Because in states taking this view creditors of one spouse cannot levy at all on the entirety property, tenancies by the entirety have been labeled "full bars" to creditors' rights. See Steve R. Johnson, After Drye: The Likely Attachment of the Federal Tax Lien to Tenancy-by-the-Entireties Interests, 75 Ind. L.J. 1163 (2000) (listing sixteen "full bar jurisdictions"). In North Carolina, which adheres to the majority rule denying rights to creditors of only one spouse, the rule was applied to a case in which an indebted husband joined with his wife in making a gratuitous transfer of the property to his parents; husband and wife then divorced; on husband's second marriage, his parents transferred the property gratuitously to his new wife, who sold it and invested the proceeds in property titled to herself and her husband as tenants by the entirety. Dealer Supply Co. v. Greene, 422 S.E.2d 350 (N.C. 1992).

(n25)Footnote 159. Farris v. Jefferson Bank, 194 B.R. 931 (Bankr. E.D. Pa.1996) (describing Maryland and Pennsylvania law). But see Goldman v. Goldman, 711 N.Y.S. 2d 128 (N.Y. 2000) (holding that a mortgage given by one tenant by the entirety while a divorce action was pending survived entry of the judgment of divorce and award of the property to the other tenant by the entirety).

(n26)Footnote 160. Rogers v. Rogers, 512 S.E.2d 821 (Va. 1999).

(n27)Footnote 161. Fairclaw v. Forest, 130 F.2d 829, 833 (D.C. Cir. 1942), cert. denied, 318 U.S. 756 (1943).

(n28)Footnote 162. See United States v. Craft, 535 U.S. 274 (2002) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (describing tenancy by the entirety as "a form of property ownership that was of particular benefit to the stay-at-home spouse or mother. She is overwhelmingly likely to be the survivor that obtains title to the unencumbered property; and she (as opposed to her business-world husband) is overwhelmingly unlikely to be the source of the individual indebtedness against which a tenancy by the entirety protects.").

(n29)Footnote 163. Harris v. Crowder, 322 S.E.2d 854, 858-59 (W.Va. 1984) (emphasis in original) (Neely, J.).

(n30)Footnote 164. Garden State Standardbred Sales Co. v. Seese, 611 A.2d 1239 (Pa. 1992). But see In re Goldberg, 166 B.R. 776 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1994) (although spouses elected coverage under Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 209, §§ 1, 1Apreventing seizure of property held as tenants by the entirety by creditor of either spouse after filing for bankruptcy, election held not fraudulent because statute had no exception for pre-existing creditors). See also E.J. McKernan Co. v. Gregory, 643 N.E.2d 1370 (Ill. App. 1994) (although debtor husband transferred house to himself and his wife as tenants by the entirety after judgment was entered against him, transfer held not fraudulent because "specifically and unambiguously sanctioned by statute"). For a discussion of the effect of subsequent Illinois legislation by the court that decided McKernan, see Harris Bank St. Charles v. Weber, 700 N.E.2d 722 (Ill. App. 1998). Creditors' rights in tenancies by the entirety in Illinois have finally been clarified by the state supreme court in Premier Property Mgmt., Inc. v. Chavez, 728 N.E.2d 476 (Ill. 2000).

(n31)Footnote 165. United States v. 15621 S.W. 209th Ave., 894 F.2d 1511 (11th Cir. 1990) (applying Florida law) (government may file lis pendens, preserving its right to seek forfeiture of separate interest of guilty party acquired at death of innocent spouse or by severance of tenancy by the entirety); United States v. Certain Real Property at 2525 Leroy Lane, 910 F.2d 343 (6th Cir. 1990) (Leroy Lane I), 972 F.2d 136 (6th Cir. 1992) (Leroy Lane II) (applying Michigan law); United States v. Parcel of Real Property Known as 1500 Lincoln Ave., 949 F.2d 73 (3d Cir. 1991) (applying Pennsylvania law) (government may seek forfeiture of interest of guilty party, subject to innocent spouse's present right of enjoyment and right of survivorship), noted in 37 Vill. L. Rev. 996 (1992), 8 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 197 (1993), 54 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 553 (1993). See Annotation, Who Is Exempt from Forfeiture of Real Property Under "Innocent Owner" Provision of 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(7), 110 A.L.R. Fed. 569 (1992); Ann Marie Feely, Comment, Forfeiture of Marital Property Under 21 U.S.C. § 881(a)(7): Irreconcilable Differences? 37 Vill. L. Rev. 1487 (1992); Eric G. Zajac, Tenancies by the Entirety and Federal Civil Forfeiture Under the Crime Abuse Prevention and Control

Act: A Clash of Titans, 54 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 533 (1993).

(n32)Footnote 166. J.R. Christ Constr. Co. v. Olevsky, 232 A.2d 196 (Pa. 1967); In re Wetzler, 192 B.R.109 (Bankr. D. Md. 1996) ("For contracts entered into by a husband and a wife, there is a presumption that they do so jointly as entireties and not as individuals.").

(n33)Footnote 167. Guistra Dev. Co. v. Lee, 631 A.2d 199 (Pa. 1993).

(n34)Footnote 168. Vetrano v. Ashe, 606 N.Y.S.2d 398 (1993) (other spouse knew of payments and benefited from them).

(n35)Footnote 169. See In re Rucker, C.A. No. 96-0088-H, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1586 (U.S. Dist. Ct. W.D. Va. 1997) (construing VA. CODE § 8.01-220.2 concerning medical expenses).

(n36)Footnote 170. Ross v. Laurel Glen Homeowners Association, 43 Va. Cir. 205 (1997).

(n37)Footnote 171. United States v. Craft, 535 U.S. 274 (2002), noted in 34 Loy. U. Chi. L.J. 245 (2002), 71 UMKC L. Rev. 731 (2003). For conflicting views of the implications of Craft, see Steve R. Johnson, Why Craft Isn't Scary, 37 Real Property, Probate and Trust J. 440 (2002) and Albert F. Rush, United States v. Craft: Saying Goodbye to Tenancy by the Entirety? 17 Probate and Property 59 (Jan./Feb. 2002).

(n38)Footnote 172. See In re Knapp, 285 B.R. 176 (Bankr. M.D. N.C. 2002) (refusing to extend the reasoning in Craft beyond its application to federal tax liens); In re Basher, 291 B.R. 357 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 2003) (for purpose of federal tax lien, valuing bankrupt husband's interest in tenancy by the entirety as one-half fair market value discounted by husband's and wife's life expectancies).

(n39)Footnote 173. Birney v. Smith, 200 F.3d 225 (4th Cir. 1999) (applying Maryland law).

(n40)Footnote 174. Ballard v. United States, 65 F.3d 367 (4th Cir. 1995) (applying Virginia law).

(n41)Footnote 175. In re Van Der Heide, 164 F.3d 1183 (8th Cir. 1999) (applying Missouri law).

(n42)Footnote 176. The creditors' theory draws some support from an analogy to claims against the beneficiaries of spendthrift trusts. Although the trustee of a discretionary spendthrift trust cannot be compelled to exercise discretion in favor of the beneficiary in such cases, it has been held that if the trustee in fact exercises discretion to make a distribution to the beneficiary, there is a moment in time when a creditor's claim can be effective. "At least for some appreciable time, however brief, the award must precede the delivery of the income he is to receive, and during that time the lien of execution attaches." Hamilton v. Drogo, 150 N.E. 496 (N.Y. 1926). The rejection of the analogy in the case of divorcing tenants by the entirety may be attributed to the greater degree of sympathy courts feel for an exspouse as opposed to a beneficiary of a spendthrift trust.

(n43)Footnote 177. Sharp v. Hamilton, 520 So. 2d 9 (Fla. 1988).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 33.08

AUTHOR: Professor John V. Orth School of Law University of North Carolina

§ 33.08 Termination of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Supp]

As a form of concurrent ownership, a tenancy by the entirety can exist only so long as two persons, married to one another, own the same property at the same time. If, for whatever reason, ownership of the estate passes to one person, the tenancy by the entirety (like all forms of concurrent ownership) terminates. Now that tenancy by the entirety is commonly viewed as a specialized form of joint tenancy, it is bound by the doctrine of the four unities of time, title, interest, and possession; should any one fail, the tenancy by the entirety ceases. n178 In addition, the so-called fifth unity, the "unity of person," describes the necessity for a lawful marriage subsisting between the two co-tenants; n179 should the marriage terminate for whatever reason, the tenancy by the entirety ceases. One court succinctly summarized the possibilities: "The tenancy by the entirety can be changed by voluntary act of the couple, divorce or death." n180 In this section, termination will be examined by act of both tenants by the entirety (§ 33.08(a)), by act of one tenant by the entirety (§ 33.08(b)), and -- regardless of the act of either or both tenants by the entirety -- by operation of law (§ 33.08(c)). An additional section will address the special issues arising from termination by divorce (§ 33.08(d)).

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: termin! w/50 (tenan! w/3 entiret!)

§ 33.08(a) Termination by Act of Both Tenants by the Entirety.

Tenancies by the entirety may be terminated by the act of both tenants by the entirety. Obviously, a grant by both tenants to a third party to hold in severalty ("H and W to C and heirs") terminates the tenancy by the entirety because it eliminates any form of concurrent ownership. Just as obviously, a grant by both tenants by the entirety to two or more other persons to hold in some other form of concurrent ownership ("H and W to A and B and heirs as joint tenants") terminates the tenancy by the entirety. The same is true of any grant by both tenants to one of them as sole owner ("H and W to H" or "H and W to W"); since each was already seised of the whole (per tout), words of inheritance would seem not to be required, even in states that have not otherwise eliminated that requirement. Likewise, a grant by both tenants by the entirety to themselves in some other form of concurrent ownership (for example, "H and W to H and W as tenants in common" or "H and W to H and W as joint tenants") terminates the tenancy by the entirety. n181

A grant by both tenants by the entirety to themselves in the same capacity would not affect the tenancy by the entirety, but where tenants by the entirety convey to themselves in a different capacity, as from themselves as a marital unit to themselves as trustees, the tenancy in the beneficial estate may be severed. n182 An express agreement to terminate a tenancy by the entirety without a deed may be effective as between the spouses but cannot affect the rights of third parties without notice. By analogy to recent developments in the law of joint tenancies, n183 it is possible that a court may recognize a severance by implied mutual agreement. n184 Obviously, joint action by both tenants to end their marriage by divorce would also terminate the tenancy by the entirety. n185

When property held in tenancy by the entirety is sold, a question may arise concerning the tenancy in which the proceeds of the sale are held. For historical reasons, personal property including money cannot ordinarily be held in tenancy by the entirety, n186 so the choice is between tenancy in common and joint tenancy (in jurisdictions still recognizing the latter). In general, the presumption in favor of tenancies in common should be applied in the absence of an expressed intention in favor of joint tenancy. n187 Because of the power each joint tenant has to sever the tenancy, the distinction in regard to use is rarely significant; the problem, as ever, concerns the right of survivorship. What should be done with the proceeds of a sale when one of the selling tenants by the entirety dies before division? The problem is most likely to arise when the sale involves a purchase money mortgage in favor of the sellers or when the sale is by an installment contract and the deed is not to be delivered until the final payment. At least one state, Michigan, has legislated on the subject, preserving the right of survivorship in such cases. n188

Should an option to buy property held in tenancy by the entirety be granted by both tenants, a question may arise if one tenant dies before the option is exercised. In what is called a case of first impression one court ruled, over a vigorous dissent, that the option lapsed. The majority reasoned that the offer to sell was made by the tenants by the entirety as a marital unit rather than as individuals and therefore expired on the death of one. n189

If a voluntary sale by tenants by the entirety is treated as operating to sever the tenancy, a question may arise concerning the moment at which the sale is effective. The ordinary sale begins with a contract to convey, and the law of "equitable conversion" has long treated the contract as the operative event if it is specifically enforceable; the purchaser acquires at the moment of contracting an equitable title to the property, while the vendors hold the legal title as security for the payment of the purchase price. n190 It has been held that, just as equitable conversion shifts the risk of loss to the purchaser, so also it converts the vendors' equitable interest in the money into a tenancy in common, absent an expressed intent to the contrary. n191 A persuasive argument can be made, however, based on the doctrine of the four unities, that delivery of the deed, that is, transfer of the legal title, is the operative event for purposes of termination. The unities have always been legal, as opposed to equitable, prerequisites for the estate of tenancy by the entirety, and that estate continues, regardless of the state of the equitable title, until its "legal" termination at the closing. Should specific performance be sought and obtained by either party to the land sale contract, it would be the vendors, both of them as tenants by the entirety, who would be required to deliver the deed. Again, with respect to the purchase price when paid at the closing, it is submitted that the presumption in favor of tenancy in common should govern in the absence of expressed intention to the contrary.

§ 33.08(b) Termination by Act of One Tenant by the Entirety.

Although, like joint tenancies, tenancies by the entirety may be terminated by any act that destroys one of the four unities, neither tenant by the entirety alone has the legal capacity to destroy the unity of title, interest, or possession. (The unity of time is now beyond change.) This statement is subject to two exceptions, one more apparent than real. In the early nineteenth century the husband was recognized in some states to have a power of alienation, but exercise of this power did not terminate the wife's right of survivorship. Although the unities of title, interest, and possession were apparently compromised or destroyed, the essence of the estate somehow endured. The one act of a tenant by the entirety acting alone that certainly can terminate the tenancy by the entirety is a release of interest to the other ("H to W" or "W to H"). n192 At common law this was impossible by direct conveyance. As Sir William Blackstone bluntly stated over two hundred years ago, "a man cannot grant any thing to his wife ..., for the grant would be to suppose her separate existence." n193 Today a married woman's "separate existence" is well established, although some states long maintained a special procedure for married women's conveyances, often including a private examination by a legal officer to determine whether the conveyance was truly voluntary, or unreasonable or injurious to her. n194 Since each was already seised of the whole (per tout), words of inheritance would not, by analogy to conveyances between joint tenants, be required. n195

Because tenancies by the entirety also required a fifth unity, the "unity of person" based on matrimony, an act of one tenant by the entirety effective to terminate the marriage is also effective to terminate the estate. Now that divorce is generally available "on demand," one tenant can terminate the tenancy by the entirety by invoking the power of the law to end the legal state of matrimony. n196

The Uniform Probate Code has been revised to permit a surviving tenant by the entirety to "disclaim" the interest accruing by the right of survivorship. n197 While the death of a tenant by the entirety would ordinarily terminate the interest of the deceased, the survivor's disclaimer would relate back to the moment of death and sever the tenancy by the entirety, converting it into a tenancy in common. An analogy is attempted to the renunciation of an intestate share and the disclaimer of a testamentary gift. This is, however, to mistake the nature of the right of survivorship. Rather than an interest passing from the deceased tenant by the entirety to the surviving tenant by the entirety, the right of survivorship registers the subtraction from the estate of the interest of the deceased and consequent enlargement of the interest of the survivor. Although a notable departure from the theory of tenancies by the entirety, the result may be justified in the interest of treating all means of succession at death alike: an heir may renounce an intestate share and a devisee may disclaim a testamentary gift.

A Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act (UDOPIA), promulgated in 1999 and now incorporated into the Uniform Probate Code, works a further change in the treatment of disclaimers by tenants by the entirety. n198 Under the UDOPIA, a tenant by the entirety can disclaim either the decedent's equal fractional share of the property (without tracing the source of contributions to the purchase price) or all of the jointly held property other than the part contributed by the disclaimant (that is, with tracing). n199

§ 33.08(c) Termination by Operation of Law.

Tenancies by the entirety may be terminated by operation of law without regard to the intention of either or both tenants. Again, the key is terminating the concurrent ownership or, if that continues, destroying at least one of the four unities or the fifth unity, the "unity of person" based on marriage. By right of survivorship a tenancy by the entirety is terminated by the death of one tenant by the entirety; since only one is left, the survivor holds no longer as tenant by the entirety but as tenant in severalty, in other words, as sole owner.

Tenancies by the entirety are terminated by operation of law when taken by the state by the power of eminent domain. Transfer to a sole owner, even if the result of an involuntary transfer, ends the state of concurrent ownership and with it the tenancy by the entirety. In case of a taking, of course, money is substituted for the land, the "just compensation" required by constitutional law. This money, unlike the proceeds of a voluntary sale, has not been acquired by the intentional act of the tenants by the entirety and so poses a problem since personal property including money may not ordinarily be held in the form of tenancy by the entirety. n200 To change the tenancy in a case of "involuntary conversion" (conversion in the sense of transformation from realty to personalty) could be unfair to one or both of the tenants by the entirety, so courts have admitted an exception in such cases and permitted the proceeds to be held as if in tenancy by the entirety. n201 Technically, the powers of equity may be invoked to impress on the proceeds the incidents of a tenancy by the entirety.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: termin w/50 (tenan! w/3 entiret!) & "eminent domain" or condem!

It may be doubted whether the same result should be reached in any other case. n202 For example, the value of land and buildings held by tenants by the entirety may be insured against loss by casualty, and if damaged, the insurer will be obligated to pay on the policy. The payment is in a sense money substituted for real property and the precipitating event is in fact involuntary, but the money need not be held in the same tenancy as the realty because, unlike the taking by eminent domain, the money is not substituted for the estate. The estate has not, in fact, been terminated, although its value may have been diminished. n203 An exception may be admitted in case of a fire insurance policy and the arson of one tenant by the entirety: the criminal act may be held to sever the tenancy by the entirety so that the innocent spouse may be entitled to one-half the insurance proceeds. n204

Even when the estate has been terminated by involuntary sale, such as by a foreclosure sale pursuant to a mortgage or deed of trust, the analogy to a taking by eminent domain is imperfect and the law of "involuntary conversion" should not be applied. n205 The encumbrance was voluntarily assumed and the proximate cause of the sale was not the exercise of state power but the default in payment. The true analogy is to a voluntary sale. n206

One melancholy instance of termination by operation of law must be considered: the murder by one tenant by the entirety of the other. Professor Powell commented laconically years ago on the social statistics: "The abundance of recent cases suggests the increased frequency of murdering tenants by the entireties." n207 Of course, if H and W hold real property as tenants by the entirety and one murders the other, the tenancy by the entirety is terminated: on the death of one the right of survivorship preserves the entire estate to the other who holds in severalty. Thus far, one might say the tenancy by the entirety was terminated not by operation of law but by the act of one tenant by the entirety. So outrageous is it that a murderer should profit by the crime that courts and legislatures have struggled to devise means to prevent ordinary rules from operating in this case. One court listed five different possibilities:

> (1) The murderer is entitled to take and keep all the property.
>
> (2) The murderer holds the property on constructive trust, but only for the value of the use of one-half of the property for the victim's lifetime expectancy.
>
> (3) The murderer is a constructive trustee for the victim's estate of the whole of the property, subject to a life estate in the murderer in the whole of the property.
>
> (4) The murderer is a constructive trustee of the whole of the property for the victim's estate.
>
> (5) The murderer is a constructive trustee for the victim's estate in one-half of the property. n208

Another possibility is simply to treat the tenancy by the entirety as terminated as of the moment the crime was complete, converting it into a tenancy in common, in effect option (5) without the fiction of the constructive trust. n209 This is the approach adopted by the Uniform Probate Code. n210 A few states have more complicated arrangements, similar to options (2) and (3), seeking to deprive the murderer of any possibility of gain. n211

Rejection of the right of survivorship in case of a "murdering tenant by the entirety" is dependent on a final determination of responsibility, n212 but once determined, the consequence relates back to the time of the crime. During the interval between the death and the final determination of responsibility, a constructive trust may need to be imposed on the legal title-holder in order to preserve the property. n213 If the property had in the meantime been transferred to a good faith purchaser who reasonably relied on the appearance of title, the rule should not be applied, but the money paid by the purchaser should be traced and treated as a substitute res.

Because the reason for refusing to recognize the usual right of survivorship is to prevent a wrongdoer from profiting from the wrong, a difficulty can arise in the case of so called murder-suicide, that is, when the slayer immediately commits suicide. Any rule that deprives the slayer of a momentary benefit actually deprives the slayer's heirs or devisees, who most often are totally innocent, and may raise difficult questions under provisions of the federal and most state constitutions that prohibit forfeiture or corruption of blood. n214 Conversely, where a guilty slayer survives the victim for an appreciable period of time, the policy against profiting from wrongdoing may encourage a court to go beyond the usual presumption of equal shares in tenancies by the entirety and to trace the respective contributions of slayer and victim, as in cases of divorce. If the slayer contributed less than half the value of the property, the slayer may be deprived of proportionately more than one-half. In some cases involving murder-suicide, the Simultaneous Death Act, discussed later in this subsection, may also be relevant. n215

Short of murder, one tenant by the entirety can act so egregiously against the interests of the other that a court may recognize a severance. n216

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: termin! w/50 (tenan! w/3 entiret!) & slayer or murder! or kill!

In case one tenant by the entirety becomes incompetent, it may be argued that a severance ought to be recognized because, given the indestructible right of survivorship coupled with the lack of any individual power to alienate or compel partition, the property would otherwise be "locked up." Perhaps the better solution is to leave the incompetent spouse's interest to be protected in ordinary course by a guardian. n217

One final problem concerns the simultaneous death of tenants by the entirety. The right of survivorship assumes the possibility of determining the order of death. If that is impossible, there is no choice but to treat the tenancy by the entirety as terminated and to dispose of the estate as if it had been a tenancy in common. In such a case, then, one-half of the estate would pass to each tenant's heirs or devisees. The Uniform Simultaneous Death Act as adopted in many states enforces this result by raising a presumption of simultaneous death unless there is "sufficient evidence" to the contrary. n218 In 1991 the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act was revised to require survivorship by at least 120 hours in order to prevent the diversion of property based only on a brief and perhaps technical survivorship. n219

Statutes giving a surviving spouse a right to dissent from the provisions of the deceased spouse's will and to take a "forced share" of the deceased's estate may contain directions concerning the treatment of tenancies by the entirety. Typically the survivor will be credited with a benefit from the right of survivorship in property held in tenancy by the entirety to the extent of the deceased spouse's contribution to the purchase of the entirety property. n220

§ 33.08(d) The Effect of Termination by Divorce.

Once a divorce is final, no tenancy by the entirety can continue between the parties; one of the legal effects of divorce, then, is to terminate the tenancy. n221 Such a termination may be said to be "by operation of law," but that must be understood to mean that it is a necessary consequence of the divorce; the divorce itself ends the marriage "by operation of law" but it occurs only at the initiation of one or both spouses. Because tenancy by the entirety is limited to persons married to one another, it cannot continue after the marriage is over. Saying that divorce destroys the fifth unity, the "unity of person" is simply to say the same thing in other words.

Divorce terminates a tenancy by the entirety as of the final decree; merely filing for divorce does not terminate the tenancy, so the death of one tenant by the entirety after filing but before final decree results in the sole ownership of the property by the other by right of survivorship. n222

Because the tenancy by the entirety is now regarded as merely a specialized form of joint tenancy available only to persons married to one another, it would seem logical to conclude that on the termination of marriage by divorce, all other things remaining the same, the parties would then hold as joint tenants. Although the so-called fifth unity is destroyed, the four unities remain. Of course, the property settlement accompanying the divorce normally provides for the sale or other disposition of estates held concurrently. If it did not, however, and if the parties did nothing inconsistent with one of the four unities, then the estate would apparently be in joint tenancy. n223 The principal inconvenience of this result is the continuing right of survivorship: on the death of one, the other would be sole owner of the entire estate, a result unlikely to be desired by the divorced couple. In case property was inadvertently still held together after divorce, the courts would be expected to look closely (and critically) at whether the unities of interest and possession were still intact. n224 The problem of characterizing after divorce a concurrent estate that had once been a tenancy by the entirety arises, of course, only in jurisdictions that still offer a choice, that is, those in which both joint tenancies and tenancies in common remain available. n225

In a number of states, statutes similar to the Uniform Probate Code, n226 cut the Gordion knot and declare the effect of divorce to be the termination of a tenancy by the entirety and its replacement by a tenancy in common:

Arkansas. Final decree of divorce terminates tenancy by entirety, unless court order specifically provides otherwise; parties become tenants in common. n227

District of Columbia. Final decree of annulment or divorce terminates tenancy by the entirety in the absence of a valid antenuptial or postnuptial agreement. n228

Florida. Upon dissolution of marriage tenants by entirety become tenants in common. n229

Illinois. Upon judgment of dissolution of marriage, tenancy by the entirety becomes, by operation of law, tenancy in common. n230

Indiana. Final decree of dissolution of marriage converts tenancy by the entirety into tenancy in common. n231

Michigan. Tenancy by entireties becomes tenancy in common on divorce. n232

Pennsylvania. Divorce converts tenancy by the entirety into tenancy in common. n233

Virginia. Divorce converts tenancy by the entirety into tenancy in common. n234

Even in the absence of statute, a court may find as a matter of state common law that an effect of divorce is to convert tenancies by the entirety into tenancies in common. n235 The transformation by divorce of a tenancy by the entirety into a tenancy in common is final. The remarriage of the parties does not revive the tenancy by the entirety. n236 The only way to recreate the tenancy by the entirety is with a new deed.

Conversion of a tenancy by the entirety into a tenancy in common does not necessarily eliminate all grounds for dispute. One spouse may have contributed all or most of the funds with which the property was purchased. Unlike joint tenancies, tenancies in common need not be held in equal shares, although there is a presumption in favor of equality. n237 The original transaction may have involved an element of gift, the party contributing the disproportionate share of the cost donating the excess over one-half to the other. It has been held that the party claiming the benefit bears the burden of proving the gift. n238

Equitable distribution statutes, governing the disposition of property on divorce, often include special rules for real property held in tenancy by the entirety, raising a presumption that the property is marital regardless of who funded its original acquisition. It is then up to the spouse who claims a special equity interest to prove that a gift was not intended. n239 The equitable distribution of marital property on divorce, required by statutes in many states, is an issue distinct from the issue of legal title under traditional rules of property. As one court explained:

> Determining who has legal title... has little or no bearing upon how the value of an asset is to be equitably distributed by a monetary award... . The mandate in a property distribution ... is to allocate to each party a fair portion of the marital wealth... . Equitable distribution deviates from traditional views of property ownership in that whether the property is separate or marital is determined by the statutory definition and is not determined by legal title. n240

As part of the property settlement, divorce counsel should ordinarily arrange to convert all concurrent estates held by the divorcing spouses into sole ownerships. n241 Indeed, it would be prudent to make the conversion at the time of filing for divorce in order to avoid the possibility that death before final settlement would lead to the survivor taking all.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 178. On the doctrine of the four unities, see §§ 31.06(b) and 33.06(b), supra.

(n2)Footnote 179. On the "fifth unity," the unity of person, based on marriage, see § 33.06(b), supra.

(n3)Footnote 180. Prario v. Novo, 645 N.Y.S.2d 269, 271 (1996). Another court offered a somewhat more comprehensive account:

> [T]enancies by the entireties have been found to convert to tenancies in common where the instrument creating the estate grants a time-limited interest, where one spouse transfers his interest to the other spouse so that she then holds the property in fee simple, where the spouses reconvey the property to themselves as tenants in common, where one spouse dies, where the couple divorces, or where one spouse murders the other.

United States v. Lee, 12 F. Supp. 2d 858, 860 (C.D. Ill. 1998). Even this list is not, as appears from the following subsections, exhaustive.

(n4)Footnote 181. Where tenants by the entirety convey to themselves as joint tenants, no problem with the four unities arises because as tenants by the entirety, they already satisfied those requirements.

(n5)Footnote 182. In re Stanke, 234 B.R. 439 (W.D. Mo. 1999); Rollins v. Alvarez, 792 So.2d 695 (Fla. App. 2001). Legislation may permit a transfer in trust to retain the incidents of a tenancy by the entirety. See, e.g., Va. Code Ann. § 55-20.1 (limiting effect to property used as "principal family residence").

(n6)Footnote 183. See § 31.08(a), supra.

(n7)Footnote 184. See Fazekas v. Fazekas, 737 A.2d 1262 (Pa. Super. 1999) ("it is well established that severance of an entireties estate 'may be achieved only through divorce, a joint conveyance or mutual agreement, either express or implied'").

(n8)Footnote 185. On termination of tenancies by the entirety by divorce, see § 33.08(d), infra.

(n9)Footnote 186. The rule limiting tenancies by the entirety to realty is rooted deep in the common law of marital estates. Since a woman lost all control of her personalty on marriage, there was no marital estate in personalty. In realty, by contrast, the common law did recognize the possibility of a married woman's ownership of an interest in tenancy by the entirety with her husband while seemingly denying, because of the marital unity, that it was truly a form of concurrent estate. See § 33.05, supra. Today, some states that recognize tenancy by the entirety in realty also recognize it in personalty. In those states, the discussion in the remainder of this paragraph is irrelevant.

(n10)Footnote 187. In re Estate of Blumenthal, 141 N.E. 911 (N.Y. 1923); Reif v. Reif, 621 N.E.2d 1279 (Ohio App. 1993). Contra: Finley v. Thomas, 691 A.2d 1163 (D.C. App. 1997) (proceeds of sale of property held in tenancy by the entirety presumed to be held in same tenancy).

(n11)Footnote 188. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 557.81 (in case of sale of land held in tenancy by the entirety by purchase money mortgage or land contract, right of survivorship applies to mortgage or contract).

(n12)Footnote 189. Beall v. Beall, 434 A.2d 1015 (Md. 1981), noted in 42 Md. L. Rev. 508 (1983).

(n13)Footnote 190. See Sunshine v. Del Sole, N.J. Sup. Ct. App. Div. (N.J. 2003) (unmarried woman executed contract to convey real property but married prior to closing and husband refused to release his interest; held: specific performance ordered and husband's interest extinguished).

(n14)Footnote 191. Panushka v. Panushka, 349 P.2d 450 (Or. 1960), noted in 36 N.D. L. Rev. 203 (1960), 14 Vand. L. Rev. 687 (1961); Matter of Maguire's Estate, 291 N.Y.S. 631 (1936), noted in 46 Yale L.J. 1077 (1937).

(n15)Footnote 192. Runco v. Ostroski, 65 A.2d 399 (Pa. 1949); Hale v. Hale, 125 N.E.2d 142 (Mass. 1955), noted in B.U. L. Rev. 464 (1955). In three states, Hawaii, Michigan, and Tennessee, statutes expressly permit the termination of a tenancy by the entirety by a conveyance by one spouse to the other. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 509-2; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 557.101; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-1-110.

(n16)Footnote 193. 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries 430 (1765) (citing Edward Coke, Commentaries Upon Littleton § 168, p. 112a (1628)). When a married woman acquired property at common law, it passed into her husband's dominion and control. Clark v. Clark, 644 A.2d 449 (D.C. 1994); In re Estate of Childress, 588 So. 2d 192 (Miss. 1991). See Annotation, Validity and Effect of One Spouse's Conveyance to Other Spouse of Interest in Property Held as Estate by the Entireties, 18 A.L.R.5th (1994) 230.

(n17)Footnote 194. Davis v. Vaughn, 91 S.E.2d 165 (N.C. 1956), noted in 34 N.C. L. Rev. 571 (1956). The intention of one tenant by the entirety to release to the other is presumed from the use of appropriate words; however, even if the proper words are used, it remains open to the grantor to show that there was in fact no intention to release. Abney v. Abney, C.A. No. 181, 1991 Tenn. App. LEXIS 278.

(n18)Footnote 195. Cf. Edward Coke, Commentary Upon Littleton § 1, p. 9b (1628).

(n19)Footnote 196. On termination of tenancies by the entirety by divorce, see § 33.08(d), infra.

(n20)Footnote 197. UNIFORM PROBATE CODE § 2-801(b)(3):

A surviving joint tenant [or tenant by the entireties] may disclaim as a separate interest any property or interest therein devolving to him [or her] by right of survivorship. A surviving joint tenant [or tenant by the entireties] may disclaim the entire interest in any property or interest therein that is the subject of a joint tenancy [or tenancy by the entireties] devolving to him [or her], if the joint tenancy [or tenancy by the entireties] was created by act of a deceased joint tenant [or tenant by the entireties], the survivor did not join in creating the joint tenancy [or tenancy by the entireties], and has not accepted a benefit under it.

Cf. Md. Ann. Code, Est. & Trust § 9.201 (permitting disclaimer by surviving tenant by the entirety only if deceased spouse had given written consent to disclaimer during life).

(n21)Footnote 198. For a critical analysis of the act, see Adam J. Hirsch, Revisions in Need of Revising: The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, 29 FLA. ST. U. L. REV. 109 (2001). See also the candid discussion by the reporter for the UDOPIA, William P. LaPiana, Some Property Law Issues in the Law of Disclaimers, 38 Real Property, Probate & Trust L.J. 207 (2003).

(n22)Footnote 199. UDOPIA § 7(a).

(n23)Footnote 200. The rule limiting tenancies by the entirety to realty is rooted deep in the common law of marital estates. Since a woman lost all control of her personalty on marriage, there was no marital estate in personalty. In realty, by contrast, the common law did recognize the possibility of a married woman's ownership of an interest in tenancy by the entirety with her husband while seemingly denying, because of the marital unity, that it was truly a form of concurrent estate. See § 33.05, supra. Today, some states that recognize tenancy by the entirety in realty also recognize it in personalty. In those states, the discussion in the remainder of this paragraph is irrelevant.

(n24)Footnote 201. Ronan v. Ronan, 159 N.E.2d 653 (Mass. 1959). Contra: Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 76, § 2(d) (in case of condemnation of property held in joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety, proceeds in the hands of the County Treasurer are subject to survivorship, but any tenant may claim share without consent of other and thereby terminate survivorship).

(n25)Footnote 202. A compelling case for equitable conversion may be made in the rather unusual circumstances involved in In re Ballard, 65 F.3d 367 (4th Cir. 1995) (applying Virginia law). A married couple in bankruptcy were ordered to sell the property they held as tenants by the entirety; after the sale but before the proceeds were distributed to joint creditors, one spouse died. The court held that the sale had not severed the tenancy by the entirety, so the proceeds passed by right of survivorship and were, therefore, distributable to the creditors of the survivor.

(n26)Footnote 203. Hawthorne v. Hawthorne, 192 N.E.2d 20 (N.Y. App. 1963), noted in 28 Albany L. Rev. 319 (1964), 30 Brooklyn L. Rev. 376 (1964), 13 Buff. L. Rev. 501 (1964), 49 Cornell L.Q. 559 (1964); Mercer v. New York Property Underwriting Assn., 668 N.Y.S.2d 664 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998) (although spouses owned insured property as tenants by the entirety, policy belonged to only one spouse, who alone was entitled to proceeds); Arred v. United States, 830 F. Supp. 212 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). Contra: Regnante v. Baldassare, 448 N.E.2d 775 (Mass. App. 1983).

(n27)Footnote 204. Fuston v. National Mut. Ins. Co., 440 N.E.2d 751 (Ind. App. 1982); Finch v. Tennessee Farmers Mut. Ins. Co., C.A. No. 01*A01-9607-CV-00342, 1997 Tenn. App. LEXIS 146 (Tenn. App. 1997). See also DePalma v. Bates County Mut. Ins. Co., 923 S.W.2d 385 (Mo. App. 1996)* (contract of insurance, narrowly construed, held not to preclude recovery by innocent spouse), noted in 67 Mo. L. Rev. 77 (2002); Continental Union Ins. Co. v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 546 F. Supp. 543, 546 (D. Colo. 1982) (cataloguing the reasons to include: "that policy language excluding coverage must be explicit, or that what is in question is the spouse's interest in the insurance policy, not the interest in the property, or that the fault of the wrongdoing spouse cannot be imputed to the innocent spouse").

(n28)Footnote 205. This is obviously true, in states permitting the practice, where one (rather than both) of the tenants by the entirety encumbers the entirety property.

(n29)Footnote 206. In re Foreclosure of Deed of Trust, 279 S.E.2d 566 (N.C. 1981).

(n30)Footnote 207. Richard R. Powell & Patrick J. Rohan, Powell on Real Property 626 (abr. ed. 1968).

(n31)Footnote 208. National City Bank of Evansville v. Bledsoe, 144 N.E.2d 710 (Ind. 1957) (discussing 4 Scott on Trusts § 493.2 at 3204-07 (2d ed.)).

(n32)Footnote 209. Goldsmith v. Pearce, 75 N.W.2d 810 (Mich. 1956), noted in 3 Wayne L. Rev. 153 (1957); Estate of Grund v. Grund, 648 N.E.2d 1182 (Ind. App. 1995); Budwit v. Herr, 63 N.W.2d 841 (Mich. 1954), noted in 5 Cath. U. L. Rev. 195 (1955); Barnett v. Couey 27 S.W.2d 757 (Mo. 1930), noted in 11 B.U. L. Rev. 129 (1931); Hicks v. Boshears, 846 S.W.2d 812 (Tenn. 1993); In re Estate of Bartolovitch, 616 A.2d 1043 (Pa. 1992) (one spouse's conviction of voluntary manslaughter severs tenancy by the entirety).

(n33)Footnote 210. Uniform Probate Code § 2-803:

(b) Any joint tenant who feloniously and intentionally kills another joint tenant thereby effects a severance of the interest of the decedent so that the share of the decedent passes as his property and the killer has no rights by survivorship. This provision applies to joint tenancies [and tenancies by the entirety] in real and personal property, joint and multiple-party accounts in banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions and other institutions, and any other form of co-ownership with survivorship incidents.

...

(d) Any other acquisition of property or interest by the killer shall be treated in accordance with the principles of this section.

(e) A final judgment of conviction of felonious and intentional killing is conclusive for purposes of this section. In the absence of a conviction of felonious and intentional killing the court may determine by a preponderance of evidence whether the killing was felonious and intentional for purposes of this section.

(f) This section does not affect the rights of any person who, before rights under this section have been adjudicated, purchases from the killer for value and without notice property which the killer would have acquired except for this section, but the killer is liable for the amount of the proceeds or the value of the property.

8 U.L.A. 172 (1983).

In 1990 a revised Uniform Probate Code was promulgated. UPC § 2-803 was substantially revised, although the general effect of the new version remains the same. The pre-1990 version is printed here because of the large number of states whose legislation it influenced.

(n34)Footnote 211. New Jersey. Husband who murdered wife holds estate in trust for wife's heirs to the value of her life interest in one-half net income. Sherman v. Weber, 167 A. 517 (N.J. 1933).

New York. Estate of Mathew, 706 N.Y.S. 2d 432 (N.Y. 2000) (slayer spouse entitled to commuted value of life estate in one-half of the proceeds of the sale of property held in tenancy by the entirety).

North Carolina. One half passes to the victim's estate; other half passes to victim's estate at slayer's death. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 31A-5.

Rhode Island. One half of property held by slayer and victim as tenants by the entirety passes to victim's estate at victim's death; other half passes to victim's estate at slayer's death. R.I. Gen. Laws § 33-1.1-5.

(n35)Footnote 212. As a comment to the Uniform Probate Code § 2-803 makes clear, guilt or innocence in the sense of criminal law is not the issue:

While conviction in the criminal prosecution under this section is treated as conclusive on the matter of succession to the murdered person's property, acquittal does not have the same consequences. This is because different considerations as well as a different burden of proof enter into the finding of guilty in the criminal prosecution. Hence it is possible that the defendant on a murder charge may be found not guilty and acquitted, but if the same person claims as an heir or devisee of the decedent, he may in the probate court be found to have feloniously and intentionally killed the decedent and thus be barred under this section from sharing in the estate... . In many of the cases arising under this section there may be no criminal prosecution because the murderer has committed suicide.

8 U.L.A. 173 (1983).

(n36)Footnote 213. Estate of Grund v. Grund, 648 N.E.2d 1182 (Ind. App. 1995).

(n37)Footnote 214. See In re Estates of Covert, 761 N.E.2d 571 (N.Y. 2001) (holding in case of murder-suicide that jointly held property is divided between the estates of husband and wife), noted in 49 Buff. L. Rev. 1341 (2001).

(n38)Footnote 215. Cf. In re Estate of Miller, 840 So.2d 703 (Miss. 2003).

(n39)Footnote 216. See, e.g., Eichman v. Paton, 393 So. 2d 655 (Fla. App. 1981) (in partition action filed by wife's guardian after husband had assaulted her so grievously that she was rendered incompetent, court held that "the unity between the parties which forms the basis for the entireties form of ownership [had] been dissolved by [the husband's] felonious act").

(n40)Footnote 217. See Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 60, § 74 (incompetency does not terminate joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety).

(n41)Footnote 218. Uniform Simultaneous Death Act § 3:

Where there is no sufficient evidence that two joint tenants or tenants by the entirety have died otherwise than simultaneously the property shall be distributed one-half as if one had survived and one-half as if the other had survived...

8A U.L.A. 575 (1983).

(n42)Footnote 219. 8B U.L.A. 257 (1993). Uniform Probate Code § 2-702(c) now also requires that "co-owners with the right of survivorship" survive for at least 120 hours. 8 U.L.A. 150 (Supp. 1994). Note that this provision, treating survivorship for no more than 120 hours as if the deaths were in fact simultaneous, causes the loss of the marital deduction in estate taxation.

(n43)Footnote 220. N.Y. Est., Powers & Trusts Law § 5-1.1-A (e); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 30-1. See Funk v. Masten, 485 S.E.2d 890 (N.C. App. 1997).

(n44)Footnote 221. The validity of the divorce is, of course, a matter of local law; whether, for example, to recognize a foreign divorce as terminating a tenancy by the entirety. Russ Realty Corp. v. Orlando, 733 N.Y.S.2d 447 (2001).

(n45)Footnote 222. Fazekas v. Fazekas, 737 A.2d 1262 (Pa. Super. 1999).

(n46)Footnote 223. Shepherd v. Shepherd, 336 So.2d 497 (Miss. 1976), noted in 48 Miss. L.J. 352 (1977); Ayers v. Petro, 417 So.2d 912 (Miss. 1982) (reaffirming rule in Shepherd).

(n47)Footnote 224. Sbarbaro v. Sbarbaro, 102 A. 256 (N.J. 1917).

(n48)Footnote 225. See, e.g., Clouse v. Clouse, 207 S.W.2d 576 (Tenn. 1948) (Tennessee does not recognize right of survivorship in joint tenancy, making it indistinguishable from tenancy in common).

(n49)Footnote 226. Uniform Probate Code § 2-804(b) provides that, absent agreement or court order to the contrary, divorce "severs the interest of the former spouses in property held by them at the time of the divorce or annulment as joint tenants with the right of survivorship..., transforming the interests of the former spouses into tenancies in common." 8 U.L.A. 184 (Supp. 1994). U.P.C. § 1-201(26) defines "joint tenants with the right of survivorship" to include "co-owners of property held under circumstances that entitle one ... to the whole of the property on the death of the other..." that is, to include tenants by the entirety. 8 U.L.A. 10 (Supp. 1994).

(n50)Footnote 227. Ark. Code § 9-12-317.

(n51)Footnote 228. D.C. Code Ann. § 16-910. This statute has been interpreted to mean that the parties may agree that divorce does not terminate the tenancy by the entirety. Benson v. United States, 442 F.2d 1221 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

(n52)Footnote 229. Fla. Stat. § 689.15.

(n53)Footnote 230. 765 ILCS 1005/1c.

(n54)Footnote 231. Ind. Code Ann. § 32-4-2-2.

(n55)Footnote 232. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 552-102.

(n56)Footnote 233. Pa. Cons. Stat. 23, § 3507. See Eunice Ross, Note, Spouses Formerly Tenants by the Entireties Become Tenants in Common by Divorce, 11 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 468 (1950); W. H. Frederick, Note, Are Judgement Creditors in a Better Position Now That Divorce Changes Tenancy by the Entireties to Tenancy in Common? 54 Dick. L. Rev. 349 (1950).

(n57)Footnote 234. Va. Code Ann. § 20-111.

(n58)Footnote 235. Tucker v. Dudley, 164 A.2d 891 (Md. 1960); Nelson v. Mahurin, 944 S.W.2d 10 (Ky. App. 1998).

(n59)Footnote 236. Barrett v. Barrett, 614 A.2d 299 (Pa. 1992); Sanders v. Sanders, 1997 Ark. App. Lexis 542 (Ark. App. 1997).

(n60)Footnote 237. See § 32.05(a), supra.

(n61)Footnote 238. Rayher v. Rayher, 101 A.2d 524 (N.J. 1953); Smith v. Smith, 597 So. 2d 370 (Fla. App. 1992); Lemley v. Lemley, 649 A.2d 1119 (Md. App. 1994); Kincaid v. Kincaid, 912 S.W.2d 140 (Tenn. App. 1995). In many states there is a strong presumption, when one spouse places title to property in tenancy by the entirety, in favor of finding a gift of the one-half interest. See, e.g., Ramsey v. Ramsey, 531 S.W.2d 28 (Ark. 1975) (presumption of gift from spouse furnishing more than half the consideration for purchase of property to be held as tenants by the entirety can be overcome only "by clear, positive, unequivocal, unmistakable, strong and convincing evidence"); Mulling v. Mulling, 912 S.W.2d 934, 937 (Ark. 1996).

(n62)Footnote 239. See, e.g., Robertson v. Robertson, 593 So. 2d 491 (Fla. 1991).

(n63)Footnote 240. Lightburn v. Lightburn, 472 S.E.2d 281 (Va. App. 1996).

(n64)Footnote 241. One court has observed that "We cannot expect divorced parties to continue a business relationship that will optimize resources and profits [;]... it is particularly important to avoid creating situations where the divorced parties remain in joint management of income producing property." Berry v. Berry, 658 A.2d 1118 (Me. 1995).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 33.09

AUTHOR: Professor John V. Orth School of Law University of North Carolina

§ 33.09 The Future of the Law of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Supp]

Just as the history of the law of tenancies by the entirety was shaped by the law of marriage, so future development of this form of concurrent ownership will continue to be driven by that related body of law. Married persons everywhere can take title as tenants in common; in jurisdictions recognizing joint tenancies, that alternative is also available. The key question for the future will be the continued availability of a distinctive form of marital ownership. So long as the property of married couples is thought deserving of different (presumably more favorable) treatment than property owned by two unrelated persons, tenancies by the entirety will endure. n242

As with the joint tenancy, an estate also distinguished by a right of survivorship, the tenancy by the entirety is threatened by the growing acceptance of the survivor's power to disclaim. The traditional theory that each tenant by the entirety is seised of the entirety and that, in consequence, the death of one does not result in the conferral of any benefit on the other but only in the termination of the decedent's right may be yielding to an acceptance of the tenancy by the entirety as simply another means of providing for succession at death, in other words, a "will substitute." Closely related is the steady advance of creditors' rights against an indebted tenant's right of survivorship. At present limited to the sovereign rights of the tax collector, these rights could grow to extend to debts incurred by the receipt of other government benefits, and eventually to encompass creditors' rights in general. As that happens, the tenancy by the entirety, while remaining a distinctive form of joint tenancy, will become increasingly less distinct.

If tenancies by the entirety remain available and advantageous, certain unmarried persons will demand equal access to the estate. So long as these persons are eligible for marriage, their demands may be met by reliance on a policy favoring the married state. Where a couple is ineligible for marriage, such as a same-sex couple, the defense of the status quo will depend on defense of the traditional heterosexual match. One court has already indicated that it finds current law a violation of due process for same-sex couples. n243 Whether or not marriage as such is opened to same-sex couples, the benefits incident to holding property as tenants by the entirety may be granted to them by recognizing other means of creating the "unity of persons" required for the estate. Hawaii has addressed the problem by legislation permitting any two persons who cannot otherwise be legally married to register as "reciprocal beneficiaries," granted many of the rights of married persons, including the right to hold property together as tenants by the entirety. n244 By contrast, Vermont permits same-sex couples to enter into "civil unions," the functional equivalent of marriage, and to hold property as tenants by the entirety. n245 Alternatively, an entirely new tenancy could be recognized, in addition to the existing tenancy in common, joint tenancy, and tenancy by the entirety. n246

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 242. The continuing fertility of the concepts underlying the estate of tenancy by the entirety is demonstrated by the suggestion, in connection with new reproductive technologies, that human embryos be viewed as held in tenancy by the entirety. David A. Rameden, Frozen Semen as Property in Hecht v. Superior Court: One Step Forward, Two Steps Backward, 63 Umkc L. Rev. 377 (1993).

(n2)Footnote 243. See Goodridge v. Dept. of Public Health, 440 Mass. 309, 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003) (holding denial of marriage license to same-sex couples a violation of due process); Opinions of the Justices to the Senate, 440 Mass. 1201, 802 N.E.2d 565 (2004) (proposed legislation prohibiting same-sex couples from marrying but allowing them to form civil unions with all the consequences of marriage does not satisfy the state constitution's equal protection and due process clauses). See also John V. Orth, Night Thoughts: Reflections on the Debate Concerning Same-Sex Marriage, 3 Nev. L. J. 560 (2003), who thought the problem was one of equal protection.

(n3)Footnote 244. Haw Rev. Stat. § 509.2.

(n4)Footnote 245. 15 Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 23, § 1204.

(n5)Footnote 246. See Peter M. Carrozzo, Tenancies in Antiquity: A Transformation of Concurrent Ownership for Modern Relationships, 85 Marq. L. Rev. 424 (2001) (advocating recognition of a new form of concurrent estate).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 33.10

AUTHOR: Professor John V. Orth School of Law University of North Carolina

§ 33.10 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Burby, William E. "Common Law Types of Concurrent Ownership," in Handbook of the Law of Real Property. Ch. 18. 3d ed. 1965.

Cunningham, Roger A., William E. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman. "Concurrent Ownership of Realty and Personalty," in The Law of Property. Ch. 5. 1984.

Freeman, Abraham C. Cotenancy and Partition. 1874.

Moynihan, Cornelius J. "Concurrent Ownership," in Introduction to the Law of Real Property. Ch. 10. 2d ed. 1988.

Niles, Russell D. and William F. Walsh. "Concurrent Estates and Their Characteristics," in American Law of Property. Vol. 2, Part 6. 1952.

Osborne, Duncan. Asset Protection: Domestic and International Law and Tactics, chap. 13 (1995).

Thomas, David. Powell on Real Property(R) Ch. 52, "Tenancy by the Entirety" (Matthew Bender).

Thompson, George W. "Separate and Concurrent Ownership," in Commentaries on the Modern Law of Real Property. Vol. 4, Ch. 29. 1979.

Tiffany, Herbert T. "Co-ownership," in The Law of Real Property. Ch. 9. 3d ed. 1939.

Articles

"Administration of Entireties Property in Bankruptcy." Ind. L.J. Vol. 60 (1985) 305.

"Are Judgement Creditors in a Better Position Now That Divorce Changes Tenancy by the Entireties to Tenancy in Common?" Dick. L. Rev. Vol. 54 (1950) 349.

"Bankruptcy -- Tenancy by the Entireties -- Creditor's Right Against Entirety Property After Discharge of Husband in Bankruptcy." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 57 (1959) 607 (noting U.S. v. Fetter, 163 F. Supp. 10 (1958)).

Bienenfeld, Solomon. "Creditors v. Tenancies by the Entirety." Wayne L. Rev. Vol. 1 (1955) 105.

Black, Kenneth L. "Tenancy by the Entireties as a Tool in Estate Planning in Florida." U. Fla. L. Rev. Vol. 5 (1952) 378.

Carrozzo, Peter M. "Tenancies in Antiquity: A Transformation of Concurrent Ownership for Modern Relationships." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 85 (2001) 423.

Castro, Julio E., III. Note. "Florida's Treatment of Entirety Property: Do Unsecured Joint Creditors Lose the Benefit of Their Bargain or Achieve a Higher Status Than Specifically Provided by the Bankruptcy Code?" Fla. L. Rev. Vol. 45 (1993) 275.

Chaneles, Steven B. "Tenancy by the Entireties: Has the Bankruptcy Court Found a Chink in the Armor?" Florida Bar Journal Vol. 71 (Feb. 1997) 22.

Cornelius, Allison. Comment. "Civil Forfeiture Under 21 U.S.C. § 881(A)(7): The Problem of the Innocent Owner Spouse." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1994) 1351.

"Creation of a Tenancy by the Entirety Without the Use of a Strawman." Wyo. L.J. Vol. 15 (1961) 179.

"Creditor's Rights -- Tenancy by the Entirety -- Extent of Judgment Lien Following Divorce -- Court Award of Land to Non-debtor Spouse." Or. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1960) 194 (noting Brownley v. Lincoln County, 343 P.2d 529 (Or. 1959)).

"Creditors' Rights to Entireties Property Awarded to Non-debtor Spouse Upon Divorce." N.C. L. Rev. Vol. 64 (1986) 1471 (noting Branch Banking & Trust Co. v. Wright, 74 N.C. App. 550, 328 S.E.2d 840 (1985)).

Dickerson, A. Mechele. "Family Values and the Bankruptcy Code: A Proposal to Eliminate Bankruptcy Benefits Awarded on the Basis of Marital Status." Fordham L. Rev. Vol.67 (1998) 69.

Dickerson, Mechele. "To Love, Honor, and (Oh!) Pay: Should Spouses be Forced to Pay Each Other's Debts?" B.U. L.Rev. Vol. 78 (1998) 961.

Eckhardt, William L. "Property Law in Missouri -- Joint Tenancies and Tenancies by Entireties -- Direct Conveyances -- Express Limitations." Mo. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1962) 65.

Effland, Richard W. "Rights of Creditors in Nonprobate Assets." Mo. L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1983) 431.

"Entireties Property: The Effects of Bankruptcy on Creditor's Rights." U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1966) 267.

Feely, Ann Marie. Comment. "Forfeiture of Marital Property Under 21 U.S.C. § 881(a)(7): Irreconcilable Differences?" Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 37 (1992) 1487.

"Felonious Homicide and the Right of Survivorship Under Tenancy by the Entireties." Md. L. Rev. Vol. 17 (1957) 45.

Fisher, John W. "If Judgment Creditors Cannot Set Asunder a Debtor Spouse's Interest in the Marital Home, What Can They Do?" W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 97 (1995) 339.

"Fire Insurance -- Estate by the Entirety -- Insurable Interest -- Right to Proceeds." N.C. L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1956) 134 (noting Carter v. Continental Ins. Co., 89 S.E.2d 122 (N.C. 1955)).

"'Fresh Start' or 'Head Start': Missouri Courts Rethink the Role of Tenancies by the Entirety in Bankruptcy." Mo. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1991) 817 (noting Landmark Bank v. Charles, 123 Bankr. 52 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1991)).

Greene, K. Edward, "A Spouse's Right to Control Assets During Marriage: Is North Carolina Living in the Middle Ages?" Campbell L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1996) 203.

Hammond, Celeste M. and Ronald L. Otto. "The Illusion of Reform: Illinois Statutory Tenancy by the Entirety." Ill. B.J. Vol. 78 (1990) 198.

Hetrick, Patrick K. "Legislative Kudzu and the New Millennium: An Opportunity for Reflection and Reform." Campbell L. Rev. Vol. 23 (2001) 157.

Huber, Richard G. "Creditors' Rights in Tenancies by the Entireties." B.C. Int'l & Comp. L. Rev Vol. 1 (1960) 197.

Johnson, Steve R. "After Drye: The Likely Attachment of the Federal Tax Lien to Tenancy-by-the- Entireties Interests." Indiana L. J. Vol. 75 (2000) 1163.

Johnson, Steve R. "Fog, Fairness, and the Federal Fisc: Tenancy-by-the-Entireties Interests and the Federal Tax Lien." Mo. L. Rev. Vol. 60 (1995) 839.

Johnson, Steve R. "Why Craft Isn't Scary." Real Property, Probate and Trust J. Vol. 37 (2002) 440.

Kepner, Donald. "The Effect of an Attempted Creation of an Estate by the Entirety in Unmarried Grantees." Rutgers L. Rev. Vol. 6 (1952) 550.

Null, Robert D. Note. "Tenancy by the Entirety as an Asset Shield: An Unjustified Safe Haven for Delinquent Child Support Obligors." Val. U. L. Rev. Vol. 29 (1995) 1057.

Orth, John V. "Night Thoughts: Reflections on the Debate Concerning Same-Sex Marriage." Nev. L. J. Vol. 3 (2003) 560.

Orth, John V. "Tenancy by the Entirety: The Strange Career of the Common Law Marital Estate." B.Y.U. L. Rev. (1997) 35.

"Partition Deed Cannot Create Tenancy by Entireties." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1959) 92 (noting Smith v. Smith, 102 S.E.2d 868 (N.C. 1958)).

Phipps, Oval A. "Tenancy by Entireties." Temp. L.Q. Vol. 25 (1951) 24.

"Property Disputes Between Husband and Wife in Pennsylvania." U. Pa. L. Rev. Vol. 99 (1951) 498.

"Property Rights Between Unmarried Cohabitants." Ind. L.J. Vol. 50 (1975) 389.

"Property -- Tenancy by Entireties Creation Through Simultaneous Conveyances Involving Tenants in Common." W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 62 (1960) 196 (noting Smith v. Smith, 249 N.C. 669, 107 S.E.2d 530 (1959)).

"Real Property -- Elimination of the Straw Man in the Creation of Joint Estates in Michigan." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 54 (1955) 118.

"Real Property -- Purchaser of One Spouse's Interest in an Estate by the Entireties Is Not Entitled to Partition as a Matter of Right in New Jersey." Seton Hall L. Rev. Vol. 8 (1976) 112 (noting Newman v. Chase, 70 N.J. 254, 359 A.2d 474 (1976)).

"Real Property -- Tenancy by the Entirety in North Carolina: An Idea Whose Time Has Gone?" N.C. L. Rev. Vol. 58 (1980) 997.

"Real Property -- Tenancy by the Entirety -- Joint Rights of Husband and Wife." Tenn. L. Rev. Vol. 42 (1975) 815 (noting Robinson v. Trousdale County, 516 S.W.2d 626 (Tenn. 1974)).

"Real Property -- Tenancy by the Entirety in Real Property During Marriage." N.C. L. Rev. Vol. 47 (1969) 963.

"Recovery for Injury to Jointly-Owned Property Caused by the Negligence of a Co-owner." U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 20 (1959) 682.

Reppy, William A. "North Carolina's Tenancy by the Entirety Reform Legislation of 1982." Campbell L. Rev. Vol. 5 (1982) 1.

"Resulting Trusts in Entireties Property When Wife Furnishes Purchase Money." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 17 (1981) 415.

Ritchie, John, III. "Tenancies by the Entirety in Real Property with Particular Reference to the Law of Virginia." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1942) 608.

Ritsko, Janet D. Comment. "Lien Times in Massachusetts: Tenancy by the Entirety After Coraccio v. Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank." New Eng. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1995) 85.

Ritter, Paul. "A Criticism of the Estate by the Entirety." U. Fla. L. Rev. Vol. 5 (1952) 153.

Rush, Albert F. "United States v. Craft : Saying Goodbye to Tenancy by the Entirety?" Probate and Property Vol. 17, No. 1 (Jan./Feb. 2002) 59.

Ryland, Robert A. "Tenancy by the Entirety in Virginia." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1938) 689.

"S.201: Ohio's Statute Creating a New Survivorship Tenancy." U. Dayton L. Rev. Vol. 11 (1986) 481.

"Simultaneous Deaths of Joint Owners." W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1951) 70.

Slaymaker, G. B. "The Effect of an Alienation, or Sale on Execution, of the Interest of One Tenant by the Entirety Without the Consent of the Other." Am. L. Rev. Vol. 36 (1902) 214.

"Spouses Formerly Tenants by the Entireties Become Tenants in Common by Divorce." U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 11 (1950) 469.

Starling, John M. "Tenancy by the Entirety in Florida." U. Fla. L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1961) 111.

"Tenancies by Entireties in Bankruptcy Proceedings." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1962) 297 (noting In re Reid, 198 F. Supp. 689 (1961)).

"Tenancies by the Entireties in Pennsylvania as Affected by Separation of Husband and Wife." Dick. L. Rev. Vol. 47 (1943) 228.

"Tenancy by the Entirety in Illinois: A Reexamination." 1980 S. Ill. U. L.J. 83.

"Tenancy by the Entirety -- Is It Possible in Iowa?" Iowa L. Rev. Vol. 44 (1958) 169.

"The Effect of Testamentary Survivorship Provisions on Tenancies by the Entirety Under New York's Simultaneous Death Act." Alb. L. Rev. Vol. 44 (1980) 680.

"The Power in a Husband and Wife Holding Property by the Entirety." Dick. L. Rev. Vol. 59 (1955) 356.

"The Uniform Simultaneous Death Act and Its Effect on Jointly Owned Property." Wyo. L.J. Vol. 15 (1961) 229.

"The Use of Straw Men in Massachusetts Real Estate Transactions." B.U. L. Rev. Vol. 44 (1964) 187.

"Toward a Uniform Cotenancy Law." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1966) 391.

"Wife's Right to Rents From Tenancy by Entirety." Wash. & Lee L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1967) 353 (noting Howard v. Howard, 225 A.2d 456 (Md. 1967)).

Wilson, Derrick. Note. "Drug Asset Forfeiture: In the War on Drugs, Is the Innocent Spouse the Loser?" J. Fam. L. Vol. 30 (1991) 135.

Zajac, Eric G. "Tenancies by the Entirety and Federal Civil Forfeiture Under the Crime Abuse Prevention and Control Act: A Clash of Titans." U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 54 (1993) 553.

Annotations

Annotation, Accountability of Cotenants for Rents and Profits or Use and Occupation, 27 A.L.R. (1923) 184; 39 A.L.R. (1925) 408; W. W. Allen. 51 A.L.R.2d (1957) 388.

Annotation, Character and Incidents of Estate Created by a Deed to Persons as Husband and Wife Who Are Not Legally Married, 83 A.L.R.2d 1051.

Annotation, Character of Conveyance or Conveyances Necessary to Create an Estate by Entirety, 132 A.L.R. (1941) 630; Vartanian, P.H. 173 A.L.R. (1948) 1216.

Annotation, Character of Interests of Husband and Wife in Purchase-Money Mortgage on Sale of Estate by Entireties, 30 A.L.R. (1948) 905.

Annotation, Character of Tenancy Created by Owner's Conveyance to Himself and Another, or to Himself Alone, of an Undivided Interest, 44 A.L.R.2d (1955) 595.

Annotation, Contract of Sale or Granting Option to Purchase, to Third Party, by Both or All of Joint Tenants or Tenants by Entirety as Severing or Terminating Tenancy, 39 A.L.R.4th (1985) 1068.

Annotation, Creation of Right of Survivorship by Instrument Ineffective to Create Estate by Entireties or Joint Tenancy, 1 A.L.R.2d (1948) 247.

Annotation, Estate Created by Conveyance to Husband and Wife as Affected by Language Used in Deed, 161 A.L.R. (1946) 457.

Annotation, Estate by Entireties as Affected by Statute Declaring Nature of Tenancy Under Grant or Devise to Two or More Persons, 32 A.L.R.3d 570.

Annotation, Estate Created by Deed to Persons Described as Husband and Wife but not Legally Married, 9 A.L.R.4th (1981) 1189.

Annotation, Felonious Killing of One Cotenant or Tenant by the Entireties by the Other as Affecting the Latter's Right in the Property, 42 A.L.R.3d 1116.

Annotation, Forfeitability of Property Held in Marital Estate Under Uniform Controlled Substances Act or Similar Statute, 84 A.L.R.4th (1991) 620.

Annotation, Interest of Spouse in Estate by Entireties as Subject to Satisfaction of His or Her Individual Debt, 75 A.L.R. 2d 1172.

Annotation, Married Women's Act as Abolishing Estates by Entireties, 141 A.L.R. (1942) 179.

Annotation, Proceeds or Derivatives of Real Property Held by Entirety as Themselves Held by Entirety, 22 A.L.R.4th (1983) 459.

Annotation, Right of Surviving Spouse to Contribution, Exoneration, or Other Reimbursement Out of Decedent's Estate Respecting Liens on Estate by Entirety or Joint Tenancy, 76 A.L.R.2d (1961) 1004.

Annotation, Rights and Incidents Where Title Real Property Purchased with Wife's Funds Is Taken in Spouse's Joint Names, 43 A.L.R.2d (1955) 917.

Annotation, Rights in Respect of Estate in Entireties or Income Therefrom as Affected by Separation of Spouses, 168 A.L.R. (1947) 260.

Annotation, Survivorship in Respect of Real or Personal Property as Affected by Murder of One of the Parties Jointly Interested by Other Party so Interested, 98 A.L.R. (1935) 773.

Annotation, Validity and Effect of Conveyance by One Spouse to Other of Grantor's Interest in Property Held as Estate by Entireties, 8 A.L.R.2d (1949) 634.

Annotation, Validity and Effect of One Spouse's Conveyance to Other Spouse of Interest in Property Held as Estate by the Entireties, 18 A.L.R. 5th 230.

Annotation, Who Is Exempt from Forfeiture of Real Property Under "Innocent Owner" Provision of 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(7), 110 A.L.R. Fed. 569.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.05

Supp. to § 33.05 History of the Law of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Main]

Add at the end of the note:

See also Cady Stanton, On Divorce (1861), in 2 Man Cannot Speak for Her: Key Texts of the Early Feminists 236, 237 (Campbell ed. 1989).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.06

Supp. to § 33.06 Creation of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Main]

§ 33.06(a) Creation of Tenancies by the Entirety at Common Law. [Go To Main]

Add to note 50:

Estate of Thomas, 199 P.3d 1090 (Wyo. 2009) (conveyance to grantors' two children "as tenants by the tntireties [sic] with right of survivorship, and not as tenants in common" held to create a joint tenancy).

Change citation to N.Y. Est. Powers & Trusts Law from § 6-2.2(c) to § 6-2.2(d).

At the end of the first full paragraph, add new paragraph:

The estate of tenancy by the entirety may be created in equitable estates held in trust.

Add new last paragraph:

Tenancies by the entirety may be created in estates other than estates in fee simple. Just as joint life estates involve the concurrent ownership of property by two or more persons as long as both or all are alive and on the death of one joint life tenant the right of survivorship preserves the estate in the other or others (§ 31.06(f)), so the effect of a life estate held in tenancy by the entirety is to create an estate that will last (unless severed) until the death of the last to die.

§ 33.06(b) The Doctrine of the Four Unities, Plus One, "Unity of Person," Based on Marriage. [Go To Main]

Add at the end of the runover paragraph:

It is possible that if two unmarried persons take title as tenants by the entirety in contemplation of marriage and the marriage subsequently occurs, the marital estate may then be recognized.

§ 33.06(c) Special Problem in Creation of Tenancies by the Entirety Caused by the Doctrine of the Four Unities: Conveyance by Grantor to Grantor and Spouse. [Go To Main]

Add at the end of the note:

See In re Kelly, 316 B.R. 629 (D. Del. 2004) (statute does not require express statement of intention to create tenancy by the entirety when one spouse conveys directly to the married couple).

§ 33.06(d) Special Problem in Creation of Tenancies by the Entirety Caused by the "Unity of Person": Transfer to Husband, Wife, and Another or Others. [Go To Main]

Add text between New Jersey and North Carolina:

New York. Conveyance from sole owner to himself and another as tenants by the entirety as effective as if from a stranger.

Add to Note 101:

Aderhold v. Aderhold, 983 So.2d 43 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2008) (grant to husband and wife and husband's mother created tenancy by the entirety in married couple in one-half, held in tenancy in common with mother's one-half).

§ 33.06(e) Modern Statutes Concerning Creation of Tenancies by the Entirety. [Go To Main]

Replace See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 37:2-18 with See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:3-17.2.

Add at end of note:

By legislation in 2006 Colorado made clear that a conveyance purporting to create a tenancy by the entirety creates instead a joint tenancy. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 38-31-201.

Ohio's statutory "survivorship tenancy" is the functional equivalent of tenancy by the entirety. 19 Ohio Jur.3d (2009) Cotenancy § 5 (citing Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5302.17).

Add:

Capital Fin. Co. of Del. Valley, Inc. v. Asterbadi, 912 A.2d 191 (N.J. Super. Ch. Div. 2006) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.07

Supp. to § 33.07 Incidents of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Main]

§ 33.07(d) Action of Ejectment. [Go To Main]

Replace cited case with:

Georgia v. Randolph, 547 U.S. 103, 126 S.Ct. 1515 (2006) .

Add at end of run-over paragraph:

Although each tenant by the entirety has equal right to possession, the title to the estate remains in the tenants as a marital unity, so both tenants may be held to be necessary parties in an action against a third party for encroachment.[146.1] n146.1

§ 33.07(e) Creditors' Rights. [Go To Main]

Add to note 152, second paragraph:

The Massachusetts statute prevents execution of the creditor's claim so long as the subject property is the principal residence of the nondebtor spouse.

Alaska Stat. § 09.38.100(a) (judgment creditor of debtor holding property with spouse in tenancy by the entirety may cause a severance through execution).

Add after second paragraph:

An anomalous provision in the Oklahoma statute authorizing joint tenancies and tenancies by the entirety seems to allow creditors of one spouse to attach the entirety property. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 60, § 74. See Tom R. Russell, Note. Title 60, Section 74 of the Oklahoma Statutes: A Unique Form of Tenancy by the Entirety. 58 Okla. L. Rev. 317 (2005).

Add at end of note:

Allen v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 2010 Tenn. App. LEXIS 204 (Tenn. Ct. App. Mar. 18, 2010) . ("a spouse's transfer or encumbrance of property owned by tenancy by the entirety without the consent of the other spouse transfers or encumbers only the first spouse's right of survivorship").

At the end of the run-over paragraph, add the following sentences:

Where a judgment creditor acquired the interest of one tenant by the entirety, an anomalous "tenancy in common with right of survivorship" has been recognized. In such a case it has been held that if the property does not admit of shared possession and if partition is inequitable, the creditor-coowner is entitled to one-half the fair rental value, subject to a duty of contribution to the costs of upkeep and taxes.

Add before But see signal:

, Ethridge v. Tierone Bank, 2006 Mo. App. LEXIS 659 (Mo. Ct. App. 2006) .

Add to note 164:

In re Werner, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 829 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Apr. 8, 2009) (transfer into tenancy by the entirety not set aside because not made with sole intent of avoiding creditor).

Add at the end of the note:

The Statute of Frauds or other legislation concerning the control of property held in tenancy by the entirety may require the signature of both tenants to be enforceable. Parker v. Glosson, 641 S.E.2d 735 (N.C. App. 2007) ; Burgin v. Owen, 640 S.E.2d 427 (N.C. App. 2007) .

Add at end of note:

But see Paternoster v. United States, 640 F. Supp. 2d 983 (S.D. Ohio 2009) (applying Craft to Ohio's statutory "survivorship tenancy" on the ground that is the functional equivalent of tenancy by the entirety).

Add at end of second full paragraph:

Valuation of a spouse's interest in property held in tenancy by the entirety for purposes of federal law has proven difficult: whether to use joint-life actuarial tables or to assume that each spouse's interest is of equal value, regardless of life expectancy. To the extent the latter assumption is chosen, the estate resembles a special form of joint tenancy.

Add at the end of the run-over paragraph:

Creditors entitled to support, such as ex-spouses and children, may be entitled to access property held in tenancy by the entirety that is otherwise exempt.

At the end of the first full paragraph, add new sentences:

A consent order by one spouse to transfer that spouse's interest in a tenancy by the entirety to the other spouse as part of the property settlement on divorce does not itself sever the tenancy. A creditor of the spouse bound to make the transfer cannot levy on the debtor's interest until the actual transfer or until divorce converts the tenancy by the entirety into a tenancy in common. In states making judgment liens entered on the judgment docket effective against after-acquired property, a creditor of an indebted tenant by the entirety would be well-advised to docket the judgment lien immediately even though there is no present property to levy against.

Add at the end of the note:

See also William H. Baker, Drye and Craft: How Two Wrongs Can Make a Property Right, 64 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 745 (2003).

Add at the end of the second full paragraph:

It must be emphasized that federal law concerning the enforcement of federal tax liens against one spouse holding property in tenancy by the entirety does not alter state law concerning the enforcement of judgment liens, even if the judgment is in favor of the state itself.[172.1] n172.1

Add at the end of the note:

Spears v. Boyd, 313 B.R. 212 (W.D. Mich. 2004) (reversing bankruptcy court ruling that filing in bankruptcy severed tenancy by the entirety and exposed debtor's half interest to claims of creditors).

Add to note 177:

Frantz v. Frantz, 972 A.2d 525 (Pa. Super. 2009) (property held in tenancy by the entirety by couple in course of divorce--and subject to court order to convey to non-debtor spouse--not subject to creditor's claim while held in custodia legis).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 146.1. Loree v. Barnes, 875 N.Y.S.2d 350 (N.Y. S.Ct. App. Div. 2009) .

(n2)Footnote 172.1. Walters v. Leech, 757 N.W.2d 468 (Mich. App. 2008) (refusing to impose child support lien against property held in tenancy by the entirety when only one of the tenants by the entirety was obligated).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.08

Supp. to § 33.08 Termination of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Main]

§ 33.08(a) Termination by Act of Both Tenants by the Entirety. [Go To Main]

Add at end of note:

In re Bellingroehr, 403 B.R. 818 (W.D. Mo. 2009) (where trust possesses the essential restrictions against severability and transferability that characterize a tenancy by the entirety, a transfer in trust by tenants by the entirety does not result in severance).

Add at the end of the first full paragraph:

A problem may arise when a contract for the sale of property held in tenancy by the entirety is executed by only one of the two tenants. The Statute of Frauds or other legislation concerning the control of property held in tenancy by the entirety may require the signature of both tenants to be enforceable.

At end of last paragraph, Add new note 191.1: n191.1

§ 33.08(b) Termination by Act of One Tenant by the Entirety. [Go To Main]

Add at end of note:

By legislation in 2006 Virginia eliminated the restriction to "principal family residence" on transfers of entirety property to trusts and extended the protection against separate creditors to "any property" held in trust by husband and wife in tenancy by the entirety. Va. Code Ann. § 55-20.2.

§ 33.08(c) Termination by Operation of Law. [Go To Main]

At the end of the second full paragraph, add new sentence:

If a tenant by the entirety can disclaim the right of survivorship, then the will of the dying tenant by the entirety can put the survivor to the election of disclaiming or taking some other offered benefit, but the intention to require the election must be clearly expressed.

Add at the end of the run-over paragraph:

Obviously, recording a judgment against a judgment debtor holding property with a spouse in tenancy by the entirety does not sever the tenancy and such judgment is extinguished as to the property held in tenancy by the entirety if the judgment debtor predeceases the spouse.[199.2] n199.2

Add at the end of the run-over paragraph:

Although recognizing that statutes may require a different result, the latest Restatement of Property reaffirms the position of the Restatement of Restitution that a slaying tenant by the entirety is entitled only to one-half the income from the property for life.[211.1] n211.1

Add:

Massachusetts. The slayer statute, adopted in 2002, deprives the slayer of the slayers's own share in property held in tenancy by the entirety with the victim, raising a question of an unconstitutional forfeiture. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 265, § 46. The statute is the subject of a critical student comment. See Robert F. Hennessy, "Property--The Limits of Equity: Forfeiture, Double Jeopardy, and the Massachusetts 'Slayer Statute,' " 39 Western New England L. Rev. 159 (2009).

Add to Note 215:

Estate of Vernum v. Estate of Vernum, 961 A.2d 181 (Pa. Super. 2008) (applying Slayer Statute rather than Simultaneous Death Act to case of murder-suicide).

§ 33.08(d) The Effect of Termination by Divorce. [Go To Main]

Add at end of note:

Dillingham v. Dillingham, 688 S.E.2d 499 (N.C. Ct. App. 2010) (presumption of gift can be overcome only by "clear, cogent, and convincing evidence").

FOOTNOTES:
(n3)Footnote 191.1. Butcher v. Beatty, 2010 Ark. 130 (2010) (agreement by husband and wife to terminate tenancy by the entirety by conveyance from husband and wife to wife as sole owner in return for payment by wife to husband is not specifically enforceable where husband died before the time for performance); United States v. Cone, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74253 (M.D. Fla. 2009) (plea agreement by married couple to transfer property held in tenancy by the entirety to the government at a later date did not sever the tenancy by the entirety).

(n4)Footnote 199.2. Smith v. Kofstad, 206 P.3d 441 (Alaska 2009) . But see Alaska Stat. § 09.38.100(a) (judgment creditor of debtor holding property with spouse in tenancy by the entirety may cause a severance through execution).

(n5)Footnote 211.1. Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 8.4 (2003) (reaffirming Restatement of Restitution § 188).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.09

Supp. to § 33.09 The Future of the Law of Tenancies by the Entirety.

[Go To Main]

After the next-to-last sentence in the first full paragraph, add new sentence:

The New Jersey Supreme Court recently held that denying same-sex couples the rights incident to marriage, including the right to hold property together as tenants by the entirety, violates the equal protection guarantee of the state constitution, but gave the state legislature 180 days from the date of decision to remedy the violation without indicating whether civil unions would be sufficient.

Add to note 244:

The European Court of Human Rights recently rejected an argument by two unmarried sisters who had lived together for many years that denial of the exemption from estate taxation on the death of the first to die--an exemption available to same-sex couples in the United Kingdom who registered as domestic partners--was a violation of their rights under the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Burden v. The United Kingdom, App. No. 13378/05, Eur. Ct. H.R. (Grand Chamber 2008), discussed in John V. Orth, "In re: Tenancy by the Entirety: Married Couples, Common Law Marriages, and Same-Sex Partners: Orth v. Orth," 85 North Dakota L. Rev. (2009).

Add at the end of the first full paragraph:

Note. Judicial and legislative changes concerning the availability of marriage (and the concomitant property consequences of marriage) to couples formerly excluded are occurring at such a rapid pace in states that still recognize tenancy by the entirety that it is difficult to keep the text current on this subject. The reader is advised to consult the most recent domestic relations developments in states of interest.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 33 TENANCIES BY THE ENTIRETY

4-33 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 33.10

Supp. to § 33.10 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Articles

Ahart, Alan M. "The Liability of Property Exempted in Bankruptcy for Pre-Petition Domestic Support Obligations After BAPCPA: Debtors Beware." 81 Am. Bankr. L.J. Vol. 81 (2007) 233.

Baker, William H. "Drye and Craft: How Two Wrongs Can Make a Property Right." 64 U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 64 (2003) 745.

Orth, John V. "In re Tenancy by the Entirety--Married Couples, Common Law Marriages, and Same-Sex Partners: Orth v. Orth." 85 North Dakota L. Rev. Vol. 85 (2009) 287.

Reilly, Kathleen. Note. "Making a Killing in Real Estate: Solving the Mystery of Murder's Effect on Tenancy by the Entirety in New York--A Legislative Solution." St. John's L. Rev. Vol. 82 (2008) 1203.

Rosich-Schwartz, Damaris. "Tenancy by the Entirety: The Traditional Version of the Tenancy Is the Best Alternative for Married Couples, Common Law Marriages, and Same-Sex Partnerships." North Dakota L. Rev. Vol. 84 (2008): 23.

Russell, Tom R. Note. "Title 60, Section 74 of the Oklahoma Statutes: A Unique Form of Tenancy by the Entirety." Okla. L. Rev. 58 (2005) 317.

Books

Add:

Smith, Roger J. Plural Ownership. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005.

Annotations

Annotation, Estate by Entireties as Affected by Statute Declaring Nature of Tenancy Under Grant or Devise to Two or More Persons, 32 A.L.R.3d 570 .

Annotation, Retrospective Operation of Legislation Affecting Estates by the Entireties, 27 A.L.R.2d 868 .

Annotation, Use of Debtor's Individual Funds or Property for Acquisition, Improvement of, or Discharge of Liens on, Property Held in Estate by Entireties as a Fraud upon Creditors, 7 A.L.R.2d 1104 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 34.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.syn Synopsis to Chapter 34: TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

§ 34.01 Introduction to Tenancy in Partnership.

§ 34.02 Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Rights.

§ 34.02(a) Common Law Definition of Partnership Property.

§ 34.02(b) Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Interests.

§ 34.02(b)(1) Partnership Property Held as Tenants in Common.

§ 34.02(b)(2) Doctrine of "Partner's Equity."

§ 34.03 Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Property.

§ 34.03(a) Definition of Tenancy in Partnership.

§ 34.03(b) Nature of Partnership Property: Intention of U.P.A.

§ 34.03(c) Distinguishing Partnership Property from Separate Property.

§ 34.03(c)(1) In General: Intent.

§ 34.03(c)(2) Use, Occupancy and Possession.

§ 34.03(c)(3) Property Acquired with Partnership Funds or Credit.

§ 34.03(c)(4) Property Acquired in Partnership Name.

§ 34.03(c)(5) Other Indicators of Intent.

§ 34.03(c)(6) Change from Partnership to Individual Property.

§ 34.03(d) Partner's Interest in Specific Partnership Property.

§ 34.03(e) Partner's Interest in the Partnership.

§ 34.03(f) Partner's Right to Participate in Management.

§ 34.03(g) Specific Partner's Property Rights.

§ 34.03(g)(1) Possession.

§ 34.03(g)(2) Assignability.

§ 34.03(g)(3) Creditors' Rights.

§ 34.03(g)(4) Inheritability.

§ 34.03(g)(5) Marital Interests, Rights of Divorced Spouses, Heirs or Next of Kin.

§ 34.03(h) Partnership Property and the Effect of the Statute of Frauds.

§ 34.04 Conflicting Interests in the U.P.A. Approach.

§ 34.05 Revised Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Property

§ 34.06 Bibliography.

Professor Alan M. Weinberger
Saint Louis University School of Law

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.01

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.01 Introduction to Tenancy in Partnership.

[Go To Supp]

Prior to the promulgation of the Uniform Partnership Act [hereinafter referred to as "U.P.A."] in 1914 by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws [sometimes hereinafter referred to as "N.C.C.U.S.L."] n1 it was unclear whether partnership property was owned by the partnership, as an entity, or by the partners individually, as tenants in common. The prevailing common law view, the so-called aggregate approach, held that a partnership was an aggregate of individuals that held title to partnership property in trust for the partnership. An opposing view, the so-called entity approach, viewed a partnership as substantially similar to a corporation in this respect by allowing property to be acquired directly by and held in the name of the partnership entity.

Developing a coherent theory of partnership property was a principal objective of the drafters of the U.P.A. n2 Their approach required separating the individual partner from partnership assets. n3 To this end, the U.P.A. introduced two new concepts into partnership law. First, specific partnership property (both real and personal) would be held by the partners in a unique n4 and somewhat esoteric n5 form of concurrent ownership designated as a "tenancy in partnership." n6 Second, the nature of a partner's interest in the partnership would be a share of the profits and surplus. n7

The rather awkward statutory elucidation of the tenancy in partnership concept reflects the tension between the entity and aggregate models of partnership. n8 Nominally, "[a] partner is co-owner with his partners of specific partnership property holding as a tenant in partnership." n9 This phrasing represents the drafters' bow to the aggregate theory, which holds that each partner owns a direct stake in partnership assets. n10 In their very next breath, however, the drafters proceed systematically to negate each important attribute of individual ownership of specific partnership property, interposing the partnership as a separate legal entity standing between the partners and partnership assets. n11 Thus, an individual partner "has no right to possess such property for any [nonpartnership] purpose without the consent of his partners." n12 Furthermore, "[a] partner's right in specific partnership property is not assignable except in connection with the assignment of rights of all the partners in the same property." n13 Finally, "[a] partner's right in specific partnership property is not subject to attachment or execution, except on a claim against the partnership." n14

The tenancy in partnership has been described as a "tailor-made" tenancy, a creature of necessity designed to meet the exigencies of the partnership relationship. n15 The tenancy effectively separates not only the individual partner, but also the partner's personal creditors, from any interest in specific partnership assets. To the drafters of the U.P.A., the tenancy in partnership was considered central to the stability and viability of the partnership form of organization. n16

As one commentator phrased it:

> The basic policy judgment was that particular pieces of partnership property, and potentially, the very business of the partnership, should not be jeopardized by every claim of separate creditors. Thus, the Uniform Act was drafted so that no partner has any interest in specific partnership assets for her own personal purposes; she has nothing to convey voluntarily, nor can her personal creditors force such a conveyance. Rather, her interest in the partnership is her share of the profits and surplus, and it is against this interest that her separate creditors may seek a charging order. n17

Indeed, preventing interference with partnership business by protecting partnership property from execution and attachment by individual creditors may have formed the principal reason the NCCUSL directed the U.P.A. drafters to embrace the entity theory. n18

In 1986 an American Bar Association subcommittee recommended extensive revisions to the U.P.A. n19 The revised U.P.A. [hereinafter referred to as "R.U.P.A."] would eliminate the tenancy in partnership. n20 The abolition of the tenancy in partnership represents perhaps the most remarkable revision proposed by the R.U.P.A. In a salutary effort more directly to state the substance of present law, the R.U.P.A. categorically embraces the entity theory.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Uniform Partnership Act of 1914, 6 U.L.A. (1969).

(n2)Footnote 2. Judson A. Crane, Twenty Years Under the Uniform Partnership Act, 2 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 129, 135 (1936).

(n3)Footnote 3. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 1, 11 (1988).

(n4)Footnote 4. Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property, 207 n.1 (2d ed. 1988).

(n5)Footnote 5. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 10 n.43 (1988).

(n6)Footnote 6. U.P.A. § 25(1).

(n7)Footnote 7. Although it is unclear precisely what financial rights "profits" and "surplus" describe, it is generally agreed that the term "profits" refers to the partner's right to receive distributions of funds by the ongoing partnership in excess of current liabilities. "Surplus" refers to the excess of all partnership assets over partnership liabilities upon the liquidation and termination of the entity after all partnership creditors have been satisfied. See Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 3.04(c) (1991).

(n8)Footnote 8. "The tenancy in partnership is perhaps the most telling example of the statute's adoption of an entity solution with a concurrent insistence that it be stated in aggregate terms." Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 12 (1988).

(n9)Footnote 9. U.P.A. § 25(1).

(n10)Footnote 10. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 4-5

(1988).

(n11)Footnote 11. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 4 & 11 (1988).

(n12)Footnote 12. U.P.A. § 25(2)(a).

(n13)Footnote 13. U.P.A. § 25(2)(b).

(n14)Footnote 14. U.P.A. § 25(2)(c).

(n15)Footnote 15. Report by Walter George Smith, Chairman of the Committee on Commercial Law, 7 U.L.A. 5, cited in Laurens Williams, The Uniform Partnership Act Comes to Nebraska, 22 Neb. L. Rev. 215 (1943).

(n16)Footnote 16. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 10 (1988).

(n17)Footnote 17. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 12 (1988).

(n18)Footnote 18. Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 3.05 (1991).

(n19)Footnote 19. U.P.A. Revision Subcommittee of the Committee on Partnership and Unincorporated Business Organizations, Should the Uniform Partnership Act Be Revised?, 43 Bus. Law. 121 (1987).

(n20)Footnote 20. See § 34.05 infra. See Matthew G. Dore, Partnership Law and Practice Under the New Iowa Uniform Partnership Act, 47 Drake L. Rev. 497 (1999) (discusses the entity theory of partnership property as well as other aspects of the Revised Act).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.02

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.02 Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Rights.

[Go To Supp]

§ 34.02(a) Common Law Definition of Partnership Property.

Before promulgation of the U.P.A. in 1916, the common law grappled with the question of whether a partnership was to be treated as an entity or as an aggregate of individuals. n21 The aggregate approach constituted a serious handicap to the viability of the partnership form of organization as an efficient entity for the practical conduct of business operations, because under this view, a partnership could not hold title to property in the partnership name. n22 As a result, title to partnership property had to be taken in the names of one or more of the individual members of the partnership. This tended to create obstacles for the partnership. For example, in the event of the death of a partner, the deceased partner's interest in partnership property would likely pass to the deceased partner's heirs rather than to the remaining partners who would require its use to continue operating the partnership business.

Although the common law did not allow a partnership to hold legal title to property in the partnership name, creative common law judges recognized the practical difficulties and provided some relief through the imaginative use of legal fictions. When property was purchased by a partnership and title taken in the partnership name, courts held that partners whose names appeared in the partnership name held legal title to the property in trust for the other partners. n23 If the firm name was fictitious, equitable title was considered to have passed to the partners, with legal title remaining in the grantor. n24

§ 34.02(b) Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Interests.

§ 34.02(b)(1) Partnership Property Held as Tenants in Common.

It followed from the common law view of a partnership as an aggregate of individuals that a partnership could not hold legal title to property. When property was acquired in trust for the partnership, the property was held by the partners as tenants in common. n25 As a result, each cotenant, or partner, had a right to possess the property independently of all other members of the partnership. n26 Each cotenant could also transfer, devise or encumber the cotenant's interest without the consent of the other cotenants. If a cotenant transferred the interest for value to a good faith purchaser, the transferee's interest would be superior to any interest of the partnership, thus allowing a stranger to obtain an interest in partnership property to the disadvantage of the partnership. n27

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, property held as tenants in common would descend to the heirs of a deceased cotenant, which also could be disadvantageous to the partnership.

§ 34.02(b)(2) Doctrine of "Partner's Equity."

Early common law recognized the disadvantages to the partnership when partnership property was considered to be held by the partners as tenants in common. In an effort to resolve some of these problems partners were allowed to agree among themselves and with their creditors for collective ownership of partnership property. To avoid the need for a separate agreement the tenancy in common was modified by the doctrine of "partner's equity." Although each partner did not have a specific lien on partnership property, the doctrine of partner's equity held that each partner had an equitable right to have partnership property applied first to the payment of firm debts and liabilities, including amounts owed to the partners themselves. n28

While partner's equity served mainly to protect the partners, it also afforded limited protection to creditors of the partnership. n29 Partnership creditors were protected only to the extent that a partner was able to enforce this right. If the partner was not in a position to enforce it, creditors of the firm could not enforce it either. n30 If a partner had transferred the partner's interest in the partnership, thereby dissolving the partnership, a creditor would no longer be able to force the partner to invoke the partner's rights under the doctrine of partner's equity, leaving the creditor unprotected. n31 As a result, the doctrine of partner's equity was not a satisfactory solution for either the partners or creditors of the partnership.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 21. For further discussion see § 34.04 infra. See also Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 1.03 (1991).

(n2)Footnote 22. City Bank Farmers Trust Co. v. United States, 47 F. Supp. 98 (Ct. Cl. 1942).

(n3)Footnote 23. Cole v. Mettee, 47 S.W. 407 (Ark. 1898).

(n4)Footnote 24. Schlake v. Healey, 187 N.W. 427 (Neb. 1922); Frost v. Wolf, 14 S.W. 440 (Tex. 1890).

(n5)Footnote 25. Kentucky Block Cannel Coal Co. v. Sewell, 249 F. 840 (6th Cir. 1918); Waycross Military Ass'n v. Hier, 76 S.E.2d 486 (Ga. 1953) (if title to property is taken in the name of an unincorporated organization the members thereof own the property as tenants in common).

(n6)Footnote 26. 20 Am. Jur. 2d, Cotenancy and Joint Ownership § 33 (1965).

(n7)Footnote 27. Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 3.04 (1991).

(n8)Footnote 28. R.A. Myles & Co. v. A. D. Davis Packing Co., 81 So. 863 (Ala. Ct. App. 1919); Saunders v. Reilly, 12 N.E. 170 (N.Y. Ct. App. 1887).

(n9)Footnote 29. Case v. Beauregard, 99 U.S. 119 (1878); Endries v. Paddock, 271 N.Y.S. 848 (1934) (mortgage assignee took subject to equities that would have been available against mortgagor).

(n10)Footnote 30. Case v. Beauregard, 99 U.S. 119 (1878); Sargent v. Blake, 160 F. 57 (5th Cir. 1908) (rights of creditors of partnership to be paid out of partnership property in preference to individual creditors do not attach until application is made to court for administration of partnership property, and even then only if a partner at the time had the right to enforce).

(n11)Footnote 31. Case v. Beauregard, 99 U.S. 119 (1878); Sherck v. First Nat'l Bank of Hereford, 206 S.W. 507 (Tex. Com. App. 1918).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.03

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.03 Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Property.

[Go To Supp]

In 1914, after 10 years of work, the NCCUSL adopted the Uniform Partnership Act and recommended its enactment by the states. n32 The U.P.A. was, for the most part, a codification of prior common law with one notable exception, the tenancy in partnership.

§ 34.03(a) Definition of Tenancy in Partnership.

Part V of the U.P.A. addresses the property rights of a partner. U.P.A. § 25 states that "a partner is co-owner with his partners of specific partnership property holding as tenant in partnership." n33 The incidents of this tenancy in partnership are that:

> (a) Each partner, subject to agreement among the partners, has an equal right with all other partners to possess specific items of partnership property for partnership purposes,
>
> (b) A partner's interest in specific items of partnership property is not assignable except in connection with the rights of all the partners,
>
> (c) A partner's interest in specific items of partnership property is not subject to attachment or execution except on a claim against the partnership,
>
> (d) On the death of a partner his interest in specific items of partnership property vests in the surviving partners, and
>
> (e) A partner's interest in specific items of partnership property is not subject to dower, curtesy or allowance to widows, heirs or next of kin. n34

§ 34.03(b) Nature of Partnership Property: Intention of U.P.A.

U.P.A. § 8 provides the statutory definition of partnership property. Included in this definition is "all property originally brought into the partnership stock or subsequently acquired by purchase or otherwise on account of the partnership," n35 and all property acquired with partnership funds, unless a contrary intention is shown. n36 One of the most significant changes introduced by the U.P.A. into partnership law was to authorize partnerships to hold and transfer title to real property in the partnership name: n37 "Any estate in real property may be acquired in the partnership name" and any property "so acquired can be conveyed only in the partnership name." n38

After attempting to define what partnership property consists of, the U.P.A. describes the extent of the property rights of an individual member of the partnership. A partner's property rights consist of a partner's rights in specific partnership property, his interest in the partnership and his right to participate in management. n39 Each of these property rights will be discussed in turn. However, in any dispute involving the property of the partnership, the threshold inquiry will be whether property belongs to the partnership or to the partner individually.

§ 34.03(c) Distinguishing Partnership Property from Separate Property.

Courts have provided an analytical framework for distinguishing a partner's separate property from partnership property. Relevant factors for consideration include evidence as to the intention of the partners, the nature of use, occupancy and possession of the property, and the source of funds used to acquire the property. Courts have also considered the effect of change from partnership property to individual property.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: partnership w/15 property w/30 intent! or presumption

WESTLAW: partnership /p property /p intent! or presumption

§ 34.03(c)(1) In General: Intent.

The intention of the partners as to whether property belongs to the partnership or to the individual partners is a controlling factor in the determination of ownership. n40

The best evidence of intention of the partners is a written partnership agreement defining what is, or is not, partnership property, and describing the treatment of future acquired partnership property. n41 However, the partnership agreement need not be in writing. Courts have enforced oral and even implied partnership agreements. n42

When there is no formal written agreement the partners' intentions may be inferred from their actions and from the circumstances. n43 However, the partners' expressed intentions may be insufficient to overcome the presumption created by the manner in which title was acquired, especially if the partners appear to have understood the consequences of the estate in which title was taken. n44 As a result, intention is mainly a question of fact, with the focus primarily on the intention of the partners at the time the property was acquired. n45 In the absence of clear evidence of intent, courts consider other indicia of intent, including manner of use, receipt of rental income and distribution of proceeds of sale. n46

While the intention of the partners may be controlling as among them, a court will look beyond intention when a third party has relied on the apparent ownership of the property. n47

§ 34.03(c)(2) Use, Occupancy and Possession.

Each partner has an equal right to possess partnership property for partnership purposes. n48 However, the mere use or possession of property by the partnership is not conclusive evidence that property belongs to the partnership. n49 When use or possession is coupled with additional factors, such as payment of taxes and insurance from partnership funds, ownership by the partnership will usually be found. n50 Overall use, occupancy and possession are considered only slight evidence of partnership property. n51 A partner may contribute the use of property to the partnership while retaining title individually.

§ 34.03(c)(3) Property Acquired with Partnership Funds or Credit.

A strong presumption of partnership ownership is created when property is purchased with partnership funds or credit. The U.P.A. provides that "unless a contrary intention appears, property acquired with partnership funds is partnership property." n52 Although the use of partnership property in and of itself is only slight evidence of ownership, use combined with the fact that the property was purchased with partnership funds is highly significant. n53 Even when property is registered or titled in the name of one partner, use of partnership funds to purchase the property will support a finding of partnership property. n54

The use of partnership funds does not consist exclusively of using money or cash from a partnership account. It may also arise from partnership credit or payment by one or more of the partners who in turn would be reimbursed by the partnership. n55 A similar situation arises when property is apparently purchased with partnership funds but a partner's capital account is credited with the amount of the payments. The fact that title is taken individually by the partner, coupled with a charge to his partnership account, should serve to rebut the presumption created by the use of partnership funds or even prevent it from arising in the first place. n56 It is important that the partnership books properly reflect the transaction.

The presumption of partnership ownership created by the use of partnership funds is rebuttable. n57 Once the presumption has been rebutted it no longer carries evidentiary weight. n58 The presumption from use of partnership funds does not arise when the rights of third parties are involved. n59

§ 34.03(c)(4) Property Acquired in Partnership Name.

At common law, a partnership was not allowed to take title to real property in the partnership name. n60 U.P.A. § 8(3)-(4) removed this obstacle by allowing any estate in real property to be acquired and conveyed in the partnership name.

Just as the use of partnership funds to finance the acquisition of property creates a strong presumption in favor of ownership by the partnership, so too does the holding of record title in the name of the partnership. n61 The reverse, however, is not always true. Property whose title is held in the name of one or more individual partners may nevertheless belong to the partnership. This may be especially true when other factors, such as the use of partnership funds and the intention of the partners that the property belong to the partnership, are present. n62 When the partners intend the property to be partnership property, the fact that title is in one or more individual members of the partnership will not supersede the intention of the partners. n63 Once again the intention of the partners that property belongs to the partnership, despite the manner of holding title, will not prevail over the rights of an innocent third party. n64

§ 34.03(c)(5) Other Indicators of Intent.

Various other factors are relevant to the determination that property belongs to the partnership rather than to the individual members of the partnership. Making improvements to real property with partnership funds, paying taxes or insurance, collecting rents, n65 making certain types of entries in the partnership books, n66 taking depreciation on partnership tax returns, n67 and making mortgage payments from partnership funds, may all indicate ownership of property by the partnership.

Making improvements to real property with partnership funds may not be sufficient to support a finding of ownership by the partnership, but the value of the improvements may belong to the partnership. n68 Payment of taxes and insurance, without more, may also not be sufficient to support a finding that property belongs to the partnership, because payment of such costs is typically a requirement in many leases. n69

§ 34.03(c)(6) Change from Partnership to Individual Property.

Title to property owned by the partnership is held by the individual members of the partnership as tenants in partnership. n70 Property which was once partnership property may become property of the individual partners upon agreement of the partners, as a distribution in kind, n71 or on dissolution of the partnership. n72 When a partnership is dissolved and property transferred to its members, the individual partners may take title as tenants by the entireties n73 or as tenants in common. n74

Until there has been actual winding up and termination of the partnership, the partners continue to hold title as tenants in partnership and must account for use and profits. n75

§ 34.03(d) Partner's Interest in Specific Partnership Property.

The U.P.A. ascribes three types of property rights to each partner. The first is a partner's rights in specific partnership property. n76 Each partner holds title to partnership property as tenant in partnership with the other members of the partnership. However, unlike other forms of joint ownership, the tenant in partnership owns no individual rights in specific items of partnership property.

The incidents of the U.P.A. tenancy in partnership are such that each partner has an equal right to possess specific items of partnership property for partnership purposes. n77 However, no partner has the right to assign the partner's interest in specific partnership property; n78 nor is a partner's interest in specific partnership property subject to attachment or execution by the partner's individual creditors. n79 On the death of a partner the interest vests in the surviving partners and is not subject to dower or curtesy. n80

Thus, as a practical matter, the U.P.A. effectively negates virtually all significant incidents of individual property ownership with the result that ownership is effectively in the firm. n81 Nevertheless, some courts have taken the curious view that an individual partner has a sufficient ownership interest in partnership property to preclude being found guilty of the crimes of theft or embezzlement. n82 Other courts have reached a different interpretation of the U.P.A. On this issue, and some states have modified criminal statutes to avoid such an overly technical escape from criminal liability. n83

§ 34.03(e) Partner's Interest in the Partnership.

The second property right of a partner is the interest in the partnership. A partner's interest in the partnership is the partner's "share of the profits and surplus, and that share is considered personal property." n84 A partner's interest in the property of the partnership has been analogized to the interest of a corporate stockholder in the property of the corporation. n85

A partner's rights in specific items of partnership property are not assignable or subject to attachment. However, because a partner's interest in the partnership is considered personal property, that interest is assignable n86 and may be reached by a partner's individual creditors. n87

The U.P.A. provides "that no partner is entitled to remuneration for acting in the partnership business." n88 Accordingly, absent contrary agreement among the partners, no partner is entitled to an interim distribution of profits.

Since a partner's interest in the partnership is assignable, the U.P.A. provides that an assignee is entitled to receive the profits to which the assigning partner would have been entitled. n89 A creditor of an individual partner who has obtained a charging order n90 may also be entitled to divert the share of the profits that the debtor partner would otherwise have been entitled to receive. n91

Subject to agreement among the members of the partnership, each partner is entitled to be repaid the partner's contribution, "whether by way of capital or advances to the partnership property and to share equally in the profits and surplus remaining after all liabilities." n92 Absent agreement to the contrary, a partner must wait until the partnership is terminated before becoming entitled to such repayment.

§ 34.03(f) Partner's Right to Participate in Management.

The final property right ascribed to a partner by the U.P.A. is the right to participate in firm management. n93 Each partner has an equal right "in the management and conduct of the partnership business," n94 the right to approve any new partners, n95 the right to decide matters affecting or in contravention of the partnership business n96 and the right to obtain information relating to the partnership. n97

Absent agreement to the contrary, the U.P.A. assumes that all partners share equally in the management of the partnership, even where partners have contributed unequally to partnership capital. n98

A partner's management right is not assignable except perhaps with the consent of all the partners. n99 Accordingly, an assignee of a partner may be entitled to profits and surplus, but would ordinarily not be entitled to participate in a decision by the partnership to disburse profits. n100 An assignee may be able to compel dissolution so as to force distribution of profits and capital. n101

§ 34.03(g) Specific Partner's Property Rights.

Each partner owns an interest in specific partnership property, an interest in the partnership and a right to participate in the management of the partnership. Each of these interests is affected by the incidents of the tenancy in partnership enumerated in U.P.A. § 25(2).

§ 34.03(g)(1) Possession.

Unlike the common law tenant in common who enjoys broad rights of possession, U.P.A. § 25(2)(a) provides that, subject to contrary agreement, each partner has an equal right to possess specific partnership property but for partnership purposes only. n102 A partner may possess partnership property for personal use only with the consent of the partners. n103 A partner using property for personal purposes without the consent of the partners may be held accountable to the partnership. n104

§ 34.03(g)(2) Assignability.

An individual partner may not assign the interest in specific partnership property n105 nor the right to participate in management. n106 The partner may assign the interest in the partnership. n107

U.P.A. § 25(2)(b) provides that a partner's interest in specific partnership property is not assignable except in connection with the assignment of rights of all the partners in the same property. n108 This enables the partners to dispose of partnership assets when all partners consent.

A comment in the U.P.A. explains why non-assignability is a necessary attribute of the partnership relation. n109 "If A and B are partners and A attempts to assign all his right in partnership property ... to C, and the law recognizes the possibility of such a transfer, C would pro tanto become a partner with B." n110 "But a partnership is a voluntary relation. B cannot have a partner thrust upon him by A without his, B's consent." n111

When a partner attempts to assign or convey the interest in specific partnership property, the conveyance is generally considered void, with the partnership retaining the entire interest. n112 It is also generally held that a partner cannot assign or convey any interest in specific partnership property to secure a personal debt. n113

A partner's interest in the partnership is assignable. U.P.A. § 27 provides that "a conveyance by a partner of his interest in the firm does not of itself dissolve the partnership," unless the assigning partner withdraws. However, the assignee does not become a partner by virtue of the assignment. n114 An assignee is entitled to receive only the profits to which the assigning partner would have been entitled. n115 An assignee is further restricted in that the assignee may not interfere in partnership management, require any information about or account of partnership transactions, or inspect the partnership books and records. n116 Upon dissolution the assignee is entitled to receive the assignor's interest. n117 In addition to the limitations set forth in the U.P.A., the assignee is also bound by any limitations found in the partnership agreement. n118

Although the assignee is, absent agreement to the contrary, entitled to no more than profits, the assignee's interest is subject to partnership debts incurred both before and after the assignment. However, the assignee is not a partner and is not personally liable for partnership debts.

The right to participate in management is not assignable, n119 based on the principle of "delectus personae" or choice of the person. n120 The U.P.A. reflects this principle by distinguishing between the partner's interest in the partnership, which is assignable, and the partner's right to participate in management, which is not assignable. n121

§ 34.03(g)(3) Creditors' Rights.

A significant, if not the principal, motivation for the drafters of the U.P.A. was to eliminate the confusion that prevailed at common law surrounding the rights of an individual partner's creditors to attach the partner's interest in firm property. n122 The earliest cases, based on the aggregate approach, allowed the separate creditors of an individual member of the partnership to reach the partner's share, but in doing so the creditor was allowed to seize the entire property. n123 The courts later provided protection against such action by applying the doctrine of "partner's equity," which allowed partners to apply firm property for firm purposes, before the property could be applied for any other purpose. n124

In an effort to resolve the confusion that prevailed at common law over the rights of an individual partner's separate creditors, the drafters of the U.P.A. originally sought to adopt the entity theory. n125 This theory would have effectively prevented separate creditors of an individual partner from reaching partnership property. As described in § 34.01 supra and § 34.04 infra, the final draft of the U.P.A. was based on the aggregate theory. However, specific items of partnership property were protected against the individual partner's separate creditors through the tenancy in partnership device.

U.P.A. § 25(2)(c) provides that "a partner's right in specific partnership property is not subject to attachment or execution, except on a claim against the partnership." U.P.A. § 28 authorizes the creditors of an individual partner to reach the partner's interest by obtaining a charging order.

Although U.P.A. § 25(2)(c) specifically mentions attachment and execution, creditors have also been allowed garnishments, judgment liens and injunctions. n126 Partners may not shield property from creditors by transfer to the partnership. If the partnership's title is not apparent from the public record, the creditor of an individual partner who has relied on the status of record title may be able to reach what otherwise would have been considered partnership property. n127

A partner's individual creditors may be protected when the partnership files for bankruptcy. It has been held that "where the debtor is a partnership, the automatic stay only restrains actions against the partnership or the property of the partnership estate. Unless the partners personally file for bankruptcy relief, the automatic stay does not restrain actions against them or their property." n128

Just as a partner's interest in the firm is assignable, it may also be reached by the partner's individual creditors. U.P.A. § 28(1) allows a judgment creditor of a partner to obtain a court order charging the interest of the debtor partner. Although the U.P.A. refers to "any judgment creditor of a partner," n129 nonjudgment creditors, such as spouses seeking alimony or child support, have also attempted to use the charging order remedy. n130

The U.P.A. provides that a judgment creditor may request the court to issue an order requiring that partnership distributions that otherwise would have been made to the partner be diverted to the partner's creditor. n131 However, as with assignment, the creditor is not entitled to any distributions of profits, unless the partnership agreement so provides; n132 nor is the creditor allowed to participate in the management of the partnership business. If the partnership agreement does not provide for distributions of profits, the charging order may be foreclosed. n133

Although the U.P.A. inferentially authorizes foreclosure, some courts have limited the availability of this remedy to situations where the creditor's debt would not be satisfied within a reasonable time through the division of distributions. n134 One state has modified its version of the U.P.A. to prevent foreclosure at any time. n135

The U.P.A. provides that the partnership interest may be redeemed prior to foreclosure by any one or more of the partners using separate property, or using partnership property if all partners consent. n136 This is consistent with the U.P.A.'s effort to protect the partnership from interference by outsiders. If the partnership interest is not redeemed prior to foreclosure, it may be purchased by the creditor, the partners or a third party. Because of the limited rights the purchaser would receive, it is not likely such a sale would attract interest from any but the immediate parties.

Because the purchaser of a foreclosed charging order is in effect an assignee, the purchaser is entitled to seek judicial dissolution as authorized by U.P.A. § 32(2)(b). Upon dissolution the purchaser would be entitled to whatever amounts the debtor partner would have received.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: partnership w/15 property or interest w/30 (creditor w/15 right or interest

WESTLAW: partnership /s property or interest /p (creditor /s right or interest)

§ 34.03(g)(4) Inheritability.

At early common law the partners held title to partnership property as tenants in common. This meant that a deceased partner's interest in partnership property would descend to the decedent's heirs. The courts protected the remaining partners from interference by the heirs under the doctrine of equitable conversion. This allowed a court to treat "realty as if it were personalty to enable surviving partners to use it or its proceeds in winding up the firm." n137 Equitable conversion was either out-and-out or complete, in the English courts, or pro tanto, in the majority of American courts.

Pro tanto conversion required assets to be used or sold only as far as necessary to protect firm creditors or the remaining partners. n138 The problem with pro tanto conversion was that the remaining partners could pick which assets to sell during the winding up of the firm, without input from the deceased partner's heirs. n139

The U.P.A. removed the uncertainties prevailing at common law by providing that "on the death of a partner his right in specific partnership property vests in the surviving partner or partners... ." n140 The partners are to use the property for partnership purposes only during the winding up or continuation of the business of the partnership.

The deceased partner's estate is entitled to the partner's interest in the partnership. U.P.A. § 26 provides that this interest is personal property and is intended to require out-and-out conversion in every case. n141 The partners may agree as to the distribution of partnership property on the death of a partner, n142 or, if no agreement was made, the interest is subject to the provisions of the U.P.A. The deceased partner's representative may either allow continuation of the partnership n143 or compel dissolution of the partnership. n144

§ 34.03(g)(5) Marital Interests, Rights of Divorced Spouses, Heirs or Next of Kin.

The U.P.A. states that "a partner's interest in specific partnership property is not subject to dower, curtesy, or allowance to widows, heirs or next of kin." n145 However, absent state statute, the partner's interest in the partnership may be subject to such claims. n146

Although the U.P.A. is silent with regard to the rights of divorced spouses, courts have generally construed their rights in the same manner as other partner property rights. n147 The divorced spouse has no right to specific partnership property and it is not subject to equitable distribution at divorce. n148

A spouse generally has rights in the partner's interest in the partnership and this interest is considered marital property. While courts generally hold that the value of the partnership interest is to be included in the marital estate, n149 there is some disagreement over how the value should be determined. Although some courts hold that spouses are entitled to the full value of the partnership interest, including goodwill, n150 others have held that the value of the partnership interest should be determined according to the partnership agreement. n151 One court has held that the value should be fixed as of the date of divorce. n152 Where a court awarded the partner's actual interest, not just its value, the spouse was subject to the same restrictions as any other assignee, and was not entitled to participate in management of the partnership business. n153

§ 34.03(h) Partnership Property and the Effect of the Statute of Frauds.

Although the U.P.A. does not require a partnership agreement to be in writing, each state has enacted some form of the Statute of Frauds, which generally requires a writing, signed by the party to be charged, for the sale or transfer of an interest in land. n154 A question arises as to whether a transfer by a partnership, or between partners, is required to be in writing.

The U.P.A. gives the individual partners limited rights in partnership property, n155 which perhaps makes the partner's interest in the partnership the most important right. The partner's interest in the partnership is characterized as personal property. n156 Based on this interpretation courts have upheld oral partnership agreements, n157 even when the partnership's only asset was land. n158 In upholding oral partnership agreements courts have reasoned that a partner is not seeking to acquire an interest in land but is instead claiming an interest in the partnership. n159

A different issue arises when a partner is claiming an interest in property that was owned individually by another partner and that was allegedly transferred to the partnership. n160 Here courts have made a distinction between a partner who is seeking a share of the profits and a partner who is seeking to obtain a conveyance of title to property, or is seeking an interest in real property. n161

The Statute of Frauds problem has also arisen in a slightly different context. The U.P.A. does not allow a partner to assign the interest in partnership property "except in connection with the assignment of the rights of all the partners." n162 When a partner is found to have acted within the scope of the partner's authority and has agreed to sell partnership property, the other partners cannot invoke the Statute of Frauds to claim that written authorization was required to transfer their interests. n163 The Statute of Frauds has also been used to protect a partnership when one partner has attempted to bind the partnership without its approval, and the contract failed to state that the partner was an agent and failed to name the partnership as principal. n164

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 32. The U.P.A. has been adopted in 49 states, the District of Columbia, Guam and the Virgin Islands. Georgia, in 1984, was the last state to adopt the U.P.A. Ga. Code Ann. §§ 14-8-1 to 14-8-43 (1989). The partnership statute enacted in Georgia made massive revisions to the U.P.A. and influenced the decision to undertake the U.P.A. revision project described in § 34.05 infra. Donald J. Weidner, A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law, 16 Fla. St. U. L. Rev. 2 (1988). Professor Weidner is the Reporter for the Revised Uniform Partnership Act. For cases under the U.P.A. see, e.g.: United States v. Triangle Oil, 277 F.3d 1251 (10th Cir. 2002) (partner in joint venture has rights in specific partnership property held as a tenant in partnership); Grand Street Artists v. General Electric Company, Civil No. 96-3774, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7076 (D. N.J. 2000) (CERCLA case involving industrial property held by co-owners as tenants in partnership).

(n2)Footnote 33. U.P.A. § 25(1).

(n3)Footnote 34. U.P.A. § 25(2)(a)-(e).

(n4)Footnote 35. U.P.A. § 8(1).

(n5)Footnote 36. U.P.A. § 8(1)-(2).

(n6)Footnote 37. Don L. Kristinik, III, Transferring Title to Partnership Real Property Under the U.P.A. and Proposed R.U.P.A., 27 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 143, 149 (1992).

(n7)Footnote 38. U.P.A. § 8(3).

(n8)Footnote 39. U.P.A. § 24.

(n9)Footnote 40. Price v. District of Columbia Rental Hous. Comm'r, 512 A.2d 263 (D.C. 1986). See also Duckson v. Cargill, 9 S.W.3d 556 (Ark. Ct. App. 2000) in which case the court found that the intent of the parties regarding the real property was for it to be separate property, held as tenants in common, rather than as partnership property connected with their business of raising horses.

(n10)Footnote 41. Curtis v. Campbell, 336 S.W.2d 355 (Ky. 1960) (property owned individually was expressly designated as partnership property in original partnership agreement).

(n11)Footnote 42. Klingstein v. Rockingham Nat'l Bank of Harrisburg, 182 S.E. 115 (Va. 1935).

(n12)Footnote 43. Klingstein v. Rockingham Nat'l Bank of Harrisburg, 182 S.E. 115 (Va. 1935). Intent was inferred from the fact that partner listed real estate as belonging to firm on bank loan application, all taxes and insurance were paid out of partnership funds and the partnership occupied the property.

(n13)Footnote 44. Rooney v. Rooney, 605 A.2d 520 (Vt. 1992).

(n14)Footnote 45. Pluth v. Smith, 23 Cal. Rptr. 550 (1962); Price v. District of Columbia Rental Hous. Comm'r, 512 A.2d 263 (D.C. 1986); In re Capps, 135 B.R. 821 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1992).

(n15)Footnote 46. Bode v. Prettyman, 30 N.W.2d 627 (Neb. 1948); Barton v. Barton, 996 P.2d 1 (Wyo. 2000) (property was not deemed to be partnership property when there was no written partnership agreement, and revenue earned therein was used for non-partnership interests, even though the claim was made that the rental properties were operated as a business venture and partnership tax returns were filed).

(n16)Footnote 47. Morgan Guar. Trust Co. v. Alexander Equities, Inc., 268 S.E.2d 660 (Ga. 1980) (where property was acquired by partnership but titled in name of defendant and individual partner as tenants in common with no indication of partnership, third party held entitled to rely on state of record title).

(n17)Footnote 48. U.P.A. § 25(2)(a); see § 34.03(g)(1) infra.

(n18)Footnote 49. Gorger v. Gorger, 555 P.2d 1 (Or. 1976); Strother v. Strother, 436 So. 2d 847 (Ala. 1983)

(n19)Footnote 50. Klingstein v. Rockingham Nat'l Bank of Harrisburg, 182 S.E. 115 (Va. 1935). See also Mischke v. Mischke, 530 N.W.2d 235 (Neb. 1995) (where partnership paid taxes, made improvements, and used property for partnership purposes, title was found to be held by individual rather than by partnership without evidence of intent on part of the titleholder to devote the property to partnership purposes). The case of Mischke v. Mischke was affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded in Mischke v. Mischke, 571 N.W. 2d 248 (Neb. 1997). The requisite intent that the land be partnership property was not found in the case of Thomas v. Lloyd, 17 S.W. 3d 177 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000), though many factors were considered, including use, name, title, and payment of taxes.

(n20)Footnote 51. Attaway v. Stanolind Oil & Gas, 232 F.2d 790 (10th Cir. 1956).

(n21)Footnote 52. U.P.A. § 8(2).

(n22)Footnote 53. In re Gerlach's Estate, 72 A.2d 271 (Pa. 1950).

(n23)Footnote 54. In re Estate of Palmer, 708 P.2d 242 (Mont. 1985).

(n24)Footnote 55. Gates Rubber Co. v. Williford, 530 S.W.2d 11 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975). See Muben-Lamar, L.P. v. Department of Revenue, 763 So. 2d 1209 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 2000) which determined that the partnership bought the real property by issuing valuable partnership interests in consideration for land. The court cited Fla. Rev. Sta. § 620.8201 (a partnership is an entity separate and distinct from its partners).

(n25)Footnote 56. Bachard v. Walker, 455 N.W.2d 851 (S.D. 1990).

(n26)Footnote 57. Reiners v. Sherard, 233 N.W.2d 579 (S.D. 1975); Bachard v. Walker, 455 N.W.2d 851 (S.D. 1990).

(n27)Footnote 58. Id.

(n28)Footnote 59. Kook v. American Sur. Co., 210 A.2d 633 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1965).

(n29)Footnote 60. See § 34.02, supra.

(n30)Footnote 61. Brown v. Brown, 320 S.W.2d 721 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1959); In re Fulton, 43 B.R. 273 (Bankr. M.D. Tenn. 1984).

(n31)Footnote 62. In re K & L Limited, 741 F.2d 1023 (7th Cir. 1984) (real estate bought with partnership funds, for partnership purpose, and applied to partnership use, is firm property regardless of whether title is in all partners, in one of them, or in a stranger). But see In re Trempe, No. 90 C 1459, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5627 (N.D. Ill 1990) (which noted that In re K&L Ltd. has been superseded by statute regarding jurisdiction).

