(n663)Footnote 664. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n664)Footnote 665. 5 Stat. 10.

(n665)Footnote 666. Id. § 12 .

(n666)Footnote 667. Id. § 9 . Herbert L. Meschke & Ted Smith, The North Dakota Supreme Court: A Century of Advances, 76 N.D. L. Rev. 217 (2000) .

(n667)Footnote 668. Statutes of the Territory of Wisconsin.

(n668)Footnote 669. Coburn v. Harvey, 8 Wis. 147, 148-151 (1864) .

(n669)Footnote 670. 9 Stat. 178.

(n670)Footnote 671. 9 Stat. 233.

(n671)Footnote 672. 9 Stat. 403.

(n672)Footnote 673. Id. § 12 .

(n673)Footnote 674. Id. § 9 .

(n674)Footnote 675. Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854, 10 Stat. 277.

(n675)Footnote 676. Id. § 9 .

(n676)Footnote 677. Id. § 14 .

(n677)Footnote 678. Neb. Terr. Laws, 328 (1st Sess.).

(n678)Footnote 679. 12 Stat. 239 (1861).

(n679)Footnote 680. Id. § 9 .

(n680)Footnote 681. Dak. Civ. Code § 6.

(n681)Footnote 682. 25 Stat. 676 (1889).

(n682)Footnote 683. Id. § 24 .

(n683)Footnote 684. N.D. Const. of 1889, Schedule, § 2.

(n684)Footnote 685. N.D. Cent. Code. §§ 1-01-02 to 1-01-06 .

(n685)Footnote 686. Anderson v. Blixt, 72 N.W.2d 799 (N.D. 1955) ; Brignall v. Hannah, 157 N.W. 1042 (N.D. 1914) .

(n686)Footnote 687. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, 148 N.W. 654, 658 (N.D. 1914) .

(n687)Footnote 688. In re Reinhardt, 81 B.R. 565, 569 (D.N.D. 1987) .

(n688)Footnote 689. 14 Geo. 3 , ch. 83 (1774).

(n689)Footnote 690. Id. at P III.

(n690)Footnote 691. An Ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio [Northwest Ordinance], art. II, § 14 (1787), published as a footnote in 1 United States Statutes at Large 51-53.

(n691)Footnote 692. Id. §§ 4 , 5.

(n692)Footnote 693. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n693)Footnote 694. 2 Stat. 173.

(n694)Footnote 695. 2 Stat. 201.

(n695)Footnote 696. Ohio Const. of 1802, Schedule, § 4.

(n696)Footnote 697. Ohio Const. of 1802, art. III, §§ 2, 3.

(n697)Footnote 698. Ohio Const. of 1851, Schedule, § 1.

(n698)Footnote 699. Ohio Laws, ch. 113, § 1.

(n699)Footnote 700. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1.49 .

(n700)Footnote 701. McAllister v. Schlemmer & Graber Co., 177 N.E. 841, 842 (Ohio App. 1930) .

(n701)Footnote 702. The Cleveland, C. & C. R.R. v. Kearney, 3 Ohio St. 201, 205-206, 208 (1854) .

(n702)Footnote 703. This substitution is discussed in Beard v. Poydras, 4 Mart. 348 (La. 1816) .

(n703)Footnote 704. 2 Stat. 283.

(n704)Footnote 705. Id. § 13 .

(n705)Footnote 706. 1 Laws of a Public and General Nature, of the District of Louisiana, of the Territory of Louisiana, of the Territory of Missouri, and of the State of Missouri up to the Year 1824 § 1 (1842).

(n706)Footnote 707. Id. § 2 .

(n707)Footnote 708. 4 Stat. 729.

(n708)Footnote 709. Id. § 24 .

(n709)Footnote 710. § 10, 3 Stat. 419.

(n710)Footnote 711. Arkansas Constitution of 1836, Schedule, § 2.

(n711)Footnote 712. Ark. Code Ann. § 1-2-119 . See Moore v. Sharp, 121 S.W. 341 (Ark. 1909) .

(n712)Footnote 713. 26 Stat. 81.

(n713)Footnote 714. Id. § 11 .

(n714)Footnote 715. Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854, 10 Stat. 277.

(n715)Footnote 716. Id. § 9 .

(n716)Footnote 717. Id. § 14 .

(n717)Footnote 718. Neb. Terr. Laws, 328 (1st Sess.).

(n718)Footnote 719. 13 Stat. 47.

(n719)Footnote 720. 14 Stat. 820.

(n720)Footnote 721. Nebraska Constitution of 1866, Schedule, § 1.

(n721)Footnote 722. Neb. Rev. Stat. § 49-101 .

(n722)Footnote 723. Brooks v. Kimball County, 256 N.W. 501, 504 (Neb. 1934) .

(n723)Footnote 724. Williams v. Miles, 94 N.W. 705, 708 (Neb. 1903) . See also Bloomfield State Bank v. Miller, 75 N.W. 569, 570-571 (Neb. 1898) .

(n724)Footnote 725. Okla. Stat. § 3874 (1893). See also Okland Oil Co. v. Conoco Inc., 144 F.3d 1308 (10th Cir. 1998) (common law remains in full force in Oklahoma unless expressly modified by statute).

(n725)Footnote 726. § 31, 26 Stat. 81 (1890).

(n726)Footnote 727. 34 Stat. 267 (1906).

(n727)Footnote 728. Id. § 21 .

(n728)Footnote 729. 35 Stat. 2160 (1907).

(n729)Footnote 730. Okla. Stat. tit. 12, § 2 .

(n730)Footnote 731. Okla. Stat. tit. 25, § 29 .

(n731)Footnote 732. McCormack v. Oklahoma Pub'g Co., 613 P.2d 737, 740 (Okla. 1980) ; Magnusson v. New York Times Co., 98 P.3d 1070 (Okla. 2004) (court held that media broadcasts fell within the common law privilege of fair comment).

(n732)Footnote 733. Creekmore v. Redman Indus., Inc., 671 P.2d 73, 76-77 (Okla. App. 1983) .

(n733)Footnote 734. See Sam Bass Warner, History of the Oregon Code, 1 Or. L. Rev. 129 (1922).

(n734)Footnote 735. 8 William F. Swindler, Sources and Documents of United States Constitutions 193 (1979).

(n735)Footnote 736. Oregon Laws of 1843-1849, p. 98, as quoted in Sam Bass Warner, History of the Oregon Code, 1 Or. L. Rev. 129, 138 (1922).

(n736)Footnote 737. Oregon Laws of 1845, pp. 16, 42, as discussed in Sam Bass Warner, History of the Oregon Code, 1 Or. L. Rev. 129, 140 (1922).

(n737)Footnote 738. See Sam Bass Warner, History of the Oregon Code, 1 Or. L. Rev. 129, 137 (1922).

(n738)Footnote 739. 5 Stat. 235.

(n739)Footnote 740. Id. § 12 .

(n740)Footnote 741. 5 Stat. 10.

(n741)Footnote 742. An Ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio [Northwest Ordinance], § 14, art. II (1787), published as a footnote in 1 United States Statutes at Large 51-53.

(n742)Footnote 743. Id. §§ 4 , 5.

(n743)Footnote 744. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n744)Footnote 745. 2 Stat. 309.

(n745)Footnote 746. 9 Stat. 323.

(n746)Footnote 747. Id. § 6 .

(n747)Footnote 748. Id. § 14 .

(n748)Footnote 749. Id. § 17 .

(n749)Footnote 750. 10 Stat. 172.

(n750)Footnote 751. 11 Stat. 383.

(n751)Footnote 752. Oregon Constitution, art. XVIII, § 7 .

(n752)Footnote 753. State v. Hansen, 743 P.2d 157 (Or. 1987) .

(n753)Footnote 754. Peery v. Fletcher, 182 P. 143, 146, 147 (Or. 1919) .

(n754)Footnote 755. Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 105.950-105.975 .

(n755)Footnote 756. Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 105.770-105.774 .

(n756)Footnote 757. The interesting peculiarities of this conveyance, with strong overtones of medieval English land law, have been explained as follows, in connection with Penn's assumption of title to land in Delaware:

> There were actually four legal documents involved in these grants, an absolute deed (called a "deed of feoffment") and a lease for ten thousand years for New Castle and the circle around it, and another deed and a similar lease for the land from twelve miles south of New Castle to Cape Henlopen ... Probably the division is explained by the duke's desire to get some revenue from these territories but not to interfere with Penn's use of New Castle or with his revenues from it ... Perhaps both deed and lease were used because of the uncertainty of the duke's legal rights to Delaware ...
>
> Then on October 28 [the day after Penn's arrival on October 27, 1682], in a ceremony called "livery of seisin," Penn formally took possession of New Castle and the territory within twelve miles about it, except on the east side of the Delaware. After the deeds from the Duke of York were read, Penn took the key to the New Castle fort, entered and locked himself in alone, then came out and received a piece of turf with a twig upon it and a porringer with river water and soil as symbols of his new possession.

John A. Munroe, Colonial Delaware, A History 83-84 (1978).

(n757)Footnote 758. The Earliest Printed Laws of Pennsylvania 1681-1713 183, 184 (John D. Cushing ed. 1978).

(n758)Footnote 759. Id. at 188.

(n759)Footnote 760. Pennsylvania Constitution of 1790, Schedule, § 1.

(n760)Footnote 761. Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 46, §§ 151 - 153 (repealed 1972).

(n761)Footnote 762. 1 Pa. Con. Stat. Ann. § 1503.

(n762)Footnote 763. Act of April 7, 1807.

(n763)Footnote 764. Appendix, 3 Binney's Reports (1808).

(n764)Footnote 765. 3 Binn. at 596 (Pa. 1808).

(n765)Footnote 766. Commonwealth v. Smith, 60 Dauph. 35, 67 D. & C. 598 (Pa. 1949) .

(n766)Footnote 767. Commonwealth v. Mochan, 110 A.2d 788 (Pa. 1955) .

(n767)Footnote 768. Klossman v. Friday, 108 P.L.J. 399 (Pa. 1961).

(n768)Footnote 769. Records of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 52 (John Russell Bartlett ed. 1856).

(n769)Footnote 770. Id. at 53 .

(n770)Footnote 771. 1 Herbert L. Osgood, The American Colonies in the Seventeenth Century 70 (1904).

(n771)Footnote 772. Records of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 112 (John Russell Bartlett ed. 1856).

(n772)Footnote 773. Records of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 143-146 (John Russell Bartlett ed. 1856).

(n773)Footnote 774. Id. at 5.

(n774)Footnote 775. Id. at 14.

(n775)Footnote 776. The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 1647-1719 128 (John D. Cushing ed. 1977).

(n776)Footnote 777. Rhode Island Constitution, art. XIV, § 1 .

(n777)Footnote 778. R.I. Gen. Laws § 43-3-1 .

(n778)Footnote 779. Bloomfield v. Brown, 25 A.2d 354 (R.I. 1942) .

(n779)Footnote 780. Id. at 356 .

(n780)Footnote 781. Mathewson v. Phoenix Iron Foundry, 20 F. 281 (Cir. Ct., D.R.I. 1884) .

(n781)Footnote 782. Williamson v. General Fin. Corp., 210 A.2d 61 (R.I. 1965) . In an interesting aside, this court also spurned use of legal Latin:

> Although not prohibited by statute, the use of Latin terms in pleadings is impermissible unless they have become so anglicized as to have been adopted as part of the English language and are so clearly intelligible as not to require resort to a law dictionary by one whose education did not include a study of the ancient language... Its use ... in the latter half of the twentieth century so clouds a pleading with indefiniteness and vagueness as not sufficiently to inform the adverse party of what he may be called upon to meet at trial and therefore to fall short of meeting the test that averments should be precise and definite as the nature of the case will permit.

Id. at 63-64 . Ernest G. Mayo, Rhode Island's Reception of the Common Law, 31 Suffolk L. Rev. 609 (1998).

(n782)Footnote 783. North Carolina Charters and Constitutions, 1578-1698 7-8 (Mattie Marie Edwards Parker ed. 1963).

(n783)Footnote 784. Id. at 67.

(n784)Footnote 785. Id. at 77.

(n785)Footnote 786. Id. at 84-85.

(n786)Footnote 787. 7 Source And Documents of United States Constitutions 391 (William F. Swindler ed. 1978).

(n787)Footnote 788. 2 Herbert L. Osgood, The American Colonies in the Seventeenth Century 215 (1904).

(n788)Footnote 789. 1 The Earliest Printed Laws of South Carolina 1692-1734 305 (John D. Cushing ed. 1978).

(n789)Footnote 790. Id. at 321.

(n790)Footnote 791. Id. at 323.

(n791)Footnote 792. Id. at 322.

(n792)Footnote 793. South Carolina Constitution of 1776, art. XXIX.

(n793)Footnote 794. South Carolina Constitution of 1778, art. XXXIV.

(n794)Footnote 795. South Carolina Constitution of 1790, art. VII.

(n795)Footnote 796. South Carolina Constitution of 1865 (not approved), art. VIII.

(n796)Footnote 797. South Carolina Constitution of 1868, art. XVII, § 10.

(n797)Footnote 798. South Carolina Constitution of 1895, art. XVII, § 10.

(n798)Footnote 799. South Carolina Constitution, art. XVII, § 10 .

(n799)Footnote 800. Shecut v. McDowel, 6 S.C. L. (1 Tread.) 35 (1812) .

(n800)Footnote 801. S.C. Rev. Stat. ch. 146, § 10.

(n801)Footnote 802. S.C. Code Ann. § 14-1-50 .

(n802)Footnote 803. Id. § 14-1-60.

(n803)Footnote 804. State v. Carson, 262 S.E.2d 918 (S.C. 1980) ; North Greenville College v. Sherman Constr. Co., 243 S.E.2d 441 (S.C. 1978) .

(n804)Footnote 805. Patel v. McIntyre, 667 F. Supp. 1131 (D.S.C.) , aff'd without opinion, 848 F.2d 185 (4th Cir. 1987) ; McNeill v. United States, 519 F. Supp. 283 (D.S.C. 1981) ; Bruce v. Riddle, 464 F. Supp. 745 (D.S.C.) , aff'd, 631 F.2d 272 (4th Cir. 1979) .

(n805)Footnote 806. David A. Thomas, Anglo-American Land Law: Diverging Developments from A Shared History Part II: How Anglo-American Land Law Diverged After American Colonization and Independence, 34 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 295 (Summer 1999) .

(n806)Footnote 807. This substitution is discussed in Beard v. Poydras, 4 Mart. 348 (La. 1816) .

(n807)Footnote 808. 2 Stat. 283.

(n808)Footnote 809. Id. § 13.

(n809)Footnote 810. 1 Laws of a Public and General Nature, of the District of Louisiana, of the Territory of Louisiana, of the Territory of Missouri, and of the State of Missouri up to the Year 1824, § 1 (1842).

(n810)Footnote 811. Id. § 2.

(n811)Footnote 812. 4 Stat. 701.

(n812)Footnote 813. Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854, 10 Stat. 277.

(n813)Footnote 814. Id. § 9 .

(n814)Footnote 815. Id. § 14 .

(n815)Footnote 816. Neb. Terr. Laws, 328 (1st Sess.).

(n816)Footnote 817. 12 Stat. 239.

(n817)Footnote 818. Id. § 9 .

(n818)Footnote 819. Dak. Civ. Code § 6.

(n819)Footnote 820. 25 Stat. 676.

(n820)Footnote 821. Id. § 24 .

(n821)Footnote 822. South Dakota Constitution, art. XXVI, § 1.

(n822)Footnote 823. S.D. Laws, ch. 105, §§ 1, 2.

(n823)Footnote 824. S.D. Codified Laws §§ 1-1-22 - 1-1-24 .

(n824)Footnote 825. Truxes v. Kenco Enters., Inc., 119 N.W.2d 914, 916 (S.D. 1963) .

(n825)Footnote 826. Thompson v. Andrews, 165 N.W. 9, 12 (S.D. 1917) .

(n826)Footnote 827. Anderson v. Blixt, 72 N.W.2d 799 (N.D. 1955) ; Brignall v. Hannah, 157 N.W. 1042 (N.D. 1914) .

(n827)Footnote 828. Reeves & Co. v. Russell, 148 N.W. 654, 658 (N.D. 1914) .

(n828)Footnote 829. In re Reinhardt, 81 B.R. 565, 569 (D.N.D. 1987) .

(n829)Footnote 830. Constitution of the State of Franklin, P 1, in 9 Sources and Documents of United States Constitutions 127 (William F. Swindler ed. 1979).

(n830)Footnote 831. 1 Stat. 101.

(n831)Footnote 832. Id. at P 8 of the deed of cession.

(n832)Footnote 833. 1 Stat. 123.

(n833)Footnote 834. An Ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio [Northwest Ordinance], § 14, art. II (1787), published as a footnote in 1 United States Statutes at Large 51-53.

(n834)Footnote 835. Id. §§ 4 , 5.

(n835)Footnote 836. North Carolina Charters and Constitutions, 1578-1698 6 (Mattie Erma Edwards Parker ed. 1963).

(n836)Footnote 837. "Denizen" ordinarily means an inhabitant or resident, although in British usage it may also mean a foreigner who is permitted certain rights of citizenship.

(n837)Footnote 838. North Carolina Charters and Constitutions, 1578-1698 7 (Mattie Erma Edwards Parker ed. 1963).

(n838)Footnote 839. Id. at 8.

(n839)Footnote 840. Id., vol. 1 at 293-301.

(n840)Footnote 841. Id. at 321-322.

(n841)Footnote 842. North Carolina Constitution of 1776, Declaration of Rights, § XXV.

(n842)Footnote 843. North Carolina Constitution of 1776, art. XLIII.

(n843)Footnote 844. North Carolina Laws of 1778, Ch. 5, §§ I and II.

(n844)Footnote 845. 1 Stat. 491.

(n845)Footnote 846. Tennessee Constitution of 1796, art. X, § 2.

(n846)Footnote 847. Tennessee Constitution of 1834, art. XI, § 1.

(n847)Footnote 848. Tennessee Constitution of 1870, art. XI, § 1.

(n848)Footnote 849. Tennessee Constitution, art. XI, § 1 .

(n849)Footnote 850. Tenn. Code Ann. § 8-10-109 .

(n850)Footnote 851. Tenn. Code Ann. § 60-1-608 .

(n851)Footnote 852. Tenn. R. Evid. 202(a)(1).

(n852)Footnote 853. McCorry v. King's Heirs, 22 Tenn. 267 (1842) .

(n853)Footnote 854. State v. Miller, 79 Tenn. 620, 623, 627-628 (1883) . See also Glasgow's Lessee v. Smith & Blackwell, 1 Tenn. 144 (1807) (a lengthy publisher's note following the opinion of the case lists English statutes then considered in force in Tennessee).

(n854)Footnote 855. This substitution is discussed in Beard v. Poydras, 4 Mart. 348 (La. 1816) .

(n855)Footnote 856. 2 Stat. 283.

(n856)Footnote 857. Id. § 13 .

(n857)Footnote 858. 1 Laws of a Public and General Nature, of the District of Louisiana, of the Territory of Louisiana, of the Territory of Missouri, and of the State of Missouri up to the Year 1824 § 1 (1842).

(n858)Footnote 859. Id. § 2 .

(n859)Footnote 860. Texas Provisional Constitution of 1835, art. VI.

(n860)Footnote 861. Id. at art. VII.

(n861)Footnote 862. Republic of Texas Constitution of 1836, art. IV, § 13.

(n862)Footnote 863. Republic of Texas Constitution of 1836, Schedule, § 1.

(n863)Footnote 864. Texas Constitution of 1836, General Provisions, § 7.

(n864)Footnote 865. Cited and discussed in Ford W. Hall, An Account of the Adoption of the Common Law by Texas, 28 Tex. L. Rev. 801, 808-809 (1950); and in Edward Lee Markham, Jr., The Reception of the Common Law of England in Texas and the Judicial Attitude Toward that Reception, 29 Tex. L. Rev. 904, 909-910 (1951). Robert N. Jones, Jr., A Jurisprudence Better Understood: The Adoption of the Common Law in Texas, 53 Texas B.J. 452 (1990) . See also James W. Paulsen, Community Property and the Early American Women's Rights Movement: The Texas Connection, 32 Idaho L. Rev. 644 (1996) . See also Thomas M. Featherston, Jr. and Amy E. Douthitt, Changing the Rules by Agreement: The New Era in Characterization, Management, and Liability of Marital Property, 49 Baylor L.

Rev. 271 (Spring 1997) .

(n865)Footnote 866. 5 Stat. 797.

(n866)Footnote 867. Texas Constitution of 1845, art. XIII, § 3.

(n867)Footnote 868. Texas Constitution of 1845, art. I, § 18.

(n868)Footnote 869. Texas Constitution of 1845, art. VII, § 19. Joseph W. McKnight, Texas Community Property Law: Conservative Attitudes, Reluctant Change, 56 Law & Contemp. Probs. 71, 73 81 (Spring 1993).

(n869)Footnote 870. Texas Constitution of 1845, art. VII, § 22.

(n870)Footnote 871. Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 5.001 .

(n871)Footnote 872. Tex. Prop. Code Ann. §§ 5.042(a)-5.042(d).

(n872)Footnote 873. Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 5414c .

(n873)Footnote 874. Tex Prop. Code Ann. § 92.061 .

(n874)Footnote 875. Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 51.001 .

(n875)Footnote 876. Kraft v. Langford, 565 S.W.2d 223, 228 (Tex. 1978) .

(n876)Footnote 877. Paul v. Ball, 31 Tex. 10, 14-15 (1868) .

(n877)Footnote 878. Southern Pac. Co. v. Porter, 331 S.W.2d 42, 45 (Tex. 1960) . Only a few years earlier the Texas Court of Civil Appeals in Dallas had declared that, "Our Texas courts are limited to the enforcement of rights under the common law as it existed on January 20, 1840, unless changed, modified, added to, or repealed by statute." Milner v. Red River Valley Pub'g Co., 249 S.W.2d 227, 229 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952) .

(n878)Footnote 879. Constitution of the State of Deseret , H. MISC. DOC. NO. 18, 31st Cong., 1st Sess. (1849); also published in 9 Sources and Documents of United States Constitutions 375-381 (William F. Swindler ed. 1979).

(n879)Footnote 880. 9 Stat. 453.

(n880)Footnote 881. Id. § 9 . But see Edwin Brown Firmage & Richard Collin Mangrum, Zion in the Courts, ch. 9 (1988); Michael W. Homer, The Judiciary and the Common Law in Utah Territory, 185061, 21(1) Dialogue 97 (1988).

(n881)Footnote 882. Id. § 17 . Orma Linford, The Mormons, the Law, and the Territory of Utah, 23 Am. J. Legal Hist. 213 (1979) .

(n882)Footnote 883. First Nat'l Bank v. Kinner, 1 Utah 100, 106-107 (1873) .

(n883)Footnote 884. People v. Moroni Green, 1 Utah 11 (1876) .

(n884)Footnote 885. 28 Stat. 107. See also Nancy J. Taniguchi, The Shifting Significance of United States v. Sweet, 9(2) W. Legal Hist. 131 (1996).

(n885)Footnote 886. Id. § 19 .

(n886)Footnote 887. 29 Stat. 876.

(n887)Footnote 888. Utah Constitution, art. XXIV, § 2 .

(n888)Footnote 889. Utah Code Ann. § 68-3-1 .

(n889)Footnote 890. Hatch v. Hatch, 148 P. 1096, 1098, 1100 (Utah 1915) . Jerrold S. Jensen, The Common Law of England in the Territory of Utah, 60(1) Utah Hist. Q. 4 (1992).

(n890)Footnote 891. Cahoon v. Pelton, 342 P.2d 94, 98 (Utah 1959) .

(n891)Footnote 892. Vermont Constitution of 1777, ch. II, §§ XXI, XXXI, XXXIV.

(n892)Footnote 893. Vermont Constitution of 1786, ch. II, §§ V, XXXII, XXXIII.

(n893)Footnote 894. 1 Stat. 191 (1791).

(n894)Footnote 895. Vermont Constitution of 1793, ch. II, §§ V, XXXV, XXXVI.

(n895)Footnote 896. Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344, 352-353 (1843) .

(n896)Footnote 897. Vermont State Papers, The Early Journals of the General Assembly 450 (1823). See also Clement v. Graham, 63 A. 146, 148-149 (Vt. 1906) .

(n897)Footnote 898. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 1, § 271 .

(n898)Footnote 899. State v. O'Brien, 170 A. 98, 102 (Vt. 1934) . See also E. B. & A. C. Whiting Co. v. City of Burlington, 175 A. 35, 41 (Vt. 1934) . See also Paul Gillies, Not Quite a State of Nature: Derivations of Early Vermont Law, 23 Vt. L. Rev. 99 (1998) .

(n899)Footnote 900. Articles IV and V, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 58-60 (1823).

(n900)Footnote 901. Article VII, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 60-61 (1823).

(n901)Footnote 902. Article VIII, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 61 (1823).

(n902)Footnote 903. Article XV, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 64 (1823).

(n903)Footnote 904. "Articles, Instructions and Orders," etc., Nov. 20, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 68 (1823).

(n904)Footnote 905. E.A. Prichard and Gregory A. Riegle, Searching for Certainty: Virginia's Evolutionary Approach to Vested Rights, 7 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 983 (Summer 1999) .

(n905)Footnote 906. "Articles, Instructions and Orders," etc., Nov. 20, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 69 (1823).

(n906)Footnote 907. Article IV, The Second Charter to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 88 (1823).

(n907)Footnote 908. Article VI, The Second Charter to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 89 (1823).

(n908)Footnote 909. Article XXVII, The Second Charter to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 97 (1823).

(n909)Footnote 910. Article IV, A Third Charter of K. James I to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 101 (1823).

(n910)Footnote 911. Article XXI, A Third Charter of K. James I to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 109 (1823).

(n911)Footnote 912. Article XX, A Third Charter of K. James I to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 109 (1823).

(n912)Footnote 913. Alf J. Mapp, Jr., The Virginia Experiment 44 (1987). According to the modern calendar, the date would have been designated August 9, 1619; according to older authority, the assembly was first called together near the end of June, 1619. 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 119-121 (1823).

(n913)Footnote 914. Preamble, 1661-62, vol. 2, 43.

(n914)Footnote 915. Paul Samuel Reinsch, "The English Common Law in the Early American Colonies," 1 Select Essays in Anglo-American Legal History 367, 405, 406 (1907).

(n915)Footnote 916. Act XX, Virginia Assembly of 1666, in 2 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 246 (1823).

(n916)Footnote 917. Warren M. Billings et Al., Colonial Virginia 75 (1986).

(n917)Footnote 918. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n918)Footnote 919. Va. Code Ann. §§ 1-10 and 1-11 .

(n919)Footnote 920. Long v. Vlassic Food Prods. Co., 439 F.2d 229 (4th Cir. 1971) ; Baring v. Reeder, 11 Va. (1 Hen. & M.) 154 (1806) .

(n920)Footnote 921. Weishaupt v. Commonwealth, 315 S.E.2d 847 (Va. 1984) ; Foster v. Commonwealth, 31 S.E. 503 (Va. 1898) .

(n921)Footnote 922. Williamson v. Old Brogue, Inc., 350 S.E.2d 621 (Va. 1986) .

(n922)Footnote 923. See, e.g., Byrd v. Gate Petr. Co., 845 F.2d 86 (4th Cir. 1988) . Joseph A. Ranney, Anglicans, Merchants, and Feminists: A Comparative Study of the Evolution of Married Women's Rights in Virginia, New York, and Wisconsin, 6 Wm. & Mary J. of Women & L. 493 (2000) . Carol M. Rose, A Dozen Propositions on Private Property, Public Rights, and the New Takings Legislation, 53 Wash & Lee L. Rev. 265 (1996) . Jose L. Fernandez, Public Trust, Riparian Rights, and Aquaculture: A Storm Brewing in the Ocean State, 20 Wm. & Mary Envtl. L. & Pol'y Rev. 293 (1996) . John F. Hart, "A Less Proportion of Idle Proprietors": Madison, Property Rights, and the Abolition of Fee Tail, 58 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 167 (Winter 2001) .

(n923)Footnote 924. 10 Stat. 172. See also Mark L. Lazarus III, An Historical Analysis of Alien Land Law: Washington Territory & State 18531889, 12 U. Puget Sound L. Rev. 203 (1989) .

(n924)Footnote 925. 10 Stat. 6.

(n925)Footnote 926. Id. § 12 .

(n926)Footnote 927. Brad Asher, Beyond The Reservation: Indians, Settlers, & The Law In Washington Territory, 18531889 (1998).

(n927)Footnote 928. Wash. Terr. Laws p. 83, § 1.

(n928)Footnote 929. Wash. Rev. Code § 4.04.010 .

(n929)Footnote 930. 25 Stat. 676.

(n930)Footnote 931. Id. § 24 .

(n931)Footnote 932. Washington Constitution, art. XXVII, § 2 .

(n932)Footnote 933. In re Hudson, 126 P.2d 765, 771 (Wash. 1942) . See also Cooper v. Runnels, 291 P.2d 657 (Wash. 1955) .

(n933)Footnote 934. Fowler v. Wyman, 13 P.2d 501 (Wash. 1932) .

(n934)Footnote 935. Department of Social & Health Servs. v. State Pers. Bd., 812 P.2d 500 (Wash. App. 1991) .

(n935)Footnote 936. Wash. Rev. Stat. §§ 26.16.010-26.16.210.

(n936)Footnote 937. Article VII, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 60-61 (1823).

(n937)Footnote 938. Article XV, Letters Patent to Sir Thomas Gates et al., April 10, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 64 (1823).

(n938)Footnote 939. "Articles, Instructions and Orders," etc., Nov. 20, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 68 (1823).

(n939)Footnote 940. "Articles, Instructions and Orders," etc., Nov. 20, 1606, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 69 (1823).

(n940)Footnote 941. Article VI, The Second Charter to the Treasurer and Company, for Virginia, in 1 William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 89 (1823).

(n941)Footnote 942. Preamble, 1661-1662, vol. 2, 43.

(n942)Footnote 943. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n943)Footnote 944. Baring v. Reeder, 11 Va. (1 Hen. & M.) 161 (1806) .

(n944)Footnote 945. West Virginia Constitution of 1861, art. XI, § 8.

(n945)Footnote 946. West Virginia Constitution, art. 8, § 13 .

(n946)Footnote 947. 13 Stat. 371.

(n947)Footnote 948. West Virginia Constitution of 1872, art. VII, § 21.

(n948)Footnote 949. West Virginia Constitution of 1872, art. XIII, § 1.

(n949)Footnote 950. West Virginia Constitution, art. 13, § 1 .

(n950)Footnote 951. W. Va. Code § 2-1-1 .

(n951)Footnote 952. W. Va. Code § 2-1-2 .

(n952)Footnote 953. W. Va. Code § 36-1A-4(7) .

(n953)Footnote 954. W. Va. Code § 56-3-1 .

(n954)Footnote 955. Cunningham v. Dorsey, 3 W. Va. 293, 306-307 (1869) . See also Powell v. Sims, 5 W. Va. 1 (1871) .

(n955)Footnote 956. Morningstar v. Black & Decker Mfg. Co., 253 S.E.2d 666, 676 (W. Va. 1979) .

(n956)Footnote 957. Markey v. Wachtel, 264 S.E.2d 437, 445 (W. Va. 1979) .

(n957)Footnote 958. An Ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio [Northwest Ordinance], § 14, art. II (1787), published as a footnote on pp. 51-53 in vol. 1, United States Statutes at Large [individual paragraphs not identified by section numbers in this publication].

(n958)Footnote 959. Id. §§ 4 , 5.

(n959)Footnote 960. 9 William Walter Hening, The Statutes at Large, Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia 127, P VI (1823).

(n960)Footnote 961. 2 Stat. 58.

(n961)Footnote 962. Id. § 2 .

(n962)Footnote 963. Indiana Territory Laws, Ch. 24.

(n963)Footnote 964. 2 Stat. 514.

(n964)Footnote 965. Id. § 2 .

(n965)Footnote 966. 2 Stat. 309.

(n966)Footnote 967. Id. § 2 .

(n967)Footnote 968. 5 Stat. 10.

(n968)Footnote 969. Id. § 12 .

(n969)Footnote 970. Id. § 9 .

(n970)Footnote 971. Statutes of the Territory of Wisconsin.

(n971)Footnote 972. Coburn v. Harvey, 8 Wis. 147, 148-151 (1864) . See Joseph R. Ranney, Molders and Shapers of Wisconsin Law, 66 Wis. Law. 24 (1993).

(n972)Footnote 973. 9 Stat. 178.

(n973)Footnote 974. 9 Stat. 233.

(n974)Footnote 975. Wisconsin Constitution of 1848, art. XIV, § 13.

(n975)Footnote 976. Wisconsin Constitution, art. 14, § 13 .

(n976)Footnote 977. Coburn v. Harvey, 18 Wis. 147, 153 (1864) .

(n977)Footnote 978. Spaulding v. Chicago & N.W. Ry., 30 Wis. 110, 117 (1872) . State v. Picotte, 661 N.W.2d 381 (Wisc. 2003) (Wisconsin courts may properly change common law principles as legal principles evolve).

(n978)Footnote 979. Davison v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 248 N.W.2d 433 (Wis. 1976) ; In re Budd's Estate, 105 N.W.2d 358 (Wis. 1960) .

(n979)Footnote 980. State v. Borrell, 482 N.W.2d 883 (Wis. 1992) . State v. Borrell, 482 N.W.2d 883 (Wis. 1976) overruled in part on other grounds by State v. Greve, 681 N.W.2d 479 (Wisc. 2004) (the court clarified its Borrell decision by withdrawing the language that implies there is a due process right of allocation under the federal constitution).

(n980)Footnote 981. Wis. Stat. Ann. chs. 700-710.

(n981)Footnote 982. Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 766.01 - 766.97 .

(n982)Footnote 983. This substitution is discussed in Beard v. Poydras, 4 Mart. 348 (La. 1816) .

(n983)Footnote 984. 2 Stat. 283.

(n984)Footnote 985. Id. § 13 .

(n985)Footnote 986. Laws of a Public and General Nature, of the District of Louisiana, of the Territory of Louisiana, of the Territory of Missouri, and of the State of Missouri up to the Year 1824 § 1, 1 (1842).

(n986)Footnote 987. Id. § 2 .

(n987)Footnote 988. 4 Stat. 701.

(n988)Footnote 989. Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854, 10 Stat. 277 (1854).

(n989)Footnote 990. Id. § 9 .

(n990)Footnote 991. Id. § 14 .

(n991)Footnote 992. Neb. Territory Laws, 328 (1st Sess.).

(n992)Footnote 993. 12 Stat. 239.

(n993)Footnote 994. Id. § 9 .

(n994)Footnote 995. Dak. Civ. Code § 6.

(n995)Footnote 996. 12 Stat. 808.

(n996)Footnote 997. Id. § 9 .

(n997)Footnote 998. Idaho Code § 73-116 .

(n998)Footnote 999. 15 Stat. 178.

(n999)Footnote 1000. Id. § 9 .

(n1000)Footnote 1001. Id. § 17 .

(n1001)Footnote 1002. Wyo. Stat. § 8-1-101 .

(n1002)Footnote 1003. § 21, 26 Stat. 222.

(n1003)Footnote 1004. Wyoming Constitution, art. XXI, § 3 .

(n1004)Footnote 1005. Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 76 P. 1089, 1093 (Utah 1904) .

(n1005)Footnote 1006. Weaver v. Mitchell, 715 P.2d 1361, 1369 (Wyo. 1986) . See also Nulle v. Gillette-Campbell County Joint Powers Fire Bd., 797 P.2d 1171, 1172 (Wyo. 1990) .

(n1006)Footnote 1007. In re Smith's Estate, 97 P.2d 677, 681 (Wyo. 1940) . See also Krug v. Reissig, 488 P.2d 150, 152 (Wyo. 1971) .

(n1007)Footnote 1008. Choman v. Epperley, 592 P.2d 714, 716 (Wyo. 1979) . See also Snell v. Ruppert, 541 P.2d 1042, 1046 (Wyo. 1975) .

(n1008)Footnote 1009. Crawford v. Barber, 385 P.2d 655, 657 (Wyo. 1963) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 7 DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW AFTER INDEPENDENCE

1-7 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 7.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 7.03 Patterns of Change in American Property Law.

This section will summarize the ways that changes in American property law have been described and explained. In a nation of several dozen different and diverse systems of jurisprudence, some skepticism toward such generalizations is appropriate. Occasionally the attempts of scholars to discern a movement, trend or change in a particular branch of the law, and to attach a rather arbitrarily chosen label, may seem contrived and artificial. Quite likely the judges, lawyers and litigants whose activities provided the stuff of the "trend" would have been surprised at the characterization and to be classed as participants. Nevertheless, it may be useful to risk the generalizations and to clarify how contemporary assumptions about American property law have been transformed from those of an earlier era.

It has always been remarkable to students of American history that a penchant for natural rights theories was so conspicuous at the time of the break with England. As should be evident from Chapter 6, the law developed and practiced in the English colonies of America was surprisingly indigenous, with common law foundations sometimes adopted only piecemeal or as if by afterthought. The impression is that American legal and governmental systems were pragmatic products of the pioneering experience, rather than the expressions drawn from innate notions of natural rights. Yet, when it became important and even necessary to rationalize the separation from England, the source country of the common law, it was said that England had violated "self-evident" and "inalienable rights." One scholar offered this explanation:

> One of the intriguing questions about the American Revolution is why radical versions of natural rights thought found such widespread acceptance in America, so that a society with comparatively little economic discontent or social unrest became a seedbed of subversion and treason in the name of liberty. The importance of early eighteenth century English radicalism in shaping the perspective of American revolutionaries has been documented; how did views marginal in England come to be dominant in America? One possibility is the different institutional structure of government in the colonies. By the mid-eighteenth century Americans were accustomed to a much greater freedom from governmental interference than their counterparts in England. For the colonists Parliament, the Privy Council, and the Crown were remote bodies; colonial governors were often mere functionaries; colonial assemblies reflected the parochial interests of their constituencies. The notion of autonomy from governmental control was part of the reality of the American experience; in this context talk of inalienable rights > against the state was not revolutionary.

>
> Other contributing factors may have been the identification of America with newness, exploration, and freedom from the European past; the generally secular character of American settlements by [the time of] the Revolution, which made Enlightenment ideas about the primacy of man palatable; the fact that American growth occurred after the Glorious Revolution's reduction of the powers of the monarchy and articulation of ideas that were to become the foundations of natural rights theory in America. Whatever the explanation, the idea of natural rights gained a foothold in America and became a self-fulfilling prophecy as Great Britain sought to tighten her administration of the colonies in the 1760's and 1770's.
>
> * * *
>
> The authors of the Declaration of Independence and the framers of the Constitution were concerned primarily with declaring certain principles of natural rights to be "self-evident" and with effectuating their theory of popular sovereignty. They were apparently satisfied with letting the common law continue to develop independent of constitutional control and with codifying a tripartite system of governmental powers without deciding which of the three branches of government would have final authority to interpret what had been codified. n1010

The natural rights foundation of the Constitution may have been at least partially responsible for the first significant jurisprudential development to occur after adoption of the federal constitution: the courts' assumption of the role of interpreter of the law. Against suggestions that the Congress, as the legislative branch, should interpret the Constitution was posed the notion that even the legislative branch was bound by the natural law embodied in the Constitution; further, if the courts were the interpreters they would still be exercising their proper function under a natural law regime, that of declaring rather than making the law. All of this was premised upon the supremacy of the Constitution, which consisted of a collection of natural rights principles.

Both following independence as well as before, American law continued a course of dynamic development:

> That the law of property was not static during the nineteenth century can be demonstrated by even the most casual examination of the session laws of the various states. By the end of the first half-century of our history as an independent nation, this body of law had begun to take on characteristics all its own. It is true, such writers as Kent and Story tended to magnify the importance of English common law and to ignore innovations of the colonial period. But legislative change continued, sometimes by minor increments or amendments here and there, sometimes by the enactment of integrated codes of law. Thus, Hilliard, writing in 1838 and commenting on the numerous important changes by the various American states in the English land law, made this observation: "Take, for an example, such titles as Descent, Estate Tail, Dower, Mortgage; it is not too much to say, that upon these subjects the English law is not our law, but that the American statutes have built up a new system for the American states." n1011

According to several scholars, in the years following adoption of the Constitution, social and economic changes occurred in America that changed the way the law was viewed and the way the judiciary interpreted the law. In general, these changes have been described as the > expansion and transformation of the economy (especially in its transportation sector), the decline of organized religion, the growth and diffusion of population, the development of a more heterogeneous ethnic base, the lure of vacant land, and the emergence of a literature deemphasizing social obligations and emphasizing individual freedoms and accomplishments, n1012 all of which led to law being used as a means of promoting individual action and accomplishment.

The private law in America of this post-Revolution era has been labeled "instrumental," in that it > was no longer conceived of as an eternal set of principles expressed in custom and derived from natural law. Nor was it regarded primarily as a body of rules designed to achieve justice only in the individual case. Instead, judges came to think of the common law as equally responsible with legislation for governing society and promoting socially desirable conduct. The emphasis on law as an instrument of policy encouraged innovation and allowed judges to formulate legal doctrine with the self-conscious goal of bringing about social change. (Emphasis added.) n1013

Regardless of how one perceives eras or trends in the development of American law, several historical characteristics of American property law can be identified. One of the most important features of American land law, in particular, was the immense store of public lands subject to the administration of the federal and state governments, and those governments' consistent policy of divestment. The lands were not given away, but they were also not hoarded; for relatively nominal sums ordinary citizens could obtain all the land they could manage. When rules regarding minimum acreage were perceived as obstructions to ownership by small farmers, acreage minimums were reduced to more manageable allotments:

> Once land was surveyed, it was disposed of. Public-land law flowed from one basic choice. The government did not choose to manage its land as a capital asset, but to get rid of it in an orderly, fruitful way. A whole continent was sold or given away to veterans, settlers, squatters, railroads, states, colleges, speculators, and land companies... The government possessed a resource of incalculable value; but it was firm public policy to denationalize it as soon as possible. True, the land was sold for cash, and the government certainly wanted the money; but not to make itself powerful or to increase the size and scale of the public sector. And, in any event, divestment was the goal. n1014

Changes in laws governing private lands were also underway by the time the federal Constitution was adopted, most changes apparently driven by desires to increase the marketability of land interests. Almost all vestiges of primogeniture and feudal tenures, even though only nominally present in most states' jurisprudence, had been removed from state statutes by the end of the 18th century. The demise of the fee tail soon followed. The English legal preference for joint tenancy as the form of concurrent ownership was changed to an American preference for tenancy in common. Rules against perpetuities were more strictly interpreted and enforced; restraints against alienation were stricken if unreasonable.

To facilitate the huge increase in land transactions, old English modes of conveyancing, such as feoffments and liveries of seisin, were replaced with more simple and standardized forms of deeds, principally the warranty deed and the quitclaim deed; through such streamlining many conveyances were completed without the aid of lawyers. Litigation over land also lost much of its English intricacy, but increased enormously in the expanding American frontier, where conflicts between those holding formal titles and those actually occupying the land were endemic.

Certain wholly American innovations emerged in the land law of the early 19th century. Among these were mechanics' liens (first introduced in Maryland in 1791), homestead exemptions to protect property from creditors (created by the Texan republic in the 1830's, and adopted by the state of Mississippi in 1841), and mortgage laws tilted more toward debtors with introduction of redemption rights, and which spawned (beginning in the South) deeds of trust with private powers of sale.

The American law of wills introduced some streamlining as compared with counterpart English law, but will formalities requirements were generally extended from real property to personal property, as well. Yet, it has been estimated that more than 90% of the early nineteenth century American population "passed on without the benefit of probate": n1015

> In the early colonial period, probate was cheap, accessible, and relatively informal. In the 18th century, probate was more elaborate and costly; only the well-to-do made use of it. At some point, perhaps about 1800, the curve reached a peak and slowly changed direction. From then on participation in the probate process gradually increased, along with national literacy and wealth. In absolute terms, the number of nonfee dispositions (trusts, settlements, chains of future interests) certainly increased, in the 19th century -- at least as fast as the population and probably much faster. n1016

During the 19th century, other distinctly American property law developments emerged: some aspects of English easement law were rejected, most notably the doctrine of "ancient lights"; trusts and certain modifications of future interest law enjoyed new popularity as means of preserving family dynastic wealth; adverse possession doctrines seemed especially suitable for frontier conditions; with the filling of the frontier came creation of national parks and other conservationist measures; private covenants and other servitudes were used to enhance and preserve private property values; landlord/tenant law took on some characteristics of contract in some parts of the country, but became more oppressive in others, especially where share-cropping was common; rights of dower and curtesy came to be replaced by statutes offering surviving spouses the right to an elective share of the deceased spouse's estate.

The uniquely American institution of land title records was strained by the vastly enhanced marketability of huge areas of land:

> As before, so also after 1850, the traumatic weakness of land titles had a pervasive effect upon the land law. It played a role, for example, in the decline of dower. It hastened the decline of the common-law marriage, and stimulated the increasing formality of wills. As fast as institutions developed to make land more marketable and to improve the quality of titles, other events seemed to conspire to undo the good and make the situation worse. The vagueness of railroad, school, and land grants, for example, created serious problems of title in some of the Western states. In California and New Mexico, a legacy of confusion was inherited from the Mexican period...
>
> What made the situation worse was the sheer volume of land transactions. Deeds, mortgages, transfers, were counted in the thousands, then in the hundreds of thousands. The crude system of land registration could barely cope with the volume. Private solutions preceded public solutions to the problem. Title companies sprang up to check titles for a fee and to ensure landowners against mysterious clouds that might arise to befuddle their interests. n1017

As America moved into the twentieth century, the most conspicuous and urgent themes in property law development were sounded by burgeoning land use controls; urban renewal and development, with low-income housing as a ripple effect and landlord/tenant law reform in the private sector as a companion development; and by a huge and growing body of environmental laws and regulations. For the most part, these issues remain topical today. n1018

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1010. G. Edward White, The Path of American Jurisprudence, 124 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1212, 1218-1220. See Epstein, Richard A., History Lean: The Reconciliation of Private Property and Representative Government, 95 Colum. L. Rev. 591 (Apr. 1995) ; John A. Simmons, Historical Rights and Fair Shares, 14 Law & Phil. 149 (May 1995); Joseph C. Bowman and Michael A. Dorelli, Recent Developments in Property Law, 32 Ind. L. Rev. 973 (1999) ; William W. Fisher, Symposium Texts and Contexts: The Application to American Legal History of the Methodologies of Intellectual History III, 49 Stan. L. Rev. 1065 (May 1997) ; Gianmaria Ajani & Ugo Mattei, Codifying Property Law in the Process of Transition: Some Suggestions from Comparative Law and Economics, 19 Hastings Int'l & Comp. L. Rev. 117 (Fall 1995) ; Geoffrey R. Scott, The Expanding Public Trust Doctrine: A Warning to Environmentalists and Policy Makers, 10 Fordham Envtl. L. J. 1 (Fall 1998) ; Thomas W. Merrill, Property and the Right to Exclude, 77 Neb. L. Rev. 730 (1998) .

(n2)Footnote 1011. 1 A. James Casner, The American Law of Property § 1.45, p. 63 (1953).

(n3)Footnote 1012. Id. at 1223.

(n4)Footnote 1013. Morton J. Horwitz, The Transformation of American Law, 1780-1860 130 (1977).

(n5)Footnote 1014. Lawrence M. Friedman, A History of American Law 233-234 (2d ed. 1985).

(n6)Footnote 1015. Id. at 250.

(n7)Footnote 1016. Id. at 251.

(n8)Footnote 1017. Id. at 433.

(n9)Footnote 1018. Colonial legislators regulated land use more broadly than has been previously surmised, but this does not provide legal justification for applying the Takings Clause broadly to modern land use regulations. John F. Hart, Colonial Land Use Law and Its Significance for Modern Takings Doctrine, 109 Harv. L. Rev. 1252 (1996) . See generally, William R. Jones et al., Essays on English Law and the American Experience, 120135 (1994).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 7 DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW AFTER INDEPENDENCE

1-7 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 7.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 7.04 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Benedict, Michael F. and John F. Winkler (eds.). The History of Ohio Law (Ohio University Press, 2004).

Bakken, Gordon Morris (ed.). Law in the Western United States (University of Oklahoma Press, 2000).

Chase, Anthony. Law and History: The Evolution or the American Legal System (The New Press, 1999).

Digby, Kenelm Edward, Sir. An Introduction to the History of the Law of Real Property, with Original Authorities (1892).

Fischer, David Hackett. Albion's Seed: Four British Folkways in America (1989).

Friedman, Lawrence M. Law in America: A Short History (Random House, 2002).

Harris, Marshall. Origin of the Land Tenure System in the United States (1953).

McCandless, Donald E. The Development of Real Property Transfer under the Common Law (1987).

Montoya, Maria E. Translating Property: The Maxwell Land Grant and the Conflict Over Land in the American West, 1840-1900 (2002).

Moynihan, Cornelius Joseph. Introduction to the Law of Real Property; an Historical Background of the Common Law of Real Property and its Modern Application (1962).

Nelson, William E. Americanization of the Common Law: The Impact of Legal Change on Massachusetts Society, 1760-1830 (University of Georgia Press, 1994).

Noyes, C. Reinold. The Institution of Property: a Study of the Development, Substance and Arrangement of the System of Property in Modern Anglo-American Law (1936).

Polizzotto, Linda. Comparative Cultural Property Law and Proposals for Preserving Mankind's Common Heritage (1990).

Robertson, Lindsay G. Whose America? Conquest by Law: How the Discovery of America Dispossessed Indigenous Peoples of Their Lands" (2005).

Walsh, William Francis. A History of Anglo-American Law, Book 2: Origins and Development of the Law of Property (1950).

Wiel, Samuel Charles. Water Rights in the Western States; the Law of Prior Appropriations of Water as Applied Alone in Some Jurisdictions, and As, in Others, Confined to the Public Domain, with the Common Law of Riparian Rights for Waters upon Private Lands. Federal, California and Oregon Statutes in Full, with Digest of Statutes of Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Philippine Islands, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington and Wyoming (1911).

Articles

Blackford, Mary W. "Putting the Public's Trust Back in Zoning: How the Implementation of the Public Trust Doctrine Will Benefit Land Use Regulation," 43 Hous. L. Rev. 1211 (Winter 2006)

Cannon, Kelly M. "Beyond the 'Black Hole' Historical Perspective on Understanding the Non-Legislative History of Washington Community Property Law," 39 Gonz. L. Rev. 7 (2003-2004) .

Ellickson, Robert C. "Unpacking the Household: Informal Property Rights Around the Hearth," 116 Yale L.J. 226 (November 2006) .

di Bonaventura, Allegra. "Beating the Bounds: Property and Perambulation in Early New England," 19 Yale J.L. & Human. 115 (Summer 2007) .

Epstein, Richard A. "The 'Necessary' History of Property and Liberty." 6 Chap. L. Rev. 1 (Spring 2003) .

Hedgecock, Ashley. "Untying the Knot: The Propriety of South Carolina's Recognition of Common Law Marriage," 58 S.C. L. Rev. 555 (Spring 2007) .

Kelly, Daniel B. "The 'Public Use' Requirement in Eminent Domain Law: A Rationale Based on Secret Purchases and Private Influence," 92 Cornell L. Rev. 1 (November, 2006) .

Liebesman, Yvette Joy. "No Guarantees: Lessons from the Property Rights Gained and Lost by Married Women in Two American Colonies," 27 Women's Rts. L. Rep. 181 (2006) .

Priest, Claire. "Creating an American Property Law: Alienability and Its Limits in American History," 120 Harv. L. Rev. 385 (December, 2006) .

Thomas, David A. "Is the Right to Private Property a Fundamental or an Economic Right?" ALI-ABA Course of Study on Eminent Domain and Land Value Litigation, SM006 ALI-ABA 33 (January 4-6, 2007).

Wolking, Tova. "From Blazing Trails to Building Highways: SUWA v. BLM & Ancient Easements Over Federal Public Lands," 34 Ecology L.Q. 1067 (2007) .

Zayac, Robert A. "Georgia's Married Women's Property Act: An Effective Challenge to Coverture," 15 Tex. J. Women & L. 81 (Fall 2005).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 7 DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW AFTER INDEPENDENCE

1-7 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 7.02(pp)

Supp. to § 7.02(pp) South Dakota

[Go To Main]

Delete the last paragraph of the subsection, including the indented block quote.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 7 DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW AFTER INDEPENDENCE

1-7 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 7.04

Supp. to § 7.04 Bibliography

[Go To Main]

Books

add:

Plane, Ann Marie. Colonial Intimacies: Indian Marriage in Early New England (2000).

Wilson, James G. The Imperial Republic: A Structural History of American Constitutionalism from the Colonial Era to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century (2002).

Articles

add:

Davenport, Erin P. "Idealized into Powerlessness: How a Judicial Order in Nebraska v. Safi Could Send Women's Rights Back to Colonial America," 12 U. Pa. J. L. & Soc. Change 1 (2008-2009).

Fisher, Kristina G. (ed.). "Land Grants and the Law: The Disputed Legal Histories of New Mexico's Land Grants," 48 Nat. Resources J. 847 (2008).

Nichols, Joel A. "Religious Liberty in the Thirteenth Colony: Church-State Relations in Colonial and Early National Georgia," 80 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1693 (December, 2005).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 8.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.syn Synopsis to Chapter 8: THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

§ 8.01 Introduction.

§ 8.02 The Genesis and Purpose of the First Restatements.

§ 8.02(a) The Founding of the American Law Institute.

§ 8.02(b) How the Work of the Restatements Was Originally Organized.

§ 8.02(c) The Content of the First Restatements.

§ 8.03 How the Restatements of Property Were Prepared.

§ 8.03(a) The First Restatement of Property.

§ 8.03(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

§ 8.04 The Organization and Contents of the Restatements of Property.

§ 8.04(a) The First Restatement of Property.

§ 8.04(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

§ 8.05 How the Property Restatements Have Been Received.

§ 8.05(a) The First Restatement of Property.

§ 8.05(a)(1) Features for Which the Restatement Has Been Praised.

§ 8.05(a)(2) Features for Which the Restatement Has Been Criticized.

§ 8.05(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

§ 8.06 The Third Restatement of Property.

§ 8.07 The Restatements of Trusts.

§ 8.07(a) The First Restatement of Trusts.

§ 8.07(b) The Second Restatement of Trusts.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.01 Introduction.

The purpose of this chapter is to describe the origins and functions of a form of secondary legal literature unique to American jurisprudence, the American Law Institute's § 8.01 Introduction.

The purpose of this chapter is to describe the origins and functions of a form of secondary legal literature unique to American jurisprudence, the American Law Institute's Restatements. Originally conceived as fresh reviews and re-expressions of prevailing common law principles in various foundational topics of American law, the Restatements have occasionally wandered from this path into the path of law reform; the results of this wandering have been mixed, both for the reform objectives and for the original objectives of common law review.

In addition to giving the general background of Restatements, this chapter will mainly focus on the Restatements of Property , the first and second of which are completed, and the third of which is in a lengthy drafting process. The chapter will also review the Restatement of Trusts , which is also relevant to much of property law.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.02 The Genesis and Purpose of the First Restatements.

[Go To Supp]

§ 8.02(a) The Founding of the American Law Institute.

"The desire of the legal profession for an orderly statement of our Common Law led to the formation of the American Law Institute in 1923." n1 According to the those who founded the American Law Institute (hereinafter ALI or the Institute) and promoted the Restatements , the common law system of jurisprudence in this country was threatened because of a "growing indigestible mass of decisions." n2 These concerns first surfaced through professional papers presented in 1914 and 1915, but attention was diverted by World War I. In 1920 a committee was appointed to investigate the founding of an institute as a "permanent organization for the improvement of the law." n3 It was hoped that such an organization "could produce an orderly Restatement of the Law tending to clarify and, as far as possible, simplify what we may term the general Common Law of the United States." n4

At a meeting in New York City called by Harvard law professor Joseph H. Beale as Chairman of the Committee of the Association of American Law Schools in May, 1922, a small group of leaders of the bar attended; there the group of twenty attendees formed a Committee on the Establishment of a Permanent Organization for the Improvement of the Law, with Elihu Root as chair and William Draper Lewis as secretary.

A report on the formation of the organization was drafted, revised, submitted to about four hundred persons, and then acted upon by the report distributees at a meeting in Washington, D.C., on February 22, 1923. Among the attendees at this meeting were two U.S. Supreme Court justices, five judges of the federal circuit courts of appeal, twenty-eight state supreme court justices, and representatives of the American Bar Association and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. A resolution approving the formation of this organization, to be called the American Law Institute, was adopted unanimously and for the following objectives: "to promote the clarification and simplification of the law and its better adaptation to social needs, to secure the better administration of justice, and to encourage and carry on scholarly and scientific legal work." n5

§ 8.02(b) How the Work of the Restatements Was Originally Organized.

After the formalities of incorporation and selection of officers and council members were accomplished, the Institute set about the business of planning the subjects of study and raising funds to support the work. When the executive committee of the council met in May 1923, its members approved a standard plan for proceeding with the work of reviewing the law and producing Restatements :

> 1. The appointment of a Reporter for each subject undertaken. This Reporter prepares all drafts.
>
> 2. The appointment of a Committee of Advisers presided over by the Director as Chief of the Editorial Staff. The Committee with the Reporter for the subject considers all preliminary drafts and in a series of meetings each usually lasting from three to five days develops a final preliminary draft for the consideration of the Council; the Committee also reconsiders in the same manner any draft referred back to it by the Council or a meeting of the members. The Reporter is obliged to incorporate into a draft any statements of the law adopted by the Committee of Advisers or by the Council or by a meeting of the Members of the Institute; but except in the preparation for the printer of the text finally adopted by the Institute as the official draft, the Reporter registers his own dissent, if any, and on the request of any member of the Committee or the Council the dissent of such member.
>
> 3. The final preliminary draft is considered by the Council, the Reporter being present. The Council returns the draft for further consideration to the Committee of Advisers, or, as amended by them, submits it to the Annual Meeting of the Institute either as a tentative or as a proposed final draft.
>
> 4. The consideration of the tentative drafts by a meeting of the Institute and their return to the Council and the Committee of Advisers with any amendments adopted by the meeting for further study; the consideration of the proposed final drafts and their final adoption, with any amendments made, or their return for further consideration to the Council and the Committee of Advisers.
>
> When a proposed final draft is amended by the meeting it is re-submitted to the Council which either agrees with the meeting or asks it to reconsider its action. When both the Council and the meeting of members approve the same text, it is printed and promulgated as an "official draft." n6

As the drafting process is carried out under this plan, it means that an official draft consists of the work of three groups, with the Reporter's contribution as scrutinized by the advisers being especially significant:

> first, the advisers who have special knowledge of the subject; second, the Council, a body of some thirty-three eminent lawyers consisting mainly of judges and practicing attorneys, and finally, a meeting of the members of the Institute. In relation to any subject of the Restatement the most important person is the Reporter. The ultimate result is his work as discussed, changed and developed by group consideration. n7

As work progressed it became clear that the advisors could do more than read the Reporter's drafts and make suggestions. Ultimately, the advisers made many more original substantive contributions and became more involved in the formative stages of each Restatement.

A key rule in the preparation of the Restatements was that they should be prepared "in the light of case authority," so that each Restatement represented "the considered opinion of those constructing it, of the way in which the law would be decided in the light of decisions by the courts." n8

The preliminary drafts of each Restatement section were accompanied by rather complete citation of case authority for difficult or disputed points, but not as to familiar and settled points. Originally, it was hoped that treatises could be prepared to accompany each Restatement, with full citations and discussions of pertinent authorities as to all points, not merely the disputed points. In fact, the original scheme for the restatements included a plan for each committee to produce parallel treatises for each restatement, to help demonstrate that the restatements were based on a very thorough examination of the sources. When the production of parallel treatises as a group project was soon revealed to be impractical, then the reporters were encouraged, although not formally requested, to prepare such treatises. By 1945, three reporters had in fact written treatises corresponding to their respective restatements: Samuel Williston for contracts (the second edition of a pre-Restatement work), Joseph Beale for conflict of laws, and Austin Scott for trusts.

When the notion of official parallel treatises for each restatement was abandoned, it was considered whether the reporter or committee notes and comments should include discussion of case authorities. The Institute ultimately decided that its own thoroughness and prestige sufficed to authenticate the points in the restatements, and citation to supporting authority was unnecessary. n9

The first restatements were commenced in June 1923, and covered the subjects of contracts, torts and conflict of laws. Agency was begun a few months later. The Restatement (First) of Property was begun on January 1, 1927, with Harry A. Bigelow of the University of Chicago as reporter. Professor Bigelow resigned in June 1929, upon his selection as dean of the University of Chicago Law School, at which time Professor Richard R. Powell of Columbia University Law School became and remained the property reporter. This first Restatement of Property, at five volumes the largest of the first restatements, was issued between 1936 and 1944.

In general, the work of the restatements was founded on initial drafts prepared by single experts, usually the reporters, embellished through review and comment by correspondence or in face-to-face meetings with committee members, and ultimately by submission of drafts to members of the Council and the ALI for comment, occasional amendment, and adoption.

§ 8.02(c) The Content of the First Restatements.

The first series of Restatements was quite clearly intended to "restate" or describe the then-prevailing common law rules in the United States:

> The Restatement states the law as it would be today decided by the great majority of courts. There is always the possibility that a State has followed in the past and will continue to follow a different rule. The variations are not nearly so numerous as was assumed at the beginning of the annotations work in 1927. They can be ascertained from state reports and digests, state and national. But the judge or practitioner in dealing with the law in a particular State should be enabled to find as quickly as possible the decisions, if any, in the State that are in accord or contra, as well as the variations made by statutes and their interpretations. n10

To enable judges and practitioners in any state more conveniently to ascertain whether their state's rule corresponded with a rule in a Restatement, committees were formed by the bar associations in several states to produce annotations of decisions and statutes in each state pertinent to the subject of each Restatement. By 1945, 127 separate state Restatement annotations publications had been issued, including 28 for contracts, 27 for conflicts, 26 for trusts, 19 for agency, and 11 for torts.

When the first Restatement was completed, its authors were satisfied that the original objective of discovering and articulating the prevailing common law rules in the states had been achieved:

> We started with the belief that out of the mass of case authority and legal literature could be made clear statements of the rules of the common law operative in the great majority of our States, expressed as simply as the character of our complex civilization admits. The result shows that this belief was justified. The Restatement of each subject expresses as nearly as may be the rules which our courts will apply today... The Restatement of a subject is thus more than a picture of what has been decided; it is a > picture of present law expressed by foremost members of the profession... Though the rules are expressed in the form of a code, except in sporadic instances, there never has been any desire to give them statutory authority. The Restatement is an agency tending to promote the clarification and the unification of the law in a form similar to a Code. But it is not a code or statute. It is designed to help preserve not to change the common system of expressing law and adapting it to changing conditions in a changing world. n11

As a result of not only the Restatement work but also the annotations work, the Restatement drafters also concluded that there was less confusion and conflict, and more unity, in American common law than they had at first believed:

> One of the most interesting results of the annotations work is to dispel the idea very prevalent at the start, and even at the beginning of the annotations work in 1927, that the decisions of our courts are to a considerable degree full of conflicts. That there are conflicts in cases is, of course, true, but many apparent conflicts disappeared in the group discussions of the experts in the course of the development of careful statements of the law. We found the confusion in our case law more apparent than real. The impression that our common law is a mass of contradictions is in the main due to the variations in judicial language. When the pertinent facts of the cases are analyzed, much of the apparent contradiction disappears. A careful study of the State Annotations already published shows that on the average less than two per cent of the cases are contra to the statements in the Restatement text. Except for a few doubtful cases, the remainder are in accord. n12

The Restatement drafters, however, were surprised at how many rules were without supporting case authority in many jurisdictions. In some states well over half the Restatement rules had not yet been adjudicated. In response, the Restatement drafters have concluded that "In these instances the Restatement is the best evidence of the law which will be followed if and when a case arises in the State where no case authorities now exist." n13

From this last and several of the preceding declarations, it may be concluded that the first Restatements were intended to re-express and clarify the common law in the American states, especially to identify the prevailing rules in cases of conflicting rules among the states. Any notion of reforming the law at this early stage of the Restatement process was confined only to the technical reforms of clarification and unification. Substantive reform by promotion of new or minority rules was not an explicit objective of the first Restatements.

With respect to all the first Restatements, generally, it should be mentioned that, once the enormous influence of the Restatements was sensed, a means for monitoring the growth of that influence was put in place. In 1945 the ALI published the permanent edition of Restatement in the Courts , providing citations "to all those decisions in which the Restatement has been cited by Federal Courts and by the Appellate Courts of the States," covering all decisions published in the National Reporter System down to January 1, 1945. n14 Added to the case citations are references to law review items citing or discussing the Restatements.

Several of the Restatements, including the first and second Restatements of Property, have been enhanced by pocket parts for each volume, containing cumulative citations to Restatement references.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. American Law Institute, History of the American Law Institute and the First Restatement of the Law in Restatement in the Courts 1 (1945).

(n2)Footnote 2. Id.

(n3)Footnote 3. Id. at 2.

(n4)Footnote 4. Id.

(n5)Footnote 5. Id. at 3.

(n6)Footnote 6. Id. at 5-6.

(n7)Footnote 7. Id. at 6.

(n8)Footnote 8. Id. at 8.

(n9)Footnote 9. Id. at 9:

> It became clear that it was not necessary to add individual opinion to support the official statements of the Institute, and that the professional position of the Institute and the known care with which the Restatements were prepared in light of existing authorities permits it to speak with authority on the general law of the United States. The omission of the citation of case or other authority is practicable only because the Institute has attained an influence far greater than at the start of the work was thought possible. The Institute in its Restatement has become like the Courts an agency for the statement of the law.

(n10)Footnote 10. Id. at 12.

(n11)Footnote 11. Id. at 19.

(n12)Footnote 12. Id. at 20.

(n13)Footnote 13. Id.

(n14)Footnote 14. Id. at iii.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.03 How the Restatements of Property Were Prepared.

[Go To Supp]

§ 8.03(a) The First Restatement of Property.

The drafters of the Restatement (First) of Property subscribed fully to the overall objective of declaring the existing common law:

> The object of the Institute in preparing the Restatement is to present an orderly statement of the general common law of the United States, including in that term not only the law developed solely by judicial decision, but also the law that has grown from the application by the courts of statutes that have been generally enacted and have been in force for many years. n15

The property drafters also shared the institute's founders' apprehension of the danger to the common law system from too many uncontrolled, conflicting decisions, and that the Restatements would promote certainty and clarity:

> The Institute recognizes that the ever increasing volume of decisions of the courts, establishing new rules or precedents, and the numerous instances in which the decisions are irreconcilable, taken in connection with the growing complication of economic and other conditions of modern life, are increasing the law's uncertainty and lack of clarity. It also recognizes that this will force the abandonment of our common-law system of expressing and developing law through judicial application of existing rules to new fact combinations and the adoption in its place of rigid legislative codes, unless a new factor promoting certainty and clarity can be found.
>
> The careful Restatement of our common law by the legal profession as represented in the Institute is an attempt to supply this needed factor. n16

As mentioned above, Professor Harry A. Bigelow was the first reporter for the Restatement (First) of Property when work commenced on January 1, 1927. When he resigned to take the deanship of the University of Chicago Law School in June, 1929, Professor Richard R. Powell of Columbia University Law School, previously a special adviser to Bigelow, took over as reporter. Professor W. Barton Leach of Harvard Law School functioned as special reporter for Chapter 15 on Statutes of Limitation. Typical of other Restatement committees, the property reporters prepared preliminary, tentative and proposed final drafts. The preliminary drafts were the result of an initial draft prepared by the reporter and subsequent discussion by the reporter and advisers. Preliminary drafts were then submitted to and discussed by the Council, with the result being tentative drafts. Tentative drafts were then submitted to the Institute for discussion and improvement, ultimately to be issued as final drafts.

The tentative drafts for the Restatement (First) of Property were produced between 1927 and 1935, with revision work occurring during 40 conferences of 3 to 7 days each. Professor Powell, as reporter, prepared monographs on individual subjects and questions contained in the first two volumes of the Restatement (First) of Property, and those were published, under Council authority but as his own statements, as appendices in those first two volumes.

The work on each of the five volumes of the Restatement (First) of Property may be summarized as follows:

> Volume 1: Reporters: Harry Bigelow (from January, 1927, to June, 1929); Richard Powell (from June, 1929). Work commenced in January, 1927, and was completed in 1936.
>
> Volume 2: Reporters: Richard Powell; Barton Leach for Ch. 15 ("Protection of Future Interests as Affected by Statutes of Limitations and the Doctrine of Prescription"). Work commenced in June, 1929, and was completed in 1936.
>
> Volume 3: Reporters: Richard Powell; Barton Leach for Ch. 25 ("Powers of Appointment"); James Casner for Ch. 23 ("Limitations to 'Heirs,' 'Heirs of the Body,' 'Next of Kin,' 'Relative' and to Other Groups Similarly Designated"). Work commenced in 1936 and was completed in 1940.
>
> Volume 4: Reporters: Richard Powell; James Casner, special reporter for Ch. 29 ("General Considerations [Restraints on Alienation]") and Ch. 30 ("Extent of Validity [Restraints on Alienation]"); Julian Bush, assistant reporter for Ch. 30 ("Extent of Validity [Restraints on Alienation]"), Ch. 31 ("Problems of Construction, Defenses to Enforcement and Termination [Restraints on Alienation]"), Ch. 32 ("Provisions in Restraint of Marriage [Restraints on Alienation]"), Ch. 33 ("Restraints Designed to Protect Testamentary Dispositions of Property [Restraints on Alienation]") and Ch. 34 ("Miscellaneous Restraints [Restraints on Alienation]"). Work commenced in 1940 and was completed in 1944. Volume 4 was superseded by Volume 1 of Restatement (Second) of Property, Donative Transfers, and is now out of print.
>
> Volume 5: Reporter: Oliver S. Rundell. Work commenced in October, 1934, and was completed in 1944.

As mentioned in the preceding section, all the Restatements were updated by publication of the permanent edition of Restatement in the Courts in 1945. This publication provided citations to all National Reporter System cases and law review articles that cited any of the Restatements and, of course, included citations to the Restatement (First) of Property . Presently, each volume of the Restatement (First) of Property, except Volume 4, has been enhanced by a pocket part containing cumulative citations to Restatement references to that volume.

In 1947, a number of important changes to the Restatement (First) of Property were approved and then published as pages 359-556 of the 1948 supplement to the Restatement of the Law .

§ 8.03(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

The work on the Restatement (Second) of Property began in 1972 and was intended in part to cover landlord/tenant law, a subject not thoroughly treated in the first Restatement. Landlord/tenant law drew attention not only because of the earlier neglect but because of "current tensions and resultant legal change" in the area. n17 The Restatement (Second) was also intended to revisit topics covered in the first Restatement to the extent their significance had endured.

With hindsight it is easier to see now than perhaps it was in 1972 that the Restatement of landlord/tenant law signaled a profound change in the nature of the Restatement of property law. The momentous changes then occurring in landlord/tenant law -- indeed, the instability of those laws in many states -- made it difficult for the committee to simply restate long-established principles of common law, even if committee members had been so inclined. That they were not so inclined was evident at the outset, as explained in the introduction to the landlord/tenant volumes of the Restatement (Second) of Property .

> In dealing with landlord tenant law, the approach of the Institute has two distinctive features that an introduction should disclose. The first is the extent of the rejection of the ancient dogma that the covenants of the respective parties are entirely independent, in favor of a concept of mutual dependence akin to that accepted in the law of contracts. The second is the extent to which it is conceived to be appropriate that courts, in assessing the continuing vitality of precedents, rules and doctrines of the past, may give weight to the policies reflected in more recent, widespread legislation, though the statutes by their terms do not apply...

This portion of the Restatement (Second) of Property thus assumed the character of a call for reform, through adoption of positions that at the moment were accepted in only a minority of jurisdictions, although predictably some might eventually be adopted by most of the states. This placed the Restatement in the position of innovator, and undercut the description of the first Restatement as containing the general common law of property in the states. The Institute only indirectly acknowledged that this new approach sometimes adopted minority or novel positions in property law doctrines:

> The most significant consequence of these positions is to register support for the decisions, steadily increasing in their number, that imply an obligation of the landlord with respect to the fitness of leased premises for contemplated residential use and enlarge the tenant's remedies in case of default. Another instance of importance is the recognition of a limited defense for the tenant against retaliatory eviction by the landlord. This too is limited to residential property, reserving the question whether it may have a broader application. These examples suggest but they do not exhaust the implications of the Institute's acceptance of modern judicial innovation in this field.
>
> * * *
>
> Needless to say, the approach that I have noted and many, if not most, of its suggested applications were drawn in issue sharply in the Council's and the Institute's consideration of the preliminary and tentative drafts... That consideration led to much revision of specific formulations but both bodies were decisive in their votes of approval of text that is presented here. With patience, full discussion and hard work, the professional consensus that accords to the Restatements the authority they have was in due course attained. n18

Although the significance of achieving "professional consensus" among the Restatement drafters should not be minimized, it should also not be overlooked that this did not necessarily represent a consensus among judges and legislators, whose work provides the essence of the American common law. It meant that the Restatement (Second) of Property could no longer represent itself as always reflecting the general common law of property; its choices from among competing principles were based not necessarily on identifying the prevailing principles, but sometimes only on identifying what were deemed by the drafters to be the most desirable principles.

An example of the subtlety of this shift may be found in the section on retaliatory eviction, identified in the Introduction as an example of modern judicial innovation. In 2 Restatement (Second) of Property, § 14.8, retaliatory eviction is defined. The Introductory Note preceding all the sections on retaliatory eviction simply describes circumstances under which a retaliatory motive can arise and how that motive may be a tenant defense against landlord exercise of traditional rights. It suggests that judicial participation in retaliatory eviction may violate a tenant's constitutional protections. The comments following the section describe in a matter-of-fact way the various substantive and procedural issues arising in a situation where retaliatory eviction is prohibited. In a special statutory note to the section, state laws prohibiting various forms of retaliatory conduct by a landlord are cited, and only by counting jurisdictions may the reader first perceive that this rule has only partial statutory acceptance in only a minority of jurisdictions.

The Reporter's Note following § 14.8 discusses how retaliatory eviction rules have been administered in individual cases, but does not address the matter of how widely a rule such as that in § 14.8 has been accepted. By contrast, most of the other sections of the Restatement (Second) of Property have, as the very first comment in the Reporter's Note, a paragraph beginning: "Comparison with present state of the law -- The rule of this section is consistent with well-settled case law," and followed by case citations. This pattern is present in § 14.6 and 14.7, immediately preceding § 14.8. By negative inference then, one may conclude that at the time it was published, § 14.8 did not represent "well-settled case law"; unfortunately, the Restatement presentation of information leading to that conclusion is so subtle as to be almost disingenuous.

It is possible that at some time in the future, the Restatement presentation on these points will indeed reflect the prevailing view in American jurisdictions, and perhaps the influence of the Restatement will have played a role in the nature of a self-fulfilling prophecy. In the meantime, those who have traditionally used the Restatements to identify the weight of authority on individual points of the American common law must be much more careful in using the Restatement (Second) of Property .

The second major step in producing the Restatement (Second) of Property (the first step being coverage of landlord/tenant rules in two volumes) was to review major areas originally covered in the Restatement (First) of Property, "but to do so... on a selective basis." n19 Ultimately, it was decided to devote the balance of the second property Restatement to the subject of donative transfers of property, "the typically central element in family estate planning." n20 This phase of the project extended to four volumes, and by this time the drafters made more open acknowledgement that the Restatement (Second) contained substantive as well as stylistic changes. A most conspicuous departure from a majority common law rule in this area was the Restatement (Second)'s adoption of the "wait-and-see" approach in applying the rule against perpetuities:

> The transforming change in style inaugurated by Restatement, Second is, of course, pervasively reflected in these pages: the systematic inclusion of extensive comments explaining and elaborating the black letter; the analysis of legislation addressed to the problems dealt with, coupled within the sense that courts (and, therefore, the Restatement) may, with subtle limits, accord weight in adjudication to legislative policy manifested in enactments that do not in terms resolve the instant question; and the incorporation of extensive Reporter's Notes, marshalling the decisions and other authoritative sources deemed by the Reporter to have bearing on the issues.
>
> The stylistic changes noted are by no means matched by shifts of substance in the Institute's positions on the problems dealt with in this volume, but one modification on a point of substance should be noted. Section 1.4 [of Donative Transfers] approves the version of the rule against perpetuities that measures the validity of a disposition by how long the vesting of the interest was in fact postponed, as distinguished from how long it could conceivably have been postponed, the rule the Institute supported almost forty years ago.
>
> The approval of this "wait-and-see" approach, adopted thus far in a small minority of our jurisdictions, was strongly opposed by the late Professor Richard R. Powell, who served as Chief Reporter for the first Restatement. The issue was debated vigorously at the 1978 Annual Meeting, with > the robust participation of Professor Powell, and decision was postponed then for a year. The verdict in 1979 endorsing "wait-and-see" had the support of all but two of the Advisers, a unanimous Council and a definitive vote of the Meeting. The episode is a useful reminder that the Institute in its Restatement work does not deem itself to be constrained by a count of jurisdictions, but rather undertakes to weigh all of the considerations relevant to the development of common law that our polity calls on the highest courts to weigh in their deliberations. n21

This rather matter-of-fact assertion by the ALI Director Herbert Wechsler in 1983, just quoted, that "the Institute does not deem itself constrained by a count of jurisdictions..." seems to signal a significant shift from the Restatement role of reporting the common law as it is to promoting a version of the common law that some think it ought to be.

Indeed the role of the Restatement (Second) of Property as an instrument of law reform has been candidly discussed by Professor A. James Casner, the reporter for this Second Restatement/t:

> The major difference between the first and second Restatements of Property is the process used to determine what the law is that is to be restated. In the Restatement (Second), a minority position may be selected if the Council and the Institute Membership can be convinced that it is the sounder view. There is no barrier to developing a position in previously uncharted waters. When a solid wall of judicial decisions forces a position, a criticism of it may be presented for the approval of the Institute. Furthermore, in evaluating the existing support for a position, policies supported by legislative developments may bolster such a position if that is the case. In other words, in determining what the law is that is to be restated, due consideration is to be given to the position that a court might be expected to take if it made a fresh examination of all relevant aspects of the problem in light of current circumstances. This approach leads to the possibility that "Restatement" and "legal reform" could become somewhat synonymous terms. The real question is whether the courts will, to any significant extent, reexamine previous contrary determinations on the basis of the Restatement's view about what the law is. n22

The reporter defended his law reform approach as a way of not letting the Restatement perpetuate undesirable judicial decisions:

> In the development of the Restatement (Second) of Property, in the search for what the law is that is to be restated, I have kept foremost in my mind that past judicial decisions that do not rest on a solid current foundation may and should be overruled either retroactively or prospectively. Consequently, the Restatement should not give these decisions longer life by recognizing them as representing what the law is that is to be restated. This policy has led to criticism on several occasions that we are legislating, not restating. I do not think the process of searching for what the law ought to be in evaluating the soundness of existing judicial decisions and recognizing in appropriate cases that what ought to be is what is, is legislating any more than the procedure adopted by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts [of giving prospective application to decisions changing established rules of law]. n23

One modern commentator has criticized this shift in approach as disingenuous:

> The approach of the immediate past director of the American Law Institute, that the new "Restatement" should set forth what the law ought to be rather than what the cases say it is, denigrates the "restate" in "Restatement." The "restate" can no longer be taken seriously as it was in the original Restatement. Furthermore, as was earlier pointed out, the approach of second Restatement is deceptive. One of its Reporters in fact stated, however inadvertently, the actual practice of the Institute when he noted: "The Restatement (Second) of Property could be somewhat misleading to the average reader if it adopted a position that had little judicial support and this fact was not apparent."

The drafters do adopt positions with little judicial support, and the fact is often far from apparent. It is never apparent from the Blackletter "law" set forth by these law-givers. It is true that sometimes it is to some extent disclosed in the notes. However, this is seldom, if ever, done by giving "equal time" to the alternative position so that an impartial judge could reconsider the matter ab initio and make an independent determination on the subject. Thus, it appears that the Reporter becomes an "advocate" of his position regarding changes in existing law and the choice of alternatives, often without disclosing that his writing is, in effect, a "brief" for his approach. n24

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 15. 1 American Law Institute, Restatement of the Law of Property viii-ix (1936).

(n2)Footnote 16. Id. at ix.

(n3)Footnote 17. 1 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of the Law of Property: Landlord and Tenant, vii (1977).

(n4)Footnote 18. Id. at vii-viii.

(n5)Footnote 19. 1 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of Property: Donative Transfers, vii (1983).

(n6)Footnote 20. Id.

(n7)Footnote 21. Id. at viii.

(n8)Footnote 22. A. James Casner, Restatement (Second) of Property as an Instrument of Law Reform, 67 Iowa L. Rev. 87, 89-90 (1981).

(n9)Footnote 23. Id. at 96.

(n10)Footnote 24. W. Noel Keyes, The Restatement (Second): Its Misleading Quality and a Proposal for Its Amelioration, 13 Pepp. L. Rev. 23, 50 (1986).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.04 The Organization and Contents of the Restatements of Property.

[Go To Supp]

§ 8.04(a) The First Restatement of Property.

At the time they were written, the volumes of the Restatement (First) of Property represented the best thinking about how the American common law of property should be organized and expressed. This scheme of organization is perhaps best revealed by the following summary outline of division and chapter headings:

Division I. Introduction

Chapter 1. Definition of Certain General Terms

Division II. Freehold Estates

Chapter 2. Definition of Terms Relating to Estates

Chapter 3. Estates in Fee Simple Absolute

Chapter 4. Estates in Fee Simple Defeasible

Chapter 5. Estates Tail, Estates in Fee Simple Conditional and Related Estates

Chapter 6. Estates for Life

Division III. Future Interests

Part I. Introduction

Chapter 7. Future Interests Differentiated

Part II. Characteristics

Chapter 8. Transferability by Conveyance Inter Vivos

Chapter 9. Succession on Death

Chapter 10. Subject to the Satisfaction of Claims of Creditors

Chapter 11. Partition and Judicially Ordered Sales

Chapter 12. Protection of Future Interests Resulting from Requirements for Judicial Action Binding Upon Such Interests

Chapter 13. Protection of Future Interests as Against Acts and Omissions of the Owner of the Present Interest

Chapter 14. Protection of Future Interests as Against Acts and Omissions of Persons Other than the Owner of the Present Interest

Chapter 15. Protection of Future Interests as Affected by Statutes of Limitations and the Doctrine of Prescription

Chapter 16. Ineffectiveness of an Interest in Its Inception and Effect Thereof Upon Prior or Succeeding Interest

Chapter 17. Termination of an Interest as Affecting Succeeding Interests

Part III. Creation

Chapter 18. General Rules of Construction

Chapter 19. Construction of Limitations Purporting to Create Remainders or Executory Interests -- Requirement of Survival

Chapter 20. Construction of Limitations Purporting to Create Remainders or Executory Interests -- Death or Death Without Issue

Chapter 21. Construction of Limitations Purporting to Create Remainders or Executory Interests -- Miscellaneous Problems

Chapter 22. Class Gifts: Limitations to "Children," "Grandchildren," "Brothers," "Sisters," "Nephews," "Nieces," "Cousins," "Issue," "Descendants" or "Family"

Chapter 23. Limitations to "Heirs," "Heirs of the Body," "Next of Kin," "Relatives" and to Other Groups Similarly Designated

Part IV. Special Topics

Chapter 24. Interests of Expectant Distributees

Chapter 25. Powers of Appointment

Division IV. Social Restrictions Imposed Upon the Creation of Property Interests

Part I. The Common Law Rule Against Perpetuities

Chapter 26. The Common Law Rule Against Perpetuities -- General Aspects

Chapter 27. The Common Law Rule Against Perpetuities -- Applicability to Specific Types of Limitation

Chapter 28. The Common Law Rule Against Perpetuities -- Effects of Partial Invalidity

Part II. Restraints on Alienation

Chapter 29. General Considerations

Chapter 30. Extent of Validity

Chapter 31. Problems of Construction, Defenses to Enforcement and Termination

Part III. Provisions in Restraint of Marriage, No Contest and Allied Provisions in Wills and Miscellaneous Restrictions

Chapter 32. Provisions in Restraint of Marriage

Chapter 33. Restraints Designed to Protect Testamentary Dispositions of Property

Chapter 34. Miscellaneous Restraints

Part IV. Restrictions on Accumulations

Chapter 35. The Common Law Rule Against Accumulations

Chapter 36. Statutory Ingredients in the Rule Against Accumulations

Division V. Servitudes

Part I. Easements

Chapter 37. Definitions

Chapter 38. Creation

Chapter 39. Extent

Chapter 40. Succession

Chapter 41. Extinguishment

Chapter 42. Protection Against Third Persons

Part II. Licenses

Chapter 43. Licenses

Part III. Promises Respecting the Use of Land

Chapter 44. As Between Original Parties

Chapter 45. Running of Burdens

Chapter 46. Running of Benefits

Chapter 47. Duration -- Interpretation, Discharge and Defenses and Extinguishment by Public Authority

In this Restatement (First) of Property , the chapters are divided into sections, each of which makes a distinct and individual point of law, although some sections can become quite lengthy in listing variants of the principle point being made. A section may be followed by paragraphs called "Illustrations," often keyed to individual subsections. Also following the main section is usually a series of comments, addressed either to the section as a whole or to individual parts of the section. The comments, too, often include paragraphs called "Illustrations."

§ 8.04(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

The contents of the Restatement (Second) of Property are revealed in the following summary outline of division and chapter headings:

Landlord and Tenant

Part I. Creation of the Landlord-Tenant Relationship

Chapter 1. Nature and Duration of the Landlord-Tenant Relationship

Chapter 2. Formalities Required for Creation of Landlord-Tenant Relationship

Chapter 3. Freedom to Refuse to Enter into Landlord/Tenant Relationship

Part II. Tenant's Rights

Chapter 4. Paramount Title Prevents Contemplated Use

Chapter 5. Condition of Leased Property Prevents Contemplated Use

Chapter 6. Conduct of Landlord or Third Person Interferes with Permissible Use

Chapter 7. Nonperformance of Landlord's Promise

Chapter 8. Contemplated Use Interfered with by Eminent Domain

Chapter 9. Governmental Restraints on Use of Leased Property Prevent Intended Use

Part III. Tenant's Remedies

Chapter 10. Termination of the Lease and Damages

Chapter 11. Procedure with Respect to Rent Abatement, Rent Application and Rent Withholding

Part IV. Landlord's Rights and Remedies

Chapter 12. Tenant's Obligations that Inhere in the Landlord/Tenant Relationship

Chapter 13. Nonperformance of Tenant's Promise

Chapter 14. Expiration of Term of Lease -- Tenant Holds Over

Part V. Transfer by Landlord or Tenant of Interest in Leased Property

Chapter 15. Transferability of Landlord's or Tenant's Interest in Leased Property

Chapter 16. Effect of Transfer of Landlord's or Tenant's Interest on Burden and Benefit of Their Respective Obligations: Herein Promises Running with the Land

Part VI. Tort Liability of Landlord

Chapter 17. Liability for Physical Harm to Persons on the Leased Property

Chapter 18. Liability for Physical Harm to Persons Outside the Leased Property

Chapter 19. Liability of Landlord for Physical Harm to Persons Caused by Negligence of a Carefully Selected Independent Contractor

Part VII. Federal Bankruptcy Proceeding Involving One of the Parties to a Lease Chapter 20. Continuation of the Lease After Bankruptcy

Chapter 21. Rejection of the Lease on Bankruptcy

Donative Transfers

Division I. Social Restrictions Imposed Upon the Creation of Property Interests by Donative Transfers

Part I. The Rule Against Perpetuities and Related Rules as Applied to Donative Transfers

Chapter 1. The Rule Against Perpetuities as Applied to Donative Transfers

Chapter 2. The Period of the Rule Against Perpetuities Used in Donative Transfers for Purposes Other Than Controlling the Time of Vesting

Part II. Direct Restraints on Alienation in Donative Transfers

Chapter 3. Definitions

Chapter 4. Validity of Restraints on Alienation

Part III. Provisions in Restraint of Personal Conduct

Chapter 5. General Rules

Chapter 6. Restraints on Marriage

Chapter 7. Provisions Relating to Family Relationships

Chapter 8. Provisions Relating to Religion, Personal Habits, and Education or Occupation

Part IV. Restraints on Interference with Transferor's Dispositive Plan

Chapter 9. Restraints on Contests and Restraints on Attacking Fiduciaries

Chapter 10. Restraints on Enforcing Obligations of the Transferor or of the Transferor's Estate and Restraints on Asserting Any Right to Other Property Owned or Disposed of by the Transferor

Division II. Powers of Appointment, Class Gifts, and Related Matters

Part V. Powers of Appointment

Chapter 11. Definitions

Chapter 12. Creation of Power of Appointment

Chapter 13. Creditor of the Donee and Spouse of the Donee

Chapter 14. Release and Disclaimer of Powers of Appointment

Chapter 15. Revocation or Amendment of Power of Appointment or its Exercise

Chapter 16. Contracts to Appoint

Chapter 17. The Donee's Intent to Appoint

Chapter 18. Effectiveness of Appointments

Chapter 19. Permissible Appointments

Chapter 20. Excessive Appointments -- Fraud on Powers

Chapter 21. Exclusive and Non-Exclusive Powers

Chapter 22. Allocation of Appointive Assets to Attain Maximum Effectiveness

Chapter 23. Ineffective Appointments

Chapter 24. Gifts in Default of Appointment

Part VI. Class Gifts

Chapter 25. Primary Meaning of Class Gift Term

Chapter 26. Time Within Which a Class Member Must Be in Being in Order to Share in Class Gift--- Increase in Class Membership

Chapter 27. A Class Member Fails to Meet a Requirement of Survival or to Fulfill Some Other Condition -- Decrease in Class Membership

Chapter 28. Share of Each Class Member

Chapter 29. Gifts to Heirs and the Like as Words of Purchase

Chapter 30. Effect of Limitations to "Heirs," "Heirs of the Body," "Next of Kin," or "Relatives" Under the Rule in Shelley's Case and the Doctrine of Worthier Title

Division III. Requirements for Effectuating a Donative Transfer

Chapter 31. Accomplishing a Donative Transfer in Donor's Lifetime Without Using a Document of Transfer

Chapter 32. Accomplishing a Donative Transfer in the Donor's Lifetime by a Document of Transfer

Chapter 33. Accomplishing a Donative Transfer by a Will

Chapter 34. Failure of Attempted Donative Transfers

This Restatement (Second) of Property has been described as:

> distinctive in its extensive references to legislation and its use of legislation as a basis for rules of decisional law. It is also distinctive in the elaboration of rationale in the Comments, which explore the relevant competing considerations and alternative resolutions to a far greater extent than the first Restatement, and in the significance accorded to tax considerations. The comprehensive Statutory and Reporter's Notes develop fully the legislative, judicial, and scholarly bases for the positions taken in the black letter and Comments, and divergences from the first Restatement are identified and explained throughout. n25

The Restatement (Second) of Property is also notable for reflecting changes in social values since the first Restatement was published. For instance, in the matter of class gifts, treated in the fifth volume (the third volume of donative transfers) of the Restatement (Second), the evolution of community mores and changing public policy are noted in the new Restatement rules:

> The rules for construction of class gifts are based on assumptions about the normal relationships that obtain between a donor and possible donees, particularly the relationships within a family, including an extended family. These assumptions in turn reflect the evolution of community mores and changing public policy toward the family relationships as expressed in decisional and statutory law. For example, adopted children have now come to be regarded as equal in status with natural children. Interpretation of terms such as "children" and "grandchildren" in class gifts should be guided accordingly. Similarly, the status today of children in second marriages reflects change both in patterns of family formation and in expectations that result from second marriages. The formulation of the rules of interpretation in this Restatement reflects recognition of changes such as these. n26

The fourth and final volume of the donative transfers portion of the Restatement (Second) of Property is unique in that it addresses topics not covered in the first Restatement:

> Hence, the Reporter's Notes have no references to counterpart sections in the earlier Restatement. Absence of direct common law precedents on these topics has influenced the drafting of the black letter and Comments. Many sections draw heavily upon statutory law as a source of policy and as basis for reasoning by analogy to problems not directly addressed by statute. n27

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 25. 4 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of Property: Donative Transfers, 2 viii (1986).

(n2)Footnote 26. 5 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of Property: Donative Transfers, 3 vii (1988).

(n3)Footnote 27. 6 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of Property: Donative Transfers, 4 vii (1992).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.05 How the Property Restatements Have Been Received.

[Go To Supp]

Every student of the law knows that Restatements are often cited in court opinions as important secondary sources; indeed, Restatement language is sometimes adopted as the rule of law for that point in that jurisdiction. Restatements have also attracted the attention of legal scholars, especially because they have been produced by legal scholars. However, it is not possible in any sense to measure how strong or pervasive has been the Restatement influence on American jurisprudence, and that cannot be the objective of this section. What is reported in this section are the points of praise and criticism appearing in the published reviews of the property Restatements, as those reviews have appeared in the law review journals of the legal profession. By summarizing these critical appraisals it is not intended to endorse or reinforce those views, but only to report the range of professional perceptions generated by the Restatements.

§ 8.05(a) The First Restatement of Property.

After the first two volumes of the Restatement (First) of Property were issued in 1936, a large number of brief reviews appeared in American law reviews. The points of praise and criticism about the first Restatement (First) of Property are summarized in the following paragraphs.

§ 8.05(a)(1) Features for Which the Restatement Has Been Praised.

1. "The stark precision of the language of the text... leaves little room for ambiguity as a more liquid prose might do..." n28

2. "These volumes constitute an excellent test and summary for student review." n29

3. "The work will be found extremely helpful as a source of information in regard to the more commonly enacted statutes on real property." n30

4. "The Restatement should prove an excellent text book on the Law of Property." n31

5. "[After annotated decisions of this state are issued,] on points not yet decided in Pennsylvania, the Restatement will be helpful in shaping decisions." n32

6. "The great use which this reviewer has found for the Restatements, and particularly the Restatement on Property, is to sharpen legal analysis... The technique of the Restatement meets this need admirably. Highly analytical, possessed of an outline and organization which make it virtually impossible to overlook the relationship of connected problems, and equipped with comment and illustration which convert a code into a text, the Restatement is ideal to reeducate the lawyer into the scholar. Then when the map of the field is clear again, one can turn to the cases with some understanding." n33

7. "[Volumes I and II] are clear, well organized, well indexed and highly usable." n34

8. "Happily the Restatement of the old English common law... did not eventuate. The tendency towards a detailed reception of the old English common law as the common law of the United States... disappeared from the Restatement and a much more modern trend took its place." n35

9. "The return of the Institute to characteristics first and patterns afterwards [a mode followed in the creative periods of property law, the 13th and 15th centuries] is an indication of an ideal in the Institute to be dynamic rather than static and in a field specially difficult for dynamics... [Various innovative rules] all point to the role of law maker rather than of law stater." n36

10. "The organization of material, from the strictly analytical point of view, is almost unimpeachable." n37

11. The Hohfeldian system of legal terminology is incorporated in toto. In general, the adoption of this terminology is to be commended, for in the field of property law especially it conduces to accuracy and clarity of expression." n38

12. "The inevitable Blackletter is remarkably good, with a few exceptions." n39

13. "Notwithstanding the criticisms directed toward particular portions of this work, it represents the most scientific treatment of its field which is available to the profession. Its preparation has called for the highest degree of skill, and has required arduous labor." n40

14. "At the beginning of each chapter is found an 'introductory note'. Some of these, such as the one dealing with estates tail, present a considerable amount of very valuable historical information as well as a summary of the various views adhered to by the different states." n41

15. "The use of Hohfeldian terminology, although frequently criticized, may do much to clarify existing legal conceptions inasmuch as it is quite definite. Although we have an established terminology in connection with the law of property, it is very much abused and misused, thus giving rise to much confusion. Perhaps the new terminology will be an aid to law students through whom is found the only sure way to legal improvements, even though the process is necessarily delayed." n42

16. "Obviously, there is much criticism of the rules of law as restated. No group could possibly restate the law of property so that all would be in agreement. Apparently, a rule of law most consistent with reason was stated if the opposing authorities were not too imposing. In this manner the Institute becomes an important agency in the growth of the law." n43

17. "The Restatement of Property is the most scientific system, from the standpoint of arrangement and classification of the common law of property, that we know of... From this partial evaluation, it is apparent that a real contribution to the science of law will have been made when the entire field will have been covered." n44

18. "The Restatement is not only an accurate, clear and succinct presentation of the common law, as it exists in the United States today, but in addition, statutory changes have been considered and the law under existing statutes stated. Of particular value are the special notes printed in the body of the work which set forth alphabetically the states which have adopted a statutory modification of the common law. Where uniformity among the decisions does not exist, the conflicting rules are stated and the reasons in support thereof are considered. Unless the authorities in support of a rule are too imposing, the rule most consonant with reason is adopted. In particular if the authority upon a point is so scant that it cannot be said that the law upon the point is established at all, the purpose of the Institute has been to adopted the rule supported by reason." n45

19. "In the law of property uncertainty has frequently resulted from confusion of terms, from the use of terms having several meanings without a clear showing of the particular sense in which the term was used. This is avoided in the Restatement by uniform terminology." n46

20. "The work should be of great value to students, law teachers and practitioners. It represents the combined research and scholarship of the leading American authorities upon the subject. Their work in turn has been subjected to searching criticism by teachers, practitioners and judges. The natural result is that it is unequaled for clarity and accuracy of statement." n47

21. "Another forward step taken in the current volumes on Property consists in the inclusion of many references to statutory law... This method of handling statutory material, in a work intended primarily to state the common law, may open the door to inclusion in the present series of additional needed volumes in fields involving a considerable body of statutory law." n48

22. "Despite all the tiresome repetition, some of which could have been avoided and some not, despite the many thin distinctions and obvious, dull, or unreal illustrations, there is much in it that is useful to any worker in the field and much that cannot be found elsewhere." n49

23. "Many portions of the text could be singled out for peculiar excellence; most of the material on the characteristics of future interests is, in fact, more informative and stimulating than anything to be found in orthodox treatises. The same could be said of various sections and chapters on freehold estates. That pretty well covers both volumes. Technical excellence in sacred doctrine must indeed be taken for granted in a work subjected to so much scrutiny by so many scholars." n50

24. "This Restatement is in every respect the equal and in some respects, it is superior to the Restatements that have preceded it. It is entitled to receive, at least, the same favorable reception that has been accorded its predecessors." n51

25. "In fact the treatment of the mutual rights and duties of owners of future interests and of the possessory interests upon which the future interests are expectant, which one finds scattered through Chapter 6, entitled Estates for Life, and Chapters 12-15, entitled Protections of Different Kinds from Diverse Perils and Misfortunes, is quite the most satisfactory and complete treatment known to this writer." n52

26. "So accustomed has the profession become, as the result of the pedagogic systems adopted over an extended period of years by most of the law schools, to the case precedent presentation of the law that many will undoubtedly be loath to accord to the Restatement the worth that it merits. That the legal system is not yet ready, if it is not, to abandon the case precedent system is not to its credit and should not in the slightest degree detract from the intrinsic soundness of the Restatement of Law or of the form in which it is presented." n53

§ 8.05(a)(2) Features for Which the Restatement Has Been Criticized.

1. The "stark precision of the language does not make easy reading." n54

2. "It is regrettable that there is so little explanation of the reasoning and of the authority on which the presumably restated text is based." n55

3. "We may properly inquire upon what reasoning was the orderly statement of the common law selected and what was the state of authority on the point on which the selection was made." n56

4. "Surely [the monographs] are not the only rules of law set out in the Restatement upon which the profession and the courts hold contrary views." n57

5. "When the state annotations do not agree with the restated principles, then the need for a more comprehensive reporting of the general state of the authorities and of the reasons of the Institute is increased." n58

6. "The tremendous amount of material and research behind these volumes... is not available to the practicing lawyer who presents the statement of the law to the courts nor to the courts who make the common law and who must justify their decisions by some reasoning, and annotate them with some case authority, presented to them, whether the decision is right or wrong." n59

7. "The restaters have adopted the Hohfeldian terminology for stating the rules of property law. In our opinion, this will reduce the utility of the Property Restatement as a practical working tool in practice. Many of the rules are couched in language other than that used by the courts for centuries past and will require much translation to fit the Restatement rules into the language used by the courts. This rejection of terms used since feudal times for stating rules of property must inevitably result in confusion and accomplishes no worthwhile results." n60

8. "In [some] instances common statutory law has been rejected and extreme care will be necessary in the use of the rules to determine whether the rule is a statutory or decisional one. The Rule in Shelley's Case is restated as part of our common law although rejected by at least thirty-three states." n61

9. "At times the Restatement assumes the role of a prophet or predicter of things to come." n62

10. "It will be of little value to Pennsylvanians until the annotated decisions of this state are issued." n63

11. "The average lawyer may be hampered a little at first by a strange terminology. The determinable fee has become a fee subject to a special limitation...." n64

12. "Apparently the question whether existing law or socially desirable law should be restated has not yet been wholly laid to rest. In the main where vestigial principles which have outworn their reason still clog the law, this Restatement follows authority with a regretful comment, but some exceptions appear... Perhaps this is the best treatment in a work written in the hope of clarifying future development of the law, but it seems more than 'Restatement.'" n65

13. "Not content with its new-found independence [of freedom of restating old English common law, and instead adopting a more modern trend], however, the Institute seems to have gone wild....." n66

14. "All credit to the Institution that is attempting such an ambitious role [as stating innovative rules of law], but what it is attempting should be recognized as such and not as a Restatement in the ordinary sense of that word. As a guide to the practicing lawyer, it is likely to be anything but safe." n67

15. "The adoption of a jurisprudential terminology, thought by many to have seen its best days or to be dying if not dead at the time of its adoption, the new classification of remainders, and finally the quasi-legislative form of its utterances are among those things responsible for that strangeness and tediousness which were noted... The Restatement of the Law of Property is a work of much daring and great ingenuity, but it is not believed that it will be read or understood or accepted as a working guide by the legal profession." n68

16. "In some instances... rigid adherence to a scheme of scientific organization has impaired the practical value of the work." n69

17. "The reviewer doubts... whether adequate definitions of the basic legal concepts have been stated; and further doubts whether it was desirable to adopt the "power" concept in its full breadth as signifying the ability to change legal relations even by tortious action." n70

18. "A few of the illustrations employed are defective, frequently for want of facts." n71

19. "Many examples of more less inept phraseology could be cited." n72

20. "A question of basic importance in any Restatement is, what are the criteria whereby to determine the choice of rules to be "restated." In no Restatement has the reviewer been able to perceive any definite criteria. Actually, the result of this Restatement is a series of compromises between conflicting criteria. The rules declared are not in all instances those of the "common law" as that term is normally understood. Statutes of more or less general existence in the United States have had a persuasive influence upon the choice of rules. In some instances, the choice has been dictated by the Institute's idea of what the law ought to be, rather than by any actual course of judicial decision. The usual number of "caveats" appear to warn the reader that the Institute takes no position upon certain problems because of the absence of judicial authority. While the Institute has been reluctant to step in where courts have never trodden, it has not hesitated to promulgate rules in defiance of judicial precedent... While the Institute has thus addressed itself to the task of ridding the law of some illogical rules, and has set its face sternly against the 'embalming and preservation of an anachronism,' it has at the same time exhibited a tender solicitude and pious adoration for other rules equally outmoded." n73

21. "Several Sections are objectionable to the reviewer, because they state an undesirable rule, or because they do not deal with problems in their entirety, or because they do not present the applicable rules with sufficient certainty and clarity." n74

22. "Its value would be much enhanced if its propositions were fortified by citation of a limited number of carefully selected authorities. Such citations could have been included with little additional effort. The reviewer has always been skeptical of the reception to be accorded by lawyers and judges in general to the ex cathedra pronouncements of a small group of legal scholars. The profession in this country is not accustomed to rely largely upon the opinions of jurists as contrasted with case precedents. All the Restatements are open to the criticism that they state some rules which are approved by only a minority of American courts, and some rules which have no judicial approval whatsoever. The Restatement of any subject, taken by itself, is not a safe guide for a practicing lawyer." n75

23. "A great many 'caveats' are included, indicating particular questions on which the Institute did not wish to take a definite position. This procedure is subject to some criticism in that it partially fails to do what the Institute was designed to accomplish." n76

24. "Some objection might be raised to the restating of some practically obsolete rules, such as the rule in Shelley's Case, which has been rejected in at least thirty-three states, and the fee tail which exists only in theory in a few states. While this procedure may seem somewhat unfortunate as a needless perpetuation of outworn conceptions, the Institute evidently felt that such legal principles should be restated inasmuch as they do exist in some states." n77

25. "Many will regret that the law relating to the fee simple determinable and to a possibility of reverter has been restated. The economic objections to such an estate are well known. The possibility of reverter, although of little value itself, constitutes a very heavy encumbrance insofar as the owner of a determinable fee is concerned." n78

26. "One serious criticism can be made with reference to form. Many cross references are used which are very confusing, especially to law students. References are sometimes made to other sections which in turn refer to still other sections or refer back to the original section. This seems to create an undue amount of confusion for the amount of space that actually is saved. This also opens the Restatement to the charge of evasiveness which is unfortunate in view of the true spirit and character of the Restatement." n79

27. "The reason for stating the common law rule even though it may not be the rule in most jurisdictions is explained by the Reporter as a desire for consistency of treatment, and further, that the approach of the Restatement, according to the Reporter, should state what the decision would be today in such cases in jurisdictions following the common law. However, the lawyer, searching for the law, must understand this technique, namely, restating in black letter type the common law rule, and proceed according to the notes and comments." n80

28. "The Institute has, at times, stated rules to be law that seem contra to judicial authority... [T]he lawyers may develop the suspicion that in other places the Institute is more concerned with stating what the law ought to be rather than with the Restatement." n81

29. "Certainly, here, rigid adherence to a plan which will necessitate a search for the rules of partition through five volumes (when completed) is not the most convenient arrangement." n82

30. "Whether the Restatement will be useful depends on whether it will be used. As it stands now it is safe to say that lawyers will buy it and leave it on library shelves. It must be annotated." n83

31. "[T]hese volumes, with their appendices, do contain a considerable sprinkling of historical and statutory material, case discussion and reasoned comment. Yet such interstitial contributions, necessarily meager and inadequate, fall far short of offering either a genetic account or a critical appraisal of institutions and doctrines. The many criticisms made of its predecessors are, on the whole, valid indictments of the Restatement of Property." n84

32. "Some reviewers have pointed to naivete in fundamental assumptions -- assumptions that certainty is obtainable and obtainable by high abstractions, that certainty is more important than flexibility, that "substantive law" is all-comprehensive and designed to govern human conduct in and out of courts, that the defects of "the law" can be cured by restating it as it is, that a restatement of the law as it is, is a restatement of it as it ought to be, and so forth; others have deplored the omission of historical, economic, and sociological backgrounds and of studies of comparative experience in other countries, the ignoring of, except by indirection, consideration of what "the law" ought to be, a failure to study the social consequences of institutions and doctrines, the omission of supporting authorities, reasoned discussion, and contrast of conflicting opinion, the use of 'doctrinal' rather than "factual" classifications and of the blackletter-comment-illustration formula of expression, and so forth. Yet to all of these criticisms the officials of the American Law Institute have remained impervious. Their only answer is that 'the most claimed for the Restatement is that it represents the considered conclusions of those who have for years been interested in a particular branch of the law,' that investigations of fact 'cost a lot of money and take a lot of time and the legal questions in individual cases can be learned,' and that 'many questions of policy are incapable of demonstration by any fact examination which it is possible to make.'" n85

33. "To assume that the judicial handling of property problems in contemporary America can be made more predictable by an authoritative canonization and rationalization of ancient, feudal-conditioned concepts and doctrines... is little short of fantastic." n86

34. "The reader quickly perceives that the black letter formulas are of relatively little value; that they are sometimes inaccurate, often obscure, and always ponderous and dull. But he also soon comes to see that the undoubtedly great merit and value of the work as a contribution to legal literature is to be found in those portions of the text that are printed as ancillary to the rigidly formulated rules that appear in black letter type. Hard pressed by their association with the black letter formulations, these ancillary writings assume an unfortunately fragmentary form." n87

35. "[The Restatement] is unintelligible to all but the initiated. The terminology adopted is unfamiliar, esoteric. The style, particularly of the black letter rules, is ponderous, redundant, repetitious and therefore tiresome." n88

36. In appraising the quality and value of this work it is necessary to take into account the handicaps under which it was produced. In the manner of the work itself, these will be neatly catalogued. 1. The task undertaken was impossible from its inception. There is no "American law of property," and there can be none so long as the present federal system of government persists. 2. The plan of the Restatement is based upon the misconception that 'the law' is static and capable of formulary statement; that it is subject to still photography. 3. Such misconceptions wrought confusion in the minds of the draftsmen. They do not have any objective clearly in mind. They admit they are not legislating, and yet approach their task as would timid code draftsmen, with resulting inconsistencies and repugnancies. n89

37. "What then is the significance of these two volumes of the Restatement of the Law of Property viewed as a contribution to the literature of the law? And what will be the influence upon the future development of the law of property in America of the completed Restatement if the pontifical approach is retained in the remaining volumes? The answer must be: very little. The black letter rules have no literary merit, and as declarations of law, supported only by their own authority, they are absurd. The judge who would base his decision of any question of law upon these black letter declarations would be worse than lazy; he would be incredibly stupid. Even when accurately stated, which is too often not the case, and applicable in the jurisdiction, as they often are not, their language is too general to determine specific issues arising out of particular fact situations. These declarations of legal principles, like other non-legislative formulations, can rise no higher than their source in the juristic experience of the race, as evidenced by judicial precedents. These are almost wholly lacking in the Restatement, which generally discards even such collections of authorities as supported the tentative drafts." n90

§ 8.05(b) The Second Restatement of Property.

By comparison with the spate of reviews closely following the issuance of the first two volumes of the Restatement (First) of Property , the critical appraisals of the Restatement (Second) of Property have been sparse indeed. Some part of that paucity is doubtless because all the old conceptual criticisms were thoroughly aired a generation before, and there is little to be gained by reiteration. If a critical review is issued, it is more likely to give its attention to matters of content rather than philosophy. One such review did, however, give a broader comment:

> [T]he ALI has continued its relatively new policy of according weight to trends possibly manifested by legislation. The Second Restatement is significant for those involved with trusts and estates not only for its potential persuasive effect on the direction of American law, but also for its expanded format of comments, statutory notes, reporter's notes, and tax notes. These notes, prepared by the Reporter, Professor A. James Casner of Harvard, are marvelous research tools. For many substantive issues, the legal researcher would do well to bypass traditional methods and proceed directly to the reporter's notes." n91

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 28. Leon H. Wallace, Book Review, 12 Ind. L. Rev. 243 (1937).

(n2)Footnote 29. Id. at 244.

(n3)Footnote 30. Harold S. Irwin, Book Reviews, 41 Dick. L. Rev. 191, 192 (1937).

(n4)Footnote 31. Id. at 193.

(n5)Footnote 32. Id.

(n6)Footnote 33. George F. James, Reviews, 47 Yale L. J. 1238, 1239 (1938).

(n7)Footnote 34. Id. at 1241.

(n8)Footnote 35. Percy Bordwell, Book Reviews, 51 Harv. L. Rev. 565, 566 (1938).

(n9)Footnote 36. Id. at 568.

(n10)Footnote 37. Merrill I. Schnebly, Book Reviews, 37 Colum. L. Rev. 881 (1937).

(n11)Footnote 38. Id.

(n12)Footnote 39. Id. at 882.

(n13)Footnote 40. Id. at 886.

(n14)Footnote 41. Paul E. Raymond, Reviews, 23 Iowa L. Rev. 141, 142 (1937).

(n15)Footnote 42. Id. at 142-143.

(n16)Footnote 43. Id. at 143.

(n17)Footnote 44. John P. Maloney, Restatement of the Law of Property, 12 St. John's L. Rev. 1, 21 (1937).

(n18)Footnote 45. Louis S. Herrink, Book Reviews, 23 Va. L. Rev. 742, 743 (1937).

(n19)Footnote 46. Id.

(n20)Footnote 47. Id. at 744.

(n21)Footnote 48. Albert Smith Faught, Book Reviews, 11 Temp. L. Q. 455, 456 (1937).

(n22)Footnote 49. Myres S. McDougal, Book Reviews, 32 Nw. U. L. Rev. 509, 514 (1937).

(n23)Footnote 50. Id.

(n24)Footnote 51. Harold C. Warner, Book Reviews, 15 Tenn. L. Rev. 407-408 (1938).

(n25)Footnote 52. William R. Vance, The Restatement of the Law of Property, 86 U. Pa. L. Rev. 173, 188 (1937).

(n26)Footnote 53. John S. Foster, Book Reviews, 2 U. of Newark L. Rev. 105 (1937).

(n27)Footnote 54. Leon H. Wallace, Book Reviews, 12 Ind. L. Rev. 243 (1937).

(n28)Footnote 55. Id.

(n29)Footnote 56. Id. at 244.

(n30)Footnote 57. Id.

(n31)Footnote 58. Id.

(n32)Footnote 59. Id.

(n33)Footnote 60. Harold S. Irwin, Book Reviews, 41 Dick. L. Rev. 191, 192 (1937).

(n34)Footnote 61. Id.

(n35)Footnote 62. Id.

(n36)Footnote 63. Id. at 193.

(n37)Footnote 64. George F. James, Reviews, 47 Yale L. J. 1238, 1239 (1938).

(n38)Footnote 65. Id. at 1240.

(n39)Footnote 66. Percy Bordwell, Book Reviews, 51 Harv. L. Rev. 565, 566 (1938).

(n40)Footnote 67. Id. at 568.

(n41)Footnote 68. Id. at 570.

(n42)Footnote 69. Merrill I. Schnebly, Book Reviews, 37 Colum. L. Rev. 881 (1937).

(n43)Footnote 70. Id.

(n44)Footnote 71. Id. at 882.

(n45)Footnote 72. Id.

(n46)Footnote 73. Id. at 882-883.

(n47)Footnote 74. Id. at 883-884.

(n48)Footnote 75. Id. at 886.

(n49)Footnote 76. Paul E. Raymond, Reviews, 23 Iowa L. Rev. 141-142 (1937).

(n50)Footnote 77. Id. at 143.

(n51)Footnote 78. Id.

(n52)Footnote 79. Id. at 143-144.

(n53)Footnote 80. John P. Maloney, Restatement of the Law of Property, 12 St. John's L. Rev. 1, 9 (1937).

(n54)Footnote 81. Id. at 10, 11.

(n55)Footnote 82. Id. at 12.

(n56)Footnote 83. Id. at 16.

(n57)Footnote 84. Myres S. McDougal, Book Reviews, 32 Nw. U. L. Rev. 509, 510-511 (1937).

(n58)Footnote 85. Id. at 511.

(n59)Footnote 86. Id. at 513.

(n60)Footnote 87. William R. Vance, The Restatement of the Law of Property, 86 U. Pa. L. Rev. 173 (1937).

(n61)Footnote 88. Id. at 174.

(n62)Footnote 89. Id. at 178.

(n63)Footnote 90. Id. at 188.

(n64)Footnote 91. Ronald C. Link, Revised Provisions of Restatement of Property Provide Important Lessons for Estate Planners, 13 Estate Planning 21 (1986).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.06 The Third Restatement of Property.

[Go To Supp]

Continuing work on donative transfers will become part of the Restatement (Third) of Property , and other subjects will be considered. n92

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 92. See, e.g., Susan F. French, "Design Proposal for the New Restatement of Property -- Servitudes," 21 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1213 (1988).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 8.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 8.07 The Restatements of Trusts.

That many aspects of the law of trusts are essential for the student and practitioner of property law is a given. Therefore, a brief review of the Restatements of Trusts is included in this chapter. The comments and criticisms concerning the philosophy and general structure of the property Restatements are, for the most part, applicable to the Restatements of Trusts.

§ 8.07(a) The First Restatement of Trusts.

The Restatement (First) of the Law of Trusts was published in 1935, with Professor Austin W. Scott as reporter. A major, early content decision was to exclude discussion of constructive trusts from this title, but to include it in a Restatement of restitution, which would also include quasi-contracts.

The contents of the Restatement (First) of Trusts may be briefly summarized as follows:

Chapter 1. Definitions and Distinctions

Topic 1. Definitions

Topic 2. Distinctions

Chapter 2. The Creation of a Trust

Topic 1. Methods of Creating a Trust

Topic 2. The Capacity of the Settlor to Create a Trust

Topic 3. The Intention to Create a Trust

Topic 4. Consideration

Topic 5. Transfer of Property to the Trustee

Topic 6. Notice to and Acceptance by the Trustee

Topic 7. Notice to and Acceptance by the Beneficiary

Topic 8. Reservation and Creation of Powers

Topic 9. The Parol Evidence Rule

Topic 10. The Requirement of a Written Memorandum

Topic 11. The Creation of Testamentary Trusts

Topic 12. Purposes for Which a Trust can be Created

Topic 13. Illegality

Topic 14. Other Requirements

Topic 15. The Effect of the Statute of Uses

Chapter 3. The Trust Property

Chapter 4. The Trustee

Chapter 5. The Beneficiary

Chapter 6. Transfer of the Interest of the Beneficiary

Topic 1. Voluntary Transfers

Topic 2. Involuntary Transfers

Topic 3. Restrictions on Voluntary and Involuntary Transfers

Topic 4. Successive Conveyances by the Beneficiary of his Interest

Chapter 7. The Administration of the Trust

Topic 1. General Principles

Topic 2. Duties of the Trustee

Topic 3. Powers of the Trustee

Topic 4. Remedies of the Beneficiary and Liabilities of the Trustee

Topic 5. Investment of Trust Funds

Topic 6. Successive Beneficiaries

Topic 7. Compensation of the Trustee

Topic 8. Indemnity of the Trustee for Expenses

Topic 9. Liabilities of the Beneficiaries

Topic 10. Contribution of Indemnity from Co-Trustee

Topic 11. Instructions and Accounting

Chapter 8. Liabilities to Third Persons

Topic 1. Liability of the Trustee

Topic 2. Power of Creditor to Reach Trust Property

Topic 3. Liability of Beneficiary

Chapter 9. Liabilities of Third Persons

Topic 1. Persons Acting Adversely to the Trustee

Topic 2. Transferees of Trust Authority

Topic 3. Participation in Breach of Trust Otherwise Than by Receiving Transfer

Topic 4. Effect of the Statute of Limitations and Laches

Topic 5. Discharge by Beneficiary and Set-Off of Claim Against Beneficiary

Chapter 10. The Termination and Modification of the Trust

Chapter 11. Charitable Trusts

Topic 1. Definition

Topic 2. Creation of Charitable Trust

Topic 3. Nature of Charitable Purposes

Topic 4. The Administration of Charitable Trusts

Topic 5. Failure of Charitable Trusts -- The Doctrine of Cy Pres

Topic 6. Liabilities to Third Persons

Chapter 12. Resulting Trusts

Topic 1. General Principles

Topic 2. Where an Express Trust Fails

Topic 3. Where an Express Trust Does Not Exhaust the Trust Estate

Topic 4. Where Property is Transferred to One Person and the Purchase Price is Paid by Another

§ 8.07(b) The Second Restatement of Trusts.

The Restatement (Second) of Trusts appeared in 1959, with Professor Austin Scott as reporter. The Institute noted certain changes in this second effort:

> The effort in Trusts, Second, as in other subjects being dealt with in the new Restatement, is to provide fuller explanation for conclusions reached. We are endeavoring to state not only the rule but wherever helpful the reasons back of the rule. The end being sought is to give all possible aid to the practitioner, the judge and the law student.
>
> As in Agency, the new edition provides a set of Reporter's Notes. These cite a great deal of case law and whatever discussion the Reporter has felt to give. They are not part of the Restatement in the sense that they have been gone over by Advisers and considered by Council and Membership of the Institute. But that they will be helpful there is no doubt. n93

The contents of the second Restatement (Second) of Trusts may be briefly summarized as follows:

Chapter 1. Definitions and Distinctions

Topic 1. Definitions

Topic 2. Distinctions

Chapter 2. The Creation of a Trust

Topic 1. Methods of Creating a Trust

Topic 2. The Capacity of the Settlor to Create a Trust

Topic 3. The Intention to Create a Trust

Topic 4. Consideration

Topic 5. Transfer of Property to the Trustee

Topic 6. Notice to and Acceptance by the Trustee

Topic 7. Notice to and Acceptance by the Beneficiary

Topic 8. Reservation and Creation of Powers

Topic 9. The Parol Evidence Rule

Topic 10. The Requirement of a Written Memorandum

Topic 11. The Creation of Testamentary Trusts

Topic 12. Purposes for Which a Trust can be Created

Topic 13. Illegality

Topic 13A. Impossibility and Indefiniteness

Topic 14. Other Requirements

Topic 15. The Effect of the Statute of Uses

Chapter 3. The Trust Property

Chapter 4. The Trustee

Chapter 5. The Beneficiary

Chapter 6. Transfer of the Interest of the Beneficiary

Topic 1. Voluntary Transfers

Topic 2. Involuntary Transfers

Topic 3. Restrictions on Voluntary and Involuntary Transfers

Topic 4. Successive Conveyances by the Beneficiary of his Interest

Chapter 7. The Administration of the Trust

Topic 1. General Principles

Topic 2. Duties of the Trustee

Topic 3. Powers of the Trustee

Topic 4. Remedies of the Beneficiary and Liabilities of the Trustee

Topic 5. Investment of Trust Funds

Topic 6. Successive Beneficiaries

Topic 7. Compensation of the Trustee

Topic 8. Indemnity of the Trustee for Expenses

Topic 9. Liabilities of the Beneficiaries

Chapter 8. Liabilities to Third Persons

Topic 1. Liability of the Trustee

Topic 2. Power of Creditor to Reach Trust Property

Topic 3. Liability of Beneficiary

Chapter 9. Liabilities of Third Persons

Topic 1. Persons Acting Adversely to the Trustee

Topic 2. Transferees of Trust Authority

Topic 3. Participation in Breach of Trust Otherwise Than by Receiving Transfer

Topic 4. Effect of the Statute of Limitations and Laches

Topic 5. Discharge by Beneficiary and Set-Off of Claim Against Beneficiary

Chapter 10. The Termination and Modification of the Trust

Chapter 11. Charitable Trusts

Topic 1. Definition

Topic 2. Creation of Charitable Trust

Topic 3. Nature of Charitable Purposes

Topic 4. The Administration of Charitable Trusts

Topic 5. Failure of Charitable Trusts -- The Doctrine of Cy Pres

Topic 6. Liabilities to Third Persons

Chapter 12. Resulting Trusts

Topic 1. General Principles

Topic 2. Where an Express Trust Fails

Topic 3. Where an Express Trust Does Not Exhaust the Trust Estate

Topic 4. Where Property is Transferred to One Person and the Purchase Price is Paid by Another

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 93. 1 American Law Institute, Restatement (Second) of the Law, Trusts 2d vii-viii (1959).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Scope

Scope

Add to Table of Contents:

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.04

Supp. to § 8.04 The Organization and Contents of the Restatements of Property.

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

§ 8.04(e) The Third Restatement of Property--Donative Transfers (Division I Only) [Go To Main]

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.02

Supp. to § 8.02 The Genesis and Purpose of the First Restatements.

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

§ 8.02(a) The Founding of the American Law Institute. [Go To Main]

Add:

See also American Law Institute, The American Law Institute: Seventy-Fifth Anniversary, 1923-1998 (1998).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.03

Supp. to § 8.03 How the Restatements of Property Were Prepared

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

§ 8.03(b) The Second Restatement of Property [Go To Main]

The first full paragraph should be indented as part of the quotation.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.04

Supp. to § 8.04 The Organization and Contents of the Restatements of Property.

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

§ 8.04(c) The Third Restatement of Property--Mortgages [Go To Main]

At the end of the first sentence, add new footnote 27.1 n27.1

§ 8.04(d) The Third Restatement of Property--Servitudes. [Go To Main]

Replace the text of the subsection with the following:

The contents of the Restatement (Third) of Property-Servitudes are revealed in the following summary outline:

[At end of sentence, add new footnote 27.2] n27.2

Chapter 1. Definitions

1.1 Servitude Defined; Scope of Restatement

1.2 Easement and Profit Defined

1.3 Covenant Running with Land, Affirmative, Negative, and Restrictive Covenants Defined

1.4 Terms "Real Covenant" and "Equitable Servitude"

1.5 Appurtenant, In Gross, and Personal Defined

1.6 Conservation Servitude and Conservation Organization

1.7 General-Plan Development Defined

1.8 Common-Interest Community Defined

Chapter 2. Creation of Servitudes

2.1 Creation of a Servitude

2.2 Intent to Create a Servitude

2.3 Necessary Parties to Creation of a Servitude

2.4 Horizontal Privity Is Not Required to Create a Servitude

2.5 Estates or Servitudes Burdened and Benefited by a Servitude

2.6 Creation of Benefits in Gross and Third-Party

2.7 Formal Requirements (Statute of Frauds)

2.8 Failure to Comply with the Statute of Frauds

2.9 Exception to the Statute of Frauds

2.10 Servitudes Created by Estoppel

2.11 Servitudes Created by Implication

2.12 Servitudes Implied from Prior Use

2.13 Servitudes Implied from Map or Boundary Reference

2.14 Servitudes Implied from General Plan

2.15 Servitudes Created by Necessity

2.16 Servitudes Created by Prescription: Prescriptive Use

2.17 Servitudes Created by Prescription: Requirements

2.18 Acquisition of Servitudes by Governmental Bodies and the Public

Chapter 3. Validity of Servitude Arrangements

3.1 Validity of Servitudes: General Rule

3.2 Touch-or-Concern Doctrine Superseded

3.3 Rule Against Perpetuities Inapplicable

3.4 Direct Restraints on Alienation

3.5 Indirect Restraints on Alienation and Irrational Servitudes

3.6 Unreasonable Restraints on Trade or Competition

3.7 Unconscionability

Chapter 4. Interpretation of Servitudes

4.1 Interpretation of Servitudes

4.2 Supplementary Terms of a Servitude

4.3 Duration of a Servitude

4.4 Duration of Original Parties' and Successors' Obligations and Enjoyment Rights

4.5 Determining Whether a Servitude Benefit or Burden Is Appurtenant, In Gross, or Personal

4.6 Transferability of Servitude Benefits

4.7 Delegability and Transfer of Servitude Burdens

4.8 Location, Relocation, and Dimensions of a Servitude

4.9 Servient Owner's Right to use Estate Burdened

4.10 Use Rights Conferred by a Servitude

4.11 Use of Appurtenant Easement or Profit to Serve Property Other Than Dominant Estate

4.12 Rights of Holders of Separate Servitudes in Same Property

4.13 Duties of Repair and Maintenance

Volume 2

Chapter 5. Succession to Benefits and Burdens of Servitudes

5.1 An Appurtenant Benefit or Burden Passes Automatically

5.2 Persons to Whom an Appurtenant Benefit or Burden Runs

5.3 Affirmative Covenant Benefits and Burdens That Run to a Lessee

5.4 Affirmative Covenant Benefits and Burdens That Run to a Life Tenant

5.5 Running of Benefits to an Adverse Possessor Who Has Not Gained Title

5.6 Severability of Appurtenant Benefits

5.7 Devolution of Appurtenant Benefits and Burdens on Subdivision of the Property

5.8 Succession to Benefits and Burdens in Gross

5.9 Division of Benefits in Gross

Chapter 6. Common-Interest Immunities

6.1 Application of Chapter

6.2 Common-Interest-Community Definitions

6.3 Power to Create a Common-Interest-Community

6.4 Powers of a Common-Interest Community: In General

6.5 Power to Raise Funds: Assessments, Fees, and Borrowing

6.6 Power to Manage, Acquire, and Improve Common Property

6.7 Power to Adopt Rules Governing Use of Property

6.8 Enforcement Powers

6.9 Design-Control Powers

6.10 Power to Amend the Declaration

6.11 Association's Standing to Sue and Defend

6.12 Judicial Power to Excuse Compliance with Requirements of the Governing Documents

6.13 Duties of a Common-Interest Community to Its Members

6.14 Duties of Directors and Officers of an Association

6.15 Liability of Members for Association Torts

6.16 Representative Government

6.17 Voting Rights

6.18 Meetings and Elections

6.19 Developer's Duty to Create an Association and Turn Over Control

6.20 Developer's Duties to the Community

6.21 Developer's Power to Waive Provisions of the Declaration

Chapter 7. Modifications and Termination of Servitudes

7.1 Modifications, Extinguishment, and Termination of Servitudes: General Rule

7.2 Termination on Expiration of Servitude

7.3 Modification or Extinguishment by Release

7.4 Modification or Extinguishment by Abandonment

7.5 Termination by Merger

7.6 Modification or Extinguishment by Estoppel

7.7 Modification or Extinguishment by Prescription

7.8 Modification or Extinguishment by Condemnation

7.9 Termination by Foreclosure Sale or Bankruptcy

7.10 Modification and Termination of a Servitude Because of Changed Conditions

7.11 Modification and Termination of a Conservation Servitude Because of Changed Conditions

7.12 Modification and Termination of Certain Affirmative Covenants

7.13 Modification and Termination of a Servitude Held in Gross

7.14 Extinguishment of Servitude Benefits Under Recording Act

7.15 Application of Recording Act to Modification or Termination of a Servitude

7.16 Servitudes Not Terminable Under Marketable-Title Acts

Chapter 8. Enforcement of Servitudes

8.1 Right to Enforce a Servitude

8.2 Absence of Privity Does Not Determine Availability of Remedy

8.3 Availability and Selection of Remedies for Enforcement of a Servitude

8.4 Remedy for Condition Broken by Violation of General-Plan Restrictions

8.5 Enforcement of a Conservation Servitude Held By a Governmental Body or a Conservation Organization

§ 8.04(e) The Third Restatement of Property--Wills and Other Donative Transfers (Division I Only) [Go To Main]

The contents of the Restatement (Third) of Property for wills and other donative transfers are revealed in the following summary outline. n27.3

Division 1

Probate Transfers

(Wills and Intestacy)

Chapter 1. Definitions and Basic Principles

1.1 Probate Estate

1.2 Requirement of Surviving the Decedent

1.3 Noncitizens

Chapter 2. Intestacy

2.1 General Principles and Definitions

2.2 Intestate Share of Surviving Spouse

2.3 Intestate Share of Surviving Descendants

2.4 Intestate Share of Surviving Ancestors and Collateral Relatives

2.5 Parent and Child Relationship

2.6 Advancements

2.7 Negative Wills

Chapter 3. Execution of Wills

Part A. Execution Formalities

3.1 Attested Wills

3.2 Holographic Wills

3.3 Excusing Harmless Errors

3.4 Republication of Codicil

3.5 Integration of Multiple Pages or Writings Into a Single Will

3.6 Incorporation by Reference

3.7 Independent Significance

3.8 Pour-Over Devises

3.9 Testamentary Disposition by Unattested Writing

Chapter 4. Revocation of Wills

4.1 Revocation of Wills

4.2 Revival of Revoked Wills

4.3 Ineffective Revocation (Dependent Relative Revocation)

Chapter 5. Post-Execution Events Affecting Wills

5.1 Classification of Devises

5.2 Failure ("Ademption") of Specific Devises by Extinction

5.3 Effect of Stock Splits, Stock Dividends, and Other Distributions on Devises of a Specified Number of Securities

5.4 Ademption By Satisfaction

5.5 Antilapse Statutes

At the end of the section add new note 27.3: n27.3

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 27.1. See Nelson, Grant S. and Dale A. Whitman, "Adopting Restatement Mortgage Subrogation Principles: Savings Billions of Dollars for Refinancing Homeowners," 2006 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 305.

(n2)Footnote 27.2. Schwartz, Frederic S., "The New Restatement of Property and Class Gifts: Losing Sight of the Testator's Intention," 22 Quinnipiac Prob. L.J. 221 (2009); Sheppard, Charles B., "Land Use Covenants: A Summary of Aspects of California Law Regarding Land Use Covenants With Comparisons to the Restatement (Third) of Property," 37 W. St. U. L. Rev. 27 (Fall 2009)

Golten, Ryan, "Lobato v. Taylor: How the Villages of the Rio Culebra, the Colorado Supreme Court, and the Restatement of Servitudes Bailed Out the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo," 45 Nat. Resources J. 457 (Spring, 2005); Wood, Joshua, "Powell v. Washburn: The the Restatement (Third of Property: Servitudes and Beyond," 49 Ariz. L. Rev. 193 (Spring 2007); see American Bar Association, Keeping Current Property, 16 Prob. & Prop. 12,14 (2002) (quoting MacMeekin v. Low Income Hous. List., 45 P.3d 570 (Wash. App. 2002) (rejecting the Restatement minority rule that forced relocation is permissible in favor of the traditional majority rule that requires consent of the dominant owner)); see also Alfred L. Brophy, Contemplating When Equitable Servitudes Run with the Land, 46 St. Louis U. L.J. 691 (2002) (advocating the Restatement approach to servitudes); see also Gurdon H. Buck, Book Review-Restatement of the Law Third-Restatement of the Law Property-Servitudes. American Law Institute (2000), 75 Conn. BJ. 160 (2001); see also Susan F. French, Highlights of the New Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes, 35 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 225 (2000); Susan A. French, Can Covenants Not to Sue, Covenants Against Competition and Spite Covenants Run with the Land? Comparing Results Under the Touch and Concern Doctrine and the Restatement Third, Property (Servitudes), 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 267 (Summer, 2003); Joseph W. Morris, The Worthier Title Doctrine: Does Draft Restatement III of Property Write a Premature Obituary? 45 Washburn L.J. 387 (Winter 2006). John V. Orth, Relocating Easements; A Response to Professor French, 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 643 (Winter, 2004). Note, "Touch and Concern, The Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes, and a Proposal," 122 Harv. L. Rev. 938 (January, 2009).

(n3)Footnote 27.3. See John A. Lovett, "A Bend in the Road: Easement Relocation and Pliability in the New Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes," 38 Conn. L. Rev. 1 (Fall, 2005). David M. English, The Uniform Trust Code (2000): Significant Provisions and Policy Issues, 67 Mo. L. Rev. 143 (2002) (comparing the Uniform Trust Code to the common law and to the Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers). Ira Mark Bloom, Powers of Appointment Under the Restatement (Third) of Property, 33 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 755 (2007); Lawrence W. Waggoner, Class Gifts Under the Restatement (Third) of Property, 33 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 993 (2007). Note, "Touch and Concern, The Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes, and a Proposal," 122 Harv. L. Rev. 938 (January, 2009).

(n4)Footnote 27.3. See American Bar Association, Keeping Current Property, 16 pros. & prop. 12,14 (2002) (quoting MacMeekin v. Low Income Hous. List., 45 P.3d 570 (Wash. App. 2002) (rejecting the Restatement minority rule that forced relocation is permissible in favor of the traditional majority rule that requires consent of the dominant owner)); see also Alfred L. Brophy, Contemplating When Equitable Servitudes Run with the Land, 46 St. Louis U. L.J. 691 (2002) (advocating the Restatement approach to servitudes); see also Gurdon H. Buck, Book Review-Restatement of the Law Third-Restatement of the Law Property-Servitudes. American Law Institute (2000), 75 Conn. BJ. 160 (2001); see also Susan F. French, Highlights of the New Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes, 35 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 225 (2000); Susan A. French, Can Covenants Not to Sue, Covenants Against Competition and Spite Covenants Run with the Land? Comparing Results Under the Touch and Concern Doctrine and the Restatement Third, Property (Servitudes), 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 267 (Summer, 2003); John V. Orth, Relocating Easements; A Response to Professor French, 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 643 (Winter, 2004).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.05

Supp. to § 8.05 How the Property Restatements Have Been Received

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

At the end of the subsection add new note 27.4: n27.4

[Change all 8.07 references to 8.06]

Change § 8.06 to § 8.05(c).

Change the text of the subsection to read as follows:

Because the third restatement of property has been divided into several disparate topics, no writers have published general critiques of the third restatement's philosophical positions. Instead, various commentators have published their views on substantive aspects of various individual provisions in the third restatement.[91.1]

FOOTNOTES:

(n5)Footnote 27.4. See David A. Thomas, "Restatements Relating to Property: Why Lawyers Don't Really Care," 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 655 (Winter, 2004).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 8 THE RISE AND ROLE OF THE RESTATEMENTS OF PROPERTY AND THE RESTATEMENTS OF TRUSTS

2-8 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 8.06

Supp. to § 8.06 The Restatements of Trusts.

Add to Table of Contents:
[Go To Main]

§ 8.06(b) The Second Restatement of Trusts. [Go To Main]

Add:

American Law Institute, Restatement of the Law, Third, Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule (2001).

§ 8.06(c) The Third Restatement of Trusts. [Go To Main]

At the end of the text, add:

See Donald P. DiCarlo, The Section 4944 Tax on Jeopardizing Investments: "Double Jeopardy" for Foundation Managers?: Prudent Investor vs. Prudent Man: What's a Foundation Manager to Do?, 16 Prac. Tax Law. 33 (discussing the prudent man rule of the Restatement (Second) of Trusts and the prudent investor rule of the Restatement (Third) of Trusts); see also Ronald Chester and Sarah Reid Ziomek, Removal of Corporate Trustees Under the Uniform Trust Code and Other Current Law: Does a Contractual Lense Help Clarify the Rights of Beneficiaries?, 67 Mo. L. rev. 241 (2002); see also Bruce S. Ross, Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries: Steering the Fiduciary Past the Shoals of Surcharge: Advice to Trustees and Their Advisors, SH002 ALI-ABA 149 (2002).

"Practical Application of the Prudent Investor Standard (Prudent Investor Rule)," 56 Institute on Federal Taxation 71 (1998); Martin D. Begleiter, "Does the Prudent Investor Rule Need the Uniform Prudent Investor Act--An Empirical Study of Trust Investment Practices," 51 Maine Law Review 27-85 (Apr. 1999); Dominic J. Campisi, "Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries: Damages for Breach of Trust," SG012 ALI-ABA 291 (2001); Jerold I. Horn, "Prudent Investor Rule, Modern Portfolio Theory, and Private Trusts: Drafting and Administration, Including the 'Give-Me-Five' Unitrust," 33 Real Property, Probate and Trust J. 1-62 (Spring 1998).

David H. Kirk, Note: To Be Or Not to Be: A Trust's Investment Expense Deduction Subject to the Two Percent Limitation Under I.R.C. Section 67 , 1 Pitt. Tax Rev. 223 (Spring, 2004) (discussing the prudent investor standard of the Restatement [Third] of Trusts).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 9.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.syn Synopsis to Chapter 9: UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

§ 9.01 Introduction.

§ 9.02 Organization of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

§ 9.02(a) Why the National Conference Was Organized.

§ 9.02(b) How the National Conference Has Conducted Its Work.

§ 9.02(b)(1) The Founding of the National Conference.

§ 9.02(b)(2) Early Criticism of the National Conference's Work.

§ 9.02(b)(3) Production and Publication of Uniform and Model Acts.

§ 9.03 Overview of the Property-Related Uniform Laws and Their Adoptions.

§ 9.03(a) Uniform Acts.

§ 9.03(a)(1) Uniform Absence as Evidence of Death and Absentees' Property Act .

§ 9.03(a)(2) Uniform Act on Intestacy, Wills, and Donative Transfers .

§ 9.03(a)(3) Uniform Ancillary Administration of Estates Act .

§ 9.03(a)(4) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act .

§ 9.03(a)(5) Uniform Condominium Act .

§ 9.03(a)(6) Uniform Conservation Easement Act .

§ 9.03(a)(7) Uniform Construction Lien Act .

§ 9.03(a)(8) Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act .

§ 9.03(a)(9) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act .

§ 9.03(a)(10) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers Under Non-testamentary Instruments Act .

§ 9.03(a)(11) Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act .

§ 9.03(a)(12) Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act .

§ 9.03(a)(13) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act .

§ 9.03(a)(14) Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act .

§ 9.03(a)(15) Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act .

§ 9.03(a)(16) Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act .

§ 9.03(a)(17) Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act.

§ 9.03(a)(18) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act.

§ 9.03(a)(19) Uniform Gifts to Minors Act.

§ 9.03(a)(20) Uniform Land Security Interest Act.

§ 9.03(a)(21) Uniform Land Transactions Act .

§ 9.03(a)(22) Uniform Law on Notarial Acts .

§ 9.03(a)(23) Uniform Marital Property Act .

§ 9.03(a)(24) Uniform Marketable Title Act .

§ 9.03(a)(25) Uniform Non-probate Transfers on Death Act .

§ 9.03(a)(26) Uniform Planned Community Act .

§ 9.03(a)(27) Uniform Premarital Agreement Act .

§ 9.03(a)(28) Uniform Probate Code .

§ 9.03(a)(29) Uniform Probate of Foreign Wills Act .

§ 9.03(a)(30) Uniform Recognition of Acknowledgements Act .

§ 9.03(a)(31) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act .

§ 9.03(a)(32) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act .

§ 9.03(a)(33) Uniform Simultaneous Death Act .

§ 9.03(a)(34) Uniform Statutory Form Power of Attorney Act .

§ 9.03(a)(35) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities .

§ 9.03(a)(36) Uniform Statutory Will Act .

§ 9.03(a)(37) Uniform Succession Without Administration Act .

§ 9.03(a)(38) Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act .

§ 9.03(a)(39) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act .

§ 9.03(a)(40) Uniform Trustees' Powers Act .

§ 9.03(a)(41) Uniform Trusts Act .

§ 9.03(a)(42) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act .

§ 9.03(b) Model Acts and Codes.

§ 9.03(b)(1) Model Eminent Domain Code .

§ 9.03(b)(2) Model Land Sales Practices Act .

§ 9.03(b)(3) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act .

§ 9.03(b)(4) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act .

§ 9.03(b)(5) Model Surface Use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act .

§ 9.04 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Uniform Laws.

§ 9.04(a) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act .

§ 9.04(b) Uniform Condominium Act .

§ 9.04(c) Uniform Conservation Easement Act .

§ 9.04(d) Uniform Construction Lien Act .

§ 9.04(e) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act .

§ 9.04(f) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act .

§ 9.04(g) Uniform Land Security Interest Act .

§ 9.04(h) Uniform Land Transactions Act .

§ 9.04(i) Uniform Marketable Title Act .

§ 9.04(j) Uniform Planned Community Act .

§ 9.04(k) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act .

§ 9.04(l) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act .

§ 9.04(m) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities .

§ 9.04(n) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act .

§ 9.04(o) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act .

§ 9.05 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Model Laws.

§ 9.05(a) Model Eminent Domain Code .

§ 9.05(b) Model Land Sales Practices Act .

§ 9.05(c) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act .

§ 9.05(d) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act .

§ 9.05(e) Model Surface Use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act .

§ 9.06 Evaluative Comment on Uniform and Model Laws.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.01 Introduction.

In this chapter is found a brief description of the movement to unify certain laws that exist in disparate forms throughout the fifty states. The rise and work of the most prominent proponent of that movement, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, is related in some detail, followed by summaries of the Conference's proposed laws that relate to property. With these summaries is additional information on how broadly this work has been received among the states and a comment on the overall value of the work for development of American property law. The chapter concludes with additional summaries of other uniform and model laws related to property that have been promulgated from sources other than the National Conference on Uniform State Laws.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.02 Organization of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

[Go To Supp]

§ 9.02(a) Why the National Conference Was Organized.

The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws conducted its first meeting on August 24, 1892, just before the annual meeting of the American Bar Association in Saratoga Springs, New York. This three-day meeting was the outgrowth of the desire of some to attain uniformity of state law, a desire that had been germinating ever since the birth of the nation. In 1786, while the country was still laboring under the Articles of Confederation, a convention of state delegates was called at Annapolis, Maryland, to investigate creation of uniform commercial laws among the states, that is, to achieve a uniform regulation of trade. At that meeting, a resolution was introduced that resulted in the constitutional convention of the following year.

The resulting national constitution and its earliest amendments made some specific matters the subjects of a unified federal law, but explicitly left all other matters within the power of the respective states or of the people: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited to it by the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." n1

That such large areas of law were left to the states, and that diverse legislation on the same matters of law could issue from the states was from the beginning seen by some as an evil to be corrected as soon as possible. For such persons the absence of a general uniformity of law that was inherent in the American federal system of government was simply a defect, and the only issue subject to debate was what method should be employed to correct the defect.

The call for uniformity was also consistent with the codification movement in the 19th century. If developing uniform laws made less complex the matter of discovering or ascertaining the law, and also tended toward selection of "better" laws, the process of codification shared the same goals. The notion that states might entertain genuine differences of opinion on which laws were "better" was generally brushed aside. As expressed by one of the early Connecticut Commissioners, Lyman D. Brewster:

> The effective argument in favor of uniform law is that it is a law for the state itself, as well as a law creating uniformity with the laws of other states. Besides, it accomplishes two things: first, it harmonizes > all conflicting laws on the subject; and second, it makes the law more intelligible to the people who desire to know it. No objection can fairly be made to this method of uniformity, because all states, as has been well said, are equally interested in securing the administration of the same general rights, the realization of the same common freedom under the law, and as such, no state can lose its individuality in the least. n2

Perhaps the most telling argument in favor of uniformity was the hope of eliminating uncertainty about the law. With the growth of the nation and of legal activity in general, the rapidly increasing numbers of lawyers, litigants and courts generated huge increases in reported court opinions, all of which became a part of the common law, at least of each state. As reported in the preceding chapter, this mass of published decisions was one important impetus for the founding of the American Law Institute and the restatement projects: if the prevailing common law could be restated (and thus made "uniform" for all the states), it would reduce the hazards of trying to discover the right rule by researching the ever-growing body of decisional law. n3

Uniformity of legislation was even one of the announced purposes for the founding of the American Bar Association, and this statement still appears in the association's constitution:

> The purposes of the Association are ... to promote throughout the nation the administration of justice and the uniformity of legislation and of judicial decisions... n4

It was in pursuit of this objective that various persons and committees within the American Bar Association worked for several years to create support for a formal organization working on uniform legislation, and this culminated in the initial conference of August, 1892, noted at the outset of this section.

§ 9.02(b) How the National Conference Has Conducted Its Work.

§ 9.02(b)(1) The Founding of the National Conference.

In 1889 the Tennessee Bar Association appointed a special committee to follow up on remarks of the association president advocating uniform laws for the states. Later that year, a Tennessee delegate presented a resolution at the annual A.B.A. meeting, requesting the A.B.A. to appoint a special committee > consisting of one from each state, who shall meet in convention at a time and place to be fixed by the President, and compare and consider the laws of the different states relating to these subjects, and prepare and report to this association such recommendations and measures as will bring about the desired result. n5

The "desired result," according to the resolution, was "uniformity in the laws of the several states, especially those relating to marriage and divorce, descent and distribution of property, acknowledgement of deeds, execution and probate of wills...." n6

The Special Committee on Uniformity of State Legislation thereupon created by the A.B.A. was not able to accomplish much in its first year, but did note that the New York legislature had created a commission to effect uniformity among states in certain legislation. The New York act suggested inviting delegates from other states to a convention to draft uniform legislation. The A.B.A. Special Committee then reported to the Association its recommendation that the Association Secretary invite all other states to enact similar legislation and thus participate in the uniformity project. The appropriate resolutions accompanying this report were adopted at the 1890 A.B.A. Annual Meeting and by the end of 1891, 5 other states had enacted legislation similar to New York's, creating commissions to work toward uniform laws.

An A.B.A. Committee on Uniform Laws was then created, and this committee corresponded with its members and others to determine what progress was being made toward uniformity and what would be the best methods for further progress. The correspondence yielded a consensus on several points dear to the advocates of uniformity:

> 1. That variant and conflicting laws produce in all states the special evils or inconveniences of perplexity, uncertainty, and confusion, with consequent waste, a tendency to hinder freedom of trade and to occasion unnecessary insecurity of contracts, resulting in needless litigation and miscarriage of justice.
>
> 2. That greater uniformity is desirable and most urgently and immediately needed in matters affecting directly the business common to and coextensive with the whole country, such as the enforcement of contracts, the collection of debts, the transmission of property, the nature, validity, negotiability, and construction of commercial paper, and the formalities of all legal instruments and the proofs of their authenticity.
>
> 3. That sudden, radical, and fundamental changes in the laws of divorce, descent, and distribution, however desirable, would meet with the greatest difficulty, and in most States changes would be more likely to be adopted, if at all, after the general advantages of uniformity in commercial matters had been demonstrated by experience.
>
> 4. That the desired uniformity could be secured best by concurrent legislative action in the various states. n7

These points were contained in the Special Committee's report, which also responded to some objections to uniformity that were beginning to surface. To the objection that uniformity might destroy the autonomy or individuality of the states, tending toward national centralization at the expense of local self-government, the committee report responded that state uniformity effectively checked the tendency of the national government to pre-empt more areas of legislation:

> [A] state which unites with other states in framing such general and uniform laws in matters affecting the common interests of all the states, and in the spirit of mutual compromise, through mutual Commissions and investigations, yields, in so doing, nothing whatever of its state sovereignty. On the contrary, the proposed method of voluntary state action takes from the general government any excuse for absorbing powers now confined to the states, and therefore directly tends to preserve intact the independence of the states. n8

It was also suggested that uniformity by voluntary state action would not be as effective as that accomplished by national legislation; several advocates of uniformity actually favored the national approach:

> It is clear indeed that in these formative days the Conference and the American Bar Association saw no serious danger in uniformity gained through federal action, but rather felt that if federal jurisdiction extended into fields where the Conference thought uniformity desirable that federal legislation was the preferable means of achieving their goal. n9

This second objection was not really an objection to uniformity, and it no doubt reinforced the first objection that uniformity would come at the cost of state independence.

The meeting on August 24, 1892, at which the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws was founded, was attended by representatives of seven states n10 that had already undertaken some action toward uniform legislation. Even without the formal structure of constitution, bylaws, or rules of procedure, the conference adopted and recommended to the states three "uniform" acts, the Acknowledgements Act, the Act Validating Wills Lawfully Executed Without the State, and the Act Recognizing as Valid Wills Probated in Another State. The conference also recommended legislative adoption of individual provisions relating to commercial transactions, written instruments, marriage and divorce.

The conference met once again in 1892, and again in 1893 and 1894, and annually thereafter, except in 1945. In addition to appointing internal administrative committees and an organizational structure, the conference appointed committees for the substantive areas of wills, marriage and divorce, commercial law, descent and distribution, deeds and other conveyances, certificates of depositions and forms of notarial certificates, state action in appointing presidential electors, and weights and measures.

A formal constitution and bylaws were adopted in 1905, when the conference became the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, and in 1906 the organization adopted the Uniform Sales Act, the first adoption by a roll call of the states represented by commissioners. By 1912, every state was represented by commissioners at the conference meetings.

§ 9.02(b)(2) Early Criticism of the National Conference's Work.

Advocates of uniformity began to recognize that not only was individuality in state governments working against uniformity, but diversity among the courts was also impeding their efforts. This was noted by the Conference president as early as 1914, as he remarked in his annual address:

> Taking the country as a whole, there has been as pronounced a tendency to divergence in the decisions of the courts as there has been in the enactment of statutes in the respective states. This has not been a conscious tendency on the part of the courts, but it has been none the less alarming. It has been a menace to the accomplishment of our purpose, of such grave proportions, as to convince us that the attainment of our end would be jeopardized, unless some means could be found to mitigate or check the tendency. n11

In 1914 the first significant criticism of the desirability for uniformity was issued in a law review article written by John Bassett Moore of Columbia, an authority on international law. The writer first noted some of the accomplishments of and difficulties facing the Conference:

> In the United States the law is at present in a singularly shifting state. Proposals are constantly put forward for material and even radical change, not only in constitutional law but also in criminal law and in various branches of civil law, such as contracts and torts. The difficulties in dealing with such a situation are illustrated by the experience of the Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, whose members are appointed by the governors of the various States and Territories, under local law, for the purpose of conferring upon and recommending uniform laws in matters in which uniformity seems to be practicable and desirable. The moderation as well as the earnestness of this body is much to be commended, and the general interest in its work is shown by the circumstance that forty-eight States, two Territories, the District of Columbia and our insular possessions are represented in it. In the twenty-three years of its existence it has formulated ten drafts of statutes. The first of these, The Negotiable Instruments Act, has been adopted in forty-six States, Territories and possessions; the second, the Warehouse Receipts Act, in thirty. In no other instance has the number of adoptants exceeded eleven. The Divorce Act has, it may be observed, been adopted in only three States. It is true that some of the later recommendations have not been long before the public, so that their fate is not yet finally determined. But it is evident that, even where the need of uniformity is generally acknowledged, the task of formulating and securing the adoption of a uniform law is always attended with great uncertainty. n12

Critical of forcibly imposed uniformity at either the international or national level this writer noted that "Differences in social and political institutions spring from differences in disposition and in views of life," n13 and these will not disappear:

> In reality, if there existed all over the world one form of government, the habits, customs, laws, and even the institutions, of different peoples would continue to be different... n14

> We observe similar differences in social institutions and laws, proceeding from similar causes. In the United States we have witnessed more and more the development of a tendency to legislate on subjects which were formerly considered to lie within the sphere of individual action. Of this tendency an example is to be found in the spread of prohibitory laws; that is to say, laws prohibiting the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquors...
>
> But in considering the passion for uniformity, we must note a capital distinction. Like other natural forces, if wrongly directed or excessively indulged, it operates destructively; but if wisely directed and properly regulated, it may operate beneficially. Even before the Thirty Years' War, philosophers began to dream and to write of a uniform law for the regulation of international relations. More and more impressed with the demonstrated fatuity of the attempt to create uniformity by force, they conceived the necessity of recognizing the right to be different, and in order to make such recognition effective, adopted, as the very basis of the new system, the principle that independent nations have in the eye of the law equal rights. n15

This rather mild criticism of overzeal for uniformity was met with a sharp retort by the then Conference president, who labeled Moore's thesis "fatal error."

In 1925 another critical voice gave a strident rebuke against uniformity:

> Each and every piece of uniformity jockeyed through the dull legislatures of the several States is, in the final analysis an attack upon decentralized government and to that extent a theft from the States. The greater the uniformity, the greater will be the demand for more uniformity, until eventually the States will be but townships of the American Empire, and the people will be led and cajoled and driven like soldiers. It may be argued, perhaps, that this tendency should not be curbed, for the eradication of individualism and local government will be best for the rank and file, but it is submitted that this argument should not prevail unless and until the American experiment in government has definitely proven to be a failure. Mr. Madison's ideas of the rights of the States are still worth fighting for; it is not yet futile to contend against federal larceny by constitutional amendment, and it is still worth while to give battle against the half-brother of the federal larceny, the pressure for uniformity. n16

The Conference president's response asserted that uniform state laws could still have enough elasticity to meet local situations and that such uniform laws were the best defense against progressive nationalization and unification of American law.

§ 9.02(b)(3) Production and Publication of Uniform and Model Acts.

In 1915 the Conference constitution and bylaws were completely revised and the requirement introduced that each section of an act should be considered by the entire Conference during at least two annual meetings. As the years passed, certain adopted acts were re-labeled or revised, and others were withdrawn or declared obsolete. By 1919 this process had left 26 acts currently recommended for passage by state legislatures.

In 1922 the first publication of uniform laws occurred with issuance of the 10 volume Uniform Laws Annotated by the predecessor of West Publishing Company. Another published version appeared in 1931, when the annual Martindale-Hubbell lawyers' directory began to include the full text of current uniform and model acts. n17

In 1935, the Conference worked together with the American Law Institute jointly to draft acts in areas of common interest. The first two of these appeared in 1937, the Uniform Aeronautical Code and the Uniform Estates Act. Shortly thereafter, in 1939, the Conference and the American Bar Association came to an understanding that acts adopted by the Conference would be submitted to the A.B.A. Board of Governors and House of Delegates for A.B.A. approval.

Meanwhile, in 1936 the Conference agreed to begin drafting model acts as well as uniform acts. n18 While some acts were drafted directly as model acts, others were redesignated from uniform to model acts; in either case, model acts emerged according to the following criteria announced by the Conference:

> The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in the promulgation of its Uniform Acts urges, with the endorsement of the American Bar Association, their enactment in each jurisdiction. Where there is a demand for an Act covering the subject matter in a substantial number of the States, but where in the judgment of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws it is not a subject upon which uniformity between the States is necessary or desirable, but where it would be helpful to have legislation which would tend toward uniformity where enacted, Acts on such subjects are promulgated as Model Acts.

The Conference's work continued through the years of World War II, particularly with the Uniform Commercial Code, and by 1945 a series of tests for the appropriateness of subjects for uniform acts had been adopted:

> (a) Is the subject matter proposed an appropriate one, in view of the powers granted by the Constitution to the Congress, for state legislation? If it properly falls within the jurisdiction of the Congress, it is not ordinarily an appropriate one for uniform legislation by the several states.
>
> (b) Is it a matter primarily of local or state concern and without substantial interstate implication? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the subject is not an appropriate one for uniform legislation.
>
> (c) The appropriateness of a proposed subject for state legislation having been determined, is it one which through its uniform enactment into legislation by the several states would promote the interests (economic, social and political) of the people of each the states that enact the legislation? Subjects of this sort are proper ones for uniform legislation. n19

Also adopted was a two-part test for the appropriateness of subjects for model acts:

> [A model act should be an act which either]
>
> (a) provides, on a matter of interstate interest, a comprehensive well-worked-out model whose provisions can be lifted in whole or in part by a state, or
>
> (b) provides uniformity of underlying principle on a point of importance; but in the absence of interstate implications acts of this sort are definitely discouraged; or
>
> (c) provides a model for handling an emergent need to keep emergent legislation sane and harmonious. n20

Assessments of the Conference's work even a generation ago acknowledged that circumstances had changed. More areas of potential state legislation had been swept into the maw of federal legislative power. Perhaps the value of diversity among the states had stronger recognition; perhaps the hazards of prescribing for all what the law ought to be were better perceived, especially in the frequent failures of Conference products to obtain widespread adoptions. As noted by the Conference executive director in 1965:

> Theoreticians sometimes deduce from an analysis of legal theories that the solution of a particular problem "ought" to be such and such, and urge that law should be changed in order to conform with this theoretical "oughtness." Since theory has produced "the" solution, all states ought to adopt it and therefore have uniform law. Thus, argument in favor of uniformity is sometimes more pronounced in > organizations where the delegates are frequently academicians from a system where theory tends to dominate the work of the academic community. In the United States, where the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws have been drawn from the judiciary, the practicing bar, and from the academic community, this justification for uniformity has not been heavily emphasized. n21

This same author recommended a more limited role for the Conference in the future:

> Now that Congress has legislative power in almost all of the areas where uniformity of state law was originally conceived of as "necessary," and now that there are numerous organizations -- bar associations, special purpose public interest groups, special purpose self-interest groups, and other law reform agencies, both public and private -- busily drafting legislation to improve the law, the role of the National Conference has substantially changed. That the organization is not dead can be seen from the success it has had with the Uniform Commercial Code, its most ambitious project in its entire history... The history of the Code would suggest that comprehensiveness may be an important criterion for future activity of the Conference. "Necessity" alone no longer appears sufficient, for if uniformity on a particular problem is substantially necessary, the modern tendency of seeking federal legislation reduces the strength of the National Conference -- at least if it does not commence the drafting process until after the demand or the necessity arises. It would appear that if it will not only exercise foresight in the sense of discovering particular areas likely to call for legislative solution, but will then proceed to draft a comprehensive law covering the whole subject matter including the area where there seems to be a demand for uniformity, the Conference still has a substantial role to perform. n22

In the present published version of the uniform laws, Uniform Laws Annotated, the National Conference is described as having been organized "to promote uniformity in state law, on all subjects where uniformity is desirable and practicable, by voluntary action of each state." n23

The current organization and procedures of the National Conference are described as follows:

> [The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws] is composed of Commissioners from each state, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. The number, terms of appointment, and appointment process vary from state to state. In most cases, an average of four Commissioners are appointed by the governor or by the legislature, under express legislative authority, for three-year periods. The membership is composed of lawyers, judges, legislators, and law school professors. All Commissioners are members of the bar. They are united in a permanent, state supported organization, under a constitution and bylaws, and meet annually immediately preceding the American Bar Association annual meeting. The record of the organization's activities, reports, and approved Acts are printed in the Annual Proceedings.
>
> The National Conference works through Standing and Special Committees. Proposals for Uniform Acts, received from many sources, are referred to the Standing Committee on Scope and Program which makes an investigation, and reports to the Executive Committee on whether the subject is appropriate for attention by the Conference, in keeping with specific criteria. If the Conference decides to accept a subject, a Special Committee of Commissioners is appointed to prepare a series of drafts of an Act. Tentative drafts are discussed and considered, section by section, by the entire Conference at no fewer than two Annual Meetings before the Conference may decide, by a vote of the states, whether to promulgate the draft as a Uniform Act. Each Act is, thus, subjected to the criticism, correction and recommendation of the Commissioners who represent the experience and judgment of a select body of lawyers chosen from every part of the United States.

In the current published version of the uniform acts, Uniform Laws Annotated, the text of an act is preceded by a Prefatory Note prepared by the Commissioners, and followed by notes and comments for each section. In addition, pocket parts for each volume contain citations to reported court decisions citing or interpreting adopted versions of uniform acts. How each act has been received by the states is shown by tables and by general statutory notes detailing changes introduced by states which have adopted the acts. Other reference information and indexes are also included.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. U.S. Const. Amend. X.

(n2)Footnote 2. As quoted in Walter P. Armstrong, Jr., A Centennial History of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws 13 (1991).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Chapter 8, supra.

(n4)Footnote 4. American Bar Association Constitution art. 1, § 1.2.

(n5)Footnote 5. As quoted in Walter P. Armstrong, Jr., A Centennial History of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws 18 (1991).

(n6)Footnote 6. Id.

(n7)Footnote 7. Id. at 20-21.

(n8)Footnote 8. Id. at 21.

(n9)Footnote 9. Id. at 22.

(n10)Footnote 10. The seven states represented were Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania.

(n11)Footnote 11. As quoted in Walter P. Armstrong, Jr., A Centennial History of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws 50 (1991).

(n12)Footnote 12. John Bassett Moore, "The Passion for Uniformity," 62 U. Pa. L. Rev. 525, 542-543 (1914).

(n13)Footnote 13. Id. at 529.

(n14)Footnote 14. Id. at 530.

(n15)Footnote 15. Id. at 529-531.

(n16)Footnote 16. John Hemphill, "The Uniform Laws Craze," 5 The American Mercury 59 (1925).

(n17)Footnote 17. According to the introductory explanation in current editions of the Martindale-Hubbell directory, "The Acts listed constitute those which fall within the scope of the Martindale-Hubbell Law Digests and are reprinted therein." Also the acts include some items earlier adopted and later withdrawn, because some of those are still in force in some states.

(n18)Footnote 18. Conference Handbook 118 (1936).

(n19)Footnote 19. Id. at 67.

(n20)Footnote 20. Id. at 67-68.

(n21)Footnote 21. Allison Dunham, "A History of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws," 30 Law & Contemp. Probs. 233, 236 (1965). This article is not a history of the Conference, but a discussion of the problems of uniformity among the states and at the international level.

(n22)Footnote 22. Id. at 247-248.

(n23)Footnote 23. See "Explanation," printed at the beginning of each volume of Uniform Laws Annotated.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.03 Overview of the Property-Related Uniform Laws and Their Adoptions.

[Go To Supp]

In this section appears a list of each uniform and model act relating to real property, with indication of the year of adoption, adopting action among the states, and to what extent the act incorporated other or prior uniform acts and model acts and codes.

§ 9.03(a) Uniform Acts.

§ 9.03(a)(1) Uniform Absence as Evidence of Death and Absentees' Property Act. n24

Approved in 1939. Adopted in 2 states: Tennessee (1941), Wisconsin (1941).

§ 9.03(a)(2) Uniform Act on Intestacy, Wills, and Donative Transfers. n25

Approved in 1991. Provisions of this act were previously incorporated into the 1990 revision of the Uniform Probate Code. Adopted in 3 states: New Mexico (1993), North Dakota (1993, eff. 1995), West Virginia (1992).

§ 9.03(a)(3) Uniform Ancillary Administration of Estates Act. n26

Approved in 1949. This act is a companion to the Uniform Powers of Foreign Representatives Act.Adopted in 1 state: Wisconsin (1951).

§ 9.03(a)(4) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act. n27

Approved in 1982. Consolidates provisions of the Uniform Condominium Act, the Uniform Planned Communities Act, and the Model Real Estate Cooperative Act. Adopted in 4 states: Alaska (1984), Connecticut (1983), Nevada (1991), West Virginia (1986).

§ 9.03(a)(5) Uniform Condominium Act. n28

Approved in 1977, amended in 1980. Adopted in 10 states: Alabama (1990), Arizona (1985), Maine (1981), Minnesota (1980), Missouri (1983), New Mexico (1982), Pennsylvania (1980), Rhode Island (1982), Virginia (1974), Washington (1989).

§ 9.03(a)(6) Uniform Conservation Easement Act. n29

Approved in 1981. Adopted in 17 jurisdictions: Alaska (1989), Arizona (1985), District of Columbia (1986), Georgia (1992), Idaho (1988), Indiana (1984), Kansas (1992), Kentucky (1988), Maine (1985), Minnesota (1985), Mississippi (1986), Nevada (1983), New Mexico (1991), South Carolina (1991), Texas (1983), Virginia (1988), Wisconsin (1981).

§ 9.03(a)(7) Uniform Construction Lien Act. n30

Approved in 1987. Based on Art. V of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(8) Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act. n31

Approved in 1978. Incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code as revised in 1990. Adopted in 9 jurisdictions: Alabama (1981), District of Columbia (1991), Illinois (1983), Maine (1979), Maryland (1978), New Mexico (1993), North Dakota (1993), Vermont (1985), West Virginia (1982).

§ 9.03(a)(9) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act. n32

Approved in 1978. Incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code before that Code was revised in 1990. Adopted in 17 states: Alaska (1972), Arizona (1973), Colorado (1973), Delaware (1982), Florida (1974), Hawaii (1976), Idaho (1971), Illinois (1975), Kansas (1968), Kentucky (1974), Maine (1975), Minnesota (1965), Nebraska (1974), New Jersey (1979), North Carolina (1975), Oregon (1975), Utah (1975).

§ 9.03(a)(10) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers Under Non-testamentary Instruments Act. n33

Approved in 1978. Incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code. Adopted in 6 states: Delaware (1982), Kansas (1968), Kentucky (1980), Maine (1975), North Dakota (1977), Oregon (1975).

§ 9.03(a)(11) Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act. n34

Approved in 1971. Adopted in 13 states: Alaska (1984), Arkansas (1981), Colorado (1973), Connecticut (1985), Florida (1992), Hawaii (1973), Kentucky (1974), Michigan (1975), Montana (1989), New York (1981), Oregon (1973), Virginia (1982), Wyoming (1985).

§ 9.03(a)(12) Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act. n35

Approved in 1954, revised in 1966. 1954 Act n36 adopted in 3 states: Maryland (1966), Vermont (1964), West Virginia (1966). 1966 Act n37 adopted in 14 jurisdictions: Alabama (1973), Arkansas (1979), District of Columbia (1981), Illinois (1961), Indiana (1967), Iowa (1967), Kansas (1979), Minnesota (1969), Mississippi (1982), Missouri (1984), Nebraska (1969), Nevada (1979), Oregon (1957), Tennessee (1978).

§ 9.03(a)(13) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act. n38

Approved in 1986. Adopted in 1 state: Connecticut (1987).

§ 9.03(a)(14) Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act. n39

Approved in 1958, revised in 1964. Incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code. 1964 Act n40 adopted in 9 states:

Hawaii (1972), Idaho (1971), Maryland (1965), New Mexico (1993), North Dakota (1973), Oregon (1969), Rhode Island (1971), Vermont (1975), Washington (1986). 1958 Act n41 adopted in 5 states: Alaska (1972), Michigan (1963), Montana (1974), New Hampshire (1959), Wyoming (1959).

§ 9.03(a)(15) Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act. n42

Approved in 1978. Succeeds the Revised Federal Tax Lien Registration Act. n43 Adopted in 35 states: Alabama (1989), Alaska (1988), Arizona (1990), Arkansas (1989), California (1979), Colorado (1988), Connecticut (1967), Florida (1992), Idaho (1979), Illinois (1989), Iowa (1989), Kansas (1988), Louisiana (1987), Maine (1989), Maryland (1980), Michigan (1983), Minnesota (1979), Mississippi (1989), Montana (1983), Nebraska (1988), Nevada (1979), New Hampshire (1988), New Mexico (1988), New York (1987), North Carolina (1990), North Dakota (1979), Oklahoma (1988), Oregon (1981), South Dakota (1988), Texas (1989), Virginia (1988), Washington (1988), West Virginia (1989), Wisconsin (1979), Wyoming (1988).

§ 9.03(a)(16) Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act. n44

Approved in 1966, revising the original 1926 act, and succeeded by the Uniform Federal Lien Registration Actin 1978. n45 Adopted in 4 states (many previous adoptions have been superseded by adoptions of the Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act): Delaware (1973), Georgia (1967), Kentucky (1948), South Carolina (1928).

§ 9.03(a)(17) Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act. n46

Approved in 1918, succeeded by the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act of 1984. Adopted in 8 states: Delaware (1919), Maryland (1920), Massachusetts (1924), Michigan (1919), New York (1925), Pennsylvania (1921), Tennessee (1919), Wyoming (1929).

§ 9.03(a)(18) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. n47

Approved in 1984, succeeding the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act of 1918. Adopted in 29 states: Alabama (1989), Arizona (1990), Arkansas (1987), California (1986), Colorado (1991), Connecticut (1991), Florida (1987), Hawaii (1985), Idaho (1987), Illinois (1989), Maine (1985), Minnesota (1987), Missouri (1992); Montana (1991), Nebraska (1989), Nevada (1987), New Hampshire (1987), New Jersey (1988), New Mexico (1989), North Dakota (1985), Ohio (1990), Oklahoma (1986), Oregon (1985), Rhode Island (1986), South Dakota (1987), Texas (1987), Utah (1988), Washington (1987), West Virginia (1986), Wisconsin (1987).

§ 9.03(a)(19) Uniform Gifts to Minors Act. n48

Approved in 1956, n49 revised in 1966. n50 Revised and restated by the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act of 1983. n51 1956 Act adopted in 1 state: Michigan (1959). 1966 Act adopted in 8 states: Connecticut (1957), Delaware (1957), Mississippi (1958), New Jersey (1963), New York (1966), South Carolina (1961), Texas (1957), Vermont (1957). These adoptions were of the 1954 Act, and were subsequently amended to conform the 1966 Act.

§ 9.03(a)(20) Uniform Land Security Interest Act. n52

Approved in 1985. The substantive provisions of the act track closely with Article 3 of the Uniform Land Transactions Actas amended in 1975. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(21) Uniform Land Transactions Act. n53

Approved in 1975, amended extensively in 1977. Follows the structure of Articles 1, 2 and 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(22) Uniform Law on Notarial Acts. n54

Approved in 1982. Replaces the Uniform Acknowledgements Act and the Uniform Recognition of Acknowledgements Act. Adopted in 8 jurisdictions: Delaware (1984), District of Columbia (1991), Iowa (1989), Kansas (1984), Minnesota (1985), Oklahoma (1985), Oregon (1983), Wisconsin (1983).

§ 9.03(a)(23) Uniform Marital Property Act. n55

Approved in 1983. Adopted in 1 state: Wisconsin (1983).

§ 9.03(a)(24) Uniform Marketable Title Act. n56

Approved in 1990. Originally appeared as part of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act in 1977. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(25) Uniform Non-probate Transfers on Death Act. n57

Approved in 1991. This act was approved in 1989 and at that time was part of the Uniform Probate Code. Adopted in 4 states: Colorado (1990), Minnesota (1992), New Mexico (1992), North Dakota (1991), Oregon (1991), Washington (1993), Wisconsin (1989), Wyoming (1993).

§ 9.03(a)(26) Uniform Planned Community Act. n58

Approved in 1980. Closely parallels the Uniform Condominium Act. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(27) Uniform Premarital Agreement Act. n59

Approved in 1983. Adopted in 18 states: Arizona (1991), Arkansas (1987), California (1985), Hawaii (1987), Illinois (1989), Iowa (1991), Kansas (1988), Maine (1987), Montana (1987), Nevada (1989), New Jersey (1988), North Carolina (1987), North Dakota (1985), Oregon (1987), Rhode Island (1987), South Dakota (1989), Texas (1987), Virginia (1985).

§ 9.03(a)(28) Uniform Probate Code. n60

Approved in 1969. The following uniform acts are incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code and may also be adopted as free-standing acts: Act on Intestacy, Wills, and Donative Transfers, Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act of 1991, Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act of 1960, Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act, Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities, International Wills Act, Succession Without Administration Act, Estate Tax Apportionment Act (1964 and 1968 versions), Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act, Durable Power of Attorney Act, Non-probate Transfers on Death Act, Multiple-Person Accounts Act, TOD [transfer-on-death] Security Registration Act. Adopted in 15 states: Alaska (1972), Arizona (1973), Colorado (1973), Florida (1974), Hawaii (1976), Idaho (1971), Maine (1979), Michigan (1978), Minnesota (1974), Montana (1974), Nebraska (1974), New Mexico (1975), North Dakota (1973), South Carolina (1986), Utah (1975).

§ 9.03(a)(29) Uniform Probate of Foreign Wills Act. n61

Approved in 1950. Adopted in 2 states: Texas (1955), Wisconsin (1951).

§ 9.03(a)(30) Uniform Recognition of Acknowledgements Act. n62

Approved in 1968. Replaced by the Uniform Law on Notarial Acts in 1982. n63 Adopted in 15 states: Alaska (1981), Arizona (1943), Colorado (1969), Connecticut (1969), Illinois (1969), Kentucky (1970), Maine (1969), Michigan (1969), Nebraska (1969), New Hampshire (1969), North Dakota (1971), Ohio (1973), South Carolina (1972), Virginia (1970), West Virginia (1971).

§ 9.03(a)(31) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n64

Approved in 1972. Adopted in 15 states: Alaska (1974), Arizona (1973), Florida (1973), Hawaii (1972), Iowa (1978), Kansas (1975), Kentucky (1974), Montana (1977), Nebraska (1974), New Mexico (1975), Oregon (1973), Rhode Island (1986), South Carolina (1986), Tennessee (1975), Virginia (1974).

§ 9.03(a)(32) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act. n65

Approved in 1976, amended in 1977. Produced as part of the project that produced the Uniform Land Transactions Act in 1975. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(33) Uniform Simultaneous Death Act. n66

Approved in 1991. Originally adopted in 1940 and amended in 1953. 1991 Act adopted in 2 states: Kansas (1992), New Mexico (1993). n67 1940 Act n68 adopted in 48 jurisdictions: Alabama (1949), Alaska (1987), Arizona (1959), Arkansas (1941), California (1945), Colorado (1967), Connecticut (1943), Delaware (1945), District of Columbia (1965), Florida (1941), Georgia (1966), Hawaii (1941), Idaho (1943), Illinois (1941), Indiana (1941), Iowa (1963), Kentucky (1942), Maine (1941), Maryland (1941), Massachusetts (1941), Michigan (1941), Minnesota (1943), Mississippi (1956), Missouri (1947), Nebraska (1947), Nevada (1949), New Hampshire (1941), New Jersey (1947), New York (1966), North Carolina (1947), North Dakota (1943), Oklahoma (1959), Oregon (1947), Pennsylvania (1972), Rhode Island (1947), South Carolina (1948), South Dakota (1941), Tennessee (1941), Texas (1955), Utah (1953), Vermont (1941), Virginia (1942), Washington (1943), West Virginia (1953), Wisconsin (1941), Wyoming (1941).

§ 9.03(a)(34) Uniform Statutory Form Power of Attorney Act. n69

Approved in 1988. Adopted in 3 states: California (1990), Colorado (1992), Wisconsin (1992).

§ 9.03(a)(35) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. n70

Approved in 1986, amended in 1990. Incorporated into the 1990 revision of the Uniform Probate Code and into the freestanding Uniform Act on Intestacy, Wills and Donative Transfers. Adopted in 20 states: California (1991), Colorado (1991), Connecticut (1989), Florida (1988), Georgia (1990), Hawaii (1992), Indiana (1991), Kansas (1992), Massachusetts (1989), Michigan (1988), Minnesota (1987), Montana (1989), Nebraska (1989), Nevada (1987), New Jersey (1991), New Mexico (1992), North Dakota (1991), Oregon (1989), South Carolina (1987), West Virginia (1992).

§ 9.03(a)(36) Uniform Statutory Will Act. n71

Approved in 1984. Adopted in 2 states: Massachusetts (1987), New Mexico (1991).

§ 9.03(a)(37) Uniform Succession Without Administration Act. n72

Approved in 1983. Drawn from the Uniform Probate Code. No adoptions.

§ 9.03(a)(38) Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act. n73

Approved in 1991. Originally approved in 1960. 1991 Act incorporated into Uniform Probate Code as revised in 1990;

1960 act incorporated into Uniform Probate Code as it existed prior to revision in 1990. 1991 Act adopted in 5 states: Hawaii (1992), New Mexico (1993), North Dakota (1993, eff. 1995), Ohio (1992), West Virginia (1992). n74 1960 Act n75 adopted in 41 jurisdictions: Alaska (1972), Arizona (1961), Arkansas (1963), California (1965), Delaware (1988), Colorado (1967), Connecticut (1961), District of Columbia (1966), Florida (1961), Georgia (1968), Idaho (1963), Illinois (1955), Indiana (1953), Iowa (1963), Kansas (1968), Kentucky (1966), Maine (1963), Maryland (1959), Massachusetts (1963), Michigan (1962), Minnesota (1963), Mississippi (1958), Montana (1959), Nebraska (1974), Nevada (1967), New Hampshire (1961), New Jersey (1962), New York (1966), North Carolina (1955), North Dakota (1961), Ohio (1961), Oklahoma (1961), Oregon (1969), Pennsylvania (1957), South Carolina (1961), South Dakota (1963), Tennessee (1961), Texas (1961), Utah (1961), Vermont (1961), Washington (1965), Wyoming (1957).

§ 9.03(a)(39) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. n76

Approved in 1983. Revises and restates Uniform Gifts to Minors Act, n77 which was originally adopted in 1956 and revised in 1966. Adopted in jurisdictions: Alabama (1986), Alaska (1990), Arizona (1988), Arkansas (1985), California (1984), Colorado (1984), District of Columbia (1986), Florida (1985), Georgia (1990), Hawaii (1985), Idaho (1984), Illinois (1985), Indiana (1989), Iowa (1986), Kansas (1985), Kentucky (1986), Louisiana (1987), Maine (1987), Maryland (1989), Massachusetts (1986), Minnesota (1985), Missouri (1985), Montana (1985), Nebraska (1992), Nevada (1985), New Hampshire (1985), New Jersey (1987), New Mexico (1989), North Carolina (1987), North Dakota (1985), Ohio (1986), Oklahoma (1986), Oregon (1985), Pennsylvania (1992), Rhode Island (1985), South Dakota (1986), Tennessee (1992), Utah (1990), Virginia (1988), Washington (1991), West Virginia (1986), Wisconsin (1987-89), Wyoming (1987).

§ 9.03(a)(40) Uniform Trustees' Powers Act. n78

Approved in 1964. Adopted in 16 states: Arizona (1984), Florida (1974), Hawaii (1985), Idaho (1965), Kansas (1968), Kentucky (1976), Maine (1979), Michigan (1978), Mississippi (1966), Nebraska (1980), New Hampshire (1969), New Mexico (1975), Oregon (1977), South Carolina (1990), Utah (1975), Wyoming (1965).

§ 9.03(a)(41) Uniform Trusts Act. n79

Approved in 1937. Adopted in 6 states: Louisiana (1964), Nevada (1941), New Mexico (1951), North Carolina (1939), Oklahoma (1941), South Dakota (1943).

§ 9.03(a)(42) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act. n80

Approved in 1935. Adopted in 12 states: California (1947), Hawaii (1941), Illinois (1963), Michigan (1941), Nevada (1977), New York (1963), North Carolina (1959), Oklahoma (1965), Oregon (1955), South Dakota (1937), Texas (1989), Wisconsin (1941).

§ 9.03(b) Model Acts and Codes.

§ 9.03(b)(1) Model Eminent Domain Code. n81

Approved in 1974. Originally approved as the Uniform Eminent Domain Code in 1974 and changed to a model act in 1984. Adopted in 1 state: Alabama (1985).

§ 9.03(b)(2) Model Land Sales Practices Act. n82

Approved in 1966, changed from a Uniform Act to a Model Act in 1969. Adopted in 10 states: Alaska (1968), Connecticut (1969), Florida (1967, to be repealed in 1995), Hawaii (1967), Idaho (1972), Kansas (1967), Minnesota (1973), Montana (1969), South Carolina (1968), Utah (1973).

§ 9.03(b)(3) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act. n83

Approved in 1981. Closely parallels the Uniform Condominium Act and the Uniform Planned Community Act. Adopted in 1 state: Virginia (1982).

§ 9.03(b)(4) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act. n84

Approved as a uniform act in 1979; re-designated as a model act in 1980. Borrowed from and drafted to be consistent with the Uniform Condominium Act. Adopted in 3 states: Massachusetts (1987), Rhode Island (1984), Wisconsin (1987-89).

§ 9.03(b)(5) Model Surface Use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act. n85

Approved in 1990. No adoptions.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 24. 8A U.L.A. 1.

(n2)Footnote 25. 8B U.L.A. 1.

(n3)Footnote 26. 8A U.L.A. 133.

(n4)Footnote 27. 7 U.L.A. 231.

(n5)Footnote 28. 7 U.L.A. 421.

(n6)Footnote 29. 12 U.L.A. Supp.

(n7)Footnote 30. 7 U.L.A. Supp.

(n8)Footnote 31. 8A U.L.A. 149.

(n9)Footnote 32. 8A U.L.A. 161.

(n10)Footnote 33. 8A U.L.A. 179.

(n11)Footnote 34. 8A U.L.A. 191.

(n12)Footnote 35. 8A U.L.A. 207, 267.

(n13)Footnote 36. 8A U.L.A. 267.

(n14)Footnote 37. 8A U.L.A. 207.

(n15)Footnote 38. 7A U.L.A. Supp.

(n16)Footnote 39. 8A U.L.A. 331, 349.

(n17)Footnote 40. 8A U.L.A. 331.

(n18)Footnote 41. 8A U.L.A. 349.

(n19)Footnote 42. 7A U.L.A. 359.

(n20)Footnote 43. 7A U.L.A. 373.

(n21)Footnote 44. 7A U.L.A. 373.

(n22)Footnote 45. 7A U.L.A. 359.

(n23)Footnote 46. 7A U.L.A. 427.

(n24)Footnote 47. 7A U.L.A. 639.

(n25)Footnote 48. 8A U.L.A. 317, 405.

(n26)Footnote 49. 8A U.L.A. 405.

(n27)Footnote 50. 8A U.L.A. 317.

(n28)Footnote 51. 8A U.L.A. Supp.

(n29)Footnote 52. 7A U.L.A. Supp.

(n30)Footnote 53. 13 U.L.A. 469.

(n31)Footnote 54. 14 U.L.A. 125.

(n32)Footnote 55. 9A U.L.A. 97.

(n33)Footnote 56. 13 U.L.A. Supp.

(n34)Footnote 57. 8B U.L.A. 191.

(n35)Footnote 58. 7B U.L.A. 1.

(n36)Footnote 59. 9B U.L.A. 369.

(n37)Footnote 60. 8 U.L.A. 1.

(n38)Footnote 61. 8B U.L.A. 239.

(n39)Footnote 62. 14 U.L.A. 233.

(n40)Footnote 63. 14 U.L.A. 125.

(n41)Footnote 64. 7B U.L.A. 427.

(n42)Footnote 65. 14 U.L.A. 249.

(n43)Footnote 66. 8B U.L.A. 253, 267.

(n44)Footnote 67. 8B U.L.A. 253.

(n45)Footnote 68. 8B U.L.A. 267.

(n46)Footnote 69. 8B U.L.A. 299.

(n47)Footnote 70. 8B U.L.A. 321.

(n48)Footnote 71. 8B U.L.A. 383.

(n49)Footnote 72. 8B U.L.A. 413.

(n50)Footnote 73. 8B U.L.A. 451, 461.

(n51)Footnote 74. 8B U.L.A. 451.

(n52)Footnote 75. 8B U.L.A. 461.

(n53)Footnote 76. 8B U.L.A. 497.

(n54)Footnote 77. 8A U.L.A. 367.

(n55)Footnote 78. 7B U.L.A. 741.

(n56)Footnote 79. 7B U.L.A. 763.

(n57)Footnote 80. 14 U.L.A. 469.

(n58)Footnote 81. 13 U.L.A. 1.

(n59)Footnote 82. 7A U.L.A. 669.

(n60)Footnote 83. 7B U.L.A. 225.

(n61)Footnote 84. 7B U.L.A. 351.

(n62)Footnote 85. 14 U.L.A. Supp.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.04 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Uniform Laws.

[Go To Supp]

§ 9.04(a) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act. n86

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Part I. Definitions and Other General Provisions.
Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Applicability.

Sec. 1-103. Definitions.

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-105. Separate Titles and Taxation.

Sec. 1-106. Applicability of Local Ordinances, Regulations, and Building Codes.

Sec. 1-107. Eminent Domain.

Sec. 1-108. Supplemental General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-109. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-110. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 1-111. Severability.

Sec. 1-112. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-113. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-114. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Sec. 1-115. Adjustment of Dollar Amounts.

Part II. Applicability.

Sec. 1-201. Applicability to New Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 1-202. Same; Exception for Small Cooperatives.

Sec. 1-203. Same; Exception for Small and Limited Expense Liability Planned Communities.

Sec. 1-204. Applicability to Pre-existing Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 1-205. Same; Exception for Small Pre-Existing Cooperatives and Planned Communities.

Sec. 1-206. Same; Amendments to Governing Instruments.

Sec. 1-207. Applicability to Non-residential Planned Communities.

Sec. 1-208. Applicability to Out-of-state Common Interest Communities.

Art. 2. Creation, Alteration, and Termination of Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 2-101. Creation of Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 2-102. Unit Boundaries.

Sec. 2-103. Construction and Validity of Declaration and Bylaws.

Sec. 2-104. Description of Units.

Sec. 2-105. Contents of Declaration.

Sec. 2-106. Leasehold Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 2-107. Allocation of Allocated Interests.

Sec. 2-108. Limited Common Elements.

Sec. 2-109. Plats and Plans.

Sec. 2-110. Exercise of Development Rights.

Sec. 2-111. Alterations of Units.

Sec. 2-112. Relocation of Boundaries between Adjoining Units.

Sec. 2-113. Subdivision of Units.

Sec. 2-114. [ALTERNATIVE A] Easement for Encroachments.
[ALTERNATIVE B] Monuments as Boundaries.

Sec. 2-115. Use for Sales Purposes.

Sec. 2-116. Easement Rights.

Sec. 2-117. Amendment of Declaration.

Sec. 2-118. Termination of Common Interest Community.

Sec. 2-119. Rights of Secured Lenders.

Sec. 2-120. Master Associations.

Sec. 2-121. Merger or Consolidation of Common Interest Communities.

Sec. 2-122. Addition of Unspecified Real Estate.

Art. 3. Management of the Common Interest Community.

Sec. 3-101. Organization of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-103. Executive Board Members and Officers.

Sec. 3-104. Transfer of Special Declarant Rights.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Declarant.

Sec. 3-106. Bylaws.

Sec. 3-107. Upkeep of Common Interest Community.

Sec. 3-108. Meetings.

Sec. 3-109. Quorums.

Sec. 3-110. Voting; Proxies.

Sec. 3-111. Tort and Contract Liability.

Sec. 3-112. Conveyance or Encumbrance of Common Elements.

Sec. 3-113. Insurance.

Sec. 3-114. Surplus Funds.

Sec. 3-115. Assessments for Common Expenses.

Sec. 3-116. Lien for Assessments.

Sec. 3-117. Other Liens.

Sec. 3-118. Association Records.

Sec. 3-119. Association as Trustee.

Art. 4. Protection of Purchasers.

Sec. 4-101. Applicability; Waiver.

Sec. 4-102. Liability for Public Offering Statement Requirements.

Sec. 4-103. Public Offering Statement; General Provisions.

Sec. 4-104. Same; Common Interest Communities Subject to Development Rights.

Sec. 4-105. Same; Time Shares.

Sec. 4-106. Same; Common Interest Communities Containing Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-107. Same; Common Interest Community Securities.

Sec. 4-108. Purchaser's Rights to Cancel.

Sec. 4-109. Resales of Units.

Sec. 4-110. Escrow of Deposits.

Sec. 4-111. Release of Liens.

Sec. 4-112. Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-113. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-114. Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-115. Exclusion or Modification of Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-116. Statute of Limitations for Warranties.

Sec. 4-117. Effect of Violations on Rights of Action; Attorney's Fees.

Sec. 4-118. Labeling of Promotional Material.

Sec. 4-119. Declarant's Obligation to Complete and Restore.

Sec. 4-120. Substantial Completion of Units.

§ 9.04(b) Uniform Condominium Act. n87

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Applicability.

Sec. 1-103. Definitions.

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-105. Separate Titles and Taxation.

Sec. 1-106. Applicability of Local Ordinances, Regulations, and Building Codes.

Sec. 1-107. Eminent Domain.

Sec. 1-108. Supplemental General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-109. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-110. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 1-111. Severability.

Sec. 1-112. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-113. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-114. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Art. 2. Creation, Alteration, and Termination of Condominiums.

Sec. 2-101. Creation of Condominium.

Sec. 2-102. Unit Boundaries.

Sec. 2-103. Construction and Validity of Declaration and Bylaws.

Sec. 2-104. Description of Units.

Sec. 2-105. Contents of Declaration.

Sec. 2-106. Leasehold Condominiums.

Sec. 2-107. Allocation of Common Element Interests, Votes, and Common Expense Liabilities.

Sec. 2-108. Limited Common Elements.

Sec. 2-109. Plats and Plans.

Sec. 2-110. Exercise of Development Rights.

Sec. 2-111. Alteration of Units.

Sec. 2-112. Relocation of Boundaries Between Adjoining Units.

Sec. 2-113. Subdivision of Units.

Sec. 2-114. [Alternative A] Easement for Encroachments.
[Alternative B] Monuments as Boundaries.

Sec. 2-115. Use for Sales Purposes.

Sec. 2-116. Easement Rights.

Sec. 2-117. Amendment of Declaration.

Sec. 2-118. Termination of Condominium.

Sec. 2-119. Rights of Secured Lenders.

Sec. 2-120. Master Associations.

Sec. 2-121. Merger or Consolidation of Condominiums.

Art. 3. Management of Condominium.

Sec. 3-101. Organization of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-103. Executive Board Members and Officers.

Sec. 3-104. Transfer of Special Declarant Rights.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Declarant.

Sec. 3-106. Bylaws.

Sec. 3-107. Upkeep of Condominium.

Sec. 3-108. Meetings.

Sec. 3-109. Quorums.

Sec. 3-110. Voting; Proxies.

Sec. 3-111. Tort and Contract Liability.

Sec. 3-112. Conveyance or Encumbrance of Common Elements.

Sec. 3-113. Insurance.

Sec. 3-114. Surplus Funds.

Sec. 3-115. Assessments for Common Expenses.

Sec. 3-116. Lien for Assessments.

Sec. 3-117. Other Liens Affecting the Condominium.

Sec. 3-118. Association Records.

Sec. 3-119. Association as Trustee.

Art. 4. Protection of Condominium Purchasers.

Sec. 4-101. Applicability; Waiver.

Sec. 4-102. Liability for Public Offering Statement Requirements.

Sec. 4-103. Public Offering Statement; General Provisions.

Sec. 4-104. Same; Condominiums Subject to Development Rights.

Sec. 4-105. Same; Time-Shares.

Sec. 4-106. Same; Condominiums Containing Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-107. Same; Condominium Securities.

Sec. 4-108. Purchaser's Right to Cancel.

Sec. 4-109. Resales of Units.

Sec. 4-110. Escrow of Deposits.

Sec. 4-111. Release of Liens.

Sec. 4-112. Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-113. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-114. Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-115. Exclusion or Modification of Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-116. Statute of Limitations for Warranties.

Sec. 4-117. Effect of Violation on Rights of Action; Attorney's Fees.

Sec. 4-118. Labeling of Promotional Material.

Sec. 4-119. Declarant's Obligation to Complete and Restore.

Sec. 4-120. Substantial Completion of Units.

Art. 5. Administration and Registration of Condominiums.

Sec. 5-101. Administrative Agency.

Sec. 5-102. Registration Required.

Sec. 5-103. Application for Registration; Approval of Uncompleted Units.

Sec. 5-104. Receipt of Application; Order of Registration.

Sec. 5-105. Cease and Desist Orders.

Sec. 5-106. Revocation of Registration.

Sec. 5-107. General Powers and Duties of Agency.

Sec. 5-108. Investigative Powers of Agency.

Sec. 5-109. Annual Report and Amendments.

Sec. 5-110. Agency Regulation of Public Offering Statement.

§ 9.04(c) Uniform Conservation Easement Act. n88

Sec. 1. Definitions.

Sec. 2. Creation, Conveyance, Acceptance and Duration.

Sec. 3. Judicial Actions.

Sec. 4. Validity.

Sec. 5. Applicability.

Sec. 6. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

§ 9.04(d) Uniform Construction Lien Act. n89

Art. 1. General Provisions and Definitions.

Sec. 101. Purposes; Rules of Construction; Scope.

Sec. 102. General Definitions.

Sec. 103. Notice; Knowledge; Giving Notice; Receipt of Notice.

Sec. 104. Presumption of Agency as to Contracting Owner.

Sec. 105. Supplementary Principles Applicable.

Sec. 106. Short Title.

Sec. 107. Severability.

Art. 2. Existence; Priority; Bonds; Waiver.

Sec. 201. Construction Lien In General; References To Sections On Amount, Priority, and Enforcement.

Sec. 202. Governmental Exemption From Construction Lien.

Sec. 203. Real Estate Subject To Construction Lien.

Sec. 204. Limitation of Construction Lien for Materials Furnished.

Sec. 205. Notice to Owner.

Sec. 206. Written Contract And Disclosure Required for Construction Lien Against Real Estate of Protected Party. (Alternative A).

Sec. 207. Amount of Construction Lien. (Alternative B).

Sec. 208. Attachment of Construction Lien; Recording Required.

Sec. 209. Priority Among Construction Lien Claimants.

Sec. 210. Priority of Construction Lien as Against Claims Other Than Construction Lien Claims.

Sec. 211. Duration of Construction Lien; Statute of Limitations.

Sec. 212. Surety Bond; No Construction Lien Attaches.

Sec. 213. Substitution of Collateral; Release of Lien.

Sec. 214. Obligation of Claimant To Furnish Information to Other Construction Lien Claimants.
(Alternative A).

Sec. 215. Waiver of Claimant's Rights.
(Alternative B).

Art. 3. Recording.

Sec. 301. Notice of Commencement; Recording.

Sec. 302. Termination of Notice of Commencement.

Sec. 303. Recording Construction Lien.

Sec. 304. Amendment or Continuation of Construction Lien.

Sec. 305. Recording Assignment of Construction Lien.

Sec. 306. Recording Notice of Surety Bond.

Sec. 307. Recording Certificate of Clerk of Court Showing Surety Deposit.

Sec. 308. Recording Concerning Judicial Proceedings.

Sec. 309. Owner's Statement of Apportionment.

Sec. 310. Discharge of Construction Lien.

Art. 4. Enforcement of Lien.

Sec. 401. Proceeding to Enforce Construction Lien.

Sec. 402. Recording of Notice of Termination Before Abandonment or Completion.

Sec. 403. Remedies for Wrongful Conduct.

Art. 5. Trust Funds Relating To Real Estate Improvements.

Sec. 501. Creation of Trust in Connection With a Real Estate Improvements Contract.

Art. 6. Effective Date And Repealer.

Sec. 601. Effective Date.

Sec. 602. Provisions for Transition.

Sec. 603. Repeals.

§ 9.04(e) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act. n90

Sec. 1. Statement of Policy.

Sec. 2. Definitions.

Sec. 3. Exclusions.

Sec. 4. Termination of Dormant Mineral Interest.

Sec. 5. Preservation of Mineral Interest by Notice.

Sec. 6. Late Recording by Mineral Owner.

Sec. 7. Effect of Termination.

Sec. 8. Savings and Transitional Provisions.

Sec. 9. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 10. Short Title.

Sec. 11. Severability Clause.

Sec. 12. Effective Date.

Sec. 13. Repeals.

§ 9.04(f) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. n91

Sec. 1. Definitions.

Sec. 2. Insolvency.

Sec. 3. Value.

Sec. 4. Transfers Fraudulent as to Present and Future Creditors.

Sec. 5. Transfers Fraudulent as to Present Creditors.

Sec. 6. When Transfer is Made or Obligation is Incurred.

Sec. 7. Remedies of Creditors.

Sec. 8. Defenses, Liability, and Protection of Transferee.

Sec. 9. Extinguishment of [Claim for Relief] [Cause of Action].

Sec. 10. Supplementary Provisions.

Sec. 11. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 12. Short Title.

Sec. 13. Repeal.

§ 9.04(g) Uniform Land Security Interest Act. n92

Part 1. General Provisions and Definitions.

Sec. 101. Short Title.

Sec. 102. Purposes; Rules of Construction; Scope.

Sec. 103. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 104. Supplementary General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 105. Construction Against Implied Repeal.

Sec. 106. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Sec. 107. Severability Clause.

Sec. 108. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 109. Waiver or Renunciation of Claim or Right After Breach.

Sec. 110. Excluded Transactions.

Sec. 111. General Definitions.

Sec. 112. Notice; Knowledge, Giving Notice; Receipt of Notice.

Sec. 113. Protected Party; Residential Real Estate.

Sec. 114. Person Related To.

Sec. 115. Presumption.

Part 2. Validity of Security Agreement and Rights of Parties Thereto.

Sec. 201. General Validity of Security Agreement.

Sec. 202. Title to Collateral Immaterial.

Sec. 203. Enforceability of Security Interest; Formal Requisites.

Sec. 204. Use of Disposition of Collateral Without an Accounting.

Sec. 205. After-Acquired Property.

Sec. 206. Defense Against Assignee of Obligation.

Sec. 207. Power of Debtor to Lease.

Sec. 208. Alienability of Debtor's Interest; Right to Accelerate on Transfer.

Sec. 209. Request for Statement of Account.

Sec. 210. Security Interest in Certain Rights and Claims and in Crops.

Sec. 211. Secured Party's Equity in Collateral.

Part 3. Priorities and Future Advances.

Sec. 301. Priority Between Conflicting Security Interests in Same Collateral.

Sec. 302. Future Advances.

Part 4. Maximum Finance Charge and Usury.

Sec. 401. Definitions.

Sec. 402. Additional Charges.

Sec. 403. [Alternatives A and B] Maximum Finance Charge.

Sec. 404. Penalty for Excess Charge and Effect on Security.

Part 5. Default.

Sec. 501. Rights and Remedies.

Sec. 502. Acceleration.

Sec. 503. Creditor's Right to Possession.

Sec. 504. Right to Appointment of a Receiver.

Sec. 505. Rents; Rights and Duties of Creditor in Possession.

Sec. 506. Index of Notices and Times Relating to Foreclosure.

Sec. 507. Methods of Foreclosure and Notice.

Sec. 508. Notice of Intention to Foreclose.

Sec. 509. Creditor's Power of Sale After Default.

Sec. 510. Foreclosure by Judicial Proceeding.

Sec. 511. Application of Proceeds of Sale, Surplus, Deficiency.

Sec. 512. Effect of Disposition.

Sec. 513. Debtor's Right to Cure Default and Redeem.

Sec. 514. Creditor's Liability for Failure to Comply With Part 5.

Part 6. Effective Date and Repealer.

Sec. 601. Effective Date.

Sec. 602. Specific Repealer; Provisions for Transition.

Sec. 603. A General Repealer.

Sec. 604. Laws Not Repealed.

§ 9.04(h) Uniform Land Transactions Act. n93

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Part 1. Short Title, Construction, Application and Subject Matter of the Act.
Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Purposes; Rules of Construction.

Sec. 1-103. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-104. Supplementary General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-105. Construction Against Implied Repeal.

Sec. 1-106. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Sec. 1-107. Severability.

Part 2. General Definitions.

Sec. 1-201. General Definitions.

Sec. 1-202. Notice; Knowledge; Giving Notice; Receipt of Notice.

Sec. 1-203. Protected Party; Residential Real Estate.

Sec. 1-204. Person Related To.

Part 3. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-301. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-302. Time; Reasonable Time; Seasonably.

Sec. 1-303. Course of Dealing and Usage.

Sec. 1-304. Performance or Acceptance Under Reservation of Rights.

Sec. 1-305. Waiver or Renunciation of Claim or Right After Breach.

Sec. 1-306. Final Written Expression; Parol or Extrinsic Evidence.

Sec. 1-307. Seals Inoperative.

Sec. 1-308. Course of Performance or Practical Construction.

Sec. 1-309. Effect of Acceptance of Deed on Contract Obligations.

Sec. 1-310. Modification, Rescission and Waiver.

Sec. 1-311. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-312. Sufficiency of Description.

Sec. 1-313. Certain Assignees Subject to Defenses of Protected Party.

Sec. 1-314. Agreement Not to Assert Defenses Against Assignee; Modification of Sales Warranties Where Security Interest Exists.

Sec. 1-315. Delegation of Performance; Assignment of Rights.

Sec. 1-316. Copy of Provisions Incorporated by Reference; Protected Party.

Art. 2. Contracts and Conveyances.

Part 1. Short Title, General Construction and Subject Matter.

Sec. 2-101. Short Title.

Sec. 2-102. Scope.

Sec. 2-103. Definitions.

Sec. 2-104. Goods to be Removed From Real Estate.

Sec. 2-105. "Termination," "Cancellation," Effect Thereof.

Part 2. Form, Formation and Readjustment of Contract.

Sec. 2-201. Formal Requirements; Statute of Frauds.

Sec. 2-202. Existence of Contract; Indefiniteness.

Sec. 2-203. Open Price Term.

Sec. 2-204. Cooperation Respecting Performance.

Sec. 2-205. Firm Offers.

Sec. 2-206. Offer and Acceptance in Formation of Contract.

Sec. 2-207. Sale by Auction and by Sealed Bids.

Part 3. General Obligations and Construction of the Agreement to Convey; Performance.

Sec. 2-301. Seller's Tender of Conveyance; Buyer's Tender of Purchase Price.

Sec. 2-302. Time of Performance; Time of Essence.

Sec. 2-303. Proration of Current Charges and Current Income.

Sec. 2-304. Seller's Title Obligation -- Other than Leasehold.

Sec. 2-305. Seller's Right to Cure.

Sec. 2-306. Warranty of Title in Deed.

Sec. 2-307. Obligation as to Title; Leaseholds and Non Possessory Interests for a Term.

Sec. 2-308. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 2-309. Implied Warranty of Quality.

Sec. 2-310. Lender's Obligation as to Improvements.

Sec. 2-311. Exclusion or Modification of Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 2-312. Third Party Beneficiaries and Assignment of Warranty.

Sec. 2-313. Cumulation and Conflict of Warranties Express or Implied.

Part 4. Breach, Repudiation and Excuse.

Sec. 2-401. Effect of Acceptance; Notice of Breach; Burden of Establishing Breach After Acceptance; Notice of Claim or Litigation to Person Answerable Over.

Sec. 2-402. Revocation of Acceptance.

Sec. 2-403. Right to Adequate Assurance of Performance.

Sec. 2-404. Anticipatory Repudiation.

Sec. 2-405. Retraction of Anticipatory Repudiation.

Sec. 2-406. Risk of Loss, Casualty Loss, Real Estate Other than Leaseholds.

Sec. 2-407. Excuse by Impracticability.

Part 5. Remedies.

Sec. 2-501. Remedies for Breach of Ancillary Obligation or Promise Not Affected.

Sec. 2-502. Seller's Remedies.

Sec. 2-503. Seller's Right to Complete Improvements on Real Estate.

Sec. 2-504. Resale by Seller.

Sec. 2-505. Seller's Damages for Non-Acceptance or Repudiation.

Sec. 2-506. Seller's Action for the Price.

Sec. 2-507. Seller's Incidental and Consequential Damages.

Sec. 2-508. Seller's Lien.

Sec. 2-509. Buyer's Remedies.

Sec. 2-510. Buyer's Damages for Seller's Failure to Convey.

Sec. 2-511. Buyer's Right to Specific Performance.

Sec. 2-512. Buyer's Lien.

Sec. 2-513. Buyer's Damages for Breach in Regard to Accepted Real Estate.

Sec. 2-514. Buyer's Incidental and Consequential Damages.

Sec. 2-515. Deduction of Damages From the Price.

Sec. 2-516. Liquidation of Damages; Deposits.

Sec. 2-517. Contractual Modification or Limitation of Remedy.

Sec. 2-518. Effect of "Cancellation" or "Rescission" on Claims of Antecedent Breach.

Sec. 2-519. Effect of Rejection or Revocation of Acceptance on Claims for Breach.

Sec. 2-520. Remedies for Fraud.

Sec. 2-521. Statute of Limitations.

Art. 3. Secured Transactions.

Part 1. Short Title, Policy and Subject Matter; Definitions.

Sec. 3-101. Short Title.

Sec. 3-102. Scope.

Sec. 3-103. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

Sec. 3-104. Transactions Excluded from Article.

Part 2. Validity of Security Agreement and Rights of Parties Thereto.

Sec. 3-201. General Validity of Security Agreement.

Sec. 3-202. Title to Collateral Immaterial.

Sec. 3-203. Enforceability of Security Interest; Formal Requisites.

Sec. 3-204. Use of Disposition of Collateral Without an Accounting.

Sec. 3-205. After-acquired Property; Future Advances.

Sec. 3-206. Defense Against Assignee of Obligation.

Sec. 3-207. Power of Debtor to Lease.

Sec. 3-208. Alienability of Debtor's Interest; Right to Accelerate on Transfer.

Sec. 3-209. Request for Statement of Account.

Sec. 3-210. Security Interest in Crops and Certain Rights and Claims.

Sec. 3-211. Secured Party's Option to Purchase Collateral.

Part 3. Priorities.

Sec. 3-301. Priority Between Conflicting Security Interests in Same Collateral.

Part 4. Maximum Finance Charge and Usury.

Sec. 3-401. Definitions.

Sec. 3-402. Conformity to Federal Truth in Lending Act.

Sec. 3-403. Maximum Finance Charge.

Sec. 3-404. Additional Charge.

Sec. 3-405. Penalty for Excess Charge and Effect on Security.

Part 5. Default.

Sec. 3-501. Rights and Remedies.

Sec. 3-502. Creditor's Right to Possession.

Sec. 3-503. Right to Appointment of a Receiver.

Sec. 3-504. Rents; Rights and Duties of a Creditor in Possession.

Sec. 3-505. Methods of Foreclosure and Notice.

Sec. 3-506. Notice of Intention to Foreclose.

Sec. 3-507. Index of Notice and Time Provisions Relating to Foreclosure.

Sec. 3-508. Creditor's Power of Sale after Default.

Sec. 3-509. Foreclosure by Judicial Proceeding.

Sec. 3-510. Application of Proceeds of Sale, Surplus and Deficiency.

Sec. 3-511. Effect of Disposition.

Sec. 3-512. Borrower's Right to Cure Default and Redeem; Acceleration.

Sec. 3-513. Creditor's Liability for Failure to Comply with Part.

Art. 4. Effective Date and Repealer.

Sec. 4-101. Effective Date.

Sec. 4-102. Specific Repealer; Provisions for Transition.

Sec. 4-103. A General Repealer.

Sec. 4-104. Laws Not Repealed.

§ 9.04(i) Uniform Marketable Title Act. n94

Sec. 1. Definitions.

Sec. 2. Notice; Knowledge; Giving Notice; Receipt of Notice.

Sec. 3. Marketable Record Title.

Sec. 4. Matters to Which Marketable Record Title is Subject.

Sec. 5. Interests Extinguished by Marketable Record Title.

Sec. 6. Effect Upon Marketable Record Title of Recording Notice of Intent of Preserve an Interest.

Sec. 7. Interests Not Barred by [Act].

Sec. 8. Effect of Contractual Liability as to Interests Antedating Root of Title.

Sec. 9. Limitations of Actions.

Sec. 10. Abandonment in Fact.

Sec. 11. Effect of Indefinite Reference in Recorded Instrument.

Sec. 12. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 13. Short Title.

Sec. 14. Severability.

Sec. 15. Time of Taking Effect, Provisions for Transition.

Sec. 16. Repeal.

§ 9.04(j) Uniform Planned Community Act. n95

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Applicability.

Sec. 1-103. Definitions.

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-105. Separate Titles and Taxation.

Sec. 1-106. Applicability of Building Codes.

Sec. 1-107. Eminent Domain.

Sec. 1-108. Supplemental General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-109. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-110. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 1-111. Severability.

Sec. 1-112. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-113. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-114. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Sec. 1-115. Adjustment of Dollar Amounts.

Art. 2. Creation, Alteration, and Termination of Planned Communities.

Sec. 2-101. Creation of Planned Community.

Sec. 2-102. Unit Boundaries.

Sec. 2-103. Construction and Validity of Declaration and Bylaws.

Sec. 2-104. Description of Units.

Sec. 2-105. Contents of Declaration.

Sec. 2-106. Leasehold Planned Communities.

Sec. 2-107. Allocation of Votes and Common Expense Liabilities.

Sec. 2-108. Limited Common Elements.

Sec. 2-109. Plats and Plans.

Sec. 2-110. Exercise of Development Rights.

Sec. 2-111. Alteration of Units.

Sec. 2-112. Relocation of Boundaries Between Adjoining Units.

Sec. 2-113. Subdivision of Units.

Sec. 2-114. [Alternative A] Easement for Encroachments.
[Alternative B] Monuments as Boundaries.

Sec. 2-115. Use for Sales Purposes.

Sec. 2-116. Easement Rights.

Sec. 2-117. Amendment of Declaration.

Sec. 2-118. Termination of Planned Community.

Sec. 2-119. Rights of Secured Lenders.

Sec. 2-120. Master Associations.

Sec. 2-121. Merger or Consolidation of Planned Communities.

Sec. 2-122. Addition of Unspecified Real Estate.

Art. 3. Management of Planned Community.

Sec. 3-101. Organization of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Unit Owners' Association.

Sec. 3-103. Executive Board Members and Officers.

Sec. 3-104. Transfer of Special Declarant Rights.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Declarant.

Sec. 3-106. Bylaws.

Sec. 3-107. Upkeep of Condominium.

Sec. 3-108. Meetings.

Sec. 3-109. Quorums.

Sec. 3-110. Voting; Proxies.

Sec. 3-111. Tort and Contract Liability.

Sec. 3-112. Conveyance or Encumbrance of Common Elements.

Sec. 3-113. Insurance.

Sec. 3-114. Surplus Funds.

Sec. 3-115. Assessments for Common Expenses.

Sec. 3-116. Lien for Assessments.

Sec. 3-117. Other Liens Affecting the Condominium.

Sec. 3-118. Association Records.

Sec. 3-119. Association as Trustee.

Art. 4. Protection of Purchasers.

Sec. 4-101. Applicability; Waiver.

Sec. 4-102. Liability for Public Offering Statement Requirements.

Sec. 4-103. Public Offering Statement; General Provisions.

Sec. 4-104. Same; Condominiums Subject to Development Rights.

Sec. 4-105. Same; Time-Shares.

Sec. 4-106. Same; Condominiums Containing Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-107. Same; Condominium Securities.

Sec. 4-108. Purchaser's Right to Cancel.

Sec. 4-109. Resales of Units.

Sec. 4-110. Escrow of Deposits.

Sec. 4-111. Release of Liens.

Sec. 4-112. Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-113. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-114. Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-115. Exclusion or Modification of Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-116. Statute of Limitations for Warranties.

Sec. 4-117. Effect of Violation on Rights of Action; Attorney's Fees.

Sec. 4-118. Labeling of Promotional Material.

Sec. 4-119. Declarant's Obligation to Complete and Restore.

Sec. 4-120. Substantial Completion of Units.

Art. 5. Administration and Registration of Planned Communities.

Sec. 5-101. Administrative Agency.

Sec. 5-102. Registration Required.

Sec. 5-103. Application for Registration; Approval of Uncompleted Units.

Sec. 5-104. Receipt of Application; Order of Registration.

Sec. 5-105. Cease and Desist Orders.

Sec. 5-106. Revocation of Registration.

Sec. 5-107. General Powers and Duties of Agency.

Sec. 5-108. Investigative Powers of Agency.

Sec. 5-109. Annual Report and Amendments.

Sec. 5-110. Agency Regulation of Public Offering Statement.

§ 9.04(k) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n96

Art. 1. General Provisions and Definitions.

Part 1. Short title, Construction, Application and Subject Matter of the Act.
Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Purposes; Rules of Construction.

Sec. 1-103. Supplementary Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-104. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-105. Administration of Remedies; Enforcement.

Sec. 1-106. Settlement of Disputed Claim or Right.

Part 2. Scope and Jurisdiction.

Sec. 1-201. Territorial Application.

Sec. 1-202. Exclusions from Application of Act.

Sec. 1-203. Jurisdiction and Service of Process.

Part 3. General Definitions and Principles of Interpretation: Notice.

Sec. 1-301. General Definitions.

Sec. 1-302. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-303. Unconscionability.

Sec. 1-304. Notice.

Part 4. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-401. Terms and Conditions of Rental Agreement.

Sec. 1-402. Effect of Unsigned or Undelivered Rental Agreement.

Sec. 1-403. Prohibited Provisions in Rental Agreements.

Art. 2. Landlord Obligations.

Sec. 2-101. Security Deposits; Prepaid Rent.

Sec. 2-102. Disclosure.

Sec. 2-103. Landlord to Deliver Possession of Dwelling Units.

Sec. 2-104. Landlord to Maintain Premises.

Sec. 2-105. Limitation of Liability.

Art. 3. Tenant Obligations.

Sec. 3-101. Tenant to Maintain Dwelling Unit.

Sec. 3-102. Rules and Regulations.

Sec. 3-103. Access.

Sec. 3-104. Tenant to Use and Occupy.

Art. 4. Remedies.

Part 1. Tenant Remedies.

Sec. 4-101. Non-compliance by the Landlord -- In General.

Sec. 4-102. Failure to Deliver Possession.

Sec. 4-103. Self-Help for Minor Defects.

Sec. 4-104. Wrongful Failure to Supply Heat, Water, Hot Water, or Essential Services.

Sec. 4-105. Landlord's Non-compliance as Defense to Action for Possession or Rent.

Sec. 4-106. Fire or Casualty Damage.

Sec. 4-107. Tenant's Remedies for Landlord's Unlawful Ouster, Exclusion, or Diminution of Service.

Part 2. Landlord Remedies.

Sec. 4-201. Non-compliance with Rental Agreement; Failure to Pay Rent.

Sec. 4-202. Failure to Maintain.

Sec. 4-203. Remedies for Absence, Non-use and Abandonment.

Sec. 4-204. Waiver of Landlord's Right to Terminate.

Sec. 4-205. Landlord Liens; Distress for Rent.

Sec. 4-206. Remedy after Termination.

Sec. 4-207. Recovery of Possession Limited.

Part 3. Periodic Tenancy; Holdover; Abuse of Access.

Sec. 4-301. Periodic Tenancy; Holdover Remedies.

Sec. 4-302. Landlord and Tenant Remedies for Abuse of Access.

Art. 5. Retaliatory Conduct.

Sec. 5-101. Retaliatory Conduct Prohibited.

Art. 6. Effective Date and Repealer.

Sec. 6-101. Effective Date.

Sec. 6-102. Specific Repealer.

Sec. 6-103. Savings Clause.

Sec. 6-104. Severability.

§ 9.04(l) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act. n97

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Part 1. Short Title, Construction, Application, and Subject Matter of the Act.
Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Purposes; Rules of Construction.

Sec. 1-103. Supplementary General Principles of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-104. Construction Against Implied Repeal.

Sec. 1-105. Severability.

Part 2. General Definitions.

Sec. 1-201. General Definitions.

Sec. 1-202. Notice; Knowledge; Giving Notice; Receipt of Notice.

Part 3. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-301. Obligation of Good Faith.

Art. 2. Conveyancing and Recording.

Part 1. Scope and Definitions.

Sec. 2-101. Scope.

Sec. 2-102. Definitions.

Part 2. Conveyancing.

Sec. 2-201. Formal Requisites of Conveyance.

Sec. 2-202. Delivery.

Sec. 2-203. Transfer to Organization or Offices.

Sec. 2-204. Conveyance in Which Grantor is also Grantee; Reservation or Exception.

Part 3. Recording.

Sec. 2-301. Formal Requisites for Recording.

Sec. 2-302. Indexing Information and Consequences of Information.

Sec. 2-303. Separate Indexing Instructions.

Sec. 2-304. Effect of Indexing Information.

Sec. 2-305. Evidentiary Effect of Recording Signed Document.

Sec. 2-306. Certified Copy of Record.

Sec. 2-307. Affidavits.

Sec. 2-308. Notice of Intent to Preserve Interest.

Sec. 2-309. Incorporation of Master Form.

Sec. 2-310. Memorandum of Lease.

Sec. 2-311. Reference by Record Location.

Sec. 2-312. Reference to Legal Description.

Art. 3. Priorities, Marketable Record Title, and Extinguishment of Claims.

Part 1. Scope and Definitions.

Sec. 3-101. Scope.

Sec. 3-102. Definitions.

Part 2. Priority of Claims.

Sec. 3-201. Effect of Conveyance.

Sec. 3-202. Title Acquired by Purchaser for Value Who Has Recorded.

Sec. 3-203. Additional Rules Concerning Priorities.

