excludable from gross income of the purchaser for federal income tax purposes.

The types of municipal securities are also characterized in terms of "general obligation" bonds, "revenue" bonds, and "conduit" bonds. "General obligation" bonds are those secured by the credit and general taxing power of the issuer. Repayment of a general obligation bond comes from all revenues of the issuer. "Revenue" bonds relate to a particular public project, and are paid out of revenues from that project. "Conduit" bonds are industrial development bonds or commercial enterprise bonds that are issued to finance a particular project used in a business enterprise by a private entity. Payment of interest and principal on conduit bonds is tied to the credit of the private entity and the success of the enterprise.

All state Blue Sky laws contain a general exemption from registration and qualification requirements for securities issued by a U.S. federal or state governmental or public authority. Section 402(a) (1) of the original Uniform Securities Act is representative of these provisions in its exemption for:

[A]ny security (including a revenue obligation) issued or guaranteed by the United States, any state, any political subdivision of a state, or any agency or corporate or other instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing; or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing.ⁿ⁴

A significant number of states, however, exclude from the general exemption industrial revenue bonds, industrial development bonds, or commercial enterprise bonds the interest on which is solely payable from revenues received from a non-governmental industrial or commercial enterprise.ⁿ⁵ The general exemption for municipal securities is premised on the credit worthiness of the governmental or public agency issuer that is backed by taxing authority. With industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds, however, there is no degree of protection afforded by the public issuer's credit worthiness. Unless some provision for an unconditional guarantee by a qualifying person or entity is made, the need for investor protection afforded under Blue Sky laws is no different than with any offering of debt securities by any other issuer.

Where applicable, requirements for municipal securities offerings under Blue Sky laws can be substantial. Municipal securities disclosure requirements vary significantly. States requiring registration of municipal securities offerings also impose strict requirements for the use and content of an "official statement" -- the functional equivalent of a prospectus--that communicates information with which to evaluate default risk, and which is subject to review and approval by state administrators. Other states may impose official statement requirements depending on the type of municipal security involved, distinguishing, for example, between a revenue or general obligation bond, and the type of issuer involved. States that exempt all municipal securities issues from registration requirements do not impose any official statement or other disclosure requirements.

With the enactment of NSMIA in 1996, state regulatory authority over municipal securities was significantly impacted by making securities that are exempt from federal registration under section 3(a)(2) of the federal Securities Act of 1933 into "covered securities" for purposes of NSMIA preemption, except to the extent that the otherwise covered security is offered and sold in the state in which the issuer is located.ⁿ⁶ Thus, regardless of any general exemption for municipal securities that is contained in a state Blue Sky law, NSMIA today preempts any state from applying its registration or merit regulatory provisions to the offer and sale of municipal securities that fit the general exemption in the federal statute, and which are offered in states other than that in which the issuer is located. States may continue to regulate municipal offerings by issuers within their own borders and, as with any "covered security" under NSMIA, may also continue to subject multi-state offerings to antifraud enforcement authority in the state without regard to where the issuer is located. States may also impose notice filing and fee requirements. Municipal securities dealers, and intermediaries generally, likewise remain subject to registration or licensing requirements under Blue Sky laws unless a specific exemption is available. The full scope of Blue Sky regulation of municipal securities after NSMIA is specifically considered later in this chapter.ⁿ⁷

Understanding the extent to which municipal securities fall within the regulatory ambit of Blue Sky laws after NSMIA is challenging because of complicated interactions between state and federal laws in a number of states, particularly as they relate to registration requirements for industrial or commercial enterprise bonds or industrial development bonds. State regulation of municipal securities may also be complicated by the notion of "separate security" that can arise when the financing structure in a municipal securities offering includes a lease, sale or loan arrangement in which an obligor agrees to make payments sufficient to pay debt service on the municipal securities. This issue is largely a function of federal law and application of a specific SEC rule that can result in the creation of separate securities in connection with municipal securities offerings that are subject to registration despite the availability of an exemption for the municipal securities themselves.ⁿ⁸ However, states may in fact make their own determinations to exercise regulatory authority when a separate security is created as a matter of federal law, and, as discussed later in this chapter, some have formalized that authority through their own rulemaking. Others that have adopted the municipal securities exemption contained in the 2002 Uniform Securities Act make clear in their municipal securities exemption that a separate security, as defined in SEC Rule 131 is included in the exemption.ⁿ⁹

Despite general exemptions for municipal securities in state Blue Sky laws, and the altered federal/state regulatory landscape after NSMIA, a significant number of states require registration of certain types of municipal securities. These states also impose varying requirements for the use and content of offering documents. In this chapter the scope of Blue Sky regulation of municipal securities today is explored in depth, beginning below with a closer examination of the exemptions in Blue Sky laws applicable to municipal securities generally.

Although securities laws continue to make reference to "industrial development bonds," the term has been replaced in the federal Internal Revenue Code with "Private Activity Bond." For purposes of applying securities law exemptions that continue to make reference to industrial development bonds, "private activity bond" can be used interchangeably.

(n6)Footnote 6. As discussed throughout this chapter, NSMIA specifically preserved state authority to regulate municipal securities with respect to offerings in the state in which the issuer of the security is located, even though the securities are federal "covered securities" under NSMIA, see Securities Act § 18(b)(4)(C), 15 U.S.C. § 77r(b)(4)(C). Preservation of state authority under Blue Sky laws for offerings by in-state issuers is consistent with the fundamental premise of NSMIA that state regulation of offerings of securities that are national in character is appropriately preempted, but that states should retain the authority to regulate offerings that are localized. In many instances municipal securities are offered by in-state public issuers on an intrastate or localized basis.

CHAPTER 18 Blue Sky Regulation Of Municipal Securities

2-18 Blue Sky Regulation § 18.02

§ 18.02 Municipal Securities Exemptions

[1] General Exemptions

As introduced in § 18.01 above, the exemption for municipal securities contained in the 2002 Uniform Securities Act is an example of general exemptions contained in all Blue Sky laws. It differs from the majority of general exemptions by including a "separate security" as defined by SEC Rule 131 under the Securities Act of 1933 in the exemption. Issues relating to "separate securities" that may be created in connection with an offering of municipal securities having certain characteristics are considered later in this chapter.ⁿ¹ The Uniform Act exemption and many state exemptions are modeled directly on the federal exemption in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, although some states simplify the language. In Illinois, for example, the general exemption is for:

Any security (including a revenue obligation) issued or guaranteed by the United States, any state, any political subdivision of a state, or any agency or corporation or other instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any certificate of deposit for any such security.ⁿ²

The general exemption in Blue Sky laws provides the exemption from registration for typical, or traditional, government purpose municipal securities such as general obligation bonds and, expressly, revenue bonds. Unless there is an exception, the general exemption from Blue Sky registration requirements also covers industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds and any other municipal security, and is available regardless of any other characteristics of the security as, for example, its taxable or tax-exempt status.

In some states the general exemption for municipal securities is made subject to a "no default" condition. In Florida, for example, the general exemption from registration for municipal securities contains an exception for securities, other than general obligation bonds, if the issuer or guarantor has previously been in default with respect to payment of principal or interest.ⁿ³ If the exception applies, the issuer must offer and sell the securities by means of an offering circular containing full and fair disclosure as prescribed by rule. Ohio likewise includes an exception to the general exemption for municipal securities other than general obligation bonds if the issuer has previously defaulted in the payment of principal or interest on a bond issue, or if a prior adjudication involving the issuer adversely affects the validity of the securities.ⁿ⁴

If the general exemption for municipal securities is unavailable, and no other securities or transaction exemption applies,ⁿ⁵ the offering must be made in compliance with registration requirements and, where applicable, is subject to merit review. After NSMIA, however, registration and any form of merit regulation of municipal securities that qualify for exemption under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 is limited only to municipal securities of in-state issuers.ⁿ⁶ Qualifying municipal securities offered and sold by out-of-state issuers are federal "covered securities" under NSMIA, although notice filing and fee requirements may still be imposed.ⁿ⁷ As a practical matter, the general exemption from registration requirements for municipal securities in Blue Sky laws means that unless a state securities law excludes certain municipal securities from the general exemption, the role of state securities regulators is limited to intermediary regulation and antifraud enforcement.

[2] The Bank Guaranty Exemption

In addition to the general exemption for municipal securities found in Blue Sky laws, states also typically include as exempt securities:

Any security issued by and representing an interest in or a debt of, or guaranteed by, any bank, savings institution, or trust company organized and supervised under the laws of any state or under the laws of the United States.ⁿ⁸

Municipal securities may be exempt from registration and qualification requirements in Blue Sky laws as securities guaranteed by a bank or other qualifying depository institution. This may occur in circumstances in which the payment of principal and interest on the municipal securities is secured by a letter of credit issued by a bank. As discussed later in this chapter, the bank guarantee itself may be deemed to be a separate security subject to its own registration requirement.ⁿ⁹ However, section 3(a)(2) of the federal Securities Act of 1933 includes within the federal exemption any security "issued or guaranteed by any bank," thus making these potentially separate securities, as well as the underlying municipal securities that are bank guaranteed, NSMIA covered securities regardless of the location on the guarantor bank. The combination of bank guaranty exemptions in federal and state securities laws means that municipal securities will be exempt from state requirements without regard to the general municipal securities exemption, and the qualifying bank guarantee should be a federal covered security over which state authority is preempted. As discussed later, whether the municipal security and the guarantee can actually be separated for purposes of this analysis is not entirely certain. In any case, the bank guaranty exemption under Blue Sky laws is a viable alternative to the municipal securities general exemption.

[3] Rule 506 Exempt Offerings

All securities offered and sold pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D under the Securities Act of 1933 are "covered securities" after NSMIA.ⁿ¹⁰ But unlike the specific covered security definition applicable to municipal securities exempt from federal registration under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act, for which NSMIA preemption of state authority extends only to offerings by out-of-state issuers, preemption of registration authority is complete for securities offered and sold in compliance with Rule 506.ⁿ¹¹ For municipal securities that are covered securities because they are offered and sold pursuant to Rule 506, any exceptions from state exemptions for industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds are inconsequential, as the entire bond issue will have complete NSMIA preemption of state registration authority.

Compliance with Rule 506 in the offer and sale of municipal securities does not eliminate all state authority. NSMIA preserved state authority to require notice filings and to assess filing fees.ⁿ¹² Many states do require notice filings, utilizing Form D as prescribed in Regulation D under the federal Securities Act for Rule 506 offerings, and with the notice filing requirement also impose filing fees.ⁿ¹³ With this authority there is also the power to suspend the offer and sale of securities in the state for failure to submit any required filing or fee.ⁿ¹⁴ State regulatory and enforcement powers with respect to fraud likewise remain fully in place,ⁿ¹⁵ provided that the exercise of those powers as to covered securities does not amount to the indirect imposition of merit-based limitations or conditions on the offering.ⁿ¹⁶

CHAPTER 18 Blue Sky Regulation Of Municipal Securities

2-18 Blue Sky Regulation § 18.03

§ 18.03 Industrial Development and Commercial Enterprise Bonds

Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 includes among the securities exempt from federal registration:

[Any] security which is an industrial development bond (as defined in section 103(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) the interest on which is excludable from gross income under section 103(a)(1) of such Code... .n1

The federal exemption for industrial development bonds thus requires that the interest on the bonds be tax-exempt for the securities exemption to apply, and further requires that the tax-exempt status of the income be established by specific provisions of the Internal Revenue Code that limit the type of projects for which the bonds could be used.n2

The scope of the federal exemption for industrial development bonds is significant for Blue Sky regulation because those falling within the coverage of the federal section 3(a)(2) exemption are today federal "covered securities" under NSMIA, and are not subject to state registration authority when issued by an out-of-state issuer. On the other hand, taxable industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds, including those issued by out-of-state issuers, are not covered securities based on the federal section 3(a)(2) exemption, and are thus fully subject to state regulatory authority unless the Blue Sky exemption is available. However, as discussed earlier in this chapter,n3 in many instances Rule 506 of Regulation D under the federal Securities Actn4 would be available to exempt the offer and sale of such securities as a matter of federal law, in which case the municipal securities become "covered securities" under NSMIA, and thus fall entirely outside of state registration requirements.

Regardless of the scope of the federal exemption under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act, NSMIA expressly excludes from the definition of "covered security" a municipal security "with respect to the offer or sale of such security in the State in which the issuer of the security is located."n5 Thus, to the extent that the general municipal securities exemption in any state excludes industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds, state authority to regulate is left intact to the extent an in-state issuer is involved.

Several states have made such exceptions from their general exemption for industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds. In Arizona, for example, the general exemption is for securities issued or guaranteed by the United States, by any state, territory or insular possession of the United States, by any political subdivision of such state, territory or insular possession, by the District of Columbia or by any agency or instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing. However, the exemption further provides: "This exemption shall not apply to securities regulated pursuant to section 44-1843.01." n6

Section 44-1843.01 of the Act provides that notwithstanding the general exemption, registration requirements will be applicable to several types of municipal securities that are issued by a person who is located in the state, including:

Any obligations or securities that are industrial development bonds as defined in section 103 of the United States internal revenue code of 1954, as amended, with no exception for the small issue exemptions contained in section 103(b)(6) or 103(d), except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any issue where substantially all of the proceeds are to be used to provide residential real property for family units, airports, docks, wharves, mass commuting facilities, parking facilities, sewage or solid waste disposal facilities, air or water pollution control facilities, or facilities for the furnishing of water if available on reasonable demand to members of the general public.n7

Other states exclude from their general exemption securities of an in-state issuer that are payable solely from revenue to be received from a nongovernmental industrial or commercial enterprise.n8

Exclusions from general municipal securities exemptions in Blue Sky laws for industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds may in turn contain their own exceptions to the exclusion, such that where certain qualifying criteria are met, an industrial development or commercial enterprise bond will be exempt from registration requirements. The qualifying criteria vary from state to state, but all suggest that particular circumstances or characteristics associated with the security or the underlying commercial enterprise mitigate the need for investor protection that registration would provide. Examples of the qualifying criteria found in particular provisions include:

- (1) The industrial or commercial enterprise is undertaken by a person whose securities would be exempt from registration under another provision of the Blue Sky law;n9
- (2) The bonds have a specified rating; n10
- (3) Payments are insured or guaranteed by a qualifying entity;n11
- (4) The securities offering qualifies as an exempt transaction under the Blue Sky law.n12

In Wisconsin industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds are excluded from the municipal securities exemption, but an exception is provided when the security is subject to a letter of credit of a bank or savings and loan association. The Wisconsin exemption includes the provision:

[A] revenue obligation is exempt from any filing under the rules of the commissioner if it is the subject of an irrevocable letter of credit from a bank or savings and loan association in favor of holders of the revenue obligations providing for payment of all principal of the revenue obligations and all accrued and unpaid interest to the date of an event of default on the revenue obligations, and the letter of credit is accompanied by an opinion of counsel... n13

The use of irrevocable letters of credit to support the payment of principal and interest on industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds, or any municipal security, can be interpreted to be a "guarantee." A guarantee is included in the definition of "security" in all state securities laws, and thus can constitute a separate security that is subject to its own registration requirements if no exemption is available. If the letter of credit is issued by a financial institution whose securities are exempt,n14 the "separate security" associated with a revenue bond offering would thus also be exempt. Some states expressly include any underlying or separate security which secures a security exempt under the general municipal securities exemption within that general exemption, and in so doing eliminate the issue.n15 However, it remains a consideration in other states, and also is implicated directly by Rule 131 under the Securities Act of 1933.

The "separate security" question is considered in more detail later in this chapter.ⁿ¹⁶

In-state issuers of non-exempt industrial development or commercial enterprise bonds for which no exception is either available or provided face compliance with disclosure requirements that vary among the states. The primary offering document used in a municipal securities offering is the "official statement," which is analogous to a prospectus. In those states in which registration is required, and which mandate the use of a prospectus, the official statement is used. Municipal market participants have voluntarily developed and adopted their own disclosure standards for the content of official statements. The Government Finance Officers Association (GFOA) publishes guidelines for official statements.ⁿ¹⁷ In connection with the offering of municipal securities, the GFOA Disclosure Guidelines call for:

- An introduction to serve as the guide to the official statement;
- A description of the securities being offered, including complete information regarding the purposes of the offering, the plan of financing, the security and sources of repayment, and the priority of the securities, as well as structural characteristics, such as call provisions, tender options, original issue or deep discount, variable rates, and lease purchase agreements;
- Information regarding the nature and extent of any credit enhancement and financial and business information about the issuer of the enhancement;
- A description of the government issuer or enterprise, including information about the issuer's range or level of service, capacity and demographic factors and, in the case of revenue supported offerings, information on the enterprise's organization, management, revenue structure, results of operations and operating plan;
- With respect to obligations of private profit making and nonprofit conduit issuers, information regarding the business or other activity, including the enterprise's form of organization and management, rate-making or pricing policies, and historical operations and plan of operation;
- A description of the issuer's outstanding debt, including the authority to incur debt, limitations on debt, and the prospective debt burden and rate of its retirement;
- A description of the basic documentation, such as indentures, trust agreements and resolutions authorizing the issuance and establishing the rights of the parties;
- Financial information, including summary information regarding the issuer's or obligor's financial practices and results of operations; and
- Financial statements prepared in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles and audited in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

The GFOA Guidelines also provide for a discussion of legal matters, such as pending judicial, administrative, or regulatory proceedings that may significantly affect the securities offered, legal opinions, and tax considerations, and a discussion of miscellaneous matters, including ratings and their description and meanings, underwriting arrangements, arrangements with financial advisors, interests of named experts, pending legislation, and the availability of additional information and documentation.ⁿ¹⁸

For municipal securities of any type that are not exempt under a state's general exemption, and which are not federal covered securities because they are offered by an in-state issuer, use of an official statement may be required. Use requirements vary among the states. However, the information provided in official statements is substantially uniform by reason of adherence to the GFOA guidelines. Official statements also may also constitute "sales and advertising literature" subject to state filing requirements regardless of whether their use is mandated in connection with a municipal securities offering.ⁿ¹⁹

As a practical matter, much of municipal securities disclosure is governed by SEC Rule 15c2-12 under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.ⁿ²⁰ Subject to limited exceptions, the rule is applicable to primary offerings of municipal securities over $1 million, and imposes disclosure-related requirements on the underwriters who participate in an offering. The rule mandates that participating underwriters: (1) obtain and review a final official statement prior to purchase of the securities; (2) send a preliminary official statement to any potential customer who requests one; (3) contract with the issuer to obtain a final official statement; and (4) send a final official statement to a potential customer who requests one. These requirements assure that an official statement will be available to investors. Rule 15c2-12 also assures ongoing disclosure by municipal security issuers by prohibiting underwriters from participating in an offering unless the issuer has agreed to systematically disclose material information that might affect the value of the securities. Participating underwriters must reasonably determine that the issuer (or an obligated person) has agreed in writing with holders of the securities to provide financial information, operating data and material event disclosure on an annual basis.ⁿ²¹

There are no Rule 15c2-12 analogs in state securities laws. Moreover, the rule does not mandate actual dissemination of the official statement. From the state regulatory perspective, however, the rule assures that an official statement will be available if the state is one that requires dissemination of a disclosure document as part of satisfying registration and qualification requirements for non-exempt municipal securities such as industrial development and commercial enterprise bonds.

For industrial development bonds, commercial enterprise bonds and any municipal securities that are subject to registration requirements in a state, the full array of transaction exemptions also remains available. Limited offering exemptions as well as exemptions for offers and sales to institutional or accredited investors, for example, operate without regard to the type of security involved. In-state issuers who structure and carry out industrial development or commercial enterprise bond offerings in compliance with any of these exemptions will not be subject to registration requirements despite the fact that the securities are not federal "covered securities" and do not fall within the state's municipal securities exemption. Likewise, as discussed earlier, these offerings may be undertaken in compliance with Rule 506 of Regulation D under the federal Securities Act of 1933, in which case the securities will be federal "covered securities" without regard to whether they are taxable or non-taxable, and without regard to the location of the issuer.

CHAPTER 18 Blue Sky Regulation Of Municipal Securities

2-18 Blue Sky Regulation § 18.04

§ 18.04 Separate Securities in Industrial Development and Commercial Enterprise Bonds

Although industrial development and commercial enterprise bonds may be exempt from state registration and qualification requirements by reason of being included in the general exemption in Blue Sky laws, the structure of some financings may result in the creation of a separate security from the bonds. The possibility arises when these types of conduit bonds issued by a governmental unit are payable from payments made pursuant to a lease, sale or loan arrangement under which the underlying enterprise obligor agrees to make payments sufficient to meet debt service on the bonds. This is largely an issue under the federal securities laws by reason of SEC Rule 131 of the Securities Act of 1933, which provides that unless an exception is available:

Any part of an obligation evidenced by any bond, note, debenture or other evidence of indebtedness issued by a governmental unit specified in Section 3(a)(2) of the [Securities] Act which is payable from payments to be made in respect of property or money which is or will be used under a lease, sale, or loan arrangement, by or for industrial or commercial enterprise, shall be deemed to be a separate "security" within the meaning of Section 2(1) of the Act, issued by the lessee or obligor under the lease, sale or loan arrangement.ⁿ¹

States have no SEC Rule 131 analog. However, the SEC rule brought the issue into sharp focus, and has resulted in several states making specific provision in their general municipal securities exemptions for including any separate security as defined by SEC Rule 131 within the exemption. This is the approach taken in the 2002 Uniform Securities Act, which includes within the general municipal securities exemption "a security... as defined in Rule 131 adopted under the Securities Act of 1933."ⁿ²

Oregon has realistically approached the separate security issue by including within its general municipal securities exemption:

Any other security offered in connection with or as part of the security set forth in [the general exemption] if the security cannot be severed and sold separately from the security in [the general exemption] of this subsection.ⁿ³

Blue Sky laws focus on securities in circumstances in which there is no effective means of assuring investor protection other than qualification with registration and qualification requirements. A guaranty or other obligation embedded in an exempt municipal security does not create a separate investment decision by an offeree or purchaser, and the "separate" element has no independent significance.

In the majority of states, where no special provision is made for including separate securities within the general municipal securities exemption, the question whether lease and other obligations associated with industrial development and commercial enterprise conduit bonds creates a separate security remains open. On the other hand, Pennsylvania has by rule expressly incorporated SEC Rule 131 into its exemption, such that the general municipal securities exemption specifically excludes any part of an obligation that is deemed to be a separate security under Rule 131.ⁿ⁴ However, at the same time rules under the Pennsylvania Securities Act also establish an exemption from registration for a guaranty of a bond that is offered and sold in the state when certain conditions are met.ⁿ⁵ These conditions include: (1) use of an official statement that contains specified financial information; (2) the proceeds from the sale of the underlying bonds must be utilized for the benefit of a facility that is owned or operated by a qualifying entity; (3) the guarantor must comply with certain requirements relating to the trustee for bondholders; and (4) the trustee must meet specific requirements in the performance of its role under the trust indenture, mortgage, deed of trust or other similar agreement that is involved.ⁿ⁶ When these conditions are satisfied, the result is an exemption from registration requirements for the separate security in the form of a guaranty.

Pennsylvania is unique in its specific incorporation of SEC Rule 131 into the Blue Sky law for purposes of identifying a separate security, excluding them from the general municipal securities exemption, and creating a specific exemption from registration for guaranties which meet stated conditions. In states that make no reference in their municipal securities general exemption either way to SEC Rule 131 and separate securities in relation to guaranties or obligations associated with an industrial or commercial enterprise bonds there is uncertainty unless the guaranty or other obligation that may be considered a separate security is itself exempt under another available exemption.

The question whether bond insuranceⁿ⁷ creates a separate security has become a moot point in the wake of NSMIA. Insurance policies meeting the requirements for the securities exemption in section 3(a)(8) of the Securities Act of 1933ⁿ⁸ are now federal "covered securities" under NSMIA. State regulatory authority is thus preempted as to a separate security if the insurance is deemed to be a guaranty without regard to the location of the bond issuer. All bond insurance policies do not necessarily qualify under section 3(a)(8) of the Securities Act. As a practical matter, however, the major bond insurers are all insurance companies regulated under state insurance laws, and a bond insurance policy issued by any of them will be a federal covered security to the extent that it is deemed to be a separate security associated with the issuance of an otherwise exempt municipal security.

As noted above, in determining whether a separate security is created, Oregon looks to whether the "other" security could be severed and sold separately from the exempt municipal security. The notion of a single integrated security comprised of an underlying exempt security and a guaranty or credit enhancement associated with it is supported by SEC No-Action Letters issued in circumstances in which there is a guaranty or credit support given by a corporate parent or other party closely related to the user of a financed facility. These no-action positionsⁿ⁹ are based on the rationale that a guarantor or provider of a credit support has a direct interest in the success of the financed project extending beyond issuance of the guaranty or other credit support. This identity of interest makes the guaranty or other credit support part of the same security as the underlying bonds. These positions relate to whether a separate security is created for purposes of registration requirements under the federal Securities Act, but the baseline notion of an identity between a guaranty and the exempt municipal security is equally compelling in states that make no specific provision relating to "separate" securities.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. 17 C.F.R. § 240.131(a).

Rule 131 contains three exceptions, any one of which will prevent an obligation from being deemed to be a separate security. These exceptions are: (1) the obligation is payable from the general revenues of a governmental unit having other resources which may be used for payment of the obligation; or (2) the obligation relates to a public project or facility owned and operated by or on behalf of and under the control of a governmental unit specified in section 3(2)(2) of the Act; or (3) the obligation relates to a facility which is leased to and under the control of an industrial or commercial enterprise, but which is part of a public project that, as a whole, is owned by and under the general control of a section 3(a)(2) governmental unit or instrumentality. 17 C.F.R. § 240.131(b).

(n2)Footnote 2. 2002 Unif. Sec. Act § 201(1).

The 2002 Uniform Act provision for including Rule 131 separate securities within the general exemption is now in place in Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Vermont, all of which have adopted or substantially adopted the 2002 Act.

In Wisconsin, revenue obligations payable from payments to be made in respect of property or money used under a lease, sale or loan arrangement by or for a nongovernmental industrial or commercial enterprise is specifically included in the general exemption, but only as further provided that it is subject to an irrevocable letter of credit from a bank or savings institution providing for payment of all principal and unpaid interest to the date of an event of default, and which is accompanied by a legal opinion as prescribed in the statute, see Wis. Stat. § 551.22 (b).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Pa. Code § 202.010. The Pennsylvania rule provides:

The exemption contained in section 202(a) of the act (70 P.S. § 1-202(a)) is available for any security described in that section which is an exempt security under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933... except for any part of an obligation evidenced by a bond, note, debenture or other evidence of indebtedness issued by any governmental unit specified in section 3(a)(2) that is deemed to be a separate security under United States Securities and Exchange Commission Rule 131 (17 CFR 230.131 (relating to definition of security issued under governmental obligations)).

(n5)Footnote 5. For purposes of the Pennsylvania exemption, guaranty is defined as:

A duly executed written agreement wherein a person, not the issuer, in connection with offer and sale of bonds in this Commonwealth, guarantees the prompt payment of principal of, and interest on, the bonds whether at the stated maturity, at redemption prior to maturity or otherwise, and premium, if any, when and as the principal and interest shall become due and the guaranty cannot be bought, sold traded as a security or otherwise realized upon by a bondholder separately from the bondholder's interest in the bonds. Pa. Code § 202.092(d)(2).

(n6)Footnote 6. Pa. Code § 202.092 ("Guaranties of certain debt securities exempt").

(n7)Footnote 7. Municipal bond issuers that meet certain credit criteria can purchase bond insurance policies from private companies. The insurance guarantees the payment of principal and interest on a bond issue if the issuer defaults. Where bond insurance is involved, bond ratings are based upon the credit of the insurer rather than the underlying credit of the issuer. Municipal bond insurance may lead to a higher bond rating, and thus interest cost savings for an issuer.

(n8)Footnote 8. 15 U.S.C. § 77c(8). Section 3(a)(8) exempts:

Any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract or optional annuity contract, issued by a corporation subject to the supervision of the insurance commissioner, bank commissioner, or any agency or officer performing like functions, of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

CHAPTER 18 Blue Sky Regulation Of Municipal Securities

2-18 Blue Sky Regulation § 18.05

§ 18.05 The Scope of Blue Sky Regulation of Municipal Securities after NSMIA

Throughout this chapter, the scope state regulation of municipal securities in the wake of NSMIA is a dominant consideration. Nearly all states have adopted specific amendments to their Blue Sky laws which expressly implement federal preemption as to "covered securities." All municipal securities within the coverage of the exemption in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 are today federal covered securities, and state authority to impose registration and qualification requirements is largely preempted. However, NSMIA did not preempt all state authority with respect to municipal securities that are federal covered securities. Moreover, even federal covered securities remain subject to unfettered state regulation when the issuer of the securities is located within the state. As discussed in section 18.02[3] above, states also retain the authority to regulate taxable industrial development and commercial enterprise bonds, including those of out-of-state issuers, which do not qualify for federal covered security status, when these securities are not encompassed in the particular Blue Sky law general exemption for municipal securities. The full scope of state regulatory authority remaining intact after NSMIA is discussed below.

[1] General Antifraud Authority

The historical mission of state Blue Sky laws to protect against fraud in the offer and sale of securities is largely unaffected by NSMIA preemption. Section 18(c) of the Securities Act of 1933 expressly provides with respect to fraud authority:

Consistent with this section, the securities commission (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State shall retain jurisdiction under the laws of such State to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker-dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions.ⁿ¹

The available exemptions for municipal securities contained in Blue Sky laws are from registration requirements only. There is no exemption from antifraud provisions and the enforcement powers of state regulators in regard to them.ⁿ² A central consideration in the NSMIA preservation of state fraud authority, however, is that where federal covered securities are involved that authority must be exercised in a manner consistent with federal preemption of state registration and any merit qualification requirements. As NSMIA is clear in preserving state fraud authority, it makes just as clear that states may not "directly or indirectly prohibit, limit, or impose conditions, based on the merits of such offering or issuer" upon the offer and sale of covered securities.ⁿ³ To be applied in a "consistent" manner therefore, the exercise of state fraud authority must not amount to direct or indirect merit regulation of a municipal securities offering.

Subject only to that condition, state securities administrators may police municipal securities offerings in the state, including the conduct of issuers and intermediaries who offer and sell them. Although states may not impose registration and particular disclosure requirements for offers and sales of municipal securities that are federal covered securities, official statements and any other disclosure material involved in an offering may be subject to scrutiny under antifraud provisions.ⁿ⁴ Administrative antifraud enforcement powers range from cease and desist orders to injunctions and civil money penalties. For antifraud violations administrators may also seek remedies that may include rescission or restitution either administratively or in court actions. Civil remedies for fraud in Blue Sky laws are likewise not affected by NSMIA preemption.

Preservation of state authority to police municipal securities offerings under antifraud provisions of Blue Sky laws is particularly meaningful as increasing numbers of unsophisticated investors are targeted as buyers of unrated and speculative municipal securities. The municipal securities market has changed to the extent that traditional perceptions of municipal bonds as safe investments have been undermined. The continued role of state securities administrators in carrying out the historic mission of Blue Sky laws is important to maintaining the integrity of that market as the universe of investors expands.

[2] Intermediary Regulation

State authority in regard to registration or licensing of securities intermediaries is not affected by NSMIA. Unless there is an available exemption in a particular Blue Sky law, underwriters, broker-dealers, agents or representatives who make or participate in municipal securities offerings all remain subject to licensing requirements in states in which that activity takes place. In some instances Blue Sky laws specifically exempt from licensing requirements persons who deal solely in United States government securities when they are supervised as dealers by certain federal regulatory authorities.ⁿ⁵ However, there is no exemption for intermediaries who, exclusively or otherwise, deal in municipal securities other than U.S. Government securities that are exempt from registration under the general exemption in a Blue Sky law. Other exemptions from licensing requirements in a particular state may be available by reason of the scope of an intermediary's activities, as, for example, that recognized in section 401(b)(1)(C) of the 2002 Uniform Securities Act for broker-dealers having no place of business in the state and who effect transactions only with institutional investors.ⁿ⁶ Nevertheless, in the absence of such an exemption intermediaries engaged in the offer and sale of municipal securities are subject to the same licensing and continuing regulatory authority applicable to any other intermediary engaged in the securities business.

With regard to intermediary regulation it is important to keep in mind as well that NSMIA expressly preserved state enforcement authority with respect to "unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer" in connection with securities or securities transactions. Apart from licensing, many states, either by statute or rule, prescribe conduct requirements that in most cases include a suitability obligation of broker-dealers and their agents or representatives in making recommendations to a customer.ⁿ⁷ Suitability requirements directly impact the offer and sale of municipal securities, the variety and particular risk characteristics of which must be matched to the profile of a purchaser. With the power to investigate and to bring enforcement actions with respect to unlawful conduct of broker-dealers expressly preserved after NSMIA, state administrators have substantial means to police municipal securities offerings by direct and unfettered authority over the intermediaries who carry them out.

[3] Registration and Qualification Authority

The authority of states to require registration of municipal securities that are federal covered securities, and to subject municipal securities offerings to any form of merit review, offering document limitationsⁿ⁸ or other conditions is limited to the offer and sale of such securities in the state in which the issuer is located. Municipal securities offerings by out-of-state issuers that qualify for the federal exemption in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 are today covered securities, and as such fall outside the scope of state authority except as to antifraud enforcement authority and intermediary regulation. The full scope of state regulatory authority over municipal securities that are not covered securities, or which are covered securities offered and sold by an in-state issuer, will ultimately depend on the scope of the state's general municipal securities exemption. The preservation of state regulatory authority in NSMIA for municipal securities that are federal covered securities offered and sold by an in-state issuer is meaningful only to the extent the securities are not exempt at the state level. As already seen, general municipal exemptions in Blue Sky laws are broad, and there is nothing in the wake of NSMIA that operates to alter the scope or effect of pre-existing state exemptions.

[4] Notice Filing and Fee Requirements

With respect to municipal securities that are federal covered securities, state authority to require notice filings and to assess fees is expressly preserved. States may require the filing of any document filed by or on behalf of the issuer with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, and may also require annual or periodic reports of the value of the securities sold or offered in the state, but "solely for notice purposes and the assessment of any fee."ⁿ⁹ Consent to service of process in the state may also be required. Importantly, state authority in regard to notice filing and the imposition of fees also includes the power to enforce the requirements through suspension of the offer or sale of the securities in the state.ⁿ¹⁰

For municipal securities that are federal covered securities and which are also exempt securities under the state municipal securities exemption, the state exemption is self-executing and no notice filing or fee requirements are imposed.ⁿ¹¹

Scrutiny of offering documents for covered securities under the retained state antifraud authority must, therefore, also be consistent with the NSMIA mandate that no limitations or conditions may be placed upon their use. Logically, the prohibition would seem to address pre-offering scrutiny and approval procedures rather than cease and desist or other enforcement actions that may be undertaken during or after the conclusion of an offering.

For municipal securities offerings carried out pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D under the Securities Act of 1933, states are authorized under NSMIA to impose notice requirements that are substantially similar to what is required generally for such offerings. This in effect limits state authority to require anything more than Form D, as prescribed in Regulation D. Because either the Uniform Limited Offering Exemption (ULOE) or an analog is in place in most states, Form D is the common state filing in any case.

CHAPTER UA Uniform Securities Act

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

UNIFORM SECURITIES ACT (1956)As Amended in 1958

The Uniform Securities Act (1985), approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1985, supersedes the Uniform Securities Act of 1956, as amended in 1958. Further information about the Uniform Securities Act can be found in Volume 1, § 1.03. INTRODUCTION

The Uniform Securities Act was drafted at the request of the Conference by Professor Louis Loss of the Harvard Law School together with Mr. Edward M. Cowett as Research Associate. The Act followed a two-year Study of State Securities Regulation made in consultation with an Advisory Committee containing representatives of the Conference. The American Bar Association, the National Association of Securities Administrators, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Investment Bankers Association of America, and the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., as well as several practicing lawyers with experience in "blue sky law."

The comments included here are the official comments of the Conference. The Act together with the unofficial section-by - section comments of the draftsmen will appear as an appendix in Loss and Cowett on "Blue Sky Law," to be published by Little, Brown & Co. in early 1957. The draftsmen's comments are considerably more detailed than the official comments and also describe generally the existing law. No inference of disagreement with the draftsmen's comments is to be drawn from the non- inclusion of all those comments here. The emphasis here is on brevity.

THE UNIFORM SECURITIES ACT

An Act [Relating to securities; prohibiting fraudulent practices in relation thereto; requiring the registration of broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers, and securities; and making uniform the law with reference thereto:]OFFICIAL PREFATORY NOTE

§ 101 Sales and Purchases

It is unlawful for any person, in connection with the offer, sale, or purchase of any security, directly or indirectly to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, to make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading, or to engage in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person.