(n32)Footnote 63. In re Palm Gardens Nursing Home, 46 B.R. 685 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1985) (named partners holding in trust for the partnership).

(n33)Footnote 64. Morgan Guar. Trust Co. v. Alexander Equities, Inc., 268 S.E.2d 660 (Ga. 1980).

(n34)Footnote 65. Price v. District of Columbia Rental Hous. Comm'r, 512 A.2d 263 (D.C. 1986).

(n35)Footnote 66. In re Gerlach's Estate, 72 A.2d 271 (Pa. 1950).

(n36)Footnote 67. In re Palm Gardens Nursing Home, 46 B.R. 685 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1985).

(n37)Footnote 68. Speka v. Speka, 268 P.2d 129 (Cal. App. 1954).

(n38)Footnote 69. Gates Rubber Co. v. Williford, 530 S.W.2d 11 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

(n39)Footnote 70. U.P.A. § 25(1).

(n40)Footnote 71. Diversified Fruit Farms v. Johnson, 58 S.W.2d 73 (Tex. Com. App. 1933).

(n41)Footnote 72. Webber v. Rosenberg, 64 N.E.2d 98 (Mass. 1945).

(n42)Footnote 73. Gorger v. Gorger, 555 P.2d 1 (Or. 1976) (ranch formerly owned by husband-wife partnership).

(n43)Footnote 74. Webber v. Rosenberg, 64 N.E.2d 98 (Mass. 1945) (written agreement distributing partnership property to former partners as tenants in common).

(n44)Footnote 75. Kraus v. Kraus, 164 N.E. 743 (N.Y. 1928).

(n45)Footnote 76. U.P.A. § 24(1).

(n46)Footnote 77. U.P.A. § 25(2)(a).

(n47)Footnote 78. U.P.A. § 25(2)(b).

(n48)Footnote 79. U.P.A. § 25(2)(c).

(n49)Footnote 80. U.P.A. § 25(2)(d)-(e).

(n50)Footnote 81. "U.P.A. Section 25(2) ... systematically strips from the individual parties every incident normally associated with ownership ... . In short, under the U.P.A. individual partners own the partnership in theory, but all the incidents of ownership are vested in the partnership." Melvin A. Eisenberg, An Introduction to Agency and Partnership 64 (1987). Harleysville Mut. Ins. Co. v. Packer, 60 F.3d 1116 (4th Cir. 1995) (under a state statute providing that the partner is co-owner of partnership property, the partner did not have such an ownership interest that he "owned" the property); Vannoy v. Thomas, 176 B.R. 758 (M.D.N.C. 1994) (partnership property was not part of a partner's estate in bankruptcy). See also In re Israel Halpern, 229 B.R. 67 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1999) (regarding tenancy in partnership).

(n51)Footnote 82. Ohio v. King, 460 N.E.2d 1143 (Ohio Ct. App. 1983); People v. Clayton, 728 P.2d 723 (Colo. 1986).

(n52)Footnote 83. State v. Birch, 675 P.2d 246 (Wash. Ct. App. 1984); superseded by statute, see State v. Webb, 824 P.2d 1257 (Wash. Ct. App. 1992).

(n53)Footnote 84. U.P.A. § 26; see also Mountain States Bank v. Irvin, 809 P.2d 1113 (Colo. Ct. App. 1991).

(n54)Footnote 85. Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 3.04 (1991).

(n55)Footnote 86. U.P.A. § 27; Farmers State Bank & Trust v. Mikesell, 554 N.E.2d 900 (Ohio Ct. App. 1988).

(n56)Footnote 87. U.P.A. § 28.

(n57)Footnote 88. U.P.A. § 18(f).

(n58)Footnote 89. U.P.A. § 27(1).

(n59)Footnote 90. U.P.A. § 28(1).

(n60)Footnote 91. See § 34.03(g)(3) infra.

(n61)Footnote 92. U.P.A. § 18(1).

(n62)Footnote 93. U.P.A. § 24(3).

(n63)Footnote 94. U.P.A. § 18(e).

(n64)Footnote 95. U.P.A. § 18(g).

(n65)Footnote 96. U.P.A. § 18(h).

(n66)Footnote 97. U.P.A. §§ 19 and 20.

(n67)Footnote 98. Morrison v. Ultican, 213 P.2d 617 (Wash. 1950) (partner held bound by partnership agreement that management of partnership should be exercised by partners representing a majority of the contributed capital).

(n68)Footnote 99. U.P.A. § 18(g).

(n69)Footnote 100. Temple v. White Lakes Plaza Assoc., 816 P.2d 399 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991).

(n70)Footnote 101. U.P.A. § 32(2).

(n71)Footnote 102. Bode v. Prettyman, 30 N.W.2d 627 (Neb. 1948); Stephen v. Phillips, 689 P.2d 939 (N.M. Ct. App. 1984); Omican, Inc. v. King, 688 S.W.2d 818 (Tenn. 1985); Putman v. Shoaf, 620 S.W.2d 510 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1981).

(n72)Footnote 103. Manufacturers Bldg. v. Heller, 235 N.W.2d 825 (Minn. 1975).

(n73)Footnote 104. Kraus v. Kraus, 164 N.E. 743 (N.Y. 1928).

(n74)Footnote 105. U.P.A. § 25(2)(b).

(n75)Footnote 106. U.P.A. § 18(g).

(n76)Footnote 107. U.P.A. § 27. Citizens First Nat'l Bank of N.J. v. Bluh, 656 A.2d 853 (N.J. Super. A.D. 1995) (partner held no separate interest in partnership assets and had only the right to encumber his interest in the partnership).

(n77)Footnote 108. Driesbach v. Eifler, 764 S.W.2d 631 (Ky. Ct. App. 1989).

(n78)Footnote 109. 6 Uniform Laws Annotated, Commissioners Note to § 25, 1969 Main Volume Comment, 1991.

(n79)Footnote 110. 6 Uniform Laws Annotated, Commissioners Note to § 25, 1969 Main Volume Comment, 1991.

(n80)Footnote 111. 6 Uniform Laws Annotated, Commissioners Note to § 25, 1969 Main Volume Comment, 1991.

(n81)Footnote 112. Jade, Inc. v. Benewald, 468 N.W.2d 138 (S.D. 1991).

(n82)Footnote 113. Bates County Nat'l Bank v. Wilson, 767 S.W.2d 101 (Mo. Ct. App. 1989); Columbia Mtg. Co. v.

Hsich, 708 P.2d 1226 (Wash. Ct. App. 1986); Farmers State Bank & Trust v. Mikesell, 554 N.E.2d 900 (Ohio Ct. App. 1988); Madison Nat'l Bank v. Newrath, 275 A.2d 495 (1971).

(n83)Footnote 114. U.P.A. § 18(g).

(n84)Footnote 115. U.P.A. § 27(1).

(n85)Footnote 116. U.P.A. § 27(1).

(n86)Footnote 117. U.P.A. § 27(2).

(n87)Footnote 118. Temple v. White Lakes Plaza Assoc., 816 P.2d 399 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991).

(n88)Footnote 119. U.P.A. § 27(1).

(n89)Footnote 120. "Partners traditionally had the right to veto any new additions to the partnership, referred to as delectus personae. In other words, partnership being a 'voluntary association,' each member of a partnership has the right to choose his associates." Harold G. Reuschlein and William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership 266-267 (2d ed. 1990).

(n90)Footnote 121. Temple v. White Lakes Plaza Assoc., 816 P.2d 399 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991).

(n91)Footnote 122. William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158, 164 (1915).

(n92)Footnote 123. Heydon v. Heydon, 1 Salkild 302, 91 Eng. Rep. 340 (1693).

(n93)Footnote 124. See supra § 34.02(b)(2).

(n94)Footnote 125. William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158, 164 (1915).

(n95)Footnote 126. Buell Cabinet Co. v. Sudduth, 608 F.2d 431 (10th Cir. 1979); Hilke v. Bank of Washington, 251 S.W.2d 963 (Mo. Ct. App. 1953).

(n96)Footnote 127. Morgan Guar. Trust Co. v. Alexander Equities, Inc., 268 S.E.2d 660 (Ga. 1980) (for a partnership to protect real property from judgment creditors of individual partners, title must be taken in the partnership name).

(n97)Footnote 128. In re Palm Gardens Nursing Home, 46 B.R. 685, 687 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1985). This is consistent with the view of the bankruptcy courts that a partnership is a legal entity, separate from the individual partners. See Resolution Trust Corp. v. Security Town Co., 745 F. Supp. 1216 (E.D. La. 1990).

(n98)Footnote 129. U.P.A. § 28(1).

(n99)Footnote 130. Alan M. Weinberger, Making Partners Pay Child Support: The Charging Order at 100, 27 Hous. L. Rev. 297, 317 (1990).

(n100)Footnote 131. U.P.A. § 28(1).

(n101)Footnote 132. U.P.A. § 27(1).

(n102)Footnote 133. While U.P.A. § 28(2) does not specifically provide for foreclosure, it does so inferentially by stating that "the interest charged may be redeemed at any time before foreclosure..."

(n103)Footnote 134. City of New York v. Bencivenga, 169 N.Y.S.2d 515 (1955).

(n104)Footnote 135. Ga. Code. Ann. § 14-8-28 comment (1989).

(n105)Footnote 136. U.P.A. § 28(2)(a)-(b).

(n106)Footnote 137. Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership § 3.05(f)(1) (1991).

(n107)Footnote 138. District of Columbia v. Riggs Nat'l Bank, 335 A.2d 238 (D.C. 1975).

(n108)Footnote 139. See William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act, 24 Yale L.J. 617 (1916).

(n109)Footnote 140. U.P.A. § 25(2)(d).

(n110)Footnote 141. See William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act, 24 Yale L.J. 617 (1916).

(n111)Footnote 142. District of Columbia v. Riggs Nat'l Bank, 335 A.2d 238 (D.C. 1975); Kilhoffer v. Zeis, 179 N.Y.S. 523 (1919).

(n112)Footnote 143. See U.P.A. §§ 31, 41 and 42.

(n113)Footnote 144. See U.P.A. §§ 31, 37, 38 and 40.

(n114)Footnote 145. U.P.A. § 25(2)(e).

(n115)Footnote 146. Kilhoffer v. Zeis, 179 N.Y.S. 523 (1919).

(n116)Footnote 147. See Driesbach v. Eifler, 764 S.W.2d 631 (Ky. Ct. App. 1989) (holding that wife, who had no interest in partnership assets, could not transfer any portion of partnership property).

(n117)Footnote 148. Warren v. Warren, 675 S.W.2d 371 (Ark. Ct. App. 1984).

(n118)Footnote 149. Temple v. Temple, 365 N.W.2d 561 (S.D. 1985). See Crimson v. Crimson, 34 S.W.3d 763 (Ark. App. 2000) (holding that the fair market value standard was the appropriate standard to be used).

(n119)Footnote 150. Stern v. Stern, 331 A.2d 257 (N.J. 1975); Brooks v. Brooks, 756 P.2d 161 (Wash. Ct. App. 1988); but see, Travis v. Travis, 794 P.2d 96 (Okla. 1990) (refusing to award goodwill value).

(n120)Footnote 151. Hertz v. Hertz, 657 P.2d 1169 (N.M. 1983).

(n121)Footnote 152. Glover v. Glover, 689 S.W.2d 592 (Ark. Ct. App. 1985).

(n122)Footnote 153. Temple v. White Lakes Plaza Assoc., 816 P.2d 399 (Kan. Ct. App. 1991).

(n123)Footnote 154. See Qualicare-Walsh, Inc. v. Ward, 947 F.2d 823 (6th Cir. 1991); Palmer v. S.B. Fuqua, 641 F.2d 1146 (5th Cir. 1981); Wingate v. Coombs, 379 S.E.2d 304 (Va. 1989).

(n124)Footnote 155. See U.P.A. § 25.

(n125)Footnote 156. U.P.A. § 26; Pyle v. Wolf Corp., 354 F. Supp. 346 (D. Or. 1972) (ownership of limited partnership interest in oil and gas rights is not real property under U.L.P.A. but is considered personal property); Potter v. The Homestead Preserv. Assoc., 412 S.E.2d 1 (N.C. 1992).

(n126)Footnote 157. Jacobs v. Thomas, 600 A.2d 1378 (Conn. App. Ct. 1991); Mattikow v. Sudarsky, 162 N.E. 296 (N.Y. 1928).

(N127)Footnote 158. Forward v. Beucler, 702 F. Supp. 582 (E.D. Va. 1988); Wingate v. Coombs, 379 S.E.2d 304 (Va. 1989); Citizens Bank of Clovis v. Williams, 630 P.2d 1228 (N.M. 1981).

(n128)Footnote 159. Liffiton v. DiBlasi, 566 N.Y.S.2d 148 (1991); Walsh v. Rechler, 542 N.Y.S.2d 262 (1989); Mattikow v. Sudarsky, 162 N.E. 296 (N.Y. 1928).

(n129)Footnote 160. Ludwig v. Walter, 331 S.E.2d 177 (N.C. Ct. App. 1985) (Statute of Frauds applicable to alleged promise by defendant partner to convey to plaintiff partner an interest in real property in exchange for cash contribution); Della Ratta v. Broadneck Dev. Corp., 410 A.2d 32 (Md. 1980).

(n130)Footnote 161. Della Ratta v. Broadneck Dev. Corp., 410 A.2d 32 (Md. 1980); Liffiton v. DiBlasi, 566 N.Y.S.2d 148 (1991).

(n131)Footnote 162. U.P.A. § 25.

(n132)Footnote 163. Block v. Lea, 688 P.2d 724 (Haw. Ct. App. 1984).

(n133)Footnote 164. Marth v. Edwards, 465 N.W.2d 248 (Wis. Ct. App. 1990) (state statute required disclosure of principal and agent in contract for sale of real property). Marth v. Edwards was overruled by Wyss v. Albee, 193 Wis. 2d 101, 532 N.W.2d 444 (1995).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.04

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.04 Conflicting Interests in the U.P.A. Approach.

When the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws first set out to develop the U.P.A., an important motivation was to clarify the rights of creditors and partners in specific partnership property by adopting the entity theory that a partnership was a legal person. n165 The original draft of the U.P.A. defined a partnership as "a legal person formed by the association of two or more individuals for the purpose of carrying on business with a view to profit." n166 However, following the death of the original chairman and principal drafter, Dean James Barr Ames of Harvard, the new chairman and principal drafter, Dean William Draper Lewis of the University of Pennsylvania, convinced the Commissioners to reject the entity theory and adopt the aggregate theory. Lewis felt that adopting the entity theory would change "existing law in a matter of vital importance, because the [entity] theory itself is based on an assumption false in fact, namely that third persons dealing with a partnership do not deal directly with the partners as principals. They do." n167

The Commissioners were persuaded by Lewis's reasoning and the result is the U.P.A. as it exists today. A criticism of the U.P.A. from its inception has been that while the Act defines the partnership as an aggregate of individuals, n168 much of the remainder of the Act treats the partnership as an entity. n169

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 165. William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158, 164 (1915).

(n2)Footnote 166. William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158, 165 (1915).

(n3)Footnote 167. William D. Lewis, The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism, 29 Harv. L. Rev. 158, 166 (1915). See also Harold G. Reuschlein and William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership 248-249, 264 (2d ed. 1990).

(n4)Footnote 168. See U.P.A. § 6.

(n5)Footnote 169. This conflict was identified by Judson Crane as early as 1915. Professor Crane noted that "Sec. 6 defines partnership as 'an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit.' The term

'association' is ambiguous -- an association may or may not be treated as a legal person. Sec. 8 is entitled 'Partnership Property,' and this term is used continually throughout the Act. It implies ownership by the partnership, an entity, distinct from the partners. Sec. 8(3) enables the partnership to take title to real estate in the partnership name, and such estate can be reconveyed only in the partnership name. This would seem to make the partnership as such the subject of rights, and thus a legal person... . These extracts seem more consistent with the entity than with the aggregate view of the nature of the partnership and illustrate the difficulty, if not impossibility, not only of writing and talking about the partnership, but of formulating its rights and obligations without treating it as a legal person." Judson A. Crane, The Uniform Partnership Act - A Criticism, 28 Harv. L. Rev. 762, 770-771 (1915).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.05

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.05 Revised Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Propertyn170

[Go To Supp]

Criticism of the U.P.A., which began as early as 1915, has continued unabated. n171 In 1987 the NCCUSL appointed a drafting committee to extensively revise the U.P.A. The R.U.P.A. currently is in approved final draft. n172

The R.U.P.A. would completely revise portions of the U.P.A. while leaving other portions unchanged. Three basic policy decisions were reached early in the process. The first, of basic importance to partnership property rights, is a movement away from the aggregate theory toward the entity theory. n173

In one short sentence the R.U.P.A. resolves nearly 80 years of debate by clearly providing that "[a] partnership is an entity." n174 The official comment states that this "is intended to allay previous concerns that a deed is necessary to convey title from an "old' partnership to a "new' partnership when there is a change in the cast of partners." n175 R.U.P.A. § 203 defines partnership property by providing that "[p]roperty transferred to or otherwise acquired by a partnership is property of the partnership and not of the partners individually." The intention of this definition is to state clearly what was the result of U.P.A. § 25, that property belongs to the partnership as an entity. n176 R.U.P.A. § 204 is designed to deal with the problem of when property is acquired by the partnership. R.U.P.A. § 204 is in part based on U.P.A. § 8 but requires that the exact partnership name be used in the instrument transferring title. n177 R.U.P.A. § 203(c) creates a rebuttable presumption that property belongs to the partnership "if purchased with partnership assets, even if not acquired in the partnership name," when there is an indication "of the person's capacity as a partner or of the existence of a partnership." R.U.P.A. § 204 proceeds further to create a presumption, again rebuttable, that when there is no "indication in the instrument transferring title to the property of the person's capacity as a partner or of the existence of a partnership and without use of partnership assets, [the property] is presumed to be separate property, even if used for partnership purposes."

R.U.P.A. § 501 abolishes the concept of tenancy in partnership, because the concept is rendered superfluous. R.U.P.A. § 501 provides that "a partner is not a co-owner of partnership property and has no interest that can be transferred, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, in partnership property." This is "intended to state more directly the substance of the intended rule: it is the entity that owns the asset and not the individual partners pro rata." n178 Combined with

R.U.P.A. § 203, § 501 continues the current rule that a partner's interest in partnership property is not subject to exemptions, allowances or rights of a partner's spouse, heirs, or next of kin. n179

R.U.P.A. § 502(1) clarifies U.P.A. § 26 by providing that the "only transferable interest of a partner in the partnership is the partner's interest in distributions. This interest is personal property." R.U.P.A. § 503(a)(3) continues the provisions of U.P.A. § 27 by stating that a transfer does not entitle the transferee to participate in management, to require information or an account of partnership transactions. The transferee is entitled only to receive distributions to which the transferor would otherwise have been entitled. n180

R.U.P.A. § 504 is intended to clarify the charging order remedy. n181 R.U.P.A. § 504(b) clarifies the charging order remedy by expressly providing it is a lien on the transferable interest of the partner and, as such, may be foreclosed by court order. The purchaser at the foreclosure sale is given the rights of a transferee. n182 As in U.P.A. § 28(2) the charged interest may be redeemed at any time prior to foreclosure. n183 R.U.P.A. § 504(e) provides that the charging order is the exclusive remedy by which a judgment creditor of a partner may satisfy its judgment against the debtor's partnership interest, contrary to decisions of some courts allowing garnishment and injunction. n184

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 170. "The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws" ("NCCUSL") first promulgated the Revised Uniform Partnership Act ("RUPA") in 1994, and pronounced it ready for adoption by the states. Revised Unif. P'ship Act (amended 1997), 6 U.L.A. 35-152 (Supp. 2000). A majority of the states have adopted some version of the RUPA, including section 403, which contains partner disclosure obligations and information rights, and section 404, which sets forth general standards for partner conduct. See id., 6 U.L.A. 1 (providing a table listing states that have adopted the RUPA); Robert W. Hillman, Allan W. Vestal & Donald J. Weidner, "The Revised Uniform Partnership Act (2000)." William J. Callison and Allan W. Vestal, "They've Created a Lamb with Mandibles of Death: Secrecy, Disclosure, and Fiduciary Duties in Limited Liability Firms." 76 Ind. L.J. 271, note 1 (2001).

(n2)Footnote 171. See Joseph H. Drake, Partnership Entity and Tenancy in Partnership: The Struggle for a Definition, 15 Mich. L. Rev. 609 (1917); A. Ladru Jensen, Is a Partnership Under the Uniform Partnership Act an Aggregate or an Entity?, 16 Vand. L. Rev. 377 (1963); Jeremy E. Goldstein and John Goode, Entity and Aggregate Theories of Partnership: The Need for Clarification, 1 Prob. and Prop. 14 (Nov./Dec. 1987); and Steven A. Waters and Joni Gaylor, Partnerships, 45 Sw. L.J. 553 (1991).

(n3)Footnote 172. The states that have adopted the Revised Uniform Partnership Act are: Alabama (Ala. Code §§ 10-8A-101 et seq.); Alaska (A.S. §§ 32.06.201 et seq.); Arizona (Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 29-1001 et seq.); Arkansas (A.R.S. §§ 29-1001 et seq.); California (Cal. Corp. Code § 15611 et seq.); Colorado (Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 7-64-101 et seq.); Connecticut (Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 34-300 et seq.); Delaware (6 Del. C. §§ 15-101 et seq.); District of Columbia (D.C. Official Code, 2001 Ed. §§ 33-101.1 et seq.); Florida (Fla. Stat. §§ 620-.8100 et seq.); Georgia (Ga. Code Ann. §§ 14-9-101 et seq.); Hawaii (H.R.S. §§ 425-101 et seq.); Idaho (Ida. Code Ann. §§ 53-3-101 et seq.); Iowa (Iowa Code §§ 486A.101 et seq.); Kansas (K.S.A. §§ 56a-101 et seq.); Maryland (Md. Code Ann. §§ 9A-101 et seq.); Minnesota (Minn. Stat. §§ 323A.1-01 et seq.); Montana (Mont. Code Ann. §§ 35-10-101 et seq.); Nebraska (Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 67-301 et seq.); New Jersey (N.J.S.A. §§ 42:1A-1 et seq.); New Mexico (NMSA 1978 §§ 54-1-47, 54-1A-101 et seq.); North Dakota (N.D. Cent. Code §§ 45-13-01 et seq.); Oklahoma (Okla. Stat. tit. 54 § 1-100 et seq.); Oregon (Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 67.005 et seq.); South Dakota (SDCL §§ 48-7A-101 et seq.); Tennessee (T.C.A. §§ 66-1-101 et seq.); Texas (Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. Art. 6132b-1.01 et seq.); Vermont (11 V.S.A. §§ 3201 to 3313); Virgin Islands (26 V.I.C. §§ 1 to 230); Virginia (Va. Code Ann. §§ 50-73.79 et seq.); Washington (Wash Rev. Code. 25.05-005); West Virginia (W. VA. Code 47B-1-1 et seq.); and Wyoming (Wyo. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-21-101 et seq.).

(n4)Footnote 173. See Donald J. Weidner, Three Policy Decisions Animate Revision of Uniform Partnership Act, 46 Bus. Law. 427 (1991). The remaining decisions deal with partnership breakups and the importance of a partnership agreement.

(n5)Footnote 174. R.U.P.A. § 201. The entity theory of partnership property as well as other concepts of the Revised Act are discussed in an article by Matthew G. Dore, Partnership Law and Practice Under the New Iowa Uniform Partnership Act, 47 Drake L. Rev. 497 (1999).

See also the discussion by Walthall, Howard P. Sr., "What Do You Mean 'we' kemo sabe? Partnership Law and Client Responsibilities of Office Sharing Lawyers", Cumb. L. Rev. 28 (1997/1998) 601. See also the discussion by Powell, Paul, "Dissociating the Fiduciary: Duty Revisions and the Resulting Confusion in Idaho's New Partnership Law, Idaho L. Rev. 36 (1999) 145 which discussed fiduciary duties owned by a partnership under the new Act.

(n6)Footnote 175. R.U.P.A. comment to § 201.

(n7)Footnote 176. R.U.P.A. comment to § 203.

(n8)Footnote 177. R.U.P.A. comment to § 204.

(n9)Footnote 178. R.U.P.A. comment to § 501.

(n10)Footnote 179. R.U.P.A. comment to § 501. See also Cheesecake Factory, Inc. v. Baines, 964 P. 2d 183 (N.M. 1998) (discussing the New Mexico Act, which became effective July 1, 1997, and noting that in this case the seller's reliance on the representation of partnership was reasonable); and Creel v. Lilly, 729 A2d 385 (Md. 1999) (holding that RUPA applied only when the agreement was silent on a particular point and neither under the agreement nor under the Act was a sale of all partnership assets required on the death of a partner). Under the Revised Uniform Partnership Act there is no "wrongful" dissolution and thus only when a partner wrongly disassociates from the partnership can the remaining partners sue for damages. Horizon/CMS Healthcare Corp. v. Southern Oaks Health Care, Inc., 732 So. 2d 1156 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 5th Dist. 1999).

(n11)Footnote 180. R.U.P.A. § 503(b).

(n12)Footnote 181. R.U.P.A. comment to § 504.

(n13)Footnote 182. R.U.P.A. § 504(b).

(n14)Footnote 183. R.U.P.A. § 504(b).

(n15)Footnote 184. See § 34.03(g)(3) supra.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 34 TENANCY IN PARTNERSHIP

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 34.06

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger Saint Louis University School of Law

§ 34.06 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Bromberg, Alan R. and Larry E. Ribstein. Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnership. 1991.

Eisenberg, Melvin A. An Introduction to Agency and Partnership. 1987.

Hillman, Robert W., Allan W. Vestal & Donald J. Weidner, The Revised Uniform Partnership Act (2000).

Moynihan, Cornelius J. Introduction to the Law of Real Property. 2d ed. 1988.

Reuschlein, Harold G. and William A. Gregory. The Law of Agency and Partnership. 2d ed. 1990.

Articles

Bader, Mary B. and Hauff, David J. "Registration and Operation of North Dakota and Minnesota Limited Liability Partnerships." N. Dak. L. Rev. Vol. 72 (1995) 555.

Callison, J. William and Allan W. Vestal, " 'They've Created a Lamb with Mandibles of Death': Secrecy, Disclosure, and Fiduciary Duties in Limited Liability Firms. 76 Ind. L.J. 271, note 1 (2001).

Cane, Marilyn B. and Franco, Helen R. "Limited Liability in Registered Limited Liability Partnerships: How Does the Florida RLIP Measure Up?" Nova L. Rev. Vol. 20 (1996) 1299.

Clark, Jr., William H. "What the Business World Is Looking for in an Organizational Form: The Pennsylvania Experience." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 32 (1997) 149 (noting that the proposed bill was not enacted).

Comment, "Breaking Up Is Hard to Do: Allocating Fees from the Unfinished Business of a Professional Corporation." U. Chi. L. Rev. Vol. 64 (1997) 1367.

Comment, "Successor Liability for Partnerships in Texas: A Comparison Under the Texas Uniform Partnership Act and the Texas Revised Partnership Act." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1996) 1213.

Cooper, Steven M. "The Texas Revised Uniform Partnership Act and The Texas Uniform Partnership Act: Some Significant Differences." Tex. B. J. Vol. 57 (1994) 828.

Crane, Judson A. "The Uniform Partnership Act - A Criticism." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1915) 762.

Crane, Judson A. "Twenty Years Under the Uniform Partnership Act." U. Pitt. L. Rev. Vol. 2 (1936) 129.

Dalley, Paula J. "The Law of Partner Expulsions: Fiduciary Duty and Good Faith,"Cardozo L. Rev. 21 (October, 1999) 181.

Derrick, Gary W. "Oklahoma Limited Liability Companies and Limited Liability Partnerships." Okla. City U. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1997) 643.

Dore, Matthew G. "Partnership Law and Practice under the New Iowa Uniform Partnership Act," Drake L. Rev. 47 (1999) 497.

Drake, Joseph H. "Partnership Entity and Tenancy in Partnership: The Struggle for a Definition." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1917) 609.

Frost, Stephen G. "Illinois' Revised Uniform Partnership Act," 90 Ill. B.J. 644 (December, 2002).

Goldstein, Jeremy E. and John Goode. "Entity and Aggregate Theories of Partnership: The Need for Clarification." *Pro*bate and Property Vol. 1. (1987) 14.

Irvine, J. Nelson. "Partnership Law Gets a New Look In Tennessee," 38 Tenn. B.J. 14 (April, 2002).

Jensen, A. Ladru. "Is a Partnership Under the Uniform Partnership Act an Aggregate or an Entity." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1963) 377.

Kristinik, Don L. III. "Transferring Title to Partnership Real Property Under the UPA and Proposed RUPA." *Real Pro*b. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 27 (1992) 143.

Kristinik, Don L. III. "Transferring Title to Real Property Under the UPA and Proposed RUPA." Real Prop. Prob. And Tr. J. Vol. 27 (1992) 143.

Larson, John W. "Florida's New Partnership Law: The Revised Uniform Partnership Act and Limited Liability Company." Fla. St. U. L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1995) 201.

Lewis, William D. "The Uniform Partnership Act." Yale L.J. Vol. 26 (1916) 617.

Lewis, William D. "The Uniform Partnership Act -- A Reply to Mr. Crane's Criticism." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 29 (1915) 158.

Merrill, Edward S. "Partnership Property and Partnership Authority Under the Revised Uniform Partnership Act." Bus.

Law. Vol. 49 (1993) 83.

Merrill, Thomas W. and Henry E. Smith, "Optimal Standardization in the Law of Property: The Numerus Clausus Principle." 110 Yale L.J. 1 (2000).

Neeley, Sally S. "Partnerships and Partners and Limited Liability Companies and Members in Bankruptcy Proposals for Reform." Am. Bank. L. J. Vol. 71 (1997) 271.

Powell, Paul, "Dissociating the Fiduciary: Duty Revisions and the Resulting Confusion in Idaho's New Partnership Law, Idaho L. Rev. 36 (1999) 145.

Rosin, Gary S. "The Entity-Aggregate Dispute: Conceptualism and Functionalism in Partnership Law." Ark. L. Rev. Vol. 42 (1989) 395.

Subcommittee on the Prototype Limited Liability Partnership Agreement Formed Under the Uniform Partnership Act, "Prototype Partnership Agreement for a Limited Liability Partnership Formed Under the Uniform Partnership Act," 58 Bus. Law. 689 (February, 2003).

Survey of 1996 Alabama Legislation, Alabama L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1997) 769.

Talley, Eric. "Taking the 'I' out of 'team': Intra-firm monitoring and the Content of Fiduciary Duties, J. Corp. L. 24 (Summer 1999) 1001.

U.P.A. Revision Subcommittee of the Committee on Partnership and Unincorporated Business Associations. "Should the Uniform Partnership Act Be Revised?" Bus. Law. Vol. 43 (1987) 121.

Waters, Steven A. and Joni Gaylor. "Partnerships." Sw. L.J. Vol. 45 (1991) 553.

Weidner, Donald J. "A Perspective to Reconsider Partnership Law." Fla. St. U. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1988) 1.

Weidner, Donald J. "Three Policy Decisions Animate Revision of Uniform Partnership Act." Bus. Law. Vol. 46 (1991) 427.

Weidner, Donald J. and John W. Larson. "The Revised Uniform Partnership Act: The Reporters' Overview." Bus. Law. Vol. 49 (1993) 1.

Weinberger, Alan M. "Making Partners Pay Child Support -- The Charging Order at 100." Hous. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1990) 297.

Williams, Laurens. "The Uniform Partnership Act Comes to Nebraska." Neb. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1943) 215.

Wurster, Michelle L. "Successor Liability for Partnerships in Texas: A Comparison Under the Texas Uniform Partnership Act and the Texas Revised Partnership Act." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1996) 1213.

Annotations

Annotation, Character of Tenancy Created by Owner's Conveyance to Himself and Another, or to Another Alone, of an Undivided Interest, 44 A.L.R. 2d 595.

Annotation, Construction, Application, and Effect of Uniform Partnership Act, § 25(2)(b), Relating to Nonassignability of Partner's Right in Specific Partnership Property, 39 A.L.R. 2d 1365.

Annotation, Constructive Trust in Favor of Partnership Where One Partner Purchases Real Estate with His Own Funds, 44 A.L.R. 2d 519.

Annotation, Effect of § 26 of Uniform Partnership Act as Converting Realty into Personalty, 80 A.L.R. 2d 1107.

Annotation, Evaluation of Interest in Law Firm or Medical Partnership for Purposes of Division of Property, 74 A.L.R. 3d 621.

Annotation, Lessee of Interest of Individual Becoming Partnership Asset of Firm Subsequently Formed, 37 A.L.R. 2d 1076.

Annotation, Property Rights Arising from Relationship of Couple Cohabiting Without Marriage, 3 A.L.R. 4th 13.

Annotation, When Real Estate Owned by Partner Before Formation of Partnership Will Be Deemed to Have Become Assets of Firm, 45 A.L.R. 2d 1009.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 34 Tenancy in Partnership

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 34.01

Supp. to § 34.01 Introduction to Tenancy in Partnership

[Go To Main]

Add:

Daly v. Messina, 2008 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 4401 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dep't 2008) (court ruled that the parties held property as tenants in partnership and not as tenants in common).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 34 Tenancy in Partnership

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 34.02

Supp. to § 34.02 Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Rights.

[Go To Main]

§ 34.02(b) Common Law Approach to Partners' Property Interests. § 20-718.103(10) to Fla. Stat.

§ 34.02(b)(1) Partnership Property Held as Tenants in Common

Add:

But see, Powell v. Powell, 325 B.R. 6 (N.D. Alabama 2005) (debtor who owned partnership property as tenant in partnership did not hold undivided interest as tenant in common, joint tenant or tenant by the entirety; the tenancy in this case was not joint, because the partners held disproportionate shares of the partnership).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 34 Tenancy in Partnership

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 34.03

Supp. to § 34.03 Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 34.03(a) Definition of Tenancy in Partnership [Go To Main]

Add:

See, Peck v. Bentas, 16 LCR 667 (Mass. Land Ct. 2008) (discussing the tenancy in partnership created by Massachusett's Partnership Act).

§ 34.03(c) Distinguishing Partnership Property from Separate Property. [Go To Main]

§ 34.03(c)(2) Use, Occupancy and Possession.

Add new note 51.1 at the end of the subsection: n51.1

§ 34.03(c)(3) Property Acquired with Partnership Funds or Credit.

Add:

See Eckert v. Eckert, 425 N.W.2d 914 (N.D. 1988) .

See e.g. Gorelick v. Montanaro, 990 A.2d 371 (Conn. App. 2010) ; Michael A. Grassmueck, Inc. v. Wurst, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3400 (D. Or. 2009) .

§ 34.03(c)(4) Property Acquired in Partnership Name

Add:

Michael A. Grassmueck, Inc. v. Wurst, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 3400 (D. Or. 2009) ; Beal v. McGuire, 216 P.3d 1154 (Alaska 2009) .

Add:

In re Powell, 325 B.R. 6 (N.D. Ala. 2005) (partner owned partnership property as tenant in partnership and not an undivided interest as tenant in common, joint tenant, or tenant by the entirety).

§ 34.03(e) Partner's Interest in the Partnership. [Go To Main]

Add:

Kirk v. NASA Corridor L.P., 346 Fed. Appx. 545 (11th Cir. 2009) .

Add:

See In re S. Canaan Cellular Invs., 2010 Bankr. LEXIS 1022 (E.D. Pa.2010) .

§ 34.03(g)(2) Assignability.

Add:

See Hammond Oil Co. v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 181 N.E. 583 (N.Y. 1932) .

§ 34.03(g)(3) Creditors' Rights.

Correction:

Under the COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH section, add a close parenthesis ()) after interest

§ 34.03(g)(5) Marital Interest, Rights of Divorced Spouses, Heirs or Next of Kin.

Add to note after Travis citation:

Cole v. Cole, 110 S.W.3d 310 (Ark. Ct. App. 2003) (holding that the value is not binding on a non-shareholding spouse).

Change Cole v. Cole, 110 S.W.3d 310 (Ark. Ct. App. 2003) to Cole v. Cole, 110 S.W.3d 310 (Ark. App. 2003)

Add:

Barton v. Barton, 639 S.E.2d 481 (Ga. 2007) (holding that the buy-sell agreement established by a closely-held partnership is not binding on the non-shareholder spouse and calling this the view of a "clear majority of courts").

Add:

But see Mitchell v. Mitchell, 732 P.2d 208 (Ariz. 1987) (holding that an agreement is a factor but not conclusive in determining the value of the partnership interest).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 51.1. See Cyrus v. Cyrus, 64 N.W.2d 538 (Minn.1954) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 34 Tenancy in Partnership

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 34.05

Supp. to § 34.05 Revised Uniform Partnership Act Approach to Partnership Property.

§§ 515A.1.101-515A.4-117 to MINN. STAT. ANN.

Add:

See also Clay B. Wortham, Revised Uniform Partnership Act: Anomalies of a Simplified, Modernized Partnership Law, 92 KY. L.J. 1083 (2004).

Add:

See David J. Dietrich, Mandatory Sales of Joint Ownership Property Under the Revised Uniform Partnership Act, 18 Prob. and Prop. 9 (Sep./Oct. 2004).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 34 Tenancy in Partnership

4-34 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 34.06

Supp. to § 34.06 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Books

Christopher Anglim, Joined in Common Law Enterprise: A Bibliography on the Origins of Early Anglo-American Partnership Law

Add to Articles

Anderson, Mark. "Not Our Grandparents' Partnership Statute." Advoc. (Idaho) Vol. 46 (2003) 12.

Davidson, Nestor. "Standardization and Pluralism in Property Law," 61 Vand. L. Rev. 1597 (November, 2008) (stating that the tenancy in partnership has been surpassed largely by statutory forms).

Dietrich, David J. "Mandatory Sales of Joint Ownership Property Under the Revised Uniform Partnership Act," Probate and Property Vol. 18 (2004) 9.

Hecker, Edwin W. "The Kansas Revised Uniform Partnership Act," J. Kan. B. Ass'n Vol. 68 (1999) 16.

Maurice, John Morey. "A New Personal Limited Liability Shield for General Partners: But Not All Partners Are Treated the Same," 43 Gonz. L. Rev. 369 (2007-2008).

Wortham, Clay B. "Revised Uniform Partnership Act: Anomalies of a Simplified, Modernized Partnership Law," Ky. L. J. Vol. 92 (2004) 1083.

Add to Annotations

Annotation, Sale or Transfer of Interest by Partner as Dissolving Partnership, 75 A.L.R.2d 1038 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 35.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.syn Synopsis to Chapter 35: TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

§ 35.01 Introduction to the Chapter.

Alaska Stat. §§ 34Outline of the Chapter.

07Definition.

§ 20A-718.401 to FLA. STAT.History of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

§ 20a-719.401 to FLA. STAT.Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Other Real Property Interests.

§ 35.05(a) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy in Common.

§ 35.05(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Joint Tenancy.

§ 35.05(c) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy by the Entirety.

§ 20A-718.103(13) to FLA. STAT.Incidents of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

§ 35.06(a) Possession by Coparceners.

§ 35.06(b) Accounting and Contribution Among Coparceners.

§ 35.06(c) Actions by Coparceners.

§ 35.06(d) Inter Vivos Conveyances.

§ 35.06(e) Curtesy and Dower on Tenancies in Coparcenary.

§ 35.07 Partition of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

§ 35.07(a) Voluntary Partition.

§ 35.07(b) Compulsory Partition.

§ 35.07(c) Voidable Partitions.

§ 35.07(d) "Hotchpot."

§ 35.08 Status of Tenancy in Coparcenary in the United States Today.

§ 35.08(a) In General.

§ 35.08(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary in Statutes.

§ 35.09 Bibliography.

Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley
Cumberland School of Law
Samford University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.01

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.01 Introduction to the Chapter.

Tenancy in coparcenary is one of the five types of concurrent estates known to the common law. The other four types of concurrent estates, joint tenancy (supra Ch. 31), tenancy in common (supra Ch. 32), tenancy by the entirety (supra Ch. 33), and tenancy in partnership (supra Ch. 34) are of modern legal significance. Tenancy in coparcenary, where that terminology is used in modern statutes in the United States, is hardly distinguishable from tenancy in common. Therefore, the discussion in this chapter will be more of historical significance and interest than of modern application.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.02

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.02 Outline of the Chapter.

This chapter discusses the tenancy in coparcenary from a historical viewpoint and the modern significance of the tenancy. Tenancy in coparcenary is defined in § 35.03. The history of coparcenary is discussed in § 35.04. In § 35.05 coparcenary's distinctive features are compared to those of other concurrent estates. Following this historical review, § 35.06 examines the incidents of coparcenary. The incident from which coparcenary derives its name is considered in § 35.07, which explores the methods of partition dating from the time of Littleton in the fifteenth century. Concluding the chapter is § 35.08 surveying the use of coparcenary terminology in modern American state statutes. This section also summarizes the treatment of coparcenary in modern American cases.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.03

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.03 Definition.

"Tenancy in coparcenary" refers to the early common law concurrent estate that was created when inheritable lands descended from a common ancestor to two or more persons who held the lands as one heir. The coheirs were known as "coparceners" n1 or "parceners" n2 because each could compel the partition of the land. n3 A tenancy in coparcenary was created only by descent and never by purchase and arose by operation of the common law or of a particular custom.

A tenancy in coparcenary by the common law arose when a person died owning inheritable land but without a male heir. The common law's system of primogeniture dictated that the eldest son be the heir. When no male heir was available, the decedent's female heirs of the nearest degree inherited as tenants in coparcenary and the coparceners constituted only a single heir. For example, if the decedent had daughters, but no male heir, the daughters inherited as coparceners. Similarly, if the decedent had no daughters, then the decedent's sisters inherited as coparceners. Likewise, if no sisters or daughters existed, then the decedent's aunts inherited as coparceners. n4 Males could also be coparceners by the common law if it happened that a male inherited from an original female coparcener. For example, when a landowner with only two daughters died, the daughters were coparceners. If one of the daughters died leaving a son as heir, that son and his aunt would then hold as coparceners. n5

A tenancy in coparcenary by particular custom was created in those areas of England, such as the county of Kent, which recognized the gavelkind descent of lands rather than primogeniture. Under the custom of gavelkind, when a person died leaving several sons, the inheritable land descended to all the sons, who inherited the lands as tenants in coparcenary. n6

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. The terms "coparcener" and "parcener" were adopted from the Old French "parconier," meaning "sharer" and the French "parcon" and Latin "partition-em" meaning a "parting" or "division." See 3 The Oxford English Dictionary 901 (1989).

(n2)Footnote 2. See 11 The Oxford English Dictionary 216 (1989).

(n3)Footnote 3. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *189.

(n4)Footnote 4. Littleton, Tenures § 242.

(n5)Footnote 5. Coke on Littleton *164b.

(n6)Footnote 6. Littleton, Tenures § 265.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.04

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.04 History of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

While the terms "coparceners" and "parceners" are found in modern statutes, n7 the estate of tenancy in coparcenary generally has been relegated to obscurity by modern property authorities, who devote little or no attention to the topic. n8 That the tenancy in coparcenary is a "relic of the dim past" n9 makes a discussion of its history particularly appropriate.

Before the Norman Conquest, various local customs determined who should be heir to land. n10 It is not clear how widespread the custom was, but apparently before the Conquest a common form of inheritance was not by the eldest son under primogeniture but by all the sons or daughters who took as one heir under coparcenary. n11 Although customs of common inheritance were eventually replaced in most of England by primogeniture, common inheritance remained the custom in Kent, where it was called "gavelkind"; in 1926 n12 both primogeniture and gavelkind were abolished in England. At least by the time of Glanville in the twelfth century, primogeniture was the primary form of inheritance except where the land was "anciently partible" by custom, in which case the land was divided equally among all the sons, n13 creating coparceners by particular custom. More commonly, coparceners arose by operation of the common law. This occurred when one died leaving only female heirs among whom the inheritance was divided. n14

The feudal lord's interest in the incidents of tenure was influential in the development of the procedure by which land was inherited. n15 Originally the eldest daughter (or her husband) was the only coparcener who represented the fee and who did homage to the feudal lord. The land was held in a "parage" tenure in which the younger sisters held their shares of the eldest sister and their service to the lord was done through her. n16 The advantage to the lord of this arrangement was that he looked to only one person for the service. The disadvantage was that he could not rightly claim the incidents of wardship and marriage from the younger sisters, since he did not take homage from them. Because the incidents of tenure, including wardship and marriage, eventually became more valuable to the lord than the services, another method of obtaining the benefit of the incidents developed. n17 By 1236 the king had already been taking homage and receiving the incidents of tenure from all the coparceners. n18 In that year the king set out the law "of whom do the younger sisters hold?" in a writ answering such an inquiry from the English in Ireland. The 1236 writ n19 explained that if the coparceners held in chief of the king, each must do homage to the king; if the coparceners held the lands of a mesne lord, then only the eldest did homage, with the younger sisters doing their services through the eldest. However, the mesne lord in the latter case had the wardships and marriages of all the coparceners. n20

In Bracton's day the law was as set forth in the writ of 1236; n21 however, Britton suggested that the lords accept homage from all the coparceners as the king did, so that the lords would not lose the wardships and marriages. n22 The law of parage began to disappear as the lords began to accept homage from all of the sisters. n23 Because the lords took homage from all the coparceners, the law came to recognize the interests of all the coparceners. n24

By the time of Littleton, the estate in coparcenary had achieved its full development. n25

In England the tenancy in coparcenary could be created only by descent. In 1926 estates created by descent, whether created by the common law or by particular custom, were abolished, so that when a person holding land in fee simple died intestate, a tenancy in coparcenary no longer resulted. n26 However, the abolition did not affect the descent of lands held in fee tail. n27 Therefore, in England it is still possible for coparcenary to arise when entailed lands devolve on female coheirs. In that case the interests of the coparceners are equitable entailed interests in the proceeds of the sale of the land that is held in trust for sale. n28

Because primogeniture does not exist and because the tenancy in common and the tenancy in coparcenary have become almost indistinguishable, the tenancy in coparcenary is of little importance in the United States. The terminology of coparcenary is still found in the statutes, n29 but no distinction from a tenancy in common is apparent in its treatment. n30

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 7. See § 35.08(a) infra.

(n2)Footnote 8. Statements reflecting the treatment of coparcenary by a few of those authorities follow:

"Also classifiable as cotenancy is the estate in coparcenary, which was known at common law, but is virtually obsolete under modern statutes whereby joint heirs hold as tenants in common." 20 Am. Jur. 2d Cotenancy and Joint Ownership § 1 (1965). "Rarely mentioned in the cases as a separate form of ownership, coparcenary is a relic of the dim past now indistinguishable in its incidents from tenants in common." David Thomas, Tenancy in Common, Tenancy in Partnership, and Tenancy in Coparcenary, in Powell on Real Property(R), ch. 50, § 50.09 (originally P 609) (Michael Allan Wolf, ed. Matthew Bender). "As estates descend in every state to all the children equally, there is no substantial difference left between coparceners and tenants in common ... and the technical distinction between coparcenary and estates in common may be considered as essentially extinguished in the United States." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 376 (12th ed. 1873).

(n3)Footnote 9. David Thomas, Tenancy in Common, Tenancy in Partnership, and Tenancy in Coparcenary, in Powell on Real Property(R), ch. 50, § 50.09 (originally P 609) (Michael Allan Wolf, ed. Matthew Bender).

(n4)Footnote 10. Stroud Francis Charles Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 11 (2d ed. 1981).

(n5)Footnote 11. John Hamilton Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 303, 306 (3d ed. 1990); Stroud Francis Charles Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 11 (2d ed. 1981).

(n6)Footnote 12. Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925; Stroud Francis Charles Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 11 (2d ed. 1981).

(n7)Footnote 13. The Treatise on the Laws and Customs of the Realm of England Commonly Called Glanvill 75 (George Derek Gordon Hall ed. 1965).

(n8)Footnote 14. Id. at 76.

(n9)Footnote 15. 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law 278 (2d ed. 1898).

(n10)Footnote 16. Id. at 276. The coparceners inherited as one heir and held their shares "in parage," meaning that the eldest only was tenant with respect to the lord, with the other coparceners holding their shares by the eldest. The younger coparceners owed no services or incidents to the eldest; though they held of the elder, the younger were somehow also equal to the eldest. See John Hamilton Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 306 (3d ed. 1990).

(n11)Footnote 17. 3 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 174 (reprint 1973).

(n12)Footnote 18. Id.

(n13)Footnote 19. The writ is referred to as Stratum Hiberniae de Coheredibus. 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law 277 (2d ed. 1898).

(n14)Footnote 20. Id.

(n15)Footnote 21. 2 Bracton 226-227 (Samuel Edmund Thorne ed. 1968); 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law 277 (2d ed. 1898).

(n16)Footnote 22. 2 Britton 29, 40 (Francis Morgan Nichols ed. 1865).

(n17)Footnote 23. 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law 278 (2d ed. 1898).

(n18)Footnote 24. 3 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 175 (reprint 1973).

(n19)Footnote 25. Littleton, Tenures §§ 241, 265.

(n20)Footnote 26. The Administration of Estates Act 1925, § 45(1) provides:

(1) With regard to the real estate and personal inheritance of every person dying after the commencement of this Act, there shall be abolished--

(a) All existing modes, rules and canons of descent, and of devolution by special occupancy or otherwise, of real estate, or of a personal inheritance, whether operating by the general law or by the custom of gavelkind or borough english or by any other custom of any county, locality, or manor, or otherwise howsoever ...

(n21)Footnote 27. Id. § 45 (2). "Nothing in this section affects the descent or devolution of an entailed interest."

(n22)Footnote 28. 39 Halsbury's Laws of England Co-ownership P 567 (4th ed. 1982).

(n23)Footnote 29. See § 35.08(a) infra.

(n24)Footnote 30. Tiffany suggested that one result of recognizing that persons taking jointly by descent are coparceners rather than tenants in common is that the interests taken by devise, i.e., as tenants in common, are not the same as interests taken by descent, i.e., as coparceners. 1 Herbert Tiffany, The Law of Real Property § 193, at 644 (1920). See Donnely v. Turner, 60 Md. 81 (1882); Gilpin v. Hollingsworth, 3 Md. 190 (1852).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.05

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.05 Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Other Real Property Interests.

[Go To Supp]

§ 35.05(a) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy in Common.

The early common law tenancy in coparcenary was much like a present day tenancy in common, but differed in several respects from the early tenancy in common. The tenancy in coparcenary was created only by descent and never by purchase, while before the Statute of Wills, the tenancy in common was created only by purchase. n31 Coparceners always had the right to compel partition, while until the statute enacted during the reign of Henry VIII, tenants in common did not have the right of partition. n32 A tenancy in coparcenary required the unities of possession, title, and interest; a tenancy in common required only the unity of possession. n33 Right of survivorship was not a characteristic of the tenancy in coparcenary, n34 nor is it of the tenancy in common. n35 Thus, in both estates each cotenant's interest is inheritable by the heirs. This similarity caused the tenancy in coparcenary to eventually become almost indistinguishable from the tenancy in common. Therefore, coparcenary ceased to be of importance and is seldom mentioned as a distinct form of concurrent ownership in modern cases. n36

§ 35.05(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Joint Tenancy.

Tenancy in coparcenary was distinguished from joint tenancy in that before the Statute of Wills of 1540, coparcenary arose only by descent, while a joint tenancy was created only by inter vivos conveyance. n37 Three other features of the early common law tenancy in coparcenary further distinguish it from the joint tenancy. The first is that tenants in coparcenary could compel a partition of the estate, while joint tenants did not have the right to compel partition until 1539. n38 The second distinction is that the tenancy in coparcenary did not share the outstanding characteristic of the joint tenancy, the right of survivorship. n39 This second distinction gave rise to the third, which is that the tenants in coparcenary held the estate by only three of the four unities by which joint tenants hold that estate. Coparceners held by the unities of possession, interest, and title, but not of time. n40 When a coparcener's interest in the estate descended to the coparcener's heirs rather than accruing to the other coparceners n41 as it would under right of survivorship, the heirs became coparceners at a time different from the time the original estate was created. n42

§ 35.05(c) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy by the Entirety.

In addition to being created only by descent and never by purchase, a major difference between tenancy in coparcenary and tenancy by the entirety is the requirement that tenants by the entirety be husband and wife. Also, tenants in coparcenary could compel partition, while tenants by the entireties could not. Nor did the tenancy in coparcenary share the characteristic of the right of survivorship with tenancy by the entireties. Tenants in coparcenary held by the three unities of possession, interest, and title; tenants by the entireties hold by all four unities plus the unity of marriage. n43

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 31. Under the Statute of Wills tenancies in common could be created by descent or devise. 32 Hen. 8, c. 1 (1540).

(n2)Footnote 32. 31 Hen. 8, c. 1 (1539); 32 Hen. 8, c. 32 (1540).

(n3)Footnote 33. See Ch. 32 supra.

(n4)Footnote 34. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *188.

(n5)Footnote 35. 3 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 127 (reprint 1973).

(n6)Footnote 36. Graham v. Graham, 22 Ky. 561 (1828); Donnelly v. Turner, 60 Md. 81 (1882); Gilpin v. Hollingsworth, 3 Md. 190 (1852); Phillips v. Wells, 133 S.E. 581 (Va. 1926).

See David Thomas, Tenancy in Common, Tenancy in Partnership, and Tenancy in Coparcenary, in Powell on Real Property(R), ch. 50, § 50.09 (originally P 609) (Michael Allan Wolf, ed. Matthew Bender).

(n7)Footnote 37. The Statute of Wills provided for the creation of joint tenancies by devise and tenancies in common by devise and by descent. 32 Hen. 8, c. 1 (1540).

(n8)Footnote 38. 31 Hen. 8, c. 1 (1539); 32 Hen. 8, c. 32 (1540); 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *188.

(n9)Footnote 39. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *188.

(n10)Footnote 40. Id.

(n11)Footnote 41. Britton alludes to a right of accruer among sisters if one died. 1 Britton 315, 316 (Francis Morgan Nichols ed. 1865). But if at one time a right of survivorship existed between parceners, at least by the 14th century it did not. 3 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 127 (reprint 1973).

(n12)Footnote 42. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *188.

(n13)Footnote 43. See Ch. 33 supra.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.06

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.06 Incidents of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

[Go To Supp]

The tenancy in coparcenary shares some incidents with both joint tenancy and tenancy in common. The incidents shared with joint tenancy derive from the unities of title, interest, and possession; those shared with the tenancy in common derive from not having the right of survivorship. Although coparceners "make but one heir," n44 they will be seen as having separate ownership for many purposes, because each coparcener's interest is inheritable. n45 Most of the rules concerning possession, accounting, and contribution apply to coparceners in the same manner as they do to other cotenancies. n46 Many states have statutes with provisions specifically applying to all forms of concurrently held property, including those concerning actions for accounting, contribution, partition, or waste among cotenants. These statutes usually list coparceners along with joint tenants and tenants in common as the cotenants to which the statutes apply. n47 Thus, some of the incidents of coparcenary discussed below, while not recognized at early common law, have been made applicable to modern coparceners by statute.

§ 35.06(a) Possession by Coparceners.

Generally, the entry by one coparcener is the entry by all and the possession of one is the possession of all. n48 This general rule reflects the unity of possession and was usually applied when no disadvantage resulted. But it has been held that a feoffment executed by one coparcener under a general entry and in actual possession operated to oust the other coparceners, because the entry of the feoffor-coparcener was considered the entry of all. n49

§ 35.06(b) Accounting and Contribution Among Coparceners.

Most of the usual accounting and contribution rules for cotenants apply to coparceners as well. Coparceners may sue each other for an accounting of rents and profits. n50 Contributions for improvements and repairs may not be had, n51 but setoffs at the time of partition may compensate the improver. n52

§ 35.06(c) Actions by Coparceners.

Coparceners must sue and be sued jointly on matters relating to their land; since their title is joint, the action must also be joint. n53 Although a coparcener has the right to lease the individual share of land held in coparcenary, n54 when coparceners act as landlords, all must join in a lease. n55 They cannot sue separately in actions for rent, n56 but one may sue on behalf of all the coparceners. n57 All coparceners must also join in actions of ejectment n58 or of distress. n59

Blackstone said that, like joint tenants, coparceners could not "have an action of trespass against each other," but unlike joint tenants, they could not bring an action for waste, n60 because they always had a right to partition to end the waste. n61 However, equity would intervene to restrain a coparcener from committing destructive waste. n62

§ 35.06(d) Inter Vivos Conveyances.

Coparceners can convey their shares to another coparcener or to a stranger. When coparceners conveyed to each other, they could do so by release n63 or by feoffment n64 accomplished by a quit-claim deed.

When, before partition, a coparcener conveys the share to a stranger, the land conveyed is no longer held in coparcenary but in common. n65 The conveyance by one coparcener disunites the grantor's title and interest from those of the coheirs. n66 So if one of only two coparceners conveys the interest to a stranger, the estate in coparcenary is destroyed and the remaining coparcener and the stranger hold as tenants in common. If one of more than two coparceners conveys to a stranger, the coheirs who did not convey are still coparceners as between each other. n67 A stranger who buys the interest of a coparcener before partition stands in the place of that coparcener, and the buyer's interest is subject to any equities that may exist in favor of a third party at the time of the purchase. n68

A conveyance by a coparcener who is out of possession of land that is being held adversely by a fellow coparcener is considered champertous and is thus void. n69 However, the deed in such a case will be void only if at the time of the deed an ouster clearly had occurred. n70

§ 35.06(e) Curtesy and Dower on Tenancies in Coparcenary.

The estate of tenancy in coparcenary is subject to curtesy n71 and dower, n72 wherever such rights exist. The incidents of curtesy and dower apply to coparcenary because, as in a tenancy in common, there is no right of survivorship.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 44. Stedman v. Bates, 91 Eng. Rep. 338 (1695) (the rent descended as one inheritance because the coparceners took as one heir). See Littleton, Tenures § 241; 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *187.

(n2)Footnote 45. Coke on Littleton *164a.

(n3)Footnote 46. O'Bannon v. Robert's Heirs, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 54, 55 (1834) (despite a "surprising dearth of authority," the court saw no reason why parceners should not come under same rule for responsibility from one cotenant to another for rents and profits). See David Thomas, Concurrent Ownership, in The American Law of Real Property § 4.01[1] (1992).

(n4)Footnote 47. See § 35.08(a) infra. See, e.g., Fernandes v. Rodriquez, 735 A.2d 871, 878 (Conn. App. 1999), rev'd, 761 A.2d 1283 (Conn. 2000); County of Blue Earth v. Turtle, 593 N.W.2d 258, 262 (Minn. App. 1999), review denied, 1999 Minn. LEXIS 424 (Minn. June 29, 1999).

(n5)Footnote 48. Doe dem Gill v. Pearson, 102 Eng. Rep. 1253 (K.B. 1805) (one coheir could enter for breach of a condition and that entry would vest seisin in both heirs).

(n6)Footnote 49. Doe dem Reed v. Taylor, 5 B. & Ad. 576, 110 Eng. Rep. 903 (1833) (one of five coparceners executed a feoffment with livery of seisin that operated to oust her coheirs); Gerry v. Holford, 2 Cro. Eliz. 615, 78 Eng.

Rep. 856 (1598) (when one coparcener entered generally and made a lease for life of "all that his house," the entire house passed).

(n7)Footnote 50. O'Bannon v. Roberts, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 54 (1834) (plaintiff entitled to accounting for his share of value of the occupancy of the land); Graham v. Graham, 22 Ky. 561 (1828); (court ordered an accounting of rents and profits between coparceners); Tyson v. Fairclough, 47 Eng. Rep. 955 (1824) (account of rents); Drury v. Drury, 1 Chan. Rep. 49, 21 Eng. Rep. 504 (1630-31) (one of two coheirs ordered to answer to the other for a moiety of the profits); Kline v. Nationsbank of Virginia, N.A., 886 F. Supp. 1285 (E.D. Va. 1995) (court cites Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-31, which allows accounting by a coparcener receiving more than a just share); Hogan v. Hogan, 855 S.W.2d 905 (Ark. 1993) (court cites Arkansas statute establishing coparceners' and joint tenants' duty of accounting).

(n8)Footnote 51. Graham v. Graham, 22 Ky. 561, 563 (1828) (court refused to award compensation to an improving coparcener "so as to make his co-parceners his debtors").

(n9)Footnote 52. Id. (court stated that parcener's rent should be reduced by the amount he spent on improvements); Denton v. Lazenby, 879 P.2d 607 (Kan. 1994) (in a partition action, the court gave credit to a coparcener for the cost of improvements made to the partitioned property).

(n10)Footnote 53. Hoffar v. Dement, 5 Gill 132, 137 (Md. 1847) (court concluded that coparceners could not recover in separate actions); Stevenson v. Cofferin, 20 N.H. 150, 152 (1849) ("[T]he common law rigidly required [coparceners] to join in real actions for the recovery of their estate"); Coke on Littleton *164a, *180b; Abraham Freeman, Cotenancy and Partition §§ 329, 330 (2d ed. 1886).

(n11)Footnote 54. The Lord Mountjoy's Case, 77 Eng. Rep. 52, 56 (K.B. 1589) (the English judge agreed that one coparcener "might let her moiety, yielding the moiety of accustomable rent").

(n12)Footnote 55. Doe dem Rushworth v. Williamson, 6 L.T.O.S. 1000 (1845) (coparceners all must join in a demise).

(n13)Footnote 56. Hoffar v. Dement, 5 Gill 132, 137 (Md. 1847) (coparceners could not recover in separate actions on an implied agreement to rent); Decharms v. Horwood, 10 Bing 526, 131 Eng. Rep. 999 (1834) (one coparcener could not sue separately for his or her part of the rent due to all the coparceners).

(n14)Footnote 57. Leigh v. Shepherd, 2 Brod. & B. 465, 129 Eng. Rep. 1046 (1821) (one coparcener was allowed to sue to recover rent on behalf of fellow coparceners).

(n15)Footnote 58. Boner v. Juner, 91 Eng. Rep. 1385 (N.P. 1698).

(n16)Footnote 59. Waring v. Slingluff, 63 Md. 53 (1885) (omitting the name of one who was entitled to a share of the rent was fatal to the distress action).

(n17)Footnote 60. See Ch. 70 infra for discussion of waste.

(n18)Footnote 61. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *188. Coparceners were not included in the remedy of waste in the Statute of Westminster II, 13 Edw. 1, c. 22 (1285), because they could compel partition. 2 Coke Institutes *403.

(n19)Footnote 62. See cases cited in 78 Am. Jur. 2d Waste § 4, at 397 n.33; 93 C.J.S. Waste § 1, at 560, nn.11-13.

(n20)Footnote 63. Coke on Littleton *164a. Release was possible because of the unity of interest. 3 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 126 (reprint 1973).

(n21)Footnote 64. Coke on Littleton *164a.

(n22)Footnote 65. Littleton, Tentures' 309; 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *189.

(n23)Footnote 66. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *191.

(n24)Footnote 67. Abraham Freeman, Cotenancy and Partition § 84 (2d ed. 1886).

(n25)Footnote 68. Flynn v. Herye, 4 Mo. App. 360 (1877). In this case, before partition, a lot had been sold to defendant, who built on the lot. Plaintiff later bought three of the seven coparceners' interests, also before partition. After partition, plaintiff discovered that defendant's building encroached on one of his lots. The court held that plaintiff could not have his deed reformed because the lots assigned to plaintiff should have taken into account the defendant's building. The court held, "One who purchases the right, title, and interest of copartners in land before partition, takes an inchoate title only to the particular lot which he afterwards acquires by partition, and takes subject to equities existing at the time between the heirs whose interest he has purchased and third parties." Id. at 365-66.

(n26)Footnote 69. Wall v. Wayland, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 155 (1859).

(n27)Footnote 70. Id. Bird v. Bird, 40 Me. 398, 403 (1855).

(n28)Footnote 71. Littleton, Tenures § 264.

(n29)Footnote 72. 2 William Cruise, A Digest of the Laws of England Respecting Real Property Coparcenary § 10 (1834).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.07

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.07 Partition of Tenancy in Coparcenary.n73

[Go To Supp]

A partition of a tenancy in coparcenary can be either voluntary or compulsory. A partition is voluntary when the coparceners divide the land by a mutual agreement. It is compulsory when suit is brought to have a court determine the division of land. At early common law, one or more coparceners could sue on a writ of partition to compel partition. Modern partition statutes now provide for the division of jointly owned land. The partition statutes usually authorize a partition by sale when a partition in kind would cause prejudice to any of the cotenants. n74 A nominal preference for partition in kind is proclaimed by the courts, but as a practical matter partition by sale is the usual result, especially when small tracts of land with a single house are the object of partition. n75

§ 35.07(a) Voluntary Partition.

In Littleton's day voluntary partition of an estate held in coparcenary could be effected by four different methods. The first method was by the agreement of the coparceners among themselves assigning to each a separate part of the land. n76 The second method was by the coparceners choosing some of their friends to divide the lands into the appropriate number of parts. Each coparcener would then select one of the divided parts with the eldest having first choice. n77 The third method of voluntary partition was by allowing the eldest sister to divide the land into equal parts. In this case when each coparcener selected one of the parts, the eldest would make her selection only after all the others had done so. n78 The rule that the eldest divided but chose last was based on the maxim cujus est divisio, alterius est electio and was to avoid partiality. n79 The fourth and final voluntary method of partition was by lot. Here a description of each divided part of the land was wrapped in a little ball of wax. The balls of wax were then put into a hat. Each coparcener, beginning with the eldest and continuing in chronological order, would draw a ball out of the hat. n80 In the words of Littleton:

> [I]f there be four parceners, and after partition of the lands be made, every part of the land by itself is written in a little scrowle and is covered all in waxe in the manner of a little ball, so as none may see the scrowle, and then the four balls of waxe are put in a hat to be kept in the hands of an indifferent man, and then the eldest daughter shall first put her hand into the hat, and take a ball of waxe with the scrowle within the same ball for her part, and then the second sister shall put her hand into the hat and take > another, the 3 sister the 3 ball, and the 4 sister the 4 ball & c. and in this case every one of them ought to stand their chance and allotment. n81

Voluntary partitions could allow fewer than all the coparceners to have partition. One of three coparceners could have partition so that she held her part separate from the two other sisters who continued to hold the remaining land together in coparcenary until they decided to partition. n82 Under a compulsory partition all coparceners were forced to participate. n83

At early common law a voluntary partition could be made by parol or by deed. n84 After the Statute of Frauds, parol partition was no longer available. n85 An estate in coparcenary might involve an indivisible inheritance such as a castle. n86 When this happened, the eldest took the indivisible inheritance but accounted to the other sisters for its value when the remainder of the inheritance was divided. Or the coparceners might validly agree to take turns in occupying or enjoying an indivisible inheritance; such arrangements were known as "turn about" partitions. n87

When equal division cannot be made in voluntary partition by modern cotenants, payments by one or more cotenants to the other cotenants may be made to equalize the division. Such equalizing payments are called owelty.

§ 35.07(b) Compulsory Partition.

Coparceners or parceners, as Littleton said, were so named because they could be compelled to partition by one or more of them suing on a writ of partition. n88 The writ was called breve de partitione facienda, "a writ whereby the coparceners are compelled to make partition." n89 When a coparcener sued on a writ of partition and judgment was given, the sheriff and a jury went on the land and made a division of the land. The sheriff would assign the parts of the land to the coparceners as he saw fit. n90

Only coparceners could take advantage of the common law writ of partition. The writ would lie against a coparcener or someone succeeding to a coparcener's interest, such as a deceased sister's husband claiming his curtesy interest. In this example, the coparceners could compel partition against the husband, but if the husband wanted partition and the coparceners did not, the husband could not compel partition. n91

Originally only coparceners had the right to compel partition; joint tenants and tenants in common did not. This rule was based on the reasoning that joint tenants and tenants in common were created by purchase, which indicated that they came into the cotenancy relationship voluntarily, while coparceners arose involuntarily by the law of descent and might need to end an unfortunate co-ownership with people with whom they could not agree. n92 In a similar unfortunate co-ownership, joint tenants and tenants in common had only the remedies of voluntary partition, buying out the co-owner, or selling their shares. The inconvenience caused by these limitations on remedies eventually resulted in the statute, 31 Henry VIII, ca. 1, giving the other cotenants the right to compel partition in estates of inheritance, n93 and in the next year with the statute 32 Henry VIII, ca. 32, conferring the same right on those holding estates not of inheritance. n94 The "tedious, chargeable [expensive], and oftentimes ineffectual" n95 proceedings under those statutes were remedied for seven years by the statute 8 & 9 William III, ca. 31, and made perpetual by statute 3 & 4 Anne, ca. 18, § 2. n96 In the meantime, a superior equitable partition action developed in the Chancery Court and quickly replaced the common law procedure. n97

§ 35.07(c) Voidable Partitions.

Some voluntary partitions resulting in unequal parcels were voidable. An agreement between two coparceners who were of age, unmarried, and of sane memory to divide land held in fee simple into unequal parcels with one parcel being more valuable than the other, could not be defeated. n98 But if the partition were of entailed lands or if any of the coparceners were of unreliable memory, the agreement was good as between the coparceners, but the issue of the coparcener receiving the lesser part could challenge the partition. n99 Also, if land were partitioned so that one coparcener was allotted land in fee and the other land in tail, the issue of the coparcener allotted the fee, who later sold it and then died, could enter and occupy the land in tail held by the other coparcener. n100

An unequal partition made by the husband of a coparcener would bind the husband, but could be challenged after his death by the coparcener having the lesser part. n101 Similarly, a partition resulting in an infant receiving the lesser part could be defeated either after the infant came of age or while still an infant. However, the unequal partition could be ratified by the younger coparcener when she came of age. n102

§ 35.07(d) "Hotchpot."

"Hotchpot" is a term that was associated with the partition of lands held by coparceners in fee simple. A man owning lands in fee simple might give some of his land to his eldest daughter in "frankmarriage" n103 and later die, leaving the rest of his fee simple land, worth more than the frankmarriage portion, to descend in coparcenary. The eldest sister, who had received land in frankmarriage, could not share in the coparcenary land, unless she agreed to include the frankmarriage land in the general partition of the land. This inclusion was referred to as bringing those lands into hotchpot. n104 Littleton explained hotchpot as follows: "[T]his word (hotchpot) is in English a pudding; for in this pudding is not commonly put one thing alone, but one thing with others together." n105 The question of whether to bring her land into hotchpot was left up to the recipient of the frankmarriage land. If she chose not to bring it into hotchpot, it was assumed she was sufficiently provided for by the advancement. n106 The law of hotchpot did not apply to lands in fee tail. n107

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 73. See generally Abraham Freeman, Cotenancy and Partition §§ 393-419 (2d ed. 1886).

(n2)Footnote 74. See, e.g., Idaho Code § 6-501.

(n3)Footnote 75. Russell Niles & William Walsh, "Concurrent Estates" § 6.26, at 113-114, in 2 American Law of Property (1952).

(n4)Footnote 76. Littleton, Tenures § 243; Coke on Littleton *166a.

(n5)Footnote 77. Littleton, Tenures § 244; Coke on Littleton *166a; 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *189.

(n6)Footnote 78. Littleton, Tenures § 245; Coke on Littleton *166a.

(n7)Footnote 79. Coke on Littleton *166b.

(n8)Footnote 80. Littleton, Tenures § 246; Coke on Littleton *167a.

(n9)Footnote 81. Littleton, Tenures § 246.

(n10)Footnote 82. Id. § 276.

(n11)Footnote 83. See § 35.07(b) infra.

(n12)Footnote 84. Littleton, Tenures § 250; Coke on Littleton *169a.

(n13)Footnote 85. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *324.

(n14)Footnote 86. Or a "chief messuage [that was] the head of an earldom ... or ... a barony." 2 Bracton on the Laws and Customs of England 222 (Samuel Edmund Thorne ed. 1968).

(n15)Footnote 87. Coke gives as an example a "piscarie incertaine." Two coparceners might agree for the first to take fish for the first half of the year and the second to take fish the second half of the year or for the first to have the first fish and the second to have the second fish, etc. Coke on Littleton *165a, *167b.

(n16)Footnote 88. Littleton, Tenures § 241; Beach v. Beach, 74 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2003) (coparceners may compel partition).

(n17)Footnote 89. Coke on Littleton *164b. According to Coke, the reference in Littleton § 241 to breve de participatione is "false printed"; "participatione" should be "partitione."

(n18)Footnote 90. Littleton, Tenures §§ 247-249.

(n19)Footnote 91. Id. § 264.

(n20)Footnote 92. Abraham Freeman, Cotenancy and Partition § 421 (2d ed. 1886).

(n21)Footnote 93. The statute provided that joint tenants and tenants in common of estates of inheritance could be compelled to make partition in "like manner and form as coparceners by the common laws of this realm have been and are compelled to do, and the same writ to be pursued at the common law." 31 Hen. 8, c. 1 (1539).

(n22)Footnote 94. 32 Hen. 8, c. 32 (1540).

(n23)Footnote 95. Preamble to 8 and 9 Will. 3, c. 31 (1696-97).

(n24)Footnote 96. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 18, § 2 (1704); Abraham Freeman, Cotenancy and Partition § 421 (2d ed. 1886).

(n25)Footnote 97. Restatement of Property, Ch. 11, Topic 1, Introductory note, at 654 (1936).

(n26)Footnote 98. Littleton, Tenures § 255; Coke on Littleton *166a, *170a.

(n27)Footnote 99. Coke on Littleton *166a.

(n28)Footnote 100. Littleton, Tenures § 260.

(n29)Footnote 101. Littleton, Tenures § 256; Coke on Littleton *171a.

(n30)Footnote 102. Littleton, Tenures § 258; Coke on Littleton *171b.

(n31)Footnote 103. Frankmarriage is "a species of estates-tail, freely given by a relation for advancement of his kinswoman in marriage." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *190.

(n32)Footnote 104. Id.

(n33)Footnote 105. Littleton, Tenures § 267.

(n34)Footnote 106. The term "hotchpot" is used in modern statutes providing for advancements to descendants of intestate decedents to be brought into hotchpot. See Miss. Code Ann. § 91-1-17; Va. Code Ann. § 64.1-17; W. Va. Code § 42-4-1. W. Va. Code § 42-4-1, repealed by Acts 1992, C75.

(n35)Footnote 107. Littleton, Tenures § 274; 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries *191.

157 of 191 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.08

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.08 Status of Tenancy in Coparcenary in the United States Today.

[Go To Supp]

§ 35.08(a) In General.

As indicated previously, n108 the tenancy in coparcenary in the United States n109 has for the most part been subsumed by the tenancy in common. However, coparcenary terminology is still found occasionally in some American statutes n110 and cases. n111 When the terminology is used, a court most frequently cites a partition statute or some other statute that lists coparceners as a form of joint ownership to which the statute applies. n112 The terminology is used as the court determines whether the statute applies in a particular situation. In partition actions n113 and other actions involving cotenants, n114 the parties are often called "parceners" or "coparceners."

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: coparcen! or parcen!

NOTE: Relevant cases predate the earliest cases in database.

§ 35.08(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary in Statutes.

Although the modern estate in coparcenary is hardly distinguishable from a tenancy in common, the terminology is still found in statutes in at least thirty states and the District of Columbia. n115 The only modern distinction between coparceners and tenants in common is that coparceners are cotenants of property passing to them by intestate succession. A few descent and distribution statutes provide that intestate property passes in parcenary. n116 Even in those states whose descent and distribution statutes do not specify that intestate property pass in parcenary, the statutory reference typically will be to "joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners" n117 in a provision applying to concurrently held property.

The types of statutes or provisions in statutes containing references to parceners, coparceners, or parcenary, in descending order of frequency, may be summarized as follows:

1. Statutes providing for the partition and the sale of land.

2. Statutes providing for an action in the nature of an accounting among cotenants. These include those relating to use and occupation, rents and profits, contribution for repairs and improvements, and receiving more than a just proportion.

3. Statutes providing for liability of cotenants for waste.

4. Statutes of descent and distribution providing that intestate property passes in parcenary and providing for advancements to be brought into hotchpot.

5. Statutes providing for regaining possession of land, including ejectment actions, forcible entry and detainer actions, and actions to quiet title.

6. Statutes providing for the leasing or partition of jointly held mineral lands.

7. Statutes relating to taxes paid on jointly held land.

8. Statutes providing for a statement of ownership of property in an indictment when the property is jointly owned.

9. Statutes including coparceners in the definition of cotenant or tenant.

10. Statutes providing for coparceners creating a joint tenancy by voluntary partition to themselves.

11. Statutes providing for action for trespass to jointly held land.

12. Statutes abolishing tenancy in coparcenary.

13. Miscellaneous statutes and provisions, including provisions for compensation and costs in suits by cotenants, a provision relating to the sale of jointly held land pending an action for damages from a milldam, a provision for levying execution on a debtor-cotenant's interest in real estate, and provision for the clerk's office to index deeds made by coparceners.

State statutory references to coparcenary are summarized as follows:

Alabama. Statutes give a coparcener the right to commence an action of forcible entry and detainer inuring to the benefit of all coparceners, n118 and the right to commence an action against a coparcener in the nature of an accounting for receiving more than a lawful proportion. n119 When a coparcener devises a freehold estate with a contingent interest as a remainder, any interested party may have partition. n120

Arkansas. Statutes give coparceners the right to partition, n121 provide for sale and division of proceeds of lands when some coparceners are infants or insane, n122 give the right to an accounting n123 and the right to treble damages for damage caused by trespass. n124 Mineral land statutes give coparceners the right to lease and operate the lands, n125 and to partition an oil and gas lease interest, if it is unleased and non-producing. n126 Taxation statutes provide that the payment of taxes by a coparcener when a fellow coparcener has not paid shall be credited to the paying coparcener upon partition of the land n127 and give coparceners the right of redemption of realty sold for taxes. n128

Colorado. The mines and minerals statutes include coparcener in the definition of "tenant" n129 and give a coparcener the right to lease an interest in a mine. n130

Connecticut. Statutes give coparceners the right to partition n131 and give any interested party that same right when a coparcener has devised a freehold interest in property with a contingent interest. n132 Coparceners are given the right to an action for an accounting. n133 A criminal procedure statute provides that when a statement of ownership is necessary in an indictment and the property is owned by coparceners, it is sufficient to name one of them and to describe a coparcener as such, if it is necessary to mention a coparcener. n134

Delaware. Partition statutes and those providing for partition proceedings list coparceners among the cotenants having the right to partition. n135 Coparceners are also given the right to an action against their fellow coparceners in the nature of an accounting for use and occupation n136 and for waste. n137 The decedents' estates and fiduciary relation statutes provide that after-born children shall be allotted intestate real estate as parceners, not in severalty, n138 and that a court may order a minor coparcener's guardian to sell the real estate for the minor's benefit. n139 The criminal procedure statute provides that when it is necessary in an indictment to state the ownership of property that is held in coparcenary, it is sufficient to name one person only and to describe the property as belonging to that person and others. n140

District of Columbia. This jurisdiction has abolished coparcenary estates. n141

Florida. Statutes give coparceners right to partition. n142

Hawaii. Statute preserves the rights of coparceners to partition registered land. n143 Criminal procedure statute provides that when it is necessary to refer to the ownership of property held in coparcenary, it is sufficient to name one of the persons as the owner with others and to describe any partners as coparceners. n144 A statute setting out the legal incidents of the leasehold time share interests provides that nothing therein shall be construed to relieve the owners of a leasehold time share of the rights of partition between coparceners and other cotenants. n145

Idaho. The partition statute gives coparceners the right to a partition action or for sale of the property if a partition would cause prejudice. n146

Illinois. The oil and gas statutes give majority holders of joint interests in lands the right to drill to protect the land, n147 and provide that before the court order authorizing the right to drill is issued, the court shall find that plaintiffs hold lands jointly, with coparceners listed as a way the lands could be so held. n148

Indiana. Coparceners are authorized to bring an action in the nature of an accounting for a fellow coparcener "receiving more than his just proportion." n149

Kansas. Statute provides that a joint tenancy may be created by coparceners in voluntary partition to themselves. n150 Statutes also provide for contribution by a coparcener when a managing coparcener makes repairs and improvements, if made with the knowledge of and without objection from the other coparcener n151 and for an action in the nature of an accounting against a coparcener for receiving more than a just proportion of the rents and profits. n152

Kentucky. Coparceners committing waste are liable for damages. n153 Statutes also provide that when a coparcener prosecutes an action for the benefit of the other coparceners, the court shall allow compensation, n154 and in actions between parceners, the court shall exercise judicial discretion in regard to costs. n155

Maryland. The statute provides for partition by parceners or for sale and division of the proceeds. n156 The criminal procedure statute provides that when it is necessary to refer to property held by parceners, it is sufficient to name one person as owner of the property with others and to describe partners as coparceners. n157

Michigan. Oil, gas and minerals statutes give majority coparceners the right to develop oil and gas n158 and other mineral rights n159 and empower the court to grant decrees authorizing the development of oil and gas n160 and other mineral rights. n161

Mississippi. Statute gives coparceners the right to bring an ejectment action against another coparcener if an ouster is proved. n162 Partition statutes give coparceners the right to partition by agreement and arbitration n163 and by decree of the Chancery Court. n164 Statutes also provide that liens created by a coparcener remain on that coparcener's share after partition, n165 title paramount to the coparceners' title is not affected by partition, n166 and certain situations entitle a coparcener to a new partition. n167 The descent and distribution statute provides for parceners to bring advancements into hotchpot. n168

Missouri. Statutes give coparceners the right to partition n169 and provide that parceners committing waste are liable to their coparceners for damages. n170

Nevada. Mines and minerals statutes provide for the partition of mining claims by coparceners, n171 who may unite for purposes of division. n172 Majority coparceners who have formed a corporation or association for the purpose of developing a mining claim are given the right to bring an action against non-members of the corporation or association for their proportion of the money expended in developing the claim. n173 The minority coparceners' proportion of money expended shall be that amount that bears the same proportion to the money expended as the minority coparceners' interest bears to the whole mining claim. n174 Any number of coparceners may be joined as defendants in an action for money expended, but each is entitled to plead separately. n175 The summons in an action for money expended developing a mining claim shall specify the amount due from each coparcener. n176 The money expended shall be a lien against the minority coparcener's share. n177

New Jersey. The partition statutes include coparcener in the definition of cotenant. n178 In an action of waste between parceners, if the defendant elects partition after a judgment, the part assigned to the defendant shall include the wasted part. n179 The Validating Acts provide that partition of land is not invalid because of a supposed lack of the court's power or because of a defect in the form of application, if the application is between coparceners or heirs of deceased coparceners. n180

New Mexico. Statutes give coparceners the right to partition, n181 give more than ten coparceners the right to sue as a committee in a quiet title action, n182 and provide for the joinder of two or more coparceners as plaintiffs. n183

Ohio. The descent and distribution statute provides that, except for property subject to a monetary charge of a surviving spouse, intestate property passes in parcenary. n184 Coparceners are given the right to compel partition, n185 the right to an action in the nature of accounting for rents and profits, and the right to bring an action for waste. n186 Taxation statutes provide that the proportion of tax liability paid by one coparcener when the other coparceners have not paid shall be deemed paid on that coparcener's share. n187 A coparcener may redeem a portion of the land that has been sold for delinquent taxes even if other coparceners do not join in the redemption, n188 and those purchasing forfeited lands may have partition in the manner of coparceners. n189 If an abandoning parent is prohibited from inheriting from a deceased child, the property of the deceased child shall be distributed or pass in parcenary as if the parent had predeceased the deceased child. n190 Banks and savings and loan associations are authorized to bring partition proceedings for the interests of coparceners in any tangible or intangible personal property. n191

Oklahoma. Statutes provide for actions in the nature of accounting if coparceners may have contribution for repairs and improvements made with the knowledge of other coparceners and without their objection n192 and may maintain an action against a coparcener who receives more than a just proportion of rents and profits. n193 Also, coparceners may create a joint tenancy by voluntary partition. n194

Pennsylvania. Taxation statutes provide for tax claims by municipalities against property owned by coparceners. n195 A coparcener has the right to pay a proportionate part of taxes due n196 at any time before the land is sold for failure to pay taxes, n197 and the coparcener's interest is not to be sold for the failure of a co-owner to pay a proper share of taxes. n198

Rhode Island. Coparceners are given the right to an accounting n199 and one coparcener may bring an action for waste n200 in the name of all coparceners. Coparceners shall forfeit double the amount of waste done on an estate held in coparcenary. n201 Coparceners may be compelled to partition, whether the estate be one of inheritance, for life, or for years. n202 In an action for possession or for mesne profits, all or less than all may sue or each may sue for a share. n203 A waters and navigation statute provides that when a plaintiff coparcener sells a part of the land, alleged to be injured, to one of the cotenants after a suit for damages from a milldam has commenced, the suit shall go forward as if the sale had not been made. n204

Texas. The descent and distribution statute provides that intestate property passes in parcenary. n205

Utah. The partition statute provides for partition of mining claims by coparceners, n206 who may unite for the purpose of dividing the claim. n207

Vermont. Coparceners have the right to partition n208 and to an action for an accounting, which may be tried to a jury. n209 Execution may be levied on a debtor coparcener's undivided interest. n210

Virginia. Coparceners may have an accounting in equity n211 and may compel partition n212 or have a sale in lieu of partition. n213 Provision is also made for partition of land held under a homestead exemption by a coparcener. n214 In any partition suit involving unrepresented shares, attorney's fees may be allowed out of the unrepresented parceners' shares. n215 Coparceners bringing an ejectment action must prove ouster. n216 Coparceners are liable to their cotenants in damages for committing waste. n217 Voluntary partition by coparceners of estates of inheritance must be by deed, n218 which shall be indexed in the clerk's office under the names of the grantors and grantees, n219 and a recording tax of fifty cents per deed of partition shall be collected. n220 The descent and distribution statute provides that intestate property passes in parcenary n221 and that advancements be brought into hotchpot. n222 The taxation statutes provide for the apportionment of taxes upon partition of property held by coparceners. n223 In a statute validating certain tax deeds under a repealed statute, a savings clause protects the title of coparceners when the grantee in a deed is a coparcener. n224 The records and indexing statute provides that a deed made by coparceners shall be indexed in the names of the grantors and the grantees and the name of the former record title owner listed in the first clause of the instrument. n225

West Virginia. Coparceners are entitled to compel partition n226 or have an allotment or sale of the entire property if partition is not convenient, taking care that a deceased coparcener's proceeds are applied to creditors' claims. n227 Coparceners are liable in damages to their cotenants for waste n228 and may maintain an action of accounting for a cotenant receiving more than a just share. n229 In an action of ejectment, a coparcener must prove actual ouster. n230 The descent and distribution statute provides for intestate property passing in parcenary n231 and for advancements being brought into hotchpot. n232 Under the taxation statutes, the statute providing for assessment states that "any ... coparcener ... , in the absence of satisfactory proof of a fiduciary relationship, shall be entitled to acquire the interest of ... his co-owners ... , without being required to hold the same under any constructive trust." n233 The statutes providing for the sale of land for taxes n234 and for a school fund n235 provide that all co-owners, except coparceners, shall be entitled to purchase at the sale for his own account.

Wyoming. Coparceners may be compelled to partition n236 and to bring actions against their cotenants in the nature of an accounting for their shares of rents and profits and for waste. n237 When a person dies intestate, the estate shall pass and be distributed in parcenary. n238

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

In LEXIS state codes may be searched for provisions containing the terminology, "coparcenary," "coparcener," "parcenary" or "parcener."

LEXIS: coparcen! or parcen!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 108. See authorities cited in note 8, supra.

(n2)Footnote 109. The tenancy was abolished in England in 1925.

(n3)Footnote 110. See statutes summarized in § 35.08(b) infra.

(n4)Footnote 111. Winters Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Riffe, 206 N.E.2d 212 (1965) (estate in coparcenary defined). Other cases: 9A Words & Phrases 327-28 (1960); 31 Words & Phrases 82 (1957); 20 Am. Jur. 2d Cotenancy and Joint Ownership § 1, at 92 n.5; 86 C.J.S. Tenancy in Common § 3, at 362 nn.12-18.

(n5)Footnote 112. See, e.g., Lerman v. Levine, 541 A.2d 523 (Conn. 1988) (court cites Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-404 providing for collection by cotenant for use and occupation payments); Garrison v. Smith, 561 N.E.2d 1041 (Ohio App. 1988) (court cites the descent and distribution statute as it determines whether a child born out of wedlock may share in intestate estate); Whitby v. Overton, 413 S.E.2d 42 (Va. 1992) (court cites Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-81 as it determines that a life tenant did not have the right to compel partition against remaindermen). In re Sprouse, 178 B.R. 99 (W.D. Va. 1995) (court cities Va. Code of 1919 providing that coparceners could be compelled to partition); Morris v. Solesbee, 892 S.W.2d 281 (Ark. App. 1995) (includes citation to Arkansas statute giving persons holding land in coparcenary right to partition); Bryan v. Looker, 640 N.E.2d 590 (Ohio App. 1994) (court mentions partition rights between coparceners); McGill v. Roush, 621 N.E.2d 865 (Ohio App. 1993) (court cities Ohio Rev. Code § 5307.06, which allows the trial court to award owelty to a coparcener); Modic v. Modic, 633 N.E.2d 1151 (Ohio App. 1993) (court cites Ohio Rev. Code. § 5307.24, which provides for recovery of rents and profits by one coparcener from another, and provides for an action for waste against another coparcener); Sword v. Sword, 620 N.E.2d 199 (Ohio App. 1993) (partition action in which court cites Ohio Rev. Code § 5307.01, providing for right of partition by a coparcener); Hunter v. Christian, 446 S.E.2d 177 (W. Va. 1994) (wrongful death action in which court cites W. Va. Code § 42-1-1 providing that an intestate's title to real estate may descend and pass in parcenary to the intestate's kindred); Signorelli v. Signorelli, 434 S.E.2d 382 (W. Va. 1993) (court cites W. Va. Code § 55-8-13, providing for an accounting between coparceners); Webber v. Webber, 962 S.W. 2d 345 (Ark. 1998) (refers to Ark. Stat. Ann. § 18-60-401, the partition statute); Ex Parte State Mut. Ins. Co., 715 So. 2d 207 (Ala. 1997) (refers to a bill delivered in the names of several people and their "parceners"); Gallant v. Cavallaro, 717 A. 2d 283 (Conn. App. 1998) (refers to Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-495 giving right to partition); Butler v. Hayes, 487 S.E.2d 229 (Va. 1997) (discusses whether to give credit for "parcener's" improvement to property).

(n6)Footnote 113. See, e.g., Wolfrey v. Pence, 297 S.E.2d 643 (1982) (partition suit in which court referred to parties as coparceners). Peters v. Robinson, 636 A.2d 926 (Del. 1994) (partition action between parties referred to as parceners).

(n7)Footnote 114. Dixon v. Feaster, 448 So. 2d 554 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1984) (action seeking a way of necessity in which court stated that no express easement was conveyed by coparceners); Pocahontas Land Corp. v. Evans, 332 S.E.2d 604 (W. Va. 1985) (court referred to defendants as coparceners in an action to set aside deeds as clouds on title).

(n8)Footnote 115. Occasionally state court cases refer to coparceners included in state code statutory language. See, e.g., Custom Modular Industries, Inc. v. Mount, 2003 Conn. Super. LEXIS 766 (Conn. Super. Ct. Mar. 17, 2003); Bove v. Bove, 2002 Conn. Super. LEXIS 621 (Conn. Super. Ct. Feb. 11, 2002); Lochhaas v. Burnett, 77 S.W.2d 12 (Mo. App. 2002); Romansik v. Boccia, 2002 Ohio App. LEXIS 3141 (Ohio Ct. App., Trumbull County June 21, 2002).

(n9)Footnote 116. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2105.06.

(n10)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 6-6-312.

(n11)Footnote 118. Ala. Code § 6-6-312.

(n12)Footnote 119. Id. § 6-7-40.

(n13)Footnote 120. Id. § 19-3-170.

(n14)Footnote 121. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 18-60-401.

(n15)Footnote 122. Id. § 18-60-425.

(n16)Footnote 123. Id. § 18-60-101.

(n17)Footnote 124. Id. § 18-60-102(b).

(n18)Footnote 125. Id. § 15-56-301.

(n19)Footnote 126. Id. § 15-73-401.

(n20)Footnote 127. Id. § 26-35-303.

(n21)Footnote 128. Id. § 26-37-307.

(n22)Footnote 129. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 34-44-102.

(n23)Footnote 130. Id. § 34-44-110.

(n24)Footnote 131. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-495.

(n25)Footnote 132. Id. § 52-496.

(n26)Footnote 133. Id. § 52-404.

(n27)Footnote 134. Id. § 54-59.

(n28)Footnote 135. Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, §§ 721, 728, 730, 732, 741, 746, 747; Del. Code Ann. R. Ch. Ct. 183.

(n29)Footnote 136. Id. § 702.

(n30)Footnote 137. Id. § 904.

(n31)Footnote 138. Id. tit. 12, § 303.

(n32)Footnote 139. Id. § 3951.

(n33)Footnote 140. Id. tit. 11, § 3104.

(n34)Footnote 141. D.C. Code Ann. § 45-217.

(n35)Footnote 142. Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 64.031, 64.041.

(n36)Footnote 143. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 501-81.

(n37)Footnote 144. Id. § 806-35.

(n38)Footnote 145. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 501-246.

(n39)Footnote 146. Idaho Code § 6-501.

(n40)Footnote 147. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat 520/7.

(n41)Footnote 148. Id. para. 4907, § 7.

(n42)Footnote 149. Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32.15-5-1, 32-30-9-1.

(n43)Footnote 150. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-501(c).

(n44)Footnote 151. Id. § 58-2521.

(n45)Footnote 152. Id. § 58-2522.

(n46)Footnote 153. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 381.390.

(n47)Footnote 154. Id. § 412.070.

(n48)Footnote 155. Id. § 453.040.

(n49)Footnote 156. Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 14-107.

(n50)Footnote 157. Md. Ann. Code art. 27, § 605.

(n51)Footnote 158. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 319.101.

(n52)Footnote 159. Id. § 324.63302.

(n53)Footnote 160. Id. § 319.108.

(n54)Footnote 161. Id. § 324.63304.

(n55)Footnote 162. Miss. Code Ann. § 11-19-85.

(n56)Footnote 163. Id. § 11-21-1.

(n57)Footnote 164. Id. § 11-21-3.

(n58)Footnote 165. Id. § 11-21-39.

(n59)Footnote 166. Id. § 11-21-41.

(n60)Footnote 167. Id. § 11-21-45.

(n61)Footnote 168. Id. § 91-1-17.

(n62)Footnote 169. Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.030.

(n63)Footnote 170. Id. § 537.460.

(n64)Footnote 171. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 39.500.

(n65)Footnote 172. Id. § 39.530.

(n66)Footnote 173. Id. § 520.010.

(n67)Footnote 174. Id. § 520.020.

(n68)Footnote 175. Id. § 520.030(2).

(n69)Footnote 176. Id. § 520.040(2).

(n70)Footnote 177. Id. § 520.060.

(n71)Footnote 178. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-1.

(n72)Footnote 179. Id. § 2A:65-4.

(n73)Footnote 180. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 24-1.1.

(n74)Footnote 181. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-1.

(n75)Footnote 182. Id. § 42-6-3.

(n76)Footnote 183. Id. § 42-6-6.

(n77)Footnote 184. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 2105.06, 2105.061.

(n78)Footnote 185. Id. §§ 5307.01, 5307.03.

(n79)Footnote 186. Id. § 5307.21.

(n80)Footnote 187. Id. § 323.46.

(n81)Footnote 188. Id. § 5721.26.

(n82)Footnote 189. Id. § 5723.15.

(n83)Footnote 190. Id. § 2106.10.

(n84)Footnote 191. Id. § 1109.73.

(n85)Footnote 192. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41, § 20.

(n86)Footnote 193. Id. tit. 41, § 21.

(n87)Footnote 194. Id. tit. 60, § 74.

(n88)Footnote 195. Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 53, § 7109.

(n89)Footnote 196. Id. tit. 72, § 5511.12.

(n90)Footnote 197. Id. tit. 72, § 5969.

(n91)Footnote 198. Id. tit. 72, § 5968.

(n92)Footnote 199. R.I. Gen. Laws § 10-2-1.

(n93)Footnote 200. Id. § 34-14-3.

(n94)Footnote 201. Id. § 34-14-2.

(n95)Footnote 202. Id. §§ 34-15-1, 34-15-2, and 34-15-3.

(n96)Footnote 203. Id. § 34-20-3.

(n97)Footnote 204. Id. § 46-18-14.

(n98)Footnote 205. Texas Prob. Code Ann. § 38 (Vernon).

(n99)Footnote 206. Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-12.

(n100)Footnote 207. Id. § 78-39-13.

(n101)Footnote 208. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5161.

(n102)Footnote 209. Id. tit. 12, §§ 4251 and 4257.

(n103)Footnote 210. Id. tit. 12, § 2785.

(n104)Footnote 211. Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-31.

(n105)Footnote 212. Id. § 8.01-81.

(n106)Footnote 213. Id. § 8.01-83.

(n107)Footnote 214. Id. § 34-8.

(n108)Footnote 215. Id. § 8.01-92.

(n109)Footnote 216. Id. § 8.01-141.

(n110)Footnote 217. Id. § 55-212.

(n111)Footnote 218. Id. § 55-2.

(n112)Footnote 219. Id. § 17-79.

(n113)Footnote 220. Id. § 58.1-806.

(n114)Footnote 221. Id. § 64.1-1.

(n115)Footnote 222. Id. § 64.1-17.

(n116)Footnote 223. Id. § 58.1-3225.

(n117)Footnote 224. Id. § 58.1-3960.

(n118)Footnote 225. Id. § 17.1-249 (c).

(n119)Footnote 226. W. Va. Code § 37-4-1.

(n120)Footnote 227. Id. § 37-4-3.

(n121)Footnote 228. Id. § 37-7-2.

(n122)Footnote 229. Id. § 55-8-13.

(n123)Footnote 230. Id. § 55-4-15.

(n124)Footnote 231. Id. § 42-1-1.

(n125)Footnote 232. Id. § 42-4-1. W. Va. Code § 42-4-1, repealed by Acts 1992, C75.

(n126)Footnote 233. Id. § 11-4-9.

(n127)Footnote 234. Id. §§ 11A-3-6 and 11A-3-49.

(n128)Footnote 235. Id. § 11A-4-26.

(n129)Footnote 236. Wyo. Stat. §§ 1-32-101 and 1-32-103.

(n130)Footnote 237. Id. § 1-32-119.

(n131)Footnote 238. Id. § 2-4-101.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 35 TENANCY IN COPARCENARY

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 35.09

AUTHOR: Professor Patsy Woodham Thomley Cumberland School of Law Samford University

§ 35.09 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Blackstone, William. "Of Estates in Severalty, Joint-Tenancy, Coparcenary, and Common." Commentaries. Vol. 2, Ch. 12. Birmingham: Legal Classics Library, 1983.

Burdick, William. Handbook of the Law of Real Property § 102. St. Paul: West Pub. Co., 1914.

Coke, Edward. The First Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England; or, A Commentary on Littleton. Vol. 2. Birmingham: Legal Classics Library, 1985, 1823.

Cruise, William. "Coparcenary." A Digest of The Laws of England Respecting Real Property. Vol. 2, Title 19. New York: Collins and Hannay, 1834.

Edwards, William. A Compendium of the Law of Property in Land. § II, "Tenancy in Coparcenary." London: Stevens and Haynes, 1888.

Freeman, Abraham. Cotenancy and Partition. § 329, 2d ed. San Francisco: Bancroft-Whitney Co., 1886.

Kent, James. "Coparceners." Commentaries on American Law. Vol. 4 12th ed. Littleton, Colo. : F.B. Rothman, 1989, 1873.

Littleton, Thomas. Littleton's Tenures in English. §§ 241-276. Edited by Eugene Wambaugh. Littleton, Colo.: F.B. Rothman, 1985.

Miles, Russell and William Walsh. "Coparceny." American Law of Property. Vol. 2, Part 6. Boston: Little, Brown, 1952.

Moynihan, Cornelius. Introduction to the Law of Real Property. "Tenancy in Coparcenary." Ch. 10, § 8, 2d ed. St. Paul: West Pub. Co., 1988.

Powell, Richard. Powell on Real Property(R) (Michael Allan Wolf, ed. Matthew Bender).

Preston, Richard. An Elementary Treatise on Estates 137-139. Vol. 1. London: J. & W.T. Clarke, 1820.

Tiedeman, Christopher. The American Law of Real Property. § 180. 3d ed. St. Louis: The F.H. Thomas Law Book Co., 1906.

Thomas, David. "Concurrent Ownership." The American Law of Real Property. Vol. 1, Ch. 4. New York: Matthew Bender, 1991.

Thomas, David. "Tenancy in Common, Tenancy in Partnership, and Tenancy in Coparcenary." Powell on Real Property(R), ch. 50 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed. Matthew Bender).

Tiffany, Herbert. The Law of Real Property. Vol. 1, § 193. Chicago: Callaghan, 1920.

Walsh, William. A Treatise on the Law of Property. § 201. 2d ed. New York: Baker, Voorhis, 1937.

Articles

Anderson, Curtis. "A Model Statute for the Development of Oil and Gas Interests held Under Joint Ownership." B.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 1993 (1993) 1317 (discusses generally applicable concurrent ownership accounting principles).

Casagrande, John G., Jr. "Acquiring Property Through Forced Partitioning Sales: "Abuses and Remedies." B.C. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1986) 755 (discussing compulsory partition).

Cocke, William. "Partition: Coparceners." Va. L.J. Vol. 7 (1883) 5.

Craig-Taylor, Phyliss. "Through a Colored Looking Glass: A View of Judicial Partition, Family Land Loss, and Rule Setting." Wash. U. L. Q. Vol. 78 (Fall 2000) 737.

Dillard, G.M. "Limitation to the Right of Contribution Between Co-Parceners, & c." Va. L.J. Vol. 14 (1890) 137.

Fisher, John W. "Creditors of a Joint Tenant: Is There a Lien After Death?" W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 99 (1997) 673 (explains common law coparcenary).

Fisher, John W. "If Judgment Creditors Cannot Set Asunder a Debtor Spouse's Interest in the Marital Home, What Can They Do?" W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 97 (1995) 339 (discusses "coparceny" as early form of co-ownership).

Fisher, John W. "The Scope of Title Examination in West Virginia: Can Reasonable Minds Differ?" W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 98 (1996) 449 (discusses whether possession by one of several coparceners who makes an executory contract to purchase others' shares is constructive notice to the world of the purchase).

Fisher, John W. & Scott A. Churnette. "Reforming the Law of Intestate Succession and Elective Shares: New Solutions to Age-Old Problems." W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 93 (1990) 61 (refers to West Virginia hotchpot statutory provision).

Lewis, Evelyn Alicia. "Struggling with Quicksand: The Ins and Outs of Cotenant Possession Value Liability and a Call for Default Rule Reform." Wis L. Rev. Vol. 1994 (1994) 331 (includes discussion of history of coparcenary).

Loyd, William. "Partition." U. Pa. L. Rev. Vol. 67 (1919) 162.

McCauliff, C.M.A. "The Medieval English Marriage Portion From Cases of Mort D'Ancestor and Foremedon." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1993) 933 (article mentions writs of cosinages brought by parceners).

McKnight, Joseph W. "Family Law: Husband and Wife." S.M.U. L. J. Vol. 44 (1990) 1 (mentions owelty in partition between coparceners and a creditor).

Orth, John V. "Tenancy By The Entirety: The Strange Career of The Common-Law Marital Estate." B.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 1997 (1997) 35 (cites Tenancy in Coparcenary, in 4 Thompson on Real Property § 35.08 (David A. Thomas ed., 1994)).

Rhodes, Anne-Marie E. "Abandoning Parents Under Intestacy: Where We Are, Where Need To Go." Ind. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1994) 517 (includes Ohio Revised Code Annotated § 2106.10 providing that where abandoning parent is prohibited from inheriting from his deceased child, the property passes in parcenary as if parent had predeceased the deceased child).

Weinberger, Alan M. "Expanding the Fiduciary Relationship Bestiary: Does Concurrent Ownership Satisfy the Family Resemblance Test?" Seton Hall L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1994) 1767 (states that coparcenary is now an obsolete form of ownership).

Yiannopoulos, A. N. "The Legal Servitude of Passage." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 71 (1996) 1 (the term "coparceners" is used throughout to mean co-workers).

Annotations

Annotation, Accountability of Cotenants for Rents and Profits or Use and Occupation, 51 A.L.R.2d 388.

Annotation, Adverse Possession Between Cotenants, 82 A.L.R.2d 5.

Annotation, Adverse Possession Between Cotenants Who Are Unaware of Cotenancy, 27 A.L.R.4th 420.

Annotation, Burden of Proof in Partition Suits as Regards Alleged Prior Voluntary Partition of Property, 1 A.L.R.2d 247; 1 A.L.R.2d 473.

Annotation, Contribution, Subrogation and Similar Rights, as Between Cotenants, Where One Pays the Other's Share of Sum Owing on Mortgage or Other Lien, 48 A.L.R.2d 1305.

Annotation, Estate Created by Deed to Persons Described as Husband and Wife But Not Legally Married, 9 A.L.R.4th 1189.

Annotation, Grant of Part of Cotenancy Land, Taken from Less Than All Cotenants, as Subject to Protection Through Partition, 77 A.L.R.2d 1376.

Annotation, Property Rights Arising from Relationship of Couple Cohabiting Without Marriage, 3 A.L.R.4th 13.

Annotation, Right to Partition of Overriding Royalty Interest in Oil and Gas Leasehold, 58 A.L.R.3d 1052.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 35 Tenancy in Coparcenary

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 35.05

Supp. to § 35.05 Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Other Real Property Interests.

[Go To Main]

§ 35.05(a) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy in Common. [Go To Main]

Add:

Annotation, Rights and remedies of judgment creditor or of purchaser under execution, in respect of estate in real property held in joint tenancy, 111 A.L.R. 171 (stating that "tenancy in coparcenary" shares characteristics with joint tenancies and tenancies in common, but lacks the chief characteristic of a joint tenancy, the right of survivorship).

§ 35.05(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Joint Tenancy. [Go To Main]

Add:

Peter M. Carrozzo, Tenancies in Antiquity: A Transformation of Concurrent Ownership for Modern Relationships, 85 Marq. L. Rev. 434 (2001) (noting that a tenancy by coparcenary was created by the laws of inheritance, never by deed or will, as distinguished from joint tenancies, which before the Statute of Wills in 1540 could be created only by inter vivos conveyance).

§ 35.05(c) Tenancy in Coparcenary Distinguished from Tenancy by the Entirety. [Go To Main]

Add:

See In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73, 78-80 (E.D. Va. 2004) for a concise explanation of Blackstone on this point.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 35 Tenancy in Coparcenary

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 35.06

Supp. to § 35.06 Incidents of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Morris v. Morris, 2004 Va. App. LEXIS 447 (Va. Ct. App. 2004) (No. 3173-03-4, Va. Ct. App., Sep. 14, 2004) (Virginia Code Annotated § 8.01-31 states that "An accounting in equity may be had against any fiduciary or by one joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion"). See also In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2004) ("Tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners, shall be compellable to make partition") (quoting Va. Code § 1 (1849)).

§ 35.06(b) Accounting and Contribution Among Coparceners. [Go To Main]

Add:

Morris v. Morris, 2004 Va. App. LEXIS 447 (Va. Ct. App. 2004) (No. 3173-03-4, Va. Ct. App., Sep. 14, 2004) (Virginia Code Annotated § 8.01-31 states that "An accounting in equity may be had against any fiduciary or by one joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion). See also Hutchins v. Payless Auto Sales, Inc., 85 P.3d 1010 (Wyo. 2004) (Wyoming Statutes Annotated § 1-32-119 (2003) allows one tenant in common or coparcener to recover his share of rents and profits from a cotenant and to maintain an action of waste against another).

§ 35.06(c) Actions by Coparceners. [Go To Main]

Add:

But see Hutchins v. Payless Auto Sales, Inc., 85 P.3d 1010 (Wyoming Statutes Annotated § 1-32-119 (2003) allows one tenant in common or coparcener to recover his share of rents and profits from a cotenant and to maintain an action of waste against another) (emphasis added).

§ 35.06(e) Curtesy and Dower on Tenancies in Coparcenary. [Go To Main]

Lochhaas v. Burnett, 77 S.W.3d 12 (Mo. Ct. App. 2002) (noting that the estate of tenancy in coparcenary is subject to both curtesy and dower) (citing Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.030 (2000)).

Estates and Interests Arising from Marriage, 2 Tiffany Real Prop. § 561 (2004) ("If the wife holds property in common or coparcenary with others, the husband is entitled to curtesy").

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 35 Tenancy in Coparcenary

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 35.07

Supp. to § 35.07 Partition of Tenancy in Coparcenary.

[Go To Main]

Add:

See, e.g., Romero v. Bernell, 603 F. Supp. 2d 1333 (D.N.M. 2009) (statute authorizing partition for lands held in tenancy in coparcenary).

Annotation, Right to, and effect of, partition of undivided interests held respectively in fee and in life estate with remainder, 134 A.L.R. 661 (2004) (noting that most statutes allowing for partition of land held in coparcenary also allow partition by sale when partition by kind would result in prejudice).

Add:

See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 520495, 52-502; Rev. Stat. Mo. § 528.040 (2000).

§ 35.07(b) Compulsory Partition. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2004) ("Tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners, shall be compellable to make partition") (quoting Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.117 (1849)). See also Maitland v. Allen, 594 S.E.2d 918

(Va. 2004) (Virginia Code Annotated § 8.01-81 provides that "coparceners of real property ... shall be compellable to make partition and may compel partition").

§ 35.07(d) "Hotchpot." [Go To Main]

Advancement--Doctrine of Hotchpot, 1 Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Merrick-Rippner Prob. L. § 20.3 (Angela G. Carlin ed., 2004) (The term "hotchpot" means the blending and mixing of property belonging to different persons in order to divide it equally).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 35 Tenancy in Coparcenary

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 35.08

Supp. to § 35.08 Status of Tenancy in Coparcenary in the United States Today.

[Go To Main]

§ 35.08(a) In General. [Go To Main]

Morris v. Morris, 2004 Va. App. LEXIS 447 (Va. Ct. App. 2004) (No. 3173-03-4, Va. Ct. App., Sep. 14, 2004) (citing Virginia Code Annotated § 8.01-31, providing that "[a]n accounting in equity may be had against any fiduciary or by one joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener for receiving more than comes to his just share"); In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2004) ("Tenants in common, joint tenants, and coparceners, shall be compellable to make partition") (quoting Va. Code § 1 (1849)). See also Mable Cleary Trust v. Edward-Marlah Muzyl Trust, 686 N.W.2d 770 (Mich. Ct. App. 2004) (citing Mich. Comp. Laws § 319.101 and listing coparceners as a form of joint ownership to which the statute applies); Maitland v. Allen, 594 S.E.2d 918 (Va. 2004) (Virginia Code Annotated § 8.01-81 provides that "coparceners of real property ... shall be compellable to make partition and may compel partition"); Gray v. Koons, No. CA 03-964, 2004 Ark. App. LEXIS 277 (Apr. 7, 2004) (citing Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-102(b) which includes coparceners with joint tenants, tenants in common, and other co-owners); LaBow v. Rubin, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 611 (No. CV030400970S, Mar. 12, 2004) ("[A]ny person holding real property as a joint tenant, tenant in common, coparcener or tenant in tail has a right to partition pursuant to Connecticut General Statutes Annotated § 52-495); Hutchins v. Payless Auto Sales, Inc., 85 P.3d 1010 (Wyo. 2004) (Wyoming Statutes Annotated § 1-32-119 (2003) allows one tenant in common or coparcener to recover his share of rents and profits from a cotenant and to maintain an action of waste against another).

Add:

Hutchins v. Payless Auto Sales, 85 P.3d 1010 (Wyoming Statutes Annotated § 1-32-119 (2003) allows one tenant in common or coparcener to recover his share of rents and profits from a cotenant and to maintain an action of waste against another).

§ 35.08(b) Tenancy in Coparcenary Statutes. [Go To Main]

Add:

Labow v. Rubin, 95 Conn. App. 454 (2006) ; Stone v. Stone, 2006 Ohio 1996 (Ohio Ct. App. 2006) (No. 6-04-12, Ohio App., April 24, 2006); Campbell v. Harmon, 628 S.E.2d 308 (Va. 2006) ; Green v. Southern Landfill Management, Inc., 914 So. 2d 705 (Miss. 2005) ; Kester v. Small, 618 S.E.2d 380 (W. Va. 2005) .

Change* Id § 3951 to Id tit. 12 § 3951.

Change* D.C. Code Ann. § 45-217 to D.C. Code Ann. § 42-517

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 35 Tenancy in Coparcenary

4-35 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 35.09

Supp. to § 35.09 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Books:

Cribbet, John E. and Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 101-102 (3d ed. 1989).

Estates and Interests Arising from Marriage, 2 Tiffany Real Prop. § 561 (2004) ("If the wife holds property in common or coparcenary with others, the husband is entitled to curtesy").

Add to Articles:

Gillian K. Bearns, Note, Real Property--Giulietti v. Giulietti--Partition by Private Sale Absent Specific Statutory Authority, 26 W. New Eng. L. Rev. 125 (2004) (discussing coparceners and the historical development of partition).

Ralph C. Brashier, Consanguinity, Sibling Relationships, and the Default Rules of Inheritance Law: Reshaping Half-Blood Statutes to Reflect the Evolving Family, 58 SMU L. Rev. 137 (2005) (citing the Ohio Revised Code Annotated § 2105.06 which states that when a person dies intestate having title or right to any personal property, or to any real estate or inheritance, in this state, the personal property shall be distributed, and the real estate or inheritance shall descend and pass in parcenary).

Peter M. Carrozzo, Tenancies in Antiquity: A Transformation of Concurrent Ownership for Modern Relationships, 85 Marq. L. Rev. 434 (2001) (noting that a tenancy by coparcenary was created by the laws of inheritance, never by deed or will, as distinguished from joint tenancies, which before the Statute of Wills in 1540 could only be created by inter vivos conveyance).

Add to Annotations:

Louise Harmon & Eileen Kaufman, Dazzling the World: A Study of India's Constitutional Amendment Mandating Reservations for Women on Rural Panchayats, 19 Berkeley Women's L.J. 32 (2004) (discussing all-male coparcenary with respect to ancestral property).

Rosisch-Schwartz, Damaris. "Tenancy by the Entirety: The Traditional Version of the Tenancy is the Best Alternative for Married Couples, Common Law Marriages, and Same-Sex Partnerships," 84 N.D. L. Rev. 23 (2008).

Annotation, Rights and remedies of judgment creditor or of purchaser under execution, in respect of estate in real property held in joint tenancy, 111 A.L.R. 171 (stating that "tenancy in coparcenary" shares characteristics with joint tenancies and tenancies in common, but lacks the chief characteristic of a joint tenancy, the right of survivorship).

Annotation, Right to, and effect of, partition of undivided interests held respectively in fee and in life estate with remainder, 134 A.L.R. 661 (2004) (noting that most statutes allowing for partition of land held in coparcenary also allow partition by sale when partition by kind would result in prejudice).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 36.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.syn Synopsis to Chapter 36: CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

§ 36.01 Overview of the Law of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

§ 36.02 Outline of the Chapter.

§ 36.03 Definitions.

§ 36.04 Distinctive Features of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

§ 36.04(a) Condominiums Distinguished from Cooperatives.

§ 36.04(b) Condominiums and Cooperatives Distinguished from Other Types of Property Interests.

§ 36.05 History of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

§ 36.05(a) Origins of Condominiums.

§ 36.05(b) Origins of Cooperatives.

§ 36.06 Creation of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

§ 36.06(a) Terminology and Statutory Provisions.

§ 36.06(b) Instruments of Creation.

§ 36.06(b)(1) Condominium Instruments.

§ 36.06(b)(2) Cooperative Instruments.

§ 36.07 Tort and Contract Liabilities Associated with Condominiums and Cooperatives

§ 36.07(a) Liability of the Condominium Association.

§ 36.07(b) Liability of the Cooperative Association.

§ 36.08 Termination.

§ 36.08(a) Termination of Condominiums.

§ 36.08(b) Termination of Cooperatives.

§ 36.09 Disclosures Required Before Sale of Condominium and Cooperative Interests.

§ 36.09(a) Introduction.

§ 36.09(b) Disclosure Statement.

§ 36.09(c) Development/Developer Identity.

§ 36.09(d) Narrative Description of the Project.

§ 36.09(e) Construction Status.

§ 36.09(f) Financing.

§ 36.09(g) Warranties.

§ 36.09(h) Common Area Expenses.

§ 36.09(i) Association Management and Contracts.

§ 36.09(j) Encumbrances and Liens.

§ 36.09(k) Restraints on Transfer.

§ 36.09(l) Pending Litigation.

§ 36.10 Legal Rules Governing Association Management and Control.

§ 36.10(a) Constitution and Bylaws.

§ 36.10(b) Management Agreements.

§ 36.10(c) Board of Managers.

§ 36.10(d) Association Officers.

§ 36.10(e) Use and Control of the Premises.

§ 36.10(f) Common Expenses and Profits.

§ 36.11 Common Conflicts Encountered by Condominium and Cooperative Owners

§ 36.11(a) Loss of Deposit/Downpayment.

§ 36.11(b) Burdensome Contracts.

§ 36.11(c) Physical Defects.

§ 36.11(d) Conflicts of Interest.

§ 36.11(e) Financing.

§ 36.11(f) Selection of Occupants and Subleasing.

§ 36.12 Problems Associated with Condominium Conversion.

§ 36.12(a) History.

§ 36.12(b) Legal Issues.

§ 36.13 Remedies for Misconduct by Developer, Association or Owner.

§ 36.13(a) Remedies Against the Developer.

§ 36.13(b) Remedies Against the Association.

§ 36.13(c) Remedies Against Owners.

§ 36.14 Forms.

§ 36.15 Bibliography.

Professor Frederic White
Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.01

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.01 Overview of the Law of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

The law pertaining to condominiums and cooperatives generally is concerned with the property rights of occupants of separate units in multi-unit buildings or developments who seek to secure the benefits of individual ownership together with shared responsibilities. The term "condominium" generally refers to an interest in property based on a system of separate ownership of individual units in multi-unit projects. In contrast, the term "cooperative" usually connotes one of several different kinds of ownership entities used by individuals to acquire the advantages of collective living. Indeed, it has been stated that a condominium is simply a form of cooperative. n1 The rise of the use of the condominium concept in this country essentially is the result of dissatisfaction with the notion of the cooperative.