Sec. 3-204. Claims Relating Back to Time Before Recording.

Sec. 3-205. Effect of Knowledge.

Sec. 3-206. Lapse of Effect of Recording Option or Contract for Conveyance.

Sec. 3-207. Effect of Indefinite Reference in Recorded Instrument.

Sec. 3-208. Effect of Restrictions on Power of Disposition.

Sec. 3-209. Priority of Advances Under a Recorded Security Interest.

Sec. 3-210. General Liens.

Sec. 3-211. Priority of Specific Liens.

Sec. 3-212. Real Estate and Other Tax Liens.

Sec. 3-213. Writs, Orders, and Pending Judicial Proceedings Affecting Real Estate.

Sec. 3-214. Priority of Judgment Lien.

Part 3. Marketable Record Title.

Sec. 3-301. Definitions.

Sec. 3-302. Marketable Record Title.

Sec. 3-303. Matters to Which Marketable Record Title is Subject.

Sec. 3-304. Interests Extinguished by Marketable Record Title.

Sec. 3-305. Effect Upon Marketable Record Title of Recording Notice of Intent to Preserve an Interest.

Sec. 3-306. Interests Not Barred by Part.

Sec. 3-307. Effect of Contractual Liability as to Interests Antedating Root of Title.

Sec. 3-308. Limitations of Actions.

Sec. 3-309. Abandonment in Fact.

Part 4. Curative Provisions and Limitations

Sec. 3-401. Minor Defects Cured by One Year Lapse.

Sec. 3-402. Three Year Period of Limitation on Certain Proceedings.

Sec. 3-403. Accrual of Claim.

Sec. 3-404. Periods of Limitation on Proceedings to Recover or Obtain Possession.

Sec. 3-405. Extent of Adverse Possession.

Sec. 3-406. Evidence of Adverse Possession.

Sec. 3-407. Tolling of Period During Disabilities.

Sec. 3-408. Expiration of Recorded Security Interests: Ten Years After Maturity; Extension.

Sec. 3-409. Extinguishing Possibility of Reverter and Right of Entry for Condition Broken.

Sec. 3-410. Extinguishment of Claims by Limitations.

Sec. 3-411. Effect Upon Statute of Limitations.

Art. 4. Liens and Encumbrances.

Part 1. Scope and Definitions.

Sec. 4-101. Scope and Applicability of Act to Liens and Encumbrances.

Sec. 4-102. Definitions.

Part 2. Liens.

Sec. 4-201. Proceedings in Aid of Establishing Specific Lien.

Sec. 4-202. Changing General Lien into Specific Lien.

Sec. 4-203. Discharge of Invalid Lien.

Sec. 4-204. Federal Tax and Judgment Liens.

Part 3. Notice of Pending Proceedings.

Sec. 4-301. Rights of Purchasers Against Pending Proceedings.

Sec. 4-302. Recording of Notice of Pending Proceedings.

Sec. 4-303. Effect of Amendment of Pleadings.

Sec. 4-304. Form and Contents of Notice.

Sec. 4-305. Voluntary and Involuntary Cancellation.

Sec. 4-306. Security for Cancellation or Non-cancellation.

Art. 5. Construction Liens.

Part 1. General Provisions.

Sec. 5-101. Scope.

Sec. 5-102. Definitions.

Sec. 5-103. Other Definitions.

Sec. 5-104. Presumptions of Agency as to Contracting Owner.

Sec. 5-105. Protected Party, Residential Real Estate.

Sec. 5-106. Person Related To.

Sec. 5-107. Real Estate Improvement Contract.

Part 2. Existence; Priority; Bonds; Waiver.

Sec. 5-201. Existence of Construction Lien; References to Sections on Amount, Priority; and Enforcement.

Sec. 5-202. Governmental Real Estate; No Lien.

Sec. 5-203. Real Estate Subject to Construction Lien.

Sec. 5-204. Limitation of Lien for Materials Supplied.

Sec. 5-205. Notice of Lien Liability.

Sec. 5-206. Amount of Lien.

Sec. 5-207. Attachment of Lien; Recording Required.

Sec. 5-208. Priority Among Lien Claimants.

Sec. 5-209. Priority of Construction Liens as Against Claims Other than Construction Lien Claims.

Sec. 5-210. Duration of Lien; Statute of Limitations.

Sec. 5-211. Surety Bond; No Lien Attaches.

Sec. 5-212. Substitution of Collateral; Release of Lien.

Sec. 5-213. Obligation of Claimant to Furnish Information to Other Lien Claimants.

Sec. 5-214. Waivers of Claimant's Rights.

Part 3. Recording.

Sec. 5-301. Notice of Commencement; Recording.

Sec. 5-302. Termination of Notice of Commencement.

Sec. 5-303. Recording Lien.

Sec. 5-304. Amendment or Continuation of Lien.

Sec. 5-305. Recording Assignment of Lien.

Sec. 5-306. Recording Notice of Surety Bond.

Sec. 5-307. Recording Certificate of Clerk of Court Showing Surety Deposit.

Sec. 5-308. Recording Concerning Judicial Proceedings.

Sec. 5-309. Owner's Statement of Apportionment.

Sec. 5-310. Discharge of Lien.

Part 4. Enforcement of Lien.

Sec. 5-401. Proceeding to Enforce Lien.

Sec. 5-402. Recording of Notice of Termination Before Abandonment or Completion.

Sec. 5-403. Remedies for Wrongful Conduct.

Art. 6. Land Records.

Part 1. Scope and Definitions.

Sec. 6-101. Scope.

Sec. 6-102. Definitions.

Sec. 6-103. Other Definitions.

Part 2. The Recording Officer.

Sec. 6-201. Duty to Maintain Public Land Records.

Sec. 6-202. Method of Recording and Indexing.

Sec. 6-203. Duty to Record.

Sec. 6-204. Recording.

Sec. 6-205. Duty to Index.

Sec. 6-206. Recording Officer's Maps.

Sec. 6-207. Geographic Index.

Sec. 6-208. General Lien and Other Indexes.

Sec. 6-209. Fees of Recording Officer.

Sec. 6-210. Action to Compel Recording and Indexing.

Sec. 6-211. Liability for Breach of Recording Duty.

Part 3. State Recording Officer.

Sec. 6-301. State Recording Officer.

Sec. 6-302. Powers and Duties of State Recording Officer.

Art. 7. Effective Date and Repealer.

Sec. 7-101. Time of Taking Effect, Provisions for Transition.

Sec. 7-102. Delay in Geographic Indexing.

Sec. 7-103. Repeal.

§ 9.04(m) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. n98

Sec. 1. Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities.

Sec. 2. When Non-vested Property Interest or Power of Appointment Created.

Sec. 3. Reformation.

Sec. 4. Exclusions from Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities.

Sec. 5. Prospective Application.

Sec. 6. Short Title.

Sec. 7. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 8. Time of Taking Effect.

Sec. 9. [Supersession] [Repeal]

§ 9.04(n) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. n99

Sec. 1. Definitions.

Sec. 2. Scope and Jurisdiction.

Sec. 3. Nomination of a Custodian.

Sec. 4. Transfer by Gift or Exercise of Power of Appointment.

Sec. 5. Transfer Authorized by Will or Trust.

Sec. 6. Other Transfer by Fiduciary.

Sec. 7. Transfer by Obligor.

Sec. 8. Receipt for Custodial Property.

Sec. 9. Manner of Creating Custodial Property and Effecting Transfer; Designation of Initial Custodian; Control.

Sec. 10. Single Custodianship.

Sec. 11. Validity and Effect of Transfer.

Sec. 12. Care of Custodial Property.

Sec. 13. Powers of Custodian.

Sec. 14. Use of Custodial Property.

Sec. 15. Custodian's Expenses, Compensation and Bond.

Sec. 16. Exemption of Third Person from Liability.

Sec. 17. Liability to Third Persons.

Sec. 18. Renunciation, Resignation, Death, or Removal of Custodian; Designation of Successor Custodian.

Sec. 19. Accounting by and determination of Liability of Custodian.

Sec. 20. Termination of Custodianship.

Sec. 21. Applicability.

Sec. 22. Effect on Existing Custodianships.

Sec. 23. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 24. Short Title.

Sec. 25. Severability.

Sec. 26. Effective Date.

Sec. 27. Repeals.

§ 9.04(o) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act. n100

Sec. 1. Risk of Loss.

Sec. 2. Uniformity of Interpretation.

Sec. 3. Short Title.

Sec. 4. Repeal.

Sec. 5. Time of Taking Effect.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 86. 7 U.L.A. 231.

(n2)Footnote 87. 7 U.L.A. 421.

(n3)Footnote 88. 12 U.L.A. Supp.

(n4)Footnote 89. 7 U.L.A. Supp.

(n5)Footnote 90. 7A U.L.A. Supp.

(n6)Footnote 91. 7A U.L.A. 639.

(n7)Footnote 92. 7A U.L.A. Supp.

(n8)Footnote 93. 13 U.L.A. 469.

(n9)Footnote 94. 13 U.L.A. Supp.

(n10)Footnote 95. 7B U.L.A. 1.

(n11)Footnote 96. 7B U.L.A. 427.

(n12)Footnote 97. 14 U.L.A. 249.

(n13)Footnote 98. 8A U.L.A. Supp.

(n14)Footnote 99. Id.

(n15)Footnote 100. 14 U.L.A. 469.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.05 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Model Laws.

[Go To Supp]

§ 9.05(a) Model Eminent Domain Code. n101

Art. I. General Provisions and Definitions.

Sec. 101. Short Title.

Sec. 102. Scope of the Code.

Sec. 103. Definitions.

Sec. 104. Agreement on Compensation and Other Relief.

Sec. 105. Compliance with Federal Requirements.

Art. II. Policies Governing Land Acquisitions.

Sec. 201. Application of Article.

Sec. 202. Negotiation and Appraisal.

Sec. 203. Offer to Purchase at Full Appraised Value.

Sec. 204. Payment or Deposit Before Surrender of Possession.

Sec. 205. Notice to Terminate Occupancy.

Sec. 206. Rental Basis for Continued Occupancy.

Sec. 207. Coercive Action Forbidden.

Sec. 208. Offer to Acquire Uneconomic Remnant.

Sec. 209. Acquisition of Improvements to be Removed.

Sec. 210. Compensation for Tenant-Owned Buildings and Structures.

Sec. 211. Expenses Incidental to Transfer of Title.

Sec. 212. Waiver.

Sec. 213. Takings Without Condemnation Action.

Sec. 214. Interpretation and Effect of Article.

Art. III. Proceedings Before Action.

Sec. 301. Entry for Suitability Studies.

Sec. 302. Court Order Permitting Entry.

Sec. 303. Deposit of Probable Compensation.

Sec. 304. Modification of Court Order.

Sec. 305. Recovery of Damages, Costs, and Expenses.

Sec. 306. Preliminary Efforts to Purchase.

Sec. 307. Scope of Efforts to Purchase.

Sec. 308. Purchase Efforts Waived or Excused.

Sec. 309. Condemnation Authorization.

Sec. 310. Contents of Authorization.

Sec. 311. Effect of Condemnation Authorization.

Art. IV. Commencement of Action by Condemnor.

Sec. 401. Procedure Generally.

Sec. 402. Commencement of Condemnation Action; Venue.

Sec. 403. Time for Commencement of Condemnation Action.

Sec. 404. Contents of Complaint.

Sec. 405. Consolidation and Separation of Properties and Issues.

Sec. 406. Service of Process.

Sec. 407. Recording Notice of Pending Action.

Art. V. Defendant's Response.

Sec. 501. Required Response.

Sec. 502. Answer.

Sec. 503. Disclaimer.

Sec. 504. Rights After Default.

Sec. 505. Additional Pleadings.

Sec. 506. Hearing on Preliminary Objections.

Sec. 507. Burden of Proof at Hearing on Objections.

Sec. 508. Disposition of Defendant's Objections.

Art. VI. Deposit and Possession Prior to Judgment.

Sec. 601. Deposit of Appraised Property Value.

Sec. 602. Notice of Deposit.

Sec. 603. Motion to Increase or Reduce Amount Deposited.

Sec. 604. Motion for Withdrawal of Deposited Funds Before Judgment.

Sec. 605. Determination of Application for Withdrawal; Waiver of Objections.

Sec. 606. Effect of Withdrawal.

Sec. 607. Deposit and Withdrawal Inadmissible in Evidence.

Sec. 608. Deposit at Interest.

Sec. 609. Order of Possession.

Sec. 610. Notice of Order of Possession.

Art. VII. Proceedings Before Trial.

Sec. 701. Application of Article.

Sec. 702. Scope of Discovery.

Sec. 703. Protective Orders.

Sec. 704. Duty to Supplement or Amend Response.

Sec. 705. Effect of Article on Admissibility of Evidence.

Sec. 706. Effect of Discovery Proceedings Upon Trial Evidence.

Sec. 707. Pretrial Order.

Sec. 708. Offer of Settlement.

Art. VIII. Informal Procedure for Disputes Involving Limited Amounts.

Sec. 801. Informal Claims Procedure Authorized.

Sec. 802. Request for Informal Procedure.

Sec. 803. Demand for Retrial.

Art. IX. Procedure for Determining Just Compensation.

Sec. 901. Setting for Trial.

Sec. 902. Trial by Jury; Waiver.

Sec. 903. Right to Open and Close; Order of Presentation of Evidence.

Sec. 904. Burden of Proof.

Sec. 905. Separation of Issues of Compensation and Apportionment.

Sec. 906. Separate Determination of Facts.

Sec. 907. Power of Court to Control Scope of Trial Participation.

Art. X. Compensation.

Sec. 1001. Compensation Standards.

Sec. 1002. Compensation for Taking.

Sec. 1003. Date of Valuation.

Sec. 1004. Fair Market Value Defined.

Sec. 1005. Effect of Condemnation Action on Value.

Sec. 1006. Compensation to Reflect Project as Planned.

Sec. 1007. "Entire Property."

Sec. 1008. Special Assessment Proceedings Excluded.

Sec. 1009. Use by Defendant; Risk of Loss.

Sec. 1010. Compensation for Growing Crops and Improvements.

Sec. 1011. Improvements Partially Located on Land Not Taken.

Sec. 1012. Compensation for Divided Interests.

Sec. 1013. Taking of Leasehold Interest.

Sec. 1014. Acquisition of Property Subject to Lien.

Sec. 1015. Property Subject to Life Tenancy.

Sec. 1016. Loss of Goodwill.

Art. XI. Evidence in Condemnation Actions.

Sec. 1101. Scope of Article.

Sec. 1102. View of Property Taken.

Sec. 1103. Opinion Evidence Competent to Prove Value.

Sec. 1104. Supporting Evidence.

Sec. 1105. Evidence Relating to Remainder Value in Partial Taking.

Sec. 1106. Matters Upon Which Opinion Testimony May Be Based.

Sec. 1107. Sales of Subject Property.

Sec. 1108. Comparable Sales.

Sec. 1109. Leases.

Sec. 1110. Capitalization of Rental Income.

Sec. 1111. Reproduction or Replacement Cost.

Sec. 1112. Conditions in General Vicinity.

Sec. 1113. Matter Upon Which Opinion May Not Be Based.

Art. XII. Judgment and Postjudgment Procedure.

Sec. 1201. Contents of Judgment.

Sec. 1202. Interest on Compensation Awarded.

Sec. 1203. Interest on Judgment.

Sec. 1204. Adjustment of Taxes.

Sec. 1205. Recoverable Costs.

Sec. 1206. Crediting Amounts Paid or Withdrawn from Deposited Funds.

Sec. 1207. Performance of Work to Reduce Amount of Award.

Sec. 1208. Payment of Judgment by Plaintiff.

Sec. 1209. Order Transferring Title.

Sec. 1210. Effect of Failure to Pay Judgment.

Sec. 1211. Payment After Judgment from Funds Deposited with Court.

Sec. 1212. Order for Possession after Judgment.

Art. XIII. Dismissal and Abandonment.

Sec. 1301. Involuntary Dismissal.

Sec. 1302. Voluntary Dismissal.

Sec. 1303. Award of Litigation Expense.

Sec. 1304. Restitution of Property and Damages.

Art. XIV. Relocation Assistance.

Sec. 1401. Declaration of Policy.

Sec. 1402. Definitions.

Sec. 1403. Moving and Related Expenses.

Sec. 1404. Replacement Housing for Homeowners.

Sec. 1405. Replacement Housing for Tenants and Certain Others.

Sec. 1406. Relocation Assistance Advisory Program.

Sec. 1407. Replacement Housing Prerequisite to Requiring Person to Move.

Sec. 1408. Implementing Regulations.

Sec. 1409. Fund Availability.

Sec. 1410. Administration.

Sec. 1411. Payments Not Income or Resources.

Sec. 1412. Review of Application of Aggrieved Person.

Art. XV. Arbitration of Compensation.

Sec. 1501. Arbitration of Compensation Authorized.

Sec. 1502. Enforceability of Agreement.

Sec. 1503. Timing of Arbitration.

Sec. 1504. Effect of Pending Condemnation Action.

Sec. 1505. Absence of Concurrent Condemnation Action.

Sec. 1506. Arbitration Procedure.

Sec. 1507. Abandonment of Acquisition.

Sec. 1508. Recordation of Agreement.

Art. XVI. Effective Date and Repealer.

Sec. 1601. Time of Taking Effect.

Sec. 1602. Application.

Sec. 1603. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 1604. Severability.

Sec. 1605. Repealer.

§ 9.05(b) Model Land Sales Practices Act. n102

Sec. 1. Definitions.

Sec. 2. Administrative Agency.

Sec. 3. Exemptions.

Sec. 4. Prohibitions on Dispositions of Interests in Subdivisions.

Sec. 5. Application for Registration.

Sec. 6. Public Offering Statement.

Sec. 7. Inquiry and Examination.

Sec. 8. Notice of Filing and Registration.

Sec. 9. Annual Report.

Sec. 10. General Powers and Duties.

Sec. 11. Investigations and Proceedings.

Sec. 12. Cease and Desist Orders.

Sec. 13. Revocation.

Sec. 14. Judicial Review.

Sec. 15. Penalties.

Sec. 16. Civil Remedy.

Sec. 17. Jurisdiction.

Sec. 18. Interstate Rendition.

Sec. 19. Service of Process.

Sec. 20. Uniformity of Interpretation.

Sec. 21. Short Title.

Sec. 22. Severability.

Sec. 23. Repeal.

Sec. 24. Effective Date.

§ 9.05(c) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act. n103

Art. 1. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Applicability.

Sec. 1-103. Definitions.

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-105. Separate Titles and Taxation.

Sec. 1-106. Applicability of Local Ordinances, Regulations, and Building Codes.

Sec. 1-107. Eminent Domain.

Sec. 1-108. Supplemental General Principals of Law Applicable.

Sec. 1-109. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-110. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 1-111. Severability.

Sec. 1-112. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-113. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-114. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Art. 2. Creation, Alteration, and Termination of Cooperatives.

Sec. 2-101. Creation of Cooperative Ownership.

Sec. 2-102. Unit Boundaries.

Sec. 2-103. Construction and Validity of Declaration and Bylaws.

Sec. 2-104. Description of Units.

Sec. 2-105. Contents of Declaration.

Sec. 2-106. Leasehold Cooperatives.

Sec. 2-107. Allocation of Beneficial Interests, Votes, and Common Expense Liabilities.

Sec. 2-108. Limited Common Elements.

Sec. 2-109. Exercise of Development Rights.

Sec. 2-110. Alteration of Units.

Sec. 2-111. Relocation of Boundaries Between Adjoining Units.

Sec. 2-112. Subdivision of Units.

Sec. 2-113. (Alternative A) Easement for Encroachments.
(Alternative B) Monuments as Boundaries.

Sec. 2-114. Use for Sales Purposes.

Sec. 2-115. Easement Rights.

Sec. 2-116. Amendment of Declaration.

Sec. 2-117. Termination of Cooperative Ownership.

Sec. 2-118. Rights of Secured Lenders.

Sec. 2-119. Master Associations.

Sec. 2-120. Merger or Consolidation of Cooperatives.

Art. 3. Management of Cooperatives.

Sec. 3-101. Organization of Association.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Association.

Sec. 3-103. Executive Board Members and Officers.

Sec. 3-104. Transfer of Special Declarant Rights.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Declarant.

Sec. 3-106. Bylaws.

Sec. 3-107. Upkeep of Cooperative.

Sec. 3-108. Meetings.

Sec. 3-109. Quorums.

Sec. 3-110. Voting, Proxies.

Sec. 3-111. Tort and Contract Liability.

Sec. 3-112. Conveyance or Encumbrance of Cooperative.

Sec. 3-113. Insurance.

Sec. 3-114. Assessments for Common Expenses.

Sec. 3-115. Lien for Assessments.

Sec. 3-116. Other Liens Affecting the Cooperative.

Sec. 3-117. Association Records.

Sec. 3-118. Association as Trustee.

Art. 4. Protection of Cooperative Purchasers.

Sec. 4-101. Applicability; Waiver.

Sec. 4-102. Liability for Public Offering Statement Requirements.

Sec. 4-103. Public Offering Statement: General Provisions.

Sec. 4-104. Same; Cooperative Subject to Development Rights.

Sec. 4-105. Same; Time-Shares.

Sec. 4-106. Same; Cooperatives Containing Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-107. Same; Cooperative Securities.

Sec. 4-108. Purchaser's Right to Cancel.

Sec. 4-109. Resales of Cooperative Interests.

Sec. 4-110. Escrow of Deposits.

Sec. 4-111. Release of Liens.

Sec. 4-112. Conversion Buildings.

Sec. 4-113. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-114. Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-115. Exclusion or Modification of Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-116. Statute of Limitation for Warranties.

Sec. 4-117. Effect of Violation on Rights of Action; Attorney's Fees.

Sec. 4-118. Labeling of Promotional Material.

Sec. 4-119. Declarant's Obligation to Complete and Restore.

Sec. 4-120. Substantial Completion of Units.

Art. 5. Administration and Registration of Cooperatives.

Sec. 5-101. Administrative Agency.

Sec. 5-102. Registration Required.

Sec. 5-103. Application for Registration; Approval of Uncompleted Units.

Sec. 5-104. Receipt of Application; Order of Registration.

Sec. 5-105. Cease and Desist Orders.

Sec. 5-106. Revocation of Registration.

Sec. 5-107. General Powers and Duties of Agency.

Sec. 5-108. Investigative Powers of Agency.

Sec. 5-109. Annual Report and Amendments.

Sec. 5-110. Agency Regulation of Public Offering Statement.

§ 9.05(d) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act. n104

Art. I. General Provisions.

Sec. 1-101. Short Title.

Sec. 1-102. Definitions.

Sec. 1-103. Status and Taxation of Time-Share Estates.

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-105. Unconscionable Agreement or Term of Contract.

Sec. 1-106. Obligation of Good Faith.

Sec. 1-107. Remedies to be Liberally Administered.

Sec. 1-108. Supplemental General Principles of Law.

Sec. 1-109. Conflicts with Other Statutes.

Sec. 1-110. Construction Against Implicit Repeal.

Sec. 1-111. Applicability.

Sec. 1-112. Severability.

Art. II. Creation, Termination and Incidents of the Shares.

Sec. 2-101. Time Shares in Projects.

Sec. 2-102. Time-Share Instrument.

Sec. 2-103. Allocation of Time-Share Expense Liability and Voting Rights.

Sec. 2-104. Partition.

Sec. 2-105. Termination of Times Shares.

Sec. 2-106. Use for Sale Purposes.

Sec. 2-107. Rights of Secured Lenders.

Sec. 2-108. Transfer of Time-Share Licenses.

Art. III. Management of the Time-Share Property.

Sec. 3-101. Managing Entity.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Managing Entity.

Sec. 3-103. Powers and Duties in Absence of a Managing Entity.

Sec. 3-104. Transfer of Special Developer Rights.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Developer.

Sec. 3-106. Upkeep of Time-Share Units.

Sec. 3-107. Tort and Contract Liability.

Sec. 3-108. Insurance.

Sec. 3-109. Surplus Funds.

Sec. 3-110. Assessments for Time-Share Expenses.

Sec. 3-111. Lien for Assessments.

Sec. 3-112. Financial Records.

Sec. 3-113. Authority of Trustee.

Sec. 3-114. Initiative, Referendum, and Recall; General Provisions.

Sec. 3-115. Direct Initiative by Owners.

Sec. 3-116. Referendum of Owners.

Sec. 3-117. Recall of Manager by Owners.

Art. IV. Protection of Purchasers.

Sec. 4-101. Applicability; Exemptions.

Sec. 4-102. Liability for Public Offering Statement Requirements.

Sec. 4-103. Public Offering Statement; General Provisions.

Sec. 4-104. Same; Conversion Building.

Sec. 4-105. Same; Time-Share Securities.

Sec. 4-106. Purchaser's Right to Cancel.

Sec. 4-107. Resales of Time Shares.

Sec. 4-108. Deposits.

Sec. 4-109. Liens.

Sec. 4-110. Conversion Building.

Sec. 4-111. Express Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-112. Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-113. Exclusion or Modification of Implied Warranties of Quality.

Sec. 4-114. Statutes of Limitation for Warranties.

Sec. 4-115. Effect of Violation on Rights of Action; Attorney's Fees.

Sec. 4-116. Labeling of Promotional Material.

Sec. 4-117. Developer's Obligation to Complete.

Sec. 4-118. Certain Advertising Practices Regulated.

Art. V. Administration and Registration.

Sec. 5-101. Administrative Agency.

Sec. 5-102. Registration Required.

Sec. 5-103. Application for Registration; Approval of Uncompleted Units.

Sec. 5-104. Receipt of Application; Order of Registration.

Sec. 5-105. Cease and Desist Orders.

Sec. 5-106. Revocation of Registration.

Sec. 5-107. General Powers and Duties of Agency.

Sec. 5-108. Investigative Powers of Agency.

Sec. 5-109. Annual Report and Amendments.

Sec. 5-110. Agency Regulation of Public Offering Statement.

§ 9.05(e) Model Surface Use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act. n105

Sec. 1. Statement of Policy and Findings.

Sec. 2. Definitions.

Sec. 3. Easement for Surface Access and Use Accommodation.

Sec. 4. Protection of Mineral Development.

Sec. 5. Protection of Surface Use or Improvement.

Sec. 6. Modifications of Easement for Surface Access and Use.

Sec. 7. Procedures for Notice and Objection.

Sec. 8. Determination Whether Accommodation is Required.

Sec. 9. Recordation.

Sec. 10. Measure of Damages for Failure to Accommodate -- Limitations.

Sec. 11. Rights Preserved.

Sec. 12. Short Title.

Sec. 13. Severability Clause.

Sec. 14. Effective Date.

Sec. 15. Repeals.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 101. 13 U.L.A. 1.

(n2)Footnote 102. 7A U.L.A. 669.

(n3)Footnote 103. 7B U.L.A. 225.

(n4)Footnote 104. 7B U.L.A. 351.

(n5)Footnote 105. 14 U.L.A. Supp.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 9.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 9.06 Evaluative Comment on Uniform and Model Laws.

The original impetus for the uniform law movement was the assumption that uniformity of law between the states was highly desirable and that, because of that desirability, thoughtfully drafted laws of common interest would be eagerly adopted by the respective state legislatures. The assumption of desirability was premised in part on the notions that (1) state legislatures and courts all sought to adhere to fundamental common law principles and therefore would rather be similar than different; (2) the burgeoning mass of reported decisions and state legislation made it increasingly difficult to determine what legal principles other states' courts and legislatures were following; and (3) if states did not act in a satisfactorily common fashion in certain legal areas, pressure would build for federal intrusion, either by federal courts or the Congress.

Those assumptions were mostly wrong, were demonstrably so at the outset of the uniform laws projects, and have become even more so with the passage of time. In areas of law left to states under the American constitutional system, it could be argued that diversity and pluralism are as useful as uniformity. The growing mass of laws and decisions did indeed make it difficult to monitor the activities of other states, but that became less important if one did not dogmatically insist on uniformity between the states. In any event, in the present generation, technology has made the task of monitoring manageable, if one wishes to undertake it. The fears of federal preemption were well-founded, although it is a reasonable speculation that preemption would have occurred regardless of how fully states coordinated their jurisprudence through uniformity.

The invalidity of basic assumptions underlying the uniform law movement is necessarily part of the reason why so many of the laws, all thoughtfully drafted and reviewed, have been ignored by the state legislatures. For the most part, the uniform laws have not represented the gems of legal truth for which state legislators have been earnestly seeking. Moreover, in most instances, they have not promoted uniformity, but have only added another element to the variety of approaches taken by states' laws on any given topic. Indeed, not only do many states insert their own subjective variations into the uniform laws they do adopt, but then the various state courts apply and interpret those "uniform" laws in their own characteristically independent manner. It thus seems evident now that uniformity of state legislation on important legal topics, as envisioned by the early commissioners, is a chimera.

Of what value, then, are the uniform and model laws? At the very least, the uniform and model laws represent examples of thoughtful legislative drafting on topics of general interest to the states. State legislators recognizing the need for positive law on a particular topic, but lacking the will or means to undertake an original study of the subject, would do well to begin with available relevant uniform laws. In many instances, lawmakers will find the uniform laws product quite suitable; in other cases, perhaps the policy choices unavoidably imbedded in the commissioners' codes will not be acceptable, and a different direction will be sought. In either case, the uniform law may serve as a useful reference point and resource. It could be fairly said that the uniform and model laws have raised the quality of legislative drafting throughout the states, even if most individual uniform laws themselves have not been widely adopted.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 9.02

Supp. to § 9.02 Organization of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws

[Go To Main]

§ 9.02(b) How the National Conference Has Conducted Its Work [Go To Main]

§ 9.02(b)(2) Early Criticism of the National Conference's Work

At end of subsection add new Note 16.1: n16.1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 16.1. See David A. Thomas, Restatements Relating to Property: Why Lawyers Don't Really Care, 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 655 (Winter, 2004).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 9.03

Supp. to § 9.03 Overview of the Property-Related Uniform Laws and Their Adoptions.

[Go To Main]

Add, at end of section:

Adoptions refer to both verbatim and substantially similar adoptions.

§ 9.03(a) Uniform Acts. [Go To Main]

At end of subsection add new Note 23.1: n23.1

§ 9.03(a)(1) Uniform Absence as Evidence of Death and Absentees' Property Act.

Add:

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1981.

§ 9.03(a)(3) Uniform Ancillary Administration of Estates Act.

Add:

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1978.

2008 Act adopted in 1 state: Delaware (2009).

Change:

footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 133 to 8A U.L.A. 157.

§ 9.03(a)(4) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act.

Change footnote from 7 (part I) U.L.A. 471 to 7 (Part IB) U.L.A. 223.

At end of subsection add new Note 27.1: n27.1

§ 9.03(a)(5) Uniform Condominium Act.

Add:

(Although the following states have not adopted the entire Uniform Condominium Act, they have adopted substantial portions of the Act: Louisiana (1979), Nebraska (1983), and New Hampshire (1977)).

Add:

Louisiana (1979), Nebraska (1983), and New Hampshire (1977).

Change:

footnote from* 7 (Part II) U.L.A. to 7 (Part II) U.L.A. 485.

Delete:

Parenthetical added to Page 57. Note 28.

§ 9.03(a)(6) Uniform Conservation Easement Act.

Switch:

Alaska (1989) (should be second) and Alabama (1997) (should be first).

Add:

Oklahoma (1999).

Add:

Arkansas (1983), Virgin Islands (2006), Wyoming (2005).

Change:

footnote from* 12 U.L.A. 199 to 12 U.L.A. 165.

§ 9.03(a)(7) Uniform Construction Lien Act.

Change:

footnote from* 7 (Part II) U.L.A. 381 to 7 (Part III) U.L.A. 1.

At end of subsection add new Note 30.1: n30.1

§ 9.03(a)(8) Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act.

1978 Act was replaced by the 1999 Act. The following states have either repealed the 1978 Act and then adopted the 1999 Act; or merely adopted the 1999 Act: Arizona (2005), Arkansas (2003), Delaware (2006), District of Columbia (2006), Florida (2005), Hawaii (2000), Indiana (2003), Iowa (2004), Maryland (2004), Massachusetts (2008), Nevada (2007), New Mexico (2001), North Dakota (2001), Oregon (2001), Virginia (2003), West Virginia (2002).

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 149 to 8A U.L.A. 159; 8A U.L.A. 191.

§ 9.03(a)(9) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act.

Add:

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 2001.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 161 to 8A U.L.A. 209.

§ 9.03(a)(10) Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers Under Nontestamentary Instruments Act.

Add:

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 2001.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 179 to 8A U.L.A. 211.

§ 9.03(a)(11) Uniform Disposition of Community Property Rights at Death Act.

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 2001.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 191 to 8A U.L.A. 213.

§ 9.03(a)(12) Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

Add:

The 1966 Act was superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1981.

The 1954 Act was superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1984.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 207, 267 to 8A U.L.A. 229, 231.

In 1997, West Virginia in 1997 amended its laws that previously conformed to the 1954 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act so that they now constitute an adoption of the 1995 Uniform Unclaimed Property Act.

In 1999, Arkansas repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act and enacted in lieu thereof the 1995 Uniform Unclaimed Property Act.

In 1973, Alabama amended the 1954 Uniform Act so that it now conforms substantially to the 1966 Revised Uniform Act.

In 1990, Georgia repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, and enacted in lieu thereof the 1981 Uniform Unclaimed Property Act. Note, however, that the title of the Georgia act continues to be the "Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act."

In 1983, Hawaii repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, and enacted in lieu thereof the 1981 Uniform Unclaimed Property Act.

In 1988, Maine repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, and enacted in lieu thereof the Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1983, Montana amended its laws which previously had conformed substantially to the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act of 1966, so that it now conforms substantially to the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1989, New Mexico amended, repealed, and reenacted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act so that the New Mexico act now substantially conforms to the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1985, North Dakota repealed the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act.

In 1991, the Oklahoma Act, which formerly conformed to the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act of 1966, has been amended so that it now conforms substantially to the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1986, Rhode Island repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act and enacted in lieu thereof the Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1988, South Carolina repealed the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act and enacted in lieu thereof the Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

In 1992, South Dakota repealed the South Dakota Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act (1966) and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act (1981).

In 1983, Wisconsin repealed the former chapter 177 state statute that substantially conformed to the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act of 1966 and enacted in lieu thereof a new chapter 177 that substantially conforms to the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

At end of subsection add new Note 35.1: n35.1

§ 9.03(a)(13) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act.

Add:

Washington (1984).

Change footnote from* 7A (Part I) U.L.A. Supp. to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 194.

§ 9.03(a)(14) Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act.

Add:

In 2000, Michigan repealed the Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act of 1958.

Both the 1958 and 1964 Acts were withdrawn from recommendation in 2003, having been superseded by the Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act of 2003.

The following states adopted the 2003 Act: Alabama (2007), Arkansas (2007), Idaho (2004), Massachusetts (2008), New Mexico (2005), Washington (2005).

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 331, 349 to 8A U.L.A. 261; 8A U.L.A 281; 8A U.L.A Supp.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 331 to 8A U.L.A. 261.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 349 to 8A U.L.A. 281.

§ 9.03(a)(15) Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 359 to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 328.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 373. to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 328.

§ 9.03(a)(16) Uniform Federal Tax lien Registration Act.

Add:

The 1966 Act was superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1978.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 373 to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 363.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 359 to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 363.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 427 to 7A (Part 1I) U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.03(a)(17) Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act.

Add:

Arizona (1990), California (1986), Delaware (1996), Idaho (1987), Massachusetts (1996), Michigan (1998), Minnesota (1987), Montana (1991), Nebraska (1989), Nevada (1987), New Hampshire (1998), New Jersey (1989), New Mexico (1989), North Dakota (1985), Ohio (1990), Oklahoma (1986), Pennsylvania (1993), South Dakota (1987), Washington (1998), Wisconsin (1998) and Wyoming (2006) repealed the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act, and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 427 to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 2.

§ 9.03(a)(18) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act.

Add:

Kansas (1998), Michigan (1998).

Georgia (2002), Mississippi (2006), Tennessee (2003), Wyoming (2006).

Change:

Indiana (1994) to Indiana (2002) (in 2002, Indiana repealed the former provisions of the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act and adopted the 1984 Act).

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 639 to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 2.

§ 9.03(a)(19) Uniform Gifts to Minors Act.

Add:

In 1987, New Jersey repealed the 1966 Gifts to Minors Act, but the repeal was not effective until July 1, 2007.

Add:

Both the 1956 Act and the 1966 Revised Act have been superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1984.

Florida (1985), Louisiana (1986), Michigan (1998), North Carolina (1987), Rhode Island (1985), and Virgin Islands (2001) have repealed the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (1956) and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act.

Alabama (1986), Alaska (1990), Arizona (1988), Arkansas (1985), California (1984), Colorado (1984), Connecticut (1995), Delaware (), District of Columbia (1986), Georgia (1990), Hawaii (1985), Idaho (1984), Illinois (1986), Indiana (1989), Iowa (1986), Kansas (1985), Kentucky (1966), Maine (1988), Maryland (1989), Massachusetts (1986), Minnesota (1985), Mississippi (1994), Missouri (1985), Montana (1985), Nebraska (1992), New Hampshire (1985), New Mexico (1989), North Dakota (1985), Oklahoma (1986), Pennsylvania (1992), South Dakota (1986), Tennessee (1992), Texas (1995), Utah (1990), Virginia (1988), Washington (1991), Wisconsin (1989), and Wyoming (1987) have repealed the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (1966) and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act.

Ohio (1986) has amended the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (1956) so that it now constitutes a substantial adoption of the Uniform Transfers to Minors Acts.

Nevada (1985), Oregon (1985), and West Virginia have amended the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (1966) so that it now constitutes a substantial adoption of the Uniform Transfers to Minors Acts.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 317, 405 to 8A U.L.A. 297, 299.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 405 to 8c U.L.A. 299.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 317 to 8A U.L.A. 297.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. Supp. to 8C U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.03(a)(20) Uniform Land Security Interest Act.

Add:

Withdrawn from recommendation in 1999.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. Supp. to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 244.

§ 9.03(a)(21) Uniform Land Transaction Act.

Change footnote from* 13 U.L.A. 469. to 13 (Part II) U.L.A. 160.

At end of subsection add new Note 51.1: n51.1

§ 9.03(a)(22) Uniform Law on Notarial Acts.

Add:

New Hampshire (2005).

Change footnote from* 14 U.L.A. 125 to 14 U.L.A. 201.

At end of subsection add new Note 52.1: n52.1

§ 9.03(a)(23) Uniform Marital Property Act.

Change footnote from* 9A U.L.A. 97 to 9A (Part I) U.L.A. 103.

§ 9.03(a)(24) Uniform Marketable Title Act.

Change footnote from* 13 U.L.A. Supp. to 13 (Part II) U.L.A. 305.

§ 9.03(a)(25) Uniform Non-probate Transfers on Death Act.

Add:

District of Columbia (2001), Georgia (1999), New York (2005), North Carolina (2005), Rhode Island (1998), South Carolina (1997), Tennessee (1995), Vermont (1999).

Change:

Indiana (1997) to Indiana (2002).

Michigan (1996) to Michigan (1998).

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 191 to 8B U.L.A. 45.

At end of subsection add new Note 55.1: n55.1

§ 9.03(a)(26) Uniform Planned Community Act.

Change footnote from* 7B U.L.A. 1 to 7A (Part III) U.L.A. 233.

Add:

North Carolina (1998).

At end of subsection add new Notes 56.1 and 56.2: n56.1 n56.2

§ 9.03(a)(27) Uniform Premarital Agreement Act.

Change footnote from* 9B U.L.A. 369 to 9B U.L.A. 35.

At end of subsection add new Note 57.1: n57.1

§ 9.03(a)(28) Uniform Probate Code.

Add:

Massachusetts (2008), New Jersey (2004).

Change:

Michigan (1978) to Michigan (1998) (in 1998, Michigan revised its Probate Code).

Change footnote from* 8 U.L.A. 1 to 8 (Part I) U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.03(a)(29) Uniform Probate of Foreign Wills Act.

Add:

Withdrawn from recommendation in 1978.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 239 to 8B U.L.A. 129.

§ 9.03(a)(30) Uniform Recognition of Acknowledgements Act.

Add:

Virgin Islands (1981).

Add:

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1984.

Change footnote from* 14 U.L.A. 233 to 14 U.L.A. 341.

Change footnote from* 14 U.L.A. 125 to 14 U.L.A. 201.

§ 9.03(a)(31) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

Add:

Alabama (2006), Connecticut (1979), Michigan (1972), Mississippi (1991), Oklahoma (1978), Washington (1973).

Change footnote from* 7B U.L.A. 427 to 7B U.L.A. 285.

Change footnote from* 14 U.L.A. 249 to 14 U.L.A 343

At end of subsection add new Note 62.1: n62.1

§ 9.03(a)(32) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act.

change from 14 U.L.A. 249 to 14 U.L.A. 343.

§ 9.03(a)(33) Uniform Simultaneous Death Act.

Add:

Virgin Islands (1957).

In 2008, Massachusetts repealed the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act (1940), and enacted the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act (1993) to become effective on July 1, 2001.

In 2001, District of Columbia revised the 1940 Act, and adopted the 1993 Uniform Simultaneous Death Act.

In 1998, Michigan repealed the original Uniform Simultaneous Death Act, effective April 1, 2000.

In 1999, Oregon repealed the original Uniform Simultaneous Death Act.

Change:

Kentucky (1992) to Kentucky (1998).

Add:

The following jurisdictions have either revised or repealed the 1940 Act and adopted the 1993 Act: Arkansas (2005), District of Columbia (2001), Oregon (1999), Wisconsin (1997).

North Carolina (2007), Ohio (2002), Washington (2007) to the jurisdictions that have adopted the 1993 Act.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 253, 267 to 8B U.L.A. 141; 8B U.L.A. 159.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 253 to 8B U.L.A. 141.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 267 to 8B U.L.A. 159.

Delete:

In 2001, District of Colombia

In 1999, Oregon

Add:

Parenthetical to Virgin Islands (1957) explaining that jurisdiction adopted 1940 Act.

§ 9.03(a)(34) Uniform Statutory Form Power of Attorney Act.

Add:

Arkansas (1999), District of Columbia (1998), Ohio (2005).

Change:

Approved in 1998 to 1988.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 299 to 8B U.L.A. 191.

§ 9.03(a)(35) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities.

Add:

Arkansas (2007), District of Columbia (2001), Virginia (2000).

In 2003, Utah amended the provisions of Utah's Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities such that it can no longer constitute an adoption of the uniform act.

Change:

Indiana (1991) to Indiana (2002)

Remove:

Utah (1998)

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 321 to 8B U.L.A. 223.

At end of subsection add new Note 68.1: n68.1

§ 9.03(a)(36) Uniform Statutory Will Act.

Add:

Withdrawn from recommendation in 1996.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 383 to 8B U.L.A. 293.

§ 9.03(a)(37) Uniform Succession Without Administration Act.

Add:

Withdrawn from recommendation in 1998.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 413 to 8B U.L.A. 321.

§ 9.03(a)(38) Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act.

Add:

Idaho (1999), Nebraska (1999), North Carolina (2007) and Virginia (1999) to the list of jurisdictions which have adopted the 1991 Act.

In 2008, Massachusetts repealed the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) and enacted the Uniform Testamentary addition to Trusts Act (1991) to become effective on July 1, 2011.

Modify the text of § 9.03(a)(38) by adding and removing the information indicated below:

1991 Act: add North Carolina (2007), Utah (1998).

1960 Act: change 27 states to 28 states; delete North Dakota (1961).

In 1999, Idaho amended the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) so that it now constitutes an adoption of the major provisions of the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1991).

In 1998, Kentucky repealed the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) and enacted in lieu thereof the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1991).

In 2000, Michigan repealed the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960).

In 1999, Nebraska amended the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) so that it now constitutes an adoption of the major provisions of the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1991).

In 1973, North Dakota repealed the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) and reenacted said Uniform Act as part of the North Dakota Uniform Probate Code. In 1993, North Dakota amended its Uniform Probate Code so that said provision constitutes an adoption of the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1991), effective January 1, 1996.

In 1992, West Virginia amended the provisions which had constituted the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1960) so that such provisions now constitute an adoption of the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (1991).

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 451, 467 to 8B U.L.A. 355; 8B U.L.A. 367.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 451 to 8B U.L.A. 355.

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 467 to 8B U.L.A. 367.

§ 9.03(a)(39) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act.

Delete:

Nebraska (1974), North Carolina (1955), North Dakota (1961), Michigan (1962)

Add:

Virgin Islands (2001).

Change:

Ohio (1986) to Ohio (2006) (repealed the 1986 act and reenacted the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act in 2006).

Change footnote from* 8B U.L.A. 497 to 8C U.L.A. 1.

Change footnote from* 8A U.L.A. 367 to 8A U.L.A. 297, 299.

At end of subsection add new Note 74.1 n74.1

§ 9.03(a)(40) Uniform Trustees' Power Act.

Add:

The following states repealed the Uniform Trustee's Powers Act and enacted the Uniform Trust Code: Florida (2006), Kansas (2002), Maine (2004), Nebraska (2003), New Mexico (2003), Oregon (2005), South Carolina (2005), Utah (2004).

The following states repealed earlier versions of their Uniform Trustees' Powers Act and reenacted a newer version: Michigan (1998), Wyoming (2003).

Change from* 7B U.L.A. 741 to 7C U.L.A. 675.

§ 9.03(a)(41) Uniform Trusts Act.

Add:

Virgin Islands (1957).

Superseded and withdrawn from recommendation in 1984.

Change:

Wyoming (1965) to Wyoming (2003).

Delete:

Kansas (1968), Maine (1979), Nebraska (1980), New Mexico (1975), Oregon (1977), South Carolina (1990), Utah (1975) from list of jurisdictions adopting the Uniform Trustee's Powers Act.

Change from* 7B U.L.A. 763 to 7C U.L.A. 723.

Renumber Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act to § 9.03(a)(44) and add new sections § 9.03(a)(42). Trust Code, and § 9.03(a)(43). Uniform Unclaimed Property Act:

§ 9.03(a)(42) Uniform Trust Code.

Add: Alabama (2006), Arizona (2008), Arkansas (2005), District of Columbia (2004), Florida (2006), Kansas (2002), Maine (2004), Missouri (2004), Nebraska (2003), New Hampshire (2004), New Mexico (2003), North Carolina (2005), North Dakota (2007), Ohio (2006), Oregon (2005), Pennsylvania (2006), South Carolina (2005), Tennessee (2004), Utah (2004), Virginia (2005), Wyoming (2003).

§ 9.03(a)(43) Uniform Unclaimed Property Act

Add:

Adopted in 12 states. Alabama (2004), Arizona (2001), Hawaii (2008), Indiana (2002), Kansas (2000), Louisiana (1997), Maine (1997), Montana (1997), Nevada (2007), New Mexico (1997), North Carolina (2000), Vermont (2006), Virgin Islands (2008), West Virginia (1997). See also n. 9, Ch. 91, in vol. 11.

§ 9.03(a)(44) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act.

Change footnote from* 14 U.L.A. 469 to 14 U.L.A 689.

§ 9.03(b) Model Acts and Codes. [Go To Main]

§ 9.03(b)(1) Model Eminent Domain Code.

Change footnote from* 13 U.L.A. 1 to 13 (Part I) U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.03(b)(2) Model Land Sales Practices Act.

Change footnote from* 7A U.L.A. 669 to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 205.

Add:

In 2008, Florida repealed the provisions of the Model Land Sales Practices Act.

Delete:

Florida (1967, to be repealed in 1995)

§ 9.03(b)(3) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act.

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 225 to 7B U.L.A. 49.

Add:

Pennsylvania (1992)

§ 9.03(b)(4) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act.

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 351 to 7B U.L.A. 175.

Add:

Louisiana (1983), Massachusetts (1987)

§ 9.03(b)(5) Model Surface use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act.

Change footnote from 14 U.L.A. Supp. to 14 U.L.A. 515.

FOOTNOTES:
(n2)Footnote 23.1. Dale A. Whitman, Transfers by Vendors of Interests in Installment Land Sales Contracts: The Impact of Revised Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, 38 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 421 (Fall, 2003).

(n3)Footnote 27.1. Yacht Club II Homeowners Ass'n v. A.C. Excavating, 94 P.3d 1177 (Colo. App. 2003) (Colo. Rev. Stat. § 38-33.3-302(1)(d), patterned after Colorado's Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act, gave standing for homeowner association to pursue damages on behalf of individual homeowners).

(n4)Footnote 30.1. First Union Natl. Bank v. RPB 2, LLC, 674 N.W.2d 1 (N.D. 2004) (North Dakota's mechanic's lien statute, modernized in part by North Dakota's Uniform Construction Lien Act, does not require consideration for a signed writing waiving an individual's right to a mechanic's lien to be effective).

(n5)Footnote 35.1. Canel v. Topinka, 818 N.E.2d 311 (Ill. 2004) (ruling on the manner in which Illinois applies the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act).

(n6)Footnote 51.1. Lawson v. Menefee, 132 S.W.3d (Ky. Ct. App. 2004) (court recognizes that the Uniform Land Transactions Act is not binding in Kentucky, but applied the Act's reasoning because it is consistent with Kentucky law and represents the proper approach to the case at bar).

(n7)Footnote 52.1. In re Baxter, 320 B.R. 30 ; 2004 Bankr. LEXIS 2184 (Bkrtcy. D. Dist. Col. 2004) (case comments on the adoption of the Uniform Law on Notarial Acts in the District of Columbia).

(n8)Footnote 55.1. In re Estate of Blake, 856 A.2d 1151 (D.C. 2004) (court remanded case to consider the effects of the Nonprobate Transfers Act had on determining ownership of Maryland joint bank accounts); Paul J. Buser, Domestic Partner and Non-Marital Claims Against Probate Estates: Marvin Theories Put to A Different Use, Family Law Quarterly (Summer, 2004) (argues that the Nonprobate Transfers Act is insufficient to protect non-married domestic partners).

(n9)Footnote 56.1. Saw Creek Comm. Ass'n, Inc. v. County of Pike, 581 Pa. 436 ; 866 A.2d 260 (Pa. 2005) (decision held that the real property in the instant case is exempt from separate tax assessment).

(n10)Footnote 56.2. Burgoyne v. Pinecrest Community Ass'n, Pa.Super.2007, 924 A.2d 675 (applying the UPCA retroactively to condominiums created eight years before the UPCA became effective).

(n11)Footnote 57.1. Cannon v. Cannon, 384 Md. 537 ; 865 A.2d 563 (Md. App. Ct. 2005) (declining to adopt the UPAA over the common law in Maryland); In re Marriage of Shirilla, 89 P.3d 1 (discussing the adoption of the UPAA in Montana); Binek v. Binek, 673 N.W.2d 594 (discussing the UPAA in North Dakota).

(n12)Footnote 62.1. Waldner v. Stephens, Or.2008, 200 P.3d 556 (holding that the Residential Landlord Tenant Act creates a separate action and does not prevent a tenant from bringing a common-law negligence claim against his landlord); Burke v. Oxford House of Oregon Chapter V, 103 P.3d 1184 (Or. App. Ct. 2004) (discussing the legislative history of the URLTA in Oregon); Caudill v. Acton, 175 S.W.3d 617 (Ky. App. Ct. 2004) (holding tenant liable for damages to leased premises, including damages occurring during holdover periods of possession under the URTLA).

(n13)Footnote 68.1. Fifty-one Flowers: Current Perpetuities Law in the States. Lynn Foster. 22 Prob. & Prop. 30 (July/August 2008) . Larson Operating Co. v. Petroleum, Inc., 84 P.3d 626 (Kan. App. Ct. 2004) (holding that the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities was constitutionally enacted in Kansas).

(n14)Footnote 74.1. In re Hudson, 687 N.W.2d 156 (Mich. Ct. App. 2004) (relying on the UTMA to determine the custody of a child); Mangiante v. Niemiec, 843 A.2d 656 (Conn. App. Ct. 2004) (holding that the UTMA establishes a fiduciary relationship between the custodian and the minor); Radakovich v. Radakovich, 846 A.2d 709 (ruling on several provisions of the Pennsylvania UTMA); Richardson v. Amresco Residential Mort. Corp., 267 Va. 43, 592 S.E.2d 65 (Va. 2004) (holding that mortgagees who only deal with guardians in individual capacity are not entitled to the safe harbor protections of the UTMA in Virginia).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 9.04

Supp. to § 9.04 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Uniform Laws.

[Go To Main]

§ 9.04(a) Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7 (Part I) U.L.A. 471 to 7 (Part IB U.L.A. 223)

Change

Sec. 1-104. Variation by Agreement. to Sec. 1-104. No Variation by Agreement.

Sec. 1-205. Same; Exception for Small Pre-Existing Cooperatives and Planned Communities. to Sec. 1-205. Applicability to Small Preexisting Cooperatives and Planned Communities.

Sec 2-116. Easement Rights. to Sec. 2-116. Easement and Use Rights.

Sec. 3-102. Powers of Unit Owners' Association. to Sec. 3-102. Powers and Duties of Unit Owners Association.

Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases of Declarant. to Sec. 3-105. Termination of Contracts and Leases.

Sec. 3-110. Voting; Proxies. to Sec. 3-110. Voting; Proxies; Ballots.

Sec. 3-115. Assessments for Common Expenses. to Sec. 3-115. Assessments.

Add:

Sec. 1-116. Relation to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act.

Sec. 1-209. Other Exempt Real Estate Arrangements.

Sec. 1-210. Other Exempt Covenants.

Sec. 2-124. Termination Following Catastrophe.

Sec. 3-120. Rules.

Sec. 3-121. Notice to Unit Owners.

Sec. 3-122. Removal of Officers and Directors.

Sec. 3-123. Adoption of Budgets; Special Assessments.

Sec. 3-124. Litigation involving Declarant.

Sec. 4-121. Effective Date.

§ 9.04(b) Uniform Condominium Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7 (Part II) U.L.A. 199 to 7 (Part II) U.L.A. 485.

§ 9.04(c) Uniform Conservation Easement Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 12 U.L.A. 170 to 12 U.L.A. 165.

§ 9.04(d) Uniform Construction Lien Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7 (Part II) U.L.A. 381 to 7 (Part III) U.L.A. 1.

Delete:

(Alternative A) from Sec. 206.

§ 9.04(e) Uniform Dormant Mineral Interests Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7A U.L.A. Supp. to 7A (Part I) U.L.A. 194.

§ 9.04(f) Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7A U.L.A. 639 to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 2.

§ 9.04(g) Uniform Land Security Interest Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7A U.L.A. Supp. to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 244.

Add:

The Uniform Security Interest Act (1985) was withdrawn from recommendation in 1999.

§ 9.04(h) Uniform Land Transactions Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 14 U.L.A. 469 to 13 (Part II) U.L.A. 160.

§ 9.04(i) Uniform Marketable Title Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 13 U.L.A. Supp. to 13 (Part II) U.L.A. 305.

§ 9.04(j) Uniform Planned Community Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 1 to 7A (Part III) U.L.A. 233.

§ 9.04(k) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 427 to 7B U.L.A. 285.

§ 9.04(l) Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 14 U.L.A. 249 to 14 U.L.A. 343.

§ 9.04(m) Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 8B U.L.A. 321 to 8B U.L.A. 223.

§ 9.04(n) Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 8B U.L.A. 497 to 8C U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.04(o) Uniform Unclaimed Property Act. [Go To Main]

Add:

Footnote indicating the U.L.A. page number: 8C U.L.A. 87.

Sec. 18. Destruction or Disposition of Property Having No Substantial Commercial Value; Immunity from Liability.

Sec. 19. Periods of Limitations.

Sec. 20. Requests for Reports and Examination of Records.

Sec. 21. Retention of Records.

Sec. 22. Enforcement.

Sec. 23. Interstate Agreements and Cooperation; Joint and Reciprocal Actions with Other States.

Sec. 24. Interest and Penalties.

Sec. 25. Agreement to Locate Property.

Sec. 26. Foreign Transactions.

Sec. 27. Transitional Provisions.

Sec. 28. Rules.

Sec. 29. Uniformity of Application and Construction.

Sec. 30. Short Title.

Sec. 31. Severability Clause.

Sec. 32. Effective Date.

Sec. 33. Repeals.

§ 9.04(p) Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 8B U.L.A. 497. to 14 U.L.A. 689.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 9.05

Supp. to § 9.05 Summaries of Principal Property-Related Model Laws.

[Go To Main]

§ 9.05(a) Model Eminent Domain Code. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 13 U.L.A. 1. to 13 (Part I) U.L.A. 1.

§ 9.05(b) Model Land Sales Practices Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7A U.L.A. 669 to 7A (Part II) U.L.A. 205.

§ 9.05(c) Model Real Estate Cooperative Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 225 to 7B U.L.A. 49.

§ 9.05(d) Model Real Estate Time-Share Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 7B U.L.A. 351 to 7B U.L.A. 175.

§ 9.05(e) Model Surface use and Mineral Development Accommodation Act. [Go To Main]

Change footnote from 14 U.L.A. Supp. to 14 U.L.A. 515.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 9 UNIFORM AND MODEL LAWS RELATED TO PROPERTY

2-9 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 9.07

Supp. to § 9.07 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Articles

Add:

Miller, Fred H., "The Uniform Law Process for the Development of Private State Law in the United States: A Model for Other Systems?," 60 Consumer Fin. L.Q. Rep. 4 (2006).

Sampson, John J. "Uniform Family Laws and Model Acts." 42 Fam.L.Q. 673 (Fall 2008).

Add:

Buck, Gurdon H., "Drafting Documentation for Dockominiums," 18 Prob. & Prop 38 (May- June 2004) .

Elberg, Amos B., "Remedies for Common Interest Development Rule Violations," Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 101 (2001) 1958.

Geis, Norman, "Beyond the Condominium; The Uniform Common-Interest Ownership Act," 17 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 757 (1982).

Orten, Jerry C. M. and John H. Zacharias, "Allocation of Damages for Tort Liability in Common Interest Communities," 31 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 647 (1997).

Orten, Jerry C. M. and Laura J. Gibson, "Successfully Amending Common Interest Community Covenants," 13 Prob. &

Prop. 17 (May-June 1999) .

Petty, Mark, "Reserved Development Rights under Uniform Common Interest Acts," 13 Prob. & Prop. 44 (May-June 1999) .

McPherson, Duncan R., " Drafting Considerations for Community Association Documents,: 15 Prob. & Prop. 25 (Jan.-Feb. 2001) .

Rawling, Zachary M. "Reevaluating Leasing Restrictions in Community Associations: Rejecting Reasonableness in Favor of Consent." 5 J.L. Econ. & Pol'y 223 (Fall 2009).

"Residential Associations and the Concept of Consensual Governance," 9 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 91 (1986).

Sproul, Curtis C., "California's Mutual Benefit Corporation Law: Appropriate Domicile for Community Associations?," 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 695 (1984).

Van der Merwe, Cornelius and Luis Muniz-Arguelles, "Enforcement of Financial Obligations in a Condominium or Apartment Ownership Scheme," 16 Duke J. Comp. & Int'l L. 125 (2006).

Winston, Roger D. and Timothy P. Martin, Transition of Homeowners Association Control: The Developer's Perspective," 15 Prob. & Prop. 15 (2001) .

Wirth, Richard J., "Uncertainty in the Application of Connecticut Condominium and Common Interest Ownership Foreclosure Statutes--A Tale of Two Governing Acts," Conn. B.J. 223 (1992).

Wirth, Richard J., "Valuation of Special Declarant and Development Rights," 22 Real Est. Rev. 74 (1992).

Add:

"Analysis of the Texas Condominium Act: Maintenance and Operation of Condominium Projects," 11 St. Mary's L.J. 861 (1980).

Blackburn, John D. and Nancy J. Melia, "Ohio Condominium Law Reform," 29 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 145 (1978).

Buck, Gurdon H., "Drafting Documentation for Dockominiums," 18 Prob. & Prop 38 (May-June 2004) .

Combs, Lorin Williams, "The Sky's the Limit: Financing High-Rise and Mixed-Use Condominium Developments in Texas," 70 Tex. B.J. 326 (2007).

"Common Rights and Obligations among unit owners under Minnesota Uniform Condominium Act," 10 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 157 (1984).

"Condominium Conversion," Duke L.J. 306 (1980).

Cohen, Stephen B., Allan Goldberg & Conrad M. Mulvaney, "Condominium Law: Comparison of Uniform Act with Illinois Act," 147 J. Marshall L. Rev. 387 (1981).

"Expanding Condominiums in Ohio," 29 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 228 (1978).

Graff, N. Walter, "Minnesota Uniform Condominium Act: View of Developers' Counsel," 10 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 71 (1984).

Grassmick, David E., "Minding the Neighbor's Business: Just How Far Can Condominium Owners' Associations Go in Deciding Who Can Move Into the Building?," U. III. L. Rev. Vol. 2002 (2002) 185.

McConnell, Rick, Comment: " 'You Can't Always Get What You Want--But If You Try Sometimes, You Might Find You Get What You Need': The Search for Single Family Homeowner Protections In Missouri," 69 UMKC Law Review 409 (Winter 2000).

Marre, Daniel G.M. and Alexandra R. Cole, "Comparative View of Laws Governing Condominium-Type Projects," 15 Construction Lawyer (July 1999).

Nodiff, Marvin J., "Classes of Consumers in Common Ownership Property Regimes," 42 J. Mo. B. 93 (Mar. 1986).

O'Donnell, Mark F. and David E. Chawes, "Improving the Construction and Litigation Resolution Process: The 2005 Amendments to the Washington Condominium Act are a Win-Win for Homeowners and Developers," 29 Seattle U. L. Rev. 515 (2006).

Peterson, Edward A., "High Rise Multi-Use Development: The Rise of Vertical Multi-Use Condominiums," 19 Prob. & Prop. 53 (Sept.-Oct. 2005) .

Petty, Mark, "Reserved Development rights under Uniform Common Interest Acts," 13 Prob. & Prop. 44 (May-June 1999) .

"Regulating Timeshare Interests in Minnesota: Comprehensive Solution," 10 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 115 (1984).

Roberts, Kent H., "Uniform Condominium Acts: New Flexibility for Developers," 40 J. Mo. B. 177 (1984).

"Uniform Condominium Act in Missouri," 49 Mo. L. Rev. 595 (1984).

Vial, A. Richard, "Oregon Condominium Act," 18 Willamette L. Rev. 95 (1981).

Weakland, Brian L., "Condominium Associations: Living Under the Due Process Shadow," 13 Pepp. L. Rev. 297 (1986).

Wynn, Randy, "Condominium Conversion and Tenant Rights," 63 Marq. L. Rev. 73 (1979).

Add:

Airey, Shea B. "Conservation Easements in Private Practice." 4 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 745 (Winter 2010) .

Lindstrom, C. Timothy "Conservation Easements, Common Sense and the Charitable Trust Doctrine." 9 Wyo. L. Rev.

397 (2009).

Arpad, Alexander R., "Private Transactions, Public Benefits, and Perpetual Control Over the Use of Real Property: Interpreting Conservation Easements as Charitable Trusts," 37 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 91 (2002).

McDaniel, Erin., "Property Law: The Uniform Conservation Easements Act: An Attorney's Guide for the Oklahoma Landowner," 55 Okla L. Rev. 341 (Summer, 2002).

King, Mary Ann and Sally K. Fairfax, "Public Accountability and Conservation Easements: Learning From the Uniform Conservation Easement Act Debates," 46 Nat. Resources J. 65 (2006).

Lindstrom, C. Timothy, "Changes in the Law Regarding Conservation Easements: An Update," 5 Wyo. L. Rev. 557 (2005).

Lippmann, Jessica Owley, "Exacted Conservation Easements: The Hard Case of Endangered Species Protection," 19(2) J. Envtl. L. & Litig. 293 (2004).

Mahoney, Julia D., "Perpetual Restrictions on Land and the Problem of the Future," Va. L. Rev. Vol. 88 (2002) 739.

McLaughlin, Nancy A., "Could Coalbed Methane Be the Death of Conservation Easements?," 29 Wyo. Law. 18 (2006).

Rudolph, Maureen and Adrian Gosch, Comment: "A Practitioner's Guide To Drafting Conservation Easements and the Tax Implications," 4 Great Plains Nat. Resources J. 143 (Spring/Summer 2000).

Welsh, Joshua P., "Firm Ground for Wetland Protection: Using the Treaty Power to Strengthen Conservation Easements," 36 Stetson L. Rev. 207 (2006).

Add:

Glass, Ethan, "Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal for Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law By Federal Action," 27 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 67 (2000).

Add:

Duea, James N., "Interaction Between Mechanic's Lien Law and the Bankruptcy Code," 53 Bus. Law. 1283 (1998).

Kuhn, Steven J. Article: "The Noble Architect, The Heartless Landowner and an Ambiguity in Oregon's Construction Lien Statue." Willamette L. Rev. Vol. 41 (2005) 95.

Add:

Case, Stephen S., "Basic Estate and Gift Taxation and Planning An Introduction to Valuation Principles and Rearranging Estates Post-Mortem," SF22 ALI-ABA 247 (2001).

Add:

Case, Stephen S., "An Introduction to Valuation Principles and Rearranging Estates Post-Mortem," ALI-ABA. Vol. SG025 (2001).

Hirsch, Adam J. and Richard R. Gans, "Disclaimer Reform: New Developments and Additional Reflections," 32 Est. Plan. (June 2005).

Hirsch, Adam J. and Richard R. Gans, "Perfecting Disclaimer Reform: Suggestions for a Revised Uniform Act," 31 Est. Plan. 185 (April 2004).

Hirsch, Adam J., "Revisions in Need of Revising: The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act," Fla. St. U.L. Rev. Vol. 29 (2001) 109.

LaPiana, William P. "Some Property Law Issues in the Law of Disclaimers," 38 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 207 (Summer 2003).

Llewellyn, Don W., Kenneth J. Levin & Barbara B. Lewis, "Disclaimers by a Surviving Spouse: The Trend of Increased Opportunities for Post Mortem Tax Planning Continues," 35 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 1 (2000).

Add:

Pratt, David, "Property Owned by the Decedent and Jointly Owned Property," SM005 ALI-ABA 35 (2006).

Reinecke, David W., "Community Property Issues For Noncommunity Property Practitioners," SF93 ALI-ABA 967 (2001). Case, Stephen S., "Basic Estate and Gift Taxation and Planning: Property Owned By The Decedent, Powers of Appointment and Joint Tenancy," SF21 ALI-ABA 37 (2000).

Add:

Houghton, Kendall L. and John L. Coalson, Jr., "What Every Tax Lawyer Needs to Know: Unclaimed Property," 491 PLI/Tax 209 (Mar./Apr. 2001).

McLain, J. Anthony, "Unclaimed Client Trust Funds--Escheat to State," 67 Ala. Law. 300 (2006).

McLain, Anthony. "Unclaimed Client Trust Funds--Escheat to State." 70 Ala. Law. 297 (2009).

Add:

Bloom, Ira M. "Unifying the Rules for Wills and Revocable Trusts in the Federal Estate Tax Apportionment Arena: suggestions for Reform." 43 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 447 (2008) .

Kahn, Douglas A., "2003 Revised Uniform Apportionment Act," 38 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 613 (Winter 2004).

Add:

Pennell, Jeffrey N., "Planning Techniques for Large Estates Tax: Payment Provisions and Equitable Apportionment," SF79 ALI-ABA 401 (2001).

Add:

Huss, Rebecca J., "Revamping Veil Piercing for All Limited Liability Entities: Forcing the Common Law Doctrine Into the Statutory Age," U. Cin. L. Rev. Vol. 70 (2001) 95.

Simms, Marsha E., "Asset-Based Financing 2001: Acquisition Financing," 821 PLI/Comm 463 (2001). Sinclair, Paul. "The Sad Tale of Fraudulent Transfers" 28-APR Am. Bankr. Inst. J. 16 (2009). Young, David B., "Preferences and Fraudulent Transfers," 819 PLI/Comm 881 (2001). Ominsky, Harris, "Fraudulent Conveyances: Tax Lien Survives Transfer," 20 Real Estate Law Report 2 (Feb. 2001).

Add:

Biedzynski, Kenneth W. & Giggetts, Stephanie. "Fraudulent Conveyances and Transfers" 37 Am. Jur. 2d § 4 (2010).

Greer, Brian E., "Guaranties in Bankruptcy: A Primer," 16 J. Bankr. L. & Prac. 3 Art. 2 (2007).

Lashko, Oksana, "Enhancing Creditor Recovery: Should Services Be Deemed "Property" for the Purpose of Fraudulent Transfer Law?," 72 Brook. L. Rev. 317 (2006).

Wilder, Joanne Ross, "Spending the Children's Money: A Critical Look at Custodial Accounts," 20 J. Am. Acad. Matrim. Law. 127 (2006).

Simms, Marsha E., "Asset-Based Financing 2001: Acquisition Financing," 821 PLI/Comm 463 (2001). Ominsky, Harris, "Fraudulent Conveyances: Tax Lien Survives Transfer," 20 Real Estate Law Report 2 (Feb. 2001). Cook, Michael L., Alesia Ranney-Marinelli, and Kayalyn A. Marafioti, "Fraudulent Transfers," 819 PLI/Comm 815 (2001).

Add:

Mancini, Mary Ann & Stefan F. Tucker, "Estate Tax Planning for Real Estate Owners: Estate Planning for Real Estate," ALI-ABA. Vol. SH036 (2002).

Ruby, Stanley L., "Basic Estate and Gift Taxation and Planning: Fundamentals of Estate and Gift Tax," SF22 ALI-ABA 1 (2001).

Add:

Benfield Jr., Marion W., "Future Advances Lender: Status Under Present Illinois Law and Under ULTA and USOLTA," S. Ill. L.J. 451 (1981).

Britzke, Barbara J., "Residential Real Estate Transactions: Comparison of Uniform Land Transaction Act and Maryland Law," 13 U. Balt. L. Rev. 43 (1983).

Brown, Ronald Benton, "Article 1 of the Uniform Land Transactions Act: Is Inconsistency with the UCC an Unnecessary Obstacle?," S. Ill. U. L.J. 585 (1981).

Dunham, Allison, "Reflections of a Statutory Draftsman: Land Transaction Acts," S. Ill. U. L.J. (1981).

Geis, Norman, "Escape From the 15th Century: The Uniform Land Security Interest Act," 30 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 289, 307 (1995).

Glass, Ethan, "Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal for Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law By Federal Action," 27 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 67 (2000).

Henning, William H., "Analysis of Durrett and Its Impact on Real and Personal Property Foreclosures," 63 N.C. L. Rev. 257 (1985).

"Housing Defects: Homeowners' Remedies," 21 Washburn L.J. 72 (1981).

Korngold, Gerald, "Construction Loan Advances and the Subordinated Purchase Money Mortgagee," 50 Fordham L. Rev. 313 (1981).

Kratovil, Robert, "Mortgage Law Today," 13 J. Marshall L. Rev. 251 (1980).

"ULTA and Non-Judicial Mortgage Foreclosures in Texas," 12 St. Mary's L.J. 1104 (1981).

"Uniform Land Transactions Act: Pennsylvania Property Law and Sellers' Remedies for Breach of Contract for Sale of Real Estate," 55 Temp. L. Rev. 577 (1982).

"Warranties in Uniform Land Transactions," 49 Temp. L. Rev. 162 (1975).

Add:

ABA, Revising the Uniform Law on Notarial Acts, 23-DEC Prob & Prop. 6 (2009).

Closen, Michael L., Trevor J. Orsinger, and Bradley A. A. Ullrick, "Notarial Records And The Preservation Of The Expectation Of Privacy," 35 U.S.F. L. Rev. 159 (Winter 2001).

Closen, Michael L. and G. Grant Dixon III, "Notaries Public From the Time of the Roman Empire to the United States Today, and Tomorrow," 68 N.D. L. Rev. 873 (1992).

Thomas, Daniel F. "Property Disposition in Divorce and Annulment." DCSL MD-CLE 3-191 (2009).

Add:

Boykoff, Thomas, M., "Marital Property Act and Wisconsin Taxation," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 18 (July 1984).

Brauer, Mary A., "Impact of Marital Property Act on Deferred Employment Benefits," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 35 (July 1984).

Bruch, Carol S., "Definition and Division of Marital Property in California: Towards Parity and Simplicity," 33 Hastings L.J. 771 (1982).

Bugge, Lawrence J., "Credit Under Wisconsin's Marital Property Act," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 21 (July 1984).

Cantwell, William P., "Drafting Uniform Marital Property Act: Issues and Debate," 21 Hous. L. Rev. 669 (1984).

Friedman, Gary H., "Uniform Marital Property Act," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 31 (July 1984).

Furrh, Daniel L., "Divorce and the Marital Property Act," 62 Wis. Law. 23 (Jan. 1989).

Furrh, Daniel L., "Is Marital Property Act Retroactive?," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 15 (July 1984).

Kathy T. Graham, "The Uniform Marital Property Act: A Solution for Common Law Property Systems," 48 S.D. L.

Rev. 455 (2002-2003).

Haupt, Erika L., "For Better, for Worse, for Richer, for Poorer: Premarital Agreement Case Studies," 37 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 29 (2002).

Horton, Wm. Pharis, "Real Estate and Conveyancing Under Marital Property Act," 57 Wis. B. Bull. (July 1984).

"Marital Property Law," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 40 (July 1984).

McDaniel, Patrick L., "Minding the Money," 27 Fam. Advoc. 40 (Spring 2003).

Roberson, Linda and Richard J. Langer, "Marital Agreements: Financial Planning Tool," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 29 (July 1984).

Schumaker, Richard E., "Life Insurance Planning Under Marital Property Act," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 37 (July 1984).

Tooley-Knoblett, Dian, "A Step By Step Guide to Louisiana's Choice of Law Provisions on Marital Property," 52 Loy. L. Rev. 759 (2006).

Wadlington, Walter, "Uniform Marital Property Act Symposium," 21 Hous. L. Rev. 595 (1984).

Wenig, Mary Moers, "Marital Property Act," 69 Women Law. J. 9 (1983).

Weisberger, June Miller and Michael W. Wilcox, "Wisconsin Marital Property Act," 57 Wis. B. Bull. 10 (July 1984).

Winter, William, "UMPA Fights for Recognition," 70 A.B.A. J. 76 (1984).

Add:

Krasnowiecki, Jan Z., "The Pennsylvania Uniform Planned Community Act," Dick L. Rev. Vol. 106 (2002) 463.

McConnell, Rick, " 'You Can't Always Get What You Want--But If You Try Sometimes, You Might Find You Get What You Need': The Search for Single Family Homeowner Protections In Missouri," 69 UMKC Law Review 409 (Winter 2000)

Pena, Karen Ellert, "Reining in Property Owners' Associations' Power: Texas's Need for a Comprehensive Plan," 33 St. Mary's L.J. 323 (2002).

Add:

Belcher, Dennis I. and Laura O. Pomeroy, "A Practitioner's Guide for Negotiating, Drafting and Enforcing Premarital Agreements," 37 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 1 (2002).

Belcher, Dennis I. and Laura O. Pomeroy, "For Richer, for Poorer: Strategies for Premarital Agreements," 12 Prob. & Prop. 55 (Nov.-Dec. 1998).

Bix, Brian H., "Premarital Agreements in the ALI Principles of Family Dissolution," Duke J. Gender & Pol'y. Vol. 8 (2001) 231.

Brashier, Ralph C., "Disinheritance and the Modern Family," 45 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 93 (1995).

Comment, "Elgar v. Probate Appeal: The Probate Court's Implied Powers to Construe and to Enforce Prenuptial Agreements," 9 Conn. Prob. L.J. 145 (1994).

Cotter, David M., "Substantive Sufficiency of Marital Agreements: Unconscionability and Unfairness," 17 Div. Litig. 173 (Nov. 2005).

Fink, Howard and June Carbone, "Between Private Ordering and Public Fiat: A New Paradigm for Family law Decision-Making," 5 J.L. & Fam. Stud. 1 (2003).

Franck, Jens-Uwe. " 'So Hedge Therefore, Who Join Forever': Understanding the Interrelation of No-Fault Divorce and Premarital Contracts." 23 Int'l J.L. Pol'y & Fam. 235 (2009).

Haupt, Erika L., "For Better, for Worse, for Richer, for Poorer: Premarital Agreement Case Studies," 37 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 29 (2002).

Inkeles, Doreen, "The Uniform Premarital Agreement Act: Taking Casto to a New Level for Prenuptial Agreements," 81 Fla. B.J. 32 (2007).

Morgan, Laura W., "Waivers of Spousal Support in Antenuptial Agreements," 17 Div. Ltitig. 62 (April 2005).

Oldham, J. Thomas, "Premarital Contracts: Now Enforceable, Unless--.," 21 Hous. L. Rev. 757 (1984).

Parkman, Allen M., Article Reforming Divorce Reform, 41 Santa Clara L. Rev. 379 (2001). Reinecke, David W., Community Property Issues For Noncommunity Property Practitioners, SF93 ALI-ABA 967 (2001).

Sikaitis, Joline F., Comment: A New Form of Family Planning? The Enforceability of No-Child Provisions in Prenuptial Agreements, 54 Cath. U.L. Rev. 335 (2004).

Wolfson, Susan. "Premarital Waiver of Alimony." Fam. L.Q. Vol. 38 (2004) 141.

Wolfson, Susan, "Premarital Waiver of Alimony," 38 Fam. L.Q. 141 (Spring 2004).

Younger, Judith T., "Perspectives on Antenuptial Agreements," 40 Rutgers L. Rev. 1059 (1988).

Add:

Bailey, Erin C. V., "Asset Protection Trusts Protect the Assets: But What About the Trustees?," 21 Prob. & Prop. 58

(2007) .

Cobb, Tracy Dawn, "North Carolina's New Elective Share Statute: Much Ado About Nothing?" 36 Wake Forest L. Rev. 795 (Fall 2001).

David, Hailey H. "Note: The Revocation-Upon-Divorce Doctrine: Tennessee's Need to Adopt the Broader Uniform Probate Code Approach." 39 U. Mem. L. Rev. 383 (2009).

"Fried, Marin L., "Disappointed Heir: Going Beyond the Probate Process to Remedy Wrongdoing or Rectify Mistake," 39 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 357 (Summer 2004).

Kahn, Douglas A., "2003 Revised Uniform Estate Tax Apportionment Act," 38 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 613 (Winter 2004).

Massey, Calvin, "Designation of Heirs: A Modest Proposal to Diminish Will Contests," 37 St. Mary's L.J. 577 (2003).

Pratt, Robert S., "Vermont Probate and Trust Law Issues for Change," 32 Vt. B.J. 38 (2007).

Randolph Jr., John W. and Jennifer Gurevitz, "Opportunities and Pitfalls with Non-Pro Rata Distributions to Residuary Beneficiaries," 19 Prob. & Prop. 60 (July-Aug. 2005) .

Stevens, Ann Bradford, "Uniform Probate Code Procedures: Time for Wyoming to Reconsider," Wyo. L. Rev. Vol. 2 (2002) 293.

Tritt, Lee-ford. "Technical Correction or Tectonic Shift: Competing Default Rule Theories Under the New Uniform Probate Code." 61 Ala. L. Rev. 273 (2010).

English, David M. and Raymond H. Young, "Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries: Uniform Trust Code," SG012 ALI-ABA 205 (2001). Uniform Probate Code, CCH, Incorporated (2001).

Mignogna, Steven K., "Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries Study Materials," SG012 ALI-ABA 109 (2001).

Wiedemann, William H., "Pre-Death Creditors' Claims Under The Colorado Probate Code: Part I," 30-AUG Colo. Law. 81 (2001).

Add:

Gardella, Lawrence F., "New Landlord-Tenant Act Makes It Easier for Legal Services and VLP Lawyers to Help Low-Income Tenants," 68 Ala. Law. 41 (2007).

Norman, Ashlley E. "Legislative Note: A Tenant's Dilemma: The Arkansas Residential LandLord-Tenant Act of 2007" 62 Ark. L. Rev. 859 (2009).

Paine, Donald F. "The Unconstitutional Non-Uniform Residential Land and Tenant Act," Tenn. B.J. Vol. 41 (October, 2005) 30.

Schaffzin, Danny. "Landlord Weapon or Tenant Shield? A Proposal to Reform North Dakota's Residential Security Deposit Statute." 85 N.D. L. Rev. 251 (2009).

Smith, Jeffrey C., "The New Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act: Balancing the Scales of Justice in the Landlord-Tenant Relationship," 67 Ala. Law. 422 (2006).

Add:

Glass, Ethan, "Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal For Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law By Federal Action," 27 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 67 (2000).

Madison, Michael, "The Real Properties of Contract Law," B.U.L. Rev. Vol. 82 (2002) 405.

Add:

Arcuri, Stephen M. "Does Simultaneous Really Mean Simultaneous? Interpreting the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act, Quinnipiac Prob. L.J. Vol. 17 (2004) 338.

French, Rebecca R., "Time in the Law," 72 U. Colo. L. Rev. 663 (Summer 2001).

Add:

Appel, Peter A. "The Embarrassing Rule Against Perpetuities." J. Legal Educ. Vol. 54 (2004) 264.

English, David M. and Raymond H. Young, "Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries--Uniform Trust Code," SG012 ALI-ABA 205 (2001).

Fellows, Mary Louise and Gregory S. Alexander, "Forty Years of Codification of Estates and Trusts Law: Lessons for the Next Generation," 40 Ga. L. Rev. 1049 (2006).

Fried, Martin L., "Disappointed Heir: Going Beyond the Probate Process to Remedy Wrongdoing or Rectify Mistake," 39 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 357 (Summer 2004).

Gazur, Wayne M., "Colorado Revisits the Rule Against Perpetuities," 35 Colo. Law. 75 (2006) .

Hirsch, Adam J., "Trusts for Purposes: Policy, Ambiguity, and Anomaly in the Uniform Laws," 26 Fla. St. L. Rev. 913 (1999).

McCrimmon, Les A., "Gametes, Embryos and the Life in Being: The Impact of Reproductive Technology on the Rule Against Perpetuities, 34 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 697 (2000).

Richard W. Nenno, "Planning Techniques for Large Estates--Planning with Dynasty Trusts," SF79 ALI-ABA 1543 (2001).

Schanzenbach, Max M. and Robert H. Sitkoff, "Perpetuities or Taxes? Explaining the Rise of the Perpetual Trust," 27 Cardozo L. Rev. 2465 (2006).

Sneddon, Karen J., "The Sleeper Has Awakened: The Rule Against Accumulations and Perpetual Trusts," Tul L. Rev. Vol. 76 (2001) 189.

Vollmar, Valerie J., "The Oregon Uniform Trust Code and Comments," 42 Willamette L. Rev. 187 (2006).

Add:

Foster, Frances H., "Privacy and the Elusive Quest for Uniformity in the Law of Trusts," 38 Ariz. St. L.J. 713 (2006).

Vollmar, Valerie J., "The Oregon Uniform Trust Code and Comments," 42 Willamette L. Rev. 187 (2006).

Add:

Knaplund, Kristine S., "Grandparents Raising Grandchildren and the Implications for Inheritance," 48 Ariz. L. Rev. 1 (2006).

Maurer, Jani. "Uniform Transfers to Minors Act Accounts-Progress, Potential, and Pitfalls." Nova L. Rev. Vol. 28 (2004) 745.

Slade, Georgiana J., "Successful Inter-Generational Business & Estate Planning; How to Keep the Family in the Family Business: Intervivos Generation-Skipping Tax Transfer Tax Planning," 304 PLI/Est 63 (2001). Hoke, Patricia A., "Starting Points: The Fundamentals of Practice in Illinois Estate Planning," SP IL-CLE 11-1 (2001).

Add:

Begleiter, Martin D., "In the Code We Trust-Some Trust Law For Iowa at Last," Drake L. Rev. Vol. 49 (2001) 165.

English, David M. and Raymond H. Young, "Representing Estate and Trust Beneficiaries and Fiduciaries: Uniform Trust Code," SG012 ALI-ABA 205 (2001).

Add:

Glass, Ethan, "Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal For Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law By Federal Action," 27 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 67 (2000).

Hastie, John D., "Real Estate Acquisition, Development, and Disposition From Developer's Perspective," SM002 ALI-ABA 1 (2006).

Madison, Michael, "The Real Properties of Contract Law," B.U.L Rev. Vol. 82 (2002) 405.

Add:

Hand, Kristeen M. and Kyle R. Smith, "Potential Solutions to Emerging Conflicts Regarding On-Lease and Off-Lease Surface Damage Caused by Coal Bed Methane Production," Wyo. L. Rev. Vol. 1 (2001) 661.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 10.syn

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.syn Synopsis to Chapter 10: THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

§ 10.01 Introduction.

§ 10.02 Theories of Private Property Rights Advanced by Greek Writers.

§ 10.02(a) Private Property as a Natural Right; Equality of Holdings.

§ 10.02(a)(1) Plato.

§ 10.02(a)(2) Aristotle.

§ 10.02(b) Plato and Aristotle Compared.

§ 10.03 Theories of Private Property Rights Advanced by Roman Writers.

§ 10.03(a) The Natural Law Foundations of Property.

§ 10.03(b) Views of Early Christian Writers in the Roman Tradition.

§ 10.04 Changing Views of Private Property in Medieval Christianity.

§ 10.04(a) Adjusting Natural Law Concepts to Accept Private Property.

§ 10.04(b) Conflict Between Religious and Civil Regulation of Property Rights.

§ 10.05 The Effect of the Reformation on Christian Views of Property Rights.

§ 10.05(a) Luther and Melancthon.

§ 10.05(b) Calvin.

§ 10.05(c) James I of England.

§ 10.06 Shifts Away from Religion-Based Property Rights.

§ 10.06(a) Grotius.

§ 10.06(b) Hobbes.

§ 10.06(c) Pufendorf.

§ 10.06(d) Locke.

§ 10.07 The "Classical" Theories of Property.

§ 10.08 Utilitarian Theories of Property Rights.

§ 10.09 Contemporary Comment on Property Rights.

§ 10.09(a) Sources with Annotations.

§ 10.09(b) Sources without Annotations.

David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.01

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.01 Introduction.

Philosophical and "historical" speculations about how humans first conceived notions of private property rights have existed for millennia. Speculation is the prevailing mode of discourse, because hard evidence of private property's origins is not available. n1 With the information available, it simply is not possible to determine how humankind in the "state of nature" first began to recognize some sort of property characteristics, either of possession or ownership. This lack of evidence has left the "state of nature" field wide open to the learned speculations of several disciplines, each promoting its own perceived rationality and none subject to final dismissal by the others. Whether the earliest humans were by nature peaceful or warlike, whether property was originally perceived as an individual or as a community asset, and whether property could be either tangible or intangible, are still matters beyond our knowledge. n2 The speculations we still have in written form are as early as the ancient Greek philosophers.

This chapter reviews the principal theoretical expositions of private property rights in mostly chronological fashion, beginning with the Greeks and following the thoughts on this topic into modern times. The author's intent is to present a discussion that is accessible to the ordinarily intelligent reader, so that improved understanding does not require that a reader have an unusually strong background or interest in this subject.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. See David A. Thomas, Chapter 1, "Property Concepts Among Primitive Cultures," supra.

(n2)Footnote 2. Id. at § 1.02.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.02

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.02 Theories of Private Property Rights Advanced by Greek Writers.

Not surprisingly, the Greeks who philosophized about private property rights succeeded in identifying the principal issues and the main theories that have informed the learned discussions ever since. They did not speculate on how private property rights arose in the state of nature, but instead stated their views on what the ideal of property rights distribution should be.

§ 10.02(a) Private Property as a Natural Right; Equality of Holdings.

§ 10.02(a)(1) Plato.

In the idealized conditions described by Plato in his Republic, the lowest classes would hold property privately, but subject to severe restrictions, and would use the property to provide the necessities of life for themselves and for the ruling class. The rulers would own no private property themselves, but would regulate the private property rights held by the lower classes, especially to guard against inequality, to regulate buying and selling, and to promote the notion that all held their property in common. n3

As an alternative to the idealized state of The Republic, Plato reiterated in his Laws that communal holding was best, but in consideration of human nature, citizens should all hold private property in land, which would be worked by slaves. By various regulations the number of citizens and their property holdings would remain constant; if inequalities arose, excess holdings would be turned back to the state. n4

Thus Plato saw property as best held communally, but approved of establishing private rights in land as necessary to satisfy human nature. In general, when private property rights are held, holdings should be equal and state regulations should guard against growth of inequality.

§ 10.02(a)(2) Aristotle.

Aristotle, too, speculated about ideals in private property ownership. While recognizing value in private ownership, he advocated equality in distribution. Thus, half the land would be held in common by citizens to provide for meals and public religion, while the other half of the land would be divided into private individual ownership, probably in equal shares, although Aristotle was vague on that point. n5 All working of the land would be done by slaves in behalf of the free citizens.

Aristotle recognized that if individual persons hold their own private interests in property, less conflict will arise because all owners will be pursuing their own activities. Yet he also acknowledged that it is probably more virtuous for persons to hold and use property in common. Therefore, Aristotle's ideal is for property to be owned privately, but to be used in common, with law having the special function of encouraging citizens to be so beneficially disposed toward one another. n6

§ 10.02(b) Plato and Aristotle Compared.

One writer has concluded that "Plato is the first great theorist of communism" in the context of property ownership by the ruling classes;" Aristotle is the advocate of private ownership by the ruling citizens. When all inhabitants are considered, Plato does not appear to advocate extensive communal ownership and Aristotle does not support private ownership by the majority of people. n7

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 3. Plato's The Republic 421, 424, 425 (B. Jowett trans., n.d.).

(n2)Footnote 4. The Laws of Plato, Book V, 739c et seq. (Thomas L. Pangle, trans. 1980).

(n3)Footnote 5. Aristotle, Politics, Book VII (T. A. Sinclair, trans. 1962).

(n4)Footnote 6. Id., Book II.

(n5)Footnote 7. Richard Schlatter, Private Property: The History of an Idea 19 (1951).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.03

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.03 Theories of Private Property Rights Advanced by Roman Writers.

§ 10.03(a) The Natural Law Foundations of Property.

Both Cicero and Seneca were among the chief ancient Roman writers who posited a natural law foundation for rights in property. Natural law, for Cicero, n8 existed before law was expressed in writing n9 and all persons are equal before the law of nature. n10 However, persons are not equal in their ownership of property, and property should not belong to one who doesn't know how to use it. n11 This suggests that, for Cicero, property rights based on natural law should be limited to what one needs. Cicero also recognized property rights based on civil law, and he sharply criticized excessive governmental regulation of or interference with private property rights. n12

Writing a century later, Seneca expressed the view that humans in the state of nature held property in common, with equal access for the satisfaction of needs. The emergence of laws and customs governing property occurred only because the excessive greed of some necessitated regulation for order. n13

Great Roman jurists flourished in the first two centuries, C. E., the high point of Roman legal development. Roman lawyers of the sixth century, C. E., reviewed those writings for inclusion in their remarkable works published in the sixth century, C. E., under the auspices of the Emperor Justinian. Both groups of writers drew various and occasionally inconsistent distinctions between the law of nature, the law of nations (conventional or customary law widely recognized by various peoples), and the civil law. Thus Ulpian of the second century, C.E., is quoted in Justinian's Digest as proclaiming that by nature all men are equal n14 --that is, that they have equal access to resources--a view approved four centuries later in Justinian's Institutes. n15 When Roman legal works, after long neglect, were discovered and studied again in medieval times, some of those scholars favored the notion that individual property rights did not arise out of natural law, but were created by the civil law in consequence of human shortcomings and corrupted nature, a view consistent with then prevailing Christian doctrines. Nevertheless, a perspective linking natural law and property rights persisted.

§ 10.03(b) Views of Early Christian Writers in the Roman Tradition.

The secular Roman notion that property in the state of nature was a resource accessible to all in common was congenial to early Christian attitudes toward material goods. These attitudes are revealed in the following passage from the Book of Acts in the New Testament:

> And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things in common. n16
>
> ... for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,
>
> And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. n17

This attitude of the early Christian converts came to be revered by later Christians. When later Christian writers formulated theories of property rights, they sought to accommodate this attitude that prevailed in the early church with the Roman philosophies with which they were thoroughly familiar. Thus if one believed that Romans considered property as a communal resource according to natural law, and recognized private rights in property only as a concession to human imperfection, one could readily fit in Christian doctrine: Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden--and the earliest Christians, having obtained more pure doctrine from Jesus--held their property in common; only after the Fall and only after early Christians began to accommodate the imperfections of their fellow saints, was private and unequal ownership of property permitted to develop.

According to these developing Christian doctrines, private rights in property were not embodied in natural law, but were based on conventional law that took human shortcomings into account. Clement of Alexandria in the third century urged that Christians adopt the principle of using property in common. n18 Ambrose taught that property was common by nature and should be held for common use. n19 Augustine also maintained that private rights in property were a human, not a divine, invention and convention. n20 Furthermore, only those who used property rightly were justified in their possession of property. n21

In summary, if in early Christian theory private rights in property resulted from the fall of man, then recognition and regulation of those rights was one way to both satisfy and contain the greed of fallen mankind. Common ownership and individual use would be the divine and natural ideal.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 8. Cicero, The Republic; and, the Laws, Republic, III, 32 (Niall Rudd, trans. 1998).

(n2)Footnote 9. Id., Laws, I, 6.

(n3)Footnote 10. Id., Laws, I, 10.

(n4)Footnote 11. Republic, I, 17.

(n5)Footnote 12. Cicero, De Officiis, II, 21, 22 (C. Atzert, ed. 1996).

(n6)Footnote 13. Seneca, Letters, 90 (E. P. Barker, trans. 1932).

(n7)Footnote 14. Justinian's Digest, L, 17, 32.

(n8)Footnote 15. Justinian's Institutes, I, 2, 2; I, 3, 2.

(n9)Footnote 16. Acts 4:32.

(n10)Footnote 17. Acts 4:34-35.

(n11)Footnote 18. Ante-nicene Fathers: The Writings of The Fathers Down to A.D. 325 (Alexander Roberts and James Donaldson, eds.); Clement of Alexandria, the Instructor, II (1994).

(n12)Footnote 19. XVI J.P. Migne (Ed.), Patrologiae Cursus Completus, Series Latina (1841).

(n13)Footnote 20. Id. at XXXV, Homily VI, 25.

(n14)Footnote 21. Id. at XXXIII, Letter 153, VI, 26.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.04

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.04 Changing Views of Private Property in Medieval Christianity.

§ 10.04(a) Adjusting Natural Law Concepts to Accept Private Property.

These notions of early Christianity about property persisted into medieval times, but with considerable confusion. Institutions of the medieval church were major holders of property rights throughout the middle ages, and to rationalize this state of affairs some Christian theorists found rules of acquisition in the same unchanging natural law that held ownership to be vested in common. Among the many confusing attempts to reconcile these competing doctrines was the notion that, while possessory rights were at first departures from the natural order of all property held in common, they were now sanctioned by long custom and established earthly law. Another viewpoint considered the natural law remaining constant but changing its applications in different situations. Thus the human race in its perfection held property in common according to natural law, but once the race was reduced to a fallen state, natural law required the introduction of private property rights.

Once the dominant Christian theologians accepted and promoted the idea of private rights in property as necessary and even good, they advanced various additional justifications for private property. Thomas Aquinas, in unabashed acceptance of Aristotle, praised private property rights as promoting more careful stewardships, improved contentment, and more careful work from those obtaining benefits for themselves. n22

§ 10.04(b) Conflict Between Religious and Civil Regulation of Property Rights.

As the medieval Christian church accepted the notion that private property could benefit human life, the church could also maintain a vigorous defense of its own considerable property assets. Not only was it lawful for the church to own property, but it had power over its property superior to the authority of civil governments. Thus the attempts of secular rulers to tax or exercise other dominion over church property met fierce resistance. Yet feudal theory accorded to the monarch absolute ownership over all property, with vassals permitted to use the property upon fulfillment of certain commitments and conditions. It required only a slight adjustment of such feudal theory to posit God as the monarch at the top of the feudal ladder and the Pope as the earthly agent of divine power over property. n23

Defenders of secular authority responded that ecclesiastical ownership of property existed only because it was allowed by secular law. n24 Because under natural law all property is held in common, and under divine law all property is held by God, earthly ownership of property is purely a product of human law, and legislative authority is entrusted by the people to their monarchs. n25 Moreover, the legislative authority of secular governments had the power to deprive the ecclesiastical owners of their property. n26

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 22. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, II-II, Q. 66 (Laurence Shapcote trans., Daniel J. Sullivan, rev. 1990).

(n2)Footnote 23. Aegidius Romanus, De Regimine Pincipum Book II, cc. 1-12.

(n3)Footnote 24. John of Paris, Tractatus De Postestate Regia Et Papali, 108-109 (c. 1303, 1614 ed.).

(n4)Footnote 25. William of Occam, Dialogus, III, ii, 2, cc. 21-24.

(n5)Footnote 26. John Wycliffe, De Civili Dominio, I, chs. 37, 38, 42.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.05

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.05 The Effect of the Reformation on Christian Views of Property Rights.

The various competing themes and values in Greek, Roman and Christian notions of private property rights contributed to the severe contentions of the sixteenth century and its preoccupation with religious reformation. As the idea of private property rights came to be more rationalized within and acceptable to orthodox Christianity, the next most logical query was how those rights should be established and distributed. Each of the competing points of view could find support somewhere in the long history of theorizing about property rights. In the sixteenth century attention focused on principles advanced by Augustine that holders of property were obligated to use it rightly, or their holdings could not be justified.

This idea took center stage during the religious-political conflicts in sixteenth century Europe. Opponents of Roman Catholicism usually objected to the church's great and conspicuous wealth. Secular leaders eagerly stripped the church of its property, in the first instance out of political expediency, but also in harmony with the religious view that the church had neither earned its property nor was using it rightly. Thomas More's defense of the church effectively noted that the landed nobility, who were busy confiscating church property, could be likewise condemned. n27

§ 10.05(a) Luther and Melancthon.

As in so many other areas, Luther's thoughts on property rights were quite his own--as he was enlightened by his understanding of the scriptures--sharing little with the main thinkers who preceded him. He condemned the property of the church both because it had not been earned by work and because it was not used to give relief to the poor. n28 Yet he defended the idea of private, individual property rights, citing Abraham's affluence and Christ's purse managed by Judas as his main scriptural examples. The communal property in early Christian Jerusalem was dismissed as an aberration followed in no other early Christian congregation. Property was not evil because persons contended over it; it was the contenders who were evil, not the property. n29 His strident condemnation of revolting peasants stemmed in part from their robbings of property.

Luther rejected classical notions of natural law, proclaiming that natural law and the Ten Commandments were the same, with private ownership grounded in the commandment against stealing. n30

Philip Melancthon, Luther's more scholarly collaborator, was more willing to speak of a natural law, albeit identified with the Ten Commandments, and held that under such natural law all property originally was to be used in common. Since the fall of humankind, however, "natural law" was altered in its application to require the division of property to keep the peace among people. n31 He considered private ownership natural also because people considered it natural, and thus it became part of the law of nations, an impulse probably planted in peoples' minds by the natural law. n32 Moreover, private property rights had become sanctioned by God through the commandment against stealing. It was God's will that people work, acquire property, and respect the property of others. n33

§ 10.05(b) Calvin.

Calvin was another reformer who found the Bible to be the principal source of natural law. Private ownership of property was a characteristic of fallen humankind, but it rested on divine sanction through the commandment against stealing. n34 By contrast, divine law, as expressed in the Bible, embodies true principles; application of those principles in the affairs of people on earth is left to natural human reason. While earthly rulers have discretion in their administration of laws governing property, including the collection of taxes, they would be condemned for squandering any of those resources. n35

§ 10.05(c) James I of England.

At the end of this century of reform, in 1598, James VI of Scotland, soon to become James I of England and Scotland, proclaimed absolute ownership of property by the monarchy through right of conquest. James conceded that property "lent" by the monarchs to their subjects should not have to be returned without good reason, and that monarchs should observe the laws of the land. n36 A French writer of the same period, emphasized the point that the state existed primarily to protect rights of ownership. n37

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 27. Thomas More, A Supplication of Souls, The Complete Works of St. Thomas More (1963-).

(n2)Footnote 28. Martin Luther, on Christian Liberty (1520).

(n3)Footnote 29. Martin Luther, Exposition of The Book of Genesis, Ch. XIII (1535-45).

(n4)Footnote 30. Martin Luther, Wider Die Himmlischen Propheten (1525).

(n5)Footnote 31. Philip Melancthon, Philosophiae Moralis Epitome (C. L. Hill, trans. 1944).

(n6)Footnote 32. Philip Melancthon, Commentary on Artistotle's Ethics, 387-388.

(n7)Footnote 33. Philip Melancthon, Prolegomena in Officia Ciceronis.

(n8)Footnote 34. John Calvin, Institutes of The Christian Religion II, viii.

(n9)Footnote 35. Id. at IV, xii.

(n10)Footnote 36. James I, Trew Law of Free Monarchies (1598).

(n11)Footnote 37. Jean Bodin, Les Six Livres De La Republique Book I, ii.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.06

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.06 Shifts Away from Religion-Based Property Rights.

§ 10.06(a) Grotius.

Hugo Grotius found natural law in the "dictate of right reason," rather than in the Bible and believed that in the state of nature people held property in common. Division of property followed by agreement. Once the agreed upon divisions occurred, the consent could not be withdrawn, and all this took place before governments emerged. n38

§ 10.06(b) Hobbes.

Thomas Hobbes also believed that private property rights originated in consent. However, that consent was expressed by conferring authority over property to a sovereign. This occurred because people who originally had equal rights to property needed a means for controlling conflict between those who asserted possession over that to which all had common access. Therefore, the sovereign ultimately obtains rights over property owners, who are equal in the sense that they are all free to acquire property. n39

§ 10.06(c) Pufendorf.

Samuel Pufendorf asserted that people were created equal, with equal rights to property ownership and equal obligations to respect others' rights. This resulted in a sort of communal ownership in nature, or a condition in which nothing was owned individually. Individual ownership arose by occupation, and governments arose to preserve people's agreements over property distribution. n40

§ 10.06(d) Locke.

John Locke agreed that originally nothing was owned, and believed that people gained ownership by their labor, an argument that would have been unacceptable had the feudal system had any vitality left at that time. While proclaiming people's natural rights to property created by their labor, Locke considered governments and laws put in place to protect property rights as products of conventional rather than natural law. Property rights thus were created by people rather than resting on natural law. Locke's views of property had immense impact on almost all theorists who came after him. n41

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 38. Hugo Grotius, Three Books on the Law of War and Peace (1625).

(n2)Footnote 39. Thomas Hobbes, Leviathan 266-267 (1651).

(n3)Footnote 40. Samuel Pufendorf, De Jure Naturae Et Gentium 368-369 (1672).

(n4)Footnote 41. John Locke, of Civil Civil Government, Bk. II, ch. v ("Of Property).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.07

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.07 The "Classical" Theories of Property.

Among the British thinkers who followed Locke, most sought to justify or rationalize the existing order. According to Blackstone, right of possession was based on occupancy, and as occupancy became permanent, possessory rights strengthened. n42 Others protested that concentration of English land ownership in the hands of a few violated others' rights: one should not be allowed to claim more than an equal share of property nor to claim any property not produced by the fruits of their labor. However, Burke believed that property was secured only by "prescription" or possession, which argued against equal possession. n43 Adam Smith wrote of the state of nature as where a "laborer owned the whole produce of his labor," but lost this right as private ownership developed and labor was sold to employers. n44

In contemporary America, private ownership of property was considered a natural right. However, it was uncertain whether a natural rights theory was acceptable if it was used to preserve landed wealth or other forms of tyranny.

Similar ambivalence also afflicted some French thinkers. According to Rousseau, mankind in the state of nature was equal, and property rights did not exist. When greed arose, equality disappeared, and property rights emerged through social contract, to be preserved by governments consented to by the people. While the state protects property rights, it can also act to prevent injustice resulting from extreme inequality. Unowned land in nature could be occupied and owned, but only to the extent needed for subsistence and subject to exploitation by labor. n45

The Napoleanic Civil Code defined property as "the right of enjoying and disposing of things in the most absolute manner," n46 a right of nature acquired through labor. A reliable right to property is essential to individual liberty.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 42. William Blackstone, Commentaries, Bk. II.

(n2)Footnote 43. Edmund Burke, Reflections on The Revolution in France 48 (Everyman ed.) (1790).

(n3)Footnote 44. Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations vol. 1, p. 49 (1920 London ed.) (1776).

(n4)Footnote 45. Jean Jacques Rousseau, Discourse on The Origin of Inequality pp. 214 et seq. (Everyman ed.) (1755).

(n5)Footnote 46. Civil Code Art. 544 (1804).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.08

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.08 Utilitarian Theories of Property Rights.

For utilitarian thinkers, private rights in property could be justified only if they fulfilled some utilitarian objective. Rejecting Locke's labor theory, they denied that expended effort created any special bond between the laborer and the object; it only changed the substance of the object. n47 Because equal distribution of property was impossible to achieve, and thus not useful, unequal distribution was acceptable. n48 And the highest claims to ownership should belong to those who make the best use of property. n49 Others thought that where ownership was enjoyed out of proportion to the labor expended, it would be acceptable for a government to force redistributive changes. n50

Kant is generally credited with reviving a form of natural rights theory of property. He asserted that persons acquired property by working their will (not necessarily their labor) upon it, and as governments emerged to secure the general will of the people, that became recognition of rights in property. n51 For Hegel, state protection of private property promoted liberty because it opened the way for people to exercise their will on property. Only minimal regulation of private property rights was condoned; protection of private property rights would lead to protection of free individual expression. n52

Marxist thought, at least as expounded by Marx, accepted a labor theory of property rights, but viewed labor as the combined effort of a class rather than the effort of a single person. For Marx, capitalism violated this principle. n53 Also, even if property rights were presently based on labor, in the utopian future those rights would instead be based on need.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 47. David Hume, Treatise of Human Nature (1739-1740).

(n2)Footnote 48. David Hume, Essays Moral, Political, and Literary, vol. 2, p. 188.

(n3)Footnote 49. Id. at 189.

(n4)Footnote 50. John Stuart Mill, Principles of Political Economy 208 (1909 ed.).

(n5)Footnote 51. Immanuel Kant, Philosophy of Law 79, 92 (W. Hastie trans. 1887).

(n6)Footnote 52. Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, Philosophy of Right 48-49, 52-53, 58, 61, 65-68 (S.W. Dyde trans. 1896) (1821).

(n7)Footnote 53. Karl Marx, Capital 641, 848 (Everyman ed.).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 10.09

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 10.09 Contemporary Comment on Property Rights.

Little pure theory of property is advanced by contemporary writers of legal literature in the United States today. A selection of thoughtful books and articles is cited below, with annotations. n54

§ 10.09(a) Sources with Annotations.

Acheson, James M. The Lobster Gangs of Maine (1988).

This article discusses the social network and rules of the lobster industry. The author concludes that the ways the lobster "gangs" have formed their own areas and ways of policing other lobstermen have not been very successful in conserving resources.

Allen, Douglas W. & Dean Lueck. "The 'Back Forty' on a Handshake: Specific Assets, Reputation, and the Structure of Farmland Contracts," 8 J. L. Econ. & Org. 366 (1992).

This entertaining article discusses exchanges between farmers, in which contracts are simple and informal, mostly oral or short written forms, and concluded by a handshake.

Axelrod, Robert. The Evolution of Cooperation (1984).

This book examines the conditions that encourage cooperation in our society.

Barzel, Yoram. Economic Analysis of Property Rights (1989).

This article concerns the policing and ownership principles when slaves are used in the work force. The author bases his conclusions an the assumption that labor services are subject to contract and reasons that slaves are on a type of contract, and therefore are able to purchase their freedom.

Blackstone, William. Commentaries on the Laws of England (1766).

Blackstone examines the right of property, the origins of property rights, the right to exclude others, and the dominion exercised over property.

Calabresi, Guido & A. Douglas Melamed. "Property Rules, Liability Rules, and Inalienability: One View of the Cathedral," 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1089 (1972).

This article explores "two primary questions: (1) In what circumstances should we grant a particular entitlement? and (2) in what circumstances would we decide to protect that entitlement by using a property, liability, or inalienability rule?"

Demsetz, Harold. "Toward a Theory of Property Rights," 57 Am. Econ. Rev. Pag. & Proc. 347 (1967).

In this article the author attempts to fashion some elements of an economic theory of property rights by discussing the "concept and role of property rights in social systems," offering guidance "for investigating the emergence of property rights," and setting "forth some principles relevant to the coalescing of property rights into particular bundles and to the determination of the ownership structure that will be associated with these bundles."

Ellickson, Robert C. Order Without Law: How Neighbors Settle Disputes (1991)

This article examines how owners of animals solve trespass problems both on the "open range" (where owners of livestock are not generally liable) and on the "closed range" (where owners of livestock are liable for damage). The article contains a very interesting discussion of how most of the ranchers try to work things out among themselves, using some self help and damaging gossip to control ranchers who consistently don't take care of their cattle. However, generally the ranchers take care of each other's stray cattle, knowing that their cattle will one day stray also. It is almost unheard of for a rancher to retain a lawyer to resolves these problems.

Ellickson, Robert C. "Property in Land," 102 Yale L. J. 1315 (1993).

The author examines different types of land ownership, such as open-access regime, group ownership, and individual ownership. He concludes, after reviewing Jamestown, Plymouth, and the Mormon settlement, that private ownership of land works best to encourage productivity.

Ellickson, Robert C. "The Untenable Case for an Unconditional Right to Shelter," 15 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Policy 17 (1992).

The author argues that advocates of a constitutional entitlement to minimum levels of shelter have failed to take into account that fact that incentives must be maintained for everyone to work. The article details changes that have come with homeless shelters being available to all, thus discouraging able people from working.

Epstein, Richard A. "Covenants and Constitutions," 73 Cornell L. Rev. 906 (1988).

This articles explores the relationship between covenants ("all forms of servitudes, easements, and restrictions that one person can place on another's land") and constitutions ("documents that identify and entrench the fundamental law of a state or nation...").

Friedman, Milton. Capitalism and Freedom (1962)

The author states that there is "an intimate connection between economics and politics, that only certain combinations of political and economic arrangements are possible, and that in particular, a society which is socialist cannot also be democratic, in the sense of guaranteeing individual freedom." When dealing with governmental interventions with private property it is necessary to make a balance sheet and carefully weigh both the advantages and disadvantages, looking at the individual circumstances of each case.

Goffman, Erving. Asylums: Essays on the Social Situation of Mental Patients and Other Inmates (1961).

These writings examine the property rights of people in mental institutions, monasteries, prisons, and other places where a person is stripped of all possessions.

Hardin, Garrett. "The Tragedy of the Commons," 162 Science 1243 (1968).

This author analogizes "The Tragedy of the Commons" to the growth of the population. The tragedy of the commons may be briefly summarized as when everyone owns interest in a common area, but no one has the incentive to take care of it; thus it is abused and exploited instead of taken care of like privately owned property. The author concludes that limits must be placed on population growth to benefit the whole of society.

Kennedy, Duncan & Frank Michelman, "Are Property and Contract Efficient?" 8 Hofstra L. Rev. 711 (1980).

This is an article concerned with cataloguing and refuting false arguments and suppositions about economic justifications for the legal institutions of private property and enforceable contract.

Merrill, Thomas W. "Property Rules, Liability Rules, and Adverse Possession," 79 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1122 (1984-1985).

"This article concerns two recent events that are bringing Adverse Possession back into the legal-academic world. The first event is the publication of Professor Richard Helmholz's law review article concerning the state of mind need for successful adverse possession. The second event is a judicial decision of the California Supreme Court in Warsaw v. Chicago Metallic Ceilings, Inc., 35 Cal. 3d 564, 676 P.2d 584, 199 Cal. Rptr. 773 (1984). The author asserts that these two events are related and they "suggest that liability rules may be an appropriate mediating device between the traditional policies supporting the institution of adverse possession--all of which apply whether the possessor is acting in good faith or in bad faith--and the evident reluctance of courts to 'reward' bad faith possessors by giving the adverse possessor an entitlement protected by a property rule... ."

Merrill, Thomas W. "Trespass, Nuisance, and the Costs of Determining Property Rights," 14 J. Legal Studies 13 (1985).

The author examines why the right to exclude others differs when the intrusion is based on trespass or nuisance. He asserts that when the costs of transacting are low usually strict liability rules of trespass apply. When the costs of transacting are high, the balancing or cost-benefit approaches of nuisance are used. He reviews other issues involving the rights to exclude and argues that the often overlooked "low-cost mechanical entitlement-determination rules play an important role in facilitating the exchange and modification of property rights."

Posner, Richard A. Economic Analysis of Law (4th ed. 1992)

The author discusses property right economics by examining the distinction between static and dynamic analysis. In the static analysis adjustments to change are assumed (somewhat unrealistically) to be instantaneous. Dynamic analysis is more relaxed as to instantaneous change, but more complex. For hundreds of years property laws have been used to create incentives to use property resources efficiently. The author also discusses various aspects of divided ownership and how law is more difficult to apply to divided ownership.

Radin, Margaret Jane. Market-Inalienability, 100 Harv. L. Rev. 1849 (1987).

The author develops a theory of market-inalienability. She argues that "inalienabilities should not always be conceived of as anomalies" and demonstrates that the characteristic rhetoric of economic analysis is morally wrong when it is put forward as the sole discourse of human life. She evaluates "inalienabilites in connection with our best current understanding of the concept of human flourishing... ."

Radin, Margaret Jane. "Property and Personhood," 34 Stanford L. Rev. 957 (1982).

This article explores the idea that to be a person, one needs some control (in the form of property rights) over resources in the external environment. The author reviews Locke's views of property of a person, Marx's "fetishism of commodities", Hegel's philosophy, the Utilitarian Dichotomy, the Personhood Dichotomy, and a number of legal issues viewed from the perspective of property for personhood.

Rawls, John. A Theory of Justice (1971)

The author tries to "formulate a reasonable conception of justice for the basic structure of society conceived for the time being as a closed system isolated from other societies." He also examines "the principles of justice that would regulate a well-ordered society", concluding that "the principles of justice are compatible with quite different types of regime[s]."

Rose, Carol M. "Crystals and Mud in Property Law," 40 Stanford L. Rev. 577 (1988).

The author calls the bright line rules of property "crystals", and asserts that these rules help property owners to know where they stand within the law. However, because of the scarcity of resources and conflicts over these resources the "crystal" clear rules of property are being muddied. The author examines whether the crystal rules are still the best or if the muddier rules have advantages.

Rose, Carol M. "Possession as the Origin of Property," 52 U. Chi. L. Rev. 73 (1985).

This article examines the fundamental proposition of how things come to be owned.

Rose, Carol M. "Property as Storytelling: Perspectives from Game Theory, Narrative Theory, Feminist Theory," 2 Yale J. L. & Humanities 37 (1990).

This article discusses why theorists have turned to storytelling (a narrative explanatory mode), often diverging from scientific/predictive modes, to discuss property. The author questions the standard classical and neoclassical view that preference orderings are "just there," and suggestions that a lot of left over preference orderings have to be explained by an after the fact story. She explains the property stem of common property, explaining also that cooperative preferences are needed for the property institutions.

Sugden, Robert. The Economics of Rights, Cooperation and Welfare (1986)

This article focuses on the oil and gas reserves under the North Sea and how these rights were divided up, giving the property rights to each of the nations whose coastline happened to be the nearest, United Kingdom, Norway, and West Germany. The author believes that such conflicts are best resolved by appealing to convention that the one most closely "associated" would be in possession, and gives several interesting examples. The author argues that many of these conventions "exploit existing associations between claimants and objects," favoring possessors.

Sunstein, Cass R. "On Property and Constitutionalism," 14 Cardozo L. Rev. 907 (1993).

The author concludes that, contrary to general belief, democratization, constitutional reform, transition to markets and efforts to promote economic development are all closely related. The "[t]he right kind of constitution could play an important role in fueling economic development and democratic reform;... [t]he wrong kind of constitution - or no constitution at all - could be devastating to progress in both of these areas."

Wilson, James Q. The Moral Sense (1993)

This article examines the San, African Bushmen, as a society where property is distributed equally. The author follows their life styles and customs and shows what changes happen when this group settles down and beings to accrue property.

§ 10.09(b) Sources without Annotations.

Cohen, Morris R. "Property and Sovereignty," 13 Cornell L. Q. 8 (1927).

Cohen, Felix S. "Dialogue on Private Property," 9 Rutgers L. Rev. 357 (1954).

Horwitz, Morton. The Transformation of American Law, 1780-1860 (1977).

Katz, Stanley N. "Thomas Jefferson and the Right to Property in Revolutionary America," 19 J. L. & Econ. 467 (1976).

Michelman, Frank I. "Property, Utility, and Fairness: Comments on the Ethical Foundations of 'Just Compensation,' " 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1165 (1967).

Nedelsky, Jennifer. "Law, Boundaries and the Bounded Self," in Robert Post (ed.), Law and the Order of Culture 162 (1991).

Nozik, Robert, Anarchy, State and Utopia (1974).

Reich, Charles A. "The New Property," 73 Yale L. J. 733 (1964).

Simon, William H. "Social Republican Property," 38 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1335 (1991).

Singer, Joseph William. "The Reliance Interest in Property," 40 Stan. L. Rev. 614 (1988).

Stone, Christopher D. "Should Trees Have Standing?--Toward Legal Rights for Natural Objects," 45 So. Cal. L. Rev. 450 (1972).

Taft, William H. "The Right of Private Property," 3 Mich. L.J. 215 (1894).

Vandevelde, Kenneth J. "The New Property of the Nineteenth Century: The Development of the Modern Concept of Property," 29 Buff. L. Rev. 325 (1980).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 54. The selection is based on Robert C. Ellickson Et Al, Perspectives on Property Law (2d ed. 1995).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 10.06

Supp. to § 10.06 Missing

[Go To Main]

§ 10.06(d) Locke. [Go To Main]

Add:

see also Matthew H. Kramer, John Locke and the Origins of Private Property: Philosophical Explorations of Individualism, Community, and Equality (1997).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 10 THEORIES OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FORMATION

2-10 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 10.09

Supp. to § 10.09 Contemporary Comments on Property Rights.

[Go To Main]

§ 10.09(b) Sources Without Annotations. [Go To Main]

Add:

25 Am. Jur. 2d Easements and Licenses in Real Property § 6. Natural Rights.

Alexander, Gregory S. "The Ambiguous Work of "Natural Property Rights," 9 U. Pa. J. Const. L. 477 (January, 2007).

Babie, Paul. "Two Voices of the Morality of Private Property," 23 J.L. & Religion 271 (2007-2008)

Bell, Abraham. "The Evolution of Private Property and Open Access Property," 10 Theoretical Inquiries L. 77 (January, 2009).

Blumenthal, Jeremy. Legal Claims as Private Property: Implications for Eminent Domain," 36 Hastings Const. L.Q. 373 (Spring 2009).

Bethell, Tom. The Noblest Triumph: Property & Prosperity Through the Ages (1997).

Berg, Jessica. "Owning Persons: The Application of Property Theory to Embryos and Fetuses," 40 Wake Forest L. Rev. 159 (Spring 2005).

Bell, Abraham and Gideon Pasrchomovsky. "A Theory of Property," 90 Cornell L. Rev. 531 (March, 2005).

"Private Property Rights, Economic Freedom, and Professor Coase: A Critique of Friedman, McCloskey, Medema, and Zorn," 26 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 923 (Summer, 2003).

Brandes, Evan. "Legal Theory and Property Jurisprudence of Oliver Wendell Holmes and Louis D. Brandeis: An Analysis of Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon," 38 Crieghton L. Rev. 1179 (2005).

Brooks, Richard O. "The Many Busts of Aristotle on Display: A Review of Calnan's Justice and Tort Law," 36 Tort & Ins. L.J. 1105 (Summer 2001).

Buckle, Stephen. Natural Law & the Theory of Property: Grotius to Hume (1990).

Claeys, Eric R. "The Telecommunications Act of 1996, The Takings Clause, and Tensions in Property Theory," 22 Yale J. on Reg. 205 (Summer 2005).

Cockfield, Arthur. Income Taxes and Individual Liberty: A Lockean Perspective on Radical Consumption Tax Reform, 46 South Dakota Law Review 8 (2001).

Cole, Daniel H. "Political Institutions, Judicial Review, and Private Property: A Comparative Institutional Analysis," 15 Sup. Ct. Econ. Rev. 141 (2007).

Crosswhite, Anastasia B. Women and Land: Aristocratic Ownership of Property in Early Modern England, 77 New York University Law Review 1119 (2002).

Demsetz, Harold, "Toward A Theory of Property Rights II: The Competition Between Private and Collective Ownership," 31 J. Leg. Stud. 653 (June, 2002).

Dowling, Anne C. "Un-Locke-ing" a "Just Right" Environmental Regime: Overcoming the Three Bears of International Environmentalism-Sovereignty, Locke, and Compensation, 26 William and Mary Environmental Law and Policy Review 891 (Spring 2002).

Eagle, Steven J. "Private Property, Development and Freedom: On Taking Our Own Advice," 59 SMU L. Rev. 345 (Winter 2006).

Ellickson, Robert C. "Unpacking the Household: Informal Property Rights Around the Hearth," 116 Yale L.J. 226 (November, 2006).

Ely, James W., Jr. Property and Liberty in the American Constitutional Order: An Historical Analysis with a Focus on Just Compensation, SL049 ALI-ABA Course of Study Jan. 5-7 2006, Eminent Domain and Land Valuation Litigation.

Fitzpatrick, Daniel. "Evolution and Chaos in Property Rights Systems: The Third World Tragedy of Contested Access," 115 Yale L.J. 996 (March, 2006).

Freeman, Alexis. Internet Domain Name Security Interests: Why Debtors Can Grant Them and Lenders Can Take Them in This New Type of Hybrid Property, 10 American Bankruptcy Institute Law Review 853 (Winter 2002).

Hanson, Victor Davis; Heath, John. Who Killed Homer: The Demise of Classical Education & the Recovery of Greek Wisdom (1997).

Hill, J.L. "The Five Faces of Freedom in American Political and Constitutional Thought." 45 B.C. L. Rev. 499 (May, 2004).

Kahr, Byron. "The Right to Exclude Meets the Right to Ride: Private Property, Public Recreation, and the Rise of Off-Road Vehicles," 28 Stan. Envtl. L.J. 51 (February, 2009).

Kalan, K. Property Rights, Individual Rights, and the Viability of Patent Law Systems, 71 Colorado Law Review 1439 (2000).

Kramer, Matthew H. John Locke & the Origins of Private Property: Philosophical Explorations of Individualism, Community, & Equality (1997).

Larkin, Paschal. Property in the Eighteenth Century with Special Reference to England & Locke (1992).

Levasseur, Alain A. "The Boundaries of Property Rights: La Notion De Biens," 54 Am. J. Comp. L. 145 (Fall 2006).

Mann, Ronald J. "Commercializing Open Source Software: Do Property Rights Still Matter?" 20 Harv. J.L. & Tech. 1 (Fall 2006).

Mahoney, Paul M. The Common Law and Economic Growth: Hayek Might Be Right. 30 J. Legal Stud. 503 (June, 2001).

McGregor, Joan L. Property Rights and Environmental Protection: Is This Land Made for You and Me?, 31 Arizona State Law Journal 391 (Summer 1999).

Merrill, Thomas W. and Henry E. Smith. The Morality of Property, 48 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 1849 (April 2007).

Mossoff, Adam. Rethinking the Development of Patents: An Intellectual History, 1550-1800. 52 Hastings L.J. 1255 (Aug. 2001).

Otterstedt, Paul J. A Natural Rights Approach to Regulatory Takings, 7 Texas Review of Law & Politics 25 (Fall 2002).

Parel, Anthony and Thomas Flanagan, editors. Theories of Property: Aristotle to the Present (1992).

Pesch, Heinrich. Liberalism, Socialism & Christian Social Order, Bk. 3: Private Property as a Social Institution (2000).

"Public Space, Private Deed: The State Action Doctrine and Freedom of Speech on Private Property," 123 Harv. L. Rev. 1303 (March, 2010).

Purdy, Jedediah. "People as Resources: Recruitment and Reciprocity in the Freedom-Promoting Approach to Property," 56 Duke L.J. 1047 (February, 2007).

Reed, O. Lee. What is 'Property'?, 41 Am Bus. L.J. 459 (Summer, 2004).

Richards, Peter Judson. "Property and Epikeia: Theory, Life and Practice in the Western Christian Tradition," 82 Detroit Mercy L. Rev. 599 (Summer 2005).

Schneiderman, David. "Property Rights and Regulatory Innovation: Comparing Constitutional Cultures," 4 Int'l J. Const. L. 371 (April, 2006).

Sherwin, Emily. "Three Reasons Why Even Good Property Rights Cause Moral Anxiety," 48 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 1927 (April, 2007).

Sinden, Amy. "The Tragedy of the Commons and the Myth of a Private Property Solution," 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 533 (Spring 2007).

Spyke, Nancy Perkins. "Charm in The City: Thoughts On Urban Ecosystem Management," 16 J. Land Use & Envtl. L. 153 (Spring 2001).

Sreenivasan, Gopal. The Limits of Lockean Rights in Property (1995).

Stanczyk, Michael T. "Enter the Dragon's Lair: The New Socialism and Private Property Ownership in the People's Republic of China," 22 St. John's J. Legal Comment. 805 (Winter 2008).

Takacs, David. "The Public Trust Doctrine, Environmental Human Rights, and the Future of Private Property," 16 N.Y.U. Envtl. L.J. 711 (2008).

Thomas, David A. "Is the Right to Private Property a Fundamental or an Economic Right?" SM006 ALI-ABA 33 (January 4-6, 2007).

Thomas, David A. "Whither the Public Forum Doctrine: Has This Creature of the Courts Outlived Its Usefulness?" 44 Real Prop., Tr. & Est. L.J. 637 (Winter 2010).

Thomas, David A. "Why the Public Plundering of Private Property Rights is Still a Very Bad Idea," 41 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 25 (Spring, 2006).

Thompson, Dale B. "Of Rainbows and Rivers: Lessons for Telecommunications Spectrum Policy From Transitions in Property Rights and Commons in Water Law," 54 Buff. L. Rev. 157 (May 2006).

Travis, Hannibal. "Pirates of the Information Infrastructure: Blackstonian Copyright and the First Amendment." 15 Berkeley Tech. L.J. 777 (Spring 2001).

Tsosie, Rebecca. Land, Culture, and Community: Reflections on Native Sovereignty and Property in American, 34 Indiana Law Review 1291 (2001).

Tully, James. A Discourse on Property: John Locke & His Adversaries (1982).

Waxman, Ilana. "Hale's Legacy: Why Private Property is Not a Synonym for Liberty," 57 Hastings L.J. 1009 (May, 2006).

West, Robin. "Rights, Capabilities, and the Good Society," 69 Fordham L. Rev. 1901 (Apr. 2001).

Westbrook, Theodore J. "Owned: Finding a Place for Virtual World Property Rights," 2006 Mich. St. L. Rev. 779 (Fall 2006).

Wong, Mary W. S. "Toward an Alternative Normative Framework for Copyright: From Private Property to Human Rights," 26 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 775 (2009).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 11 POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

2-11 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 11.syn

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 11.syn Synopsis to Chapter 11: POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

§ 11.01 Introduction.

§ 11.02 Post-1994 Law Review Articles Discussing Possible Future Changes in American Property Law.

§ 11.02(a) Expanded Concept of Compensable Takings.

§ 11.02(b) Wider Use of the Doctrine of Custom to Establish Public Easements.

§ 11.02(c) Replacing Caveat Emptor with a Duty to Disclose.

§ 11.02(d) Inherent Limitations on Title.

§ 11.02(e) Greater Equality in Marital (especially Community) Property.

§ 11.02(f) Acceptance of the Concept of Sustainable Development.

§ 11.02(g) Balancing Ecological Integrity with Property Rights Without Backlash.

§ 11.02(h) Preserving Private Rights in Ecologically Sensitive Lands.

§ 11.02(i) Using Personal Narrative to Address Property Rights Conflicts.

§ 11.02(j) Expansion of Squatters' Rights Through Adverse Possession.

§ 11.02(k) Technobiological Impacts on Property Rights Concepts.

§ 11.02(l) Increasing Emphasis in Environmental Ethics.

§ 11.02(m) Subject Water Rights Transfers to Public Trust Considerations.

§ 11.02(n) Expanding Property Rights in Personal Identity.

§ 11.02(o) Clashes of Common Law and Indigenous Customary Law.

David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 11 POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

2-11 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 11.01

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 11.01 Introduction.

This chapter, which is originally written and added to this work in the year 2000, is an attempt to identify changes in the American law of real property that may occur in the near and not-so-near future. Of course, American property law is no monolithic essence that could "change" in the ordinary sense; as the composite of jurisprudential activity in over 50 mutually exclusive jurisdictions, American property law is in constant, seething change. So, this chapter will merely try to identify some trends or patterns in those changes.

To provide a variety of viewpoints for this exercise, this chapter consists of an annotated bibliography of thoughtful articles published since 1994, discussing possible future changes in American property law.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 11 POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

2-11 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 11.02

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 11.02 Post-1994 Law Review Articles Discussing Possible Future Changes in American Property Law.

§ 11.02(a) Expanded Concept of Compensable Takings.

D. Benjamin Barros, Note, "Defining "Property" in the Just Compensation Clause," 63 Fordham L. Rev. 1853 (April 1995).

This Note examines the possible definitions of property and the significance of those definitions for regulatory takings law. The author compares the "two dominant theoretical justifications of constitutional protection of property, libertarianism and utilitarianism" and then examines the conflicts between them, using modern takings law. The author concludes that the libertarian approach to just compensation is preferable. The author cites to Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Council, 112 S. Ct. 2886 (1992), which was at the time the most recent Supreme Court regulatory takings decision. In Lucas, David Lucas purchased two coastline lots for $975,000 intending to build homes on them. However, two years later South Carolina's Beachfront Management Act barred the erection of any permanent habitable structure on Lucas' two lots, thus, claimed Lucas, making the property valueless. The trial court held that those actions under the Act did effect a taking and ordered $1,232,387.50 in just compensation. However, the South Carolina Supreme Court reversed, holding that the Act was intended to preserve the coastline, an important natural resource for the public; therefore, the court reasoned that the Act was intended to prevent serious public harm and held that "harm-preventing land use regulation is never a taking." The court reversed the South Carolina Supreme Court, because of its holding in Pennsylvania Coal Company v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393 (1992), expressed by Justice Holmes, that "if [a] regulation goes too far it will be recognized as a taking" by setting up a categorical rule for regulatory takings. This rule is that "A regulation would be found to go 'too far' and violate the Fifth Amendment if it 'denie[d] all economically beneficial or productive use of land." (Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Council, 112 S. Ct. 2886, 2893 (1992) (citing Agins v. City of Tiburon, 447 U.S. 2454, 260 (1980); Nollan v. California Coastal Commission, 483 (1987); Keystone Bituminous Coal Association v. DeBenedictis, 480 U.S. 470, 495 (1987); Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Association, 452 U.S. 264, 295-96 (1981). According to the Lucas court, "[a]nother formulation of the rule is when the owner of real property has been called upon to sacrifice all economically beneficial uses in the name of the common good, that is, to leave his property economically idle, he has suffered a taking."

The author notes exceptions to the new rule: nuisance and exercises of the police power. "Justice Scalia formulated a common-sense exception to the categorical rule that a regulation that renders a property interest valueless requires compensation. If the right to engage in the prohibited activity is not possessed by the property owner, but is instead reserved in the state, no compensation is due." The property owner does not have any right to engage in a nuisance, therefore a regulation prohibiting nuisance is a legitimate exercise of police power, in that it takes nothing from the property owner. He discusses the role of property owners' expectations and concludes that protecting these expectations is a legitimate goal, but the expectations cannot be used as a source of property. The note includes an interesting discussion concerning fair compensation when the government takes less than the whole property.

The note concludes that in the context of regulatory takings, property should be defined by state property law, with primary responsibility for stating that law resting on the state courts. The federal judiciary, however, must enforce the Just Compensation Clause's protection of individual liberty. Federal courts must review the legitimacy of state court findings on property law to prevent state courts from abusing the flexibility of common law to write existing property interests out of existence.

§ 11.02(b) Wider Use of the Doctrine of Custom to Establish Public Easements.

Steven W. Bender, "Symposium: Castles in the Sand: Balancing Public Custom and Private Ownership Interests on Oregon's Beaches" 77 Or. L. Rev. 913 (1998).

The article discusses Oregon's unique property laws concerning the coastline land. In 1969, in State ex rel. Thornton v. Hay, 254 Or. 584, 462 P. 2d 671 (1969), Oregon's Supreme court invoked the English doctrine of custom and declared an easement for the public to enjoy Oregon's privately titled dry sand beaches. (Custom has also been used in Florida, Hawaii, and Texas, although this issue has not yet reached the Supreme Court). Oregon is the only state that applies the law of custom throughout the state. Although much has been written concerning the constitutionality of the custom doctrine, this article assumes custom is constitutional, and instead examines the relationship between the rights of the public and the interests of the dry sand owner.

The author concludes that persons have the right to use the dry sand area for recreation by the same rights that exist by prescriptive easement. With this assumption, the author explores the relative rights and responsibilities of the owner and the public. The standard for easement rights in Oregon requires a balancing of the interest of the beach owner in profitable use of the land with the interests of the public in ensuring a safe and aesthetically pleasing recreation experience.

The article also examines what this custom doctrine does to the landowner's "Bundle of Sticks." Under the custom doctrine the landowner has no right to exclude others from the beach. However, under easement law, misuse of an easement is subject to an injunction, and in the unlikely event that an injunction won't suffice, the use of the easement may be forfeited. The author declares that in the case of a beach easement, "it is unclear whether sustained or episodic vandalism (particularly of the beach owner's adjoining uplands property), littering, disturbing the peace, unlawful burning, discharge of illegal fireworks, public nudity, violence, or criminal activity constitutes unreasonable use, particularly when the conduct is criminal and other enforcement mechanisms exist."

The conflicts between the landowners and the public are increasing as the population grows, and with the growth of windsail devices and all-terrain vehicles. Because courts apply the standard of reasonableness on a case-by-case basis there is no blanket rule for Oregon beaches.

The landowner (servient estate owner) can challenge an easement holder when the burden on the servient estate has been heavily increased. However, public use of Oregon beaches has undoubtedly increased since public recreation rights were recognized in 1969. In most cases the rise has been steady and in some cases this increased use has benefited the upland property owners, such as hotel and restaurant owners, which in turn has enhanced the property values of residential owners of upland property. Also the English doctrine of custom is flexible and may modify the custom to vary with the prevailing fashion of recreation.

The author reviews differences when the easements are created by an express grant, where the court will also consider the intent of the parties. The author sarcastically points out that the landowners at least retain the right to use the beach with the rest of the public. However he concludes that this also means that the public may not erect any structure that would unreasonably burden the dry sand owner's use of the privately held beach. HHH

However, if the city issues an ordinance to make a curfew during nighttime hours on the beach would that curfew extend to the beach owner (or guests of a beach owner's adjoining motel operation)?

The custom doctrine also interferes with the right to construct improvements. The standard appears to be that the construction is allowed when the beach improvements will benefit the public. A road that will occupy or enclose great parts of the beach or impede public escape from tidal waters will not be allowed. On the other hand the Florida Supreme Court allowed a landowner's erection in the dry sand of a seventeen-foot diameter observation tower, claiming it was consistent with the recreational use of the land by the public. Generally courts allow the landowner to erect improvements to enhance recreation for free public and private use.

The Oregon Supreme Court has stated that 1969, the year public rights were first recognized, is not relevant to improvements on Oregon beaches; the public's easement rights pre-dated 1969 and came into being long before the private owners acquired their beach property. Many of these improvements were erected in the period after adoption of the Beach Bill in 1967. The Beach Bill required the landowner to seek a special permit for beach improvements, and generally the public was considered to have no recreational rights. However the Beach Bill declared that all public easement rights to Oregon beaches were vested in the state of Oregon. Because of this the owners could not declare the construction rights to be theirs by adverse possession.

Easements may also be lost by abandonment or the doctrine of estoppel. Abandonment requires more than mere non-use, it requires unequivocal proof of intent to abandon. Estoppel requires action by the servient owner to its material detriment in reliance on conduct of the easement holder. Arguably, the issuance by a municipality or county of a building permit would constitute an estoppel. However, it is unclear if the action would be attributed to the public, or to the state, as caretaker of the public's easement, and no defense in the nature of laches or estoppel may be asserted against the state.

Under the English doctrine of custom, Parliament could extinguish a customary right and presumably the legislature in Oregon could also do this before 1969. The court has vacated a platted but never constructed cliffside road.

In the landowner's bundle of sticks is the right to construct protective structures. The court examines how often the public uses the beach, the extent of dry sand area displaced by the structure, whether the structure jeopardizes public escape from wave action, and so forth. The author concludes that one way of reading the holding in Stevens v. City of Cannon Beach, 854 P.2d. 449 (Ore. 1993), is that the beach owners have no property right to construct protective structures, unless the structures existed on January 1, 1977. The author believes that this reading is inconsistent with the common-law of easements, which considers easements on a case by case basis. "If this easement standard is applied to beach protective structures, then grounds may exist for takings challenges arising out of the denial of permits for their construction even for uplands property not developed before 1977. Under the standard for taking articulated in Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Council, prohibiting construction might be seen as depriving the upland property of all economically beneficial use. Because the background principle of custom would not necessarily deprive the landowner of the right to construct the seawall, the custom doctrine would not save Oregon's outright prohibition of certain protective structures from being compensable on its face. Regarding protective structures sought for land developed before 1977, a different analysis applies that still holds the potential for a regulatory taking. Roughly, the existing regulatory considerations for approval of such structures are similar to what a court would consider under the easement standard of balancing. Should those regulatory standards be misapplied, a taking could result."

The right to remove or to prohibit removal of beach materials might be considered to infringe upon the public's easement rights. However the public's right to remove land materials, in the nature of a profit a prendre, ordinarily could not be claimed under the English doctrine of custom. It is unclear to what extent this limitation survives in Oregon, and because Oregon regulations require a permit to remove beach materials, with permission from the dry sand owner, this issue is not likely to result in litigation by the landowner.

The right to conduct commercial activities on the beach is regulated by the department of Parks and Recreation. Using the balancing standard, taken on a case by case basis, commercial activities of the landowner may be consistent with the public's custom rights. Regulations that restrict the activities of the landowner may be considered a taking, and commercial activities conducted by the public should be subject to injunction, if they infringe unreasonably on the rights of the beach owner.

Currently the United States Supreme Court has "described two situations in which regulation is compensable on its face without inquiry into the public interest it advances: regulation that results in a physical invasion of property and regulation that denies 'all economically beneficial or productive use of the land.' " To survive constitutional scrutiny, the regulation must also pass the state property law on nuisance. More particularly, exactions and development conditions require both an "essential nexus" between some "legitimate state interest" and the condition, as well as showing of "rough proportionality" between the condition and the impact of the proposed development. South Carolina's Beachfront Management Act prevented the petitioner in the Lucas case from erecting a habitable structure and left his coastal property without economic value. However, because the Oregon Supreme Court recognizes the custom of beach recreation, presumably any regulation that would deprive a beach owner of all economically beneficial use would survive a takings challenge. In cases in which custom would fail, confiscatory legislation might be challenged as a taking. For example, when a beach owner can demonstrate that the beach has little or no history of public use, the beach owner may hold title free of customary rights. Second, it is possible that the Supreme Court may substitute its own definition of state background principles of property law for that of a state court, and "would examine whether Oregon's use of custom ... was an 'objectively reasonable application of relevant [Oregon] precedents.' " Third, there is a discrepancy with the actual line of vegetation specified in Thornton as the landward boundary of the public's custom rights and the coordinate mapping of the vegetation line on Oregon's overlay of beach regulation. This is amplified by the ambulatory nature of the coastline and the potential for beach regulation to deal differently with a relocated vegetation line. Fourth, under the doctrine of custom, the public's recreation rights extend only to the line of vegetation. This does not include any scenic view easement, and so any efforts to regulate uplands development usually are determined without the principle of custom. Finally, although the public's custom rights leave the beach owner free to use the beach in any way that does not unreasonably interfere with the public's recreational use, the potential exists for the adoption of regulations that may be reasonable under common law.

"Because of the unique relationship between the dry sand beach and uplands property, these principles for a "total" economic taking may seldom apply to the takings claim of an Oregon beach owner. Also, there is a denominator problem in that it is rarely the case that regulations denying all economically beneficial use of the beach will have the same impact on uplands property. The author believes this issue needs guidance from the Supreme Court.

"In Oregon, the conflict between public and private interests on its beaches has surged in recent years. Following the use of custom in 1969 to establish easement rights in favor of the public came a wave of litigation defining the reach of custom on Oregon shores. Most recently, litigation has focused on whether the custom doctrine and complementary regulation effect a taking of the beach owner's property. As the public's customary rights mature in coastal titles, the focus of disputes will shift from landowner efforts to uproot the public interest entirely to efforts to define the respective rights and responsibilities of beach owners and the public in the same sands. Looking further ahead, increasing dissatisfaction with coastal condomania, combined with the likelihood of rising seas and retreating shorelines, will sweep the public's attention landward to what is now the uplands. Other coastal states will see similar struggles, but perhaps only in Oregon will they be viewed through the lens of the custom doctrine.

§ 11.02(c) Replacing Caveat Emptor with a Duty to Disclose.

Denis Binder, "The Duty to Disclose Geologic Hazards in Real Estate Transactions," 1 Chapman L. Rev. 13 (1998).

This article reviews the history of caveat emptor, exceptions to the rule, and how in the last half of the twentieth century caveat emptor no longer provides protection for sellers of real property. This collapse in the caveat emptor doctrine has been superseded by the duty to disclose. The author hopes the duty to disclose will be formally adopted in regard to material geologic hazards, because geologically fragile areas are being increasingly settled and prospective buyers should be warned of the risk before purchasing the property.

The author cites to Karoutas v. Homefed Bank, 283 Cal. Rptr. 809 (Ct. App. 1991), where the beneficiary, the seller, had actual knowledge of soil conditions that materially affected the value of the property (the estimated cost to repair the property was in excess of $350,000), and no disclosure was made to the purchasers, who could not inspect the property before the trustee's sale. The purchasers paid $173,00 for the property. The court held that the seller had a duty to disclose these facts at the trustee's sale.

Also the author believes that natural risks are foreseeable, and that the seller and the seller's agent owe a duty to the buyer to disclose "all material geologic hazards of which they know or reasonably should know." The purpose of disclosure is to allow the purchaser to make an assessment of the risks and benefits of the proposed transaction; the potential purchaser may then negotiate a lower price, walk away from the deal, or disregard the warnings and complete the purchase.

§ 11.02(d) Inherent Limitations on Title.

Lynn E. Blais, "Takings, Statutes, and the Common Law: Considering Inherent Limitations on Title," 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 (1996).

This article explores the potential scope and impact of the exception to the new per se rule of regulatory takings jurisprudence decided in Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Commission: "if the landowner would have been prohibited from engaging in the regulated activity by the State's background principles of property and nuisance law, then compensation for the regulation is not required under the Fifth Amendment." The author examines unclear areas, such as when a statute that restricts a land use is enacted before the landowner purchases property, but has never been applied to that particular parcel, does the preexisting legislation constitute an inherent limitation on title? He believes that the scope of "the exception to the total takings rule should not be defined (or limited) solely by reference to common law principles." Statutes have historically been used to establish the contours of private property rights and preexisting statutes should be used as "inherent limitations on title. "It reintroduces coherence into our conception of state property law ... it eliminates or reduces the focus on the hopelessly circular inquiry into reasonable investment-backed expectations" and "it limits the circumstances in which courts will have to apply the court's takings analysis at all."

In this article the author discusses the origin and development of nuisance. He cites to Lucas and locates the "nuisance exception in the topology of takings law, and examine(s) the reactions to Lucas in lower courts and in the academic literature." Then he "explores the possible justifications for the common law focus of the nuisance exception to the compensation requirement" and explains why those justifications do not support a limited, common-law based view of inherent limitations on title. He also "address(es) the role of federal legislation in the establishment of property rights, and conclude(s) that the federal environmental protection statutes should be understood to create inherent limitations on title."

The author cites to the following cases: Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Commission, 505 U.S. 1003 (1992), Loveladies Harbor, Inc. v. United States, 28 F.3d 1173 (Fed. Cir. 1994), "Bowles v. United States, 31 Fed. Cl. 37 (Cl. Ct. 1994), M & J. Coal Co v. United States, 30 Fed. Cl. 360 (Cl. Ct. 1994), aff'd, 47 F.3d 1148 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 116 S. Ct. 53

(1995), Department of Health v. The Mill, 887 P.2d 993 (Colo. 1994) (en banc), Stevens v. Canon Beach, 854 P.2d 449 (Or. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1207 (1994), Ciampitti v. United States, 22 Cl. Ct. 310 (1991), Hunziker v. Iowa, 519 N.W. 2d at 367, Kim v. City of New York, 1997 N.Y. LEXIS 101, at *11.

The author questions whether "our current understanding of the concept of inherent limitations on title includes background common law principles of land use but excludes generally drawn statutory land use restrictions enacted before a person purchases her property" is "mandated by or consistent with the Fifth Amendment's just compensation requirement." The author cites to Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938), to conclude that both common law and statutory law establish property rights, and that the court (in Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564 (1972), has consistently emphasized state law.

The article elaborates on three basic themes of just compensation: countermajoritarianism (term borrowed from Alexander Bickel, The Least Dangerous Branch: The Supreme Court at the Bart of Politics (2nd ed. 1986), settled expectations, and reciprocity of advantage.

In conclusion: "Contemporary takings doctrine is in a state of disarray, and appears to be growing less, not more, coherent. In this context, we should do all that we legitimately can to avoid its continued application. By treating generally drawn environmental protection statutes as inherent limitations on title, we can avoid many applications of the ad hoc takings test, without sacrificing the important countermajoritarian role of the Fifth Amendment, unduly upsetting settled expectations, or unfairly singling out individual landowners to bear burdens that, in fairness and justice, should be borne by the public at large."

§ 11.02(e) Greater Equality in Marital (especially Community) Property.

Elizabeth De Armond, "It Takes Two: Remodeling the Management and Control Provisions of Community Property Law," 30 Gonz. L. Rev. 235 (1995).

The author argues that the rights and obligations of spouses with respect to community property should reflect the symbiotic nature of marriage, should restrict spouses' abilities to dominate each other through property transactions, and should encourage spouses to work together and act with care when dealing with their co-owned property. The article begins with a discussion of the development and current management and control provisions of American community property law. The author believes there are biases in the community property laws that create imbalanced power relationships in marriage detrimental to women. In responses, the author suggests creating a model of both equality and interdependence, requiring good faith and due diligence. "As a general rule, all spouses should consult with each other, giving full information and reaching a consensus, for all transactions with co-owned property that will have a material impact on the marriage relationship. Furthermore, spouses should be prohibited from carrying out transactions to which the other spouse has objected, whether they are material or not." The author would give spouses the greatest possible opportunity to make a marriage work and encourage them to work things out by not allowing limitations on claims to start running until the marriage actually breaks up. This proposal maximizes the opportunities for couples to develop an alternative marital property scheme that will reflect the unique nature of the particular individuals and their relationship with each other.

§ 11.02(f) Acceptance of the Concept of Sustainable Development.

John C. Dernbach, "Sustainable Development as a Framework for National Governance," 49 Case Western Reserve L. Rev. 1 (1998).

This lengthy article focuses on sustainable development, development that is "socially equitable and protective of the natural resource base on which human activity depends." The author states that "sustainable development is a response to the deeply held view that environmental degradation prevents or threatens social and economic progress."

The article synthesizes Agenda 21, the Rio Declaration, and other texts into a conceptual framework for national governance. The author states that domestic acceptance, and implementation of international norms, are better achieved when understood and voluntarily accepted rather than coerced. Therefore one of the goals of the sustainable development movement is to have countries understand and internalize international rules, rather than have them imposed from external influences.

Sustainable development could have an impact on property law, because countries tend to encourage development of land without much consideration of the environment. This will likely occur only if the laws relating directly to real property ownership oblige owners to integrate environmental, social and economic considerations into their day-to-day decision-making." To alleviate the fears of property owners that "such laws would have to steer clear of constitutional prohibitions against governmental takings of property without compensation." Tradable use rights, disclosure requirements and property tax laws tailored to sustainable development could be used. The author states that laws can make "sustainable uses of land more economically attractive without directly affecting property rights" and mentions a Costa Rican law that compensates landowners for private property left in natural cover.

Another approach is to change property rights in ways that increase property values. Legislation or legal agreements might create economic value in natural features that are not now recognized to have economic value, such as the ability of forests to absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, and allow landowners to benefit from the protection of those features. Many persons in developing countries advocate the creation of community or individual property rights in traditional knowledge or skills concerning the use of native plant and animal species, or even in the plants and animals themselves, particularly for their medicinal value. Because they would encourage property owners to engage in sustainable activities based on self-interest, such approaches could have more effective and widespread results than governmental regulation.

In summary, national governments should create legal and institutional arrangements that engage, encourage and even propel all parts of society toward sustainable development. They should integrate their decision-making concerning environmental, social, and economic issues; ensure that economic progress does not come at the expense of progress in other areas; and use precautions to protect the environment and natural resources. Countries will need to repeal or modify subsidies and other laws that encourage unsustainable development, and use a variety of legal and policy instruments to foster sustainable development.

§ 11.02(g) Balancing Ecological Integrity with Property Rights Without Backlash.

Terry W. Frazier, "Protecting Ecological Integrity Within the Balancing Function of Property Law," 28 Envtl. L. 53 (1998).

Professor Frazier states that property laws must be developed in a way that the ecological integrity principle is balanced against the more traditional individual liberty and community interests. This is necessary because "the distinction between 'harm-preventing' and 'benefit-conferring' regulation is ... in the eye of the beholder." Hopefully this balancing of "harm-preventing" and "benefit-conferring" regulation will prevent a backlash against the ecological movement from property owners who are resenting the invasion of what they consider to be their personal property rights.

Too many people have been taken in by the false notion that they must choose between a healthy environment and a healthy economy. The truth is that a healthy economy ultimately requires a healthy environment. In the short-term, balance is simply common sense. In the long term, it's our moral responsibility.

§ 11.02(h) Preserving Private Rights in Ecologically Sensitive Lands.

Eric T. Freyfogle, "The Owning and Taking of Sensitive Lands," 43 UCLA L. Rev. 77 (1995).

This article concerns the differing views on ownership of ecologically sensitive lands. Preservation is compared to conservation. The author forecasts future developments in environmental policy and suggests ways that just-compensation law needs to change. The article reviews two wetlands cases: Loveladies Harbor, Inc. v. United States, 15 Cl. Ct. 381 (1988), and Rowe v. Town of North Hampton, 553 A.2d 1331 (N.H. 1989).

In Loveladies, the corporation's aim was to develop soggy beachfront property along the coast in New Jersey. The developer worked closely with the local governments and developed 199 of the 250 acres it owned. Problems arose when it tried to get permits for the final 51 acres after new state wetlands rules had been developed. Loveladies Corp. finally obtained state permission to fill 12.5 of the acres by agreeing to leave the remaining acres unaltered. But when it applied to the Corps of Engineers it was officially denied a permit for the 12.5 acres. The Corps was influenced by the state regulatory agency, which claimed that the project did not comply with state requirements. Both the federal trial court and the appellate court upheld the Corps' power to deny the permit, but perhaps would require paying compensation. The United States Claims Court found that after the permit denial the land's highest market value was $1,000 per acre. The original purchase price was $1,250 per acre and market value without regulation was $212,400 per acre. The court concluded that regulation had gone too far; this residential development was not a nuisance but an appropriate use of this land. The court concluded that the essential question was "[h]owever vital wetlands might be, and however ecologically disruptive fill activities might be, a regulation limiting development did not restrain a prospective harm. Its effect rather, was to obtain a 'public benefit.' Hence, the essential question: was it fair to expect the landowner alone to pay for this 'benefit,' or should the community at large share the cost?"

In Rowe, the owner was not able to obtain a variance to build on her wetlands property and so she claimed a taking of private property under state law. The New Hampshire Court reasoned that Ms. Rowe was going to use the land in a way that changed the "essential natural character" of the land, a use for which "it was unsuited in its natural state" (quoting Claridge v. New Hampshire Wetlands Bd., 485 A.2d 287, 290 (N.H. 1984). The court held that it was not unreasonable to limit use of private property to its natural use in order to prevent harm to public rights.

"Courts cannot keep the common law up to date merely by looking to the past and making logical deductions. They must at all times keep one eye on the community and its evolving norms and expectations, and mix the values they find there with the heritage and language of the law."

§ 11.02(i) Using Personal Narrative to Address Property Rights Conflicts.

Eric T. Freyfogle, "Owning the Land: Four Contemporary Narratives," 13 Journal of Land Use and Environmental Law 279 (1998).

Professor Freyfogle begins this article in a narrative form, likening the New World to the Garden of Eden. He contrasts this view of America to an alternative view of America stressing the harsh realities of pioneer life. "As Locke interpreted the Bible, God originally gave the Earth to humankind collectively, as property in common, yet any individual who wanted could seize a thing from the common stock, including land, and make it his own simply by mixing his labor with it. Before the labor was added, the thing had no value. Once the labor was mixed in, value arose and the thing became private property."

The author declares that at the end of the nineteenth century land was considered to have inherent value and sometimes too much labor could be as detrimental as too little labor. As the land showed scars of misuse, calls for conservation, pollution control, and preservation of wildlife and wilderness became quite common. Man was demoted from conqueror of the land to tender of the land, and private property rights were limited in an effort to benefit the community.

The other narratives "explain where private property came from, why it exists, and what ownership ought to entail." This article discusses "the libertarian narrative of individual autonomy, ... [a] narrative of property focussed on economic opportunity, a community-centered narrative that understands property as an evolving tool to meet community needs, and a biocentric narrative that looks to the land itself to prescribe the rules on how it can be used."

The author concludes that in order for a more environmental view to prevail in property law, fears of "being excluded from decision-making processes" and the fear that "changing laws will disrupt investments, expectations, and opportunities" must be addressed. To the excluded outsider, the possibility that traditional property law can no longer be depended on generates a real fear that investments are no longer safe. The author's solution to overcoming these fears is to include, and encourage, landowners and other citizens to help formulate land-use decisions.

§ 11.02(j) Expansion of Squatters' Rights Through Adverse Possession.

Brian Gardiner, "Comment: Squatters' Rights and Adverse Possession: A Search for Equitable Application of Property Laws," 8 Ind. Int'l & Comp. L. Rev. 119 (1997).

This article deals mainly with adverse possession and squatters' rights, using the homeless population as examples of squatters. The author contrasts the different squatters' rights found historically in Great Britain, Germany, Denmark, Netherlands, the United States, and in less developed countries, Brazil, Malaysia, Philippines. The author shows how squatters are treated in these countries and concludes that the reason they are treated so differently is because of the different levels of support given by each community. So far squatters in Europe, where squatters have been given much support, have had more success in claiming land through adverse possession than squatters in the United States. Squatters' fates in lesser developed countries depend on how willing the government is to accept and foster squatters' rights; and if the government is not willing to foster this relationship then tragedy often results.

The author believes that utilitarianism and efficiency are the proper models for property law establishment and maintenance, because "the efficient use of property benefits all of society." "A mere accounting of governmental resources, adverse possession laws, and attitudes towards squatters, the homeless, and homesteaders may itself lead to the alleviation of homelessness." Governments should reform adverse possession laws, placing heavier burdens on private land owners and the government to monitor and preserve their land. Governments should encourage homesteading and establish guidelines for the health, safety, and welfare of squatter settlements. Additionally squatters "should not be viewed as opportunistic criminals," but as respected citizens who choose self-help over waiting for governmental solutions, to remedy their problems.

§ 11.02(k) Technobiological Impacts on Property Rights Concepts.

Richard Gold, "Owning Our Bodies: an Examination of Property law and Biotechnology," 32 San Diego L. Rev. 1167 (1995).

This article examines whether property law provides an appropriate forum for determining who should have rights in human biological materials. Currently, in property law, goods are allocated according to market norms and therefore property law has difficulty dealing with non-market aspects of goods.

Biotechnological research on human tissue has two characteristics which cause it to differ from other types of research: biotechnology involving the human body yields products that a healthy human body naturally produces and such products are used primarily in the provision of health care.

This article explores whether property law is the most appropriate way to allocate control over human biological materials. The author discusses ways American society places values on human biological materials. He cites to Diamond v. Chakrabarty, 447 U.S. 303 (1980), in which the company was trying to secure a patent for a new bacterium created to break down crude oil. The Court held that the non-economic effects of granting a patent right to Chakrabarty would be minimal. While the failure to gain patent rights in generically engineered organisms might slow down the pace of research in this field, no judicial decision, the court held, would deter the scientific mind from probing into the unknown any more than Canute could command the tides. The court further held that it was not competent to consider any but economic factors inhering in genetically engineered organisms. Other ways of valuing such organisms--for example, in terms of their effect on health, the environment, and human dignity--were matters of high policy that only Congress could address. Gilliam v. American Broadcasting Cos., Inc., 538 F. 2d 14 (2d Cir. 1976) is cited as an example of a party "seeking to use property law in order to vindicate non-market values. This case demonstrates that courts will entertain economic arguments but not non-market values when allocating property rights. United Steel Workers of America v. United States Steel Corp., 631 F. 2d 1264 (6th Cir. 1980) is also cited as an example of a party that "in attempting to vindicate the non-market value of community, could make no plausible economic argument in favor of its claimed property right." This is a very interesting case where the entire livelihood of a town depended on the two steel mills that were shutting down. The community attempted to force the company to keep the two mills operational or to sell the mills to the community. Although the trial judge was sympathetic to the community, he held that he had no authority upon which he could give a property right in the community to prevent this from happening. The Court of Appeals also expressed sympathy for the community, but also concluded that it could find no authority to support the grant of a property right to the community; only the legislature could do this. The author discusses Moore v. Regents of the University of California, 51 Cal. 3d 120, 793 P.2d 479, 271 Cal. Rptr. 146 (1990), in which the court addressed the issue of ownership of human biological materials; exploration of this case leads to a discussion of whether certain values can be translated into market value. The author concludes that the values are not translatable and then considers whether property law is flexible enough to allow direct examination of non-market values.

The author concludes new directions for the law to take by not allowing the body and health to be considered property, thereby allowing the body and health to be evaluated with the focus on a non-market value. This could leave the court with several options. First neither party would own the cell-line but it would belong to some non-profit non-governmental organization (i.e., Red Cross). Representatives of different segments of society could be put on an ethics board to make determinations about these materials along with "a mandate to pursue both research aimed at therapeutic uses of the cell-line and research aimed at discovering the interaction between individuals and the environment on the incidence of disease." The person donating the cell material could be allowed to choose which organization would control the cells. The researcher could be encouraged to conduct this type of research by being ensured of a license to use the cell-line. The author states that because values inhering in human biological materials take on different forms at different times, it is appropriate that there be no set formula for this suggested approach.

§ 11.02(l) Increasing Emphasis in Environmental Ethics.

Robert J. Goldstein, "Green Wood in the Bundle of Sticks: Fitting Environmental Ethics and Ecology into Real Property Law," 25 B.C. Envtl. Aff. L. Rev. 347 (1998).

The basic premise of the article is that included in the bundle of sticks representing real property rights are a few sticks of "green wood." This "green wood" is being bent and reformed by the changes in society with regard to environmental issues. The author cites to the Kim case (Kim v. City of New York, 681 N.E. 2d 312 (N.Y. 1997), holding "that the law of property in New York includes the full body of New York law, inclusive of the state constitution, statutes, and common law." New York has adopted many environmentally friendly laws over the course of the past thirty years. Several issues raised by the Kim decision are "whether the rights of prior purchasers will be subject to a taking;" and the possibility of "public backlash against this disquieting of title, which could induce a legislative remedy to specifically remove the statutory enactments from consideration as property law."

§ 11.02(m) Subject Water Rights Transfers to Public Trust Considerations.

Douglas L. Grant, "Western Water Rights and the Public Trust Doctrine: Some Realism About the Takings Issue, Symposium: Current Issues in Western Water Law," 27 Arizona State Law Journal 423 (Summer, 1995).

This article is about the public trust doctrine that federal courts have long used to limit the power of state legislative and administrative bodies to transfer state-owned land under navigable waters into private ownership. Although the courts differ on when a grant of submerged land into private ownership violates a trust, all hold that such land is in a revocable trust for the public. "Within the last two decades, several western courts have used or expressed their willingness to use the public trust doctrine to limit state legislative and administrative power to sanction proprietary rights in water."

Although significant uncertainties remain in takings clause suits, there is no doubt, "that the owner-expectations and title-limitations inquiries require a court to examine relevant state law." The author explains that the analysis varies depending on the category of a water suit, but also identifies the important issue of "whether state law in fact has made existing appropriations inherently revocable to protect trust uses." In examining the state law issue of inherent revocability the author reviews lessons from legal realism on reading precedent and applies the lessons to public trust doctrine and appropriation doctrine precedents.

The author also examines "a number of public trust doctrine and appropriation doctrine cases in light of the lessons from legal realism on how courts deal with precedent." He cites to National Audubon Society v. Superior Court of Alpine County, 658 P.2d 709, 727-29 (Cal.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 977 (1983), which went beyond traditional public trust doctrine cases in three ways. First, traditional cases applied the doctrine to limit the power of state legislative and administrative bodies to fill state-owned submerged lands or grant them into private ownership. National Audubon applied it to limit the power of state legislative and administrative bodies to sanction proprietary rights in the overlying water. Second, traditional cases involved lands under tidal waters or under waters navigable according to the federal test of navigability for title. National Audubon said the doctrine also protects trust uses of nontidal waters that are navigable only under a laxer state test of navigability. Third, traditional cases used the doctrine to protect public access to the waters for navigation, commerce, and fishing. National Audubon used it to protect public enjoyment of the waters for recreational and ecological purposes. The author examines and discusses why western state courts generally have significant leeway in treating the issue of revocability.

§ 11.02(n) Expanding Property Rights in Personal Identity.

Ray D. Madoff, "Taxing Personhood: Estate Taxes and the Compelled Commodification of Identity," 17 Va. Tax Rev. 759 (1998).

This article concerns estate tax problems raised by treating celebrity status as a commodity, and the problem of the current estate tax system's inability to recognize the decision not to treat celebrity status as a commodity. The author shows this difference by illustrating the difference between Howard Stern, who enjoyed celebrity status, and J.D. Salinger, author of The Catcher in the Rye, who treasured his privacy. Assuming that both live in jurisdictions which recognize a descendible right of publicity (14 states do recognize the right of publicity and the law is still evolving), included in each of their estates would be the value of the decedent's name and likeness. Stern's estate might have the funds necessary to pay the tax, while Salinger's estate, ironically, because he chose to avoid publicity, possibly might not have the necessary funds and would have to sell some estate assets to pay for this marketable commodity that Salinger in all likelihood would never have agreed to market.

The author notes that under the income tax system the value of a painting, which has appreciated, will not be subject to tax until the taxpayer sells or exchanges the painting. In the gift tax system the painting will not be subject to tax until the donor transfers the property by gift. Both of these systems require a voluntary action by the taxpayer. But in the estate tax system the only action that is required is the taxpayer dying, an unavoidable event, and the full market value of the painting will be subject to tax even if there are no plans to sell it.

Further, the author notes that "property is an expansionist concept, changing to accommodate broader changes in society." The author states that this expansion has broadened the application of estate tax and uses one of the more recently recognized property rights, the right of publicity, to demonstrate some of this expansion.

"The right of publicity was originally conceived of as part of the right of privacy. However, the right of publicity in its current form differs from the right of privacy in one significant respect: whereas the right of privacy is grounded in the protection of personal feelings, the right of publicity was established in recognition of the economic value of a person's celebrity status." In 1953 the right of publicity was first recognized as being separate and distinct from the right of privacy. In one case the court characterized the baseball players' interests in their images as a property interest capable of assignment. Once the right of publicity was recognized as a property right, it assumed other attributes of property, including assignability and descendibility. Some jurisdictions recognizing a descendible right of publicity require that the decedent have recognized the extrinsic commercial value by exploitation or assigning his right to someone else while living. However, other jurisdictions reason that "the theories underlying recognition of the right of publicity are not served or are even disserved by imposing such a requirement," because the right to publicity protects persons who choose not to exploit themselves on the market, as well as those who choose to do so.

The author also uses as an example Virginia C. Andrews, an author of children's paperback books. When Ms. Andrews died she was in the process of entering into a contract for two more books, and the editor was very interested in publishing more books under the V.C. Andrews name. By 1990 five more books were produced under her name, written by another author using a computer analysis of her previous books, and the books enjoyed tremendous success. This right of publicity benefited Andrews' estate, although her name was not listed as an asset of the estate for the estate tax return. Once the issue was raised, it was expected that the Internal Revenue Service would be able to include the value of the name in the estate. An interesting question raised by this case is its applicability to an estate that does not want to exploit a name or likeness. Under the basic estate tax rules, it is irrelevant whether there is any plan to realize market value or even whether any actual market exists, since a hypothetical buyer and seller standard determine the price.

The author notes the problem of when an estate consists of a vacation home the heirs do not wish to sell; yet if there are not enough other assets to cover the estate taxes the executor may be forced to sell the home. The forced sale of the right of publicity also has unsettling implications in that a family may be forced to sell other assets to cover the market price of the celebrity status, even if they are not planning to exploit this status.

§ 11.02(o) Clashes of Common Law and Indigenous Customary Law.

Paul M. Sullivan, "Customary Revolutions: The Law of Custom and the Conflict of Traditions in Hawai'i," 20 University of Hawaii L. Rev. 99 (1998).

This article focuses on the conflict between the concepts of "custom" and "usage" in the State of Hawaii. The debate is between customs and traditions of American and English law concerning private property ownership and recent claims calling for persons of Hawaiian ancestry to be allowed to use private land of others for "traditional and customary rights."

This article explains how the development of Hawaii's real property law in the nineteenth century left no room for the survival of customary access and gathering rights except as expressly preserved in what is now HRS section 7-1. The article then considers two fairly recent cases (Sotomura v. County of Hawaii, 460 F. Supp. 473 (D. Haw. 1978) and Robinson v. Ariyoshi, 887 F. 2d 215, 2119 (9th Cir. 1989)) where custom and usage have been applied by the Hawaii Supreme Court in decisions which were subsequently challenged, with some degree of success, as unconstitutional takings. It concludes with a discussion of the PASH case (Public Access Shoreline Hawai'i v. Hawaii County Planning Commission ("PASH"), 79 Hawai'i 425, 903 P.2d 1246 (1995), cert. denied sub. nom., Nansay Hawai'i, Inc. v. Public Access Shoreline Hawai'i, 116 S. Ct. 1559 (1996) [hereinafter PASH]), including the many issues of interpretation and application which PASH left unresolved, and explores some possible bases for a constitutional challenge to the PASH case itself or to future decisions of judicial and administrative tribunals based on PASH."

The author concludes that PASH "is more appropriately viewed as a revolutionary manifesto, rather than a revolutionary overthrow of an institution of established real property law."

LexisNexis®

121 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 11 POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

2-11 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 11.02

Supp. to § 11.02 Post-1994 Law Review Articles Discussing Possible Future Changes in American Property Law.

[Go To Main]

§ 11.02(e) Greater Equality in Marital (Especially Community Property) [Go To Main]

Change Section Heading from* § 11.02(e). Greater Equality in Marital (especially Community Property) to:

§ 11.02(f) Acceptance of the Concept of Sustainable Development [Go To Main]

After the last sentence of this section add footnote 1:

see also J.B. Ruhl, Sustainable Development: A Five-Dimensional Algorithm for Environmental Law, 18 Stan. Envtl. L.J. 31 (1999); David R Hodas, The Role of Law in Defining Sustainable Development: NEPA Reconsidered, 3 Wid. L. Symp. 1 (1998).

§ 11.02(l) Increasing Emphasis in Environmental Ethics [Go To Main]

After the last sentence of this section add footnote 2:

see also John C. Tucker, Constitutional Codification of an Environmental Ethic, 52 Fla. L. Rev. 299 (2000).

Add the following new section at end of chapter:

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 11 POSSIBLE FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS IN AMERICAN PROPERTY LAW

2-11 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 11.03

Supp. to § 11.03 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Books

Sandefur, Timothy. Cornerstones of Liberty: Property Rights in 21st Century America (2006).

Articles

Asch, Adrienne. "Critical Race Theory, Feminism, and Disability: Reflections on Social Justice and Personal Identity," 62 Ohio St. L.J. 391 (2001).

Bauer, Christopher A. "Government Takings and Constitutional Guarantees: When Date of Valuation Statutes Statutes Deny Just Compensation," 2003 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 265 (Winter 2003).

Bauer, Matthew J. "Absent Physical Invasion, Governmental Interference with Private Property Will Not Likely Violate the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause: Machipongo Land and Coal Company, Inc. v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania," 41 Duq. L. Rev. 619 (Spring, 2003).

Birmingham, Robert. "From Edysseus to Capgras: Seven Episodes of Personal Identity in Law," 49 Syracuse L. Rev. 99 (1998).

Blackwelder, Brion. "Environmental Legal Professionalism Adapted to Citizen Suit Processes." 10 Widener L. Rev. 527 (2004).

Blais, Lynn E. "Takings, Statutes, and the Common Law: Considering Inherent Limitations on Title," 70 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1 (Nov. 1996).

Blustein, Jeffrey. "Choosing for Others as Continuing a Life Story: The Problem of Personal Identity Revisited," 27 J. L. Med. & Ethics 20 (Spring 1999).

Brown, Jennifer Gerarda. "Ethics in Environmental ADR: An Overview of Issues and Some Overarching Questions," 34 Val. U. L. Rev. 403 (Spring 2000).

Burling, James S. "Private Property Rights and the Environment After Palazzolo," 30 B.C. Envtl. Aff. L. Rev. 1 (2002).

Culley, Kristina. "Has Texas Nuisance Law Been Blown Away by the Demand for Wind Power?" 61 Baylor L. Rev. 943 (2009).

Date, Vanda. " 'Development' and Its Environmental Ramifications--The Interlinking of Ecologically Sustainable Development and Intellectural Property Rights," 27 Golden Gate U.L. Rev. 631 (Spring 1997).

Dernbach, John C. "Citizen Suits and Sustainability." 10 Widener L. Rev. 503 (2004).

Dernbach, John C. "Making Sustainable Development Happen: From Johannesburg to Albany." 8 Alb. L. Envtl. Outlook 173 (2004).

Duhl, Gregory M. "Property and Custom: Allocating Space In Public Places," 79 Temple L. Rev. 199 (Spring 2006).

Eaton, Curtis. "Property Rights Regimes to Optimize Natural Resource Use--Future CMB Development and Sustainability," 47 Nat. Resources J. 469 (Spring, 2007).

Erickson, Jessica M. "Making Live and Letting Die: The Biopolitical Effect of Navajo Nation v. U.S. Forest Service," 33 Seattle U. L. Rev. 463 (Winter, 2010).

Flatt, Victor B. "This Land is Your Land (Our Right to the Environment)." 107 W.Va. L. Rev. 1 (Fall, 2004).

Flournoy, Alyson C. "In Search of an Environmental Ethic," 28 Colum. J. Envtl. L. 63 (2003).

Frantz, Carolyn J. & Dagan Hanoch. "Properties of Marriage." 104 Colum. L. Rev. 75 (January, 2004).

Gesell, Jeffrey N. "Customary Indigenous Law in the Mexican Juridical System," 26 Ga. J. Int'l & Comp. L. 643 (1997).

Gitter, Donna M. "Ownership of Human Tissue: A Proposal for Federal Recognition of Human Research Participant's Property Rights in Their Biological Material." 61 Wash & Lee L. Rev. 257 (Winter, 2004).

Goble, Dale D. "The Problem of Unraveling: Biodiversity and Private Property in Land," 38 Idaho L. Rev. 291 (2002).

Goldstein, Robert J. "Green Wood in the Bundle of Sticks: Fitting Environmental Ethics and Ecology into Real Property Law," 25 B.C. Envtl. Aff. L. Rev. 347 (Winter 1998).

Harlan, Leigh M. "When Privacy Fails: Invoking a Property Paradigm to Mandate the Destruction of DNA Samples." 54 Duke L.J. 170 (October, 2004).

Harris, Laura C. "Public Access Shoreline Hawaii v. Hawai'i County Planning Commission: Expanding Hawaii's Doctrine of Custom," 3 Ocean & Coastal L.J. 293 (1997).

Harris, Margaret Teresa, and John Patrick Parker. "Compensable 'Takings'--And Why Not? An Analysis of the Fifth Amendment Just Compensation Clause and Police Power Regulatory 'Takings.' " 10 Am. J. Trial Advoc. 365 (Fall 1986).

Havey, Melody F. "Stevens v. City of Cannon Beach: Does Oregon's Doctrine of Custom Find a Way Around Lucas?" 1 Ocean & Coastal L.J. 109 (1994).

Jaksa, Matthew F. "Putting the 'Sustainable' Back in Sustainable Development: Recognizing and Enforcing Indigenous Property Rights as a Pathway to Global Environmental Sustainability," 21 J. Envtl. L. & Litig. 157 (2006).

Korngold, Gerald. "Resolving the Intergenerational Conflicts of Real Property Law: Preserving Free Markets and Personal Autonomy for Future Generations," 56 Am. U. L. Rev. 1525 (August, 2007).

Kriegshauser, Ryan. "The Shot Heard Around the Virtual Worlds: The Emergence and Future of Unconscionability in Agreements Relating to Property in Virtual Worlds," 76 UMKC L. Rev. 1077 (Summer, 2008).

Levi, Ron. "Gated Communities in Law's Gaze: Material Forms and the Production of a Social Body in Legal Adjudication," 34 Law & Soc. Inquiry 635 (2009).

Malagrino, Dylan Oliver. "Appying Communal Theories to Urban Property: An Anthropological Look at Using the Elaboration of Common Property Regimes to Reduce Social Exclusion from Housing Markets," 10 U. C. Davis Bus. L.J. 33 (2009) .

McCulley, Kristina L. "The American Indian Probate Reform Act of 2004: The Death of Fractionation or Individual Native American Property Interests and Tribal Customs?" 30 Am. Indian L. Rev. 401 (2005-2006).

McGregor, Gregor I. "Quiz on Ethics in Environmental Law (Multiple Choice)," 33 New Eng. L. Rev. 647 (Spring 1999).

McKaskle, Laura Hurmence. "Land Use Moratoria and Temporary Takings Redefined After Lake Tahoe?" 30 Pepp. L. Rev. 273 (January 2003).

Mirvis, Morgan Oliver. "Allocating and Managing Property Rights on Manhattan's Lower East Side." 60 N.Y.U. Ann. Surv. Am. L. 543 (2004).

Monten, Lina M. "The Inconsistency Between Section 301 and TRIPS: Counterproductive with Respect to the Future of International Protection of Intellectual Property Rights?" 9 Marq. Intell. Prop. L. Rev. 387 (Summer 2005).

Priest, Claire, Creating an American Property Law: Alienability and Its Limits in American History, 120 Harv. L. Rev. 385 (December, 2006).

Proctor, Theresa Bixler. "Erosion of Riparian Rights Along Florida's Coast." 20 J. Land Use & Envtl. Law 117 (Fall, 2004).

Ragsdale, John W. Jr. "Individual Aboriginal Rights." 9 Mich. J. Race & L. 323 (Spring, 2004).

Reimers, Milt. " 'Stuck in No Man's Land.' How Developing Countries Can Allocate Property Rights as a Means to Improve Their Citizens' Welfare and Grow Their Economies," 11 Loy J. Pub. Int. L. 1 (2009).

Richardson, Matthew J. "Conservation Easements as Charitable Trusts in Kansas: Striking the Appropriate Balance Among the Grantor's Intent, the Public's Interest, and the Need for Flexibility," 49 Washburn L.J. 175 (2009).

Rodabough, Samuel A. "Where the Oregon Trail Meets the Silk Road: Why China's Path to Sustainability Should Bypass Oregon." 13 Pac. Rim L. & Pol'y 199 (January, 2004) .

Sax, Joseph L., Why America Has a Property Rights Movement, 2005 U. Ill. L. Rev. 513.

Somin, Ilya. "The Politics of Economic Development Takings," 58 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 1185 (2008).

Takacs, David. "The Public Trust Doctrine, Environmental Human Rights, and the Future of Private Property," 16 N.Y.U. Envtl. L.J. 711 (2008).

Taylor, Prue. "Heads in the Sand as the Tide Rises: Environmental Ethics and the Law on Climate Change," 19 UCLA J. Envtl. L & Pol'y 247 (2000/2002).

Trissell, David A. "Federal Circuit Affirms Court of Federal Claims' Holding that Government's Actions in Regulating Coal Mining Operations Did Not Give Rise to a Compensable Taking," 5 Fed. Circuit B.J. 255 (Summer 1995).

Verchick, Robert R. M. "Beyond the 'Courts of the Conqueror': Balancing Private and Cultural Property Rights Under Hawai'i Law," 5 Scholar 201 (Spring 2003) .

Walsh, Charles R. "Sovereign Ownership of Private Property in the Name of Preservation: A Contradiction in Terms of the Constitution," 19 N.Y.L. Sch. J. Int'l & Comp. L. 529 (2003).

Walsh, Sean. "Environmental Justice and Procedural Safeguards: The Ethics of Environmental Restoration," 42 Ariz. L. Rev. 525 (Summer 2000).

Williams, Evelyn. "Stigmatized Property Law: To Disclose or Not to Disclose, That Is the Question for Michigan Residential Sellers," 85 MI Bar Jnl. 34 (February, 2006).

Wilson, Bryan P. "State Constitutional Environmental Rights and Judicial Activism: Is the Big Sky Falling?" 53 Emory L.J. 627 (Spring, 2004).

Winokur, James. "The Mixed Blessings of Promissory Servitudes: Toward Optimizing Economic Utility, Individual Liberty, and Personal Identity," 1989 Wis. L. Rev. 1.

Wright, Danaya C. "A New Time for Denominators: Toward a Dynamic Theory of Property in the Regulatory Takings Relevant Parcel Analysis." 34 Envtl. L. 175 (Winter, 2004).

Zellmer, Sandra. "Public Lands Management at the Crossroads: Balancing Interests in the 21st Century: Symposium Article: A Preservation Paradox: Political Prestidgitation and an Enduring Resource of Wildness." 34 Envtl. L. 1015 (Fall, 2004).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 12.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.syn Synopsis to Chapter 12: SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

§ 12.01 Introduction.

§ 12.02 Rights of Aliens to Own Real Property.

§ 12.02(a) Under Common Law in England.

§ 12.02(b) In Early American Law.

§ 12.02(c) States That Have Removed All Alien Property Disabilities.

§ 12.02(d) States That Have Partially Removed Common Law Alien Property Disabilities.

§ 12.02(e) Trend to Remove Property Disabilities of Non-resident Aliens.

§ 12.02(f) Property Disabilities of Enemy Aliens.

§ 12.02(g) Trend to Remove Property Disabilities of Aliens Ineligible for Citizenship.

§ 12.02(h) How Treaties May Affect Alien Property Disabilities.

§ 12.02(i) Restrictions on Alien Property Transactions Conducted Through Business Organizations.

§ 12.03 Married Persons' Property Disabilities.

§ 12.03(a) Historical Background.

§ 12.03(a)(1) Under Early Common Law.

§ 12.03(a)(2) Under Early American Law.

§ 12.03(b) Current Property Disabilities Imposed on Married Women.

§ 12.03(b)(1) Sole Control of Property by Husband.

§ 12.03(b)(2) Property Restrictions Related to Dower, Curtesy and Their Modern Equivalents.

§ 12.03(b)(3) Restrictions Related to Community Property Rights.

§ 12.03(b)(4) Restrictions on Homestead Rights.

§ 12.03(b)(5) Restrictions on Married Minors.

§ 12.03(b)(6) Restrictions on Conveyances Directly Between Spouses.

§ 12.04 Property Disabilities Applied to Minors.

§ 12.05 Property Disabilities Applied to Mental Incompetents.

§ 12.05(a) Historical Background.

§ 12.05(b) Conveyances Before Adjudication of Incompetency.

§ 12.05(c) Conveyances After Adjudication of Incompetency.

§ 12.06 Property Disabilities Imposed on Prisoners.

§ 12.07 Property Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations.

§ 12.07(a) Non-profit Unincorporated Associations Defined.

§ 12.07(b) Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations to Acquire and Hold Real Property Interests.

§ 12.07(b)(1) Conveyances Considered as Void.

§ 12.07(b)(2) Conveyances Considered as Conveyances to Group Members in Cotenancy.

§ 12.07(b)(3) Conveyances Considered as Conveyances in Trust.

§ 12.07(b)(4) Conveyances Permitted to Be Made to the Association Directly.

§ 12.07(b)(5) Determination of the Applicable Law.

§ 12.07(c) Specific Rights to Hold Real Property Interests.

§ 12.07(d) Rights of Unincorporated Associations to Control, Manage, and Transfer Real Property.

§ 12.07(d)(1) Associations That Are Subject to Hierarchical Control.

§ 12.07(d)(2) Associations That Are Not Subject to Hierarchical Control.

§ 12.08 Property Rights of Unincorporated Associations Organized for Profit.

§ 12.08(a) Property Rights of Joint Stock Companies.

§ 12.08(b) Property Rights of Business Trusts.

§ 12.08(c) Property Rights of Partnerships.

§ 12.08(c)(1) Partnerships Prior to the Uniform Partnership Act.

§ 12.08(c)(2) Partnerships Under the Uniform Partnership Act.

§ 12.08(c)(3) Limited Partnerships Under the Uniform Limited Partnership Act.

§ 12.09 Property Rights of Non-stock Private Religious Corporations.

§ 12.09(a) Property Rights Related to Corporate Governance.

§ 12.09(b) Property Rights Related to Statutory Regulation.

§ 12.10 Property Rights of Non-stock Private Cemetery Corporations.

§ 12.11 Property Rights of Other Non-stock Private Corporations.

§ 12.12 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations Generally.

§ 12.13 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations for Public Utilities.

§ 12.14 Private Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations for Finance-Related Enterprises.

§ 12.15 Property Rights of Private Corporations in Other Jurisdictions.

§ 12.16 Choice of Entity for Acquiring and Holding Real Property Interests.

§ 12.16(a) Tax, Structural, and Securities Law Considerations.

§ 12.16(a)(1) Selecting the Entity for Multi-party Ownership of Real Estate: The Menu.

§ 12.16(a)(2) Factors Relevant to Selection.

§ 12.16(a)(3) Tax Factors in Entity Selection.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(i) Determining the Profitability of Rental Real Estate.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(ii) Key Tax Rules.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(iii) Implication of Tax Rules for Cash Flow.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(iv) Tax Implications When Mortgaged Property Is Sold or Foreclosed: Depreciation Payback Time.

§ 12.16(a)(4) General Partnership: Matching the Forms Against the Factors.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(i) Management: All General Partners Run the Show.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(ii) Liability.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(iii) Transferability.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(iv) Continuity.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(v) Tax.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(vi) Aggregate or Entity?

§ 12.16(a)(5) Incentive Management Agreements (I.M.A.s) as an Alternative to a Partnership Interest.

§ 12.16(a)(6) Tenancy in Common.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(i) Management.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(ii) Limited Liability.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(iii) Community Property v. Cotenancy.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(iv) Transferability.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(v) Continuity.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(vi) Tax.

§ 12.16(a)(7) Joint Venture.

§ 12.16(a)(8) Corporation.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(i) Management.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(ii) Liability.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(iii) Dissolution.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(iv) Transferability.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(v) Continuity.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(vi) Bankruptcy.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(vii) Tax.

§ 12.16(a)(9) Limited Partnership.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(i) Management.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(ii) Liability.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(iii) Continuity.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(iv) Transferability.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(v) Tax.

§ 12.16(a)(10) S Corporation.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(i) Tax.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(ii) Management.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(iii) Transferability.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(iv) Continuity.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(v) Liability.

§ 12.16(a)(11) The Limited Liability Company.

§ 12.16(a)(12) Real Estate Investment Trust (R.E.I.T.).

§ 12.16(a)(12)(i) Introduction.

§ 12.16(a)(12)(ii) Qualifying Requirements of the Internal Revenue Code.

§ 12.16(b) Application of Securities Laws.

§ 12.16(b)(1) Promoter's Burden of Complying.

§ 12.16(b)(2) What Is a "Security"?

§ 12.16(b)(2)(i) Distinguishing Sales of Securities from Sales of Realty.

§ 12.16(b)(2)(ii) When General Partnership Interests Are an Investment Contract.

§ 12.16(b)(2)(iii) When Is a "Note" a Security?

§ 12.16(b)(3) Federal Securities Laws.

§ 12.16(b)(3)(i) Registration Process.

§ 12.16(b)(3)(ii) Exemptions.

§ 12.16(b)(4) State Securities (Blue Sky) Laws.

§ 12.16(b)(5) Summary: Application of Securities Law to Entities Used for Acquiring and Developing Property.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(i) Limited Partnership.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(ii) General Partnership.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(iii) C Corporation.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(iv) S Corporation.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(v) Real Estate Investment Trusts.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(vi) Individual Acquisition of Real Estate Entities.

§ 12.16(b)(6) Conclusions.

Professor David A. Thomas n*
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Professor George Lefcoe n
The Law Center
University of Southern California

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote *. §§ 12.01 - 12.15

(n2)Footnote . § 12.16

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.01 Introduction.

This chapter discusses some of the barriers to ownership of real property interests faced by various persons and entities. While many traditional legal disabilities are gradually disappearing, some still persist with respect to aliens, married women, minors, and prisoners. Entities under various property ownership disabilities include non-profit unincorporated associations, unincorporated associations organized for profit, non-stock private religious corporations, non-stock private cemetery corporations, other non-stock private corporations, and certain stock private corporations.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.02 Rights of Aliens to Own Real Property.

[Go To Supp]

§ 12.02(a) Under Common Law in England.

In the early feudal era, nationalism was not yet pronounced, and landowners held property in several regions or under allegiance to several lords without being considered aliens. After national sentiments became more active, feudal fealty to two or more lords with hostile nationalistic sentiments or interests was unacceptable. n1 Thus a French lord with holdings in Normandy and England became alien with respect to the English after the English lost Normandy to the French. n2

After divided loyalties developed that could not be accommodated in a feudal system, the alien under common law did not have the right to acquire or hold property. Consistently, the alien also could not acquire property interests by operation of law, n3 such as by descent, n4 or through a dower, n5 or by curtesy. n6 Being unqualified to take by descent, the alien also could not be a conduit for one to take by descent, n7 and could not transfer property by descent. n8 Even a mortgage given to an alien could be defeated to the extent the mortgage was treated as a transfer of legal title. Any property interests attempted to be passed to aliens could be forfeited to the sovereign, n9 and forfeiture of the mortgage title also defeated the equity of redemption. n10

§ 12.02(b) In Early American Law.

In the American colonies, citizenship could be easily obtained and the traditional common law rules relating to aliens' property rights were of little significance. When independent nationhood was achieved and rules for citizenship became national and uniform, property rights remained mostly matters of state law. States fashioned their own rules for alien property rights, subject to the familiar constitutional restraints of the treaty power and, later, the Fourteenth Amendment provisions. n11 Searching for settlers, states generally took a liberal attitude toward aliens' rights. However, anti-alien sentiment in the midwestern states of the late 19th century still appears in some of those states' statutes. Similar statutes appeared in some western states during the 20th century. n12

§ 12.02(c) States That Have Removed All Alien Property Disabilities.

Alabama, n13 California, n14 Colorado, n15 Michigan, n16 and West Virginia n17 have constitutional provisions granting to resident aliens the same property and other rights as citizens. By statute, each of those states has also further extended those rights to all aliens, whether or not resident.

Delaware, n18 Florida, n19 Maine, n20 Massachusetts, n21 Missouri, n22 Nevada, n23 North Dakota, n24 Ohio, n25 Rhode Island, n26 Tennessee, n27 and Washington n28 have achieved the same result by legislation only. Vermont's courts have removed alien disabilities by judicial decision. n29

§ 12.02(d) States That Have Partially Removed Common Law Alien Property Disabilities.

Several states have partially removed the common law property disabilities of aliens. Minnesota n30 and Pennsylvania n31 have removed most of the significant disabilities by statute. In Indiana n32 and South Carolina, n33 aliens may engage in most land transactions, but in Kentucky n34 and Nebraska n35 most disabilities remain in place.

§ 12.02(e) Trend to Remove Property Disabilities of Non-resident Aliens.

Some states have removed property disabilities only as to resident aliens. North Carolina, n36 Wisconsin n37 and the District of Columbia n38 have left special disabilities applicable only to those aliens who have not established residence in the United States. Iowa, n39 Mississippi, n40 New Hampshire n41 and Oklahoma n42 impose special property disabilities on those aliens who are not residents of those respective states. Arguably Arkansas has also not removed property disabilities from non-resident aliens. n43

In some states, residence within the state is required for an alien to enjoy homestead rights. n44 If either the decedent or surviving spouse is not a resident of the state where homestead rights are sought, the surviving spouse may not claim homestead rights. A surviving spouse may not obtain homestead immunity from creditors by moving into the state of the homestead, n45 and may instead lose homestead rights by moving from the state of the homestead. n46

§ 12.02(f) Property Disabilities of Enemy Aliens.

Five states have removed property disabilities only from aliens who are friendly: Georgia, n47 Maryland, n48 New Jersey, n49 New York n50 and Virginia. n51 Three of those states -- Georgia, n52 New Jersey n53 and New York n54 -- have other statutes or decisions that may mitigate some of the disabilities of enemy aliens.

Ordinary aliens are transformed into enemy aliens whenever their countries are at war with the United States, and, during war, enemy aliens may become subject to special property disabilities imposed by both federal and state governments. n55 Even in a state that has removed property disabilities from aliens generally, may have that action counteracted by federal legislation for seizure or control of enemy alien property.

§ 12.02(g) Trend to Remove Property Disabilities of Aliens Ineligible for Citizenship.

In several states, aliens who are ineligible for citizenship have been subjected to property disabilities. Some states still impose restrictions on holding land, but many have eased and even removed these disabilities altogether.

California's Alien Land Law imposed property disabilities on certain ethnic aliens ineligible for citizenship, but was eventually held unconstitutional. n56 Another California law decreed that aliens ineligible for citizenship could take property in California only if there was a reciprocal agreement with the alien's own country; n57 that restriction was repealed in 1974.

Louisiana's constitutional provision against land acquisitions by aliens who were ineligible for citizenship n58 was repealed, and New Mexico's n59 similar restriction was rendered ineffective by statute. n60

Wyoming's constitution limits its guarantee of property rights to resident aliens only. n61 However, a Wyoming statute expressly prohibits aliens ineligible for citizenship from holding land. n62

Kansas, n63 Minnesota n64 and Wisconsin n65 impose property restrictions on aliens who are ineligible for citizenship, subject to any treaty provisions that may nullify the restrictions. Constitutional or statutory provisions in Arizona, Idaho, Montana and Oregon that imposed disabilities on aliens ineligible for citizenship have all been repealed in recent years.

§ 12.02(h) How Treaties May Affect Alien Property Disabilities.

United States treaties are given constitutional effect as the supreme law of the land, n66 so state regulation of alien property rights may be superseded by treaty provisions. n67 However, federal treaty interference with state laws on alien property rights has generally been restrained. n68

Usually, treaty provisions regulating alien property rights confer on aliens who are otherwise ineligible to acquire real property a period of time in which to sell off land they obtain by inheritance or devise. n69 Even without specific treaty provisions, some courts have held that more general treaties, especially of the "most favored nation" type, implicitly contain the privilege for aliens to acquire and hold land in the United States. n70 Whether or not such treaties confer those privileges may depend on whether ordinary treaties with other nations include such privileges and, if they do, whether they were specifically bargained for or simply included as a standard provision. If such ordinary treaties include alien property privileges as standard provisions, then such privileges could probably be implied in a "most favored nation" treaty. n71

§ 12.02(i) Restrictions on Alien Property Transactions Conducted Through Business Organizations.

Several states have statutes ensuring that aliens do not evade land restrictions by acting through a corporation or other business organization. Such legislation restricts property rights of corporations dominated by aliens or prohibits alien stock ownership in corporations authorized to deal in land. States with such restrictive statutes include Iowa, n72 Louisiana, n73 Minnesota, n74 Nebraska, n75 South Carolina, n76 and Wisconsin. n77

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Because all lands were held of the king as the sovereign or lord paramount, an alien could not hold them without acknowledging allegiance to the king; however, because the alien's allegiance remained to the former sovereign, the alien could not swear allegiance to a second sovereign. Samuel MacClintock, Aliens Under the Federal Laws of the United States 13 (1909).

(n2)Footnote 2. Frederick Pollack & Frederick William Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I (2d ed. 1898) 460-466 (2d ed. 1905).

(n3)Footnote 3. Calvin's Case, 7 Coke 1a, 25a, 77 Eng. Rep. 377, 407 (1606).

(n4)Footnote 4. Orr v. Hodgson, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 453 (1819).

(n5)Footnote 5. William Evan Davies, The Law of Aliens 163 (1931).

(n6)Footnote 6. Burk v. Brown, 2 Atk. 397, 26 Eng. Rep. 640 (1742).

(n7)Footnote 7. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 86 Eng. Rep. 262 (1964).

(n8)Footnote 8. The rule is referred to and mitigated by two statutes, 11 & 12 Wm. 3, ch. 6 (1700), and 25 Geo. 2, ch. 39 (1752).

(n9)Footnote 9. Sharp v. St. Saveur, L.R. 7 Ch. App. 343 (1871); Godfrey and Dixon's Case, Godbolt 275 (1619).

(n10)Footnote 10. John Joseph Powell, Mortgages 106 (Am. ed. 1828).

(n11)Footnote 11. Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U.S. 197 (1923). See also James Alan Hiuzinga, Alien Land Laws: Constitutional Limitations on State Power to Regulate, 32 Hastings L. J. 251 (1980); Rights and Restrictions on Interests of Aliens in U.S. Estates: Federal and State Laws Affecting Administration and Distribution of U.S. Estates in Which Aliens Hold Interests, 15 Real Property, Probate and Trust J. 659 (1980).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Joshua Weisman, Restrictions on the Acquisition of Land by Aliens, 28 Am. J. of Comparative L. 39 (1980).

(n13)Footnote 13. Ala. Const. § 34; Ala. Code tit. 35, § 1-1. See also Nicrosi v. Phillipi, 80 So. 561 (Ala. 1890); Harley v. State, 40 Ala. 689 (1867).

(n14)Footnote 14. Cal. Const. art. I, § 20.

(n15)Footnote 15. Colo. Const. art. 2, § 27; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 15-11-112.

(n16)Footnote 16. Mich. Const. art. 10, § 6; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 26.1105.

(n17)Footnote 17. W. Va. Const. art. 2, § 5; W. Va. Code §§ 36-1-21, 42-1-4.

(n18)Footnote 18. Del. Code Ann. §§ 25-306, 25-307.

(n19)Footnote 19. Fla. Const. art. 1, § 2; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 732.1101. See also Fla. Stat. Ann. § 198.04 (permitting property restrictions to be imposed on aliens ineligible for citizenship).

(n20)Footnote 20. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann., tit. 33, § 451.

(n21)Footnote 21. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 184, § 1.

(n22)Footnote 22. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 442.560 (Missouri now limits holdings of agricultural land by non-resident aliens). See Stephen F. Mathews, Recent Developments in Missouri: Agricultural Law, 49 U. Mo.-K.C. L. Rev. 405 (1981).

(n23)Footnote 23. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 111.055.

(n24)Footnote 24. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-01-11 (North Dakota now limits holdings of agricultural land by non-resident aliens).

(n25)Footnote 25. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2105.16.

(n26)Footnote 26. R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-2-1.

(n27)Footnote 27. Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 31-2-109, 66-2-101.

(n28)Footnote 28. Wash. Const. amend. 42; Wash. Rev. Code §§ 64.16.005, 64.16.140.

(n29)Footnote 29. Lenahan v. Spaulding & Lamphrey, 57 Vt. 115 (1884); State v. Boston Concord and Montreal R.R. Co., 25 Vt. 433 (1853); Gilman v. Thompson, 11 Vt. 643 (1839).

(n30)Footnote 30. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.221.

(n31)Footnote 31. See Pa. Const. Stat. Ann., tit. 68, §§ 22, 24, 28, 41-47, 53. See also In re Gregg's Estate, 109 A. 777 (Pa. 1920); Cooke v. Doron, 64 A. 595 (Pa. 1906); Bridgeford v. Groh, 305 A. 260 (Pa. 1932).

(n32)Footnote 32. Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32-1-7-1 - 32-1-8-3.

(n33)Footnote 33. S.C. Const. art. 3, § 35; S.C. Code Ann. §§ 27-13-10 - 27-13-40; Tucker v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Co., 59 S.E. 859 (S.C. 1907).

(n34)Footnote 34. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 381.290, 381.300, 381.320, 381.330, 391.040, 391.060; Commonwealth v. Von Zedwitz, 285 S.W. 224 (Ky. 1926).

(n35)Footnote 35. Neb. Const. art. 1, § 25 (1875); Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-402, 76-403, 76-405, 76-409, 76-415; Goos v. Brocks, 223 N.W. 13 (Neb. 1929).

(n36)Footnote 36. N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 64-1, 64-3.

(n37)Footnote 37. Wis. Const. art. 1, § 15.

(n38)Footnote 38. 48 U.S.C. § 1508; D.C. Code Ann. § 45-1301; Larkin v. Washington Loan & Trust Co., 31 F.2d 635 (D.C. Cir. 1929), cert. denied, 279 U.S. 867 (1929).

(n39)Footnote 39. Iowa Const. art. 1, § 22; Iowa Code Ann. §§ 567.1 - 567.11; In re Estate of Millers, 159 N.W.2d 441 (Iowa 1968); Arthur Elevator Co. v. Grove, 236 N.W.2d 383 (Iowa 1975).

(n40)Footnote 40. Miss. Code Ann. § 89-1-23; Guiseppe v. Cozzani, 118 So. 2d 189 (Miss. 1960).

(n41)Footnote 41. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 477:20, 477:21; In re Constan's Estate, 384 A.2d 495 (N.H. 1978).

(n42)Footnote 42. Okla. Const. art. 22, § 1; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 60, §§ 121 - 124, 127; Cooke v. Coronado Oil Co., 240 P. 739 (Okla. 1925).

(n43)Footnote 43. Ark. Const. art. 2, § 20; Applegate v. Lum Jung Luke, 291 S.W. 978 (Ark. 1927) (holding the above-cited constitutional provisions inapplicable to resident aliens).

(n44)Footnote 44. Miss. Code Ann. § 27-33-3. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 31, § 3. See Note, State Homestead Exemption Laws, 46 Yale L.J. 1023 (1937).

(n45)Footnote 45. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Fly, 63 So. 227 (Miss. 1913); Ex parte Morrow, 190 S.E. 506 (S.C. 1937).

(n46)Footnote 46. Coile v. Hudgins, 70 S.W. 56 (Tenn. 1902).

(n47)Footnote 47. Ga. Code Ann. § 1-2-11.

(n48)Footnote 48. Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 14-101.

(n49)Footnote 49. N.J. Rev. Stat. § 46:3-18; See Comment, State Regulation of Nonresident Alien Inheritance -- An Anomaly in Foreign Policy, 18 U. Chi. L. Rev. 329 (1951).

(n50)Footnote 50. N.Y. Real Prop. Law §§ 10, 15; Techt v. Hughes, 128 N.E. 185 (N.Y. 1920), cert. denied, 254 U.S. 643 (1920).

(n51)Footnote 51. Va. Code Ann. §§ 55-1, 64-4, 64.1-4; Fairfax's Devisee v. Hunter's Leasee, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 603 (1813).

(n52)Footnote 52. Ga. Code Ann. § 1-2-11.

(n53)Footnote 53. N.J. Rev. Stat. § 46:3-18; N.J. Laws ch. 145; N.J. Laws ch. 61; N.J. Laws ch. 232.

(n54)Footnote 54. George v. People, 40 N.Y.S.2d 830, aff'd, 47 N.Y.S.2d 681 (1944); Dezsofi v. Jacoby, 36 N.Y.S.2d 672 (1942).

(n55)Footnote 55. See Note, Partnership Claims Before the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal, 27 Va. J. Int'l L. 307 (1987) (relevant issues that arise when nations are not technically at war, but involved in some type of international conflict).

(n56)Footnote 56. See Fujii v. State, 242 P.2d 617 (Cal. 1952).

(n57)Footnote 57. Cal. Prob. Code § 259.

(n58)Footnote 58. La. Const. art. 19, § 21.

(n59)Footnote 59. N.M. Const. art. 12, § 22.

(n60)Footnote 60. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-112.

(n61)Footnote 61. Wyo. Const. art. 1, § 29.

(n62)Footnote 62. Wyo. Stat. § 34-15-101.

(n63)Footnote 63. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 59-511.

(n64)Footnote 64. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.221.

(n65)Footnote 65. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 710.02.

(n66)Footnote 66. U.S. Const. art. VI, § 2.

(n67)Footnote 67. Giusseppi v. Cozzani, 118 So. 2d 189 (Miss. 1960); In the Matter of Johnston, 190 S.E.2d 879 (Miss. 1972).

(n68)Footnote 68. Charles Cheney Hyde, International Law § 203 (1945); 4 John Bassett Moore, Digest of International Law 3843 (1906); Samuel MacClintock, Aliens Under the Federal Laws of the United States, 4 Ill. Rev. 95 (1909).

(n69)Footnote 69. 31 Stat. 1939; Hughes v. Edwards, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 489 (1829); Doe ex dem. Dockstader v. Roe, 55 A. 341 (Del. 1903).

(n70)Footnote 70. Brown v. Daly's Estate, 154 N.W. 602 (Ia. 1915). Most favored nation clauses implicitly grant foreign citizens under treaty the same favorable rights and benefits as are included in U.S. treaties with other nations.

(n71)Footnote 71. Charles Cheney Hyde, International Law § 536 (1945).

(n72)Footnote 72. Iowa Code Ann. § 567.1 (restricts corporate ownership of agricultural land when the majority of shareholders are aliens).

(n73)Footnote 73. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 2:132 (only prohibits foreign corporations from acquiring public airports once owned by governmental entities).

(n74)Footnote 74. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.221 (restricts corporate ownership of agricultural land when more than 20% of the corporate shares are owned by aliens, unless treaties provide otherwise).

(n75)Footnote 75. Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-404, 76-406, 76-407, 76-411, 76-413.

(n76)Footnote 76. S.C. Code Ann. § 27-13-30 (limits holdings of alien-controlled corporation to 500,000 acres).

(n77)Footnote 77. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 710.02 (restrictions subject to treaties).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.03 Married Persons' Property Disabilities.

[Go To Supp]

§ 12.03(a) Historical Background.

§ 12.03(a)(1) Under Early Common Law.

At common law, the principal impact of marriage on individual property rights was to invoke rights of dower and curtesy. The dower right was the widow's life interest in one-third of each parcel of freehold land of which the husband was seised at any time during the marriage, and which land was inheritable by the issue of the couple. As to land held by the husband at the time of marriage, dower attached at the moment of marriage; as to land acquired later, the dower right attached upon acquisition. If the wife predeceased the husband, the inchoate dower right was extinguished; if she survived the husband, the dower right became possessory upon his death. Dower could not be defeated by divorce or by the husband's creditors; it could be released only with the wife's consent. The wife had a right to judicial scrutiny of the division of lands assigned to her for dower possession. n78

The husband's somewhat comparable curtesy right was a life estate in all freehold land of which the wife was seised during the marriage and which was inheritable by issue of the couple. Curtesy also was extended to all equitable estates owned by the wife during the marriage. Curtesy, however did not attach until the live birth of issue capable of inheriting the property. n79

During the marriage, at common law the husband had the sole right to manage and control the land held by the couple or either of them. The estates thus controlled by the husband consisted of an estate for the couple's joint lives and, upon the birth of a child, an estate for the husband's life. The husband's right of management and control over these estates meant that he could convey them without the wife's consent, and that his participation was necessary if the wife wished to convey from her property any estate greater than a life estate. n80 Also, one spouse could not convey land directly to the other. n81

Eventually, English courts recognized "equitable separate property of married women." n82 If a conveyance of land to a married woman was clearly intended for the separate use of the married woman, it was treated as a trust, free from the husband's control and from his creditors and freely alienable by the wife herself. n83 The old restriction on direct conveyances between spouses was avoided by use of the lease and release, according to which one spouse conveyed to a third party for the use of the other spouse. The use thus created was executed into a legal title by the Statute of Uses after 1535. n84

§ 12.03(a)(2) Under Early American Law.

England's American colonies varied considerably in their approaches to the traditional property disabilities of married women. Some disabilities broke down early in some colonies, while other disabilities persisted long after they had disappeared in England. Even the well-established doctrine of equitable separate property of married women enjoyed only haphazard acceptance, because colonies did not accept English equity as eagerly as they received English common law. n85

Married women's property disabilities persisted until the 19th century, when states began to enact legislation known generally as "Married Women's Acts" or "Married Women's Property Acts." These state statutes in their own individual ways eliminated most of those disabilities. n86

Eliminating women's property disabilities has not affected other restraints on the property rights of married couples under American law, notably under homestead and community property rules. Viewed more as protections than as restrictions, the homestead exemption laws in almost every state typically exempt married persons' property from execution for debt, prohibit conveyance or encumbrance by one spouse alone, and confer on the surviving spouse a life estate in some or all of the land that was held by the couple while married. n87

Different disabilities exist in some American community property jurisdictions. In those jurisdictions still following the old Spanish rules for management of community property, the husband has full power over the property, including the power to convey, and the wife has no independent power. n88

§ 12.03(b) Current Property Disabilities Imposed on Married Women.

§ 12.03(b)(1) Sole Control of Property by Husband.

In Alabama n89 and Florida, n90 a conveyance or lease of an interest in land owned by the wife required, until recently, the joinder of the husband, but now no longer does. In the community property states of Louisiana n91 and Nevada n92 only the husband had power to convey community property, but now joinder of the wife is required for many conveyances. Some statutory exceptions are based on the insanity of the husband, divorce, abandonment, desertion, separation by agreement, non-residence, or fiduciary responsibility of the wife, n93 but these have tended to become obsolete as the number of jurisdictions supporting control by the husband has dwindled. New Hampshire recognizes some forms of husband control if the wife has acquired her property "by payment or pledge of the property of the husband." n94 Alabama n95 and Delaware n96 require special examination of the wife or acknowledgement by the wife when she conveys her own property.

§ 12.03(b)(2) Property Restrictions Related to Dower, Curtesy and Their Modern Equivalents.

Because both dower and curtesy conferred on the surviving spouse life estate interests in lands owned by the other spouse, any conveyance of an interest in those lands, while both spouses were alive, required joinder of the other spouse in order to be free of the dower or curtesy interest. Today, the curtesy right, where it survives has been reduced to a life estate in only a portion of the lands held by the wife at her death, rather than in all of the lands held by her at any time during the marriage. Concomitantly, in these jurisdictions, the restrictions on the wife's capacity to convey an interest in those lands during her lifetime have been wholly eliminated. n97 In several of those jurisdictions, the traditional rules restraining the husband from conveying lands affected by dower have also been entirely eliminated. However, in the rest of those jurisdictions, the restraints remain on the husband as to land under the dower rights. n98

In states where dower and curtesy no longer exist, but other protective substitutes have been enacted, protection intended for the surviving spouse consistently produces restrictions on the other spouse's capacity to deal in lands thus affected. This is especially true in those states where the share of the surviving spouse in the descendent's estate is about the same as under dower or curtesy, n99 and in those states that have increased the protected share of the surviving spouse. n100

If these devices for protecting the surviving spouse result in restrictions being placed on the capacity of the other spouse unilaterally to convey, those restrictions may be lifted because of the insanity of the spouse whose joinder is required, n101 or when a mortgage is given to secure part of the purchase price of the mortgaged property. n102 Such restrictions are also lifted in some states because of the non-residency of, desertion by, or separation by decree from the protected spouse. n103

§ 12.03(b)(3) Restrictions Related to Community Property Rights.

All community property states recognize that either spouse may have "separate" property that is free from any restrictions otherwise placed on the marital or community property. n104 With respect to community property itself, the community property states are divided as to the degree of restriction placed on the ability of individual spouses to deal with the property. In Arizona, n105 California, n106 Idaho, n107 Nevada, n108 New Mexico, n109 Washington, n110 and Louisiana n111 neither spouse may individually convey community property. Both must join in any such conveyance. In Texas, either spouse may convey the special community property over which he or she has sole right of management, but otherwise both spouses must join in conveyances of community property. n112

§ 12.03(b)(4) Restrictions on Homestead Rights.

In Virginia n113 and West Virginia, n114 apparently no restriction rests on either spouse who individually wishes to convey homestead land. In Georgia n115 and Tennessee n116 some vague or partial restrictions apply to an individual spouse who seeks to convey or encumber homestead land, while New Mexico n117 and Ohio n118 have now repealed their restrictions.

Most states that recognize homestead rights in property also require both spouses to join in any conveyance or mortgage of homestead property. n119

In several of these states, additional rules exist. The community property state of Texas will not even recognize a joint mortgage unless it is given for the purchase price, for taxes or for improvements relating to the land. n120 To ensure the wife's genuinely voluntary joinder in the conveyance, some states require that her acknowledgment be separate from her husband's. n121 Other states require that the acknowledgment contain language conceding that the conveyance destroys homesteadrights. n122

Exceptions to these restrictions apply in special circumstances in some states. An individual spouse may give a mortgage for part of the original purchase price, n123 or may convey the property if the other spouse is incompetent. n124 A few states permit one spouse to incur mechanics' liens on the homestead property, n125 or to act alone when the other spouse is a non-resident, n126 or has abandoned n127 or divorced the conveying spouse. n128

Conveyances in violation of applicable restrictions are usually void. n129 A deed can be canceled and the land returned; n130 a mortgage can be canceled by the non-joining spouse without repaying the loan. n131 Conveyances of leaseholds may likewise be canceled. n132

On rare occasions, conveyances in violation of homestead restrictions may be upheld. In Texas, a conveyance of homestead property by the husband may become valid if the land loses its homestead character, n133 and in other states some conveyances of homestead lands from one spouse to the other are recognized. n134

§ 12.03(b)(5) Restrictions on Married Minors.

Minors who marry are subject to whatever property restrictions apply to married persons, but may be relieved of some property restrictions that apply to minors. State statutes vary widely in how they regulate property rights of married minors.

In a few states the property disabilities of minority are removed completely from married minors. n135 One state allows married minors to release dower, curtesy or homestead rights. n136 Still other states lift minority disabilities upon fulfillment of specific conditions. n137 In Rhode Island the property disabilities of minors are removed only from married families. n138

§ 12.03(b)(6) Restrictions on Conveyances Directly Between Spouses.

The common law prohibition of property conveyances directly between spouses still prevails in a few states. n139 In other states, the prohibition has been removed judicially n140 or by statute. If the statutory reform has been piecemeal, conveyances that took place at various times in the past may be treated differently. n141 However, statutes in several states have removed all such disabilities related to both present and past conveyances. n142

The statutory removal of restrictions may be limited to certain types of conveyances, such as husband to wife only, n143 wife to husband only, n144 recorded conveyances only, n145 or recorded conveyances other than mortgages. n146 Certain other restrictions still apply in a few jurisdictions, such as special acknowledgment procedures for the wife, n147 or the old common law requirement that the husband join in the wife's conveyances of her own property, even to himself. n148

In some states with no statutes explicitly removing prohibitions against conveyances between spouses, courts have applied related statutes to achieve the same end. For example, statutes permitting spouses to contract with one another have been so construed, n149 as have married women's property acts. n150

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 78. III William Searle, Jr. Holdsworth, A History of English Law 185-189 (1923).

(n2)Footnote 79. Id. at 189-197.

(n3)Footnote 80. II Pollock and Maitland, supra, note 2 (2d ed. 1905).

(n4)Footnote 81. James Schouler, A Treatise on the Law of Marriage, Divorce, Separation and Domestic Relations §§ 72, 188, 197 (6th ed. 1921).

(n5)Footnote 82. Id. at §§ 247-285.

(n6)Footnote 83. II R. S. Donnison Roper, Husband and Wife 152 (2d ed. 1826).

(n7)Footnote 84. Id. at 53.

(n8)Footnote 85. Schouler, supra note 81, at §§ 210-214 (6th ed. 1921).

(n9)Footnote 86. Id. at § 286-295, 458, 463, 465.

(n10)Footnote 87. See Note, State Homestead Exemption Laws, 46 Yale L. J. 1023 (1937).

(n11)Footnote 88. William Q. De Funiak, Principles of Community Property § 113 (1943).

(n12)Footnote 89. Ala. Code § 30-4-12 (1975) (was held unconstitutional in Peddy v. Montgomery, 345 So. 2d 611 (Ala. 1977), so the requirement no longer applies).

(n13)Footnote 90. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 693.01 and 693.14 were repealed upon adoption of Fla. Const. art. 10, § 5 in 1968.

(n14)Footnote 91. La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 2347, 2349 (However, donations of community property require joinder of both spouses).

(n15)Footnote 92. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123-230 (requires joinder of wife in conveyances of community real property). An older case upholding the power of the husband alone to convey is Nixon v. Brown, 214 P. 524 (Nev. 1923).

(n16)Footnote 93. See, e.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 404.050.

(n17)Footnote 94. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 460:1.

(n18)Footnote 95. Ala. Code § 30-4-12.

(n19)Footnote 96. Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 102.

(n20)Footnote 97. Union Planters Nat'l Bank v. United States, 361 F.2d 662 (6th Cir. 1966); Ark. Const. art. 9, § 7; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 14-2-207; Barnhart v. Burkhardt, 574 P.2d 500 (Colo. 1978); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46b-36, 45a-436; National Bank of Rochester v. Meadowbrook Heights, Inc., 265 N.W.2d 43 (Mich. App. 1978); Miss. Code Ann. § 91-1-7; Mont. Code Ann. § 40-2-202; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 11; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-07-04; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 461, 474; Proulx v. Parrow, 56 A.2d 623 (Vt. 1948).

(n21)Footnote 98. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 50-416, 57-437, 57-438; Mickle v. Mickle, 488 S.W.2d 45 (Ark. 1972); Gross v. Gross, 585 S.W.2d 14 (Ark. 1979); Iowa Code Ann. § 633.238; Utah Code Ann. § 75-2-201; Thompson v. City of Centerville, 417 P.2d 670 (Utah 1966).

(n22)Footnote 99. Del. Code Ann. tit. 12, § 502, 901; Mass. Ann. Laws, ch. 191, § 15; N.J. Rev. Stat. § 3A:35-1; 3A:35-2; Fire Guard Sprinkler Corp. v. Manolio, 421 A.2d 592 (N.J. 1980); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2103.02, 5303.22 (1964); Dick Adm'r v. Bauman, 55 N.E.2d 137 (Ohio 1944); Pfau v. Moseley, 222 N.E.2d 639 (Ohio 1966); R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. § 15-4-6, 15-4-8, 33-4-1, 33-4-2; Va. Code Ann. § 55-35 - 55-37, 55-40; W. Va. Code Ann. § 48-3-2, 48-3-5.

(n23)Footnote 100. 755 I.L.C.S. 5/2-1, 5/2-2; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 159 N.E. 274 (Ill. 1927); Ind. Ann. Stat. § 29-1-2-1 - 29-1-2-3.1; Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 59-505; Mulsow v. Gerber Energy Corp., 697 P.2d 1269 (Kan. 1985); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 392.020, 392.130, 392.140; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.02; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 20, § 2102, 2105.

(n24)Footnote 101. See nn. 11-13, supra.

(n25)Footnote 102. Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 2104.

(n26)Footnote 103. Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 59-505; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 519.07; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 3A:37-2.

(n27)Footnote 104. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-451; Cal. Family Code § 752 - 754, 770, 2035, 2036.5; Idaho Code Ann. § 32-903, 32-904; La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 9:101 - 9:103, 9:105; Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 123.170, 123.230; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 5.01, 5.21; William O. Huie, Texas Constitutional Definition of the Wife's Separate Property, 35 Tex. L. Rev. 1054 (1957); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 26.16.010, 26.16.020.

(n28)Footnote 105. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-452.

(n29)Footnote 106. Cal. Family Code §§ 761, 5127; Yearout v. American Pipe & Steel Corp., 168 P.2d 174 (Cal. 1946); Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross, 812 P.2d 931 (Cal. 1991).

(n30)Footnote 107. Idaho Code § 32-912; Morgan v. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., 201 P.2d 976 (Idaho 1948); Keller v. Rogstad, 733 P.2d 705 (Idaho 1987).

(n31)Footnote 108. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.230.

(n32)Footnote 109. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-13; Hannah v. Tennant, 589 P.2d 1035 (N.M. 1979); Arch, Ltd. v. Yu, 766 P.2d 911 (N.M. 1989).

(n33)Footnote 110. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.03.

(n34)Footnote 111. La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 2346, 2347. Although art. 2346 permits either spouse to manage the property, art. 2347 requires consent of both spouses to a conveyance or an encumbrance of the property. See Magee v. Amiss, 502 So. 2d 568 (La. 1987); Lupo v. Lupo, 475 So. 2d 402 (La. App. 1985).

(n35)Footnote 112. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 5.02, 5.22, 5.24; Valdez v. Ramirez, 574 S.W.2d 748 (Tex. 1978).

(n36)Footnote 113. Va. Code Ann. § 34-9.

(n37)Footnote 114. W. Va. Const. art. VI, § 48; Moran v. Clark, 4 S.E. 303 (W. Va. 1887).

(n38)Footnote 115. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-13-17.

(n39)Footnote 116. Tenn. Code Ann. § 26-2-301.

(n40)Footnote 117. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 24-6-8 (1953) (now repealed).

(n41)Footnote 118. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2329.82 (1964) (now repealed).