(2)

(3)

Official Code Comment

This section is substantially the Securities and Exchange Commission's Rule X-10B-5, 17 Code Fed. Regs. § 240.10b-5, which in turn was modeled upon § 17(a) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77q(a) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77q(a)], except that the rule was expanded to cover the purchase as well as the sale of any security. There are no exemptions from § 101.

The sanctions for the conduct which is made "unlawful" by § 101 (or any other section which makes conduct "unlawful") are found in Part II, III and IV of the statute. Those sanctions include administrative proceedings of various sorts under §§ 204 and 306 when a registration of a broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser or security is pending or effective under Part II or III; judicial injunction under § 408; and criminal prosecution under § 409. Section 410(h) provides that "unlawful" conduct does not result in civil liability except as provided in § 410.

§ 102 Advisory Activities

It is unlawful for any person who receives any consideration from another person primarily for advising the other person as to the value of securities or their purchase or sale, whether through the issuance of analyses or reports or otherwise,

(1)

(2)

to engage in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the other person.

(b)

It is unlawful for any investment adviser to enter into, extend, or renew any investment advisory contract unless it provides in writing that the investment adviser shall not be compensated on the basis of a share of capital gains upon or capital appreciation of the funds or any portion of the funds of the client; that no assignment of the contract may be made by the investment adviser without the consent of the other party to the contract; and that the investment adviser, if a partnership, shall notify the other party to the contract of any change in the membership of the partnership within a reasonable time after the change.

(1)

(2)

Clause (1) does not prohibit an investment advisory contract which provides for compensation based upon the total value of a fund averaged over a definite period, or as of definite dates or taken as of a definite date. "Assignment," as used in clause (2), includes any direct or indirect transfer or hypothecation of an investment advisory contract by the assignor or of a controlling block of the assignor's outstanding voting securities by a security holder of the assignor; but, if the investment adviser is a partnership, no assignment of an investment advisory contract is considered to result from the death or withdrawal of a minority of the members of the investment adviser having only a minority interest in the business of the investment adviser, or from the admission to the investment adviser of one or more members who, after admission, will be only a minority of the members and will have only a minority interest in the business.

(1)

the [Administrator] by rule prohibits custody; or in the absence of rule, the investment adviser fails to notify the [Administrator] that he has or may have custody.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This provision is modeled on §§ 206(1) and 206(2) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-6(1) and (2) [15 U.S.C.A. § 80b-6(1)(2)], except that it avoids the use of the term "investment adviser." The definition of "investment adviser" in § 401(f) contains a number of exceptions which look to the registration requirement in Volume II. But, as in § 101, there are no exemptions from fraud. Subsec. (b). Clauses (1)-(3), together with the first sentence thereafter, are modeled on § 205 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-5 [15 U.S.C.A. § 80b-5]. The definition of "assignment" in the last sentence is taken from the definition in § 202(a)(1) of the federal statute, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-2(a)(1) [15 U.S.C.A. § 80b-2(a)(1)]. Section 102(b) does not require that the entire contract be in writing. An informal exchange of letters containing the three specified provisions would be sufficient. Subsec. (c). The Act does not prohibit the same person from being both a broker-dealer and an investment adviser. See the comment under § 201(c). Section 102(c)(1) is sufficiently flexible so that any rules adopted thereunder might be made inapplicable to persons acting in both capacities, or applicable only with respect to those clients who are charged specially for investment advice. Concerning the distinction between broker-dealers and investment advisers, see the comment under § 401(f).

§ 201 Registration Requirements

It is unlawful for any person to transact business in this state as a broker-dealer or agent unless he is registered under this act.

(b)

It is unlawful for any broker-dealer or issuer to employ an agent unless the agent is registered. The registration of an agent is not effective during any period when he is not associated with a particular broker-dealer registered under this act or a particular issuer. When an agent begins or terminates a connection with a broker-dealer or issuer, or begins or terminates those activities which make him an agent, the agent as well as the broker-dealer or issuer shall promptly notify the [Administrator].

(c)

It is unlawful for any person to transact business in this state as an investment adviser unless (1) he is so registered under this act, (2) he is registered as a broker-dealer without the imposition of a condition under section 204(b)(5), or (3) his only clients in this state are investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940 or insurance companies.

(d)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Every registration expires one year from its effective date unless renewed. [The [Administrator] may by rule or order prepare an initial schedule for registration renewals so that subsequent renewals of registrations effective on the effective date of this Act may be staggered by calendar months. For this purpose the [Administrator] may by rule reduce the registration fee proportionately.]

[As amended August 1958]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). "Agent" and "broker-dealer" are defined in §§ 401(b) and 401(c). The scope of § 201(a) with reference to the phrase "to transact business in this state" is specified in §§ 414(a) and 414(b). Subsec. (b). When an agent shifts from one broker-dealer or issuer to another, the last sentence requires all three persons--the agent, the old employer and the new employer--to notify the Administrator. Subsec. (c). Clause (2): The Act permits the same person to exercise both broker-dealer and advisory functions and to do so without dual registration. Clause (2) ties in with § 204(b)(5), which authorizes the Administrator to condition a particular applicant's registration as a broker-dealer upon his not transacting business as an investment adviser if the Administrator finds that he is not qualified as an investment adviser. Clause (3): This clause is based on § 203(b)(2) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-3(b)(2) [15 U.S.C.A. § 80b-3(2)], which exempts an investment adviser from registration if his only clients are investment companies and insurance companies. But even such an investment adviser is subject to § 102. Clause (3) also ties into § 401(f)(6); see paragraph 12 of the comment under § 414(a)-(f).

The scope of § 201(c) with reference to the phrase "to transact business in this state" is specified in § 414(f). Subsec. (d). The bracketed language is intended for those states where every registration today expires on December 31 or some other fixed date of each year. When any such state goes over to the scheme of § 201(d), the bracketed language will prevent its continuing to be deluged with a mass of renewal applications on the first of every year. Section 418(c) will automatically take care of the situation, without the bracketed language, in those states which already provide that every registration expires one year from its effective date unless renewed.

§ 202 Registration Procedure

A broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser may obtain an initial or renewal registration by filing with the [Administrator] an application together with a consent to service of process pursuant to section 414(g). The application shall contain whatever information the [Administrator] by rule requires concerning such matters as (1) the applicant's form and place of organization; (2) the applicant's proposed method of doing business; (3) the qualifications and business history of the applicant; in the case of a broker-dealer or investment adviser, the qualifications and business history of any partner, officer, or director, any person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, or any person directly or indirectly controlling the broker-dealer or investment adviser; and, in the case of an investment adviser, the qualifications and business history of any employee; (4) any injunction or administrative order or conviction of a misdemeanor involving a security or any aspect of the securities business and any conviction of a felony; and (5) the applicant's financial condition and history. The [Administrator] may by rule or order require an applicant for initial registration to publish an announcement of the application in one or more specified newspapers published in this state. If no denial order is in effect and no proceeding is pending under section 204, registration becomes effective at noon of the thirtieth day after an application is filed. The [Administrator] may by rule or order specify an earlier effective date, and [he] may by order defer the effective date until noon of the thirtieth day after the filing of any amendment. Registration of a broker-dealer automatically constitutes registration of any agent who is a partner, officer, or director, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions. [(b) Every applicant for initial or renewal registration shall pay a filing fee of $.....in the case of a broker-dealer, $.....in the case of an agent, and $.....in the case of an investment adviser. When application is denied or withdrawn, the [Administrator] shall retain $.....of the fee.]

(c)

A registered broker-dealer or investment adviser may file an application for registration of a successor, whether or not the successor is then in existence, for the unexpired portion of the year. There shall be no filing fee.

(d)

The [Administrator] may by rule require a minimum capital for registered broker-dealers and investment advisers.

The [Administrator] may by rule require registered broker-dealers, agents, and investment advisers to post surety bonds in amounts up to $10,000, and may determine their conditions. Any appropriate deposit of cash or securities shall be accepted in lieu of any bond so required. No bond may be required of any registrant whose net capital, which may be defined by rule, exceeds $25,000. Every bond shall provide for suit thereon by any person who has a cause of action under section 410 and, if the [Administrator] by rule or order requires, by any person who has a cause of action not arising under this act. Every bond shall provide that no suit may be maintained to enforce any liability on the bond unless brought within two years after the sale or other act upon which it is based.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). Second sentence: This sentence is a conglomerate of a number of the present statutes as well as the comparable provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C.A. § 78a et seq.] and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 [15 U.S.C.A. § 80a-1 et seq.] together with the SEC's Forms BD and ADV for broker-dealers and investment advisers respectively. The language is sufficiently broad to cover everything required by those statutes and forms, and at the same time is sufficiently specific to facilitate the adoption of a uniform form for each of the three types of registration. Clause (3): The phrase "any person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions," which modifies "partner, officer, or director" here and elsewhere in the Act, contemplates unincorporated, nonpartnership organizations like Massachusetts trusts. Last sentence: Section 401(b), which defines "agent," provides in its last sentence: "A director, officer, or partner of a broker-dealer or issuer, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, is an agent only if he otherwise comes within this definition." The reasons for that provision are stated in the comment to that section. But, since § 202(a)(3) contemplates that the qualifications and business history of partners, officers and directors will be disclosed in the application for registration of the partnership or corporation, there is no need to have the same information filed twice. Consequently, under the last sentence of § 202(a) the firm's registration automatically constitutes registration of any agent who is a partner, officer, or director; and, by virtue of this sentence in conjunction with the last sentence of § 401(b), the Administrator, if he deems it appropriate, may institute a proceeding to deny or revoke the registration of a particular partner, officer or director without disturbing the status of the firm. At the same time, the disqualification of a director, officer or partner, as distinct from an ordinary agent, is also a basis for proceeding against the firm's registration if the Administrator finds it in the public interest to do so. Subsec. (b). The last sentence does not apply when a registration is suspended, revoked or canceled under § 204. Subsec. (c). This subsection is designed to avoid unnecessary interruptions of business by removing any doubt as to the propriety of a predecessor's filing an application for the registration of the successor--for example, when a contemplated change in the membership of a partnership may be considered to result in a new partnership under the local partnership law, or when a partnership or an individual contemplates incorporation. Particularly if the states which adopt this act adopt uniform registration forms which are coordinated with those of the SEC, they may also wish to coordinate their procedure on successions. See SEC Rule X-15B-4, 17 Code Fed. Regs. §

240.15b-4. The regular procedure in § 202(a) concerning the time when an application for registration becomes effective applies also under § 202(c). Subsec. (d). A few states have rules which, instead of prescribing a fixed minimum capital, follow the formula of the SEC and some of the stock exchanges in prescribing a ratio of 15-1 or 20-1 between aggregate indebtedness and net capital. Ill. Rule D-1B; Minn. Reg. VI(a); Wis. Adm. Code s. § 1.01(2). Any state which wants to give its Administrator authority to adopt debt-capital ratio rules should add the following language at the end of Section 202(d): "or prescribe a ratio between net capital and aggregate indebtedness." Subsec. (e). Second sentence: The Administrator has no discretion whether to accept a deposit of cash or securities in lieu of a bond, but he does have reasonable discretion to determine whether the amount of the deposit and the type of securities deposited are appropriate. Third sentence: This sentence applies whether or not the Administrator adopts minimum capital rules under § 202(d) or defines "net capital" under § 412(a) for purposes of the third sentence of § 202(e). If he remain silent, the question whether a broker-dealer has a net capital of $25,000 should be determined in accordance with sound accounting principles. Conditions of the bond: The first and fourth sentences leave the conditions of the bond to the rule-making authority of the Administrator. But the fourth sentence is designed to avoid the frequently ambiguous provisions concerning who may sue on the bond by making those conditions of any required bond coterminous with the liability provisions of § 410 so far as causes of action under the Act are concerned. It is left to the Administrator to determine by rule or order whether suits should be allowed also for defalcations not involving sales of securities--for example, embezzlement of customers' funds or securities. Thus, except for non-statutory causes of action, § 202(e) merely uses the bonding provision to reinforce any recovery which might be obtained under § 410; it creates no new civil liabilities. Since § 410 imposes civil liabilities only upon sellers of securities, any bond required of a person who is solely an investment adviser could apply only to such non-statutory defalcations as the Administrator might prescribe. Statute of limitations: Since § 410(d) provides that every cause of action under this statute survives the death of any person who might have been a plaintiff or defendant, any bond required under § 202(e) must provide that suit may be brought for the specified two-year period even though the person who is bonded dies before the expiration of that period.

§ 203 Post-Registration Provisions

(a)

Every registered broker-dealer and investment adviser shall make and keep such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the [Administrator] by rule prescribes. All records so required shall be preserved for three years unless the [Administrator] by rule prescribes otherwise for particular types of records.

(b)

Every registered broker-dealer and investment adviser shall file such financial reports as the [Administrator] by rule prescribes.

(c)

If the information contained in any document filed with the [Administrator] is or becomes inaccurate or incomplete in any material respect, the registrant shall promptly file a correcting amendment unless notification of the correction has been given under section 201(b).

All the records referred to in subsection (a) are subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by representatives of the [Administrator], within or without this state, as the [Administrator] deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. For the purpose of avoiding unnecessary duplication of examinations, the [Administrator], insofar as [he] deems it practicable in administering this subsection, may cooperate with the securities administrators of other states, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and any national securities exchange or national securities association registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

Official Code Comment This section is modeled on § 17(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78q(a) [15 U.S.C.A. § 78q(a)]. It is broad enough to permit a continuation of the practice which exists in several states of requiring registered broker-dealers to keep lists of the securities they are handling. Subsec. (d) is modeled on § 17(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78q(a). This is a visitorial power which is to be distinguished from the power to investigate and issue subpoenas under § 407. No subpoena is necessary under § 203(d). Failure to submit to a reasonable inspection is a violation of the Act, which may result in an action by the Administrator for a mandatory injunction under § 408 or, if willful, a revocation of the broker-dealer's or investment adviser's registration under § 204(a)(2)(B) or a criminal prosecution under § 409. In some states special fees are charged to defray the cost of examinations. The Act specifically provides for fees only in connection with registration under Parts II and III. Any additional fee provision which may be desired should be inserted in § 406(c).

§ 204 Denial, Revocation, Suspension, Cancellation, and Withdrawal of Registration

The [Administrator] may by order deny, suspend, or revoke any registration if [he] finds (1) that the order is in the public interest and (2) that the applicant or registrant or, in the case of a broker-dealer or investment adviser, any partner, officer, or director, any person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, or any person directly or indirectly controlling the broker-dealer or investment adviser.

(A)

has filed an application for registration which as of its effective date, or as of any date after filing in the case of an order denying effectiveness, was incomplete in any material respect or contained any statement which was, in light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to any material fact; has willfully violated or willfully failed to comply with any provision of this act or a predecessor act or any rule or order under this act or a predecessor act;

(B)

(C)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

has been convicted, within the past ten years, of any misdemeanor involving a security or any aspect of the securities business, or any felony; is permanently or temporarily enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction from engaging in or continuing any conduct or practice involving any aspect of the securities business; is the subject of an order of the [Administrator] denying, suspending, or revoking registration as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser; is the subject of an order entered within the past five years by the securities administrator of any other state or by the Securities and Exchange Commission denying or revoking registration as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser, or the substantial equivalent of those terms as defined in this act, or is the subject of an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission suspending or expelling him from a national securities exchange or national securities association registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or is the subject of a United States Post Office fraud order; but (i) the [Administrator] may not institute a revocation or suspension proceeding under clause (F) more than one year from the date of the order relied on, and (ii) [he] may not enter an order under clause (F) on the basis of an order under another state act unless that order was based on facts which would currently constitute a ground for an order under this section; has engaged in dishonest or unethical practices in the securities business;

(D)

(E)

(F)

(G)

(H) is insolvent, either in the sense that his liabilities exceed his assets or in the sense that he cannot meet his obligations as they mature; but the [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer or investment adviser under this clause without a finding of insolvency as to the broker-dealer or investment adviser; or is not qualified on the basis of such factors as training, experience, and knowledge of the securities business, except as otherwise provided in subsection (b). The [Administrator] may by order deny, suspend, or revoke any registration if [he] finds (1) that the order is in the public interest and (2) that the applicant or registrant

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

has failed reasonably to supervise his agents if he is a broker-dealer or his employees if he is an investment adviser; or has failed to pay the proper filing fee; but the [Administrator] may enter only a denial order under this clause, and [he] shall vacate any such order when the deficiency has been corrected. The [Administrator] may not institute a suspension or revocation proceeding on the basis of a fact or transaction known to [him] when registration became effective unless the proceeding is instituted within the next thirty days.

(b)

The following provisions govern the application of section 204(a)(2)(I):

(1)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer on the basis of the lack of qualification of any person other than (A) the broker-dealer himself if he is an individual or (B) an agent of the broker-dealer.

(2)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order against an investment adviser on the basis of the lack of qualification of any person other than (A) the investment adviser himself if he is an individual or (B) any other person who represents the investment adviser in doing any of the acts which make him an investment adviser.

(3)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order solely on the basis of lack of experience if the applicant or registrant is qualified by training or knowledge or both.

(4)

The [Administrator] shall consider that an agent who will work under the supervision of a registered broker-dealer need not have the same qualifications as a broker-dealer.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(5)

The [Administrator] shall consider that an investment adviser is not necessarily qualified solely on the basis of experience as a broker-dealer or agent. When [he] finds that an applicant for initial or renewal registration as a broker-dealer is not qualified as an investment adviser, [he] may by order condition the applicant's registration as a broker-dealer upon his not transacting business in this state as an investment adviser.

(6)

The [Administrator] may by rule provide for an examination, which may be written or oral or both, to be taken by any class of or all applicants, as well as persons who represent or will represent an investment adviser in doing any of the acts which make him an investment adviser.

(c)

The [Administrator] may by order summarily postpone or suspend registration pending final determination of any proceeding under this section. Upon the entry of the order, the [Administrator] shall promptly notify the applicant or registrant, as well as the employer or prospective employer if the applicant or registrant is an agent, that it has been entered and of the reasons therefor and that within fifteen days after the receipt of a written request the matter will be set down for hearing. If no hearing is requested and none is ordered by the [Administrator], the order will remain in effect until it is modified or vacated by the [Administrator]. If a hearing is requested or ordered, the [Administrator], after notice of and opportunity for hearing, may modify or vacate the order or extend it until final determination.

(d)

If the [Administrator] finds that any registrant or applicant for registration is no longer in existence or has ceased to do business as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser, or is subject to an adjudication of mental incompetence or to the control of a committee, conservator, or guardian, or cannot be located after reasonable search, the [Administrator] may by order cancel the registration or application.

(e)

Withdrawal from registration as a broker-dealer, agent, or investment adviser becomes effective thirty days after receipt of an application to withdraw or within such shorter period of time as the [Administrator] may determine, unless a revocation or suspension proceeding is pending when the application is filed or a proceeding to revoke or suspend or to impose conditions upon the withdrawal is instituted within thirty days after the application is filed. If a proceeding is pending or instituted, withdrawal becomes effective at such time and upon such conditions as the [Administrator] by order determines. If no proceeding is pending or instituted and withdrawal automatically becomes effective, the [Administrator] may nevertheless institute a revocation or suspension proceeding under section 204(a)(2)(B) within one year after withdrawal became effective and enter a revocation or suspension order as of the last date on which registration was effective.

No order may be entered under any part of this section except the first sentence of subsection (c) without (1) appropriate prior notice to the applicant or registrant (as well as the employer or prospective employer if the applicant or registrant is an agent), (2) opportunity for hearing, and (3) written findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). First Clause (1): This clause authorizes the Administrator to proceed against an entire firm merely because an individual partner, officer, director or controlling person is disqualified under one of the specific clauses, but it requires a finding that such action is in the public interest. The disqualification of any other agent, or of an employee of an investment adviser may not automatically be used against the broker-dealer or the investment adviser. But, when the agent's or employee's disqualification is due to lack of reasonable supervision, the Administrator may proceed against the broker-dealer or the investment adviser under Clause (J). The Administrator's finding on "public interest" will presumably not be judicially reviewable except upon a showing of abuse of discretion. But the requirement that such a finding be made in all cases emphasizes that not every minor or technical infraction is meant to result in a denial, suspension or revocation order. Clause (A): The completeness and accuracy of the application for registration are to be tested as of its effective date in a suspension or revocation proceeding. That is to say, the fact that an application for registration has become misleading by virtue of developments occurring after its effective date is not a ground for action under Clause (A). Action in such a case would have to be predicated under Clause (B) upon violation of § 203(c). On the other hand, in a proceeding to deny effectiveness to a pending application for registration, the completeness and accuracy of the application cannot be tested as of the effective date. This explains the first "or" clause in Clause (A). Clause (B): As the federal courts and the SEC have construed the term "willfully" in § 15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78o (b), all that is required is proof that the person acted intentionally in the sense that he was aware of what he was doing. Proof of evil motive or intent to violate the law, or knowledge that the law was being violated, is not required. The principal function of the word "willfully" is thus to serve as a legislative hint of self-restraint to the Administrator. Clause (D): The present tense of the word "is" means that an injunction which has expired or been vacated is no longer a ground for action under Clause (D). Clause (E): This clause is designed to make it clear that, when a person who has had his registration revoked applies for a new registration after an interval, the Administrator does not have to establish again the ground which led to the earlier denial or revocation order. Clause (F): As in Clause (E), the opening word "is" means that a suspension order which has expired by its terms or an order of any kind which has been vacated is not a ground for action under Clause (F). Clause (H): The "but" clause makes it clear that a broker-dealer's or investment adviser's insolvency may be used against the broker-dealer or investment adviser, and that an agent's insolvency may be used against the agent, but that an order may not be entered against a broker-dealer or investment adviser on the basis of the insolvency of a partner, officer, director or controlling person under Clause (2). Clause (J): This clause represents a codification of the view held by a number of Administrators, as well as the SEC, to the effect that a registrant must be held responsible for violations resulting from inadequate supervision of subordinates. This Act, unlike § 15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 17o (b), does not authorize the Administrator to proceed against the registration of a broker-dealer merely because one of his agents has violated the statute (unless the agent happens to be a director, officer or partner). But, when an agent's violation is found to be due to a violation of the broker-dealer's duty of reasonable supervision, and when the Administrator finds that it is in the public interest to proceed against the broker-dealer's registration, he may do so under Clause (J). This is not to say that proof of a violation by the agent is essential to an order under Clause (J). Subsec. (b). Clause (1)-(2): These clauses are a limitation upon Clause (2) of § 204(a). Some firms have limited partners or directors who simply supply capital without taking an active role in the firm's business. There is no need for such persons to be qualified. Clause (5): This is essential in order to avoid double registration by people who act both as broker-dealers and as investment advisers. See the comment under § 201(c)(2). Clause (6): Examinations may be required of any reasonably defined class of applicants. For example, the Administrator may want to examine only applicants for registration as investment advisers, in which event he will wish to examine also those applicants for broker-dealer registration who intend to perform advisory services for special compensation, so that he may properly administer § 204(b)(5). Subsec. (d). This provision is modeled on § 15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78o (b) [15 U.S.C.A. § 78o (b)]. It is designed to regularize the procedure for getting rid of "dead-wood" in the files. Subsec. (e). This provision is modeled on § 15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78o (b) [15 U.S.C.A. § 78o (b)]. It is Rule X-15B-6, 17 Code Fed.Reg.s. § 240.15b-6, although the last sentence goes somewhat further. This provision does not affect an applicant's privilege of withdrawing his application for registration before it becomes effective. It is simply designed to make it possible to prevent withdrawal of an effective registration under fire. The last sentence is designed to take care of the case where the Administrator does not know of any reason to object to the withdrawal application until after it has become effective; but it is limited to situations where the Administrator can prove a willful violation under § 204(a)(2)(B).Subsec. (f). Here, as in other procedural provisions of the statute, the Administrator will also have to consider the requirements of any local Administrative Procedure Act, and these provisions may have to be varied depending upon the language of any such legislation.

§ 301 Registration Requirement

It is unlawful for any person to offer or sell any security in this state unless (1) it is registered under this act or (2) the security or transaction is exempted under section 402.

Official Code Comment

This section forbids offers as well as sales prior to the effectiveness of a registration statement. "Offer" and "sale" are defined in § 401(j). The 1954 amendment of the Securities Act of 1933 to permit certain types of offers during the waiting period between the filing and the effectiveness of the registration statement is recognized in a special exemption for securities which are in process of registration under both the federal and state statutes. See the comment under § 402(b)(12). "Security" is defined in § 401(1). The scope of § 301 with respect to the phrase "in this state" is specified in § 414(a), (c), (d) and (e).

§ 302 Registration by Notification

The following securities may be registered by notification, whether or not they are also eligible for registration by coordination under section 303:

(1)

any security whose issuer and any predecessors have been in continuous operation for at least five years if (A) there has been no default during the current fiscal year or within the three preceding fiscal years in the payment of principal, interest, or dividends on any security of the issuer (or any predecessor) with a fixed maturity or a fixed interest or dividend provision, and (B) the issuer and any predecessors during the past three fiscal years have had average net earnings, determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting practices, (i) which are applicable to all securities without a fixed maturity or a fixed interest or dividend provision outstanding at the date the registration statement is filed and equal at least five percent of the amount of such outstanding securities (as measured by the maximum offering price or the market price on a day, selected by the registrant, within thirty days before the date of filing the registration statement, whichever is higher, or book value on a day, selected by the registrant, within ninety days of the date of filing the registration statement to the extent that there is neither a readily determinable market price nor a cash offering price), or (ii) which, if the issuer and any predecessors have not had any security of the type specified in clause (i) outstanding for three full fiscal years, equal at least five percent of the amount (as measured in clause (i)) of all securities which will be outstanding if all the securities being offered or proposed to be offered (whether or not they are proposed to be registered or offered in this state) are issued;

any security (other than a certificate of interest or participation in an oil, gas or mining title or lease or in payments out of production under such a title or lease) registered for nonissuer distribution if (A) any security of the same class has ever been registered under this act or a predecessor act, or (B) the security being registered was originally issued pursuant to an exemption under this act or a predecessor act.

(b)

A registration statement under this section shall contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by section 414(g):

(1)

a statement demonstrating eligibility for registration by notification;

(2)

with respect to the issuer and any significant subsidiary: its name, address, and form of organization; the state (or foreign jurisdiction) and the date of its organization; and the general character and location of its business;

(3)

with respect to any person on whose behalf any part of the offering is to be made in a non-issuer distribution: his name and address; the amount of securities of the issuer held by him as of the date of the filing of the registration statement; and a statement of his reasons for making the offering;

(4)

a description of the security being registered; the information and documents specified in clauses (8), (10), and (12) of section 304(b); and in the case of any registration under section 302(a)(2) which does not also satisfy the conditions of section 302(a)(1), a balance sheet of the issuer as of a date within four months prior to the filing of the registration statement, and a summary of earnings for each of the two fiscal years preceding the date of the balance sheet and for any period between the close of the last fiscal year and the date of the balance sheet, or for the period of the issuer's and any predecessors' existence if less than two years.

(5)

(6)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

If no stop order is in effect and no proceeding is pending under section 306, a registration statement under this section automatically becomes effective at [three o'clock Eastern Standard Time] in the afternoon of the second full business day after the filing of the registration statement or the last amendment, or at such earlier time as the [Administrator] determines.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). In general: The introductory language of § 302(a) makes it clear that, when a particular security is eligible for registration by notification under § 302 as well as registration by coordination under § 303, it is discretionary with the person filing the registration statement to decide which procedure to use. Clause (1): Section 302(a)(1) contains essentially a single earnings test, regardless of the type of security being registered. It applies in substance to any security whose issuer has been in continuous operation for five years if (A) there has been no default during the past three full fiscal years on any senior security and (B) the issuer during the past three fiscal years has had average earnings of five percent on its common stock. If the issuer has no outstanding securities of the types specified in Clause (A), it is necessary to satisfy only Clause (B). Under Clause (i) the five-percent test is applied to all outstanding securities at the date the registration statement is filed, and those securities are measured by the offering price (when additional securities are being offered) or by the market price, whichever is higher. In order to permit the calculation to be made so as to determine whether the notification procedure is available, the parenthetical clause within Clause (i) permits the person filing the registration statement to use the market price on any day within thirty days before the date of filing. The phrase "maximum offering price" means the highest price at which any of the securities are offered when they are offered to different people at different prices, as when they are offered to existing stockholders at a lower price than to the public generally. The phrase does not mean the maximum proposed offering price referred to in § 303(c)(3). See the comment under that section. But as a practical matter, since the market price and hence the offering price may go up while the registration statement is pending, it will not be safe to rely on the notification procedure unless the five-percent test is satisfied on the basis of the maximum proposed offering price. The five-percent test is applied to book value when there is no readily determinable market price for the security being offered and there is no cash offering price either, as when the offering is made in exchange with security holders of another issuer, or with existing security holders of the same issuer under such circumstances that the exemption in § 402(b)(11) is not available. Clause (1)(B)(ii): Clause (ii) is designed to take care of the case where a corporate registrant (or perhaps a business trust or a limited partnership) has succeeded within the past three years to a business previously conducted by a sole proprietor or a general partnership, so that the five-year requirement at the beginning of § 302(a)(1) would be satisfied but it would be impossible to satisfy the three-year earnings test for want of any outstanding securities during all of that period. Under Clause (ii) the five-percent earnings test is applied in such a case to all securities to be outstanding after the conclusion of the offering. Clause (1) as applied to senior securities: Under Clause (B) the five-percent earnings test on common stock must be satisfied even though the security being offered is a preferred stock or a bond. This affords some margin of safety beyond the requirement in Clause (A) that there shall have been no default. Clause (2): Oil, gas and mineral interests are excluded because they have no "issuer" as that term is defined in § 401(g)(2) and hence all distributions of such securities would be eligible for notification if they were not excluded. Subsec. (b). This section is designed to supply enough information to enable the Administrator to apply the stop-order standards which uniformly govern all registration statements, whether by notification, qualification or coordination. In the case of a primary offering being registered under § 302(a)(1), clause (1) requires basic financial information by way of demonstrating eligibility for the notification procedure. Clause (6) assures a modicum of financial information in the case of a non-issuer distribution which is eligible for the notification procedure solely because of § 302(a)(2). With respect to non-issuer distributions, see the comment under § 305(i).Subsec. (c). States in other time zones should substitute "two o'clock Central Standard Time" or "one o'clock Mountain Standard Time" or "noon Pacific Standard Time." Flexibility to take care of emergencies or unusual situations is afforded by authorizing the Administrator to accelerate the effective date. He may do this almost routinely as the SEC does, so as not to require a waiting period of two days after the filing of the price amendment.

§ 303 Registration by Coordination

(a)

Any security for which a registration statement has been filed under the Securities Act of 1933 in connection with the same offering may be registered by coordination.

(b)

A registration statement under this section shall contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by section 414(g):

(1)

(2)

if the [Administrator] by rule or otherwise requires, a copy of the articles of incorporation and by-laws (or their substantial equivalents) currently in effect, a copy of any agreements with or among underwriters, a copy of any indenture or other instrument governing the issuance of the security to be registered, and a specimen or copy of the security;

(3)

if the [Administrator] requests, any other information, or copies of any other documents, filed under the Securities Act of 1933; and an undertaking to forward all future amendments to the federal prospectus, other than an amendment which merely delays the effective date of the registration statement, promptly and in any event not later than the first business day after the day they are forwarded to or filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, whichever first occurs.

(4)

(c)

A registration statement under this section automatically becomes effective at the moment the federal registration statement becomes effective if all the following conditions are satisfied: (1) no stop order is in effect and no proceeding is pending under section 306; (2) the registration statement has been on file with the [Administrator] for at least ten days; and (3) a statement of the maximum and minimum proposed offering prices and the maximum underwriting discounts and commissions has been on file for two full business days or such shorter period as the [Administrator] permits by rule or otherwise and the offering is made within those limitations. The registrant shall promptly notify the [Administrator] by telephone or telegram of the date and time when the federal registration statement became effective and the content of the price amendment, if any, and shall promptly file a post-effective amendment containing the information and documents in the price amendment. "Price amendment" means the final federal amendment which includes a statement of the offering price, underwriting and selling discounts or commissions, amount of proceeds, conversion rates, call prices, and other matters dependent upon the offering price. Upon failure to receive the required notification and post-effective amendment with respect to the price amendment, the [Administrator] may enter a stop order, without notice or hearing, retroactively denying effectiveness to the registration statement or suspending its effectiveness until compliance with this subsection, if [he] promptly notifies the registrant by telephone or telegram (and promptly confirms by letter or telegram when [he] notifies by telephone) of the issuance of the order. If the registrant proves compliance with the requirements of this subsection as to notice and post-effective amendment, the stop order is void as of the time of its entry. The [Administrator] may by rule or otherwise waive either or both of the conditions specified in clauses (2) and (3). If the federal registration statement becomes effective before all the conditions in this subsection are satisfied and they are not waived, the registration statement automatically becomes effective as soon as all the conditions are satisfied. If the registrant advises the [Administrator] of the date when the federal registration statement is expected to become effective, the [Administrator] shall promptly advise the registrant by telephone or telegram, at the registrant's expense, whether all the conditions are satisfied and whether [he] then contemplates the institution of a proceeding under section 306; but this advice by the [Administrator] does not preclude the institution of such a proceeding at any time.

[As amended August 1958.]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This section streamlines the content of the registration statement and the procedure by which it becomes effective, but not the substantive standards governing its effectiveness. The same stop-order standards specified in § 306 govern all three types of registration--notification, coordination and qualification. The phrase "in connection with the same offering" does not require that the federal and state registration statements either be filed simultaneously or become effective simultaneously. Thus a registration statement by coordination might be filed in a particular state shortly after the effectiveness of the federal registration statement, although the Administrator would be free to decide that it was not "the same offering" if the interval was too great. In the case of those investment companies which offer their securities continually by filing periodic amendments to their federal registration statements under the special procedure afforded by § 24(e) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 [15 U.S.C.A. § 80a-24(e)] [see the comment under § 305(k)], conceptually each such amendment represents a new "offering." That is to say, every amendment filed with the SEC under § 24(e) is in substance a new registration statement. Hence it is contemplated that securities so registered with the SEC may be registered under this Act by coordination so long as the interval between the filing of the SEC amendment and the filing under this Act is not too great. Any question as to the propriety of this construction may be readily resolved by the adoption of a definitional rule under § 412(a) providing, in substance, that the term "registration statement" as used in § 303(a) includes an amendment filed under § 24(e) of the Investment Company Act of 1940. Subsec. (b). This subsection limits the Administrator to requiring only such information as is filed with the SEC. Concerning § 303(b)(4), see the comment under §

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

303(c).Subsec. (c). This subsection is designed to achieve simultaneous effectiveness at the federal and state levels without impinging upon the Administrator's duty to test the registration statement under the substantive standards imposed by § 306. In order for the registration statement to become effective automatically when it becomes effective at the SEC, all the conditions specified in Clauses (1)-(3) must be satisfied unless the Administrator waives one or more of them. Under § 303(b)(4) the registration statement when it is filed must be accompanied by an undertaking to forward all amendments to the federal registration statement. There is an exception for an amendment which merely delays the federal effective date. This refers to the practice whereby, if twenty days have expired since the filing of the last federal amendment and the registration statement has not yet been corrected to the satisfaction of the SEC, the registrant files an amendment merely changing the filing date, thus starting another twenty-day period running and avoiding the necessity of the Commission's instituting a proceeding to prevent automatic effectiveness. Sometimes amendments are mailed to the SEC and sometimes they are filed manually. When they are mailed they are not "filed" under § 413(a) until they are received, and in that event they will have to be forwarded to the Administrator not later than the first business day after they are sent to the SEC. Under § 306(a)(2)(H) failure to comply with the required undertaking is per se a basis for a stop order. Clause (3) and the next three sentences are addressed to the problem of getting to the Administrator the content of the federal price amendment in the short interval (seldom more than twenty-four hours) which usually elapses between its filing and the effectiveness of the federal registrant statement. Clause (3) enables the Administrator to apply the stop-order test in § 306(a)(2)(F) by comparing the maximum underwriting commissions with the minimum offering price, and to apply the test in § 306(a)(2)(E) by reference to the maximum proposed offering price. Section 410(a)(1) imposes an absolute civil liability upon any person who "offers or sells a security in violation of section 301," and § 410(f) makes the contract unenforceable. But under the fourth and fifth sentences the validity of offers and sales in the state is not affected unless the registrant was at fault. The last sentence makes it possible for counsel for the registrant or the underwriter to give a firm opinion to his client that all the conditions of § 303(c) have been satisfied, although it requires nothing further of the registrant.

§ 304 Registration by Qualification

Any security may be registered by qualification.