The term "condominium" originally implied co-ownership and may be rooted in ancient Roman law. The concept was virtually unknown in the United States until the early 1960's. Both condominium and cooperative living arrangements are the result of the inability of many Americans to realize the dream of individual home ownership. This was caused by such diverse factors as large population growth and increased urbanization; scarcity of land within commuting distance of large urban centers; rising costs of real estate, labor and building materials; inflation generally; and smaller, more mobile families. n2 It is likely, also, that certain tax advantages spurred both homebuyers and home builders to examine new types of living arrangements. Various economic factors such as land scarcity, new home construction costs, changing family patterns and lifestyles, together with a growing elderly population, probably will contribute to the steady if not spectacular growth in the condominium ownership concept.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Charles E. Ramsey, Condominium, The New Look in Co-ops, 9 n.3 Prac. Law. 21 (1963).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Symposium on the Law of Condominiums, 48 St. John's L. Rev. No. 4 at xi-xx (1974). See also Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management (1984) (hereafter, Owner's Guide).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.02

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.02 Outline of the Chapter.

This chapter discusses the law of condominiums and cooperatives primarily in the context of residential property rights. The concepts are defined in § 36.03, infra. The concepts are distinguished from each other in § 36.04, infra. The history of condominiums and cooperatives is included in § 36.05, infra.

The legal structure of both concepts is discussed in §§ 36.06-36.08, infra, pre-sale disclosure and association control are discussed in § 36.09, § and § 36.10, infra respectively.

Consumer problems and condominium conversions are discussed in § 36.11 and § 36.12, infra respectively. Concluding the chapter are sections on remedies (§ 36.13) and forms (§ 36.14).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.03

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.03 Definitions.

[Go To Supp]

The term "condominium" has been defined as a system of separate property ownership rights in individual units in multi-unit projects. The term has also been described as a type of joint condominium or co-ownership. It has been stated that the condominium concept established the creation of a set of vertical boundaries separated into horizontal apartments, units, floors or stories. Upon separation, each individual unit has been characterized for real property purposes as being an individual estate in land. n3

Before the introduction of the condominium concept a cooperative was considered to be a generic term for any one of several types of organizations which could be utilized by occupants of individual units to acquire the advantages of joint ownership of real property. Today, occupants of cooperatives are typically tenants of a business entity, usually a corporation, as well as owner-shareholders of the business entity from which they rent. n4

As applied to a building or project, the terms "condominium" or "cooperative" refer to the building or project subject to the condominium form or cooperative form of ownership.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 3. See Uriel Reichman, Residential Private Governments: An Introductory Survey, 43 U. Chi. L. Rev. 253 (1976). See also Condominium Law and Practice, § 1.01 (Matthew Bender). Sea Watch Stores v. Council of Unit Owners of Sea Watch Condo, 691 A.2d 750 (Md. App. 1997), notes that condominiums, while representing a unique form of property ownership, do not create real property. A condominium is a subdivision of land and "no less a subdivision in real property terms than a subdivision of physical grounds that extends, not vertically, but horizontally." Id. at 752. As a result, "both the general law as to the use of real property and the law regulating condominiums apply when one is dealing with the uses to which horizontal slices of a vertical column of real property, i.e., a condominium unit, may be subjected." Id. at 753. A condominium is strictly a creature of statute, and therefore provisions of a declaration under which the condominium is created must conform to statutory requirements; to the extent that they conflict therewith, the statute must prevail. Winkleman v. Toll, 661 So. 2d 102 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1995). "Condominium" combines two distinct forms of ownership of real property: (1) exclusive ownership of individual unit of multi-unit condominium project, and (2) ownership as tenant in common of common areas of project, in proportion to each unit's interest in the total project. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 257 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. App. 1995).

(n2)Footnote 4. See William Jay Lippman, Condominium and Co-op Closings 7-9 (P.L.I., New York, 1987). The fact that cooperatives are essentially corporations, and the owners of cooperatives are thus shareholders, the rights and obligations of the cooperative and its shareholders can involve knotty questions not only of substantive law but of choice of law. In Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 891 F. Supp. 1169 (E.D. Va. 1995) (Delaware corporation law determined whether the price set for units as part of a condominium conversion by the cooperative was fair). See infra § 36.12.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.04

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.04 Distinctive Features of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.04(a) Condominiums Distinguished from Cooperatives.

Condominiums are a form of ownership of real property in which the separately occupied units in a multi-unit building or complex are subject to individual ownership by different owners, with each unit owner holding an appurtenant undivided share in certain aspects of the entire building or complex. Thus, the purchaser of a condominium acquires full title to such buyer's individual unit, plus an undivided interest in common areas and facilities. n5 Such common areas and facilities typically include the lobby, grounds, electrical and mechanical systems, together with recreational facilities such as swimming pools and tennis courts. n6

Unlike the typical condominium arrangement, a cooperative project generally establishes unitary ownership of an entire project, including all individual units and common areas, by an entity such as a corporation. Purchasers of cooperative units generally obtain the right to lease their individual units from the corporation. As a corollary to their leasehold interests such persons also typically receive stock certificates or similar evidence of ownership of shares in the proprietary corporation. Ownership of stock and the tenant's interest in the lease are said to be interdependent. n7

§ 36.04(b) Condominiums and Cooperatives Distinguished from Other Types of Property Interests.

The primary distinguishing feature between condominium and cooperative property owners on the one hand and individual owners of property, on the other hand, is that the former have shared responsibilities with other owners that individual property owners do not possess. Thus, for example, with respect to condominium projects, separate units in a multi-unit building are subject to ownership by different owners, but appurtenant to each individual unit is an undivided ownership share in the common elements. Florida, for example, defines condominiums as "units that may be owned by one or more persons, and in which there is, appurtenant to each unit, an undivided share in common elements." n8

With regard to the common elements, such ownership rights are most directly analogous to the typical kinds of joint entitlement to common areas held by tenants in a multi-tenant building.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 5. See Symposium on the Law of Condominiums, 48 St. John's L. Rev. No. 4, xi-xx (1974). It is not uncommon for the declaration or association bylaws to prohibit severance of the unit ownership or use from the ownership or use of the common areas. See, e.g., Liebler v. Point Loma Tennis Club, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 783 (Cal. App. 1995) (covenant prohibiting severance was valid and reasonable and had been fairly applied).

(n2)Footnote 6. Id. States' condominium laws also recognize what are known as "limited common areas." Such areas are typically defined as "those common elements which are reserved for the use of a certain condominium unit or units to the exclusion of other units, as specified in the declaration of condominium." Fla. Stat. § 718.103(17). These limited common areas are appurtenant to the units to which they are reserved and cannot be separately conveyed. Brown v. Rice, 716 So. 2d 807 (Fla. App. 1998) (attempted conveyance of a parking spot assigned to one unit by owner of that unit to owner of another unit ineffective).

(n3)Footnote 7. For a general description of the cooperative housing concept see the description of Co-op City, New York, contained in United Housing Found., Inc. v. Forman, 421 U.S. 837, reh'g denied, 423 U.S. 884 (1975). See Quality Mgmt. Services v. Banker, 685 N.E.2d 367 (Ill. App. 1997) (lease arrangement in usual cooperative apartment organizations created sufficient indicia of landlord tenant relationship as to make Forcible Entry and Detainer Statute applicable to cooperatives). But see Kadera v. Superior Court, 931 P.2d 1067 (Ariz. App. 1996) (cooperative arrangement is not a landlord-tenant arrangement; cooperative corporation's remedy against shareholder lay in Arizona's real estate laws not its landlord-tenant laws). The owner of shares in a cooperative housing project is treated like the owner of a house or apartment in applying the limits on deductions for dwelling units. Loss Limits for Dwellings Apply to Co-Op Apartments, Tax'n for Accountants (Aug. 1996); Firth v. Lu, 12 P.3d 618 (Wash. App. 2000) (even though a purchaser of a cooperative unit acquires shares of stock, the interest transferred is an interest in real property, and thus a contract to purchase such a unit must comply with the statute of frauds; the contract in this case lacked a legal description of the property and thus did not comply with the statute of frauds).

(n4)Footnote 8. Fla. Stat.. § 20-718.103(10). The affairs of the condominium association are controlled by the Condominium Property Act. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995). "Condominium" combines two distinct forms of ownership of real property: (1) exclusive ownership of individual unit of multi-unit condominium project, and (2) ownership as tenant in common of common areas of project, in proportion to each unit's interest in the total project. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 257 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. App. 1995). Schwartzman v. Schoening, 669 N.E.2d 228 (Mass. App. 1996) (right to use condominium parking space is in the nature of an easement appurtenant to condominium unit). As a Pennsylvania court put it "[A] condominium form of ownership in real estate succeeds because unit owners agree to cooperate in maintenance of common elements." Mayflower Square Condominium Ass'n v. KMALM, Inc., 724 A.2d 389 (Pa. 1999).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.05

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.05 History of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

First Amendment

§ 36.05(a) Origins of Condominiums.

According to at least one author, there is evidence of the sale of a part of a building in ancient Babylon nearly two thousand years prior to the birth of Christ. n9 Evidence of a system similar to condominiums has been found by researchers among various ancient ethnic cultures including the Greeks, the Hebrews, the Moslems and the Egyptians. n10 Nevertheless, it has been written that the evidence has been "inconclusive" that the Romans, to whom the condominium concept is mostly attributed, accepted the condominium concept in its totality. n11

Although "condominium" originally connoted co-ownership, and is rooted in ancient Roman Law, n12 the condominium's true beginnings in the Western Hemisphere can be traced to its introduction in Puerto Rico with the enactment of the Horizontal Property Statute in 1958. n13 The concept did not really begin to play a significant role in American property ownership until a 1964 amendment to § 234 of the National Housing Act. n14 In that year Congress authorized the F.H.A. to issue mortgage insurance for "individually owned units in multi-family structures." n15 The amendment authorized insurance of mortgages to finance construction, rehabilitation, and sale of condominiums. The amendment also permitted the issuance of blanket mortgages as well as allowing for condominiums of more than one structure. Such changes apparently inspired and motivated the "rapid state of legislative endorsement of the condominium concept." n16

Condominium law is still a relatively new concept in the United States. With the passage of the National Housing Act, Congress paved the way for the states to enact appropriate condominium legislation. Today, all fifty states, together with the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands, have enacted condominium legislation. n17

§ 36.05(b) Origins of Cooperatives.

While not as new as the condominium concept, the cooperative was nevertheless not introduced to the United States until after World War I. The cooperative's legislative origins are generally the same as the condominium's. Today, because the cooperative has been surpassed in usage by the condominium in virtually every section of the country, with the possible exception of New York State, most discussion of cooperatives in this chapter is subsumed within the discussion of condominiums.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 9. Alberto Ferrer & Karl Stecher, Law of Condominium 15 (1967).

(n2)Footnote 10. Id.

(n3)Footnote 11. Alberto Ferrer & Karl Stecher, Law of Condominium 17 (1967).

(n4)Footnote 12. See Charles W. Pittman, Land Without Earth -- The Condominium, 15 U. Fla. L. Rev. 203, 205 (1962); Condominium law and Practice, § 1.01 (Matthew Bender).

(n5)Footnote 13. P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, §§ 1291-1293(k).

(n6)Footnote 14. 12 U.S.C. § 01715y.

(n7)Footnote 15. 12 U.S.C. § 01715y.

(n8)Footnote 16. Alberto Ferrer & Karl Stecher, Law of Condominium, ch. 3, § 31 (1967).

(n9)Footnote 17. See the Practical Lawyer's Manual of Modern Real Estate Practices 87 (Joint Committee on Continuing Legal Education, American Law Institute, American Bar Association, 1969).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.06

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.06 Creation of Condominiums and Cooperatives.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.06(a) Terminology and Statutory Provisions.

Unlike most Anglo-American concepts of property law, condominium ownership is based on statutory authority, not on common law concepts. Every jurisdiction in the United States has enacted a condominium statute. n18 All of them attempt to regulate procedures, delineate the duties of the individual unit owners as well as of the condominium association, provide for distribution of responsibilities in the event of damage, destruction or condemnation, and determine the legal rights of condominium unit owners and associations in the event of defaulting individual unit owners. In addition, such statutes generally provide for prohibitions against partition and for separate property tax assessments of individual units. Model legislation, drafted by the Federal Housing Administration, provides the basis for some American condominium legislation. n19 In addition, the Uniform Condominium Act, initially approved in 1977 and amended in 1980, provides the basis for other state condominium legislation. n20

West Virginia was the first state to model its condominium legislation on the Uniform Act. n21 West Virginia condominium law provides for the creation and organization, continued operation, termination and transfer of condominium interests. Its provisions apply only to property that has been specifically designated as condominium property pursuant to a declaration executed and filed for record by the condominium owner. Any condominium that is created and structured so as to comply with West Virginia law creates either a valid fee simple interest in the property or a leasehold. n22 Other states adopting the Uniform Act or variations of it include: Maine, n23 Minnesota, n24 Alabama, n25 Missouri, n26 New Mexico, n27 and Arizona. n28 Condominiums and cooperatives are sometimes discussed as interchangeable, but actually possess significant differences. A condominium owner possesses essentially two types of property interests: (1) individual ownership of, usually, a residential unit, n29 and (2) shared ownership of common areas and facilities. By way of contrast, the cooperative owner is usually a shareholder in a corporation which owns the entire facility. Typically, cooperative residents hold proprietary leases on their residence units by virtue of their shareholder status. They are responsible for paying for the periodic costs associated with their individual leases, together with their respective shares of overhead for the entire facility. In these kinds of arrangements the corporation owns the property and thus only the corporation may mortgage it. This sometimes makes purchase more difficult than it would be in a typical condominium situation. The cooperative seems to be used primarily in east coast communities. n30

The provisions of the various state statutes authorizing the establishment of the condominium, in addition to those of Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia, vary considerably in their terminology. Such variations include differences in the names of the statutes themselves. For example, such names as "Horizontal Property Act," n31 "Horizontal Property Regimes Act," n32 and "Condominium Property Act" n33 exist throughout the various states. Cooperative housing legislation, on the other hand, might be embodied within a statute involving the rights of tenants. The Florida legislation, called the "Housing and Rent Act of 1948," n34 was one example. Although its use is generally said to pre-date that of the condominium in the United States, a model act for the cooperative was not approved until some years after uniform condominium legislation. n35 Only one state, Virginia, n36 has enacted the Uniform Cooperative Act.

The term condominium is generally used in three different ways: to denote a system of property ownership, to indicate the entire building or project existing under such ownership, and to identify individual units and appurtenant ownership interests in common elements of the condominium. While condominiums are usually created using the fee simple estate, only a statutory prohibition is thought to be able to prevent a condominium from being formed using a long term leasehold estate. n37 The same is generally true for cooperatives. n38

Because condominiums are enabled by statutory authority, courts must look to the statutory scheme as well as the individual project's condominium declaration and other documents to determine the legal rights of owners and the association. n39 The documents creating the condominium usually consist of a condominium declaration, articles of incorporation for the condominium association, bylaws for the governance of the association, the operation of the project and the conduct of the individual unit holders, and the deeds used for conveying each individual condominium unit.

Cooperatives generally require some type of corporate charter, corporation bylaws and leases or occupancy agreements for individual unit holders.

The condominium declaration or master deed is generally the instrument that establishes the condominium entity. n40 Typically, the declaration or master deed must be filed with the proper public recording officer in the jurisdiction where the condominium property is situated. n41 It has been held that the condominium declaration is more than a mere contract delineating the mutual rights and obligations of the parties. It also assumes some of the attributes of a covenant running with the land, circumscribing the extent and limits of the use and enjoyment of real property. n42 Indeed, absent consent, or an amendment to the declaration, the enjoyment and use of the real property cannot be impaired or diminished. n43 Thus, it has been held that where restrictions contained in a condominium declaration are unclear, and capable of being exercised in an arbitrary, capricious and unreasonable manner, they will be held invalid and unenforceable. n44

Articles of incorporation and bylaws for condominium associations generally conform to the practices of each local jurisdiction for the typical proprietary business entity. Deeds for individual condominium units must conform to local conveyance practice which, of course, includes sufficient designation of the particular unit transferred. In addition, other matters such as use restrictions and covenants are incorporated by reference into the deed.

The dominant organizational structure for the cooperative is the corporate form. n45 The other forms of concurrent ownership, including the joint tenancy, the tenancy in common or the business trust, all have been found to be of limited utility. A joint tenancy arrangement is impractical, for example, because its creation requires a conveyance to all the grantees simultaneously by means of a single instrument. A tenancy in common arrangement would be problematic because of the potential for unlimited liability attaching to individual apartment holders for obligations incurred in the maintenance or use of the cooperative project.

Documentation for the typical kind of corporate cooperative organization usually includes a corporate charter or articles of incorporation, a set of corporate bylaws and a proprietary lease or occupancy agreements for the holders of each individual unit. These documents taken together constitute the contract between the owners and the cooperative corporation. Cooperatives' bylaws are generally analogous to the condominium bylaws and declaration.

§ 36.06(b) Instruments of Creation.

§ 36.06(b)(1) Condominium Instruments.

The creation of a condominium generally requires articles of incorporation or of the association representing the owners. In addition, there is usually a set of association bylaws, as well as deeds for each individual unit. The most important condominium document, however, is the condominium declaration. According to the Uniform Condominium Act it should contain at least the following information:

(1) the name of the condominium;

(2) the name of every local jurisdiction (i.e., county) in which any part of the condominium is located;

(3) a legally sufficient description of the real estate included in the condominium;

(4) a statement of the maximum number of units which the declarant reserves the right to create;

(5) a description of the boundaries of each unit;

(6) a description of limited common elements;

(7) a description of any real estate (except real estate subject to development rights) which may be allocated subsequently as limited common elements;

(8) a description of any special development rights or other types of special rights reserved by the declarant, together with a legally sufficient description of the real estate to which such rights apply;

(9) if any development rights may be exercised with respect to different parcels of real estate at different times, a statement to that effect, together with other pertinent information with respect to such rights;

(10) any other conditions or limitations under which the rights described in paragraph (8) may be exercised or will lapse;

(11) an allocation to each unit of common element interests, votes and common expense liabilities;

(12) any restrictions on use, occupancy and alienation of units; and

(13) recording data for easements, licenses and the like which affect the condominium. n46

Of course, states that have adopted the Uniform Condominium Act or variations of it generally require the foregoing declaration information. n47 It has been held in disputes involving purported ambiguities in a condominium declaration that such ambiguities must be construed against the developer who authored the declaration. n48

§ 36.06(b)(2) Cooperative Instruments.

Like the condominium, the cooperative also generally requires an organizational charter, usually corporate in form, a set of bylaws and a proprietary lease or occupancy agreement. It is common to restrict the sale of cooperative shares or memberships. The Uniform Cooperative Act also provides for a declaration of cooperative which contains provisions not unlike those contained in the Uniform Condominium Act. n49 It appears, generally, however, that the material appearing in the Uniform Act's "declaration" is included as bylaws of most cooperatives. Such bylaws typically contain the following information: name and location of the corporation; purpose; membership eligibility; transfers of membership by death; termination of membership; meetings and voting procedures; qualification and removal of directors; election and removal of officers; methods of amendment; and fiscal management. With respect to use and occupancy regulations, one lease commentator has written:

> In corporate cooperatives, provisions imposing restraints on alienation and occupancy of the apartments and procedures for the enforcement of assessments against the tenant-owners must be carefully drawn so as to comply with policy mandates of the law and effectively secure objectives of the parties. It is important to provide that the successors to the original tenants will be bound by all the provisions in the corporate-lease setup and that the integral plan of operation will be preserved, irrespective of such things as bankruptcies of particular tenants, the passing of property by testate or intestate succession, or as a result of claims against the estate of a tenant-cooperator. n50

Occasionally, questions of unreasonable restraints on alienation arise in the cooperative housing field. An early case, for example, Gale v. York Center Community Cooperative, n51 examined the question of whether a cooperative housing association could partially restrain the alienability of its members' property interests in order to maintain its existence as a cooperative enterprise. In agreeing with the trial court which held such restraints as valid, the Supreme Court of Illinois stated:

> It seems to us the agreements [between the association and individual unit holders] show a studied effort on the part of the association to retain some voice in the selection of new members and at the same time give its members as much freedom as possible in alienating their interests. Experience shows this to be the only way to keep cooperative housing co-operative ... As necessary as these restrictions may be to > cooperative housing, it must be determined whether they violate the rule against restraints on alienation.

>
> * * *
>
> We are of the opinion that the utility of the restraints in this agreement outweigh the injurious consequences to the public, if any. The legislature has given its approval to ownership of residential property on a co-operative basis by providing that not-for-profit corporations may be organized for this purpose. [citations omitted]. The restrictions on transfer of a membership are reasonably necessary to the continued existence of the co-operative association. This demonstrates the social utility of the partial restraints and might of itself be a basis for sustaining them. In addition, however, enforcement of the restraints in question would not appear to produce injurious consequences to the public. n52

On the other hand, however, it has been held that a cooperative association could disapprove a sublease of an apartment pursuant to a vote of the stockholders when the plaintiff had negotiated a contract of sale with the general agent of the defendant cooperative apartment owner and the contract provided, among other things, that the plaintiff could sell or rent one of the apartments included in the contract.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 18. For a complete list of enabling legislation see Appendix B-1, Condominium law and Practice (Matthew Bender); see also Ferrer & Stecher, Law of Condominium, ch. 7 (1967). See also Uniform Condominium Act (hereinafter Uniform Act), National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (1977). See generally Condominiums, Planned Unit Developments and Conversion Documents (Committee on Continuing Professional Education, American Law Institute, American Bar Association, 1985). The fact that condominiums, as a legal form of property ownership, are initially creatures of statute has two major consequences. First, a condominium simply does not exist as a legal entity unless statutory requirements for its creation have been met. See infra § 36.06(b). Second, the rights and obligations of owners are found in part in the statutes governing condominiums and in part in the condominium declaration and the bylaws of the condominium association. In some cases, the developer or unit owners of a condominium may adjust their statutory rights and duties through the declaration and bylaws; in others, the statute trumps inconsistent declarations and bylaws. For example, in Dunes South Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. First Flight Builders, Inc., 459 S.E.2d 477 (N.C. 1995), the court held that the developer was statutorily bound to pay its pro-rata share of maintenance expenses for common areas based upon the number of units it owned, even though the condominium declaration exempted the developer from an obligation to make these payments.

(n2)Footnote 19. See Model Statute for the Creation of Apartment Ownership (Federal Housing Administration) (hereinafter, F.H.A. Model Act). See also Curtis J. Berger, Condominium, Shelter or a Statutory Foundation, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 987 (1963).

(n3)Footnote 20. Uniform Condominium Act, 1977 (National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws). In New Hampshire, the court determined that the Condominium Act applies to all condominium projects, although the Act's administration and enforcement provisions do not generally apply if not more than ten units are included in the condominium. Patch v. Arsenault, 653 A.2d 1079 (N.H. 1995).

(n4)Footnote 21. See W. Va. Code §§ 36B-4-101-36B-4-118.

(n5)Footnote 22. Id.

(n6)Footnote 23. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33-1601-101-33-1604-118.

(n7)Footnote 24. See Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 515A.1.101-515A.4-117.

(n8)Footnote 25. See Ala. Code §§ 35-8A-101-35-8A-417.

(n9)Footnote 26. See Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 448.1-101-448.4-120.

(n10)Footnote 27. See N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 47-7A-1-47-7D-20.

(n11)Footnote 28. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 33-1201-33-1270.

(n12)Footnote 29. While this chapter is primarily concerned with residential condominium relations, most states provide for the creation and establishment of condominiums in non-residential property, including unimproved land and commercial and industrial buildings and projects. See generally Charles A. Goldstein et al., Commercial and Industrial Condominiums: An Overall Analysis, 48 no. 4 St. John's L. Rev. 817 (1974); Daniel S. Shapiro, *Commercial Condominiums: Significant Tax Benefits If Pro*perly Structured, 41 J. Taxation 46 (1974); Daniel S. Shapiro, Commercial Condominiums: Tax Considerations for Unit Purchasers and the Association, 41 J. Taxation 204 (1974).

(n13)Footnote 30. See William J. Lippman, Condominium and Co-op Closings, 7-9 (P.L.I. 1987).

(n14)Footnote 31. See, e.g., Ark. Code Ann. §§ 18-13-101-18-13-120; D.C. Code Ann. tit. 45, §§ 1701-1734; S.C. Code Ann. §§ 27-31-10-27-31-300.

(n15)Footnote 32. See Alaska Stat., tit. 34, §§ 7-10-7-460; Wash. Code Rev., tit. 64, §§ 64.32.010 - 64.32.920

(n16)Footnote 33. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.

(n17)Footnote 34. See Fla. Stat. ch. 719. This has since been changed to the "Cooperative Act." Fla. Stat. § 20a-719.

(n18)Footnote 35. See Uniform Model Real Estate Cooperative Act (National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws 1981).

(n19)Footnote 36. Va. Code §§ 13.1-301-13.1-311.1.

(n20)Footnote 37. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.401.

(n21)Footnote 38. See Fla. Stat. § 20a-719.401.

(n22)Footnote 39. Woodside Village Condo Assn. v. Jahren, 806 So. 2d 452 (Fla. 2002).

(n23)Footnote 40. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.05; Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.103(13). For an excellent brief description of the typical process by which the condominium form of ownership is created, see Harrington v. Blackston, 459 S.E.2d 309 (S.C. App. 1995).

(n24)Footnote 41. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.06. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n v. Hidden Village, Inc., 915 P.2d 845 (Mont. 1996) (the declaration is the instrument which when filed subjects property to the statutory regime governing condominiums; property not included in the declaration is not covered by statute even if described in a survey related to condominium development).

(n25)Footnote 42. Pepe v. Whispering Sands Condo. Ass'n, 351 So. 2d 755 (Fla. App. 1975). Board of Directors of 175 East Delaware Pl. Homeowners Ass'n v. Hinojosa, 679 N.E.2d 407 (Ill. App. 1997) (all restrictions in the declaration enjoy a presumption of validity and are covenants that run with the land).

(n26)Footnote 43. Id.

(n27)Footnote 44. O'Neil v. Atwell, 598 N.E.2d 110, jurisdictional motion overruled, 579 N.E.2d 1453 (Ohio 1991).

(n28)Footnote 45. Other kinds of organizational structures for the cooperative include: co-ownership in joint tenancy, co-ownership as tenants in common and the "Massachusetts" or business trust form of organization. For further discussion of these types of cooperative arrangements see for example: David Clurman et al., Condominiums and Cooperatives, 181-187 (2d ed. 1984); Walter W. Miller, Cooperative Apartments: Real Estate or Securities, §§ 45 B.U. L. Rev. 463 (1965); and Philip M. Smith, A Survey of the Legal Aspects of Cooperative Apartment Ownership, 16 U. Miami L. Rev. 305 (1961). Wapnick v. Seven Park Ave. Corp., 658 N.Y.S.2d 604 (A.D. 1st Dept. 1997) (provision of Business Corporation Law prohibiting unequal treatment of shareholders holding same class of stock applies to cooperative corporation and invalidates assessment of varying fees depending on whether shareholder is an original or subsequent purchaser of shares).

(n29)Footnote 46. Uniform Condominium Act § 2-105.

(n30)Footnote 47. See, e.g., W. Va. Code § 36B-2-105. In construing the statute governing the declaration of condominium, words of common usage should be construed in their plain and ordinary sense. Condominium associations are strictly creatures of statute, and their powers and duties, including the power to raise funds, must be strictly construed. Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condominium Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. App. 1995). A condominium is strictly a creature of statute, and therefore provisions of declaration under which the condominium is created must conform to statutory requirements; to the extent that they conflict therewith, the statute must prevail. Winkleman v. Toll, 661 So. 2d 102 (Fla. App. 1995).

(n31)Footnote 48. See Alternative Dev., Inc. v. St. Lucie Club & Apt. Homes Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 608 So. 2d 822 (Fla. App. 1992); Bradford Square Condominium Assn., Inc. v. Miller, 573 S.E.2d 405 (Ga. App. 2002) (the instruments govern the legal rights between the condominium unit owners and the association). Amending the condominium master deed to extend time to add additional phases to the condominium was improper without approval of all unit owners whose percentage interest in common areas was affected. Although the master deed permitted the developer to add phases without approval of any unit owner, this right was limited to seven years after recording of the master deed, and since there were no phases added by the time the right expired, the unit owner's percentage interest became fixed. Suprenant v. First Trade Union Sav. Bank, FSB, 666 N.E.2d 1026 (Mass. App. 1996). Operative documents of the condominium association, such as bylaws and declarations, give rise to both tort and contract obligations. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Aspen Alps Condominium Ass'n, 915 F. Supp. 1122 (D. Colo. 1996). The declaration is an instrument by which property is submitted to provisions of the Unit Ownership Act, and actual filing of the declaration is an action which subjects the property in question to the provisions of the Act. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n v. Hidden Village, Inc., 915 P.2d 845 (Mont. 1996). The Common Interest Ownership Act (CIOA) is a comprehensive legislative scheme that governs the creation, organization, and management of all forms of common interest communities. Fruin v. Colonndale One at Old Greenwich Ltd. P'ship, 676 A.2d 369 (Conn. 1996).

Even if the articles of declaration of the condominium, limiting the rental of the unit to 14 days per year, were a restriction on alienation, it was valid under the Condominium Act. Breezy Point Holiday Harbor Lodge-Beechside Apt. Owners' Ass'n v. B.P. P'ship, 531 N.W.2d 917 (Minn. App. 1995). An amendment to the declaration of condominium ownership limiting occupancy of association units to unit owners and their immediate families was a valid exercise of the association's power; the restriction was not arbitrary, against public policy, or in violation of a fundamental constitutional right. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995). In Bank One, Dayton, N.A. v. Sunshine Meadows Condominium Ass'n, 641 So. 2d 1333 (Fla. 1994), the court ruled that consent to a lien by all the condominium unit owners was required in the amendment of the declaration of the condominium. See also Condominiums: Mortgage Lien Covers Only Common Elements, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 8 (June 1995). A condominium is created by the act of recording, not by the erection of a physical structure. Pilgrim Pl. Condominium Ass'n. v. KRE Properties, Inc., 666 A.2d 500 (Me. 1995). Under Florida law, a condominium is created by filing a declaration of the condominium in the public records of the county where the land is located, with the declarations executed and acknowledged according to the requirements for the deed. In re River Ranch, Inc., 188 B.R. 693 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1995). When a controversy regarding the rights of the condominium unit owner arise, the court must examine all relevant provisions of the Horizontal Property Act, master deed, and allied documents, reading those provisions together, in relation to each other and harmonized, if possible. Harrington v. Blackstone, 459 S.E.2d 309 (S.C. App. 1995). The Horizontal Property Act requires developer of a horizontal property regime to record the master deed, which expresses a comprehensive list of particulars. Heritage Federal Sav. & Loan v. Eagle Lake & Golf Condominiums, 458 S.E.2d 561 (S.C. App. 1995). Interesting legal questions arise when purported amendments to the declaration seek to limit rights of current owners. Wellington Property Management v. Parc Corniche Condominium Assoc., 755 S.2d 825 (Fla. App. 2000) (amendment provision could not be applied retroactively). See also, Woodside Village Condominium Assoc. v. Jahren, 754 So. 2d 831 (Fla. App. 2000) (amendments to declarations of condominium that are adopted subsequent to a unit owner's purchase and that significantly alter substantial rights that existed in unit owners at the time of their purchase require a strict scrutiny as to whether they have unreasonably altered existing rights). But see: Shorewood West Condominium Ass'n v. Sadri, 992 P.2d 1008 (Wash. 2000) (amendments to a declaration, even if they seriously restrict property rights, may be applied to current owners because owners have pre-existing notice of procedures by which the declaration may be amended).

(n32)Footnote 49. See Uniform Cooperative Act § 2-105.

See Condominium law and Practice, § 9.04[f], 9-16 (Matthew Bender).

(n33)Footnote 50. 171 N.E.2d 30 (Ill. 1960).

(n34)Footnote 51. Id. at 32-34.

(n35)Footnote 52. See Crossman v. Pease & Elliman, Inc., 284 N.Y.S.2d 751 (1st Dept. 1967), aff'd mem., 309 N.Y.S.2d 600 (1970).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.07

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.07 Tort and Contract Liabilities Associated with Condominiums and Cooperatives

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.07(a) Liability of the Condominium Association.

The Uniform Act is consistent with most condominium legislation which prohibits actions for wrongs brought about by the condominium association from being brought against individual unit owners. n53 The Uniform Act provision was introduced to make it clear that actions in tort or contract arising out of acts or omissions of the condominium association should be brought against the association and not against individual unit owners. n54 According to commentary on the Uniform Act the section was introduced as a change to the law in some states that required plaintiffs to name individual unit owners as the real parties in interest in any action involving the association. n55 The subsection also provides that a condominium unit owner is not precluded from bringing an action in tort or contract against the association simply because such person is a unit owner or a member or officer of the condominium association. n56 Accordingly, it has been held that the condominium unit owners' association is the proper party, on behalf of all unit owners and of each of them, to bring an action for damages pertaining to the common areas sustained by any or all of the unit owners. n57

§ 36.07(b) Liability of the Cooperative Association.

The Uniform Cooperative Act has a provision similar to that of the Uniform Condominium Act, indicating that actions arising out of acts or omissions by the cooperative association should be brought against it, and not against individual proprietary lessees. n58

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 53. Uniform Condominium Act § 3-111. Centeg Realty, Inc. v. Siegler, 899 S.W.2d 195 (Tex. 1995) (homeowners' association is a separate legal entity distinct from its owners). When individual unit owners obtained a money judgment against their condominium association for unauthorized acts, the association levied a special assessment against the owners to raise the necessary funds. The court ruled that the owners can be assessed to pay themselves and their attorney. Condominiums: Unit Owners Assessed to Pay Themselves Damages, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 6 (Oct. 1995). See also Ocean Trail Unit Owners Ass'n v. Mead, 650 So. 2d 4 (Fla. 1994).

(n2)Footnote 54. Uniform Condominium Act § 3-111, cmt. 1; Martinez v. Woodmar IV Condominiums Homeowners Ass'n, 941 P.2d 218 (Ariz. 1997) (the association has a duty of reasonable care to maintain the safety of the common areas in light of its control over those areas). The purchaser of a condominium unit was entitled to offset of $12,000 from monthly common charge payments based upon water damage to her unit under the vendor's offering plan; vendor was responsible for prompt repair of water leakage problem, and vendor's delay in making the repairs caused damage. Granada Condominium I v. Morris, 639 N.Y.S.2d 91 (1996). Express written obligations contained in the declaration of a trust that the trustee was responsible for the maintenance and repair of the common elements of condominiums imposed a nondelegable duty on the trustee, which rendered him liable to tenants who fell from a porch when the railing on the porch gave way, for negligence of the carpenter who repaired the railing. O'Brien v. Christensen, 662 N.E.2d 205 (Mass. 1996). The condominium association's fiduciary relationship with its owners requires that in dealing with unit owners, association must act both reasonably and in good faith. Billig v. Buckingham Towers Condominium Ass'n I, 671 A.2d 623 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1996). Operative documents of the condominium association, such as bylaws and declarations, give rise to both tort and contract obligations. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Aspen Alps Condominium Ass'n, 915 F. Supp. 1122 (D. Colo. 1996). The Homeowner's association had no duty to tell prospective purchaser about construction defects in townhouse or existence of civil action against the developer to repair defects where the association did not act as vendor, was not party to the contract, and did not assume a special relationship with the purchaser. Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowner's Ass'n, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 758 (1996). A Puerto Rico federal court held that the estate of a woman with a mental illness could maintain an action under the Fair Housing Amendments Act (FHAA) against members of the board of a condominium association for conduct that allegedly caused the woman to commit suicide. Schroeder v. De Bertolo, 979 F. Supp. 173 (D.P.R. 1995). See also Zoning, Housing, & Custody, 19 Mental & Physical Disability L. Rep. 345 (May/June 1995). A minor whose family was renting a condominium unit was an "invitee," for the purposes of determining whether the owner of the condominium unit or owners' association had a duty to protect the minor from a snake bite the child received in the swimming pool area. Robison By and Through Robinson v. Gantt, 673 So. 2d 441 (Ala. Civ. App. 1995). The association is expressly obligated to maintain and keep the common areas in good repair, and cannot escape liability by arguing that the company that it employed to perform its obligations was an independent contractor. Sacker v. Perry Realty Serv., 457 S.E.2d 208 (Ga. App. 1995). See also Condominiums: Unit Owner is Invitee of Association, Tax Newsline, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 9 (Feb. 1996); Winding River Village Condominium Ass'n v. Barnett, 459 S.E.2d 569 (Ga. App. 1995) (death of a child who fell into the condominium swimming pool). Whether realty company was an agent of the condominium was immaterial to liability for criminal acts against the resident where the company did not have control over security decisions at the condominium. Centeq Realty, Inc. v. Siegler, 899 S.W.2d 195 (Tex. 1995). The directors of a condominium association could not be held liable to the association for their errors and omissions. Curbelo v. Sweetwater Creek Homeowners Condominium Ass'n, 653 So. 2d 1073 (Fla. App. 1995); Fisher v. HBS Mgmt., Inc., 469 S.E.2d 885 (Ga. App. 1996) (condominium manager not liable in absence of evidence that it had actual or constructive knowledge of dangerous condition (invisible ice) on common parking area); Lacy v. Sutton Pl. Condominium Ass'n, 684 A.2d 390 (D.C. App. 1996) (tenant of condominium unit owner sued condominium association and management company for injuries when he fell through ceiling from attic; rules and regulations of condominium association prohibited access to attic space; tenant was therefore a trespasser and defendants would be liable only upon a showing of willful and wanton conduct); O'Brien v. Christensen, 662 N.E. 205 (Mass. 1996) (express written declaration in deed of condominium trust that trustee was responsible for maintenance and repair imposed non-delegable duty); Cooley v. Pheasant Run at Rosemont Condo, 781 So. 2d 1182 (Fla. App. 5th Dist. 2001) (unit owners not individually liable for injuries suffered by guest in common area).

(n3)Footnote 55. Id.

(n4)Footnote 56. Id. It has been held in North Dakota that a unit owner may sue the condominium association for its failure to comply with the condominium's bylaws. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995). For nuisance purposes, the relationship between the condominium unit owners' property interest in his unit and jointly owned common areas is akin to that of adjacent property owners and the unit owner can maintain a nuisance action against the condominium association for nuisance on common areas. McEneaney v. Chestnut Hill Realty Corp.,

650 N.E.2d 93 (Mass. App. 1995). But see Strayer v. Covington Creek Condo. Ass'n, 678 N.E.2d 1286 (Ind. App. 1997) (refusing to recognize exceptions to the general rule that members of unincorporated associations, including condominium associations, cannot sue the association for tortious acts) and LaSalle Nat'l Trust v. Board of Dir of the 1100 Lake Shore Dr. Condo. Ass'n, 449, 677 N.E.2d 1378, (Ill. App. 1997) (exceptions to a board's general fiduciary duty to unit owners are to be narrowly construed). See also National Title Ins. Co. v. Lakeshore 1 Condominium Ass'n, 691 So. 2d 1104 (Fla. App. 1997) (condominium association, having undertaken, pursuant to the declaration, to manage insurance proceeds for unit owners and mortgagees, owed plaintiff, a mortgagee, a duty of reasonable care in management of proceeds). But see Perlow v. Goldberg, 700 So. 2d 148 (Fla. App. 1997) (in a case involving allegations of mismanagement of insurance proceeds, even if their actions are wrongful, individual directors cannot be held liable in negligence; under Florida statute only fraud, criminal activity or self dealing/ unjust enrichment will subject an individual director to liability). See also Pershad v. Parkchester South Condominium, 662 N.Y.S.2d 993 (N.Y. City Civ. Ct. 1997) (homeowners' association has non-delegable duty to maintain common elements in good repair; plaintiff's remedies for breach of this duty do not include withholding of assessment payments in derogation of by-laws). For a thoughtful case defining the scope of officers' personal liability to unit owners, see Reedeker v. Salisbury, 952 P.2d 577 (Utah App. 1998).

(n5)Footnote 57. Stony Ridge Ass'n v. Auerbach, 410 N.E.2d 782 (Ohio App. 1979); Berish v. Bornstein, 770 N.E.2d 961 (Mass. 2002) (the condominium unit owners' association is the only party under Massachusetts law that may bring suit regarding the common areas on behalf of its unit owners since they cede management of the common areas to the association). See e.g. Sevigny v. Dibble Hollow Condominium Assn., Inc., 819 A.2d 844 (Conn. App. 2003). See e.g. Chatelain v. Portage View Condominiums, 783 N.E.2d 587 (Ohio App. 2002). Osorno v. Simone, 779 N.E.2d 645 (Mass. App. 2002) (under state statute a thirteen-unit condominium was not a "building" subject to building code). The business judgment rule is applied to actions taken by the condominium's board of managers. Nuzzo v. Board of Mgrs. of Jefferson Village Condominium No. 1, 644 N.Y.S.2d 546 (1996). As a general matter, a third party has authority to consent to the search of areas of mutual use to which she has joint access. 1120 Central Condominiums Owners Ass'n v. City of Seal Beach, 59 F.3d 174 (9th Cir. 1995); Richland Run Homeowners Ass'n. v. CHC Durham Corp., 473 S.E.2d 649 (N.C. App. 1996) (under governing statute, any cause of action regarding common areas is to be brought by manager or board at the discretion of the board; homeowner's association itself did not have standing to bring suit absent authority in by-laws); Milton v. Council of Unit Owners of Bentley Place Condominium, 708 A.2d 1047 (Md. App. 1998) (association could sue developer and general contractor under implied statutory warranty for defects in common elements); Lamden v. LaJolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners Ass'n, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 237 (1999), defining the standards by which condominium boards' decisions are to be tested). See also Bennett v. Weimar, 975 P.2d 691 (Alaska 1999) (courts will not substitute their judgment for that of a condominium association unless association's judgment is unreasonable; expenditures for renovation were not unreasonable); Caswell Cove Condo. Assoc. v. Milford Partners, Inc., 753 A.2d 361 (Conn. App. 2000) (because condominium association was authorized by statute to bring action on behalf of unit owners against developer, unit owners were not necessary parties to such suits); ECC Construction, Inc. v. Ganson, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 (2000) (contractor who signed contract for earthquake repair could not sue owners individually for alleged breach of contract). But see Church v. General Electric Co., 138 F. Supp. 2d 169 (D. Mass. 2001) (individual unit owners, as well as the association, have standing to sue an alleged contaminator of the common area where the owners allege that the damage devalued their units).

(n6)Footnote 58. Uniform Cooperative Act, § 3-111. Schultz v. 400 Coop. Corp., 736 N.Y.S.2d 9 (2002); Dugue v. 1818 Newkirk Mgt. Corp., 756 N.Y.S.2d 51 (2003); Mariaux v. Turtle Bay Towers Corp., 753 N.Y.S.2d 505 (2003). The court held that the co-op corporation, but not the unit owner, is liable for injuries to workman, even if the unit owner, and not the co-op corporation, contracted for the renovation work. Denota v. 45 East 85th Street Corp., 622 N.Y.S.2d 192 (1995). Cooperatives and Condominiums, 5 N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. 2 (Mar. 1995). The Second Circuit upheld a preliminary injunction under the Fair Housing Amendments Act (FHAA) requiring an apartment cooperative to provide an apartment owner who has multiple sclerosis with an immediately convenient parking space. Shapiro v. Cadman Towers, Inc., 51 F.3d 328 (2d Cir. 1995). See also Zoning, Housing, and Custody, 19 Mental & Physical Disability L. Rep. 345 (May/June 1995). The co-op corporation must rebuild a building damaged by fire even where the damages exceed half of the building's market value. Bernard v. Scharf, 634 N.Y.S.2d 919 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1995). See also Cooperatives and Condominiums, 12 N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. 2 (Oct. 1995).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.08

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.08 Termination.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.08(a) Termination of Condominiums.

Most condominium statutes provide that the condominium common elements shall remain undivided, and that no unit owner or other person may bring an action for partition or division of the condominium ownership so long as the condominium arrangement continues. This agreement is ignored, of course, when the condominium is actually terminated.

Aside from involuntary cessation by eminent domain, the condominium arrangement is usually terminated only by mutual agreement among a certain percentage of unit owners. The Uniform Act, for example, recommends that such termination occur only if 80% or more of the association votes affirmatively. n59 According to one comment on the termination section of the Uniform Act, "[r]ecognizing that unanimous consent from all unit owners would be impossible to secure as a practical matter on a project of any size, subsection (a) states a general rule that 80% consent of the unit owners would be required for termination of a project. The declaration may require a larger percentage of the unit owners and, in a non-residential project, it may require a smaller percentage." n60 West Virginia, for example, is in accord with the Uniform Act recommendation of an eighty percent vote. n61 Ohio and Florida, on the other hand, indicate that unless the declaration states otherwise, a condominium can only be terminated by the consent of all unit holders. n62

In addition to voluntary termination, most state statutes also provide for partition or other forced sale on the decision of a certain percentage of unit owners. n63 This often happens, for example, in situations where the condominium project has become obsolete. n64

§ 36.08(b) Termination of Cooperatives.

Like the Uniform Condominium Act, the Uniform Cooperative Act also allows for termination of the cooperative upon the affirmative vote of the holders of eighty percent of the holders of votes in the association. n65 Virginia is in accord with the Uniform Act. n66

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 59. Uniform Condominium Act § 2-118(a). See also F.H.A. Model Statute, § 6(c).

(n2)Footnote 60. Uniform Condominium Act § 2-118, cmt. 2.

(n3)Footnote 61. See W. Va. Code § 36B-2-118.

(n4)Footnote 62. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.17; Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.117.

(n5)Footnote 63. See the discussion in Condominium Law and Practice, ch. 8 (Matthew Bender).

(n6)Footnote 64. Id.

(n7)Footnote 65. Uniform Cooperative Act § 2-117. Apartments revert to rent-regulated status after foreclosure on co-operative corporation. Federal Home Loan Mtg. Corp. (FHLMC) v. New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal (DHCR), 662 N.E.2d 773 (N.Y. 1995). Apartments Revert to Rent-Regulated Status After Foreclosure on Co-Operative Corporation, Cooperatives and Condominiums, N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. (Feb. 1996).

(n8)Footnote 66. See Va. Code Ann. § 55-454.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.09

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.09 Disclosures Required Before Sale of Condominium and Cooperative Interests.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.09(a) Introduction.

One writer has noted that "(I)t is a sad commentary that most condominium unit purchasers do not read the prospectus or offering plan before signing a contract and closing title, even where state law makes such plans mandatory." n67

In addition, even when the offering statement is examined it can be viewed as so complex that a prospective condominium purchaser might still be misled or confused by the nature and complexities of the condominium interest to be purchased and the documents required to be completed.

To help in avoiding this potential for confusion and misinformation many other states, including Ohio, n68 Illinois, n69 Connecticut, n70 Pennsylvania, n71 Florida, n72 Hawaii, n73 New Mexico and others, provide for statutory pre-sale disclosure protection for prospective condominium purchasers. For example, Ohio Rev. Code § 5311.25 sets out rules for pre-sale disclosures that include:

1. Escrow requirements with respect to deposits and downpayments;

2. Information about what rights, if any, will be retained by the developer in condominium common elements;

3. Information about what condominium interests have already been sold;

4. Information concerning the execution of management contracts; and

5. Information concerning warranties for labor and materials for certain repairs or replacements made to the condominium property. n74

Article 4 of the Uniform Condominium Act sets forth extensive rules governing the protection of condominium purchasers. According to at least one comment on the Uniform Act:

> The best "consumer protection" that the law can provide to any purchaser is to insure that he has an opportunity to acquire an understanding of the nature of the products which he is purchasing. Such a result is difficult to achieve, however, in the case of the condominium purchaser because of the complex nature of the bundle of rights and obligations which each unit owner obtains. For this reason, the Act, adopting the approach of many so-called "second generation" condominium statutes, sets forth a lengthy list of information which must be provided to each purchaser before he contracts for a unit. n75

Consumer disclosures generally must be made in both the condominium declaration and the written offering statement. In addition, all disclosure statutes provide that neither a condominium developer or such developer's agent may offer to sell or sell a condominium ownership interest until the condominium instruments provide detailed information concerning the rights of both purchaser and developer. In essence, statutes of this type are anti-fraud provisions which place affirmative duties on the developer and warn the developer not to omit any material facts from the condominium documents. n76 Violation of these provisions will allow the potential purchaser and, in some cases, the Attorney General, or like officer, n77 to pursue various remedies.

§ 36.09(b) Disclosure Statement.

Prospective condominium purchasers generally are to be given readable and understandable written statements of the features and circumstances of the condominium development. Understanding the nature of the product has been said to be the best consumer protection. n78 Most state laws require numerous items of information to be given to prospective purchasers, to help achieve this goal. n79

There do not appear to be any particular industry or legal standards for a determination of what constitutes a "readable and understandable" written offering statement. Nevertheless, it appears that the requirements for what is "readable and understandable" generally will be met if the declarant provides a clear and precise enumeration of the necessary information as required by the statute.

§ 36.09(c) Development/Developer Identity.

Written offering statements generally include: (1) the name and address of the condominium development, and the name, address and telephone number of the developer and the development manager or such manager's agent. While this information may not prove to be very useful if the developer is either new to the business or unknown to the prospective buyer, if the developer has established condominium projects in the past, then the new buyer can make inquiries of parties who have had previous dealings with the developer. Most states' requirements in this respect are slightly more extensive than the information required by the terms of the Uniform Condominium Act, which mandates only that the statement fully and accurately disclose the name and address of the declarant. n80

§ 36.09(d) Narrative Description of the Project.

Generally, written offering statements must include a narrative description of the project, including the total number of units, the types and price of each type of unit, the total number of units that may be included in the development because of future expansion or merger, and a precise statement of the nature of the condominium ownership being offered. n81

This information may be particularly important in those cases where condominiums may expand to include additional units. n82 Such information allows the potential condominium purchaser to make an intelligent decision about whether the benefits and amenities that the developer promises will adequately serve the number of condominium unit owners who ultimately will use the project. In addition, the potential purchaser will be able to ascertain from this information whether the developer intends to rent a significant number of units. This could be crucial, because condominium projects with a high percentage of rental units have a more transient population than those with a greater proportion of owner occupancy.

Condominium offering statements frequently contain projections concerning future expansion. The statutes are generally imprecise in this area and thus there is no definitive answer to how much information about future goals must be given in a condominium offering statement. The Uniform Act requires a one-year projection of budget. n83

§ 36.09(e) Construction Status.

Most condominium projects need governmental approval of some type, especially if they are being newly built. Written statements must disclose material information such as construction status, the zoning site plan and other approvals. In addition, actual or scheduled dates of completion of buildings, recreational facilities and other common area facilities must be disclosed.

A common disclosure requirement is that the developer reveal to the potential condominium unit purchaser both the status of construction and scheduled dates of completion. When a developer fails to meet contract obligations the condominium owner's usual remedy is the right to sue for damages. If the failure is severe enough and affects sufficient numbers of condominium unit owners, the attorney general, or similar public officer, may be brought in for appropriate cases. In Ohio, for example, in such cases where the public officer believes that substantial numbers of persons have been adversely affected by a developer's acts or omissions, the attorney general has the power to obtain declaratory judgments, secure injunctive relief, bring a class action, or sue for damages. n84

§ 36.09(f) Financing.

Potential condominium buyers generally must be told any significant terms of any financing offered by or through the developer. Disclosure statutes ordinarily do not indicate any particular method for how condominium unit prices are to be stated. Nevertheless, most of them do require developers to reveal significant terms of any financing offered by or through the developer and items such as any minimum down payment requirements. n85 Certainly such information, in connection with the stated price of a condominium unit, should enable prospective purchasers to make an intelligent decision about the true price of the unit, including their choices concerning financing the unit. For example, while the restrictive practice of requiring that all condominium purchasers who need mortgage financing place their mortgages with one lender is allowed in some jurisdictions, in others condominium developers must inform potential purchasers that they may seek financing at some institution other than the one with which the developer is working. Of course, the reality of condominium financing is that developers usually prefer dealing with one or a small group of lending institutions because (1) in new condominium projects some lenders condition the making of construction loans upon the receipt of all or a vast majority of the individual unit mortgage applications; (2) builders often prefer to deal with one institution especially those that have dealt with condominiums before and are familiar with the concept; and (3) the use of one lending institution may lead to a more favorable interest rate for the buyer and therefore provide an inducement to purchase.

§ 36.09(g) Warranties.

Condominium purchasers generally are given a description of warranties for structural elements and mechanical and other systems in the condominium project. Usually, these items must be stated separately for units and for common areas and facilities. The Uniform Condominium Act contains a provision pertaining to express warranties for quality. n86

In addition to express warranties, implied warranties of fitness and merchantability have been held to extend to the purchase of new condominium units. The Florida case of Gable v. Silver n87 was one of the first to recognize the now commonly accepted idea that an implied warranty of fitness comes with the purchase of a new condominium unit and such warranty continues to exist even after the expiration of express warranties. In the Gable case the court, in effect, gave the purchasers of a new condominium unit the same rights as the purchasers of a traditional home. The primary issue in Gable revolved around whether an express one-year warranty of the condominium air-conditioning system could have additional implied warranties of fitness and merchantability imposed upon it. The Gable court stated that it could:

> ... it has been consistently held that an express warranty is not inconsistent with, does not negate or exclude implied warranties of fitness and merchantability. They may easily coexist. We hold such coexistence lies here. (footnote omitted) n88

It has been held that a trial court erred when it failed to grant damages to condominium unit purchasers after the developer failed properly to soundproof and insulate party walls in accordance with plans and specifications as filed with and approved by the local municipality. n89 The warranty that a condominium unit is fit for its intended use is based on an objective test. Thus, in a case involving purchasers of a condominium unit who complained that their air conditioning unit made so much noise that the dwelling was thereby rendered uninhabitable, it was held that the unit owners' complaints showed merely their individual sensitivity to noise and did not meet the burden of showing general uninhabitability. n90 In addition, the purchasers were subject to a defense that they had had reasonable opportunities to discover the purported defect and did not do so. n91 In addition, it has been held that a clause in a condominium sales contract expressly warranting that the developer would correct all defective work for one year from the date of sale, did not preclude the purchaser's action for breach of the implied warranty of fitness where there was no express disclaimer or renunciation of any alternative form of warranty. n92 In some states even explicit disclaimers of warranties will not be allowed. Thus, in Ohio a developer is prohibited from selling or offering to sell a condominium or ownership interest in a condominium development unless the developer has furnished as a minimum:

> ... a two-year warranty covering the full cost of labor and materials for any repair or replacement of roof and structural components, and mechanical, electrical, plumbing, and common service elements serving the condominium property or additional property as a whole, occasioned or necessitated by a defect in material or workmanship and a one-year warranty covering the full cost of labor and materials for any repair or replacement of structural, mechanical, and other elements pertaining to each unit, occasioned or necessitated by a defect in material or workmanship ... n93

Furthermore, in an analogous disclaimer situation, the Ohio Supreme Court decided in Stony Ridge Hill Condominium Association v. Auerbach, n94 that a condominium builder and its representatives could not release themselves from liability for either personal injury or property damage by giving an express disclaimer of such liability in the condominium declaration. In that case, involving a suit over allegedly defective roofs, the Ohio Supreme Court determined that such an express disclaimer of liability was in direct conflict with the Condominium Act, which empowered condominium owners to bring an action for damages to the common areas. The court stated:

> The condominium Declaration and By-Laws are not binding upon the Owners Association, or upon the unit owners, for the following reasons. First, it is clear that RC 5311.20, empowering the Owners Association to sue pertaining to the common areas, is not subject to the provisions of the Declaration of Condominium Ownership and the By-Laws executed and filed pursuant to RC Chapter 5311. Nowhere in RC 5311.20 is any reference made to declarations and bylaws. When the legislature intended that in a statute in RC Chapter should be subject to the provisions of the declarations or bylaws, it expressly stated the legislative intent. Accordingly, the release of liability of defendants by the provisions of the Declaration is in conflict with R.C. 5311.20, and is, therefore, invalid. n95

§ 36.09(h) Common Area Expenses.

The calculation of expense projections is one of the most critical portions of the condominium offering statement. For example, a developer could provide a false picture of the true expenses incurred in a condominium development by providing many of the amenities such as painting and lawn maintenance, etc., during the initial sales period. The sales practice of intentionally understating budget estimates for these services in an offering statement is generally referred as "lowballing." n96 In such instances, usually after the initial sales period, or, perhaps, after the first few years of existence of the condominium, the owners themselves often have to bear the unexpected burden of such costs. It is, therefore, important, not only for the prospective condominium purchaser to closely scrutinize the expense projections for costs, but also for the types of expenses that are involved. In order to protect consumers from such practices, the Uniform Condominium Act requires that the offering statement include a description of "any services not reflected in the budget that the declarant provides, or expenses that he pays, and what he expects may become at any subsequent time a common expense of the association and the projected common expense assessment attributable to each of those services or expenses for the association and for each type of unit." n97

§ 36.09(i) Association Management and Contracts.

Any potential condominium buyer should be informed, before such purchaser takes possession, how the condominium is to be managed. For example, Ohio law requires that the developer reveal any "significant provisions" for the management of the condominium project. Among these various disclosures are included (1) the conditions under which a unit owners' association is to be formed, (2) the apportionment of voting rights among members of the association, (3) the contractual rights and responsibilities of the unit owners' association, and (4) a statement advising the purchaser that the condominium documents are binding legal instruments and describing under what circumstances such instruments can be altered or amended by the unit owners' association. n98

Potential purchasers must also be given facsimiles of any management contract or any other agreement providing for the operation, use, maintenance of or access to any part of the condominium development. The information generally must include a brief narrative of the effect of each agreement upon the purchaser. Such information typically includes specifications of both charges and services under each agreement. In addition, the developer must disclose any relationship between the management agent and the developer. Agreements that are not fair and reasonable are usually subject to invalidation cancellation by a stated percentage of unit owners other than the developer. n99

§ 36.09(j) Encumbrances and Liens.

Potential condominium purchasers usually must be given the significant terms of any encumbrances, easements, liens, and matters of title affecting the condominium development. The rules for such required disclosures are similar to those involving management contracts, lease arrangements and the like.

§ 36.09(k) Restraints on Transfer.

The developer must reveal the existence of any rights of first refusal or other restrictions which might affect the use or transferability of condominium units. n100

§ 36.09(l) Pending Litigation.

Any pending litigation affecting the condominium project must be revealed. Pending litigation generally refers only to a lawsuit that has been actually filed. Nevertheless, it is arguable that a developer who does not reveal sufficient information about an imminent law suit could possibly be sued for fraudulent misrepresentation. In addition, ordinarily, when litigation is revealed there is a duty to reveal the projected significance of such litigation.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 67. Patrick J. Rohan, Condominiums and the Consumer: A Checklist for Counseling the Unit Purchaser, 48 St. John's L. Rev. 1028, 1032 (1974). See also J. David Ramsey, Representing the Buyer of a Community Unit, 9 Prob. & Prop. 46 (Jan./Feb. 1995).

(n2)Footnote 68. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.25.

(n3)Footnote 69. Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 765, para. 605.22.

(n4)Footnote 70. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-71b.

(n5)Footnote 71. Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68, § 3406.

(n6)Footnote 72. Fla. Stat. § 718.504.

(n7)Footnote 73. Haw. Rev. Law § 514A-61.

(n8)Footnote 74. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.25.

(n9)Footnote 75. Uniform Condominium Act, § 4-103, cmt. 1. See also Kenton L. Kuehnle, Condominium Revision in Ohio: A Nightmare for Developers and the Courts, 9 Capital U.L. Rev. 241 (1979).

(n10)Footnote 76. Id.

(n11)Footnote 77. See, e.g., N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 352-e, Subdivision 1(b). See also Charles H. Greenthal & Co. v. Lefkowitz, 299 N.E.2d 657 (N.Y. 1973) (holding that under New York law, the Attorney General's acceptance for filing of an offering for a cooperative plan, did not divest the Attorney General of the authority to investigate the validity of the plan pursuant to a consumer complaint).

(n12)Footnote 78. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-102, cmt. 1.

(n13)Footnote 79. See, e.g., W. Va. Code § 36B-4-103; Va. Code § 55-79.90.

(n14)Footnote 80. See Uniform Condominium Act § 4-102(a)(1).

(n15)Footnote 81. See, e.g., Va. Code Ann. § 55-79.90(2). In order for a project to be considered an expanding condominium for the purposes of statutes governing expansion, the declaration must state the maximum number of units that may be added in the future and provide a general outline of the land, buildings, and common place areas that may be added. Amendments to the original declaration of the condominium which were signed and filed by the developer alone, without written consent of the unit owners, could not meet the requirements for establishing an expanding condominium. Rock Lake Estates Unit Owners Ass'n v. Township of Lake Mills, 536 N.W.2d 415 (Wis. App. 1995).

(n16)Footnote 82. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.01(R) which defines "expandable condominium property" as property "the original declarant of which reserves the right to add as additional property."

(n17)Footnote 83. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103(a)(5).

(n18)Footnote 84. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.27(C).

(n19)Footnote 85. See, e.g., Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103(a)(9), that the public offering statement should include: "a description of any financing offered or arranged by the declarant."

West Virginia (W. Va. Code § 36B-4-103(a)(9) and Virginia (Va. Code Ann. § 55-79.90(7), are in general accord with the Uniform Act provision. On the other hand, Ohio (Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.26(D)) is more stringent and requires:

The significant terms of any financing offered by or through the developer to purchasers of the condominium ownership interests in the development, including the name of any bank or other institution involved in the financing, the minimum down payment, a statement that the prospective purchaser may obtain financing from another bank or institution, and the annual interest rate.

(n20)Footnote 86. See Uniform Condominium Act § 4-113.

(n21)Footnote 87. 258 So. 2d 11, aff'd, 264 So. 2d 418 (Fla. 1972).

(n22)Footnote 88. Id. at 14.

(n23)Footnote 89. See David v. B & J Holding Corp., 349 So. 2d 676 (Fla. App. 1977). See also Annotation, Liability of Vendor for Damages Occasioned by Defective Condition Thereof, 50 A.L.R. 3D 1071 (1973). An "ordinary consumer" could reasonably expect that fireproofing applied to a building's steel frame would not release hazardous materials, affirming application of the consumer expectation test in an asbestos damage action. Bunker Hill Towers Condominium Ass'n, et. al. v. W.R. Grace & Co., Conn. No. B072642. See also Consumer Expectation, 5 Mealey's App. Rep. Prod. Liab. 12 (1996). The warranty of habitability does not apply to individual units within the condominium, and the individual unit owner cannot withhold payment of common charges and assessments in derogation of condominium bylaws based upon defective conditions in the unit or in common areas, or disagreement with actions lawfully taken by the Board of Managers. Abbady v. Abbady, 629 N.Y.S.2d 6 (1995).

(n24)Footnote 90. See Putnam v. Roudebush, 352 So. 2d 676 (Fla. App. 1977); see also Annotation, Liability or Warranties and Representations in Connection with the Sale of Air-Conditioning Equipment, 15 A.L.R. 3D 1207 (1973). The right to bring a claim for breach of implied warranty of fitness in condominium construction belongs to the unit owners, and the right may be exercised by unit owners in aggregate through their condominium association in matters of common interest. Charley Toppino & Sons, Inc. v. Seawatch at Marathon Condominium Ass'n, 658 So. 2d 922 (Fla. 1994); Ass'n of Unit Owners of Bridgeview Condos v. Dunning, 69 P.3d 788 (Ore. App. 2003) (a claim filed by the association for breach of warranty was improperly dismissed when the warranty claim was a matter affecting the condominium as a whole).

(n25)Footnote 91. Id.

(n26)Footnote 92. See Rapallo South, Inc. v. Jack Taylor Dev. Corp., 375 So. 2d 587 (Fla. App. 1979), cert. denied, 385 So. 2d 758 (Fla. App. 1980). While the two-year statute of limitations applied to the condominium association's claims against the developer for breach of warranties not contained in the Uniform Condominium Act (UCA), the six-year statute governed breach of warranties under UCA. Hyland Hill North Condominium Ass'n v. Hyland Hill Co., 549 N.W.2d 617 (Minn. 1996).

(n27)Footnote 93. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.25(E).

(n28)Footnote 94. 64 Ohio App. 2d 40 (1979).

(n29)Footnote 95. Id. at 45-46. For an excellent discussion of the scope of these remedies in Maryland and the standing of an association to seek them, see Milton Company v. Council of Unit Owners of Bentley Place Condominium, 729 A.2d 981 (Md. 1999) (holding that association had standing by statute to sue developer for damages arising out of defects in individually owned buildings).

(n30)Footnote 96. See Comment 4, Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103.

(n31)Footnote 97. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103(a)(6). See Richardson Lifestyle Ass'n v. Houston, 853 S.W.2d 796 (Tex. Ct. App. 1993).

(n32)Footnote 98. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.26(H). See Unrau v. Kidron Bethel Retirement Services, 27 P.3d 1 (Kan. 2001) (for an excellent discussion of proper contours of developer's relationship with Board and Board's fiduciary duties).

(n33)Footnote 99. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 718.302(1), (2).

(n34)Footnote 100. Even though tenants were entitled to protections of the mobile home statute, park owners could not ignore notice requirements of the condominium ownership statute when attempting to sell individual lots as condominiums. Russell v. Atkins, 679 A.2d 333 (Vt. 1996). Condominium unit owners had standing to sue under the Fair Housing Act (FHA) for the condominium association's alleged discrimination in refusing to allow owners to sell condominium to buyers with children under the age of 18, where owners alleged that they lost opportunities to sell their condominium at a higher price because of the "no children" rule and that they suffered financial strain due to additional mortgage payments that they incurred as a result of the rule. Simovits v. Chanticleer Condominium Ass'n, 933 F. Supp. 1394 (N.D. Ill. 1996). See also Purchaser Who Buys Co-Op Shares from a Sponsor Becomes Holder of Unsold Shares if Shares Were Purchased with Intent to Hold for Investment Purposes, Cooperatives and Condominiums, N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. (July 1996).

See also Assignee of Unsold Shares May Sell Only to Reasonable Individuals, Cooperatives and Condominiums, N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. (July 1996). The vendor's sale of two condominium units used as a recreation room and party room "subject to" lease of those rooms between the vendor and the condominium association was insufficient to reserve to the vendor the right to collect rental payments on property no longer owned by him. Peyton Place Condominium Ass'n v. Guastella, 668 So. 2d 1174 (La. App. 1996). The Condominium Act allows imposition of personal liability upon persons other than the declarant who materially participate in and had required knowledge of the prohibited act. Unit Owners Ass'n of Summit Vista Lot 8 Condominium v. Miller, 677 A.2d 138 (N.H. 1996). The sale of a condominium in a project containing only three units was exempt from the administration and enforcement provisions of the Condominium Act, including the civil remedy section. Patch v. Arsenault, 653 A.2d 1079 (N.H. 1995).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.10

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.10 Legal Rules Governing Association Management and Control.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.10(a) Constitution and Bylaws.

Condominium property is neither self-administered nor self-maintained. The nature of the concept requires that at least with respect to common areas and facilities some mechanism be established for their care and upkeep. For this reason, all statutory schemes establishing the condominium mandate some sort of condominium property control vehicle. Such vehicles are called by various names, including unit owners' association, condominium association and council of co-owners. With respect to the name of these groups it has been stated:

> Whatever its name, the purpose of every organization of condominium unit owners is the same: to encourage a form of ownership that reduces the cost of operations through the sharing of expenses with others, while realizing an appreciation of the investment that each unit owner has made in his or her home. The association acts as a minigovernment that operates the condominium, maintains the common areas, establishes procedures, collects assessments, and makes all the decisions that are vital to the operation of the association. Through the purchase of a condominium each owner joins the association. By such membership each owner becomes responsible for the economic and social success of the entire community.
>
> It is imperative that all people involved in a condominium association fully understand their responsibilities and duties. n101

The Uniform Condominium Act provides for the management of a condominium project by a "unit owners' association." n102 It has been stated that the existence of such a structure clarifies the relationship between the developer and other unit owners, and makes it simpler for the developer to involve unit owners in the governance of the condominium project, even during periods in which the declarant has reserved control of the project. n103

Condominium associations are usually governed by bylaws. n104 Bylaws provide the basic administrative framework of the unit owners association and are similar to traditional corporate bylaws. Typically, condominium association bylaws must provide for:

1. A description of the form of administration of the association, providing for the titles of the officers and for a board of administration, and specifying the powers, duties, manner of selection and removal, and compensation (if any) of the officers and board members.

2. A provision that the owners of each unit have one vote, the owners of a majority of the units constitute a quorum, and that decisions may be made by the owners of a majority of the units represented at a meeting at which a quorum is present.

3. A provision that meetings of the board of administration must be open to all unit members, and that notice of such meeting must be posted at least 48 hours in advance except in an emergency.

4. A provision for an annual meeting and procedures for the calling of unit owner meetings.

5. A provision for the keeping of minutes.

6. A requirement concerning content and notice of an annual budget.

7. A description of the manner of collecting unit owners' common expenses.

8. A provision with respect to unit transfer fees, if any.

9. A provision for the method of amending the bylaws. n105

Generally, meeting and voting notification procedures are left up to individual associations. Quorum requirements usually are based on a total of the individual unit owners interests in the property; such requirements generally range from 51 to 75%.

§ 36.10(b) Management Agreements.

Usually a condominium association is self-governing and elects a board comprised of and representing unit owners to make decisions that affect it. One of the most important decisions that the board must make is how the association is to be managed. According to one commentator, four types of condominium management techniques are generally recognized: 1) self-management; 2) on-site management; 3) financial management; and 4) full agency management. n106

Management companies generally serve one of two roles for condominium associations, financial management or full agency management.

Financial managers provide accounting and bookkeeping services and work primarily with the budget and finance committee. In addition, some financial managers provide investment counseling for an additional fee.

Full agency management obviously relieves the association of the burden of giving day to day attention to the operations of the condominium community. Since association boards usually change their membership periodically, in large associations especially it is probably essential that some type of full time management team is considered. This arrangement provides continuity for the operations of the condominium association.

Self-management is usually inexpensive and sometimes can be used to advantage by smaller unit owner associations.

Normally, self-management does not mean self-maintenance. Self-managers simply must contract for many services as well properly allocate their time to perform the various administrative, operational and fiscal obligations required by self-management. In addition to time constraints, the board must consider the legal implications of self-management. Self-management does not preclude the members of any board from being sued for mismanagement. In addition, insurance costs for liability coverage may be higher for a board that decides to manage a condominium association on its own.

§ 36.10(c) Board of Managers.

Only by successfully marketing the project can a condominium developer succeed in the most obvious goal of producing profit. The role of the developer in turning over the project to new unit owners has been likened to that of a businessperson turning over an established business to new people with no business experience. The transition process is one of the most problematic areas affecting developer/unit owner relationships.

Transition of condominium ownership has at least two phases: (1) the gradual involvement of the residents in the operation of the unit owners association and (2) the actual transfer of control to the residents. In some circumstances this process may be easier than in others. For example, in a condominium conversion situation featuring numerous long-term tenants converting to owners the process may be a fairly simple one. This is because the persons involved will likely have more knowledge about the building than the developer has. In a new condominium situation the process is potentially much more complex.

Many problems can arise during the transition period, such as:

- Failure to recognize in the design phase the importance of planning for a smooth transfer of operational controls to the owners.
- Failure to orient buyers to the association process.
- Failure to identify and involve resident leaders.
- Failure to complete, or faulty construction of, the common elements.
- Incomplete association financial records.
- Turning over the association to the owners either too early in the sales period, or too late in the occupancy period.
- Developer and manager indifference to violations of the rules or covenants, and their failure to uniformly enforce them. n107

These kinds of problems can be alleviated with proper information, training and assistance given to the new owners by the development team.

Although a condominium unit purchaser automatically becomes a member of the unit owners association at the time of purchase, few owners know how such an organization works.

Usually, the governing documents of the unit owners association, the declaration and the bylaws, authorize how the board of directors governs the association. The initial board is formed at the creation of the condominium and is appointed by the developer. This group, sometimes called the declarant board, governs the board under the developer's control. The board then serves as a vehicle for the protection of the developer's investment as well as a tool for the promotion of the condominium unit sales. The inevitable conflict in this kind of situation is based upon the developer's short-term interest in the project as opposed to the necessarily long-term interests of individual unit owners. In this period it has been stated that the developer may take one of three approaches:

> Some developers may run the associations as dictatorships, either failing to organize them or dominating them so completely that the residents play no important roles. When all of the units in a project have been sold, the developers operating this way may leave residents to fend for themselves. These developers may do a good job of protecting the initial value of the condominium developments with high rates of sales, but they fail in their obligations to prepare the unit owners for association responsibilities after their departure.
>
> A second approach that may be used by some developers is to transfer control of the association too soon -- that is, before leaders have been adequately trained or organized. These unit owners, forced to manage by trial and error without effective guidance, make decisions without considering their long-term effects. This is a frequent problem in condominium projects that sell too quickly.
>
> The third -- the model -- developers control the early stages of the association through an effective management agent who has the proven skills to train the future association leaders. Unit owners will experience a smoother transition if they are fortunate enough to purchase their condominium units from a developer who educates the owners in this manner. The management agent, as the guiding hand, prepares the association for its future responsibilities while also looking out for the best interests of the condominium. The management agent, then, becomes both educator and protector, providing the necessary liaison between owners and the developer. n108

Many states attempt to establish time tables for the gradual transfer of control from developer to unit owner. This was done in response to developer abuses such as indefinitely retaining control over a certain percentage of units, selling units to developer-controlled parties, packing the board of directors with developer-controlled parties or unilaterally reserving the right to amend either the declaration or the bylaws. n109

The purported solution to protracted developer control of the condominium project is based upon increasing unit owner involvement in the project as the percentage of units sold grows, with an outside time limit. Nevertheless, even such limits on developer control cannot completely prohibit the developer from retaining the control, especially when there remain unsold individual units. Some states limit the impact of this potential problem by prohibiting the developer from purchasing a certain number of units as investments for the developer's own account, n110 or grant the association an option to purchase any unsold units at the end of a certain period. n111

Even if it can be argued that these solutions work, they usually impact only when the project is relinquished by the developer, rather than on the kinds of managerial information that should be distributed to unit owners during the interim period. Indeed, most statutes are silent on this point.

Whether the developer acts alone, or hires an outside management firm, there are certain basic things that should be done during the interim period. The developer should:

1. Communicate with and educate the consumer early.

2. Identify and nurture potential leaders in the unit owners association.

3. Involve the unit owners in the managerial process function.

4. Involve the unit owners in the governing function. n112

Most state statutes provide for the gradual transfer of control from the condominium developer to the condominium unit owners. Real unit owner control, however, does not begin until the first board of directors that is entirely or substantially controlled by the individual owners is elected. This usually occurs after a certain time period expires, or a certain percentage of the unit interests have been sold, whichever comes first. n113 At this stage, it is time for the condominium association to become self-governing.

Most condominium owners associations are governed by bylaws which shall provide for a board of managers. Usually, the board of managers exercises all the power and authority of the unit owners' association, unless the statute, the condominium declaration, or the by-laws provide otherwise.

Laws vary on the required number of board members. As the official policy-making body of the unit owners association, the board makes most of the major decisions affecting the condominium association and the unit owners. The position of board membership carries with it innumerable responsibilities. The specific duties of any board of managers depends on the size and complexity of the unit owners association. Typical duties may include:

1. Preparing and adopting an annual budget; establishing reserve funds.

2. Levying assessments against unit owners.

3. Opening association bank accounts and designating signatories.

4. Collecting the assessments, depositing them in the proper accounts.

5. Providing for the operation and upkeep of the property.

6. Designating, hiring, and dismissing personnel.

7. Making and amending the use and occupancy rules and regulations.

8. Letting contracts for repairs.

9. Enforcing provisions of the declaration, bylaws, and rules and regulations.

10. Obtaining and renewing insurance.

11. Paying for authorized services.

12. Keeping books with detailed accounts in accordance with accepted accounting principles.

13. Borrowing money on behalf of the condominium.

14. Acquiring, holding, and disposing of condominium units in the event of foreclosure.

15. Doing such other things as specified in the condominium act, the declaration, the bylaws, or actions of the unit owners association. n114

The board usually establishes administrative policies through the use of policy resolutions, or formal statement adopted by the board to chart its plan of action. Ordinarily, such policy resolutions are established after giving all residents of the condominium project an opportunity to voice their individual opinions. Such opinions are usually stated at regular or special meetings of the association and give all members of the association a chance to participate in the overall policy making process.

Once such policy resolutions are adopted, the usual procedure is that the original be filed by the secretary of the board of managers with the condominium bylaws and resolution records and a copy sent to each member of the unit owners association. Some associations also publish such resolutions in an association newsletter.

Some unit associations use a common method of delegating a board's duties by hiring a property management firm. Such agreements, usually called condominium management agreements, will vary in size and complexity with the type of condominium association. Even under such agreements which delegate authority only the board of managers can establish the association policy.

The members of the unit owners association elect the members of the board of managers, based on the allocation of votes as established by the condominium declaration. Most state laws do not establish a set number of board members but provide that at a certain percentage of board members their terms of office expire periodically, usually annually. To guard against the danger of ties, most condominium associations provide for an odd number of board members.

Usually the declaration and bylaws will describe methods of election, terms of office, and removal and filling vacancy procedures. Some of the more typical provisions include procedures for election notification, nomination of candidates, balloting, methods of voting and vote tabulation. Most state laws prescribe the minimum contents of the unit owners' association bylaws, but do not specifically direct how the board of managers of such association should operate on a daily basis. Since the Board governs the fiscal, administrative and operational affairs of the association, it is necessary for the Board to have secured certain basic documentation from the developer during the transition period, including all assessments and fees collected, all expenses and all delinquencies, if any. The financial records of the association should be audited. Additionally, the board should secure comprehensive records of all contract and bidding activities, all pertinent documents, including all correspondence relating to the association. The new board may also have to set about the task of collecting delinquent assessments, as well as set up adequate reserves for future expansion. Further, the board should obtain copies of all of the association's insurance policies and review them. The first elected Board, and all subsequent boards, should have the ability to review all of the condominium's records, to create an operating budget for the condominium project, and to take action, where necessary, with respect to the condominium's common areas. n115

§ 36.10(d) Association Officers.

Most state laws provide for the election of association officers by the unit owners. Such officers usually include a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and such other officers as the board of managers may desire.

Generally, the president is the chief executive officer of the association and the chairman of the board. The vice president presides in the absence of the president. If there is more than one vice president, the bylaws usually provide for a hierarchy with respect to conducting meetings. When there is more than one vice president each one typically is responsible for a specific function. For example, there may be a vice president for building and grounds and another for finance. The secretary acts as the official record keeper of the association. Of course, the treasurer is responsible for the fiscal records of the association.

In addition to the duties of the condominium association board, how the committees function is very important to the overall success of the condominium project. One commentator has written:

> Once a board of directors has been elected and its officers chosen, the next step is to appoint committees. The committee system can relieve the board of some of its work load and facilitate the business of the association by researching issues prior to their debate at meetings. Committees should be assigned specific tasks and encouraged to take minutes of their meetings and make brief but complete reports and recommendations at board and membership meetings. No board of directors can function adequately without the assistance of others, and every association is composed of members with a broad range of talents. A committee structure of standing committees and special committees will, therefore, enable the board to draw upon this expertise. Committees will help both to run the association and serve as an excellent way to train future association leaders. n116

Standing committees are set up to recommend changes and implement policies of the association. They do not establish policy because that is the board's responsibility. Standing committees see to the continuing needs of the association and typically perform the following duties:

a. Architectural control -- responsible for controlling the architectural integrity of the community.

b. Landscape and grounds -- responsible for upkeep and maintenance of outdoor areas for recreation, parking and driveways. Sometimes combined with the Maintenance committee. In large associations often works with the management firm to write specifications for landscape and gardening contracts, prepare bid packages, evaluate formal bids and make appropriate recommendations to the board of managers. In addition, this committee usually has the responsibility for monitoring the contractor's performance once the bid has been let.

c. Budget and finance -- responsible for the collection of assessments, keeping of records and payments of obligations of the association. These duties are most often done in conjunction with the services of an accountant who makes an audit and files the association's tax returns.

d. Insurance -- establish the initial insurance needs of the association and monitor the changes in such needs.

e. Maintenance -- Similar to that of the Landscape and Grounds committee except that its responsibility usually relates to the interior and structural portions of the common areas of the community. Sometimes combined with the duties of the Landscape and Grounds committee. Duties usually include inspection of the interior common areas, review of work specifications in contracts for such areas and the inspection of work in progress.

f. Rules and regulations -- responsible to update the association's bylaws and rules and regulations, usually as the result of either changing attitudes in the condominium community or changes in the law.

g. Social/Recreation -- responsible for bringing unit owners together through various social activities. Usually in larger condominium associations.

h. Newsletter -- responsible for informing the community of activities and events affecting it.

i. Welcoming -- responsible for making the transition from one home to another a more pleasant experience.

In addition, some associations establish a covenants committee to assist counsel in doing at least preliminary work on such items as delinquent assessments, violations of association rules and regulations and foreclosures. This committee also usually serves as the association's judiciary board for hearing cases involving rules infractions and reporting its recommendations to the board.

Special or ad hoc committees are appointed by the board of managers to carry out specific non-recurring duties.

§ 36.10(e) Use and Control of the Premises.

It is generally acceptable for a condominium association to impose covenants and restrictions upon the use and enjoyment of the common areas of a condominium project. n117 Such restrictions, however, must be fair and reasonable. n118 Thus, a condominium association restriction of carports for the parking of automobiles or bicycles, as applied to a "clean, non-commercial pickup truck" used solely for personal transportation to and from work was held to be unreasonable, and, thus unenforceable. n119 On the other hand, it was held not to be unreasonable for a condominium project to require membership in the condominium owners' association as a prerequisite for permission to use the project's amenities. n120

§ 36.10(f) Common Expenses and Profits.

It is typical to distribute common profits and charge common expenses to individual unit owners in proportion to their respective ownership interests. n121 It is not uncommon, unless the condominium declaration or bylaws provide otherwise, for a condominium unit owners' association, upon approval of the board of managers, to assert the right to place a lien on the ownership interest of any unit owner who fails to pay such owner's respective share of common expenses, or is delinquent for a certain period of time after such payments become due and payable. n122

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 101. Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 20 (1984). Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995) (a condominium project functions like a "quasi-government").

(n2)Footnote 102. Uniform Condominium Act § 3-101. Even if the articles of declaration of the condominium limiting the rental of the unit to 14 days per year were a restriction on alienation, it was valid under the Condominium Act. Breezy Point Holiday Harbor Lodge-Beechside Apt. Owners' Ass'n v. B.P. P'ship, 531 N.W.2d 917 (Minn. App. 1995).

(n3)Footnote 103. Id. See Comment 1. See Common Rights and Obligations Among Unit Owners under the Minnesota Uniform Condominium Act, 10 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 157 (1984). See also Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.08, which mandates the establishment of a "unit owners association for the administration of the condominium property." The association is governed by a set of bylaws which must contain certain specific powers and duties. The unit owners' association essentially is charged with the responsibility for upkeep and maintenance of the condominium's common areas and facilities, establishing and collecting common assessments, collecting adequate reserves, establishing rules and regulations of the association and generally furthering the goals of all of the unit owners. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.08. But, such bylaws can be frightening to those who want the advantages of ownership in common interest communities. One writer suggests a "bill of rights" for each housing association: "In drafting the constitutions of private residential governments, developers should include a bill or rights to ensure future citizens of the community that the majority cannot unite to deprive them of the liberties they are not willing to sacrifice for the advantages of ownership in the community." Susan F. French , The Constitution of a Private Residential Government Should Include a Bill of Rights, 27 Wake Forest L. Rev. 345, 350 (1992). Condominium associations are strictly creatures of statute, and their powers and duties, including the power to raise funds, may be strictly construed. Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condominium Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. App. 1995). Unrau v. Kidron Bethel Retirement Services, 27 P.3d 1 (Kan. 2001) (developer may control board during marketing phase but must relinquish control at end of that phase).

(n4)Footnote 104. See Uniform Condominium Act § 3-106. Northwoods Condominium Owners' Assn. v. Arnold, 770 N.E.2d 627 (Ohio App. 2002) (Condominium unit owners must comply with bylaws if the restrictions are reasonable); Board of Directors of 175 East Delaware Pl. Homeowners Ass'n v. Hinojosa, 679 N.E.2d 407 (Ill. App. 1997) (where there is a conflict between the Declaration and the by-laws, the Declaration prevails). See also Shareholder Agreement Does not Preclude Adoption of New Proprietary Lease, Cooperatives and Condominiums, N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. (July 1996). Operative documents of the condominium association, such as bylaws and declarations, give rise to both tort and contract obligations. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Aspen Alps Condominium Ass'n, 915 F. Supp.

1122 (D. Colo. 1996). See also Cooperatives and Condominiums, 11 N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. 2 (Sept. 1995). For a discussion on whether timeshare condominium owners are bound by the restrictions located in the master deed and bylaws, see generally: R. David Proffitt, Case Law Developments, Property Law, 47 S.C. L. Rev. 138 (Autumn 1995); Quinones v. Board of Managers of Regalwalk, 673 N.Y.S.2d 450 (A.D. 1998) (owners were entitled to a preliminary injunction against the board which was seeking to take action against owners for operating a group family day care home out of their unit; although board's action did not violate "business judgment" rule, it did violate public policy reflected in statutory prohibition against onerous restrictions on group family day care homes).

(n5)Footnote 105. See Fla. Stat. § 719.106. Lake Arrowhead Chalets Timeshare Owners Ass'n v. Lake Arrowhead Chalets Owners Ass'n, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875 (1996) (where amendment to bylaws adversely affects a class of owners, a majority of that class must approve the amendment). Illinois statutory law provides further that by-laws must include "restrictions on and requirements respecting the use and maintenance of the units and the use of the common elements, not set forth in the declaration, as are designed to prevent unreasonable interference with the use of their respective units and of the common elements by the several unit owners." 765 ILCS 605/18(k); Shorewood West Condominium Association v. Sadri, 966 P.2d 372 (Wash. App. 1998) (court adopts "reasonableness" test for post-purchase amendments but notes that even reasonable amendments may not be selectively enforced); Buckingham v. Weston Village Homeowners, 571 N.W.2d 842 (N.D. 1997) (board's authority to make rules, regulations or amendments "limited by a determination of whether the action is unreasonable, arbitrary, capricious or discriminatory").

(n6)Footnote 106. See Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 96-100 (1984). The Condominium Property Act is designed to encourage associations to be self-governing, and it is members themselves who are in the best position to make determinations regarding restrictions. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995).

(n7)Footnote 107. See Creating a Community Association: the Developer's Role in Condominium and Homeowner Associations 63 (The Urban Land Inst. and the Community Ass'ns Inst.) (hereinafter, Developer's Role).

(n8)Footnote 108. See Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 49-50 (1984).

(n9)Footnote 109. See Comparative Critique, at 182.

(n10)Footnote 110. See Jamie Lappin Emmer, Note, Real Property: Oklahoma Condominiums, Prevention of Abuse, 28 Okla. L. Rev. 189, 197 (1075).

(n11)Footnote 111. See Comparative Critique, at 187-190.

(n12)Footnote 112. See Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 49-52 (1984); Creating a Community Association: the Developer's Role in Condominium and Homeowner Associations 63-74 (The Urban Land Inst. and the Community Ass'ns Inst.).

(n13)Footnote 113. See, e.g., Uniform Condominium Act § 3-103(d) & (e).

(n14)Footnote 114. See Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 57 (1984). See also Board of Directors of 175 East Delaware Pl. Homeowners Ass'n v. Hinojosa, 679 N.E.2d 407 (Ill. App. 1997) (the board has broad powers to regulate day-to-day living in the association but its rules and regulations must be "objective, even-handed, nondiscriminatory and applied uniformly"); LaSalle Nat'l Trust v. Board of Directors of the 1100 Lake Shore Dr. Condo Ass'n, 677 N.E.2d 1378 (Ill. App. 1997) (the board and each of its individual members owed a fiduciary duty to the unit owners); Artesani v. Glenwood Park Condominium Assoc., 750 A.2d 961 (R.I. 2000) (whatever the nature of the ownership of the units, it was the condominium statute and declaration that controlled the relationship and responsibilities of the parties); Kim v. Flagship Condominium, 744 A.2d 227 (N.J. Super. 2000) (held that "when a condominium association allows a third party the virtually exclusive right to market and operate a hotel-type rental program ... the Association has a fiduciary obligation to protect each member's right to participate in that program on fair and equal terms").

(n15)Footnote 115. The business judgment rule is applied to actions taken by the condominium's board of managers. Nuzzo v. Board of Mgrs. of Jefferson Village Condominium No. 1, 644 N.Y.S.2d 546 (1996).

Just as a corporation is distinct from its shareholders, a condominium homeowners' association is a separate legal entity from its unit owners. Centeq Realty, Inc. v. Siegler, 899 S.W.2d 195 (Tex. 1995). In Timmerman v. Board of Mgrs. of Anchorage Condominium, the court determined that the condominium board of managers acted beyond the scope of their authority as board members and without good faith when, without authorization, in the by-laws they formed an executive committee which suspended further meetings of the board of managers. 622 N.Y.S.2d 320 (1995).

(n16)Footnote 116. See Institute of Real Estate Management, the Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management 83 (1984).

(n17)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Bernardo Villas Mgt. Corp. No. Two v. Black, 235 Cal. Rptr. 509 (1987). Bradford Square Condominium Assn., Inc. v. Miller, 573 S.E.2d 405 (Ga. App. 2002) (the condominium association was responsible for maintaining the common areas, but this duty did not extend to securing the common areas against criminal acts by third parties); see also Annotation, Validity and Construction of Condominium Association's Regulations Governing Member's Use of Common Facilities, 72 A.L.R. 3d 308 (1976). One of the aspects of common ownership of the common areas that has caused problems is the assignment of parking spaces to individual unit owners, especially where certain parking spaces (e.g., covered ones) are considered more valuable than others. Alpert v. Le'Lisa Condominium, 667 A.2d 947 (Md. App. 1995). But see United States on Behalf of Woodruff v. Fairways Villa Condominium Ass'n, 879 F. Supp. 798 (D. Ohio 1995); Ng v. Quiet Forest II Homeowners Association, 87 F.3d 1321 (9th Cir. 1996). Owners of "residential units" of condominium building had nondelegable duty to keep the premises in good repair. Kandell v. Saunders, 637 N.Y.S.2d 114 (N.Y.A.D. 1996). A unit owner who was not paying exclusive use fee could be barred from exclusively using a common element. Rosso v. Golden Surf Towers Condominium Ass'n, 651 So. 2d 787 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1995). An amendment to the declaration of condominium ownership limiting occupancy of association units to unit owners and their immediate families was a valid exercise of the association's power; restriction was not arbitrary, against public policy, or in violation of a fundamental constitutional right. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. Ct. 1995).

Condominium association's "one rider" rule, pursuant to which only one resident from each unit was allowed to utilize the association's transportation services and additional residents could use service only by paying added surcharge, violated statute providing that transportation services were to be assessed as common expenses, as failing to require contribution from unit owners in proportion to their ownership interests. Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condominium Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. App. 1995). Condominium corporation had the power to impose fines upon condominium owner, who violated a rule prohibiting nonresident owners from using common recreational facilities, pursuant to its governing documents which provided that enforcement of rules could be enforced by means of fines and also contained a schedule of such fines, where owner received copies of governing documents and rules when he purchased his condominium unit. Liebler v. Point Loma Tennis Club, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 783 (1995). Parking spaces of condominium complex were not "limited common elements," as they would not be conveyed with unit, but rather, each parking space was assigned only so long as certain person owned the unit. Once the unit was sold to someone new, the parking space would be reallocated to a different person, not necessarily a new owner. Alpert v. Le'Lisa Condominium, 667 A.2d 947 (Md. App. 1995). The clubhouse was a common element that could not be sold as separate property of mortgagor in foreclosure, where the master deed's description of real property submitted to horizontal property regime. Heritage Federal Sav. & Loan v. Eagle Lake & Golf Condominiums, 458 S.E.2d 561 (S.C. App. 1995). The condominium association did not violate the illegal business practice statute by enacting and attempting to enforce a rule which generally prohibited animals outside of individual units, thereby effectively prohibiting owners from keeping large dogs in units, absent evidence that the association was involved in trade or commerce or that it acted unfairly or deceptively. Regulation on the use of a condominium unit that unreasonably interferes with the enjoyment by various owners is permissible only if the restriction is contained within either the by-laws or the master deed. Condominium rules which generally prohibited animals outside of their individual units was held to be an invalid and unenforceable restriction, as rule effectively prohibited owners from keeping large dogs inside their units and was not contained within either the by-laws of the condominium or the master deed. Granby Heights Ass'n v. Dean, 647 N.E.2d 75 (Mass. App. 1995). The condominium association and its board of directors had the authority to levy daily fines against the condominium owner for the owner's failure to comply with condominium documents regarding the appearance of the condominium units, where the declaration of ownership signed by the owner expressly incorporated statutory powers granted to the association by the Condominium Act, and the Act expressly permitted a levy of fines for violations of condominium documents. Stewart v. Kopp, 454 S.E.2d 672 (N.C. App. 1995). Each unit owner in a condominium, in choosing to purchase a unit, must give up certain rights and privileges which normally accompany fee ownership of property and agree to subordinate those rights and privileges to the group's interest. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995). While owners are entitled to exclusive possession and fee simple absolute ownership of their units, those rights were subject to provisions of the Condominium Act, including reasonable restrictions on use of the unit. Breezy Apartment Owners' Ass'n v. B.P. Partnership, 531 N.W.2d 917 (Minn. App. 1995). Recorded use restriction appearing in the original condominium documentation deserve higher degree of deference on judicial review than those subsequently promulgated by the condominium board of directors, considering that unit owners had notice of recorded use restrictions when they purchased their units. Ridgely Condominium Ass'n v. Smyrnioudis, 660 A.2d 942 (Md. App. 1995). These restrictions may be created in the Declaration and Bylaws or in restrictions contained in deeds to individual units or both. Where restrictions on use are found in both and the restrictions conflict, courts must decide which prevail. As long as both are reasonable and do not so conflict as to create an impossible situation regarding use (as where one compels a particular use and the other prohibits it), the more restrictive use normally is imposed. Sea Watch Stores v. Council of Unit Owners of Sea Watch Condo, 691 A.2d 750 (Md. App. 1997). Sea Watch overruled Alpert v. Le'Lisa Condominium, 667 A.2d 947 (Md. App. 1995), in light of a subsequent Maryland Court of Appeals decision in Ridgely Condominium Ass'n v. Smyrnioudis, 681 A.2d 494 (Md. 1996). Board of Directors of 175 East Delaware Pl. Homeowners Ass'n v. Hinojosa, 679 N.E.2d 407 (Ill. App. 1997) (no-dog rule promulgated by board held to be reasonable). St. Jean Place Condominium Assoc. v. DeLeo, 745 A.2d 738 (R.I. 2000) (an owner of one unit in a condominium complex claimed to have acquired title to a portion of the common area by adverse possession); Behm v. Victory Lane Unit Owners' Assn, Inc., 728 N.E.2d 1093 (Ohio App. 1999) (by virtue of statute and the condominium declaration, board had duty to maintain and repair common areas, including buildings' foundation); Hofmeyer v. Willow Shores Condominium, 722 N.E.2d 311 (Ill. App. 1999) (purpose for allowing limited common areas is to prevent owners of some units from being forced to pay a proportionate share of maintenance costs of areas or amenities from which they derive no use or benefit).

(n18)Footnote 118. See Scott v. Sanstein Corp., 491 So. 2d 334 (Fla. App. 1986). Many states follow a two-tiered approach to the substantive validity of condominium restrictions, an approach first set forth in Hidden Harbour Estates, Inc. v. Basso, 393 So. 2d 637, 639B40 (Fla. Dist. 1981). That case distinguished two categories of cases involving enforcement of restrictions. The first category is restrictions found in the condominium declaration itself. The second category is restrictions enacted by the board of directors. First category restrictions are "clothed with a very strong presumption of validity which arises from the fact that each individual unit owner purchases his unit knowing of and accepting the restrictions to be imposed." Id. at 639. Such restrictions are not to be invalidated "absent a showing that they are wholly arbitrary in their application, in violation of public policy, or that they abrogate some fundamental constitutional rights." Id. Thus, a declaration restriction may be in some sense unreasonable yet withstand judicial scrutiny. The rule is different in the second category. Here the "reasonableness" test is appropriate to "somewhat fetter the discretion of the board of directors." Id. at 640. Bylaw restrictions must be reasonably related to "the promotion of the health, happiness and peace of mind of the unit owners." Id. Accord, Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n, 878 P.2d 1275 (Cal. 1994); Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995); Ridgely Condominium Ass'n v. Smynrloudis, 660 A.2d 942 (Md. App. 1995). Companion animals can be crucial to the physical and mental health of elderly people and people with disabilities, and federal law provides a limited right to keep animals despite "no pet" clauses in leases and homeowners association or condominium bylaws. Cynthia Yockey, Best Friends for Life: Your Right to Animals in "No Pet" Housing (1996). See also Best Friends for Life: Your Right to Animals in "No Pet" Housing, By Cynthia Yockey, Book Review, Fed. Lawyer (June 1996). The Fair Housing Act Amendments of 1988, 42 U.S.C. § 3604, prohibit housing discrimination against the handicapped, and defines such discrimination to include the failure to make reasonable accommodations, such as permitting use of a seeing-eye dog, to enable a person to use and enjoy a dwelling. A regulation banning motorcycles from the condominium development was a matter within the condominium board's authority, barring judicial review of reasonableness of the board's actions under the business judgment rule, absent proof of bad faith, fraud, self-dealing, or other misconduct on the part of the board. Nuzzo v. Board of Mgrs. of Jefferson Village Condominium No. 1, 644 N.Y.S.2d 546 (N.Y.A.D. 1996). The condominium association's permission to make alterations in an individual unit may not be refused, unless denial of permission serves to protect other affected interests; conversely, if unit owner's plans for work in the unit do not in appreciable way affect other interests, it is not reasonable for permission to be denied. Billig v. Buckingham Towers Condominium Ass'n I, 671 A.2d 623 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996). A condominium association, as a private association, could not abridge the First Amendment rights, and thus, the condominium restriction against posting signs on units, without the approval of the Board of Directors, was not a permissible infringement of free speech. Midlake on Big Boulder Lake, Condominium Ass'n v. Cappuccio, 637 A.2d 340 (Pa. Super. 1996). A condominium rule which generally prohibited animals outside of individual units was invalid and unenforceable restriction, as the rule effectively prohibited owners from keeping large dogs inside units and was not contained either in the bylaws of the condominium or its master deed. Any regulation on use of the condominium unit that unreasonably interferes with enjoyment by various owners is permissible only if the restriction is contained by bylaws or the master deed. Granby Heights Ass'n v. Dean, 647 N.E.2d 75 (Mass. App. 1995). For a brief history of the enforcement of pet restrictions see Daniel R. Puterbaugh, The Reasonable Pet: An Examination of the Enforcement of Restrictions in California Common Interest Developments After Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n, Inc., Santa Clara L. Rev. 793 (1996). See also Paula C. Murry, Restrictive Covenants in Homeowners' Associations: Are They Going to the Dogs?, 23 Real Est. L.J. 356 (Spring 1995); Armand Arabian, Condos, Cats, and CC&RS: Invasion of the Castle Common, 23 Pepp. L. Rev. 1 (1995); and Sheri L. Marvin, California Supreme Court Survey February 1994-December 1994, III. Condominiums, 22 Pepp. L. Rev. 1692 (1995). For an excellent commentary on Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n, and the "as applied" reasonableness standard, see Carl B. Kress, Beyond Nahrstedt: Reviewing Restrictions Governing Life in a Property Owner Association, 42 UCLA L. Rev. 837 (Feb. 1995). In reviewing rules and regulations promulgated by condominium associations, the court should apply a "reasonableness" test. Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condominium Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. App. 1995). The appropriate standard of judicial review for evaluating a condominium bylaw amendment containing a use restriction is reasonableness; while a more deferential standard may be employed when considering provisions contained in original condominium documentation, later adopted provisions that are passed by less than unanimous approval of all unit owners have potential to discriminate against certain classes of owners; thus, one factor that should influence heavily in applying reasonableness is uniformity. Ridgely Condominium Ass'n v. Smyrnioudis, 660 A.2d 942 (Md. App. 1995). Soho Bazaar v. Board of Managers, 266 A.D.2d 65, 698 N.Y.S.2d 626 (1999) (contract vendee lacks standing to enforce condominium bylaws).

(n19)Footnote 119. Bernardo Villas Mgt. Corp. Number Two v. Black. Rossow v. Brentwood Farms Dev., Inc., 651 N.W.2d 458 (Mich. App. 2002) (a driveway that encroached on condominium owner's property due to a surveying error was held to be a common area and the court authorized an easement).

See also Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condo. Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. App. 1995) (assessment for offsite transportation services invalidated because the association's "one rider" rule, allowing only one rider from a unit to use the transportation at one time unless a surcharge for each additional rider was paid, was unreasonable and discriminatory); Granby Heights Ass'n v. Dean, 647 N.E.2d 75 (Mass. 1995) (rule prohibiting walking of dogs across common areas held unreasonable); Ridgely Condominium Ass'n v. Smyrnioudis, 660 A.2d 942 (Md. App. 1995) (bylaw amendment that prohibited clients of commercial establishments in units on lower floors from gaining access through the main lobby held unreasonable); Timmerman v. Board of Mgrs. of Anchorage Condominium, 622 N.Y.S.2d 320 (1995) (board members acted beyond the scope of their authority and without good faith when without bylaw authorization they formed an executive committee which suspended further meetings of the board).

(n20)Footnote 120. Scott v. Sanstein Corp., 491 So. 2d 334 (Fla. App. 1986).

(n21)Footnote 121. See Uniform Condominium Act § 3-107. A question that may arise regarding liability for assessments is whether an owner is not liable before his or her unit is actually built. In Aluminum Industries Corp. v. Camelot Trails Condominiums Corp., 535 N.W.2d 74 (Wis. App. 1995), the court held that an unbuilt condominium is a unit subject to assessment unless the declaration or bylaws provide otherwise; Pilgrim Place Condominium Ass'n v. KRE Properties, Inc., 666 A.2d 500 (Me. 1995) (Maine's condominium statute did not direct an answer to whether unbuilt units could be the subject of assessments). A unit owner may not refuse to pay fees simply because he or she disagrees with the board's decision. See Abbady v. Abbady, 629 N.Y.S.2d 6 (A.D. 1995); Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995). Condominium by-laws stating that each condominium unit owner would be liable for his or her portion of each assessment while he or she was the unit owner meant that the collective owners of the condominium unit would be liable for the unit's portion of the total assessment only to the extent of their individual ownership, so owner who held only one percent interest in the unit could not be held jointly and severally liable for all assessments and related charges levied on the unit. Chattahoochee Chase Condominium Ass'n v. Ruben, 472 S.E.2d 520 (Ga. App. 1996). The purchaser of a condominium unit was entitled to offset of $12,000 from monthly common charge payments based upon water damage to her unit; under the vendor's offering plan, vendor was responsible for prompt repair of water leakage problem, and vendor's delay in making the repairs caused damage. Granada Condominium I v. Morris, 639 N.Y.S.2d 91 (1996). The provision of the ondominium declarations stating that the damage to any unit "resulting from the maintenance, repair, emergency repair or replacement of any of the general common elements" would be a common expense to all owners applied to the damage resulting from repair in the boiler room, which was a common area and not merely to situations where the association managers were compelled to enter the owner's unit to conduct maintenance or repair. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Aspen Alps Condominium Ass'n, 915 F. Supp. 1122 (D. Colo. 1996). A condominium owner may not escape the pro rata share of expenses by waiver; rather, one seeking adjustment based upon Horizontal Property Law's statutory factors of floor area, number of occupants, demand on public utilities, and accessibility to limited common elements is obligated to demonstrate reasonableness of the reduction sought. Plaza Condominium Ass'n v. Wellington Corp., 920 S.W.2d 51 (Ky. 1996). A tenant who resided in condominium unit and received benefit of the condominium's common areas, including free gas, heat, and water, was not required to pay common area fees where nonoccupying owner of the unit failed to pay fees, filed bankruptcy, and permitted the tenant to remain in the unit without charging rent or assigning rent to his creditors. Foxwood Square Condominium I v. Albert, 643 N.Y.S.2d 912 (N.Y.City Civ. Ct. 1996). Membership assessments that exceeded the expenses of a condominium management association were taxable income because they were not constructively refused by members. Also, capital assessments that the member did not specifically approve were not capital contributions. Excess Assessments Taxable to Condo Management Co., Real Estate, 24 Tax'n for Lawyers 4 (Jan./Feb. 1996). See also Taxability of Member Assessments Collected by Time-Share Condominium Management Association, 84 J. of Tax'n (Jan. 1996), and Excess Assessments Taxable to Condo Management Co., 55 Tax'n for Acct. 380 (Dec. 1995). The Maine Condominium Act implies that the creation of units owned by the declarant and the concomitant obligation to pay assessments may occur prior to the actual construction of the physical units. Pilgrim Place Condominium Ass'n v. KRE Properties, Inc., 666 A.2d 500 (Me. 1995). A statute increasing the authority of the condominium owners' association to impose fees did not apply retroactively to an association formed before its effective date. Miesch v. Ocean Dunes Homeowners Ass'n, 464 S.E.2d 64 (N.C. App. 1995). The condominium management company could not recover from a condominium owner the expenses and losses that were incurred after the date that the agency agreement between the two parties automatically terminated. The owners' association complied with the condominium agreement in its calculation of assessments against the condominium owner. Lakepoint Condominium 2 Owners Ass'n v. Durian, 906 S.W.2d 396 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995). The beneficiary of a trust that developed condominiums owed a fiduciary duty to the condominium association to adequately fund the reserve; the statute required the beneficiary to pay a proportionate share of common expenses for unsold units, and Historical and Practice Notes to statute indicated that this language either codified or clarified preexisting law. Maercker Point Villas Condominium Ass'n v. Szymski, 655 N.E.2d 1192 (Ill. App. 2d 1995). By executing and recording the declaration of condominium unit ownership, the developer submitted its condominium project to statutes on unit ownership. The developer of the condominium project was statutorily prohibited from unilaterally exempting itself from payment to the homeowners' association of its pro rata share of maintenance assessments for its own units. Dunes South Homeowners' Ass'n v. First Flight Builders, Inc. 459 S.E.2d 477 (N.C. 1995). Condominium property on which no construction has taken place is a "unit" subject to assessment for common expenses. Aluminum Indus. Corp. v. Camelot Trails Condominium Corp., 535 N.W.2d 74 (Wis. App. 1995). The condominium association had authority to assess special fees against certain owners for insurance and maintenance expenses for common areas and facilities located within a fenced-in pool area adjacent to their units, to which they had exclusive rights and easement. They took title with notice that they had sole responsibility for expenses associated with the pools. Podell v. Lahn, 651 N.E.2d 859 (Mass. App. 1995). When individual unit owners obtained a money judgment against their condominium association for unauthorized acts, the association levied a special assessment against the owners to raise the necessary funds. The court ruled that the owners can be assessed to pay themselves and their attorney. Condominiums: Unit Owners Assessed to Pay Themselves Damages, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 6 (Oct. 1995). See also Ocean Trail Unit Owners Ass'n v. Mead, 650 So. 2d 4 (Fla. 1994). The condominium owners' duty to pay assessments is conditioned solely on whether the unit owner holds title to the condominium unit and whether the assessment conforms to the declaration of the condominium and the bylaws of the association, which are authorized by statute. Ocean Trail Unit Owners' Ass'n v. Mead, 650 So. 2d 4 (Fla. 1994). Future units in homeowner's association could be subject to assessment before condominium declaration was filed pursuant to the Condominium Act. Packard Real Estates Homeowners' Ass'n v. James V. Paige, Jr., Dev., Inc., 645 N.Y.S.2d 242 (1996). Liens for delinquent common expense assessments on individual condominium units are creatures of statute, and the court must respect intricate priority scheme that legislature has established for such items. Dime Sav. of New York, FSB v. Muranelli, 667 A.2d 803 (Conn. App. 1995). In order to foreclose on a condominium unit based upon the unit owner's failure to to pay special assessment, the condominium association was required to prove that it sent written notice of specific purpose or purposes of the assessment to each unit owner. Star Lake Estates Ass'n v. Auerbach, 656 So. 2d 271 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1995). The mere fact that an individual condominium unit owner may not withhold payment of common charges and assessments in derogation of condominium by-laws based on a defective condition of his unit or common areas does not mean that the unit owner is precluded from interposing any defenses to action brought by the Board of Managers for foreclosure even when there is no claim that the unit owner is in derogation of any of the condominium by-laws. Residential Bd. of Managers of Century Condominium by Simons v. Berman, 633 N.Y.S.2d 478 (1994). Huskey v. Managers of Condos of Edelweiss, 696 N.E.2d 753 (Ill. App. 1998) (board cannot change plaintiffs' ownership interest in common area without consent of all unit owners); Gulf Shores Council of Co-owners, Inc. v. Raul Cantu No. 3 Family Ltd. Partnership, 985 S.W. 2d 667 (Tex. App. 1999) (recognizing condominium association's considerable discretion to determine expenses and assessments); Alma Investments, Inc. v. Bahia Mar Co-Owner Ass'n, 999 S.W. 2d 820 (Tex. App. 1999) (condominium agreement provision allowing developer to exempt certain owners from maintenance charges held void as against public policy and state condominium act requiring each co-owner to contribute a pro-rata share).

(n22)Footnote 122. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code § 5311.18(A). Because delinquencies in condominium fees can leave owners in severe financial difficulties some commentators advocate giving the owners' associations lien priority over a condominium owner's first mortgage. See, e.g., Grahame K. Wells, Note, The Use of Super-liens to Promote Cooperation Between Condominium Associations and Lenders, 13 Ann. Rev. Banking L. 477 (1994). The association must give an owner adequate notice of its intention to record a lien for these unpaid assessments, however. Loigman v. Kings Landing Condo., 734 A.2d 367 (N.J. Super. 1999); Mountain View Condominium Ass'n v. Bomersbach, 734 A.2d 468 (Pa. 1999) (association that won judgment for attorney's fees against owner may recover attorney's fees for trying to recover attorney's fees).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.11

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.11 Common Conflicts Encountered by Condominium and Cooperative Owners

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.11(a) Loss of Deposit/Downpayment.

When a prospective condominium unit purchaser makes a downpayment or a deposit a legally binding obligation between the purchaser and the developer or the developer's agent is created. The amount of the deposit or downpayment is immaterial. Thus, unless a condominium purchase is in violation of state law, it is binding when executed. A mere violation of the statutes governing condominiums, at least where those statutes have consumer protection as their goal, may not be enough to justify a refusal by purchaser to perform or to compel return of the purchaser's downpayment in the absence of a nexus between the violation and purchaser's refusal to perform. n123

A typical requirement with respect to such deposits and downpayments is that they are held in a trust or escrow account until delivered at settlement, or otherwise returned or credited to the account of the purchaser. This information is usually required to be placed in the condominium declaration. In addition, under certain conditions some states provide for the payment of interest on downpayments or deposits. n124

When a condominium developer does not return a prospective downpayment or deposit the usual types of contract remedies apply. In addition, under circumstances where substantial numbers of persons have been affected, and substantial harm has occurred, many states provide the state attorney general with the power to pursue declaratory judgment actions, as well as pursue class actions for damages. n125 More often, however, the attorney general's power with respect to condominiums and cooperatives is limited to the use of the subpoena power for the purpose of investigating wrongdoings in the condominium offering statements. New York n126 represents one example.

§ 36.11(b) Burdensome Contracts.

Many of the major problems associated with condominium ownership have to do with burdensome or unconscionable agreements for both condominium management and for recreational facilities. With respect to each it has been observed:

> A mandatory provision of typical offering plans requires the purchaser to become a member of the > recreational association and to pay an annual fee for the use of the recreational facilities. Some plans also require that the owner-member pay for any increase in real property taxes associated with the facilities. Furthermore, title to the facilities is retained by the sponsor--in other words, it does not become part of the common elements. In addition to the abuses, one plan examined stated that the annual dues would be increased by a cost-of-living factor; in other words, as the consumer price index rose, so would the level of the annual "dues."

>
> * * *
>
> The management agreement is another booby trap of the typical offering. Some sponsors insert in the master deed a requirement that the sponsor or the sponsor's appointee be the managing agent of the project for, say, a period of 50 years. Management, as has been pointed out, is a vital necessary for the successful operation of a project. It must be carried out with skill and proficiency. When management is entrusted to an incompetent or a rascal with a larcenous bent, there can be all sorts of adverse ramifications. The agent can pad bills, order unnecessary work and repairs, put favorites on the payroll, and carry out a raft of other deceptive practices which serve to line his pockets and raise the operating expenses of a project. n127

There is no legal prohibition against a developer retaining ownership interests in condominium recreational facilities furnished to condominium unit owners and others. Typically, one of the problems that arises when the developer retains property interests in the condominium recreational facilities is the conflict over the developer's ability to lease the recreational facilities to a separate operator at the developer's option. Generally, the facilities operator pays a rental fee to the developer which means, of course, that neither the unit owners nor the association reap any financial benefits from the arrangement. In addition, if what the operator or the developer delivers is inefficient the quality of recreational services might be low. The typical response is to limit the length of these kinds of contracts. This is the general approach taken by the Uniform Condominium Act. n128

§ 36.11(c) Physical Defects.

The following excerpt illustrates some of the problems that can occur when substantial physical defects are allowed to exist in a condominium:

> Ben and Elaine were down in Miami, ready to retire, flush with cash from the recent sale of their home in New Jersey, and ready for a retirement condominium apartment.
>
> They looked around a lot and finally bought a two-bedroom unit from a suspicious-looking widow who muttered responses to most of their questions. The apartment was a really nice accommodation in a high-rise building that was some 15 to 20 years old. Eighteen months after they moved in, a meeting of the owners was called to discuss the replacement of the two elevators in the building. Numerous complaints had been made about the awful condition of the cars and their frequent failures. Oftentimes the cars would stop and get stuck between floors. In fact, old Mr. Cohen had a heart attack and died during one of those failures. Yes, they would have to be replaced. Estimates were received, and the total cost was indicated at $125,000.
>
> Where does the money come from? You guessed it. There was no provision for replacements in the monthly charges, so special assessments will have to be made. How much has not been determined at the moment, but you may rest assured that the total will be quite substantial.
>
> Moral:
>
> 1. Be sure to include ALL expenses, including a reserve for potential replacements.

2. Don't delude yourself as to the true costs of ownership.

3. A replacement provision means you are materially underestimating expenses.

4. Have the building inspected by a reputable contractor or other specialist to determine the condition of its various components. (emphasis added) n129

The foregoing illustrates the absolute necessity of a thorough inspection of both the individual condominium unit and as much of the entire project as possible. This is especially true of older facilities. A thorough inspection, using experts, if possible, can help prevent the potential unit purchaser from becoming involved in problems like those described above.

State law usually requires developers to describe any warranties for structural elements and mechanical and other systems, in both individual units and for common areas and facilities. Such warranties usually appear in the condominium declaration and offering statements. Consequently, if they discover that there has been a breach of warranty, unit owners then have the right to seek damages and other appropriate remedies. In addition, usually unless the condominium declaration provides otherwise, damage to or destruction to any or all parts of the common areas must be promptly repaired by the management association or board of managers.

§ 36.11(d) Conflicts of Interest.

Ohio law specifically states:

> No developer or agent, directly or indirectly, shall sell or offer to sell a condominium ownership interest in a condominium development unless he discloses fully and accurately to each prospective purchaser of the interest all material circumstances or features affecting the development, by preparing and providing to each prospective purchaser a readable and understandable written statement of such circumstances or features. The statement shall not intentionally omit any material fact or contain any untrue statement of a material fact... . n130

Ohio law, like the law of most states, does not specifically disallow conflicts of interest on the part of the developer. Nevertheless, the condominium declaration is the proper vehicle for statements concerning, for example, the developer's retention of a property interest in recreational facilities provided to unit owners, a potential conflict of interest. In addition, any actual or potential conflict not disclosed enables unit owners, and in some instances, the attorney general, to bring actions for both damages and declaratory relief.

§ 36.11(e) Financing.

The Uniform Act requires the developer to disclose "any financing offered or arranged by the declarant." n131 Other state requirements are more extensive. n132

§ 36.11(f) Selection of Occupants and Subleasing.

The bylaws of the condominium association generally determine how occupants of units are selected and what restrictions condominium unit owners have on the transfer of their units. n133 For example, some condominium association bylaws provide the unit owners' association with the right of first refusal. n134 This means that a unit owner may be required to offer the unit to the association before it can be sold to a third party. In addition, some bylaws contain strict rules on assignment or subleasing of ownership interests. n135

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 123. Fruin v. Colonnade One at Old Greenwich Ltd. P'ship, 662 A.2d 129 (Conn. App. 1995) (statute was not intended "as a vehicle for purchasers to avoid a purchase agreement by citing alleged violations bearing no relationship to the defaulting purchaser's acts"); Thompson v. HWG Group, Inc., 664 A.2d 489 (N.H. 1995) (statute creates liability only where purchasers rely; plaintiffs had no knowledge of misstatement of developer so could not have relied on it).

(n2)Footnote 124. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.25(A); Fla. Stat. § 718.202(1).

When a condominium developer breaches the purchase contract with the purchaser by failing to complete construction free from defective materials and in workmanlike manner, developer was not entitled to recover damages on counterclaim for purchaser's failure to close, nor retain earnest money under contractual forfeiture provision. Daugherty v. Bruce Realty & Dev., Inc., 892 S.W.2d 332 (Mo. App. 1995).

(n3)Footnote 125. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.27(C).

(n4)Footnote 126. See, e.g., Charles H. Greenthal & Co. v. Lefkowitz, 299 N.E.2d 657 (N.Y. 1973).

(n5)Footnote 127. See Hubin, Warning! Condominium Ownership May be Dangerous to Health, Wealth and Peace of Mind 64-66 (Irwin 1976).

(n6)Footnote 128. See Uniform Condominium Act § 3-105, cmts. 1 and 2.