(n42)Footnote 119. Ala. Code § 6-10-3; Lee v. Lee, 90 So. 2d 775 (Ala. 1956); Sims v. Cox, 611 So. 2d 339 (Ala. 1992); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33-453, 33-1104; Cal. Civ. Code § 1242; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-118; Knoche v. Morgan, 664 P.2d 258 (Colo. App. 1983). But cf. Commercial Factors of Denver v. Clarke & Waggener, 684 P.2d 261 (Colo. App. 1984) (holding that signatures of both joint tenants (husband and wife here) are not needed to encumber property that was homesteaded solely by operation of automatic statutory provisions); Fla. Const. art. X, § 4; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 708.10(5); Williams v. Foerster, 335 So. 2d 810(Fla. 1976) (except for conveyances between spouses). See Harold B. Crosby and George John Miller, Our Legal Chameleon, the Florida Homestead Exemption, 2 U. Fla. L. Rev. 12, 62-67 (1949); Idaho Code Ann. § 55-1006; 750 I.L.C.S. 65/9; Iowa Code Ann. §§ 557.4, 561.13; Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 60-2303; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 427.100; La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 9:2801; Mass. Ann. Laws, ch. 188, § 7; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.02; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-1-29; Hendry v. Hendry, 300 So. 2d 147 (Miss. 1974); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 513.475; Mont. Rev. Codes Ann. § 70-32-301; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 40-104 (1960); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.230; N.C. Const. art. X, § 2(4); N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 47-18-05; Okla. Stat. Ann., tit. 16, § 4 (except a lease for a period of less than one year); Grenard v. McMahan, 441 P.2d 950 (Okla. 1968); S.D. Code § 43-31-17; Williams v. Saxon, 521 S.W.2d 88 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975); Villarreal v. Laredo Nat'l Bank, 677 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. App. 1984); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 141; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 6.12.110; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.02; Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 34-2-121. See Clarice M. Davis, Conveying the Homestead Without Joinder of Both Spouses, 20 Southwestern L.J. 794 (1966); Shapiro, Restraint on Alienation and Devise of Homestead, 19 U. of Miami L. Rev. 72 (1964); Note, Deeds to the Homestead Made by the Husband Without Joinder of Wife, 3 Baylor L. Rev. 414 (1951).

(n43)Footnote 120. Tex. Const. art. XVI, § 50; Toler v. Fertitta, 67 S.W.2d 229 (Tex. 1934).

(n44)Footnote 121. Colburn v. Mid-State Homes, Inc., 266 So. 2d 865 (Ala. 1972).

(n45)Footnote 122. Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 34-2-121.

(n46)Footnote 123. Mich. Stat. Ann. § 26-224; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.02; Hulbert v. Givens, 392 P.2d 729 (Okla. 1964); Faine v. Wilson, 209 S.W.2d 427 (Tex. 1948); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 141.

(n47)Footnote 124. Miss. Code Ann. § 89-1-29; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 40-104; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 115.070; N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 47-18-22; Grotberg v. First Nat'l Bank, 210 N.W. 21 (N.D. 1926) (court authorization also required); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 16, § 7; S.D. Code § 43-31-18; Gersdorff v. Torres, 293 S.W. 560 (Tex. 1927).

(n48)Footnote 125. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 16-66-210.

(n49)Footnote 126. S.D. Code § 43-31-17.

(n50)Footnote 127. Kirkman v. Pittman, 111 So. 2d 583 (Ala. 1959); Sims v. Douglas, 381 So. 2d 617 (Miss. 1980); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 16, § 4.

(n51)Footnote 128. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 31A-1; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 16, § 4; Eagle Lumber Co. v. Trainham, 365 S.W.2d 702 (Tex. 1963); Rundell v. Rundell, 423 N.W.2d 77 (Minn. App. 1988).

(n52)Footnote 129. Mosley v. Clark, 362 So. 2d 615 (Miss. 1978); Christensen v. Arant, 358 N.W.2d 200 (Neb. 1984); State Bank of Drummond v. Christopherson, 286 N.W.2d 547 (Wis. 1980).

(n53)Footnote 130. Cleveland v. Milner, 170 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. 1943); McDaniel v. Pettigrew, 536 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

(n54)Footnote 131. Villarreal v. Laredo Nat'l Bank, 677 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. App. 1984).

(n55)Footnote 132. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2:26-120.

(n56)Footnote 133. Villarreal v. Laredo Nat'l Bank, 677 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. App. 1984).

(n57)Footnote 134. In re Canada v. Cavage, 384 So. 2d 1356 (Fla. App. 1980); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.02; Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 34-2-121.

(n58)Footnote 135. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 743.01; Iowa Code § 599.1; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 16, § 1; Pittman v. Time Sec., 301 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1957); Utah Code Ann. § 15-2-1. See also Vivian G. Johnston, Jr., Married Minors; Their Legal Status, 21 Ala. Lawyer 350 (1960).

(n59)Footnote 136. Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.040.

(n60)Footnote 137. Ga. Code Ann. § 13-3-20; Ind. Ann. Stat. § 32-1-13-1; Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 38-101; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 48.245; N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 39-13.2; R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. §§ 30-19-1 - 30-19-3, 30-19-5.

(n61)Footnote 138. R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. § 15-4-6. See Albert A. Ehrenzweig, Contractual Capacity of Married Women and Infants in the Conflict of Laws, 43 Minn. L. Rev. 899 (1959).

(n62)Footnote 139. Kenny v. Peregoy, 78 A.2d 173 (Md. 1951); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 519.06; Vt. Stat. tit. 15, § 61.

(n63)Footnote 140. Bavido v. Weixel, 459 So. 2d 701 (La. App. 1984).

(n64)Footnote 141. See, e.g., McCarty v. Skelton, 172 So. 901 (Ala. 1937).

(n65)Footnote 142. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 18-12-401; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.11; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 37:2-18. See Note, Presumptions as to Nature of Transfers from Wife to Husband, 5 Ark. L. Rev. 446 (1941).

(n66)Footnote 143. An example of this type of restriction is D.C. Code Ann. § 30-205 (1967), which has now been repealed.

(n67)Footnote 144. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 48, § 71. See also In re Vandergrift's Estate, 161 A. 898 (Pa. 1932).

(n68)Footnote 145. Miss. Code Ann. § 93-3-9.

(n69)Footnote 146. See Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 209, § 3. See also Aims v. Chandler, 164 N.E. 616 (Mass. 1929).

(n70)Footnote 147. Perry v. Stancil, 75 S.E.2d 512 (N.C. 1953).

(n71)Footnote 148. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.11; Dice v. Reese, 21 A.2d 89 (Pa. 1941).

(n72)Footnote 149. Ala. Code § 30-4-9; McCarty v. Skelton, 172 So. 901 (Ala. Dist. Ct. App. 1937); Horsman v. Maden, 157 P.2d 882 (Cal. App. 1945). See Note, Community Property -- Conveyances Between Husband and Wife -- Presumptions, 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 388 (1928); Mont. Rev. Codes Ann. § 40-2-301; Petition of Fuller, 159 P.2d 579 (Nev. 1945). N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-2-2; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-07-06; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3103.05; S.D. Code § 25-2-10.

(n73)Footnote 150. 765 I.L.C.S. 5/19; Pure Oil Co. v. Bayler, 58 N.E.2d 26 (Ill. 1944); Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 23-202; Withroder v. Weideroder, 134 P.2d 381 (Kan. 1943); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 404.020, 404.030; Nickel v. Gregory, 256 S.W.2d 517 (Ky. App. 1953); Smith v. Hughes, 167 S.W.2d 847 (Ky. 1942); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1746; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 451.290; Hall v. Hall, 145 S.W.2d 752 (Mo. 1940); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 42-202; Currier v. Teske, 120 N.W. 1015 (Neb. 1909); Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 20-1-201.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

127 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.04 Property Disabilities Applied to Minors.

[Go To Supp]

Eighteen years of age has now become the universal minimum age qualification for voting in the United States, n151 and has also become the age of majority throughout the states for most purposes. Minority of itself is no bar to acquiring and owning land, n152 but a minor normally still has the right to disaffirm land transactions made during minority. n153 Disaffirmance can occur either during minority n154 or within certain time limits after reaching majority. Those time limits may be either specific, n155 or may be described as a reasonable time after majority, n156 or are simply governed by principles of laches and estoppel. n157 Disaffirmance can be asserted only by the minor or, after the minor's death, by the minor's personal representative or successor while the privilege still exists. n158

The right of disaffirmance is narrowed in some jurisdictions if the transaction is for land on which the minor will live or for some other necessity. n159 Disaffirmance may also be conditioned upon the minor's restoring what was obtained in the transaction. n160 Disaffirmance rights do not apply if the minor's conveyance is made pursuant to court order.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 151. U.S. Const. amend. XXXVI.

(n2)Footnote 152. Kenwood Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Williams, 220 N.E.2d 582 (Ohio 1966); See Milton G. Gershenson, Can an Infant Obtain Specific Performance of a Contract to Buy Real Property? 22 Brooklyn L. Rev. 49 (1955).

(n3)Footnote 153. Pipkin v. Lantz, 354 S.W.2d 87 (Tenn. App. 1961).

(n4)Footnote 154. Smith v. Wade, 100 N.W.2d 770 (Neb. 1960).

(n5)Footnote 155. Walker v. Ellis, 207 S.W.2d 39 (Ark. 1948).

(n6)Footnote 156. Harrod v. Kelly Adjustment Co., 179 A.2d 431 (D.C. App. 1962); Iowa Code § 599.2; Mont.

Rev. Codes Ann. § 41-1-304.

(n7)Footnote 157. Burnand v. Irigoyen, 186 P.2d 417 (Cal. 1947).

(n8)Footnote 158. Huish v. Lopez, 218 P.2d 727 (Ariz. 1950); Mont. Rev. Code Ann. § 41-1-304.

(n9)Footnote 159. Merrick v. Stephens, 337 S.W.2d 713 (Mo. App. 1960).

(n10)Footnote 160. Burnand v. Irigoyen, 186 P.2d 417 (Cal. 1947); Idaho Code Ann. § 32-103; Iowa Code § 599.2; Mont. Rev. Code Ann. § 41-1-304.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.05 Property Disabilities Applied to Mental Incompetents.

§ 12.05(a) Historical Background.

In England before 1603 a conveyance by one without the mental capacity to consent was void. n161 However, a key court ruling in 1603 held that one could not plead one's own insanity as a defense to a transaction. n162 This rule remained unchanged until 1848, when it was held that a conveyance by an incompetent could be upheld only if the competent party was unaware of and gained no unfair advantage from the other party's incompetency. n163 Thus the conveyances by mental incompetents were originally void, then usually valid, then often voidable, according to the uncertain evolution of the English rule.

§ 12.05(b) Conveyances Before Adjudication of Incompetency.

Mental incompetents are deemed capable of acquiring land, so long as no specific obligations are attached to the acquisition. n164 Property interests may also descend from or through mental incompetents. n165 However, mental competency may affect the capacity to convey of one who is grantor. n166

The legal standard for mental capacity to convey is that the grantor must have the ability to understand the nature and effect of the conveyance at the time it is made. n167 Conveyances by a grantor who does not meet this standard even before being adjudicated mentally incompetent, are held void in some states. n168

In most states, however, a pre-adjudication conveyance by one who is mentally incompetent is simply voidable, rather than void. n169 Such a conveyance is usually voided by the grantor, or by the committee acting for the grantor, or by those entitled to the grantor's estate after his death. n170

The general rule of voidability just expressed is subject to numerous qualifications in the state courts. The right to cancel may be limited if the transaction is no longer fully executory. n171 The right to cancel may also be subject to a statute of limitations or some notion of reasonable time after the agreement is created. n172 The right may be lost if the incompetent grantor or the grantor's agent ratifies the transaction. n173 Also, cancellation may be conditioned upon restoring of parties to their pre-transaction status, n174 unless the competent party knew of the grantor's incompetence n175 or the grantor did not receive payment. n176 No restitution requirement is imposed in Maine, Massachusetts and Nebraska. n177

In a few states, the rule of voidability resembles the English rule, in that it denies cancellation if the grantee was unaware of grantor's incompetence and obtained no unfair advantage from the transaction. n178

§ 12.05(c) Conveyances After Adjudication of Incompetency.

By means of a court proceeding a committee may be appointed to manage the property of a mentally incompetent person. An attempted conveyance by an incompetent person after such a committee has been appointed is usually void, either according to statute n179 or by judicial decision. n180 Such conveyances are treated as voidable in only a few states. n181 Without statutory authorization, the committee for a mentally incompetent person probably cannot exercise a power of appointment held by the incompetent person. n182

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 161. See W. G. H. Cook, Mental Deficiency in the English Law of Contract, 21 Colum. L. Rev. 424 (1921).

(n2)Footnote 162. Beverly's Case, 4 Coke 123b, 76 Eng. Rep. 1118 (1603).

(n3)Footnote 163. Moulton v. Camroux, 2 Exch. 487, 4 Exch. 17 (1848).

(n4)Footnote 164. Brooklyn Trust Co. v. Podvin, 89 A.2d 672 (N.J. 1952).

(n5)Footnote 165. In re Kowalke's Guardianship, 76 N.E.2d 899 (Ohio App. 1946).

(n6)Footnote 166. See Henry Weihofen, Mental Incompetency to Contract or Convey, 39 S. Cal. L. Rev. 211 (1966); Mental Illness and the Law of Contracts, 57 Mich. L. Rev. 1020 (1959); Note, Real Property -- Validity of Conveyance by Mental Incompetents, 3 Wayne L. Rev. 73 (1956).

(n7)Footnote 167. Hansford v. Robinson, 340 S.E.2d 614 (Ga. 1986); In re Estate of Cunningham, 565 N.E.2d 301 (Ill. App. 1990); La. Civ. Code. Ann. art. 1925; In re Guardianship and Conservatorship of Estate of Tennant, 714 P.2d 122 (Mont. 1986); Matter of Estate of Raney, 799 P.2d 986 (Kan. 1990). See also Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§ 12, 15 (1979).

(n8)Footnote 168. Cal. Civ. Code §§ 38, 39; Idaho Code §§ 32-106, 32-107; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-01-01; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, §§ 22, 23; Brown v. Weik, 725 S.W.2d 938 (Tenn. App. 1983).

(n9)Footnote 169. Cal. Civ. Code § 39; Idaho Code § 32-107; First Interstate Bank v. First Wyo. Bank, 762 P.2d 379 (Wyo. 1988); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, § 23. See Note, Contracts -- Mental Capacity -- The Ability to Exercise Will Is an Element of Mental Capacity. 6 Tex. Tech. L. Rev. 1147 (1975); Note, Contracts -- Competency to Contract of Mentally Ill Person Who Fully Understands Transaction But is Unable to Control Conduct, 16 Wayne L. Rev. 1188 (1970); Note, The Mentally Ill and the Law of Contracts, 29 Temple L.Q. 380 (1956).

(n10)Footnote 170. Idaho Code Ann. § 32-107; Beam v. Almond, 157 S.E.2d 215 (N.C. 1967). See Raymond D. Cotton, Agreements of the Mentally Disabled: A Problem of New Jersey Law, 3 Rut.-Cam. L.J. 241 (1971). See also the authorities collected in Annotation, Validity and Enforceability of and Relief from Contract Made in Good Faith with Incompetent before Adjudication of Incompetency, 95 A.L.R. 1442 (1935); Annotation, Validity and Enforceability of Contract Made in good Faith with Incompetent before Adjudication of Incompetency, 46 A.L.R. 416 (1927). See also Note, Contracts -- Insane Persons' Transactions in North Carolina, 13 N.C. L. Rev. 504 (1935); Note, The Agreements of Insane Persons, 32 Colum. L. Rev. 504 (1932); Insane Persons -- Ratification or Avoidance of Conveyances or Other Transactions, 4 U. Cin. L. Rev. 244 (1930); Contracts with Non-Adjudicated Insane Persons--Good Faith--Inability to Return Consideration, 9 B.U. L. Rev. 49 (1929); Insane Persons -- Contracts -- Good Faith of Other Party -- Promissory Note, 20 Colum. L. Rev. 220 (1920); Note, Contracts of Insane Persons, 14 Colum. L. Rev. 674 (1914); Note, The Effect of Insanity Upon Contractural Powers, 6 Colum. L. Rev. 115 (1906).

(n11)Footnote 171. Todd v. Mutual Aid Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 88 A.2d 676 (N.J. Super. 1952).

(n12)Footnote 172. Andres v. Andres, 613 S.W.2d 404 (Ark. App. 1981); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1926.

(n13)Footnote 173. Sawtelle v. Tatone, 201 A.2d 111 (N.H. 1964).

(n14)Footnote 174. Knighten v. Davis, 358 So. 2d 1022 (Ala. 1978); Upton v. Hall, 300 S.E.2d 777 (Va. 1983). See Maxine Boord Virtue, Restitution from the Mentally Infirm, 26 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 132 (1951); Annotation, Restoration of Status Quo as Condition of Avoidance of Suretyship or Accommodation Contract of Incompetent, 34 A.L.R. 1403 (1925).

(n15)Footnote 175. Upton v. Hall, 300 S.E.2d 777 (Va. 1983); Metter Banking Co. v. Millen Lumber & Supply Co., 382 S.E.2d 624 (Ga. App. 1989). See Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 15(2) (1979).

(n16)Footnote 176. McKenzie v. Frey, 198 S.W. 1009 (Tex. Civ. App. 1917).

(n17)Footnote 177. Cleaveland v. Malden Sav. Bank, 197 N.E. 14 (Mass. 1935).

(n18)Footnote 178. McElwain v. Wells, 322 S.E.2d 482 (W. Va. 1984).

(n19)Footnote 179. Idaho Code § 32-108; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 41.300; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-01-03; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 15 § 24; Marion v. English, 121 A. 397 (R.I. 1923) (discussing R.I. Gen. Laws, ch. 321, §§ 11, 37; cf. John P. Bleeg Co. v. Peterson, 215 N.W. 529 (S.D. 1927) (assignment of note a nullity where payee adjudicated incompetent and guardian appointed).

(n20)Footnote 180. Beavers v. Weatherly, 299 S.E.2d 730 (Ga. 1983); Witt v. Ward, 573 N.W.2d 201 (Ohio App. 1989).

(n21)Footnote 181. Antrim v. McKelroy, 319 S.W.2d 209 (Ark. 1958); see In re Walker, 540 A.2d 468 (Me. 1988).

(n22)Footnote 182. Jones v. Clyman, 188 N.W. 954 (Iowa 1922).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.06 Property Disabilities Imposed on Prisoners.

[Go To Supp]

Even after England abolished corruption of blood, attainder and forfeiture of property as consequences of crime, English law still provided that convicts were incapable of conveying or encumbering property. n183

Under earlier laws in the United States, the civil rights of felons under life sentences were considered at an end, n184 and in a few states the felon's assets were then distributed as if the felon were already dead. n185 For felons with lesser sentences their civil rights were considered merely suspended for the period of imprisonment, n186 and some states authorized the appointment of committees to manage such prisoners' assets. n187 A prisoner's property has also been applied under court order to meeting the prisoner's debts or the needs of the prisoner's dependents. n188 In such situations, the prisoners in those states were effectively disabled from engaging in property transactions.

In more modern times, the significant trend has been to remove the civil disabilities of prisoners, although that may not yet be fully reflected in the statutes or decisions of each state. Property rights are cognizable under the Civil Rights Act, n189 and it appears that property divestment upon conviction "is a limited and almost nonexistent concept." n190 A life prisoner will be divested of property only under express statute and only Rhode Island n191 and Hawaii n192 have express divestment statutes. Also, fewer than half the states have specific statutory provision for appointment of a guardian, trustee or committee to manage a prisoner's estate, and even in these states various limitations severely restrict the utility and use of those provisions. n193

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 183. 33 & 34 Vict., ch. 23, § 8 (1870).

(n2)Footnote 184. See, e.g., Cal. Penal Code § 2600; N.Y. Civ. Rights Law § 79-a. See also, Note, Civil Death Statute -- Medieval Fiction in a Modern World, 50 Harv. L. Rev. 967-68 (1937).

(n3)Footnote 185. Ward v. Morton, 242 S.W. 966 (Mo. 1927); R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 13-6-1, 13-6-7.

(n4)Footnote 186. See, e.g., Cal. Penal Code § 2600; N.Y. Civ. Rights Law § 79; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 65, & tit. 15, § 11; R.I. Gen. Laws § 13-6-3.

(n5)Footnote 187. Mo. Ann. Stat. § 460.110; Hunter v. Hunter, 237 S.W.2d 100 (Mo. 1951). See also P. Pierre Dominique, Some Aspects of Civil Death in Missouri, 1 St. Louis U. Intramural L. Rev. 200, 210-213 (1951); N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 320, 322; Va. Code Ann. §§ 53.1-221 - 53.1-228.

(n6)Footnote 188. W. Va. Code §§ 28-5-33, 28-5-38.

(n7)Footnote 189. Lynch v. Household Fin. Corp., 405 U.S. 538 (1972).

(n8)Footnote 190. See Special Project, The Collatoral Consequences of Criminal Conviction, 23 Vander. L. Rev. 929, 1079-1109 (1970).

(n9)Footnote 191. R.I. Gen. Laws § 13-6-1.

(n10)Footnote 192. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 353-38.

(n11)Footnote 193. Special Project, The Collateral Consequences of Criminal Conviction, 23 Vand. L. Rev. 929, 1101-09 (1970).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.07 Property Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations.

[Go To Supp]

§ 12.07(a) Non-profit Unincorporated Associations Defined.

A non-profit unincorporated association is a group of persons joined together, other than by incorporation, for particular purposes, which purposes do not include producing profit for the group. n194 Partnerships are excluded from this definition, because their purpose is to make profit for the partnership. n195 For the same reason, joint ventures are also not included in the definition of non-profit unincorporated association. A joint venture is not considered a partnership if its objective is not to make profit for the group. n196 Labor unions and trade associations seek profits for their individual members, not for their groups as such, and are therefore not partnerships, and so may be non-profit unincorporated associations. n197

Nonprofit unincorporated associations often produce revenue, but are not considered profit-making entities if the money is used for the associations' non-profit objectives. n198

Typical non-profit unincorporated associations are church congregations; n199 fraternal and benevolent orders; n200 hunting, fishing, civic and social clubs, n201 labor unions and trade associations; n202 stock exchanges; n203 literary groups; n204 certain political parties and committees; n205 religious communes; n206 patriotic societies; n207 various co-operative activities; n208 charitable trusts; professional associations; and condominiums. n209

§ 12.07(b) Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations to Acquire and Hold Real Property Interests.

§ 12.07(b)(1) Conveyances Considered as Void.

Courts and legislatures were traditionally reluctant to recognize unincorporated associations as entities qualified to acquire real property interests. This has been partly because an unincorporated association is not a single person and has not fashioned a single legal personality through incorporation. Also, the unincorporated association may be transient in nature. Thus, it has been difficult to fashion legal rules to identify who would be the owner of the property interests sought to be acquired.

One form of legal response to attempted conveyances or devises of real property interests to non-profit unincorporated associations has been to tread the conveyances as void. n210 In a few states this response is required by statute. n211

§ 12.07(b)(2) Conveyances Considered as Conveyances to Group Members in Cotenancy.

Some courts consider transfers to non-profit unincorporated associations as conveyances to the individual members of the grantee groups, who hold the property either as joint tenants or as tenants in common. n212 Members who withdraw from the association thereby lose their rights to the association property. n213 This approach has been criticized from several perspectives: the intent of the grantor may be frustrated, if the transfer was made to promote the objectives of the group but becomes instead a collection of individual gifts to group members; the interest cannot be later conveyed without cooperation of all group members or their successors in interest; each member-owner has a right of partition; the property may be subject to claims of creditors of individual member-owners; n214 and non-cooperating members have disproportionate power, because of their ability unilaterally to veto proposed conveyances. n215

§ 12.07(b)(3) Conveyances Considered as Conveyances in Trust.

Another way to view a conveyance to a non-profit unincorporated association is to treat the conveyance as one made in trust. Such a conveyance in trust to a non-profit unincorporated association can arise in several ways: the association members may designate trustees to hold title on their behalf, n216 or courts may create constructive trusts, designating trustees, such as the officers of the association, to take title for the association. n217 One court held that association members taking title as joint tenants held it in quasi-trust and were required to use the property for the purposes of the association. n218 State law may permit property to be held by a non-profit unincorporated association in a statutory trust as set forth in the state statutes. n219

Use of a trust device as a means of holding property interests usually is not extended to all non-profit unincorporated associations. The common law rule against perpetuities forbids holding title in trust for more than two lives in being (the lifetime of the survivor of two designated persons), unless the association is charitable. Non-profit unincorporated associations that are not charitable would thus be limited by the rule, although the rule is undergoing modification in many states. n220 The judicial creation of a constructive trust to preserve a conveyance to an unincorporated association may thus, in some states, be ordered only for charitable associations. n221

§ 12.07(b)(4) Conveyances Permitted to Be Made to the Association Directly.

Some state courts recognize a right in non-profit unincorporated associations to acquire and hold land titles directly in the name of the association, without appointment of a trustee. n222 In other states, this is permitted by statute in, either by allowing the officers to take title as "a body corporate," n223 or by allowing the association to take title in its group name. n224 Such statutes are typically limited in their application to non-profit associations that are "charitable" -- i.e., religious, scientific, or educational -- rather than those that are organized for trade, business, or profession. n225 A few non-profit unincorporated associations have been permitted to obtain property interests in the group's name by prescription. n226

§ 12.07(b)(5) Determination of the Applicable Law.

The law of the state where the land is located determines whether the non-profit unincorporated association has the capacity to acquire real property interests, n227 although a few decisions apply the law of the association's state. n228

§ 12.07(c) Specific Rights to Hold Real Property Interests.

Land purchases by any type of corporation were not favored at common law, because such acquisitions were frequently for charitable purposes and thus not economically useful. To convey to a corporation, which was usually ecclesiastical, was to alienate land in mortmain, or literally, to place the property in a dead hand and out of circulation, and was prohibited by statute early in English history. The British Mortmain Act of the early 18th century, and similar statutes in the American states, were intended to prevent excessive accumulations of property by corporations. n229 Some of these mortmain statutes have been extended by analogy or explicitly by their own terms to unincorporated associations that pursue purposes similiar to those of corporations regulated by the statute. n230

Many jurisdictions impose quantitative ownership restrictions directly on non-profit unincorporated associations. These restrictions are in the form of permissible acreage, n231 "reasonableness," n232 capital value, n233 or annual income. n234

When an unincorporated association's property acquisitions exceed permissible limits, states are not uniform in dealing with the excess property. n235 For example, in some states the excess property may revert to the grantor or grantor's estate, n236 or the association may claim ownership subject only to challenge by the state. n237

§ 12.07(d) Rights of Unincorporated Associations to Control, Manage, and Transfer Real Property.

§ 12.07(d)(1) Associations That Are Subject to Hierarchical Control.

Non-profit unincorporated associations subject to some sort of hierarchical control are usually governed by that hierarchy in their ability to control, manage, and transfer real property interest. Much more influence is usually accorded hierarchical control in cases involving religious denominations than with respect to groups unrelated to churches. n23831y

In the context of religious denominations, some state statutes recognize hierarchical domination. n239 In other states, courts have respected the hierarchical prerogative by not permitting a seceding local congregation to retain its property against the claims of the parent church. n240 Also, courts have often upheld the decisions of denominational tribunals resolving property disputes between local congregations, n241 and have decreed denominational control over property of local groups that have ceased to function. n242 The cases reveal that hierarchical control usually prevails even when adherents of a dissenting faction outnumber those in the orthodox group, and even if the consideration for the property acquisition was provided by the dissenters. n243 However, some courts that have held in favor of local control have found that the conveyance was intended solely for the benefit of the local congregation. n244

When non-profit unincorporated associations are not religious in nature, the predominance of hierarchical control has been recognized in decisions n245 and statutes. n246 Some decisions hold that hierarchical control is not applicable in specific local instances. n247

§ 12.07(d)(2) Associations That Are Not Subject to Hierarchical Control.

Nonprofit unincorporated associations that are not subject to hierarchical control are governed by the provisions of their own constitution and bylaws or by an express agreement for governance of association affairs. Actions of the association's officers or members in controlling, managing, and transferring real property are valid if carried out in conformance with such provisions. Courts have upheld association representatives becoming lessees, n248 bringing suit for breach of warranty covenant covering association property, n249 subjecting association lands to liens or assessments, n250 registering title, n251 conveying timber rights n252 or even conveying complete title, n253 mortgaging association land, n254 and distributing association assets upon dissolution. n255 When required by the association's rules, n256 judicial approval must be obtained. If the association representatives do not conform to the rules of their authority, their acts will not bind the association. n257

The association's local governing provisions will also determine how to resolve differences between members. Although such differences are usually resolved by majority rule, n258 a minority whose conduct is faithful to association purposes and procedures will often prevail over an unorthodox majority. n259 Also, association representatives who act within their authority may prevail in a dispute with a dissenting majority. n260

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 194. See Howard L. Oleck, Non-Profit Types, Uses, and Abuses, 19 Clev. St. L. Rev. 207, 211 (1970).

(n2)Footnote 195. Uniform Partnership Act § 6(1).

(n3)Footnote 196. Nancy W. Bayley, Inc. v. Maine Emp. Sec. Comm'n, 472 A.2d 1374 (Me. 1984); See 1 Zolman Cavitch, Business Organizations with Tax Planning § 13.05 [2] (1983).

(n4)Footnote 197. Marshalltown Mut. Plate Glass Ins. Ass'n v. Bendlage, 193 N.W. 448 (Iowa 1923) (trade association); State v. Ritholz, 100 N.W.2d 722 (Minn. 1960) (labor union); Teamsters Local 516 v. Santa Fe Packing Co., 300 P.2d 660 (Okla. 1956) (labor union); Blair v. Southern Clay Mfg. Co., 121 S.W.2d 570 (Tenn. 1938) (trade association).

(n5)Footnote 198. Curtis v. Albion-Brown's Post 590 Am. Legion, 219 N.E.2d 386 (Ill. App. 1966).

(n6)Footnote 199. See, e.g., Ervin v. Davis, 199 S.W.2d 366 (Mo. 1947); Stony Island Church of Christ v. Mannings, 509 N.W.2d 572 (Ill. App. 1987).

(n7)Footnote 200. See, e.g., Farnow v. Las Vegas Aerie No. 1213, Fraternal Order of Eagles, 188 P.2d 615 (Nev. 1948).

(n8)Footnote 201. See, e.g., Florio v. State ex rel. Epperson, 119 So. 2d 305 (Fla. App. 1960).

(n9)Footnote 202. See, e.g., United Bhd. of Carpenters and Joiners, Local No. 1846, Inc. v. Stephens Broadcasting Co., 39 So. 2d 422 (La. 1949); United States v. Rainbow Family, 695 F. Supp. 294 (E.D. Tex. 1988).

(n10)Footnote 203. See Belton v. Hatch, 109 N.Y. 593 (1888).

(n11)Footnote 204. Lamm v. Stoen, 284 N.W. 465 (Iowa 1939).

(n12)Footnote 205. See Fennel v. Hauser, 14 P.2d 998 (Or. 1932).

(n13)Footnote 206. Forsberg v. Zehm, 143 S.E. 284 (Va. 1928).

(n14)Footnote 207. See Ostrom v. Greene, 161 N.Y. 353 (1900).

(n15)Footnote 208. Branagan v. Buckman, 207 N.Y. 719 (1913).

(n16)Footnote 209. See Howard L. Oleck, Non-profit Organizations, Organizations and Associations § 47 (4th ed. 1980).

(n17)Footnote 210. Society for Propogation of Faith v. Joswick, 180 A.2d 617 (Del. Ch. 1962).

(n18)Footnote 211. N.Y. Est. Powers & Trusts Law § 3-1.3(b) (1952); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 589.

(n19)Footnote 212. Venus Lodge No. 62 v. Acme Benevolent Ass'n, 58 S.E.2d 109 (N.C. 1950); See also Raulston v. Everett, 561 S.W.2d 635 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n20)Footnote 213. Liggett v. Koivunen, 34 N.W.2d 345 (Minn. 1948); Raulston v. Everett, 561 S.W.2d 635 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n21)Footnote 214. See Apostolic Holiness Union v. Knudson, 123 P. 473 (Idaho 1912); See Howard A. J. Ford, Dispositions of Property to Unincorporated Associations, 55 Mich. L. Rev. 67 (1956).

(n22)Footnote 215. Trett v. Lambeth, 195 S.W.2d 524 (Mo. App. 1946).

(n23)Footnote 216. O.K.C. Corp. v. Allen, 574 S.W.2d 809 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n24)Footnote 217. Lincoln Rochester Trust Co. v. Smith, 158 N.Y.S.2d 367 (1956); See Annotation, Power and Capacity of Members of Unincorporated Association, Lodge, Society, or Club to Convey, Transfer, or Encumber Association Property, 15 A.L.R.2d 1451 (1951).

(n25)Footnote 218. Ind. Code Ann. §§ 23-10-2-1, 23-10-2-11; N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law §§ 2, 3, 3a; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, §§ 81, 121 See Marc J. Lane, Legal Handbook for Non-Profit Organizations 23 (1980).

(n26)Footnote 219. Ga. Code Ann. § 22-409; Ind. Code Ann. §§ 25-1501, 25-1513; N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law §§ 2, 3, 3a; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, §§ 81, 121. See Lane supra n.218, at 23.

(n27)Footnote 220. In re Rathbone's Estate, 11 N.Y.S.2d 506 (1939).

(n28)Footnote 221. Trustee appointed only for charitable organizations: State v. Sunbeam Rebekah Lodge No. 180, 127 P.2d 726 (Or. 1942). Trustee appointed for non-charitable organizations: Matter of Wiley, 136 N.Y.S.2d 309 (1954).

(n29)Footnote 222. Rehder v. Rankin, 91 N.W.2d 399, 403 (Iowa 1958); Loving Savior Church v. United States 556 F. Supp. 688 (D. S.D. 1983), aff'd, 728 F.2d 1085 (8th Cir. 1984).

(n30)Footnote 223. Ind. Code Ann. §§ 23-10-2-9; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 68, §§ 1, 2, 4, 5, 10, 12; Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. arts. 1399, 1400; W. Va. Code §§ 35-2-1, 35-2-6, 35-2-7, 35-3-1. Some courts have achieved the same result without such a statute: Reid v. Barry, 112 So. 846 (Fla. 1927); Shrader v. Erickson's Ex'r, 145 S.W.2d 63 (Ky. 1940); Shipp v. Joseph, 12 A.2d 49 (Pa. 1940).

(n31)Footnote 224. N.Y. Agric. & Mkts. Law § 290; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1715.43; W. Va. Code § 35-1-1; Wyo. Stat. § 17-161.

(n32)Footnote 225. Ind. Code Ann. § 23-10-2-1; La. Rev. State. Ann. § 9:1051; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 39-24.

(n33)Footnote 226. Slaughter v. Land, 21 S.E.2d 72 (Ga. 1942); O.K.C. Corp. v. Allen, 574 S.W.2d 809 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n34)Footnote 227. See Reisig v. Associated Jewish Charities, 34 A.2d 842 (Md. 1943).

(n35)Footnote 228. In re Kirby's Will, 240 N.Y.S.2d 214 (1963).

(n36)Footnote 229. Perin v. Carey, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 465 (1860); See G. Stanley Joslin, "Mortmain" in Canada and the United States: A Comparative Study, 29 Can. B. Rev. 621 (1951).

(n37)Footnote 230. Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-2-20.

(n38)Footnote 231. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-11-201; D.C. Code Ann. §§ 29-901, 29-916; Ind. Code Ann. § 23-10-2-1. But see Kentucky Christian Missionary Soc'y v. Moren, 102 S.W.2d 335 (Ky. 1937); Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 48-4-301, 62-2-202; Va. Code Ann. §§ 57-12, 57-20, 57-26; W. Va. Code §§ 35-1-8, 35-2-8, 35-3-1.

(n39)Footnote 232. Miss. Code Ann. § 79-11-33.

(n40)Footnote 233. Wyo. Stat. § 17-161.

(n41)Footnote 234. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. ch. 306 §§ 3, 10, 11.

(n42)Footnote 235. See Annotation, Right of Heirs or Next of Kin to Attack Devised Corporation on Ground of Its Incapacity to Take, 69 A.L.R. 1359 (1930).

(n43)Footnote 236. Letcher's Trustee v. Letcher, 194 S.W.2d 984 (Ky. 1946).

(n44)Footnote 237. Sunday Sch. Union of African Methodist Episcopal Church v. Walden, 121 F.2d 719 (6th Cir. 1941).

(n45)Footnote 238. See, e.g., Suffridge v. O'Grady, 84 N.Y.S.2d 211 (1948).

(n46)Footnote 239. Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-1716d, 17-1716e; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 81; Va. Code Ann. §§ 57-7, 57-16; W. Va. Code § 35-1-9.

(n47)Footnote 240. Kelley by Kelley v. Lutheran Church in Am., 589 A.2d 1155 (Pa. Super. 1991).

(n48)Footnote 241. Trinity Lutheran Evangelical Church v. May, 510 A.2d 904 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1986).

(n49)Footnote 242. In re Evangelical Church, 24 A.2d 42 (Pa. Super. 1942); see Dillard v. Jackson, 403 S.E.2d 136 (S.C. App. 1991).

(n50)Footnote 243. Presbytery of the Covenant v. First Presbyterian Church, 552 S.W.2d 865 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

(n51)Footnote 244. African Methodist Episcopal Church, Allen Chapel v. Independent African Methodist Episcopal Church, 281 S.W.2d 758 (Tex. Civ. App. 1955); see Board of Bishops of the Church of the Living God v. Milner, 513 A.2d 1131 (Pa. 1986).

(n52)Footnote 245. National Grange of Order of Patrons of Husbandry v. O'Sullivan Grange, 667 P.2d 1105 (Wash. App. 1983).

(n53)Footnote 246. N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law §§ 2-3a, 5; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 188.02; Wyo. Stat. § 17-161.

(n54)Footnote 247. Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows v. Lakeside Lodge No. 105, 8 N.W.2d 19 (Minn. 1943); Robertson v. Knighten, 139 P.2d 601 (Okla. 1943).

(n55)Footnote 248. Uptown Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Collins, 245 N.E.2d 521 (Ill. App. 1969).

(n56)Footnote 249. Floyd S. Pike Elec. Contractor, Inc. v. Goodwill Missionary Baptist Church, 214 S.E.2d 276 (N.C. App. 1975).

(n57)Footnote 250. Monroe v. Krause & Managan Lumber Co., 24 So. 2d 501 (La. App. 1946); Board of Trustees v. City of Oklahoma, 166 P.2d 91 (Okla. 1946).

(n58)Footnote 251. Glader v. Schwinge, 168 N.E. 658 (Ill. 1929).

(n59)Footnote 252. Parrish v. Looney, 194 S.W.2d 419 (Tex. Civ. App. 1946).

(n60)Footnote 253. Jacobs v. St. Mark's Baptist Church, 415 So. 2d 253 (La. App. 1982).

(n61)Footnote 254. Ervin v. Davis, 199 S.W.2d 366 (Mo. 1947).

(n62)Footnote 255. Willow Dip Lodge v. Wenzel, 94 Pa. L.J. 271 (1945).

(n63)Footnote 256. In re Pettisville Union Church Soc'y, 323 Ohio Op. 443 (1946).

(n64)Footnote 257. Barrett v. New Hope Baptist Church No. 1, 152 So. 2d 646 (La. App. 1963); see also Smith v. Riley, 424 So. 2d 1166 (La. App. 1982).

(n65)Footnote 258. Bishop and Diocese v. Mote, 668 P.2d 948 (Colo. App. 1983), rev'd on other grounds, 716 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1986); Piletich v. Deretich, 328 N.W.2d 696 (Minn. 1982).

(n66)Footnote 259. Holiman v. Dovers, 366 S.W.2d 197 (Ark. 1963); Zaiser v. Miller, 656 S.W.2d 312 (Mo. App. 1983); Eastern Conference of Original Free Will Baptists v. Piner, 147 S.E.2d 581 (N.C. 1966); Church of God in Christ, Inc. v. Stone, 452 F. Supp. 612 (D.C. Kan. 1976); Schismatic and Purported Casa Linda Presbyterian Church in Am. v. Grace Union Presbytery, Inc., 710 S.W.2d 700 (Tex. Civ. App. 1986).

(n67)Footnote 260. Antioch Temple, Inc. v. Parekh, 422 N.E.2d 1337 (Mass. 1981). See Annotation, Change of Denominational Relations or Fundamental Doctrines by Majority Faction of Independent or Congregational Church as Ground for Award of Property to Minority, 15 A.L.R.3d 297 (1967).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.08

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.08 Property Rights of Unincorporated Associations Organized for Profit.

Unincorporated associations organized for profit have also been limited in their real property activities, but have more readily achieved the legal status of an entity entitled to hold property, and have overcome many of the disabilities of the non-profit groups. In the next sections of this chapter, the real property rights of the three major types of unincorporated associations organized for profit will be discussed: joint stock companies, business trusts, and partnerships.

§ 12.08(a) Property Rights of Joint Stock Companies.

A joint stock company is a business association whose capital is divided into transferable shares representing and corresponding to members' respective interests. n261 Each member's individual interest is considered personal property, even if the company's assets are in the form of real property. n262 Members may transfer their shares without consent of the other members n263 and are not considered agents of the company, n264 but may be held personally liable for company debts. n265 The joint stock company does not automatically dissolve upon the death, insanity or bankruptcy of a member. n266

During the colonial era, abuses of investors by means of schemes involving joint stock companies during the colonial era led to some statutory regulation of these types of companies. Subject to those statutory restrictions, n267 joint stock companies are generally governed by their articles of association, which usually provide that their business is controlled by officers or directors. n268

Traditionally, the joint stock company was not considered an entity that could hold real property interests n269 and could not acquire land in the company name, n270 unless the company was authorized to do so by statute. n271 Thus, even today a joint stock company usually takes and holds title to land in the name of a designated officer, n272 who also has power to encumber or convey the land. n273 In conducting company business, that officer is bound to be faithful to the interests of company members as if the officer were a trustee. n274

§ 12.08(b) Property Rights of Business Trusts.

The traditional limitations on corporations' rights to own land led to the development of the business trust, which is often called the Massachusetts trust, because it first became popular in that state. n275 The business or Massachusetts trust is also referred to as a common law trust, because its existence rests on contract rather than on statute. n276

The fluctuating popularity of the business trust has depended on its tax treatment. Use of the business trust was common during a brief period when it was not subject to federal corporate income tax, and use revived again after 1960, when real estate investment trusts were granted tax treatment as conduits. n277 Property-related businesses that have been conducted by means of the business trust have been described as follows:

> "The following are examples, reflected in decisions of courts, of the varied businesses and activities in which Massachusetts or business trusts have engaged: holding, managing, developing, and dealing in real estate; promoting the establishment of a city; owning timberlands and operating sawmills, and developing and colonizing lands; cemetery business; operation and management of apartment houses; ownership and operation of an office building; carrying out an irrigation project; operation of a ferry; dealing in and developing oil and gas properties and marketing products thereof; refining petroleum; mining; manufacturing bottling; mercantile business; dealing in livestock, meat, and hides; operating restaurants; summer resort business; construction and operation of a golf course; building and equipping a racing speedway." n278

As with any other trust, the business trust is created by a declaration of trust that states the aims of the enterprise and designates one or more trustees. The trustee is the legal owner and the manager of the assets and business, including any land, and functions as directed or permitted by the trust declaration. n279 If subscribers or investors in the trust have retained any substantial control in the management of the property, and the trustee appears to be the subscribers' agent, courts may treat the trust as a partnership and impose personal liability for trust debts on the members. n280 Thus, the trustee owns legal title to the property and functions as a principal with fiduciary responsibilities to the beneficiaries and personal liability for contracts. n281

The interest of a subscriber to the trust is evidenced by a certificate. The subscriber's interest, however, is only a beneficiary's equitable interest in the trust assets, including the land, n282 and the subscriber is not personally liable for the acts of the trustee.

Most states recognize business trust as trusts, n283 but some states treat them as partnerships or corporations. n284 Even these states usually permit trustees to deal in land according to the terms of the trust declaration. n285

§ 12.08(c) Property Rights of Partnerships.

§ 12.08(c)(1) Partnerships Prior to the Uniform Partnership Act.

Some form of the Uniform Partnership Act (U.P.A.) has been adopted by the District of Columbia and every state except Louisiana. n286 Prior to these adoptions acquisition of real property interests by a partnership occurred through one of the following methods:

a. the deed conveyed the land to all the partners, individually naming each partner as grantee; n287 or

b. the deed conveyed the land to a non-partner third person, who held title for the partnership; n288 or

c. the deed individually named and conveyed land to some of the partners, who were the designated grantee partners, n289 and who were regarded as holding the land in trust for the partnership; n290 or

d. the deed conveyed land to the partnership by use of the partnership name.

This last form was awkward, because the partnership was not recognized as a legal entity. n291 However, courts often upheld such conveyances by treating the grantor as a sort of "trustee" for the partnership or by admitting parol evidence to identify persons intended to be grantees under a conveyance to the partnership. n292 Some conveyances were construed to give each partner a share in the property as tenant in common. n293

When partners came to be regarded as tenants in common of partnership property, other difficulties arose. One difficulty was that each cotenant could convey only an undivided fractional interest in the property. n294 Moreover, each cotenant's share of partnership property could be threatened by the cotenant's personal liabilities n295 and on the death of the cotenant, that his share passed to the cotenant's estate. n296 In response to these problems, some courts have held that a conveyance of partnership land, even if the conveyance was by a partner with less than complete title, effectively conveyed the whole title. n297 Other courts have held that the partnership land became personal property through equitable conversion under the partnership agreement, n298 and some courts upheld a conveyance, by a partner who did not hold legal title. n299 Still other courts have held that a partner holding legal title could convey a title free of the other partners' equitable interest to a bona fide purchaser. n300 The uncertainty created by such remedial decisions has been largely resolved by the provisions adopted in the Uniform Partnership Act.

§ 12.08(c)(2) Partnerships Under the Uniform Partnership Act.

Under the Uniform Partnership Act, a partnership is permitted to acquire and convey land in the partnership name. n301 Rights of an individual partner's spouses, heirs and creditors may not be asserted against real property owned by the partnership. n302 As between the partners, the land is treated as personal property, n303 and each partner's rights in specific land owned by the partnership may not be assigned except as part of an assignment of the rights of all the partners in the same property. n304 This provision is subject to state recording acts. If the title to the land owned by the partnership is recorded in the name of only one partner, with no indication in the record of the partnership's interest, a grantee of the record owner who acquires the title in good faith without notice of the partnership interest is protected from partnership claims in the property. n305

An individual partner may convey the partner's interest in partnership property if the grantees consist of all the other members of the partnership, n306 or if the conveyance is a transfer of or a charge against the grantor's entire interest in the partnership. n307

The Uniform Partnership Act allows land held in the partnership name to be conveyed in the partnership name by a deed executed by a single partner. n308 The Act also deals with a conveyance of land held in the partnership name by one partner using the partner's own name, with a conveyance by all the partners of partnership land held in their individual names, and with a conveyance by the partnership of partnership land held in the names of other persons. n309 Also, the lessee duties incurred by one partner are enforceable against all the partners. n310

A deceased partner's interest in the partnership property vests in the surviving partner or partners. n311 The surviving partner's power to wind up partnership affairs unilaterally is quite comprehensive. n312 Partnership property distributed to the deceased partner's estate is considered personal property. n313

§ 12.08(c)(3) Limited Partnerships Under the Uniform Limited Partnership Act.

The Uniform Limited Partnership Act (U.L.P.A.) of 1916 was adopted in 23 states and the District of Columbia. n314 A Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act (R.U.L.P.A.) was promulgated in 1976 and has since been adopted by 30 states, only four of which had previously adopted the 1916 Act. n315 As a result, every state but Louisiana has adopted a uniform limited partnership act.

Under both of these acts the general partner in a limited partnership has all the rights and obligations of a partner in an ordinary partnership, except that the general partner may not possess partnership property or assign limited partners' rights in partnership property for other than a partnership purpose, without consent or ratification by the limited partners. n316 A general partner may also not continue the partnership business with partnership property, upon the death, retirement, or insanity of another general partner, without consent or ratification of the limited partners, or unless permitted by the partnership certificate. n317

Contributions into the limited partnership by limited partners may be in the form of real property, n318 but absent special provision consent, return of limited partners' contributions will only be in cash. n319 A limited partner who has not contributed, or has received wrongfully returned property, or has not paid property stated in the certificate as contributed by the partner, holds the property as trustee for the partnership. n320 A limited partner's interest in partnership property is personal property. n321 The executor of the estate of a deceased limited partner exercises the rights of the decedent in the partnership for the purpose of settling the estate. n322

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 261. See Frank Evans, The Evolution of the English Joint Stock Limited Trading Co., 8 Colum. L. Rev. 461 (1908). See also Hammond v. Otwell, 154 S.E. 357 (Ga. 1930).

(n2)Footnote 262. In re Finkelstein's Estate, 245 N.Y.S.2d 225 (1963).

(n3)Footnote 263. Hammond v. Otwell, 154 S.E. 357 (Ga. 1930).

(n4)Footnote 264. Hossack v. Ottowa Dev. Ass'n, 91 N.E. 439 (Ill. 1910).

(n5)Footnote 265. Howe v. Keystone Pipe & Supply Co., 274 S.W. 563 (Tex. 1925); See Apahouser Lock & Sec. Corp. v. Carvelli, 528 N.E.2d 797 (Mass. App. 1988).

(n6)Footnote 266. Weaver v. First Nat'l Bank, 224 S.W.2d 813 (Ark. 1949).

(n7)Footnote 267. N.Y. Gen. Ass'ns Law, §§ 3-11; Superior Oil & Ref. Syndicate v. Handley, 195 P. 159 (Or. 1921).

(n8)Footnote 268. Earlsboro Gas Co. v. Vern H. Brown Drilling Co., 52 P.2d 730 (Okla. 1935); see Richardson v. Clarke, 364 N.E.2d 804 (Mass. 1977).

(n9)Footnote 269. In re Willmer's Estate, 138 N.Y.S. 649 (1912).

(n10)Footnote 270. State ex rel. R.R. & Whse. Comm'n v. U.S. Express Co., 83 N.W. 465 (Minn. 1900).

(n11)Footnote 271. First Nat'l Bank v. Vanden Brooks, 172 N.W. 582 (Mich. 1919).

(n12)Footnote 272. Willson v. Kuhn, 96 S.W.2d 128 (Tex. Civ. App. 1936).

(n13)Footnote 273. Earlsboro Gas Co. v. Vern H. Brown Drilling Co., 52 P.2d 730 (Okla. 1935).

(n14)Footnote 274. Fairman Bros. v. Ogden Gas Co., 161 A. 634 (Pa. Super. 1932).

(n15)Footnote 275. State Street Trust Co. v. Hall, 41 N.E.2d 30 (Mass. 1942); see Inside Scoop v. Curry, 755 F. Supp. (D.D.C. 1989), aff'd, 932 F.2d 201 (D.C. Cir. 1991). See H. L. Wilgus, Corporations and Express Trusts as Business Organizations, 13 Mich. L. Rev. 71, 205 (1914-15); S. R. Wrightington, Voluntary Associations in Massachusetts, 21 Yale L.J. 311 (1912).

(n16)Footnote 276. Schumann-Heink v. Folsom, 159 N.E. 250 (Ill. 1927); see In re Trust Known as Great N. Iron Ore Props., 263 N.W.2d 610 (Minn. 1978); Arms v. Watson, 439 U.S. 835 (1978).

(n17)Footnote 277. I.R.C. §§ 856-58.

(n18)Footnote 278. Annotation, Massachusetts or Business Trust, 156 A.L.R. 22, 80-82 (1945).

(n19)Footnote 279. Id. at 65-71.

(n20)Footnote 280. Earlsboro Gas Co. v. Vern H. Brown Drilling Co., 52 P.2d 730 (Okla. 1935).

(n21)Footnote 281. Schumann-Heink v. Folsom, 159 N.E. 250 (Ill. 1927); see Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Slinger, 913 F.2d 7 (1st Cir. 1990).

(n22)Footnote 282. Sagendorph v. Lutz, 281 N.W. 553 (Mich. 1938).

(n23)Footnote 283. See Annotation, Massachusetts or Business Trust, 156 A.L.R. 22, 54-58 (1945).

(n24)Footnote 284. McClaren v. Dawes Elec. Sign & Mfg. Co., 156 N.E. 584 (Ind. App. 1927); see Richardson v. Clarke, 364 N.E.2d 804 (Mass. 1977).

(n25)Footnote 285. Thomle v. Soundview Pulp Co., 42 P.2d 19 (Wash. 1935).

(n26)Footnote 286. See Table of Jurisdictions Wherein [Uniform Partnership] Act Has Been Adopted, in current Cumulative Annual Pocket Part, 6 Uniform Laws Annotated (1968).

(n27)Footnote 287. Buckley v. Doig, 80 N.E. 913 (N.Y. 1907).

(n28)Footnote 288. Bond Realty Co. v. Pounds, 112 N.Y.S. 433 (1908).

(n29)Footnote 289. Davis v. Tadevic, 699 P.2d 1140 (Or. App. 1985).

(n30)Footnote 290. Bankers' Trust Co. v. Knee, 270 N.W. 438 (Iowa 1936); Jewell v. Jewell, 602 S.W.2d 315 (Tex. App. 1980); see William Draper Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158 (1915).

(n31)Footnote 291. See Frands M. Burdick, Partnership Realty, 9 Colum. L. Rev. 197 (1909).

(n32)Footnote 292. LaFayette Land Co. v. Caswell, 52 S. 140 (Fla. 1910).

(n33)Footnote 293. Simmons v. Quick-Stop Food Mart, Inc., 296 S.E.2d 275 (N.C. 1982).

(n34)Footnote 294. Jolly v. Kent Realty, Inc., 729 P.2d 310 (Ariz. App. 1986).

(n35)Footnote 295. Bankers' Trust Co. v. Knee, 270 N.W. 438 (Iowa 1936); Tom v. First Nat'l Bank, 104 S.W.2d 130 (Tex. App. 1937).

(n36)Footnote 296. McGowin v. Robinson, 39 So. 2d 237 (Ala. 1949).

(n37)Footnote 297. Attaway v. Stanolind Oil and Gas Co., 232 F.2d 790 (10th Cir. 1956); Kristerin Dev. Co. v. Granson Inv., 394 N.W.2d 325 (Iowa 1986).

(n38)Footnote 298. Fowler v. Franklin, 148 S.W.2d 663 (Ark. 1941).

(n39)Footnote 299. Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank v. Burch, 102 S.W.2d 1074 (Tex. App. 1937).

(n40)Footnote 300. Bond Realty Co. v. Pounds, 112 N.Y.S. 433 (App. 1908).

(n41)Footnote 301. U.P.A. §§ 8(3), 10; Windham Nat'l Bank v. Klein, 254 N.W. 602 (Minn. 1934).

(n42)Footnote 302. U.P.A. §§ 25(a), 25(e); In re Binkow's Estate, 120 So. 2d 15 (Fla. App. 1960).

(n43)Footnote 303. Reyes De Licea v. Reyes, 410 N.E.2d 179 (App. 1980).

(n44)Footnote 304. U.P.A. § 25(b); Altman v. Altman, 67 N.Y.S.2d 119 (App. 1946), aff'd, 80 N.E.2d 359 (N.Y. 1948).

(n45)Footnote 305. Barton v. Ludy, 76 P.2d 654 (Cal. 1938).

(n46)Footnote 306. In re Decker, 295 F. Supp. 501 (W.D. Va. 1969).

(n47)Footnote 307. Herman v. Pepper, 166 A. 587 (Pa. 1933); Murdock v. Murdock, 123 A. 683 (Pa. 1924).

(n48)Footnote 308. U.P.A. § 10(1).

(n49)Footnote 309. Id. §§ 10(2), 10(3), 10(4); Scheurman v. Farbman, 224 N.W. 604 (Mich. 1929).

(n50)Footnote 310. Kavalaris v. Cordalis, 18 N.W.2d 137 (Minn. 1945).

(n51)Footnote 311. U.P.A. § 25(d).

(n52)Footnote 312. Wharf v. Wharf, 137 N.E. 446 (Ill. 1922).

(n53)Footnote 313. Hall's Estate, 109 A. 697 (Pa. 1920).

(n54)Footnote 314. See Table of Jurisdictions Wherein [Uniform Limited Partnership] Act Has Been Adopted, in current Cumulative Annual Pocket Part, 6 Uniform Laws Annotated (1968).

(n55)Footnote 315. See Table of Jurisdictions Wherein [Revised Uniform Limited Partnership] Act Has Been Adopted, in current Cumulative Annual Pocket Part, 6 Uniform Laws Annotated (1968).

(n56)Footnote 316. U.L.P.A. § 9(1)(d). Section 403 of the Revised Act does not contain a comparable provision.

(n57)Footnote 317. Id. § 9(1)(g). Section 403 of the Revised Act does not contain a comparable provision.

(n58)Footnote 318. Id. § 4. Section 501 of the Revised Act has a similar provision.

(n59)Footnote 319. Id. §§ 10(2), 16(3). Section 605 of the Revised Act has a similar provision.

(n60)Footnote 320. Id. § 17(2). There is no comparable provision in the Revised Act.

(n61)Footnote 321. Id. § 18. Section 701 of the Revised Act has a similar provision.

(n62)Footnote 322. Id. § 21. Section 705 of the Revised Act has a similar provision.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.09

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.09 Property Rights of Non-stock Private Religious Corporations.

[Go To Supp]

§ 12.09(a) Property Rights Related to Corporate Governance.

In some early American religious congregations, the minister or similar leader conducted all of the group's temporal affairs, including property-related activities, and the group, through such a leader, was treated as a corporation sole. n323 In other congregations, several persons could take title to land as trustees for the group and be recognized as a trustee corporation. n324 Disputes between such trustee corporations and their constituents promoted some courts to declare all members of the group as members of the corporation. n325 Thus, depending on judicial interpretation or -- in some jurisdictions -- state statute, title to the land of a religious congregation might be held in the name of a single leader or officer (corporation sole), or in the names of a small group of trustees (trustee corporation), or in the name of the congregation on behalf of all its members (membership corporation).

§ 12.09(b) Property Rights Related to Statutory Regulation.

State statutes that authorize the formation of private corporations usually include provisions pertaining to land transactions. Statutes with liberal statements of permissible corporate purposes usually also confer broad property powers on the corporations. n326 Conversely, statutes that are more specific are usually also more restrictive as to permissible corporate purposes and property powers n327 or they are silent as to particular property rights. n328

Additional regulation of private corporation property rights may be imposed by non-profit corporations statutes that govern transfer of land title to a new corporation, from members of its unincorporated predecessor association, n329 or from an inactive non-profit corporation. n330

State statutes generally permit non-stock private religious corporations to exercise whatever property rights are accorded them by their denominational hierarchies. In some statues, separate provisions recognize the individual governance schemes of each denomination, n331 while other statues simply declare that property rights and procedures of individual religious corporations must conform to the rules of their respective governing denominations. n332 Judicial approval is required for some conveyances. n333

In a few states, private religious corporations are under restrictions as to how much land they can acquire, limited either by acreage, value or productivity. n334 These regulations usually do not deal adequately with the issues of post-acquisition increases in value n335 or determination of the proper remedy for excessive acquisitions. n336

In the citations below are some examples of private religious corporations' property rights that are affected by both statutory and common law. n337

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 323. Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 10-426, 10-427; Cal. Corp. Code § 10008; Reid v. Barry, 112 So. 846 (Fla. 1927); Hurley v. Werly, 203 So. 2d 530 (Fla. App. 1967); Galich v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 394 N.E.2d 572 (Ill. App. 1979); Inhabitants of the First Parish v. Dunning, 7 Mass. 445 (1811); Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 84.040, 84.080; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 306:6; Akscyn v. Second Nat'l Bank, 98 A. 519 (N.H. 1916).

(n2)Footnote 324. First Born Church of Living God v. First Born Church of Living God, 22 So. 2d 452 (Fla. 1945); Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 805, § 110/35; Mass. Gen Laws Ann. ch. 68, § 1; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 21.160; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 315.01; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 292:12; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 16:1-1, 16:1-2; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 39-24; Cage v. Cansler, 248 P. 612 (Okl. 1926); Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-2-203; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 701; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 188.03. See Zollman, American Church Law, 113-123, 127-129 (1933); Claude D. Morgan, The Significance of Church Organizational Structure in Litigation and Government Action, 16 Valparaiso L. Rev. 145, 150 (1982).

(n3)Footnote 325. N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law § 5; Trustees of the Presbytery of Willamette v. Hammer, 385 P.2d 1013 (Or. 1963).

(n4)Footnote 326. Cal. Corp. Code §§ 5111, 7111, 9100; Ill. Stat. ch. 805 § 105; Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 352.020, 352.130; Tex. Ann. Civ. Stat. art. 1396-2.01; W. Va. Code §§ 31-1-7, 31-1-8(d).

(n5)Footnote 327. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 13, § 901; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 180, § 4; N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law § 2; N.Y. Coop. Corp. Law § 13; N.Y. Gen. Corp. Law §§ 2, 3; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 201; N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law (numerous specialized provisions for various denominations).

(n6)Footnote 328. Barger v. French, 253 P. 230 (Kan. 1927).

(n7)Footnote 329. Adams v. Bethany Church, 380 So. 2d 788 (Ala. 1980); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:7-2; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 403; N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law § 4; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 188.03.

(n8)Footnote 330. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 7-50-106; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 617.12; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 352.230; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 16:2-19, 16:5-26, 16:6-1, 16:7-1, 16:10A-14, 16:1-23, 16:12-16, 16:13-15; N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law §§ 16, 17, 17a; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1715.05, 1715.15.

(n9)Footnote 331. Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1691 - 21.2016; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 16:1-1 - 16:1-47, 16:2 - 16:19; N.Y. Religious Corp. Law §§ 6, 7; Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 187.01 - 187.17; see William W. Boyer, Jr. Property Rights of Religious Institutions in Wisconsin, 36 Marq. L. Rev. 329 (1953).

(n10)Footnote 332. Ala. Code § 10-4-25; Britton v. Jackson, 250 P. 763 (Ariz. 1926); First English Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Dysinger, 6 P.2d 522 (Cal. App. 1931); Del. Code Ann. tit. 27, § 111; Trustees of Pencader Presbyterian Church v. Gibson, 22 A.2d 782 (Del. 1941); Ga. Code Ann. § 14-5-46; Jones v. Wolf, 260 S.E.2d 84 (Ga. 1979); Church of God v. Finnery, 101 N.E.2d 856 (Ill. App. 1951); Babcock Mem. Presbyterian Church v. Presbytery of Baltimore of the United Presbyterian Church, 464 A.2d 1008 (Md. 1983); Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 68, § 8; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1709, 21.1731, 21.1748, 21.1769, 21.1784, 21.1837, 21.2010, 21.2011; Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 315.12, 315.17; Piletich v. Deretich, 328 N.W.2d 696 (Minn. 1982); Tea v. Protestant Episcopal Church in Diocese of Nev., 610 P.2d 182 (Nev. 1980); N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 292:4; Mathis v. Holmes, 34 A.2d 645 (N.J. Ch. 1943); N.Y. Relig. Corp.

Law §§ 5, 69, 277, 295; Harlem Church of the Seventh Day Adventists v. Greater N.Y. Corp. of Seventh Day Adventist, 198 N.E. 615 (N.Y. 1935); Walters v. Braswell, 272 S.E.2d 363 (N.C. App. 1980); Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 562; Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church of Clairton, Inc. v. May on Behalf of W. Pa. - W. Va. Synod of Lutheran Church in Am., 510 A.2d 904 (Pa. 1986); Presbytery of Huron v. Gordon, 300 N.W. 33 (S.D. 1941); Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-2-203.

(n11)Footnote 333. Application of First Methodist Church, 56 A.2d 120 (N.J. 1947); N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law § 12; Catholic Foreign Missionary Soc'y of Am., Inc. v. Oussani, 109 N.E. 80 (N.Y. 1915); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1715.41; Nussbaum v. Wooster Baptist Temple, 121 N.E.2d 59 (Ohio App. 1953); Va. Code §§ 57-12, 57-14, 57-15; see Carl Zollman, American Church Law, 171-176 (1933).

(n12)Footnote 334. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 10-1005; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 180, § 6; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 21.1729; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 352.130; Levy v. Levy, 33 N.Y. 97 (1865); W. Va. Code § 35-1-8; State v. American Baptist Home Mission Soc'y, 123 S.E. 440 (W. Va. 1924).

(n13)Footnote 335. Edwards v. Rector of Trinity Church, 77 F.2d 884 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 296 U.S. 628, 56 (1935).

(n14)Footnote 336. Miss. Code Ann. § 79-11-33; Osnes v. Morris, 298 S.E.2d 803 (W. Va. 1982).

(n15)Footnote 337. St. Nicholas Catholics of Russian Orthodox Church in No. Am. v. Kedroff, 344 U.S. 94 (1952); Ala. Code §§ 10-4-1, 10-4-4; Lauderdale v. Peace Baptist Church, 19 So. 2d 542 (Ala. 1944); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 10-422, 10-424; Presbytery of Riverside v. Community Church, 152 Cal. Rptr. 854 (1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 974 (1979); Colo Rev. Stat. § 7-50-106; American Lutheran Church v. Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul's Church, 343 P.2d 711 (Colo. 1959); Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 33-268 to 33-278a, 33-278b, 33-279 to 33-281, 33-281a; Marvel v. Sadtler, 18 A.2d 231 (Del. Ch. 1941); Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-1711 - 17.1713c, 17-1714 - 17-1716h, 17.1735 - 17.1737; Jackson v. Jones, 287 P. 603 (Kan. 1930); Sisters of Charity v. Emery, 81 So. 99 (La. 1919); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 13, §§ 2982, 2986; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 67, §§ 40, 41-43, 44-46; ch. 68, §§ 7, 10, 11; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1691, 21.1692, 21.1701 - 21.1773, 21.1781 - 21.1809, 21.1831 - 21.1842, 21.1851 - 21.1863, 21.1881 - 21.1890, 21.1921 - 21.1928, 21.1941 - 21.1949, 21.1961 - 21.1970, 21.2001 - 21.2016; Michigan Congregational Conf. v. United Church, 48 N.W.2d 108 (Mich. 1951); Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 315.17 - 315.20; Trinity Church of Infinite Science v. First Spiritualist Church, 20 N.W.2d 534 (Minn. 1945); Sosna v. Fishman, 154 S.W.2d 398 (Mo. 1941); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 21-1993; State ex rel. Home Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Davis, 299 N.W. 291 (Neb. 1941); N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 16:2-1 - 16:2-21, 16:3-1 - 16:3-11, 16:5-1 - 16:5-27, 16:6-1 - 16:6-3, 16:7-1 - 16:7-6, 16:8-1, 16:10A-1 - 16:10A-15, 16:11-1 - 16:11-24, 16:12-1 - 16:12-31, 16:13-1 - 16:13-17, 16:14-1, 16:15-1 - 16:15-17, 16:15A-1 - 16:15A-6, 16:17-1 - 16:17-12; Application of First Methodist Church, 56 A.2d 120 (N.J. 1947); N.Y. Relig. Corp. Law, §§ 5, 12, 42, 58, 69, 91, 101, 107, 139, 140, 169, 169-d, 171, 181, 189, 200, 202, 203, 207, 225, 225-j - 225-m, 271, 277, 295, 304; Harlem Church of the Seventh Day Adventists v. Greater N.Y. Corp. of Seventh Day Adventists, 198 N.E. 615 (N.Y. 1935); Western Conf. of Original Free Will Baptists v. Creech, 123 S.E.2d 619 (N.C. 1962), rev'd, 129 S.E.2d 600 (N.C. 1963); Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic St. Peter and St. Paul's Church v. Burdikoff, 189 N.E.2d 451 (Ohio App. 1962); St. Michael and Archangel Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church v. Uhniat, 259 A.2d 862 (Pa. 1962), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 823, reh'g denied, 400 U.S. 930 (1969), appeal after remand, 301 A.2d 655 (Pa. 1973); Masse v. Church of Our Lady, 141 A. 703 (R.I. 1928); Reformed Bethanian Church v. Ochsner, 31 N.W.2d 249 (S.D. 1948).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.10

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.10 Property Rights of Non-stock Private Cemetery Corporations.

[Go To Supp]

Property rights of non-stock private cemetery corporations are subject to the terms of the corporate charters as well as to the jurisdiction's legal rules and regulations for private corporations.

Certain additional land-related privileges and restrictions apply because of these corporations' burial activities. One additional property right often conferred upon non-stock private cemetery corporations is the power to condemn land for cemetery use. n338 Typical restrictions include being made subject to location regulations imposed by local boards of health or similar agencies, n339 limits on how much acreage may be acquired, n340 and restrictions on the powers to convey or encumber land acquired for cemetery purposes. n341 The objectives of these special rules are to ensure availability of adequate, undisturbed tracts of land for burials without unduly interfering with other ordinary land uses. n342

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 338. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 8501; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 7-47-102; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 48-18; Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 17-1315; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 416.210; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 114, §§ 11 to 13; Mont. Code Ann. § 35-20-104; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1401(j); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1721.02; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 5; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, §§ 5482, 5487; W. Va. Code § 54-1-2(h); Fork Ridge Baptist Cemetery Ass'n v. Redd., 10 S.E. 405 (W. Va. 1889).

(n2)Footnote 339. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 8:61, 8:66, 8:67; Md. Ann. Business Regulation § 5-201; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 114, §§ 8, 9; Mont. Code Ann. § 35-20-201; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 8A:2-1; State v. Slavonian Catholic Church, 42 A.2d 578 (N.J. 1944), aff'd, 42 A.2d 580 (N.J. App. 1945); N.Y. Not-for Profit Corp. Law §§ 1401(g), 1401(m); Holy Sepulchre Cem. v. Town of Greece, 79 N.Y.S.2d 683 (Sup. 1947), aff'd, 79 N.Y.S.2d 863 (App. 1948); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 5487.

(n3)Footnote 340. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 8125; D.C. Code Ann. § 27-102; Md. Code Ann. Bus. Reg. § 5-201; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 114, §§ 2, 8; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.876, 21.933; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 83.050; N.J. Stat. Ann.

§ 8A:6-1; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1401(h); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1721.01; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, § 3; Tenn. Code Ann. § 46-2-101; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 157.064.

(n4)Footnote 341. Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-1302, 17-1322; La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 8:313, 8:901, 8:904; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.822 21.879, 21.914, 21.916; Richmond Hills Mem. Park Ass'n v. Richardson, 266 N.W. 396 (Mich. 1936); Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 306.02, 306.63, 306.64; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 8A:6-10; Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Union Cem. Ass'n, 40 A.2d 205 (N.J. Ch. 1944), aff'd, 45 A.2d 670 (N.J. App. 1946); N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law §§ 1401(r), 1401(w), 1401(x), 1401(mm); N.Y. Real Property Law § 450; Matter of Hope Cem. Ass'n, 109 N.Y.S.2d 831 (1952); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 65-69(a); Blue Ridge Mem. Park v. Union Nat'lBank, 75 S.E.2d 617 (1953); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1721.08, 1721.15; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 8, § 31; Tenn. Code Ann. § 46-2-102; State v. Forest Lawn Lot Owners Ass'n, 254 S.W.2d 87 (1953); W. Va. Code Ann. § 35-5-2; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 157.08.

(n5)Footnote 342. Ala. Code § 22-20-4; Cal. Health and Safety Code § 8500; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 19-154; Del. Code Ann. tit. 12 §§ 3551 - 3553; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 21.856; Rowley v. Laingsburg Cem. Ass'n, 215 Mich. 673 (1921); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 306.02; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1401(n); In re Pearsall's Estate, 211 N.Y.S. 841 (1925); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1721.13, 1721.181; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 18 § 5431.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.11

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.11 Property Rights of Other Non-stock Private Corporations.

Non-stock private religious corporations are usually subject to whatever restrictions on property rights are imposed by their denominational hierarchies, a position usually reinforced by statue. However, property rights of non-stock private corporations not affiliated with religious denominations are often regulated directly by state statute. Those statutory provisions may (1) include no restrictions at all; n343 (2) permit acquisitions only in pursuit of corporate purposes; n344 (3) require that land be used and conveyed only in conformance with the terms under which it was acquired; n345 (4) impose special procedural requirements for conveying or encumbering the land; n346 (5) require certain hierarchical controls within the corporation; n347 (6) impose maximum acreage restrictions; n348 (7) impose maximum land value restrictions: n349 or (8) prohibit all or certain types of land conveyances. n350

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 343. Cal. Corp. Code §§ 10200, 5110 et seq., 9110 et seq. (1977); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 619.07 (1977); Md. Corps. & Ass'ns Code §§ 5-504(9), 6-410(c); Md. Educ. Code Ann. § 16-203(e) (1985); Diggs v. Morgan College, 105 A. 157 (Md. 1918); Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1241 - 21.1243, 21.1271 - 21.1277, 21.1321 - 21.1329, 21.1341 - 21.1351, 21.1401 - 21.1405, 21.1451 - 21.1454, 21.1601 - 21.1606, 21.1671 - 21.1678 (1983); N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1406(f) (1970); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, §§ 701, 702; Fenwick Borough v. Town of Old Saybrook, 47 A.2d 849 (Conn. 1946).

(n2)Footnote 344. Del. Code Ann. tit. 27, § 302 (1974); Ga. Code Ann. § 33-15-8 (1992); Middle Tenn. Elec. Membership Corp. v. State ex rel. Adams, 246 S.W.2d 958 (Tenn. 1952); Benton Harbor Fed'n of Women's Clubs v. Nelson, 3 N.W.2d 844 (Mich. 1942); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 352.130; Rockhill Tennis Club of Kansas City v. Volker, 56 S.W.2d 9 (Mo. 1932); Piscataway Twp. v. State Bd. of Tax Appeals, 29 A.2d 389 (N.J. 1944).

(n3)Footnote 345. D.C. Code Ann. § 29-806; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1231 to 21.1236.

(n4)Footnote 346. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:87, 30:152; see also William O. Bonin Public Mineral Leasing in Louisiana, 27 Tulane L. Rev. 246, 249; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 67, § 25; N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law § 10; Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1404(c).

(n5)Footnote 347. Mich. Stat. Ann. § 21.140; Grand Lodge of Pa. Indep. Order of Odd Fellows by See v. Van Camp Lodge No. 140, Indep. Order of Odd Fellows, 479 A.2d 544 (Pa. Super. 1984); In some circumstances courts have been reluctant to recognize hierarchical control of locally owned property: Eureka Lodge No. 5 Int'l Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks v. Eureka Lodge Modern Elks, 30 S.E.2d 126 (Va. 1944).

(n6)Footnote 348. D.C. Code Ann. §§ 29-702, 29-807; Ind. Stat. Ann. § 23-13-15-1; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 85.040; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 1408(a).

(n7)Footnote 349. Ind. State. Ann. § 23-13-15-1; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 21.1241 - 21.1243, 21.1291 - 21.1294, 21.1301 - 21.1312, 21.1361 - 21.1365, 21.1371 - 21.1374, 21.1381 - 21.1389, 21.1431 - 21.1438; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1828.01.

(n8)Footnote 350. N.Y. Ben. Ord. Law § 10; N.Y. Educ. Law § 5706; Resnick v. Croton Park Colony, 151 N.Y.S.2d 328 (1955); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1711.13, 1711.33.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.12

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.12 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations Generally.

[Go To Supp]

Stock private corporations are also subject to whatever property rights provisions are in their charters and in statutes that authorize the granting of the corporate charter or otherwise regulate such corporations. The broad variety of statutory property right provisions may (1) affirm that the corporation has all the property rights of a natural person, except as restricted by its charter or other law; n351 (2) grant power to acquire and hold land appropriate for corporate purposes; n352 (3) specify which types of land conveyances are within corporate purposes, implying prohibition of those omitted; n353 (4) require consent from a majority or more of directors n354 or members, n355 occasionally coupled with required compensation for dissenters; n356 (5) specify the formalities of execution; n357 or (6) restrict self-dealing n358 and transactions under threat of insolvency. n359

Some statutes expand the rights of stock private corporations to deal in land by (1) including after-acquired property in a mortgage; n360 (2) permitting acquisition of land in other jurisdictions; n361 (3) permitting grants of leaseholds for terms longer than the life of the corporation; n362 (4) granting the power to condemn even where the public character of the proposed use is questionable; n363 (5) or applying equitable conversion, changing realty to personalty, where the right to acquire land by devise is doubtful. n364

Only the state may challenge a stock private corporation that has acquired property in excess of its rights. n365 Such excess property escheats to the state, n366 unless the corporation first makes a valid conveyance of the property. n367 Other claimants to rights or benefits in such excess property have generally had their claims denied. n368

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 351. Ala. Code § 10-2A-20; Cal. Corp. Code § 207; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 23B.03.020.

(n2)Footnote 352. Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 156, § 14(c); N.Y. Gen. Corp. Law § 14:3; S.D. Const. art. XVII, § 7; W. Va. Code § 31-2-2.

(n3)Footnote 353. N.Y. Bus. Corp. Law §§ 202(a)(5), 909(a), 909(b), 909(c), 911; Trans Corp. Law § 29; In re

Bronson, 164 N.Y.S. 179 (1917).

(n4)Footnote 354. Or. Rev. Stat. § 708.400(3); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 852a-5.04; W. Va. Code Ann. § 31-7-11(a)(7) (1982); Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 13-7-104(c).

(n5)Footnote 355. Cal. Corp. Code § 1000; D.C. Code § 29-203; O'Flaherty v. Schwimmer, 601 N.Y.S.2d 381 (1993); Voight v. Remick, 244 N.W. 446, (Mich. 1932); N.Y. Bus. Corp. Law § 911; Bradley v. East Williston Shopping Ctr., Inc., 222 N.Y.S.2d 943 (1961), appeal denied, 288 N.Y.S.2d 1026 (1962); Hospitality Inns, Inc. v. South Burlington R.I., Inc., 571 A.2d 40 (Vt. 1989); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 188.71.

(n6)Footnote 356. N.Y. Bus. Corp. Law §§ 623, 910; Anderson v. International Mining & Chem. Corp., 67 N.E.2d 573 (N.Y. 1945).

(n7)Footnote 357. Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 58-2318; N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-10-05.1; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, § 402; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 221-14(6).

(n8)Footnote 358. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 14A:6-8; N.Y. Bus. Corp. Law § 713; N.Y. Gen. Corp. Law § 60(2); Not-for-Profit Corp. Law § 715. See also Note, The "Unfair" Interested Director's Contract Under the New York Business Corporation Law, 16 Buffalo L. Rev. 840 (1967); Note, Corporations: Interlocking Directorates: Statutory Regulation of Dealings Between Corporations with Interlocking Directorates, 23 Cornell Law. Q. 445 (1938); Hill v. Hill, 420 A.2d 1078 (Pa. Super. 1980). See also § 41 of the Model Business Corporation Act , which addresses director conflicts of interest.

(n9)Footnote 359. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 78.625. Repealed. See Chapter 442, Statutes of Nevada 1991 at page 1318.

(n10)Footnote 360. Md. Corps. & Ass'ns Code Ann. § 1-301; Garner v. Union Trust Co., 45 A.2d 106 (Md. 1945); N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 299:2; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 190.10.

(n11)Footnote 361. Cal. Corp. Code § 207; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 302A.161(4); N.Y. Gen. Corp. Law § 17; Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1302(4).

(n12)Footnote 362. Tate v. Neary, 65 N.Y.S. 40 (1900).

(n13)Footnote 363. Pollnow v. State Dep't of Nat. Resources, 276 N.W.2d 738 (Wis. 1979). W. Va. Code Ann. § 31-3-2.

(n14)Footnote 364. Downing v. Marshall, 23 N.Y. 366 (1861); In re Battles' Estate, 257 N.Y.S.2d 91 (1965).

(n15)Footnote 365. S.D.K. Med. Computer Servs. Corp. v. Professional Operating Mgt. Group, Inc., 354 N.E.2d 852 (Mass. 1976); State ex rel. State Hwy. Comm'n v. Chicago B. & Q.R.R., 539 S.W.2d 760 (Mo. App. 1976).

(n16)Footnote 366. Oklahoma Nat. Gas Co. v. State ex rel. Vassar, 101 P.2d 793 (Okla. 1940); see also Model Business Corporation Act § 7 (c) and Revised Model Business Corporations Act § 6.

(n17)Footnote 367. Wolfe v. State ex rel. Presson, 21 P.2d 1067 (Okla. 1933); see also Annotation, Power of Corporation to Pass Title to Real Property Which It Holds in Excess of Its Powers, 37 A.L.R. 204 (1925).

(n18)Footnote 368. Southwestern Pub. Serv. Co. v. Public Util. Comm'n, 578 S.W.2d 507 (Tex. Civ. App. 1979). See also Model Business Corporation Act § 7; Annotation, Who May Assert Invalidity of Sale, Mortgage, or Other Disposition of Corporate Property Without Approval of Stockholders, 58 A.L.R.2d 784 (1958).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.13

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.13 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations for Public Utilities.

[Go To Supp]

Stock private corporations for public utilities are usually under the same types of statutory regulations as apply to stock private corporations generally, but the governing statutes are usually directed specifically to the utilities corporations. Such statutes will typically confer general authorization for the utilities corporations to acquire, hold and convey real property interests. n369 Some statutes also have detailed provisions on the permissible modes of acquisition, n370 or explicitly restrict corporate use of land to the terms of the grant, n371 or bar adverse possession between the utilities corporation and adjacent or servient owners. n372

An important property right often conferred on public utility corporations is the power to condemn interest in land for a variety of public purposes. n373 Statutes extending this right may be either general or specific, and court decisions interpreting the statutes may also expand or limit their scope. Statutes giving a broad, general power to condemn may be limited to particular types of utilities corporations. n374 Statutes that are more limited in scope usually place restrictions on purposes and amount of land acquired. n375 These statutes may also designate the types of land not subject to condemnation, n376 or regulate utilities that are competing for the same land. n377

Some courts have given expansive interpretations of the powers granted by statute, whether the statutes are general or specific. n378 Other courts have tended to interpret such statutes in favor of private property ownership rights. n379

If the public utility corporation condemns only an easement interest, that interest will be terminated when the corporation abandons the easement, and the servient owner resumes ownership. n380

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 369. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40-808; Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 7526; Idaho Code Ann. §§ 62-104; Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-619, 17-623, 17-625, 17-626; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 35-A, §§ 7903, 7904; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 22.201, 22.212(b); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 222.27; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 74-305; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 48:5-7, 48:6-14; S.D. Cod. Laws § 49-30-5.

(n2)Footnote 370. Idaho Code Ann. § 62-104(2).

(n3)Footnote 371. Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 66-501.

(n4)Footnote 372. R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. § 39-6-9; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 30, §§ 705, 2519; Netherlands Am. Mtg. Bank v. Eastern Ry. & Lumber Co., 252 P. 916 (Wash. 1927).

(n5)Footnote 373. Ala. Code §§ 10-5-1, 10-5-4; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. 12-1111, 12-1142; Cal. Pub. Util. Code §§ 611 to 623; Colo. Const. art. 16, § 7; Del. Code Ann. tit. 26, § 901(b), 1302; Idaho Code § 62-104; Burlington Northern, Inc. v. Finneman, 530 P.2d 940 (Idaho 1978); Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-618, 17-627, 17-903, 17-4604(j), 66-501(3); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 23, §§ 6002, 6006; Mich. Stat. Ann. §§ 22.212, 22.218; Detroit Int'l Bridge Co. v. American Seed Co., 228 N.W. 791 (Mich. 1930); Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 222.27, 222.36; Minneapolis Gas Co. v. Dahle, 171 N.W.2d 813 (Minn. 1969); Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 74-308, 86-302; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. ch. 372, §§ 9, 23; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 48:5-18, 48:6-15.1, 48:7-3.1, 48:10-1.1, 48:12-35.1, 48:13-12.1, 48:14-10.1, 48:14-21.1, 48:17-9.1, 48:19-15.1; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 81.36.010, 81.36.030; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 32.02.

(n6)Footnote 374. Cal. Pub. Util. Code §§ 611 - 624; Cash v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 177 Cal. Rptr. 474 (1981); Clark v. Gulf Power Co., 198 So. 2d 368 (Fla. App. 1967); Kan. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 17-618 (1985); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 222.36 (1972); N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. ch. 371, § 1; Minneapolis Gas Co. v. Dahle, 171 N.W.2d 813 (Minn. 1969).

(n7)Footnote 375. Ala. Code §§ 10-5-2, 10-5-3; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 48:12-35.1; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 81-36-010, 81.52.050.

(n8)Footnote 376. Ala. Code § 10-5-3(c); N.Y. Transp. Corp. Law §§ 83, 88 (156); Laureldale Cem. Co. v. Reading Co., 136 A. 851 (Pa. 1927).

(n9)Footnote 377. Ala. Code §§ 10-4-320(3), 10-4-320(6); Mich. Stat. Ann. § 22.220; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 222.36; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 48:6-15.1, 48:12-36; Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Divide County Sch. Dist. No. 1, 193 N.W.2d 723 (N.D. 1971); President and Fellows of Middlebury College v. Central Power Corp. of Vt., 143 A. 384 (Vt. 1928); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 80.36.030; Baltimore and Ohio R.R. v. Pittsburg, W. & Ky. R.R., 17 W. Va. 812 (1881).

(n10)Footnote 378. Kennedy v. Yates Petro. Corp., 725 P.2d 572 (N.M. 1986).

(n11)Footnote 379. Roman Catholic Dioces of Newark v. Borough of Ho-Ho-Kus, 220 A.2d 97 (N.J. 1966).

(n12)Footnote 380. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 7554 (1965); State ex rel. Dep't of Transp. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 445 A.2d 939 (Del. Super. 1982).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.14

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.14 Private Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations for Finance-Related Enterprises.

Property rights of finance-related corporations are also restricted by specific statutory provisions. Stock private corporations for national banks may acquire, hold and convey only such real property as is necessary for their business, or such property as they acquire as security for or in satisfaction of debts. Property acquired as debt security may not be held for more than five years. n381

The purposes for such restrictions probably include making the bank assets more readily available to depositors n382 and reducing banks' ability to engage in hazardous land speculation. n383

State statutes impose similar restrictions on state banks and savings and loan associations, although with great variety in detail and approach. The state statutes typically permit the corporation to grant leaseholds in the excess space at its business site, but acquisition of the site itself may be subject to cost limitations or approval by a state agency. n384

Some state statutes respond to the concern that the corporation will deal in real estate under the pretense of obtaining real property as security for debt although some provisions prohibit buying land at any price higher than necessary to protect the corporation's security interest n385 and some regulatory provisions govern the management and exchange of such lands. n386

State statutes usually impose a maximum holding period for real property located at other than the business site. The maximum period varies from two years n387 to ten, n388 but is usually five years with the possibility of an extension. n389 If the holding period is exceeded, the land may escheat to the state unless the corporation conveys it. Other statutes promote such conveyances by requiring the realty assets to be carried on the corporation's books at a much reduced valuation. n390

The corporation in the role of mortgagee may be further restricted by statute. Loans may be limited to certain percentages of the land's appraised value, n391 or of corporate assets, n392 or of paid in capital plus surplus. n393 Such restrictions usually do not apply when the corporation acts as trustee. In that situation, the corporation is governed by the trust instrument. n394

Insurance companies are similarly restricted, n395 although occasionally they are permitted to hold land for investment. n396

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 381. 12 U.S.C. § 29.

(n2)Footnote 382. Smith v. Rennix, 204 N.W. 843 (N.D. 1925).

(n3)Footnote 383. Union Nat'l Bank v. Matthews, 98 U.S. 621 (1978).

(n4)Footnote 384. Cal. Fin. Code § 6702; Del. Code Ann. §§ 5-761, 5-762; Maine Unemp. Compensation Comm'n v. Maine Sav. Bank, 3 A.2d 897 (Me. 1939); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 48.21; N.Y. Banking Law §§ 98, 235(9), 381; State Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Bryant, 81 P.2d 116 (Or. 1938).

(n5)Footnote 385. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 6, § 414C (1966); Meyers v. Central Nat'l Bank of Okmulgee, 80 P.2d 584 (Okla. 1937).

(n6)Footnote 386. Cal. Fin. Code §§ 750, 751, 6708, 6710; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 50.13; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 393:24; Caldwell Bldg. and Loan Ass'n v. Henry, 185 A. 394 (N.J. 1936); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 215.22; see Annotation, Power of National Bank to Deal with Property Taken to Secure Debt, 10 A.L.R. 1045 (1920).

(n7)Footnote 387. Ark. Code Ann. § 23-38-214.

(n8)Footnote 388. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 215.22.

(n9)Footnote 389. D.C. Code Ann. § 26-414; N.Y. Banking Law §§ 98 (3), 381 (3); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 30.04.210.

(n10)Footnote 390. Ark. Code Ann. § 23-48-214.

(n11)Footnote 391. Mont. Code Ann. § 32-1-423; N.Y. Banking Law §§ 103(4), 235(6), 380.

(n12)Footnote 392. N.Y. Banking Law § 103(4c).

(n13)Footnote 393. N.Y. Banking Law § 103(4b).

(n14)Footnote 394. Ark. Code Ann. § 23-32-702; Barlow v. Southern Trust Co., 280 P. 531 (Cal. 1929); Idaho Code Ann. § 30-901; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 48.38 (1967); R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. §§ 19-5-5 - 19-5-9; Wash. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 11.100.060, 30.04.210; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 223.03.

(n15)Footnote 395. D.C. Code Ann. §§ 35-634, 35-1419, 35-1519 (1967); National Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 219 P. 261 (Kan. 1923); N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 411a-23, 411a-32; Utah Code Ann. § 31a-18-105; see John W. McPherson, Some Economic and Legal Aspects of the Purchase and Lease of Real Estate by Life Insurance Companies, 97 U. of Penn. L. Rev. 482 (1949).

(n16)Footnote 396. Idaho Code Ann. §§ 41-728, 41-729; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:18-3, 17:24-1; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 48.13.160, 48.13.170.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.15

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.15 Property Rights of Private Corporations in Other Jurisdictions.

[Go To Supp]

Under the rules of comity, but subject to any applicable state law, many states permit an out-of-state corporation to exercise whatever property rights it possesses under the law of its own jurisdiction. n397 Exceptions as to type of corporation n398 and limitations as to the scope of the comity doctrine are common. n399

State laws that usually restrict the scope of the comity doctrine are those regulating the power of out-of-state corporations to do business in the state. n400 If an out-of-state corporation has not been properly authorized to do business in the state, its land-related activities are still valid according to some states n401 but not in others. n402 Once properly authorized to do business in the state, an out-of-state corporation usually has the same property rights as a similar domestic corporation. n403

Statutes that restrict the property rights of out-of-state corporations may a(1) prohibit acquisition of rural or farm land except as necessary for authorized business; n404 (2) prohibit acquisition of land outside incorporated municipalities; n405 (3) or impose time limits on property holdings. n406

If an out-of-state corporation acquires land in violation of applicable restrictions, it may be challenged only by the state. n407

Corporations chartered in other countries may come under other state statutory restrictions. n408

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 397. Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 305; Davenport Mach. & Foundry Co., A Div. of Middle States Corp. v. Adolph Coors Co., 314 N.W.2d 432 (Iowa 1982); see Annotation, Leasing of Real Estate by Foreign Corporation, as Lessor Lessee, as Doing Business Within State Within Statutes Prescribing Conditions of Right to Do Business, 59 A.L.R.2d 1131 (1958).

(n2)Footnote 398. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 38a-43.

(n3)Footnote 399. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 17-7303.

(n4)Footnote 400. Ashbury Hosp. v. Cass County, 326 U.S. 207 (1945).

(n5)Footnote 401. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 607.1503; Crockin v. Boston Store, 188 So. 853 (Fla. 1939).

(n6)Footnote 402. Idaho Code Ann. § 30-1-106(g); Franklin Bldg. and Loan Co. v. Peppard, 93 P.2d 925 (Utah 1939).

(n7)Footnote 403. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 10-107, 10-114, 10-116, 10-119, 10-120; Work v. United Globe Mines, 100 P. 813 (Ariz. 1909), aff'd, 231 U.S. 595 (1914); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 607.1505; Mass. Ann. Laws Ch. 181, § 9; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 303.09.

(n8)Footnote 404. U.S. Gypsum Co. v. State ex rel. Rutherford, 328 P.2d 431 (Okla. 1958).

(n9)Footnote 405. Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-402 - 76-405, 76-414.

(n10)Footnote 406. Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-411.

(n11)Footnote 407. Byerly v. Camey, 161 S.W.2d 1105 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942).

(n12)Footnote 408. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.22.

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP +

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 12.16

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 12.16 Choice of Entity for Acquiring and Holding Real Property Interests.

[Go To Supp]

§ 12.16(a) Tax, Structural, and Securities Law Considerations.

§ 12.16(a)(1) Selecting the Entity for Multi-party Ownership of Real Estate: The Menu.

Real estate developers and investors join together to form business entities for many reasons: to raise equity capital, enhance the range of their political and business contacts, build in construction "know how," strengthen family or friendship ties, and share gains and losses efficiently in light of tax rules.

Once committed to forming an organization, real estate people need to select an entity for doing business. If they don't select one, they may be giving tax officials and state courts disastrous leeway to characterize the relationship in ways most damaging to the participants.

The menu of choices includes: General Partnership; Joint Venture; Tenancy in Common; C Corporation; Limited Partnership; Limited Liability Company; S Corporation; Real Estate Investment Trust (R.E.I.T.).

The reference to C and S corporations derives from sub-chapters C and S of the Internal Revenue Code.

The following chart shows how existing ownership patterns are divided among individuals, partnerships, and corporations:

Individuals	$5,099
Corporate	1,699
Partnerships	1,011
Not-for-Profits	411
Government	234
Institutional	128

Financial Institutions	114
Other	92
Total	$8,777

WHO OWNS AMERICA'S REAL ESTATE? The vast majority of U.S. real property is owned by U.S. citizens and corporations, not foreign investors, according to a new study conducted by Arthur Andersen & Company for the Institute of Real Estate Management and the I.R.E.M. Foundation. Residential real estate represents $6,122 trillion, or 70 percent of the total real estate wealth in the country; 83 percent of all residential units are owned by individuals, while corporations own about 11 percent, and government agencies about 9 percent. On the commercial side, corporations control nearly 62 percent, while partnerships control 13 percent, and not-for-profits control about 12 percent. The total value of the U.S. real estate stock in 1990 was about $8,777 trillion, of which foreign ownership accounts for $35.8 billion. The accompanying table lists the major owners. (Marketing the Future: Real Estate in the 1990's, September 1991; Institute of Real Estate Management, 430 N. Michigan Avenue, Post Office Box 109025, Chicago, Illinois 60610-9025; (312) 661-1953.) n409

Certain questions must be answered by the participants regardless of the entity they choose.

The participants must decide on the amount and form of each one's contribution, the effect of a failure to make that contribution, the manner of compensation of the promoters and/or managers, the allocation of profits, losses and distributions, the form, manner, and limitations of management and control of the entity and if, how and when interests in the entity may be transferred. n410

§ 12.16(a)(2) Factors Relevant to Selection.

Here are the questions frequently asked by lawyers, accountants, and other professionals trying to assist business people in selecting an entity for real estate development or investment:

Management: Is it to be centralized in one or a few of the investors or shared equally by all?

Liability: Are some or all of the investors eager to limit their potential losses to no more than the sums they contribute initially to the venture? Or, are they willing to make additional contributions, if necessary, to keep the venture afloat? Are they prepared to incur personal liability in tort or contract as a result of the venture?

Transferability: Can one individual sell her interest in the property if her co-venturers don't want to keep the entity going? Will the departing participant be able to have the entity dissolved or can it survive her departure? If she sells her interest in the venture, what rights will her buyer have?

Continuity: If one of the partners dies, sells or withdraws, will the entity automatically cease to exist?

§ 12.16(a)(3) Tax Factors in Entity Selection.

Taxation: Selection of an entity is often tax motivated. Professor Edward McCaffery divides tax considerations that bear on selecting an entity into three groups:

Basic Tax Burden: Is the total tax burden increased by the use of a particular entity? This happens if the entity is subject to tax at the entity level, and the investors are taxed again when the entity distributes earnings to them. Or, is the entity treated as a "nontaxable conduit through which tax consequences flow directly to each constituent member"? n411

Loss Pass Throughs: When there are losses for tax purposes, some entities are allowed to pass those deductions to individual investors. Other entities can only deduct the loss at the entity level. The owners of the entity aren't entitled to claim it on their personal tax returns.

Flexibility: The rate of tax on ordinary income is considerably higher than it is on capital gains. Can ordinary income be allocated to one investor and capital gains to another?

Suppose the project generates a positive cash flow but also a tax loss because of the nuances of tax accounting. Can one investor be allocated the cash, and another the paper loss? One investor might be a pension fund exempt from tax. The other might be a heavily taxed professional. Can the pension fund get the cash and the professional the paper loss?

To appreciate how tax rules affect real estate equity investment, it is necessary to see just what those rules are and how they change an investor's "bottom line."

§ 12.16(a)(3)(i) Determining the Profitability of Rental Real Estate.

Business school texts recommend the following procedure for analyzing the profitability of, say, owning and operating an apartment house and eventually selling it. Tax rules, the most important of which are described in the following section, will complicate this analysis significantly, as we shall see, and sometimes convert what would have been losses into gains or gains into losses. But these simple formulas are a good place to start before we look at the impacts of taxation on real estate investment:

Gross Income:

-- Operating Expenses (repairs and maintenance, insurance premiums, utility charges, real estate taxes)

= Net Operating Income

-- Debt Service (principal and interest payments)

= Before Tax Cash Flow

-- Taxes

= After Tax Cash Flow

The real estate investor might eventually sell the property. She could calculate the results this way:

Selling Price

-- Expenses of Selling (brokerage, escrow, and legal fees)

= Net Sale Proceeds

-- Unpaid Mortgage Balance

= Before Tax Equity Realized

-- Tax on Sale

= After Tax Equity

The investor's profit on the sale is:

After Tax Equity

-- Basis (original "equity," or downpayment)

= Net Yield on Equity

§ 12.16(a)(3)(ii) Key Tax Rules.

Certain tax rules dramatically affect both the returns from owning and operating rental property and the yield when it is sold.

Basis. When an investor buys real estate, the starting point for determining the basis for tax purposes is ordinarily the cost of purchasing the property. n412 When the investor sells, the basis will be deducted from the net sale proceeds in determining the taxable gain. This is tax talk for explaining the simple proposition that an investor should be taxed on gains only, not on what property cost to buy. One rationale for allowing the taxpayer to deduct the basis, or purchase price from the eventual sales price is to avoid taxing the investor twice on money invested. The investor probably already paid tax on the money used to buy the property if, say, that money was received in the form of salary or stock dividends. In some situations, such as when the property is acquired by gift or tax-deferred exchange, some other rule may apply.

Suppose A and B form a partnership. B contributes $1 million cash. A contributes land purchased twenty years ago for $10,000 that is now worth $1 million. A's "adjusted basis" in the land for tax purposes is still $10,000. B's basis in the partnership is $1 million. A's basis in the partnership is $10,000.

Secured Debt Included in Basis. Generally, a taxpayer's basis is what the property cost to buy. Although "cost" isn't defined in the statute, case law has now made clear that cost or original basis is the entire purchase price, not just the cash downpayment. A taxpayer who contracted to pay, say, 10% down, and the rest of the price in installments would doubtless see the "purchase price" as the full amount the taxpayer was obligated to pay under the contract. Similarly, if the purchaser borrowed the money from a third-party lender instead of buying on a deferred installment sale, or assumed an existing loan for part of the purchase price, the purchaser would regard the acquisition price as the total sum, including the mortgage obligation. Even if the borrower isn't obligated personally to repay the debt, the borrower still stands to lose the "equity" in the property if upon default. The bottom line is that basis usually includes borrowed sums with a few exceptions noted later.

Thus, a taxpayer who buys an apartment house for $1,000,000, with only $100,000 down and borrows $900,000 to make the acquisition has a basis in the property of $1,000,000.

Incidental Costs of Acquisition Are Part of Basis. The taxpayer also adds to basis the expenses of acquiring the property -- such as title, escrow, and legal fees. If the taxpayer has to file a suit for specific performance against a reneging seller, the costs of that lawsuit become part of the taxpayer's basis or acquisition cost.

Adjusted Basis. The taxpayer's basis, as we shall see, is adjusted downward when the taxpayer takes depreciation and other tax allowances. The basis is adjusted upward for improvements and other capital outlays.

Every year the property owner is allowed to deduct from gross income ordinary and necessary operating expenses incurred. The owner is only taxed on her income less expenses. This is called "adjusted gross income," the income left after deducting the cost of operating expenses.

Not all the money an owner spends in the course of operating a commercial property is immediately deductible. If the owner spends money for an improvement that will last beyond the current tax year, that outlay is usually treated as a capital expenditure and not as an ordinary and necessary business expense. The taxpayer can't deduct capital expenditures in a single year; he is only allowed to depreciate them over their useful life.

The point of distinguishing between expenses and improvements is to force the taxpayer to match the timing of the deduction with the income derived from or attributable to it. Otherwise the taxpayer could get the benefit of the tax deduction now and defer paying tax on the resulting income until later years. The "benefit now, pay later" philosophy, called deferral, is every taxpayer's goal.

Capital expenditures could include a new roof, a major replumbing or rewiring, and almost all structural work. Each of these would be depreciable over the I.R.S. estimates of its useful life.

Another capital expense of great concern to real estate developers is the value of land they are compelled to dedicate for schools, parks, and roads as part of the subdivision approval process. Developers would like to treat these as charitable gifts and take the deduction in the year that title is transferred or accepted by the government.

The Internal Revenue Service knows, however, that these aren't really gifts. They are exactions, part of the price of obtaining subdivision approval. So they must be added to the developer's acquisition and development cost schedule. When the developer sells her subdivided lots, she can subtract these along with all the other costs of development from the gross sales price in determining taxable gain on sale.

The Cash Flow Consequence of the Taxpayer Having to "Capitalize" Expenditures. For the property owner there is a significant cash flow consequence of making capital improvements. The developer spends the money on a capital improvement in the current taxable year but is taxed as if the developer hadn't. Say a developer's gross income from an apartment house is $100,000. The developer incurs $35,000 in operating expenses, and makes capital improvements of $65,000. The developer is taxed on $65,000 less one year's depreciation, even though all $65,000 was spent on capital improvements. The tax bill is the adjusted gross income ($65,000) multiplied by the tax rate (say 31%). Where will the developer get the cash to pay taxes? Not from apartment house rents in the current year.

The Depreciation Deduction. Partially to offset the fact that taxpayers are forbidden from deducting the full cost of long-term property improvements in the year they are made, the Internal Revenue Service Code § 167(a) authorizes taxpayers to deduct "a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear (including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence) of property used in the trade or business or held in the production of income."

The taxpayer pays income tax only on "adjusted" gross income. Adjusted gross income is gross income less the taxpayer's allowable expenses in producing the income, and includes depreciation.

The depreciation deduction compensates the owner of a wasting asset for the fact that some of the income being received for the asset is not a return on the investment. It is partly a return of the investment in the sense that eventually the building or any other depreciating asset will wear out.

Calculating the Entitlement. Depreciation involves estimating the life use of the asset, determining what it will be worth at the end of its life use (salvage value), and allocating the excess of original cost over salvage value across the taxable years the property is potentially useable by the taxpayer.

There are many ways to calculate depreciation. n413 Currently, the Internal Revenue Code § 168(c) mandates a straight-line cost recovery period of 271/2 years for residential real estate, and 311/2 years for commercial. n414 The half-year periods mesh with the Code's presumption that property bought in the midst of a tax year has been purchased midway through the year. n415 The taxpayer also has the option of electing a 40-year depreciation period. Under the straight-line method of depreciation, the sum to be depreciated (acquisition cost less salvage value) is apportioned equally across the appropriate number of years.

Types of Realty that Qualify for the Deduction. Depreciation is only available for property (1) used in a trade or business (a grocer's store, a doctor's office equipment), or (2) held for the production of income (such as an office building, shopping center, or apartment house). n416

Someone who buys an apartment building in order to convert it into individual condominiums for sale would not qualify for the depreciation deduction because the buyer wouldn't have been holding the building for its annual income, but rather as inventory, much like a car dealer holds automobiles for sale to customers. The dealer can't depreciate the cars on the showroom floor and neither may the would-be condo converter depreciate the condo inventory. A homeowner can't depreciate a house either since it is held for personal use, not in a trade or business and not for the production of income.

Land isn't depreciable according to I.R.S. regulations. n417 This avoids costly disputes about rapidly fluctuating land values. But it also prevents owners whose sites are actually eroding or otherwise physically deteriorating from taking depreciation deductions.

Who is Entitled to Take Depreciation? The investor in property, the one who incurred responsibility for its acquisition price, is entitled to the depreciation deduction. The mortgagor gets the depreciation allowance, not the mortgagee. The lessor gets to depreciate the asset, not the tenant -- unless the tenant actually paid for the improvement.

Depreciable Basis for Tax Purposes Includes Most Borrowed Funds. The real estate investor gets to depreciate the basis in the property -- including that portion bought with borrowed funds. The taxpayer could have been restricted to depreciating only the cash personally invested, not borrowed sums. This would complicate depreciation calculations on mortgage financing, especially when part of each monthly mortgage payment goes to repay principal. If the basis rose with each dollar used to pay down the mortgage principal, the taxpayer's depreciable basis would have to be adjusted monthly as the contribution to principal increases over the life of the loan. This administrative complexity is avoided by allowing the taxpayer's basis to include borrowed funds, permitting a depreciation deduction which includes borrowed funds, and disallowing a deduction as the taxpayer repays the mortgage debt.

The taxpayer gets the full depreciation allowance if she is "at risk" on the loan. "At risk" means the borrower is personally liable for repaying the mortgage loan.

Even real property owners who aren't "at risk" can depreciate sums borrowed to acquire property but only for "qualified non-recourse financing." "Nonrecourse" means the borrower has no personal liability for the debt, that the borrower is not "at risk." A qualified non-recourse mortgage loan is one made by a lender who regularly makes loans to borrowers who aren't personally liable for repayment. The loan can't be made by the seller. A person related to the taxpayer can make a qualified non-recourse loan, but only if the loan is made on commercially reasonable terms, the same as an unrelated person would have made. A convertible mortgage for which the borrower is not "at risk" doesn't qualify. Nor does a loan made by someone who is earning a fee in the transaction like the broker. Knowledgeable real estate investors meticulously avoid these exceptions so that they can include borrowed sums in their basis even though it is non-recourse.

Depreciation Deductions Are Subtracted From Basis in Calculating an Owner's Taxable Gain on Sale. A day of reckoning comes for the owner who has enjoyed depreciation deductions when the owner sells. An owner who sells is taxed on the difference between the net sales price and the "adjusted basis." Adjusted basis is the original acquisition price (including mortgage financing) less any depreciation deductions she has enjoyed during her period of ownership. So the owner is eventually taxed on the depreciation deductions taken. The benefit to the taxpayer is deferral.

For example, suppose a person buys an apartment house for $1,200,000. The land is valued at $200,000 (based on the real property tax assessor's allocation of the property tax between land and buildings). So only $1,000,000 is depreciable. Using a 271/2-year straight-line method, the owner can deduct $1,000,000/27.5 = $36,363.36 per year even if the owner has not invested one dime of personal money but borrowed all the acquisition price.

Thus, if the annual gross income from the building is $100,000, and the owner has spent $35,000 in deductible operating expenses in the current tax year, the owner will pay tax on $65,000 (net operating income) less a depreciation deduction of $36,363.36, and thus will be taxed only on $28,636.64 of income.

When Depreciation Deduction is a Tax Shelter. Real estate is sometimes called a tax shelter precisely because of this depreciation deduction. Few buildings depreciate as rapidly in their early years as they do in later years. n418 Thus, under a straight-line depreciation schedule the owner may be able to deduct a sum greater than her actual economic loss in the first decade of ownership.

The fact that the owner pays taxes on the sums deducted for depreciation when the sale occurs doesn't mean the depreciation deduction was worthless. The taxpayer has benefitted from having saved taxes in all the years the taxpayer took the deduction. The gain can be measured by the time value of money: the net present value of all those deductions minus the net present value of the ultimate payback. The depreciation deduction has been described as an interest-free loan from the government for the period of the taxpayer's ownership of the building. The taxpayer will additionally benefit from the deferral if the capital gains tax rate on sale is lower than the taxpayer's ordinary income rate.

A taxpayer who sells the building early enough may escape ownership during the years when the depreciation deduction might actually fall short of the actual rate of the property's wear and tear. So the taxpayer could get the interest-free deferral of taxation without bearing the burden of a concomitant economic depreciation.

But the depreciation deduction isn't necessarily a tax dodge. It can equal or even be less than the actual rate at which the property is losing value. Suppose you go into the car rental business. You buy a new car for $20,000. During the year you gross $5,000 in car rental fees. Your expenses (taxes, insurance, maintenance) are $3,000. Have you made a profit of $2,000, a 10% return on your $20,000 investment?

Probably not. At the end of the year the car isn't going to be worth $20,000. Suppose it were worth $15,000. Did you make $2,000 in your first year of operation? Or did you lose $3,000 because the car depreciated $5,000 in value?

If you were allowed a tax depreciation deduction greater than $5,000, you would truly be receiving a tax "break." If you were allowed less than $5,000, and ended up paying income tax on your $2,000 paper gain you would be paying taxes on ostensible, but not real, earnings.

It is extremely difficult for a depreciation schedule to reflect value changes perfectly unless someone actually appraises the car at the end of the year, a costly administrative burden.

Imagine a tax system in which you didn't get to claim the depreciation until you actually "realized" it -- when you sold the car. Alternately, you could have been allowed a deduction for the entire $20,000 when you bought the car, assuming you bought the car for your car rental business and not for personal use. An income tax based on consumption would work this way. Depreciation over the car's estimated life use is a compromise between these extremes.

The depreciation deduction debate is complicated by the fact that the Internal Revenue Code takes no account of inflation in calculating gain. If there were runaway inflation, you might be able to sell the car after the first year for $25,000. Superficially, this looks like you pulled a fast one on the system. You seem to have gotten $5,000 in depreciation deductions for a car that didn't depreciate at all, one that increased in value by $5,000. Your taxable gain on the sale would be the original purchase price ($20,000) less the sums you took as depreciation ($5,000) plus your resale price ($25,000). This amounts to a taxable "gain" of $10,000.

Will this make you and the tax system even? Not necessarily. If the rate of inflation during the year had been 100% then half your gain was nominal, not real. You were not $5,000 better off than you had been a year earlier. In fact, the $25,000 nominal price was the equivalent of $12,500 in the year you bought the car. In real dollars you would have lost $7,500 on your investment; yet you will be taxed as if you had a gain. The depreciation deduction can be seen as partial compensation for the failure of capital gains taxation to reflect inflation.

You can construct a persuasive demonstration of how the depreciation deduction could result in a taxpayer receiving "tax free" earnings by assuming the car really didn't depreciate at all. It was one of those rare models that collectors value. There was no inflation. In this case the depreciation deduction would have been a true tax shelter.

Some real estate investments look like the collector car example because land, which is not depreciable for tax purposes, often appreciates. No tax adjustment is made each year for this unrealized appreciation. Only when the investor sells will the gain be taxed. Moreover, the investor can defer being taxed on that gain by refinancing instead of selling; proceeds an owner pockets from a refinancing aren't subject to tax. Or the investor can defer the tax on the gain by exchanging the property for another one of like kind under § 1031 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Mortgage Amortization Is Not Deductible. Mortgage interest payments are deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses for owners of commercial real property. Payments to reduce the mortgage debt are not deductible. The taxpayer's depreciation deduction includes mortgaged funds. To allow a deduction for principal amortization as well would be to give the taxpayer a double deduction for the same debt.

When mortgages are repaid in equal monthly installments, the amount of each payment attributable to principal reduction starts out small and grows each month. As the amortization portion of each monthly loan payment increases, the share of the payment that represents interest declines, and with it the deductibility of the mortgage payment.

This leads to a situation in which the taxpayer gets taxed on income she can't keep, income she uses to repay mortgage principal. In any year that the repayment mortgage principal exceeds allowable depreciation the taxpayers can experience a "negative" after-tax cash flow.

Suppose the taxpayer has a highly leveraged investment, 100% financed. The annual gross income is $100,000. The taxpayer's expenses are $35,000. The debt service is $65,000, but of that sum, $30,000 is principal repayment, and only $35,000 is interest. The taxpayer will have to pay income taxes on the $30,000 mortgage principal reduction payment even though the taxpayer really had to write a check for this money during the tax year.

Real estate investors try to avoid digging into their pockets to pay taxes that exceed their actual cash flow from commercial real estate by refinancing their loans when amortization payments become substantial. They also look for balloon payment loans with deferred or no amortization until the end of the loan term. Or, they plan on selling out before amortization payments become so great on their mortgages as to result in a negative after-tax cash flow.

Limitations on the Deductibility of Tax Losses. Before 1986, taxpayers who invested in a real estate project with tax losses could deduct those from income from other sources. A lawyer or doctor who bought an interest in an apartment house which generated excess depreciation could shelter professional earnings with the apartment house depreciation. Such investors would pay good money for real estate projects that were losing money just for the right to take those losses against earned income.

Tax law changes in 1986, I.R.C. § 469, now prohibit this. The code divides all sources of income into three categories: active, portfolio, and passive. Active income includes salaries, fees, and profit or loss from a trade or business in which the taxpayer materially participates. Portfolio income includes investment income and losses such as interest, dividends, royalties, and securities sales. Passive income encompasses income and deductions attributable to a trade or business in which the taxpayer does not materially participate. It also includes gain from the sale of property held for investment. For instance, someone who constructs an apartment house with the idea of selling it, and doesn't hold it as rental property for at least a year, derives portfolio income from the sale. Income from rental property is defined as passive income no matter how actively the taxpayer oversees the rental property. So is all income earned by a limited partnership.

Individuals can only deduct losses from passive activity against gains from the operation or sale of similar passive activity, as defined by the code. If the losses can't be taken, they are carried forward until the "passive activity" property is sold to an unrelated party in a taxable transaction. Only then can losses from "passive" activity be used to offset earned (active) income or portfolio income.

The result of the passive activity loss rules is that an investor who is losing money on one rental real estate investment can only deduct the loss from gains generated by a like investment (passive income generators, or P.I.G.s, as they are called).

There are two exceptions to the passive activity loss rules, under I.R.C. § 469. (1) An individual may deduct up to $25,000 each year of passive losses from rental real property to offset non-passive income if the individual "actively participates" in managing or maintaining the property, owns at least 10% of the property, and doesn't have income above certain qualifying levels. Someone who buys an apartment house will qualify, even if there is a resident manager, as long as she participates in making key decisions -- setting rents, deciding on capital improvements, overseeing the selection of new tenants. The $25,000 allowance is phased out as the individual's adjusted gross income (computed without taking passive losses into account) increases from $100,000 to $150,000. An individual whose earnings exceed $150,000 can't deduct any rental property losses from earned or portfolio income. (2) Rental real estate activities of people in the real property business are not automatically treated as passive activities.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(iii) Implication of Tax Rules for Cash Flow.

Tax rules open the possibility of there being a substantial difference between a property owner's net operating income or loss as it appears on the owner's books, and the cash pocketed after taxes:

1. The depreciation deduction is especially good for the taxpayer because it can reduce the owner's net taxable income and does not require the taxpayer to make any out-of-pocket cash expenditure.

2. Some deductions -- like mortgage interest, property taxes, and ordinary and necessary operating expenses -- are neutral as tax "shelters" because they require the taxpayer to fork over one dollar of actual cash for every dollar deducted from the taxpayer's gross income for tax purposes.

3. The worst items for the taxpayer are mortgage principal payments and undepreciated capital improvement expenditures. The taxpayer spends actual cash dollars for these but gets no immediate reduction in her current tax bill.

To illustrate how an owner's particular cash flow situation can be better or worse because of the tax rules, consider the following three cases.

Owner A takes in $100,000 in gross rents from her property. Her operating expenses are $60,000. Her mortgage interest payment is $9,000. Her mortgage principal payment is $1,000. Her depreciation deduction is $10,000.

Her taxable income would be computed as follows:

Her cash flow would be computed:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating expenses	$60,000
-- Mortgage interest	9,000
-- Depreciation deduction	10,000	79,000
Taxable income		$21,000

Her cash flow would be computed:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating expenses	$60,000
-- Debt service (principal and interest)	10,000	70,000
Before tax cash flow		$30,000
Less tax at 31% rate on $21,000		6,510
After tax cash flow		$23,490

In this case the taxpayer is pocketing a great deal more cash than she is being taxed on in the current year.

Owner B also received $100,000 from rents. She also has spent $60,000 to keep the property in good condition. But only $10,000 of what she spent is deductible in the current tax year. The rest is being depreciated because her expenses were deemed capital improvements. The sums allowed for the amortization of these capital expenditures are already included in the $10,000. Her mortgage interest payments are $1,000, and the mortgage principal payment is $9,000. Her depreciation deduction is $10,000.

Her taxable income:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating expenses	$10,000
-- Mortgage interest	1,000
-- Depreciation deduction	10,000	21,000
Taxable income		$79,000

Her cash flow:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating and capital expenses	$60,000
-- Debt service (mortgage interest and principal)	10,000	70,000
Before tax cash flow		$30,000

Less tax at 31% rate on $79,000		24,490
After tax cash flow		$ 5,510

The impact of taxation on after-tax cash flow is that Owner A pockets $23,490 while Owner B keeps $5,510 -- although their income and expenses are identical.

Now we introduce Owner C. She also has $100,000 of gross income, $60,000 of operating expenses, and a $10,000 mortgage payment. All of her mortgage payment is interest. Her property qualifies for a $50,000 annual depreciation allowance.

Her taxable income:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating expenses	$60,000
-- Mortgage interest	10,000
-- Depreciation deduction	50,000	120,000
Taxable income (loss)		($20,000)

Her cash flow:

Gross income		$100,000
-- Operating expenses	$60,000
-- Debt service	10,000	70,000
Before Tax Cash Flow		$30,000

She will pocket all $30,000 because she owes no tax. In fact, she has a tax loss of $20,000. Since this loss derives from rental real estate it is a passive activity loss. It cannot be deducted from active or earned income, or from portfolio income unless she qualifies for one of the exceptions. Should she be unable to deduct this loss, she can carry it forward as a deduction against future passive activity gains. These could include rental income from other property or from this property in future years, or profit from the sale of passive activity property.

§ 12.16(a)(3)(iv) Tax Implications When Mortgaged Property Is Sold or Foreclosed: Depreciation Payback Time.

Calculating the Taxpayer's Obligation on the Sale of Depreciated Property. Just as it is possible for a taxpayer like Owner C to realize a positive cash flow while reporting a whopping tax loss, on the sale of property it is possible for an owner to become liable for a sizeable capital gains tax bill while realizing little or no cash.

Capital gains tax is paid on the difference between the selling price (minus selling expenses) and the taxpayer's adjusted basis. Acquisition cost less depreciation equals the adjusted basis for tax purposes.

To calculate tax liability on a sale of property:

1. Start with the selling price.

2. Subtract actual selling expenses, including brokerage fees.

3. Subtract the price you paid originally for the property (including borrowed funds).

4. Deduct from the acquisition price the depreciation allowances you took during the years you owned the property.

5. The sum that remains is taxable gain.

Let us say that Owner C bought her property several years ago for $1,000,000 and sells it now for $1,200,000. Her cost of sale is $80,000, including a 6% brokerage fee. She bought the property by paying $100,000 of her own funds and borrowing a $900,000 mortgage loan. She hasn't reduced any of her mortgage debt. This was an "interest only" loan. The loan is now due and payable. She took $500,000 in depreciation deductions during her years of ownership.

Selling Price		$1,200,000
-- Expenses of sale	$80,000
-- Adjusted basis (acquisition price less depreciation)	500,000	580,000
Taxable gain		$ 620,000
	$173,600		Capital Gains Tax on sale (gain x.28)

In order to satisfy her tax liability of $173,600, she will have to reach deeply into the sale proceeds. Her net sales price (selling price - costs of sale) was $1,120,000, but the first $900,000 goes to repay her loan. This leaves $220,000 minus her tax payment of $173,600. Her net is $46,400, not too bad considering her original equity was only $100,000.

This happens because the taxpayer was taxed on two sources of gain. One was property appreciation of $200,000. The other source of gain was the depreciation deduction of $500,000. If she weren't taxed on this money now, she would have gotten the benefit of a half million dollars in depreciation on a property which didn't actually depreciate. It appreciated by $200,000.

A Sale of Heavily Mortgaged Property, a Sale at a Loss, or a Foreclosure Sale Can All Be Taxable Events for the Borrower. If the taxpayer could escape liability for the depreciation deductions previously taken, imagine the consequences for high-risk real estate deals. The game would be a heads-the-taxpayer-wins, tails-the-federal-treasury-loses. Shrewd dealers would be tempted to leverage to the sky. If the investment paid off, they could shelter their net operating income with depreciation deductions. If the investment failed, they could walk away. With little or no equity invested, and non-recourse loans, there would be nothing to stop them except the discipline of the marketplace.

The Internal Revenue Service has put a brake on these high roller strategies. The taxpayer must include in basis a mortgage whether the taxpayer agreed to repay it. The taxpayer is treated as having a taxable gain when the property sells for less than the unpaid balance of non-recourse mortgage debt. n419

A foreclosure sale is treated just like a voluntary sale for tax purposes. The taxpayer is subject to a gain or loss according to § 1001 on the occasion of a "sale or other disposition" of property. This language doesn't imply a voluntary sale. Even if it did, the debtor voluntarily entered the mortgage loan transaction in the first place, assuming or taking subject to the loan. n420 So it doesn't help the taxpayer to default on her mortgage loan when she has depreciated the property below the sum she could net after a sale.

This threat of post-foreclosure tax liability keeps many an owner of equity-less property negotiating "work outs" with mortgage lenders to avoid foreclosure. Even owners who aren't personally liable on the mortgage could become personally liable to the Internal Revenue Service if the lender forecloses, the foreclosure sales price barely repays the lender, and the owner realizes taxable gain on the foreclosure sale with no compensating source of revenue from which to pay it.

A conveyance to the lender by deed "in lieu of foreclosure" produces the same dire tax consequences for the borrower. n421

Mortgagors can only defer the day of tax reckoning by hanging on to the property or, perhaps, transferring it into a joint venture with the lender, a joint venture to which the mortgagor contributes her equity and managerial/development skills and the lender contributes the mortgage.

How to calculate the exact amount of the taxpayer's loss on foreclosure when the taxpayer's basis exceeds the foreclosure sales price is explained by the Tax Court by the following opinion in Aizawa v. Commissioner. n422

§ 12.16(a)(4) General Partnership: Matching the Forms Against the Factors.

We return now to the five variables investors and their advisors use in selecting an entity -- management, liability, transferability, continuity, and tax. We compare the most likely entity candidates against these factors, starting with the General Partnership.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(i) Management: All General Partners Run the Show.

Statutory Presumption. The Uniform Partnership Act, adopted by every state but Louisiana, defines a partnership as "an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners of a business for profit." n423 Every partner is presumed to be a co-owner and co-equal for management purposes.

Absent a written partnership agreement, whether a partnership exists is usually a question of fact, and depends on evidence "that the parties have entered into a contractual relation whereby they have combined their property, labor, and skill in an enterprise or business, as co-owners for the purpose of joint profit." n424

The partnership form is perfect for family-run businesses or when a few competent people who get along well together intend to share in management decisions and profits.

Each Partner Can Bind the Others. One drawback of a general partnership is that each partner may bind the others. As the Uniform Partnership Act, § 9, mandates:

Every partner is an agent of the partnership for the purpose of its business, and the act of every partner, including the execution in the partnership name of any instrument, for apparently carrying on in the usual way the business of the partnership of which he is a member binds the partnership, unless the partner so acting has in fact no authority to act for the partnership in the particular matter, and the person with whom he is dealing has knowledge of the fact that he has no such authority. n425

Law of Agency. By characterizing each partner as an agent of the partnership the U.P.A. incorporates the law of agency. Each partner becomes a general agent and can bind the partnership if she has real (express or implied) authority or apparent authority. Take the case of a real estate brokerage partnership that works out of an office building it owns. Each partner broker can bind the others when it comes to ordering office supplies or contracting for advertising listed properties. But whether an individual partner can sell the building turns on whether she would be "carrying on [business] in the usual way."

No One Partner Can Terminate by Selling Partnership Property Without the Consent of All Partners Unless the Business of the Partnership Was Buying and Selling Property; the Right to Manage Distinguished from the Rights to Liquidate or Terminate. A distinction needs to be made between a partner's interest in the partnership and that partner's interest in the partnership property. The partnership owns partnership property; the individual partners don't. Even if title is vested in the partners as individuals, if a court determines that the property in fact should belong to the partnership, it does.

The Uniform Partnership Act declares that a partner's right in specific partnership property is "not assignable except in connection with the assignment of rights of all the partners in the same property." n426 However, if the business of the partnership involves buying and selling property, then § 9 of the Act applies, and any partner can bind the others to a sale.

Whether one partner is legally entitled to bind others turns on whether a partner selling partnership property is "carrying on in the usual way." Here are two conflicting cases on the topic.

Case One. Three partners -- father, mother and son -- bought a motel. n427 Record title was in the parents' names only. The parents contracted to sell the motel without the son's consent. When the son refused to go along with the sale, the parents offered the buyers $10,000 to forget the whole thing. But they wouldn't. Instead, they filed suit for specific performance.

Persuading the court to annul the sale, the son argued that the purpose of the partnership had been to operate and manage a motel, not to buy and sell it. Earlier California courts had renounced the subtle distinction between partnerships formed for trading in real property and those formed for running a business. But this appellate court resuscitated the distinction when it set aside the sale of the motel on the theory that the partnership had been set up "for operating" only.

The court reckoned that the motel was the partnership's only asset. California Corporations Code § 15009(3)(c) provides that "partners acting without the approval of the remaining partners may not do any act which would make it impossible to carry on the ordinary business of the partnership." If the motel were sold, the partnership would have no business to run.

Of course, there was no way for the buyers to have known about the son's interest, or to have realized the sellers were engaged in a partnership which did not include among its purposes the selling of the motel. The buyers lost anyway.

Case Two. An Iowa court reached the opposite result and enforced the sale when only two of three partners' signed a contract to sell the partnership's sole property. The three had formed a partnership and bought a small apartment building. Their written partnership agreement didn't specify the business of the firm or indicate whether all of them had to sign conveyances of partnership real estate.

Four years later two partners signed a contract to sell the apartment house. A dispute arose with the buyers over title, and the sellers wanted to cancel the contract. The buyers sued for specific performance. The sellers defended, contending that all three partners' signatures would be needed to bind the partnership to a sale of its real estate.

The court ruled for the buyers:

> [O]ne partner can bind the partnership to a contract if he or she appears to act in the usual course of the partnership business. A contract to sell partnership real estate is no exception...."

> If... the business [of the partnership] was selling this property, the jury could have found the two partners were carrying on business in the usual way when they executed the "offer." n428

These two cases, turning ostensibly on the purposes of the partnership, show how difficult it can be to balance the interests of innocent third parties lured into a deal by a partner with apparent authority to bind the partnership against the interests of a partner not wanting an agent without actual authority to tie her to a deal she doesn't like.

A thoughtful commentator has recommended that partners be required to file a Statement of Partnership with the state, indicating, among other things, whether all the partners must concur in the sale of partnership real estate. n429 Prospective purchasers could then examine that statement to make sure the partner purporting to sell actually possessed the right to convey good title. n430 The hard decision would be whether courts should presume -- in the absence of a filed statement to the contrary -- that one or more partners had the authority to sell the business or the partnership's sole asset without the consent of all the partners, or that unless all the partners join in the sale of the partnership's sole asset, the sale is voidable.

Management Can Be Centralized By Agreement. Everything is negotiable as far as the arrangements partners can make among themselves for management, the allocation of profits and losses, and termination. The partnership vehicle offers great flexibility in allowing the partners to contract for precisely what they want from the deal and from each other. Typically, the managing partner or a majority of the partnership makes operational decisions, but unanimity or a supermajority vote is required for a sale or refinancing of all or substantially all of the partnership's assets.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(ii) Liability.

It Is Unlimited. Unlimited tort and contract liability for partnership acts is the big risk in the general partnership form. The Uniform Partnership Act (U.P.A.), §§ 14 n431 and 15, n432 binds a partnership to each partner's wrongful conduct and holds all partners personally liable jointly and severally.

State courts are divided on the issue of whether a creditor must first exhaust partnership assets before proceeding against the partners individually. n433 The R.U.P.A. would adopt the partnership-assets-first rule unless creditors were promised otherwise by the partners. n434

Mitigating the Risks of Unlimited Liability. The risks of limitless liability can be mitigated by the partners obtaining "non-recourse" agreements from secured lenders and all-risk insurance to protect both the partnership and the individual partners. In the case where some partners have the right to manage and others do not, "contribution and indemnity agreements" may be given by insiders to shelter outsiders.

The effects of unlimited liability might also be mitigated by a partner holding his or her interest in corporate form. The corporate partner is fully liable for partnership debts, but the shareholders of the corporate partner are only liable to the extent of their investment in the corporation. If the corporation contained no assets other than those owned by the partnership, creditors and other third parties could look no further than the corporate shell for recompense if things went badly. But astute and cautious lenders might require the principals in the deal to sign personal guarantees if the partnership assets were too thin to cover their loans.

Unlimited Liability and the Problem of Cost Overruns. In a development and construction project, a major cost overrun could easily subject participant investors to substantial personal liability. Participants in a general partnership are advised to:

> Determine if the budget is accurate; make sure the project has a construction lender; find out if the construction lender is confident there is enough money available to build the project; be sure the project will work; and if there is a mistake, know beforehand if there is a money partner willing and able to make up the shortfall. n435

Investors look to the partnership agreement to see how cost overruns are allocated. Partnership agreements often provide for additional contributions and buy/sell agreements.

Buy/Sell Agreements as a Way Out of Cost Overrun Deadlocks. The buy/sell, also called the "Russian roulette" clause, allows a partner wishing to sell to force non-moving partners to choose between two options: purchase the moving partner's interest at a price set by her, or sell his interest to her at that same price. This clause may become operative if the project runs over-budget and the developer won't or can't cover his share of the shortfall.

The buy/sell provision favors creditworthy partners with ready access to cash. Also, if one partner has signed loan guarantees it may not be possible for the other partner to find a substitute guarantor acceptable to the lender. Suppose a rich partner who also guaranteed the loan sets the buy/sell price well below fair value knowing that his co-partner doesn't have the money to pay it. Is he breaching the fiduciary duty one partner always owes another? Could the cash-strapped partner get a judicial partition sale of the property to prevent forfeiture? No and no. The buy/sell has been held enforceable even under these circumstances. n436

Buy/sells are not an elegant solution for an incomplete project. It can take a while to set the price and close the buy out. Meanwhile, development must continue apace and deadlocked issues somehow need to be resolved. Yet neither party will usually let the other call the shots until the buy-out is a "done deal."

"Squeeze Downs" as a Way to Force a Partner Out in an Overrun Situation. A less drastic variation allows the partner who doesn't want to put up more cash to retain her interest, but at a diluted value. These are called "squeeze downs" because those who do put up more money receive an increased interest in the partnership at the expense of those who don't. n437

Trading a General for a Limited Partnership Interest as an Answer to the Overrun Problem. Alternately, the reluctant partner could be allowed to become a limited partner, capping liability at the sum the partner had already invested with no further exposure if the project falters. n438

Take-Outs. One lawyer suggests the possibility of using a take-out agreement, in case one partner wants out early and the other prefers to proceed. Let the one who wants to stay with the project buy out the other's interest for the sum actually invested. n439

Cap With Take-Out. Another approach to overruns appears in the Haight Properties limited partnerships:

> The partnership agreement provided for an extra capital call of a minimum amount above and beyond the initial contribution. After that point [the general partner] would be on his own.
>
> In the event that a limited partner cannot meet [even his pre-agreed] share of the loss, the agreement provides for his interest to be purchased... at quite a minimal price. n440

§ 12.16(a)(4)(iii) Transferability.

What a Partner Has a Right to Sell. A general partner has three rights, only one of which is freely assignable -- absent a contrary agreement. Those rights are: (1) an interest in the specific partnership property; (2) the right to participate in the management of the business; and (3) the right to distributions (profits). A partner has no right to assign (1) an interest in specific property or (2) the right to share in management, just (3) the right to assign the partner's share of the partnership "take" as distributed. This is understandable because partners are all personally liable to the partnership for its debts. It would be unfair to "thrust upon the partners an assignee they did not choose, who could then participate in managing the partnership's business affairs and create liabilities for the partnership." n441

Continuing Liability of Transferor and Transferee. It isn't clear when partner A assigns to outsider B whether A remains liable for debts the partnership incurs after the assignment, n442 and whether B is liable for them since B never explicitly assumed them. A's claim for release is that A is no longer involved in running the business. But A has left A's former associates to shoulder future losses on their own. B isn't involved in decisionmaking either but will share in the gains on distribution, so why not the losses? B's inevitable answer: "If the other partners give me no voice in business policies why should I have to pay for their failures?"

Invalid Transfers. Those who deal with an individual partner to secure their personal loans with partnership property should beware. Accepting a mortgage from one partner who is mortgaging partnership property to secure an individual debt may give the unwary creditor, at best, that partner's interest in the partnership, possibly a right to partnership distributions, or absolutely no collateral of any kind. The outcomes seem to depend on the jurisdiction and whether the creditor was already involved with the partnership. n443

Statutory Provisions on Transferability: U.P.A./R.U.P.A.. The Uniform Partnership Act section on assignment:

> A conveyance by a partner of his interest in the partnership does not of itself dissolve the partnership, nor, as against the other partners in the absence of agreement, entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs, or to require any information or account of partnership transactions, or to inspect the partnership books; but it merely entitles the assignee to receive in accordance with his contract the profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled. n444

A few subtle changes to this provision are proposed in the Revised Uniform Partnership Act (R.U.P.A.): n445

> (1) A partnership interest would be made explicitly assignable.
>
> (2) Partners could by agreement restrict assignability.
>
> (3) A person ceases to be a partner on assigning her interest but this does not cause a "winding up" of the partnership.
>
> (4) The assignee becomes entitled to "allocations and distributions," not "profits." Some "distributions" of cash might not be "profits" either as the tax code defines "profit" or as that term is used by economists or business people.
>
> (5) The remaining partners would be obligated to honor the rights of the assignee as long as the partnership agreement hadn't prohibited assignment.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(iv) Continuity.

Basic Provisions. The death, withdrawal, or insanity of a general partner causes a dissolution of the general partnership unless the partnership agreement provides otherwise.

"Dissolution" under the U.P.A. doesn't mean that the partnership has terminated; it means that the relationship among the partners has changed. Dissolution begins the process of termination. The partners need to wind up partnership affairs (and pay off creditors) before termination becomes effective.

A Partner's Rights and Liabilities Following "Dissolution" or "Dissociation." One consequence of this "limbo" status between dissolution and termination is that the departing partner remains liable not only for partnership debts incurred before "dissolution," but also for any business begun while still a partner. Thus, an attorney named Walters, a partner in a law firm, was held liable for a malpractice judgment to a client he had never met, arising out of work done by another attorney in the firm after Walters had resigned. n446

The Revised Uniform Partnership Act would allow a partnership to continue even after a partner dissociated from it by allowing those remaining to buy out the interest of the departing partner if they elect not to wind up the partnership. n447

An endorsement may now be purchased from many title companies in which the insurer promises not to invoke the defense used in this case against an insured partnership.

Loan Provisions Encourage Partners to Modify the Statutory Presumptions Against Continuity. Loans usually specify that the death, withdrawal, or expulsion of a general partner is a condition of default. In the absence of provisions for dissolution, any partner may elect at will to dissolve the partnership, n448 or may seek dissolution by court order. n449 A partnership can avoid a breach of a loan's continuity clause by providing for continuity even if a partner dies, withdraws, or is expelled. The agreement should specify the continuing liability of a departing partner, whether the departing partner can still bind the partnership, and how her partnership account is to be valued and settled. Even if the agreement can't limit the liability of a departing partner to third parties, it can govern the obligations and provide for indemnity by the remaining partners to the departing one for post-departure events.

Continuity Can't Be Forced Upon a Partner Determined to Quit. Even if the partners had agreed to continue the venture for a definite term, the Uniform Partnership Act gives any partner the power to dissolve the partnership, and the dissolving partner is liable only to the other partners for damages caused by the wrongful, premature dissolution. One reason for this is to allow a person to put a lid on otherwise unlimited personal liability. Another is to provide for liquidation on death. A partner feeling the strains of mortality may welcome the thought that when the partner dies, the partnership will be dissolved, and the partner's share will go to the partner's heirs or estate.

Arrangements to Let Partners Out Without Dissolving the Partnership. The interest of an impatient or deceased partner can be liquidated without the partnership having to be dissolved.

> The death or bankruptcy of an inactive partner may constitute a dissolution of a partnership in a technical sense without in any way impairing the earning capacity or survivability of the business. In such instances the business is likely to be continued by the surviving partners much as before, with some provision being made for the interest of the inactive partner. n450

Partnership agreements often give those who want to keep the partnership going a right of first refusal or an option to buy a disenchanted or deceased partner's share.

Bankruptcy and Dissolution. Although § 31(5) of the Uniform Partnership Act provides for dissolution on bankruptcy, bankruptcy of a general partner doesn't automatically dissolve the partnership. n451 The debtor's trustee can probably reject or assume the general partner's interest in a partnership. n452 Under Bankruptcy Code § 365(b), a debtor's executory contracts may not be automatically terminated. These include the debtor's interest under a partnership agreement. n453 A general partner's trustee might be able to assume a partnership agreement even if the agreement provided that a partnership would dissolve if a general partner filed bankruptcy. This is to make sure that the debtor isn't shortchanged out of the fair value of the partnership interest. However, Code § 365(e)(2)(A) makes room for parties who contract for personal services and non-delegable duties to terminate their relationship to the debtor who files bankruptcy. The partners probably can't be forced to continue doing business as a partner of the bankrupt debtor or the debtor's trustee, but they would have to give the debtor full value for her interest if they invoked a bankruptcy dissolution provision.

Mike Sfregola, a Los Angeles real estate lawyer, explains the consequences of trying to continue a partnership when a debtor's trustee tries to step into the shoes of a bankrupt general partner: "The remaining partners get a cautious trustee in place of a talented entrepreneur." An alternative Mr. Sfregola sometimes suggests to his investor clients is to enter a management contract with the developer partner. "Then the bankruptcy trustee would be kept out of the inner circle of entity decision makers. If the developer went broke, the investors would be free to find a new talent and keep things going."

§ 12.16(a)(4)(v) Tax.

The general partnership form passes all three of Professor McCaffery's tests. First, the partnership isn't taxed at the entity level. All of its income, gains, losses, deductions, and credits are passed directly to the individual partners. n454 It files a tax return but pays no taxes on it.

Second, gains and losses can be allocated to partners in different amounts. When real estate generates large tax losses, partnerships are a preferred form for real estate activity because the losses can be passed to the individual partners. Partnership gains and losses are passed directly to the individual partners. n455

Third, within limits, the partnership form allows flexibility so that losses may be allocated to some partners and gains to others, or operating income to some and capital gains to others. Gains and losses can be allocated to different partners in different amounts as long as the allocation has "substantial economic effect" other than tax savings. n456 The allocation of tax benefits for partnerships is enormously complicated and is a suitable topic for a separate course or treatise. Generally, however, the allocation of tax losses follows the ratios of capital each partner contributes to the partnership. This allocation survives until the tax losses equal the amount of capital invested in the entity. Thereafter, losses may be allocated equally among the partners. n457

Allocations disproportionate to each partner's capital contribution are usually honored as long as there is a good chance eventually that the partners who benefitted from the tax shelter of depreciation will have to pay it back out of sale proceeds. No partner can have a tax loss greater than her basis in the partnership. n458 "Basis" includes cash or other property the partner contributed to the partnership, plus the partner's share of partnership debt.

A partner can't claim a share of partnership debt who is not liable on the mortgage note if some partners are liable. In that case, only the partners "at risk" on the mortgage can depreciate the share of the partnership property paid for with borrowed funds.

All of these advantages will be lost if the IRS decides to treat a partnership under state law as a corporation for tax purposes. It will do this when the characteristics of a corporation have been built into the partnership agreement.

Those are: (1) the association has more than one participant, (2) they are engaged in a business for profit, (3) there is limited liability, (4) indefinite continuity, (5) centralized management, and (6) free transferability of interests. n459 An entity with two or fewer of these will ordinarily be taxed as a partnership. n460

The general partnership escapes tax at the entity level by qualifying on the last four of the six relevant counts. The general partnership offers no shield against liability and, as an organizational form, extends to every partner the right to participate in management decisions. So it has no centralized management and no limited liability the way corporations usually do. Further, continuity could be limited by a distant but fixed termination point. Transferability might be blocked by a requirement that partners need the consent of their copartners or a certain percentage of them to sell.

§ 12.16(a)(4)(vi) Aggregate or Entity?

Conceptually, the partnership for some purposes is an entity distinct from the individual partners. Title to real property is held by the partnership, not the individual partners; legal actions can be brought in the name of the partnership; the partnership can buy title and casualty insurance for the benefit of partnership property; and judgments can be levied against partnership debt.

For other purposes the partnership is treated as nothing more than an aggregate of individuals. Individual partners are taxed as though the partnership didn't exist apart from themselves; each partner is fully liable for partnership debts; and the partnership dissolves when a partner departs.

§ 12.16(a)(5) Incentive Management Agreements (I.M.A.s) as an Alternative to a Partnership Interest.

Under an I.M.A. a developer becomes a manager and is paid a fixed fee for development and management, an overhead reimbursement or fee, and an incentive fee based on the financial performance of the project.

The money partners enjoy total legal priority over the developer if the developer has only a management contract and no interest in the entity that owns the property being developed or managed. The money partners or owners receive all the tax benefits of ownership. Their interest is freely marketable without the consent of the developer/manager. They can control the operation and marketing of the project subject only to the developer's rights under the I.M.A. contract. They can more readily replace the manager/developer than if he were a general partner. Of course, they also have to bear all the losses themselves. They could try allocating some losses to the manager by contract, but then they risk having the I.M.A. recharacterized as a partnership. n461

The idea of a "money" partner giving the operating partner a contract, and not an interest in the ownership entity, is getting a boost from bankruptcy worries, as many developers go under and Mr. Sfregola's prophesies come true. The I.M.A. can probably be made lawfully terminable as a contract for personal services, under Bankruptcy Code § 368(e)(2)(A).

The move to I.M.A.s from partnerships also signals the current shift to the position that "who has cash is king." Developers accept I.M.A.s in place of interests in general partnerships because they don't have much choice. They appreciate the risk that if they and their money partners come to an impasse, they may be shuffled out of the deal. Most developers prefer being a general partner unless they are sure the deal is doomed from the start. Then an I.M.A. might look pretty good with its immunity to downside risk.

§ 12.16(a)(6) Tenancy in Common.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(i) Management.

Each cotenant owns an undivided interest in the entire property and they may deal with their undivided shares as they please. A cotenant may manage the share separately subject to a cotenancy agreement. Absent agreement, unanimous consent is the hallmark of decisionmaking in a tenancy in common.

> When a [number] of investors acquire property as tenants in common, [they] normally enter [into] a cotenancy agreement to establish management rights, provide for the sharing of profits and losses, and deal with related matters. In content and scope, such agreements often resemble partnership agreements. n462

Tenancy in common decisionmaking can be cumbersome, and often proves fragile.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(ii) Limited Liability.

The tenancy in common form is rarely used by real estate investors, despite its simplicity. n463 It does have advantages over the partnership form. A cotenant can't act or contract on behalf of other cotenants without their prior consent or ratification. Tenants in common are not liable for each other's debts even if those debts were incurred for the benefit of the cotenancy property. "Consequently, the tenancy in common generally affords an insulation from liabilities created by co-venturers not found in a general partnership." n464

While tenants in common usually escape all liability for the acts of their cotenants, liability for most environmental laws is joint and several. This puts each cotenant at risk for the full cost of bringing the cotenancy property into compliance with such laws as C.E.R.C.L.A.

Further, all cotenants would have to sign a note and mortgage to get the maximum loan on cotenancy property. In turn, each could insist that a foreclosing mortgagee join all of them and foreclose all of their interests "for the reason that the sale of an undivided interest does not ordinarily bring as good a proportionate price as a sale of the entirety." n465 If a cotenant pays off a mortgage that was a lawful lien on the entire property, she has a right of contribution from the cotenants whose interests in the cotenancy she rescued from foreclosure. n466

§ 12.16(a)(6)(iii) Community Property v. Cotenancy.

There is one situation for which the tenancy in common may merit more frequent use than it receives. A happily married couple in a community property state might be better off dividing their community property into separate shares and forming a cotenancy.

Take the case in which one of the pair is a high-income earner but subject to potentially devastating tort liability well beyond reasonably insurable limits -- an accountant, architect, engineer, or surgeon. Debts of one become debts of the community. An outraged jury could render a judgment that would deplete community property assets. But the debts of an individual cotenant reach only that cotenant's share of the community property. Of course, this strategy will be defeated if the transfer takes place after the liability accrues or is an attempt to defraud anticipated creditors.

Additionally, a person who sells or encumbers community property without the consent of the spouse not only conveys incomplete title -- but the spouse may not even be able to convey his or her share of the title. California courts have held that to allow one spouse to sell or mortgage his or her share without the consent of the other would be to force the unwilling spouse into undivided ownership with a stranger. n467

When community property is transformed into cotenancy by consent, each spouse is free to deal with an undivided one-half. Unanimity isn't required. Partition of cotenancy property is a matter of right. n468

Community property, though, possesses an enormous tax advantage when one of the owners dies. The basis of the property is stepped up to its fair market value on that day. This means the survivor can sell the property a day later and avoid paying a capital gains tax on the amount by which the property appreciated during the time the decedent owned it. n469 A surviving cotenant enjoys no such tax advantage.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(iv) Transferability.

The transfer of a partnership interest conveys only a right to partnership assets, not to management and control. A cotenant is able to transfer complete title. The transferee becomes an owner of an undivided share of the cotenancy property.

Written cotenancy agreements usually restrict transfer. Often each tenant enjoys a right of first refusal or a right of first offer -- to match the best price a selling cotenant has obtained from a third party or would accept for the cotenants interest in the cotenancy property. Sometimes the price is set by an appraised value, a formula, or an arbitration proceeding to determine fair value. If the project is for new construction, cotenancy agreements often bar transfer until the project is completed except at a buy-out price well below the cotenant's actual cost. n470 These restrictions on transfer have to be drafted so as to avoid state laws against unreasonable restraints on alienation. n471

Restrictions on transfer might be drafted to preserve each cotenant's legitimate expectations of the other. An investor cotenant might not be allowed to transfer except to another of "comparable" or "bank acceptable" credit. A managing or development cotenant might be limited to selling only to someone experienced in managing the type of asset the cotenants own.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(v) Continuity.

If the tenants do not get along, state laws give each and every cotenant the right to have the property partitioned, sold, and the proceeds divided among the cotenants according to the percentage of their original contribution. The right to partition may not be fully waivable. n472 On the death of a cotenant, if the decedent's estate is difficult to untangle in probate, it may not be easy to sell cotenancy property pending the probate outcome. Each cotenant's signature will be required on a deed to an informed buyer.

§ 12.16(a)(6)(vi) Tax.

On Professor McCaffery's three-part rating scale, tenancies in common fare well on the first count. The tenancy in common isn't taxed as an entity; all its gains and losses are passed directly to the individual cotenants. Each cotenant pays tax on the cotenant's undivided share of the cotenancy property.

Matters are more complicated on the second and third counts, concerning flexibility and directing gains and losses, and in allocating tax losses. As Madison and Zinman explain in Modern Real Estate Financing:

> The following are the advantages of the tenancy in common as compared to both partnership and corporate taxations:
>
> > i. Any election affecting the computation of taxable income may be made separately by each tenant. For example, one co-owner may capitalize carrying charges (see I.R.C. § 266) or (under prior law) claim accelerated depreciation while another may elect to currently deduct or "expense" such charges or claim straight-line depreciation.
> >
> > ii. No partnership return is required for a tenancy in common. Thus, if a tenant is audited, it is less likely that his co-owner will be audited, since there is no return filed that links them to one another.
>
> * * *
>
> The following are the disadvantages of a tenancy in common as compared to both partnership and corporate taxations:
>
> > 1. Each tenant must separately report only her proportionate part of net operating income or net gain from the sale or exchange of the property. For example, if one tenant pays a larger share of the total expense than do the others, she is entitled to deduct only her pro rata share. The excess payment is treated as an advance to her co-owners. E.g., Estate of Webb v. Commissioner, 30 T.C. 1202 (1958), acq. 1959-2 C.B. 3.
> >
> > 2. A corollary disadvantage lies in the fact that tenants in common, unlike partners and joint venturers, may not reallocate income and deduction items such as depreciation in a ratio at variance with their interest in the common-owned property. n473

A tenant in common yearning to take advantage of the tax-free exchange rules n474 will find doing it far simpler than a partner who seeks that option when the co-partners aren't interested in rolling over the investment into a "like kind" venture. The co-tenant "owns" an undivided "property" interest. The partner "owns" a share of a partnership which holds legal title to real estate. The I.R.S. has been hostile to partners using § 1031 to trade "shares" in one venture for "shares" in another. The most troubling tax aspect of the tenancy in common form is the excellent chance that the I.R.S. will treat the tenancy in common as a partnership for tax purposes. Treasury regulations give the Service latitude in treating any "syndicate, group, pool, joint venture, or other unincorporated organization" as a partnership. The Service does not regard itself as bound by state law definitions of partnership in deciding whether to classify an entity as a partnership. n475 I.R.S. regulations provide that cotenants will be taxed as partners if they actually engage in a business instead of merely investing in property. n476 Co-owners of an apartment house, for instance, could be taxed as tenants in common unless they provided "noncustomary" services -- meals or housekeeping.

§ 12.16(a)(7) Joint Venture.

A joint venture differs from a partnership because it is usually formed just to carry out one project in a brief time. n477 Otherwise its characteristics are either those of a tenancy in common or a partnership. It is usually treated as a partnership, though, both under state property laws, and by the Internal Revenue Service in applying tax laws. n478

§ 12.16(a)(8) Corporation.

When the corporate form is used for real estate ventures each participant subscribes to shares in proportion to its capital contribution. Often they enter shareholder agreements further defining their rights and responsibilities. But the corporate form is less flexible than the partnership form in many respects. For instance, a corporate stockholder's rate of return on investment can't be as easily varied over the different phases of a project as the allocation of partnership gains and losses can be.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(i) Management.

The management of a corporation is almost always centralized in a board of directors elected by the shareholders.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(ii) Liability.

Limited Liability. The big advantage to the corporation is the limited liability it affords the investor who is a shareholder. n479 Shareholders are at risk only for the capital they invest -- nothing beyond that except in quite unusual circumstances.

In legal theory the corporation is an entity totally distinct from its shareholders, officers, managers, and employees.

> The corporate shareholder's potential liability... is generally limited to the amount of his investment, regardless of his management activity... Thus, where the principal investors intended to be active in managing the business, and the venture involves a relatively high degree of risk, limited liability may well be the key non-tax consideration favoring use of the corporate vehicle. n480

Limited liability wasn't always a characteristic of the corporate form. It wasn't woven into the fabric of English corporate law until 1855. n481 In the United States the existence of the corporation and the scope of shareholder liability is up to each state, "upon such terms and conditions as States may think proper to impose." n482 Starting in the 19th century, states enacted liberal incorporation rules. They wanted to make it easy for all business people who wanted to use the corporate form to do so without having to get special charters from the state. States also sought to make their laws competitive with each other to attract corporate activity. n483

Usually a parent corporation can manage to free itself of the debts of wholly-owned subsidiaries. n484 With some exceptions, the corporate form also protects successor corporations from liability when one corporation sells its assets to another and dissolves. The exceptions: (1) the successor agrees to assume the predecessor's liabilities, expressly or impliedly; (2) the transaction is a fraudulent attempt to escape liability; (3) the transaction is a de facto merger or consolidation; (4) the successor is a "mere continuation of the predecessor." n485

How Limited Liability Can be Lost. For shareholders to maintain their limited liability status, they must contribute a reasonable amount of capital. The rule of limited liability yields when a corporation is found to be undercapitalized. n486 Wise creditors don't depend on court determinations of whether a corporation is adequately capitalized. They frequently insist that key shareholders pledge their own credit as a condition to the company borrowing funds. n487

Shareholders must actually form a corporation, and keep its records. The corporate form requires the filing of articles of incorporation with a state agency, the drafting of bylaws, and the documenting of the organizational meetings of the directors. Most states, including California, allow small corporations (called "close Cs") to opt out of a certain amount of formality.

A lender to a corporation (or an entity) can become fully and personally liable for entity debts by engaging too actively in the management of the entity.

The cloak of limited liability is only as thick as state laws make it. For instance, in New York and Wisconsin, shareholders are liable for corporate obligations for employee wages. n488

Increasingly, the corporate shield of limited liability is being punctured by courts in cases arising out of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (C.E.R.C.L.A.). An intricate jurisprudence separates the situation in which federal statutes override state corporate law rules from those in which federal law is deemed subordinate to state law. n489 A description of those rules is beyond the scope of this text except to note that the corporate veil has been pierced and individual officers and employees have been held liable under C.E.R.C.L.A. Courts rely on 42 U.S.C. § 9607, establishing liability for "operators" and "persons" who illegally dispose of toxic of hazardous wastes:

> A person who illegally directs the dumping of toxic waste into a river at midnight cannot defend against personal liability on the ground that he was acting as an employee of a corporation. Limited liability has never protected employers or agents from personal liability for illegal acts. n490

Some courts have held parent companies liable for the C.E.R.C.L.A. violation of their subsidiaries, n491 and successor corporations for acts of their predecessors which violate the Superfund law. n492 In any event, shareholders have yet to be held liable under federal environmental laws for violations committed by the companies in which they hold stock.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(iii) Dissolution.

Following the dissolution of a corporation, shareholders are free of claims arising after dissolution although the dissolved corporation may not be. Not surprisingly, some real estate developers form a separate corporation for each project undertaken, dissolving it when the project is completed.

Dissolution limits shareholder liability unless shareholders got corporate assets that should have been reserved for potential claims known to the corporate directors before dissolution. Post-dissolution exposure remains, though, in many states for assets of the corporation discovered after dissolution and for claims against the corporation's insurers. n493

§ 12.16(a)(8)(iv) Transferability.

The ease with which corporate shares may be pledged or sold, or new shares issued, makes this the most liquid of the various ownership forms. A shareholder who wants out simply sells the shares.

Yet there is more to selling out, viewed practically, than the formal legal rules governing it. The practical marketability of an interest in any real estate venture, whether held in corporate or partnership form, depends on underlying value. In a close corporation as in a partnership, the market for shares may vary. Minority interests may be especially hard to sell. n494 So a minority owner eager to exit from a corporation may need a court partition and sale of the entire corporate property in order to retrieve the fair value of the minority interest.

Individual shareholders can pledge their shares to secure personal loans. The corporation can use its shares as security for loans to the firm. It is a gross over-simplification, though, to say that the same firm, by incorporating, can raise capital from outsiders with much greater facility than if it were a partnership. Just because a business has a certificate of incorporation, it does not follow that the public will buy its shares or that lenders will accept them as good collateral for loans. Furthermore, often the principal participants -- whether in a corporation or partnership -- have to sign the firm's note to its major lenders. Hence, in many cases there is little difference between the partnership and corporate form in raising additional equity money through debt. n495

One clear advantage, though, for the lender to a corporation is that corporate borrowers are exempt from the protection of usury laws in thirty states. Partnership borrowers are not.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(v) Continuity.

A corporation has perpetual duration and succession in its corporate name. n496 A corporation survives the death, retirement, legal incompetence, or bankruptcy of a shareholder. It survives the sale of even a majority interest.

> However, a sharp distinction should be drawn between legal continuity and economic continuity. If the key shareholder and manager of a corporate business should die, it may be impractical to continue the business despite the perpetual duration of a corporation. There simply may be no one to run the business. n497

§ 12.16(a)(8)(vi) Bankruptcy.

A parent development corporation with subsidiary projects may risk potential liability unless the subs are operated separately and independently from the parent. Sister companies are better than subs.

> A bankruptcy court can order a substantive consolidation. Substantive consolidation is a term of art. If a subsidiary files for bankruptcy then the creditors may petition the court to bring in the parent corporation through a substantive consolidation. If they succeed, the assets of the parent company will become available to creditors.
>
> Sister corporations are harder to consolidate. It doesn't mean the creditors won't try anyway. But the fact that the parent owns all or at least 80 percent of the stock of the subsidiary and is therefore considered to be the controlling entity can be devastating. n498

Haight Properties, a development and management corporation, deals primarily with multi-hundred-unit apartment complexes. It forms sister entities to minimize parent/subsidiary liability. Each of its apartment complexes is held and run by a separate limited partnership. These limited partnerships enter management contracts with Haight Properties to operate the apartments. Haight Properties owns nothing; it is a management company only. Philip Haight is the general partner of each limited partnership. Why this complex structure? Richard Wolff, Vice President of Acquisitions for

Haight Properties, explains:

> Were we to buy all the properties through one umbrella corporation, and any property went bad, it would be a drain on all the other properties. So we form a separate limited partnership for each with different limited partners for each entity and Philip Haight as the General Partner. If one project declares bankruptcy, there is no way to bring in a parent corporation or deplete the assets of the other subsidiaries to pay its debts. The only one personally liable is Philip Haight. His liability is minimized through non-recourse loans and personal liability insurance. n499

§ 12.16(a)(8)(vii) Tax.

The Reason the Corporate Form Has Little Appeal to Real Estate Investors. The corporation fails two of Professor McCaffery's three tests. First, of the potential entities discussed here only the C corporation is subject to taxation of the same earnings twice: (1) a corporate tax as corporate profits are accrued, and (2) a personal income tax when earnings are distributed to shareholders as dividends.

There are ways for corporations to minimize double taxation. Corporate earnings funneled to shareholders as salaries, rent, or interest are deductible expenses for the corporation. n500 But the I.R.S. permits deductions only in reasonable amounts. Corporations can seek to build up their appreciated value and avoid the "double" tax by paying small or no dividends. Again, the I.R.S. sets limits to this strategy.

Second, the corporation's taxable income (adjusted by applying certain tax accounting rules) is attributable only to the corporation. Tax losses and depreciation deductions of a C corporation can only be used by the corporation to offset its own taxable income. They can't be passed through to the tax returns of individual shareholders.

Third, however, the corporation has considerable flexibility in allocating different types of income to discrete groups of shareholders. For instance, a C corporation can issue preferred stock with guaranteed dividends that might be quite attractive to pension funds and other entities because they are exempt from taxation. The same corporation could distribute dividends only sparingly to holders of common stock who would look forward to selling their shares at appreciated value taxed at lower capital gains rates.

Why Some Real Estate Partnerships Have Converted to Corporations. The 1986 Tax Reform Act did give some real estate professionals reason to take a second look at the C corporation form. The rules that restrict the deductibility of passive activity losses to passive activity income can be avoided through the corporate form. A firm can deduct losses from rental real estate against income derived from real property trades or business, including fees it earns managing property. For this reason some real estate firms that had been doing business as partnerships in the 1980's heydays of commercial property development are now becoming corporations. Their losses from properties in their current portfolios are large enough to shelter their management fee income.

Taxation of a Decedent Shareholder: Partnership is Better Than a Corporation. The estate or heirs of a corporate shareholder are treated far less favorably than the heirs or estate of a property-owning individual or general partnership. If the underlying property has to be sold in order to raise cash to pay the tax, and the property is held by a corporation, there would be a tax on the gain at the corporate level. The heir would also have to pay an estate or gift tax on the value of the shares. For tax purposes the estate would be valued based on what the decedent had paid for the shares.

If the decedent had held the property individually or in a partnership, the beneficiary of the estate would be taxed on the value of the underlying property at the date of the decedent's death. Had the property appreciated considerably since the decedent acquired it, that appreciation would escape estate taxation. If the beneficiary had to sell the property to pay the estate tax, and the property were held by a partnership, the partnership would not have to pay tax on the gain. n501

This is why some lawyers warn their elderly clients to avoid the corporate form for holding assets that have appreciated greatly in value. Other lawyers recommend the corporate form as an ideal estate planning device. Clients give their legatees $10,000 worth of stock each year to deplete the estate incrementally and thus avoid estate taxes. There is no gift tax on annual gifts of $10,000 or less.

§ 12.16(a)(9) Limited Partnership.

> If a general partnership is an attractive entity to use for the ownership, development, and operation of [a] real estate [venture] then, in many cases, a limited partnership may prove irresistible. n502

The limited partnership form, a creature of statute, n503 offers the attractions of centralized management and limited liability found in the corporation with the tax advantages of a partnership, i.e., no entity level (double) taxation.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(i) Management.

The management of a limited partnership is conducted by the general partner(s). Even if the general partners employ a management company or investment advisors to handle day-to-day operations, they usually retain for themselves the right to mortgage, lease, refinance, or sell the realty.

A limited partnership usually exists to consolidate control in one or a few general partners. Though central control is often advantageous, it is also an obstacle when the investor limiteds want to remove the general, and the general doesn't want to depart quietly.

The partnership agreement, like any other contract, cannot be modified unless all contracting parties agree. n504 Limited partners have no authority under the U.L.P.A. to remove a general partner who doesn't want to go unless the limiteds can prove the general committed fraud. n505 The partnership agreement may allow removal of the general by a majority or supermajority vote of the limiteds. But even then it may take an amendment of the agreement to substitute a new general partner for the old one. If the partnership agreement can be amended only with the consent of all the partners, the limited partners may be stuck with their unwanted general. n506 To avoid gridlock, limited partnership agreements can be drafted to give the limited partners the right to replace the managing general by majority vote. But if the general partner resists replacement, even with such a provision, a court battle can take years while the partnership assets are mismanaged and depleted. n507

§ 12.16(a)(9)(ii) Liability.

To form a limited partnership there must be at least two parties, one general partner and one limited partner. The general partner in a limited partnership must be subject to unlimited liability. In the language of the Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act (1976), § 403: "[a] general partner of a limited partnership has the liabilities of a partner in a partnership without limited partners to persons other than the partnership and the other partners." n508

The general partner in a limited partnership need not be a person; a specially formed corporation will suffice. If the corporation acting as the general partner of a limited partnership is capitalized too thinly, it could be disregarded, exposing its owners to unlimited liability. Also the I.R.S. might see this as good cause to recharacterize the entire partnership as a corporation. The I.R.S. insists that the corporate general partner in a limited partnership be adequately capitalized.

Some foreign investors teaming up with local developers like the limited partnership form precisely because it puts the developer at risk while limiting the risk of the absentee investor. In other cases, the foreign investor becomes the general partner so it can control and manage the property while the domestic owner becomes a limited partner with an opportunity to share in cash flow and profits. This arrangement is sometimes used when the foreign investor is buying a project built by the domestic partners. Instead of paying all cash, some of the purchase price is deferred by converting it into a limited partnership interest. The domestic partner might have gotten a lien against the property for the balance of the purchase price, but that would make acquisition financing more difficult to secure and could also give the domestic partner, the seller, less incentive to provide ongoing advice to the foreign buyer.

A promoter selling limited partnership interests to large numbers of relatively naive investors may secure himself against the limitless liability of a general partner by forming a shell corporation with no substantial assets by the general. A corporate-shell-as-general is also used in deals where a small number of investors are seeking limited partnership status to restrict the potential claims of third parties.

The limited partner in a limited partnership is usually only liable for losses up to the amount of her contribution to the partnership under the Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act (R.U.L.P.A.), n509 which has been enacted in 43 states. n510 In some jurisdictions the limit of liability extends to cash distributions they receive from the partnership.

Limited partners have little control over the operation and management of the partnership and its real estate. If they succeed in exerting control, they risk tort and contract liability since these follow management control in a limited partnership. A limited partner who plays too active a part in the business risks becoming liable as if she were a general partner.

The R.U.L.P.A. gives the limited partner a more extended role and expanded approval rights. It also protects a limited partner by insulating her from liability unless the disappointed creditor had reasonably believed, "based upon the limited partner's conduct, that the limited partner [was] a general partner." n511

§ 12.16(a)(9)(iii) Continuity.

The death of a limited partner or a transfer of a limited partnership interest will not cause dissolution of the entity. n512 The limited partnership is dissolved on the death, dissolution, or bankruptcy of the general partner unless the partnership certificate provides for survival of the partnership or the surviving partners agree to it.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(iv) Transferability.

A limited partner may freely assign or sell her shares and becomes entitled to all the rights of her assignor. n513 The price she gets for them depends on whether anyone is out there making a market for such interests. When Wall Street brokerage firms have organized trading in real estate limited partnerships, usually called Master Limited Partnerships, they created a market for partnership interests. Absent such arrangements, the limited partner's best way out may be through a sale to the remaining partners, governed, perhaps, by a buy-sell or right of first refusal agreement among them.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(v) Tax.

With careful tax planning the limited partnership can satisfy all of Professor McCaffery's tests. First, there is no tax at the entity level unless the entity is treated as an "association" and subject to the corporate tax. n514

The regulations specify six criteria. The first two are that it have associates and the objective of carrying on a business and dividing the gain. All limited partnerships do. The tax challenge is to make sure the limited partnership possesses no more than two of the remaining four: centralized management, continuity of life, limited liability, and free transferability.

Centralized management and limited liability are what distinguish limited from general partnerships. So these characteristics, too, are usually built-in. Counsel is left with continuity of life and transferability. By placing limits on these they secure the pass-through tax status of the limited partnership. Continuity is prevented by specifying a definite but remote date of termination. Transferability is restrained by the partnership usually requiring the limited partner to obtain the general's approval for any sale or disposition of her interest.

Requiring approval would be a good idea anyway because if 50% or more of the total interest in the partnership capital and profits is sold or transferred in any tax year, the partnership is deemed to have been terminated for tax purposes -- and all partners become liable for their capital gains tax on the imputed sale, even those who didn't actually intend to sell. n515

Second, tax losses are passed directly to the partners.

Third, there is considerable flexibility in the allocation of gains and losses subject to the complex rules governing partnership allocations described earlier. Within the bounds of the "substantial economic effect" rule, n516 tax losses can be allocated among partners that do not reflect their capital accounts.

In order for a limited partner to deduct depreciation attributable to property bought with borrowed funds, none of the partners must be personally liable on the debt or all of them must be. If none are liable, and the loan is "qualified non-recourse," then each partner may depreciate her share of the property -- even that portion bought with loan proceeds.

> Example: G is a general partner and L a limited partner in a partnership formed to acquire an apartment building costing $1 million. Each makes a cash contribution of $100,000 and the partnership obtains a mortgage in the amount of $800,000 to fund the balance of the construction costs. Under the terms of the partnership agreement they are to share profits equally, but L's liabilities are limited to the extent of his contribution. Neither the partnership nor either of the partners assumes any liability on the mortgage, and the loan is obtained from a "qualified" lender who regularly makes loans and who is not related to the partnership.
>
> Results: The basis of G and L for their partnership interest is increased from $100,000 to $500,000, since each partner's share of the partnership liability has increased by $400,000. However, had G assumed personal liability by not insisting on an exculpatory provision in the mortgage note, G's basis for her interest would have increased by $800,000, and L's basis would remain at $100,000. n517

§ 12.16(a)(10) S Corporation.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(i) Tax.

The Internal Revenue Code, Subchapter S, allows certain corporations to avoid the entity level corporate tax. All the S corporation's income, losses, deductions, and credits are passed through to shareholders. Real estate investors seldom use the S corporation form for two reasons. First, in order to elect Subchapter S status, a corporation must meet the statutory definition of a "small business corporation." n518

> (1) A corporation created or organized in the U.S.,
>
> (2) which is an eligible corporation, n519
>
> (3) has 35 or fewer shareholders, each of whom is either an individual, n520 decedent's estate, estate in bankruptcy of individual, or eligible trust,
>
> (4) has no nonresident alien shareholder, and

(5) has only one class of stock. n521

Compare the above restrictions with the flexibility of the partnership format. Nonresident aliens can be general or limited partners in a partnership. There are no restrictions on the number of partners in a partnership. A partnership can have as few as two partners or as many as ten thousand. Several of the master limited partnerships on the New York Stock Exchange have more than ten thousand partners, although they are now generally taxed as C corporations as a result of an amendment to the I.R.C. A partner can be an individual, corporation, trust, estate, or partnership. n522

The second reason real estate people steer clear of electing S corporation status is that the S corporation is not good for passing tax losses attributable to borrowed (leveraged) debt through to shareholders. The tax losses that can be passed to shareholders cannot exceed each shareholder's adjusted basis in the shares. That basis is what the shareholder paid for the shares and any amount the shareholder loaned to the corporation. The shareholder cannot take into basis any allocable share of the corporation's nonrecourse mortgage debt.

> In other words, while a partner is able to obtain a step-up in its adjusted basis equal to its share of mortgage liabilities, a Subchapter S shareholder cannot. Therefore, in the case of a typical leveraged real estate investment that is funded by non-recourse financing an investor may not be able to take full advantage of its share of tax losses if the venture is organized as a Subchapter S corporation. n523

Another tax snare awaits the unprepared S corporation shareholder. The investor in a profitable S corporation will be taxed on corporate earnings, even those the company elects not to distribute. An investor with the tax liability and no compensating dividend may be caught short of cash. Hence, the S corporation investor needs to know how corporate dividend policy is to be made, and who will be making it.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(ii) Management.

The S corporation, like a C corporation, provides great flexibility for keeping some investors from interfering in the operation of the business and for tagging others for key management functions.

> Under the Uniform Limited Partnership Act, consent of a certain percentage of the limited partners to certain actions of the general partner is required... n524 Consent would not be necessary in the S corporation context. n525

The S corporation can also provide an opportunity for substantial shareholder participation in management without the investor risking unlimited liability as would a limited partner who exercises too much control over partnership business.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(iii) Transferability.

If the sale of S corporation stock isn't restricted by agreement, the eligibility of S corporation status could be in jeopardy. Any S corporation shareholder could transfer to an unqualified shareholder such as a trust or nonresident alien. This is why "S" corporation documentation usually invalidates transfers that would result in loss of the "S" corporation status. Like "C" corporations, transfers may also be subject to securities laws. n526

One point in the S Corporation's favor: although it is unlikely, if over fifty percent of the total interest in capital and profits of a partnership are sold or exchanged within a twelve-month period, the partnership will automatically terminate for tax purposes. n527 In an S Corporation, the owners of over one-half of the corporation's shares can elect to terminate its S Corporation status and convert it to a true corporation. n528

§ 12.16(a)(10)(iv) Continuity.

Like all corporations, the S corporation has the advantage of surviving the death, removal, or disability of any or all shareholders and executives -- subject to the rules restricting shareholder eligibility.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(v) Liability.

The S corporation shareholders enjoy limited liability. Limited partners also benefit from limited liability. But even when the limited partnership deploys a corporate entity as its sole general partner, that corporation must meet certain net worth requirements. n529 An S corporation avoids even this limited scrutiny -- except that under state law, any corporation too thinly capitalized risks being unveiled.

§ 12.16(a)(11) The Limited Liability Company.

Many states are now considering, and fifteen have already enacted, n530 a hybrid form called a limited liability company (L.L.C.), a Wyoming partnership, a limitada (modeled after a South American business form), a limited partnership association or a partnership association. n531 This could become "the dominant form of business for non-public companies." n532

This form combines the advantages of a corporation with none of its disadvantages. The limited partnership company (L.L.C.) is a non-corporate entity in which all owners (known as members) enjoy limited liability for obligations of the company. n533 It avoids the corporate income tax while protecting members' personal assets against unlimited liability. Unlike a limited partnership, there need be no general partner with limitless liability for partnership debts. It has none of the I.R.C. drawbacks of S corporations.

L.L.C. members are directly liable to relying on creditors for the capital contributions they pledged, but didn't pay to the L.L.C. Not all state L.L.C. laws require that creditors prove reliance to obtain those pledged contributions. But that is the limit of L.L.C. member liability -- the sums pledged to the L.L.C.

All partners are entitled to share in the management of the company "in proportion to their contribution to the capital of the limited liability company." n534 There need be no board of directors as in a corporation. But L.L.C.s can have centralized management if their members desire it. Unlike limited partners in a limited partnership, L.L.C. partners don't risk limitless liability by participating in management.

L.L.C. interests are transferable, but the assignee can't participate in management decisions without unanimous consent of the remaining members. n535

The L.L.C. dissolves "when the period fixed for the duration of the limited liability company shall expire," by unanimous consent, or on the "death, retirement, resignation, expulsion, bankruptcy" of a member unless the remaining members elect to continue the L.L.C. n536 A Wyoming L.L.C. may be organized for a period not exceeding 30 years. n537

In 1988 the I.R.S. ruled that a Wyoming L.L.C. would be taxed as a partnership. n538 Thus, properly structured L.L.C.s will be treated as pass-through entities for federal income tax purposes.

The members of a L.L.C. doing business outside its state of origin, particularly in a state with no L.L.C. statute, may not be accorded the limited liability and tax status it enjoys in its home state. Choice of law principles apply and could result in the L.L.C. as an entity foreign to the host state being treated as a corporation, general partnership or limited partnership, but not as a L.L.C. n539

§ 12.16(a)(12) Real Estate Investment Trust (R.E.I.T.).

§ 12.16(a)(12)(i) Introduction.

The Real Estate Investment Trust is attracting considerable attention among real estate developers right now because traditional mortgage lenders such as banks, insurance companies, and thrifts are cutting back on their mortgage lending and the stock market is hot. R.E.I.T.s can be publicly traded -- many are -- and have significantly outperformed the Standard & Poor 500 Index over the past 20 years. n540 So real estate developers are considering whether the R.E.I.T. vehicle might be the right way to go public, and attract the dollars of stockmarket investors. n541

The R.E.I.T. is a creature of the Internal Revenue Code, the Real Estate Investment Trust Act of 1960. n542 The act's purpose was to allow small investors to realize the same advantages of real property ownership as are enjoyed by mutual fund investors in stocks and bonds. The R.E.I.T. can deduct income it distributes to shareholders -- and thus largely avoid the "double" taxation associated with the corporate form of ownership. Yet because the R.E.I.T. can be a corporation, its shareholders enjoy the limited liability of all other corporate shareholders.

"The word 'trust' is a misnomer. The real estate investment trust is usually a corporation although it could be a trust or an incorporated association. There is no requirement that a R.E.I.T. be a trust under local law." n543

> Basically, the R.E.I.T. is a corporation or an unincorporated trust managed by one or more trustees with 100 or more beneficiaries with transferable shares. It avoids tax on income which it distributes to its beneficiaries if it meets an array of requirements relating to its organization, the type of assets it owns, the type of income it receives, and the percentage of its income it distributes. n544

§ 12.16(a)(12)(ii) Qualifying Requirements of the Internal Revenue Code.

Management. To escape classification as a corporation and the resultant imposition of double taxation, the R.E.I.T. must be managed by one or more trustees. n545 The trustees and the advisors they hire to assist in making investment decisions are prohibited from having their own funds at risk in the trust. Hence, this is the only investment vehicle where the interests of the investors and the interests of the managers are kept separate by law. Since the trustee/advisors are often compensated on the basis of the size of the R.E.I.T. and its volume of transactions, it is possible for investors to do badly even as trustees prosper. This happens when the "gross" volume of the R.E.I.T. is large, measured by the size and volatility of the portfolio, and the net profit from the R.E.I.T.'s portfolio is small or negative.

Ownership. The ownership interest of the R.E.I.T. must be represented by transferable shares. The shares must be held by 100 or more persons, and five or fewer investors may not own more than half the value of the stock. n546 "The trustee may retain the power to refuse to transfer shares in order to maintain the requirements of R.E.I.T. status." n547

The requirement that there be 100 or more beneficial owners may eliminate the R.E.I.T. as an entity for use by a closely held venture. However, an individual acting as a general partner may have a R.E.I.T. as a limited partner. Conversely, if the business activity of a venture qualified, a R.E.I.T. might itself serve as a general partner or shareholder.

When a few large investors provide funding for a R.E.I.T., the 100-investor requirement may be met by issuing single shares to lawyers, secretaries, or anyone else at hand.

The requirement of "five or fewer" not being able to own 50% or more of the value is a bigger impediment for trusts who manage large portfolios like those of pension funds. If only five or fewer investors are ready to finance a particular deal, the R.E.I.T. may have to be dissolved in favor of a limited partnership. n548 Alternately, the R.E.I.T could become a partner in general or limited partnership. The R.E.I.T. investors would own an interest in the partnership. The partnership would become the owners of the assets.

Income Sources. R.E.I.T.s avoid tax at the entity level as long as their earnings are derived predominantly from "passive" activity.

The Code does not define "passive." But § 856(c) of the Internal Revenue Code specifies in great detail what sources of income are available to a R.E.I.T. to preserve its "pass through" entity status, and how much of that status is lost for each particular transgression. Basically, a R.E.I.T. may not hold any property primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of business, and it may not operate an "active" trade or business.

R.E.I.T.s must be very careful about their sources of income and can't safely leave this issue to a developer partner. Mike Sfregola, n549 a Los Angeles real estate lawyer, offers the example of an office building with income from parking revenues. To the developer there is no difference between parking fees and office rents as far as tax liability goes; it is all reportable income. To the R.E.I.T., however, office rents are acceptable "passive" income, but fees from operating a parking structure don't qualify for "pass through" taxation. They are "active" earnings that could -- if the sums were a large enough percentage of total R.E.I.T. income -- trigger the "double taxation" R.E.I.T.s are set up expressly to avoid. R.E.I.T.s need to monitor income to avoid fees and other non-rent sources of income.

"Active" income can usually be diverted. In the parking fee example, if the parking concession were leased to an operator -- even the developer -- the concession fee would be "passive" income, like rent. The developer, not the R.E.I.T., would collect parking fees for operating the concession. Only if the R.E.I.T. operated the concession directly would the R.E.I.T. be earning "active" income.

Partly because of the limitations on the sources of its earnings, the R.E.I.T. form is ideal for pension funds. Like R.E.I.T.s, pension funds must obtain their income from passive sources:

> Some pension funds like the REIT structure because the REIT protects them from being taxed on "unrelated business income." If pension funds receive income from active sources like development and sales they are vulnerable to losing... the right to escape taxation at the corporate level. Even excessive borrowing, mere leverage, could move them away from passive to active income... So they prefer to invest in a REIT as opposed to a limited partnership. The REIT's being limited itself to passive income cuts down on the risk of that income being reclassified as active when it is passed to the pension fund. n550

Distributions. The special tax benefits of a R.E.I.T. are not available unless the trust pays to its shareholders dividends in the amount of 95% of its R.E.I.T. taxable income for such taxable year, and the trust complies with certain record-keeping requirements. "If the association fails to meet the requirements for the taxable year, it will be subject to tax as a corporation, regardless of its classifications." n551

This induces R.E.I.T.s to distribute nearly all their earnings to their shareholders annually, quite important to a shareholder subject to federal (and state) income taxation. Thus, the R.E.I.T. shareholder is more likely than, say, an S corporation shareholder n552 actually to be sure of the R.E.I.T. distributing 95% of its income each year so the shareholder has a source of cash to pay her taxes.

After deducting dividends paid, the R.E.I.T. is subject to the imposition of income tax on any remaining income.

§ 12.16(b) Application of Securities Laws.

§ 12.16(b)(1) Promoter's Burden of Complying.

Real estate developers looking for other people's money to finance their ventures often structure their deals as corporations, partnerships, or syndications, and need to know whether state or federal securities laws will apply. These laws are designed to protect the investing public against fraud and manipulation, and to compel disclosures to the investor of all the facts material to the investment decision.

The promoter who is found to be offering a security needs to meet rigorous registration and reporting standards administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission under the securities acts. Further, only licensed securities brokers are legally authorized to sell securities.

Tom Loo, an eminent securities lawyer, explains why promoters need to comply with securities' laws:

> When deals fail, investors can rescind and get back their money who can successfully claim that the interests they bought qualify as securities under federal or state laws, and weren't registered. These investors may have claims not only against the promoters of failed deals but against the lawyers and accountants who helped package the unregistered offerings.

Even if the "security" was properly registered, if the offering statement contained false or misleading information, or if it omitted material facts, disappointed investors may also obtain rescission -- a full refund of their investment. The anti-fraud provisions of state and federal securities laws give disappointed investors easier claims for damages than common law fraud rules. Securities statutes don't impose the burden on investors of proving that they relied on the fraudulent statements. They need only allege they didn't actually know the truth, the statements made to them were false or misleading, "material," and resulted in actual damage or loss. They don't have to prove fraud, negligence or that the promoters knew their claims were false on the day they were made. n553

Naturally, investors in successful deals don't assert their right to rescind under federal or state securities laws. Only the investors in losing deals come forward to claim refunds for unregistered securities or false and misleading prospectus information.

§ 12.16(b)(2) What Is a "Security"?

What is a "security" for regulatory purposes? Similar definitions of "security" appear in the Securities Act of 1933, n554 and The Securities Exchange Act of 1934: n555

> [u]nless the context otherwise requires... the term "security" means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness,... investment contract... or, in general, any interest or instrument commonly known as a "security...." n556

The definitional problem Congress faced was tricky. If "securities" meant only "stocks" or "bonds," shady promoters could escape these laws simply by labeling the interests they sold anything but a "stock" or a "bond." If Congress defined "security" too broadly, an IOU between friends could get swept into the regulatory net. Federal courts, and especially the U.S. Supreme Court have had a difficult time with the definition. n557

The Securities and Exchange Commission (S.E.C.) has proposed that an offering be labeled a security if it involves: (1) an investment of money, (2) the expectation of profit, and (3) reliance on "the efforts of others" to realize that profit.

Case law has added a criterion: (4) the investment must involve a "common enterprise." The phrase has no authoritative Supreme Court definition. n558 The "commonality" requirement is sometimes mentioned by the U.S. Supreme Court and sometimes seems to be forgotten. Many securities scholars question its legitimacy and meaning.

Does "a common enterprise" imply that the offeror tried to attract a large number of investors? This is sometimes referred to as "vertical commonality." If "vertical commonality" is required, one-on-one transactions are implicitly exempt.

Many courts and scholars believe a promoter should not escape the securities laws simply because he didn't catch or even try to catch very many investors. They believe whether an offering is a security should depend on factors other than how many offerees there were. The "commonality" requirement has been met in the eyes of many courts even though there was only one investor. n559

There are exemptions in the act and regulations for offerings to only a few people, i.e., "nonpublic" offerings. A promoter who advertises widely for investors even though ending up with very few doesn't escape the scrutiny of the securities laws. His extensive marketing effort may disqualify his offering from being exempt as non-public.

The "common enterprise" criterion is ambiguous in another sense. Does the "commonality" test require an investor's funds to be pooled with the investments of others, all of them somehow connected and interdependent, the way shareholders in a corporation are connected? This is called "horizontal commonality."

The third test -- reliance on the efforts of others -- raises a further ambiguity. Is the investor buying a security if the investor isn't relying solely on the efforts of others to realize the profit? Will it suffice if the investor is relying predominantly on a third party? This distinction is significant because it might allow shrewd promoters to exempt themselves from the securities laws by involving investors in the management of the enterprise in modest ways. Then the investors couldn't be said to be relying solely on the efforts of others. Further, in most real estate deals, investors are counting on general market conditions as well as promoter's skills to realize profits. Someone who buys a limited partnership share of a shopping center would never be relying solely on the efforts of others if courts defined "solely" strictly. Usually, they do not.

Some courts have articulated a "more realistic test, whether the efforts made by others than the investor are the undeniably significant ones, those essential managerial efforts which affect the failure or success of the enterprise." n560

One point is clear. The U.S. Supreme Court is determined not to stretch the statutory definition of "security" to cover every case in which an investor alleges she has been defrauded. The court has made clear that it doesn't believe Congress intended the securities laws to be a shield against any and every fraud perpetrated in the country.

§ 12.16(b)(2)(i) Distinguishing Sales of Securities from Sales of Realty.

Fee Title Acquisitions of Real Estate. The fact that the investor receives legal title to real estate does not preclude a court finding that the investor has also purchased a security or an interest in an investment contract. If the investor actually acquires title, and not, literally, a security, the legal issue becomes whether the investor's interest can meet judicial and S.E.C. tests for an "investment contract."

Again, the test usually invoked depends on the investor (1) investing money, (2) with the expectation of profit, (3) in a common enterprise, and (4) relying solely on the efforts of others.

Almost everyone who buys any type of real estate hopes that it will appreciate in value. Real estate brokers encourage buyers to believe this. But if the purchaser is buying primarily to occupy the property or to use it in a trade or business, her profit expectation may be insufficient to meet the second part of the test, the expectation of profit.

Further, if the investor receives title to a particular property which can be sold at will, it is difficult to say that the investor is investing in a common enterprise, and relying solely on the efforts of others to realize profit. The investor holds legal title and can thus be free from reliance on the promoter or developer. As an investor, one can sell or rent the property on one's own.

One type of real estate acquisition that sometimes runs afoul of the securities laws is the sale of units in condominiums, often in resorts either in fee or through time-sharing arrangements. In a time-share project the purchaser expects to occupy the apartment only a few weeks each year, and may hope that ownership costs can be met by renting out the unit the rest of the time. If one contracts to rent out the apartment on one's own or through an agent unaffiliated with the developer, one is not relying on the developer for profits.

Condo developers risk having their offerings characterized as a security by insisting that the buyer designate the promoter or an affiliate as the exclusive rental agent, or by agreeing to pool rents from all the units and apportion them among all the unit owners. n561 Aggressive sales agents stressing the profit potential of the acquisition worsen the developer's case. Finally, if the developer obtains funds from buyers before the project is actually built, the investor is truly relying on the efforts of others to realize anything; if the project is never built, the investor could be totally out of luck. The promoter or developer who avoids these practices and conveys a fee simple title to the buyer should be safely out of the thicket of securities law.

Developers marketing subdivided lots have almost always escaped their sales being characterized as securities because buyers are seldom able to prove that they purchased solely in reliance on the developer's future efforts to make the investment profitable. n562 The Ninth Circuit, though, has given real estate brokers and ordinary condo owners trying to sell their units cause for concern whether they might be unwittingly offering securities when they list or market condo units. n563

Real Estate Acquired Through Purchase of Stock. Sometimes the real estate investor doesn't get fee simple title evidenced by a deed. She gets a share of stock in an entity which owns the real estate. This distinction is important because the sale of "stock" is specifically included in securities act definitions of securities. The seller who transfers stock to the buyer instead of fee simple title will be held presumptively subject to the securities acts if the stock or equity interest possesses the normal attributes of a security. These are: profit sharing, voting rights, negotiability, and appreciation value.

To see what this means in actual deals, consider two instances of it:

> (1) The owner of a cooperative apartment in Manhattan sells her home. What she sells is a stock share in a cooperative owners' association and a long-term lease to her apartment. The association, technically, holds title to the building. If the apartment had been organized as a condominium, each owner would have had title to an identified piece of airspace, separately recorded, and could have sold by deed, clearly not a "security."
>
> (2) Or take the case of a developer who holds title to his shopping center in corporate form. Instead of selling "the center" by deed, he sells 100% of the corporate stock to a buyer. Has the developer sold "securities" or real property?

§ 12.16(b)(2)(ii) When General Partnership Interests Are an Investment Contract.

To appreciate the complexity of the "economic reality" test as mentioned by the U.S. Supreme Court in Landreth Timber, consider whether a general partnership interest can ever be an investment contract and, hence, a security. Theoretically, a general partner is never relying "solely" on the efforts of others. Under the Uniform Partnership Act:

[a] general partner is an agent of his firm, notice to one partner is deemed notice to all, and partners are subject to unlimited liability for partnership losses. Also, every general partner has equal rights in the management and conduct of partnership business and every partner has an absolute veto power over any act that contravenes the partnership agreement. n564

Hence, some courts have held that if state law prohibits a partner from relinquishing her legal right to manage the business, a general partnership interest can never be a security, even if only some of the partners actually managed the business day-to-day. n565

A second view turns on the "economic reality" of how a particular general partnership functions. Even an investor who retains substantial control over her investment to protect herself from the managing partner may be able to invoke the securities laws under an "economic reality" test if the investor was "unable to exercise meaningful partnership powers." n566 Here are some of the relevant factors:

> A general partnership or joint venture interest can be designated a security if the investor can establish, for example, that (1) an agreement among the parties leaves so little power in the hands of the partner or venturer that the arrangement in fact distributes power as would a limited partnership or (2) the partner or venturer is so inexperienced and unknowledgeable in business affairs that he is incapable of intelligently exercising his partnership or venture powers; or (3) the partner or venturer is so dependent on some unique entrepreneurial or managerial ability of the promoter or manager that he cannot replace the manager of the enterprise or otherwise exercise meaningful partnership or venture powers. n567

This view invites a trial on the securities question in nearly every instance to determine the competence of the parties and how the partnership was actually managed.

Yet a third position focuses not on the reality of actual control but on the terms of the partnership agreement at issue. It asks whether "the partnership agreement does not in fact create a general partnership but creates a limited partnership interest akin to an offering of preferred stock." n568 If managerial control and access to information remained by agreement in the hands of all the general partners, none could claim the partnership interest was actually an "investment contract," even if a few partners actually managed the partnership business. Conversely, if the agreement deflects access to information and managerial choice from some of the partners to others, the partnership could be an "investment contract."

Federal courts of appeals thus divide on when, if ever, general partners can be said to have bought "investment contracts." The U.S. Supreme Court could someday clarify this matter.

§ 12.16(b)(2)(iii) When Is a "Note" a Security?

The statute isn't always a reliable guide for defining what is a security. The 1933 statute labels the sale of "any note" a "security." As Landreth Timber indicates, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that this only makes notes rebuttable securities.

Compare these four "notes":

> 1. A Wall Street underwriter purchases 10,000 mortgages from F.N.M.A. and offers investors a chance to buy an interest in the mortgage pool. Underlying the investment are 10,000 notes and mortgages signed by individual borrowers. This arrangement is called "securitization." n569
>
> 2. A lead bank about to make a $100,000,000 construction loan to a development company solicits other banks to share the loan through a syndication or participation arrangement. n570
>
> 3. A developer buying a vacant 2-acre site signs a note for almost 100% of the purchase price, secured by a deed of trust designating the seller as beneficiary. The seller's "purchase money" loan is to be subordinate to a first lien that the developer will obtain to build an apartment house on the site. n571
>
> 4. The seller advertises in a local newspaper to find a buyer for the developer's note and deed of trust.

Assume that in all four cases the lender makes statements the lender knew to be false and which misled the investors or borrowers. The investors in cases (a) and (d) and the borrowers in cases (b) and (c) sue to be released from liability on the loan or investment contract, and maybe for punitive damages above the loan or investment amount. Assume, too, that in none of the four cases has the lender bothered to comply with the securities laws. Have these four borrowers and investors struck pay dirt?

Until 1990 various tests had been proposed and applied by federal courts of appeals in their effort to determine whether an instrument denominated as a "note" is truly a security under the securities acts. When a "note" was a "security" has also been of great interest to scholars. n572 The 1933 law itself included the word "note" in its list of securities, but the list was preceded by the cautionary phrase "unless the context otherwise requires."

In 1990, the U.S. Supreme Court adopted what is known as the "family resemblance" test:

> [t]ypes of notes that are not "securities" include "the note delivered in consumer financing, the note secured by a mortgage on a home, the short-term note secured by a lien on a small business or some of its assets, the note evidencing a 'character' loan to a bank customer, short-term notes secured by an assignment of accounts receivable, or a note which simply formalizes an open-account debt incurred in the ordinary course of business (particularly if, as in the case of the customer of a broker, it is collateralized)."
>
> [s]ome standards must be developed for determining when an item should be added to the list.
>
> An examination of the list itself makes clear what those standards should be... First, we examine the transaction to assess the motivations that would prompt a reasonable seller and buyer to enter into it. If the seller's purpose is to raise money for the general use of a business enterprise or to finance substantial investments and the buyer is interested primarily in the profit the note is expected to generate, the instrument is likely to be a "security." If the note is exchanged to facilitate the purchase and sale of a minor asset or consumer good, to correct for the seller's cash-flow difficulties, or to advance some other commercial or consumer purpose, on the other hand, the note is less sensibly described as a "security...." Second, we examine the "plan of distribution" of the instrument... to determine whether it is an instrument in which there is "common trading for speculation or investment...." Third, we examine the reasonable expectations of the investing public: The Court will consider instruments to be "securities" on the basis of such public expectations, even where an economic analysis of the circumstances of the particular transaction might suggest that the instruments are not "securities" as used in that transaction... Finally, we examine whether some factor such as the existence of another regulatory scheme significantly reduces the risk of the instrument, thereby rendering application of the Securities Acts unnecessary.
>
> We conclude, then, that in determining whether an instrument denominated a "note" is a "security," courts are to apply the version of the "family resemblance" test that we have articulated here: a note is presumed to be a "security," and that presumption may be rebutted only by a showing that the note bears a strong resemblance (in terms of the four factors we have identified) to one of the enumerated categories of instrument. If an instrument is not sufficiently similar to an item on the list, the decision whether another category should be added is to be made by examining the same factors. n573

In sum, the Supreme Court gave us a list of notes that are not "securities" and a list of questions to ask when deciding whether other "notes" should be added to the exempt list. Sometimes the answers will all point in the same direction, and it will be easy to see whether the note is a security or not. At other times the answers may point in different directions, offering less predictable outcomes.

§ 12.16(b)(3) Federal Securities Laws.

§ 12.16(b)(3)(i) Registration Process.

The United States Securities and Exchange Commission n574 has the responsibility of administering and enforcing the federal securities laws. n575 It is an independent regulatory agency consisting of five members appointed for staggered five-year terms by the President, with the concurrence of the Senate. n576 The Commission's principal office is in Washington, D.C., and it has nine regional offices. The S.E.C. enforces the federal securities laws by conducting investigations in large part through its regional and branch offices which may lead to criminal prosecutions, civil actions for injunctive relief, or administrative proceedings to impose remedial sanctions on broker-dealers and investment advisers.

The Securities Acts are important to real estate venture participants. The issuer must register with the Securities and Exchange Commission under Section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933 n577 before offering any non-exempted sale of securities. Interest in a real estate venture classified as a security can't be sold legally until it is registered and meets subsequent reporting procedures, unless the sale is exempt.

These are the burdens of the issuer of securities: (1) Registering with the S.E.C. the issuer prepares and obtains S.E.C. approval of a prospectus to be disseminated to prospective investors; (2) A company with securities registered under either of the Securities Acts must file annual, quarterly, and other periodic reports. These are not distributed directly to prospective investors but are available for review by analysts, investment advisers, financial publications, and others. (3) Companies with securities registered under the Securities Exchange Act are subject to the proxy rules which require the dissemination of a proxy or information statement in connection with the election of directors and other shareholder action. The proxy statement must be preceded or accompanied by an annual report to shareholders which must include certain prescribed information, including financial statements.

The prospectus contains information useful to investors, and also displays facts of interest to competitors and the idly curious. For example, a financial columnist for Newsday faulted Donald J. Trump on his boast that he had built the Taj Mahal resort in Atlantic City "on time" and "on budget." A prospectus for the project, prepared because debt financing came from the public issuance of $675,000,000 worth of bonds, disclosed a $65,000,000 cost overrun, $11.8 million of which covered interest paid on the Taj's bonds accruing between the time the project was supposed to open and when it actually opened. n578 So the prospectus proved the project was neither on time nor within budget.

§ 12.16(b)(3)(ii) Exemptions.

Because an S.E.C. registration is costly and time-consuming, syndicators often seek to fit their offerings within one of the exemptions from the requirements for registration and prospectus delivery created by the Securities Act.

> If, for example, the offering is exclusively intrastate, the syndicator may try to qualify it under Section 3(a)(11) of the Securities Act, the "intrastate offering" exemption. n579 Rule 147, n580 promulgated under Section 3(a)(11), exempts an offering from registration if all offers and sales are made to residents of one state and if the partnership is resident and doing business in the state and is using most of the offering proceeds to purchase properties within the state. n581

Another commonly employed series of exemptions used by real estate syndicators are the "safe harbor" rules of Regulation D, promulgated by the S.E.C. n582 These rules exempt certain offerings that meet specified terms and conditions. Among the exempting variables is the amount of money being sought. The greater the sum, the less readily it will be exempted. Also relevant is the number of investors solicited, and whether the solicitation is targeted for "accredited" investors. The definitions of "accredited" flow over three pages and include such factors as the individual's net worth and income, and whether the person is an officer or partner of the issuer.

Failure to comply with Regulation D's specific criteria will not, however, necessarily defeat the syndicator's claim for exemption. The syndicator may still try to qualify the offering under the more liberal terms of § 4(2) of the Securities Act n583 for transactions "not involving any public offering." There are other exemptions as well. n584

§ 12.16(b)(4) State Securities (Blue Sky) Laws.

Real estate syndicators and developers need to look at state securities laws, too. State securities regulation in the United States dates back to 1911 n585 when Kansas adopted the first comprehensive scheme of regulation, popularly referred to as "blue sky" laws, because early sponsors viewed them as designed to reach "speculative schemes which have no more basis than so many feet of blue sky." n586 Securities laws in some form are in effect in all fifty-three jurisdictions: the fifty states, plus the District of Columbia, Guam, and Puerto Rico. n587 Congress preserved the concurrent jurisdiction of the states to regulate securities. This has led to "considerable overlap of federal and state regulatory authority." n588

Historically, though, the state exemptions have had little relationship to the federal exemptions. A few states have had exemptions for private offerings similar to § 4(2) of the Securities Act. n589

Securities listed on the principal stock exchanges (New York and American, for the most part), are exempt from state regulation. n590 In most jurisdictions, when appropriate information concerning the security is included in a recognized securities manual (primarily Moody's and Standard and Poor), the securities are similarly exempt from state regulation. n591

California's regulation of securities offerings reaches past the objectives of federal law and the blue sky laws of most states. Unlike disclosure and anti-fraud types of laws, California's more interventionist and ambitious goal is to make sure investors are offered securities only on terms that are "fair, just and equitable." n592 Disclosure of a very bad deal isn't enough in California; the law is designed to block such deals from being made available to investors.

The details of offerings are examined closely by the Commissioner of Corporations. n593 Guidelines have been promulgated and appear in the California Corporations Code and California Code of Regulations. n594

§ 12.16(b)(5) Summary: Application of Securities Law to Entities Used for Acquiring and Developing Property.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(i) Limited Partnership.

Limited partnership interests fit easily within the standard legal definition of a security: "an investment in a common venture premised on a reasonable expectation of profits to be derived from the entrepreneurial or managerial efforts of others." n595 Limited partnership interests are usually regarded as securities since the legal status of a limited partner is quite similar to that of an equity shareholder. The offer for sale of limited partnership interests is generally subject to the registration requirements of both federal securities laws and state blue sky laws. n596 A limited partner who takes over the management of the partnership may forfeit his limited liability status, but retains his rights as a limited partner to invoke the securities laws against the general partner. In one case, a limited partner became actively involved in managing the partnership and ousted a general partner. He was held entitled to retain his right to sue the general partner he forced out for violating federal securities laws. n597 "And, even if the offering is exempt from registration, it must nonetheless comply with the anti-fraud rules imposed by federal and state law." n598

A general partner in a limited partnership will have difficulty invoking the securities laws, however, when the alleged offering was made by the limited partnership in which the complainant was a general partner. n599 A developer who bought a limited partnership interest in order to acquire a large tract of land for development which the partnership owned was not entitled to invoke the securities laws because he was purchasing the partnership interest to use the land and not to make an investment in the limited partnership per se. n600

§ 12.16(b)(5)(ii) General Partnership.

Interests in a general partnership, although literally within that portion of the definition of a security which includes "certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement," generally are not securities. The exceptions outlined at the beginning of this section involve situations in which a general partner's rights may resemble those of limited partners. Except in unusual situations, general partnership interests seldom are treated as securities. n601

§ 12.16(b)(5)(iii) C Corporation.

While there are some differences, the basic definition of a security under the Securities Act of 1933, n602 the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, n603 and state blue sky laws is the same. n604 Selling property interests through shares in a C corporation will, in all likelihood, subject the offeror to securities regulations. Only if the offering qualifies for one of the exemptions will it escape the registration, disclosure, and record-keeping requirements of the securities regulations.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(iv) S Corporation.

Not all investments are securities. Before the Landreth Timber n605 case, excerpted earlier in this section, it seemed as if an investor who participated in the management of the investment might not be able to claim her interest was a "security." After Landreth, even a majority investor probably owns a "security." n606

§ 12.16(b)(5)(v) Real Estate Investment Trusts.

Real estate investment trusts, as defined by Internal Revenue Code § 856, and securities of other issuers whose business is primarily acquiring and holding for investment real estate or interests in real estate are registered on Form S-11. A Form S-11 registration statement requires appropriate summary and risk factor sections, a use of proceeds section, a dilution section, a description of the securities and how the offering price was determined, ratio of earnings to fixed charges, a description of the plan of distribution, a basic information package, an in-depth disclosure, and information pertaining to the investment policies of the registrant, just to name a few.

§ 12.16(b)(5)(vi) Individual Acquisition of Real Estate Entities.

Generally, a purchaser motivated by a desire to occupy a house or develop land personally is not seen as buying a security when making a purchase. But one who purchases a condo unit or a time-share in a resort project may be buying a security if one is relying on management to rent condo units and pool all unit rents for distribution among the condo owners. As mentioned earlier, the Securities and Exchange Commission has published guidelines for determining when an offering of condos may be viewed as a security. n607 The Ninth Circuit, however, has cast a wider net in defining what counts as an investment contract to bring condo resales by owners unconnected to rental pools within the definition.

When the promoter/developer lures buyers by promising them a share of rents from the project to cover a good portion of the individual's ownership costs, and the rental pool is managed by the project developer or an affiliated company, the condo offering is probably a security. If, on the other hand, the management and rental activity is conducted by a firm unrelated to the condo promoter, and the buyer isn't obliged to enter a contract to share rents on a project-wide basis, the question of whether the offer is a security is one of fact. In Hocking v. Dubois, n608 a condo resale was classified as a security if the buyer could prove he had been lured into the deal by a broker's promise of profits from a rental pool agreement.

§ 12.16(b)(6) Conclusions.

An entity financing real estate activity or selling real property may need to satisfy securities law requirements. The two most significant variables in determining what constitutes a security are the form of the offeror entity and the way management decisions are to be made after the sale or financing. The corporate, R.E.I.T., and limited partnership forms are prima facie subject to securities regulation. The general partnership form is not. Other investment arrangements not labelled securities may be classified as if they were depending on whether investors have continuing control over how their funds or the purchased real estate are to be used, whether they bought property for personal use or primarily for profit, and whether they acquired an interest they can sell themselves -- the value of which does not depend on the continuing efforts of the seller or offeror. Even if an offering is a security, it may be exempt if the offering is private, or marketed totally within one state.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 409. 24 Land Use Digest 9, Urban Land Institute (Washington, D.C., Sept. 1991).

(n2)Footnote 410. Norton Steuben, Real Estate Planning 9 (1980), construing Marvin Leon, Designing the Real Estate Joint Venture to Work, 3 #1 Real Est. Rev. 33 (1973); William A. Kelley, Jr., et al. Multiple Use Land Development: Real Property and Tax Problems, 7 Real Prop. & Tr. J. 585 (1972).

(n3)Footnote 411. Michael Madison & Robert M. Zinman, Modern Real Estate Financing 144 (1991).

(n4)Footnote 412. See 2 Boris I. Bittker & Lawrence Lokken, Federal Taxation of Income, Estates and Gifts 41-3, 41-7 (2d ed. 1991).

(n5)Footnote 413. Id. at 23-81 to 23-87.

(n6)Footnote 414. I.R.C. § 168(c)(1). For non-residential property placed in service after May 13, 1993, 39 years.

(n7)Footnote 415. Id. § 168(d)(4)(A).

(n8)Footnote 416. Id. §§ 168(c)(1)(A) and (B).

(n9)Footnote 417. I.R.S. Reg. § 1.167(a)(2).

(n10)Footnote 418. P. Taubman & R.H. Rasche, Economic and Tax Depreciation of Office Buildings, 22 Nat'l Tax J. 334 (1969) (office and apartment building depreciation minimal in first 10 years).

(n11)Footnote 419. Crane v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 331 U.S. 1 (1946) (whether an unassumed and unpaid mortgage is included in basis); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Tufts, 461 U.S. 300 (1983) (whether taxable gain results from sale of property for less than unpaid mortgage balance). The rule in the Tufts case has been codified at I.R.C. 7701(g).

(n12)Footnote 420. See Boris I. Bittker & Lawrence Lokken, supra note 412, § 40.84, at 40-41, text at n.15.

(n13)Footnote 421. The lender, on the other hand, gets to write off any uncollected deficiency as a loss. The deficiency is measured as the difference between the market value of the property (less expenses) and the adjusted basis of the debt. Rev. Rul. 68-523, 1968-2 C.B. 82.

(n14)Footnote 422. 99 T.C. 197 (1992). The rule in the Tufts case has been codified at I.R.C. 7701(g).

(n15)Footnote 423. U.P.A. § 6.

(n16)Footnote 424. Cyrus v. Cyrus, 64 N.W.2d 538 (Minn. 1954). For a partner to transfer separately owned property to the partnership, the transfer must meet the statute of frauds or come under one of the exceptions to it. Annotation, When Real Estate Owned by a Partner Before Formation of a Partnership Will Be Deemed to Have Become Asset of Firm, 45 A.L.R.2d 1009 (1956).

(n17)Footnote 425. U.P.A. § 9, 6 U.L.A. 132 et seq.

(n18)Footnote 426. U.P.A. § 25.

(n19)Footnote 427. Patel v. Patel, 260 Cal. Rptr. 255 (1989).

(n20)Footnote 428. Kristerin Dev. Co. v. Granson Inv., 394 N.W.2d 325, 329-331 (Iowa 1986). See Daniel M. Fessler, Alternatives to Incorporations for Persons in Quest of Profit 75-79 (3d ed. 1991).

(n21)Footnote 429. The California Corporation Code provides that a Statement of Partnership be filed.

(n22)Footnote 430. Rodman Elfin, Revision of the Uniform Partnership Act, An Analysis and Recommendations, 23 Ind. L. Rev. 655, 656-658 (1990).

(n23)Footnote 431. U.P.A. § 14, 6 U.L.A. 1 et seq.: "The partnership is bound to make good the loss: (a) Where one partner acting within the scope of his apparent authority receives money or property of a third person and misapplies it; and (b) Where the partnership in the course of its business receives money or property of a third person and the money or property so received is misapplied by any partner while it is in the custody of the partnership." [Emphasis added.]

(n24)Footnote 432. U.P.A. § 15, 6 U.L.A. 1 et seq.: "All parties are liable (a) Jointly and severally for everything chargeable to the partnership under sections 13 and 14; (b) Jointly for all other debts and obligations of the partnership; but any partner may enter into a separate obligation to perform a partnership contract." The U.P.A. has been adopted in 49 states, including California. The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws has undertaken a complete revision of the Act. See U.P.A. Revision Subcommittee of the Committee on Partnerships and Unincorporated Business Organizations, American Bar Ass'n, Should the Uniform Partnership Act Be Revised?, 43 Bus. Law. 1212 (1987).

(n25)Footnote 433. Compare Horn's Crane Serv. v. Prior, 152 N.W.2d 421, 423 (Neb. 1967) (creditor must allege there is no partnership property sufficient to pay the debt before suing partners individually) with Catalina Mtg. Co. v. Monier, 800 P.2d 574, 578 (Ariz. 1990) (partner's assets can be reached by direct suit even if the partnership or other partners aren't sued). Among states with "partnership-assets-first" rule are Oklahoma, New York, Utah and Michigan. Among the partner-as-primary-obligor states: Missouri, Texas. "Where partner liability for partnership assets is joint, the virtually unanimous rule is that partnership assest must be exhausted -- or the partnership shown to be insolvent -- before partnership creditors can reach partners' individual assets to enforce their liability." Alan R. Bromberg, Larry E. Ribstein, 2 Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership 5:59 (1994).

"Where partner liability for partnership obligations is joint and several, the prevailing rule is that partnership assets need not be exhausted -- or the partnership shown to be insolvent -- before partnership creditors can reach partners' individual assets to enforce their liability." Id. at 5:63 (1994).

(n26)Footnote 434. R.U.P.A. § 307(c) (Draft for Partial Approval, June 7, 1991). This position is criticized in J. Dennis Hynes, The Revised Uniform Partnership Act: Some Comments on the Latest Draft of RUPA, 19 Fla. St. U.L. Rev. 727, 734-39 (1992).

(n27)Footnote 435. Reconstruction of Interview by Mark Feldman with Benedict J. J. Adelson, of Counsel with Fierstein & Sturman Law Corp., Los Angeles, Cal. (Jan. 26, 1990).

(n28)Footnote 436. Schwartz v. Shapiro, 229 Cal. App. 2d 238 (1964); Graham v. Stratton, 339 F.2d 1004 (7th Cir. 1964).

(n29)Footnote 437. In Baldwin v. Marina City Prop., Inc., 145 Cal. Rptr. 406 (1978), the general partner made a large capital call of $500,000 from each limited partner. Only one limited partner responded -- Marina City Properties, a subsidiary of Hughes Aircraft. Thereafter, Marina City Properties caused the Certificate of Limited Partnership to be amended to reflect their 90.91% interest in the limited partnership.

(n30)Footnote 438. Nina B. Matis, Partnership Management: Problems In a Declining Economic Market, A.C.R.E.L., Real Est. Partnerships 101, 115-16 (A.B.A. 1991).

(n31)Footnote 439. Id. at 116.

(n32)Footnote 440. Reconstruction of Interview by Mark Feldman with Benedict J. J. Adelson, of Counsel with Fierstein & Sturman Law Corp., Los Angeles, Cal. (Jan. 26, 1990).

(n33)Footnote 441. Donald H. Siskind, Transfers of Partnership Interests, A.C.R.E.L., Real Est. Partnerships 121, 128 (A.B.A. 1991).

(n34)Footnote 442. A federal court in Texas held the assigning partner liable for pre- but not post-assignment debts in Thomas v. Price, 718 F. Supp. 598, 607 (S.D. Tex. 1989).

(n35)Footnote 443. Compare Columbia Mtg. Co. v. Hsieh, 708 P.2d 1226 (Wash. 1985) with Stoebel-Polasky Co. v. Slatcha, 308 N.W.2d 273 (Mich. App. 1981); United Bank of Bismarck v. Glatt, 420 N.W.2d 743 (N.D. 1988); Wellsville Bank v. Nicolay, 638 P.2d 975 (Kan. App. 1982).

(n36)Footnote 444. U.P.A. § 27(1), 6 U.L.A. 1 et seq.

(n37)Footnote 445. National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, R.U.P.A. (1989 draft), as described by Donald H. Siskind, Transfers of Partnership Interests, A.C.R.E.L., Real Est. Partnerships 121, 122 (A.B.A. 1991).

(n38)Footnote 446. Redman v. Walters, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 (1979).

(n39)Footnote 447. R.U.P.A., Articles 7 and 8. See Donald J. Weidner, Three Policy Decisions Animate Revision of Uniform Partnership Act, 46 Bus. Law. 427 (1991). See also Note, The Revised Uniform Partnership Act Breakup Provisions: Should They Be Adopted?, 25 Creighton L. Rev. 701 (1992).

(n40)Footnote 448. See generally U.P.A. §§ 31 and 32, 6 U.L.A. 1 et seq. A recent Texas case held that a partnership is dissolved when a lender forecloses on a partner's interest in the partnership, even though the partnership agreement specifically allowed each partner to grant security interests in her share of partnership profits and surplus. Thomas v. Price, 718 F. Supp. 598 (S.D. Tex. 1989); Steven A. Waters & Florence P. Berkley, Partnerships, 44 Sw. L.J. 203 (1990).

(n41)Footnote 449. See U.P.A. § 32(2), 6 U.L.A. 1 et seq. Dissolution by decree of court may occur "on the application of the purchaser of a partner's interest under sections 28 or 29; (a) After the termination of the specified term or particular undertaking, (b) At any time if the partnership was a partnership at will when the interest was assigned or when the charging order was issued."

(n42)Footnote 450. Robert W. Hamilton, Cases and Materials on Corporations Including Partnerships and Limited Partnerships 16 (2d ed. 1984).

(n43)Footnote 451. U.P.A. § 31(5) was promulgated in 1914. At that time the only kind of bankruptcy was a liquidation. Corporate reorganizations were not authorized by Congress until two decades later. Pub. L. No. 72-474 § 207, 48 Stat. 912.

Some courts have held that § 31(5) doesn't apply to reorganizations. In re Safren, 65 B.R. 566, 569 (Bankr. C.D. Cal.

1986); In re Priestly, 93 B.R. 253 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1988). Other courts have upheld state dissolution-on-bankruptcy provisions modeled after § 31(5). See, e.g., In re Sunset Devs., 69 B.R. 710 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1987).

(n44)Footnote 452. Lawrence D. Cherkis, Partnership -- Effect of the Bankruptcy of a General Partner, ACREL, Real Est. Partnerships 285, 291 (A.B.A. 1991); Lewis R. Kaster & jeffrey K. Cymbler, The Impact of a General Partner's Bankruptcy Upon the Remaining Partners, 21 Real Prop., Prob. & Trust. J. 539 (1986).

(n45)Footnote 453. See, e.g., In re Rittenhouse Carpet, Inc., 56 B.R. 131, 133 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1985).

(n46)Footnote 454. I.R.C. §§ 701, 702.

(n47)Footnote 455. Id. § 704(d).

(n48)Footnote 456. Id. § 704(b). See generally William S. McKee et al., Federal Taxation of Partnerships and Partners, §§ 10.01 to 10.07 (2d ed. 1991).

(n49)Footnote 457. I.R.C. § 705(a).

(n50)Footnote 458. Id. § 704(d).

(n51)Footnote 459. Treas. Reg. § 301.7701-2.

(n52)Footnote 460. Id. § 301.7701-2(a)(3).

(n53)Footnote 461. Phillip R. Nicholson & John R. Cauble, Jr. Incentive Management Agreements: Do They Solve the Problem of Partnerships?, ACREL, Real Est. Partnerships 329, 337 (A.B.A. 1991).

(n54)Footnote 462. Gerald J. Robinson, Setting up the Real Estate Venture: An Overview, 3 J. Real Est. Tax'n 28, 36 (1975).

(n55)Footnote 463. Michael Madison & Robert M. Zinman, supra n.411, at 144 (1991).

(n56)Footnote 464. Robinson, supra note 462, at 36.

(n57)Footnote 465. Annotation, Right Under a Mortgage By Co-Owners of Undivided Interests to Foreclose as Against Less than All of Such Interests, 82 A.L.R. 1347 (1933).

(n58)Footnote 466. Annotation, Cotenant's Right to Allowance in Partition in Respect of Amount Paid to Discharge Mortgage or Other Lien Upon Premises as Affected by Statute of Limitations or Laches, 117 A.L.R. 1442 (1938). See also Annotation, Contribution, Subrogation, and Similar Rights, as Between Cotenants, Where One Pays the Other's Share of Sum Owing on Mortgage or Other Lien, 48 A.L.R.2d 1305 (1956).

(n59)Footnote 467. See, e.g., Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross, 812 P.2d 931 (Cal. 1991); Andrade Dev. Co. v. Martin, 138 Cal. App. 3d 330 (1982). But see Mitchell v. American Reserve, 110 Cal. App. 3d 220 (1980).

(n60)Footnote 468. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.010 et seq.

(n61)Footnote 469. I.R.C. § 1014(b)(6).

(n62)Footnote 470. David K.Y. Tang, Foreign Investors In U.S. Real Estate Joint Ventures, ACREL, Real Est. Partnerships 243, 254 (A.B.A. 1991).

(n63)Footnote 471. Richardson v. Danson, 270 P.2d 802 (Wash. 1954).

(n64)Footnote 472. See, e.g., Vollmer v. Wheeler, 183 P. 264 (Cal. App. 1919); Schulties v. Schulties, 675 P.2d 634 (Wash. App. 1984).

(n65)Footnote 473. Michael Madison & Robert M. Zinman, Modern Real Estate Financing (1991) [Madison & Zinman] Copyright © 1991 by Little, Brown & Company. Reprinted with permission.

(n66)Footnote 474. I.R.C. § 1031.

(n67)Footnote 475. Treas. Reg. § 1.761-1(a).

(n68)Footnote 476. Id. § 1.761-1(1).

(n69)Footnote 477. Walter H. E. Jaeger, Partnership or Joint Venture, 37 Notre Dame L. Rev. 138 (1961).

(n70)Footnote 478. I.R.C. § 761(a).

(n71)Footnote 479. Norton Steuben, supra n.410, at 94 (1980). See generally Charles F. Jensen, The Use of Corporations in Real Estate Transactions: Judicial Acceptance of the Agency Theory, 8 J. Corp. L. 361-88 (1982-83).

(n72)Footnote 480. David L. Wolfe & Ralph E. DeJong, The S Corporation as an Alternative Form of Business Organization After ERTA, TEFRA and the Subchapter S Revision Act of 1982, 32 DePaul L. Rev. 811, 814 (1983).

(n73)Footnote 481. An Act for Limiting the Liability of Members of Certain Joint Stock Companies, 18 & 19 Vict., ch. 133 (1955).

(n74)Footnote 482. See, e.g., Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 168, 181 (1868).

(n75)Footnote 483. William A. Klein & John C. Coffee, Business Organizations and Finance 114 (5th ed. 1993).

(n76)Footnote 484. Overstreet v. Southern Ry., 371 F.2d 411 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 387 U.S. 912 (1967).

(n77)Footnote 485. 15 William Meade Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations § 7122, at 231 (rev. perm. ed. 1983).

(n78)Footnote 486. Anderson v. Abbott, 321 U.S. 349, reh'g denied, 321 U.S. 804 (1944).