(b)

A registration statement under this section shall contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by section 414(g):

(1)

with respect to the issuer and any significant subsidiary: its name, address, and form of organization; the state or foreign jurisdiction and date of its organization; the general character and location of its business; a description of its physical properties and equipment; and a statement of the general competitive conditions in the industry or business in which it is or will be engaged;

with respect to every director and officer of the issuer, or person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions: his name, address, and principal occupation for the past five years; the amount of securities of the issuer held by him as of a specified date within thirty days of the filing of the registration statement; the amount of the securities covered by the registration statement to which he has indicated his intention to subscribe; and a description of any material interest in any material transaction with the issuer or any significant subsidiary effected within the past three years or proposed to be effected; with respect to persons covered by clause (2): the remuneration paid during the past twelve months and estimated to be paid during the next twelve months, directly or indirectly, by the issuer (together with all predecessors, parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates) to all those persons in the aggregate; with respect to any person owning of record, or beneficially if known, ten percent or more of the outstanding shares of any class of equity security of the issuer: the information specified in clause (2) other than his occupation; with respect to every promoter if the issuer was organized within the past three years: the information specified in clause (2), any amount paid to him within that period or intended to be paid to him, and the consideration for any such payment; with respect to any person on whose behalf any part of the offering is to be made in a non-issuer distribution: his name and address; the amount of securities of the issuer held by him as of the date of the filing of the registration statement; a description of any material interest in any material transaction with the issuer or any significant subsidiary effected within the past three years or proposed to be effected; and a statement of his reasons for making the offering;

(3)

(4)

(5)

(6)

(7)

the capitalization and long-term debt (on both a current and a pro forma basis) of the issuer and any significant subsidiary, including a description of each security outstanding or being registered or otherwise offered, and a statement of the amount and kind of consideration (whether in the form of cash, physical assets, services, patents, goodwill, or anything else) for which the issuer or any subsidiary has issued any of its securities within the past two years or is obligated to issue any of its securities; the kind and amount of securities to be offered; the proposed offering price or the method by which it is to be computed; any variation therefrom at which any proportion of the offering is to be made to any person or class of persons other than the underwriters, with a specification of any such person or class; the basis upon which the offering is to be made if otherwise than for cash; the estimated aggregate underwriting and selling discounts or commissions and finders' fees (including separately cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value to accrue to the underwriters or finders in connection with the offering) or, if the selling discounts or commissions are variable, the basis of determining them and their maximum and minimum amounts; the estimated amounts of other selling expenses, including legal, engineering, and accounting charges; the name and address of every underwriter and every recipient of a finder's fee; a copy of any underwriting or selling-group agreement pursuant to which the distribution is to be made, or the proposed form of any such agreement whose terms have not yet been determined, and a description of the plan of distribution of any securities which are to be offered otherwise than through an underwriter;

(8)

(9)

the estimated cash proceeds to be received by the issuer from the offering; the purposes for which the proceeds are to be used by the issuer; the amount to be used for each purpose; the order or priority in which the proceeds will be used for the purposes stated; the amounts of any funds to be raised from other sources to achieve the purposes stated; the sources of any such funds; and, if any part of the proceeds is to be used to acquire any property (including goodwill) otherwise than in the ordinary course of business, the names and addresses of the vendors, the purchase price, the names of any persons who have received commissions in connection with the acquisition, and the amounts of any such commissions and other expense in connection with the acquisition (including the cost of borrowing money to finance the acquisition);

(10)

a description of any stock options or other security options outstanding, or to be created in connection with the offering, together with the amount of any such options held or to be held by every person required to be named in clause (2), (4), (5), (6), or (8) and by any person who holds or will hold ten percent or more in the aggregate of any such options;

(11)

the dates of, parties to, and general effect concisely stated of, every management or other material contract made or to be made otherwise than in the ordinary course of business if it is to be performed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement or was made within the past two years, together with a copy of every such contract; and a description of any pending litigation or proceeding to which the issuer is a party and which materially affects its business or assets (including any such litigation or proceeding known to be contemplated by governmental authorities);

(12)

a copy of any prospectus, pamphlet, circular, form letter, advertisement, or other sales literature intended as of the effective date to be used in connection with the offering;

(13)

a specimen or copy of the security being registered; a copy of the issuer's articles of incorporation and by-laws, or their substantial equivalents, as currently in effect; and a copy of any indenture or other instrument covering the security to be registered;

(14)

a signed or conformed copy of an opinion of counsel as to the legality of the security being registered (with an English translation if it is in a foreign language), which shall state whether the security when sold will be legally issued, fully paid, and non-assessable, and, if a debt security, a binding obligation of the issuer;

(15)

the written consent of any accountant, engineer, appraiser, or other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, if any such person is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation (other than a public and official document or statement) which is used in connection with the registration statement;

(16)

a balance sheet of the issuer as of a date within four months prior to the filing of the registration statement; a profit and loss statement and analysis of surplus for each of the three fiscal years preceding the date of the balance sheet and for any period between the close of the last fiscal year and the date of the balance sheet, or for the period of the issuer's and any predecessors' existence if less than three years; and, if any part of the proceeds of the offering is to be applied to the purchase of any business, the same financial statements which would be required if that business were the registrant; and such additional information as the [Administrator] requires by rule or order.

(17)

(c)

A registration statement under this section becomes effective when the [Administrator] so orders.

(d)

The [Administrator] may by rule or order require as a condition of registration under this section that a prospectus containing any designated part of the information specified in subsection (b) be sent or given to each person to whom an offer is made before or concurrently with (1) the first written offer made to him (otherwise than by means of a public advertisement) by or for the account of the issuer or any other person on whose behalf the offering is being made, or by any underwriter or broker-dealer who is offering part of an unsold allotment or subscription taken by him as a participant in the distribution, (2) the confirmation of any sale made by or for the account of any such person, (3) payment pursuant to any such sale, or (4) delivery of the security pursuant to any such sale, whichever first occurs.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (b). This subsection is modeled on Schedule A of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77aa [15 U.S.C.A. § 77aa], SEC Form S-1, which is the basic registration form under that act, and a number of the state statutes. Section 305 contains a number of provisions applicable to registration generally, including authority in § 305(e) to reduce the content of the registration statement by rule or otherwise. And § 412(a) gives authority to classify, and adopt different forms for different types of, issues and issuers. Subsec. (d). This subsection simply authorizes the Administrator to require the use of a prospectus in those unusual cases where he deems it in the public interest. This Act, unlike the federal statute, is not primarily a disclosure act.

§ 305 Provisions Applicable to Registration Generally

A registration statement may be filed by the issuer, any other person on whose behalf the offering is to be made, or a registered broker-dealer. [(b) Every person filing a registration statement shall pay a filing fee of percent of the maximum aggregate offering price at which the registered securities are to be offered in this state, but the fee shall in no case be less than $.....or more than $.....When a registration statement is withdrawn before the effective date or a pre-effective stop order is entered under section 306, the [Administrator] shall retain $.....of the fee.]

(c)

Every registration statement shall specify (1) the amount of securities to be offered in this state; (2) the states in which a registration statement or similar document in connection with the offering has been or is to be filed; and (3) any adverse order, judgment, or decree entered in connection with the offering by the regulatory authorities in each state or by any court or the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(d)

Any document filed under this act or a predecessor act [within five years preceding the filing of a registration statement] may be incorporated by reference in the registration statement to the extent that the document is currently accurate.

(e)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

The [Administrator] may by rule or otherwise permit the omission of any item of information or document from any registration document.

(f)

In the case of a non-issuer distribution, information may not be required under section 304 or 305(j) unless it is known to the person filing the registration statement or to the persons on whose behalf the distribution is to be made, or can be furnished by them without unreasonable effort or expense.

(g)

The [Administrator] may by rule or order require as a condition of registration by qualification or coordination (1) that any security issued within the past three years or to be issued to a promoter for a consideration substantially different from the public offering price, or to any person for a consideration other than cash, be deposited in escrow; and (2) that the proceeds from the sale of the registered security in this state be impounded until the issuer receives a specified amount from the sale of the security either in this state or elsewhere.

(h)

The [Administrator] may by rule or order require as a condition of registration that any security registered by qualification or coordination be sold only on a specified form of subscription or sale contract, and that a signed or conformed copy of each contract be filed with the [Administrator] or preserved for any period up to three years specified in the rule or order.

(i)

Every registration statement is effective for one year from its effective date, or any longer period during which the security is being offered or distributed in a non-exempted transaction by or for the account of the issuer or other person on whose behalf the offering is being made or by any underwriter or broker-dealer who is still offering part of an unsold allotment or subscription taken by him as a participant in the distribution, except during the time a stop order is in effect under section 306. All outstanding securities of the same class as a registered security are considered to be registered for the purpose of any non-issuer transaction (1) so long as the registration statement is effective and (2) between the thirtieth day after the entry of any stop order suspending or revoking the effectiveness of the registration statement under section 306 (if the registration statement did not relate in whole or in part to a non-issuer distribution) and one year from the effective date of the registration statement. A registration statement may not be withdrawn for one year from its effective date if any securities of the same class are outstanding. A registration statement may be withdrawn otherwise only in the discretion of the [Administrator].

(j)

So long as a registration statement is effective, the [Administrator] may by rule or order require the person who filed the registration statement to file reports, not more often than quarterly, to keep reasonably current the information contained in the registration statement and to disclose the progress of the offering.

(k)

A registration statement relating to a security issued by a face-amount certificate company or a redeemable security issued by an open-end management company or unit investment trust, as those terms are defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, may be amended after its effective date so as to increase the securities specified as proposed to be offered. Such an amendment becomes effective when the [Administrator] so orders. Every person filing such an amendment shall pay a filing fee, calculated in the manner specified in subsection (b), with respect to the additional securities proposed to be offered.

[As amended August 1958.]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This section contains a number of provisions which are equally applicable to all three types of registration, or in a few cases to two of the three types. The reference here to "any other person on whose behalf the offering is to be made" is designed for non-issuer distributions. See the comment under § 305(i). This section makes it possible for a local broker-dealer to file a registration statement, independently of the issuer or underwriters, especially in coordination cases so that the issuer and underwriters will not be able to veto the making of an offering and the establishment of a market in any state in which they do not choose to register. Subsec. (b). On the fee problem with respect to convertible securities and offerings by way of warrants or rights, see the comment under § 401(j)(5). Subsec. (c). This subsection, like every other provision having to do with the content of the registration statement, must be read in the light of the fact that the accuracy and completeness of the registration statement are judged under § 306(a)(2)(A) as of its effective date unless a proceeding to deny effectiveness is instituted before the effective date. That is to say, the registration statement must be kept current with changing developments until the effective date, but it need not be amended thereafter except to correct inaccuracies or deficiencies which existed as of the effective date. If the Administrator wants some or all registration statements to be brought up to date periodically, he may do so by requiring reports under § 305(j). Clause (3) does not require that notice be given with respect to any order permitting withdrawal of a registration statement. The Administrator may nevertheless require such information in qualification cases under § 304(b)(17). Subsec. (d). The language in brackets is included only because some states do not keep files indefinitely. If a particular state does not keep files for as long as five years, or if it keeps them longer, some other appropriate figure should be substituted for "five." But if files are kept indefinitely, the bracketed language should be omitted. Subsec. (f). See paragraph 10 of the comment under § 305(i). Subsec. (g). The "but" clause at the end of the subsection is designed to break the impasse which arises when each of several Administrators imposes an escrow or impounding requirement and insists that the depository be in his state. Subsec. (h). This provision is included to take care of the few states in which this regulatory device is used. No implication is intended that this authority should be used by the Administrator in states in which it is not traditional. Subsecs. (i) and (j) and Related Sections Referring to Non-Issuer Distributions. The statutory scheme with respect to non-issuer distributions and the related question of how long a registration statement remains effective is as follows:

Section 301(a) applies broadly to any offer or sale by any person. Thus, it is literally unlawful for A to sell five shares of X Corp. to B unless there is registration or an exemption.

2.

The term "non-issuer" is defined in § 401(h) to mean simply "not directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer."

3.

Section 402(b)(1) exempts from registration "any isolated non-issuer transaction, whether effected through a broker-dealer or not."

4.

When the non-issuer distribution is something more than an "isolated transaction," however that phrase is construed, it may still be exempted under one of the following sections: 402(a)(8), 402(b)(3), 402(b)(6), 402(b)(7), 402(b)(8), or 402(b)(9). See the comments under those sections.

5.

Apart from these exemptions of general applicability, § 402(b)(2) affords an exemption which is specifically designed for certain non-issuer distributions. An Administrator who chooses to do so may keep track of the securities sold under this exemption by requiring under § 203(a) that registered broker-dealers prepare and keep lists of those securities.

6.

If no exemption is available for the non-issuer distribution, the security must be registered. Under the first sentence of § 305(i) every registration statement is effective for at least one year and for any longer period during which the security is being distributed, except while a stop order is in effect. Under Clause (1) of the second sentence all outstanding securities "of the same class" as the registered security are considered to be registered for the purpose of any non-issuer transaction so long as the registration statement remains effective. And § 305(j) gives the Administrator power by rule or order to require the registrant to file reports so long as the registration remains effective. With respect to the applicability of § 305(j) to convertible securities and rights offerings, see the comment under § 401(j)(5). The effect is that as long as a registration statement is effective, no matter who has filed it or how many units of the class have been registered, all securities of the same class can be legally traded by anybody as if they were registered.

Clause (2) of the second sentence of § 305(i) is designed to take care of the situation where the Administrator finds it necessary to enter a stop order during the year after the effective date. When the registration which thus becomes the subject of a stop order was itself filed in connection with the non-issuer distribution, it would substantially nullify the effect of the stop order to continue to permit a secondary market on the class registration theory of the first sentence of § 305(i). But, when the registration statement related entirely to a primary distribution by the issuer, and a substantial part of the offering was made in the state before the stop order was entered, Clause (2) avoids indefinitely locking the buyers in. Clause (2) stops all trading based on the class registration theory of the first sentence of § 304(i), as distinct from trading based on the "isolated transaction" exemption in § 402(b)(1) or some other exemption, for thirty days after the entry of the stop order, so that the public may become aware of the stop order and the reason for its entry. Thereafter such trading may resume until the year has expired.

If securities of the class being registered are outstanding when the registration statement becomes effective, or if some of the registered securities have been sold, post-effective withdrawal of the registration statement would interfere with the privilege of persons generally to engage in non-issuer trading for a minimum period of one year after the effective date. Since sellers might not always know of the withdrawal, they might thus be subjected to civil liability through no fault of their own. For this reason § 305(i) provides that a registration statement may not be withdrawn for one year from its effective date if any securities of the same class are outstanding.

If no exemption is available for a non-issuer distribution and a registration statement for securities of the same class is not effective, there arises for the first time the necessity of filing a special registration statement to permit a non-issuer distribution. As in the case of a distribution for the account of the issuer, registration may be effected here by coordination, notification or qualification. Concerning the exclusion of oil, gas and mining interests from § 302(a)(2), see the comment under that section. A registration for a non-issuer distribution, like any other registration, is considered to register all outstanding securities of the same class, and thus to permit anybody to trade for a minimum of one year or however much longer it may take to complete the registered non-issuer distribution. It is thus immaterial whether the registration statement specifically covers 100 shares or 100,000 shares, because the Administrator may not permit the registration statement to become effective unless the statutory standards are satisfied.

10.

Section 306(f) is designed only to take care of the case where the seller cannot obtain certified financial statements and other data normally required. The phrase "without unreasonable effort or expense" is borrowed from § 10(a)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77j(a)(3) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77j(a)(3)]. In the case of a non-issuer distribution by a person who is in a control relationship with the issuer or otherwise has access to required information, that phrase is not meant to apply to the expense which is merely incident to supplying the information required to register. Moreover, § 305(f) does not excuse the filing of the financial data required by § 302(b)(6) if a non-issuer distribution is registered by notification; for § 305(f) applies by its terms only to §§ 304 (registration by qualification) and 305(j) (reports). The person filing the registration statement can always register by qualification. Although he may not be able to obtain the financial data required by § 302(b)(6) to demonstrate eligibility for the notification procedure, he may be able to obtain other information which the Administrator might wish to require under § 304.Subsec. (k). Investment companies of the types here specified are distinguished by the fact that they are continually offering their securities. Therefore, they do not lend themselves readily to the concept of registering a security in connection with a proposed distribution. For that reason Congress in 1954 added a new § 24(e) to the Investment Company Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80a-24(e), providing an amendment procedure for registration statements filed under the Securities Act of 1933 by investment companies of these types. Since these investment companies typically offer in many states, the same provision is incorporated in § 305(k). Normally the investment company will presumably wish to use the coordination procedure under § 303. See the last paragraph of the comment under § 303(a). But it will find § 305(k) useful when it runs out of locally registered securities in a particular state before it has to file an amendment to its federal registration statement.

§ 306 Denial, Suspension, and Revocation of Registration

(a)

The [Administrator] may issue a stop order denying effectiveness to, or suspending or revoking the effectiveness of, any registration statement if [he] finds (1) that the order is in the public interest and (2) that the registration statement as of its effective date or as of any earlier date in the case of an order denying effectiveness, or any amendment under section 305(k) as of its effective date, or any report under section 305(j) is incomplete in any material respect or contains any statement which was, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to any material fact; any provision of this act or any rule, order, or condition lawfully imposed under this act has been willfully violated, in connection with the offering, by (i) the person filing the registration statement, (ii) the issuer, any partner, officer, or director of the issuer, any person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, or any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, but only if the person filing the registration statement is directly or indirectly controlled by or acting for the issuer, or (iii) any underwriter;

(A)

(B)

(C)

the security registered or sought to be registered is the subject of an administrative stop order or similar order or a permanent or temporary injunction of any court of competent jurisdiction entered under any other federal or state act applicable to the offering; but (i) the [Administrator] may not institute a proceeding against an effective registration statement under clause (C) more than one year from the date of the order or injunction relied on, and (ii) [he] may not enter an order under clause (C) on the basis of an order or injunction entered under any other state act unless that order or injunction was based on facts which would currently constitute a ground for a stop order under this section;

the issuer's enterprise or method of business includes or would include activities which are illegal where performed;

(E)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

the offering has worked or tended to work a fraud upon purchasers or would so operate;

(F)

the offering has been or would be made with unreasonable amounts of underwriters' and sellers' discounts, commissions, or other compensation, or promoters' profits or participation, or unreasonable amounts or kinds of options;

(G)

when a security is sought to be registered by notification, it is not eligible for such registration;

(H)

when a security is sought to be registered by coordination, there has been a failure to comply with the undertaking required by section 303(b)(4); or the applicant or registrant has failed to pay the proper filing fee; but the [Administrator] may enter only a denial order under this clause and [he] shall vacate any such order when the deficiency has been corrected. The [Administrator] may not institute a stop-order proceeding against an effective registration statement on the basis of a fact or transaction known to him when the registration statement became effective unless the proceeding is instituted within the next thirty days.

(I)

(b)

The [Administrator] may by order summarily postpone or suspend the effectiveness of the registration statement pending final determination of any proceeding under this section. Upon the entry of the order, the [Administrator] shall promptly notify each person specified in subsection (c) that it has been entered and of the reasons therefor and that within fifteen days after the receipt of a written request the matter will be set down for hearing. If no hearing is requested and none is ordered by the [Administrator], the order will remain in effect until it is modified or vacated by the [Administrator]. If a hearing is requested or ordered, the [Administrator], after notice of and opportunity for hearing to each person specified in subsection (c), may modify or vacate the order or extend it until final determination.

(c)

No stop order may be entered under any part of this section except the first sentence of subsection (b) without (1) appropriate prior notice to the applicant or registrant, the issuer, and the person on whose behalf the securities are to be or have been offered, (2) opportunity for hearing, and (3) written findings of fact and conclusions of law.

The [Administrator] may vacate or modify a stop order if [he] finds that the conditions which prompted entry have changed or that it is otherwise in the public interest to do so.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This subsection applies equally to all three types of registration. Clause (A): The completeness and accuracy of the registration statement are to be tested as of its effective date in a suspension or revocation proceeding. That is to say, the fact that a registration statement has become misleading by virtue of developments occurring after its effective date is not a ground for the issuance of a stop order revoking its effectiveness under Clause (A). Post-effective amendments are not necessary except to reflect inaccuracies as of the effective date. If a particular Administrator wants the registration statement to be kept more or less currently accurate so long as it remains effective, he may require reports as often as quarterly by rule or order under § 305(j). In that event, filing a misleading report would be a basis for a stop order under Clause (A) and failure to file such a report would be a basis for a stop order under Clause (B). On the other hand, in a proceeding to deny effectiveness to a pending registration statement, its completeness and accuracy cannot be tested as of the effective date. This explains the first "or" clause in Clause (A). Clause (B): Concerning the meaning of "willfully," see the comment under § 204(a)(2)(B). Under Clause (ii) a violation by the issuer has the same consequences whether the issuer has filed the registration statement itself or has had a local broker-dealer file the registration statement for it. But, when the registration is filed by a local broker-dealer who is acting independently, a provision authorizing the issuance of a stop order for a violation by the issuer or somebody connected with the issuer would be inconsistent with the statutory purpose of permitting (particularly in cases of registration by coordination) the making of an offering and the establishment of a market in any state in which a registered broker-dealer is willing to effect registration. See the comment under § 305(a). Clause (C): The word "is" at the beginning of Clause (C) means that a stop order or injunction which has expired by its terms or been vacated is not a ground for action under this clause. Clause (D): The reference here is to something like a racetrack or gambling casino which is conducted in a state where such an enterprise is illegal. The "public interest" standard in Clause (1) must always be considered. Thus the fact that a large department store had recently violated a statute on resale price maintenance or minimum wages would not justify action under Clause (D). Moreover, Clause (D) is not meant to apply to an enterprise which is lawful where conducted, although it would be illegal if conducted in the state where the registration statement is filed. Clause (E): Section 401(a) provides that the term "fraud" is not limited to common-law deceit. But this clause is not designed to be as broad as the "sound business principles" standard or the "fair, just, and equitable" standard found in some statutes. Clause (F): This clause is broad enough to cover the statement of policy on options which was adopted in 1946 by the National Association of Securities Administrators, as well as its 1955 statement of policy on so-called "cheap stock." 29 Proceedings of NASAA 84-90; 38 id. 113-15. Subsec. (c). This subsection is comparable to § 204(f) and the comment there is equally applicable here.

§ 401 Definitions

When used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a)

"[Administrator]" [substitute any other appropriate term, such as "Commission," "Commissioner," "Secretary," etc.] means the [official or agency designated in section 406(a)].

(b)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

"Agent" means any individual other than a broker-dealer who represents a broker-dealer or issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities. "Agent" does not include an individual who represents an issuer in (1) effecting transactions in a security exempted by clause (1), (2), (3), (10), or (11) of section 402(a), (2) effecting transactions exempted by section 402(b), or (3) effecting transactions with existing employees, partners, or directors of the issuer if no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting any person in this state. A partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, is an agent only if he otherwise comes within this definition.

"Broker-dealer" means any person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others or for his own account. "Broker-dealer" does not include (1) an agent, (2) an issuer, (3) a bank, savings institution, or trust company, or (4) a person who has no place of business in this state if (A) he effects transactions in this state exclusively with or through (i) the issuers of the securities involved in the transactions, (ii) other broker-dealers, or (iii) banks, savings institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trusts, or other financial institutions or institutional buyers, whether acting for themselves or as trustees, or (B) during any period of twelve consecutive months he does not direct more than fifteen offers to sell or buy into this state in any manner to persons other than those specified in clause (A), whether or not the offeror or any of the offerees is then present in this state.

(d)

"Fraud," "deceit," and "defraud" are not limited to common-law deceit.

(e)

"Guaranteed" means guaranteed as to payment of principal, interest, or dividends.

"Investment adviser" means any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. "Investment adviser" does not include (1) a bank, savings institution, or trust company; (2) a lawyer, accountant, engineer, or teacher whose performance of these services is solely incidental to the practice of his profession; (3) a broker-dealer whose performance of these services is solely incidental to the conduct of his business as a broker-dealer and who receives no special compensation for them; (4) a publisher of any bona fide newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general, regular, and paid circulation; (5) a person whose advice, analyses, or reports relate only to securities exempted by section 402(a)(1); (6) a person who has no place of business in this state if (A) his only clients in this state are other investment advisers, broker-dealers, banks, savings institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, investment companies as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trusts, or other financial institutions or institutional buyers, whether acting for themselves or as trustees, or (B) during any period of twelve consecutive months he does not direct business communications into this state in any manner to more than five clients other than those specified in clause (A), whether or not he or any of the persons to whom the communications are directed is then present in this state; or (7) such other persons not within the intent of this paragraph as the [Administrator] may by rule or order designate.

"Issuer" means any person who issues or proposes to issue any security, except that (1) with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors or persons performing similar functions or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which the security is issued; and (2) with respect to certificates of interest or participation in oil, gas, or mining titles or leases or in payments out of production under such titles or leases, there is not considered to be any "issuer."

(h)

"Non-issuer means not directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer.

(i)

"Person" means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust where the interests of the beneficiaries are evidenced by a security, an unincorporated organization, a government, or a political subdivision of a government.

(j)

(1)

"Sale" or "sell" includes every contract of sale of, contract to sell, or disposition of, a security or interest in a security for value.

(2)

"Offer" or "offer to sell" includes every attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security for value.

(3)

Any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing is considered to constitute part of the subject of the purchase and to have been offered and sold for value.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(4)

A purported gift of assessable stock is considered to involve an offer and sale.

(5)

Every sale or offer of a warrant or right to purchase or subscribe to another security of the same or another issuer, as well as every sale or offer of a security which gives the holder a present or future right or privilege to convert into another security of the same or another issuer, is considered to include an offer of the other security.

(6)

The terms defined in this subsection do not include (A) any bona fide pledge or loan; (B) any stock dividend, whether the corporation distributing the dividend is the issuer of the stock or not, if nothing of value is given by stockholders for the dividend other than the surrender of a right to a cash or property dividend when each stockholder may elect to take the dividend in cash or property or in stock; (C) any act incident to a class vote by stockholders, pursuant to the certificate of incorporation or the applicable corporation statute, on a merger, consolidation, reclassification of securities, or sale of corporate assets in consideration of the issuance of securities of another corporation; or (D) any act incident to a judicially approved reorganization in which a security is issued in exchange for one or more outstanding securities, claims, or property interests, or partly in such exchange and partly for cash.

(k)

"Securities Act of 1933," "Securities Exchange Act of 1934," "Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935," and "Investment Company Act of 1940" mean the federal statutes of those names as amended before or after the effective date of this act.

(l)

"Security" means any note; stock; treasury stock; bond; debenture; evidence of indebtedness; certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement; collateral-trust certificate; preorganization certificate or subscription; transferable share; investment contract; voting-trust certificate; certificate of deposit for a security; certificate of interest or participation in an oil, gas, or mining title or lease or in payments out of production under such a title or lease; or, in general, any interest or instrument commonly known as a "security," or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of the foregoing. "Security" does not include any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract under which an insurance company promises to pay [a fixed sum of] money either in a lump sum or periodically for life or for some other specified period.

"State" means any state, territory, or possession of the United States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. As amended August 1958.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (b). Whether a particular individual who represents a broker-dealer or issuer is an "agent" or is himself a "broker-dealer" depends upon much the same factors which create an agency relationship at common law. That is to say, the question turns essentially on whether the individual has manifested a consent to the broker-dealer or issuer to act subject to his control. See Restatement of Agency § 1. The last sentence does not require every partner, officer or director to file a separate application for registration, because the last sentence of § 202(a) provides that registration of a broker-dealer automatically constitutes registration of any agent who is a partner, officer or director. See the comment under § 202(a).Subsec. (c). With respect to the distinction between a person who is "engaged in the business of effecting transactions for his own account" and an ordinary investor who buys and sells with some frequency, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 720-22.Clause (4): See paragraph 12 of the comment under § 414(a)-(f). The reference in Clause (B) to fifteen offers during any period of twelve consecutive months in the case of persons without a place of business in the state is not intended to carry any implication that a person who effects more than fifteen transactions for his own account in the course of ordinary investment during any period of twelve months is for that reason alone a "broker-dealer."Subsec. (d). This subsection codifies the holdings that "fraud" as used in federal and state securities statutes, as well as the federal mail fraud statute, is not limited to common-law deceit. See the cases cited in Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), p. 817, notes 30-31.Subsec. (f). In general: This subsection has been taken almost verbatim from the definition in § 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. § 80b-2(a)(11) [15 U.S.C.A. § 80b-2(a)(11)]. On the administrative construction of the federal definition, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 788-92. Clause (6) has been added; see paragraph 12 of the comment under § 414(a)-(f).Clause (3): The model of this clause in the federal act has been thus explained in an opinion of the SEC's General Counsel (Investment Advisers Act Release No. 2): "[This clause] amounts to a recognition that brokers and dealers commonly give a certain amount of advice to their customers in the course of their regular business, and that it would be inappropriate to bring them within the scope of the Investment Advisers Act merely because of this aspect of their business. On the other hand, that portion of clause [(3)] which refers to 'special compensation' amounts to an equally clear recognition that a broker or dealer who is specially compensated for the rendition of advice should be considered an investment adviser and not be excluded from the purview of the Act merely because he is also engaged in effecting market transactions in securities. It is well known that many brokers and dealers have investment advisory departments which furnish investment advice for compensation in the same manner as does an investment adviser who operates solely in an advisory capacity. The essential distinction to be borne in mind in considering borderline cases is the distinction between compensation for advice itself and compensation for services of another character to which advice is merely incidental."Clause (4): The word "paid," which does not appear in the federal definition, has been added to emphasize that a person who periodically distributes a "tipster sheet" free as a way to get paying clients is not excluded from the definition as a "publisher."Subsec. (g). The phraseology is taken almost verbatim from § 2(4) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77b(4), [15 U.S.C.A. § 77b(4)]. The peculiar types of securities other than those dealt with in Clause (1)--for example, equipment-trust certificates--may be handled under the rule-making power in § 412(a).Subsec. (h). See the comment under § 305(i).Subsec. (j). Clauses (1)-(2): The phraseology is borrowed substantially from § 2(3) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77b(3) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77b(3)], as amended in 1954 to split the definitions of "sale" and "offer." See the comment under § 402(b)(12).Clause (5): This clause provides that there is always an "offer" of the security called for by a conversion privilege or the warrant. Hence that security must be registered (unless some exemption is available) before the convertible security or the warrants are offered. Even if the warrants are themselves distributed without consideration, so that the warrants are not "sold," a gift of a warrant involves an offer to sell the stock called for by the warrant. Hence registration of the stock is necessary before the warrants may even be given away. Moreover, since the security called for is being continuously "offered" so long as the conversion privilege or the purchase right remains exercisable, the security called for remains registered all that time under § 305(i), and the person who files the registration statement is subject to the Administrator's power to require the filing of reports under § 305(j).Under certain conditions, however, § 402(b)(11) exempts offers to existing security holders, specifically including "persons who at the time of the transaction are holders of convertible securities, non-transferable warrants, or transferable warrants exercisable within not more than ninety days of their issuance. That exemption does not excuse registration of the second security (that is, the security called for by the warrant or conversion privilege) unless the offering of the first security itself (that is, the warrants or the convertible security) comes within the exemption; for there is a present "offer" of the second security under § 401(j)(5) and the offerees are not yet existing security holders. But the exemption under § 402(b)(11) will normally be available when the conversion privilege or warrant is exercised. Hence, if the first security is not being offered or distributed more than one year from the effective date of the registration statement, the effectiveness of the registration statement terminates at the end of the one-year period under § 305(i) and the power to require reports terminates at the same time. The registration fee in the case of warrants or rights should be based on the total offering price of the security called for by the warrants or rights, together with the offering price of the warrants or rights themselves if they are not given away. In the convertible security situation, since no consideration is given for the second security except the surrender of the first, the fee should be based solely on the offering price of the convertible security and there should be no double fee. Subsec. (l). This subsection is identical with § 2(1) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77b(1) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77b(1)], except for oil, gas and mineral interests and the addition of the last sentence. Section 2(1) was modeled on the definitions in some of the state statutes, and the federal definition has in turn influenced many of the new state statutes enacted since 1933. Moreover, substantially that definition--particularly the phrase "investment contract"--has been broadly construed by both state and federal courts. See, e. g., SEC v. W. J. Howey Co., 66 S.Ct. 1100, 328 U.S. 293, 90 L.Ed. 1244 (1946); for citations to other federal and state cases, as well as a discussion of the administrative construction of the several phrases in the definition, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 299-329. Oil, gas and mineral interests: Section 2(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 uses the phrase "fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights." The phrase in this statute is modeled on the language in § 2508(a) of the California act--"certificate of interest in an oil, gas, or mining title or lease"--which may be slightly broader than the federal phrase and in any event is by far the most commonly found phrase in the state statutes. The words which have been added to the California language are intended to make it clear that so-called "oil payments" are securities whether or not they may be regarded as interests in a title or lease. Very few states go so far as to include entire leasehold interests. However, it is clear that even entire leasehold interests may be offered under such circumstances that a security is involved in the nature of an "investment contract." SEC v. C. M. Joiner Leasing Corp., 64 S.Ct. 120, 320 U.S. 344, 88 L.Ed. 88 (1943); for other cases, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), p. 312, n. 31. The last sentence has been explicitly phrased so as not to exclude from the definition the so-called "variable annuities" which have recently been developed. See also the comment under § 402(a)(5). If it is desired to exclude variable annuities along with orthodox annuities on the ground that the former are sufficiently regulated by the insurance authorities in the particular state, the bracketed language should be deleted.

§ 402 Exemptions

The following securities are exempted from sections 301 and 403:

(1)

any security (including a revenue obligation) issued or guaranteed by the United States, any state, any political subdivision of a state, or any agency or corporate or other instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing; or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing;

(2)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

any security issued or guaranteed by Canada, any Canadian province, any political subdivision of any such province, any agency or corporate or other instrumentality of one or more of the foregoing, or any other foreign government with which the United States currently maintains diplomatic relations, if the security is recognized as a valid obligation by the issuer or guarantor;

(3)

any security issued by and representing an interest in or a debt of, or guaranteed by, any bank organized under the laws of the United States, or any bank, savings institution, or trust company organized and supervised under the laws of any state;

(4)

any security issued by and representing an interest in or a debt of, or guaranteed by, any federal savings and loan association, or any building and loan or similar association organized under the laws of any state and authorized to do business in this state;

(5)

any security issued by and representing an interest in or a debt of, or guaranteed by, any insurance company organized under the laws of any state and authorized to do business in this state; [but this exemption does not apply to an annuity contract, investment contract, or similar security under which the promised payments are not fixed in dollars but are substantially dependent upon the investment results of a segregated fund or account invested in securities;]

(6)

any security issued or guaranteed by any federal credit union or any credit union, industrial loan association, or similar association organized and supervised under the laws of this state;

(7)

any security issued or guaranteed by any railroad, other common carrier, public utility, or holding company which is (A) subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; (B) a registered holding company under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 or a subsidiary of such a company within the meaning of that act; (C) regulated in respect of its rates and charges by a governmental authority of the United States or any state; or (D) regulated in respect of the issuance or guarantee of the security by a governmental authority of the United States, any state, Canada, or any Canadian province;

(8)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

any security listed or approved for listing upon notice of issuance on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or the Midwest Stock Exchange [, or listed on the (insert names of appropriate regional stock exchanges)]; any other security of the same issuer which is of senior or substantially equal rank; any security called for by subscription rights or warrants so listed or approved; or any warrant or right to purchase or subscribe to any of the foregoing; any security issued by any person organized and operated not for private profit but exclusively for religious, educational, benevolent, charitable, fraternal, social, athletic, or reformatory purposes, or as a chamber of commerce or trade or professional association;

(9)

(10)

any commercial paper which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and which evidences an obligation to pay cash within nine months of the date of issuance, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal of such paper which is likewise limited, or any guarantee of such paper or of any such renewal;

(11)

any investment contract issued in connection with an employees' stock purchase, savings, pension, profit-sharing, or similar benefit plan if the [Administrator] is notified in writing thirty days before the inception of the plan or, with respect to plans which are in effect on the effective date of this act, within sixty days thereafter (or within thirty days before they are reopened if they are closed on the effective date of this act);

[(12) insert any desired exemption for cooperatives.]