(n7)Footnote 129. See Hubin, Warning! Condominium Ownership May be Dangerous to Health, Wealth and Peace of Mind 108-109 (Irwin 1976).Socy. Hill Condominium Assn., Inc. v. Socy. Hill Assoc., 789 A.2d 138 (N.J. Super. 2002) (in cases of alleged construction defects, look to the master deed and statutory definition to determine whether an item is part of the common area). See Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowners' Ass'n, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 758 (1996) (condominium association had no duty to tell purchaser about construction defects or existence of civil action against developer to repair defects; association was not the seller, was not a party to the contract and had no special relationship with the buyer).

(n8)Footnote 130. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.26.

(n9)Footnote 131. See Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103(a)(9).

(n10)Footnote 132. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.26(D), which indicates a developer must show:

The significant terms of any financing offered by or through the developer to purchasers of the condominium ownership interests in the development, including the name of any bank or other institution involved in the financing, the minimum down payment, a statement that the prospective purchaser may obtain financing from another bank or institution, and the annual interest rate.

Any failure on the developer's part to disclose significant terms like those described above render such developer liable for damages and declaratory relief.

"Foreclosure" for purposes of the statute determining the liability of the developer and the lender upon foreclosure of condominium development includes instances in which the lender acquires a deed in lieu of foreclosure. Moloney v. Boston Five Cents Sav. Bank, FSB, 663 N.E.2d 811 (Mass. 1996).

(n11)Footnote 133. Gulf Shores Council of Co-owners, Inc. v. Raul Cantu No. 3 Family Ltd Partnership, 985 S.W. 2d 667 (Tex. App. 1999) (where owner challenged Board's decision to prohibit outside leasing agents, court upheld Board's decision under a reasonableness standard; decision was not arbitrary, capricious or discriminatory).

(n12)Footnote 134. Soho Bazaar, Inc. v. Board of Managers of Soho Intern. Arts. Condominium, 698 N.Y.S.2d 626 (1999) (a contract vendee lacks standing to enforce condominium bylaws; the essence of the vendee's complaint was that Board had wrongfully purchased units under right of first refusal in by-laws).

(n13)Footnote 135. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995) (an Illinois condominium association may prohibit the leasing of units; if the prohibition results from Board action it will be upheld if it is affirmatively shown to be reasonable in purpose and application, if prohibition is made a part of condominium declaration it is presumed valid unless it is arbitrary or violates public policy or unit owners' constitutional rights). A lender/mortgagee that had foreclosed on a condominium unit and held absolute title to the unit was considered a constructive "landlord," for purposes of statute limiting the landlord's ability to eject elderly, blind, or physically disabled tenants. The lender became the owner, and thus, the landlord, when the entire title to the unit became vested in it as a result of the foreclosure judgment and the passing of law days. First Federal Bank, FSB v. Whitney Dev. Corp., 677 A.2d 1363 (Conn. 1996). In purchasing a townhouse, the purchaser impliedly agreed that property rights being sold were subordinate to interest of the homeowners' association as a whole. Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowner's Ass'n, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 758 (1996).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.12

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.12 Problems Associated with Condominium Conversion.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.12(a) History.

The condominium concept in the United States is just over thirty years old; the general public has thus tended to associate the term "condominium" with new construction. In fact, many people think of a condominium as a type of new building and not simply another form of property ownership. Condominium conversion is therefore a relatively new concept. Studies indicate that few rental properties, if any, were converted to condominium ownership in the United States prior to 1970. n136 Since that time, however, there has been a relatively steady acceleration of condominium conversions of rental housing. n137

There are numerous schools of thought on why the concept of condominium conversion has been steadily advancing:

> Two distinct lines of argument have been advanced to explain why and where conversions occur. One is that conversions are products of distressed rental markets, in which landlords sell for conversion as a response to declining profitability. On the demand side, rental market distress would be evidenced by slow growth or decline in population or the rate of new household formation, lack of competition for available units and net out-migration of population. On the supply side, distress would be indicated by a combination of high rental vacancy rates, depressed rent levels, low rates of new rental construction, and high rates of rental losses from inventory.
>
> Another explanation for conversions is that they respond to a strong and growing demand for ownership produced largely by rapid inflation. Strong demand and inflation tend to price traditional single-family homes beyond the reach of some new, younger households and other middle-income people who would otherwise be in the market. On the demand side, evidence of growing preferences for ownership would include strong sales of single-family homes, as well as condominiums, and relatively low vacancy rates in certain neighborhoods and communities. A large pool of younger, relatively more affluent renter households might indicate that an area has great potential demand for multi-family ownership, including ownership of converted properties. On the supply side, strong ownership demand would be reflected by relatively high levels of new construction of both single-family homes and condominiums. (citations omitted) n138

One commentator has listed three primary reasons and seven secondary reasons why developers have entered into the condominium conversion process. Primary reasons seem to be inflation, location, and profitability. Inflation is a factor because some investors are of the opinion that rental rates have not outstripped the cost of living; thus more profitable uses of funds have been sought, one of them being the condominium. Location is important because of increasingly scarce land in urban centers. Profitability is important because theoretically condominium conversion yields more funds to the developer than does new construction. n139

Other advantages of condominium conversion include the following:

1. There is always flexibility to revert to previous use if the conversion is not successful.

2. Often the costs of development are more clearly ascertainable.

3. Existing tenants create a built in market.

4. Less expertise in site planning, engineering and architecture, obtaining building permits, construction and construction management, and finance is required for a conversion than for new development.

5. Urban locations offer the advantages of time-saving, gas-saving and money-saving economics.

6. Conversions can attract people to an existing neighborhood at lower prices than comparable new construction.

7. The current popularity of restored traditional architecture and quality can be taken advantage of in older buildings. n140

Regardless of what reasons exist for condominium conversions, it is not likely that the trend will conclude soon. Nevertheless, condominium conversion probably has as many detractors as it does proponents. Thus, the arguments have generally gone along the following lines:

> One of the most controversial issues in the field of condominium development relates to conversion condominiums. Opponents of conversions point out that the frequent result of conversions, which occur principally in large urban areas, is to displace low- and moderate-income tenants and provide homes for more affluent persons able to afford the higher prices which the converted apartments command. Indeed, studies indicate that the burden of conversion displacement falls most frequently on low- and moderate-income and elderly persons. At the same time, the conversion of a building to condominium ownership can lead to a substantial increase in property value, a result which proponents believe can be an important factor in curtailing the problem of declining urban tax bases. Proponents also point out the conversion of rental units in inner-city areas to individual ownership frequently results in the stabilization of buildings concerned, thus providing an important technique for use in neighborhood revitalization. n141

§ 36.12(b) Legal Issues.

Restrictions on developers' abilities to convert rental housing to condominium use are few. Most of restrictions relate to notice. For example, the Uniform Condominium Act "... in an attempt to strike a fair balance between the competing interests of rental tenants and prospective owners, [subsection b of UCA 4-112] provides the tenant a right for 60 days to purchase the unit which he leases at a price and on terms offered by the declarant. The subsection discourages unreasonable offers by declarants by providing that, if the tenant fails to accept the terms offered, the declarant may not thereafter sell the unit at a lower price or upon more favorable terms to a third person for at least 180 days. n142 The Uniform Condominium Act also explicitly prohibits the developer from violating existing tenant leasehold rights. n143 The various states provide for similar notice and purchase provisions. n144

If a tenant fails to exercise the option to purchase a condominium within the time constraints indicated in the statute and then fails to vacate the premises the general rule is that statutory condominium conversion restrictions do not prohibit the use of the particular state's summary process provisions for evictions. n145 Of course, it has been held that failure to give proper notice of condominium conversion to a tenant is a valid defense to a summary eviction process. n146

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 136. See generally H.U.D., The Conversion of Rental Housing to Condominiums and Cooperatives: A National Study of Scope, Causes and Impacts, (1980) (hereafter, 1980 H.U.D. Study).

(n2)Footnote 137. Id. See also Keith B. Romney, Condominium Development Guide, § 10.1 (2d ed. 1983 & Supp. 1990).

(n3)Footnote 138. 1980 H.U.D. Study, supra n.130, at V-1, V-2. See also Converting Rental Housing into Condominiums (P.L.I. 1975).

(n4)Footnote 139. Keith B. Romney, Condominium Development Guide, § 10.1[2] (2d ed. 1983 & Supp. 1990).

(n5)Footnote 140. Id.

(n6)Footnote 141. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-112, cmt. 1. See also Williams, The Great Condominium Ripoff, ch. 6; Hubin, Warning! Condominium Ownership May be Dangerous to Health, Wealth and Peace of Mind 72-76 (Irwin 1976).

See Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 901 F. Supp. 208 (E.D. Va. 1995) (the court found the board's valuation "eminently sensible" inasmuch as "plaintiffs were paid for exactly what they had at the time of repurchase, namely, shares in a cooperatively owned apartment building").

(n7)Footnote 142. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-112, cmt. 2.

(n8)Footnote 143. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-112(e).

(n9)Footnote 144. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-88b. The Condominium and Cooperative Abuse Relief Act was intended to eliminate potential for abuse to which the conversion process lends itself. Condominium and Cooperative Abuse Relief Act of 1980 § 608(b), 15 U.S.C. § 3607(b). WHCS Real Estate Ltd. P'ship v. 33 Greenwich Owners Corp., 642 N.Y.S.2d 483 (1996). Under Delaware law, the plaintiff generally bears the burden of proof on fairness of purchase price for nonparticipating shares in conversion of cooperative apartment building into condominiums, and must overcome the business judgment rule mandating substantial deference to decisions of the cooperative's board of directors. Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 901 F. Supp. 208 (E.D. Va. 1995). A cooperative corporation, which owned title to living units in which shareholders resided, was not precluded under Delaware law from requiring that shareholders purchase their units, as part of a condominium conversion, or sell units to corporation at a price allegedly below market, even though some shareholders were allegedly financially unable to purchase the condominium units. It was sufficient that requirement to purchase or right to sell applied equally to all shares. Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 891 F. Supp. 1169 (E.D. Va. 1995). The tenant was barred from suing on a breach of contract claim in connection with condominium conversion by his default in failing to tender purchase price for his unit pursuant to purchase agreement and failure to allege that he was ready, willing and able to do so. Yalkowsky v. Century Apts. Assoc., 626 N.Y.S.2d 181 (1995).

(n10)Footnote 145. See, e.g., Uniform Condominium Act § 4-112, Comment 4; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47.88b(g).

(n11)Footnote 146. Glenn Chaffer, Inc. v. Kennedy, 433 A.2d 1018 (Conn. 1981); see also Annotation, Validity and Construction of Law Regulating Conversion of Rental Housing to Condominiums, 21 A.L.R. 4th 1083 (1983).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.13

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.13 Remedies for Misconduct by Developer, Association or Owner.

[Go To Supp]

§ 36.13(a) Remedies Against the Developer.

State condominium disclosure laws generally mandate that condominium sales information supplied by the developer conform to strict guidelines. n147 It has been stated that the best "consumer protection" that the law can provide to any purchaser is to insure that such purchaser has an opportunity to acquire an understanding of the nature of the products that are being purchased. n148 As with other kinds of consumer products this is also true of the condominium purchase.

In addition to any other remedies available, contracts or agreements for the sale of condominium units which violate such disclosure guidelines are usually voidable for some period after the date of the sale of the interest. n149 Upon the exercise by the purchaser of the right to rescind the contract or agreement, usually within fifteen days of execution, the deposit or down payment must be promptly returned. n150 Often disgruntled purchasers may sue for and receive reasonable attorney's fees. n151 In some states, the failure to promptly return such payments constitutes a felony. n152 Developers may also be liable for both express and implied warranties of fitness and merchantability. n153 Lastly, in some states statutes allow the attorney general n154 or a state real estate board to intervene. n155

§ 36.13(b) Remedies Against the Association.

The unit owners association may sue or be sued as a separate legal entity in actions relating to the common areas and facilities, or in actions relating to any right, duty, or obligation possessed or imposed upon the association by statute or otherwise. n156 Generally speaking, service of process in these instances is made either on the chief officer of the association, or upon the person named in the condominium declaration. All parties to condominium instruments are expected to comply with the terms of the condominium documents. This includes all covenants, conditions and restrictions set forth in the deed and other instruments which are subject to the condominium declaration, bylaws or other condominium rules and regulations.

It is clear that individual condominium unit owners can become defendants in cases involving breaches of the foregoing covenants, conditions, and restrictions. It is equally clear that condominium associations, not individual association officers, are generally the proper defendants in cases involving such breaches. n157 Of course, condominium associations and unit owners may also act as plaintiffs. n158

§ 36.13(c) Remedies Against Owners.

Unless the declaration or the bylaws provide otherwise, when unit owners default in the payment of condominium assessments, the owners' association usually has the right to place a lien upon the estate or interest of any condominium unit, together with its appurtenant percentage of interest in the common areas and facilities for payment of the common expenses chargeable against the unit, if such charges remain outstanding for a period of time after they have become due and payable. n159 Such liens either explicitly or implicitly do not have priority of mortgages or real estate taxes. n160

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 147. See, e.g., Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103; Fla. Stat. 718.504; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-71b. The provision of a condominium purchase agreement prohibiting individual unit owners from seeking relief directly from sponsors, with respect to any common element, was enforceable, except with regard to claims for flood damage, which were reserved in the survival agreement. Devlin v. 645 First Ave. Manhattan Co., 645 N.Y.S.2d 476 (1996). A disabled person alleged that architectural barriers to the condominium project violate the Fair Housing Act and Hawaii Revised Statutes Chapter 515 -- Discrimination in Real Property. The court dismissed the complaint, holding that the plaintiff had failed to allege an injury in fact traceable to defendant's denial of his right to purchase or rent housing. Ricks v. Beta Dev. Co., 92 F.3d 1193 (9th Cir. 1996). The unit owners of Lords Landing Village Condominium ("unit owners"), having obtained a $1.1 million judgment against the condominium developer, filed this action against the developer's insurance company, to compel them to pay the judgment. The court concluded that the policy issued by Continental did not cover the loss because it did not rise from an "occurrence" within the meaning of the policy. Lords Landing Village Condominium Council of Unit Owners v. The Continental Ins. Co., 92 F.3d 1179 (4th Cir. 1996).

(n2)Footnote 148. Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103, cmt. 1. While two-year statute of limitations applied to the condominium association's claims against the developer for breach of warranties not contained in the Uniform Condominium Act (UCA), six-year statute governed breach of warranties under UCA. Hyland Hill North Condominium Ass'n v. Hyland Hill Co., 549 N.W.2d 617 (Minn. 1996). The Condominium Act imposes personal liability for misrepresentations in the condominium offering statement, even absent evidence that the trust which held title to the property during its construction and sale of the condominium project was to promote injustice or fraud. The Act is specifically designed to allow condominium owners to pierce the corporate veil and impose liability on individual participants. Unit Owners Ass'n of Summit Vista Lot 8 Condominium v. Miller, 677 A.2d 138 (N.H. 1996). Alleged misstatements or omissions which were contained in the condominium registration application and of which unit owner had no knowledge, did not violate the statute making declarant liable to purchaser for statement or omission of material fact if the purchaser relied on the untruth or omission. Thompson v. H.W.G. Group, Inc., 664 A.2d 489 (N.H. 1995). The potential purchaser of a condominium unit could not rescind the purchase contract on the basis of the defender-vendor's alleged violation of the Common Interest Ownership Act (CIOA); the purchaser neither alleged unconscionability on the part of the defendants nor acted to rescind the contract within 15 days of execution of the purchase contract, and CIOA violations played no role in the purchaser's decision to terminate the contract. Fruin v. Colonnade One at Old Greenwich Ltd. P'ship, 676 A.2d 369 (Conn. 1996).

(n3)Footnote 149. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. § 718-202(5).

(n4)Footnote 150. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code § 5311.27(a); W. Va. Code § 36B-4-108.

(n5)Footnote 151. Fla. Stat. § 718.506(2).

(n6)Footnote 152. See Grey v. Coastal States Holding Co., 578 A.2d 1080, cert. denied, 580 A.2d 57 (Conn. 1987); Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.202(7).

(n7)Footnote 153. For an excellent discussion of the scope of these remedies in Maryland and the standing of the association to seek them, see Milton Company v. Council of Unit Owners of Bentley Place Condominium, 729 A.2d 981 (Md. 1999) (holding that association had standing by statute to sue developer for damages arising out of defects in individually owned buildings). See also Seven Bridges Courts Assoc. v. Seven Bridges Develop. Inc., 714 N.E.2d 601 (Ill. App. 1999) (holding that developers of townhouses, like developers of condominiums, have a fiduciary duty to the association but have a limited right to abrogate or modify that duty in the declaration).

(n8)Footnote 154. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.27(c). When a condominium developer breached the purchase contract with the purchaser by failing to complete construction free from defective materials and in workmanlike manner, developer was not entitled to recover damages on counterclaim for purchaser's failure to close, nor retain earnest money under contractual forfeiture provision. Daugherty v. Bruce Realty & Dev., Inc., 892 S.W.2d 332 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995).

(n9)Footnote 155. See Va. Code Ann. §§ 55-79.98B55-79.103.

(n10)Footnote 156. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995) (owner can sue association for failure to comply with bylaws or for injuries resulting from negligence arising out of failure to perform upkeep of common areas); Sacker v. Perry Realty Serv., Inc., 457 S.E.2d 208 (Ga. App. 1995) (association potentially liable for injury to unit owner on common area where declaration expressly obligated association to maintain common areas and keep them in good repair).

(n11)Footnote 157. But see Griffith v. Faltz, 785 P.2d 119 (Ariz. 1990), holding that a Uniform Condominium Act provision under Arizona law alleging that a wrong done by a condominium association shall be brought against such association and not any individual unit owner, did not require that a complaint alleging tortious conduct by the president of the condominium association be brought against the association, but could be brought directly against the individual. A condominium association is not authorized to request homeowner's consumer credit report, based upon the contractual agreement between the condominium association and the unit owner, without the express consent of the unit owner. Daley v. Haddonfield Lumber, Inc., 943 F. Supp. 464 (D. N.J. 1996). For nuisance purposes, the relationship between the condominium unit owner's property interest in the unit and jointly owned common areas is akin to that of adjacent property owners, and the unit owner can maintain a nuisance action against the condominium association for nuisance on common areas. McEneaney v. Chestnut Hill Realty Corp., 650 N.E.2d 93 (Mass. App. Ct. 1995). See also Condominiums: Unit Owner Sues Trustees for Nuisance, Tax Newsline, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 11 (Apr. 1996). The trial court's grant of summary judgment to the condominium association would be reversed in a suit by the unit owner for personal injury sustained when she tripped over a railroad tie in a dark parking lot. Even assuming that the condominium management company was an independent contractor, the condominium association was not relieved of all liability where, in declaration of the condominium, the association was expressly obligated to maintain and keep the common areas in good repair. The association could not escape liability by arguing that the company that it employed to perform its obligations was an independent contractor. When a unit owner sues the condominium for personal injury damages, the owner is deemed an invitee rather than a licensee, thus imposing a duty on the association to exercise ordinary care. Sacker v. Perry Realty Services, Inc., 457 S.E.2d 208 (Ga. App. 1995). See also, Condominiums: Unit Owner is Invitee of Association, Tax Newsline, 25 Real Est. L. Rep. 9 (Feb. 1996). Condominium unit owners had standing to sue under the Fair Housing Act (FHA) for the condominium association's alleged discrimination in refusing to allow owners to sell condo to buyers with children under the age of 18, where they knew about the rule when they bought the unit, and where owners alleged that they lost opportunities to sell their condominium at a higher price because of the "no children" rule and that they suffered financial strain due to additional mortgage payments that they incurred as a result of the rule. Simovits v. Chanticleer Condominium Ass'n, 933 F. Supp. 1394 (N.D. Ill. 1996). Condominium unit owners could pursue compensatory damage claims against condominium association only if condominium association pursued such claims against the unit owners; should the association determine not to proceed, then the owners would be foreclosed as well. Billig v. Buckingham Towers Condominium Ass'n I, 671 A.2d 623 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996). The purchaser of a condominium unit was entitled to offset of $12,000 from monthly common charge payments based upon water damage to her unit under the vendor's offering plan; vendor was responsible for prompt repair of water leakage problem, and vendor's delay in making the repairs caused damage. Granada Condominium I v. Morris, 639 N.Y.S.2d 91 (1996). A Puerto Rico federal court held that the estate of a woman with a mental illness could maintain an action under the Fair Housing Amendments Act (FHAA) against members of the board of a condominium association for conduct that allegedly caused the woman to commit suicide. Schroeder v. De Bertolo, 979 F. Supp. 173 (D.P.R. 1995). The condominium association and its board of directors had the authority to levy daily fines against the condominium owner for the owner's failure to comply with condominium documents regarding the appearance of the condominium units, where the declaration of ownership signed by the owner expressly incorporated statutory powers granted to the association by the Condominium Act, and the Act expressly permitted a levy of fines for violations of condominium documents. Stewart v. Kopp, 454 S.E.2d 672 (N.C. App. 1995). Mere membership in a cooperative does not signify an interest sufficient to disqualify a person from serving as a juror in litigation involving the cooperative. Larson v. Williams Elec. Corp., 534 N.W.2d 1(N.D. 1995). A higher level of deference is necessary when courts review decisions made by self-governing bodies such as condominium associations. Apple II Condominium Ass'n v. Worth Bank & Trust Co., 659 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. 1995). A unit owner's suit against the townhouse association based on denial of request for permission to install screening was action "with respect to the contract" within the meaning of the statute mandating that contractual attorney fee provisions be reciprocal obligations; owner fulfilled his contractual duty under the declaration of covenants and restrictions by submitting an application for approval to the architectural control committee, and the association forced the owner to file suit by arbitrarily refusing to approve plans where similar structures had been approved before. Jakobi v. Kings Creek Village Townhouse Ass'n, 665 So. 2d 325 (Fla. App. 1995). Condominium associations had to be regarded as prevailing parties and were entitled to award of attorney fees and costs previously assessed in connection with prior trial, where associations ultimately prevailed on the central issue presented in the initial trial and had a judgment entered against them only on a separate issue not injected or litigated until after a case was remanded for a second trial. Scudder v. Greenbrier C. Condominium Ass'n, 663 So. 2d 1362 (Fla. Dist Ct. App. 1995). In an action alleging fraud and breach of contract based on purchaser's inability to use the unit for commercial purposes, purchaser of condominium unit failed to offer sufficient evidence of damages, absent any evidence as to the difference between consideration paid and the value of the unit as professional unit, which was allowed under condominium offering plan. Xenopoulos v. Board of Managers of 150 East 56th Street Condominium, 633 N.Y.S.2d (1995). The trial court improperly awarded the unit owner of condominium damages for repairs to interior surfaces of walls in her unit, in the owner's action against the condominium association for offset to her unpaid common charges for cost of repairs. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995). The board of managers of a condominium association acted in bad faith and without basis in law when it refused to respond to a request by the sponsor of the condominium's conversion for permission to alter the building's structure so as to connect the sponsor's existing basement garage to an affiliated basement garage in an adjacent building. Hunt v. Sharp, 649 N.E.2d 1201 (N.Y. 1995). See Four Jay's Constr., Inc. v. Marina at the Bluffs Condo Ass'n, 846 So. 2d 555 (Fla. App. 2003) (homeowner association was properly sued as the class representative of the owners of the condominium when seeking to resolve interest in regard to all units and not individual owners).

(n12)Footnote 158. See Margate Village Condo. Ass'n v. Wilfred, Inc., 350 So. 2d 16 (Fla. App. 1977), holding that a condominium association had standing to bring suit against a developer to test the validity of a recreational lease; see also Annotation, Standing to Bring Action Relating to Real Property of Condominiums, 74 A.L.R. 4th 165 (1989).

(n13)Footnote 159. See Uniform Condominium Act § 3-116; Conn. Stat. Ann. § 47-82; Va. Code Ann. 55-79.84. Hodges v. Canyon Creek Ridge No. 1 Homeowner's Assn., Inc., 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 1976 (Mar. 19, 2002). Alpenwald Village Inc. v. Town of Readsboro, 687 A.2d 481 (Vt. 1996) (holding that a purchaser at a tax sale who accepts a tax collector's deed does assume personal liability for payment of assessments). Future units in homeowner's association could be subject to assessment before condominium declaration was filed pursuant to the Condominium Act. Condominium by-laws stating that each condominium unit owner would be liable for his or her portion of each assessment while he or she was the unit owner meant that the collective owners of the condominium unit would be liable for the unit's portion of the total assessment only to the extent of their individual ownership, so owner who held only one percent interest in the unit could be held jointly and severally liable for all assessments and related charges levied on the unit. Chattahoochee Chase Condominium Ass'n v. Ruben, 472 S.E.2d 520 (Ga. App. 1996). Vendor of condominium was entitled to reasonable attorney fees it incurred in recovering the purchaser's unpaid common charges. See also Unit Owner Entitled to Offset in Condominium's Action to Recover Common Charges, Cooperatives and Condominiums, N.Y. Real Est. L. Rep. (Apr. 1996). The provision of the condominium declarations stating that the damage to any unit "resulting from the maintenance, repair, emergency repair or replacement of any of the general common elements" would be a common expense to all owners applied to the damage resulting from repair in the boiler room, which was a common area and not merely to situations where the association managers were compelled to enter the owner's unit to conduct maintenance or repair. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Aspen Alps Condominium Ass'n, 915 F. Supp. 1122 (D. Colo. 1996). In view of the condominium bylaws' express provision for the recovery of attorney fees, the trial court had no basis for denying the association recovery of such fees in its action for unpaid assessments. Oakland East Manors Condominium Ass'n v. LaRoza, 669 So. 2d 1138 (Fla. App. 1996). Evidence that the condominium association did not receive the unit owner's payment on semiannual assessment supported judgment for the association in its action to recover the assessment. Ward v. 3900 Condominium Ass'n, 670 So. 2d 1182 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996). Condominium owner was personally liable for unpaid condominium association assessments following foreclosure sale which resulted in insufficient funds to pay assessments after satisfaction of large first mortgage. Maya Marca Condominium Apts. v. O'Rourke, 669 So. 2d 1089 (Fla. App. 1996). A statute making attorney fees payable if party violates by-laws of the condominium association does not apply if the co-owner claims rights pursuant of bylaws, even though the claim may be determined to be invalid. Plaza Condominium Ass'n v. Wellington Corp., 920 S.W.2d 51 (Ky. 1996). Under Massachusetts Condominium Act, condominium association's lien for unpaid common charges or expenses cannot achieve "super priority" status unless action is first instituted by the condominium association to enforce the lien. Trustees of McIntosh Condominium Ass'n v. F.D.I.C., 908 F. Supp 58 (D. Mass. 1995). Under New York law, late charges, attorney fees, repair charges, referee fees, and advertising and publishing costs were not "common charges" covered by the condominium lien. In re Eatman, 182 B.R. 386 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995). The court held that a condominium owner was not entitled to withhold the payment of common charges or her pro rata share of insurance because of a dispute over the repair of common areas. Agassiz West Condominium Ass'n v. Solum, 527 N.W.2d 244 (N.D. 1995). Where permitted by statute and the condominium instruments, association that provides utilities may terminate those utilities to unit owner who has failed to pay assessments. See Fontaine Condominium Ass"n v. Schnacke, 496 S.E.2d 553 (Ga. App. 1998) (association's termination of electrical service to owner who was over $10,000 in adjudicated arrears upheld). Loigman v. Kings Landing Condo., 734 A.2d 367 (N.J. Super. 1999); Mountain View Condominium Ass'n v. Bomersbach, 734 A.2d 468 (Pa. 1999) (association that won judgment for attorney's fees against owner may recover attorney's fees for trying to recover attorney's fees). Board of Managers of Mews v. Farajzadeh, 712 N.Y.S.2d 722 (Misc. 2000). See also: Moshyedi v. Council of Unit Owners, 132 Md. App. 184, 752 A.2d 279 (Md. App. 2000); Hidden Grove Condo. Ass'n v. Crooks, 744 N.E.2d 305 (Ill. App. 2001) (late fee of $25 a month for unpaid assessments was unreasonable charge and unenforceable); Glen v. June, 782 A.2d 430 (N.J. Super. 2001) (association's placement of lolly column in unit owner's driveway, thus barring unit owner's use of driveway and access to garage, was an impermissible means by which to encourage payment of overdue assessments).

(n14)Footnote 160. See Uniform Condominium Act § 3-116(b); Bankers Trust Co. v. Board of Managers of the Park 900 Condo., 616 N.E.2d 848 (N.Y. 1993). Many states give statutory priority to such liens. These statutory schemes often depart "from the common law rule of first in time equals first in right." Dime Sav. Bank of New York, FSB v. Muranelli, 667 A.2d 803, 805 (Conn. App. 1995). Some statutory schemes go so far as to recognize a "super priority lien" which will allow association assessments that accrued during the six months immediately preceding commencement of a foreclosure action to take priority over prior security interests. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47-258(b). See also Carroll v. Oak Hall Assocs., L.P., 898 S.W.2d 603 (Mo. App. 1995) (common area expense assessment is a statutory lien). But see Trustees of MacIntosh Condominium Ass'n v. F.D.I.C., 908 F. Supp. 58 (D. Mass. 1995) (12 U.S.C. § 1825(b)(2), which protects the assets of the FDIC as a receiver of a failed bank, prohibits the imposition of any lien, including a lien with super-priority status, in FDIC foreclosures); Colchester Towne Condo. Council of Co-Owners v. Wachovia Bank, N.A., 581 S.E.2d 201 (Va. 2003) (statute requiring that association's lien is "subject to prior liens" requires that proceeds from foreclosure sale be first applied to satisfy first deed of trust).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.14

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.14 Forms.

The documentation for condominiums obviously vary from state to state. The following is an example of basic condominium forms that might be used in the state of Ohio.

1.01 CONSUMER CHECKLIST n161

FINANCIAL

1._____Can you afford the condominium?

a. What are your present income, expenses and lifestyle?

b. How will they change if you purchase a condominium?

c. Will your downpayment be refunded if you are unable to get mortgage credit on terms acceptable to you?

d. Will settlement costs be over and above the downpayment?

e. Does the projected budget of the condominium indicate that the assessments will remain relatively stable? (Sometimes the major burden of condominium ownership is not the unit cost, but rather the monthly assessments for an owner's proportionate share of maintenance and related expenses.)

f. Is a "liquidated damage" clause in the purchase agreement (it indicates conditions under which you could lose your downpayment). Is it understandable to you?

CONSTRUCTION AND AMENITIES

2._____Does the condominium property appear to be well constructed?

a. Is there only one model, or is the project substantially completed?

b. Are floors level? Do windows leak? Do corners meet? Is the electrical system adequate, etc.?

3._____Is the size and layout acceptable?

a. Is floor covering provided?

b. Are elevators and trash receptacle conveniently located?

c. Is there enough closet space?

d. Is security sufficient?

e. Is parking adequate? For guests? For domestic employees and contractors?

f. Are schools, shopping, parks, etc. close by?

g. How are utilities metered?

h. Are the recreational facilities adequate? Will there be a separate charge for them? n162

i. Are children and pets permitted?

ORGANIZATION

4._____Have you read all of the condominium organizational documents? Do you understand them?

a. Are you in agreement with most or all of their provisions?

b. Is the amendment process acceptable to you?

c. Are the rules and regulations acceptable?

d. Do you agree with the definitions of common maintenance duties versus unit owner obligations?

INSURANCE

5._____Does the condominium have adequate insurance against fire, liability, theft, or heating unit malfunction or accident?

UNIT OWNER CONTROL

6._____What are the restrictions on your right to resell?

7._____What are the restrictions on your right to sublease?

8._____Is the developer reliable?

1.02 CONDOMINIUM DECLARATION n163

This is the Declaration of_____Condominium made day of this_____day of_____, 20_____, pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 5311 of the Revised Code of Ohio (the "Condominium Act").

RECITALS

A._____, n164 a_____, n165 (the "Declarant"), is the owner in fee simple of all of the real property hereinafter described and the improvements thereon and appurtenances thereto.

B. The Declarant desires to create of this property a site of individually owned units, and commonly owned areas and facilities, and to these ends to submit this property to condominium ownership under the provisions of the Condominium Act.

1. The terms used in this Declaration shall have the meanings given to them under Section 5311.01 of the Condominium Act. n166

2. Legal description of the land: Situated in the State of Ohio, County of_____,_____of_____, and bounded and described as follows:

[Legal description]

3. The Condominium Property subject to this Declaration shall be known as_____Condominium.

4. The Condominium Property shall consist[initially] n167 of_____(_____) residence units,_____(_____) garages, private walkways and driveways for pedestrian and vehicular traffic. [As it can be accomplished, the balance of land described hereinabove and herewith subjected to RC Chapter 5311 shall be improved with additional residence units, garages and private walkways and driveways, but not to exceed_____(_____) units. This Declaration will be amended from time to time to accomplish these purposes]. There shall be no commercial facilities, and there shall be the following restrictions upon the use or uses thereof:

a. All units shall be restricted to single family residential use and occupancy only;

b. There shall be no commercial facilities in the condominium;

c. No place of business the practice of any profession may be conducted or permitted in any unit or in any common area within the Condominium; and

d. All unit owners shall be members of the_____Condominium Unit Owners Association and be bound by the By-Laws and Rules and Regulations thereof.

5. General description of the Condominium: n168

6. Unit designations and descriptions: n169

7. Description of common areas: n170 All other common areas and facilities are as defined in the Condominium Act.

8. This is to certify that each unit owner shall be a member of the_____Condominium Unit Owners Association, the sole function of which shall be the administration of the condominium property.

9. The person upon whom service of process shall be made for the_____Condominium Unit Owners Association is:_____.

10. [Until all residence units and garages which are planned for real property described hereinabove and referred to in paragraph (4) are completed, this Declaration can be amended by the Board of Managers without the consent or approval of unit owners.]

11. [Except for the provisions of paragraph (10) above and thereafter,] this Declaration may be from time to time amended by an affirmative vote of not less than seventy-five (75%) of the full voting power of the unit owners in terms of such unit owner's percentage of interest in the common areas and facilities as defined by the Condominium Act.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the said_____, Inc., an Ohio corporation, owner in fee simple of the land and appurtenances herein described sets its hands by_____its president, and_____, its secretary, this_____day of_____, 20_____.

_____, Inc.

Signed and acknowledged in the presence of:

By: _____
President

_____
_____

By: _____
Secretary

State of Ohio
ss:
County of Cuyahoga

Before me, a notary public in and for said county, personally appeared the above-named_____, Inc., by_____, its president, and_____, its secretary, who acknowledged that they did sign the foregoing instrument and that the same is the free act and deed of said corporation, and the free act and deed of each of them personally and as such officer.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and official seal at_____, Ohio, this_____day of_____, 20_____.

_____
Notary Public

My commission expires_____, 20_____.

[Seal]

This instrument was prepared by:

1.03 CONDOMINIUM ASSOCIATION ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION n171

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION
CONDOMINIUM ASSOCIATION

In compliance with the requirements of the provisions of Chapter 1702 of the Ohio Revised Code, the undersigned hereby forms a corporation not for profit and certifies:

ARTICLE I

The name of the corporation is_____Condominium Association (the "Association").

ARTICLE II

The principal office of the Association shall be or such place in_____, County, Ohio, as the Board of Trustees of the Association shall specify from time to time.

ARTICLE III Purpose and Powers

Forthwith upon the creation of the Association the undersigned is creating a condominium under the provisions of Chaper 5311 of the Revised Code of Ohio, known as_____Condominium (the "Condominium"), of the property described in Exhibit A hereto. n172 The purposes for which the Association is formed are to be and act as the unit owners association for the Condominium to provide for the maintenance, preservation, and architectural control of the property of the Condominium, and to promote the health safety and welfare of the residents of the Condominium, and for these purposes to:

a) Exercise all of the powers and privileges and perform all of the duties and obligations of the Association as set forth in these Articles of Incorporation, and the Declaration and Bylaws of the Condominium (the "Articles," the "Declaration" and the "Bylaws," respectively);

b) fix, levy, collect and enforce payment by any lawful means, all charges or assessments pursuant to the terms of the Declaration, and pay all expenses in connection therewith and all office and other expenses incident to the conduct of the business of the Association;

c) acquire (by gift, purchase or otherwise), own, hold, improve, build upon, operate, maintain, convey, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of real or personal property in connection with the affairs of the Association.

d) borrow money to fulfill its purposes;

e) administer and enforce terms, conditions, covenants, restrictions, and regulations upon, under and subject to which the Condominium or any part thereof may now or hereafter be used, and fix and provide any such terms, conditions, covenants, restrictions and regulations, and administer, enforce, alter, amend, change, add to, extend, waive, or terminate, in whole or in part, any of the same;

f) provide the residents and Unit Owners of the Condominium with (i) normal utility services not separately provided to individual units, (ii) services supplemental to municipal services, and (iii) Common Areas and Facilities maintenance service;

g) be, function and act as the unit owners association of the Condominium, under the provisions of Chapter 5311 of the Revised Code of Ohio, and delegate such authority as it desires to a managing agent;

h) have and exercise any and all powers, rights, and privileges which a corporation organized under Chapter 1702 may now or hereafter have or exercise by law; and

i) take any action necessary, expedient, incidental, appropriate or convenient to the carrying out of the foregoing purposes. The Association shall not do any act or enter into any agreement or enter into any transaction in a manner which would violate any provision of Chapter 5311 of the Ohio Revised Code or the provisions of these Articles, the Declaration, or the Bylaws.

ARTICLE IV Membership

Every person or entity who is a record owner of a fee or undivided fee simple interest in a Unit shall be a member of the Association, and is herein called a "Unit owner." The foregoing is not intended to include persons or entities who hold an interest merely as security for the performance of an obligation. Membership shall be appurtenant to and may not be separated from ownership of a Unit, and transfer of a Unit shall automatically transfer membership to the transferee. Voting rights of members shall be as set forth in the Declaration and Bylaws. (The latter of which shall also be and serve as the Association's Code of Regulations).

ARTICLE V Board of Trustees (Managers)

The names and addresses of the persons who are initially to act in the capacity of Trustees, until the selection of their successors, (as provided in the Declaration and Bylaws), are:

Name_____Address_____

The number, qualifications, manner and time of selection of successor Trustees, and their terms of office, shall be as set forth in the Declaration and Bylaws.

The Board of Trustees shall be and act as the board of managers of the Condominium and shall have all of the powers and all of the duties of the board of managers as defined in Chapter 5311 of the Revised Code of Ohio and of the board of trustees as defined in Chapter 1702 of the Revised Code of Ohio, except as such powers may be limited or expanded by the provisions of these Articles, the Declaration or the Bylaws.

ARTICLE VI Notice and Quorum

Notice and quorum requirements shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Bylaws.

ARTICLE VII Indemnification

(1) The Association shall indemnify every person who is or has been a Trustee, officer, agent, or employee of the Association and those persons' respective heirs, legal representatives, successors and assigns, against expenses, including attorneys' fees, and judgments, decrees, fines, penalties and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred in connection with any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, and whether in an action or proceeding by or in the right of the Association, or otherwise, in which such person was or is a party or is threatened to be made a party by reason of the fact that person was a Trustee, officer, employee or agent of the Association, or is or was serving in such capacity at the request of the Association, provided that person (a) acted in good faith and in a manner that person believed to be in or not opposed to interests of the Association, and (b) in any matter the subject of a criminal action or proceeding, had no reasonable cause to believe the questioned conduct was unlawful, but provided that in the case of any threatened, pending or completed action or suit by or in the right of the Association to procure a judgment in its favor against any such person by reason of that person serving in such capacity, no indemnification shall be made in respect of any claim, issue, or matter to which such person shall have been adjudged to be liable for negligence or misconduct in the performance of a duty to the Association unless and only to the extent that the court in which such action was brought shall determine upon application that in view of all the circumstances of the case that person is fairly and reasonably entitled to indemnity for such expenses as the court shall deem proper.

(2) Unless ordered by a court, the determination of indemnification, pursuant to the foregoing criteria, shall be made (a) by a majority vote of a quorum of the Trustees of the Association who were not and are not parties to or threatened with any such action, suit, or proceeding, or (b) if such a quorum is not obtainable, or if a majority of a quorum of disinterested Trustees so direct, in a written opinion by independent legal counsel other than an attorney, or a firm having associated with it an attorney, who has been retained by or who has performed services for the Association or any person to be indemnified within the past five years, or (c) by the Unit owners, or (d) by the court in which such action, suit or proceeding was brought.

(3) Any such indemnification shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights to which such person may be entitled under law, any agreement, or any insurance purchased by the Association, or by vote of Unit owners, or otherwise.

ARTICLE VIII Duration

The Association shall exist so long as the condominium regime of the Condominium exists, and no longer.

ARTICLE IX Dissolution

The Association may be dissolved only with the same consents as are required to terminate the Condominium regime, as provided in the Declaration.

ARTICLE X Definitions

All terms used herein shall have the same meanings as set forth in the Declaration.

ARTICLE XI Amendments

The Articles may be amended only under the same terms and conditions, and with the same approvals, as are provided in the Declaration for its amendment.

_____

SOLE INCORPORATOR

1.04 CONDOMINIUM ASSOCIATION BYLAWS n173

BYLAWS OF_____CONDOMINIUM ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I NAME, PURPOSE AND LOCATION

The name of this Association shall be_____Condominium Association (the "Association"), which corporation, not for profit, n174 is created pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 1702 of the Ohio Revised Code, and which Association is also created pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 5311 of the Ohio Revised Code, as the unit owners' association for_____Condominium. The sole purpose of the Association is to manage, govern and control_____Condominium in accordance with the aforesaid Chapter 5311.

ARTICLE II DEFINITIONS

All of the terms used herein shall have the same meanings as set forth in the Declaration of Condominium (the "Declaration"), recorded simultaneously herewith with the Recorder of_____County.

ARTICLE III MEMBERSHIP

Each unit owner, as defined in the Declaration, shall be a member of the Association.

ARTICLE IV VOTING

Each unit owner shall have voting power in proportion to such unit owner's percentage of interest in the common areas and facilities. Such voting power may be exercised by the unit owner or owners, or such owner or owners heirs, assigns or personal representatives.

ARTICLE V MEETINGS

1) There shall be an annual meeting of the Association, within the first twenty-one days of January of each year at a place and time as determined by the Board of Managers.

2) At the annual meeting the unit owners shall elect the necessary member or members of the Board of Managers for the ensuing year. At such annual meeting any matters concerning the welfare of the_____Condominium may be discussed and referred to the Board of Managers for proper action.

3) At the annual meeting the president, vice president or vice presidents, secretary and treasurer shall submit reports in writing for the year ending.

4) Written notice of each meeting of the unit owners shall be given by, or at the direction of, the secretary or person authorized to call the meeting, by mailing a copy of such notice, postage prepaid, at least five (5) days prior to such meeting, to each unit owner entitled to vote thereat, addressed to the unit owner's address last appearing on the books of the Association, or supplied by such unit owner to the Association for the purpose of notice, or by delivering a copy of that notice at such address at least five (5) days before such meeting. The notice shall specify the place, day and hour of the meeting, and, in the case of a special meeting, the purpose of the meeting. Notice of such meeting may be waived in writing.

5) Special meetings of the unit owners may be called by the president, vice president or any one of them, secretary, treasurer, or, by unit owners constituting at least twenty five percent (25%) n175 of the voting power. Notice of such meetings shall be given in accordance with the procedure contained in Section 4 hereof.

6) Annual and special meetings shall be presided over and conducted by the president of the Board, or in such officer's absence, the vice president, secretary and treasurer in that order.

7) To constitute a quorum at any annual or special meeting at least fifty percent of the voting power must be present at such meeting. n176 At any meeting of unit owners, a unit owner may vote in person or by proxy. All proxies shall be in writing and filed with the secretary prior to the meeting. Every proxy shall be revocable and shall automatically cease upon conveyance by a unit owner of such owner's unit.

8) Except as otherwise provided in the Declaration, or by law, a majority of the voting power of unit owners voting on any matter that be determined by the unit owners at a duly called and noticed meeting shall be sufficient to determine the matter. Robert's Rules of Order shall apply to the conduct of all meetings.

9) Any action that could be taken by unit owners at a meeting may be taken without a meeting with the affirmative vote or approval, in writing, of unit owners having not less than a majority of the voting power of unit owners, or such greater proportion of the voting power as may be required by the Declaration, or by law.

ARTICLE VI BOARD OF MANAGERS

1) The Association shall be governed by a board of managers consisting of three members, n177 each of whom shall be the owner of an interest in a unit of the condominium property.

2) The first board shall consist of three members for respective terms of three years, two years and one year, and as the term of each such member expires the successor shall be elected for a term of three years so that the term of one member expires annually. Each board member shall hold office until the expiration of the term for which such member shall have been elected and shall continue in office until such officer's successor shall have been duly elected and qualified. Such election shall be by secret written ballot.

3) The member or members of the board of managers shall be elected at the annual meeting of the unit owners and shall be elected by a plurality of voting power.

4) In case of any vacancy in the board of managers through death, resignation or disqualification, the remaining managers, by affirmative vote of a majority shall elect a successor to hold office for the unexpired portion of the term of the manager whose place shall be vacant and until the election and qualification of a successor.

5) A majority of the managers in office at the time shall constitute a quorum for meetings.

6) Unless otherwise determined by the unit owners at a meeting duly called and noticed for such purpose, no manager shall receive compensation for any service rendered to the Association as a manager. Such manager, however, may be reimbursed for actual expenses incurred in the performance of duties as a manager.

7) Meeting of the Board of Managers shall be held on such dates as the board may designate and shall be called by and held at the request of the president or any two members of the board.

ARTICLE VII POWERS OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS

Except for such power and authority reserved to the unit owner under either the Declaration or by law, the board of managers shall exercise all powers and authority under the Declaration and under law with respect to condominium property. The Board shall have the right, power and authority to:

1) Take all actions the board deems necessary to comply with all requirements of the Declaration, the Association Bylaws and all other legal requirements;

2) Enforce the covenants, conditions and restrictions contained in the Declaration;

3) Repair, maintain and improve the Common Areas;

4) Obtain insurance coverage not less than that required pursuant to the Declaration;

5) Establish, enforce, levy and collect assessments as provided in the Declaration;

6) Adopt and publish rules and regulations governing the use of the Common Areas and the personal conduct of unit owners, occupants and their guests thereon, and establish penalties for the infraction thereof;

7) Suspend the voting rights of a unit owner during any period in which such unit owner shall be in default in the payment of any assessment levied by the Association;

8) Declare the office of a member of the board to be vacant in the event such board member shall be absent from three consecutive regular meetings of the board;

9) Authorize the officers to enter into one or more management agreements in order to facilitate the efficient management of the condominium property; and

10) Do all things and take all actions permitted to be taken by the Association by law or the Declaration not specifically reserved thereby to others.

ARTICLE VIII DUTIES OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS

1) Cause to be kept a complete record of all its acts and corporate affairs and to present a statement thereof to owners at each annual meeting of the unit owners, or any special meeting when such statement is requested in writing by unit owners representing one-half (1/2) or more of the voting power of unit owners;

2) Supervise all officers, agents and employees of the Association and see that their duties are properly performed;

3) Fix the amount of assessments against each unit, give proper notice of each such assessment and foreclose the lien against any property for which assessments are not paid, all in accordance with the Declaration;

4) Procure and maintain insurance as provided in the Declaration, and as the board deems advisable, including the bonding of all officers or employees of the Association handling money;

5) Cause the property subject to the Association's jurisdiction to be maintained within the scope of authority provided in the Declaration, including causing the restrictions created by the Declaration to be enforced; and

6) Take all other actions required to comply with all requirements of law and the Declaration.

ARTICLE IX OFFICERS

1) At the first meeting of the board of managers in each year, held next after the annual meeting of the unit owners association, the board of managers shall elect officers of the association, and designate and appoint such subordinate officers and employees as it shall determine. They may also appoint an executive committee or special committees and may employ a managing agent or custodian and define the agent or custodian's salary and duties.

2) The officers of this Association shall be a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, all of whom shall be members of the board of managers. They shall be elected for a term of one year by the board of managers and serve until their successors are elected and qualified.

3) Any officer or employee elected or appointed by the board of managers, other than a board member, may be removed at any time upon a vote of a majority of the whole board of managers.

4) The president shall conduct all meetings of the Association and the board of managers; the vice president shall act in the absence of the president; the secretary shall keep the minutes of Association and Board of Managers meetings; and they shall handle the financial affairs of the Association, including deposits of funds, and shall write and sign checks for the legitimate expenses of the Association as authorized by the board of managers, and prepare and maintain the records required by RC 5311.09.

ARTICLE X COMMITTEES

The Board shall appoint a nominating committee and may appoint such other committees as it deems appropriate in carrying out its purposes.

ARTICLE XI ADMINISTRATIVE RULES AND REGULATIONS

The board may adopt administrative rules and regulations governing the use and operation of the condominium property not in conflict with the declaration or these bylaws by a vote of a majority of the board members. Such rules and regulations may be amended from time to time by a majority vote of the members of the board of managers, or by a vote of seventy five percent (75%) of the voting power of the unit owners association at the annual meeting or at a special meeting of the same.

ARTICLE XII USE OF UNIT AND COMPLIANCE WITH BYLAWS

Each unit shall be used and occupied only as a private dwelling by the owner, owners or such owner or owner's tenant. Each unit or any part thereof shall not be used for any other purpose. Each unit occupant shall respect the comfort and peace of mind of such occupant's neighbors, as well as other occupants of the condominium. Each owner shall not do, or permit to be done, or keep in the unit, anything which increases the rate of fire insurance for the condominium property, or do or suffer to be done any act or thing which shall be a nuisance, annoyance, inconvenience, or damage to the unit or any occupants of the condominium.

Each unit owner shall abide by the provisions of the bylaws of the Association, the administrative rules and regulations as promulgated hereunder, the Declaration, as well as the provisions of Ohio Revised Code Chapter 5311 and any amendments thereto, and each owner shall use such owner's unit and sell and convey the same, exercise the privilege of being an owner only in a way which will not violate any of the provisions of the bylaws, administrative rules and regulations, as amended from time to time, or any provisions of the Declaration.

ARTICLE XIII BOOKS AND RECORDS

The books, records and financial statements of the Association, including annual audited financial statements when such are prepared, shall be available during normal business hours or under other reasonable circumstances, upon request of the Association, for inspection by unit owners and the holders and insurers of first mortgages on units. Likewise, during normal business hours or under other reasonable circumstances, the Association shall have available for inspection by unit owners, lenders and their insurers, and prospective purchasers, current copies of the Declaration and related organizational documents, including these bylaws, and the rules and regulations governing the operation of the Condominium.

ARTICLE XIV AUDITS

Upon the written request of the Association by any first mortgagee of a unit, or its insurer, or by vote of the holders of a majority of the voting power of unit owners, the board shall cause the preparation and furnishing to those requesting of an audited financial statement of the Association for the preceding fiscal year, provided that no such statement need be furnished earlier than ninety (90) days following the end of such fiscal year.

ARTICLE XV FISCAL YEAR

Unless otherwise changed by the Board, the fiscal year of the Association shall begin on the first day of January and end on the 31st day of December of every year, except that the first fiscal year of the Association shall begin on the date of the Association's incorporation.

ARTICLE XVI AMENDMENTS

These bylaws may be amended from time to time at an annual or special meeting of the Association, by an affirmative vote of not less than seventy-five percent (75%) of the unit owners in terms of each unit owner's percentage of ownership in the common areas and facilities. Such amendment shall be effective from the time a certificate setting forth such amendment is delivered for recording to the Recorder for_____, Ohio. In witness whereof, the said_____, Inc., an Ohio Corporation, owner of all units in_____Condominium, does hereby adopt these bylaws by_____, its president, and_____, its secretary, this_____day of_____, 20_____.

_____, Inc.

Signed and acknowledged in the presence of:	By: _____ President
_____	_____
_____	Secretary
_____
[usual notary form]

1.05 CONDOMINIUM ASSOCIATION RULES AND REGULATIONS n178

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE _____ CONDOMINIUM UNIT OWNERS ASSOCIATION

1. The Condominium Unit Owners Association (the "Association"), acting by and through its Board of Managers (the "Board"), has adopted the following Rules and Regulations (the "Regulations"). These Regulations may be amended from time to time by resolution of the Board or the Association.

2. Terms used herein shall have same meaning as such terms have in the Declaration of Condominium Ownership (the "Declaration") or the Ohio Condominium Act (the "Act").

3. The unit owners shall comply with these regulations governing the building, public halls, terraces, balconies, recreational areas, grounds, parking areas and any other appurtenances to the Condominium Property.

4. No part of the Condominium shall be used for any purpose other than residential housing and the common purposes for which the Condominium was designed.

5. Any common sidewalks, driveways, entrances, or passageways shall not be obstructed or used by any unit owner for any other purpose than ingress to and egress from the units.

6. Nothing shall be done or kept in any of the common areas and facilities that will increase the rate of insurance for the Condominium or contents thereof without the prior written consent of the Board. No unit owner shall permit anything to be done or kept in such owner's unit or the common areas and facilities that will result in cancellation of insurance on the Condominium or contents thereof. No waste shall be committed on the common areas and facilities.

7. Disposition of garbage and trash shall be only by the use of garbage disposal units or by use of common trash and garbage facilities.

8. Unit owners and their families and invitees shall not use sidewalks, driveways, entrances, or passageways as play areas.

9. No rugs or other materials shall be dusted from windows, balconies, decks, or patios by beating or shaking. Each unit owner shall keep such owner's unit in a good state of preservation, repair and cleanliness, and shall not sweep or throw or permit to be swept or thrown therefrom, or from the doors or windows thereof, any dirt or other substance.

10. No work of any kind shall be done upon the exterior building walls or upon the general or limited common areas by any unit owner. All such work is the responsibility of the Association.

11. Unit owners and occupants shall exercise reasonable care to avoid making or permitting to be made, loud, disturbing, or objectionable noises and in using or playing or permitting to be used or played musical instruments, radios, phonographs, television sets, amplifiers, and any other instruments or devices in such manner as may disturb or tend to disturb owners, tenants, or occupants of other units.

12. If permitted by law, the Board reserves the right to place "For Sale," "For Rent" or "For Lease" signs on any unsold or unoccupied units, and the right is hereby given to any Mortgagee who may become the owner of any unit to place such signs on any unit owned by the Mortgagee, but in no event will any sign be larger than a size approved by the Board in writing.

13. No unit owner shall display any sign visible from the exterior of any unit, nor place on or remove from the Condominium Property plants of any description with the prior written consent of the Board.

14. No unit shall be used for any unlawful purpose and no unit owner shall do or permit any unlawful act in or upon such owner's unit.

15. No animals or reptiles of any kind shall be raised, bred or kept in any unit or the common elements without the consent of the Board.

16. No vehicle belonging to or under the control of a unit owner or member of such owner's family, or an invitee, shall be parked in such manner as to impede or prevent ready access to any entrance to or exit from any unit or building on the Condominium Property. Unless otherwise authorized by the Association, the parking areas shall not be used for any purpose other than parking automobiles. No buses, trucks, trailers, boats, recreational or commercial vehicles shall be parked in the parking areas or in the driveways, except in those areas, if any, specifically designated for such parking by the Board.

17. The Association assumes no liability for nor shall it be liable for any 1085 or damage to articles stored in any common or other storage area.

18. Any damage to the common areas and facilities, or to common personal property caused by a unit owner, or such owner's family members or other unit occupants or invitees, shall be repaired at the expense of that unit owner.

19. No unit owner, resident or tenant shall install wiring for electrical or telephone installation or for any purpose, nor shall any television or radio antennae, machines, or air conditioning units be installed on the exterior of the Condominium, nor shall any similar improvements that protrude through the walls or the roof of the Condominium be constructed, except as may be expressly authorized by the Association.

20. The agents of the Board or the Managing Agent, and any contractor or worker authorized by the Board or the Managing Agent, may enter any room or unit in the Condominium with the written permission of the unit owner at reasonable business hours for the purpose of discharging their respective duties and responsibilities. In the case of emergencies entry may be immediate and without such permission.

21. Employees and agents of the Association are not authorized to accept packages, keys, money (except for Condominium assessments), or articles of any description from or for the benefit of any unit owner.

22. The Association assumes no responsibility for any injury incurred by any person using Condominium recreational facilities and all such persons use such facilities at their own risk. The Association reserves the right to bar any unit owner from the use of Condominium recreational facilities for failure to make payment of any assessments or fees as provided for in the Condominium Bylaws.

23. Complaints regarding the management of the Condominium or regarding actions of unit owners shall be made in writing to the Board or the Managing Agent.

THE FOREGOING CONDOMINIUM RULES AND REGULATIONS ARE SUBJECT TO AMENDMENT AND TO THE PROMULGATION OF FURTHER REGULATIONS

1.06 CONDOMINIUM MANAGEMENT AGREEMENT MANAGEMENT AGREEMENT

THIS AGREEMENT is made this_____day of_____, 20_____, between n179 _____(the "Association"), and n180 _____(the "Managing Agent").

WHEREAS, (1) is a_____, n181 and is the owner of_____condominium dwelling units in_____building(s) (the "Condominium Property"), situated in the_____, County of_____, State of Ohio; and

WHEREAS, the Association, acting by and through its Board of Managers, pursuant to it Declaration of Condominium Ownership, appoints, n182 _____as its exclusive Managing Agent to manage the Condominium Property, and the Managing Agent accepts such appointment in mutual agreement as to all that follows; and

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual promises of the parties herein contained, the parties do hereby agree as follows:

1. APPOINTMENT OF MANAGING AGENT

The Association hereby appoints the Managing Agent as the exclusive agent of the Association, to operate and manage the common areas of the Condominium Property, subject to the direction and control of the Board of Managers of the Association, and the Managing Agent hereby accepts the appointment on the terms and conditions hereinafter described. The obligations and duties conferred upon the Managing Agent by the Board of Managers are confined only by the common areas and facilities of the Condominium Property. The Managing Agent covenants to furnish its best skill and judgment and to cooperate in furthering the interests of the Association. The Managing Agent agrees to furnish efficient business administration and supervision and to perform its responsibilities, both administrative and advisory, in the best and soundest manner consistent with the effective management techniques and in the most expeditious and economical manner consistent with the best interests of the Association.

2. TERM OF AGREEMENT

The term of this Agreement shall commence on the date first above written and shall continue until n183 _____unless sooner terminated in accordance with the provisions of this Agreement.

3. LIAISON WITH THE BOARD

The Managing Agent shall principally communicate to the Board of Managers and to the Association membership to the extent practicable, through one or more designated liaisons appointed by the Board of Managers. Notwithstanding the appointment of one or more Liaisons, the Managing Agent shall communicate with the Directors, Officers, and Committee Chairs in the exercise of their mutual responsibilities.

4. OPERATING DUTIES OF THE MANAGING AGENT

Under the direction of the Board of Managers the Managing Agent shall repair maintain the common areas of the Condominium Property. The duties of the Managing Agent shall include the following:

a. To hire, supervise and discharge such personnel as may be necessary to operate and maintain the Condominium Property. All such personnel shall be employees of the Association and not of the Managing Agent, and their compensation shall be considered to be an operating expense of the Association. Any major change in personnel shall be approved by the Board of Managers. Any employee who handles or is responsible for the handling of the Association's monies shall, without expense to the Association, be bonded by a fidelity bond in an amount not less than, n184 evidence of which shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Association.

b. To pay Association operating expenses for utilities, communications (including telephone and postage expenses) and supplies with Association funds.

c. Subject to the approval of the Board of Managers, and on its behalf, to enter into contracts for such services and utilities as the Board shall direct, for the proper operation, maintenance and repair of the Condominium Property; and to order such equipment, tools, appliances, materials and supplies as are necessary to properly maintain the Condominium Property.

d. To maintain business-like relations with the Association and its members, and respond in a systematic fashion for services with respect to the Common Areas of the Condominium Property.

e. To attend regularly scheduled monthly meetings of the Board of Managers, additional Board and committee meetings, as requested, and the Annual Meeting of the Association. When directed, to send formal notification of such meeting at the expense of the Association.

f. To operate and maintain the Condominium Property consistent with the overall plan of the Association. Unless specifically authorized by the Board of Managers, the expenses incurred for any one item of repair or replacement should not exceed the sum of n185 _____,_____._____dollars. Nevertheless, emergency repairs involving, in the Managing Agent's professional opinion, immediate danger to life or property, immediately necessary for the preservation and safety of the occupants of the Condominium Property, or required to avoid the suspension of any necessary Condominium Property, shall be made at the Managing Agent's direction irrespective of cost. Notwithstanding such authority with respect to emergency repairs, the Managing Agent understands and agrees that it will, if possible, confer immediately with the person or persons designated as Liaison pursuant to Article 3 hereof.

g. To notify all unit owners of all rules, regulations and notices promulgated by the Association.

h. At the Association's direction and under its control, to purchase or renew all Association insurance policies for the various coverages enumerated in the Declaration of Condominium Ownership.

5. FISCAL DUTIES OF THE MANAGING AGENT

a. Prior to the end of the fiscal accounting year, to prepare and submit an annual operating budget of the proposed expenditures which, when approved by the Association, shall serve as the basis for monthly assessment for the next fiscal year.

b. To collect by a mutually agreed upon method all funds due the Association from the unit owners and other sources. Such funds shall include, but not be limited to, all monthly assessments and special assessments imposed by the Board of Managers on such unit owners, pursuant to the Condominium Declaration and Bylaws. All amounts so collected shall be placed in a financial institution or institutions in accounts as designated by the Board of Managers. Such deposits shall be insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or other similar federal agency. The Managing Agent shall make diligent efforts to collect all delinquencies and, when directed by the Association, provide necessary information and cooperation with the Association's legal counsel. The Managing Agent does not guarantee the collection of Assessments and other charges relating to the Condominium Property and shall not be responsible for the failure to collect the same.

c. From the funds collected and deposited in the aforesaid account or accounts to cause to be disbursed regularly and punctually, (i) fire and liability insurance premiums, and (ii) sums otherwise due and payable by the Association as operating expenses authorized to be incurred under this Agreement, including the Managing Agent's fee. After disbursement in the order above specified, any balance remaining in such accounts may be disbursed or transferred from time to time, as directed by the Board of Managers. The Managing Agent shall not be obliged to incur any liability or obligation of the Association in an amount that exceeds the existing balance of the Association's operating account.

d. To prepare and file on behalf of the Association all returns and reports required under federal, state and local laws relating to employees, including, but not limited to withholding, unemployment, FICA and worker's compensation, and to timely pay all taxes and premiums associated with such reports and returns from the aforementioned accounts. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Managing Agent shall pay from its own funds any penalties, interest, or fines levied as a result of errors and delays caused by the Managing Agent. The Managing Agent shall not be responsible for the preparation of annual tax returns of the Association to any taxing body. If so directed, however, by the Board of Managers, the Managing Agent shall make appropriate arrangements for such filing.

e. To furnish the Board of Managers with a monthly statement of Cash Receipts and Disbursements, including a current list of all delinquencies in funds due the Association.

6. LIABILITY OF MANAGING AGENT

Except for wilful acts or for breaches of duties constituting gross negligence, the Association shall indemnify and hold the Managing Agent harmless from all claims, actions and damages arising from the performance of its duties under this Agreement.

Regardless of the provisions of indemnification set forth hereinabove, the Managing Agent shall maintain in force, for the entire term of this Agreement, liability and business insurance, a fidelity bond and such other forms of insurance and bonding as may be hereinafter reasonably required by the Board, for both Association employees and Managing Agent employees as designated, in amounts which are approved by the Board, naming the Board as beneficiary and/or obligee as applicable.

7. COMPENSATION

The compensation which the Managing Agent shall be entitled to receive for all services performed under this agreement shall be n186 _____payable as follows: n187 _____

Special reports outside of the scope of this Agreement shall be prepared by the Managing Agent in accordance with the request and direction of the Board of Managers, at a fee mutually agreed upon by the parties. In the event of any major restoration or modification cost exceeding n188 _____due to fire or other hazard, or by direction of the Association is undertaken, a special supervisory fee will be payable to the Managing Agent. The amount of such fee and its basis will be determined by separate agreement between the Board of Managers and the Managing Agent.

8. TERMINATION OF AGREEMENT

Either party to this Agreement may terminate it without cause by giving written notice to the other party by registered mail at least n189 _____days prior to the termination date. In such event this agreement shall expire at the conclusion of the n190 _____day notice period. Upon the termination of this Agreement, the parties shall account to each other for all matters outstanding as of the date of the termination of the Agreement. The Association shall indemnify the Managing Agent against any outstanding obligations or liabilities, beneficial to the Association, which the Managing Agent may have incurred hereunder. The Managing Agent shall document any outstanding obligations.

9. NOTICES

All notices required hereunder shall be in writing and shall be deemed given if delivered in person or mailed by certified or registered mail, addressed as follows:

To the Association: To the Managing Agent:

10. MISCELLANEOUS

Terms used in this Agreement shall be defined in the same manner as in the Condominium Act, or if not defined therein, as defined in the Condominium Declaration or Bylaws.

11. ENTIRE AGREEMENT

This agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the parties, and no variance or modifications thereof shall be valid and enforceable, except by an agreement in writing. This Agreement shall inure to the benefit of and constitute a binding obligation upon the parties hereto, their respective heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have set their hands this_____of_____, 20_____.

_____ASSOCIATION

WITNESSES:
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____
_____

By: _____

By: _____
(Managing Agent)
By:_____
By: _____

1.07 RECEIPT FOR CONDOMINIUM DOCUMENTS

RECEIPT

UNIT § _____ n191

By affixing (my) our signature(s) below, where indicated, (I) we hereby acknowledge that (I) we have received from, n192 _____the following documents and/or information sheets relative to the purchase of the property located at_____, Ohio, commonly known as Unit § _____ n193

_____Two (2) copies of the Right to Rescind Sheet

_____Specifications and Unusual Standard Features included in Unit §

_____ n194

_____General Information Letter n195

_____Deed n196 to Condominium Unit § _____ n197

_____Covenants and Restrictions

_____Declaration of Condominium Ownership

_____Condominium Association Bylaws

_____Condominium Association Code of Regulations n198

Date: _____
_____

Date: _____ (Buyer)
_____

1.08 RIGHT OF RESCISSION

The following information is given in connection with a credit transaction dated_____, 20_____, between n199 _____and n200 _____, the Purchaser(s).

NOTICE TO CUSTOMER REQUIRED BY FEDERAL LAW

You have entered into a transaction on_____, 20_____, which may result in a lien, mortgage, or other security interest on your home. You have a legal right under Federal Law to cancel this transaction, if you desire to do so, without any penalty or obligation within three (3) business days from the above date or any later date on which all material disclosures required under the Truth in Lending Act have been given to you. If you so cancel the transaction, any lien, mortgage, or other security interest on your home arising from this transaction is automatically void. You are also entitled to receive a refund of any downpayment or other consideration if you cancel. If you decide to cancel this transaction, you may do so by notifying n201 _____at_____, n202 by mail or telegram sent not later than midnight. n203

You may also use any other form of written notice identifying the transaction if it is delivered to the above address not later than that time. This notice may be used for that purpose by dating and signing below.

(I) we hereby cancel this transaction. Date:_____

_____

Date:_____

_____

EFFECT OF RESCISSION. When a customer exercises the right to rescind under Paragraph (1) of this section, the customer is not liable for any finance or other charge, and any security interest becomes void upon such a rescission. Within ten (10) days after receipt of notice of rescission, the creditor shall return to the customer any money or property given as earnest money, downpayment, or otherwise, and shall take any action necessary or appropriate to reflect the termination of any security interest created under the transaction. If the creditor has delivered any property to the customer, the customer may claim possession of it. Upon the performance of the creditor's obligations under this section, the customer shall tender the property to the creditor, except that if return of the property in kind would be impracticable or inequitable, the customer shall tender its reasonable value. Tender shall be made at the location of the property or at the residence of the customer, at the option of the customer. If the creditor does not take possession of this property within ten (10) days after tender by the customer, ownership of the property vests in the customer without obligation on the customer's part to pay for it.

(I) (WE) hereby acknowledge receipt of two (2) copies of this Notice of Right to Rescind.

Date: _____ _____
Date: _____ (Purchaser)
_____
(Purchaser)

This instrument prepared by:

_____

1.09 WARRANTY DEED FOR CONDOMINIUM UNIT n204

WARRANTY DEED
KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS:

That_____, Inc., an Ohio corporation, of the City of_____, County of_____, and State of Ohio, Grantor, in consideration of the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) and other valuable consideration to it paid by_____, of the City of_____, County of_____, and State of Ohio, Grantee, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, does hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey to the said_____,_____heirs and assigns forever, the following real estate situated in the County of_____, in the State of Ohio, and in the City of_____:

Unit_____, along with garage number_____, and an undivided_____percent (_____%) interest in the common areas and facilities of_____Condominium located in_____, Ohio, as the same is shown of record upon the drawings in Condominium Plat Book_____Pages_____to_____, both inclusive, Recorder's Office,_____County, Ohio.

Prior conveyance: Volume:_____Page:_____

Recorder's Office,_____County, Ohio

For the purpose of carrying out the general plan and development and management of_____Condominium, its bylaws, administrative rules and regulations, the provisions of the declaration and the provisions of RC Chapter 5311, and to maintain the character and standards thereof, and as a part of the consideration hereof, the Grantor, for itself, its successors and assigns, does covenant and agree with the Grantee that any future deed or deeds conveying units as now, or as may hereafter be established in said condominium, shall maintain and impose upon and subject said units to the agreements, conditions and restrictions hereinafter set forth.

The Grantor executes and delivers this deed and the Grantee accepts the same and the premises hereby conveyed subject to the following agreements, conditions and restrictions which are for the mutual protection and benefit of, and shall be enforceable by each and every owner of a unit or units in said condominium and its unit owners association, and the Grantee, for the Grantee and the Grantee's heirs and assigns, covenants and agrees to and with the Grantor to keep and perform each of said agreements, conditions and restrictions, as follows:

(1) Grantee becomes with the delivery of this deed, a member of_____Condominium Unit Owners Association and is bound by its bylaws and administrative rules and regulations as amended from time to time.

(2) The unit herein conveyed shall be used for residential purposes only, thereby prohibiting business or professional use.

(3) If the parties hereto, or any one of them, or their heirs and assigns, shall violate or attempt to violate any of the covenants or restrictions herein (which shall include the bylaws and administrative rules and regulations of_____Condominium Unit Owners Association herein by reference), it shall be lawful for the board of managers of the unit owners association or any unit owner to prosecute any proceeding at law or in equity against the person or persons violating or attempting to violate any such covenant or restriction to prevent the person or persons from so doing and/or recover damages for such violation.

[Grantee hereby grants grantee's proxy to the first board of managers elected in accordance with the bylaws of the condominium unit owners association to vote for amendments to the declaration of Condominium (including the bylaws and drawings) in order to increase the number of units of the condominium property to a total not to exceed_____(_____) and thereby cause reductions of each unit's percentage of interest in the common areas and facilities, which percentage for any unit shall, however, always be in the proportion that the fair value of such unit bears to the fair value of all units]. n205

To have and to hold said premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging to the Grantee and to the Grantee's heirs and assigns, forever. And the Grantor for itself and its successors does hereby covenant with the Grantee and the Grantee's heirs and assigns, that it is lawfully seized of the premises aforesaid; that said premises are free and clear from all encumbrances whatsoever excepting taxes and installments of special assessments, if any, due and payable in the_____, 20_____tax collection period and thereafter; and that it will forever warrant and defend the same with the appurtenances unto the said Grantee and the Grantee's heirs and assigns, against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever, except as aforesaid.

In witness whereof, the Grantor,_____, Inc., has hereunto caused its name to be subscribed, pursuant to a resolution adopted by the board of managers, by_____, its president, on this_____day of_____, 20_____.

Signed and acknowledged_____, Inc.
in the presence of

_____ By: _____

_____ President
_____

State of Ohio
ss:
County of Cuyahoga

Be it remembered that on this_____day of_____20_____, before me, the subscriber, a notary public in and for said county, personally came the above-named_____, Inc., by_____, its president, duly authorized by resolution adopted by its board of managers, and acknowledged the signing of the same to be the free act and deed of said corporation and of himself as such officer, for the uses and purposes therein mentioned.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal on the day and year last aforesaid.

_____
Notary Public

[Seal]

My commission expires_____, 20_____

This instrument prepared by:

_____

1.10 CONSENT OF MORTGAGEE n206

The undersigned hereby consents to the execution and delivery of the foregoing instruments, and to the filing in the office of the Recorder of_____County, Ohio; and hereby subjects the mortgage executed by undersigned, which mortgage is filed as Document No._____, Vol._____, Page_____, in said office of the Recorder of_____, County, Ohio, to the provisions of the Condominium Act of the State of Ohio and to the provisions of the foregoing instruments.

Dated:_____

_____
(Mortgagee)
By: _____

Witnesses:

_____
_____

[Acknowledgement]

This instrument was prepared by:

_____

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 161. Most of these considerations are the same ones that should go into the purchase of a traditional, detached single-family home. For additional consumer checklists, for both cooperatives and condominiums, see Nancy Ann Connery, Precontract Considerations, Pre-Contract Due Diligence for Purchasers, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series, PLI Order No. N4-4599 (May 1996).

(n2)Footnote 162. Sometimes this charge can be expensive and built-in. This is especially problematic if the developer has already entered into a long-term agreement with a third party for the provision of recreational services.

(n3)Footnote 163. The Condominium Declaration is the most important of the condominium organizational documents and each one should be tailored to the specific problems of each individual project. This form is primarily based on the minimum requirement of the Ohio Condominium Act. A more expansive document might include more detailed information about easements, construction defects, assessment procedures, dissenting owners, remedies for covenants, violations and sales of units by present owners. The condominium organizational documents, including the Bylaws and drawings, must be filed with the County Auditor in the county or counties in which the property is located.

(n4)Footnote 164. Name of declarant.

(n5)Footnote 165. Legal status of declarant.

(n6)Footnote 166. Some declarations spell out the defined terms in detail. They are in most cases, however, a repetition of the statute. Some developers hand out copies of the statute with their information material for prospective purchasers.

(n7)Footnote 167. This information should be included in case of an expandable condominium.

(n8)Footnote 168. This information must be tailored to the unique circumstances of each project.

(n9)Footnote 169. Id.

(n10)Footnote 170. Id.

(n11)Footnote 171. Chapter 5311 does not specifically authorize what type of entity the unit owners association must be. Nevertheless, the trend seems to be that they are usually formed as non-profit corporations. One commentator lists the following considerations that appear to make the non-profit corporation the favored entity for unit owners associations:

a. Alleviation of uncertainties regarding power, authority;

b. Comprehensive nature of RC Chapter 1702 provides a basis of association operation that is superior to the minimal provisions of Chapter 5311;

c. Name use protection;

d. Limitation on liability for officers and members; and

e. General legal and lender acceptance of the vehicle (based on Robert L. Loveland, "Formation Documentation," Ohio Legal Institute, Condominiums (1980)).

(n12)Footnote 172. Use the legal description contained in the warranty deed (FORM 1.09).

(n13)Footnote 173. Required to be filed with the Declaration with the County Auditor. RC 5311.06.

(n14)Footnote 174. Any changes in these percentages should be checked against the requirements of Chapter 1702 of the Ohio non-profit corporation law, since, in effect, the bylaws of a condominium are the "code of regulations" required under Chapter 1702.

(n15)Footnote 175. Any changes in these percentages should be checked against the requirements of Chapter 1702 of the Ohio non-profit corporation law, since, in effect, the bylaws of a condominium are the "code of regulations" required under Chapter 1702.

(n16)Footnote 176. Id.

(n17)Footnote 177. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5311.08.

(n18)Footnote 178. Bylaws have a higher legal priority than rules and regulations. Rules and regulations generally are more easily amended than bylaws. This set of rules and regulations is for illustration purposes. Each set of such rules and regulations should be adapted for particular residential settings. For example, a high rise condominium may have different needs than a scatter-site development. Some condominium association may want to allow pets; others may prohibit them altogether. Some associations have strict prohibitions against children; some simply regulate children by placing age restrictions upon them.

(n19)Footnote 179. Name of Condominium Association.

(n20)Footnote 180. Name of Managing Agent.

(n21)Footnote 181. Name of Condominium Association.

(n22)Footnote 182. Type of legal entity, i.e., corporation.

(n23)Footnote 183. Date of contract termination.

(n24)Footnote 184. Amount of bond. This amount should be discussed with Association legal and insurance counsel before implementation.

(n25)Footnote 185. Repair and maintenance upper limit. Consult appropriate advisors.

(n26)Footnote 186. Amount of managing agent fee.

(n27)Footnote 187. Calculation of managing agent fee. Some associations also place provisions here with respect to fees for so-called "non-routine" services.

(n28)Footnote 188. Cost necessitating special managing agent fee. Once again, appropriate association advisors should be consulted.

(n29)Footnote 189. Time limit for termination. Most associations use from 30 to 60 days here.

(n30)Footnote 190. Id.

(n31)Footnote 191. Condominium unit designation.

(n32)Footnote 192. Name of developer.

(n33)Footnote 193. Condominium unit designation.

(n34)Footnote 194. If included.

(n35)Footnote 195. Most of the larger developers include a general information sheet, sometimes in the form of a special newsletter for first-time buyers.

(n36)Footnote 196. This is usually a warranty deed.

(n37)Footnote 197. Condominium unit designation.

(n38)Footnote 198. Additional documents as necessary, i.e., amendments to the declaration since its filing with the county recorder.

(n39)Footnote 199. Name of seller.

(n40)Footnote 200. Name of purchaser.

(n41)Footnote 201. Name of seller.

(n42)Footnote 202. Address of seller.

(n43)Footnote 203. Period of three days after contract execution.

(n44)Footnote 204. While a warranty deed is generally preferred, in some circumstances it is acceptable to receive a quitclaim deed instead.

(n45)Footnote 205. This paragraph should be added in expandable condominium situations.

(n46)Footnote 206. If there is a mortgage on the premises, the mortgagee should consent to the creation of the condominium and subject its mortgage thereto.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 36.15

AUTHOR: Professor Frederic White Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

§ 36.15 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Boyer, Ralph. The Law of Property, 4th ed. Ch. 13. St. Paul: West Pub. Co., 1991.

Clurman, David and Edna Hebard. Cooperatives and Condominiums. New York: Wiley-Interscience, 1970.

Clurman, David, et al. Condominiums and Cooperatives. New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1984.

Condominiums, Planned Unit Developments and Conversion Documents. Comm. on Continuing Prof. Educ., American Law Inst., American Bar Ass'n, 1985.

Converting Rental Housing into Condominiums. P.L.I. 1975.

Everett. "Condominiums and Cooperative Apartments -- The New Frontier in Housing." Cooperative Apartments Institute of Real Estate Management. 1961.

Federal Housing Administration. Model Statute for the Creation of Apartment Ownership.

Ferrer, Alberto and Karl Stecher. Law of Condominium. Oxford, N.H.: Equity Pub. Corp., 1967.

"Creating a Community Association: The Developer's Role in Condominium and Homeowner Associations." The Urban Land Institute and the Community Associations Institute.

Hubin. Warning! Condominium Ownership May be Dangerous to Health, Wealth and Peace of Mind (Irwin 1976).

HUD. "The Conversion of Rental Housing to Condominiums and Cooperatives: A National Study of Scope, Causes and Impacts." 1980.

Hyatt, Wayne S. Condominium and Homeowner Association Practice: Community Association Law.

American Law Institute, American Bar Association Committee on Continuing Professional Education, 1981.

Isaacs. "History and Development of the Co-Operative Apartment." The Practical Lawyer. 1967.

Lippman, William Jay. Condominium and Co-op Closings. New York: P.L.I. 1987.

Lippman, William Jay. Condominium Development. 2d ed. P.L.I. 1972.

Real Estate Transactions: Condominium Law and Practice: Forms (Matthew Bender).

Romney. Condominium Development Guide. Boston: Warren, Gorham & Lamont.

The Owner's and Manager's Guide to Condominium Management. Institute of Real Estate Management. 1984.

The Practical Lawyer's Manual of Modern Real Estate Practices. Joint Committee on Continuing Legal Education, American Law Institute, American Bar Association. 1969.

Williams. The Great Condominium Ripoff.

Yockey, Cynthia. Best Friends for Life: Your Right to Animals in "No Pet" Housing. (Doris Day Animal League: 1996).

Articles

Berger, Curtis J. "Condominium, Shelter or a Statutory Foundation." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1963) 987.

Bower, David J. "Communities Within the Community: Consent, Constitutionalism, and Other Failures of Legal Theory in Residential Association", 7 J. Land Use & Envtl. L. 203 (1992).

"Common Rights and Obligations Among Unit Owners under the Minnesota Uniform Condominium Act." Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. Vol. 10 (1984) 157.

Connery, Nancy Ann. "Precontract Considerations, Pre-Contract Due Diligence for Purchasers." Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series. PLI Order No. N4-4599 (May 1996)

French, Susan F. "The Constitution of a Private Residential Government Should Include a Bill of Rights." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1992) 345.

Grahame, K. Wells. Note, "The Use of Super-liens to Promote Cooperation Between Condominium Associations and Lenders," Ann. Rev. Banking L. Vol. 13 (1994) 477.

Kuehnle, Kenton L. "Condominium Revision in Ohio: A Nightmare for Developers and the Courts." Cap. U. L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1979) 241.

Miller, William W. "Cooperative Apartments: Real Estate or Securities." B.U. L. Rev. Vol. 45 (1965) 463.

Note. "Real Property: Oklahoma Condominiums, Prevention of Abuse." Okla. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1975) 189, 197.

Pittman, Charles W. "Land Without Earth -- The Condominium." U. Fla. L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1962) 203.

Ramsey, Charles E. "Condominium, The New Look in Co-ops." Prac. Law. Vol. 9, no. 3 (1963) 21.

Reichman, Uriel. "Residential Private Governments: An Introductory Survey." U. Chi. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1976) 253.

Rohan, Patrick J. "Condominiums and the Consumer: A Checklist for Counseling the Unit Purchaser." St. John's L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1974) 1028.

Shapiro, Daniel S. "Commercial Condominiums: Significant Tax Benefits if Properly Structured." J. Tax'n Vol. 41 (1974) 46.

Shapiro, Daniel S. "Commercial Condominiums: Tax Considerations for Unit Purchasers and the Association." J. Tax'n Vol. 41 (1974) 204.

Smith, Philip M. "A Survey of the Legal Aspects of Cooperative Apartment Ownership." U. Miami L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1961) 305.

"Symposium on the Law of Condominiums." St. John's L. Vol. 48 Rev. (1974) 4.

Uniform Condominium Act. National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. 1977.

Uniform Model Real Estate Cooperative Act. National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. 1981.

Wesch, Kristina. "*511 West 232n*d Owners Corp. v. Jennifer Realty Co.: An Insight into the Duties of Cooperative Conversion Sponsors in New York," 77 St. John's L. Rev. 189 (2003).

Winokur, James L. "Critical Assessment: The Financial Role of Community Associations." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1998) 1135.

Annotations

Annotation, Adequacy and Application of Guidelines Relating to Condominium Association's Requisite Approval of Individual Unit Owner's Improvements or Decoration, 25 A.L.R.4th 1059.

Annotation, Condominium Association's Liability to Unit Owner for Injuries Caused by Third Person's Criminal Conduct, 59 A.L.R.4th 489.

Annotation, *Contractual or State Regulatory Pro*visions Respecting Formation, Composition, and Powers of Governing Body of Condominium Association, 13 A.L.R.4th (1982) 598.

Annotation, Liability for Unpaid Assessments, 39 A.L.R.4th (1985) 114.

Annotation, Liability for Warranties and Representations in Connection with the Sale of Air- Conditioning Equipment, 15 A.L.R.3d 1207.

Annotation, Liability of Vendor for Damages Occasioned by Defective Condition Thereof, 50 A.L.R.3d 1071.

Annotation, Rights of Condominium Association's Management or Governing Body to Inspect Individual Units, 41 A.L.R.4th 730.

Annotation, Self Dealing by Developer of Condominium Project as Affecting Condominium Contracts or Leases with Condominium Association, 73 A.L.R.3d (1976) 613.

Annotation, Standing to Bring Action Relating to Real Property of Condominium, 74 A.L.R.4th (1989) 165.

Annotation, Standing to Bring Action Relating to Real Property of Condominiums, 74 A.L.R.4TH 165.

Annotation, *Pro*per Party Plaintiff in Action for Injury to Common Areas of Condominium Development, 39 A.L.R.4th 114.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Condominium Bylaws or Regulations Placing Special Regulations, Burdens, or Restrictions on Nonresident Unit Owners, 76 A.L.R.4th 295.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Condominium Association's Regulations Governing Member's Use of Common Facilities, 72 A.L.R.3d 308.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Law Regulating Conversion of Rental Housing to Condominiums, 21 A.L.R.4th 1083.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.03

Supp. to § 36.03 Definitions

[Go To Main]

Add at end of second full paragraph:

A condominium is not defined as a "place of accommodation" under the ADA, and thus is not covered by the Act.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.04

Supp. to § 36.04 Distinctive Features of Condominiums and Cooperatives

[Go To Main]

§ 36.04(a) Condominiums Distinguished from Cooperatives [Go To Main]

Change:

Agassiz ... 257 to 527.

§ 36.04(b) Condominiums and Cooperatives Distinguished from Other Types of Property Interests § 20a-718.202(7) to Fla. Stat.

Delete crossed out language from quoted language from Fla. Stat. § 718.103(17) in footnote 6:

"... certain The material within the following brackets is overstruck in the original. [condominium] unit ... declaration The material within the following brackets is overstruck in the original. [of condominium] ."

Change:

§ 718.103(17) to § 718.103(19)

Subsequent History:

Firth v. Lu, 12 P.3d 618 reversed by Firth v. Lu, 49 P.3d 117 (Wash. 2002) (Statute of Frauds does not apply to an agreement to transfer shares in a corporation that operated a cooperative).

Add:

(Cooperatives have the same remedies available to them as does an ordinary landlord) should be added to explanatory parenthetical for Quality Mgmt. Serv. v. Banker.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.05

Supp. to § 36.05 History of Condominiums and Cooperatives

[Go To Main]

§ 36.05(a) Origins of Condominiums [Go To Main]

Change:

Fla. Stat.. § 20-718.103(10) to Fla. Stat. § 718.103(11).

Change:

Agassiz ... 257 to 527.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.06

Supp. to § 36.06 Creation of Condominiums and Cooperatives

[Go To Main]

§ 36.06(a) Termination and Statutory Provisions [Go To Main]

The Uniform Condominium Act is based on the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act.

text accompanying notes 21 & 22: Move so that it follows the inserted paragraph below on the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act and immediately precedes the paragraph beginning with "Condominiums and cooperatives ... " Delete "Other" and Capitalize the "S" in "states" to begin the paragraph after the preceding sentences are moved. This sentence, beginning "States adopting ..." should be included at the end of the prior paragraph.

Change:

*W. VA. CODE §§ 36B-4-101*36B-4-118 *to W. VA. CODE §§ 36B-4-101*36B-4-120

Change:

MINN. STAT. ANN. §§ 515A.1.101-515A.4-117 to MINN. STAT. ANN. §§ 515A.1.101-515A.4-118

After Note 27, add text and Note 27.1:

Nebraska, n27.1

North Carolina,

Add new footnote 27.2: n27.2

Pennsylvania,

Add new footnote 27.3: n27.3

Rhode Island,

Add new footnote 27.4: n27.4

Texas,

Add new footnote 27.5: n27.5

Virginia,

Add new footnote 27.6: n27.6

Washington,

Add new footnote 27.7: n27.7

Louisiana,

Add new footnote 27.8: n27.8

Tennessee,

Add new footnote 27.9: n27.9

Add:

Fla. Stat. Ann. 719.101

after footnote 28, end the paragraph. Thus Condominiums should start a new paragraph.

Add the following paragraph between the paragraph ending at footnote 28 and the paragraph beginning "Condominiums and cooperatives ... "

The Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act ("UCIOA") is another uniform act that provides a comprehensive model code for governing condominiums. The UCIOA was drafted in 1982, two years after the amendments to the Uniform Condominium Act, and it was amended in 1994.[28.1] In drafting the UCIOA, the Uniform Law Commission combined three model acts: the Uniform Condominium Act, the Uniform Planned Community Act, and the Model Real Estate Cooperative Act.[28.2] Consequently, the UCIOA is much more expansive than the Uniform Condominium Act in that it aims to govern condominiums, real estate cooperatives, and planned communities.[28.3] The UCIOA was drafted to supersede the Uniform Condominium Act.[28.4] The following states have adopted the UCIOA: Alaska,[28.5] Colorado,[28.6] Connecticut,[28.7] Delaware,[28.8] Minnesota,[28.9] Nevada,[28.10] Vermont,[28.11] and West Virginia.[28.12]

Add new footnote 28.1: n28.1

Add new footnote 28.2: n28.2

Add new footnote 28.3: n28.3

Add new footnote 28.4: n28.4

Add new footnote 28.5: n28.5

Add new footnote 28.6: n28.6

Add new footnote 28.7: n28.7

Add new footnote 28.8: n28.8

Add new footnote 28.9: n28.9

Add new footnote 28.10: n28.10

Add new footnote 28.11: n28.11

Add new footnote 28.12: n28.12

Change:

D.C. Code Ann. Tit. 45, §§ 1701- 1734 to D.C. Code §§ 42-2001-42-2051.

Change:

Alaska Stat., tit. 34, §§ 7-10- 7-460 to Alaska Stat. §§ 34,07.010-34.07.460.

See, e.g., Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. Ct. App. 2006) (Covenants cannot violate the Fair Housing Act).

(end of citation beginning "See also Villas ... ": Add Subsequent History

(Rev'd 885 N.E.2d 1274 (Ind. 2008) (conducting a fact-sensitive inquiry and then reversing the trial court's determination that the FHA was violated)).

Add:

The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws no longer lists this Act on its online database.

Uniform Law Commission, Search Acts, http://www.nccusl.org/Update/DesktopDefault.aspx?tabindex=2&tabid=60 (last visited April 28, 2010).

Change:

Fla. Stat. § 20A-718.401 to FLA. STAT. § 718.401

Change:

Fla. Stat. § 20a-719.401 to FLA. STAT. § 719.401

Change:

Fla. Stat. § 20A-718.103(13) to FLA. STAT. § 718.103(15)

Supplement, page 25: Delete lines 9-10 (The cited case has been reversed, 885 N.E.2d 1274, 1285 (Ind. 2008) .)

Add:

See e.g., Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. Ct. App. 2006) (Covenants cannot violate the Fair Housing Act).

Subsequent History:

Harrington vacated by Harrington v. Blackston, 473 S.E.2d 47 (S.C. 1996) (vacated after the parties reached a settlement).

§ 36.06(b) Instruments of Creation [Go To Main]

§ 36.06(b)(1) Condominium Instruments

Subsequent History:

Harrington vacated by Harrington v. Blackston, 473 S.E.2d 47 (S.C. 1996) (vacated after the parties reached a settlement).

Add:

The Condominium Act of 1976 governs common interest communities created on or before Dec. 31, 1984.

Add:

See also Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. Ct. App. 2006) (Restrictive covenants may violate the FHA, but a fact-sensitive analysis is needed).

Subsequent History:

Woodside Vill. quashed by Woodside Vill. Condo. Ass'n v. McClernan, 806 So. 2d 452 (Fla. 2002) .

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 27.1. NEB. REV. STAT. §§ 76-825-76-894; Jonathan D. Ross-Harrington, "Property Forms in Tension: Preference Inefficiency, Rent-Seeking, and the Problem of Notice in the Modern Condominium," 28 YALE L. & POL'Y REV. 187, 213 n.118 (2009). For an analysis of the changes Nebraska made to the Uniform Act see Marjean M. Gillaspie, "L.B. 433: A New Legal Framework for Nebraska Condominiums," 17 CREIGHTON L. REV. 377 (1983-84).

(n2)Footnote 27.2. N.C. GEN STAT. §§ 47C-1-101-47C-4-120; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n3)Footnote 27.3. Pa. Cons. Stat. §§ 3101- 3414 ; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n4)Footnote 27.4. R.I. GEN. LAWS §§ 34-36.1-1.01-34-36.1-4.20; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n5)Footnote 27.5. TEX. RULES AND CODES ANN. §§ 82.001- 82 .164; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n6)Footnote 27.6. VA. CODE ANN. §§ 55-79.39-55-79.103; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n7)Footnote 27.7. WASH. REV. CODE §§ 64.34.005-63.34.950; Ross-Harrington, supra note 27.1 at 213 n.118.

(n8)Footnote 27.8. LA. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 9:1121.101-9:1124.116.

(n9)Footnote 27.9. Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 66-27-201-66-27-507.

(n10)Footnote 28.1. Uniform Law Commission, Summary: Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act (1994), http://www.nccusl.org/update/uniformact_summaries/uniformacts-s-ucioa94.asp (last visited April 27, 2010).

(n11)Footnote 28.2. Katharine N. Rosenberry & Curtis G. Sproul, "A Comparison of California Common Interest Development Law and the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act," 38 SANTA CLARA L. REV. 1009, 1011 (1998).

(n12)Footnote 28.3. Jonathan D. Ross-Harrington, "Property Forms in Tension: Preference Inefficiency, Rent-Seeking, and the Problem of Notice in the Modern Condominium," 28 YALE L. & POL'Y REV. 187, 212 (2009).

(n13)Footnote 28.4. Id.

(n14)Footnote 28.5. ALASKA STAT. §§ 34.08.010-34.08.995.

(n15)Footnote 28.6. COLO. REV. STAT. §§ 38-33.3-101-38.33.3-319.

(n16)Footnote 28.7. CONN. GEN. STAT. §§ 47-200-47-299.

(n17)Footnote 28.8. DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 25 §§ 81-101-81-421.

(n18)Footnote 28.9. MINN. STAT. §§ 515B.1-101-515B.4-118.

(n19)Footnote 28.10. NEV. REV. STAT. §§ 116.001-116.795.

(n20)Footnote 28.11. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27A §§ 1-101-4-120.

(n21)Footnote 28.12. W. VA. CODE §§ 36B-1-101-36B-4-120.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.07

Supp. to § 36.07 Tort and Contract Liabilities Associated with Condominiums and Cooperatives.

[Go To Main]

§ 36.07(a) Liability of the Condominium Association. [Go To Main]

Change:

755 So. 2d 825 to 755 So. 2d 824

Add:

Garron v. Pier Point Condo. Ass'n, 2009 Wash. App. Lexis 1861, 11-12 (Wash. App. 2009) (citing the Condominium Act in holding the lower court did not abuse its discretion in barring suit against individual homeowners when the alleged wrong was committed by the homeowner association).

Add:

See also Brandon Farms Prop. Owners Ass'n v. Brandon Farms Condo. Ass'n, 180 N.J. 361 (N.J. 2004) (holding that the condo association can not be held liable for the failure of the association members' to pay outstanding assessments).

Add:

N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-7C-13 requires liability insurance for condominium associations.

Change:

Schroeder v. De Bertolo, 879 F. Supp. 173 to Schroeder v. De Bertolo, 879 F. Supp. 173 .

Change:

O'Brien v. Christensen, 662 N.E. 205 should be 662 N.E.2d 205 .

Add:

Petrosky v. Embry Crossing Condo. Ass'n, 2007 Ga. App. LEXIS 318 (Ga. App. 2007) (Resident barred from recovery against association because he had equal constructive knowledge of a hazardous condition that caused him injury, which knowledge absolved the association of any liability); Comm. for a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule); Caracci v. Cobblestone Vill. Condo. Ass'n, 927 So. 2d 542, 546 (La. App. 2006) (Condominium association officer was held to be immune from an action against them and the association by an individual unit owner and a tenant); La. Rev. Stat. § 9:2792.7 (An association officer who is not compensated for his or her services is not individually liable for acts or omissions that result in damage or injury when such damage or injury arise out of his or her good faith and authorized management of the association, except that his or her misconduct is willful or wanton); Chee v. Amanda Goldt Prop. Mgmt., 143 Cal. App. 4th 1360 (1st Dist. 2006) (Condominium CC&Rs do not impose vicarious liability on a unit owner for negligence of a tenant since CC&Rs do not have the legal authority to expand tort law); Ala. Code§ 35-8A-311 (Neither the association or nor any individual unit owner is liable for another individual unit owner's torts that relate to a portion of the condominium that the tort feaser is responsible to maintain); Bowman v. State, 206 S.W.3d 467 (Tenn. App. 2006) (Since weather forecasts alone do not constitute notice, property owners cannot be held liable for failing to remove natural accumulations of snow or ice of which they had no notice).

Change:

Petrosky v. Embry Crossing Condo. Ass'n, 2007 Ga. App. Lexis 318 (Ga. App. 2007) to Petrosky v. Embry Crossing Condo. Ass'n, 643 S.E.2d 855 (Ga. App. 2007)

Delete: (case was reversed, 929 A.2d 1060 (N.J. 2007))

Comm. For a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule);

Change:

(Condominium association officer was held to be immune ... to (Condominium association officers were held to be immune ...

Delete id.

Add:

Uniform Condominium Act § 3-111, cmt. 1.

Delete id.

Add:

Uniform Condominium Act § 3-111, cmt. 1. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 64.34.344 (permitting individual unit owners to bring an action against their condominium association under both theories of torts or contracts)

Barrasso v. Hillview West Condominium Trust, 904 N.E.2d 778 (Mass. App. 2009) (negligence action brought by condominium owner against condominium trust).

Add:

Aff'd 738 N.W.2d 910 (Minn. 2007) .

Add:

Munro v. Jordan, 2010 Mass. App. Div. 1, 4 (Mass. App. 2010) ("While the obligation of the condominium Trustees to maintain and repair the common elements of the property in the present case was created by contract, a breach of that obligation may provide a basis for an action in tort." (citing O'Brien v Christensen, 662 N.E.2d 205 (Mass. 1996)) .

§ 36.07(b) Liability of the Cooperative Association [Go To Main]

Add:

Heiman v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd., 149 Cal. App. 4th 724 (2d Dist. 2007) (An association need not be incorporated to exercise rights given to associations); In re Three A's Holdings, L.L.C., 47 Bankr. Ct. Dec. 281 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007) (California law gives associations "discretionary decision-making authority" to enforce use restrictions); Standard Fire Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Cmty. Ass'n, 141 Cal. App. 4th 1117 (4th Dist. 2006) (Association allowed to sue developer for construction defects on behalf of owners even though association did not exist when defects occurred because the association was the first party able to maintain a legal claim against the developer and holds a cause of action); Caprer v. Nussbaum, 825 N.Y.S.2d 55 (2006) (Individual unit owners lacked standing to bring a damages claim to the common interest. Condominium Act gives the association board exclusive right to sue for injury to common areas on behalf of unit owners); Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 904 A.2d 188 (Conn. 2006) (When assessing the validity of a board of directors' action, a court first determines whether the board acted within the scope of its authority and, second, whether the action was reached by reasoned or arbitrary means); Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.11 (2000) ("[T]he association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common-interest community on matters affecting the community.").

Delete (The case was reversed. See also 473 S.E.2d 649, 654 (N.C. App. 1996) (Greene, J., dissenting) (providing the reasoning on which the state supreme court based its reversal--one of the two reasons was that the complaint should not have been dismissed because it was not brought in the name of the real party in interest).

Richland Run Homeowners Ass'n v. CHC Durham Corp. 473 S.E.2d 649 (N.C. App. 1996) .

Subsequent History:

Bernard affirmed by Bernard v. Scharf, 656 N.Y.S.2d 583 (1997) , which was in turn reversed and dismissed by Bernard v. Scharf, 675 N.Y.S.2d 64 , which was then reversed by Bernard v. Scharf, N.Y.S.2d, which was then remitted by Bernard v. Scharf, 689 N.Y.S.2d 1 (1999) .

See, e.g., 905 5th Associates, Inc. v. 907 Corp., 851 N.Y.S.2d 393 (2008) (tenant action against cooperative, alleging damage from renovation work).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.08

Supp. to § 36.08 Termination

[Go To Main]

§ 36.08(a) Termination of Condominiums [Go To Main]

Change:

... West Virginia, for example, is in accord. ... Ohio and Florida, on the other hand. ... to West Virginia and Florida, for example, are in accord. ... Ohio, on the other hand. ...

Add:

FLA. STAT. § 718.117

Delete:

Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.117

Add:

Ala. Code § 35-8-20 (A condominium may also be terminated by a court upon the petition of an individual unit owner in the event of the total destruction of all improvements of the condominium without an agreement to rebuild within a reasonable time or when such rebuilding is not completed within a reasonable time) and (Only a majority of association votes are required to terminate the condominium if no agreement is made to repair substantial damage to the condominium, or if an agreed repair is not completed within a reasonable time).

§ 36.08(b) Termination of Cooperatives [Go To Main]

Add:

Matter of 160 Bleecker St. Owners, Inc. v. Division of Hous. & Cmty. Renewal, 812 N.Y.S.2d 495 (2006) (When buildings are converted pursuant to a non-eviction plan, units occupied by renters at the time of the conversion remain subject to rent regulation).

186 of 191 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.09

Supp. to § 36.09 Disclosure Required Before Sale of Condominium and Cooperative Interests

[Go To Main]

§ 36.09(a) Introduction [Go To Main]

Change:

Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. Ch. 765, para. 605.22 to 765 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 605/22

Change;

PA. STAT. ANN. Tit. 68, § 3406 to 68 PA. CONS. STAT. § 3406

line 10 of the subsection, add, after "New Mexico," new footnote 73.1 n73.1

Delete Id. and Add

Uniform Condominium Act § 4-103, cmt. 1.

§ 36.09(c) Development/Developer Identity. [Go To Main]

Add:

Shinney v. Cambridge Homes, Inc., 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 463 (Mich. Ct. App., 2005) (Michigan law requires the "names, addresses, and previous experience with condominium projects of each developer and any management agency, real estate broker, residential builder, and residential maintenance and alteration contractor"; when this information was not disclosed, the purchasers we allowed to withdraw from the purchase agreement).

Add:

Herlson v. RTS Residential Block, LLC, 993 A.2d 699, 2010 Md. App. Lexis 60 (Md. App. 2010) (holding that a change to the CC&Rs which allowed purchasers to rent out their units immediately, rather than having to live in them for 12 months, was material information to a prospective purchaser under contract).

§ 36.09(f) Financing [Go To Main]

Add:

See also Ala. Code § 35-8A-403(a)(9) (Offering statement must "fully and accurately disclose" a "description of any financing offered or arranged by the declarant.").

§ 36.09(g) Warranties Ind. Code Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11

Add:

See also Ala. Code § 35-8A-403(a)(10) (Offering statement must "fully and accurately disclose" the "terms and significant limitations of any warranties provided by the declarant.").

Change:

VA. CODE ANN. § 55-79.90(7) to VA. CODE ANN. § 55-79.90(a)(7)

Add:

See also Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-74e ("An implied warranty of fitness and merchantability shall attach ... [to] the date of the recording of the original condominium instruments ... . This implied warranty shall inure to the benefit of each unit owner and his successors, and to the benefit of the declarant."); Permanent Mission of the Republic of Estonia v. Thompson, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16396 (D.N.Y. 2007) (An agreement to waive the warranty of habitability is "void as contrary to public policy."); Morris v. Flaig, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28923 (D.N.Y. 2007) (Plaintiff allowed to recover punitive damages for "particularly egregious breaches of the implied warranty of habitability," despite general rule to the contrary, "because claims ... seek to enforce important public rights to safe and appropriate housing.").

Change:

Annotation, Liability of Vendor for Damages Occasioned by Defective Condition Thereof, 50 A.L.R. 3D 1071 (1973) . to Annotation, Liability of Vendor of Condominiums for Damage Occasioned by Defective Condition Thereof, 50 A.L.R. 3D 1071 (1973) .

Change:

Bunker Hill Towers Condominium Ass'n, et. Al. v. W.R. Grace & Co., Conn. No. B072642 to Bunker Hill Towers Condominium Ass'n, et. Al. v. W.R. Grace & Co., Docket No. B072642 (Cal. App. 1994).

Change;

Putnam v. Roudebush, 352 So. 2d 908 to Putnam v. Roudebush, 352 So. 2d 908

Line 3 of the text,

Replace Ohio Supreme Court with Ohio Court of Appeals.

Replace the second block quote with the following:

The condominium Declaration and the By-Laws are not binding upon the Owners Association, or upon the unit owners, for the following reasons. First, it is clear that R.C. 5311.20, empowering the Owners Association to sue pertaining to the common areas, is not subject to the provisions of the Declaration of Condominium Ownership and the By-Laws executed and filed pursuant to R.C. Chapter 5311. Nowhere in R.C. 5311.20 is any reference made to declarations or bylaws. When the legislature intended that a statute in R.C. Chapter 5311 should be subject to the provisions of the declaration or bylaws, it expressly stated that legislative intent. Accordingly, the release of liability of defendants by the provisions of the Declaration is in conflict with R.C. 5311.20, and is, therefore, invalid.

Authority overruled:

Hyland overruled by Vlahos v. R&I Constr. of Bloomington, Inc., 676 N.W.2d 672 (Minn. 2004) (applying two-year statute of limitations after recognizing the court's earlier error in failing to distinguish between Minnesota statutory warranties and the UCA).

Replace with:

Custom Ag Serv. of Montevideo, Inc. v. Comm'r of Revenue, 2006 Minn. Tax LEXIS 24 (Minn. T.C. 2006) (when a statute contains both general and specific provisions, the specific provisions are controlling) (supports accepting a longer statute of limitation if provided for a specific cause within a general provision).

Add:

But see Peterson v. Cornerstone Prop. Dev., LLC, 720 N.W.2d 716 (Wis. App. 2006) (Items not covered in the express limited warranty were subject to the "as is" clause in the contract thus precluding the buyer from recovering damages).

Change:

Citation should be: Stony Ridge Hill Condominium Owners Ass' n v. Auerbach, 18 Ohio Op. 3d 26, 410 N.E.2d 782 (Ohio App. 1979) .

Add:

To effectively disclaim implied warranties, the written disclaimer must be conspicuous. See e.g., Recursion Software, Inc. v. Interactive Intelligence, Inc. 425 F. Supp. 2d 756 (N.D.Tex. 2006) (concluding that a disclaimer that was relatively short, not buried, and typed in all capital letters was noticeable to a reasonable person and thus enforceable). See also Waytec Elecs. Corp. v. Rohm & Haas Elec. Materials, LLC, 459 F. Supp. 2d 480 (W.D. Va. 2006), 459 F. Supp. 2d 480 ; R.O.W. Window Co. v. Allmetal, Inc. 856 N.E.2d 55 (Ill. Dist. 2006) . See also Standard Fire Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Cmty. Ass'n, 141 Cal. App. 4th 1117 (4th Dist. 2006) (Association allowed to sue developer for construction defects on behalf of owners even though association did not exist when defects occurred because the association was the first party able to maintain a legal claim against the developer and holds a cause of action); Caprer v. Nussbaum, 825 N.Y.S.2d 55 (2006) (Individual unit owners lacked standing to bring a damages claim to the common interest. Condominium Act gives the association board exclusive right to sue for injury to common areas on behalf of unit owners); Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.11 (2000) ("[T]he association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common-interest community on matters affecting the community.").

Change:

Id. at 45-46 . to Id. at 786-87 .

Add:

Westfield Ins. Co. v. Birkey's Farm Store, Inc., 2010 Ill. App. Lexis 216, 34-40 (Ill. App. 2010) ;

Delete:

459 F. Supp. 2d 480

§ 36.09(h) Common Area Expenses. [Go To Main]

Add:

Mikulecky v. Bart, 825 N.E.2d 266 (Ill. App. Ct., 2004) (Illinois law requires that condominium seller disclose information regarding anticipated capital expenditures; window replacement that would cost each owner more than $10,000 should have been disclosed to a buyer).

See N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47C-4-103; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27A § 4-103; Ala. Code § 35-8A-403 (seeking to eliminate "the common deceptive sales practice known as 'lowballing' " by requiring disclosure. Lowballing defined as "a practice by which a declarant intentionally underestimates the budget for the association by providing many of the services himself during the initial sales period ... intending these services [to] become expenses of the association, thereby substantially increasing the periodic common expense assessments which association members must ultimately bear.").

§ 36.09(j) Encumbrances and Liens [Go To Main]

Add footnote:

See e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-71b ("[O]ffering statement shall include ... the significant terms of any encumbrances, easements, liens and matters of title affecting the condominiums."). See also Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 32-2181 (requiring a "true statement of the condition of the title to the land," which includes disclosure of encumbrances, liens, and easements).

§ 36.09(l) Pending Litigation [Go To Main]

Add footnote:

See e.g., Swinson v. Lords Landing Vill. Condo., 758 A.2d 1008 (Md. 2000) (a contract for the resale of a condominium is unenforceable is the seller fails to inform the buyer about pending litigation); Md. Code Ann. [Real Prop.] § 11-135(a)(4)(vii) ("[A] contract for the resale of a unit ... is not enforceable unless the contract of sale contains ... [a] statement of any judgments against the condominium and the existence of any pending suits to which the council of unit owners is a party."). But see Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 33-1258 ("Books and records kept by or on behalf of the association and the board may be withheld from disclosure to the extent that the portion withheld relates to ... [p]ending litigation.").

FOOTNOTES:
(n22)Footnote 73.1. Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.39(1) to -20.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.10

Supp. to § 36.10 Legal Rules Governing Association Management and Control.

[Go To Main]

§ 36.10(a) Constitutions and Bylaws. [Go To Main]

Add:

Reed v. Sunset Cove Condo. Owners Ass' n, 199 S.W.3d 875, 880 (Mo. App. 2006) ("[B]y-laws constitute the rules and regulations that govern the internal administration of the condominium."); Circle Villas Condo. Ass'n v. Circle Prop. Owners' Ass'n, 957 So. 2d 1207 (Fla. 4th DCA 2007) (declaring covenants by master condominium homeowners' association that restricted membership did not bar one of the many individual associations within the development from bringing an action in proper standing against the master association).

Shea v. Meadows of Branford, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1099 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2004) (even though the association denied permission for owner to install a hot tub in his privacy yard, his installing the hot tub was permissible because the bylaws of the association required notice of denial of any request and the owner was never given notice of the denial); Riverside Park Condos. Unit Owners Ass'n v. Lucas, 2005 ND 26 (N.D., 2005) (bylaw restriction on pets was reasonable); Woodbridge Condos. Owners' Ass'n v. Jennings, 2004 Ohio 5317 (Ohio Ct. App., 2004) (bylaw regulation unreasonably prevented owner from installing a satellite dish); Horwitz v. 1025 Fifth Ave., Inc., 7 A.D.3d 461 (N.Y. App. Div., 2004) (cooperative's prohibition of awnings was effective against owners).

Add:

Whalen v. Down E. Cmty. Hosp., 980 A.2d 1252, 1254-55 (Me. 2009) (stating reasonable bylaws create a binding contract between members and homeowners' association).

Add:

Armstrong v. Ledges Homeowners Ass'n, 633 S.E.2d 78 (N.C. 2006) (limiting powers of the association to those granted to it in the original declaration, notwithstanding an amendment to the declaration, which must be "reasonable in light of the contracting parties' original intent.").

Subsequent History:

Shorewood, 966 P.2d 372 was reversed by Shorewood West Condo. Ass'n v. Sadri, 992 P.2d 1008 (Wash. 2000) .

§ 36.10(c) Board of Managers [Go To Main]

Add:

See e.g., Ala. Code§ 35-8A-303; N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47C-3-103 (preferring a gradual transfer to a one-time turnover in order to involve owners earlier in the management of the association).

Add:

Comm. for a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (a community takes on a "quasi-municipal" status when it performs public functions or impacts public interests directly and such a status makes classical public sector limitations applicable to the association).

Add:

Kaung v. Bd. of Managers of Biltmore Towers Condo. Ass'n, 895 N.Y.S.2d 505, 507 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010) ("The business judgment rule limits judicial review of decisions made by a condominium's board of managers to whether the board's action was authorized and whether it was taken in good faith and in furtherance of the legitimate interests of the condominium." (quoting Schoninger v. Yardarm Beach Homeowners' Ass'n, 523 N.Y.S.2d 523, 529 (N.Y. App. Div. 2009)) .

Add:

Heiman v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. of State, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 56 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2007) (A homeowners association is a discrete legal entity, separate from the owners, even if it is not incorporated); Comm. for a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule).

§ 36.10(e) Use and Control of the Premises. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46(B)

Add:

Riverside Park Condos. Unit Owners Ass'n v. Lucas, 2005 ND 26 (N.D., 2005) (owner's contention that he was merely being "visited" by a dog and that he was not keeping the dog did not overcome the pet restriction of the association); Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1205 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2004) (condo association's clarification of a rule that animals be kept on leashes of no more than 20 feet was within the association's authority).

Authority overruled:

Bernardo Villas Management Corp. overruled by Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Vill. Condo. Ass'n, 878 P.2d 1275 (Cal. 1994) .

Authority overruled:

Alpert overruled by Sea Watch Stores Ltd. Liab. Co. v. Council of Unit Owners of Sea Watch Condo., 691 A.2d 750 (Md. App. 1997) .

Subsequent History:

United States on Behalf of Woodruff vacated by United States v. Fairways Villas Condo. Ass'n, 920 F. Supp. 115 (D. Ohio 1996) .

Add:

Edge Mgmt. Consulting, Inc. v. Blank, 25 A.D.3d 364 (N.Y. App. Div. 2006) (contractual and statutory duties to maintain condominium is enforceable against the unit's owner). But see Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. App. 2006) (declaring a restrictive covenant prohibiting leasing a violation of the Fair Housing Act); Bogomolov v. Condo. Ass'n, 127 P.3d 762 (Wash. App. 2006) (amending the condominium declaration to convert common areas into limited common areas would require a unanimous vote from all unit owners since it would change the percentage of ownership for condominium owners in the common area).

Board of Managers of Bayside Plaza Condominium, 855 N.Y.S.2d 230 (2008) (unit owners had an easement permitting them to maintain HVAC equipment on the terrace); Gennis v. Pomona Park Bd. of Managers, 828 N.Y.S.2d 472 (2007) (the board was not required to obtain the owners' consent before undertaking a restoration project).

Change: (original citation was overruled at 89 Conn. App. 581, but the appellate court decision was subsequently overruled)

Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1205 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2004) (condo association's clarification of a rule that animals be kept on leashes of no more than 20 feet was within the association's authority). to Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, 904 A.2d 188 (Conn. 2006) (condo association's clarification of a rule requiring that animals be kept on leashes by not allowing leashes over 20 feet in length was within the association's authority and was not an amendment to the association's declaration).

Add: (following first full P)

Nikolai v. Deer Run Owners' Ass'n, 2009 Ohio App. LEXIS 5525 (Ohio. App. 2009) (association did not have authority to pass an amendment that converted condominium roofs from common areas to limited common areas without a unanimous vote of owners).

Add to P 2 of 117, page 270-71:

Queen's Grant II Horizontal Prop. Regime v. Greenwood Dev. Corp., 628 S.E.2d 902 (S.C. App. 2006) (allowing an amendment, by the developer's assignor, to the original covenants to increase assessments "because the master deed reserved all rights under the declaration of covenants."); City of Bowie v. MIE Props., Inc., 2007 Md. LEXIS 260 (Md. 2007) (because covenants are independent controls on property, they can be more restrictive than zoning classifications imposed by a zoning authority); Garfink v. Cloisters at Charles, Inc., 897 A.2d 206 (Md. 2006) (the traditional law governing easements applies to an easement granted in a condominium declaration); Multari v. Gress, 2007 Ariz. App. LEXIS 63 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2007) (preventing a developer from using private deed restrictions to change the covenants and restrictions applicable to all owners in the community since such action had the same impact as an amendment, which required a two-thirds vote of the owners).

Change:

Midlake on Big Boulder Lake, 637 A.2d 340 should be 673 A.2d 340 .

Add:

Queen's Grant II Horizontal Prop. Regime v. Greenwood Dev. Corp., 628 S.E.2d 902 (S.C. App. 2006) (Condominium ownership is subject to deed restrictions and covenants like any other real property, whether a horizontal or a vertical regime); In re IDC Clambakes, Inc., 360 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2007) (common elements of a condominium may not be unilaterally conveyed by a unit owner); Hill v. Ghamaty, 143 Cal. App. 4th 1156 (4th Dist. 2006) (upholding reasonable declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions that prevented any use of unit other than as a single-family dwelling). But see Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. App. 2006) (restrictive covenants cannot violate the Fair Housing Act); Comm. for a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule); Finderne Heights Condo. v. Rabinowitz, 915 A.2d 16 (N.J. App. 2007) (providing that condominium associations, as a readily available alternative to litigation, must provide "fair and efficient procedure[s]" for resolving disputes between the association and owners, as well as between owners). But see Walters v. Blankenship, 931 So. 2d 137 (Fla. App. 2006) (enforcing an owner's violation of a restrictive covenant against posting signs did not violate the owner's First Amendment right of free speech).

Add:

Auburn Woods I Homeowners Assn. v. Fair Employment & Housing Com., 121 Cal. App. 4th 1578 (Cal. Ct. App., 2004) (condo association's refusal to allow residents permission to keep a dog that helped them with their depression was unreasonable); Unit Owners Ass'n v. Lucas, 2005 ND 26 (N.D., 2005) (bylaw restriction on pets was reasonable); Woodbridge Condos. Owners' Ass'n v. Jennings, 2004 Ohio 5317 (Ohio Ct. App., 2004) (bylaw regulation unreasonably prevented owner from installing a satellite dish); Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Assn. v. Terifaj, 33 Cal. 4th 73 (Cal., 2004) (upholding a condo association's restriction on pets); Yankovski v. Keller, 18 Mass. L. Rep. 431 (Mass. Super. Ct., 2004) (holding that association's denial of permission to alter the inside of a condo unit was unreasonable).

Change:

Daniel R. Puterbaugh, "The Reasonable Pet: An Examination of the Enforcement of Restrictions in California common Interest Developments After Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n, Inc.," Santa Clara L. Rev. 793 (1996) to Daniel R. Puterbaugh, "The Reasonable Pet: An Examination of the Enforcement of Restrictions in California Common Interest Developments After Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n, Inc., 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 793 (1996)

Change:

In re IDC Clambakes, Inc., 360 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2007) (common elements of a condominium may not be unilaterally conveyed by a unit owner); to In re IDC Clambakes, Inc., 360 B.R. 24 (Bankr. D.R.I. 2007) (common elements of a condominium may not be unilaterally conveyed by a unit owner), rev'd on other grounds, Goat Island S. Condo. Ass'n v. IDC Clambakes, Inc., 382 B.R. 178 (D.R.I. 2008) .