(n79)Footnote 487. Norton Steuben, supra, n.410 (1980) (citing William L. Cary, Cases and Materials on Partnership Planning 34-35 (1970)).

(n80)Footnote 488. N.Y. Bus. Corp. Law § 630; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 180.0622(13).

(n81)Footnote 489. 42 U.S.C. § 9607 et seq.

(n82)Footnote 490. Dale A. Oesterle, Viewing C.E.R.C.L.A. as Creating an Option on the Marginal Firm: Does It Encourage Irresponsible Environmental Behavior?, 26 Wake Forest L. Rev. 39, 46-49 (1991). The author explains why corporate shareholders, protected by limited liability, might rationally file bankruptcy if C.E.R.C.L.A. liability exceeded the value of the firm, after carefully and slowly selling off valuable bits of the firm.

(n83)Footnote 491. Compare Smith Land & Imp. Corp. v. Celotex Corp., 851 F.2d 86 (3d Cir. 1988) (holding successor corporation liable based on implied congressional interest) with Joslyn Mfg. Co. v. T.L. James & Co., 893 F.2d 80 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 1017 (1991) (no liability for parent because it wasn't owner or operator of facility at time of violation). See Whitney & Donnelcon, The Demise of Limited Liability of Parent and Successor Corporations Under Superfund, 4 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 1, 25-31 (1990).

(n84)Footnote 492. Id. at 31-35.

(n85)Footnote 493. Penasquitos, Inc. v. Superior Court, 812 P.2d 154 (Cal. 1991) (statutes in California (Cal. Civ. Code § 399), New York, Ohio, and New Jersey provide similar post-dissolution claims opportunities).

(n86)Footnote 494. Robert Hamilton, Cases and Materials on Corporations Including Partnerships and Limited Partnerships 16 (1986).

(n87)Footnote 495. Norton Steuben, Real Estate Planning 18 (1980).

(n88)Footnote 496. See Revised Model Business Corporation Act § 3.02: "Unless its articles of incorporation provide otherwise, every corporation has perpetual duration and succession in its corporate name and has the same powers as an individual to do all things necessary or convenient to carry out its business and affairs...."

(n89)Footnote 497. Robert W. Hamilton, Cases and Materials on Corporations Including Partnerships and Limited Partnerships 16 (1986).

(n90)Footnote 498. I.R.C. § 368(c) defines control as "the ownership of stock possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of the corporation."

(n91)Footnote 499. Reconstruction of Interview by Mark Feldman with Richard Wolff, Vice President of Acquisitions, Haight Properties, Inc., Los Angeles, Cal. (Feb. 2, 1990).

(n92)Footnote 500. Dividends are not deductible at the corporate level when determining net income for tax purposes.

(n93)Footnote 501. The person acquiring the partnership interest would have to make an election to receive a stepped-up basis under I.R.C. § 754.

(n94)Footnote 502. Norton Steuben, Real Estate Planning 52 (1980).

(n95)Footnote 503. Uniform Limited Partnership Act (U.L.P.A.) §§ 1 - 31, 6 U.L.A. 550 et seq.; Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act (R.U.L.P.A.) Articles 1-11.

(n96)Footnote 504. Waite v. Galestrom, 294 N.W.2d 338 (Neb. 1980).

(n97)Footnote 505. See, e.g., Remencheck v. Whittington, 757 S.W.2d 836 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988) (when general partner conspired with contractor to steal funds from limited partners he ceased to be agent for limited partnership).

(n98)Footnote 506. See Kenneth Hooker, The Power of Limited Partners to Remove and Replace the General Partner of a Limited Partnership, 19 Tex. Tech L. Rev. 1 (1988).

(n99)Footnote 507. In DeSimoni v. Brusco, 236 Cal. Rptr. 711 (1987), the managing partner, Brusco, brought an action challenging his removal by fellow partners. He refused to accept his removal, and rejected requests to turn over the books and records of the apartment complex to partner DeSimoni. Eventually the court removed Brusco, but not until after many years of litigation, trial, and appeal.

(n100)Footnote 508. R.U.L.P.A. § 801(3). If a sole general partner withdraws, the limiteds can prevent dissolution by all of them agreeing to maintain the partnership, and finding a willing general partner within 90 days.

(n101)Footnote 509. R.U.L.P.A. § 303(a).

(n102)Footnote 510. Michael Madison & Robert M. Zinman, Modern Real Estate Financing 149 (1991) offers these citations: Cal. Corp. Code §§ 15611 - 15723; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 109, §§ 1 - 62; N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 42:2A-1 - 42:2A-72; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1782.01 - 1782.62; Va. Code Ann. §§ 50-73.1 - 50-77. See also 6 U.L.A. 226-27. See generally Stephen I. Burr, Potential Liability of Limited Partners as General Partners, 7 Mass. L. Rev. 22 (Winter 1982); Kempin, The Problem of Control in Limited Partnership Law: An Analysis and Recommendation, 22 Am. Bus. L.J. 443 (1985); Robert A. Kessler, The New Uniform Limited Partnership Act: A Critique, 48 Fordham L. Rev. 159 (1979).

(n103)Footnote 511. R.U.L.P.A. § 303(a).

(n104)Footnote 512. Id. § 603.

(n105)Footnote 513. Id. §§ 702, 704. Under the earlier U.L.P.A., § 19, the assignee who did not become a "substantial limited partner" had no right to require any information or accounting of the partnership, "or to inspect the books." He did get profit shares. But without a right to an accounting, he would not have an easy way of knowing whether he was getting his fair share of profits or whether the general partner was increasing expenses by self-dealing contracts so that there were no profits. See, e.g., Kellis v. Ring, 155 Cal. Rptr. 297 (1979). Under § 19, the purchaser of a limited partnership interest could protect himself only by becoming a substituted limited partner. To become a substituted limited partner, all the partners had to agree and the partnership certificate had to be amended, or the partnership certificate had to allow full substituted assignability. The R.U.L.P.A. is now the dominant law in the field. It fully empowers the assignee of a limited partnership interest.

(n106)Footnote 514. Treas. Reg. §§ 301.7701-2 - 301.7701-4.

(n107)Footnote 515. I.R.C. §§ 708(b)(1) and 741.

(n108)Footnote 516. Id. § 704(b).

(n109)Footnote 517. Michael Madison & Robert M. Zinman, Modern Real Estate Financing 158 (1991). [Madison & Zinman] Copyright © 1991 by Little, Brown & Company. Reprinted with permission.

(n110)Footnote 518. I.R.C. §§ 1362(a) and 1361(a).

(n111)Footnote 519. The Treasury Regulations define an "ineligible corporation" as a corporation that is (1) a member of an affiliated group (determined under I.R.C. § 1504 without regard to any exception contained in subsection (b) thereof), whether or not that affiliated group has ever filed a consolidated return; (2) a financial institution to which I.R.C. § 585 or § 593 applies, whether or not that financial institution uses the "reserve from bad debts" method provided in I.R.C. § 166(c); (3) an insurance company subject to tax under Subchapter L, Chapter 1 of the Code; (4) a corporation to which an election under I.R.C. § 936 (concerning Puerto Rico and possession tax credits) applies; or (5) a domestic international sales corporation (D.I.S.C.) or former D.I.S.C. There are certain exemptions for insurance companies. See Treas. Reg. § 1.1361-1A(c).

(n112)Footnote 520. Husband and wife count as one individual, so there could be as many as 70 shareholders if all of them were married couples. A subsequent divorce of a couple could be a disaster for the other investing couples.

(n113)Footnote 521. See Peter M. Fass, A Comparison of the Partnership Structure and the S Corporation for Owning and Operating Real Estate, 2 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 29 (1988). See also Norton Steuben, Real Estate Planning 15 (1980), construing Jerald D. August & Mark L. Silow, S Corporation v. Partnership for Real Estate Ventures, 1 J. Tax'n Investments 91 (1983).

(n114)Footnote 522. See U.P.A. § 6, 6 U.L.A. §§ 1 et seq.: "A partnership is an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners of a business for profit." See also U.P.A. § 2, 6 U.L.A. §§ 1 et seq., which further defines "person" as an individual, partnership, corporation, or other association.

(n115)Footnote 523. Peter M. Fass, A Comparison of the Partnership Structure and the S Corporation for Owning and Operating Real Estate, 2 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 29, 159-60 n.140 (1988).

(n116)Footnote 524. See U.L.P.A. § 9, 6 U.L.A. § 559 et seq., which states in part that:

a general partner shall have all the rights and powers and be subject to all the restrictions and liabilities of a partner in a partnership without limited partners, except that without the written consent or ratification of the specific act by all the limited partners, a general partner or all of the general partners have no authority to...

(n117)Footnote 525. Peter M. Fass, A Comparison of the Partnership Structure and the S Corporation for Owning and Operating Real Estate, 2 Hofstra Prop. L.J. at 32-33 (1988).

(n118)Footnote 526. Assuming a private placement exemption has been used for the initial offering, the securities may need to be registered before they can be resold. For example, S.E.C. Rule 144, which affects private placements of S corporation stock as well as similarly placed partnership interests, restricts the resale of such interest for two years. 17 C.F.R. § 230.144.

(n119)Footnote 527. See I.R.C. § 708(b)(1)(B).

(n120)Footnote 528. See I.R.C. § 1362(d)(1)(B).

(n121)Footnote 529. See Rev. Proc. 89-12, 1989-71 I.R.B. 22.

(n122)Footnote 530. See, e.g., John R. Maxfield et al., Colorado Enacts Limited Liability Legislation, 19 Colo. Law. 1029 (1990); Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 7.70.101 - 7.70.931; Fla. Stat. chs. 608.401 - 608.471; Ind. Code Ann. § 23-16-10.1; Iowa Code Ann. § 545.901; Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-7601 - 17-7650; Alson R. Martin, The Kansas Limited Liability Acts, Business and Tax Considerations, J. Kan. B. Ass'n (Oct. 1990); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 9:3431; 2 Md. Ann. Code § 4A-204; Minn. Stat. § 211B.15 (1990); Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 86.011 - 86.571; Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 1528n, arts. 1.01 - 9.02; Utah Code Ann. §§ 48-26-101 - 48-26-156; Va. Code Ann. §§ 13.1-1000 - 13.1-1069; Allan G. Donn, Limited Liability Company: The New Form of Business Organization, 6 Va. Bus. 8 (Spring 1991); W. Va. Code § 31-1A-1; Wyo. Stat. §§ 17-15-101 - 17-15-136.

(n123)Footnote 531. See generally Tanner, California Limited Liability Company Issues, Recent Developments, Sec. Corps. Bus. Law, Cal. St. B. Program 521 (1991). It isn't clear whether California courts would respect an out-of-state L.L.C.'s limited liability status. Id. at 530. See also Robert R. Keatinge et al., The Limited Liability Company: A Study of the Emerging Entity, 47 Bus. Law. 378 (1992).

(n124)Footnote 532. Alan I. Wilensky, Deputy Assistant Treasury Secretary for Tax Policy, quoted in Saffrey A. Tannenbaum, States Are Sanctioning New Forms of Business, Wall St. J., July 17, 1992, at B1.

(n125)Footnote 533. Wyo. Stat. §§ 17-15-101 - 17-15-136; § 17-15-113.

(n126)Footnote 534. Id. § 17-15-116.

(n127)Footnote 535. Id. § 17-15-122.

(n128)Footnote 536. Id. § 17-15-123.

(n129)Footnote 537. Id. § 17-15-107(a)(ii).

(n130)Footnote 538. Rev. Rule 88-76, 1988-2 C.B. 360, 361-38. The Treasury ruling was based on a Wyoming

L.L.C. not having continuity of life, and so meeting one of two tests necessary to establish it wasn't an "association" taxable as a corporation. If a member of the L.L.C. ceases to be a member for any reason, continuity is not assured. A member's interest in a Wyoming L.L.C. is not freely transferable in the sense that the assignee can participate in managing partnership affairs without the unanimous consent of the other partners. Thus, two of the four characteristics of a corporation were missing. The Service had earlier concluded after six years of study that limited liability alone should not preclude an entity from being classified as a partnership. Announcement 88-118, 1988-38 I.R.B. 25. See Arthur B. Willis et al., Partnership Taxation § 34.10 (4th ed. 1989).

(n131)Footnote 539. See Comment, Wyoming Limited Liability Companies: Limited Liability and Taxation Concerns in Other Jurisdictions, 27 Land & Water L. Rev. 539 (1992).

(n132)Footnote 540. James L. Kuhle, The Long-Term Performance of Real Estate Investment Trusts, 9 Real Est. Fin. J. 25 (1992) (equity R.E.I.T.s have performed considerably better than mortgage R.E.I.T.s).

(n133)Footnote 541. Stan Ross & Richard Klein, REITs as a Source of Capital: Considerations for Sponsors, 9 Real Est. Fin. J. 13 (1992).

(n134)Footnote 542. The operational rules for a R.E.I.T. are quite complex as are many of the special status entities created by the Internal Revenue Code. See generally Kenneth C. Aldrich, Real Estate Investment Trusts: An Overview, 27 Bus. Law. 1165 (1972); Linda Galler, Tax Reform Act of 1986 Changes Affecting Real Estate Investment Trusts, 18 Tax Adviser 178 (1987).

(n135)Footnote 543. Norton Steuben, Real Estate Planning 166 (1980).

(n136)Footnote 544. Carol MacMillan Stanley, The Real Estate Investment Trust: Legal and Economic Aspects, 24 U. Miami L. Rev. 155, 158 (1969). The task of policing R.E.I.T.'s ownership is assumed by transfer agents who block disqualifying transfers.

(n137)Footnote 545. Id. at 159.

(n138)Footnote 546. An in-depth discussion of an Internal Revenue Code § 542 personal holding company is beyond the scope of this chapter. A personal holding company is created when 50% or more of the stock is owned by five or more individuals. The Internal Revenue Code is replete with income distribution requirements for such an entity. Suffice it to say the entity is taxable as a corporation if this occurs.

(n139)Footnote 547. As R.E.I.T.s come to be publicly taded on securities exchanges, this task becomes easier in the sense that listed securities are likely to widely held, and more difficult in the sense that ownership concentrations is less readily preventable.

(n140)Footnote 548. Interview with Bruce L. Ludwig, Senior Partner, and Stanton H. Zarrow, Senior Partner, TCW Realty Advisors, Los Angeles (Apr. 9, 1990).

(n141)Footnote 549. Michael F. Sfregola, Allen, Matkins, Leck, Gamble & Mallory, Lecture at Univ. of S. Cal. Law Ctr. (Nov. 30, 1990).

(n142)Footnote 550. Interview by Mark Feldman with Stanley Ross, Co-Managing Partner, Kenneth Leventhal & Co., Los Angeles (Mar. 23, 1990).

(n143)Footnote 551. Norton Steuben, supra n.410 at 169.

(n144)Footnote 552. Even though the proper dividend is not paid, the entity will not forfeit its R.E.I.T. status if failure was due to mistake (not fraud) and is promptly cured by a dividend distribution. The R.E.I.T. will be subject to a 4% excise tax on the excess of the required distribution for the year over the actual distribution for the year. I.R.C. §

4981(b); id. at 170.

(n145)Footnote 553. Thomas S. Loo, Partner in Bryan Cave; Adjunct Professor of Law, Univ. of S. Cal. Law Ctr., Lecture at Univ. of S. Cal. Law Ctr. (Nov. 30, 1990). Ignorance on the part of the seller can be a defense. Annotation, Defense of Ignorance of Untruth or Omission in Civil Action Under § 12(2) of Securities Act of 1933, 109 A.L.R. Fed. 444 (1992).

(n146)Footnote 554. 15 U.S.C. § 77(b), (1) (§ 2(1)) of the Securities Act of 1933 et seq. (hereinafter referred to as the "Securities Act"). The Securities Act generally requires the registration of securities publicly offered by a company or persons controlling a company, and the use of a prospectus in connection with such public offering. The Securities Act also regulates against fraud in connection with the sale of securities.

(n147)Footnote 555. 15 U.S.C. § 78a et seq. (hereinafter referred to as the "Exchange Act" or "Securities Exchange Act"). The Securities Exchange Act generally requires the registration of securities prior to listing and trading on an exchange, as well as the registration of over-the-counter securities in which there is a significant trading interest. The Securities Exchange Act also requires the registration with the Commission of broker-dealers, national securities exchanges, and associations of securities dealers. It also regulates fraud and manipulation in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, and generally regulates trading markets in securities.

(n148)Footnote 556. Matek v. Murat, 862 F.2d 720, 724 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n149)Footnote 557. See Alan R. Bromberg & Lewis D. Lowenfels, Securities Fraud and Commodities Fraud § 2.4 (1991).

(n150)Footnote 558. See Marc I. Steinberg & William E. Kaulbach, The Supreme Court and the Definition of "Security": The "Context" Clause, "Investment Contract" Analysis, and Their Ramifications, 40 Vand. L. Rev. 489, 520-521 (1987).

(n151)Footnote 559. See Robert C. Art, Sell a Condominium, Buy a Securities Lawsuit: Unwarranted Liabilities in the Secondary Market, 53 Ohio St. L.J. 415, 423 n.36, citing cases from the Fourth, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits (1992).

(n152)Footnote 560. Securities & Exchange Comm'n v. Glenn W. Turner Enters., 474 F.2d 476, 482 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 821 (1973).

(n153)Footnote 561. The S.E.C. has warned condo developers they may be offering securities when condo sales are tied to promises of profitability to the buyer by renting the unit, entering a rental pool agreement, or requiring the buyer to make the condo available for rental part or all of the year. Release 5347, Offers and Sales of Condominium Units in a Real Estate Development, Securities Act Release No. 33-5347, 1 Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (C.C.H.) § 1049 (Jan. 4, 1973) (listed at 17 C.F.R. § 231.5347).

See, e.g., Wooldridge Homes, Inc. v. Bronze Tree, Inc., 558 F. Supp. 1085 (D. Colo. 1983) (purchaser of unbuilt condos made $25,000 downpayment which developer placed in escrow account but developer obtained construction funds on strength of pre-sale).

(n154)Footnote 562. De Luz Ranchos Inv., Ltd. v. Coldwell Banker & Co., 608 F.2d 1297 (9th Cir. 1979); Note, Real Estate as Securities: Sales of Residential Subdivision Lots, 1979 Wash. U. L.Q. 965 (1979).

(n155)Footnote 563. Hocking v. Dubois, 885 F.2d 1449 (9th Cir. 1989). The Hocking case is criticized in Robert C. Art, Sell a Condominium, Buy a Securities Lawsuit: Unwarranted Liabilities in the Secondary Market, 53 Ohio St. L.J. 414 (1992).

(n156)Footnote 564. Matek v. Murat, 862 F.2d 720, 726 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n157)Footnote 565. See Goodwin v. Elkins, 730 F.2d 99 (3d Cir. 1984); Odom v. Slavik, 703 F.2d 212, 215 (6th Cir. 1983) (per curiam); Hirsch v. du Pont, 396 F. Supp. 1214, 1220 (S.D.N.Y. 1975), aff'd, 553 F.2d 750 (2d Cir. 1977); New York Stock Exch., Inc. v. Sloan, 394 F. Supp. 1303, 1314 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

(n158)Footnote 566. Williamson v. Tucker, 645 F.2d 404, 424 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 897 (1981).

(n159)Footnote 567. Id. See also Matek v. Murat, 862 F.2d 720 at 729 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n160)Footnote 568. Matek v. Murat, 862 F.2d 720, 730 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n161)Footnote 569. The court in In re National Mtg. Equity Corp., 723 F. Supp. 497 (C.D. Cal. 1989) held that mortgage-backed certificates weren't securities under federal and California securities laws because the investors weren't relying on the managerial or entrepreneurial efforts of others.

(n162)Footnote 570. Most court decisions have found loan participations not to be securities. See, e.g., Banco Espanol de Credito v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank, 763 F. Supp. 35 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 973 F.2d 51 (2d Cir. 1992); First Citizens Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Worthen Bank & Trust Co., N.A., 919 F.2d 510 (9th Cir. 1990); First Fin. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. E.F. Hutton Mtg. Corp., 834 F.2d 685 (8th Cir. 1987); McVay v. Western Plains Serv. Corp., 823 F.2d 1395 (10th Cir. 1987); United Am. Bank of Nashville v. Gunther, 620 F.2d 1108 (5th Cir. 1980). But see Lehigh Valley Trust Co. v. Central Nat'l Bank, 409 F.2d 989 (5th Cir. 1969). For a good argument that loan participations should be treated as securities, see Robert F. Kornegay, Jr., Bank Loans as Securities: A Legal and Financial Economic Analysis of the Treatment of Marketable Bank Assets Under the Securities Acts, 40 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 799 (1993).

(n163)Footnote 571. Cf. Amfac Mtg. Corp. v. Arizona Mall of Tempe, Inc., 583 F.2d 426 (9th Cir. 1978). A mortgage lender sued a shopping center developer, builder, and surety for securities law violations. The court held that the note and accompanying security instruments weren't securities because the lender wasn't taking an equity position in the deal. Payments of loan principal and interest were due the lender whether the center was profitable or not. Further, the loan was for construction and was to be disbursed not all at once but in phases as construction progressed. See also McGovern Plaza Joint Venture v. First of Denver Mtg. Inv., 562 F.2d 645 (10th Cir. 1977). But see First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Mortgage Corp. of the South, 467 F. Supp. 943 (N.D. Ala. 1979). In this case, the court suggested that a construction loan secured by an apartment complex and motel could be a security. The notes in this case were for 20 years and accounted for the bulk of the capital in the project.

(n164)Footnote 572. Arnold S. Jacobs, The Meaning of "Security" Under Rule 10b-5, 29 N.Y.L. Sch. L. Rev. 211 (1984); Michael J. Kaplan, Annotation, Promissory Notes As Securities Under § 2(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and § 3(a)(10) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 39 A.L.R. Fed. 357 (1978); Steven M. Larimore, Note, The Economic Realities of Defining Notes as Securities Under the Securities Act of 1933 and The Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 34 U. Fla. L. Rev. 400 (1982); Harlan S. Abrams, Comment, Commercial Notes and Definition of "Security" Under Securities Exchange Act of 1934: A Note is a Note is a Note?, 52 Neb. L. Rev. 478 (1973); Martin Lipton & George A. Katz, "Notes" Are Not Always Securities, 30 Bus. Law. 763 (1975); Stephen Jurman, Comment, Bank Loan Participations as Securities: Notes, Investment Contracts and the Commercial/Investment Dichotomy, 15 Duq. L. Rev. 261 (1977); Nathan W. Burchinow, Note, Liability of Lead Banks in Syndicated Loans Under the Securities Acts, 58 B.U. L. Rev. 45 (1978); William L. Stern & Douglas M. Rambler, Federal Securities Laws: The Dangers for Financial Institutions, 108 Banking L.J. 445 (1991); Thomas Cookson, Note, Loan Participation Agreements as Securities: Judicial Interpretations of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 24 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 295 (1983); Park McGinty, What is a Security? (unpublished paper on file with author).

(n165)Footnote 573. Reves v. Ernst & Young, 494 U.S. 56 (1990).

(n166)Footnote 574. Hereinafter the "S.E.C."

(n167)Footnote 575. The securities laws administered and enforced by the S.E.C. include: (1) the Securities Act of 1933, discussed supra; (2) the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, discussed supra; (3) the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, 15 U.S.C. §§ 77aaa - 77bbbb, which requires the use of an independent trustee in connection with the public offering of debt securities, and generally requires that such securities be issued only pursuant to a trust indenture, which contains certain prescribed provisions, including provisions controlling the responsibility and liability of the trustee; (4) the Investment Company Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. §§ 80a-1 - 80a-52, which requires the registration of investment companies and imposes a number of substantive requirements relating to the functioning of such companies; and (5) the Investment Advisers Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 80b-1 - 80b-21, which requires investment advisers with fifteen or more clients to register with the Commission, unless their business is exclusively intrastate. It also regulates fraudulent and other practices, and authorizes the Commission to impose remedial sanctions on specified grounds.

(n168)Footnote 576. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78d.

(n169)Footnote 577. 15 U.S.C. § 77e.

(n170)Footnote 578. Allan Sloan, Trump's Margin for Error on the Taj Is Not Big, L.A. Times, Apr. 9, 1990, at D5.

(n171)Footnote 579. 15 U.S.C. § 77c(a)(11).

(n172)Footnote 580. See S.E.C. Release No. 5349, Notice of Proposed Rule 147, in Real Estate Securities Guidelines '73, at 303-16 (1973), for a fuller explanation of Rule 147.

(n173)Footnote 581. Paul Goldstein, Real Estate Transactions 787 (rev. 2d ed. 1988).

(n174)Footnote 582. 17 C.F.R. § 230.501 et seq .

(n175)Footnote 583. 15 U.S.C. § 77d(2).

(n176)Footnote 584. See Billie J. Ellis, Jr., A Compliance Guide to Land Sales Marketing Regulation 68 (1992). Section 4(6) of the 1933 Act adopted the following in 1980:

> The provisions... shall not apply to transactions involving offers or sales by an issuer solely to one or more accredited investors, if the aggregate offering price of an issue of securities offered in reliance on this paragraph does not exceed the amount allowed under Section 3(b) of this title, if there is no advertising or public solicitation in connection with the transaction by the issuer or anyone acting on the issuer's behalf, and if the issuer files such notice with the Commission as the Commission shall prescribe...

Regulation A, 17 C.F.R. §§ 230.551 - 230.264, comprised of Rules 251 through 264, provides a method for an issuer to sell up to $1,500,000 of securities in a 12-month period. Adopted by the S.E.C. pursuant to its authority under Section 3(b) of the 1933 Act, Regulation A is labeled an exemption but actually represents a simplified registration.

(n177)Footnote 585. See James S. Mofksy, Blue Sky Restrictions on New Business Promotions 5-14 (1972), for a full history of the development of state blue sky laws.

(n178)Footnote 586. See Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U.S. 539, 550 (1917).

(n179)Footnote 587. Harold S. Bloomenthal et al., Securities Law Handbook 7 (1990-1991 ed.).

(n180)Footnote 588. Id. § 9.14, at 331.

(n181)Footnote 589. Id. at 331. Section 402(b)(9) of the Uniform Securities Act limits the exemption to offers made to just a few persons within the state in a 12-month period. In states with a similar exemption for limited offering, the number varies from 10 to 25 months.

(n182)Footnote 590. Id. at 331.

(n183)Footnote 591. Id. Excellent secondary sources exist which discuss state securities law exemptions. See id. at ch. 7 for a complete discussion of the exemptions granted by each state.

(n184)Footnote 592. Cal. Corp. Code § 25140(b); Alford v. Pierno, 104 Cal. Rptr. 110 (1972); Jones v. H.F. Ahmanson & Co., 460 P.2d 464 (Cal. 1969).

(n185)Footnote 593. Cal. Corp. Code § 25000 et seq.; Cal. Code Regs. tit. 10, § 250 et seq. See Quattrone v. Superior Court, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 (1975).

(n186)Footnote 594. Cal. Corp. Code § 25000 et seq .; Cal. Code Regs. tit. 10, § 250 et seq . Those guidelines set limits on how much of any investor's funds the promoter can siphon into personal wages, finders fees, and marketing to other investors. Cal. Code Regs. §§ 10.260.140 et seq . and 10.260.216 et seq. Moreover, if the offeror hasn't acquired or built the promised project, funds raised by investors must be escrowed and kept out of the promoter's pockets except for use as pledged. Cal. Code Regs. § 10.266.140 et seq., 10.260.216 et seq., and 10.260.151. See Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank v. Quincy Cass Assocs., 478 P.2d 37 (Cal. 1970).

(n187)Footnote 595. United Hous. Found., Inc. v. Forman, 421 U.S. 837, 852 (1975). See also S.E.C. v. Joiner Corp., 320 U.S. 344, 351 (1943) (an interest in a limited partnership is a security).

(n188)Footnote 596. See Annotation, Partnership and Joint Venture Interests as Securities Within Meaning of Federal Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C.S. § 77a et seq.) and Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C.S. § 78a et seq.), 58 A.L.R. Fed. 408, 416 (1982).

(n189)Footnote 597. Goodman v. Epstein, 582 F.2d 388 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 939 (1979), criticized in Conrad E.J. Everhard, The Limited Partnership Interest: Is It a Security? Changing Times, 17 Del. J. Corp. L. 441 (1992).

(n190)Footnote 598. Paul Goldstein, Real Estate Transactions 787 (rev. 2d ed. 1988).

(n191)Footnote 599. Frazier v. Manson, 651 F.2d 1078 (5th Cir. 1981).

(n192)Footnote 600. Sea Pines of Va., Inc. v. PLD, Ltd., 399 F. Supp. 708 (M.D. Fla. 1975).

(n193)Footnote 601. See Farnsworth v. Nevada-Cal Mgt., Ltd., 188 Cal. App. 2d 382 (1961), where a limited partnership that was not a public offering was held not to be a security within the purview of the corporate securities act, and compliance was not necessary to effect a valid transfer of such limited partnership interest.

(n194)Footnote 602. 15 U.S.C. § 77a et seq .

(n195)Footnote 603. Id. § 78a et seq .

(n196)Footnote 604. Securities Act of 1933 § 2(1), 15 U.S.C. § 77b(1); Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 3(a)(10), 15 U.S.C. § 78c(a)(10); Uniform Securities Act § 401(1).

(n197)Footnote 605. Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681 (1985).

(n198)Footnote 606. See generally Lynn et al., Real Estate Limited Partnerships 133-69 (1977).

(n199)Footnote 607. Offers and Sales of Condominiums or Units in a Real Estate Development, Securities Act Release No. 33-5347, 1 Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) § 1049 (Jan. 4, 1973) (listed at 17 C.F.R. § 231.5347).

(n200)Footnote 608. Hocking v. Dubois, 839 F.2d 560 (9th Cir. 1988), 885 F.2d 1449 (9th Cir. 1989).

+ § 12.16 has been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.02

Supp. to § 12.02 Rights of Aliens to Own Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 12.02(f) Property Disabilities of Enemy Aliens. [Go To Main]

Add:

Gonzalez v. Department of Transportation, 2004 Ga. App. LEXIS 198 (No. A03A1975, Feb. 13, 2004) (the right of aliens to bring suit in Georgia belongs only to aliens whose place of residence is within the United States).

Add:

Al Odah v. United States, 321 F.3d 1134, 355 U.S. App. D.C. 189 ; rev'd Rasul v. Bush, 124 S. Ct. 2686 (2004) (the court described enemy aliens as ones who had status as nationals of a country which is at war with the United States).

Add:

Coronel-Ortiz v. Gonzales, 203 Fed. Appx. 839 (9th Cir. 2006) (an alien was held to have no constitutionally protectable property right to obtain discretionary judicial relief from an order of removal); Ashkir v. United States, 46 Fed. Cl. 438 (2000) (a nonresident alien, a citizen of the Republic of Somalia, was denied standing to invoke the takings clause against the United States for 5th Amendment compensation claimed because of destruction of his property during U.S. armed forces' occupation of Somalia).

§ 12.02(g) Trend to Remove Property Disabilities of Aliens Ineligible for Citizenship. [Go To Main]

In line 2 of the second full paragraph change "However, a Wyoming statute expressly prohibits aliens ineligible for citizenship for holding land." to

"However, Wyoming repealed a statute prohibiting land ownership by nonresident aliens ineligible for citizenship."

In line 3 of the second full paragraph change "Kansas, Minnesota, and Wisconsin impose property restrictions on aliens ... " to

"Minnesota and Wisconsin impose property restrictions on aliens ... "

In line 5 of the second full paragraph change "Constitutional or statutory provisions in Arizona, Idaho, and Oregon that imposed disabilities on aliens ineligible for citizenship have all been repealed in recent years" to "Constitutional or statutory provisions in Arizona, Idaho, Kansas, Oregon, and Wyoming that imposed disabilities on aliens ineligible for citizenship have all been repealed in recent years."

Add:

Gabriel J. Chin, Heart Mountain Symposium Articles: Citizenship and Exclusion: Wyoming's Anti-Japanese Alien Land Law in Context, 1 Wyo. L. Rev. 497 (2001).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.03

Supp. to § 12.03 Married Persons' Property Disabilities.

[Go To Main]

§ 12.03(a) Historical Background. [Go To Main]

§ 12.03(a)(2) Under Early American Law.

Note 86, add:

Fred Franke, "Asset Protection and Tenancy by the Entirety," 34 ACTEC J. 210 (Spring 2009) (Married Women's Property Acts abrogated the dominance of a husband over his wife's property, thus reversing the common law and bringing parity of property rights to both spouses.)

Kenneth W. Kingma, "Property Division at Divorce or Death for Married Couples Migrating Between Common Law And Community Property States," 35 ACTEC J. 74 (Summer 2009) (explaining married Women's Property Acts gave women the right to own property even upon divorce)

Nancy Ray, Notes & Comments: III. Joint Accounts and Divorce Joint Accounts, Setoff, and Distribution of Marital Property in North Carolina. 4 N.C. Banking Inst. 475 (April, 2000).

add:

Canjar v. Cole, 770 N.W.2d 449 (Mich. App. 2009) (explaining although many legal structures remain intact to protect the marital estate, "nothing in the law today functions to prevent one spouse from acquiring property in an individual capacity without the consent of the other");

In re Estate of Miltenberger, 753 N.W.2d 219 (Mich. 2008) (Corrigan, J., concurring) (noting married women's property acts removed the disabilities of coverture).

§ 12.03(b)(2) Property Restrictions Related to Dower, Curtsey and Their Modern Equivalents.

Add:

Inlow v. Inlow, 797 N.E.2d 810 (Ind. App. 2003) (affirms statutory division of estate assets: 50% goes to the surviving spouse and 50% divided by the children).

Add:

Canjar v. Cole, 770 N.W.2d 449 (Mich. App. 2009) (explaining property acquired before marriage and property acquired independently during marriage remain a woman's property and she may dispose of them as she sees fit).

Add:

Elizabeth Barker Brandt, "The Origins of Idaho's Community Property System: An Attempt to Solve a Legislative Mystery," 46 Idaho L. Rev. 37 (2009).

§ 12.03(b)(4) Restrictions on Homestead Rights.

Add:

In re Littleton, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2012 (interpreting Tennessee's homestead exemption); Butturini v. Farmer, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 509 (interpreting Tennessee's homestead exemption); In re Staggs, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 84 (applying Tennessee's homestead exemption).

Add:

Nelson v. Nelson, 2010 Ala. Civ. App. LEXIS 34 (holding a spouse could not dissent from a conveyance of the marital estate after she signed a postnuptial agreement waiving her homestead rights); Yeager v. Lucy, 2008 Ala. LEXIS 58 (holding that for a spouse to be protected by the homestead exemption, the property at issue must be the spouse's place of actual residence, and holding that one spouse can abandon a homestead interest); Sheffield v. FDIC, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84308 (holding a husband may cancel a mortgage on the ground he forged his wife's signature, but that he must restore consideration paid by the mortgagee); In re Cox, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 1551 (imposing an equitable mortgage on a husband and wife despite the fact the wife's signature was not on the mortgage because the wife indicated through her actions that should would have signed the mortgage had it been presented to her); Nat'l City Bank v. Engler, 777 N.W.2d 762 (Minn. App. 2010) (holding the statute requiring both spouses to sign a conveyance of homestead property is complied with when a non-signing spouse participates in the mortgage process, including the closing, obtains a benefit from the mortgage, and waives any rights to the homestead). See Mask v. Wells Fargo Minn., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 4199 (finding a deed of trust valid, despite it never having been signed by the wife); cf. In re Burks, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 4120 (holding a deed of trust was not a purchase money security interest and therefore invalid, because it was not signed by both spouses); see also Ramsey v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3541 (invalidating a mortgage because the husband had no knowledge of the mortgage executed by the wife and his signature was forged); In re Grinstead, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2352 (explaining the homestead exemption does not give a spouse a property interest, merely the power to veto attempted conveyances by the other spouse alone); Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Parker, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 104 (invalidating a mortgage because it was not signed by the husband); Szawicki v. Szawicki, 2009 Neb. App. LEXIS 144 (finding a deed not signed by the wife which did not divest her of any interest in the property she would have been able to claim through the marriage was valid); Kaler v. Linne, 2008 Bankr. LEXIS 3559 (holding a mortgage was not enforceable because it was neither executed in the presence of witnesses nor notarized by both spouses); Hill v. Discover Bank (Discover Card) SA Discover Fin. Servs., 2008 Okla. Civ. App. LEXIS 88 (holding a husband's signature was not required for a wife to convey the couple's homestead because the husband's prior quitclaim deed to his wife stripped him of all ownership claims to the homestead).

Add:

Perry v. Dearing, 345 F.3d 303, 315 (5th Cir. 2003) (one who has a homestead interest in the possessory estate of a tenancy is able to protect the possessory interest from all creditors who do not have a better title, including the owner).

§ 12.03(b)(6) Restrictions on Conveyances Directly between Spouses.

Add:

Howard Fink, June Carbone, Between Private Ordering and Public Fiat: A New Paradigm for Family Law Decision-making, 5 J. L. Fam. Stud. 1 (2003).

add:

15A Am. Jur. 2d Community Property § 67 (discussing generally restrictions on transfers between spouses in community property states).

§ 12.03(b)(7) Restrictions Relating to Same Sex Married Couples.

Courts in every state face the challenge of forming jurisprudence relating to recognition of same sex marriages and any property rights associated with participants in those marriages. For at least the foreseeable future, it is likely that same sex couples generally will not enjoy the same range of property rights accorded heterosexual couples, either married or unmarried.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.04

Supp. to § 12.04 Property Disabilities Applied to Minors

[Go To Main]

add:

Cf. Peters v. ContiGroup, 292 S.W.3d 380 (Mo. Ct. App. 2009) (holding mere occupancy is enough for a minor to maintain a nuisance action).

Add:

A variety of transactions involving minors are governed by statute. See, e.g., Wilson v. Wilson, 154 P.3d 1136 (Kan. App. 2006) (reimbursement to parent-custodian in behalf of minor, governed by Kansas Uniform Transfer to Minors Act); McGehee v. McGehee, 342 B.R. 587 (W.D. Mo. 2006) (joint education account for mother (debtor) and her daughter not established in accordance with Missouri Uniform Transfers to Minors Act, and was therefore included in the bankruptcy estate).

add:

Juanda Lowder Daniel, "Virtually Mature: Examining the Policy of Minors' Incapacity to Contract Through the Cyberscope," 43 Gonz. L. Rev. 239 (2007/2008) (explaining a minor generally must return property if he or she disaffirms a contract).

§ 12.05(b) Conveyances Before Adjudication of Incompetency [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Estate of Johnson, 739 N.W.2d 493 (Iowa, 2007) (attempt by joint tenant to convey her interest in property was rendered invalid by her incompetency).

Add:

McMahan v. Webb, 990 So.2d 825 (Miss. App. 2008) (holding a deed executed by a woman that converted her fee simple interest into a tenancy in common with her sister was invalid because the deeding sister could not have understood the consequences of her conveyance); In re Marriage of Harp, 278 S.W.3d 681 (Mo. App. 2008) (holding that in the absence of clear, cogent, and convincing evidence that the party was mentally incompetent at the time a deed was signed the court would not set aside the deed); In re Estate of Pringle, 751 N.W.2d 277 (S.D. 2008) (holding despite evidence of later mental incompetence, a testator was not mentally incompetent when she signed her will); In re Moran v. Necaise, 821 So. 2d 903 (Miss. App., 2002) (held that a father's mental weakness did not reach the level of incompetence necessary to justify the setting aside of a deed).

Add:

See also Estate of Lee v. Hiler, 141 S.W.3d 517 (Mo. Ct. App. 2004) (following Gifford v. Geosling).

Change Bowden v. Griffin to Bowden v. Grindle.

§ 12.05(c) Conveyances After Adjudication of Incompetency. [Go To Main]

add:

Acuff v. Bumgarner, 2009 Ark. App. LEXIS 1003 (reversing a grant of summary judgment and ordering further review where one party knew at the time a deed was signed the other party had previously been deemed mentally incompetent in a court proceeding in another state).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.06

Supp. to § 12.06 Property Disabilities of Prisoners.

[Go To Main]

add:

Isaac Colunga, "An Alternative Look at the Takings Clause and Inmate Trust Accounts," 39 U. Tol. L. Rev. 791 (Summer 2008) (providing a history of common law prisoner property rights).

Add:

But see, Harrison v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 611 F. Supp. 2d 54 (D.D.C. 2009) (Civil Action No. 07-1543 (PLF), D.D.C. 2009) (the prisoner did not have a property right or liberty interest in commissary pricing). Dickens v. Taylor, 464 F. Supp. 2d 341 (D. Dela. 2006) (a prisoner had no property interest in determining his prison classification or housing assignment).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.07

Supp. to § 12.07 Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations to Acquire and Hold Real Property Interests.

[Go To Main]

§ 12.07(b) Rights of Non-profit Unincorporated Associations to Acquire and Hold Real Property Interests. [Go To Main]

§ 12.07(b)(1) Conveyances Considered as Void

In line 2 of the second paragraph of the subsection, change "tread" to "treat"

§ 12.07(b)(4) Conveyances Permitted to Be Made to the Association Directly.

Add:

Edwards v. Burke, 102 P.3d 1271 (Mont. 2004) (following Rehder v. Rankin).

§ 12.07(d) Rights of Unincorporated Associations to Control, Manage, and Transfer Real Property [Go To Main]

§ 12.07(d)(1) Associations That Are Subject to Hierarchical Control

Add:

See, Lloyd J. Lunceford, A Guide to Church Property Law: Theological, Constitutional and Practical Considerations (2006).

Add:

From the Heart Church Ministries, Inc. v. African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 370 Md. 152, 803 A.2d 548 (Md., 2002) (Question of ownership of property between local church and parent church must be resolved without inquiring into ecclesiastical questions).

Akoury v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, 2004 Mass. Super. LEXIS 349 (Mass. Super. Ct. 2004) (holding that the court cannot interfere with a church's ability to close local congregations).

Add:

Alivin J. Esau, The Judicial Resolution of Church Property Disputes: Canadian and American Models, 40 Alberta L. Rev. 767 (April, 2003) .

Add:

Jewish War Veterans' Mem. Home Ass'n v. Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America, 2004 U.S. Dist. Lexis 5426 (No. 03-40136, Mar. 30, 2004) (A subordinate organization cannot change its contractual relationship with the parent organization by amending the bylaws).

§ 12.07(d)(2) Associations That Are Not Subject to Hierarchical Control.

add:

Episcopal Church v. Gauss, 2009 Conn. Super LEXIS 226 (following the Trinity decision); Episcopal Church Cases, 198 P.3d 66 (Cal. 2009) (holding where the governing documents of the association made clear that property was held in trust for the general church, a local church could not maintain its claim to the property).

Add:

Viravgona v. Wat Buddha Samakitham, 279 S.W.3d 44 (Ark. 2009) (following Holiman's holding). Tubiolo v. Abundant Life Church, 605 S.E.2d 161 (N.C. Ct. App. 2004) (holding that local members have established property rights in their congregation and could challenge termination); but see Emory v. Jackson Chapel First Missionary Baptist Church, 598 S.E.2d 667 (N.C. Ct. App. 2004) (finding that local members had no established property rights).

Add Subsequent History to Antioch Temple, Inc. v. Parekh:

Overruled in part by, explained by Callahan v. First Congregational Church of Haverhill, 808 N.E.2d 301 (Mass. 2004) (explaining that the right to organize voluntary religious associations, disseminate religious doctrine, and to create religious tribunals is unquestioned while holding that congregational and hierarchical churches are entitled to autonomy over church disputes touching on matters of doctrine canon law, polity, discipline, and ministerial relationships).

Daniel R. Suhr, "On the Freedom of a Congregation: Legal Considerations when Lutherans Look to Change Denominational Affiliation," 13 Tex. Rev. L. & Pol. 365 (2009); Note, "Church Property and Institutional Free Exercise: The Constitutionality of Virginia Code Section 57-9," 95 Va. L. Rev. 1841 (2009) (arguing Virginia's statute that attempts to resolve property disputes in the event of church division may be unconstitutional).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.09

Supp. to § 12.09 Property Rights of Non-stock Private Religious Corporations.

[Go To Main]

§ 12.09(a) Property Rights Related to Corporate Governance. [Go To Main]

Add:

Camp St. Mary's Assn. of the W. Ohio Conference of United Methodist Church, Inc. v. Otterbein Homes, 889 N.E.2d 1066 (Ohio App. 2008) (absolute and irrevocable gift of property to a church-related nonprofit corporation); Maffei v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, 867 N.E.2d 300 (Mass. 2007) (gift of real property from parishioners to the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, a corporation sole).

Second International Baha'i Council v. Chase, 106 P.3d 1168 (Mont. 2005) (in a dispute over property held by a religious organization, the trial court considered the issue of the leader's control of the property in his capacity as corporate president).

See, Meghaan Cecilia McElroy, Note, "Possession is Nine Tenths of the Law: But Who Really Owns a Church's Property in the Wake of a Religious Split Within a Hierarchical Church?" 50 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 311 (2008).

§ 12.09(b) Property Rights Related to Statutory Regulation [Go To Main]

add:

VA. CODE ANN. § 57-20 (benevolent associations cannot hold more than five acres of land at any one time).

Add:

Merkos L'Inyonei Chinuch, Inc. v. Sharf, 873 N.Y.S.2d 145 (2009) (action by religious organization to recover possession of property used by the congregation).

In the Matter of Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, 125 P.3d 1090 (Kan. App. 2006) (tax exemption for religious property used exclusively for religious purposes); Condemnation Proceeding by Redevelopment Authority of Philadelphia, 891 A.2d 820 (Pa. Commw. 2006) (taking private property by eminent domain, as part of a redevelopment project, and then turning the property over to private religious organization to construct and operate a school violates the establishment clause).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.10

Supp. to § 12.10 Property Rights of Non-Stock Private Cemetery Corporations

[Go To Main]

delete:

N.J. STAT. ANN. § 8A:6-1 (statute has been repealed).

In line 8 of note 342 change "TENN. CODE ANN. § 46-2-102" to 'TENN. CODE. ANN. § 46-1-108".

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.12

Supp. to § 12.12 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations Generally

[Go To Main]

Change* ALA. CODE § 10-2A-20 to ALA. CODE § 10-2b-3.02.

delete:

OR. REV. STAT. § 708.400(3).

Add:

In re Barfield, 261 B.R. 793 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2001) (A corporation may transfer property outside the ordinary course of business if it has the approval of the shareholders).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.13

Supp. to § 12.13 Property Rights of Stock Private Corporations for Public Utilities

[Go To Main]

add:

Hash v. United States, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23098 (applying Idaho Code § 62-104).

In line 1 of note 377 change WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 81-360010 to WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 81-36-010.

add:

TE Prods. Pipeline Co., LLC v. Davidson Ranch, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50103 (holding a utility's right of condemnation under Arkansas law does not include a right to condemn private property for the purpose of accessing its right-of-way).

Add:

City of Freeman v. Salis, 630 N.W.2d 699 (S.D. 2001) (City is given great discretion in finding necessity, the findings must substantially violate logic and indicate gross abuse).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.15

Supp. to § 12.15 Property Rights of Private Corporations in Other Jurisdictions

[Go To Main]

Change:

In line 1 of note 405 change

IDAHO CODE ANN. § 30-1-106(g) to IDAHO CODE ANN. § 30-1-1501(g) (statute providing an out-of-state corporation must be certified to transact business in the state).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.16

Supp. to § 12.16 Choice of Entity for Acquiring and Holding Real Property Interests

[Go To Main]

§ 12.16(a) Missing [Go To Main]

§ 12.16(a)(1) Missing

§ 12.16(a)(1)(i) The Role of the Lawyer in Setting Up the Entity

Rule 2.2 of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct has been deleted (http://www.abanet.org/cpr/mrpc/mrpc_toc.html). Presumably, the type of conflict described in this section is now governed by Model Rules 1.7-1.10.

Add:

Manion v. Nagin, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1776 (No. 3-02-CV-2294-N, Feb. 6, 2004) (State rules of professional responsibility are designed to make it easier for the attorney to represent the interests of the corporation without the conflicting responsibility to represent the individual members of the corporation.)

Add:

William H. Simon, Whom or (What) Does the Organization's Lawyer Represent?: An Anatomy of Intraclient Conflict, 91 Calif. L. Rev. 57 (2003).

Darian M. Ibrahim, Article: Solving The Everyday Problem of Client Identity in the Context of Closely Held Businesses, 56 ALA. L. REV. 181 (Fall, 2004).

§ 12.16(a)(4) Management, all General Partners Run the Show

add:

See Uniform Partnership Act (1994)(1997), http://www.nccusl.org/Update/uniformact_factsheets/uniformacts-fs-upa9497.asp (listing the states that have adopted a version of the Uniform Partnership Act).

§ 12.16(a)(4)(i) Management: All General Partners Run the Show

Add:

Ingram v. Deere, 288 S.W.3d 886 (Tex. 2009) (explaining the determination of whether a partnership exists is based on the totality of the circumstances, including profit sharing and intention of the parties, among other factors); Walker v. White, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125581 (following the Ingram v. Deere decision). Cap Care Group, Inc. v. McDonald, 561 S.E.2d 578 (N.C. App. 2002) (Evidence supported conclusion that valid partnership was formed between commercial real estate companies and a business partner; wife stated that she was aware of partnership and that the course of business indicated that there was a partnership).

§ 12.16(a)(8) Corporation.

§ 12.16(a)(8)(ii) Liability

Add:

Estate of Crescent Machinery v. Roberson, 2003 Bankr. LEXIS 546 (No. 02-41005-DML-11, Jun. 5, 2003).

add:

E. Hampton Union Free Sch. Dist. v. Sandpebble Builder, Inc., 66 A.D.3d 122 (N.Y. App. Div. 2009) (holding the evidence was insufficient to show an owner abused the corporate privilege because, in part, there was no evidence the owner undercapitalized the business).

§ 12.16(a)(8)(iii) Dissolution.

Add:

C-One Tech. v. Mount & Stoelker, P.C., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77642 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 3, 2009) ; Valley Forge Ins. Co. v. APL Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35857 (C.D. Cal. March 16, 2010) (finding that an insurance company could be sued even after dissolution of a corporation in the course of winding up the corporation's affairs); City of Rialto v. United States DOD, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2219 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 3, 2005) (explaining the holding in Penasquitos, Inc. v. Superior Court).

§ 12.16(a)(9) Limited Partnership

§ 12.16(a)(9)(i) Management

In line 1 of note 538 change DeSimoni v. Brusco, 235 Cal. Rptr. 711 to DeSimoni v. Brusco, 236 Cal Rptr. 711.

§ 12.16(a)(9)(iii) Transferability

In line 4 of note 566 change* two years to one year.

§ 12.16(a)(10) S Corporation.

§ 12.16(a)(10)(iii) Management.

Add:

Luiz v. Commisioner, 87 T.C.M. (CCH) 838 (T.C. 2004) (criticized the 11th Circuit's Selfe decision and held that taxpayers could only deduct losses in connection with an S corporation up to, but not exceeding, their basis in the corporation).

§ 12.16(a)(11) The Limited Liability Company.

Add:

Fla. Stat. Ann. § 608.401 amended by 2002 Fla. Sess. Law Serv. Ch. 2002-272 (C.S.H.B. 787).

§ 12.16(a)(11)(i) Tax.

Add:

Rev. Rul. 88-76, 1988-2 C.B. 360, 361 superseded by Rev. Rul. 98-37, 1998-2 C.B. 133, 133-34 .

, Cal. Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 23091, 23092 have been repealed.

In line 1 of note 585 change CAL. REV. & TAX CODE §§ 23901, 2902, 23153 to CAL. REV. & TAX CODE §§ 17941-17947.

§ 12.16(a)(11)(ii) Management.

In line 3 of note 586 change

Texas H.B. No 278 § 46, Arts. 2.12 and 2.13 to TEX. BUS. ORGS. CODE §§ 101.607, 101.608.

Add:

ALA. CODE § 10-12-21; COLO. REV. STAT. §§ 7-80-108; [Go To Main] (permitting the LLC agreement to modify the duties of members and managers, as long as the agreement does not eliminate liability in certain situations).

§ 12.16(a)(11)(iii) Transferability.

In line 1 of note 595 change

UTAH CODE ANN. § 48-2b-131(1) to UTAH CODE ANN. § 48-2c-804(2).

In line 1 of note 603 delete:

COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 7-80-204(b); 95; KAN. STAT. ANN. § 17-7607(a)(2); Tex. H.B. No. 278, § 46 art. 3.02(2); 1991 NEV. STAT. § 290(b) (the limitation no longer appears in any of these statutes; only the Wyoming statute continues to have a 30-year limitation)

§ 12.16(a)(11)(iv) Continuity.

Add:

Rev. Rul. 88-76,1988-2 C.B. 360, 361 superseded by , Rev. Rul. 98-37, 1998-2 C.B. 133, 133-34 .

§ 12.16(a)(11)(v) Liability.

In line 1 of note 609 change

1710(a) to 17101(a)

In line 1 of note 609 change

"Neither the members, the managers, nor the employees of a limited liability company are personally liable under a judgment, decree, or order of the court or any other manner, for a debt, obligation, or liability of the limited liability company. UTAH CODE ANN. § 48-2b-109" to "[N]o organizer, member, manager, or employee of a company is personally liable under a judgment, decree, or order of a court, or in any other manner, for a debt, obligation, or liability of the company or for the acts or omissions of the company or of any other organizer, member, manager, or employee of the company. UTAH CODE ANN. § 48-2c-601."

§ 12.16(a)(11)(viii) Limited Liability Partnerships for Professionals

In line 1 of note 622 change

MINN. STAT. ANN. § 323.14 to MINN. STAT. ANN. § 323A.0306.

In line 1 of note 622 delete:

As the reporters' notes to Minn. Stat. Ann § 323.14 state: "The shield protects only against liability derived from partner status; it does not affect claims based on personal misconduct. For example, a partner who is culpably negligent cannot use the L.L.P. shield to defend against his or her own personal liability." (This statute has been repealed and thus the reporter's note to this section is no longer relevant)

Add:

Douglas R. Richmond, "The Partnership Paradigm and Law Firm Non-equity Partners," 58 Kan. L. Rev. 507 (2010) (discussing LLP liability regimes).

In line 2 delete:

"DEL. CODE ANN. § 6-156(a) (requires a minimum financial responsibility of $1,000,000 for L.L.P.s)." (this statute has been superseded by 6 DEL. CODE ANN. § 15-1001-04 which does not require liability insurance).

In line 1 change

CAL. CORP. CODE § 15002 to CAL. CORP. CODE § 16101(14).

In line 1 of note 627 change

TEX. REV. STAT. ANN. Art. 6132b, § 5 to *TEX. BUS. ORGS. CODE § 152.801-0*4.

In line 1 of note 627 delete:

"6 DEL. CODE ANN. § 6-1515; KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 362.220" (these statutes have been superseded by statutes that provide for more than just tort liability protection).

Add:

KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 362.200(2) (providing for protection from contract liability).

In line 1 change

"DEL. CODE ANN. § 6-1544 (Registration and Annual Renewal: $100 multiplied by the number of partners, Maximum $150,000)" to "6 DEL. CODE ANN. § 15-1207 (identifying the costs associated with LLP filing)".

In line 2 change

"FLA. STAT. ANN. § 620.78 (Registration and Annual Renewal: $100 multiplied by the number of partners, Maximum $150,000)" to "FLA. STAT. ANN. § 620.81055".

In line 3 of note 629 change

TENN. CODE ANN. § 61-1-143 to TENN. CODE ANN. § 61-1-1001

In line 5 of note 629 change

(Registration: $25 for the first two partners, plus $3 multiplied by the number of partners over the first two; annual renewal $25) to (Registration: $35, plus $3 multiplied by the number of partners over the first two; annual renewal $25).

Registration:

Change:

ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 29-244 to ARIZ.REV. STAT. ANN. § 29-1101o.

Change:

CAL. CORP. CODE § 15049 to CAL. CORP. CODE § 16953.

Change:

CONN. GEN. STAT. § 34-81b to CONN. GEN. STAT. § 34-419.

Change:

DEL. CODE. ANN. § 6-1546 to 6 DEL. CODE. ANN. § 15-1001.

Change:

D.C. CODE ANN. § 41-143 to D.C. CODE ANN. § 33.110.01.

Change:

1995 Fla. Sess. Law Serv. 242 § 620.78 to FLA. CODE ANN. § 628.9001o.

Change:

IDAHO CODE § 53-343A to IDAHO CODE § 53-3-306.

Change:

ILL. REV. STAT. Ch. 805 act 205 § 8.1 to 805 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN 206/1001.

Change:

IND. CODE ANN. § 23-4-1-35 to IND. CODE ANN. § 23-4-1-45.

Change:

IOWA CODE § 486.44 to IOWA CODE § 486A.1001.

Change:

KAN. STAT. ANN. § 56-345 to KAN. STAT. ANN. § 56a-306.

Change:

MD. CORPS & ASS'NS CODE ANN. § 9-801 to MD. CORPS & ASS'NS CODE. ANN. § 9A-801

Change:

MINN. STAT. § 323.44 to MINN. STAT. § 323A.1001.

Change:

MISS. CODE ANN. § 79-12-87 to MISS. CODE ANN. § 79-13-1001.

Change:

"1995 N.J. ALS 96. Will be codified at N.J. REV. STAT § 42:1-40" to "N.J. REV. STAT. § 42:1A-2.

Change:

N.M. STAT. ANN. § 54-1-44 to N.M. STAT. ANN. § 54-1A-1001.

Change:

OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1775.61 to OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1776.61.

Change:

"1995 Or. ALS 689. Will be codified at OR. REV. STAT. § 68.620" to "OR. REV. STAT. § 67.590".

Change: .

1994 Pa. Legis. Serv. 106 § 8201 to 15 PA. C.S. § 8506

Change:

S.D. CODIFIED LAWS ANN. § 48-7-108 to S.D. CODIFIED LAWS ANN. § 48-7A-1001.

Change:

TENN. CODE ANN. Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code § 61-1-1001.

Change:

TEX. REV. CIV. STAT. ANN. Art. 6132b, § 45-A to TEX. BUS. ORGS. CODE § 152.802.

Change:

VA. CODE ANN. § 50-43.1 to VA. CODE ANN. § 50-73.132.

Change:

1995 Wash. Legis. Serv. 337 § 25.04.3 to WASH. REV. CODE § 25.05.500.

Change:

"1995 Wis. ALS 97. Will be codified at Wis. Stat. § 178.40" to "WIS. STAT. § 178.40".

Liability:

Change:

ARIZ. REV STAT. ANN. § 29-215 to ARIZ. REV STAT. ANN. § 29-1026.

Change:

CAL. CORP. CODE § 15015 to CAL. CORP. CODE § 16306.

Change:

CONN. GEN. STAT. § 34-53 to CONN. GEN. STAT § 34-327.

Change:

DEL. CODE. ANN. § 6-1515 to 6 DEL. CODE. ANN. § 15-306.

Change:

D.C. CODE ANN. § 41-146 to D.C. CODE ANN. § 33-103.06.

Change:

1995 Fla. Sess. Law Serv. 242 § 620.79 to FLA. CODE ANN. § 620.8306.

Change:

IDAHO CODE § 53-315 to IDAHO CODE § 53-3-306.

Change:

ILL. REV. STAT. Ch. 805 act 205, § 15 to 805 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN 206/306.

**

Change:

IOWA CODE § 486.15 to IOWA CODE § 486A.306.

Change:

KANS. STAT. ANN. § 56-315 to KAN. STAT. ANN. § 56a-1001.

Change:

MD. CORPS & ASS'NS CODE ANN. § 9-307 to MD. CORPS & ASS'NS CODE ANN. § 9A-307.

Change:

MINN. STAT. § 323.14 to MINN. STAT. § 323A.0306.

Change:

MISS. CODE ANN. § 79-12-29 to MISS. CODE ANN. § 79-13-306.

Change:

"1995 N.J. ALS 96. Will be codified at N.J. REV. STAT § 42:1-15" to "N.J. REV. STAT. § 42:1A-18".

Change:

N.M. STAT. ANN. §54-1-48 to N.M. STAT. ANN. § 54-1A-306.

Change:

N.D. CENT. CODE § 45-22-03 to N.D. CENT. CODE § 45-22-08.

Change:

OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1775.61 to OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1776.36.

Change:

"1995 Or. ALS 689. Will be codified at OR. REV. STAT. § 68.279" to "OR. REV. STAT. § 67.105".

Change:

1994 Pa. Legis. Serv. 106 § 8204 to 15 PA. C.S. § 8523.

Change:

S.D. CODIFIED LAWS ANN. § 48-2-15 to S.D. CODIFIED LAWS ANN. § 48-7A-306.

Change:

TENN. CODE ANN. § 61-1-114 to TENN. CODE. ANN. § 61-1-306.

Change:

Article 9 of Uniform Commercial Code, § 15 to TEX. BUS. ORGS. CODE § 152.801.

Change:

VA. CODE ANN. § 50-15 to VA. CODE ANN. § 50.73.96.

Change:

1995 Wash. Legis. Serv. 337 § 15.04.7 to WASH. REV. CODE. § 25.05.125.

Change:

"1995 Wis. ALS 97. Will be codified at Wis. Stat. § 178.12" to "WIS. STAT. § 178.12".

§ 12.16(b) Application of Securities Laws [Go To Main]

§ 12.16(b)(2) What Is a Security?

In line 1 of note 646 change"

15 U.S.C. § 77(b), (1) (§ 2(1)) to 15 U.S.C. § 77a(2)(a)(1).

In line 1 of note 646 change

15 U.S.C. § 77b(1) to 15 U.S.C. § 77a(2)(a)(1).

add:

James D. Gordon III, "Common Enterprise and Multiple Investors, a Contractual Theory for Defining Investment Contracts and Notes," 1998 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 635 (1998) (discussing the problems with the commonality tests used by various courts).

Add:

Schruefer v. Winthorpe Grant, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3650 (No. 99 cv 9365 (GBD), Mar. 12, 2003).

§ 12.16(b)(2)(iii) When is a "Note" a Security?

Add:

See also SEC v. Edwards, 540 U.S. 389 (2004) ; SEC v. Global Teecom Servs. L.L.C., 325 F. Supp. 2d 94 (D. Conn. 2004) ; United States v. Pendergraph, 388 F.3d 109 (4th Cir. 2004) ; SEC v. Mut. Benefits Corp., 323 F. Supp. 2d 1337 (S.D. Fla. 2004) ; Boo'ze v. State, 2004 Del. LEXIS 145 (Del. 2004) ; Silvia v. Sec'y of the Commonwealth, 810 N.E.2d 825 (Mass. App. Ct. 2004) ; Perrysburg Twp. V. City of Rossford, 814 N.E.2d 44 (Ohio 2004) ; Bailey v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7992 (Tex. App. 2004) ; State v. Pedersen, 95 P.3d 385 (Wash. App. 2004) .

add:

Liberty Prop. Trust v. Republic Props. Corp., 577 F.3d 335 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (holding limited partnership interests were a security because real estate developers did have sufficient control of the limited partnership); Consolidated Mgmt. Group, LLC v. Dep't of Corps., 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS (applying the Williamson v. Tucker factors and finding the interests, although general partnership-like, were securities).

§ 12.16(b)(3) Federal Securities Laws

§ 12.16(b)(3)(iv) Liability Issues for Non-Promoters

Add:

Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., 552 U.S. 148 (U.S. 2008) (discussing and following the Central Bank holding). S.E.C. v. Peretz, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9512 (No. 00-11981-PBS, Apr. 13, 2004).

§ 12.16(b)(4)(ii) State Subdivided Lands Act.

In line 1 of note 702 change

First Amendment to ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 33-1223 et. seq.

§ 12.16(b)(4)(iii) State Securities (Blue Sky) Laws

In line 1 of note 723 delete

ARK. CODE ANN. § 67-1246.

151 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 12 SPECIAL PROBLEMS OF REAL PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

2-12 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 12.17

Supp. to § 12.17 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Books

Lloyd J. Lunceford, A Guide to Church Property Law: Theological, Constitutional and Practical Considerations (2006).

Add to Articles:

Brandt, Elizabeth Barker "The Origins of Idaho's Community Property System, an Attempt to Solve a Legislative Mystery," 46 Idaho L. Rev. 37 (2009).

Brower, Todd "It's Not Just Shopping, Urban Lofts, and The Lesbian Gay-By Boom: How Sexual Orientation Demographics Can Inform Family Courts," 17 Am. U. J. Gender Soc. Pol'y & L. 1 (2009).

Colunga, Isaac "An Alternative Look at the establishment clause and Inmate Trust Accounts," 39 U. Tol. L. Rev. 791 (Summer 2008).

Daniel, Juanda Lowder "Virtually Mature: Examining the Policy of Minors' Incapacity to Contract Through the Cyberscope," 43 Gonz. L. Rev. 239 (2007/2008).

Ehrlich, Elizabeth. "Taking the Religion Out of Religious Property Disputes," 46 B.C. L. Rev. 1069 (September, 2005).

Finetti, Cristina. "Limiting the Scope of Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act: Why RLUIPA Should Not Be Amended to Regulate Eminent Domain Actions Against Religious Property," 38 Seton Hall L. Rev. 667 (2008).

Angela M. Ford, "Private Alienage Discrimination and the Reconstruction Amendments," 49 U. Kan. L. Rev. 457 (Jan.

2001).

Franke, Fred "Asset Protection and Tenancy by the Entirety," 34 ACTEC J. 210 (Spring 2009).

Gordon III, James D. "Common Enterprise and Multiple Investors, a Contractual Theory for Defining Investment Contracts and Notes," 1998 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 635 (1998).

Jennings, Marianne J. "Hidden Disabilities: Antidiscrimination Laws and Their Impact on Use of Real Property," 24 Real Est. L.J. 165 (Fall 1995).

Kingma, Kenneth W. "Property Division at Divorce or Death for Married Couples Migrating Between Common Law And Community Property States, 35 ACTEC J. 74 (Summer 2009).

Moritz, J. Kenneth. "Pacific Gas and Electric Co. v. California Public Utilities Commission: Property in an Envelope," 49 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 229 (Fall 1987).

Note, "Church Property and Institutional Free Exercise: The Constitutionality of Virginia Code Section 57-9, 95 Va. L. Rev. 1841 (2009).

Peluso, Stephen. "Protecting and Managing the Property of Persons with Mental Retardation," 5 Conn. Prob. L.J. 125 (1989).

Richmond, Douglas R. "The Partnership Paradigm and Law Firm Non-equity Partners," 58 Kan. L. Rev. 507 (2010).

Robin Rose Stiller, "International Estate Planning 101: A Basic Guide to Estate Planning for Non-Citizen Clients," 15 Akron Tax. J. 121 (2000).

Rosich-Schwartz, Damaris, "Tenancy by the Entirety: The Traditional Version of the Tenancy is the Best Alternative for Married Couples, Common Law Marriages, and Same-Sex Partnerships," 84 N.D. L. Rev. 23 (2008).

Strasser, Mark "As Iowa Goes, So Goes The Nation: Varnum v. Brien and its Impact on Marriage Rights for Same-Sex Couples: Symposium Article: The Legal Landscape Post-DOMA," 13 J. Gender, Race & Just. 153 (2009).

Suhr, Daniel R. "On the Freedom of a Congregation: Legal Considerations when Lutherans Look to Change Denominational Affiliation," 13 Tex. Rev. L. & Pol. 365 (2009).

Vladeck, Stephen I. Enemy Aliens, Enemy Property, and Access to the Courts, 11 Lewis & Clark L. Rev. 963 (Winter 2007) .

Zayac, Sandra R. Zagier and Robert A. Zayac, Jr. "Georgia's Married Women's Property Act: An Effective Challenge to Coverture," 15 Tex. J. Women & L. 81 (Fall 2005).

Add to Annotations:

Annotation, Gift or Other Voluntary Transfer by Husband as Fraud on Wife, 49 A.L.R.2d 521 .

Annotation, Power of either spouse, without consent of other, to make gift of community property or funds to third party, 17 A.L.R.2d 1118 , sec. 6.

Annotation, Partner's Breach of Fiduciary Duty to CoPartner on Sale of Partnership Interest to Another Partner, 4 A.L.R. 4th 1122 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 13.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.syn Synopsis to Chapter 13: THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

§ 13.01 Introduction.

§ 13.02 Definition and Characteristics of Personal Property.

§ 13.02(a) Definitions; Personal Property Distinguished from Real Property.

§ 13.02(a)(1) Personal Property as All Property That Is Not Real Property.

§ 13.02(a)(2) Personal Property as Distinguished by Personal Actions Rather than Real Actions; the Hybrid Property Traits of Chattels Real.

§ 13.02(a)(3) Personal Property as Movable Rather than Immovable Property.

§ 13.02(a)(4) Intangible Forms of Personal Property.

§ 13.02(a)(5) Examples of the Uncertain Distinction Between Personal and Real Property.

§ 13.02(b) Fixtures as Personal Property.

§ 13.02(c) Crops as Personal Property.

§ 13.02(d) Choses in Action as Personal Property.

[Go To Main]How Ownership of Personal Property Is Originally Acquired.

§ 13.03(a) The Importance of Possession.

§ 13.03(b) Original and Successive Acquisition of Possession.

§ 13.03(c) Personal Property Rights in Wild Animals.

§ 13.04 How Ownership of Personal Property Is Transferred.

§ 13.04(a) Transfers by Gift.

§ 13.04(a)(1) Types of Gifts.

§ 13.04(a)(2) Inter Vivos Gifts.

§ 13.04(a)(2)(i) Delivery.

§ 13.04(a)(2)(ii) Intent.

§ 13.04(a)(2)(iii) Acceptance.

§ 13.04(a)(3) GiftsCausa Mortis.

§ 13.04(b) Transfers upon Death.

§ 13.04(b)(1) Succession Under Intestacy.

§ 13.04(b)(1)(i) General Rules.

§ 13.04(b)(1)(ii) Uniform Probate Code Provisions for Intestate Succession.

§ 13.04(b)(2) Testamentary Transfers.

§ 13.04(c) Transfer by Sale.

§ 13.04(d) Transfers to Adverse Possessors.

§ 13.04(e) Transfers to Finders.

§ 13.04(e)(1) The Basic Rules of Finders' Rights.

§ 13.04(e)(2) Exceptions for Misplaced Items.

§ 13.04(e)(3) Statutory Modifications of the Judicial Rules.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(i) Florida.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(ii) Hawaii.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(iii) Illinois.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(iv) Iowa.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(v) Michigan.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vi) Montana.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vii) New Hampshire.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(viii) New York.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(ix) Oklahoma.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(x) Oregon.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xi) Vermont.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xii) Washington.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xiii) The Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

§ 13.04(f) Transfers to Judgment Creditors.

§ 13.04(g) Transfer by Accession.

§ 13.04(g)(1) General Principles of Accession.

§ 13.04(g)(2) No Accession After Wrongful Taking.

§ 13.04(g)(3) No Accession if the Property's Identity Is Not Lost.

§ 13.04(g)(4) No Accession if No Significant Value Is Added.

§ 13.04(g)(5) The Impact of Accession on Security Interests in the Goods.

§ 13.04(g)(6) Accession of Personalty to Realty.

§ 13.04(g)(7) Rules for Relief by Recovery of Damages Rather than the Property Itself.

§ 13.04(h) Transfers Under the Doctrine of Confusion.

§ 13.05 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Fixtures.

§ 13.05(a) Rights Following Actual and Constructive Severance.

§ 13.05(b) Rights of Mortgagees and Other Lienors of the Real Property.

§ 13.05(c) Rights to Fixtures Attached by a Tenant.

§ 13.05(c)(1) Residential Tenants' Fixtures.

§ 13.05(c)(2) Tenants' Agricultural and Trade Fixtures.

§ 13.05(c)(2)(i) Trade Fixtures.

§ 13.05(c)(2)(ii) Agricultural Fixtures.

§ 13.05(d) Third Parties', Trespassers', Cotenants', and Licensees' Rights in Fixtures.

§ 13.05(e) Rights to Fixtures Attached by Someone Other than the Chattel Owner.

§ 13.05(e)(1) Items Wrongfully Taken from Owner.

§ 13.05(e)(2) Items Taken from Owner with Consent.

§ 13.05(f) Prior and Subsequent Security Interests in Fixtures.

§ 13.06 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Crops.

§ 13.06(a) Competing Claims of Grantor and Grantee of the Land.

§ 13.06(b) Competing Claims of Buyer and Seller of the Crops.

§ 13.06(c) Competing Claims of Owner and Adverse Possessor of the Land.

§ 13.06(d) Competing Claims When the Landowner Dies.

§ 13.06(e) Competing Claims of Landowner and Security Interest Holder.

§ 13.07 Bailments.

§ 13.07(a) Elements of Bailments.

§ 13.07(b) Degree of Care Required of Bailees.

§ 13.07(c) Limiting or Extending the Bailee's Standard of Care.

§ 13.07(d) The Bailee's Duty to Redeliver.

§ 13.07(e) Bailee's Use of the Bailed Goods.

§ 13.07(f) Bailee Actions Against Third Parties.

§ 13.07(g) Implied Bailments.

§ 13.08 Possessory Liens.

§ 13.08(a) "Specific" Common Law Possessory Liens.

§ 13.08(b) "General" Common Law Possessory Liens.

§ 13.08(c) The Element of Consent in Lien Creation.

§ 13.08(d) Priority Between Liens and Other Security Interests.

§ 13.08(e) Liens for Specific Classes of Claimants.

§ 13.08(e)(1) Bankers.

§ 13.08(e)(2) Carriers.

§ 13.08(e)(3) Innkeepers.

§ 13.08(e)(4) Lawyers.

§ 13.09 Pledges or Pawns.

§ 13.10 Joint Bank Accounts.

§ 13.10(a) True Joint Tenancies.

§ 13.10(b) Survivorship Accounts.

§ 13.10(c) Convenience Accounts.

[Go To Main]Stolen Goods.

§ 13.12 Personal Property Subject to Special Regulation.

§ 13.12(a) Treasure.

§ 13.12(b) Salvage.

§ 13.12(c) Cultural Property.

§ 13.13 Bibliography.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.01 Introduction.

This chapter sets out the principal points of law governing personal property in American jurisdictions, especially as those points relate to or impact on the American law of real property. The distinctions between personal and real property are often vague and shifting, so exposition of real property law is incomplete without a discussion of the legal doctrines of personal property that lurk at the edges of land law.

The major topics of this chapter are gifts, sales, lost property, intestate transfers, fixtures, bailments and liens.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.02 Definition and Characteristics of Personal Property.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.02(a) Definitions; Personal Property Distinguished from Real Property.

§ 13.02(a)(1) Personal Property as All Property That Is Not Real Property.

Between the two terms "real property" and "personal property" should be encompassed all the forms of property recognized in American law. Thus one relatively unhelpful way to define personal property is to describe it as all types of property that are not considered to be real property. To discuss either type of property is potentially meaningless without a common understanding of the term "property" itself. Here it will suffice to say that something can be considered property if it is subject to being owned.

§ 13.02(a)(2) Personal Property as Distinguished by Personal Actions Rather than Real Actions; the Hybrid Property Traits of Chattels Real.

The modern distinctions between real and personal property are not quite consistent with the traditional meanings of the terms "real" and "personal." As these meanings emerged in laws governing English feudalism, "real" property came to mean that property which was entitled to the judicial protections known as "real" actions. Real actions were distinguished by the possibility that the successful litigant could recover the property itself, rather than mere monetary compensation. Real actions almost always related to land, especially in a feudal society where the land and the unique set of feudal obligations attached to any particular parcel of land were the essence of social structure; the relationship of a person to the land made it necessary that a claimant to land be able to recover the land itself, with all of its attendant unique rights and obligations.

For wrongs to property other than land it was usually not necessary for the claimant to recover the thing itself, but to recover only the value of the thing, or some equivalent thing as a substitute. A legal action could be pressed directly against the wrongdoer, as a personal action, rather than against the particular land that one would hope to recover in a real action. Property rights that could be protected by means of a real action, affording the possibility of recovering the property itself, came to be commonly referred to as real property. Property rights which could be protected only by personal actions for damages, generally without the right to recover the property at issue, came to be referred to as personal property.

The distinction between real and personal property arising out of their respective judicial protections served adequately in most situations, but one prominent hybrid form of property, the non-freehold estates, did not fit neatly into either of those categories. Originally, estates in land held at will or only for a term of years were distinguished from the so-called freeholds of life estates and the various fee estates because the at-will and term interests technically did not endure for the life of the holder or longer. Termed non-freehold estates, they were at first not eligible for the protections afforded by real actions, because the tenants were considered to have no interest in the land, but only contractual rights with the lessor. Because the tenant's rights in the real property of land were personal, the tenant's interest was called a chattel real, chattel signifying a type of personal property. n1 By the time real actions later became available to these tenancies, the label of non-freehold estates and their inclusion with personal property interests for many purposes had become permanent.

§ 13.02(a)(3) Personal Property as Movable Rather than Immovable Property.

Another popular way to distinguish personal property from real property is on the basis of movability. According to this view, real property interests are based on land which is obviously immovable; personal property interests derive from things that are movable. However, this distinction, while serviceable in most instances, is misleading in others. Some immovables are considered personal property in certain circumstances, such as unharvested crops and standing timber or real property subject to equitable conversion. Also, some personal property interests are intangible, and as such are arguably not movable. Even some real property interests can be movable in a limited sense, since elements of the earth and its contents can move by either natural or artificial means without necessarily losing their character as real property.

Movability appears to be the key distinction in those incidents when some part of real property is severed from the land and thus becomes personal property. Such severance alone is usually not sufficient to effect the change, but if the severance is coupled with intent to make the change, such items as shells, sand, gravel, coal, other minerals, mud, humus, topsoil, leaf mold, and dirt and soil generally are changed from real to personal property upon severance from the land. n2 Accordingly, where severance without intent occurs, such as the collapse of a house causing building materials to be scattered upon impact, no change in the character of the property takes place. n3 Usually, a transformation from realty to personalty does not occur until the time of severance, such as when water is diverted from a stream, n4 but under the doctrine of constructive severance the change to personal property may occur when an owner contracts in advance for the sale of an item yet to be severed. n5 For instance, a contract for the sale of a building attached to realty is a contract for the sale of personal property, assuming the parties intend the transaction to affect only the building. n6 Building materials are personal property, but become real property when they are incorporated into a structure built upon land, just as fence rails become realty upon being incorporated into a fence. n7

§ 13.02(a)(4) Intangible Forms of Personal Property.

If the concept of property includes things that are "owned," and ownership is likely to be asserted over rights that are of value, it is clear that some such rights do not arise from things that are tangible:

> [M]any rights do not ... concern specific tangible things but consist of claims against third persons which, since they may be enforced by action, and, if the law permits, be assigned for a price, are of value and thus entitled to be termed property in the broader sense. Bank accounts, debts generally, corporate stock, patents and copyrights are common instances of this class of property. To distinguish between these two classes, lawyers have from early times used the terms "choses (i.e., things) in possession," and "choses in action." Thus choses in possession refer to rights in definite tangible things over which possession may be taken, and choses in action to rights of property which, though they may be represented by a piece of paper, like a promissory note, are essentially intangible in that they can ultimately only be claimed or enforced by action, not by taking physical possession. As these terms have > a long history antedating the development of our modern commercial life, the attempt to give to them exact definitions and to determine just what interests are allocable to each seems rather a futile task. n8

§ 13.02(a)(5) Examples of the Uncertain Distinction Between Personal and Real Property.

While it would be impossible and pointless to create an exhaustive list of the various forms of personal property, it is helpful to describe a variety of examples of personal property, including examples in which the distinction between personal and real property is often blurred or variable according to context. One such extensive list appeared in the earlier Thompson edition:

> While all property must fall into one of the classifications of realty, personalty or chattels real, the jurisdictions are by no means in harmony as to the category in which particular property or property interests fall. Real estate itself may under certain circumstances be treated in the eyes of the law as personalty, as lots offered for sale by a real estate partnership may be treated as personalty for purposes of partnership law.
>
> There is disagreement as to the extent that a shareholder or member's interest in a real estate corporation is realty or personalty.
>
> While Congress has authorized the taxation of real property owned by the Unites States but leased to private citizens, such property cannot be taxed as real estate but only as personalty, and matters usually personalty may become realty. Ordinarily, a building becomes a part of the land upon which it stands, but it may be treated as personalty as between persons who deal with it as such. Under the law of Illinois, a building permanently connected with the soil is considered real property. As to fixtures no absolute rule can be stated since the maxim, "whatever is affixed to the soil, belongs to the soil," has always had exceptions, and they increase with the ever-varying necessities and exigencies of society.
>
> Royalty interests in mineral rights are personal property, but where the mineral interest in land and the surface rights are owned separately each interest is regarded as realty. So a contract for sale and removal of a fixture was held a contract for sale of goods. An easement in gross, being a personal right is an interest in real property but is not personal property, there being no dominant tenement. Where a sales contract provided for access to a pool but the deed omitted reference, only a personal license resulted.
>
> Leasehold estates and estates for years are for some purposes treated at common law as personal property. Upon the death of the lessee the unexpired term of the lease becomes an asset in the hands of the executor or administrator. While oil and gas leases are, in many respects, dissimilar to ordinary leases, some cases treat them to all intents and purposes as personalty. But it has been held that an oil lease is an interest in realty and is governed by the same rule as that which governs property rights.
>
> Under one rule it would seem the grant of an exclusive privilege to go upon land for the purpose of exploring for oil or gas, the grantor to receive part of the oil or gas mined, does not vest in the grantee any estate in the land or oil or gas, but is merely a license or grant. Such a lease creates an incorporeal hereditament only, and the lessee has no right or title to the oil or gas lying under the surface of the land. Whether a conveyance creates a fee in the minerals under the surface of the land or an incorporeal hereditament entitling the grantee to mine and remove minerals, giving no right in them until mined, is to be determined by the intention of the parties as disclosed by the instrument read in the light of the surrounding circumstances rather than from the instrument itself. It is sometimes held that oil rights or leases are corporeal hereditaments, incorporeal hereditaments, profits a prendre, resting in grant and not in livery and are incapable of possession. So a gross products tax on production of oil and gas is a tax on personalty.

Interests in fugitive minerals in place are treated as realty for purposes of the Statute of Frauds, recording acts, venue, homestead laws, rights of co-tenants, measure of damages to realty and taxation. A royalty interest in the grantor of a mineral lease passes with the sale of the land, but not if there is a community lease. In the latter case the royalty is in an incorporeal hereditament in gross.

An overriding royalty in oil and gas leases is an interest in realty within the Statute of Frauds.

Immovability is not of itself a final test as between realty and personalty.

Reservations of oil royalties are personalty.

A condominium unit's characteristics are those of personalty, not realty.

As between the parties, property may be treated as realty or personalty. Growing trees are usually realty but they may under circumstances, as in the case of nurseries, be personalty, on the other hand, they may remain realty after severance. A grant of perpetual rights to manufacture turpentine from timber growing on land is valid. Where a first refusal has been executed, an oil, gas and mineral lease is a sale of interest in the land for the purpose of such refusal. Crude turpentine in turpentine boxes in pine trees in a state to be dipped up is personalty.

The courts divide as to whether matured but unharvested crops are personalty or whether they are realty and pass with a sale of land.

As is seen elsewhere herein, trade fixtures are, by some courts, held to be chattels while others treat them as having become realty, severable under certain conditions. The interest of a beneficiary in a land trust is personalty.

Railroad tracks are realty or personalty depending on the "benefit of the land" test.

While the property in a church pew is considered as partaking of the character of real estate, it is in some jurisdictions a mere usufructuary right, and easement or privilege in the freehold of another.

The vendor's interests under an executory real estate contract are personal property.

Under the doctrine of equitable conversion, when a land sales contract becomes binding, the seller's interest is considered personalty and the buyer's interest realty. The same rule has been applied in contracts to devise and in directions in wills to the executor to sell realty.

Upon the doctrine that courts of equity consider that done which should have been done, money is sometimes treated as real estate.

Under the doctrine of equitable conversion, money directed to be employed in the purchase of land is considered as land. When land is converted into money, as by a trustee under a trust with power to sell, unless there is an intent manifested by the settlor of the trust that by its disposition its nature shall be thereby changed, the fund takes the place of the land which yielded it and is to be applied and disposed of in the same manner, until the object of the trust is accomplished. Where the trustee sells the land which he is directed by the instrument creating the trust to convey to certain persons, the proceeds of the sales will be treated as real estate and distributed accordingly. A fund derived from a payment by the city for lands taken for school purposes for the benefit of unknown owners must be treated as real estate. Also, insurance money realized from the destruction of buildings on devised real estate will be treated as real property. Upon a conveyance of land by the executor of a testator in pursuance of an option given by the testator during his lifetime, the proceeds of the sale pass as real estate. The proceeds of the sale of real estate, made by decree of court in a partition suit, retain the character of real estate for the purposes of distribution. Likewise, where there is a compulsory conversion of real estate, as in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and without the consent or against the will of the owner of the fee, the compensation awarded will be treated as real estate until the owner, being sui juris, accepts it as personal property. Also, where the real estate of a deceased testator is taken under the power of eminent domain, the rights of beneficiaries previously determined by law are not affected, the damages awarded for the land are distributable as realty. Where real estate is purchased with stolen money, the owner of the money does not become the owner of the land.

An equitable conversion of real estate into money is accomplished under a will if there is a positive direction to sell, an absolute necessity to sell in order to carry out the provisions of the will or such a blending of realty and personalty by the testator in his will as to clearly show an intention to create a fund out of all of his property and to bequeath it as money. It has been held that real estate purchased by a guardian with his ward's money descends as personalty on the ward's death.

Where real estate of a decedent is converted into money for the payment of debts, whatever surplus remains after a proper application of the funds for that purpose retains the character of real estate for the purpose of succession or distribution.

The owner of a tax certificate has an equitable right in the property with a right to call in the legal title by producing the certificate of purchase in case there has been no redemption.

It has been held that a tax certificate is real property and upon the death of the purchaser, passes to his heirs at law.

A house may be personalty and not a fixture as against a prior mortgagee, if not for agricultural purposes, and if the owner and the licensee who built the house so intended. An interest of a partner in the partnership was held personalty though the partnership owned realty.

A beneficial interest in a land trust in Illinois is personalty and a general intangible under the Uniform Commercial Code.

There is a growing tendency to treat the creation of a lease as the "sale" of space, thus invoking covenants of warranty that accompany sales of personalty.

Fixed minerals after extraction become personalty.

An easement is an interest in land.

There is a disagreement as to the extent that a shareholder or member's interest in a real estate corporation is realty or personalty.

An article may as between the vendor and vendee remain a chattel but becomes real property as between a mortgagor and mortgagee. n9

§ 13.02(b) Fixtures as Personal Property.

Items of personal property that become affixed or annexed to real property, but retain their separate identity, generally are known as fixtures, and are considered real property by definition:

The law of fixtures concerns those situations where the chattel annexed still retains a separate identity in spite of annexation, for example a furnace or a light fixture. Where the chattel annexed loses > such identity, as in the case of nails, boards, etc., the problem becomes one of accession... n10

In some circumstances, if something less than a permanent annexation of the personal property item was intended, the item will not be considered annexed or affixed, will not be deemed a fixture, and will thus retain its character as personal property. For example, if a mobile home has not been permanently attached to the land, it remains personal property. n11 Another test for annexation is whether the item supposedly annexed can be removed without damage to the item or the realty to which it was attached; however, other factors to be considered in connection with this "removal without damage" test are the intent to make a permanent annexation, and how well the annexed item has been adapted for the use intended. n12 An item affixed to the land for only a limited purpose may remain personal property. n13

Apart from annexation itself, the most important factor in determining whether personal property has become a fixture is the intent of the parties. Even an annexed item will remain personal property if the parties agree that it should remain personal property. n14

A major category of fixtures that do not become realty is the class of items called trade fixtures. These are items of personal property necessary for carrying on a trade or business, but which are expected to be removed when their commercial use is no longer needed. Typically, trade fixtures are introduced into leased premises, and the parties intend that upon either the termination of the lease or some other conclusion to the enterprise, the trade fixtures will be removed; and, indeed, the doctrine does not apply to one who annexes fixtures onto one's own land and who wishes to retain the fixtures upon sale of the land. n15

Even after fixtures become annexed to and a part of real property, they usually retain some semblance of separate identity and several issues of personal property rights may pertain to those fixtures in the future. These are discussed more fully in this chapter in § 13.07, infra.

§ 13.02(c) Crops as Personal Property.

Crops are the huge variety of growing things that can be harvested or gathered, and have traditionally been grouped into one of two categories:

> As to crops, the courts have made a distinction between those resulting from the bounty of nature or from perennial plants, the so-called fructus naturales, and those produced annually by the care and labor of man, the so-called fructus industriales. To this latter type of crop has been given the name of emblements, a word derived from the old French, meaning to sow with grain. n16

The significance of this distinction lies in the likelihood that a court will consider as realty a crop that is fructus naturales. n17 However, for most purposes crops of either variety are usually treated as personalty. For instance, the Uniform Commercial Code, in its article on Sales, extends its provisions to "growing" crops without distinction between fructus naturales and fructus industriales, except that timber is usually still considered realty. n18

All of the legal rules regarding crops begin with the assumption that growing crops are part of the land and should therefore be considered realty, but that upon severance the crops become personalty. For the most part, legal rules about crops attempt to describe situations when departures from this basic assumption are proper.

For instance, a tenant for an uncertain term may return to harvest crops that were growing at the time the tenancy was terminated, which suggests that the crops were personalty. However, even though a mortgagor may continue in possession during foreclosure proceedings, as soon as the right to possession ends and the mortgagee takes possession, the mortgagee also becomes entitled to the growing crops (at least in title theory states), which suggests that the crops were realty all along.

§ 13.02(d) Choses in Action as Personal Property.

Choses in action belong to that group of property rights classed as "intangibles." "Choses [pronounced 'sho' ses']," simply means things and are rights in tangible things that can be possessed; such property rights are often referred to as "choses in possession." Other "choses" are referred to as "choses in action," when they represent truly intangible rights of property enforceable only by legal action rather than by taking possession. Among such intangible property rights usually considered choses in action are bank accounts, stock in corporations, patents, and copyrights. It may be assumed that the largest share of individual wealth is in the form of choses in action, of "claims by one person against another for the performance of acts which will be of value to the former." n19 Although in early law choses in action were not transferable either for consideration or as gifts, they are now intrinsically transferable and usually only the means chosen for transfer is the subject of legal challenge.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The entry for "Chattel" in 2 The Oxford English Dictionary 302 (1970) is partially as follows:

> a. OF. chatel, chetel (ONF. catel. Pr. captal, capdal): -- late L. captale, L. capitale principal, property, goods, etc., see CATTLE. Chatel, pl. chateaux, was the form adopted in legal Anglo-French; it appears in vernacular use in the 13th c., and the pl chateaux is occasional as a technical term in ME [middle English]; but the actual form adopted in Eng. was the Norman catel, later cattell, cattle. In the 16th c., (as shown under CATTLE) this was gradually restricted to 'live stock', and at the same time chatel, chattel, began to pass from law French into general use for the wider sense 'article of property.'

(n2)Footnote 2. Derbofen v. T. L. James & Co., 148 So. 2d 795 (La. App. 1962) (mulch, humus, top soil, leaf mold and other forms of dirt are treated as commodities of commerce completely separate from the owner's land in actions for damages on wrongful removal); Barron v. Edwards, 206 N.W.2d 508 (Mich. 1973) (soil treated as commercial product is personalty and within the U.C.C., and not within the statute of frauds.

(n3)Footnote 3. Guernsey v. Phinizy, 39 S.E. 402 (Ga. 1901) (after an accidental fire destroys a house, the bricks and other debris remain a part of the realty, because there was no intent to sever or convert them).

(n4)Footnote 4. Brighton Ditch Co. v. City of Englewood, 237 P.2d 116 (Colo. 1951).

(n5)Footnote 5. Pleasant Valley Campground, Inc. v. Rood, 411 A.2d 1104 (N.H. 1980) (a mobile home previously attached to the realty and specifically described in a bill of sale as an item of personal property was treated as personalty); Courtright Cattle Co. v. Dolsen Co., 619 P.2d 344 (Wash. 1980) (apparatus for treating waste from potato-processing system is deemed a fixture even though a bill of sale specifically described the apparatus as personalty).

(n6)Footnote 6. Stiles v. Gordon Land Co., 44 So. 2d 417 (Fla. 1950) (a building was deemed personal property even though attached to the land, because of the contractually expressed intention that the building was being sold separately from the land).

(n7)Footnote 7. State v. Rullis, 191 A.2d 197 (N.J. Super. 1963) (granite fence posts are to be part of the real property to which they are attached).

(n8)Footnote 8. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 11 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n9)Footnote 9. 1 George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property 74-75, § 19 (Grimes ed. 1980).

(n10)Footnote 10. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 514-515 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n11)Footnote 11. Cooper's Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Simmons, 617 P.2d 415 (Wash. 1980) (mobile home considered personal property for purposes of the joinder statute).

(n12)Footnote 12. Prospecting Unlimited, Inc. v. Norberg, 376 A.2d 702 (R.I. 1977) (prefabricated modular homes assessed a use tax because the purchasers affixed the modules to the realty).

(n13)Footnote 13. Anderson v. Columbia Contract Co., 184 P. 240 (Ore. 1919), reh'g denied, 185 P. 231 (Ore. 1919) (fish traps deemed to be personal property because there was no intention that they be permanently affixed).

(n14)Footnote 14. Hargrove v. Jenkins, 383 S.E.2d 636 (Ga. App. 1989) (buyer of shed sued purchaser of land upon which shed was located, claiming title to shed had passed by sale before the real property sale had closed); Milner v. New Edinburg School Dist., 200 S.W.2d 319 (Ark. 1947) (land but not improvements reverted to grantor if land ceased to be used for school purposes).

(n15)Footnote 15. Young Elec. Sign Co. v. Erwin Elec. Co., 477 P.2d 864 (Nev. 1970) (action to foreclose mechanic's lien lodged against electric sign); Cusack v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 134 P.2d 984 (Okla. 1943) (the trade fixtures doctrine does not apply to the pit wagon scales installed on a mortgaged farm by the owner of the land).

(n16)Footnote 16. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 588 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n17)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Key v. Loder, 182 A.2d 60 (D.C. 1962).

(n18)Footnote 18. U.C.C. §§ 2-105(1) and 2-107(2).

(n19)Footnote 19. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 154 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.03 How Ownership of Personal Property Is Originally Acquired.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.03(a) The Importance of Possession.

Ownership of personal property connotes various relationships between the owner and the thing owned, which may include possession, control, a right of use, holding of legal title, and holding of equitable title. Specially limited types of ownership pertain to a mortgagor in possession, a bailee, and a purchaser under a conditional sales contract who is in possession and control.

Although one may hold ownership of an item of personal property without also having possession, possession is the most common and powerful incident and manifestation of ownership. n20 One who possesses personal property is presumed to be the owner. n21

The concept of possession is typically divided between actual possession and constructive possession, the latter being a type of possession implied in the law. For instance, the actual possession of a thing by an employee may be imputed to the employer, who can then be said to have constructive possession of the thing; the employer, while not having actual possession, has the right to immediate actual possession. If an owner of personal property without actual possession knows where the item is and could recover possession if the owner desired, then the owner is in constructive possession. n22 Thus where the owner gives actual possession to another, such as a bailee, for the purpose of having the possessor do something with the item given, constructive possession in the owner results. n23

Possession, whether actual or constructive, is said to be the right of exclusive physical control, coupled with the intent to possess. While -- as a matter of common sense -- it would seem that one can have actual possession of an item, even without knowing about the item, it has been held that -- as a matter of law -- one does not possess a thing of which one is unaware. n24

§ 13.03(b) Original and Successive Acquisition of Possession.

In the modern world only relatively rarely does one have opportunity to acquire personal property by establishing original possession. Other than acquiring rights by reducing wild animals to possession, the most common occasions for acquiring ownership of personal property by original possession are by taking possession of abandoned property, some estrayed animals, escaped or fugitive gas and oil, and drifted and stranded timber or logs, of which it may be said that no person is the owner. Thus, if one lawfully takes possession of abandoned personalty, then the taker becomes the owner. n25

In other circumstances, one may obtain ownership by taking possession, but such possession is not original possession; instead, it may displace an already established owner. Under certain conditions, taking possession of lost property may eventually lead to ownership in the finder. More commonly, ownership may be obtained by a successful adverse possessor, who displaces a previously established owner.

§ 13.03(c) Personal Property Rights in Wild Animals.

Wild animals, too, may be said to have no owner and are therefore subject to becoming owned once reduced to someone's possession. This simplistic statement must be qualified by recognizing that modern governments have often asserted rights to regulate the taking of wildlife, n26 and that one who takes possession of wild animals while trespassing on the private land of another must surrender title to the landowner. n27 A further qualification lies in the notion that one who has so pursued that taking possession is inevitable may have rights superior to one who intervenes to make the actual capture. n28

The ownership gained by one who properly reduces a wild animal to possession is limited; if the animal escapes captivity, the ownership right is lost, and the animal becomes subject to recapture by anyone. n29 Some courts have denied the title in the second captor, if the animal habitually returned to the original captor. n30

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: wild animal w/20 property

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 20. In re Dillingham's Estate, 238 P. 367 (Cal. 1925) (property held temporarily in trust, for exclusive use and benefit of decedent, held not exempt from inheritance tax).

(n2)Footnote 21. Rick v. Boegel, 205 N.W.2d 713 (Iowa 1973) (action for possession of decedent's corporate stock).

(n3)Footnote 22. State v. Matarazzo, 207 S.E.2d 93 (S.C. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 945 (1975) (lessee of a mobile home convicted of possession of a controlled substance found in the mobile home).

(n4)Footnote 23. Jacobson v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 46 N.W.2d 868 (Minn. 1951) (action to recover for loss by theft of automobile voluntarily surrendered to the thief).

(n5)Footnote 24. Durfee v. Jones, 11 R.I. 588 (1877) (the finder, who used but did not own the safe, was entitled to possession of money found in the safe and not belonging to the owner).

(n6)Footnote 25. Sickman v. United States, 184 F.2d 616 (7th Cir. 1950), cert. denied, 341 U.S. 939, reh'g denied, 342 U.S. 843 and 342 U.S. 874 (1951) (migratory geese held not to be in the possession of the United States government in an action to recover for damage to crops).

(n7)Footnote 26. State ex rel. Visser v. State Fish & Game Comm'n, 437 P.2d 373 (Mont. 1968) (action by hunters for the value of a tagged elk confiscated by the state).

(n8)Footnote 27. State v. Repp, 73 N.W. 829 (Iowa 1898) (wild bees in the woods are property of the owner of the woods).

(n9)Footnote 28. Liesner v. Wanie, 145 N.W. 374 (Wis. 1914) (hunters who mortally wound a wolf have ownership even though others fire the final shots); Pierson v. Post, 3 N.Y. (Cai. R.) 175 (1805) (a hunter in pursuit of a fox has no right of possession against the person who finally kills and takes the fox).

(n10)Footnote 29. Koop v. United States, 296 F.2d 53 (8th Cir. 1961) (prosecution for hunting wild ducks claimed to be in possession and control of dude ranch owner).

(n11)Footnote 30. Manning v. Mitcherson, 69 Ga. 447 (1883) (tamed canary that returned when called is recoverable by the original owner when another took possession of the bird).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.04 How Ownership of Personal Property Is Transferred.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.04(a) Transfers by Gift.

§ 13.04(a)(1) Types of Gifts.

A gift may be defined as a voluntary transfer of property to another, without consideration. The ordinary gift is an unconditional transfer of a present interest. One may also make a gift in expectation of imminent death and which is revocable if death does not occur, the so-called gift causa mortis. Distinct from the revocable gift causa mortis is the gift intended to take effect at some time in the future, which, without consideration, is a mere unenforceable promise to make a gift in the future. Finally, gifts may be testamentary, which means that the intent to make a gift is expressed in a valid will, and the gift itself is not effective until the donor's death, and frequently the donee does not actually obtain possession of the gift until the terms of the testamentary instrument are carried out. These types of gifts are individually discussed in the following sections.

§ 13.04(a)(2) Inter Vivos Gifts.

In a general and somewhat unhelpful sense, it may be said that a valid inter vivos gift is based on the fulfillment of three requirements: first, there must be delivery of the item, or some symbolic or constructive substitute for actual delivery; second, the donor must have the intent to make a gift; and third, the donee must accept the gift.

§ 13.04(a)(2)(i) Delivery.

The foundational legal rule for delivery is that manual, actual delivery is required to make a gift of anything capable of such manual delivery. n31 Even though some of the more archaic reasons for this rule no longer pertain, this is still the beginning rule, as noted in this more modern expression:

> When the character of the goods and the situation of the parties is such that a delivery can without unreasonable inconvenience be made, there is generally said to be no valid donation without it. n32

It is presumptively ineffective and insufficient merely to make an oral or parol declaration of a gift when the item is capable of manual delivery to the donee, but courts have authorized numerous departures from the presumptive rule. If the intent to make a gift is unequivocal, courts often hold that some form of delivery can be found in the circumstances of the case.

In general, a valid delivery requires not only that the thing being delivered pass from the control of one party to that of another, but also that the donor intend that such delivery take place. Thus, the donor must possess not only the general intent to make a gift, but also the specific intent to achieve delivery in a particular manner. If transfer of possession and control passes unaccompanied by the donor's intent, no gift occurs; conversely, if the donor intends to effect a delivery, but no actual transfer of possession and control occurs, again no gift occurs. A bedridden donor who expressed a desire to make a gift of clothing that was placed in a trunk, but then retained control of the key to the trunk, was held to have not made a completed gift. n33 Another donor gave to the donees a writing describing a gift of a trunk containing valuable items, but the trunk itself was deposited with a bailee without instructions for delivery; no gift occurred. n34 In both cases, while the intent to make a gift was evident, the donor did not effectively surrender control of the item to be given. If donative intent is expressed, but no delivery takes place, the intent to make a gift is subject to revocation and in any event is revoked by the death of the donor. n35

In some cases, even the intent to make a gift and the actual delivery of the item will not constitute a gift, if it appears that the delivery is merely so the erstwhile "donee" can hold the item as agent of the donor:

> [I]n an inter vivos situation, a purported intention to give and a delivery, when coupled with facts indicating that the purported donor has not really relinquished control, will ordinarily not result in a valid completed gift. n36

Once the gift is completed by successful delivery coupled with donative intent, the donee may subsequently relinquish control, such as for resale, or even replace the item in the custody of the donor for safekeeping, usually without compromising the validity of the gift. n37

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: gift w/10 complet! w/50 deliver! w/20 donative intent w/50 control

Delivery may be achieved by transfer to a third person, especially if the third person subsequently delivers the item to the intended donee. However, if the third person simply holds the item delivered, without further transmission to the intended donee, then the completion of the gift depends on whether the third person accepted the delivery as agent of the donor or the donee. If the third person receiving the delivery was the agent of the donor, then the donor could be viewed as not having yielded control of the item, and the gift would be incomplete. If the third party recipient is considered the agent of the donee, then the gift is considered complete upon delivery to the third party. A third party recipient who takes delivery, at the request of the donor, on behalf of an intended donee who is a child, n38 or to simply hold the item for the donee, would be considered acting on behalf of the donee. n39

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: gift w/50 deliver! w/20 third person

Quite commonly, delivery will be made to a third person, with instructions for further delivery to be made to the donee upon the donor's death. This may be considered a present gift of a future interest in the item; title to the item vests at the time of delivery to the third person, but possession and enjoyment by the donee are postponed. Under one variant of this arrangement, the donor may make a gift, but reserve a "life estate," the right to use the property until the donor's death.

To sustain such an arrangement as a gift, it must be distinguishable in some way from a mere promise to make a gift, to be effective at the donor's death, which is not only without substance as a gift but will probably also be considered void as testamentary in nature.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: gift w/50 deliver! w/20 third person and

Although manual delivery of personal property gifts would be the ideal, and would eliminate much conflict and misunderstanding, such delivery is frequently not possible or practicable. Even movable chattels may sometimes be so bulky that physical transfer is undesirable or very inconvenient. In other instances, the distance of the proposed delivery is an impediment to manual delivery. In such cases, American courts have long accepted some other action as a substitute for manual delivery, collectively labeled as symbolic or constructive delivery:

> What will amount to a delivery must depend upon the nature of the thing and the circumstances of the case. Actual manual delivery is not in all cases necessary. When the thing is incapable of manual delivery, or where the situation of the parties or the circumstances of the case will not admit of it, it may be symbolic or constructive. n40

The distinction between symbolic and constructive deliveries has been explained as follows:

> A delivery is symbolic, when instead of the thing itself, some other object is handed over in its name and stead. A delivery is constructive, when in place of actual manual transfer the donor delivers to the donee the means of obtaining possession and control of the subject matter, or in some other manner relinquishes to the donee power and dominion over it. n41

Discerning a coherent judicial approach to questions of constructive delivery has proved almost impossible. Courts have exhibited an understandable desire to affirm a gift where the donative intent is obvious; yet in the absence of manual delivery, the actions validated as a substituted constructive delivery should represent the donor's best effort to make a delivery and a delivery that is reasonably similar to what an actual manual delivery would have been. Moreover, many courts take the position that such constructive delivery should be accepted only if manual delivery is genuinely inconvenient, unreasonable, or impossible. Under these considerations, delivery of a key to a safe deposit box may suffice as constructive delivery if the donee and the box are widely separated, but possibly should not suffice if it is easy or convenient for the donor actually to deliver the contents of the box to the donee. n42

These restrictions on the validity of constructive delivery of a key may break down in the face of a very clear donative intent. However, delivery of a key will be insufficient delivery if the key itself does not represent surrender of dominion and control. If a donor delivers one key to a safe deposit box, but retains a duplicate key, delivery of the gift has not occurred; n43 however, the opposite result has been reached in light of obvious intent to make a gift. n44 Other shared control cases, such as revealing to the donor a hiding place where the items are kept, have usually resulted in holdings that a completed gift has occurred. n45

Donative deliveries of goods held by bailees are complete when the bailee delivers the goods to the intended donee or agrees that the bailment is now held on behalf of the donee. If the bailee refuses to accept the new arrangement or to make the delivery to the intended donee, the cases are in conflict over whether a gift occurs. n46

Somewhat related to the bailment cases are those instances when the gift item is already in the physical possession of the donee. The gift in those cases is completed merely by the donor's expression of intent to make a present gift, and no formal, distinct delivery is required. n47 If evidence of donative intent is weak, the absence of a conspicuous act of delivery could cast even more doubt on the allegation of gift.

Another variant of the same problem arises when the donor and donee share possession, such as when they live in the same household, and when a bulky gift such as a piano is transferred from the donor's to the donee's ownership. To require some event of delivery to effect such gifts would be unreasonable, yet such gifts also raise the danger that creditors will be too easily defrauded or that conflict among family members will result. For the finding that a gift has occurred in such cases, therefore, courts do not insist on delivery, but do look for evidence that the donee has subsequently exercised a different kind of dominion over the item. This could be achieved by the donee using the item, after it was allegedly given, without first seeking the donor's permission, as might have been done before the gift when it was in shared possession. n48 If there is no evidence that the control relationship regarding the item has changed, a court may find that a gift has not occurred. n49

The requirement of manual delivery is also disregarded when a gift is made by deed. n50 The term "deed" in the context of gifts of personal property carries its traditional meaning, an instrument sealed by the executing party; it is not restricted to its popular modern meaning of an instrument for conveying of real property interests. Today, even "deeds" in the traditional sense of sealed instruments are often not required to be sealed; n51 either the "seal" is provided by some verbal indication such as "seal" or "l.s." or is entirely absent, and often the absence of any seal at all is authorized by state statute. All these factors have combined, in some jurisdictions, to allow a gift to be made symbolically through the delivery of an ordinary writing rather than by manual delivery of the thing itself.

If the fact of delivery is questionable, such as when the location of the thing given does not change, then a subsequent declaration of donative intent by the donor may support the finding of a delivery; such a declaration, however, is not a substitute for a delivery. A common example of this circumstances is when, among the contents of a safe deposit box examined after the donor's death, is found a written statement from the donor declaring that the contents belong to the donee. n52 If the donor's declaration under those circumstances indicates merely an intent to make a gift in the future, it may be assumed that no delivery has taken place and no completed gift results. n53 The ambivalence of the courts in these circumstances has been noted:

> Where there is other competent evidence of a delivery, or where the alleged donee is already in possession of the subject matter of the claimed gift or the donor and donee both have access to such subject matter it would seem clear that a declaration by the donor that he "had given" the chattels in question, or that the same were the property of the donee, would with such attendant circumstances be sufficient to authorize a finding of an effected gift. When, however, the goods, at the time the donee makes his claim, are in the possession of the alleged donor or of his personal representative, and there is no objective proof that any delivery had ever occurred, a finding of gift on the evidence alone of subsequent admissions of the donor should only with hesitancy be sustained. Nevertheless, there is a considerable authority upholding the claim of gift under such circumstances. Other courts have, however, refused to sustain findings of gift under the same circumstances, and some have been so strict as to overrule such findings even when the donee was in possession of the property. In a few cases it has been dogmatically asserted that mere admissions by the donor that he made a prior gift, uncorroborated by other evidence, are insufficient to prove a delivery. n54

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: symbolic! w/10 deliver! constructiv! w/10 deliver!

§ 13.04(a)(2)(ii) Intent.

The mere transfer or delivery of an item of personal property, without more, does not necessarily constitute a completed gift. If a transfer occurs without the donor intending a gift to be made, then the delivery may not be characterized as a gift. Even a delivery prompted by the intent to give is voidable, if the intent was induced by fraud, duress, or undue influence. n55

A frequently troublesome issue involving donative intent arises from gifts intended to take effect at some time in the future. The intent necessary to sustain a valid gift is that some present interest in the gift item pass at the time the gift is delivered or made. If the donor postpones the transfer of a present interest in the gift until the donor's death, for instance, the gift is deemed testamentary in nature and invalid if not executed according to requirements for testamentary dispositions.

However, most courts do not require that the right to present possession or enjoyment of the gift be passed at the time the gift is made. It is sufficient that there be intended a present transfer of title to the item, with an irrevocable right to the actual enjoyment of the item at some time in the future. n56 A donor may also intend to give present interest in some item of personal property, such as a fund in an account, and reserve a life estate in the donor, resulting in interest from the fund being paid to the donor until the donor's death; the arrangement has been upheld as a valid gift of the principal. n57 Crucial in demonstrating the donative intent necessary to accomplish such a gift would be the delivery to the donee of some evidence of the present interest being transferred.

Another troublesome issue of intent surrounds the giving of gifts coupled with conditions precedent. A condition precedent that postpones the vesting of any interest until the condition occurs generally indicates an intention not to make a present gift of anything. However, if the condition precedent is the occurrence of a future event that is nevertheless certain to occur, such as the donor's death, courts will usually find an intention to transfer a present right to the gift, with only enjoyment being postponed until the donor's death. n58 If the condition's occurrence or performance is within the control of the erstwhile donee, possibly a contract rather than a gift arises upon the donee's giving the consideration of fulfilling the condition.

Conditions precedent usually compromise the intent to give a present interest necessary to sustain a present gift; however, conditions subsequent may usually be attached to gifts:

> [G]ifts are sometimes completed by delivery of the res to the donee, but with a condition annexed that the donor may recall the same should he need the funds at any time during his life, or on condition that the subject matter should revert to the donor, should the donee predecease him. So also gifts may be made subject to such conditions, operating subsequently, as that the donee should pay annual interest to the donor, should support the donor, or assume definite obligations in regard to the care of the res. n59

A common source of contention in this area is the giving of engagement rings or other valuable items, gifts presumably subject to revocation upon the condition subsequent that the marriage does not take place. n60 Some courts, however, have held that the ring need not be returned if the breakdown of marriage plans is not the donee fiancee's fault (a conclusion that may not reflect the donor's intent). n61 In other, less emotional circumstances, donors have given items to donees, but have stipulated that the items will be recalled if the donor needs them. Some courts have refused to characterize such arrangements as gifts, because the donor did not manifest the intent to surrender dominion. n62 Other courts have found a completed gift, subject to right to recall or revoke; the gift remained presently intact so long as the right to recall was not exercised. n63

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: donative intent w/50 present interest donative intent w/50 condition precedent donative intent w/50 condition subsequent

§ 13.04(a)(2)(iii) Acceptance.

The donee's acceptance of a gift is a formal requirement for the completion of a gift, but has less importance because of the presumption that a beneficial gift is accepted by the donee. The reality of the acceptance requirement is illustrated by those cases upholding the right of a donee to reject a gift. n64 This inference of acceptance is strong enough to attribute acceptance by and thus accomplish the completion of a gift delivered to a third person and announced to the donee only after the donor's death, n65 of a gift to an infant, n66 and of a gift to one who is legally incompetent. n67 In those instances where realistically no actual acceptance has occurred, the donee could later repudiate the gift.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: gift w/20 accept!

§ 13.04(a)(3) Gifts*Causa Mortis*.

A gift causa mortis is distinguishable from the ordinary inter vivos gift on two points: the "gift" is made in expectation of imminent death, n68 and the "gift" is revocable. The gift causa mortis is theoretically subject to the same basic delivery requirements as the gift inter vivos, but it is well-known that some relaxations of those rules as applied to inter vivos gifts are not extended to gifts causa mortis. Also, if the gift causa mortis is revoked because the anticipated death of the donor does not occur, the revocation is effected automatically as a matter of law.

Although a donor who is approaching death and makes a gift is presumed to be making the gift causa mortis, n69 the presumption can be overcome. Such a donor intending to make a present inter vivos gift need only make such intention manifest. n70

In general, the delivery requirement for gifts causa mortis is the same as for present inter vivos gifts, but in some jurisdictions, some of the substitute delivery circumstances are not allowed to sustain causa mortis gifts. For instance, many courts have refused to find delivery of a causa mortis gift where the item is already in the donee's possession. n71 Also some jurisdictions do not accept delivery of a gift causa mortis by means of a sealed writing, because that method so closely resembles a testamentary disposition that testamentary formalities should not be avoided. n72

While it is possible to view the donor's death in a gift causa mortis situation as a condition precedent to the completion of the gift, especially since the gift is a nullity if the death does not occur, most courts view the donor's death as a condition subsequent. According to this view, the proper gift causa mortis is a valid gift when made, but is subject to failure or revocation or divestment if the donor does not die as anticipated. Indeed, sometimes the gift is a nullity even if death occurs, but the cause of death was other than the anticipated cause. n73

In one situation, American courts are likely to treat a gift causa mortis as a gift subject to a condition precedent. If the donor delivers the item or funds to a third person, with instructions for delivery to the donee upon the donor's death, the deferral of delivery leads to the conclusion that the gift was not a completed, present gift, but was testamentary in nature, with the donor's death as a condition precedent. n74 Some American courts favor the condition precedent interpretation of all gifts causa mortis, even if delivery is not deferred. n75

The distinction between gifts causa mortis as presenting a condition precedent or a condition subsequent as been criticized as, at bottom, representing nothing more than a trap for the unwary donor:

> Nonetheless, the distinction drawn by the majority of American courts between the gift that vests presently, though subject to revocation, and the gift that is to vest only upon the death of the donor is unfortunate. The distinction is a highly artificial one, not, it is safe to say, apt to be in the contemplation of a layman in his last illness. The practical substantive rights of the donor are the same in both cases. A slight change in the words used, or in the testimony of the witnesses as to the words used, can easily shift > the gift from one class to the other. Where there is an actual delivery of the subject matter, and the intent of the donor to make some gratuitous disposition of his property is clearly proven it seems harsh to thwart his intent because of a failure to put the transaction in the proper technical form. n76

The revocability of gifts causa mortis is implied by law, even if not expressed by the donor. Thus a donor who made such a gift while in extreme illness, then recovered temporarily from the illness so as to resume normal activity for a few months before actually dying from the illness, was considered as having revoked the original gift. n77 In a few cases, the issue has been raised whether the donor's recovery simply gives the donor the option to revoke, with the gift remaining valid if the opportunity to revoke was not exercised. This approach is generally not accepted. However, it is clear that the donor does have an independent option to revoke the gift causa mortis at any time before death occurs, which possibility is simply one other condition subsequent attached to the gift. n78 An attempt to revoke by means of a will is inadequate, because the will does not become operative until the donor's death, when the power to revoke has lapsed in any event. n79 Although the point is without known judicial authority, it is reasonable to assume that a gift causa mortis is revoked if the donee predeceases the donor.

The continuing conflict over viability of gifts causa mortis reflects the competing values. On the one hand, it is commendable to effect the intent of a donor, even if not all technical legal requirements are observed (and especially not during times of the donor's personal distress); on the other hand, those technical requirements are safeguards against fraud and misconduct that can so readily occur both before and after the donor's death. The result seems to be that courts still speak in some terms of hostility toward gifts causa mortis, but in general still ultimately find ways to approve of most such gifts. This judicial ambivalence was well-expressed over a century ago:

> Gifts causa mortis are not favored in law. They are a fruitful source of litigation, often bitter, protracted and expensive. They lack all of those formalities and safeguards which the law throws around wills, and create a strong temptation to the commission of fraud and perjury. Lord Hardwicke declared, more than a hundred years ago, that it was a pity the statute of frauds and perjuries did not set aside all such gifts. Justinian was so justly apprehensive of fraud with respect to them that he required them to be made in the presence of five witnesses. If the law limited such gifts to articles of small value, and required the gift to be executed in the presence of disinterested witnesses, they would be less objectionable. But if large estates, amounting to thousands of dollars, may be thus disposed of, and the title of the donee supported mainly by his own testimony and that of near relatives, the public feeling of security may well be startled. Unfortunately the common law has not adopted any of these precautions. n80

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: gift w/5 causa mortis

§ 13.04(b) Transfers upon Death.

§ 13.04(b)(1) Succession Under Intestacy.

§ 13.04(b)(1)(i) General Rules.

Ownership of a decedent's personal property passes to those entitled to it under relevant state statutes of descent and distribution, if the decedent has not otherwise disposed of the property by will or some form of inter vivos transfer. Technically, the "descent" part of those statutes refers to succession to ownership of the real property, while "distribution" refers to succession to ownership of the personal property.

The descent and distribution statutes are intended to provide for orderly succession to the decedent's property in all circumstances when the decedent has not made provision therefor. All American states have enacted such statutes, although in some states a distinction is no longer drawn between real and personal property, the same scheme of succession applying to both. Several of the older standard rules for descent, the so-called English canons of descent, are rejected in all American jurisdictions; these rejected principles include prohibition of lineal ascent, preference for male over female heirs, and preference for the oldest male heir.

Although some states impose the same mode of succession for both real and personal property, it may still be important to distinguish between realty and personalty even in those jurisdictions. For instance, in most jurisdictions, the decedent's personal property is the primary fund for paying the decedent's surviving debts, so that those debts should first be satisfied out of and exhaust the decedent's personal property before the real property may be applied. n81 Similarly, heirs of encumbered real property are often entitled to have the decedent's personal property applied to remove, or exonerate, those encumbrances. n82

An interesting substance-procedure dichotomy exists in matters of succession to personal property, in that actual succession is governed by the law of the decedent's state of domicil, while the rules of administration derive from the state where the personal property is located.

Title to personal property vests in the rightful successors immediately upon the decedent's death, but the actual distribution may be delayed in the course of estate administration, so that debts may be paid and other matters affecting distributive shares may be properly determined. If an estate is not to be probated or administered, and no requirement therefor exists, the heirs may take immediate possession of the decedent's personal property.

Traditionally, and technically, those who succeeded to a decedent's real property were termed "heirs," while those who succeeded to the personal property were referred to as "next of kin." In both common speech and statutory language the two terms are now often interchanged, so whether they are intended to have distinct meanings must often be gathered from the context.

A statute of distribution will typically designate the decedent's children and their descendants as successors, or the decedent's parents and their descendants as successors, and then -- in the absence of those close relatives, pass the property to the "next of kin." Which relatives constitute the "next of kin," and which classes of relatives have priority, is determined by the so-called civil law method -- adopted in most states -- or the common-law method, sometimes also called the canon law method. By the civil law method, the kin are assigned a degree of proximate relatedness to the decedent, with children and parents in the first degree, and grandparents, grandchildren, brothers and sisters in the second, and further degrees being correspondingly further generations removed from the decedent. Where both ascendants and descendants or lateral relatives are in the same degree of relationship, those who are younger or are descendants are preferred. Thus children are preferred over parents, and siblings over grandparents. These degree relationships under the civil law method may be summarized as follows:

Relationship Degrees of a Decedent's Next of Kin
(civil law or majority method) n83

First Degree: Children

Parents

Second Degree: Siblings

Grandparents

Grandchildren

Third Degree: Nieces

Nephews

Aunts

Uncles

Great-grandparents

Fourth Degree: First cousins

Great aunts

Great uncles

Great-great-grandparents

Fifth Degree: First cousins once removed (children of first cousins)

Children of great aunts or of great uncles

Great-great-aunts

Great-great-uncles

Sixth Degree: Second cousins n84

Relationship Degrees of a Decedent's Next of Kin (common law or canon law method) n85

The background and features of the canon law method of ascertaining degrees of kinship has been explained as follows:

> There was another method of ascertaining kinship, namely, the method of the canon law which was used by the church to determine what marriages between relatives were forbidden. According to the canon law the steps from the common ancestor to each of the persons involved were counted as in the case of the civil law. However, instead of taking the sum of these two figures, only the larger was taken. This represented the degree of relationship according to the canon law. The common law adopted this method of computation for the purpose of limiting the number of successive donees in frankmarriage. The canon or common-law manner of determining kinship was never applied in England under the Statute of Distribution. It should be understood, however, as a few American jurisdictions adopt the plan. n86

First Degree: Parents

Siblings

Second Degree: Nieces

Nephews

Aunts

Uncles

Grandparents

First Cousins

Third Degree: Grandnieces

Grandnephews

Great-grandparents

First cousins once removed

Great aunts

Great uncles

Children of great aunts and great uncles

Second cousins

Fourth Degree: First cousins twice removed

Second cousins once removed

Fifth Degree: Second cousins twice removed n87

Despite the wide variety of state statutory approaches in matters of descent and distribution, a few basic principles are rather uniformly implemented. A surviving spouse will have a share in the decedent's property, along with the decedent's children or descendants of deceased children. The surviving spouse's share may be fixed or may vary according to the number of decedent's children who also take. If there is no surviving spouse, the children take all; only if there are no surviving spouse and children do any other next of kin take any part of the intestate decedent's estate. Children who succeed to the decedent's property include adopted children and children of the decedent's other marriages and now, according to statutory provision, in many states also include the decedent's children born out of wedlock. n88 Indeed, a total statutory disallowance of inheritance because of illegitimacy has been held unconstitutional. n89 When the estate passes to only the children, they take in equal shares. Descendants of children do not take any part of the estate if their next-of-kin parent is alive, but if not, they take their parent's share. Stepchildren and stepparents usually will not take a portion of the estate, unless they have been adopted or some special statutory provision has been made for them. Siblings of the half-blood will usually take if they are related by blood to the decedent.

If the decedent's entire estate passes to children, they take equal shares and may be said to take "per capita," the size of share determined by the number of heirs in that class. However, any of the decedent's grandchildren who stand as heirs in the place of a deceased parent, they -- regardless of their number -- take only their deceased parent's share, by representation or "per stirpes." This same principle would seemingly prevail where inheritance applies to next of kin in other degrees of relationship; however, the usual American rule is that where all the primary heirs are deceased and their own descendants (the so-called remote issue) are all of the same degree, they take per capita. Thus if the decedent's next of kin are all grandchildren, they would take per capita rather than per stirpes.

A surviving spouse would not be considered a decedent's heir or next of kin at common law and is usually accorded special treatment in the state statutes of descent and distribution. In a very general sense, all states make statutory provision for surviving spouses, apart from whatever dower or curtesy rights may still be recognized, and in addition to other property rights arising from the marital relationship. The state statutes vary enormously in the share of the decedent's estate accorded the surviving spouse, from a share that replicates what dower or curtesy principles would have yielded, to a share that differs depending on the number of children, to a fixed share. The share for personal property may differ from the share for realty. Many states have adopted the provisions of the Uniform Probate Code, which govern succession rights of surviving spouses according to the provisions set forth in the next section.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: intes! w/20 succession

§ 13.04(b)(1)(ii) Uniform Probate Code Provisions for Intestate Succession.

The Uniform Probate Code, adopted in fifteen states, n90 regulates matters of intestate succession according to the following provisions:

Section 2-101. [Intestate Estate.]

Any part of the estate of a decedent not effectively disposed of by his will passes to his heirs as prescribed in the following sections of this Code.

Section 2-102. [Share of the Spouse.]

The intestate share of the surviving spouse is:

(1) if there is no surviving issue or parent of the decedent, the entire intestate estate;

(2) if there is no surviving issue but the decedent is survived by a parent or parents, the first [$50,000], plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate;

(3) if there are surviving issue all of whom are issue of the surviving spouse also, the first [$50,000], plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate;

(4) if there are surviving issue one or more of whom are not issue of the surviving spouse, one-half of the intestate estate.

ALTERNATIVE PROVISION FOR COMMUNITY PROPERTY STATES

Section 2-102A. [Share of the Spouse.]

The intestate share of the surviving spouse is as follows:

(1) as to separate property,

(i) if there is no surviving issue or parent of the decedent, the entire intestate estate;

(ii) if there is no surviving issue but the decedent is survived by a parent or parents, the first [$40,000], plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate;

(iii) if there are surviving issue all of whom are issue of the surviving spouse also, the first [$50,000], plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate;

(iv) if there are surviving issue one or more of whom are not issue of the surviving spouse, one-half of the intestate estate.

(2) as to community property,

(i) the one-half of community property which belongs to the decedent passes to the [surviving spouse].]

Section 2-103. [Share of Heirs Other Than Surviving Spouse.]

The part of the intestate estate not passing to the surviving spouse under Section 2-102, or the entire intestate estate if there is no surviving spouse, passes as follows:

(1) to the issue of the decedent; if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent they take equally, but if of unequal degree, then those of more remote degree take by representation;

(2) if there is no surviving issue, to his parent or parents equally;

(3) if there is no surviving issue or parent, to the issue of the parents or either of them by representation;

(4) if there is no surviving issue, parent or issue of a parent, but the decedent is survived by one or more grandparents or issue of grandparents, half of the estate passes to the paternal grandparents if both survive, or to the surviving paternal grandparent, or to the issue of the paternal grandparents if both are deceased, the issue taking equally if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent, but if of unequal degree those of more remote degree take by representation; and the other half passes to the maternal relatives in the same manner; but if there be no surviving grandparent or issue of grandparent on either the paternal or the maternal side, the entire estate passes to the relatives on the other side in the same manner as the half.

Section 2-104. [Requirement That Heir Survive Decedent for 120 Hours.]

Any person who fails to survive the decedent by 120 hours is deemed to have predeceased the decedent for purposes of homestead allowance, exempt property and intestate succession, and the decedent's heirs are determined accordingly. If the time of death of the decedent or of the person who would otherwise be an heir, or the times of death of both, cannot be determined, and it cannot be established that the person who would otherwise be an heir has survived the decedent by 120 hours, it is deemed that the person failed to survive for the required period. This section is not to be applied where its application would result in a taking of intestate estate by the state under Section 2-105.

Section 2-105. [No Taker.]

If there is no taker under the provisions of this Article, the intestate estate passes to the [state].

Section 2-106. [Representation.]

If representation is called for by this Code, the estate is divided into as many shares as there are surviving heirs in the nearest degree of kinship and deceased persons in the same degree who left issue who survive the decedent, each surviving heir in the nearest degree receiving one share and the share of each deceased person in the same degree being divided among his issue in the same manner.

Section 2-107. [Kindred of the Half Blood.]

Relatives of the half blood inherit the same share they would inherit if they were of the whole blood.

Section 2-108. [Afterborn Heirs.]

Relatives of the decedent conceived before his death but born thereafter inherit as if they had been born in the lifetime of the decedent.

Section 2-109. [Meaning of Child and Related Terms.]

If, for purposes of intestate succession, a relationship of parent and child must be established to determine succession by, through, or from a person,

(1) an adopted person is the child of an adopting parent and not of the natural parents except that adoption of a child by the spouse of a natural parent has no effect on the relationship between the child and either natural parent.

(2) In cases not covered by Paragraph (1), a person is the child of its parents regardless of the marital status of its parents and the parent and child relationship may be established under the [Uniform Parentage Act].

Alternative subsection (2) for states that have not adopted the Uniform Parentage Act.

[(2) In cases not covered by Paragraph (1), a person born out of wedlock is a child of the mother. That person is also a child of the father, if:

(i) the natural parents participated in a marriage ceremony before or after the birth of the child, even though the attempted marriage is void; or

(ii) the paternity is established by an adjudication before the death of the father or is established thereafter by clear and convincing proof, but the paternity established under this subparagraph is ineffective to qualify the father or his kindred to inherit from or through the child unless the father has openly treated the child as his, and has not refused to support the child.]

Section 2-110. [Advancements.]

If a person dies intestate as to all his estate, property which he gave in his lifetime to an heir is treated as an advancement against the latter's share of the estate only if declared in a contemporaneous writing by the decedent or acknowledged in writing by the heir to be an advancement. For this purpose the property advanced is valued as of the time the heir came into possession or enjoyment of the property or as of the time of death of the decedent, whichever first occurs. If the recipient of the property fails to survive the decedent, the property is not taken into account in computing the intestate share to be received by the recipient's issue, unless the declaration or acknowledgment provides otherwise.

Section 2-111. [Debts to Decedent.]

A debt owed to the decedent is not charged against the intestate share of any person except the debtor. If the debtor fails to survive the decedent, the debt is not taken into account in computing the intestate share of the debtor's issue.

Section 2-112. [Alienage.]

No person is disqualified to take as an heir because he or a person through whom he claims is or has been an alien.

[Section 2-113. [Dower and Curtesy Abolished.]

The estates of dower and curtesy are abolished.]

Section 2-114. Persons Related to Decedent Through Two Lines.]

A person who is related to the decedent through 2 lines of relationship is entitled to only a single share based on the relationship which would entitle him to the larger share.

Section 2-201. [Right to Elective Share.]

(a) If a married person domiciled in this state dies, the surviving spouse has a right of election to take an elective share of one-third of the augmented estate under the limitations and conditions hereinafter stated.

(b) If a married person not domiciled in this state dies, the right, if any, of the surviving spouse to take an elective share in property in this state is governed by the law of the decedent's domicile at death.

Section 2-202. [Augmented Estate.]

The augmented estate means the estate reduced by funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances and exemptions, and enforceable claims, to which is added the sum of the following amounts:

(1) The value of property transferred to anyone other than a bona fide purchaser by the decedent at any time during marriage, to or for the benefit of any person other than the surviving spouse, to the extent that the decedent did not receive adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth for the transfer, if the transfer is of any of the following types:

(i) any transfer under which the decedent retained at the time of his death the possession or enjoyment of, or right to income from, the property;

(ii) any transfer to the extent that the decedent retained at the time of his death a power, either alone or in conjunction with any other person, to revoke or to consume, invade or dispose of the principal for his own benefit;

(iii) any transfer whereby property is held at the time of decedent's death by decedent and another with right of survivorship;

(iv) any transfer made to donee within two years of death of the decedent to the extent that the aggregate transfers to any one donee in either of the years exceed $3,000.00.

Any transfer is excluded if made with the written consent or joinder of the surviving spouse. Property is valued as of the decedent's death except that property given irrevocably to a donee during the lifetime of the decedent is valued as of the date the donee came into possession or enjoyment if that occurs first. Nothing herein shall cause to be included in the augmented estate any life insurance, accident insurance, joint annuity, or pension payable to a person other than the surviving spouse.

(2) The value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death, plus the value of property transferred by the spouse at any time during marriage to any person other than the decedent which would have been includible in the spouse's augmented estate if the surviving spouse had predeceased the decedent to the extent the owned or transferred property is derived from the decedent by any means other than testate or intestate succession without a full consideration in money or money's worth. For purposes of this paragraph:

(i) Property derived from the decedent includes, but is not limited to, any beneficial interest of the surviving spouse in a trust created by the decedent during his lifetime, any property appointed to the spouse by the decedent's exercise of a general or special power of appointment also exercisable in favor of others than the spouse, any proceeds of insurance (including accidental death benefits) on the life of the decedent attributable to premiums paid by him, any lump sum immediately payable and the commuted value of the proceeds of annuity contracts under which the decedent was the primary annuitant attributable to premiums paid by him, the commuted value of amounts payable after the decedent's death under any public or private pension, disability compensation, death benefit or retirement plan, exclusive of the Federal Social Security system, by reason of service performed or disabilities incurred by the decedent, any property held at the time of decedent's death by decedent and the surviving spouse with right of survivorship, any property held by decedent and transferred by contract to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death and the value of the share of the surviving spouse resulting from rights in community property in this or any other state formerly owned with the decedent. Premiums paid by the decedent's employer, his partner, a partnership of which he was a member, or his creditors, are deemed to have been paid by the decedent.

(ii) Property owned by the spouse at the decedent's death is valued as of the date of death. Property transferred by the spouse is valued at the time the transfer became irrevocable, or at the decedent's death, whichever occurred first. Income earned by included property prior to the decedent's death is not treated as property derived from the decedent.

(iii) Property owned by the surviving spouse as of the decedent's death, or previously transferred by the surviving spouse, is presumed to have been derived from the decedent except to the extent that the surviving spouse establishes that it was derived from another source.

(3) For purposes of this section a bona fide purchaser is a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim. Any recorded instrument on which a state documentary fee is noted pursuant to [insert appropriate reference] is prima facie evidence that the transfer described therein was made to a bona fide purchaser.

Section 2-203. [Right of Election Personal to Surviving Spouse.]

The right of election of the surviving spouse may be exercised only during his lifetime by him. In the case of a protected person, the right of election may be exercised only by order of the court in which protective proceedings as to his property are pending, after finding that exercise is necessary to provide adequate support for the protected person during his probable life expectancy.

Section 2-204. [Waiver of Right to Elect and of Other Rights.]

The right of election of a surviving spouse and the rights of the surviving spouse to homestead allowance, exempt property and family allowance, or any of them, may be waived, wholly or partially, before or after marriage, by a written contract, agreement or waiver signed by the party waiving after fair disclosure. Unless it provides to the contrary, a waiver of "all rights" (or equivalent language) in the property or estate of a present or prospective spouse or a complete property settlement entered into after or in anticipation of separation or divorce is a waiver of all rights to elective share, homestead allowance, exempt property and family allowance by each spouse in the property of the other and a renunciation by each of all benefits which would otherwise pass to him from the other by intestate succession or by virtue of the provisions of any will executed before the waiver or property settlement.

Section 2-205. [Proceeding for Elective Share; Time Limit.]

(a) The surviving spouse may elect to take his elective share in the augmented estate by filing in the court and mailing or delivering to the personal representative, if any, a petition for the elective share within 9 months after the date of death, or within 6 months after the probate of the decedent's will, whichever limitation last expires. However, non-probate transfers, described in Section 2-202(1), shall not be included within the augmented estate for the purpose of computing the elective share, if the petition is filed later than 9 months after death.

The court may extend the time for election as it sees fit for cause shown by the surviving spouse before the time for election has expired.

(b) The surviving spouse shall give notice of the time and place set for hearing to persons interested in the estate and to the distributees and recipients of portions of the augmented net estate whose interests will be adversely affected by the taking of the elective share.

(c) The surviving spouse may withdraw his demand for an elective share at any time before entry of a final determination by the court.

(d) After notice and hearing, the court shall determine the amount of the elective share and shall order its payment from the assets of the augmented net estate or by contribution as appears appropriate under Section 2-207. If it appears that a fund or property included in the augmented net estate has not come into the possession of the personal representative, or has been distributed by the personal representative, the court nevertheless shall fix the liability of any person who has any interest in the fund or property or who has possession thereof, whether as trustee or otherwise. The proceeding may be maintained against fewer than all persons against whom relief could be sought, but no person is subject to contribution in any greater amount than he would have been if relief had been secured against all persons subject to contribution.

(e) The order or judgment of the court may be enforced as necessary in suit for contribution or payment in other courts of this state or other jurisdictions.

Section 2-206. [Effect of Election on Benefits by Will or Statute.]

A surviving spouse is entitled to homestead allowance, exempt property, and family allowance, whether or not he elects to take an elective share.

Section 2-207. [Charging Spouse With Gifts Received; Liability of Others for Balance of Elective Share.]

(a) In the proceeding for an elective share, values included in the augmented estate which pass or have passed to the surviving spouse, or which would have passed to the spouse but were renounced, are applied first to satisfy the elective share and to reduce any contributions due from other recipients of transfers included in the augmented estate. For purposes of this subsection, the electing spouse's beneficial interest in any life estate or in any trust shall be computed as if worth one half of the total value of the property subject to the life estate, or of the trust estate, unless higher or lower values for these interests are established by proof.

(b) Remaining property of the augmented estate is so applied that liability for the balance of the elective share of the surviving spouse is equitably apportioned among the recipients of the augmented estate in proportion to the value of their interests therein.

(c) Only original transferees from, or appointees of, the decedent and their donees, to the extent the donees have the property or its proceeds, are subject to the contribution to make up the elective share of the surviving spouse. A person liable to contribution may choose to give up the property transferred to him or to pay its value as of the time it is considered in computing the augmented estate.

Section 2-301. [Omitted Spouse.]

(a) If a testator fails to provide by will for his surviving spouse who married the testator after the execution of the will, the omitted spouse shall receive the same share of the estate he would have received if the decedent left no will unless it appears from the will that the omission was intentional or the testator provided for the spouse by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by statements of the testator or from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(b) In satisfying a share provided by this section, the devises made by the will abate as provided in Section 3-902.

Section 2-302. [Pretermitted Children.]

(a) If a testator fails to provide in his will for any of his children born or adopted after the execution of his will, the omitted child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which he would have received if the testator had died intestate unless:

(1) it appears from the will that the omission was intentional;

(2) when the will was executed the testator had one or more children and devised substantially all his estate to the other parent of the omitted child; or

(3) the testator provided for the child by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by statements of the testator or from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(b) If at the time of execution of the will the testator fails to provide in his will for a living child solely because he believes the child to be dead, the child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which he would have received if the testator had died intestate.

(c) In satisfying a share provided by this section, the devises made by the will abate as provided in Section 3-902.

Section 2-401. [Homestead Allowance.]

A surviving spouse of a decedent who was domiciled in this state is entitled to a homestead allowance of [$5,000]. If there is no surviving spouse, each minor child and each dependent child of the decedent is entitled to a homestead allowance amounting to [$5,000] divided by the number of minor and dependent children of the decedent. The homestead allowance is exempt from and has priority over all claims against the estate. Homestead allowance is in addition to any share passing to the surviving spouse or minor or dependent child by the will of the decedent unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession or by way of elective share.

Section 2-401A. [Constitutional Homestead.]

The value of any constitutional right of homestead in the family home received by a surviving spouse or child shall be charged against that spouse or child's homestead allowance to the extent that the family home is part of the decedent's estate or would have been but for the homestead provision of the constitution.]

Section 2-402. [Exempt Property.]

In addition to the homestead allowance, the surviving spouse of a decedent who was domiciled in this state is entitled from the estate to value not exceeding $3,500 worth of exempt property in the estate, the spouse or children are entitled to other assets of the estate, if any, to the extent necessary to make up the $3,500 value. Rights to exempt property and assets needed to make up a deficiency of exempt property have priority over all claims against the estate, except that the right to any assets to make up a deficiency of exempt property shall abate as necessary to permit prior payment of homestead allowance and family allowance. These rights are in addition to any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or children by the will of the decedent unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective share.

Section 2-403. [Family Allowance.]

In addition to the right to homestead allowance and exempt property, if the decedent was domiciled in this state, the surviving spouse and minor children whom the decedent was obligated to support and children who were in fact being supported by him are entitled to a reasonable allowance in money out of the estate for their maintenance during the period of administration, which allowance may not continue for longer than one year if the estate is inadequate to discharge allowed claims. The allowance may be paid as a lump sum or in periodic installments. It is payable to the surviving spouse, if living, for the use of the surviving spouse and minor and dependent children; otherwise to the children, or persons having their care and custody; but in case any minor child or dependent child is not living with the surviving spouse, the allowance may be made partially to the child or his guardian or other person having his care and custody, and partially to the spouse, as their needs may appear. The family allowance is exempt from and has priority over all claims but not over the homestead allowance.

The family allowance is not chargeable against any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or children by the will of the decedent unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective share. The death of any person entitled to family allowance terminates his right to allowances not yet paid.

Section 2-404. [Source, Determination and Documentation.]

If the estate is otherwise sufficient, property specifically devised is not used to satisfy rights to homestead and exempt property. Subject to this restriction, the surviving spouse, the guardians of the minor children, or children who are adults may select property of the estate as homestead allowance and exempt property. The personal representative may make these selections if the surviving spouse, the children or the guardians of the minor children are unable or fail to do so within a reasonable time or if there are no guardians of the minor children. The personal representative may execute an instrument or deed of distribution to establish the ownership of property taken as homestead allowance or exempt property. He may determine the family allowance in a lump sum not exceeding $6,000 or periodic installments not exceeding $500 per month for one year, and may disburse funds of the estate in payment of the family allowance and any part of the homestead allowance payable in cash. The personal representative or any interested person aggrieved by any selection, determination, payment, proposed payment, or failure to act under this section may petition the Court for appropriate relief, which relief may provide a family allowance larger or smaller than that which the personal representative determined or could have determined.

§ 13.04(b)(2) Testamentary Transfers.

Another common way of transferring ownership of personal property upon the owner's death is by testamentary transfer, that is, by carrying out the instructions of the decedent owner's valid will. As with the administration of an intestate decedent's estate, carrying out the provisions of a will often requires that a distinction be made between the decedent's real and personal property. Generally, the administration of the estate and the validity of a will are determined by the law of the state in which the decedent's immovable property (for most purposes, the immovables are considered real property) is located, and, for the movable property (the personalty), the state in which the decedent was domiciled at the time of death. Because every state has its own statutory provisions for wills, determining the applicable state law is important.

The variety of state will provisions still permits certain generalizations to be expressed about the requirements for creating a valid will. All states require that wills be written, but some states make provision for oral (nuncupative) wills. The oral wills are severely restricted in the assets to which they apply, usually limited to a few hundred dollars worth of personal property.

As to the written wills, a distinction must be made between the formal wills, which are usually typed or printed, signed by the testatrix or testator, and properly witnessed, and the so-called holographic wills, which are written and signed in the decedent's hand and may or may not be witnessed. A substantial minority of the states permit probate of holographic wills.

The ordinary formal will is in written form and, at the end, signed by the testatrix or testator. In some states, if the signature is not at the end of the will, it may invalidate an otherwise effective document. It is usually permissible for someone to sign for the testatrix or testator, if the alternative signing is at the direction and in the presence of the testatrix or testator. Often the alternative signer must also append the alternative signer's own signature. This signing should also be in the presence of witnesses, the required minimum number of whom is usually two and rarely three, and who must also subscribe their attestation. In some jurisdictions it is sufficient if the signing is later acknowledged before witnesses, who must also subscribe their attestation. In some states, if the witnesses' signatures are written before a notary public or similar officer, the will is considered "self-proving," the notarial attestation making it unnecessary for the witnesses to appear when the will is presented for probate. Traditionally, if a witness had an interest in the estate, the entire will or its provisions relating to that witness could be invalidated. The more modern approach treats this circumstance only as a factor in a possible challenge to the will's validity.

Holographic (or olographic) wills are required to have been written and signed by the decedent. In some states, it is required that the entire document, or at least all of the substantive dispositive provisions, have been handwritten by the decedent. A few jurisdictions have also insisted that such a will be fully dated. Certain writings, such as letters and suicide notes, have been accepted as holographic wills, if sufficient testamentary intent appeared from the contents of the writings.

A will is applicable to property acquired after it is signed, and may be revoked any time before the testatrix or testator dies. States often have statutory provisions for a spouse to take a specified portion of the estate in preference to the portion assigned in the will, especially if the person became the decedent's spouse after the will was signed and had therefore been omitted from the will; these provisions effectively revoke portions of a will by operation of law. Likewise, some pretermitted (intentionally omitted) children of the decedent are accorded statutory shares in contravention of the will provisions. Some jurisdictions also provide that a divorce revokes portions of the decedent's will pertaining to the former spouse.

Alongside these "revocations" by operation of law are the explicit and intentional revocations made by the will drafters themselves. The revocation is usually accomplished by creating a new valid will or by defacing or destroying the old will. An amendment, or codicil, to a will may also have the effect of revoking portions of the original will. These revocations are sometimes ambiguous in that they may work a revocation only by inference from inconsistency between original and amending provisions. If a new will does not contain an express revocation of all former wills, former wills are revoked only to the extent they are explicitly superseded by the provisions of the new will. Wills that are lost may have their provisions proved by competent evidence.

Statutes governing will requirements are notoriously jurisdiction-specific, a situation exacerbated by the tendency of courts to insist on strict compliance with such requirements. The following will provisions of the Uniform Probate Code, adopted in fifteen states, offer a somewhat generalized view of prevailing statutory will requirements, although it should be noted that this uniform act represents the modern approach of reducing and liberalizing formal requirements as much as possible:

Section 2-501. [Who May Make a Will.]

Any person 18 or more years of age who is of sound mind may make a will.

Section 2-502. [Execution.]

Except as provided for holographic wills, writings within Section 2-513, and wills within Section 2-506, every will shall be in writing signed by the testator or in the testator's name by some other person in the testator's presence and by his direction, and shall be signed by at least 2 persons each of whom witnessed either the signing or the testator's acknowledgment of the signature or of the will.

Section 2-503. [Holographic Will.]

A will which does not comply with Section 2-502 is valid as a holographic will, whether or not witnessed, if the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator.

Section 2-504. [Self-proved Will.]

(a) Any will may be simultaneously executed, attested, and made self-proved, by acknowledgment thereof by the testator and affidavits of the witnesses, each made before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the state where execution occurs and evidenced by the officer's certificate, under official seal, in substantially the following form:

I, _____, the testator, sign my name to this instrument this _____ day of _____, 19_____, and being first duly sworn, do hereby declare to the undersigned authority that I sign and execute this instrument as my last will and that I sign it willingly (or willingly direct another to sign for me), that I execute it as my free and voluntary act for the purposes therein expressed, and that I am eighteen years of age or older, of sound mind, and under no constraint or undue influence.

Testator

We, _____, _____, the witnesses, sign our names to this instrument, being first duly sworn, and do hereby declare to the undersigned authority that the testator signs and executes this instrument as his last will and that he signs it willingly (or willingly directs another to sign for him), and that each of us, in the presence and hearing of the testator, hereby signs this will as witness to the testator's signing, and that to the best of our knowledge the testator is eighteen years of age or older, of sound mind, and under no constraint or undue influence.

Witness
Witness

The State of _____ County of _____

Subscribed, sworn to and acknowledged before me by _____, the testator, and subscribed and sworn to before me by _____, and _____, witnesses, this _____ day of _____.

(Seal)
(Signed)
(Official capacity of officer)

(b) An attested will may at any time subsequent to its execution be made self-proved by the acknowledgment thereof by the testator and the affidavits of the witnesses, each made before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the state where the acknowledgment occurs and evidenced by the officer's certificate, under the official seal, attached or annexed to the will in substantially the following form:
The State of _____
County of _____

We, _____, _____, and _____, the testator and the witnesses, respectively, whose names are signed to the attached or foregoing instrument, being first duly sworn, do hereby declare to the undersigned authority that the testator signed and executed the instrument as his last will and that he signed willingly (or willingly directed another to sign for him), and that he executed it as his free and voluntary act for the purposes therein expressed, and that each of the witnesses, in the presence and hearing of the testator, signed the will as witness and that to the best of his knowledge the testator was at that time eighteen years of age or older, of sound mind and under no constraint or undue influence.

Testator
Witness
Witness

Subscribed, sworn to and acknowledged before me by _____, the testator, and subscribed and sworn to before me by _____, and _____, witnesses, this _____ day of _____.

(Seal)
(Signed)
(Official capacity of officer)

Section 2-505. [Who May Witness.]

(a) Any person generally competent to be a witness may act as a witness to a will.

(b) A will or any provision thereof is not invalid because the will is signed by an interested witness.

Section 2-506. [Choice of Law as to Execution.]

A written will is valid if executed in compliance with Section 2-502 or 2-503 or if its execution complies with the law at the time of execution of the place where the will is executed, or of the law of the place where at the time of execution or at the time of death the testator is domiciled, has a place of abode or is a national.

Section 2-507. [Revocation by Writing or by Act.]

A will or any part thereof is revoked

(1) by a subsequent will which revokes the prior will or part expressly or by inconsistency; or

(2) by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it by the testator or by another person in his presence and by his direction.

Section 2-508. [Revocation by Divorce; No Revocation by Other Changes of Circumstances.]

If after executing a will the testator is divorced or his marriage annulled, the divorce or annulment revokes any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse, any provision conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse, and any nomination of the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian, unless the will expressly provides otherwise. Property prevented from passing to a former spouse because of revocation by divorce or annulment passes as if the former spouse failed to survive the decedent. If provisions are revoked solely by this section, they are revived by testator's remarriage to the former spouse. For purposes of this section, divorce or annulment means any divorce or annulment which would exclude the spouse as a surviving spouse within the meaning of Section 2-802(b). A decree of separation which does not terminate the status of husband and wife is not a divorce for purposes of this section. No change of circumstances other than as described in this section revokes a will.

Section 2-509. [Revival of Revoked Will.]

(a) If a second will which, had it remained effective at death, would have revoked the first will in whole or part, is thereafter revoked by acts under Section 2-507, the first will is revoked in whole or in part unless it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of the second will or from testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that he intended the first will to take effect as executed.

(b) If a second will which, had it remained effective at death, would have revoked the first will in whole or in part, is thereafter revoked by a third will, the first will is revoked in whole or in part, except to the extent it appears from the terms of the third will that the testator intended the first will to take effect.

Section 2-510. [Incorporation by Reference.]

Any writing in existence when a will is executed may be incorporated by reference if the language of the will manifests this intent and describes the writing sufficiently to permit its identification.

Section 2-511. [Testamentary Additions to Trusts.]

A devise or bequest, the validity of which is determinable by the law of this state, may be made by a will to the trustee of a trust established or to be established by the testator or by the testator and some other person or by some other person (including a funded or unfunded life insurance trust, although the trustor has reserved any or all rights of ownership of the insurance contracts) if the trust is identified in the testator's will and its terms are set forth in a written instrument (other than a will) executed before or concurrently with the execution of the testator's will or in the valid last will of a person who has predeceased the testator (regardless of the existence, size, or character of the corpus of the trust). The devise is not invalid because the trust is amendable or revocable, or because the trust was amended after the execution of the will or after the death of the testator. Unless the testator's will provides otherwise, the property so devised (1) is not deemed to be held under a testamentary trust of the testator but becomes apart of the trust to which it is given and (2) shall be administered and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the instrument or will setting forth the terms of the trust, including any amendments thereto made before or after the execution of the testator's will), and, if the testator's will so provides, including any amendments to the trust made after the death of the testator. A revocation or termination of the trust before the death of the testator causes the devise to lapse.

Section 2-513. [Separate Writing Identifying Bequest of Tangible Property.]

Whether or not the provisions relating to holographic wills apply, a will may refer to a written statement or list to dispose of items of tangible personal property not otherwise specifically disposed of by the will, other than money, evidences of indebtedness, documents of title, and securities, and property used in trade or business. To be admissible under this section as evidence of the intended disposition, the writing must either be in the handwriting of the testator or be signed by him and must describe the items and the devisee with reasonable certainty. The writing may be referred to as one to be in existence at the time of the testator's death; it may be prepared before or after the execution of the will; it may be altered by the testator after its preparation; and it may be a writing which has no significance apart from its effect upon the dispositions made by the will.

Section 2-601. [Requirement That Devisee Survive Testator by 120 Hours.]

A devisee who does not survive the testator by 120 hours is treated as if he predeceased the testator, unless the will of decedent contains some language dealing explicitly with simultaneous deaths or deaths in a common disaster, or requiring that the devisee survive the testator or survive the testator for a stated period in order to take under the will.

Section 2-602. [Choice of Law as to Meaning and Effect of Wills.]

The meaning and legal effect of a disposition in a will shall be determined by the local law of a particular state selected by the testator in his instrument unless the application of that law is contrary to the provisions relating to the elective share described in Part 2 of this Article, the provisions relating to exempt property and allowances described in Part 4 of this Article, or any other public policy of this State otherwise applicable to the disposition.

Section 2-603. [Rules of Construction and Intention.]

The intention of a testator as expressed in his will controls the legal effect of his dispositions. The rules of construction expressed in the succeeding sections of this Part apply unless a contrary intention is indicated by the will.

Section 2-604. [Construction That Will Passes All Property; After-acquired Property.]

A will is construed to pass all property which the testator owns at his death including property acquired after the execution of the will.

Section 2-605. [Anti-lapse; Deceased Devisee; Class Gifts.]

If a devisee who is a grandparent or a lineal descendant of a grandparent of the testator is dead at the time of execution of the will, fails to survive the testator, or is treated as if he predeceased the testator, the issue of the deceased devisee who survive the testator by 120 hours take in place of the deceased devisee and if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the devisee they take equally, but if of unequal degree than those of more remote degree they take by representation. One who would have been a devisee under a class gift if he had survived the testator is treated as a devisee for purposes of this section whether his death occurred before or after the execution of the will.

Section 2-606. [Failure of Testamentary Provision.]

(a) Except as provided in Section 2-605 if a devise other than a residuary devise fails for any reason, it becomes a part of the residue.

(b) Except as provided in Section 2-605 if the residue is devised to two or more persons and the share of one of the residuary devisees fails for any reason, his share passes to the other residuary devisee, or to other residuary devisees in proportion to their interests in the residue.

Section 2-607. [Change in Securities; Accessions; Non-ademption.]

(a) If the testator intended a specific devise of certain securities rather than the equivalent value thereof, the specific devisee is entitled only to:

(1) as much of the devised securities as is a part of the estate at time of the testator's death;

(2) any additional or other securities of the same entity owned by the testator by reason of action initiated by the entity excluding any acquired by exercise of purchase options;

(3) securities of another entity owned by the testator as a result of a merger, consolidation, reorganization or other similar action initiated by the entity; and

(4) property owned by testator at his death as a result of foreclosure, or obtained in lieu of foreclosure, of the security for a specifically devised obligation.

(b) If specifically devised property is sold by a conservator, or if a condemnation award or insurance proceeds are paid to a conservator as a result of condemnation, fire, or casualty, the specific devisee has the right to a general pecuniary devise equal to the net sale price, the condemnation award, or the insurance proceeds. This subsection does not apply if after the sale, condemnation or casualty, it is adjudicated that the disability of the testator has ceased and the testator survives the adjudication by one year. The right of the specific devisee under this subsection is reduced by any right he has under subsection (a).

Section 2-609. [Non-Exoneration.]

A specific devise passes subject to any mortgage interest existing at the date of death, without right of exoneration, regardless of a general directive in the will to pay debts.

Section 2-610. [Exercise of Power of Appointment.]

A general residuary clause in a will, or a will making general disposition of all of the testator's property does not exercise a power of appointment held by the testator unless specific reference is made to the power or there is some other indication of intention to include the property subject to the power.

Section 2-611. [Construction of Generic Terms to Accord with Relationships as Defined for Intestate Succession.]

Halfbloods, adopted persons, and persons born out of wedlock are included in class gift terminology and terms of relationship in accordance with rules for determining relationships for purposes of intestate succession. [However, a person born out of wedlock is not treated as the child of the father unless the person is openly and notoriously so treated by the father.]

Section 2-612. [Ademption by Satisfaction.]

Property which a testator gave in his lifetime to a person is treated as a satisfaction of a devise to that person in whole or in part, only if the will provides for deduction of the lifetime gift, or the testator declares in a contemporaneous writing that the gift is to be deducted from the devise or is in satisfaction of the devise, or the devisee acknowledges in writing that the gift is in satisfaction. For purpose of partial satisfaction, property given during lifetime is valued as of the time the devisee came into possession or enjoyment of the property or as of the time of death of the testator, whichever occurs first.

If a will has been validly created and its provisions properly executed, personal property will pass to the intended recipient. In a few cases, those intended recipients are prohibited by circumstance or law from taking those bequests, in which case those assets return to the residuum of the estate for appropriate alternative disposition. In the past, convicted felons could not inherit, but today most of those restrictions have been removed. The few remaining state restrictions on inheritance by non-resident aliens apply only to inheritance of real property interests. Sometimes bequests to charities or to corporations were rejected because of a state requirement that bequests must be directed to persons, considered to mean humans. Even gifts to animals may be upheld, if they are made indirectly to a person who will administer the property for the benefit of the animal.

Although a beneficiary who does not survive the testator normally takes nothing under the will, this has been altered in many states by statute. A will provision for a beneficiary who died before the will was even signed is void; a provision for a beneficiary who died after the will was signed but before the testatrix or testator died merely lapsed. However, "anti-lapse" statutes in almost all states provide for alternative beneficiaries (usually children of the deceased beneficiary), subject to the decedent's contrary intention.

Beneficiaries may also renounce their bequests, and, in some cases, one who has murdered the decedent may be restricted from benefitting from the death by means of will provisions.

§ 13.04(c) Transfer by Sale.

Transferring ownership of personal property by transactions of sale is an ordinary and familiar process. The need for and provision of legal regulation for such transactions was apparent even in ancient societies, and the universality of these circumstances has led even the proudly diverse American states to seek uniformity in the law of sales. One of the earlier and more successful attempts at preparing uniform legislation for possible adoption by the states was the Uniform Sales Act, promulgated in 1906 and eventually adopted by 34 states. Using a codification approach to problems arising from sales of personal property, the provisions of this act effectively anticipated most of the conflicts and problems arising from sales of personal property. The Uniform Sales Act was replaced by Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code in 1953, and this code and its subsequent revisions have been adopted in 49 states; these code provisions therefore are the basic law governing sales of personal property. As described in the Code section on scope, Article 2 of Uniform Commercial Code is directed to personal property in the form of "goods":

§ 2-102. Scope; Certain Security and Other Transactions Excluded From this Article.

Unless the context otherwise requires, this Article applies to transactions in goods; it does not apply to any transaction which although in the form of an unconditional contract to sell or present sale is intended to operate only as a security transaction nor does this Article impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers, farmers or other specified classes of buyers.

The application of Article 2 to "goods" excludes certain intangible forms of personal property that are within the scope of this chapter. Some of those intangible rights are covered by other articles of the Uniform Commercial Code. However, the focus on tangible goods in Article 2 is reinforced by the definition of "goods":

> § 2-105.Definitions. Transferability; "Goods"; "Future" Goods; "Lot"; "Commercial Unit."
>
> (1) "Goods" means all things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities (Article 8) and things in action. "Goods" also includes the unborn young of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to realty as described in the section on goods to be severed from realty (Section 2-107).

The Uniform Commercial Code defines the extent of its coverage in the obscure area between real and personal property as follows:

§ 2-107. Goods to Be Severed From Realty; Recording.

(1) A contract for the sale of minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or a structure or its materials to be removed from realty is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article if they are to be severed by the seller, but until severance a purported present sale thereof which is not effective as a transfer of an interest in land is effective only as a contract to sell.

(2) A contract for the sale apart from the land of growing crops or other things attached to realty and capable of severance without material harm thereto but not described in subsection (1) or of timber to be cut is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article whether the subject matter is to be severed by the buyer or by the seller even though it forms part of the realty at the time of contracting, and the parties can by identification effect a present sale before severance.

(3) The provisions of this section are subject to any third party rights provided by law relating to realty records, and the contract for the sale may be executed and recorded as a document transferring an interest in land and shall then constitute notice to third parties of the buyer's rights under the contract for sale.

It should also be noted that in 1987 the official text of the Uniform Commercial Code added Article 2A, which "applies to any transaction, regardless of form, that creates a lease," n91 although the leases covered are only those relating to goods. n92

Keeping in mind this focus on tangible goods, it is meaningful to consider the philosophy and arrangement behind Article 2's regulation of sale transactions, as expressed in this original official comment introducing Article 2:

> This Article is a complete revision and modernization of the Uniform Sales Act which was promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1906 and has been adopted in 34 states and Alaska, the District of Columbia and Hawaii [sic].
>
> The coverage of the present Article is much more extensive than that of the old Sales Act and extends to the various bodies of case law which have been developed both outside of and under the latter.
>
> The arrangement of the present Article is in terms of contract for sale and the various steps of its performance. The legal consequences are stated as following directly from the contract and action taken under it without resorting to the idea of when property or title passed or was to pass as being the determinative factor. The purpose is to avoid making practical issues between practical [persons] turn upon the location of an intangible something, the passing of which no [person] can prove by evidence and to substitute for such abstractions proof of words and actions of a tangible character. n93

The Uniform Commercial Code's emphasis on the contract aspect of sales of goods has in turn impacted American contract law. The result is a rather uniquely serviceable set of legal rules governing sales of goods:

> Some of the Article Two provisions on the formation of contracts for the sale of goods have not only radically altered sales law but have influenced the new Restatement (Second) of Contracts as well. In most fundamental terms, Article Two expands our conception of contract. It makes contracts easier to form, and it imposes a wider range of obligations than before. Contract formation is easier in several ways. Parties may form a contract through conduct rather than merely through the exchange of communications constituting "offer and acceptance." Section 2-204(1) says, "A contract for sale of goods may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of such a contract." Sections 2-206(1) and 2-207(3) also expressly allow for the formation of contracts partly or wholly on the basis of such conduct. Further, Article Two reduces the formalities required for contract formation. The statute of frauds (section 2-201) requires only a writing that "indicate[s]" a contract was made, and 2-206 and 2-207(1) abandon the requirement than an acceptance must coincide precisely with all terms of the offer. Section 2-204(3) states: "Even though one or more terms are left open a contract for sale does not fail for indefiniteness if the parties have intended to make a contract and there is a reasonably certain basis for giving an appropriate remedy." As we will see, Article Two itself helps provide this "reasonably certain basis" through numerous provisions which fill gaps in an agreement that might otherwise fail for indefiniteness.

Article Two contracts are also more expansive in content than before. Thus 1-201(11) defines "contract" as the "total legal obligation which results from the parties' agreement," and 1-201(3) defines "agreement" to mean "the bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this Act." Section 2-305 defines course of dealing and usage of trade while Section 2-208 defines course of performance. The Code therefore adds to sales agreements much that is not made express by the parties. Section 2-103 on supplemental general principles also feeds much general contract law into Article Two sales contracts. Further, 1-102(3) and 1-203 of the Code impose obligations of good faith which may be thought of as part of any Article Two contract. And Article Two broadens the notion of contract insofar as 2-202 on parol evidence permits parties to prove "extrinsic terms not provable under various pre-Code versions of the parol evidence rule." n94

The legal issues arising from transfer of ownership of personal property by sales of goods are revealed by the headings to the provisions in Article 2:

ARTICLE 2

SALES

PART 1. SHORT TITLE, GENERAL CONSTRUCTION AND SUBJECT MATTER

Section

2-101. Short Title.

2-102.Scope; Certain Security and Other Transactions Excluded From This Article.

2-103. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

2-104.Definitions: "Merchant"; "Between Merchants"; "Financing Agency".

2-105.Definitions: Transferability; "Goods"; "Future" Goods; "Lot"; "Commercial Unit".

2-106.Definitions: "Contract"; "Agreement"; "Contract for Sale"; "Sale"; "Present Sale"; "Conforming" to Contract; "Termination"; "Cancellation".

2-107. Goods to Be Severed From Realty: Recording.

PART 2. FORM, FORMATION AND READJUSTMENT OF CONTRACT

2-201. Formal Requirements; Statute of Frauds.

2-202.Final Written Expression: Parol or Extrinsic Evidence.

2-203. Seals Inoperative.

2-204. Formation in General.

2-205. Firm Offers.

2-206. Offer and Acceptance in Formation of Contract.

2-207. Additional Terms in Acceptance or Confirmation.

2-208.Course of Performance or Practical Construction.

2-209. Modification, Rescission and Waiver.

2-210.Delegation of Performance; Assignment of Rights.

PART 3. GENERAL OBLIGATION AND CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT

2-301. General Obligations of Parties.

2-302. Unconscionable Contract or Clause.

2-303. Allocation or Division of Risks.

2-304.Price Payable in Money, Goods, Realty, or Otherwise.

2-305. Open Price Term.

2-306. Output, Requirements and Exclusive Dealings.

2-307. Delivery in Single Lot or Several Lots.

2-308. Absence of Specified Place for Delivery.

2-309.Absence of Specific Time Provisions; Notice of Termination.

2-310.Open Time for Payment or Running of Credit; Authority to Ship Under Reservation.

2-311. Options and Cooperation Respecting Performance.

2-312.Warranty of Title and Against Infringement; Buyer's Obligation Against Infringement.

2-313.Express Warranties by Affirmation, Promise, Description, Sample.

2-314.Implied Warranty: Merchantability; Usage of Trade.

2-315.Implied Warranty: Fitness for Particular Purpose.

2-316. Exclusion or Modification of Warranties.

2-317.Cumulation and Conflict of Warranties Express or Implied.

2-318.Third Party Beneficiaries of Warranties Express or Implied.

2-319. F.O.B. and F.A.S. Terms.

2-320. C.I.F. and C. & F. Terms.

2-321.C.I.F. or C. & F.: "Net Landed Weights"; "Payment on Arrival"; Warranty of Condition on Arrival.

2-322. Delivery "Ex-Ship".

2-323.Form of Bill of Lading Required in Overseas Shipment; "Overseas".

2-324. "No Arrival, No Sale" Term.

2-325. "Letter of Credit" Term; "Confirmed Credit".

2-326.Sale on Approval and Sale or Return; Consignment Sales and Rights of Creditors.

2-327.Special Incidents of Sale on Approval and Sale or Return.

2-328. Sale by Auction.

PART 4. TITLE, CREDITORS AND GOOD FAITH PURCHASERS

2-401.Passing of Title; Reservation for Security; Limited Application of This Section.

2-402.Rights of Seller's Creditors Against Sold Goods.

2-403.Power to Transfer; Good Faith Purchase of Goods; "Entrusting".

PART 5. PERFORMANCE

2-501.Insurable Interest in Goods; Manner of Identification of Goods.

2-502.Buyer's Right to Goods on Seller's Insolvency.

2-503. Manner of Seller's Tender of Delivery.

2-504. Shipment by Seller.

2-505. Seller's Shipment Under Reservation.

2-506. Rights of Financing Agency.

2-507.Effect of Seller's Tender; Delivery on Condition.

2-508.Cure by Seller of Improper Tender or Delivery; Replacement.

2-509. Risk of Loss in the Absence of Breach.

2-510. Effect of Breach on Risk of Loss.

2-511.Tender of Payment by Buyer; Payment by Check.

2-512. Payment by Buyer Before Inspection.

2-513. Buyer's Right to Inspection of Goods.

2-514.When Documents Deliverable on Acceptance; When on Payment.

2-515. Preserving Evidence of Goods in Dispute.

PART 6. BREACH, REPUDIATION AND EXCUSE

2-601. Buyer's Rights on Improper Delivery.

2-602. Manner and Effect of Rightful Rejection.

2-603.Merchant Buyer's Duties as to Rightfully Rejected Goods.

2-604.Buyer's Options as to Salvage of Rightfully Rejected Goods.

2-605.Waiver of Buyer's Objections by Failure to Particularize.

2-606. What Constitutes Acceptance of Goods.

2-607.Effect of Acceptance; Notice of Breach; Burden of Establishing Breach After Acceptance; Notice of Claim or Litigation to Person Answerable Over.

2-608. Revocation of Acceptance in Whole or in Part.

2-609. Right to Adequate Assurance of Performance.

2-610. Anticipatory Repudiation.

2-611. Retraction of Anticipatory Repudiation.

2-612. "Installment Contract"; Breach.

2-613. Casualty to Identified Goods.

2-614. Substituted Performance.

2-615. Excuse by Failure of Presupposed Conditions.

2-616. Procedure on Notice Claiming Excuse.

PART 7. REMEDIES

2-701.Remedies for Breach of Collateral Contracts Not Impaired.

2-702.Seller's Remedies on Discovery of Buyer's Insolvency.

2-703. Seller's Remedies in General.

2-704.Seller's Right to Identify Goods to the Contract Notwithstanding Breach or to Salvage Unfinished Goods.

2-705.Seller's Stoppage of Delivery in Transit or Otherwise.

2-706.Seller's Resale Including Contract for Resale.

2-707. "Person in the Position of a Seller".

2-708.Seller's Damages for Non-acceptance or Repudiation.

2-709. Action for the Price.

2-710. Seller's Incidental Damages.

2-711.Buyer's Damages for Non-delivery or Repudiation.

2-712."Cover"; -- Buyer's Procurement of Substitute Goods.

2-713."Cover"; Buyer's Damages for Non-delivery or Repudiation.

2-714.Buyer's Damages for Breach in Regard to Accepted Goods.

2-715. Buyer's Incidental and Consequential Damages.

2-716.Buyer's Right to Specific Performance or Replevin.

2-717. Deduction of Damages From the Price.

2-718.Liquidation or Limitation of Damages; Deposits.

2-719.Contractual Modification or Limitation of Remedy.

2-720.Effect of "Cancellation" or "Rescission" on Claims for Antecedent Breach.

2-721. Remedies for Fraud.

2-722.Who Can Sue Third Parties for Injury to Goods.

2-723. Proof of Market Price: Time and Place.

2-724. Admissibility of Market Quotations.

2-725. Statute of Limitations in Contracts for Sale.

That items of personal property are transferred from one owner to another by means of purchase and sale is clear without further comment. However, a much more troublesome legal problem is presented by the innocent purchaser, the so-called bona fide or good faith purchaser, who obtains the item from one who is not the real owner. In the modern contests between the true owner and the bona fide purchaser, the latter often triumphs with ownership of the item of personal property by virtue of the good faith purchase, even though the erstwhile "seller" had no title to confer.

In consequence of the old common law rule that one cannot convey a better title than one has, it is still true in sales of goods that even an innocent purchase from one with void title is of no efficacy to the purchaser. A possessor with void title is generally one who obtained possession without any intent or participation of the true owner, such as one who has received stolen goods, or received goods by mutual mistake of the parties, or received goods improperly delivered by a bailee. In all of these instances the true owner did not intend to part with the goods, and the "title" of the miscreant recipient may be said to be void; even a bona fide purchaser cannot enlarge upon a void title.

In many other instances, however, when one has inappropriately obtained possession of goods, the possessor's title is considered "voidable" rather than "void," and a good faith purchase from such a possessor will result in the purchaser obtaining full ownership rights. In general, it is assumed that the transferor of voidable title intended to part with possession, even though that intent may have been induced by misconduct of the recipient. That misconduct gives the true owner the right to revoke the transfer at any time before a further transfer of possession to an innocent purchaser. But if such revocation does not occur, then transfer to an innocent purchase may permit the innocent purchaser's rights to be so enlarged that they are superior to those of the true owner. These rules, originally developed in equity, have now been codified in the Uniform Commercial Code and adopted in forty-nine states, as follows:

Section 2-403. Power to Transfer; Good Faith Purchase of Goods; "Entrusting."

(1) A purchaser of goods acquires all title which his transferor had or had power to transfer except that a purchaser of a limited interest acquires rights only to the extent of the interest purchased. A person with voidable title has power to transfer a good title to a good faith purchaser for value. When goods have been delivered under a transaction of purchase the purchaser has such power even though

(a) the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, or

(b) the delivery was in exchange for a check which is later dishonored, or

(c) it was agreed that the transaction was to be a "cash sale," or

(d) the delivery was procured through fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law.

(2) Any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in ordinary course of business.

(3) "Entrusting" includes any delivery and any acquiescence in retention of possession regardless of any condition expressed between the parties to the delivery or acquiescence and regardless of whether the procurement of the entrusting or the possessor's disposition of the goods have been such as to be larcenous under the criminal law.

(4) The rights of other purchasers of goods and of lien creditors are governed by the Articles on Secured Transactions (Article 9) and Documents of Title (Article 7).

[Alternative (4)]

(4) The rights of other purchasers of goods and of lien creditors are governed by the Articles on Secured Transactions (Article 9), Bulk Sales (Article 6) and Documents of Title (Article 7).

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bona fide purchase! w/50 remed!

§ 13.04(d) Transfers to Adverse Possessors.

Adverse possession is a more familiar doctrine in the context of real property, but it is also possible to obtain ownership of personal property by adverse possession. The process of adverse possession is essentially governed by of the relevant state statutes of limitations; in some states that statute by its terms applies to both real and personal property, and in some states a separate limitations provision applies to personal property. The English statute, from which most American state provisions are ultimately derived, applied a limitations provision directly to personal property:

> III. And be it further enacted, That all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, action for trover, and replevin for taking away of goods and cattle ... shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereafter expressed ... within six years next after the cause of such action or suit, and not after... n95

A typical American state statute requires that within three years (or some similar relatively short time) the plaintiff bring an "action for taking, detaining, or injuring personal property, including actions for specific recovery thereof... n96 or be barred from the right to do so in the future.

Despite the common origins of English and American provisions, their respective effects differ. In the United States, the running of the statute of limitations not only bars the right of legal action to recover the possession or value of an item of personal property, but also extinguishes the owner's title and transfers that title to the successful adverse possessor. n97 In England only the legal remedy is barred.

The characteristics of personal property possession that will confer ownership through adverse possession are the same as for the more familiar doctrines of adverse possession of real property:

> [M]ere possession [of personal property] is not enough of itself to confer an adverse title, but it must be of a certain defined character. In the first place it must be adverse or hostile and not in subordination to the rights of the true owner. There "must be some act of dominion or use on the part of the possessor inconsistent with an absolute right of property in the owner." And the burden of proof is on him who claims title by adverse possession. Accordingly, bailees and others who hold property with the express or implied consent of the owner do not, by such holding, acquire title thereto. They do not hold adversely. The owner's mere right to return of the property does not amount to a cause of action against which the statute of limitations can run. The cause of action accrues only when the possession becomes clearly hostile to the rights of the owner, as when demand for return of the property is made and refused. Again, not only must the holding be adverse but it must also be open and notorious. While an innocent removal of the chattel from the locality or even from the state does not alone prevent the statute operating, simple morality requires than one who intentionally, by removal, concealment, or otherwise prevents the owner from ascertaining his property's whereabouts should not by such means defeat the latter's cause of action and acquire title to the withheld goods. While it is possible that a thief, with knowledge may hold so openly and notoriously as to acquire title, secret rather than open holding will be presumed. On the other hand, in the case of the bona fide purchaser the presumption would probably be just the reverse. Whether the possession is open or covert will ordinarily be a question of fact for the determination of the jury. n98

In the well-known 1980 case of O'Keeffe v. Snyder, n99 the New Jersey Supreme Court recognized the inherent difficulty of applying standard adverse possession rules to movable personal property, such as the painting involved in that case. When the chattel can be moved from place to place and, even though placed in a public building, still be essentially removed from public view, how does one determine whether the holding by the erstwhile adverse possessor has been "open and notorious"? The O'Keeffe court announced a gloss on the typical operation of the statute of limitations for the purpose of determining adverse possession title to personal property: the statute of limitations would not begin to run until the true owner knew or should have known of the whereabouts of the item, assuming the true owner was pursuing the search with diligence. The diligently searching true owner who failed to discover the missing property could thus indefinitely postpone the running of the statute of limitations for adverse possession purposes, thus removing the circumstantial advantage of the adverse possessor, who might have placed the chattel in a public yet obscure place.

Despite the inordinate attention among commentators generated by the O'Keeffe decision, the case has gained virtually no judicial acceptance outside its own state; it is still correct to state that in most cases in most jurisdictions the traditional rules of adverse possession still apply to personal property.

A more conventional use of the "discovery rule," similar to that announced in O'Keefe and also applicable in some tort actions, is the statutory discovery rule applicable to attempted adverse possession of branded cattle:

> [I]n all cases where the subject of the action is a domestic animal usually included in the term "livestock," which at the time of its loss has a recorded mark or brand, if the animal strayed or was stolen from the true owner without the owner's fault, the cause does not accrue until the owner has actual knowledge of such facts as would put a reasonable man upon inquiry as to the possession of the animal by the defendant. n100

A rather strict view of how statutes of limitations operate would demand that if one prospective adverse possessor passes possession to another before the required time of possession has fully run, possession by the recipient would give rise to a new cause of action in the true owner and thus re-start the running of the limitations period. A few cases so hold. n101 However, the majority of courts have allowed such successive adverse possessors to "tack" their possession periods together, just as in cases of real property adverse possession, as long as there is privity between the possessors. n102

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: adverse possess! w/50 personal property

§ 13.04(e) Transfers to Finders.

The "ownership" rights of those who find and take possession of lost goods is a favorite introductory subject for first-year law students studying property law. The precise source and nature of this pedagogic appeal are somewhat enigmatic, but they are probably related to the fact that finders' rights have traditionally been creatures of judicial decision, that the decisions and their underlying policy motivations are often in profound conflict, and that they derive directly from experiences in everyday life. Thus for generations new law students have struggled with the seemingly irreconcilable inconsistencies of the classic finders' cases, learning useful skills of case analysis, but left unenlightened as the prevailing rules of law to ultimate solutions.

§ 13.04(e)(1) The Basic Rules of Finders' Rights.

The fundamental premises of finders' rights are the essence of simplicity and clarity: one who finds and takes possession of a lost item n103 has a form of ownership thereof that is superior to the rights of all others but the true owners. Indeed, if the finder should lose the item and then find it again in the possession of a second finder, the first finder may re-claim possession.

However, deep conflict has persisted over just who should be identified as or credited with the rights of the "finder" in certain situations, when the finder is the agent of another, and when the finder is on the property of another. A helpful summary of the confused case law was expressed by the leading authority as follows:

> In respect to those who find lost articles while in the employ of another the courts have been lenient, usually awarding the find to the servant and not to the master, in the absence of proof that it was part of the latter's duties to turn over lost goods to the employer.
>
> ... A sharp conflict exists over the answer to the question whether, in the case of goods found on or in the property of another, the award should be to the one who discovers their presence, or to him who is the owner of the property in or on which the goods are discovered. If the finder is a trespasser, the authorities favor the owner of the place where they are discovered. But if the finder is in some sense an invitee or licensee on the land, the authorities are quite divided. Those who award the goods to the finder adopt without much consideration a popular conception of the "finder" as the one who discovers or brings to knowledge the lost article, and then proceed to declare that the title of the finder is good as against the whole world but the true owner, regardless of the place where found. This is apparently the weight of authority in the United States. Those courts which hold on behalf of the owner of the locus in quo proceed upon the hypothesis that the lost articles belong to the first possessor, and therefore the owner of the property within the compass of which the goods are found, since he possesses such encompassing property and excludes the general public therefrom, must necessarily also possess whatever may be found therein, even though unaware of its presence. This is the view of the English courts and has found favor with the commentators. Both lines of authority, however, frequently draw distinctions between goods found in private, or in public or semipublic places, on the ground that if the > place is private, for example a private house, then the owner of the locus in quo has the intent to possess the place and whatever may be located therein, whereas if the place is public or semipublic, for example the lobby of a bank, then no such intent can be found. The distinction is a difficult one to make... Whether the place be private or so-called semipublic, servants, invitees and licensees are permitted there only for special limited purposes, and the owner waives his right to the control thereof only to the extent of his license. That the license extends so far as to include the right to appropriate lost articles found therein seems doubtful if the courts are endeavoring to discover an actual intent on the part of the owner... Where also goods, not treasure trove, are found under the soil, instead of on the surface or in buildings or some receptacle, the courts customarily grant the find to the owner of the soil on the basis that the possession of the soil carries with it whatever is imbedded therein. If the found goods are treasure trove, the result may be otherwise;... Or a result favoring the owner of the soil may be based on the argument that the goods are "misplaced" or "mislaid" rather than lost... n104

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: right w/20 find! w/20 personal property

§ 13.04(e)(2) Exceptions for Misplaced Items.

Additional controversy has also existed over whether particular items taken by finders were really lost. If an item was intentionally placed in the location where it was eventually found, either for concealment or for convenience or some other purpose of the item's owner, it does not become susceptible to the rights of a "finder." Two categories of goods are sometimes treated in this fashion: items of "treasure trove," and so-called misplaced items.

From the very early days of English law it was recognized that valuable gold and silver goods had been concealed by wealthy owners fleeing unrest or other threat, and in many circumstances the owners had never been able to return and reclaim their treasures. According to the early common law, one who found such a cache of gold or silver, apparently intentionally concealed and the owner unknown, was entitled to retain possession as finder. However, this proposition was soon superseded by claims of royal prerogative, so that treasure trove discoveries went to the crown, eventually to the national government. However, if it could be shown that the treasure trove had actually been abandoned by its true owner, who thereafter did not have an intention of returning and reclaiming the items, then the finder could claim ownership.

By contrast,

> In the United States the state has never claimed title to lost property by virtue of its character as treasure trove, and it has been stated that the law relating thereto is merged with that of lost goods generally, although there is authority for the proposition that while treasure trove in the United States belongs to the finder, found goods not of that character go to the owner of the locus in quo. n105

A more important category of goods not treated as "lost" is represented by the so-called mislaid or misplaced item. If it can be discerned that an item was not unintentionally lost, but rather placed by the owner somewhere for the owner's convenience or safekeeping, a finder of such an item will often not be awarded custody; instead the owner or the property where the item was originally placed and then found will be accorded possession, often on the theory that the property owner was considered a bailee by the owner of the found item. n106 This approach has been much criticized for its artificiality: it is too problematic to discern the true owner's intent regarding the missing item merely from the circumstances of finding; some forms of intentional placement, such as concealing, do not readily suggest a true owner's intent to make the property owner a bailee; and the assumption that placing the item in the custody of the property increases the likelihood of returning it to the true owner is of little practical importance. What this approach may suggest instead is a persistently strong judicial impulse to favor the property owner over the finder when awarding custody of found goods, an impulse that may ultimately be the more sensible approach to all dispositions of items found on private land.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: find! w/50 misplace! or mislaid find! w/50 treasure trove

§ 13.04(e)(3) Statutory Modifications of the Judicial Rules.

In many statutes legislation has been adopted governing the disposition of found property. These often complex provisions typically require the finder to deposit the item with law enforcement or other authorities for a period of time, and to provide or pay for notice to possible owners, and then enable the finder to reclaim custody and even obtain ownership if the true owner does not appear. A vast variety exists in state statutory approaches to finders' duties and rights; by contrast, the large majority of states have adopted the related Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, n107 which legislation, however, does not address the ordinary finders' problems. The following sampling of state finders' statutes illustrates the diversity of legislative approaches.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(i) Florida.

In Florida a finder must report the description and location of the lost property to any law enforcement officer:

705.102 Reporting lost or abandoned property

(1) Whenever any person finds any lost or abandoned property, such person shall report the description and location of the property to a law enforcement officer.

(2) The law enforcement officer taking the report shall ascertain whether the person reporting the property wishes to make a claim to it if the rightful owner cannot be identified or located. If the person does wish to make such claim, he shall deposit with the law enforcement agency a reasonable sum sufficient to cover the agency's cost for transportation, storage, and publication of notice. This sum shall be reimbursed to the finder by the rightful owner should he identify and reclaim the property.

(3) It is unlawful for any person who finds any lost or abandoned property to appropriate the same to his own use or to refuse to deliver the same when required.

(4) Any person who unlawfully appropriates such lost or abandoned property to his own use or refuses to deliver such property when required commits theft as defined in s. 812.014, punishable as provided in s. 775.082, s. 775.083, or s. 775.084.

705.104. Title to lost or abandoned property

(1) Title to lost or abandoned property is hereby vested in the finder upon the expiration of the 90-day custodial time period specified in s. 705.103(2)(b), provided the notice requirements of s. 705.103 have been met, unless the rightful owner or a lienholder claims the property within that time.

(2) Employees of any state, county, or municipal agency shall be deemed agents of such governmental entity, and lost or abandoned property found by them during the course of their official duties shall be turned in to the proper person or department designated to receive such property by the governmental entity. Such property shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter, after which, if unclaimed by the rightful owner, the title to such property shall be vested in the state, county, or municipality and not in the employee.

(3) Employees of public transportation systems shall be deemed agents of such transportation systems, and lost or abandoned property found on public conveyances, in depots, or in garages or a transportation system shall be turned in to the proper person or department designated to receive such property by the transportation systems. Such property shall be subject to the provisions of this section, after which, if unclaimed by the rightful owner, the title to such property shall be vested in the transportation system and not in the employee. n108

For illustrative purposes, Florida's very detailed procedures for handling lost property found on public premises is set forth below:

705.103. Procedure for abandoned or lost property

(1) Whenever a law enforcement officer ascertains that an article of lost or abandoned property is present on public property and is of such nature that it can be easily removed, the officer shall take such article into custody and shall make a reasonable attempt to ascertain the rightful owner or lienholder pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(2) Whenever a law enforcement officer ascertains that an article of lost or abandoned property is present on public property and is of such nature that it cannot be easily removed, the officer shall cause a notice to be placed upon such article in substantially the following form:

NOTICE TO THE OWNER AND ALL PERSONS INTERESTED IN THE ATTACHED PROPERTY. This property, to wit: (setting forth brief description) is unlawfully upon public property known as (setting forth brief description of location) and must be removed within 5 days; otherwise, it will be removed and disposed of pursuant to chapter 705, Florida Statutes. The owner will be liable for the costs of removal, storage, and publication of notice. Dated this: (setting forth the date of posting of notice), signed: (setting forth name, title, address, and telephone number of law enforcement officer).

Such notice shall be not less than 8 inches by 10 inches and shall be sufficiently weatherproof to withstand normal exposure to the elements. In addition to posting, the law enforcement officer shall make a reasonable effort to ascertain the name and address of the owner. If such is reasonably available to the officer, he shall mail a copy of such notice to the owner on or before the date of posting. If the property is a motor vehicle as defined in s. 320.01(1) or a vessel as defined in s. 327.02(27), the law enforcement agency shall contact the Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles or the Department of Natural Resources, respectively, in order to determine the name and address of the owner and any person who has filed a lien on the vehicle or vessel as provided in s. 319.27(2) or (3) or s. 328.15(1). On receipt of this information, the law enforcement agency shall mail a copy of the notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the owner and to the lienholder, if any. If, at the end of 5 days after posting the notice and mailing such notice, if required, the owner or any person interested in the lost or abandoned article or articles described has not removed the article or articles from public property or shown reasonable cause for failure to do so, the following shall apply:

(a) For abandoned property, the law enforcement agency may retain any or all of the property for its own use or for use by the state or unit of local government, trade such property to another unit of local government or state agency, donate the property to a charitable organization, sell the property, or notify the appropriate refuse removal service.

(b) For lost property, the officer shall take custody and the agency shall retain custody of the property for 90 days. The agency shall publish notice of the intended disposition of the property, as provided in this section, during the first 45 days of this time period.

(1) If the agency elects to retain the property for use by the unit of government, donate the property to a charitable organization, surrender such property to the finder, sell the property, or trade the property to another unit of local government or state agency, notice of such election shall be given by an advertisement published once a week for 2 consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the property was found.

(2) If the agency elects to sell the property, it must do so at public sale by competitive bidding. Notice of the time and place of the sale shall be given by an advertisement of the sale published once a week for 2 consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the sale is to be held. The notice shall include a statement that the sale shall be subject to any and all liens. The sale must be held at the nearest suitable place to that where the lost or abandoned property is held or stored. The advertisement must include a description of the goods and the time and place of the sale. The sale may take place no earlier than 10 days after the final publication. If there is no newspaper of general circulation in the county where the sale is to be held, the advertisement shall be posted at the door of the courthouse and at three other public places in the county at least 10 days prior to sale. Notice of the agency's intended disposition shall describe the property in a manner reasonably adequate to permit the rightful owner of the property to identify it.

(3) If the property is sold at public sale pursuant to subparagraph (2)(b)2., the agency shall deduct from the proceeds the costs of transportation, storage, and publication of notice, and any balance of proceeds shall be deposited into an interest-bearing account not later than 30 days after the date of the sale and held there for 1 year. The agency shall provide a bill of sale clearly stating that the sale is subject to any and all liens. The rightful owner of the property may claim the balance of the proceeds within 1 year from the date of the above stated deposit by making application to the agency. If no rightful owner comes forward with a claim to the property within the designated year, the balance of the proceeds shall be deposited into the state school fund.

(4) The owner of any abandoned or lost property who, after notice as provided in this section, does not remove such property within the specified period shall be liable to the law enforcement agency for all costs of removal, storage, and destruction of such property, less any salvage value obtained by disposal of the property. Upon final disposition of the property, the law enforcement officer shall notify the owner, if known, of the amount owed. In the case of an abandoned boat or motor vehicle, any person who neglects or refuses to pay such amount is not entitled to be issued a certificate of registration for such boat or motor vehicle, or any other boat or motor vehicle, until such costs have been paid. The law enforcement officer shall supply the Department of Natural Resources with a list of persons whose boat registration privileges have been revoked under this subsection and the Department of Motor Vehicles with a list of persons whose motor vehicle privileges have been revoked. Neither department nor any other person acting as agent thereof shall issue a certificate of registration to a person whose boat or motor vehicle registration privileges have been revoked, as provided by this subsection, until such costs have been paid.

(5) Whoever opposes, obstructs, or resists any law enforcement officer or any person authorized by the law enforcement officer in the discharge of his duties as provided in this section upon conviction is guilty of a misdemeanor of the second degree, punishable as provided in s. 775.082 or s. 775.083.

(6) Any law enforcement officer or any person authorized by the law enforcement officer is immune from prosecution, civil or criminal, for reasonable, good faith trespass upon real property while in the discharge of duties imposed by this section.

(7) The rightful owner shall be liable for the law enforcement agency's costs for transportation and storage of lost or abandoned property and the agency's cost for publication of notice of disposition of lost property. If the rightful owner does not pay such costs within 30 days of making claim to the property, title to the property shall vest in the law enforcement agency. n109

§ 13.04(e)(3)(ii) Hawaii.

Hawaii requires finders to deliver found property to the county chief of police, and gives separate instructions to the chief of police.

[§ 52D-14] Duty and right of finders.

(a) Except as provided in section 261-17.7, all money or property found shall be reported or delivered by the finder to the chief of police of the county. When so delivered, it shall be held by the chief of police for forty-five days or until claimed by some person who establishes title or right of custody thereto to the satisfaction of the chief of police. If title or right of custody is established, the money or property shall be delivered to the claimant by the chief of police.

(b) If no claim is made or no such right is established within the forty-five days, the money or property shall be returned to the person who delivered it to the chief of police; provided that if the person who delivered it to the chief of police fails to claim the money or property within thirty days after being notified by the chief of police that the person is entitled to possession, the chief of police shall dispose of the money or property in accordance with the procedures established in section 52D-10. For the purpose of this section, notice by regular mail to the person's last known address shall be sufficient.

[§ 52D-10] Disposition of found, stolen, or unclaimed property.

Each chief of police, on the first Monday in January and the first Monday in July, shall give the county director of finance a sworn statement listing all moneys (except money found), goods, wares, and merchandise in the chief's custody which have been unclaimed for a period of not less than ninety days. At least annually, the chief of police shall give notice to the public, once a week for four successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county (and may also give notice by posting in conspicuous places), that, unless claimed by an owner with satisfactory proof of ownership, the goods, wares, and merchandise listed will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder. On the day and at the place specified in the notice, all property still unclaimed, except money and found property, shall be sold by auction by or under the direction of the chief of police. Any unclaimed goods, wares, or merchandise of a perishable nature or which are unreasonably expensive to keep or safeguard, may be sold at public auction or by any commercially reasonable manner, at such time and after such notice as the chief of police deems proper and reasonable under the circumstances. The chief of police, immediately after the sale of any property in accordance with this section, shall pay to the director of finance of the county all moneys remaining unclaimed and all moneys received upon the sale. n110

§ 13.04(e)(3)(iii) Illinois.

In Illinois the finder who cannot locate the owner must file an affidavit in circuit court:

1020/27. Lost goods, money, etc. -- Information to owner -- Affidavit -- Record in estray book -- Records of county clerk -- Sale of perishable goods

§ 27. If any person or persons find any lost goods, money, bank notes, or other choses in action, of any description whatever, such person or persons shall inform the owner thereof, if known, and shall make restitution of the same, without any compensation whatever, except such compensation as shall be voluntarily given on the part of the owner. If the owner is unknown and if such property found is of the value of $100 or upwards, the finder or finders shall, within 5 days after such finding file in the circuit court of the county, an affidavit of the description thereof, the time and place when and where the same was found, that no alteration has been made in the appearance thereof since the finding of the same, that the owner thereof is unknown to the affiant and that the affiant has not secreted, withheld or disposed of any part thereof. The court shall enter an order stating the value of the property found as near as the court can ascertain. A certified copy of such order and the affidavit of the finder shall, within 10 days after the order was entered, be transmitted to the county clerk to be recorded in his estray book, and filed in the office of the county clerk.

If any property found consists of perishable goods, the court shall, at the time the finder presents the affidavit, order that the property be sold at public auction to the highest bidder. The court in the order shall provide for the giving of reasonable notice of the time and place of such sale. The court shall conduct or supervise such sale, and shall enter in the order the amount received from the sale which entry shall be included in the certified copy to be transmitted to the county clerk. The proceeds of the sale, after deducting costs and other expenses shall be turned over to the finder. The finder shall hold such proceeds in lieu of the goods for the owner of the goods sold and shall give such proceeds, after deducting his expenses, to such owner, if the owner claims the same within the time provided by Section 28.

1020/28. Advertisement -- Ownership to vest in finder where money or goods not reclaimed

§ 28. In all cases where such lost goods, money, bank notes or other choses in action shall not exceed the sum of $100 in value and the owner thereof is unknown, the finder shall advertise the same at the court house, and if the owner does not claim such money, goods, bank notes or other choses in action within 6 months from the time of such advertisement, the ownership of such property shall vest in the finder and the court shall enter an order to that effect.

If the value thereof exceeds the sum of $100, the county clerk, within 20 days after receiving the certified copy of the court's order shall cause a notice thereof to be published for 3 weeks successively in some public newspaper printed in this county and if the owner of such goods, money, bank notes, or other choses in action does not claim the same and pay the finder's charges and expenses within one year after the advertisement thereof as aforesaid, the ownership of such property shall vest in the finder and the court shall enter an order to that effect.

1020/30. Costs

§ 30. Except as is otherwise provided by this Act, all costs of proceedings in the matter of an estray or other property taken up or property found, shall be paid by the taker-up or finder in the first instance, and if the owner of the property claims it within the time limited by this Act the owner shall repay the finder or taker-up the amount of such costs before the finder or taker-up shall be required to surrender the property to such owner.

1020/34. Penalty against taker-up

§ 34. If any person taking up any estray or other property, or finding any property, fails to comply with the provisions of this Act, such person shall, for every such offense, pay to the informer the sum of $10, with costs, recoverable in the circuit court of the county where such offense was committed; one-half to the use of the county, and the other half to the use of the person suing for the same.

1020/35. Penalty for selling, etc., estray, etc.

§ 35. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, whoever sells, trades, destroys, or in any way disposes of any estray or other property taken up or any property found, or takes or sends the same out of this state, for any purpose whatever, before the time limited by this Act for the vesting of ownership in the finder or taker-up, shall pay double the value of such property, to be recovered in the circuit court in the name of the owner. n111

§ 13.04(e)(3)(iv) Iowa.

Under Iowa law, the finder must seek the owner and, if unsuccessful must present an affidavit to the county auditor:

644.6 Lost goods or money

If any person shall find any lost goods, money, bank notes, or other things of any description whatever, of the value of five dollars and over, such person shall inform the owner thereof, if known, and make restitution thereof.

644.7 When owner unknown

If the owner be unknown, such person shall, within five days after such finding, take such money, bank notes, and a description of any other property before the county auditor of the county where the property was found, and make affidavit of the description thereof, the time when and place where the same was found, and that no alteration has been made in the appearance thereof since the finding; whereupon the county auditor shall enter a description of the property and the value thereof, as nearly as he can determine it, in his estray book, together with the affidavit of the finder.

644.8 Advertisement

The finder of such lost goods, money, bank notes, or other things, shall forthwith give written notice of the finding of such property. Such notice shall contain an accurate description of the property and a statement as to the time when and place where the same was found, and the post-office address of the finder. Said notice shall:

1. Be posted at the door of the courthouse in the county in which the property was found and in three other of the most public places in the said county; and

2. In case the property found shall exceed ten dollars in value, the notice shall be published once each week for three consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in and having general circulation in said county.

644.9 Record of publication

Proof of publication of said notice and of the posting thereof shall be made by affidavits of the publisher and the person posting said notices, and said affidavits shall be filed in the office of the county auditor of said county.

644.10 Additional publication

The affidavits provided for in section 644.9 shall be entered by the auditor in the proceedings of the board of supervisors and the same shall be published with the proceedings of said board.

644.11 Vesting of title

If no person appears to claim and prove ownership to said goods, money, bank notes, or other things within twelve months of the date when proof of said publication and posting is filed in the office of the county auditor, the right to such property shall irrevocably vest in said finder.

644.12 Ownership settled

In any case where a claim is made to property found or taken up, and the ownership of the property cannot be agreed upon by the finder and claimant, they may make a case before any district judge, associate district judge, or judicial magistrate in the county, who may hear and adjudicate it, and if either of them refuses to make such case the other may make an affidavit of the facts which have previously occurred, and the claimant shall also verify the claim by the claimant's affidavit, and the district judge, associate district judge, or judicial magistrate may take cognizance of and try the matter on the other party having one day's notice, but there shall be no appeal from the decision. This section does not bar any other remedy given by law.

644.13 Compensation

As a reward for the taking up of boats and other vessels, and for finding lost goods, money, bank notes, and other things, before restitution of the property or proceeds thereof shall be made, the finder shall be entitled to ten percent upon the value thereof, and for taking up any logs or lumber, as hereinbefore described, twenty-five cents for each log not exceeding ten, twenty cents for each exceeding ten and not exceeding fifty, fifteen cents for each exceeding fifty, and fifty cents per thousand feet for sawed lumber.

644.14. Costs, charges and care -- assessment

The owner shall also be required to pay the finder all such costs and charges as may have been paid by him for services rendered as aforesaid, including the cost of publication, together with reasonable charges for keeping and taking care of such property, which last mentioned charge, in case the finder and the owner cannot agree, shall be assessed by two disinterested householders of the neighborhood, to be appointed by some magistrate judge of the proper county, whose decision, when made, shall be binding and conclusive on all parties.

644.15. Proceeds -- forfeiture

The net proceeds of sales made by the sheriff, and money or bank notes paid over to the county treasurer, as directed in this chapter, shall remain in the hands of the county treasurer in trust for the owner, if the owner applies within one year from the time the proceeds, moneys, or bank notes would have been paid over. However, if no owner appears within that time, the proceeds, moneys, or bank notes shall be forfeited, and the claim of the owner is forever barred, in which event the money shall be paid to the treasurer of state for deposit in the general fund of the state.

644.16 Responsibility of taker-up

If the taker-up of any watercraft, logs, or lumber, or finder of lost goods, bank notes, or other things, shall take reasonable care of the same, and any unavoidable accident happens thereto without the fault or neglect of the finder or taker-up before the owner shall have an opportunity of reclaiming the same, such taker-up or finder shall not be accountable therefore, if in cases of accident as aforesaid he within ten days thereafter shall certify the same to the county auditor, who will make an entry thereof in his estray book.

644.17 Penalty for selling

If any person shall trade, sell, loan, or take out of the limits of this state any such property taken up or found as aforesaid, before he shall be vested with the right to the same according to the foregoing provisions, he shall forfeit and pay double the value thereof, to be recovered by any person in an action, one half of which shall go to the plaintiff and the other half to the county.

644.18 Failure to comply

If any person shall take up any boat or vessel, or any logs or lumber, or shall find any goods, money, bank notes, or other things, and shall fail to comply with the requirements of this chapter, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of twenty dollars, to be recovered in an action by any person who will sue for the same, one half for the use of the person suing and the other half to be deposited in the county treasury for the use of the common schools; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the owner from having and maintaining his action for the recovery of any damage he may sustain. n112

§ 13.04(e)(3)(v) Michigan.

In Michigan a finder must post a notice of the finding in two public places and give written notice to the township clerk:

434.1 Lost money or goods; notice of finding

Sec. 1. When any person shall find any lost money, or lost goods, if the owner thereof be known, he shall immediately give notice thereof to such owner; if the owner thereof be unknown, and such money or goods be of the value of 3 dollars or more, the finder shall, within 2 days, cause notice thereof to be posted in 2 public places within the township where the same were found; and shall also, within 7 days, give notice thereof in writing to the township clerk of such township, and pay him 25 cents for making an entry thereof in a book to be kept for that purpose.

434.2 Same; notice by publication

Sec. 2. If the money or goods so found be of the value of 10 dollars or more, and the owner thereof be unknown, the finder thereof shall also, within 1 month after such finding, cause notice thereof to be advertised in some newspaper in the same county, if one be published there, and if not, then in some newspaper published in an adjoining county, and continued therein, for 6 successive weeks.

434.6 Appraisal of lost goods or stray animals; filing, fees

Sec. 6. Every finder of lost goods or stray animals, of the value of 10 dollars or more, shall, within 3 months, and before any use shall be made thereof, procure an appraisal of the same to be made and certified by a justice of the peace of his township, which appraisal he shall within said 3 months, cause to be filed with the township clerk; and he shall pay to such justice 50 cents for such appraisal and certificate, and 6 cents for each mile necessarily traveled by him in such service, and to the clerk 6 cents for filing the certificate.

434.7 Lost money or goods; restitution to owner

Sec. 7. If the owner or person entitled to the possession of any such money or goods, other than stray animals, shall appear at any time within 1 year after such entry with the township clerk, and shall make out his rights thereto, he shall have restitution of the same, or of the value thereof, upon his paying all the costs and charges aforesaid, together with a reasonable compensation to the finder for keeping and taking care of the same, and for his necessary travel and expenses in the case; which charges shall, in case of disagreement between the owner and finder, be determined by some justice of the peace of the township, who shall certify the same.

434.8 Same; remaining in finder; township entitled to one-half of value

Sec. 8. If no owner or person entitled to the possession of the same shall appear within 1 year, then such lost money or goods shall remain to the finder, he paying 1/2 of the value thereof to the treasurer of the township, according to said appraisement, after deducting from such value all the fees and charges aforesaid, to be determined and certified by a justice of the peace as aforesaid; and upon the neglect or refusal to pay the said 1/2 of the value, the same shall be recovered by the township treasurer, in an action of debt or on the case.

434.12 Finder; preclusion from certain benefits; willful neglect to comply, penalty

Sec. 12. If the finder of any lost money, goods, or stray beasts, shall neglect to cause the same to be entered, advertised, or notice thereof to be posted, as directed in this chapter, he shall be precluded from all the benefits of this chapter, and from all claim for keeping such goods or animals, or on account of any charges in relation thereto; and if any party shall willfully and with fraudulent intent to convert the same to his own use, neglect to make such entry, or to cause the same to be advertised as hereinbefore provided, for 30 days, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than 10, nor more than 50 dollars, and in the default of the payment thereof, be imprisoned in the county jail for a period not exceeding 90 days. n113

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vi) Montana.

Montana makes a finder who takes possession a depositary and imposes liability in damages payable to the owner if the finder does not diligently seek out the owner:

70-5-102. Finder not bound to take charge--status as depositary.

One who finds a thing lost is not bound to take charge of it, but if he does so, he is thenceforth a depositary for the owner, with the rights and obligations of a depositary for hire.

70-5-103. Duty to inform owner when known.

If any person finds any money, goods, things in action, or other personal property or saves any domestic animal from drowning or starvation when the property is of a value of $10 or more and he knows or suspects who the owner is, he must use reasonable diligence to inform the owner thereof and make restitution without compensation, further than a reasonable charge for saving and taking care thereof. If he fails to do so, he is liable in damages to the owner and has no claim to any reward offered by the owner for the recovery of the thing or to any compensation for his trouble or expenses.

70-5-104. Right of finder to require proof of claimant's ownership.

The finder of a thing may in good faith before giving it up require reasonable proof of ownership from any person claiming it.

70-5-105. Compensation of finder.

The finder of a thing is entitled to compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by him in its preservation and for any other service necessarily performed by him about it and to a reasonable reward for keeping it.

70-5-106. Exoneration of finder of storage of thing found.

The finder of a thing may exonerate himself from liability at any time by placing it on storage with any responsible person of good character at a reasonable expense.

70-5-107. Exoneration of owner by surrender of thing to finder.

The owner of a thing found may exonerate himself from the claims of the finder by surrendering it to him in satisfaction thereof.

70-5-201. When finder may sell thing found.

The finder of a thing may sell it, if it is a thing which is commonly the subject of sale, when the owner cannot with reasonable diligence be found or being found refuses upon demand to pay the lawful charges of the finder, in the following cases:

(1) when the thing is in danger of perishing or of losing the greater part of its value; or

(2) when the lawful charges of the finder amount to two-thirds of its value.

70-5-203. Finder to make affidavit when owner not known.

If the owner is not known to the party saving or finding such property, he must, within 5 days, make an affidavit before some justice of the peace of the county stating when and where he found or saved such property, particularly describing it and, if the property was saved, particularly from what and how he saved the same, stating therein whether the owner of the property is known to him and that he has not secreted, withheld, or disposed of any part of such property.

70-5-204. Justice to appoint appraisers -- duty of appraisers.

The justice must then summon three disinterested householders to appraise the same. The appraisers or any two of them must make two lists of the valuation and description of such property and sign and make oath to the same and deliver one of the lists to the finder and the other to the justice of the peace.

70-5-205. Recording and posting of valuation and description.

The justice must file such list, and the finder must transmit a copy of the same to the county clerk and recorder, who must record the same in a book known as the "Estray and Lost Property Book" within 15 days, and the finder must at once set up at the courthouse door and four other public places in the township or city a copy of such valuation and a description of property.

70-5-206. When property vests in finder -- publication.

If no owner appears and proves the property within 6 months and the value thereof does not exceed $20, the same vests in the finder; but if the value exceeds $20, the finder must, within 30 days after setting up the list mentioned in 70-5-205, cause a copy of the description to be inserted in some newspaper printed in the county if there be one and if not, in some newspaper printed in the state for 3 weeks. If no owner prove the property within 1 year after such publication, it vests in the finder.

70-5-207. When finder to restore property.

If within 1 year an owner appears and proves the property and pays all reasonable charges, including fees of officers, the finder must restore the same to him. On failure to make restoration of such property or the appraised value thereof, on being tendered such charges and fees, the owner may recover the same or the value thereof by civil action in any court having jurisdiction.

70-5-209. Finder failing to make discovery -- double recovery.

If any person find any money, property, or other valuable thing and fail to make discovery of the same as required by this chapter, he forfeits to the owner double the value thereof. n114

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vii) New Hampshire.

New Hampshire requires a notice to the town clerk:

471:1 Notice to Clerk.

The person finding money or goods, or finding and taking up a stray beast, the owner of which is unknown, shall give to the town clerk a notice in writing, describing the money, goods or beast, within 6 days after so finding or taking up the same.

471:2 Record.

The town clerk shall record such notice in a book to be kept by him for that purpose.

471:3 Notice.

The finder of such property shall, within 6 days after finding or taking up the same, post a notice, describing the money, goods or beast, at 2 public places in the town where the same was found, and, if the value thereof exceeds $5, at some public place in each of 2 adjoining towns, or cause a copy of such notice to be published.

471:4 Application for Appraisal.

If no owner appears within one month after notice given as aforesaid, the finder shall apply to a justice, who shall appoint 3 persons to appraise the property, unless the same is money.

471:5 Procedure.

The appraisers shall be sworn by the justice to the faithful discharge of their duty, shall appraise the property and make a return of their appraisal to the justice.

471:6 Unclaimed Property.

If the owner of the property or beast does not appear and claim the same within one year after notice given to the town clerk, the person finding or taking up the same may keep the property for his own use, upon paying to the town treasurer the residue of such money, or of the appraised value of such property or beast, after deducting the fees and expenses incurred.

471:7 Payment or Tender of Charges and Fees.

The owner, within one year, upon paying or tendering to the finder a reasonable sum for the keeping, charges and fees incurred, shall be entitled to his property.

471:8. Determination of Fees and Charges.

Any justice shall adjust and determine the amount of the fees and charges of the finder, clerk, appraisers and justice, and the expense of keeping, on application of any person interested.

471:10. Neglect of Finder.

Any person finding any property or taking up any stray beast, and neglecting to give notice to the town clerk, or to post notices as aforesaid, or to cause such appraisal to be made, shall receive nothing for his services or expense, and shall forfeit a sum equal to double the value of the property found or beast taken up. n115

§ 13.04(e)(3)(viii) New York.

In New York, governing boards of municipal corporations are authorized to regulate the administration of lost and found property according to provisions of the state personal property law:

§ 250. Lost and found property

The governing boards of municipal corporations may by resolution enact rules and regulations for administering the provisions of article seven-b of the personal property law and may provide the following:

(a) the designation of a public officer to accept and keep custody of found property and found instruments;

(b) procedures for determining the value and for estimating the net sum likely to be realized by sale at public auction of lost property as defined in article seven-b of the personal property law;

(c) a procedure for the disposition of derelict automobiles and other property having no value or salvage value only;

(d) longer or shorter periods of time for the report and deposit of found property and instruments by specified classes of persons having possession thereof or for either such report or such deposit, provided, however, that such rules and regulations so enacted by a county or town shall not supersede rules and regulations so enacted by a county or town shall not supersede rules and regulations with respect to time for report and deposit, or for either report or deposit, so enacted by any municipal corporation within its limits, except to such extent as may be provided by an agreement pursuant to section two hundred fifty-one of this chapter;

(e) provisions for notices, reports, storage, and sales of found property not inconsistent with the provisions of article seven-b of the personal property law;

(f) the payment of proceeds from the sale of lost property as defined in article seven-b of the personal property law into a public fund other than the treasury of the municipal corporation. n116

§ 13.04(e)(3)(ix) Oklahoma.

Oklahoma makes the finder who takes possession of the item a bailee who must make diligent effort to give notice to the owner:

§ 511. Finder a bailee, when

One who finds a thing lost is not bound to take charge of it; but if he does so, he is thenceforward a bailee for the owner, with the rights and obligations of a bailee for hire.

§ 512. Finder must notify owner if known

If the finder of a thing knows or suspects who the owner is, he must, with reasonable diligence, give him notice of the finding; and if he fails to do so, he is liable in damages to the owner, and has no claim to any reward offered by him for the recovery of the thing, or to any compensation for his trouble or expenses.

§ 513. Claimant must prove ownership

The finder of a thing may, in good faith, before giving it up, require reasonable proof of ownership from any person claiming it.

§ 514. Compensation and reward for service

The finder of a thing is entitled to compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by him in its preservation, and for any other service necessarily performed by him about it, and to a reasonable reward for keeping it.

§ 515. Exoneration of finder from liability by storing with another

The finder of a thing may exonerate himself from liability at any time, by placing it on storage with any responsible person of good character, at a reasonable expense.

§ 516. Finder may sell, when

The finder of a thing may sell it, if it is a thing which is commonly the subject of sale, when the owner cannot with reasonable diligence be found; or, being found, refuses upon demand to pay the lawful charges of the finder, in the following cases:

(1) When the thing is in danger of perishing, or losing the greater part of its value; or,

(2) When the lawful charges of the finder amount to two-thirds of its value.

§ 517. Manner of sale

A sale under the provisions of the last section [§ 516] must be made in the same manner as the sale of a thing pledged.

§ 518. Surrender of thing to finder

The owner of a thing found may exonerate himself from the claims of the finder by surrendering it to him in satisfaction thereof. n117

§ 13.04(e)(3)(x) Oregon.

Oregon finders must give notice to the county clerk and then publish a notice of the finding:

98.005 Rights and duties of finder of money or goods.

(1) If any person finds money or goods valued at $100 or more, and if the owner of the money or goods is unknown, such person, within 10 days after the date of the finding, shall give notice of the finding in writing to the county clerk of the county in which the money or goods was found. Within 20 days after the date of the finding, the finder of the money or goods shall cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county a notice of the finding once each week for two consecutive weeks. Each such notice shall state the general description of the money or goods found, the name and address of the finder and final date before which such goods may be claimed.

(2) If no person appears and establishes ownership of the money or goods prior to the expiration of three months after the date of the notice to the county clerk under subsection (1) of this section, the finder shall be the owner of the money or goods.

98.015 Liability of non-complying finder; forfeiture to county of unreclaimed money or goods.

If any person who finds money or goods valued at $100 or more fails to comply with ORS 98.005, the person shall be liable, upon conviction for violation of ORS 164.065, to the county for the money or goods or the full value of the money or goods. The county treasurer shall hold the money or goods or their value for the owner thereof and shall publish notice of the finding of the money or goods in the manner provided in ORS 98.005. If the owner has not reclaimed such money or goods within three months after the date of the first publication of notice by the county treasurer, the owner shall forfeit the rights of the owner to the value of such money or goods and the value of such money or goods shall be placed in the general fund of the county to be used for the payment of the general operating expenses of the county.

98.025 Rights of owner.

If an owner of money or goods found by another person appears and establishes a claim to such money or goods within the time period prescribed by ORS 98.005 or 98.015, whichever applies, the owner shall have restitution of such money or goods or their value upon payment of all costs and charges incurred in the finding, giving of notice, care and custody of such money or goods. n118

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xi) Vermont.

The finder in Vermont must post a notice in two public places and, for more valuable property, also publish a notice in a local newspaper:

§ 1101. Finder to give notice

A person who finds money or goods, to the value of $3.00 or more, or takes up a stray beast, the owner of which is not known, shall, within six days thereafter, make two notices, describing such money, goods or beast, with the natural or artificial marks, with the time and place of finding or taking up the same, and post them in two public places in town in which such property was found.

§ 1102. Penalty for destroying notices

A person who wilfully takes down or destroys such a notice within sixty days from the time of posting the same shall be fined $7.00, unless the owner has appeared and claimed such property.

§ 1103. Publication of notice in newspaper

If the value of such property exceeds $10.00, the person finding it shall immediately cause a copy of the notice to be published three weeks successively in some newspaper circulating in such town.

§ 1104. Recording copy of notice

If the owner of such property does not appear and claim it within twenty days from the date of such notice, the person so finding it shall cause a copy of the notice to be recorded in the office of the clerk of such town.

§ 1105. Sale of property; disposition of proceeds

If the owner of the property does not appear and prove his title within ninety days from the time of posting the first notice, the person finding the property may sell it at public auction. The avails of the sale, after paying the expenses of keeping the property, and of the proceedings relating to the same, shall be paid to the town treasurer, at the time of paying the avails of the sale.

§ 1106. Accounting for proceeds

The account of the expenses shall be examined and allowed by a district judge of the county, and deposited with such treasurer, at the time of paying the avails of the sale.

§ 1107. Owner may have property before sale

If, previous to the sale, the owner appears and proves his title to the property, he shall be entitled to the same on paying the expenses of keeping, and of the proceedings required by this chapter.

§ 1108. Failure of finder to comply with chapter

If a person finds money or goods, or takes up a stray beast and does not thus advertise or perform the duties required of him by this chapter, he shall not receive pay for keeping, or for other proceedings relating to such property, and shall forfeit to the use of the town in which the same is found, the value of such money, goods or stray beast, to be recovered in an action on this statute. n119

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xii) Washington.

Washington state requires finders to obtain a written statement of appraisal within seven days of the finding:

63.21.010. Procedure where finder wishes to claim found property -- Appraisal -- Surrender of property -- Notice of intent to claim -- Publication

Any person who finds property that is not unlawful to possess, the owner of which is unknown, and who wishes to claim the found property, shall:

(1) Within seven days of the finding acquire a signed statement setting forth an appraisal of the current market value of the property prepared by a qualified person engaged in buying or selling like items or by a district court judge;

(2) Within seven days report the find of property and surrender, if requested, the property and a copy of the evidence of the value of the property to the chief law enforcement officer, or his or her designated representative, of the governmental entity where the property was found, and serve written notice upon the officer of the finder's intent to claim the property if the owner does not make out his or her right to it under this chapter; and

(3) Within thirty days of the finding cause notice of the finding to be published at least once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the property was found.

63.21.020. Circumstances extinguishing finder's claim to property

The finder's claim to the property shall be extinguished:

(1) If the owner satisfactorily establishes, within sixty days after the find was reported to the appropriate officer, the owner's right to possession of the property; or

(2) If the chief law enforcement officer determines and so informs the finder that the property is illegal for the finder to possess.

63.21.030. Release of property to finder -- Limitations -- Payment to governmental entity of portion of appraised value -- Expiration of finder's claim

(1) The found property shall be released to the finder and become the property of the finder sixty days after the find was reported to the appropriate officer if no owner has been found, or sixty days after the final disposition of any judicial or other official proceeding involving the property, whichever is later. The property shall be released only after the finder has presented evidence of:

(a) Compliance with the publication requirement of this chapter, and

(b) If the property is valued at more than twenty-five dollars, payment to the treasurer of the governmental entity handling the found property, the amount of five dollars, or ten percent of the appraised value of the property, whichever is greater, which amount shall be deposited in the general fund of the governmental entity.

(2) When ninety days have passed after the found property was reported to the appropriate officer, or ninety days after the final disposition of a judicial or other proceeding involving the found property, and the finder has not completed the requirements of this chapter, the finder's claim shall be deemed to have expired and the found property may be disposed of as unclaimed property under chapter 63.32 or 63.40 RCW. Such laws shall also apply whenever a finder states in writing that he or she has no intention of claiming the found property.

63.21.040. Failure to comply with chapter -- Forfeiture of right to property

Any finder of property who fails to discharge the duties imposed by this chapter shall forfeit all right to the property and shall be liable for the full value of the property to its owner.