(b)

The following transactions are exempted from sections 301 and 403:

(1)

Any isolated non-issuer transaction, whether effected through a broker-dealer or not; any non-issuer distribution of an outstanding security if (A) a recognized securities manual contains the names of the issuer's officers and directors, a balance sheet of the issuer as of a date within eighteen months, and a profit and loss statement for either the fiscal year preceding that date or the most recent year of operations, or (B) the security has a fixed maturity or a fixed interest or dividend provision and there has been no default during the current fiscal year or within the three preceding fiscal years, or during the existence of the issuer and any predecessors if less than three years, in the payment of principal, interest, or dividends on the security;

(2)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(3)

any non-issuer transaction effected by or through a registered broker-dealer pursuant to an unsolicited order or offer to buy; but the [Administrator] may by rule require that the customer acknowledge upon a specified form that the sale was unsolicited, and that a signed copy of each such form be preserved by the broker-dealer for a specified period; any transaction between the issuer or other person on whose behalf the offering is made and an underwriter, or among underwriters; any transaction in a bond or other evidence of indebtedness secured by a real or chattel mortgage or deed of trust, or by an agreement for the sale of real estate or chattels, if the entire mortgage, deed of trust, or agreement, together with all the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness secured thereby, is offered and sold as a unit; any transaction by an executor, administrator, sheriff, marshal, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, guardian, or conservator; any transaction executed by a bona fide pledgee without any purpose of evading this act;

(4)

(5)

(6)

(7)

(8)

any offer or sale to a bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, investment company as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, pension or profit-sharing trust, or other financial institution or institutional buyer, or to a broker-dealer, whether the purchaser is acting for itself or in some fiduciary capacity;

(9)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

any transaction pursuant to an offer directed by the offeror to not more than ten persons (other than those designated in paragraph (8)) in this state during any period of twelve consecutive months, whether or not the offeror or any of the offerees is then present in this state, if (A) the seller reasonably believes that all the buyers in this state (other than those designated in paragraph (8)) are purchasing for investment, and (B) no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting any prospective buyer in this state (other than those designated in paragraph (8)); but the [Administrator] may by rule or order as to any security or transaction or any type of security or transaction, withdraw or further condition this exemption, or increase or decrease the number of offerees permitted, or waive the conditions in Clauses (A) and (B) with or without the substitution of a limitation on remuneration; any offer or sale of a preorganization certificate or subscription if (A) no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting any prospective subscriber, (B) the number of subscribers does not exceed ten, and (C) no payment is made by any subscriber; any transaction pursuant to an offer to existing security holders of the issuer, including persons who at the time of the transaction are holders of convertible securities, non-transferable warrants, or transferable warrants exercisable within not more than ninety days of their issuance, if (A) no commission or other remuneration (other than a standby commission) is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting any security holder in this state, or (B) the issuer first files a notice specifying the terms of the offer and the [Administrator] does not by order disallow the exemption within the next five full business days; any offer (but not a sale) of a security for which registration statements have been filed under both this act and the Securities Act of 1933 if no stop order or refusal order is in effect and no public proceeding or examination looking toward such an order is pending under either act.

(10)

(11)

(12)

(c)

The [Administrator] may by order deny or revoke any exemption specified in clause (9) or (11) of subsection (a) or in subsection (b) with respect to a specific security or transaction. No such order may be entered without appropriate prior notice to all interested parties, opportunity for hearing, and written findings of fact and conclusions of law, except that the [Administrator] may by order summarily deny or revoke any of the specified exemptions pending final determination of any proceeding under this subsection. Upon the entry of a summary order, the [Administrator] shall promptly notify all interested parties that it has been entered and of the reasons therefor and that within fifteen days of the receipt of a written request the matter will be set down for hearing. If no hearing is requested and none is ordered by the [Administrator], the order will remain in effect until it is modified or vacated by the [Administrator]. If a hearing is requested or ordered, the [Administrator], after notice of and opportunity for hearing to all interested persons, may modify or vacate the order or extend it until final determination. No order under this subsection may operate retroactively. No person may be considered to have violated section 301 or 403 by reason of any offer or sale effected after the entry of an order under this subsection if he sustains the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the order.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(d)

In any proceeding under this act, the burden of proving an exemption or an exception from a definition is upon the person claiming it.

[As amended August 1958.]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). The distinction between exemptions and exceptions from definitions is important in view of the fact that the exemptions enumerated in § 402 are not exemptions from the anti-fraud provisions of §§ 101 and 410(a)(2). See the exceptions from the definition of "agent" in § 401(b), the definition of "broker-dealer" in § 401(c), the definition of "investment adviser" in § 401(f), the definitions of "sale" and "offer" in § 401(j)(6), and the definition of "security" in the last sentence of § 401(l). Subsec. (a)(3). Each of the exemptions in Clauses (3)-(5) applies only if the security represents an interest in or a debt of the particular issuer, or is guaranteed by the particular issuer. The purpose is to make it clear that these exemptions do not apply when, for example, a bank acting as depository for a protective committee in a reorganization issues certificates of deposit, which in no sense represent an interest in or a claim against the bank. The exemption for bank securities in Illinois was so construed even before it was specifically limited as it now is. Jaffe v. Goldner 251 Ill.App. 188 (1929); see also Commissioner of Banks v. Chase Securities Corp., 298 Mass. 285, 301-05, 10 N.E.2d 472, 485-87 (1937), appeal dismissed, 302 U.S. 660. But it required an amendment in California [§ 25100(c)] to override a contrary interpretation. Young v. Three for One Royalties, 31 P.2d 789 (Cal.1934), rehearing denied with opinion, 1 Cal.2d 639, 36 P.2d 1065 (1934). Subsec. (a)(4). See the comment under § 402(a)(3). Subsec. (a)(5). See the comment under § 402(a)(3). With respect to the status of insurance policies and annuities, see the comment under the last sentence of § 401(l). By virtue of that section, the orthodox insurance policy or annuity is not a "security" and the blue sky law has no impact on it, whereas securities issued by insurance companies are exempted from registration under the conditions of § 402(a)(5) and hence are subject to the fraud provisions. The purpose of the "but" clause in § 402(a)(5) is to make it clear that the so-called "variable annuities" which have recently been developed, and which are securities under § 401(l), are not exempted. If the bracketed language in § 401(1) is deleted (see the Commissioners' Note under that section), the bracketed language in § 402(a)(5) should be deleted for the same reason. Subsec. (a)(6). The reference to federal credit unions is to those organized under 12 U.S.C. § 1751 et seq. [12 U.S.C.A. § 1751 et seq.]. Subsec. (a)(7). Twelve of the forty statutes with some sort of public-utility exemption refer specifically to regulation by municipal as well as state authority. The others do not necessarily exclude the possibility of municipal regulation. The reference in § 402(a)(7) to a "a governmental authority of any state" is broad enough to include a municipal authority. Subsec. (a)(10). This exemption is modeled on § 3(a)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77c(a)(3) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77c(a)(3)]. On the SEC construction of the phrase "current transaction," see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), p. 356. See also § 402(b)(8), which exempts an offer or sale of any security to banks and other institutional buyers. The two exemptions substantially overlap. Subsec. (a)(11). This exemption is designed to solve the problem which arises in those states whose Administrators take the position, also taken by the SEC, that employees' benefit plans of various kinds involve an offer of a security in the nature of an "investment contract," at least if participation is voluntary with each employee and he must contribute under the plan in order to participate. See Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 326-29. Subsec. (b)(1)(2). See the comment under § 305(i). Subsec. (b)(3). If necessary, the Administrator may use his rule-making authority under § 412(a) to define the term "solicitation." On the construction of the term in § 4(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77d(2) [15 U.S.C.A. § 77d(2)], see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 405-06. In one important respect § 402(b)(3) is broader than § 4(2) of the federal statute, which the SEC has always interpreted as exempting only the broker's part of the transaction. In the SEC's view, the selling customer must find his own exemption--normally the exemption in § 4(1) of the federal act which is comparable to the exemption in §

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

402(b)(1) of this Act for "any isolated non-issuer transaction." Section 402(b)(3) is not intended to be so limited. Of course, the exemption can in no case be used by an issuer, since it is limited to "any non-issuer transaction." Subsec. (b)(5). This exemption is severely restricted by the requirement that everything be both offered and sold as a unit. But it permits a public offering as a unit. Subsec. (b)(8). The term "institutional buyer" is broad enough to cover, for example, a college purchasing for its endowment fund or perhaps a labor union investing its surplus funds on a substantial scale. The term may be either left to ad hoc interpretation or defined by an interpretative rule under § 412(a). Subsec. (b)(9). The figure ten is in substance only a prima facie figure. An Administrator, for example, may want to reduce it for uranium stocks or oil royalties or increase it for a close corporation which wants to solicit twenty or thirty friends or relatives of the owners for additional capital. The section does not require a written representation by each buyer that he is taking for investment, but it would be prudent on the part of the seller to obtain something in writing. Moreover, one who in good faith buys for investment can later change his mind and resell, although the shorter the interval the harder it will be to show that there was a bona fide change of mind. Clause (B) is not intended to preclude solicitation by directors or officers or employees of the issuer so long as it is only an incidental function of their regular duties and they receive no additional compensation. It is also relevant whether such persons are specially hired in connection with the offering, particularly if they have a background in the securities business either as professional promoters or otherwise. Subsec. (b)(10). Subsections (b)(9) and (b)(10), though interrelated, serve different purposes. Since the purpose of § 402(b)(10) is to enable a new enterprise to obtain the minimum number of subscriptions required by the corporation law, the limitation is on the number of subscribers rather than the number of offerees. Hence there may be a publicly advertised offering of preorganization subscriptions. But there may be no payment until effective registration unless another exemption is available. One of the other exemptions which might be available is § 402(b)(9). In that event registration would not be required at all. But § 402(b)(10) itself simply postpones registration; it does not excuse registration altogether. Subsec. (b)(11). The reference to a "standby commission" in Clause (A) is designed to permit payment to an underwriter for his risk and services in connection with his commitment to take down any portion of the offering which is not taken down by the security holders. As to what constitutes the payment of remuneration otherwise, see the comment under § 402(b)(9). The specific authority to disallow by order under Clause (B) is not subject to the general procedure set out in § 402(c) for denying any of the exemptions specified in § 402(b). Subsec. (b)(12). The Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C.A. § 77a et seq.] and the SEC rules severely restrict the types of written offers that may be made before the effective date. Subsec. (c). This subsection permits the Administrator by order to deny or revoke the exemption for any of the exempted transactions, as well as two types of exempted securities, but only with respect to a specific case. He has no authority by rule or otherwise to revoke any statutory exemption generally. Subsec. (d). This codifies existing law. See the cases cited in Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), p. 414, n. 365.

§ 403 Filing of Sales and Advertising Literature

The [Administrator] may by rule or order require the filing of any prospectus, pamphlet, circular, form letter, advertisement, or other sales literature or advertising communication addressed or intended for distribution to prospective investors, including clients or prospective clients of an investment adviser unless the security or transaction is exempted by Section 402.

[As amended August 1958.]

Official Code Comment

Many statutes require advertising and sales literature to be approved by the Administrator before it is used. Some require merely filing prior to use. Some, particularly with respect to securities registered by notification, require sales literature to be filed either concurrently with or after its use. Section 403 affords the necessary flexibility, in conjunction with the authority in § 412(a) to classify, so that the Administrator may by rule or order apply any or all of these formulas to certain types of securities. Consistently with the "unless" clause, any rules or orders under this section can apply only to the person filing a registration statement or his principal.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

This amendment calls for a change in Appendix C-1 of the Uniform Securities Act, which should be amended by inserting the following language at the appropriate place: Sec. 403: Delete "including clients or prospective clients of an investment adviser."

§ 404 Misleading Filings

It is unlawful for any person to make or cause to be made, in any document filed with the [Administrator] or in any proceeding under this act, any statement which is, at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it is made, false or misleading in any material respect.

§ 405 Unlawful Representations Concerning Registration or Exemption

(a)

Neither (1) the fact that an application for registration under Volume 2 or a registration statement under Volume 3 has been filed nor (2) the fact that a person or security is effectively registered constitutes a finding by the [Administrator] that any document filed under this act is true, complete, and not misleading. Neither any such fact nor the fact that an exemption or exception is available for a security or a transaction means that the [Administrator] has passed in any way upon the merits or qualifications of, or recommended or given approval to, any person, security, or transaction.

(b)

It is unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any prospective purchaser, customer, or client any representation inconsistent with subsection (a).

§ 406 Administration of Act

(a)

This act shall be administered by the [insert name of local administrative agency and any related provisions on method of selection, salary, term of office, budget, selection and remuneration of personnel, annual reports to the legislature or governor, etc., which are appropriate to the particular state].

(b)

It is unlawful for the [Administrator] or any of [his] officers or employees to use for personal benefit any information which is filed with or obtained by the [Administrator] and which is not made public. No provision of this act authorizes the [Administrator] or any of [his] officers or employees to disclose any such information except among themselves or when necessary or appropriate in a proceeding or investigation under this act. No provision of this act either creates or derogates from any privilege which exists at common law or otherwise when documentary or other evidence is sought under a subpoena directed to the [Administrator] or any of his officers or employees. [(c) Insert a provision, if desired, covering fees for examinations, filings under section 403, and other miscellaneous filings for which no fees are specified elsewhere in this act.]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (b). The "except" clause in the second sentence takes care of cases in which the Administrator or a member of his staff is subpoenaed. The law of evidence is not clear in such cases whether and to what extent non-public information in the files of a governmental agency is privileged. The last sentence makes it clear that nothing in the Act affects the question of evidentiary privilege one way or the other. That question is left to the general law in the particular state. Subsec. (c). The only fees specifically provided for in this statute are the registration fees under §§ 202(b) and 305(b). Many statutes specify a wide variety of additional fees for certain filings, examinations, interpretative opinions and other special purposes.

§ 407 Investigations and Subpoenas

(a)

The [Administrator] in [his] discretion (1) may make such public or private investigations within or outside of this state as [he] deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of this act or in the prescribing of rules and forms hereunder, (2) may require or permit any person to file a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the [Administrator] determines, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated, and (3) may publish information concerning any violation of this act or any rule or order hereunder.

(b)

For the purpose of any investigation or proceeding under this act, the [Administrator] or any officer designated by [him] may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, agreements, or other documents or records which the [Administrator] deems relevant or material to the inquiry.

(c)

In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the [insert name of appropriate court], upon application by the [Administrator], may issue to the person an order requiring him to appear before the [Administrator], or the officer designated by [him], there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered or to give evidence touching the matter under investigation or in question. Failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt of court.

(d)

No person is excused from attending and testifying or from producing any document or record before the [Administrator], or in obedience to the subpoena of the [Administrator] or any officer designated by [him], or in any proceeding instituted by the [Administrator], on the ground that the testimony or evidence (documentary or otherwise) required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual may be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after claiming his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence (documentary or otherwise), except that the individual testifying is not exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury or contempt committed in testifying.

Official Code Comment This section is modeled generally on § 21(a)-(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78u(a)-(d) [15 U.S.C.A. § 78u(a)-(d)]. The immunity provision in subsection (d) is of the broader variety which forecloses subsequent prosecution and not merely the use of the compelled testimony. Compare Councilman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547 (1892), with Ullmann v. United States, 76 S.Ct. 497, 350 U.S. 422, 100 L.Ed. 511 (1956). The words "or contempt" in the "except" clause at the end do not appear in § 21(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C.A. § 78u(d)], but they do appear in the 1954 revision of § 3486 of the United States Criminal Code, 68 Stat. 745, 18 U.S.C. § 3486 [18 U.S.C.A. § 3486], the statute construed in the Ullmann case. The purpose is to assure against a witness' obtaining immunity, answering a few questions and then balking. See United States v. Bryan, 339 U.S. 323, 335 et seq. (1950). The compulsion of testimony under state process does not grant immunity from federal prosecution so far as the Fifth Amendment is concerned. Feldman v. United States, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 322 U.S. 487, 88 L.Ed. 1408 (1944) (prosecution under mail fraud statute); Dunham v. Ottinger, 243 N.Y. 423, 438, 154 N.E. 298, 302 (1926), cert. dismissed for want of a substantial federal question, 276 U.S. 592 (the compulsory testimony provision of the New York blue sky law [McKinney's General Business Law, § 352 et seq.] satisfies the Fifth Amendment so long as it guarantees against state prosecution). On the other hand, compulsion of testimony under state process may violate the self-incrimination clause of the state constitution if there is no guarantee against a resulting federal prosecution. People v. Den Uyl, 318 Mich. 645, 29 N.W.2d 284, 2 A.L.R.2d 625 (1947); State ex rel. Mitchell v. Kelly, 71 So.2d 887, 895 et seq. (Fla.1954).

§ 408 Injunctions

Whenever it appears to the [Administrator] that any person has engaged or is about to engage in any act or practice constituting a violation of any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, [he] may in [his] discretion bring an action in the [insert name of appropriate court] to enjoin the acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this act or any rule or order hereunder. Upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or writ of mandamus shall be granted and a receiver or conservator may be appointed for the defendant or the defendant's assets. The court may not require the [Administrator] to post a bond.

Official Code Comment

This section is modeled on §§ 21(e) and 21(f) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. §§ 78u(e), 78u(f), [15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78u(e)(f)].

§ 409 Criminal Penalties

(a)

Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act except section 404, or who willfully violates any rule or order under this act, or who willfully violates section 404 knowing the statement made to be false or misleading in any material respect, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both; but no person may be imprisoned for the violation of any rule or order if he proves that he had no knowledge of the rule or order. [No indictment or information may be returned under this act more than five years after the alleged violation.]

(b)

The [Administrator] may refer such evidence as is available concerning violations of this act or of any rule or order hereunder to the [attorney general or the proper district attorney], who may, with or without such a reference, institute the appropriate criminal proceedings under this act.

(c)

Nothing in this act limits the power of the state to punish any person for any conduct which constitutes a crime by statute or at common law.

Official Code Comment On the meaning of "willfully," see the comment under § 204(a)(2)(B). The sentence in brackets in § 409(a) is an optional provision for any state which does not have a general criminal statute of limitations.

§ 410 Civil Liabilities

Any person who

(1)

offers or sells a security in violation of section 201(a), 301, or 405(b), or of any rule or order under section 403 which requires the affirmative approval of sales literature before it is used, or of any condition imposed under section 304(d), 305(g), or 305(h), or offers or sells a security by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made, not misleading (the buyer not knowing of the untruth or omission), and who does not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the untruth or omission, is liable to the person buying the security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity to recover the consideration paid for the security, together with interest at six percent per year from the date of payment, costs, and reasonable attorneys' fees, less the amount of any income received on the security, upon the tender of the security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

(b)

Every person who directly or indirectly controls a seller liable under subsection (a), every partner, officer, or director of such a seller, every person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, every employee of such a seller who materially aids in the sale, and every broker-dealer or agent who materially aids in the sale are also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the seller, unless the non-seller who is so liable sustains the burden of proof that he did not know, and in exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by reason of which the liability is alleged to exist. There is contribution as in cases of contract among the several persons so liable.

(c)

Any tender specified in this section may be made at any time before entry of judgment.

(d)

Every cause of action under this statute survives the death of any person who might have been a plaintiff or defendant.

(e)

No person may sue under this section more than two years after the contract of sale. No person may sue under this section (1) if the buyer received a written offer, before suit and at a time when he owned the security, to refund the consideration paid together with interest at six percent per year from the date of payment, less the amount of any income received on the security, and he failed to accept the offer within thirty days of its receipt, or (2) if the buyer received such an offer before suit and at a time when he did not own the security, unless he rejected the offer in writing within thirty days of its receipt.

(f)

No person who has made or engaged in the performance of any contract in violation of any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder, or who has acquired any purported right under any such contract with knowledge of the facts by reason of which its making or performance was in violation, may base any suit on the contract.

(g)

Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person acquiring any security to waive compliance with any provision of this act or any rule or order hereunder is void.

(h)

The rights and remedies provided by this act are in addition to any other rights or remedies that may exist at law or in equity, but this act does not create any cause of action not specified in this section or section 202(e).

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[As amended August 1958.]

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). For a detailed breakdown of the civil liabilities under the present statutes, with annotations of some of the leading cases, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 962-82. Clause (1): Clause (1) imposes civil liability when the offer violates one of the specified provisions even though the sale does not. The making of a non-exempted offer before the effective date can create no civil rights in the offeree unless the offer results in a sale. But when it does, this language means that the buyer may recover even though no contract was made until after the effective date. Clause (2): This clause is almost identical with § 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77l (2), which was also borrowed almost verbatim in § 451.116 of the Michigan statute and § 13.1-522(a)(2) of the new Virginia act. For a comparison of § 12(2) of the federal statute with equitable rescission, from which it was adapted, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 997-1001, 1003-11. Section 410(a)(2), like § 101, the general fraud provision, applies regardless of whether the security is registered, exempted, or sold in violation of the registration requirements. Measure of damages: The measure of damages, when the plaintiff is not in a position to tender back the security, is the same under Clauses (1) and (2). It is designed to be the substantial equivalent of rescission. Subsec. (b). The defense of lack of knowledge is modeled on § 15 of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77o [15 U.S.C.A. § 77o], and § 20(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78t(a) [15 U.S.C.A. § 78t(a)]. The last sentence, with reference to contribution, is a safeguard to avoid the common-law rule which prohibits contribution among joint tort-feasors. Subsec. (d). This subsection is designed to codify the majority view of the few cases which have ruled on the question of survivability under the state and federal securities statutes. For the cases, see Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 1077-78. Although the question whether a statutory cause of action is assignable involves much the same considerations as whether it survives the death of either party, that question is left to the general law, whether decisional or under the general assignment statutes which exist in some states. Subsec. (e). The purpose of subsection (e)(2) is to take care of the case where the buyer has already disposed of the security before the rescission offer is made to him. In such a case the buyer is not foreclosed from bringing suit if he is not satisfied with the seller's computation of damages, but in order to do so he must reject the rescission offer within thirty days so that the seller may know where he stands. Subsec. (f). This result has been quite generally reached by the courts even in the absence of a specific provision. See the cases cited in Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), p. 967, n. 63. Subsec. (h). The mere presence of certain specific liability provisions in a statute is no assurance that other liabilities will not be implied by the courts under the doctrine which creates a common-law tort action for violation of certain criminal statutes. Restatement of Torts §§ 286-88. Notwithstanding the presence of several specific liability provisions in each of the several SEC statutes, the federal courts have implied a civil cause of action by a defrauded seller against the buyer under SEC Rule X-10B-5. See Loss, Securities Regulation (1951 with 1955 Supp.), pp. 1052-66. The "but" clause in § 410(h) is designed to assure that no comparable development is based on violation of § 101 of this Act.

§ 411 Judicial Review of Orders

Any person aggrieved by a final order of the [Administrator] may obtain a review of the order in the [insert name of appropriate court] by filing in court, within sixty days after the entry of the order, a written petition praying that the order be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith served upon the [Administrator], and thereupon the [Administrator] shall certify and file in court a copy of the filing and evidence upon which the order was entered. When these have been filed, the court has exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, enforce, or set aside the order, in whole or in part. The findings of the [Administrator] as to the facts, if supported by competent, material and substantial evidence, are conclusive. If either party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional material evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce the evidence in the hearing before the [Administrator], the court may order the additional evidence to be taken before the

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Administrator] and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such conditions as the court considers proper. The [Administrator] may modify [his] findings and order by reason of the additional evidence and shall file in court the additional evidence together with any modified or new findings or order. [The judgment of the court is final, subject to review by the (insert name of appropriate court).]

(b)

The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) does not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the [Administrator's] order.

Official Code Comment This section is modeled partly on § 12 of the Model State Administrative Procedure Act, this volume, and Handbook of National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws 334 (1944), and partly on § 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78y [15 U.S.C.A. § 78y].

§ 412 Rules, Forms, Orders, and Hearings

(a)

The [Administrator] may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules, forms, and orders as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including rules and forms governing registration statements, applications, and reports, and defining any terms, whether or not used in this act, insofar as the definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act. For the purpose of rules and forms the [Administrator] may classify securities, persons, and matters within [his] jurisdiction, and prescribe different requirements for different classes.

(b)

No rule, form, or order may be made, amended, or rescinded unless the [Administrator] finds that the action is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and consistent with the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of this act. In prescribing rules and forms the [Administrator] may cooperate with the securities administrators of the other states and the Securities and Exchange Commission with a view to effectuating the policy of this statute to achieve maximum uniformity in the form and content of registration statements, applications, and reports wherever practicable.

(c)

The [Administrator] may by rule or order prescribe (1) the form and content of financial statements required under this act, (2) the circumstances under which consolidated financial statements shall be filed, and (3) whether any required financial statements shall be certified by independent or certified public accountants. All financial statements shall be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting practices.

(d)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

All rules and forms of the [Administrator] shall be published.

(e)

No provision of this act imposing any liability applies to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, form, or order of the [Administrator], notwithstanding that the rule, form, or order may later be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

(f)

Every hearing in an administrative proceeding shall be public unless the [Administrator] in [his] discretion grants a request joined in by all the respondents that the hearing be conducted privately.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This subsection is largely modeled on the rule-making provisions of the SEC statutes. Some states have Administrative Procedure Acts which cut across this area. An order, of course, is directed to one or more particular persons, and a rule or form is of general applicability. Hence, when the Administrator is authorized to adopt rules or forms, he may not act by order, and vice versa. Subsec. (d). Local Administrative Procedure Acts may provide specific procedures for publishing rules and forms. In the absence of any such statute, § 412(d) leaves the procedure of publication to each Administrator. Subsec. (e). Section 412(e) is modeled on the comparable provisions in the SEC acts and many other federal administrative statutes.

§ 413 Administrative Files and Opinions

A document is filed when it is received by the [Administrator].

(b)

The [Administrator] shall keep a register of all applications for registration and registration statements which are or have ever been effective under this act and all denial, suspension, or revocation orders which have been entered under this act. The register shall be open for public inspection.

(c)

The information contained in or filed with any registration statement, application, or report may be made available to the public under such rules as the [Administrator] prescribes.

(d)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Upon request and at such reasonable charges as [he] prescribes, the [Administrator] shall furnish to any person photostatic or other copies (certified under [his] seal of office if requested) of any entry in the register or any document which is a matter of public record. In any proceeding or prosecution under this act, any copy so certified is prima facie evidence of the contents of the entry or document certified.

(e)

The [Administrator] in [his] discretion may honor requests from interested persons for interpretative opinions.

Official Code Comment Subsec. (a). This subsection prescribes no particular method of filing, although the Administrator is free to do so by rule under § 412(a). Subsec. (b). This subsection refers to a register of the applications and registration statements, not the physical documents.

§ 414 Scope of the Act and Service of Process

Sections 101, 201(a), 301, 405, and 410 apply to persons who sell or offer to sell when (1) an offer to sell is made in this state, or (2) an offer to buy is made and accepted in this state.

(b)

Sections 102, 201(a), and 405 apply to persons who buy or offer to buy when (1) an offer to buy is made in this state, or (2) an offer to sell is made and accepted in this state.

(c)

For the purpose of this section, an offer to sell or to buy is made in this state, whether or not either party is then present in this state, when the offer (1) originates from this state or (2) is directed by the offeror to this state and received at the place to which it is directed (or at any post office in this state in the case of a mailed offer).

(d)

For the purpose of this section, an offer to buy or to sell is accepted in this state when acceptance (1) is communicated to the offeror in this state and (2) has not previously been communicated to the offeror, orally or in writing, outside this state; and acceptance is communicated to the offeror in this state, whether or not either party is then present in this state, when the offeree directs it to the offeror in this state reasonably believing the offeror to be in this state and it is received at the place to which it is directed (or at any post office in this state in the case of a mailed acceptance).

(e)

An offer to sell or to buy is not made in this state when (1) the publisher circulates or there is circulated on his behalf in this state any bona fide newspaper or other publication of general, regular, and paid circulation which is not published in this state, or which is published in this state but has had more than two-thirds of its circulation outside this state during the past twelve months or (2) a radio or television program originating outside this state is received in this state.

(f)

Sections 102 and 201(c), as well as section 405 so far as investment advisers are concerned, apply when any act instrumental in effecting prohibited conduct is done in this state, whether or not either party is then present in this state.

(g)

Every applicant for registration under this act and every issuer who proposes to offer a security in this state through any person acting on an agency basis in the common-law sense shall file with the [Administrator], in such form as [he] by rule prescribes, an irrevocable consent appointing the [Administrator] or [his] successor in office to be his attorney to receive service of any lawful process in any non-criminal suit, action, or proceeding against him or his successor executor or administrator which arises under this act or any rule or order hereunder after the consent has been filed, with the same force and validity as if served personally on the person filing the consent. A person who has filed such a consent in connection with a previous registration need not file another. Service may be made by leaving a copy of the process in the office of the [Administrator], but it is not effective unless (1) the plaintiff, who may be the [Administrator] in a suit, action, or proceeding instituted by [him], forthwith sends notice of the service and a copy of the process by registered mail to the defendant or respondent at his last address on file with the [Administrator], and (2) the plaintiff's affidavit of compliance with this subsection is filed in the case on or before the return day of the process, if any, or within such further time as the court allows.

(h)

When any person, including any nonresident of this state, engages in conduct prohibited or made actionable by this act or any rule or order hereunder, and he has not filed a consent to service of process under subsection (g) and personal jurisdiction over him cannot otherwise be obtained in this state, that conduct shall be considered equivalent to his appointment of the [Administrator] or [his] successor in office to be his attorney to receive service of any lawful process in any non-criminal suit, action, or proceeding against him or his successor executor or administrator which grows out of that conduct and which is brought under this act or any rule or order hereunder, with the same force and validity as if served on him personally. Service may be made by leaving a copy of the process in the office of the [Administrator], and it is not effective unless (1) the plaintiff, who may be the [Administrator] in a suit, action, or proceeding instituted by [him], forthwith sends notice of the service and a copy of the process by registered mail to the defendant or respondent at his last known address or takes other steps which are reasonably calculated to give actual notice, and (2) the plaintiff's affidavit of compliance with this subsection is filed in the case on or before the return day of the process, if any, or within such further time as the court allows.

(i)

When process is served under this section, the court, or the [Administrator] in a proceeding before [him], shall order such continuance as may be necessary to afford the defendant or respondent reasonable opportunity to defend.

[As amended August 1958]

Official Code Comment This section defines and delimits the application of the Act in interstate or international transactions with only some of their elements in the state. It is not limited in its impact to the civil liability provisions of § 410. Section 414 and its appendages, §§ 401(c)(4) and 401(f)(6), determine the scope of the Act for all kinds of proceedings--civil, criminal, injunctive and administrative. It is quite clear that a person may violate the law of a given state, even criminally, without ever being within the state or performing within the state every act necessary to complete the offense. Strassheim v. Daly, 221 U.S. 280 (1911). So far as applying the Act in civil or injunctive or administrative proceedings is concerned, see the comment under §§ 414(g) and 414(h). Subsecs. (a)-(f). Section 414(a)-(f) can best be explained in the context of a civil action under § 410(a) by a buyer in State B against a selling broker-dealer in State S:

The basic approach of § 414(a)(1) is to apply the specified sections when "an offer to sell is made in this state."

2.

Section 414(c) provides, in substance, that an offer which originates in State S and is directed to State B is made in both states. Hence the statute of State B applies under § 414(c)(2) in the hypothetical case.

3.

By the same token, the statute of State S also applies to the offer under § 414(c)(1), on the theory that State S should not be used as a base of operations for defrauding persons in other states. It is thus quite possible for more than one statute to apply to a given transaction.

4.

Section 414(e)(1) deals with the problem of offers in the form of newspaper and magazine advertisements. It provides, in substance, that an advertisement in a regular newspaper or periodical is not an "offer" in any state other than the state of publication. Thus a seller may insert an advertisement in the New York Times and have it circulated freely in other states.

A slight variation of this problem occurs in connection with magazines of national circulation. The place of publication of these magazines is purely fortuitous so far as the purposes of § 414 are concerned. Accordingly, §

414(e)(1) refers also to a publication which is published within the state but has more than two-thirds of its circulation outside the state.

Section 414(e)(2) treats radio and television programs originating outside the state in the same way as newspapers or magazines published outside the state. For purposes of this section a radio or television program is considered to originate in the state where the microphone or television camera is, not at any relay station.

7.

The door left open in § 414(a) is then closed somewhat by § 414(a)(2), which provides in effect that a person in State B who makes an offer to buy as a result of an advertisement he sees in a paper published in State S (or a radio or television program originating in State S) may render the statute applicable if the seller then accepts the offer "in this state" (that is, State B). And § 414(d) specifies when an offer is "accepted in this state."

8.

If the selling dealer in State S merely sends a confirmation or delivers the security into State B, or the buyer in State B sends a check in payment from within State B, the statute of State B does not apply except when under § 414(d) the confirmation or delivery constitutes the seller's acceptance of the buyer's offer to buy.

9.

The parenthetical references in §§ 414(c) and 414(d) to "any post office in this state" are designed to make it clear that, when a person in State X directs an offer or acceptance to a person in State Y who has moved or gone temporarily to State Z, the act of State Y does apply and the act of State Z does not. This prevents entrapment of innocent persons who have no reason to believe that a communication will be forwarded into another state whose act has not been complied with.

10.

The applicability of the statute to buyers as distinct from sellers is covered by § 414(b), which is precisely the converse of § 414(a). Here, of course, there is no civil liability.

11.

Section 414(f) applies only to investment advisers.

12.

Sections 401(c)(4) and 401(f)(6) exclude from the definitions of "broker-dealer" and "investment adviser" certain persons who have no place of business in the state. Clause (A) of each section has much the same rationale as the exemption in § 402(b)(8) for sales to institutional buyers or broker-dealers. Clause (A) of § 401(c)(4), insofar as it refers to issuers or other broker-dealers, has the additional purpose of making it unnecessary for an out-of-state underwriter to register as a broker-dealer before negotiating with an issuer in the state or setting up a selling group with local broker-dealers in it. Clause (B) of each section is designed to permit a New York broker-dealer or investment adviser, for example, to take care of a few customers who live in New Jersey or are vacationing in Florida without registering as a broker-dealer or investment adviser in those states, as he would otherwise have to do under § 414.

13.

Nothing in the statute requires or permits one state to enforce the criminal provisions of another state's blue sky-law. Subsec. (g). The issuer does not have to file a consent to service unless it proposes to offer the security in the state through somebody acting on an agency basis in the common-law sense. Subsec. (h). The purpose of § 414(h) is to provide for substituted service of process when a seller in State S directs an offer into State B in violation of the registration provisions of State B or fraudulently. Under § 414(h) the buyer may sue the seller in State B and then bring suit on the judgment in State S. The section has been closely modeled on the type of nonresident motorist statute whose constitutionality was sustained in Hess v. Pawlowski, 47 S.Ct. 633, 274 U.S. 352, 71 L.Ed. 1091 (1927). Recent cases indicate that it is due process of law for a court of State B to enter a judgment in the hypothetical case discussed in this paragraph if the person in State S effected only an isolated transaction in State B without ever entering the state. In addition to the nonresident motorist precedents, see Travelers Health Ass'n v. Commonwealth of Virginia ex rel. State Corporation Commission, 70 S.Ct. 927, 339 U.S. 643, 94 L.Ed. 1154 (1950); International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 66 S.Ct. 154, 326 U.S. 310, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945); Parmalee v. Iowa State Traveling Mens Ass'n, 206 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1953), cert. denied 98 L.Ed 385, 346 U.S. 877, 74 S.Ct. 130; Schutt v. Commercial Travelers Mutual Accident Ass'n, 206 F.2d 158 (2d Cir. 1956). If this is correct, a court in State S will have to give full faith and credit to the judgment of the court of State B.

§ 415 Statutory Policy

This act shall be so construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those states which enact it and to coordinate the interpretation and administration of this act with the related federal regulation.

§ 416 Short Title

This act may be cited as the Uniform Securities Act.

§ 417 Severability of Provisions

If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of the act which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this act are severable.

§ 418 Repeal and Saving Provisions

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(a)

The [identify the existing act or acts] is [are] repealed except as saved in this section.

(b)

Prior law exclusively governs all suits, actions, prosecutions, or proceedings which are pending or may be initiated on the basis of facts or circumstances occurring before the effective date of this act, except that no civil suit or action may be maintained to enforce any liability under prior law unless brought within any period of limitation which applied when the cause of action accrued and in any event within two years after the effective date of this act.

(c)

All effective registrations under prior law, all administrative orders relating to such registrations, and all conditions imposed upon such registrations remain in effect so long as they would have remained in effect if this act had not been passed. They are considered to have been filed, entered, or imposed under this act, but are governed by prior law.

(d)

Prior law applies in respect of any offer or sale made within one year after the effective date of this act pursuant to an offering begun in good faith before its effective date on the basis of an exemption available under prior law.

(e)

Judicial review of all administrative orders as to which review proceedings have not been instituted by the effective date of this act are governed by section 411, except that no review proceeding may be instituted unless the petition is filed within any period of limitation which applied to a review proceeding when the order was entered and in any event within sixty days after the effective date of this act.

§ 419 Time of Taking Effect

This act shall take effect on [insert date, which should be at least sixty days or ninety days after enactment].

Official Code Comment

If the act is adopted in a particular state before the more essential uniform forms and rules have been drafted, the effective date should be suitably delayed.