Add:

Clear Lake Riviera Cmty. Ass'n v. Cramer, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 815 (Cal. App. 2010) (holding that circumstantial evidence is proper--direct evidence is not required--to prove that an association's "use restrictions were properly adopted in an action to enforce the restrictions").

Add:

Clear Lake Riviera Cmty. Ass'n v. Cramer, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 815 (Cal. App. 2010) ("Use restrictions contained in a recorded declaration are afforded a 'presumption of validity' and are enforced unless found unreasonable under a deferential standard. While use restrictions outside the declaration are not afforded the same presumption of validity, they are nonetheless enforced unless they fail a 'straight reasonableness test.'" (citations omitted)).

Change:

Bernardo Villas Management Corp. is missing citation (190 Cal.App.3d 153 (4 Dist. 1987)). But Bernard overruled by Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Vill. Condo. Ass'n, 878 P.2d 1275 (Cal. 1994) .

§ 36.10(f) Common Expenses and Profits. [Go To Main]

Add:

Fox River Condo. Ass'n v. Townhomes of River Place, 719 N.W.2d 800 (Wis. App. 2006) (distinguishing land from unit and concluding that the developer was not subject to association assessments until the units were actually constructed); Blumberg v. Albicocco, 820 N.Y.S.2d 711 (N.Y. 2006) (before reviewing a board's decision, a court must first determine if the board has the power it seeks to exercise; and a board's power must either be statutorily granted or derived from the condominium declaration or by-laws); In re Northwood Props., LLC, 356 B.R. 81 (D. Mass. 2006) (restricting phasing rights without unit owners' express consent to add more units since adding units materially affected their percentage interest in common areas and facilities).

Change:

Aluminum Industries Corp. v. Camelot Trails Condominiums Corp., 535 N.W.2d 74 (Wis. App. 1995) , to Aluminum Industries Corp. v. Camelot Trails Condominiums Corp., 535 N.W.2d 74 (Wis. App. 1995) , review granted 537 N.W.2d 570 (Wis. 1995) ,

Add:

Saddle Ridge Corp. v. Bd. of Review for Town of Pacific, 774 N.W.2d 475 (Wis. App. 2009) , ("[V]acant land reserved for development within a partially developed condominium project is a common element of the condominium, ownership of which is determined under the condominium declaration."), review granted 779 N.W.2d 176 (Wis. 2010) .

Add:

Harbours Condo. Ass'n, Inc. v. Hudson, 852 N.E.2d 985 (Ind. App. 2006) (entitling condominium association to foreclose on condominium liens for unpaid past-due assessments); Trustees of Cider Hill Condo. Trust v. DeOliveira, 2007 Mass. App. Div. 1 (Mass. App. Div. 2007) (allowing recovery of late fees for unpaid assessments).

Surrey Condo. Ass'n v. Webb, 2005 Mo. App. LEXIS 699 (Mo. Ct. App., 2005) (association's lien against the owner was void because the condominium declaration did not allow the association to levy maintenance fees).

Barry v. Board of Managers of Elmwood Park Condominium II, 853 N.Y.S.2d 827 (2007) (action by unit owner against condominium board of managers for violation of Fair Debt Collections Practices Act).

after 13 Ann. Rev. Banking L. 477 (1944) Add:

See also Wellington Condo. Trust v. Pino, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15541 u17 (D. Mass 2010) (under Massachusetts law, a condominium association's lien for up to six months of delinquent fees for common charges will take priority over a first mortgage if the association sends the proper documentation to the mortgage company).

Add:

Oronoque Shores Condo. Ass'n No. 1 v. Smulley, 968 A.2d 996, 999-1000 (Conn. App. 2009) (allowing execution of a lien where all legal formalities had been met).

Add:

While a defaulting seller may be compelled to specifically perform, a defaulting buyer will not be compelled to specifically perform, but may forfeit their down payment, assuming requisite notice is given to the defaulting buyer. Without adequate notice, however, the buyer is entitled to their down payment plus any appropriate interest. Rivera v. Konkol, 15 Misc. 3d 1122A, 841 N.Y.S.2d 221(A) , Slip Copy (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2007) (for buyer to forfeit his deposit upon default, three requirements must be met: (1) clear notice that time is of the essence, (2) notice must specify a reasonable time to perform, and (3) notice must inform party that he will default if he does not perform by that date); Lepi Enters. v. Nat'l Envtl. Serv. Corp., 440 F.3d 937, 940 (8th Cir. 2006) (recognizing that if one of the parties to a contract fails to perform their duty, the other party may be excused from performing their duty under the contract).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.11

Supp. to § 36.11 Common Conflicts Encountered by Condominium and Cooperative Owners

[Go To Main]

§ 36.11(a) Loss of Deposit/Downpayment. [Go To Main] after first parenthetical ending in "purchaser's Acts" Add:

aff'd, 676 A.2d 369 (Conn. 1996)

Delete (was reversed at 48 A.D.3d 347 (N.Y. App. Div.):

Rivera v. Konkol, 841 N.Y.S.2d 221 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2007) (for buyer to forfeit the deposit upon default three requirements must be met: (1) clear notice that time is of the essence, (2) notice must specify a reasonable time to perform, and (3) notice must inform party that he will default if he does not perform by that date);

Add:

Ament v. One Las Olas, Ltd., 2005 Fla. App. LEXIS 3044 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App., 2005) (holding that a contract breaching seller is required to return all deposit monies paid by the buyer); Shinney v. Cambridge Homes, Inc., 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 463 (Mich. Ct. App., 2005) (holding that sellers were entitled to a refund of their deposit).

Add:

See, e.g., Helmer v. Comito, 877 N.Y.S.2d 370 (2009) (action by unit owners challenging authority of condominium managers to enter into contract for construction work).

§ 36.11(c) Physical Defects. 750 ILCS 5/530

Add:

Torosian v. Bigsbee Village Homeowners Ass'n, 848 N.Y.S.2d 452 (2007) (action against owner and manager of condominium complex and provider of snowplowing services for slip and fall injuries); Abbattista v. King's Grant Master Ass'n, 833 N.Y.S.2d 592 (2007) (action against condominium owner and manager and snow removal contractor for slip and fall injuries).

§ 36.11(d) Conflicts of Interest Ind. Code. Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11

Add:

Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.20 (2000) (the developer must "disclose the amount by which the developer is providing or subsidizing services that the association is or will be obligated to provide; ... disclose all material facts and circumstances affecting the condition of the property that the association is responsible for maintaining; and ... disclose all material facts and circumstances affecting the financial condition of the association, including the interest of the developer and the developer's affiliates in any contract, lease, or other agreement entered into by the association").

Trs. of Hunters Vill. Condo. Trust v. Gerke, 2007 Mass. App. Div. 23 (Mass. App. Div. 2007) (action against unit who converted common funds to private use while acting as condominium property manager).

§ 36.11(e) Financing [Go To Main]

Add:

Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.20 (2000) (the developer must "disclose the amount by which the developer is providing or subsidizing services that the association is or will be obligated to provide; ... disclose all material facts and circumstances affecting the condition of the property that the association is responsible for maintaining; and ... disclose all material facts and circumstances affecting the financial condition of the association, including the interest of the developer and the developer's affiliates in any contract, lease, or other agreement entered into by the association).

§ 36.11(f) Selection of Occupants and Subleasing [Go To Main]

Add:

See e.g., Hill v. Ghamaty, 143 Cal. App. 4th 1156 (4th Dist. 2006) (upholding reasonable declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions that prevented an owner from renting out rooms in owner's unit). But see Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. App. 2006) (declaring a restrictive covenant prohibiting leasing a violation of the Fair Housing Act because the covenant's effect resulted in discrimination against a black unit owner).

E.g., Herlson v. Rts Residential Block 5, 2010 Md. App. LEXIS 60 (Md. App. 2010) (as originally declared, potential owners of condominiums had to commit to "purchasing the Unit as [their] primary, year round residence and covenant[] and agree[] not to lease the Unit until after the [potential owners have] occupied the Unit as [their] principle year round residence for twelve (12) consecutive months."); Apple Valley Gardens Ass'n v. MacHutta, 763 N.W.2d 126 (Wis. 2009) (upholding an amendment to the association bylaws that created a flat ban on renting when no limitation had existed prior to the amendment).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.12

Supp. to § 36.12 Problems Associated with Condominium Conversion.

[Go To Main]

§ 36.12(a) History. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. Tit. 19, § 722-A(1)

at end of note, after "apartment building)" Add:

aff'd, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 31004 (4th Cir. 1996)

§ 36.12(b) Legal Issues. Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 3-6A-05(B)

Add:

Matter of 160 Bleecker St. Owners, Inc. v. Division of Hous. & Cmty. Renewal, 812 N.Y.S.2d 495 (2006) (When buildings are converted pursuant to a non-eviction plan, units occupied by renters at the time of the conversion remain subject to rent regulation).

Bohbot v. Santa Monica Rent Control Board, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 827 (2005) (action to evict a tenant from a legal converted condominium unit).

Add:

Fore L. Realty v. McManus, 2006 Mass. App. Div. 130 (Mass. App. Div. 2006) (entitling tenants whose apartments are being converted into condominiums to adequate notice of the conversion).

Steier v. Schreiber, 810 N.Y.S.2d 431 (2006) (tenant with status of "tenant in occupancy" was entitled to purchase her unit according to the condominium conversion plan).

Change:

WHCS Real Estate Ltc. P'ship v. 33 Greenwich Owners Corp., 642 N.Y.S.2d 483 (1996) . to WHCS Real Estate Ltc. P'ship v. 33 Greenwich Owners Corp., 642 N.Y.S.2d 483 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1996) , aff'd, 663 N.Y.S.2d 171 (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) .

Change:

Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 901 F. Supp. 208 (E.D. Va. 1995) . to Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 901 F. Supp. 208 (E.D. Va. 1995) , aff'd, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 31004 (4th Cir. 1996) .

Change:

Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 891 F. Supp. 1169 (E.D. Va. 1995) . to Williams v. 5300 Columbia Pike Corp., 891 F. Supp. 1169 (E.D. Va. 1995) , sum. jdmt. granted, 901 F. Supp. 208 (E.D. Va. 1995) , aff'd, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 31004 (4th Cir. 1996) .

Fore L. Realty v. McManus, 2006 Mass. App. Div. 130 (Mass. App. Div. 2006) (entitling tenants whose apartments are being converted into condominiums to adequate notice of the conversion).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.13

Supp. to § 36.13 Remedies for Misconduct by Developer, Association or Owner

[Go To Main]

§ 36.13(a) Remedies Against the Developer [Go To Main]

Change: (the case cited was vacated and remanded, 520 U.S. 893 (1997)

The unit owners of Lords Landing Village Condominium ("unit owners"), having obtained a $1.1 million judgment against the condominium developer, filed this action against the developer's insurance company, to compel them to pay the judgment. The court concluded that the policy issued by Continental did not cover the loss because it did not rise from an "occurrence" within the meaning of the policy. Lords Landing Village condominium Council of Unit Owners v. The Continental Ins. Co., 92 F.3d 1179 (4th Cir. 1996) .

to

The unit owners of Lords Landing Village Condominium (unit owners"), having obtained a $1.1 million judgment against the condominium developer, filed this action against the developer's insurance company--claiming the shoddy workmanship constituted an "accident"--to compel them to pay the judgment. The court concluded that the policy issued by Continental did not cover the loss because it did not rise from an "accident" within the meaning of the policy. Lords Landing Village condominium Council of Unit Owners v. The Continental Ins. Co., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21938, 7 (4th Cir. 1999) .

Replace with: after last parenthetical ending in "general provision." Add:

aff'd, 728 N.W.2d 910 (Minn. 2007) .

Authority overruled:

Hyland overruled by Vlahos v. R&I Constr. of Bloomington, Inc., 676 N.W.2d 672 (Minn. 2004) (applying two-year statute of limitations after recognizing the court's earlier error in failing to distinguish between Minnesota statutory warranties and the UCA).

Replace with:

Custom Ag Serv. of Montevideo, Inc. v. Comm'r of Revenue, 2006 Minn. Tax LEXIS 24 (Minn. T.C. 2006) (when a statute contains both general and specific provisions, the specific provisions are controlling) (supports accepting a longer statute of limitation if provided for a specific cause within a general provision).

Add:

Archdiocese of San Salvador v. FM Int'l, LLC, 2006 DNH 102 (D.N.H. 2006) (acknowledging that a corporate officer could be liable as a "direct participant" with the corporation in a claim of deceptive and unfair practices).

Change:

Fla. Stat. § 20a-718.202(7) to Fla. Stat. § 718.202(7)

§ 36.13(b) Remedies Against the Association. [Go To Main]

Add:

Kaung v. Board of Managers of Biltmore Towers Condominium Ass'n, 873 N.Y.S.2d 421 (2008) (action by unit owners against managers of condominium association to enjoin placement of wireless communication antennae on the roof).

In re Bayshore Yacht & Tennis Club Condominium Ass'n., Inc., 336 B.R. 866 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2006) (declaration of condominium creates and governs the condominium and the relationships between unit owners and between unit owners and the association); Heiman v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd., 149 Cal. App. 4th 724 (2d Dist. 2007) (An association need not be incorporated to exercise rights given to associations); In re Three A's Holdings, L.L.C., 47 Bankr. Ct. Dec. 281 (Bankr. D. Del. 2007) (California law gives associations "discretionary decision-making authority" to enforce use restrictions); Standard Fire Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Cmty. Ass'n, 141 Cal. App. 4th 1117 (4th Dist. 2006) (Association allowed to sue developer for construction defects on behalf of owners even though association did not exist when defects occurred because the association was the first party able to maintain a legal claim against the developer and holds a cause of action); Caprer v. Nussbaum, 825 N.Y.S.2d 55 (2006) (Individual unit owners lacked standing to bring a damages claim to the common interest. Condominium Act gives the association board exclusive right to sue for injury to common areas on behalf of unit owners); Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 904 A.2d 188 (Conn. 2006) (When assessing the validity of a board of directors' action, a court first determines whether the board acted within the scope of its authority and, second, whether the action was reached by reasoned or arbitrary means); Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.11 (2000) ("[T]he association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common-interest community on matters affecting the community.").

Add: after parenthetical ending in "the roof." Add:

aff'd, 895 N.Y.S.2d 505 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010) .

Add:

Plank v. Stone, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 64 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2005) (holding that association was not liable to party who was injured in the storage area of the carport, because the storage area was under control of the individual owner and was not a common area); Poulet v. H.F.O., L.L.C., 353 Ill. App. 3d 82 (Ill. App. Ct., 2004) (condo associations have the exclusive right to sue on any matter that affects more than one unit in the association; therefore, individual owners' complaints were dismissed); Denton v. Hahn, 2004 Tenn. App. LEXIS 605 (Tenn. Ct. App., 2004) (summary judgment granted to tenant because the metal threshold which caused injury to the plaintiff was part of the condominium's common area and the association was responsible for it); Gorgoni v. Sideris Plumbing & Heating Corp., 2005 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 4752 (N.Y. App. Div., 2005) (association was not the proper defendant when plaintiff's unit sustained damage from a neighbor's water leak, because the association was not responsible to repair the pipes).

Change:

Schroeder v. De Bertolo, 879 F. Supp. 173 should be 879 F. Supp. 173 (D.P.R. 1995) .

Add:

But see Petrosky v. Embry Crossing Condo. Ass'n, 2007 Ga. App. LEXIS 318 (Ga. Ct. App. 2007) (resident barred from recovery against association because he had equal constructive knowledge of a hazardous condition that caused him injury, which knowledge absolved the association of any liability); Norman v. Jones Lang LaSalle Ams., Inc., 627 S.E.2d 382 (Ga. App. 2006) (barring recovery against property managers because injured plaintiff had equal or greater constructive knowledge of the hazard which caused the injury); Caracci v. Cobblestone Vill. Condo. Ass'n, 927 So. 2d 542, 546 (La. App. 2006) (condominium association officer was held to be immune from an action against them and the association by an individual unit owner and a tenant); La. Rev. Stat. § 9:2792.7 (An association officer who is not compensated for his or her services is not individually liable for acts or omissions that result in damage or injury when such damage or injury arise out of his or her good faith and authorized management of the association, except that his or her misconduct is willful or wanton); Chee v. Amanda Goldt Prop. Mgmt., 143 Cal.App.4th 1360 (1st Dist. 2006) (Condominium CC&Rs do not impose vicarious liability on a unit owner for negligence of a tenant since CC&Rs do not have the legal authority to expand tort law); Ala. Code§ 35-8A-311 (Neither the association or nor any individual unit owner is liable for another individual unit owner's torts that relate to a portion of the condominium that the tort feaser is responsible to maintain); Bowman v. State, 206 S.W.3d 467 (Tenn. App. 2006) (Since weather forecasts alone do not constitute notice, property owners cannot be held liable for failing to remove natural accumulations of snow or ice of which they had no notice); Hous. Opportunities Project for Excellence, Inc. v. Key Colony No. 4 Condo. Assoc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1911, 13-14 (D. Fla. 2007) (to waive rights under the Fair Housing Act, the waiver must be knowing and intentional. Merely being aware of a restriction at time of purchase is not a knowing and intentional waiver of the rights protected under the Fair Housing Act); Finderne Heights Condo. v. Rabinowitz, 915 A.2d 16 (N.J. App. 2007) (providing that condominium associations, as a readily available alternative to litigation, must provide "fair and efficient procedure[s]" for resolving disputes between the association and owners, as well as between owners); Villas W. II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. App. 2006) (a fact-sensitive analysis is needed to review association restrictions); Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 904 A.2d 188 (Conn. 2006) (When assessing the validity of a board of directors' action, a court first determines whether the board acted within the scope of its authority and, second, whether the action was reached by reasoned or arbitrary means).

Change:

Xenopoulos v. Board of Managers of 150 East 56th Street Condominium, 633 N.Y.S.2d (1995). to Xenopoulos v. Bd of Managers of 150 E. 56th St. Condo., 633 N.Y.S.2d 790 (1995) .

Standard Fire Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Cmty. Ass'n, 141 Cal. App. 4th 1117 (4th Dist. 2006) (Association allowed to sue developer for construction defects on behalf of owners even though association did not exist when defects occurred because the association was the first party able to maintain a legal claim against the developer and holds a cause of action); Weldy v. Northbrook Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 904 A.2d 188 (Conn. 2006) (When assessing the validity of a board of directors' action, a court first determines whether the board acted within the scope of its authority and, second, whether the action was reached by reasoned or arbitrary means); Restatement (Third) of Property: Servitudes § 6.11 (2000) ("[T]he association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common-interest community on matters affecting the community."). But see Caprer v. Nussbaum, 825 N.Y.S.2d 55 (2006) (Individual unit owners lacked standing to bring a damages claim to the common interest. Condominium Act gives the association board exclusive right to sue for injury to common areas on behalf of unit owners).

Add:

Sea Pines Condo. III Ass'n v. Steffens, 61 Mass. App. Ct. 838 (Mass. App. Ct., 2004) (condominium association was the proper party to bring suit, but because the defendant allowed the individual owners to intervene, they became the proper party to the suit); Trs. of Denholm Condo. Trust v. Doyle, 18 Mass. L. Rep. 25 (Mass. Super. Ct., 2004) (holding that an owner was individually responsible for condo fees, even though he owned the unit by trust); Surrey Condo. Ass'n v. Webb, 2005 Mo. App. LEXIS 699 (Mo. Ct. App., 2005) (association could not levy maintenance fee because it could only levy assessments as provided by the condominium declaration); Murphy v. State, 14 A.D.3d 127 (N.Y. App. Div., 2004) (individual owner was not the proper plaintiff because the association was the owner for purposes of eminent domain).

after "Unless the declaration or the bylaws provide otherwise," Add new footnote 158.1 n158.1

(after Villas W.II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. App. 2006) (a fact-sensitive analysis is needed to review association restrictions): Add Subsequent History (885 N.E.2d 1274 (Ind. 2008) (Rev'd (conducting a fact-sensitive inquiry and then reversing the trial court's determination that the FHA was violated)).

Change:

Page 288. Note 158: to Page 288, n. 158: Add

§ 36.13(c) Remedies Against Owners. [Go To Main]

Delete:

Parallel citation in Moshyedi not necessary. Retain 752 A.2d 279 (omit 132 Md App 184).

Delete: (case was reversed, 929 A.2d 1060 (N.J. 2007))

Comm. For a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule);

Add:

Harbours Condo. Ass'n, Inc. v. Hudson, 852 N.E.2d 985 (Ind. App. 2006) (entitling condominium association to foreclose on condominium liens for unpaid past-due assessments); Trustees of Cider Hill Condo. Trust v. DeOliveira, 2007 Mass. App. Div. 1 (Mass. App. Div. 2007) (allowing recovery of late fees for unpaid assessments); Comm. for a Better Twin Rivers v. Twin Rivers Homeowners' Ass'n, 890 A.2d 947 (N.J. App. 2006) (The requirements of reasonableness, good faith, and fair dealing are among the inherent limitations on the business judgment rule); First Atl. Fed. Credit Union v. Perez, 918 A.2d 666 (N.J. App. 2007) (expenses does not include counsel fees absent express specific statutory rules to the contrary).

Add:

Brandon Farms Prop. Owners Ass'n v. Brandon Farms Condo. Ass'n, 180 N.J. 361 (N.J., 2004) (holding that a developer cannot hold condo association responsible for assessments); Canterbury Arms Condo. Ass'n v. Lato, 2004 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1765 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2004) (holding that the association could recover the entire amount of the assessments levied, and that the defendant's offer to use another piece of real estate as collateral did not make the association whole).

after sentence "Many states give statutory priority to such liens.": Add Wellington Condo. Trust v. Pino, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15541, 16-17 (D. Mass 2010) (under Massachusetts law, a condominium association's lien for up to six months of delinquent fees for common charges will take priority over a first mortgage if the association sends the proper documentation to the mortgage company); NYCTL 1998- 2 Trust v. Johnson, 881 N.Y.S.2d 365, 365 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2009) ([New York Real Property Law] § 339-z provides that upon the sale or conveyance of a unit, unpaid common charges must be paid out of the sale proceeds by the grantee. The term sale or conveyance has been deemed to refer to a sale or voluntary transfer of the condominium unit rather than to the foreclosure of a first mortgage. (citations omitted)).

FOOTNOTES:
(n23)Footnote 158.1. River Plaza Homeowner's Ass'n v. Healey, 904 N.E.2d 1102, 1110 (Ill. App. Ct. 2009) (affirming dismissal of an action brought by homeowner's association where the association failed to obtain consent of two-thirds of homeowners before bringing the action as mandated by the association's by-laws).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 36 CONDOMINIUMS AND COOPERATIVES

4-36 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 36.15

Supp. to § 36.15 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles:

William C. Ballard, "Who Decides Whether To Build It Higher, The Condominium Community Or The Court?", 80 Fla. Bar J. 56 (2006).

Davidson, Kristin L. Bankruptcy Protection for Community Associations as Debtors. 20 Bank. Dev. J. 583 (Spring 2004).

Farkas, Jeremy I. "New Secondary Mortgage Market Guidelines for Attached Condominium Units: What Vermont Real Estate Attorneys Need to Know," 34 Vt. B.J. 50 (Summer, 2008).

Franzese, Paula A. "Trust and Community: The Common Interest Community as Metaphor and Paradox," 72 Missouri L. Rev. 1111 (Fall, 2007).

Elwin Griffith, "The Challenge of Communicating with the Consumer and Validating the Debt Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act," 55 Kan. L. Rev. 61 (2006).

Steven M. Henderson, "Walking the Line between Contract and Tort in Construction Disputes: Assessing the Use of Negligent Misrepresentation to Recover Economic Loss after Presnell," 95 Ky. L.J. 145 (2006).

Terrell R. Lee, "In Search of the Middle-Ground: Protecting the Existing Rights of Prior Purchasers in Common Interest Communities," 111 Penn L. Rev. 759 (2007).

Newman, Dara K. "If You Can't Build It, They Won't Come: Condominium Construction Moratoria and Gentrification," 35 B.C. Envtl. Aff. L. Rev. 593 (2008).

Pinkerton, Trevor G., "Escaping the Death Spiral of Dues and Debt: Bankruptcy and Condominium Association Debtors," 26 Emory Bankr Dev. J. 125 (2009) .

Richards, Kathryn B. "The Illinois Condominium Property Act: An Analysis of Legislative Efforts to Improve Tenants' Rights in the Condominium Conversion Process," 57 DePaul L. Rev. 829 (Spring 2008).

Robert G. Schwemm, "Barriers to Accessible Housing: Enforcement Issues in 'Design and Construction' Cases Under The Fair Housing Act," 40 U. Rich. L. Rev. 753 (2006).

Aric Short, "Post-Acquisition Harassment and the Scope of the Fair Housing Act," 58 Ala. L. Rev. 203 (2006).

Add to Annotations

Annotation, Award of Punitive Damages to Prevailing Plaintiffs in Actions Brought Pursuant to § 813 of Fair Housing Act, 175 A.L.R. Fed. 405 (2006) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 37.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.syn Synopsis to Chapter 37: MARITAL PROPERTY

§ 37.01 Overview of the Law of Marital Property.

§ 37.02 Outline of the Chapter.

§ 37.03 Definitions.

§ 37.04 Sources of American Marital Property Law.

§ 37.04(a) Native Americans and Communal Property.

§ 37.04(b) European Influence: The Common Law Tradition.

§ 37.04(c) European Influence: The Civil Law Tradition.

§ 37.04(d) Early American Marital Property Influences.

§ 37.05 The Marital Relationship.

§ 37.05(a) Defining Marriage.

§ 37.05(b) The Formalities of Ceremonial Marriage.

§ 37.05(c) Common Law Marriage.

§ 37.05(d) Defective Marriages: The Putative Spouse Doctrine.

§ 37.05(e) Property Rights of Unmarried Partners.

§ 37.06 The Common Law of Marital Property.

§ 37.06(a) Title and Management of Marital Property Under the Common Law.

§ 37.06(b) Disposition of Marital Property at Death Under Early American Common Law.

§ 37.06(c) Disposition of Marital Property at Divorce Under Early American Common Law.

§ 37.07 The Transition from "Individualism" to "Community" in Common Law Jurisdictions.

§ 37.07(a) Married Women's Property Acts and Marital Property Ownership During Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions.

§ 37.07(b) The Uniform Probate Code and Marital Property at Death in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions.

§ 37.07(c) Equitable Distribution Upon Dissolution of Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions.

§ 37.07(d) The Uniform Marital Property Act.

§ 37.08 Defining Marital Property in Community Property States.

§ 37.08(a) The Rationale for "Separate" and "Community."

§ 37.08(b) Statutory Definitions.

§ 37.08(c) The Community Property Presumption.

§ 37.09 Autonomous Classification: Agreements and Other Transactions Between Spouses.

§ 37.09(a) Contract Formalities.

§ 37.09(b) Substance of Contracts in General.

§ 37.09(c) Interspousal Transactions in Texas.

§ 37.09(d) Interspousal Transactions in California.

§ 37.09(e) Interspousal Transactions in Louisiana.

§ 37.10 The Complications of Time and Mixed Property.

§ 37.10(a) Inception of Title vs. Pro Rata Apportionment.

§ 37.10(b) Commingled Property and Tracing in General.

§ 37.11 Classification of Particular Assets.

§ 37.11(a) Classification When Spouses Are Separated.

§ 37.11(b) Professions and Employment.

§ 37.11(b)(1) Salary and Wages.

§ 37.11(b)(2) Retirement Benefits Generally.

§ 37.11(b)(3) Government Retirement Benefits.

§ 37.11(b)(4) Disability Benefits.

§ 37.11(b)(5) Worker's Compensation and Severance Pay.

§ 37.11(b)(6) Profit-sharing and Stock Options.

§ 37.11(b)(7) Life Insurance Provided by the Employer.

§ 37.11(b)(8) Social Security Benefits.

§ 37.11(c) Business and Investment.

§ 37.11(c)(1) Business and Professional Goodwill.

§ 37.11(c)(2) Professional Education and Licenses.

§ 37.11(c)(3) Appreciating Assets in General.

§ 37.11(c)(4) Income from Property and Investments.

§ 37.11(c)(5) Mixing Labor of One Estate with Capital of Another.

§ 37.11(d) Personal Injury Awards.

§ 37.11(e) Insurance Policies.

§ 37.12 Management and Control of Marital Property.

§ 37.12(a) Management of Separate Property.

§ 37.12(b) Duties Between Spouses.

§ 37.12(c) Management of Community Property in Texas.

§ 37.12(d) Management of Community Property in General.

§ 37.12(e) Protection of Third Parties.

§ 37.12(f) Gifts of Community Property.

§ 37.13 Marital Debt and Liability.

§ 37.13(a) Classification of Debt.

§ 37.13(b) Liability of Marital Property.

§ 37.13(b)(1) Liability for Necessaries and Support.

§ 37.13(b)(2) Liability for Torts.

§ 37.13(b)(3) Liability for Premarital Debts.

§ 37.13(b)(4) Liability of Separate Property Generally.

§ 37.13(b)(5) Liability of Community Property in General.

§ 37.14 Disposition of Marital Property at Death in Community Property States.

§ 37.14(a) Testamentary Power in Community Property States.

§ 37.14(b) Protective Measures at Death in Community Property States.

§ 37.14(c) Inheritance in Community Property States.

§ 37.15 Division of Marital Property at Divorce in Community Property States.

§ 37.16 Multi-State Marital Property and Conflict of Laws.

§ 37.16(a) Validity of Marriage and Jurisdiction at Divorce.

§ 37.16(b) Classification of Marital Property During Marriage in Interstate Situations.

§ 37.16(c) Quasi-Community Property.

§ 37.17 Bibliography.

Professor Douglas Haddock
School of Law
St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.01

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.01 Overview of the Law of Marital Property.

The intersection of "property" and "marriage," two major institutions of our society, is the focus of this chapter. In all American jurisdictions, marriage has a significant impact on property rights. Couples contemplating marriage today presumably give more thought to matters of marital property than did those who went before them. Even so, the impact of marriage on property is not necessarily felt as often by the parties during the marriage as it is by them and their family or families at the end of the marriage. Some issues are raised during the marriage in connection with transactions between the two spouses, or between the spouses and a third person. Other questions frequently arise when the marriage comes to an end, either because of a divorce or because of the death of one of the partners.

American marital property laws arise from two distinct sources, the civil law of the European continent and the English common law. These two conceptions of the effect of marriage on property are fundamentally different, but because of modern changes in the common law, the two systems are looking more and more alike.

The common law model of property is essentially characterized by individual ownership and rights earned through individual effort or skill. Marriage does not change this, and property of married persons is viewed primarily as an individual matter. The civil law, on the other hand, views the efforts and skills of a married person as part of a "community" endeavor, the community being that of husband and wife. We refer, therefore, to "community property" in the civil law, that being property that is the product of the effort or skill of a married person. Ownership of such property is shared by the community of the married couple, rather than simply being lodged in the individual whose effort more directly produced it.

The civil law thus recognizes immediate consequences for property rights as a result of marriage. Marriage was also a significant event in common law states, and certain consequences gradually developed. These consequences, however, generally take effect only upon dissolution of the marriage. Protection has evolved in the form of property rights for surviving spouses when the other spouse dies, and for the divorced or divorcing spouse who has little or no individual property. In community property jurisdictions, this kind of protection has been a part of the very fabric of marital property, since each spouse had a 50 % ownership interest in most property acquired by either spouse during the marriage.

The community property system originally took root in only eight of the states (Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas and Washington). Elsewhere the common law notions prevailed. It is somewhat remarkable that community property became the rule in even eight American jurisdictions, since every state except Louisiana generally adopted the common law rather than the civil law. The fact that most of the American community property jurisdictions are otherwise adherents to the common law also has affected the evolution of marital property law in those states. In any event, the majority of American states have followed the path of the common law of marital property.

The basic concepts of the community property system consist of sound rules governing the disposition of marital property after death of a spouse or after divorce, and a good case can be made for the merits of community property ideals and principles. In the areas of death and divorce, the common law has been moving very steadily in a direction similar to that charted out by the civil law.

A uniform marital property law n1 has adopted a community property regime of marital property and in the 1980s one state, Wisconsin, abandoned the common law approach for a code patterned after the uniform act. The current version of the Uniform Probate Code has also adopted significant provisions patterned after the marital property law of community property states. Because these codes are recent and relatively comprehensive enactments, and generally reflect much of the learning about the past, present and future of marital property, the Uniform Marital Property Act, the Wisconsin Marital Property Act, n2 and the Uniform Probate Code are quoted rather extensively in this chapter.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Unif. Marital Property Act, 9A U.L.A. 97.

(n2)Footnote 2. Wis. Stat. Ann. ch. 766.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.02

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.02 Outline of the Chapter.

After these introductory sections, this chapter provides a brief historical sketch of the background of American marital property law. This sketch reviews the way Native Americans viewed property and family, and some comments about the civil law and common law origins of modern law. The common law of marital property is briefly explained, after which the modern law in the "common law property" states is summarized. This leads naturally into a transition that has occurred or is occurring from the individualism of the common law of marital property to the more equitable sharing principles exemplified in the community property systems of the civil law. This transition is reflected, for example, in the provisions of the Uniform Probate Code and the development of the concept of equitable distribution upon dissolution of marriage.

This transition may or may not lead to further developments in the common law property states. In any event, the discussion leads quite naturally into the Uniform Marital Property Act, in which the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws has proposed that the states adopt a community property system of ownership to govern marital property during marriage. This brings us to a more detailed discussion of the community property systems on which that Act is based.

Discussion of the community property systems now in force in nine states (Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin) is divided into various topics. Definitions of "community" and "separate" property are set forth and some of the fundamental presumptions of community property systems are examined. The extent to which parties are given autonomy and authorized by contract to create their own scheme of marital property rights is also explored. Some of the discussion of "community property" includes reference to common law states as well as to community property states. For example, recognition of goodwill n3 as an asset divisible upon divorce is a part of the discussion of community property classification but is also an important issue in common law states. Indeed, because of the increasing similarity of the two systems, particularly at divorce, much of the discussion of each system is also relevant to the other.

After reviewing some of the complications that can confuse marital property classification, such as purchases spanning a period of time, commingling of different types of property, and the problem of tracing property back to its original source, we consider classification of title to specific types of property. Following this, the somewhat different questions of management and control are next taken up. This leads quite naturally into classification of marital debt and the rules of marital property liability.

Although much of the discussion up to this point is very pertinent in situations involving disposition of marital property when the marriage dissolves, by voluntary dissolution or death of one spouse, two sections of the chapter focus specifically on some of the particular issues in those events. The chapter concludes with some important conflict of laws issues.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 3. See § 37.11(c)(1), infra.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.03

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.03 Definitions.

Much of this chapter is devoted to the definitions and rules of "marital property" in community property states. A few introductory remarks about terms are in order at this point. Because of the two distinct origins of American marital property, words can be confusing. References in this chapter to the two sets of states usually identify them as "community property states [or jurisdictions]" and "common law property states [or jurisdictions]." Because most of the "community property states" are also "common law states" in the broader sense of that term, the term "common law property" is used to distinguish those states from common law/community-property jurisdictions.

As used generally in this chapter, the term "marital property" includes all assets and liabilities of married couples, whether labeled by any particular legal system as "community," "separate" or something else. In community property states, "marital property" is divided into "community property" and "separate property." The latter generally includes property acquired before marriage and property acquired during the marriage by gift, devise or inheritance. All other property of the spouses is "community property."

In common law property states, with their individualistic scheme of property ownership, there is no "community property," although for purposes of divorce common law states have essentially borrowed the concept, frequently referring to such property as "marital property." In that context, then, "marital property" has a more narrow meaning than the inclusive and generic definition noted in the preceding paragraph. n4 Technically speaking, there was originally no "separate property" in common law property states either, since separate property is a corollary of community property. With the evolution just referred to, however, the term "separate property" is sometimes now used in common law property states as well as community property states. The Uniform Marital Property Act and the relatively new Wisconsin Marital Property Act based on the Uniform Act use the term "marital property" for community property and the term "individual property" for separate property. Because of the recent adoption of a community property system in Wisconsin, that state has a more complicated definitional problem than most, since some property owned by married couples will be classified under the new act and other property will still be classified under the old common law property system. All of this may sound rather confusing in the abstract, but the meanings of these terms will usually be clear from the context in which they are used.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 4. With the development of the law governing division of property upon a divorce has come more widespread usage of the term, and it is sometimes necessary to focus carefully on the particular usage. In the context of division of property in divorce, marital property has been defined as "all property acquired during the marriage regardless of whether it is held individually or in some form of co-ownership." Gerald C. Mclellan, Equitable Distribution Law and Practice 97 (1985). McLellan asserts that exclusions from this definition typically include property acquired by gift, descent and devise. This corresponds to the term "community property" in the community property jurisdictions and is narrower than the general usage of the term "marital property" in this chapter. As noted in § 37.03, in this chapter marital property generally means all property of either or both spouses during a marriage.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.04

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.04 Sources of American Marital Property Law.

§ 37.04(a) Native Americans and Communal Property.

The historical origins of American law are generally rich and diverse, and the law of "marital property" is certainly no exception. We start with a brief look at the customs prevalent among the indigenous people of the American continent several hundred years ago. n5 In historical terms, this is an appropriate starting place for a discussion of American marital property law, although the subject has infrequently been a part of "American" legal discourse. n6

The clash of cultures that occurred when the Europeans encountered the Native Americans can be explained to some degree in terms of philosophy about property rights. What is now the United States was, of course, inhabited by many societies, differing from one another in many respects. Generalizations are suspect, but a sampling of Native American philosophy, contrasted with the attitudes brought across the Atlantic with the English and other Europeans, might give us a fuller sense of the property law that existed on this continent before and after Columbus.

One rather striking and far-sighted feature of original American philosophy about property concerns the reverence with which these Americans viewed the land. The concept of "ownership" of the land, as it had been evolving in feudal England and other European societies, apparently was not a part of early American philosophy. Consider, for example, the following statements. The first is from "The Columbus Letter of March 14th 1493":

> I gave to all I approached whatever articles I had about me, such as cloth and many other things, taking nothing of theirs in return: but they are naturally timid and fearful. As soon however as they see that they are safe, and have laid aside all fear, they are very simple and honest, and exceedingly liberal with all they have; none of them refusing any thing he may possess when he is asked for it, but on the contrary inviting us to ask them. They exhibit great love towards all others in preference to themselves: they also give objects of great value for trifles, and content themselves with very little or nothing in return... .
>
> [W]hen they got rid of the fear they at first entertained, [they] would come out in throngs, crowding the roads to see us, some bringing food, others drink, with astonishing affection and kindness... .

> [T]hese people are so amiable and friendly that even the King took a pride in calling me his brother... .
>
> I could not clearly understand whether the people possess any private property, for I observed that one man had the charge of distributing various things to the rest, but especially meat and provisions and the like. I did not find, as some of us had expected, any cannibals amongst them, but on the contrary, men of great deference and kindness. n7

One reason Columbus could not sense notions of private property among the people he found on the American continent is suggested by Wilbur R. Jacobs in the following passage:

> As the cutting edge of white settlement sliced deeper into aboriginal lands, the European method of landholding, which had caused irreversible changes in the lives of native peoples throughout the world, also moved westward pushing the Indians into the interior and surrounding reserves that the tribesmen managed to keep. One of the tragedies of American history is the poignant narrative of the dispossession of the woodland tribes. Like their cousins further west, they conceived of the land in an entirely different way than the Europeans. Their enemy, the white settlers, were largely fugitives from the European landlord system. First-, second-, third-, and even fourth-generation settlers were fiercely determined, Indians or no Indians, to have a piece of the great new world they could call their own, their very own piece of the rich good earth. The Indian, as we have seen, saw the land as supernaturally provided for man's use and not subject to sale or individual ownership. For the tribesmen, the land, as well as the life-sustaining plant and animal life on it, was part of the bounty of Mother Earth. Though tribal and village councils often controlled garden plots or maize fields, and some Algonquian tribes seem to have developed family hunting territories to conserve beaver from fur trade exploitation, the woodland Indians, as well as other North American tribesmen, had no real conception of the full meaning of individual land ownership. They regarded the land, the wilderness, and the heavens as part of a sacred, mystically conceived explanation of life. Thus the whites misunderstood the woodland Indian's almost astonishing awareness of the ecological relationships between plants and animals, which was attributed to the Indian's sharper perception of such phenomena. As we now know, the awareness was due instead to an attitude of reverence toward nature, the result of a different culture than the white man's. It is this basic difference in attitude toward the land that helps to explain the clash between natives and settlers. n8

Referring to proposals of purchase made by the new American inhabitants to the old, the following response is reported:

> Indians always said in opposition to such proposals, "We cannot sell the land, for it belongs not to us, but to all our people, to our children and our children's children as well as to us, and we cannot sell what is theirs." n9

One similarity between this philosophy and the ideas that had evolved in feudal England is the desire to preserve the land for successive generations -- children, grandchildren, etc. In England, for example, the concept of inheritance developed and landholders persistently attempted to retain land in the family indefinitely for future generations, as with fee tail estates. There is, however, a different cast to the two points of view. The English saw the land as a place for individual development and exploitation; the natives considered it in more reverential terms, emphasizing their responsibilities of stewardship. For many Native Americans, land and other natural resources have been sacred. n10

Perhaps few would today dispute the proposition that the European drive for development and productivity and the Native American reverence for the environment both have an important place in our modern relationship to the earth. In some respects, the clash between these two views continues as one of the important social issues of our time.

Another possible contrast between the two points of view, perhaps more pertinent to marital property, concerns the relationships among family, community and property rights. In some ways the English tradition stressed individual property rights with a gender bias and paternalistic tendencies. Some of the Native American societies were maternalistic in nature, but in any event, Native Americans generally seem to have been more communal than the Europeans in their attitudes about property. Consider, for example, the following accounts:

> All peoples of the world have some concept of property rights, and the North American Indians are no exception. Their aboriginal ideas on this subject differed considerably from those of the European colonists, and showed a great variation from one tribe to another. To begin with, property might be owned by a single individual, two or more individuals, an entire community, or a tribal group. The number of joint owners might vary all the way from two persons to thousands.
>
> The variation in property rights which surrounded a single person's activity might be great. Thus a man might own his weapons individually, own a fishing station jointly with relatives, share hunting territory with the whole tribe, share the meat he obtained with other families in his community, share the fish he caught with only his own household, and earn the right to sing a bear song at a public ceremony by having slain a bear. n11

Speaking of groups inhabiting various parts of North America, Driver describes the nature of property in land:

> Northwest Coast. -- On the Northwest Coast and, to some extent, elsewhere, it was seldom the entire landscape which was parceled out to groups of kindred but only the most favored sites. These were nominally owned by rich men, each of whom granted permission to his house or village mates, most of whom were his relatives, to exploit the land. That such permission was never refused proves that the use of the land belonged to the entire group of kindred rather than to a single individual. What at first appears to be individual ownership turns out to be a sort of stewardship -- the right to direct the economic exploitation of the tract by the local group. Over most of the area, from the Wiyot to the Bella Coola, such usufruct was patricentered; but in the north, from the Haisla north to the Tlingit, it was matricentered. Such private ownership applied to fishing, hunting, trapping, and wild-plant-gathering rights.
>
> Rules and regulations surrounding fishing sites were strictest on the Northwest Coast, where the rich man held title to the weir n12 but could not refuse permission to members of his household or village to fish there. Sometimes sharing was accompanied by dividing up the twenty-four-hour period so that the weir was used by different men at different times. Where this system prevailed, the nominal owner managed to retain the time period which was likely to yield the most fish... . At a man's death, his fishing rights passed to his son. In addition to those privately owned fishing stations, there were communally owned weirs, which were constructed annually at certain places in the river... .
>
> Plateau. -- On the Plateau, the large weirs at the most profitable fishing places were owned or shared by everyone in a community, and even outsiders who chanced along were commonly given a share of the catch. It was only the small weirs or scaffolds, built and operated by single men or small groups of relatives, which may be said to have been patricentered... .
>
> Plains. -- On the Plains, where band and tribal organization existed, hunting territory was controlled by the band or tribe. The boundaries between bands or tribes are difficult to establish, and neighboring tribes often shared a large territory... . Vague as knowledge of tribal or band territories is, we know for sure that no individual or small group of individuals within a Plains tribe owned any hunting land.
>
> Prairies. -- On the Prairies, control of hunting lands was similar to that on the Plains, with tribal, village, or band ownership the rule. Individuals or kinship groups did not own unimproved hunting territory, and if traps, fences, or pounds were so owned, other than for a season, it has not been reported > except for eagle pits... .

>
> Turning to farming, we find the Hidatsas and Mandans on the Missouri River divided into maternal lineages, lineage segments, and matrilocal extended families, the women of which owned their own farm plots... . Although title to a particular plot might technically be vested in an individual, it was normally cultivated by work parties of matrilineally related women, who worked each other's gardens in a group.

§ 37.04(b) European Influence: The Common Law Tradition. n13

Because of European tradition, and the fact that the customs and life-styles of the Native Americans were never taken seriously by the European "settlers" of this continent, the law that took root in the United States generally traces its origins not to the customs of Native Americans but rather to the law of Europe. More specifically, the European settlers of this continent brought with them various ideas concerning property and marriage. These origins are usually classified in terms of the "common law" system of England and the "civil law" system of the European continent.

The common law tradition of England relies substantially on evolution of legal principles through decisions made and opinions rendered by courts. At the same time common law was evolving in England, codifications of law were evolving in the countries of continental Europe, tracing their origins back to the compilations of law developed in the Roman Empire. These contemporaneous developments in different parts of Europe gave rise to fundamental differences in the promulgation of laws and in legal systems themselves, as well as some significant differences in the substance of law.

According to the tradition of England and the United States, the most fundamental and supreme law of the land is a "Constitution," which in the United States is a relatively short, written document. As every American school child knows, the United States Constitution establishes dual governments -- national (or federal) and state -- and a tripartite system of government at the national level, with executive, legislative and judicial branches. This pattern has been replicated in various forms in the fifty state governments, with state constitutions and three branches of government. With some qualification, matters of marriage, family and property were left to the states by the United States Constitution, and our marital property law is therefore not uniform from state to state.

In theory, even in common law jurisdictions, the legislative branch is the body primarily responsible for formulating policy and "making" law. This theory is somewhat simplistic in practice. It is certainly a basic premise of the Anglo-American common law that the "law" evolves through judicial resolution of individual disputes by application of precedent and the doctrine of stare decisis. At an early date in England, courts held that decisions and opinions in earlier cases had precedential value and should govern the decisions in subsequent cases. This doctrine of stare decisis was fundamental to the evolution of common law.

It is generally true that the common law system of England has had a dominant influence in the United States. Certainly the evolution of legal principles in the courts has been a major feature of American life, even to the extent that constitutional limitations on legislative enactments are defined by the courts. And because of this and the traditional emphasis on the case method of study in American law schools, law students sometimes seem to assume that "common law" is the only real and definitive law in our system. As lawyers, they quickly learn otherwise.

Under the American form of government, then, law is in fact made by both the legislative and the judicial branches of government in each state. Both branches are subject to the national and state constitutions, and in some respects, each can check the other. The courts, for example, are frequently required to interpret legislation. Courts can also overturn statutes if they are unconstitutional. The legislature, on the other hand, can make new law and policy to override "common law" or judicial interpretation of statutes. Matters are complicated even further when the executive branch is thrown into this mix. Administrative regulation, at both the federal and state levels of government, has become a massive part of our law, and in many instances requires the attention of lawyers, courts and legislators. We shall here be concerned, however, with the activities of courts and legislatures.

In the common law world of the United States, courts have traditionally made law in the first instance, and also interpreted and applied the laws promulgated by the legislative branch. The decisions of these common law courts, particularly the appellate courts, have typically been published, creating a body of law accessible to courts, lawyers and the public.

Because of the dominant influence of England in the formative years of the United States, the individual states typically adopted the common law of England as part of their common law. This record of judicial decisions and the reasons for them, first in the English courts and then in the courts of each of the American jurisdictions, coupled with the principle of stare decisis, became a great aid in discerning what the "law" was and predicting what courts would do in new cases. A tremendous mass of judicially created law gradually accumulated in the common law courts.

A balance was struck by the common law courts between permanence and flexibility. The Wisconsin Supreme Court states the matter well:

> Inherent in the common law is a dynamic principle which allows it to grow and to tailor itself to meet changing needs within the doctrine of stare decisis, which, if correctly understood, was not static and did not forever prevent the courts from reversing themselves or from applying principles of common law to new situations as the need arose. If this were not so, we must succumb to a rule that a judge should let others "long dead and unaware of the problems of the age in which he lives, do his thinking for him." Mr. Justice Douglas, Stare Decisis, 49 Columbia L. Rev. 735, 736. n14

§ 37.04(c) European Influence: The Civil Law Tradition.

In terms of both form and substance, the English common law was one of the most influential sources for the early development of our legal system. Forty-nine of the fifty states are generally referred to as "common law" states. Even so, the English common law is not the only source of early influence. Louisiana is not considered a common law state. That state was more heavily influenced by a tradition somewhat different from the common law of England. A second legal system, usually referred to as "civil law," had developed in places such as France and Spain. n15 During early evolutionary periods of the civil law, the countries involved had relatively absolute and monolithic governments, unrestrained by a written constitution or any system of governmental checks and balances. The "law" was created not by courts or American-style legislators, but by the monarchs. Periodic royal decrees evolved into "codes" setting forth the rules applicable to various relationships among the people and between the people and the crown.

As one might expect, the codes of the civil law were less flexible than the laws of the courts and legislatures in common law jurisdictions. A judicial system did evolve but that too was controlled by the crown. The civil law courts resolved disputes but they did not issue or publish written opinions, and the principle of stare decisis was not a part of their custom.

Because of the invasion of European peoples and customs on the American continent during the past several centuries, both of these very different ways of developing law have had significant influence in modern American law, particularly in the area of marital property. Although Louisiana is the only state that followed the civil law tradition in a pervasive way, notions of marital property from France and Spain took root in eight of the fifty states, and arguably have influenced the evolution of the law in many of the common law states. We now turn to some brief historical and geographical background concerning the early origins of modern American marital property law.

§ 37.04(d) Early American Marital Property Influences.

Having considered the general nature of common law and civil law, we now turn to the relationship between these systems and the early European settlements in America. More specifically, we explore briefly the early origins of American marital property law. We have noted that only one state, Louisiana, adopted civil law generally; other states adopted the common law tradition. n16 As to marital property, there is a qualification to this rule: the civil law governing property rights between spouses took hold not only in Louisiana but in seven other states as well. n17 These developments can be understood in the context of North American history during the 17th through 19th centuries. n18

At the same time English (common law) influence began to dominate North American thinking in the eastern part of the continent, influence from other parts of Europe was being felt in southern and western regions. French exploration stretched along the St. Lawrence and Mississippi Rivers and the Great Lakes from Quebec to New Orleans. Spanish settlements meanwhile expanded from Mexico through the southwestern part of North America. Much of the land west of the Mississippi River was thus under the control of France and Spain early in the evolution of the United States.

In the second half of the 18th century, France's colonial holdings in North America essentially came to an end. France ceded most of the area under French control east of the Mississippi River to England and turned the western colonies and New Orleans over to Spain. At the beginning of the 19th century, Spain ceded Louisiana back to France, setting the stage for the dramatic purchase of the vast Louisiana territory by the young United States of America. Many areas then included in the purchase eventually fell into the common law tradition of the developing new world successor to England. One area that was very much influenced by French and Spanish customs and tradition -- New Orleans and the surrounding territory, now defined by the boundaries of the state of Louisiana -- retained the civil law system of those nations.

Most of the territory that had been under French control ultimately did not adhere to the civil law tradition, in whole or even in part. This may seem somewhat surprising, inasmuch as occupation by the French of the middle of what is now the United States lasted for many decades. Two significant developments, among others, help explain the movement toward the common law of marital property in most of the developing country. In 1787, the Congress acting under the Articles of Confederation adopted the "Ordinance of 1787: The Northwest Territorial Government." n19 This significant document set forth in some detail provisions of government and law applicable to the "Northwest Territory," which subsequently became the states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin. Those states followed the Ordinance of 1787 as their law began to evolve. Other territories also imitated these states, and therefore the Ordinance, as the movement toward statehood moved to other regions of the country. A second important and related development is simply the movement of people from the eastern part of the country, where the English common law tradition prevailed, into the west. The French and the Spanish may have had control of much of the continent, but in terms of numbers, people of English origin eventually dominated the landscape.

The importance of the Ordinance of 1787 for purposes of marital property law can be understood by a reading of the rather explicit substantive commands of section 2:

> Be it ordained by the authority aforesaid, That the estates both of resident and non-resident proprietors in the said territory, dying intestate, shall descend to, and be distributed among, their children and the descendants of a deceased child in equal parts, the descendants of a deceased child or grandchild to take the share of their deceased parent in equal parts among them; and where there shall be no children or descendants, then in equal parts to the next of kin, in equal degree; and among collaterals, the children of a deceased brother or sister of the intestate shall have, in equal parts among them, their deceased parent's share; and there shall, in no case, be a distinction between kindred of the whole and half blood; saving in all cases to the widow of the intestate, her third part of the real estate for life, and one-third part of the personal estate; and this law relative to descents and dower, shall remain in full force until altered by the legislature of the district. n20

These provisions are, of course, based on the English common law. They place a significant imprint on the property law of the affected territories, and indirectly on other developing regions of early America. Section 2 of the ordinance does contain a sort of savings clause which reads as follows:

> and personal property may be transferred by delivery, saving, however, to the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers of the Kaskaskies, Saint Vincents, and the neighboring villages, who have heretofore professed themselves citizens of Virginia, their laws and customs now in force among them, relative to the descent and conveyance of property. n21

By its own terms, this clause would not be likely to have any lasting or pervasive impact on the property law of the territories.

Until the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, the Anglo-Americans had not explored or settled the vast area west of the Mississippi River in any substantial way. As noted above, however, that changed drastically in the 19th century when waves of settlers moved from east to west. Although much of the area had been under the control of Spain, the English influence soon overwhelmed the sparse Spanish settlements. By the middle of the century, when these territories became independent of Mexico, Anglo-Americans greatly outnumbered those of Spanish and Mexican descent. And at that time, legal systems as we now know them were unknown in these frontier regions. It is not surprising, therefore, that the civil law was not generally adopted by the people of the western states. Very few of the settlers were trained in the civil law, the codes were not generally available, and the whole notion of a civil law system was foreign to a majority of the residents.

As was noted earlier, however, the civil law influence did not disappear entirely from the United States. In addition to Louisiana, where the civil law took root in a relatively complete way, seven states ultimately chose to follow the civil law tradition as it applied to property rights of married couples. These seven states are Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Idaho, and Washington. The history of the adoption of "community property" principles in these seven states is fascinating, but beyond the scope of this chapter. W. S. McClanahan suggests two general reasons for the survival of this part of the civil law in these states. n22 First is the familiar property problem of status quo and vested rights: under the Spanish and Mexican regimes, property acquired by married persons was held under a community property system. Undoing or changing this scheme presumably would have caused significant problems. A second reason concerns the beginnings of a movement that is still evolving at the end of the 20th century. Even before the middle of the 19th century the common law treatment of married women had come under attack. Justifiable criticism was launched against rules by which women essentially forsook their property rights by marriage. n23 Married Women's Property Acts were adopted by the states, removing some of the disabilities imposed by law upon married women. n24 Meanwhile, the western states were in the formative stages of government and law and some of them presumably saw the civil law system of community property in a favorable light as a result of the furor over common law marital property. The community property system thus survived in areas where it was already familiar to sufficient numbers because of Spanish influence.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 5. For discussion of Indian land claims, see Vol. 7, ch. 57, Indian Land, infra.

See also Powell on Real Property (R), ch. 67, Indian Land Claims(Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n2)Footnote 6. It is unfortunate that the traditions of the people who had lived on the American continent for thousands of years before the arrival of the Europeans have been marginalized for so many years. Under these circumstances, it is no surprise that those traditions and customs have not played a major role in the way the "new Americans" view marital property. Chapter 1 of this treatise discusses property concepts among primitive cultures, and Chapter 57 considers Indian lands; the purpose of this section is simply to compare briefly Native American ideas about family, community and property with the more established views of 21st century America.

(n3)Footnote 7. Virgil Vogel, This Country Was Ours 34 (1972).

(n4)Footnote 8. Wilbur R. Jacobs, Dispossessing the American Indian (1972).

(n5)Footnote 9. Gilmore, Some Indian Ideas of Property, Indian Notes, Vol. 5, No. 2 (Apr. 1928).

(n6)Footnote 10. In comparison with Whites in the United States today, the Indians were at least ten times as religious. Every thought and act was hedged or bolstered by religion or magic, which ranged all the way from an amorphous feeling of reverence to the performance of elaborate rituals where every word and gesture was prescribed in advance. The distinction between natural and supernatural was never sharply drawn by Indians, who tended to blend the two into one harmonious whole.

Harold E. Driver, Indians of North America 396 (2d ed. rev. 1969).

(n7)Footnote 11. Harold E. Driver, Indians of North America 269, 270 (2d ed. rev. 1969).

(n8)Footnote 12. A weir is "any sort of fence or barrier sufficient to block a fish yet permit the passage of water." Id. at 87.

(n9)Footnote 13. Because of the way American marital property law has evolved, a brief excursion into comparative law is necessary. The growth and development of English and American "common law" of property in general is explored in much more detail in chapters 2-7 in this treatise.

(n10)Footnote 14. Bielski v. Schulze, 114 N.W.2d 105, 110 (Wis. 1962) (footnote omitted).

(n11)Footnote 15. It would be a mistake to assume that there is a uniform model of "civil law." The evolution of law in all societies naturally takes unique forms according to the particular culture, traditions and government of those societies.

(n12)Footnote 16. Puerto Rico also follows the civil law tradition.

(n13)Footnote 17. As discussed below, these additional seven states were Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Idaho, and Washington.

(n14)Footnote 18. A more detailed account of these developments, with reference to community property, can be found in W. S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States 55-164 (1982).

(n15)Footnote 19. U.S. Code Ann. Const. Art. I, 17-23.

(n16)Footnote 20. Id. at 17.

(n17)Footnote 21. Id. at 17-18.

(n18)Footnote 22. W. S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States § 3:22 at 118-119 (1982).

(n19)Footnote 23. See § 37.06(a), infra.

(n20)Footnote 24. See § 37.07(a), infra.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.05

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.05 The Marital Relationship.

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202A

The existence of "marital property" depends on a marital relationship. This may seem obvious, but in recent years parties in relationships other than the traditional marriage have asserted rights similar to property rights accorded married persons. Two of the most obvious examples involve heterosexual couples who are not married but are living together and sharing their lives in a fashion similar to typical married persons, and homosexual couples who are doing likewise. It is quite clear that matters of marriage, family and other relationships, whether similar to traditional marriages and families or not, are among the most important and divisive social issues of our time.

Even though marriage is essential to the existence of marital property, the subject of "family law" is really beyond the scope of this chapter, and we do not directly devote much space here to the legal details of the marital relationship. n25 For the most part in this chapter, in discussing marital property, we take marriage relationships for granted, and this section does nothing more than summarize some very fundamental premises about marriage.

§ 37.05(a) Defining Marriage.

In our society, the state has assumed a substantial interest in the family and in the marriage relationship that is at the center of the traditional American family. "[S]ubject to constitutional limitations, the state has exclusive dominion over the legal institution of marriage and the state alone has the 'prerogative of creating and overseeing this important institution.'" n26 Marriage in the United States "has been deemed a private relationship of a man and a woman (husband and wife) which involves 'interests of basic importance in our society.'" n27 To date, arguments that relationships other than the traditional marital relationship ought to be given the same legal status as marriage have not met with success. This is not to say that change has not occurred, but the marital relationship in our society in significant respects is still defined as it has been for centuries.

> According to the English law, and to its American counterpart, the legal definition of marriage was clear and quite specific, although its outlines had to some extent to be inferred from the judicial resolution of marital conflicts rather than being directly stated in statutory provisions. As so defined, marriage was a permanent, monogamous relationship between a man and woman, divorce being virtually > impossible in England until the latter half of the Nineteenth Century. n28

Although the permanency of many marriages has dwindled in modern times, and divorce has become commonplace, the traditional conception of marriage in American law remains mostly intact. Attempts to promote the legal benefits of marriage for same-sex marriages are still not completely successful, even in the face of some serious constitutional objections. n29 In a representative case from before 2003, a Washington court responded to a claim that that state's Equal Rights Amendment required that the County Auditor not discriminate against two males seeking a marriage license:

> The fact remains that marriage exists as a protected legal institution primarily because of societal values associated with the propagation of the human race... . [T]he refusal of the state to authorize same-sex marriage results from ... impossibility of reproduction rather than from an invidious discrimination "on account of sex." Therefore, the definition of marriage as the legal union of one man and one woman is permissible as applied to appellants, notwithstanding the prohibition contained in the ERA, because it is founded upon the unique physical characteristics of the sexes and appellants are not being discriminated against because of their status as males per se. n30

In 2003, the Massachusetts Supreme Judical Court ruled in Goodridge v. Department of Public Health that it is unconstitutional to bar same-sex couples from marriage. n31

§ 37.05(b) The Formalities of Ceremonial Marriage. n32

Although there is a historical basis for recognition of informal marriages, n33 in most states certain ceremonial formalities are required. And in all states, ceremonial marriages are recognized. In exercising their control over marriage, the states have enacted a wide variety of laws. All states generally require that parties obtain a license before marriage. This licensing procedure serves the purpose of screening applicants for marriage eligibility; information is furnished under oath concerning matters such as age, relationship between the two parties, if any, and prior marriages. This information is, of course, pertinent to certain qualifications imposed by the state on parties who desire to be married. If the licensing officer concludes from the application that the parties are not eligible to marry, the officer will deny the application. Most states impose a short waiting period, typically several days, between the issuance of the license and the marriage ceremony. Some type of physical examination may also be required of the applicants, usually for the purpose of determining whether either party is infected by any sexually transmitted disease.

The actual solemnization of marriage is also regulated by statute. Religious leaders and civil officers such as judges are authorized to perform wedding ceremonies. In most states, no special form of ceremony is required, although witnesses are often required. The ceremony is memorialized on a marriage certificate or marriage license which may be used as evidence of the marriage.

The consequences of noncompliance with marriage formalities vary from state to state. There is, of course, a strong desire to validate marriage relationships, at least when the parties had acted in good faith, and marriages will therefore often be upheld despite formal flaws. This makes good sense when defects are relatively minor, where nullification would serve no useful purpose, or when the problem comes to light many years after the marriage.

§ 37.05(c) Common Law Marriage.

Although recognition of "common law marriage" has been on the decline in the United States, eleven states and the District of Columbia still recognize the possibility of a valid "informal" marriage. n34 And with a society as mobile as modern America, virtually all jurisdictions may have occasion to consider common law marriages that have arguably arisen under the laws of one of the twelve jurisdictions recognizing common law marriage directly. n35

No formal ceremony is required for a common law marriage, of course, but certain requirements must be met for the courts to recognize such marriages. The elements required include capacity, mutual agreement to enter into the marriage relationship, public recognition of the existence of the marriage, cohabitation or mutual and open assumption of marital duties. n36 Attitudes about common law marriage vary, not only as between states that recognize it and states that don't, but also even among the twelve states that still accept it. These differences in opinion are reflected in some of the details of common law marriage from state to state, such as whether agreements must be express or can be implied and the degree of evidentiary proof required to establish the marriage. The Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act presents two alternative provisions, one permitting common law marriage and the other prohibiting it. n37 Commenting on the difference of opinion and the alternative provisions, the drafters of that Act state:

> These alternatives are presented because the line of cleavage in the states, between those which consider the common law marriage to be a highly useful social institution and those which insist that all marriages de jure should be contracted in accordance with prescribed statutory formalities, proved impossible to erase... . The alternatives are a signal to state legislatures that this issue should be re-examined even if the state is one of those which has already abolished common law marriage. n38

§ 37.05(d) Defective Marriages: The Putative Spouse Doctrine.

There are, of course, occasions when an apparently valid marriage is in fact defective. Perhaps the most common example is a marriage between two parties while one of the parties is still validly married to a third person. Because of our society's ban on plural marriages, a married person cannot enter into a valid marriage relationship with a second spouse without first procuring a divorce from the first spouse. The fact that marriage to a second spouse before divorce from the first is illegal has not always prevented such "marriages." In some cases, both parties may truly believe that they are legally capable of contracting marriage, as in the case of a defective divorce from the first spouse. In other cases, one of the two parties may be "innocent" and the other "guilty," knowing that he or she is already married to another. And in common law marriage situations, where there is no "ceremony," parties might erroneously believe that they have satisfied the requirements of a common law marriage.

In some instances, courts have been persuaded that persons involved in invalid marriage relationships should nevertheless be treated as spouses for certain purposes. The primary example of this is that the "putative spouse" may be entitled to a division of property when the putative marriage comes to an end. n39 To qualify as a putative spouse in this sense, one must have a reasonable, good faith belief that a valid marriage exists. n40

§ 37.05(e) Property Rights of Unmarried Partners.

In a sense, this subject is, by definition, beyond the scope of a chapter devoted to "marital property." As discussed in § 37.05(a), however, claims to legal treatment similar to that accorded married persons have arisen in significant numbers in recent years and in that sense the issues posed are pertinent here and are therefore briefly noted.

Perhaps the most famous case involving these issues was Marvin v. Marvin, n41 in which the court concluded that unmarried partners could enter into a valid contract affecting their property rights, so long as the agreement did not rest upon illicit consideration. n42 This case received a good bit of notoriety, in part because it departed from the earlier view that any such "contract" would be illegal. n43

Intimate relationships not based on marriage have now given rise to property claims based on a number of theories, including "express or implied contract, partnership, resulting or constructive trust, and even various tort theories." n44 It is generally necessary, however, that a claimant establish a right to recover under a specific established theory. n45 In a 1992 Nevada case, Western States Constr., Inc. v. Michoff, n46 a dispute arose between an unmarried man and woman who had cohabited for nine years. They had formed a corporation together and engaged in the business of renting construction equipment. The couple held themselves out as husband and wife and acted as though they were co-owners of the corporation. When the relationship came to an end, in a suit against both the man and the corporation, the woman sought one-half of the parties' assets. The court reiterated its approval of Marvin v. Marvin, referring to the rule adopted in an earlier Nevada case that "unmarried cohabitants will not be denied access to the courts to make property claims against each other merely because they are not married." In a passage clarifying their earlier opinion, the court goes on to say:

> Our brother Springer [a dissenting Justice] believes that the district court was misled by our statement in Hay that if unmarried cohabiting adults agree to hold their property as if they are married, "the community property laws of the state will apply by analogy." Justice Springer concludes that "[u]nmarried persons cannot own community property, by analogy or otherwise." Marvin, however, strongly supports our statement in Hay that the community property law may apply by analogy. While unmarried couples cannot actually own community property, this is so only because community property is a creature of statute which arises after a couple is legally married. See Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.220. Yet unmarried couples are not precluded from holding their property as though they were married. See Marvin, 557 P.2d at 116. In such a case, the community property law can apply by analogy. Hay, 100 Nev. at 199, 678 P.2d at 674. Thus we hold that unmarried cohabiting adults may agree to hold property that they acquire as though it were community property.

In a similar Washington case, Connell v. Francisco, n47 a couple had had a six-year relationship in several states. During that time, the man's net worth increased from $1,400,000 to $2,700,000. The woman, Connell, sought a division of property of the relationship comparable to a division that would be available to married partners. Although some statutory benefits have been consistently denied to "partners in a meretricious relationship," the court held that the trial court correctly concluded that the statute providing for disposition of marital property "applied by analogy" in cases involving long-term relationships. Moreover, in attempting to make an equitable distribution of property, the trial court erred in excluding from any consideration property characterized as separate property of Francisco (the man). The court also decided that Connell would be entitled to the benefit of the community property presumption.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: property w/2 right! w/30 unmarried w/2 partner! or person!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 25. Helpful and much more detailed summaries of the subject can be found in the Second Student Edition and Second Practitioner's Edition of Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States.

(n2)Footnote 26. Singer v. Hara, 522 P.2d 1187, 1197 (Wash. App. 1974) (quoting Coleman v. Coleman, 291 N.E.2d 530, 534 (Ohio St. 1972)). Cf. Baehr v. Miike, 910 P.2d 112 (Haw. 1996) (church and clergy denied intervention in action, because they failed to adequately demonstrate that intervention would assist in the just and equitable adjudication of the issues), aff'd by Baehr v. Miike, 950 P.2d 1234 (Hawaii 1997).

See also West v. West, 689 N.E.2d 1215, 1218 (Ill. App. Ct. 1998) (marriage is a three-party contract between the man, the woman and the state; the state represents the public interest in the institution of marriage and that public interest allows a state to intervene in certain situations to protect the interests of family members).

(n3)Footnote 27. Singer v. Hara, 522 P.2d 1187, 1197 (Wash. App. 1974) (quoting Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371, 376 (1971)).

(n4)Footnote 28. Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States 24 (2d student ed. 1988).

(n5)Footnote 29. Id. at 75-80. Cf. Tucker v. Tucker, 910 P.2d 1209 (Utah 1996) (father awarded custody of minor child after trial court found mother's cohabitation with same-sex partner during marriage and in presence of child demonstrated mother's lack of moral example); In re H.N.R., 666 A.2d 535 (N.J. Super. 1995) (biological mother's same-sex partner allowed to adopt biological mother's children, because it was in the children's best interest); In re M.M.D., 662 A.2d 837 (D.C. 1995) (unmarried same-sex couples are eligible to petition the court for a decree of adoption). Storrs v. Holcomb, 645 N.Y.S.2d 286 (1996) (State of New York does not recognize or authorize same-sex marriages, and such gender based classification does not offend due process or equal protection clauses); Dean v. District of Columbia, 653 A.2d 307 (D.C. 1995) (District of Columbia statute prohibited clerk from issuing marriage license to same-sex couple). Mueller v. Commissioner, 82 T.C.M. (CCH) 764 (2001) (taxing married couples differently from same-sex couples does not violate constitution); In re Estate of Gardiner, 22 P.3d 1086 (Kan. Ct. App. 2001) (statute barring same-sex marriages did not violate equal protection as applied to marriage between man and post-operative transsexual).

(n6)Footnote 30. Singer v. Hara, 522 P.2d 1187, 1195 (Wash. App. 1974). See also Rosengarten v. Downes, 802 A.2d 170 (Conn. App. 2002) (foreign same-sex civil union was not a "marriage" under statute providing subject matter jurisdiction over the dissolution of marriages); Baker v. Nelson, 191 N.W.2d 185 (Minn. 1971) (other definitions of marriage that preclude same-sex unions cited at 191 N.W.2d 185, 186).

(n7)Footnote 31. Goodridge v. Department of Pub. Health, 440 Mass. 309, 798 N.E.2d 941 (2003) ("The Massachusetts Constitution ... forbids the creation of second-class citizens. ... . The [Commonwealth of Massachusetts] has failed to identify any constitutionally adequate reason for denying civil marriage to same-sex couples.").

See also Opinions of the Justices to the Senate, 440 Mass. 1201, 802 N.E.2d 565 (2004) (proposed Massachusetts legislation that would prohibit same-sex couples from marrying, but allow them to form civil unions with all of marriage's "benefits, protections, rights and responsibilities," did not comply with the equal protection and due process requirements of the Constitution of the Commonwealth and articles 1, 6, 7, 10, 12 and 16 of the Declaration of Rights.)

(n8)Footnote 32. A much more detailed summary of this subject, which forms the basis of this section, can be found in Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 2.3, at 34-44 (2d student ed. 1988).

(n9)Footnote 33. Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 2.3, at 22-23 (2d student ed. 1988).

(n10)Footnote 34. Id. § 2.4 at 46. The eleven states are Alabama, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Montana, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, and Utah. At the time Clark's book was published, thirteen states and the District of Columbia recognized common law marriage. Ohio has since decided against continuing recognition of such relationships as valid marriages. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3105.12. The statute provides that "On and after the effective date of this amendment ... common law marriages are prohibited in this state, and the marriage of a man and woman may occur in this state only if the marriage is solemnized ... ." Id. § 3105.12(B)(1). Exceptions are extended to common law marriages occurring in Ohio prior to the effective date of the statute and to common law marriages "in another state or nation that recognizes the validity of common law marriages ... ." Id. § 3105.12(B)(3)(a). Williams v. Williams, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 3508 (common-law marriage that occurred in Ohio before October 10, 1991 recognized as valid). In 1996 the Georgia legislature enacted a statute providing that common-law marriages entered into in Georgia after January 1, 1997 would not be recognized. Ga. Code Ann. § 19-3-1.1. On January 1, 1996, Idaho stopped recognizing common-law marriages entered into in the state. Idaho Code § 32-201. In marked contrast to the majority trend, Utah enacted a statute in 1998 providing that unsolemnized marriages would be recognized if arising from a contract between the parties, who have cohabited, who mutually assume marital rights, duties and obligations, who hold themselves out as and have acquired a uniform general reputation as husband and wife. Utah Code Ann. § 30-1-4.5(1). Milot, Lisa. Restitching the American Marital Quilt: Untangling Marriage from the Nuclear Family, 87 Va. L. Rev. 701 (2001).

(n11)Footnote 35. See Brissett v. Sykes, 855 S.W.2d 330 (Ark. 1993). In Brissett, a dispute arose over ownership of a one-half interest in property that had been conveyed to Leon and Ruth Brissett "husband and wife." In fact, Leon and Ruth had never formally married, but Leon was claiming a right of survivorship as a tenant by the entirety. This claim was based on the contention that a common law marriage existed between the two. They had apparently agreed to be married in 1977 while living in New York and held themselves out to the public as husband and wife. The couple "traveled in a motor home to almost every state in the nation and some Canadian provinces, but maintained their permanent residence in New York until they moved to Arkansas in 1986." Id. at 331. Common law marriages may not be created in Arkansas, but Arkansas courts recognize common law marriages contracted by law in other states where the parties actually reside. Ark. Code Ann. § 9-11-107. In this particular case, however, Leon did not present evidence that trips to states recognizing common law marriage were made for the purpose of changing their residency, nor did he present evidence as to the requirements of establishing a common law marriage in the states Ruth and he had visited. The court therefore affirmed the Chancellor's conclusion that the record did not support a finding that a common law marriage was established.

(n12)Footnote 36. Adams v. Boan, 559 So. 2d 1084 (Ala. 1990) (capacity, mutual consent, public recognition and cohabitation); People v. Lucero, 747 P.2d 660 (Colo. 1987) (mutual consent, cohabitation, open assumption of marital relation); Coates v. Watts, 622 A.2d 25 (D.C. 1993) (express mutual agreement, cohabitation); In re Estate of Fisher, 176 N.W.2d 801 (Iowa 1970) (present intent and agreement, continuous cohabitation, public declaration that parties are husband and wife); Fleming v. Fleming, 559 P.2d 329 (Kan. 1977) (capacity to marry, present agreement, holding out of each other as husband and wife to the public); Mont. Code Ann. § 40-1-403; In re Marriage of Geertz, 755 P.2d 34 (Mont. 1988) (capacity to contract marriage, assumption of marital relationship by mutual consent, cohabitation, repute in the community that parties are husband and wife); Gainey v. Barnhart, 299 F.3d 1004 (8th Cir. 2002) (applying Arkansas law the claimant was unable to prove dissolution of previous marriages and so could not enter into a common law marriage with the decedent); Faber v. TGI-Friday's Inc., 148 F. Supp. 2d 556 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (without the use of verba praesenti common-law marriage will still be recognized where the parties' intent, as expressed by their words, is that they were married); Clark v. Clark, 27 P.3d 538 (Utah 2001) (evidence was sufficient to establish common-law marriage when parties lived together after divorce and held themselves out and acquired reputation as husband and wife); In re Marriage of Hallgarth, No. 07-01-0013-CV, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. Ct. App. May 29, 2001) (if circumstances creating common-law marriage occur while one party is married to another person, the common-law marriage comes to fruition upon dissolution of that marriage); Standifer v. Standifer, 26 P.3d 104 (Okla. 2001) (common-law marriage is formed when "the minds of the parties meet in consent at the same time"); Joye v. Yon, 547 S.E.2d 888 (S.C. Ct. App. 2001) (common-law marriage exists if the parties presently intend to enter into a marriage contract); Hall v. Apfel, 2001 WL 681631, at *3 (W.D. Tex. April 4, 2001) (to establish common-law marriage, parties must agree to marry, live together in the state as husband and wife, and represent to others that a marriage exists. If the 2nd and 3rd criteria are met, the 1st may be inferred). Cf. Shepherd v. Ledford, 926 S.W.2d 405 (Tex. App. 1996) (by stipulation a person was given standing as common law spouse), aff'd by Shepherd v. Ledford, 962 S.W.3d 28, 41 Tex. 1998); Balser v. Mosley, No. CA97-05-109, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 131 (Ohio App. 12 Dist.) (no common-law marriage existed where there was no in praesenti marriage agreement between partners). See also In re Estate of Hunsaker, 968 P.2d 281, 284 (Mont. 1998) (The party asserting a common law marriage has the burden of proving three elements: 1. that the parties were competent to enter into a marriage; 2. that the parties assumed a marital relationship by mutual consent and agreement; and 3. that the parties confirmed their marriage by cohabitation and public repute); State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Platt, 4 F. Supp. 2d 399 (E.D. Pa. 1998) (Under Pennsylvania law, there is a rebuttable presumption of common law marriage, if these essential elements co-exist: 1. Constant cohabitation between a man and a woman, both of whom have the capacity to be married, and 2. General, as distinguished from partial or divided, reputation as husband and wife in their community).

(n13)Footnote 37. Unif. Marriage and Divorce Act § 211, 9A U.L.A. 177.

(n14)Footnote 38. Unif. Marriage and Divorce Act § 211 comment at 177.

(n15)Footnote 39. See J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 2.03[4][b] (1993). Manker v. Manker, 644 N.W.2d 522, 532 (Neb. 2002) (as a matter of first impression, the putative spouse doctrine does not provide a legal basis for alimony and property division).

(n16)Footnote 40. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 2.03[4][a]. Estate of DePasse v. Harris, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 143 (2002) (husband's awareness of the lack of the required marriage license shows he did not have a good faith belief the marriage was lawful); Saacks v. Saacks, 688 So. 2d 673, 675-676 (La. Ct. App 1997) (putative spouse status allows good-faith spouse a share in community property).

(n17)Footnote 41. 557 P.2d 106 (Cal. 1976).

(n18)Footnote 42. Some questions have been raised as to whether this is a workable rule. See J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 1.02[4]. Because payment for performance of sexual services remains illegal in most states, there is arguably a problem in recognizing contractually many intimate relationships. Posik v. Layton, 695 So. 2d 759, 761 (Fla. Ct. App. 1997) (support contract similar to prenuptial agreement valid between homosexual partners); Byrne v. Laura, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 908, 913 (Cal. Ct. App. 1997) (an oral Marvin-type agreement is enforceable against estate of deceased unmarried partner). The argument is that cohabitation of this type always involves a sexual component. This perceived difficulty may, however, rest on too narrow a conception of such relationships. Just as there is presumably much more than sex involved in a marriage, partners who are not married also might have other significant components in their relationship. Indeed, most couples would probably bristle at the suggestion that any agreement they might have concerning property is directly related to sexual services.

(n19)Footnote 43. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 1.02[1].

(n20)Footnote 44. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 1.01. Lobaugh v. Lobaugh, 753 A.2d 834 (Pa. Super. 2000) (cohabiting between ex-wife and male friend terminated alimony under a marital property settlement agreement).

(n21)Footnote 45. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 1.02[5][i]. As Professor Oldham points out, even Marvin itself is indicative of this principle. On retrial, the judge found against the plaintiff on all theories presented but nevertheless awarded her $104,000. The award was reversed on appeal because no approved theory of recovery had been established. Marvin v. Marvin, 122, 176 Cal. Rptr. 555 (1981).

(n22)Footnote 46. 840 P.2d 1220 (Nev. 1992).

(n23)Footnote 47. 872 P.2d 1150 (Wash. App. 1994), aff'd in part, rev'd in part by Connell v. Francisco, 898 P.2d 831 (Wash. 1995).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.06

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.06 The Common Law of Marital Property.

[Go To Supp]

In this section, we summarize the historical background of the law of marital property in common law jurisdictions. This sketch is necessarily very brief and barely scratches the surface. In the following section, the major themes of the modern evolution of marital property law in common law states is presented. The trend of the law in common law states, at least in the areas of divorce and death, quite clearly brings the common law states and the community property states closer together. The reader can get a feeling for the historical background by reading this section. The modern revisions of marital property law have a unifying theme that can be seen in the next section.

"Common law" is not a very precise term; it refers to law made by courts and is, of course, subject to change over time. n48 There is, therefore, no single and authoritative source we can refer to when speaking of the common law, which has spanned many centuries in England and the United States. In this section, the discussion refers to the common law of America during the 19th and 20th centuries. Some changes in the common law during that time period are noted in this section, and in § 37.07 we explore other transitions from the earlier common law doctrine to the modern law of marital property in common law jurisdictions.

The United States has borrowed extensively from England in creating and maintaining a legal system. In some form, the common law of England is a part of the common law of every state but Louisiana. The combination of this English background and American land and circumstances may explain a good deal about the evolution of American law. The early English settlers were accustomed to staking out claims to property and asserting rights of dominion and rights to exclude others from their territory. They were also in need of new territory and found an abundance of it on the American continent. As noted in § 37.04(a), the European settlers were a bit baffled by their encounters with the natives; their befuddlement can be partially explained by the very different views the two cultures had with regard to land and property in general.

Native Americans saw land as a resource to be enjoyed and used by all, or at least by some sort of "community"; it was not necessarily something to be "owned" or appropriated for oneself. English settlers, on the other hand, emphasized the concept of "private property." This term has been defined as "a relationship among human beings such that the so-called owner can exclude others from certain activities or permit others to engage in those activities and in either case secure the assistance of the law in carrying out his decision." n49 These private property notions of ownership and the power to exclude are not peculiar to England and America, but they are significant features of the common law view of property.

§ 37.06(a) Title and Management of Marital Property Under the Common Law.

It is not necessarily a corollary of "private property" that ownership be defined in individual rather than communal terms. When it comes to the impact of marriage on private property, however, the common law of England and the United States has certainly emphasized individual ownership. Even concurrent ownership arrangements under the common law, such as tenancy in common and joint tenancy, are essentially defined in terms of individual rights. Property accumulated as a result of one's labors would be "owned" by the individual laborer, irrespective of whether that person had a spouse. As has been discussed, this point of view differs substantially from that of the civil law, where ownership of property resulting from a married person's labors is effectively attributed to the "marital community" (laborer and spouse) rather than to the individual laborer.

Although "community" or "shared" ownership was not really a part of common law, marriage did have a very significant impact on property rights. The English common law, and the American common law patterned after it, were quite plainly sexist and paternalistic. n50 In marriage, women essentially forfeited most of their property rights. They were unable to own property or to make many contracts. In England, women were disfavored even in inheritance because of the rule of primogeniture, whereby the eldest son and then other sons were heirs, to the exclusion of daughters.

Describing some features of English law before 1800, Professor Chused writes:

> The general outlines of common law coverture rules emerged in the thirteenth century. Upon marriage, the husband gained power and control over his wife's freehold estate for the term of the marriage, or, upon the birth of a child, for the husband's life, and obtained ownership of his wife's personal property. A woman's ability to contract was suspended upon marriage. Equitable exceptions to these rules did not emerge until the late sixteenth century, when antenuptial contracts and trusts for the separate use of the wife appeared. The chancery cases also gave wives power to will their separate estates, donate them to their husbands, sell them to strangers, and perhaps deal with them by contract. Though consent of the husband for the establishment of the separate equitable estate was still necessary, equity courts of the late seventeenth century began to require an "equity to a settlement" to insure some financial safeguards for wives whose husbands sought to make use of assets in a separate estate. This period also saw the emergence of enforceable separation agreements, support decrees for wives leaving their marital home due to the fault of the husband, and cases confirming the ability of married women to execute powers. Not until the mid-eighteenth century did chancery courts take the crucial step of recognizing a separate estate created without the husband's consent. In a related development, the courts began to examine dispositions of a separate estate more carefully to avoid coercion by husbands. The separate estate became subject to the debts of married women by the end of the eighteenth century. n51

Although much of the American common law was modeled after the English common law, Professor Chused points out that many of the problems encountered in the colonies were unique, resulting in legal responses not always consistent with the English law. He notes, for example, evidence that "women, sometimes even married women, received land grants in some of the Colonies." n52 As the colonies developed, however, "English legal models became more important" and the husband's dominance in matters of property prevailed. n53 Even so, Professor Chused reports that "[m]odern legal historians studying coverture are now recognizing that post-war judicial and legislative decisions on the applicability of English law in the state, territorial, and federal systems were not uniform." n54

Although women lost significant property rights in marriage, in practice, married women probably played a more significant role in matters of property than is sometimes supposed. The evolution of different roles for husbands and wives in the early American family partially explains the sexist law of American jurisdictions. In any event, the effect of marriage on day-to-day property rights of women was significant, as summed up by Professor Chused:

> As the nineteenth century began, real property owned by a married woman in a legal estate was subject to the management and control of her husband. Personal property of a wife became the property of her husband as soon as he reduced it to possession. Where equity courts existed, separate equitable estates could be created for married women's property, but the protections to be provided a wife by the equitable forum had to be specifically delineated in the document creating the estate. n55

Although we have emphasized the individual under the common law, title can, of course, be held in common. One form of common law concurrent estate -- the tenancy by the entirety (or entireties) -- is a form of "marital property" and is limited to husband and wife. n56 The tenancy by the entirety is similar to the joint tenancy with its right of survivorship. n57 To the famous "unities" of the joint tenancy (time, title, interest and possession) was added a fifth unity, that of "husband and wife." n58 Like the common law of marital property generally, the tenancy by the entirety did not originally involve equality between the spouses. Here too the husband had rather exclusive and broad powers of management and control. n59 The husband was entitled to exclusive possession and control, but neither spouse could unilaterally sever or partition the estate during their joint lives. n60 In other words, the husband could not defeat the wife's survivorship rights by a transfer to a third party. The third party's interest would be subject to the survivorship right and would expire if the wife survived the husband. n61

The Hawaii Supreme Court has described the difference between joint tenancy and tenancy by the entirety as follows:

> A joint tenant has a specific, albeit undivided, interest in the property, and if he survives his cotenant he becomes the owner of a larger interest than he had prior to the death of the other joint tenant. But tenants by the entirety are each deemed to be seized of the entirety from the time of the creation of the estate. At common law, this taking of the "whole estate" did not have the real significance that it does today, insofar as the rights of the wife in the property were concerned. For all practical purposes, the wife had no right during coverture to the use and enjoyment and exercise of ownership in the marital estate. All she possessed was her contingent right of survivorship. n62

With the demise of the idea that wife and husband were one legal person came questions about the tenancy by the entirety, which in a sense was based on the unity of husband and wife. Some states did not adopt, or abandoned, the entirety concept. In a fairly complete 1951 survey of entirety law, Dean Oval A. Phipps reported that at that time twenty-nine states did not recognize tenancy by the entirety. n63 More recently, Stoebuck and Whitman have reported that "tenancies by the entirety have been abolished in all but twenty jurisdictions." n64 In most jurisdictions where the tenancy still exists, its characteristics have been modified. Dean Phipps stated in 1951 that only three states -- Massachusetts, Michigan and North Carolina -- still applied the "common law" version of tenancy by the entirety. Spousal equality, however, is now the rule even in states where some form of the common law tenancy by the entirety has survived. n65

Because it is still recognized in half of the common law property jurisdictions of the United States, tenancy by the entirety continues to be an important part of American marital property law. It is a unique brand of "marital property" in the common law property states, but it falls far short of the sharing concepts of community property states. Even though there has generally been a presumption that a conveyance to husband and wife creates a tenancy by the entirety, individual ownership still prevails as to acquisitions other than transfers to wife and husband. Income of either party is therefore not owned by both spouses as tenants by the entirety, but rather belongs to the spouse whose labor most directly produced the income.

The modern direction of the tenancy by the entirety may be represented by a recent Massachusetts case. n66 Discussing a Massachusetts statute, the court there states:

> [A] tenancy by the entirety remains a unitary title, and the statute simply guarantees each spouse an equal right to the whole. Whatever the husband could do at common law, the wife now may do as well. Each spouse continues to have a [sic] indestructible right of survivorship, and the estate remains inseverable and not subject to voluntary partition. Nor, by virtue of G.L. c. 209, § 1, may a creditor of either seize the principal residence absent the joint signature of the spouses. One spouse, acting alone, cannot convey or encumber the entire estate, because any conveyance or encumbrance remains subject to the other's survivorship right. n67

The Massachusetts court also declares that either spouse may convey or encumber his or her interest in property held as tenants by the entirety, although they recognize that this is inconsistent with the rule in some states requiring consent of both spouses for a transfer of any interest in entirety property.

In Missouri, a statutory presumption in favor of tenancy by the entirety arises when "any deposit is made in the name of two persons or the survivor thereof who are husband and wife unless otherwise specified" n68 This presumption may be rebutted only by a showing that is "so strong, clear, positive, unequivocal and definite as to leave no doubt in the trial judge's mind." n69 In a recent case, for example, a signature card to an account declaring title was held as "Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship" was insufficient to rebut the presumption. The court suggested as adequate the following language: "Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship and Not as Tenants by the Entirety." n70

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: (tenancy w/1 entirety) or (marital w/1 property) w/30 title or manage! w/50 common law

§ 37.06(b) Disposition of Marital Property at Death Under Early American Common Law.

The doctrine of primogeniture did not take hold in the American colonies or states, and intestate succession laws in the early United States of America "provided for descent to widows and children of both sexes." n71 Testamentary control over property was another matter. As noted in § 37.06(a), women generally lost their title to personal property upon marriage and thus married women had no personalty to will, except with the consent of their husbands. Transfers at death of the married woman's equitable estate in real property could be enforced but were not common. n72 Professor Chused reports that his own research and that of others suggests that women began to write more wills at the beginning of the 19th century, but that they were usually widows or unmarried women bequeathing personal property. n73 Gradually, legislation bestowing various forms of testamentary power upon married women was enacted by the states, and women as well as men acquired and exercised the power to dispose of property at death.

Notwithstanding testamentary power, there is apparently an innate sense that marriage partners should not have absolute control over their property at death, to the exclusion of their spouses. In light of the consequences of marriage on a woman's property rights, some protection of widows was essential. Technically, a spouse was not an heir, but the common law did protect widows through "dower." This protection was modest, however, in light of the economic position and legal incapacity of married women. Upon her husband's death, a woman was entitled to a life estate in one-third of all land in which the husband had an estate of inheritance any time during the marriage. Similar protection evolved in favor of the husband who survived his wife. Provided that a child was born during the marriage, a surviving husband would be entitled to "curtesy," which amounted to a life estate in all of the wife's real and personal property.

§ 37.06(c) Disposition of Marital Property at Divorce Under Early American Common Law.

We have noted that in common law states, other than legal disability of the wife, marriage had almost no effect on property rights during the marriage. Title determined ownership and gender determined control. The logical extension of the individual title theory of the common law in a divorce setting is that each party takes her or his property and the two go their separate ways. This is, in fact, an accurate description of the common law of marital property at divorce. "[F]or purposes of property division at divorce, spouses were treated like unmarried cohabitants." n74 Property accumulated by the spouses during the marriage therefore went with the accumulating partner, and that owner's spouse had no claim on the property. This was, of course, a serious problem for non-accumulating spouses, who, in a male-dominated work-world, were usually women.

Marriage was not entirely meaningless insofar as property rights were concerned. Consistent with the paternalistic nature of the common law, a system developed whereby a husband might continue to have an obligation to support his wife and children after divorce through the payment of "alimony" and "child support." In earlier times, divorce was routinely based on fault, and if the wife was at fault, even the alimony obligation might be nullified. n75

The common law title system "had disastrous social consequences for divorced women." n76 It is no wonder that alimony was not seen as an adequate answer to marital property rights upon divorce. As discussed in § 37.07(c), virtually every common law state has moved away from total reliance on alimony for appropriate distribution of property rights at divorce.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 48. By definition, the "common law" is always an evolving, dynamic force. It is therefore peculiar that we speak so often of the "common law" in terms that seem to suggest a static quality. Professor Richard H. Chused has made this same point: "Authors often speak of the common law without reference to its modification over time." Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1386 n.103 (1983). In addition to the American common law of the 1800's and 1900's, some background material from England and from earlier times is included here. Professor Chused's article contains many excellent insights on this subject and is relied on for this brief historical backdrop.

(n2)Footnote 49. Felix Cohen, Dialogue on Private Property, 9 Rutgers L. Rev. 357, 373 (1954).

(n3)Footnote 50. One of the most striking judicial comments espousing this point of view is the following:

> Man is, or should be, woman's protector and defender. The natural and proper timidity and delicacy which belongs to the female sex evidently unfits it for many of the occupations of civil life. The constitution of the family organization, which is founded in the divine ordinance, as well as in the nature of things, indicates the domestic sphere as that which properly belongs to the domain and functions of womanhood... . The paramount destiny and mission of woman are to fulfil the noble and benign offices of wife and mother. This is the law of the Creator.

Bradwell v. Illinois, 83 U.S. (1 Wall.) 130, 141 (1873) (Bradley, J., concurring). In terms of management and control, if not title, the "individual" upon whom common law property rights were bestowed was the husband, generally to the exclusion of the wife. In a sense, the common law required that property management and control be lodged in individuals and not in couples; single men and women could control property but in the event of marriage, control was to be exercised still by an individual, the husband. As is discussed in § 37.12, the American community property states were not originally much different in this respect. There too, the husband exercised considerable control over the marital property, often to the exclusion of the wife. There was, however, a fundamental difference between the way each system viewed "ownership" of or "title" to marital property. In community property states both husbands and wives were generally considered owners of the property acquired during the marriage.

(n4)Footnote 51. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1386 (1983) (footnotes omitted).

(n5)Footnote 52. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1389 (1983).

(n6)Footnote 53. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1390 (1983).

(n7)Footnote 54. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1391 (1983).

(n8)Footnote 55. Id. at 1361. "Eventually, the idea developed that the best interests of women and society in general would be served by the establishment of some system whereby women could control and convey their own property. To that end, the English courts of equity developed the concept of a wife's separate estate which softened the harsh treatment of married women at common law." Joyce Hens Green, et al., Dissolution of Marriage § 10.02 at 361 (1986).

(n9)Footnote 56. The tenancy by the entirety is considered in more detail in chapter 33 of this treatise.

(n10)Footnote 57. The right of survivorship simply means that as one joint tenant dies, surviving joint tenants take the deceased tenant's share of the joint tenancy, rather than having that share pass to the decedent's heirs or under the decedent's will.

(n11)Footnote 58. It is perhaps more accurate to say that because the common law viewed husband and wife as one legal person, any transfer to a husband and wife would effectively be a transfer to one person.

(n12)Footnote 59. Oval A. Phipps, Tenancy by Entireties, 25 Temp. L.Q. 24 (1951).

(n13)Footnote 60. Coraccio v. Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank, 612 N.E.2d 650 (Mass. 1993).

(n14)Footnote 61. Oval A. Phipps, Tenancy by Entireties, 25 Temp. L.Q. 24, 26 (1951). Students in basic property classes are often a bit mystified when they learn that a joint tenant's right of survivorship can be defeated unilaterally by another joint tenant by a simple conveyance to a third party. Such an event converts a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common. One explanation of this consequence is that one or more of the traditional "four unities" of joint tenancy is destroyed by the conveyance. The students' reaction, however, is probably grounded in some common sense about natural expectations of people and the easy defeasance of survivorship rights under joint tenancy may well be ill-advised law. In this respect, the tenancy by the entireties, with rules against partition and indefeasible survivorship rights may make more sense, or at least more closely coincide with expectations.

(n15)Footnote 62. Sawada v. Endo, 561 P.2d 1291, 1295 (Haw. 1977).

(n16)Footnote 63. Oval A. Phipps, Tenancy by Entireties, 25 Temp. L.Q. 24, 32 (1951). Dean Phipps elaborates by categorizing the states as follows: In the eight original community property states (Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas and Washington) the tenancy was never recognized because it was not consistent with community property; in Connecticut, Nebraska and Ohio, the tenancy was inconsistent with judicial interpretations of the common law; in fifteen states (Alabama, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, West Virginia and Wisconsin) the tenancy was abrogated by the Married Women's Property Acts and, in some cases, other legislation; and in three states (Mississippi, Oklahoma and Utah) the tenancy was treated by statute or by the courts as a joint tenancy.

(n17)Footnote 64. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 193 3d ed. (2000). In an interesting discrepancy, these authors report that Ohio tenancies by the entirety created and recorded prior to April 4, 1985, are preserved by ohio Rev. Code § 5302.21, id. n.3, whereas Dean Phipps listed Ohio as one of the states where tenancy by the entirety never existed. Oval A. Phipps, Tenancy by Entireties, 25 Temp. L.Q. 24, 32 (1951). Hawaii, which was admitted to the union after publication of Dean Phipps's article, is not mentioned among the twenty jurisdictions listed but it too still recognizes the tenancy by the entireties. Sawada v. Endo, 561 P.2d 1291 (Haw. 1977).

(n18)Footnote 65. In Coraccio v. Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank, 612 N.E.2d 650, 654 (Mass. 1993), the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court noted this change:

> In an attempt to equalize the rights of men and women holding property as tenants by the entirety, the Legislature adopted G.L. 209, § 1, which provides, in relevant part: "A husband and wife shall be equally entitled to the rents, products, income or profits and to the control, management and possession of property held by them as tenants by the entirety."

(n19)Footnote 66. Id.

(n20)Footnote 67. Coraccio v. Lowell Five Cents Savings Bank, 612 N.E.2d 650, 654 (Mass. 1993).

(n21)Footnote 68. § 362.470.5 R.S. Mo. 1994.

(n22)Footnote 69. Scott v. Flynn, 946 S.W.2d 248, 251 (Mo. Ct. App. 1997).

(n23)Footnote 70. Scott v. Flynn, 946 S.W.2d 248, 251 (Mo. Ct. App. 1997).

(n24)Footnote 71. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1366 (1983) (citations omitted).

(n25)Footnote 72. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1366, n.27 (1983).

(n26)Footnote 73. Richard H. Chused, Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850, 71 Geo. L.J. 1359, 1366, n.27 (1983).

(n27)Footnote 74. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the DIstribution of Property § 3.02 at 3-3 (1993).

(n28)Footnote 75. J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the DIstribution of Property § 3.02 at 3-3-3-5 (1993).

(n29)Footnote 76. Id. at 3-4. Oldham continues: "At divorce, the wife frequently had no property, no earning capacity, and possibly the custody of minor children. Alimony and child support could be awarded, but collection was difficult, particularly if the husband left the state."

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.07

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.07 The Transition from "Individualism" to "Community" in Common Law Jurisdictions.

[Go To Supp]

The foregoing discussion makes quite clear some of the deficiencies of the early common law as a means of establishing equitable principles of marital property. The title of this section suggests that common law jurisdictions are responding to these deficiencies by moving closer to community property principles of marital property. This is probably indisputable. This does not mean that the differences between the two systems have disappeared, but they are quite certainly shrinking. This is particularly true with respect to disposition of property at death and divorce.

The nature of this evolution is reflected in the most recent version of the Uniform Probate Code and is summarized in the comment to Part 2 of Article II of the Code:

> The partnership theory of marriage, sometimes also called the marital-sharing theory, is stated in various ways. Sometimes it is thought of "as an expression of the presumed intent of husbands and wives to pool their fortunes on an equal basis, share and share alike." M. Glendon, The Transformation of Family Law 131 (1989). Under this approach, the economic rights of each spouse are seen as deriving from an unspoken marital bargain under which the partners agree that each is to enjoy a half interest in the fruits of the marriage, i.e., in the property nominally acquired by and titled in the sole name of either partner during the marriage (other than in property acquired by gift or inheritance). A decedent who disinherits his or her surviving spouse is seen as having reneged on the bargain. Sometimes the theory is expressed in restitutionary terms, a return-of-contribution notion. Under this approach, the law grants each spouse an entitlement to compensation for non-monetary contributions to the marital enterprise, as "a recognition of the activity of one spouse in the home and to compensate not only for this activity but for opportunities lost."
>
> Id.
>
> No matter how the rationale is expressed, it is sometimes thought that the community-property system, including that version of community law promulgated in the Uniform Marital Property Act, recognizes the partnership theory, but that the common law system denies it. In the ongoing marriage, it > is true that the basic principle in the common law (title-based) states is that marital status does not affect the ownership of property. The regime is one of separate property. Each spouse owns all that he or she earns. By contrast, in the community-property states, each spouse acquires an ownership interest in half the property the other earns during the marriage. By granting each spouse upon acquisition an immediate half interest in the earnings of the other, the community-property regimes directly recognize that the couple's enterprise is in essence collaborative.

>
> The common law states, however, also give effect or purport to give effect to the partnership theory when a marriage is dissolved by divorce. If the marriage ends in divorce, a spouse who sacrificed his or her financial-earning opportunities to contribute so-called domestic services to the marital enterprise (such as child-rearing and homemaking) stands to be recompensed. All states now follow the equitable-distribution system upon divorce, under which "broad discretion [is given to] trial courts to assign to either spouse property acquired during the marriage, irrespective of title, taking into account the circumstances of the particular case and recognizing the value of the contributions of a nonworking spouse or homemaker to the acquisition of that property. Simply stated, the system of equitable distribution views marriage as essentially a shared enterprise or joint undertaking in the nature of a partnership to which both spouses contribute -- directly and indirectly, financially and nonfinancially -- the fruits of which are distributable at divorce." J. Gregory, The Law of Equitable Distribution P 1.03, at p. 1-6 (1989). n77

In this section we explore briefly the modern "common law" of marital property in several specific areas: (1) Ownership during marriage; (2) Disposition of marital property at death in modern common law jurisdictions; and (3) Disposition of marital property at divorce in modern common law jurisdictions.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: common law w/50 marital w/1 property w/30 partnership w/1 theory

§ 37.07(a) Married Women's Property Acts and Marital Property Ownership During Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions.

Early attempts to remedy the legal abyss in which married women found themselves occurred in the mid-1800's. It should be no surprise, however, that patterns of sexism and paternalism do not readily and easily subside or disappear. The process of legislation and interpretation sometimes works slowly in remedying ills, and even 150 years later, the attempt to eliminate gender discrimination on a broad scale has not yet fully succeeded. Even so, significant progress has been made.

Early statutes in the states are typically and quite directly referred to as "Married Women's Property Acts." Their purpose was quite simply the elimination of the common law disabilities of married women. Professor Clark summarizes the terms and ultimate effect of these acts as follows:

> Broadly speaking then, the Married Women's Property Acts have given the married woman the right to acquire, own and transfer all kinds of property, to make contracts, to engage in business or be employed and keep her own earnings, and to sue or be sued. She may also make a will, may testify in civil or criminal suits ... and she is fully responsible for her own criminal and tortious conduct. n78

Married Women's Property Acts did not, of course, address all of the gender inequality in American society and in the common law system of marital property. A married woman's legal right to acquire and own property is of less consequence than it might be, because the earning power of women may still lag behind that of men, and in common law states, a husband's income is owned solely by the husband. Even so, the Acts were a very important step, giving the married woman at least the right to own property she owned before the marriage and property she acquires during the marriage.

In a sense, little more need be said about common law marital property during the marriage. Once the inequalities of the common law are rectified, we are still back to individual ownership by the spouses during the marriage; the effects of the marriage on property, during the marriage, are minimal. A few additional points are worth mentioning.

One form of common law marital property already discussed is tenancy by the entirety. n79 As noted in § 37.06(a), this form of marital ownership is still in force in a number of states, but it is by no means comparable to community property.

Transfers between spouses are, of course, permitted. It is often said, however, that there is a confidential relationship between wife and husband, and that relationship can lead to careful scrutiny of transactions between spouses. n80

It is in the area of ownership during the marriage that the common law states and the community property states still have the most fundamental differences. By its very nature, the common law addresses problems as they arise, and those jurisdictions have accordingly turned their attention primarily to issues relating to breakup of a marriage through either divorce or death. n81 Changes have certainly occurred in common law marital property during the marriage but the basic premise remains individual, rather than shared, ownership during the marriage. Whereas the common law originally recognized only one married individual -- the husband -- as the repository of marital property for many purposes, modern law in common law states recognizes both the husband and wife. This can be contrasted with community property systems in which property earned and accumulated during the marriage is generally not "hers" or "his" but "theirs." Classifying property in this way essentially addresses some of the fairness issues encountered with common law marital property, but does so with a different concept of ownership during the marriage.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: common law w/50 married women's property acts w/30 ownership w/5 property

§ 37.07(b) The Uniform Probate Code and Marital Property at Death in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions. n82

One apparent deficiency in the common law of marital property concerns disposition of marital property at the death of one of the spouses. With the movement to gender equality, both spouses have relatively full testamentary power in modern common law jurisdictions. Keep in mind, however, the impact of individual ownership during the marriage on the meaning of that power. Once again, in a single wage-earner family, title may give one spouse almost exclusive testamentary control over the property of the marriage. Again, contrast this with the community property system, in which title to all earnings during the marriage is shared equally by the spouses at the outset.

Protection of families has always been a high priority for American policymakers, and this has been reflected in many ways in our law, including the treatment of marital property at the death of one spouse. The common law response to the problems created by the individual title model of marital property has been briefly noted at § 37.06(b). That response has been judged not to provide sufficient protection for surviving spouses.

One's spouse is now routinely an heir under laws of intestate succession. The surviving spouse will receive a substantial share of the decedent spouse's estate if the decedent did not have an effective will. If a will purports to "disinherit" a spouse, however, additional protection is necessary. Most states have abolished common law dower and curtesy and have replaced them with a statutory "forced share" or "elective share" in the decedent spouse's estate in favor of the surviving spouse. These statutes have the same basic objective as dower and curtesy but are generally regarded as more effective in carrying out policies of family protection. The statutes are designed to prevent a wife or husband from totally "disinheriting" an unwilling spouse and to provide financial support for the surviving spouse in a realistic and equitable way. n83 Dower accomplished the first, less ambitious objective, at least in theory, but was not as effective in carrying out the second.

The following statute is an example of a modern elective share statute:

> 1. When a married person dies testate as to any part of his estate, a right of election is given to the surviving spouse solely under the limitations and conditions herein stated:
>
> (1) The surviving spouse, upon election to take against the will, shall receive in addition to exempt property and the allowance under section 474.260 one-half of the estate, subject to the payment of claims, if there are no lineal descendants of the testator; or, if there are lineal descendants of the testator, the surviving spouse shall receive one-third of the estate subject to the payment of claims;
>
> (2) When a surviving spouse elects to take against the will he shall be deemed to take by descent, as a modified share, such part of the estate as comes to him under the provisions of this section, and shall take nothing under the will;
>
> (3) Whenever there is an effective election to take against a will which provides for benefits to accrue upon the death of the surviving spouse, the election has the same effect as to the benefits as if the surviving spouse had predeceased the testator, unless the will otherwise provides. n84

Dower was limited in several significant ways. The surviving spouse was entitled only to a life estate, and then only in real property in which the decedent spouse owned an inheritable interest during the marriage. In many cases, such an interest would provide little protection. Statutes such as that just quoted address this problem by expanding the surviving spouse's share temporally (making it a fee simple rather than a life estate) and by extending it to reach personal as well as real property.

The statutory shares have no doubt been an improvement over dower. n85 Even so, because of a sense that community property concepts provide a more equitable solution to disposition of marital property at the death of one spouse, common law jurisdictions may yet move further in the direction of community property states. This trend was discussed at the beginning of this section. Its potential influence on disposition of marital property at death is evident in the following additional passage from the comment at the beginning of Part 2 of the revised version of Article II of the Uniform Probate Code:

> The main purpose of the revisions is to bring elective-share law into line with the contemporary view of marriage as an economic partnership. The economic partnership theory of marriage is already implemented under the equitable-distribution system applied in both the common law and community-property states when a marriage ends in divorce. When a marriage ends in death, that theory is also already implemented under the community-property system and under the system promulgated in the Uniform Marital Property Act. In the common law states, however, elective-share law has not caught up to the partnership theory of marriage.
>
> The general effect of implementing the partnership theory in elective-share law is to increase the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were disproportionately titled in the decedent's name; and to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were more or less equally titled or disproportionately titled in the surviving spouse's name. n86

Under the specific provisions of the Uniform Probate Code, the elective share is designed to approximate the natural course of events in a community property jurisdiction. This is accomplished by establishing an elective share that is "equal to the value of the elective-share percentage of the augmented estate, determined by the length of time the spouse and the decedent were married to each other," n87 in accordance with a graduated scale provided in the statute and reproduced here:

If the decedent and the spouse were married to each other:	The elective-share percentage is:
Less than 1 year.....	Supplemental Amount Only.
1 year but less than 2 years	3% of the augmented estate.
2 years but less than 3 years	6% of the augmented estate.
3 years but less than 4 years.....	9% of the augmented estate.
4 years but less than 5 years.....	12% of the augmented estate.
5 years but less than 6 years.....	15% of the augmented estate.
6 years but less than 7 years.....	18% of the augmented estate.
7 years but less than 8 years.....	21% of the augmented estate.
8 years but less than 9 years.....	24% of the augmented estate.
9 years but less than 10 years.....	27% of the augmented estate.
10 years but less than 11 years.....	30% of the augmented estate.
11 years but less than 12 years.....	34% of the augmented estate.
12 years but less than 13 years.....	38% of the augmented estate.
13 years but less than 14 years.....	42% of the augmented estate.
14 years but less than 15 years.....	46% of the augmented estate.
15 years or more.....	50% of the augmented estate. n88

This graduated schedule defining the elective share of a surviving spouse in the decedent spouse's estate in effect resembles the natural course of events in community property states. The relative amount of community property naturally increases as the duration of the marriage increases. The property brought into a marriage in a community property state is, by definition, separate property. n89 As the parties remain married year after year, the percentage of their assets that would be classified as community property gradually increases. Assuming that 100% of a couple's assets are community property at the death of the first to die, 50% of those assets would simply not be a part of the decedent's estate but rather would be owned by the surviving spouse. In this respect, the Uniform Probate Code elective share provision would replicate the effect of community property. Whether these provisions of the Uniform Probate Code represent a trend that will make its way into the law of many states is yet to be seen. The evolution of marital property law in the area of divorce, discussed in § 37.07(c), suggests that modifications similar to those proposed in the Uniform Probate Code may eventually be adopted.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: common law w/50 marital w/1 property w/30 (death or die! or uniform probate code)

§ 37.07(c) Equitable Distribution Upon Dissolution of Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions.

Common law states traditionally "distributed assets upon divorce based on title." n90 Under that practice, if there is only one "working" spouse, and the marriage dissolves, the "non-working" spouse could be left penniless. In this fashion, the combination of individual ownership under the common law and a work-world dominated by men might lead to significant inequities for married women upon divorce.

A majority of policymakers in common law property states have almost uniformly concluded that the common law title system does not provide an appropriate basis for division of property upon divorce. The basic idea that has displaced the original common law is essentially very simple: At dissolution of a marriage, n91 property of the spouses, or at least a substantial part of it, should be equitably divided between the spouses. n92 "Title," in other words, should not control distribution of all property of spouses in the event of divorce. n93

"Equitable distribution has its historical roots in the community property law of Mexico, France, and Spain." n94 Widespread adoption of "equitable distribution" in common law property states suggests that the common law property states have concluded that community property is in some ways superior to the common law as a system of marital property ownership. In community property states, on the other hand, title to property earned during the marriage is shared by wife and husband, regardless of which spouse "earned" the property. This more or less assures an equitable distribution of title to marital assets at any time during the marriage. Inherent in that system is recognition of the fact that property earned during marriage is in reality the product of both spouses. n95

The influence of community property on equitable distribution in the common law property states is evident in the common law concept of "marital property." In a few states, courts are given authority to divide equitably all of either or both spouses' property. n96 In most states, however, the property subject to equitable distribution, often referred to as marital property, is essentially equivalent to community property. The line drawn is generally the same as the line between community and separate property. All assets acquired before marriage and assets acquired by gift, devise or inheritance ("separate property" in community property states) during marriage, are generally excluded from equitable division and must be allotted to the appropriate "owner." n97 In a few states, this same general principle applies but courts are given authority under some circumstances to divide equitably the "separate property" as well as the marital property. n98

Many equitable distribution statutes contain guidelines or factors the courts are to consider in exercising their discretion. n99 There is a good amount of common ground among the states and the guidelines to be considered include the following:

Age

Health

Station in life

Occupation

Amount of income

Vocational skills

Needs

Provisions for custody of children

Contribution, including services as homemaker, in acquisition and protection of assets

Dissipation of property

Income tax consequences

Cause for dissolution

Debts

Obligations and rights from prior marriage

Contribution of one to the education or earning power of the other

Antenuptial contracts

Family ties and obligations

Separate property retirement rights

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: common law w/50 divorce! w/30 equit! w/1 distribution or divide!

§ 37.07(d) The Uniform Marital Property Act.

We have seen the development from the relatively crude protections provided by dower and curtesy to more thorough statutory shares designed to recognize the fact that marriage is like a partnership and to protect more fully the property interests of one spouse upon the death of the other. The common law jurisdictions have also enthusiastically adopted a principle of equitable distribution of property when a breakup of marriage occurs. Thus, in two of the situations where marital property law matters most, the common law has, in effect, moved toward the long-established traditions of community property. In retrospect, it is a bit ironic that the adverse effects of individual ownership under the common law have been addressed with relatively little attention to the fundamental reasons for those effects. In a sense, this development is no doubt due to the case by case course of the common law.

In noting the transition from common law individualism to the sharing ideal, we do not necessarily suggest that community property will take over as the dominant American system of marital property. In defining marital property rights during the marriage, the common law, individualist tradition of property ownership is firmly entrenched in most states. Nevertheless, in 1983, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws approved a Uniform Marital Property Act which would have the states incorporate the sharing principle of community property into property ownership during marriage as well as when marriage ends. Wisconsin has enacted a form of this Act. It does not seem likely that many other states will follow Wisconsin's example in the near future.

Because the Commissioners have set forth so well the argument for adoption of the Uniform Marital Property Act, we include here a lengthy excerpt from the Act's Prefatory Note:

> The institution of property is the embodiment of accidents, events, and the wisdom of the past. It is before us as clay into which we can introduce the coloration and configuration representing our wisdom. How great, how useful this new ingredient may be will largely determine the future happiness, and perhaps the continued existence of our society. Powell, The Law of Real Property (Rohan 4th ed. 1977).
>
> Marriages have beginnings and endings. For their participants, the period between these points is the marriage. This Act is a property law. It functions to recognize the respective contributions made by mean [sic] and women during a marriage. It discharges that function by raising those contributions to the level of defined, shared and enforceable property rights at the time the contributions are made.

The challenge to create such a framework is not new. Basic differences in approaches to marital economics go back for many centuries. See Charles Donahue, Jr., What Causes Fundamental Legal Ideas? Marital Property in England and France in the Thirteenth Century, 78 Mich. L. Rev. 59 (1979); Judith T. Younger, Marital Regimes: A Story of Compromise and Demoralization, Together with Criticism and Suggestions for Reform, 67 Cornell L. Rev. 45 (1981). In modern times the challenge was well articulated twenty years ago by the Report of the Committee on Civil and Political Rights to the President's Commission on the Status of Women. In 1963 that Report said:

Marriage is a partnership to which each spouse makes a different but equally important contribution. This fact has become increasingly recognized in the realities of American family living. While the laws of other countries have reflected this trend, family laws in the United States have lagged behind. Accordingly, the Committee concludes that during marriage each spouse should have a legally defined and substantial right in the earnings of the other spouse and in the real and personal property acquired as a result of such earnings, as well as in the management of such earnings and property. Such right should survive the marriage and be legally recognized in the event of its termination by annulment, divorce, or death. This policy should be appropriately implemented by legislation which would safeguard either spouse against improper alienation of property by the other.

In the twenty years after those words much has changed regarding the institution of marriage, even though the challenge has not been fully met.

A prime example is the very demography of marriage and its terminal events. In 1963, 66.31% of all terminated marriages ended by death and 33.69% by divorce. By 1979 only 42.77% terminated by death, while 57.23% ended by dissolution. For half a decade the ratio of marriages to dissolution has been about two to one. The latest figures were 2,438,000 marriages and 1,219,000 divorces in 1981. The two to one ratio contrasts with 1930, when there were six marriages to every dissolution.

Statistics are not the only evidence of dramatic change. Statehouses have reflected it. Beginning with California at the end of the 60's and promulgation of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act in the early 70's, no-fault divorce has swept the statute books. In 1983 Illinois and South Dakota stand alone in adhering to fault-based divorce, and efforts to change to no-fault continue in Illinois. "Equitable distribution" of property became the handmaiden of no-fault divorce in the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act and in most other reforms. Forty-one traditional common law jurisdictions now use some form of property division as a principal means of resolving economic dilemmas on dissolution. Adding the eight community property jurisdictions in which such a division is an inherent aspect of spousal property rights yields a total of 49. The one state missing on the property division roster is Mississippi. These property division developments address and typically adopt sharing concepts and bring many common law jurisdictions close to a deferred community property approach to divorce. Elizabeth A. Cheadle, The Development of Sharing Principles in Common Law Marital Property States, 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1269 (1981); See also Younger, op. cit., supra.

The ferment of change has not been limited to dissolution. The Uniform Probate Code was promulgated in 1969. Fourteen states are now listed as Code states or as substantially conforming states. Article II of the Code contains the concept of an augmented estate. It borrows heavily from New York's 1966 version of the idea. It is an advance on traditional forced-share procedures, operating by the creation of a larger universe of property against which a spousal right of election is exercisable. It accomplishes this by penetrating the veil of title and other techniques which have developed to insulate assets from the reach of forced-share statutes. In the official comment to the Code the augmented estate provisions are described as preventing arrangements by the owner of wealth which would transmit property to others than a surviving spouse by means other than probate for the deliberate purpose of defeating the rights of a surviving spouse.

It is worth noting that the Code's provisions, as well as conventional forced-share provisions in common law states, leave a gap. They transform assets into a sharing mode in a meaningful way only when the "have-not" spouse survives. If the sequence of death is the opposite, the have-not spouse has no power to dispose of assets over which he or she has no title in any common law jurisdiction.