63.21.050. Duties of chief law enforcement officer receiving found property

The chief law enforcement officer or his or her designated representative to whom a finder surrenders property, shall:

(1) Advise the finder if the found property is illegal for him or her to possess;

(2) Advise the finder if the found property is to be held as evidence in judicial or other official proceedings;

(3) Advise the finder in writing of the procedures to be followed in claiming the found property;

(4) If the property is valued at twenty-five dollars or less, allow the finder to retain the property if it is determined there is no reason for the officer to retain the property;

(5) If the property exceeds twenty-five dollars in value and has been requested to be surrendered to the law enforcement agency, retain the property for sixty days before it can be claimed by the finder under this chapter, unless the owner shall have recovered the property;

(6) If the property is held as evidence in judicial or other official proceedings, retain the property for sixty days after the final disposition of the judicial or other official proceeding, before it can be claimed by the finder or owner under the provisions of this chapter;

(7) After the required number of days have passed, and if no owner has been found, surrender the property to the finder according to the requirements of this chapter; or

(8) If neither the finder nor the owner claim the property retained by the officer within thirty days of the time when the claim can be made, the property shall be disposed of as unclaimed property under chapter 63.32 or 63.40 RCW. n120

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xiii) The Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

As mentioned before, the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act do not really deal with the legal questions pertaining to ordinary finders, but their subject matter is so closely related that a brief description of those acts in this context is warranted. The Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act was promulgated in 1954 and revised in 1966. It has been one of the more widely adopted uniform acts and is currently in force in fourteen states and the District of Columbia. n121

At the peak of its popularity, the 1966 Act had been adopted by thirty-one states and the District of Columbia, but some of its provisions needed reworking after a 1965 U.S. Supreme Court decision. Thus in 1981 the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act was promulgated and superseded the 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act. This later Act has now been adopted by twenty-eight states, although five of those states have mixed provisions from the 1966 and 1981 acts and are usually counted among the adopting states for both acts. n122 Altogether, forty-two states and the District of Columbia have adopted a form of uniform legislation on this subject.

The principal objective of these uniform acts is to bring unclaimed and ostensibly abandoned intangible property into the treasury of the state in a way that is not unfair to potential private claimants:

> Uniform and comprehensive state legislation dealing with the disposition of unclaimed property should fill a very real need. Present statutory provisions on the subject are exceedingly diverse in character and are often not well formulated. Most states already have statutes dealing with the disposition of unclaimed tangible personal property, the abandonment of which is more or less obvious fact. In addition, a considerable number of states have statutes dealing with the disposition of unclaimed bank deposits.
>
> ... The Uniform Act is custodial in nature -- that is to say, it does not result in the loss of the owner's property rights. The state takes custody and remains the custodian in perpetuity. Although the actual possibility of his presenting a claim in the distant future is not great, the owner retains his right of presenting his claim at any time, no matter how remote. State records will have to be kept on a > permanent basis. In this respect the measure differs from the escheat type of statute, pursuant to which the right of the owner is foreclosed and the title to the property passes to the state.

>
> ... The Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, if adopted by the states, will serve to protect the interests of owners, to relieve the holders from annoyance, expense and liability, to preclude multiple liability, and to give the adopting state the use of some considerable sums of money that otherwise would, in effect, become a windfall to the holders thereof. n123

The 1981 Uniform Unclaimed Property Act introduced changes to clarify and conform to court rulings the guidelines for determining which of several claimant states should have priority in taking custody of unclaimed property.

The principal operative provision of the 1981 act deals only with intangible property:

§ 2. [Property Presumed Abandoned; General Rule]

(a) Except as otherwise provided by the Act, all intangible property, including any income or increment derived therefrom, less any lawful charges, that is held, issued, or owing in the ordinary course of a holders' business and has remained unclaimed by the owner for more than 5 years after it becomes payable or distributable is presumed abandoned.

(b) Property is payable or distributable for the purpose of this Act notwithstanding the owner's failure to make demand or to present any instrument or document required to received payment. n124

Intangible property is defined as:

> (i) monies, checks, drafts, deposits, interest, dividends, and income;
>
> (ii) credit balances, customer overpayments, gift certificates, security deposits, refunds, credit memos, unpaid wages, unused airline tickets, and unidentified remittances;
>
> (iii) stocks and other intangible ownership interests in business associations;
>
> (iv) monies deposited to redeem stocks, bonds, coupons, and other securities, or to make distributions;
>
> (v) amounts due and payable under the terms of insurance policies; and
>
> (vi) amounts distributable from a trust or custodial fund established under a plan to provide health, welfare, pension, vacation, severance, retirement, death, stock purchase, profit sharing, employee savings, supplemental unemployment insurance, or similar benefits. n125

§ 13.04(f) Transfers to Judgment Creditors.

In a strictly technical sense, one who obtains the benefit of a judgment in a legal action concerning ownership of personal property does not thereby acquire title to that personalty by means of transfer; the judgment in most instances simply declares the ownership of the personalty as it already existed when the legal action began. However, if, as the result of a judgment, a judgment creditor executes upon property of the judgment debtor that was not the subject of the legal action, and either obtains the property outright or the value of the property after judicial sale, then a transfer of property ownership has taken place, indirectly at least as a result of the judgment. This latter process is discussed in detail in § 13.08, Liens, infra.

In several other senses, however, it may be said that judgments effect transfers of personal property ownership. An erroneous judgment as to ownership of property, once final and not subject to collateral or other attack, still determines the title to the property, even if conferred on the wrong party; the error is effectively a transfer of title. Judgments are binding not only on the parties themselves, but on their successors in interest and on those who could have participated in but did not participate in the litigation. n126

An indirect transfer of title occurs when an owner of property sues another for conversion, seeking the value of the converted property. Upon succeeding in obtaining that value by means of a satisfied judgment, the plaintiff effectively surrenders ownership of the thing itself, which then reposes in and has in effect been transferred to the defendant. If the judgment cannot be satisfied, some courts hold that no transfer of ownership has yet occurred, so that the plaintiff could still recover the property itself by self-help or replevin; n127 other courts, perhaps the majority in American jurisdictions, hold that the judgment creditor is precluded by the doctrine of election of remedies from seeking the property itself. n128 Somewhat inconsistently, if the judgment debtor who has not satisfied the judgment for the value of the property then transfers the property to another, the judgment creditor may pursue a new judgment for either the property itself or the value against the transferee. n129 When title has been obtained by means of conversion and a satisfied judgment, the converter's title relates back to the time of conversion. n130 Consistent with this view, any accessions to the property, occurring after the conversion, belong to the converter who has satisfied the owner's judgment for the original property value. The larger questions of accessions are covered in the next section.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: personal w/5 property w/50 transfer! w/20 judgment
w/5 creditor

§ 13.04(g) Transfer by Accession.

§ 13.04(g)(1) General Principles of Accession.

It is helpful to state the basic principles of accession law in their simplest, idealized form before discussing the intricacies of individual issues. Accession occurs if one takes personal property of another and adds significant value to it or incorporates it into the taker's own valuable property, so that it would be unjust to require the taker to return the improperly taken item to its owner. In this context, the word accession connotes adding to or supplementing. Thus "accession" is an accurate description of what occurs when an item of property is greatly added to by the labor of one not the owner, or is incorporated into another's property of much greater value. By operation of law, the title to the property affected by accession is transferred from the property's original owner to the party that enhanced the property's value or incorporated the property into other, more valuable property.

A person who loses title to property by accession is almost always entitled to recover the value of that property in money damages; the main disadvantage is that the time, and even the very choice, of converting the property to money are taken from the discretion of the owner and in some circumstances may not work to the owner's advantage. On the other hand, if the owner successfully defeats a claim of accession and wins back the property, usually in a condition of enhanced value, ordinarily the owner will not be required to reimburse the unsuccessful accessioner for the value added to the returned property; conversely, if the property comes back in a less valuable condition, the owner may obtain reimbursement up to the property's original value.

In determining whether improperly taken goods have been lost to another by accession, three issues must be resolved: (1) no accession can occur if the taking and mixing with other goods or property was wilful, fraudulent or wrongful in some other way; (2) no accession occurs if the property taken can be identified in more or less its original form and separated and returned without undue hardship or damage; and (3) no accession occurs unless there has been a significant enhancement in value to the taken property by the accessioner.

§ 13.04(g)(2) No Accession After Wrongful Taking.

Accession is usually denied if the taking of the property was willful (in the sense that the taker knew that the taking was wrongful), fraudulent or wrongful in some other way. In such a case, the property's owner will be entitled to return of the property, even if its identity has changed and significant value has been added, with no offset for the value added by the taker. This principle was established early, as in the old case in which one who knowingly took another's corn to make whiskey was required to surrender the whiskey itself to the owner, without offset for the substantial enhancement in the corn's value. n131 Other similar cases still arise in more modern times, usually over improper takings of timber or minerals. n132

A more difficult situation is presented when the taking was not explicitly willful, but only negligent. The decisions range from not taking the negligence into account (and awarding the owner the property with its full enhancement of value) to awarding the owner the property with its enhanced value but offset by the taker's expenses (which, in effect, returns to the owner the property with original value plus the profit from the accession, but not the cost of the accession itself). n133 Courts have devised various formulas for reimbursing the owner when the taker was innocent but to some degree at fault through negligence. n134

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: accession and taking w/20 wrongful

§ 13.04(g)(3) No Accession if the Property's Identity Is Not Lost.

If the circumstances of the taking do not preclude a finding of accession, it must then be determined if the property taken has retained its identity. In the leading case, axles and wheels added to a wagon were required to be returned to their owner. n135 This is seldom a straightforward judgment. Timber cut into boards supposedly retains its identity, but grapes made into wine or clay into bricks do not. n136

Since the conclusion that identity has not changed usually means the owner is entitled to the return of the property with its enhanced value, inconsistency in the decisions has been troubling. For example, timber turned into a boat frame has been held to have retained its identity, while timber turned into a canoe has not. n137 Clay made into bricks has supposedly lost its identity, n138 but wood made into charcoal has not. n139 Most troubling would be requiring the return of some raw material that was innocently taken and transformed into a work of art, even though the material itself was readily identifiable; theoretically the owner would be entitled to the return of the raw material with its artistic enhancement and vastly increased value.

A subset of these questions has become almost a litigation specialty.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: accession and identity w/50 transform! or chang!

§ 13.04(g)(4) No Accession if No Significant Value Is Added.

The final major issue to be resolved before determining whether accession has occurred is whether significant value has been added to the property taken, and most accession cases are concerned with this issue. The easiest cases are those in which a very large increase in value has been added to the taken property, and the next easiest are those in which little or no value has been added. In between are the large majority of cases, which collectively give little guidance about how much enhancement in value is enough to qualify for accession. In one case considered a leading case, the transformation of lumber into barrel hoops increased the value of the wood by 28 times, and that was sufficient to justify a finding of accession. n140 In these judgments considerable inconsistency could be expected, and in one extreme comparative example, a three-fold increase was held sufficient for accession, but a six-fold increase was not. n141

A variant of this enhanced value analysis arises when the taker incorporates the goods of the owner into other goods belonging to the taker. The principal item, or the item of dominant value, determines which party is awarded possession, although decisions on this point are also not always consistent.

Another variant of these questions draws into some doubt the rule that goods retaining their separate identity cannot be subjects of accession. In these cases various goods, such as tires and batteries, are incorporated into automobiles as accessories and are sometimes considered part of the automobile by means of accession, even though they are still separately identifiable and could be severed and removed without damage. One rationale favoring accession in such cases is that the goods added by accession are essential to the functioning of the vehicle. n142 However, usually no accession is found, as described in the A.L.R. annotation introduction:

> The typical situation presented by the cases herein arises when one having possession of an automobile or truck under a title-retaining instrument attaches accessories to the vehicle, which accessories may themselves have been purchased under a title-retaining instrument. The controversy ordinarily is between the seller of the car and the seller of the accessories to determine ownership of the accessories when the car is repossessed upon the conditional buyer's default.
>
> A material consideration in the law of accession is whether the lesser property has become so united with the greater as to be incapable of detachment without harm to either the principal article or the thing attached. Generally, with respect to the detachability of the accessory or equipment from the automobile, it may be said that the courts are less likely to apply the doctrine of accession if the items in question can be removed expediently and with little or no damage to themselves or the automobile...
>
> ... The bulk of the cases support the conclusion that where title has not passed from the conditional seller of the accessories at the time the car is repossessed, there is no accession. n143

The cases holding otherwise, that title to property has passed by accession, have emphasized that the parts, though possibly severable, were integral parts of the vehicle necessary to its proper working. n144 In recent cases, tires purchased by a wife for an automobile that was community property merged with the automobile by accession and ceased to be her separate property; n145 and a winch installed on a truck was deemed attached by accession, because it was securely affixed to the truck's undercarriage and integrated into the truck's electrical system. n146

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: accession and value w/50 enhanc! or add!

§ 13.04(g)(5) The Impact of Accession on Security Interests in the Goods.

When either or both of the items involved in an accession situation are subject to security interests held by others, their respective priorities are now governed by § 9-314 of the Uniform Commercial Code. In general, the Code requires that one with a pre-accession security interest in goods retains priority as to those goods even when they are attached to other goods by accession; however, if the security interest holder chooses to remove the added goods, sometimes compensation for removal damage must be paid:

§ 9-314. Accessions.

(1) A security interest in goods which attaches before they are installed in or affixed to other goods takes priority as to the goods installed or affixed (called in this section "accessions") over the claims of all persons to the whole except as stated in subsection (3) and subject to Section 9-315(1).

(2) A security interest which attaches to goods after they become part of a whole is valid against all persons subsequently acquiring interests in the whole except as stated in subsection (3) but is invalid against any person with an interest in the whole at the time the security interest attaches to the goods who has not in writing consented to the security interest or disclaimed an interest in the goods as part of the whole.

(3) The security interests described in subsections (1) and (2) do not take priority over

(a) a subsequent purchaser for value of any interest in the whole, or

(b) a creditor with a lien on the whole subsequently obtained by judicial proceedings; or

(c) a creditor with a prior perfected security interest in the whole to the extent that he makes subsequent advances if the subsequent purchase is made, the lien by judicial proceedings obtained or the subsequent advance under the prior perfected security interest is made or contracted for without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. A purchaser of the whole at a foreclosure sale other than the holder of a perfected security interest purchasing at his own foreclosure sale is a subsequent purchaser within this section.

(4) When under subsections (1) or (2) and (3) a secured party has an interest in accessions which has priority over the claims of all persons who have interests in the whole, he may on default subject to the provisions of Part 5 remove his collateral from the whole, but he must reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the whole who is not the debtor and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of the repair of any physical injury but not for any diminution in value of the whole caused by the absence of goods removed or by any necessity for replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the secured party gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation. n147

§ 13.04(g)(6) Accession of Personalty to Realty.

When personal property is joined to real property by accession, the personalty is either so integrated into the realty as to lose its separate identity or, even though still identifiable, is so affixed as to become a fixture and thus be considered part of the realty. Here the traditional operation of accession doctrine favors the owner of the realty, even if a windfall results. A house mistakenly built on the land of another may be retained by the landowner; if a landowner improperly moved a house belonging to another to the owner's land, the house owner lost the right to reclaim the house. More recent cases have permitted recovery of the accessioned personalty n148 or at least its value. n149

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: accession and real! w/50 personal!

§ 13.04(g)(7) Rules for Relief by Recovery of Damages Rather than the Property Itself.

One whose goods have been taken and then transformed or incorporated into a much more valuable item may choose to sue for money damages rather than for the return of the enhanced personal property. If the taking was willful (knowingly wrongful), the plaintiff may often recover the value of the taken goods in their enhanced form. n150 In many of these cases involving wrongful taking of timber or minerals, double or treble damages may be statutorily imposed for such activities; however, that approach is most likely related to the state's waste jurisprudence. n151

Where the defendant taker acted not willfully, but perhaps negligently or even inadvertently, the court may award the enhanced value of the item, offset by the actual or reasonable expenses of the defendant in improving the item. n152 Alternatively, in an action for damages it is possible for the court to award merely the original value of the taken item, n153 which the court may do if the taker was entirely innocent.

If one who takes and improperly enhances the value of an item and subsequently sells the improved item to another, the owner has several possibilities in an action to recover damages. Besides an action against the wrongful, negligent, or innocent taker as described in the immediately preceding paragraphs, the owner may proceed against the purchaser. By traditional common law rule, such a purchaser is liable for the value of the goods at the time of the purchase. n154 In other cases, the purchaser is considered to stand in the place of the vendor (the original accessioner) and to face liability as would the accessioner, varying according to the innocence of the accessioner. n155 All of these holdings may be modified in jurisdictions that accord protection to bona fide purchasers in accession situations, as discussed in § 13.04(c), supra.

One other difficult problem arises with uncommon frequency: what relief is available to one who builds a house on the wrong land? If the builder is aware of the error during the time of construction, no relief is given, n156 and even if the mistake is innocent, often no relief is available. n157 Other courts may require reimbursement from the landowner, n158 especially if the landowner's conduct in some way induced the mistake. n159

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: accession and damages

§ 13.04(h) Transfers Under the Doctrine of Confusion.

Confusion, as a legal term of art, occurs when the goods of one become so mixed with the goods of another or of others, that ownership can no longer be determined:

> Confusion frequently occurs in connection with so-called fungible goods, such as grain, oil, and the different mineral ores, which, since one unit of the common mass is the same in quality and value as any other unit, are customarily sold by weight or measure. It may, however, exist when goods of any nature belonging to different owners are so intermingled that they cannot be identified and separated and returned to their respective owners. Thus timber, cattle, and stocks of package merchandise are often so intermixed as to constitute confusion of goods in the legal sense. n160

If the confused goods are of the same kind and each party's respective quantity is known, then each owner is entitled to a corresponding share of the common mass; intermingled money is also treated in this fashion. n161 Occasionally, if a party has intentionally caused the confusion, a court may prohibit that party from any portion of the common mass.

n162 This was the rule at common law, as expressed by Blackstone:

> But if one wilfully intermixes his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man without his approbation or knowledge, or casts gold in like manner into another's melting pot or crucible, the civil law, although it gives the sole property of the whole to him who has not interfered in the mixture, yet allows a satisfaction to the other for what he has so improvidently lost. But our law, to guard against fraud, gives the entire property without any account, to him whose original dominion is invaded, and endeavored to be rendered uncertain without his own consent. n163

If goods of different kind become confused, with no party at fault, the owners are considered tenants in common of the common mass, and their undivided fractional shares are equal unless a different proportion of contribution is proved. n164

In such a case -- confusion of goods of different kind -- where the confusion was wrongfully caused by one of the parties, the wrongdoer may be held to have no rights in the common mass, as with confusion of like goods. n165 This situation has frequently occurred when persons join to defraud creditors by mixing the property of several debtors:

> [W]here there is evidence of a common design between several persons to defraud the creditors of one of them, and in carrying out the purpose there is an intentional intermixture of the goods of the debtor with the goods of those acting in collusion with him, so that separation is practically impossible, all the inconvenience of the confusion is cast upon him who permitted it, and it is for him to distinguish his own property satisfactorily or lose it, for the law will not distinguish it for him. n166

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: confusion w/20 goods

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 31. The leading common law case for this proposition is Cochrane v. Moore, LR 25 QBD 57 (1890) (the fourth part of a horse given by oral expression was held not to be a gift because no delivery occurred).

(n2)Footnote 32. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 79 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n3)Footnote 33. Coleman v. Parker, 114 Mass. 30 (1873).

(n4)Footnote 34. Lee v. Lee, 5 F.2d 767 (D.C. Cir. 1925).

(n5)Footnote 35. In re Osborne's Estate, 178 N.E.2d 406 (Ill. App. 1962) (conservator's action to recover time deposits that were not intended to be given to ward's brother-in-law).

(n6)Footnote 36. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 83 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n7)Footnote 37. Hudson v. Tucker, 361 P.2d 878 (Kan. 1961) (action to recover personal property from decedent's step-daughter, who received the property from the decedent and they returned it for safekeeping).

(n8)Footnote 38. Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307 (Ark. 1884) (dying father made gift to infant daughter by delivery to a trustee).

(n9)Footnote 39. Grissom v. Sternberger, 10 F.2d 764 (4th Cir. 1926) (delivery was complete when a father delivered stock to a son with a letter of assignment to other children).

(n10)Footnote 40. Hillebrant v. Brewer, 6 Tex. 45 (1851) (a father branded certain cattle with a special brand recorded in the son's name).

(n11)Footnote 41. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 92 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n12)Footnote 42. See, e.g., Newman v. Bost, 29 S.E. 848 (N.C. 1898).

(n13)Footnote 43. Bauernschmidt v. Bauernschmidt, 54 A. 637 (Md. 1903) (jointly held safe deposit box, with both husband and wife keeping a key).

(n14)Footnote 44. Rule v. Fleming, 152 N.E. 181 (Ind. App. 1926) (decedent, anticipating death from an operation, rented a safe deposit in joint names and gave a duplicate key to the other named holder).

(n15)Footnote 45. Waite v. Grubbe, 73 P. 206 (Ore. 1903). However, reaching the opposite conclusion was the court in Shankle v. Spahr, 93 S.E. 605 (Va. 1917).

(n16)Footnote 46. Denying that a gift occurred were the courts in Gerry v. Howe, 130 Mass. 350 (1881), and in Picot v. Sanderson, 12 N.C. 309 (1827). The court in Simmonds v. Simmonds' Adm'r, 118 S.W. 304 (Ky. 1909), found a valid gift, holding that a bailee could not be allowed wrongfully to obstruct the donation.

(n17)Footnote 47. In re Detjen's Estate, 148 N.W.2d 745 (Wis. 1967) (decedent intended to make a gift of a savings account fund to his daughter-in-law, to whom he was very close).

(n18)Footnote 48. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 55 Vt. 325 (1883) (carriage given by father to daughter).

(n19)Footnote 49. Hackworth v. Barham, 210 So. 2d 407 (La. App. 1968) (car sold to another remained in seller's possession and control until seller's death).

(n20)Footnote 50. In re Dodge, 216 A.2d 757 (N.J. Super. 1966), rev'd on other grounds, 234 A.2d 65 (N.J. 1966).

(n21)Footnote 51. See, e.g., Speelman v. Pascal, 178 N.E.2d 723 (N.Y. 1961) (gift of share in profits from theatrical production).

(n22)Footnote 52. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Lockhaven v. Fitzpatrick, 289 N.Y.S.2d 314 (1968) donor informed donees of the gift, but the gift remained in donor's possession).

(n23)Footnote 53. See, e.g., In re Solot's Estate, 50 N.Y.S.2d 401 (1944), aff'd, 55 N.Y.S.2d 125 (1945) (delivery occurred when donor endorsed envelopes containing cash and other valuables).

(n24)Footnote 54. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 112-113 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n25)Footnote 55. See, e.g., McPherson v. Minier, 137 N.W.2d 719 (Neb. 1965) (use of fraud and undue influence to induce a 90-year-old man to give property away).

(n26)Footnote 56. Register of Wills for Somerset County v. Sterling, 287 A.2d 771 (Md. 1972) (stocks delivered, but donor retained right to receive dividends); Innes v. Potter, 153 N.W. 604 (Minn. 1915) (shares of stock assigned to decedent's daughter but given to decedent's business partner, with instructions to deliver upon decedent's death); Schollmier v. Schoendelen, 43 N.W. 282 (Iowa 1889) (decedent's signed instruction to deliver saving account upon decedent's death was given to one of the donees).

(n27)Footnote 57. Howard v. Hobbs, 94 A. 318 (Md. 1915) (mortgagor accepted ownership of forfeited land in return for agreement to remain on the land and pay interest until mortgagor's death); Candee v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 71 A. 551 (Conn. 1908) (savings account given subject to donor's right to use for life).

(n28)Footnote 58. Parry v. Parry, 191 A.2d 439 (Md. 1963) (shares of stock to change ownership automatically at holder's death).

(n29)Footnote 59. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 121 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n30)Footnote 60. See, e.g., Daigle v. Fournet, 141 So. 2d 406 (La. App. 1962) (donee called off the engagement, but sought to retain the ring).

(n31)Footnote 61. See, e.g., Lewis v. Permut, 320 N.Y.S.2d 408 (1971) (donor broke the engagement, and donee kept the ring).

(n32)Footnote 62. Devine v. Stepanek, 176 Ill. App. 61 (1912) (attempted conditional gift of certificates of deposit).

(n33)Footnote 63. Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 512 (1871) (gift if money, if not used by donor before donor's death).

(n34)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Gottstein v. Hedges, 228 N.W. 93 (Iowa 1929) (refusal to accept an annuity).

(n35)Footnote 65. See, e.g., Halisey v. Howard, 172 A.2d 379 (Conn. 1961) (donee did not learn of gift until donor's death).

(n36)Footnote 66. See, e.g., McKinnon v. First Nat'l Bank of Pensacola, 82 So. 748 (Fla. 1919) (deposits by father into children's accounts).

(n37)Footnote 67. See, e.g., Pohl v. Fulton, 119 P. 716 (Kan. 1911) (donor held gift in trust for incompetent donee).

(n38)Footnote 68. The peril of the expected death must be a reasonably present one. Lawrence v. Hartford Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 193 A.2d 506 (Conn. Super. Ct. 1963). Somewhat inconsistently, courts have liberally accepted the imminence of death from physical malady in sustaining gifts causa mortis, but have been reluctant to similarly view imminent death from outside causes, such as the possibility of assassination. See, e.g., Dickeschied v. Exchange Bank, 28 W. Va. 340 (1886). Also, some courts have held that a gift in contemplation of suicide is void as against public policy. See, e.g., Pikeville Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Shirley. 135 S.W.2d 426 (Ky. 1939).

(n39)Footnote 69. Hatcher v. Buford, 29 S.W. 641 (Ark. 1895) (presumption of gift causa mortis rebutted).

(n40)Footnote 70. See, e.g., In re Wilson's Estate, 206 N.Y.S.2d 323 (1960) (decedent said words of clear intent to make a gift).

(n41)Footnote 71. See, e.g., Drew v. Haggerty, 17 A. 63 (Md. 1889). Holding to the contrary, see, e.g., In re Schreihart's Estate, 270 N.W. 71 (Wis. 1936).

(n42)Footnote 72. See, e.g., McMahon v. Newton Sav. Bank, 34 A. 709 (Conn. 1895) (expressed donative intent, but no delivery).

(n43)Footnote 73. "It is admitted by all that a gift causa mortis is not complete unless the donor die as feared, and it is often said that he must die of the very peril apprehended." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 133 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n44)Footnote 74. In re Simms' Estate, 423 S.W.2d 758 (Mo. 1968) (action to determine title to a bank account); Hart v. Ketchum, 53 P. 931 (Cal. 1898) (savings account bank books delivered to donee).

(n45)Footnote 75. Hatcher v. Buford, 29 S.W. 641 (Ark. 1895) (presumption of gift causa mortis rebutted).

(n46)Footnote 76. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 135 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n47)Footnote 77. Weston v. Hight, 17 Me. 287 (1840) (recovery from illness and subsequent death from same illness).

(n48)Footnote 78. Parker v. Marston, 27 Me. 196 (1847) (decedent delivered promissory note to two different parties).

(n49)Footnote 79. Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 17 (Pa. 1836) (consecutive gifts causa mortis and inter vivos of same items).

(n50)Footnote 80. Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324 (1868).

(n51)Footnote 81. Baker v. Baker, 150 N.E. 284 (Ill. 1925) (specific legacies permitted to be recovered first).

(n52)Footnote 82. Peatross v. Gray, 27 S.E.2d 203 (Va. 1943) (action by lienholder).

(n53)Footnote 83. Beginning with the decedent, this method traces both ascending and descending kin, counting a degree for each generation.

(n54)Footnote 84. Second cousins are frequently defined in the same way as first cousins once removed, that is, as children of first cousins. An alternative definition is to consider as second cousins those persons who are related to each other by descent from the same great-grandparent. Certainly on such a point it is necessary to determine specific state law. The confusion is further highlighted by an older American authority:

> The decedent is the first cousin once removed of the child of the great-uncle, but quaere, does usage permit us to speak of the latter as the first cousin once removed of the decedent? Sometimes the first cousin once removed is called the second cousin and so on... It will be observed that the first cousin once removed is in the same degree of relationship to the deceased as the second cousin according to the canon law rule but not according to the civil law rule. Thomas E. Atkinson, Handbook of the Law of Wills 31, n.47 (1937).

(n55)Footnote 85. Under the common law, or canon law, method, the degree of relationship is determined by number of generations between the decedent and the heirs' nearest common ancestor.

(n56)Footnote 86. Thomas E. Atkinson, Handbook of the Law of Wills 45-46 (2d ed. 1953).

(n57)Footnote 87. Id.

(n58)Footnote 88. The statutory provisions for succession rights of children born out of wedlock sometimes apply only to succession from decedent mothers.

(n59)Footnote 89. Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762 (1976). See also Reed v. Campbell, 476 U.S. 852 (1986), reh'g denied, 478 U.S. 1031 (1986).

(n60)Footnote 90. The states that have adopted the Uniform Probate Code include Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Hawaii, Idaho, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Carolina, and Utah.

(n61)Footnote 91. U.C.C. § 2A-102.

(n62)Footnote 92. As stated in Article 2A:

§ 2A-103. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article unless the context otherwise requires: ...

(j) "Lease" means a transfer of the right to possession and use of goods for a term in return for consideration, but a sale, including a sale on approval or a sale or return, or retention or creation of a security interest is not a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease.

(n63)Footnote 93. Official Comment to U.C.C. § 2-101.

(n64)Footnote 94. James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code 27-28 (3d ed. 1988).

(n65)Footnote 95. 5 21 Jam. 1, c. 16, § 3 (1623).

(n66)Footnote 96. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann. § 78-12-26(2).

(n67)Footnote 97. Guaranty Title & Trust Corp. v. United States, 264 U.S. 200 (1924).

(n68)Footnote 98. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 35-37 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush, ed. 1975).

(n69)Footnote 99. O'Keeffe v. Snyder, 416 A.2d 862 (N.J. 1980).

(n70)Footnote 100. Utah Code Ann. § 78-12-26(2).

(n71)Footnote 101. See, e.g., Alexander v. Brunet, 39 S.C.L. 189 (1851); Norment v. Smith, 20 Tenn. 46 (1839).

(n72)Footnote 102. See, e.g., Joseph v. Lesnevich, 153 A.2d 349 (N.J. Super. 1959) (successive ownership of bonds).

(n73)Footnote 103. As stated by one authority:

> To become a finder in the eyes of the law, it is not only necessary that one discover the whereabouts of the goods in question but that he take them into his possession...

Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 24 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n74)Footnote 104. Id. at 26.

(n75)Footnote 105. Id. at 28. Examples of cases in which treasure trove has been treated as lost goods and awarded to the finder include Zornes v. Bowen, 274 N.W. 877 (Iowa 1937); Danielson v. Roberts, 74 P. 913 (Or. 1904).

(n76)Footnote 106. Schley v. Couch, 284 S.W.2d 333 (Tex. 1955); Jackson v. Steinnberg, 200 P.2d 376 (Ore. 1948); McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen (Mass.) 548 (1866).

(n77)Footnote 107. See the brief discussion of the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act in § 13.04(e)(3)(xiii), infra.

(n78)Footnote 108. Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 705.102, 705.104.

(n79)Footnote 109. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 705.103.

(n80)Footnote 110. Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 52D-10, 52D-14.

(n81)Footnote 111. Ill. Comp. Stat. ch. 765, §§ 1020/27, 1020/28, 1020/30, 1020/34, 1020/35.

(n82)Footnote 112. Iowa Code §§ 644.6 to 644.18.

(n83)Footnote 113. Mich. Comp. Laws §§ 434.1, 434.2, 434.6-434.8, 434.12.

(n84)Footnote 114. Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70-5-102 to 70-5-107; 70-5-201 to 70-5-207, 70-5-209.

(n85)Footnote 115. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 471:1-471:4, 471:6-471:8, 471:10

(n86)Footnote 116. N.Y. Gen. Mun. Law § 250.

(n87)Footnote 117. Okla. Stat. tit. 15, §§ 511-518.

(n88)Footnote 118. Ore. Rev. Stat. §§ 98.005, 98.015, 98.025.

(n89)Footnote 119. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, §§ 1101-1108.

(n90)Footnote 120. Wash. Rev. Code §§ 63.21.010-63.21.050.

(n91)Footnote 121. The jurisdictions in which the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act is currently in force include Alabama, Arkansas, District of Columbia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, and Tennessee. Five of these states -- Iowa, Minnesota, Nevada, Oregon, and Tennessee -- have legislation combining provisions of this act and provisions of the newer Uniform Unclaimed Property Act of 1981.

(n92)Footnote 122. The jurisdictions in which the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act is currently in force include Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. Five of these states -- Iowa, Minnesota, Nevada, Oregon, and Tennessee -- have legislation combining provisions of this act and provisions of the older 1966 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act. Two of these states -- Maryland and Vermont -- have legislation combining provisions of the 1981 Act with provisions of the original 1954 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

(n93)Footnote 123. Prefatory Note, Unif. Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act (Revised 1966), 8A U.L.A. 135-137 (1983).

(n94)Footnote 124. Unif. Unclaimed Property Act § 2, 8A U.L.A. 630 (1983).

(n95)Footnote 125. Unif. Unclaimed Property Act §§ 1(10)(i)-1(10)(vi), 8A U.L.A. 628 (1983).

(n96)Footnote 126. See, e.g., Pikeville Oil & Tire Co. v. Deavors, 320 S.W.2d 782 (Ky. 1959) (judgment binding on after-born remaindermen).

(n97)Footnote 127. The leading case is the English case of Ex parte Drake, 5 Ch. D. 866 (1877).

(n98)Footnote 128. See, e.g., Dietz v. Field, 41 N.Y.S. 1087 (1896).

(n99)Footnote 129. See Hodur v. Cutting, 248 Ill. App. 145 (1928).

(n100)Footnote 130. Backus v. West, 205 P. 533 (Ore. 1922).

(n101)Footnote 131. Silsbury v. McCoon, 3 N.Y. 379 (1850).

(n102)Footnote 132. See, e.g., Pine River Logging & Imp. Co. v. United States, 186 U.S. 279 (1902); Knoll v. Delta Dev. Co., 218 So. 2d 109 (La. App. 1969); State v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co., 64 N.W. 81 (Minn. 1895); Withers v. Tyler County Lumber Co., 326 S.W.2d 173 (Tex. Civ. App. 1959); Barnes v. Moore, 98 S.E.2d 683 (Va. 1957).

(n103)Footnote 133. Minerals & Chems. Philipp Corp. v. Milwhite, 414 F.2d 428 (5th Cir. 1969); Frusha v. Jackson, 228 So. 2d 197 (La. App. 1969).

(n104)Footnote 134. See Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 6.5, nn. 6-13, pp. 56-58 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n105)Footnote 135. Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4 (1872).

(n106)Footnote 136. See Baker v. Mersch, 45 N.W. 685 (Neb. 1890); Lampton's Ex'rs v. Preston's Ex'rs, 24 Ky. (1 J.J. Marsh) 454 (1829).

(n107)Footnote 137. Burris v. Johnson, 24 Ky. (1 J.J. Marsh) 196 (1829) (boat); Potter v. Mardre, 74 N.C. 36 (1876).

(n108)Footnote 138. Baker v. Mersch, 45 N.W. 685 (Neb. 1890).

(n109)Footnote 139. Riddle v. Driver, 12 Ala. 590 (1847).

(n110)Footnote 140. Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311 (1871).

(n111)Footnote 141. Louis Werner Stave Co. v. Pickering, 119 S.W. 333 (Tex. Civ. App. 1909).

(n112)Footnote 142. See Annotation, Accession to Motor Vehicle, 43 A.L.R.2d 813 (1955), and Mossler Acceptance Co. v. Norton Tire Co., 70 So. 2d 360 (Fla. 1954).

(n113)Footnote 143. See Annotation, Accession to Motor Vehicle, 43 A.L.R.2d 813, 814 (1955).

(n114)Footnote 144. Id. at 825-826.

(n115)Footnote 145. McVay v. McVay, 318 So. 2d 660 (La. App. 1975).

(n116)Footnote 146. Zandbergen v. Burch, 576 P.2d 812 (Ore. App. 1978).

(n117)Footnote 147. U.C.C. § 9-314.

(n118)Footnote 148. See, e.g., Burpee v. Athens Prod. Credit Ass'n, 15 S.E.2d 526 (Ga. App. 1941).

(n119)Footnote 149. Reese v. Jared, 15 Ind. 142 (1860) (in the conversion and sale of a house by a trespasser, the value of the house, not the house itself, should be restored to the true owner).

(n120)Footnote 150. Pine River Logging & Imp. Co. v. United States, 186 U.S. 279 (1902) (unlawful logging); Knoll v. Delta Dev. Co., 218 So. 2d 109 (La. App. 1969) (willful trespassers not entitled to value of improvements).

(n121)Footnote 151. See ch. 70, "Waste," infra.

(n122)Footnote 152. Whittaker v. Otto, 56 Cal. Rptr. 836 (1967) (trespass on mining claim and conversion of ore).

(n123)Footnote 153. Minerals & Chems. Philipp Corp. v. Milwhite Co., 414 F.2d 428 (5th Cir. 1969) (owner remained silent while innocent trespasser removed clay from the land).

(n124)Footnote 154. Wing v. Milliken, 40 A. 138 (Me. 1898) (action to recover value of sawed lumber).

(n125)Footnote 155. Elk Horn Coal Corp. v. Allegheny Coal Sales, Inc., 391 F.2d 253 (6th Cir. 1968) (innocent trespasser sold coal to innocent buyer); Smith v. Shiflett, 403 P.2d 364 (Wash. 1965) (attempt to avoid imposition of treble damages by claiming trespass was innocent).

(n126)Footnote 156. Mid-State Homes, Inc. v. Anderton, 283 So. 2d 426 (Ala. 1973) (trespassing builder ignored survey stakes and owner's warning).

(n127)Footnote 157. Hughes v. Monnahan, 165 N.W.2d 231 (Minn. 1969) (owner not subject to mechanic's lien).

(n128)Footnote 158. Stevens v. Crowder, 273 So. 2d 793 (Fla. App. 1973) (innocent trespassing builder reimbursed for costs of permanent improvements).

(n129)Footnote 159. Billerman v. Basiak, 220 A.2d 105 (N.J. 1966) (easement obtained by trespasser in view of owner's silence).

(n130)Footnote 160. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 62 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n131)Footnote 161. St. Paul Boom Co. v. Kemp, 103 N.W. 259 (Wis. 1905) (commingled money, gold coins, deeds, bonds, notes, receipts and insurance policies).

(n132)Footnote 162. Stephensen v. Little, 10 Mich. 433 (1862) (fraudulent mixing of saw logs).

(n133)Footnote 163. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries 405.

(n134)Footnote 164. Bergen v. Van Liew, 36 N.J. Eq. 637 (1883).

(n135)Footnote 165. Ontario Livestock Comm'n Co. v. Flynn, 126 N.W.2d 362 (Iowa 1964) (alleged conversion of cattle).

(n136)Footnote 166. Brainard v. Cohn, 8 F.2d 13 (9th Cir. 1925).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.05 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Fixtures.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.05(a) Rights Following Actual and Constructive Severance.

A fixture is an item of personal property that becomes so attached to realty that it is considered to be part of the realty. n167 Conversely, if a fixture that was once an item of personal property is severed from the realty, where the severance is authorized, purposeful, and permanent, the fixture once again becomes personal property. n168 A severance that falls short of those conditions will leave the item still considered realty, even though it has been separated. n169 When a building was destroyed by a storm and the building materials were left lying loose upon the land, those materials were still considered part of the realty until the landowner decreed otherwise. n170

Just as an item of personal property may become a fixture by "constructive" annexation, that is by intent of the parties but without being physically affixed, so also may "constructive" severance occur. A fixture such as a building or some other item of personal property may be sold separately from the land by giving a bill of sale; n171 or when the land is sold, the fixture may be reserved to the grantor by a provision in the deed. n172 In all such transactions, it is essential that the severance reflect the intent of the parties.

Provision for constructive severance by separate sale of goods on the land appears in the Uniform Commercial Code. If the seller is to perform the severance, the transaction for sale of minerals or a structure is treated as a sale of goods; sales of other fixtures on the land are treated as contracts for the sale of goods whether the severance is performed by the buyer or the seller:

§ 2-107. Goods to Be Severed From Realty: Recording.

(1) A contract for the sale of minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or a structure or its materials to be removed from realty is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article if they are to be severed by the seller but until severance a purported present sale thereof which is not effective as a transfer of an interest in land is effective only as a contract to sell.

(2) A contract for the sale apart from the land of growing crops or other things attached to realty and capable of severance without material harm thereto but not described in subsection (1) or of timber to be cut is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article whether the subject matter is to be severed by the buyer or by the seller even though it forms part of the realty at the time of contracting, and the parties can by identification effect a present sale before severance.

(3) The provisions of this section are subject to any third party rights provided by the law relating to realty records, and the contract for sale may be executed and recorded as a document transferring an interest in the land and shall then constitute notice to third parties of the buyer's rights under the contract for sale. n173

If a constructive severance occurs, then usually an actual severance must follow; when the constructive severance is in the context of a sale of the severed fixture, the buyer obtains an implied license to enter the realty and effect the severance within a reasonable time after the sale. n174 Also, once constructive severance has occurred, creditors of the buyer can reach the severed item in satisfaction of debt just as they could other personalty assets of the buyer. n175 A few jurisdictions, however, take the position that the effect of constructive severance is limited to the actual parties to the transaction. n176

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: sever! w/50 fixture

§ 13.05(b) Rights of Mortgagees and Other Lienors of the Real Property.

A mortgagor of real property who attaches fixtures to the realty subjects those fixtures to the lien of the mortgagee, whether the fixtures were attached before or after the creation of the mortgage. n177 Indeed, even one who purchases mortgaged land under contract and makes improvements while the contract is still executory subjects the improvements to the lien of the mortgagee; if the buyer fails to complete the contract, such fixtures remain part of the seller's land and subject to the mortgage lien. n178 If fixtures are wrongfully severed from mortgaged land, the mortgagee's rights in them continue after severance. n179

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: mortgag! or lien! and fixture

§ 13.05(c) Rights to Fixtures Attached by a Tenant.

As discussed in the following subsections, certain items that would ordinarily be considered fixtures when affixed to realty, are, as a matter of law, treated differently when affixed to rental premises by tenants. Of course, tenants and landlords may vary these rules by agreement, and such agreements need not be in writing. n180 Also, successors in interest or others claiming under the tenant have rights in tenant fixtures identical to their tenant's rights. n181

In many circumstances, tenants may remove such items when they vacate the rental premises. If such removals are proper, they must take place during or at the end of the tenancy or other proper occupancy by the tenant. n182 It has also been held, however, that even a tenant's post-occupancy removal is not prohibited, but the tenant might be forced to commit a trespass in effecting the removal. n183 When a tenant in breach is evicted, the courts differ on whether a right of removal persists after the eviction; n184 also some courts have followed the dubious doctrine that tenants who enter into new leases after expiration of the old have lost their rights of removal. n185 When a tenancy for an indefinite term is suddenly terminated, the tenant usually has a reasonable time thereafter to effect removals. n186 A departure from this rule, however, occurs when a tenant of a life tenant is still in occupancy upon the life tenant's death; most courts do not permit post-termination removals, but hold the remainderman or reversioner entitled to the tenant fixtures. n187

Although some courts do not accord personal property status to fixtures until they are severed, usually tenant fixtures subject to the tenant's right of removal are considered the tenant's personal property even during the tenancy and before removal; n188 in the event of the tenant's bankruptcy, such fixtures pass to the trustee in bankruptcy. n189 Similarly, even unremoved tenant fixtures are subject to an execution against the tenant. n190

In the preceding paragraph, the tenant fixture subject to the right of removal is considered personal property of the tenant. In other situations, such a fixture is considered a part of the tenant's leasehold interest. Thus, when a tenant transfers the tenant's rights in the tenancy, the tenant's rights in the fixtures are also transferred. n191 A taking in eminent domain requires that compensation be paid to the tenant for tenant fixtures that the tenant had a right to remove. n192 If one asserts a mechanic's lien for having provided or installed a tenant fixture, the lien may be asserted against the tenant's leasehold interest, including the fixture as part of that interest. Absent a governing tax statute or regulation, there is much inconsistency in the courts over whether removable tenant fixtures are taxed to the tenant as personal property or as real property.

The following subsections describe general rules for determining which tenants' fixtures are subject to the tenant's right of removal.

§ 13.05(c)(1) Residential Tenants' Fixtures.

Residential tenants often attach items to their dwellings, usually referred to in legal writing as "ornamental fixtures." The right of a tenant to remove such fixtures upon terminating the tenancy relies on a legal and factual distinction that is much easier to describe than to apply. Tenant fixtures attached for the special wishes or requirements of the tenant, and intended to be temporary, may be removed and kept by the tenant upon termination; fixtures that are considered to be for the permanent improvement of the underlying estate may not be so removed. n193 The right of removal may be denied if the fixture is added for the ordinary, rather than the idiosyncratic, needs of the tenant and can effectively serve the needs of successor tenants. n194 Statutes in some states give a more precise definition of fixtures that can be removed by tenants, often broadening the scope of judicially defined removal rights. n195

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenan! w/20 residen! w/50 fixture

§ 13.05(c)(2) Tenants' Agricultural and Trade Fixtures.

§ 13.05(c)(2)(i) Trade Fixtures.

It has long been the rule that a tenant who attaches to the premises fixtures used in the tenant's trade or business may remove those so-called "trade fixtures" when the tenant vacates the premises. n196 Therefore, the somewhat mislabeled "trade fixtures" are, under law, treated precisely as if they were not fixtures. These rules are now generally applied to life tenants as well as to tenants for terms less than life. n197

Not all fixtures installed by a tenant and used in the tenant's trade or business are considered trade fixtures, however. Only those fixtures that are specifically suited to the tenant's individual needs are trade fixtures; other fixtures that are considered for the permanent improvement of the premises must remain in place. n198 The wide range for potential disagreement over these matters is usually resolved by attempting to discern the parties' intent in attaching the fixtures. n199 Another factor -- and perhaps a factor which helps define the parties' otherwise unexpressed intent -- is whether the fixture can be removed without great damage to the premises; the item that can be removed only with serious damage is considered permanently annexed to the realty. n200

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture w/20 trade or business and tenan!

§ 13.05(c)(2)(ii) Agricultural Fixtures.

Despite a contrary English rule emanating from an 1802 case, n201 American courts generally treat fixtures used by a tenant for agricultural purposes as they would tenants' trade fixtures:

> It is believed that the holding in a leading Wisconsin case that "there is, in our opinion, no sound reason for applying one rule to tenants engaged in trade or manufacture and another to tenants engaged in agriculture" represents the law in this country today. n202

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture w/20 agricultur! or farm and tenan!

§ 13.05(d) Third Parties', Trespassers', Cotenants', and Licensees' Rights in Fixtures.

A mortgagee may claim rights in fixtures installed by the mortgagor, but usually not in those installed by a tenant of the mortgagor. n203 But one who becomes a mortgagee after the fixture is installed, without notice of any outside interest in the fixture, usually has the superior claim to the fixture. n204 If the one who installed and claims rights to the fixtures is a tenant in possession, that occupancy usually suffices to give notice to a subsequent mortgagee. n205

In general, items of personal property affixed to land by a trespasser become the property of the landowner. n206

A cotenant who installs a fixture that is necessary for preservation of the existing estate does so for the benefit of all the cotenants, is entitled to pro rata reimbursement, and may not assert an individual right of removal; but the cotenants may agree otherwise, especially by giving consent for one cotenant to install a removable fixture. n207 When an item installed by a cotenant remains the property of that cotenant, then upon partition that cotenant should receive the land upon which the item is installed or should receive credit for the improvement when the proceeds of sale are divided. n208

When a mere licensee installs a personal property improvement on the land of another, that improvement remains the personal property of the licensee unless the parties agree otherwise. n209 This personal property is not forfeited even if removal does not take place immediately upon revocation of the license.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture w/50 third party fixture w/50 trespass!
fixture w/50 cotenant
fixture w/50 license

§ 13.05(e) Rights to Fixtures Attached by Someone Other than the Chattel Owner.

§ 13.05(e)(1) Items Wrongfully Taken from Owner.

According to the prevailing rule, if an item of personal property is wrongfully taken from its owner and then attached to another's realty as a fixture, the personalty owner may recover the item, even from a landowner who is a bona fide purchaser; removal is permitted, however, only if it can be accomplished without substantial damage to the realty. n210 A minority of courts have insisted that, once attached, even the wrongfully taken chattel becomes part of the realty, and deny removal rights of the chattel owner. n211

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture w/100 wrongful! w/20 take!

§ 13.05(e)(2) Items Taken from Owner with Consent.

In those rare cases where the owner of an item of personal property has consented to its incorporation as a fixture in another's realty, the item remains the personal property of its owner even after it becomes a fixture, at least as to the parties to the transaction and as to others with notice of the transaction. n212 This rule usually holds true even against the claim of one holding a prior security interest in the realty, but not against one who obtains a subsequent security interest in the realty.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture w/50 take! w/20 consen!

§ 13.05(f) Prior and Subsequent Security Interests in Fixtures.

The occasionally complex issues surrounding priority of security interests in items of personal property that become attached to realty as fixtures are now governed almost exclusively by § 9-313 of the Uniform Commercial Code:

§ 9-313. Priority of Security Interests in Fixtures.

(1) In this section and in the provisions of Part 4 of this Article referring to fixture filing, unless the context otherwise requires

(a) goods are "fixtures" when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law

(b) a "fixture filing" is the filing in the office where a mortgage on the real estate would be filed or recorded of a financing statement covering goods which are or are to become fixtures and conforming to the requirements of subsection (5) of Section 9-402

(c) a mortgage is a "construction mortgage" to the extent that it secures an obligation incurred for the construction of an improvement on land including the acquisition cost of the land, if the recorded writing so indicates.

(2) A security interest under this Article may be created in goods which are fixtures or may continue in goods which become fixtures, but no security interest exists under this Article in ordinary building materials incorporated into an improvement on land.

(3) This Article does not prevent creation of an encumbrance upon fixtures pursuant to real estate law.

(4) A perfected security interest in fixtures has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate where

(a) the security interest is a purchase money security interest, the interest of the encumbrancer or owner arises before the goods become fixtures, the security interest is perfected by a fixture filing before the goods become fixtures or within ten days thereafter, and the debtor has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(b) the security interest is perfected by a fixture filing before the interest of the encumbrancer or owner is of record, the security interest has priority over any conflicting interest of a predecessor in title of the encumbrancer or owner, and the debtor has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(c) the fixtures are readily removable factory or office machines or readily removable replacements of domestic appliances which are consumer goods, and before the goods become fixtures the security interest is perfected by any method permitted by this Article; or

(d) the conflicting interest is a lien on the real estate obtained by legal or equitable proceedings after the security interest was perfected by any method permitted by this Article.

(5) A security interest in fixtures, whether or not perfected, has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate where

(a) the encumbrancer or owner has consented in writing to the security interest or has disclaimed an interest in the goods as fixtures; or

(b) the debtor has a right to remove the goods as against the encumbrancer or owner. If the debtor's right terminates, the priority of the security interest continues for a reasonable time.

(6) Notwithstanding paragraph (a) of subsection (4) but otherwise subject to subsections (4) and (5), a security interest in fixtures is subordinate to a construction mortgage recorded before the goods become fixtures if the goods become fixtures before the completion of the construction. To the extent that it is given to refinance a construction mortgage, a mortgage has this priority to the same extent as the construction mortgage.

(7) In cases not within the preceding subsections, a security interest in fixtures is subordinate to the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the related real estate who is not the debtor.

(8) When the secured party has priority over all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, he may, on default, subject to the provisions of Part 5, remove his collateral from the real estate but he must reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the debtor and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of repair of any physical injury, but not for any diminution in value of the real estate caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity of replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the secured party gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation.

As usual under the Code provisions, perfecting the security interest in a fixture is essential to establishing priority over interests in the land. And even without perfecting, a security interest in the fixture prevails where holders of interests in the land have consented to the security interest or have agreed that the fixture owner has a continuing right of removal.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fixture and secur! w/20 interest

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 167. See § 13.02(b), supra.

(n2)Footnote 168. Everitt v. Higgins, 838 P.2d 311 (Idaho 1992) (decorative wood stove was detached from realty before sale of realty).

(n3)Footnote 169. Lafleur v. Sylvester, 135 So. 2d 92 (La. App. 1961) (manure spreader, which was designated as immovable, did not become personal property by occasional use on other property).

(n4)Footnote 170. Rogers v. Gilinger, 30 Pa. 185 (1858).

(n5)Footnote 171. Pope v. McMillan, 101 S.E.2d 55 (S.C. 1957) (sale of gas station).

(n6)Footnote 172. Esbjornsson v. Buffalo Ins. Co., 89 N.W.2d 893 (Minn. 1958) (conveyance of land with deeds excepting buildings located on the land).

(n7)Footnote 173. U.C.C. § 2-107.

(n8)Footnote 174. Barry v. Woodbury, 91 N.E. 902 (Mass. 1910) (sale of boiler and engine that were attached to realty).

(n9)Footnote 175. Burton v. Jurgensen, 244 N.Y.S. 320 (1930) (removal of building from property).

(n10)Footnote 176. C.I.T. Fin. Servs. v. Premier Corp., 747 P.2d 934 (Okla. 1987) (two creditors claimed lien against mobile home).

(n11)Footnote 177. Winslow v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 45 Mass. (4 Met.) 306 (1842) (improvements on the realty are to enhance the value of the estate and not merely for personal enjoyment; therefore, they are added to the security of a mortgage on the premises).

(n12)Footnote 178. Horizon Bank, N.A. v. Sigrist, 579 N.Y.S.2d 279 (1992) (purchaser built home on lot without bankruptcy court approval or a release of the lien).

(n13)Footnote 179. Margolis v. Superior Ct. in and for San Mateo County, 311 P.2d 167 (Cal. App. 1957) (conversion of dry cleaning equipment).

(n14)Footnote 180. Lee-Moore Oil Co. v. Cleary, 245 S.E.2d 720 (N.C. 1978) (oral agreement between gasoline supplier and store owners that the gas pumps would remain supplier's personal property but could be used by store owner as long as store owner purchased gas from supplier).

(n15)Footnote 181. Goldie v. Bauchet Props., 540 P.2d 1 (Cal. 1975) (creditor, claiming a perfected security interest in a machine located on the premises leased to the debtor, brought action against another creditor).

(n16)Footnote 182. Cabana, Inc. v. Eastern Air Control, Inc., 487 A.2d 1209 (Md. App. 1985), cert. denied, 490 A.2d 718 (Md. 1985) (lessee's failure to pay rent was a breach that cause lessee to forfeit the right to remove fixtures).

(n17)Footnote 183. Lewis v. Ocean Nav. & Pier Co., 26 N.E. 301 (N.Y. 1891) (tenant who build restaurant and saloon on property had right to remove them).

(n18)Footnote 184. Simpson v. Emery, 183 A. 842 (Me. 1936) (tenant who built building on lot but later defaulted in rent payments forfeited rights to the building). Other cases: Fixtures, key § 14. But see Towne v. Sautter, 326 N.W.2d 694 (N.D. 1982) (farm tenant who forfeited leasehold rights did not lose right to remove improvements).

(n19)Footnote 185. Roberts v. Mills, 205 P. 872 (Cal. App. 1922) (oral agreement permitted removal of building).

(n20)Footnote 186. Garr-Woolley v. Martin, 579 P.2d 206 (Okla. App. 1978) (six years after leaving the property, the plaintiff attempted to remove old drilling equipment pursuant to contract terms).

(n21)Footnote 187. Haywood v. Briggs, 41 S.E.2d 289 (N.C. 1947) (contract with life estate owner that warehouse was personal property).

(n22)Footnote 188. In re Horton's Estate, 606 S.W.2d 792 (Mo. App. 1980) (mobile home on leased property belonged to decedent's estate, not to the lessor).

(n23)Footnote 189. City of Philadelphia v. Straub, 106 F.2d 172 (3d Cir. 1939) (entitlement to equipment and machinery installed by bankrupt lessee).

(n24)Footnote 190. Tolman v. Carleton, 85 A. 390 (Me. 1912) (industrial machinery attached to to leasehold property).

(n25)Footnote 191. San Francisco Breweries v. Schurtz, 38 P. 92 (Cal. 1894) (fixtures and leasehold mortgaged by tenant).

(n26)Footnote 192. Arlow v. Vinyl Masters, Inc., 402 N.Y.S.2d 649 (1978) (dispute between lessor and lessee over division of condemnation award).

(n27)Footnote 193. Empire Bldg. Corp. v. Orput & Assocs., 336 N.E.2d 82 (Ill. App. 1975) (part of condemnation award given to lessee for fixtures).

(n28)Footnote 194. In re Marla Jean, Inc., 25 B.R. 282 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1982) (compensation for trade fixtures).

(n29)Footnote 195. See, e.g., Wis. Stat. § 704.05(4).

(n30)Footnote 196. Poole's Case, 1 Salk (KB) 368 (1703).

(n31)Footnote 197. Chabon v. Lazarus, 87 A.2d 435 (N.J. Super. 1952) (removal of summer cottages).

(n32)Footnote 198. Empire Bldg. Corp. v. Orput & Assocs., 336 N.E.2d 82 (Ill. App. 1975) (part of condemnation award given to lessee for fixtures).

(n33)Footnote 199. First Trust & Sav. Bank of Moville, Iowa v. Guthridge, 445 N.W.2d 401 (Iowa App. 1989) (bank sought recovery of fence-line feed bunks).

(n34)Footnote 200. J.K.S.P. Restaurant, Inc. v. Nassau County, 513 N.Y.S.2d 716 (1987) (tenant sued to recover prefabricated dining car).

(n35)Footnote 201. Elwes v. Maw, 3 East (KB) 38 (1802) (tenant for years liable in waste for removal of certain barns, sheds and fences installed by the tenant).

(n36)Footnote 202. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 551 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975), citing Old Line Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. Hawn, 275 N.W. 542 (Wis. 1937).

(n37)Footnote 203. Standard Oil Co. v. La Crosse Super Auto Serv., 258 N.W.2d 791 (Wis. 1935) (tenant could remove fixtures when lessor/mortgagor defaulted on mortgage payments and mortgagee took possession of premises).

(n38)Footnote 204. Kerman v. Swafford, 680 P.2d 622 (N.M. App. 1984), cert. denied, 679 P.2d 1287 (N.M. 1984) (purchaser of ranch at foreclosure sale sought to recover possession of ranch house and portable houses).

(n39)Footnote 205. Serafin v. Wolff, 69 A.2d 347 (N.J. Super. 1949) (installation and removal of oil burner by tenant).

(n40)Footnote 206. Buswell v. Hadfield, 149 S.W.2d 555 (Ark. 1941) (ejected trespasser sought reimbursement for improvements).

(n41)Footnote 207. Fair v. Fair, 121 Mass. 589 (1877) (where one tenant in common gave consent to the other to build a house, the builder received the house upon partition of the property).

(n42)Footnote 208. Bouquet v. Belk, 376 S.W.2d 361 (Tex. Civ. App. 1964), aff'd, 404 S.W.2d 862 (Tex. Civ. App. 1966) (upon partition, the owner of a one-sixth interest obtained partition in kind and the land upon which she had made improvements with consent of other owners).

(n43)Footnote 209. Laramie County Sch. Dist. No. 11 v. Donahue, 97 P.2d 663 (Wyo. 1940) (school district, licensee on defendant's property, was allowed to remove a school building).

(n44)Footnote 210. Burpee v. Athens Prod. Credit Ass'n, 15 S.E.2d 526 (Ga. App. 1941) (furnace and other appliances were wrongfully removed and attached to other land).

(n45)Footnote 211. Pierce v. Goddard, 39 Mass. 559 (1839) (mortgagor removed house from mortgaged land and used material to build another house, which mortgagor subsequently sold).

(n46)Footnote 212. Lee-Moore Oil Co. v. Cleary, 245 S.E.2d 720 (N.C. 1978) (oral agreement between gasoline supplier and store owners that the gas pumps would remain supplier's personal property but could be used by store owner as long as store owner purchased gas from supplier).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.06 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Crops.

[Go To Supp]

Competing claims to crops may be asserted in a variety of situations, the most important of which are discussed in the following subsections. Those disputes could be easily resolved by simply labeling the crops as personalty or realty in the situation at hand, and letting the label suffice for analysis. Instead, courts usually engage in an analysis of the underlying values and then attach the labels, leading to lingering inconsistencies in the labels. Much of the law in this area now derives from the Uniform Commercial Code, which for purposes of sales n213 and secured transactions n214 treats growing crops as goods.

§ 13.06(a) Competing Claims of Grantor and Grantee of the Land.

In the ordinary conveyance between grantor and grantee, the growing crops are considered part of and conveyed along with the realty. n215 The grantor may include in the deed a reservation of rights to the crops, but a reservation outside the deed itself may n216 or may not be upheld, n217 depending on the operation of the parol evidence rule. When the landowner has previously granted a security interest in the crops and then sells the land to another, the buyer's interest is subject to the security interest in the crops if the buyer had notice of that interest; otherwise, the buyer's interest may prevail over the security interest in the crops. n218

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: crop w/50 convey w/50 real!

§ 13.06(b) Competing Claims of Buyer and Seller of the Crops.

When a landowner agrees to sell crops from the land, the sale is treated as a sale of goods, even if severance of the crop has not yet occurred. If the landowner later sells the land, the crop buyer may be protected by a real estate recording of the contract for sale of the crop. Timber, on the other hand, remains part of the realty until actual severance, even if it is the subject of a prior contract of sale. All of these matters are now governed by § 2-107 of the Uniform Commercial Code:

§ 2-107. Goods to Be Severed From Realty: Recording.

(1) A contract for the sale of minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or a structure or its materials to be removed from realty is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article if they are to be severed by the seller but until severance a purported present sale thereof which is not effective as a transfer of an interest in land is effective only as a contract to sell.

(2) A contract for the sale apart from the land of growing crops or other things attached to realty and capable of severance without material harm thereto but not described in subsection (1) or of timber to be cut is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article whether the subject matter is to be severed by the buyer or by the seller even though it forms part of the realty at the time of contracting, and the parties can by identification effect a present sale before severance.

(3) The provisions of this section are subject to any third party rights provided by the law relating to realty records, and the contract for sale may be executed and recorded as a document transferring an interest in land and shall then constitute notice to third parties of the buyer's rights under the contract for sale.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: crop w/50 buy! or sell! w/50 claim!

§ 13.06(c) Competing Claims of Owner and Adverse Possessor of the Land.

If an owner of land recovers possession of the land from an adverse possessor, the owner also recovers crops that are still on the land, even if those crops were planted and cultivated by the adverse possessor. n219 However, if the true owner also recovers a money judgment for profits based on land use during the period of adverse possession, then the adverse possessor is entitled to even an unsevered crop, so that the landowner does not obtain a double recovery. n220 This also means that the adverse possessor is entitled to keep crops previously planted, cultivated and severed before the ejectment. n221 Courts are divided on whether an adverse possessor's crop, severed but still left on the land at the time of ejectment, belongs to the adverse possessor or to the true owner. n222

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: crop w/50 adverse! w/5 possess!

§ 13.06(d) Competing Claims When the Landowner Dies.

Under the common law, the growing crops on the land of an intestate decedent were considered realty if they were crops that grew naturally, n223 but were considered personalty if they were crops that had to be planted and cultivated. n224 Some state statutes, including the Uniform Probate Code in § 1-201, have abolished the distinction between real and personal property in this context:

§ 1-201. General Definitions.

(33) "Property" includes both real and personal property or any interest therein and means anything that may be the subject of ownership.

If the decedent was testate, a will provision for devise of the realty is rebuttably presumed to pass all unsevered crops. n225

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: crop and decedent

§ 13.06(e) Competing Claims of Landowner and Security Interest Holder.

The priority of a security interest in crops relative to the interest of the landowner are now mostly governed by Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code. A successful security interest in crops would be one formed by a security agreement and perfected by the filing of a financing statement, which should also describe the relevant realty. n226

Although, as to unperfected security interests in chattels, most buyers of goods in the ordinary course of business are protected from the claims of the secured party, this does not apply to those who buy farm products from farmers. n227

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: crop and secur! w/20 interest

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 213. U.C.C. § 2-105(1).

(n2)Footnote 214. U.C.C. § 9-105(h).

(n3)Footnote 215. Womach v. Thomas, 486 A.2d 15 (Del. Ch. 1984) (crops ready to be harvested pass with the realty).

(n4)Footnote 216. Smith v. Baker, 214 P.2d 94 (Cal. App. 1950) (the purchase agreement but not the deed reserved the right to a crop).

(n5)Footnote 217. Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. v. Myrick, 51 So. 2d 475 (Miss. 1951) (despite oral reservation, the right to use the land passed an easement to lay a gas pipeline was granted).

(n6)Footnote 218. Groth v. Stillson, 174 N.W.2d 596 (Mich. App. 1969) (action to reform deed to include reservation of Christmas trees grantor has already sold to a third party; purchaser had notice of sale).

(n7)Footnote 219. Dent v. Dent, 166 S.W.2d 582 (Mo. 1942) (crops wrongfully removed from mortgaged property).

(n8)Footnote 220. Wright v. Vickaryous, 598 P.2d 490 (Alaska 1979) (farm tenants who held over were allowed to deduct the amount of the hay crop from the damages awarded to the landlord).

(n9)Footnote 221. Whitney v. Bails, 560 P.2d 1344 (Mont. 1977) (purchaser planted and harvested a crop before court ordered ejectment after default on purchase contract).

(n10)Footnote 222. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Dameron, 131 S.W.2d 122 (Tex. Civ. App. 1959) (action to recover value of oat crop converted by insurance company).

(n11)Footnote 223. Evans v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 527 (1881) (action to recover value paid to administrator of decedent's estate under mistake of fact).

(n12)Footnote 224. McGee v. Walker, 64 N.W. 482 (Mich. 1895) (action to enjoin administrator of decedent's estate from controlling wheat growing on land).

(n13)Footnote 225. In re Rahfeldt's Estate, 112 N.W.2d 858 (Iowa 1962) (devisee of life estate held to be owner of unmatured corn).

(n14)Footnote 226. U.C.C. §§ 9-203, 9-301, 9-302.

(n15)Footnote 227. U.C.C. 9-307.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.07 Bailments.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.07(a) Elements of Bailments.

Although bailments frequently include an element of contract by which a thing is delivered to one not the owner for some particular purpose, many bailments -- whether actual or implied -- do not rest upon any contractual relationship between the bailor and bailee. One factor present in all bailments is that the bailee has possession of the property, and that such possession consists of physical control coupled with intent to possess or to exercise that control. Bailees typically hold the property for eventual return to the bailor, but in some situations -- notably fungible goods commingled with the common mass, such as grain -- the bailor is not necessarily entitled to return of the identical goods, but only the identical quantity from the common mass; bailors of such fungible goods hold ownership as tenants in common, as directed by the Uniform Commercial Code:

§ 7-207. Goods Must Be Kept Separate; Fungible Goods.

(1) Unless the warehouse receipt otherwise provides, a warehouseman must keep separate the goods covered by each receipt so as to permit at all times identification and delivery of those goods except that different lots of fungible goods may be commingled.

(2) Fungible goods so commingled are owned in common by the persons entitled thereto and the warehousemen is severally liable to each owner for that owner's share. Where because of overissue a mass of fungible goods is insufficient to meet all the receipts which the warehouseman has issued against it, the persons entitled include all holders to whom overissued receipts have been duly negotiated. n228

§ 13.07(b) Degree of Care Required of Bailees.

American legal scholars in the 19th century divided bailees into three categories -- bailees holding for the sole benefit of the bailor, bailees holding for the mutual benefit of bailor and bailee, and bailees holding for the sole benefit of the bailee -- and ascribed an increasingly rigorous duty of care to the bailees in those categories. A bailment for the sole benefit of the bailor required only slight diligence of the bailee, while a bailment for the sole benefit of the bailee required great diligence or care by the bailee. The difficulties inherent in any classification scheme have raised discontents with this one, but its general acceptance in American courts persists:

> It would be more understandable and easier to administer if, regardless of the nature of the bailment, the bailee were held to a standard of "ordinary care under the circumstances" which could be considered in judging whether the bailee's conduct met the standard. Some courts have so held.
>
> Nonetheless, most courts still accord at least formal agreement to the division of bailments into the three classes... Likewise, the majority still give lip service to the three degrees of care or of negligence applicable to these three types of bailments. In the case of the bailment for the benefit of both parties the bailee is held to the standard of ordinary care and is liable for ordinary negligence. In the case of the bailment for the benefit of the bailee, the bailee is held to the standard of great diligence and is liable for a slight neglect. In the case of the bailment for the benefit of the bailor, the bailee is bound to use only slight care and is held liable only when he is guilty of what is termed "gross negligence." n229

It need hardly be said that great confusion and inconsistency have emerged from courts' attempts to discern differing degrees of care in the contexts of innumerable sets of circumstances. In reality, in many cases a single standard is applied in all situations: the trier of fact must determine whether the bailee met the standard of ordinary care called for by the circumstances. Thus a gratuitous bailee would be in circumstances where ordinary care would be less rigorous than ordinary care would be for a bailee being well-paid for bailment services.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bail! and degree or standard w/5 care

§ 13.07(c) Limiting or Extending the Bailee's Standard of Care.

It is possible for bailee and bailor to alter whatever standard of care might be imposed by rule of law. A bailee such as an automobile parking lot operator may seek to limit liability (in effect lowering the standard of care), although this must be done consensually rather than unilaterally. Here the problems are whether the posted notice or printed message on a claim check adequately caught the attention of the bailor so that failure to object or negotiate could be treated as acceptance of the limitation.

If there are limitations on the degree of care the bailee is able to or wont to give, and the bailor is aware of those limitations, in some cases the bailee may be excused from liability for loss caused by circumstances beyond those limitations. n230

Sometimes bailees even agree to extended liability, such as agreeing to insure the bailed goods against damage, even if the damage was not caused by the bailee. Courts will not construe the bailee's usual obligation to return the goods as a further commitment to return the goods free of damage, even from sources beyond the bailee's control; therefore, if the goods are destroyed by fire without fault of the bailee, the bailor must bear the loss if the parties have not otherwise agreed upon extended bailee liability. n231 These cases turn very much upon their particular facts rather than on holdings from other, similar cases. Typically, the class of bailees known as common carriers is under extended liability which in effect makes the bailee-common carrier an insurer of the goods to be shipped, n232 except for damage by act of God n233 or a common enemy, n234 by valid legal process, n235 by some act of the bailor, or by the inherent nature of the bailed goods (such as perishable fruit). n236

In another example of expanded liability, an innkeeper's duty as bailee extends not only to the goods expressly delivered to it by the guest for safekeeping, but also to the guest's property in the room. n237 And many American jurisdictions also impose on innkeepers the liability of insurer, n238 although in some cases the innkeeper has escaped liability by offering evidence that due care was exercised. n239 Statutes in most states have now modified and mitigated the more extreme aspects of innkeeper liability for guests' goods. A typical statute will relieve the innkeeper of extraordinary liability if a safe is made available in which guests may store valuable items. n240

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bail! and limit! or expand! or extend! w/5 liab!

§ 13.07(d) The Bailee's Duty to Redeliver.

The bailee's duty to redeliver is breached if a misdelivery to the wrong party occurs; for this breach, even without negligence, the bailee will be liable for the value of the goods. n241 Where delivery to a third party not the bailor is validly compelled by law, the bailee has no liability to the bailor, if the bailee has first made a reasonable effort to give notice and opportunity to the bailor to present an opposing claim. n242 The duty to deliver is also breached if the bailee wrongfully refuses to redeliver to the bailor. n243

Because of these duties, a bailor who has brought legal action against a bailee for failure to deliver has made out a prima facie case for recovery merely by showing delivery to the bailee and a failure to redeliver on demand. n244 The burden then shifts to the defendant bailee to show circumstances validly excusing redelivery.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bail! w/50 redeliver!

§ 13.07(e) Bailee's Use of the Bailed Goods.

A bailee may be explicitly authorized to use the bailed goods, or an inference of such authorization may arise from the circumstances of the bailment. A typical example from earlier times would be the right and even necessity for a bailee of a cow to milk the cow and use the milk. In other instances, the bailee's use of the bailed property may constitute some or all of the bailee's compensation for bailee services. Ordinarily, of course, the bailee's compensation, if any, is determined by the explicit or implicit agreement of the parties.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bail! w/50 use w/20 goods

§ 13.07(f) Bailee Actions Against Third Parties.

If bailed goods are wrongfully taken from the bailee by a third party, the bailee has a right of action against the third party. n245 This right of action is independent of any possible liability the bailee may have to the bailor over the wrongfully taken goods. n246 If, in recovering from a third party the value of wrongfully taken goods, the bailee obtains a sum greater than the value of the bailee's own possessory interest in the goods, the excess is held by the bailee in trust for the bailor. n247

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bailee and action and third party

§ 13.07(g) Implied Bailments.

Bailments may sometimes arise without the explicit consent of the parties, such as when a finder takes custody of lost goods or a landlord resumes possession of an apartment with some of the former tenant's chattels left behind. Various terms have been used to describe these situations:

> In all these situations involving possession by one of another's goods without mutual consent but without initial wrongdoing on the possessor's part, courts have placed great importance on how the relationship is labelled or characterized. Sometimes the term used is "constructive bailment," which usually connotes a recognition that the relationship really is not a bailment together with a determination that the law of bailments shall be applied nonetheless. Perhaps more common is "involuntary bailment," which suggests a somewhat different sort of situation from consensual bailment and leaves uncertainty as to whether usual bailment rules will be applied. "Quasi-bailment" may be encountered too, most frequently in the cases involving finders of lost goods. The labels are imprecise; they do not solve the underlying problems; indeed they may impede recognition and frank discussion of the problems. n248

If an "involuntary bailee" has taken custody of the goods, or had custody imposed, courts exhibit much uncertainty about the degree or derivation of a duty of care on such a bailee while holding possession of the goods. However, it is settled that even the involuntary bailee has a duty to deliver the goods to the true owner upon demand; n249 liability for misdelivery is imposed only for negligence, rather than absolutely. n250 When involuntarily bailed goods are returned to their true owner, the bailee may be entitled to reimbursement of expenses and compensation for services, n251 although some courts disagree. n252

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: bail! w/5 constructive or involuntary or quasi or implied

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 228. U.C.C. § 7-207.

(n2)Footnote 229. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 256-257 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n3)Footnote 230. Parker v. Union Ice & Salt Co., 54 P. 672 (Kan. 1898) (spoilage of items in cold storage warehouse).

(n4)Footnote 231. Aberson v. Sa Hong, 788 P.2d 972 (Okla. App. 1990) (bailor's car was broken into and a stereo was stolen while the car was at the bailee's body shop).

(n5)Footnote 232. Bricks v. Metro Ambulance Serv., 338 S.E.2d 438 (Ga. App. 1985). The common carrier is a carrier that "undertakes for hire or reward to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him, from place to place." Ace-High Dresses v. J. C. Trucking Co., 191 A. 536 (Conn. 1937).

(n6)Footnote 233. Southern Pac. Co. v. Loden, 508 P.2d 347 (Ariz. App. 1973) (carrier failed to ship goods within reasonable time; good discussion of act of God affirmative defense).

(n7)Footnote 234. David Crystal Inc. v. Ehrlich-Newmark Trucking Co., 314 N.Y.S.2d 559 (1970) (carrier hijackers held not to be public enemy).

(n8)Footnote 235. Moor v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 S.E. 920 (Ga. App. 1926) (destruction of diseased fruit trees).

(n9)Footnote 236. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Elmore & Stahl, 368 S.W.2d 99 (Tex. 1963), cert. granted, 375 U.S. 811

(1963), aff'd, 377 U.S. 134 (1964), reh'g denied, 377 U.S. 984 (1964) (melon spoilage with no identifiable natural cause).

(n10)Footnote 237. Cook v. Columbia Sussex Corp., 807 S.W.2d 567 (Tenn. App. 1990) (hotel guest action against hotel for damages from theft of goods from guest room).

(n11)Footnote 238. Mobile Battle House, Inc. v. Wolf, 126 So. 2d 486 (Ala. 1961) (guest lost sample case and goods in a hotel); Hulett v. Swift, 33 N.Y. 571 (1865) (fire in stable next to hotel destroyed goods in hotel).

(n12)Footnote 239. Peters v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 278 N.W.2d 208 (Wis. 1979) (action against hotel by guest who was assaulted and robbed in hotel room).

(n13)Footnote 240. See, e.g., N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 200.

(n14)Footnote 241. Dispeker v. New S. Hotel Co., 373 S.W.2d 904 (Tenn. 1963) (hotel misdelivered automobile to off-duty busboy, who wrecked it).

(n15)Footnote 242. William Fitzgerald Milk Prods. Corp. v. Kimbro Serv. Warehouse, Inc., 145 S.E.2d 630 (Ga. App. 1965) (bags of dry milk confiscated from bailee as a result of court proceedings of which bailor had notice).

(n16)Footnote 243. Glass v. Allied Van Lines, Inc., 450 S.W.2d 217 (Mo. App. 1970) (plaintiff claimed right to property derived from bailor).

(n17)Footnote 244. Kirshner v. Johnson, 521 So. 2d 697 (La. App. 1988) (automobile stolen from repair shop yard).

(n18)Footnote 245. Martin v. Luckie & Forney, Inc., 549 So. 2d 18 (Ala. 1989) (lending of photographic transparencies).

(n19)Footnote 246. Varney v. Curtis, 100 N.E. 650 (Mass. 1913) (bond certificates used by depositary for personal expenses).

(n20)Footnote 247. Ebel v. Collins, 198 N.E.2d 552 (Ill. App. 1964) (accident caused by son driving father's car, with permission, but not as agent).

(n21)Footnote 248. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 320 (3d ed., Walter B. Rausenbush ed. 1975).

(n22)Footnote 249. Capezzaro v. Winfrey, 379 A.2d 493 (N.J. Super. 1977) (victim of alleged robbery brought action against city after police returned money to robbery suspect).

(n23)Footnote 250. Mickey v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 76 A.2d 350 (Md. 1950) (customer's briefcase left on loading dock).

(n24)Footnote 251. Cristopher v. Jerdee, 139 N.W. 1132 (Wis. 1913) (after a third party placed hay in plaintiff's barn, plaintiff charged storage fee when defendant did not remove the hay).

(n25)Footnote 252. In re Cunningham, 33 B.R. 286 (Bankr. D.N.M. 1983) (request for relief from automatic stay by debtor's landlord).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.08

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.08 Possessory Liens.

[Go To Supp]

The common law possessory lien has been defined as "a right to the custody of the property of another and a right to hold or retain the same against the general owner as indemnity, or for security of some debt or obligation." n253 In every jurisdiction the common law possessory liens have been modified by statute, at least for various groups of artisans or service providers who most frequently have occasion to invoke such liens.

Even though such possessory liens are a type of security interest and would seemingly come within the coverage of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, definitions and other provisions of the Code limit its scope to consensual liens, leaving statutory liens and other liens arising by law outside the Code. n254 Also to be distinguished from common law possessory liens are the so-called "mechanics' liens" created by state statute, for the benefit of those providing materials or labor for real estate improvements; these "mechanics' liens" are attached to real property rather than to personal property.

Common law possessory liens are classed as either general liens or specific liens. The specific liens arise out of debt for services rendered to the specific item of personal property held in the possession of the creditor. The general lien covers not only the specific indebtedness related to the property held, but also the overall indebtedness owed by the debtor to the creditor.

§ 13.08(a) "Specific" Common Law Possessory Liens.

The most important requirement for assertion of the specific possessory lien is that the creditor actually have possession of the item of personal property to be held as security. If the services are rendered on the item while it remains in the custody of the owner/debtor, the lien never arises. n255 The possession must be exclusive possession, for if the owner has the right to reclaim possession at any time, then no common law lien arises. n256 Statutes often modify this rule to confer a lien on auto mechanics and others who under this exclusive possession rule would ordinarily have no common law possessory lien.

In addition to resting on possession, the common law possessory liens also require that the holder of the lien have performed some service on or added some value to the item against which the possessory lien is asserted; exceptions have emerged for innkeepers, common carriers, and those who operate warehouses and wharves. n257 When services are to be performed on several items but all under one contract, a possessory lien arises as to all the items, even though the unrequited services pertained to less than all. n258

§ 13.08(b) "General" Common Law Possessory Liens.

The "general" common law possessory lien is based on not only the debt arising from services performed on a specific chattel, but on the overall indebtedness arising from the trade between debtor and creditor. n259 Usually, the general possessory lien is created by agreement of the parties or by statute, or simply arises by the custom in that particular type of enterprise, especially among bankers, factors, innkeepers, and lawyers; or it may be imposed by common law. n260

§ 13.08(c) The Element of Consent in Lien Creation.

Not only can parties modify and even nullify the terms of common law possessory liens by their agreements, n261 but the lien itself will not even come into existence unless some authority or consent therefor has been given by the owner of the item that is the subject of the lien. n262 Several situations can occur in which one not the owner of an item submits the item for repair, and therefore no lien arises against the owner. For instance, if one who has borrowed an item submits it for repair, no lien for repair services arises against the owner unless it can be shown that the owner consented to or authorized the repair. n263 Or, if the repairing party engages another to assist with the repair, no lien arises in favor of the assistant, unless the owner consented to the subcontracting. n264 The owner's consent or authorization may be inferred after the fact by notice and acquiescence. n265

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 possess! w/50 consent

§ 13.08(d) Priority Between Liens and Other Security Interests.

Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code now directly governs issues of priority between holders of common law possessory liens and holders of prior security interests in the same goods:

§ 9-310. Priority of Certain Liens Arising by Operation of Law.

When a person in the ordinary course of his business furnishes services or materials with respect to goods subject to a security interest, a lien upon goods in the possession of such person given by statute or rule of law for such materials or services takes priority over a perfected security interest unless the lien is statutory and the statute expressly provides otherwise.

Even under this rule some priority issues will linger, especially if it is not clear whether a statutory lien expressly provides "otherwise" as to priority of another security interest. It is also possible for the holder of a prior perfected security interest to consent to the imposition of a superior common law possessory lien on the secured item. n266

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 possess! w/50 prior!

§ 13.08(e) Liens for Specific Classes of Claimants.

§ 13.08(e)(1) Bankers.

The nature of a bank's general lien on deposited securities has been succinctly described as follows:

> By mercantile custom incorporated into and made a part of the law merchant and the common law, a banker has a general lien on the securities deposited with him by his customers in the regular course of his banking business for the balance of the account due from such customers, unless the circumstances of the deposit are such as to indicate an agreement consistent with the banker's right of lien. "The theory of the law is that the bank extends credit and accommodations to its customers in reliance upon the expectation that such paper will from time to time come into its possession and become available to it as a security or set-off." Such lien attaches, however, only to commercial paper deposited with the bank in the regular course of its banking business. n267

This common law lien is frequently compromised by the specific terms of the bank's arrangement with its customer. If the bank agrees merely to take possession of certain items of commercial paper and then remit them to the customer, presumably the limits of the bank's function preclude the emergence of the common law lien. n268 Or, if securities are deposited for a specific account or obligation, the bank may not hold them for application to other obligations or for the general account of the bank customer, n269 unless by agreement with the customer the bank has obtained permission to do so. n270

Article 4 of the Uniform Commercial Code also gives a bank a specific lien or security interest as to certain deposited items:

§ 4-210. Security Interest of Collecting Bank in Items, Accompanying Documents and Proceeds.

(a) A collecting bank has a security interest in an item and any accompanying documents or the proceeds of either:

(1) in case of an item deposited in an account, to the extent to which credit given for the item has been withdrawn or applied;

(2) in case of an item for which it has given credit available for withdrawal as of right, to the extent of the credit given, whether or not the credit is drawn upon or there is a right of charge-back; or

(3) if it makes an advance on or against the item.

(b) If credit given for several items received at one time or pursuant to a single agreement is withdrawn or applied in part, the security interest remains upon all the items, any accompanying documents or the proceeds of either. For the purpose of this section, credits first given are first withdrawn.

(c) Receipt by a collecting bank of a final settlement for an item is a realization on its security interest in the item, accompanying documents, and proceeds. So long as the bank does not receive final settlement for the item or give up possession of the item or accompanying documents for purposes other than collection, the security interest continues to that extent and is subject to Article 9, but:

(1) no security agreement is necessary to make the security interest enforceable (Section 9-203(1)(a));

(2) no filing is required to perfect the security interest; and

(3) the security interest has priority over conflicting perfected security interests in the item, accompanying documents, or proceeds.

§ 4-211. When Bank Gives Value for Purposes of Holder in Due Course.

For purposes of determining its status as a holder in due course, a bank has given value to the extent it has a security interest in an item, if the bank otherwise complies with the requirements of Section 3-302 on what constitutes a holder in due course.

A bank also has the right of set-off to apply a customer's deposits to the customer's debt to the bank. n271 A joint deposit account may not be so applied unless the joint account is in reality the debtor's own account. n272

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 banker

§ 13.08(e)(2) Carriers.

Carriers, both common and private, enjoy a specific lien created by the Uniform Commercial Code:

§ 7-307. Lien of Carrier.

(1) A carrier has a lien on the goods covered by a bill of lading for charges subsequent to the date of its receipt of the goods for storage or transportation (including demurrage and terminal charges) and for expenses necessary for preservation of the goods incident to their transportation or reasonably incurred in their sale pursuant to law. But against a purchaser for value of a negotiable bill of lading a carrier's lien is limited to charges stated in the bill or the applicable tariffs, or if no charges are stated then to a reasonable charge.

(2) A lien for charges and expenses under subsection (1) on goods which the carrier was required by law to receive for transportation is effective against the consignor or any person entitled to the goods unless the carrier had notice that the consignor lacked authority to subject the goods to such charges and expenses. Any other lien under subsection (1) is effective against the consignor and any person who permitted the bailor to have control or possession of the goods unless the carrier had notice that the bailor lacked such authority.

(3) A carrier loses his lien on any goods which he voluntarily delivers or which he unjustifiably refuses to deliver.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 possess! and carrier

§ 13.08(e)(3) Innkeepers.

Innkeepers have liens on their guests' goods n273 for the obligations of the guests to the customers, even though those obligations are not directly related to the goods on which the possessory liens are imposed. n274 The broad scope of this lien reflects the broad obligation of the innkeeper to take in virtually all customers and to be an insurer of the goods brought into the inn. Common law accorded this lien only for transient guests, but state statutes now often extend the lien to longer term boarders. If the longer term resident is considered a tenant, it must be remembered that a landlord has no common law lien for rent on the tenant's personal property until the landlord has actually re-taken possession of rented premises.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 possess! and innkeeper

§ 13.08(e)(4) Lawyers.

Attorneys have two types of common law possessory liens. The general lien gives the attorney the right to retain possession of client papers and documents against the payment of the client's overall account. n275 Any money received from the client by the attorney in a professional capacity may also be applied as a set-off against the client's overall debt. n276 Even if the attorney is discharged, the papers may be retained until the attorney is paid. n277

The specific lien is the right to retain any judgment awarded and paid until the client has paid obligations pertaining specifically to the services rendered in obtaining that judgment. This lien is recognized even though it applies to a chose in action and even though the attorney technically does not usually have possession of the judgment recovered:

> The lien, as thus established, is not strictly like any other lien known to the law, because it may exist although the attorney has not and cannot, in any proper sense, have possession of the judgment recovered. It is a peculiar lien, to be enforced by peculiar methods. It was a device invented by the courts for the protection of attorneys against the knavery of their clients, by disabling clients from receiving the fruits of recoveries without paying for the valuable services by which the recoveries were obtained. The lien was never enforced like other liens. If the fund recovered was in possession or under the control of the court, it would not allow the client to obtain it until he had paid his attorney, and in administering the fund it would see that the attorney was protected. If the thing recovered was in a judgment, and notice of the attorney's claim had been given, the court would not allow the judgment to be paid to the prejudice of the attorney. n278

This lien, to be applied, must be asserted and notice of it must be given to the client. n279 If a judgment is wrongfully paid directly to the judgment creditor and the attorney is left unpaid, the attorney may request the court to have any satisfaction filed with the court set aside and then may proceed against the client/judgment debtor. n280 While an attorney has no non-contractual right to force a client to continue with a cause of action so the attorney can eventually win and collect a fee, a settlement and accompanying dismissal intended to deprive the attorney of a promised fee may be set aside and the attorney may continue to prosecute the action. n281 This remedy is not available if the cause of action is so personal to the client as to be unassignable. n282 This lien prevails over a claim of one who has obtained an assignment of the judgment. n283

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lien w/5 possess! w/50 attorney

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 253. Summer v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 76 (1831).

(n2)Footnote 254. U.C.C. § 9-102:

§ 9-102. Policy and Subject Matter of Article.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-104 on excluded transactions, this Article applies:

(a) to any transaction (regardless of its form) which is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures including goods, documents, instruments, general intangibles, chattel paper or accounts; and also

(b) to any sale of accounts or chattel paper.

(2) This Article applies to security interests created by contract including, pledge, assignment, chattel mortgage, chattel trust, trust deed, factor's lien, equipment trust, conditional sale, trust receipt, other lien or title retention contract and lease or consignment intended as security. This Article does not apply to statutory liens except as provided in Section 9-310.

(3) The application of this Article to a security interest in a secured obligation is not affected by the fact that the obligation is itself secured by a transaction or interest to which this Article does not apply.

U.C.C. § 9-104(c):

This Article does not apply ...

(c) to a lien given by statute or other rule of law for services or materials except as provided in Section 9-310 on priority of such liens ...

U.C.C. § 9-310:

§ 9-310. Priority of Certain Liens Arising by Operation of Law.

When a person in the ordinary course of his business furnishes services or materials with respect to goods subject to a security interest, a lien upon goods in the possession of such person given by statute or rule of law for such materials or services takes priority over a perfected security interest unless the lien is statutory and the statute expressly provides otherwise.

(n3)Footnote 255. Murray v. Eisenberg, 627 P.2d 146 (Wash. App. 1981), review denied, 95 Wash. 2d 1032 (1981) (mechanic who repaired airplane lost possessory lien when possession of airplane was surrendered).

(n4)Footnote 256. Forth v. Simpson, 13 Q.B. 680 (1849) (race horse delivered for training purposes only).

(n5)Footnote 257. Luther Moving & Storage, Inc. v. Roberts, 526 S.W.2d 557 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975) (shipping company retained household goods until shipping charges were paid).

(n6)Footnote 258. Moynihan Assocs. v. Hanisch, 201 N.W.2d 534 (Wis. 1972) (editor of film returned part of the film, but retained a lien on the entire batch of film).

(n7)Footnote 259. W. C. Caye & Co. v. Milledgeville Banking Co., 86 S.E.2d 717 (Ga. App. 1955) (bank had right to offset amounts due on promissory notes with the amounts deposited by promisor).

(n8)Footnote 260. Republic Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 713 P.2d 568 (Okla. 1986) (discharged attorney had general possessory lien).

(n9)Footnote 261. Berlet v. Lehigh Val Silk Mills, 287 F. 769 (3d Cir. 1923) (lien waived by contract).

(n10)Footnote 262. Parker v. West, 505 P.2d 94 (Mont. 1973) (bank lien was superior to repairman's lien).

(n11)Footnote 263. Iacomini v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 497 A.2d 854 (N.H. 1985) (repairman's action to recover from owner the repair and storage costs for automobile, which was stolen).

(n12)Footnote 264. Skjod v. Hofstede, 402 N.W.2d 839 (Minn. App. 1987) (action by subcontractor against property owners).

(n13)Footnote 265. Huntley v. Drummond, 85 So. 2d 188 (Miss. 1956) (action to enforce repairman's lien against automobile mistakenly repaired for a different customer). Some courts may hold that mere acquiescence justifies enforcing the lien.

(n14)Footnote 266. Pittman v. Max H. Smith Farms, Inc., 506 N.E.2d 1139 (Ind. App. 1987) (vendors with senior lien waived priority by allowing land, for consideration, to be used as security for mortgage).

(n15)Footnote 267. Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property 439-440 (3d ed., Walter B. Raushenbush ed. 1975).

(n16)Footnote 268. American Bank & Trust Co. v. Shouse & Burrus, 648 S.W.2d 540 (Ky. App. 1983) (lien claim against proceeds from stock sale).

(n17)Footnote 269. Hall v. Duncan Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 820 P.2d 1360 (Okla. App. 1991) (debtor's action to recover IRA funds used for setoff by savings and loan association).

(n18)Footnote 270. Bank IV Topeka, N.A. v. Topeka Bank & Trust Co., 807 P.2d 686 (Kan. App. 1991) (hypothecation agreement signed by decedent).

(n19)Footnote 271. Creech v. First Bank of Baldwin County, 539 So. 2d 267 (Ala. Civ. App. 1988) (common law lien of bank arising when customer cashed check at bank).

(n20)Footnote 272. Symanski v. First Nat'l Bank of Danville, 609 N.E.2d 989 (Ill. App. 1993) (bank sought to apply assets of joint account held by four persons to loan taken by two of the persons).

(n21)Footnote 273. Guests' goods also includes items belonging to others, which items have been lawfully brought onto the innkeeper's premises.

(n22)Footnote 274. L. E. Lines Music Co. v. Holt, 60 S.W.2d 32 (Mo. 1933) (innkeeper's lien on another's property borrowed and left behind by nonpaying guest).

(n23)Footnote 275. Wintter v. Fabber, 618 So. 2d 375 (Fla. App. 1993) (attorney not required to deliver all papers to former client while attorney held retaining lien).

(n24)Footnote 276. Daniel Mones, P.A. v. Smith, 486 So. 2d 559 (Fla. 1986) (attorney action to collect fees).

(n25)Footnote 277. Lai Ling Cheng v. Modansky Leasing Co., 541 N.Y.S.2d 742 (1989) (dispute between old and new attorneys over division of fee).

(n26)Footnote 278. Goodrich v. McDonald, 19 N.E. 649 (N.Y. 1889).

(n27)Footnote 279. Newton v. Kiefer, 547 So. 2d 727 (Fla. App. 1989) (attorney properly asserted charging lien by serving notice of lien upon client and attorney for opposing party).

(n28)Footnote 280. Siciliano v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 133 Cal. Rptr. 376 (1976) (insurance company made settlement of personal injury claim with plaintiff after attorney for plaintiff had been discharged).

(n29)Footnote 281. Brown v. Vermont Mut. Ins. Co., 614 So. 2d 574 (Fla. App. 1993) (attorney who represented client against insurer had a charging lien and was entitled to a portion of attorney's fees from insurer, even though attorney had been fired).

(n30)Footnote 282. Barnes v. Collins, 423 S.E.2d 308 (Ga. App. 1992) (trespasser on property interfered with enjoyment of real and personal property, which is a personal injury not transferable to another).

(n31)Footnote 283. Todd v. Mutual Factors, Inc., 149 N.E.2d 94 (N.Y. 1958) (attorney's statutory lien attached both to decision in favor of client and to proceeds which client assigned).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.09

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.09 Pledges or Pawns.

In its simplest form, a pledge is a bailment of personal property that is made to secure the bailor's debt; in this section it is considered synonymous with pawn, which is something given as security for a loan. Pledges are now governed by the Uniform Commercial Code, which, in its Article 9, declares that "This Article applies to security interests created by contract including pledge...." n284 By contrast to the possessory lien, which arises by operation of law, a pledge is explicitly entered into by the parties to secure an obligation -- past, present, or future n285 -- either of one of the parties or of a third person. n286

In virtually all cases, a valid pledge requires delivery of the pledged item to the pledgee. n287 Many of the same delivery issues that enliven the area of donative transfers apply with equal vigor to the area of pledges. An actual, manual delivery may not be necessary if the pledged property is already in the possession of the pledgee, or already in the possession of a bailee who can be instructed to hold for the pledgee. n288 A delivery of documents of title may suffice for delivery of the pledged item itself. Pledges of choses in action represented by negotiable instruments require the delivery and possession of the instrument, as described in the Uniform Commercial Code:

§ 3-201. Negotiation.

(a) "Negotiation" means a transfer of possession, whether voluntary or involuntary, of an instrument by a person other than the issuer to a person who thereby becomes its holder.

(b) Except for negotiation by a remitter, if an instrument is payable to an identified person, negotiation requires transfer of possession of the instrument and its indorsement by the holder. If an instrument is payable to bearer, it may be negotiated by transfer of possession alone.

§ 9-304. Perfection of Security Interest in Instruments, Documents, and Goods Covered by Documents; Perfection by Permissive Filing; Temporary Perfection Without Filing or Transfer of Possession.

(1) A security interest in chattel paper or negotiable documents may be perfected by filing. A security interest in money or instruments (other than instruments which constitute part of chattel paper) can be perfected only by the secured party's taking possession, except as provided in subsections (4) and (5) of this section and subsections (2) and (3) of Section 9-306 on proceeds.

(2) During the period that goods are in the possession of the issuer of a negotiable document therefor, a security interest in the goods is perfected by perfecting a security interest in the document, and any security interest in the goods otherwise perfected during such period is subject thereto.

(3) A security interest in goods in the possession of a bailee other than one who has issued a negotiable document therefor is perfected by issuance of a document in the name of the secured party or by the bailee's receipt of notification of the secured party's interest or by filing as to the goods.

(4) A security interest in instruments or negotiable documents is perfected without filing or the taking of possession for a period of 21 days from the time it attaches to the extent that it arises for new value given under a written security agreement.

(5) A security interest remains perfected for a period of 21 days without filing where a secured party having a perfected security interest in an instrument, a negotiable document or goods in possession of a bailee other than one who has issued a negotiable document therefor;

(a) makes available to the debtor the goods or documents representing the goods for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or for the purpose of loading, unloading, storing, shipping, transshipping, manufacturing, processing or otherwise dealing with them in a manner preliminary to their sale or exchange, [; or] but priority between conflicting security interests in the goods is subject to subsection (3) of Section 9-312; or

(b) delivers the instrument to the debtor for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or of presentation, collection, renewal or registration of transfer.

(6) After the 21 day period in subsections (4) and (5) perfection depends upon compliance with applicable provisions of this Article.

§ 9-305. When Possession by Secured Party Perfects Security Interest Without Filing.

A security interest in letters of credit and advices of credit (subsection (2)(a) of Section 5-116), goods, instruments, money, negotiable documents or chattel paper may be perfected by the secured party's taking possession of the collateral. If such collateral other than goods covered by a negotiable document is held by a bailee, the secured party is deemed to have possession from the time the bailee receives notification of the secured party's interest. A security interest is perfected by possession from the time possession is taken without relation back and continues only so long as possession is retained, unless otherwise specified in this Article. The security interest may be otherwise perfected as provided in this Article before or after the period of possession by the secured party.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: pledge or pawn w/50 personal w/5 property

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 284. U.C.C. § 9-102(2).

(n2)Footnote 285. Arco Petr. Prods. Co. v. R & D Automotive, Inc., 455 N.E.2d 227 (Ill. App. 1983) (certificate of deposit pledged as collateral for indebtedness under a security agreement).

(n3)Footnote 286. Aruba Bonaire Curacao Trust Co. v. United Cal. Bank, 107 Cal. Rptr. 924 (1973) (guarantor of third-party loan was not entitled to money that was pledged to secure a guaranty).

(n4)Footnote 287. Bank of Coushatta v. Patrick, 503 So. 2d 1061 (La. App. 1987) ("Collateral Pledge Agreement" did not authorize bank to apply funds to third party's debt).

(n5)Footnote 288. U.C.C. 9-305(1).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.10

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.10 Joint Bank Accounts.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.10(a) True Joint Tenancies.

Joint bank accounts are held by Americans in truly massive numbers, but there is no unified approach to their legal consequences. If the owners of a joint bank account held in a true joint tenancy, as if real property were so held, then while they both were alive each would have a right to enjoy the whole property, and upon the death of one joint tenant the survivor or survivors would succeed to the ownership of the entire interest, with no share paid to the decedent's heirs. Many joint bank accounts are in fact true joint tenancies and are administered according to the usual rules of survivorship and concurrent possessory rights.

However, it has long been recognized that not all joint bank accounts are intended as true joint tenancies, and courts have faced difficult decisions, with diverse results, about how far to treat these aberrational arrangements as true joint tenancies. In one typical scenario, a person deposits funds in a bank account owned by the depositor and another, both of whom appear to have equal and full access to the account and are signatories on the account. In the agreement signed with the bank authorizing the opening and administration of the account, the account is denominated as joint or in joint tenancy. If the depositor intends to make a gift to the other joint account holder, then the joint bank account should be treated as a true joint tenancy. This arrangement may be defeated if, when the account is contested, a court finds that no completed gift occurred, and such a finding could be based on the notion that the donor's ability to withdraw all the funds at any time meant that the gift was not yet complete. n289 But courts have also found that, despite retained access by the donor, the complete access accorded the donee is sufficient to constitute a gift. n290 In some jurisdictions, the withdrawal of all joint account funds by only one of the account holders is treated as a severance of the joint tenancy. n291

Because it is so common that both parties to a joint checking account will actively withdraw and deposit funds in the account, it is routinely assumed that the survivor will take over the entire remaining account. n292

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenan! w/5 joint w/50 bank account and property interest

§ 13.10(b) Survivorship Accounts.

Another typical scenario commences with the deposit by one person into an ostensibly joint account, but in fact it is not intended that the other account holder will exercise any control or ownership rights over the account funds while all the account holders are alive. Occasionally, the non-donor account holder may conduct transactions, but usually they would be exclusively for the benefit of the donor account holder. In such accounts, the only vestige of joint tenancy is the parties' intention that the surviving account holder, usually the non-donor, take the balance left in the account upon the death of the other. These so-called "survivorship" accounts are usually upheld, from which one may infer that a present gift of at least the survivorship rights occurred when the account was formed. n293

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: account w/20 survivorship

§ 13.10(c) Convenience Accounts.

In a third typical scenario, a joint account is opened, but the donor does not intend any sort of a gift, the other account holder being named simply for the convenience of the donor and perhaps to conduct some transactions for the benefit of and under the direction of the donor. In these arrangements, it is usually held that no gift has occurred and no right of survivorship has been created in the erstwhile donee. n294

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: account and convenience and gift

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 289. Goemmer v. Hartman, 791 P.2d 1238 (Colo. App. 1990) (no gift occurred when the decedent deposited funds into an account from which he and the other owner could withdraw funds from the account without restriction).

(n2)Footnote 290. In re Bunn's Estate, 198 A.2d 518 (Pa. 1964) (decedent's son claimed an inter vivos gift from mother).

(n3)Footnote 291. Cambell v. Black, 844 P.2d 759 (Kan. 1993) (joint tenancy was destroyed when conservatee had all joint accounts which she had converted changed to reflect her as the sole owner).

(n4)Footnote 292. Herren v. Cochran, 697 S.W.2d 149 (Ky. App. 1985) (antenuptial agreement dispute upon administering husband's estate; no ambiguity in the agreement).

(n5)Footnote 293. Malek v. Patten, 678 P.2d 201 (Mont. 1984) (depositor established intent to make a gift of the certificates of deposits and checking account by signing signature cards for joint tenancy, even though cotenant was not informed).

(n6)Footnote 294. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 437 S.W.2d 457 (Ark. 1969) (decedent had a joint bank account with one of his sons but court ruled that he did not intend to create a gift).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.11

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.11 Stolen Goods.

[Go To Supp]

It is one of the more firm principles of American jurisprudence that an owner does not lose title to goods merely because the goods are stolen. n295 The true owner of stolen property may pursue and reclaim the property from whomever has possession of the property, even if the possessor is an innocent purchaser, n296 even if the purchase occurred in the ordinary course of business n297 and even if the goods have been altered since the time of the theft. n298 However, one who obtains stolen money in good faith, even though directly from the thief, also obtains title to the money even as against the true owner. n299 If by some circumstance, the possibility of retrieving the goods themselves is no longer open to the true owner, the true owner may recover the value of the goods from a former possessor of the goods. n300

If a true owner of stolen goods attempts to recover the goods from an innocent possessor, it is not necessary to first establish the stolen character of the goods in a prior criminal proceeding. That fact may be established in the civil proceeding to recover the goods. n301

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: stolen w/50 property and right or interest w/20 owner

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 295. O'Keeffe v. Snyder, 416 A.2d 862 (N.J. 1980) (stolen paintings in possession of defendant who claimed ownership by adverse possession).

(n2)Footnote 296. Solomon R. Guggenheim Found. v. Lubell, 569 N.E.2d 426 (N.Y. 1991) (museum brought action against innocent purchaser of allegedly stolen painting).

(n3)Footnote 297. Farm Bureau Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Moseley, 90 A.2d 485 (Del. Super. 1952) (automobile insurance company sued to recover a stolen automobile from a good faith purchaser).

(n4)Footnote 298. National Retailers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Gambino, 64 A.2d 927 (N.J. Super. 1948) (thief improved stolen car by putting a new motor in it; court granted possession to owner).

(n5)Footnote 299. City of Portland v. Berry, 739 P.2d 1041 (Or. App. 1987) (thief deposited money into a bank and was given valuable consideration in good faith; under the "money rule," bank had right to money superior to right of original owner).

(n6)Footnote 300. Creach v. Ralph Nichols Co., 267 S.W.2d 132 (Tenn. App. 1953) (court held that innocent purchaser of stolen automobile was liable to rightful owner for the money received when vehicle was resold).

(n7)Footnote 301. Senfeld v. Bank of Nova Scotia Trust Co. (Cayman) Ltd., 450 So. 2d 1157 (Fla. App. 1984) (corporation president was sued by a trust company for conversion, pursuant to a theft statute).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.12

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.12 Personal Property Subject to Special Regulation.

[Go To Supp]

§ 13.12(a) Treasure.

Treasure trove as a special form of personal property emerged because of the unusual circumstances producing the troves of treasure. It is believed that as the Romano-British society of the first four decades A.D., began to break down, particularly in the face of Anglo-Saxon aggressions, wealthy landowners temporarily vacated their villas, often burying their most precious possessions somewhere on the grounds. Many of these owners never returned and their buried caches of treasure would not come to light until decades or even centuries later. Thus treasure trove came to be considered any gold or silver in the form of coin, plate or bullion, concealed in the earth or in some other private place, whose owner was unknown. n302 Treasure trove is distinguished from other forms of lost property in the assumption that it was intentionally placed by its owner or owners and that they expected eventually to return and reclaim possession of the property. It is assumed that those who deposited treasure trove in its hiding place intended to return and that treasure trove may therefore not be considered the same as abandoned property. Nevertheless, in the very early English law, the finder of treasure trove was accorded the same rights as a finder of lost property, that is, the right to retain possession of the found items against all but the true owner. Inexorably, however, the crown asserted claims to treasure trove, n303 thus requiring that it be distinguished from ordinary lost property. Today, both the American rule and the modern English rule accord possessory rights to the finder. n304 These common law rights may be altered by legislation.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: treasure trove

§ 13.12(b) Salvage.

"Salvage" is not itself a species of personal property, but is the reward or compensation granted to a person who performs salvage services. A salvage service is a service voluntarily rendered to a vessel or its goods to save it from being lost in the sea or other navigable waters. Technically speaking, the law of salvage is not concerned with title, because it is assumed that the property being recovered belongs to another and that the salvor, at most, will obtain a reward for salvage services. However, when what is being salvaged is the contents of an old or ancient shipwreck, then the salvor is in much the same position as a finder of very valuable items who does not expect the true owner to ever return. With respect to ancient shipwrecks, there is considerable disagreement over whether the law of salvage or the law of finders should be applied. n305

If the vessel being salvaged is a derelict, the salvor who successfully recovers it may keep it as property, unless there is some valid governmental claim to it. n306 Under these circumstances, the law of finders appears more applicable to the salvage of ancient and long lost shipwrecks.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: salvage w/100 shipwreck

§ 13.12(c) Cultural Property.

Under the general heading "Cultural Property" are found two types of personal property subject to special regulation. One of these types consists of the various objects of art or other items that are transported from one country to another, usually for the purpose of becoming part of a public or a private collection, and whose provenance is often suspect and whose movement is often contrary to the laws of one jurisdiction or another. The other type of cultural property is strictly domestic, and usually consists of the artifacts or remains of ancient peoples, which items are often to be found in public or private collections. Among both types of cultural property, much legal activity is aimed at diminishing the property rights of private collectors and re-establishing property rights in the countries of origin or in the descendants or successors or modern representatives of ancient peoples whose remains and relics are at issue.

The international aspects of cultural property were addressed in November 1970, when a UNESCO convention concerning the means of prohibiting and preventing the elicit import, export, and transfer of ownership of cultural property was adopted. The United States Senate consented to this UNESCO Convention in 1972 with the specific proviso that the UNESCO Convention was not to be self-executing, but would require implementing legislation.

> This implementing legislation ran a complex and tortuous path in the decade after the Senate ratified the convention.
>
> The final version, now referred to as the Convention on Cultural Property Act (act), reflects compromises between the aspirations of congressmen, senators, museum directors, archaeologists, anthropologists, academics, and administrative agencies. The act also illustrates the realities of a well-established and often secret international art and antiquities trade, the needs of smaller, less wealthy museums and like institutions, the views of still other museum directors and academics, and the livelihoods of thousands of dealers in art and antiquities. With the exception of Canada, no other major western art-importing nation joined or ratified the UNESCO Convention in the decade between U.S. ratification and implementation. n307

The purpose of the Convention and of the implementing national legislation was primarily prevention of pillage, rather than regulation of the numerous cultural artifacts already in international commerce. Under this legislation, which has had little impact in this country, a country fearing pillage of its cultural artifacts may call upon the United States to seize such of those artifacts as have made their way into the United States, for eventual return to the country of origin. n308

The domestic aspect of cultural property protection has received more attention. The Antiquities Act of 1906 prohibited and punished the activities of "any person who [without permission] shall appropriate, excavate, injure, or destroy any historic or prehistoric ruin or monument or any object of antiquity" found on federal lands. n309 In the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, n310 Congress undertook to "administer federally owned, administered, or controlled prehistoric and historic sources in a spirit of stewardship for the inspiration and benefit of present and future generations." In 1979 Congress enacted the Archaeological Resources Protection Act, n311 which attempted to regulate the exploration and exposure of archaeological sites. Substantial finds and imprisonment penalties were enacted for those who remove archaeological objects in violation of this statute. In addition to these and other federal enactments, numerous state enactments dealing with cemeteries and dead bodies, archaeology and historic preservation, and Native American protections have also been enacted. n312 In general, all of this federal and state legislation has not only regulated the archaeological and commercial activity affecting objects significant for cultural heritage, but has attempted to contain and punish illicit possession of cultural property items. In some instances, even a good faith purchaser of such an item may not ultimately have property rights in the item, if it can be established that the item was illicitly removed from a protected site or under some other set of prohibited circumstances. Thus the property rights in cultural property are increasingly coming under some form of international, national or state legal regulation.

A recent example of such legislation is the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act of 1991, n313 which makes some provision for return of human remains and associated funerary objects to their tribes of origin while also making them available for scientific study.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: cultural property

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 302. Zech v. Accola, 33 N.W.2d 232 (Wis. 1948) (plaintiff found money and argued that it was treasure-trove, excluding applicability of the lost property statute).

(n2)Footnote 303. Campbell v. Cochran, 416 A.2d 211 (Del. Super. Ct. 1980) (money found and turned over to state police).

(n3)Footnote 304. Hendle v. Stevens, 586 N.E.2d 826 (Ill. App. 1992) (minors found currency on private property).

(n4)Footnote 305. Columbus-America Discovery Group v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 974 F.2d 450 (4th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 113 S. Ct. 1625, 123 L. Ed. 2d 183 (1993) (insurance underwriters filed claims to gold found in an 1857 shipwreck).

(n5)Footnote 306. Cobb Coin Co., Inc. v. Unidentified, Wrecked & Abandoned Sailing Vessel, 525 F. Supp. 186 (S.D. Fla. 1981) (salvor requested preliminary injunction against Florida's salvage regulations that interfered with salvage operations).

(n6)Footnote 307. Jeremy Sugerman, A New Cultural Property Repose Act, 22 Geo. Wash. J. Int'l L. & Econ. 671, 675-677 (1989).

(n7)Footnote 308. 19 U.S.C. § 2601 et seq.

(n8)Footnote 309. 16 U.S.C. § 433.

(n9)Footnote 310. 16 U.S.C. § 470.

(n10)Footnote 311. 16 U.S.C. § 470aa et seq.

(n11)Footnote 312. See Thomas H. Boyd, Disputes Regarding the Possession of Native American Religious and Cultural Objects and Human Remains: A Discussion of the Applicable Law and Proposed Legislation, 55 Mo. L. Rev. 883 (1990).

(n12)Footnote 313. 25 U.S.C. § 3001 et seq.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 13.13

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 13.13 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Brown, Ray Andrews. The Law of Personal Property. 3d. Edited by Walter B. Raushenbush. Chicago Callaghan, 1975.

Articles

Autor, Kurt P. "Bailment Liability: Toward a Standard of Reasonable Care." S. Cal. Rev. Vol. 61 (1988) 2117.

Benson, Samuel R. "Ownership of Personal Property Accumulated During a Marriage." Colo. Law Vol. 17 (1988) 623.

Bratcher, Pamela C. "Injected Gas: Realty or Personalty?" J. Min. L. & Pol'y. Vol. 3 (1988) 571.

Carlson, David G. "Simultaneous Attachments of Liens on After-Acquired Property." Cardozo L. Rev. Vol. 6 (1985) 505.

Cooper, Corinne "Identifying a Personal Property Lease Under the UCC." Ohio St. L.J. Vol. 49 (1988) 195.

Dickerson, Darby A. "Bailor Beware: Limitations and Exclusions of Liability in Commercial Bailments." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1988) 129.

FitzGibbon, Scott and Donald W. Glazer. "Legal Opinions in Corporate Transactions: Opinions Relating to Security Interests in Personal Property." Bus. Law Vol. 44 (1989) 655.

Gerstenblith, Patty. "The Adverse Possession of Personal Property." Buff. L. Rev. Vol. 37 (1988) 119.

Helmholtz, R. H. "Bailment Theories and the Liability of Bailees: The Elusive Uniform Standard of Reasonable Care," Kan. L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1992) 97.

Krauss, E. P. "On the Distinction Between Real and Personal Property." Seton Hall L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1984) 495.

Mayo, K. Reed "Virginia's Acquisition of Unclaimed and Abandoned Personal Property." Wm. & Mary L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1986) 409.

Meyer, Keith G. "Unsevered Crops: Real Estate or Personal Property?" J. Agric. Tax. & Law Vol. 11 (1989) 272.

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC." (Part IV) Com. L. J. Vol. 90 (1985) 62.

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC," (Part III) Com. L.J. Vol. 90 (1985) 18.

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC." (Part I) Com. L. J. Vol. 89 (1982) 501.

Tabac, William L. "The Unbearable Lightness of Title Under the Uniform Commercial Code." Md. L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1991) 409.

Annotations

Annotation, Attorney Lien for Fees Against a Judgment and Lien of Creditor Against Same Judgment. A.L.R.4th Vol. 34 665.

Annotation, Bailee's Liability for Bailor's Expense of Recovering Stolen Subject of Bailment. A.L.R.3d Vol. 80 264.

Annotation, Bailor's Right of Direct Action Against Bailee's Theft Ensurer for Loss of Bailed Property. A.L.R.3d Vol. 64 1027.

Annotation, Carpets and Rugs, Status as Fixture Generally. A.L.R.2d Vol. 55 1044.

Annotation, Computers, Electronic Computing Equipment as Fixture. A.L.R.3d Vol. 6 497.

Annotation, Constructive Annexation Doctrine as Applied to Plumbing Material and Heating Apparatus Delivered to Premises but Not Installed. A.L.R.2d Vol. 10 207.

Annotation, Conveyance of Land As Including Mature But Unharvested Crops. A.L.R.4th Vol. 51 1263.

Annotation, Construction and Application of Terms Jewelry and Personal Ornaments as Used in Statute Limiting Innkeeper's Liability for Loss or Damage to Guest's Property. A.L.R.3d Vol. 88 979.

Annotation, Delivery of Personalty to Third Person With Directions to Deliver to Donee After Donor's Death As Valid Gift. A.L.R.3d Vol. 57 1083.

Annotation, Duty of Bailee to Ensure Bailed Property. A.L.R.3d Vol. 28 513.

Annotation, Electric Range as Fixture. A.L.R.2d Vol. 57 1103.

Annotation, Elements and Measure of Damages Recoverable from Bailee for Loss, Destruction, or Conversion of Personal Papers, Photographs, or Paintings. A.L.R.4th Vol. 9 1245.

Annotation, Employer Liability for Theft or Disappearance of Employee's Property Left at Place of Employment. A.L.R.3d Vol. 46 1306.

Annotation, Inter Vivos Gift of Remainder in Chattel. A.L.R.4th Vol. 83 966.

Annotation, Estoppel to Assert That Article Annexed to Realty Is or Is Not a Fixture. A.L.R.2d Vol. 60 1209.

Annotation, Guest's Property Lost or Damaged Through Innkeeper's Negligence, Statutory Limitations Upon Liability. A.L.R.3d Vol. 37 1276.

Annotation, Lien of Bailee for Work on Goods as Extending to Other Goods of the Bailor in His Possession. A.L.R.2d Vol. 25 1037.

Annotation, Liability to Pay for Allegedly Unauthorized Repairs on Motor Vehicle. A.L.R.4th Vol. 5 311.

Annotation, Liability of One Furnishing Lockers for Hire or to Patrons for Loss of Packages or Goods Placed Therein. A.L.R.2d Vol. 19 331.

Annotation, Liability of Repairer for Unauthorized, Unnecessary or Fraudulent Repairs of Motor Vehicle. A.L.R.4th Vol. 23 274.

Annotation, Loss of Garagemens' Lien on Repaired Vehicle by Owner's Use of Vehicle. A.L.R.4th Vol. 74 90.

Annotation, Modern View as to Validity of Statute Permitting Sale of Vehicle Without Hearing. A.L.R.3d Vol. 64 814.

Annotation, Oil and Gas Royalty as Real or Personal Property. A.L.R.4th Vol. 56 539.

Annotation, Parol Exception of Fixtures from Conveyance or Lease. A.L.R.3d Vol. 29 1441.

Annotation, Priorities as Between Previously Perfected Security Interest and Repairmen's Lien on Motor Vehicle Under Uniform Commercial Code. A.L.R.3d Vol. 69 1162.

Annotation, Right to Follow Chattel Into Hands of Purchaser Who Took in Payment of Pre-existing Debt. A.L.R.3d Vol. 11 1028.

Annotation, Solid Mineral Royalty As Real or Personal Property. A.L.R.2d Vol. 68 728.

Annotation, Sprinkler System As Fixture. A.L.R.2d Vol. 19 1300.

Annotation, Statutory Provision Respecting Registration of Mortgage or Other Liens on Personal Property In Case of Residents of Other States. A.L.R.2d Vol. 10 764.

Annotation, Stolen Property, Bailee's Liability for Bailor's Expense of Recovering Stolen Subject of Bailment. A.L.R.3d Vol. 80 264.

Annotation, Tailings as Real or Personal Property. A.L.R.4th Vol. 75 965.

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised. A.L.R.2d Vol.6 322.

Annotation, Tort Liability of Bailee for Theft by Servant. A.L.R.2d Vol. 15 846.

Annotation, Treasure Trove, Modern Status of Rules as to Ownership as Between Finder and Owner of Property On Which Found. A.L.R.4th Vol. 61 1180.

Annotation, Unexplained Gratuitous Transfer of Property from One Relative to Another As Raising Presumption of Gift. A.L.R.3d Vol. 94 608.

Annotation, Validity, Construction and Application of Lost or Abandoned Goods Statutes. A.L.R.4th Vol. 23 1025.

Annotation, Warehouseman or Other Bailee, Liability for Loss of Goods Stored at Other than Agreed-Upon Place. A.L.R.4th Vol. 76 883.

Annotation, What Are Fixtures Within Provision of Property Insurance Policy Expressly Extending Coverage to Fixtures. A.L.R.3d Vol. 17 1381.

Annotation, What Constitutes Improvements, Alterations or Additions Within Provisions of Lease Permitting or Prohibiting Tenant's Removal Thereof at Termination of Lease. A.L.R.3d Vol. 30 998.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.02

Supp. to § 13.02 Definition and Characteristics of Personal Property

[Go To Main]

§ 13.02(a) Missing [Go To Main]

§ 13.02(a)(3) Personal Property as Movable Rather than Immovable Property

After the first sentence of this section, insert footnote 1.1: n1.1

§ 13.02(a)(4) Intangible Forms of Personal Property

add:

See also Snider v. Midfirst Bank, 211 P.3d 179 (Kan. App. 2009) (In Kansas, all choses in action, other than torts, are assignable).

§ 13.02(a)(5) Examples of the Uncertain Distinction between Personal and Real Property

After the citation "United States v. Murray..." add:

aff'd, 217 F.3d 59 (1st Cir. 2000) .

§ 13.02(b) Fixtures as Personal Property. [Go To Main]

Add:

Polston, Ronald W., "The Fixutures Doctrine: Was It Ever Really the Law?" 16 Whittier L. Rev. 455 (1995); Searles, Sidney Z., "The Role of Fixtures in Enhancing Values in Eminent Domain," 66 N.Y. St. B.J. 14 (1994).

add:

See also Lazor v. Board of Assessment Appeals of Armstrong County, 986 A.2d 219 (Pa. Cmwlth., 2009) (Because the mobile home was permanently attached to the property, it was taxable as realty).

After the first sentence of the 2nd paragraph that reads "In some circumstances, if something less than a permanent..." insert footnote 11.1: n11.1

Change Leathers to Pledger

After the citation "Long Island Onwer's Ass'n Inc. v. Davidson ... " add:

see also, In re Boehmer, 240 B.R. 837, (Bankr. E.D.Pa. 1999) (acknowledging the confusion among the in determining what constitutes "additional property"); In re McCarron, 242 B.R. 479 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2000) .

Add

Chapman v. Katz, 862 N.E.2d 735 (Mass. 2007) (whether an ATM kiosk was a structure or a fixture was a question for the jury).

§ 13.02(c) Crops as Personal Property. [Go To Main]

Add:

"Trust Decisions: Farm Crops That Are Fully Matured But Not Harvested at the Time of Testator's Death Are Considered Personalty and Pass Under the Will as Such. In In re Estate of Hughs, 506 N.W.2d 810 (Iowa Ct. App. 1993) ," 111 Banking L.J. 325 (1993).

Add:

Slappey v. Slappey, 296 Ga. App. 773 (Ga. Ct. App. 2009) (laborer's lien asserted against crop).

Schweickert v. AG Services of America, Inc., 823 N.E.2d 213 (Ill. App. 2005) (statutory landlord lien for crops had priority over perfected security interest of tenant's creditor).

§ 13.02(d) Choses in Action as Person Property [Go To Main]

add:

See Snider v. Midfirst Bank, 211 P.3d 179 (Kan. App. 2009) (In Kansas, all choses in action, other than torts, are assignable personal property).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1.1. Gullatt v. Newell Industries, Inc., 688 So. 2d 1191 (La. Ct. App. 1996) (In Louisiana, immovables are presumed to belong to the owner of the underlying real property, unless other ownership is shown by instrument).

(n2)Footnote 11.1. In re Steslow, 225 B.R. 883 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1998) (Fixtures may be either personal property or real property in Pennsylvania).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.03

Supp. to § 13.03 How Ownership of Personal Property Is Orginally Acquired

[Go To Main]

§ 13.03(b) Original and Successive Acquisition of Possession [Go To Main]

After the citation to "Hays v. Montague ... " add:

see also, Ray v. State, 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 250 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2000) .

§ 13.03(c) Personal Property Rights in Wild Animals. [Go To Main]

Add:

Hollywood Park Humane Soc'y v. Town of Hollywood Park, 2004 U.S. Dist LEXIS 784 (No. SA-03-CA-1313-XR, W.D. Tex., Jan 23, 2004) (Plantiffs claimed city wildlife officials violated their rights in regard to quiet enjoyment of wild animals which they were attempting to domesticate).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.04

Supp. to § 13.04 How Ownership of Personal Property Is Transferred.

[Go To Main]

§ 13.04(a) Transfers by Gift [Go To Main]

§ 13.04(a)(2) Types of Gifts

§ 13.04(a)(2)(i) Delivery

Add:

see also In re Estate of Eastman, 760 A.2d 16 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2000) (Mere handling of a bank book, even when accompanied by words of intent to give the bank account is not enough to constitute delivery).

Add "donee" after "and"

Add:

rev'd on other grounds, 960 P.2d 1031 (Cal. 1998) .

Add:

Howell v. Herald, 2003 Ky. App. LEXIS 123 (Ky. Ct. App. May 23, 2003) (Lawyer who prepared deeds for the decedent remained the decedent's agent and could not act as the agent for decedent's niece; the lawyer did not complete an inter vivos gift of property to the niece because the delivery occurred after the death of the client).

Add:

Trott v. Jones, 2004 Ark. App. LEXIS 273 (No. 03-584, April 7, 2004) (Court declared that bare intent on the part of a decedent to create trust in his bank account was not enough; there was no transfer of title); Ardrey v. Ardrey, 2004 Ohio App. LEXIS 2193 (No. 14-03-41, May 17, 2004) (Court found that husband had made a gift to the wife of property which he had owned previous to the marriage, by putting the house which was built on the property in both of their names).

Last line, add "donee" at the end of the line.

Add:

Embury v. Embury, 854 N.Y.S.2d 502 (2008) (wife proved that real property was given to her during the marriage as separate property).

Add "box" after "deposit"

Change (N.J. 1966) to (N.J. 1967)

Add:

Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Comm'r of Revenue, 790 N.E.2d 636 (Mass. 2003) (Court declared that a retailer performed its obligations as to delivery of purchased goods at the time of sale, even though purchaser was picking up goods at stores in other states).

§ 13.04(a)(2)(ii) Intent

Add:

Lebitz-Freeman v. Lebitz, 803 A.2d 156 (N.J. Super. 2002) (no intent to make a gift of securities); Honarvar v. Kangarloo, 57 Va. Cir. 494 (2000) (gift considered complete even after donor harassed donee into leaving gifted property).

Add:

Armstrong v. Armstrong, 266 F. Supp.2d 385 (D. Virgin Islands, 2003) (In a divorce action, the Court found that treatment and use of a home took it outside of the definition of a marital homestead).

Add:

See also Nicholson v. Johnston, 855 A.2d 97 (Pa. Super. 2004) (holding that former fiance is entitled to reimbursement for his payments on mortgage of home the couple purchased in anticipation of marriage that never materialized).

Change the citation to "Rowe v. Rowe ... " to read:

Rowe v. Rowe, 480 S.E.2d 760 (Va. Ct. App. 1997) .

§ 13.04(a)(3) Gifts Causa Mortis

Change Haggerty to Hagerty

Change Newton to Newtown

Add:

Mycoo v. O'Leary, 2003 Conn. Super. LEXIS 150 (No. CV010181894, Jan. 29, 2003) (there was a question of fact as to whether there had been a sufficient delivery of a promised gift of money to satisfy a prerequisite of a gift cause mortis from a deceased to his home health aide); Davis v. Davis, 2004 Ohio App. LEXIS 764 (No. 2003CA00243, Feb. 23, 2004) (because a transaction benefited a family member, it was presumed that the transaction was intended as a gift; the burden of proof was on the executor to show that the transaction was in fact, a loan).

Osborn v. Osborn, 2004 Ohio App. LEXIS 5889 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004) (court found that couple's joint ownership deed evidenced a gift).

§ 13.04(b)(1)(i) General Rules

Change "Baker v. Baker" to "Barker v. Baker"

Change "Writz" to "Wirtz"

Change the parenthetical after "Writz v. Switzer" to read:

(proceeds of an estate were used to pay windfall taxes, an action was brought against the accountant for negligence requesting that the accountant reimburse the estate). Implied overruling recognized by Adams v. U.S. Homecrafters, Inc., 744 So. 2d 736 (1999) .

Add:

Estate of Dye, 92 Cal. App.l 4th 966 (2001) (both adopted in and adopted out children are entitled to their shares of the decedent's estate).

Add:

Fazilat v. Feldstein, 2004 N.J. LEXIS 554 (No. A-49 September Term 2003, May 27, 2004) (Court found it in the best interest of child to declare contested paternity).

Kau Agribusiness Co. v. Heirs or Assigns of Kahananui, 95 P.3d 613 (Haw. 2004) (the trial court erred by not applying the Trimble decision retroactively).

§ 13.04(b)(1)(ii) Uniform Probate Code Provisions for Intestate Succession

Insert the following as paragraph § 2-112:

§ 2-112 [Dower and Curtesy Abolished.]

The estates of dower and curtesy are abolished.

The paragraph entitled "[Individuals Related to Decedent Through Two Lines]" should be renumbered as § 2-113

The paragraph entitled "[Parent Child Relationships]" should be renumbered as § 2-114

§ 13.04(b)(2) Testamentary Transfers

Change the title of "§ 2-503 Writings Intended as Wills etc." to read:

§ 2-503 [Harmless Error.]

§ 13.04(d) Transfers to Adverse Possessors [Go To Main]

Add:

Walden v. Jones, 252 Ga. App. 692 (2001) (adverse possession of abandoned personal property).

Add:

Miller, Jason, "Hostility May Not Be Impaired in an Action for Adverse Possession When There Is Disproving Evidence: Distinction Made from Cases Where All Other Elements Are Met." 25 Lawyers J. 3 (Dec. 14, 2001).

Rosa v. Obar, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 65 (No. CV000156932, Jan. 9 2004) (Landlord failed to show exclusive adverse possession of a disputed parcel); Markowicz v. Bowen, 11 LCR 117 (Mass. 2003) (Beekeeping and gardening not sufficient activities to be considered "cultivation" for adverse possession purposes); Martinez v. Martinez, 83 P.3d 298 (N.M. App. 2004) (Noting that a cotenant has a heightened standard for showing adverse possession against another cotenant).

Change Brunet to Burnet

After the citation "Joseph v. Lesnevich ... " add:

rev'd O'Keeffe v. Snyder, 416 A.2d 862 (N.J. 1980)

Change the citation "Estate of Billings v. Deadwood ... " to:

506 N.W.2d 138 (S.D. 1993) (congregation failed to carry the burden of proving "tacking" and therefore, of establishing adverse possession).

§ 13.04(e) Transfers to Finders. [Go To Main]

Change "as the" to "as to the"

§ 13.04(e)(1) The Basic Rules of Finders' Rights.

Add:

Kurjatko, Adina, "Are Finders Keepers? The Need for Uniform Law Governing the Rights of Original Owners and Good Faith Purchasers of Stolen Art," 5 U.C. Davis J. Int'l L. & Pol'y 59 (1999).

§ 13.04(e)(2) Exceptions for Misplaced Items

Add:

Corliss v. Wenner, 34 P.3d 1100 (Ida. App. 2001) (the treasure trove doctrine is not part of Idaho common law).

In re Oakley, 344 F.3d 709 (7th Cir., 2003) (Court notes that the U.S. does not lay claim to treasure trove under the old English system).

Add:

Terry v. Lock, 343 Ark. 452 (Ark. 2001) (mislaid property).

§ 13.04(e)(3)(iv) Iowa

Iowa Code § 556F.17 has been amended to read as follows: If any person shall trade, sell, loan, or take out of the limits of this state any such property taken up or found as provided in this chapter, before the person shall be vested with the right to the property, the person shall forfeit and pay double the value thereof, to be recovered by any person in an action, one half of which shall go to the plaintiff and the other half to the county.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(v) Michigan

The Michigan statute has been revised. Delete all of the text after this heading and replace it with the following text:

In Michigan, lost property is immediately classified as outlined in the statute on lost property. Each category of lost property is subject to different rules regarding its ultimate disposition.

434.21. Definitions

Sec. 1. As used in this act:

(a) "Collectible currency" means a medium of exchange including coins, bank notes, government notes, and paper money that has a value greater than face value.

(b) "Contraband" means any property that is prohibited by any law to be owned, carried, concealed, or possessed.

(c) "Currency" means a medium of exchange including coins, bank notes, government notes, and paper money that has a value not greater than face value.

(d) "Evidence" means any property that furnishes or tends to furnish proof in a legal matter.

(e) "Hazardous material" means explosives, pyrotechnics, flammable gas, flammable compressed gas, nonflammable compressed gas, flammable liquid, oxidizing material, poisonous gas, poisonous liquid, irritating material, etiologic material, radioactive material, corrosive material, or liquefied petroleum gas.

(f) "Junk" means any property that does not have any fair market value or worth.

(g) "Legal owner" means any individual, organization, partnership, company, corporation, or governmental agency who had care, custody, or control over the property and can establish ownership to the satisfaction of the law enforcement agency by description, title, sales receipt, bill of goods, or other means. Any person who represents the legal owner or an organization, partnership, company, corporation, governmental agency by affidavit, power of attorney, bill of goods, or title may be considered the legal owner for purposes of recovering the property.

(h) "Perishable property" means any property subject to quick deterioration or spoilage except when maintained under proper conditions.

(i) "Property" means anything which is the subject of ownership and is corporeal, tangible, visible, or personal, or that has an exchange value.

(j) "Property of major value" means any property that is not collectible currency, contraband, currency, evidence, hazardous material, junk, perishable property, or property of minor value.

(k) "Property of minor value" means any property whose fair market value is less than the total cost of preparing a property report, plus the costs of storage and disposition, and which is not collectible currency, contraband, currency, evidence, hazardous material, junk, perishable property, or property of major value.

434.22. Finding of lost property; report or delivery to law enforcement agency; classifications, criteria; storage

Sec. 2. (1) A person who finds lost property shall report the finding or deliver the property to a law enforcement agency in the jurisdiction where the property is found. This shall include all property found in an abandoned vehicle. If the person wishes to receive the property if it is not claimed by the legal owner as provided in this act, the person shall provide his or her name and current address to the law enforcement agency and shall inform the agency of any change in his or her address.

(2) The property described under subsection (1) shall be inspected by the law enforcement agency to determine the type of property that has been found. The property shall be classified into 1 of the following categories:

(a) Collectible currency.

(b) Contraband.

(c) Currency.

(d) Evidence.

(e) Hazardous material.

(f) Junk.

(g) Perishable property.

(h) Property of major value.

(i) Property of minor value.

(3) The law enforcement agency shall use the following method to determine the classification of property under subsection (2):

(a) Currency may be appraised to determine whether the currency, because of age, origin, metal content, or value as a collector's item, has a value other than its face value. Currency may be inspected by a person who has the expertise to determine if the currency is collectible currency.

(b) Property that is suspected of being contraband may be subjected to scientific evaluation or inspected by a qualified person.

(c) Property shall be considered evidence if the property is reasonably believed by the law enforcement agency or a governmental attorney to be evidence that could be used in a legal action.

(d) Whether property is hazardous material shall be determined by a qualified person who has expertise regarding hazardous material.

(e) Property that may be junk may be inspected to determine if it has any fair market value or worth.

(f) Perishable property may be inspected to determine if the property requires special storage.

(g) Whether property is of major or minor value shall be determined by a person who has expertise regarding the valuation of the property.

(4) Property that is reported or delivered pursuant to subsection (1) shall be stored in a location as determined by the law enforcement agency.

434.23. Reports on certain lost property; making description available to public; storage of property with minor value

Sec. 3. (1) Within 48 hours of a report or delivery under section 2(1), the following reports shall be completed on property of major value, collectible currency found in 1 location for the total value, currency found in 1 location for the total value, hazardous material, and perishable property that has a major value:

(a) A general description of the property to provide a person who may be the legal owner with enough information to aid in determining ownership. This information shall be kept in a public building in a location that is open to the public during normal business hours.

(b) A detailed description of the property to provide the law enforcement agency with information to determine ownership. The description shall also include the total value of the property found in 1 location. The information required by this subdivision is exempt from disclosure under the freedom of information act, Act No. 442 of the Public Acts of 1976, being sections 15.231 to 15.246 of the Michigan Compiled Laws, and shall not be available to the public or any person claiming ownership.

(2) Property that is determined under section 2(3) to be of minor value may be kept by the law enforcement agency in a safe location and may be inspected by the public upon request during normal business hours.

434.24. Disposition of property

Sec. 4. (1) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (2), collectible currency and currency shall be returned to the legal owner when the law enforcement agency is reasonably satisfied of that ownership. Pursuant to section 5, if the legal owner cannot be located or established, the property shall be disposed of pursuant to this act.

(2) All contraband that is or may be evidence and any other found property that is or may be evidence in a criminal or civil action instituted by a governmental attorney shall be kept in a place of safekeeping until the governmental attorney releases the evidence. All contraband shall be disposed of in a manner prescribed by law. Any found property that is evidence that is not contraband shall be returned to the legal owner unless prohibited by law.

If the legal owner cannot be located, the property shall be classified as prescribed in section 2(2) and shall be disposed of pursuant to this act.

(3) When the legal owner of the hazardous material cannot be located or established or the hazardous material may pose an imminent danger to life or other property, then the hazardous material may be released to any governmental agency, private industry, institution, business, or person that can safely keep or dispose of the hazardous material and the container.

(4) Found property that is determined to be junk may be disposed of in any manner by the law enforcement agency.

(5) Upon the conclusion of a criminal or civil action instituted by a governmental attorney, evidence may be returned to the legal owner unless prohibited by law or the evidence is required in another court action. If the legal owner cannot be located, the law enforcement agency shall classify the property as prescribed in section 2(2) and dispose of it pursuant to this act.

(6) Perishable property shall be released to the legal owner of the property. Pursuant to section 5, if the legal owner cannot be located or established, the property shall be disposed of pursuant to this act.

(7) All property of major value shall be returned to the legal owner when the law enforcement agency is reasonably satisfied of that ownership. If the legal owner is not located and after 6 months from the date of the notice as prescribed in section 5, the property shall be disposed of pursuant to this act.

(8) All property of minor value shall be returned to the legal owner when the law enforcement agency is reasonably satisfied of that ownership. If after 3 months the property has not been claimed by the legal owner, the property may be disposed of in any manner by the law enforcement agency.

434.25. Notice to known legal owners, contents

Sec. 5. (1) The law enforcement agency shall send a notice by first class mail to any known legal owner of collectible currency, currency, evidence, perishable property, or property of major value to the last known address of record. The notice shall contain the following information:

(a) The date the property was found.

(b) The type of property found.

(c) The address where the property is located.

(d) The cost of storage per day, if any.

(e) A statement that the property must be claimed within 6 months of the date of the letter or the property shall be considered abandoned and disposed of under the provisions of this act.

(f) The name of the law enforcement agency, the address, and the telephone number where the legal owner can obtain the property.

(2) Property described in subsection (1) not claimed within 6 months after the date of the notice may be disposed of pursuant to section 6.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vi) Montana

Sections 70-5-203 through 70-5-209 have been repealed and should be deleted from the text.

Montana Code §§ 70-5-102 through 70-5-202 has been amended to conform with gender-neutral standards and now reads as follows:

70-5-102. Finder not bound to take charge--status as depositary.

A person who finds a thing lost is not bound to take charge of it, but if the person does, the person is a depositary for the owner, with the rights and obligations of a depositary for hire.

70-5-103. Duty to inform owner when known.

If a person finds money, goods, things in action, or other personal property or saves a domestic animal from drowning or starvation when the property is of a value of $10 or more and the person knows or suspects who the owner is, the person shall use reasonable diligence to inform the owner and make restitution without compensation, further than a reasonable charge for saving and taking care of the property. If the person fails to do so, the person is liable in damages to the owner and does not have a claim to any reward offered by the owner for the recovery of the thing or to any compensation for the person's trouble or expenses.

70-5-104. Right of finder to require proof of claimant's ownership.

The finder of a thing may in good faith before giving it up require reasonable proof of ownership from any person claiming it.

70-5-105. Compensation of finder.

The finder of a thing is entitled to compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by the finder in its preservation and for any other service necessarily performed by the finder about it and to a reasonable reward for keeping it.

70-5-106. Exoneration of finder by storage of thing found.

The finder of a thing may be exonerated from liability at any time by placing it in storage with any responsible person of good character at a reasonable expense.

70-5-107. Exoneration of owner by surrender of thing to finder.

The owner of a thing found may be exonerated from the claims of the finder by surrendering it to the finder in satisfaction of the claims.

70-5-201. When finder may sell thing found.

The finder of a thing may sell it, if it is a thing which is commonly the subject of sale, when the owner cannot with reasonable diligence be found or being found refuses upon demand to pay the lawful charges of the finder, in the following cases:

(1) when the thing is in danger of perishing or of losing the greater part of its value; or

(2) when the lawful charges of the finder amount to two-thirds of its value.

70-5-202. How sale conducted.

A sale under the provisions of § 70-5-201 must be made in the same manner as the sale of a thing pledged

§ 13.04(e)(3)(vii) New Hampshire.

N.H. Rev. Stat. T. XLVI, Ch. 471 has been repealed and should be deleted from the text.

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xi) Vermont.

Second to last line, add "the" before "town."

§ 13.04(e)(3)(xiii) The Uniform Unclaimed Property Act and the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act

add:

The states wherein the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act 1995 has been adopted include: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Hawaii, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Vermont, Virgin Islands, and West Virginia.

At the end of this section insert the following text:

The 1995 act expanded the scope of § 2 by creating categories of unclaimed property and defining time limits at the end of which the unclaimed property would be considered abandoned property.

2. [Presumptions of Abandonment.]

(a) Property is presumed abandoned if it is unclaimed by the apparent owner during the time set forth below for the particular property:

(1) traveler's check, 15 years after issuance;

(2) money order, seven years after issuance;

(3) stock or other equity interest in a business association or financial organization, including a security entitlement under [[Go To Main]], five years after the earlier of (i) the date of the most recent dividend, stock split, or other distribution unclaimed by the apparent owner, or (ii) the date of the second mailing of a statement of account or other notification or communication that was returned as undeliverable or after the holder discontinued mailings, notifications, or communications to the apparent owner;

(4) debt of a business association or financial organization, other than a bearer bond or an original issue discount bond, five years after the date of the most recent interest payment unclaimed by the apparent owner;

(5) a demand, savings, or time deposit, including a deposit that is automatically renewable, five years after the earlier of maturity or the date of the last indication by the owner of interest in the property; but a deposit that is automatically renewable is deemed matured for purposes of this section upon its initial date of maturity, unless the owner has consented to a renewal at or about the time of the renewal and the consent is in writing or is evidenced by a memorandum or other record on file with the holder;

(6) money or credits owed to a customer as a result of a retail business transaction, three years after the obligation accrued;

(7) gift certificate, three years after December 31 of the year in which the certificate was sold, but if redeemable in merchandise only, the amount abandoned is deemed to be [60] percent of the certificate's face value;

(8) amount owed by an insurer on a life or endowment insurance policy or an annuity that has matured or terminated, three years after the obligation to pay arose or, in the case of a policy or annuity payable upon proof of death, three years after the insured has attained, or would have attained if living, the limiting age under the mortality table on which the reserve is based;

(9) property distributable by a business association or financial organization in a course of dissolution, one year after the property becomes distributable;

(10) property received by a court as proceeds of a class action, and not distributed pursuant to the judgment, one year after the distribution date;

(11) property held by a court, government, governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, one year after the property becomes distributable;

(12) wages or other compensation for personal services, one year after the compensation becomes payable;

(13) deposit or refund owed to a subscriber by a utility, one year after the deposit or refund becomes payable;

(14) property in an individual retirement account, defined benefit plan, or other account or plan that is qualified for tax deferral under the income tax laws of the United States, three years after the earliest of the date of the distribution or attempted distribution of the property, the date of the required distribution as stated in the plan or trust agreement governing the plan, or the date, if determinable by the holder, specified in the income tax laws of the United States by which distribution of the property must begin in order to avoid a tax penalty; and

(15) all other property, five years after the owner's right to demand the property or after the obligation to pay or distribute the property arises, whichever first occurs.

(b) At the time that an interest is presumed abandoned under subsection (a), any other property right accrued or accruing to the owner as a result of the interest, and not previously presumed abandoned, is also presumed abandoned.

(c) Property is unclaimed if, for the applicable period set forth in subsection (a), the apparent owner has not communicated in writing or by other means reflected in a contemporaneous record prepared by or on behalf of the holder, with the holder concerning the property or the account in which the property is held, and has not otherwise indicated an interest in the property. A communication with an owner by a person other than the holder or its representative who has not in writing identified the property to the owner is not an indication of interest in the property by the owner.

(d) An indication of an owner's interest in property includes:

(i) the presentment of a check or other instrument of payment of a dividend or other distribution made with respect to an account or underlying stock or other interest in a business association or financial organization or, in the case of a distribution made by electronic or similar means, evidence that the distribution has been received;

(ii) owner-directed activity in the account in which the property is held, including a direction by the owner to increase, decrease, or change the amount or type of property held in the account;

(iii) the making of a deposit to or withdrawal from a bank account; and

(iv) the payment of a premium with respect to a property interest in an insurance policy; but the application of an automatic premium loan provision or other nonforfeiture provision contained in an insurance policy does not prevent a policy from maturing or terminating if the insured has died or the insured or the beneficiary of the policy has otherwise become entitled to the proceeds before the depletion of the cash surrender value of a policy by the application of those provisions.

(e) Property is payable or distributable for purposes of this [Act] notwithstanding the owner's failure to make demand or present an instrument or document otherwise required to obtain payment.[129.1]

The official comment to the 1995 Act discusses where intangible property falls under updated statute:

> Section 2 continues the general proposition that all intangible property is within the coverage of this Act. It provides in a single section for all the various periods of abandonment that were separately stated in several sections of the 1981 Act. With limited exceptions this reorganization does not alter the bases for presuming abandonment of the property from that established in the 1981 Act, but merely restates those standards in a unified section, more easily applied, with less repetition... . Intangible property held by a utility other than subscribers' deposits and refunds are subject to the five year rule of subsection (a)(14).[129.2] n129.2

Add:

Freedman v. Campbell, 72 P.3d 425 (Colo. App. 2003) (a deed transferring property to a trust did not comply with the statutory reqirements; therefore the property was transferred to a decedent and her husband as tenants in common).

Add:

ATC P'ship v. Town of Windam, 845 A.2d 389 (Conn. 2004) (Because property was properly determined to be a fixture of the real estate, the property was not goods or chattel that could be subject to a replevin action).

Add:

Somers v. Chan, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 479 (No. CV020818041, March 3, 2004) (Court denied creditor's motion for a turnover order to debtor's husband).

§ 13.04(f) Transfers to Judgment Creditors. [Go To Main]

add:

Ho v. Hsieh, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 17 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 2010) (held that the trial court erred in transferring worthless stock to the judgment creditor without reduction in outstanding money judgment).

add:

Thompson v. Hanson, 219 P.3d 659 (Wash. 2009) (transferee may be liable to judgment creditor up to the value of the transferred asset or the value of judgment, whichever is less, even if transferee accepted transfer in good faith).

§ 13.04(g)(1) General Principles of Accession.

Add:

McBride v. Commonwealth, 2003 Va. App. LEXIS 428 (No. 1947-02-4, Aug. 5, 2003) (Evidence supported defendant's conviction for embezzlement, as the air compressor that he sold from the garage he leased was personal property, not real property).

Third to last line, change "§ 9-314" to "new § 9-335"

Delete § 9-314 and the following text, and replace it with the following:

§ 9-335. Accessions.

(a) [Creation of security interest in accession.] A security interest may be created in an accession and continues in collateral that becomes an accession.

(b) [Perfection of security interest.] If a security interest is perfected when the collateral becomes an accession, the security interest remains perfected in the collateral.

(c) [Priority of security interest.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d), the other provisions of this part determine the priority of a security interest in an accession.

(d) [Compliance with certificate-of-title statute.] A security interest in an accession i subordinate to a security interest in the whole which is perfected by compliance with the requirements of a certificate-of-title statute under Section 9-311(b).

(e) [Removal of accession after default.] After default, subject to Part 6, a secured party may remove an accession from other goods if the security interest in the accession has priority over the claims of every person having an interest in the whole.

(f) [Reimbursement following removal.] A secured party that removes an accession from other goods under subsection (e) shall promptly reimburse any holder of a security interest or othre lien on, or owner of, the whole or of other goods, other than the debtor, for the cost of repair of any physical injury to the whole or the other goods. The secured party need not reimburse the holder or owner for any diminution in value of the whole or the other goods caused by the absence of the accession removed or by any necessity for replacing it. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the secured party give adequate assurance for the performance of the obligation to reimburse.

§ 13.04(g)(6) Accession of Personalty to Realty.

Add:

Comm'r of Transp. v. Burkhart, 2003 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3166 (No. CV020087554, Nov. 7, 2003) (A billboard on condemned property was found to be personal property, and accordingly the billboard owner who leased the property space had no right to compensation); Comm'r of Transp. v. F.T.C. Realty, 2003 Conn. Super. LEXIS 227 (No. CV0201705505, Jan. 14, 2003) (because several items could be considered personal property rather than fixtures, a lessee was entitled to a portion of a condemnation award).

Add:

Supervisor of Assessments v. Hartage Yacht Yard, Inc., 842 A.2d 732 (Md. 2004) (Lessee's buoys were taxable as personal property); Fisher v. Baronti, 761 N.Y.S.2d 820 (2003) (Items, though removable, were found to be fixtures since system they were a part of could not operate without them).

§ 13.04(g)(7) Rules for Relief by Recovery of Damages Rather than the property itself

Add:

but see Levine v. Fieni McFarlane, Inc., 690 So. 2d 712 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) .

Change "Stephensen" to "Stephenson"

FOOTNOTES:
(n3)Footnote 129.2. Unif. Unclaimed Property Act § 2 cmt. (1995).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.05

Supp. to § 13.05 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Fixtures

[Go To Main]

§ 13.05(a) Rights Following Actual and Constructive Severance [Go To Main]

Add:

Copple Constr., L.L.C. v. Columbia Nat'l Ins. Co., 776 N.W.2d 503 (Neb. 2009) (held that a tarp intended to be used with permanence as a lagoon cover was a fixture); Sycamore Management Group, LLC, v. Coosa Cable Co., Inc., 2010 WL 245582 (Ala., January 22, 2010) (held that cables installed and used for cable television/internet services are fixtures but not trade fixtures). In re Coleman, 373 B.R. 907 (W.D. Mo. 2007) (mobile home resting on bricks and tied down to the land was not real property). In re Steslow, 225 B.R. 883 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1998) (Fixtures may be either personal property or real property in Pennsylvania).

Change 135 So. 2d 1* to *135 So. 2d 91

Add:

Carjow, LLC v. Simmons, 349 S.C. 514 (2002) (severance of a fixture may not change it into personal property); Arizona Dept. of Revenue v. Arizona Outdoor Advertisers, Inc., 41 P.3d 631 (Ariz. App. 2002) (test for billboards as personalty).

§ 13.05(c) Rights to Fixtures Attached by a Tenant [Go To Main]

add:

Cammack the Cook, L.L.C. v. Eastburn, 296 S.W.3d 884 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2009) (lease agreement allowed for removal of fixtures within five days of lease termination if tenant was not in default).

add:

Matter of West Bushwick Urban Renewal Area, Phase 2., 888 N.Y.S.2d 525 (2009) (An owner of property is entitled to the value of fixtures taken by eminent domain.)

§ 13.05(c)(2) Types of Gifts

§ 13.05(c)(2)(i) Trade Fixtures.

Add:

S.S. Air, Inc. v. City of Vidalia, 278 Ga. App. 149 ; 628 S.E.2d 117 (No. A05A1647, Ga. App., Feb. 22, 2006) (hangar was a trade fixture).

Lafarge Bldg. Materials, Inc. v. Stribling, 2003 Ala. LEXIS 422 (No. 1020623, Oct. 17, 2003) (Court denied landlord's motion for cleanup costs for tenant's removal of trade fixtures).

Chapman v. Katz, 844 N.E.2d 270 (Mass. App. 2006) (automated teller machine kiosk was a trade fixture).

add:

Sycamore Management Group, LLC, v. Coosa Cable Co., Inc., 2010 WL 245582 (Ala. January, 22, 2010) (held that cable/internet cables installed in apartment complex are not trade fixtures because there was no landlord-tenant relationship).

add:

C.W. 100 Louis Henna, Ltd. v. El Chico Rests. of Tex., L.P., 295 S.W.3d 748 (Tex. App. Austin 2009) (held that air conditioning units installed by restaurant were trade fixtures).

§ 13.05(c)(2)(ii) Agricultural Fixtures.

Add:

But see Freeman v. Barrs, 237 S.W.3d 285 (Mo. App. 2007) (cattle scale treated as fixture and therefore included in the sale of the property on which the scale was situated).

§ 13.05(d) Third Parties', Trespasser', Cotenants', and Licensees' Rights in Fixtures [Go To Main]

Change 589 to 559

Change Pierce to Peirce

LexisNexis®

170 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.06

Supp. to § 13.06 Personal Property Issues Pertaining to Crops

[Go To Main]

§ 13.06(a) Competing Claims of Grantor and Grantee of the Land. [Go To Main]

add:

Cranpark, Inc. v. Rogers Group, Inc., (N.D. Ohio June 2, 2010) (crops and unborn animals are considered goods in accordance with UCC); Executone of Columbus, Inc. v. Inter-Tel, Inc., 665 F. Supp. 2d 899 (S.D. Ohio 2009) (crops and unborn animals are considered goods in accordance with UCC).

Change Steffans to Steffens

§ 13.06(c) Competing Claims of Owner and Adverse Possessor [Go To Main]

add:

but see Chenega Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 991 P.2d 769 (Alaska 1999) (discussing Alaska Stat. 09.17.070 which outlines when double recovery is allowed under the collateral benefits doctrine).

§ 13.06(d) Competing Claims When the Landowner Dies [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Estate of Sauder, 156 P.3d 1204 (Kan. 2005) (Sharecrop tenant's estate asserted claim to crops planted by tenant and harvested by landlord; landlord later planted additional crops).

add:

Riceland Foods, Inc. v. Pearson, 2009 WL 3486034 (Ark. October 29, 2009) (held that a purchaser of corps has a duty to make reasonable inquiry as to whether the crops are subject to a landowner's lien).

§ 13.06(e) Competing Claims of Landowner and Security Interest Holder. [Go To Main]

Add:

Meyhoeffer v. Wallace, 792 So. 2d 851 (La. App. 2002) (perfected security interest is superior to lessor's claim to rent payments).

Stockman Bank of Montana v. AGSCO, Inc., 728 N.W.2d 142 (N.D. 2007) (bank sought priority of its perfected security interest in crops over supplier's lien and financing company lien).

Add:

Burgess v. Sikes, 438 F.3d 493 (5th Cir. 2006) (crop loss was not part of bankruptcy estate).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.07

Supp. to § 13.07 Bailments

[Go To Main]

Add new footnote 233.1 n233.1

§ 13.07(b) Degree of Care Required of Bailees. [Go To Main]

At end of first sentence, add new footnote 234.1: n234.1

Dickerson, A. Darby, "Bailor Beware: Limitations and Exclusions of Liability in Commercial Bailments." 41 Vand. L. Rev. 129 (1998); Kirn, Walter N., "The Use of Common Law Bailments in Connection with the Licensing of Living Organisms," PLI Order No. G4-3799, 235 PLI/Pat 289 (Jan. 1, 1987).

Bobb Chevrolet, Inc. v. Jack's Used Cars, 772 N.E.2d 171 (Ohio App. 2002) (bailee not required to remove cars to safer location during hurricane conditions); Croskey v. Leach, 2002 Ohio App. LEXIS 5589 (in mutual benefit bailment, bailee was liable for theft in cars left in bailee's lot).

Garris v. Thomasville-Thomas County Humane Society, Inc., 941 So. 2d 540 (Fla. App. 2006) (breach of bailment alleged by claim of assault and battery in connection with euthanization of dogs left at animal shelter); Atkins Machinery, Inc. v. C. H. Powell Company, Inc., 455 F. Supp. 2d 461 (D. S.C. 2006) (breach of bailment action against stevedore for damage to equipment being loaded onto a ship).

Add:

Falvey Cargo Underwriting v. Metro Freezer & Storage, 2002 Mass. Super. LEXIS 444 (standard of care defined in language of receipt).

§ 13.07(c) Limiting or Extending the Bailee's Standard of Care [Go To Main]

After the citation "Bricks v. Metro Abulance Serv ... ." add:

see also Effort Enterprises, Inc. v. Crosta, 391 S.E.2d 477 (Ga. App. 1990) (discussing the duty of care that common carriers owe to clients).

Note Subsequent History:

Universal Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Kneeland, 599 N.W.2d 519 (Mich. App. 1999) ; aff'd, 628 N.W.2d 491 (Mich. 2001) .

§ 13.07(d) The Bailee's Duty to Redeliver [Go To Main]

Add:

Yao v. Chapman, 705 N.W.2d 272 (Wis. App. 2005) (gratuitous bailment regarding a cell line).

Palafrugell Holdings, Inc. v. Cassel, 940 So. 2d 492 (Fla. App. 2006) (negligent bailment alleged when attorney disbursed corporate funds without corporation's approval).

Add:

LaPlace v. Briere, 962 A.2d 1139 (N.Y. App.Div. 2009) (held that no breach of duty in bailment arrangement occurred upon the death of owner's horse while being held at the bailee's stable unless there is evidence of negligence or conversion).

Varel Mfg. Co. v. Acetylene Oxygen Co., 990 S.W.2d 486 (Tx. Ct. App. 1999) (a bailee is not liable for conversion until the bailor has demanded the goods and the bailee refused to redeliver, since the bailee lawfully acquired the property).

Koch Petroleum Group, L.P. v. Alliant Energy Indus. Servs., 280 F. Supp. 2d 628 (S.D. Tex. 2003) (Seller shifted to being a bailor when it accidentally yielded possession of oil along with the tanks; buyer converted when it rejected demand to return the oil).

See also Walters v. Northcutt, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1048 (Tex App. 2005) .

add:

Johnson v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 653 F. Supp. 2d 1133 (D. Colo. 2009) (failure to deliver creates a presumption of negligence, and it is up to bailee to present contrary evidence); Masek v. Wichelman, 2009 Conn. Super. LEXIS 282 (Conn. Super. Ct. Jan. 27, 2009) (failure to deliver creates a presumption of negligence).

§ 13.07(f) Bailee Actions Against Third Parties. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-12

add:

Carpenter v. Turrell, 227 P.3d 575 (Idaho 2010) (held that bailor had no right of action against the estate of a bailee who had wrongfully sold the bailed property).

§ 13.07(g) Implied Bailments. [Go To Main]

add:

Bank of N.Y. v. Sumter County, 691 S.E.2d 473 (S.C. 2010) (constructive bailment occurs when one has lawfully acquired the goods of another and is under a duty to redeliver the goods and keep them safe); Sirpal v. Univ. of Miami, 684 F. Supp. 2d 1349 (S. D. Fla. 2010) (held that bailor had no cause of action because he was not the true owner of the property); N. Marine Underwriters, Ltd. v. FBI Exp., Inc. 2009 WL 6067053 (S. D. Tex. November 13, 2009) (both delivery and acceptance are necessary for the existence of a bailment); Morgan Stanley & Co. v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 645 F. Supp. 2d 248 (S.D. N.Y. 2009) (held that a bank operating lockbox facility created a bailment); In re Martin, 596 F. Supp. 2d 142 (D. Mass. 2008) (held that no bailment existed because alleged bailee did not have exclusive possession of property).

FOOTNOTES:
(n4)Footnote 233.1. LaPlace v. Briere, 962 A.2d 1139 (N.J. Super. 2009) (horse was left in a bailment arrangement with a stable); In the Matter of the Complaint of Martin, 596 F. Supp. 2d 142 (D. Mass. 2009) (yacht club did not have a bailment relationship with its members).

(n5)Footnote 234.1. Rational Software Corp. v. Sterling Corp., 393 F.3d 276 (1st Cir. 2005) (court enforced the contractual limitations of agreement based on prior course of dealing between the two parties).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.08

Supp. to § 13.08 Possessory Liens

[Go To Main]

§ 13.08(a) "Specific" Common Law Possessory Liens. [Go To Main]

Change Summer to Sumner

Insert note 260.1 after the first sentence of the last paragraph in this section which begins "Common law possessory liens are classed as either ... ": n260.1

add:

Armin Tool & Mfg. v. Continental Dispensing Co. (In re Continental Dispensing Co.), 416 B.R. 661 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 2009) (Surrendering the collateral eliminates a possessory lien.)

add:

Slappey v. Slappey, 296 Ga. App. 773 (Ga. Ct. App. 2009) (No. A08A1633, March 20, 2009, Ga. App.) (laborer's lien asserted against crop).

§ 13.08(c) The Element of Consent in Lien Creation. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58

Change Val to Valley

§ 13.08(e)(1) Bankers.

add:

In re Lifestyle Furnishings, LLC, 418 B.R. 382 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2009) (held that the bank lost its banker's lien upon delivering debtor's funds to the bankruptcy trustee)

Add:

But see McFarland v. Brier, 850 A.2d 965 (R.I. 2004) (adopting different reasoning than Topeka, N.A. v. Topeka Bank & Trust Co.).

§ 13.08(e)(4) Lawyers.

Add:

Leubsdorf, John, "Against Lawyer Retaining Liens," 72 Fordham L. Rev. 849 (2004); see also Bok v. Werner, 9 A.D.3d 318 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) ; Ferraioli v. Ferraioli, 8 A.D.3d 163 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) ; Law Office of Allan Khoshbin v. Law Office of Michael Ruiz, 2005 NY Slip Op 50226U (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) ; Tunick v. Shaw, 2004 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 2954 (N.Y. Misc. 2004) ; Vento v. City of New York, 2004 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 1335 (N.Y. Misc. 2004) (following the Lai Ling Cheng decision on dispute between former and current attorneys); see also Universal Acupuncture Pain Servs., P.C. v. Quandrino & Schwartz, P.C., 370 F.3d 259 (2d Cir. N.Y. 2004) .

Add:

Schneider et al v. City of New York, 2002 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 12853 (fees awarded to discharged attorneys).

add:

Chicago Title Trust Co. v. Chicago H&S Property, LLC, 419 B.R. 797 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (In order to enforce attorney's lien, notice must be served upon client.)

Add:

Pangborn Plumbing Corp. v. Carruthers & Skiffington, 97 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416 (2002) (law firm lien had priority over creditor lien).

Add:

Carragher v. Potts, 686 S.E.2d 348 (Ga. Ct. App. 2009) (held that the settlement and dismissal of the underlying action to recover client's home did not extinguish the attorney's lien on the home); Edwards v. Doe, 331 Fed. Appx. 563 (10th Cir. 2009) (held that a fee agreement interpreted to require attorney's services through "final determination" and a transfer of the case to another attorney after verdict but prior to receipt of judgment extinguished original attorney's lien). Brown v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 912 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (noting that judgment lien statutes "relate only to liens of judgment creditors, and do not apply to contractually created attorneys' fees liens"); Zaldivar v. Okeelanta Corp., 877 So. 2d 927 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2004) (employer, claimant, and claimant's new attorney each had notice of former attorney's charging lien at the time of the settlement and had an affirmative duty to notify the former attorney of the settlement and to protect his lien interest in the settlement proceeds).

FOOTNOTES:
(n6)Footnote 260.1. Conseco Loan Fin. Co. v. Boswell, 687 N.W.2d 646 (Minn. App. 2004) (declaring that this case fell under UCC provisions rather than rules for possessory liens).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.10

Supp. to § 13.10 Joint Bank Accounts

[Go To Main]

§ 13.10(a) Joint Accounts [Go To Main]

Add:

Nicholas v. Nicholas, 83 P.3d 214 (Kan. 2004) (discussing the ineffective efforts of one spouse to sever joint tenancy).

Add:

Russell's AmericInn, LLC v. Eagle Gen. Contrs., LLC, 772 N.W.2d 81 (Minn. Ct. App. 2009) (Without evidence of contrary intent, a party does not own funds contributed by joint tenant.)

Cassling, Donald R. "Buyer of Farm Crops Did Not Take Crops Free of Secured Creditor's Interest In the Crops Where Exception to Food Security Act Applied," Banking Law Journal (January, 2006) Banking Brief.

Churchill, Martha A., "Joint Bank Accounts: One Size Doesn't Fit All," 78 Mich. B.J. 292 (1999); Laurino, Paul, "Whose Money Is It Anyway? A Bank's Right to Setoff Against Joint Accounts," 1996 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 61 (1996); Ray, Nancy, "Joint Accounts, Setoff, and Distribution of Marital Property in North Carolina," 4 N.C. Banking Inst. 475 (2000).

§ 13.10(b) Survivorship Accounts [Go To Main]

Change Cambell to Campbell

After the citation "Malek v. Patten ... " add:

but see In re Estate of Silver, 1 P.3d 358, (Mont. 2000) .

add:

Estate of Anderson, 988 A.2d 977 (Me. 2010) (held that decedent's will could not extinguish the survivorship rights of joint account holder in a joint bank account with right of survivorship)

§ 13.10(c) Convenience Accounts. [Go To Main]

Add:

Storozynski v. Storozynski, 874 N.Y.S.2d 575 (2009) (Although there is a presumption that joint account holders are entitled to equal shares of the account, this presumption can be rebutted with evidence of intent that the account was merely a convenience account.)

Radigan, C. Raymond, "Joint Bank Accounts vs. Convenience Accounts," 68-APR N.Y. St. B.J. 54 (1996).

Porter v. Porter, 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 9950 (tax refund was separate property, even though taxes were paid from a joint tenancy account).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.11

Supp. to § 13.11 Stolen Goods

[Go To Main]

Add:

Greenstein, Seth, " 'Is Software 'Goods?' Intangibility Revisited Under the UCC and the National Stolen Property Act," 8 No. 4 Computer Law. 30 (1991).

Add:

but see SongByrd, Inc. v. Estate of Grossman, 206 F.3d 172 (2d Cir. 2000) .

See also Rochester Equip. & Maintenance v. Roxbury Mtn. Serv., Inc., 891 N.Y.S.2d 781 (2009) (buyer of stolen truck granted judgment against seller for breach of contract). Sanchez v. Univ. of Pa. Museum of Archaeology & Anthropology, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13555 (S.D.N.Y. July 19, 2004) ; Anglim, Jennifer M., "Crossroads in the Great Race: Moving Beyond the International Race to Judgment in Disputes over Artwork and Other Chattels," 45 Harv. Int'l L.J. 239 (2004).

Add:

but see Armbrister v. Roland Intern. Corp., 667 F. Supp. 802 (M.D. Fla. 1987) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.12

Supp. to § 13.12 Personal Property Subject to Special Regulation

[Go To Main]

§ 13.12(a) Treasure. [Go To Main]

Add:

Martin v. Moore, 109 S.W.3d 305 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2003) (because the owner of the "treasure" is known, the "treasure" is not considered treasure trove).

Add:

Berns, Philip A., "A Sovereign's Perspective On Treasure Salvage," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 269 (1999); Bradley, Lawrence D. Jr., "U.S. Treasure Trove Law," 10 Experience 24 (Spring 2000); Cassling, Donald R. "Buyer of Farm Crops Did Not Take Crops Free of Secured Creditor's Interest in the Crops Where Exception to Food Security Act Applied," Banking Law J. (Jan, 2006) Banking Brief. Hess, Peter E., "The Trouble with Treasure: Ethical Dilemmas for the Salvage Attorney," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 253 (1999); Horan, Edward W., "Organizing, Manning, and Financing a Treasure Salvage Expedition." 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 235 (1999); Jones, John Paul, "The United States Supreme Court and Treasure Salvage: Issues Remaining After Brother Jonathan," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 205 (1999); Steele, Chauncey D. IV, "The Morgantina Treasure: Italy's Quest for Repatriation of Looted Artifacts," 23 Suffolk Transnat'l L. Rev. 667 (2000).

§ 13.12(b) Salvage. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33

Add:

but see Dluhos v. Floating and Abandoned Vessel, Known as New York, 162 F.3d 63, (2nd Cir. 1998) ; Fairport Intern. Exploration, Inc. v. Shipwrecked Vessel, Captain Lawrence, 177 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 1999) ; Columbus-America Discovery Group v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 203 F.3d 291 (4th Cir. 2000) ; Dluhos v. The "New York", 162 F.3d 63 (2d Cir. 1999) (admiralty law does not recognize finders of vessels, because vessels cannot be abandoned as a matter of law); Autocephalous Greek-Orthodox Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg, 917 F.2d 278 (7th Cir. 1990) (recovery of art works removed during war time).

§ 13.12(c) Cultural Property. [Go To Main]

Add:

United States v. Eighteenth Century Peruvian Oil, 597 F. Supp. 2d 618 (E.D. Va. 2009) (held that a colonial period painting imported from Bolivia could be seized and returned to Peru according to Cultural Property Implementation Act).

Strahilevitz, Lior Jacob, "The Right to Destroy," 114 Yale L.J. 781 (2005); Dutra, Michael L, "Sir, How Much is that Ming Vase in the Window?: Protecting Cultural Relics in the People's Republic of China," 5 Asian-Pacific L. & Pol'y J. 62 (2004); Cunning, Andrea, "U.S. Policy On The Enforcement of Foreign Exports Restrictions on Cultural Property & Destructive Aspects of Retention Schemes," 26 Hous. J. Int'l L. 449 (2004); Matlon, Amina Para, "Safeguarding Native American Sacred Art by Partnering Tribal Law and Equity: An Exploratory Case Study Applying the Bulun Bulun Equity to Navajo Sandpainting," 27 Colum. J.L. & Arts 211 (2004).

Add:

Abtahi, Hirad, "The Protection of Cultural Property in Times of Armed Conflict: The Practice of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yuguslavia," 14 Harv. Hum. Rts. J. 1 (2001); Coggins, Clemency, "Cultural Property and Ownership: Antiquities," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 183 (2001); Cuno, James, "Art Museums and Cultural Property," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 189 (2001); Doyal, Stephanie, "Implementing the Unidroit Convention on Cultural Property Into Domestic law: The Case of Italy," 39 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 657 (2001); Murphy, Sean D., "Trafficking in Stolen Cultural Property," 94 Am. J. Int'l L. 544 (2000); Paterson, Robert K.,"Claiming Possession of the Material Cultural Property of Indigenous Peoples," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 283 (2001); "Reports from the Front Lines of the Art and Cultural Property Wars," Symposium, 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 1 (2001); Roussin, Lucille, "Cultural Property," 35 Int'l Law. 649 (2000); Rudenstine, David, "Cultural Property: The Hard Question of Repatriation: The Rightness and Utility of Voluntary Repatriation," 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 69 (2001); Scafidi, Susan, "Intellectual Property and Cultural Products," 81 B.U. L. Rev. 793 (2001); Stephenson, David J. Jr., "The Nexus Between Intellectual Property Piracy, International Law, the Internet, and Cultural Values," 14 St. Thomas L. Rev. 315 (2001); Wilf, Steven,"What Is Property's Fourth Estate? Cultural Property and the Fiduciary Ideal," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 177 (2001); Wilkes, Nicole B., "Public Responsibilities of Private Owners of Cultural Property: Toward a National Art Preservation Statute," 24 Colum.-VLA J.L. & Arts 177 (2001); Wilkie, Nancy C., "Public Opinion Regarding Cultural Property Policy," 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 97 (2001).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 13 THE AMERICAN LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

2-13 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 13.13

Supp. to § 13.13 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

add to Books:

Miles, Margaret M. Art As Plunder: The Ancient Origins of Debate About Cultural Property (2008).

Add to Articles:

Abtahi, Hirad, "The Protection of Cultural Property in Times of Armed Conflict: The Practice of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yuguslavia," 14 Harv. Hum. Rts. J. 1 (2001).

Alderman, Kimberly L. "Ethical Issues in Cultural Property Law Pertaining to Indigenous Peoples," 45 Idaho L. Rev. 515 (2009).

Berns, Philip A., "A Sovereign's Perspective On Treasure Salvage," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 269 (1999).

Bradley, Lawrence D. Jr., "U.S. Treasure Trove Law," 10 Experience 24 (Spring 2000).

Churchill, Martha A., "Joint Bank Accounts: One Size Doesn't Fit Al," 78 Mich. B.J. 292 (1999).

Coggins, Clemency, "Cultural Property and Ownership: Antiquities," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 183 (2001).

Cottrell, Edward M. "Keeping the Barbarians Outside the Gate: Toward a Comprehensive International Agreement Protecting Cultural Property," 9 Chi. J. Int'l L. 627 (2009).

Cuno, James, "Art Museums and Cultural Property," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 189 (2001).

Cutting, Christopher D. "Protecting Cultural Property Through Provenance," 32 Seattle U. L. Rev. 943 (2009).

Dickerson, A. Darby, "Bailor Beware: Limitations and Exclusions of Liability in Commercial Bailments," 41 Vand. L. Rev. 129 (1998).

Doyal, Stephanie, "Implementing the Unidroit Convention on Cultural Property Into Domestic law: The Case of Italy," 39 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 657 (2001).

Epstein, Richard A. "The Many Faces of Fault in Contract Law: Or How to do Economics Right, Without Really Trying," 107 Mich. L. Rev. 1461 (June 2009).

Forrest, Craig. "Historic Wreck Salvage: An International Perspective," 33 Tul. Mar. L.J. 347 (2009).

Greenstein, Seth, " 'Is Software 'Goods' Intangibility Revisited Under the UCC and the National Stolen Property Act," 8 NO. 4 Computer Law. 30 (1991).

Hess, Peter E., "The Trouble with Treasure: Ethical Dilemmas for the Salvage Attorney," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 253 (1999).

Horan, Edward W., "Organizing, Manning, and Financing a Treasure Salvage Expedition," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 235 (1999).

Jones, John Paul, "The United States Supreme Court and Treasure Salvage: Issues Remaining After Brother Jonathan," 30 J. Mar. L. & Com. 205 (1999).

Kinsler, Jeffrey S. "The Unmerry Widow: Spousal Disinheritance and Life Insurance in North Carolina," 87 N.C. L. Rev. 1869 (September 2009).

Kirn, Walter N., "The Use of Common Law Bailments in Connection with the Licensing of Living Organisms," PLI Order No. G4-3799, 235 PLI/Pat 289 (Jan. 1, 1987).

Kreder, Jennifer Anglim. "The Revolution in U.S. Museums Concerning the Ethics of Acquiring Antiquities," 64 U. Miami L. Rev. 997 (April 2010).

Kurjatko, Adina, "Are Finders Keepers? The Need for Uniform Law Governing the Rights of Original Owners and Good Faith Purchasers of Stolen Art," 5 U.C. Davis J. Int'l L. & Pol'y 59 (1999).

Laurino, Paul, "Whose Money Is It Anyway? A Bank's Right to Setoff Against Joint Accounts," 1996 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 61 (1996).

McLain, J. Anthony "Absent Valid Attorney's Lien, The File of the Client Belongs to the Client," 71 Ala. Law. 235 (May 2010).

Miller, Jason, "Hostility May Not Be Impaired in an Action for Adverse Possession When There Is Disproving Evidence: Distinction Made from Cases Where All Other Elements Are Met," 25 Lawyers J. 3 (Dec. 14, 2001).

Montgomery, Marc E. "Navigating the Back Channels of Salvage Law: Procedural Options for the Small Boat Salvor," 83 Tul. L. Rev. 1463 (June 2009)

Murphy, Sean D., "Trafficking in Stolen Cultural Property," 94 Am. J. Int'l L. 544 (2000).

Paterson, Robert K., "Claiming Possession of the Material Cultural Property of Indigenous Peoples," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 283 (2001).

Polston, Ronald W., "The Fixutures Doctrine: Was It Ever Really the Law?" 16 Whittier L. Rev. 455 (1995).

Radigan, C. Raymond, "Joint Bank Accounts vs. Convenience Accounts," 68-APR N.Y. St. B.J. 54 (1996).

Ray, Nancy, "Joint Accounts, Setoff, and Distribution of Marital Property in North Carolina," 4 N.C. Banking Inst. 475 (2000).

"Reports from the Front Lines of the Art and Cultural Property Wars," Symposium, 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 1 (2001).

Roussin, Lucille, "Cultural Property," 35 Int'l Law. 649 (2000).

Rudenstine, David, "Cultural Property: The Hard Question of Repatriation: The Rightness and Utility of Voluntary Repatriation," 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 69 (2001).

Scafidi, Susan, "Intellectual Property and Cultural Products," 81 B.U. L. Rev. 793 (2001).

Searles, Sidney Z., "The Role of Fixtures in Enhancing Values in Eminent Domain," 66-JAN N.Y. St. B.J. 14 (1994).

Simeone, Joseph J. "'Finders Keepers, Losers Weepers': The Law of Finding 'Lost' Property in Missouri," 54 St. Louis U. L.J. 167 (2009).

Steele, Chauncey D. IV, "The Morgantina Treasure: Italy's Quest for Repatriation of Looted Artifacts," 23 Suffolk Transnat'l L. Rev. 667 (2000).

Stephenson, David J. Jr., "The Nexus Between Intellectual Property Piracy, International Law, the Internet, and Cultural Values," 14 St. Thomas L. Rev. 315 (2001).

Swanson, Stephanie. "Repatriating Cultural Property: The Dispute Between Yale and Peru Over the Treasures of Machu Picchu," 10 San Diego Int'l L.J. 469 (2009).

"Trust Decisions: Farm Crops That Are Fully Matured But Not Harvested at the time of Testator's Death Are considered Personalty and Pass Under the Will as Such. In Re Estate of Hughes, 506 N.W.2D 810 (IOWA CT. APP. 1993) ," 111 Banking L.J. 325 (1993).

Vitale, Katherine D. "The War on Antiquities: United States Law and Foreign Cultural Property," 84 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1835 (April 2009).

Wilf, Steven, "What Is Property's Fourth Estate? Cultural Property and the Fiduciary Ideal," 16 Conn. J. Int'l L. 177 (2001).

Wilkes, Nicole B., "Public Responsibilities of Private Owners of Cultural Property: Toward a National Art Preservation Statute," 24 Colum.-VLA J.L. & Arts 177 (2001).

Wilkie, Nancy C., "Public Opinion Regarding Cultural Property Policy," 19 Cardozo Arts & Ent. L.J. 97 (2001).

Zschau, Julius J. et al, "Using Land Trusts to Prevent Small Farmer Land Loss," 44 Real Prop. Tr. & Est. L.J. 521 (Fall 2009) .

add to Annotations:

Annotation, Creation and Perfection of Security Interests in Insurance Proceeds Under Article 9 of Uniform Commercial Code, 47 A.L.R.6th 347 .

Annotation, Court Rules and Rules of Professional Conduct Limiting Amount of Contingent Fees or Otherwise Imposing Conditions on Contingent Fee Contracts, 49 A.L.R.6th 505 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 14.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 14.syn Synopsis to Chapter 14: THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

Ind. Code Ann. § 30-1-2-33Introduction to the Chapter.

§ 14.02 Ownership as an Element of Property.

§ 14.02(a) The Meaning of Ownership.

§ 14.02(b) Ownership Entities.

§ 14.02(c) Limitations on Exercise of Ownership Rights.

§ 14.02(d) Variance in Ownership Rights According to Controlling Law.

§ 14.03 The Nature of Property.

§ 14.03(a) Property Defined.

§ 14.03(b) Classifications of Property.

§ 14.03(c) Differences Between Real Property and Personal Property.

§ 14.03(c)(1) In General.

§ 14.03(c)(2) Examples of Real Property and Personal Property.

§ 14.03(c)(3) Graves.

§ 14.03(c)(4) Wild Animals.

§ 14.03(c)(5) Chattels Real.

Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 26-3Real Property.

§ 14.04(a) Classifications of Real Property.

§ 14.04(b) Corporeal and Incorporeal Hereditaments.

§ 14.04(c) Possession of Realty.

§ 14.04(c)(1) In General.

§ 14.04(c)(2) Incidents of Possession.

§ 14.04(c)(3) Possessory Rights in Chattels.

§ 14.04(c)(4) Limitations on Rights Arising from Possession.

§ 14.04(c)(5) Possible Liabilities Arising from Possession of Land.

§ 14.04(d) Property Rights Associated with Future Interests.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 14.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 14.01 Introduction to the Chapter.

This chapter describes the American law that defines the nature, kinds and basic characteristics of property. Ownership as an essential element of property is described, property is comprehensively defined, real and personal property are distinguished, various kinds of real property are identified, possessory rights related to real property are explained.

+ This chapter is based in part on Chapter 1 of George W. Thompson, Commentaries on The Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes, ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing basic property definitions and characteristics.

179 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 14.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 14.02 Ownership as an Element of Property.

§ 14.02(a) The Meaning of Ownership.

One who is the "owner" of property possess the fullest extent of rights and privileges regarding that property as recognized by the owner's jurisdiction. It has long been in Anglo-American jurisdictions that no person can be an absolute owner of lands, but can hold only a type of ownership called an estate. n1 Courts recognize that an owner has title only to a "bundle of privileges." n2 The extent to which the "owner" may exercise these privileges is defined by the jurisdiction's prevailing political philosophy or theory at any given time. In an anarchical society no limitations are placed on the owner's use. Conversely, as a society progresses in the direction of a totalitarian state the controlling government withdraws from the owner more and more "privileges." In common-law jurisdictions, the rule of ownership is somewhere between those extremes, with broad rights of ownership limited by reason and by needs of the sovereign; an example of this blend is the typical rule that ownership of the space above the surface extends only so far as is necessary to the enjoyment of the use of the surface without interference. n3 The common-law sovereign normally reserves at least three sticks out of the bundle: the powers to tax, to police and to condemn. In addition, the United States Constitution has unfettered the federal government in other areas, such as war and commerce, which may enable the federal government to take away other ownership rights. n4

The word "own" is a term embracing several gradations of title dependent upon circumstances and commonly means to possess, to have or hold, as property. n5 It necessarily involves a right, either present or in the future, to exercise some degree of dominion over the property. n6 The common law of property generally gives free use of property to the property's owner. n7 Hence, a grant of property carries with it an implication that the grantee shall have all that is necessary to the enjoyment of the grant, so far as the grantor has power to give. n8 An owner's right to exclude others from the use of the land is an incident of complete ownership of the land. n9

The power or assertion of exclusive ownership is manifested by boundaries, fences and walls encircling land, and the dominion of the individual is permitted and defended by the state as a pure matter of convention and policy. Nevertheless, land is indestructible in character, limited in extent and incapable of increase, and cannot be regarded as a true subject of permanent individual appropriation. Regardless of how important it is that the tenure of land be secure, the paramount dominion of the state over every part of its territory is demonstrated by laws prohibiting the entailment of estates in land, abolishing primogeniture, and imposing succession, taxes, among other measures.

So the essence of ownership is legal control over a thing; it is the right by which a thing belongs to a person or entity individual, to the exclusion of all other persons and entities. The limits of this right are elastic and are subject to being narrowed or enlarged. Others may have rights in a thing which limit the control of the owner. These rights of another may be so extensive that there may remain to the owner only an ultimate right of reversion. When, for any reason, the rights of such others are lost, then the right of ownership is automatically restored in its full extent.

"Ownership" has been defined as "the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all others." n10 It does not always mean absolute ownership, n11 but it has the meaning when used alone, n12 without any qualifiying words. n13 As used in the Restatement of Property, the word "owner" means "the person who has one or more interests." n14 It has been defined to include one who has the use, control and occupation of the land with a claim of ownership, whether the interest be an absolute fee or a lesser estate. n15 When used without restriction the term includes both general and special owners. n16 Although a person holds only the equitable title to property, one may be considered an owner of the property. n17

Title to real estate is the means whereby the owner has the just possession of the property. n18 The constituent elements of "ownership" of property are the right to its possession, use and enjoyment and to sell or otherwise dispose of it according to the will of the owner. n19 The owner is entitled to the undisturbed occupation and enjoyment of the property. n20 Title to real estate must at all times be vested in someone. n21 The equitable ownership of realty is regarded by equity as the real ownership. n22 Land must always have an owner, and when the previous owner dies without alienation the law transfers the land for the decedent. n23 Perfect title requires a union of actual possession, right of possession and right of property. n24

The right to dispose of property is a badge of ownership. n25 Assessment of property and liability for the payment of taxes on the property is evidence of ownership. n26 The assessment of real estate by the taxing authorities as the property of a named person justifies a presumption of ownership, either in the person, or, in case of the person's death, in the person's heirs at law. n27 Also, the right to lease property is an incident of ownership. n28 Ownership of real estate is in fact a tenancy, whose continuance is contingent on legally recognized rights of tenure, transfer and succession in use and occupancy. n29 Ownership of the legal n30 or record title to land carries with it a presumption of possession, n31 but too great reliance must not be placed in a record title since the record does not always disclose rights that may be held by others in real property. n32 A record title may be defeated by proof of adverse possession for the required period of time. n33 Nevertheless, a record title to land is the highest evidence of ownership n34 and is not easily defeated. n35 Possession of land may give rise to a presumption of ownership. n36

The ownership of realty carries with it as an incident thereto the prima facie presumption of the ownership of both the natural products of the land, such as grass and trees, and the emblements or annual crops grown thereon, but such presumption is not conclusive and may be rebutted. n37

While proof of possession creates a presumption of ownership, such presumption is rebuttable and may be controverted. n38 In an action for injuries to real property, proof of possession by the plaintiff at the time the cause of action accrued is sufficient to show prima facie ownership. n39 It is also presumed that a party owning land will in some way assert the owner's rights. n40 The burden of establishing title is on the party making claim thereto. n41 Title to land cannot be acquired merely by placing doors or gates so that they open onto it, even though the owner gives consent thereto, since nothing more than a mere license is thereby granted. n42

The scope and import of the term "owner" are often controlled by the context and purpose of statutes relating to real property. When used in a statute the nature and purpose of the statute may indicate the meaning of the term. n43 Thus, a vendee in possession under a land contract that obligates the vendee to pay the purchase price is generally held to be the owner within the contemplation of certain statutes. n44 It has been held that for some purposes a tenant for years, or for a lesser period, is the owner of the demised property, n45 but for other purposes such tenant has been held not the owner. n46 It has been held that a mortgagee is, for the purposes of some statutes, the owner of the real estate covered by the mortgage, n47 while in construing other statutes a different view has been taken. n48

The term "owner," as used in the statutes, has no technical meaning. n49 "The term 'owner,' when employed in statutes relating to eminent domain to designate the persons who are to be made parties to the proceeding, refers, as is the rule in respect of those entitled to compensation, to all those who have any lawful interest in the property to be condemned." n50

Ownership of real property, once established, is not presumed to be lost. n51 Possession of real estate is prima facie evidence of ownership as against one who is not in possession but claims adversely. n52

The doctrine of de minimus non curat lex (the law is not concerned with trifles) has no application to controversies involving real estate. n53

A landowner is entitled to the control of the air space above the land, subject to the dominion of the sovereign, n54 and likewise owns the space beneath the surface. Conceivably, the earth being a sphere, the ownership of the air space and the subsurface are cone shaped with the former right truncated, the surface being the base. In the latter case, the center of the earth is the point of the cone.

§ 14.02(b) Ownership Entities.

Units of ownership. Throughout the development of the property law entities recognized as qualified to own property included the sovereign, the Celtic "tuath" or clan, the commons, the corporation and the individual. Corporate ownership entities in common law regimes could be the corporation sole, the bishop, the religious corporation and the public corporation. The private corporation is a later development and purely a creature of statute. Ownership of land at common law was, except in the case of the public corporation, affected by the mortmain statutes, n55 which were intended to prevent accumulation of property by lay or ecclesiastical corporations. There is much misunderstanding among the courts today as to whether private corporations were affected by mortmain or whether mortmain ever became part of the common law.

Except for the interests of certain Indian tribes recognized by Congress, n56 the tuath or clan ownership of realty is not recognized in the United States today, nor is the right of community holding except in a limited degree. n57

Ownership therefore may be in the individuals, in various forms of corporations and other organization entities, and in the sovereign. The sovereign may own in a proprietary sense or as trustee for the public interest.

The only exceptions to this are in the case of partnership under the Uniform Partnership Act, the "condominium" with its commons and the communitization of fugitive minerals.

Laches is applicable where the sovereign is operating in a proprietary not a governmental capacity. n58

The Celtic social unit seems to have been the clan, the Irish "Tuath." This was supplanted in England by the Roman sense of individual ownership which seems to have become increasingly manorial toward the close of the Roman rule. The Germanic invaders probably introduced the "comitatus" or tribal loyalty idea. n59 This expanded into the state under the later Anglo-Saxon and later the Danish rule. Land ownership during this period was partly family in the commune and partly individualistic. Under the Norman king and "le estate est moi," the state, as epitomized in the king, was the owner of all land. All individuals held of the king. Throughout the centuries following the Conquest the ownership of land passed more and more to the individual. As this movement reached its peak, however, a new trend, the consciousness of the needs of society as opposed to the individual, arose. The individualistic impression reached its height during the early Victorian period. It promptly began to erode through the development of the "nuisance" doctrine, eminent domain, zoning and land use laws, water control and control over consumption of profits. In other countries this trend moved to a total suppression of all property rights in real estate, even in the issues of realty. n60 How far this movement will progress among peoples with the background of the common law remains to be seen.

Property, with regard to the nature of its ownership and use, may be held either privately, by corporate or other entities, or by the public. The terms "private" and "corporate," when applied to property, are employed in contradistinction to "public." Private property is that which is one's own, something that belongs to or inheres exclusively in an individual person. n61 The term includes all kinds of private property, everything that can be held or owned by private persons. n62

"Private property," in its nature and purpose, is a monopoly. The very essence thereof is that the owner may do with the property as the owner sees fit, provided always that the owner does not interfere with the legal rights of others. n63 The term "private property," in a constitutional restriction that private property shall not be taken for a public use without due compensation, applies to such property as belongs absolutely to an individual, and of which the owner has the exclusive right of disposition; property of a fixed, specific, and tangible nature, capable of being had in possession and transmitted to another, such as houses, lands, and chattels. n64 The fact that private property is used exclusively for a public purpose does not convert it into public property or change its nature or title as private property. n65 The power to take private property for a public use applies, with certain limitations, to private property already devoted to one public use. n66 All property and property rights are held subject to the fair exercise of the police power of a municipality. n67

Ownership by the federal or state governments or their subsidiaries may be held either in a capacity of a public trust or in a proprietary sense. n68 The term "public property" embraces only such property as is owned by the state or some political division thereof, and title to which is vested directly in the state or one of its subordinate political divisions, or in some person holding exclusively for the benefit of the state of a subordinate public corporation. n69 Hence, property owned by a private person or corporation and from which such owner derives an income is not public property, although it be used for a public purpose. n70 Property used by a city for the benefit of all inhabitants thereof is public property. n71

On the edge of these classifications are the associations, so-called common- law corporations, as the joint stock company, and the real estate or Massachusetts business trust. Each of these requires special treatment.

Control by the sovereign of individual use of property through the police power is steadily developing. In the early phases of this expansion statutes were enacted limiting use, such as oil proration n72 and communitization, n73 soil conservation, n74 water pollution, and general land control, n75 as well as those imposing an affirmative duty, such as weed cutting, and sealing of abandoned wells. The Texas legislature has also upheld communitization of interests in the same oil field. n76

The sovereign, in the forms of the United States Government, the several states, counties, municipalities or similar political bodies is capable of owning and holding land either as a proprietor or in trust for the public. n77

§ 14.02(c) Limitations on Exercise of Ownership Rights.

Limitations on the exercise of the rights of "ownership." If the correct concept of land ownership in America was ever truly "allodial," then each "owner" could make use of the own land without regard to the needs or desires neighbors or of the scrutiny of the sovereign. Such an unlimited right is anarchic and impossible in an organized society. As the growing importance of the community expands, individual rights increasingly yield to the best interests of society. Therefore, increasing density of population, scientific development and diminution of natural resources all induce a sharing of individual property rights with the community. As changes in political thinking tend to increase the importance of the state over the individual, so are the limitations on the use of his property tightened.

At common law the rigidity of the property rules protected the individual from raids by others on the exercise of individual property rights. In America this protection is extended by the provisions of the state and federal constitutions. Federal encroachments must therefore be justified under one of the great powers, commerce or war, as the courts expand such powers. State encroachments depend on the "police power." It must be remembered, however, that even under American jurisprudence the taking of private property rights by the sovereign is not absolutely prohibited, and private property ownership has never been purely allodial.

Within the limits of the law, an owner of property may do with the property as the owner pleases, n78 including disposing of the property in any manner desired, in the absence of a showing of a lack of mental capacity, fraud or undue influence. n79 Two streams of legal thought, the sic utere doctrine (that land must not be used to harm others) and the public policy rule, have been steadily eroding the notion of nearly absolute property rights, both above and below the surface. To these conflicting philosophies there must be added a third, the extent that the interest of the sovereign people transcends private rights. So land use control by zoning and other land use regulation has become very important. n80 The main limitation upon a property owner's right to use the property as desired is the police power. n81 In this area one is required to find the dividing line between the common-law principle of nearly absolute ownership, including above and below the surface, and the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, so make use of your own that you do not injure others.

Each landowner has four basic rights as against neighbors: first, freedom from from interference with possession, as for example against trespass; second, freedom from injury to land by neighbors, including lateral and subjacent support and exercise of due care not to injure; third, the right that a nuisance shall not be committed on the land of a neighbor which will interfere with use and enjoyment; and fourth, that the land will not be subject to permanent physical damage by a condition on the neighbor's land. The sovereign has the power to prevent a landowner from using the land in a manner that injures the public. n82

So it must be borne in mind that all property within a state is held on the implied condition or obligation that the owner will use it so as not to interfere with the rights of others, n83 and this rule applies whether the particular property is used by the owner or is dedicated to the public. n84 The principle has been stated that "property in land must be considered, for many purposes, not as an absolute, unrestricted dominion, but as an aggregation of qualified privileges, the limits of which are prescribed by the equality of rights, and the correlation of rights and obligations necessary for the highest enjoyment of land by the entire community of proprietors." n85 So, an owner is entitled to be secured in the full beneficial use of the property and complete dominion over it so long as the use and dominion do not invade the corresponding legal rights of others. n86

The sovereign has the power to prevent a landowner from using the land in a manner which injures the public. n87 The owner may enjoy the property as desired, unless the use interferes with the neighbors' similar rights or infringes the rights of the public. n88 This right will not be curtailed unless an intent to curtail is clearly made to appear. n89 This principle, embodied in the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, enjoins that every one in the use of one's own property should avoid injury to one's neighbor as much as possible. n90 Inasmuch as the doctrine of reasonableness in the enjoyment of one's property has generally become the test in determining the question of liability for damages, it follows that an owner is liable only for injury resulting from unreasonable use, and this must be determined as a question of fact under all the attendant circumstances. n91 The right to devote one's property to any legitimate use is within the protection of the federal constitution. n92 However, while the owner of land has a right to make any reasonable use of the property, and when employing it for such use may on occasion rightfully injure another, it does not follow that by its use for a wholly wrongful purpose the owner may also rightfully injure another. n93

The cases are divided as to whether property used in compliance with zoning ordinances may constitute a nuisance per se. n94 The Supreme Court of the United States has determined that the basis of the Fourth Amendment is human rights, not protection of property. n95

Anything which annoys or disturbs one in the free use, possession or enjoyment of one's property or which renders its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable may be a "nuisance" and may be restrained. n96 The dust arising from an asphalt mixing plant might constitute a nuisance in one locality where it would not in another locality. The mere showing that neighboring property owners were "inconvenienced" by the dust is insufficient to grant an injunction. n97

A landowner has the right to use the land in a lawful manner, even though damage to others may result. But the landowner has a duty to abate a nuisance, even though arising from a lawful use. n98

Of course one who generates on one's own land a condition that spreads to another's land can so commit a trespass for which the originator is liable. n99

Underground vibrations, such as shock waves caused by blasting are actionable if injury results to other landowners. n100 One driving piles assumes responsibility for injury to neighboring buildings. n101 Opinions vary, however, as to whether such underground trespasses create an absolute liability or whether due care is the test. n102

In the absence of sufficient evidence to invoke the attractive nuisance doctrine, a landowner owes no different or greater duty to an infant trespasser than to an adult trespasser. n103 Where a city does not create the condition resulting in a nuisance on private realty, its failure to exercise its power by statute to abate the nuisance does not render it liable for injuries sustained thereon. The attractive nuisance doctrine is based on the negligence of the proprietors. n104

While some courts still hold that as respects children there must be something on the premises to lure them, in order for attractive nuisance liability to arise, n105 other courts find liability where the owner of the premises could have foreseen the possibility of harm. n106

As a general rule, the owner of real estate in fee simple has the right to use it for any lawful purpose. n107 His use of his property is limited only by the proper exercise of the police power. n108 Thus, property is also held subject to the police power of the state so to regulate its use in a proper case as to secure the safety, health, morals, good order and general welfare of the community. n109 The government may, in the legitimate exercise of the police power, enact laws requiring owners of property to use the same so as not unnecessarily to injure others. n110 The police power of the state is not without its limitations, however. An unreasonable invasion of private rights or impairment of the rights of the property guaranteed by the constitution, under the guise of a police regulation, will not be sustained. n111

Ordinances restricting the use of property must be uniform in their operation and not discriminatory as to property of the same class. n112 Property is also subject to the power of eminent domain, n113 and the owner's title thereto may be wholly extinguished by condemnation proceedings. n114 Whether a building was, under statute, subject to destruction as a firetrap, is a justiciable question for a court, and if it is so established, the building may be condemned without compensation. n115

Control by the sovereign, through use of the police power, of individual use of property is steadily developing. n116 Statutes have been enacted limiting use, such as oil proration n117 and communitization, n118 soil conservation, n119 stream pollution, water conservation n120 and general land control, n121 as well as those imposing an affirmative duty, such as weed cutting, and sealing of abandoned wells. State legislatures have upheld communitization of interests in the same oil field. n122 A proration statute was upheld n123 as a proper limitation on use and so were statutes requiring sealing of abandoned wells. n124

Government policy does not force courts to give extraterritorial effect to confiscation decrees of foreign governments. n125 Statutes sometimes require the establishment of boundary fences and impose a liability for injury to adjoining landowners where this requirement is not met. n126 It is within the power of Congress to consider aesthetic values as well as public health in enacting redevelopment legislation for the District of Columbia regardless of the Fifth Amendment. n127 A property owner who has heavily invested in land cannot lose the interest in land through the enforcement of a subsequent zoning ordinance based upon an arbitrary and unreasonable use of police power. n128

§ 14.02(d) Variance in Ownership Rights According to Controlling Law.

Many elements of property law vary between the jurisdictions. It is a basic principle of law that the law of the jurisdiction controls as to the real property located in that jurisdiction, while the law of the owner's domicile applies to personal property. Title to and the disposition of real property, whether by deed, a will or otherwise, is governed exclusively by the law of the place where the property is situated. n129 It follows that all questions relating to the transfer of title to real estate are governed by the law of the place where the land is situated. n130 Trusts of land are governed by the of the jurisdiction where the trust land is located. n131

Every state has authority to prescribe rules for the disposition and arrangement of all property within its borders, and may impress on that property any character which it may see fit. Hence it follows that the law of the place where the property is situated must be looked to in determining its character as real or personal. n132 This rule conforms to the rule laid down in the Restatement (First) of Property. n133 The incidents of ownership of immovable property are dependent on the law of the situs. n134 The rules of descent and the right to devise property, as well as the method of conveying and the manner of creating estates, are purely statutory. n135

The courts of one state cannot create an interest in real estate situated in another state, nor can they adjudicate the title or control the devolution of real estate situated in a foreign state. n136 The nature of an interest in land is controlled by the law of the situs. n137

Since the law of the jurisdiction where the property is located will change on the removal of the property from one state to another, it follows that the character of the same property, whether real or personal, may vary according to the place where it is situated. n138 When certain property is classified by the law of the jursidiction where the property is located, that classification is not subject to question in another jurisdiction. n139 This principle that the law of the jurisdiction where the property is located governs is subject to an exception as to obligations which, although related to real property, do not directly affect the title to or interest in the property itself. n140

Personal property held in cotenancy retains the characteristics imposed by the law where it was originally acquired, even if the parties move to a different jurisdiction having other characteristics. n141 The interest of one spouse in movables acquired by the other during the marriage are determined by the law of the domicil of the parties when the movables are acquired. n142

It is generally held that the situs of personal property follows the domicil of the person of the owner. n143 This is not an inflexible rule of law, but a legal rule adopted for convenience and to prevent injustice. n144 Whether property is a part of the real estate is to be determined by the law of the state in which the real estate is situated. n145

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. "No man is in law the absolute owner of lands. He can only hold an estate in them." J oshua Williams, Principles of The Law of Real Property, 17 (1926).

(n2)Footnote 2. Pennsylvania R. Co. v, Kearns, 48 N.E.2d 1012 (Ohio App. 1943).

(n3)Footnote 3. Dlugos v. United Air Lines, 53 Pa. D.&C. 402 (1944). See infra Chapter 51, Private Property Right in Airspace. Michael A. Heller, The Boundaries of Private Property. 108 Yale L, J. 1163 (1999).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Morton J. Horwitz, The Transformation in the Conception of Property in American Law, 1780-1860. 40 U. Chi. L. Rev. 248 (1973); Donald W. Large, This Land is Whose Land? Changing Concepts of Land As Property, 1973 WIS. L. Rev. 1039. See infra Chapter 72, Sources of Government Police Power; Chapter 81, Regulatory Takings.

(n5)Footnote 5. Bird v, Wilmington Soc. of Fine Arts, 43 A.2d 476 (Del. 1945).

At common law the right to receive income from land was ownership. United States v, Dresser Industries, Inc., 324 F.2d 56 (5th Cir. 1963).

(n6)Footnote 6. Geenty v. Phoenix Mut, Life Ins. Co., 14 A.2d 720 (Conn. 1940).

(n7)Footnote 7. Zadworny v. Chicago, 44 N.E.2d 426 (Ill. 1942); State v. Malone, 168 S.W.2d 292 (Tex. App. 1943).

(n8)Footnote 8. Commonwealth v. Richardson, 48 N.E.2d 678 (Mass. 1943).

(n9)Footnote 9. Phillips v. Washington Legal Foundation, 524 U.S. 156 (1998) (property consists of a group of rights, which the so-called owner exercises in exercising dominion over the physical thing, such as right to possess, use, and dispose of it); East Rochester v. Rochester Gas & Elec. Corp.. 46 N.E.2d 334 (N.Y. 1943).

(n10)Footnote 10. Mason v. Rosewell, 438 N.E.2d 653, 656 (Ill. App. 1982) (contract purchaser or assignee, who has control or occupation of land, or rights to enjoy enefits, is an owner; the word "owner" is broad and flexile, applying not only to legal title holders, but also to others having control or enjoyment of property); Royal Ins. Co. v. Drury, 132 A. 635 (Md. 1926); East Rochester v. Rochester Gas & Elec. Corp., 46 N.E.2d 334 (N.Y. 1943). See Automobile Underwriters v. Tite, 85 N.E.2d 365 (Ind. App. 1949); Ziegler v. Sutphin, 62 A.2d 750 (N.J. Supp. 1948).

(n11)Footnote 11. State v. McKinnon, 133 A.2d 885 (Me. 1957) (a fee owner was held guilty of violating state game laws in hunting on his own land which had been set aside as a state game preserve); Edwards & McCullock Lumber Co. v. Mosher, 60 N.W. 264 (Wis. 1894). See also Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222 (1884). Thomas A. Merrill, Property and the Right to Exclude. 77 Neb. L. Rev. 730 (1998).

(n12)Footnote 12. McFeters v. Pierson, 24 P. 1076 (Colo. 1890).

(n13)Footnote 13. Warren v. Lower Salt Creek Drainage Dist., 147 N.E. 248 (Ill. 1925).

(n14)Footnote 14. Restatement of Property § 10.

(n15)Footnote 15. Marcus v. Board of Street Comm'rs, 147 N.E. 866 (Mass. 1925); Judd v. Landin, 1 N.W.2d 861 (Minn. 1942); Graf v. State, 225 N.W, 466 (Neb. 1929): Tobin v. Gartiez, 191 P. 1063 (Nev. 1920); Schram v. Manary, 260 P. 214, 262 P.263 (Or. 1927); United States Nat'l Bank v. Lake Superior Terminal & Transfer Ry. Co., 174 N.W. 923 (Wis. 1919). When applied to real estate, without any qualifying words, the term "owner," in common as well as legal parlance, has been said to mean owner in fee simple. Warren v. Lower Salt Creek Drainage Dist., 147 N.E. 248 (Ill. 1925). When the term "property owner" is used without restriction, it includes both general and special owners. People ex rel. Hart v. Lombard, 149 N.E. 584 (Ill. 1925).

(n16)Footnote 16. People ex rel. Hart v. Lombard, 149 N.E. 584 (Ill. 1925); Sheridan v. Bean, 49 Mass. 284 (1844); Hartford v. Brady, 114 Mass. 466 (1874).

One's ownership of real property is sufficiently alleged by an averment that one is "seised and possessed" thereof. Gilb v. O'Neill, 142 S. 397 (Ala. 1932).

(n17)Footnote 17. Reinhold v. Fee Trunk Sewer, Inc., 664 S.W.2d 599, 603 (Mo. App. 1984) (equitable title is the right in a party to whom such title belongs to have legal title transformed upon performance of specified condition);

Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10 (1860); State ex rel. St. Louis v. Baumann. 153 S.W.2d 31 (Mo. 1941); Graf v. State, 225 N.W. 466 (Neb. 1929); Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 12 A. 668 (Pa. 1888).

(n18)Footnote 18. K.C. 1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg., 33 F. Supp. 2d 820, 833 (W.D. Mo 1998) (under Missouri law, equitable title passes to the prospective purchaser of real property once the right to redeem title is vested in the prospective purchaser); See also IMM Acceptance Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Evaston. 499 N.E.2d 192 (Ill. App. 1986) (title to property does not necessarily involve ownership of property; "title" refers only to legal relationship to land, while "ownership" is comparale to control; key elements of ownership are control and the right to enjoy enefits of property); Heiferman v. Scholder, 119 N.Y.S. 520 (1909).

See Peter M. Folger, Earthquake: A Fault in the Law of Real Property, 6 U. San Francisco L. Rev. 386 (1972); Morton J. Horwitz, The Transformation in the Conception of Property in American Law, 1780-1860, 40 U. CHI. L. Rev. 248 (1973).

(n19)Footnote 19. United States v. D.K.G. Appaloosas, Inc., 630 F. Supp. 1540, 1560 (E.D. Tex. 1986) (right to sell property is one of several indicia of ownership); Deoer v. Oakrook Home Ass'n, 359 N.W.2d 768, 771 (Ne. 1984) (purchasers acquired title to property when they entered into a contract to purchase land, the legal title remaining in the vendor only as a security for payment); In re Eckert's Estate, 128 P.2d 656 (Wash. 1942).

(n20)Footnote 20. Energy Oils, Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 626 F.2d 731 (9th Cir. 1980) (ownership is a collection of rights to use and enjoy property, including the right to sell and transmit); Cuneo v. Chicago, 41 N.E.2d 473 (Ill. 1942).

(n21)Footnote 21. Hardin v. Sherley, 166 S.W.2d 425 (Ky. 1942); Comelison v. Yelton, 177 S.W.2d 879 (Ky. 1944).

(n22)Footnote 22. Illinois Nat'l Bank v. Gwinn. 61 N.E.2d 249 (Ill. 1945).

(n23)Footnote 23. Scott v. Powell, 182 F.2d 75 (D.C. Cir. 1950); Hallas v. Evans, 207 P.2d 985 (Ariz. 1949). modified 208 P.2d 1153 (Ariz. 1949).

(n24)Footnote 24. Evans v. Francis, 101 N.Y.S.2d 716 (1951).

(n25)Footnote 25. Mullin v. Trolinger, 179 S.W.2d 484 (Mo. App. 1944); White v. While, 150 S.E. 531, (W. Va. 1929).

(n26)Footnote 26. Slagle v. Callaway. 64 S.W.2d 923 (Mo. 1933). But see Wheaton College v. Department of Revenue, 508 N.E.2d 1136 (Ill. App. 1987) (apartment building leased by college and used for student housing was not exempt from property taxation; even though the lease gave college several incidents of ownership, including the rights to remove existing structures and sublease the property, the college was not "owner" of the building within a meaning of tax exemption statute); Coles- Cumberland Professional Development Corp. v. Department of Revenue of State of Ill., 672 N.E.2d 391. 394 (Ill. App.1996) (ownership of property is separate from title in determining whether property does not qualify for tax exemption ecause intent of owner is to use property for profit).

(n27)Footnote 27. State ex rel. Mitchell v. McDonald, 145 So. 508 (Miss. 1933); Wild v. Cahill, 113 A. 257 (N.J. 1921). See infra Chapter 88, Testamentary Transfers of Real Property; Chapter 89. Intestate Succession.

(n28)Footnote 28. Norwest Bank Arizona v. Superior Court In and For County of Maricopa, 963 P.2d 319, 323 (Ariz. 1998) (right to rent under a lease of real property is an incorporeal hereditament that is an incident to an estate in land); Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Carter, 2 So. 2d 680 (La. App, 1941); Assessors of West Springfield v. Eastern States Exposition. 93 N.E.2d 462 (Mass. 1950); Attorney General v. Pere Marquette Ry. Co., 248 N.W. 860 (Mich. 1933). See infra Chapter 39, Leasehold Estates; Chapter 40, Rights and Duties of Landlords and Tenants.

(n29)Footnote 29. Chicago Patrolmen's Ass'n v. Department of Revenue, 664 N.E.2d 52, 57 (Ill. 1996) (legal title alone is not a decisive factor; rather, concern is with realities of ownership and, under the test, key elements are control or right to enjoy benefits of property); In re O'Connor's Estate. 252 N.W. 826 (Neb. 1934).

(n30)Footnote 30. Liberty Oil Co. v. Condon Nat'l Bank, 291 F. 293 (8th Cir. 1923); Moyle v. Campbell, 119 S.E. 186 (S.C. 1923).

(n31)Footnote 31. City of Milwaukee v. Greenberg, 471 N.W.2d 33, 36 (Wis. 1991) (land contract vendor is not a "property owner" for purposes of imposing liability for payment of costs incurred by city in razing building on property; under equitable conversion, "ownership" under a land contract does not necessarily follow retention of bare title by a land contract vendor--the vendee may become the equitable owner of the property even though the vendor retains legal title); Houghton County v. Massie, 184 N.W. 446 (Mich. 1921). Where land is covered by two patents held by different persons and not in actual possession of any one of those persons, constructive possession is in the holder of the title under the senior patent. Elliott v. Hensley, 222 S.W. 507 (Ky. 1920). This principle applies to wild and unenclosed lands. Constant v. Almus, 281 S.W. 26 (Mo. 1926).

(n32)Footnote 32. Hemme v. Stein, 218 P. 853 (Okla. 1923).

(n33)Footnote 33. Rush Creek Land and Live Stock Co. v. Chain, 586 N.W.2d 284, 290 (Neb. 1998) (title cannot be acquired through adverse possession without simultaneous and continuous existence of each element of adverse possession for the required period); Stump v. Whico, 715 A.2d 1006 (N.J. Super. 1998) (periodic or sporadic acts of ownership are not sufficient to constitute adverse possession); Rapp v. Harrold, 154 N.E. 679 (Ind. 1926). See infra Chapter 87, Adverse Possession.

(n34)Footnote 34. Id. See infra Chapter 91, Title and Marketable Title.

(n35)Footnote 35. McCarty v. Sheets, 423 N.E.2d 297, 300 (Ind. 1981) (recorded title is the highest evidence of ownership, and is not easily defeated; while recorded title may be defeated by adverse possession, mere possession is the lowest evidence of ownership). See also Estate of Mark v. H.H. Smith Co.. 547 N.E.2d 796, 799 (Ind. 1989) and Ritz v. Indiana and Ohio R.R., Inc., 632 N.E.2d 769, 772 (Ind. 1994); Philbin v. Carr, 129 N.E. 19 (Ind. App. 1920).

(n36)Footnote 36. Murphy v. Suir, 16 F.2d 269 (5th Cir. 1926); Kurrle v. Helvering, 126 F.2d 723 (8th Cir. 1942); Brewer v. Avinger, 94 So. 590 (Ala. 1922); Corona Coal Co. v. Thomas, 101 So. 673 (Ala. 1924); Schuman v. Venard, 136 P.2d 289 (Colo. 1943); Hicks v. Hicks, 18 S.E.2d 763 (Ga. 1942); Bush v. Stumpe, 222 S.W. 1006 (Mo. 1920). Foley v. Brown, 204 P. 267 (Okla. 1922); Wilson v. Douglass, 220 P. 887 (Okla. 1923); Downing v. Thornton, 220 P. 592 (Okla. 1923); Butler v. Borroum, 218 S.W. 1115 (Tex. App. 1919); East Canyon Land & Stock Co. v. Davis & Weber Counties Canal Co., 238 P. 280 (Utah 1925); Smith v. Bailey, 127 S.E. 89 (Va. 1925).

Possession alone, with claim of ownership of the land, has been termed a title of a low degree. Abel v. Love, 143 N.E. 515 (Ind. App. 1924). One in possession of land for nine years, making a good faith claim of ownership under a deed signed by certain heirs, is prima facie the owner of the land as against every person other than the true owner, although all the heirs did not sign the deed. Hunter v. Weil, 222 S.W. 472 (Mo. 1920). The rents and profits of land are incident to its possession, and belong to the person rightfully in possession personally or by tenants. Grafeman Dairy Co. v. Mercantile Club, 241 S.W. 923 (Mo. 1922). Possession by a devisee is prima facie evidence of ownership of the fee. Schick v. Wolf, 202 N.Y.S. 601 (1924). One in peaceable possession of real estate has good title as against all the world for every purpose until superior title is shown, and such possession is prima facie evidence of title against a mere intruder. Chism v. Majors, 217 P. 465 (Okla. 1923).

(n37)Footnote 37. Leigh v. Lynch, 493 N.E.2d 1040, 1044 (Ill. 1986) (owner of land has a right to undistured occupation and enjoyment of the property, and any interpretation of doctrine of emblements must take this right into consideration); Merchants State Bank v. Sawyer Farmers' Co-op. Ass'n, 182 N.W. 263 (N.D. 1921).

(n38)Footnote 38. Thorne v. McKinley Bros., 56 P.2d 204 (Cal. 1936); Ward v. Smith, 25 S.E.2d 463 (N.C. 1943).

(n39)Footnote 39. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Wilkes, 165 So. 764 (Ala. 1936) (overruled by Henderson v. Wade Sand and Gravel Co., 388 So. 2d 900 (Ala. 1980) on somewhat different grounds).

(n40)Footnote 40. Massie v. Hutcheson, 296 S.W. 939 (Tex. App. 1927).

(n41)Footnote 41. Loeffler v. King, 228 S.W.2d 201 (Tex. App. 1950), rev'd 236 S.W.2d 772 (Tex. 1951) (but deeds to be construed against grantor); English-Ott Lumber Co. v. Waddle, 135 S.E. 886 (Va. 1926).

(n42)Footnote 42. Wally v. Wally, 133 A. 627 (Pa. 1926). See infra Chapter 64, Licenses.

(n43)Footnote 43. Warren v. Lower Salt Creek Drainage Dist., 147 N.E. 248 (Ill. 1925); Marcus v. Board of Street Comm'rs, 147 N.E. 866 (Mass. 1925); Animal Rescue League v. Bourne's Assessors, 37 N.E.2d 1019 (Mass. 1941); Schram v. Manary, 262 P. 263 (Or. 1927); United States Nat'l Bank v. Lake Superior Terminal & Transfer R. Co., 174 N.W. 923 (Wis. 1919).

Where the owner of certificates of purchase had defaulted and the state land office had canceled the certificates, due process required that the owner of a mineral interest be given notice of the cancellation, and, therefore, the court construed the statute requiring notice of cancellation to the "record owner" to include the owner of a mineral interest recorded with the city clerk. Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Carter Oil Co., 218 F.2d 1 (10th Cir. 1954).

(n44)Footnote 44. Sims v. Taylor. 135 So. 580 (Ala. 1931); Knapp v. Baldwin, 238 N.W. 542 (Iowa 1931); White Chapel Memorial Ass'n v. Willson. 244 N.W. 460 (Mich. 1932); Freidenbloom v. Pecos Valley Lumber Co., 290 P. 797 (N.M. 1930); Kerfoot v. Salyer, 293 P. 1033 (Okla. 1930); Randolph v. Christensen. 265 P. 797 (Or. 1928); Biddle Concrete Co. v. McOlvin. 111 S.E. 843 (W. Va. 1922); Ritchie v. Green Bay, 254 N.W. 113 (Wis. 1934). See infra Chapter 99. Real Estate Contracts.

(n45)Footnote 45. Fouts v. Mason, 592 N.W. 2d 33, 38 (1999) (a landlord who retains control or jointly controls leased premises is liable to one who has been injured after being invited by the tenant); Hacken v. Isenberg, 124 N.E. 306 (Ill. 1919); Sims v. Fletcher Sav. & Trust Co., 142 N.E. 121 (Ind. 1922); Miller v. Bankers Mtg. Co., 287 P. 618 (Kan. 1930); E. Corey & Co. v. H.P. Cummings Constr. Co., 105 A. 405 (Me. 1919); Rogers Foundry Co. v. Squires, 297 S.W. 470 (Mo. App. 1927); Tobin v. Gartiez, 191 P. 1063 (Nev. 1920); In re Water Front, 220 N.Y.S. 23 (1927); Ft. Worth & D.S.P. Ry. Co. v. Judd, 4 S.W.2d 1032 (Tex. App. 1928).

(n46)Footnote 46. Kadera v. Superior Court in and for County of Maricopa, 931 P.2d 1067, 1073 (Ariz. 1996) (shareholders in cooperative corporation had interest in real property, rather than a tenant's interest, even though legal title was in the corporation--since shareholders had advantages of home ownership, it was not necessary for the title to pass); Goldwyn Distributing Corp. v. Carroll, 276 F. 63 (App. Div. 1921); People ex rel. Swanson v. Heitler, 257 Ill. App. 141 (1930); Silkman v. Schwartz, 193 N.Y.S. 793 (1922).

(n47)Footnote 47. Burrill Nat'l Bank v. Edminister, Ill A. 423 (Me. 1920); Lindholm v. Hamilton, 198 N.W. 289 (Minn. 1924).