PREFATORY NOTE

The original Uniform Securities Act was promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1956. The 1956 Act has been adopted, in whole or in part, in 37 jurisdictions.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

In undertaking to draft a revised Uniform Securities Act, the Drafting Committee was guided by the following principles:

(1)

The 1956 Act generally has worked well and the substantive content of that Act should be modified only if there is shown to be a need to do so;

(2)

The licensing and registration procedures specified in the 1956 Act should be modified only if there is shown to be a need to do so;

(3)

The authority of the state securities administrators in the enforcement area should be strengthened; and

(4)

Some expedited registration process should be available for certain 'seasoned' issuers where there appears less need for detailed securities review in order to protect investors. The Drafting Committee reviewed numerous drafts. The Committee had the assistance of advisors from several interested groups. including, alphabetically, the American Bankers Association, the American Bar Association, the American Stock Exchange, the Investment Company Institute, the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., the North American Securities Industry Association. In addition, the Reporter and individual members of the Drafting Committee met on various occasions with committees or representatives of these groups. Notwithstanding comprehensive reorganization and relocation, a very substantial amount of the statutory law of the 1957 Act has been retained in the Uniform Securities Act (1985). The cross-reference sheet included with these materials indicates where the provisions of the 1956 Act may be found in the draft Uniform Securities Act (1985). The structural reorganization undertaken follows the Conference's general drafting style. The Uniform Securities Act (1985) is divided into with sections as follows (the comparable sections of the 1956 Act are noted parenthetically):

While a state which previously has adopted the 1956 Act obviously could choose to update only certain of its law by adopting provisions from one or more Parts above the Drafting Committee strongly encourages that a state not do so. The revisions encompassed in this Act reflect a conscious effort to carefully balance the various interests involved in state securities regulation,

It should be noted that considerable effort was expended by the Drafting Committee to reach an accommodation of competing interests on the issues generating the most discussion. Thus, Section 302, the expedited registration of securities provision, was modified significantly from the draft presented to the Conference at the 1984 Annual Conference. In its final form, the section includes several criteria for eligibility designed to assure that the expedited registration process is available only to active operating companies with well established market activity for their securities.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Similarly, the new provisions regarding administrative sanctions, Section 602, spells out the various enforcement sanctions available to an administrator and cross-referenced the procedural and substantive provisions applicable to the imposition of those sanctions.

To the extent practicable, the Uniform Securities Act (1985) encourages both greater coordination between federal and state securities law regulation and greater coordination between federal and state securities law regulation and greater cooperation among states. Sections 205 and 209 reflect the former theme in the licensing and post-licensing provisions applicable to broker-dealers and investment advisers. Section 704 specifies numerous areas in which it is hoped that the states will continue to work jointly and achieve a maximum degree of uniformity.

Section 705 sets forth in a single provision the general standards guiding the state securities administrator, which standards essentially are the same as those under the 1956 Act, namely that the action to be taken is "in the public interest and appropriate for the protection of investors" and is "consistent with the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of this [Act]."

The comments following the sections have been prepared by the Reporter and the Chairmen of the Drafting Committee, based, among other sources, upon discussions and comments to comparable provisions of the 1956 Act, where applicable.

§ 101 Definitions.

As used in this [Act], unless the context otherwise requires:

(1)

Administrator [substitute any other appropriate term, such as Commission, Commissioner, Secretary] means the [insert name of administrative agency or individual].

Broker-dealer means a person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others or for the person's own account. The term does not include:

(i) a sales representative;

(ii)

an issuer, except when effecting transactions other than with respect to its own securities;

(iii)

a depository institution; or

(iv)

any other person the [Administrator], by rule or order, designates.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(c) (1956)]

(3)

Depository institution means:

(i) a person that is organized, chartered, or holding an authorization certificate under the laws of a state or of the United States which authorizes the person to receive deposits, including a savings, share, certificate, or deposit account, and which is supervised and examined for the protection of depositors by an official or agency of a state or the United States; and a trust company or other institution that is authorized by federal or state law to exercise fiduciary powers of the type a national bank is permitted to exercise under the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency and is supervised and examined by an official or agency of a state or the United States. The term does not include an insurance company or other organization primarily engaged in the insurance business or a Morris Plan bank, industrial loan company, or a similar bank or company unless its deposits are insured by a federal agency.

(4)

Filed means the actual delivery of a document or application to the [Administrator] or designee of the [Administrator] or to the principal office of the [Administrator].

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 413(a) (1956)]

Financial or institutional investor means any of the following, whether acting for itself or others in a fiduciary capacity:

(i) a depository institution;

(ii)

an insurance company;

(iii)

a separate account of an insurance company;

(iv) an investment company as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940;

(v) an employee pension, profit-sharing, or benefit plan if the plan has total assets in excess of $5,000,000 or its investment decisions are made by a named fiduciary, as defined in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, that is either a broker-dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, an investment adviser registered or exempt from registration under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, a depository institution, or an insurance company; and any other institutional buyer.

(vi)

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(8) (1956)]

(6)

Fraud, deceit, and defraud are not limited to common-law fraud or deceit.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(d) (1956)]

(7)

Investment adviser means a person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities or who, for compensation and as a part of a business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. The term does not include:

(i) an employee of an investment adviser;

(ii)

a depository institution;

(iii)

a lawyer, accountant, engineer, or teacher whose performance of investment advisory services is solely incidental to the practice of the person's profession;

(iv)

a broker-dealer whose performance of investment advisory services is solely incidental to the conduct of business as a broker-dealer and who receives no special compensation for the investment advisory services;

(v) a publisher, employee, or columnist of a newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication, or an owner, operator, producer, or employee of a cable, radio, or television network, station, or production facility if, in either case, the financial or business news published or disseminated is made available to the general public and the content does not consist of rendering advice on the basis of the specific investment situation of each client;

(vi) a person whose advice, analyses, or reports relate only to securities exempt under paragraph (1) of Section 401(b); and any other person the [Administrator], by rule or order, designates.

(vii)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(f) (1956)]

Except as provided in subparagraph (i), (ii), or (iii), issuer means a person who issues or proposes to issue a security, but:

(i)

The issuer of a collateral trust certificate, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, or share in an investment company without a board of directors or persons performing similar functions, is the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the trust or other agreement or instrument under which the security is issued.

(ii)

The issuer of an equipment trust certificate, including a conditional sales contract or similar security serving the same purpose, is the person to whom the equipment or property is or is to be leased or conditionally sold.

(iii)

The issuer of a fractional undivided interest in an oil, gas, or other mineral lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty is the owner of an interest in the lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty, whether whole or fractional, who creates fractional interests for the purpose of sale.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(g) (1956)]

Nonissuer transaction means a transaction not directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(h) (1956)]

(10)

Person means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, association, joint venture, government, governmental subdivision or agency, or any other legal or commercial entity.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(i) (1956)]

Price amendment means the amendment to a registration statement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 or, if no amendment is filed, the prospectus or prospectus supplement filed under the Securities Act of 1933, which includes a statement of the offering price, underwriting and selling discounts or commissions, amount of proceeds, conversion rates, call prices, and other matters dependent upon the offering price.

[New]

(12)

Promoter includes:

(i) a person who, acting alone or in concert with one or more other persons, takes the entrepreneurial initiative in founding or organizing the business or enterprise of an issuer;

(ii)

an officer or director owning securities of an issuer or a person who owns, beneficially or of record, ten percent or more of a class of securities of the issuer if the officer, director, or person acquires any of those securities in a transaction within three years before the filing by the issuer of a registration statement under this [Act] and the transaction does not possess the indicia of arm's-length bargaining; and a member of the immediate family of a person within subparagraph (i) or (ii) if the family member receives securities of the issuer from that person in a transaction within three years before the filing by the issuer of a registration statement under this [Act] and the transaction does not possess the indicia of arm's-length bargaining.

(iii)

[New]

Sale or sell includes every contract of sale, contract to sell, or other disposition, of a security or interest in a security for value. In this context:

(i)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Offer to sell includes every attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to purchase, a security or interest in a security for value.

(ii)

Offer to purchase includes every attempt or offer to obtain, or solicitation of an offer to sell, a security or interest in a security for value, but the term does not include a transaction that is subject to Section 14(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

(iii)

A security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, a purchase of securities or other item is considered to constitute part of the subject of the purchase and to have been offered and sold for value.

(iv)

A gift of assessable stock is deemed to involve an offer and sale.

(v)

A sale or offer of a warrant or right to purchase or subscribe to another security of the same or another issuer, or a sale or offer of a security that gives the holder a present or future right or privilege to convert into another security of the same or another issuer, is deemed to include an offer of the other security.

(vi)

The terms defined in this paragraph do not include the creation of a security interest or a loan; a stock dividend, whether the corporation distributing the dividend is the issuer of the stock or not, if nothing of value is given by stockholders for the dividend other than the surrender of a right to a cash or property dividend and each stockholder may elect to take the dividend in cash, property, or stock; or an act incident to a judicially approved reorganization in which a security is issued in exchange for one or more outstanding securities, claims, or property interests, or partly in exchange and partly for cash.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(j) (1956)]

Sales representative means an individual, other than a broker-dealer, authorized to act and acting for a broker-dealer or issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities. A partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, is a sales representative only if the person otherwise comes within the definition.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(b) (1956)]

Securities Act of 1933, Securities Exchange Act of 1934, Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, Investment Company Act of 1940, Investment Advisers Act of 1940, Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, National Housing Act, and Commodity Exchange Act mean the federal statutes of those names, as amended.

Security means: a note; stock; treasury stock; bond; debenture; evidence of indebtedness; certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement; a limited partnership interest; collateral-trust certificate; preorganization certificate or subscription; transferable share; investment contract; voting-trust certificate; certificate of deposit for a security; fractional undivided interest in an oil, gas, or other mineral lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty; a put, call, straddle, or option entered into on a national securities exchange relating to foreign currency; a put, call, straddle, or option on a security, certificate of deposit, or group or index of securities, including an interest in or based on the value of any of the foregoing; or, in general, an interest or instrument commonly known as a security, or a certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, whole or partial guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing. The term does not include:

(i) an insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract under which an insurance company promises to pay a fixed sum of money either in a lump sum or periodically for life or some other specified period; or an interest in a contributory or noncontributory pension or welfare plan subject to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

(ii)

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(l) (1956)]

Self-regulatory organization means a national securities exchange registered under Section 6 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, a national securities association of brokers and dealers registered under Section 15A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, a clearing agency registered under Section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board established under Section 15B(b)(1) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or Section 21 of the Commodity Exchange Act.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[New]

(18)

State means a state, commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(m) (1956)]

§ 201 Licensing of Broker-Dealer and Sales Representative.

(a)

A person may not transact business in this State as a broker-dealer or sales representative unless licensed or exempt from licensing under this [Act].

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 201(a) (1956)]

(b)

A broker-dealer licensed under this [Act] and an issuer may not employ a person as a sales representative in this State unless the sales representative is licensed under this [Act] or is exempt from licensing under this [Act].

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 201(b) (1956)]

(c)

A broker-dealer or issuer engaged in offering securities in this State may not employ, directly or indirectly, a person to engage in any activity in this State contrary to a suspension or bar from association with a broker-dealer or investment advisor imposed against that person by the [Administrator]. A broker-dealer or issuer does not violate this subsection unless the broker-dealer or issuer knows or in the exercise of reasonable care should know of the suspension or bar. Upon request from a broker-dealer or issuer and for good cause shown, the [Administrator], by order, may waive the prohibition of this subsection with respect to a person suspended or barred.

[New]

§ 202 Exempt Broker-Dealers and Sales Representatives.

The following broker-dealers are exempt from the licensing requirements of Section 201:

(1) a broker-dealer who either is registered or, except as provided in subsection (b), is not required to be registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and who has no place of business in this State if:

(i) the transactions effected by the broker-dealer in this State are exclusively with the issuer of the securities involved in the transactions, other broker-dealers licensed or exempt under this [Act], or financial or institutional investors;

(ii)

the broker-dealer is licensed under the securities act of a state in which the broker-dealer maintains a place of business and the broker-dealer offers and sells in this State to a person who is an existing customer of the broker-dealer and whose principal place of residence is not in this State; or

(iii)

the broker-dealer is licensed under the securities law of a state in which the broker-dealer maintains a place of business and the broker-dealer during any 12 consecutive months does not effect more than [15] transactions with more than [5] persons in this State in addition to transactions with the issuers of the securities involved in the transactions, financial or institutional investors, or broker-dealers, whether or not the offeror or an offeree is then present in this State; and other broker-dealers the [Administrator] by rule or order exempts.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(c) (1956)]

(b)

The exemption provided in subsection (a)(1)(i) is not available to a broker-dealer who deals solely in government securities and is not registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 unless the broker-dealer is subject to supervision as a dealer in government securities by the Federal Reserve Board.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(b) (1956)]

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(c)

The following sales representatives are exempt from the licensing requirements of Section 201:

(i) a sales representative acting for a broker-dealer exempt under subsection (a); a sales representative acting for an issuer in effecting transactions in a security exempted by paragraphs (1) through (4) and (11) through (13) of Section 401(b);

(ii)

(iii)

a sales representative acting for an issuer effecting offers or sales of securities in transactions exempted by Section 402;

(iv)

a sales representative acting for an issuer effecting transactions with employees, partners, officers, or directors of the issuer, a parent or a wholly-owned subsidiary of the issuer, if no commission or other similar compensation is paid or given directly or indirectly to the sales representative for soliciting an employee, partner, officer, or director in this State; and other sales representatives the [Administrator] by rule or order exempts.

(v)

[New]

§ 203 Licensing of Investment Adviser.

(a)

A person may not transact business in this State as an investment adviser unless licensed as an investment adviser or exempt from licensing under this [Act].

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 201(c) (1956)]

(b)

An investment adviser may not employ, directly or indirectly, a person to engage in any activity in this State contrary to a suspension or bar from association with a broker-dealer or investment adviser imposed against that person by the [Administrator]. An investment adviser does not violate this subsection unless the investment adviser knows or in the exercise of reasonable care should know of the suspension or bar. Upon request from an investment adviser and for good cause shown, the [Administrator], by order, may waive the prohibition of this subsection with respect to a person suspended or barred.

[New]

§ 204 Exempt Investment Advisers.

The following investment advisers are exempt from the licensing requirements of Section 203:

(1)

an investment adviser who is registered or is not required to be registered as an investment adviser under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 if:

(i) its only clients in this State are other investment advisers, broker-dealers, or financial or institutional investors;

(ii)

the investment adviser has no place of business in this State and the investment adviser directs business communications in this State to a person who is an existing client of the investment adviser and whose principal place of residence is not in this State; or

(iii)

the investment adviser has no place of business in this State and the investment adviser during any 12 consecutive months does not direct business communications in this State to more than [five] present or prospective clients other than those specified in subparagraph (i), whether or not the person or client to whom the communication is directed is present in this State; and other investment advisers the [Administrator], by rule or order, exempts.

[§ 240 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 401(f) (1956)]

§ 205 Application.

An applicant for licensing as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser shall file with the [Administrator] an application for licensing and a consent to service of process under Section 708. The application for licensing must contain the information that the [Administrator], by rule, requires.

(b)

The requirements of subsection (a) are satisfied by an applicant who has filed and maintains a completed and current registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission or a self-regulatory organization by filing with the [Administrator] notice of the registration in the form and content determined by the [Administrator], by rule, and a consent to service of process under Section 708. The registration information filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission or self-regulatory organization must be available to the [Administrator] through a central registration depository system approved by the [Administrator]. The [Administrator], by order, may require the submission of additional information by an applicant.

[§ 205 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 202(a) (1956)]

§ 206 Licensing Fees.

An applicant for licensing shall pay a licensing fee as follows:

(1) broker-dealer [$100] and for each branch office [$50].

(2)

sales representative [$25].

(3) investment adviser [$50].

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

Except in a year in which a licensing fee is paid, a licensed person shall pay an annual fee as follows:

(1) broker-dealer [$75] and for each branch office [$30].

(2)

sales representative [$15].

(3) investment adviser [$35].

(c)

For purposes of this section, branch office means an office of a broker-dealer in this State, other than the principal office in this State of the broker-dealer, from which three or more sales representatives transact business.

(d)

If an application is denied or withdrawn or the license is revoked, suspended, or withdrawn, the [Administrator] shall retain the fee paid.

[§ 206 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 202(b) (1956)]

§ 207 Examinations.

(a)

The [Administrator], by rule or order, may require an examination of:

(1)

an applicant for licensing under this Part;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(2)

a class of applicants; and

(3)

a class of persons who will represent an investment adviser in performing an act that requires licensing as an investment adviser in this State.

(b)

An examination may be administered by the [Administrator] or a designee of the [Administrator]. An examination may be oral or written, or both, and may differ for each class of applicants.

(c)

The [Administrator], by rule or order, may waive an examination as to a person or class of persons if the [Administrator] determines that an examination is not necessary for the protection of investors.

[§ 207 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 204(b)(6) (1956)]

§ 208 Licensing, General Provisions.

(a)

Unless a proceeding under Section 212 is instituted or the applicant is notified that the application is incomplete, the license of a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser becomes effective 30 days after the later of the date an application for licensing is filed and is complete or the date an amendment to an application is filed and is complete, in either case only if all requirements imposed under Section 207 are satisfied. An application is complete when the applicant has furnished information responsive to each applicable item of the application. The [Administrator] by order may authorize an earlier effective date of licensing.

(b)

The license of a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser is effective until terminated by expiration, revocation, or withdrawal.

(c)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

The license of a sales representative is effective only with respect to transactions effected on behalf of the broker-dealer or issuer for whom the sales representative is licensed.

(d)

A person may not act at any one time as a sales representative for more than one broker-dealer or for more than one issuer, unless the broker-dealers or issuers for whom the sales representative acts are affiliated by direct or indirect common control or the [Administrator], by rule or order, authorizes multiple licenses.

(e)

If a person licensed as a sales representative terminates association with a broker-dealer or issuer or ceases to be a sales representative, the sales representative and the broker-dealer or issuer on whose behalf the sales representative was acting shall promptly notify the [Administrator].

(f)

The [Administrator] by rule may authorize one or more special classifications of licenses as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser to be issued to applicants subject to limitations and conditions on the nature of the activities that may be conducted by persons so licensed.

[§ 208 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 202(a),201(b) (1956)]

§ 209 Post-Licensing Requirements.

(a)

The [Administrator] by rule may require that:

(1)

a licensed broker-dealer who is not registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 maintain minimum net capital and a prescribed ratio between net capital and aggregate indebtedness, which may vary with type or class of broker-dealer; or a licensed investment adviser who is not registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 maintain a minimum net worth.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

If a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser knows, or has reasonable cause to know, that a requirement imposed on it under this subsection is not being met, the broker-dealer or investment adviser shall promptly notify the [Administrator] of its current financial condition.

(c)

The [Administrator] by rule may require a fidelity bond from a broker-dealer who is not registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

(d)

A licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser shall file with the [Administrator] the financial and other information the [Administrator] by rule or order requires, but:

(1)

A licensed broker-dealer required to file financial reports under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 may satisfy periodic financial report requirements of this subsection by filing with the [Administrator] a copy of the financial reports filed under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; and

(2)

A licensed investment adviser required to file financial reports under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 may satisfy periodic financial report requirements of this subsection by filing with the [Administrator] a copy of the financial reports filed under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

(e)

A licensed broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser shall maintain the records the [Administrator] by rule requires, but compliance with the record keeping requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 by a broker-dealer or the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 by an investment adviser satisfies the requirements of this subsection.

(f)

Required records may be maintained in any form of data storage if they are readily accessible to the [Administrator]. Required records must be preserved for [five] years unless the [Administrator] by rule specifies a different period for a particular type or class of records.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(g)

If the information contained in a document filed with the [Administrator] as part of the application for licensing or under this section, except information the [Administrator] by rule or order excludes, is or becomes inaccurate or incomplete in a material respect, the licensed person shall promptly file correcting information, unless notification of termination has been given under Section 208(e).

[§ 209 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 202(d),(e);203(a)-(e) (1956)]

§ 210 Licensing of Successor Firms.

(a)

A licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser may file an application for licensing of a successor, whether or not the successor is in existence, if the fee the [Administrator] prescribes for the application is submitted with the application.

(b)

If a broker-dealer or investment adviser succeeds to and continues the business of a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser and the successor files an application for licensing within 30 days after the succession, the license of the predecessor remains effective as the license of the successor for 60 days after the succession.

(c)

Licensing of each licensed sales representative of the broker-dealer filing an application under subsection (a) or (b) continues without a separate filing or fee upon the licensing of the successor.

[§ 210 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 202(c) (1956)]

§ 211 Power of Inspection.

(a)

The [Administrator], without notice, may examine in a manner reasonable under the circumstances the records, within or without this State, of a licensed broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser in order to determine compliance with this [Act]. Broker-dealers, sales representatives, and investment advisers shall make their records available to the [Administrator] in legible form.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

The [Administrator] may copy records or require a licensed person to copy records and provide the copies to the [Administrator] to the extent and in a manner reasonable under the circumstances.

(c)

The [Administrator] may impose a reasonable fee for the expense of conducting an examination under this section.

[§ 211 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 203(d) (1956)]

§ 212 Grounds for Denial, Suspension, or Revocation.

(a)

The [Administrator] by order may (i) deny, suspend, or revoke a license, (ii) limit the securities activities that an applicant or licensed person may perform in this State, (iii) bar an applicant or licensed person from association with a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser, or (iv) bar from employment with a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser a person who is a partner, officer, director, or a person occupying a similar status or performing a similar function for an applicant or licensed person. Subject to Section 213, those actions may be taken only if the [Administrator] finds that the order is in the public interest and that the applicant or licensed person or, in the case of a broker-dealer or investment adviser, a partner, officer, or director, a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, or a person directly or indirectly controlling the broker-dealer or investment adviser:

(1)

has filed an application for licensing with the [Administrator] which, as of its effective date or any date after filing in the case of an order denying effectiveness, was incomplete in a material respect or contained a statement that was, in light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to a material fact; has willfully violated or willfully failed to comply with this [Act], a predecessor act, or a rule or order under this [Act] or a predecessor act;

(2)

(3)

is the subject of an adjudication or determination, after notice and opportunity for hearing, within the last five years by a securities agency or administrator of another state or a court of competent jurisdiction that the person has willfully violated the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Investment Advisers Act of

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

1940, the Investment Company Act of 1940, or the Commodity Exchange Act, or the securities law of any other state but only if the acts constituting the violation of that state's law would constitute a violation of this [Act] had the acts occurred in this State; within the last ten years, has been convicted of an offense that the [Administrator] finds:

(4)

(i) involves the purchase or sale of a security, taking a false oath, making a false report, bribery, perjury, burglary, robbery, or attempt or conspiracy to commit any of those offenses;

(ii) arises out of the conduct of business as a broker-dealer, investment adviser, depository institution, insurance company, or fiduciary; or

(iii) involves the larceny, theft, robbery, extortion, forgery, counterfeiting, fraudulent concealment, embezzlement, fraudulent conversion, or misappropriation of funds or securities or an attempt or conspiracy to commit any of those offenses;

(5)

is permanently or temporarily enjoined by a court of competent jurisdiction from acting as an investment adviser, underwriter, broker-dealer, or as an affiliated person or employee of an investment company, depository institution, or insurance company, or from engaging in or continuing conduct or practice in connection with any of the foregoing activities, or in connection with the purchase or sale of a security; is the subject of an order of the [Administrator] denying, suspending, or revoking the person's license as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser; is the subject of any of the following orders that are currently effective and were issued within the last five years:

(6)

(7)

(i) an order by the securities agency or administrator of another state or Canadian province or territory, or by the Securities and Exchange Commission, entered after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying, suspending, or revoking the person's license as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser, or the substantial equivalent of those terms;

(ii)

a suspension or expulsion from membership in or association with a member of a self-regulatory organization;

(iii)

a United States Postal Service fraud order;

(iv)

a cease and desist order entered after notice and opportunity for hearing by the [Administrator], the securities agency or administrator of another state, or a Canadian province or territory, the Securities and Exchange Commission, or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission; or an order by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission denying, suspending, or revoking registration under the Commodity Exchange Act; has engaged in unethical or dishonest practices in the securities business; is insolvent, either in the sense that liabilities exceed assets or in the sense that obligations cannot be met as they mature, but the [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer or investment adviser under this subsection without a finding of insolvency as to the broker-dealer or investment adviser;

(v)

(8)

(9)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

is determined by the [Administrator] in compliance with Section 213 not to be qualified because of the lack of training, experience, and knowledge of the securities business; has failed reasonably to supervise a sales representative or employee; or (12)

(11)

has failed to pay the proper filing fee within 30 days after being notified by the [Administrator] of a deficiency, but the [Administrator] shall vacate an order under this subsection when the deficiency is corrected.

(b)

The [Administrator] may not begin a proceeding on the basis of a fact or transaction known to the [Administrator] when the license became effective unless the proceeding is begun within the 90 days after issuance of the license.

(c)

If the [Administrator] finds that an applicant or licensed person is no longer in existence, has ceased to do business as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser, is adjudicated mentally incompetent or subjected to the control of a committee, conservator, or guardian, or cannot be located after reasonable search, the [Administrator], by order, may deny the application or revoke the license.

[§ 212 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 204(a), (b) (1956)]

§ 213 Denial, Suspension, or Revocation on Grounds of Lack of Qualification.

The [Administrator's] determination that an applicant or licensed person lacks qualification under Section 212 is limited by the following provisions:

(1)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order against a broker-dealer because of the lack of qualification of (i) a person other than the broker-dealer if the broker-dealer is an individual or (ii) a sales representative of the broker-dealer.

(2)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order against an investment adviser because of the lack of qualification of (i) a person other than the investment adviser if the investment adviser is an individual or (ii) any other person who represents the investment adviser in doing an act that makes the person an investment adviser.

(3)

The [Administrator] may not enter an order solely because of lack of experience of the applicant or licensed person if the applicant or licensed person is qualified by training or knowledge, or both.

(4)

The [Administrator] shall consider that a sales representative who will work under the supervision of a licensed broker-dealer need not have the same qualifications as a broker-dealer.

(5)

The [Administrator] shall consider that an investment adviser is not necessarily qualified solely because of experience as a broker-dealer or sales representative.

[§ 213 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 204(b) (1956)]

§ 214 Withdrawal.

An application for a license may be withdrawn by the applicant without prejudice before the license becomes effective.

(b)

Withdrawal from licensing as a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser becomes effective 30 days after receipt by the [Administrator] of an application to withdraw or within any shorter period the [Administrator], by order, determines, unless:

(1) a revocation or suspension proceeding is pending when the application is filed;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(2)

a proceeding to revoke or suspend or to impose conditions upon the withdrawal is instituted within 30 days after the application is filed; or additional information is requested by the [Administrator] regarding the withdrawal application.

(3)

(c)

If a proceeding is pending or instituted under subsection (b), withdrawal becomes effective at the time and upon the conditions the [Administrator] by order determines. If additional information is requested, withdrawal is effective 30 days after the additional information is filed. Although no proceeding is pending or instituted and withdrawal becomes effective, the [Administrator] may institute a proceeding under Section 212 within one year after withdrawal became effective and enter an order as of the last date on which licensing was effective.

[§ 214 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 204(e) (1956)]

§ 215 Custody of Client's Securities and Funds.

(a)

Unless prohibited by rule or order of the [Administrator], an investment adviser registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 may take or retain custody of securities or funds of a client.

(b)

To the extent permitted by rule or order of the [Administrator], an investment adviser exempt from registration under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, but licensed as an investment adviser under this [Act], may take or retain custody of securities or funds of a client.

[§ 215 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 102(c) (1956)]

§ 301 Registration Requirement.

A person may not offer to sell or sell a security in this State unless it is registered under this [Act] or the security or transaction is exempt under this [Act].

[§ 301 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 301 (1956)]

§ 302 Registration by Filing.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(a)

Securities for which a registration statement has been filed under the Securities Act of 1933 in connection with the offering of the securities may be registered by filing, whether or not they are also eligible for registration under Section 303 or 304, if:

(1)

the issuer is organized under the laws of the United States or a state or, if the issuer is not organized under the laws of the United States or a state, it has appointed a duly authorized agent in the United States for service of process;

(2)

the issuer has actively engaged in business operations in the United States for a period of at least 36 consecutive calendar months immediately before the filing of the federal registration statement;

(3)

the issuer has registered a class of equity securities under Section 12(b) or 12(g) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which class of securities is held of record by 500 or more persons;

(4)

the issuer has:

(i) either a total net worth of $4,000,000 or a total net worth of $2,000,000 and net pretax income from operations before allowances for extraordinary items, for at least two of the three preceding fiscal years;

(ii) not less than 400,000 units of the class of security registered under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 held by the public, excluding securities held by officers and directors of the issuer, underwriters and persons beneficially owning ten percent or more of that class of security; and

(iii)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

no outstanding warrants and options held by the underwriters and executive officers and directors of the issuer in an amount exceeding ten percent of the total number of shares to be outstanding after completion of the offering of the securities being registered; the issuer has been subject to the requirements of Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and has filed all the material required to be filed under Sections 13 and 14 of that act for at least 36 consecutive calendar months immediately before the filing of the federal registration statement and the issuer has filed in a timely manner all reports required to be filed during the 12 calendar months next preceding the filing of the federal registration statement; for at least 30 days during the three months next preceding the offering of the securities registered there have been at least four market makers for the class of equity securities registered under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(5)

(6)

(7)

each of the underwriters participating in the offering of the security and each broker-dealer who will offer the security in this State is a member of or is subject to the rules of fair practice of a national association of securities dealers with respect to the offering and the underwriters have contracted to purchase the securities offered in a principal capacity;

(8)

the aggregate commissions or discounts to be received by the underwriters will not exceed ten percent of the aggregate price at which the securities being registered are offered to the public;

(9)

neither the issuer nor any of its subsidiaries, since the end of the fiscal year next preceding the filing of the registration statement, have (i) failed to pay a dividend or sinking fund installment on preferred stock, (ii) defaulted on indebtedness for borrowed money, or (iii) defaulted on the rental on one or more long-term leases, which defaults in the aggregate are material to the financial position of the issuer and its subsidiaries, taken as a whole; and in the case of an equity security, the price at which the security will be offered to the public is not less than five dollars a share.

(10)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

A registration statement under this section must contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in Section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by Section 708:

(1)

a statement demonstrating eligibility for registration by filing;

(2)

the name, address, and form of organization of the issuer;

(3)

with respect to a person on whose behalf a part of the offering is to be made in a nonissuer distribution: name and address; the amount of securities of the issuer held by the person as of the date of the filing of the registration statement; and a statement of the reasons for making the offering;

(4)

a description of the security being registered; and a copy of the latest prospectus filed with the registration statement under and satisfying the requirements of Section 10 of the Securities Act of 1933.

(5)

(c)

If the information and documents required to be filed by subsection (b) have been on file with the [Administrator] for at least [five] business days or any shorter period the [Administrator] by rule or order allows and the applicable registration fee has been paid before the effectiveness of the federal registration statement, a registration statement under this section automatically becomes effective concurrently with the effectiveness of the federal registration statement. If the federal registration statement becomes effective before the conditions in this subsection are satisfied and they are not waived, the registration statement becomes effective when the conditions are satisfied. The registrant shall promptly notify the [Administrator] by telephone or telegram of the date and time when the federal registration statement became effective and the content of the price amendment, if any, and shall file promptly a post effective amendment containing the information and documents in the price amendment. The [Administrator] shall promptly acknowledge receipt of notification and effectiveness of the registration statement as of the date and time the registration statement became effective with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

[New]

§ 303 Registration by Coordination.

(a)

Securities for which a registration statement has been filed under the Securities Act of 1933 in connection with the offering of the securities may be registered by coordination.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(b)

A registration statement under this section must contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in Section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by Section 708:

(1)

two copies of the latest form of prospectus filed under the Securities Act of 1933;

(2)

if the [Administrator] by rule or order requires: a copy of the articles of incorporation and bylaws or their substantial equivalents, currently in effect; a copy of any agreement with or among underwriters; a copy of an indenture or other instrument governing the issuance of the security to be registered; and a specimen, copy, or description of the security;

(3)

if the [Administrator] requests, subject to paragraph (2) of Section 703(b), any other information, or copies of any other document, filed under the Securities Act of 1933; and an undertaking to forward promptly, and not later than the first business day after the day they are forwarded to or filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, all future amendments to the federal prospectus, other than an amendment that delays the effective date of the registration statement.

(4)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(c)

A registration statement under this section becomes effective when the federal registration statement becomes effective if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

(1) no stop order is in effect and no proceeding is pending under Section 306;

(2)

the registration statement has been on file with the [Administrator] for at least ten days, but if the registration statement is not filed with the [Administrator] within ten days after the initial filing under the Securities Act of 1933, the registration statement has been on file with the [Administrator] for 30 days or any shorter period the [Administrator], by rule or order, specifies; and a statement of the maximum and minimum proposed offering prices and the maximum underwriting discounts and commissions has been on file for two full business days or any shorter period the [Administrator], by rule or order, specifies and the offering is made within those limitations.

(3)

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(d)

The registrant shall promptly notify the [Administrator] by telephone or telegram of the date and time when the federal registration statement became effective and the content of the price amendment, if any, and shall promptly file a post-effective amendment containing the information and documents in the price amendment.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(e)

Upon failure to receive the required notification or post-effective amendment with respect to the price amendment, the [Administrator], without notice or hearing, may enter a stop order retroactively denying effectiveness to the registration statement or suspending its effectiveness until the registrant complies with subsection (d). The [Administrator] shall promptly notify the registrant by telephone or telegram, and promptly confirm by letter or telegram if the [Administrator] notifies by telephone, of the issuance of the order. If the registrant proves compliance with the requirements of subsection (d) as to notice and post-effective amendment, the stop order is void as of its entry.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(f)

The [Administrator] by rule or order may waive either or both of the conditions specified in subsection (c)(2) and (3).

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(g)

If the federal registration statement becomes effective before all of the conditions in subsection (c) are satisfied and they are not waived, the registration statement becomes effective when all the conditions are satisfied. If the registrant advises the [Administrator] of the date when the federal registration statement is expected to become effective, the [Administrator] shall promptly advise the registrant by telephone or telegram, at the registrant's expense, whether all the conditions are satisfied and whether the [Administrator] then contemplates commencing a proceeding under Section 306; but the advice by the [Administrator] does not preclude the institution of a proceeding for a stop order suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement. A stop order issued under this subsection is not retroactive.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 303 (1956)]

(h)

The [Administrator] by rule or order may waive or modify the application of a requirement of this section if a provision or an amendment, repeal, or other alteration of the securities registration provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, or the regulations adopted under that act, render the waiver or modification appropriate for further coordination of state and federal registration.

§ 304 Registration by Qualification.