The long-arm augmented estate provisions of the Uniform Probate Code may not go far enough to accommodate the perception of most laymen. A significant empirical study published in 1978 indicates a widespread public preference for a distribution of an entire intestate estate to a surviving spouse, whether or not there are surviving children. Fellows et al., Public Attitudes About Distribution at Death and Intestate Succession Laws in the United States, 1978 Am. B. Found. Research J. 319.

Obviously the "everything to each other" mode is confined to dispositions at death. An imposing body of case law testifies to a paradigm shift in this view when the question of "Who should get what and when?" is asked at a dissolution! And it is the equitable distribution court's demanding role in the judicial process to monitor and referee the ensuing contests in the divorce courts. Burgeoning advance sheets clearly indicate just how difficult the referee's job is when it must be done well over a million times a year!

In 1981 yet another shift was added to the catalog of change. After years of debate, tax-free interspousal transfers entered the stage under the auspices of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. Wall Street Journal columnist Vermont Royster furnished a characteristically succinct summary of it all:

The marriage ceremony may say you two are now one and even include that phrase about with all my worldly goods I thee endow. The Internal Revenue Service has always taken a different view. It's wanted its share.

... wait until January 1, 1982, and ... after that magic date you can share with your spouse as much as you please of those worldly goods ... without so much as a by-your-leave from the federal tax man. In 1982 no more gift and estate taxes between spouses." Wall St. J., Sept. 2, 1981.

Heavy economic responsibilities of married couples and methods of coping with them point to yet another trendline of the last few decades. It is that of the two-worker households in which sharing the burden of producing family income is becoming routine. In more than half of American marriages with two spouses present there is a working wife and the number is growing. When there are children, the ratio is even higher. In more than two-thirds of current upper income marriages ($24,000 or more) there are two wage earners. Sharing of responsibility for wages from outside the home is altering traditional spousal roles and particularly economic roles, rights, and responsibilities.

Thus the stage is set by substantial social and legislative change in the duration of marriages and in the economics of the termination of marriages by dissolution and death.

The Uniform Marital Property Act makes its appearance on that stage to offer a means of establishing present shared property rights of spouses during the marriage. This approach is bottomed on two propositions. The first is creation of an immediate sharing mode of ownership. The second proposition is that the sharing mode during marriage is an ownership right already in existence at the end of a marriage. Thus recognition and perfection of shared and vested ownership rights in marital property are in place at divorce or death. They do not have to come to fruition as a result of a court-ordained and possibly adversary "division" or by a statutorily-sanctioned "transfer."

Is the Uniform Marital Property Act a panacea for the malaise of marriage? Will it lower the divorce rate? Save the family? Eliminate marital violence? Be fully comprehensible? Be welcomed by all? Lower the cost of the family house? Create better parents? Solve child abuse? Avoid probate? Lower the cost of death or divorce?

Perhaps some but certainly not all of the above. If it does affect any of those considerations, it will take time and the process will be subtle. The disintegrating forces operating on marriages and families are many and complex. It would be a bold claim to suggest that any legislation could fully identify and rectify the problems in such an area. But the obvious and apparent existence of problems in the economic area of marriage certainly justifies an effort to identify and rectify them. The Uniform Marital Property Act is precisely such an effort. n100

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: uniform marital property act

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 77. Unif. Prob. Code Rev. Art. II, Pt. 2, cmt. 8 U.L.A. 86-87.

(n2)Footnote 78. Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States 290 (2d student ed. 1988) (footnotes omitted). Professor Clark includes in a footnote a comprehensive list of Married Women's Property Acts.

(n3)Footnote 79. See § 37.06(a), supra. Tenancy by the entirety is discussed in more detail in chapter 33 of this treatise.

(n4)Footnote 80. See § 37.12(b), infra, for discussion of duties between spouses in community property states. Representative of cases in common law states are Erdmann v. Erdmann, 261 P.2d 367 (Mont. 1953), O'Quin v. O'Quin, 230 S.W.2d 16 (Ark. 1950); Shenk v. Shenk, 571 S.E.2d 896 (Va. App. 2002) (a written assignment executed by husband and wife constituted a marital agreement and converted marital property into the wife's separate property). In re Marriage of Gordon, 540 N.W.2d 289 (Iowa App. 1995) (lot purchased with funds inherited by husband was awarded to wife, along with marital home); Schmidlapp v. Schmidlapp, 632 N.Y.S.2d 593 (1995) (unimproved parcel of land had changed from wife's separate property to marital property); Stanley v. Stanley, 454 S.E.2d 701 (N.C. App. 1995) (quitclaim deed for marital property land did not withdraw that property from the marital estate); Harrison v. Harrison, 912 S.W.2d 124 (Tenn. 1996) (property's increase in value was not marital property because the wife had not substantially contributed to the preservation and depreciation of the property); Beard v. Beard, 758 N.E.2d 1019 (Ind. Ct. App. 2001) (parcels of land husband transferred to wife prior to divorce were considered marital property); Sampson v. Sampson, 14 P.3d 272 (Alaska 2000) (inherited property may be conveyed to the marital estate when that is the intent of the owner and conduct demonstrates that intent).

(n5)Footnote 81. See § 37.07(b) and § 37.07(c) for discussion of these issues.

(n6)Footnote 82. This subject is covered in more detail in chapters 88 and 89 of this treatise. The purpose of this brief treatment is simply to place the subject in the context of marital property.

(n7)Footnote 83. Professor Emery has suggested that jurisdictions use two policy justifications for their protective elective share provisions:

First, community property states treat the marriage as a partnership and recognize that there is often a division of labor between the husband and wife... . These jurisdictions formally recognize the contribution of both spouses by treating the income of either partner as property of the partnership, owned equally by husband and wife.

The second justification is based upon the view that the spouse that participates in the income-producing labor has a duty to support the family. Jurisdictions following this theory have traditionally determined that this obligation of support should survive the termination of the marriage by death of the spouse as well as by divorce.

Alfred C. Emery, The Utah Uniform Probate Code -- Protection of the Surviving Spouse -- The Elective Share, 1976 Utah L. Rev. 771, 772. See also Aragon v. Estate of Snyder, 715 A.2d 1045, 1047 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1998) (object of the elective share statute is the prohibition of the disinheriting of a spouse in need of continuous support); In re Estate of Zimmerman, 579 N.W.2d 591, 595 (N.D. 1998), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 633 N.W. 2d 594 (N.D. 2001) (the goal of an elective share of the augmented estate is to protect the surviving spouse from deprivation or destitution by disinheritance); In re Brand, 251 B.R. 912 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2000) (elective share is for express purpose of caring for surviving spouse and not to augment estate for benefit of heirs); In re Gervais, 770 A.2d 877 (R.I. 2001) (purpose of elective share statute was to remedy the inadequate protection afforded by dower); Sheldon v. Sheldon, 987 P.2d 1229 (Or. Ct. App. 1999) (statutory right to elective share expresses important public policy that cannot be lightly disregarded).

(n8)Footnote 84. Mo. Ann. Stat. § 474.160 (Vernon 1992).

(n9)Footnote 85. Deutsch v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, T.C. Memo 1997-470 (U.S. Tax Court 1997) (comparing Florida's elective share statute to the dower statute it replaced; spouse's elective share held to be tax exempt, just as dower had been); United States v. Real Property located at 221 Dana Ave., Hyde Park, MA, 239 F.2d 78 (1st Cir. 2001) (a dower interest, which is a life estate, would in most cases be worth less than the elective share, which is in fee simple).

(n10)Footnote 86. Unif. Prob. Code Rev. Art. II, Part 2, cmt. 8 U.L.A. 86.

(n11)Footnote 87. Id. § 2-201. See also In re Estate of Pfeiffer, 658 N.W.2d 14 (Neb. 2003) (a widow legally separated from the decedent at the time of his death still qualifies for the elective share). But see Boetsma v. Boetsma, 768 N.E.2d 1016 (Ind. App. 2002) (the antenuptial agreement waived the surviving spouse's right to the elective share).

(n12)Footnote 88. Id. § 2-201. The definition of "augmented estate" under this statute is, of course, of considerable significance. The augmented estate consists of (1) the value of the decedent's probate estate, after funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances and exemptions, and enforceable claims; (2) the value of the decedent's reclaimable estate (defined below); (3) the value of property to which the surviving spouse succeeds by reason of the decedent's death, other than by homestead allowance, exempt property, family allowance, and testate or intestate succession; and (4) the value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death, reduced by enforceable claims, plus the value of amounts that would have been includible in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate had the spouse predeceased the decedent. Id. § 2-202(b). The "reclaimable estate" includes several categories of property including (a) property to the extent of decedent's interest held by the decedent and any other person, with right of survivorship; (b) proceeds of insurance on the life of, and controlled by, the decedent payable to any person other than the decedent's surviving spouse; and (c) property transferred in specified ways or circumstances by the decedent to any person other than a bona fide purchaser at any time during the marriage. The purpose of this formula is "to implement a partnership or marital-sharing theory." Id. § 2-202 cmt. See also In re Estate of Jenkins, 97 S.W.3d 126 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2003) (the new statutory changing-fraction method instead of fixed-fraction method used to calculate the elective share).

(n13)Footnote 89. Community property from a former marriage is not always partitioned at the dissolution of the marriage. Community property nevertheless ceases at the termination of the marriage and the interests of the former spouses in such cases would no longer be community property (of the first marriage) but separate property of each owned as tenants in common.

(n14)Footnote 90. Joyce Hens Green, et al., Dissolution of Marriage § 10.07 at 371 (1986).

(n15)Footnote 91. Equitable distribution depends upon the dissolution of a valid, existing marriage. In Farah v. Farah, 429 S.E.2d 626 (Va. App. 1993) an attempt to dissolve a marriage and equitably distribute the property owned by the parties failed because the court determined that there was no lawful marriage in the first place. Virginia follows the usual rule that a marriage valid where celebrated will be valid in Virginia. In this case the ceremony was performed under Islamic or Pakistani customs but the "marriage" occurred in England, and under English law was not valid.

(n16)Footnote 92. Basic questions concerning the definition of "property" still arise. A Connecticut court recently discussed "whether ... irrevocable vested remainders conditioned on survival are subject to the court's consideration in determining property and alimony awards in an action for dissolution." Carlisle v. Carlisle, No. D.N. FA93 0132653S, 1994 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2662. The court concluded that they are.

(n17)Footnote 93. Professor Oldham states: "no 'common law' state still applies a pure 'title' approach to property division at divorce. All of these states now utilize some version of an 'equitable distribution' approach." J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 3.01 at 3-2 (1993).

(n18)Footnote 94. Gerald D. Mclellan, Equitable Distribution Law and Practice 3 (1985). McLellan's book is a useful research tool on equitable distribution. McLellan groups jurisdictions according to whether they have equitable distribution statutes; whether all property is treated as "marital property" or whether some property is excluded; and whether guidelines are enumerated for the court to consider. Id. at 87-91. An Appendix summarizing the law in each state is also included. Id. at 224-284.

(n19)Footnote 95. See § 37.08, infra. Owen v. Owen, 798 So. 2d 394 (Miss. 2001) (division of marital property focussing only on the husband's economic factors was improper); King v. King, 760 So. 2d 830 (Miss. 2000) (the wife's noneconomic contributions must be considered in distributing marital property); Khajanchi v. Khajanchi, 537 S.E.2d 845 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000) (both spouses contribute economically to marriage whether directly by employment or indirectly by providing homemaker services).

(n20)Footnote 96. Ind. Code Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11; Kan. Stat. Ann. ch. 60 1610(b)(1); Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 208 § 34; Mont. Code Ann. § 40-4-202(1).

(n21)Footnote 97. Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-315; Del. Code Ann. tit. 13, § 1513(b); D.C. CodE Ann. § 16-910(a); Ky. Rev. Stat. § 403.190(2); Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 3-6A-01; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 452.330(1); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:34-23; N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law §§ 236(B)(1)(d) & 236(B)(5)(b); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 50-20(d); 23 Pa. Const. Stat. Ann. § 3323(a); Tenn. Code Ann. § 36-4-121(b); Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.3(1). Pelletier v. Pelletier, 662 N.Y.S.2d 64 (S. Ct. App. Div. 1997) (property transferred to wife by a cousin constituted a gift and was therefore separate property; real estate purchase with wife's separate property was not subject to equitable distribution); Gross v. Gross, 469 S.E.2d 636 (W. Va. 1996) (equitable distribution is a three-step process involving classifying, valuing, and dividing the marital property).

(n22)Footnote 98. Ala. Code § 30-2-51 (if property is used regularly during the marriage for the common benefit of the spouses); Iowa Code Ann. § 598.21(2) (if court finds refusal to do so would be inequitable); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 19, § 722-A(2) (if parties request division); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 518.58, Subd. 2 (up to one-half can be distributed if provision for one is so inadequate that unfair hardship would otherwise result); Dawson-Austin v. Austin, 920 S.W.2d 776 (Tex. App. 1996) (unequal division of community property was just and right, as long as it was equitable and circumstances justified disproportionate division); Christian v. Christian, 637 N.W.2d 377 (S.D. 2001) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding husband credit for only 280 out of 320 acres of farmland he inherited).

(n23)Footnote 99. Ala. Code § 30-2-51; Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-315; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 14-10-113(1); Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46(b)-81(a); Del. Code Ann. tit. 13, § 1513(a) & (c); D.C. Code Ann. § 16-910(b); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 580-47(a); 750 ILCS 5/503; Ind. Code Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11; Iowa Code Ann. § 598.28; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1610(b)(1) (1992); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 403.190(1); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 19, § 722-A(1); Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. §

3-6A-05(b) (1993); Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 208, § 34; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 518.58 (1993); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 452.330(1); Mont. Code Ann. § 40-4-202(1); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 42-373; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 50-20(c); Or. Rev. Stat. § 107.105(1)(f); 23 Pa. Const. Stat. Ann. § 3323(d); R.I. Gen. Laws § 15-5-16.1; Tenn. Code Ann. § 36-4-121(a) & (c); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, § 751; Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.3(D) (1993); Wyo. Stat. § 20-2-114; Guida v. Guida, 816 So. 2d 717 (Flor. App. 2002) (equitable distribution has to be supported by substantial competent evidence). See also In re Petition of Fenzau, 53 P.3d 43 (Mont. 2002) (equitable distribution can account for medical and financial needs of the spouse which result from the other spouse's physical, mental, or emotional abuse during the marriage); Garces v. Garces, 704 So. 2d 1106 (Fla. App. 1998) (citing Fla. Stat. ch. 61.08(2), listing factors such as standard of living during the marriage, duration of the marriage, age, physical and emotional condition, services and career building contributed to the marriage, and other factors); Quinn v. Quinn, 1997 Va. App. LEXIS 573 (Va. App. 1997) (upholding trial court's discretionary application of statutory factors); Moore v. Moore, No. 0470-97-4, 1997 Va. App. LEXIS 576 (Va. App. 1997) (trial court's equitable distribution of marital property is not set aside unless clearly wrong or the court misapplied or failed to consider statutory guidelines). See also Barker v. Barker, 500 S.E.2d 240, 245 (Va. Ct. App. 1998) (trial court properly considered such factors as age, expenses, distribution of assets, and earning capacity of parties in determining equitable distribution award); In re Marriage of Wendell, 581 N.W.2d 197, 199 (Iowa Ct. App. 1998) (in considering accumulations to premarital assets for purposes of equitable distribution, court does not limit its focus to parties' direct contributions to increase, but rather considers the contributions of each party to the overall marriage); In re Marriage of Carter, 740 N.E.2d 82 (Ill. App. 2000) (equitable distribution of marital assets required to be in just proportions); Tibbetts v. Tibbetts, 762 A.2d 937 (Me. 2000) (marital property to be divided in just proportions); Atkinson v. Atkinson, 32 S.W.3d 41 (Ark. App. 2000) (unequal distribution of marital property was justified); Adams v. Adams, 778 So. 2d 825 (Ala. Civ. App. 2000) (awarding wife 16% of marital property was not equitable).

(n24)Footnote 100. Unif. Marital Property Act prefatory note, 9A U.L.A. 97.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.08

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.08 Defining Marital Property in Community Property States.

[Go To Supp]

§ 37.08(a) The Rationale for "Separate" and "Community."

This writer has resided as a married person in five different states, three common law states and two community property states. As we have moved from state to state, the legal system of marital property in each state has had little apparent impact on our day-to-day lives. The reason for this is probably obvious, and the reader has presumably concluded that my spouse and I were never divorced, that both of us are still living, and possibly that my spouse and I own no property of any consequence, or at least have engaged in a minimal number of property transactions. All of these conclusions are accurate. If our experience is typical of those married couples who have never divorced and are still living, it is probably safe to say that such couples (even many of those with property) are not affected very much by marital property law during the marriage. Having said that, we hasten to add that at some point in virtually every marriage, years and even decades of property transactions, and the marital property law governing them, will become very important. And in many marriages, issues of classification will assume great significance with some frequency. Marital property classification in community property states is important when spouses purchase property, when a creditor extends credit, when a couple is considering marriage, when dissolution of marriage is considered, and when a spouse dies. Even though classification of marital property is not always an apparent issue, it is always an important issue in the legal structure of community property states.

A central feature of the civil law tradition of marital property is the need to classify property of married persons as either "separate" or "community." Under the common law, with its individualist approach to property ownership, this problem does not arise, although other problems of classification may exist.

As to assets acquired during marriage, the basic distinction between separate and community property can be effectively understood through an exploration of terms used to characterize the two: Separate property is that which is acquired by either spouse through "lucrative title," whereas community property is that which is acquired by "onerous title." In this context, lucrative means acquired without a valuable consideration or exchange and onerous means done or given for some equivalent in exchange.

According to the law in community property states, a married couple is generally one for purposes of property ownership--a community. The efforts of each spouse are in fact community efforts and not really individual efforts. The rewards each receives for those efforts -- compensation for work, for example ("onerous" activity) -- is accordingly community property. If, on the other hand, a married person receives a gratuity -- a benefit with no exchange or effort on her part, i.e., "lucrative" title, such as a gift -- no community effort is expended and the title is separate. These simple concepts provide the basis for understanding much of the classification process in community property states. The simplicity is, of course, sometimes obscured, but onerous and lucrative title are helpful guidelines.

§ 37.08(b) Statutory Definitions.

The statutes of community property states, and the Uniform Marital Property Act, contain statements of this distinction between separate and community property. As we shall see, some of these provisions are deceptively simple. In any event, the statutory definitions are a good starting place in defining community property and separate property and they are set forth below, for the time being without commentary. We shall then explore some of the details of property classification. It is also worth noting at this point that much of the law of marital property in community property states is statutory, and we shall review many of those statutes in subsequent sections of this chapter. In line with common law tradition, in most community property states, many details were originally left for courts to sort out, but in recent years legislatures have codified much of the law. And in Wisconsin, the only recent convert to community property, many details were incorporated into the legislation in the first instance.

The statutory definitions are quite consistent with one another and conform to the distinction between lucrative and onerous title. Assets acquired during marriage are community property unless they are acquired by gift, last will or descent. Assets acquired by single persons and those acquired by married persons through gift, will or descent, are separate property.

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann.

§ 25-211:

All property acquired by either husband or wife during the marriage, except that which is acquired by gift, devise or descent, is the community property of the husband and wife.

§ 25-213 :

All property, real and personal, of each spouse, owned by such spouse before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, and also the increase, rents, issues and profits thereof, is the separate property of such spouse.

Cal. Fam. Code Ann. n101

§ 760:

Except as otherwise provided by statute, all property, real or personal, wherever situated, acquired by a married person during the marriage while domiciled in this state is community property.

§ 770:

(a) Separate property of a married person includes all of the following:

(1) All property owned by the person before marriage.

(2) All property acquired by the person after marriage by gift, bequest, devise, or descent.

(3) The rents, issues, and profits of the property described in this section.

Idaho Code

§ 32-903 :

All property of either the husband or the wife owned by him or her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by either by [sic] gift, bequest, devise or descent, or that which either he or she shall acquire with the proceeds of his or her separate property, by way of moneys or other property, shall remain his or her sole and separate property.

§ 32-906:

(1) All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife is community property. The income of all property, separate or community, is community property unless the conveyance by which it is acquired provides or both spouses, by written agreement specifically so providing, declare that all or specifically designated property and the income from all or the specifically designated property shall be the separate property of one of the spouses or the income from all or specifically designated separate property be the separate property of the spouse to whom the property belongs... .

La. Civ. Code Ann.

Art. 2325 :

A matrimonial regime is a system of principles and rules governing the ownership and management of the property of married persons as between themselves and toward third persons.

Art. 2326:

A matrimonial regime may be legal, contractual, or partly legal and partly contractual.

Art. 2327 :

The legal regime is the community of acquest and gains established in Chapter 2 of this Title. [Articles 2334-2369]

Art. 2335 :

Property of married persons is either community or separate, except as provided in Article 2341.1.

Art. 2338 :

The community property comprises: property acquired during the existence of the legal regime through the effort, skill, or industry of either spouse; property acquired with community things or with community and separate things, unless classified as separate property under Article 2341; property donated to the spouses jointly; natural and civil fruits of community property; damages awarded for loss or injury to a thing belonging to the community; and all other property not classified by law as separate property.

Art. 2341 :

The separate property of a spouse is his exclusively. It comprises: property acquired by a spouse prior to the establishment of a community property regime; property acquired by a spouse with separate things or with separate and community things when the value of the community things is inconsequential in comparison with the value of the separate things used; property acquired by a spouse by inheritance or donation to him individually; damages awarded to a spouse in an action for breach of contract against the other spouse or for the loss sustained as a result of fraud or bad faith in the management of community property by the other spouse; damages or other indemnity awarded to a spouse in connection with the management of his separate property; and things acquired by a spouse as a result of a voluntary partition of the community during the existence of a community property regime.

Art. 2341.1:

A. A spouse's undivided interest in property otherwise classified as separate property under Article 2341 remains his separate property regardless of the acquisition of other undivided interests in the property during the existence of the legal regime, the source of improvements thereto, or by whom the property was managed, used, or enjoyed.

B. In property in which an undivided interest is held as community property and an undivided interest is held as separate property, each spouse owns a present undivided one-half interest in that portion of the undivided interest which is community and a spouse owns a present undivided interest in that portion of the undivided interest which is separate.

Nev. Rev. Stat.

§ 123.130:

1. All property of the wife owned by her before marriage, and that acquired by her afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, descent or by an award for personal injury damages, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, is her separate property.

2. All property of the husband owned by him before marriage, and that acquired by him afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, descent or by an award for personal injury damages, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, is his separate property.

§ 123.220 :

All property, other than that stated in NRS 123.130, acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property unless otherwise provided by:

1. An agreement in writing between the spouses, which is effective only as between them.

2. A decree of separate maintenance issued by a court of competent jurisdiction.

3. NRS 123.190. [referring to written authority amounting to a gift from one spouse to another]

4. A decree issued or agreement in writing entered pursuant to NRS 123.259. [providing for division of community property in certain situations]

N.M. Stat. Ann.

§ 40-3-8 :

A. "Separate property" means:

(1) property acquired by either spouse before marriage or after entry of a decree of dissolution of marriage;

(2) property acquired after entry of a decree entered pursuant to Section 40-4-3 NMSA 1978, unless the decree provides otherwise; [§ 40-4-3 provides for division of property of separated spouses without a dissolution of the marriage]

(3) property designated as separate property by a judgment or decree of any court having jurisdiction;

(4) property acquired by either spouse by gift, bequest, devise or descent; and

(5) property designated as separate property by a written agreement between the spouses including a deed or other written agreement concerning property held by the spouses as joint tenants or tenants in common in which the property is designated as separate property.

B. Except as provided in Subsection C of this section, "community property" means property acquired by either or both spouses during marriage which is not separate property. Property acquired by a husband and wife by an instrument in writing whether as tenants in common or as joint tenants or otherwise will be presumed to be held as community property unless such property is separate property within the meaning of Subsection A of this section.

E. "Property" includes the rents, issues and profits thereof. n102

Tex. Const. Art. 16, § 15:

All property, both real and personal, of a spouse owned or claimed before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be the separate property of that spouse; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the spouses, in relation to separate and community property; ...

Tex. Fam. Code Ann.

§ 5.01:

(a) A spouse's separate property consists of:

(1) the property owned or claimed by the spouse before marriage;

(2) the property acquired by the spouse during marriage by gift, devise, or descent; and

(3) the recovery for personal injuries sustained by the spouse during marriage, except any recovery for loss of earning capacity during marriage.

(b) Community property consists of the property, other than separate property, acquired by either spouse during marriage.

Wash. Rev. Code Ann.

§ 26.16.010 :

Property and pecuniary rights owned by the husband before marriage and that acquired by him afterwards by gift, bequest, devise or descent, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of his wife, and he may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber or devise by will such property without the wife joining in such management, alienation or encumbrance, as fully and to the same effect as though he were unmarried.

§ 26.16.020 :

The property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage or afterwards acquired by gift, devise or inheritance, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, and she may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber or devise by will such property to the same extent and in the same manner that her husband can, property belonging to him.

§ 26.16.030 :

Property not acquired or owned, as prescribed in RCW 26.16.010 and 26.16.020, acquired after marriage by either husband or wife or both, is community property... .

Wis. Stat. Ann. n103

§ 766.31:

(1) All property of spouses is marital property except that which is classified otherwise by this chapter and that which is described in sub. (8).

(4) Except as provided under subs. (7)(a), (7p) and (10), income earned during marriage and after the determination date n104 is marital property.

(6) Property owned at a marriage which occurs after 12:01 a.m. on January 1, 1986, is individual property of the owning spouse if, at the marriage, both spouses are domiciled in this state.

(7) Property acquired by a spouse during marriage and after the determination date is individual property if acquired by any of the following means:

(a) By gift during lifetime or by a disposition at death by a 3rd person to that spouse and not to both spouses. A distribution of principal or income from a trust created by a 3rd person to one spouse is the individual property of that spouse unless the trust provides otherwise.

(b) In exchange for or with the proceeds of other individual property of the spouse.

(c) From appreciation of the spouse's individual property except to the extent that the appreciation is classified as marital property under s. 766.63.

(d) By a decree, marital property agreement or reclassification under sub. (10) designating it as the individual property of the spouse.

(e) As a recovery for damage to property under s. 766.70, except as specifically provided otherwise in a decree or marital property agreement.

(f) As a recovery for personal injury except for the amount of that recovery attributable to expenses paid or otherwise satisfied from marital property and except for the amount attributable to loss of income during marriage.

(7p) Income attributable to all or specified property other than marital property, with respect to which a spouse has executed under s. 766.59 a statement unilaterally designating that income as his or her individual property, is individual property.

(8) Except as provided otherwise in this chapter, the enactment of this chapter does not alter the classification and ownership rights of property acquired before the determination date or the classification and ownership rights of property acquired after the determination date in exchange for or with the proceeds of property acquired before the determination date.

(9) Except as provided otherwise in this chapter and except to the extent that it would affect the spouse's ownership rights in the property existing before the determination date, during marriage the interest of a spouse in property owned immediately before the determination date is treated as if it were individual property.

Uniform Marital Property Act

§ 4:

(a) All property of spouses is marital property except that which is classified otherwise by this [Act].

(d) Income earned or accrued by a spouse or attributable to property of a spouse during marriage and after the determination date is marital property.

(f) Property owned by a spouse at a marriage after the determination date is individual property.

(g) Property acquired by a spouse during marriage and after the determination date is individual property if acquired:

(1) by gift or a disposition at death made by a third person to the spouse and not to both spouses;

(2) in exchange for or with the proceeds of other individual property of the spouse;

(3) from appreciation of the spouse's individual property except to the extent that the appreciation is classified as marital property under Section 14;

(4) by a decree, marital property agreement, written consent, or reclassification under Section 7(b) designating it as the individual property of the spouse;

(5) as a recovery for damage to property under Section 15, except as specifically provided otherwise in a decree, marital property agreement, or written consent; or

(6) as a recovery for personal injury except for the amount of that recovery attributable to expenses paid or otherwise satisfied from marital property.

(h) Except as provided otherwise in this [Act] the enactment of this (Act] does not alter the classification and ownership rights of property acquired before the determination date.

(i) Except as provided otherwise in this [Act] and to the extent it would affect the ownership rights of the spouse that existed in the property before the determination date, during marriage the interest of a spouse in property owned immediately before the determination date is treated as if it were individual property.

§ 37.08(c) The Community Property Presumption.

Because of the fact that issues of marital property classification frequently arise many years after acquisition of the property, it is unlikely that any system of community property could function without some fairly clear presumptions about classification of marital property. It will frequently not be easy, many years after acquisition, for a party to establish with solid evidence whether property possessed by a married person is community or separate in nature. There are important presumptions in every community property state that address such problems. We now turn our attention to those presumptions.

The primary marital property presumption concerns property acquired by someone during marriage. It is quite natural to assume that such acquisitions are obtained "onerously," i.e., by community effort. The presumption in every community property state is that property acquired during the marriage is community property of that marriage. Note, however, the implicit question within this statement of the presumption: Was the property acquired during the marriage? And must the community property proponent prove that fact? In some jurisdictions, explicitly or by implication, the answer to the second question is no and the presumption can be more broadly stated: Property possessed during the marriage is presumed to be community property.

In some states, courts have held that the community property presumption is implicitly created by the statute defining community property. n105 In other jurisdictions, the legislatures have enacted explicit statutes establishing the presumption. n106 The presumption is strong but it is rebuttable upon a showing of clear and convincing evidence. n107 Rebutting the presumption of course involves establishing that the property falls within the definition of separate property, by proving, for example, that the property was received by gift or inheritance. A relationship between the community property presumption and the length of a marriage has been recognized, either explicitly or in the way the presumption is applied. In essence, the presumption has greater force where the marriage has been a long relation than where a couple has been married for only a short time. n108 This is especially pertinent in states where the presumption on its face applies to all property "possessed" (as opposed to "acquired") during the marriage. California has also incorporated into its statutes a qualification of the presumption for probate situations where the decedent's marriage had terminated more than four years before the person's death:

> The presumption that property acquired during marriage is community property does not apply to any property to which legal or equitable title is held by a person at the time of the person's death if the marriage during which the property was acquired was terminated by dissolution of marriage more than four years before the death. n109

Other presumptions, so-called, have evolved in various circumstances, sometimes favoring community property and other times separate property. Some of these are closely related to or are offshoots of the general community property presumption. It may indeed be simpler to think of many of these other "presumptions" as qualifications of, or elaborations on, the general community property presumption, rather than additional (and confusing) procedural complexities. The purpose of the law in this area is to help us classify marital property properly; the community property presumption and its corollary doctrines should represent a common sense way to achieve that objective in specific cases.

One of the thorniest presumption problems in recent years concerns the mixture of community property and recitals of joint tenancy in California. Questions of classification in these situations created a flurry of activity in the California courts and legislature for over a decade.

Prior to 1966, California courts had held that a conveyance to husband and wife "as joint tenants" destroys the presumption that the property is community; in such cases, the husband and wife would own such property as separate estates, with each spouse owning a one-half interest. n110 That presumption could not be overcome merely by proof that community funds were used to purchase the property or by evidence of the undisclosed intention of one of the spouses. n111

Because of problems associated with characterizing a couple's home as separate rather than community property upon dissolution of the marriage, an exception to this separate property presumption was adopted by the legislature; it became a part of § 5110 of the California Civil Code, providing: "When a single-family residence of a husband and wife is acquired by them during marriage as joint tenants, for the purpose of division of such property upon dissolution of marriage or legal separation only, the presumption is that such single-family residence is the community property of the husband and wife." n112 Note the qualifications to the exception, limiting its application to a single-family residence and to actions for dissolution of marriage and legal separation.

Meanwhile, in 1980 the California Supreme Court decided In re Marriage of Lucas. n113 In that case, the court concluded that the act of taking title in a joint and equal form of ownership (joint tenancy) is inconsistent with an intention to preserve a separate property interest. The presumption, they said, is that a residence acquired in joint tenancy during the marriage is community property, and that presumption could be overcome only by a showing of an agreement or understanding to the contrary. The trial court therefore erred in confirming a separate property interest in the wife, even though her separate funds were used to acquire and improve the residence. The only pertinent findings were that neither party intended a gift to the other and such evidence was insufficient to rebut the community property presumption; some evidence of an agreement or understanding that the wife was to retain a separate property interest would be necessary.

Effective starting in 1984, the provision imposing a community property presumption on residences formally owned in joint tenancy was expanded to apply to all property acquired in joint tenancy form during the marriage. n114 The statute provided that the presumption could be rebutted by either of the following:

> (a) A clear statement in the deed or other documentary evidence of title by which the property is acquired that the property is separate property and not community property.
>
> (b) Proof that the parties have made a written agreement that the property is separate property.

Before this legislation, proof of an oral agreement that the residence was separate property could be used to rebut the community presumption. This would not be possible under the new law, and in an effort to extend the new act as far as possible, the legislature provided that it would apply not only to proceedings commenced on or after January 1, 1984 (its effective date) but also to "Proceedings commenced before January 1, 1984, to the extent proceedings as to the division of property are not yet final on January 1, 1984." n115 The California Supreme Court, however, held that the act could not be constitutionally applied to preclude proof of an oral agreement as to the separate character of marital property in any proceeding commenced prior to January 1, 1984. n116

In the legislative response to these developments, the Law Revision Commission lamented both the decision in Lucas and the fact that an oral agreement could be used to overcome the community presumption. n117

The substance of a revised § 4800.1 is identical to the earlier version, except that affected forms of joint ownership were expanded to include tenancy in common, tenancy by the entirety and community property as well as joint tenancy. In addition to the substantive provisions, the legislature included three paragraphs of findings, including the following:

> The methods provided by case and statutory law have not resulted in consistency in the treatment of spouses' interests in property which they hold in joint title, but rather, have created confusion as to which law applies at a particular point in time to property, depending on the form of title, and, as a result, spouses cannot have reliable expectations as to the characterization of their property and the allocation of the interests therein, and attorneys cannot reliably advise their clients regarding applicable law.

The foregoing law has now been superseded, effective January 1, 1994, by the most recent legislative chapter in this saga. This most recent attempt to resolve the confusion and establish a workable presumption in this situation provides as follows:

> (a) For the purpose of division of property upon dissolution of marriage or legal separation of the parties:
>
> (1) Property acquired by the parties during marriage on or after January 1, 1984, and before January 1, 1987, in joint tenancy form is presumed to be community property.
>
> (2) Property acquired by the parties during marriage on or after January 1, 1987, in joint form, including property held in tenancy in common, joint tenancy, tenancy by the entirety, or as community property is presumed to be community property.
>
> (b) The presumptions under subdivision (a) are presumptions affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted by either of the following:

(1) A clear statement in the deed or other documentary evidence of title by which the property is acquired that the property is separate property and not community property.

(2) Proof that the parties have made a written agreement that the property is separate property.

(c) Nothing in this section affects the character of property acquired by married persons that is not described in subdivision (a). n118

Note that the legislature has now acquiesced in the court's constitutional objections to its earlier attempts to make changes in the presumption retroactive. Thus we have different, but now relatively clear, rules for different time periods. These presumptions are still applicable only in dissolution and legal separation proceedings, but they apply to real and personal property, wherever acquired. A written document is necessary to rebut the presumption, but again that is only for the purpose of division of property at dissolution of marriage.

In a 1994 California case, n119 a judgment creditor of the former husband sought an order for the sale of a dwelling, title to which had been taken as joint tenants by the husband and wife. In a dissolution proceeding, the dwelling had been listed as a community asset, and the creditor of the husband sought to treat it as community property. A trial court's determination that the property was not community property was upheld on appeal. The couple had declared that they intended to hold the property as joint tenants and that it was listed as community property only because of advice from counsel that in dissolution, as between the spouses, there is a presumption that the property is community absent a specific statement in the deed or other documentary evidence to the contrary. The trial court had also refused to order the sale on the ground that the value of the former husband's interest was less than the combined amount of the homestead exemption and encumbrances. Based on statutory interpretation, the appellate court disagreed with this part of the trial court's opinion.

In Arizona, when one spouse buys property with separate funds and places it in joint tenancy, it is presumed that the spouse intended to make a separate property gift to his spouse of one-half of the property. n120 Even though joint tenancy property is considered separate property, the Arizona statute governing the disposition of marital property requires that courts "divide the community, joint tenancy and other property equitably, though not necessarily in kind, without regard to marital misconduct." n121

In a 1997 case, the Arizona Supreme Court held that even though one half of the joint tenancy property in question was a separate gift to the non-purchasing spouse, it was subject to equitable division upon divorce. n122 In that case, the court determined that considering the brief duration of the marriage (less than a month), it would be unequitable to divide the joint tenancy house worth $140,000 equally. "Since marital joint tenancy property is subject to equitable division upon dissolution generally, if we treated 'gifted' joint tenancy as requiring an equal, not equitable, division, we would be giving greater property rights to a non-contributing spouse than to a contributing one. Instead, the 'gift' in the non-purchasing spouse of joint tenancy property is an equitable right in the property, not an irrevocably gifted interest in half." n123

Various other "presumptions" have found their way into the law, frequently relating to recitals in documents of title. Recitals in instruments of conveyance can provide some answers to questions of classification. They do not answer all questions and in many cases will not answer questions definitively. For example, the fact that only one spouse is named as grantee in a deed does not generally overcome the community property presumption. Recitals are nevertheless often good evidence of factual matters and intention, and should be used and interpreted as such. Recitals in a deed naming only one spouse as grantee might state that consideration paid for the property is that spouse's separate property and that title is being taken as part of the separate estate. This is certainly some evidence of the facts stated. n124

Some presumptions are related to the demise of paternalism in marital property law. Prior to the 1970's, for example, husbands in most community property jurisdictions had exclusive rights of management and control over property of the community. Along with a move to more equal treatment of the sexes came presumptions designed to protect a married woman's title to the property under these circumstances. n125 A typical example is the following California statute:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, whenever any real or personal property, or any interest therein or encumbrance thereon, was acquired before January 1, 1975, by a married woman by an instrument in writing, the following presumptions apply, and are conclusive in favor of any person dealing in good faith and for a valuable consideration with the married woman or her legal representatives or successors in interest, regardless of any change in her marital status after acquisition of the property:
>
> (a) If acquired by the married woman, the presumption is that the property is the married woman's separate property.
>
> (b) If acquired by the married woman and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part acquired by her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument.
>
> (c) If acquired by husband and wife by an instrument in which they are described as husband and wife, the presumption is that the property is the community property of the husband and wife, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument. n126

Transfers between spouses, discussed more fully in the next section, have caused some difficulty and have resulted in additional presumptions. Again, the law in this area has been very much influenced by sexist and paternalistic influences and the movement away from those influences in the 20th century. It is only very recently that married women have achieved some significant measure of equality in terms of management and control of community property.

Intention is not always set forth clearly in document recitals. There may be a variety of possible reasons or explanations for such transactions and in the absence of any guidance by the parties the law will supply a presumptive conclusion. In Idaho, for example, property conveyed by one spouse to the other is presumed to be the separate property of the grantee spouse, although the income from such property is not separate property unless this fact is specifically stated in the instrument of conveyance. n127 One spouse may make a valid gift of her or his separate property to the other spouse and such transactions may give rise to a separate property presumption. The Texas Constitution, for example, now includes the following language: "[I]f one spouse makes a gift of property to the other that gift is presumed to include all the income or property which might arise from that gift of property." n128

One spouse unsuccessfully launched an interesting attack on the proposition of gift from one spouse to another. She asserted that on dissolution of the marriage she was entitled to a return of property she had given him on the theory that consideration for the transfer was the state of marriage and its continuation. Violation of marital vows resulting in divorce was such a betrayal of confidence, she claimed, that a constructive trust should be imposed in her favor. The court did not agree, stating simply that one spouse may make a valid gift of his or her separate property to the other spouse. n129

A slightly different, but related, situation is presented when property is purchased with separate funds but title is taken in the names of both spouses. In such circumstances, a presumption arises that a gift to the non-contributing spouse was intended. n130 Note that the gift in such cases could arguably be to the separate estate or the community estate of the parties. In a sense, however, the definitions of separate and community property contradict the proposition of a "gift to the community," since property acquired by gift is by definition separate property. Even so, with the more liberal allowances for autonomous classification by the spouses, gifts to the community are possible, at least in some states. n131

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 presum! w/15 separate or joint tenancy or title or recital or paternalism or transfer!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 101. These provisions took effect on January 1, 1994. They are restatements, with one modification, of prior sections 5110, 5107 and 5108 of the California Civil Code.

(n2)Footnote 102. In Swing v. Fingado, 850 P.2d 978 (N.M. 1993), the following question was certified to the Supreme Court of New Mexico by the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit:

> Do the 1984 amendments to § 40-3-8 N.M. Stat. Ann. 1978 (as enacted), apply retroactively so as to convert property acquired by husband and wife as joint tenants prior to the passage of the amendments, and thus originally held as separate property, into community property which would be included in the bankruptcy estate?

The New Mexico court answered the Tenth Circuit's question in the affirmative. They stated that "property acquired before 1984 by a husband and wife through an instrument designating them as joint tenants is presumed to be held as community property, even though it may also be held as joint tenancy property." In a fairly elaborate opinion, the court further held that "under the 1984 amendments to this state's community property statutes, the properties were properly characterized as community property and were therefore included in the bankruptcy estate under Subsection 541(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code."

(n3)Footnote 103. As noted in § 37.01, Wisconsin recently adopted a community property system patterned after the Uniform Marital Property Act. In the Uniform Act and in Wisconsin's legislation, the terms "marital property" and "individual property" are used rather than "community property" and "separate property."

(n4)Footnote 104. According to § 766.01(5), "Determination date" means the last to occur of (a)marriage, (b)12:01 a.m. on the date that both spouses are domiciled in Wisconsin, and (c)12:01 a.m. on January 1, 1986, which was the effective date of Wisconsin's marital property legislation.

(n5)Footnote 105. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-211 (1991) creates a presumption that property acquired during marriage is community property. Arizona Cent. Credit Union v. Holden, 432 P.2d 276 (Ariz. App. 1967). See also Verheyden v. Verheyden, 757 P.2d 1328 (Nev. 1988).

(n6)Footnote 106. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2340 provides: "Things in the possession of a spouse during the existence of a regime of community of acquest and gains are presumed to be community, but either spouse may prove that they are separate property." This provision was effective on January 1, 1980, and the comment accompanying the statute notes that it "suppresses the requirement of a double declaration established by Louisiana jurisprudence." See also Tullier v. Tullier, 464 So. 2d 278 (La. 1985). This refers to an irrebuttable presumption that had been applied in Louisiana as to immovable property purchased by the husband during marriage unless the documents of acquisition declared that the property (1) was purchased with his separate funds and (2) was being acquired for his separate estate. Phillips v. Nereaux, 357 So. 2d 813 (La. Ct. App. 1978). A New Mexico statute provides that "Property acquired during marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is presumed to be community property." N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-12A. New Mexico also has a provision specifically stating that property acquired by a husband or wife "by an instrument in writing whether as tenants in common or as joint tenants or otherwise" is presumed to be community property. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-8B. See also Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.02 ("Property possessed by either spouse during or on dissolution of marriage is presumed to be community property."); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31(2) ("All property of spouses is presumed to be marital property.")

(n7)Footnote 107. Porter v. Porter, 195 P.2d 132 (Ariz. 1948) (strong, satisfactory, convincing, clear and cogent, or nearly conclusive); Jacobson v. Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining & Concentrating Co., 28 P. 396 (Idaho 1891) (preponderance of evidence); Hinckley v. Hinckley, 583 So. 2d 125 (La. Ct. App. 1991) (clear, positive and of a legally certain nature); Verheyden v. Verheyden, 757 P.2d 1328 (Nev. 1988) (clear and certain proof); Stroshine v. Stroshine, 652 P.2d 1193 (N.M. 1982) (preponderance of the evidence); cf. Eliasen v. Fitzgerald, 668 P.2d 110 (Idaho 1983) (presumption overturned on appeal without reference to the degree of proof); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.02 ("The degree of proof necessary to establish that property is separate property is clear and convincing evidence."); Madsen's Estate v. C.I.R., 650 P.2d 196 (1982) (clear and convincing proof). Edwards v. Edwards, 817 So. 2d 414 (Lou. App. 2002) (a reasonable factual basis existed for determination that the money was unpartitioned community property). In re Marriage of Gillespie, 948 P.2d 1338, 1343 (Wash. App. 1997); Hunt v. Hunt, 952 S.W.2d 564 (Tex. App. 1997) (the spouse asserting that certain property is separate bears the burden of rebutting the community property presumption by clear and convincing evidence); Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Gaspard, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8689 (E.D. La. 1997) (general and "self-serving" testimony that property is separate is not sufficient to rebut the community property presumption); United States v. Elam, 112 F.3d 1036 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that prenuptial agreement was relevant in determining whether the community property presumption was rebutted as to a forwarded tax overpayment); Noil v. Noil, 699 So. 2d 1134 (La. App. 1997) (holding that wife's evidence that house was bought with prize money from sweepstakes the wife entered was not sufficient to rebut the presumption; winnings resulted from wife's skill in solving word puzzles, and until the legislature classifies sweepstakes prizes as separate, they are considered community property); Worzala v. Worzala, 913 P.2d 1178 (Idaho 1996) (community property presumption rebutted with evidence showing reasonable certainty that property is separate property); Lormand v. Lormand, 673 So. 2d 1345 (La. App. 1996) (evidence of commingling separate and community property undermines ability to show clear, positive, and legally certain proof of separate property); Hebert v. Hebert, 650 So. 2d 436 (La. App. 1995) (husband failed to carry burden of proof in showing funds used to construct community home on separate property were themselves separate property). The following cases hold that the presumption of community property can be rebutted by clear and convincing evidence: Koher v. Morgan, 968 P.2d 920 (Wash. Ct. App. 1998); Bahr v. Kohr, 980 S.W.2d 723 (Tex. Ct. App. 1998).

(n8)Footnote 108. E.g., In re Duncan's Estate, 70 P.2d 174 (Cal. 1937). See also Zorilla v. Wahid, 83 S.W.3d 247 (Tex. App. 2002) (trial court acted within its discretion in awarding 60% of marital property to the wife and 40% to the husband); Toth v. Toth, 946 P.2d 900, 903-904 (Ariz. 1997) (finding that where marriage lasted only a few weeks, "equal" distribution of property would not be "equitable").

(n9)Footnote 109. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 802.

(n10)Footnote 110. Beck v. Beck, 51 Cal. Rptr. 491 (1966).

(n11)Footnote 111. Knego v. Grover, 25 Cal. Rptr. 158 (1962).

(n12)Footnote 112. Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 5110, Explanation of Amendments.

(n13)Footnote 113. 166 Cal. Rptr. 853 (1980).

(n14)Footnote 114. Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 4800.1.

(n15)Footnote 115. 1983 Cal. Stats. ch. 342, § 4.

(n16)Footnote 116. In re Marriage of Buol, 705 P.2d 354 (Cal. 1985).

(n17)Footnote 117. See Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 4800.1, Law Revision Commission Comment.

(n18)Footnote 118. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 2580. Dorn v. Solomon, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311, 312 (1997) (noting that property held in joint tenancy is presumed to be community property at dissolution and not upon the death of a joint tenant).

(n19)Footnote 119. Abbett Electric Corp. v. Storek, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 845 (1994).

(n20)Footnote 120. Toth v. Toth, 946 P.2d 900 (Ariz. 1997) (citing Becchelli v. Becchelli, 508 P.2d 59 (Ariz. 1973)); Valladee v. Valladee, 718 P.2d 206, 210 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1986)).

(n21)Footnote 121. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 25-318 (1997).

(n22)Footnote 122. Toth v. Toth, 946 P.2d 900, 902 (Ariz. 1997).

(n23)Footnote 123. Id.

(n24)Footnote 124. Recitals, in and of themselves, do not necessarily overcome the community property presumption. Courts in Louisiana, for example, have held that "the 'double declaration' is not in itself proof of the separate status and does not of itself overcome the presumption; it merely permits the introduction of evidence if a party seeks to prove the separate nature of property acquired during a community." Succession of Pittman, 282 So. 2d 799, 804 (La. Ct. App. 1973). A Louisiana statute provides: "A declaration in an act of acquisition that things are acquired with separate funds as the separate property of a spouse may be controverted by the other spouse unless he concurred in the act. It may also be controverted by the forced heirs and the creditors of the spouses, despite the concurrence by the other spouse." La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2342.

(n25)Footnote 125. In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 346, 353, 553 n.9 (Cal. 1985). The court notes that the presumption can be overcome only by clear and convincing evidence. Ragan v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 135 F.3d 329 (5th Cir.) (personal earnings, while community property, are subject to the sole management and control of the person who earned them) (citing Tex. Fam. Code. Ann. § 3.102).

(n26)Footnote 126. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 803. See also N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-12.

(n27)Footnote 127. Idaho Code § 32-906(2).

(n28)Footnote 128. Tex. Const. Ann. Art. 16, § 15.

(n29)Footnote 129. Bohn v. Bohn, 455 S.W.2d 401 (Tex. Civ. App. 1970). Kerly v. Kerly, 910 P.2d 279 (Nev. 1996) (conveyance of title to real property to husband presumed to be a gift, if wife's interest is separate property rather than community property); In re Morrison, 913 S.W.2d 689 (Tex. App. 1995).

(n30)Footnote 130. Sloane v. Sloane, 646 P.2d 299 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1982). We have already discussed the California experience with similar problems.

(n31)Footnote 131. Nichols v. Nichols, 648 P.2d 780 (N.M. 1982). In re Marriage of Werstiuk, No. 19341-8-II, 1997 Wash. App. LEXIS 1440 (Wash. App. 1997) (holding that when a spouse purchases property with separate funds but title is taken in the names of both spouses, a rebuttable presumption of a gift to the community arises.); Winkle v. Winkle, 951 S.W.2d 80, 88 (Tex. App. 1997) (where separate funds are used to pay for living expenses, it constitutes a gift to the community).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.09

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.09 Autonomous Classification: Agreements and Other Transactions Between Spouses.

[Go To Supp]

§ 37.09(a) Contract Formalities.

We have seen that the community property presumption is rebuttable. One possible way of rebutting the presumption, or of regulating classification of marital property, is by contract or transfer between the spouses. Generally speaking, the modern trend has been to allow parties greater autonomy in their business and personal affairs and this is also the case with respect to agreements and transactions concerning marital property.

Every community property state recognizes marital property agreements in some fashion. These agreements can take numerous forms, including pre-marital agreements, contracts between spouses, and separation agreements. We are concerned here primarily with law regulating agreements, before or during marriage, that would somehow alter the characterization of property in community property states. The statutes set forth various formal requirements and allow parties to design their own marital property regimes, with some limitations. General contract law and remedies will, of course, also apply.

Contract formalities are similar from state to state. Five community property states -- Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas and Wisconsin -- have adopted the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act. Some statutes contain general authorization for premarital and other marital property agreements and then spell out some other details in other statutes. n132 The law appears to be moving in the direction of general contractual empowerment of both persons about to marry and those already married. We shall consider here agreements concerning marital property rights, entered into before or during marriage, using the term "marital property agreement." The reader is cautioned, however, that legal distinctions may sometimes be drawn between agreements between married persons and those between persons yet to be married.

Statutes typically provide that a marital property agreement shall be in writing and signed by both parties. n133 Consideration is not usually necessary. n134 Premarital agreements become effective upon marriage. n135 Recording of agreements is sometimes advisable, and execution and acknowledgment in the same manner required of conveyances of real property is necessary for recording purposes. n136 A writing is required for amendment or revocation of marital property agreements. n137

Marital property agreements executed before marriage will not, of course, be enforceable against a spouse in the event of involuntary execution by that spouse or unconscionability. n138

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: contract! or transfer! w/15 rebut! w/2 presumption w/30 community w/1 property

§ 37.09(b) Substance of Contracts in General.

Modern statutes on marital property agreements provide considerable autonomy to the contracting parties. Parties may agree with respect to: n139

Rights and obligations of each of the parties in any property of either or both of them whenever and wherever acquired or located (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin);

The right to buy, sell, use, transfer, exchange, abandon, lease, consume, expend, assign, create a security interest in, mortgage, encumber, dispose of, or otherwise manage and control property (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin); n140

The disposition of property upon separation, marital dissolution, death, or the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any other event (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin);

The making of a will, trust, or other arrangement to carry out the provisions of the agreement (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin);

Modification or elimination of spousal support (Arizona, Nevada, Texas, Wisconsin); n141

The ownership rights in and disposition of the death benefit from a life insurance policy (Arizona, California, Nevada, and Texas);

Providing that upon the death of either spouse any of either or both spouse's property passes without probate to a designated person, trust or other entity by nontestamentary disposition (Wisconsin);

The choice of law governing the construction of the agreement (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin); and,

Any other matter, including their personal rights and obligations, not in violation of public policy or a statute imposing a criminal penalty (Arizona, California, Nevada, Texas, and Wisconsin).

Marital property agreements may not adversely affect the right of a child to support. n142

In Idaho and New Mexico, all contracts for "marriage settlements" must be in writing and executed and acknowledged or proved as are conveyances of land. n143 Such agreements must also be recorded in the office of the recorder of "every county in which any real estate may be situated which is granted or affected by such contract." n144 As to authority to redefine marital property contractually, statutory language in Idaho simply states: "The property rights of husband and wife are governed by this chapter, unless there is a marriage settlement agreement entered into prior to or during marriage containing stipulations contrary thereto." n145 In New Mexico, "Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person respecting property, which either might, if unmarried, subject, in transactions between themselves, to the general rules of common law which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other." n146

Louisiana's civil law treatment of marital property agreements is unique. The "legal regime" of marital property is the "community of acquest and gains." n147 Matrimonial agreements, "establishing a regime of separation of property or modifying or terminating the legal regime," are permitted. n148 Matrimonial agreements may be executed before or during marriage. n149 Where a prenuptial agreement is made, a contractual community, rather than a legal community, is created, n150 but there are limitations on contractual autonomy during the marriage. Except for the first year after moving into and acquiring a domicile in Louisiana, spouses may not enter into a matrimonial agreement modifying or terminating a matrimonial regime (other than subjecting themselves to the legal regime) without court approval. n151 Also, spouses may not by agreement before or during marriage renounce or alter the "marital portion" or the established order of succession to property at death. n152 The current marital portion may not exceed one million dollars and amounts to "one-fourth of the succession in ownership if the deceased died without children, the same fraction in usufruct for life if he is survived by three or fewer children, and a child's share in such usufruct if he is survived by more than three children." n153

Spouses may also choose to exercise control over classification of particular items of marital property by various sorts of transfers between themselves. Because of property classification in a community property system, and the complexity that arises from it, seemingly simple transactions between spouses can be confusing. Courts and legislators have struggled to apply sensible interpretations to what people can do and have done.

Washington provides for agreements "concerning the status or disposition of the whole or any portion of the community property, then owned by [the husband and wife] or afterwards to be acquired, to take effect upon the death of either." n154 Note that this unusual statute provides for an agreement quite different from the others discussed in this section. It provides not for definition or regulation of marital property during the marriage or in the event of divorce, but rather for provisions to take effect upon the death of either spouse. The statute is discussed further in § 37.14(a).

There is probably very little reason to limit the options available to spouses concerning classification of marital property. We have seen that modern law favors considerable contractual autonomy for spouses, and agreements can be fashioned that spell out in some detail the classification of all marital property. By definition, such agreements are the product of thought and attention by the parties and involve conscious choices. When transfers occur between spouses, however, the purposes and the possible consequences may not always be evident.

§ 37.09(c) Interspousal Transactions in Texas.

Texas has perhaps the most colorful history on the subject of autonomous control over classification of marital property. Article 16, § 15 of the Texas Constitution sets forth the basic framework of marital property in Texas. As adopted in 1876, that section provided:

> All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife, in relation as well to her separate property as that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property.

Because the Texas marital property regime is established by the constitution, it has been less flexible than a system based on only statute and judicial interpretation. Although this provision seemed to be nothing more than a definition of wife's separate property, and was apparently intended as a fairly simple protection for married women against the legislature, the Texas Supreme Court gave it great force as a limiting factor in defining marital property generally in Texas. n155 It became entrenched as a powerful and relatively immutable control, frustrating efforts on the part of spouses to exercise autonomy, and otherwise limiting the ability of the legislature and others to adapt the marital property system to changing needs.

For many years, spouses attempted to convert their community property to separate property, but the response in the courts was essentially that the constitution tells us what community property is and what separate property is, and both they and the parties themselves were powerless to change that, or even to give the constitutional provision anything but a very narrow construction. In terms of autonomy of the spouses, this extreme restraint came to a head in King v. Bruce. n156 Homer and Clara Bruce desired to convert their community property into separate estates to provide for Clara's economic security without being subjected to liability for federal gift taxes. They executed a contract purporting to divide 324 shares of stock so as to make 162 shares Homer's separate property and 162 Clara's separate property. That attempt was foiled by the Galveston Court of Civil Appeals. In its opinion, the court stated:

> There is no question but that the partition agreement is a fair one, and such as will appeal to the conscience of the court... . The question here is ... did the agreement have the effect of changing the community character of the 324 shares of stock into that of separate property of the spouses?...
>
> In our opinion the agreement effected neither a partition of the community estate in the 324 shares, nor any transfer of any interest therein from the community estate to the separate estates of the parties... . The only method of voluntarily transferring title is by gift, sale, or exchange. "But the intentions of parties cannot change the character of an estate which is fixed by law, and which they by their acts create."
>
> McLean v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 725, 726. n157

The court further noted that separate property of either spouse could be conveyed to the other and that community property could be conveyed by the husband to the wife so as to make it her separate property. Whether particular property was community or separate depended, they said, upon "the existence or non-existence of the facts, which, by the rules of law, give character to it, and not merely upon the stipulations of the parties that it shall belong to one class or the other." n158

The Bruces did not give up on their attempt to convert their community property to separate property without making gifts. Instead, they concocted a rather elaborate scheme in an effort to solve their problem. In 1946, they traveled to New York City, where they engaged in certain transactions. At a New York bank, Mr. Bruce drew a check for $5,800 on a Texas bank account containing that amount of the Bruces' community funds. With that sum he opened an account in the New York bank. He then withdrew $4,000 from that account in the form of 4,000 silver dollars. Half of these were then placed in each of two containers, labeled "Container No. 1" and "Container No. 2." Mr. Bruce then drew a check for $1,000 on the New York account receiving in return two cashier's checks for $500 each, payable jointly to the Mr. and Mrs. Bruce. Finally, two more checks were drawn, for $400 each, payable to Mr. and Mrs. Bruce. The Bruces then endorsed one each of the two cashier's checks and one each of the $400 checks to each other and executed a written contract. Under the terms of the contract, the containers of silver dollars and the checks were "delivered," half to Mr. Bruce and half to Mrs. Bruce. Each then deposited $2,900 in his and her separate accounts in the New York bank and received individual cashier's checks for that amount. The contract recited these events and their purpose and noted that it was wholly executed and performed in New York and that the parties intended that the laws of New York apply to, and govern and control the validity and effect of the contract.

The Texas Supreme Court reversed lower court decisions favorable to the Bruces. They wrote:

> Hence, when the Constitution says that as to property, not owned or claimed by the wife at marriage, it becomes her separate property when acquired in one of three specified modes, the Legislature is prohibited from saying that property acquired after marriage in some other mode may also become the wife's separate property. n159

The court did not agree that the law of New York governed the transaction. Mr. Bruce, a lawyer, contended for his wife and himself that there was no legal impediment to prevent a solvent husband from converting part of the community property into the separate property of his wife so that it could not be reached by future creditors of the husband. The court did not agree, stating that the "fundamental change in state policy" advocated by Mr. Bruce must be made through the legislative and constitutional channels provided by law, not in the courts.

In a sense, the Bruces lost the battle but won the war. Article 16, § 15 of the Texas Constitution was promptly amended with the addition of the following proviso:

> provided that husband and wife, without prejudice to pre-existing creditors, may from time to time by written instrument as if the wife were a feme sole partition between themselves in severalty or into equal undivided interests all or any part of their existing community property, or exchange between themselves the community interest of one spouse in any property for the community interest of the other spouse in other community property, whereupon the portion or interest set aside to each spouse shall be and constitute a part of the separate property of such spouse. n160

Additional amendments pertinent to transactions between spouses have subsequently been added to the Texas constitutional framework for marital property. Article 16, § 15 now provides:

> All property, both real and personal, of a spouse owned or claimed before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise or descent, shall be the separate property of that spouse; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the spouses, in relation to separate and community property; provided that persons about to marry and spouses, without the intention to defraud pre-existing creditors, may by written instrument from time to time partition between themselves all or part of their property, then existing or to be acquired, or exchange between themselves the community interest of one spouse or future spouse in any property for the community interest of the other spouse or future spouse in other community property then existing or to be acquired, whereupon the portion or interest set aside to each spouse shall be and constitute a part of the separate property and estate of such spouse or future spouse; spouses also may from time to time, by written instrument, agree between themselves that the income or property from all or part of the separate property then owned or which thereafter might be acquired by only one of them, shall be the separate property of that spouse; if one spouse makes a gift of property to the other that gift is presumed to include all the income or property which might arise from that gift of property; and spouses may agree in writing that all or part of their community property becomes the property of the surviving spouse on the death of the spouse.

Note that as it now reads, the constitution permits certain, specific transactions between the spouses. Although the changes have broadened spouses' options considerably, transactions that fall outside of the permitted options presumably remain unconstitutional. For example, there appears to be no constitutionally safe way to change separate property into community property. n161

§ 37.09(d) Interspousal Transactions in California.

Other states have had a more liberal approach toward autonomy than Texas. It should be noted that husband and wife have a confidential relationship and that they owe one another various duties of loyalty and trust. n162 These duties provide an overarching framework for contractual autonomy of spouses in their dealings with one another.

Current California law provides that, subject to the "fiduciary" duties just mentioned, "either husband or wife may enter into any transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried." n163 More specifically, California statutes include the following general provision, which has been in effect since January 1, 1985. When originally adopted, this section codified what was already the basic California rule that spouses could transmute the character of marital property.

Subject to Sections 851 to 853, inclusive, married persons may by agreement or transfer, with or without consideration, do any of the following:

(a) Transmute n164 community property to separate property of either spouse.

(b) Transmute separate property of either spouse to community property.

(c) Transmute separate property of one spouse to separate property of the other spouse. n165

Since January 1, 1985, it has been necessary that the transmutation be in writing by an express declaration "made, joined in, consented to, or accepted by the spouse whose interest in the property is adversely affected." n166 Transmutations of real property must be recorded to be effective against third parties without notice, n167 and they are, of course, subject to laws governing fraudulent transfers. n168 The writing requirement of § 852 does not apply to gifts between spouses of clothing, jewelry or other personal articles "used solely or principally by the spouse to whom the gift is made and that is not substantial in value taking into account the circumstances of the marriage." n169 Section 852 does not affect the law governing characterization of property in which separate and community property have been commingled. n170

Statutes in California and some other states provide that community property transferred to a revocable trust controlled by both spouses jointly remains community property unless the trust instrument or instrument of transfer expressly provides otherwise. n171 This provision was designed in part to ensure community property income tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code. n172

§ 37.09(e) Interspousal Transactions in Louisiana.

In Louisiana, married persons may, by marriage contract, make such donations as they think proper. n173 A married person may also, by marriage contract or during marriage, give to the spouse "in full property" all that the married person might give to a stranger. n174 Donations of property, present and future, are subject to the same rules that govern donations to a third person, n175 and are not revoked by the birth of children, provided they do not exceed the limits on what spouses are permitted to dispose of to each other. n176 The Code also sets forth the effect of donations between spouses. Donation by one spouse to another of the donor's undivided interest in community property transforms that interest into the separate property of the donee. n177

Spouses in Louisiana have had some limits on their power to engage in property transactions with one another. Until 1979, n178 a contract of sale between husband and wife could take place only in three situations: (1) transfer of property from one to the other after judicial separation; (2) when a transfer by the husband to the wife had a legitimate cause, such as replacing her effects; and (3) transfer from the wife to the husband in payment of a sum promised as dowry. n179 In 1981, the following statute was adopted:

> The transfer by a spouse to the other spouse of a thing forming part of his separate property, with the stipulation that it shall be part of the community, transforms the thing into community property. As to both movables and immovables, a transfer by onerous title must be made in writing and a transfer by gratuitous title must be made by authentic act. n180

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 132. California, for example, provides that "The property rights of husband and wife prescribed by statute may be altered by a premarital agreement or other marital property agreement." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1500. See also In re Estate of Bachmeier, 52 P.3d 22 (Wash. 2002) (a community property agreement does not impliedly terminate by operation of law when the marriage underlying it becomes defunct).

(n2)Footnote 133. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-202A; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1611; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.040

(1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.42; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(1). Hardy v. United States, CV-N-94-0824-ECR, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11790 (D. Nev. 1997) (ruling that an oral agreement for opting out of the community property regime may be upheld under the doctrine of equitable estoppel).

(n3)Footnote 134. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-202A; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1611; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.040; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.42; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(1).

(n4)Footnote 135. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-201; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1613; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.060 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.44 (1993); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(5).

(n5)Footnote 136. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1502; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(11).

(n6)Footnote 137. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-204; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1614; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.070 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.45; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(4).

(n7)Footnote 138. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 25-202C; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1615; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.080; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.46; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(6). These statutes are almost identical and are based on the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act. Attached to the provisions on unconscionability in Arizona, California and Texas are additional qualifications that the party seeking to avoid the agreement "was not provided a fair and reasonable disclosure of the property or financial obligations of the other party"; "did not voluntarily and expressly waive, in writing, any right to disclosure of the property or financial obligations of the other party"; and "did not have, or reasonably could not have had, an adequate knowledge of the property or financial obligations of the other party." In other words, the agreement is not enforceable if it was unconscionable and the party was not provided fair and reasonable disclosure, etc. In Nevada and Wisconsin, however, the disclosure-or-notice-of-property elements apparently are an independent test for enforceability. In those states, the absence of fair and reasonable disclosure of the other spouse's property or financial obligations; the absence of knowledge or notice thereof; and, in Nevada, the absence of a written waiver of any right to disclosure of property and financial obligations, constitute a separate basis for unenforceability, independent of the conscionability provision; DeLong v. DeLong, 941 S.W.2d 539 (Mo. App. 1998) (ruling that agreements must be conscionable and entered into "freely, fairly, knowingly, understandingly, and in good faith and full disclosure").

(n8)Footnote 139. These provisions are found in Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-203; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1612; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.050; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.43; and Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(3).

(n9)Footnote 140. In an admirable simplification of the essence of this statement, stripped of unnecessary verbiage, the Wisconsin statute simply states: "Management and control of any of either or both spouses' property." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(3)(b).

(n10)Footnote 141. This provision is qualified in Wisconsin. Modification or elimination of spousal support may not result in a spouse having less than necessary and adequate support, and the court may require the other spouse or spouse's estate to provide support, notwithstanding the agreement, if the agreement effectively makes the spouse eligible for public assistance. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(9). The latter provision is also a part of the law in Arizona [Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 25-202D] and Nevada [Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.080(2)].

(n11)Footnote 142. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 25-203B (1992); Cal. Fam. Code § 1612(b); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.050(2) (1992); Tex. Fam. Code § 5.43(b); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(2).

(n12)Footnote 143. Idaho Code § 32-917; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-2-4.

(n13)Footnote 144. Idaho Code § 32-918; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-2-5. The recording or non-recording of such contracts has "a like effect as the recording or nonrecording of a conveyance of real property." Idaho Code § 32-919. See also N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-2-6; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1502(b).

(n14)Footnote 145. Id. at § 32-916. See also Stockdale v. Stockdale, 643 P.2d 82 (Idaho Ct. App. 1982) (husband and wife may elect at any time to change the character of their property, but only in the manner provided by statutes, including §§ 32-917-32-919).

(n15)Footnote 146. N.M. Stat. Ann.

(n16)Footnote 147. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2327.

(n17)Footnote 148. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2328.

(n18)Footnote 149. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2331.

(n19)Footnote 150. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2326; Clay v. United States, 161 F.2d 607 (5th Cir. 1947).

(n20)Footnote 151. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2329.

(n21)Footnote 152. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2330. For discussion of the "marital portion" see § 37.14(b), infra.

(n22)Footnote 153. La. Stat. Ann.

(n23)Footnote 154. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.120.

(n24)Footnote 155. See Joseph W. McKnight, Texas Community Property Law: Conservative Attitudes, Reluctant Changes, 56 Law and Contemporary Problems 71 (1993) (citing Arnold v. Leonard, 273 S.W. 799 (Tex. 1925); Gohlman, Lester & Co. v. Whittle, 273 S.W. 808 (Tex. 1925); Cauble v. Beaver-Electra Refining Co., 274 S.W. 120 (Tex. 1925).

(n25)Footnote 156. 201 S.W.2d 803 (Tex. 1947).

(n26)Footnote 157. Bruce v. Permian Royalty Co. No. 2, 186 S.W.2d 686, 687 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945), writ refused..

(n27)Footnote 158. Bruce v. Permian Royalty Co. No. 2, 186 S.W.2d 686, 687 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945), writ refused. (quoting Kellett v. Trice, 66 S.W. 51, 53 (Tex. 1902)).

(n28)Footnote 159. King v. Bruce, 201 S.W.2d 803, 807 (Tex. 1947) (quoting Arnold v. Leonard, 273 S.W. 799, 802 (Tex. 1925)).

(n29)Footnote 160. Tex. Const. Art. 16, § 15, Historical Notes.

(n30)Footnote 161. There is one way in which this transmutation might be accomplished under Texas law. A spouse could "commingle" separate property with community property, in which case the entire fund would be classified as community if it was impossible to "trace" the separate property. See § 37.10(b). In some cases, this will not be a secure way of converting separate property into community property, since the owner of the separate property might later decide to, and be able to, trace the separate property.

(n31)Footnote 162. "Husband and wife contract toward each other obligations of mutual respect, fidelity, and support." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 720; "[I]n transactions between themselves, a husband and wife are subject to the general rules governing fiduciary relationships which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other. This confidential relationship imposes a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing on each spouse, and neither shall take any unfair advantage of the other. This confidential relationship is a fiduciary relationship subject to the same rights and duties of nonmarital business partners ... ." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 721(b). "Each spouse shall act in good faith with respect to the other spouse in matters involving marital property or other property of the other spouse. This obligation may not be varied by a marital property agreement." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.15 . See § 37.12(b), infra, for further discussion of duties spouses owe one another.

(n32)Footnote 163. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 721.

(n33)Footnote 164. "Transmute" and "transmutation" are terms frequently used to denote a change in the classification of marital property, from community to separate or separate to community.

(n34)Footnote 165. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 850.

(n35)Footnote 166. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 852(a). When it was enacted in 1984, § 852 overruled existing case law permitting oral agreements. A writing signed by the adversely affected spouse is not an "express declaration" for this purpose unless it contains language expressly stating that the characterization or ownership of the property is being changed. In re Estate of MacDonald, 794 P.2d 911 (Cal. 1990). "A statement in a will of the character of property is not admissible as evidence of a transmutation of the property in a proceeding commenced before the death of the person who made the will." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 853.

(n36)Footnote 167. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 852(b).

(n37)Footnote 168. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 851. In re Marriage of Haines, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673 (1995) (presumption of undue influence, rather than presumption of title, applies when wife transmutes her share in marital property in exchange for husband's cosignature on loan).

(n38)Footnote 169. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 852(c).

(n39)Footnote 170. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 852(d).

(n40)Footnote 171. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 761(a); Idaho Code § 32-906A.

(n41)Footnote 172. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 761(a) Law Revision Commission Comments.

(n42)Footnote 173. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1743. Salsbury v. Salsbury, 658 So. 2d 734 (La. App. 1995) (former family home was community property); Palmer v. Palmer, 654 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1995) (oil and gas properties in Louisiana subjected to resulting or constructive trust in favor of former wife).

(n43)Footnote 174. Id. art. 1746.

(n44)Footnote 175. Id. art. 1745.

(n45)Footnote 176. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1750.

(n46)Footnote 177. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2343.

(n47)Footnote 178. There is apparently some confusion as to whether the repeal of earlier law was effective in 1979 or 1980. See Dyess v. Horton, 476 So. 2d 1025 (La. Ct. App. 1985); Freeman v. Freeman, 430 So. 2d 673 (La. Ct. App. 1983).

(n48)Footnote 179. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2446.

(n49)Footnote 180. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2343.1. "Authentic act" is defined in La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1833 : "An authentic act is a writing executed before a notary public or other officer authorized to perform that function, in the presence of two witnesses, and signed by each party who executed it, by each witness, and by each notary public before whom it was executed."

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.10

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.10 The Complications of Time and Mixed Property.

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202A

We introduce at this point some of the complications of the marital property classification process. More specifically, some of the difficulties that result from acquisitions that take place over a period of time, and mixed ownership that may result from such acquisitions or otherwise, are briefly explored here. Related issues are covered in more detail in other sections. For purposes of exposition, the subjects discussed here are divided into two subsections, but they are so closely related that in some respects they must be considered together.

§ 37.10(a) Inception of Title vs. Pro Rata Apportionment.

We have seen that acquisitions during marriage are presumptively community property and acquisitions before marriage are separate property. Thus, if John Jones, a single man, pays $15,000 for an automobile, it is a separate property automobile. If Jones is a married man at the time of the purchase the vehicle is presumptively community property. But matters are not always that simple. Suppose, for example, that the acquisition involves a "purchase" of property over a period of time. Real property, automobiles, and other expensive items are frequently not purchased outright; their purchase may be financed over a period of years. n181 Should they be classified for marital property purposes according to the funds used to pay off the indebtedness or in some other fashion?

Some states follow an "inception of title" doctrine, meaning that the marital property classification is fixed at the time of original acquisition. n182 Under this theory, property "purchased" by a single woman one month before marriage, with a 10 percent down payment and the balance payable over five years, would be her separate property regardless of whether the payments are made with community funds. n183

To characterize title purchased on credit (entirely or in part) in a state like Texas, where title is determined at its inception, it is necessary to ascertain the nature of the credit. Classifying loans and credit is comparable to classifying property. As a general rule, the classification of credit follows the same patterns as classifying property.

In the first place, community property theory suggests that credit extended to a married person or couple is presumptively community credit, just as acquisitions of a married person are. The parties can, of course, specifically provide that the credit is extended to the borrower on the borrower's separate account and that the payment of the loan can be required only from the borrower's separate property. This would be generally effective to overcome the community presumption. n184 Another way of putting this same basic idea is to say that the determinative question is to what estate is the lender looking for repayment of the loan. n185

Suppose a married couple purchases property with 10 percent down, out of the husband's separate funds, and the balance is to be paid over five years. The nature of the credit extended at the inception of title would determine the characterization of 90 percent of the title: If it was community credit (as it presumptively would be) the property would be 90 percent community and 10 percent separate property of the husband. Under the inception of title doctrine, the fact that separate property was used to pay off the loan would not make the purchased asset separate. n186

In Arizona, where the down payment is made with separate property and there is a primary borrower, the property has been characterized as separate, even if the lender insists on co-signing by the other spouse. n187

As we have seen in the foregoing discussion, inception-of-title analysis is used in Texas, New Mexico and Washington. An alternative to inception-of-title analysis, used in California, is characterization of title according to the source of the funds used to pay off the indebtedness on the property (in addition to the source of any down payment). In the earlier example, where a single person purchases property one month before marriage, paying 10% down, and payments on the balance are subsequently completed with community funds, title would be characterized as 10 percent separate property of the purchasing spouse and 90 percent community property. n188

Louisiana doesn't quite follow either the inception-of-title or pro rata apportionment approaches to classification of "commingled" n189 property. The statutory definition of separate property includes "property acquired by a spouse with separate things or with separate and community things when the value of the community things is inconsequential in comparison with the value of the separate things used." n190 Unlike most states, then, apportionment of title is not necessary; the question for classification in the case of commingled assets in Louisiana is whether the amount of community property in the mix is "inconsequential." If so, the entire fund is separate property, and if not, the entire fund is community property. n191 Thus, an account opened with about $9,000 from wife's separate funds was entirely separate property even though additional deposits of $60 and $283 were made with community funds. n192 The amount of community property commingled with the separate property was inconsequential. Of course in cases where the commingled community property was consequential, or where separate funds cannot be identified or differentiated from community funds, the entire fund will be classified as community property. n193

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: (pro rata w/1 apportion! or inception w/1 title) w/30 marital w/1 property

§ 37.10(b) Commingled Property and Tracing in General.

We have noted the general presumption that acquisitions during the marriage are community property. Therefore, in any dispute about marital property the burden of proof initially rests with the person contending that the property is, in whole or in part, separate property of one of the spouses. This brings us to the process involved in establishing that proof. In essence, we are simply matching the facts with the definitions of separate and community property.

The separate property proponent may, for example, establish that the property was (1) a donation, not an onerous acquisition; (2) purchased with separate funds, for one spouse's separate estate, rather than with community funds; or (3) purchased and paid for n194 before the marriage. Note that in the second example the asset in question is a "second generation" property, meaning that it was acquired in exchange for some other asset owned by the purchaser. The process used in such cases to link an asset with its original source is referred to as "tracing" -- the asset in question is traced to other assets which can be identified as separate property.

By definition, any onerous acquisition requires an exchange of one valuable asset (money or other property right) for another. I pay $15,000, for example, for a new automobile. Within a year or two, I might trade that car in on another one. n195 Then, a few years later, I could sell the second automobile for $10,000 and use the $10,000 to purchase stock in General Motors. If a dispute subsequently arises over the nature of the ownership of the GM stock, and I want to establish that it is, in whole or in part, my separate property, it would be necessary to "trace" the stock back to other items in this chain and establish that the stock's origins were found in separate property.

And what happens to classification if funds used to purchase property come from different "estates," n196 perhaps the community estate, the separate estate of the husband and the separate estate of the wife? Suppose that (1) I was married at the time I purchased the first automobile and up to the present; (2) I can prove that the $15,000 paid for the first automobile was a bequest from a wealthy uncle; and (3) the second car dealer gave me $10,000 in trade for my first automobile and I paid an additional $10,000 from savings to make up the $20,000 purchase price. I can trace the GM stock back to the $10,000 received when I sold the second car; to the second car; to the first car; to the $15,000 inherited from my uncle. Have we, through this tracing process, established that the stock is separate property? The answer is yes and no. To prove that the stock is entirely separate property, it would be necessary also to prove that the $10,000 in savings was separate property, which might also require additional tracing.

If the $10,000 is community property, however, the GM stock would presumably be one-half my separate property and one-half community property. When spouses mix the property of one marital estate with the property of another marital estate, the result is "commingled" property. Commingling is, of course, a fairly common occurrence.

Tracing and commingling are not always linked -- tracing will often be necessary whether or not community and separate property have been commingled -- but they must frequently be analyzed together. Assuming the savings in the example in the preceding paragraph is community property illustrates both tracing and commingling. Both the process and the proof can be difficult and complex, and we have seen that the burden of overcoming the community presumption is a heavy one. There are, of course, many examples illustrating tracing and commingling in various contexts. n197

Title to property can be mixed between the marital estates whether the state follows an inception of title approach to characterization or a pro rata approach. Suppose, for example, that real property is purchased with a down payment of 20% from the husband's separate funds and a loan for the balance. In California, where the pro rata approach is used, the remaining issue is the source of funds used to pay off the loan. If they are entirely community property, title would be 20% husband's separate property and 80% community property, subject to additional pro rata apportionment for appreciation attributable to each estate over the years. n198 In Texas, which characterizes title at its inception, the unanswered question will be different but title to the property may still be mixed. If the credit used to pay the 80 percent was community credit (which it will presumptively be) in Texas title would be 20% separate property of the husband and 80% community property. n199

Wisconsin has essentially codified the usual rules concerning commingled property:

> Except as provided otherwise in §§ 766.61 [life insurance] and 766.62 [deferred employment benefits], mixing marital property with property other than marital property n200 reclassifies the other property to marital property unless the component of the mixed property which is not marital property can be traced. n201

As discussed in § 37.10(a), Louisiana has a unique provision concerning commingled property. There, separate property includes "property acquired by a spouse with separate things or with separate and community things when the value of the community things is inconsequential in comparison with the value of the separate things used." n202 The question then is not the percentage contributed by each estate but whether the community property contribution was consequential. Tracing will still be necessary, however, since the estate contributing assets but not receiving credit in the form of title may still be entitled to reimbursement. n203

If a spouse wishes to maintain the separate identity of property, there are obvious risks in commingling such property with community property. The burden of proof is on the separate property proponent and it is a heavy burden. Thus, commingling presents the possibility that one spouse can convert large amounts of separate property of the other spouse into community property simply by mixing with it a small amount of community property. Careful record-keeping may avoid this result but records are not always kept or available. The following Comment addresses this problem.

> What of De Minimis Mixing? An obvious matter of concern is the possibility of serious injustice that could result from mixing a minimal amount of marital property with a substantial amount of other property. See Reppy and Samuels, Community Property in the United States, pp. 128 et seq. (1982). For example, one principal payment might be made from marital property on a large mortgage on a valuable piece of individual real property. This would mix marital and individual property. Another example might be one deposit of marital property to a very large individual bank account. However these types of transactions lend themselves to solution by an application of tracing, since the underlying types of property are very much record-oriented. Meeting the burden of proof in a tracing process from the records should usually be possible.
>
> A more difficult case is that of fungible properties -- a large stamp, coin or precious, gem collection, for example. These will create the same types of problems that they already create when they are not in unified ownership. Commingling of fungible goods without being willing to sacrifice ownership is a highly dangerous practice and would remain so under the Act. In reality the spouse who stands to gain from a reclassification arising from a "tainting" of a large collection of fungibles with a small amount of marital property will have to carry the burden of proving that a mixing even occurred. In a sense that imposes the burden on that spouse to trace the marital property into the mixed property, which will be an effective though backward threshold method of tracing. n204

Another significant area involving mixed property concerns the situations where the labor and skill attributable to one estate enhances the capital of another estate. This can happen, for example, when a married individual owns a separate property business and runs that business with community effort and skill. These situations are discussed in § 37.11(c)(5) in connection with classification of interests associated with business and investment.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: commingl! w/15 community w/1 property w/30 tracing or trace! de minimus w/5 comming1! or mix! w/30 community w/1 property

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 181. Discussion of marital debt and liabilities imposed on marital property generally is found in § 37.13.

(n2)Footnote 182. See Cummings v. Anderson, 614 P.2d 1283 (Wash. 1980); E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Garrison, 124 P.2d 939 (Wash. 1949). See also Camp v. Camp, 972 S.W.2d 906, 909 (Tex. Ct. App. 1998) (inception of title determining whether property is separate or community property occurs when a party first has a right of claim to the property by virtue of which title is finally vested).

(n3)Footnote 183. See Hawkins v. Hawkins, 612 S.W.2d 683 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981); English v. Sancez, 796 P.2d 236 (N.M. 1990); Hickey v. Griggs, 738 P.2d 899 (N.M. 1987); Hollingsworth v. Hicks, 258 P.2d 724 (N.M. 1953); Laughlin v. Laughlin, 155 P.2d 1010 (N.M. 1944). See also In re Binge's Estate, 105 P.2d 689 (Wash. 1940). As the Hawkins case illustrates, reimbursement may be due from one marital estate to the other, but title is characterized at its inception. Reimbursement is discussed elsewhere in this chapter.

Where equity requires, qualifications may be applied. When a couple plans to marry, for example, and one of the two takes title in his name alone (before the marriage), in violation of their confidential relationship and contrary to the understanding of the other, a court may impose a constructive trust on the nominal owner's title, notwithstanding the inception of title doctrine. Andrews v. Andrews, 677 S.W.2d 171 (Tex. Civ. App. 1984).

(n4)Footnote 184. See Lepel v. Lepel, 456 P.2d 249 (Idaho 1969); Gapsch v. Gapsch, 277 P.2d 278 (Idaho 1954).

(n5)Footnote 185. Gudelj v. Gudelj, 259 P.2d 656 (Cal. 1953); McElyea v. McElyea, 163 P.2d 635 (N.M. 1945).

(n6)Footnote 186. Fritch v. Fritch, 335 P.2d 43 (Wash. 1959).

(N7)Footnote 187. Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 379 P.2d 893 (Ariz. 1963).

(n8)Footnote 188. See In re Marriage of Marsden, 181 Cal. Rptr. 910 (1982) (title apportioned according to original payment made out of separate property and the amount contributed out of community; appreciation in property was also apportioned based on the percentage of the purchase price paid by each estate); Malmquist v. Malmquist, 792 P.2d 372 (Nev. 1990) (separate loan obtained before marriage; appreciation apportioned according to payments made by each estate). See also In re Marriage of Nored, 971 S.W.2d 328, 331 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998) (status of property as marital or separate is based not on "inception of title" rule, but on "source of funds" approach, under which the character of the property is determined according to the source of funds which financed the purchase).

(n9)Footnote 189. See § 37.10(b).

(n10)Footnote 190. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2341.

(n11)Footnote 191. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2338 provides that "property acquired with community things or with community and separate things, unless classified as separate property under Article 2341" is community property.

(n12)Footnote 192. Succession of Russo, 246 So. 2d 26 (La. Ct. App. 1971). See also Kyson v. Kyson, 596 So. 2d 1308 (La. Ct. App. 1991).

(n13)Footnote 193. Thibodaux v. Thibodaux, 577 So. 2d 758 (La. Ct. App. 1991). Note also, as discussed in § 37.10(b), that the character of commingled funds is still significant in Louisiana, apart from issues of marital property classification. The estate contributing assets but not receiving credit in the form of title may still be entitled to reimbursement. Succession of Russo, 246 So. 2d 26 (La. Ct. App. 1971).

(n14)Footnote 194. In a state following inception-of-title doctrine, it would not be necessary to prove that the property was completely paid for before marriage.

(n15)Footnote 195. These exchanges of one asset for another are sometimes referred to as "mutations." The first mutation in this example changed a sum of money into an automobile; the second mutation was a second car for the first.

(n16)Footnote 196. The term "estate" in this context refers not to the estate of a decedent but simply to the ongoing marital estates during the marriage.

(n17)Footnote 197. The following cases illustrate the process: Franklin v. Franklin, 253 P.2d 337 (Ariz. 1953); Porter v. Porter, 195 P.2d 132 (Ariz. 1948); Blaine v. Blaine, 159 P.2d 786 (Ariz. 1945); In re Marriage of Lucas, 614 P.2d 285 (Cal. 1980); In re Marriage of Mix, 536 P.2d 479 (Cal. 1975); Beck v. Beck, 51 Cal. Rptr. 491 (1966); Lang v. Lang, 711 P.2d 1322 (Idaho Ct. App. 1985); Martsch v. Martsch, 645 P.2d 882 (Idaho 1982); Thibodaux v. Thibodaux, 577 So. 2d 758 (La. Ct. App. 1991); Succession of Norwood v. Norwood, 519 So. 2d 338 (La. Ct. App. 1988); Lane v. Lane, 375 So. 2d 660 (La. Ct. App. 1978); Nichols v. Nichols, 648 P.2d 780 (N.M. 1982); Corley v.

Corley, 594 P.2d 1172 (N.M. 1979); Malmquist v. Malmquist, 792 P.2d 372 (Nev. 1990); Gibson v. Gibson, 614 S.W.2d 487 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981); Pollok v. Pollok, 499 P.2d 231 (Wash. App. 1972); In re Matter of Estate of Lloyd, 487 N.W.2d 647 (Wis. Ct. App. 1992); Oliver v. Oliver, 812 So. 2d 1128 (Miss. App. 2002) (spouse's separate funds from inheritance were not commingled with funds in a checking account so as to become marital property); Lansberry v. Lansberry, 1997 Tex. App. LEXIS 2196 (Tex. App. 1997) (holding that trial court did not err in finding that proceeds of stock account opened before marriage were community property where the account held commingled separate and community funds and records were not clear enough for reliable tracing); DeWitt v. Edward L. Jones Estate, 211 Wis.2d 891 (Wis. App. 1997) (nonmarital real estate found to be marital property under UMPA because of commingling with marital property); Hayton v. Hayton, 1997 Wash. App. LEXIS 634 (Wash. App. 1997) (ruling that where a spouse uses community funds to improve the other spouse's separate property without intending a gift, the right to reimbursement is limited to the increase in value to the property); In re Cupp, 730 P.2d 870 (Ariz. 1986); In re Braud, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179 (1996). (N. 185). Singley v. Singley, No. 1999-CT-00754-SCT, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 305 (Miss. App. 2000) (ex-husband's inheritance was commingled and thus become marital property).

(n18)Footnote 198. See In re Marriage of Marsden, 181 Cal. Rptr. 910 (1982).

(n19)Footnote 199. Bell v. Bell, 593 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. Civ. App. 1980).

(n20)Footnote 200. Note that "property other than marital property" is not the equivalent of "individual property" in Wisconsin. Individual property is essentially the same as separate property in other community property states, and includes "[p]roperty owned at a marriage ... if, at the marriage, both spouses are domiciled in this state." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31. "Property other than marital property" includes individual property and any other property that is not marital (community) property.

(n21)Footnote 201. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.63(1).

(n22)Footnote 202. La. Civ. Code Ann. Art. 2341.

(n23)Footnote 203. Succession of Russo, 246 So. 2d 26 (La. Ct. App. 1971).

(n24)Footnote 204. Unif. Marital Property Act § 14 cmt., 9A U.L.A. 97, 131; Pelanda v. Pelanda, 2002 Ohio 1123 (Ohio App. 2002) (dispute between former husband and wife over the value of the inheritance was de minimis).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.11

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.11 Classification of Particular Assets.

[Go To Supp]

We now proceed to some of the other details of marital property classification, focusing on the many issues that have tested the simplicity of the statutory definitions of separate and community property. Even though the community property system arose out of the civil law tradition, with its emphasis on codification, many of these issues were addressed initially in the courts. Even in common law community property states, much of the law has now been codified. In that sense, the law in the common law jurisdictions has moved somewhat closer to the civil law tradition of preferring governance by codes rather than judicial decision. As would be expected, the Louisiana Civil Code has long addressed more definitional issues than the statutes in common law jurisdictions originally did. With the addition of the Wisconsin Marital Property Act, based on, but even more thorough than, the Uniform Marital Property Act, and a fairly comprehensive California code, the trend toward codification is quite clear.

In this section we consider the codified rules of marital property classification and some of the responses of the courts to issues of classification. After this exploration of details about marital property "title," in § 37.12 we consider issues of management and control of marital property. Powers of management do not necessarily coincide with title, but there are clear connections between the two.

§ 37.11(a) Classification When Spouses Are Separated.

Questions sometimes arise as to the duration of the marital community. n205 In states recognizing common law marriage there may be some doubt as to when the marriage began. n206 A more common problem is the time when a marital community ends. When husband and wife are living separate and apart from one another, the proper classification of earnings is not necessarily clear. Divorce is a conclusive end to a marriage, but in a sense, the "community" of husband and wife can be severed before divorce, upon separation, for example. In recognition of this fact, some states have adopted the rule that earnings during separation are the separate property of the party acquiring them. n207

Questions can arise concerning the definition of "separate and apart." n208 An Idaho statute n209 provided that the earnings and accumulations of only the wife, while she is living separate from her husband, are the wife's separate property. This provision, however, created an unconstitutional distinction in the division of property upon divorce and amounted to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution. n210

In an Arizona case, n211 the wife testified that the marriage was irretrievably broken. Subsequent to that, the husband received lottery winnings, and he asserted that the marital community ended no later than the wife's testimony. The Arizona court did not agree, concluding that a marital community endures in Arizona until a final dissolution is ordered by the court.

§ 37.11(b) Professions and Employment.

§ 37.11(b)(1) Salary and Wages.

Perhaps the most elementary example of community property is pay received for labor during marriage. The fundamental premise of community property is that the product of labor, effort and skill expended by a married person is community property, and therefore, salary and wages earned during the marriage are indisputably community property. n212 Salary and wages earned prior to marriage are, of course, separate property.

§ 37.11(b)(2) Retirement Benefits Generally.

Classification of retirement benefits and related interests has been frequently litigated in recent years, usually in the context of proceedings to dissolve the marriage. Retirement rights are generally viewed as deferred compensation, leading to the conclusion that classification as community or separate will depend on whether there is a marital community n213 during the period the benefits accrue. n214 In earlier times, courts tended to focus on whether retirement and other benefits were "vested" or "contingent" during the marriage. n215 Those that were not vested during the marriage would not be community property. The modern rule, however, is that classification should not depend on whether the benefits are vested or contingent or whether they have matured and are immediately payable. n216 "Pension rights, whether or not vested, represent a property interest; to the extent that such rights derive from employment during coverture, they comprise a community asset subject to division in a dissolution proceeding." n217 With increasing awareness of the importance of dealing with prospective retirement benefits upon dissolution of marriage, some states have adopted statutes directing courts to determine the rights of the parties in retirement benefits. n218 And lawyers assisting parties in dissolution should always raise and deal with the subject of retirement benefits.

If the benefits have accrued in part during marriage and in part while the employee was single, classification will be divided in some way between the community estate and the employee's separate estate. Computations can sometimes present problems. Valuation and apportionment of interests in a retirement plan depend first of all on the type of plan in question. As explained by the Arizona Supreme Court:

> The two major kinds of pension plans are "defined contribution" and "defined benefit" plans. Under a defined contribution plan, a specified amount of money is periodically contributed to a fund by the employer, the employee, or both. This fund is invested and the earnings are divided proportionally among all the plan participants. At any moment in time, there is a specific amount of money assigned to the account of each participant. These plans are thus analogous to a savings account. The total amount of benefits receivable under such a plan depends upon the success of fund investments. By contrast, under a defined benefit plan, the benefits are specified in advance, usually as a percentage of salary and related to years of service, and no account is kept for the employee... .
>
> With either type of plan, its present cash value must be determined before a present lump-sum satisfaction of the parties' interests can be made. Various actuarial calculations are used to discount the present value of the retirement plan to reflect contingencies affecting the eventual payout, including discounts for mortality, interest, probability of vesting, and probability of continued employment. However, not all of these calculations are applicable to every retirement plan:

> Valuation depends in part on the type of plan involved. In a defined contribution plan, employing individual accounts to which contributions are credited, the best estimate of present value is the amount currently credited to the employee's account. An adjustment, however, must be made if the account figure is not vested or if it is not payable when the employee dies prior to reaching retirement age. If those factors are present, then the account balance must be discounted for the probability of vesting and for the probability of survival to retirement. n219

Once a value is placed on the benefits, it is often necessary to apportion them between the estates which own the benefits. If the marriage is in force throughout the entire period retirement benefits are accruing, the benefits would, of course, be 100% community property, and the apportionment would simply be 50% ownership in each spouse. In other cases, a "time rule" is probably the most frequently used method for apportioning benefits. Ownership of community property is shared equally by the spouses, meaning that each owns a one-half interest. A pro rata apportionment formula to determine the non-employee spouse's percentage of ownership of the retirement fund might be:

> (no. months married under the plan / no. of months employed under the plan as of the date of retirement) x value of benefits as of the date of retirement / 2. n220

This method is appropriate only if the amount of the benefits is substantially related to the number of years of service. n221 In cases where the dissolution of marriage precedes the retirement, this formula may have the effect of improperly skewing the apportionment. This would occur, for example, when the employee's retirement benefits were increased after the divorce. Some jurisdictions have accordingly indicated that the benefits should be apportioned based upon the value of the community's interest at the time of the divorce, not the date of retirement. n222

Wisconsin has a relatively detailed statute responding to a number of the issues that have been litigated in other states:

> (1)(a) Except as provided in par. (b), a deferred employment benefit attributable to employment of a spouse occurring after the determination date is marital property.
>
> (b) A deferred employment benefit attributable to employment of a spouse occurring after the determination date is mixed property if, after the determination date and during the period of employment giving rise to the benefit, the employed spouse or his or her spouse are at any time not domiciled in this state. The marital property component of that mixed property is the amount which results from multiplying the entire benefit by a fraction, the numerator of which is the period of employment giving rise to the benefit that occurred after the determination date and during marriage and the denominator of which is the total period of employment giving rise to the benefit.
>
> (2) A deferred employment benefit attributable to employment of a spouse occurring while the spouse is married and partly before and partly after the determination date is mixed property. The marital property component of the mixed property is the amount which results from multiplying the entire benefits by a fraction, the numerator of which is the period of employment giving rise to the benefit that occurred after the determination date and during marriage and the denominator of which is the total period of employment giving rise to the benefit.
>
> (2m) Unless provided otherwise in a decree or marital property agreement, a mixed property deferred employment benefit shall be valued as of a dissolution or an employee spouse's death.
>
> (3) Ownership or disposition provisions of a deferred employment benefit which conflict with sub. (1) or (2) are ineffective between spouses or former spouses or between a surviving spouse and a person claiming under a deceased spouse's disposition at death.
>
> (4) If a deferred employment benefit plan administrator makes payments or takes actions in accordance with the plan and the administrator's records, the administrator is not liable because of those payments or actions.

(5) The marital property interest of the non-employee spouse in a deferred employment benefit plan terminates at the death of the non-employee spouse if he or she predeceases the employee spouse. n223

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 (retirement w/3 benefit!) or pension!

§ 37.11(b)(3) Government Retirement Benefits.

Absent statutory provisions to the contrary, retirement benefits from the military and other government pension plans are generally treated in a fashion comparable to private retirement plans. n224 One significant difference for federal retirement plans is that under the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, state community property law can be overridden. Thus, in 1979, the United States Supreme Court ruled that benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act pension could not be diverted, through a state's community property laws, from the employee to the employee's spouse. n225

A similar development involving military retirement and a clash between the states and the federal government has commanded a considerable amount of judicial and legislative attention in the past 15 years. Two years after Hisquierdo, in McCarty v. McCarty, the court held that a California court had improperly awarded part of the husband's military retirement benefits to the wife. n226 The court found that the application of state community property law conflicted with the federal military retirement scheme, which required that the retirement pay be treated as separate property of the serviceman or woman. This was a significant departure from earlier treatment of military retirement pay and individuals and community property states immediately responded.

A major question in the states concerned whether McCarty was to be applied retroactively. That issue was presented in the state courts with varying results. Representative of the answers that were generally adopted is the position that McCarty could not apply to judgments which became final before the date of the McCarty decision. n227 The rule of McCarty was applied, however, in cases that were on appeal when McCarty was decided. n228

Congress also responded quickly to the dilemmas created by the McCarty decision. In September of 1982, they enacted the "Uniformed Services Former Spouse's Protection Act." n229 This turn of events was no doubt enthusiastically welcomed by community property jurisdictions, but in a sense it complicated even further the struggle in the states to develop an effective approach to the problems of military retirement. In effect, the Act overturned the McCarty decision, but it created another set of retroactivity problems. Although the stated effective date of the Act was February 1, 1983, Congressional intent appeared to be complete nullification of the McCarty decision. n230 Another flood of cases followed. The courts tended to give the statute a broad interpretation, saying that decrees entered between the date of McCarty and the date the statute was enacted could be reopened, although in some cases settlements were found equitable and the matters were not, in fact, reopened. n231

§ 37.11(b)(4) Disability Benefits.

Disability benefits have been somewhat difficult to characterize. Several approaches appear in the decisions. According to one popular view, they are essentially a replacement for lost earnings and, as such, would presumably be classified according to whether the recipient is married or single during the period for which earnings are replaced. n232 Complications arise, however, because of the close connection between retirement and disability pay. When the disabled spouse can choose between regular retirement pay and disability retirement, courts have been reluctant to ignore the spouse's community property claim even when benefits are not payable during the marriage. To the extent the benefits represent or replace deferred compensation or retirement pay, they have been given the same treatment as retirement benefits. n233 The decision in such cases depends on the nature of the disability program and the characterization of the payments. If the payments derive from injury or from lost earning capacity, rather than work or labor, courts will classify them according to the time they are received. Some plans are seen as a mixture of retirement pay and compensation for lost earnings; in that event, the retirement portion is classified as deferred compensation, and characterization of the portion replacing lost earnings depends upon whether it is replacing earnings during the marriage or after dissolution. n234

Some disability plans have been compared to worker's compensation benefits and classified as separate property if received after termination of the marriage. n235 A Louisiana court has said that disability benefits that do not qualify as deferred compensation should be classified in the same fashion as worker's compensation and tort damage awards. n236

Disability coverage can be purchased by individuals from insurance companies. Such insurance is not necessarily related to employment except in the sense that it is designed to protect the earning capacity of the insured. Some courts have classified these insurance benefits according to the source of premium payments. n237 Under this approach, if the policy was paid for with community funds the benefits are classified as community property. This view has been criticized because disability is fundamentally different from life insurance; it is, rather, protection of earning power and therefore should be classified the same way earnings are -- as community property for the period during the marriage and as separate property if received after the marriage. n238

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 disability w/3 benefit!

§ 37.11(b)(5) Worker's Compensation and Severance Pay.

Worker's compensation benefits are similar to disability benefits: Both compensate the employee for loss of earning capacity. If received during marriage they are community property and if received after the marriage they are separate property. n239 Severance pay is not generally characterized as a form of deferred compensation and therefore will be classified only as of the date it is received. n240

This conclusion again is based on the nature of the benefit. If the severance pay is received after the divorce, and the payments are based not on some contractual arrangement with the employer or an insurance company, but on the loss of employment, the pay will be viewed as consideration for termination, not as consideration for community effort, and therefore would be classified as separate property of the employee. n241 If, however, the right is derived from the terms of employment, the pay might be classified as community property, at least in part. n242 Where the payment is derived from a private contract of insurance, and the community pays the premiums, the community estate may have an interest in the payments unless the payments are intended to replace post-dissolution income that would be separate property of the insured. n243

§ 37.11(b)(6) Profit-sharing and Stock Options.

Other benefits of employment available to some are incentives such as profit-sharing plans and stock options. The analysis in such cases has been similar to the analysis of retirement benefits: These payments are not gifts from the employer but rather are another form of compensation for work performed. To the extent the benefits have vested during the marriage, they are classified as community property. n244 The key date for allocation of stock options between a divorcing husband and wife appears to be the time the stocks become vested, as opposed to the dates the options could be exercised. n245 This is similar to the rule applied to retirement benefits, although in that case, "vesting" in the usual sense of that word is not required. In the context of a variation on the question, it is likely that technical vesting would not be required for stock options either. The key point is when did ownership begin, not when were all contingencies removed. n246

§ 37.11(b)(7) Life Insurance Provided by the Employer.

Life insurance policies n247 are sometimes provided by employers as a benefit of employment. Such a policy on the life of a married person has been characterized as community property even though the premiums are not deducted from the employee's salary. n248 The reasoning, of course, is that the insurance is a benefit earned by employment during marriage.

Life insurance provided by an employer as a benefit of employment can be easily overlooked, giving rise to conflicting claims, such as by a surviving spouse and former spouse. It is necessary to address both the relationship between the employee and the spouse and the contractual relationship with the insurance company. A Washington couple divorced in 1978 and in a settlement agreement the wife transferred to the husband as his separate property all life insurance policies on his life. The husband did not, however, change the beneficiary designation of a group policy on the employer's records, and when the husband remarried and then died, a dispute over the insurance proceeds ensued between the former wife, who was the named beneficiary, and the widow, who claimed the proceeds as community property. In a decision overruling earlier cases, the Washington Supreme Court concluded that the character of funds used to pay the most recent term should determine whether a term life insurance policy is separate or community property. n249 In a "Solomonesque" twist, the court awarded one-half of the proceeds to the widow (the policy was community property of the second marriage) and one-half to the former spouse (named as beneficiary in the policy, thus receiving the insured's one-half interest). n250

§ 37.11(b)(8) Social Security Benefits.

Social Security benefits have been compared to defined benefit pension plans, suggesting that they should be treated as deferred "compensation." n251 This opinion has not prevailed and was abandoned even by the court that proposed it, which reasoned that the comprehensive federal regulation of Social Security indicates that Congress had preempted the field, preventing a division of benefits under state law. n252 It is not entirely clear, however, that state law is entirely preempted. For example, should disability benefits under Social Security be treated in the same way as other disability pay? A Texas trial court thought so, but the appellate court reversed on the basis of preemption. n253 However, Louisiana resolves the preemption problem by allocating to the other spouse ownership of community property equal in value to the social security benefit:

> When federal law or the provisions of a statutory pension or retirement plan, state or federal, including but not limited to social security, preempt or preclude community classification of property that would have been classified as community property under the principles of the Civil Code, the spouse of the person entitled to such property shall be allocated or assigned the ownership of community property equal in value to such property prior to the division of the rest of the community property. n254

§ 37.11(c) Business and Investment.

In § 37.11(b) we focused on "Professions and Employment," discussing various property rights and benefits associated with labor and service. In this section we concentrate on a few classification problems and questions generally associated with "capital" rather than labor. There is not necessarily a bright line between these two, of course, but this categorization seems useful for purposes of organizing the discussion.

§ 37.11(c)(1) Business and Professional Goodwill.

We have discussed salary and other forms of compensation related to employment, such as retirement benefits. In § 37.11(c)(4), infra we explore "rents, issues and profits," income derived from property or investments owned by one or both spouses. In some cases, this income will result from ownership of a business or professional practice. In addition to profits and other physical assets, where one or both spouses own a business, or engage in a professional practice, the less tangible form of wealth known as "goodwill" presents serious marital property issues.

Professor Blumberg has defined goodwill as follows:

> Goodwill is widely understood today as a constellation of inseparable intangible assets that inhere in a business or practice and enable it to realize supernormal earnings. The earnings are supernormal in the sense that they exceed the sum of the market value of the manager's labor and a reasonable return on all tangible assets and individually quantifiable intangible assets. The supernormal earnings are usually characterized as excess earnings; their existence is both an indicator of goodwill and an important factor in measurement of its value. n255

Goodwill associated with a business has generally been subject to classification as community property. n256 Goodwill associated with a "professional practice" has presented an apparently more difficult problem. The reason for the difficulty may be the perception that "professions" are distinctive because they involve personal service; thus the "business" of a professional is essentially wrapped up in the practitioner and can only be continued by that person. In effect, there seem to be two slightly different distinctions drawn in goodwill cases. "Business" or "commercial" goodwill is sometimes distinguished from "professional" goodwill. A related but not identical distinction has been made between "marketable" and "unmarketable" goodwill. Because professional practices have been seen as "personal," and not readily transferable, any goodwill associated with them is sometimes not seen as a marital asset.

Blumberg addresses whether market transferability is and should be required for recognition and division of goodwill at divorce. She writes that a minority of eleven states recognize only goodwill that can be transferred in the market. n257 A majority of states, however, recognize both marketable and non-marketable goodwill as "marital property" in the context of divorce. n258

Treatment of "professional" goodwill, whether in those terms (professional vs. commercial) or in terms of marketability, has not been uniform but a trend might be discernible. A California court was perhaps the first in the second half of the 20th century to recognize the possibility that professional goodwill was community property divisible on dissolution of the marriage. n259 A Texas court had much earlier suggested as much, n260 but that conclusion was not confirmed by the state's highest court. In a fairly recent decision, the Texas Supreme Court took the general position that professional goodwill simply cannot be separated from the professional person, and therefore is not generally community property capable of division upon dissolution of a marriage. n261 Professor James W. Paulsen states: "In the two decades since Nail, every other community property jurisdiction has answered the professional goodwill question contrary to Texas, and the inequity of the Texas rule is becoming more and more apparent." n262 Even later Texas decisions have recognized the possibility of divisible professional goodwill where it is determined that it exists independently of the personal ability of the professional spouse and has commercial value. n263 This test is similar to a Wisconsin case involving a dental practice, in which the court required a showing that the goodwill was marketable and had value over and above the practice's assets and the professional's skills and services. n264 Certainly the weight of authority has moved in the direction established by California, and professional goodwill will generally be subject to classification as community property, at least in some cases. n265 There are instances where courts have reached a contrary conclusion, but these may be explained by specific circumstances. For example, it has been held that the professional goodwill of a lawyer in a large firm is not a divisible marital asset. n266

Whether the trend suggested by Professor Paulsen in community property states will move most states to accept professional goodwill on the same basis as commercial goodwill is yet to be seen. At the moment, it appears that a number of states will continue to focus on marketability as a test of whether goodwill can be treated as marital or community property. It is unlikely, however, that many future decisions will turn on the distinction between "professional" and "commercial."

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 goodwill w/5 business or professional

§ 37.11(c)(2) Professional Education and Licenses.

More than a few divorcing spouses have tried to take claims to professional skills and attributes one step further than the claims to a share of professional goodwill. Some have asserted a claim to benefits from their partners' professional degrees and licenses acquired during the marriage. Like the goodwill claims, this claim can arise in both common law property states and community property states.

The basic issue in these cases has been whether professional degrees and licenses can be classified as property. If so, in community property states, a second question is whether it is community property, half-owned by the spouse and subject to division in divorce. It seems likely that a degree or license, to the extent it was earned during the marriage, would be characterized as community property, if it is property at all.

States have been reluctant, however, to classify professional degrees and licenses as property. Unlike goodwill of an existing business, the value of a degree or a license seems to be too indefinite and conjectural for courts to consider as property. n267 The states have, nevertheless, recognized a need for some recompense for the person who has supported his or her spouse through the years of acquiring professional education and licensing, only to find the marriage dissolving soon thereafter. California, for example, has provided for reimbursement by statute:

> (a) "Community contributions to education or training" as used in this section means payments made with community or quasi-community property for education or training or for the repayment of a loan incurred for education or training, whether the payments were made while the parties were resident in this state or resident outside this state.
>
> (b) Subject to the limitations provided in this section, upon dissolution of marriage or legal separation of the parties:
>
> (1) The community shall be reimbursed for community contributions to education or training of a party that substantially enhances the earning capacity of the party. The amount reimbursed shall be with interest at the legal rate, accruing from the end of the calendar year in which the contributions were made.
>
> (2) A loan incurred during marriage for the education or training of a party shall not be included among the liabilities of the community for the purpose of division pursuant to this division but shall be assigned for payment by the party. n268

The statute goes on to provide for equitable modification of the reimbursement in appropriate circumstances, including substantial benefit to the community from the education, training or loan; n269 offsetting education or training received by the other party for which community contributions were made; and reduction of the need of the party for support as a result of gainful employment made possible by the education or training. Reimbursement pursuant to this statute is the exclusive remedy of the community or a party "for the education or training and any resulting enhancement of the earning capacity of a party." n270

Louisiana has also provided for reimbursement of expenditures for education to the extent the claimant did not benefit from the increased earning power during the marriage. n271 Washington and Wisconsin have also recognized the possibility of reimbursement to compensate the spouse supporting the degree earner. n272

A Texas decision voices a somewhat different analysis of the reimbursement question:

> The rule is sometimes stated that on dissolution of the marriage, if one party has contributed separate property, or if community funds have been applied to the enhancement of the property of the other, reimbursement is allowed. We do not have this here. Any reimbursement here is referable only to the education of one of the spouses, which we have held is not a property right, and which was admittedly paid for from community funds. Moreover, there are no pleadings seeking reimbursement. n273

For these reasons, the court concluded that the trial court erred in awarding $20,000 as a part of the division of the estate of the parties as reimbursement for community expenses for education of one spouse.

At least one common law court has suggested a similar analysis:

> If the plan fails by reason of the termination of the marriage, we do not regard the supporting spouse's consequent loss of expectation by itself as any more compensable or demanding of solicitude than the loss of expectations of any other spouse who, with the hope and anticipation of the endurance of the relationship ... has invested a portion of his or her life, youth, energy and labor in a failed marriage. n274

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 professional w/2 (degree! or education or skill! or license!)

§ 37.11(c)(3) Appreciating Assets in General.

In several states at least, a distinction is drawn for purposes of classification between income from property (rents, profits and increase) -- discussed in § 37.11(c)(4), infra -- and an increase in the value of property. In all states, increases in value of property over time (appreciation) take the same character as the original property. One important question is whether the property has experienced any change in kind. If not, that is if the only change is in value, ownership of the property does not change. Thus a painting purchased with $5,000 in community funds, which doubles in value during the marriage, is $10,000 worth of community property. Community real property valued at $100,000 early in the marriage may be community property worth $200,000 at the time of dissolution. It is necessary, however, as illustrated in the following sections, to investigate the source of the increase in value. If, for example, the real property has increased in value because of a substantial change wrought by one spouse's separate estate (an improvement placed on the property and paid for with separate funds), in some states the title will not be 100% community. n275

§ 37.11(c)(4) Income from Property and Investments.

A common type of increase is the income derived from property, commonly referred to as "rents, issues and profits." This category is somewhat more complicated than pay received for labor. Profit derived from community property is always community property. There is not a uniform rule of classification, however, for rents and profits earned from separate property. Statutory definitions of separate and community property resolve the issue in some of the states.

In Arizona, n276 California, n277 Nevada, n278 New Mexico, n279 and Washington, n280 rents, issues and profits are included in statutory definitions of separate property. In states where parties are given relatively complete contractual autonomy, this characterization can be modified by agreement between the parties.

Two states classify income from separate property as community property but allow the owning spouse to change that classification unilaterally. Louisiana, for example, has the following statute:

> The natural and civil fruits of the separate property of a spouse, minerals produced from or attributable to a separate asset, and bonuses, delay rentals, royalties, and shut-in payments arising from mineral leases are community property. Nevertheless, a spouse may reserve them as his separate property > by a declaration made in an authentic act or in an act under private signature duly acknowledged. n281

Wisconsin follows the same basic approach as Louisiana but spells out more detail concerning the statement or declaration that would change the classification:

> Income attributable to all or specified property other than marital property, with respect to which a spouse has executed under s. 766.59 a statement unilaterally designating that income as his or her individual property, is individual property. n282

The statement mentioned must be in writing, and within five days of the signing, the executing spouse must deliver a copy of the statement to the other spouse. n283 The statute also allows premarital statements under similar terms and also provides for revocation of the statement.

Texas definitions of separate and community property do not explicitly state the character of income from separate property. Because the income is not classified as separate property it is community property. n284 The Texas Constitution now allows some autonomy on this subject:

> [S]pouses also may from time to time, by written instrument, agree between themselves that the income or property from all or part of the separate property then owned or which thereafter might be acquired by only one of them, shall be the separate property of that spouse... n285

In a related change in Texas law, also mentioned in connection with presumptions, the Texas Constitution now includes the following passage: "[I]f one spouse makes a gift of property to the other that gift is presumed to include all the income or property which might arise from that gift of property." n286

In a long and awkward sentence, Idaho also characterizes the income from separate property as community property, subject to some qualification:

> The income of all property, separate or community, is community property unless the conveyance by which it is acquired provides or both spouses, by written agreement specifically so providing, declare that all or specifically designated property and the income from all or the specifically designated property shall be the separate property of one of the spouses or the income from all or specifically designated separate property be the separate property of the spouse to whom the property belongs. n287

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 income w/3 property or investment

§ 37.11(c)(5) Mixing Labor of One Estate with Capital of Another.

Wisconsin's Marital Property Act provides as follows:

> Application by one spouse of substantial labor, effort, inventiveness, physical or intellectual skill, creativity or managerial activity to either spouse's property other than marital property creates marital property attributable to that application if both of the following apply:
>
> (a) Reasonable compensation is not received for the application.
>
> (b) Substantial appreciation of the property results from the application. n288

Paragraph (1) of this statute simply states the usual rule that results from commingling and the community property presumption: the separate property proponent must trace that part which she claims is separate to separate contribution. n289

Paragraph (2) raises another issue: Commingling of community effort, skill, etc. with a separate asset to create something of mixed character, and possibly of greater value or worth. The Wisconsin statute is based on § 14 of the Uniform Marital Property Act. The Comment to the Uniform Act provides the following elaboration:

> The section deals with another extremely important issue. It is the situation arising from the application to the individual property of one spouse of personal effort by the other spouse and carrying the burden of proving its elements will be difficult. The rule of the section is strict. It articulates a bias against creation of marital property from such an act unless the effort has been substantial and has been responsible for substantial appreciation. Routine, normal, and usual effort is not substantial. Though drawing a precise line as to what is substantial and what is not is not possible, the section does not create opportunity to translate for recognizing minimal effort to a property interest. The section is only satisfied by proof of (1) a truly substantial effort followed by (2) a truly substantial appreciation attributable to the effort for which (3) no reasonable compensation was received.

The values involved may include income and capital, and questions may arise as to both. As to income, in jurisdictions where all income during marriage is community property, n290 whether earned on separate or community property, classification is not an issue: All income earned during marriage will be community property. Classification of income will also not be an issue when it is consumed in the course of business.

The states have generally either allowed a change in classification as a result of community labor or have provided for reimbursement in appropriate cases. It may be that there is little practical difference in the ultimate outcome in cases from state to state.

In California, community labor expended to preserve or enhance separate title can be reflected in a change in ownership. The problem of characterizing title to income and capital has been approached from two directions, depending on the circumstances. In some cases, a reasonable rate of return on capital (separate property) is assumed and attributed to the separate estate; the balance of the income and any appreciation is allocated to the community estate on the theory that it resulted from the efforts, labor, and skill of the spouse during marriage. n291 In other cases the matter has been approached from the other direction: A reasonable wage or salary is allocated to the community estate for the community efforts, labor, and skill, and the balance of the income and any appreciation is attributed to the separate estate. n292

In Texas, these problems have caused a fair amount of difficulty. Texas follows the inception of title doctrine, n293 meaning that characterization is determined at the time of purchase. Subsequent contributions from a non-owning estate may result in a right to reimbursement but generally have not changed the characterization of title. In this area, that principle conflicts with the fundamental premise that the results of the efforts, labor and skill of a married person are community property. Even so, Texas has opted to follow a reimbursement approach, concluding that "the reimbursement theory more nearly affords justice to both the community and separate estates." n294 Under that theory, > the community will be reimbursed for the value of the time and effort expended by either or both spouses to enhance the separate estate of either, other than that reasonably necessary to manage and preserve the separate estate, less the remuneration received for that time and effort in the form of salary, bonus, dividends and other fringe benefits, those items being community property when received. n295

Vallone v. Vallone n296 is a representative example of the issues that arise in this area. In that case, the husband worked in a restaurant owned and operated by his father. After a few years, he received the assets of the business as a gift from his father. The husband subsequently incorporated the business, using both the gift and community assets as capital. At that point, separate capital (the gift from father) represented about 47% of the value of the corporation. The original capitalized value of the corporation was just under $20,000, and under the husband's direction the business was very successful. He received about $200,000 per year in salary and bonuses, and at the time of the divorce the court found the business to be worth $1,000,000.