(n48)Footnote 48. Huebner v. Lashley, 214 N.W. 107 (Mich. 1927); First Nat'l Bank v. Mohall State Bank, 206 N.W. 411 (N.D. 1925); Peters v. Bossman, 199 N.W. 65 (Wis. 1924).

(n49)Footnote 49. Pinkerton v. Pritchard, 223 P.2d 933 (Ariz. 1950).

(n50)Footnote 50. Allendorf v. Campbell, 29 N.E.2d 435 (Ohio App. 1940).

(n51)Footnote 51. First Church of Christ. Scientist v. Revell, 2 N.W.2d 674 (S.D. 1942).

(n52)Footnote 52. Michelsen v. Leskowicz, 55 N.Y.S.2d 831 (1945); Grays v. Harrison, 179 S.W.2d 1020 (Tex. App. 1944).

(n53)Footnote 53. Beaty v. Gordon, 364 S.W. 2d 311 (Ark. 1963). See State v. Anderson, 19 N.W.2d 70 (Minn. 1945).

(n54)Footnote 54. Miami v. Claughton Hotels, Inc., 157 So. 2d 196 (Fla. 1963). See infra Chapter 51. Private Property Rights in Airspace.

(n55)Footnote 55. 23 Henry 8, ch. 10; 17 Car, 2, ch. 3. See infra Chapter 1, Property Concepts Among Primitive Cultures; Chapter 2, Landholding in Ancient Britain; Chapter 3, Property Rights in Anglo-Saxon England; Chapter 4, The Growth of the English Common Law of Real Property; Chapter 5, English Property Law After the Middle Ages; Chapter 6, Development of Property Law In England's American Colonies; Chapter 7, Development of American Property Law After Independence.

(n56)Footnote 56. Indian treaty fishing rights are subject to reasonable state regulation. Department of Game v. Puyallup Tribe Inc., 422 P.2d 754 (Wash. 1967). See Yasu Kawashima, Legal Origins of the Indian Reservation in Colonial Massachusetts, 13 Am. J. Legal Hist. 42 (1969). See infra Chapter 57, Indian Land.

(n57)Footnote 57. See Toxey H. Sewell, The Government as a Proprietor of Land, 35 Tenn. L. Rev. 287 (1968).

(n58)Footnote 58. Pendleton v. Holman, 164 P.2d 434 (Or. 1945).

(n59)Footnote 59. It has long been held that the ancient German village held land in a socialistic or community system as a "mark," I William Stubbs, The Constitutional History of England in Its Origin and Development 149 (1903).

(n60)Footnote 60. New Legislation: Agrarian Reform in Colombia, 16 Am. J. COMP. L. 438 (1968); M.B. Hooker, The Interaction of Legislation and Customary Law in a Malay State, 16 AM. J. Comp. L. 415(1968).

(n61)Footnote 61. Scranton v. Wheeler. 179 U.S. 141 (1900). See Sewell, The Government as a Proprietor of Land, 35 Tenn. L. Rev. 287.

(n62)Footnote 62. British-American Oil Producing Co. v. McClain, 126 P.2d 530 (1942); Lycoming Gas & Water Co. v. Moyer, 99 Pa. 615 (1882).

(n63)Footnote 63. Champie v. Castle Hot Springs Co., 233 P. 1107 (1925). See Helvering v. Elias, 122 F.2d 171 (2d Cir. 1941).

(n64)Footnote 64. Homochitto River Comm'rs v. Withers, 29 Miss, 21 (1855).

(n65)Footnote 65. Gate City Guard v. Atlanta, 39 S.E. 394 (Ga. 1901).

(n66)Footnote 66. Norton v. Lowden, 84 F.2d 663 (10th Cir. 1936). See infra Chapter 74, An Overview of Land Use Regulations; Chapter 81, Regulatory Takings.

(n67)Footnote 67. Mitchell v. Roswell, Ill P.2d 41. (N.M. 1941). See infra Chapter 72, Sources of Government Police Power.

(n68)Footnote 68. See Toxey H. Sewell, The Government as a Proprietor of Land, 35 TENN, L. Rev. 287. See infra Chapter 55, Public Lands.

(n69)Footnote 69. Gate City Guard v. Atlanta, 39 S.E. 394 (Ga. 1901).

(n70)Footnote 70. State v. Cooley, 64 N.W. 379 (Minn. 1895). Land held by an irrigation district held private property. Beaumont v. Beaumont Irr. Dist.. 46 Cal. Rptr. 465 (1965).

(n71)Footnote 71. Owensboro v. Commonwealth, 49 S.W. 320 (Ky. 1899).

(n72)Footnote 72. Hunter v. Justice's Court, 223 P.2d 465 (Cal. 1950).

(n73)Footnote 73. Palmer Oil Corp. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 231 P.2d 997 (Okla. 1951).

(n74)Footnote 74. See Karl F. Milde, *Legal Principles and Policies of Soil Conservation, 20 Fordham L. Rev. 45(1951)*166.

(n75)Footnote 75. See Land Value and Land Planning; British Legislation and American Prospects, 60 Yale L.J. 112(1951).

(n76)Footnote 76. Joseph C. Hutcheson, Jr., The Natural Law and the Right to Property, 26 Notre Dame Law. 640(1951).

(n77)Footnote 77. Where land was conveyed to a municipality upon consideration that it be used for a public purpose and there was no forfeiture clause, the municipality could sell land for private purpose if not needed for any public purpose. Achor v. Village of Blanchester, 269 N.E.2d 439 (Ohio 1970).

(n78)Footnote 78. Nollan v. California Coastal Comm'n, 483 U.S. 825, 831 (1987) (the government's conditioning of the property owner's rebuilding permit on the owner's granting an easement can be allowed for land use regulation if condition substantially furthers government purposes that justify or deny permit); Ruckelhaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1000 (1984) (property interests are created and their dimensions are defined by existing rules or understandings that stem from an independent source such as state law); Moxley v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 165 P.2d 15 (Cal. 1945). As to the influence of social forces on property law, see E.F. Roberts, The Demise of Property Law, 57 Cornell L. Rev. I (1971).

(n79)Footnote 79. Smith v. Smith, 191 S.W.2d 956 (Ark. 1946); Myers v. Myers, 44 A.2d 455 (Md. 1945).

(n80)Footnote 80. Manchester v. Phillips, 180 N.E.2d 333 (1962) (zoning embraces not merely health and safety but also conserves value of property, encourages more appropriate use of land and preserves and increases amenities). See Preservation of Open Spaces Through Scenic Easements and Greenbelt Zoning, 12 STAN, L. REV. 638 (1960); William W. West, Validity of Zoning Undeveloped Areas, 29 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 202 (1957); Henry W. Hardy, Zoning: Non- Conforming Uses, Accessory Uses and Variances, 46 Mass. L. Q. 4 (1961); Roger A. Cunningham, Control of Land Use in New Jersey Under the 1953 Planning Statutes. 15 Rutgers L. Rev. 1 (1960); G. Graham Waite, Nonresident Urban Renewal in New York, 10 BUFFALO L. Rev. 265 (1961); Robert M. Anderson, Architectural Controls, 12 Syracuse L. Rev. 26 (1960); Robert L. Wood, Subdivision Control Requirement for Park Land, 12 Syracuse L. Rev. 224 (1961); James B. Sales, Applicability of Zoning Ordinances to Governmental Land Use, 39 Texas L. Rev. 316 (1961); Arval Morris, Toward Effective Municipal Zoning, 35 Wash. L. Rev, 534 (1960); E.F. Roberts, The Demise of Property Law, 57 Cornell L. REV. 1; Cook, The Battle Against Blight, 43 MARQ. L. Rev. 444 (1960). The "Sic utere tuo" rule is applicable if properties are so situated as to be interdependent and correlative. Lee v. Florida Public Utilities Co., 145 So. 2d 299 (Fla. 1962). See infra Chapter 74, An Overview of Land Use Regulations.

(n81)Footnote 81. Pioneer Trust & Savings Bank v. McHenry County, 241 N.E.2d 454 (Ill. 1967).

(n82)Footnote 82. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 346 U.S. 346 (1953). See infra Chapter 67. The Property Law Aspects of Private Nuisance.

(n83)Footnote 83. Grentner v. LeJeune Auto Theater, Inc., 85 So. 2d 238 (Fla. 1956) (enjoining unreasonable use of light which resulted in a breach of a covenant not to make use of the property which would be objectionable to adjacent property); Schiller Piano Co. v. Illinois Northern Utilities Co., 123 N.E. 631 (Ill. 1919): Fitzpatrick v. Penfield, 109 A. 653 (Pa. 1920) (wall left standing after fire subsequently collapsed and caused personal injury); In re Perrin's Appeal, 156 A. 305 (Pa. 1931) (operation of property may constitute a nuisance, even though the property is in a proper zone for the operation); Kornoff v. Kingsburg Cotton Oil Co., 288 P.2d 507 (Cal. 1955) (allowing a makeshift diving board to project over an abandoned sand pit filled with water constituted an attractive nuisance); Smith v. Evans, 284 P.2d 1065 (Kan. 1955) (Louisiana statute imposes a servitude on adjoining landowners not to use their lands so as to damage a neighbor's land or deprive neighbors of the liberty of enjoying their estates); Fontenot v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 80 So. 2d 845 (La. 1955) (piles of lumber did not constitute an attractive nuisance and the child was not an express or implied invitee to whom a higher standard of duty was owed than to a mere trespasser or licensee); Morris v. Lewis Mfg. Co. (Mich. 1951) (dance halls are not nuisances per se) People v. Harding, 72 N.W.2d 33 (Mich. 1955); Gordon v. State. 289 P.2d 396 (Okla. 1955) (the right to use property as the owner chooses, so long as no one is harmed thereby, is a natural right to which the police power of the state is subordinate); Fitzhugh v. Jackson, 97 So. 190 (Miss. 1923) (attracting of geese to one's land causing fowl to destroy crops of adjoining property owner was held to constitute a nuisance, restraining order granted); Andrews v. Andrews, 88 S.E.2d 88 (N.C. 1955) (an automobile tourist camp is not a nuisance as a matter of law but must be shown to be a nuisance in fact); Menger v. Pass, 80 A.2d 702 (Pa. 1951) (where a landowner owns an unfenced, unguarded lot in a heavily populated area, near a city highway, with an excavation and sandbank thereon, and children were killed in a sudden landslide, the court held that liability rested upon sound legal principles with respect to the duties of a landowner, under facts alleged, toward a child of tender years who was a trespasser and not an express invitee or the equivalent); Plante v. Lorraine Mfg. Co., 82 A.2d 893 (R.I, 1951) (creation and operation of a used car lot in exclusively residential area upheld as a nuisance justifying issuance of permanent injunction decree); Martin v. Williams, 93 S.E.2d 835. See A General Survey of the Rights and Duties of Adjoining Landowners in New England, 39 B.U. L. REV. 228; Landowner's Liability to Infant Trespassers: Status of the Law in New York, 25 Fordham L. Rev. 290; The Attractive Nuisance Doctrine, 32 Ind. L. J. 75; Dix W. Noel, The Attractive Nuisance Doctrine in Tennessee, 21 TENN. L. Rev. 658.

(n84)Footnote 84. Raleigh Court Corp. v. Faucett, 124 S.E. 433 (Va. 1924) (the Supreme Court of the United States has held that it is unconstitutional for a legislature to change the boundaries of a town so as to disenfranchise African-American residents); Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 81 S. Ct. 125 (1960).

(n85)Footnote 85. Thompson v. Androscoggin River Imp. Co.. 54 N.H. 545 (1874): St. Regis Paper Co. v. New Hampshire Water Resources Board, 26 A.2d 832 (N.H. 1942). See Hibbard v. Halliday, 158 P. 1158 (Okla. 1916) (slum clearance is a sufficient public purpose to permit condemnation of private property for resale to other private owners); Redevelopment Agency v. Hayes, 266 P.2d 105 (Cal. 1954); Gohld Realty Co. v. Hartford, 104 A.2d 365 (Conn. 1954); Grubstein v. Urban Renewal Agency, Fla. 115 So. 2d 745 (Fla. 1959) (majority rule); Crommet v. Portland, 150 Me. 217(1954).

(n86)Footnote 86. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113 (1876); Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501 (1878); Romano v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 62 So. 677 (Ala. 1913); Moore v. Berlin Mills Co., 67 A. 578 (N.H. 1907); Sullivan v. Dunham, 55 N.E. 923 (N.Y. 1900); State v. Yopp, 2 S.E. 458 (N.C. 1887); Canada v. Shawnee, 64 P.2d 694 (Okla. 1936); Jowett v. Pennsylvania Power Co., 118 A.2d 452 (Pa. 1955) (holder of an easement for power lines has no duty to warn owner of servient tenement of the danger); Railroad Commission v. Rowan Oil Co., 259 S.W.2d 173 (Tex. 1952) (but the courts display a tendency to prevent absolute control by the state of the interests of adjoining landowners for the protection of their neighbors). A property owner's association formed as a result of language in the plot of a subdivision had the right to enforce restrictive covenants contained in the subdivision. Merrionette Manor Homes Imp. Ass'n v. Heda, 136 N.E.2d 556 (Ill, App. 1956); Neponsit Property Owners Ass'n v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 15 N.E.2d 793 (N.Y. 1937). See Dix W. Noel, Nuisances from Land in its Natural Condition, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 772 (1943). As respects buildings on adjoining land the only duty is due care. Coward v. Fleming, 102 N.E.2d 850 (Ohio App. 1951).

(n87)Footnote 87. Atchison. T. & S.F. Ry. v. Public Utilities Comm'n, 346 U.S. 346 (1953). See, e.g., Chapter 75,

The Impact of Environmental Regulation of Real Property.

(n88)Footnote 88. Mary Jane Stevens Co. v. First Nat'l Bldg. Co., 57 P.2d 1099 (Utah 1936); Spartan Drilling Co. v. Bull, 252 S.W.2d 408 (Ark. 1952) (indicated that a nuisance might not be abated if the cost would be excessive or prohibitive). See W. Bryan Bolich, Acts Barring Property Rights, 40 N.C. L. Rev. 175(1962).

(n89)Footnote 89. Jones v. Trawick, 75 So. 2d 785 (Fla. 1954) (cemetery in residential area as nuisance); Johnson v. Colter, 297 N.Y.S. 345 (1937) (an action for damages or for injunction will lie even in a public nuisance by one who suffers injury greater in extent than that of the general public); Graceland Corp. v. Consolidated Laundries Corp., 180 N.Y.S.2d 644 (1958).

(n90)Footnote 90. Hibbard v. Halliday, 158 P. 1158 (Okla. 1916); Muskatell v. Seattle, 116 P.2d 363 (Wash. 1941); Wilson v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co., 21 S.E. 1035 (W. Va. 1895). See Tillman v. Public Belt R.R. Comm., 42 So. 2d 888 (La. App. 1949); Restatement, Law of Torts. 337. An owner has liability for negligent crop dusting: Lundberg v. Bolon, 194 P.2d 454 (Ariz. 1948); Heeb v. Prysock, 245 S.W.2d 577 (Ark. 1952); Miles v. A. Arena & Co., 73 P.2d 1260 (Cal. App. 1937): Burke v. Thomas, 313 P.2d 1082 (Okla. 1957). Resting foreseeability of harm in attractive nuisance cases on notice: Gardner v. Stonestown Corp., 302 P.2d 674 (Cal. App. 1956) (lumber piles held an attractive nuisance); Kahn v. James Burton Co., 126 N.E.2d 836 (Ill. 1955) (sand and gravel pits are attractive nuisances); Smith v. Evans, 284 P.2d 1065 (Kan. 1955) (an adjoining landowner is entitled to damages arising from explosions occurring in geophysical explorations); Fontenot v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 80 So. 2d 845 (La. 1955) (strict liability rule); Gotreaux v. Gary, 94 So. 2d 293 (La. App. 1955) (an owner owes a duty to a social guest to ascertain that the premises are safe); Alexander v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 98 So. 2d 730 (dictum) (La. App. 1957).

Attractive nuisance doctrine rejected: Lewis v. Mains, 104 A.2d 432 (Me. 1954); Urban v. Central Massachusetts Elec, Co., 17 N.E.2d 718 (Mass. 1938); Frost v. Eastern R.R., 9 A. 790 (N.H. 1887); Morse v. Buffalo Tank Corp., 19 N.E.2d 981 (N.Y. 1938); Hannan v. Ehrlich, 131 N.E. 504 (Ohio 1921); Previte v. Wanskuck Co., 90 A.2d 769 (R.I. 1952); Trudo v. Lazarus. 73 A.2d 306 (Va. 1950).

A nuisance will usually not arise for aesthetic reasons solely: Feldstein v. Kammauf, 121 A.2d 716 (Md. 1956).

Adopting Restatement, Law of Torts, § 339 with respect to attractive nuisances: Patterson v. Gibson, 287 S.W.2d 853 (Mo. 1956); Angelier v. Red Star Yeast & Products Co., 254 N.W. 351 (Wis. 1934); Massino v. Smaglick, 89 N.W.2d 223 (Wis. 1958).

Adjoining landowner held to strict liability for damage caused by blasting: Thigpen v. Skousen, 327 P.2d 802 (N.M. 1958).

Tenant in apartment house restrained from making noise annoying to others: Ryan v. Steele. 163 N.Y.S.2d 471 (1957).

Baiting pond to attract wild geese held nuisance to adjoining landowner where crop damage resulted: Andrews v. Andrews, 88 S.E.2d 88 (N.C. 1955).

See Waste of Oil and Gas as Between Adjacent Landowners. 44 Ky. L.J. 118 (1956); Laurence H. Eldridge, Tort Liability to Trespassers, 12 Temple L.Q. 32 (1938); Richard Glen Greenwood, Current Attractive Nuisance Cases in Wisconsin and Other Jurisdictions, 42 MARQ. L. REV. 64 (1958); Adjoining Landowners-- Right to Light and Air-- Injunction, 34 Tulane L. Rev. 599 (1960). See David G. Warren, Nuisance Law as an Environmental Tool, 7 Wake Forest L. Rev. 211 (1971). See also Dennis Kastan, Noise Pollution: Public Needs v. Individual Rights, 1 Western St. U. L. Rev. 185 (1973).

(n91)Footnote 91. Moore v. Berlin Mills Co., 67 A. 578 (N.H. 1902).

(n92)Footnote 92. In re Perrin's Appeal, 156 A. 305 (Pa. 1931).

(n93)Footnote 93. Hibbard v. Halliday, 158 P. 1158 (Okla. 1916); Costello v. Wheeling, 117 S.E.2d 513 (W. Va. 1960) (paving of a sidewalk in violation of a municipal ordinance made the paver liable in tort to a pedestrian). Landowner has duty to exercise reasonable care in maintaining premises so as not to be a hazard to firemen: Dini v. Naiditch, 170 N.E.2d 881 (Ill. 1960). Louisiana has a statutory sic utere servitude: Divicent v. Sanderson, 117 So. 2d 907 (La. 1960). To be subject to a permanent injunction the injury created by a nuisance must be of such a character as to materially diminish the value of adjoining property as a dwelling and to interfere with the ordinary comfort and enjoyment of it: Feldstein v. Kammauf, 121 A.2d 716 (Md. 1956). Diminution of adjoining property values and creation of physical discomfort in neighborhood justified enjoining fertilizer plant as nuisance: Bishop Processing Co. v. Davis, 132 A.2d 445 (Md. 1957). See Richard T. Drukker, Spite Fences and Spite Walls, 26 CAL. L. Rev. 691 (1938); W.T.S. Stallybrass, Dangerous Things and the Non- Natural User of Land, 3 Cambridge L. J. 376 (1929); Landowner's Liability to Infant Trespassers: Status of the Law in New York, 25 FORDHAM L. Rev. 290 (1956); Hughes, Duties to Trespassers, 68 Yale L. J. 633 (1959). Emission of smoke and dust must be reasonable; Sprague v. Sampson, 114 A. 305 (Me. 1921). The common-law rule gave no liability except for negligence, Booth v. Rome, W. & O.T.R. Co., 35 N.E. 592 (N.Y. 1892), but showing a prima facie case of negligence, Schlansky v. Augustus Riegel, Inc., 215 N.Y.S.2d 52 (1960). Adjoining landowners entitled to relief from blasting damage as a trespass, though no negligence (majority rule): Muskogee v. Hancock, 158 P. 622 (Okla. 1916).

(n94)Footnote 94. Affirmative: State ex rel. Gardner v. Sailboat Key, Inc., 295 So. 2d 658 (Fla. App. 1974).

(n95)Footnote 95. Warden, Maryland Penitentiary v. Hayden, 387 US 294 (1966). See infra Chapter 66, Constitutional Impacts on Real Property.

(n96)Footnote 96. Jones v. Trawick, 75 So. 2d 785 (Fla. 1954) (establishment of cemetery enjoined). A nuisance is something which is offensive physically to the senses and by such offensiveness makes life uncomfortable: Bauman v. Piser Undertakes Co., 180 N.E.2d 705 (Ill. App. 1962), Noel, Nuisances from Land in Its Natural Condition, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 772. Arvidson v. Reynolds Metals Co., 125 F. Supp. 481 (W.D. Wash 1954), aff'd, 236 F.2d 224 (9th Cir. 1956) (intrusion of flouride particles through the air not a trespass and recovery denied); Fairview Farms, Inc. v. Reynolds Metals Co., 176 F. Supp. 178 (D. Or. 1959) (flourides drifting onto another's land was trespass); Gallin v. Poulou, 295 P.2d 958 (Cal. App. 1956) (vibrations from a jackhammer are not an intentional trespass); Wiser Oil Co. v. Conley, 346 S.W.2d 718 (Ky. 1960) (oil lessee liable to lessor for water flooding operations which damaged coal deposits and surface); B & R Luncheonette, Inc. v. Fairmont Theatre Corp., 103 N.Y.S.2d 747 (1951) (spray from a cooling tower is a trespass). See Maxine Kurtz, The Effect of Land Use Legislation on the Common Law of Nuisance in Urban Areas, 36 Dicta 414 (1959); Ronald Sorenson, Law of Nuisance in Iowa, 12 Drake L. Rev. 107 (Dec. 1962).

(n97)Footnote 97. Hofstetter v. George M. Myers, Inc., 228 P.2d 522 (Kan. 1951) (a mobile home is not a nuisance per se); Ott v. Johnson, 307 N.E.2d 523 (Ind. App. 1974) (for there to be trespass there must be an invasion by physical matter); Jennemann v. Hertel, 264 S.W.2d 911 (Mo. App. 1954); Amphitheaters, Inc. v. Portland Meadows, 198 P.2d 847 (Or. 1948); Waschak v. Moffat, 109 A.2d 310 (Pa. 1954) (gas). See Change of Neighborhood in Nuisance Cases, 13 Clev. Marshall L. Rev. 340.

(n98)Footnote 98. Commonwealth v. Wyeth Laboratories, Divison of Amercian Home Products Corp., 315 A.2d 648(Pa. 1974).

(n99)Footnote 99. Absolute liability for debris thrown by blasting: Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337 (1876). Blasting vibrations result in liability without fault: Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1962); Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. 1971). See 37 Mo. L. Rev. 561. No liability without fault in blasting vibrations: Madsen v. East Jordan Irr. Co., 125 P.2d 794 (Utah 1942). See infra Chapter 68, Trespass on Land.

(n100)Footnote 100. Injury to subterranean water by explosion was actionable: Western Geophysical Co. of Amercia v. Mason, 402 S.W.2d 657 (Ark. 1966).

(n101)Footnote 101. Holland v. Keaveney, 306 So. 2d 838 (La. App. 1975).

(n102)Footnote 102. Livingston v. Davis, 50 N.W.2d 592 (Iowa 1951) 27.

(n103)Footnote 103. Lake v. Ferrer. 293 P.2d 104 (Cal. App. 1956).

(n104)Footnote 104. Pickens v. Southern R. Co., 177 F. Supp. 553 (E.D. Tenn. 1959) (unused turntable held an attractive nuisance); Galleher v. Wichita, 296 P.2d 1062 (Kan. 1956) (attractive nuisance consists of an offending condition, circumstance or appliance so enticing, alluring and calculated to excite the curiosity of children as to induce them to approach it and such inherent attractiveness amounts to an implied invitation to such children); Commercial Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Blocker, 86 So. 2d 760 (La. App. 1956). A private nuisance is one that interferes with the enjoyment of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of others): Wallace v. Horn, 506 S.W.2d 325 (Tex. App. 1974).

(n105)Footnote 105. Harris v. Mentes-Williams Co., 95 A.2d 388 (N.J. 1953): Angelier v. Red Star Yeast & Products Co., 254 N.W. 351 (Wis. 1934); Massino v. Smaglick, 89 N.W.2d 223 (Wis. 1958).

(n106)Footnote 106. Menneti v. Evans Constr. Co., 259 F.2d 367 (3d Cir. 1958); Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 136 A.2d 301 (N.J. 1957) (attractive nuisance doctrine applied to infants burned in fires while trespassing); Previte v. Wanskuck Co., 80 R.I. 1, 90 A.2d 769 (R.I. 1952). See Petrak v. Cooke Contr'g Co., 46 N.W.2d 574 (Mich. 1951). Even though California did not consider a swimming pool an attractive nuisance, it still allowed recovery under § 339 of the Restatement OF TORTS: Reynolds v. Willson, 331 P.2d 48 (Cal. App. 1958). The owner of real estate was liable for the wrongful death of a child fatally poisoned, after having used cyanide to kill rats, knowing that children were accustomed to playing in the area: Shank v. Peabody Coop. Equity Exch., 352 P.2d 41 (Kan. 1960). A landowner may not be liable to an infant trespasser in absence of actual knowledge of a dangerous condition: Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958). See Errol Tyler, Liability of Landowners Resultant from Their Employment of Independent Contractors, 13 Hastings L. J. 147 (1961).

(n107)Footnote 107. England v. Atkinson, 26 S.E.2d 431 (Ga. 1943).

(n108)Footnote 108. Lee v. Chicago, 61 N.E.2d 367 (Ill. 1945). The state may order cedars destroyed to preserve apple orchards. Miller v. Schoene, 276 U.S. 272 (1928). See Keith S. Rosenn, Puerto Rican Land Reform: The History of An Instructive Experiment, 73 Yale L. J. 334 (1963). See also Robert H. Freilich, Missouri Law of Land Use Controls: With National Perspectives, 42 U.M.K.C. L. Rev. 1 (1973); Roger C. Adams, The Land Use Policy and Planning Assistance Act of 1973: Legislating a National Land Use Policy, 41 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 604 (1973); Richard F. Babcock & Duane A. Feurer, Land as a Commodity Affected with a Public Interest, 52 Wash. L. Rev. 289. (1977). See infra Chapter 72, Sources of Government Police Power.

(n109)Footnote 109. Nebbia v. New York, 291 U.S. 502 (1934); Neisel v. Moran, 85 So. 346 (Fla. 1919); Ehinger v. State ex rel. Gottesman, 2 So. 2d 357 (Fla. 1941); Miami Beach v. Ocean & Inland Co., 3 So. 2d 364 (Fla. 1941); Davis v. Miller, 96 S.E.2d 498 (Ga. 1957) (filling station is not a nuisance per se); Schiller Piano Co. v. Illinois Northern Utilities Co., 123 N.E. 631 (Ill. 1919); Lee v. Chicago, 61 N.E.2d 367 (Ill. 1945); Jezowski v. Reno, 26 P.2d 257 (Nev. 1933) (city dump is not a nuisance per se); People ex rel. Werner v. Walsh, 209 N.Y.S. 454 (1925) (zoning ordinance); Seventy-Eighth Street & Broadway Co. v. Rosenbaum, 182 N.Y.S. 505 (1920) (statute granting relief from oppressive rents upheld); In re Perrin's Appeal, 156 A. 305 (Pa. 1931); Reid v. Brodsky, 156 A2d 334 (Pa. 1959) (business may operate as a nuisance though permitted by zoning laws); State v. Dexter, 202 P.2d 906 (Wash. 1949) (holding constitutional a statute requiring logging operations to restock or leave seed trees).

See Harry M. Cross. The Diminishing Fee, 20 Law & Contemporary Prob. 517 (1955); R.O. Kellam, A Century of Correlative Rights, 12 Baylor L. Rev. I (1960), as to the development of the law of controls over waste of natural resources; Paul S. Taylor, The Excess Land Law: Pressure vs. Principle, 47 Cal. L. Rev. 499; Controlling Farm Tenant Conservation Practices Through the Judicial Process, 34 Ind. L. J. 296 (1959).

Ordinance requiring adjacent landowner to remove snow and ice created no tort liability: Johnson v. J.S. Bell, Jr. & Co., 117 S.E.2d 85 (Va. 1960).

(n110)Footnote 110. Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. 36 (1872); Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113 (1876); Nebbia v. New York, 291 U.S. 502 (1934); Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist., 45 P.2d 972 (Cal. 1935) (water control); People v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 32 N.E.2d 902 (Ill. 1941); Ellicott v. Mayor & City Council, 23 A.2d 649 (Md. 1942); Ross v. Mayor & Council, 184 A. 810 (N.J. 1936); State v. Yopp, 2 S.E. 458 (N.C. 1887); Allen v. Shaker Heights Sav. Ass'n, 39 N.E.2d 747 (Ohio App. 1941); In re Perrin's Appeal, 156 A. 305 (Pa. 1931); Campbell v. State, 122 P.2d 458 (Wash. 1942); State v. Dexter, 202 P.2d 906 (Wash. 1949); aff'd 338 U.S. 863 (reseeding of trees in cut-over lands). See Edgar R. Casper, Discordant Land Use Regulation, 61 DICK. L. REV. 163 (1957). A filling station in a residential area is not a nuisance per se: Phillips v. Adams. 309 S.W.2d 205 (Ark. 1950). The purpose of the Pennsylvania land conservation act is to protect the public welfare and any benefit to the landowner is purely coincidental: Windber Constr. Co. v. Coleman, 139 A.2d 675 (Pa. 1958).

(n111)Footnote 111. Buch v. Harton, 33 F. Supp. 1014 (M.D. Tenn. 1940); Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. Huntington Beach, 237 P. 538 (Cal. 1925) (zoning ordinance, oil wells); Papaioanu v. Commissioners of Rehoboth, 20 A.2d 447 (Del. 1941); Schiller Piano Co. v. Illinois Northern Utilities Co., 123 N.E. 631 (Ill. 1919); Reimer v. Dallas, 129 A, 390 (N.J. 1923) (zoning ordinance); In re White's Appeal, 134 A. 409 (Pa. 1926) (zoning ordinance held invalid). A mere aesthetic purpose was an improper exercise of the police power: People v. Dickenson, 343 P.2d 809 (Cal. 1959). Requirement of off-street parking facilities as a condition to use of purposes otherwise permitted by zoning was unconstitutional: Denver v. Denver Buick, Inc., 347 P.2d 919 (Colo. 1959).

A city ordinance which prohibited erection of fences in front yards was unconstitutional since it was solely for aesthetic purposes and could not be sustained under the police power: Norris v. Bradford, 321 S.W.2d 543 (Tenn. 1958).

(n112)Footnote 112. Clinton v. Standard Oil Co., 137 S.E. 183 (N.C. 1927). A city ordinance regulating height of buildings and trees as well as the use of land in the vicinity of an airport was a taking of private property: Rice v. Newark, 40 A.2d 561 (N.J. 1945); Ackerman v. Seattle, 348 P.2d 664 (Wash. 1960).

(n113)Footnote 113. Stratford Irr. Dist. v. Empire Water Co., 111 P.2d 957 (Cal. App. 1941); Raleigh Court Corp. v. Faucett, 124 S.E. 433 (Va. 1924); Christensen v. Mann, 204 N.W. 499 (Wis. 1925).

(n114)Footnote 114. United States v. 243.22 Acres of Land, 43 F. Supp. 561 (E.D.N.Y. 1941); United States v. A Certain Tract or Parcel of Land, 44 F. Supp. 712 (S.D. Ga. 1942); Sanitary Dist. v. Manasse, 42 N.E.2d 543 (Ill. 1942); Collector of Taxes v. Revere Bldg., 177 N.E. 577 (Mass. 1931); Blackman v. Cincinnati, 42 N.E.2d 158 (Ohio 1940).

(n115)Footnote 115. Houston v. Lurie, 224 S.W.2d 871 (Tex. 1949).

(n116)Footnote 116. Miller v. Schoene, 276 U.S. 272 (1928) (police power to destroy cedar trees to prevent communication of a plant disease to nearby apple orchards was upheld); Commonwealth v. Tewksbury, 52 Mass. 55 (1846) (state regulation of stone, gravel and sand from the seashore).

See The Property Rights Exception to Civil rights Jurisdiction-- Confusion Compounded, 43 New York U. L. Rev. 1208 (1968); G. Graham Waite, Governmental Power and Private Property, 16 Cath. U. L. Rev. 283 (1967). See infra Chapter 48. Mines and Minerals; Chapter 49, Petroleum and Pipelines; Chapter 50, Water Rights; Chapter 74, An Overview of Land Use Regulations; Chapter 75, The Impact of Environmental Regulation on Real Property.

(n117)Footnote 117. Champlin Ref. Co. v. Corporation Comm'n of Oklahoma, 286 U.S. 210 (1932) (proration statute upheld); Hunter v. Justice Court, 223 P.2d 465 (Cal. 1950).

(n118)Footnote 118. Palmer Oil Corp. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 231 P.2d 997 (Okla. 1951).

(n119)Footnote 119. See Karl F. Milde, Legal Principles and Policies of Soil Conservation, 20 F Ordham L. Rev. 45 (1951); Edwin E. Ferguson. Nation-Wide Erosion Control; Soil Conservation Districts and the Power of Land Use Regulations, 34 Iowa L. Rev. 166 (1949).

(n120)Footnote 120. Southwest Engineering Co. v. Ernst, 291 P.2d 764 (Ariz. 1955) (police power enabled state to prohibit future drilling of wells for irrigation).

(n121)Footnote 121. See Land Value and Land Planning; British Legislation and American Prospects, 60 Yale L.J. 112(1951).

(n122)Footnote 122. See Joseph C. Hutcheson, Jr., The Natural Law and the Right to Property, 26 NOTRE Dame L. REV. 640 (1951).

(n123)Footnote 123. Hunter v. Justice Court, 223 P.2d 465 (Cal. 1950).

(n124)Footnote 124. ARK. Code Ann, §§ 15-22-401 et. seq.

(n125)Footnote 125. Awack v. Kraus Bros. & Co., 133 F. Supp. 929 (S.D.N.Y. 1955). Rent control law held constitutional; Lincoln Bldg. Associates v. Jame, 203 N.Y.S.2d 86 (1960). See Judicial Review of Urban Redevelopment Agency Determinations, 69 Yale L. J. 321.

(n126)Footnote 126. Eichel v. Dudley, 179 N.E.2d 812 (Ohio 1961).

(n127)Footnote 127. Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26 (1954).

(n128)Footnote 128. Somers v. Camarco, 127 N.E.2d 327 (N.Y. 1953).

(n129)Footnote 129. Brown v. Comm. Int. Rev., 180 F.2d 946 (5th Cir. 1950); Amaya v. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., 62 F. Supp. 181 (S.D. Tex. 1945); Bell v. Wadley (Ga. 1948), 177 S.W.2d 403 (Ark. 1944); King v. King, 48 S.E.2d 465 (Ga. 1948); Gross Income Tax Division v. Bartlett, 93 N.E.2d 174 (Ind. 1950); Duckwall v. Lease, 20 N.E.2d 204 (Ind. App. 1939); Bish v. Bish, 31 A.2d 348 (Md. 1943); Guardian Life Ins. Co. v. Rita Realty Co., 5 A.2d 45 (N.J. 1939); Rosenbaum v. Consolidated Products Co., N.Y.S.2d 571 (1948); In re Smythe's Estate, 36 N.Y.S.2d 605; In re Drexel's Will, 231 N.Y.S.2d 574 (1962): Mashunkashey v. Mashunkashey, 134 P.2d 976 (Okla. 1942); Guarture v. C. P. Mayer Brick Co., 69 A. 2d 422 (Pa. 1950); Colden v. Alexander, 171 S.W.2d 328 (Tex. 1943). The law of the location of the property controls wills of realty: In re Strauss' Estate, 347 N.Y.S.2d 840 (1973): Estabrook v. Wise. 506 S.W.2d 248 (Tex. App. 1974).

(n130)Footnote 130. Irving Trust Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 83 F.2d 121 (6th Cir. 1936); In re Parkwood, Inc., 461 F.2d 158 (D.C. Cir. 1971): Stockton v. Ortiz, 111 Cal. Rptr. 617 (1973); People ex rel. Kunstman v. Shinsaku Nagano, 59 N.E.2d 96; Applegate v. Brown. 344 S.W.2d 13 (Mo. 1961) (lex loci of the realty determines whether there has been an equitable conversion); In re Drexel's Will, 231 N.Y.S.2d 574 (1962); Wolfe v. Lewisburg Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 158 A. 567 (Pa. 1931); Roswurm v. Sinclair Prairie Oil Co., 181 S.W.2d 736 (Tex. 1944 App.); Hardesty v. Fairmont Supply Co., 14 S.E.2d 436 (W. Va. 1941). The state court could determine possessory rights as against third persons but not against the United States: Duguid v. Best, 291 F.2d 235 (9th Cir. 1961).

(n131)Footnote 131. DeLashmutt v. Teetor, 169 S.W. 34 (Mo. 1914).

(n132)Footnote 132. Sims v. Jones, 123 S.E. 614 (Ga. 1924); In re Schneider's Estate, 96 N.Y.S.2d 652 (1950): Roswurm v. Sinclair Prairie Oil Co., 181 S.W.2d 736 (Tex. App. 1944).

(n133)Footnote 133. See Restatement, Conflict of Laws, § 208.

(n134)Footnote 134. Moscow Fire Ins. Co. v. Bank of New York & Trust Co., 20 N.E.2d 758 (N.Y. 1939).

(n135)Footnote 135. Classen v. Heath, 58 N.E.2d 889 (Ill. 1945). The law of the situs of the realty determines the right of an adopted child to inherit: In re Sendona's Estate, 381 P.2d 752 (Wash. 1963). See infra Chapter 88, Testamentary Transfers of Real Property; Chapter 89, Intestate Succession.

(n136)Footnote 136. Meents v. Comstock 296 N.W. 721 (Iowa 1941). A court determination of jurisdiction over land situated in another state may be collaterally attacked in the latter state: Duke v. Durfee, 308 F.2d 209 (8th Cir. 1962). Under the 1943 Iowa-Nebraska Boundary Compact, Nebraska courts have jurisdiction over land west of the line: Schroeder v. 171.74 Acres of Land, 318 F.2d 311 (8th Cir. 1963).

(n137)Footnote 137. In re Knickel's Will, 185 N.E.2d 93 (Ohio 1961).

(n138)Footnote 138. Minor v. Cardwell, 37 Mo. 350 (1866). Trespass to realty is a local action to be brought only at the situs of the realty: Reasor-Hill Corp. v. Harrison, 249 S.W.2d 994 (Ark. 1952).

(n139)Footnote 139. Sims v. Jones, 123 S.E. 614 (Ga. 1924).

(n140)Footnote 140. Jorgensen v. Crandell, 277 N.W. 785 (Neb. 1938). In Polson v. Stewart, 45 N.E. 737 (Mass. 1897), Justice Holmes, in a case where the agreement was made in North Carolina, said: "But it said that the laws of the parties' domicile could not authorize a contract between them as to lands in Massachusetts. Obviously, this is not true. It is true that the laws of other states cannot render valid conveyances of property within our borders which our laws say are void, for the plain reason that we have exclusive power over the res ... But the same reason inverted establishes that the lex rei sitae cannot control personal convenants not purporting to be conveyances, between persons outside the jurisdiction, although concerning a thing within it."

(n141)Footnote 141. McClain v. Holder, 279 S.W.2d 105 (Tex. App. 1955). See infra Chapter 31, Joint Tenancies; Chapter 32, Tenancies in Common; Chapter 33. Tenancies by the Entirety; Chapter 34, Tenancy in Partnership, Chapter 35, Tenancy in Coparcenary; Chapter 37, Marital Property.

(n142)Footnote 142. J. Thomas Oldham, Conflict of Laws and Marital Property Rights, 39 Baylor L.Rev. 1255 (1987). Bruton v. Villoria, 292 P.2d. 638 (Cal. App. 1956). See infra Chapter 37, Marital Property.

(n143)Footnote 143. George v. Widemire, 7 So. 2d 269 (Ala. 1942); In re Rowley's Estate, 35 P.2d 34 (Wash. 1934). As to intangibles, see Edwards v. Sullivan, 102 N.Y.S.2d 951 (1949).

(n144)Footnote 144. First Nat'l Bank v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue. 63 F.2d 685 (1st Cir. 1933); In re Fidelity Assur. Ass'n, 42 F. Supp. 973 (S.D.W.Va. 1941).

(n145)Footnote 145. Willis v. Beeler, 90 F.2d 538 (6th Cir. 1937). See Peter Herzog, Conflict of Laws in Land Transactions: The Borderland Between Contract and Property Matter - A Comparative View, 8 Syracuse L. Rev. 191 (1957). Where a contract was made in Michigan to be there performed, and involved a rule of property as to real estate situated in Michigan, the law in that state was held to control in determining whether chattels had become part of the real estate: In re Johns-Manville Sales Corp's Petition, 88 F.2d 520 (6th Cir. 1937). An action can be maintained in Arkansas for damages caused by negligent trespass to land in another state. In so deciding, the court said: "The majority rule has no basis in logic or equity and rests solely upon English cases that were decided before America was discovered and in circumstances that are not even comparable to those existing in our Union." Reasor-Hill Corp. v. Harrison, 249 S.W.2d 994 (Ark. 1952).

+ This chapter is based in part on Chapter 1 of George W. Thompson, Commentaries on The Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes, ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing basic property definitions and characteristics.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 14.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 14.03 The Nature of Property.

§ 14.03(a) Property Defined.

What is property. It is impossible to arrive at a comprehensive definition of "property" that will satisfy all of the situations and tests to which such a definition will be subjected. Property is a term of broad significance, embracing everything that has exchangeable value, and every interest or estate which the law regards as being of sufficient value for judicial recognition. n146 The word may be properly used to signify any valuable right or interest protected by law. n147 The American Law Institute uses "property" to denote legal relations between persons with respect to a thing. n148 When not limited by the context of an instrument in which it is used, the term "property" includes everything which is the subject of ownership. n149

The term, in its most general sense, includes everything that has an exchangeable value. n150 In the full sense it denotes a right in point of user, unrestricted in point of disposition, and unlimited in point of duration over a determinate thing, and it may be applied to a right indefinite in point of user but limited in time, as a life interest in real estate. n151

Property, in a legal sense, consists in the domination which is rightfully and lawfully obtained over a material thing, with the right to its use, enjoyment and disposition. n152 The term extends to every species of valuable right and interest, including real and personal property, easements, franchises and other incorporeal hereditaments. n153 The recipient of a validly issued building permit acquires a property right. n154 "Property" includes an equitable as well as a legal interest. n155

A water right is a property right. n156 Deprivation of priority rights in water is deprivation of a valuable property right. n157 The right of a corporation to create a lien on its property to secure the payment of a loan is property. n158

The right to sue for damages for personal injuries is a chose in action and therefore property. n159 The right to work is a property right subject to legal protection. n160 A business or a profession is property, n161 but the right to have punitive damages assessed is not property, n162 nor are tort claims. n163 "Property" covers anything capable of ownership n164 and protected by law. n165 So the right to follow a chosen occupation is a qualified property right. n166

Property is anything of value which may be acquired and held by the holder in perpetuity or so long as may be desirable. n167 It is the sum of all the rights and powers incident to ownership. n168 The rights to property include not only the right to acquire it but the right to possess it as well. n169 Property consists not only of ownership and possession but of the unrestricted right of use, enjoyment and disposal. n170 The common law, however, could not conceive of anything as being property which could not be capable of possession. n171

The term property is used "to denote legal relations between persons with respect to a thing," n172 and, in the legal sense, is not employed as indicative of the thing in regard to which the interest exists. n173 The word is often used to indicate the subject of the property or the thing owned, such as a chattel or a tract of land. These things, although the subjects of property, are, when coupled with possession, but the visible manifestations of invisible rights, the evidence of things not seen. n174 The term "property" is applicable to the exclusive right of the owner with respect to the use, control and disposition of something which is capable of ownership, n175 but in its more general and popular sense it is applicable to the thing itself. n176 The general result of various definitions of the term "property" is that it is the exclusive right of any person to freely use, enjoy and dispose of any determinate object, whether real or personal. n177

The modern conception of the meaning of property is the dominion over or right of user and disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects generally to the exclusion of all others, something which one owns to the exclusion of every other person. But the word has been employed by law writers and jurists in many different senses. Thus, the term is often used to denote anything which is the subject of ownership, any external object over which the right of property may be exercised. In this sense it has a very wide significance and includes every class of acquisition which one can own or have an interest in. This is the sense in which the word is used in the treatment of estates in real property. The property, or subject matter of ownership, is to be thought of as one thing, and the interest or estate therein, as another. So, in another sense, the term is employed to indicate the interest which can be acquired in external objects or things. This is its appropriate meaning, although it is not infrequently used to indicate the thing, rather than the right, and much of the uncertainty and confusion observable in the decisions of our courts have arisen from overlooking this distinction. n178

The term has a very broad meaing, and when used without qualification, either express or implied, it may reasonably be construed to include obligations, rights and other intangibles as well as personal things. n179 Thus, it is held that valid contracts are property, and as such are not subject to be taken without just compensation, whether the obligor be an individual, a municipality, state or the United States. n180 It has been said that there are no property rights, that all rights are individual, and that a person's right to possession, control, use and disposition of property is as personal as the right and not a natural right. n181 The right of property is a legal right and not a natural right and must be measured by reference to the rights of others and of the public. n182 Indeed this right has been declared of a higher rank than any constitutional sanction. n183 Constitutional guarantees of the right to acquire and possess property cease to operate at the death of the possessor. The right to control or dispose of property after death is not secured to the owner by state or federal constitutions, nor do these instruments secure to anyone the right to take by inheritance. n184 The right to acquire and own property and to deal with it and use it as the owner chooses, so long as such use harms no one, is a natural right which does not owe its origin to constitutions. n185

Property in its legal sense, as well as in its philosophical meaning, is not the thing itself, but certain rights in and over the thing, those rights being principally (1) use, (2) exclusion, and (3) disposition. n186 When a property right is created, every right necessary for its enjoyment is included by implication. n187 Property rights in land include the right to use, lease and dispose of it for lawful purposes, n188 and the constitution protects these essential attributes of property. n189 The use of a given object is the most essential and beneficial quality or attribute of property. Without it all other elements which go to make up property would be of no effect. n190 This right to use a thing or object as property includes the right or power to exclude others from the use thereof. n191 Ordinarily this right to enjoyment may not be coupled with the ability to keep it from claims of creditors and others. n192

A property right includes every right necessary for its enjoyment. n193 Where one has the exclusive right of possession, enjoyment and disposition of a thing, it follows that one also has the use thereof, and the exclusive right of user follows as a natural sequence from the admission of the right itself. The most absolute land title is a perpetual right of exclusive occupation and perpetual right of use. The word "exclusive," when used in this connection, means a right or privilege which may be exercised and enjoyed only by the person authorized, while all others are forbidden to interfere. There can be no definition of "property" which does not include the power of disposition and sale, as well as the right of private use and enjoyment. n194 The right of disposing is an incident of the ownership of property, n195 and realty is as much the subject of sale or exchange as any other kind of property, n196 so long as the intended disposition is not contrary to public policy or some positive rule of law n197 and does not interfere with the existing rights of others. n198 The free alienation of property is an inherent right of the owner, subject only to restraint if it is against the interest of the public. n199 However, a state may make some forms of property alienable or inalienable, and it has plenary power to regulate the tenure of property ownership within its borders. n200 The right of disposition is not title, but a mere power, which may or may not be exercised. n201 The owner may devote the property to any legitimate use, and the right to so use it is within the protection of the federal constitution. n202

Some authorities hold that absolute ownership of property implies the right of arbitrary disposition of it by will, n203 yet the great weight of authority is that the right to make a testamentary disposition of one's property is not a property right or a natural right, but is said to be a right by the grace of the law. n204

The meaning of the word "property" may often be disclosed by the context of the instrument or statute in which it is used, n205 or from the intention of the parties shown by the language used or the circumstances attending the transaction. n206 Within the limits of the law, one who owns property may do as one pleases with it; n207 one may dispose of it in any manner that one desires, in the absence of a showing of a lack of mental capacity, fraud or undue influence. n208 Also, rights acquired by a judgment are held to be property rights which cannot be taken without due process of law. n209 Instruments passing title to real estate are property and belong to the person in whom the title is thereby vested. n210 Authorities have been in conflict over whether a restrictive covenant is "property" protected by the constitution. n211 Intangible goodwill is property. n212 The right to free games won on a pinball machine is property. n213

§ 14.03(b) Classifications of Property.

Classifications of Property. All property may be grouped into movable and immovable, tangible and intangible, or corporeal and incorporeal. "Real estate" consists of incorporeal rights attached to or growing out of the soil as well as the soil itself. n214 Minerals and standing timber are corporeal hereditaments and as such recoverable in ejectment. n215

In the early development of the common law, tangible objects were referred to as things movable and things immovable, the same as under the Roman law. Later under the common law things immovable were considered of greater dignity than movables. The method of holding and enjoying the soil, and the things attached to the soil which could not ordinarily be carried from place to place, gave emphasis and durability to this classification. Upon the introduction of the feudal system in England, all absolute ownership in immovable things by private persons ceased. It is evident that this system could have no application to articles of a temporary or movable character, and so they became subject to absolute ownership. Thus, tangible and movable property came to be designated as goods and chattels. Immovable things, being held by tenure, soon became spoken of as tenements, n216 and as hereditaments, because of their inheritable quality. n217 "Tangible property" has been defined as that which may be felt or touched. So it must necessarily be corporeal and may be either real or personal. n218 "Lands," though less comprehensive than either tenements or hereditaments, was a term also used to designate those things of a tangible and immovable character. So at common law, property was divided into goods and chattels on the one hand, and lands, tenements, and hereditaments on the other. A more recent division of property was into real property and personal property.

Property is sometimes classified as corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal property is that which may be apprehended by the senses, such as lands, goods, animals, and is either movable or immovable. Movables are those which can move naturally by themselves or be moved, and immovables are those which can neither move naturally themselves nor be moved. Corporeal property may be real, personal or mixed. n219 Under the broad general definition of property as a right, the idea of corporeal property is excluded, because the right to use, enjoy, control and dispose of anything is not capable of being touched or handled and is not of a material nature. n220 As generally understood, corporeal property consists of such subjects as are palpable; the common-law term relating to property of this character signified property in possession. n221 Corporeal property refers to and is property in corporeal things. The right to possess, occupy, enjoy and use corporeal things and take the profit thereof is what the law regards as corporeal property. n222

Incorporeal property consists of things which cannot be apprehended by the material senses, but consists in legal rights such as choses in action, rights-of- way, other types of easements and the like. n223 Patent rights, copyrights, trademarks, trade names and franchises to be a corporation are examples of incorporeal property rights. n224 Incorporeal property is a legal right which one person has, not to the property of another but in it; for example, as, in the case of a right-of-way, the land is owned and in possession of one as corporeal property, while another has the single right of passing over it, which is incorporeal property. This right may be acquired by agreement or it may be created by operation of law. When one sells a parcel of land in the center of one's own premises, the buyer by operation of law acquires a right-of-way over the grantor's other surrounding land. It is a right issuing out of, concerning, annexed to or exercisable within, a thing corporeal. n225 Hence, the right is not the thing corporeal itself, but something collateral to it, as a rent issuing out of lands or tenements. n226 It has no corporeal tangible substance. n227 It has been said that an incorporeal hereditament is what is known in law as a servitude, imposed upon land for the benefit of the person or persons owning the rights, irrespective of the ownership of the land. n228

Some rights may be exercised in connection with corporeal property but without any actual ownership, possession, control or power of disposition over the corporeal property. Examples of this type of rights are easements of light and air and lateral support. n229 Both corporeal and incorporeal property are valuable property rights and owners are entitled to judicial protection in their enjoyment of those rights.

Several areas of conflict which arise in connection with the legal concepts of property. One will divide the physical element into strata which will result in divisions into the surface area, the area above the surface, and the area below the surface. Another results from the conflict between those claiming a right to or interest in the property and those claiming rights or interests in adjacent property. A third involves parties claiming concurrent interests in the same property. A fourth concerns those who claim immediate possessory interests as against those whose claimed interests do not entitle them to present possession. A fifth arises from a claim of division of rights arising from present possession. A sixth springs from claims which could lead, if successful, to interest in the property but are initially only charges against it. A seventh deals with parts of the property which are fixed in place as compared with other things which are capable of movement, of which certain fixtures may be examples.

§ 14.03(c) Differences Between Real Property and Personal Property.

§ 14.03(c)(1) In General.

Differentiation of realty and personalty. Both the civil and the common law recognize that by the nature of their physical properties the same rules cannot be applicable to both realty and personalty. So in many areas of property law it becomes necessary to distinguish between real and personal property. The difference is deeply involved in history. Primitive people recognized a property right in weapons, tools, pottery, clothing and livestock long before they contemplated realty as an object of ownership. Even places of shelter such as caves were probably the object of communal or family rather than individual ownership. The growth of the feudal doctrine of seisin, of necessity, placed realty in a different legal position from personalty in certain fields. The development of the feudal system widened the gap between realty and property law. The concept of seisin was applicable only to realty, and the idea of the sovereign being the basic owner of land under seisin was never applied to personalty. Bracton's ideas, brought back from his civil law training at Bologna, were applied to personalty. Thus, his treatment of personalty was colored by the civil law or the developing law merchant. He left the real estate law largely untouched. Attempts of judges like Mansfield to attune the real estate law to the law merchant n230 were rebuffed.

After the enactment of the statute 12 Car. 2, ch. 24, the statute abolishing tenures in 1660, property became classified on a new scheme, in that actions for the recovery of land were called real actions and actions respecting chattels were called actions in personam. The distinction was between rights in rem which had for their subject things real--or land and all that was permanently affixed to the land--and rights in personam, which had for their subject things personal or movable.

While most of the burdensome incidents of feudal tenure were taken away in 1660 by the statute abolishing tenures, the theory of the system remained operative. This statute, however, had the effect of breaking down the chief distinction between the different kinds of property, to which distinction the feudal system had given emphasis. Though the statute had the effect of changing knight service into socage, it did not abolish the concept of tenure, and the maxim still obtained that "all lands are holden," except those belonging to the Crown. After the enactment of that statute, property naturally came under a different classification. Long before the use of the word "real as to property, actions for the recovery of land had been called real actions, because, the land being immovable and indestructible, the identical land, the very thing, or the res as it was called, could be recovered. The action to recover a chattel was not called real, because the action was for damages, and not for the thing itself. Indeed, except in the action of replevin, there was no way at common law to compel the defendant to restore the very thing if the defendant chose to withhold it. Hence, the action was in personam, to obtain in damages a useful vindication, and not in rem, to recover the specific res or thing. It followed that, though lands and chattels were equally real, land was called real, because the action to recover it was in rem, and chattels were called personal, because the action as to them was in personam.

In special areas such as probate law the parliamentary treatment of realty, like the Mortmain acts, caused personalty to be channeled into the ecclesiastical or civil law instead of following the common-law course of realty.

The statute abolishing feudal service operated as a confirmation of title in the heir, but creditors were not allowed to subject lands in the hands of heirs to the satisfaction of their claims against the ancestor. Consequently executors and administrators, whose principal function is to pay creditors out of the estate, had no interest nor duties with reference to such lands. It is very important, for the purpose of ascertaining the scope and meaning of the numerous rules, statutory enactments and judicial decisions bearing upon the distinction between real and personal property, to keep in mind that they are traceable to conditions no longer existing in England, and which never had any existence in this country.

While the essential difference between the two kinds of property is well understood and uniformly recognized, the distinction is in some cases difficult in its application. At common law, real estate or real property comprehended everything included in the terms--lands, tenements, and hereditaments--that is, the surface of the earth and everything attached thereto. On the other hand the term "personal property," when applied to objects or things, has reference to things temporary and perishable as to time and movable as to space. Great difficulty in determining whether a piece of property, where movable, and yet attached, is real or personal property, will often arise n231 since the same thing is at different times classed as one or the other according to its situation, use or accidental qualities.

With reference to the devolution of property on the death of the owner the common-law distinction between real and personal property is still recognized in most of the American states, and with it the doctrine that real property descends to the heirs, and personal property to the executor or administrator. Also, the difference between movable and immovable property gives rise to important distinctions between the formalities necessary to constitute a valid testamentary disposition and the law that may govern the descent. Inheritance of immovable property must be determined by the law of the place where it is situated, but movables generally descend according to the law of the owner's domicile.

It is thought by some writers that goods and chattels were called personal because they were capable of attending the owner's person wherever the owner might go, but the better explanation seems that based on the type of judicial relief available for the different kinds of property. n232 Generally speaking the words "personal property" include everything except real estate. n233

The statutory requirements of a conveyance do not determine the classification of the property conveyed as to whether it is real or personal. n234 Property may undergo certain physical changes which will convert realty into personalty or bring about the reverse. Thus, under one legal theory growing crops may be realty, but when matured, though unsevered, may be personalty. n235 Property severed from the soil and thus becoming personalty may, over the course of years, revert to the soil. n236 On the other hand physical changes, though material, may leave the legal nature of the property unchanged. Thus, the proceeds of a fire or windstorm insurance policy may take the place of the destroyed realty. Severed timber or crops may remain realty. Under one theory "trade fixtures" remain personalty even though physically annexed to the realty. Certain principles of law may be applied in the absence of physical changes to convert one into the other. Thus, the doctrine of equitable conversion converts realty into personalty in the eyes of the law, even though there has been no actual physical change. Under the "institutional doctrine," unattached chattels can become realty. n237

No single test can be applied to distinguish realty from personalty. The nature of the property may be determinative in the case of solid minerals and the location of the property may be determinative in the case of fugitive minerals. In some states, the relation of the property to the realty, the extent of injury to the realty or to the property on removal, the intent of the parties, all are operative factors in determining its nature as realty or personalty. Considerable difficulty has been experienced by the courts in determining whether electric appliances are real or personal property. Each particular case is governed largely by its own facts and not by a general rule. n238 It has been held that an electric power line located on a highway is personal property and that a mortgage thereof is a chattel mortgage. n239 Some courts draw a distinction between public utilities and other owners of real property and hold that what would be real property when held by one owner is personal property when owned and used by a public utility. n240 In some situations such as compensation in condemnation cases the doctrine of constructive annexation has been greatly widened. n241 The status of property, whether real or personal, is to be determined as of the date of its acquisition n242 The rule that the status of property, whether real or personal, becomes fixed as of the date of its acquisition refers particularly to the legal title and not directly to interests founded upon equitable considerations to which the legal title may be subject. n243

The term "property," when used in its most comprehensive sense, will include both real and personal property, unless restricted in its meaning by the context. n244 The words denote intangible as well as tangible personal property. n245

The mobility of personalty necessarily causes a different practical approach of the law to personalty than to realty. So the treatment of alienation and the creation of liens on personalty must be other than on realty. "Personal property" may be used as having reference to everything which is the subject of ownership except lands and interests in lands, or as embracing only goods and chattels to the exclusion of money, notes and choses in action. n246 Land does not pass as an appurtenance to land. n247

The beneficial interest under a land trust is personal property. n248 Realty can become personalty through severance and personalty can be converted into realty under the "fixtures" doctrine, and through legal fiction immovables may become personalty. An article may as between the vendor and vendee remain a chattel but become real property as between a mortgagor and mortgagee. n249

§ 14.03(c)(2) Examples of Real Property and Personal Property.

Examples of realty and personalty. While all property must fall into one of the classifications of realty, personalty or chattels real, the jurisdictions are by no means in harmony as to the category in which particular property or property interests fall. n250 Real estate itself may under certain circumstances be treated in the eyes of the law as personalty, and lots offered for sale by a real estate partnership may be treated as personalty for purposes of partnership law. n251

There is disagreement as to the extent that a shareholder or member's interest in a real estate corporation is realty or personalty. n252

While Congress has authorized the taxation of real property owned by the United States but leased to private citizens, n253 such property can be taxed only as personalty, and not as real estate, n254 and matters usually personalty may become realty. n255 Ordinarily, n256 a building becomes a part of the land upon which it stands, but it may be treated as personalty as between persons who deal with it as such. n257 Under the law of Illinois, a building permanently connected with the soil is considered real property. n258 As to fixtures, no absolute rule can be stated since the maxim "whatever is affixed to the soil, belongs to the soil," has always had exceptions, and they increase with the ever-varying necessities and exigencies of society. n259

Royalty interests in mineral rights are personal property, but where the mineral interest in land and the surface rights are owned separately each interest is regarded as realty. n260 So a contract for sale and removal of a fixture was held a contract for sale of goods. n261 An easement in gross, being a personal right, is an interest in real property but is not personal property, there being no dominant tenement. n262 Where a sales contract provided for access to a pool but the deed omitted reference to that access, only a personal license resulted. n263

Leasehold estates and estates for years are for some purposes treated at common law as personal property. n264 Upon the death of the lessee the unexpired term of the lease becomes an asset in the hands of the executor or administrator. n265 While oil and gas leases are, in many respects, dissimilar to ordinary leases, some cases treat them essentially as personalty. n266 But it has been held that an oil lease is an interest in realty and is governed by the same rule as that which governs property rights. n267

Under one rule it would seem the grant of an exclusive privilege to go upon land for the purpose of exploring for oil or gas, the grantor to receive part of the oil or gas mined, does not vest in the grantee any estate in the land or oil or gas, but is merely a license or grant. Such a lease creates an incorporeal hereditament only, and the lessee has no right or title to the oil or gas lying under the surface of the land. n268 Whether a conveyance creates a fee in the minerals under the surface of the land or an incorporeal hereditament entitling the grantee to mine and remove minerals, giving no right in them until mined, is to be determined by the intention of the parties as disclosed by the instrument read in the light of the surrounding circumstances rather than from the instrument itself. n269 It is sometimes held that oil rights or leases are incorporeal hereditaments, profits a prendre, resting in grant and not in livery and are incapable of possession. n270 So a gross products tax on production of oil and gas is a tax on personalty. n271

Interests in fugitive minerals in place are treated as realty for purposes of the Statute of Frauds, n272 recording acts, n273 venue, n274 homestead laws, n275 rights of cotenants, n276 measure of damages to realty n277 and taxation. n278 A royalty interest in the grantor of a mineral lease passes with the sale of the land, but not if there is a community lease. In the latter case the royalty is an incorporeal hereditament in gross. n279 An overriding royalty in oil and gas leases is an interest in realty within the Statute of Frauds. n280

Immovability is not of itself a final test as between realty and personalty. n281 Reservations of oil royalties are personalty. n282 A condominium unit's characteristics are those of personalty, not realty. n283

As between the parties, property may be treated as realty or personalty. n284 Growing trees are usually realty, n285 but under some circumstances, such as in the case of nurseries, they may be personalty; n286 on the other hand, they may remain realty after severance. A grant of perpetual rights to manufacture turpentine from timber growing on land is valid. n287 Where a first refusal has been executed, an oil, gas and mineral lease is a sale of interest in the land for the purpose of such refusal. n288 Crude turpentine in turpentine boxes in pine trees in a state to be dipped up is personalty.

n289 The courts divide as to whether matured but unharvested crops are personalty or whether they are realty and pass with a sale of land. n290

As is seen elsewhere herein, trade fixtures are held by some courts to be chattels while others treat them as having become realty, severable under certain conditions. n291 The interest of a beneficiary in a land trust is personalty. n292

Railroad tracks are realty or personalty depending on the "benefit of the land" test. n293 While the property in a church pew is considered as partaking of the character of real estate, n294 it is in some jurisdictions a mere usufructuary right, n295 an easement or privilege in the freehold of another. n296

The vendor's interests under an executory real estate contract are personal property. n297 Under the doctrine of equitable conversion, when a land sales contract becomes binding, the seller's interest is considered personalty and the buyer's interest realty. The same rule has been applied in contracts to devise and in directions in wills to the executor to sell realty. Thus, upon the doctrine that courts of equity consider that done which should have been done, money is sometimes treated as real estate. Under the doctrine of equitable conversion, money directed to be employed in the purchase of land is considered as land. n298 When land is converted into money, such as when a trustee under a trust with power to sell, unless there is an intent manifested by the settlor of the trust that by its disposition its nature shall be thereby changed, the fund takes the place of the land which.yielded it and is to be applied and disposed of in the same manner, until the object of the trust is accomplished. n299 Where the trustee sells the land as directed by the instrument creating the trust, the proceeds of the sale will be treated as real estate and distributed accordingly. n300 A fund derived from a payment by the city for lands taken for school purposes for the benefit of unknown owners must be treated as real estate. n301 Also, insurance money realized from the destruction of buildings on devised real estate will be treated as real property. n302 Upon a conveyance of land by the executor of a testator in pursuance of an option given by the testator during the testator's lifetime, the proceeds of the sale pass as real estate. n303 The proceeds of the sale of real estate, made by decree of court in a partition suit, retain the character of real estate for the purposes of distribution. n304 Likewise, where there is a compulsory conversion of real estate, such as in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and without the consent or against the will of the owner of the fee, the compensation awarded will be treated as real estate until the owner accepts it as personal property. n305 Also, where the real estate of a deceased testator is taken under the power of eminent domain, the rights of beneficiaries previously determined by law are not affected, and the damages awarded for the land are distributable as realty. n306 Where real estate is purchased with stolen money, the owner of the money does not become the owner of the land. n307

An equitable conversion of real estate into money is accomplished under a will if there is a positive direction to sell, an absolute necessity to sell in order to carry out the provisions of the will, or such a blending of realty and personalty by the testator in the will as to clearly show an intention to create a fund out of all of the property and to bequeath it as money. It has been held that real estate purchased by a guardian with the ward's money descends as personalty upon the ward's death. n308

Where real estate of a decedent is converted into money for the payment of debts, whatever surplus remains after a proper application of the funds for that purpose retains the character of real estate for the purpose of succession or distribution. n309

The owner of a tax certificate has an equitable right in the property with a right to call in the legal title by producing the certificate of purchase in case there has been no redemption. n310 It has been held that a tax certificate is real property and upon the death of the purchaser, passes to the heirs at law. n311

A house may be personalty and not a fixture as against a prior mortgagee, if not for agricultural purposes, and if the owner and the licensee who built the house so intended. n312 An interest of a partner in the partnership was held personalty, even though the partnership owned realty. n313

There is a growing tendency to treat the creation of a lease as the "sale" of space, thus invoking covenants of warranty that accompany sales of personalty. Fixed minerals after extraction become personalty. n314

There is a disagreement as to the extent that a shareholder or member's interest in a real estate corporation is realty or personalty. n315

An article may, as between the vendor and vendee remain a chattel, but become real property as between a mortgagor and mortgagee. n316

§ 14.03(c)(3) Graves.

One who purchases a cemetery lot for a valuable consideration obtains a property right--denominated as an easement, a license, or a privilege--which is cognizable as a matter of equity. This property right is entitled to protection from invasion by a trespasser or by the inappropriate acts of cemetery corporation, and the right is not revocable at the will of the cemetery corporation. n317 The grantee of the lot does not acquire a fee simple title but acquires only the lot limited to its intended burial purposes. The grantee is not the ordinary owner of an easement, and the right to have drives, walks and approaches kept in good repair does not depend on the law of easements. n318

§ 14.03(c)(4) Wild Animals.

Animals as real property. The basic legal proposition applicable to ferae naturae, wild animals, is that they initially belong to no one. The one who first reduces them to possession by capture acquires title to the animal. n319 One places title in the sovereign. n320 Another places title in the sovereign in trust for the public to be devoted to the public good. n321

According to the second positioin, wild birds and wild quadrupeds are owned by the state in its sovereign capacity as distinguished from its proprietary capacity, and are held by the state as trustee for the use and common benefit of people in the state. n322 This sovereign ownership originally vested in the colonial governments and was passed to the states or the United States, n323 Congress has the exclusive power to protect and regulate wildlife on public lands. n324

The third position recognizes no title until capture. n325 These rules are applicable where the animal is captured on public-owned grounds. Blackstone n326 gives title to the owner of the realty if the animal is started and killed on the owner's land, but to the captor if the animal is started on the land of a third person. There are differing positions, however, as to the rights of one who is the owner or legal possessor of the real estate on which the animal is found. Some cases seem to recognize some interest in the owner or possessor of the land where the animal is taken. n327 The cases are not in accord as to whether, when ferae naturae have been reduced to possession and later escape, the captor may pursue them on another's land. n328

Regarding the right to fish, the leading rule is that the right to navigate carries with it the right to fish. n329 In such cases the title to the aquatic life is in the state but is generally considered to be held in trust for the public, so that the state cannot give an exclusive right to take fish but may regulate its taking for the benefit of all citizens. n330 It has been held, however, that this trusteeship is for the benefit of citizens of the particular state, not for all persons. n331 In this the concept differs from the position that the king owned fish and game on state lands and could make individual grants to hunt and fish. n332

The right to fish in navigable streams does not carry with it the right to trespass on privately owned land to reach the water. n333 In England where the concept of navigability was synonymous with tidal waters, the king's right in the tide lands was a right that could be granted to personss, n334 but the right of fishing and navigation was a public right n335 and could not be abridged by the king, at least.

In England title to nontidal waters and the rights of fishing therein are in the riparian owners subject to a public easement of navigation. n336 After the American Revolution the royal ownership of tidal waters in the newly independent colonies passed to the states. n337 At common law the piscatory and navigation rights were separate. n338 This is the rule in some states today. n339 Other states give the public the right to fish as coincidental with the right of navigation, n340 even though title to the bed is in private hands. n341 But with respect to fish in a nonnavigable stream or in a navigable stream where title to the bed is in private hands, the cases divide as to whether it is trespass for the public to fish therein. n342

Where private property is inundated by navigable waters the owner of the soil has an exclusive right to fish even where there is a public right of fishing in navigable waters. n343 California has ruled otherwise, however. n344 At common law, fish and game could be the subject of private ownership, and where so owned and confined, though still alive and uncaptured, were realty. n345 This is probably the leading rule today. n346 According to one theory, however, public policy gives the sovereign the right to regulate the taking n347 and even the possession and confinement of wild animals. Thus the sovereign--state n348 or federal--may by statute place a particular species in the public domain. n349

The ferae naturae theory has been applied to inanimate objects. Where the owner of a chattel has parted with possession thereof voluntarily or involuntarily and the object goes to rest on the real estate of another, the owner does not lose title thereto unless the owner has voluntarily abandoned it. n350 Abandonment, however, requires the combination of a discarding of possession and an intent to abandon. If the article so placed on realty which is in the possession of another is discovered by another, title is not lost, n351 but a legal question arises as to whether possession of the article is in the finder or in the possessor of the realty. Whoever does have such possession has title as against all of the world except the true owner. In solving the question of the rights of the finder versus the possessor of the land where the item is found, three rules were developed by the courts: lost property, mislaid property and treasure trove.

The early common law gave possession of lost property to the finder, n352 even though the finder was a trespasser. n353 Exceptions were made where the finder was an employee whose duty it was to look for such lost objects n354 or where the object was found in a closely confined and controlled place. n355 A more modern trend developed giving possession to the possessor of the land where the item was found. n356 Each theory has as its aim the restoration of the property to the true owner. The finder theory has it that the finder will be more likely to make the discovery known if the finder may keep the item unless the owner is found. n357 Proponents of the other theory assert that the owner is most likely to search for the property where it was lost. If the property was merely deposited by the owner with intent to pick it up later, and then forgotten, it is "mislaid" property and possession is in the owner of the land where the item was left, not the person who discovers it. n358

Treasure trove is property, usually gold, silver or jewels, found under conditions such as lead to the conclusion that it was deliberately placed there so long ago that the owner has been forever lost. n359 Treasure trove under n360 the English law belongs to the Crown. The leading American rule gives it to the finder. n361 But treasure trove and lost property are often confused and in some instances go with the realty. n362 The cases are in dispute in the case of lost goods whether the licensee-finder or the owner of the land is entitled to the possession of goods found on the premises by the licensee.

Underground water is often considered ferae naturae as were oil and gas in the early days.

§ 14.03(c)(5) Chattels Real.

Chattels real. The common law recognized certain interests in land which stood midway between realty and personalty, partaking partially of the attributes of both. n363 At common law an estate less than a freehold, such as estates for years, at will and by sufferance, was personal property and passed primarily, on the death of the owner, to the executor or administrator. These interests were termed "chattels real." n364

Land, as the object of rights, is described as a thing real or as real property. The rights or estate which the owner in fee or for life has in land are also described as real property, but those rights which the owner of a leasehold interest has in and to the land or real property are not real property or real estate, but a chattel real, which is personalty. n365 Thus, it is held that a mining lease with easement rights creates an interest in land but is not real property. n366

It is said that while a chattel real is considered for most purposes as being personal property, it is also recognized as constituting an interest in real estate. n367 This seems to be the rule in the absence of a statute changing it. n368 A lease for years is generally considered personal property, even though the statute calls it a "chattel real." n369 Where this rule obtains, the lease may be orally assigned. n370 A ninety-nine-year lease, renewable forever, has been held real property and subject to dower rights. n371

Chattels real are to be distinguished, on the one hand, from things which have no concern with the land, such as mere movables and rights connected with them, which are chattels personal, and, on the other band, from a freehold, which is realty. n372 While a chattel real is an interest which is annexed to or concerns real estate, it is personal property and not real estate, unless so declared by statute. n373 Many courts have held that leaseholds are not real property within the meaning of dower statutes. n374 Under some statutes chattels real, such as leaseholds, are considered real estate for certain purposes. n375 Thus, they have been declared real estate for purposes of conveyance n376 and levy and sale on execution. n377

The common-law rule that a leasehold interest in land is considered personal property and governed generally by rules applicable to such property remains in force in all cases where not changed by statute. n378 Under a statute defining the term "real property" as including real, estate, lands, tenements and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, it has been held that a chattel real is not included. n379

A major difficulty with the chattel real concept, particularly with respect to leaseholds, is that, while its existence is recognized in all jurisdictions, there is much disagreement as to whether in particular instances it takes on the flavor of realty or personalty. A chattel real is universally recognized as personalty for probate purposes. But whether it is realty or personalty for purposes of alienation, n380 Statutes of Fraud, recordation, taxation and taking by eminent domain depends on the particular jurisdiction.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 146. York v. Stone, 34 P.2d 911 (Wash. 1934). See Washington Fruit & Produce Co. v. Yakima, 100 P.2d 8 (Wash. 1940). See Edward Kent, Property, Power, and Authority, 41 BROOKLYN L. Rev. 541(1975).

(n2)Footnote 147. Franklin v. Franklin, 155 P.2d 637 (Cal. App. 1945); Barcellos v. Wolfsen, Inc. v. Westlands Water Dist., 849 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. Cal. 1993); Floyd v. Title Exch. & Pawn of Aniston, Inc., 620 So. 2d 576 (Ala. 1993); Lopiano v. Lopiano, 247 Conn. 356 (1998); Texas v. Public Util. Comm'n, 883 S.W.2d 190 (Tex. 1994); Nuzzaci v. Nuzzaci, 1995 Del. Earn. Ct. LEXIS 30 (Del. Fam. Ct. 1995).

(n3)Footnote 148. Restatement, Law of Property 3. A public officeholder has no property right in the office: Lanza v. Wagner, 229 N.Y.S.2d 380 (1962).

(n4)Footnote 149. Presbrey v. Simpson, 290 F. 333 (App. D.C. 1923); Wayne v. Hartridge. 92 S.E. 937 (Ga. 1917); Johnson v. Mansfield, 195 S.W. 453 (Ky. 1917); Ellet v. McCord, 41 S.W.2d 110 (Tex. App. 1931). Temple Hoyne Buell Found. v. Holland & Hart, 851 P.2d 192 (Colo. App. 1992); In re Estate of Thompson, 511 N.W.2d 374 (Iowa 1994) (referring to definition of personal property); In re Estate of Russell, 888 P.2d 489 (N.M. App. 1994) (referring to definition of personal property).

(n5)Footnote 150. Associated Press v. International News Service, 245 F. 244 (2d Cir. 1917): Yuba River Power Co. v. Nevada Irr. Dist., 279 P. 128 (Cal. 1929): Connelly v. Special Road & Bridg Dist. No. 5, 126 So. 794; Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Hammett, 149 So. 525 (La. 1933); United States v. Hemmen, 51 F.3d 883 (9th Cir. 1995); In re

Albion Disposal, Inc., 152 B.R. 794 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1993); Kuro, Inc. v. Florida, 713 So. 2d 1021 (Fla. Ct. App. 1998); Holtz v. Board of Comm'rs of Elkhart Cty., 560 N.E.2d 645 (Ind. 1990); Dodds v. Shamer, 663 A.2d 1318 (Md. App. 1995); Ohio Edison Co. v. PUC of Ohio, 678 N.E.2d 922 (Ohio 1977); Railroad Comm'n of Texas v. Waste Mgt. of Texas, 880 S.W.2d 835 (Tex. App. 1994); Harrington v. Harrington, 935 P.2d 1357 (Wash. App. 1997).

(n6)Footnote 151. Shedd v. Patterson, 144 N.E. 5 (Ill. 1924).

(n7)Footnote 152. Downing v. Municipal Court, 198 P.2d 923 (Cal. App. 1948); Tatum Bros. Real Estate & Inv. Co. v. Watson, 109 So. 623 (Fla. 1926); Shedd v. Patterson, 144 N.E. 5 (Ill. 1924); Howlett v. McGarvey, 79 N.E.2d 864 (Ill. App. 1948); Cleveland v. Cuyahoga, 79 N.E.2d 576 (Ohio 1946). A person may recover for the use of a literary creation even if the creation is uncopyrightable, if it was disclosed under contract: Desny v. Wilder, 299 P.2d 257 (Cal. 1956). Exchange Nat'l Bank of Chicago v. American Nat'l Bank of Libertyville, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16819 (N.D. Ill. 1991).

(n8)Footnote 153. Hoyd v. Citizens Bank of Albany Co., 89 F.2d 105 (6th Cir. 1937); Wapsie Power & Light Co. v. Tipton, 193 N.W. 643 (Iowa 1923); State v. Cowen, 3 N.W.2d 176 (Iowa 1942); Clark v. Lucas County Board of Review, 44 N.W.2d 748 (Iowa 1950); Titus v. Terkelsen, 18 N.E.2d 444 (Mass. 1939); McAlister v. Pritchard, 230 S.W. 66 (Mo. 1921); Gibbes v. National Hosp. Service, 24 S.E. 2d 513 (S.C. 1943). When an idea, though not patentable or subject to copyright is reduced to concrete detailed form and is more than a mere abstraction, it becomes a property right: Belt v. Hamilton Nat'l Bank, 108 F. Supp. 689 (D.D.C. 1952); Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. Meyer, 194 N.E. 206 (Ind. App. 1935). But see Grombach Productions, Inc. v. Waring. 59 N.E.2d 425 (N.Y. 1944). Otherwise an idea is not a property right: Rodriquez v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 N.Y.S.2d 759 (1940). In re Kerwin, 996 F.2d 552 (2d Cir. 1993); Armstrong v. United States, Jefferson Nat'l Bank, 7 F. Supp. 758 (W.D. Va. 1998): In re Gomes, 219 B.R. 286 (Bankr. D. Or. 1998); In re Whyte, 164 B.R. 976 (Bankr. N.D. Ind. 1993).

(n9)Footnote 154. Yocum v. Power, 157 A.2d 368 (Pa. 1960).

(n10)Footnote 155. State ex rel. St. Louis v. Baumann, 153 S.W.2d 31 (Mo. 1941). "Where a right is subject to ownership or transfer and may be brought within the dominion and control of the court through some recognized process, it is property." Investment & Securities Co. v. Robbins, 49 F. Supp. 620 (E.D. Wash. 1943). NHG Minn. IX v. County of Wright, 1996 Minn. Tax LEXIS 21 (Minn. 1996).

(n11)Footnote 156. Paloma Inv. Ltd. Partnership v. Jenkins, 978 P.2d 110, 115 (Ariz. App. Div. 1998) (water rights are property rights; transfer of water rights is a conveyance); Lindsey v. McClure, 136 F.2d 65 (10th Cir. 1943). See infra Chapter 50, Water Rights. In re Smith, 924 P.2d 155 (Colo. 1996); In re General Adjudication of Rights to the Use of Water From the Snake River Basin Water Sys., 832 P.2d 289 (Idaho 1992).

(n12)Footnote 157. Whitmore v. Murray, 154 P.2d 748 (Utah 1944).

(n13)Footnote 158. Feest v. Hillcrest Cemetery, 19 N.W.2d 246 (Wis. 1945).

(n14)Footnote 159. Franklin v. Franklin, 155 P.2d 637 (Cal. App. 1945); Finley v. Winkler, 222 P.2d 345 (Cal. 1950); Royal Oak Tp. v. Berkley, 16 N.W.2d 83 (Mich. 1944).

(n15)Footnote 160. Cook v. John H. Mathis Co., 61 A.2d 585 (N.J. 1948).

(n16)Footnote 161. Scriven v. Scriven, 45 N.W.2d 760 (Neb. 1951); Howarth v. Gilman, 65 A.2d 691 (Pa. 1949).

(n17)Footnote 162. Ross v. Gore, 48 So. 2d 412 (Fla. 1950); Gordon v. Florida, 608 So. 2d 800 (Fla. 1992).

(n18)Footnote 163. In re Bonza's Estate, 51 Lack. Jur. 129 (Pa. Orph. 1950).

(n19)Footnote 164. Bogan v. Wiley, 202 P.2d 824 (Cal. App. 1948). Every right to land is "title": Shingleton v.

State, 133 S.E.2d 183 (N.C. 1963). A contingent remainder is property regardless of how improbable the contingency: In re Marriage of Brown, 126 Cal. Rptr. 633 (1976).

(n20)Footnote 165. Fields v. Michael, 205 P.2d 402 (Cal. App. 1949).

(n21)Footnote 166. Howarth v. Gilman, 65 A.2d 691 (Pa. 1949).

(n22)Footnote 167. Thomison v. Hillcrest Athletic Ass'n, 5 A.2d 236 (Del. 1939).

(n23)Footnote 168. Nashville, C.& St. L.R. Co. v. Wallace, 288 U.S. 249 (1933); Liddick v. Council Bluffs, 5 N.W.2d 361 (Iowa 1942); Todeva v. Oliver Iron Min. Co., 45 N.W.2d 782 (Minn. 1951).

(n24)Footnote 169. Woolf v. Fuller, 174 A. 193 (N.H. 1934).

(n25)Footnote 170. The above definition was given in a case holding a city zoning ordinance unconstitutional, the court saying: "Anything which destroys any of these elements of property, to the extent destroys the property itself. The substantial value of property lies in its use. If the right of use be denied, the value of the property is annihilated and ownership is rendered a barren right. Therefore a law which forbids the use of a certain kind of property, strips it of an essential attribute and in actual result proscribes its ownership." Spann v. Dallas, 235 S.W. 513 (Tex. 1921). To the same effect see Dallas v. Mitchell, 245 S.W. 944 (Tex. App. 1922); General Tire & Rubber Co. v. Texas Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 102 S.W.2d 1086 (Tex. App. 1937). See also Helvering v. Elias, 122 F.2d 171 (2d Cir. 1941); O'Connor v. Moscow, 202 P.2d 401 (Idaho 1949), 9 A.L.R. 2d 1031; Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921); Winchester v. Ring, 144 N.E. 333 (Ill. 1924); O'Brien v. Stoneman, 288 N.W. 447 (Iowa 1939); State v. Wiley, 3 N.W.2d 620 (Iowa 1942); State ex rel. St. Louis v. Baumann, 153 S.W.2d 31 (Mo. 1941); Hildebrand v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 14 S.E.2d 252 (N.C. 1941); Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925); Squire v. Guardian Trust Co., 84 N.E.2d 99 (Ohio 1945), aff'd 68 N.E.2d 312 (Ohio 1946).

(n26)Footnote 171. Under the common law there could be no property rights in fire, light, air and water since they were not capable of possession: 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 395.

(n27)Footnote 172. Restatement, Law of Property, Ch. 1, Introductory Note.

(n28)Footnote 173. Howlett v. Doglio, 83 N.E.2d 708 (Ill. 1949). See Restatement, Conflict of Laws, Ch. 7, Introductory Note.

(n29)Footnote 174. Tatum Bros. Real Estate & Inv. Co. v. Watson, 109 So. 623 (Fla. 1926); Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921); Sachs v. Cluett, Peabody & Co., 39 N.Y.S.2d 853 (1943). The term "property" does not mean the physical object itself but certain rights over the object, and is the right to possession, use. and disposition of a thing in such manner as is not inconsistent with law: In re Forsstrom. 38 P.2d 878 (Ariz. 1934); Meek v. State, 185 N.E. 899 (Ind. 1933). The word "property" as used in a constitutional provision that mechanics and materialmen shall have a lien, refers to the structure, and not simply to the interest in the property of the one by whom the improvement was made: English v. Olympic Auditorium, 20 P.2d 946 (Cal. 1933).

(n30)Footnote 175. Eliasberg Bros. Merc. Co. v. Grimes, 86 So. 56 (Ala. 1920); State Street Furn. Co. v. Armour & Co., 177 N.E. 702 (Ill. 1931); Great Northern R. Co. v. Washington Elec. Co., 86 P.2d 208 (Wash. 1939).

(n31)Footnote 176. Eliasberg Bros. Merc. Co. v. Grimes, 86 So. 56 (Ala. 1920); Spann v. Dallas, 235 S.W. 513 (Tex. 1921).

(n32)Footnote 177. In re Blalock, 31 F.2d 612 (N.D. Ga. 1929); Stevens v. State, 2 Ark. 291 (1840): McKeon v. Bisbee. 9 Cal. 137 (1858); Tatum Bros. Real Estate & Inv. Co. v. Watson, 109 So. 623 (Fla. 1926); Chicago & W.I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co., 4 N.E. 246 (Ill. 1886); Winchester v. Ring, 144 N.E. 333 (Ill. 1924); State Street

Furn. Co. v. Armour & Co., 177 N.E, 702 (Ill. 1931). Department of Financial Institutions v. General Finance Corp., 86 N.E.2d 444 (Ind. 1949); St. Louis v. Hill, 22 S.W. 861 (Mo. 1893); Low v. Rees Printing Co., 59 N.W. 362 (Neb. 1894); Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co., 74 N.W. 67 (Neb. 1898); Eaton v. Boston, C. & M R. Co., 51 N.H. 504 (1872; Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N.Y. 389 (1871): Brooklyn City R. Co. v. Kings County Trust Co., 212 N.Y.S. 343 (1925); In re Murphy's Will, 189 N.W. 497 (N.D. 1922); Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925); Waters v. Wolf. 29 A. 646 (Pa. 1894); Griffith v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co., 23 S.C. 25 (1885); In re Gunderderson's Will, 211 N.W. 791 (Wis. 1927). See Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Jones. 51 N.E.2d 256(Ill. 1943); State v. Cowen. 3 N.W. 2d 176 (Iowa 1942); Titus v. Terkelsen, 18 N.E.2d 444 (Mass. 1939); Womack v. Womack. 172 S.W.2d 307 (Tex. 1943). Real or personal property commonly denotes property of all kinds: McFadden v. Murray, 257 P. 999 (N.M. 1927), See also Peter Herzog, Conflict of Laws in Land Transactions: The Borderland Between Contract and Property Matters--A Comparative Law, 8 Syracuse L. Rev. 191.

(n33)Footnote 178. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta. 203 U.S. 390 (1906); People v, Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., 51 Cal. 243 (1876); Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 41 N.E.45 (Ill. 1894); Vaughan v. Murfreesborough, 2 S.E. 676 (N.C. 1887); Waters v. Wolf, 29 A, 646 (Pa. 1894).

(n34)Footnote 179. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Arenz, 290 U.S. 66 (1933); Citizens State Bank v, Vidal, 114 F.2d 380 (10th Cir. 1940); Hildebrand v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 14 S.E.2d 252 (N.C. 1941). Mineral rights are real estate in Alabama: Locke v. Locke, 280 So. 2d 773 (Ala 1973).

(n35)Footnote 180. Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571 (1934).

(n36)Footnote 181. Flake v. Greensboro News Co., 195 S.E. 55 (N.C. 1938).

(n37)Footnote 182. Nourse v. Russellville, 78 S.W.2d 761 (Ky. 1935).

(n38)Footnote 183. Young v. Gurdon, 275 S.W. 890 (Ark. 1925).

(n39)Footnote 184. In re Emerson's Estate, 183 N.W. 327 (Iowa 1921); In re Hagar's Estate, 126 A. 507 (Vt. 1924).

(n40)Footnote 185. Spann v. Dallas, 235 S.W. 513 (Tex. 1921). See also Reimer v. Dallas, 129 A. 390 (N.J. 1925).

(n41)Footnote 186. Citizens State Bank v. Vidal, 114 F.2d 380 (10th Cir. 1940); Dixon v. People, 48 N.E. 108 (Ill. 1897); Hildebrand v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 14 S.E.2d 252 (N.C. 1941). See Chicago & W.I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co., 4 N.E. 246 (Ill. 1886); St. Louis v. Hill, 22 S.W. 861 (Mo. 1893); Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co., 51 N.H. 504 (1872); McCown v. Fraser, 192 A. 674 (Pa. 1977). The equitable estate is the substance and the legal estate the shadow: Hendrickson v. Cubage, 309 S.W.2d 306 (Ark. 1958).

(n42)Footnote 187. *Cuneo v. Chicago, 41 N.E.2d 473 (Ill. 1942);*Guillet v. Livernois. 8N.E.2d 921 (Mass. 1937).

(n43)Footnote 188. Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U.S. 197 (1923).

(n44)Footnote 189. Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U.S. 197 (1923); Seigal v. Warrick, 214 S.W.2d 883 (Tex. App. 1948). The right of persons to use their property for lawful purposes is guaranteed to them: Clinton v. Standard Oil Co., 137 S.E. 183 (N.C. 1927).

(n45)Footnote 190. St. Louis v. Hill, 22 S.W. 861 (Mo. 1893); Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co., 51 N.H. 504 (1872); Waters v. Wolf, 29 A. 646 (Pa. 1894).

(n46)Footnote 191. McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137 (1858); Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co., 74 N.W. 67 (Neb. 1898).

(n47)Footnote 192. In re Rosenberg's Will. 199 N.E. 206 (N.Y. 1935).

(n48)Footnote 193. Ampagoomian v. Atamian, 81 N.E.2d 843 (Mass. 1948) (a lien is a property right).

(n49)Footnote 194. United States v. Eleven Certain Parcels of Land, 45 F. Supp. 289 (S.D. Cal. 1942); Buehman v. Bechtel, 114 P.2d 227 (Ariz. 1941); Chicago & W.I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co., 4 N.E. 246 (Ill. 1886): Bartkowiak v. Bartkowiak, 283 N.W. 49 (Mich. 1938); St. Louis v. Hill, 22 S.W. 861 (Mo. 1893); Freeland v. Burdick, 204 S.W. 1123 (Mo. App. 1918); Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co., (51 N.H. 504 1872); Wynehamer v. People, 13 N.Y. 378 (1856).

(n50)Footnote 195. Osage Oil & Ref. Co. v. Chandler, 287 F. 848 (2d Cir. 1923); State ex inf. Brummall ex rel. Powell v. Gromer, 252 S.W. 705 (Mo. 1923); Grenz v. Anders, 241 P. 46 (Or. 1925); Mason v. Finley. S.E. 780 (S.C. 1924).

(n51)Footnote 196. Jacobsen v. Chee Lbr. Co., 223 P. 12 (Wash. 1924). The method of alienation of real property is governed by statute: In re Water Fronton Upper New York Bay, 157 N.E. 911 (N.Y. 1927).

(n52)Footnote 197. Wilson Bros. v. Branham, 109 S.E. 189 (Va. 1921).

(n53)Footnote 198. O'Connor v. Patton, 286 S.W. 822 (Ark. 1926).

(n54)Footnote 199. Northern Pennsylvania Power Co. v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Comm'n., 5 A.2d 133 (Pa. 1939). The right of alienation is inseparable from a fee simple: Williams v. McCann, 385 P.2d 788(Okla. 1963).

(n55)Footnote 200. Sand v. Beach. 200 N.E. 821 (N.Y. 1936).

(n56)Footnote 201. Burns v. Nolette, 144 A. 848 (N.H. 1929); Barbin v. Moore, 159 A. 409 (N.H. 1932).

(n57)Footnote 202. State of Washington ex rel. Seattle Title Trust Co. v. Roberge, 278 U.S. 116 (1928); In re Perrins' Appeal, 156 A. 305 (Pa. 1931). A landowner is not liable to an infant trespasser in the absence of actual knowledge of the dangerous condition: Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958). In New York a private person has a private remedy against a public nuisance if the person has suffered special damage: Graceland Corp. v. Consolidated Laundries Corp., 180 N.Y.S.2d 644 (1958). The owner of premises owes no duty to warn persons renting camping sites of the dangerous natural conditions: Hersch v, Anderson Acres, Inc., 146 N.E.2d 648 (Ohio 1957). See Validity of Zoning Undeveloped Areas, 29 Rocky. Mt. L. Rev. 202; Fleming James Jr., Tort Liability of Occupiers of Land: Duties Owed to Trespassers, 63 Yale L. J. 144 (1953).

(n58)Footnote 203. Hayes v. Hayes. 145 S.W. 1155 (Mo. 1912).

(n59)Footnote 204. Carnahan v. Hamilton, 107 N.E. 210 (Ill. 1914); In re Tiemen's Estate, 277 P. 385 (Wash. 1929).

(n60)Footnote 205. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390 (1906); Franklin v. Franklin, 155 P.2d 637 (Cal. App. 1945); Chicago v. Hulbert, 8 N.E. 812 (Ill, 1886). Vaughan v. Murfreesborough, 2 S.E. 676 (N.C. 1887).

(n61)Footnote 206. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N.Y. 389 (1871).

(n62)Footnote 207. Moxley v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 165 P.2d 15 (Cal. 1946).

(n63)Footnote 208. Smith v. Smith, 191 S.W.2d 956 (Ark. 1946); Myers v. Myers, 44 A.2d 455 (Md. 1945).

(n64)Footnote 209. Collins v. Welsh, 75 F.2d 894 (9th Cir. 1935).

(n65)Footnote 210. Cook v. Rigney. 126 P.2d 325 (Mont. 1942).

(n66)Footnote 211. Held to be property: Stamford v. Vuono, 143 A. 245 (Conn. 1928); Ashland-Boyd City- County Health Dep't. v. Riggs. 252 S.W.2d 922 (Ky. 1952); Ladd v. Boston, 24 N.E. 858 (Mass. 1890); Allen v. Detroit, 433 N.W. 317 (Mich. 1911): Burger v. St. Paul. 64 N.W.2d 73 (Minn. 1954); Peters v. Buckner, 232 S.W. 1024 (Mo. 1921); Hayes v. Waverly & P. R. Co., 27 A. 648 (N.J. 1893); Flynn v. New York, W. & B.R. Co., 112 N.E. 913 (N.Y. 1916): Raleigh v. Edwards, 71 S.E.2d 396 (N.C. 1952); Meagher v. Appalachian Elec. Power Co., 77 S.E.2d 461 (Va. 1953). Held to not be property: Friesen v. Glendale, 288 P. 1080 (Cal. 1930).

(n67)Footnote 212. Jones v. Corbyn 186 F.2d 450 (10th Cir. 1950).

(n68)Footnote 213. State v. Sandfer, 226 P.2d 438 (Okla, App. 1951).

(n69)Footnote 214. Jilek v. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co., 47 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1943).

(n70)Footnote 215. Williams v. Kitchens, 74 So, 2d 457 (Ala. 1954).

(n71)Footnote 216. Kenelm Edward Digby, An Introduction To The History of Law of Real Property (5th ed.) p. 72, n. 5.

(n72)Footnote 217. 2 Frederick Pollock and Frederic William Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward 1 181 (2d ed. 1968).

(n73)Footnote 218. In re McKinnon's Estate, 20 Erie C.L.J. 87 (Pa. 1937).

(n74)Footnote 219. Anne Arundel County v. City of Annapolis, 721 A.2d 217, 221 (Md. 1998) ("land" refers to waters as well as dry or fast land; "real property" means land in its broadest sense, including air space, the surface, the subsurface, and waters); Penniman v. French, 34 Mass. 404 (1835).

(n75)Footnote 220. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921).

(n76)Footnote 221. Id.

(n77)Footnote 222. Id.

(n78)Footnote 223. Patterson v. Kentucky. 97 U.S. 501 (1878); Rogers v. Biddeford & Saco Coal Co., 16 A.2d 131 (Me. 1940).

(n79)Footnote 224. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921).

(n80)Footnote 225. National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 F. 294 (7th Cir. 1902); Reynolds v. Cook, 3 S.E. 710 (Va. 1887); United Fuel Gas Co. v. Moles, 11 S.E.2d 369 (W. Va. 1940).

(n81)Footnote 226. State v. Royal Mineral Ass'n, 156 N.W. 128 (Minn. 1916); Union Fails Power Co. v. Marinette County, 298 N.W. 598 (Wis. 1 941).

(n82)Footnote 227. Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501 (1878).

(n83)Footnote 228. Mendez v. Bowie, 118 F.2d 435 (1st Cir. 1941); Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935). See Sain v. Montana Power Co., 20 F. Supp. 843 (D. Mont. 1937). See infra Chapter 60, The Law of Easements: Rights in the Property of Another.

(n84)Footnote 229. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921).

(n85)Footnote 230. FEARNE ON Contingent Remainders was written as a result of Mansfield's attempt to rationalize the Rule in Shelley's Case under the law merchant.

(n86)Footnote 231. Puerto Rico R. Light & Power Co. v. United States, 131 F.2d 491 (1st Cir. 1942) (holding rolling stock and equipment used by the plaintiff in operating a tramway under an easement did not constitute immovables as defined by statute); Bemis v. First Nat'l Bank, 40 S.W. 127 (Ark. 1897); Hinton v. Carney, 250 S.W.2d 364 (Tenn. 1952) (stock in a wholly-owned real estate corporation passes as personalty, not realty). See Hoing v. River Valley Gas Co., S.W.2d 513 (Ark. 1938) (there is no difference between realty and personalty except so far as such difference is created by particular statutes). Railroad tracks are immovables and pass to the vendee of the realty in the absence of recorded claims. American Creosote Co. v. Springer, 241 So. 2d 510 (La. 1970).

(n87)Footnote 232. See 3 U.S. Holdsworth, A History OF English Law 2, 22 (1922).

(n88)Footnote 233. Blakeman v. Harwell, 31 S.E.2d 50 (Ga. 1944); In re McGlathery's Estate, 166 A. 886 (Pa. 1933). See Erwin v. Steele, 228 S.W.2d 882 (Tex. App. 1950). See Chapter 4, supra, The Growth of the English Common Law of Real Property.

(n89)Footnote 234. Myers v. Arthur, 238 P. 899 (Wash. 1925).

(n90)Footnote 235. Manure produced from products of the land is realty, being a replenishment of the land; otherwise, it is personalty as between vendor and vendee. Gomez v. Dykes, 359 P.2d 760 (Ariz. 1961).

(n91)Footnote 236. Blocks of stone from an abandoned quarry dumped as waste and embedded in the soil for many years were held to have reverted to the land as realty: Preston v. Stover Leslie Flying Service, Inc., 190 N.E.2d 446 (Ohio App. 1962). Limestone severed from realty did not become personalty until it reached the crusher: Linwood Stone Prods. Co. v. State Dep't. of Revenue, 175 N.W.2d 393 (Iowa 1970). Severed earth materials such as top soil or fill are personal property: Toffolon v. Town of Avon, 378 A.2d 580 (Conn. 1977). Coal processed through a washer is personalty. Milford v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co., 355 A.2d 687 (Ala. 1978). Hydrocarbons that are reduced to possession are personalty: Carpenter v. Shaw, 272 P. 393 (Okla. 1928).

(n92)Footnote 237. Railroad tracks were held realty: Morgan's La. & Tex. R.R. & S.S. Co. v. Himalaya Planting & Mfg. Co., 78 So. 735 (La. 1918), reinstated by American Creosote Co. v. Springer. 241 So. 2d 510 (La. 19), overruling Caldwell v. Laurel Grove Co., 144 So. 718 (La. 1932), which had overruled the Morgan case.

(n93)Footnote 238. St. Paul Elec. Co. v. Baldwin Engineering Co., 199 NW. 9 (Minn. 1924). Under the Uniform Partnership Act the interest of each partner in real estate owned by the firm is "personal property": Vlamis v. De Weese. 140 A.2d 665 (Md. 1958). An automobile trailer is under the New York law taxable as realty to the owner of the property on which it is situated: New York Mobile Homes Ass'n v. Steckel, 176 N.Y.S.2d 482 (1958). Cash and securities are not included in "personal property" in a will: Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Wolfe. 96 S.E.2d 690 (N.C. 1957). Mortgage on leasehold is a real estate not a chattel mortgage: Abraham v. Fioramonte, 107 N.E.2d 321 (Ohio 1952).

(n94)Footnote 239. St. Paul Elec. Co. v. Baldwin Engineering Co., 199 N.W. 9 (Minn. 1924).

(n95)Footnote 240. Wisconsin Trac., Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co., 205 N.W. 551 (Wis. 1925).

(n96)Footnote 241. Chemical solutions and molten metal in tanks were held constructively annexed to the realty and so a part of the realty in condemnation compensation: In re Slum Clearance, 52 N.W.2d 195 (Mich. 1952).

(n97)Footnote 242. Adams v. Chamberlin, 188 S.E. 550 (Ga. App. 1936) (where by statute buildings were realty they could not be erected under an agreement that they would remain personalty); In re Witte's Estate, 150 P.2d 595 (Wash. 1944).

(n98)Footnote 243. Conley v. Moe, 110 P.2d 172 (Wash. 1941).

(n99)Footnote 244. Fosdick v. Hempstead, 8 N.Y.S. 772 (1890).

(n100)Footnote 245. Royal Oak Tp. v. Berkley, 16 N.W.2d 83 (Mich. 1944).

(n101)Footnote 246. Blakeman v. Harwell, 31 S.E.2d 50 (Ga. 1944). A beneficial interest in an Illinois land trust is personalty: Levine v. Pascal. 236 N.E.2d 425 (Ill. App. 1968).

(n102)Footnote 247. Brickell v. Trammell, 82 So. 221 (Fla. 1919). At common law land need not be fixed, so one could have a fee simple in 13 acres out of an 80-acre meadow owned in common with others with the 13 acres being apportioned every year. Coke on Littleton, § 4a (Coke treated "land" as including all castles, houses and other buildings). See John C. Blackman, Artificial Accession to Immovables, 28 La. L. Rev. 584 (1968).

(n103)Footnote 248. Shefner v. University Nat'l Bank, 353 N.E.2d 126 (Ill. App. 1976).

(n104)Footnote 249. Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Mauro, 368 A.2d 44 (Conn. 1976).

(n105)Footnote 250. Under the New York concept some chattels have such a "determinate character" as movables that they remain personal property after their annexation as realty, independent of any agreement which so prevails: Alf Holding Corp. v. American Stove Co., 171 N.E. 703 (N.Y. 1930). Shares of stock are personalty: Moreland v. Rucker Pharmacal Co., 59 F.R.D. 537 (W.D. La. 1973). Severed minerals become personalty: Milford v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co., 355 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1978). Oil lease was held an interest in realty: Straughn v. Sun Oil Co. (Delaware), 345 So. 2d 1062 (Fla. 1977).

(n106)Footnote 251. Harmon v. Martin, 71 N.E.2d 74 (Ill. 1947). A beneficiary's interest in a land trust is personalty: Ferraro v. Parker, 229 So. 2d 621 (Fla. App. 1969). In Illinois, a beneficial interest in a land trust is a "general intangible" under the Uniform Commercial Code, art. 9: Levine v. Pascal, 236 N.E.2d 425 (Ill. App. 1968). A beneficial interest in an unincorporated land trust was an incorporeal immovable: St. Charles Land Trust, Achille Guibet v. St. Amant, 217 So. 2d 385 (La. (1968). Vendor's interest under executory real estate contract is personal property: Committee of Protesting Citizens, Thorndyke Area v. Val Vue Sewer Dist., 545 P.2d 42 (Wash. App. 1976).

(n107)Footnote 252. Shares of stock invested wholly in realty are still personalty: Stockton v. Lucas, 482 F.2d 979 (U.S. App. 1973). Shares of stock in a cooperative apartment are personalty, not realty, in a will: In re Miller's Estate, 130 N.Y.S.2d 295 (1954); In re Turner's Estate, 233 N.Y.S.2d 108 (1962). See Legal Characterization of the Individual's Interest in a Cooperative Apartment: Realty or Personalty?, 73 COLUM. L. Rev. 250 (1973).

(n108)Footnote 253. 10 U.S.C. § 2667(e).

(n109)Footnote 254. Fort Hamilton Manor, Inc. v. Boyland. 149 N.E.2d 856 (N.Y. 1958).

(n110)Footnote 255. 2 Kent's Commentaries 340. Shares in a corporation owning realty have themselves sometimes been held realty: Welles v. Cowles, 2 Conn. 567 (1818); Price v. Price, 36 Ky. 107 (1938). However, usually such shares are considered personalty: Arnold v. Ruggles, 1 R.I. 165 (1851).

(n111)Footnote 256. An earthen reservoir for use of livestock on a range was realty: George v. Gist, 263 P. 10 (Ariz. 1928).

(n112)Footnote 257. Bowman v. Union Trust Co., 106 P.2d 913 (Cal. App. 1940); Burbridge v. Ferrell, 148 So. 204 (Fla. 1933): Isham v. Cudlip, 179 N.E.2d 25 (Ill. App. 1962); James v. Singer, 63 Pa. D. & C. 538 (Pa. 1948). Once a mobile home is used as such, it cannot be converted into a permanent residence regardless of the owner's intent: Brownfield Subdivision, Inc. v. McKee, 334 N.E.2d 131 (Ill. 1975). The builder of house on land of another may rightfully sell the house to a third person: Flowers v. Patton, 230 So. 2d 654 (La. App. 1970). A landowner may enter into an agreement with another that the property attached to the real estate shall remain personalty, but such agreement has no effect as against third parties without notice whose rights have intervened: Leawood Nat'l Bank of Kansas City v. City Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Kansas City. 474 S.W.2d 641 (Mo. App. 1971).

(n113)Footnote 258. United States v. 19.86 Acres of Land, 141 F.2d 344 (7th Cir. 1944). Soil bank was created when soil, gravel and rocks were excavated and deposited along the bank of a channel; an Illinois court found that the soil bank material was realty: Metropolitan Sanitary Dist. v. Reick, 232 N.E.2d 182 (Ill. App. 1967). Railroad trackage owned by one other than landowner is an immovable: American Creosote Co. v. Springer, 232 So. 2d 532 (La. App. 1969).

(n114)Footnote 259. New York O. & W.R. Co. v. Livingston, 144 N.E. 589 (N.Y. 1924). Gas mains and compressor machinery were held realty: Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. v. Prince William County, 172 S.E.2d 757 (Va. 1970). Air conditioning and heating units which are incorporated into the structure with the intention that they are permanent are realty: Houk Air Conditioning, Inc. v. Mortgage & Trust. 517 S.W.2d 593 (Tex. App. 1974). Mobile home with wheels removed and on concrete base was still a mobile home: Brownfield Subdivision, Inc. v. McKee, 334 N.E.2d 131 (Ill. 1975).

(n115)Footnote 260. Rathbun v. Williams, 121 P.2d 243 (Kan. 1942). Mineral rights to real estate, other than the homestead are realty: Locke v. Locke. 280 So. 2d 773 (Ala. 1973). Accrued oil royalties are personal property: Walsh v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 291 N.E.2d 644 (Ill. 1972). A mortgage or assignment of an oil and gas leasehold is a real estate mortgage not subject to the Uniform Commercial Code and is recorded in the real estate records: Ingram v. Ingram, 521 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1974). By products of mining abandoned as waste are treated as having reverted to the land: In re Appropriation of Easements for Highway Purposes, 191 N.E.2d 832 (Ohio 1963). Execution of an oil and gas lease was a sale of an interest in land and so violated a first refusal right held by another: Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. App. 1977). Removing the wheels or running gear of a mobile home and placing it on a permanent foundation does not convert the home into a permanent structure: Brownfield Subdivision, Inc. v. McKee, 334 N.E.2d 131 (Ill. 1975). Gasoline is personal property after severance: Harvey v. Pedigo Oil Co., 557 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. App. 1977). Oil and gas royalties are realty: McGinnis v. McGinnis, 391 P.2d 927 (Wyo. 1964).

(n116)Footnote 261. Stiles v. Gordon Land Co., 44 So. 2d 417 (Fla. 1950). Culm or refuse, under Pennsylvania law, severed from its original place becomes personal property and may be abandoned: Gilbertson Contr. Co. v. Hook, 255 F. Supp. 687 (E.D. Pa. 1966). House sold with a right of removal treated as personalty: Rogers v. Cox, 96 Ind. 157 (1884). A lease of specified airspace superjacent to property is an interest in real property subject to taxation: Macht v. Department of Assessments of Baltimore City, 296 A.2d 162 (Md. 1972). Clay mined and stockpiled became personalty: Lone Star Min. Co. v. Texeramics, 363 S.W.2d 868 (Tex. App. 1962). See Taxation-- Valuation-- Income-Producing Lease of Undeveloped Airspace Is Real Property Interest That May Be Assessed Separately for Taxation, 26 VAND. L. Rev. 643 (1973).

(n117)Footnote 262. Balestra v. Button, 128 P.2d 816 (Cal. App. 1942). Condominium units are realty: Lefebue v. Astendorf, 275 N.W.2d 154 (Wis. App. 1979).

(n118)Footnote 263. Bunn v. O'Flutt, 222 S.E.2d 522 (Va. 1976).

(n119)Footnote 264. A proprietary lease and corporate apartment stock were goods under the Uniform Commercial Code: Silverman v. Alcoa Plaza Associates, 323 N.Y.S.2d 39 (1971). Shares of stock in a cooperative apartment are personalty, not realty, in a will: In re Miller's Estate, 130 N.Y.S.2d 295 (1954); In re Turner's Estate, 233 N.Y.S.2d 108 (1962). A leasehold interest for a term less than life is personal property, not subject to a real estate mortgage: National Bank of Commerce v. Fountain, 514 P.2d 194 (Wash. App. 1973). Stock in a cooperative apartment was held to be personalty with respect to a judgment lien: State Tax Comm'rs v. Shor, 385 N.Y.S.2d 290 (1976). See Property-- Sale of Stock and Proprietary Lease in Cooperative Apartment Held as Sale of Personalty, 21 Buffalo L. Rev. 555 (1972).

(n120)Footnote 265. Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 45 P. 680 (Cal. 1896); Thornton v. Mehring, 25 N.E. 958

(Ill. 1885); Cunningham v. Baxley, 96 Ind. 367 (1884); Faler v. McRae, 56 Miss. 227 (1878); Standard Oil Co. v. Idaho Community Oil Co., 37 P.2d 660 (Mont. 1934); McCormick v. Stephany, 41 A. 840 (N.J. Ch. 1898). In Kansas an oil and gas lease is personal property, merely a license to explore, and is an incorporeal hereditament. It is a profit a prendre, and is not an interest in land: Connell v. Kanwa Oil, Inc., 170 P.2d 631 (Kan. 1946).

(n121)Footnote 266. Brown v. Becker, 15 A. 608 (Pa. 1888). Rights in oil and gas are severable by grant or reservation, although they are incapable of absolute ownership in place: Davis v. Mann, 234 F.2d 553 (10th Cir. 1956). This lease, under these decisions, does not have the effect of placing the title of the oil and gas that is under the surface of the land in controversy in the lessee but to grant to the lessee the privilege of exploring for the oil and gas: First Nat'l Bank of Kansas City v. Nee. 92 F. Supp. 328 (W.D. Mo. 1950); Frank Oil Co. v, Belleview Gas & Oil Co., 119 P. 260 (Okla. 1911). Oil when severed from the soil becomes personalty: Pasteur v. Niswanger, 290 S.W.2d 852 (Ark. 1956). Oil and gas, while in the earth, unlike solid minerals, are not the subject of ownership distinct from the soil, and the grant of the oil and gas, therefore, is a grant, not of the oil that is in the ground, but of such a part as the grantee may find, and passes nothing than can be the subject of an ejectment or other real action: Kolachny v. Galbreath, 110 P. 902 (Okla. 1910). See Western Oil & Ref. Co. v. Venago Oil Corp., 24 P.2d 971 (Cal. 1933); Prairie Oil & Gas Co. v. State, 231 S.W. 1088 (Tex. App. 1919). Gasoline is personal property after severance: Harvey v. Pedigo Oil Co., 557 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. App. 1977). See infra Chapter 48, Mines and Minerals; Chapter 49, Petroleum and Pipelines.

(n122)Footnote 267. Coastal Club v. Shell Oil Co., 56 F. Supp. 641 (W.D. La. 1944). As to the construction of a Louisiana statute making mineral leases real rights and incorporeal immovable property, see Arnold v. Sun Oil Co., 48 So. 2d 369 (La. 1949). Oil casing is not realty: Moore v. Casey Bros. Oil Co., 269 S.W. 75 (Tex. App. 1925).

(n123)Footnote 268. Cowling v. Deep Vein Coal Co., 183 F.2d 652 (7th Cir. 1950); Duff v. Keaton, 124 P. 291 (Okla. 1912). See Lake v. Sealy, 165 So. 399 (Ala. 1936). Mineral rights are real estate in Alabama; Locke v. Locke, 280 So. 2d 773 (Ala. 1973). Oil and gas lease is an interest in realty: Rock Island Oil & Ref. Co. v. Simmons, 386 P.2d 239 (N.M. 1963). In Oklahoma it is not clear whether the right to explore for, discover and produce minerals is real property: see Don Emery, Real Property Mineral Interests in Oklahoma, 24 Okla. L. Rev. 337 (1971). Stockpiled sand and gravel were held personalty: Shinley v. National Applicables of California, 566 P.2d 322 (Ariz. App. 1977).

(n124)Footnote 269. Miller v. State, 183 A. 17 (Conn. 1936). "Water-right" is real property: King v. White, 499 P.2d 585 (Wyo. 1972).

(n125)Footnote 270. Mexican Gulf Oil Co. v. Compania Transcontinental de Petroleao S.A., 281 F. 148 (S.D.N.Y. 1922); Montana Sunburst Oil & Gas Co. v. Chase v. Trimble, 158 P.2d 247 (Cal. App.1945); Bacon v. Wahrhaftig, 218 P.2d 144 (Cal. App. 1950); Halbert v. Hendrix, 95 N.E.2d 221 (Ind. App. 1950). An oil payment is an interest in property. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Hawn, 231 F.2d 340 (5th Cir. 1956). A contract selling oil and gas in place, or for sale of land reserving them, conveys or reserves an incorporeal right, a real right or servitude: Exchange Nat'l Bank v. Head, 99 So. 272 (La. 1924). In the case of American Nat'l Bank v. Reclamation Oil Producing Ass'n, 101 So. 10 (La. 1924), an oil lease or oil well is denominated real property. In Oklahoma oil and gas leasehold interests are real property and so entitle the vendor to the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase price. The Uniform Commercial Code is not applicable to oil and gas leasehold interests: Casper v. Neubert, 489 F.2d 543 (10th Cir. 1973).

(n126)Footnote 271. Oregon Basin Oil & Gas Co. v. Ohio Oil Co., 248 P.2d 198 (Wyo. 1952).

(n127)Footnote 272. In Texas, oil and gas in place are realty and become personalty when severed from the land: Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Adams, 513 F.2d 355 (5th Cir. 1975). Limited partnership interests in oil and gas rights are not real property under the Uniform Partnership Act: Pyle v. Wolf Corp., 354 F. Supp. 346 (D. Or. 1972). Allen v. Thompson. 273 S.W. 396 (Ark. 1925) (royalty interest). Intangibles are not included in the term "personal property" in a will: In re Estate of Home, 171 So. 2d 14 (Fla. App. 1965). Illinois Prout v. Hoy Oil Co., 105 N.E. 26 (Ill. 1914); Heller v. Dailey, 63 N.E. 490 (Ind. App. 1902) (lease). Horses are personal property but a cashier's check is not tangible personal property: Pagliarulo v. National Shawmut Bank, 233 N.E.2d 213 (Mass. 1968); Sunburst Oil & Gas Co. v.

Neville, 257 P. 1016 (Mont. 1927); Woodworth v. Franklin, 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921); Montana & Wyoming Oil Co. v. Gibson, 113 P. 784 (Wyo. 1911).

(n128)Footnote 273. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935); Derby Oil Co. v. Bell, 7 P.2d 39 (Kan. 1932); Davis v. Lewis, 100 P.2d 994 (Okla. 1940). Oklahoma treated gasoline which had escaped underground as ferae naturae subject to capture by the owner of the land to which it escaped: Frost v. Ponca City. 541 P.2d 1321(Okla. 1975). See Roger R. Scott, Underground Storage of Natural Gas: A Study of Legal Problems, 19 Okla. L. Rev. 47 (1966). In Texas oil and gas in place are part of the realty and subject to ownership and severance. This includes royalties: Extraction Resources, Inc. v. Freeman, 555 S.W.2d 156 (Tex. App. 1977).

(n129)Footnote 274. McCully v. McCully, 86 P.2d 786 (Okla. 1939).

(n130)Footnote 275. Miles v. Jerry. 250 S.W. 34 (Ark. 1923); Bruner v. Hicks, 82 N.E. 888 (Ill. 1907); Franklin Land Co. v. Wea Gas, Coal & Oil Co., 23 P. 630 (Kan. 1890): Carter Oil Co. v. Popp, 174 P. 747 (Okla. 1918). Execution of an oil and gas lease was a sale of an interest in land and so violated a first refusal right held by another: Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. App. 1977). Perpetual reservation of royalties is a property right but if limited in time royalties are personalty: Extraction Resources, Inc. v. Freeman, 555 S.W.2d 156 (Tex. App. 1977).

Assignments of working interests in oil and gas leases are subject to the Statute of Frauds as realty; Owen v. Dayson. 562 S.W.2d 647 (Ky. App. 1977). In New Mexico an oil and gas lease is an interest in realty: O'Kane v. Walker, 561 F.2d 207 (10th Cir. 1977). Oklahoma treated gasoline which had escaped underground as ferae naturae subject to capture by the owner of the land to which it escaped: Frost v. Ponca City, Okla, 541 P.2d 1321 (Okla. 1975). In Texas contracts for conveyance of mineral rights are subject to the statute of frauds: Barrett Hill v. Marshall Exploration, Inc., 420 F. Supp. 198 (W.D. La. 1976). Removable modular homes held personalty: U.C.C. § 9-107b. Roskosi v. General Electric Credit Corp., 397 N.Y.S.2d 416 (1977). See Roger R. Scott, Underground Storage of Natural Gas: A Study of Legal Problems, 19 Okla. L. Rev. 47 (1966).

(n131)Footnote 276. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935); Marias River Syndicate v. Big West Oil Co., 38 P.2d 599 (Mont. 1934). Stock and lease of cooperative apartment held personalty for taxation: State Tax Comm'n. v. Shor, 371 N.E.2d 523 (N.Y. 1977).

(n132)Footnote 277. Nicholson Corp. v. Ferguson, 243 P. 195 (Okla. 1925).

(n133)Footnote 278. Sheffield v. Hogg, 77 S.W.2d 1021 (Tex. 1934). Fractional interest in oil and gas leases is a "security": Caldwell v. Trans-Gulf Petroleum Corp., 322 So. 2d 171 (La. 1975).

Severed minerals may become personalty: Milford v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co., 355 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1978).

(n134)Footnote 279. Agajanian v. Cuccio, 297 P.2d 755 (Cal. App. 1956). In Onyx Ref. Co. v. Evans Production Corp., 182 F. Supp. 253 (N.D. Tex. 1959), the court held that a lessee's interest in an oil lease was an interest in land so that a lien thereon did not extend to the oil when extracted. Oil royalty payments are a real property interest: Beshara v. Goldberg, 34 Cal. Rptr. 501 (Cal. App. 1963). An overriding royalty from an oil and gas lease is realty: Halbert v. Hendrix, 95 N.E.2d 221 (Ind. App. 1950). The right to take water is an interest in realty subject to alienation: Kelly v. Alpstetten Ass'n, 303 A.2d 136 (Vt. 1973). "Water right" is real property: King v. White, 499 P.2d 585 (Wyo. 1972). In Texas oil and gas in place are part of the realty and subject to ownership and severance. This includes royalties: Extraction Resources, Inc. v. Freeman, 555 S.W.2d 156 (Tex. App. 1977).

(n135)Footnote 280. Consolidated Gas & Equip. Co. v. Thompson, 405 S.W.2d 333 (Tex. 1966).

(n136)Footnote 281. House trailers may be taxed as realty though owned separately from the ground on which they rest: New York Mobile Homes Ass'n v. Steckel, 215 N.Y.S.2d 487, 175 N.E.2d 151 (N.Y. 1961). Contra result and denying application of "assembled industrial plant" doctrine to a trailer park: Streyle v. Board of Property Assessment,

98 A.2d 410 (Pa. 1953). House held movable personal property for purposes of fire damage compensation where the owner of the land did not own the house: Columbia Gas of Kentucky, Inc. v, Maynard, 532 S.W.2d 3 (Ky. 1975).

(n137)Footnote 282. Logue v. Marsh, 365 N.E.2d 1159 (Ill. App. 1977).

(n138)Footnote 283. Denying specific performance in a contract of sale of a unit: Centex Homes Corp, v. Boag, 320 A.2d 194 (N.J. 1974).

(n139)Footnote 284. Hill v. Salmon, 236 P.2d 518 (Wyo. 1951). Developer's leasehold interest from the apartment house project was personal property and not real property and not subject to judgment lien: Arnett v. Peterson, 92 Cal. Rptr. 913 (Cal. App, 1971), Real estate of partnership is personalty for purposes of distribution after dissolution: Andrulis v. First Nat'l Bank of Lake Forest, 281 N.E.2d 417 (Ill. App. 1972). Railroad tracks were realty: Morgan's Louisiana & T.R.R. & S.S. Co. v. Himalaya Planting & Mfg. Co., 78 So. 735 (La. 1918), reinstated by American Creosote Co, v. Springer, 241 So. 2d 510 (La. 1970), overruling Caldwell v. Laurel Grove Co., 144 So. 718 (La. 1932), which had overruled the Morgan case. Stockpiled sand and gravel were personalty: Shinley v. National Applicables of California, Inc., 566 P.2d 322 (Ariz. App. 1977).

(n140)Footnote 285. Walters v. Sheffield, 78 So. 539 (Fla. 1918). Contract giving right to occupy land for sufficient time to remove merchantable timber is not an interest in land: Bay View Land Co. v. Ferguson, 101 P. 1093 (Wash. 1909). Timber is real estate until severed from the land: South Mississippi Elec. Power Ass'n v. J.F. Miller Timber Co., 314 So. 2d 346 (Miss. 1975). Grant of temporary rights to cut timber was an interest in land: Layman v. Ledgett, 558 P.2d 1378 (Wash. App. 1977).

(n141)Footnote 286. A profit has been treated as personalty: Shields v. Fink, 372 P.2d 252 (Kan. 1962).

(n142)Footnote 287. Fletcher v. Moriarty, 56 So. 437 (Fla. 1911). Execution of an oil and gas lease was a sale of an interest in land and so violated a first refusal right held by another: Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. App. 1977).

(n143)Footnote 288. Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. App. 1977).

(n144)Footnote 289. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 So. 69 (Fla. 1907). Coal processed through a washer is personalty: Milford v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co., 355 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1978).

(n145)Footnote 290. Held to be personalty: Wood v. Wood, 193 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1947): Goldstein v. Mundon, 210 N.W. 444 (Ia. 1926); Hajny v. Robinson Milling Co., 134 P.2d 398 (Kan. 1943); Porche v. Bodin, 28 La. Ann. 761 (1876); Kettering v. Barber. 159 N.W. 133 (S.D. 1916). Held to be realty passing with the land: In re Bunting, 60 F.2d 605 (E.D. Ill. 1932); Simmons v. Williford, 53 So. 452 (Fla. 1910) (whether fructus industriales or fructus naturales); Peer v. Wilson. 210 So. 2d 495 (Fla. App. 1968) (immature orange crop on trees passes as real property on the death of life tenant); Williams v. Mitchem. 106 S.E. 284 (Ga. 1921); Firebaugh v. Divan, 69 N.E. 924 (Ill. 1904); Tripp v. Hasceig, 20 Mich. 254 (1870); Karnmrath v. Kidd, 95 N.W. 213 (Minn. 1903); Hayward v. Poindexter, 229 S.W. 256 (Mo. App. 1921); Dixon v. Pugh, 178 P. 880 (Okla. 1918); Smith v. Bankhead, 106 S.E. 469 (S.C. 1921); Langford v. Hudson, 241 S.W. 393 (Tenn. 1922); McNulty v. Dean, 281 P. 9 (Wash. 1929). In Louisiana, standing crops are regarded as movables in their relationship between landlord and tenant but immovables so far as third persons are concerned, but separate ownership of standing crops may be asserted against a third-person tortfeasor, regardless of whether the lease has been recorded: Andrepont v. Acadia Drilling Co., 231 So. 2d 347 (La. 1969). Growing crops are part of the realty until they are severed and tenant cannot replevin them: Wright v. McGinley, 351 So. 2d 1151 (Fla. App. 1977).

(n146)Footnote 291. Stolp v. Reiter, 251 N.W. 903 (Minn. 1933) (hotel furniture is personalty). Laundry machinery and equipment held to be realty under the "assembled industrial plant doctrine" and as such not subject to an ad valorem tax on personalty: United Laundries, Inc. v. Board of Property Assessment, 58 A.2d 833 (Pa. 1948).

(n147)Footnote 292. Robinson v. Chicago Nat'l Bank, 176 N.E.2d 659 (Ill. App. 1961): Chicago Federal Sav, & Loan Ass'n v. Cacciatore, 185 N.E.2d 670 (Ill. 1962), Beneficial interest in a land trust is personalty: Shefner v. University Nat'l Bank, 353 N.E.2d 126 (Ill. App. 1976).

(n148)Footnote 293. Railroad tracks which were used for the benefit of steel making held personal property: Armco Steel Corp. v. Butler County Bd. of Revision, 325 N.E.2d 893 (Ohio 1975). Railroad trackage is an immovable by nature and passes along with the sale of the land on which it lies: American Creosote Co. v. Springer, 232 So. 2d 532 (La. App. 1970). See infra Chapter 54, Railroad Lands.

(n149)Footnote 294. Kellogg v. Dickinson, 18 Vt. 266 (1846); Barnard v. Whipple, 29 Vt. 401 (1857).

(n150)Footnote 295. In re Kincaid's Appeal, 66 Pa. 411 (1870).

(n151)Footnote 296. First Baptist Soc. v. Grant, 59 Me. 245 (1871); Shaw v. Beveridge, 3 Hill 26 (N.Y. 1842). "Nothing is better established than this principle, that money directed to be employed in the purchase of land, and land directed to be sold and turned into money, are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted, and this, in whatever manner the direction is given. The owner of the fund or the contracting parlies, may make land money, or money land. The cases establish this universally": Craig v. Leslie, 16 U.S. 563, 4 L.Ed. 460 (1818); Meekins v. Branning Mfg. Co., 224 F. 202 (D.N.C. 1915); Kansas City St. L. & C.R. Co. v. Alton R. Co., 124 F.2d 780 (7th Cir. 1941); Trotter v. Van Pelt, 198 So. 215 (Fla. 1940); Illinois, Smith v. Kelley, 56 N.E.2d 360 (Ill. 1944); In re Jackson's Estate, 252 N.W. 775 (Ia. 1934); In re Schwertley's Estate, 293 N.W. 445 (Ia. 1940); National Bank v. Saia, 121 P.2d 251 (Kan. 1942); Griffith v. Witten, 161 S.W. 708 (Mo. 1913); Coman v. Lakey, 80 N.Y. 345 (N.Y. App. 1880); Christy v. Christy, 44 N.Y.S.2d 579; In re McCleary's Estate, 54 York (Pa. Orph. 1940) 30; Gaboriault v. Gaboniault, 32 A.2d 623 (R.I. 1943).

(n152)Footnote 297. Committee of Protesting Citizens, Thorndyke Area v. Val Vue Sewer Dist., 545 P.2d 42 (Wash. App. 1976).

(n153)Footnote 298. United States v. Ben-Hur, 20 F.3d 313, 317 (7th Cir. 1994) (under Wisconsin law, the equitable conversion doctrine provides that ownership under land contract does not necessarily follow retention of or legal title by land contract vendor, and vendees may become equitable owners of property even though vendor retains legal title in trust security for any portion of the purchase price not yet paid); Connecticut College for Women v. Groton. 193 A. 873 (Conn. 1937). Certificates of purchase at tax sale of realty are personal property: In re County Treasurer of Cook County, 304 N.E.2d 9 (Ill. App. 1973). Under equitable conversion, the vendor's security interest is treated as personalty: Heider v. Dietz, 380 P.2d 619 (Or. 1963).

(n154)Footnote 299. Hovey v. Dary, 27 N.E. 659 (Mass. 1891); Simmons v. O'Connor, 149 S.W.2d 1107 (Tex. App. 1941). A beneficial interest in an Illinois land trust is personalty and subject to the U.C.C.: Levine v. Pascal, 236 N.E.2d 425 (Ill. App. 1968). The Uniform Partnership Act converts partnership realty into personalty for all purposes: Perkins v. Oklahoma Tax Comm'n., 428 P.2d 328 (Okla. 1967). A beneficial interest in land trust is personal property: Hulter v. Lake View Trust & Savings Bank, 370 N.E.2d 47 (Ill. App. 1977).

(n155)Footnote 300. Wattjes v. Faeth, 40 N.E.2d 521 (Ill. 1942); In re Tienken's Estate, 32 N.Y.S.2d 637 (N.Y. 1941); Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Co. v. Harris, 39 A. 750 (R.I. 1898). Certificates of purchase at tax sale of realty are personal property: In re County Treasurer of Cook County, 304 N.E.2d 9 (Ill. App. 1973).

(n156)Footnote 301. In re Field, 169 N.Y.S. 677 (N.Y.A.D. 1918).

(n157)Footnote 302. Horton v. Upham, 43 A. 492 (Conn. 1899). Proceeds of fire insurance on realty are personalty: Hawthorne v. Hawthorne. 242 N.Y.S.2d 50 (1963).

(n158)Footnote 303. Adams v. Peabody Coal Co., 82 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1907).

(n159)Footnote 304. Geldhauser v. Schulz, 116 A. 791 (N.J. App. 1922).

(n160)Footnote 305. Wetherill v. Hough. 29 A. 592 (N.J. 1894). See also Citizens Bank v. Buford, 108 S.W.2d 1062 (Mo. App. 1937).

(n161)Footnote 306. In re Tatham's Estate, 95 A. 520 (Pa. 1915).

(n162)Footnote 307. Scurto v. Le Blanc. 184 So. 567 (La. 1938).

(n163)Footnote 308. Kirk v. Sumner County Bank & Trust Co., 153 S.W.2d 139 (Tenn. App. 1941).

(n164)Footnote 309. In re Claus' Estate. 147 S.W.2d 199 (Mo. App. 1941).

(n165)Footnote 310. State ex rel. and to Use of Baumann v. Marburger, 182 S.W.2d 163 (Mo. 1944).

(n166)Footnote 311. Madler v. Kersten, 175 N.W. 779 (Wis. 1920). "The certificate of purchase does not convey a legal title, but it is evidence of an equitable title to the land, and enables the purchaser to call in the legal title. And it savors so strongly of the realty that in our opinion it descends to their heirs, and is not assets in the hands of the executor. The act provides that such certificates shall be assignable in law, and vest in the assignee, or his legal representative, all the right and title of the original purchaser. The words 'legal representative,' used, as they are, in connection with the certificate of purchase, or evidence of realty, we construe to be the heir, to whom the realty descends. It follows, then, that the heir only can legally transfer the certificate of purchase." Rice's Lessee v. White, 8 Ohio 216 (1837).

(n167)Footnote 312. Gilbert v. Easterling, 60 S.E.2d 595 (S.C. 1950). A mobile home may become immovable and thus a fixture, resulting in destruction of vendor's lien: In re Ken Boatman, Inc., 504 F.2d 924 (5th Cir. 1974). Chicken broiler house held movable: Flowers v. Patton, 230 So. 2d 654 (La. App. 1970).

Mobile home, after the wheels are removed, is no longer personal property but becomes a fixture even though removable: Hussey v. Ray, 462 S.W.2d 45 (Tex. App. 1970). See Christian Ness, Comment, Mobile Homes in North Carolina: Residence or Vehicle?, 50 N.C.L. REV. 612 (1972). Where the owner of the real estate disclaimed any ownership interest in the building, the building must be considered as movable personal property: Columbia Gas of Kentucky. Inc. v. Maynard, 532 S.W.2d 3 (Ky. 1975). Removing wheels and running gear of a mobile home did not convert it into a permanent structure: Brownfield Subdivision, Inc. v. McKee, 334 N.E.2d 131(Ill. 1975). House held movable personal property for purposes of fire damage compensation where the owner of the land did not own the house: Columbia Gas of Kentucky, Inc. v. Maynard. Ky., 532 S.W.2d 3 (Ky. 1975). Where a hydraulic lift had been installed and was an immovable, a purchaser of the real estate was entitled to the lift as against the seller of the lift where the sales agreement of the lift had not been recorded: Benoit v. Acadia Fuel & Oil Distribs, Inc., 315 So. 2d 842 (La. App. 1975). Stock and lease in a cooperative apartment held personalty: State Tax Comm'n. v. Shor, 400 N.Y.S.2d 805 (1977).

(n168)Footnote 313. Blodgett v. Silberman, 277 U.S. 1 (1928) (under New York law). Deceased partner's interest in realty is personalty and the executor cannot partition. Real estate of a partnership is deemed personal property so far as the rights of the individual partners are concerned among themselves and for the purpose of distribution after dissolution and winding up affairs of the partnership: Andrulis v. First Nat'l Bank of Lake Forest, 281 N.E.2d 417 (Ill. App. 1972). The beneficial interest in an Illinois land trust was treated as personal property, and on the death of the beneficiary the interest passes to his personal representative: In re Romano, 426 F. Supp. 1123 (N.D. Ill, 1977). Stock and a proprietary lease in a cooperative apartment are personal rather than real property: State Tax Comm'n. v. Shor, 84 Misc. 161, 378 N.Y.S.2d 222 (N.Y. Supp. 1975). Beneficial interest in an Illinois land trust is personal property.

(n169)Footnote 314. Stockpiles and removal sand and gravel became personalty: Shirley v. National Applicators of California, Inc., 566 P.2d 322 (Ariz. App. 1977).

(n170)Footnote 315. Shares of stock invested wholly in realty are still personalty: Stockton v. Lucas, 482 F.2d 979 (U.S. App. 1973). Shares of stock in a cooperative apartment held personalty not realty, in a will where the testator was referring to real estate in the usually accepted sense: In re Miller's Estate, 130 N.Y.S.2d 295 (N.Y. Sup. 1954); In re Turner's Estate, 233 N.Y.S.2d 108 (N.Y. Sup. 1962). Stock and lease in a cooperative apartment held to be personalty: State Tax Comm'n. v. Shor, 371 N.E.2d 523 (N.Y. 1977).

(n171)Footnote 316. Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Mauro, 368 A.2d 44 (Conn. 1976).

(n172)Footnote 317. Hornblower v. Masonic Cemetery Ass'n, 214 P. 978 (Cal. 1923). See Note, The Cemetery Lot, Rights and Restrictions, 109 U. Pa. L. Rev. 378 (1961); Note, Moving Cemeteries to Build Low Income Housing--Violation of the 'Right to Rest in Peace?' 6 Val. U. L. Rev. 96 (1971). See infra Chapter 53. Real Property Aspects of Graves and Cemeteries.

(n173)Footnote 318. Oak Park Cemetery, Inc. v. Donaldson, 148 S.W.2d 994 (Tex. App. 1940). A burial right or right of sepulcher is not a fee interest, but rather a right of burial which is transferable, and the rights of holders are property rights which are legally enforceable: Spencer v. Flint Memorial Park Ass'n, 144 N.W.2d 622 (Mich. App. 1966). See infra Chapter 55. Public Lands.

(n174)Footnote 319. Dapson v. Daly, 153 N.E. 454 (Mass. 1926); Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (N.Y. Sup. 1805); Liesner v. Wanie, 145 N.W. 374 (Wis. 1914). See Earl C. Arnold, The Law of Possession Goverining the Acquisition of Animals Ferae Naturae, 55 Am. L. Rev. 393 (1921). See also Thomas A. Lund, Early American Wildlife Law, 51 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 703 (1976).

(n175)Footnote 320. Magna Carta, ch. 16(b), prevented the king from giving one the right of free fishery, that is, the exclusive right to take fish in a public stream. The state is not liable for damage caused by beavers: Crisafulli v. State. 323 N.Y.S.2d 320 (N.Y.A.D. 1971). The state is not liable as owner of wildlife and is not responsible for destruction of crop by wild deer: Leger v. Louisiana Dep't of Wildlife & Fisheries, 306 So. 2d 391 (La. App. 1975). In Louisiana wildlife is held by the state in a sovereign trust capacity rather than a proprietary capacity: Leger v. Louisiana Dep't of Wildlife & Fisheries, 306 So. 2d 391 (La. App. 1975). All wildlife belongs to the state until one has taken possession of the wildlife in compliance with law: Department of Natural Resources v. Keating, 234 S.E.2d 519 (Ga. 1977).

(n176)Footnote 321. People v. Monterey Fish Prods. Co., 234 P. 398 (Cal. 1925); Dapson v. Daly, 153 N.E. 454 (Mass. 1926).

(n177)Footnote 322. In such capacity, the state is not responsible for damage caused by wild animals to crops: Leger v. Louisiana Dep't. of Wildlife & Fisheries, 306 So. 2d 391 (La. App. 1975). Fish in public waters are the property of the state: LaBauve v. Louisiana Wildlife Fisheries Comm'n, 444 F. Supp. 1370 (E.D. La. 1978).

(n178)Footnote 323. State of New Mexico v. Morton, 406 F. Supp. 1237 (D.N.M. 1975).

(n179)Footnote 324. All wildlife belongs to the state and until one has taken possession in compliance with law: Department of Natural Resources v. Keating, 234 S.E.2d 519 (Ga. 1977). Title to animals ferae naturae is in the state: State Dep't. of Fisheries v. Public Util. Dist. No. 1 of Chelan County, 588 P.2d 1146 (Wash. 1979).

(n180)Footnote 325. Liesner v. Wanie, 145 N.W. 374 (Wis. 1914). The taking of the honey of wild bees from a bee tree on the land of another is not larceny. "This must depend on the honey being the property of the owner of the land. If the bees are his property, honey is: for it is the manufacture of his hive ... Bees not reclaimed from their wild nature and domesticated, are not the subject of property, any more than wild fowl, or wild beasts." Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546 (Pa, 1811): People v. Hutchinson, 9 N.Y.S.2d 656 (N.Y. Co. Ct. 1938).

(n181)Footnote 326. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 419.

(n182)Footnote 327. Keeble v. Hickeringell, 103 Engl. Rep. 1127. In Louisiana wildlife is held by the state merely in a sovereign capacity rather than ownership: Leger v. Louisiana Dep't. Wildlife & Fisheries, 306 So. 2d 391 (La. App. 1975) (state not liable for damage caused by deer).

(n183)Footnote 328. Right of pursuit. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 419; Blake v. Jerome, 14 Johns 406 (N.Y. 1817).

(n184)Footnote 329. Bohn v. Albertson. 238 P.2d 128 (Cal. App. 1951). Fish in public waters are the property of LaBauve v. Louisiana Wildlife & Fisheries Comm'n, 444 F. Supp. 1370 (E.D. La. 1978).

(n185)Footnote 330. Absolute ownership of oysters is in the state in its territorial limits: McCready v. Virginia, 94 U.S. 391, 24 L.Ed. 248 (1876). State owns water and fish and aquatic life in trust for people: Goldsmith & Powell v. Texas State, 159 S.W.2d 534 (Tex. App. 1942). See Shellfish Regulation: Conservation and Discrimination, 29 ME. L. Rev. 360 (1978).

(n186)Footnote 331. State statute denied to others than citizens of the state the right to take oysters from tide waters where the beds were owned by the state: McCready v. Virginia, 94 U.S. 391 (1876).

(n187)Footnote 332. Coke on Littleton, § 4b (a profit of fishery could be granted at common law); 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 417 (the king could give one. the grantee, an exclusive power to take game inferior to deer).

(n188)Footnote 333. Diversion Lake Club v. Heath, 86 S.W.2d 441 (Tex. 1935); People v. Kraemer, 164 N.Y.S.2d 423 (N.Y. Police Ct. 1957). When ownership of the water overflowing land is separated from the soil the owner of the easement has the exclusive right to fish: Hill v. Davis, 130 So. 2d 39 (Ala. 1961).

(n189)Footnote 334. Shively v. Bowlby. 152 U.S. 1 (1894).

(n190)Footnote 335. Smith v. Andrews, [1891] 2 Ch. 678.

(n191)Footnote 336. Id.

(n192)Footnote 337. People v. New York & S.I. Ferry Co., 68 N.Y. 71 (N.Y. 1877).

(n193)Footnote 338. Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 82 U.S. 500 (1872).

(n194)Footnote 339. The right to hunt and fish is an incident of land ownership exclusive in the riparian owner: Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 82 U.S. 500 (1872); Clement v. Watson, 58 So. 25 (Fla. 1912): Schulte v. Warren. 75 N.E. 783 (Ill. 1905); State v. West Tennessee Land Co., 158 S.W. 746 (Tenn. 1913); Fisher v. Barber. 21 S.W.2d 569 (Tex. App. 1929): Knudson v. Hull, 148 P. 1070 (Utah 1915).

(n195)Footnote 340. Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 P. 1065 (Or. 1907). See John J. McLoone, Comment, Indian Hunting and Fishing Rights, 10 Ariz. L. Rev. 725 (1968).

(n196)Footnote 341. Forestier v. Johnson, 127 P. 156 (Cal. 1912); Collins v. Gerhardt, 211 N.W. 115 (Mich. 1926); Winous Point Shooting Club v. Slaughterbeck, 17 N.E. 162 (Ohio 1917); Willow River Club v. Wade, 76 N.W. 273 (Wis. 1898); Diana Shooting Club v. Husting, 145 N.W. 816 (Wis. 1914).

(n197)Footnote 342. In California the public has a right to fish in a stream though it is nonnavigable: Bohn v. Albertson, 238 P.2d 128 (Cal. App. 1951). A statute giving the public the right to fish in any stream in the state was unconstitutional: Hartman v. Tresise, 84 P. 685 (Colo. 1905). Fishing and hunting are not an incident of navigation: Schulte v. Warren, 75 N.E. 783 (Ill. 1905); Sewers v. Hacklander, 188 N.W. 547 (Mich. 1922). Michigan allows fishing in navigable waters if the beds are privately owned: Morgan v. Kloss, 221 N.W. 113 (Mich. 1928); Collins v. Gerhardt, 211 N.W. 115 (Mich. 1926). The public had a right to fish in a navigable stream although the plaintiff owned the bed:

Collins v. Gerhardt, 211 N.W. 115 (Mich. 1926); Rushton ex rel. Hoffmaster v. Taggart, 11 N.W.2d 193 (Mich. 1943). The privilege of hunting and trapping does not extend to such waters: Johnson v. Burghorn, 179 N.W. 225 (Mich. 1920); Sewers v. Hacklander, 188 N.W. 547 (Mich. 1922); St. Helen Shooting Club v. Carter, 227 N.W. 746 (Mich. 1929). A stranger fishing in bed of nonnavigable stream was a trespasser: Herrin v. Sutherland, 241 P. 328 (Mont. 1925); State v. Theriault, 41 A. 1030 (Vt. 1898). In New Mexico the public has the right to fish in any unappropriated water, although title to the bed is in private hands: State ex rel. State Game Comm'n. v. Red River Valley Co., 182 P.2d 421 (N.M. 1945). One who owns the soil in a fresh water river has the right of fishing prima facie, and if one owns the soil on both banks one has the sole and exclusive right even though the river is navigable: Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. 90 (N.Y. 1822). The public has the privilege of fishing in such navigable waters though the beds were in private ownership; Willow River Club v. Wade, 76 N.W. 273 (Wis. 1898); also the privilege of hunting: Diana Shooting Club v. Husting, 145 N.W. 816 (Wis. 1914). Hunting and fishing rights are property rights which may be acquired as other property rights by prescription: Harvat v. Clear Creek Drainage Dist., 249 N.W.2d 209 (Neb. 1977) (dictum).

(n198)Footnote 343. Sterling v. Jackson, 37 N.W. 845 (Mich. 1888).

(n199)Footnote 344. Where a river suddenly overflowed a tract of land in private hands and continued to flood it, this was an avulsion and title to the soil was not lost. But, since the flooded land was navigable, the public had the right to fish: Bohn v. Albertson, 238 P.2d 128 (Cal. App. 1951).

(n200)Footnote 345. Coke on Littleton, § 8a (fish in a pond and deer in a park passed with the land to the heir).

(n201)Footnote 346. Herrin v. Sutherland, 241 P. 328 (Mont. 1925).

(n202)Footnote 347. J.H. Miles & Co. v. McLean Contracting Co., 180 F.2d 789 (4th Cir. 1950). Police powers as to regulation of fish and game: Bittenhaus v. Johnston, 66 N.W. 805 (Wis. 1896); Timber. State ex rel. Owen v. Donald, 151 N.W. 331 (Wis. 1915). Trapping and raising of fur-bearing animals: Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896); State v. Nergaard, 102 N.W. 899 (Wis. 1905). Legislature has power to protect and reserve fish and game: Commissioner of Natural Resources v. S. Volpe & Co., 206 N.E.2d 666 (Mass. 1965). Individual rights as to wild game are limited and subject to the police power: Salasnek Fisheries, Inc. v. Cashner, 224 N.E.2d 162 (Oh. App. 1967). See Charles A. Hobbs, Indian Hunting and Fishing Rights, 32 GEO. Wash. L. Rev. 504 (1964); Tom Simmons, Highways, Hunters, and Section Lines: Tensions Between Public Access and Private Rights, 2 Great Plains Nat. Resources J. 240 (1997).

(n203)Footnote 348. Clark v. Todd, 64 A.2d 547 (Md. 1949). Wild animals and migratory birds are owned by the state in trust for the public to the extent they are capable of ownership: State v. Herwig, 117 N.W.2d 335 (Wis. 1962).

(n204)Footnote 349. Miles v. Veatch, 221 P.2d 905 (Or. 1950).

(n205)Footnote 350. Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, Ill F. 552 (D. Mass. 1899).

(n206)Footnote 351. Barker v. Bates. 30 Mass. 255 (1832).

(n207)Footnote 352. Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange 505 (K.B. 1722).

(n208)Footnote 353. Weeks v. Hackett, 71 A. 858 (Me. 1908).

(n209)Footnote 354. Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377 (1879).

(n210)Footnote 355. Silcott v. Louisville Trust Co., 265 S.W. 612 (Ky. 1924).

(n211)Footnote 356. South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharmon, 2 QB 44. Held that the treasure trove is not reduced to undisputed possession in the meaning of the treasury regulations until the treasure is discovered even though the discoverer had possession in the container for a long period of time: Cesarini v. United States. 296 F. Supp. 3 (N.D. Ohio 1969). Holding that the owner of the locus in quo not a finder invitee was entitled to money found: Hurley v.

Niagara Falls, 280 N.Y.S.2d 182 (N.Y. 1967).

(n212)Footnote 357. A.L. Goodhart, Three Cases on Possession. 3 Cambridge L. J. 195 (1928).

(n213)Footnote 358. McAvrey v. Medina, 93 Mass. 548 (1866).

(n214)Footnote 359. Sovern v. Yoran, 20 P. 100 (Or. 1888).

(n215)Footnote 360. Bracton, Ch 3.

(n216)Footnote 361. Danielson v. Roberts, 74 P. 913 (Or. 1904).

(n217)Footnote 362. Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 81 P. 572 (Or. 1905).

(n218)Footnote 363. Coke on Littleton, §§ lb, 6a, refer to things real, personal and mixed. See § 13.02(a)(2) supra.

(n219)Footnote 364. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. V. Haven, 95 U.S. 242 (1877): Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat'l Bank, 113 U.S. 408 (1885); Thornton v. Mehring, 25 N.E. 958 (Ill. 1885); Cunningham v. Baxley, 96 Ind. 367 (1884); Kline v. Indiana Trust Co., 137 N.E. 555 (Ind. App. 1922); Dyer v. Owens, 263 S.W. 663 (Ky. 1924); Faler v. McRae, 56 Miss. 227 (1878); Missouri Sutter v. Lackmann, 39 Mo. 91 (1866); McCormick v. Stephany, 41 A. 840 (N.J. 1898): Rodack v. New Moon Theatre, 200 N.Y.S. 237 (1923); Becker v. Walworth, 12 N.E. 1 (Ohio 1887); Rickard v. Dana, 52 A. 113 (Vt. 1902); Myers v. Arthur, 238 P. 899 (Wash. 1925). See also First Nat'l Bank v.Dunlap. 254 P. 729 (Okla. 1927) (an oil and gas lease did not create such an interest in realty as constituted "real estate" within the judgment of the Oklahoma judgment lien statute).

(n220)Footnote 365. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935); Hellwig v. Bachman, 26 Ill. App. 165 (Ill. App. 1888); Application for Awarding of Process of Subpoena Pursuant to R. S. 54:4-16, 34 A.2d 239 (N.J. 1943); First Nat'l Bank v. Dunlap. 254 P. 729 (Okla. 1927); Sheaffer v. Baeringer, 29 A.2d 697(Pa. 1943).

(n221)Footnote 366. Quality Coal Co. v, Guthrie. 157 S.W.2d 756 (Ark. 1941).

(n222)Footnote 367. Lincoln Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Nathan, 19 N.E.2d 243 (Ind. 1939). A mortgage or assignment of an oil and gas leasehold is a real estate mortgage not subject to the Uniform Commercial Code and is recorded in the real estate records: Ingram v. Ingram, 521 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1974).

(n223)Footnote 368. Coastal Club, Inc. v. Shell Oil Co., 45 F. Supp. 859 (W.D. La. 1942); Standard Oil. Co. of California v. Idaho Community Oil Co., 37 P.2d 660 (Mont. 1934).

(n224)Footnote 369. Ellison v. Ellison, 146 P.2d 173 (N.M. 1944); Rodack v. New Moon Theatre. 200 N.Y.S. 237 (1923). It is said, however, in Chicago Auditorium Ass'n v. Cramer. 8 F.2d 998 (N.D. Ill. 1925), that a lease for a term of years is a chattel real and conveys an interest in land and while it has some of the attributes of personalty, it is treated in many respects as real estate.

(n225)Footnote 370. Dyer v. Owens, 263 S.W. 663 (Ky. 1924).

(n226)Footnote 371. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925). Contra, Brown v. Havens, 85 A.2d 812 (N.J. 1952) (holding 99-year lease renewable forever is personalty).

(n227)Footnote 372. Dyer v. Owens, 263 S.W. 663 (Ky. 1924); Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909).

(n228)Footnote 373. Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249 (1893); New York v. Mabie, 13 N.Y. 151 (1855): Janura v. Fencl, 52 N.W.2d 144 (Wis. 1952). In New York a leasehold can be taxed as realty only if the lessee has an enforceable option to purchase: Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Board of Assessors, 141 N.E.2d 794 (N.Y. 1957).

(n229)Footnote 374. Lenow v. Fones, 4 S.W. 56 (Ark. 1887); Goodwin v. Goodwin, 33 Conn. 314 (1866); Fortunato v. Shenango Limestone Co., 123 A. 482 (Pa. 1924).

(n230)Footnote 375. Hogan v. Manners, 23 Kan. 551 (1880); Allender v. Sussan, 33 Md. 11. (1870).

(n231)Footnote 376. Willoughby v. Lawrence, 4 N.E. 356 (Ill. 1886); Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909).

(n232)Footnote 377. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat'l Bank, 113 U.S. 408 (1885).

(n233)Footnote 378. Standard Oil Co. of California v. Idaho Community Oil Co., 37 P.2d 660 (Mont. 1934).

(n234)Footnote 379. First Trust & Deposit Co. v. Syrdelco, Inc., 292 N.Y.S. 206 (N.Y.A.D. 1936).

(n235)Footnote 380. Lincoln Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Nathan, 19 N.E.2d 243 (Ind. 1939) (held realty for purpose of conveyancing, mortgaging and recording).

+ This chapter is based in part on Chapter 1 of George W. Thompson, Commentaries on The Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes, ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing basic property definitions and characteristics.

181 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY +

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 14.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 14.04 Real Property.

§ 14.04(a) Classifications of Real Property.

"Real estate" and its classifications. The term "real estate" includes lands, tenements and hereditaments whether the latter be corporeal or incorporeal. n381 The word "lands" is not so comprehensive as "real estate" or "tenements and hereditaments," as it would not include incorporeal hereditaments. n382 Real estate consists of incorporeal rights attached to or growing out of the soil as well as the soil itself. n383 At common law the term "real estate" signified the surface of the earth and that which belonged to the earth, whether above or beneath, and embraced all rights and profits arising from or annexed to land which were of a permanent or immovable nature.

The statutes of some states define the term, but, with very few exceptions, these definitions do not change the doctrine of the common law. It is probable that the decisions of some courts with reference to what constitutes real estate may be governed by the statutory definition, but, as a general rule, in the absence of any statute or contract, whatever underlies or forms a part of the surface of the earth, voluntarily grows on the earth or is permanently attached to the earth and essential to the use or enjoyment of the earth, will be held to constitute real estate. A mining claim is considered real estate. n384 Property constituting an industrial plant has been held real estate under the law of Pennsylvania. n385

Whenever it is intended to describe the whole interest or estate, the defined term "real estate" is generally employed, but whenever less than the whole is intended, different language is used. n386 The term "real estate" includes petroleum as it is found in the cavities of the rock, n387 mining claims, n388 unmined coal, n389 water percolating through the earth n390 and sand or gravel while in its original bed. n391

"Real estate" consists of incorporeal rights attached to or growing out of the soil as well as the soil itself. n392 As used in the Restatement of the Law the term means such interests as estates in fee simple, estates in fee simple absolute, estates in fee simple defeasible, estates in fee simple conditional and estates in fee tail, estates for life, estates for years, estates from period to period, estates at will, estates at sufferance, special limitations, conditions subsequent, executory limitations and estates postponed as to possession. n393 While the feudal system was in active operation, the property with which it dealt was constantly referred to as embracing lands, tenements and hereditaments, and these terms are still used at common law, but they are not so generally employed in this country, as the term "real property" is almost universally held to embrace all three of them.

At common law "real property" was deemed coextensive with lands, tenements and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal. n394 In this country, both by statute and common law, the term is generally used for the phrase "lands, tenements and hereditaments," n395 but "real estate" and "real property" are not strictly interchangeable terms. In its restricted and technical sense, real estate signifies every estate or interest one may have in land except a mere chattel interest. n396 Where the term is used in acts relating to crimes and punishments, it has been held that it includes every estate, interest, and right in lands, tenements and hereditaments. n397

"Real property" consists of incorporeal rights attached to or growing out of the soil as well as the soil itself. n398 The term includes all interest held or claimed in land in fee for life or for years and is co-extensive with lands, tenements and hereditaments and includes any interest in land. n399 The term "real property" comes from the old division of actions given a person deprived of property into "real actions" and "personal actions." When the remedy could result in a judgment for the return or recovery of the real thing, it was denominated a real action, and all things which could be recovered in real actions were real property, n400 Thus, the subject matter of "real actions" naturally came to be designated as "real property," after the overshadowing influence of the feudal system had been removed. While at common law an estate for years, whether for one or one hundred years, was a chattel real and was denominated personal property, modern courts and legislatures frequently treat it as real property. n401 In a number of jurisdictions a leasehold interest is held to be real property within the tax law, under statutes defining "real property" for the purpose of taxation. n402

The comprehensive term "realty" may be classified into the groups of lands, tenements and hereditaments. Lands, tenements and hereditaments include property which is not annexed to the person or cannot be moved from the place in which it subsists. n403 During the vigorous sway of the feudal system, the property with which it dealt was referred to as embracing "lands, tenements, and hereditaments" and this division of real property still retains its hold upon the common law. These are not properly divisions of real property, but are different points of view of the subject of real property. Where a statute defined the term "real property" as including real estate, lands, tenements and hereditaments, it was held not to include a chattel real. n404

The word "lands" soon obtained a well-settled meaning in law, and included the surface of the ground, together with everything that was on it and under it, but it did not comprehend incorporeal hereditaments. The term "land" is sometimes defined in statutes and constitutions n405 to include lands, tenements and hereditaments n406 and all rights thereto and interest therein, equitable as well as legal. n407 Some statutes, following the common-law rule, make a distinction between real property and land, one of the elements of real property. Where the statute does not define the word "land," but merely speaks of lands, tenements and hereditaments, it must be understood to refer to them in the sense imported to them at common law. n408

"Land," says Lord Coke, "terra in the legal signification, comprehendeth any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as meadows, pastures, woods, moores, waters... . It legally includeth also all castles, houses, and other buildings; for castles, houses, etc., consist of two things, namely land or ground, and the foundation or structure thereupon; so, as passing the land or ground, the structure or building thereupon passeth." n409 Land is nomen generalissimum, and includes everything above and below. n410

The term "lands" is not as broad in its application as property, n411 but it is an established principle that ownership of the land includes not only the surface of the earth but everything under it or over it. n412 Under modern conditions, especially in cities, superjacent rights may be more valuable than any other right connected with the ownership of land, since the value of the property consists almost exclusively in the right of the owner to erect business and industrial structures on it. n413 "Land" comprehends grounds, soil, earth, pastures, woods, springs, wells, lakes, ponds and all things which have become fixed parts of the soil. n414 It includes every form of real estate, n415 and the term is often used as practically synonymous with realty, but it includes such realty only as has corporeal existence. n416 In a more restricted sense, land means the soil of the earth, the water upon it and the minerals and fossils imbedded in it. n417 Oil and gas are a part of the land itself, as much as timber, coal, iron and salt. n418 The term "land" embraces both its soil and minerals, and a conveyance of land without more includes the surface and all minerals beneath or imbedded in the soil. n419 The term "premises" is used to indicate lands or real estate. n420

A non-legal definition of land would distinguish between land and water, so that, when the word "land" is used, it cannot be so construed as to include water. n421

The title of the owner of land presumptively extends upward indefinitely and downward to the earth's center, embracing everything upon the surface and everything beneath it. n422 This general rule will be found to be subject to many qualifications when actually applied. Many things upon the surface of the land are not regarded as part of it, but as personal property, the title to which is not in the owner of the land. It will also be found that the surface of the land may be separated in ownership from the mines or quarries beneath it, and that there may be as many different owners as there are strata of minerals. n423

The surface owner may not own all that lies beneath it, n424 An estate in lands may be divided by the owner and separate estates carved out of different elements which go to make up the lands. One person may be the owner of the surface of the land, another the owner of the trees standing upon it, and another the owner of the minerals under the surface, and all of them be the owners of lands. n425

It has been held that waste slate, accumulating during quarry operations, is real estate when thrown upon the ground, and to pass title to the slate as personalty it must again be severed from the ground. n426 It is presumed that the soil of a right- of-way between two properties belongs to the owners of the property, and this presumption is not affected by the fact that the way leads to a third close and is used only by the owner of that parcel. n427

The most comprehensive words of description applicable to real estate are "tenements" and "hereditaments," as they include every species of real property, corporeal as well as incorporeal. n428 While the word "tenement," in its plain and ordinary meaning, signifies a house, yet in a larger sense it means a thing which is the subject of tenure and includes not only corporeal hereditaments which are or may be held, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of those inheritances or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same, though they lie not in tenure. n429 It includes everything of a permanent nature which may be holden. n430 In this country the word "tenement" is applied exclusively to land or what is usually denominated real property. n431 To amount to a tenement the estate or interest should be a freehold and not merely a term of years. n432 It is evident that the word "tenement" is derived from the Latin word which signifies "to hold," but in modern times it is used in a sense much broader than this technical sense. It is of broader meaning and extent than the word "land," since it includes not only land, but rents, commons and other rights and interests issuing out of or concerning land. In the early history of the common law the word was generally used in the mere sense of a holding of land without any reference to the nature of the tenant's interest therein, but later the word came to be employed in a special sense as referring to a freehold estate in lands. At present nothing is considered as a tenement which is not of a permanent nature. A hereditament comprehends anything which may be inherited, whether corporeal or incorporeal, and includes both lands and tenements. n433 The term, though including some rights unconnected with land, is generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds. n434

In construing a statute giving jurisdiction to a justice of the peace to try questions concerning the unlawful detention of lands or tenements, it was held that a house, built upon land to which the owner had no title, but in which the owner claimed and enjoyed the right of peaceable possession, was a tenement. n435 A franchise, though sometimes included under the term "tenement" for certain purposes, has been held not such a tenement as may be recovered in a proceeding for unlawful detention. n436

The word "hereditaments" embraces everything that may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal. Hereditaments are technical and can be better understood by persons having a knowledge of the feudal system. For practical purposes, the word "hereditament" means an appurtenance. n437 The term is almost as comprehensive as the word "property," since it means anything capable of being inherited. n438 A term for less than a freehold does not come within the meaning of the word n439 but if the estate or interest be greater than a term of years it may be either corporeal n440 or incorporeal. n441 Incorporeal hereditaments in gross are a species of estate in real property. n442 Under the common law an incorporeal hereditament could only n443 be created or transferred by grant. As a general rule, rents falling due at a future date are deemed a part of the land, in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament, and, hence, are in the nature of real property. n444 So "hereditament" is by far the largest and most comprehensive word in the expression "lands, tenements and hereditaments"; for standing by itself it includes not only lands and tenements, but whatever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal or mixed.

§ 14.04(b) Corporeal and Incorporeal Hereditaments.

Corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. The semantics of the common law divided things real, as distinguished from things personal, into lands, tenements and hereditament; n445 The term "hereditament" comprehends anything which may be inherited whether corporeal or incorporeal, and includes both lands and tenements. n446 At common law, hereditaments were of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. n447 Corporeal hereditaments were physical objects, comprehended under the term "land." Blackstone n448 described corporeal hereditaments as those things which affect the senses "as may be seen and handled by the bode. n449 So a deed of coal, oil and gas and the right to move and remove created a corporeal right. n450 Similarly, a deed to timber conveys a corporeal right. n451 Corporeal hereditaments are substance always and can always be seen, always handled n452 and are confined to realty. n453

An appropriative water right has been held to be a corporeal hereditament. n454 Water in an impounded area is a corporeal hereditament. n455 Corporeal property is capable of manual transfer. Incorporeal property can only pass by a writing. n456 But even when property in unsevered minerals is a corporeal hereditament, n457 a distinction has been made between property in unsevered minerals and mere rights to work minerals which are incorporeal hereditaments. n458 A corporeal hereditament cannot be abandoned, but it may be lost by adverse possession. An incorporeal hereditament may be abandoned n459 in most states. n460 In some states a sale absolute of minerals in place passes a separate taxable estate in fee simple which is a corporeal hereditament. n461

Incorporeal real property is a right issuing out of or annexed to a thing corporeal, and consists of the right to have some part only of the produce or benefit of the corporeal property or to exercise a right or have an easement, privilege or advantage over or out of it. n462 An incorporeal hereditament may be defined as a certain inheritable right issuing out of, concerning, annexed to or exercisable within, a thing corporeal. n463 Incorporeal hereditaments are not the subject of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled, are only creatures of the mind and exist only in contemplation. n464 An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate whether real or personal or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within it. It is a creature of the mind and exists only in contemplation. n465 It is an invisible and intangible right merely collateral to land. n466 Fishing and boating rights are incorporeal hereditaments. n467 Unaccrued rents are incorporeal hereditaments; n468 accrued rents are choses n469 in action. Unaccrued oil and gas royalties are like rent, an incorporeal hereditament. n470

Rights in and to land embraced within this definition constitute a limited interest or estate in land, and, where such interest is to endure in perpetuity or for life, it is a freehold interest and is real property or real estate; where it is for years, although an interest in land or in real estate, it is not real estate itself but a chattel real. n471

The right is not the thing corporate itself, but something collateral thereto, such as unaccrued rents issuing out of lands or tenements, n472 rights in a patent, n473 properties built on franchises, on government grants, on good will or on trade names, and the like. n474 It is held that fishing rights are incorporeal hereditaments, since they issue out of, are concerned with, or are annexed to things corporeal. n475 One must distinguish between the profits produced and the thing or hereditament which produced them. Under this distinction, a statute declaring that no bargain sale of houses or lands shall be good, unless properly acknowledged, does not extend to a right-of-way, which is an incorporeal hereditament. n476 A rent is an incorporeal hereditament, because it is a right against the realty to receive from it some compensation or return for the use of the leased property. The compensation which the tenant pays is merely the proceeds, profits or returns which the rent produces. n477

At common law, incorporeal hereditaments were said to "lie in grant"; that is, could in general be created and transferred only by deed, known as a grant, and could not be created or transferred, as lands could be, by livery of seisin. n478 The grant of incorporeal hereditaments is a form of contract which was probably required to be in writing even before the Statute of Frauds was enacted. Under the Statute of Frauds, a lease creating an incorporeal hereditament must be in writing. n479

At common law, adverse user of certain incorporeal property, if continued immemorially, gave rise to what is known as a title by prescription. n480 However, prescription presumed a grant, which by lapse of time had been lost or destroyed. n481 It is now almost universally conceded that the prescriptive period is drawn from analogy to the period contained in the traditional statute of limitations, which in most states of this country and in England was twenty years. n482 The doctrine that a lost grant is the basis of prescription has been severely criticized, though it is the prevailing doctrine in this country. n483 Thus it is said that, if, from all the facts and circumstances, it is more reasonably probable that a grant was executed than that it was not, then the tribunal trying the case would be warranted in presuming in favor of the claimed existence of the grant and find accordingly. n484 When the doctrine cannot be applied, as where the right claimed could not have arisen from a grant at all, prescription may be based upon analogy to the statute of limitations. n485 Nevertheless, every prescriptive claim may be good, supposing it to be accompanied by honest, uninterrupted, adverse and immemorial possession, wherever it might by possibility have had a lawful commencement. n486

Blackstone enumerates ten varieties of incorporeal hereditaments, nearly all now vanished: advowsons, tithes, commons, ways, offices, dignities, franchises, corodies, annuities and rents. n487 Of these, tithes, advowsons, offices, dignities and corodies, as understood in England, are not recognized by our law as things on which an estate can be predicated, n488 and they are important only from an historical point of view. Commons was not recognized in the United States except in early New England. A phase of the commons has been revised in the modern cooperative apartment and the condominium.

Tithes are the rights of the rector of a parish to one-tenth of the annual income or increase arising either from lands, stock on lands or from the personal industry of the inhabitants. Advowsons are rights of appointment to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. Offices are rights of appointment to either a public or private office. Dignities are titles of nobility. Corodies were rights to receive sustenance at a monastery. Commons, as applied to England, were rights which the lord of the manor granted to his tenants to take certain profits from the wastelands. They were of four kinds namely, common of pasture, common of turbary, common of estovers, and common of piscary. The word "commons" is a general term for a profit a prendre. Annuities are very similar in their nature to corodies, and are sometimes classed as incorporeal hereditaments. n489 An annuity is a right to claim a certain yearly or periodical sum of money in fee simple, for life or for years and chargeable only on the person of the grantor. n490 Formerly they were regarded as in the nature of rents, from which they differ in that the latter must issue out of lands or tenements. n491 However, they gradually became recognized as merely contractual rights of a personal n492 nature. If an annuity is expressly limited to a person and the person's heirs, it will descend to the heirs, and not to the personal representative; n493 however, for other purposes it is regarded as personal property and is not a proper subject for consideration in a work on real property. The more important incorporeal hereditaments are profits a prendre, rents, franchises, easements and licenses. n494 The right to kill and take game is an incorporeal hereditament. n495

Rights to be exercised in connection with corporeal things, but without any ownership, possession, control or power of disposition of the thing in connection with which the power may be exercised, and without any profit therein, such as a right to pass over another's land, to have an unobstructed passage of light and air over another's land, to have the soil in its natural state supported by another's land, and to have a building restriction on another's land observed are incorporeal property rights. n496 Where a grantor has the right under a perpetual lease to receive the rents forever, it amounts to an incorporeal hereditament. n497

Courts are often confused about the extent to which rights concerning minerals in place--both fixed and so-called fugacious minerals--are corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments. The common-law concept was that as corporeal hereditaments can only lie in livery, it would be impossible to transfer as corporeal hereditaments minerals in place. But it is sometimes said that an exclusive right to remove minerals is a corporeal hereditament, but an incorporeal hereditament exists if the right is not exclusive. n498 As a general rule, oil in place is considered an incorporeal hereditament. An oil and gas lease conveys a mere right to explore, that is, an incorporeal hereditament. n499 The same has been held true of ore mineral leases and unaccrued rents thereunder. n500 There are cases, however, holding that a conveyance of a right to operate for oil and gas is a conveyance of an interest in land, a corporeal and not an incorporeal hereditament n501

A thing is said to be "appendant" when it has been immemoriably connected with another thing. n502 Nothing can be properly appendant or appurtenant to anything unless the principal or superior thing be of perpetual subsistence and continuance. n503 At common law, the most usual instance of an incorporeal hereditament appendant was a right existing in favor of each holder of arable land in a manor, to pasture the "commonable" cattle on the wasteland of the lord. Such a right could not be created after the Statute of Quia Emptores, since a grant by the lord of the manor thereafter took the land granted out of the manor as regards tenure. On the other hand, a common appurtenant does not necessarily arise from any connection of tenure, but must be claimed by grant or prescription and may be annexed to any kind of land whether arable or not. n504 The thing appurtenant need not be one of necessity; it may be one of convenience only, but it must be connected in use with the principal. n505 Personal property can become an appurtenance to land without attachment or annexation. n506 Rights appurtenant and rights appendant agree with each other in the nature and qualities of their properties, but differ in that the commencement of the former is known, while the latter has belonged to the thing more worthy beyond the memory of man. n507 Incorporeal hereditaments appendant or appurtenant to corporeal hereditaments are regarded as so intimately and inseparably connected with the tangible property of the estate upon which they are created that they will pass by a conveyance of such estate without the necessity of their being specially mentioned. They are regarded as mere incidents of such estates. n508 One may have certain rights in the property of another, not appurtenant to any land, but simply belonging to one as an individual; that is to say, there is no dominant tenement, the right being attached to the person and not to any land whatever. As distinguished from rights appendant and appurtenant, these rights may properly be termed rights in gross. n509 Hence, incorporeal hereditaments in gross are a species of estate in real property. n510 Insofar as duration is concerned, a right in gross may be perpetual and inheritable, and transferable. n511

The right to take oil and gas from land, like other profits a prendre, is usually considered an incorporeal hereditament. n512 The right to enter and dig for ores is an incorporeal hereditament which is an interest in land created only by deed. n513 Grants of rights-of-way are incorporeal hereditaments. n514 Riparian rights are appurtenances in the nature of incorporeal hereditaments. n515 Incorporeal hereditaments are sometimes called personalty, n516 but are otherwise treated as interests in land. n517 Other cases treat incorporeal hereditaments which run for years as chattels real, but if permanent as realty. n518

§ 14.04(c) Possession of Realty.

§ 14.04(c)(1) In General.

Possession of realty. Ownership has been likened to a bundle of sticks. Each stick represents one of the total number of possible interests in sum of rights, powers, privileges, immunities and liabilities. Absolute ownership, which never exists except in an anarchical economy, consists of all of the sticks tied together.

If one conceives of property as likened thus to a bundle of rights, privileges, immunities and liabilities adaptable to any physical thing, the fee simple absolute is the largest segment thereof that the political philosophy of the time and place permits any private individual to obtain. n519 The extent to which the sovereign may withhold part of the "bundle" determines in what position between totalitarianism and anarchy the law of the jurisdiction rests. A primitive society finds it impossible to separate from the "bundle" the concept of possession. In the absence of legal principles, possession is title. Even under the later legal concept of seisin, possession was the equivalent of title to realty. One who lost possession through disseisin, lost title, and the English law through a slow tortuous process of development of units of right and of possession gradually recognized the separation of possession and title. Possession is today a legal ideal created by a wedding of the legal intent to take possession, and sufficient manucaption or control over the property, determined by its nature and position to constitute dominion.

As contrasted with title, possession may (a) embrace the conception of title with respect to certain types of property, such as wild animals, fungible goods, negotiable instruments and, perhaps, newly discovered realty; (b) give to the possessor all or a portion of the incidents of title belonging to third parties, such as in the case of lost property, bailments, life tenancies and adverse possession; (c) give to the possessor the fruits and proceeds of the property, but not the right to take any portion of the freehold; (d) permit the possessor to defend possession against third parties and if the possession is lawful against the holder of the title concept; (e) place upon the shoulders of the possessor the liabilities as to third persons which arise out of ownership; n520 and (f) permit possession to ripen into title in the case of adverse use, adverse possession and prescription.

Constructive possession is a legal presumption which follows title to land and endures so long as title does, unless overcome in some way. n521 Constructive possession follows title and can only be defeated by actual possession adverse thereto. n522 Such possession is a legal presumption which follows title to the land and endures so long as title endures, unless overcome in some way. n523 Title draws to it seisin and possession, and actual entry is not necessary to give a more perfect title. n524 Where title is shown to have been in one at a certain time there is a presumption that it so remained until a change in title is shown. n525 Exclusive possession and control over real property raises a presumption of ownership in the possessor, and anyone else claiming the property has the burden of proof. n526 However, mere possession is insufficient to establish ownership. n527

Possession by one under a bona fide claim of ownership is evidence of ownership against all the world except the true owner. n528 A person in possession of land under a contract to purchase it may be the owner within the contemplation of certain statutes. n529 Ownership implies the right to possession and control. n530 Without possession no right in property can be maintained. n531

Possession, though the lowest type of title, is good against anyone not having a better one. n532 Any possession which is lacking in the right of free enjoyment and free disposition and the quality of indefinite duration of time is called in law a restricted, limited or qualified ownership.

When one goes into possession one is presumed to be entitled to remain in possession until the contrary is proven. n533 Possession of real estate is prima facie evidence of ownership as against one who is not in possession but claims adversely. n534

Interference with the use and enjoyment of land is a nuisance and substantial damage must be shown to create liability. Interference with possession is a trespass with absolute liability. n535

§ 14.04(c)(2) Incidents of Possession.

Incidents of the concept of possession. n536 "Possession" is of itself a legal fiction creating a concept recognized in the law and thus giving rise to definite legal consequences. Under the common-law rule where one in possession under an unregistered deed made improvements, one lost such improvements upon ouster. n537 The civil-law rule gave one the benefit of the improvements if one was in possession under a bona fide belief in title. n538 Later, the common-law rule was modified in equity to permit the possessor to deduct the value of the improvements from a judgment for mesne profits. n539 Even under the betterment statutes, however, there are limitations as against third parties. n540 The betterment statutes give the good faith possessor the value of the improvements. n541

It is widely stated that possession itself is a form of title. Actually, in a society without legal restraints prossession is the only title.

§ 14.04(c)(3) Possessory Rights in Chattels.

Possessory rights as to chattels. A problem similar to that of crops arises with respect to chattels found on land. This concerns the respective rights of the landowner and the owner or possessor of the locus in quo. Three different categories of personalty are recognized by the courts in this area: lost property, mislaid property and "treasure trove." Of course the rights of both the finder and the possessor of the land are subordinate to those of the true owner. n542 The stream of public policy which guides all decisions, whether in favor of the finder or the possessor of land, is to choose that method which is most likely to restore the property to the owner. Can this best be done by inducing the finder to make known finding and avoid concealment by giving the property to the finder until the owner appears or should the courts rely upon the theory that the owner is most likely to look for the property where it has been lost?

If the finder is a trespasser the cases usually hold in favor of the possessor of the locus in quo. n543 Distinction has also been made between goods found in a public or semipublic place and a private place with the owner of the locus in quo taking in the latter instance. n544 There is disagreement as to the rights of the finder versus a public utility. n545 Where the finder is the servant of the possessor of the realty the courts have usually found for the latter. n546

There is further controversy on lost property as to the comparative rights of the person entitled to possession of the realty as against the owner of the fee. n547 In the mislaid category the property is almost always given to the owner of the locus in quo as against the finder. n548 The difference between mislaid property and lost property is that in the first instance the owner deliberately placed it in a particular spot intending to pick it up later. But in the case of lost property the owner's giving up possession was unintended. The distinction is one of facts depending on the place where found, the nature of the article and the position in which found. There is a fourth category recognized as "abandoned goods." In this case a third element enters the controversy as between the finder and the owner or possessor of the locus in quo, the rights of the sovereign under statutes.

"Mislaid" property is that property deliberately placed in the location where found but forgotten by the owner. Because the law seeks to find that solution which is most likely to cause the return of the property to its true owner, and the owner would most likely return to the locus in quo to search for that property deliberately placed there, the cases often leave "mislaid" property with the owner of the place, not with the stranger who discovered it.

Lost property is that with which the owner did not want to lose possession. Here the division of the cases is over the question of how best to secure its return to the owner. One theory favors award to the finder to increase the likelihood that the finder will make the find known. The other theory is that the owner is most likely to search for it where it was lost.

"Treasure trove" is property deposited at such an early time that its original owners are presumed lost. n549 "Treasure trove" has been held to go to the finder as against the owner of the locus in quo. n550 In some cases "treasure trove" is treated as lost property, n551 in others a distinction is made. n552 More recent English cases, however, award the property to the possession of the owner of the locus in quo, n553 and this also has substantial American support. n554 The classic English case gave possession of the lost chattel to the finder as against the person entitled to possession of the realty. n555 This has substantial following in America. n556

§ 14.04(c)(4) Limitations on Rights Arising from Possession.

Limitations on possessory rights. Even the holder of a fee simple absolute has certain restraints on the free use of property. n557 These restraints fall into the categories of trespass, nuisance, police power, zoning, defeasible title and covenants.

One who actively or passively creates a situation on one's own land which causes injury to a neighbor or to neighboring land commits an actionable nuisance. n558 The essential feature of a private nuisance is interference with the use or the enjoyment of land. n559 The owner is not entitled to use property in such a manner as to cause it to injure adjoining properties or persons outside the boundary. This is the doctrine of nuisance. n560 Generally, the law of property gives the owner free use of property, n561 but private enterprise must utilize its private property in ways that are not inconsistent with public welfare. n562 One may not on one's own land set in motion forces that will travel beyond the boundaries and adversely affect others. These offensive forces may be discharged through the air n563 or underground n564 either in the form of discharge of matter n565 or of vibrations. n566

It has been held that when the owner of land knows or should know of an unreasonable hazard arising on the own land, the owner is liable to parties injured on adjacent land. This liability continues if the owner conveys the property. In such instances the courts are not in harmony as to whether there is an absolute liability or whether the doctrine of reasonableness applies. n567

A nuisance may be either public (so extensive as to affect a sufficient number of people to invoke state civil or criminal action) n568 or private (which merely gives a cause of action to another). n569

The question of whether a business, lawful in itself, or a particular use of property constitutes a nuisance turns on the reasonableness of conducting the business or the use of the property in a particular locality and in the manner and the circumstances of the case. n570 In the case of an abatable nuisance, there is continuing injury so that the statute of limitations does not commence on the date of the first injury. n571

An owner is not required to abate a nuisance caused by others over whom the owner has no control. It has been held that where a building threatens ruin, an adjoining landowner has the right of action to compel the owners of the building to have it demolished or repaired, and if there is danger of fall, the adjoining landowner may order the necessary work, for which the owner shall be reimbursed. So a defective building falls in the category of a servient estate for services. This, however, is not a duty on the part of the adjoining landowner. So, if the adjoining landowner fails to have the building torn down and the building collapses with injuries to the adjoining land, the owner of the building is liable. n572 Ice and snow may create a nuisance. n573

Another restraint or limitation on possession is the attractive nuisance doctrine. An attractive nuisance is the creation on one's own property of a situation that is not only dangerous but is also of a nature as to lure onto the premises those who, while trespassers, are not sufficiently mature to be able to recognize the nature or extent of the danger.

Police power constitutes yet another limitation on possession of property. The sovereign may by use of the police power restrain an owner from making such use of property as will endanger the health, safety or general welfare of others. This can be done through zoning or metropolitan planning. Also, the owner may voluntarily, through the giving of conditions or covenants, limit the extent of property use. n574

In addition to nuisance and land use restraints, trespass actions may be another restraint on possession of property. The discharge of particles through the air n575 or the creating of vibrations through the air n576 or underground n577 are actionable trespasses if they damage other properties. An adjoining landowner may maintain damages caused by crop spraying. n578 Underground vibrations, such as shock waves caused by blasting, are actionable if injury results to other landowners. n579 The cases differ as to whether the liability is absolute or whether negligence is the factor. n580

§ 14.04(c)(5) Possible Liabilities Arising from Possession of Land.

Liabilities attendant upon possession of land. A major example of the changing positions of the property law lies in the area of the extent of liability of a possessor of land for injury occurring to others which results from dangerous conditions existing on the property. Traditionally, the law has classified such third parties as either trespassers, n581 licensees or invitees, n582 with invitees sometimes separated into social n583 and business invitees.

One who intentionally lures another onto his land makes the other the licensee rather than a trespasser. n584 Licensees are those who are on the land with the occupier's consent. n585 The leading rule as to trespassers n586 or mere licensees n587 holds that the occupier of land is liable only for wilful or wanton acts and imposes no duty on the occupier to keep the premises in a safe condition. However, some cases impose a greater degree of liability in the case of a licensee who does not know or should not know of the risk involved in entry. n588

Generally, the law of property gives the owner free use of the property, n589 but private enterprise must utilize its private property in ways that are not inconsistent with the public welfare. n590

A possessor of land is subject to the possibility of liability for injury to the person or property of other persons who come upon the property. The nature and extent of this liability depends largely on which classification pertains to the stranger, the nature of the cause of the injury and the occupier's knowledge of the condition.

Persons coming onto land occupied by another are classified by the law as invitees n591 if they come at the invitation of the occupier for reasons mutually beneficial. n592 A business visitor who has business with the occupier and those who have social dealings with him fall in this class. n593 Quarrymen and strip mine operators are liable to invitees or business invitees for injuries received by them while on the premises where such injury is due to the operator's negligence or when due to dangerous conditions not as obvious to the visitor as to the operator. n594 An employee of a contractor is an invitee while on the premises being repaired and must be warned of latent dangers. n595

Where the lessor has retained control over entrances, the lessor's duty toward third parties who are invitees of the lessee does not go beyond maintaining the property in the same state as it was at the time of the lease. n596

Once the occupier owed no duty to trespassers. This was modified in two respects n597 The occupier could not create a situation known to be dangerous, i.e., the "spring gun" cases. n598 The other exception is the attractive nuisance doctrine, where the occupier creates or permits to arise or continue conditions which are dangerous. If trespassers who have not sufficient mental ability to comprehend the danger are lured onto the premises by the attractive nature of the situation, the occupier becomes liable for the resultant injury. n599

The older rule limited the occupier's liability to invitees to conditions which the occupier knew or should have known to be dangerous. n600 The later tendency is to increase the degree of liability. For a landowner to be liable for injuries to a passerby from a falling limb from a tree on the owner's property it must be shown that the owner was aware of the deterioration of the tree. n601 One phase of this is to separate social invitees from business invitees and to increase the responsibility as to those who come onto the premises for business purposes, such as patrons of supermarkets or filling stations. n602 Social guests are licensees and not invitees, so that they are required to take the premises as they find them and are not entitled to more protection against defects than those taken by the owner for his own family. n603 There is a tendency to extend the occupier's liability to governmental agents, such as firemen and policemen. n604

The law once distinguished between trespassers, invitees and licensees with respect to degree of liability. There was no liability to trespassers except in the case of deliberately created hazards--the "spring gun" cases, and the "attractive nuisance" doctrine relating particularly to minors. The extent of liability to invitees and licensees varies in the jurisdictions, but most rely on the reasonable person doctrine. n605 As noted, the possessor may be liable to certain trespassers under the attractive nuisance doctrine. n606 Under one theory the attractive nuisance base is allurement n607 and under another the justification is negligence of the landowner. n608 The attractive nuisance requirements are: (1)

The condition creating the harm must be an artificial one created, constructed or maintained by the possessor of the land. (2) The injured person must be a young child, (3) who is excluded for some reason from the principle that the possessor of land owes no duty as to the condition of the premises to trespassers, except for deliberately setting traps for trespassers. (4) The risk must be one which was not apparent or was attractive to the child. (5) Reasonable precautions were available to minimize or eliminate the risk without reducing the utility of the land and the possessor had failed to take such precautions. n609 The attractive nuisance doctrine has been extended to animals. n610 While some courts still hold that with respect to children there must be something on the premises to lure them to create Liability for attractive nuisance, n611 other courts find liability where the owner of the premises could have foreseen the possibility of harm. n612 The owner of an artificial body of water is liable on the theory of attractive nuisance if it is a trap or there is an unusual element of danger about it. n613 A landowner is liable for an attractive nuisance existing on his land which is known to exist even though created by another. n614

The modern rule with respect to invitees is that the occupier must use reasonable care to protect the invitee against dangers of which the occupier is aware or should by reasonable diligence discover. n615 The same is true as to licensees. n616

At common law policemen and firemen entering upon private premises in the discharge of their duties were mere licensees. n617 Some cases have held firemen to be in a separate class and allow action for landowner's negligent storage of dangerous materials. n618 There is a growing doctrine, however, that ascribes to the owner of the premises in such cases a higher duty of safe conditions than in the case of a mere licensee. n619 The tendency of the law is to limit the common-law distinction between trespassers, invitees and licensees. n620 Reasonable care is due only in the case of an invitee. The owner must have actual or constructive notice of a dangerous condition. n621

Members of a tenant's family are not guests or invitees with respect to the lessor's liability. The lessor's liability to them is the same as to the tenant. n622

An employee of a contractor is an invitee while on the premises being repaired and must be warned of latent dangers. n623

Under the older concept the lessor upon surrender of possession to the lessee had no responsibility for the condition of the premises either to the lessee or to third persons who came onto the property. But this concept is rapidly changing to increase the lessor's responsibility both as to the lessee and as to third parties on the leased premises.

The owner is liable to outsiders: (a) for injuries due to building defects where the property is in possession of a tenant n624 if the property is in such a bad state of repair that it will necessarily become a nuisance or has become so; n625 (b) the nuisance created by the tenant arose as a consequence of the use created by the parties; n626 (c) if the owner has retained control of the premises or the dangerous portion thereof; n627 (d) the owner covenants to repair; n628 or (e) the landlord reserves the right to make repairs and the injury is to persons outside the premises. n629

The basic rule is that a vendor of real property after parting with title and possession is not liable for injuries suffered by the vendee or third parties caused by dangerous conditions on the premises. n630 When the vendor surrenders possession to the vendee under a sales contract, the vendor is no longer liable for dangerous conditions on the premises, n631 unless the vendor has knowledge of the dangerous condition and conceals it or fails to disclose it to the vendee, and the vendee did not know of it and the vendor believed the vendee would not discover the condition or realize the risk. n632

The sovereign and its agencies are not liable in tort for dangerous conditions on the premises to which the public has access unless the operations conducted thereon are a proprietary function. n633

As respects licensees, as in the case of trespassers, the earlier law merely held the possessor liable for wilful or wanton acts and imposed no duty on the occupier to keep the premises in a safe condition. Some cases impose, however, a greater degree of liability in the case of a licensee, who does not know or should not know of the risk involved in entry. n634 The possessor does not have, as against third parties invited on the premises by the licensee the same degree of protection that a lessor is afforded. There is a strong tendency to abolish the difference in liability as to trespassers, licensees and invitees and equate all on a reasonable person basis. n635

If the relationship between the owner and the third person solely benefits the third person, the third person is at most a licensee. If the relationship is of mutual benefit to the parties, the third person is an invitee. n636 Courts vary considerably on the extent to which a possessor may be liable for injuries to invitees or licensees for criminal actions of third persons. n637 Operators of mobile home parks incur tort liability for the premises under limited circumstances. n638

§ 14.04(d) Property Rights Associated with Future Interests.

Future interests. The law recognizes interests in land that do not carry with them rights of present possession, but which may certainly or upon a contingency become possessory in the future. These are "future interests" and are limited to commence in possession or enjoyment in the future. n639 Such estates or interests may be created in the alternative. n640 Whether vested or contingent, such estates or interests are divisible, assignable, and transmissible by descent. n641 So where under a will to the widow for life, with power to sell realty and with a limitation over of remainder to another, the widow sold the property and bequeathed the proceeds to a third party, the court held the proceeds to have remained realty and to be the property of the remainderman under the first will. n642 A mere possibility of reverter is incapable of alienation or devise. n643 such an interest not being sufficient to constitute an estate. n644 An estate may be created by deed to commence in the future without any intervening estate to support it. n645 Conveyances creating future estates or interests are usually in the form of a deed of bargain and sale, with a provision postponing the grantee's enjoyment and occupancy until the grantor's death or to some other specified time. n646

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 381. Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Colo. 351 (1877). The term "land" may be used not only to designate the ground itself, but frequently to designate only a certain interest therein: In re Appropriation of Easement for Highway Purposes. 195 N.E.2d 364 (Ohio App. 1963).

(n2)Footnote 382. In re Handley's Estate, 57 A. 755 (Pa. 1904).

(n3)Footnote 383. Jilek v. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co., 47 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1943).

(n4)Footnote 384. Jones v. Peck, 218 P. 1030 (Cal. App. 1923).

(n5)Footnote 385. Miners Sav. Bank v. Joyce, 97 F.2d 973 (Pa. 1938).

(n6)Footnote 386. First Nat'l Bank v. Holland, 39 S.E. 126 (Va. 1901).

(n7)Footnote 387. Lavenson v. Standard Soap Co., 22 P. 184 (Cal. 1889); Federal Land Bank v. Mulhern, 157 So. 370 (La. 1934); White v. McVey, 31 P.2d 850 (Okla. 1934); Wilson v. Youst, 28 S.E. 781 (W. Va. 1897).

(n8)Footnote 388. Stowers v. Huntington Dev. & Gas Co., 72 F.2d 969 (4th Cir. 1934); Lavagnino v. Uhlig, 71 P. 1046 (Utah 1903).

(n9)Footnote 389. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Baker, 26 N.E. 651 (Ill. 1891); Hirth v. Graham, 33 N.E. 90 (Ohio 1893).

(n10)Footnote 390. Metcalf v. Nelson, 65 N.W. 911 (S.D. 1895).

(n11)Footnote 391. Glencoe Sand & Gravel Co. v. Hudson Bros. Comm. Co., 40 S.W. 93 (Mo. 1897).

(n12)Footnote 392. Jilek v. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co., 47 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1943).

(n13)Footnote 393. Restatement, Law of Property. § 8.

(n14)Footnote 394. Alabama Fretwell v. McLemore, 52 Ala. 124 (1875); Martinovich v. Marsicano, 70 P. 459 (Cal. 1902); Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Colo. 351 (1877); Field v. Higgins, 35 Me. 339 (1853): Nellis v. Munson, 15 N.E. 739 (N.Y. 1888); Ehrsam v. Utica, 55 N.Y.S. 942 (N.Y.A.D. 1899); Scogin v. Perry, 32 Texas 21 (1869).

(n15)Footnote 395. Murphy v. Superior Court, 70 P. 1070 (Cal. 1902); Guy v. Brennan, 213 P. 265 (Cal. App. 1923); Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909) ("land" comprehends ground, soil, or earth, pastures, woods, springs, wells, lakes, ponds, and all things which have become fixed parts of soil); Rodack v. New Moon Theatre, 200 N.Y.S. 237 (1923); Woodworth v. Franklin, 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921). See National Bank of America v. Barritt. 18p.2d 552 (Kan. 1933).

(n16)Footnote 396. Guy v. Brennan, 213 P. 265 (Cal. App. 1923); Jones v. State, 70 N.E. 952 (Ohio 1904); Knight v. Thomas, 101 P. 383 (Utah 1909) (authority of city to grant "real property" to aid railroad authorized conveyance of street or interest therein for 100 years, the fee being in the city).

(n17)Footnote 397. Kiser v. Sawyer, 4 Kan. 503 (1868); Bodwell v. Heaton, 18 P. 901 (Kan. 1888); Slattery v. Jones, 8 S.W. 554 (Mo. 1888); State v. Barr, 28 Mo. App. 84 (1887). "There are two modes in which the subject matter of a deed may be described, both of the thing itself, as of land by metes and bounds, or by a known name, and the other is by a designation of its usufruct, or of the dominion over it. Thus a grant of the rents, issues, and profits of a tract of land is uniformly held to be a grant of the land itself." Coke on Littleton, § 4b. Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475 (1858).

(n18)Footnote 398. Jilek v. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co., 47 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1943).

(n19)Footnote 399. Sanitary Dist. v. Manasse, 42 N.E.2d 543 (Ill. 1942).

(n20)Footnote 400. Coke on Littleton, § 121a; Butler & H. n. 1.

(n21)Footnote 401. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Wayne County, 221 N.W. 111 (Mich, 1928); United States Nat'l Bank v. Miller, 258 P. 205 (Or. 1927).

(n22)Footnote 402. Jetton v. University of the South, 208 U.S. 489 (U.S. Tenn. 1908); Chicago v. University of Chicago, 134 N.E. 723 (Ill. 1922): Fidelity Trust Co. v. Wayne County. 221 N.W. 111 (Mich. 1928).

(n23)Footnote 403. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925). See The Creation of an Estate by Implication, 11 S.C. L. Q. 352.

(n24)Footnote 404. First Trust & Deposit Co. v. Syrdelco, Inc., 292 N.Y.S. 206 (N.Y.A.D. 1936). In Louisiana there can be no other land tenure than perfect and imperfect ownership: Starr Davis Oil Co. v. Webber, 48 So. 2d 906 (La. 1950).

(n25)Footnote 405. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat'l Bank, 113 U.S. 408 (1885); Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 73 P. 826 (Cal. 1903); Missouri K. & T.R. Co. v. Miami County, 73 P. 103 (Kan. 1903); People ex rel. Dunkirk & F. R. Co. v. Cassity, 46 N.Y. 46 (1871); People ex rel. Panama R. Co. v. New York Tax Comm'rs, 10 N.E. 437 (N.Y. 1887); Edwards & McCulloch Lbr. Co. v. Mosher, 60 N.W. 264 (Wis. 1894).

(n26)Footnote 406. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat'l Bank, 113 U.S. 408 (1885); New York v. Mabie, 13 N.Y. 151 (1855); Conant v. Deep Creek & Curlew Val. Irr. Co., 66 P. 188 (Utah 1901).

(n27)Footnote 407. Hogan v. Manners, 23 Kan. 551 (1880).

(n28)Footnote 408. Harrell v. Miller, 35 Miss. 700 (1858).

(n29)Footnote 409. 1 COKE First Inst., § 4a; Isharn v. Morgan, 9 Conn. 374 (1832). See Real Rights in Louisiana, 21 La. L. Rev. 462.

(n30)Footnote 410. Toth v. Bigelow, 64 A.2d 62 (N.J. 1949).

(n31)Footnote 411. Garnsey Coal Co. v. Mudd, 281 F. 183 (N.D. Ala. 1922). See In re Coe's Estate, 202 P.2d 1022 (Cal. 1949).

(n32)Footnote 412. Garnsey Coal Co. v. Mudd, 281 F. 183 (N.D. Ala. 1922) (condemnation of right-of-way through seam of coal); Risley v. Rumble, 144 N.E. 568 (Ind. App. 1924); Gas Products Co. v. Rankin, 207 P. 993 (Mont. 1922); Herrin v. Sutherland. 241 P. 328 (Mont. 1925); Horne v. Utah Oil Ref. Co., 202 P. 815 (Utah 1921); Gostina v. Ryland, 199 P. 298 (Wash. 1921); Christensen v. Mann, 204 N.W. 499 (Wis. 1925). The building of fences, walls or other structures, or making excavations on his own land, ordinarily is within the absolute right of the owner of the fee, without reference to the incidental injury which may thereby be caused to his neighbor: Jubilee Yacht Club v. Gulf Ref. Co., 140 N.E. 280 (Mass. 1923).

(n33)Footnote 413. Piper v. Ekern, 194 N.W. 159 (Wis. 1923).

(n34)Footnote 414. Bowman v. Union Trust Co., 106 P.2d 913 (Cal. App. 1940); Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909). See 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 17; 4 Kent's Commentaries 468.

(n35)Footnote 415. Clay v. Bogie, 119 S.W. 737 (Ky. 1909).

(n36)Footnote 416. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909); In re Metropolitan Elec. R. Co., 2 N.Y.S. 278 (N.Y. 1888). See Lincoln Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Nathan, 19 N.E.2d 243 (Ind. 1939).

(n37)Footnote 417. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 17; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405 (1874); State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind. 402 (1870); Owens v. Lewis. 46 Ind. 488 (1874); Goddard v. Winchell, 52 N.W. 1124 (Iowa 1892); Coombs v. Jordan, 3 Bland. 284 (Md. 1831); Seager v. McCabe, 52 N.W. 299 (Mich. 1892); Johnson v. Richardson, 33 Miss. 462 (Miss. 1857); Orchard v. Wright-Dalton- Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909); Ferguson v. Ray, 77 P. 600 (Or. 1904): Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 81 P. 572 (Or. 1905); Eggborn v. Smith. 77 S.E. 593 (Va. 1913); Williamson v. Jones, 19 S.E. 436 (W. Va. 1894).

(n38)Footnote 418. Federal Land Bank v. Mulhern, 157 So. 370 (La. 1934). But see Champlin Ref. Co. v. Corporation Comm'n., 286 U.S. 210 (U.S. Okla. 1932) (holding owner of land has no absolute title to gas and oil that may permeate below the surface).

(n39)Footnote 419. Whelan v. Johnston, 6 So. 2d 300 (Miss. 1942).

(n40)Footnote 420. Schreiner v. Witte. 8 N.W.2d 831 (Neb. 1943).

(n41)Footnote 421. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 50 N.E. 1104 (Ill. 1898).

(n42)Footnote 422. Romano v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 62 So. 677 (Ala. 1913): Isham v. Morgan. 9 Conn. 374 (1832); Smith v. Atlanta, 17 S.E. 981 (Ga. 1893); Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405 (1874); Field v. Barling, 37 N.E. 850 (Ill. 1894); State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind, 402 (1870); Owens v. Lewis. 46 Ind. 448 (1874); Peoples Gas Co. v. Tyner, 31 N.E. 59 (Ind. 1892); Seager v. McCabe, 52 N.W. 299 (Mich. 1892): Weems v. Mayfield, 22 So. 892 (Miss. 1898): Barnett v. Johnson, 15 N.J. Ch.48l (1863); Newhoff v. Mayo, 23 A. 265 (N.J. 1891); United States Pipe-Line Co.

v. Delaware L. & W.R. Co., 41 A. 759 (N.J. 1898): Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. 400 (N.Y. Gem. 1863): Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer 452, 11 N.Y.S.Ct. 452 (1855); Hilton & Dodge Lbr, Co. v. Murray, 62 N.Y.S. 35 (N.Y.A.D. 1900); Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Hughes, 38 A. 568 (Pa. 1897); Murphy v. Bolger, 15 A. 365 (Vt. 1888); Crews v. Pendleton, 1 Leigh 297 (Va. 1829); Stuart v. Pennis, 22 S.E. 509 (Va. 1895).

(n43)Footnote 423. Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co., 22 A. 1035 (Pa. 1891).

(n44)Footnote 424. Cox v. Colossal Cavern Co., 276 S.W. 540 (Ky. 1925).

(n45)Footnote 425. Uphoff v. Tufts College, 184 N.E. 213 (Ill. 1932); Gabbard v. Sheffield, 200 S.W. 940 (Ky. 1918); Huss v. Jacobs, 59 A. 991 (Pa. 1904).

(n46)Footnote 426. Mathews Slate Co. v. Advance Industrial Supply Co., 172 N.Y.S. 830 (N.Y.A.D. 1918).

(n47)Footnote 427. Auburn & S. Elec. R. Co. v. Hoadley, 195 N.Y.S. 517 (N.Y. 1922).

(n48)Footnote 428. In re Handley's Estate, 57 A. 755 (Pa. 1904).

(n49)Footnote 429. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909).

(n50)Footnote 430. Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405 (1874); Oskaloosa Water Co. v. Board of Equalization, 51 N.W. 18 (Iowa 1892).

(n51)Footnote 431. Gibson v. Brockway, 8 N.H. 465 (1837).

(n52)Footnote 432. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909); New York v. Mabie, 13 N.Y. 151 (1855).

(n53)Footnote 433. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston. 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925).

(n54)Footnote 434. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909).

(n55)Footnote 435. Polson v. Parsons, 104 P. 336 (Okla. 1909).

(n56)Footnote 436. Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147 (1877).

(n57)Footnote 437. Rickey Land & Cattle Co. v. Miller & Lux, 152 F. 11 (9th Cir. 1907) (holding that the right of an appropriator of water, for irrigation, to have it flow in the stream to the head of the ditch, is an incorporeal hereditament appurtenant to the ditch); Bemis v. First Nat'l Bank,40 S.W. 127 (Ark. 1897); O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 96 P. 323 (Cal. 1908) (holding that a franchise to operate a street railway is an incorporeal hereditament); East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 186 (1828).

(n58)Footnote 438. Owens v. Lewis, 46 Ind. 488 (1874); Oskaloosa Water Co. v. Board of Equalization, 51 N.W. 18 (Iowa 1892).

(n59)Footnote 439. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S.W. 486 (Mo. 1909); New York v. Mabie, 13 N.Y. 151 (1855).

(n60)Footnote 440. Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147 (1877).

(n61)Footnote 441. Id. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 93 N.W. 781 (Neb. 1903).

A water right and its exercise are hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, and are real property: Sain v. Montana Power Co., 20 F. Supp. 843 (D. Mont. 1937).

(n62)Footnote 442. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935).

(n63)Footnote 443. Woodworth v. Franklin. 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921).

(n64)Footnote 444. State v. Royal Mineral Ass'n, 156 N.W. 128 (Minn. 1916).

(n65)Footnote 445. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 17: Coke on Littleton. §§ 4a-6b; Van Rensselaer v. Poucher, 5 Denio 35 (N.Y. 1847).

Coke on Littleton, § lb, speaks of hereditaments as applying to real, personal and "mixt." Bracton, at 7, recognized the difference between things corporeal and incorporeal.

(n66)Footnote 446. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925).

(n67)Footnote 447. National Supply Co. v. McLeod, 227 P. 350 (Kan. 1924).

(n68)Footnote 448. See Simpson. An Introduction to The History of The Land Law (Oxford University Press 1961) Ch. 5, An Analysis of Incorporeal Rights.

(n69)Footnote 449. They are not the object of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled, are creatures of the mind, and exist only incontemplation. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 17. See Hegan v. Pendennis Club, 64 S.W. 464 (Ky. 1901). Their existence is merely in idea and abstracted contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently objects of our bodily senses. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 19. See Whitlock v. Greacen, 21 A. 944 (N.J. 1891).

(n70)Footnote 450. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co. v. Minier, 40 F. Supp. 316 (E.D. Ill. 1941).

(n71)Footnote 451. United States v. Wheeler, 161 F. Supp. 193 (W.D. Ark. 1958).

(n72)Footnote 452. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 19.

(n73)Footnote 453. 3 Kent's Commentaries 402: Whitlock v. Greacen, 21 A. 944 (N.J. 1891).

(n74)Footnote 454. Wright v. Best, 121 P.2d 702 (Cal. 1942).

(n75)Footnote 455. Akron Canal & Hydraulic Co. v. Fontaine, 50 N.E.2d 897 (Oh. App. 1943).

(n76)Footnote 456. Williams, Real Property 11: Thus, corporeal hereditaments "lie in livery" while incorporeal hereditaments "lie in grant."

(n77)Footnote 457. Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co., 112 F. 373 (1902). A profit as an incorporeal hereditament has, however, been treated as personalty: Shields v. Fink, 372 P.2d 252 (Kan. 1962).

(n78)Footnote 458. Castillero v. United States, 67 U.S. 17 (U.S. Cal. 1862).

(n79)Footnote 459. Aggregate Supply Co. v. Sewell, 122 S.E.2d 580 (Ga. 1961); Hummel v. McFadden, 150 A.2d 856(Pa. 1959).

(n80)Footnote 460. See United States v. Wheeler, 161 F. Supp. 193 (W.D. Ark. 1958) (an incorporeal hereditament cannot be abandoned).

(n81)Footnote 461. Central Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gardner, 154 N.E.2d 316 (Ill. App. 1958); Schuster v. Pennsylvania Tpk. Comm'n 149 A.2d 447 (Pa. 1959). A determinable fee in Mississippi and Kansas: Dougherty v. Green, 67 So. 2d 297 (Miss. 1953); Wilson v. Holm, 188 P.2d 899 (Kan. 1948).

(n82)Footnote 462. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921) (incorporeal property consists of choses in action and easements, as a right-of-way, and the like); Saratoga State Waters Corp. v. Pratt, 125 N.E. 834 (N.Y. 1920). Ross v. Franko, 41 N.E.2d 417 (Oh. App. 1941); Steelhammer v. Clackamas County, 135 P.2d 292 (Or. 1943); Manwiller v. Ludwig, 35 Berks 231 (Pa. 1943); Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Dixon, 122 P.2d 842 (Wyo. 1942) (holding that the right to take oil and gas from land is of the nature of an incorporeal hereditament).

(n83)Footnote 463. See Reynolds v. Cook, 3 S.E. 710 (Va. 1887); Walker v. Daly, 49 N.W. 812 (Wis. 1891).

(n84)Footnote 464. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Dixon, 122 P.2d 842 (Wyo. 1942).

(n85)Footnote 465. Radke v. Union Pac. R. Co., 334 P.2d 1077 (Colo. 1959); Hegan v. Pendennis Club, 64 S.W. 464 (Ky. 1901).

(n86)Footnote 466. In re Leonard's Estate, 22 A.2d 676 (Pa. 1941) (the privilege of interment in certain defined space in a mausoleum is not a fee simple but an incorporeal hereditament, though the privilege was both perpetual and exclusive).

(n87)Footnote 467. Miller v. Miller, 179 A. 248 (Pa. 1935). Riparian right to flow of water is an incorporeal hereditament: Midgett v. North Carolina State Hwy Comm'n 132 S.E.2d 599 (N.C. 1963).

(n88)Footnote 468. Tiger v. Sellers, 145 F.2d 920 (10th Cir. 1944); Schmid v. Baum's Home of Flowers, 37 S.W.2d 105 (Tenn. 1931).

(n89)Footnote 469. Tanner v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 129 P.2d 383 (Cal. 1942); Baker v. Vanderpool, 178 S.W.2d 189 (Ky. 1944); Mark v. Bradford. 23 N.W.2d 201 (Mich. 1946); Bishop v. Sanford, 35 S.W.2d 800 (Tex. App. 1931).

(n90)Footnote 470. First & Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Sawyer, 10 S.E.2d 656 (N.C. 1940).

(n91)Footnote 471. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935). Incorporeal hereditaments "comprise certain inheritable rights, which are not, strictly speaking, of a corporeal nature or land, although they are, by their own nature or use, annexed to corporeal inheritances, and are rights issuing out of them or concerning them." Kent's Commentaries 402. See Patterson v. Kentucky. 97 U.S. 501 (1878).

(n92)Footnote 472. Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601 (1895); State v. Royal Mineral Ass'n, 156 N.W. 128 (Minn. 1916); People ex rel. Cohn v. Graves, 3 N.E.2d 508 (N.Y. 1936). See Reynolds v. Cook, 3 S.E. 710 (Va. 1887); Walker v. Daly, 49 N.W. 812 (Wis. 1891).

(n93)Footnote 473. Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501 (1878); United States v. Dubilier Condenser Corp., 289 U.S. 178(1933).

(n94)Footnote 474. National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 F. 294 (7th Cir. 1902); Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147(1877).

(n95)Footnote 475. Miller v. Miller, 179 A. 248 (Pa. 1935). See John C. Karjanis, Notes & Comments, Public Fishing Rights, 12 WYO. L. Rev. 167 (1958).

(n96)Footnote 476. Stone v. Stone, 1 R.I. 425 (1851).

(n97)Footnote 477. Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895); Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601 (1895); Van Rensselaer v. Read, 26 N.Y. 558 (1863). See Priester v. Hohloch, 75 N.Y.S. 405 (App. Div. 1902).

(n98)Footnote 478. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries 316. Branan v. Wimsatt, 298 F. 833 (App. D.C. 1924); Lang v.

Dupuis. 46 N.E.2d 21 (Ill. 1943); Dyer v. Sanford, 50 Mass. 395 (1845); Morse v. Copeland, 68 Mass. 302 (1854); Fuhr v. Dean, 26 Mo. 116 (1857); Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co., 19 N.J. Ch. 142 (1868); Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns 81 (N.Y. 1809): Cagle v. Parker, 2 S.E. 76 (N.C. 1887): Woodworth v. Franklin, 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921); Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206 (1866). The remedy for the protection of incorporeal rights is in equity. Ejectment will not lie: Brooks v. Wheeler. 152 N.E. 454 (N.Y. 1926). See also Ewert v. Robinson, 289 F. 740 (8th Cir. 1923) (remedy of ejectment in case of lease for purpose of prospecting for oil. gas. and mineral). As livery of seisin could not be had of incorporeal hereditaments, the transfer of them was always made by writing in order to give them a notoriety which was produced in the transfer of corporeal hereditaments by the delivery of possession: French v. French, 3 N.H. 234 (1825).

(n99)Footnote 479. Woodworth v. Franklin, 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921).

(n100)Footnote 480. 33 Blackstone's Commentaries 262; Coke on Littleton, § 198; Kent v. Waite, 27 Mass. 138 (1830): Melvin v. Whiting, 27 Mass. 295 (1830).

(n101)Footnote 481. Coolidge v. Learned, 25 Mass. 504 (1829).

(n102)Footnote 482. See Melton v. Donnell, 114 S.W.2d 49 (Tenn. 1938).

(n103)Footnote 483. Powell v. Bagg. 74 Mass. 441 (1857): Carrig v. Dee. 80 Mass. 583 (1860): Stearns v. Janes. 94 Mass. 582 (1866); Claflin v. Boston & A.R. Co., 32 N.E. 659 (Mass. 1892); Spottiswoode v. Morris & E.R. Co., 40 A. 505 (N.J. 1898); Miller v. Lutheran Conference & Camp Ass'n, 200 A. 646 (Pa. 1938). See Mecke v. Heist 54 Montg. 275 (Pa. 1938).

(n104)Footnote 484. Masterson v. Harris County Houston Ship Channel Nav. Dist., 15 S.W.2d 1011 (Tex. App. 1929).

(n105)Footnote 485. Pflueger v. Hopple, 156 P.2d 316 (Idaho 1945); Attorney-General v. Revere Copper Co., 25 N.E. 605 (Mass. 1890).

(n106)Footnote 486. Coolidge v. Learned, 25 Mass. 504 (1928); Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N.J. 605 (1881); Lamb v. Crosland, 38 S.C. 536 (1851); Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 503 (1864).

(n107)Footnote 487. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries, Ch. 3; Central Pipe Line Co. v. Hutson, 82 N.E.2d 624 (Ill. 1948).

(n108)Footnote 488. See Thomas v. Marshfield, 27 Mass. 364 (1830).

(n109)Footnote 489. 2 Blackstone's Commentaries; Ne-Bo-Shone Ass'n v. Hogarth, 7 F. Supp. 885 (W.D. Mich. 1934).

(n110)Footnote 490. Coke on Littleton, § 449: Dulaney v. Dulaney, 54 S.E. 40 (Va. 1906).

(n111)Footnote 491. Coke on Littleton, § 142a; Eastham v. Anderson, 119 Mass. 526 (1876). See Nelms v. Turner, 139 N.E. 900 (1869).

(n112)Footnote 492. Lippencott v. Allander, 27 Iowa 460.

(n113)Footnote 493. Coke on Littleton. § 2a.

(n114)Footnote 494. See In re Brown, 21 F. Supp. 935 (S.D. Iowa 1938).

(n115)Footnote 495. St. Helen Shooting Club v. Mogle, 207 N.W. 915 (Mich. 1926); Council v. Sanderlin, 111 S.E. 365 (N.C. 1922).

(n116)Footnote 496. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921).

(n117)Footnote 497. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925).

(n118)Footnote 498. United States v. 12.75 Acres of Land, 95 F. Supp. 988 (Tenn. 1951); Hummel v. McFadden. 150 A.2d 856 (Pa. 1959). An oil and gas lease is an incorporeal hereditament: Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jones, 176 F.2d 737 (10th Cir. 1949).

(n119)Footnote 499. Ewert v. Robinson, 289 F. 740 (8th Cir. 1923); Marrs v. Oxford, 24 F.2d 541 (Kan. 1928); Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jones, 176 F.2d 737 (10th Cir. 1949); Cowling v. Deep Vein Coal Co., 183 F.2d 652 (7th Cir. 1950); United States v. 12.75 Acres of Land, 95 F. Supp. 998 (Tenn. 1951); Davis v. Collins, 245 S.W.2d 571 (Ark. 1952); Bacon v. Wahrhaftig, 218 P.2d 144 (Cal. App. 1950); Heeter v. Hardy, 76 N.E.2d 590 (Ind. App. 1948); National Supply Co. v. McLeod, 227 P. 350 (Kan. 1924); Connell v. Kanwa Oil, 170 P.2d 631 (Kan. 1946); Exchange Nat'l Bank v. Head, 99 So. 272 (La. 1924); Dixon v. American Liberty Oil Co., 77 So. 2d 533 (La. 1954); Woodworth v. Franklin, 204 P. 452 (Okla. 1921).

(n120)Footnote 500. Saginaw v. Second Nat'l Bank, 182 N.W. 88 (Mich. 1921); In re Rust's Estate, 182 N.W. 82 (Mich. 1921); Thacker v. Flottman, 244 S.W.2d 1020 (Mo. 1952); Picard v. Richards, 366 P.2d 119 (Wyo. 1961). See however, Ewert v. Robinson, 289 F. 740 (C.C.A.8 1923) (in which it is stated that on this question the authorities are in irreconcilable, conflict and that the nature and wording of the instrument controls.).

(n121)Footnote 501. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 131 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1921; Wolfe County v. Beckett, 105 S.W. 447 (Ky. 1907); Brown v. Fowler, 63 N.E. 76 (Ohio 1902); Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 225 Pa 338 (Pa. 1909); Murray v. Allard, 43 S.W. 355 (Tenn. 1897).

(n122)Footnote 502. New Ipswich W. L. Factory v. Batchelder, 3 N.H. 190 (1825).

(n123)Footnote 503. Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U.S. 304 (1891): Meek v. Breckenridge. 29 Ohio St. 642 (1876). An appendant is a thing used with and related to or dependent upon another thing more worthy, and agreeing in its nature and quality with the thing whereunto it is appendant or appurtenant: Lucas v. Bishop, 83 Tenn. 165 (1885). See Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 6 (Mass. 1810); Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 Ohio St. 642 (1876).

(n124)Footnote 504. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. 639 (N.Y. 1833).

(n125)Footnote 505. Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U.S. 304 (1891); Wilson v. Beckwith, 22 S.W. 639 (Mo. 1893): Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N.Y. 382 (N.Y. 1875): Meek v. Breckenridge. 29 Ohio St. 642 (1876).

(n126)Footnote 506. Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Associated Mtg. Investors, 290 P. 255 (Mont. 1930).

(n127)Footnote 507. Leonard v. White. 7 Mass. 6 (Mass. 1810).

(n128)Footnote 508. Coke On Littleton, § 121b. Huston v. Cox, 172 P. 992 (Kan. 1918).

(n129)Footnote 509. See Crippen v. Morss, 49 N.Y. 63 (N.Y. 1872); Valentine v. Schreiber, 38 N.Y.S. 417 (N.Y. 1896): Metcalf v. Crystal Brook Park Ass'n, 71 N.Y.S. 537 (N.Y. 1901).

(n130)Footnote 510. Callahan v. Martin, 43 P.2d 788 (Cal. 1935). It is a rule, in accordance with natural justice and reason, that, where one sells a house or a farm, every right will pass to the purchaser which is necessary to complete use and enjoyment of the property, unless expressly reserved: Tucker v. Jones, 19 P. 571 (Mont. Terr. 1888), and quoted in Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Associated Mtg. Investors, 290 P. 255 (Mont. 1930). See Plaza Amusement Co. v. Rothenberg, 131 So. 350 (Miss. 1930).

(n131)Footnote 511. Atlantic Mills v. New York Cent. R. Co., 214 N.Y.S. 123 (N.Y. 1926).

(n132)Footnote 512. Rowan v. Harburney Oil Co., 91 F.2d 122 (10th Cir. 1937); United States v. Stanolind Crude Oil Purchasing Co., 113 F.2d 194: Lake v. Sealy, 165 So. 399 (Ala. 1936); Romero v. Brewer. 137 P.2d 872 (Cal. App. 1943); Heller v. Dailey, 63 N.E. 490 (Ind. App. 1902); Huston v. Cox, 172 P. 992 (Kan. 1918); Rich v. Doneghey, 177 P. 86 (Okla. 1918): Boatman v. Andre, 12 P.2d 370 (Wyo. 1932); Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Dixon, 122 P.2d 842 (Wyo. 1942).

(n133)Footnote 513. Desloge v. Pearce, 38 Mo. 588 (1866).

(n134)Footnote 514. Tallman v. Eastern Illinois & Peoria R. Co., 41 N.E.2d 537 (Ill. 1942); Boyle v. Coleraine Colliery Co,, 785 A. 838 (Pa. 1936).