(a)

A security may be registered by qualification.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

A registration statement under this section must contain the following information and be accompanied by the following documents in addition to the information specified in Section 305(c) and the consent to service of process required by Section 708:

(1)

with respect to the issuer and any significant subsidiary: its name, address, and form of organization; the state or foreign jurisdiction and date of its organization; the general character and location of its business; a description of its physical property and equipment; and a statement of the general competitive conditions in the industry or business in which it is or will be engaged; with respect to every director and officer of the issuer, or person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions: name, address, and principal occupation for the last five years; the amount of securities of the issuer held by the person as of a specified date within 30 days before the filing of the registration statement; the amount of the securities covered by the registration statement to which the person has indicated an intention to subscribe; and a description of any material interest in any material transaction with the issuer or a significant subsidiary effected within the last three years or proposed to be effected; with respect to persons covered by paragraph (2): the compensation paid or given, directly or indirectly, during the last 12 months and estimated to be paid during the next 12 months, by the issuer, together with all predecessors, parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates, to all those persons in the aggregate;

(2)

(3)

(4)

with respect to a person owning of record, or beneficially if known, ten percent or more of the outstanding shares of a class of equity security of the issuer: the information specified in paragraph (2) other than occupation; with respect to a promoter, if the issuer was organized within the last three years: the information specified in paragraph (2), the amount paid or intended to be paid to the person within that period and the consideration for the payment;

(5)

(6)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

with respect to a person on whose behalf a part of the offering is to be made in a nonissuer distribution: name and address; the amount of securities of the issuer held by the person as of the date of the filing of the registration statement; a description of any material interest in any material transaction with the issuer, or a significant subsidiary, effected within the last three years or proposed to be effected; and a statement of the reasons for making the offering; the capitalization and long-term debt, on both a current and a pro forma basis, of the issuer and any significant subsidiary, including a description of each security outstanding or being registered or otherwise offered, and a statement of the amount and kind of consideration, whether in the form of cash, physical assets, services, patents, goodwill, or anything else, for which the issuer or a subsidiary has issued its securities within the last two years or is obligated to issue its securities; the kind and amount of securities to be offered; the proposed offering price or the method by which it is to be computed; any variation therefrom at which a proportion of the offering is to be made to a person or class of persons other than the underwriters, with a specification of the person or class; the basis upon which the offering is to be made if other than for cash; the estimated aggregate underwriting and selling discounts or commissions and finders' fees, including separately cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value to accrue to the underwriters or finders in connection with the offering, or, if the selling discounts or commissions are variable, the basis of determining them and their maximum and minimum amounts; the estimated amounts of other selling expenses, including legal, engineering, and accounting charges; the name and address of every underwriter and every recipient of a finder's fee; a copy of any underwriting or selling-group agreement pursuant to which the distribution is to be made, or the proposed form of the agreement whose terms have not yet been determined; and a description of the plan of distribution of securities that are to be offered other than through an underwriter;

(8)

(9)

the estimated cash proceeds to be received by the issuer from the offering; the purposes for which the proceeds are to be used by the issuer; the amount to be used for each purpose; the order or priority in which the proceeds will be used for the purposes stated; the amounts of funds to be raised from other sources to achieve the purposes stated; the sources of the funds; and, if part of the proceeds is to be used to acquire property, including goodwill, other than in the ordinary course of business, the names and addresses of the vendors, the purchase price, the names of the persons who have received commissions in connection with the acquisition, and the amounts of commissions and any other expense in connection with the acquisition, including the cost of borrowing money to finance the acquisition;

(10)

a description of the stock options or other security options outstanding, or to be created in connection with the offering, and the amount of the options held or to be held by every person required to be named in paragraph (2), (4), (5), (6), or (8) and by a person who holds or will hold ten percent or more in the aggregate of the options;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

the dates of, parties to, and general effect concisely stated of, every management or other material contract made or to be made other than in the ordinary course of business, if it is to be performed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement or was made within the last two years; and a copy of the contract;

(12)

a description of any pending litigation or proceedings to which the issuer is a party and that materially affect its business or assets, including any litigation or proceeding known to be contemplated by a governmental authority;

(13)

a copy of any prospectus, pamphlet, circular, form letter, advertisement, or other sales literature intended as of the effective date to be used in connection with the offering;

(14)

a specimen, copy, or description of the security being registered; a copy of the issuer's articles of incorporation and by-laws, or their substantial equivalents, as currently in effect; and a copy of any indenture or other instrument covering the security to be registered;

(15)

a signed or conformed copy of an opinion of counsel as to the legality of the security being registered, with an English translation if it is in a foreign language, which states whether the security when sold will be legally issued, fully paid, and nonassessable, and, if a debt security, a binding obligation of the issuer;

(16)

the written consent of an accountant, engineer, appraiser, or other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by the person, if the person is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation, other than a public and official document or statement, which is used in connection with the registration statement;

(17)

a statement of financial condition of the issuer as of a date within four months preceding the filing of the registration statement; a statement of results of operations and analysis of surplus for each of the three fiscal years preceding the date of the statement of financial condition and for any period between the close of the last fiscal year and

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

the date of the statement of financial condition, or for the period of the issuer's and any predecessors' existence if less than three years; and, if part of the proceeds of the offering is to be applied to the purchase of a business, the same financial statements that would be required if the business were the registrant; and any additional information the [Administrator] by rule or order specifies.

(c)

A registration statement under this section becomes effective 30 calendar days, or any shorter period the [Administrator] by rule or order specifies, after the date the registration statement or the last amendment other than a price amendment is filed, if:

(1) no stop order is in effect and no proceeding is pending under Section 306;

(2)

the [Administrator] has not ordered under subsection (d) that effectiveness be delayed; and the registrant has not requested that effectiveness be delayed.

(3)

(d)

The [Administrator] may delay effectiveness for a single period of not more than 90 days if the [Administrator] determines the registration statement is not complete in all material respects and promptly notifies the registrant of that determination. The [Administrator] may delay effectiveness for a single period of not more than 30 days if the [Administrator] determines that the delay is necessary, whether or not the [Administrator] previously delayed effectiveness under this subsection.

[§ 304 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 304 (1956)]

§ 305 Provisions Applicable to Registration Generally.

(a)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

A registration statement may be filed by the issuer, any other person on whose behalf the offering is to be made, or a broker-dealer licensed under this [Act].

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(a) (1956)]

(b)

Except as provided in subsection (c), a person filing a registration statement shall pay a fee of [1/20 of one] percent of the maximum aggregate offering price at which the registered securities are to be offered in this State, but not less than [$50] or more than [$500]. If a registration statement is withdrawn before the effective date or a pre-effective stop order is entered under Section 306, the [Administrator] shall retain [$50] of the fee.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(b) (1956)]

(c)

An open-end management company, a face-amount certificate company, or a unit investment trust, as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940, may register an indefinite amount of securities under a registration statement. The registrant, at the time of filing, shall pay a fee of [$100] and within 60 days after the registrant's fiscal year during which its registration statement is effective, pay a fee of [$500] or file a report on a form the [Administrator] by rule adopts, specifying its sale of securities to persons in this State during the fiscal year and pay a fee of [1/20 of one] percent of the aggregate sales price of the securities sold to persons in this State, but the latter fee must not be less than [$50] or more than [$500].

(d)

Except as permitted by subsection (c), a registration statement must specify the amount of securities to be offered in this State and the states in which a registration statement or similar document in connection with the offering has been or is to be filed and any adverse order, judgment, or decree entered by a court, the securities agency or administrator in any state, or the Securities and Exchange Commission in connection with the offering.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(c) (1956)]

(e)

A document filed under this [Act] or a predecessor act [within five years preceding the filing of a registration statement] may be incorporated by reference in the registration statement if the document is currently accurate.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(d) (1956)]

(f)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

The [Administrator] by rule or order may permit the omission of an item of information or document from a registration statement.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(e) (1956)]

(g)

In the case of a nonissuer offering, the [Administrator] may not require information under subsection (n) or Section 304 unless it is known to the person filing the registration statement or to the person on whose behalf the offering is to be made, or can be furnished by the person without unreasonable effort or expense.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(f) (1956)]

(h)

In the case of a registration under Section 303 or 304 by an issuer that has no public market for its shares or no significant earnings from continuing operations during the last five years or any shorter period of its existence, the [Administrator] by rule or order may require as a condition of registration that the following securities be deposited in escrow for not more than [three] years:

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(g) (1956)]

(i) a security issued to a promoter within the three years next preceding the offering or to be issued to a promoter for a consideration substantially less than the offering price; and a security issued to a promoter for a consideration other than cash, unless the registrant demonstrates that the value of the noncash consideration received in exchange for the security is substantially equal to the offering price for the security.

(ii)

(i)

The [Administrator] by rule or order may determine the conditions of an escrow required under subsection (h), but the [Administrator] may not reject a depository solely because of its location in another state.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(g) (1956)]

(j)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

The [Administrator] by rule or order may require as a condition of registration under Section 303 or 304 that the proceeds from the sale of the registered security in this State be impounded until the issuer receives a specified amount from the sale of the security. The [Administrator] by rule or order may determine the conditions of an impoundment required under this subsection, but the [Administrator] may not reject a depository solely because of its location in another state.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(g) (1956)]

(k)

If a security is registered under Section 302 or 303, the prospectus filed under the Securities Act of 1933 must be delivered to each purchaser in accordance with the prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933.

[New]

(l)

If a security is registered under Section 304, an offering document containing information the [Administrator] by rule or order designates must be delivered to each purchaser with or before the earliest of:

(1)

the first written offer made to the purchaser by or for the account of the issuer or another person on whose behalf the offering is being made, or by an underwriter or broker-dealer who is offering part of an unsold allotment or subscription taken by it as a participant in the distribution;

(2) confirmation of a sale made by or for the account of a person named in paragraph (1);

(3) payment pursuant to a sale; or delivery pursuant to a sale.

(4)

[New]

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(m)

A registration statement remains effective for one year after its effective date unless the [Administrator] by rule or order extends the period of effectiveness. All outstanding securities of the same class as a registered security are considered to be registered for the purpose of a nonissuer transaction while the registration statement is effective, unless the [Administrator] by rule or order provides otherwise. A registration statement may not be withdrawn after its effective date if any of the securities registered have been sold in this State, unless the [Administrator], by rule or order, provides otherwise. A registration statement is not effective while a stop order is in effect under Section 306(a).

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(i) (1956)]

(n)

During the period in which an offering is being made pursuant to an effective registration statement, the [Administrator] by rule or order may require the person who filed the registration statement to file reports, not more often than quarterly, to keep reasonably current the information contained in the registration statement and to disclose the progress of the offering.

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 305(j)]

(o)

A registration statement filed under Section 302 or 303 may be amended after its effective date to increase the securities specified being offered and sold. The amendment becomes effective upon filing of the amendment and payment of an additional filing fee, calculated in the manner specified in subsection (b) or (c), with respect to the additional securities to be offered and sold. The effectiveness of the amendment relates back to the date of sale of the additional securities being registered.

[New]

(p)

A registration statement filed under Section 304 may be amended after its effective date to increase the securities specified to be offered and sold, if the public offering price and underwriters' discounts and commissions are not changed from the respective amounts of which the [Administrator] was informed. The amendment becomes effective when the [Administrator] so orders and relates back to the date of sale of the additional securities being registered. A person filing an amendment shall pay an additional filing fee [two] times the initial registration fee, calculated in the manner specified in subsection (b) or (c), with respect to the additional securities to be offered and sold.

[New]

§ 306 Denial, Suspension, and Revocation of Registration.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(a)

The [Administrator] may issue a stop order denying effectiveness to, or suspending or revoking the effectiveness of, a registration statement if the [Administrator] finds that the order is in the public interest and that:

(1)

the registration statement as of its effective date or as of the proposed effective date in the case of an order denying effectiveness, an amendment under Section 305(o) or (p) as of its effective date, or a report under Section 305(n) is incomplete in a material respect or contains a statement that, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, was false or misleading with respect to a material fact; this [Act] or a rule, order, or condition lawfully imposed under this [Act] has been willfully violated, in connection with the offering, by the person filing the registration statement; by the issuer, a partner, officer, or director of the issuer, a person occupying a similar status or performing a similar function, or a person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, but only if the person filing the registration statement is directly or indirectly controlled by or acting for the issuer; or by an underwriter;

(2)

(3)

the security registered or sought to be registered is the subject of a permanent or temporary injunction of a court of competent jurisdiction or an administrative stop order or similar order entered under any other federal or state law applicable to the offering; but the [Administrator] may not institute a proceeding against an effective registration statement under this paragraph more than one year after the date of the order or injunction relied on, and the [Administrator] may not enter an order under this paragraph on the basis of an order or injunction entered under the securities act of another state unless the order or injunction was based on facts that currently would constitute a ground for a stop order under this section;

(4)

the issuer's enterprise or method of business includes or would include activities that are illegal where performed;

(5)

the offering has worked or tended to work a fraud upon purchasers or would so operate;[alternative subparagraph (5): the offering is being made on terms that are unfair, unjust, or inequitable;]

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

the offering has been or would be made with unreasonable amounts of underwriters' and sellers' discounts, commissions, or other compensation, or promoters' profits or participation, or unreasonable amounts or kinds of options;

(7)

a security sought to be registered under Section 302 is not eligible for registration under Section 302; with respect to a security sought to be registered under Section 303, there has been a failure to comply with the undertaking required by paragraph (4) of Section 303(b); or the applicant or registrant has failed to pay the proper filing fee; but the [Administrator] may enter only a denial order under this paragraph and shall vacate the order if the deficiency is corrected.

(8)

(9)

(b)

The [Administrator] may not institute a stop-order proceeding:

(1) against an effective registration statement on the basis of a fact or transaction known to the [Administrator] when the registration statement became effective unless the proceeding is begun within 30 days after the registration statement became effective; or with respect to a registration statement filed under Section 302, on the basis of paragraph (5) or (6) of subsection (a).

(2)

(c)

The [Administrator] by order under Section 712 may summarily postpone or suspend the effectiveness of a registration statement pending final determination of an administrative proceeding. Upon the entry of the order, the

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Administrator] shall promptly notify each person specified in subsection (d) that the order has been entered and of the reasons for the postponement or suspension and that within 15 days after the receipt of a written request from the person the matter will be set down for hearing. If no hearing is requested and none is ordered by the [Administrator], the order remains in effect until it is modified or vacated by the [Administrator]. If a hearing is requested or ordered, the [Administrator], after notice of and opportunity for hearing to each person specified in subsection (d), may modify or vacate the order or extend it until final determination.

(d)

A stop order may not be entered under subsection (a) or (b) without (i) appropriate notice to the applicant or registrant, the issuer, and the person on whose behalf the securities are to be or have been offered, (ii) opportunity for hearing, and (iii) written findings of fact and conclusions of law [in accordance with the state administrative procedure act].

(e)

The [Administrator] may modify or vacate a stop order entered under this section if the [Administrator] finds that the conditions that prompted entry have changed or that it is otherwise in the public interest.

[§ 306 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 306 (1956)]

§ 401 Exempt Securities.

(a)

As used in this section:

(1)

Guaranteed means guaranteed as to payment of all or substantially all of principal and interest or dividends.

(2)

Insured means insured as to payment of all or substantially all of principal and interest or dividends.

[Amended from §§ 401(e) (1965)]

(b)

The following securities are exempt from Sections 301 and 405:

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(a)(7) (1965)]

(6) equipment trust certificates in respect to equipment leased or conditionally sold to a person, if securities issued by the person would be exempt under this section;

[New]

(7)

a security listed or approved for listing upon notice of issuance on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or the Midwest Stock Exchange [, or listed on the (insert names of appropriate regional stock exchange)], if, in either case, quotations have been available and public trading has taken place for the class of security listed before the offer or sale of a security in reliance upon this exemption; any other security of the same issuer which is of senior or substantially equal rank; a security called for by subscription right or warrant so listed or approved; or a warrant or right to purchase or subscribe to any of the foregoing;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(a)(8) (1965)]

(8)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

a security designated or approved for designation upon issuance for inclusion in the national market system by the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., if, in either case, quotations have been available and public trading has taken place for the class of security designated before the offer or sale of a security in reliance upon this exemption; any other security of the same issuer which is of senior or substantially equal rank; a security called for by subscription right or warrant so designated; or a warrant or a right to purchase or subscribe to any of the foregoing; an option issued by a clearing agency registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, other than an off-exchange futures contract or substantially similar arrangement, if the security, currency, commodity, or other interest underlying the option:

[New]

(9)

(i) is registered under Section 302, 303, or 304;

(ii)

is exempt under this section; or

(iii)

is not otherwise required to be registered under this [Act];

[New]

(10)

a security issued by a person organized and operated not for private profit but exclusively for a religious, educational, benevolent, charitable, fraternal, social, athletic, or reformatory purpose, or as a chamber of commerce or trade or professional association [if at least ten days before a sale of the security the person has filed with the [Administrator] a notice setting forth the material terms of the proposed sale and copies of any sales and advertising literature to be used and the [Administrator] by order does not disallow the exemption within the next five full business days];

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(a)(9) (1965)]

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

a promissory note, draft, bill of exchange, or banker's acceptance that evidences an obligation to pay cash within nine months after the date of issuance, exclusive of days of grace, is issued in denominations of at least $50,000, and receives a rating in one of the three highest rating categories from a nationally recognized statistical rating organization; or a renewal of such an obligation that is likewise limited, or a guarantee of such an obligation or of a renewal;

§ 402 Exempt Transactions.

The following transactions are exempt from Sections 301 and 405:

(1)

an isolated nonissuer transaction, whether or not effected through a broker-dealer;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(1) (1965)]

(2)

a nonissuer transaction in an outstanding security if the issuer of the security has a class of securities subject to registration under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and has been subject to the reporting requirements of Sections 13 or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 for not less than 90 days next preceding the transaction; or has filed and maintained with the [Administrator] for not less than 90 days next preceding the transaction information, in such form as the [Administrator] by rule specifies, substantially comparable to the information the issuer would be required to file under Section 12(b) or Section 12(g) of the Securities Exchange Act were the issuer to have a class of its securities registered under Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and paid a fee with the filing of [$150]; a nonissuer transaction in a security of a class outstanding in the hands of the public for not less than 90 days next preceding the transaction if a nationally recognized securities manual designated by the [Administrator] by rule or order contains:

[New]

(3)

(i) the names of the issuer's officers and directors,;

(ii)

a statement of financial condition of the issuer as of a date within the last 18 months,; and

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(iii)

a statement of income or operations (a) for either the last fiscal year before that date or the most recent year of operation each of the two years next preceding the date of the statement of condition or (b) for the period as of the date of the statement of financial condition if the period of existence is less than two years;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(2) (1965)]

a nonissuer transaction in a security that has a fixed maturity or a fixed interest or dividend provision and there has been no default during the current fiscal year or within the three next preceding years, or during the existence of the issuer, and any predecessors if less than three years, in the payment of principal, interest, or dividends on the security;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(2) (1965)]

(5)

a nonissuer transaction effected by or through a registered broker-dealer pursuant to an unsolicited order or offer to purchase;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(3) (1965)]

(6)

a transaction between the issuer or other person on whose behalf the offering of a security is made and an underwriter, or a transaction among underwriters;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(4) (1965)]

(7)

a transaction in a bond or other evidence of indebtedness secured by a real estate mortgage, deed of trust, personal property security agreement, or by an agreement for the sale of real estate or personal property, if the entire mortgage, deed of trust, or agreement, together with all the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness secured thereby, is offered and sold as a unit;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(5) (1965)]

(8)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

a transaction by an executor, administrator, sheriff, marshal, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, guardian, or conservator;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(6) (1965)]

(9)

a transaction executed by a bona fide secured party without a purpose of evading this [Act];

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(7) (1965)]

(10)

an offer to sell or sale of a security to a financial or institutional investor or to a broker-dealer;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(8) (1965)]

(11)

a transaction pursuant to an offer to sell securities of an issuer, if the transaction is part of an issue in which there are no more than 25 purchasers in this State, other than those designated in paragraph (10), during any 12 consecutive months; no general solicitation or general advertising is used in connection with the offer to sell or sale of the securities; and no commission or other similar compensation is paid or given, directly or indirectly, to a person, other than a broker-dealer licensed or not required to be licensed under this [Act], for soliciting a prospective purchaser in this State; and either (i) the seller reasonably believes that all the purchasers in this State, other than those designated in paragraph (10), are purchasing for investment; or (ii) immediately before and immediately after the transaction, the issuer reasonably believes that the securities of the issuer are held by 50 or fewer beneficial owners, other than those designated in paragraph (10), and the transaction is part of an aggregate offering that does not exceed [$500,000] during any 12 consecutive months; but the [Administrator] by rule or order as to a security or transaction or a type of security or transaction, may withdraw or further condition this exemption or waive one or more of the conditions in this paragraph; an offer to sell or sale of a preorganization certificate or subscription if no commission or other similar compensation is paid or given, directly or indirectly, for soliciting a prospective subscriber; no public advertising or general solicitation is used in connection with the offer to sell or sale; the number of subscribers does not exceed ten; and no payment is made by a subscriber;

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(9) (1965)]

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(10) (1965)]

(13)

an offer to sell or sale of a preorganization certificate or subscription issued in connection with the organization of a depositary institution if that organization is under the supervision of an official or agency of a state or of the United States which has and exercises the authority to regulate and supervise the organization of the depositary institution. For purpose of this paragraph, supervision of the organization by an official or agency means that the official or agency by law has authority to require disclosures to prospective investors similar to that required under Section 304, impound proceeds from the sale of a preorganization certificate or subscription until organization of the depositary institution is completed, and require refund to investors if the depositary institution does not obtain a grant of authority from the appropriate official or agency;

[New]

(14)

a transaction pursuant to an offer to sell to existing security holders of the issuer, including persons who at the time of the transaction are holders of transferable warrants exercisable within not more than 90 days after their issuance, convertible securities, or nontransferable warrants, if:

(i) no commission or other similar compensation other than a standby commission, is paid or given, directly or indirectly, for soliciting a security holder in this State; or the issuer first files a notice specifying the terms of the offer to sell and the [Administrator] does not by order disallow the exemption within the next five full business days;

(ii)

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(11) (1965)]

(15)

a transaction involving an offer to sell, but not a sale, of a security not exempt from registration under the Securities Act of 1933 if:

(i) a registration or offering statement or similar document as required under the Securities Act of 1933 has been filed, but is not effective;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(ii)

a registration statement, if required, has been filed under this [Act], but is not effective; and no stop order of which the offeror is aware has been entered by the [Administrator] or the Securities and Exchange Commission, and no examination or public proceeding that may culminate in that kind of order is known by the offeror to be pending;

(iii)

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(12) (1965)]

a transaction involving an offer to sell, but not a sale, of a security exempt from registration under the Securities Act of 1933 if:

(i) a registration statement has been filed under this [Act], but is not effective; and

(ii)

no stop order of which the offeror is aware has been entered by the [Administrator] and no examination or public proceeding that may culminate in that kind of order is known by the offeror to be pending; [and]

[Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 402(b)(12) (1965)]

(17)

a transaction involving the distribution of the securities of an issuer to the security holders of another person in connection with a merger, consolidation, exchange of securities, sale of assets, or other reorganization to which the issuer, or its parent or subsidiary, and the other person, or its parent or subsidiary, are parties, if:

(i) the securities to be distributed are registered under the Securities Act of 1933 before the consummation of the transaction; or

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(ii)

the securities to be distributed are not required to be registered under the Securities Act of 1933, written notice of the transaction and a copy of the materials, if any, by which approval of the transaction will be solicited is given to the [Administrator] at least ten days before the consummation of the transaction and the [Administrator] does not disallow by order the exemption within the next ten days [.][]; and]

[New][(18) (i) a transaction involving the offer to sell or sale of one or more promissory notes each of which is directly secured by a first lien on a single parcel of real estate, or a transaction involving the offer to sell or sale of participation interests in the notes if the notes and participation interests are originated by a depository institution and are offered and sold subject to the following conditions:

(A)

the minimum aggregate sales price paid by each purchaser may not be less than $250,000;

(B) each purchaser must pay cash either at the time of the sale or within 60 days after the sale; and each purchaser may buy for that person's own account only;

(C)

(ii)

a transaction involving the offer to sell or sale of one or more promissory notes directly secured by a first lien on a single parcel of real estate or participation interests in the notes, if the notes and participation interests are originated by a mortgagee approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development under Sections 203 and 211 of the National Housing Act and are offered or sold, subject to the conditions specified in paragraph (i), to a depository institution or insurance company, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the Federal National Mortgage Association, or the Government National Mortgage Association; and a transaction between any of the persons described in paragraph (ii) involving a nonassignable contract to buy or sell the securities described in paragraph (i) which contract is to be completed within two years, if:

(iii)

(A)

the seller of the securities pursuant to the contract is one of the parties described in paragraph (i) or (ii) who may originate securities;

(B)

the purchaser of securities pursuant to a contract is any other person described in paragraph (ii); and the conditions described in paragraph (i) are fulfilled.]

(C)

[New]

§ 403 Additional Exemptions.

(a)

The [Administrator] by rule may exempt any other security or transaction or class of securities or transactions from Sections 301 and 405.

(b)

The [Administrator] by rule may adopt a limited offering transactional exemption that will further the objectives of compatibility with the exemptions from securities registration authorized by the Securities Act of 1933 and uniformity among the states.

[§ 403 is New]

§ 404 Revocation of Exemptions.

(a)

The [Administrator] by order may deny or revoke an exemption specified in paragraph (7), (8), (10), or (12) of Section 401(b) or in Section 402, with respect to a specific security or transaction.

(b)

A stop An order issued under this section is not retroactive. A person does not violate Section 301 or 405 by reason of an offer to sell or sale effected after the entry of an order under this section if the person did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the order.

§ 405 Filing of Sales and Advertising Literature.

The [Administrator] by rule or order may require the filing of a prospectus, pamphlet, circular, form letter, advertisement, or other sales literature or advertising communication addressed or intended for distribution to prospective investors, including clients or prospective clients of an investment adviser, unless the security or transaction is exempt under Section 401 or 402 or the investment adviser is exempt under Section 204.

[Sec.405 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 403 (1956)]

Uniform Securities Act § 501 (1985)

§ 501 Offer, Sale, and Purchase.

In connection with an offer to sell, sale, offer to purchase, or purchase, of a security, a person may not, directly or indirectly:

(1)

employ a device, scheme, or artifice to defraud;

(2)

make an untrue statement of a material fact or omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made not misleading, in the light of the circumstances under which they are made; or engage in an act, practice, or course of business that operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon a person.

(3)

[§ 501 Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 101 (1956)]

§ 502 Manipulation of Market.

(a)

Without limiting the general applicability of Section 501, a person may not:

(1)

quote a fictitious price with respect to a security;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(2)

effect a transaction in a security which involves no change in the beneficial ownership of the security for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security;

(3)

enter an order for the purchase of a security with the knowledge that an order of substantially the same size and at substantially the same time and price for the sale of the security has been, or will be, entered by or for the same, or affiliated, person for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security;

(4)

enter an order for the sale of a security with knowledge that an order of substantially the same size and at substantially the same time and price for the purchase of the security has been, or will be, entered by or for the same, or affiliated, person for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading in a security or with respect to the market for the security; or employ any other deceptive or fraudulent device, scheme, or artifice to manipulate the market in a security.

(5)

(b)

A transaction effected in compliance with, or conduct that does not violate, the applicable provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission thereunder is not a manipulation of the market under violation of subsection (a).

[§ 502 is New]

§ 503 Prohibited Transactions by Investment Advisers.

An investment adviser or person who represents an investment adviser in performing an act that requires licensing as an investment adviser under this [Act] may not, directly or indirectly:

(1)

employ a device, scheme, or artifice to defraud a client; or

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(2)

engage in an act, practice, or course of business that operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon a client.

[§ 503 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 102(a) (1956)]

§ 504 Misleading Filings.

A person may not make or cause to be made, in a document filed with the [Administrator] or in a proceeding under this [Act], a statement that the person knows or has reasonable grounds to know is, at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it is made, false or misleading in a material respect.

[§ 504 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 404 (1956)]

§ 505 Unlawful Representation Concerning Licensing, Registration, or Exemption.

(a)

Neither the fact that an application for licensing or a registration statement has been filed under this [Act] nor the fact that a person is licensed or a security is registered under this [Act] constitutes a finding by the [Administrator] that a document filed under this [Act] is true, complete, and not misleading. Neither of those facts nor the fact that an exemption or exception is available for a security or a transaction means that the [Administrator] has passed upon the merits or qualifications of, or recommended or given approval to, a person, security, or transaction.

(b)

A person may not make, or cause to be made, to a purchaser, customer, or client a representation inconsistent with subsection (a).

[§ 505 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 405 (1956)]

§ 601 Investigation; Subpoena Power.

(a)

The [Administrator] may make any investigation, within or without this State, the [Administrator] finds necessary to determine whether a person has violated or is about to violate this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] or to aid in enforcement of this [Act].

(b)

Except as provided in Section 703(c), the [Administrator] may publish information concerning a violation of this

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

[Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] or concerning types of securities or acts or practices in the offer to sell, sale, offer to purchase, or purchase of types of securities which may operate as a fraud or deceit.

(c)

For purposes of an investigation or proceeding under this [Act], the [Administrator] or an officer or employee designated by the [Administrator] by rule or order may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production, by subpoena or otherwise, of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, agreements, other documents, and records the [Administrator] considers to be relevant and material to the investigation or proceeding. The [Administrator] may require or permit a person to file a statement, under oath or otherwise as the [Administrator] directs, as to the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated.

(d)

If the activities constituting an alleged violation for which the information is sought would be a violation of this [Act] had the activities occurred in this State, the [Administrator] may issue and apply to enforce subpoenas in this State at the request of a securities agency or administrator of another state.

(e)

If a person does not testify or produce the documents required by the [Administrator] or a designated officer or employee pursuant to subpoena, the [Administrator] or designated officer or employee may apply to the court for an order compelling compliance.

(f)

A request for an order of compliance may be addressed to:

(1)

the [designate court having general trial jurisdiction] Court if the person is subject to service of process in this State; or a court of another state able to assert jurisdiction over the person refusing to testify or produce, if the person is not subject to service of process in this State.

(2)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(g)

Not later than the time the [Administrator] requests an order for compliance, the [Administrator] shall either send notice of the request by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the respondent at the last known address or take other steps reasonably calculated to give the respondent actual notice.

[§ 601 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 407(a),(b) (1956)]

§ 602 Enforcement.

(a)

If the [Administrator] reasonably believes, whether or not based upon an investigation conducted under Section 601, that (i) the sale of a security is subject to registration under this [Act] and the security is being offered or has been offered or sold by the issuer or another person in violation of Section 301 or (ii) a person is acting as a broker-dealer or investment adviser in violation of Section 201 or 203, the [Administrator], in addition to any specific power granted under this [Act] and subject to compliance with the requirements of Section 712, may issue, without a prior hearing, an order against the person engaged in the prohibited activities, directing the person to desist and refrain from further activity until the security is registered or the person is licensed under this [Act]. The cease and desist order must state the section of this [Act] or rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] which the [Administrator] reasonably believes has been or is being violated.

(b)

If the [Administrator] reasonably believes, whether or not based upon an investigation conducted under Section 601, that a person has violated this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act], the [Administrator], in addition to any specific power granted under this [Act], after notice and hearing in an administrative proceeding unless the right to notice and hearing is waived by the person against whom the sanction is imposed, may:

(1) issue a cease and desist order against the person;

(2) censure the person, if the person is a licensed broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser; bar or suspend the person from association with a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser in this State;

(3)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(4)

issue an order against an applicant, licensed person, or other person who knowingly violates this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act], imposing a civil penalty up to a maximum of [$2,500] for a single violation or of [$25,000] for multiple violations in a single proceeding or a series of related proceedings; or initiate one or more applicable actions specified in Section 603.

(5)

(c)

Imposition of the sanctions under this section is limited as follows:

(1)

if the [Administrator] revokes the license of a broker-dealer, sales representative, or investment adviser or bars a person from association with a licensed broker-dealer or investment adviser under this section or Section 212, the imposition of that sanction precludes imposition of the sanction specified in paragraph (4) of subsection (b); and the imposition by the [Administrator] of one or more sanctions under subsection (b) with respect to a specific violation precludes the [Administrator] from later imposing any other sanctions under paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (b) with respect to the violation.

(2)

(d)

For purposes of determining any sanction to be imposed under paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (b), the [Administrator] shall consider, among other factors, the frequency and persistence of the conduct constituting a violation of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act], the number of persons adversely affected by the conduct, and the resources of the person committing the violation.

[§ 602 is New]

§ 603 Power of Court to Grant Relief.

(a)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Upon a showing by the [Administrator] that a person has violated or is about to violate this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act], the [designate the appropriate court] may grant or impose one or more of the following appropriate legal or equitable remedies:

(1)

upon a showing of a violation of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act]:

(i) a temporary restraining order, permanent or temporary prohibitory or mandatory injunction, or a writ of prohibition or mandamus;

(ii)

a civil penalty up to a maximum of [$2,500] for a single violation or of [$25,000] for multiple violations in a single proceeding or a series of related proceedings;

(iii)

a declaratory judgment;

(iv) restitution to investors;

(v)

the appointment of a receiver or conservator for the defendant or the defendant's assets; and other relief the court considers just.

(vi)

(2)

upon a showing that the defendant is about to violate this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] only:

(i) a temporary restraining order;

(ii)

a temporary or permanent injunction; or a writ of prohibition or mandamus.

(iii)

(b)

In determining the appropriate relief under subsection (a), the court shall consider enforcement actions taken and sanctions imposed by the [Administrator] under Section 602 in connection with the transactions constituting violations of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act].

(c)

The [Administrator] is not required to post a bond in an action under this section.

(d)

Upon a showing by the securities agency or administrator of another state that a person has violated the securities act of that state or a rule or order of the securities agency or administrator of that state, the court, in addition to any other legal or equitable remedies, may impose one or more of the following remedies:

(1) appointment of a receiver, conservator, or ancillary receiver or conservator for the defendant or the defendant's assets located in this State; and

(2)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

other relief the court considers just.

§ 604 Criminal Penalties.

(a)

A person who willfully violates a provision of this [Act], except Section 504, or a rule of the [Administrator] under this [Act], or who violates Section 504, knowing the statement made to be false or misleading in any material respect, is guilty of a [insert the language for felony under applicable state law].

(b)

A person who willfully violates a stop order or a cease and desist order issued by the [Administrator] under this [Act] is guilty of a [insert the language for misdemeanor under applicable state law].

(c)

A person convicted of violating a rule or order under this [Act] may be fined, but may not be imprisoned, if the person proves lack of knowledge of the rule or order.

(d)

A criminal prosecution may not be instituted under this section more than [five] years after the alleged violation.

(e)

The [Administrator] may refer evidence concerning violations of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] to the [Attorney General or District Attorney] who, with or without a reference, may institute appropriate criminal prosecutions under this [Act].

(f)

This [Act] does not limit the power of this State to punish a person for conduct constituting a crime under other law.

[§ 604 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 409 (1956)]

§ 605 Civil Liability.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(a)

A person who offers to sell or sells a security in violation of Section 201(a), 301, 305(k), 501(2), or 505(b) or of a condition imposed under Section 305(g), (h), or (i) is liable to one who purchases the security from that person. Upon tender of the security, the purchaser may recover the consideration paid for the security and interest at the legal rate of this State from the date of payment, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees as determined by the court, less the amount of income received on the security. Tender requires only notice of willingness to exchange the security for the amount specified. A purchaser who no longer owns the security may recover damages. Damages are the amount that would be recoverable upon a tender less the value of the security when the purchaser disposed of it, plus interest at the legal rate of this State from the date of disposition of the security, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees determined by the court.

(b)

A person who offers or sells a security in violation of Section 501(2) is not liable under subsection (a) if:

(1)

the purchaser knew of the untrue statement of a material fact or misleading omission of a statement of a material fact; or the seller did not know and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known of the untrue statement or misleading omission.

(2)

(c)

A person who willfully participates in an act or transaction in violation of Section 502 is liable to a person who purchases or sells a security, other than a security traded on a national securities exchange or quoted on a national automated quotation system administered by a self-regulatory organization, at a price that was affected by the act or transaction for the damages sustained as a result of the act or transaction. Damages are the difference between the price at which the securities were purchased or sold and the market value the securities would have had at the time of the person's purchase or sale in the absence of the act or transaction, plus interest at the legal rate of this State from the date of the act or transaction, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees determined by the court.

(d)

A person who directly or indirectly controls another person who is liable under subsection (a) or (c), a partner, officer, or director of the person liable, a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, an employee of the person liable if the employee materially aids in the act, omission, or transaction constituting the violation, and a broker-dealer or sales representative who materially aids in the act, omission, or transaction constituting the violation, are also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the other person, but it is a defense that the person did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of the existence of the facts by which the liability is alleged to exist. With respect to a person who, directly or indirectly, controls another person who is liable under subsection (c), it is also a defense that the controlling person acted in good faith and did not, directly or indirectly, induce the act, omission, or transaction constituting the violation. Contribution among the several persons liable is the same as in cases arising out of breach of contract.

[§ 605 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 410(a),(b)]

§ 606 Statute of Limitations.

A person may not obtain relief under Section 605 unless suit is brought within the earliest of one year after the discovery of the violation, one year after discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable care, or three years after the act, omission, or transaction constituting the violation.

[§ 606 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 410(e) (1956)]

§ 607 Offer of Rescission or Settlement.

(a)

Relief may not be obtained under Section 605(a) if, before suit is commenced, the purchaser:

(1) receives a written offer:

(i) stating the respect in which liability under Section 605 may have arisen and fairly advising the purchaser of the purchaser's rights of rescission;

(ii)

if the basis for relief under Section 605(a) is a violation of Section 501(2), including financial and other information necessary to correct all material misstatements or omissions in the information which was required by this [Act] to be furnished to the purchaser as of the time of the sale of the security to the purchaser;

(iii) offering to repurchase the security for cash, payable on delivery of the security, equal to the consideration

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

paid, plus interest at the legal rate of this State from the date of payment, less income received thereon, or, if the purchaser no longer owns the security, offering to pay the purchaser upon acceptance of the offer an amount in cash equal to the damages computed under Section 605(a); and

(iv) stating that the offer may be accepted by the purchaser within 30 days after the date of its receipt by the purchaser or any shorter period, not less than three days, the [Administrator] by order prescribes; and fails to accept the offer in writing within the period specified under paragraph (1)(iv).

(b)

The [Administrator] by rule may prescribe the form in which the information specified in subsection (a) must be contained in an offer made under subsection (a).

(c)

An offer under subsection (a) must be delivered to the offeree or sent in a manner which assures actual receipt by the offeree.

(d)

If, after acceptance, a rescission offer is not performed in accordance with either its terms or this section, the offeree may obtain relief under Section 605 without regard to this section.

§ 703 Public Information; Confidentiality.

(a)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Except as provided in subsection (b), information and documents filed with or obtained by the [Administrator] are public information and are available for public examination under the [freedom of information or open records laws of this State].