The wife, of course, claimed that the interest of the community estate in the business was large, consisting not only of the original community capital (53% of the original value) but also a considerable amount of community labor put into the business by the husband. The trial court nevertheless determined that the business was only 53% community property and awarded the wife 70% of the community property stock in the company. The court of civil appeals reversed, reasoning that the trial court did not take into consideration "the large increment to appellee's separate property by reason of community labor." n297 That decision, however, was reversed by the Texas Supreme Court, which affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The Supreme Court noted that a spouse may expend a reasonable amount of talent or labor in management of his or her separate estate without impressing community character upon the property. n298 They also discussed the possibility of an equitable right of reimbursement in this case but concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in dividing the community estate of the parties. n299

Actual application of these theories does not necessarily lead to clear and precise answers. W.S. McClanahan has pointed out, for example, two possible outcomes in applying the reimbursement theory, depending on whether the reimbursement is based on the value of the spouse's time and effort (the "cost-oriented approach") or on the increase in the value of the stock or other capital asset caused by the effort (the "result-oriented approach"). n300

There is apparently one exception to the non-title theory in Texas. In Vallone, the courts concluded that the corporation was not operated as the husband's "alter ego." If a separate property corporation is deemed the alter ego of the owning spouse, at divorce the corporate veil is pierced and the corporation is treated as a proprietorship; profits of the business are, in that event, considered community property. n301

The Idaho court has also suggested that the question is whether the community has received fair and adequate compensation for its labor. n302 The trial court should consider the nature and size of the business, the nature and extent of community involvement in the business, and the growth patterns of the business. The proper inquiry is then whether the over-all compensation received by the community is equivalent to the compensation the business would have had to pay a non-owner employee to perform the same services.

It will probably be necessary to continue to resolve these problems on a case-by-case basis, but perhaps the bias against creation of community property reflected in the Wisconsin statute and the Uniform Marital Property Act reflect a trend. The approaches taken in other states are similar to the analyses described above. n303

The converse of the situations described above can also arise. In a California case, for example, the court held that when a community property asset was enhanced by labor or capital of a surviving spouse, following the death of the other spouse, heirs of the survivor should receive a greater share of the asset than the heirs of the predeceased spouse. n304

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 (effort or labor) w/5 appli! w/5 individual w/2 property

§ 37.11(d) Personal Injury Awards.

Awards received as a result of personal injury to a spouse do not fit neatly into either the category of "lucrative" acquisitions (gifts) or the category of "onerous" acquisitions (compensation for effort). Even so, there is a fair amount of consistency from state to state in treatment of personal injury awards. Classification generally depends on the nature of the loss and the award compensating for that loss. The states have drawn a distinction between damages for "personal" or individual injuries, such as bodily injury and pain and suffering, and losses to the community, such as lost earnings during the marriage and medical expenses. n305

Some states have spelled out these distinctions by statute. Nevada's general statutory definition of separate property includes "that acquired [after marriage] ... by an award for personal injury damages ..." n306 In another section the statute provides for "segregation of damage awards when spouses sue jointly":

> When a husband and wife sue jointly, any damages awarded shall be segregated as follows:
>
> 1. if the action is for personal injuries, damages assessed for:
>
> (a) Personal injuries and pain and suffering, to the injured spouse as his separate property.
>
> (b) Loss of comfort and society, to the spouse who suffers such loss.
>
> (c) Loss of services and hospital and medical expenses, to the spouses as community property. n307

The Texas statute simply provides:

> (a) A spouse's separate property consists of:
>
> ...
>
> (3) the recovery for personal injuries sustained by the spouse during the marriage, except any recovery for loss of earning capacity during marriage. n308

Louisiana addresses damages for personal injury with the following statute:

> Damages due to personal injuries sustained during the existence of the community by a spouse are separate property.
>
> Nevertheless, the portion of the damages attributable to expenses incurred by the community as a result of the injury, or in compensation of the loss of community earnings, is community property. If the community regime is terminated otherwise than by the death of the injured spouse, the portion of the damages attributable to the loss of earnings that would have accrued after termination of the community property regime is the separate property of the injured spouse. n309

Wisconsin's statute provides:

> (7) Property acquired by a spouse during marriage and after the determination date is individual property if acquired by any of the following means:
>
> ...
>
> (f) As a recovery for personal injury except for the amount of that recovery attributable to expenses paid or otherwise satisfied from marital property and except for the amount attributable to loss of income during marriage. n310

The California statutory treatment of damages for personal injuries is more involved: n311

§ 780. Damages for personal injury to married person as community property

Except as provided in Section 781 and subject to the rules of allocation set forth in Section 2603, n312 money and other property received or to be received by a married person in satisfaction of a judgment for damages for personal injuries, or pursuant to an agreement for the settlement or compromise of a claim for such damages, is community property if the cause of action for the damages arose during the marriage.

§ 781. Cases where damages for personal injury are separate property

(a) Money or other property received or to be received by a married person [in the manner described in § 780] is the separate property of the injured person if the cause of action for the damages arose as follows:

(1) After the entry of a judgment of dissolution of a marriage or legal separation of the parties.

(2) While either spouse, if he or she is the injured person, is living separate from the other spouse.

(b) Notwithstanding subdivision (a), if the spouse of the injured person has paid expenses by reason of the personal injuries from separate property or from the community property, the spouse is entitled to reimbursement of the separate property or the community property for those expenses from the separate property received by the injured person under subdivision (a).

(c) Notwithstanding subdivision (a), if one spouse has a cause of action against the other spouse which arose during the marriage of the parties, money or property paid or to be paid by or on behalf of a party to the party's spouse of that marriage in satisfaction of a judgment for damages for personal injuries to that spouse, or pursuant to an agreement for the settlement or compromise of a claim for the damages is the separate property of the injured spouse.

§ 782. Injuries to married person by spouse

(a) Where an injury to a married person is caused in whole or in part by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of the person's spouse, the community property may not be used to discharge the liability of the tort-feasor spouse to the injured spouse or the liability to make contribution to a joint tort-feasor until the separate property of the tort-feasor spouse, not exempt from enforcement of a money judgment, is exhausted.

(b) This section does not prevent the use of community property to discharge a liability referred to in subdivision (a) if the injured spouse gives written consent thereto after the occurrence of the injury.

(c) This section does not affect the right to indemnity provided by an insurance or other contract to discharge the tort-feasor spouse's liability, whether or not the consideration given for the contract consisted of community property.

§ 783. Injuries to married person by third party; extent concurring negligence of spouse allowable as defense

If a married person is injured by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of a person other than the married person's spouse, the fact that the negligent or wrongful act or omission of the spouse of the injured person was a concurring cause of the injury is not a defense in an action brought by the injured person to recover damages for the injury except in cases where the concurring negligent or wrongful act or omission would be a defense if the marriage did not exist.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 personal w/1 injury w/5 award!

§ 37.11(e) Insurance Policies.

Insurance comes in many forms and can cover almost anything. Insurance proceeds compensating for some losses, such as the loss of personal or real property, will generally be treated as a mutation of the property they replace, thus taking on the same character as that property had. One spouse cannot convert the other spouse's separate property into community property with the proceeds of insurance on the property, even though the insurance was purchased with the non-owning spouse's separate funds. n313

The treatment of life insurance policies is somewhat more complicated. n314 Policies of life insurance can have two different types of value:

rights in the policy during the life of the insured including any cash value in the policy, and rights to the proceeds upon the death of the insured. Marital property issues can arise in both cases.

Life insurance has traditionally been classified according to the source of the premium payments. n315 The most comprehensive statutory treatment n316 of life insurance, however, provides as follows:

(3) Except as provided in subs. (4) to (6): n317

> (a) 1. Except as provided in subd. 2, n318 the ownership interest and proceeds of a policy issued after the determination date which designates the insured as the owner are marital property, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums on the policy.
>
> (b) The ownership interest and proceeds of a policy issued before the determination date which designates the insured as the owner are mixed property if a premium on the policy is paid from marital property after the determination date, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums on that policy after the initial payment of a premium on it from marital property. The marital property component of the ownership interest and proceeds is the amount which results from multiplying the entire ownership interest and proceeds by a fraction, the numerator of which is the period during marriage that the policy was in effect after the date on which a premium was paid from marital property and the denominator of which is the entire period that the policy was in effect.
>
> (c) 1. Except as provided in subd. 2, n319 the ownership interest and proceeds of a policy which designates the spouse of the insured as the owner are individual property of its owner, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums on the policy.
>
> (d) This chapter does not affect the ownership interest and proceeds of a policy that designates a person other than either spouse as the owner, if no premium on the policy is paid from marital property

> after the determination date. If a premium on the policy is paid from marital property after the determination date, the ownership interest and proceeds of the policy are in part property of the designated owner of the policy and in part marital property of the spouses, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums on that policy after the initial payment of a premium on it from marital property. The marital property component of the ownership interest and proceeds is the amount which results from multiplying the entire ownership interest and proceeds by a fraction, the numerator of which is the period during marriage that the policy was in effect after the date on which a premium was paid from marital property and the denominator of which is the entire period that the policy was in effect.

This Wisconsin statute can be confusing, in part because it necessarily focuses on the transition from common law property to community property. It essentially breaks classification into four categories of cases:

1. Policies issued after marriage designating the insured as the owner;

2. Policies issued before marriage designating the insured as the owner;

3. Policies designating the spouse of the insured as the owner; and

4. Policies designating a person other than either spouse as the owner.

Assuming that all events occur after the effective date of the act, the ownership interest and proceeds from policies in the first category are marital property, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums. As to policies issued before marriage (category #2), the ownership interest and proceeds become mixed property as soon as a premium is paid from marital property.

Policies designating the spouse of the insured as the owner are that person's individual property, regardless of the classification of property used to pay premiums. The fourth category of cases is not affected by the statute if no premium is paid from marital property. If marital property is used to pay a premium, the ownership interest and proceeds are in part property of the designated owner and in part marital property.

In Texas, the inception of title principle has been applied to life insurance, resulting in a separate property characterization of proceeds of policies issued to the husband before marriage, even though some of the premiums were paid with community funds. n320 During the life of the insured, any cash surrender value is attributed to the estate or estates that own the policy. Thus, cash surrender value of a policy acquired during marriage is presumptively community property. n321 Where the insured spouse dies, survived by the beneficiary spouse, a gift to the survivor is presumed and the proceeds are the surviving beneficiary's separate property. n322 As noted in a recent opinion, n323 Texas courts have struggled with the treatment of life insurance proceeds when the insured names a beneficiary other than the surviving spouse. A person does not have authority to dispose of an ex-spouse's half of the community proceeds of a community owned life insurance policy simply by a change of beneficiary. At the death of an insured spouse, however, with a third person or the decedent's estate designated as beneficiary, the designation will be valid in the absence of actual or constructive fraud. The pivotal question, says the court, is whether the gift of the surviving spouse's share of the community proceeds was unfair to that spouse, and factors considered in making that determination include the size of the gift in relation to the total size of the community estate, the adequacy of the remaining estate to support the surviving spouse, and the relationship between the insured and the beneficiary.

A 1993 Washington opinion compares term life insurance to disability insurance policies. n324

The court stated:

> Certainly the two types of policies share some common characteristics. Both are contracts and > historically a right of contract enforcement is a property interest. Both insure against the risk of economic loss, although in the case of life insurance there also may be donative intent of a testamentary nature. Neither type of policy, in its pure form, accrues cash value. Both types of policies insure against a stated risk for a specified policy period. Both types of policies may be expected to return, in the event of the happening of the contingency insured against (death or disability while the policy is in force), a far greater return than merely the amount invested, together with interest thereon. Both types of policies require the payment of money in exchange for the benefit provided. An insurance policy of any kind is onerously acquired, in exchange for the payment of funds.

>
> There are some differences, as well, primarily with respect to the nature of the risk involved. A disability policy is designed to protect against the risk of loss of the insured's future earning capacity. Earning capacity is not a divisible asset, although it is a factor to be considered when dividing the community and separate property in a dissolution proceeding. In re Marriage of Hall, 692 P.2d 175 (1984). An able-bodied spouse leaves a dissolved marriage with his or her earning capacity intact, and his or her former spouse has no property interest in that earning capacity. A disabled spouse leaves a dissolved marriage with his or her earning capacity impaired or nonexistent. His or her ability to acquire assets in the future, by means of employment, is likewise impaired or nonexistent.

As to disability pay that might be received after age 65, the court concluded that the lower court had not erred in characterizing the potential pay as in the nature of a pension.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 insurance w/2 polic! or proceed!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 205. Wisconsin's statute actually defines "during marriage." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.01(8) (West 1993). That statute does not really address the issue raised here, which is when does the marriage itself start and end, but rather imposes another qualification for community property purposes. In effect, the Wisconsin act only applies while both parties are (1) married and (2) domiciled in Wisconsin. See § 37.16(b).

(n2)Footnote 206. See § 37.05(c). Beckham v. Beckham, 41 S.W.3d 908 (Mo. App. 2001) (a marital residence purchased while the parties were cohabiting was considered marital property).

(n3)Footnote 207. California has addressed this issue in two ways: Cal. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 771 (while living separate and apart) and 772 (after entry of a judgment of legal separation) (Deering 1993); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.140 (when a husband and wife are living separate and apart). The Washington statute applies to marriages that are in essence defunct. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bunt, 754 P.2d 993 (Wash. 1988). See also In re Marriage of Umphrey, 267 Cal. Rptr. 218 (1990). Stelly v. Guidroz, 838 So. 2d 900 (Lou. App. Cir. 2003) (husband's monthly payments received after the petition for dissolution of the marriage was filed was separate property). Graham v. Graham, No. 21716-3-II, 1997 Wash. App. LEXIS 1782 (Wash. App. 1997) (ruling that for determining the community or separate nature of property, the test is "whether the parties' conduct exhibits a decision to renounce the community, with no intention of ever resuming the marital relationship"). Vaughn v. Vaughn, 798 So. 2d 431 (Miss. 2001) (wife was awarded prejudgment interest on her share of the marital property).

(n4)Footnote 208. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Boober, 784 P.2d 186 (Wash. App. 1990) (time of separation was relatively short and no formal proceedings were ever commenced).

(n5)Footnote 209. Idaho Code § 32-909.

(n6)Footnote 210. Suter v. Suter, 546 P.2d 1169 (Idaho 1976). The Idaho court noted that Idaho Code § 32-712

(1983) provides for a just assignment of community property upon the dissolution of marriage. The classification of all post-separation earnings as community property does not determine their disposition upon divorce. A Nevada statute also formerly provided that the earnings of a wife while she was living separate from her husband were her separate property. Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 123.180d (Michie 1991).

(n7)Footnote 211. Lynch v. Lynch, 791 P.2d 653 (Ariz. 1990). See also In re Marriage of Griswold, 48 P.3d 1018 (Wash. App. 2002) (the husband's bonus was compensation for his services during the year in which husband and wife separated, and thus was community property); Dolan v. Dolan, 558 S.E.2d 218 (N.C. App. 2002) (the trial court erred in not determining whether post-separation rental income should be a distributional factor).

(n8)Footnote 212. See, e.g., Donn v. Kunz, 79 P.2d 965 (Ariz. 1948) (earnings belong to community, not to either individual spouse); Hamlin v. Merlino, 272 P.2d 125 (Wash. 1954) (salary paid husband from his separate property corporation); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31(4); Pruitt v. Pruitt, 94 S.W.3d 429 (Mo. App. 2003) (husband's bonus was marital property); Macher v. Macher, 746 N.E.2d 120 (Ind. App. 2001) (the wife's income tax refund was not marital property). See also Emard v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 153 F.3d 949, 955 (9th Cir. 1998) (because fringe benefit is part of employee's earnings, fringe benefit is community property, under California law, to the extent that it is earned through employment during marriage).

(n9)Footnote 213. A marital community exists when the parties are married and domiciled in a community property state. See Noyes v. Noyes, 662 A.2d 921 (Me. 1995) (value of marital property increased to account for two-year period between initial divorce judgment, which was vacated on appeal, and second divorce hearing when property was to be divided).

(n10)Footnote 214. Johnson v. Johnson, 638 P.2d 705 (Ariz. 1981); Gillmore v. Gillmore, 629 P.2d 1 (Cal. 1981); Maslen v. Maslen, 822 P.2d 982 (Idaho 1991); Griggs v. Griggs, 686 P.2d 68 (Idaho 1984); Johnson v. Johnson, 582 So. 2d 926 (La. Ct. App. 1991); Forrest v. Forrest, 668 P.2d 275 (Nev. 1983); Otto v. Otto, 455 P.2d 642 (N.M. 1969); Cearley v. Cearley, 544 S.W.2d 661 (Tex. 1976); Nuss v. Nuss, 828 P.2d 627 (Wash. App. 1992); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.62. See also Sims v. Sims, 358 So. 2d 919 (La. 1978). In re Miller, 915 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1996) (whether stock options constitute marital property depends on whether they were granted in consideration of past or future services); Blevins v. Blevins, 649 So. 2d 315 (Fla. App. 1995) (wife not entitled to temporary retirement benefits because they did not accrue during marriage).

(n11)Footnote 215. French v. French, 112 P.2d 235 (Cal. 1941), overruled, In re Marriage of Brown, 544 P.2d 561 (Cal. 1976).

(n12)Footnote 216. Van Loan v. Van Loan, 569 P.2d 214 (Ariz. 1977); Brown v. Brown, 544 P.2d 561 (Cal. 1976); Shill v. Shill, 599 P.2d 1004 (Idaho 1979); T.L. James & Co. v. Montgomery, 332 So. 2d 834 (La. 1975); Gemma v. Gemma, 778 P.2d 429 (Nev. 1989); Cearley v. Cearley, 544 S.W.2d 661 (Tex. 1976); Copeland v. Copeland, 575 P.2d 99 (N.M. 1978); Payne v. Payne, 512 P.2d 736 (Wash. 1973). In re Marriage of Duggan, 659 N.W.2d 556 (Iowa 2003) (former wife was entitled to 50% of any post-dissolution cost-of-living adjustments to pension benefits); Brasili v. Brasili, 827 So. 2d 813 (Ala. Civ. App. 2002) (husband's 401(k) account was a retirement benefit for division of marital property purposes). See also In re Marriage of Lehman, 955 P.2d 451, 454 (Cal. 1998) (Community property may include right to retirement benefits accrued by employee spouse whether or not right to retirement benefits is "vested" and whether or not it is "matured"); Burchfield v. Finch, 968 S.W.2d 422 (Tex. Ct. App. 1998) (spouse has community property interest in portion of retirement benefits that other spouse earned during marriage, even though benefits at time of divorce had not yet matured).

(n13)Footnote 217. Brown v. Brown, 544 P.2d 561, 562-563 (Cal. 1976).

(n14)Footnote 218. Cal. Code Ann. § 2610; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.633. Krafick v. Krafick, 663 A.2d 365 (Conn. 1995) (court has power, acting equitably, to value and distribute pension benefits); McMichael v. McMichael, 552 N.W.2d 688 (Mich. App. 1996) (court discretion must not be restricted unduly with regard to premarriage and postdivorce pension contributions).

(n15)Footnote 219. Johnson v. Johnson, 638 P.2d 705, 710 (Ariz. 1981) Cf. Wainwright v. Wainwright, 888 P.2d 762 (Alaska 1995) (failure to account for inflation when valuing present value of marital portion of pension is inequitable).

(n16)Footnote 220. See May v. May, 716 S.W.2d 705 (Tex. Ct. App. 1986). Note that this does not necessarily mean that the non-employee spouse would be entitled to exactly 50 percent of the benefits in a dissolution of the marriage. Courts in some states may divide the community property as equity demands, and the non-employee could receive more or less than 50 percent. See § 37.15, infra. The apportionment process described here allocates shares to the respective separate and community estates. How those estates are distributed in a divorce is a second step that will not necessarily be entirely determined by classification. In this formula, that second step is represented by "/ 2," i.e. an equal division. In re Kelm, 912 P.2d 545 (Colo. 1996) ("time rule" incorrectly applied by district court to calculate wife's share of husband's pension plan).

(n17)Footnote 221. In re Marriage of Poppe, 97 Cal. App. 3d 1 (1979); Gowan v. Gowan, 54 Cal. App. 4th 80, 89-91 (1997) (holding that the time rule properly considered all of husband's years employed for single employer during two separate employment periods; husband did not present sufficient evidence to show that the pension was earned only during second period of employment).

(n18)Footnote 222. Madrid v. Madrid, 684 P.2d 1169 (N.M. 1984); Berry v. Berry, 647 S.W.2d 945 (Tex. 1983). Wisconsin has included this principle in its statutes, directing that the valuation should be made as of dissolution or an employee spouse's death. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.62(2m). The Wisconsin statute also spells out the formula for apportioning benefits. Id. § 766.62(1b)(2).

(n19)Footnote 223. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.62. Paragraph 5 of this section, providing that the non-employee's interest in deferred employment benefit plans does not survive the non-employee spouse who predeceases the employee spouse, is essentially duplicated in Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31(3). That section contains the provisions on classification of property.

(n20)Footnote 224. Swope v. Mitchell, 324 So. 2d 461 (La. Ct. App. 1975).

(n21)Footnote 225. Hisquierdo v. Hisquierdo, 439 U.S. 572 (1979). In In re Estate of Mundell, 857 P.2d 631 (Idaho 1993), the Idaho Supreme Court concluded that pertinent Internal Revenue Code provisions did not preempt Idaho community property law as it relates to the characterization of individual retirement accounts. Federal disability and social security benefits, which do preempt state community property laws, were distinguished from IRA's because those benefits are received from federal programs regulated by federal guidelines, including a statutory "anti-attachment" clause protecting the benefits from all legal process.

(n22)Footnote 226. McCarty v. McCarty, 453 U.S. 210 (1981).

(n23)Footnote 227. In re Marriage of Fellers, 178 Cal. Rptr. 35 (1981); Segrest v. Segrest, 649 S.W.2d 610 (Tex. 1983); In re Marriage of Brown, 653 P.2d 602 (Wash. 1982). See also Collins v. Collins, 798 A.2d 1155 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2002) (the husband's military retirement benefit that accrued before McCarty v. McCarty was marital property).

(n24)Footnote 228. Budreau v. Budreau, 658 P.2d 192 (Ariz. 1982); Rice v. Rice, 645 P.2d 319 (Idaho 1982), overruled by Griggs v. Griggs, 686 P.2d 68 (Idaho 1984).

(n25)Footnote 229. Pub. L. No. 97-252, title X, 96 Stat. 730 (Sept. 8, 1982).

(n26)Footnote 230. See In re Marriage of Konzen, 693 P.2d 97 (Wash. 1985), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 906 (1985);

Mackey v. Mackey, 768 N.E.2d 644 (Ohio 2002) (benefits received by a member of the military under the Voluntary Separation Initiative (VSI) qualify as marital property under the state statute). In re Marriage of Heupel, 936 P.2d 561, (Colo. 1997) (holding that where husband selects early retirement under the Special Separation Benefit (SSB) or Voluntary Separation Incentive (VSI) programs, those funds are subject to marital property division); In re McElroy, 905 P.2d 1016 (Colo. App. 1995) (special separation benefits are not subject to federal preemption of state law concerning state marital property).

(n27)Footnote 231. Edsall v. Superior Court, 693 P.2d 895 (Ariz. 1984); In re Marriage of Fairfull, 207 Cal. Rptr. 523 (1984); Menard v. Menard, 460 So. 2d 751 (La. Ct. App. 1984); Burton v. Burton, 669 P.2d 703 (Nev. 1983); Harkins v. Harkins, 681 P.2d 722 (N.M. 1984); Miller v. Miller, 671 S.W.2d 135 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984); In re Marriage of Smith, 669 P.2d 448 (Wash. 1983); Abernathy v. Fishkin, 699 So. 2d 235, 238 (Fla. 1997) (under the Uniformed Services Former Spouses Protection Act (USFSPA), disability payments may not be treated as community or marital property); Toone v. Toone, 952 P.2d 112 (Utah App. 1998) (holding that enactment of the Uniformed Services Former Spouse's Protection Act (USFSPA) after the divorce decree was issued was not a sufficient change in circumstances for reopening the case); Kramer v. Kramer, 567 N.W.2d 100, (Neb. 1997) (holding that notwithstanding the USFSPA, a court may consider disability payments and the waiver of retirement pay in determining whether there has been a material change in the circumstances of the parties requiring a modification of the divorce decree).

(n28)Footnote 232. Luna v. Luna, 608 P.2d 57 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1979); In re Leland, 847 P.2d 518 (Wash. App. 1993).

(n29)Footnote 233. Perras v. Perras, 726 P.2d 617 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1986); Villasenor v. Villasenor, 657 P.2d 889 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1982); In re Marriage of Stenquist, 582 P.2d 96 (Cal. 1978); In re Marriage of Pace, 183 Cal. Rptr. 314 (1982); Johnson v. Johnson, 582 So. 2d 926 (La. Ct. App. 1991); Powers v. Powers, 779 P.2d 91 (Nev. 1989); Bordes v. Bordes, 707 So. 2d 471 (La. App. 1998) (holding that since husband's "disability retirement" plan was calculated according to number of years worked, it amounted to deferred compensation and was community property; husband's second disability fund was separate property because it was awarded solely because of his disability, which occurred after termination of the marriage), rev'd by Bordes v. Bordes, 730 So. 2d 443 (La. 1999); Palazzolo v. Palazzolo, 663 N.Y.S. 2d 58, (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) (holding that to the extent that disability payments are deferred compensation, they are subject to equitable distribution); Bennett v. Bennett, No. 1621-96-4, 1997 Va. App. LEXIS 611 (Va. App. 1997) (rejecting husband's argument that disability retirement was separate property because it was a post marital "stream of income"; all benefits earned during marriage were subject to equitable distribution); Hyde v. Hyde, 697 So. 2d 1061, 1065 (La. App. 1997) (holding that disability funds were separate property where employer paid disability insurance premiums and husband would have no right to the funds absent the injury); Newsom v. Petrilli, 919 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. App. 1996) (disability benefits under the Fire Fighter's Relief and Retirement Fund are community property); In re Leland, 847 P.2d 518 (Wash. App. 1993).

(n30)Footnote 234. Villasenor v. Villasenor, 657 P.2d 889 (Ariz. 1982); In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 346 (Cal. 1985); In re Marriage of Pace, 183 Cal. Rptr. 314 (1982).

(n31)Footnote 235. Bonar v. Bonar, 614 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. Ct. App. 1981).

(n32)Footnote 236. Lachney v. Lachney, 529 So. 2d 59 (La. Ct. App. 1988); Holman v. Holman, 84 S.W.3d 903 (Ky. 2002) (as matters of first impression disability retirement benefits were properly classified as marital or nonmarital property according to the character of the property they replaced, and the former husband's future earnings constituted his separate nonmarital property); In re Marriage of Cranor, 78 S.W.3d 150 (Mo. App. 2002) (as a matter of first impression, the disability retirement benefits that exceeded the amount the husband would have been entitled to had he opted for immediate retirement constituted the husband's non-marital property and the remainder constituted marital property). See Chance v. Chance, 694 So. 2d 613, 619 (La. App. 1997); Bauser v. Bauser, 694 N.E.2d 136 (Ohio App. 1997) (holding that disability payments are a type of personal injury award and are marital property only to the extent that they are accepted in lieu of "old-age retirement pay" and the "retirement pay value is included in the disability pension benefit"); Mercer v. Mercer, 671 So. 2d 937 (La. App. 1996) (disability benefits were substitutions for wage losses, and consequently separate property); Brant v. Brant, 649 So. 2d 111 (La. App. 1995) (disability benefits were not deferred compensation, and were separate property).

(n33)Footnote 237. In re Marriage of Saslow, 191 Cal. Rptr. 749 (1983); Andrle v. Andrle, 751 S.W.2d 955 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988). See In re Marriage of Elfmont, 891 P.2d 136 (Cal. 1995) (disability payments were separate property, since premiums were not paid out of community property with intent of providing community retirement income); In re Marriage of Brewer, 949 P.2d 404, 406-407 (Wash. Ct. App. 1998) (holding that while the source of premiums rule had been criticized, it was still valid precedent; private disability insurance proceeds were community property because all premiums were paid with community funds), aff'd in part, rev'd in part by Brewer v. Brewer, 976 P.2d 102 (1999).

(n34)Footnote 238. In re Marriage of Saslow, 191 Cal. Rptr. 749 (1983), rev'd in part and remanded, In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 346 (Cal. 1985). In In re Marriage of Elfmont, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 744 (1994), a California Court of Appeal has, perhaps, clarified the California Supreme Court's holding in In re Marriage of Saslow. The husband in Elfmont had purchased several disability policies during the marriage. The court says that Saslow neither establishes nor implies a process to apportion disability benefits on the basis of the portion of premiums paid from community or separate funds. They describe disability insurance policies in terms similar to term life insurance, stating that a disability policy is for a specified term and each period the disability insurance is purchased anew. Unlike life insurance, however, disability benefits may commence during the marriage and continue after separation. As to benefits paid after marriage, the issue is whether the payments were in the nature of income replacement or retirement benefits. In this case, although the premiums were paid during the marriage with community funds, after the parties separated, the premiums were paid with husband's separate property and it was during this time that he became disabled. Because the disability did not occur during marriage, nor during a term which had been paid for with community funds, the benefits were husband's separate property. (A dissenter is not comfortable with this interpretation of Saslow). Opinion superseded by In re Marriage of Elfmont, 874 P.2d 901 (Cal. 1994).

(n35)Footnote 239. Bugh v. Bugh, 608 P.2d 329 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1980); In re Marriage of Fisk, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 (Cal. Ct. App. 1992); Monk v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 324 So. 2d 880 (La. Ct. App. 1975); Hicks v. Hicks, 546 S.W.2d 71 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976). See also Pudlish v. Pudlish, 796 A.2d 346 (Pa. Super. 2002) (worker's compensation benefits that accrued after separation were not marital property and so were not subject to equitable distribution).

(n36)Footnote 240. In re Marriage of Bishop, 729 P.2d 647 (Wash. App. 1986); Williams v. Williams, 590 So. 2d 649 (La. Ct. App. 1991).

(n37)Footnote 241. Wright v. Wright, 189 Cal. Rptr. 336 (1983). Luczkovich v. Luczkovich, 496 S.E.2d 157 (Va. App. 1998) (holding that severance pay is separate property where husband worked for employer only a few months before termination and received the severance package after separation).

(n38)Footnote 242. In re Marriage of Skaden, 566 P.2d 249 (Cal. 1977). See also Brill v. Brill, 65 S.W.3d 583 (Mo. App. 2002) (as a matter of first impression, the husband's severance pay contract which stated that he would receive three years of continued salary in the event of the husband's loss of employment constituted separate property).

(n39)Footnote 243. Donnelly v. Donnelly, 190 Cal. Rptr. 756 (1983), overruled In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 1346 (Cal. 1985).

(n40)Footnote 244. Fox v. Smith, 531 S.W.2d 654 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975); Matter of Marriage of Joiner, 755 S.W.2d 496 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988) (husband entitled to 20 percent as separate property because it vested when he was single). In re Marriage of Robert, 652 N.W.2d 537 (Minn. App. 2002) (as a matter of first impression, the wife's interest in a retained-earnings account was separate property); In re Marriage of Huston, 967 P.2d 181 (Colo. App. 1998); Stachovsky v. Stachovsky, 951 P.2d 346 (Wash. App. Div. 3) (holding that all stocks purchased during the marriage and those purchased after separation with community funds were community property; options that vested after separation but were awarded 50% for past employment and 50% for future contributions to company were only 50% community property).

See also Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Treatment of Stock Options for Purposes of Dividing Marital Property, 46 A.L.R. 4th 640.

(n41)Footnote 245. In re Marriage of Walker, 265 Cal. Rptr. 32 (1989); Sharber v. Sharber, 35 S.W.3d 841 (Ky. App. 2001) (an incentive bonus that did not accrue during the marriage was not considered subject to division as marital property).

(n42)Footnote 246. Mestayer v. Williams, 569 So. 2d 1102 (La. Ct. App. 1990).

(n43)Footnote 247. Insurance policies that are not part of an employee benefit package are discussed at § 37.11(e). Graham v. Graham, 465 S.E.2d 614 (W. Va. 1995) (term life insurance policy obtained as employment benefit during marriage is marital property).

(n44)Footnote 248. Seaman v. Seaman, 756 S.W.2d 56 (Tex. Ct. App. 1988); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bunt, 754 P.2d 993 (Wash. 1988). See also Camp v. Camp, 972 S.W.2d 906, 909 (Tex. Ct. App. 1998) (life insurance policy characterized as community property).

(n45)Footnote 249. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Wadsworth, 689 P.2d 46 (Wash. 1984). See also Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bunt, 754 P.2d 993 (1988).

(n46)Footnote 250. In a similar Idaho case, husband and wife were divorced and the decree specified that husband's employee "retirement plan" was his separate property. The decree did not, however, mention a group term life insurance policy paid for by the employer. The husband subsequently named his son as beneficiary of the "Employees Pension Plan" but made no change in the life insurance policy. After the husband's death, the court held that the term policy was not a community asset and therefore did not become tenancy-in-common property at divorce. The proceeds were therefore payable to the former wife and named beneficiary. Noyes v. Noyes, 679 P.2d 152 (Idaho Ct. App. 1984).

(n47)Footnote 251. In re Marriage of Hillerman, 88 Cal. App. 3d 315, 151 Cal. Rptr. 764 (1979), vacated, 167 Cal. Rptr. 240 (1980).

(n48)Footnote 252. In re Marriage of Hillerman, 167 Cal. Rptr. 240 (1980). See also In re Brane, 908 P.2d 625 (Kan. App. 1995) (court could consider spouses' social security income when dividing marital property, even though anti-assignment clause of Social Security Act precludes court from dividing social security income); Jefferies v. Jefferies, 895 P.2d 835 (Utah App. 1995) (husband's "401(a)" fund, which provided retirement income for intergovernmental agency in place of social security, could be considered in determining amount of marital assets and in making appropriate allocation). Compare Reymann v. Reymann, 919 S.W.2d 615 (Tenn. App. 1995) (anticipated social security benefits are not a part of the marital estate).

(n49)Footnote 253. Richard v. Richard, 659 S.W.2d 746 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983) (husband had converted military disability benefits to Social Security disability benefits.)

(n50)Footnote 254. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 9:2801.1 (Supp. 2003) (community property; allocation and assignment of ownership).

(n51)Footnote 255. Grace Ganz Blumberg, Identifying and Valuing Goodwill at Divorce, 56 Law and Contemporary Problems 217, 221 (1993). As illustrative of goodwill constituents, Blumberg states that goodwill may include reputation, continuing patronage, strategic location, effective advertising, the value of a skilled, trained, efficient work force, assemblage of property, plant, and equipment in a productive unit, and systems, controls, and methods developed as part of the operation. Id. at 221-22. This excellent article contains helpful information concerning measurement and valuation of goodwill, subjects which are beyond the scope of this chapter.

(n52)Footnote 256. See, e.g., Carr v. Carr, 701 P.2d 304 (Idaho Ct. App. 1985); Berger v. Berger, 648 N.E.2d 378 (Ind. App. 1995) (proceeds from sale of husband's dental practice were in nature of compensation for goodwill, and included in marital property); Endres v. Endres, 532 N.W.2d 65 (S.D. 1995) (goodwill of divorcing parties' concrete business was marital property).

(n53)Footnote 257. Grace Ganz Blumberg, Identifying and Valuing Goodwill at Divorce, 56 Law and Contemporary Problems 217, 230 (1993). The states named are Arkansas, Florida, Hawaii, Kansas, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin. Id. n.35. Tortorich v. Tortorich, 902 S.W.2d 247 (Ark. App. 1995) (goodwill of husband's oral surgery practice was not marital property); Skrabak v. Skrabak, 673 A.2d 732 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1996) (goodwill that is marital property must be an asset having a separate value from the reputation of the practitioner).

(n54)Footnote 258. Id. 229, n.33. Traczyk v. Traczyk, 891 P.2d 1277 (Okla. 1995) (goodwill of husband's medical practice was marital property).

(n55)Footnote 259. Mueller v. Mueller, 301 P.2d 90 (Cal. App. 1956).

(n56)Footnote 260. Randolph v. Graham, 254 S.W. 402 (Tex. Ct. App. 1923).

(n57)Footnote 261. Nail v. Nail, 486 S.W.2d 761 (Tex. 1972). Much earlier, the Texas Court of Appeals had suggested that the goodwill of a professional person is as much an asset as that of a merchant. Randolph v. Graham, 254 S.W. 402 (Tex. Ct. App. 1923).

(n58)Footnote 262. James W. Paulsen, Remember the Alamo[ny]! The Unique Texas Ban on Permanent Alimony and the Development of Community Property Law, 56 Law and Contemporary Problems 7, 59 (1993).

(n59)Footnote 263. Geesbreght v. Geesbreght, 570 S.W.2d 427 (Tex. Ct. App. 1978); Finn v. Finn, 658 S.W.2d 735 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983); Hirsch v. Hirsch, 770 S.W.2d 924 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989).

(n60)Footnote 264. Peerenboom v. Peerenboom, 433 N.W.2d 282 (Wis. Ct. App. 1988).

(n61)Footnote 265. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 732 P.2d 208 (Ariz. 1987) (goodwill of an accounting partnership was a community asset); Wisner v. Wisner, 631 P.2d 115 (Ariz. 1981) (professional goodwill can be divided as community property); Ford v. Ford, 782 P.2d 1304 (Nev. 1989) (goodwill of solo medical practice can be community property even though it depends on continued presence of the practitioner and despite difficulty of selling the practice); Hurley v. Hurley, 615 P.2d 256 (N.M. 1980) (goodwill of medical practice is divisible as community property even though difficult to sell or value); In re Fleege v. Fleege, 588 P.2d 1136 (Wash. 1979) (approving appellate court decision establishing professional goodwill as community property); Lewis v. Lewis, 336 N.W.2d 171 (Wis. Ct. App. 1983) (professional partnership with cross purchase agreement setting value of goodwill).

(n62)Footnote 266. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 309 N.W.2d 343 (Wis. Ct. App. 1981).

(n63)Footnote 267. Wisner v. Wisner, 631 P.2d 115 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1981); In re Marriage of Aufmuth, 152 Cal. Rptr. 668 (1979); Todd v. Todd, 78 Cal. Rptr. 131 (1969); Muckleroy v. Muckleroy, 498 P.2d 1357 (N.M. 1972); Frausto v. Frausto, 611 S.W.2d 656 (Tex. Ct. App. 1981); Fernau v. Fernau, 694 P.2d 1092 (Wash. App. 1984); DeWitt v. DeWitt, 296 N.W.2d 761 (Wis. Ct. App. 1984). For an interesting discussion about dividing the value of a professional degree, see Sullivan v. Sullivan, 184 Cal. Rptr. 796 (Ct. App. 1982); In re Marriage of Lee, 938 P.2d 650, 655 (Mont. 1997)(holding that professional degrees are not property because they have no transferable value, are personal to the holder, terminate upon death and possess none of the "usual attributes of property"); Montague v. Montague, 1997 Ohio App. LEXIS 5520 (Ohio App. 1997) (holding that while a professional degree is not a marital asset, the future value of the degree or license is considered in reaching an equitable award of alimony); Lapham v. Ruflin, 661 N.Y.S.2d 373, 374 (S. Ct. App. Div. 1997) (holding that teaching certificate in mathematics is considered marital property under New York rule); McSparron v. McSparron, 662 N.E.2d 745 (N.Y. 1995).

(n64)Footnote 268. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 2641. This statute was applied in In re Marriage of Watt, 262 Cal. Rptr. 783 (1989).

(n65)Footnote 269. There are rebuttable presumptions that the community (a) has not substantially benefitted from community contributions made less than 10 years before the commencement of the proceeding, and (b) has substantially benefitted from community contributions made more than 10 years before the commencement of the proceeding. Id.

(n66)Footnote 270. Id.

(n67)Footnote 271. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 121. Cf. Barron v. Barron, 669 So. 2d 622 (La. App. 1996) (husband was not entitled to reimbursement for his financial contributions to wife's degree due to his substantial income during this period and lack of sacrifice toward degree).

(n68)Footnote 272. Washburn v. Washburn, 677 P.2d 152 (Wash. 1984) (sets out factors for equitable compensation); Haugan v. Haugan, 343 N.W.2d 796 (Wis. 1984) (equitable compensation, considering restitution, opportunity cost, and enhanced earning capacity of student spouse).

(n69)Footnote 273. Frausto v. Frausto, 611 S.W.2d 656 (Tex. Ct. App. 1980).

(n70)Footnote 274. Mahoney v. Mahoney, 442 A.2d 1062 (N.J. App. Div. 1982); Milteer v. Milteer, 720 N.Y.S.2d 194 (2001) (the wife's nursing license was considered marital property); Hassanin v. Hassanin, 719 N.Y.S.2d 254 (2001) (the husband's undergraduate degree in engineering was considered marital property).

(n71)Footnote 275. In states following the inception of title doctrine discussed in § 37.10(a), a right to reimbursement may be available to the contributing estate but title presumably would not be recharacterized. See also In re Marriage of Kunze, 47 P.3d 489 (Or. App. 2002) (the wife rebutted the presumption that the appreciation in value during the marriage was marital property); McManus v. McManus, 638 N.Y.S.2d 411 (2002) (the husband was not entitled to a marital property credit for the appreciation in value of an inherited family business that improved because of passive market forces); Elman v. Elman, 45 P.3d 176 (Utah App. 2002) (equity required that the wife receive a fair share of the appreciation on the husband's premarital partnership interest); Roden v. Roden, 949 P.2d 67, 70 (Ariz. App. 1997) (holding that where the value of a separate property business increases because of community efforts, the increase is separate property if the business pays the community a "fair return for its labor"); Thomas v. Thomas, 776 So. 2d 1092 (Fla. App. 2001) (increased equity in a house attributable to improvements was considered marital property).

(n72)Footnote 276. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-213.

(n73)Footnote 277. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 770.

(n74)Footnote 278. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.130.

(n75)Footnote 279. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-8. After definitions of separate and community property, this statute simply states the "'Property' includes the rents, issues and profits thereof." Id. P E. By this definition separate property produces separate income and community property produces community income.

(n76)Footnote 280. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 26.16.010 & 26.16.020.

(n77)Footnote 281. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. art. 2339. The second paragraph of this article requires recording of the declaration described in the second sentence. This rule has been applied to interest paid on a personal injury judgment. Roge v. Roge, 604 So. 2d 721 (La. App. 1992).

(n78)Footnote 282. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31(7p). Paragraph 1 of the same statute provides that all property of spouses is marital property except that which is classified otherwise in Chapter 766 of Wisconsin's statutes.

(n79)Footnote 283. Id. § 766.59.

(n80)Footnote 284. "Community property consists of the property, other than separate property, acquired by either spouse during marriage." Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.01(b). Ridgell v. Ridgell, 960 S.W.2d 144 (Tex. App. 1997).

(n81)Footnote 285. Tex. Const. Ann. Art. 16, § 15.

(n82)Footnote 286. Id.

(n83)Footnote 287. Idaho Code § 32-906 (1983). See also Kauffman v. Kaufmann, 101 S.W.3d 35 (Mo. App. 2003) (the husband's share of income earned on the rentals of signs located on his separate property was marital property).

(n84)Footnote 288. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.63(2). In In re Estate of Kobylski, 503 N.W.2d 369 (Wis. App. 1993), the Wisconsin Court of Appeals applied the "industry mixing" provisions of § 766.63(2). Painting and yard work, without more, qualified only as routine maintenance and therefore did not create a marital property component in the separate residence. Enlargement of the garage did qualify as a "substantial" contribution but the case was remanded to determine whether the separate labor resulted in "substantial" appreciation, another component of the statutory test.

(n85)Footnote 289. See § 37.10(b). In In re Estate of Kobylski, 503 N.W.2d 369 (Wis. App. 1993), the Wisconsin Court of Appeals applied § 766.63(1) to a residence brought into the marriage as separate property (referred to in Wisconsin as "individual property") of the wife and improved with community funds and labor. The exact language of paragraph (1) of the statute is as follows: "Except as provided otherwise in §§ 766.61 and 766.62, mixing marital property with property other than marital property reclassifies the other property to marital property unless the component of the mixed property which is not marital property can be traced." In this case, there were records showing community contributions to the property and the court held that the trial court had erred in concluding that tracing was not possible. They conclude, however, that the statute simply precludes reclassification of the separate property residence as a community (or "marital") property residence when tracing can be performed. It does not, they say, answer the "remedy" question in this situation. They note that the majority of community property states hold that when community funds are used to improve separate property of one of the spouses, and tracing is established, the improvements "acquire the classification of the underlying property." The community estate does have a right of reimbursement for the funds expended by the community. The measure of reimbursement then becomes yet another issue. Analyzing decisions in other states, the Wisconsin court concludes that measuring reimbursement by the "enhancement in value" to the property (rather than the cost of the improvement) is "more likely to ensure the equitable treatment of both the contributing estate and the benefitted estate in most situations." Under this test, reimbursement would not be available for maintenance expenditures which do not enhance the property's value.

(n86)Footnote 290. See § 37.11(c)(4), supra.

(n87)Footnote 291. Pereira v. Pereira, 103 P. 488 (Cal. 1909); In re Marriage of Allen, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 (2002) (the marital community was to be reimbursed for community funds used on a separate residence).

In In re Marriage of Dekker, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (1993), a California court of appeal said Pereira is typically applied "where business profits are principally attributed to efforts of the community."

(n88)Footnote 292. Van Camp v. Van Camp, 199 P. 885 (Cal. App. 1921).

(n89)Footnote 293. See § 37.10(a), supra.

(n90)Footnote 294. Jensen v. Jensen, 665 S.W.2d 107, 109 (Tex. 1984).

(n91)Footnote 295. Id.

(n92)Footnote 296. Vallone v. Vallone, 644 S.W.2d 455 (Tex. 1982).

(n93)Footnote 297. Vallone v. Vallone, 618 S.W.2d 820, 824 (Tex. Civ. App. 1981).

(n94)Footnote 298. For this proposition, they cited Norris v. Vaughan, 260 S.W.2d 676 (Tex. 1953).

(n95)Footnote 299. In Texas, the court has discretion in dividing the community estate upon divorce, Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.63, but they do not have discretion to award separate real property of one spouse to the other. Eggemeyer v. Eggemeyer, 554 S.W.2d 137 (Tex. 1977). In this case, a dissenter wrote that "the majority has confused discretion in division of property with discretion in classifying property ... a trial court, however, has no discretion in classifying property." 644 S.W.2d at 460.

(n96)Footnote 300. W.S. Mcclanahan, Community Property Law in the United States § 6:18 at 121 (Clark Boardman Callaghan 1992 Supp.).

(n97)Footnote 301. Zisblatt v. Zisblatt, 693 S.W.2d 944 (Tex. Ct. App. 1985).

(n98)Footnote 302. Speer v. Quinlan, 525 P.2d 314 (Idaho 1974).

(n99)Footnote 303. Cockrill v. Cockrill, 601 P.2d 1334 (Ariz. 1979) (abandoning an "all or nothing" rule and following the California approaches); Johnson v. Johnson, 510 P.2d 625 (Nev. 1973) (Nevada apparently applies California approaches); Michelson v. Michelson, 551 P.2d 638 (N.M. 1976) (where husband owned 50 percent of corporation, community did not acquire an interest where there was no proof that husband's salary was not reasonable or adequate).

(n100)Footnote 304. Estate of Nereson, 239 Cal. Rptr. 865 (1987).

(n101)Footnote 305. Jurek v. Jurek, 606 P.2d 812 (Ariz. 1980); Russell v. Russell, 801 P.2d 93 (N.M. Ct. App. 1990); Russell v. Russell, 740 P.2d 127 (N.M. Ct. App. 1987); Soto v. Vandeventer, 245 P.2d 826 (N.M. 1952); Roberson v. U-Bar Ranch, Inc., 303 F. Supp. 730 (D.N.M. 1968); Graham v. Franco, 488 S.W.2d 390 (Tex. 1972); Brown v. Brown, 675 P.2d 1207 (Wash. 1984) (overruling prior rule that recovery for personal injury was community property). White v. White, 705 So. 2d 123 (Fla. App. 1998); Byington v. Byington, 568 N.W.2d 141, 145 (Mich. Ct. App. 1997); Munroe v. Munroe, 695 N.E.2d 1155 (Ohio App. 1997); Ritter v. Ritter, 690 So. 2d 1372, 1376 (Fla. App. 1997); Vanzant v. Vanzant, No. CA 96-554, 1997 Ark. App. LEXIS 236 (Ark. App. 1997) (holding that mere labeling of a claim as "personal injury" does not qualify the claim for marital property exemption from equitable distribution; the claim must be for a disability or future medical expenses traced to a specific incident or tortious act); In re Pace, 664 N.E.2d 320 (Ill. App. 1996) (husband's personal injury award was marital property); In re Leland, 847 P.2d 518 (Wash. App. 1993). Standefer v. Standefer, 26 P.3d 104 (Okla. 2001) (annuities from the settlement of the husband's and wife's tort claims were considered marital property).

(n102)Footnote 306. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.130.

(n103)Footnote 307. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.121 (1991). Paragraph 2 of this section provides that damages for injury to property "shall be awarded according to the character of the injured property."

(n104)Footnote 308. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.01. Paragraph (b) places everything other than separate property, which would include loss of earning capacity during marriage, into the category of community property.

(n105)Footnote 309. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2344.

(n106)Footnote 310. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.31. See also Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Determination of Whether Proceeds from Personal Injury Settlement or Recovery Constitute Marital Property, 109 A.L.R. 5th 1 (2003). In Khoroosi v. Khoroosi, 524 N.W.2d 647 (Wis. App. 1994), a divorce proceeding, the court states: "While a personal injury settlement is marital [community] property, the court should presume that the injured person is entitled to the settlement amounts that are not specifically allocated." Because no evidence was presented on the nature of the losses, the trial court properly awarded the injured spouse all of the settlement proceeds.

(n107)Footnote 311. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 780-783.

(n108)Footnote 312. Section 2603 is in Part 4 of the Family Code, titled "Special Rules for Division of Community Estate," and provides that "community estate personal injury damages" (described in § 780 and not separate property as described in § 781) "shall be assigned to the party who suffered the injuries unless the court ... determines that the interests of justice require another disposition." In every case, at least one-half of the damages must be assigned to the party who suffered the injuries. This provision allocating community estate personal injury damages is an exception to the otherwise strict California rule that community property must be divided equally. In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 346 (Cal. 1985). In effect, then, the California treatment of damages for personal injury is actually quite similar to that in the other states.

(n109)Footnote 313. Doss v. Roberts, 487 S.W.2d 839 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

(n110)Footnote 314. Life insurance policies are also discussed in connection with employment benefits. See § 37.11(b)(7).

(n111)Footnote 315. Polk v. Polk, 39 Cal. Rptr. 824 (1964); Allie Estate, 329 P.2d 903 (Cal. 1958); Roselli v. Rio Communities Serv. Station, Inc., 787 P.2d 428 (N.M. 1990); In re Marriage of Brewer, 949 P.2d 404, 406 (Wash. App. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part by Brewer v. Brewer, 976 P.2d 102 (Wash. 1999); Wear v. Mizell, 946 P.2d 1363, 11367 (Kan. 1997) (holding that proceeds are community property where the insured property is owned by the community; the proceeds are treated as replacement for the insured property); Estate of Bellingham v. Bellingham, 933 P.2d 425, 427 (Wash. App. 1997).

(n112)Footnote 316. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.61.

(n113)Footnote 317. Subsection (4) provides that this section does not affect a creditor's interest in the ownership interest or proceeds of a policy assigned to or payable to the creditor. Subsection (5) provides that the interest acquired under a decree or settlement agreement incident to a prior marriage or to parenthood is not marital property. Subsection (6) provides that this section does not affect the ownership interest or proceeds if neither spouse is designated as an owner and no marital property is used to pay a premium.

(n114)Footnote 318. Subdivision 2 provides:

> 2. If after the issuance of a policy described under subd. 1 the insured or his or her spouse are at any time not domiciled in this state, the ownership interest and proceeds of the policy are mixed property. The marital property component of the ownership interest and proceeds is the amount which results from multiplying the entire ownership interest and proceeds by a fraction, the numerator of which is the period during marriage that the policy was in effect and the denominator of which is the entire period that the policy was in effect.

(n115)Footnote 319. Subdivision 2 provides:

> 2. If after the issuance of a policy described under subd. 1 the insured or his or her spouse are at any time not domiciled in this state, the ownership interest and proceeds of the policy are individual property and property that is other than individual or marital property. The individual property component of the ownership interest and proceeds is the amount which results from multiplying the entire ownership interest and proceeds by a fraction, the numerator of which is the entire period during which the policy was in effect less that period during which the insured or his or her spouse were at any time not domiciled in this state and the denominator of which is the entire period that the policy was in effect.

(n116)Footnote 320. McCurdy v. McCurdy, 372 S.W.2d 381 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963). The community did have a right of reimbursement for the premiums paid from community funds. Cooper v. Cooper, No. B14-92-00125-CV, 1993 Tex. App. LEXIS 2014.

(n117)Footnote 321. Grost v. Grost, 561 S.W.2d 223 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977). Graham v. Graham, 465 S.E.2d 614 (W. Va. 1995) (term life insurance policy obtained during marriage as an employment benefit was marital property). See Kambur v. Kambur, 652 So. 2d 99 (La. App. 1995) (value of policies divided by court).

(n118)Footnote 322. Pope Photo Records, Inc. v. Malone, 539 S.W.2d 224 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976); Wohlenberg v. Wohlenberg, 485 S.W.2d 342 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972). Estate of Street, T.C. Memo. 1997-32 (holding that where the insured party names a beneficiary other than the spouse, the policy is removed from the category of community property, even when the policy is purchased with community funds, so long as there is no fraud upon the wife).

(n119)Footnote 323. Street v. Skipper, 887 S.W.2d 78 (Tex. App. 1994).

(n120)Footnote 324. In re Leland, 847 P.2d 518, 526 (Wash. App. 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.12

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.12 Management and Control of Marital Property.

[Go To Supp]

An early characteristic of the law governing management of marital property in both common law and community property systems was male dominance. In common law states married women were legally disabled and a husband had control over the wife's property as well as his own. In community property states, married women often had control over their separate property but husbands were by law the managing partners of community property.

At long last, n325 modern statutes have eliminated male dominance in management and control, at least in legal terms. In the 1960's and 1970's new schemes of marital property management emerged, reflecting a greater equality between wife and husband than ever before.

§ 37.12(a) Management of Separate Property.

Although it had been very slow to make significant concessions to equality of the sexes, with the Texas Matrimonial Act of 1967 Texas was the first state to adopt a marital property management statute incorporating equal treatment of the spouses as to all marital property. Under the current Texas statute, "each spouse has the sole management, control, and disposition of his or her separate property." n326 A significant qualification of this provision exists in the case of a homestead. Whether the family homestead is separate property of either spouse or community property, "neither spouse may sell, convey, or encumber it without the joinder of the other spouse." n327 Exceptions to this rule, subject in some cases to certain formalities, are provided where one spouse (1) has been judicially declared incompetent, n328 (2) is in fact incompetent or has disappeared or abandoned the homestead, n329 or (3) is reported to be a prisoner of war or missing on public service of the United States. n330

Other jurisdictions also treat the spouses equally in management and control of separate property. Washington's current statutor defining and establishing management of separate property provides as follows:

> Property and pecuniary rights owned by the husband before marriage and that acquired by him afterwards by gift, bequest, devise or descent, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of his wife, and he may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber or devise > by will such property without the wife joining in such management, alienation or encumbrance, as fully and to the same effect as though he were unmarried. n331

>
> The property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage or afterwards acquired by gift, devise or inheritance, with the rents, issues and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, and she may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber or devise by will such property to the same extent and in the same manner that her husband can, property belonging to him. n332

Other community property states also provide that each spouse, without consent or joinder of the other spouse, may convey, encumber and otherwise dispose of his or her separate property. n333

§ 37.12(b) Duties Between Spouses.

The primary relationship in community property, of course, is the relationship between wife and husband. We have noted that only very recently have American jurisdictions departed from the position that it is the husband's role to manage community property. Now that the management of marital property, and specifically community property, is more equally shared by the spouses, the relationship between them and their property has been cast in a new light. Modern cases and statutes have addressed specifically the relationship between spouses and the duties they owe one another in the management of marital property.

In some instances, duty to one's spouse is described in terms of good faith. Section 2 of the Uniform Marital Property Act, for example, provides:

> (a) Each spouse shall act in good faith with respect to the other spouse in matters involving marital property or other property of the other spouse. This obligation may not be varied by a marital property agreement.
>
> (b) Management and control by a spouse of that spouse's property that is not marital property in a manner that limits, diminishes, or fails to produce income from that property does not violate subsection (a).

Wisconsin has an identical provision. n334 A Louisiana spouse "is liable for any loss or damage caused by fraud or bad faith in the management of the community property." n335

In Texas, duties between the spouses, other than the duty to support one another, n336 have been less explicitly spelled out, although there apparently is a relationship of trust and confidence between husband and wife pertaining to community property. n337 In Texas, as elsewhere, actions by spouses can sometimes constitute a "fraud on the community." n338 If a disposition by one spouse works a fraud on the community property rights of the other, some corrective measures will be available, usually reimbursement to the community estate in conjunction with property division upon divorce. n339 In the event the managing spouse wrongfully converts community property to his own individual use or squanders it, the other spouse may, in dissolution proceedings, seek a greater share of the remaining community property. n340 Distinguishing those situations, however, a Texas court has stated that absent a fraud on the community, the managing spouse is not responsible to the other spouse for "good faith, but unwise, investment of community funds resulting in losses to the community estate." n341

In recent years, more frequent references to "trust," "confidence," and "fiduciary duty" have appeared in describing the relationship between spouses with respect to management of community property. n342 California, for example, had a statutory requirement that spouses act in good faith with respect to one another, n343 but that provision has now been replaced by a fiduciary duty described in the following terms:

> Each spouse shall act with respect to the other spouse in the management and control of the community property in accordance with the general rules governing fiduciary relationships which control the actions of persons having relationships of personal confidence as specified in Section 721, n344 until such time as the property has been divided by the parties or by a court. This duty includes the obligation to make full disclosure to the other spouse of all material facts and information regarding the existence, characterization, and valuation of all assets in which the community has or may have an interest and debts for which the community is or may be liable, and to provide equal access to all information, records, and books that pertain to the value and character of those assets and debts, upon request. n345

Remedies for breach of the fiduciary duty just mentioned, and procedures for enforcing them, are spelled out by statute. n346 Remedies include an accounting of the property and obligations of the spouses, addition of the spouse's name to community property held in the name of the other spouse alone, and an award equal to 50% of any asset transferred in breach of the fiduciary duty set forth in § 721 plus attorney's fees and court costs.

Spouses in New Mexico owe one another a fiduciary duty when managing community property. n347 In Idaho, husband and wife "contract toward each other obligations of mutual respect, fidelity and support." n348 The Idaho statute providing for equal control by the spouses over the entirety of the community property gives each spouse the power to encumber more than their own half of the property; this power imposes a fiduciary duty on the spouses, continuing until the marriage terminates. n349

In Nevada, neither spouse has any interest in the property of the other, n350 but that rule is subject to the following statute:

> Either husband or wife may enter into any contract, engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person respecting property, which either might enter into if unmarried, subject in any contract, engagement or transaction between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying relations of confidence and trust toward each other. n351

This summary may suggest that the states are now imposing more strict duties on spouses. One significant difference between responsibility based on good faith or fraud, as opposed to fiduciary duty, may be in proof of the element of intent. In the former case, the spouse claiming bad faith or fraud may be burdened with the requirement of establishing that the managing spouse took action with the intent to affect adversely the interests of the other. n352

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 spouse! w/5 duty or liab! or relation! or act!

§ 37.12(c) Management of Community Property in Texas.

The Texas treatment of the management and control of community property is unique. For management purposes, Texas community property is essentially divided into three parts -- one for each spouse and one for both spouses as a unit:

> (a) During marriage, each spouse has the sole management, control, and disposition of the community property that he or she would have owned if single, including but not limited to:
>
> (1) personal earnings;
>
> (2) revenue from separate property;
>
> (3) recoveries for personal injuries; and

> (4) the increase and mutations of, and the revenue from, all property subject to his or her sole management, control, and disposition.
>
> * * *
>
> (c) Except as provided in Subsection (a) of this section, the community property is subject to the joint management, control, and disposition of the husband and wife, unless the spouses provide otherwise by power of attorney in writing or other agreement. n353

If "sole management community property" n354 of one spouse is mixed or combined with "sole management community property" of the other spouse, it is subject to joint management of the husband and wife unless the spouses provide otherwise "by power of attorney in writing or other agreement." n355

The Texas list of sole management community property is potentially very broad, encompassing much of what an average husband or wife would acquire and accumulate during marriage, preceded by the phrase, "including but not limited to." Even so, experience suggests that a substantial portion of community property will be joint management property. For one thing, sole management property of one spouse will frequently be mixed with sole management property of the other, bringing paragraph (b) into play. Also, where husband and wife take title in both names or jointly finance the purchase of property, it will probably be characterized as joint management community property. n356

The term "sole management," applied to community property, necessarily has a meaning slightly different from the same term applied to separate property. Community property, even if managed by one spouse alone, is owned by both spouses, and there is a relationship of trust and confidence between husband and wife pertaining to that property. n357 Even so, the non-managing spouse is not required to approve of or agree with dispositions made by the managing spouse of his or her sole management community property. n358

The meaning of "joint management" is apparently ambiguous. It seems quite clear that one spouse could not transfer the other's interest in joint management community property without the other spouse's consent. n359 Whether one spouse can transfer her own interest in joint management community property without joinder by the other spouse is not so obvious. One court has said this is clear, n360 but then made the following statement:

> One spouse cannot alone convey or encumber joint management community property unless the spouses have otherwise agreed. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. 5.22(c). Appellant has failed to present a statement of facts from which it could be determined whether such an agreement existed. Without a "power of attorney in writing or other agreement" to the contrary, James B. Miller had no authority to contract to dispose of the entire joint management community property without his wife joining in the contract. n361

The first sentence and the last sentence of this passage are subtly different because of the insertion of the word "entire" in the last sentence. This word does not appear in the statute. The Vallone court's interpretation of § 5.22 is suspect. If the legislature had meant "joint and several management," which would make it more or less equivalent to tenancy in common, it seems they would have said so. There is authority for a different interpretation which this writer believes has more merit. That interpretation is that paragraph (c) of § 5.22 means that no interest in joint management community property can be transferred or encumbered by one spouse acting unilaterally. n362

§ 37.12(d) Management of Community Property in General.

After the Texas move toward equality in management of community property in 1967, Washington next led the way in 1972. n363 As to community property, Washington provides for equal and several management and control with significant exceptions:

> Either spouse, acting alone, may manage and control community property, with a like power of disposition as the acting spouse has over his or her separate property, except:
>
> (1) Neither spouse shall devise or bequeath by will more than one-half of the community property.
>
> (2) Neither spouse shall give community property without the express or implied consent of the other.
>
> (3) Neither spouse shall sell, convey, or encumber the community real property without the other spouse joining in the execution of the deed or other instrument by which the real estate is sold, conveyed, or encumbered, and such deed or other instrument must be acknowledged by both spouses.
>
> (4) Neither spouse shall purchase or contract to purchase community real property without the other spouse joining in the transaction of purchase or in the execution of the contract to purchase.
>
> (5) Neither spouse shall create a security interest other than a purchase money security interest as defined in RCW 62A.9-107 in, or sell, community household goods, furnishings, or appliances, or a community mobile home unless the other spouse joins in executing the security agreement or bill of sale, if any.
>
> (6) Neither spouse shall acquire, purchase, sell, convey, or encumber the assets, including real estate, or the good will of a business where both spouses participate in its management without the consent of the other: Provided, that where only one spouse participates in such management the participating spouse may, in the ordinary course of such business, acquire, purchase, sell, convey or encumber the assets, including real estate, or the good will of the business without the consent of the non-participating spouse. n364

Perhaps the most important qualifications of the right to manage community property separately are the requirements in paragraphs (3) and (4) that both spouses join in selling, conveying, encumbering, purchasing or contracting to purchase community real property. "Joinder" in such cases is a question of fact, but it may be based upon authorization, ratification or estoppel as well as actual signing by both spouses. n365

As is often the case with statutory language, ambiguity and unanswered questions persist. The statute does not, for example, spell out the consequences when one spouse does not join in the transaction. The choice of words is interesting -- "Neither spouse shall purchase or contract to purchase community real property without the other spouse." In Washington, consistent with this language, the consequence of non-joinder by one spouse in a real estate transaction appears to be that the affected property or obligation is impressed with a separate, rather than community, character. n366

In addition to the provisions requiring joinder in the sale and purchase of community real property, note that where both spouses participate in the management of assets, neither spouse alone may "acquire, purchase, sell, convey, or encumber" those assets, including real estate and the good will of a business. n367

Nevada's general statute on management and control of community property n368 is almost identical to the Washington statute. Even so, transfers of community real property by one spouse, without the other spouse's joinder are apparently voidable under Nevada law by the non-signing spouse. n369

Arizona has adopted a system of management and control of community property similar to that in force in Washington and Nevada:

> * * *

B. The spouses have equal management, control and disposition rights over their community property, and have equal power to bind the community.

C. Either spouse separately may acquire, manage, control or dispose of community property, or bind the community, except that joinder of both spouses is required in any of the following cases:

1. Any transaction for the acquisition, disposition or encumbrance of an interest in real property other than an unpatented mining claim or a lease of less than one year. n370

Again the requirement that husband and wife both be joined in real property transactions in community property is worthy of note. The language of this statute is different from that used in Washington and Nevada: "joinder of both spouses is required in ... any transaction for the acquisition, disposition or encumbrance of an interest in real property..." Unless both spouses have joined, a purported transfer of community real estate is voidable. n371 This is not to say that the signing spouse, and the signing spouse's separate property, will not be responsible or liable for the transaction. n372

California's statutory regulations concerning management and control of community property are among the most detailed provisions anywhere. As in several other jurisdictions, either spouse has management and control of community property subject to some significant qualifications, and also subject to the fiduciary obligations discussed in § 37.12(b), supra. One of the primary qualifications is that both spouses "must join in executing any instrument by which ... community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or encumbered." n373

Each spouse generally has absolute power of disposition, other than testamentary disposition, of community personal property. n374 A spouse may not, however, make gifts or otherwise dispose of community personal property for less than fair and reasonable value, without written consent of the other spouse. n375 Community personal property used in the family dwelling, and furniture, furnishings, and fittings of the homes, as well as clothing of the other spouse and minor children is also protected against unilateral transfer by one spouse. n376

Any business or interest in a business that is all or substantially all community personal property is subject to "primary management and control" by the spouse operating the business. Primary management and control means that "the managing spouse may act alone in all transactions but shall give prior written notice to the other spouse of any sale, lease, exchange, encumbrance, or other disposition of all or substantially all of the personal property used in the operation of the business." n377 Remedies for a breach of this notice requirement are limited to those established for breach of fiduciary duty between spouses; the validity of a transaction or transfer of any interest is not affected.

Idaho also provides that either the husband or wife has the right to manage and control community property, except that neither may sell, convey or encumber community real estate without joinder by the other. n378 Where joinder is required, there is authority for the proposition that failure of a spouse to join in a conveyance renders the conveyance void, n379 but a party can waive the protection of this section expressly or by conduct. n380

New Mexico's statute starts from the other direction, requiring joinder in all transfers, conveyances, or mortgages of real property, or contracts therefor, with the exceptions of purchase-money mortgages, transactions made pursuant to a validly executed and recorded power of attorney, and leases for five years or less. n381 In a variation on the common law, the New Mexico requirement of joinder also applies to separate real property owned by the spouses as joint tenants or tenants in common. n382 Transactions attempted in violation of this requirement "shall be void and of no effect." n383

As in other states, either spouse in New Mexico "alone has full power to manage, control, dispose of and encumber the entire community personal property." n384 There are, however, special rules when one or both spouses are named in documents evidencing ownership of community personal property or in a written agreement with a third party. Where only one spouse is named in a document evidencing ownership, or in a written agreement between that spouse and a third party, designating that spouse as having sole management authority, only the spouse so named or designated may manage and control the property. n385 And where both spouses are so named or designated, both must join to dispose of or encumber the property if the names of the spouses are joined by the word "and." If the names of the spouses are joined by "or" or "and/or" either spouse alone may dispose of or encumber the property. n386

It appears that either spouse also may have full power alone to manage and control a business. n387

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/15 management or control! or power! w/5 spouse!

§ 37.12(e) Protection of Third Parties.

Management and control issues arise between spouses, of course, but third parties will necessarily be involved in some fashion. Texas relies on a series of presumptions to protect third parties dealing with married individuals transferring property subject to their sole management: n388

> (a) During marriage, property is presumed to be subject to the sole management, control, and disposition of a spouse if it is held in his or her name, as shown by muniment, contract, deposit of funds, or other evidence of ownership, or if it is in his or her possession and is not subject to such evidence of ownership.
>
> (b) A third person dealing with a spouse is entitled to rely (as against the other spouse or anyone claiming from that spouse) on that spouse's authority to deal with the property if:
>
> (1) the property is presumed to be subject to the sole management, control, and disposition of the spouse; and
>
> (2) the person dealing with the spouse:
>
> (A) is not a party to a fraud upon the other spouse or another person; and
>
> (B) does not have actual or constructive notice of the spouse's lack of authority. n389

In appropriate cases, this presumption is decisive as between the spouses and the third party; the managing spouse can unilaterally convey the whole community property interest to the third party. n390

In Washington, even as to community real property, a deed from one spouse who is the only owner named in the record title to an actual bona fide purchaser is sufficient "to convey to, and vest in, such purchaser the full legal and equitable title to such real estate free and clear of any and all claims of any and all persons whatsoever, not appearing of record..." n391 A spouse of the titled owner can protect his or her interest against a possible bona fide purchaser by recording an instrument giving notice of the community property interest in the property "within a period of ninety days from the date when such legal title has been made a matter of record..." n392

In California, protection is accorded to the good faith purchaser without knowledge of the marriage relation, who accepts a lease, contract, mortgage or deed from the spouse holding record title to community real property. n393 New Mexico also protects innocent purchasers against the adverse effects of their community property management provisions. n394

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 third w/1 part! w/5 protect!

§ 37.12(f) Gifts of Community Property.

One final area of managing community property that deserves mention here concerns gifts. n395 The Uniform Marital Property Act, for example, provides:

> (a) A spouse acting alone may give to a third person marital property that the spouse has the right to manage and control only if the value of the marital property given to the third person does not aggregate more than [$500] in a calendar year, or a larger amount if, when made, the gift is reasonable in amount considering the economic position of the spouses. Any other gift of marital property to a third person is subject to subsection (b) unless both spouses act together in making the gift.
>
> (b) If a gift of marital property by a spouse does not comply with subsection (a), the other spouse may bring an action to recover the property or a compensatory judgment in place of the property, to the extent of the non-compliance. The other spouse may bring the action against the donating spouse, the recipient of the gift, or both. The action must be commenced within the earlier of one year after the other spouse has notice of the gift or 3 years after the gift. If the recovery occurs during marriage, it is marital property. If the recovery occurs after a dissolution or the death of either spouse, it is limited to one-half of the value of the gift and is individual property. n396

Disputes about transfers from one spouse to a third party typically arise in the context of divorce or death. Discussion of those subjects in §§ 37.14 and 37.15, infra is pertinent here. There is also some pertinent discussion in § 37.12(b), supra, concerning duties of spouses to one another.

> Gifts are sometimes made to third parties in the form of life insurance benefits, discussed in § 37.11(e), supra, and these too may be subject to restrictions designed to protect the non-donor spouse. Wisconsin has a statute similar to the Uniform Marital Property Code provision quoted above, with specific references to gifts of life insurance and detailed provisions concerning life insurance generally. n397

Gifts of community property from one spouse, without the consent of the other, may be a fraud on the non-consenting spouse's property rights. Unlike an exchange for consideration, the community estate receives nothing for what is sometimes a very valuable interest. The approach suggested by the Uniform Marital Property Act is probably an accurate reflection of modern policy concerning the unilateral use of management powers over community property to benefit third parties.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 325. We shall not here explore the many historical details of management and control in the United States. At a minimum, the evolution of marital equality in management and control of property is well into its second century in the United States. In the mid-19th century, "Married Women's Property Acts" were adopted in a number of states, giving married women relatively complete control over their property. See 1 American Law of Property § 5.56 (A.J. Casner ed. 1952). In community property jurisdictions, the "most comprehensive, unique, and ultimately important reform" occurred in Texas in 1913. W.S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States, § 9:7 at 449 (1982). In that year, Texas adopted a new management scheme, whereby married women were given some control of certain community property, namely their own earnings and income from their separate property. This may now seem to be a fairly modest concession, but it took many more years for further reform: "Despite drafting difficulties and judicial setbacks, this 1913 reform would produce a more comprehensive reform in the late 1960's." Id. As late as 1970, the husband was the designated manager of community property in every community property state except Texas. See id. § 9:9 at 452.

(n2)Footnote 326. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.21.

(n3)Footnote 327. Id. § 5.81.

(n4)Footnote 328. Id. §§ 5.82 (separate property) & 5.84 (community property).

(n5)Footnote 329. Id. § 5.83 (separate property).

(n6)Footnote 330. Id. § 5.83 (separate property).

(n7)Footnote 331. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.010.

(n8)Footnote 332. Id. § 26.16.020.

(n9)Footnote 333. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-214A; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. 770(b) (1993); Idaho Code § 32-904; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.170; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-13; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.51(1)(a). See also Unif. Marital Property Act § 5(a)(1), 9A U.L.A. 97.

(n10)Footnote 334. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.15. A remedy is also explicitly provided for a breach of this duty "resulting in damage to the claimant spouse's property." Id. § 766.70(1). See also Unif. Marital Property Act § 15(a), 9A U.L.A. 97, 132 (referring to "the claimant spouse's present undivided one-half interest in marital property.") In Wisconsin, an action for breach of the duty must be commenced within six years after the claimant spouse acquires "actual knowledge of the facts giving rise to the claim." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.70(1). Under the U.M.P.A., the statutory period of limitations is three years. Uniform Marital Property Act § 15(d), 9A U.L.A. 97, 133. Interpreting Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.15, the Wisconsin court concluded that the statutory duty of good faith was exclusive in matters involving marital property, and that there was no separate common law action for intentional misrepresentation between spouses. Gardner v. Gardner, 499 N.W.2d 266 (Wis. App. 1993).

(n11)Footnote 335. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2354. See also Brown v. Brown, 680 So. 2d 1203 (La. App. 1996) (husband, who serves as an officer of a corporation which held marital assets, owes a fiduciary duty to that corporation).

(n12)Footnote 336. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.02.

(n13)Footnote 337. Massey v. Massey, 807 S.W.2d 391 (Tex. Ct. App. 1991).

(n14)Footnote 338. See Grothe v. Grothe, 590 S.W.2d 238 (Tex. Civ. App. 1979); Roberson v. Roberson, 420 S.W.2d 495 (Tex. Civ. App. 1967); Pride v. Pride, 318 S.W.2d 715 (Tex. Civ. App. 1958).

(n15)Footnote 339. See Belz v. Belz, 667 S.W.2d 240 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984).

(n16)Footnote 340. Grothe v. Grothe, 590 S.W.2d 238 (Tex. Civ. App. 1979); Reaney v. Reaney, 505 S.W.2d 338 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

(n17)Footnote 341. Andrews v. Andrews, 677 S.W.2d 171, 175 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984).

(n18)Footnote 342. See In re Moore, 890 S.W.2d 821 (Tex. App. 1994). The court states that an allegation of breach of fiduciary duty in divorce and a claim of fraud on the community are the same. No separate action exists, however, to recover for the actions of a defrauding spouse. Such a claim is to be asserted for the trial court's consideration in the division of the community estate. See also Connell v. Connell, 889 S.W.2d 534 (Tex. App. 1994). For a recent case involving claims of fraud in very interesting circumstances, see In re Devine, 869 S.W.2d 415 (Tex. App. 1993).

(n19)Footnote 343. See Cal. Civ. Code § 5125(e).

(n20)Footnote 344. J. thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 3.01 at 3-2 (1993).

(n21)Footnote 345. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1100(e). In Burch v. George, 866 P.2d 92 (Cal. 1994), a surviving spouse contended that a no contest clause in the decedent spouse's estate plan should not be enforced, urging the strong public policy of § 1100, favoring "fair dealing between the spouses," as the basis of her argument. The California Supreme Court disagrees, noting that a no contest clause does not result in any forfeiture or conversion of the spouse's community property, but rather acts as a disinheritance device. (Justices Kennard and Mosk voiced a vigorous dissent to this conclusion).

(n22)Footnote 346. Id. § 1101.

(n23)Footnote 347. Roselli v. Rio Communities Serv. Station, Inc., 787 P.2d 428 (N.M. 1990); Fernandez v. Fernandez, 806 P.2d 582 (N.M. Ct. App. 1991).

(n24)Footnote 348. Idaho Code § 32-901 (1983). See also Gerow v. Covill, 960 P.2d 55 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1998) (agreeing with Idaho and California courts, Arizona court held that a fiduciary relationship between spouses does exist with respect to community assets).

(n25)Footnote 349. Compton v. Compton, 612 P.2d 1175 (Idaho 1980).

(n26)Footnote 350. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.060.

(n27)Footnote 351. Id. § 123.070.

(n28)Footnote 352. See Bagur v. C.I.R., 603 F.2d 491 (5th Cir. 1979); Auger v. Auger, 381 So. 2d 879 (La. Ct. App. 1980). It is not entirely clear what the difference is between an obligation of "good faith" and the fiduciary obligation imposed in California and other states. A California statute explains the California duty in terms of good faith, albeit a high degree of good faith: "This confidential relationship imposes a duty of the highest good faith and fair dealing on each spouse, and neither shall take any unfair advantage of the other. This confidential relationship is a fiduciary relationship subject to the same rights and duties of non-marital business partners ..." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 721(b). In practice, it is quite likely that the duties in the various states will closely resemble one another.

(n29)Footnote 353. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.22.

(n30)Footnote 354. As the states began to increase the wife's management powers, the label "special community" was used to describe that portion of the community property that was under the wife's exclusive control.

(n31)Footnote 355. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.22(b); United States v. Blanche, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3122 (W.D. Tex. 1997) (characterizing property acquired with combined community funds as joint-management community property).

(n32)Footnote 356. Cockerham v. Cockerham, 527 S.W.2d 162 (Tex. 1975); Cooper v. Texas Gulf Indus., Inc., 513 S.W.2d 200 (Tex. 1974). But see McCloy v. Silverthorne, 296 F.3d 370 (5th Cir. 2002) (a Texas land parcel purchased with joint funds of the debtor and non-debtor spouse was sole-management community property of the debtor).

(n33)Footnote 357. Massey v. Massey, 807 S.W.2d 391 (Tex. Ct. App. 1991).

(n34)Footnote 358. Id.

(n35)Footnote 359. Cumming v. Johnson, 616 F.2d 1069 (9th Cir. 1979).

(n36)Footnote 360. Vallone v. Miller, 663 S.W.2d 97 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983), citing Williams v. Portland State Bank, 514 S.W.2d 124 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

(n37)Footnote 361. Vallone v. Miller, 663 S.W.2d 97, 99 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983).

(n38)Footnote 362. Dalton v. Don I. Jackson, 691 S.W.2d 765 (Tex. Ct. App. 1985). United States v. Blanche, No. SA-95-CA-0419, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3122 (W.D. Tex. 1997) (following Dalton rather than Vallone; holding one spouse cannot without consent dispose of sole management community property absent written authorization).

(n39)Footnote 363. 1972 Wash. Laws, Extra Sess. ch. 108.

(n40)Footnote 364. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.030.

(n41)Footnote 365. Reid v. Cramer, 603 P.2d 851 (Wash. App. 1979); Daily v. Warren, 558 P.2d 1374 (Wash. App. 1977); Pixton v. Silva, 534 P.2d 135 (Wash. App. 1975).

(n42)Footnote 366. Smith v. Stout, 700 P.2d 343 (Wash. App. 1985). It has also been demonstrated that this provision can have consequences not only in terms of management and control but also in terms of marital property liability. Colorado Nat'l Bank v. Merlino, 668 P.2d 1304 (Wash. App. 1983), discussed at § 37.13(b)(5), infra.

(n43)Footnote 367. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.030(6).

(n44)Footnote 368. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.230 (1991 & 1992).

(n45)Footnote 369. In re Lemons & Assocs., Inc. 69 B.R. 360 (Bankr. D. Nev. 1987).

(n46)Footnote 370. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-214.

(n47)Footnote 371. See Geronimo Hotel & Lodge v. Putzi, 728 P.2d 1227 (Ariz. 1986).

(n48)Footnote 372. Id.

(n49)Footnote 373. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1102(a).

(n50)Footnote 374. Id. § 1100(a). See also In re Murin, 283 B.R. 588, (Bankr. D. Ariz 2002) (the Rundle doctrine, as applied under Arizona law to make any contract executed by one spouse encumbering community property without other spouse's consent void and not merely suspended, did not apply to property that the debtor held as tenant by the entirety with his wife, such that any defect in deed of trust that the debtor executed in his name only upon this entireties property was cured when the property was awarded to the debtor by the divorce court).

(n51)Footnote 375. Id. § 1100(b). Gifts mutually given by both spouses to third parties or by one spouse to the other are excepted.

(n52)Footnote 376. Id. § 1100(c).

(n53)Footnote 377. Id. § 1100(d).

(n54)Footnote 378. Idaho Code § 32-912 (1993).

(n55)Footnote 379. Keller v. Rogstad, 733 P.2d 705 (Idaho 1987).

(n56)Footnote 380. Lowry v. Ireland Bank, 779 P.2d 22 (Idaho Ct. App. 1989).

(n57)Footnote 381. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-13.

(n58)Footnote 382. Id.

(n59)Footnote 383. Id.

(n60)Footnote 384. Id. § 40-3-14A.

(n61)Footnote 385. Id. § 40-3-14B.

(n62)Footnote 386. Id. § 40-3-14C.

(n63)Footnote 387. Amador v. Lara, 603 P.2d 310 (N.M. Ct. App. 1979) (income tax returns were filed as a partnership and wife assisted husband in business).

(n64)Footnote 388. Property subject to the spouse's sole management is her separate property and her sole management community property. See § 37.12(c) for discussion of sole management community property in Texas.

(n65)Footnote 389. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.24.

(n66)Footnote 390. Cumming v. Johnson, 616 F.2d 1069 (9th Cir. 1979).

(n67)Footnote 391. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.095.

(n68)Footnote 392. Id. § 26.16.100.

(n69)Footnote 393. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1102(c)(2).

(n70)Footnote 394. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 14-9-3; Jeffers v. Martinez, 658 P.2d 426 (N.M. 1982).

(n71)Footnote 395. Because of the requirement that both spouses join in transfers of community real property, discussed in § 37.12(c), supra, the discussion in this section will be pertinent primarily to personal property.

(n72)Footnote 396. Unif. Marital Property Act § 6, 9A U.L.A. 97.

(n73)Footnote 397. Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 766.53 & 766.61. See also § 37.11(e), supra.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.13

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.13 Marital Debt and Liability.

[Go To Supp]

In common law states, with their individualist approach to property, the subject of marital debt and liability is relatively simple. One can connect the debt with the debtor (or debtors) and with that individual debtor's (or debtors') property and know who is liable and what property can be used to satisfy that liability. If it is solely the husband's debt, he is personally liable and his property can be used to satisfy the debt. If both spouses incurred the debt, the property of either or both can usually be used to satisfy the debt.

In community property states, however, the matter is potentially more complex. n398 We could have three potential "owners" of obligations -- wife's separate estate, husband's separate estate, and the community estate -- and three types of property. And these "owners" can be obligated individually or in combination with one another. In Texas, with its division of community property into three pots for purposes of management, n399 the matter can be even more complicated. There we have the potential of five, not three, categories of property on the one hand and obligation on the other: (1) wife's separate; (2) husband's separate; (3) wife's sole management community; (4) husband's sole management community; and (5) joint management community.

The states approach the subject of marital debt and liability from somewhat different directions. Some break debt into the same classifications as property; others do not. Some statutes use terms such as "liabilities of a spouse" or "liabilities of the spouses" or "debts of the wife or husband" or "a spouse's obligation," rather than, or in addition to, "separate liability [or debt]" or "community liability [or debt]." n400 It is not always clear what any of these terms mean or how they fit into the marital property system.

In linking obligations and liability in a community property system, there are at least two possible ways of framing and discussing the issues. We might start by classifying the obligations and then assessing the liability of various types of marital property for each type of obligation. Another approach is to identify the property owned by the spouses and then determine the kinds of obligations that can be satisfied out of each type of property. The latter approach seems generally more satisfactory because of the differences in the way jurisdictions refer to or classify debt. In some states, debt is essentially treated as an individual matter and the marital implications are simply sorted out in the allocation of marital property liability.

In §§ 37.13(b)(4) and 37.13(b)(5), infra, we discuss the liability of separate property and the liability of community property, respectively, for the obligations that either or both spouses have incurred. More limited subjects are singled out in the subsections preceding those, because these subjects sometimes receive specialized legal treatment:

1. Classification of debt in some states, corresponding to classification of property;

2. Liability for necessaries and support of the family;

3. Liability for torts committed by either or both spouses;

4. Liability for premarital debts incurred by either spouse.

§ 37.13(a) Classification of Debt.

On the surface, a sensible place to start a discussion of marital debt and liability might seem to be "classification of debt," just as much of the beginning of this chapter is devoted to "classification of property." As we have seen, in community property states, the process of classification of property either as "community property" or as "separate property" of one of the spouses is fundamental to the whole marital property scheme. Some states have carried this classification one step further, putting marital debt into similar categories, although the definitions and distinctions drawn with respect to "separate" and "community" debt are more obscure and fuzzy than the comparable definitions of property.

In a provision substantially parallel to the definitions of separate and community property, New Mexico's legislature has defined marital debt as follows:

> A. "Separate debt" means:
>
> (1) a debt contracted or incurred by a spouse before marriage or after entry of a decree or dissolution of marriage;
>
> (2) a debt contracted or incurred by a spouse after entry of a decree entered pursuant to Section 40-4-3 N.M. Stat. Ann. 1978, n401 unless the decree provides otherwise;
>
> (3) a debt designated as a separate debt of a spouse by a judgment or decree of any court having jurisdiction;
>
> (4) a debt contracted by a spouse during marriage which is identified by a spouse to the creditor in writing at the time of its creation as the separate debt of the contracting spouse;
>
> (5) a debt which arises from a tort committed by a spouse before marriage or after entry of a decree of dissolution of marriage or a separate tort committed during marriage; or
>
> (6) a debt declared to be unreasonable pursuant to Section 2 [40-3-10.1 N.M. Stat. Ann. 1978] n402 of this act.
>
> B. "Community debt" means a debt contracted or incurred by either or both spouses during marriage which is not a separate debt. n403

Louisiana's legislature has also defined marital obligations in terms of "separate" and "community":

> An obligation incurred by a spouse may be either a community obligation or a separate obligation. n404
>
> An obligation incurred by a spouse during the existence of a community property regime for the common interest of the spouses or for the interest of the other spouse is a community obligation. n405
>
> A separate obligation of a spouse is one incurred by that spouse prior to the establishment or after termination of a community property regime, or one incurred during the existence of a community property regime though not for the common interest of the spouses or for the interest of the other spouse. An obligation resulting from an intentional wrong not perpetrated for the benefit of the community, or an obligation incurred for the separate property of a spouse to the extent that it does not benefit the community, the family, or the other spouse, is likewise a separate obligation. n406

In another parallel with marital property, Louisiana has also adopted a presumption that obligations incurred during marriage are community debts. n407 In one fashion or another, other states impose a similar presumption. In Wisconsin, for example, the legislature avoids the "community" label, but states:

> An obligation incurred by a spouse during marriage, including one attributable to an act or omission during marriage, is presumed to be incurred in the interest of the marriage or the family. n408

Even without the aid of statutes, courts have also sometimes patterned their classification of debt after the definitions of marital property. n409 Debt incurred before or after marriage is separate debt. Whether one of both spouses sign the papers, loans during marriage are presumptively incurred on behalf of the community. This can, of course, be contradicted and overcome by evidence that the obligation was in fact a separate debt. Such evidence would include loan documentation indicating that the creditor is looking only to the spouse's separate estate for satisfaction, but rebuttal of the presumption is not necessarily an easy task, even with some evidence. n410

Even though the signature of one spouse alone may be sufficient to make a loan a community obligation, when a creditor seeks the right to satisfy an obligation out of the assets of either or both spouses, the signatures and commitments of both should usually be obtained. n411 This approach will not only ensure that the debt is a community obligation, but will also give the lender greater protection in the event of a dissolution of the marriage before the obligation is satisfied. Because of the possibility of divorce, future earnings cannot really be characterized as community property until they are earned, and therefore one spouse does not have the ability to commit irrevocably the future earnings of the other spouse. n412

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 marital w/1 debt! w/15 classif!

§ 37.13(b) Liability of Marital Property.

Unlike Louisiana and New Mexico, most of the states have not attempted to define marital debt in terms of "separate" and "community," at least by statute. This is not necessarily surprising, since the definitions are not ends in and of themselves. Classifying marital obligations in this fashion may even add unnecessary complexity to the matter. Most states have simply addressed directly the basic questions of what marital property can be used to satisfy obligations incurred by either or both spouses.

In a sense, it may be a misnomer to speak of "liability of property" since it is really people who are liable. Property itself is typically defined by lawyers in terms of relationships among people rather than the assets themselves. Even so, in the world of marital property, speaking of liability in terms of various classes of property makes some sense as a shorthand term of reference. Also, statutes and courts frequently use this terminology.

As the only state to move from a common law marital property system to a community property system, Wisconsin approaches the subject of debt and liability from the interesting perspective of both the common law and the civil law systems. Wisconsin law is based on, but somewhat different than, the Uniform Marital Property Act. The statutory provisions setting out the rules are discussed in some detail in a 1993 decision of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals. n413 Four categories of obligations are specified in the Uniform Marital Property Act: (1) Support; (2) Family purposes; (3) Premarital obligations; and (4) All other obligations.

§ 37.13(b)(1) Liability for Necessaries and Support.

An obligation to support one's spouse and children is often expressed in law, and some states impose broad liability on marital property for items that are necessary to support the family. California, which adopted a comprehensive scheme of marital property liability in 1984, imposes an obligation to support one's spouse, n414 and provides that a married person is personally liable for the following debts incurred by the person's spouse during marriage:

> (1) A debt incurred for necessaries of life of the person's spouse while the spouses are living together.
>
> (2) Except as provided in Section 4302, a debt incurred for common necessaries of life of the person's spouse while the spouses are living separately. n415

A similar obligation is imposed for the benefit of minor children:

> Subject to this division, the father and mother of a minor child have an equal responsibility to support their child in the manner suitable to the child's circumstances. n416

If a parent neglects to provide necessaries for a child under the parent's charge, according to the parent's circumstances, a third person may in good faith supply the necessaries and recover their reasonable value from the parent. n417

Other states enforce obligations to provide necessaries in a fashion similar to that adopted by California. n418 In Nevada, rather sexist distinctions still survive. If a husband neglects to make adequate provision for the support of his wife, and a person in good faith supplies her with articles necessary for her support, the husband is liable for the reasonable value of the articles provided. n419 The wife, on the other hand, "must support the husband out of her separate property when he has no separate property and they have no community property and he, from infirmity, is not able or competent to support himself." n420 Neither husband nor wife is obligated to support a spouse who has abandoned the other. n421

Louisiana simply provides that "A spouse is solidarily liable with the other spouse who incurs an obligation for necessaries for himself or the family." n422 Under this statute each spouse is liable for obligations incurred by either for necessaries. As between the spouses themselves, however, in the absence of any contrary provision in a matrimonial agreement, "each spouse contributes in proportion to his means." n423

Under Washington law, "expenses of the family and the education of the children, including stepchildren, are chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, and they may be sued jointly or separately." n424 A proviso to a statute excusing a spouse from liability for premarital and separate debts of the other spouse states that the obligation to support a child may be collected out of the parent's or stepparent's separate property, earnings and accumulations, and his or her share of community property. It also exempts funds in a community bank account that can be identified as earnings of the non-obligated spouse from satisfaction of the child support obligation of the debtor spouse. n425

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 liab! or obligat! w/5 necessar! or support!

§ 37.13(b)(2) Liability for Torts.

Tortious liability has been distinguished from contractual liability and we also consider it separately here. As with all forms of liability, the separate property of the judgment debtor or tortfeasor can naturally be used to satisfy the debt. n426 The question of liability of the other marital estates -- community property and non-tortfeasor's separate property -- is not so easily resolved.

In the most detailed statutory treatment of the subject, California provides that a person is not liable for any injury or damage caused by the spouse except where the persons would have been liable if the marriage had not existed. n427 Washington, in a similar provision, allows no recovery against the separate property of one spouse for injuries committed by the other spouse, except where there would be joint responsibility if the marriage did not exist. n428

The statutes in some states do not explicitly address tortious liability. In other states, the subject may be addressed but not really resolved by statute. n429 Some courts, with or without statutory guidance, have adopted some version of the following test for liability of community property for the torts of a spouse: If the tort was committed in furtherance of the community's interest, or with the support, knowledge, consent or ratification of the other spouse, or if the community benefitted from the tort, community property will be liable. n430 Even where no community interest is involved, liability may extend to the tortfeasor's one-half interest in community property. n431

In Louisiana, an "obligation resulting from an intentional wrong not perpetrated for the benefit of the community, or an obligation incurred for the separate property of a spouse to the extent that it does not benefit the community, the family, or the other spouse" is a separate obligation. n432 Separate obligations may be satisfied during the community regime from community property as well as the separate property of the spouse who incurred the obligation. n433

In Texas, all community property is, by statute, "subject to tortious liability of either spouse incurred during marriage" and community property over which the tortfeasor has management power is subject to tortious liability incurred before marriage. n434 In California too, all community property is apparently subject to tortious liability of either spouse incurred during marriage. Priorities for satisfaction of tort liability under the California statute are established along lines similar to the test described in the preceding paragraphs, i.e., depending on whether the liability is based upon an act or omission which occurred during the performance of an activity for the benefit of the community. If so, the liability shall "first be satisfied from the community estate property and second from the separate property of the married person." n435 If not, the liability is satisfied in reverse order of that just stated. n436 To the extent the liability is satisfied out of insurance proceeds, none of these rules apply, whether the proceeds are community property or separate property. n437

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital or community w/1 property w/30 liab! w/5 tort!

§ 37.13(b)(3) Liability for Premarital Debts.

Debts incurred before marriage can generally be satisfied from community property and from the separate property of the spouse who incurred the debt. n438 Separate property of the non-debtor spouse is not available for that purpose. n439

In most states, the community property that can be used to satisfy the premarital obligation of one spouse is limited to property that can be attributed in some fashion to the debtor spouse. In Arizona, for example, the limitation is defined in terms of the value of the spouse's contribution to community property which would have been that spouse's separate property if single. n440 That would presumably include all earnings of the debtor spouse, even though one-half of those earnings, during marriage, are property of the other spouse. The Wisconsin statute n441 is very similar to Arizona's, and the Texas statute incorporates that state's unique scheme of marital property management to come to a similar conclusion concerning the liability of community property for premarital debts. n442 In other states, the limitation on community property that can be used to satisfy premarital obligations of one spouse is couched not in terms of property that would have been that spouse's separate property if single, but rather, in terms of protecting the non-debtor spouse's ownership interest in community property. n443

In California, "earnings of a married person during marriage are not liable for a debt incurred by the person's spouse before marriage." n444 Earnings are defined as compensation for personal services performed "whether as an employee or otherwise." This exception is, however, limited. To remain not liable, the earnings must be segregated in a deposit account in which the spouse has no right of withdrawal and in which no significant amount of other property in the community estate is commingled. In effect, then, it would probably be necessary for a spouse to be aware of this law and take conscious steps to insulate community earnings from the spouse's premarital debts.

In Louisiana, all community property is available to satisfy a premarital debt n445 but upon termination of the community property regime, the non-debtor spouse is entitled to reimbursement for one-half of the property so used. n446

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 liab! w/5 debt! w/2 premarital or (before w/1 marriage)

§ 37.13(b)(4) Liability of Separate Property Generally.

Separate property of a spouse is, of course, liable for debts incurred by that spouse before or during marriage n447 and is not liable for separate debts incurred by the other spouse before or during marriage, unless both spouses are otherwise liable. n448

The rules regarding responsibility of a separate estate for community obligations are, perhaps, less obvious than the rules of responsibility for separate debt. One possible view might be that community debts can be satisfied only out of community property. It does, however, make sense that the community estate of the spouses, at least in part, would be responsible for all debts of either or both spouses, separate as well as community.

It is clear that community obligations can, in some states and to some extent, be satisfied out of separate property of the debtor spouse. n449 In some states, however, the statutes are simply framed in different terms. As noted in § 37.13(b)(2), supra, for example, California avoids reference to separate obligations and community obligations. Rather, the separate property of a married person "is liable for a debt incurred by the person before or during marriage" n450 and "is not liable for a debt incurred by the person's spouse before or during marriage." n451

Likewise, in Texas, a "spouse's separate property is not subject to liabilities of the other spouse unless both spouses are liable by other rules of law." n452

To understand the Texas approach to marital property liability, it may be necessary to address that state's unique system of characterizing management and control of marital property. n453 There appears to be some authority for the proposition that Texas debt, like Texas property, is divided into five classifications:

1. Separate debt of the wife;

2. Separate debt of the husband;

3. Sole community debt of the husband;

4. Sole community debt of the wife;

5. Joint community debt.

The Texas Supreme Court has suggested that debts contracted during marriage are presumed to be "joint community obligations" and that "the fact that the debts are community liabilities would not, alone, necessarily lead to the conclusion that they were joint liabilities." n454 Are there, then, "joint community obligations" and "sole community obligations" of each spouse?

These statements in the Cockerham opinion, and perhaps the Texas statutes themselves, have caused some confusion. In that case, the court concluded that debts incurred in the operation of a dress shop were "joint community debts." Lower courts have attempted to apply the apparent distinction drawn in that case, between "joint community obligations" and other community obligations, but not with complete success. In one suit commenced after divorce, involving debts incurred by the husband during marriage, the court concluded that the debts were not joint liabilities and that former community property allotted to the wife in the divorce was not subject to the liability. n455

In a somewhat parallel development that also occurred in 1980, the Texas constitutional provision on marital property was amended. Before the amendment, the provision stated that spouses could partition community property without prejudice to pre-existing creditors. That passage now reads as follows:

> [P]ersons about to marry and spouses, without the intention to defraud pre-existing creditors, may by written instrument from time to time partition between themselves all or part of their property, then existing or to be acquired, or exchange between themselves the community interest of one spouse or future spouse in any property for the community interest of the other spouse or future spouse in other community property then existing or to be acquired, whereupon the portion or interest set aside to each spouse shall be and constitute a part of the separate property and estate of such spouse or future spouse; n456

Although this provision is directed primarily to arrangements during and before marriage, and does not necessarily affect partition in the context of dissolution of the marriage, the amendment could conceivably be applied or relied upon for the proposition that creditors are less well off now than before the amendment, since the test is now intent-to-defraud rather than prejudice-to.

Another case involved intervention by an attorney in a divorce action. n457 The attorney sought attorney's fees for former representation of the wife and the court concluded that the husband and wife were jointly and severally liable, without discussing Cockerham. A dissenting justice objected, however, that the majority did not abide by the commands of Cockerham. He would have held that there was a community debt involved but not a "joint" liability, thus avoiding the conclusion that the husband's separate property would be subject to the debt in violation of Texas law that a spouse's separate property "is not subject to the liabilities of the other spouse unless both spouses are liable by other rules of law." n458 Even the dissenter, however, apparently would have held that all community property was liable for the obligation.

This rather extended discussion of a problem unique to Texas may put the question of marital property liability generally into sharper focus. In classifying debt as "community" and "separate," courts and legislatures in Texas and most of the other community property states may have fallen into a trap that has caught many other students of American property law: Forgetting that "property" is not so much "things" as it is relationships among people with respect to things. In this regard, characterization of marital property works well in setting out pertinent relationships between husband and wife. Attempts to characterize debt as "community" or "separate," however, may unduly complicate matters and cloud the issues, especially if we break the classification down even further, as has arguably happened in Texas. Liability for debt in marriage potentially involves wife, husband and creditor. Property interests of each of these three are at stake. The question is what property interests of husband and what property interests of wife can be taken to satisfy the debt. The answer may simply depend on whether either or both are debtors.

Discussing the Texas rules of marital property liability and the confusion generated by Cockerham, one author has put the matter this way:

> As you can see from Section 5.61 [of the Texas Family Code], there are only two types of contract debts in Texas. A contract debt can be the debt of one spouse, or it can be the debt of both spouses. The Cockerham court concluded that the husband had ratified the wife's debts, so the debts were the debts of both spouses. So far, so good. Unfortunately, the court stated that debts contracted during marriage are presumed to be "joint community obligations," whatever that means. The court is correct that credit purchases are considered community property, for characterization purposes. However, there is no such thing as a "community debt" for purposes of creditors' rights. n459

Because of the shared ownership theory of community property, title to property (and therefore creditors' practices) will vary from community property states to common law states. Even so, the law of debt and liability probably need not differ as much from one system to another as does marital property title. Even in a community property system, it is possible to define debt in terms of joint liability and separate liability, avoiding the concept of community debt. If one spouse is liable, either independently of, or jointly with, the other spouse, property "owned" by that spouse could be subject to the obligation. Once we identify which person or persons are indebted, we simply link that obligation to property "owned" by that person or persons to determine liability.

Some definition of ownership for these purposes would be required. As to separate property, ownership is easily defined. As to community property, two options seem most likely: All property in the community estate could be owned, for these purposes, by each spouse, meaning a creditor of either could satisfy the obligation out of all community property; or each spouse might be considered owner of only one-half of the community estate, meaning that if only one spouse is indebted, only one-half of the community property would be available to satisfy the debt.

A theoretical complication arises for these definitions of community ownership for purposes of marital debt. Unlike a tenant in common or a joint tenant, a spouse does not have a unilateral right to withdraw his or her interest or to partition community property, and one might contend that allowing a creditor of one spouse to satisfy liability out of community property violates this principle. Indivisible interests are made divisible through debt. This does not seem to be a very substantial objection and we see no reason that a creditor should not be able to reach at least the debtor spouse's interest in community property. And, as we see in § 37.13(b)(5) infra, the states have certainly not gone so far in actually protecting community property from creditors.

All of this is not to suggest that the matter of marital property liability is simple and that there are no difficult issues involved; quite the contrary is true. There are matters that need attention, such as concerns about marital income and rights of reimbursement, and the law of liability of marital property could benefit from further attention in community property states.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: separate w/1 property w/15 liab! w/5 debt!

§ 37.13(b)(5) Liability of Community Property in General.

As has been noted, since 1984, California has had one of the most comprehensive statutory treatments of marital debt and liability. The statute defines "debt" in broad terms n460 and sets forth a sweeping statement of liability of the community estate:

> Except as otherwise expressly provided by statute, the community estate is liable for a debt incurred by either spouse before or during marriage, regardless of which spouse has the management and control of the property and regardless of whether one or both spouses are parties to the debt or to a judgment for the debt. n461

Thus, California generally allows all creditors of either spouse, whether the debt would elsewhere be referred to as "separate" or "community," to reach all community property to satisfy the debt. As discussed in § 37.13(b)(3), supra, one significant exception to this is that earnings of a married person during marriage are not liable for a premarital debt of the person's spouse. n462 This exception is, however, limited to earnings that are segregated in a deposit account in which the spouse has no right of withdrawal and in which no significant amount of other property in the community estate is commingled.

Louisiana also takes a relatively broad view of community property liability. The statute says simply that "A separate or community obligation may be satisfied during the community property regime from community property and from the separate property of the spouse who incurred the obligation." n463

If, however, community property is used to satisfy a separate obligation of a spouse, the other spouse or her or his heirs are entitled to reimbursement when the marriage ends. n464

Other states do not necessarily have rules of community property liability that are as favorable to creditors as California and Louisiana. There is little, if any, doubt that community debts or joint debts of both spouses can be satisfied out of community property not only in California and Louisiana but in all community property jurisdictions. n465 Differences occur, however, with respect to individual or separate obligations of the spouses.

As with other questions of marital property management and liability, the most unique approach to liability of community property is found in Texas. As discussed in § 37.12(c), supra, Texas divides community property into "sole management" community property of each spouse and "joint management" property of both spouses. n466

And the confusing issue of "community debt" in Texas is discussed in § 37.13(b)(4), supra. By a combination of express statutory language and implication from statutory language, it is clear that community property can be used to satisfy what would be community debt in other jurisdictions, or joint debt of both spouses. But some specific situations would be resolved differently, in form if not in substance, in Texas than in other states.

If Texas spouses are jointly obligated, all community property is subject to liability to satisfy the obligation. Exceptions to liability of community property appear in the Texas statute on rules of marital property liability, n467 but those limitations are prefaced by the phrase, "unless both spouses are personally liable as provided by Section 4.031." That section in turn provides that a person is personally liable for acts of the person's spouse only if the spouse acts as an agent for the person or incurs a debt for necessaries. n468 In essence, then, spouses can be jointly liable either because both incurred the liability personally or because one was acting as an agent for the other as well as for himself or herself. If each is liable, the obligation can be satisfied out of all community property. If only one spouse incurred the liability, however, the statutory rules of marital property liability come into play. In that case, the community property subject to the debtor's sole management and control is liable for the obligation n469 and community property subject to the non-debtor's sole management and control is not liable for the obligation unless it is a tortious liability. n470 Community property subject to the spouses' joint management and control is liable for the debts of either or both spouses.

Other states have also taken a more restrictive view than California and Louisiana concerning the liability of community property for separate or individual debts of the spouses. n471 The Arizona statute provides that:

> The community property is liable for the premarital separate debts or other liabilities of a spouse, incurred after September 1, 1973, but only to the extent of the value of that spouse's contribution to the community property which would have been such spouse's separate property if single. n472

The phrase, "or other liabilities of a spouse," is ambiguous. It could refer to liabilities other than premarital obligations or it might refer to premarital liabilities other than separate debts. The courts have apparently opted for the second interpretation, and the statute has been construed to mean that a separate debt incurred after marriage cannot be satisfied from community property. n473

In a case involving conflict of laws issues, a married Washington resident executed an agreement to purchase land in Colorado. n474 The purchase papers disclosed the man's marital status, but his spouse had no knowledge of the transaction and did not ratify it. When the man defaulted on the purchase, the creditor obtained a default judgment in Colorado. The Washington court held that the Colorado judgment was entitled to full faith and credit but that Washington law determined what property was subject to the judgment. Had this been a transaction for purchase of personal property, it would have been a community obligation, but the Washington management statute n475 requires joinder of the spouse to make a real property transaction a community obligation. Thus community property was not liable for the husband's separate debt.

In New Mexico, the debtor spouse's one-half interest in community property is subject to the debtor's separate debt, but only if the debtor's separate property (excluding property in which each spouse has an undivided equal interest as a tenant in common or joint tenant) is insufficient. n476 The other spouse's interest in community property is not liable for the separate debt of the debtor spouse. n477 Thus, when one spouse's separate property is exhausted, one-half of the non-debtor spouse's income is available to satisfy the obligation. n478

Now that equal management rules exist in community property states, either spouse can, of course, incur obligations on behalf of the community. And we have seen that an obligation incurred during the marriage may be presumed to be a community debt, even though only one spouse is involved in the transaction. n479 Under such circumstances, one issue that arises is which parties should be sued in an action to collect on a community debt. The obvious answer is that both spouses should usually be named as defendants. In Arizona, in an action on a community debt, "the spouses shall be sued jointly." n480 The community obligation is to be satisfied "first, from the community property, and second, from the separate property of the spouse contracting the debt or obligation." n481

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/15 liab! w/5 debt!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 398. We suggest in § 37.13(b)(3) that some states may have unduly complicated marital property liability by characterizing debt in the same way property is classified, i.e., as "community debt" and "separate debt."

(n2)Footnote 399. See § 37.12(c), supra.

(n3)Footnote 400. See Idaho Code Ann. §§ 32-910 & 32-911; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55.

(n4)Footnote 401. This section provides for division of property without dissolution of marriage.

(n5)Footnote 402. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-10.1 provides:

The court, at the time of the final decree of dissolution of marriage, may declare, as between the parties, a debt to be unreasonable if it was incurred by a spouse while the spouse was living apart and the debt did not contribute to the benefit of both spouses or their dependents.

(n6)Footnote 403. Id. § 40-3-9. See also In re Monroe, 282 B.R. 219 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2002) (judgment debt of the nondebtor husband, on which the debtor-wife was not individually liable, but which, being in the nature of community debt, could be enforced against debtor-wife's interest in community property).

(n7)Footnote 404. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2539.

(n8)Footnote 405. Id. art. 2360.

(n9)Footnote 406. Id. art. 2363.

(n10)Footnote 407. Id. art. 2361. Keene v. Reggie, 701 So. 2d 720, 728 (La. App. 1997) (presumption that debts incurred during marriage are community debts is rebuttable; courts must examine the uses to which the proceeds are put). See also Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Epps, 708 So. 2d 824 (La. Ct. App. 1998) (Louisiana also recognizes the presumption that obligations incurred during marriage are community debts).

(n11)Footnote 408. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55(1). This paragraph goes on to say that a separately signed statement that the obligation is incurred for the marriage or the family is conclusive evidence that it is such an obligation, except that such statement does not affect interspousal rights and remedies.

(n12)Footnote 409. See W.S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States § 10:4 at 485 (1982).

(n13)Footnote 410. See Brubaker v. Hovde, 723 P.2d 1193 (Wash. App. 1986).

(n14)Footnote 411. In some cases, signatures of both spouses will be legally necessary to bind the community estate. We have noted, for example, the requirement that both spouses join in transactions affecting real property. See § 37.12(c), supra. See also Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-214(c) (1991):

Either spouse separately may ... bind the community, except that joinder of both spouses is required in any of the following cases:

...

(2) Any transaction of guaranty, indemnity or suretyship. Under this provision, an Arizona court has held that a guaranty signed by only the husband was binding only on the husband's separate estate.

Consolidated Roofing & Supply Co. v. Grimm, 682 P.2d 457 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1984).

(n15)Footnote 412. See U.S. v. ITT Consumer Fin. Corp., 816 F.2d 487 (9th Cir. 1987); Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Holley, 723 P.2d 893 (Idaho 1986).

(n16)Footnote 413. St. Mary's Hosp. Med. Ctr. v. Brody, 519 N.W.2d 706 (Wis. App. 1994). The court notes that the support category provides "the widest range of assets a creditor can reach to satisfy an obligation." Wisconsin Statutes § 766.55(2)(a) provides: "A spouse's obligation to satisfy a duty of support owed to the other spouse or to a child of the marriage may be satisfied only from all marital property and all other property of the obligated spouse." The trial court judgment provided that the husband's creditor (for medical services incurred a few months before divorce)

"may only satisfy the amount of this Judgment out of marital assets assigned to the [wife] to the extent of the value of the marital property at the date of [her] divorce." The appellate court concluded that this limitation was in error and it therefore reversed.

(n17)Footnote 414. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 4300. As between the spouses, a person's obligation of support is to be satisfied first out of community property and when there is no community property or quasi-community property out of that person's separate property. Id. § 4301. This duty of support can be enforced by either the obligee spouse or by the county, and reasonable attorney's fees and court costs can be ordered in a proceeding brought by the county. Id. § 4303.

(n18)Footnote 415. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 914. Section 4302 provides that "A person is not liable for support of the person's spouse when the person is living separate from the spouse by agreement unless support is stipulated in the agreement."

Under § 914, separate property of the non-obligor spouse can, of course, be used to satisfy the liability. Paragraph (b) of that section establishes a right to reimbursement in the event such property is applied to satisfy the obligation when it could have been satisfied out of community property or separate property of the obligor spouse.

(n19)Footnote 416. Id. § 3900. This duty of support continues in favor of unmarried children who are full-time high school students until they complete the 12th grade or attain the age of 19 years, whichever occurs first. Id. § 3901. Similar duties are imposed in other states. See Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.02 (as long as they are minors and as long thereafter as they are enrolled in high school).

(n20)Footnote 417. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 3950.

(n21)Footnote 418. See Idaho Code § 32-1003 (1983) (language almost identical to California statute); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 4.02 & 4.03 ("A spouse or parent who fails to discharge the duty of support is liable to any person who provides necessaries to those to whom support is owed."); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55 (spouse's obligation to satisfy a duty of support owed to spouse or child may be satisfied from all marital [community] property and all other property of the obligated spouse); O'Carolan v. Hopper, 71 S.W.3d 529 (Tex. App. 2002) (the trial court abused its discretion in awarding only spousal support in lieu of any community property).

(n22)Footnote 419. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.090 (separate property of husband is liable if community property is insufficient).

(n23)Footnote 420. Id. § 123.110. Until 1988, Idaho had the same provision. Idaho Code § 32-915 (1983), repealed 1988 Idaho Laws ch. 50, § 2.

(n24)Footnote 421. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.100.

(n25)Footnote 422. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2372. Simon v. Charles, 689 So. 2d 716, 717 (La. App.) (finding that since shelter is a necessary family expense, lease agreement was a community obligation, even though it was signed by only one spouse).

(n26)Footnote 423. Id. art. 2373.

(n27)Footnote 424. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.205. The obligation to support stepchildren terminates upon dissolution, decree of legal separation, or death. The stepparent may also petition for termination of the obligation when a petition for dissolution or separation is filed. Sunkidd Venture, Inc. v. Snyder-Entel, 941 P.2d 16, (Wash. App. 1997) (holding that since housing is a family expense, a residential lease extension was a community obligation, even though only one spouse signed the agreement).

(n28)Footnote 425. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200.

(n29)Footnote 426. See, e.g., Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1000. Some statutes setting forth rules of marital property liability do not explicitly state that a debtor spouse's separate property can be used to satisfy his debt, perhaps because it is so obvious that this would be the case. See Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61.

(n30)Footnote 427. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1000(a). California has, with some success, attempted to avoid the separate-community labels with respect to debt. See Grolemund v. Cafferata, 111 P.2d 641 (Cal. 1941). When referring to obligations, California statutes speak of debts incurred by persons, not "separate debts" or "community debts." The statutes do, however, speak of "liability of the community estate" and "liability of separate property" in referring to the estates from which obligations can be satisfied. See, e.g., Cal. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 910 & 913.

(n31)Footnote 428. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.190. Texas likewise provides that except where other doctrines, such as agency, respondeat superior or joint enterprise, impose liability, neither spouse is individually or personally liable for torts of the other spouse. Lawrence v. Hardy, 583 S.W.2d 795 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978). A Texas spouse's separate property is therefore not generally subject to the tortious liability of the other spouse. See Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61(a).

(n32)Footnote 429. In New Mexico, the definition of "separate debt" includes "a debt which arises from a tort committed by a spouse before marriage or after entry of a decree of dissolution of marriage or a separate tort committed during marriage." N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-9A(5). Statutes do not define "separate tort," however, leaving the problem of determining whether a tort committed by a spouse during marriage is a "community" or "separate" tort to the courts. Dell v. Heard, 532 F.2d 1330 (10th Cir. 1976).

(n33)Footnote 430. Selby v. Savard, 655 P.2d 342 (Ariz. 1982); Garrett v. Shannon, 476 P.2d 538 (Ariz. 1970); Howe v. Haught, 462 P.2d 395 (Ariz. App. 1969); Hansen v. Blevins, 367 P.2d 758 (Idaho 1962); Delph v. Potomac Ins. Co., 620 P.2d 1282 (N.M. 1980); Milbradt v. Margaris, 693 P.2d 78 (Wash. 1985); de Elche v. Jacobsen, 622 P.2d 835 (Wash. 1980); Blais v. Phillips, 502 P.2d 1245 (Wash. 1972).

(n34)Footnote 431. de Elche v. Jacobsen, 622 P.2d 835 (Wash. 1980); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55(2)(cm) ("An obligation incurred by a spouse during marriage, resulting from a tort committed by the spouse during marriage, may be satisfied from the property of that spouse that is not marital property and from that spouse's interest in marital property."); Keene v. Edie, 907 P.2d 1217 (Wash. App. 1996) (tortfeasor's community property containing real property must remain immunized from victim's collection efforts, but the victim may proceed against tortfeasor's community property containing personal property). See also Keene v. Edie, 935 P.2d 588, 589-590 (Wash. 1997) (following de Elche and overturning Brotton v. Jangert, 23 P. 688 (Wash. 1890)), aff'd after reverse and remand by Keene v. Edie, 980 P.2d 1283 (Wash. 1999).

(n35)Footnote 432. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2363.

(n36)Footnote 433. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345. If community property is used to satisfy a separate obligation, the non-obligated spouse is entitled to reimbursement upon termination of the community property regime. The reimbursement is "for one-half of the amount or value that the property had at the time it was used." Id. art. 2364.

(n37)Footnote 434. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61(d). See also, Lawrence v. Hardy, 583 S.W.2d 795 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n38)Footnote 435. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1000(b)(1).

(n39)Footnote 436. Id. § 1000(b)(2). Here too, Washington has applied a similar rule, providing that the tortfeasor's separate property should be primarily liable, and if there is insufficient separate property to satisfy the obligation, tortfeasor's half-interest in community personal property will next be liable. de Elche v. Jacobsen, 622 P.2d 835 (Wash. 1980).

(n40)Footnote 437. Id. § 1000(c).

(n41)Footnote 438. See, e.g., Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55(c)1. The Wisconsin statute contains a fairly detailed explanation of the obligations affected by this provision: "An obligation incurred by a spouse before or during marriage that is attributable to an obligation arising before marriage or to an act or omission occurring before marriage."

(n42)Footnote 439. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 913(b)(1); Idaho Code Ann. §§ 32-910 & 32-911 (1983); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200.

(n43)Footnote 440. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-215. The statute applies to debts and liabilities incurred after September 1, 1973.

(n44)Footnote 441. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55(2)(c)1 provides that "marital property which would have been the property of [the debtor] spouse but for the marriage" is liable for premarital obligations. Note, however, that the Arizona statute's limitation is expressed in terms of "value," whereas the Wisconsin limitation is stated in terms of "property."

(n45)Footnote 442. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61(b) & (c). Paragraph (b) provides that community property subject to a spouse's sole management and control is not subject to liabilities incurred by the other spouse before marriage; paragraph (c) provides that community property subject to a spouse's sole management and control is subject to liabilities incurred by him before or during marriage. For discussion of the Texas system of management of marital property, see § 37.12(c), supra. During marriage, each spouse has sole management of property he or she would have owned if single, including personal earnings and revenue from separate property. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.22.