(n135)Footnote 515. Rickey Land & Cattle Co. v. Miller & Lux, 152 F. 11 (9th Cir. 1907); Akron Canal & Hydraulic Co. v. Fontaine, 50 N.E.2d 897 (Oh. App. 1943); Zavala County Water Imp. Dist. No. 3 v. Rogers, 145 S.W.2d 919 (Tex. App. 1940); Willey v. Dicker, 73 P. 210 (Wyo. 1903). A right of flowage over another's land is an incorporeal hereditament; Snowden v. Wilas, 19 Ind. 10(1862).

(n136)Footnote 516. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co. v. Jilek, 42 F. Supp. 200 (E.D. Ill. 1942); Thacker v. Flottmann, 244 S.W.2d 1020 (Mo. 1952); Shields v. Fink, 372 P.2d 252 (Kan. 1962).

(n137)Footnote 517. Mark v. Bradford, 23 N.W.2d 201 (Mich. 1946); Schmid v. Baum's Home of Flowers, 37 S.W.2d 105(Tenn. 1931).

(n138)Footnote 518. Schiffman v. Richfield Oil Co., 64 P.2d 1081 (Cal. 1937).

(n139)Footnote 519. See F.S. Ruddy, Res Nullius and Occupation in Roman and International Law. 36 U.M.K.C. L. Rev. 274 (1968); Gerald Korngold, Comparing the Concepts of "Property" and "Value" in Real Estate Law and Real Property Taxation, 25 Real Est. L.J. 7 (1996).

(n140)Footnote 520. See Dan B. Dobbs, Trespass to Land in North Carolina - Part 1, 47 U. N.C. L. Rev. 334 (1969).

(n141)Footnote 521. Skaggs v. Ohio Valley Rock Asphalt Co., 166 S.W.2d 1005 (Ky. 1942).

(n142)Footnote 522. Anthony v. International Paper Co., 180 S.W.2d 828 (Ark. 1944).

(n143)Footnote 523. Skaggs v. Ohio Valley Rock Asphalt Co., 166 S.W.2d 1005 (Ky. 1942).

(n144)Footnote 524. Acosta v. Nunez, 5 So. 2d 574 (La. App. 1942); Hall v. Edwards, 222 S.W. 167 (Tex. Com. App. 1920). Possession is presumed to extend to and cover all land included within the boundaries of a deed under which possession is held: Green v. Rountree, 116 S.E. 116 (Ga. 1923).

(n145)Footnote 525. Moore v. California-Michigan Land & Water Co., 203 P. 139 (Cal. App. 1921); Jones v. Peck, 218 P. 1030 (Cal. App. 1923); Ealahan v. Ealahan, 119 A. 349 (Conn. 1922); Haas & Howell v. Godby, 125 S.E. 897 (Ga. App. 1924); Kirk v. Kirk, 156 N.E. 294 (Ill. 1927); Spencer v. Bouchard, 121 A. 164 (Me. 1923); H. B. McCray Lumber Co. v. Standard Constr. Co., 285 S.W. 104 (Mo. App. 1926); Ownbey v. Parkway Properties, 21 S.E.2d 900 (N.C. 1942).

(n146)Footnote 526. Ross v. Pendergast, 182 S.W.2d 307 (Mo. 1944).

(n147)Footnote 527. Goodman v. Nichols, 188 S.W.2d 666 (Mo. App. 1945).

(n148)Footnote 528. Bush v. Stumpe, Mo, 222 S.W. 1006 (Mo. 1920). See Allen v. Vineyard, 212 S.W. 266 (Tex. App. 1919): Lindley v. Mowell, 232 S.W.2d 256 (Tex. App. 1950). A willful trespasser is liable to the owner of realty for the value of the property converted at its enhanced value at the time of suit: Barnes v. Moore, 98 S.E.2d 683 (Va. 1957). Purchaser from willful trespasser not liable for value which he adds to the property converted: E.E. Bolles Wooden-Ware Co. v. United States, 106 U.S. 432 (1882).

(n149)Footnote 529. Ritchie v. Green Bay, 254 N.W. 113 (Wis. 1934). One in possession under claim of ownership may bring trespass as against all but a higher title: Sumpter v. J.E. Sieben Constr. Co., 492 S.W.2d 150 (Mo. App. 1973).

(n150)Footnote 530. Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Service Co., 294 P. 588 (Or. 1930). Title ran to center of earth; Shell Oil Co. v. Stansbury, 401 S.W.2d 623 (Tex. App. 1966).

(n151)Footnote 531. Hinman, v. Pacific Air Lines Transport Corp., 84 F.2d 755 (9th Cir. 1936). See Dan B. Dobbs. Trespass to Land in North Carolina-- Part /, 47 U. No. Car. L. Rev 31 (1969).

(n152)Footnote 532. Garlock v. Fulton County, 176 A. 38 (Pa. 1935).

(n153)Footnote 533. Isham v. Cudlip, 179 N.E.2d 25 (Ill. App. 1962).

(n154)Footnote 534. Michelsen v. Leskowicz, 55 N.Y.S.2d 831 (1945): Grays v. Harrison, 179 S.W.2d 1020 (Tex. App. 1944). Mere possession raises a rebuttable presumption of ownership: Implement Dealers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Castleberry, 368 S.W.2d 249 (Tex. App. 1963).

(n155)Footnote 535. Pottaock v. Continental Can Co., 211 A.2d 622 (Del. 1965).

(n156)Footnote 536. Coke on Littleton, § 4b (one who had a right of possession had an action quare clausum fregit at common law). Damages for trespass are cost of restoring the property to a reasonable approximation of its former condition: Thatcher v. Lane Constr. Co., 254 N.E.2d 703 (Oh. App. 1970).

(n157)Footnote 537. Williams v. Vanderbilt, 34 N.E. 476 (Ill. 1893); Seymour v. Watson, 5 Blackf. 555 (Ind. 1841); Kingsley v. McFarland, 19 A. 442 (Me. 1889): Hall v. Boatright, 36 S.E. 1001 (S.C. 1900).

(n158)Footnote 538. Valle v. Fleming's Heir, 29 Mo. 152 (1859).

(n159)Footnote 539. Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 274 (Ga. 1848); Williams v. Vanderbilt, 34 N.E. 476 (Ill. 1893); Whitledge v. Wait's Heir, 2 Ky. 335 (Ky. 1804); Thomas v. Evans, 12 N.E. 571 (N.Y. 1887); Bomberger v. Turner, 13 Ohio St. 263 (Ohio 1862).

(n160)Footnote 540. Under a statute making unregistered deeds invalid as against judgment creditors, one in possession under such a deed could not claim credit for improvements: Eaton v. Daub, 128 S.E. 494 (N.C. 1925). Municipal inspector may not enter a dwelling house for inspection purposes without a search warrant: Camara v. San Francisco Municipal Court, 387 U.S. 523 (1967). See Schwartz, A Landholder's Right to Possession of Property Versus a Citizen '$ Right of Free Speech: Tort Law as a Resource for Conflict Resolution, 45 U. CIN. L. Rev. 1.

(n161)Footnote 541. Harmon v. Scott, 133 N.E. 141 (Ind. App. 1921).

(n162)Footnote 542. A.L. Goodhart, Three Cases on Possesion, 3 Cambridge L.J. 195 (1929); Joseph F. Francis, Three Cases on Possession-- Some Further Observations, 14 St. LOUIS U. L. J. 11; David Riesman. Possession and the Law of Finders. 52 Harv. L. Rev. 1105 (1939); Burke Shartel, Meanings of Possession, 16 Minn. L. Rev. 611 (1.932); Edward R. Cohen, The Finders Cases Revisited, 48 TEXAS L. REV. 1001 (1970). See supra § 13.04(e).

(n163)Footnote 543. Trespasser not entitled: Barker v. Bates. 30 Mass. 255 (1832): Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 376(1873); Mitchell v. Oklahoma Cotton Grower's Ass'n, 235 P. 597 (Okta. 1925); Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 81 P. 572 (Or. 1905). Trespasser entitled: Groover v. Tippins, 179 S.E. 634 (Ga. App. 1935). Where the right to possession of discovered property is in dispute between the discoverer and owner as respects abandoned, mislaid, lost or treasure trove, if the premises are private, this property is mislaid, and if the property is discovered by trespassers, the finders have no right to things found: Bishop v. Ellsworth, 234 N.E.2d 49 (Ill. App. 1968).

(n164)Footnote 544. Silcott v. Louisville Trust Co., 265 S.W. 612 (Ky. 1924); Kincaid v. Eaton, 98 Mass. 139 (1867); Foster v. Fidelity Safe Deposit Co., 145 S.W. 139 (Mo. App. 1912). See Roy Moreland, Does the Place Where a Lost Article Is Found Determine the Rights of the Finder, 15 Ky. L. J. 225 (1927); W. Lewis Roberts, The Right of a Finder Depends on the Locus in Quo, 16 Ky. L. J 51 (1928); Roy Moreland, The Rights of Finders of Lost Property, 16 KY. L. J. 3 (1928).

(n165)Footnote 545. Foulke v. New York Consol. R. Co., 228 N.Y. 269 (1920) (property found in a public utility was "mislaid"). Contra, Cleveland Ry. Co. v. Durschuk, 166 N.E. 909 (Ohio App. 1928).

(n166)Footnote 546. Erickson v. Sinykin, 26 N.W.2d 172 (Minn. 1947); Flax v. Monticello Realty Co., 39 S.E.2d 308 (Va. 1946). Contra, Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281 (1878); Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377(1879).

(n167)Footnote 547. Property abandoned by previous lessees belongs to the later lessee as a finder and is not the property of the lessor: Goss v. Bisset, Ky, 411 S.W.2d 50 (Ky. 1967).

(n168)Footnote 548. Allred v. Biegel. 219 S.W.2d 665 (Mo. App. 1949). "The possession of the land carries with it in general, by our law, possession of everything which is attached to or under that land, and, in the absence of a better title elsewhere, the right to possess it also. And it makes no difference that the possessor is not aware of the thing's existence." Pollock & Wright, Possession in The Common Law 41, also quoted with approval by this court in Ferguson v. Ray. 77 P. 600 (Or. 1904).

(n169)Footnote 549. Coke's definition of treasure trove is as follows: "Treasure trove is when any gold or silver, in coin, plate, or bullion hath been of ancient time hidden, wheresoever it be found, whereof no person can prove any property." 3 Inst 132. Danielson v. Roberts, 74 P. 913 (Or. 1904); Roberson v. Ellis, 114 P. 100 (Or. 1911). See Abandoned Property: Title to Treasure Recovered in Florida's Territorial Waters, 21 U. FLA. L. REV. 360.

(n170)Footnote 550. Weeks v. Hackett, 71 A. 858 (Me. 1908); Allred v. Biegel, 219 S.W.2d 665 (Mo. App. 1949): Danielson v. Roberts. 74 P. 913 (Or. 1904); Roberson v. Ellis, 1 14 P. 100 (Or. 1911).

(n171)Footnote 551. Weeks v. Hackett, 71 A. 858 (Me. 1908): Danielson v. Roberts, 74 P. 913 (Or. 1904), See Cecil S. Emden, The Law of Treasure Trove, Past and Present, 42 L. Q. Rev. 368 (1926): Dobie, The Law of Treasure Trove, 43 JURID. REV. 300.

(n172)Footnote 552. Sovern v. Yoran, 20 P. 100 (Or. 1888); Zech v. Accola, 33 N.W.2d 232 (Wis. 1948).

(n173)Footnote 553. A.L. Goodhart. Three Cases on Possession, 3 Cambridge L. J. 195 (1.929). See Joseph F. Francis. Three Cases on Possession-- Some Further Observations, 14 St. Louis U. L. J. 11 521 (1929).

(n174)Footnote 554. Groover v. Tippins, 179 S.E. 634 (Ga. App. 1935); Zornes v. Bowen, 274 N.W. 877 (Iowa 1937); French v. McNabb, 184 A. 233 (Md. 1936); Kuykendall v. Fisher. 56 S.E. 4(W. Va. 1906).

(n175)Footnote 555. Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377 (1879). Property found by repairman belonged to him, not to the owner of the property: Hurley v. City of Niagara Falls. 25 N. Y.2d 687 (1968).

(n176)Footnote 556. 1 BLACKSTONE'S Commentaries 295 (that found on the surface belonged to the finder, but that below the surface belonged to the king). Clark v. Maloney, 3 Del. 68 (Del. Super. 1840); Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281 (1878); Vickery v. Hardin, 133 N.E. 922 (Ind. App. 1922); Goddard v. Winchell, 52 N.W. 1124 (Iowa 1892); Lawrence v. Buck, 62 Me. 275 (1874); Deaderick v. Oulds, 5 S.W. 487 (Tenn. 1887).

(n177)Footnote 557. A landowner may rightfully use his own estate whether or not such use diminishes the value of an adjoining estate, Gerrish v. Union Wharf, 26 Me. 384 (1847); but such use must be reasonable, Sprague v. Sampson, 114 A. 305 (Me. 1921). Owner's right of use of property is subject to reasonable regulations on use: Commonwealth v. Fisher, 350 A.2d 428 (Pa. 1976); State ex rel. Pitts v. Bd. of Zoning Adjustments, 327 So. 2d 140 (La. App. 1976): Dean v. Hercules, 328 So. 2d 69 (La. 1976). Homeowner has no absolute right to change the essential natural character of his land so as to use it for purposes for which it is unsuited in its natural state and which use injures the rights of others: Sibson v. State, 336 A.2d 239 (N.H. 1975). See John M. Fowler, Federal Historic Preservation Law: National Historic Preservation Act, Executive Order 11593, and Other Recent Developments in Federal Law, 12 Wake FOREST L. Rev. 31 (1976); Land Occupiers" Liability in Washington, 43 Wash. Law Rev. 867 (1968).

(n178)Footnote 558. A nuisance arises out of the wrongful interference with the privilege to which the owner of an easement is entitled by making his use less convenient and beneficial than before: Hunter v. McDonald, 254 N.W.2d 282 (Wis. 1977). A funeral home is not a nuisance per se but may become such where property values decline as the result of the home: Elston v. Paal, 550 S.W.2d 771 (Ark. 1977).

(n179)Footnote 559. Copart Indus., Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co., 362 NE2d 968 (N.Y. App. 1977).

(n180)Footnote 560. Sic utere doctrine. Reymond v. State Dep't. of Highways. 231 So. 2d 375 (La. 1970). See infra Chapter 67, The Property Law Aspects of Private Nuisance.

(n181)Footnote 561. Zadworny v. Chicago, 44 N.E.2d 426 (Ill. 1942).

(n182)Footnote 562. Clinic & Hospital, Inc. v. McConnell, 236 S.W.2d 384 (Mo. App. 1951).

(n183)Footnote 563. Injury to subterranean water by explosion was actionable: Western Geophysical Co. of America v. Mason, 402 S.W.2d 657 (Ark. 1966).

(n184)Footnote 564. Indiana does not subscribe to the theory that a "reasonable use" by a business will exonerate liability for explosive vibration damage: Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1962). Absolute liability for blasting damage by debris or concussion waves: Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. App. 1971); Brewer v. Sheco Constr. Co., 327 F. Supp. 1017 (Ky. 1971). Absolute liability for damages resulting to property from use of explosives: Walczesky v. Horvitz Co., 269 N.E.2d 844 (Ohio 1971). No liability without fault in blasting vibrations: Madsen v. East Jordan Irr. Co., 125 P.2d 794 (Utah 1942). Pile driving operation actionable: Caporale v. C. W. Blakeslee & Son, 175 A.2d 561 (Conn. 1961); Ted's Master Service, Inc. v. Farina Bros. Co., 178 N.E.2d 268 (Mass. 1961). Liability from vibration from rocket engine: Berg v. Reaction Motors Div. Thiokol Chem. Corp., 181 A.2d 487 (N.J. 1962).

(n185)Footnote 565. Owner of a building is not liable for defamatory graffiti written thereon by third parties on the exterior: Scott v. Hull, 259 N.E.2d 160 (Oh. App. 1970). But he would be liable if defamatory matter were inside the building. Obscene films shown in an outdoor theatre and visible from adjoining land constituted a nuisance: Cactus Corp. v. State ex rel. Murphy, 480 P.2d 375 (Ariz. App. 1971). Tree falling on another's land and causing damage held actionable: Barker v. Brown, 340 A.2d 566 (Pa. 1975). Contra: Casting of light on another's property may be a nuisance: Lynn Open Air Theatre v. Sea Crest Cadillac-Pontiac, 294 N.E.2d 473 (Mass. App. 1973). Where the damage occasioned by invasion and trespass of material used as a landfill was known, even though slight, the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the knowledge: Adler v. Farmers Branch, 526 S.W.2d 238 (Tex. App. 1975).

Fumes, unpleasant odors and vibrations from a laundry constituted a nuisance: Proulx v. Basbanes, 238 N.E.2d 531 (Mass. 1968). Underground flooding: United States v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., 339 U.S. 799 (1948); Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co. & Mississippi Canal Co., 80 U.S. 166, 20 L.Ed. 557 (1871). Holding liable for seepage of crude oil contaminating a neighboring water supply even though no negligence: Mowrer v. Ashland Oil & Refining Co., 518 F.2d 659 (7th Cir. 1975). Permitting sewage to drain onto another's property is a trespass: Lehan v. Dept. of Transp., 349 A.2d 492 (Pa. 1975). See David F. Palmerlee, The Availability and Limitations of the Private Nuisance Doctrine in Wyoming, 7 Land & Water L. REV. 545 (1972).

(n186)Footnote 566. Damage caused by vibration noise and fumes from expressway is not a taking of contiguous land: Northcutt v. State Road Dept., 209 So. 2d 710 (Fla. App. 1968). Florida statute requires trespass before there can be a damage for adjacent landowners: Weir v. Palm Beach County, Fla., 85 So. 2d 865 (Fla. 1956). Liability for damage resulting from vibration: Murray Realty Inc. v. Berke Moore Co., 175 N.E.2d 366 (Mass. 1961); Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. v. Davey Tree Expert Co., 173 N.E.2d 412 (Ohio 1959). Property owner recovered damages for injury to well due to blasting operations on an adjoining property; Piorkowski v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 228 N.W.2d 695 (Wis. 1975). Injury to subterranean water by explosion was actionable: Western Geophysical Co. of America v. Mason, 402 S.W.2d 657 (Ark. 1966).

(n187)Footnote 567. The state through exercise of the police powers may impose by statute an absolute liability for damage by fire started on the owner's premises: State v. Boston & M. R.R., 105 A.2d 751 (N.H. 1954); State v. Anacortes Veneer, 360 P.2d 341 (Wash. 1961). Blasting operations may give rise to trespass actions: Steiger v. Nowakowski, 227 N.W.2d 104 (Wis. 1975). No liability without fault in blasting vibrations: Madsen v. East Jordan Irr. Co., 125 P.2d 794 (Utah 1942). Absolute liability for debris thrown by blasting: Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337 (1876). Contra, blasting vibrations result in liability without fault: Enos Coal Min. v. Schuchart. 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1962); Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. App. 1971). See Howard C. Gosnell Jr., Torts-Blasting --- Imposition of Liability Without Regard to Fault, 37 Mo. L. Rev. 561 (1972). Indiana refuses to relieve liability from underground vibrations caused by mining operations under the theory that necessary activities to encourage business permits "reasonable use": Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1962). Due care duty in vibrations: Trull v. Carolina- Virginia Well, 142 S.E.2d 622 (N.C. 1965). Absolute liability for blasting: Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. 1971). Contra and to effect that the danger could be normally anticipated is the reason for absolute liability being inapplicable: Restatement (Second) of Torts, 519; Foster v. Preston Mill Co., 268 P.2d 645 (Wash. 1954); Bumbarger v. Walker, 164 A.2d 144 (Pa. 1960).

(n188)Footnote 568. Goforth v. Smith, 991 S.W.2d 579, 587 (Ark. 1999) (nuisance is a conduct by one landowner that unreasonably interferes with use and enjoyment of lands of another and includes conduct on property that disturbs peaceful, quiet, and undistured use and enjoyment of nearby property). See also Southeast Arkansas Landfill, Inc. v. State, 858 S.W.2d 665, 667 (Ark. 1993); Commerce Oil Ref. Corp. v. Miner, 281 F.2d 465 (1st Cir. 1960) (oil refinery held a nuisance even though not violating a zoning ordinance). Common-law nuisance requires some present harm or at least an immediate threat of harm: Reserve Min. Co. v. Environmental Protection Agency, 514 F.2d 492 (8th Cir. 1975). The National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 *(42 U.S.C. §§ 4321-*4347) justified an action for airport nuisance for noise and air pollution from an adjoining airport though there were no overflights: State of Ill. ex rel. Scott v. Butterfield, 396 F. Supp. 632 (N.D. 1975). Operation of a funeral home is not a nuisance per se: Rigsby v. Burton. 305 So. 2d 366 (Ala. 1974). Cemetery as a private nuisance: Jones v. Trawick, 75 So. 2d 785 (Fla. 1954). Aesthetic nuisance recognized: Merritt v. Peters, 65 So. 2d 861 (Fla. 1953). See Note, Aesthetic Nuisances in Florida, 14 U. Fla. L. Rev. 54. Holding that evidence justified finding that a city's incinerator was both a public and private nuisance: Miami v. Coral Gables, 233 So. 2d 7 (Fla. App. 1970). Zoos are not a nuisance per se: Louisville v. Munro, 475 S.W.2d 479 Ky. 1971). Borsvold v. United Dairies, 81 N.W.2d 378 (Mich. 1957) (parking lot may become nuisance). Storage tanks for gas or gasoline may be a nuisance per se: Hilliard v. Shuff. 256 So. 2d 127 (La. 1971). Motorcycle race track was held a nuisance: Baker v. Odom, 529 S.W.2d 138 (Ark. 1975). Pigs were not held a nuisance per se: Meinecke v. Stallsworth, 483 S.W.2d 633 (Mo. App. 1972). Piggery was held a nuisance: Schrupp v. Hanson. 235 N.W.2d 822 (Minn. 1975); City of Lyons v. Betts, 171 N.W.2d 792 (Neb. 1969); Monroe City v. Arnold, 452 P.2d 321 (Utah 1969): Yeager & Sullivan. Inc. v. O'Neill. 324 N.E.2d 846 (Ind. App. 1975); Bower v. Hog Builders. 461 S.W.2d 784 (Mo. 1970). Quarry blasting was held a public nuisance: *Commonwealth Dep't Envt'l Resources v. Glasgow Quarry, 351 A.2d 689 (Pa. Cmwlth. 1976). See Absolute Liability in Mississippi Under the Theory of Nuisance, 42 MISS. L. J. 488; Nuisance--*A Feed Lot Which Will Interfere with a Future Use of Another's Land Will Justify the Recovery of Permanent Damages, 4 TEX. Tech. L. REV. 444; James J. Brennan, Premises Liability: A Critical Survey of Indiana Law. 7 Ind. L. Rev. 1001. (1974): Michael D. Hashim Jr., Private Nuisance Law: Protection of the Individual's Environmental Rights, 8 Suffolk U. L.

REV. 1162 (1974); Samuel Silverstone, Visual Pollution: Unaesthetic Use of Land as a Nuisance, 12 Alberta L. Rev. 542 (1974).

(n189)Footnote 569. Governmental tort immunity does not preclude a nuisance action against a municipal airport: Nestle v. City of Santa Monica, 101 Cal. Rptr. 568 (1971). A developer was required to pay the costs of moving a business that had become a public nuisance as the result of the development: Spur Indus., Inc. v. Del E. Webb Dev. Co., 494 P.2d 700 (Ariz. 1972). A right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be obtained by prescription: People v. Perez. 561 P.2d 7 (Colo. 1977). On the question of balancing of conveniences or social interests in nuisance, see Boomer v. Atlantic Cement Co., 26 N.Y.2d 219 (1970). See Richard F. Babcock & Duane A. Fuerer, Land as a Commodity Affected with a Public Interest, 52 Wayne L. Rev. 289 (1977).

(n190)Footnote 570. Mahoney v. Walter, 205 S.E.2d 692 (W. Va. 1974). Construction, maintenance and operation of a pipeline is not a nuisance per se: Hero Lands v. Texaco, 296 So. 2d 345 (La. App. 1974). Motorbus terminal found nuisance: Koeber v. Apex-Albuq Phoenix Express. 380 P.2d 14 (N.M. 1963). Funeral home was not a nuisance per se but may become such where property values decline: Elston v. Paal, 550 S.W.2d 771 (Ark. 1977). The condition itself must be fraught with danger to constitute a nuisance: Dean v. Bays Mountain Park Ass'n, 551 S.W.2d 702 (Tenn. App. 1977).

(n191)Footnote 571. Hilton v. Duke Power, 254 F.2d 118 (4th Cir. 1958). Storage tanks for gas or gasoline may be a nuisance per se: Hilliard v. Shuff, 256 So. 2d 127 (La. 1971). The structure erected on one's own land is not a nuisance merely because it obstructs passage of light and air to the adjoining property or obstructs the view of the neighboring property: Venuto v. Owens-Corning Fiberglass, 99 Cal. Rptr. 350 (Cal. App. 1971). The owner of realty may change the surface structure: In re Duswald's Estate, 180 N.E.2d 307 (Ohio 1960). A developer was required to pay the costs of moving a business that had become a public nuisance as the result of the development: Spur Indus.,Inc. v. Del E. Webb Dev. Co., 494 P.2d 700 (Ariz. 1972). Right of action for water seepage accrues when the property is first affected by the seepage: Green v. Green Acres Constr., 543 P.2d 108 (Colo. App. 1975). A right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be obtained by prescription: People v. Perez, 561 P.2d 7 (Colo. 1977).

(n192)Footnote 572. Glorioso v. Chandler, 337 So. 2d 269 (La. App. 1976). See also James H. Brun, Abandoned Buildings: Rights and Remedies of Adjoining Landowners, 44 U. Ct N. L. Rev. 778 (1975).

(n193)Footnote 573. Clinic & Hospital v. McConnell, 236 S.W.2d 384 (Mo. App. 1951).

(n194)Footnote 574. Wade v. Campbell, 19 Cal. Rptr. 173 (Cal. App. 1962) (dairy held a nuisance). See infra Chapter 72, Sources of Government Police Power.

(n195)Footnote 575. Casting of light on another's property may be a nuisance: Lynn Open Air Theatre, Inc. v. Sea Crest Cadillac-Pontiac, 294 N.E.2d 473 (Mass. App. 1973). See infra Chapter 68, Trespass on Land.

(n196)Footnote 576. Fumes, unpleasant odors and vibrations from a laundry constituted a nuisance: Proulx v. Basbanes. 238 N.E.2d 531 (Mass. 1968). See David F. Palmerlee, Note, The Availability and Limitations of the Private Nuisance Doctrine in Wyoming, 7 Land & Water L. Rev. 545 (1972): Michael E. Winck. Note, Environmental Law--The Nuances of Nuisance in a Private Action to Control Air Pollution, 80 W. Va. L. Rev. 48 (1978).

(n197)Footnote 577. Pile driving operation vibrations actionable: Caporale v. C. W. Blakeslee & Son, 175 A.2d 561 (Conn. 1961); Selle v. Kleamenakis, 142 So. 2d 50 (La. App. 1962): but requiring a showing of negligence and foreseeable injury: Ted's Master Service, Inc. v. Farina Bros. Co., 178 N.E.2d 268 (Mass. 1961). Liability from vibration from rocket engine: Berg v. Reaction Motors Div. Thiokol Chem. Corp., 181 A.2d 487 (N.J. 1962). Property owner recovered damages for injury to well due to blasting operations on an adjoining property: Piorkowski v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 228 N.W.2d 695 (Wis. 1975). Absolute liability for blasting: Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. App. 1971). Contra and to effect that the danger could be normally anticipated is the reason for absolute liability being inapplicable: Restatement (Second) of Torts 519; Foster v. Preston Mill Co., 268 P.2d 645

(Wash. 1954); Bumbarger v. Walker, 164 A.2d 144 (Pa. 1960). Blasting operations may give rise to trespass actions: Steiger v. Nowakowski, 227 N.W.2d 104 (Wis. 1975). Action for trespass for water seepage occurs when the property is first visibly affected by the seepage: Green v. Green Acres Constr. Co., 543 P.2d 108 (Colo. App. 1975).

(n198)Footnote 578. Faire v. Burke, 252 S.W.2d 289 (Mo. 1952).

(n199)Footnote 579. Injury to subterranean water by explosion was actionable: Western Geophysical Co. of America v. Mason. 402 S.W.2d 657 (Ark. 1966).

(n200)Footnote 580. No liability without fault in blasting vibrations: Madsen v. East Jordan Irr. Co., 125 P.2d 794 (Utah 1942). Absolute liability for debris thrown by blasting: Wright v. Compton. 53 Ind. 337 (1876). Contra, blasting virbrations result in liability without fault: Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. App. 1962); Galbreath v. Engineering Constr. Corp., 273 N.E.2d 121 (Ind. App. 1971). See 37 Mo. L. Rev. 561. Indiana refuses to relieve liability from underground vibrations caused by mining operations under one theory that necessary activities to encourage business permits "reasonable use": Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1962). Due care duty in vibrations: Trull v. Carolina-Virginia Well Co., 142 S.E.2d 622 (N.C. 1965). Quarry blasting held a public nuisance: Commonwealth v. Glassco Quarry, Inc., 351 A.2d 689 (Pa. 1976).

(n201)Footnote 581. Zadworny v. Chicago, 44 N.E.2d 426 (Ill. 1942): Gosey v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 100 So. 2d 311 (La. App. 1958); Clinic & Hospital, Inc. v. McConnell. 236 S.W.2d 384 (Mo. App. 1951); Alexander v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 98 So. 2d 730 (La. App. 1957). Ownership does not always mean absolute dominion. The more the owner, for the owner's advantage, opens up the property for use by the public in general, the more do the owner's rights become circumscribed with the statutory and constitutional rights of those that use it: Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U.S. 501 (1946). Junkyard was held common-law nuisance: Town of Clayton v. Mayfield. 485 P.2d 352 (N.M. 1971). The owner of the premises has a duty to warn employees of an independent contractor working on the premises of a hidden condition known to the owner: Gulf Oil Corp. v. Bivins, 276 F.2d 753 (5th Cir. 1960). Owner of business liable to customer for dangerous condition: Kroger Co. v. Thomas. 277 F.2d 854 (6th Cir. 1960). Duty of proprietor of place of business to protect patrons against known or discoverable conditions: M. G. A. Theaters, Inc. v. Montgomery, 321 P.2d 1009 (Ariz. 1958). Swimming pool held attractive nuisance; McWilliams v. Guzinski, 237 N.W.2d 437 (Wis. 1976): Samson v. O'Hara. 239 So. 2d 151 (Fla. App. 1970); Johnson v. Harris, 530 P.2d 1136 (Ariz. App. 1975); Mitchell v. Akers, 401 S.W.2d 907 (Tex. App. 1966). Funeral home was held liable for due care to invitee: Terrell Investment Co. v. Dunn, 176 So. 2d 291 (Miss. 1965). Store owner not liable for injury to customer attacked in parking lot where there was no previous history of such attacks: Shipes v. Piggly Wiggly St. Andrews, Inc., 238 S.E.2d 167 (S.C. 1977). Ezra Ripley Thayer, Liability Without Fault., 29 Harv. L. Rev. 801 (1916): Thomas B. Brand, Rylands v. Fletcher in Oregon, 1 Willamette L. J. 344 (1960); Richard F. May, Adjoining and Abutting Landowners: Liability for Injuries to Persons or Property, I WILLAMETTE L. J. 423 (1960); The Duty Owed by Land Occupiers in Iowa, 20 DRAKE L. Rev. 159 (1969); Charles B. Garabedian, Liability of Owners and Occupiers of Real Estate in Massachusetts, 5 Suffolk U. L. Rev. 426 (1971); James J. Brennan, Note, Premises Liability: A Critical Survey of Indiana Law, 7 Ind. L. Rev. 1001 (1974); John E. Donaldson, Regulation of Conduct in Relation to Land-- The Need to Purge Natural Law Constraints from the Fourteenth Amendment, 16 WM. E. Mary L. REV. 187 (1974); James H. Brun, Abandoned Buildings: Rights and Remedies of Adjoining Landowners, 44 U. CIN. L. Rev. 778 (1975); Land Occupier Liability in Washington, 43 Wash. L. Rev. 867 (1968); Myron Fink, Private Nuisance in New Mexico, 4 N.M. L. Rev. 127 (1973); Samuel Alston Beatty, Alabama Property Offenses-- Past, Present, Future, 15 Ala. L. Rev. 405 (1963); Page Keeton, Trespass, Nuisance and Strict Liability, 59 Colum. L. Rev. 457 (1959): Francis H. Bohlen, The Rule in Rylands v. Fletcher, 59 U. Pa. L. Rev. 298 (1910); Dawn D. Bennett. Case Development, Torts - The Changing Standard of Care Owed Licensees, Invitees and Trespassers, 18 How. L. J. 220 (1973); Victor E. Schwartz. A Landowner's Right to Possession of Pioperty versus A Citizen's Right of Free Speech: Tort Law as a Resource for Conflict Resolution, 45 U. CIN. L. Rev. 1 (1976); Jon G. Anderson, The Rylands v. Fletcher Doctrine in America: Abnormally Dangerous, Ultrahazardous or Absolute Nuisance, 1978 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 99 (1978): Robert Lee Collins, Comment, Premises Liability: A Critical Survey of North Carolina Law, 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 797 (1978); Fleming James Jr., Tort Liability of Occupiers Land: Duties Owed to Licensees and Invitees, 63 YALE L. J. 605 (1954); Robert Lee Collins, Comment, Premises Liability: A Critical Survey of North Carolina Law, 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 797 (1978); Russell L. Weaver, Law of Private Nuisance in Missouri. 44 Mo. L. Rev. 20 (1979). See also, Mark A. Peterson, Note, Liability of Owners and Occupiers of Land, 58 Marq. L. Rev. 609 (1975), as to the trend toward abolishing the distinction of landowners' liability between trespassers, licensees and invitees.

(n202)Footnote 582. Guest of club member held business invitee: Collyer v. Yonkers Yacht Club, Inc., 234 N.Y.S.2d 259 (N.Y. 1962). Ordinary care owed to business invitee together with duty to warn as to unsafe conditions: Haitheock v. Chimney Rock Co., 179 S.E.2d 865 (NC. App. 1971). Possessor's duty to invitee is one of ordinary care in light of all circumstances and not an insurer of safety: Anderson v. Chicago & N. W. Ry., 241 N.W. 516 (S.D. 1932). Duty to warn employees of independent contractor working on the land of known dangerous conditions: Delhi-Taylor Oil Corp. v. Henry, 416 S.W.2d 390 (Tex. 1967). Business invitees entitled only to reasonable care or maintenance of premises: White v. Northwestern Bank Bldg. Co., 160 N.W.2d 545 (Minn. 1968). A prospective tenant or purchaser may be an invitee: Trimble v. Irwin, 441 S.W.2d 818 (Tenn. App. 1968). Held no liability on facts: Massey v. Hilton Heights Park, Inc., 173 S.E.2d 396 (Ga. App. 1970). See Rex B. Stratton Ill, The Slip and Fall Case in Montana and the Doctrine of Constructive Notice as Applied in Accidents in Supermarkets. 31 MONT. L. REV. 220 (1970); Land Occupiers Liability to Business Invitees for Slip and Fall Injuries: Recent Developments in Iowa Law, 54 Iowa L. Rev. 659.

(n203)Footnote 583. The proper test of the duty of a possessor of land for the safety of social guests is whether the possessor acted as a reasonable person in the management of the property in view of the possibility of injury to others. The classification of trespasser, licensee or invitee is not alone determinative of the standard of care: Rowland v. Christian. 70 Cal. Rptr. 97 (1968). Landowner liable to invitees if landowner had actual knowledge of dangerous condition: Wells v. Goforth, 443 S.W.2d 155 (Mo. 1969). Owner liable for icy condition on porch if known: Wells v. Goforth, 443 S.W.2d 155 (Mo. 1969). Liability for invitee stepping into hole in dock: Russo v. Burch, 36 Cal. Rptr. 682 (1964). Reasonable liability of owner to invitees and licensees: O'Leary v. Coenen, 251 N.W.2d 746 (N.D. 1977). See Landowner Owes Invitee No Duty to Provide Police Protection Against Criminal Attack, Goldberg v. Housing Authority of Newark, 186 A.2d 291 (N.J. 1962).

(n204)Footnote 584. Ramstead v. Hauge, 437 P.2d 402 (Wash. 1968).

(n205)Footnote 585. Ansin v. Thurston, 98 So, 2d 87 (Fla. 1957). A social guest is not an invitee but a licensee to whom the possessor owes no duty of inspection and care to make the premises safe: Krause v. Alper. 176 N.Y.S.2d 349 (1958); Bernal v. Baptist Fresh Air Home Soc'y,. 87 N.Y.S.2d 458 (1949) (as long as there are no known concealed defects); Wilder v. Ayers, 156 N.Y.S.2d 85 (1956) (even if the guest is an infant). Baseball is such a well-known game that the risks are known, and if one chooses not to sit behind a screen, one assumes the risk: Ivory v. Cincinnati Baseball Club Co., 24 N.E.2d 837 (Oh. App. 1939). See Ronald Argue, Note, Recent Cases on Occupier's Liability, 19 Mcgill L. J. 99 (1973); Richard Glen Greenwood, Comment, Current Attractive Nuisance Cases in Wisconsin and Other Jurisdictions, 42 MARQ. L. REV. 64 (1958).

(n206)Footnote 586. Curtis v. Tenino Stone Quarries, Inc., 79 P. 955 (Wash. 1905); Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 136 A.2d 301 (N.J. 1957). The difference between a trespasser and one who is on the land pursuant to an incomplete privilege is that the latter is entitled to be on the land, and therefore, the possessor is under a duty to permit that person to come and remain there and is not privileged to resist: Rossi v. DelDuca, 181 N.E.2d 591 (Mass. 1962). Some states have repudiated the attractive nuisance doctrine: Ryan v. Towar, 87 N.W. 644 (Mich. 1901). The only duty to an adult trespasser is not to mortally injure the person: Mail v. Smith Lumber & Shingle Co., 287 P.2d 877 (Wash. 1955); Adkisson v. Seattle. 258 P.2d 461 (Wash. 1953). Distinguishing between trespassers and licensees and invitees and finding no liability to a trespasser for injuries received from a vicious watchdog: Bramble v. Thompson, 287 A.2d 265 (Md. 1972). Refusing to distinguish between inadvertent and intentional trespassers in denying damage for injuries inflicted by watchdog on premises: Bramble v. Thompson, 287 A.2d 265 (Md. 1972). See Francis H. Bohlen, Incomplete Privileges to Inflict Intentional Invasions of Interest of Property and Personalty, 39 Harv. L. Rev. 337(1926).

(n207)Footnote 587. Norris v. Hugh Nawn Contr. Co., 91 N.E. 886 (Mass. 1910): Bartell v. Serio, 180 So. 460 (La. App. 1938). A property owner is not liable to a gratuitous licensee for a trap unless the danger is not visible: Parker's Hamburger No. One v. Fitzgerald, 356 P.2d 25 (Ariz. 1960). A developer was required to pay the costs of moving a business that had become a public nuisance as the result of the development: Spur Indus., Inc. v. Del E. Webb Dev. Co., 494 P.2d 700 (Ariz. 1972). See Restatement of Torts, §§ 332, 340-342.

(n208)Footnote 588. Daugert v. Scranton Contr. Co., 26 A.2d 298 (Pa. 1942); Gottlieb v. Andrus, 104 S.E.2d 743 (Va. 1958) (invitee must be warned of latent dangers): Midwest Oil Co., Inc. v. Storey, 178 N.E.2d 468 (Ind. App. 1961) (owner of the premises is under a duty not to perform a positive act which will increase the licensee's hazard; if such an act does occur, the licensee must be notified); Mills v. Heidingsfield, 192 So. 786 (La. App. 1939); Terrell Investment Co. v. Dunn, 176 So. 2d 291 (Miss. 1965).

(n209)Footnote 589. Buford v. Houtz, 133 U.S. 320 (1890); Logan v. Gedney, 38 Cal. 579 (1869); Studwell v. Ritch, 14 Conn. 292 (1841); Zadworny v. Chicago, 44 N.E.2d 426 (Ill. 1942); Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa 396; Delaney v. Errickson. 6 N.W. 600 (Neb. 1880).

(n210)Footnote 590. Clinic & Hospital, Inc. v. McConnell, 236 S.W.2d 384 (Mo. App. 1951). Swimming pool held an attractive nuisance: Mitchell v. Akers, 401 S.W.2d 907 (Tex. App. 1966).

(n211)Footnote 591. Gosey v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 100 So. 2d 311 (La. App. 1958).

(n212)Footnote 592. Restatement of Torts, § 332.

(n213)Footnote 593. Alexander v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 98 So. 2d 730 (La. App. 1957).

(n214)Footnote 594. Birmingham Ore & Min. Co. v. Grover. 48 So. 682 (Ala. 1909); Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart, 180 N.E.2d 129 (Ind. App. 1962) (negligence necessary): Leslie Four Coal Co. v. Simpson, 333 S.W.2d 498 (Ky. 1960); Reynolds v. W.H. Hinman Co., 75 A.2d 802 (Me. 1950) (negligence necessary); Miller v. Twiname, 114 N.Y.S. 151 (1908); Chamberlin v. Penn-Rich Contr. Go., 162 A.2d 658 (Pa. 1960).

(n215)Footnote 595. Kalopodes v. Federal Reserve Bank, 367 F.2d 47 (4th Cir. 1966).

(n216)Footnote 596. Isenberg v. Lushan, 178 N.E.2d 502 (Mass. 1961).

(n217)Footnote 597. No duty to warn trespassers except as to wilful injury or knowledge of peril to the trespasser. McNulty v. Hurley. 97 So. 2d 185 (Fla. 1957).

(n218)Footnote 598. "Spring gun" rule was upheld: Allison v. Fiscus. 100 N.E. 2d 237 (Ohio 1951). See Katko v. Briney, 183 N.W.2d 657 (Iowa 1971). An occupier of land has no duty to trespassing children for dangerous natural conditions on the land: Loney v. McPhillips, 521 P.2d 340 (Or. 1974). Landowner owes no duty to trespasser other than to refrain from wilfully inflicting injury upon him: Schlueter v. Summit County Town of Kamas, 480 P.2d 140 (Utah 1971). Retaining the traditional invitee, licensee and trespasser: Welder v. Chase Resorts, Inc., 543 S.W.2d 527 (Mo. App. 1976).

(n219)Footnote 599. Bartels v. Continental Oil Co., 384 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. 1964); Preshno v. J.M. McDonald Co., 151 N.W.2d 451 (Neb. 1967); Nicholas v. Tri-State Fair & Sales Ass'n. 148 N.W.2d 183 (S.D. 1967).

(n220)Footnote 600. Restatement of Torts, § 339: Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U.S. 657 (1873). Even though California does not consider a swimming pool an attractive nuisance, it still allows recovery under Restatement of Torts, § 339: Reynolds v. Willson, 331 P.2d 48 (Cal. 1958). Planted shrubs are not an attractive nuisance: Norton v. Black, 469 P.2d 101 (Ariz. App. 1970). A high hedge was held not an attractive nuisance: Norton v. Black, 469 P.2d 101 (Ariz. App. 1970). Natural objects are not an attractive nuisance: Mullens v. Pinnell, 266 So. 2d 862 (Ala. 1972). Trees and shrubs are not an attractive nuisance: Higginbotham v. Winborn, 218 S.E.2d 917 (Ga. App. 1975).

(n221)Footnote 601. Hensley v. Montgomery County, 334 A.2d 54 (Md. App. 1975).

(n222)Footnote 602. Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 21 Minn. 207 (1875). A landowner is not liable to an infant trespasser in absence of an actual knowledge of a dangerous condition: Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958). To be an attractive nuisance, the danger cannot be common and obvious: Staley v. Security Athletic Ass'n, 380 P.2d 53 (Colo. 1963). Swimming pool in apartment complex held an attractive nuisance: Kopera v. Moschella, 400 F. Supp. 131 (S.D. Miss. 1975). Reasonable liability of owner to invitees and licensees: O'Leary v. Coenen, 251 N.W.2d 746 (N.D. 1977). See William L. Prosser, Trespassing Children, 47 Cal. L. Rev. 428 (1959); C. Clifford Fulford, Tort Liability of Possessors of Property to Trespassing Children in Alabama, 11 Ala. L. Rev. 1 (1958).

(n223)Footnote 603. Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 330 (1965); Gross v. Bloom, 411 S.W.2d 326 (Ky. 1967); Greger v. Fisher, 244 N.E.2d 848 (Ill. App. 1968); Harrison v. Ulicki, 193 N.W.2d 533 (Iowa 1972): Jensen v. Myers, 441 P.2d 604 (Or. 1968). Contra result where landlord had promised to repair: Carter v. Brannan, 178 S.E.2d 755 (Ga. App. 1970).

(n224)Footnote 604. See Kenneth D. Stern, Firemen's Recovery from Negligent Landowner, 16 Clev. Marshall L. Rev. 231 (1967).

(n225)Footnote 605. Funeral home liable for due care to invitee: Terrell Investment Co. v. Dunn, 176 So. 2d 291 (Miss. 1965). See Howard Daigle, Jr., Note, Land Occupiers Liability: The Duty of Reasonable Care for All, 37 La. L. Rev. 1174 (1971); John M. Payne, From the Courts: Landowner's Tort Liability-- Trespasser-Licensee-Invitee Distinction Abolished in New York, 6 Real Est. L. J. 145 (1987). See also Mark A. Peterson, Liability of Owners and Occupiers of Land, 58 Marq. L. Rev. 609 (1975), as to the trend toward abolishing the distinction of landowners' liability between trespassers, licensees and invitees.

(n226)Footnote 606. One contracting for work to be done on the premises gives license to those performing the work to go upon the land: Harrison v. Rapach, 271 N.E.2d 399 (Ill. App. 1971).

Equitable owner in possession is subject to attractive nuisance doctrine: Gordon v. Strawther Enterprises, Inc., 78 Cal. Rptr. 417 (Cal. App. 1969). Abandoned strip mine held an attractive nuisance under the foreseeable injury doctrine: Hendricks v. Peabody Coal Co., 253 N.E.2d 56 (Ill. App. 1969). Store owner held not liable for injury to customer attacked in parking lot where there was no previous history of such attacks: Shipes v. Piggly Wiggly St. Andrews, Inc., 238 S.E.2d 167 (S.C. 1977). Swimming pool held an attractive nuisance: Mitchell v. Akers, 401 S.W.2d 907 (Tex. App. 1966). See James K. Prewitt, Attractive Nuisance Doctrine in Missouri, 29 Mo. L. REV. 24 (1965); Russell L. Weaver, Law of Private Nuisance in Missouri, 44 Mo. L. Rev. 20 (1979); Torts-- Attractive Nuisance Doctrine-- Smudge Pots Are Not So Inherently Dangerous as to Require Application of Attractive Nuisance Doctrine, 44 MISS. L. J. 805 (1973). See also Jackson v. City of Biloxi. 272 So. 2d 654 (Miss. 1973).

(n227)Footnote 607. See Wm. P. Roscoe. III, Note, Montana's Law of Attractive Nuisance, 30 MONT, L. Rev. 61 (1968); Torts: Landowner Liability and Attractive Nuisance-- Kansas Rejects the Modem Trend, 18 Washburn L. J. 190 (1978).

(n228)Footnote 608. Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P.R. Co., 21 Minn. 207 (1875). Abandoned strip mine is attractive nuisance under foreseeable injury ordinance. Hendricks v. Peabody Coal Co., 253 N.E.2d 56 (Ill. App. 1969). See William L. Prosser. Trespassing Children, 47 Cal. L. REV. 427 (1958).

(n229)Footnote 609. Harper & James. Torts. 273. See William L. Prosser, Trespassing Children, 47 Cal. L. Rev. 427 (1958). Attractive nuisance must be based on allurement to the child: Concrete Constr., Inc. v. Petterson, 216 So. 2d 221 (Fla. 1968). Volatile substance created liability under attractive nuisance doctrine: Patterson v. Proctor Paint & Varnish Co., 288 N.Y.S.2d 622 (1968). Attractive nuisance to children: Herndon v. Paschal. 410 P.2d 549 (Okla. 1966).

Reasonable care adapted with respect to child trespasser: Crain v. Sestak. 68 Cal. Rptr. 849 (Cal. App. 1968). Landowner not liable to child trespasser where injury is caused by natural conditions (wave sweeping into cove and drowning child): Loney v. McPhillips, 521 P.2d 340 (Or. 1974). Private swimming pool held not a nuisance: Slaird v. Klewers, 271 A.2d 345 (Md. 1970).

(n230)Footnote 610. Crafton v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 55 Mo. 580 (1874) (cattle lured, to railroad right-of- way by feed left on track).

(n231)Footnote 611. Harris v. Mentes-Williams Co., 95 A.2d 388 (N. J. 1953); Angelier v. Red Star Yeast & Products Co., 254 N.W. 351 (Wis. 1934): Massino v. Smaglick. 89 N.W.2d 223 (Wis. 1958). Illinois has adopted the attractive nuisance doctrine with respect to minor children, requiring the landowner to foresee the possibility of harm to a child trespasser: Kahn v. James Burton Co,, 126 N.E.2d 836 (Ill. 1955), departing from its former rule in Jones v. Schmidt, 110 N.E.2d 688 (Ill. App. 1953), which held that liability was not merely due to a trespasser or licensee to refrain from wilful or wanton injury. Presence of a diving board in a constructed swimming pool where in a place expressly provided for swimming and diving activities is an invitation to use it and a representation that it may be used in ordinary manner with safety: Pleasant v. Blue Mound Swim Club, 262 N.E.2d 107 (Ill. App. 1970). Railroad is liable for a mentally incompetent trespasser to the same extent that it is for children trespassers in matters of attractive nuisance: Barnes v. Washington, 281 N.E.2d 380 (Ill. App. 1972). A residential swimming pool is not necessarily a nuisance: Slaird v. Klewers, 271 A.2d 345 (Md. 1970). Treehouses held attractive nuisance: Salanski v. Enright, 452 S.W.2d 143 (Mo. 1970). Landowner's knowledge of use of his land for sledding purposes did not create an attractive nuisance: Scheffer v. Braverman, 215 A.2d 378 (N.J. 1965); Dougherty v. Graham, 287 A.2d 382 (Conn. 1971).

(n232)Footnote 612. Menneti v. Evans Constr. Co., 259 F.2d 367 (3rd Cir. 1958); Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 136 A.2d 301 (N.J. 1957) (attractive nuisance doctrine applied to infants burned in fires while trespassing); Previte v. Wanskuck Co., 90 A.2d 769 (R.I. 1952). See Petrak v. Cooke Contr'g. Co., 46 N.W.2d 574 (Mich. 1951). As respects nuisance, statute of limitations begins to run when it becomes obvious that a permanent injury has been suffered: Springdale v. Weathers, 410 S.W.2d 754 (Ark. 1967).

Statute of limitations on a private nuisance does not commence until the act becomes harmful to the injured party: Schmidt v. Village of Mapleview, 196 N.W.2d 626 (Minn. 1972). Treehouse as attractive nuisance: Salanski v. Enright, 452 S.W.2d 143 (Mo. 1970). Abandoned strip mine held an attractive nuisance under the foreseeable injury doctrine: Hendricks v. Peabody Coal Co., 253 N.E.2d 56 (Ill. App. 1969).

(n233)Footnote 613. Ansin v. Thurston, 98 So. 2d 87 (Fla. 1957). See David F. Palmelee, The Availability and Limitations of the Private Nuisance Doctrine in Wyoming, 7 Land & Water L. Rev. 545 (1972).

(n234)Footnote 614. Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co., 136 A.2d 301 (N.J. 1957). Trees and shrubs are not an attractive nuisance: Higginbotham v. Winborn. 218 S.E.2d 917 (Ga. App. 1975). See Franklin Gevurtz, Comment, Obstruction of Sunlight as a Private Nuisance. 65 Cal. L. Rev. 94 (1977).

(n235)Footnote 615. RESTATEMENT OF TORTS. § 332; New York Central R. Co. v. Wyatt, 184 N.E.2d 657 (Ind. App. 1962); Bartell v. Serio, 180 So. 460 (La. App. 1938). Hockey patron may recover in absence of actual knowledge of the dangers of the game: Shanney v. Boston Madison Square Garden Corp., 5 N.E.2d 1 (Mass. 1936): James v. Rhode Island Auditorium, Inc., 199 A. 293 (R.I. 1938). A licensee to whom the landowner owes no duty except to refrain from wantonly or wilfully injuring him and an invitee distinguished: Ramsey v. Piketon, 184 N.E.2d 482 (Oh. App. 1961). Owner liable to public invitee for injury due to defective premises caused by owner's negligence: Lunney v. Post, 248 So. 2d 504 (Fla. App. 1971). Holding liability for dangerous conditions to an invitee but not mere licensee: DuMond v. Mattoon, 207 N.E.2d 320 (Ill. App. 1965). Liable to licensee for negligence in failing to warn of known dangers: Cupp v. Montgomery, 408 S.W.2d 353 (Mo. App. 1966). There is no duty upon the owners or operators of a shopping center whose mode of operation does not attract or provide a climate for crime to guard against the criminal acts of a third party unless they know or have reason to know that acts are occurring or about to occur on the premises that pose imminent probability of harm to an invitee whereby a duty of reasonable care to protect against such act arises: Cornpropst v. Sloan. 528 S.W.2d 188 (Tenn. 1975). No liability of filling station for injury caused by falling on natural accumulation of snow: Foster v. George J. Cyrus & Co., 276 N.E.2d 38 (Ill. App. 1971). Access to archdiocese office held not generally accessible and open to the public so as to give an indication that public in general was invited or encouraged to use the area in question: City of Chicago v. Rosser, 264 N.E.2d 158 (Ill. 1970). Private club is liable only for negligence in injury or death of visitors: McKeever v. Phoenix Jewish Community Center, 374 P.2d 875 (Ariz. 1962). Adopting the rule of the Restatement (Second) of Torts governing invitees: O'Keefe v. South End Rowing Club, 51 Cal. Rptr. 534 (1966). California is thus freed from the idea that, to be an invitee, the visitor must come upon the land for a business purpose. See William L. Prosser, Business Visitors and Invitees, 26 MINN. L. REV. 573 (1942). A church conducting a bingo game removed itself from the protection of tort liability which it could otherwise claim as a religious institution: Blankenship v. Alter, 167 N.E.2d 922 (Ohio 1960). Liability for icy area in car wash: Marsten v. Auto Laundries, Inc., 255 N.E.2d 730 (Mass. 1970). Child as business invitee held to have cause of action when injured playing with children's playground equipment: Orr v. First Nat'l Stores, 280 A.2d 785 (Me. 1971). A developer was required to pay the costs of moving of a business that had become a public nuisance as the result of the development: Spur Indus., Inc. v. Del E. Webb Dev. Co., 494 P.2d 700 (Ariz. 1972). Funeral home was not a nuisance per se but may become such where property values decline: Elston v. Paal, 550 S.W.2d 771 (Ark. 1977). A right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be obtained by prescription: People v. Perez, 561 P.2d 7 (Colo. 1977). Unreasonable and intentional invasion of the use and enjoyment of another's land is a nuisance: Copart Indus., Inc. v. Consolidated Edison Co., 362 N.E.2d 968 (N.Y. App. 1977).

A nuisance is whether the gravity of the harm outweighs the social usefulness of the defendant's activity: Little Joseph Realty, Inc. v. Town of Babylon, 395 N.Y.S.2d 428 (1977). Landowner may cut off encroaching tree limbs: Rose v. Oliveira, 342 A.2d 601 (R.I. 1975). The condition itself must be fraught with danger to constitute a nuisance: Dean v. Bays Mountain Park Ass'n, 551 S.W.2d 702 (Tenn. App. 1977). See Larry R. Patton, Comment, Premises Liability-- The Texas Rule of Liability of Owners and Occupiers of Land for Injuries Sustained by Business Invitees on the Premises-- Revisited and Reconsidered, 5 St. Mary's L. J. 800 (1974); William A. Wiseman, Comment, Strict Liability of the Bailor, Lessor and Licensor, 57 Marq. L. Rev. 111 (1973); Michael M. Gibson, Note, Occupant's Duty to Warn Employee of Independent Contractor Discharged by Warning of the Independent Contractor, 22 S.W. L. J. 510 (1968). As to the differences between trespassers, licensees and invitees, see Peter J. Horner, A Re-Examination of the Land Possessor's Duty to Trespassers, Licensees and Invitees, 14 S.D. L. Rev. 332 (1969); Robert W. Loewen, Nuisance Damages as an Alternative to Compensation of Land Use Restrictions in Eminent Domain, 47 SO. Cal. L. Rev. 998 (1974).

(n236)Footnote 616. Widow visiting home of daughter and son-in-law as a gratuitous licensee: Hilseher v. Ickinger, 166 A.2d 678 (Pa. 1960). Liability for ice and snow on entranceway to business invitee: Dawson v. Payless for Drugs, 433 P.2d 1019 (Or. 1967). Liability to ordinary licensees is limited to warning of hidden dangers: Preshno v. J.M. McDonald Co., 151 N.W.2d 451 (Neb. 1967). Landowner-inviter does not owe a duty to business invitee to clear a parking lot of ice and snow: Hammond v. Allegretti, 311 N.E.2d 821 (Ind. 1974). Possessor must warn licensees, including social guests, if possessor knows of the fact likely to cause harm and if the possessor expects that they would not discover the danger or would fail to protect themselves: Durden v. Dranetz, 99 So. 2d 716 (Fla. App. 1958). Liability on licensee to warn of dangerous conditions of building: Blackburn v. Colvin, 380 P.2d 432 (Kan. 1963). Foreseeability and risk rule in the case of invitee: Nicholas v. Tri-State Fair & Sales Ass'n, 148 N.W.2d 183 (S.D. 1967). Child as business invitee held to have cause of action when injured while playing on children's playground equipment: Orr v. First Nat'l Stores, 280 A.2d 785 (Me. 1971). See Kenneth D. Stern, Firemen's Recovery from Negligent Landowners, 16 Clev. Marshall L. Rev. 231. (1967); McKay, Merchant's Liability in South Carolina for Injuries on the Premises-- An Anachronism. 23 S.C. L. Rev. 709; Gareau. Landlord's Liability for Ice and Snow, 1967 Ins. L. J. 661; Beckett, Owners Are Not Deprived of Liability to Entrance on Property in Missouri, 41 Mo. L. Rev. 236.

(n237)Footnote 617. Policeman entering premises on lawful business is a mere licensee: Scheurer v. Trustees of Open Bible Church, 192 N.E.2d 38 (Ohio 1963). Landowner owes duty of due care to fireman: Dini v. Naiditch, 170 N.E.2d 881 (Ill. 1960). Fireman fighting a fire held licensee: Aravanis v. Eisenberg, 206 A.2d 148 (Md. 1965). Treating a fireman as an invitee not a mere licensee: Dini v. Naiditch, 170 N.E.2d 881 (Ill. 1960). The existence of a hidden danger known to the owner, and a subsequent failure to warn a fireman in the performance of duty, creates a liability: Bartels v. Continental Oil Co., 384 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. 1964). Store owner was held liable for failure to provide light where patrol officer was killed by a burglar: Fancil v. Q.S.E. Foods, Inc., 311 N.E.2d 745 (Ill. App. 1974). No liability on basis of negligence of landowner to fireman fighting fire on premises; Washington v. Atlantic-Richfield Co., 341 N.E.2d 282 (Ill. 1976). See Kenneth D. Stern. Firemen's Recovery from Negligent Landowners, 16Clev. Marshall L. Rev. 231 (1967).

(n238)Footnote 618. Meiers v. Fred Koch Brewery, 167 N.Y.S. 740 (1917); Aravanes v. Eisenberg. 206 A.2d 148 (Md. 1965). Contra and imposing liability only where landowner had a common-law duty to warn fireman of a known hidden danger: Drake v. Fenton, 85 A. 14 (Pa. 1912). See Dini v. Narditch, 170 N.E.2d 887 (Ill. 1960).

(n239)Footnote 619. Concealed trap rule as to licensees: Olson v. Kushner, 211 N.E.2d 620 (Ind. App. 1965); Scheurer v. Trustees of Open Bible Church, 192 N.E.2d 38 (Ohio 1963).

(n240)Footnote 620. Florida requires reasonable care to "licensees by invitation," either express or implied, of the property owner: Wood v. Camp, 284 So. 2d 691 (Fla. 1973). Holding that an owner has a duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid or aggravate injury to a trespasser: Pridgen v. Boston Housing Authority, 308 N.E.2d 467 (Mass. 1974). Retaining the traditional invitee, licensee and trespasser categories: Welder v. Chase Resorts, Inc., 543 S.W.2d 527 (Mo. App. 1976). New York has abolished the trespasser, licensee and invitee distinctions: Basso v. Miller, 386 N.Y.S.2d 564 (1976); Scurti v. City of New York, 387 N.Y.S.2d 55 (1976). See John M. Payne. From the Courts: Landoviner's Tort Liability-- Trespasser-Licensee-Invitee Distinction Abolished in New York, 6 Real EST. L. J. 145 (1977): Graham Hughes, Duties to Trespassers: A Comparative Survey and Reevaluation, 68 Yale L. J. 633 (1959).

(n241)Footnote 621. Blakeney v. Associated Subdivisions, Inc., 195 A.2d 234 (R.I. 1963).

(n242)Footnote 622. Deen v. Holderfield, 155 So. 2d 314 (Ala. 1963).

(n243)Footnote 623. Kalopodes v. Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, 367 F.2d 47 (4th Cir. 1966).

(n244)Footnote 624. No liability where injury caused by appliance installed by tenant. Sunde v. Tollett, 469 P.2d 212 (Wash. App. 1970).

(n245)Footnote 625. Dennis v. Orange, 293 P. 865 (Cal. App. 1930); Calway v. William Schaal & Son, 555 A. 813 (Conn. 1931); Hass v. Booth, 148 N.W. 337 (Mich. 1914): Shindlebeck v. Moon. 32 Ohio 264 (1877). Lessor not in possession not liable for injuries to third persons through tenant's negligence: Richardson v. Bulk Petroleum Corp., 297 N.E.2d 405 (Ill. App. 1973).

(n246)Footnote 626. Haggart v. Stehlin. 35 N.E. 997 (Ind. 1893); Maloney v. Hayes, 91 N.E. 911 (Mass. 1910); Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 72 S.W. 954 (Tenn. 1903).

(n247)Footnote 627. Young v. Talcott, 159 A. 881 (Conn. 1932); Gilland v. Maynes, 104 N.E. 555 (Mass. 1914); O'Connor v. Andrews, 16 S.W. 628 (Tex. 1891); Munger v. Union Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 27 P.2d 709 (Wash. 1933).

(n248)Footnote 628. Boyce v. Tallerman, 55 N.E. 703 (Ill. 1899); Smith v. Preston, 71 A. 653 (Me. 1908). Distinguishing between "trespasser" and "invitee": Pedone v. Fountainebleau Corp., 322 So. 2d 78 (Fla. App. 1975).

(n249)Footnote 629. Appel v. Muller, 262 N.Y. 278 (1933). An abutting property owner is not responsible for injuries to municipal employees, unless the owner has an element of control over the area where the injury occurs: Walden v. Weinstein, 284 A.2d 1 (Md. 1971). See infra Chapter 40, Rights and Duties of Landlords and Tenants;

Chapter 43, Statutory Modifications of Landlord and Tenant Law;" Chapter 44, "Commercial Leasing.

(n250)Footnote 630. Palmire v. Morris, 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897). See 2 Harper & James, Torts 1518.

(n251)Footnote 631. The vendor is not liable for defects on the premises resulting in injury though the defect existed at the time of the contract and the vendee had not had time to repair: Anderson v. Cosmopolitan Nat'l Bank of Chicago, 301 N.E.2d 296 (Ill. 1973); Porter v. Miller. 164 N.E.2d 601 (Ill. App. 1960).

(n252)Footnote 632. Restatement of Torts, § 353; United States v. Inman, 205 F.2d 681 (5th Cir. 1953); Derby v. Public Service Co., 119 A.2d 335 (N.H. 1955); Kilmer v. White, 254 N.Y. 64 (1930). Contra, McIntosh v. Goodwin, 292 S.W.2d 242 (Tenn. App. 1954).

(n253)Footnote 633. An inviter has a reasonable time after a storm to remove ice and snow: Mattson v. St. Luke's Hospital, 89 N.W.2d 743 (Minn. 1958). No liability to invitee for injury by the falling of dead trees: Walls v. Lueking, 332 S.W.2d 692 (Tenn. App. 1959). Operation of a swimming pool was proprietary: Hack v. Salem, 189 N.E.2d 857 (Ohio 1963). Public housing authority held not to exempt itself from liability for negligence because of public policy: Thomas v. Housing Authority, 426 P.2d 836 (Wash. 1967).

(n254)Footnote 634. A clause excepting the lessee from liability for fire did not apply to fire deliberately set by the sublessee: Bishop v. Associated Transport, Inc., 332 S.W.2d 696 (Tenn. App. 1959).

(n255)Footnote 635. Smith v. Arbaugh's Restaurant, Inc., 469 F.2d 97 (D.C. Cir. 1972); Rowland v. Christian. 70 Cal. Rptr. 97 (1968). See 121 U. Pa. L. Rev. 378. The Restatement of Torts. § 343 makes a landowner liable to business visitors if the landowner knows or should know of a danger which involves unreasonable risk to them and has no reason to believe they will discover the danger or realize the risk. Abolishing distinction in tort between trespasser, licensee and invitee: Smith v. Arbaugh's Restaurant, Inc., 469 F.2d 97 (D.C. Cir. 1972). See Kenneth L. Greer Jr., Note, Negligence-- The Traditional Common Law Duty Distinction Between Social Guests and Invitees of Landowners Has Been Eliminated, 5 Tex. TECH. L. Rev. 892 (1974). Social guests of tenant are invitees when using common area: Toole v. Levitt, 492 S.W.2d 230 (Tenn. App. 1972). See R.P.W. Jr., Note, Torts--Landowner's Duty to Entrant upon Land, 41 Tenn. L. Rev. 190 (1973). An owner has a duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid or aggravate injury to a trespasser: Pridgen v. Boston Housing Authority, 308 N.E.2d 467 (Mass. 1974). See Charles P. Dribben, Comments, The Outmoded Distinction Between Licensees and Invitees, 22 Mo. L. Rev. 186 (1957); W.S.G., Comment, Torts-- Landowner's Liability-- Traditional Distinctions Between Trespassers, Licensees and Invitees Abolished As Determinative of the Standard of Care Owed a Visitor, 25 Ala. L. Rev. 401 (1973); Howard Daigle Jr., Land Occupier's Liability: The Duty of Reasonable Care for All, 37 La. L. Rev. 1174 (1977). See also William L. Prosser, Business Visitors and Invitees, 26 Minn. L. Rev. 573 (1943); Graham Hughes, Duties To Trespassers: A Comparative Survey and Revaluation, 68 Yale L. J. 633 (1959); Robert Lee Collins, Comment, Premises Liability: A Critical Survey of North Carolina Law, 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 797 (1978).

(n256)Footnote 636. Chatam v. Larkins, 216 S.E.2d 677 (Ga. App. 1975) (holding that duty of ordinary care owed to an invitee).

(n257)Footnote 637. Shopping center held not liable for criminal acts against invitee on the premises even though there had been previous acts, since there was no eminent probability of harm shown: Cornpropst v. Sloan, 528 S.W.2d 188 (Tenn. 1975). Employee of lessee in a shopping center was a business invitee and the owner of the shopping center was liable where the employee was assaulted on the parking lot premises: Morgan v. Bucks Associates, 428 F. Supp. 546 (E.D. Pa. 1977). Store owner not liable for injury to customer attacked in parking lot where there was no previous history of such attacks: Shipes v. Piggly Wiggly St. Andrews, Inc., 238 S.E.2d 167 (S.C. 1977).

(n258)Footnote 638. It has been held that an owner has a special relationship to an invitee, among others, giving rise to a duty of protection from criminal attack: Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing, Inc., 134 Cal. Rptr. 29 (Cal. App. 1976). See Victor E. Schwartz, A Landholder's Right to Possession of Property vs. A Citizen's Right of Free Speech: Tort Law as a Resource for Conflict Resolution, 45 U. Cin.L. REV. 1 (1976).

(n259)Footnote 639. Boon v. Castle, 115 N.Y.S. 583 (1908) (holding a deed testamentary and not a present grant of a future estate); In re Adelman's Will, 119 N.W. 929 (Wis. 1909) (holding that where, after the death of four beneficiaries, the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided among the children of such beneficiaries and the testator's half-brothers surviving at that time, the remaindermen's interests were future estates). See infra Chapter 22, Reversions: Chapter 23, Remainders: Chapter 24. Possibilities of Reverter; Chapter 25, Rights of Entry; Chapter 26, Executory Interests; Chapter 28, Rules Against Perpetuities: Chapter 29, Restraints on Alienation; Chapter 30, Special Legal Rules Relating to Future Interest.

(n260)Footnote 640. Green v. Head, 104 N.Y.S. 383 (1901).

(n261)Footnote 641. Adams v. Merrill, 87 N.E. 36 (Ind. App. 1909) (holding that where a person, who was to take if a life tenant died without heirs of the body, died before the life tenant, who subsequently died without heirs of the body, his interest passed to his heirs); Fisher v. Wagner. 71 A. 999 (Md. 1909) (holding contingent estates of inheritance as well as springing and executory uses and possibilities coupled with an interest, are transmissible by descent, devisable and assignable, where the person to take is certain); Bergmann v. Lord, 86 N.E. 828 (N.Y. 1909) (holding vested remainders in a trust fund are transferable and reachable by the remaindermen's creditors).

(n262)Footnote 642. Hollerich v. Gronbach, 96 N.E.2d 354 (Ill. App. 1950).

(n263)Footnote 643. North v. Graham, 85 N.E. 267 (Ill. 1908) (holding that an interest based on the possibility that the land should cease to be used for church purposes did not pass by quitclaim deed).

(n264)Footnote 644. Vaughan v. Langford, 62 S.E. 316 (S.C. 1908).

(n265)Footnote 645. Buxton v. Kroeger, 117 S.W. 1147 (Mo. 1909).

(n266)Footnote 646. Abbott v. Holway, 72 Me. 298 (1881).

+ This chapter is based in part on Chapter 1 of George W. Thompson, Commentaries on The Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes, ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing basic property definitions and characteristics.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 14.02

Supp. to § 14.02 Missing

Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.3

§ 14.02(a) The Meaning of Ownership. [Go To Main]

Add:

See Abraham Bell and Gideon Parchamovsky, "A Theory of Property," 90 Cornell L. Rev. 531 (March, 2005).

Add

See Jedediah Purdy, "History, Human Nature, and Property Regimes: Filling in the Civilizing Argument," 50 St. Louis U. L.J. 735 (Spring 2006).

add:

Joseph Z. Fleming, "Materials for Discussion Relating to the Representation of Artises, the Visual Artists Rights Act and the 'Property' Issues Raised by Lawrence Lessig, in the Future of Ideas and Free Culture by Harry Potter: An Update for 2009, ALI-ABA Entertainment, Arts, and Sports Law, SP016 ALI-ABA 887 (January 15-17 2009).

Add

See, Chip Ward, "Coming Home: Instilling a Connection to the Land," 26 J. Land Resources & Envtl. L. 63 (2005).

Add:

Mossoff, Adam. "What Is Property? Putting The Pieces Back Together." 45 Ariz. L. Rev. 371 (Summer, 2003) (article explores the definition of property and advocates the use of the integrated theory of property).

Add:

Savnik v. Hall, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 417 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999) (stating that an "owner" is one who possesses the "incidents of ownership" such as; right, interest, control, and dominion).

Add:

Chalet Liquors, Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 2004 Minn. App. LEXIS 416 (No. A03-507, Apr. 21, 2004) (beneficiary of covenant may be considered the owner of property).

See, Henry E. Smith, "Self-Help and the Nature of Property," 1 J.L. Econ. & Pol'y 69 (Winter, 2005) .

add:

Welch v. Crow, 206 P.3d 599 (Okla. 2009) (holding that the right to dispose of property is an inalienable right).

Add:

Nye v. Fire Group P'ship, 657 N.W.2d 220 (Neb. 2003) (adverse possession claims defeat recorded titles as long as each element for adverse possession is fulfilled); Wilke v. McDermott, 2003 Neb. App. Lexis 91 (Neb. 2003) (adverse possession does not defeat recorded title if actual occupancy is minimal).

Add:

King v. Wiley, 785 N.E.2d 1102 (Ind. App. 2003) (state statutes must be carefully followed in order to establish adverse possession).

§ 14.02(b) Ownership Entities [Go To Main]

Add:

Central Puget Sound Regional Transit Authority v. Miller, 128 P.3d 588 (Wash. 2006) (property subject to eminent domain right of the sovereign).

After the citation to "Department of Game v. Puyallup Tribe Inc." add:

rev'd in part, 414 U.S. 44 (1973) , vacated and remanded, 433 U.S. 165 (1977) .

Add:

Myrl L. Duncan, "Reconceiving the Bundle of Sticks: Land As a Community-Based Resource," 32 Envtl. L. 773 (Fall 2002).

add:

Handy v. U.S. Bank, Nat. Ass'n, 177 P.3d 80 (Utah 2008) .

§ 14.02(c) Limitations on the Exercise of Ownership Rights. [Go To Main]

Add:

Henry E. Smith, "Self-Help and the Nature of Property," 1 J.L. Econ. & Pol'y 69 (Winter, 2005) .

Add:

CSX Transp., Inc. v. Delaware, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22395 (D. Del., No. 03-756-KAJ, Dec. 12, 2003) (the state has the authority to require railroad companies to repair bridges).

Add:

Broadston v. Parsons, 2003 Ark. App. LEXIS 257 (No. CA02-598, Apr. 2, 2003) (property owners are entitled to use land even if land use creates a slight nuisance).

After the citation to "Kahn v. James Burton Co ... ." add:

but see Nichols v. Sitko 157 Ill. App. 3d 950, 109 Ill. Dec. 903, 510 N.E.2d 971 (Ill. App. Ct. 1987) .

After the citation "Previte v. Wanskuck Co ... ." add:

overruling recognized, Cain v. Johnson, 755 A.2d 156, (R.I. 2000) .

Add:

Anderson v. State, 674 N.W.2d 748 (Minn. App. 2004) (state not liable to nearby beekeepers for spraying pesticide on state property).

After the citation "Dini v. Naiditch ..." add:

but see Stephens v. Trinity Medical Center 685 N.E.2d 403 (Ill. App. Ct. 1997) .

Add:

Hoery v. United States, 324 F.3d 1220 (10th Cir. 2003) (toxic chemicals flowing into property constitute a nuisance and continuing trespass).

After the citation "Ott v. Johnson ... " add:

superseded, 319 N.E.2d 622 (Ind. 1974) .

After the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " add:

but see Straley v. Kimberly, 687 N.E.2d 360 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) .

After the citation "Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co ... " add:

reversed, 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958) .

Add:

Walsh, Charles R., Jr. "Sovereign Ownership of Private Property in the Name of Preservation: A Contradiction in Terms and of the Constitution," 46 N.Y.L. Sch. L. Rev. 899 (2002-2003).

After the citation "Denver v. Denver Buick Inc ... " add:

overruled in part, Stroud v. City of Aspen, 532 P.2d 720 (Colo. 1975) ; see also City of Aspen v. Marshall, 912 P.2d 56 (Colo. 1996) .

See Sherry F. Colb, "A World Without Privacy: Why Property Does Not Define the Limits of the Right Against Unreasonable Searchs and Seizures," 102 Mich. L. Rev. 889 (March, 2004).

After the citation "Ackerman v. Seattle ... " add:

reversed, Highline School Dist. v. Port of Seattle, 87 Wn.2d 6, 548 P.2d 1085 (Wash. 1976) , see also Manufactured Housing Communities v. State, 142 Wn.2d 347, 13 P.3d 183 (Wash. 2000) .

Add:

Hopkins, Jeremy P. "Separation of Powers: A Forgotten Protection in the Context of Eminent Domain and the Natural Gas Act." 16 Regent U.L. Rev. 371 (2003/2004) (the Federal Government's power regarding eminent domain is overreaching because it can claim property under eminent domain without trial); United States v. 12,367. 47 Acres of Land, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6259 (D. Mass., No. 98-11665-DPW, Apr. 9, 2003) (a town's tax lien was extinguished at the time of taking; therefore, the town did not have an interest in the property and former conveyances are void).

Change the name of the case from "Awack v. Kraus Bros ... " to "Zwack v. Kraus Bros ... "

Add:

P. Scott, "Another view of the public right to fish--and the question of regulation or ownership: Are there limitations on fishing methods that may damage the benthic fauna or flora?" 19 J. Water Law 37 (Winter 2009); John Meyer, "The Concept of Private Property and the Limits of the Environmental Imagination," 37 Political Theory 99 (2009). Hickory Grove Golf Club v. Hedrick, 2003 Ohio App. LEXIS 3587 (No. 2002-A-0031, Jul. 25, 2003) (landowner liable for failure to maintain statutorily mandated boundary fence).

Add:

Norton v. Town of Islip, 239 F. Supp. 2d 264 (E.D. N.Y. 2003) (zoning ordinances cannot unreasonably deny interest in land).

§ 14.02(d) Variance in Ownership Rights According to Controlling Law. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46

After the citation "Estabrook v. Wise ... " add:

vacated, 519 S.W.2d 632 (Tex. 1974) .

For the case Rosenbaum v. Consolidated Products Co., the correct citation is 81 N.Y.S.2d 571 (N.Y. Misc. 1948).

Add:

Greenpeace, Inc. v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3043 (No. 05-03-01620-CV, Apr. 5, 2004) (local courts have the authority to impose injunctions prohibiting activist groups from committing tortious acts against corporations in all jurisdictions when the injunction does not concern issues of local real estate law).

After the citation "Stockton v. Ortiz ... " add:

vacated, 120 Cal. Rptr. 456 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975) .

Change the citation "Kunstman v. Shinsaku Nagano ... " to read:

Kunstman v. Shinsaku, 59 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1945) .

After the citation "McClain v. Holder ... " insert the following citation:

Lurie v. Sheriff of Gallatin County, 999 P.2d 342 (Mont. 2000) (the situs of personal property or the domicile of the owner could determine governing law).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 14.03

Supp. to § 14.03 The Nature of Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 14.03(a) Property Defined. [Go To Main]

Add:

Beckerman-Rodau, Andrew, "Are Ideas Within the Traditional Definition of Property?: A Jurisprudential Analysis," 47 Ark. L. Rev. 603 (1994); Samuelson, Pamela, "Some New Kinds of Authorship Made Possible by Computers and Some Intellectual Property Questions They Raise," 53 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 685 (1992); Scott, Ridgeley A., "Like Kind Replacement Property: Animal, Vegetable, or Mineral," 23 San Diego L. Rev. 1067 (1986).

Moringiello, Juliet M. "Seizing Domain Names to Enforce Judgments: Looking Back to Look to the Future." 72 U. Cin. L. Rev. 95 (Fall, 2003) (article explores whether domain names are property).

Add:

Claire Priest, Creating an American Property Law: Alienability and Its Limits in American History, 120 Harv. L. Rev. 385 (December, 2006); Brett R.Turner, Unlikely Partners: The Marital Home and the Concept of Separate Property, 20 J. Am. Acad. Matrim. Law 69 (2006); O. Lee Reed, What is 'Property'?, 41 Am. Bus. L.J. 459 (Summer, 2004).

Add:

Kremen v. Cohen, 337 F.3d 1024 (9th Cir. 2003) (domain names are a form of property; however, they are intangible and cannot be converted).

Add:

Aranda v. Industrial Comm'n of Arizona, 11 P.3d 1006 (Ariz. 2000) (defining property as "any vested right of any value").

Change the citation "Armstrong v. United States ... " to read:

Armstrong v. United States, 7 F. Supp. 2d 758 (W.D. Va. 1998) .

After the citation "In re General Adjudication of Rights to the Use of Water from the Snake River Basin Water Sys ... " add:

rev'd on other grounds, United States v. Idaho ex rel. Director, Idaho Dept. of Water Resources, 508 U.S. 1 (1993) .

Change the date at the end of the citation "McCown v. Fraser ... " from "(Pa. 1977)" to:

(Pa. 1937).

add:

Exelon Corp. v. Department of Revenue, 917 N.E.2d 899 (Ill. 2009) (definition of corporeal).

§ 14.03(c)(1) In General.

Change the citation of "Milford v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co ... " from "355 A.2d 687 (Ala. 1978)" to:

355 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1978) .

§ 14.03(c)(2) Examples of Real Property and Personal Property.

add:

D. Benjamin Barros, "Legal Questions for the Psychology of Home," 83 Tul. L. Rev. 645, 653 (February, 2009).

After the citation "Leawood Nat'l Bank of Kansas City v. City Nat'l Bank ... " add:

but see, Rothermich v. Union Planters Nat. Bank, 10 S.W.3d 610 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000) .

Add:

McBride v. Commonwealth, 2003 Va. App. LEXIS 428 (No. 1947-02-4, Aug. 5, 2003) (air compressor deemed personal property).

After the citation "Silverman v. Alcoa Plaza Associates ... " add:

but see, ALH Properties Ten, Inc. v. 306-100th Street Owners Corp., 191 A.D.2d 1 (N.Y. App. Div. 1993) .

After the citation "State Tax Comm'n v. Shor ... " add:

but see, In re Pandeff, 201 B.R. 865 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1996) .

Add:

overruled, Ingram v. Ingram, 521 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1974) .

Add:

Lafarge Bldg. Materials, Inc. v. Stribling, 2003 Ala. LEXIS 422 (No. 1020623, Oct. 17, 2003) (tenants are allowed to remove trade fixture improvements that are attached to property).

After the citation "State Tax Comm'n v. Shor ... " add:

but see, In re Pandeff, 201 B.R. 865 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1996) .

After the citation "State Tax Comm'n v. Shor ... " add:

but see In re Pandeff, 201 B.R. 865 (Bankr. S.D. N.Y. 1996) .

§ 14.03(c)(3) Graves.

Avau, Edward Halealoha, "Restoring the Ancestral Foundation of Native Hawaiians: Implementation of the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act," 24 Ariz. St. L.J. 193 1992.

Ayres, Major, "Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act Regulations Published," 1996-JUN Army Law. 67.

Evans, William L., "Who Owns the Contents of Ohio's Ancient Graves?" 22 Cap. U. L. Rev. 711 (1993).

Hibbert, Michelle, "Galileos or Grave Robbers? Science, The Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, and the First Amendment," 23 Am. Indian L. Rev. 425 (1999) .

Hurtado, Daniel J., "Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act: Does It Subject Museums to an Unconstitutional 'Taking'?" 6 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 1 (1993).

Kosslak, Renee M., "The Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act: The Death Knell for Scientific Study?" 24 Am. Indian L. Rev. 129 (2000) .

Russell, Steve, "Sacred Ground: Unmarked Graves Protection in Texas Law," 4 Tex. F. on C.L. & C.R. 3 (1998).

§ 14.03(c)(4) Wild Animals.

Add:

Cohn, Pricilla N., "The Injustice of Animal Welfare: A Review of Animals, Property, and the Law," 2 Animal L. 207 (1996).

Dryden, Arnie J., "Overcoming the Inadequacies of Animal Cruelty Statutes and the Property-Based View of Animals," 38 Idaho L. Rev. 177 (2001).

Francione, Gary L., "Animals as Property," 2 Animal L. I (1996).

Francione, Gary L., "Animals, Property and Legal Welfarism: 'Unnecessary' Suffering and the 'Human" Treatment of Animals," 46 Rutgers L. Rev. 721 (1994).

Hannah, Harold W., "Animals As Property: Changing Concepts," 25 S. Ill. U. L.J. 571 (2001).

Kelch, Thomas G., "Toward A Non-Property Status for Animals," 6 N.Y.U. Envtl. L.J. 531 (1998).

Meltz, Robert, "Where the Wild Things Are: The Endangered Species Act and Private Property," 24 Envtl. L. 369 (1994).

Root, William C., " 'Man's Best Friend:' Property or Family Member? An Examination of the Legal Classification of Companion Animals and Its Impact on Damages Recoverable for Their Wrongful Death or Injury," 47 Vill. L. Rev. 423 (2002).

St. Pierre, Derek W., "The Transition from Property to People: The Road to the Recognition of Rights for Non-Human Animals," 9 Hastings Women's L.J. 255 (1998).

Add:

overruled, Kleppe v. New Mexico, 426 U.S. 529 (1976) .

§ 14.03(c)(5) Chattels Real.

After the citation "Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Board of Assessors ... " add:

but see, County of Suffolk v. Grumman Aerospace Corp., 715 N.Y.S.2d 717 (N.Y. A.D. Oct 30, 2000) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 14 THE NATURE AND KINDS OF PROPERTY

2-14 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 14.04

Supp. to § 14.04 Real Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 14.04(b) Corporeal and Incorporeal Hereditaments. [Go To Main]

After the citation "Shields v. Fink ... " add:

overruled, Ingram v. Ingram, 521 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1974) .

After the citation "Central Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gardner ... " add:

rev'd in part, Central Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gardner, 161 N.E.2d 278 (Ill. 1959) .

add:

K. K. Duvivier, "Animal, Vegetable, Mineral-Wind? The Severed Wind Power Rights Conondrum," 49 Washburn L.J. 69 (Fall 2009).

add:

Lior Jacob Strahilevitz, "The Right to Abandon," 158 U. Pa. L. Rev. 355 (January 2010).

After the citation "Shields v. Fink ... " add:

overruled, Ingram v. Ingram, 521 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1974) .

§ 14.04(c) Possession of Realty. [Go To Main]

§ 14.04(c)(2) Incidents of Possession.

After the citation "Camara v. San Francisco Municipal Court ... " add:

but see Tobin v. City of Peoria, Ill., 939 F. Supp. 628 (C.D. Ill. 1996) .

§ 14.04(c)(3) Possessory Rights in Chattels.

§ 14.04(c)(4) Limitations on Rights Arising from Possession.

add new footnote 549.1 at the end of the third full sentence on the page: n549.1

After the citation "Sibson v. State ... " add:

overruled, Burrows v. City of Keene, 432 A.2d 15 (N.H. 1981) .

After the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " add:

but see Straley v. Kimberly, 687 N.E.2d 360 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) .

After the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " add:

but see Straley v. Kimberly, 687 N.E.2d 360 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) .

the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " appears twice in this note. Delete one of the citations.

After the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " add:

but see Straley v. Kimberly, 687 N.E.2d 360 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) .

After the citation "Galbreath v. Engineering Cosnt. Corp ... " add:

but see Straley v. Kimberly, 687 N.E.2d 360 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) .

§ 14.04(c)(5) Possible Liabilities Arising from the Possession of Land.

After both citations to "Wells v. Goforth ... " add:

overruled, Rowe v. Farmers Ins. Co., Inc., 699 S.W.2d 423 (Mo. 1985) .

After the citation "Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co ... " add:

reversed, 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958) .

After the citation "Enos Coal Min. Co. v. Schuchart ... " add:

superceded, 188 N.E.2d 406 (Ind. 1963) .

Add:

overruled in part, Post v. Lunney, 261 So. 2d 146 (Fla. 1972) .

After the citation "Preshno v. J.M. McDonald Co ... ." add:

abrogated, Heins v. Webster County, 552 N.W.2d 51 (Neb. 1996) .

change the citation of "Hensley v. Montgomery County ... " from "334 A.2d 54 ... " to

334 A.2d 542

After the citation "Staley v. Security Athletic Ass'n ... " add:

rev'd in part, Mile High Fence Co. v. Radovich, 489 P.2d 308 (Colo. 1971) .

After the citation "Barnes v. Washington ... " add:

reversed, 305 N.E.2d 535 (Ill. 1973) .

After the citation "Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co ... " add:

reversed, 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958) .

After the citation "Previte v. Wanskuck Co ... ." add:

overruled in part, Haddad v. First Nat. Stores, Inc., 280 A.2d 93 (R.I. 1971) ; Mariorenzi v. Joseph DiPonte, Inc., 333 A.2d 127 (R.I. 1975) .

After the citation "Simmel v. New Jersey Coop. Co ... " add:

reversed, 143 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1958) .

After both times the citation "Cornpost v. Sloan ... " appears in this footnote add:

abrogated, McClung v. Delta Square Ltd. Partnership, 937 S.W.2d 891 (Tenn. 1996) .

After the citation "Dawson v. Payless for Drugs ... " add:

superceded by statute as recognized, Woolston v. Wells, 687 P.2d 144 (Or. 1984) .

After the citation "Preshno v. J.M. McDonald Co ... ." add:

abrogated, Heins v. Webster County, 552 N.W.2d 51 (Neb. 1996) .

After the citation "Fancil v. Q.S.E. Foods Inc ... " add:

rev'd, Fancil v. Q. S. E. Foods, Inc., 328 N.E.2d 538 (Ill. 1975) .

change the citation of "Washington v. Atlantic Richfield Co ... " from "341 N.E.2d 282 ... " to:

361 N.E.2d 282 (Ill. 1976) .

change the citation of "Dini v. Narditch ... " from "170 N.E.2d 887 ... " to 170 N.E.2d 881 (Ill. 1960) .

After the citation "Olson v. Kushner ... " add:

overruled in part, Fort Wayne Nat. Bank v. Doctor, 272 N.E.2d 876 (Ind. Ct. App. 1971) .

After the citation "Mattson v. St. Luke's Hospital ... " add:

see also, Frykman v. University of Minnesota-Duluth, 611 N.W.2d 379 (Minn. Ct. App. 2000) .

After the citation "Cornpost v. Sloan ... " add:

abrogated, McClung v. Delta Square Ltd. Partnership, 937 S.W.2d 891 (Tenn. 1996) .

§ 14.04(d) Property Rights Associated with Future Interests.

Utah Gospel Mission v. Salt Lake City Corp., 316 F. Supp. 2d 1201, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12966 (D. Utah 2003) (church easement does not violate establishment clause).

Anderson, Roger W., "Present and Future Interests: A Graphic Explanation," 19 Seattle U. L. Rev. 101 (1995).

Burney, Laura H., "Just Compensation and the Condemnation of Future Interests: Empirical Evidence of the Failure of Fair Market Value," 1989 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 789 (1989).

Cunningham, Laura E., "The Hazards of Tinkering with the Common Law of Future Interests: The California Experience," 48 Hastings L.J. 667 (1997).

"Gifts of Limited Partnership Interests Were Future Interests Under Section 2503 Because Donees Did Not Have Present Right of Enjoyment LR 9751003 (Not a Precedent.)" (1998 Estate & Gift Tax Decision) 115 Banking L.J. 755 (1998).

Hopperton, Robert J., "Teaching Present and Future Interests: A Methodology for Students That Unifies Estates in Land Concepts, Structures, and Principles," 26 U. Tol. L. Rev. 621 (1995).

"Partnerships: Limited Partnership Gifts Are Future Interests," 28-NOV Real Est. L. Rep. 4 (1998).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 549.1. Lior Jacob Strahilevitz. "The Right to Abandon," 158 U. Pa. L. Rev. 355, 372 (January 2010) (definition of and difference between mislaid and lost); Joseph J. Simeone. "'Finders Keepers, Losers Weepers': The Law of Finding 'Lost Property' in Missouri," 54 St. Louis U. L.J. 167 (Fall 2009).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 15.syn

AUTHOR: 17 Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 15.syn Synopsis to Chapter 15: THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

Utah Code Ann. § 78-41-1Introduction.

§ 15.02 Subordination of Women in Western Civilization.

§ 15.03 The Elusive Neutrality of Married Women's Property Acts.

§ 15.04 Some Current Issues in Women's Property Rights.

17 Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 15.01

AUTHOR: 17 Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 15.01 Introduction.

This brief chapter is intended only to summarize some of the past events in what is a continuing saga, the emergence of women as fully-privileged citizens before the law. Property law has been only one of many battlefields, although it has traditionally been an area of some of the most conspicuous suppressions of women's rights and, more recently, some of the more important advances. Details on developments in specific areas of property law are available in appropriate chapters elsewhere in this work. In this chapter is a more succinct overview, with the intention that changes in the legal order may be seen as interconnected with changes in the social order.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 15.02

AUTHOR: 17 Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 15.02 Subordination of Women in Western Civilization.n1

The status of women in the tradition of western civilization has been characterized by two conditions: one is subordination of women to men, and the other is misogyny, or the hatred of women (by men). Understandably, one would seek for the roots of subordination in the primitive societies of prehistory, but no archaeological or other evidence illuminates the question of how or why women became subordinated to men. It seems clear that in warrior societies the greater size and strength of men would push men into dominant societal roles, but there is no evidence that early societies were universally warlike.

Some psychologists and anthropologists have hypothesized that early men feared and envied women because of women's child-bearing and other abilities, that various taboos and disabilities were then created and rationalized, and that these in turn made an artificial custom of female inferiority seem traditional and natural. Thus menstrual taboos appeared and childbirth was treated as a handicapping experience. It became expected that men would be active and aggressive and that women would be weak, passive and obedient.

By the time western culture emerged in history, traditions of female subordination were well-established and considered natural by men and most women alike. The earliest writings of the Greeks, Romans, and Hebrews, which became the matrix of European culture, all described warrior cultures in which women were subordinated to men.

Some historians have pointed out that, while early writings transmit a tradition of female subordination, there is little or no tradition of misogyny, and there is certainly no indication of hatred of women on a broad scale. In time, however, according to some evidence, prolonged subordinate status could lead rather naturally to women being stigmatized as innately evil. Indications of this trend may be found in the Greek poetry of Hesiod and Semonides in the 7th and 6th centuries, B.C., in the Jewish and Christian interpretations of the Old Testament during the 2nd century, B.C., to the 3rd century, A.D., and in imperial Roman poetry of the 1st century, A.D. Rather typical was the statement by the Jewish (but Romanized) historian Josephus that before the Jewish law women were in all things inferior to men. In Jewish law, this inferiority meant incapacity, so that women, children and slaves were classed together with respect to many legal activities; women were forbidden to testify, because they were considered to have light or flighty minds.

Laws and customs of early societies institutionalized female subordination, excluding women from activities of power and influence, such as warfare, government, philosophy, science, law and sometimes even religion. Women's principal activities were centered on the family. In classical Greece, women were identified with nature, emotion and chaos; men were identified with civilization, reason, and order.

Even within the family women often had little more authority than a child. In most cultures, a woman and her property, if any, were subject to the authority of her husband or closest male relative. For most, marriage meant only the transfer of this male custodial or wardship authority. Thus, some laws seemed paternal and protective of women; however, other laws delivered harsh reprisals for misconduct, such as sexual infidelity, and thus forced women to accept and conform to male standards and ideals of conduct. Women who obtained roles of power and influence in early societies were always exceptions and somewhat isolated; indeed, the lives of powerful women were sometimes subsequently used to point out the dangers of permitting women to exceed their customary restraints.

The vast majority of women accepted without question the ideal -- transmitted powerfully into European culture -- of a cherished wife, secure in an orderly home, loyal, prolific, diligent and devoted to housekeeping and family. Without wide availability of literacy, education, leisure, and wealth, only a few women were able to explore other roles. Considering how few women were actually able to obtain education and training in arts, letters and sciences, their presence and record of accomplishment in science, art, philosophy and literature is rather surprising and impressive. Most women active in these areas were born into families who were traditionally active in these pursuits. Also, women who had the chance showed themselves able to manage their finances and thus create some of their own opportunities for expanded life roles.

With the advent of Christianity, a startling new vision of women was introduced. Feminist historians are able to point to convincing evidence that Christian doctrine in its earliest forms rejected traditional depictions of women as inferior and deserving of subordination. Although the later Christian church would become one of the most powerful influences in the renewed oppression of women, the teachings of Jesus Christ, as seen through the eyes of writers of feminist history, were free of those prejudices:

> The life and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, later institutionalized as the beliefs and practices of the Christian Church, added both to traditions that empowered women and those that subordinated them. Initially, Jesus' words and action included women in ways that were new and surprising in the Roman-dominated Palestine of the 1st century, A.D. He made little distinction in his teachings between women and men, despite the occasional consternation this may have caused his male followers; when he talked at length with a Samaritan woman, his disciples "marveled that he was talking with a woman." To some of his contemporaries, Jesus appeared to reject traditional ideas of status, of free and slave, subordinate and inferior. He saw no special flaws in woman's nature. He included women in his preaching and allowed them life and a role outside the family and their relationship to a man. He used his authority to call for a reversal of contemporary and traditional values and attitudes. In his Sermon on the Mount, he favored "the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," and those "who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." He encouraged rich and poor -- both women and men -- to leave their families and follow him, promising they would find a new Christian family. He promised the "kingdom of heaven" -- a life after death -- to all who embraced his teachings, regardless of status or gender.
>
> Jesus thus rejected much that earlier cultures had taken for granted. Most significant for future generations of European women, he preached the equality of all believers in his doctrine. By his actions and his words, he rejected the traditional descriptions of females as inferior and undermined the ancient justifications for their subordination. He consistently saw women as created in God's image just like men... The act of baptism cleansed women equally with men from the taint of sin. Women's piety, just like men's, would determine their life after death and enable their bodies to rise into heaven.

Jesus gave equal value to women in other ways. In his parables, he used women as well as men to illustrate the values of faith, humility, and charity that he favored. "Harlots" who believed in him would know salvation before priests who denied him. The poor widow's gift was worth more than that of the rich, for "they all contributed out of their abundance; but she out of her poverty has put in everything she had, her whole living." When he compared faith to "a grain of mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field," he immediately followed it with an example which would mean more to women: "The kingdom of heaven is like leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of flour, till it was all leavened." "Five wise maidens" who filled their lamps with oil and were prepared to "meet the bridegroom" exemplified the true believers ready to receive God's blessing. He used the metaphor of birth to describe his mission and promised that his followers would feel the joy of a woman who has given birth. When a bleeding woman sought his help and touched his gown, he not only did not condemn her, but comforted and healed her. He saved the life of one of the most despised figures in Jewish society, the adulteress, also an outcast in many contemporary cultures. Hebrew law called for her to be stoned to death, Jesus said, "Let him who is without sin among you be the first to throw a stone at her," and when no one did, he told her, "Neither do I condemn you, go, and do not sin again."

Most unusual of all his actions with regard to women, Jesus spoke directly to them of his doctrines and accepted women as his special followers along with men. In Roman-dominated Hebrew Palestine, women hardly ever figured as subjects of Jewish rabbinical or Talmudic teachings, let alone as students. In contrast, Jesus first declared his divinity to a Samaritan woman, in a culture in which women were subordinate and Samaritans outcasts. He stated his mission to Martha of Bethany: "I am the resurrection and the life, he who believes in me, though he shall die, yet shall he live, and whoever lives and believes in me shall never die." He raised her brother Lazarus from the dead as proof. Mary of Bethany, Martha's sister, even "sat at the Lord's feet and listened to his teaching." When Martha complained that Mary was not helping her serve the meal, Jesus replied that "Mary has chosen the good portion, which shall not be taken from her." Christian women in the European centuries to come repeatedly cited this affirmation of women's right to learn and preach to justify their studies...

Jesus' favoring of women and his encouragement of their untraditional behavior continued throughout his life. Women rather than men played the key roles in the events surrounding his death and resurrection. In describing the crucifixion, the four Gospels report that all the apostles had fled except John, but that the women remained to pray at the foot of the cross and witness his death. The women made plans to prepare his body for burial. Mary Magdalene first returned to the tomb and discovered his body gone. She, "from whom he had cast out seven demons," not one of his male followers, first witnessed his resurrection, the ultimate proof to the faithful of Jesus' divinity. Mark and Luke reported that the male disciples did not believe Mary Magdalene and that Jesus later rebuked them for their lack of faith.

... As Christianity became accepted and institutionalized, the equality granted women in its first centuries was disavowed ...

... By the 5th century, the male leaders and theologians of Christianity had accepted and restated the most denigrating traditional views of women. All that was inferior or evil they associated with the female, all that was good and superior with the male... This misogynist fear and hatred echoed older images of women's seductive power. It took on new dimensions in the theological treatises of the Church Fathers and passed into both secular and religious European culture as a tradition inherited by women. n2

During the Dark Ages women clung tenaciously to the possibility of gaining education and conducting study in the various religious foundations, but by the 12th and 13th centuries these opportunities passed to the universities, which were highly restrictive, limiting their students to ordained males.

In secular respects, women's fortunes varied. Among the aristocracy, women occasionally gained access to land and power, especially in the absence of male heirs. A few women even exercised the prerogatives of lords and monarchs. In far more numerous instances, however, widows were forced into new marriages or otherwise taken advantage of, and court records show women protecting themselves through the legal system, which, however, was still predominantly a man's world. During these centuries it has been accurately stated that > even the most privileged European women would continue to live in a world in which they acquired power through accident of circumstance, not by equal right or design, where they held that power only because it suited the needs of the male warrior and landed elite. n3

Even when economic prosperity opened many new opportunities in the later Middle Ages, women continued to be kept under the "protection" of men who strengthened their role as "providers." Women remained deprived of access to many rights of citizenship, to legal personality outside of their family, to specialized vocational or professional training and rights of entry. Men controlled and usually excluded women from the guilds, the academies, the universities, patronage and licensing. Women were not readmitted to the arts and medicine until the 19th century.

Even when education became more widely available for women, a girls' curriculum distinct from boys' schooling tended to reinforce women in their traditional roles and to affirm the customary negative attitudes about women's nature.

Maintenance of women's traditional status was threatened by new attitudes beginning with the Age of Enlightenment and with the advent of more general prosperity thereafter. During this period, law became a vehicle for continuing the gender repression. Restrictive laws, expressed in the rubric of protection, confirmed women as legal minors, under the guardianship of fathers and husbands. A wife's wages, inheritance and property typically belonged to her husband. The maintenance of those protective laws for the measure of economic security they may ensure to women had been debated among women: the laws seemed patronizing to some, while to others they were a crucial "safety net" for working-class women.

The possibility of entry into the professions, the right to vote, and civil equality for women were measures mostly delayed until the 20th century. However, entry into the modern labor force, hastened during wartimes, was inhibited or thrust backward by lower pay scales for the same work, and by widespread admonitions for women to return to their home environments once the crisis times were past and the men returned to the civilian work force. Meanwhile, women made progress in obtaining the formal rights to control of property, public education, and child custody.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The general outline and documentation for this summary may be found in Bonnie S. Anderson & Judith P. Zinsser, A History of Their Own 2 vols. (New York: Harper & Row 1988, 1989).

(n2)Footnote 2. Bonnie S. Anderson & Judith P. Zinsser, A History of Their Own 67-69, 77-79. (New York: Harper & Row 1988)

(n3)Footnote 3. Id. at 331.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 15.03

AUTHOR: 17 Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 15.03 The Elusive Neutrality of Married Women's Property Acts.

Under the early common law, a married woman's identity was submerged in her husband's identity, and he became the absolute owner of her personal property and the effective owner of her real property. The husband, in return, was required to assume full responsibility for support of his wife, and to be fully liable for her debts and misconduct, before and during the marriage. If the husband predeceased his wife, her property rights were defined by and limited to the dower rights.

Under the Married Women's Property Acts enacted by most American states during the 19th century, women obtained the right to own their own property as well as full legal control over the property. This theoretical parity with their husbands was often compromised by the tradition that husbands formally held title to and controlled most marital property, anyway. Even the laws establishing ownership and control of property in that spouse who obtained or earned it had little effect in the majority of households, where the husband was the principal income provider.

A fairly typical older statutory scheme for ensuring women's property rights, attempting to be both neutral and protective, is as follows:

§ 30-2-1 Wife's rights in property -- Liability for husband's debts.

Real and personal estate of every female acquired before marriage, and all property to which she may afterwards become entitled by purchase, gift, grant, inheritance, bequest or devise, shall be and remain the estate and property of such female, and shall not be liable for the debts, obligations or engagements of her husband, and may be conveyed, devised or bequeathed by her as if she were unmarried.

§ 30-2-2 Wife's right to contract, sue or be sued.

Contracts may be made by a wife, and liabilities incurred and enforced by or against her, to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried.

§ 30-2-3 Conveyances between husband and wife.

A conveyance, transfer or lien executed by either husband or wife to or in favor of the other shall be valid to the same extent as between other persons.

§ 30-2-4 Wife's right to wages -- Actions for personal injury.

A wife may receive the wages for her personal labor, maintain an action therefor in her own name and hold the same in her own right, any may prosecute and defend all actions for the preservation and protection of her rights and property as if unmarried. There shall be no right of recovery by the husband on account of personal injury or wrong to his wife, or for expenses connected therewith, but the wife may recover against a third person for such injury or wrong as if unmarried, and such recovery shall include expenses of medical treatment and other expenses paid or assumed by the husband.

§ 30-2-5 Separate debts.

(1) Neither spouse is personally liable for the separate debts, obligations, or liabilities of the other:

(a) contracted or incurred before marriage;

(b) contracted or incurred before marriage, except family expenses as provided in § 30-2-9;

(c) contracted or incurred after divorce or an order for separate maintenance under this title; or

(d) ordered by the court to be paid by the other spouse under § 30-3-5 or 30-4-3 and not in conflict with § 15-4-6.5.

(2) The wages, earnings, property, rents, or other income of one spouse may not be reached by a creditor of the other spouse to satisfy a debt, obligation, or liability of the other spouse, as described under Subsection (1).

§ 30-2-6 Actions based on property rights.

Should the husband or wife obtain possession or control of property belonging to the other before or after marriage, the owner of the property may maintain an action therefor, or for any right growing out of the same, in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were unmarried.

§ 30-2-7 Husband's liability for wife's torts.

For civil injuries committed by a married woman damages may be recovered from her alone, and her husband shall not be liable therefore, except in cases where he would be jointly liable with her if the marriage did not exist.

§ 30-2-8 Agency between husband and wife.

A husband or wife may constitute the other his or her attorney in fact to control and dispose of his or her property for their mutual benefit or otherwise, and may revoke the appointment the same as other persons.

§ 30-2-9 Family expenses -- Joint and several liability.

The expenses of the family and the education of the children are chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife or of either of them, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly.

§ 30-2-10 Homestead rights -- Custody of children.

Neither the husband nor wife can remove the other or their children from the homestead without the consent of the other, unless the owner of the property shall in good faith provide another homestead suitable to the condition in life of the family; and if a husband or wife abandons his or her spouse, that spouse is entitled to the custody of the minor children, unless a court of competent jurisdiction shall otherwise direct. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 4. Utah Code Ann. §§ 30-2-1 to 30-2-10.

189 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 15.04

AUTHOR: 17 Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 15.04 Some Current Issues in Women's Property Rights.

With some of the major barriers removed from women's property rights, more attention has been paid to achieving full equality in a number of individual areas where progress has been restrained by traditions of subordination and misogyny. A mere sampling of such issues shows that many relate directly to property rights:

Liberalized divorce laws combined with uneven progress toward equal distribution of marital assets upon divorce have left a hugely disproportionate number of poverty-stricken families headed by single women.

In addition to the limitations of lower income, women remain excluded from decent housing in far too many situations, usually because they encounter discrimination on account of being women or single parents, or in applications for credit.

Succession laws, especially the rights of widows to inherit deceased husbands' property, have developed unevenly.

Married women's property rights, even while both partners are still living, have not reached full parity. Issues still exist in matters of management and control of property, vulnerability to spouses' creditors, and other matters.

Some have theorized that forms of discourse favored by women, such as a cooperative style in negotiation, leave them at a disadvantage in situations dominated by or arbitrarily favoring a more aggressive male ethic.

Abolition of common law marriage may ultimately work to the disadvantage of women involved in such unions.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 15 THE EMERGENCE OF PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

2-15 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 15.05

Supp. to § 15.05 Bibliography

[Go To Main]

Add to Books:

Basu, Srimati. She Comes to Take Her Rights: Indian Women, Property, and Propriety. Albany, NY: State University of New York press, 1999.

Bonfield, Lloyd (ed). Marriage, Property and Succession (1992) (see especially chapter by Lloyd Bonfield, "Property Settlements on Marriage in England from the Anglo-Saxons to the Mid-Eighteenth Century").

Craik, Elizabeth, ed., Marriage and Property: Women and Marital Customs in History. Aberdeen: Aberdeen University Press, 1991.

Renee Giovarelli, "Customary Law, Household Distribution of Wealth, and Women's Rights to Land and Property," 4 Seattle J. for Soc. Just. 801 (Spring/Summer 2006).

Dickenson, Donna. Property, Women, and Politics: Subject or Objects? New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press,1997.

Erickson, Amy Louise. Women and Property in Early Modern England. New York: Routledge, 1993.

Howell, Martha C. The Marriage Exchange: Property, Social Place, and Gender in Cities of the Low Countries, 1300-1550. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1998.

London, April. Women and Property in the Eighteenth-Century English Novel. Cambridge, U.K.; New York: Cambridge University Press, 1999.

Maschke, Karen J. Women and the American Legal Order. New York: Garland Pub., 1997.

Merlo, Alida V. Women, Law, and Social Control. Boston: Allyn and Bacon, 1995.

Plane, Ann Marie. Colonial Intimacies: Indian Marriage in Early New England (2000).

Wright, Nancy E., Margaret W. Ferguson and A. R. Buck. Women, Property, and the Letters of the Law in Early Modern England (2004).

Add to Articles:

Banks, Taunya Lovell. "Dangerous Woman: Elizabeth Key's Freedom Suit-Subjecthood and Racialized Identity in Seventeenth Century Colonial Virginia," 41 Akron L. Rev. 799 (2008).

Barbo, Julie Anne note "Ablamis v. Roper: Preemption of the Nonemployee Spouse's Community Property Rights in Erisa Pension Plans." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 49 (1992) 1085.

Bernier, Barbara. "Assimilation or Liberation: Post-Modern American Women-Speech and Property Law," 9 Roger Williams U. L. Rev. 521 (Spring 2004).

Bruch, Carol S. "Protecting the Rights of Spouses in Intact Marriages: the 1987 California Community Property Reform and Why It Was So Hard to Get." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 731.

Crosswhite, Anastasia B. "Women and Land: Aristocratic Ownership of Property in Early Modern England," 77 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1119 (October, 2002).

Davenport, Erin P. "Idealized into Powerlessness: How a Judicial Order in Nebraska v. Safi Could Send Women's Rights Back to Colonial America," 12 U. Pa. J. L. & Soc. Change 1 (2008-2009).

Deere, Carmen Diana. "Married Women's Property Rights as Human Rights: The Latin American Contribution," Fla. J. Int'l L. Vol. 17 (March, 2005) 101.

Dussias, Allison M. "Squaw Drudges, Farm Wives, and the Dann Sisters' Last Stand: American Indian Women's Resistance to Domestication and the Denial of Their Property Rights," 77 N.C. L. Rev. 637 (Jan., 1999).

Ellis, Alton Tharis. "Mars Area School District v. United Presbyterian Women's Association: the Commonwealth Court Holds that a Residential Facility for Delinquent Youth Was a Purely Public Charity Entitled to Real Property Tax Exemption." Widener J. Pub. L. Vol. 7 (1998) 783.

Ely, James W. Book Review: "In the Eyes of the Law: Women, Marriage, and Property in Nineteenth Century New York" UCLA L. Rev. Vol. 31 (1983) 294.

Ghosh, Shubha. "Property Rules, Liability Rules, and Termination Rights: a Fresh Look at the Employment at Will Debate with Applications to Franchising and Family Law." Or. L. Rev. Vol. 75 (1996) 969.

Renee Giovarelli, "Customary Law, Household Distribution of Wealth, and Women's Rights to Land and Property," 4

Seattle J. for Soc. Just. 801 (Spring/Summer 2006).

Hagen, Kara. "An Essay on Women and Intellectual Property Law: The Challenges Faced by Female Attorneys Pursuing Careers in Intellectual Property," 15 Santa Clara Computer & High Tech. L. J. 139 (Jan., 1999).

Halder, Debarati and K. Jaishankar. "Property Rights of Hindu Women: A Feminist Review of Succession Laws of Ancient, Medieval, and Modern India," 24 J.L. & Religion 663 (2008-2009).

Halewood, Peter. "Law's Bodies: Disembodiment and the Structure of Liberal Property Rights." Iowa L. Rev. Vol. 81 (1996) 1331.

Hargrave, Lee. "Community Property Consideration in Law Suits by and Against Spouses." La. L. Rev. Vol. 57 (1997) 439.

Henrysson, Elin, and Sandra F. Joireman. "On the Edge of the Law: Women's Property Rights and Dispute Resolution in Kisii, Kenya," 43 Law & Soc'y Rev. 39 (March 2009).

Y. O. Jansen, "Can Post-Colonial States Successfully Unify a Plural (Legal) Society?" 16 Widener L.J. 71 (2006).

Kaplan, Dana V. "Women of the West: The Evolution of Marital Property Laws in the Southwestern United States and Their Effect on Mexican-American Women," Women's Rts. L. Rep. Vol. 26 (Summer 2005) 139.

Kurshan, Leslie. "Rethinking Property Rights as Human Rights: Acquiring Equal Property Rights for Women Using International Human Rights Treaties." Am. U.J. Gender Soc. Policy & L. Vol. 8 (2000) 353.

Lee, Janice A. "Family Law of the Two Chinas: a Comparative Look at the Rights of Married Women in the People's Republic of China and the Republic of China." Cardozo J. Intl & Comp. L. Vol. 5 (1997) 217.

Liebesmann, Yvette Joy. No Guarantees: Lessons from the Property Rights Gained and Lost by Married Women in Two American Colonies, 27 Women's Rts. L. Rep. 181 (Summer 2006).

Little, Sarah Miller. "A Woman of Property: From Being It to Controlling It: A Bicentennial Perspective on Women and Ohio Property Law, 1803 to 2003," Hastings Women's L.J. Vol. 16 (Summer 2005) 177.

Mark Douglas McGarvie, "Transforming Society Through Law: St. George Tucker, Women's Property Rights, and an Active Republican Judiciary," 47 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 1393 (February, 2006).

McCauliff, C.M.A. "The Medieval Origin of the Doctrine of Estates in Land: Substantive Property Law, Family Considerations, and the Interests of Women, 66 Tul. L. Rev. 919 (March, 1992).

McCormack, Wayne. "Property and Liberty--Institutional Competence and the Functions of Rights." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 51 (1994) 1.

McGarvie, Mark Douglas. "Transforming Society Through Law: St. George Tucker, Women's Property Rights, and an Active Republican Judiciary," Wm. & Mary L. Rev. Vol. 47 (February, 2006) 1393.

Murphy, Richard S. "Property Rights in Personal Information: an Economic Defense of Privacy." Geo. L.J. Vol. 84 (1996) 2381.

Nyamu, Celestine. "Constitutional Barriers to Challenging Women's Inequality in Family Property Arrangements," 94

Am. Soc'y. Inte'l L. Proc. 289 (April, 2000).

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Conflict of Laws and Marital Property Rights." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1987) 1255.

Parr, Gavin M, Student Author, "What Is a 'Meretricious Relationship'?: an Analysis of Cohabitant Property Rights Under Connell v. Francisco." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 74 (1999) 1243.

Paulsen, James W. "Community Property and the Early American Women's Rights Movement: The Texas Connection," 32 Idaho L. Rev. 641 (1996).

Pruitt, Lisa R. "On the Chastity of Women All Property in the World Depends': Injury from Sexual Slander in the Nineteenth Century," Ind. L.J. Vol. 78 (Fall, 2003) 965.

Ranney, Joseph A. "Anglicans, Merchants, and Feminists: a Comparative Study of the Evolution of Married Women's Rights in Virginia, New York, and Wisconsin." Wm. & Mary J. Women & L. Vol. 6 (Spring 2000) 493.

Ricks, Sarah. "The New French Abortion Pill: The Moral Property of Women," 1 Yale J. L. & Feminism 75 (Spring, 1989).

Rose, Carol M. "Left Brain, Right Brain and History in the New Law and Economics of Property." Or. L. Rev. Vol. 79 (2000) 479.

Rose, Carol M. "Women and Property: Gaining and Losing Ground," 78 Va. L. Rev. 423 (March, 1992).

Smith, Bea Ann. "Why the Community Property System Fails Divorced Women and Children," 7 Tex. J. Women & L. 135 (Spring, 1998).

Sticklor, Marilyn L. "Historical Review of the Rights of Husband and Wife in Each Other's Property." CROCII MA-CLE 825 (Main Handbook and Supplement) Massachusetts Continuing Legal Education Inc, 1997 Crocker's Notes on Common Forms, Eighth Volume II Chapter 32.

Ward, Kathleen A. Before and After the White Man: Indian Women, Property, Progress, and Power, 6 Conn. Pub. Int. L.J. 245 (Summer, 2007) .

Williams, Joan C. "Married Women and Property" Va. J. Soc. Policy & L. Vol. 1 (1994) 383.

Zayac, Sandra R. Zagier and Robert A. Zayac, Jr. "Georgia's Married Women's Property Act: An Effective Challenge to Coverture," Tex. J. Women & L. Vol. 15 (Fall 2005) 81.

Zelenak, Lawrence. Book Review: "Tax and the Married Woman." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 70 (1997) 1021.

Add to Annotations:

Annotation, Accrued Vacation, Holiday Time, and Sick Leave as Marital or Separate Property, 78 A.L.R.4th 1107 (1990) .

Annotation, Copyright, Patent, or Other Intellectual Property as Marital Property for Purposes of Alimony, Support, or Divorce Settlement, 80 A.L.R.5th 487 (2000) .

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Effect of Court Prohibiting Sale or Transfer of Property on Party's Right to Change Beneficiary of Insurance Policy, 68 A.L.R.4th 929 (1989) .

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Worker's Compensation Benefits as Marital Property Subject to Distribution, 30 A.L.R.5th 139 (1995) .

Annotation, Enforceability of Premarital Agreements Governing Support or Property Rights upon Divorce or Separation as Affected by Circumstances Surrounding Execution Modern Status, 53 A.L.R.4th 85 (1987) .

Annotation, Forfeitability of Property Held in Marital Estate Under Uniform Controlled Substances Act or Similar Statute, 84 A.L.R.4th 620 (1991) .

Annotation, Property Rights Arising from Relationship of Couple Cohabiting without Marriage, 69 A.L.R.5th 219 (1999) .

Annotation, Spouse's Dissipation of Marital Assets Prior to Divorce as Factor in Divorce Courts Determination of Property Division, 41 A.L.R.4th 416 (1985) .

Annotation, Validity and Effect of One Spouse's Conveyance to Other Spouse of Interest in Property Held as Estate by the Entireties, 18 A.L.R.5th 230 (1994) .

191 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 16.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.syn Synopsis to Chapter 16: PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

§ 16.01 Introduction.

§ 16.02 Identifying Contradictions in Liberal Legal Thought.

S.C. Code Ann. §§ 27-5Pervasiveness of Those Contradictions in Legal Controversy.

§ 16.04 Showing of a Privileged Term in the Contradictory Impulses.

§ 16.05 Showing that the Privileged Choices Describe a Right-wing, Quasi-libertarian Order.

Utah Code Ann. § 78-41-1Critical Legal Studies Principles that May Impact on Property Law.

§ 16.06(a) Indeterminacy.

§ 16.06(b) Contradiction.

§ 16.06(c) Antiformalism.

§ 16.06(d) Marginality

§ 16.06(e) Rights.

§ 16.06(f) Deviation.

§ 16.07 Property Law Examples of Critical Legal Studies Method.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School

Brigham Young University

192 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.01 Introduction.

The rather limited objective of this small chapter is to describe unique perspectives on property rights found in the Critical Legal Studies philosophy or movement (C.L.S.), and to provide that description in a form that taxes neither the comprehension nor the patience of the ordinary reader. This objective cannot really be accomplished, however, because there is probably no coherent and comprehensive description of the C.L.S. views on property rights. What must suffice here, then, is to describe C.L.S. method and basic tenets in a way that may illuminate their application to property issues. Given those constraints, this chapter is therefore brief and decidedly tilted toward the descriptive, rather than the analytical. This chapter is also dominated by text quoted from leading C.L.S. writers, rather than paraphrases, as such a text reveals the difficulties associated with C.L.S. writings generally.

Another severe limitation on a chapter of this nature is the fact that the dialogue over C.L.S. tenets has been carried on at a highly abstract and intellectual level, with only scant attention given to the impact of these matters on the affairs of the workaday legal profession. The dialogue is further clouded by being frequently carried on in tones of anger and contempt for opponents, with competing points of view given summary dismissals rather than truly thoughtful critique. In the words of one of the combatants:

> In the recent wave of commentary, unfortunately, hostile gut reactions have replaced guarded respectful responses; passionate political and cultural evaluations have supplanted balanced intellectual assessments. n1

Almost all of the participants are guilty of practicing that certain type of arrogance which assumes the truthfulness of their own underlying philosophies and necessarily, the errors of their opponents' own starting positions.

The result of all of this is that critiques and counter-critiques of property law doctrines or their underlying policies and philosophies are virtually non-existent in the C.L.S.-related literature, and can be derived only incidentally from the more general critiques of societal norms and structures. n2 Indeed, it has been aptly stated that, "One must wait and see whether the theory evolves an adequate interpretation of the world which is capable of shaping a new social reality." n3

Implicit in the term "critical legal studies" is the announcement of a method, and indeed C.L.S. embodies an idiosyncratic method of identifying and analyzing issues its adherents deem important. The following somewhat lengthy description of C.L.S. methodology is probably still the most concise version available.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Cornel West, CLS and a Liberal Critic, 97 Yale L.J. 757-758 (1988).

(n2)Footnote 2. Occasionally, a specific debate will break out over property-related philosophical positions, such as the C.L.S condemnation of Richard A. Epstein, Takings: Private Property and the Power of Eminent Domain Cambridge MA: Harvard University Press (1985), reviewed by Mark Kelman in Taking Takings Seriously: An Essay for Centrists, 74 Calif. L. Rev. 1829 (1986).

(n3)Footnote 3. S. E. Salako, A Critical Legal Study of Property in Land, 13 Liverpool L. Rev. 3 (1991).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.02 Identifying Contradictions in Liberal Legal Thought.

First, the Critics attempted to identify a contradiction in liberal legal thought, a set of paired rhetorical arguments that both resolve cases in opposite, incompatible ways and correspond to distinct visions of human nature and human fulfillment... [T]hree central contradictions in liberal thought have been identified in the C.L.S. writing: (1) the contradiction between a commitment to mechanically applicable rules as the appropriate form for resolving disputes (thought to be associated in complex ways with the political tradition of self-reliance and individualism) and a commitment to situation-sensitive, ad hoc standards (thought to correspond to a commitment to sharing and altruism); (2) the contradiction between a commitment to the traditional liberal notion that values or desires are arbitrary, subjective, individual, and individuating while facts or reasons are objective and universal and a commitment to the ideal that we can "know" social and ethical truths objectively (through objective knowledge of true human nature) or to the hope that one can transcend the usual distinction between subjective and objective in seeking moral truth; and (3) the contradiction between a commitment to an intentionalistic discourse, in which human action is seen as the product of a self-determining individual will, and deterministic discourse, in which the activity of nominal subjects merits neither respect nor condemnation because it is simply deemed the expected outcome of existing structures.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.03 Pervasiveness of Those Contradictions in Legal Controversy.

Second, the Critics tried to demonstrate that each of the contradictions is utterly pervasive in legal controversy, even in cases where practice is so settled that we nearly invariably forget that the repressed contradictory impulse could govern the decision at issue. These impulses are ready to destabilize settled practice should we ever be forced to articulate or ground that practice. There are, in short, no easy cases, though there may be ones whose outcomes are perfectly predictable.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.04 Showing of a Privileged Term in the Contradictory Impulses.

Third, Critics have attempted to show that mainstream thought invariably treats one term in each set of contradictory impulses as privileged in three distinct senses. The privileged term is presumptively entitled as a normative matter to govern disputes; it is simply assumed, as a descriptive matter, to govern the bulk of situations; and most subtly, but perhaps most significantly, departures from the purportedly dominant norm, even if they are obviously frequent, are treated as exceptional, in need of special justification, a bit chaotic. In essence, [it is argued] that liberal legal discourse most strongly purports to be committed to and to exceptionalize departures from both individualism and the Rule of Law. It is also committed to the ideal that subjective value choices are the only arbiter of the good, at least in the abstract sense that the general theory of law and the state is one in which the state seeks not to further particular life plans but to facilitate people's fulfilling diverse plans (although it would be misleading to believe that all liberal thinkers presume that the correct answer to a legal problem is the one consistent with the notion that values are subjective, in the same way they presume that the rule form should govern). Liberalism also privileges an intentionalist discourse that both presumes to be able to explain why we can legitimately reward and blame in the vast bulk of cases and purports to provide a reasonable description of the so-called private world (that governed by contract rather than state action beyond enforcement of contract), which is presumptively deemed to reflect the uncoerced intentions of individuals. Finally, liberalism privileges an uncritical respect for the announced choices of subjects -- uncritical both in the sense that the subject is viewed as unambivalent enough that we need not scrutinize particular choices for consistency with a broader life plan and in the sense that pure paternalism, the possibility that the subject has simply chosen badly, is ruled out.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.05 Showing that the Privileged Choices Describe a Right-wing, Quasi-libertarian Order.

> Fourth, the Critics note that, closely examined, the "privileged" impulses describe the program of a remarkably right-wing, quasi-libertarian order... Another implication ... is that one of the foremost, if unintentional, political accomplishments of C.L.S. has been to arm left liberals against more politically conservative ones; by resuscitating the un-privileged positions, by noting the degree to which they remain pervasive in the face of complex efforts to repress their presence, C.L.S. adherents may demonstrate that the left liberal's instincts are better grounded in the cultural tradition of liberalism in which they operate than they sometimes seem aware of themselves. n4

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 4. Mark Kelman, A Guide to Critical Legal Studies 3-6 (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press 1987).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.06 Critical Legal Studies Principles that May Impact on Property Law.

Several principles announced in the fundamental C.L.S. literature n5 could be seen as having potential impact on the law of property. These have been best articulated for a British legal audience, but are applicable to the American legal system as well.

§ 16.06(a) Indeterminacy.

[The principle of indeterminacy is] that authoritative legal materials such as statutes, cases and legal ideas do not "embody and sustain a defensible scheme of human association"; that whereas legal liberalism presupposes impersonal purposes, policies and principles founded on a moral and practical order, the legal materials themselves are the reflex of the foundational politics which is responsible for choosing the social type, that is market economy. n6

§ 16.06(b) Contradiction.

[T]he principle of contradiction ... rejects the view that legal doctrine or legal analysis contains a single, coherent and justifiable view of human relations. For Unger, our society is "shot through with irreconcilable ideological commitments." A critical analysis of the law of property in land reveals principles and counterprinciples. On the one hand, the first principle is the right to enter or refuse to enter into a contract; in short, freedom of contract. The principles of privilege ... and assignability represent, according to Unger, the disharmony within the first principle. On the other hand, there are counterprinciples such as promissory estoppel, the doctrine which affirms an obligation to answer for another's justified reliance on one's own promises -- the juridical basis for the decision on estoppel licence; restitution for unjust benefit or quasi-contract ...; and agreements of domestic nature or those binding in honour only which are not contractual "lest by doing so it destroy their particular communal quality." Pursuing this theme further, Unger notes that, while family bargains are disfavoured, family gifts may be encouraged but he is quick to notice the hostility towards donative transactions undermining family duties (for example, a married man's gift to his mistress and mother of his child by way of a secret trust) and to contrast this with the solicitude that may be shown towards interfamilial donation such as a gift by a father to his child. Two main principles -- free-enterprise and communitarianism -- have dominated legal liberalism as Unger in his characteristic bluntness succinctly puts it:

Just as classical contract theory depicts the bargain as the beneficial creature of anticommunal self-interest, it sees the gift as an instrument of either community-preserving generosity or community-destroying circumvention of the law. n7

§ 16.06(c) Antiformalism.

The third principle is the principle of antiformalism which rejects the view that there is a distinct form of legal reasoning which can be applied to legal materials by neutral specialists. In Dworkin's jurisprudence, there is only "one right answer" which stems from the sociological premise that there is a shared set of value commitments in any political community -- a view strenuously rejected by critical legal scholars who argue that rights are not merely controversial but rather exemplify the irreconcilable ideological commitments. n8

§ 16.06(d) Marginality

The fourth principle is the principle of marginality which states there is no reason to believe that law is often or frequently a decisive factor in human behavior. According to Unger:

All contemporary versions of democratic ideal, however, share a minimal core: the state must not fall permanently hostage to a faction, however broadly in terms faction may be defined, so as to include social classes, segments of the workforce, parties of opinion, or any other stable collective category... The established forms of economic and political organization enable relatively small groups of people to control the basic terms of collective prosperity by making the crucial investment decisions. Moreover, even the most distant threat of reform can be met by immediate response of disinvestment and capital flight, with their signal of economic crisis and electoral unpopularity. n9

§ 16.06(e) Rights.

The fifth principle is the principle of rights. Unlike Hohfeld, Unger regards a right not as absolute, that is, implying a correlative duty, but as relative:

a loaded gun that the rightholder may shoot at will in his corner of town. Outside that corner the other licensed gunmen may shoot him down.

This principle is not only a tool of legal theorising but also a counsel of prudence... Unger's principle of right depends on a system of rights, namely, immunity rights (establishing absolute claim of the individual to security against another individual, the state or other organisation), destabilisation rights (claims "to the disruption of established institutions and forms of social practice that have contributed to the very kind of crystallised plan of social hierarchy"), market rights representing claims to divisible portions of social capital and solidarity rights giving "legal force to many of the expectations that arise from the relations of mutual reliance and vulnerability that have neither been fully articulated by the will nor unilaterally constructed by the state." n10

§ 16.06(f) Deviation.

Finally, we must consider Unger's deviationist doctrine or the sixth principle (and the most controversial) which is to be applied whenever there are conflicts between principles and counterprinciples in a substantive law. According to him, the disharmonies must be explored to disclose "broader contests among prescriptive conceptions of society." n11

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 5. See especially, Roberto Mangabeira Unger, The Critical Legal Studies Movement, 96 Harv. L. Rev. 563 (1983).

(n2)Footnote 6. S. E. Salako, A Critical Legal Study of Property in Land, 13 Liverpool L. Rev. 4 (1991).

(n3)Footnote 7. Id. at 4-5.

(n4)Footnote 8. Id. at 5-6.

(n5)Footnote 9. Id. at 6.

(n6)Footnote 10. Id. at 6-7.

(n7)Footnote 11. Id. at 7.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 16.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 16.07 Property Law Examples of Critical Legal Studies Method.

Although no systematic or comprehensive criticism of property law has been formulated by C.L.S. writers, occasionally property law examples are used to illustrate some point of C.L.S. method or thought. For instance, the following discussion was used to illuminate the distinctions between a legal regime based on rules and that which is more "situationally sensitive":

> Often the pervasiveness of the rules-standards dilemma in property law is obscured for a reason that may seem formalistic, historically quirky: the rule position is associated with the traditional common law domain, the standards position with the traditional equity domain. To the extent that we believe that we are dealing with distinct doctrines rather than doctrines that address the same underlying factual disputes, we may not see the dilemma ... In property, the legal tradition is to use rules to promote full-blown, unfettered alienability of each generation's holding, even when a paternalistic settlor wanted to restrict the grantee's control. Attempts to limit full-scale alienability of property were simply struck down regardless of reasonableness or of the probability that alienability would actually be seriously impaired. The mechanical imposition of the rule against restraints on alienation, the Rule against Perpetuities, or the doctrine of the destructibility of contingent remainders all result in ensuring that someone will hold fully and freely alienable fee property as soon as possible ...
>
> ... Take the series of disputes that engrossed the Supreme Court for over a decade on the degree to which shopping center owners could exclude non-disruptive political pickets and speakers. In a sense, the dispute can most profitably be seen as an ongoing battle between those who unconsciously argued that the property ownership category should be rulelike, general, and abstract rather than situationally sensitive and those who unconsciously argued that the speech rights category must be rulelike. On the one hand, proponents of the right to exclude analogize the shopping center owner to the homeowner, thus implicitly analogizing kicking out a picket to throwing a door-to-door missionary out of one's living room, without detailed inquiry into the situational distinctions between the cases. Ownership is ownership; a rule is a rule. On the other hand, proponents of access often seemed to treat the ban on speaking as if it were invariably a total ban on effective communication, with relatively little regard to alternative outlets (at least until they were forced to defend a shrinking core of shopping center speech once the Court's majority had accepted some clear property-owner rights to ban speech). Bans on > speaking are bans on speaking; rules are rules. In a sense, any politically charged issued on ownership rights covertly but significantly shares some of this formal dimension; anytime one defends an owner's right to close or move a particular business, refuse to deal with a would-be buyer or worker for no reason or for "suspect" reasons, or make political contributions on the basis of an "analogy" with some other owner whose discretion to take such actions we want to protect, one is covertly arguing for the more rulelike form, against the possibility of increasingly situationally sensitive judgment. n12

Another comment shows how C.L.S. adherent view the interrelationship of property law and other areas of law:

> As the protection of property was extended during the century from the protection of a person's dominion over things to the protection of interests in value, it became clearer that property was simply a social creation, that since ownership was a "conclusion" rather than a premise to ground further argument, the distinction between (legitimate) distributive and (illegitimate) redistributive law was unsustainable. It may sound at least vaguely tenable to speak of protecting one's ownership of a thing without regard to the distributive consequences of that decision; but to speak of "protecting" some interest in a particular distributive share without acknowledging that as a distributive decision came to look infinitely harder. Likewise, the insuperable difficulty of defending the distinction between the domain of tort and the domain of damnum absque injuria (injury without remedy), as well as the difficulty of sustaining a belief that we had solved the causation problem (that is, we knew with scientific objectivity when and how much ostensible tortfeasors harmed victims), called into serious question the ideal of a non-distributive legal system in which all transfers were a function of private-sphere volition, either in mutual gain seeking (contract) or rectification of wrongdoing (tort). If we readily expand or contract the area of uncompensated damage causing within a formally identical system, in accord with our ever-shifting commitments to either self-reliance or sharing, and/or our shifting beliefs about encouraging each of us to protect himself versus the need to induce people to avoid damaging others, we have hardly routinized legal practice. n13

As will be readily noted from even a first reading, these comments are neither intended to be, nor do they function as an orderly description of C.L.S. views on property. Indeed, it is uncertain whether they are an orderly description of anything. However, that is not to say that the C.L.S. approach is inapplicable to ordinary cases in the legal system. A C.L.S. criticism of steel plant closings in Ohio, and a recommended alternative approach grounded in the C.L.S. view of property rights have been expounded. n14

However, the notion of the indeterminacy of legal principles as advanced in C.L.S. thinking works against any systematic exposition of property law according to C.L.S.. Even in the leading American property law casebook, the authors note that a comment to the effect that "property is inescapably relational" merely suggests a C.L.S. perspective on property, but can be no more specific because of vagueness within C.L.S. itself:

> Commonly called a movement, C.L.S. is nevertheless extraordinarily heterogeneous in terms of the points of view represented by its affiliates. If there is a common denominator, it is leftist disenchantment with existing social and legal institutions, with liberal "legalism," and with the idea that law transcends politics and is or can be objective or politically neutral. Most Critics essentially regard as empty the distinction between the "public" realm of coercive sovereign authority vested in government and the "private" realm of individual autonomy and voluntary transactions. They reject the notion that legal principles can be neutral and argue that all legal principles are indeterminate, such that the choices of legal decisionmakers can never truly be based on them. Choices are mere exercises of power and ideology, justified in terms that invariably beg central questions. n15

In conclusion, it is perhaps inherent in the C.L.S. movement that more energy is given to a critique of the present state of affairs than to promotion of a new, improved model:

C.L.S. is thus the form that modernism takes in legal thought. Like modernism in philosophy and sociology, it displaces settled understandings, insisting that whatever we have is something we create and recreate daily. As a form of modernism, C.L.S. argues that our lives are structured by institutions that we create and sustain, and that our lives have no meaning outside those institutions and the processes by which we create them -- and create ourselves. So, in part, the C.L.S. program is justified in the way all modernist programs are: The program consists of shattering congealed forms of life by showing that they have no particular integrity. And whatever makes that demonstration effective -- utopian yearnings, close analysis of legal texts, concrete proposals -- is part of the program. n16

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 12. Mark Kelman, A Guide to Critical Legal Studies 38-40 (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press 1987).

(n2)Footnote 13. Id. at 259-260.

(n3)Footnote 14. 14. Joseph William Singer, The Reliance Interest in Property," 40 Stanford L. Rev. 614 (1988).

(n4)Footnote 15. Jesse Dukeminier & James E. Krier, Property 18 (3d ed. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 1993).

(n5)Footnote 16. Mark Tushnet, Critical Legal Studies: An Introduction to its Origins and Underpinnings, 36 J. of Legal Education 505, 517 (1986).

199 of 199 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 16 PROPERTY RIGHTS FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CRITICAL LEGAL STUDIES

2-16 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 16.08

Supp. to § 16.08 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Books:

Austin, Arthur. The Empire Strikes Back: Outside and the Struggle over Legal Education. New York: New York University Press, 1998.

Bauman, Richard W. Critical Legal Studies: A Guide to the Literature. Boulder, Colo.: Westview Press, 1996. Thinking through the Body of the Law. Cheah, Pheng et al., Washington Square, N.Y.: New York University Press, 1996.

Boyle, James, ed. Critical Legal Studies. New York, NY: New York University Press, 1992.

Collier, Richard. Masculinity, Law, and the Family. London; New York: Routledge, 1995.

Farber, Daniel A. Beyond All Reason: the Radical Assault on Truth in American Law. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997

Gabel, Peter. "Critical Legal Studies as a Spiritual Practice," 36 Pepp. L. Rev. 515 (2009).

Hutchinson, Alan (ed.). Critical Legal Studies (1989).

Kearns, Thomas R., ed. Cultural Pluralism, Identity Politics, and the Law. Austin Sarat & Ann Arbor, Mich.: University of Michigan Press, 1999.

Kramer, Matthew H. Critical Legal Theory and the Challenge of Feminism: a Philosophical Reconception. Lanham, Md.: Rowman & Littlefield, 1995.

Martini, Martha Rice. Marx not Madison: The Crisis of American Legal Education. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1996.

Tiefenbrun, Susan, ed. Law and the Arts. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999.

Add to Articles:

Anderson, Jerry L. "Law School Enters the Matrix: Teaching Critical Legal Studies," J. Legal Educ. Vol. 54 (June, 2004) 201.

Audain, Linz. "Critical Legal Studies, Feminism, Law and Economics, and the Veil of Intellectual Tolerance: A Tentative Case for Cross-Jurisprudential Dialogue." Hofstra L. Rev. Vol. 20 (Summer 1992) 1017.

Batt, John. "American Legal Populism: A Jurisprudential and Historical Narrative, including Reflections on Critical Legal Studies." N. Ky. L. Rev. Vol.22 (1995) 651.

Berman, Nathaniel. "Against the Wrong and the Dead: A Genealogy of 'Left/MPM (Critical Legal Studies (Debut de Siecle): A Symposium on Duncan Kennedy's A Critique of Adjudication),' " 22 Cardozo L. Rev. 1005 (March, 2001).

Clark, Mary L. Treading on Hallowed Ground: Implications for Property Law and Critical Theory of Land Associated with Human Death and Burial, 94 Ky. L.J. 487 (2005-2006).

Cook, Anthony E. "Beyond Critical Legal Studies: the Reconstructive Theology of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 103 (1990) 985. Di Robilant, Anna. "The Art and Science of Critical Scholarship: Postmodernism and International Style in the Legal Architecture of Europe." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 75 (March, 2001) 1053.

Di Robilant, Anna. "The Art and Science of Critical Scholarship: Postmodernism and International Style in the Legal Architecture of Europe." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 75 (March, 2001) 1053.

Duff, David G. "A Private Property and Tax Policy in a Libertarian World: A Critical Review," 18 Can. J.L. & Juris. 23 (January, 2005)

Goodrich, Peter. "Sleeping with the Enemy: An Essay on the Politics of Critical Legal Studies in America." N.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (May 1993) 389.

Grant, Otis B. "Are the Indigent Too Poor for Bankruptcy? A Critical Legal Interpretation of the Theory of Fresh Start Within a Law and Economics Paradigm," 33 U. Tol. L. Rev. 773 (Summer 2002).

Heller, Michael A. "Critical Approaches to Property Institutions: Three Faces of Private Property," 70 Or. L. Rev. 417 (2000).

Iglesias, Elizabeth M. "Out of the Shadow: Marking Intersections in and between Asian Pacific American Critical Legal Scholarship and Latina/o Critical Legal Theory." B.C. Third World L.J. Vol. 19 (Fall 1998) 349.

Kellogg, Fredric R. "Legal Scholarship in the Temple of Doom: Pragmatism's Response to Critical Legal Studies." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 65 (Nov. 1990) 15.

Mitchell, Thomas W. A. "Destabilizing the Normalization of Rural Black Land Loss: A Critical Role for Legal Empiricism," 2005 Wis. L. Rev. 557

Orly Lobel, "The Paradox of Extralegal Activism: Critical Legal Consciousness and Transformative Politics," 120 Harv. L. Rev. 937 (February, 2007).

Macdonald, Roderick A. "Metaphors of Multiplicity: Civil Society, Regimes and Legal Pluralism." Ariz. J. Intl. & Comp. L. Vol. 15 (Winter 1998) 69.

Neacsu, E. Dana. "CLS Stands for Critical Legal Studies, if Anyone Remembers." J.L. & Policy Vol. 8 (2000) 415.

Purvis, Nigel. "Critical Legal Studies in Public International Law." Harv. Intl L.J. Vol. 32 (Winter 1991) 81.

Radin, Margaret Jane & Michelman, Frank. "Pragmatist and Poststructuralist Critical Legal Practice," U. Pa. L. Rev. Vol. 139 (1991) 1019.

Redding, Richard E, Book Review "Does Law Need any Analyst? Prospects for Lacanian Psychoanalysis in Law." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol 54 (1997) 1119.

Reed, O. Lee. "A 'Commonest' Manifesto: Property and the General Welfare," 46 Am. Bus. L.J. 103 (Spring, 2009).

Schlegel, John Henry. "Alan and I: of Community, Critical Legal Studies and All That." Buff. L. Rev. Vol. 44 (Fall 1996) 636.

Schottenstein, Noah M. "Of Process and Product: Kremen v. Cohen and the Consequences of Recognizing Property Rights in Domain Names," 14 Va. J.L. & Tech. 1 (Spring, 2009).

Schultz, Gregory G. "Statutory Deconstruction: An Examination of Critical Legal Studies in Context." Cumb. L. Rev. Vol. 26 (1995-1996) 459. Valdes, Francisco. "Insisting on Critical Theory in Legal Education: Making Do While Making Waves." Berkeley La Raza L.J. Vol. 12 (2001) 137. Valdes, Francisco. "Outsider Jurisprudence, Critical Pedagogy and Social Justice Activism: Marking the Stirrings of Critical Legal Education." Asian L.J. Vol. 10 (2003) 65.

Whitehead, Jason E. "From Criticism to Critique: Preserving the Radical Potential of Critical Legal Studies though a Reexamination of Frankfurt School Critical Theory." Fla. St. U. L Rev. Vol. 26 (Spring 1999) 701.

Wolcher, Louis E. "What We Do Not Doubt: A Critical Legal Perspective." Hastings L.J. Vol. 46 (1995) 1783.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 17.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.syn Synopsis to Chapter 17: FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442Overview of Modern Fee Simple Absolute.

§ 17.01(a) Brief History of the Fee Simple Absolute.

§ 17.01(b) The Concept of Seisin.

§ 17.01(c) Categories of Estates.

§ 17.01(c)(1) Determinable Estates.

§ 17.01(c)(2) Estates Subject to Condition Subsequent.

§ 17.01(c)(3) Estates Subject to Executory Limitation.

§ 17.01(d) Ambiguity and the Presumption Against Forfeitures.

§ 17.01(e) Eminent Domain.

470Concept of the Fee Simple.

§ 17.03 Development of the Fee Simple.

§ 17.04 The Power of Disposition as Essential to Fee Simple.

§ 17.05 Restrictions Against "Debasing a Fee."

§ 17.06 The Use of Words of Limitation to Create a Fee Simple.

§ 17.06(a) At Common Law.

§ 17.06(b) Common Law Exceptions to Required Use of Words of Limitation.

§ 17.06(c) Use of Words of Limitation in Trusts and Equitable Estates.

§ 17.06(d) Statutory Abolition of Required Use of Words of Limitation.

§ 17.07 The Modern Fee Simple Absolute.

Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.01 Overview of Modern Fee Simple Absolute.n1

[Go To Supp]

The estate that never ends but continues into infinity is the fee simple absolute. It is the highest form of ownership a person can have in real property because it has no restrictions on its use or enjoyment except those restrictions imposed by public policy for the common good.

The estate in fee simple absolute is transferred from one owner to another by any words that indicate the grantor's intent to make such a transfer. In times past, the phrase "and his heirs" was mandatory for a conveyance of an estate in fee simple absolute, as illustrated by the conveyance of property "to Arthur and his heirs." The words "and his heirs" gave no interest to Arthur's heirs; n2 they functioned simply as words of limitation to qualify or describe the estate. The words "to Arthur" gave the interest to Arthur and functioned as words of purchase, indicating the party actually holding the estate. Although words of limitation are still sometimes used in deeds conveying estates in fee simple absolute, n3 they are no longer necessary in most jurisdictions. n4 Where no words of limitation are used to define the estate, the nature of the estate devised may be determined by "the intention of the testator as manifested by the language of the will viewed in its entirety in the light of the circumstances surrounding the testator." n5

In Dennen v. Searle n6 the court deliberated over the common law rule (assumed to be in existence in Connecticut at the time) that "a deed running to a grantee without the use of the word "heirs" conveys only a life estate in the grantee." The court rejected this rule and held that "the mere omission of the word "heirs" in a grant in a deed is not sufficient to defeat an otherwise clearly expressed intent to create a fee, nor arbitrarily to reduce it to a life estate." The use of the word "absolutely" was found sufficient to show the intent for a fee simple interest.

On the other hand, "where an estate is given to a person generally, or indefinitely, with a power of disposition, it carries a fee," n7 and any limitation over is void as being repugnant to the rights of the first taker. This rule of repugnancy is a technical rule of construction that operates against the intent of the grantor. It has been seriously criticized and, in some jurisdictions, has been abrogated by statute. n8

In Fox v. Snow n9 the testatrix bequeathed to her husband "all of the money which I have on deposit at the [bank], however, any money which is in the said account at the time of my said husband's death, the said sum shall be held by my niece, Catherine King Fox, absolutely and forever." The court held that the gift over to Catherine was void because the bequest to the husband "was in general terms with an absolute power of disposal." The dissent opposed this holding on the ground that it defeated the plain intent of the testatrix in favor of "a technical rule of testamentary construction which gained seeming but altogether undeserved immortality from the opinion of Chancellor Kent in Jackson v. Robins."

§ 17.01(a) Brief History of the Fee Simple Absolute. n10

The use of the words "and his heirs" as words of limitation to define the fee simple estate finds its origin in feudal times. After William the Conqueror became king of England in 1066, he rewarded his Norman knights by seizing land from uncooperative Anglo-Saxons and parceling it out to his men as tenants-in-chief. In return, these tenants-in-chief provided fealty and services to the king. By 1086, there were around 1500 tenants-in-chief in England n11 whose holdings were all under the rules of feudal tenure. This development shaped the course of history in the area of estates and future interests.

Feudal services to the king might include defense of the king's castle, carrying the king's sword at coronation, providing a sword or a glove for the king for court ceremonies, holding masses, praying for his soul, or a fixed payment in money, kind, or labor, but the most important service to the king in the beginning was the provision of knights to help defend the land and engage in foreign wars. In order to provide as many knights as were agreed upon, the tenants-in-chief apportioned a part of their land through a process of subinfeudation to lesser tenants in exchange for services, such as the provision of men who would become knights in the king's service. These lesser tenants, in turn, subinfeudated smaller and smaller portions of their holdings to lesser and lesser tenants. The tenants at the bottom of the ladder, or tenants-in-demesne, n12 were usually the farmers. The tenants between these and the king were the mesne lords, each of whom had a lord above them and tenants below them.

The relationship between lord and tenant was cemented by a personal bond of fealty, and rights and duties depended more on status than on contract. The tenant who had a right to possession did not actually own the land held but had use of the holding for the duration of the tenant's life. The lord who granted the right to possession determined whether the estate in the holding would be passed on to an heir of the tenant. Since it was vitally important to maintain the expected services to the lord or king, the ability to provide a continuation of these expected services figured largely into the decision whether an heir would continue to have use of the land. In exchange for a continuation of services and an oath of fealty, the heir was granted the continued use of the holding for the duration of the heir's life.

By the 13th century, the heir was given an automatic right to inherit a tenancy if the heir paid a tax called a relief, and if the donor of the tenancy indicated the intent that the donee's land automatically would descend. This intent was specified in the conveyance by words "to [the donee] and his heirs." These words recognized the inheritability of the tenant's estate by the tenant's heirs without the approval of the lord. Tenants also were given the power to alienate their land by substituting other tenants, provided that they paid a fine for the alienation. (In such a case the heirs of the first tenant took no interest after the substitution of the second tenant.) These estates which were alienable and inheritable were called fees. Finally, in 1290 the statute Quia Emptores firmly established the principle of free alienation by eliminating subinfeudation of fees and permitting only the substitution of tenants without paying fines to the lord.

Estates thus became both alienable and inheritable if the proper words were used. To convey a fee rather than a life estate, the words "and his heirs" were absolutely essential in an inter vivos conveyance. Otherwise, it was construed that the grantor had conveyed only a life estate in the land and had not cut off his heir's interest in the property. This requirement did not exist in wills, however, since a fee simple could be devised by the mere manifestation of intent to give it in the will. Today, as noted earlier, the words "and his heirs" are no longer necessary to create a fee simple even in an inter vivos conveyance.

The English tenure system was transported to the American colonies and continued after the Revolution with the state as sovereign in place of the king. It all but vanished in later years as legislation was passed in most states abolishing tenure and declaring lands to be owned allodially. n13 However, during its slow decline, tenure has left an indelible mark on the more modern law of real property that has risen to take its place. Complexities that appear to have no explanation within modern law can probably be traced to a feudal motivation, and these complexities continue to haunt us today.

§ 17.01(b) The Concept of Seisin.

Seisin is an archaic concept distinct from the notion of title or ownership. It existed in feudal England to describe a tenant's possession: "The man who is seized is the man who is sitting on the land; when he was put in seisin he was set there and made to sit there." n14 This concept of seisin has little use today as a concept distinct from ownership, but continued references to this word justify a short explanation of its history.

In the 13th century, the concept of seisin was generally applied in connection with a real and actual possession. n15 By the 14th century, seisin came to signify a possession protected by an action of assize available in the secular courts to protect the freeholder. The holder of a chattel, such as a term of years or personal property, however, was required to pursue other remedies through the ecclesiastical courts. n16 An action in ejectment was available for leaseholds and an action in replevin for chattels personal. n17 By the beginning of the 15th century, the concept of seisin disappeared in actions concerning chattels. n18 Counts in replevin no longer contained the words uncore seisi after 1426; they began to employ the words uncore detient in 1443. n19 It was also wrong to speak of the termor as seised after the end of the 14th century, although Maitland cites one precedent in the Year Book of 1413 which contained the phrase. While seisin continued to develop as a unique product of English feudal land law in the common law courts, the concept of possession defined under the influence of the Roman civil law came to be applied in the ecclesiastical courts and the Court of Chancery. The area of testamentary gifts was originally within the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts and was the setting for the development of the law relating to chattels personal. In this area, Chancery assumed not only the jurisdiction but also the doctrines which had been developed under the influence of the canon or civil law. n20 The separation of the two concepts, seisin and possession, was one of the first major steps in the direction of distinguishing executory interests from present interests with possession postponed, as will be discussed in a later chapter. In most cases when the term seisin is used today it may be treated as synonymous with present ownership of a freehold.

§ 17.01(c) Categories of Estates.

Each of the three freehold estates may be created to terminate naturally or to be cut short by a condition subsequent. If there is no condition subsequent, the estates are called "fee simple absolute," "life estate," and "fee tail." If there is a condition subsequent, each of these three estates may fall into three different subcategories called "determinable," "subject to condition subsequent," and "subject to executory limitation." Thus, for example, if a fee simple estate is cut short by a condition subsequent in favor of another person, as in a conveyance "to A until A gets married, then to B," that fee simple in A is called a "fee simple subject to executory limitation."

§ 17.01(c)(1) Determinable Estates.

The three subcategories are distinguished by the form of the condition and by the type of person taking the future interest that follows the happening of the condition subsequent. An estate determinable is cut short by a condition subsequent that is durational and which cuts short the estate in favor of the grantor who created the estate. Thus, a conveyance by O "to A for as long as A remains unmarried, then to O," is a fee simple determinable; a conveyance by O "to A for life or until A gets married, then to O," is a life estate determinable. A condition is considered durational in form when it uses such words as "during," "until," "so long as," "as long as," and "while." Also, if the grantor otherwise shows the intent to create an estate determinable, the condition will be considered durational.

§ 17.01(c)(2) Estates Subject to Condition Subsequent.

An estate subject to condition subsequent is cut short in favor of the grantor who created the estate by two events: (1) The happening of a condition subsequent that is conditional and (2) re-entry by the grantor (or the grantor's successor in interest). n21 The right of re-entry or power of termination may be exercised by physical entry, but such entry is not necessary:

> The interest subject to such a power is terminated by any appropriate manifestation, upon the part of the person in whose favor the condition exists, of his intent thereby to terminate the interest in question." n22

In Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82, I.O.O.F. v. Toscano n23 a conveyance by James and Maria Toscano to Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82 of property "restricted for the use and benefit of the second party, only; and in the event the same fails to be used by the second party..., the same is to revert to the first parties herein, their successors, heirs or assigns" was interpreted by the court to create "a fee subject to a condition subsequent with title to revert to the grantors, their successors or assigns if the land ceases to be used for lodge, fraternal or similar purposes for which the [Lodge] was formed."

A conveyance by O "to A and the heirs of his body, but if A gets married, then to O" is a fee tail subject to condition subsequent (assuming that there is no state statute that transforms the fee tail into another estate or estates). A condition is considered conditional in form when it uses such words as "provided that," "on condition that," "if," "but if," and "provided, however." n24

In Howson v. Crombie Street Congregational Church n25 the grantor conveyed a parcel of land to a church as a Parsonage and Parish House "and if said grantee should ever cease to carry on the adjoining property as a church for its own use or if said premises herein described should ever cease to be used by said church as a Parsonage or Parish House or for other religious purposes, then said premises shall revert to me...." The court found that despite the use of the word "revert," the grant created a fee simple subject to condition subsequent in the church and a right of reentry in the grantor.

Also, if the grantor otherwise shows intent to create an estate subject to condition subsequent, the condition will be considered conditional. n26

A lien or mortgage that is placed on an estate subject to condition subsequent attaches only to that interest and does not encumber the estate of the grantor in the right of reentry.

In Mayor of Rockville v. Walker n27 a lender took a mortgage on property that the mortgagor owned in fee simple subject to condition subsequent. The condition subsequent occurred and the grantor reentered and took possession. Although the mortgage was in place before the grantor exercised its right of reentry, the court rejected the argument that the grantor retained only a remedial contractual right of reentry allowing the mortgage to attach to the whole fee simple absolute. The exercise of reentry by the grantor terminated the mortgage.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: estate! or free simple w/2 subject w/2 condition w/1 subsequent § 17.01(c)(3) Estates Subject to Executory Limitation.

An estate subject to executory limitation is cut short by a condition subsequent that may be either durational or conditional and which cuts short the estate in favor of a person other than the grantor who created the estate. Thus, a conveyance by O "to A and his heirs, but if A gets married, then to B" is a fee simple subject to executory limitation; a conveyance by O "to A for life, but if A gets married, then to B" is a life estate subject to executory limitation.

In Pells v. Brown n28 the testator devised to "Thomas his son and his heirs forever, paying to his brother Richard twenty pounds at the age of twenty-one years; and if Thomas died without issue, living William his brother, that then William his brother should have those lands to him, and his heirs and assigns forever, paying the said sum as Thomas should have paid." Thomas entered the property, suffered a common recovery (an action to recover lands so as to vest a fee simple in the recoverer), and died, devising the property to the wife of Edward Pells. Thomas died without issue and William was still living. The court found that the recovery was no bar, and that Thomas had a fee simple that could be terminated by the contingency of the death of Thomas without issue (definite failure of issue construction) and with William still living, and that William had an executory interest.

In Lee v. Oates n29 the grant created an executory interest to divest a prior remainder and a series of executory interests, each to cut short the preceding one. The grant (with editorial explanations in brackets) conveyed in trust to > Elizabeth Jane Lee during her life [present interest in a life estate], ..., and after her death to ... Anna B. Lee and B. Rush Lee [vested remainder in fee simple subject to executory limitation], ..., and in the event of the death of either ... without issue, then to ... the survivor [executory interest in fee simple subject to executory limitation] ..., and in the event of the death of both ... without issue then to ... Lillian A. Smith and W. Bernard Smith [executory interest in fee simple subject to executory limitation] ..., and in the event of the death of either the said Lillian A. or W. Bernard Smith without issue then to ... the survivor of them [executory interest in fee simple subject to executory limitation] ..., and in the event of the death of them both in the lifetime of their father then to ... Mrs. Carrie E. Smith during her life and ... widowhood [executory interest in a life estate], with remainder to the right heirs of the parties of the first part [executory interest in fee simple absolute].

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: estate! or fee simple or interest! w/2 subject w/2 executory w/1 limit!

§ 17.01(d) Ambiguity and the Presumption Against Forfeitures.

"Forfeitures are not favored in the law.' n30 Therefore, if the grantor's intent in creating a reversionary interest is ambiguous, courts have tended to prefer the estate subject to condition subsequent over the estate determinable. n31 The presumption is in favor of the owner of the estate, because an estate determinable is forfeited automatically upon the happening of the condition subsequent, whereas the estate subject to condition subsequent is lost only when both the condition subsequent occurs and the owner of the future interest chooses to reenter. One explanation for this presumption is that it "promotes the interests of current owners in controlling property in their possession, giving them greater freedom to change land uses as economic conditions and social values change; it also promotes social interests in deregulating economic activity to allow property owners the freedom to shift property to more valuable and desired uses." n32

In Oldfield v. Stoeco Homes n33 a deed required the filling of lots to certain grades within one year and stated that "[a] failure to comply with the covenants and conditions ... will automatically cause title to all lands to revert to the City of Ocean City." Despite this language of automatic reverter in the deed, the court considered the presumption against forfeitures and then proceeded to find that the repeated use of the word "condition" and another provision in the deed, reserving the right to alter the arrangement in the clauses, were sufficient to cast a reasonable doubt on what was intended. The court then considered the surrounding circumstances and determined that a fee simple subject to condition subsequent, not a fee simple determinable, was created. Therefore, the City was allowed to extend the time for performance without an automatic reverter.

A similar approach to forfeitures is taken in the case of a leasehold.

In Jamaica Bldrs. Supply Corp. v. Buttelman n34 a lease contained a provision which stated:

> that in the event of the breach of any condition or covenant herein [such as the failure to pay rent], ... the Landlord ... may terminate the lease by giving to the Tenant five days written notice ..., and the term of this lease shall in that event run to, and expire upon the date therein mentioned." The Tenant failed to pay rent and notice was served, but the Tenant remained in the apartment. When the Landlord sought to remove the Tenant on grounds that the lease was automatically terminated, the court dismissed the petition. Mindful of the presumption against forfeitures, it found that other typewritten language in the lease referring to "the next month's rent" after failure to pay the previous month's rent was sufficient evidence of the parties' intent to create a lease subject to condition subsequent rather than a lease determinable. n35

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: ambigu! w/15 grantor! w/5 intent! w/30 presum! w/5 forfeit!

§ 17.01(e) Eminent Domain.

If an eminent domain taking occurs against land held by the prior owner of a fee simple determinable, which has been destroyed by the occurrence of the condition subsequent, and this prior owner has not yet been removed by any action to recover, the owner of the possibility of reverter, now transformed into a present interest, nevertheless is entitled to the whole award. n36 There should be no difference for a fee simple subject to executory limitation.

If an eminent domain taking occurs against land held by the owner of a fee simple subject to condition subsequent, against which reentry is possible because the condition subsequent has occurred, and this owner has not yet been removed by an action to recover, this owner may be entitled to the whole award, n37 although the Restatement states otherwise. n38

If an eminent domain taking occurs against land held by the owner of a fee simple determinable or a fee simple subject to condition subsequent, and the condition subsequent has not yet occurred, the majority of courts give the present owner the whole award. n39 Several decisions contain dicta supporting the division of the award according to the proportional interests of the present interest owner and the reversionary interest owner, if the occurrence of the condition subsequent is imminent. n40 There is also some authority to support such a division of the award even if the occurrence of the condition subsequent is not imminent. n41

If the eminent domain proceeding occurs against land held by the owner of a fee simple subject to executory limitation, and the condition subsequent has not yet occurred, there is also authority to support an award to the owner of the executory interest. n42

Valuation of the present and future interests in an eminent domain proceeding is difficult. One court has defined the value of the future interest as the difference between the value of the land for any use and the value of the land for the use restricted by the condition subsequent. n43 However, this formula does not take into consideration the possibility that the sum of the parts may not equal the whole, nor the probability of occurrence of the condition subsequent.

Another court offered the following formula:

> Opinions [of experts] as to the value of the fee simple determinable ... will depend in part on the likelihood of continued use of the realty by the owner of the fee simple defeasible for the purpose specified in the instrument of conveyance and in part on the reasonable market value of the real estate, as improved, for the purposes to which it is devoted. If this value is equal to or greater than the market value of the realty if used for other practicable purposes, the owner of the fee simple determinable is entitled to the full amount of the award less some nominal amount -- 1 percent of the sum awarded, for example -- to be allocated to the owner of the possibility of reverter. If the value so fixed, in cases where abandonment of the use is imminent or where the realty would have a greater market value if devoted to some other practicable purpose, is less than the totality of the value, the owner of the possibility of reverter shall be entitled to a proportion of the condemnation award expressed by a fraction the denominator of which is the market value of the realty when devoted to its best practicable use and the numerator of which is the difference between such value and the value of the realty applied to the uses to which it is restricted by the terms of the deed for such period of time as such use is reasonably to be anticipated. n44

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: eminent domain w/30 fee simple w/20 determinable or subject w/2 (executory limit! or condition subsequent)

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Section 17.01 written by Dean John Makdisi, University of Tulsa School of Law.

(n2)Footnote 2. 2 Henry de Bracton, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae [Concerning English Laws and Customs] 66 (George E. Woodbine ed. 1922).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Restatement of the Law of Property § 305 (1944).

(n4)Footnote 4. Cf. 1 Restatement of the Law of Property § 27, 39-41 (1936). For exceptions to the prevailing modern view that no words of inheritance are necessary, see Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 29 & nn.3-4 (2d ed. 1988). Words such as "and her heirs on her father's side" are ineffective to restrict descent and create only a fee simple absolute. Id. at 31-32.

(n5)Footnote 5. Moynihan, supra note 4, at 31.

(n6)Footnote 6. 176 A.2d 561 (Conn. 1961).

(n7)Footnote 7. Jackson v. Robins, 16 Johns. 537, 588 (N.Y. App. 1819) (Chancellor Kent).

(n8)Footnote 8. Moynihan, supra note 4, at 31 & n.10.

(n9)Footnote 9. 76 A.2d 877 (N.J. 1950).

(n10)Footnote 10. For a more detailed history of the era of feudalism in which the fee simple estate evolved, see A.W.B. Simpson, A History of the Land Law (2d ed. 1986), and Moynihan, supra note 4.

(n11)Footnote 11. By William's order, a great survey of England was made in 1086 called the Domesday Book. See Frederic W. Maitland, Domesday Book and Beyond (1921).

(n12)Footnote 12. Tenants throughout this hierarchy were considered free and had the right to bring real actions in the central royal courts. Peasants, or villeins, were unfree men and women who possessed lands of a lord in a state of unfree tenure. Their recourse for the settlement of disputes was to the manorial court of their lord. It was in the central royal courts, however, that the common law developed.

(n13)Footnote 13. Moynihan, supra note 4, at 23.

(n14)Footnote 14. 2 Sir Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I, at 30 (2d ed. 1968).

(n15)Footnote 15. F.W. Maitland, The Seisin of Chattels, 1 Law Q. Rev. 324, 334-335 (1885) [hereinafter Seisin of Chattels].

(n16)Footnote 16. Id. at 327-28; O. W. Holmes, Jr., Early English Equity, 1 Law Q. Rev. 162, 168 (1885).

(n17)Footnote 17. Seisin of Chattels, supra note 15, at 329.

(n18)Footnote 18. Id. at 331, 333.

(n19)Footnote 19. Id. at 330-31, Uncore seisi is translated "still seised." Id. at 329. Uncore detient may be translated "still possessing." See id. at 330-333. Detinue is a "possessory action for the recovery of personal chattels." Black's Law Dictionary 450 (6th ed. 1990).

(n20)Footnote 20. See Percy Bordwell, Interests in Chattels Real and Personal, 1 Mo. L. Rev. 119, 128 (1936).

(n21)Footnote 21. See Moynihan, supra note 4, at 33, 112-115.

(n22)Footnote 22. Restatement of the Law of Property § 24 cmt. b (1936). See Emrick v. Bethlehem Twp., 485 A.2d 736, 740 (Pa. 1984) (quoting and applying this provision of the Restatement).

(n23)Footnote 23. 64 Cal. Rptr. 816 (Cal. App. 1967) (distinguishing an estate subject to condition subsequent from an absolute restraint against alienation).

(n24)Footnote 24. Sometimes words of reentry are required to indicate the estate. Moynihan, supra note 3, at 114 & n.2.

(n25)Footnote 25. 590 N.E.2d 687 (Mass. 1992), citing Dyer v. Siano, 11 N.E.2d 451, 453 (Mass. 1937) (holding that use of the word "revert" without "so long as," "during," or "until" did "not of itself show an intention that the fee granted shall terminate and the lands 'revert' without entry or action").

(n26)Footnote 26. An ambiguity may be clarified by looking to the circumstances of the transaction. See Moynihan, supra note 4, at 108 & n.1, 109.

(n27)Footnote 27. 587 A.2d 1179 (Md. 1991).

(n28)Footnote 28. Cro. Jac. 590 (K.B. 1620).

(n29)Footnote 29. 88 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1916).

(n30)Footnote 30. Roberts v. Rhodes, 643 P.2d 116, 118 (Kan. 1982).

(n31)Footnote 31. For a discussion of this presumption as it is applied in the Texas courts, see generally Howard R. Williams, Restrictions on the Use of Land: Conditions Subsequent and Determinable Fees, 27 Tex. L. Rev. 158 (1948).

(n32)Footnote 32. Joseph W. Singer, Property Law: Rules, Policies, and Practices 532 (1993).

(n33)Footnote 33. 139 A.2d 291 (N.J. 1958).

(n34)Footnote 34. 205 N.Y.S.2d 303 (1960).

(n35)Footnote 35. The terminology used by the court for the condition in a lease subject to condition subsequent is "condition," and for the condition in a lease determinable is "conditional limitation."

(n36)Footnote 36. Proprietors of Locks and Canals on Merrimack River v. Commonwealth, 171 N.E.2d 146 (Mass. 1961).

(n37)Footnote 37. City of Santa Monica v. Jones, 232 P.2d 55 (Cal. App. 1951) (dictum); City of New York v. Cortelyou, 50 N.E.2d 645 (N.Y. 1943).

(n38)Footnote 38. 1 Restatement of the Law of Property § 53 cmt. d (1936).

(n39)Footnote 39. For a fee simple subject to condition subsequent, see People v. City of Los Angeles, 4 Cal. Rptr. 531 (Dist. Ct. App. 1960), appeal dismissed sub nom. Griffith v. California, 364 U.S. 476 (1960) (lack of substantial federal question). For a fee simple determinable, see Land Clearance for Redev. Auth. of the City of St. Joseph v. City of St. Joseph, 560 S.W.2d 285 (Mo. App. 1977). See generally Comment, The Effect of Condemnation Proceedings by Eminent Domain upon a Possibility of Reverter or Power of Termination, 19 Vill. L. Rev. 137 (1973) [hereinafter Effect of Condemnation Proceedings].

(n40)Footnote 40. See, e.g., People ex rel. Dep't of Pub. Works v. City of Fresno, 26 Cal. Rptr. 853 (1962). These cases support 1 Restatement of the Law of Property § 53 cmt. c (1936).

(n41)Footnote 41. Ink v. City of Canton, 212 N.E.2d 574 (Ohio 1965); Leeco Gas & Oil Co. v. County of Nueces, 736 S.W.2d 629 (Tex. 1987).

(n42)Footnote 42. Hemphill v. Mississippi State Hwy. Comm'n, 145 So. 2d 455 (Miss. 1962) (will giving realty to son, and codicil providing that if the son died before his wife and the wife remarried or died, what had been left to the son should go to two named grandchildren).

(n43)Footnote 43. Ink, 212 N.E.2d 574 (Ohio 1965).

(n44)Footnote 44. State v. Independent Sch. Dist., 123 N.W.2d 121, at 129-130 (Minn. 1963). For a critique and suggested modification of this formula, see Effect of Condemnation Proceedings, supra note 39, at 164-165.

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.02 Concept of the Fee Simple.

[Go To Supp]

The fee simple has definite characteristics: (a) it is a present estate in land that is of indefinite duration as will be seen hereafter; n45 (b) it is freely alienable by deed inter vivos, by will post-mortem and involuntarily by execution or judicial sale; (c) it carries with it the right of possession; (d) the holder may make use of any portion of the freehold without being beholden to any person except to the extent that the sovereign has not limited such right of use. n46 It is capable of inheritance not merely through taking by representation. n47

The words "fee simple" mean an absolute title or estate in lands wholly unqualified by any reversion, reservation, condition or limitation, or possibility of any such thing present or future, or precedent or subsequent. n48

A post-mortem transfer of real estate is not effective unless made in the statutory manner governing the execution of wills. Therefore, if a grantor uses ambiguous language or exercises doubtful acts in connection with the effective time of a deed, either the instrument will be void as an invalid testamentary disposition or it takes effect as the immediate grant of a reversion with the retention of a life estate. n49

A release to the ancestor, by an heir, of the expectancy as heir, operates not as a contract or as a transfer or conveyance either to the ancestor or to other heirs, but an extinguishment of the right to take any estate by descent. n50

The term "fee simple" includes estates subject to conditions subsequent, executory limitations, special limitations or any combination of these to make the estate defeasible. n51 An "estate in fee simple" arises where one has an estate in lands or tenements to one and one's heirs forever, and such an estate is not inconsistent with a restriction on alienation. n52 It is the most extensive interest which one may possess in real property. n53 An estate subject to an option is not in fee. n54

One of the essential qualities of a fee-simple estate is that it is one of inheritance, which passes upon the death of the ancestor, to all the heirs generally and not to a particular heir or set of heirs. n55 A "fee-simple estate" n56 is an estate of inheritance which is unconditional, indefeasible, and absolute, n57 and which descends to the owner's heirs generally

n58 and not to merely a particular class of the owner's heirs, as in the case of a fee tail. n59

It must either vest or not vest, but once vested it is indefeasible, n60 and it is an estate unlimited as to duration, disposition, and descendibility. n61

> Prior to Blackstone's time the allodial title was ordinarily called an 'absolute title' and was superior to a 'fee-simple title,' the latter being encumbered with feudal clogs which were laid upon the first feudatory when it was granted, making it possible for the holder of a fee-simple title to lose his land in the event he failed to observe his feudatory oath. The allodial title was not so encumbered. Later the term 'fee simple,' however, rose to the dignity of the allodium or absolute estate, and since the days of Blackstone the words 'absolute estate' and 'fee simple' seem to have been generally used interchangeably; in fact, he [Blackstone] so uses them. n62

It is the entire and absolute interest and property in land, n63 and carries with it everything within or belonging to it. n64 Such an estate may be either legal or equitable, or it may be had either in corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or in minerals beneath the surface of the ground separate and apart from the surface. n65

The grantor's reservation of all minerals and rights in relation thereto does not prevent the grantee from taking a fee-simple estate in the land, n66 nor does a fee-simple title cease to be such by the giving of a mortgage on the property. n67

The words "fee simple" are used in two senses. It sometimes means the sum total of all rights in land that any individual may exercise. n68 The word "fee" signifies an estate of inheritance, and the words "fee simple" signify an absolute inheritance, clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, n69 such as heirs of the body, or the like. n70 So, too, the word "fee" and the words "fee simple" are frequently used as convertible terms, n71 since the word "simple" adds nothing whatever to the meaning of the word "fee" standing by itself. n72 The word "simple," however, does serve to exclude the idea that the "fee" is of an entailed or of a conditional kind. n73

"Fee simple" is a common law term and sometimes corresponds to what in the civil law is a "perfect title." At other times it also embraces defeasible fees.

In this broad sense the word "absolute" added does not impart anything to the legal effect of the term "fee" or "fee simple." n74 From the fee-simple estate all others are derived, and, whenever they shall fail whether by lapse of time, surrender, or merger, they ultimately resolve themselves into this estate. n75 "Absolute" or "absolutely" may, however, be used to distinguish a fee simple absolute from a fee simple defeasible.

Where language is ambiguous, it will be construed to confer on grantee the highest estate permissible under the instrument. n76

Presumption deed carries a fee simple estate. n77

So in another sense the fee simple does not embrace the entire interest in land but merely the four concepts set forth above. So a fee simple may be also determinable at some time indefinite, may be subject to a condition subsequent or to a conditional limitation. n78

A fee cannot be created that will terminate at a given time. n79 A fee must endure indefinitely. n80

In such events there may be a legal right in a third person of such a nature that the interest of the holder of a fee simple may terminate and the right of such third person itself ripen into a fee simple. The owner in fee cannot be compelled to sell or dispose of it, except by assertion of the right of eminent domain. n81 An estate in fee is subject to curtesy and dower. n82

An estate by curtesy is analogous to the estate of dower, n83 and the surviving spouse in either case was entitled, at common law, to such estate only in lands of which the deceased spouse had a freehold of inheritance, that is, a fee simple or a fee tail. n84

An estate of inheritance, legal or equitable, is essential to the widow's right of dower. n85 It has been held, however, that the husband's right to curtesy applies as well to qualified or conditional estates, as to absolute fee-simple estates. n86 Where the husband owns a defeasible fee in realty, his widow, on his death, has the same dower interest therein as if her husband had had an estate in fee simple absolute therein. n87 It has been held that a widow was entitled to dower in lands held by her deceased husband under a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, such estate being one of inheritance within the meaning of a statutory provision that the widow shall take dower in such property. n88 A defeasible fee in the husband is subject to his widow's right of dower. n89 Property held by a deceased husband in trust is held not an "estate of inheritance" and his surviving widow has no right to dower therein, but if the estate is one of inheritance the widow is entitled to dower. n90 It has been held that a widow does not take dower in a ground rent lease. n91

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 45. Pacific Southwest Realty Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 (1991).

(n2)Footnote 46. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n3)Footnote 47. Park County Rod and Gun Club v. Department of Highways, 517 P.2d 352 (Mont. 1973).

(n4)Footnote 48. Wray v. Wymer, 601 N.E.2d 503 (Ohio App. 1991).

(n5)Footnote 49. Wright v. Pritchett, 102 S.E.2d 602 (Ga. 1958).

(n6)Footnote 50. McCarthy v. McCarthy, 133 N.E.2d 763 (Ill. App. 1956).

(n7)Footnote 51. Wichelman v. Messner, 83 N.W.2d 800 (Minn. 1957).

(n8)Footnote 52. Shaw v. Wertz, 369 S.W.2d 215 (Mo. 1963).

(n9)Footnote 53. Wray v. Wymer, 601 N.E.2d 503 (Ohio App. 1991).

(n10)Footnote 54. In re Sullivan's Estate, 218 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1950).

(n11)Footnote 55. Guida v. Thompson, 160 N.E.2d 153 (Ohio Com. Pl. 1957); Bartlett v. Bartlett, 48 P.2d 560 (Wash. 1935).

(n12)Footnote 56. Long v. Kyle, 340 S.W.2d 623 (Mo. 1960).

(n13)Footnote 57. Guida v. Thompson, 160 N.E.2d 153 (Ohio Com. Pl. 1957); Imbrice v. Hartrampf, 198 P. 521 (Or. 1921).

(n14)Footnote 58. Fehringer v. Fehringer, 439 S.W.2d 258 (Tenn. 1969).

(n15)Footnote 59. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n16)Footnote 60. Farrar v. Bingham, 93 F.2d 252 (D.C. Cir. 1937); Vaughan v. Compton, 235 S.W.2d 328 (Mo. 1950).

(n17)Footnote 61. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n18)Footnote 62. Redevelopment Agency v. Norwalk Alum. Foundry Corp., 233 A.2d 1 (Conn. 1967).

(n19)Footnote 63. Bradford v. Martin, 201 N.W. 574 (Iowa 1925); In re Waltz, 240 P. 19 (Cal. 1925).

(n20)Footnote 64. Wray v. Wymer, 601 N.E.2d 503 (Ohio App. 1991); Masheter v. Diver, 253 N.E.2d 780 (Ohio 1969).

(n21)Footnote 65. Brooks v. Shepard, 157 F. Supp. 379 (S.D. Ala. 1957).

(n22)Footnote 66. In re Forsstrom, 38 P.2d 878 (Ariz. 1934).

(n23)Footnote 67. Slack v. Magee Heirs, 252 S.W.2d 274 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952), aff'd, 258 S.W.2d 797 (Tex. 1953).

(n24)Footnote 68. In re Van Duzer, 213 N.W.2d 167 (Mich. 1973).

(n25)Footnote 69. Wray v. Wymer, 601 N.E.2d 503 (Ohio App. 1991).

(n26)Footnote 70. Long v. Kyle, 340 S.W.2d 623 (Mo. 1960); Coleman v. Shoemaker, 78 P.2d 905 (Kan. 1938).

(n27)Footnote 71. Hays' Estate v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 181 F.2d 169 (5th Cir. 1950).

(n28)Footnote 72. Chance v. Weston, 190 P. 155 (Or. 1920).

(n29)Footnote 73. In re Waltz, 240 P. 19 (Cal. 1925).

(n30)Footnote 74. Vaubel v. Lang, 140 N.E. 69 (Ind. App. 1923).

(n31)Footnote 75. Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612 (1860).

(n32)Footnote 76. Seifert v. Sanders, 358 S.E.2d 775 (W. Va. 1987).

(n33)Footnote 77. Vestal v. Vestal, 271 S.E.2d 306 (N.C. App. 1980); First Nat'l Bank of Oregon v. Townsend, 555 P.2d 477 (Or. App. 1976). "Grant, bargain and sell" imply a fee simple title. Love v. Missouri Union Presbytery, 534 S.W.2d 511 (Mo. 1976).

(n34)Footnote 78. Wichelman v. Messner, 83 N.W.2d 800 (Minn. 1957).

(n35)Footnote 79. Ewering v. Ewering, 251 S.W. 645 (Ky. 1923).

(n36)Footnote 80. Moore v. McKinley, 69 N.W.2d 73 (Iowa 1955); Goin v. Absher, 53 S.E.2d 50 (Va. 1949).

(n37)Footnote 81. Pugh v. Whittle, 199 So. 851 (Ala. 1941).

(n38)Footnote 82. Carter v. King, 353 S.E.2d 738 (Va. 1987).

(n39)Footnote 83. Beck v. Merritt, 657 S.W.2d 549 (Ark. 1983).

(n40)Footnote 84. Ford v. Yost, 190 S.W.2d 21 (Ky. 1945); Kilpatrick v. Kilpatrick, 162 S.W.2d 897 (Ark. 1942).

(n41)Footnote 85. Worley v. Worley, 388 So. 2d 502 (Ala. 1980).

(n42)Footnote 86. Wells v. Thompson, 13 Ala. 793 (1848).

(n43)Footnote 87. Landers v. Landers, 151 S.W. 386 (Ky. 1912).

(n44)Footnote 88. Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 147 N.E. 513 (Ohio 1925).

(n45)Footnote 89. Landers v. Landers, 151 S.W. 386 (Ky. 1912).

(n46)Footnote 90. Harlan Nat'l Bank v. Brown, 317 S.W.2d 903 (Ky. 1958).

(n47)Footnote 91. Buehrer v. Gates, 411 S.W.2d 676 (Ky. 1967); Jones v. Magruder, 42 F. Supp. 193 (D. Md. 1941).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.03 Development of the Fee Simple.

[Go To Supp]

It has been commented that the basis of English land law is the ownership of all realty by the sovereign. From the crown all titles flow. n92 There is basis for the belief that William's early grants to his followers were not merely in reward for past services rendered but were in expectation of future activities on behalf of the crown, principally military. Such grants, being based on personal services, terminated with the death of the grantee. The king retained a reversion and the heirs took nothing except the hope that the grant would be renewed. n93

It is understandable that such grants amounting to mere life estates terminating at the death of the grantee would not be to the complete satisfaction of the grantee whether he was a tenant in capite, that is a grantee of the king, or the grant was by way of a further subinfeudation. All heads of families would be interested in seeing their estates pass to their issue by right, not merely by grace of the overlord. The perils of medieval tenure arising from the dangers of attainder for treason as well as claims of creditors and the dangers of disseisin made desirable the Celtish and Anglo-Saxon concept of ownership by the family rather than by the individual tenant. So it is not surprising that as the bargaining power of the feoffee increased after the conquest estates developed of superior quality than a life tenancy. Initially the grant to a man and his heirs gave the heir a substantial interest in the land by direct gift from the grantor. The grantee could not alien without the grantee's heir confirming the grant after the grantee's death. n94

Thus at an early time royal grants and subsequent infeudations begin to reveal that the feoffee is not an individual solely but also "et hereditibus suis" or to a named person "and his heirs" thus placing the title in the family unit and limiting the control or liability of the immediate possessor. So the right to the property did not return to the crown or to the feoffor but passed immediately on the tenant's death to his heirs by right of ownership not of descent. n95 Such early grants were thus entailments, and were presumably exacted through the increasing bargaining power of nobles with the crown.

Subinfeudations were of a similar nature supposedly. The heir was required to obtain a new grant from the lord. Such grants would not entirely satisfy the grantee's desires. In the turbulence of English politics: that prevailed during the reigns that succeeded William, attainder for treason was a terrible sword of Damocles over the head of every landowner.

It meant the utter impoverishment of the family of every political loser. But if title to realty were in the family not the individual even an exile would have some hope of financial relief and the uncertainty of the political atmosphere and the subsequent disorder of society placed even greater emphasis on the family rather than the law as security. n96

This is an explanation of the somewhat ambiguous passage in the seventh chapter of Glanvil to the effect that the ancestor could not alienate one-half of the estate without the heir's consent. Actually therefore the limitation to one and one's heirs created an entailment to the family line. Without such an entailment only a life estate existed, and through the passage of time the property lawyers developed the use of the words "and to his heirs" into a legal fetish without which a fee could not be created.

There were counter pressures, however, seeking to expand the individual powers of ownership. The exoneration of an entailed estate from the penalties of attainder could not have been satisfactory to the crown. And there were heavy demands on the tenant for the raising of ready money. Certain of the feudal dues, ransom of the lord, knighting of the lord's eldest son, marriage of the lord's eldest daughter contemplated the raising of money payments. The equipping of a military force such for example, as was contemplated by the Crusaders also demanded money. And the expansion of commerce that followed the Crusades themselves created a desire for goods that could not be satisfied out of entailed land. The limitation to one and his heirs became words of law and no other language no matter how clearly showing the grantor's intent could create a fee. n97

Such words were, however, not merely words of "limitation" showing that the feoffor had "limited" a fee to the feoffee but were words of purchase, i.e., the fee was limited to the family of the feoffee not to him alone. n98 Thus there began a long struggle to develop the free alienation of the fee simple, to convert it into a fee simple "absolute." The first step came somewhere in about the middle of the 13th century with the development of the right of alienation inter vivos in the immediate tenant, without the necessity of the consent of the family. Littleton n99 ascribes this change to the practice of the tenant aliening land together with a warranty purporting to bind not merely the feoffees but also his heirs, thus creating a lineal and collateral warranty that had the effect of preventing the heirs of the feoffor from claiming against the feoffee. n100 More modern thinking n101 is that the alienation of the fee simple was a concession given for the development of the right of primogeniture in the fee tail. n102

Involuntary alienation inter vivos came more gradually. As soon as free alienation could be effected the common law mortgage and the Jewish mortgage permitted the giving of land as security for debt. The Statute Acton Burnell de Mercatoribus n103 subjected land in the hands of merchants to execution and sale that cut off the rights of heirs. The Statute De Stapulis n104 and finally the Writ of Elegit, coming out of the Statute of Westminster II, n105 permitted the creditor to realize upon the debtor's lands even after the debtor's death.

None of these statutes, however, became part of the common law and so universally today in the United States the liability of land for sale on execution to pay debts depends on local statutes. The operation of the common law with reference to the extent of debts of a deceased upon his lands was even more restricted. Title to a fee simple passed immediately upon death to the heirs. Such title could not be divested to pay debts except debts of the crown and staples. n106 So again special legislation is necessary to divest the heir's title to pay the ancestor's debts. Lacking procedure following the language of such statutes no court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the land to divest the heir's title.

Nor except by statute can the owner of a "fee simple" divest his heirs of their expectancy by a postmortem alienation. The earlier postmortem alienation died with feudalism which required livery of seizin. n107

The history of the development of the law of wills is elsewhere herein traced. But though it is commonly stated that heirs have a mere "expectancy" which is not an estate in land or even a right, n108 yet upon the death of the owner of a fee simple title to the real estate passes by law to his "heirs" unless the deceased has transferred it to another by a will complying with all of the statutory requirements. There is no such thing as a "common law" or even a "substantially correctly executed" will. n109

At the very beginning the estate created by the words "et hereditibus suis" was comparable in modern parlance to a "determinable fee tail." It was entailed in the sense that the words "and his heirs" were words of purchase as well as of limitation, creating a present interest in the family in the fee. It ceased to be entailed or rather the entail could be broken when the warranty was developed as mentioned above. And since the consideration for the feoffment was the furnishing of feudal dues and reliefs the feoffee held of the feoffor subject to such performance. It was therefore a base fee and remained so until the Statute Quia Emptores Terrorium n110 converted it into a fee simple. n111

Where a base fee existed the feoffee did not take the entire estate. Instead, there remained in the feoffor a future right to the real estate arising whenever the feoffee or his successors failed to comply with the terms of the enfeoffment, or whenever the feoffee died without heirs. The base fee and the feoffor's remaining right were comparable to the modern determinable fee. Although initially the base fee operated for the benefit of the lord, through the passage of years it became a device for defeating the feoffor's rights. The feoffee could subinfeudate, creating a subbase fee under terms whereby the subfeoffee could avoid the harshness of some of the feudal reliefs such as wardship of the vassal's minor son. The compromise with the barons that led to the succession of Edward I resulted in the Statute Quia Emptores Terrorium "whereby the buyers of land," etc., n112 abolishing all future infeudations except to tenants in capite and thus preventing the creation of future base fees. Under this statute a feoffee no longer held of his feoffor, the feof did not terminate and thus the feoffor no longer retained a reversionary interest. In effect, the statute was the creator of the fee simple absolute since the feoffee acquired the feoffor's entire interest by way of substitution.

In England the statute probably put an end for centuries to the determinable fee. While the statute became part of the common law in most American jurisdictions, n113 it did not in this country prevent the creation of a determinable fee with its resultant possibility of reverter. Where it is recognized, it prevents the creation of any permanent charge upon or limitation over after a fee simple absolute in a third person. n114

Thus, while the statement is commonly made that the heir has no right or interest in land owned in fee simple, but a mere expectancy such is not an accurate concept. Rather, it is better to say, that the "owner" has the power to alienate inter vivos by a conveyance of a type recognized by the law of the jurisdiction, his creditors may levy upon the property to pay the "owner's" debts and have the land sold in the statutory manner or after death the creditors may realize upon the land again in a statutory manner, or the owner may by complying with the statute transfer the land by a postmortem instrument, but if the interest of the heirs are not cut off in such manners so contemplated by statute the heirs take title by operation of law and they cannot divest themselves of such title except, again, in a statutory manner. n115

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 92. People ex rel. Kuntsman v. Shinsaku Naguno, 59 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1945); Bill v. Town of Wells, 510 A.2d 509 (Me. 1986); Arizona Center for Law in Public Interest v. Hassell, 837 P.2d 158 (Ariz. App. 1991).

(n2)Footnote 93. See Kenelm Edward Digby, An Introduction to the History of Real Property, 58, n.162, 165, n.11, (5th ed. 1897) citing 2 Bracton, c. 6, f. 17.

The Spanish crown in its early grants in "New Spain" followed this principle of limiting the duration of the fief to the life of the feoffee and his son with reversion to the crown. Wolf, Sons of the Shaking Earth, p. 191.

Later as the crown began to make inheritable grants, Spanish America swung into the feudal orbit epitomized by the hacienda system.

(n3)Footnote 94. Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Real Property (24th ed. 1933), 73; Bordwell, Common Law Scheme of Estates and the Remainder, 34 Iowa L. Rev. 401 (1949); Percy Bordwell, Common Law Scheme of Estates and the "English Justinian," 33 Iowa L. Rev. 447 (1948).

(n4)Footnote 95. Stephen Martin Leake, An Elementary Digest of the Law of Property in Land (2d ed. 1909), 22.

Williams, Supra note 93, at 156. This necessity of using the word heirs to mark out or limit an estate in fee seems to have been derived from the times before the alienation of land was freely permitted, when the tenant's heir was the only person who could succeed to his estate. As we have seen, a gift of land would then confer no fee, unless an intention were expressed that the donee's heir should succeed him. And though tenants in fee simple were afterwards enabled to dispose of their lands so as to defeat the expectation of their heirs, the liberty so gained was treated as incident to their estates. So that what remained essential, on the gift of a fee simple, was to use apt words to confer an hereditary estate, to which the law would annex the power of alienation. But it was not necessary, after the Statute of Quia Emptores, expressly to confer an assignable estate. And though in later times it became a common form to convey land to a purchaser to hold to him, his heirs and assigns forever, yet the word heirs alone gave him a fee simple, of which the law enabled him to dispose; and the remaining words and assigns forever had no conveyancing virtue at all; but were merely declaratory of that power of alienation which the purchaser would have possessed without them.

2 Bracton, c. 35, f. 81, indicates that the tenant could substitute another in his place of owing homage by transferring the inheritance. Another passage, c. 6, f. 17, gives rise to the possibility that additional words were necessary in the grant than "et hereditibus suis" before the donee could alienate, or at least before the donor's warranty was binding.

Digby, Supra note 93, however, felt in c. 3, § 11, 15, that by Bracton's time the donee could alienate freely without restraint of the heirs.

(n5)Footnote 96. 2 Blackstone, Commentaries, c. 1. See Sir Anthony Mildmay's Case. 6 Coke 41 and 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 116, to the effect that the factors of attainder for treason, liability for debts of ancestors and for alienation by ancestors originated as well as preserved De Donis.

(n6)Footnote 97. Littleton, Tenures, § I. Tenant in fee simple is he which hath lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs forever. And it is called in Latin, feodum simplex, for feodum is the same that inheritance is and simplex is as much as to say, lawful or pure. And so feodum simplex signifies a lawful or pure inheritance. For if a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee simple it behooveth him to have these words in his purchase, To have and to hold to him and to his heirs: for these words (his heirs) make the estate of inheritance. For if a man purchase lands by these words, To have and to hold to him forever: or by these words, To have and to hold to him and his assigns forever: in these two cases he hath but an estate for term of life, for that there lack these words (his heirs), which words only make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants.

Co. Litt., § 8b. Here Littleton treateth of purchases by natural persons, and not of bodies politic or corporate; for if lands be given to a sole body politic or corporate (as to a bishop, parson, vicar, master of an hospital, &c.), there to give to him an estate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he must have these words, To have and to hold to him and his successors' for without these words successors, in those cases there passeth no inheritance; for as the heir doth inherit to the ancestor, so the successor doth succeed to the predecessor, and the executor to the testator. But it appeareth here by Littleton, that if a man at this day give lands to I. S. and his successors, this createth no fee simple in him; for Littleton speaking of natural persons saith that these words (his heirs) make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants, whereby he excludeth these words (his successors).

A made a deed to B for life, "and at her death the said plantation is to become the absolute property of my grandson." Held: the grandson took only an estate for life. Gowdy v. Kelley, 194 S.E. 156 (S.C. 1937).

(n7)Footnote 98. Littleton, Tenures, § 12 said: "Purchase is called the possession of lands or tenements that a man hath by his deed or agreement, unto which possession he commeth not by title of descent from any of his ancestors, or of his cousins, but by his owne deed." Coke, commenting on this section said (Co. Litt., § 8b) "A purchase is always intended by title, and most properly by some kind of conveyance either for money or some other consideration, or freely of gift; for that is in law also a purchase. But a descent, because it commeth merely by act of law, is not said to be a purchase....And so it is of an escheate or the like, because the inheritance is cast upon, or a title vested in the lord by act in law, and not by his own deed or agreement, as our author here saith. Like law of the state of tenant by the curtesie, tenant in dower, or the like. But such as attaine to lands by meere injury or wrong, as by disseisin, intrusion, abatement, usurpation &c. cannot be said to come in by purchase, no more than robbery, burglarie, pyracy, or the like, can justly be termed purchase."

(n8)Footnote 99. Littleton, Tenures, § 697.

D'Arundel's Case, Bracton N. B. 1054, 1225. Radulf the son of Roger sought against William of Arundel five acres of land in Trelley, three acres in Treberned, two acres in Tredeiset and one acre in Hendrie and their appurtenances of which Roger his father was seized in law and in feudal services in the time of Lord Henry the King, and which descended from Roger by the law of the land to this same Radulf as his son and heir.

And William came and defended his right, and said that the same Roger, the father, conveyed with quiet enjoyment all the land and its appurtenances to William, the father of William, in the King's Court all his right and inheritance therein; to William and his heirs solely and free from himself and his heirs forever, and offered a deed of Roger by which these things were attested.

And Radulf came and admitted the deed of his father and covenant of quiet enjoyment, but asked judgment whether his father could convey all the land which he held by military tenure, retaining no service to himself and his heirs.

And since Radulf admitted his father's deed and it was attested by the deed that his father Roger conveyed all his land and warranted quiet enjoyment from him and his heirs, it was adjudged that William should go in peace and Radulf be in mercy.

(n9)Footnote 100. D'Arundel's case, Bracton N. B. 1054, 1225, is the first known instance of alienation of a fee free from the heir's consent. See Jacob J. Rabenowitz, The Origin of the Common Law Warranty of Real Property and of the Inchoate Right of Dower, 30 Cornell L. Q. 77 (1944).

(n10)Footnote 101. Theodore F. T. Plucknett, Concise History of Common Law (5th ed.), 528, 529. See S.J. Bailey, Warranties of Land in the Thirteenth Century, 8 Camb. L.J. 274 (1944).

2 Bracton, c. 6, f. 17 indicates that alienation was known at that time. "Habendum et tenendum tali et hereditibus suis vel cui terram illam dare vel assignare voluerit" in permitting the feoffor to make a warranty which ran to the advantage of the donee as well as to his heirs.

The right of alienation was confirmed but not created by Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. I, c. 1 since De Donis, 13 Edw. I, c. 1 by its preamble shows that De Donis was intended to restrict the free use of alienation. Magna Charta itself contained language which can be interpreted as restraining alienation.

(n11)Footnote 102. 3 William S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, 75, and 2 Pollock & Maitland, Supra, note 14 at 307, felt that the power of the heir to prevent alienation passed out of existence in the thirteenth century in the wake of primogeniture. See § 1846.

(n12)Footnote 103. 11 Edw. 1, followed by 13 Edw. I, stat. 3.

(n13)Footnote 104. 27 Edw. III, c. 2. By statute of 13 Edw. I, c. 1 8, one-half of a man's lands could be taken to satisfy his debts. Even a staple was not a charge upon devised land.

(n14)Footnote 105. 13 Edw. I, c. 18. Westminster II, c. 18. See Plucknett, Supra, note 101 at 148 and Ind. Code, 34-1-39-1, requiring that on an execution sale of lands, the rents, issues and profits for seven years be first offered before the fee can be sold.

The concept of the Writ of Elegit was preserved in the Pennsylvania Code and in the Northwest Territory ordinance.

(n15)Footnote 106. The heir was liable for the ancestor's debts at early common law though the land could not be taken in execution. Co. Litt. 2 Bullers Notes, § 19bn.(A).

By the time of Edward I the heir of a tenant in fee simple was liable to satisfy specialty debts of the ancestor to the extent of the ancestor's property. Williams (17th ed.), 87.

In London and in many ancient boroughs there were local customs which permitted lands to be devised. Challis, Real Property (3rd ed.), 226.

(n16)Footnote 107. There is a record of a devise of land as late as 1241. 2 Pollock & Maitland, 27.

(n17)Footnote 108. As to the power of the legislature to alter an "expectancy." See Vol. 5, § 2406.

At common law an expectancy not being a right could not be alienated voluntarily or involuntarily. This concept is, however, changing, see Vol. 5, § 2406.

(n18)Footnote 109. Under the statute of wills following the idea of the power of appointment by means of a use (Vol. 5A. § 2405) the will was a muniment of title like a deed and was not probated as was a testament of personalty, but was proven in a law suit. In some states today, however, a will does not pass a title to realty or personalty until probated, see Ind. Code. 29-1-7-24. Model Probate Code § 85. In such instances the heir takes title until such title is divested through the timely probate of a valid will.

(n19)Footnote 110. 18 Edw. I, c. 1, St. Westm. III (1920). Forasmuch as purchasers of lands and tenements of the fees of great men and other lords have many times heretofore entered into their fees, to the prejudice of the lords, to whom the freeholders of such great men have sold their lands and tenements to be holden in fee of their feoffors and not of the chief lords of the fees, whereby the same chief lords have many times lost their escheats, marriages, and wardships of lands and tenements belonging to their fees, which thing seems very hard and extreme unto those lords and other great men, and moreover in this case manifest disheritance, our lord the king in his Parliament at Westminster after Easter, the eighteenth year of his reign, that is to wit in the quinzine of Saint John Baptist, at the instance of the great men of the realm granted, provided, and ordained, that from henceforth it shall be lawful to every freeman to sell at his own pleasure his lands and tenements or part of them, so that the feoffee shall hold the same lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by such service and customs as his feoffor held before.

Ch. 2. And if he sell any part of such lands or tenements to any, the feoffee shall immediately hold it of the chief lord, and shall be forthwith charged with the services for so much as pertaineth or ought to pertain to the said chief lord, for the same parcel, according to the quantity of the land or tenement so sold; and so in this case the same part of the service shall remain to the lord, to be taken by the hands of the feoffee, for the which he ought to be attendant and answerable to the same chief lord according to the quantity of the land or tenement sold for the parcel of the service so due.

Ch. 3. And it is to be understood that by the said sales or purchases of lands or tenements, or any parcel of them, such lands or tenements shall in no wise come into mortmain, either in part or in whole, neither by policy nor craft, contrary to the form of the statute made thereupon of late. And it is to wit that this statute extendeth but only to lands holden in fee simple and that it extendeth to the time coming. And it shall begin to take effect at the Feast of Saint Andrew the Apostle next coming.

The charter of Charles II to William Penn made Quia Emptores inoperative in Pennsylvania so far as it would affect any grants made by Penn. See Francis Newton Thorpe, Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters and Other Organic Laws (1909), 3042.

The court in Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492 (1863), held that the American Revolution had abolished tenure in Pennsylvania. Despite this case which has never been overruled, "ground rent," which is a perpetual rent service, exists in Pennsylvania if created before 1885. Pa. Stat. Ann., tit. 65, § 161, 162.

(n20)Footnote 111. Digby, Supra note 93, at 234. It seems that before the passing of this Statute, where A held land in fee simple of B, A might have granted to C the whole of those lands to be held of B; and such a grant would operate to create a tenancy between C and B. This relation, however, could not at the common law (that is, independently of the Statute presently to be mentioned) have been effected by a grant by A to C of part of the lands held by A. At common law, a feoffment made by A to C of a portion of his lands would in every case have created anew the relation of lord and tenant, with all the incidents attaching to that relation, as between A and C. In this case there would be no immediate relation of lord and tenant between the chief lord and C. The advantageous rights of the lord over the land would consequently be diminished. The land thus aliened would not escheat to the chief lord on the failure of the heirs of the alienee, nor would the lord be the guardian of the lands or of the body of the heir.

To preserve these rights it was in the eighteenth year of Edward I enacted that every alienation in fee simple, whether of the whole or of a part of the land, should have the effect of substituting the alienee for the alienor in relation to the chief lord; the alienee simply stepping into the place of the alienor, and being subject to all the duties and obligations under which he held the land of his lord. The primary object of this enactment was to prevent the loss arising to the lords of manors from subinfeudation, or subdivision of the tenements held of them. Consequently, whenever at the present day a freehold tenant in fee simple holds of a mesne lord, the separation of the freehold from the domain must have occurred at a date anterior to the eighteenth year of Edward I. From this time forward every alienation of land in fee simple presents the characteristics of a complete out and out transfer, the transferee stepping for all purposes into the place of the transferor.

(n21)Footnote 112. 18 Edward I.

1. Forasmuch as purchasers of lands and tenements of the fees of great men and other lords have many times heretofore entered into their fees, to the prejudice of the lords, to whom the freeholders of such great men have sold their lands and tenements to be holden in fee of their feoffors and not the chief lords of the fees, whereby the same chief lords have many times lost their escheats, marriages, and wardships of lands and tenements belonging to their fees, which thing seems very hard and extreme unto those lords and other great men, and moreover in this case manifest disheritance, our lord the king in his parliament at Westminster after Easter the eighteenth year of his reign, that is to wit in the quinzine of Saint John the Baptist, at the instance of the great men of the realm granted, provided, and ordained, that from henceforth it should be lawful to every freeman to sell at his own pleasure his lands and tenements or part of them, so that the feoffee shall hold the same lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by such service and customs as his feoffor held before.

2. And if he sell any part of such lands or tenements to any, the feoffee shall immediately hold it of the chief lord, and shall be forthwith charged with the services for so much as pertaineth or ought to pertain to the said chief lord, for the same parcel, according to the quantity of the land or tenement so sold; and so in this case the same part of the service shall remain to the lord, to be taken by the hands of the feoffee, for that which he ought to be attendant and answerable to the same chief lord according to the quantity of the land or tenement sold for the parcel of the service so due.

3. And it is to be understood that by the said sales or purchases of lands or tenements, or any parcel of them, such lands or tenements shall in no wise come into mortmain, either in part or in whole, neither by policy nor craft, contrary to the form of the statute made thereupon of late. And it is to wit that this statute extendeth but only to lands holden in fee simple, and that it extendeth to the time coming. And it shall begin to take effect at the Feast of Saint Andrew the Apostle next coming.

(n22)Footnote 113. Carma Developers (California) Inc. v. Marathon Development Quia Emptores became part of the American common law. Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N.Y. 68 (1859), 75 Am. Dec. 278.

Pennsylvania, South Carolina and Nebraska have held contra. But; Nebraska has reached the same result by abolishing tenure statute. In re O'Connor's Estate, 252 N.W. 826 (Neb. 1934). California, Inc., 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467 (1992).

(n23)Footnote 114. Estate upon condition of paying annual rents. Digby, c. 5, § 3(2). 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 154.

(n24)Footnote 115. Williams Supra note 94, 66 Laurengen, Only God Can Make an Heir.

"Heirs" is a word of limitation, not of purchase. Estate of Sykes, 383 A.2d 920 (Pa. 1978).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.04 The Power of Disposition as Essential to Fee Simple.

[Go To Supp]

Where there is a grant or devise of an interest in land coupled with a power of disposition with or without a limitation over, two general types of problems arise. First, what weight should be given to the indication that by the gift of the power it was intended that the first taker should have a fee? And, second, is the power of disposition or alienation so integral a part of a fee simple absolute that the limitation over is void for repugnancy? n116 A test whether a fee passes under a devise is to ascertain from the will whether there is provided an unlimited power of disposal. n117

Where the power of disposition is coupled with ambiguous dispositive language the result may be either (a) a life estate with remainder over, contingent or vested subject to divesting, (b) a fee simple defeasible n118 with an executory limitation over, or (c) a fee simple absolute with the purported limitation over, void for repugnancy. n119

The mere existence of a limitation over if a power of disposition is not exercised or if all of the estate is not consumed will not of itself reduce to a life estate what otherwise would be a fee. n120 An indefinite or general power of disposition of real estate generally carries with it a fee unless the donee by express words is given a life estate only. n121 Although an express power of disposition is not necessary to give a fee in a devise. n122 It has been held that where a devise to a person generally or indefinitely has been given, with a power of disposition, it carries a fee except where the testator gives to the first taker an estate for life only, by certain and express words, and annexes to it a power of disposal. n123

It would seem that where the power of disposition is limited, a fee does not vest. n124 If the life tenant with power of disposition does not exercise the power, both the life estate and the remainder over are unaffected by the power. n125 It is held that a devise of the full use and control of land passes a fee, so that a provision against disposition, unless it becomes necessary for support, is ineffective. n126

Even an implied limitation on a power of disposition given to a life tenant will prevent such power from operating to enlarge the life estate into a fee. n127 In some states, it is held that a life tenant to whom there is given a power of absolute disposition takes a fee, although there is a devise to others of the residue of the property not consumed. n128

Under the statute of Alabama, it is held that a fee simple does not pass to the grantee under a deed giving the grantee a life estate with power to sell and convey while living. n129 A power of sale in a mortgage without words of inheritance does not operate to give the mortgagee an estate in fee, at least before the power is executed. n130 The mere fact that the permanent and exclusive use of land is essential to the enjoyment of a right granted therein is not sufficient to operate as a conveyance in fee. n131

By a devise to a person generally, or indefinitely, with a power of disposition, the fee ordinarily passes to the devisee, n132 and a deed to a person without words of limitation, but with an unlimited power of disposal, vests an absolute fee. n133 A devise in general terms, clothing the devisee with absolute power of disposition, and with no subsequent limitation over of what remains at the devisee's death to other persons, is a devise in fee. n134

A devise to an executor to dispose of property as he sees fit is an absolute gift, not a mere general power of disposition. n135

In some jurisdictions, it is held that even "an absolute power of disposal is not inconsistent with an estate for life only. The gift of such power will not enlarge the life estate previously given, but confers authority in addition thereto. One may have a life estate and yet be empowered to convey an estate in fee simple." n136 A devise of life estate with power of distribution does not create a fee simple. n137 A life estate coupled with a power given the devisee to dispose of the property by will does not enlarge the life estate into a fee. n138 The reason for the rule is that the right of testamentary disposition is a mere power, and nothing passes under the clause of the will conferring the power unless it is exercised. n139 Devise of life estate with power of distribution does not create a fee simple. n140

In Texas a gift with power of disposition with limitation over gives the first taker a "conditional fee" n141 and the limitation over is valid as to property not disposed of at date of death.

Under the weight of authority a fee coupled with an absolute power of disposition is a fee simple absolute n142 and any attempted limitation over is void for repugnancy. n143 Where an estate is given to a person generally or indefinitely, with a power of disposition, it carries a fee, and any limitation over is void for repugnancy. n144 When real estate is given absolutely to one person, with a gift over to another of such portion as may remain undisposed of by the first taker at death, the gift over is void, as repugnant to the absolute estate first given, n145 and it is also established law that, where an estate is given to a person generally or indefinitely, with a power of disposition, it carries a fee, and any limitation over is void for repugnancy. n146 Devise to wife and daughter and their descendants did not create a future interest in the descendants. n147

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: power w/2 disposition w/30 life estate or fee simple defeasible or fee simple absolute

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 116. Randall v. Estes, 218 S.W.2d 338 (Tex. Civ. App. 1949); Noe v. Moseley, 36 N.E.2d 240 (Ill. 1941).

(n2)Footnote 117. Leonard v. Dillard, 359 S.E.2d 497 (N.C. App. 1987); Collings v. Collings' Ex'rs, 260 S.W.2d 935 (Ky. 1953).

(n3)Footnote 118. Snider v. Wood, 531 So. 2d 864 (Ala. 1988).

(n4)Footnote 119. Loehr v. Kincannon, 834 S.W.2d 445 (Tex. App. 1992).

(n5)Footnote 120. Langille v. Norton, 628 A.2d 669 (Me. 1993).

(n6)Footnote 121. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982). "Subject to life estate in grantor" conveyed fee simple in remainder. Saltzman v. Ahern, 306 So. 2d 537 (Fla. App. 1975).

(n7)Footnote 122. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n8)Footnote 123. Mangum v. Wilson, 70 S.E.2d 19 (N.C. 1952).

(n9)Footnote 124. Smith v. Smith, 62 S.E.2d 347 (W. Va. 1950).

(n10)Footnote 125. Gaylord v. Goldblatt, 423 So. 2d 203 (Ala. 1982).

(n11)Footnote 126. Schwren v. Falls, 87 S.E. 49 (N.C. 1915).

(n12)Footnote 127. Walker v. Sturgis, 198 N.E.2d 131 (Ill. App. 1964).

(n13)Footnote 128. Snider v. Wood, 531 So. 2d 864 (Ala. 1988).

(n14)Footnote 129. Gentle v. Frederick, 174 So. 606 (Ala. 1937).

(n15)Footnote 130. Sedgwick v. Laflin, 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 430 (1865).

(n16)Footnote 131. Munro v. Meech, 54 N.W. 290 (Mich. 1893).

(n17)Footnote 132. State v. Akron Exchange State Bank, 49 N.E.2d 344 (Ind. 1943); Poindexter v. Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., 128 S.E.2d 867 (N.C. 1963).

(n18)Footnote 133. Seifert v. Sanders, 358 S.E.2d 775 (W. Va. 1987); Weiss v. Broadway Nat'l Bank, 322 S.W.2d 427 (Tenn. 1959).

(n19)Footnote 134. Disabled Am. Vet. v. Mullin, 773 S.W.2d 408 (Tex. App. 1989).

(n20)Footnote 135. Weiss v. Broadway Nat'l Bank, 322 S.W.2d 427 (Tenn. 1959).

(n21)Footnote 136. Tax Comm'n v. Oswald, 141 N.E. 678 (Ohio 1923).

(n22)Footnote 137. Keener v. Korn, 264 S.E.2d 829 (N.C. App.), rev. denied, 301 N.C. 92 (1980).

(n23)Footnote 138. Thomason v. Hellams, 103 S.E.2d 324 (S.C. 1958).

(n24)Footnote 139. Brant v. Virginia Coal and Iron Co., 93 U.S. 326 (1876); DeCharette v. St. Matthews Bank and Trust Co., 283 S.W. 410 (Ky. 1926).

(n25)Footnote 140. Keener v. Korn, 264 S.E.2d 829 (N.C. App.), rev. denied, 301 N.C. 92 (1980).

(n26)Footnote 141. McClure v. Bailey, 209 S.W.2d 671 (Tex. Civ. App. 1948).

(n27)Footnote 142. Voigt v. Selander, 58 S.E.2d 25 (Va. 1950).

(n28)Footnote 143. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n29)Footnote 144. Id.

(n30)Footnote 145. Mulvane v. Rude, 45 N.E. 659 (Ind. 1896).

(n31)Footnote 146. Sterner v. Nelson, 314 N.W.2d 263 (Neb. 1982).

(n32)Footnote 147. Bradford v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 338 So. 2d 388 (Miss. 1976).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.05 Restrictions Against "Debasing a Fee."

[Go To Supp]

Whenever an instrument of transfer of an interest in property contains language indicating the reason for the transfer, a question always arises as to whether the grantor intended a defeasible fee, a mere easement or a fee simple absolute with a covenant, or whether the language was merely surplusage. Where one desires to transfer property or an interest therein to another but to limit the use thereof, one may do so by establishing one of several legal situations. In the instrument of transfer, deed or will, if the creator transfers a fee simple absolute, he may merely express a wish as to the proper use. Such precatory language has no legal effect on the transferee. Its persuasiveness is purely of a moral nature. n148 Or the transferor may create a covenant which upon acceptance by the transferee, creates a contract between him and the transferor, bringing damages for breach and invoking the aid of equity through injunctions or specific performance. n149 Or by the proper language the transferor may create a fee simple determinable in the transferee, the fee determining when the intended use ceases. n150 The transferor may also effect a fee upon condition subsequent or a fee subject to a conditional limitation; or the effect of the language used may be to create a right-of-way, n151 an easement, n152 or a mere license rather than a fee, or in some cases a life estate. Or the language may give rise to a trust, a lien or a charge upon the land.

So a deed to a city which provided that the land was always to be used as public property was held a conveyance in trust for a public purpose, and not a condition subsequent. n153

A gift in fee simple may be cut down by subsequent language which reduces the quantum of the estate granted. n154

A provision in a deed that it is made upon a money consideration, and a further consideration that the grantee shall do certain things, or that certain use shall be made of the property does not impose a condition and does not create an estate upon condition subsequent. n155

If the deed or will creates a fee, a mere statement of the purpose of the grant or devise is not sufficient to reduce the fee simple absolute to a determinable fee, n156 an easement, n157 nor to a fee upon condition subsequent. n158 A statement of purpose will not alone "debase" a fee. n159

When the purpose is public and general and does not inure especially to the benefit of the grantor, no condition is created, though such in form, in the absence of an express reservation of a right to re-enter on a failure of the grantee to use the land in the manner provided. n160 The language will not be implied to raise a condition if the instrument does not indicate an intent that the grant is to be void if the declared purpose is not fulfilled, particularly if it indicates that a trust should be caused instead. n161 Thus, a conveyance of land for a valuable consideration, in trust for the use of the inhabitants of a county, to accommodate the public service of the county, was held not to be defeated on a sale and conveyance by the vendees, whereby the use for the public service ceased. n162 So, where a conveyance was made to a county in fee simple, for the purpose of erecting thereon a courthouse, jail and county offices, and the county was subsequently divided, the seat of justice moved therefrom, the land sold and used for other purposes, and the proceeds thereof divided between the two counties, it was held that the title did not revert to the heirs of the original owners. n163 It is generally held that a deed which limits the use to which the land conveyed may be put does not, without more, create a conditional fee or work a forfeiture if put to another use. n164 Where a deed to real property recites a particular use to which the property is to be put without words of forfeiture, no condition subsequent is thereby created, but the provision creates a covenant. n165 Minuteness of direction concerning the administration of property conveyed to a public use is insufficient to take the case out of the rule that the mere expression of a purpose or particular use to which property is to be appropriated will not make the estate a conditional one. n166 However, every owner of property has the legal right to dispose of the estate, either absolutely or conditionally, or to regulate the manner in which the estate shall be used and occupied as the owner may deem best and proper, and if the conditions and restrictions imposed are not subversive of public interest they will be enforced. n167 As said in the Duke of Norfolk's Case, n168 words "eo intentione" do not make a condition, but a confidence and trust. As creating a trust or covenant they may, if properly expressed, be enforced, but not as creating a condition. Thus, the words expressing the purpose of a grant to be "for a burying-place forever" may be sufficient to raise a trust for that purpose, but they are too equivocal to create a condition subsequent. Such a condition will not be raised by inference or implication merely. n169 A deed of land to be used for certain purposes only, which also provides that, if it is used for other purposes, a stipulated sum shall be paid the grantor in addition to the original consideration, creates a condition which is discharged by payment or tender of such sum. n170

A deed for public purposes was held a covenant and not a condition, there being no words for defeasance. n171 Where lands are conveyed to a county or city for municipal purposes, the absolute title thereto passes, though the deed recites that it is to be used for a specified public purpose. n172 Thus, where the land was deeded to a city to be used as a burying ground and there was no intention shown that the title should revert to the grantor in case any other use was made thereof, there was no condition subsequent. n173 Where, however, the declared purpose for which the property shall be used is a matter that will inure specially to the benefit of the grantor, the courts are more inclined to treat the conveyance as conditional than when the use is for the benefit of the public at large. n174 A deed conveying land to a village may prescribe the terms on which the village shall hold the property, and a breach of the terms may give rise to a right of re-entry by the grantor or his heirs. n175

Where, however, an estate is conveyed in fee for a specified purpose and no other, the fee is a base fee, determinable upon the cessation of the use of the property for that purpose. n176 A gift for church purposes only was held to be a fee simple upon condition subsequent. n177 And, of course, the specific provision that the transferee shall hold title as long as a certain use is continued or until a use is discontinued or started or on condition that a certain use be or not be instituted or with a limitation over upon cessation or beginning of a stated use will give rise to a fee simple determinable upon condition subsequent or subject to a conditional limitation respectively. n178

A different rule applies as to devises for purposes declared, for it is held that the testator's words expressing intention in making the devise or the purpose for which the testator makes it may create a conditional estate. The same words used by a grantor in a deed would not make a condition unless the grant is purely voluntary, and there is no other consideration moving the grantor or donor besides the purpose for which the estate is declared to be created. n179 Thus, a devise by a testator to his wife for her life with remainder over to another, provided that such other live with his wife until her death, was held to create a remainder on condition precedent. n180

It has been held that where the declared purpose for which the property shall be used is a matter that will inure to the special benefit of the grantor the conveyance is conditional. n181 If the declared purpose of a conveyance, be such that it will inure especially to the benefit of the grantor, the grant may be void if the declared purpose is not fulfilled. n182

If the purpose for which a conveyance is made, or the land conveyed is to be used, is declared in the form of an express condition, especially if a provision for a reverter in case it is not so used is added, the property will revert upon breach of the condition, as where the proviso was that a schoolhouse should be erected upon the land; n183 or where a grant was made to trustees to build a house of worship, to hold as long as they should so use it and no longer; n184 or that the land should be used as a site for a courthouse; n185 that the grantee's husband should accept the conveyance and live upon the land conveyed, making it a home for his family; n186 that a grantee for life shall occupy the granted land; n187 that a railroad station should be permanently located upon the land; n188 that the land should be used as a burial ground; n189 that it should be for certain specified uses of a religious society, and for no other use whatever; n190 or that a building for municipal purposes should be erected within a time specified. n191

Statements of purpose in a conveyance to railroad companies, however, may limit the deed to an easement only. n192 The limitation of the use of the property may indicate an easement rather than a condition. Thus, a conveyance to a plank-road company, "for the use of a plank road," was held to create an easement, and the principal reasons assigned for so holding were that the land conveyed was a strip through the grantor's entire farm, that the grantee was already in occupation of the premises, that the only possible use to which it could put the premises was for its road, and that the consideration expressed in the deed was grossly inadequate for a grant in fee. n193 A deed conveying, for a stated consideration, "strip of land for road purposes," and "excepting and reserving the use and possession thereof so long as the grantor shall live, then full possession shall pass to the grantee; and the said grantor hereby warrants the title to said premises against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever," was held to convey an easement only and not the fee. n194 An easement was clearly created where the conveyance expressly declared, not only that the land was deeded for use as an alley, but also that the grant should be null and void whenever the premises ceased to be kept for this purpose. n195 An easement is also created by a conveyance of a right-of-way to a railroad company for a nominal consideration, although the grant is expressed to be upon condition that the land shall be used for railroad purposes only, and that, if it shall cease to be used for such purposes, it shall revert to the grantor. n196 Words describing the purpose for which a conveyance is made are frequently limitations upon the use that is to be made of the property and not conditions upon which it is to be held, unless there are apt words of condition or an express provision for a reverter. n197 A provision in a deed, expressed as a condition, that the grantee and his heirs shall allow the grantor and his heirs free access with teams to and from the waters of Hempstead harbor by the road now and heretofore used through his land, does not constitute a condition subsequent, but annexes the right-of-way as an easement to the land of the grantor, and is an exception or reservation in his favor. n198 Where one, for a nominal consideration, conveyed land to a city "to be forever held and used as a public park," it was held that the city acquired a qualified and not an absolute fee in the land, and could be restrained from using the land for any other purpose. n199 A provision in a deed that the grantee should convey to the grantor the same right-of-way over a certain conveyed lot as the grantor had over another lot created a right-of-way for the benefit of the grantor's land enforceable in equity, and not a condition subsequent. n200

Where a deed, after conveying a tract of land, described a narrow strip of land which was also conveyed, "for a road to and from said premises first above described," the question was whether, in view of this clause, the deed conveyed an absolute fee, a conditional fee or a mere easement in the strip of land described. This had to be determined from the language of the deed itself, unaided by anything else. The deed in terms conveyed, not an easement in the land, but the land itself, with an attempted restriction upon its use, if it be considered such, which is entirely consistent with the passing of the fee. There was nothing in the deed reserving to the grantor any use of, or dominion over, the land. The court held that these words of themselves were not sufficient either to limit the grant of the second tract to an easement or to create a condition subsequent. n201

Where there is no apparent motive for a condition, or no such interest exists in the grantor as demands the reservation of a condition, a clause which imports into the instrument a restriction or condition will be deemed as merely descriptive. n202

Where there is a condition as to use of land, a forfeiture does not arise where it is used for another purpose consistent with the stated purpose. n203 There must be such neglect to maintain a stated use as to indicate an intention not to comply with the terms of the condition as to institute a breach thereof. n204 Some courts, however, favor statements of purpose as showing mere rights-of-way. n205

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: restrict! or limit! or reduc! or purpose! w/30 debas! w/2 fee!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 148. In re Farrington's Trust Estate, 42 Hawaii 640 (1958) ("desire," "each," "request" and similar language are merely precatory); Grover v. Wood, 60 N.W.2d 316 (Mich. 1953) (desire that devisee devise to others did not debase the fee); In re Moore's Will, 177 N.Y.S.2d 367 (1958) (designation of purpose was merely precatory); In re Krantz' Will, 178 N.Y.S.2d 537 (1958); Comford v. Cantrell, 151 S.W.2d 1076 (Tenn. 1941).