(b)

The following information and documents do not constitute public information under subsection (a):

(1) information or documents obtained by the [Administrator] in connection with an investigation under Section 601; and information or documents filed with the [Administrator] in connection with a registration statement under Volume 3 or a report under Section 209 and constituting trade secrets or commercial or financial information of a person for which that person is entitled to, and has asserted, a claim of confidentiality or privilege authorized by law.

(2)

(c)

The [Administrator] may disclose:

(1)

information obtained in connection with an investigation under Section 601(a) to the extent provided in Section 601(b) subject to the restrictions of subsection (b)(2); and information obtained in connection with an investigation under Section 601(a), if disclosure is for the purpose of a civil, administrative, or criminal investigation or proceeding by a securities agency, law enforcement agency, or administrator specified in Section 704(a), and the receiving agency or administrator represents in writing that under applicable law protections exist to preserve the integrity, confidentiality, and security of the information.

(2)

(d)

This [Act] does not create any privilege or diminish any privilege existing at common law, by statute, rule, or otherwise.

§ 704 Cooperation with Other Agencies.

(a)

To encourage uniform interpretation and administration of this [Act] and effective securities regulation and enforcement, the [Administrator] may cooperate with the securities agencies or administrators of one or more states, Canadian provinces or territories, or another country, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Securities Investor Protection Corporation, any self-regulatory organization, any national or international organization of securities officials or agencies, and any governmental law enforcement or regulatory agency.

(b)

The cooperation authorized by subsection (a) includes:

(1) establishing a central depository for licensing or registration under this [Act] and for documents or records required or allowed to be maintained under this [Act]; making a joint license or registration examination or investigation; holding a joint administrative hearing;

(2)

(3)

(4)

filing and prosecuting a joint civil or administrative proceeding;

(5)

sharing and exchanging personnel;

(6)

sharing and exchanging information and documents subject to the restrictions of [Section 703(b) and (c)][cite other applicable state law]; and formulating, in accordance with the [administrative procedure act of this State], rules or proposed rules on matters such as statements of policy, guidelines, and interpretative opinions and releases.

(7)

[§ 704 is New]

§ 705 Rules, Forms, and Orders.

(a)

In addition to specific authority otherwise granted by this [Act], the [Administrator]:

(1)

shall adopt as a rule a description of the organization of the [Administrator's] office which states the general course and method of its organization and where and how a person may obtain information or make a submission or request; shall adopt rules of practice setting forth the nature and requirements of all formal and informal procedures available to a person, including a description of all forms and instructions that are to be used by a person dealing with the [Administrator];

(2)

(3)

may adopt rules, in addition to those otherwise required by this [Act], embodying appropriate standards, principles, and procedural safeguards that the [Administrator] applies in the administration of this [Act]; and may adopt rules defining any term, whether or not used in this [Act], insofar as the definition is not inconsistent with this [Act].

(4)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(b)

To keep rules adopted by the [Administrator] in harmony with the regulations adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission under the federal securities laws and to encourage uniformity with the rules of securities agencies and administrators in other states, the [Administrator], so far as is consistent with this [Act], shall take into consideration the regulations adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the rules of securities agencies and administrators in other states that enact a law comparable to this [Act].

(c)

Unless specifically provided in this [Act] to the contrary, a rule or order may not be adopted, amended, or repealed unless the [Administrator] determines that the action is:

(1) in the public interest and appropriate for the protection of investors; and consistent with the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of this [Act].

(2)

(d)

The [Administrator] may use his [or her] own experience, technical competence, specialized knowledge, and judgment in the adoption of a rule.

(e)

The [Administrator] by rule or order may prescribe:

(1)

the form and content of financial statements required under this [Act];

(2)

the circumstances under which consolidated financial statements must be filed; and

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(3)

whether a required financial statement must be certified and by whom. Unless the [Administrator] by rule or order provides otherwise, a financial statement required under this [Act] must be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles or other accounting principles as are prescribed for the issuer of the financial statement by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(f)

The [Administrator] shall file [in the office of the Secretary of State or other location required by law] and in the [Administrator's] office each rule adopted or amended and all rules existing on the effective date of this [Act] that have not been previously filed. The filing must be done as soon after adoption or amendment of the rule as is practicable. The [Administrator] shall affix to each rule a certification of the time and date of filing and keep a permanent register open to public inspection of all filed rules.

[§ 705 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 412 (1965)]

§ 706 Declaratory Orders and Rulings.

(a)

Any person may petition the [Administrator] for a declaratory order as to the applicability to specified circumstances of a statute, rule, or order under this [Act]. The [Administrator] may issue a declaratory order in response to a petition for that order unless the [Administrator] determines that the petition fails to comply with the [Administrator's] rules or, if the order were issued, would substantially prejudice the rights of a person who would be a necessary party and who does not consent to the determination of the matter by a declaratory order.

(b)

The [Administrator], upon application by an interested party, may conduct a hearing and issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] to a person, security, or transaction, or as to the meaning of a term used in this [Act].

§ 707 Good Faith Reliance.

No provision of this [Act] imposing liability applies to an act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with:

(1)

a rule or order adopted by the [Administrator], notwithstanding that the rule or order is later amended, repealed, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid; or a declaratory order or ruling issued by the [Administrator] under Section 706.

§ 708 Consent to Service of Process.

An applicant for licensing or registration under this [Act] or an issuer who proposes to offer a security in this State through an agent shall file with the [Administrator], in the form the [Administrator], by rule, prescribes, an irrevocable consent appointing the [Administrator] the person's agent for service of process in a noncriminal proceeding against the person, a successor, or personal representative, which arises under this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] after the consent is filed, with the same force and validity as if served personally on the person filing the consent.

(b)

A person who has filed a consent complying with subsection (a) in connection with a previous application for licensing or registration need not file an additional consent.

(c)

If a person, including a nonresident of this State, engages in conduct prohibited or made actionable by this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] and the person has not filed a consent to service of process under subsection (a), the engaging in the conduct constitutes the appointment of the [Administrator] as the person's agent for service of process in a noncriminal proceeding against the person, a successor, or personal representative which grows out of the conduct.

(d)

A consent to service filed on behalf of an issuer organized or domiciled under the laws of a foreign country whose securities are being offered in this State other than by or through underwriters, must be accompanied by an opinion of counsel stating that a judgment of United States courts will be recognized by the courts of the country in which the issuer is organized or domiciled.

(e)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Service under subsection (a) or (c) may be made by leaving a copy of the process in the office of the [Administrator], but it is not effective unless:

(1)

the plaintiff, who may be the [Administrator], promptly sends notice of the service and a copy of the process by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the defendant or respondent at the address set forth in the consent to service of process or, if no consent to service of process has been filed, at the last-known address, or takes other steps reasonably calculated to give actual notice; and the plaintiff files an affidavit of compliance with this subsection in the proceeding on or before the return day of the process, if any, or within such further time as the court, or the [Administrator] in a proceeding before the [Administrator], allows.

(2)

(f)

Service as provided in subsection (e) may be used in a proceeding before the [Administrator] or by the [Administrator] in a proceeding in which the [Administrator] is the moving party.

(g)

If the process is served under subsection (e), the court, or the [Administrator] in a proceeding before the [Administrator], shall order continuances as may be necessary to afford the defendant or respondent reasonable opportunity to defend.

(2)

all licenses and registration statements that become effective under this [Act];

(3)

all disciplinary and enforcement orders issued and reports of investigation made under this [Act];

(4)

all declaratory orders and rulings issued under this [Act]; and all other orders issued under this [Act].[(b) The [Administrator] shall maintain records consistent with applicable law.][(b) The [Administrator] shall retain:

(5)

(1)

all licenses and related applications and all registration statements currently effective or that have been effective within the last [five] years;

(2)

all licenses and related applications and all registration statements that have been denied, suspended, or revoked within the last [five] years, and the order of suspension, denial, or revocation;

(3)

all investigatory files under this [Act] that are open or that have been closed within the last [five] years, and any disciplinary or file-closure order pertaining to the file;

(4)

the transcript or record of all administrative hearings held during the last [five] years; and any other orders of the [Administrator] entered under this [Act].]

(5)

(c)

All records required to be maintained by subsections (a) and (b) may be maintained in any form of data storage.

(d)

Upon request, the [Administrator] shall certify under the seal of office a copy as being a true and correct copy of the records maintained by the office. The [Administrator] by rule may establish reasonable charges for furnishing or certifying copies. In an investigation or proceeding under this [Act], a copy so certified is prima facie evidence of the contents of the records certified.

[§ 709 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 413(b),(d) (1965)]

§ 710 Administrative Proceedings.

The [Administrator] may commence an administrative proceeding at any time with respect to a matter within the [Administrator's] jurisdiction. The [Administrator] shall commence an administrative proceeding upon the application of a person, unless:

(1)

the [Administrator] lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter;

(2) resolution of the matter requires the [Administrator] to exercise discretion to determine whether or not to issue an order;

(3)

a statute vests the [Administrator] with discretion to conduct or not to conduct an administrative proceeding before issuing an order to resolve the matter and, in the exercise of discretion, the [Administrator] determines not to conduct an administrative proceeding; resolution of the matter does not require the [Administrator] to issue an order that determines the person's legal rights, duties, privileges, immunities, or other legal interests;

(4)

(5)

the matter is not timely submitted to the [Administrator]; or the matter is not submitted in a form substantially complying with the rules of the [Administrator].

(6)

[§ 710 is New]

§ 711 Provisions Applicable to Administrative Proceedings.

(a)

All actions of the [Administrator] including administrative proceedings, adoption of rules, and issuance of orders are governed by [state administrative procedure act], but:

(1)

the issue of a stop order under Section 303(e) is governed by Section 303(e); the issue of an order pursuant to an emergency administrative proceeding is governed by Section 712; and the issue of a declaratory order or ruling is governed by Section 706.

(2)

(3)

(b)

All rules and orders issued under this [Act] are subject to judicial review [in accordance with the state administrative procedure act].

[§ 711 is New]

§ 712 Emergency Administrative Proceedings.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(a)

The [Administrator] may use emergency administrative proceedings in a situation involving an immediate danger to the public welfare requiring immediate action.

(b)

The [Administrator] may take only such action as is necessary to prevent or avoid the immediate danger to the public welfare that justifies use of emergency administrative proceedings.

(c)

The [Administrator] shall issue an order, including a brief statement of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and, if it is an exercise of the agency's discretion, policy reasons for the decision to justify the determination of an immediate danger and the [Administrator's] decision to take the specific action.

(d)

The [Administrator] shall give such notice as is practicable to persons who are required to comply with the order. The order is effective when issued.

(e)

After issuing an order under this section, the [Administrator] shall proceed as quickly as feasible to complete proceedings that would be required [under the state administrative procedures act] if the matter did not involve an immediate danger.

(f)

The record of the [Administrator] consists of the documents regarding the matter that were considered or prepared by the [Administrator]. The [Administrator] shall maintain these documents as the official record.

(g)

Unless otherwise required by law, the [Administrator's] record need not constitute the exclusive basis for the [Administrator's] action in emergency administrative proceedings or for judicial review of the action.

(h)

An order issued under this section is subject to judicial review [in accordance with the state administrative procedure act].

[§ 712 is New]

§ 801 Scope of [Act].

(a)

Sections 201, 301, 501, 502, 505, and 605 apply to a person who sells or offers to sell a security if:

(1)

an offer to sell is made in this State; or an offer to purchase is made and accepted in this State.

(2)

(b)

Sections 201, 501, 502, and 505 apply to a person who purchases or offers to purchase a security if:

(1)

an offer to purchase is made in this State; or an offer to sell is made and accepted in this State.

(2)

(c)

For the purpose of this section, an offer to sell or to purchase is made in this State, whether or not either person is present in this State, if the offer:

(1) originates in this State; or

(2)

is directed by the offeror to a destination in this State and received where it is directed, or at a post office in this State if the offer is mailed.

(d)

For the purpose of this section, an offer to purchase or to sell is accepted in this State if acceptance is communicated to the offeror in this State and has not previously been communicated to the offeror, orally or in writing, outside this State. Acceptance is communicated to the offeror in this State, whether or not either person is present in this State, if the offeree directs it to the offeror in this State reasonably believing the offeror is in this State and it is received where it is directed, or at a post office in this State if an acceptance is mailed.

(e)

For the purpose of subsections (a) through (d), an offer to sell or to purchase made in a newspaper or other publication of general, regular, and paid circulation is not made in this State if the publication:

(1) is not published in this State; or is published in this State, but has had more than two-thirds of its circulation outside this State during the last 12 months.

(2)

(f)

For the purpose of subsection (e), if a publication is published in editions, each edition is a separate publication except for material common to all editions.

(g)

For the purpose of subsections (a) through (d), an offer to sell or to purchase made in a radio or television program or other electronic communication received in this State which originates outside this State is not made in this State.

(h)

For the purpose of subsection (g), a radio or television program or other electronic communication is considered as having originated in this State if either the broadcast studio or the originating source of transmission is located in this State, unless:

(1)

the program or communication is syndicated and distributed from outside this State for redistribution to the general public in this State;

(2)

the program or communication is supplied by a radio, television, or other electronic network with the electronic signal originating from outside this State for redistribution to the general public in this State;

(3)

the program or communication is an electronic signal that originates outside this State and is captured for redistribution to the general public in this State by a community antenna or cable, radio, cable television, or other electronic system; or the program or communication consists of an electronic signal that originates in this State, but which is not intended for redistribution to the general public in this State.

(4)

[§ 801 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 414(a)-(f) (1965)]

§ 802 Contract Provisions.

(a)

A person subject to this [Act] who makes or engages in the performance of a contract in violation of this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act], or who acquires a right under a contract with knowledge of the facts by which its making or performance is in violation of this [Act], may not obtain relief on the contract.

(b)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

A provision in a contract entered into or effective in this State, binding a person acquiring a security to waive compliance with this [Act] or a rule or order of the [Administrator] under this [Act] is nonenforceable. A provision in a contract containing (i) an agreement to arbitrate or (ii) a choice of law provision in a contract between persons engaged in the securities business is not a provision waiving compliance with this [Act] and is enforceable in accordance with its terms.

[§ 802 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 410(f), (g) (1965)]

§ 803 Uniformity of Application and Construction.

This [Act] shall be applied and construed to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law with respect to the subject of this [Act] among states enacting it and to coordinate the interpretation and administration of this [Act] with the related federal laws and regulations.

[§ 803 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 416 (1965)]

§ 804 Short Title.

This [Act] may be cited as the Uniform Securities Act (1985).

[§ 804 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 416 (1965)]

§ 805 Severability Clause.

If any provision of this [Act] or its application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity does not affect other provisions or applications of this [Act] which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of the [Act] are severable.

[§ 805 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 417 (1965)]

§ 806 Effective Date.

This [Act] takes effect on [insert date, which should be at least 60 days after enactment].

[§ 806 is Amended from Unif. Securities Act § 419 (1965)]

§ 807 Repeal and Saving Provisions.

(a)

The [identify the existing act or acts] is [are] repealed except as saved in this section.

(b)

Law repealed by this [Act] exclusively governs a suit, action, prosecution, or proceeding that is pending on the effective date of this [Act] or may be initiated on the basis of facts or circumstances occurring before the effective date of this [Act], but a civil action or proceeding may not be maintained to enforce any liability under law repealed by this [Act] unless brought within the earlier of the period of limitation that applied when the [claim for relief][cause of action] accrued or two years after the effective date of this [Act].

(c)

All effective registrations under law repealed by this [Act], all administrative orders relating to those registrations, and all conditions imposed upon those registrations remain in effect for as long as they would have remained in effect if this [Act] had not been enacted. They are considered to have been filed, issued, or imposed under this [Act], but are governed by the law repealed by this [Act].

(d)

A law repealed by this [Act] applies to an offer to sell or sale made within one year after the effective date of this [Act] pursuant to an offering begun in good faith before the effective date of this [Act] on the basis of an exemption available under the repealed law.

(e)

Judicial review of all administrative orders as to which review proceedings have not been instituted before the effective date of this [Act] are governed by [state administrative procedure act] but a review proceeding may not be instituted unless the petition for review is filed within the earlier of the period of limitation that applied to a review proceeding when the order was entered or 60 days after the effective date of this [Act]

Prefatory Note

There are two versions of the Uniform Securities Act currently in force.

The Uniform Securities Act of 1956 ("1956 Act") has been adopted at one time or another, in whole or in part, by 37 jurisdictions.

The Revised Uniform Securities Act of 1985 ("RUSA") has been adopted in only a few States.

Both Acts have been preempted in part by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 and the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998.

The need to modernize the Uniform Securities Act is a consequence of a combination of the new federal preemptive legislation, significant recent changes in the technology of securities trading and regulation, and the increasingly interstate and international aspects of securities transactions.

The approach of this Act is to use the substance and vocabulary of the more widely adopted 1956 Act, when appropriate. The Act also takes into account RUSA, federal preemptive legislation, and the other developments that are described in this Preface and the Official Comments.

The Act has been reorganized to follow in large part the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws ("NCCUSL") Procedural and Drafting Manual 15-41 (1997).

This is a new Uniform Securities Act. Amendment of the earlier 1956 Act or RUSA would not have been wise given the different versions of the 1956 Act enacted by the States and the determination to seek enactment in all state jurisdictions of the new Uniform Securities Act after it was adopted by the National Conference.

Nonetheless several sections of this Act are identical or substantively identical to sections of the 1956 Act or RUSA. It is not intended that adoption of a new Uniform Securities Act will reject earlier case decisions interpreting identical or substantively identical sections of the 1956 Act or RUSA unless specifically so stated in the Official Comments.

The Act is solely a new Uniform Securities Act. It does not codify or append related regulations or guidelines. The Act also authorizes state administrators in Section 203 to adopt further exemptions without statutory amendment. The Drafting Committee did not address state tender offer or control share provisions in its preparation of this Act.

The Act includes subheadings within sections as an aid to readers. Unlike section captions, subheadings are not a part of the official text. Each jurisdiction in which this Act is introduced may consider whether to adopt the subheadings as a part of the statute and whether to adopt a provision clarifying the effect, if any, to be given to the headings.

The Drafting Committee reviewed several drafts in meetings between 1998 and 2002. The drafts were made available on NCCUSL's public website before the meetings. The meetings were publicly noticed and open to all who wished to attend. The Committee had the assistance of advisors, consultants, and observers from several interested groups, including, among others, the American Bankers Association, the American Bar Association, the American Council of Life Insurers, the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards, the Financial Planning Association, the Investment Company Institute, the Investment Counsel Association of America, the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., the New York Stock Exchange, the North American Securities Administrators Association, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Securities Industry Association. In addition, the Reporter and the Chair met on several occasions with committees or representatives of these and other groups.

In drafting the new Act, the Reporter and the Drafting Committee recognized two fundamental challenges. First, there was a general recognition among all involved of the desirability of drafting an Act that would receive broad support. The success of RUSA had been limited because of fundamental differences among relevant constituencies on several issues. After the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 preempted specified aspects of state securities law with respect to federal covered securities, the opportunity to draft an Act in a less contentious atmosphere was available. Given the number of industry, investor, and regulatory interests affected by the Act and the complexity of the Act itself, building consensus was the Act's most significant drafting challenge.

Second, there was the technical challenge of drafting a new Act that could achieve the basic goal of uniformity among states and with applicable federal law against the backdrop of 46 years of experience with the 1956 Act. Over time both Uniform and non-Uniform Act states have, to varying degrees, evolved local solutions to a number of securities law issues. In an increasingly global securities market, the need for uniformity has become more important. Drafting language to achieve the greatest practicable uniformity, given differences in state practice, was a key aspiration of this Act. In a few instances, such as dollar amounts for fees, the Act defers to local practice. On a few other issues, bracketed language or the Official Comments articulate an alternative some states may choose to adopt rather than the language of the Act itself.

The Act is in seven Articles:

1.

General Provisions

2.

Exemptions from Registration of Securities

3.

Registration of Securities and Notice Filing of Federal Covered Securities

4.

Broker-Dealers, Agents, Investment Advisers, Investment Adviser Representatives, and Federal Covered Investment Advisers

5.

Fraud and Liabilities

6.

Administration and Judicial Review

7.

Transition

There are three overarching themes of the Act.

First, Section 608 articulates in greater detail than the 1956 Act's

Section 415 the objectives of uniformity, cooperation among relevant state and federal governments and self-regulatory organizations, investor protection and, to the extent practicable, capital formation. Section 608 is the reciprocal of the instruction on these subjects given by Congress in 1996 to the Securities and Exchange Commission in Section 19(c) of the Securities Act of 1933. The theme of uniformity and the aspiration of coordination of federal and state securities law is particularly stressed in the Act and Official Comments. Section 602(f), consistent with the Federal Securities Litigation Uniform Standard Act of 1998, is a new provision encouraging reciprocal state enforcement assistance.

A second overarching theme of the Act is achieving consistency with the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 ("NSMIA"). New definitions were added to define in Section 102(6), federal covered investment adviser, and in Section 102(7), federal covered security. NSMIA also had implications for several securities registration exemptions (see Sections 201(3), 201(4), 201(6), 202(4), 202(6), 202(13), 202(14), 202(15) and 202(16)); securities registration (Sections 301(1) and 302); and the broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser, and investment adviser representative provisions (see especially Sections 402(b)(1) and (5), 403(b)(1)(A) and (2), 405 and 411).

A third theme of the Act involves facilitating electronic records, signatures, and filing. New definitions were added to address filing (Section 102(8)), record (Section 102(25)), and sign (Section 102(30)). Section 105 expressly permits the filing of electronic signatures and records. Collectively these provisions are intended to permit electronic filing in central information depositories such as the Web-CRD (Central Registration Depository), the Investment Adviser Registration Depository (IARD), the Securities and Exchange Commission's Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis and Retrieval System (EDGAR) or successor institutions. Electronic communication also has led to an amplification of the jurisdiction Section 610.

The new Act makes several other significant changes compared to the 1956 Act or RUSA.

The definition of "security" in Section 102(28) has been modernized to take into account amendments to the counterpart federal provisions; add new language to expressly include uncertificated securities; exclude contributory or noncontributory ERISA plans; and amplify the definition of investment contract so that it can expressly reach interests in limited partnerships, limited liability companies, or viatical settlement agreements, among other contracts, when they satisfy the definition of investment contract. The new Act does not expressly exclude from the definition of security variable insurance products, but does exempt variable insurance products from securities registration in Section 201(4). The states are divided on the question of whether variable insurance products should be excluded (and not subject to fraud enforcement) or exempted (and subject to fraud enforcement). For those states that wish to continue to provide or adopt an exclusion for variable insurance products from the definition of security, the brackets should be removed from the phrase "or variable." For those states that wish variable insurance products to be included in the definition of security, the bracketed phrase should be removed.

(2)

Nineteen new definitions were added to define "bank" (Section 102(3)), "depository institution" (Section 102(5)), "federal covered investment adviser" (Section 102(6)), "federal covered security" (Section 102(7)), "filing" (Section 102(8)), "institutional investor" (Section 102(11)), "insurance company" (Section 102(12)), "insured" (Section 102(13)), "international banking institution" (Section 102(14)), "investment adviser representative" (Section 102(16)), "offer to purchase" (Section 102(19)), "place of business" (Section 102(21)), "predecessor act" (Section 102(22)), "price amendment" (Section 102(23)), "principal place of business" (Section 102(24)), "record" (Section 102(25)), "Securities and Exchange Commission" (Section 102(27)), "self-regulatory organization" (Section 102(29)), and "sign" (Section 102(30)). The growth in definitions is suggestive of the increased complexity and detail of several revised provisions in the new Act.

(3)

Specific exemptions from securities registration are broadened. Most significant is Section 202(13) which builds on a new definition of institutional investors that parallels Rule 501(a) of the Securities Act of 1933, but with $10 million rather than $5 million thresholds in Sections 102(11)(F) through (K), and (O), and addresses specified employee plans, trusts, Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3) organizations, small business investment companies licensed by the Small Business Administration, private business development companies under Section 202(a)(22) of the Investment Advisers Act, and other institutional purchasers. The definition of institutional investor also reaches qualified institutional buyers under Rule 144A(a)(i) of the Securities Act of 1933, major U.S. institutional investors as defined in Rule 15a-6(b)(4)(i) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and federal covered investment advisers acting for their own accounts. The new institutional investor transaction exemption in Section 202(13) will also reach other persons specified by rule or order of the administrator. The limited offering transaction exemption in Section 202(14) was broadened to reach 25 persons, in addition to those exempted by the institutional investor exemption, on condition that the transaction is part of a single issue, and other specified conditions are satisfied. If the SEC adopts a new definition of qualified purchaser, as it has proposed under Rule 146(c) of the Securities Act of 1933, there may ultimately be four preemptive or exemptive types of provision applicable to the new Act: (1) the SEC qualified purchaser provision; (2) Section 18(b)(4)(D) which provides preemptive treatment for Rule 506 offerings under the Securities Act of 1933; (3) specified investors in Section 202(13); and (4) limited offerings in Section 202(14). The options exemption in Section 201(6) was broadened; the "manual" exemption in Section 202(2) has been modernized for an electronic age; a broadened exemption has been provided for specified foreign securities in Section 202(3); a new exemption has been added for nonissuer transactions in securities subject to Securities Exchange Act reporting in Section 202(4); a new exemption has been added for nonissuer transactions rated at the time of a transaction by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization in one of the four highest rating categories in Section 202(5)(A); and new exemptions were added for specified exchange transactions in Section 202(9), control transactions in Section 202(18), specified out-of-state offers or sales in Section 202(20), specified sales transactions in Section 202(22), and specified foreign issuers whose securities are traded on designated securities markets in Section 202(23). The administrator may expressly authorize one of three regulatory plans for the offering of notes, bonds, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness for nonprofit organizations under Section 201(7). New conditions have been added to the unit secured transaction exemption in Section 202(11) to address two substantial areas of state regulatory concern. The emphasis in the securities registration exemptive area is on flexibility. Securities administrators are given broad powers both to exempt other securities, transactions, or offers in Section 203 and to deny, suspend, condition or limit specified exemptions in Section 204.

(4)

Relatively modest changes were made to Article 3, which concerns registration of securities. A new notice filing provision was added in Section 302 for federal covered securities. A generic waiver and modification provision was added in Section 307. New procedural provisions for stop orders were added in Section 306(d) through (f). Merit regulation was among the most divisive issues that confronted the RUSA Drafting Committee. After the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 preempted states from applying merit regulation provisions to federal covered securities, this became a less controversial issue. The approach in this Act retains two widely adopted merit regulation provisions in Section 306(a)(7)(A) and (B):

a.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

the offering will work or tend to work a fraud upon purchasers or would so operate; or

b.

the offering has been or would be made with unreasonable amounts of underwriters' and sellers' discounts, commissions, or other compensation, or promoters' profits or participations or unreasonable amounts or kinds of options.

In addition, bracketed Section 306(a)(7)(C) includes the less widely adopted formulation, "the offering is being made on terms that are unfair, unjust, or inequitable." A new Section 306(b) provides: "To the extent practicable the administrator, by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act] shall publish standards that provide notice of conduct that violates subsection (a)(7)." NASAA Guidelines provide this type of published standard. This hortatory Section is intended to address one type of criticism of merit regulation.

Article 4, which concerns broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers, investment adviser representatives, and federal covered investment advisers was substantially revised to take into account NSMIA and significant changes in administrative practice such as those occasioned by the electronic WEB-CRD and the IARD. New developments had an impact on the definitions of "agent" (Section 102(2)), "broker-dealer" (Section 102(4)), "investment adviser" (Section 102(15)), and "investment adviser representative" (Section 102(16)). NSMIA led also to the new federal covered investment adviser notice filing procedure in Section 405. "[A] bank, savings institution or trust company" was excluded from the 1956 Act Section 401(c) definition of broker-dealer. After the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act was adopted in 1999, the generic exclusion of banks from the definition of broker and dealer in Sections 3(a)(4) and (5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 was rescinded in favor of functional regulation. At the federal level this means that banks, unless limiting their securities activities to a specific list of excluded activities, are required to register as broker-dealers. This Act generally follows the federal approach with exceptions for private securities offerings addressed by Section 3(a)(4)(B)(vii) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and de minimis transactions in Section 3(a)(4)(B)(xi) which in the new Act are limited to unsolicited transactions. The administrator is given a residual power in Section 102(4)(E) to adopt further exclusions for banks, by rule or order. Securities issued by banks, other depository institutions, and international banking institutions are exempt from securities registration in Section 201(3). Banks, savings institutions, and other depository institutions, when not excluded from the definition of broker-dealer, will be required to register by Section 401 and generally, like all other broker-dealers, be subject to the regulatory and liability provisions of the Act in Article 4 and 5.

(6)

Article 5 on fraud and liabilities and the definition of fraud in Section 102(9) are substantively little changed. This includes the general fraud provision in Section 501, the filing of sales and advertising literature in Section 504, misleading filings in Section 505, and misrepresentations concerning registration or exemption in Section 506. Technical changes were made to the evidentiary burden Section 503 and the criminal penalties Section 508. Section 502(a), fraud in providing investment advice, is unchanged. New rulemaking authority was added in Sections 502(b) and (c) to succeed earlier statutory provisions in Section 102 of the 1956 Act. This will give the administrator broad flexibility and recognizes that most state provisions regulating investment advisers in recent years have been adopted through rules. Section 507 is a new qualified immunity provision to protect a broker-dealer or investment adviser from defamation claims based on information filed with the SEC, a state administrator, or self-regulatory organization "unless the person knew, or should have known at the time that the statement was made, that it was false in a material respect or the person acted in reckless disregard of the statement's truth or falsity." This Section, which is consistent with most litigated cases to date and is a response to concerns that defamation lawsuits have deterred broker-dealers and investment advisers from full and complete disclosure of problems with departing employees. The Drafting Committee was also sensitive to the concern that such immunity could allow broker-dealers and investment advisers to unfairly characterize employees to protect their "book" of clients. Because of this concern the Drafting Committee rejected proposals for an absolute immunity. Section 510 is a new rescission offer provision that should be read with the definition of offer to purchase in Section 102(19) and the exemption for rescission offers in Section 202(19). Section 510 is consistent with administrative practice in many states today, although some states also have a filing requirement. More thought was devoted to the civil liability Section 509 than any other provision. As ultimately drafted much in this Section is little changed from the 1956 Act. New subsections were added to recognize the preemptive Securities Litigation Act of 1998 (Section 509(a)) and civil liability for investment advice (Sections 509(e) and (f)). Significant changes were made in the statute of limitations Section 509(j). Current state law provides a wide range of statutes of limitations. The 1956 Act contained a "two years after the contract of sale" statute of limitations. The new Act has two statute of limitations provisions. Section 509(j)(1) limits violations of registration provisions to "one year after the violation occurred." Section 509(j)(2) follows the pattern of federal securities law statutes of limitations, as amended in July 2002 by the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, and limits fraud violations to the earlier of "two years after the discovery of the facts constituting the violation or five years after such violation." The derivative liability provision in Section 509(g) is not intended to change the predicates for liability for one who "materially aids" violative conduct.

(7)

Several changes are made in Article 6, which concerns Administration and Judicial Review. Most are technical in nature. A new authorization for the administrator to develop and implement investor education initiatives has been added in Sections 601(d) and (e). Considerable attention was devoted to enforcement of the Act. The 1956 Act Section 408 was a slender provision providing for injunctions. Sections 603 and 604, in contrast, provide a broad array of civil and administrative techniques including asset freezes, rescission orders, and civil penalties. Under Section 604 the administrator may issue a cease and desist order. Two other enforcement provisions in the Act are (1) stop orders in Sections 306(d) through (f), and (2) broker-dealer, agent, investment adviser, and investment adviser representative denials, revocations, suspensions, withdrawal, restrictions, conditions, or limitations of registration in Section 412. Each of the enforcement provisions in the Act includes both summary process and due process requirements either through judicial process or guarantees of appropriate notice, opportunity for hearing, and findings of facts and conclusions of law in a written record. Section 607 is a new provision that clarifies the scope of nonpublic records and the administrator's discretion to disclose in light of the extensive development of freedom of information and open records laws since the 1956 Act was adopted. The jurisdiction and service of process provisions, Sections 610 and 611, generally follow Section 414 of the 1956 Act, but have been modernized to take into account electronic communications.

(8)

Section 103 preserves the ability of the Act to reflect later amendments of specified federal statutes and rules to the extent they are preemptive or this is otherwise permitted by state law. All involved in the drafting of this new Act owe a particular debt of gratitude to Richard B. Smith who served as our chair. His efforts were pivotal to the initiation of this project. His indefatigable leadership and high standards immeasurably improved the final Act.

Legislative Note Each state, the District of Columbia, Guam, and Puerto Rico have enacted an administrative procedure act. The procedural provisions of the Act in some instances are intended to augment the state administrative procedure act. In so doing, this Act differs from other uniform acts promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) in that it contains procedural provisions on topics such as administrative rulemaking and adjudication, service of process, judicial review of administrative adjudications, public records, public hearings, and use immunity. Normally a uniform act promulgated by NCCUSL defers to existing state procedural provisions on such matters. This Act reflects a policy decision that these matters should be addressed in this Act to promote uniformity in securities regulation. When a conflict exists between this Act and a state administrative procedure act, this Act is intended to supersede the state administrative procedure act. When, however, a reference is made in this Act to the state administrative procedure act, this Act is intended to follow the state's existing administrative procedure act. In general in this Act a rule will apply generally and an order will apply to a specific individual, transaction, or matter, although the term order may also apply generally in those states that permit orders of general applicability.

§ 101. SHORT TITLE.

This [Act] may be cited as the Uniform Securities Act (2002).

§ 102. DEFINITIONS.

In this [Act], unless the context otherwise requires:

(1)

"Administrator" means the [insert title of administrative agency or official].

(2)

"Agent" means an individual, other than a broker-dealer, who represents a broker-dealer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities or represents an issuer in effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of the issuer's securities. But a partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer, or an individual having a similar status or performing similar functions is an agent only if the individual otherwise comes within the term. The term does not include an individual excluded by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act].

(3)

"Bank" means:

(A)

a banking institution organized under the laws of the United States;

(B) a member bank of the Federal Reserve System; any other banking institution, whether incorporated or not, doing business under the laws of a State or of the United States, a substantial portion of the business of which consists of receiving deposits or exercising fiduciary powers similar to those permitted to be exercised by national banks under the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency pursuant to Section 1 of Public Law 87-722 (12 U.S.C. Section 92a), and which is supervised and examined by a state or federal agency having supervision over banks, and which is not operated for the purpose of evading this [Act]; and a receiver, conservator, or other liquidating agent of any institution or firm included in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

(C)

(4)

"Broker-dealer" means a person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others or for the person's own account. The term does not include:

(A)

an agent;

(B) an issuer;

(C)

a bank or savings institution if its activities as a broker-dealer are limited to those specified in subsections 3(a)(4)(B)(i) through (vi), (viii) through (x), and (xi) if limited to unsolicited transactions; 3(a)(5)(B); and 3(a)(5)(C) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. Sections 78c(a)(4) and (5)) or a bank that satisfies the conditions described in subsection 3(a)(4)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. Section 78c(a)(4));

(D) an international banking institution; or a person excluded by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act].

(E)

(5)

"Depository institution" means:

(A)

a bank; or

(B)

a savings institution, trust company, credit union, or similar institution that is organized or chartered under the laws of a State or of the United States, authorized to receive deposits, and supervised and examined by an official or agency of a State or the United States if its deposits or share accounts are insured to the maximum amount authorized by statute by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, or a successor authorized by federal law. The term does not include:

(i) an insurance company or other organization primarily engaged in the business of insurance;

(ii)

a Morris Plan bank; or

(iii)

an industrial loan company.

(6)

"Federal covered investment adviser" means a person registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

(7)

"Federal covered security" means a security that is, or upon completion of a transaction will be, a covered security under Section 18(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. Section 77r(b)) or rules or regulations adopted pursuant to that provision.

(8)

"Filing" means the receipt under this [Act] of a record by the administrator or a designee of the administrator.

(9)

"Fraud," "deceit," and "defraud" are not limited to common law deceit.

(10)

"Guaranteed" means guaranteed as to payment of all principal and all interest.