Devise to A in fee subject to a trust in A for life gave A a fee simple which he could devise. Barth v. Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Co., 368 S.W.2d 339 (Ky. 1963).

Subsequent language does not reduce an absolute gift unless the intent is clear. Boutelle v. Boutelle, 188 A.2d 559 (Md. 1963).

Words adding a power to convey to words which create a fee do not debase the fee. Shaw v. Wertz, 369 S.W.2d 215 (Mo. 1963).

No defeasible estate arose upon language disposing of land for a stated purpose where the characteristic words of limitation or condition are missing and there is no provision for reacquisition. Matter of Reiger's Estate, 400 N.Y.S.2d 881 (A.D. 1977).

See Fratcher, Bequests for Purposes, 56 Iowa L. Rev. 773 (1971).

(n2)Footnote 149. Fordyce v. Woman's Christian Nat'l Library Ass'n, 96 S.W. 155 (Ark. 1906) 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485 (mere statement of purpose does not create condition); Davis v. St. Joe School Dist., 284 S.W.2d 635 (Ark. 1955) ("for school purposes only" was a covenant and did not create a determinable fee); Allen v. Trustees of Great Neck Free Church, 193 N.E. 324 (N.Y. 1934) (mere statement of purpose does not create condition). See Vol. 6 herein, on covenants for use of deeds.

(n3)Footnote 150. A deed providing that the land conveyed shall revert to the donor whenever it ceases to be used or occupied for a specified purpose creates a "determinable or qualified fee." Connecticut Junior Republic Ass'n v. Litchfield, 174 A. 304 (Conn. 1934), 95 A.L.R. 56; North v. Graham, 85 N.E. 267 (Ill. 1909), 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 624; Slegel v. Herbine, 23 A. 996 (Pa. 1892).

In re Pruner's Estate, 162 A.2d 626 (Pa. 1960) (bequest for a particular purpose creates a determinable fee ending when the purpose terminates).

(n4)Footnote 151. Warranty deed "to be used for road purposes" gave only an easement. Magnolia Petr. Co. v. West, 30 N.E.2d 24 (Ill. 1940). See Vol. 2 herein.

See Comment, The Real Property Interest Created in a Railroad upon Acquisition of Its Right-of-Way, 27 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 73 (1954).

(n5)Footnote 152. Conveyance of a strip of land "to be used for road purposes" conveyed only an easement. Magnolia Petr. Co. v. West, 30 N.E.2d 24 (Ill. 1940).

A reference to a grant as a "right-of-way" conveyed only an easement. Lillard v. Southern Ry., 330 S.W.2d 335 (Tenn. 1959).

(n6)Footnote 153. United States v. Certain Land in Cape Girardeau, 79 F. Supp. 558 (D. Mo. 1947).

(n7)Footnote 154. Farkas v. Calamia, 373 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1963).

(n8)Footnote 155. Majerus v. Santo, 10 N.W.2d 608 (Neb. 1943).

Statement of purpose or motive is not a condition. Rowell v. Gulf, M. & O.R.R., 28 So. 2d 209 (Ala. 1946); Gray v. Harriet Lane Home for Invalid Children, 64 A.2d 12 (Md. 1949); Shaw Univ. v. Durham Life Ins. Co., 53 S.E.2d 656 (N.C. 1949); Ange v. Ange, 71 S.E.2d 19 (N.C. 1952).

(n9)Footnote 156. Stuart v. Easton, 170 U.S. 383 (1898); Boylan v. Lillard, 174 F.2d 572 (10th Cir. 1949); Rowell v. Gulf, M. & O.R.R., 28 So. 2d 209 (Ala. 1946); Lynch v. Cypert, 302 S.W.2d 284 (Ark. 1957); Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 129 P. 794 (Cal. 1913); Boone Biblical College v. Forrest, 275 N.W. 132 (Iowa 1937), 116 A.L.R. 67; Light v. Third-Woodland Presbyterian Church, 311 S.W.2d 386 (Ky. 1958); Quinn v. Pere Marquette Ry., 239 N.W. 376 (Mich. 1931); Fuchs v. Reorganized Sch. Dist. 2, 251 S.W.2d 677 (Mo. 1952); Allen v. Trustees of Great Neck Free Church, 269 N.Y.S. 341 (1934); In re Krantz' Will, 178 N.Y.S.2d 537 (1958); Phillips Gas & Oil Co. v. Lingenfelter, 105 A. 888 (Pa. 1919), Abel v. Girard Trust Co., 73 A.2d 682 (Pa. 1950); Furman Univ. v. Glover, 83 S.E.2d 559 (S.C. 1954); Cf. Slegel v. Herbine, 23 A. 996 (Pa. 1892), where a conveyance which was declared to be for a stated purpose, "and no other," was held to create a determinable fee. But if the conveyance declares not only the purpose, but also that there shall be a reverter in case such purpose is no longer being carried out, a determinable fee may be found. North v. Graham, 85 N.E. 267 (Ill. 1908), 624, 126 Am. St. 189; May v. Board of Educ., 12 Ohio App. 456 (1920). As to Ohio law, see further Matter of Copps Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, 166 N.E. 218 (Ohio 1929), Schurch Harraman, 191 N.E. 907 (Ohio App. 1933).

Prior expression of purpose does not of itself suffice to limit the estate conveyed. Choctaw & Chickasaw Nations v. Board of Cty. Comm'rs, 361 F.2d 932 (10th Cir. 1966).

Mere statement in deed of intended use did not create a fee simple determinable. Selectmen of Town of Nahant v. United States, 293 F. Supp. 1076 (D. Mass. 1968).

A provision in a deed stating "Subject to the restriction that the... real property shall be operated and maintained solely for park, recreational and public accommodation, and convenience purposes" was not sufficient to create a defeasible fee, but instead was a fee simple absolute. City of Tempe v. Baseball Facilities, Inc., 534 P.2d 1056 (Ariz. App. 1975).

(n10)Footnote 157. Jackson v. Rogers, 54 S.E.2d 132 (Ga. 1949); Texas Elec. R. v. Neale, 252 S.W.2d 451 (Tex. 1952).

(n11)Footnote 158. Thus a grant of land "for a burying-place forever" will not be construed as a grant on a condition subsequent where there are no words indicating an intent that the grant shall be void if the declared purpose is not fulfilled. Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 125, 83 Am. Dec. 670 (1863).

See the following cases: Avery v. United States, 104 F. 711 (6th Cir. 1900); American Dirigold Corp. v. Dirigold Metals Corp., 125 F.2d 446 (6th Cir. 1942); Rowell v. Gulf, M. & O.R.R., 28 So. 2d 209 (Ala. 1946); Gramer v. Sacramento, 41 P.2d 543 (Cal. 1935); Scovill v. McMahon, 26 A. 479 (Conn. 1892), 21 L.R.A. 58; Adams v. Logan, 11 Ill. 336 (1849); Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905); Rockford Trust Co. v. Moon, 18 N.E.2d 447 (Ill. 1938); Noyes v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co., 21 N.E. 487 (Ill. 1889); Indianapolis, P. & C. R. v. Hood, 66 Ind. 580 (1879); Cleveland, C., C. & I. R. v. Coburn, 91 Ind. 557 (1883); Sumner v. Darnell, 27 N.E. 162 (1891), 13 L.R.A. 173; Ruggles v. Clare, 26 P. 25 (Kan. 1891); Louisville, H. & St. Louis R. Co. v. Baskett, 104 S.W. 695 (Ky. 1907); Kilpatrick v. Baltimore, 31 A. 805 (Md. 1895), 27 L.R.A. 643; Faith v. Bowles, 37 A. 711 (Md. 1897); Stearns v. Palmer, 10 Met. (51 Mass.) 32 (1845); Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 125 (1863); Episcopal City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 326 (1875); Farnham v. Thompson, 26 N.W. 9 (Minn. 1885); Miller v. Tunica, 7 So. 429 (Miss. 1890); Hand v. St. Louis, 59 S.W. 92 (Mo. 1900); Majerus v. Santo, 10 N.W.2d 608 (Neb. 1943); Newark v. Watson, 29 A. 487 (N.J. 1894); Lyon v. Hersey, 8 N.E. 518 (N.Y. 1886); Bigelow v. Barr, 4 Ohio 358 (1831); Miller v. Brookville, 89 N.E.2d 85 (Ohio 1949); Board of County Comm'rs v. Unknown Heirs, 87 N.E.2d 592 (Ohio Cem. Pl. 1947); Mickleson v. Gypsy Oil Co., 238 P. 194 (Okla. 1925); Keaton v. Oklahoma City, 102 P.2d 938 (Okla. 1940); Oklahoma City v. Local Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 134 P.2d 565 (Okla. 1943); Raley v. Umatilla County, 13 P. 890 (Or. 1887); Coffin v. Portland, 17 P. 580 (Or. 1888); Portland v. Terwilliger, 19 P. 90 (Or. 1888); Cook v. Trimble, 9 Watts (Pa.) 15 (1839); Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 410 (1836); Kirk v. King, 3 Pa. 436 (1846); Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126 (1847); Perry v. Scott, 51 Pa. 119 (1865); First M. E. Church v. Old Columbia Public Ground Co., 103 Pa. 608 (1883); Sapper v. Mathers, 133 A. 565 (Pa. 1926); Commonwealth ex rel. Bard v. Delaware Div. Canal Co., 1 A.2d 672 (Pa. 1938); Abel v. Girard Trust Co., 73 A.2d 682 (Pa. 1950); Loechel v. Columbia Borough School Dist., 85 A.2d 81 (Pa. 1952); Greene v. O'Connor, 25 A. 692 (R.I. 1892); Ecroyd v. Coggeshall, 41 A. 260 (R.I. 1898); Furman University v. Glover, 83 S.E.2d 59 (S.C. 1954); Huron v. Wilcox, 98 N.W. 88 (S.D. 1904); Nashville, C. & St. Louis R. v. Bell, 39 S.W.2d 1026 (Tenn. 1931); Gabert v. Olcott, 23 S.W. 985 (Tex. 1893); Hughes v. Gladewater County Line Ind. Sch. Dist., 76 S.W.2d 471 (Tex. 1934); Texas Elec. R. Co. v. Neale, 252 S.W.2d 451 (Tex. 1952); Boles v. Red, 227 S.W.2d 310 (Tex. Civ. App. 1950); Roadcap v. County School Board, 72 S.E.2d 250 (Va. 1952); Brown v. Caldwell, 23 W. Va. 187, (1883); Killgore v. Cabell County Court, 92 S.E. 562 (W. Va. 1917); Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. Paul R. Co., 38 Wis. 165 (1875); Polebitzke v. John Week Lumber Co., 147 N.W. 703 (Wis. 1914).

See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 44, Comment, stating that "when a limitation merely states the purpose for which the land is conveyed, such limitation usually does not indicate an intent to create an estate in fee simple which is to expire automatically upon the cessation of use for the purpose named."

(n12)Footnote 159. Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U.S. 693 (1878); Rostell v. Arkansas & Ozarks R. Corp., 323 S.W.2d 539 (Ark. 1959) (statements of purpose do not make a fee simple absolute defeasible); Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 129 P. 794 (Cal. 1913), Basin Oil Co. v. Inglewood, 271 P.2d 73 (Cal. App. 1954); D. C. Burns Realty & Trust Co. v. City & County of Denver, 354 P.2d 150 (Colo. 1960); Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468 (1863); Thomson v. Hart, 66 S.E. 270 (Ga. 1909); Weihe v. Lorenz, 98 N.E. 268 (Ill. 1912) (conveyance of strip of land "for alley purposes" conveys a fee); Higbee v. Rodeman, 28 N.E. 442 (Ind. 1891); Fayette County Board of Education v. Bryan, 91 S.W.2d 990 (Ky. 1936); Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359 (1921); Phinney v. Gardner, 115 A. 523 (Me. 1921); Kilpatrick v. Baltimore, 31 A. 805 (Md. 1895) 27 A.L.R. 643; Faith v. Bowles, 37 A. 711 (Md. 1897); Hill v. Towson Realty, Inc., 157 A.2d 796 (Md. 1960); Rice v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 141 (1866); Chouteau v. St. Louis, 55 S.W.2d 299 (Mo. 1932); Fuchs v. Reorganized School Dist. No. 2, 251 S.W.2d 677 (Mo. 1952); Nicoll v. New York & E. R. Co., 12 N.Y. 121 (1854); In re Saulpaugh's Will, 180 N.Y.S.2d 623 (1958); Braddy v. Elliott, 60 S.E. 507, (N.C. 1908); Sapper v. Mathers, 133 A. 565 (Pa. 1926); Abel v. Girard Trust Co., 73 A.2d 682 (Pa. 1950); Peters v. East Penn Twp. School Dist., 126 A.2d 802 (Pa. 1956); Boles v. Red, 227 S.W.2d 310 (Tex. Civ. App. 1950); King County v. Hanson Inv. Co., 208 P.2d 113 (Wash. 1949); Killgore v. Cabell County Ct., 92 S.E. 562 (W. Va. 1917).

Permitting subsequent words in a will to reduce a fee simple given by prior words. In re Wraught's Estate, 32 A.2d 8 (Pa. 1943).

(n13)Footnote 160. Thus, where land was conveyed to a city "on condition that it shall be forever kept open and used as a public highway, and for no other purpose," it was held that this clause merely declared the purpose of the conveyance, and was not a condition subsequent. "Such a declaration does not create an estate on condition, but merely imposes a confidence or trust on the land, or raises an implied agreement on the part of the grantee to use the land for the purpose specified. It matters not that the statement of the purpose for which the land was conveyed is in the form of a condition. The employment of apt words to create a condition does not necessarily and invariably have that effect, for these may give way to the intent of the party as ascertained by a construction of the instrument." Greene v. O'Connor, 25 A. 692 (R.I. 1892).

See the following cases: Atlanta v. Jones, 69 S.E. 571 (Ga. 1910); Kilpatrick v. Baltimore, 31 A. 805 (Md. 1895); Soukup v. Topka, 55 N.W. 824 (Minn. 1893); Nicholson v. Myres, 154 So. 282 (Miss. 1934); Smith v. Incorporated Village of Patchogue, 129 N.Y.S.2d 422 (1954).

Holding that the deed providing that the property should only be used for school purposes did not create a fee simple determinable lacking a specific reversion in language of the deed. Cummings v. United States, 409 F. Supp. 1064 (M.D.N.C. 1976).

(n14)Footnote 161. Allen v. Macy, 10 N.E. 578 (Ind. 1887); Higbee v. Rodeman, 28 N.E. 442 (Ind. 1891); Board of Educ. v. Mill Creek Methodist Church South, 45 S.W.2d 1026 (Ky. 1932); Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 125 (1863); Ayer v. Emery, 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 67 (1867); Sohier v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1 (1871); Episcopal City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 326 (1875); Holekamp Lumber Co. v. State Hwy. Comm'n, 173 S.W.2d 938 (Mo. 1943); Coffin v. Portland, 17 P. 580 (Or. 1888); Wilkes-Barre v. Wyoming Historical & Geological Soc'y, 19 A. 809 (Pa. 1890); Field v. Providence, 24 A. 143 (R.I. 1887); Greene v. O'Connor, 25 A. 692 (R.I. 1892); Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. Paul R. Co., 38 Wis. 165 (1875); Where a devise was made to a religious society, "to be and to remain to the use and benefit of said society and their successors forever,... provided that said real estate be not hereafter sold or disposed of, but the same may be leased or let, and the annual rents or profits applied to the use and benefit of the society," the Supreme Court held that the estate was not a conditional one, and that the supposed conditions were to be regarded as mere "limitations in trust." Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall (72 U.S.) 119 (1867).

A grant of land for religious purposes, or church purposes only, does not create a condition. Baldwin v. Atwood, 23 Conn. 367 (1854); Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905); Schipper v. St. Palais, 37 Ind. 505 (1871); Carter v. Branson, 79 Ind. 14 (1881); Cook v. Leggett, 88 Ind. 211 (1882); Packard v. Ames, 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 327 (1860); Farnham v. Thompson, 26 N.W. 9 (Minn. 1885); Taylor v. Binford, 37 Ohio 262 (1881); Griffitts v. Cope, 17 Pa. 96 (1851); Brendle v. German Reformed Congregation, 33 Pa. 415 (1859); Strong v. Doty, 32 Wis. 381 (1873).

A grant of land for a public square, or other public purpose, without an express condition. Thornton v. Trammell, 39 Ga. 202 (1869); Scantlin v. Garvin, 46 Ind. 262 (1874); Warren v. Lyons, 22 Iowa 351 (1867); Wellington v. Wellington, 26 P. 415 (Kan. 1891); Flaten v. Moorhead, 53 N.W. 807 (Minn. 1892), (provision was enforced as a restriction); Wilkes-Barre v. Wyoming Historical & Geological Soc., 19 A. 809 (Pa. 1890).

A grant for a railroad depot or station, or other specified purpose of the road. Thornton v. Trammell, 39 Ga. 202 (1869); Noyes v. St. Louis A. & T. H. R. Co., 21 N.E. 487 (Ill. 1889); Morrill v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 9 S.W. 657 (Mo. 1888).

A grant of land to a county, upon the sole consideration that the county seat had been established in the town where the land was situated, does not create a condition upon which the land will revert to the grantor upon a removal of the county seat. Adams v. Logan, 11 Ill. 336 (1849); Harris v. Shaw, 13 Ill. 457 (1851); Warren v. Patterson, 56 Ill. 111 (1870); Sumner v. Darnell, 27 N.E. 162 (Ind. 1891), Gadberry v. Sheppard, 27 Miss. 203 (1854); Poitevent v. Hancock, 58 Miss. 810 (1881); Miller v. Tunica, 7 So. 429 (1890); Kerlin v. Campbell, 15 Pa. 500 (1850); Gilmore v. Hayworth, 26 Tex. 89 (1861).

A grant for a school, college, or a like institution, and for no other purpose, does not create a condition. Heaston v. Randolph, 20 Ind. 398 (1863); Higbee v. Rodeman, 28 N.E. 442 (Ind. 1891); Curtis v. Board of Educ., 23 P. 98 (Kan. 1890); Newbold v. Glenn, 10 A. 242 (Md. 1887); Faith v. Bowles, 37 A. 711 (Md. 1897); Barker v. Barrows, 138 Mass. 578 (1885); Chouteau v. St. Louis, 55 S.W.2d 299 (Mo. 1932); Chapin v. School Dist. No. 2, 35 N.H. 445 (1857); Raley v. Umatilla County, 13 P. 890 (Or. 1887); Kirk v. King, 3 Pa. 436 (1846); Wilkes-Barre v. Wyoming Historical & Geological Soc'y, 19 A. 809 (Pa. 1890); Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345 (1876).

In Newpoint Lodge v. Newpoint, 37 N.E. 650 (Ind. 1894), it was held that a deed which "conveys and warrants" a parcel of land to a town "for the use of the common schools" passes the fee free from condition.

A grant of land to a city "as and for a street, to be kept as a public highway," does not create a condition subsequent so as to work a forfeiture in case the property is not maintained as a public street. Kilpatrick v. Baltimore, 31 A. 805 (Md. 1895).

A deed to the trustees of a church "in trust for said church, and for the sole use and behoof of the congregation" organized to build thereon and worship in said building, gives the grantor no right to object to a sale of the lot by the church to pay off a mortgage on a lot thereafter acquired for a church edifice. In re United Presbyterian Church, 30 A. 1012 (Pa. 1895).

A deed to the bishop of a Roman Catholic Church for the benefit of the church vests the complete legal title in the bishop. Gabert v. Olcott, 23 S.W. 985 (Tex. 1893).

Statement of purpose created merely a trust so that on condemnation the grantee and not the grantor took the award. Conditions subsequent are not favored. United States v. Certain Land in Cape Girardeau, 79 F. Supp. 558 (D. Mo. 1947).

(n15)Footnote 162. Kerlin v. Campbell, 15 Pa. 500 (1889).

Chief Justice Mercur said: "No restraint was imposed on an alienation of the land... No clause provided for a forfeiture or termination of the estate in case the land ceased to be used as a reservoir. No right of re-entry was reserved by the grantor on any contingency. No technical word to create a condition was used. No other words were used equivalent thereto, or proper to create a condition. The authorities show that the recital of the consideration, and a statement of the purpose for which the land is to be used, are wholly insufficient to create a conditional estate." First M. E. Church v. Old Columbia Public Ground Co., 103 Pa. 608 (1883).

(n16)Footnote 163. A deed of land for the sole use of a water company as a reservoir passes a title in fee simple, not determinable on the cessation of the use of the land for that purpose. Seebold v. Shitler, 34 Pa. 133 (1859). The Pennsylvania court has always adhered to the rule that "the mere expression of a purpose will not, of and by itself, debase a fee."

Nicholson v. Woodard, 114 S.E.2d 10 (Ga. 1960) (where the deed specified the use of the property for church and cemetery purposes the fact that it was used for cemetery purposes only did not cause the fee to terminate).

(n17)Footnote 164. Fuchs v. Reorganized School Dist. No. 2, 251 S.W.2d 677 (Mo. 1952); Ange v. Ange, 71 S.E.2d 19 (N.C. 1952); Sapper v. Mathers, 133 A. 565 (Pa. 1926), (rule applied in case of land conveyed for burial purposes only. The deed was considered as creating at most a limitation on the use of the property, but not on the title. The deed contained no forfeiture clause); Furman University v. Glover, 83 S.E.2d 559 (S.C. 1954).

(n18)Footnote 165. Faust v. Little Rock School Dist., 276 S.W.2d 59 (Ark. 1955); Davis v. St. Joe School Dist., 284 S.W.2d 635 (Ark. 1955); Priddy v. School Dist. No. 78, 219 P. 141 (Okla. 1923).

(n19)Footnote 166. Mahoning v. Young, 59 F. 96 (6th Cir. 1893), per Lurton, J.

(n20)Footnote 167. Natural Prods. Co. v. Dolese & Shepard Co., 140 N.E. 840 (Ill. 1923) (deeds containing restriction against quarrying stone).

The grantor may create a valid and enforceable condition subsequent by a voluntary conveyance of real estate for no consideration other than for the erection of a building thereon to be maintained for certain specified purposes and with a prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquors in the building or upon the premises and providing for a forfeiture in case of breach of the conditions. Ralston v. Hatfield, 143 N.E. 887 (Ind. App. 1924).

A warranty deed to a county of a block of ground, reciting a consideration of $1.00, conditioned on the erection of a county courthouse on the block, and containing no express right of reverter, was held to impose a condition subsequent. Brooks v. Kimball County, 256 N.W. 501 (Neb. 1934).

In Pennsylvania the cases are not in accord as to whether the limitation of the use to the stated purpose creates a determinable fee. Determinable fee created. Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126 (1847); Slegel v. Herbine, 23 A. 996 (Pa. 1892). Fee simple absolute unless other determining words used. Abel v. Girard Trust Co., 73 A.2d 682 (Pa. 1950).

(n21)Footnote 168. Dyer 138b (1681).

(n22)Footnote 169. Thornton v. Natchez, 129 F. 84 (5th Cir. 1904); Davis v. Jernigan, 76 S.W. 554 (Ark. 1903); First Presbyterian Church v. Bailey, 97 A. 583 (Del. 1916); Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905); Heaston v. Randolph, 20 Ind. 398 (1863); Hughes v. Miller, 175 S.W. 631 (Ky. 1915); Neely v. Hoskins, 24 A. 882 (Me. 1892); Kilpatrick v. Baltimore, 31 A. 805 (Md. 1895), Packard v. Ames, 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 327 (1860); Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 125, (1863); Thornton v. Natchez, 41 So. 498 (Miss. 1906); Bigelow v. Barr, 4 Ohio. 358 (1831); Wilkes-Barre v. Wyoming Historical & Geological Society, 19 A. 809 (Pa. 1890); Ecroyd v. Coggeshall, 41 A. 260 (R.I. 1898); Huron v. Wilcox, 98 N.W. 88 (S.D. 1904); Polebitzke v. John Week Lumber Co., 147 N.W. 703 (Wis. 1914).

(n23)Footnote 170. Board of Educ. v. First Baptist Church, 63 Ill. 204 (1872).

(n24)Footnote 171. Gordon v. Whittle, 57 S.E.2d 169 (Ga. 1950).

(n25)Footnote 172. Soria v. Harrison, 50 So. 443 (Miss. 1909); Ashuelot Nat'l Bank v. Keene, 65 A. 826 (N.H. 1907), 758; Freer v. Glen Springs Sanitarium Co., 115 N.Y.S 734 (1909); Ecroyd v. Coggeshall, 41 A. 260 (R.I. 1898); Huron v. Wilcox, 98 N.W. 88 (S.D. 1904).

(n26)Footnote 173. Thornton v. Natchez, 129 F. 84 (5th Cir. 1904); Gordon v. Whittle, 57 S.E.2d 169 (Ga. 1950).

(n27)Footnote 174. Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905).

(n28)Footnote 175. Scarborough Props. Corp. v. Briarcliff Manor, 16 N.E.2d 369 (N.Y. 1938).

(n29)Footnote 176. Hollins v. White, 287 S.W.2d 431 (Ky. 1956).

(n30)Footnote 177. Board of Trustees of Columbia Road Methodist Episcopal Church of Bogalusa v. Richardson, 44 So. 2d 321 (La. 1949).

Contra, Light v. Third-Woodland Presbyterian Church, 311 S.W.2d 386 (Ky. 1958) ("for stated purposes and no other" do not affect fee simple absolute).

(n31)Footnote 178. Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Hood, 66 Ind. 580 (1879); Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. v. Coburn, 91 Ind. 557 (1883); Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. Paul R. Co., 38 Wis. 165 (1875).

Where there is a statement of exclusive use as a purpose in a deed the question of whether full consideration was paid is determinative as to whether it created a fee simple determinable or fee simple absolute. Davis v. St. Joe School Dist., 284 S.W.2d 635 (Ark. 1955).

(n32)Footnote 179. Laberee v. Carleton, 53 Me. 211 (1891); Bray v. Hussey, 22 A. 220 (Me. 1891); Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 125 (1863); Portington's Case, 10 Coke 42a (1863); In re Merritt's Estate, 46 N.Y.S.2d 497 (1944); Duke of Norfolk's Case, Dyer 138b (1681).

(n33)Footnote 180. Adams v. Johnson, 76 A. 174 (Pa. 1910). See Hill v. Purdy, 46 App. D.C. 495 (1917); Garrison v. Hill, 28 A. 1062 (Md. 1894).

(n34)Footnote 181. Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905); Gabert v. Olcott, 23 S.W. 985 (Tex. 1893).

(n35)Footnote 182. Thus, where a strip of land adjoining the county jail was conveyed to a county in fee, to and for the uses and purposes following, to be and remain forever unbuilt upon, in order to prevent the escape of prisoners, the grantor reserved to himself "the free use of the premises so granted for an open yard, garden, or grass plot, with the rents, issues and profits." The object was to secure an open space adjoining the prison walls. This object was accomplished by a conveyance which, though it vested the fee, yet was so specific in defining the purpose for which the fee was conveyed, and so clear in reserving to the grantor the use of the premises subject to the space being kept open, that, although the deed contained no express clause of re-entry upon abandonment by the grantee, yet it was clear that the fee was a base or determinable one. It was accordingly held that the estate was determined on the removal of the prison to another site and the sale of the land, so that it ceased to be used for the purpose of a county jail. Slegel v. Herbine, 23 A. 996 (Pa. 1892), stated and approved by Lurton, J., in Mahoning v. Young, 59 F. 96 (6th Cir. 1893): "The case is authority only for the proposition that technical words importing an estate determinable upon a condition subsequent are not always essential, if the clear intent of the parties is shown by the whole scope of the instrument to be that the estate shall determine upon the cessation of the use defined." He also quotes Chief Justice Bigelow, in Rawson v. School Dist. No. 5, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 125 (1863), who said: "We believe there is no authoritative sanction for the doctrine that a deed is to be construed as a grant on a condition subsequent solely for the reason that it contains a clause declaring the purpose for which it is intended the granted premises shall be used, where such purpose will not inure specially to the benefit of the grantor and his assigns, but is in its nature general and public, and where there are no other words indicating an intent that the grant is to be void if the declared purpose is not fulfilled." To like effect see Gabert v. Olcott, 23 S.W. 985 (Tex. 1893), Gaines, J., delivering the opinion, said: "When the declared purpose for which the property shall be used is a matter that will inure to the special benefit of the grantor, the courts are more inclined to treat the conveyance as conditional than when, as in this case, the use is for the benefit of a special class of persons, or of the public at large. In this case it does not appear that the maintenance of a church upon the lots was a matter specially advantageous to the railway company, who made the grant."

(n36)Footnote 183. United States v. 2,086 Acres of Land, 46 F. Supp. 411 (W.D.S.C. 1942); Rosecrans v. Pacific Elec. R. Co., 134 P.2d 245 (Cal. 1943).

Mott v. Danville Seminary, 21 N.E. 927 (Ill. 1889); Sherman v. Jefferson, 113 N.E. 624 (Ill. 1916); Price v. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co., 188 S.W. 658 (Ky. 1916); Hayden v. Stoughton, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 528 (1827); Rowe v. Minneapolis, 51 N.W. 907 (Minn. 1892); Clarke v. Brookfield, 81 Mo. 503, (1884); St. Joseph Lead Co. v. Fuhrmeister, 182 S.W.2d 273 (Mo. 1944); Wood v. Cheshire, 32 N.H. 421 (1855); Duester v. Alvin, 145 P. 660 (Or. 1915); Smith v. Glen Alden Coal Co., 32 A.2d 227 (Pa. 1943); Carpenter v. Graber, 1 S.W. 178 (Tex. 1886); Pepin Co. v. Prindle, 21 N.W. 254 (Wis. 1884).

See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 45 Comment f, illustration 5, ss.

(n37)Footnote 184. Grissom v. Hill, 17 Ark. 483 (1856); Spies v. Rome, W. & O. R. R., 15 N.Y.S. 348 (1891); Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. 335 (1869).

(n38)Footnote 185. Brooks v. Kimball County, 256 N.W. 501 (Neb. 1934); Spies v. Rome, W. & O.R.R., 15 N.Y.S. 348, (1891); Pepin Co. v. Prindle, 21 N.W. 254 (Wis. 1884).

(n39)Footnote 186. Odell v. Cannon, 4 S.E. 558 (Ga. 1887).

(n40)Footnote 187. Lewis v. Lewis, 57 A. 735 (Conn. 1904).

(n41)Footnote 188. Cleveland, C., C. & I.R. Co. v. Coburn, 91 Ind. 557 (1883).

A deed conveying "a strip of land" to a railroad company in the absence of any limitation in the deed conveys fee simple title to the strip of land. Keen v. Cleveland, C., & St. Louis R. Co., 64 N.E.2d 499 (Ill. 1945).

(n42)Footnote 189. Scovill v. McMahon, 26 A. 479 (Conn. 1892).

(n43)Footnote 190. Reed v. Stouffer, 56 Md. 236 (1881); Second Universalist Soc. v. Dugan, 5 A. 415 (Md. 1886).

(n44)Footnote 191. Clarke v. Brookfield, 81 Mo. 503 (1884).

(n45)Footnote 192. Barlow v. Chicago, R.I. & P.R. Co., 29 Iowa 276 (1886); Norton v. Duluth Transfer R. Co., 151 N.W. 907 (Minn. 1915); Blakely v. Chicago, K. & N. R. Co., 64 N.W. 972 (Neb. 1895).

(n46)Footnote 193. Robinson v. Missisquoi R. Co., 10 A. 522 (Vt. 1887).

(n47)Footnote 194. Maxwell v. McCall, 124 N.W. 760 (Iowa 1910).

(n48)Footnote 195. Sanborn v. Minneapolis, 29 N.W. 126 (Minn. 1886).

(n49)Footnote 196. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Ziebarth, 33 N.E. 256 (Ind. App. 1893).

See the following cases: Ingalls v. Byers, 94 Ind. 134 (1883); Douglass v. Thomas, 2 N.E. 562 (Ind. 1885); Nichols v. New England Furn. Co., 59 N.W. 155 (Mich. 1894); Soukup v. Topka, 55 N.W. 824 (Minn. 1893); Williams v. Patterson, 21 So. 2d 477 (Miss. 1945); Broderick v. Tyer, 187 S.W.2d 476 (Mo. App. 1945); Robinson v. Missisquoi R. Co., 10 A. 522 (Vt. 1887).

(n50)Footnote 197. Curtis v. Board of Educ., 23 P. 98 (Kan. 1890).

(n51)Footnote 198. Baker v. Mott, 28 N.Y.S. 968, (1894).

(n52)Footnote 199. Flaten v. Moorhead, 53 N.W. 807 (Minn. 1892), aff'd, 46 N.E. 1144 (N.Y. 1897).

In Soukup v. Topka, 55 N.W. 824 (Minn. 1893), Mitchell, J., commenting upon this case, said: "While we do not decide whether this conveyed a conditional fee or a mere easement, the controlling considerations, aside from the language of the deed, which led us to hold that it did not convey an absolute fee, were that the grantee was a municipal corporation, and the consideration named in the deed merely nominal."

(n53)Footnote 200. Boston Consol. Gas Co. v. Oakes, 181 N.E. 225 (Mass. 1932).

(n54)Footnote 201. Soukup v. Topka, 55 N.W. 824 (Minn. 1893).

(n55)Footnote 202. See Downen v. Rayburn, 73 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1905); Spaulding v. Woodward, 53 N.H. 573 (1873);

Post v. Weil, 22 N.E. 145 (N.Y. 1889) Greene v. O'Connor, 25 A. 692 (R.I. 1892).

In Flajole v. Gallaher, 93 N.W.2d 249 (Mich. 1958), court construed a provision in a deed that the land was to be used for the erection of a kiln and not used for such purposes to revert to the grantor merely required the erection and not maintenance of the kiln, so that the deed became a fee simple absolute upon erection of the kiln.

(n56)Footnote 203. Gordon v. Woodruff County, 232 S.W.2d 832 (Ark. 1950); Board of Supvrs. v. Newell, 56 So. 2d 689 (Miss. 1952); Hart v. Northeastern N. Mex. Fair Ass'n, 265 P.2d 341 (N.M. 1953).

(n57)Footnote 204. Etheridge v. Dallas, 246 S.W.2d 692 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952) (constructing road through grounds conveyed for park purposes only was breach of condition subsequent); St. Clara College v. Madison, 27 N.W.2d 745 (Wis. 1947); Koonz v. Joint Sch. Dist. No. 4, 41 N.W.2d 616 (Wis. 1950).

(n58)Footnote 205. Parks v. Gates, 199 P. 40 (Cal. 1921); Forgeus v. Santa Cruz, 140 P. 1092 (Cal. App. 1914).

Contra, result based on presumption of fee simple. Cooper v. Selig, 191 P. 983 (Cal. App. 1920).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.06 The Use of Words of Limitation to Create a Fee Simple.n206

[Go To Main]

§ 17.06(a) At Common Law.

At common law unless the words "and his heirs" were used in grants of realty no fee simple or fee tail could arise no matter how clear the grantor's intent. The expansion of the early life estate into the fee through the use of the words "et hereditibus suis" "and his heirs" in making an enfeoffment has already been noticed. n207 The common law through its years of development religiously held to this principle, with but very few exceptions, that such words of limitation were a sine qua non in conveyancing to create a fee. Regardless of the intention of the parties, the grantee only received a life estate if these magic "words of art" were not used, n208 except under certain limited circumstances. n209

In order to create an estate in fee simple by deed at common law, it was essential that the limitation shall be to the grantee "and his heirs," or some equivalent expression. n210 At common law a deed made to one "and his heirs," this much and nothing more, conveyed to the grantee an estate in fee simple. n211

> If a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee simple, it behooveth him to have these words in his purchase, 'to have and to hold to him and his heirs'; for these words 'his heirs' make the estate of inheritance. For if a man purchase lands by these words, 'to have and to hold to him forever,' or by these words, 'to have and to hold to him and his assigns forever' -- in these two cases he hath but an estate for term of life, for that there lack these words, 'his heirs,' which words only make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants. n212

An estate in fee cannot be created by describing it as such, as "to have and to hold to him in fee simple," or by the use of a word synonymous with "heirs." n213 It does not avail to say that the grantee is to have and to hold to him forever, n214 nor to his "issue," n215 children, n216 "representatives" n217 or "assigns." n218 The use of the word "tenement," when used alone, without other circumstances, will not be construed to pass a fee. n219 Conversely, "heirs" are ordinarily words of limitation creating a fee simple, not words of purpose creating a present estate in those who would be the named person's legal heirs if he were dead. n220

"Children" is ordinarily taken as a word of purchase creating an estate in those so described and is not a word of limitation. n221 A devise to wife and daughter and their descendants did not create a future interest in the descendants. n222 In some cases "to A and his issue" have been held to be words of limitation creating a fee tail. Other cases treat "issue" as meaning children, definite factors of issue and thus as words of purchase. The use of the word "forever" or to the grantee and his assigns forever vested a life estate only in the grantee. n223 No legal construction would obviate the necessity of the use of the word "heirs." n224 No matter how plainly it was declared that the grantee was to have an estate in fee simple or in perpetuity, the deed without the word "heirs" conveyed to him only a life estate. n225 A few authorities held in later years, however, that the use of the word is not essential where it clearly appears on the face of the deed and the circumstances attending the transaction that the intention was to create a fee. n226 Where the words of grant clearly import an estate in fee simple, such estate is not to be cut down except by some other provision equally certain. n227 The use of technical words of inheritance is strongly indicative of an intention to convey an estate in fee. n228

While there is a presumption that the use of the words "and his heirs" in a will merely described the estate and did not express an intent that the heirs by named beneficiary could take the devise in the event of the beneficiary predeceasing the testator, this is not conclusive and the contrary may be determined from the four corners of the will. n229

Thus a deed conveying real estate to a named person, to her sole and separate use and benefit during her natural life and to her heirs at her death, was held to pass a fee to the grantee, in the absence of a showing that the grantor did not use the words "her heirs" in a technical sense. n230 Also, a deed conveying land to a named grantee during her natural life and after her death to the heirs of her body only, to hold forever, after the birth of issue of the grantee, was held to convey a fee-simple estate entitling the heirs to take by inheritance and not as purchasers. n231 In an action to reform such an instrument, technical words may be inserted and given full effect, n232 but not as against the rights of a bona fide purchaser. n233

When the estate is created by deed the limitation must be to the heirs with the disjunctive "and" and not to one "or" one's heirs, as such a grant conveys a life estate only. n234 However, the rule enunciated in Restatement of the Law of Property is that a conveyance to the grantee "or his heirs" passes a fee simple absolute to the grantee. n235 The word "or" is often used in instruments of conveyance in place of the word "and," and is generally construed to mean "and" where that meaning is apparent from the context. n236 So where "or" was used in a deed stipulating that the grantor "or" heirs should have the privilege of a way, the word "or" was construed as "and." n237

Coke declared that the word "heirs" must be used in the plural number. "For," he observes, n238 "if a man give land to a man and to his heir in the singular number, he hath but an estate for life, for his heir cannot take a fee simple by descent, because he is but one, and therefore in that case his heirs shall take nothing." But Coke's opinion has been denied by later authorities, n239 and it is doubtful if it should be followed at the present day. The word "heir" would doubtless be regarded as nomen collectivum, or a clerical mistake, for "heirs." n240 The word "heir," though singular in form, may have been used in the plural sense, in which case it will be given its technical meaning as a word of limitation. n241

The word "heirs" must be accompanied by a pronoun which shows its application. n242 Unless there appear in the deed the word "heirs," unqualified except by a possessive pronoun, it is not a fee-simple estate which the deed conveys. n243 So the words "his, or her, heirs" are absolutely essential to the creation of an estate in fee simple. No other words and no description of the estate is sufficient. "These words only make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants." n244 If the "heirs" referred to in the habendum are not the heirs of the grantee, the words are of purchase. n245 In Ohio words of inheritance were necessary for the forfeitees, on breach of a condition subsequent, to take a fee simple. n246

It is not universally true that a limitation to one and one's heirs creates a fee-simple estate. Reference must always be made to the nature and extent of the grantor's interest, the qualifying words, if any, as well as to the interest which is granted. A conveyance by a life tenant, though it purports to convey a fee, passes only the life estate to the grantee. n247 A grant to one and one's heirs for the life of another does not pass a fee simple, as the words "for the life of another" qualify and limit the duration of the grant to a life estate and, though the word "heirs" be used, an estate for years or at will may be created. n248 Notwithstanding a statutory provision that the words "convey and warrant" shall convey a fee simple to the grantee, the grantor may use these words and yet actually convey in the deed, after the description of the land, a less estate than one of inheritance to the first taker, which will be given effect. n249 In a few areas the necessity of the use of words of limitation to create a fee has not been recognized even in the absence of statute. n250

Even at common law the requirement of the use of words of inheritance to create a fee was not so rigid in the case of wills as it was in deeds. In wills, it was a rule of intent, not of law. n251

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: word! w/2 limit! w/15 creat! w/15 fee simple

§ 17.06(b) Common Law Exceptions to Required Use of Words of Limitation.

The common law developed a number of isolated exceptions to the rule that a fee simple could not be created without the use of words of limitation. The principal of these exceptions was in the case of wills.

We have had some evidence to the effect that by the early common law a devise of lands, without the use of technical words of limitation, passed a life estate only to the devisee. n252 This rule was soon changed so as to allow a fee to pass without the use of technical words, n253 and the fact that a devise does not contain technical words of inheritance does not prevent the devisee from taking the fee. n254 "Children" has, however, been taken to be a word of limitation in a will. n255 Some of the courts have found another exception in the necessity of use of words of limitation at common law in a grant of an absolute gift of all rents and profits, holding that this creates a fee simple absolute. n256

It is also a rule of the common law that a devise of land generally, without words indicating the character of the estate devised, passes to the devisee a life estate only. Even this rule gives way to the testator's expressed intention that the devisee take the fee. n257 Wills are construed with more liberality than deeds, and courts are less inclined to depart from the technical meaning of the word "heirs" in the one case than in the other. n258 So the presumption that the word "heirs" is used in its technical sense is much more difficult to overcome in the case of deeds than of wills. n259

The reason assigned for relaxing the rule in the case of devises is that the testator is supposed to be without that professional assistance of which one may avail oneself in making a deed. The law, therefore, regards the intention of the testator more than the legal import of the words used in attempting to express his meaning. If, by the terms of the whole will as applied to the subject matter and read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, it can be reasonably inferred that he intended to pass a fee, such estate will pass in the absence of technical words of limitation. n260 Unless such intention can be discovered, the devisee will take a life estate only. n261 In determining the nature of an estate created by will, the will itself is to be first consulted to ascertain the intention of the testator, and after this has been determined, the statute is to be consulted in order to ascertain how far the estate intended to be created by the testator is affected, limited or inhibited by law. n262 The devise will be deemed one in fee if a lesser estate is not clearly shown. n263

The general rule is that a bequest of personal property in general terms will give the legatee an absolute title to such property, and where a general devise of real property is coupled with a general bequest of personal property, such fact is ordinarily sufficient to indicate the intention on the part of the testator to devise the real property in fee. n264 On the other hand, the mere fact that a testator devises his real property to the first devisee "in fee simple" is not conclusive in the absence of statute that such devisee takes a fee-simple estate, provided other provisions of the will indicate unmistakably that the testator intended the "fee simple" devisee to have a lesser estate only. n265 An unrestricted devise of real estate passes a fee thereto to the devisee. n266 If land was intended to be devised, a fee-simple title passed notwithstanding the absence of words of limitation, where there were no words from which a contrary intention appeared. n267 Generally, a devise of realty "absolutely" or as "absolute property," without more passes a fee-simple title to the devisee. n268 Where there is an evenly balanced doubt as to the character of the estate intended to be devised, the doubt will be resolved in favor of a fee rather than a lesser interest. n269

An English court will make a very liberal construction of a will, to carry real estate without words of freehold. n270 So, in creating estates by will, no technical words of inheritance or procreation were necessary to establish a fee tail, but any expressions in the will denoting an intention to give the devisee an estate of inheritance descendible to all or some of his lineal but not collateral heirs was sufficient. n271 Thus the word "heirs" in a will devising land to the testator's widow and her heirs is a word of limitation vesting a fee, unless a contrary intention is manifested from the will or deducible from the circumstances of the parties. n272

Under an unrestricted devise of the testator's "estate," the devisee will take the fee if the testator was the owner thereof, n273 but, if the word "estate" is used simply to describe the property, without reference to the estate created, the fee does not pass by such use alone. n274 A testamentary provision that "I give, devise, and bequeath to my beloved wife the remainder and residue of my estate" will, when standing alone, pass a fee simple. n275 The use of the word "estate" in a devise is held sufficient to pass a fee to the devisee, n276 unless there are other words expressing a different intention. n277 Likewise, a devisee of "all" one's "estate" passes a fee to the devisee. n278 In the absence of other words in the will controlling or restraining its operation, the word "estate" means the quantity of interest which the testator has as well as merely the lands. n279

A release by one of several joint tenants seised in fee simple may be made without words of inheritance. n280 Conveyances between tenants in common cannot operate by way of release, and must contain the word "heirs" to pass a fee. n281 A deed of release conveys a fee to the original grantor, although it contains no words of inheritance. n282 The release is regarded as simply extinguishing the right or interest of the releasor, leaving the others as sole owners.

The absence of a devise over indicates the devise of a fee. n283 The fixing of a charge on a devise is an indication that the devisee was given a fee simple. n284

As in a grant at common law, so in a reservation, to create an estate in fee, the necessary words of inheritance must be used, and in general their place cannot be supplied by any other words of perpetuity. n285 A reservation by the grantor to the grantor or the grantor's heirs may be construed to be a reservation to the grantor and heirs, n286 but a permanent easement in favor of the grantor's other land may be created without words of limitation. n287

An exception need not be made with words of limitation, because the estate or rights excepted remain the grantor's property, and inure to the benefit of his heirs and assigns, just as any of the grantor's property does. n288

This rule conforms with the rule stated in the Restatement of the Law of Property . n289

A sale by an officer of the law under an order of court may operate to pass an estate in fee without the use of the word "heirs" as where a sheriff, on an execution sale of real estate owned by the judgment debtor in fee, executes to the purchaser at such sale a deed of "all the estate, title, and interest" which the judgment debtor had in such land, the deed passes a fee in the land, though the word "heirs" is omitted. The sheriff had no authority to sell less than the debtor's entire estate, which was an estate in fee. n290

There is an exception to the common-law rule requiring the use of the word "heirs" to create an estate in fee in case of a grant to a corporation sole:

> for if lands be given to a sole body politic or corporate, as to a bishop, vicar, master of a hospital, etc., there, to give him an estate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he must have these words, 'to have and to hold to him and his successors;' for without these words... there passeth no inheritance; for, as the heir doth inherit to the ancestor, so the successor doth succeed to the predecessor.

n291

Words of qualification or limitation need not be used in order to vest a fee in a corporation. n292 A deed to a corporation aggregate conveys a fee-simple estate, although it does not contain words of limitation or succession. n293 This rule conforms with the rule laid down in the Restatement of the Law of Property as applied to corporations sole, n294 as well as to corporations aggregate. n295 The use of the words "its successors and assigns, forever," passes an estate in fee simple at common law. n296

Under a deed to a named bishop of the Roman Catholic Church "and his successors in office and assigns forever," a fee-simple estate passed to such bishop and his successors in their corporate capacity. n297

The common-law rule that the word "heirs," or its equivalent, was necessary in a deed in order to convey a fee, had no application when the grant was to the crown. While the individual representing the sovereignty might change, the sovereign itself was immortal by perpetual succession. On principle, a life estate to an ideal being having a perpetual and uninterrupted existence must be coextensive with a fee or perpetuity, and, hence, words of succession cannot extend it. So a deed to the government does not require words of succession or inheritance in order to pass a fee. n298

There is considerable disagreement as to whether a fee could arise at common law out of a grant of a power of disposition and use. The weight of authority today is that such a power even though unfettered is not sufficient to convert a life estate into a fee, n299 but that such a power if sufficient in extent will transform a defeasible fee into a fee simple absolute.

In case a deed contains a reference to some other instrument which contains a limitation to heirs, and conveys the same estate as therein, the deed may pass a fee simple without the use of the word "heirs" in express terms. "Words of direct and immediate reference will suffice. The word 'heirs' or 'successors' need not be in the identical deed of grant, or other mode of assurance by which the estate is granted or conveyed. Thus, when one to whom lands have been granted in fee, after reciting the grant, or without any recital, grants the land to another as fully as they are granted to the grantee, or where one grants two acres to A and B, to hold one acre to A and A's heirs, and the other acre to B, in form aforesaid," n300 the fee will pass. A deed which, after referring to the conveyance to the grantor, conveyed "all the grantor's estate, right, title, interest, term of years to come, property, claim, and demand both in law and in equity," conveys the property as fully as it was conveyed to the grantor, and as the conveyance to the grantor gave the estate in fee, the grantor's conveyance vests the fee, even though the word "heirs" does not appear in the deed. n301 The Restatement of the Law of Property lays down the principle that an estate in fee simple may be created in a natural person by reference to another conveyance containing words of inheritance, but takes no position as to whether such estate is created where the instrument to which reference is made does itself contain words of inheritance. n302 A fee-simple estate has been considered as having been passed where an assignment on the back of a deed made reference to the deed, even though the assignment contained no words of inheritance. n303

One of the common-law exceptions to this almost universal requirement was the rule in Shelley's Case. There, although words of limitation were not used in the grant to the immediate taker, there being no intention to create a fee, the limitation over to the taker's heirs after death created a fee just as though words of limitation had been, in the first instance used. The difference in modern treatment that the courts and statutes have given "words of limitation" and "Shelley's case" necessitate, however, the maintenance of a clear distinction between these two legal property rules.

Thus though sometimes it is said there is no difference in effect between a conveyance to "A and his heirs" and a limitation to "A for life, remainder to his heirs" since they both pass an estate in fee simple, the former by the use of the word "heirs" and the latter by operation of the rule in Shelley's case, n304 such a statement does not accurately reflect the situation and leads to possible erroneous results. And in the case of an executory contract to sell and convey land the words of limitation were not necessary to create an equitable fee in the vendee. Equity supplied the words of inheritance.

If a personal charge of the payment of a certain sum is imposed upon the devisee, such as the payment of debts of the testator or legacies or a gross sum, the presumption is that the devisee takes a fee. n305

An intention to pass a fee to the devisee is indicated from such condition or charge. n306 Where there is an express limitation of the estate or interest devised, a direction that the devisee shall pay pecuniary legacies does not make the interest a fee simple. n307 Where the devise is indefinite and the testator's intention is in doubt, such charge will have the effect of making the devise one in fee simple. n308 If the legacies are made a personal charge on the devisee, an acceptance of the devise imposes a personal liability on the devisee, who will take the estate devised as a purchaser in fee, unless the estate is limited. If the legacies are charged on the estate devised, the devisee does not take as a purchaser but as a beneficial devisee. n309 The rule that a devise of land without words of limitation passes a life estate only does not apply where the devisee's estate is not defined and the devisee is directed to pay certain debts or legacies. n310 If the payment is to be made out of the rents and profits of the estate devised and is not a personal charge upon the devisee, the devisee takes a life estate only. n311 A devise upon condition the devisee make payments to other persons within a stated time after the will is admitted to probate created a fee simple subject to charge rather than a condition. n312

A devise burdened with a charge might not prove a beneficial interest, unless given in fee. n313 A devisee may take a life estate only even though legacies are charged against the devise, when it appears that such was the intention of the testator. n314

An unqualified and unlimited gift of "rents," "income" or "profits" of real estate, if there be no disposition of the property itself, passes the absolute interest in the property to the beneficiary, for the reason that the value of the property lies in the rents, income and profits thereof. n315 A bequest of the income from certain described real estate, coupled with a direction to the executor to take charge of the real estate, collect the rents, keep the property in repair, pay the taxes, and pay the balance of the income therefrom to the testator's son, does not convey the fee but creates a trust for life. Thus a direction in a will to divide the entire income of the residuary estate among five named children, there being no disposition of the corpus, was held to constitute a devise of the property itself. n316 Also, a gift of the "use," n317 "rents" and "profits" of land for life is a gift of the land itself for life, n318 and a gift of a part of the rents is a gift of a corresponding part of the land. n319 It has been held that the rule is rebutted in a will devising the income to the testator's wife by other provisions limiting the time to the wife's life. n320 A gift of "rents and profits" has been held to pass real estate which was purchased with the proceeds of such rent. n321 The rule is not applicable where the testator has expressly or by implication disposed of the corpus in some other way. Thus a gift of the "profits and benefits" of certain real estate, followed by a provision for the sale of such real estate at a fixed time, was held not to pass the fee. n322 A gift of income without limit of time is an absolute vested interest. n323

While a gift of the use or the use and occupation of land will carry the fee, yet if the gift be to a trustee to permit the beneficiary to occupy without rent, the interest passing will amount to a license only. n324 If the use be restricted to life, during minority, during widowhood or during widowhood until marriage, until a certain age, and the like, only an estate or interest commensurate with the limitation prescribed will pass. n325

A release does not require the use of words of limitation since it is not an alienation but a mere discharge of claims of one to the other arising out of the original limitation. n326

Deeds to corporations create fee simples though no words of limitation are used. n327 A conveyance to the trustees of a corporation without naming them conveys a fee-simple title to the corporation. n328 Where there are no limitations over, the words "successors and assigns" are not necessary in a devise to an institution. At common law on dissolution of a corporation, real estate belonging to it reverted to the original grantor, n329 unless it has been conveyed prior to dissolution. n330 So in the absence of statute today when a corporation owning realty is dissolved the real estate will revert to the original grantor instead of passing as an asset in kind to the shareholders if owned by the corporation at the time of dissolution.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: common law w/5 exception! w/30 word! w/2 limit! w/15 fee simple

§ 17.06(c) Use of Words of Limitation in Trusts and Equitable Estates.

While at common law there appears to have been no exception to the requirement that the words of limitation were required to vest a fee in a feoffee to uses as well as to a feoffee for the feoffee's own use, the same is not always true with respect to the cestui que use. The common-law rule as to the use of the word "heirs" was the same in the conveyance of an equitable estate in fee as in a legal estate in fee to one other than a trustee; n331 but an equitable estate may have the character of inheritability though the word "heirs" is not used in the instrument creating it, provided it appears in the context that such was the clear intention of the grantor.

This is an instance where courts of chancery do not adopt the same rules of construction that prevail in courts of law. If the meaning of the grantor is clear that the grantor intended for the beneficiary to have an estate in fee, the beneficiary will take such an estate, though technical terms of the common law used in the limitation of such an estate have been disregarded. So the beneficiary may have an equitable fee without the word "heirs," and an equitable entail without the words "heirs of the body." n332 The word "heirs" was not necessary, even at common law, in order for a deed to convey an equitable fee. n333 Ordinarily, an equitable estate in fee is subject to the same incidents which attach to a legal estate in fee, and, generally speaking, these include the right to dispose of the estate by alienation as well as by devise. n334 If a deed in trust declares the trust to be for a person named "and his heirs," the beneficiary takes an equitable estate in fee simple which he may devise, the word "heirs" being a word of limitation. n335 An equitable estate created by the premises cannot be enlarged to an estate in fee by a limitation to heirs in the habendum. n336

Another exception to the common-law rule requiring the use of the word "heirs" to create a fee is in case of a trust. n337 Where, upon the face of the deed, it appears that the conveyance is in trust for a use, the full performance of which requires or may possibly require the vesting of a fee in the trustee, the grantee is held to take an estate in fee simple without the use of the word "heirs" as a word of limitation upon the estate conveyed. n338 A conveyance to a trustee will give a legal estate in fee if the trust limited upon it be to the cestui que trust and his heirs. Although the words of inheritance in such case are connected with the estate of the cestui que trust, they will be held to relate to the legal estate of the trustee, in order to give effect to the intention of the parties. n339 A trustee takes exactly that quantity of interest which the purposes of the trust require. n340 A trustee will have a fee-simple estate if the trust gives power to sell n341 or if a fee is necessary in order to carry out the purposes of the trust, though the word "heirs" is not used. n342 If the complete execution of the trust does not require the trustee to hold an estate in fee, the use of the word "heirs" does not necessarily carry such estate. n343 A deed which is in effect a covenant to stand seised need not contain words of inheritance in order for it to carry the fee to the remainderman. n344

If the trust can be administered only through the ownership of a fee-simple title, such title will be deemed granted, even though the limitations of the deed may not clearly show that a fee simple was transferred. n345

Where a gift is made to a person in a trust character, the person may not assert title to it as an individual but must take it subject to the discharge of the trust obligation to use it for the benefit of others. n346 A conveyance to a trustee transfers no more of title to the property than is necessary for the proper execution of the trust. n347

A trustee's title to property in a testamentary trust comes from the will. n348 In a devise in trust, a fee-simple estate in the trustee will be implied if such interest is necessary for the proper execution of the terms and conditions of the trust. n349 Thus a devise to a trustee, coupled with a direction to pay debts, gives the devisee a fee. n350 A devise of realty to a trustee in trust to sell and convert it into money, with discretionary power to postpone the sale and to invest the proceeds for the benefit of the cestui que trust, has been held to pass a fee simple to the trustee. n351 Authority conferred by will upon a trustee to whom the property is devised to manage, sell and transfer the estate during the life of the beneficiary vests in him the fee-simple title, subject to the provisions of the will. n352 If the subject of a trust be a legal interest in property, and capable of legal transfer, the trust is not perfectly created unless the trustee be vested with a legal interest. n353 Where a will contains no words expressly creating a trust or devising the legal title to the executor or trustees, such devise may be implied, where the powers conferred and duties imposed on the executors are of such a character that a legal title is necessary to their proper exercise or performance. n354 Courts are inclined to presume an intention on the part of the testator to create a fee-simple estate, but it must not be forgotten that at common law a general devise of real estate, without defining the interest to be taken by the devisee, gave only a life estate unless something appeared in the will showing an intention to create a greater estate. n355 Where a will, devising a life estate in land, directs the executor to sell the land on the life tenant's death and turn over the proceeds to a designated party for a charitable use, the executor does not take the fee by implication, the fee not being necessary to the effective exercise of the power to sell. n356

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: word! w/2 limit! w/30 trust! or equitable w/1 (estate! or fee! or entail!)

§ 17.06(d) Statutory Abolition of Required Use of Words of Limitation.

The common-law requirement that words of limitation were necessary to create a fee simple has been done away with in every state today except South Carolina, n357 Connecticut n358 and Hawaii. n359

These statutes vary, however, in their application, their timing and their result. n360 In general, the effect of the application of such a statute is either to cause a fee simple to arise where there is a grant or devise where no words of limitation were used, unless the creator of the estate provided otherwise, or to raise a presumption that the creator intended a fee simple instead of a lesser estate. n361

Such statutes do not, however, affect an interest which has already vested. n362 Thus, not having a retroactive effect they do not apply to fully executed deeds but do apply to wills where the testator is alive on the effective date of the statute. Instances are found, however, where the statute has referred only to "conveyances" and has not thus had an effect on wills. n363

An estate created by will is held to be an estate in fee simple, if the context of the instrument does not clearly indicate that a lesser estate was intended. n364 Even in jurisdictions where words of inheritance are not required to create an absolute estate, in the absence of such words descriptive of the quantity of interest given, the testator's intent must be determined by construction. n365

The use of words of limitation does, however, today have the effect of presuming a fee though their legal necessity is no longer the law. n366 But this presumption yields to a clear evidence of other intent. n367 Where a statute does away with the necessity of using the word "heirs," this does not change the rule that a fee-simple estate is one of inheritance. n368 Where the statute has made the use of words of limitation unnecessary such use adds nothing to a deed and will not prevent subsequent language from limiting the estate granted. n369

The mode of conveying real property:

> and the character and quality of the estates... created [by deeds] are matters which are entirely within the control of the legislature. This control is not circumscribed by any constitutional limitations, and there is nothing sacred about the rules of conveyancing which obtained at common law. The legislature may alter or annul any of those common-law rules at pleasure. n370

Under most statutes any expression showing the grantor's intention to create a fee simple will be given effect. n371 This is in accord with the rule laid down in the Restatement of the Law of Property . n372 Under the law of Illinois, a court will, where it can do so without violating a settled rule of law, refuse to tie up real estate, and will, therefore, in case of doubt, adopt a construction of a deed which will give an estate of inheritance to the first taker. n373 Such intention may appear from any part of the instrument. n374 Where a less estate is expressly limited in the deed, a fee will not pass. n375

The statutes merely establish rules of construction and no not prevent an interpretation that only a life estate was intended. n376 Under a Massachusetts deed to realty no particular words are necessary to pass a fee simple. n377 Under the statutes, the word "forever" is now generally held to pass a fee-simple estate without the use of the word "heirs." n378 It has been held, also, that where it is apparent from the instrument that the word "children" is used in the sense of "heirs," as where they are used interchangeably, the term "children" will be read as meaning "heirs" and construed as a word of limitation and not of purchase. n379 Where there is an evenly balanced doubt regarding the character of the estate intended to be conveyed by a writing purporting to transfer title to real estate, it will be resolved in favor of a fee rather than a lesser interest. n380

Some states have never adopted the common-law requirement of words of limitation. n381

As will be subsequently seen, n382 where words have been used other than "heirs of the body" to create a fee tail and the statute abolishes the necessity of words of limitation, a problem arises as to whether such words have not been converted into words of purchase so as to create a cotenancy or a future interest in those who answer the description of the immediate descendants of the first taker. The reservation of an easement is not, however, inconsistent with the grant of a fee. n383 The courts of Illinois have held that a conveyance to "A and his heirs" both at common law and under the statute conveys a fee simple. n384

Where the statute has made the use of words of limitation unnecessary a problem arises where such language is used in a conveyance or a devise. Are they to be treated as surplusage or as words of purpose? The cases indicate that "heirs" or "heirs and assigns" remain words of limitation and hence are treated as surplusage. n385 So the word "heirs" is a technical word, and is always construed to be a word of limitation and not of purchase. n386 Generally, although the statutes obviate the necessity for the use of words of limitation, such words are not converted into words of purchase. n387

A conveyance to one, and in the event the grantee be dead to the grantee's heirs, created a fee simple, the language being words of limitation, and not purchase. n388 Likewise, "to A and his children forever" were words of limitation. n389 In some states, however, despite the statutes a right in fee cannot be reserved without words of limitation in the deed. n390

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fee simple w/2 absolute! w/015 right! or presum!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 206. See David H. Means, Words of Inheritance in Deeds of Land in South Carolina: A Title Examiner's Guide, 5 S.C. L. Rev. 313 (1953).

(n2)Footnote 207. See S. E. Thorne, English Feudalism and Estates in Land, 1959 Cambridge L.J. 193.

(n3)Footnote 208. Ivey v. Peacock, 47 So. 481 (Fla. 1908).

Massachusetts did not adopt the necessity of words of limitation until 1651 and then by statute. Sedgwick v. Laflin, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 430 (1865).

New Hampshire on separating from Massachusetts did not adopt the statute. Cole v. Lake Co., 54 N.H. 242 (1874).

"Heirs" is a word of limitation and not a word of purchase. In re Overlock's Estate, 530 P.2d 376 (Ariz. App. 1975).

Words of inheritance are required in the granting or the habendum clause; appearance in the warranty clause does not convey the fee simple. McLaurin v. McLaurin, 217 S.E.2d 51 (S.C. 1975).

(n4)Footnote 209. Words of limitation were not required in releases. Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13 (1852).

If words of inheritance are required in the granting or habendum clause, an appearance in the warranty clause does not convey the fee simple. McLaurin v. McLaurin, 217 S.E.2d 41 (S.C. 1975).

(n5)Footnote 210. Woodward v. Thissell, 218 F. 810 (6th Cir. 1914); United States v. Five Acres of Land in Suffolk County, 56 F. Supp. 628 (D. Mass. 1944); Loomis v. Heublein, 99 A. 483 (Conn. 1916); Penienskice v. Short, 194 A. 409 (Del. 1937); Ivey v. Peacock, 47 So. 481 (Fla. 1908); Guess v. Morgan, 26 S.E.2d 424 (Ga. 1943) (holding that an absolute fee passed by a deed granting to a person and the heirs of his body, or his heirs by a particular person, or his issue); Dick v. Ricker, 78 N.E. 823 (Ill. 1906); Coogan v. Jones, 115 N.E. 877 (Ill. 1917); Henry v. Metz, 46 N.E.2d 945 (Ill. 1942); Sauls v. Cox, 67 N.E.2d 187 (Ill. 1946); Cahill v. Cahill, 84 N.E.2d 380 (Ill. 1949); Fountain County Coal & Min. Co. v. Beckleheimer, 1 N.E. 202 (Ind. 1885); Baker v. Kenney, 124 N.W. 901 (Iowa 1910); Calmes v. Buck, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 453 (1816); Brown v. Dickey, 75 A. 382 (Me. 1909); Hall v. Hall, 76 A. 705 (Me. 1910); Gould v. Lamb, 52 Mass. (11 Met.) 84, (1846); Bean v. French, 3 N.E. 206 (Mass. 1884). Sanborn v. Loud, 113 N.W. 309 (Mich. 1907); Ewing v. Ewing, 22 So. 2d 225 (Miss. 1945); Loitensdorfer v. Delphy, 15 Mo. 160 (1851); Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13, 57 Am. Dec. 251 (1852); Garrett v. Wiltse, 161 S.W. 694 (Mo. 1913); Triplett v. Triplett, 60 S.W.2d 13 (Mo. 1933); Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Jackson ex dem. Henderson v. Davenport, 20 Johns. (N.Y.) 537 (1821); Richmond Cedar Works v. John L. Roper Lab. Co., 84 S.E. 521 (N.C. 1915); Brown v. First Nat'l Bank, 6 N.E. 648 (Ohio St. 1886); Laymon v. Bennett, 61 N.E.2d 624 (Ohio App. 1944); Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Pa. (Whart.) 410 (1836); Berridge v. Glassey, 3 A. 583 (Pa. 1886); Lemon v. Graham, 19 A. 48 (Pa. 1890); Jordan v. Neese, 15 S.E. 202 (S.C. 1892); Gowdy v. Kelley, 194 S.E. 156 (S.C. 1937).

South Carolina still requires words of inheritance to convey a fee, see David H. Means, Words of Inheritance in Deeds of Land in South Carolina: A. Title Examiner's Guide, 5 S.C. L. Rev. 313 (1953).

(n6)Footnote 211. Millard v. Millard, 180 N.W. 429 (Mich. 1920); Antley v. Antley, 128 S.E. 31 (S.C. 1925); Creswell v. Bank of Greenwood, 41 S.E.2d 393 (S.C. 1947).

Coke indicates that a grant to A and B and the heirs of B gave B the fee simple subject to the joint life estates of A. and B. Co. Litt., § 405.

Words of inheritance in granting or habendum clause necessary to create fee. Grainger v. Hamilton, 90 S.E.2d 209 (S.C. 1955).

(n7)Footnote 212. Littleton, Tenures, § 1; Co. Litt., § 6a.

(n8)Footnote 213. Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Adams v. Ross, 30 N.J.L. 505 (1860); Smith v. Proctor, 51 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1905).

Coke indicates that a grant to A and B and the heirs of B gave B the fee simple subject in the joint life estates of A. and B. Co. Litt., § 405.

Words of limitation must appear in granting or hahendum clause or only a life estate is given. Grainger v. Hamilton, 90 S.E.2d 209 (S.C. 1955). Except where a covenant to stand seized. Bank of Prosperity v. Dominick, 107 S.E. 914 (S.C. 1921). And the deed may be reformed to add words of limitation as against the grantee's heirs. Groce v. Benson, 167 S.E. 151 (S.C. 1932).

(n9)Footnote 214. Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591 (1871); Windham v. Howell, 59 S.E. 852 (S.C. 1907); McMillan v. Hughes, 70 S.E. 804 (S.C. 1911); Teague v. Sowder, 114 S.W. 484 (Tenn. 1908).

(n10)Footnote 215. McIlhinny v. McIlhinny, 37 N.E. 147 (Ind. 1894); Jordan v. McClure, 85 Pa. 495 (1877).

In Gray v. Stillman, 365 P.2d 369 (Okla. 1961), the court held that in a deed to one and his "blood heirs" were words of limitation.

(n11)Footnote 216. Nelson v. Davis, 35 Ind. 474 (1871); Cullens v. Cullens, 77 S.E. 228 (N.C. 1913); Talley v. Ferguson, 62 S.E. 456 (W. Va. 1908) ("children" is a word of purchase).

Under deed conveying land to named son and his "children," and in view of the other provisions, quoted word was used as word of limitation and not of purchase, so that the deed vested life estate in the named grantee with remainder in fee simple to all his children and did not convey the land to named grantee and all his children as tenants in common. Wilkins v. Wilkins, 206 S.W.2d 26 (Ark. 1947).

(n12)Footnote 217. Brown v. Mattocks, 103 Pa. 16 (1883).

(n13)Footnote 218. Watson v. Wolff-Goldman Realty Co., 128 S.W. 581 (Ark. 1910); Grant v. Carpenter, 8 R.I. 36 (1864); McMichael v. McMichael, 29 S.E. 403 (S.C. 1898).

(n14)Footnote 219. Kirschler v. Albanesius, 178 A. 568 (N.J. Misc. 1935).

(n15)Footnote 220. In re Lay's Estate, 110 N.Y.S.2d 494 (1952); In re Miller's Estate, 45 Pa. (Berks.) 213 (1813); Wates v. Fairfield Forest Prods. Co., 42 S.E.2d 529 (S.C. 1947); Dow v. Bailey, 77 A.2d 567 (Me. 1950) ("heirs" word of limitation).

"Heirs" is a word of limitation not of purchase. Estate of Sykes, 383 A.2d 920 (Pa. 1978).

When language is used to identify certain persons, "heirs" become words of purchase. Kritser v. First Nat'l Bank of Amarillo, 463 S.W.2d 751 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971).

(n16)Footnote 221. Bowman v. Weer, 104 A.2d 620 (Md. 1954); Talley v. Ferguson, 62 S.E. 456 (W. Va. 1908).

Hough v. Farmers Bank & Trust Co., 60 A.2d 11 (Pa. 1948) ("children" found to be used as word of limitation, not purchase).

"Heirs of the body" construed as children. White v. Alexander, 224 S.E.2d 617 (N.C. 1974).

"Children born to his body" were held to be words of purchase. Tindol v. McCoy, 535 S.W.2d 745 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

"Heirs of the body" were held to be words of limitation. Fletcher v. Hurdle, 536 S.W.2d 109 (Ark. 1976).

"Lawful issue" held in will as words of purchase rather than words of limitation. In re Moulton's Estate, 133 Cal.

Rptr. 500 (1976).

(n17)Footnote 222. Bradford v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 338 So. 2d 388 (Miss. 1976).

(n18)Footnote 223. Baker v. Kenney, 124 N.W. 901 (Iowa 1910); Van Horn v. Harrison 1 U.S. (1 Dall.) 137 (1785); Slegel v. Herbine, 23 A. 996 (Pa. 1892); Jordan v. Neese, 15 S.E. 202 (S.C. 1892).

(n19)Footnote 224. Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Adams v. Ross, 30 N.J.L. 505 (1860); Smith v. Proctor, 51 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1905).

(n20)Footnote 225. Prall v. Burckhartt, 132 N.E. 280 (Ill. 1921); Engel v. Ayer, 27 A. 352 (Me. 1893); Hofsass v. Mann, 22 A. 65 (Md. 1891); Curtis v. Gardner, 54 Mass. (13 Met.) 457 (1847); Bolton v. Bowne, 18 N.J.L. 210 (1841) (to the devisee "to hold and enjoy forever" sufficient devise of a fee); Fox v. Phelps, 17 N.Y. (Wend.) 393 (1837), aff'd, 20 N.Y. (Wend.) 437 (devise to an "heir in lieu of his birthright" expresses intent that other devisees take in fee so as to exclude such heir); Wheaton v. Andress, 23 N.Y. (Wend.) 452 (1840) (words expressing affirmatively intent to devise a fee must appear); Embleton v. McMechen, 143 N.E. 177 (Ohio St. 1924); Clayton v. Clayton, 3 Pa. (Binn.) 476 (1811).

Except where a covenant to stand seized to uses exists. First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank v. Ford, 180 S.E. 562 (S.C. 1935).

(n21)Footnote 226. See in general: Merritt v. Disney, 48 Md. 344 (1878); Ipswich Grammar Sch. v. Andrews, 49 Mass. (8 Met.) 584 (1844); Weller v. Rolason, 17 N.J. Eq. 13 (1864); Ryder v. Oates, 92 S.E. 508 (N.C. 1917); Stamford v. King, 144 S.W.2d 923 (Tex. Civ. App. 1940); Lott v. Braham, 116 S.E. 513 (W. Va. 1922).

(n22)Footnote 227. Gentle v. Frederick, 174 So. 606 (Ala. 1937); Noble v. Noble, 235 P.2d 670 (Okla. 1951).

(n23)Footnote 228. Blair v. Kenaston, 273 N.W. 184 (Iowa 1937).

The words "and his heirs" in a will were held words of limitation. In re Newby's Estate, 361 P.2d 622 (Colo. 1961).

The word "heirs" in a deed is a word of limitation and not of purchase. Arnold v. Baker, 185 N.E.2d 844 (Ill. 1962).

But "and his heirs" as used in a will were words of limitation and not words of purchase, so that the estate lapsed upon death of the devisee prior to the testator. Matter of Griffen's Estate, 543 P.2d 245 (Wash. 1975).

"Heirs and assigns" used in a deed are merely descriptive of the fee simple and carry no interest. Gardner v. Gardner, 335 A.2d 157 (Md. App. 1975).

(n24)Footnote 229. Matter of Griffen's Estate, 543 P.2d 245 (Wash. 1975).

(n25)Footnote 230. Kentland Coal & Coke Co. v. Blankenship, 300 S.W.2d 570 (Ky. 1957); Fawver v. First Tex. Joint Stock Land Bank, 115 S.W.2d 1217 (Tex. Civ. App. 1938).

"Heirs and assigns" was not necessary at common law to convey to a corporation. Moody v. Moody Nat'l Bank of Galveston, 522 S.W.2d 710 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

(n26)Footnote 231. Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Or. 1929).

(n27)Footnote 232. Brady v. Evans, 28 A. 1061 (Md. 1894); Mercier v. Missouri River, Ft. S. & G. R. Co., 54 Mo. 506 (1874); Lemon v. Graham, 19 A. 48 (Pa. 1890) 6 L.R.A. 663.

A voluntary deed may be reformed to include the missing words. Groce v. Benson, 167 S.E. 151 (S.C. 1932).

(n28)Footnote 233. Nicholson v. Caress, 59 Ind. 39 (1877).

(n29)Footnote 234. 1 Minor, Inst 9 (b); Brownell v. Leutz, 149 F. Supp. 98 (D.N.D. 1956) ("or her heirs" were words of purchase).

In re Powers' Estate, 171 N.E.2d 464 (N.Y. 1960) (in a will the words "her heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, absolutely and forever" are words of limitation and not words for substitution, and created no interest in the children of the beneficiary).

(n30)Footnote 235. See Restatement, Property, § 27, Comment d.

(n31)Footnote 236. East Hampton v. Vail, 45 N.E. 1030 (N.Y. 1897).

To the same effect, see Restatement, Property, § 27, Comment d.

(n32)Footnote 237. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183 (1813).

"Or his heirs" are words of substitution not limitation and create an alternate gift to the heirs in case the named beneficiary predeceases the testator. In re Hornby's Estate, 272 P.2d 1017 (Idaho 1954).

(n33)Footnote 238. Coke on Littleton, § 8b.

(n34)Footnote 239. Coke on Littleton, § 8b; Manwaring v. Tabor, 1 Conn. (Root) 79 (1780); Hall v. Vandegrift, 3 Pa. (Binn.) 374 (1811); Whiting v. Wilkins, 1 Buls. 219; Dubber v. Trollop, 8 Vin. Abr. 233, p. 13, per Eyre, C.J., who says that the opinion of Coke is not warranted by anything in Littleton.

(n35)Footnote 240. Huntington v. Lyman, 138 Mass. 205 (1884).

(n36)Footnote 241. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183 (1813); Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. Sr. 409 (1749).

(n37)Footnote 242. Johnson v. Barden, 83 A. 721 (Vt. 1912).

Where no words of inheritance are used in the granting clause, later language in a deed may reduce the estate to a fee upon condition subsequent. Byars v. Cherokee County, 118 S.E.2d 324 (S.C. 1961); but see Stylecraft, Inc. v. Thomas, 159 S.E.2d 46 (S.C. 1968), reaching a different result.

(n38)Footnote 243. Prall v. Burckhartt, 132 N.E. 280 (Ill. 1921); Whichard v. Whitehurst, 106 S.E. 463 (N.C. 1921).

(n39)Footnote 244. William Sheppard, The Touchstone of Common Assurance, 106 (1826).

Patterson v. Moore, 15 Ark. 222 (1854); Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377 (1879); Hofsass v. Mann, 22 A. 65 (Md. 1891); Bowman v. Weer, 104 A.2d 620 (Md. 1954) ("children" word of purchase); Ashcroft v. Eastern R. Co., 126 Mass. 196 (1878). Hogan v. Welcker, 14 Mo. 177 (1851); Truesdell v. Lehman, 20 A. 391 (N.J. Eq. 1890). Jackson ex dem. Ludlow v. Myers, 3 Johns. (N.Y.) 388 (1808); In re Kelling's Estate, 137 N.Y.S.2d 868 (1954) (Two A & B "and their issue" were words of limitation); Stell v. Barham, 87 N.C. 62 (1882); Lemon v. Graham, 19 A. 48 (Pa. 1890) 6 L.R.A. 663. Bradford v. Griffin, 19 S.E. 76 (S.C. 1894); Bridgewater v. Bolton, 6 Mod. 106 (N.D.).

(n40)Footnote 245. Tucker v. Tucker, 78 Ky. 503 (1880).

(n41)Footnote 246. Embleton v. McMechen, 143 N.E. 177 (Ohio St. 1924) 34 A.L.R. 689.

(n42)Footnote 247. McMichael v. Craig, 16 So. 883 (Ala. 1894); Hall v. Condon, 51 So. 20 (Ala. 1909); Mills v.

Woods, 57 S.E.2d 713 (W. Va. 1950).

(n43)Footnote 248. Littleton, Tenures, § 740.

(n44)Footnote 249. Adams v. Merrill, 85 N.E. 114 (1908), reh'g denied, 87 N.E. 36 (Ind. App. 1909); Franklin v. Jones, 191 S.W.2d 835 (Tenn. App. 1945).

While Connecticut still requires the use of words of limitation to convey a fee simple, Chappell v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. Co., 24 A. 997 (Conn. 1892); Cole v. Steinlauf, 136 A.2d 744 (Conn. 1957), a deed may be reformed to vest a fee in the grantee if the parties so intended though the word heirs be omitted. Chamberlain v. Thompson, 10 Conn. 243 (1834).

(n45)Footnote 250. Branca v. Makuakane, 13 Haw. 499 (1901); Cole v. Winnipisseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co., 54 N.H. 242 (1874); Rackley v. Chestnutt, 14 S.E. 750 (N.C. 1892); Whichard v. Whitehurst, 106 S.E. 463 (N.C. 1921); Brown v. First Nat'l Bank, 6 N.E. 648 (Ohio St. 1886) (a mortgage was held to pass a fee, though the word "heirs" was not used); Johnson v. Barden, 83 A. 721 (Vt. 1912).

The omission of words of inheritance in a will are still a factor in Connecticut to be taken into consideration to show an intent to give a lesser estate. McFarland v. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A., 337 A.2d 1 (Conn. Super. 1973), aff'd, 362 A.2d 834 (Conn. 1975).

(n46)Footnote 251. Absence of words of inheritance in a will should be taken into consideration to show that the testator's intention was to give an estate less than a fee. McFarland v. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A., 337 A.2d 1 (Conn. Super. 1973), aff'd, 362 A.2d 834 (Conn. 1975).

(n47)Footnote 252. Lambert v. Paine, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 96 (1805); King v. Ackerman, 67 U.S. (2 Black) 408 (1863).

(n48)Footnote 253. Barber v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., 166 U.S. 83 (1897); McLaughlin v. Collins, 125 P.2d 633 (Colo. 1942); Duncan v. Higgins, 26 A.2d 849 (Conn. 1942); Robinson v. Randolph, 21 Fla. 629 (1885); Ellis v. Ellis, 158 S.W.2d 976 (Ky. 1942); Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Jackson ex dem. Decker v. Merrill, 6 N.Y. (Johns.) 185 (1810); Baker v. Wright, 157 S.W.2d 470 (Tex. Civ. App. 1941); In re Richter's Will, 254 N.W. 103 (Wis. 1934); Co. Litt., § 9b; 2 Bl. Comm. 108; Holdfast v. Marten, 1 Term. R. 411 (1786).

Words of limitation unnecessary in a will. McFarland v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 337 A.2d 1 (Conn. Super. 1973).

(n49)Footnote 254. Burr v. Tierney, 122 A. 454 (Conn. 1923); Reaney v. Wall, 60 A.2d 505 (Conn. 1948); Drager v. McIntosh, 147 N.E. 433 (Ill. 1925); Winn v. William, 165 S.W.2d 961 (Ky. 1942); Rolland v. Hamilton, 49 N.E.2d 436 (Mass. 1943); Morris v. Smith, 23 N.E.2d 212 (Mass. 1954); In re Raworth's Estate, 52 So. 2d 661 (Miss. 1951); Galante v. Silverstein, 129 A. 865 (N.J. Eq. 1925); In re Knapp's Will, 6 N.Y.S.2d 100 (1938); Whichard v. Whitehurst, 106 S.E. 463 (N.C. 1921); Phillips v. Smith, 133 A. 661 (R.I. 1926); Buffington v. Work, 200 A. 541 (R.I. 1938); Briggs v. Briggs, 45 N.W.2d 62 (S.D. 1950); Bradshaw v. Bangley, 75 S.E.2d 609 (Va. 1953).

(n50)Footnote 255. Boggs v. Baxter, 261 S.W.2d 684 (Ky. 1953).

(n51)Footnote 256. Miller v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 60 S.E.2d 868 (Va. 1950); Davis v. Hardman, 133 S.E.2d 77 (W. Va. 1963).

(n52)Footnote 257. Coil v. Schetter, 152 N.E. 870 (Ind. App. 1926). See Restatement, Property, § 37.

(n53)Footnote 258. Ramseur v. Belding, 175 S.W.2d 977 (Ark. 1943); Ickes v. Ickes, 53 N.E.2d 585 (Ill. 1944); Cleveland v. Spilman, 25 Ind. 95 (1865); Shimer v. Mann, 99 Ind. 190 (1884); Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 251

(1884); Fountain County Coal & Min. Co. v. Beckleheimer, 1 N.E. 202 (Ind. 1885); Martin v. Raff, 52 N.E.2d 839 (Ind. App. 1944); Creel v. Hammans, 13 N.W.2d 305 (Iowa 1944); Rolland v. Hamilton, 49 N.E.2d 436 (Mass. 1943); Krumm v. Cuneo, 26 Ohio 453, aff'd, 47 N.E.2d 1003 (Ohio 1943).

(n54)Footnote 259. Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Or. 1929).

Remainder to "my said residuary legatees... and to their heirs" vested in the residuary legatees even if they predeceased the life tenant and not in "their heirs." In re Overlock's Estate, 530 P.2d 376 (Ariz. App. 1975).

(n55)Footnote 260. Roberts v. Lewis, 153 U.S. 367 (1894); Wallace v. R. E. Stone Co., 76 F.2d 269 (3d Cir. 1935); Dickson v. Alexandria Hosp., 177 F.2d 876 (4th Cir. 1949) (plaintiff's intent prevails, unless violates law, or contra to public policy); White v. Crenshaw, 5 D.C. (Mackey) 113 (1886); Cooper v. Mitchell Inv. Co., 66 S.E. 1090 (Ga. 1910); Rigdon v. Cooper, 47 S.E.2d 633 (Ga. 1948) (it is to be gathered from the will, rather than particular clause); Bowlin v. White, 91 N.E. 658 (Ill. 1910); McIlhinny v. McIlhinny, 37 N.E. 147 (Ind. 1894); Richardson v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 56 (1806); Godfrey v. Humphrey, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 537, 29 Am. Dec. 621 (1837); Defreese v. Lake, 67 N.W. 505 (Mich. 1896); First & American Nat'l Bank v. Higgins, 293 N.W. 585 (Minn. 1940) (a statute providing that every devise of land shall convey all the estate of the testator therein, unless it appears by the will that he intended to convey a less estate, has the effect of reversing the common law rule by providing that a fee shall pass without words of inheritance or an equivalent expression of intention); Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Second Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Borden, 167 A. 224 (N.J. Eq. 1933); Jackson ex dem. Decker v. Merrill, 6 N.Y. (Johns.) 185 (1810); Smith v. Proctor, 51 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1905); Jolley v. Humphries, 169 S.E. 417 (N.C. 1933); Jones v. Jones, 192 N.E. 811 (Ohio App. 1933); Phillips v. Swank, 13 A. 712 (Pa. 1888).

(n56)Footnote 261. Churchill v. Fleming, 193 N.E. 497 (Ill. 1934); Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. 3 (1811); Bramley v. White, 183 N.E. 761 (1933); In re Oertle's Will, 24 N.W. 924 (Minn. 1885).

(n57)Footnote 262. In re Prasser's Will, 121 N.W. 643 (Wis. 1909).

(n58)Footnote 263. Hill v. Gianelli, 77 N.E. 458 (Ill. 1906); Bell County v. Alexander, 22 Tex. 350 (1858).

(n59)Footnote 264. Greiner v. Heins, 131 N.E. 20 (Ind. App. 1921). See Nichols v. Alexander, 152 N.E. 863 (Ind. App. 1926).

(n60)Footnote 265. Fernandez v. Martin, 225 S.W. 27 (Ky. 1920); Sorenson v. Booram, 297 S.W. 70 (Mo. 1927); Shoemaker v. Coats, 10 S.E.2d 810 (N.C. 1940).

(n61)Footnote 266. Hambright v. Carroll, 168 S.E. 817 (N.C. 1933).

(n62)Footnote 267. Brand v. Faries, 178 A. 583 (Del. Ch. 1935); Vaughan v. Compton, 235 S.W.2d 328 (Mo. 1950); In re Forde's Will, 36 N.E.2d 79 (N.Y. 1941); In re Cryan's Estate, 152 A. 675 (Pa. 1930); Lyon v. Alexander, 156 A. 84 (Pa. 1931).

(n63)Footnote 268. Weller v. Searcy, 111 S.W.2d 206 (Mo. App. 1937).

(n64)Footnote 269. Simons v. Bowers, 81 S.W.2d 604 (Ky. 1935); Clay v. McNabb, 151 S.W.2d 1027 (Ky. 1941); Honaker v. Hutchison, 205 S.W.2d 683 (Ky. 1947); Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950). See Sater v. Sater, 46 N.W.2d 433 (Mich. 1951); Williams v. Williams, 65 S.W.2d 561 (Tenn. 1933).

(n65)Footnote 270. See In re Young, 2 All. E.R. 1245 (N.D.).

(n66)Footnote 271. Gardner v. Grossman, 57 N.E.2d 440 (Ind. App. 1944).

(n67)Footnote 272. Bell v. Holdbrook, 187 S.W.2d 433 (Ky. 1945).

(n68)Footnote 273. In re McGovern's Estate, 250 P. 812 (Mont. 1926); In re Seif's Will, 209 N.Y.S. 341 (1925).

(n69)Footnote 274. Lambert v. Paine, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 97 (1805); Leland v. Adams, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 171 (1857).

(n70)Footnote 275. Hampton v. West, 193 S.E. 290 (N.C. 1937).

(n71)Footnote 276. In re McGovern's Estate, 250 P. 812 (Mont. 1926); Jackson ex dem. Decker v. Merrill, 6 N.Y. (Johns.) 185 (1810); Shoemaker v. Coats, 10 S.E.2d 810 (N.C. 1940); Zimmerman v. Anders, 6 Pa. (Watts & Serg.) 218, 40 Am. Dec. 552 (1843).

(n72)Footnote 277. Ramseur v. Belding, 175 S.W.2d 977 (Ark. 1943).

(n73)Footnote 278. Jackson ex dem. Decker v. Merrill, 6 N.Y. (Johns.) 185 (1810); Zimmerman v. Anders, 6 Pa. (Watts & Serg.) 218 (1843).

(n74)Footnote 279. Piersol v. Hays, 47 N.E.2d 838 (Ind. App. 1943); Godfrey v. Humphrey, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 537 (1837).

(n75)Footnote 280. Co. Litt., § 9b. Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13 (1852).

(n76)Footnote 281. Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13 (1852).

(n77)Footnote 282. Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Chatillion, 11 F. 818 (C.C.D. Mo. 1882).

(n78)Footnote 283. Kautz v. Kautz, 76 A.2d 398 (Pa. 1950); Banks v. Banks, 229 S.W.2d 99 (Tex. Civ. App. 1950).

(n79)Footnote 284. Cahill v. Cahill, 84 N.E.2d 380 (Ill. 1949). But cf. City Bank & Trust Co. v. Morrissey, 454 N.E.2d 1195 (Ill. App. 1983).

(n80)Footnote 285. Field v. Morris, 114 S.W. 206 (Ark. 1908); Chappell v. New York, N.H. & H.R. Co., 24 A. 997 (Conn. 1892); Koelle v. Knecht, 99 Ill. 396 (1881); Stone v. Stone, 119 N.W. 712 (Iowa 1909); Engel v. Ayer, 27 A. 352 (Me. 1893); Hall v. Hall, 76 A. 705 (Me. 1910); McIntire v. Lauckner, 81 A. 784 (Me. 1911); Worcester v. Smith, 103 A. 65 (Me. 1918); Curtis v. Gardner, 54 Mass. (13 Met.) 457 (1847); Ashcroft v. Eastern R. Co., 126 Mass. 196 (1878); Bean v. French, 3 N.E. 206 (Mass. 1884); Bailey v. Agawam Nat'l Bank, 76 N.E. 449 (Mass. 1906); Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co., 96 N.W. 468 (Mich. 1903), writ of error dismissed, 197 U.S. 463; Whitaker v. Brown, 46 Pa. 197 (1863); Mandle v. Gharing, 100 A. 535 (Pa. 1917).

(n81)Footnote 286. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183 (1813).

(n82)Footnote 287. Randall v. Latham, 36 Conn. 48 (1869); Chappell v. New York, N.H. & H.R. Co., 24 A. 997 (Conn. 1892).

In Whitson v. Goudeseune, 290 P.2d 590 (Cal. 1955), a deed "to present owners of lot 3 and their successors" was a sufficient designation of grantees of an easement.

(n83)Footnote 288. Hall v. Hall, 76 A. 705 (Me. 1910); Emerson v. Mooney, 50 N.H. 315 (1870); Mandle v. Gharing, 100 A. 535 (Pa. 1917).

(n84)Footnote 289. See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 27, Comment.

(n85)Footnote 290. Carolina Sav. Bank v. McMahon, 16 S.E. 31 (S.C. 1892).

(n86)Footnote 291. Coke on Littleton, §§ 8b, 94b. See Overseers of Poor v. Sears, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 122 (1839); Gould v. Lamb, 52 Mass. (77 Met.) 84 (1846); Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 142 (1855); Wilcox v. Wheeler, 47 N.H. 488 (1867); Gabert v. Olcott, 23 S.W. 985 (Tex. 1893).

> Coke on Littleton, § 8b: Here Littleton treateth of purchases by natural persons, and not of bodies politic or corporate; for if lands be given to a sole body politic or corporate (as to a bishop, parson, vicar, master of an hospital, &c.), there to give him an estate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he must have these words, 'To have and to hold to him and his successors;' for without these words successors, in those cases there passeth no inheritance; for as the heir doth inherit to the ancestor, so the successor doth succeed to the predecessor, and the executor to the testator. But it appeareth here by Littleton, that if a man at this day give lands to I. S. and his successors, this createth no fee simple in him; for Littleton speaking of natural persons saith that these words (his heirs) make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants, whereby he excludeth these words (his successors).
>
> Coke on Littleton, § 9b: And here it is to be observed (that I may speak once for all) that every period of our author in all his three books contains matter of excellent learning, necessarily to be collected by implications, or consequence. For example he saith here, that these words (his heirs) make an estate of inheritance in all feoffments and grants. He expressing feoffments and grants, necessarily implieth, that this rule extendeth not--
>
> First, to last wills and testaments; for thereby, as he himself after saith, an estate of inheritance may pass without these words (his heirs). As if a man devise twenty acres to another, and that he shall pay to his executors for the same ten pound, hereby the devisee hath a fee simple by the intent of the devisor, albeit it be not to the value of the land. So it is if a man devise lands to a man in perpetuum, or to give and to sell, or in feodo simplici, or to him and to his assigns forever. In these cases a fee simple doth pass by the intent of the devisor. But if the devise be to a man and his assigns without saying (forever), the devisee hath but an estate for life.

Words of succession were necessary to convey a fee to a corporation. Chancellor v. Bell, 17 A. 684 (N.J. Eq. 1889).

(n87)Footnote 292. Hamlin v. Perticuler Baptist Meeting House, 69 A. 315 (Me. 1907).

(n88)Footnote 293. Wilcox v. Wheeler, 47 N.H. 488 (1867); Chancellor v. Bell, 17 A. 684 (N.J. Eq. 1889); Schurch v. Harraman, 191 N.E. 907 (Ohio App. 1933); Wilkes-Barre v. Wyoming Historical & Geological Soc., 19 A. 809 (Pa. 1890); Halifax Congregational Soc'y v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243 (1861).

(n89)Footnote 294. Restatement, Property, § 33 .

(n90)Footnote 295. Restatement, Property, § 34 .

(n91)Footnote 296. Barker v. Barrows, 138 Mass. 578 (1885); United States Pipe-Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 41 A. 759 (N.J.L. 1898); Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Pa. (Whart.) 410.

"In strictness, while a corporation sole has successors, a corporation aggregate has none, for it continues to exist, one and the same, as the river retains its identity while the currents of water that form it are continually flowing in and passing out. There is a succession among the constituent members, but none in the corporation itself." Sons of Temperance v. Aston, 92 N.C. 578 (1885). See Dyer v. Siano, 11 N.E.2d 451 (Mass. 1937).

(n92)Footnote 297. Reid v. Barry, 112 So. 846 (Fla. 1927).

(n93)Footnote 298. United States v. Five Acres of Land in Suffolk County, 56 F. Supp. 628 (Mass. 1944); Dyer v.

Siano, 11 N.E.2d 451 (Mass. 1937); Sylvester v. State, 91 P. 15 (Wash. 1907) (although a deed to the Territory of Washington contained no clause granting the property to the "heirs" or "successors" of the territory, a transmissible title was granted and the property did not revert to the grantor when the territory was changed into a state). See Restatement of The Law of Property, § 35.

(n94)Footnote 299. Shevlin v. Colony Lutheran Church, 88 S.E.2d 674 (S.C. 1955).

(n95)Footnote 300. 2 Preston, Estates 2; Co. Litt., § 9b; Hofsass v. Mann, 22 A. 65 (Md. 1891); Mercier v. Missouri River, Ft. S. & G.R. R., 54 Mo. 506 (1874); Lemon v. Graham, 19 A. 48 (Pa. 1890).

(n96)Footnote 301. Brady v. Evans, 28 A. 1061 (Md. 1894).

(n97)Footnote 302. See Restatement, Property, § 28.

(n98)Footnote 303. Lemon v. Graham, 19 A. 48 (Pa. 1890).

(n99)Footnote 304. Whitley v. Arenson, 12 S.E.2d 906 (N.C. 1941); Hamby v. Northcut, 149 S.W.2d 484 (Tenn. App. 1940).

(n100)Footnote 305. King v. Ackerman, 67 U.S. (2 Black) 408 (1862); Howell v. Deady, 48 F. Supp. 104 (D. Or. 1939); Kidd v. Borum, 61 So. 100 (Ala. 1913); Hughes v. Strickland, 295 S.W. 722 (Ark. 1927); Churchill v. Fleming, 193 N.E. 497 (Ill. 1934); Hall v. Curd, 181 N.E. 168 (Ind. App. 1932); Porter v. Jackson, 95 Ind. 210 (1883); Donohue v. Donohue, 37 P. 998 (Kan. 1894); Lindsay v. McCormack, 9 Ky. (2 A.K. Marsh.) 229 (1820); Medcalf v. Whitely, 160 S.W.2d 348 (Ky. 1942); Bell v. Scammon, 15 N.H. 381, 41 Am. Dec. 706 (1844); In re Sliter, 36 N.E.2d 75 (N.Y. 1941); In re Van Winkle's Will, 86 N.Y.S.2d 597 (1949); In re Vigliotti's Estate, 96 N.Y.S.2d 840 (1950); Shoemaker v. Coats, 10 S.E.2d 810 (N.C. 1940); Case v. Hall, 38 N.E. 618 (Ohio St. 1894).

(n101)Footnote 306. Haight v. Royce, 113 N.E. 71 (Ill. 1916); Wise v. Crandall, 215 S.W. 245 (Mo. 1919).

(n102)Footnote 307. In re Hinkle's Appeal, 9 A. 938 (Pa. 1887).

(n103)Footnote 308. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Bobloski, 76 A. 720 (Pa. 1910).

(n104)Footnote 309. Zimmer v. Sennott, 25 N.E. 774 (Ill. 1890).

(n105)Footnote 310. McCaffrey v. Manogue, 196 U.S. 563 (1905); Fidelity Trust Co. v. Bobloski, 76 A. 720 (Pa. 1910).

(n106)Footnote 311. Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515 (1879); Snyder v. Nesbitt, 26 A. 1006 (Md. 1893); Jackson ex dem. Townsend v. Bull, 10 N.Y. (Johns.) 148 (1813).

(n107)Footnote 312. Miller v. Miller, 247 N.W.2d 445 (Neb. 1976).

(n108)Footnote 313. Cahill v. Cahill, 84 N.E.2d 380 (Ill. 1949).

(n109)Footnote 314. Hughes v. Strickland, 295 S.W. 722 (Ark. 1927).

(n110)Footnote 315. Watters v. First Nat'l Bank, 171 So. 280 (Ala. 1936); In re Franck's Estate, 210 P. 417 (Cal. 1922); Angus v. Noble, 46 A. 278 (Conn. 1900); Van Olinda v. Carpenter, 19 N.E. 868 (Ill. 1889); Drake v. Steele, 89 N.E. 1018 (Ill. 1909); Mettler v. Warner, 90 N.E. 1099 (Ill. 1910); McCoy v. Houck, 99 N.E. 97 (Ind. 1912); Ames v. Conry, 165 N.E. 435 (Ind. App. 1927) (devise of rents and profits for life); Lachmund v. Moore, 181 N.W. 4 (Iowa 1921); Nisbet v. Dozier, 263 S.W. 736 (Ky. 1924); Dixon v. Dixon, 124 A. 198 (Me. 1924); Torian v. Sanders, 172 So. 142 (Miss. 1937); In re Feldhus' Estate, 300 N.Y.S. 799 (1937); Potter v. Pike, 183 N.Y.S. 842 (1920); Perry v.

Hackney, 55 S.E. 289 (N.C. 1906); Halliburton v. Phifer, 117 S.E. 296 (N.C. 1923); Stigers v. Dinsmore, 44 A. 550 (Pa. 1899); Beilstein v. Beilstein, 45 A. 73 (Pa. 1899); Goffe v. Goffe, 94 A. 2 (R.I. 1915); Johnson v. Johnson, 23 S.W. 114 (Tenn. 1893); Russell v. Jackson, 113 S.W.2d 76 (Tenn. App. 1893); Frazier v. Hanion Gasoline Co., 29 S.W.2d 461 (Tex. Civ. App. 1930); Miller v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 60 S.E.2d 868 (Va. 1950).

See also Ryder v. Ryder, 41 A.2d 278 (N.J. Eq. 1945); Burney v. Holloway, 36 S.E.2d 5 (N.C. 1945); Loose v. Loose, 30 Ohio 333 (1958).

Under the English Conveyancing Act of 1881, 44 & 45 Victoria, ch. 41, § 65, terms of years of original length of 300 years or more, which had not less than 200 years to run, could be converted into fees by a declaration made by any interested person.

(n111)Footnote 316. In re Franze's Estate, 296 N.Y.S. 687 (1937).

(n112)Footnote 317. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 283 S.W.2d 697 (Ark. 1955); Kutzleb v. Zipper, 282 S.W.2d 344 (Ky. 1955); Ellis v. Bruce, 286 S.W.2d 645 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956).

(n113)Footnote 318. Mather v. Mather, 103 Ill. 607 (1882); Sampson v. Randall, 72 Me. 109 (1881); Brombacher v. Berking, 39 A. 134 (N.J. Eq. 1897); Wright v. Laird, 112 A. 63 (Pa. 1920); Mays v. Beech, 86 S.W. 713 (Tenn. 1905).

(n114)Footnote 319. Morrison v. Schorr, 64 N.E. 545 (Ill. 1882); Durfee v. Pomeroy, 49 N.E. 132 (N.Y. 1898); Ladies Benevolent Soc'y v. Orrell, 142 S.E. 493 (N.C. 1928) (in case only Part of the income is given, title to the corpus of the property does not pass).

(n115)Footnote 320. Johnson v. Muller, 86 P.2d 569 (Kan. 1939).

(n116)Footnote 321. Roe v. Vingut, 22 N.E. 933 (N.Y. 1889).

(n117)Footnote 322. Collier v. Grimesey, 36 Ohio St. 17 (1880).

(n118)Footnote 323. In re Emmerich's Estate, 32 A.2d 400 (Pa.). See also In re Aye's Will, 124 P.2d 482 (Kan. 1942).

(n119)Footnote 324. LeBreton v. Cook, 40 P. 552 (Cal. 1895); Shindler v. Robinson, 135 N.Y.S. 1056 (1912); Schuldt v. Reading Trust Co., 113 A. 545 (Pa. 1921) (ordinarily to warrant the implication of a fee from a devise of income, there must be a gift of the gross rent); In re Eichelberger's Estate, 118 A. 555 (Pa. 1922); Jackson v. Jackson, 33 S.E. 749 (S.C. 1899).

(n120)Footnote 325. Lewis v. Harrower, 64 N.E. 374 (Ill. 1902); Fogler v. Titcomb, 42 A. 360 (Me. 1898).

(n121)Footnote 326. Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13 (1852).

(n122)Footnote 327. 2 Bl. Comm. 108, Chancellor v. Bell, 17 A. 684 (N.J. Eq. 1889); Nicoll v. New York & E.R.R. Co., 12 N.Y. 121 (1854).

(n123)Footnote 328. Missouri Wesleyan College v. Shulte, 142 S.W.2d 644 (Mo. 1940).

(n124)Footnote 329. 2 Kent's Comm. 282.

(n125)Footnote 330. Nicoll v. New York & E.R.R., 12 N.Y. 121 (1854).

(n126)Footnote 331. McElroy v. McElroy, 113 Mass. 509 (1873).

(n127)Footnote 332. Lewin, Trusts and Trustees (9th ed.) 44; Holmes v. Holmes, 86 N.C. 205 (1882). See Restatement of the Law of Property § 36.

(n128)Footnote 333. Whichard v. Whitehurst, 106 S.E. 463 (N.C. 1921).

(n129)Footnote 334. Gunn v. Brown, 23 A. 462 (Md. 1892); Ropes v. Upton, 125 Mass. 258 (1892); Hughes v. Millers Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 246 S.W. 23 (Tenn. 1922).

(n130)Footnote 335. Knowlden v. Leavitt, 121 Mass. 307 (1876).

(n131)Footnote 336. Chapin v. First Universalist Soc'y, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 580 (1857); Hastings v. Merriam, 117 Mass. 245 (1875).

(n132)Footnote 337. Newhall v. Wheeler, 7 Mass. 189 (1810) (trustee takes a legal estate commensurate with the cestui que trust's equitable estate).

(n133)Footnote 338. Doe v. Considine, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 458 (1868); Young v. Mahoning County Comm'rs, 53 F. 895 (C. C. Ohio 1892); Kirkland v. Cox, 94 Ill. 400 (1879); Preachers' Aid Soc'y v. England, 106 Ill. 125 (1883); De Haven v. Sherman, 22 N.E. 711 (Ill. 1888); North v. Philbrook, 34 Me. 532 (1852); Hawkins v. Chapman, 36 Md. 83 (1872); Merritt v. Disney, 48 Md. 344 (1878); Newhall v. Wheeler, 7 Mass. 189 (1810); Paton v. Langley, 15 N.W. 537 (Mich. 1883); First & American Nat'l Bank v. Higgins, 293 N.W. 585 (Minn. 1940); Ewing v. Shannahan, 20 S.W. 1065 (Mo. 1892); Wilcox v. Wheeler, 47 N.H. 488 (1867); Smith v. Proctor, 51 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1905); Mitchell v. Allen, 61 S.E. 1087, reh'g denied, 62 S.E. 399 (S.C. 1908); McMillan v. Hughes, 70 S.E. 804 (S.C. 1911); Cathcart v. Nelson, 40 A. 826 (Vt. 1898).

See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 32.

(n134)Footnote 339. Stearns v. Palmer, 51 Mass. (10 Met.) 32 (1845); Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888).

(n135)Footnote 340. Magevney v. Karsch, 65 S.W.2d 562 (Tenn. 1933).

(n136)Footnote 341. Neilson v. Lagow, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 98 (1869).

(n137)Footnote 342. Doe v. Considine, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 458 (1869); Young v. Bradley, 101 U.S. 782 (1879); Potter v. Couch, 141 U.S. 296 (1891); Chamberlain v. Thompson, 10 Conn. 243 (1834); Christopher v. Mungen, 55 So. 273 (Fla. 1911); Defrees v. Brydon, 114 N.E. 336 (Ill. 1916); Ewing v. Jones, 29 N.E. 1057 (Ind. 1892); Gould v. Lamb, 52 Mass. (11 Met.) 84, 45 Am. Dec. 187 (1846); Melick v. Pidcock, 15 A. 3 (N.J. Eq. 1888); Smith v. Proctor, 51 S.E. 889 (N.C. 1905); Montgomery v. Trueheart, 146 S.W. 284 (Tex. Civ. App. 1912).

(n138)Footnote 343. Ellis v. Fisher, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 231 (1855); Temple v. Ferguson, 72 S.W. 455 (Tenn. 1903).

(n139)Footnote 344. Bank of Prosperity v. Dominick, 107 S.E. 914 (S.C. 1921).

(n140)Footnote 345. McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N.E. 139 (Ill. 1908).

(n141)Footnote 346. In re Beaumont's Estate, 54 N.Y.S.2d 581 (1945).

(n142)Footnote 347. Illinois Nat'l Bank v. Gwinn, 61 N.E.2d 249 (Ill. 1945).

(n143)Footnote 348. McGookey v. Winter, 46 N.E.2d 84 (Ill. 1943); In re Risher's Will, 277 N.W. 160 (Wis. 1943).

Where testator devised property to trustees to provide for testator's widow during her life and conferred power of appointment upon the widow, testator conveyed full title to trustees and upon the widow's failure to exercise the power, property was reinvested in testator's estate by virtue of resulting trust, and should be distributed to testator's heirs as of the time of the widow's death. Butler v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 86 S.E.2d 520 (Ga. 1955).

(n144)Footnote 349. Manufacturers Trust Co. v. Kelby, 125 F.2d 650 (2d Cir. 1942); Model Land Co. v. Crawford, 20 So. 2d 122 (Fla. 1944); Ickes v. Ickes, 53 N.E.2d 585 (Ill. 1944); Mock v. B. F. Goodrich Corp., 38 N.E.2d 900 (Ind. App. 1942); Morton v. Barrett, 22 Me. 257 (1843); Adams v. Dugan, 163 P.2d 227 (Okla. 1945); In re Koenig's Appeal, 57 Pa. 252 (1868); Magevney v. Karsch, 65 S.W.2d 562 (Tenn. 1933). In re Greene's Will, 3 N.W.2d 704 (Wis. 1942).

(n145)Footnote 350. Marshall v. Gingell, L.R. 21 Ch. Div. 790 (N.D.).

(n146)Footnote 351. Smith v. Rizzuto, 276 N.W. 406 (Neb. 1937).

(n147)Footnote 352. Foreman Trust & Sav. Bank v. Seelenfreund, 161 N.E. 88 (Ill. 1928).

(n148)Footnote 353. Chicago, M. & St. P.R.R. v. Des Moines Union R.R., 254 U.S. 196 (1920).

(n149)Footnote 354. Hale v. Hale, 33 N.E. 858 (Ill. 1893).

(n150)Footnote 355. Mulvane v. Rude, 45 N.E. 659 (Ind. 1896).

(n151)Footnote 356. Wyatt v. Stillman Institute, 260 S.W. 73 (Mo. 1923).

(n152)Footnote 357. Grainger v. Hamilton, 90 S.E.2d 209 (S.C. 1955). See David H. Means, Words of Inheritance in Deed of Land in South Carolina, 5 S.C. L.Q. 313 (1953). Words of inheritance are still necessary to convey a fee in South Carolina. McLaurin v. McLaurin, 217 S.E.2d 41 (S.C. 1975).

(n153)Footnote 358. Cole v. Steinlauf, 136 A.2d 744 (Conn. 1957) ("and assigns forever" created only a life estate).

(n154)Footnote 359. Still used in Hawaii but may be found in the habendum clause. De Freitas v. Coke, 380 P.2d 762 (Haw. 1963).

(n155)Footnote 360. Roberta v. Lewis, 153 U.S. 367 (1894); Demorest v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., 321 U.S. 36 (1944); Wallace v. R.E. Stone Co., 76 F.2d 269 (3d Cir. 1935); Simmons v. Rosemond, 223 F. Supp. 61 (D.D.C. 1963); Herron v. Rozelle, 480 F.2d 282 (10th Cir. 1973) ("heirs" not necessary in reservation of a permanent timber estate); Parker v. Robertson, 88 So. 418 (Ala. 1921); Brand v. Faries, 178 A. 583 (Del. Ch. 1935); Taylor v. Payne, 17 So. 2d 615 (Fla. 1944); Daniel v. Stewart, 110 S.E. 178 (Ga. 1921); Melies v. Beatty, 145 N.E. 146 (Ill. 1906); Spangler v. Bell, 60 N.E.2d 864 (Ill. 1924); Cahill v. Cahill, 84 N.E.2d 380 (Ill. 1949); In re Trusteeship of Creech, 159 N.E.2d 291 (Ind. App. 1959); In re Heller's Estate, 11 N.W.2d 586 (Iowa 1943); In re Brown, 239 P. 747 (Kan. 1925); Lindsay v. McCormack, 9 Ky. (2 A.K. Marsh.) 229 (1820); Weller v. Dinwiddie, 248 S.W. 874 (Ky. 1923); Simons v. Bowers, 81 S.W.2d 604 (Ky. 1935); Methodist Church v. Fairbanks, 126 A. 823 (Me. 1924); Harrison v. Prentice, 38 A.2d 101 (Md. 1944); Knibbs v. Knibbs, 127 N.E. 885 (Mass. 1920); Merchants Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Boston, 62 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1945); In re Thayer's Estate, 15 N.W.2d 712 (Mich. 1944); In re Crosby's Estate, 15 N.W.2d 501 (Minn. 1944); Juden v. Southeast Missouri Tel. Co., 235 S.W.2d 360 (Mo. 1950); Sorenson v. Booram, 297 S.W. 70 (Mo. 1927); In re Barrett's Estate, 123 N.W. 299 (Neb. 1909); Tzeses v. Tenez Constr. Co., 128 A. 388 (N.J. Eq. 1925); In re Wells, 21 N.E. 137 (N.Y. 1889); In re Seif's Will, 209 N.Y.S. 341 (1925); Barbee v. Thompson, 139 S.E. 838 (N.C. 1927); Friswold v. United States Nat'l Bank, 257 P. 818 (Or. 1927); Cassell v. Cooke, 8 Pa. (Serg. & Rawle) 268 (1822); Snyder v. Baer, 22 A. 897 (Pa. 1891); Reiff v. Pepo, 139 A. 144 (Pa. 1927); Phillips v. Smith, 133 A. 661 (R.I. 1926); Goffe v. Karanyianopoulos, 166 A. 547 (R.I. 1933); Anderson v. Anderson, 16 N.W.2d 43 (S.D. 1944); Totten v. Dawson, 139 S.E. 858 (W. Va. 1927); In re Baird's Will, 177 N.W. 23 (Wis. 1920); In re Richter's Will, 254 N.W. 103

(Wis. 1934).

See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 37, Cmt. a.

(n156)Footnote 361. See Restatement of the Law of Property, § 39.

See the following cases:

Hay's Estate v. Internal Revenue Comm'r, 181 F.2d 169 (5th Cir. 1950); United States v. Five Acres of Land in Suffolk County, 56 F. Supp. 628 (Mass. 1944); Graves v. Wheeler, 61 So. 341 (Ala. 1913); Long v. Holden, 112 So. 444 (Ala. 1927); Oglesby v. Thomas, 16 So. 2d 320 (Ala. 1944); Heartsill v. Thompson, 16 So. 2d 507 (Ala. 1944); Henry v. White, 60 So. 2d 149 (Ala. 1952); Mt. Olive Stave Co. v. Handford, 166 S.W. 532 (Ark. 1914); Van Slyke v. Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Co., 102 P. 816 (Cal. 1909); Daniel v. Stewart, 110 S.E. 178 (Ga. 1921); Palmer v. Cook, 42 N.E. 796 (Ill. 1896); Stoller v. Doyle, 100 N.E. 959 (Ill. 1913); Prall v. Burckhartt, 132 N.E. 280 (Ill. 1921); Jilek v. Chicago, Wilmington & Franklin Coal Co., 47 N.E.2d 96 (Ill. 1943); In re Trusteeship of Creech, 159 N.E.2d 291 (Ind. App. 1959); Baker v. Kenney, 124 N.W. 901 (Iowa 1910); Yeager v. Farnsworth, 145 N.W. 87 (Iowa 1914); Miller v. Campbell, 180 S.W. 372 (Ky. 1915); Weller v. Dinwiddie, 248 S.W. 874 (Ky. 1923); Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950); Kaufman v. Federal Nat'l Bank, 191 N.E. 422 (Mass. 1934); First & American Nat'l Bank v. Higgins, 293 N.W. 585 (Minn. 1940); Tygard v. Hartwell, 102 S.W. 989 (Mo. 1907); Byrd v. Allen, 171 S.W.2d 691 (Mo. 1942); Juden v. Southeast Missouri Tel. Co., 235 S.W.2d 360 (Mo. 1950); Rupert v. Penner, 53 N.W. 598 (Neb. 1892); Smith v. Furbish, 44 A. 398 (N.H. 1894); Wilson v. Ford, 102 N.E. 614 (N.Y. 1913); Sprinkle v. Spainhour, 62 S.E. 910 (N.C. 1908); Holloway v. Green, 83 S.E. 243 (N.C. 1914); Morris v. Morris, 98 S.E.2d 298 (N.C. 1957) (statute changed rule as to words of limitation in wills); Ford v. Oregon Elec. R. Co., 117 P. 809 (Or. 1911); Palmateer v. Reid, 254 P. 359 (Or. 1927); Beck v. Lane County, 18 P.2d 594 (Or. 1933); Manwiller v. Ludwig, Pa. Com. Pl., 35 Berks 231 (Pa. Com. Pl. 1943); Evenson v. Webster, 53 N.W. 747 (S.D. 1892); Teague v. Sowder, 114 S.W. 484 (Tenn. 1908); Lockett v. Thomas, 165 S.W.2d 375 (Tenn. 1942); Arms v. Burt, 1 Vt. 303 (1828); Flanary v. Kane, 46 S.E. 312, 681 (Va. 1904); Pioneer Sand & Gravel Co. v. Seattle Constr. & Dry Dock Co., 173 P. 508 (Wash. 1918); Williamson v. Jones, 19 S.E. 436 (W. Va. 1894).

Under such a statute the word "heirs" if used is mere surplusage and not a word of purchase. Bronstein v. Bronstein, 83 So. 2d 699 (Fla. 1955).

But though by statute use in granting clause of words of inheritance is rendered unnecessary, neither use of such words nor fact that fee might pass to grantee under statute will render subsequent clauses limiting estate void for repugnance. Richardson v. Richardson, 98 N.E.2d 190 (Ind. App. 1951).

The ancient law imputed a thaumaturgical magic to language. The universal touchstone today is the intention of the parties to the instrument creating the interest in land. Oldfield v. Stoeco Homes, Inc., 139 A.2d 291 (N.J. 1958).

Lack of words of inheritance held of no effect and created no inference of intent. Burcky v. Knowles, 413 A.2d 585 (N.H. 1980).

(n157)Footnote 362. Statute dispensing with necessity of words of limitation is only prospective in operation. Ivey v. Peacock, 47 So. 481 (Fla. 1908).

(n158)Footnote 363. Thus in Indiana the Statute in 1852 abolished the necessity for the use of words of limitation in conveyances. 1 R. S. 1852, ch. 23, § 14; Ind. Code 32-1-2-14. But it was not until 1953 that a devise to an individual without words of limitation clearly carried a fee simple unless there were express words in the will to the contrary. Acts 1953, ch. 112, § 601; Ind. Code 29-1-6-1(b).

(n159)Footnote 364. Hill v. Gianelli, 77 N.E. 458 (Ill. 1906); Ickes v. Ickes, 53 N.E.2d 585 (Ill. 1944); Bell v.

Alexander, 22 Tex. 350 (1858); Wicker v. Rowntree, 185 S.W.2d 150 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945).

Deed to "X and to its survivor and to such survivor's heirs and assigns" created a fee simple in X. Faiola v. Faiola, 238 A.2d 405 (Conn. 1968).

(n160)Footnote 365. Bramley v. White, 183 N.E. 761 (Mass. 1933).

Words "and his children" in will devising real property to testator's wife, and in event of her remarriage, to testator's son and his children, were words of limitation rather than words of devise, and absolute fee to real property vested in son upon death of wife, and son could convey marketable title to real property after death of testator's wife. Boggs v. Baxter, 261 S.W.2d 684 (Ky. 1953).

As used in clause giving testatrix residuary estate to her named grandchildren, "their heirs, legal representatives and assigns" absolutely and forever, quoted words were words of limitation and not of substitution, and such residuary clause bequeathed absolute gifts to those of the named legatees who survive the testatrix. In re Ley's Estate, 110 N.Y.S.2d 494 (1952).

A pecuniary bequest payable out of the proceeds of the sale of certain real estate, to a named legatee, his heirs or assigns, was held not to lapse upon the death of the legatee before the teststor and the heirs or assigns of the legatee should be substituted as legatees. The words "heirs and assigns" are words of limitation, which define the quality of the estate of the legatee; however the words "heirs or assigns," are words of substitution, implying that the heirs shall be substituted for the legatee in the event of his nonexistence at the time of the taking. In re Harper's Estate, 103 Pa. L.J. 215 (1955).

Where the testatrix gave all her estate to her husband, and will provided that husband should enjoy possession and benefits of the estate during the remainder of his life, and that residue of estate after husband's death should be equally divided between their children and the children's "heirs," testatrix' children acquired an estate in remainder in fee, the word "heirs" being construed in its technical sense as a word of limitation. Wates v. Fairfield Forest Prods. Co., 42 S.E.2d 529 (S.C. 1947).

(n161)Footnote 366. Kentland Coal & Coke Co. v. Blankenship, 300 S.W.2d 570 (Ky. 1957) ("and her heirs and assigns" in granting clause and habendum clause prevailed over limiting language later in the deed).

(n162)Footnote 367. Brookbank v. Benedum-Trees Oil Co., 131 A.2d 103 (Pa. 1957).

Use of "heirs" in a deed is presumed a word of limitation. Anne Arundel County v. Litz, 412 A.2d 1256 (Md. App. 1980).

(n163)Footnote 368. Cragin v. Frost Nat'l Bank, 164 S.W.2d 24 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942).

Use of "heirs" after necessity has been released by statute does not create an interest in the heirs, the words still being words of limitation, not of purchase. In re Newby's Estate, 361 P.2d 622 (Colo. 1961).

(n164)Footnote 369. Richardson v. Richardson, 98 N.E.2d 190 (Ind. App. 1951).

(n165)Footnote 370. Prall v. Burekhartt, 132 N.E. 280 (Ill. 1921).

(n166)Footnote 371. Woodward v. Thissell, 218 F. 810 (6th Cir. 1914); Slaughter v. Hall, 77 So. 738 (Ala. 1918); Buck v. Garber, 103 N.E. 1059 (Ill. 1913); Husted v. Rollins, 137 N.W. 462 (Iowa 1912); 378; Garrett v. Wiltse, 161 S.W. 694 (Mo. 1913); Triplett v. Williams, 63 S.E. 79 (N.C. 1908); 24 L.R.A. (NS) 514. Teague v. Sowder, 114 S.W. 484 (Tenn. 1908); Rose v. Rose, 60 S.E.2d 45 (Va. 1950); Weekley v. Weekley, 83 S.E. 1005 (W. Va. 1914).

(n167)Footnote 372. Restatement of the Law of Property, § 40.

(n168)Footnote 373. See Henry v. Metz, 46 N.E.2d 945 (Ill. 1942); Law v. Kane, 52 N.E.2d 212 (Ill. 1943).

Transfer of "all interest" creates a fee simple absolute. McGlothlin v. McElvain, 95 N.E.2d 68 (Ill. 1950).

(n169)Footnote 374. McDill v. Meyer, 128 S.W. 364 (Ark. 1910); Bauman v. Stoller, 85 N.E. 657 (Ill. 1908); Adams v. Merrill, 85 N.E. 114, reh'g denied, 87 N.E. 36 (Ind. App. 1908); Taylor v. Dedman, 179 S.W. 216 (Ky. 1915). See Gibbs v. Bates, 222 S.W.2d 805 (Ark. 1949).

(n170)Footnote 375. Graves v. Wheeler, 61 So. 341 (Ala. 1913); Radebaugh v. Radebaugh, 107 N.E. 197 (Ill. 1914); Adams v. Merrill, 85 N.E. 114, reh'g denied, 87 N.E. 36 (Ind. App. 1908); Hall v. Wright, 87 S.W. 1129 (Ky. 1905).

(n171)Footnote 376. Tague v. Tague, 85 N.W.2d 22 (Iowa. 1957).

(n172)Footnote 377. Richard T. Green Co. v. Chelsea, 149 F.2d 927 (1st Cir. 1945).

(n173)Footnote 378. Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950) ("children forever" were words of limitation); Riggs v. New Castle, 78 A. 1037 (Pa. 1911); Gowdy v. Kelley, 194 S.E. 156 (S.C. 1937) (statute dispensing with the necessity of words of limitation applies to wills not deeds).

(n174)Footnote 379. Kelly v. Parsons, 127 S.W. 792 (Ky. 1910); Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950) (to "children forever" created fee).

(n175)Footnote 380. Simons v. Bowers, 81 S.W.2d 604 (Ky. 1935); Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Ratcliff, 59 So. 2d 311 (Miss. 1952).

(n176)Footnote 381. Branca v. Makuakane, 13 Haw. 499 (1901); Cole v. Winnipisseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co., 54 N.H. 242 (1874); Rackley v. Chestnutt, 14 S.E. 750 (N.C. 1892).

(n177)Footnote 382. Bronstein v. Bronstein, 83 So. 2d 699 (Fla. 1955).

(n178)Footnote 383. Los Angeles v. Savage, 331 P.2d 211 (Cal. App. 1958).

Lease to daughter and descendants under Uniform Property Act gave a life estate with a contingent remainder to the descendants as a class, not a fee tail as at common law. Ellingrod v. Trombla, 95 N.W.2d 635 (Neb. 1959).

(n179)Footnote 384. Henry v. Metz, 46 N.E.2d 945 (Ill. 1942).

(n180)Footnote 385. Bronstein v. Bronstein, 83 So. 2d 699 (Fla. 1955); In re Traub's Estate, 92 N.W.2d 480 (Mich. 1958); In re Woodcock's Estate, 186 N.Y.S.2d 452 (1959); Pilley v. Smith, 51 S.E.2d 923 (N.C. 1949); Maxwell v. Saylor, 58 A.2d 355 (Pa. 1948).

(n181)Footnote 386. Hamby v. Northcut, 149 S.W.2d 484 (Tenn. App. 1940).

(n182)Footnote 387. Rice v. Vierson, 288 P.2d 416 (Okla. 1955).

(n183)Footnote 388. Hay's Estate v. Internal Revenue Comm'r, 181 F.2d 169 (5th Cir. 1950).

(n184)Footnote 389. Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950).

(n185)Footnote 390. Karmullen v. Krotz, 18 Iowa 352 (1865); Ross v. McGee, 56 A. 1128 (Md. 1904); Ruhnke v.

Aubert, 113 P. 38 (Or. 1911).

Words of inheritance unnecessary to create easement by grant or reservation. Maryland Laws 1947, Act 21 .

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE *

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 17.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 17.07 The Modern Fee Simple Absolute.

[Go To Supp]

The modern fee simple absolute represents the highest concentration of rights and privileges in the hands of an individual that can arise in a particular stage of the political economy. In a fee simple absolute all possible rights and privileges with respect to land are either in the control of the individual owner or of the sovereign. There is no participation by third parties. n391 This recognition of the individual has come about slowly over the years and in many states still today, the fee simple "absolute" in its purest sense has not yet been realized.

The "absolute" in the fee simple implies the right of the owner to have uncontrolled use and disposition of all of the legal and physical properties thereof. It contemplates the untrammelled power of alienation. Such alienation may be inter vivos or post mortem. It may be voluntary or involuntary. If any restrictions exist upon these rights then the fee is not absolute and remnants of the family ownership concept still exist so that despite the efforts of the holder of the immediate estate there remain in the title threads of family rights which he cannot cut. Thus the holder of the fee simple absolute may: (a) freely alienate inter vivos and create any estate in the grantee recognized by law; n392 (b) he may devise the property by exercising the legal method authorized by the jurisdiction and so may cut off without condition any prospective heir; (c) subject the property or any portion thereof to sale for payment of debts; (d) treat the property in any manner without anyone being legally able to object to "waste" so long as the holder does not transgress public policy. n393

The sum of the rights which the holder of a fee simple absolute may exercise with respect to his property is, however, subject to consistent diminution as the population growth, scientific development, and political consciousness change. The extent to which the "owner" n394 may exploit minerals, air and water depends upon the increasing scarcity and the greatest public use thereof, and increasingly the individual's right to make use of one's own soil is made subject not merely to public restrictions, but also to individual liabilities.

There is a very strong presumption in favor of the creating of a fee simple absolute as against a lesser estate. n395 The presumption is that a deed carries a fee-simple estate. n396 In some jurisdictions it is held that where an estate in land is granted by express words or by fair construction, a fee-simple estate is favored. n397 In construing instruments the courts presume that the grantor or testator intended to transfer the greatest estate that the terms of the instrument will permit. n398 Unless a conditional estate is created by the express language of a deed or will, the grantor or testator will be conclusively presumed to have intended a fee simple. n399 In the case of irreconcilable conflict, the granting clause prevails. n400

The fee is not subject to any future interests that constitute "rights" in the property. n401 Quia emptores has been avoided by retaining an equitable charge in favor of the grantor. n402 It may be subject to liens, charges or inchoate claims against it, but otherwise there can exist only the expectancies of heirs, no rights in land held by third parties. An attempted limitation over is repugnant to the grant of an absolute fee but an easement is not. n403 If an absolute devise is made of property any subsequent language in the will must be clear evidence of the testator's intent to reduce the fee thus granted. n404 This philosophy is, however, sometimes modified by the cliche "the first deed and the last will govern." n405

The often expressed rule that the last will governs yields to another rule to the effect that if a fee simple absolute is given in the clause of the will it will not be reduced by subsequent language unless such language manifests a clear and unmistakable intent of the testator that the devisee shall not take a fee simple absolute. n406 And this rule also prevails over the other expression that various parts of the will are to be construed in harmony with each other. n407 If a deed excludes an interest in the granting clause but there is no reference to a reservation by the grantor or a limitation over, the grantee takes all of the grantor's interest. n408

An estate given in clear and decisive terms will not be taken away or cut down by a subsequent clause unless the subsequent clause is as positive as the words giving the estate. n409

An attempted gift of devise over after a gift of fee simple absolute is null and void. n410

Under a will devising the residue of testator's estate to devisees equally and in fee simple and "absolute right," it was held that the quoted words were surplusage and added nothing to the estate theretofore created. n411 It has been held that the use of the word "absolute" includes the whole title and embraces any and all estates that may be carved therefrom or are included therein. n412 A grant of an absolute fee cannot be curtailed by a subsequent doubtful or repugnant provision in the deed. n413

Where in a will the testator makes a devise in fee and in a later clause seeks to reduce it, there are three conflicting approaches. n414

An absolute title to real estate in fee simple and a limited right or title therein cannot be conveyed or devised at the same time in the same deed or will. n415

The conveyance of a building carries with it the freehold estate of the land in which it sets and is necessary to its enjoyment. n416 Mere precatory language will not debase a fee. n417 A statement of the reason for making the gift is treated as precatory and not as a limitation on the gift. n418 When directed to the executor, language of desire is expressed as a command but when the language is addressed to the legatee in a will it is merely precatory, not creating a limitation in the gift. n419 In order to create a limitation n420 or a trust, n421 the language must be clearly expressed.

In the case of wills, there is a strong presumption that the testator intended to devise an absolute fee simple, n422 and the doctrine of the later clause in a will as controlling over a preceding one will not operate to cut down a fee once given except by clear and unambiguous language. n423 But this rule will yield to the expressed intention of the testator. n424 It is superior, however, to the rule that every part of the will is to be given effect if possible. n425 This presumption is supported by statute in some states. n426

A limitation in a deed of the use to which the land could be put did not reduce a fee to a life estate. n427 This is in accordance with the general rule that an expression of purpose for a reversion or forfeiture will not debase a fee. n428 In the absence of language of possibility of reverter or right of re-entry, consideration is conclusive evidence of grantor's intent to create a fee simple absolute. n429

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 391. In re Sullivan's Estate, 218 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1950).

A fee simple is the highest right, title and interest that one can have in land. Masheter v. Diver, 253 N.E.2d 780 (Ohio 1969).

(n2)Footnote 392. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries. 289, 290.

(n3)Footnote 393. It was formerly thought that a tenant in fee simple, whose estate is liable to be defeated by an executory limitation, stood in equity in no better position, as regards the right to commit waste, than a tenant for life punishable for waste. (Robinson v. Litton, 3 Atk. 209; Stansfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 273. But it has more recently been decided that, in the absence of express provision, he is practically in the same position as a tenant for life without impeachment of waste. (Turner v. Wright, 2 De. G.F. & J. 234; see p. 246.) Such a tenant in fee simple may be made punishable for waste by an express provision contained in the instrument under which his estate arises. (Blake v. Peters, 1 De. G.J. & S. 345.)

Since the liability to defeasance by executory limitation follows the estate into the hands of an assignee or devisee, it implies a disability to alienate for an unincumbered fee simple. Chaffin, Real Property (3d ed.), 218.

Owner of fee has the right to use it for any lawful purpose. Reid v. Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, 130 S.E.2d 777 (Ga. App. 1963); Reutner v. Vouga, 367 S.W.2d 34 (Ga. App. 1963); Clark v. Clark, 191 A.2d 417 (Pa. 1963).

(n4)Footnote 394. Woolcock v. Temporary State Hous. Rent Comm'n, 148 N.Y.S.2d 846 (1956).

(n5)Footnote 395. Honaker v. Hutchinson, 205 S.W.2d 683 (Ky. 1947); Gearheart v. Little, 230 S.W.2d 472 (Ky. 1950); Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Ratcliff, 59 So. 2d 311 (Miss. 1952); Alabama & Vicksburg R. Co. v. Mashburn, 109 So. 2d 533 (Miss. 1959) (conveying and granting clauses prevail over subsequent language reducing fee); Board of Educ. v. French, 166 N.Y.S.2d 181 (1957) (express language must be used to create base fees or fees upon condition subsequent); Pilley v. Smith, 51 S.E.2d 923 (N.C. 1949); Whitman v. Harrison, 327 P.2d 680 (Okla. 1958); Waters v. Ellis, 312 S.W.2d 231 (Tex. 1958).

Presumption that grantor intended to convey his entire estate even though there was a limitation upon warranty. First Nat'l Bank v. Allard, 506 P.2d 405 (Colo. App. 1972).

Railroad right-of-way is equivalent to a fee. Kansas City Southern R.R. v. City of DeRidder, 206 So. 2d 562 (La. App. 1968).

Construction against fee simple determinable and fees upon conditions subsequent. Hagaman v. Board of Educ. of Woodbridge Twp., 285 A.2d 63 (N.J. Super. 1971).

The words "fee simple" would ordinarily mean the fee simple absolute. Babb v. Rand, 345 A.2d 496 (Me. 1975).

(n6)Footnote 396. First Nat'l Bank of Or. v. Towsend, 555 P.2d 477 (Or. App. 1976).

Presumption that the deed carries a fee simple unless there is language creating a different estate. Department of Transp. v. Knight, 232 S.E.2d 72 (Ga. 1977).

(n7)Footnote 397. Heusner v. Fleck, 323 P.2d 155 (Cal. App. 1958) (fee simple taken in absence of restrictive clause); Stevens v. Vinita, 315 P.2d 776 (Okla. 1957) (in absence of restrictive clause fee simple taken); Briggs v. Briggs, 45 N.W.2d 62 (S.D. 1950) ("I will" was devise of fee simple absolute); Stamford v. King, 144 S.W.2d 923 (Tex. Civ. App. 1940).

A limitation over on absolute devise in fee may be valid in New Jersey. Stat. Ann., § 3B:3-40. See Greene v. Schmurak, 111 A.2d 520 (N.J. Super. 1955), aff'd, 121 A.2d 35 (N.J. Super. 1956).

"Grant, bargain and sell" import the vesting of a fee simple title by deed. Love v. Missouri Union Presbytery, 534 S.W.2d 511 (Mo. App. 1976).

(n8)Footnote 398. Hudgins v. Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 144 F. Supp. 192 (E.D. Tex. 1956); Hale v. Ziegler, 303 P.2d 190 (Kan. 1956).

(n9)Footnote 399. Bough v. King, 167 F. Supp. 191 (D.V.I. 1958); Sheldon v. Lewis, 158 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio Com. Pl. 1959) (devise of all my real and personal property created fee simple absolute); Furman Univ. v. Glover, 83 S.E.2d 559 (S.C. 1954) (statement of purpose does not effect a fee simple absolute); Templeton v. Stong, 188 S.W.2d 560 (Tenn. 1945).

Granting of full power of sale does not negate fee simple. Wenzel v. Menchaca, 354 S.W.2d 635 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962).

Failure to reserve a reversionary interest indicates fee simple absolute, not a fee simple determinable. City of Tempe v. Baseball Facs. Inc., 534 P.2d 1056 (Ariz. App. 1975).

(n10)Footnote 400. First Nat'l Bank of Or. v. Townsend, 555 P.2d 477 (Or. App. 1976).

(n11)Footnote 401. La Rosa v. McVicker, 137 A.2d 861 (Pa. 1958).

Louisiana has the "prohibited substitution" rule that the donor may not vest property in one person and at his death in another so that the latter takes direct from the testator. In such a case, the entire gift is void. Crichton v. Gredler, 235 So. 2d 411 (La. 1970).

Donation omnium bonorum is void where gratuitous disposition does not reserve funds sufficient for donor's subsistence. Magee v. Stacey, 223 So. 2d 194 (La. App. 1969).

Donating where usufruct is reserved to the donor is void. Taylor v. Spencer, 225 So. 2d 98 (La. App. 1969).

(n12)Footnote 402. Deed subject to grantor's right to receive one-half of rent or one-half of proceeds of sale created an equitable charge in favor of grantor. Gadekar v. Phillips, 375 A.2d 248 (Md. App. 1977).

(n13)Footnote 403. Los Angeles v. Savage, 331 P.2d 211 (Cal. App. 1958).

(n14)Footnote 404. "To A and over to B if A died without heirs of the body begotten" was held to create a fee tail with remainder over which by the statute became a fee simple subject to a contingent limitation. Eldred v. Shaw, 70 N.W. 545 (Mich. 1897).

McClure v. Bailey, 209 S.W.2d 671 (Tex. Civ. App. 1948) (subsequent clause limiting a prior devise in fee simple construed as creating a fee with a limitation over on death without disposing of the property).

(n15)Footnote 405. LaRosa v. McVicker, 137 A.2d 861 (Pa. Super. 1958) (later language in a will may reduce a fee simple absolute earlier devised).

(n16)Footnote 406. McDonald v. Suarez, 93 S.E.2d 16 (Ga. 1956); In re Butler's Will, 151 N.Y.S.2d 866 (1956); In re Anderson's Will, 151 N.Y.S.2d 707 (1956).

Gift of fee not reduced to a life estate in a will by later gift over of what remained after death of first devisee. Ahrens v. McNutt, 467 S.W.2d 721 (Ark. 1971).

Subsequent clause limiting a prior fee simple devise held to create a life estate with power of disposition and a remainder of what is left. Hanks v. McDaniel, 210 S.W.2d 784 (Ky. 1948); Glidewell v. Glidewell, 230 S.W.2d 752 (Mo. 1950).

An estate devised in fee cannot by subsequent limitation be stripped of its legal incidents and where apparent intent was to give absolute estate subsequent language inconsistent therewith held ineffective. Shevlin v. Colony Lutheran Church, 88 S.E.2d 674 (S.C. 1955).

Estate in fee simple absolute with right of re-entry reserved for violation of restriction did not reduce the fee once granted. Easterly v. Hall, 182 S.E.2d 671 (S.C. 1971).

Clear fee simple in one paragraph of will not reduced by ambiguous language in later paragraph. Killough v. Shafer, 358 S.W.2d 748 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962).

(n17)Footnote 407. Young v. Griffin, 292 S.W.2d 376 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956).

Collie v. Tucker, 317 S.W.2d 137 (Ark. 1958) (a subsequent clause in a will purporting to limit an earlier devise in fee simple is void because of repugnancy).

(n18)Footnote 408. Whitman v. Harrison, 327 P.2d 680 (Okla. 1958); Palmer v. Campbell, 333 P.2d 957 (Okla. 1958).

But permitting subsequent words in a win to reduce a fee simple given by prior words. In re Wraught's Estate, 32 A.2d 8 (Pa. 1943).

(n19)Footnote 409. Noble v. Noble, 235 P.2d 670 (Okla. 1951).

Gift of a fee was not cut down in a will by later provision providing for limitation over on death of the survivor's husband and wife. Cockrell v. Jones, 275 So. 2d 105 (Miss. 1973).

Deed to X with language just before the description indicating that a life estate only was intended gave X a fee. Oxendine v. Lewis, 114 S.E.2d 706 (N.C. 1960).

Absolute gift of fee simple prevails over subsequent attempted gift over in a well. Koval v. Koval, 221 N.E.2d 490 (Ohio 1966).

Words of limitation following gift of fee simple reduced the estate given in a will. Wallace v. Magie, 522 P.2d 989 (Kan. 1974).

Fee simple granting clause prevailed over habendum which created a reverter. Corley v. Parson, 213 S.E.2d 693 (Ga. 1975).

Habendum clause prevailed over granting clause where there was a specific independent covenant to reserve a life estate and to reconvey on demand. Baden v. Castle, 344 A.2d 171 (Md. App. 1975).

Reverter clause appearing at end of description in a deed held invalid. Whetsell v. Jernigan, 223 S.E.2d 397 (N.C. App. 1976).

An estate devised absolutely in fee will not be reduced by subsequent limitations unless the content is clearly manifest. Johnson v. Johnson, 239 S.E.2d 346 (Ga. 1977).

A fee simple given in a devise was not limited by provision that if the devisee died without bodily heirs the property would pass to another. Smith v. Bynum, 558 S.W.2d 99 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977). Granting clause in fee simple was not cut down by subsequent language. Stylecraft, Inc. v. Thomas, 159 S.E.2d 46 (S.C. 1968).

(n20)Footnote 410. Gery v. Koval, 219 N.E.2d 853 (Ohio 1966).

An estate devised absolutely in fee will not be reduced by subsequent limitations unless the content is clearly manifest. Johnson v. Johnson, 239 S.E.2d 346 (Ga. 1977).

An intent to place the limitation on alienation in a will which does not provide for a limitation over on alienation does not affect the fee simple given. Stanton v. Dickson, 239 S.E.2d 741 (Ga. 1977); White v. Brown, 559 S.W.2d 938 (Tenn. 1977).

A fee simple given in a devise was not limited by provision that if the devisee died without bodily heirs the property would pass to another. Smith v. Bynum, 558 S.W.2d 99 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

(n21)Footnote 411. Wilham v. Ferrell, 151 S.W.2d 1029 (Ky. 1941).

An estate in lands created by will is presumed to be in fee simple. In re Newby's Estate, 361 P.2d 622 (Colo. 1951).

The construction in wills is favored which will vest a fee simple absolute in the first taker. Vaughan v. Compton, 235 S.W.2d 328 (Mo. 1950).

(n22)Footnote 412. United States v. Sunset Cemetery Co., 132 F.2d 163 (7th Cir. 1942); Gamester v. Massey, 158 N.E.2d 805 (Ind. App. 1959) (devise "absolutely" means a fee simple absolute and a limitation over is void); In re Lewis' Estate, 80 N.W.2d 347 (Iowa 1957) ("forever" in a deed implies a fee simple absolute); Schmidt v. Claus, 93 N.W.2d 592 (Iowa 1958) ("absolutely" means fee simple); Smith v. Hornkohl, 90 N.W.2d 347 (Neb. 1958) ("fee simple" contemplates an absolute estate). Gifts over after absolute gifts held void. In re Ferdun's Estate, 205 P.2d 456 (Cal. App. 1949) (language of gift over held precatory only).

Edgar County Children's Home v. Beltranena, 84 N.E.2d 363 (Ill. 1949), distinguishing Keiser v. Jensen, 25 N.E.2d 819 (Ill. 1940) on language used. Timmons v. Graham, 312 S.W.2d 357 (Ky. 1958) (devise to wife absolutely, but in the event of her death, then any property not disposed of to go over created a life estate with remainder which accelerated on death of wife before testator). Vaughan v. Compton, 235 S.W.2d 328 (Mo. 1950) (devise to one "absolutely" creates a fee simple). Cree v. Kennedy, 82 A.2d 222 (N.J. Super. 1951). The rule of Fox v. Snow, 76 A.2d 877 (N.J. 1950) was changed by statute. New Jersey Laws 1951, ch. 325. Gill v. Leach, 80 N.E.2d 256 (Ohio App. 1947).

See Robert N. Swenson, Construction of Wills -- the Iowa Repugnancy Rule in Testamentary Disposition, 36 U. Det. L.J. 632, 1959 41 Ia. L. Rev. 601 (1956); W.L. Matthews, Jr., Remnant Gifts Over in Kentucky, 44 Ky. L.J. 397 (1956).

(n23)Footnote 413. Roberts v. Randleman, 180 S.W.2d 674 (Mo. 1944).

When a fee simple absolute is devised in a will an attempt to create a limitation over on what remains on the devisee's death is void. Koval v. Koval, 221 N.E.2d 490 (Ohio 1966).

In Ohio a fee tail vests the estate in the grantee for life and with remainder to the issue. Eisemann v. Eisemann, 370 N.E.2d 788 (Ohio Misc. 1976).

(n24)Footnote 414. Where one clause in a will purports to grant a fee simple and a following clause purports to limit the estate, the latter is void for repugnancy holding void a limitation over what remained on the death of the first beneficiary. Collie v. Tucker, 317 S.W.2d 137 (Ark. 1958) (treated as a rule of property).

A life estate created in the first beneficiary with a remainder over of what if anything is left. Glidewell v. Glidewell, 230 S.W.2d 752 (Mo. 1950).

Such a limitation creates a fee defeasible on death of the first beneficiary without disposing of the property. McClure v. Bailey, 209 S.W.2d 671 (Tex. Civ. App. 1948).

(n25)Footnote 415. Watson v. Dalton, 18 N.W.2d 658, Op. Modified 20 N.W.2d 610 (Neb. 1945).

(n26)Footnote 416. Carpenter v. Sickles, 181 N.Y.S.2d 665 (1958).

(n27)Footnote 417. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Clyde, 121 A.2d 625 (Conn. 1956); Wright v. Pritchett, 102 S.E.2d 602 (Ga. 1958); Swango v. Swango's Adm'r, 232 S.W.2d 347 (Ky. 1950); Boutelle v. Boutelle, 188 A.2d 559 (Md. 1963) (devise to wife "to be held for benefit for herself and our children" held a fee simple in wife). In re Wilson's Estate, 116 N.W.2d 215 (Mich. 1962) (devise to sister and on her death "it is my desire that the property be divided equally among my brothers then living" gave an absolute interest to sister); Thompson v. Smith, 300 S.W.2d 404 (Mo. 1957); Housman v. Lewellen, 240 S.W.2d 143 (Mo. App. 1951), rev'd, 244 S.W.2d 21 (Mo. 1951) ("request and direct" were words of devise not merely precatory); Thompson v. Smith, 300 S.W.2d 404 (Mo. 1957), (precatory words will not diminish a devised fee). In re Douglas' Will, 89 N.Y.S.2d 498 (1949) ("my wish is" were words of limitation not precatory); In re Kroog's Will, 116 N.Y.S.2d 392 (1952); In re Kaplan's Will, 181 N.Y.S.2d 246 (1958) (devise with the proviso "I exhort the devisee to care for my son" was precatory only); Taylor v. Taylor, 45 S.E.2d 368 (N.C. 1947); Humphrey v. Faison, 100 S.E.2d 524 (N.C. 1957) ("desired" property to go to nephews and nieces on devisee's death was merely precatory). In re Cunningham's Estate, 16 A.2d 712 (Pa. 1940) (expressions as to the support and maintenance of the beneficiary and his children are considered explanatory and do not vest any interest in the children); Banks v. Banks, 262 S.W.2d 119 (Tex. Civ. App. 1953) (request that widow be permitted to live in dwelling house devised to son was merely precatory); Carson v. Simmons, 96 S.E.2d 800 (Va. 1957) (precatory language does not give rise to a trust).

(n28)Footnote 418. In re Zoller's Estate, 96 A.2d 321 (Pa. 1953).

(n29)Footnote 419. In re McGivern's Estate, 180 P.2d 32 (Cal. App. 1947); Edgar County Children's Home v. Beltranena, 84 N.E.2d 363 (Ill. 1949); Grover v. Wood, 60 N.W.2d 316 (Mich. 1953); Wheeler v. Williams, 108 So. 2d 578 (Miss. 1959).

(n30)Footnote 420. Knisely v. Simpson, 74 N.E.2d 695 (1947).

Devise to H and W and to their heirs, "heirs" were words of limitation not substituting words of purchase so devise lapsed. In re Hubbs' Estate, 365 P.2d 543 (Colo. 1961).

(n31)Footnote 421. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Clyde, 121 A.2d 625 (Conn. 1956); Smith v. Trustees of the Baptist Orphanage, 75 S.E.2d 491 (Va. 1953).

An estate in fee simple absolute is an estate in fee simple and not subject to any special limitation or condition subsequent or executory limitation. Floyd v. Hoover, 234 S.E.2d 89 (Ga. App. 1977).

(n32)Footnote 422. Smith v. Nelson, 29 So. 2d 335 (Ala. 1947); Johnson v. Hicks, 108 N.E.2d 129 (Ind. 1952) (so under statute); Meredith v. Meredith, 227 S.W.2d 984 (Ky. 1950); Citizens Fid. Bank & Trust Co v. Schellberg, 238 S.W.2d 142 (Ky. 1951); Woodard v. Clark, 66 S.E.2d 888 (N.C. 1951); Taylor v. First Nat'l Bank, 207 S.W.2d 428 (Tex. Civ. App. 1948); Phillips v. Currie, 246 S.W.2d 257 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952); Benson v. Greenville Nat'l Exch. Bank, 253 S.W.2d 918 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952).

Intention in will to give only a life estate must be clearly stated. Spicer v. United States, 217 F. Supp. 44 (D. Kan. 1963).

Joint will devising all to the survivor and devising "remainder" to others was held to have been devise of fee simple estates so limitation of remainder over was void. In re Logan's Estate, 115 N.W.2d 701 (Iowa 1962).

(n33)Footnote 423. Bookwalter v. Lamar, 323 F.2d 664 (8th Cir. 1963). Bell v. Killian, 93 So. 2d 769 (Ala. 1957); Los Angeles v. Savage, 331 P.2d 211 (Cal. App. 1958) (subsequent clause in deed may limit estate given in granting clause); Schmidt v. Claus, 93 N.W.2d 592 (Iowa 1958) (subsequent language in will reducing remainder in fee to defeasible held void); In re Cribb's Estate, 308 P.2d 111 (Kan. 1957); Magnusson v. Colorado Oil & Gas Corp., 331 P.2d 577 (Kan. 1958) (granting clause is of paramount importance). Barnard v. Linekin, 118 A.2d 327 (Me. 1955); Thompson v. Smith, 300 S.W.2d 404 (Mo. 1957) (only clear words in will cut down a fee earlier granted); In re Gross' Will, 161 N.Y.S.2d 698 (1957) (a fee granted earlier only cut down by clear words); Speidel v. Haller, 69 N.E.2d 81 (Ohio L.A. 1943); Danneburg v. Danneburg, 271 P.2d 345 (Okla. 1953); Schomp v. Brown, 335 P.2d 847, reh'g denied, 337 P.2d 358 (Or. 1959) (void if language doubtful); In re Call's Estate, 386 P.2d 125 (Utah 1963); Weiss v. Soto, 98 S.E.2d 727 (W. Va. 1957) (only clear words in will cut down a fee earlier granted).

(n34)Footnote 424. Knisely v. Simpson, 74 N.E.2d 695 (Ill. 1947); In re Week's Will, 100 N.Y.S.2d 333 (1950).

(n35)Footnote 425. Taylor v. First Nat'l Bank, 207 S.W.2d 428 (Tex. Civ. App. 1948).

"To my said wife and daughter and their descendants" created a defeasible fee in the wife and daughter rather than a life estate with remainder to their descendants. Bradford v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 338 So. 2d 388 (Miss. 1976).

(n36)Footnote 426. Smith v. Nelson, 29 So. 2d 335 (Ala. 1947); Morris v. Smith, 123 N.E.2d 212 (Mass. 1954); Langston v. Wooten, 59 S.E.2d 605 (N.C. 1950).

(n37)Footnote 427. Boylan v. Lillard, 174 F.2d 572 (10th Cir. 1949); Cobb v. Morton, 42 So. 2d 450 (Ala. 1949); Johnson v. Gaines, 55 S.E.2d 191 (N.C. 1949).

(n38)Footnote 428. Abel v. Girard Trust Co., 73 A.2d 682 (Pa. 1950); Boles v. Red, 227 S.W.2d 310 (Tex. Civ. App. 1950).

Devise which is not limited in enjoyment and which carries an absolute power to sell, use and dispose of is a fee simple. Shaw v. Wertz, 369 S.W.2d 215 (Mo. 1963).

See William F. Fratcher, Bequests for Purposes, 56 Ia. L. Rev. 773 (1971).

(n39)Footnote 429. Smith v. School Dist. No. 14, 94 S.W.2d 706 (Ark. 1936); Ashland v. Greiner, 50 N.E. 99 (Ohio 1898); Ecroyd v. Coggeshall, 41 A. 260 (R.I. 1898).

Statement of purpose insufficient to create a condition. Fordyce v. Woman's Christian Nat'l. Library Ass'n, 96 S.W. 155 (Ark. 1906); Allen v. Trustees of Great Neck Free Church, 193 N.E. 324 (N.Y. 1934).

Creation of trust during lifetime of devisee is not inconsistent with a fee simple. Barth v. Citizens Fid. Bank & Trust

Co., 368 S.W.2d 339 (Ky. 1963).

Words of inheritance in habendum clause converted a life estate conveyed by the grantors into a fee simple. Wayburn v. Smith, 239 S.E.2d 890 (S.C. 1977).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee simple absolute.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.01

Supp. to § 17.01 Overview of Modern Fee Simple Absolute.

[Go To Main]

§ 17.01(b) The Concept of Seisin. [Go To Main] for Guffey v. Creutzinger, change citation from "1998 Tenn. App. LEXIS 388 (1998)" to

" 984 S.W.2d 219 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1998) " for IP Timberlands Operating Co. v. Denmiss Corp., change citation from "1998 Miss. LEXIS 124 (1998)" to

" 726 So. 2d 96 (Miss. 1998) "

§ 17.01(c) Categories of Estates [Go To Main]

Add:

Station Associates, Inc. v. Dare County, 350 N.C. 367, 513 S.E.2d 789 (N.C. 1999) (where deed to U.S. government was devoid of any language of reversion or termination, court held that grantor conveyed "fee simple absolute" rather than "fee simple determinable").

§ 17.01(c)(1) Determinable Estates.

Add:

Jacobs v. CNG Transmission Corp., 332 F. Supp. 2d 759, 773 (W.D. Pa. 2004) (compares fee simple determinable and fee simple subject to condition subsequent and discusses the language to be used by the grantor to create fee simple determinable).

Add:

Swanberg v. City of Tybee Island, 271 Ga. 23, 518 S.E.2d 114 (Ga. 1999) (property conveyed to county in fee simple absolute was not subject to a reversionary interest in the grantor if its use as a county road ceased).

For Bluffs Park Protection Ass'n v. Racich, the name "Racich" should be changed to "Radich"

For Bluffs Park Protection Ass'n v. Radich, remove the comma between "91" and "Wash."

§ 17.01(c)(2) Estates Subject to Conditions Subsequent.

add:

Swaby n. Northern Hills Regional R.R. Authority, 769 N.W.2d 798 (S.D. 2009) (deed to railroad created an easement).

After the block quote ending "interest in question" add new paragraph and new note 28.1:

However, re-conveyance of property by the grantor to a new grantee after the condition subsequent has occurred does not constitute a re-entry "for purposes of terminating a fee simple subject to condition subsequent."[28.1]

LEXIS Search: " ... w/2 subject or upon w/2 ... ."

Correction:

LEXIS Search: change "free simple" to "fee simple."

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.02

Supp. to § 17.02 Concept of the Fee Simple.

[Go To Main]

for Pacific Southwest Realty Co. v. County of Los Angeles, before "2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 (1991)" insert the following citation:

"820 P.2d 1046 "

Add

In re Estate of Rider, 711 A.2d 1018 (Pa. Super. 1998) ("fee simple absolute" is a form of ownership in which a party has unlimited power to sell, transfer, alienate, or bequeath the property in any lawful manner).

After "(West Publishing Company, 2d ed. 1993)" add

"distinguished by In re Jones, 201 B.R. 371 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1996) ."

Add:

Angel v. McKeehan, 63 S.W.3d 185 (Ky. App. 2001) (An estate is not held in fee simple if the devisee does not have the absolute power of disposition; otherwise, it is simply held as a life estate).

Add:

Redevelopment Agency of City of Norwalk v. Norwalk Aluminum Foundry Corp., 155 Conn. 397, 233 A.2d 1 (Conn. 1967) .

Delete this note. See note 69 above.

The following notes need to be renumbered:

change note 71 to 70; note 72 to 71; note 73 to 72; note 74 to 73; note 75 to 74.

change note 76 to 75; note 77 to 76; note 78 to 77; note 79 to 78; note 80 to 79; note 81 to 80; note 82 to 81; note 83 to 82.

Add:

Moss v. Williams, 822 So. 2d 392 (Ala. 2001) (An Alabama statute stated that every estate was to be taken as a fee simple by default. A claim that has a question in the interest is resolved in favor of a fee simple); In re Estate of Rosenbaum, 624 N.W.2d 821 (S.D. 2001) (Court should presume that a grant of property is in fee simple unless another lesser interest is intended by the grantor).

After First Nat'l Bank of Or. v. Townsend, 555 P.2d 477 (Or. App. 1976), add

"; Love v. Missouri Union Presbytery, 534 S.W.2d 511 (Mo. App. 1976) ("grant, bargain and sell" imply a fee simple title)."

11 of 171 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.03

Supp. to § 17.03 Development of the Fee Simple.

[Go To Main]

change case name from "California, Inc." to

"Carma Developers, Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc."

for Carma Developers, Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc., before "6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467 (1992)" insert the following citation:

" 826 P.2d 710 "

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.04

Supp. to § 17.04 The Power of Disposition as Essential to Fee Simple

[Go To Main]

Add:

Angel v. McKeehan, 63 S.W.3d 185 (Ky. App. 2001) (If the devisee is given the power of disposition, then the interest is in fee simple).

Add:

Statham v. Kelly, 584 S.E.2d 246 (Ga. 2003) (holding that a limitation on a gift in fee simple that required the grantees to use the premises for their own personal residence was incompatible with the rule against absolute restrictions of alienation on fee simple property).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.05

Supp. to § 17.05 Restrictions Against "Debasing a Fee."

[Go To Main]

Add:

C & G, Inc. v. Rule, 25 P.3d 76 (Ida. 2001) (deeds conveyed fee simple interests despite "Right of Way" caption on the cover sheets); Schmitt v. United States, 203 F.R.D. 387 (S.D. Ind. 2001) (landowners held fee simple interests in a right of way a railroad had acquired by adverse possession or condemnation).

Add:

Faulkenberry v. Norfolk Southern Railway Co., 2002 S.C. LEXIS 69 (Apr. 29, 2002) (railroad's interest was an easement, not a fee simple estate).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.06

Supp. to § 17.06 The Use of Words of Limitation to Create a Fee Simple

[Go To Main]

§ 17.06(a) At Common Law [Go To Main]

Add:

Schroeder v. Buchholz, 622 N.W.2d 202 (N.D. 2001) (Constructive trust was not created because it would have given full title to the life tenants where there was only life estate conveyed).

Add:

Fleming v. First Union Nat. Bank, 555 S.E.2d 728 (Ga. 2001) (The presumption in a case that involves an absence of anything relating to intent is that the ancestor intended the property go where the law dictates it to go, which is supposed to be natural descendents).

§ 17.06(b) Common Law Exceptions to Required Use of Words of Limitation. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Young, 738 N.Y.S.2d 100 (N.Y.A.D. 2001) (Clear and ambiguous language in a will is given effect as writte).

Add:

Johnson v. Ramsay, 67 S.W.Sd 598 (Ark. App. 2002) (No formal words are required to create an easement but some operative words expressing the fact of sale or transfer of the interest).

§ 17.06(c) The Use of Words of Limitation in Trusts and Equitable Estates [Go To Main]

Add:

U.S. v. 2. 24 Acres of Land, 43 Fed. Appx. 888 ; 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 16228 (C.A.6.Ky 2002) (Deed conveyed to a trustee for the benefit of the grantor's minor son passed onto the son's surviving heir and not the trustee's wife).

Correction:

LEXIS Search: change "w/015" to "w/15"

15 of 171 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.07

Supp. to § 17.07 The Modern Fee Simple Absolute.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Walker v. Sapelo Island Heritage Auth., 285 Ga. 194 (Ga. 2009) (fee simple interest is subject to divestment by adverse possession).

Stecklein v. City of Cascade, 693 N.W.2d 335 (Iowa 2005) (city had fee simple title to streets that were dedicated to the city). Holoubek v. Romshek, 749 N.W.2d 901 (Neb. App. 2008) (a contract to convey in fee simple implies conveyance of a marketable title); Olde Severna Park Improvement Assn, Inc. v. Gunby, 936 A.2d 365 (Md. App. 2007) (a fee simple conveyance included both land and riparian rights).

Add:

Louisa County Conservation Board v. Malone, 778 N.W.2d 204 (Iowa App. 2009) (acquisition of abandoned railroad right of way was in fee simple absolute). Hoke v. O'Bryen, 281 S.W.3d 457 (Tex. App. 2007) (will held to devise a fee simple absolute rather than a fee simple determinable); Barnett v. Estate of Anderson, 966 So. 2d 915 (Ala. 2007) (will held to devise a life estate, rather than a fee simple, despite containing no specific language referring to a life estate).

add:

Timberlake, Inc. v. O'Brien, 902 N.E.2d 843 (Ind. App. 2009) (deed to railroad conveyed only an easement).

Add:

C & G, Inc. v. Rule, 25 P.3d 76 (Ida. 2001) (deeds conveyed fee simple interests despite "Right of Way" caption on the cover sheets); Schmitt v. United States, 203 F.R.D. 387 (S.D. Ind. 2001) (landowners held fee simple interests in a right of way a railroad had acquired by adverse possession or condemnation); Faulkenberry v. Norfolk Southern Railway Company, 2002 S.C. LEXIS 69 (Apr. 29, 2002) (railroad's interest was an easement, not a fee simple estate); Lowcountry Open Land Trust v. State, 552 S.E.2d 778 (S.C. App. 2001) (landowner established fee simple ownership of tidelands); City of Orange Beach v. Benjamin, 2001 Ala. LEXIS 409 (Nov. 9, 2001) (street dedication deemed to convey a fee simple interest).

Imerys Marble Co. v. J. M. Huber Corp., 276 Ga. 401 (Ga. 2003) (holding that a grant in a will should be construed consistent with the presumption in favor of fee simple); Kimberling North, Inc., v. Pope, 100 S.W.3d 863 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003) (holding that an easement granted in a 40-foot strip of land used as a roadway did not grant a fee simple interest).

Add:

Apel v. Katz, 83 Ohio St.3d 11, 697 N.E.2d 600 (Ohio 1998) (statute governing words necessary to create fee simple estate principally provides that failure to include language of inheritance or succession, typically the phrase "heirs and assigns," is not automatically fatal to creation of such an estate). However, many conveyances of railroad lands are construed as easements. See Chapter 54. See, e.g., Blendu v. United States, 79 Fed. Cl. 500 (2007) .

Add:

Bockelman v. MCI Worldcom, Inc., 403 F.3d 528 (8th Cir. 2005) (payment of money for conveyance of a strip of land for railroad purposes constituted "valuable consideration" supporting a finding that a fee simple absolute had been conveyed); Stonybrook Condominium v. Jocelyn Properties, Inc., 862 A.2d 721 (Pa. Comm. 2004) (use of the words "grant and convey" in the deed indicated a transfer of a fee simple absolute interest).

for Cadle Co. v. Caamano, change citation / parenthetical to:

No. 14-95-00145-CV, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 3472 (Tex.App.--Hous. 1996) (quitclaim deed grants a fee simple absolute, if that is what the grantor possesses), vacated on other grounds, 930 S.W.2d 917 (Tex. App. 1996)

Add:

Green Tree Servicing, LLC v. Williams, 659 S.E.2d 193 (S.C. App. 2008) (a fee simple determinable reverts back to the grantor as a fee simple interest).

Add:

Gillie v. Genesee County Treasurer, 745 N.W.2d 137 (Mich. App. 2007) (the tax sale deed conferred a fee simple title).

Add

Hash v. United States, 454 F. Supp. 2d 1066 (D. Idaho 2006) (a deed granting "real estate" in the granting clause and "right of way" in the habendum clause conveyed a fee simple absolute); King Associates, LLP v. Bechtler Development Corporation, 632 S.E.2d 243 (N.C. App. 2006) (a deed granting to a railroad a right of way "in, over and upon" the land was held to convey a fee simple absolute).

Add

Johnson v. Kansas South Southern Railway Company, 208 Fed. Appx. 292 (5th Cir. 2006) (a deed with the words "released, relinquished, and sold" conveyed a fee simple title to a railroad).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 17 FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

2-17 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 17.08

Supp. to § 17.08 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles:

Allee, Benjamin. "Drawing the Line in Regulatory Takings Law: How a Benefits Fraction Supports the Fee Simple Approach to the Denominatory Problem," 70 Fordham L. Rev. 1957 (April, 2002).

Hall, Megan B. "Abraham Lincoln and the Evolution of a Fee Simple Deed," 36 N. Ky. L. Rev. 333 (2009).

Pierson, Brian. "Resolving a Perilous Uncertainty: "The Right of Tribes to Convey Fee Simple Lands," 57 Fed. Law. 49 (March/April, 2010).

Wendel, Peter T. A. Protecting Newly Discovered Antiquities: Thinking Outside the A "Fee Simple" Box," 76 Fordham L. Rev. 1015 (November, 2007).

LexisNexis®

17 of 171 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 FEE TAIL *

2-18 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 18.syn

AUTHOR: by Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 18.syn Synopsis to Chapter 18: FEE TAIL *

§ 18.01 Overview of Fee Simple Conditional and Fee Tail.

§ 18.02 The Development and Nature of the Fee Tail.

§ 18.03 Language Creating a Fee Tail.

§ 18.04 The Estate Tail.

§ 18.05 The Conditional Fee.

by Professor David A. Thomas
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 FEE TAIL *

2-18 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 18.01

AUTHOR: by Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 18.01 Overview of Fee Simple Conditional and Fee Tail.n1

[Go To Supp]

The predecessor of the fee tail estate is the fee simple conditional. The development of the fee simple conditional eventually induced the enactment of the Statute De DonisConditionalibus, n2 which created the fee tail estate. Although the fee simple conditional is relatively unimportant in the United States today, three states -- Iowa, n3 South Carolina n4 and Oregon n5 -- still recognize the fee simple conditional.

The fee simple conditional estate is created by the words "to A and the heirs of his body." n6 It terminates upon the death of the donee who never had issue and the property reverts to the donor (who until then has a possibility of reverter), even if the donee has conveyed the estate to another. n7 It also terminates and the property reverts upon the death of the donee who had issue that predeceased the donee, if the donee has not conveyed the estate to another. n8 if the donee has issue and then conveys the estate to another, the estate becomes a fee simple estate in the grantee,whether or not the issue predecease the donee. n9 Iowa has extended this proposition by adding that if the donee has issue and then devises the estate to another, the estate becomes a fee simple estate in the conveyee. n10 if the donee conveys the estate to another and then has issue, the estate terminates and the property reverts either upon the death of the donee, if the issue predecease the donee, or upon the death of the issue if the donee predeceases them. n11 if the donee dies with issue and has not conveyed the estate to another, the estate descends to the issue as a fee simple conditional, n12 although South Carolina has determined that the issue has a right to convey a fee simple without their issue being born, since the parent has already satisfied the condition of having issue. n13

One other related interest that may be carved out of a fee simple interest is the fee tail, and the fee tail has been altered by statute in most jurisdictions. Originally authorized by the Statute De Donis Conditionalibus n14 in England in 1285, it was an estate that lasted for the life of the grantee plus the lives of all the issue of the grantee. The Statute provided "that the will of the giver according to the form in the deed of gift manifestly expressed shall be from henceforth observed, so that they to whom the land was given under such condition shall have no power to alien the land so given, but that it shall remain unto the issue of them to whom it was given after their death, or shall revert unto the giver or his heirs if issue fail...." After the fifteenth century it became possible to convert the fee tail into a fee simple by a process called docking or barring the entail. n15 Today state statutes govern the treatment of the feetail.

The fee tail estate passes automatically by inheritance to the issue of the grantee upon the grantee's death, and to the issue of those issue upon their death, and so on down the line until the line is extinguished. The estate is created by the words "and the heirs of his body" or "and his issue" or "and hisdescendants." n16 Thus, a conveyance "to Arthur and the heirs of his body" will last until Authur's line of issue runs out. If Arthur has a son and daughter and then dies, Arthur's son and daughter will take the estate as tenants in common. If Arthur's son dies with a son and a grandson by a deceased daughter of Arthur's son, they will take Authur's son's estate as tenants in common. The issue will take their ancestor's estate upon the ancestor's death regardless of the fact that the estate may be owned by one other than their ancestor at that time. Arthur could have sold Fred the property in which he had a fee tail, but the property would still have passed upon his death by inheritance to his son and daughter. Likewise, Arthur's son could have given his property interest to another, but upon his death it would have passed by inheritance to his son and grandson. In effect the holder of a fee tail interest may only transfer that interest for the span of his or her lifetime.

The line of issue in a fee tail may be restricted to male or female heirs, called an estate in tail male and an estate in tail female. The line of issue also may be restricted to the issue of the grantee by one spouse, called a fee tail special as opposed to a fee tail general.

The statutory modifications which have changed the fee tail estate in most jurisdictions fall within four maincategories. n17 The most frequent statutory modification to the common law fee tail converts it to a fee simple held by the first grantee ordevisee. n18 About half the states with statutes of this type also provide that any remainder to follow the fee tail shall be construed as an executory interest in fee simple to become possessory if the first taker dies without lineal descendants. n19

The next most popular method of converting the fee tail estate is to make it a life estate in the first grantee with a remainder in fee simple absolute to that person's lineal descendants. n20 A third legislative approach gives the first taker a fee tail with all its limitations, but surviving descendants inherit a fee simple absolute in the property. n21 Finally, a small group of states permit a tenant in tail to destroy the fee tail estate by conveying it by deed as an estate in fee simple absolute. A creditor may also attack the fee tail estate; however, the tenant in tail may not devise the property by will. n22

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. § 18.01 was written by Dean John Makdisi.

(n2)Footnote 2. Statute of Westminister II, c. 1 (1285).

(n3)Footnote 3. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d (Iowa) 113 (1969).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Scarborough v. Scarborough, 154 S.E.2d 110 (S.C. 1967); Scarborough v. Scarborough, 142 S.E.2d 706 (S.C. 1965).

(n5)Footnote 5. Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (S.C. 1929).

(n6)Footnote 6. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d 128 (Iowa 1969); Scarborough v. Scarborough, 142 S.E.2d 706 (Ore. 1965); Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Ore. 1929).

(n7)Footnote 7. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d 113 (Iowa 1969); Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Or. 1929); Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests (2d ed. 1984) at 29.

(n8)Footnote 8. Bergin & Haskell, supra note 7, at 29; Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property (2d ed. 1988) at 34.

(n9)Footnote 9. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d 113 (Iowa 1969); Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Or. 1929); Howard K. Williams, Cases and Materials on Future Interests 20 (1970); Bergin & Haskell, supra note 7, at 29.

(n10)Footnote 10. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d 113 (Iowa 1969). But see Scarborough v. Scarborough, 142 S.E.2d 706 (S.C. 1965); Bergin & Haskell, supra note 7, at 29.

(n11)Footnote 11. Prichard v. Department of Revenue, 164 N.W.2d 113 (Iowa 1969); Williams, supra note 9, at 20.

(n12)Footnote 12. Scarborough v. Scarborough, 154 S.E.2d 110 (S.C. 1967); Bergin & Haskell, supra note 7, at 29.

(n13)Footnote 13. Scarborough v. Scarborough, 154 S.E.2d 110 (S.C. 1967).

(n14)Footnote 14. Statute of Westminster II, 13 Edw. 1, c. 1 (1285).

(n15)Footnote 15. Moynihan, supra note 8, at 36.

(n16)Footnote 16. Williams, supra note 9, at 156-157.

(n17)Footnote 17. See 1 Restatement of the Law of Property § 59, 68-106 (1936); Moynihan, supra note 8, at 37-39; Bergin & Haskell, supra note 3, at 32-33. For the classification of a future interest following a fee tail changed by statute, see Moynihan, supra note 8, at 123-124, n.4. Where the fee tail estate is recognized, it may be disentailed by a simple deed by the tenant in tail in possession. See Bergin & Haskell, supra note 7, at 32-34.

(n18)Footnote 18. Jurisdictions in this category include Alabama, Arizona, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and sometimes Texas. Roger A. Cunningham, William B. Stoebuck, and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property, 60 & n.3 (2d ed. 1993).

(n19)Footnote 19. Jurisdictions in this category include, California, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Virginia, West Virginia. Id. at 60 & n.4.

(n20)Footnote 20. Jurisdictions in this category include Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, and Vermont. Id. at 60 & n.5.

(n21)Footnote 21. Jurisdictions in this category include Connecticut and Ohio. In addition, Rhode Island's statute has been interpreted to permit a tenant in tail to convert his estate into a fee simple by deed. It also permitted the estate to be attacked by creditors, unlike the cases in Connecticut and Ohio. Id. at 61 & n.7.

(n22)Footnote 22. Jurisdictions in this category include Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Id. at 61 & nn.8-10.

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Moon Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee tail.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 FEE TAIL *

2-18 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 18.02

AUTHOR: by Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 18.02 The Development and Nature of the Fee Tail.

[Go To Supp]

An estate tail is an estate of inheritance limited, not to the grantee's heirs in general, but to the heirs of the grantee's bodybegotten. n23 It has been seen heretofore that we have cause to believe that the early effect of adding the words "and his heirs" to a conveyance was to enlarge a life estate into an estate in the family line, that is to create an entailment. This fee became alienable, however, either through the scheme of the warranty binding heirs according to Littleton or by giving way to primogeniture as the later writers think.

The legal drafters interested in tying up property so as to prevent its alienation being thus defeated in their ideal scheme then resorted to the scheme of making conveyances to one and the heirs of one's body thus limiting the succession to lineal heirs and not collaterals. This scheme was, according to Blackstone, n24 in turn defeated by the courts interpreting the words "and heirs ofhis body" to create an alienable fee simple in the first taker conditioned, however, on the fee returning to the donor if the donee had no heirs of the body. n25 The effect of this judicial determination was to permit the donee to alien so as to bar both the issue and the grantor, to make the property subject to attainder for treason and to encumber the property to the despair of the heirs.

Then as part of the great legislative program of Edward I there was adopted the Statute De DonisConditionalibus. n26 The effect of this statute was to restore the intent of the donor n27 so that a grant to A and the heirs of A's body created a fee tail n28 that could not be defeated by an alienation of A during A's lifetime n29 and which reverted to the donor when the line of A's issue expired. n30 An alienation by the tenant before issue barred the issue but not the donor if the donor died without issue. n31 At common law the fee simple conditional was limited to particular heirs to the exclusion of others and if there was birth of issue the fee became absolute in the grantee with reversion to the grantor if the grantee had never had issue answering the description. The courts made a major inroad into the statute with Taltarum's Case n32 permitting a tenant in tail to cut off both the rights of issue and also the reversion. n33

Meanwhile the fee tail had been much eroded by statute. The Statute of Fines had permitted the barring of those claiming under the in tail but not the reversion. n34 Another statute permitted the tenant in tail to make a long term lease, n35 another charged the land with debts owed by the tenant in tail to the crown. n36 Still another held the land liable for debts of a bankrupt tenant in tail, n37 and a tenant in tail could appoint to a charitable use. n38

Estates tail are first classified with reference to the terms of their creation into (1) estates tail general, and (2) estates tail special. Estates tail general are subdivided into (a) estates general male, and (b) estates general female. Also estates tail special are subdivided into (a) estates tail special male, and (b) estates tail special female. n39 An estate tail general is where the grant is to one and the heirs of one's body generally, so that the issue in general, by each and all marriages, are capable of taking per formam doni. n40 Thus a conveyance to a grantee and to his "bodily heirs" and assigns creates an estate in fee tail general as common law. n41 In such estates the privilege to take by inheritance is limited to the descendants of the first taker. n42 The estate tail general is the greatest of the estates tail. It includes all one's descendants, all one's issue, regardless of the number of marriages from which they come. The technical words are "heirs of the body," and these words or other words of the same meaning must be used. The words issue, descendants, offspring, seed, children, and the like, may be used in devises but must have the significance of "heirs of the body," n43 but no synonyms for "heirs" will suffice to create an estate tail general by deed. n44 The phrase "heirs of his flesh," may be substituted for "heirs of his body" in creating such estate by deed. n45 The words "of his body," and "of his flesh" are words of procreation, and their omission gives the donee a fee simple where "heirs" alone is used, n46 but the use of such words of procreation without the use of words of inheritance in connection therewith creates a life estate only in the donee. n47 Where the word "heirs" is used in connection with words restricting the grant to the heirs of the body a fee tail will becreated. n48 In Kentucky, a deed to the grantee and the "offsprings" of her body has been held to create a fee tail. n49 An estate tail special is where the gift or grant is restricted to certain heirs, or class of heirs, of the donee's body. n50

When both the parents from whose bodies the heirs must be derived are specified, as where the grant is to one and the heirs of his body by a woman named, the estate is a tail special, but it has been held that the second parent need not be named with particularity, as a designation as of a class is sufficient. n51 A conveyance to a married woman and her lawful heirs by her named husband creates an estate tail special. n52 A limitation to A and the heirs of his body by his present wife or by a future wife, designating her, is general in the sense that it may include all descendants tracing their descent from the first taker and the specially designated wife or husband, but is special because all subsequent takers must trace their lineage back to the specially designated husband and wife. Again, an estate tail special may be made more special or restricted by confining the inheritance to issue of a certain sex, as male or female. Thus the limitation may be to A and the "heirs male of his body," or to A and the "heirs female of his body." The former being designated an "estate tail male," and the latter an "estate tail female." The incidents of an estate tail at common law were the same as those in fee simple, n53 except that a tenant in tail could not alienate the estate except for his own lifetime. n54

After the Statute of Westminster, the tenant in tail could commit waste by pulling down buildings, cutting timber, or change the character or use of the estate, and not be answerable to any person therefor. n55

This estate was subject to the wife's dowerrights, n56 and the husband's curtesy. n57 It might be encumbered, at least so long as the first taker lived, the first taker creating the encumbrance. It was liable for his debts during his lifetime, even to sale by assignees in insolvency or trustees in bankruptcy of the tenant. n58 A tenant in tail is not bound to pay off the outstanding encumbrance against the estate when he becomes tenant. Nor can the reversioner or remainderman compel him to pay the interest on such encumbrance, as they might a tenant for life. n59 The courts hold that a feetail estate will not merge into a fee simple though both estates are owned by the same person. n60 A tenant in tail may lease the entailed property for gas and oil purposes for any term within his own tenure. n61 In the absence of statute, a conveyance in fee by the tenant in tail can affect his interest only and does not bar the issue in tail or affect the remainder expectant on the estate tail. n62 Unlike the owner in fee, the tenant in tail cannot dispose of the estate by will. n63

An estate tail under the statute de donis was inalienable. The tenant in tail could convey no interest greater than a life estate, and after that the estate descended to "the heirs of his body," or to other lineal heirs described in the deed of the donor. Before the enactment of this statute, an estate granted to one "and the heirs of his body" was a conditional fee, and the grantee, upon the birth of issue who could inherit, could convey the land absolutely into fee simple, and thus bar not only one's own issue, but also the donor's right of reverter. So the effect of the statute de donis was to render the estate inalienable, and descendible only to the issue named in the grant. The grantee could convey a title good only to the extent of the grantee's own interest, that is, an estate for life determinable by the entry of the heir, if such there should be, or, in default of such issue, by entry of the donor. The estate of such grantee was designated an estate tail, feudum talliatum, being a portion of an estate cut off from the fee. After the restriction upon the fee alienation of estates had continued for two hundred years, it was finally in a great part broken down by the courts, first by the process of "levying a fine," and afterwards by the more effectual means of a "common recovery," which came into use after the famous Taltarum's Case in 1472. n64 In England, from this time until 1834, the common mode of barring an entail and making a conveyance of the estate in fee simple was "to suffer a recovery." After the latter date the tenant in tail might convey the estate absolutely in fee simple by deed. Barring entails or alienating estates tail by fine and recovery was practiced in the colonies and in the older American states, n65 but subsequent statutes made such estates alienable by deed, and such conveyance is just as effective as fines and recoveries, to bar the entail and convey a fee-simple estate. n66 Common recovery was a fictitious suit brought by a third party against the holder of the estate in tail, with the ultimate object of barring both the estate in tail as well as the remainderman. The third person then, either paid the tenant in tail for the land as a purchaser or conveyed it back in fee simple. n67

When the grantee's lineal descendants ceased to exist, the property reverted to the grantor regardless of the length of time after the creation of the fee tail, unless at the time of the creation of the fee the grantor had limited a remainder over to a third person, in which event the remainder vested in possession. n68 And the doctrine of merger did not apply to fee tails. n69

The statute de donis used the word "tenements" in referring to the kinds of property which came within its purview. This word issaid by Coke to include all corporeal and incorporeal inheritable property which savor of the realty or issue out of corporeal real property, or which concern or is annexed to, or may be exercised therewith, and he gives as examples of incorporeal hereditaments, rents, estovers, commons, and the like. All such property may be entailed, and all other incorporeal property. As a general rule, copyhold estates, life estates, and leasehold interests may not be entailed. n70 Annuities charged upon the land may be entailed, but not so if a mere personal charge against the tenant. Estates tail do not extend to personalty, n71 except, perhaps for a limited period. n72 Words which will create an estate tail when applied to real property will create an estate absolute when applied to personalproperty. n73 An estate tail in personal property will operate as an outright grant to the first taker. n74

Properly speaking, an estate tail does not "descend" from one tenant in tail to the successor, but instead the issue of a tenant in tail take per formam doni from the creator of theestate. n75 An estate tail passes only to the heirs of the prescribed kind who issue from the body of the person to whom the estate is first granted, and it ceases when such heirs are extinct. The estate "lasts so long as there exists issue of the prescribed class; so long as there is, as it were, a stream flowing from the fountain." n76 On the failure of such issue the estate reverts to the original donor or the donor's heirs, unless the entail has been barred in the manner provided by statute or by a recovery at common law. While in theory an entail secures a succession in perpetuity to the oldest son, and to the oldest son of the oldest son, n77 in effect there is no such succession.

The fee in an estate tail is vested by the grant or devise in the first taker and passes at death by operation of law to the immediate heirs of the body. n78 In some jurisdictions, an estate tail generally passes to the eldest son, and a special tail passes only in the restrictedway, n79 while in other states it would seem that a general entail would go to the heirs under the existing law of descent, and a special tail estate would pass to the common-law heir of the body of the nameddonee. n80 An estate tail passes to the donee's lawful issue in direct line as long as such donee's posterity endures in regular course of descent, n81 and terminates on the extinction of such issue. n82 Since an estate tail is an estate of inheritance, it passes to particular heirs, and hence it is to be distinguished from a life estate with remainder. n83

This statute had the effect to convert what before its enactment had been a fee simple estate into an estate in fee tail, under which a limitation to one and the heirs of one's body was inalienable by the tenant under any circumstances. n84 This restraint upon the power of alienation fettered inheritances and created perpetuities. The name "fee tail" was borrowed from the feudists, amongst whom it signified mutilated or truncated inheritance from which the heirs general were cut off, or, as some say, because ownership of the subject was cut in two parts, one going to the donee and the heirs of the donee's body and the other remaining as a reversion in the donor. n85

An estate tail is a freehold estate n86 of inheritance n87 as to which there is a fixed line of inheritable succession, limited to the issue of the body of the grantee or devisee and as to which the succession of heirs at law in general does not prevail. n88 An "entail" is a fee abridged or limited to the issue or to certain classes of the issue of a grantee or devisee and not descending to all of the latter's heirs indiscriminately. n89

A tenant in fee tail is not liable for waste n90 nor to diminish encumbrances or pay interest therein. n91 But a reversion existed after a fee tail and when the fee fell for want of the blood line the reversioner succeeded. n92

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: fee tail! w/30 alienat! or inalienable or entail! w/30 fee w/2 abridge! or limit!
or estate! tail! w/5 general or special or estate! tail! w/5 male or female

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 23. 23. Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594(1873); Allen v. Craft, 9 N.E. 919 (Ind. 1887); Gardner v. Grossman, 57 N.E.2d 440 (Ind. 1944); Morehead v. Goellert, 164 P.2d 110 (Kan. 1945); Millard v. Millard, 180 N.W. 429 Mich. 1920); Davidson v. Davidson, 167 S.W.2d 641 (Mo. 1943); Byrd v. Allen, 171 S.W.2d 691 (Mo. 1942); Miller v. Miller, 83 N.E.2d 254 (Ohio 1948); Anders v. Gerhard, 21 A. 253 (Pa. 1891); Simms v. Buist, 30 S.E. 400 (S.C. 1898). Britton treated a limitation to A & B and their heirs lawfully begotten as a condition precedent. 2 Coke, Inst. 333, disputes this and claims it to be a conditional fee.

(n2)Footnote 24. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries 110.

(n3)Footnote 25. Colhoun v. Snider, 6 Bin. (Pa.) 135 (1813); Willion v. Berkley, Plowd. 233, 75 Eng. Rep. 339 (use of word "heirs" made fee simple conditional).

Fee simple conditional before de donis. Littleton, Tenures, § 13.

Bracton's Note Book, Book 2, ch. 6, fol. 17, shows two types of "conditionalis" gifts one to N and the heirs of his body begotten on his lawful wedded wife and the other to have and to hold to the donee and his heirs if he has heirs begotten of his body. The first type reverted when the line ran out. The second became absolute on birth of issue.

In Kenneth Edward Droby, An Introduction to the History of the Law of Real Property (2d ed. 1876), ch. 4, § 3, it is said that before Edward I the two had become confused and that each gave a fee simple alienable on breach of issue. This conclusion does not necessarily follow. The lords would have desired de donis even though they held a reversion on extinction of the family line.

Brown, J., in Willion v. Berkley, Plowd. 223, 245, said:

> And at the common law there was no estate of inheritance but what was fee simple. But these estates in fee simple were of two sorts, the one absolute, and the other conditional, as hath been said. And the fee simple conditional was, where land was given to a man and to the heirs of his body begotten, and herein the abuse was after issue had rather than before issue had... But after issue had such donee at the common law had power to alien, and thereby to bar the issues and the donor, for by having issue the condition was performed, and his inheritance was made more full.

(n4)Footnote 26. Statute De Donis Conditionalibus ; Statute of Westminster II (13 Edw., 1285), ch. 1. First, concerning lands that many times are given upon condition, that is, to wit, where any giveth his land to any man and his wife, and to the heirs begotten of the bodies of the same man and his wife, with such condition expressed that if the same man and his wife die without heir of their bodies between them begotten, the land so given shall revert to the giver or his heir; in case also where one giveth lands in free marriage, which gift hath a condition annexed, though it be not expressed in the deed of gift, which is this, that if the husband and wife die without heir of their bodies begotten, the land so given shall revert to the giver or his heir; in case also where one giveth land to another and the heirs of his body issuing, it seemed very hard and yet seemeth to the givers and their heirs, that their will being expressed in the gift was not heretofore nor yet is observed. In all the cases aforesaid after issue begotten and born between them, to whom the lands were given under such condition, heretofore such feoffees had power to aliene the land so given, and to disinherit their issue of the land, contrary to the minds of the givers, and contrary to the form expressed in the gift; and further, when the issue of such feoffee is failing, the land so given ought to return to the giver or his heir by form of gift expressed in the deed, though the issue, if any were, had died; yet by the deed and feoffment of them, to whom land was so given upon condition, the donors have heretofore been barred of their reversion of the same tenements which was directly repugnant to the form of the gift wherefore our lord the king, perceiving how necessary and expedient it should be to provide remedy in the aforesaid cases, hath ordained, that the will of the giver according to the form in the deed of gift manifestly expressed shall be from henceforth observed, so that they to whom the land was given under such condition shall have no power to aliene the land so given, but that it shall remain unto the issue of them to whom it was given after their death, or shall revert unto the giver or his heirs if issue fail, either by reason that there is no issue at all, or if any issue be, it fail by death, the heir of such issue failing. Neither shall the second husband of any such woman from henceforth have anything in the land so given upon condition after the death of his wife, by the law of England, nor the issue of the second husband and wife shall succeed in the inheritance, but immediately after the death of the husband and wife, to whom the land was so given, it shall come to their issue or return unto the giver or his heir as before is said. And forasmuch as in a new case new remedy must be provided, this manner of writ shall be granted to the party that will purchase it: "Command A. that justly, &c., he render to B. the manor of F. with its appurtenances, which C. gave to such a man, and such a woman, and to the heirs of the said man and woman issuing"; or, "which C. gave to such a man in free marriage with such a woman, and which, after the death of the aforesaid man and woman, to the aforesaid B., son of the aforesaid man and woman, ought to descend, by the form of the gift aforesaid, as he saith"; or, "which C. gave to such a one and the heirs of his body issuing, and which after the death of the said such a one, to the aforesaid B., son of the aforesaid such a one, ought to descend, by the form, &c." The writ whereby the giver shall recover when issue faileth is common enough in the Chancery. And it is to wit that this statute shall hold place touching alienation of land contrary to the form of gift hereafter to be made, and shall not extend to gifts made before. And if a fine be levied hereafter upon such lands it shall be void in the law, neither shall the heirs or such as the reversion belongeth unto, though they be of full age, within England, and out of prison, need to make their claim.

See, as to the development of the fee tail, S.F.C. Milson, Formedon Before De Donis, 72 L.Q. Rev. 391 (1956).

(n5)Footnote 27. See Kepler v. Larson, 108 N.W. 1033 (Iowa 1906). See also Restatement, Property, § 68, 78.

(n6)Footnote 28. Idle v. Cooke, Ld. Raym. 1148, 1 P. Wms. 70 (the term "fee tail" antedated de donis). Feodum talliatum from taliare to cut off, the heirs general cut off.

(n7)Footnote 29. Plucknett has shown legislation of Edw., ch. 5, that as first interpreted limitation on the grant expired in the fourth degree, Y.B. 11 Edw. 2 (Selden Society) 176-177, whereupon it became a fee simple and that only gradually, through court decisions, did the entailment become perpetual.

(n8)Footnote 30. Estates tail were not forfeited for high treason except during the life of the tenant in tail until the time of Henry VIII (26 Hen. 8, ch. 13, § 5; 4 & 5 Edw. 6, ch. 11, § 9). 2 Blackstone, supra note 24, at 118; Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Real Property (18th ed. 1896) 104, 119. See Moore v. Reddel, 102 N.E. 257 (Ill. 1913).

At early common law the estate created by a conveyance to a donee and the heirs of his body was called a "fee simple conditional" since it was in fact a fee simple conditional on issue being born to the donee. Sconce v. Neece, 268 P.2d 1102 (Colo. 1954).

(n9)Footnote 31. Coke on Littleton, at § 19b.

(n10)Footnote 32. Y.B. 14 Edw. 4, 19.

(n11)Footnote 33. A common recovery was a fictitious and prearranged suit in the form of a writ of right started by the person to whom the property was to be conveyed in fee simple. He would allege (of course falsely) that he was the owner of the property in fee simple by a title superior to the defendant's; that the defendant had no title to the land, having come into possession of it after the complainant had been wrongfully ousted therefrom by some third person named. The defendant, tenant in tail, would then appear, making no denial of the complainant's allegations, but calling upon one X, alleged to be the man who had conveyed the land to him in tail with warranty, to appear and defend the title which he had warranted. X would then appear and defend the title, but afterwards would default, and thereupon judgment would be given to the complainant that he recover the land in fee simple, and to the tenant in tail that he recover from X lands of equal value in recompense for the lands alleged to have been conveyed by X with warranty to the tenant in tail. X, the vouchee, selected to take this pretended part because judgment proof, was usually the court crier, and came to be called the common vouchee because used so frequently in this capacity. He had never any interest in the property. The judgment against him for an equal amount of land in favor of the tenant in tail and the heirs of his body was regarded as sufficient recompense for the loss of the entail by such heirs; so that the recovery suffered by the tenant in tail was binding as against them, the complainant taking by virtue of the judgment an estate in fee simple which cut off the entail in favor of the heirs of the body of the tenant in tail, and also the reversion of the original donor, it having been judicially determined that the complainant's title in fee simple was superior to the title of the tenant and his donor. The complainant would then convey the land in fee to the tenant in tail, or convey to another at the tenant's direction, or pay the tenant the purchase-price agreed upon in case an actual sale to him was intended.

(n12)Footnote 34. 32 Hen. 8, ch. 38.

(n13)Footnote 35. 32 Hen. 8, ch. 28.

(n14)Footnote 36. 33 Hen. 8, ch. 39, § 75.

(n15)Footnote 37. 21 Jam., ch. 19.

(n16)Footnote 38. Attorney General v. Warick, 2 Vern. 453, 23 Eng. Rep. 890 (1703).

(n17)Footnote 39. See Allen v. Craft, 9 N.E. 919 (Ind. 1887); Outland v. Bowen, 17 N.E. 281 (Ind. 1888); Pennington v. Pennington, 17 A. 329 (Md. 1889).

(n18)Footnote 40. 2 Blackstone, supra note 24, at 113. Lehndorf v. Cope, 13 N.E. 505 (Ill. 1887); Millard v. Millard, 180 N.W. 429 (Mich. 1920). See Restatement, Property, § 78, cmt. b.

(n19)Footnote 41. Turner v. Hause, 65 N.E. 445 (Ill. 1902).

(n20)Footnote 42. See Restatement, Property, § 78, cmt. b.

(n21)Footnote 43. Richard Preston, An Elementary Treatise on Estates (1820).

(n22)Footnote 44. Coke on Littleton, at § 20a; 2 Blackstone, supra note 24. Rudkin v. Rand, 91 A. 198 (Conn. 1914); Wheeler v. Duke, 1 Cr. & M. 210.

(n23)Footnote 45. Coke on Littleton, at § 20b.

(n24)Footnote 46. 2 Blackstone, supra note 24, 115; Coke on Littleton, at § 27a; Doe v. Smeddle, 2 Barn. & Ald. 126.

(n25)Footnote 47. Coke on Littleton, at § 20b; 2 William Blackstone, supra note 24, at 115; Lehndorf v. Cope, 13 N.E. 505 (Ill. 1887); Ford v. Johnson, 41 Ohio St. 366 (1884).

(n26)Footnote 48. Rudkin v. Rand, 91 A. 198 (Conn. 1914); Dick v. Ricker, 78 N.E. 823 (Ill. 1906); Coogan v. Jones, 115 N.E. 877 (Ill. 1917); Lamb v. Medsker, 74 N.E. 1012 (Ind. App. 1905); Howe v. Howe, 145 P. 873 (Kan. 1915); Gould v. Leadbetter, 150 A. 375 (Me. 1930); Buxton v. Uxbridge, 51 Mass. (10 Met.) 87 (1845); Brown v. Addison Gilbert Hosp., 29 N.E. 625 (Mass. 1892); Millard v. Millard, 180 N.W. 429 (Mich. 1920); Tygard v. Hartwell, 102 S.W. 989 (Mo. 1907); Johnson v. Calvert, 169 S.W. 78 (Mo. 1914); Holcomb v. Lake, 24 N.J.L. 686 (1855); Pollock v. Speidel, 17 Ohio St. 439 (1867).

(n27)Footnote 49. Massingale v. Parker, 236 S.W. 959 (Ky. 1922).

The words "bodily issue" are words of limitation and not words of purchase as are "children of her body." Antley v. Antley, 128 S.E. 31 (S.C. 1925).

(n28)Footnote 50. Blackstone, supra note 24, at 113; 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law (12th ed. 1873) 11. Lehndorf v. Cope, 13 N.E. 505 (Ill. 1887). See Restatement, Property, § 78, cmt. d.

(n29)Footnote 51. Pelham-Clinton v. Newcastle, App. Cas. 111 (1903); Magee v. Martin, 1 L.R. 367, C.A.

(n30)Footnote 52. Kane v. Roath, 276 S.W. 39 (Mo. 1925).

(n31)Footnote 53. Partridge v. Dorsey, 3 Harr. & J. 302 (Md. 1813); Buxton v. Uxbridge, 51 Mass. (10 Met.) 87 (1845).

In the case of a fee conditional, "the grantee ... takes with the following rights and subject to the following limitations: (1) Until issue born after execution and delivery of the deed, the grantee takes only a life estate, with reversion to the grantor... (2) Upon birth of lawful issue, the reversion is barred, and the grantee may convey in fee simple. ... (3) But the grantee under a fee conditional deed cannot devise the land... (4) If the fee conditional estate is not alienated during the lifetime of the grantee, after birth of issue, then the estate descends, not to the heirs general, but to the bodily issue of the grantee in accordance with the statute of distribution, subject, however, to the debts of the grantee." Antley v. Antley, 128 S.E. 31 (S.C. 1925).

(n32)Footnote 54. Croxall v. Shererd, 72 U.S. (5 Wall) 268 (1866); Williams v. McCall, 12 Conn. 328 (1837); Frazer v. Peoria, 74 Ill. 282 (1874); Outland v. Bowen, 17 N.E. 281 (Ind. 1888).

(n33)Footnote 55. 2 Blackstone, supra note 24, at 116; 4 Kent, supra note 50; Pollock v. Speidel, 17 Ohio St. 439 (1867).

(n34)Footnote 56. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 29 N.J.L. 185 (1861); In re Jones' Estate, 64 N.E.2d 609 (Ohio 1861); In re Smith's Appeal, 23 Pa. 9 (1853). See Restatement, Property, § 84.

On death of one having an estate tail under deed, heirs of his body took entire estate by reason of direction of the deed creating interest and not under laws of descent and distribution, and dower statute barred the widow of the one having the estate tail, of any dower interest in the premises. Miller v. Miller, 83 N.E.2d 254 (Ohio 1948).

See Louis J. Schneider, Jr., Rights of a Surviving Spouse in a Fee Tail Estate in Ohio, 18 U. Cin. L. Rev. 332 (1949).

(n35)Footnote 57. Pollock v. Speidel, 17 Ohio St. 439 (1867); Voller v. Carter, 4 El. & Bl. 173 (1854).

(n36)Footnote 58. Coke on Littleton, at § 224a; Wharton v. Wharton, 2 Vern. 3 (1686).

(n37)Footnote 59. 4 Kent, supra note 50, at 18.Amesbury v. Brown, 1 Ves. Sr. 477 (1750); Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 235 (1733).

Where land was conveyed in tail, remainderman could not enter land during lifetime of life tenant, as against contention that life tenant's failure to pay taxes was waste giving right to entry, and hence remaindermen were not guilty of laches in failing to prevent such waste so as to preclude them from asserting rights as against third persons claiming by virtue of tax deed, mortgage foreclosure and adverse possession. Beasley v. Beasley, 88 N.E.2d 435 (Ill. 1949).

(n38)Footnote 60. Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374 (1859); Corbin v. Healy, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 514 (1838).

(n39)Footnote 61. Davis v. Davis, 246 P. 982 (Kan. 1926).

(n40)Footnote 62. Whiting v. Whiting, 4 Conn. 179 (1822); Williams v. McCall, 12 Conn. 328 (1837); Frazer v. Peoria, 74 Ill. 282 (1869); Waters v. Margerum, 60 Pa. 39 (1869); Orndoff v. Turman, 2 Leigh 200 (Va. 1830).

(n41)Footnote 63. Laidler v. Young, 2 H. & J. 59 (Md. 1806); Theological Sem. v. Wall, 44 Pa. 353 (1863).

(n42)Footnote 64. See Orndoff v. Turman, 2 Leigh 200 (Va. 1830).

(n43)Footnote 65. Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. 3 (1811); Roseboom v. Van Vechten, 5 Denio 414 (N.Y. 1848); Lyle v. Richards, 9 Serg. & Rawle 322 (Pa. 1823).

A fee tail was barred pursuant to statute by conveying away the land by deed purporting to convey a fee simple interest and having the land conveyed back to the grantor, whereupon she was seized of a fee simple interest in the land. Caccamo v. Banning, 75 A.2d 222 (Del. 1950).

(n44)Footnote 66. Croxall v. Shererd, 72 U.S. (5 Wall) 268 (1866); Howard v. Moale, 2 H. & J. 218 (Md. 1806); Collamore v. Collamore, 32 N.E. 1034 (Mass. 1893);Lawrence v. Lawrence, 105 Pa. 335 (1884); Jillson v. Wilcox, 7 R.I. 515 (1863).

Where deed conveyed a fee tail estate under common law, a period of adverse possession prior to death of life tenant could not be included to set up statutes of limitations as to bar remaindermen. Beasley v. Beasley, 88 N.E.2d 435 (Ill. 1949).

Where there is an estate tail, the line of succession continues from generation to generation until line is broken by conveyance or failure of issue. Wood River Oil & Ref. Co. v. Madden, 220 P.2d 154 (Kan. 1950).

An act or event which destroys the entail necessarily destroys the remainder expectant on the estate tail. Krieger v. Stauffer, 67 N.E.2d 449 (Ohio 1946).

Forfeiture clause of tenant in tail attempted to bar the entail held void. Mildmay's Case, 6 Coke 40a, 41a, 77 Eng. Rep.

311; Mary Portington's Case, 10 Coke 35a, 35b, 77 Eng. Rep. 976. See Corbet's Case, 1 Coke 83b, 76 Eng. Rep. 187 (1599).

(n45)Footnote 67. Ewing v. Nesbitt, 129 P. 1131 (Kan. 1913) (the effect of a common recovery was a conveyance of record, under our law an ordinary deed); Dutton v. Donahue, 8 P.2d 90, (Wyo. 1932) 79 A.L.R. 1355.

(n46)Footnote 68. 2 Blackstone, supra note 24, at 175.

(n47)Footnote 69. Id. at 177.

(n48)Footnote 70. Coke on Littleton, at § 20a, 120; John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities (3d ed. 1915) § 647, note.

(n49)Footnote 71. Kinney v. Oahu Sugar Co., 255 F. 732 (9th Cir. 1919), cert. denied, 249 U.S. 616 (1919); Hertz v. Abrahams, 36 S.E. 409 (Ga. 1919).

(n50)Footnote 72. See Coke on Littleton, at § 20a, 120.

(n51)Footnote 73. Maulding v. Scott, 13 Ark. 88 (1852); Appeal of Simmons, 115 A. 765 (Me. 1852); Cleveland v. Havens, 13 N.J. Eq. 101 (1860); Hartwell v. Tefft, 35 A. 882 (R.I. 1896), 34 L.R.A. 500; Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Co. v. Bridgham, 106 A. 149 (R.I. 1919). See Swain v. Rascoe, 25 N.C. 200 (1842) (in which an exception to the rule stated in the text is shown).

(n52)Footnote 74. Gardner v. Anderson, 227 P. 743 (Kan. 1923).

(n53)Footnote 75. Miller v. Miller, 83 N.E.2d 254 (Ohio 1948).

(n54)Footnote 76. Louis Arthur Goodeve, Goodeve's Modern Law of Personal Property (5th ed. 1912).

(n55)Footnote 77. Conover v. Cade, 112 N.E. 7 (Ind. 1916); Wright v. Thayer, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 284 (1854).

In Price v. Taylor, 28 Pa. 95 (1857), Lowrie, J., said:

> If it was an error to admit the eldest son as the heir to an estate tail general, under our law, it was perhaps an inevitable one for inheriting all our forms of wills and conveyances, and of legal practice, from England, we could not, if we would, at once build up a perfectly consistent system of legal principles founded on our new circumstances... The reason why estates tail descended to the eldest son under our old laws of descent was, because the descent of such estates was not provided for under our old statutes, and therefore the old common law alone furnished the rule for them... The judicial adoption of the English law of primogeniture in estates tail has entirely ceased to have any support in our laws and customs, and is now plainly incompatible with them all. Therefore we can no longer presume, from general words of entailment, that a lineal descent according to the English law is intended.

(n56)Footnote 78. In re Jones' Estate, 64 N.E.2d 609 (Ohio 1943).

(n57)Footnote 79. Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344 (1850); In re Guthrie's Appeal, 37 Pa. 9 (1860).

(n58)Footnote 80. Riggs v. Sally, 15 Me. 408 (1839); Collamore v. Collamore, 32 N.E. 1034 (Mass. 1893);Byrd v. Allen, 171 S.W.2d 691 (Mo. 1942).

One characteristic of an estate tail is that it continues through bodily heirs for succeeding generations. Steele v.Pedroja, 289 P.2d 738 (Kan. 1955).

(n59)Footnote 81. Inlow v. Herren, 267 S.W. 893 (Mo. 1924); Harwell v. Harwell, 271 S.W. 353 (Tenn. 1925).

An "estate tail" is a freehold estate in which there is a fixed line of inheritable succession limited to the issue of the body of the grantee or devisee which cuts off other heirs at law.Miller v. Miller, 83 N.E.2d 254 (Ohio 1948).

(n60)Footnote 82. 82. Inlow v. Herren, 267 S.W. 893 (Mo. 1924); Harwell v. Harwell, 271 S.W. 353 (Tenn. 1925). See Restatement, Property, § 94.

(n61)Footnote 83. Bodine v. Arthur, 14 S.W. 904 (Ky. 1890); O'Brien v. Sedalia Trust Co., 5 S.W.2d 74 (Mo. 1928); Miller v. Miller, 83 N.E.2d 254 (Ohio1948).

(n62)Footnote 84. Digby, supra, note 25, 224. The effect of this statute was to create a new species of estates of inheritance, which, except under certain special circumstances, could not be alienated so as to defeat the expectant interest of the issue specified in the gift, or postpone the reversion of the lord. There was, it is true, no direct provision restraining the grant in fee simple of such estates. No forfeiture or other immediate penalty would be incurred either by feoffor or feoffee. But inasmuch as the feoffor could only give a title valid against himself and not as against his issue or his lord after his own decease, the fee simple which he would convey to the feoffee would be insecure and precarious and liable to be defeated by the issue of the feoffor, or after failure of the issue, by the lord or original donor. An estate in fee which was thus liable to be defeated was called in later times a base fee.

Dyer, C. J., in Willion v. Berkley, Plowd. 223, 251 (1562), said: "By the implication of the act, the estate which was a fee-simple conditional is divided, and the fee continues always in the donor, and the donee has an estate tail. And therefore the estate of the donee is altered for before the statute the issue should have had an Assize of Mortdancestor, but now he shall not; and before it should have escheated for felony after issue had, but now it shall not; and before the donee should forfeit it for treason, and now, as appears in 7 H., 4, he shall not; and before the donee might charge the land, and the issue should have held it charged, but now he cannot, for it is not the same estate that it was before, nor in the same degree."

(n63)Footnote 85. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S.W. 1162 (Mo. 1904).

(n64)Footnote 86. Gardner v. Anderson, 227 P. 743 (Kan. 1923).

(n65)Footnote 87. Id.; Wood River Oil & Ref. Co. v. Madden, 220 P.2d 154 (Kan. 1950); Smith v. Federal Land Bank, 243 P.2d 1027 (Kan. 1952); Cox v. Fink, 254 S.W. 757 (Ky. 1923); Riggs v. Sally, 15 Me. 408 (1839); Millard v. Millard, 180 N.W. 429 (Mich. 1920); Inlow v. Herren, 267 S.W. 893 (Mo. 1924); Harwell v. Harwell, 271 S.W. 353 (Tenn. 1925).

(n66)Footnote 88. McArthur v. Allen, F. Cas. No.8659; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Adams, 129 S.W. 1101 (Ark. 1910); Bowlin v. White, 91 N.E. 658 (Ill. 1910); Gardner v. Anderson, 227 P. 743 (Kan. 1923); Jones v. Jones, 109 P.2d 211 (Kan. 1940); Smith v. Federal Land Bank, 243 P.2d 1027 (Kan. 1952); Cox v. Fink, 254 S.W. 757 (Ky. 1923); Corbin v. Healy, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 514 (1838); Boxley v. Jackson, 2 So. 2d 160 (Miss. 1941); Harwell v. Harwell, 271 S.W. 353 (Tenn. 1925).

"Estates tail" are estates of inheritance which instead of descending to heirs generally, go to the heirs of donee's body, which means his lawful issue, and through them to his grandchildren in a direct line so long as his posterity endures in a regular order and course of descent, and on the extinction of such issue the estate determines. Ballance v. Garner, 168 P.2d 533 (Kan. 1946).

(n67)Footnote 89. Toney v. Toney, 236 S.W.2d 716 (Ark. 1951); Stearns v. Curry, 137 N.E. 471 (Ill. 1922).

(n68)Footnote 90. 2 Blackstone, supra note 24 115.

(n69)Footnote 91. 4 Kent, supra note 50, at 18.

(n70)Footnote 92. The remedy of a reversioner after a fee tail was the writ of formedon in the reverter, but after a life estate was a writ of intrusion. 2 Frederick Pollard & Frederic William Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I (2d ed. 1898) 23, n.2, 28, 29; Abraham Stearns, A Summary of the Law and Practice of Real Actions (1900) 143, 335-338. See Formedon, Before De Donis, 72 L.O. Rev. 391 (1956).

* This chapter is based in part on Ch. 30, George W. Thompson, Commentaries on the Moon Law of Real Property (John S. Grimes ed. 1979), which made a significant contribution toward preserving the American common law governing the fee tail.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 18 FEE TAIL *

2-18 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 18.03

AUTHOR: by Professor David A. Thomas J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 18.03 Language Creating a Fee Tail.

[Go To Supp]

The common-law rule that words of limitation were necessary to the creation of a fee was applicable to a fee tail. As a fee-tail estate is derived from a fee, it was necessary to use the word, together with its complement, "of the body" in order to create this limited estate. n93 Consequently, in a grant, if the limitation were to A and the "issue of his body," or to him and "his seed," or to him and "his children," the grantee would take a life estate only at common law, as the technical words of inheritance were lacking. n94 "Heirs of his (or her) body" are the technical words which create a fee tail. A deed, if it is to create such an estate, must have used the word "heirs," n95 and either the word "body" or some other word or words of procreation. n96

The modern statutes dispensing with the necessity of the use of words of limitation are applicable to fee tails as well as to fee simples. So today the words "heirs of her body," "heirs lawfully begotten of the body," and other similar expressions, are appropriate words of limitation and must be construed as creating an estate tail, unless from the entire instrument it reasonably appears that they are not used in their technical sense, but in the popular sense of "children." n97 It is not absolutely necessary to use the exact words "of the body," as other words of procreation may be used which restrain the meaning of the word heirs to the lineal descendants of thegrantee. n98

Technical words of limitation are not necessary to create a fee-tail estate by will, as any words showing an intent to pass the estate to lineal descendants will be given this effect. n99 A fee tail is created by a devise to "A or the heirs of his body," n100 or to "A and his heirs lawfully begotten," n101 or to "A and his male heirs" or "heirs male." n102 But words must be used which make the estates descendible to lineal but not collateral heirs. n103 And the words of limitation must be general, notrestricted. n104 But it has been held that the rule in Wild's Case gives use to a fee tail if the grantee had no children on the effective date of the instrument. n105

However, when an estate tail is created by will, it is such by positive rule of law and not because of some mere rule of interpretation, and the legal consequences of its creation are not affected by the testator's intention. Thus, a devise to the testator's daughter for life, remainder to her issue not then in being, the property, on the death of the daughter should she die without issue, to revert to the testator's estate, vests in the daughter an estate tail even though the testator clearly intended her to have no more than a life estate. n106

The term "heirs of the body" may, however, be used to designate the children of the grantee, and in such case the children will take as purchasers, either in common with the parent or in remainder after a life estate in the parent, in accordance with the intention of the grantor. n107

A devise of testator's real estate to his wife, by name, "to her and her heirs by me" was held to create a fee tail specialwhich was by statute converted into a fee-simpleestate. n108

The word "issue" in connection with words pointing out the body from whom the heirs inheritable are to issue or descend has been held to create a fee-tail estate. n109 The word "issue," when used in its technical sense, is held to be equivalent to "heirs of the body," and a devise to A and his issue will be construed as giving A a fee-tail estate. n110 Where the limitation over is not postponed until an indefinite failure of issue, but on failure of children only, or on failure of issue within a given time, the cases generally hold that the estate will not belong to the class known as estates tail. n111 Should the context show that the word "issue" is used with reference to the issue of a certain degree only and does not include the whole posterity of the devisee, it will be construed as a word of purchase designating particular beneficiaries. n112 Some cases hold that if there be issue at the death of the testator a joint estate is created, as a devise to "one and his children." n113 At common law, a limitation in a deed "to one and his issue," creates a joint estate in the first taker and the issue living at the date of the deed, or in some jurisdictions, a remainder to the issue after a life estate in the grantee. n114 However, if there are no issue living at the date of the deed, the grantee, at common law, takes a life estate and issue born afterwards take nothing. n115

An estate tail, so far as it depends upon the words "of his body," may be created by implication. n116 Thus, a grant to one and one's heirs, and if one die without issue or without heirs of the body, then over to another, creates an estate tail. The use of the word "issue" limits the generality of the term "heirs" to the heirs of the body of the grantee. Estates tail by implication are frequent in devises. n117 The only difference between an express estate tail and an estate tail by implication, both being dependent upon a limitation over upon an indefinite failure of issue, is that in the former there is an express devise to the issue, and in the latter such devise is necessarily implied from the ulterior devise being postponed until after a failure of issue generally of the first taker. n118 The character of an estate tail is not changed by its descent through any number of generations. It is particularly distinguished as being measured by the continuance of issue of the body of the donee, and its existence determined only on the failure of such issue and its descent to lineal, and not to collateral, heirs. On the other hand, where the limitation over is not postponed until an indefinite failure of issue, but on failure of children merely or on failure of issue within a definite time, no estate tail is created. n119

Devises are sometimes made to one or to one "and his heirs," with a devise over to some other person if the devisee "dies without issue" or on "failure of issue." The question arises as to what estate does the devisee take under such will. This question can only be answered by first determining what the testator meant by "without issue" or "failure of issue." Either limitation in a will, especially under modern statutes, will give the devisee a fee unless the context shows a different intent. The tendency of some modern courts is to construe such expressions as meaning definite failure of issue, that is, want of issue at the death of the first taker, and this is the rule of presumption in some states. n120 "Dying without issue" or "failure of issue" may mean such failure as may occur at any time in the future and not before testator's death nor at the death of the devisee. This is termed an "indefinite failure of issue," and in the majority of jurisdictions the presumption is that this is the meaning of theexpression. n121 The doctrine of an implied fee tail in the case of a gift with a provision over if the donee dies without issue surviving does not apply where the provision over is effective only if the donee dies without issue surviving a third person. n122 Where real property was given to the devisee "to have and to hold to her, her heirs and assigns forever" but it was provided that, if the devisee "shall die without leaving lawful issue," the property should go to other designated persons, it was held that the devisee took an estate in fee tail, there being nothing in the will which disclosed that the words last quoted meant other than an indefinite failure of issue. n123

Any words which especially show that the testator intended that the issue of the first taker should take by inheritance in a direct line, and in regular order and course of descent, so long as his posterity should endure, and an estate in fee or in tail is given in remainder upon an indefinite failure of issue, then the estate first created will be construed to be an estate tail. n124 But on the other hand it is well settled that, if it appears fromthe context that the limitation over was not postponed until an indefinite failure of issue, but on a failure of children only, or on failure of issue within a given time, the estate will not belong to the class known as estates tail. n125

The indefinite failure of issue which is an essential ingredient of a fee-tail estate means a failure of issue which may occur at any time rather than at any fixed time. n126 At common law and still n127 in some jurisdictions, a limitation to one, but if one die without issue then over, has reference to indefinite failure of issue so as to create a fee tail in the first taker.