(11)

"Institutional investor" means any of the following, whether acting for itself or for others in a fiduciary capacity:

(A)

a depository institution or international banking institution;

(B) an insurance company;

(C) a separate account of an insurance company;

(D)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

an investment company as defined in the Investment Company Act of 1940;

(E)

a broker-dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(F) an employee pension, profit-sharing, or benefit plan if the plan has total assets in excess of $10,000,000 or its investment decisions are made by a named fiduciary, as defined in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, that is a broker-dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, an investment adviser registered or exempt from registration under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, an investment adviser registered under this [Act], a depository institution, or an insurance company;

(G) a plan established and maintained by a State, a political subdivision of a State, or an agency or instrumentality of a State or a political subdivision of a State for the benefit of its employees, if the plan has total assets in excess of $10,000,000 or its investment decisions are made by a duly designated public official or by a named fiduciary, as defined in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, that is a broker-dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, an investment adviser registered or exempt from registration under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, an investment adviser registered under this [Act], a depository institution, or an insurance company; a trust, if it has total assets in excess of $10,000,000, its trustee is a depository institution, and its participants are exclusively plans of the types identified in subparagraph (F) or (G), regardless of the size of their assets, except a trust that includes as participants self-directed individual retirement accounts or similar self-directed plans;

(H)

(I)

an organization described in Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. Section 501(c)(3)), corporation, Massachusetts trust or similar business trust, limited liability company, or partnership, not formed for the specific purpose of acquiring the securities offered, with total assets in excess of $10,000,000; a small business investment company licensed by the Small Business Administration under Section 301(c) of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. Section 681(c)) with total assets in excess of $10,000,000;

(J)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(K)

a private business development company as defined in Section 202(a)(22) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. Section 80b-2(a)(22)) with total assets in excess of $10,000,000; a federal covered investment adviser acting for its own account;

(L)

(M) a "qualified institutional buyer" as defined in Rule 144A(a)(1), other than Rule 144A(a)(1)(H), adopted under the Securities Act of 1933 (17 C.F.R. 230.144A);

(N) a "major U.S. institutional investor" as defined in Rule 15a-6(b)(4)(i) adopted under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (17 C.F.R. 240.15a-6); any other person, other than an individual, of institutional character with total assets in excess of $10,000,000 not organized for the specific purpose of evading this [Act]; or any other person specified by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act].

(O)

(12)

"Insurance company" means a company organized as an insurance company whose primary business is writing insurance or reinsuring risks underwritten by insurance companies and which is subject to supervision by the insurance commissioner or a similar official or agency of a State.

(13)

"Insured" means insured as to payment of all principal and all interest.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(14)

"International banking institution" means an international financial institution of which the United States is a member and whose securities are exempt from registration under the Securities Act of 1933.

(15)

"Investment adviser" means a person that, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities or that, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. The term includes a financial planner or other person that, as an integral component of other financially related services, provides investment advice to others for compensation as part of a business or that holds itself out as providing investment advice to others for compensation. The term does not include:

(A)

an investment adviser representative;

(B) a lawyer, accountant, engineer, or teacher whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the practice of the person's profession;

(C) a broker-dealer or its agents whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the conduct of business as a broker-dealer and that does not receive special compensation for the investment advice;

(D)

a publisher of a bona fide newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication of general and regular circulation;

(E)

a federal covered investment adviser;

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(F)

a bank or savings institution;

(G)

any other person that is excluded by the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 from the definition of investment adviser; or any other person excluded by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act].

(H)

(16)

"Investment adviser representative" means an individual employed by or associated with an investment adviser or federal covered investment adviser and who makes any recommendations or otherwise gives investment advice regarding securities, manages accounts or portfolios of clients, determines which recommendation or advice regarding securities should be given, provides investment advice or holds herself or himself out as providing investment advice, receives compensation to solicit, offer, or negotiate for the sale of or for selling investment advice, or supervises employees who perform any of the foregoing. The term does not include an individual who:

(A)

performs only clerical or ministerial acts;

(B)

is an agent whose performance of investment advice is solely incidental to the individual acting as an agent and who does not receive special compensation for investment advisory services; is employed by or associated with a federal covered investment adviser, unless the individual has a "place of business" in this State as that term is defined by rule adopted under Section 203A of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. Section 80b-3a) and is an "investment adviser representative" as that term is defined by rule adopted under Section 203A of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. Section 80b-3a); or not a "supervised person" as that term is defined in Section 202(a)(25) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. Section 80b-2(a)(25)); or is excluded by rule adopted or order issued under this [Act].

(C)

(i)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(ii)

(17)

"Issuer" means a person that issues or proposes to issue a security, subject to the following:

(A)

The issuer of a voting trust certificate, collateral trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, or share in an investment company without a board of directors or individuals performing similar functions is the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the trust or other agreement or instrument under which the security is issued.

(B)

The issuer of an equipment trust certificate or similar security serving the same purpose is the person by which the property is or will be used or to which the property or equipment is or will be leased or conditionally sold or that is otherwise contractually responsible for assuring payment of the certificate.

(C)

The issuer of a fractional undivided interest in an oil, gas, or other mineral lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty is the owner of an interest in the lease or in payments out of production under a lease, right, or royalty, whether whole or fractional, that creates fractional interests for the purpose of sale.

(18)

"Nonissuer transaction" or "nonissuer distribution" means a transaction or distribution not directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(19)

"Offer to purchase" includes an attempt or offer to obtain, or solicitation of an offer to sell, a security or interest in a security for value. The term does not include a tender offer that is subject to Section 14(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78n(d)).

(20)

"Person" means an individual; corporation; business trust; estate; trust; partnership; limited liability company; association; joint venture; government; governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality; public corporation; or any other legal or commercial entity.

(21)

"Place of business" of a broker-dealer, an investment adviser, or a federal covered investment adviser means:

(A)

an office at which the broker-dealer, investment adviser, or federal covered investment adviser regularly provides brokerage or investment advice or solicits, meets with, or otherwise communicates with customers or clients; or any other location that is held out to the general public as a location at which the broker-dealer, investment adviser, or federal covered investment adviser provides brokerage or investment advice or solicits, meets with, or otherwise communicates with customers or clients.

(22)

"Predecessor act" means the act repealed by Section 702.

(23)

"Price amendment" means the amendment to a registration statement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 or, if an amendment is not filed, the prospectus or prospectus supplement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 that includes a statement of the offering price, underwriting and selling discounts or commissions, amount of proceeds, conversion rates, call prices, and other matters dependent upon the offering price.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(24)

"Principal place of business" of a broker-dealer or an investment adviser means the executive office of the broker-dealer or investment adviser from which the officers, partners, or managers of the broker-dealer or investment adviser direct, control, and coordinate the activities of the broker-dealer or investment adviser.

(25)

"Record," except in the phrases "of record," "official record," and "public record," means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(26)

"Sale" includes every contract of sale, contract to sell, or disposition of, a security or interest in a security for value, and "offer to sell" includes every attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to purchase, a security or interest in a security for value. Both terms include:

(A)

a security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, a purchase of securities or any other thing constituting part of the subject of the purchase and having been offered and sold for value;

(B) a gift of assessable stock involving an offer and sale; and a sale or offer of a warrant or right to purchase or subscribe to another security of the same or another issuer and a sale or offer of a security that gives the holder a present or future right or privilege to convert the security into another security of the same or another issuer, including an offer of the other security.

(27)

"Securities and Exchange Commission" means the United States Securities and Exchange Commission.

(28)

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

"Security" means a note; stock; treasury stock; security future; bond; debenture; evidence of indebtedness; certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement; collateral trust certificate; preorganization certificate or subscription; transferable share; investment contract; voting trust certificate; certificate of deposit for a security; fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights; put, call, straddle, option, or privilege on a security, certificate of deposit, or group or index of securities, including an interest therein or based on the value thereof; put, call, straddle, option, or privilege entered into on a national securities exchange relating to foreign currency; or, in general, an interest or instrument commonly known as a "security"; or a certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing. The term:

(A)

includes both a certificated and an uncertificated security;

(B)

does not include an insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract under which an insurance company promises to pay a fixed [or variable] sum of money either in a lump sum or periodically for life or other specified period; does not include an interest in a contributory or noncontributory pension or welfare plan subject to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974;

(C)

(D) includes as an "investment contract" an investment in a common enterprise with the expectation of profits to be derived primarily from the efforts of a person other than the investor and a "common enterprise" means an enterprise in which the fortunes of the investor are interwoven with those of either the person offering the investment, a third party, or other investors; and includes as an "investment contract," among other contracts, an interest in a limited partnership and a limited liability company and an investment in a viatical settlement or similar agreement.

(29)

"Self-regulatory organization" means a national securities exchange registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, a national securities association of broker-dealers registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, a clearing agency registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board established under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

(30)

"Sign" means, with present intent to authenticate or adopt a record:

(A)

to execute or adopt a tangible symbol; or to attach or logically associate with the record an electronic symbol, sound, or process.

(B)

(31)

"State" means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, or any territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Official Comments Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401; RUSA 101.

Under Section 605(a) the administrator has the power to define by rule any term, whether or not used in this Act, as long as the definitions are not inconsistent with the Act.

2.

All definitions include corresponding meanings. For example, "filing" would include "file" or "filed"; "sale" would include "sell."

3.

Prefatory Phrase: "In this [Act], unless the context otherwise requires": Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401 Preface; RUSA Section 101 Preface. This prefatory phrase which is in the counterpart provisions of the federal securities statutes, see, e.g., Securities Act of 1933 Section 2(a), provides the basis for the courts to take into account the statutory and factual context of each definition, see, e.g., Reves v. Ernst & Young, 494 U.S. 56 (1990); 2 Louis Loss &

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 927-929 (3d ed. rev. 1999), and will allow the courts to harmonize this Act's definitions with the counterpart federal securities definitions to the extent appropriate. Cf. Akin v. Q-L Inv., Inc., 959 F.2d 521, 532 (5th Cir. 1992) ("Texas courts generally look to decisions of the federal courts to interpret the Texas Securities Act because of obvious similarities between the state and federal laws"); Koch v Koch Indus., Inc. 203 F.3d 1202, 1235 (10th Cir. 2000) (following federal definition of materiality); Biales v. Young, 432 S.E.2d 482, 484 (S.C. 1993) ("Section 35-1-1490(2) is substantially similar to Section 12(1) of the Federal Securities Act").

Section 102(2): Agent: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(b); RUSA Section 101(14). Section 102(2), in part, follows the 1956 Act definition. The 1956 Act used the term "agent" while the RUSA Section 101(14) used the term "sales representative." Given the broader enactment of the 1956 Act, this Act also uses the term "agent." Certain exclusions from the 1956 Act are exemptions in this Act. See Section 402(b). Whether a particular individual who represents a broker-dealer or issuer is an "agent" depends upon much the same factors that create an agency relationship at common law. See, e.g., Norwest Bank Hastings v. Clapp, 394 N.W.2d 176, 179 (Minn. Ct. App. 1986) (following Official Comment that establishing agency under the Uniform Securities Act "depends upon much the same factors which create an agency relationship at common law"); Shaughnessy & Co., Inc. v. Commissioner of Sec., 1971-1978 Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P 71,348 (Wis. Cir. Ct. 1977) (unlicensed person who took information relevant to securities transactions and turned it over to securities agents was himself an agent). An individual can be an agent for a broker-dealer or issuer for a purpose other than effecting or attempting to effect purchases or sales of securities and not be a statutory agent under this Act. See, e.g., Baker, Watts & Co. v. Miles & Stockridge, 620 A.2d 356, 367 (Md. Ct. App. 1993) (attorney-client relationship is generally one of agency, but that alone does not bring an attorney within securities act definition of agent). An individual will not be an agent under Section 102(2) because of the person's status as a partner, officer, or director of a broker-dealer or issuer if such an individual does not effect or attempt to effect purchases or sales of securities. See, e.g., Abell v. Potomac Ins. Co., 858 F.2d 1104 (5th Cir. 1988). Section 102(2) is intended to include any individual who acts as an agent, whether or not the individual is an employee or independent contractor. Cf. Hollinger v. Titan Capital Corp., 914 F.2d 1564 (9th Cir. en banc 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 976 (1991). The word "individual" in the definition of the term "agent" is limited to human beings and does not include a juridical "person" such as a corporation. Cf. definition of "person" in Section 102(20). The 1956 Act Section 401(b) similarly was limited to individuals and did not include juridical persons. See, e.g., Connecticut Nat'l Bank v. Giacomi, 699 A.2d 101, 111-112 (Conn. 1997) ("agent" only includes natural persons when it used the term individual); Schpok v. Fodale, 236 N.W.2d 97, 99 (Mich. Ct. App. 1975) (agent defined to be individual and did not include a corporation). An individual whose acts are solely clerical or ministerial would not be an agent under Section 102(2). Cf. Section 402(b)(8). Ministerial or clerical acts might include preparing written communications or responding to inquiries.

5.

Section 102(3): Bank: Prior Provision: Subsection 3(a)(6) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. A United States branch of a foreign bank that otherwise satisfies this definition would be a bank.

6.

Section 102(4): Broker-Dealer: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(c); RUSA Section 101(2). This definition generally follows the definition of broker-dealer in the 1956 Act and RUSA. The use of the compound term is meant to include either a broker or a dealer. The recognized distinction is that a broker acts for the benefit of another while a dealer acts for itself in buying for or selling securities from its own inventory. The distinction between "a person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities" and an investor, who may buy and sell with some frequency and is outside the scope of this term, has been well developed in the case law. See 6 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 2980-2984 (3d ed. 1990). The 1956 Act Section 401(c) excluded from the definition of broker-dealer a person who during any 12 consecutive months did not direct more than 15 offers to buy or sell in this State. In this Act exemptions from broker-dealer registration are provided in Section 401(b). The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, signed into law in November 1999, rescinded the blanket exemption of banks from the definition of broker and dealer in Sections 3(a)(4) and (5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act permits a bank to avoid registration as a broker or dealer at the federal level if the bank limits its activities to those specified in the Securities Exchange Act. This Act generally adopts the activity focused exceptions for banks included in the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, with minor modifications relating to the private placement and de minimis brokerage activities of banks (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(4)(B)(vii) and (xi)). This Act also reaches savings institutions. A state may decide to adopt an exclusion in Section 102(4)(C) that fully conforms with the bank exceptions contained in the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act. For states that choose this approach, the language of Section 102(4)(C) should read:

(C) a bank or savings institution if its activities as broker-dealer are limited to those specified in Section 3(a)(4) and 3(a)(5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. Section 78c(a)(4) and (5)), or a bank that satisfies the conditions specified in Section 3(a)(4)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(4)).

Section 102(4)(E) of this Act also permits a securities administrator to adopt additional exclusions that exclude banks and other depository institutions, in whole or in part, from the definition of "broker-dealer." States that promptly adopt this Act should consider whether it is appropriate to provide banks a transition period to comply with the Act's new activity focused exceptions. The activity focused exceptions for banks in the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act were originally to become effective at the federal level on May 12, 2001. However, the Securities and Exchange Commission has delayed the effective date of these activity focused exceptions and thus continued the blanket exemption for banks beyond May 12, 2001, and commenced a rulemaking designed to clarify and define the scope of the bank exceptions in the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act. See Sec. Ex. Act Rels. 44,291, 74 SEC Dock. 2155 (2001) (proposal); 45,897, 77 SEC Dock. 1555 (2002) (proposal). To avoid disrupting the activities of banks, states should consider delaying implementation of the activity focused exceptions in this Act until these exceptions are implemented at the federal level. Section 15(h)(1) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, preempts state law from "[establishing] capital, custody, margin, financial responsibility, making and keeping records, bonding, or financial or operational reporting requirements for brokers, dealers, municipal securities dealers, government securities brokers, or government securities dealers that differ from, or are in addition to the requirements in those areas established under [the Securities Exchange Act]." These preemptions are recognized in the substantive broker-dealer provisions in Article 4.

Section 102(5): Depository institution: No Prior Provision. A depository institution's securities are addressed by the exemption in Section 201(3). A depository institution is an institutional investor in Section 102(11)(A).

8.

Section 102(6): Federal covered investment adviser: No Prior Provision. This provision is necessitated by Section 203A of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, added by Title III of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, which allocates to primary state regulation most advisers with assets under management of less than $25 million. SEC registration is permitted, but not required, for investment advisers having between $25 and $30 million of assets under management and is required of investment advisers having at least $30 million of assets under management. Investment Advisers Act of 1940 Rule 203A-1. Most advisers with assets under management of $25 million or more register solely under Section 203 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 and not state law. This division of labor is intended to eliminate duplicative regulation of investment advisers.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Section 102(7): Federal covered security: No Prior Provision. The National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996, as subsequently amended, partially preempted state law in the securities offering and reporting areas. Under Section 18(a) of the Securities Act of 1933, no state statute, rule, order, or other administrative action may apply to:

(1)

The registration of a "covered" security or a security that will be a covered security upon completion of the transaction;

(2)

(A)

any offering document prepared by or on behalf of the issuer of a covered security;

(2)

(B)

any proxy statement, report to shareholders, or other disclosure document relating to a covered security or its issuer that is required to be filed with the SEC or any national securities association registered under Section 15A of the Securities Exchange Act such as the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD); or the merits of a covered security or a security that will be a covered security upon completion of the transaction. Section 18(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 applies to four types of "covered securities":

(3)

(1)

Securities listed or authorized for listing on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE), the American Stock

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Exchange (Amex); the National Market System of the Nasdaq stock market; or securities exchanges registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) (or any tier or segment of their trading) if the SEC determines by rule that their listing standards are substantially similar to those of the NYSE, Amex, or Nasdaq National Market System, which the SEC has done through Rule 146; and any security of the same issuer that is equal in seniority or senior to any security listed on the NYSE, Amex, or Nasdaq National Market System; securities issued by an investment company registered with the SEC (or one that has filed a registration statement under the Investment Company Act of 1940); securities offered or sold to "qualified purchasers." This category of covered securities will become operational when the SEC defines the term "qualified purchaser" as used in Section 18(b)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933, by rule. To date the SEC has proposed, but not adopted, Rule 146(c) of the Securities Act of 1933; and securities issued under the following specified exemptions of the Securities Act of 1933:

(3)

(4)

(A)

Sections 4(1) (transactions by persons other than an issuer, underwriter or dealer), and 4(3) (dealers after specified periods of time), but only if the issuer files reports with the Commission under Sections 13 or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act;

(B)

Section 4(4) (unsolicited brokerage transactions);

(C)

Securities Act exemptions in Section 3(a) with the exception of the charitable exemption in Section 3(a)(4), the exchange exemption in Section 3(a)(10), the intrastate exemption in Section 3(a)(11), and the municipal securities exemption in Section 3(a)(2) but only with "respect to the offer or sale of such [municipal] security in the State in which the issuer of such security is located"; and securities issued in compliance with SEC rules under Section 4(2) (private placements). Section 18(c)(1) preserves state authority "to investigate and bring enforcement actions with respect to fraud or deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions." The National Securities Markets Improvement Act, in essence, preempts aspects of the securities registration and reporting processes for specified federal covered securities. The Act does not diminish state authority to investigate and bring enforcement actions generally with respect to securities transactions. The States are authorized to require filings of any document filed with the SEC for notice purposes "together with annual or periodic reports of the value of securities sold or offered to be sold to persons located in the State (if such sales data is not included in documents filed with the Commission), solely for notice purposes and the assessment of any fee, together with a consent to service of process and any required fee." Section 18(c)(2). However, no filing or fee may be required with respect to any listed security that is a covered security under Section 18(b)(1) (traded on specified stock markets). Section 302 of this Act addresses notice filings and fees applicable to federal covered securities.

10.

Section 102(8): Filing: Prior Provision: RUSA Section 101(4). The RUSA definition was revised to recognize that records may be filed in paper form or electronically with the administrator, or designees such as the Web-CRD (Central Registration Depository) or Investment Adviser Registration Depository (IARD) or the Securities and Exchange Commission's Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis and Retrieval System (EDGAR) or successor systems. In the RUSA definition, the term "filed" referred to "actual delivery of a document or application." This Act substitutes the term "record" which is defined in Section 102(25) to refer broadly to "information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perishable form". This definition requires the receipt of a record. The definition does not limit filing to any specific medium such as mail, certified mail, or a particular electronic system. The definition is intended to permit an administrator to accept filings over the Internet or through a direct modem system, both of which are now used to transmit documents to EDGAR, or through new electronic systems as they evolve. "Receipt" refers to the actual delivery of a record to the administrator or a designee and does not refer to a subsequent examination of the record by the administrator. See, e.g., Fehrman v. Blunt, 825 S.W.2d 658 (Mo. Ct. App. 1992). If a deficient form was provided to a designee, but not provided to the administrator because of the deficiency, it would not be filed under this definition.

11.

Section 102(9): Fraud, deceit and defraud: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(d); RUSA Section 101(6). This definition, which is identical to the 1956 Act and RUSA, codifies the holdings that "fraud" as used in the federal and state securities statutes is not limited to common law deceit. See generally 7 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 3421-3448 (3d ed. 1991).

12.

Section 102(10): Guaranteed: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(e); RUSA Section 401(a)(1). The 1956 Act definition of "guaranteed" applies generally to payment of "principal, interest, or dividends." The RUSA definition of "guaranteed," which was solely applicable to exempt securities, applied to the guarantee of "all or substantially all of principal and interest or dividends." Section 102(10) follows the 1956 Act approach and applies generally to the guarantee of "all principal and all interest." Any method of guarantee that results in a guarantee of payment of all principal and all interest will suffice including, for example, an irrevocable letter of credit. This definition does not address whether or not a guarantee, whether whole or partial, is itself a security. That issue is addressed by the definition of "security" in Section 102(28).

Section 102(11): Institutional investor: Prior Provisions: RUSA Section 101(5); Securities Act of 1933 Rules 144A and 501(a). Sections 102(11)(A) through (K) are based on Rule 501(a) of the Securities Act of 1933, but do not include the paragraphs of Rule 501(a) that address individuals. Given the significant period of time since Rule 501(a) was adopted, this Act has used a $10 million minimum for several categories of institutional investor rather than $5 million minimum used in Rule 501(a). Section 102(11)(H) concludes with an except clause meant to exclude self-directed plans for individuals from this definition. With respect to the exclusion of Rule 144A(a)(1)(H) from Section 102(11)(M), the substance of Rule 144A(a)(1)(H) appears in Section 102(11)(I), but with a requirement of total assets in excess of $10,000,000. Section 102(11)(O) is meant to reach persons similar to those listed in Sections 102(11)(A) through (N), but not otherwise listed. Under Section 503, if challenged in a proceeding, the burden of proving the availability of an exemption is on the person claiming it. An interpretive opinion may be sought from the administrator under Section 605(d).

14.

Section 102(12): Insurance company: No Prior Provision. This definition is based on Securities Act of 1933 Section 2(a)(13).

15.

Section 102(13): Insured: Prior Provision: RUSA Section 401(a)(2). The RUSA definition of "insured," which was solely applicable to exempt securities, applied to the insurance of "all or substantially all of principal, interest, or dividends." Section 102(13) is applicable generally but is limited to "payment of all principal and all interest."

16.

Section 102(14): International banking institution: No Prior Provision. Securities issued or guaranteed by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 22 U.S.C. Section 286k-1(a); the Inter-American Development Bank, 22 U.S.C. Section 283h(a); the Asian Development Bank, 22 U.S.C. Section 285h(a); the African Development Bank, 22 U.S.C. Section 290i-9; and the International Finance Corporation, see 22 U.S.C. Section 282k; are treated as exempt securities under Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, see generally 3 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 1191-1194 (3d ed. rev. 1999), and are within this term.

17.

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

Section 102(15): Investment adviser: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(f); RUSA Section 101(7). This term generally follows the definition in Section 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, but has been updated to take into account new media such as the Internet. The first sentence in Section 102(15) is identical to the first sentence in the 1956 Act Section 401(f) and the counterpart language in Section 202(a)(11). The RUSA definition deleted the phrases "either directly or through publications or writings" and "regular" before business. These terms have been returned to Section 102(15) because of the intention that this definition be construed uniformly with the definition in Section 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. This first sentence would not reach the author of a book who did not receive compensation as part of a regular business for providing investment advice. The second sentence in the term addressing financial planners is new. The purpose of this sentence is to achieve functional regulation of financial planners who satisfy the definition of investment adviser. Cf. Investment Advisers Act Release 1092, 39 SEC Dock. 494 (1987) (similar approach in Securities and Exchange Commission interpretative Release). This reference is not intended to preclude persons who hold a formally recognized financial planning or consulting designation or certification from using this designation. The use by a person of a title, designation or certification as a financial planner or other similar title, designation, or certification alone does not require registration as an investment adviser. Sections 102(15)(A) through (H) are exclusions from the term "investment adviser." An excluded person can be held liable for fraud in providing investment advice, see Section 502, but would not be subject to the registration and regulatory provisions in Article 4. Sections 102(15)(A) and (E) are new and recognize that investment adviser representatives and federal covered investment advisers are separately treated in this Act. See definitions in Sections 102(6) and 102(16); registration and exemptions in Sections 404-405. Sections 102(15)(B), (C), and (G) are substantively identical to the 1956 Act, RUSA, and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. The Official Comment to the 1956 Act Section 401(f) quoted an opinion of the Securities and Exchange Commission General Counsel in Investment Advisers Act Release 2 on the meaning of "special compensation" included in Section 102(15)(C):

[This clause] amounts to a recognition that brokers and dealers commonly give a certain amount of advice to their customers in the course of their regular business, and that it would be inappropriate to bring them within the scope of the Investment Advisers Act merely because of this aspect of their business. On the other hand, that portion of clause [(C)] which refers to 'special compensation' amounts to an equally clear recognition that a broker or dealer who is specially compensated for the rendition of advice should be considered an investment adviser and not be excluded from the purview of the Act merely because he is also engaged in effecting market transactions in securities... . The essential distinction to be borne in mind in considering borderline cases ... is the distinction between compensation for advice itself and compensation for services of another character to which advice is merely incidental. Similarly, other broker-dealer employees such as research analysts who receive no special compensation from third parties for investment advice would not be required to register as investment advisers. The 1956 Act definition added the word "paid" in Section 401(f)(4) to the counterpart exclusion in Section 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act "to emphasize," as the Official Comment explained, "that a person who periodically distributes a 'tipster sheet' free as a way to get paying clients is not excluded from the definition as a 'publisher.'" After the 1956 Act was published, the United States Supreme Court construed the definition of investment adviser in Lowe v. SEC, 472 U.S. 181 (1985), and concluded:

Congress did not intend to exclude publications that are distributed by investment advisers as a normal part of the business of servicing their clients. The legislative history plainly demonstrates that Congress was primarily interested in regulating the business of rendering personalized investment advice, including publishing activities that are a normal incident thereto. On the other hand, Congress, plainly sensitive to First Amendment concerns, wanted to make clear that it did not seek to regulate the press through the licensing of nonpersonalized publishing activities.

Id. at 185. Responsive to this language RUSA rewrote this exclusion to provide:

a publisher, employee, or columnist of a newspaper, news magazine, or business or financial publication, or an owner, operator, or employee of a cable, radio, or television network, station, or production facility, if, in either case, the financial or business news published or disseminated is made available to the general public and the content does not consist of rendering advice on the basis of the specific investment situation of each client.

Recent experience at the federal and state levels suggest that the 1956 Act and RUSA approaches may be too broad. The retention of the Investment Advisers Act approach provides a better balance between First Amendment concerns and protection of investors from non-"bona fide" publicizing of investment advice. The exclusion in Section 102(15)(D) is intended to exclude publishers of Internet or electronic media, but only if the Internet or electronic media publication or website satisfies the "bona fide" and "publication of general and regular circulation" requirements. Cf. SEC v. Park, 99 F. Supp. 2d 889, 895-896 (N.D. Ill. 2000) (court declined to dismiss complaint against an Internet website when there were allegations that the website was not "bona fide" or of "general and regular circulation"). The exclusion in Section 102(15)(G) is required by the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996. This exclusion will reach banks and bank holding companies as described in Investment Advisers Act Section 202(a)(11)(A) and persons whose advice solely concerns United States government securities as described in Section 202(a)(11)(E).

Section 102(16): Investment adviser representative: No Prior Provision. Investment adviser representatives have not been required to register under the federal Investment Advisers Act, before or after the National Securities Markets Improvement Act. The term investment adviser representative is not intended to preclude persons who hold a formally recognized financial planning or consulting title, designation, or certification from using such a designation. The use by a person of a title, designation or certification as a financial planner, or other similar title, designation, or certification alone does not require registration as an investment adviser representative.

19.

Section 102(17): Issuer: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(g); RUSA Section 101(8). This Section generally follows the 1956 Act and RUSA. In paragraph (B), the phrase "or that is otherwise contractually responsible for assuring payment of the certificate" is intended to address forms of payment other than leases or conditional sales contracts. It would also reach guarantors.

20.

Section 102(18): Nonissuer transaction or nonissuer distribution: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(h); RUSA Section 101(9). This definition is relevant to several exempt transactions in Section 202. In TechnoMedical Labs, Inc. v. Utah Sec. Div., 744 P.2d 320 (Utah Ct. App. 1987), the court declined to limit the term benefit to monetary benefits and instead held a spinoff transaction could provide direct or indirect benefits to an issuer. Id. at 323-324, following SEC v. Datronics Eng'r, Inc., 490 F.2d 250 (4th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 937; SEC v. Harwin Indus. Corp., 326 F. Supp. 943 (S.D.N.Y. 1971). In a similar fashion, transactions by officers, directors, promoters, and other insiders of the issuer may benefit the issuer and may not qualify as nonissuer transactions.

21.

Section 102(19): Offer to purchase: No Prior Provision: A rescission offer under Section 510 would be an offer to purchase with respect to a security that earlier had been sold.

22.

Section 102(20): Person: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(i); RUSA Section 101(10). This is the standard definition used by the National Conference of Commissioners for Uniform State Laws with the addition of "limited liability company" to reflect current usage. The use of the concluding phrase "or any other legal or commercial entity" is intended to be broad enough to include other forms of business entities that may be created or popularized in the future.

23.

Section 102(21): Place of business: Prior Provision: Rules 203A-3(b) and 222-1 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

24.

Section 102(23): Price amendment: Prior Provision: RUSA Section 101(11). A price amendment may be used in a registration coordinated with the Securities and Exchange Commission procedure in Section 303(d). In the case of noncash offerings, required information concerning such matters as the offering price and underwriting arrangements is normally filed in a "price" amendment after the rest of the registration statement has been reviewed by the Securities and Exchange Commission staff. See generally 1 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 542-550 (3d ed. rev. 1998).

25.

Section 102(24): Principal place of business: Prior Provision: Rule 222-1(b) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

26.

Section 102(25): Record: Prior Provision: Uniform Electronic Transactions Act Section 2(13). Cf. Section 3(a)(37) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. The Uniform Electronic Transactions Act § 2(13) defines record in nearly identical terms. The Official Comment explains:

This is a standard definition designed to embrace all means of communicating or storing information except human memory. It includes any method for storing or communicating information, including "writings." A record need not be indestructible or permanent, but the term does not include oral or other communications which are not stored or preserved by some means.

This term is intended to embrace new forms of records that are created or popularized in the future. A record would include, but not be limited to, a registration statement, report, application, book, publication, account, paper, correspondence, memorandum, agreement, document, computer file, or disk, microfilm, photograph, or audio or visual tape.

Section 102(26): Sale: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(j); RUSA Section 101(13). Both the 1956 Act and RUSA definition of "sale" are modeled on Section 2(a)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933. Language in Section 401(j) of the 1956 Act addressed the now rescinded SEC "no sale" doctrine and has been eliminated. Merger transactions are usually sales under Section 102(26), but may be exempted from the securities registration requirements by Section 202(18).

Section 102(28): Security: Prior Provisions: 1956 Act Section 401(1); RUSA Section 101(16). Much of the definition in Section 102(28), like the definitions in the 1956 Act Section 401(l) and RUSA Section 101(16), is identical to the definition in Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act. State courts interpreting the Uniform Securities Act definition of security have often looked to interpretations of the federal definition of security. See generally 2 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Security Regulation 923-1138.19 (3d ed. rev. 1999). The most recent amendments to Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 were added by the Commodities Futures Modernization Act of 2000 which added or revised language in the Securities Act addressing security futures and securities puts, calls, straddles, options, or privileges. Identical language has been included in Section 102(28) of this Act to harmonize interpretation of the federal and state definition of a "security." With respect to a security futures product, Section 28(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended by the Commodity Futures Modernization Act of 2000, further provides: "No provision of any State law regarding the offer, sale or distribution of securities shall apply to any transaction in a security futures product, except that this sentence shall not be construed as limiting any State antifraud law of general applicability." Preorganization certificates or subscriptions are included in this term, obviating the need for a separate definition as was included in RUSA Section 402(13). Section 102(28) uses RUSA's "fractional undivided interest in oil, gas or other mineral rights" formulation, which originated in Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933, rather than the 1956 Act formulation, "certificate of interest or participation in an oil, gas or mining title." In recent years, courts interpreting Section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 have found certain oil, gas or mineral rights to be investment contracts (that is, securities). 2 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 979-982 (3d ed. rev. 1999). A new sentence was added in Section 102(28)(A) referring to certificated or uncertificated securities to indicate that the term is intended to apply whether or not a security is evidenced by a writing. Section 102(28)(A) is intended to reject Thomas v. State of Tex., 65 S.W.3d 38 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001) (Under Texas law evidence of indebtedness requires a writing). Insurance or endowment policies or endowment or annuity contracts, other than those on which an insurance company promises to make variable payments, are excluded from this term. Variable insurance products are also excluded in many states and are exempted from securities registration in others under provisions such as Section 201(4). When variable products are included in the definition of security and exempted from registration state securities administrators can bring enforcement actions concerning variable insurance sales practices. The Drafting Committee recognized that the decision whether to exclude variable annuities from the definition of security will be made on a state-by-state basis. Those states which intend to exclude variable products from the definition of security should add the words "or variable" to Section 102(28)(B) so that it will read:

(B) The term does not include an insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract under which an insurance company promises to pay a fixed or variable sum of money either in a lump sum or periodically for life or other specified period.

In the view of the American Council of Life Insurers:

2-UA Blue Sky Regulation

The brackets around the words "or variable" should be removed to follow the majority of jurisdictions. Thirty-seven jurisdictions [including Guam] currently exclude all insurance, endowment and annuity contracts from the definition of security. Removal of the brackets around the words "or variable," therefore, would incorporate the approach taken in the majority of jurisdictions. The removal of these brackets also prevents a statutory conflict with [up to] 48 jurisdictions that grant the insurance commissioner exclusive jurisdiction to regulate the issuance and sale of variable contracts. Moreover, this approach recognizes that the issuance and sale of variable contracts is comprehensively regulated by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Association of Securities Dealers, 50 state insurance departments, and in the case of group life and annuities, the Department of Labor. Like all other financial products, this approach imposes only one, rather than two, levels of regulation in each state and reflects the philosophy of financial services modernization.

In the view of the North American Securities Administrators Association variable products should be exempted from registration, not excluded from the definition of securities:

One of the goals of this Act is to align state and federal law. The United States Supreme Court ruled that a variable annuity is a security in SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Insurance Company of America, 359 U.S. 65 (1959). More recently, it has been confirmed that variable insurance products are "covered securities" as defined in the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 (NSMIA) and in the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998 (SLUSA), see Lander v. Hartford Life Annuity Ins., 251 F.3d 101 (2d Cir. 2001).

When variable products are included in the definition of security and exempted from registration, state securities administrators can bring enforcement actions concerning variable insurance sales practices. This approach toward functional regulation is supported by the National Association of Securities Dealers as evidenced by a February 2001 letter from Mary Schapiro, President of Regulatory Policy & Oversight: "Based on our experience, we have found that variable products' sales-related problems parallel those of mutual funds and other securities ... Because of the substantial similarities between variable contracts and other securities products, we believe it is incongruous for agents and sales practices involved in variable annuities not to be covered by state securities laws."

State securities regulators support the functional regulation of agents because: 1) insurance companies are not affected since state securities regulators are preempted from requiring the registration of variable products; 2) the vast majority of broker-dealer subsidiaries of insurance companies are already registered to sell securities in most states; and 3) the vast majority of agents are already dually licensed to sell insurance and securities in most states.

Section 102(28)(C) includes the exclusion in RUSA from the 1956 definition of security for "an interest in a contributory or noncontributory pension or welfare plan subject to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974." The first clause in Section 102(28)(D) is derived from the leading case of SEC v. W.J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293 (1946), which has been widely followed by federal and state courts. The second clause in Section 102(28)(D) is based, in part, on the leading case of SEC v. Glenn W. Turner Enter., Inc., 474 F.2d 476, 482 n.7 (9th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 900 (1974). The courts have divided over the interpretation of the "common enterprise" element of an investment contract. The courts generally recognize that "horizontal" commonality (for example, the pooling of an investment by two or more investors) is a common enterprise. A small minority of the federal circuits will also find a common enterprise in a "vertical" relationship when a single investor is dependent upon the expertise of a single commodities broker. Since two or more persons do not share in the profitability of an undertaking, it is difficult to argue that there is a common enterprise. Section 102(28)(D) follows a significantly larger number of federal circuits and adopts a more restrictive form of vertical commonality that occurs only when there is profit sharing between two persons even if, for example, one is a conventional investor and one is a promoter. See generally 2 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 989-997 (3d ed. Rev. 1999). In interpreting all elements of the investment contract, the courts have emphasized substance, not form. A conventional partnership involving two individuals who actively