(n46)Footnote 443. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.050 (1991) (neither separate property of a spouse "nor his share of the community property is liable for the debts of the other spouse contracted before the marriage"); N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 403-9 & 40-3-10 (1989) (neither spouse's interest in community property shall be liable for the separate debt of the other spouse).

(n47)Footnote 444. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 911.

(n48)Footnote 445. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345.

(n49)Footnote 446. Id. art. 2364 (property is valued as of the time it was used).

(n50)Footnote 447. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 913(a); Idaho Code § 32-911 (1983) (applicable by its terms only to wife's debts and property); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-10A.

(n51)Footnote 448. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 913(b)(1); Idaho Code § 32-911 (applicable by its terms only to wife's debts and property); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-10A; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61(a); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200. See also Leasefirst v. Borelli, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114 (1993), in which the earnings of a wife had been designated as separate property by a prenuptial agreement.

(n52)Footnote 449. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-215D (1991) (spouses shall be sued jointly and debt shall be satisfied first from community property and second from the separate property of the debtor spouse); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345 (during community property regime, community obligation may be satisfied from community property and from separate property of the debtor spouse) & art. 2365 (upon termination of community property regime, the spouse whose separate property was used to satisfy a community obligation may be entitled to reimbursement); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-12 (community debts are to be satisfied first from all community property; then from property held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common, excluding the residence of the spouses; then from the residence in some situations; then from the separate property of the debtor spouse). Idaho prohibits satisfaction of a community debt from separate property unless both spouses consent in writing to the obligation: "any community obligation incurred by either the husband or the wife without the consent in writing of the other shall not obligate the separate property of the spouse who did not so consent; provided, however, that the husband or wife may by express power of attorney give to the other the complete power to sell, convey or encumber community property, either real or personal." Idaho Code § 32-912.

(n53)Footnote 450. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 913(a).

(n54)Footnote 451. Id. § 913(b)(1). Paragraph (2) provides that a spouse's joinder or consent to an encumbrance of community property to secure payment of a debt incurred by the other spouse does not subject the spouse's separate property to liability for the debt unless she or he also incurred the debt.

(n55)Footnote 452. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61.

(n56)Footnote 453. See § 37.12(c), supra.

(n57)Footnote 454. Cockerham v. Cockerham, 527 S.W.2d 162, 171 (Tex. 1975). Patel v. Kuciemba, 82 S.W.3d 589 (Tex. App. 2002) (the court distinguished Cockerham v. Cockerham and held that the spouse was not actually involved in the other spouse's business other than operating two of the convenience stores, which did not include decisions or knowledge of the other spouse's business borrowing; Cockerham was decided before passage of § 3.201 of the Texas Family Code which states: "(a) A person is personally liable for the acts of the person's spouse only if: (1) the spouse acts as the agent for the person; ...").

(n58)Footnote 455. Miller v. City Nat'l Bank, 594 S.W.2d 823 (Tex. Ct. App. 1980). The process of partition involved in the Miller case adds to the difficulty in the area of creditors' rights. When parties divorce, community property is divided in some fashion between the spouses, becoming the separate property of each. Miller suggests that this partition may affect adversely those who extended credit during the marriage. In another case decided in the same year as Miller, the court said plainly that an order making a division of community property and requiring the husband to pay community debts contracted by him could not have any legal effect upon the husband's creditor. Inwood Nat'l Bank of Dallas v. Hoppe, 596 S.W.2d 183 (Tex. Ct. App. 1980). As in a number of similar cases, the debtor spouse in Hoppe was bankrupt and the creditor sought satisfaction from property allocated to the non-debtor spouse in the divorce. The issue of liability of what was community property after divorce is discussed in more detail in § 37.13(b)(5). In Nelson v. Citizens Bank & Trust Co., 881 S.W.2d 128 (Tex. App. 1994), the court distinguished Cockerham and held that the wife was not personally liable for a corporate debt guaranteed by the husband and secured by a deed of trust signed by both spouses. This, the court said, "does not come close to the active involvement of the non-signing spouse in Cockerham."

(n59)Footnote 456. Tex. Const. art. 16, § 15 (emphasis added).

(n60)Footnote 457. Wileman v. Wade, 665 S.W.2d 519 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983). The attorney was apparently able to avoid the partition issue by intervening in the proceeding where that partition would take place.

(n61)Footnote 458. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.61(a).

(n62)Footnote 459. J. Thomas Oldham, Texas Marital Property Rights 289 (1987).

(n63)Footnote 460. "'Debt' means an obligation incurred by a married person before or during marriage, whether based on contract, tort, or otherwise." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 902.

(n64)Footnote 461. Id. § 910(a). In paragraph (b), "during marriage" is defined to exclude the period during which spouses are living separate and apart before a judgment of dissolution or legal separation.

(n65)Footnote 462. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 911.

(n66)Footnote 463. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2345; General Fin. Serv., Inc. v. Thompson, 987 F. Supp. 505 (M.D. La. 1997) (ex-wife failed to rebut presumption that debt incurred during marriage was a community debt; held liable to extent of her share of community property), aff'd by General Fin. v. Thompson, 149 F.3d 1178 (5th Cir. 1998).

(n67)Footnote 464. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2364. The reference to the heirs does not come from the statute itself but from the "Comments" attached to it. The Comments also note that "the obligation to reimburse is heritable," citing La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 1765 and 1984. The amount of reimbursement is "one-half of the amount or value that the property had at the time it was used." Reimbursement may be due back to the time the petition for separation is filed if the community is terminated as of that date. Shel-Boze, Inc. v. Melton, 509 So. 2d 106 (La. Ct. App. 1987).

(n68)Footnote 465. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-215 (1991) (to be satisfied first from community property and then from separate property of debtor spouse); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.040 (community real estate subject to liens of judgments recovered for community debts); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55(2)(b) (obligation incurred by spouse in interest of marriage may be satisfied only from all marital property and all other property of the incurring spouse).

(n69)Footnote 466. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 5.22.

(n70)Footnote 467. Id. § 5.61(b).

(n71)Footnote 468. Id. § 4.031. The statute also states that agency does not arise solely because of the marriage relationship.

(n72)Footnote 469. Id. § 5.61(c).

(n73)Footnote 470. Id. § 5.61(b).

(n74)Footnote 471. As we are seeing, there is a significant variation in the way states deal with the issue of community property liability. Several states allow part of the community property to be used to satisfy a spouse's separate or individual debt. Some states, such as Louisiana, allow all of the community property to be used to satisfy a separate debt, but ultimately allow reimbursement to the community estate when separate debts are satisfied from it. And in New Mexico, discussed infra, designated priorities have the effect of forcing satisfaction from separate property, even though part of the community can be reached if separate property is insufficient. From the point of view of the spouses, reimbursement at the time the marriage dissolves does have an effect that brings it somewhat closer to the states that subject only part of the community property to liability for a separate debt. But from the creditor's point of view, what counts is whether there is sufficient property subject to the debt, available at the time collection is attempted. In that regard, some states, such as Louisiana and California, appear to be more hospitable to creditors than others.

(n75)Footnote 472. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-215B (1991). This statute is also discussed at § 37.13(b)(3).

(n76)Footnote 473. Schilling v. Embree, 575 P.2d 1262 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1977).

(n77)Footnote 474. Colorado Nat'l Bank v. Merlino, 668 P.2d 1304 (Wash. 1983).

(n78)Footnote 475. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.030(4).

(n79)Footnote 476. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-10A.

(n80)Footnote 477. Id.

(n81)Footnote 478. Central Adjustment Bur., Inc. v. Thevenet, 686 P.2d 954 (N.M. 1984).

(n82)Footnote 479. See § 37.13(a).

(n83)Footnote 480. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-515D.

(n84)Footnote 481. Id.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.14

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.14 Disposition of Marital Property at Death in Community Property States.n482

[Go To Supp]

Classification of marital property, as community or separate, is of significance when one of the spouses dies. Indeed, much of the litigation over disposition of marital property at death concerns the classification of property. Much of this entire chapter is therefore pertinent to disposition of marital property at death in community property states. Classification determines both the degree of testamentary power a spouse has over property and the course of inheritance of marital property.

We have noted that all American jurisdictions except for Louisiana and Puerto Rico have generally accepted the common law tradition, rather than the traditions of the civil law, as the foundation of their legal systems. The one qualification of this is the law of marital property, where the civil law's community property system originally found favor in seven states that otherwise followed the common law. The mixture of civil and common law is noticeable in the area of disposition of marital property at death. Laws concerning wills and inheritance in the community property states have generally been patterned after similar provisions in common law states, rather than the civil law. Classification of marital property as community or separate, under the civil law model, remains important, but the form of the law governing disposition at death in most community property states is similar to that in the common law property states. Reference should also be made at this point to "quasi-community" property, discussed at § 37.14(c), infra. In some community property states, some property of couples who have migrated into those states from common law property states will be treated as community property at death, even though it would otherwise be separate or common law property.

Because of the influence of the common law, law governing disposition of property at death in the community property states is sometimes a bit confusing. There are essentially two systems in effect, one applicable to non-community property, or to one spouse's interests in separate and community property, and borrowed from the common law tradition, and the other for disposition of community property. Terminology in the statutes is not always carefully crafted with the community property system in mind, and terms such as "estate of the parties" have required interpretation.

In this section we focus specifically on testamentary power, protective measures that come into play at the death of a spouse and override testamentary wishes, and intestate succession.

§ 37.14(a) Testamentary Power in Community Property States.

We have discussed in other sections of this chapter the definition of "separate property" and the fact that it is not really equivalent to the individualist concepts of common law property states. Because of the influence of the common law in connection with disposition of property at death, however, the unique nature of separate property can be a bit blurred. Separate property is 100% owned by one spouse. In essence, as one would expect, the owner of separate property has rather complete power over disposition of that property, including testamentary transfer. One exception to this is the "disposable portion" and "forced heirship" concept in Louisiana, discussed in § 37.14(b), infra.

Idaho's code states that a married person has power to devise the person's separate property and share of community property. n483 California's code explicitly provides: "Upon the death of a married person, one-half of the community property belongs to the surviving spouse and the other half belongs to the decedent." n484 These statements accurately reflect the general scope of testamentary power over marital property.

These provisions are consistent with the fundamental characteristic of community property, i.e., that onerous acquisitions during the marriage are not solely the property of the spouse who "earned" them but rather are equally shared by both spouses. Title, from the time of acquisition, is owned 50% by the wife and 50% by the husband. During the marriage, community ownership means that each spouse owns 50% of each community asset. If a couple's community assets include two parcels of real property, each worth $100,000, each individual owns a 50% interest in each parcel. Technically, one cannot unilaterally effect a partition by transferring a 100% interest in one parcel, claiming that the other parcel is the spouse's half of the community estate.

In effect, this state of affairs carries on through one spouse's death, subject to a few qualifications. In other words, power to dispose of marital property at death essentially coincides with title, subject to some protective measures considered in § 37.14(b), infra. Only 50% of any asset classified as community property at death of one spouse is generally subject to disposition by that spouse's will or other testamentary disposition. By the very nature of the ownership, the other 50% is simply the survivor's property; it is not in any sense a part of the decedent spouse's estate. And neither spouse has power to devise the other spouse's separate property. Wisconsin has confirmed this attribute of community property with the following statute:

> Upon the death of either spouse, the surviving spouse retains his or her undivided one-half interest in each item of marital [i.e., community] property. The surviving spouse's undivided one-half interest in each item of marital property is not subject to administration. n485

We have observed, however, that some exercises of control over community property are not consistent with the shared nature of the ownership. One spouse occasionally exceeds established limits and purports to exercise authority not only over the spouse's own share, but also over the spouse's share of community property. This can happen during the marriage or in connection with testamentary transfers, as illustrated by the following two examples. In both cases, disposition of property at death of one spouse may be implicated.

The first example involves an exercise of testamentary power. The fact that one spouse has testamentary power over only 50% of any community asset has not prevented attempts to exceed that power. Originally, as discussed in § 37.12, supra, the husband had rather complete powers of management over community property, at least during the marriage, even though title was generally shared with the wife. As managers of the community estate, husbands frequently attempted to exercise control over that property even at death, by purporting to devise all of the community property or all of specified community assets to a trustee or some other party. Now that paternalism in marital property has diminished, and equality of control over community property has become the rule, one spouse's inclination to exercise either inter vivos or testamentary power over all of the community property has presumably declined. It remains possible, however, for either spouse to include the other spouse's share of community property in a testamentary disposition.

Although an attempt by one spouse to devise the other spouse's share of community property is generally not effective to do what it purports to do, a survivor can be "put to an election [of benefits]" at the death of the spouse. Where one spouse attempts to devise the surviving spouse's share of community property, and at the same time includes the spouse as a beneficiary under the will, the survivor is not necessarily entitled to take both the benefits under the will and the share of the community property. The survivor must elect whether to take either the share of the community property or the property left under the will.

In some instances, there is no clear expression of exactly what "property" the testator purports to transmit, and interpretation is required. Ambiguity can occur because of the language in the will itself or because of the combination of language and circumstances. In a California case, n486 for example, a husband's will provided: "All property in which at this date I have an interest is my separate property, pursuant to the provisions of a certain property settlement agreement heretofore entered into between my said wife and me. It is my intention to dispose of all property over which I have the power of testamentary disposition." n487 Specific gifts and a gift of the residue of the estate were included in the will. The principal asset of the estate was ranch property, taken in the husband's name and purchased with the proceeds of the sale of other property, also in the husband's name. The trial court found that the property settlement agreement referred to in the will was abrogated upon subsequent reconciliation of the parties and that all of the property in which the deceased husband had an interest was community property. The Supreme Court of California summarizes the effect of a will that puts the decedent's spouse to an election:

> If the respondent be required to make an election, she may repudiate the will and claim her statutory share of the community property or she may reject her interest under the law and claim under the will. She cannot take under both. If no election be required, one-half of the property found by the trial court to be community property would belong to the surviving spouse (Probate Code § 201) and she would be entitled to the additional interests conferred upon her by the will. n488

Although recognizing that an intention to dispose of a surviving spouse's interest in community property will not be implied where another construction is permissible, the court in this case concluded that the surviving spouse in this case was required to make an election. They note that the will established that the decedent believed that the property settlement agreement was still in force and that the property conveyed by the will was the decedent's separate property.

Many cases have been litigated over whether a surviving spouse was put to an election. If the will is very clear and expressly requires that the surviving spouse make an election no question about the intent of the testator is presented. The courts typically honor such wishes and force the surviving spouse to make an election. n489 To some, this deference to clearly expressed intent to convey property belonging to another is not appropriate. n490 There is something a bit unseemly about giving any effect to an act which could be described as overreaching on the part of the testator. Under that view, it would presumably make more sense to require an election only where the testator unintentionally purported to dispose of the surviving spouse's share of community property. Perhaps the survivor's election, originally known as "the widow's election" is little more than a holdover from the days when husbands managed all community property; the ability to put the surviving wife to an election might be described as one last gasp from the grave. Nevertheless, it is still a part of our marital property law. In light of the nature of community property and the imperfect understanding of community property concepts by wives and husbands, it may still serve some useful purpose, at least in occasional cases. McClanahan makes the following observation:

> By the 1940's, the use of the widow's election had become a favored estate planning device in California. The most common use was for the husband to require the wife to elect to allow her share of the community property to pass to a trust (or trusts) created in his will, or to take her share outright and > renounce the terms of the will. There was a wealth of case law and literature on the widow's election. As a result of substantial changes in community property laws in recent years, particularly in management and control, and in death and gift tax laws, the forced election of the surviving spouse appears to have declined in favor as an estate planning device. n491

A second example of overstepping management powers can involve inter vivos transfers as well as testamentary transfers. Even in cases based on inter vivos transactions, questions concerning such activity frequently arise after the death of one of the spouses and are properly considered here. We referred earlier in this section to the fact that each spouse owns a 50% interest in each item of community property. Questions have arisen as to whether this "item" theory of control over community property persists after dissolution of the marriage, either by the death of one of the spouses or by divorce. Problems have sometimes arisen when one spouse has unilaterally purported to transfer 100% of a community asset and an effort is made by the other spouse, after the death of the donor/transferor spouse, to reclaim the surviving spouse's original share of the particular piece of property. Assuming the surviving spouse's rights have been violated, n492 at least two remedial approaches have been suggested. According to one approach, item-by-item ownership by the surviving spouse in effect continues after the decedent spouse's death. This means, for example, that in appropriate cases, after the donor/spouse's death, the surviving spouse may recapture the survivor's share of the community interest in items that had been the object of "unauthorized" gifts of community property. n493

A different approach, sometimes referred to as an "aggregate" theory, would, in effect, discontinue item-by-item ownership when one spouse dies. The surviving spouse would be entitled to 50% of the community estate in the aggregate, but not necessarily in each item of community property in the estates of the parties. An "aggregate" approach was taken by an Arizona court in a case involving an insurance policy on the decedent spouse's life. n494 Before his death, the husband changed the beneficiary from his wife to his son by a previous marriage. After the husband's death, a dispute arose between the son and the wife concerning the insurance proceeds, most of which were attributable to community property premium payments. The Arizona court summarized three views concerning the effect of a married person's designation of someone other than the person's spouse as the beneficiary of a community property life insurance policy, without the spouse's consent: (1) Some courts have held the beneficiary designation void as a fraud upon the non-consenting spouse's rights, and the non-consenting spouse could insist that all of the proceeds be placed in the decedent's estate as community property; (2) The designation is partially voidable but is effective as a gift of that share of the proceeds (50%) over which the insured would have testamentary power; and (3) The designation is valid and is not a fraud on the spouse's right if the insured is fulfilling a duty (of support of children, for example) and the funds expended are not unreasonably out of proportion to other community assets remaining. They then conclude that Arizona's rule is closest to the third (attributed to Texas), although different from each of the three approaches. There is, they say, no fraud on the surviving spouse's rights as long as the surviving spouse receives "at least as much in value as one half of all the community and other jointly acquired property." n495 In other words, as long as the survivor has received 50% of the aggregate of community property and other shared-ownership-property, a gift by the deceased spouse of a community item is not defective.

Washington has an old and unique statute that can indirectly affect testamentary power and disposition of marital property at death:

> Nothing contained in any of the provisions of this chapter or in any law of this state, shall prevent the husband and wife from jointly entering into any agreement concerning the status or disposition of the whole or any portion of the community property, then owned by them or afterwards to be acquired, to take effect upon the death of either. But such agreement may be made at any time by the husband and wife by the execution of an instrument in writing under their hands and seals, and to be witnessed, acknowledged and certified in the same manner as deeds to real estate are required to be, under the laws of the state, and the same may at any time thereafter be altered or amended in the same manner; Provided, however, That such agreement shall not derogate from the right of creditors, nor be construed to curtail the powers of the superior court to set aside or cancel such agreement for fraud or under some other recognized head of equity jurisdiction, at the suit of either party. n496

The statute explicitly refers to agreements that take effect upon the death of either spouse, and thus applies only to those contracts that will not take effect during the joint lifetimes of the spouses. n497 Agreements of this type can effectively control disposition of property at death and qualify or limit the testamentary power of each spouse. A couple could, for example, execute today an enforceable contract that would have no immediate effect, but would, at the death of the first spouse to die, convert the separate property of the decedent spouse into community property. n498

A 1997 U.S. Supreme Court case, Boggs v. Boggs, n499 explored the conflict between state community property law and the Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). In Boggs, a Louisiana woman devised to her children her one-half share in her husband's retirement funds. The husband subsequently remarried, and upon his death the second wife and the children from the first marriage quarreled over the retirement proceeds. The Supreme Court held that while the children of the first wife possessed a valid claim under state community property law, ERISA pre-empted state law and invalidated those claims.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/15 power! w/2 testamentary or will!

§ 37.14(b) Protective Measures at Death in Community Property States.

We have considered the common law evolution designed to protect one spouse economically after the other's death. n500 As we saw, such protection was arguably essential to protect married women who were deprived of most of their property "rights" during the marriage. Even after the changes giving married women greater property rights, common law property ownership has typically been weighted in favor of working husbands. In those cases where one spouse or the other still suffers a property disadvantage under the individual title system, because the spouse is not employed outside of the home during the marriage or earns much less than the spouse, our law still favors protection upon the death of the wealthier spouse. Protection is not limited, of course, to one spouse or the other according to relative wealth of the parties.

Protection originally came in the form of dower (and curtesy) but that rather limited protection has been replaced by more substantial statutory shares in favor of the surviving spouse. We have also noted, in § 37.07(b), supra, the possible trend, represented by the Uniform Probate Code, bringing the common law property states into a philosophical alliance with the community property states.

As has been suggested, the very nature of community property more effectively protects a surviving spouse's interests. In a fairly long marriage, for example, unaffected by agreements altering the community property system of ownership, a couple in a community property state might accumulate assets valued at x. Chances are that most of those assets will be community property. Assuming that all of the assets are community property, that all of the family earnings during the marriage came from husband's employer, and that husband has now died, the value of the decedent husband's estate will be only fifty percent of x. The other fifty percent of the accumulated wealth has always been owned by the wife and she retains control over that property at the death of her husband. In this manner, the surviving spouse is fairly protected, even though she was not employed outside the home during the marriage. n501

Even though the community property system of ownership may be fundamentally fair in the way disposition at death is affected, there are additional limitations and qualifications on testamentary power in community property states. There are, of course, policy reasons to favor the living over the dead where property is concerned. An extreme version of such policies could eliminate testamentary power altogether. n502 Even though some allowance of "dead-hand-control" is an important part of American property law, other factors will sometimes trump the testamentary power of the decedent.

Protective measures affecting disposition of property at death of a spouse or parent are generally designed to protect the well-being of the decedent's spouse and family. Perhaps the most common of these are statutes protecting a home and some personal property for a surviving spouse and/or children. These measures typically put exempt property beyond the reach of creditors, but in a few instances they may have other effects. Although such provisions are generally beyond the scope of the subject of marital property, we consider here some of the law of one state, Texas.

The protection afforded by Texas law is, in some respects, unique and pertinent to the subject of marital property rights. Property "exempt from execution or forced sale by the constitution and laws of the state," n503 other than the homestead, is set apart to the surviving spouse or children. n504 The homestead is delivered to the surviving spouse, and if there is no surviving spouse, "to the guardian of the minor children and unmarried children, if any, living with the family." n505 As with Texas definitions of marital property, n506 this statutory provision is based on a Texas constitutional provision:

> On the death of the husband or wife, or both, the homestead shall descend and vest in like manner as other real property of the deceased, and shall be governed by the same laws of descent and distribution, but it shall not be partitioned among the heirs of the deceased during the lifetime of the surviving husband or wife, or so long as the survivor may elect to use or occupy the same as a homestead, or so long as the guardian of the minor children of the deceased may be permitted, under the order of the proper court having the jurisdiction, to use and occupy the same. n507

It is this provision, and the statutes and cases based on it, that make Texas marital property/homestead law unique. n508 This constitutional survivor's-homestead-right has been held to be equivalent to a legal life estate created by operation of law. n509 The right does not depend on any ownership interest per se, but rather is the same "whether the homestead be the separate property of the deceased or community property between the surviving spouse and the deceased." n510 As long as the surviving spouse elects to use or occupy the property as a homestead, it cannot be partitioned among those who otherwise own the property, even if the spouse has no ownership interest apart from the survivor's homestead right. n511

Based on the civil law, Louisiana and Puerto Rico provide a different form of protection for surviving spouses and children, thereby imposing significant qualifications on testamentary power. These limitations are placed in historical context by McClanahan as follows:

> The principle of "forced heirship" is traceable prior to the Spanish and French codes, to the Roman Civil Law. By the era of the Emperor Justinian, Roman law had developed the concept of the "pars legitima", or "Legitime", which could be claimed by the descendants or parents of the deceased spouse from the total property of the decedent (known as "the succession"), as against the will of the decedent. Four or fewer descendants could claim one-half, and where there were no descendants, the parents of the descendants could claim one third. The portion reserved for the forced heirs was known as "the reserve". The reserve included, not only the property owned by the decedent at death, but also certain donations inter vivos. The remainder of the succession was freely disposable by will, and was known as "the disposable portion". n512

Forced heirship is generally foreign to the common law, and thus is not a part of the law in most United States jurisdictions. It did become a part of the law of Louisiana, but its current form is somewhat different from the original. The class of "forced heirs" is now narrowly drawn. The term is currently defined to include descendants of the first degree (children) who are either under the age of 23 or incapable of taking care of themselves or their property. n513 It does not include parents n514 or descendants other than children, except as representatives of a deceased child who would not have attained the age of 23 at the donor's death. n515

The disposable portion over which a testator has control varies depending on the number of forced heirs. "Donations inter vivos and mortis causa cannot exceed three-fourths of the property of the donor if he leaves, at his death, one forced heir, and one-half if he leaves, at his death, two or more forced heirs." n516 Thus the legitime, or forced share to which the children are entitled is 25% if there is only one forced heir and 50% is there are two or more. This share is reserved by law and cannot be defeated "unless the donor has just cause to disinherit him." n517 The disposable portion includes all property belonging to the donor or testator plus the value of property disposed of by donation inter vivos. n518 It does not, however, include premiums on, or proceeds of, insurance policies on the life of the donor. The value of any such proceeds payable to a forced heir or for the heir's benefit is "applied and credited in satisfaction of his forced share." n519

In addition to the forced share in favor of children, there is also a unique measure in Louisiana law that protects surviving spouses. This provision does not operate to benefit all surviving spouses but is effective "[w]hen a spouse dies rich in comparison with the surviving spouse." n520 This "marital portion is one-fourth of the succession in ownership if the deceased died without children, the same fraction in usufruct for life if he is survived by three or fewer children, and a child's share in such usufruct if he is survived by more than three children." n521 As one would expect, the marital portion has been the subject of much litigation. Under the present version of the statute, it is not entirely clear when one has "died rich" in comparison with the surviving spouse. A husband whose estate was valued at over $600,000 was considered "rich" in comparison to his wife, whose assets amounted to just over $60,000. n522 Payments due to the surviving spouse as a result of the death are deducted from the marital portion. n523

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 protect! w/5 death or die!

§ 37.14(c) Inheritance in Community Property States.

The nature of title in community property states has significant effects on inheritance. In the event a decedent spouse does not exercise testamentary power over the decedent's separate property and share of the community estate, disposition of that property is left to the state's laws of intestate succession. Approaches to marital property inheritance vary some from state to state. As we consider inheritance, one important premise to keep in mind is that the surviving spouse's share of community property is not a part of the decedent spouse's estate. Only the decedent's share of the community estate is subject to intestate succession at the time the first spouse dies.

Primary beneficiaries of intestate succession laws are, of course, spouses, children and parents. In some states, a surviving spouse of an intestate decedent will inherit all of the decedent's share of community property, regardless of whether children or other relatives also survive. n524 There has been a trend in favor of leaving the entire estate to the spouse, even if there are also children of the marriage surviving. The current version of the Uniform Probate Code, for example, provides:

The intestate share of a decedent's surviving spouse is:

> (1) the entire intestate estate if:
>
> (i) no descendant or parent of the decedent survives the decedent; or
>
> (ii) all of the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse and there is no other descendant of the surviving spouse who survives the decedent... n525

If the decedent leaves issue surviving, however, the surviving spouse does not take all of the decedent's share of community property in two community property states. In Louisiana, "the surviving spouse shall have a legal usufruct over so much of that share as may be inherited by the descendants." n526 A Texas statute provides that as to all property belonging to the community estate of the husband and wife, if there be surviving any lineal descendants of the deceased, the surviving spouse "shall be entitled to one-half of said property, and the other half shall pass to such child or children, or their descendants." n527

If the decedent leaves no surviving children or other lineal descendants, the surviving spouse sometimes inherits all of the decedent's separate property in addition to the decedent's share of community property. n528 In other states, however, the surviving spouse inherits all of the decedent's separate property only if the decedent is not survived by a larger group of designated relatives. n529 The surviving spouse's share of the intestate estate when the decedent is survived by issue, or other heirs varies from state to state. n530

California has unique "in-law inheritance" provisions under which a significant portion of the decedent's estate may pass, in some situations, to the decedent's in-laws rather than the decedent's blood relatives. Section 6402 of the California Probate Code generally provides for inheritance by issue of a predeceased spouse if the decedent is not survived by relatives no more distant than grandparent or issue of a grandparent. Section 6402.5 contains even more favorable provisions for the decedent's in-laws in cases where the predeceased spouse died not more than 15 years before the decedent with reference to real property and not more than 5 years with reference to personal property, and the decedent is not survived by a spouse or issue. In such cases, the successive order of inheritance is (1) issue of predeceased spouse; if none, then (2) parents of the predeceased spouse; if none, then (3) issue of parents of the predeceased spouse; if none, then (4) to the next of kin of the decedent. Other surviving kin of the predeceased spouse are also preferred over escheat as to any portion of the decedent's estate "attributable to the decedent's predeceased spouse."

In a recent opinion, n531 a California Court of Appeals has recently confirmed earlier cases holding that the source of the property's acquisition controls its treatment for purposes of in-law inheritance. Where, for example, the law applies and the source of property in the estate of the second spouse to die is community property accumulated during the marriage, the property is divided between relatives of the decedent and relatives of the predeceased spouse. In this case, the "source rule" applied to property transmuted from separate property to community property during the predeceased spouse's lifetime. The lower court erred in treating the predeceased spouse's former separate property as community property for purposes of intestate succession. It should rather be traced to its source (as separate property) and treated accordingly for inheritance purposes.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/15 inheritance

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 482. Various subjects related to disposition of property at death are explored in some detail in other chapters of this treatise. The purpose of this section is simply to sketch briefly the particular impact of marriage, in community property states, on transmission of wealth at the death of a married person.

(n2)Footnote 483. Idaho Code § 15-3-101. See also Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123.230 (1991); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-805.

(n3)Footnote 484. Cal. Prob. Code § 100. This would presumably be true even without the statute by virtue of the nature of community property.

(n4)Footnote 485. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 861.01.

(n5)Footnote 486. In re Wolfe's Estate, 311 P.2d 476 (Cal. 1957).

(n6)Footnote 487. 311 P.2d at 477.

(n7)Footnote 488. Id. at 478.

(n8)Footnote 489. See, e.g., Reed v. Nevins, 425 P.2d 813 (N.M. 1967); Davis v. East Tex. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 354 S.W.2d 926 (Tex. 1962).

(n9)Footnote 490. W. De Funiak and M. Vaughn, Principles of Community Property 496-498 (2d ed. 1971).

(n10)Footnote 491. W.S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States § 11:6 at 516 (1982). In footnotes omitted here, McClanahan provides more details concerning this estate planning device and lists a number of pertinent articles.

(n11)Footnote 492. Courts would typically consider such a situation in terms of whether the transfer amounted to a fraud on the surviving spouse's community property rights. A Wisconsin statute defines such fraud and allows the surviving spouse to prevail over fraudulent property arrangements. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 861.17. A property arrangement is fraudulent if it (a) is made by the decedent during marriage or in anticipation of marriage for the primary purpose of defeating the rights of the surviving spouse; and (b) is a breach of the duty of good faith for the purpose of defeating the rights of the surviving spouse in or to marital property.

(n12)Footnote 493. Dargie v. Patterson, 169 P. 360 (Cal. 1917).

(n13)Footnote 494. Gaethje v. Gaethje, 442 P.2d 870 (Ariz. App. 1968). Citing this case, Professor Blumberg says that "[o]f the community property states that have considered the issue, only Arizona has adopted the aggregate approach to community property distribution at death." Grace Ganz Blumberg, Community Property in California 593 (1987). In some instances, the item-theory is apparently mandated by statute. See wis. Stat. Ann. § 861.01(1).

(n14)Footnote 495. Gaethje v. Gaethje, 442 P.2d 870, 875 (Ariz. 1968) (property received by the survivor includes will, joint tenancy, intestacy and trust).

(n15)Footnote 496. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.120.

(n16)Footnote 497. Ivers Estate, 104 P.2d 467 (Wash. 1940).

(n17)Footnote 498. Brown v. Boeing Co., 622 P.2d 1313 (Wash. App. 1980).

(n18)Footnote 499. Boggs v. Boggs, 117 S. Ct. 1754, 1763 (1997).

(n19)Footnote 500. See § 37.07(a), supra.

(n20)Footnote 501. Implicit in these conclusions, of course, is the judgment that shared ownership of property acquired during the marriage is fair and equitable. Some might disagree, but the evolution of American marital property law, in common law property states as well as community property states, is persuasive evidence that dissenters would be a small minority.

(n21)Footnote 502. Contrary to what is perhaps popular opinion, there is probably no constitutional right to dispose of property at death. In Irving Trust Co. v. Day, 314 U.S. 556 (1942), the Supreme Court wrote: "Rights of succession to the property of a deceased, whether by will or by intestacy, are of statutory creation, and the dead hand rules succession only by sufferance. Nothing in the Federal Constitution forbids the legislature of a state to limit, condition, or even abolish the power of testamentary disposition over property within its jurisdiction." Id. at 562. This principle has been modified in Hodel v. Irving, 481 U.S. 704 (1987), a rather unique case involving extreme fractionation of American Indian lands and an escheat provision in the Indian Land Consolidation Act. In that case, the Court held that complete abolition of both descent and devise of a particular class of property may be a taking of property, but they also specifically reaffirm the continuing vitality of the Irving Trust Co. case and others like it. It is therefore possible that a state could leave inheritance laws intact but do away with testamentary power. This is presumably an academic question, as no state is likely to attempt such a thing in the foreseeable future.

(n22)Footnote 503. Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 271.

(n23)Footnote 504. Id. § 272.

(n24)Footnote 505. Id.

(n25)Footnote 506. See § 37.08(b) supra.

(n26)Footnote 507. Tex. Const. Ann. art. 16, § 52.

(n27)Footnote 508. Other states have laws concerning disposition of the home at death of one spouse, but these generally are not comparable to the Texas Provision. Wisconsin, for example, provides: "If the intestate estate includes an interest in a home, the interest of the decedent is assigned to the surviving spouse as part of his or her share under [the intestate succession statute]." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 852.09. The surviving spouse has the option of requesting that the home not be so assigned.

(n28)Footnote 509. Williams v. Williams, 569 S.W.2d 867 (Tex. 1978) (holding that the homestead right could be waived by a premarital agreement).

(n29)Footnote 510. Vernon's Tex. Prob. Code § 282.

(n30)Footnote 511. Vernon's Tex. Prob. Code § 284. The guardian of minor children has a similar right to use and occupation of the homestead until the court no longer permits it. Id. § 285.

(n31)Footnote 512. W.S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States § 11:1, at 504, n. 1 (1982).

(n32)Footnote 513. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1493.

(n33)Footnote 514. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1494 was repealed by Acts 1981, No. 442, § 1.

(n34)Footnote 515. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1493.

(n35)Footnote 516. Id. art. 1495.

(n36)Footnote 517. Id. art. 1494.

(n37)Footnote 518. Id. art. 1505. Donations are valued "in the state in which [the property] was at the period of the donation." The calculation provided for in Article 1505 is similar in form to the "augmented estate" concept of the Uniform Probate Code. See note 85, supra.

(n38)Footnote 519. Id. art. 1505.D.

(n39)Footnote 520. Id. art. 2432.

(n40)Footnote 521. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2434. In any case, the amount of the marital portion is now limited to $1,000,000.

(n41)Footnote 522. Succession of Monroe, 494 So. 2d 336 (La. Ct. App. 1986). The wife was entitled to her statutory share even though the spouses had executed a marriage contract declaring their property to be separate.

(n42)Footnote 523. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2435.

(n43)Footnote 524. Cal. Prob. Code Ann. § 6401(a); Idaho Cod E § 15-2-102; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-102; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 11.04.015. But see Succession of Richaud, 835 So. 2d 653 (La. App. 2002) (the decedent's spouse does not have usufruct over the decedent's share of community property).

(n44)Footnote 525. Unif. Prob. Code § 2-102, 8 U.L.A. 76. The Code also includes an alternative provision for community property states (§ 2-102A); it is identical to § 2-102 except that it is limited to the decedent's separate property. The community property provision contains an additional sentence providing for the decedent's share in the community property. The comment to § 2-102 explains: "Empirical studies support the increase in the surviving spouse's intestate share, reflected in the revisions of this section. The studies have shown that testators in smaller estates (which intestate estates overwhelmingly tend to be) tend to devise their entire estates to their surviving spouses, even when the couple has children."

(n45)Footnote 526. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 890. The usufruct terminates when the surviving spouse marries, unless the deceased had granted a usufruct for life. Succession of Becker, 704 So. 2d 825, 829 (La. App 1997) (holding that surviving spouse is bound to provide for deceased spouse's heirs).

(n46)Footnote 527. Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 45. Consistent with the trend referred to earlier in this section, the Texas Probate Code has been amended. Section 45 now provides:

(a) On the intestate death of one of the spouses to a marriage, the community property estate of the deceased spouse passes to the surviving spouse if:

(1) no child or other descendant of the deceased spouse survives the deceased spouse; or

(2) all surviving children and descendants of the deceased spouse are also children or descendants of the surviving spouse.

(b) On the intestate death of one of the spouses to a marriage, if a child or other descendant of the deceased spouse survives the deceased spouse and the child or descendant is not a child or descendant of the surviving spouse, one-half of the community estate is retained by the surviving spouse and the other one-half passes to the children or descendants of the deceased spouse. The descendants shall inherit only such portion of said property to which they would be entitled under Section 43 of this code. In every case, the community estate passes charged with the debts against it.

(n47)Footnote 528. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14-2102; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-102. In Texas, if the deceased leaves no surviving children, or their descendants, the surviving spouse inherits all of the decedent's separate estate and one-half of the "the lands of the intestate, without remainder to any person." Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 38(b)2.

(n48)Footnote 529. Cal. Prob. Code Ann. § 6401 (if decedent left no surviving issue, parent, brother, sister, or issue of deceased brother or sister); Idaho Code §§ 15-2-101 and 15-2-102 (1979) (if decedent left no surviving issue or parent); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 894 (if decedent left no surviving descendants, parents, or descendants of parents); Vernon's Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 38(b)2 (if decedent left no surviving descendants, parents, or descendants of parents); wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 11.04.015 (if decedent left no surviving issue or parent or issue of parent).

(n49)Footnote 530. See, e.g., Cal. Prob. Code Ann. § 6401 (surviving spouse takes all of the community intestate estate and one-half of the separate intestate estate); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-102 (spouse takes all of the community intestate estate and one-fourth of the decedent's separate intestate estate); Idaho Code § 15-2-102 (1979) (surviving spouse takes all of the community intestate estate and as to the separate intestate estate, the first $50,000 plus one-half of the balance if survived by a parent or parents but not by issue, or by issue, all of whom are issue of the surviving spouse; one-half if survived by issue, one or more of whom are not issue of the surviving spouse).

(n50)Footnote 531. Estate of Newman, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 547 (1994).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.15

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.15 Division of Marital Property at Divorce in Community Property States.

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.201

In some form, equitable division of marital property at divorce is a part of the law in all states. Common law property states have patterned their systems of equitable distribution at dissolution of marriage after community property law. A comparison of the two models, and a discussion of the influence the community property system has had in common law property states is found in § 37.07(c), supra. Related discussion is found in § 37.07(b), supra, in the context of disposition of marital property at death.

Because title (separate and community) approximately reflects the contributions of each spouse to acquisition of property, n532 a fair allocation of marital property at divorce might simply be made along title lines in community property states. This can be contrasted with common law property states, where in many cases a division along title lines would generally not be perceived as fair and equitable. n533 In any event, in community property jurisdictions, a good starting place for analysis is to assume that division of property at dissolution of the marriage will be made along the same lines as marital property title. In other words, separate property of each spouse would typically be assigned to that spouse and community property would be divided evenly between the parties. One important modern qualification of this principle is discussed in § 37.16(c), infra concerning "quasi-community" property.

Even in community property states, however, division of property at divorce has not been quite as simple as dividing property according to title. Just as there are variations among the common law property states regarding division of property at divorce, n534 various approaches to the issue have evolved in community property states. In several states, by requirement or admonition, community property is divided equally between the spouses. California's Family Code, for example, provides:

> Except upon the written agreement of the parties, or on oral stipulation of the parties in open court, or as otherwise provided in this division, in a proceeding for dissolution of marriage or for legal separation of the parties, the court shall ... divide the community estate of the parties equally. n535

The court also has jurisdiction to divide the separate property interests held by the spouses as joint tenants or tenants in common, "together with, and in accordance with the same procedure for and limitations on, division of community estate." n536

There are some special rules that explain and qualify somewhat the mandate of equal division. Under appropriate circumstances, the court may award an asset to one party "on such conditions as the court deems proper to effect a substantially equal division of the community estates." n537 The court may also award from one party's share any amount that party deliberately misappropriated. n538 Finally, community estate personal injury damage awards are assigned to the party who suffered the injuries unless the court determines that the interests of justice require another disposition. n539

A few states other than California also impose an "equal division" requirement with respect to community property. n540 Louisiana statutes, based as they are on the civil law, have always differed from the law in other states, but an equal division of community property has always been required. Under prior law, the legal regime of community property in Louisiana would terminate, inter alia, upon "separation from bed and board." n541 The judgment of separation from bed and board carried with it "the separation of goods and effects." n542 A newer version of the first of these statutes provides that the legal regime of community property is terminated by death, judgment of divorce or separation of property, or matrimonial agreement. n543 If the parties do not agree between themselves as to a partition of marital property, the statutes provide for a judicial partition in which the court "shall divide the community assets and liabilities so that each spouse receives property of an equal net value." n544

In other states, courts are perhaps given slightly more discretion in the division of marital property. Consider this Texas statute :

> In a decree of divorce or annulment the court shall order a division of the estate of the parties in a manner that the court deems just and right, having due regard for the rights of each party and any children of the marriage. n545

This provision gives the court discretion to divide property unequally, as long as it is a "just and right" division. Questions have arisen, however, concerning what property is affected. The phrase "estate of the parties" is ambiguous. The Texas Supreme Court resolved the confusion, reasoning that the singular "estate" indicated that the statute applied only to community property, and not to the parties' separate estates. n546 Thus the court may make an equitable division of community property but may not divest one party of the party's separate property under this statute. Other states also provide for "equitable" as opposed to "equal" division of the community estate. n547

Wisconsin's statute states that "the court shall divide the property of the parties and divest and transfer the title of any such property accordingly." n548 The statute also provides that the court "shall presume that all other property is to be divided equally between the parties, but may alter this distribution without regard to marital misconduct after considering" a number of the factors discussed in § 37.07(c), supra. n549 Any separate property of one of the spouses "shall remain the property of such party and may not be subjected to a property division under this section except upon a finding that refusal to divide such property will create a hardship on the other party or on the children of the marriage, and in that event the court may divest the party of such property in a fair and equitable manner." n550

As we have just noted in the discussion of Texas and Wisconsin, separate property is not usually subject to equal or equitable division in the same way community property is. With some qualifications, separate property of one spouse may be invaded in appropriate cases for the purpose of support of a spouse or children. n551 A spouse's separate property in California, for example, can be used for support of the other spouse, but the court may deny support out of that separate property if the spouse who would be supported has a separate estate, is earning a livelihood, or there is sufficient community property or quasi-community property to provide support. n552 The court may also deny support of one spouse out of the separate property of the other spouse if custody of the children has been awarded to the latter spouse. n553

Except for provisions regarding support, separate property must usually be assigned to the spouse whose property it is. One exception to this is Washington, where the statute provides that the court shall "make such disposition of the property and the liabilities of the parties, either community or separate, as shall appear just and equitable" after considering factors such as the nature and extent of community and separate property, the duration of the marriage, and the economic circumstances of each spouse. n554 The California legislature declares that it is the policy of the state to protect and preserve community property and quasi-community property, to ensure fair and sufficient child and spousal support awards, and to achieve a division of community and quasi-community assets and liabilities upon the dissolution of marriage. To promote this policy, a full and accurate disclosure of all assets and liabilities must be made in the early stages of the dissolution. n555 In an attempt to balance this requirement with the interests of third parties, the California Supreme Court has reviewed its decisions and concluded:

> From these cases and statutes, the general rule can be distilled that when one spouse in a marriage dissolution proceeding seeks discovery from a third party, the court is required to balance the spouse's need for discovery against the privacy interests of the third party. In weighing the need of the spouse, the court should consider all relevant factors, including how the requested information would help resolve the issues that remain between the spouses; any relationship between either spouse and the third party; the information that the other spouse or third party has already provided or agreed to provide; and any specific reasons to distrust the adequacy or reliability of the information already obtained or offered.
>
> In weighing the privacy interests of the third party, the court should consider the nature of the information sought, its inherent intrusiveness, and any specific showing of a need for privacy, including any specific harm that disclosure of the information might cause. For example, the third party may demonstrate that public disclosure of confidential information would damage its competitive position or embarrass persons not involved in the litigation. Upon request, the court should review the information in camera before production to assess its value to the requesting spouse and the harm disclosure might cause to the third party. Any discovery order should be carefully tailored to protect the interests of the requesting spouse in obtaining a fair resolution of the issues while not unnecessarily invading the privacy of the third party. Also upon request, the court should consider appropriate protective orders. n556

As in the case of succession at death of one of the spouses, special provisions often apply to the homestead. The following statute:

> 2. If a homestead has been selected from the community property, it may be assigned to either party, either absolutely, provided such assignment is considered in distribution of the community property, or for a limited period, subject in the latter case to the future disposition of the court; or it may be divided or be sold and the proceeds divided.
>
> 3. If a homestead has been selected from the separate property of either, it must be assigned to the former owner of such property, subject to the power of the court to assign it for a limited period to the other spouse. n557

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: community w/1 property w/30 equit! w/2 divi! w/15 divorce!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 532. "Contribution" in this sense includes those contributions made by a spouse not employed outside the home. The trend has certainly been to place a value on such services, which indirectly contribute to wage-earning, which is the same as, or similar to the value placed on the wage-earner's labor. In some measure, such valuation has always been a part of the law in community property states, and it has certainly become a part of the law in common law property states, at least in the context of divorce. See § 37.07(c), supra.

(n2)Footnote 533. See § 37.06(c), supra. There may be, of course, some disagreement about what is fair and equitable. These statements reflect the apparent trend of American law, at least in the context of divorce.

(n3)Footnote 534. See § 37.07(c) supra.

(n4)Footnote 535. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 2550. The disposition of the community estate is subject to revision on appeal. Id. § 2555. The court is also given continuing jurisdiction to divide community estate assets or liabilities that were not previously adjudicated, and in such cases, the court "shall equally divide the omitted or unadjudicated community estate asset or liability, unless the court finds upon good cause shown that the interests of justice require an unequal division of the asset or liability." Id. § 2556.

(n5)Footnote 536. Id. § 2650.

(n6)Footnote 537. Id. § 2601.

(n7)Footnote 538. Id. § 2602.

(n8)Footnote 539. Id. § 2603. The court is directed to take into account the needs of each party, the time that has elapsed since recovery of the damages, and all other facts. In all cases, at least one-half of the damages must be assigned to the party who suffered the injuries.

(n9)Footnote 540. McClanahan classifies California, Louisiana, New Mexico and Puerto Rico as equal distribution jurisdictions. W.S. McClanahan, Community Property Law in the United States §§ 12:6-12:9 (1982).

(n10)Footnote 541. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2356.

(n11)Footnote 542. Id. art. 155.

(n12)Footnote 543. Id. art. 2356.

(n13)Footnote 544. La. Rev. Stat. § 9:2801(4)(b).

(n14)Footnote 545. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.63(a). See also In re Marriage of Becerra, 100 S.W.3d 637 (Tex. App. 2003) (evidence was legally sufficient to support the trial court's finding that a disproportionate division of community property in favor of the wife was appropriate). In Twyman v. Twyman, 855 S.W.2d 619 (Tex. 1993), the Texas Supreme Court adopted the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress and concluded that action on such a tort could be brought in a divorce proceeding, subject to the principles of res judicata and the sound discretion of the trial court. The court noted that in dividing the marital estate, the trial court may take into account the fault of the parties, if pleaded. (Factors also mentioned from earlier decisions include capacities and abilities, benefits which the party not at fault would have derived from continuation of the marriage, business opportunities, education, and relative financial condition and obligations.) The court stated that a spouse should not be allowed to recover tort damages and a disproportionate share of the community estate based on the same conduct. Although the court concluded that Ms. Twyman could not recover based on the findings of fact made in the case, it remanded for a new trial because the case originally proceeded under the wrong legal theory.

(n15)Footnote 546. Eggemeyer v. Eggemeyer, 554 S.W.2d 137 (1977). When community property is not divided in the divorce proceeding, the two parties become owners as tenants in common. Subsequent actions to partition the property can be and have been brought at a later date. This has occurred with some frequency in disputes involving retirement benefits that had not matured at the time of the divorce. Until 1987, such a partition was necessarily an equal division of the property, unlike the equitable division possible at divorce. In 1987, the Texas legislature adopted a statutory partition for some situations in what is now §§ 3.90-3.93 of the Texas Family Code. Sections 3.91 and 3.92 provide that when the divorce court fails to divide community property, "the court [if later asked to partition the property] shall divide the property in a manner that the court deems just and right." This is the same standard applied in division upon divorce. Lawyers have been admonished in numerous decisions, however, to deal with all property of the spouses in the divorce proceeding, and the careful lawyer's clients should not generally be required to use these provisions of the Family Code. In In re Moore, 890 S.W.2d 821 (Tex. App. 1994), a residuary clause of the divorce decree stated that "any community property or its value not otherwise awarded by this Decree shall continue to be owned by the parties in equal undivided interests." The husband objected to this provision on the basis of the Family Code partition provisions, claiming that "any property not divided is not owned in equal interests under those statutory provisions." The court did not agree but rather concluded that the provisions of §§ 3.90-3.92 were not applicable, since all community property had been divided.

(n16)Footnote 547. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-318; Idaho Code § 32-712; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 125.150; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.09.080.

(n17)Footnote 548. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 767.255.

(n18)Footnote 549. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 767.255.

(n19)Footnote 550. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 767.255.

(n20)Footnote 551. See, e.g., Nev. Rev. Stat. § 125.150.

(n21)Footnote 552. Cal. Fam. Code § 4321.

(n22)Footnote 553. Id.

(n23)Footnote 554. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.09.080.

(n24)Footnote 555. Cal. Fam. Code § 2100.

(n25)Footnote 556. Schnabel v. Superior Court, 854 P.2d 1117, 1122 (1993).

(n26)Footnote 557. Idaho Code § 32-712.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.16

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.16 Multi-State Marital Property and Conflict of Laws.

[Go To Supp]

We conclude by addressing important issues of interstate marital property. Many modern families reside in or have significant connections with numerous states during the course of a marriage. Conflict of laws issues will continue to arise with increasing frequency. We have noted numerous variations in the marital property law of the states, including the fundamental differences between common law states and community property states. As couples move from state to state, or have property or engage in property transactions in states other than their domiciliary state, many issues can arise concerning the legal implications of these multi-state connections. n558

Most lawyers are familiar with the subject of conflict of laws, but a few introductory remarks will set the stage for this section. The body of law usually labeled "conflict of laws" is sometimes divided into several topics, including choice of law, personal jurisdiction, and interstate enforcement of judgments. In the areas of family law and community property, significant questions frequently arise concerning all three of these topics.

For the most part, choice of law doctrine is judge-made theory that evolves in the context of litigation. Courts do not always apply the law of their own states to resolve litigation. When transactions or occurrences have connections with more than one state, and those states have pertinent laws that differ from one another, it is necessary to determine which of these conflicting laws should apply in assessing the rights and liabilities of the parties. This process is referred to as "choice of law." In some cases the proper rules governing the case, or the issues involved, will be found in a state or states other than the forum state. Each jurisdiction develops its own rules or theory by which it makes the decision of where to find the appropriate law.

During the first half of the 20th century, the accepted approach to choice of law was embodied in the Restatement, First, of Conflict of Laws, which was more or less uniformly applied throughout the United States. The First Restatement approach is essentially "territorialist" in nature: The applicable law is chosen by reference to significant events that took place within geographical (state) boundaries, and the rights and liabilities of the parties are defined by the law of that place. Thus, the law applied in personal injury cases is the law of the place where the injury occurred; the validity of a contract is determined by the law of the place where the contract was made; and the law affecting real property transactions is the law of the state where the property is located.

Some states still follow the territorialist approach to choice of law. Many, however, have concluded that the arbitrary choices of the First Restatement too often result in unfair decisions. It is impossible to describe briefly the newer approaches to choice of law, but a common denominator is attention to the policies involved in the competing laws. With respect to most real property issues, a very strong preference for the law of the "situs," i.e., the location of the property, persists, but in other areas there is a substantial difference in method, if not results.

§ 37.16(a) Validity of Marriage and Jurisdiction at Divorce.

Although the subject of family law generally is beyond the scope of this chapter, we have noted that the existence of marital property obviously depends on the existence of a marital relationship. n559 Here we consider a few fundamental issues of conflict of laws relative to the beginning and ending of a marriage.

Marriage has frequently been described in terms of a three-party relationship involving wife, husband and the state. This description reflects a strong societal interest in marriage, and the creation and institution of marriage is regulated by each individual state. Requirements and formalities of marriage vary from state to state. We have indicated, for example, that twelve states and the District of Columbia still recognize common law marriage. n560 Such marriages are not recognized in other states. This is a conflict of laws that may become significant when a common law husband and wife move to a state that does not recognize common law marriage. A dispute might there arise over marital property and the validity of the marriage. Because of a strong public policy favoring validity, legislatures and courts have consistently chosen to apply the law of the state where the marriage was celebrated if the marriage is valid under that law. A New Mexico statute, for example, provides: "All marriages celebrated beyond the limits of this state, which are valid according to the laws of the country wherein they were celebrated or contracted, shall be likewise valid in this state, and shall have the same force as if they had been celebrated in accordance with the laws in force in this state." n561

Conflicts may also arise over the termination of the marriage. In a recent Washington case, for example, the couple was married in Texas in 1941. In 1954, the wife became mentally ill, and the husband abandoned her three years later. In 1982, the husband married again in Tijuana, Mexico, and settled with his new wife in Washington State. While the couple was domiciled in Washington, the husband won about $2 million from a lottery ticket. When the husband died in 1991, a daughter from the first marriage claimed that the first marriage was still valid because marriage is terminable only by death or divorce in Texas, where the marriage was contracted. According to the daughter, the Texas marriage was never terminated and she was entitled to her mother's share of the lottery winnings. The Washington court refused to apply Texas law, however. The court reasoned that Washington law applied since the husband received the winnings while domiciled in Washington. Under Washington law, a marriage can be ruled defunct without the existence of a divorce decree or the death of one of the spouses. The court determined that the Texas marriage was defunct and that the daughter had no claim on the lottery money. n562

Jurisdictional concerns sometimes arise when a marriage is dissolving and parties go their separate ways, sometimes crossing state boundaries. Under modern law, a state where either spouse is domiciled appears to have jurisdiction to terminate the marriage relationship. n563 Personal jurisdiction over both parties is necessary, however, for litigation affecting property interests. n564 In 1977, the United States Supreme Court began to apply the International Shoe test of minimum contacts, fairness and substantial justice to all exercises of jurisdiction over defendants. n565 This is a departure from earlier standards of amenability to jurisdiction, which were satisfied by presence within the forum state of either the person or property of the defendant. In the context of some marital property disputes, the effect of the new test may not differ much from the old. This may be true, for example, where one spouse and the property in dispute are within the forum state. As the Court recognized, "jurisdiction over many types of actions which now are or might be brought in rem would not be affected by a holding that any assertion of state-court jurisdiction must satisfy the International Shoe standard." n566

These cases may present significant jurisdictional problems. Where spouses separate, and one moves to another state and takes marital property to that state and seeks there to litigate marital property rights, questions may be raised about whether the absent spouse is amenable to jurisdiction. If the property was moved surreptitiously or without the consent of the absent spouse (who didn't move), it may be a denial of due process to force that spouse to come to the second state. n567

A number of other issues concerning jurisdiction to divide marital property have arisen. The strong "situs rule" has been mentioned earlier in this section. Courts in a state where real property is located are not obliged to give full faith and credit to judgments from another state affecting title to that property. n568 Courts are therefore reluctant to order directly a division of foreign real estate. The approach that can be taken, assuming the court has personal jurisdiction over both spouses, is to affect title indirectly by ordering the signing of appropriate conveyances by the parties. n569 Conveyances signed pursuant to such orders are valid and will probably be enforced in most states. n570

Modern statutes will occasionally address issues of marital property located in another jurisdiction, including the one just discussed. In California, the court is directed, if possible, to divide community property and quasi-community property "in such a manner that it is not necessary to change the nature of the interests held in the real property situated in the other state." n571 If that is not possible, the court may effect a division of the property by (a) requiring the parties to execute conveyances or take other necessary actions with respect to the out-of-state real property or (b) award to the party who would have been benefitted by the conveyances or other actions the money value of the interest that would have been received. This statute thus directs California courts to take a practical approach to the problem of foreign real property, recognizing that a California decree directly affecting the property might not be enforceable.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital w/1 property w/30 (valid! w/2 marriage) or (divorce! w/2 jurisdiction)

§ 37.16(b) Classification of Marital Property During Marriage in Interstate Situations.

In modern society, people will sometimes reside in one state and own property in another. And with the shift in the nature of wealth from tangible to intangible assets, simply placing property geographically becomes a difficult proposition. In multi-state situations, conflict of laws focuses on connecting factors or policy considerations for the purpose of choosing the appropriate law to determine property classification. The process of identifying the law that should be applied is not easily mastered; because of the very nature of the situations, conflict-of-laws problems tend to be rather intractable and lawyers and courts frequently struggle with application of the principles and theory.

The nature of property ownership is generally classified as of the time of acquisition. Under the situs rule, discussed in § 37.16(a), supra, one would expect real property to be characterized according to the law of the place where the property is located. n572 More specifically:

> (1) The effect of marriage upon an interest in land acquired by either of the spouses during coverture is determined by the law that would be applied by the courts of the situs.
>
> (2) These courts would usually apply their own local law in determining such questions. n573

This statement is accurate but somewhat misleading. Under this approach, one might expect that real property in state X purchased by a husband and wife domiciled in state Y would be classified according to the law of state X. If state X is a common law property state and state Y is a community property state, one would assume that the property is characterized as common law marital property. But this conclusion arguably overlooks important considerations, particularly the fact that the state X real property will be a mutation of other property n574 and might properly be classified accordingly. In other words, if the parties pay the total purchase price of $100,000 with community funds acquired in state Y, should the courts in state X apply the law of state Y, the marital domicile, and classify the real property as community property? About such issues, the authors of the Restatement state:

> [Courts of the situs state] would usually hold that any marital property interests which the spouses had in the funds or other property exchanged for the land have been transferred to the land itself. So if land in a common law state is purchased with funds that are held in community because acquired while the spouses were domiciled in a community property state (compare § 258), the courts of the situs would usually hold that the spouses -- at least as between themselves -- have the same marital property interests in the land as they formerly had in the funds. n575

This same approach is also applied in reverse of the example described above, when a married person domiciled in a common law property state purchases property in a community property state. Although community property statutes do not explicitly confine their effects to citizens domiciled within the state, n576 courts have concluded that legislatures did not intend for the statute to apply to property acquired by married persons residing in other states. The following passage from an early Washington case illustrates the point:

> We are clear that personal property acquired by either husband or wife in a foreign jurisdiction, which is by the law of the place where acquired the separate property of one or the other of the spouses, continues to be the separate property of that spouse when brought within this state; and, it being the separate property of that spouse owning and bringing it here, property in this state, whether real or personal, received in exchange for it, or purchased by it, if it be money, is also the separate property of such spouse. n577

The Restatement provision dealing with acquisition of personal property during the marriage focuses on the test used throughout the Restatement -- "most significant relationship to the spouses and the movable" -- with greater weight usually given to the state where the spouses were domiciled at the time of acquisition. n578 As to whether one spouse acquires an interest in movables owned by the other at the time of marriage, the applicable law will usually be that of the state "where the other [owner] spouse was domiciled at the time of the marriage." n579

We see that with respect to both real and personal property, classification for marital property purposes depends heavily on domicile of the parties, when married with respect to property brought into the marriage, and when the property is acquired, if during the marriage.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marital w/1 property w/30 classif! w/5 during w/2 marriage w/15 interstate § 37.16(c) Quasi-Community Property.

When couples move from a community property state to a common law property state, or from a common law property state to a community property state, significant property consequences can develop. We have noted that the individualist tradition of the common law generally treats property acquired directly by the efforts of one spouse (salary and wages during marriage, for example) as that spouse's individual property. The other spouse has no ownership interest in the property. In cases where only one spouse is employed, and property is accumulated over a number of years in a common law state, the accumulated wealth is entirely "owned" by the employee-spouse. As we have seen, ownership of the same wealth accumulated in a community property jurisdiction would be shared equally by the spouses.

In interstate settings, this fundamental difference between common law states and community property states can become particularly significant. Suppose, for example, that a wife and husband are domiciled for many years in a common law property state and there accumulate a significant amount of wealth. Assume further that only one of them was employed outside the home during that time and that under the common law property system that earning spouse would be the exclusive owner of the accumulated wealth. If the couple decides to retire to a community property state marital property issues might become very significant. As we have noted throughout this chapter, the marital property law of community property states is designed to provide equitably for each spouse. But if our retired couple now seeks a divorce or one of them dies, the original community property doesn't work very well if the property accumulated by the couple is characterized, as it would be under traditional choice of law analysis referred to in § 37.16(b), supra, as separate property of one spouse. Because the consequences at divorce or death in community property states are tied into the community-separate distinction, and depend on that dichotomy for fairness in property division at divorce or disposition at death, the system did not originally handle effectively cases like our example.

The problem, of course, is the mixture in a case like this between two fundamentally different systems of marital property. The problem is not as severe for spouses who move from community property states to common law property states. Possible inequities can be avoided as a result of the adoption of equitable distribution upon divorce in the common law property states. As we saw in § 37.15, supra, the same issues in community property states are not necessarily handled in the same way, tied in as they are to the community-separate classification scheme.

California once addressed this problem by legislation converting separate property earned during marriage by incoming migrants from common law property states into the equivalent of California community property. The change essentially occurred as the couple entered the state, intending to make it their home. The California court decided, however, that this approach to the problem was unconstitutional under the Due Process and Privileges and Immunities Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. n580

Several community property states have now adopted a more limited approach to the problem of migrating couples from common law property states. The label that has been attached to these measures is "quasi-community property." The idea is quite simple, as illustrated by the following statutory definition, and comes into play at divorce and/r death of a spouse:

> "Quasi-community property" means all real or personal property, wherever situated, acquired before or after the operative date of this code in any of the following ways:
>
> (a) By either spouse while domiciled elsewhere which would have been community property if the spouse who acquired the property had been domiciled in this state at the time of its acquisition.
>
> (b) In exchange for real or personal property, wherever situated, which would have been community property if the spouse who acquired the property so exchanged had been domiciled in this state at the time of its acquisition. n581

California quasi-community property is made a part of the "community estate" for purposes of both division of marital property at divorce n582 and disposition of a spouse's property at death. n583 Texas and Arizona have also adopted the concept of quasi-community property, but only for purposes of division of property at divorce. n584 Two states, Washington and Idaho have adopted the quasi-community concept solely for purposes of disposition at death. n585

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: quasi-community w/1 property

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 558. These problems can also arise, of course, in an international context. We will here limit our discussion to interstate settings within the United States.

(n2)Footnote 559. See § 37.05, supra.

(n3)Footnote 560. See § 37.05(c), supra.

(n4)Footnote 561. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-1-4. This statute has been applied in recognition of a common law marriage consummated in another state, although New Mexico does not otherwise recognize common law marriages. Bivians v. Denk, 652 P.2d 744 (N.M. Ct. App. 1982).

(n5)Footnote 562. Seizer v. Sessions, 940 P.2d 261, 265-268 (Wash. 1997).

(n6)Footnote 563. Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287 (1942); Williams v. North Carolina, 325 U.S. 226 (1945). Marriage has been perceived as a "res," and originally, the place of the "matrimonial domicile" was the state which had jurisdiction to terminate the marriage. Because of the demands of public policy, ex parte divorce in a state where only one of the spouses is domiciled is now recognized. Statutes in most states impose residency requirements, usually construed as domiciliary requirements, before a divorce can be obtained. Most residency requirements are one year or less, pursuant to a decision upholding the Iowa one-year requirement against constitutional attack. Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393 (1975). See Homer H. Clark, Jr. The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 12.2 at 413 (2d student ed. 1988).

(n7)Footnote 564. Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541 (1948).

(n8)Footnote 565. Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186 (1977).

(n9)Footnote 566. 433 U.S. at 208, 97 S. Ct. at 2582; Johnson v. Johnson, No. 02*A01-9603-CH-00061, 1997 Tenn. App. LEXIS 806 (Tenn. App. 1997)* (applying the International Shoe test).

(n10)Footnote 567. In Kulko v. Superior Ct., 436 U.S. 84 (1978), the Court held that a former husband was not amenable to jurisdiction in California. After a divorce in New York, the marital domicile, the wife moved to California. She there sued to increase the former husband's child support obligations. Even though he had purchased an airplane ticket and sent one child to live with the mother, the Court did not agree with the mother's contention that these contacts were sufficient to make the New York spouse amenable to jurisdiction in California. He had not purposefully availed himself of the benefits of California law. This case seems analogous to the situation described in the text. This issue, and many other conflict of laws problems, are discussed in J. Thomas Oldham, Conflict of Laws and Marital Property Rights, 39 Baylor Law Rev. 1255, 1264-1266 (1987).

(n11)Footnote 568. Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1 (1909). The situs state may, of course, give the foreign judgment full faith and credit if it chooses to do so. Out of respect for state sovereignty, however, the Court has been reluctant to apply the full faith and credit clause to judgments respecting real property in another state. As the states become more unified and less suspicious of one another, it is quite possible that courts will begin to give more credit to foreign judgments respecting land in the forum state.

(n12)Footnote 569. Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1 (1909).

(n13)Footnote 570. Even a decree ordering a party to sign an instrument of conveyance, thus affecting title to foreign real property only indirectly, will sometimes be deemed an invalid order by the situs state. See Sammons v. Sammons, 479 So. 2d 223 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1985). In fact, the distinction between decrees having an indirect effect and those having a direct effect on foreign land may not make good sense. The proper response, however, may be some relaxation of the situs principle as a matter of choice of law in the situs state.

(n14)Footnote 571. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 2660.

(n15)Footnote 572. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 234 cmt. a (1971).

(n16)Footnote 573. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 234 (1971). The same basic rule is also applied in determining the effect of marriage upon an interest owned by a spouse at the time of marriage. Id. § 233. The Restatement presents one view among many regarding choice of law generally. Other approaches to choice of law have been adopted in numerous states. In the area of marital property, however, the Restatement (Second) is probably as accurate a generalization about the law of the states as can be found.

(n17)Footnote 574. See § 37.10(b). Spouses residing in one state and purchasing real property in another will almost always be using "domiciliary-state-property" to purchase the out-of-state property. This being the case, characterization of the property for marital purposes will usually depend on whether the situs state really does "usually apply their own local law in determining" the effect of the marriage on the property.

(n18)Footnote 575. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 234, cmt. (1971). The comment suggests that courts would usually apply their own law where the rights of some third party are involved.

(n19)Footnote 576. In some cases, there is an explicit reference to domicile. California's definition of community property refers to property "acquired by a married person during the marriage while domiciled in this state." Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 760.

(n20)Footnote 577. Brookman v. Durkee, 90 P. 914, 915 (Wash. 1907). See also McCarver v. Trumble, 660 S.W.2d 595 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983).

(n21)Footnote 578. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 258 (1971).

(n22)Footnote 579. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 257 (1971).

(n23)Footnote 580. Estate of Thornton, 33 P.2d 1 (Cal. 1934).

(n24)Footnote 581. Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 125. The Law Revision Commission Comment to this section explains that it ensures that "the division of marital property on dissolution of marriage ... will not be controlled by the fortuity of when or where the property was initially acquired."

(n25)Footnote 582. Id. § 2501.

(n26)Footnote 583. For purposes of disposition at death, quasi-community property is defined again in Cal. Prob. Code Ann. § 66. "Upon the death of a married person domiciled in this state, one-half of the decedent's quasi-community property belongs to the surviving spouse and the other half belongs to the decedent." Id. § 101. As with community property, a spouse has testamentary power over one-half of the quasi-community property. Id. § 6101. The surviving spouse takes the decedent's share of the intestate quasi-community property, just as with community property. Id. § 6401.

(n27)Footnote 584. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-318; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.63.

(n28)Footnote 585. Idaho Code § 15-2-201 (1993); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 26.16.220 & 26.16.230.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 37 MARITAL PROPERTY

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 37.17

AUTHOR: Professor Douglas Haddock School of Law St. Mary's Univ. of San Antonio

§ 37.17 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Ballinger, Richard A. A Treatise on the Property Rights of Husband and Wife, Under the Community or Ganancial System. Seattle, San Francisco: Bancroft-Whitney Co., 1895.

Baxter, Ian F. G. Marital Property. Rochester: Lawyers Co-Operative Publishing Co., 1973 & 1993 Supp.

Blumberg, Grace Ganz. Community Property in California. 2d ed. Boston: Little Brown, 1993.

Brockelbank, William J. The Community Property Law of Idaho. Edited by J. Henderson. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1982.

Casner, Andrew James, ed. American Law of Property, I & II Boston: Little, Brown, 1952.

Clark, Homer H., Jr. The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States. 2d ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1987.

Clark, Homer H., Jr. The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States. 2d student ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1988.

Cunningham, Roger A., William B. Stoebuck, and Dale A. Whitman. The Law of Property. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1993.

de Funiak, William Q. and Michael J. Vaughn. Principles of Community Property. 2d ed. Tucson: University of Arizona Press, 1971.

Driver, Harold E. Indians of North America. 2d ed. rev. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1969.

Fineman, Martha Albertson. The Illusion of Equality: The Rhetoric and Reality of Divorce Reform. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1991.

Finley, Gale S. Assigning Retirement Benefits in Divorce: A Practical Guide to Negotiating and Drafting QDROs. Chicago: Section of Family Law; ABA, 1995.

Golden, Lawrence J. Equitable Distribution of Property. Colorado Springs, New York: McGraw-Hill, 1983.

Green, Joyce Hens, John V. Long, and Roberta L. Murawski. Dissolution of Marriage. Colorado Springs, New York: McGraw-Hill, 1986.

Gregory, John DeWitt. The Law of Equitable Distribution. Boston: Warren, Gorham & Lamont, 1989.

Jacobs, Wilbur R. Dispossessing the American Indian. New York: Scribner, 1972.

Lindey, Alexander and Louis I. Parley. Separation Agreements and Antenuptial Contracts. New York: Matthew Bender, 1993.

McCahey, John, P., ed. Valuation and Distribution of Marital Property. New York: Mathew Bender, 1993.

McClanahan, W. S. Community Property Law in the United States. Rochester: Lawyers Co-Operative Publishing Co., 1982 & 1992 Supp.

McKnight, Joseph W. and William A. Reppy, Jr. Texas Matrimonial Property Law. Charlottesville: The Michie Co., 1983.

McLellan, Gerald D. Equitable Distribution Law and Practice. New York: Wiley, 1985.

Oldham, J. Thomas. Texas Marital Property Rights. Houston: John Marshall Publishing Co., 1992.

Oldham, J. Thomas. Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property. New York: Law Journal Seminars Press, 1992.

Reppy, William A., Jr. Community Property in California. 2d ed. Charlottesville: The Michie Co., 1988.

Reppy, William A., Jr. and Cynthia A. Samuel. Community Property in the United States. 4th ed. Detroit: Lupus Publications, Ltd., 1994.

Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971).

Salmon, Marylynn. Women and the Law of Property in Early America. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1986.

Schlissel, Stephen W. Separation Agreements and Marital Contracts. Charlottesville: The Michie Co., 1986 & 1993 Supp.

Shulman, Gary A. Dividing Pensions in Divorce: Learning From the Pension Experts. New York: Wiley, 1996.

Spaht, Katherine S. and W. Lee Hargrave. Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: Matrimonial Regimes. 1989.

Vogel, Virgil. This Country Was Ours: A Documentary History of the American Indian. 1972.

Williamson, John Harvey. The Attorney's Handbook on Qualified Domestic Relations Orders. Lakewood, Colorado: Argyle Publishing Co., 1995.

Winer, Edward L. and Lewis Becker, eds. Premarital and Marital Contracts Chicago: Section of Family Law; ABA, 1993.

Woodhouse, Violet. Divorce and Money: How to Make the Best Financial Decisions During Divorce. Berkeley: Nolo Press, 1996.

Articles

Adams, Andrew M. "Johnson v. Wetherspoon: From the Purses of Widows to the Clutches of Ex-Wives; The Application of Community Property to Survivor Benefits under State Retirement Plans." Loy. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1997) 475.

Adelman, Lynn, Donald Hanaway and Mary Lou Munts. "Departures from the Uniform Marital Property Act Contained in the Wisconsin Marital Property Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 390.

Andrews, Thomas R. "Income from Separate Property: Towards a Theoretical Foundation." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 171.

Arruebarrena, Dian Tooley. "Rethinking the Classification of Credit Acquisitions Under Louisiana's Community Property Law." La. L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1990) 973.

Banking Law Journal, Estate and Gift Tax Decisions. "Entire Value of Life Insurance on Decedent's Live was Includible in Estate Where Policy was not Community Property and No Fraud on Wire Was Found. Estate of William G. Street, TC Memo 1997-32." Banking L J. Vol. 114 (1997) 584.

Banking Law Journal, Estate and Gift Tax Decisions. "Decedent's Interest in California Real Property Was Separate Property Under Section 2033 Rather than Community Property. Estate of John Kenly, TC Memo 1996-516," Banking L.J. Vol. 114 (1997) 496.

Bartke, Richard W. "Community Property, Management Powers and Trusts: You Can Teach Old Dogs New Tricks." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 133.

Bascom, Timothy A. "Irreconcilable Differences: Income from Separate Property Under Divorce Law and Under Wisconsin's Marital Property Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 70 (1986) 41.

Bassett, William W. "Repealing Quasi-Community Property: A Proposal to Readopt a Unitary Marital Property Scheme." U.S.F.L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1988) 463.

Becker, Lewis. "Conduct of a Spouse that Dissipates Property Available for Equitable Property Distribution: A Suggested Analysis." Ohio St. L.J. Vol. 52 (1991) 95.

Beckstead, Blaine D. "Understanding and Applying I.R.C. § 66." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1997) 567.

Bilbe, George. "Management of Community Assets Under Act 627." La. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1979) 409.

Bingaman, Anne K. "Equal Management of Community Property and Equal Credit Opportunity." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 161.

Blumberg, Grace Ganz. "Identifying and Valuing Goodwill at Divorce." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 217.

Blumberg, Grace Ganz. "Marital Property Treatment of Pensions, Disability Pay, Workers Compensation and Other Wage Substitutes: An Insurance, or Replacement, Analysis." UCLA L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1986) 1250.

Bodenheimer, Brigite M. "The Community Without Community Property: The Need for Legislative Attention to Separate-Property Marriages Under Community Property Laws." Cal. W. L. Rev. Vol. 8 (1972) 381.

Boykoff, Thomas M. "Wisconsin Tax Practice and the Marital Property Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 424.

Bradstreet, Angela M. "Marital Property Law in England and California: A Comparative Study and Critique." Hastings Int'l & Comp. L. Rev. Vol. 4 (1980) 143.

Brandt, Elizabeth Barker. "Community-Property Treatment of the Increase in Value of a Separately Owned Business." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1991) 195.

Bruch, Carol S. "The Definition and Division of Marital Property in California: Towards Parity and Simplicity." Hastings L.J. Vol.33 (1982) 771.

Bruch, Carol S. "The Hague Convention on the Law Applicable to Succession to the Estates of Deceased Persons: Do Quasi-Community Property and Mandatory Survivorship Laws Need Protection?" Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 309.

Bruch, Carol S. "Management Powers and Duties under California's Community Property Laws: Recommendations for Reform." Hastings L.J. Vol. 4 (1982) 227.

Bruch, Carol S. "Protecting the Rights of Spouses in Intact Marriages: The 1987 California Community Property Reform and Why It Was So Hard to Get." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 731.

Cairns, Norm. "Community Property -New Mexico Changes the Method of Allocating Future Pension Benefits Between Divorcing Spouses: Ruggles v. Ruggles." N.M. L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1995) 249.

Cantwell, William P. "The Uniform Marital Property Act: Origin and Intent." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 384.

Chappell, Merrie. "A Uniform Resolution to the Problem a Migrating Spouse Encounters at Divorce and Death." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1992) 993.

Chused, Richard H. "Married Women's Property Law: 1800-1850." Geo. L.J. Vol. 71 (1983) 1359.

Clausnitzer, Martin. "Property Rights of Surviving Spouses and the Conflict of Laws." J. Fam. L. Vol. 18 (1980) 471.

Cohen, Felix. "Dialogue on Private Property." Rutgers L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1954) 357.

Connell, Mary Jane. Note, "Property Division and Alimony Awards: A Survey of Statutory Limitations on Judicial Discretion." Fordham L. Rev. Vol. 8 (1981) 415.

Crapo, Terry L. "Equal Management of Community Property: Creditors' Rights." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 177.

Cross, Harry M. "Community Property: A Comparison of the Systems in Washington and Louisiana." La. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1979) 479.

Cross, Harry M. "The Community Property Law in Washington." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 49 (1974) 729.

Dallison, Juli McDaniel. "Disappearing Interests: ERISA Impliedly Preempts the Predeceasing Nonemployee Spouse's Community Property Interest in the Employee's Retirement." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 49 (1997) 477.

De Armond, Elizabeth. "It Takes Two: Remodeling the Management and Control Provisions of Community Property Law." Gonz. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1995) 235.

Dickerson, Mechele "To Love, Honor, and (Oh!) Pay: Should Spouses Be Forced to Pay Each Other's Debts?" B.U.L. Rev. Vol. 78 (1998) 961.

Diehl, Michael. "The Trust in Marital Law: Divisibility of a Beneficiary Spouse's Interests on Divorce." Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 64 (1986) 1301.

Dods, Sarah. "Kochansky v. Commissioner: The Assignment of Income Doctrine, Community Property Law, and I.R.C. § 1041." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 72 (1997) 873.

Donnelly, Christine M. "Until Debts Do Us Part: Marital Property Settlements in Bankruptcy." Com. L. J. Vol. 103 (Spring 1998) 98.

Dubler, Ariela R. "Governing Through Contract: Common Law Marriage in the Nineteenth Century." Yale L.J. Vol. 107 (April 1998) 1885.

Earl, Anthony S. "Marital Property: Reform in the Wisconsin Tradition." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 381.

Effland, Richard W. "Arizona Community Property Law: Time for Review and Revision." Ariz. St. L.J. (Vol. 1982) 1.

Emery, Alfred C. "The Utah Uniform Probate Code -- Protection of the Surviving Spouse -- The Elective Share." Utah L. Rev. (1976) 771-72.

Erlanger, Howard S. and June Miller Weisberger. "From Common Law Property to Community Property: Wisconsin's Marital Property Act Four Years Later." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 769.

Erlanger, Howard S. "Wisconsin's New Deferred Marital Property Election." Wis. Law. Vol. 72 (1999) 14.

Featherstone, Thomas M. and Douthitt, Amy E. "Changing the Rules by Agreement: The New Era in Characterization, Management, and Liability of Marital Property." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 49 (1997) 271.

Featherstone, Thomas M., Jr. and Julie A. Springer. "Marital Property Law in Texas: The Past, Present and Future." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1987) 861.

Fineman, Martha. "Societal Factors Affecting the Creation of Legal Rules for Distribution of Property at Divorce." Fam. L.Q. Vol. 23 (1989) 279.

Forte, Palma Maria. "The Wisconsin Marital Property Act: Sections in Need of Reform." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 79 (1996) 859.

Garrison, Marsha. "Good Intentions Gone Awry: The Impact of New York's Equitable Distribution Law on Divorce Outcomes." *Bro*ok. L. Rev. Vol. 57 (1991) 621.

Gary, Susan N. "Marital Partnership Theory and the Elective Share: Federal Estate Tax Law Provides a Solution." U. Miami L. Rev. Vol. 49 (Spring-Summer 1995) 567.

Glendon, Mary Ann. "Modern Marriage Law and Its Underlying Assumptions: The New Marriage and the New Property." Fam. L.Q. Vol. 13 (1980) 441.

Glendon, Mary Ann. "Fixed Rules and Judicial Discretion in Contemporary Family Law and Succession Law." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 60 (1986) 1165.

Goldberg, Charlotte K. "Estate of Castiglioni: Spousal Murder and the Clash of Joint Tenancy and Equity in California Community Property Law." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1997) 513.

Gordon, Bernard and Mark London. "The Marital/Separate Property Distinction In the District of Columbia." Cath. U. L. Rev. Vol. 29 (1980) 939.

Hargrave, Lee. "Community Property Considerations in Law Suits by and against Spouses." La. L. Rev. Vol. 57 (1997) 439.

Hargrave, Lee. "Community Property Interests in Individual Retirement Accounts." La. L. Rev. Vol. 55 (1995) 509.

Hendon, Lynn F. "Classification of Personal Injury Awards in Divorce Actions." J. Fam. L. Vol. 27 (1989) 453.

Ho, Victoria M. and James Rhett Brigman. "A Seven-Step Analysis of Equitable Distribution in Florida Part I: Classification and Valuation of Marital Property." Fla. B.J. Vol. 73 (1999) 62.

Hopwood, John, Susan Roberts and Jim Paulsen. "Selected Current Issues in Community Property Aspects of Retirement Plans." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1987) 1199.

Jamieson, Lisa H. "Marital Property Issues in the Modern Estate Plan." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 49 (1997) 391.

Johanson, Stanley M. "Revocable Trusts and Community Property: The Substantive Problems. Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 47 (1969) 537.

Juenger, Friedrich K. "Marital Property and the Conflict of Laws: A Tale of Two Countries." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 81 (1981) 1061.

Kalinka, Susan. "Federal Taxation of Community Income: A Simpler and More Equitable Approach." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 633.

Kasner, Jerry A. "Donative And Interspousal Transfers Of Community Property In California: Where We Are Or Should Be." Pac. L.J. Vol. 23 (1992) 361.

King, Jennifer L. "First Comes Love, Then Comes Marriage? Applying Washington's Community Property Marriage Statutes to Cohabitational Relationships." Seattle U. L. Rev. Vol. 20 (1997) 543.

Klebanoff, Susan. Comment, "To Love and Obey 'til Graduation Day--The Professional Degree in Light of the Uniform Marital Property Act." Am. U.L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1985) 839.

Krauskopf, Joan M. "Marital Property at Marriage Dissolution." Mo. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1978) 157.

Kulzer, Barbara Ann. "Property and the Family: Spousal Protection." Rut.-Cam. L.J. Vol. 4 (1973) 195.

Lewis, Evelyn Alicia. "When Entrepreneurs of Commercial Nonprofits Divorce: Is It Anybody's Business? A Perspective on Individual Property Rights in Nonprofits." N.C. L. Rev. (June 1995) 1761.

"Marital Property Rights Not Estate Tax Consideration." Tax'n for Lawyers Vol. 24 (Nov.-Dec. 1995) 179.

Mayer, Susan. "Treating Quasi-Community Property as Community Property for Debt Collection: Due Process and Policy Concerns." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1988) 905.

Milot, Lisa. "Restitching the American Marital Quilt: Untangling Marriage from the Nuclear Family." 87 Va. L. Rev. 701 (2001).

Macdonald James S. "The Impact of Equal Management upon Community Property Business." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 191.

McKnight, Joseph W. "A Retrospective Assessment of Texas Family Property Law Reform." *Community Pro*p. J. Vol. 15 (1988) 1.

McKnight, Joseph W. "Texas Community Property Law: Conservative Attitudes, Reluctant Changes." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 71.

McKnight, Joseph W. "Texas Community Property Law-Its Course of Development and Reform." Cal. W. L. Rev. Vol. 8 (1971) 117 .

Nakamura, Kirk H. "The Classification of Personal Injury Damages Under California Community Property Law: Proposals for Application and Reform." Pac. L.J. Vol. 14 (1983) 973.

Nayo, Lydia A. "Revisiting Worth: The Copyright as Community Property Problem." U.S.F. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1995) 153.

Neerken, Julie. "New Mexico Community Property Law and the Division of Retirement Plan Benefits Pursuant to the Dissolution of Marriage." N.M. L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1983) 641.

O'Connor, Kathleen M. "Marital Property Reform in Massachusetts: A Choice for the New Millenium." New Eng. L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1999) 261.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Conflict of Laws and Marital Property Rights." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1987) 1255.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Is the Concept of Marital Property Outdated." J. Fam. L. Vol. 22 (1984) 263.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Management of the Community Estate During an Intact Marriage." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 99.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Property Division in a Texas Divorce of a Migrant Spouse: Heads He Wins, Tails She Loses?" Hous. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1981) 1.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Separate Property Businesses that Increase in Value During Marriage." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 585.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Should the Surviving Spouse's Forced Share Be Retained?" Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1987) 223.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "The 1997 Marital Property Rights Symposium." Fam. L. Q. Vol. 31 (1997) 1.

Oldham, J. Thomas. "Tracing, Commingling, and Transmutation." Fam. L.Q. Vol. 23 (1989) 219.

Osborn, Emily. Comment, "The Treatment of Unearned Separate Property at Divorce in Common Law Property Jurisdictions." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 903.

Patterson, Patricia E.and Michael Hale Ahrens. Comment, "Migrating Couples and Wisconsin's Marital Property Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 488.

Paulsen, James W. "Jensen III and Beyond: Exploring the Community Property Aspects of Closely Held Corporate Stock in Texas." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 37 (1985) 653.

Paulsen, James W. "Remember the Alamo[ny]! The Unique Texas Ban on Permanent Alimony and the Development of Community Property Law." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 7.

Pershall, Sallye. "Washington's Denial of a Non-Employee Spouse's Community Property Interest in a Statutorily Created Death Benefit: Arnold v. Department of Retirement Systems." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1997) 627.

Pershall, Sallye. "Defining the Character of Termination and Severance Payments: In Re Marriage of Frahm and In Re Marriage of Wade." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1997) 643.

Phipps, Oval A. "Tenancy by Entireties." Temp. L.Q. Vol. 25 (1951) 24.

Podell, James J. "The Impact of Wisconsin's Marital Property Act on Family Law." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 448.

Powell, Richard R. B. "Community Property-A Critique of Its Regulation of Intra-Family Relations." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 11 (1936) 12.

Prager, Susan W. "The Persistence of Separate Property Concepts in California's Community Property System, 1849-1975." UCLA L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1976) 1.

Prager, Susan W. "Sharing Principles and the Future of Marital Property Law." UCLA L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1977) 1.

Propst, Tristan E. "Boggs v. Boggs: The Fifth Circuit finds ERISA does not Preempt Louisiana Community Property Law." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 71 (1997) 1005.

Randall, Gary C. and Katti Telstad. "Community Property Rules or American Indian Tribal Law Which Prevails?" Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 31 (1995) 1071.

Reese, Willis L. M. "Marriage in American Conflict of Laws." Int'l & Comp. L.Q. Vol. 26 (1977) 952.

Reiss, Jerry. "The Emerging Marital Controversy: When Should Postdissolution Retirement Benefit Increases Be Treated as Marital Property?" Divorce Litig. Vol. 7 (August 1995) 162.

Reppy, William A., Jr. "Community and Separate Interests in Pensions and Social Security Benefits After Marriage of Brown and ERISA." UCLA L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1978) 417.

Reppy, William A., Jr. "Major Events in the Evolution of American Community Property Law and Their Import to Equitable Distribution States." Fam. L.Q. Vol. 23 (1989) 163.

Reppy, William A., Jr. "Repayment with Community Funds of Consumer Loans Secured by Separate Realty: Seeking the Appropriate Remedy." *Community Pro*p. J. Vol. 14:4 (Jan. 1988) 1.

Reppy, William A., Jr. "Retroactivity of the 1975 California Community Property Reforms." S. Calif. L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1975) 977.

Reynolds, Suzanne. "Increases in Separate Property and the Evolving Marital Partnership." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1989) 239.

Riley, Janet M. "Women's Rights in the Louisiana Matrimonial Regime." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1976) 557.

Roadhouse, Wilbur M. Note, "The Problem of the Professional Spouse: Should an Educational Degree Earned During Marriage Constitute Property in Arizona?" Ariz. L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1982) 963.

Rosen, Robin P. "A Critical Analysis of Celebrity Careers as Property upon Dissolution of Marriage." Geo. Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 65 (1993) 522.

Sampson, John J. "Interstate Spouses, Interstate Property, and Divorce." Tex. Tech L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1982) 1285.

Samuel, Cynthia. "Restoration of the Separate Estate from Community Property After the Equal Management Reform: Some Thoughts on Louisiana's Reimbursement Rules." Law & Contemp. Probs. No. 2 (American Community Property Regimes) Vol. 56 (1993) 273.

Sather, Katrina T. "The Omitted Spouse Statute as it Applies in Community Property States." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 31 (1995) 1149.

Schlueter, Linda L. and Kimberly Gott. "The "Diploma Dilemma:' Whether a Professional Degree or License Should be Treated as a Professional Asset on Divorce." *Community Pro*p. J. Vol. 15 (1988) 28.

Schwartz, Frederic S. "Agreements Between Spouses Under the Wisconsin Marital Property Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 404.

Shultz, Marjorie Maguire. "Contractual Ordering of Marriage: A New Model for State Policy." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 70 (1982) 204.

Smith, Bea Ann. "The Partnership Theory of Marriage: A Borrowed Solution Fails." Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1990) 689.

Smith, Hon. Bea Ann "Why the Community Property System Fails Divorced Women and Children." Tex. J. Women & L. Vol. 7. (Spring 1998) 135.

Solomon, Deene Goodlaw. "Beyond Preemption: Accommodation of the Nonemployee Spouse's Interest Under ERISA." Hastings L.J. Vol. 31 (1980) 1021.

Spaht, Katherine. "Background of Matrimonial Regimes Revision." La. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (1979) 323.

Spaht, Katherine Shaw. "Co-Ownership of Former Community Property: A Primer on the New Law." La. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1996) 677.

Spaht, Katherine. "Post Dissolution Management of Former Community Property: An Unresolved Problem." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 705.

Sterling, Nathaniel. "Joint Tenancy and Community Property in California." Pac. L.J. Vol. 14 (1983) 927.

Street, Jennifer L. "The Community Property Discharge in Bankruptcy: A Fair Result or a Creditor's Trap?" N.M. L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1995) 229.

Streich, Alexandria "Spousal Fiduciaries in the Marital Partnership: Marriage Means Business But the Sharks Do Not Have A Code of Conduct." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1998) 367.

Strub, Rochelle "Marital Property Division in Divorce Proceedings: Full Faith & Credit Clause and Jurisdiction," 11 J. Contemp. Legal Issues 220 (2000).

Swartz, David. "Advanced Degrees Do Not Constitute Marital Property Subject to Equitable Distribution upon Divorce: Becker v. Perkins-Becker, 669 A.2d 524 (R.I. 1996)." Suffolk U. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1997) 589.

Tierney, Joseph E., Jr. and Scott D. Gerardin. "Applications of the Wisconsin Marital Property Act to Estate Planning: A Practical Discussion on Selected Aspects of the Act." Marq. L. Rev. Vol. 68 (1985) 471.

Turano, Margaret Valentine "Jane Austin, Charlotte Bronte and the Marital Property Law." Harv. Women's. L. J. Vol. 21 (Spring 1998) 179.

Turner, Brett R. "Fraudulent Conveyance Statutes as a Remedy for Dissipation of Marital Assets." Divorce Litig. Vol. 8 (March 1996) 45.

Turner, Brett R. "Here Today, Gone Tomorrow: Identification and Division of Dissipated Marital Assets." Divorce Litig. Vol. 8 (February 1995) 21.

Turner, Brett R. "Merger of Professional Degrees into Professional Careers under New York Equitable Distribution Law." Divorce Litig. Vol. 8 (March 1996) 52.

Vasser, Schmuel. "Bankruptcy Meets Family Law: A Presumptive Approach to the Dischargeability of Equitable Distribution Awards." J. Bankr. L. & Prac. Vol. 5 (November-December 1995) 83.

Vaughn, Michael J. "The Policy of Community Property and Inter-Spousal Transactions." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1967) 20.

Vecino, Tony "Boggs v. Boggs: State Community Property and Succession Rights Wallow in ERISA's Mire." Golden Gate U. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (Spring 1998) 571.

Veilleux, Marc J. "Long v. Long: Law Court Ruling Changes the Disposition of Joint Real Property on Divorce." Maine L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1998) 471.

Wake, Wendy. Note, "Uniform Marital Property Act: Suggested Revisions for Equality Between Spouses." U. Ill. L. Rev. (1987) 471.

Wenig, Mary Moers. "The Marital Property Law of Connecticut: Past, Present and Future." Wis. L. Rev. (1990) 807.

Whistler, James E. "Equal Management and Life Insurance: Its Effects on Estate Planning." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 205.

Wong, Peter J. "Asserting the Spouse's Community Property Rights in Copyright." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 31 (1995) 1087.

Young, Richard L. "Community Property Classification of Credit Acquisitions in California: Law Without Logic." Cal. W.L. Rev. Vol. 17 (1981) 173.

Young, Merlin S. "Equal Management of Community Property: Bankruptcy." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 223.

Younger, Judith T. "Marital Regimes: A Story of compromise and Demoralization Together With Criticism and Suggestions for Reform." Cornell L. Rev. Vol. 67 (1981) 45.

Younger, Judith T. "Not Equal Yet." Idaho L. Rev. Vol. 13 (1977) 227.

Younger, Judith T. "Community Property, Women and the Law School Curriculum." N.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1973) 211.

Zaluda, Jeffrey A. "Estate Planning with Respect to Divorce." Est. Plan. Vol. 22 (November-December 1995) 352.

State Commentaries

Akers, Deborah R., Esq. "Statutory Terms of Art -- Marital Property." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 1 (1997) s 12.7.

Hogoboom, William P. and Donald B. King. "Marital Property, Debt Liability, and Reimbursement Claims." California Practice Guide Family Law (Treatise). Chapter 8-D (1999).

Hogoboom, William P. and Donald B. King. "Property Rights Pursuant to Judicial Determination of 'Void or Voidable' Marriage -- Quasi-Marital Property Division." California Practice Guide Family Law (Treatise). Chapter 8-F (1999).

Hogoboom, William P. and Donald B. King. "General Rules--Marital Property Divisions are Taxfree Events." California Practice Guide Family Law (Treatise). Chapter 10-N (1999).

Hogoboom, William P. and Donald B. King. "Arranging for Taxable Transfers of Marital Property." California Practice Guide Family Law (Treatise). Chapter 10-O (1999).

Hogoboom, William P. and Donald B. King. "Marital Property Divisions and Assignment of Income." California Practice Guide Family Law (Treatise). Chapter 10-R (1999).

Kindregan, Jr., Charles P. and Monroe L. Inker. "Inheritances, gifts, and Pre-Marital Property." Mass. Prac. Family Law and Practice with Forms (2d ed.) Vol. 2A (1999) s 41.16 (Treatise Pocket Part).

Kirkland, James R., Esq. "History of Marital Property Rights and Obligations." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 1

(1997) s 4.1.

Kirkland, James R., Esq. "Property Rights upon Divorce--RC 3105.171--Definitions--Marital Property." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 1 (1997) s 4.32.

Sowald, Beatrice K. and Stanley Morganstern. "Social Security Benefits--Benefits as Marital Property." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 2 (1997) s 29.9.

Sowald, Beatrice K. and Stanley Morganstern. "Military Benefits--Benefits as Marital Property." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 2 (1997) § 29.32.1.

Sowald, Beatrice K. and Stanley Morganstern. "Private Retirement Benefits as Marital Property -- In General." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 2 (1997) § 30.1 -§ 30.3.

Sowald, Beatrice K., Esq. "Elements of Agreement -- Division of Marital Property -- Real Property." Baldwin's Oh. Prac. Dom. Rel. L. Vol 1 (1997) §§ 9.15-9.19.

Winters, Susan Reach and Thomas D. Baldwin. "Forms--Sample Pre-Marital Agreement Provisions--Division of Marital Property Upon Dissolution of Marriage." N.J. Prac. Family Law and Practice Vol. 11 (1999) § 41.13 (Treatise Main Volume).

Annotations

Annotation, Accrued Vacation, Holiday Time, and Sick Leave as Marital or Separate Property, 78 A.L.R.4th (1990) 1107.

Annotation, Antenuptial Contracts: Behavior During Marriage as Abandonment, Estoppel, or Waiver Regarding Contractual Rights, 56 A.L.R.4th (1987) 998.

Annotation, Construction, Application, and Effect of Statutes Which Deny or Qualify Surviving Spouse's Right to Elect Against Deceased Spouse's Will, 48 A.L.R.4th (1986) 972.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Appreciation in Value of Separate Property During Marriage Without Contribution by Either Spouse as Separate or Community Property, 24 A.L.R.4th (1983) 453.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Attorney's Contingent Fee Contracts as Marital Property Subject to Distribution, 44 A.L.R. 5th 671 (1998).

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Award of Interest on Deferred Installment Payments of Marital Asset Distribution, 10 A.L.R.5th (1993) 191.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Consideration of Tax Consequences in Distribution of Marital Property, 9 A.L.R. 5th 568.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Effect of Trial Court Giving Consideration to Needs of Children in Making Property Division -- Modern Status, 19 A.L.R.4th (1983) 239.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Method of Valuation of Life Insurance Policies in Connection with Trial Court's Division of Property, 54 A.L.R.4th (1987) 1203.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Treatment of Stock Options for Purposes of Dividing Marital Property, 46 A.L.R.4th (1986) 640.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Treatment of Stock Options for Purposes of Dividing Marital Property, 46 A.L.R.4th 640 (1998 supplement).

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Valuation of Stock Options for Purposes of Divorce Court's Property Distribution, 46 A.L.R.4th (1986) 689.

Annotation, Divorce and Separation: Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Property Subject to Distribution, 30 A.L.R.5th (1996) 139.

Annotation, Divorce: Excessiveness or Adequacy of Combined Property Division and Spousal Support Awards -- Modern Cases, 55 A.L.R.4th (1987) 14.

Annotation, Divorce: Excessiveness or Adequacy of Trial Court's Property Award -- Modern Cases, 56 A.L.R.4th (1987) 12.

Annotation, Divorce: Propriety of Property Distribution Leaving Both Parties with Substantial Ownership Interest in Same Business, 56 A.L.R.4th (1987) 862.

Annotation, Enforceability of Premarital Agreements Governing Support or Property Rights Upon Divorce or Separation as Affected by Circumstances Surrounding Execution-Modern Status, 53 A.L.R.4th (1987) 85.

Annotation, Enforceability of Premarital Agreements Governing Support or Property Rights Upon Divorce or Separation as Affected by Fairness or Adequacy of Those Terms-Modern Status, 53 A.L.R.4th (1987) 161.

Annotation, Evaluation of Interest in Law Firm or Medical Partnership for Purposes of Division of Property in Divorce Proceedings, 74 A.L.R.3d (1976) 621.

Annotation, Failure to Disclose Extent or Value of Property Owned as Ground for Avoiding Premarital Contract, 3 A.L.R. 5th 394.

Annotation, Liability of Community Property for Antenuptial Debts and Obligations, 68 A.L.R. (1989) 877.

Annotation, Necessity that Divorce Court Value Property Before Distributing It, 51 A.L.R.4th (1987) 11.

Annotation, Pension or Retirement Benefits as Subject to Award or Division by Court in Settlement of Property Rights Between Spouses, 94 A.L.R.3d (1979) 176.

Annotation, Separation Agreements: Enforceability of Provision Affecting Property Rights upon Death of One Party Prior to Final Judgment of Divorce, 67 A.L.R.4th (1989) 237.

Annotation, Spouse's Liability, After Divorce, for Community Debt Contracted by Other Spouse During Marriage, 20 A.L.R.4th 211 (1998 supplement).

Annotation, Spouse's Professional Degree or License as Marital Property for Purposes of Alimony, Support, or Property Settlement, 4 A.L.R.4th (1981) 1294.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.05

Supp. to § 37.05 The Marital Relationship.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.05(a) Defining Marriage. [Go To Main]

Add:

Li v. State, 338 Ore. 376 (Or. 2005) (categorizing the marital relationship as "one in which the state is deeply concerned and over which it exercises a jealous dominion"); State v. Green, 2004 UT 76 (Utah 2004) (Durham, C.J., concurring) ("[t]he institution of marriage has always been peculiarly a creature of the state, and subject to regulation by its legislature") (quoting Hendrick v. Hendrick, 1999 OK CIV APP 15 (Okla. App. 1998) .

Add:

Knight v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. App. 4th 14 (Cal. App. 2005) (noting that "[f]or determining a U.S. governmental meaning, "the word 'marriage' means only a legal union between one man and one woman as husband and wife, and the word 'spouse' refers only to a person of the opposite sex who is a husband or a wife") (quoting Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.204)).

In re Parentage of Robinson, 383 N.J. Super. 165 (Ch. Div. 2005) (biological mother's same-sex partner presumed to be the parent of the child under the Artificial Insemination Statute).

Add:

Li v. State, 338 Ore. 376 (Or. 2005) (stating that, as a statutory matter, marriage in Oregon is limited to opposite-sex couples); Knight v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. App. 4th 14 (Cal. App. 2005) (noting that, in California, domestic partners do not receive a number of marital rights and benefits, i.e., they may not file joint tax returns and their earned income is not treated as community property for state income tax purposes); Armijo v. Miles, 127 Cal. App. 4th 1405 (Cal. App. 2005) ("Prop. 22 assures that only opposite-sex marriages validly contracted outside this state will be recognized as valid in California. Same-sex marriages will be given no recognition"); Lane v. Albanese, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 759 (Conn. Super. Ct., 2005) (noting that states may choose to not recognize same-sex marriages that were performed beyond the state's borders); In re Simmons, 293 Ill. App. 3d 1151 (Ill. App. Ct., 1997) (holding transsexual male's marriage to wife was invalid as a same-sex marriage, and did not become valid when he had his internal female organs removed).

After the first paragraph of footnote 31, add the following:

But see Hernandez v. Robles, 805 N.Y.S.2d 354 (2005) (holding that Domestics Relations Law provision that did not permit same-sex marriage did not violate due process or equal protection provisions of the New York Constitution); Morrison v. Sadler, 821 N.E.2d 15 (Ind. App. 2005) (holding that Indiana's Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) did not violate Equal Privileges and Immunities Clause nor "due course of law" provision of State Constitution).

§ 37.05(c) Common Law Marriage. [Go To Main]

Add:

Knight v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. App. 4th 14 (Cal. App. 2005) (noting that California recognizes the validity of a common law marriage contracted in another state which would be valid under the laws of that state); Stovall v. City of Memphis, 2004 Tenn. App. LEXIS 536 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2004) (common-law marriage shall not be recognized as valid regardless of the fact that such marriage may be considered lawful in a state or jurisdiction where the couple lives or formerly lived).

Add:

Brown v. State, 108 P.3d 1018 (Kan. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that a requirement of common law marriage is the present intent to be married); Perrotti v. Meredith, 2005 PA Super 57 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005) (a common law marriage can be created only by an exchange of words in the present tense, spoken with the specific purpose that the legal relationship of husband and wife is created by such exchange); Thompson v. Barnhart, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117 (D. Kan. 2005) (noting that common law marriage requires a legal capacity to marry, a mutual present marriage agreement between the parties, and a holding out of each other to the public as husband and wife); Harris v. Harris, 2004 Ohio 6741 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004) (noting that the requirements of common law marriage are an agreement of marriage in praesenti, cohabitation as husband and wife, and a holding out by the parties to those with whom they normally come into contact, resulting in a reputation as a married couple in the community); Davis v. State, 2004 OK CR 36 (Okla. Crim. App. 2004) ("To establish a valid common law marriage, there must be evidence of an actual mutual agreement between the spouses to be husband and wife, a permanent relationship, an exclusive relationship--proved by cohabitation as man and wife, and the parties to the marriage must hold themselves out publicly as man and wife"); Snyder-Murphy v. City Of Cedar Rapids, 695 N.W.2d 44 (Iowa App. 2004) ("The three elements of a common-law marriage are: (1) the present intent and agreement to be married; (2) continuous cohabitation; and (3) public declaration that the parties are husband and wife"); Wachter v. Wachter, 607 S.E.2d 818 (W. Va. 2004) (noting that because proving the existence of an agreement is often difficult, most states that recognize common-law marriage allow their courts to infer an agreement from the other elements of common-law marriage).

§ 37.05(d) Defective Marriages: The Putative Spouse Doctrine. [Go To Main]

Add:

Williams v. Williams, 97 P.3d 1124 (Nev. 2004) (noting that the putative spouse doctrine applies in annulment proceedings for purposes of property division; holding that wife believed in good faith that she was divorced from her first husband when she entered into marriage with second husband, and therefore, she qualified as a putative spouse under putative spouse doctrine).

§ 37.05(e) Property Rights of Unmarried Partners. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Marriage of Martin, 681 N.W.2d 612 (Iowa 2004) (noting that courts do have authority to adjudicate property claims of unmarried persons who cohabitat. "Persons who cohabitate tend to accumulate property and the rights of the persons to such property may become disputed when the cohabitation ends").

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.06

Supp. to § 37.06 The Common Law of Marital Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.06(a) Title and Management of Marital Property Under the Common Law. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202C

Footnote 52 should read as follows:

Id. at 1386 (footnotes omitted).

Footnote 53 should read as follows:

Id. at 1389.

Footnote 54 should read as follows:

Id. at 1390.

Add:

Schlossberg v. Barney, 380 F.3d 174 (Md. Ct. App. 2004) ("A tenancy by the entireties is essentially a joint tenancy with rights of survivorship between the husband and wife rendered individually indissoluble by the common law theory that the husband and wife are one person").

Add:

But see Mechele Dickerson, Richard B. Hagedorn, and Frank W. Smith, Jr., Collection of Unsecured Debts, 1 The Law of Debtors and Creditors § 6:84 (thirty states and the District of Columbia still recognize tenancy by the entirety).

Add:

United States v. Sheehan, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23804 (D. Pa. 2004) ("The essential characteristics of the tenancy are that each spouse is seised of the whole or the entirety and not a divisible part thereof, that neither spouse may independently appropriate property to his or her own use to the exclusion of the other, that neither spouse may independently sever the estate by conveying part of the property away and the right of survivorship whereby upon the death of one spouse the other becomes the sole owner of the entireties property").

Change citation to:

Id.

§ 37.06(b) Disposition of Marital Property at Death Under Early American Common Law. [Go To Main]

Footnote 72 should read as follows:

Id. at 1366, n.27 .

Footnote 73 should read as follows:

Id.

§ 37.06(c) Disposition of Marital Property at Divorce Under Early American Common Law. [Go To Main]

Footnote 74 should read as follows:

J. Thomas Oldham, Divorce, Separation and the Distribution of Property § 3.02 at 3-3 (1993).

Footnote 75 should read as follows:

Id. at 3-3- 3-5 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.07

Supp. to § 37.07 The Transition from "Individualism" to "Community" in Common Law Jurisdictions.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.07(a) Married Women's Property Acts and Marital Property Ownership During Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions. [Go To Main]

Add:

Goodwin v. Goodwin, 263 S.W.3d 703 (Mo. App. 2008) (a husband's individual investment in a house and surrounding land); Dorsey v. Dorsey, 972 So. 2d 48 (Miss. App. 2008) (neither the husband's company nor land donated to him by his family transmuted into marital property).

Conley v. Conley, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 281 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that when a spouse treats separate property in such a way as to give evidence of an intention that it become marital property, this action creates a rebuttable presumption of a gift to the marital estate); Bersin v. Golonka, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1052 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) (stating that "a restriction on the transfer of stock does not apply to interspousal transfers of stock which is marital property absent an express provision [addressing] such transfers") (quoting Bryan-Barber Realty, Inc., v. Fryar, 461 S.E.2d 29, 32 (1995)) .

§ 37.07(b) The Uniform Probate Code and Marital Property at Death in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions. [Go To Main]

Add:

See also In re Sprenkle-Hill Estate, 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 496 (Mich. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that the purpose of an elective-share statute "is to prevent disinheritance of the spouse"); Velde v. Velde, 867 So. 2d 501 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2004) ("[t]he purpose of the elective share is to protect the surviving spouse"); McInnis & McInnis, 199 Ore. App. 223 (Or. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that a party can waive of statutory right to take elective share); Dempsey v. Dempsey, 2005 Fla. App. LEXIS 5960 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) ("The elective share is a substitute for dower and curtesy, which have been abolished").

Footnote 85 should read as follows:

Deutsch v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, T.C. Memo 1997-470 (U.S. Tax Court 1997) (comparing Florida's elective share statute to the dower statute it replaced; spouse's elective share held to be tax exempt, just as dower had been) disagreed with by Brigham v. U.S., 160 F.3d 759 (1st Cir. 1998) (holding that federal statute Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.203 does not allow the exclusion of an elective share from taxation as asserted by the Deutsch court); United States v. 221 Dana Ave., Hyde Park, MA, 239 F.3d 78 (1st Cir. 2001) (a dower interest, which is a life estate, would in most cases be worth less than the elective share, which is in fee simple).

Add:

In re Estate of Soard, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 128 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that there is a UPC provision that all years of marriage between the parties are counted even if those periods may be separated by divorce); Richard v. Richard, 2004 Minn. App. LEXIS 1475 (Minn. Ct. App. 2004) (noting that one may waive the right to an elective share in the Uniform Probate Code by agreement) (citing Affiliated Banc Group, Ltd. v. Zehringer, 527 N.W.2d 585 (Minn. Ct. App. 1995)) ; McMillan v. Follansbee, 194 Or. App. 145 (Or. Ct. App. 2004) (it is possible to waive a statutory right to partition, just as it is possible to waive other statutory rights, such as an elective share).

Add:

In re Estate of Soard, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 128 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that the Tennessee statute utilizes only 4 levels of percentage entitlement compared to the 16 levels of the UPC).

The first two lines on page 364 should be deleted.

§ 37.07(c) Equitable Distribution Upon Dissolution of Marriage in Modern Common Law Jurisdictions. [Go To Main]

Add:

Morris v. Morris, 5 So. 3d 476 (Miss App. 2008) (land titled in husband's name was marital property).

Steneken v. Steneken, 2005 N.J. LEXIS 578 (N.J. 2005) (defining property that may be equitably distributed as including property that was both real and personal, which was legally and beneficially acquired by them or either of them during the marriage).

Add:

Guy v. Guy, 955 A.2d 212 (Maine 2008) (language in the deed by which a couple purchased land did not convert the pre-existing buildings on the land, owned by the wife, into marital property).

Rowan v. Rowan, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 53 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2005) ("Title switches from husband to wife after equitable distribution and therefore does not play a major role in the distribution itself").

Add:

Steneken v. Steneken, 2005 N.J. LEXIS 578 (N.J. 2005) (defining property that may be equitably distributed as including property that was both real and personal, which was legally and beneficially acquired by them or either of them during the marriage). But see Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 240 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005) ("Property acquired by one spouse during a previous marriage is not considered marital property"). Smith v. Smith, 8 A.D.3d 728 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) ("In making equitable distribution of marital property, courts should not ignore a spouse's non-economic contributions").

Dawkins v. Dawkins, 687 S.E.2d 52 (S.C. 2010) (court had discretion to award 60% of marital property to the wife).

Footnote 96 should read as follows:

Ind. Code Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11 repealed by P.L. 1-1997, Sec. 157; Kan. Stat. Ann. ch. 60-1610(b)(1) amended by 2005 Kansas Laws ch. 154 (S.B. 7); Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 208 § 34; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.203B.

Schulz v. Schulz, 979 So.2d 297 (Fla. App. 2008) (the trial court abused its discretion in declaring certain assets to be marital property even though they had been designated as nonmarital assets by the parties); Mattioli v. Mattioli, 853 N.Y.S.2d 235 (2008) (a former residence that had been sold with distribution of funds from the sale to the parties was not marital property subject to equitable distribution).

Footnote 97 should read as follows:

Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-315; Del. Code Ann. tit. 13, § 1513(b); D.C. Code Ann. § 16-910(a); Ky. Rev. Stat. § 403.190(2); Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 3-6A-01; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 452.330(1); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:34-23; N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law §§ 236(B)(1)(D) & 236(B)(5)(B); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 50-20(D); 23 Pa. Const. Stat. Ann. § 3323(A); Tenn. Code Ann. § 36-4-121(B); Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.39(1). Pelletier v. Pelletier, 662 N.Y.S.2d 64 (S. Ct. App. Div. 1997) (property transferred to wife by a cousin constituted a gift and was therefore separate property; real estate purchase with wife's separate property was not subject to equitable distribution); Gross v. Gross, 469 S.E.2d 636 (W. Va. 1996) (equitable distribution is a three-step process involving classifying, valuing, and dividing the martial property).

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 639 S.E.2d 866 (W. Va. App. 2006) (the husband's permanent total disability benefits were martial property subject to equitable distribution); In re Marriage of Edwards, 861 N.E.2d 1020 (Ill. App. 2006) (a judgment for child support arrearage from the wife's previous marriage was not marital property, but the attorney fee award included in the judgment was marital property); Shannon v. Shannon, 847 N.E.2d 203 (Ind. App. 2006) (a worker's compensation benefit that covered lost income prior to the divorce was marital property); Gainer v. Gainer, 639 S.E.2d 746 (W. Va. App. 2006) (wife could be reimbursed for the portion of marital property used to buy military service credits).

Footnote 98 should read as follows:

Ala. Cod § 30-2-51 (if property is used regularly during the marriage for the common benefit of the spouses); Iowa Code Ann. § 598.21(2) (if court finds refusal to do so would be inequitable); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 518.58, Subd. 2 (up to one-half can be distributed if provision for one is so inadequate that unfair hardship would otherwise result); Dawson-Austin v. Austin, 920 S.W.2d 776 (Tex. App. 1996) (unequal division of community property was just and right, as long as it was equitable and circumstances justified disproportionate division); Christians v. Christians, 637 N.W.2d 377 (S.D. 2001) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding husband credit for only 280 out of 320 acres of farmland he inherited).

Footnote 99 should read as follows:

Ala. Code § 30-2-51; Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-315; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 14-10-113(1); Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46(B)-81(A); Del. Code. Ann. Tit. 13, § 1513(A) & (C); D.C. Code Ann. § 16-910(B); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 580-47(A); 750 ILCS 5/530; Ind. Code. Ann. § 31-1-11.5-11 repealed by P.L. 1-1997, Sec. 157; Iowa Code Ann. § 598.28; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1610(B)(1) amended by 2005 Kansas Laws Ch. 154 (S.B. 7); Ky. Rev. Stat. § 403.190(1); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. Tit. 19, § 722-A(1); Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 3-6A-05(B) (1993); Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. Ch. 208, § 34; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 518.58 (1993); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 452.330(1); Mont. Code Ann. § 40-4-202(1); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 42-373; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 50-20(C); Or. Rev. Stat. § 107.105(1)(F); 23 Pa. Const. Stat. Ann. § 3323(D); R.I. Gen. Laws § 15-5-16.1; Tenn. Code Ann. § 36-4-121(A) & (C); Vt. Stat. Ann. Tit. 15, § 751; Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.3(D) (1993); Wyo. Stat. § 20-2-114; Guida v. Guida, 816 So. 2d 717 (Fla. App. 2002) (equitable distribution has to be supported by substantial competent evidence). See also In re Petition of Fenzau, 54 P.3d 43 (Mont. 2002) (equitable distribution can account for medical and financial needs of the psouse which result from the other spouse's physical, mental, or emotional abuse during the marriage); Garces v. Garces, 704 So. 2d 1106 (Fla. App. 1998) (citing Fla. Stat. ch. 61.08(2), listing factors such as standard of living during the marriage, duration of the marriage, age, physical and emotional condition, services and career building contributed to the marriage, and other factors); Quinn v. Quinn, 1997 Va. App. LEXIS 573 (Va. App. 1997) (upholding trial court's discretionary application of statutory factors); Moore v. Moore, No. 0470-97-4, 1997 Va. App. LEXIS 576 (Va. App. 1997) (trial court's equitable distribution of marital property is not set aside unless clearly wrong or the court misapplied or failed to consider statutory guidelines). See also Barker v. Barker, 500 S.E.2d 240, 245 (Va. Ct. App. 1998) (trial court properly considered such factors as age, expenses, distribution of assets, and earning capacity of parties in determining equitable distribution award); In re Marriage of Wendell, 581 N.W.2d 197, 199 (Iowa Ct. App. 1998) (in considering accumulations to premarital assets for purposes of equitable distribution, court does not limit its focus to parties' direct contributions to increase, but rather considers the contributions of each party to the overall marriage); In re Marriage of Carter, 740 N.E.2d 82 (Ill. App. 2000) (equitable distribution of marital assets required to be in just proportions); Tibbetts v. Tibbetts, 762 A.2d 937 (Me. 2000) (marital property to be divided in just proportions); Atkinson v. Atkinson, 32 S.W.3d 41 (Ark. App. 2000) (unequal distribution of marital property was justified); Adams v. Adams, 778 So. 2d 825 (Ala. Civ. App. 2000) (awarding wife 16% of marital property was not equitable).

Winter v. Winter, 857 N.Y.S.2d 69 (2008) (division of marital assets included spousal maintenance, child support, husband's share of add-on child expenses, allocation of marital property and assets, and division of legal expenses); Keown v. Keown, 883 N.E.2d 865 (Ind. App. 2008) (marital residence value reduced by costs of repairs and costs of sale); Johnson v. Chapin, 854 N.Y.S.2d 18 (2008) (wife's share of the amount of appreciation that accrued in the husband's separate property that was renovated during the marriage was reduced); Berger v. Berger, 747 N.W.2d 336 (Mich. App. 2008) (husband's affair favored wife in finding on the child custody best interest factor of moral fitness, but did not justify 70/30% division of marital property in favor of wife); Heskett v. Heskett, 245 S.W.3d 222 (Ky App. 2008) (husband's dissipation of marital property entitled the wife to the return of the down payment she had made toward the purchase of the marital home).

Popowich v. Korman, 900 N.Y.S.2d 297 (2010) (brokerage account in wife's name, the right to repayment of loans, and a beach house and townhouse were all marital property); Armstrong v. Armstrong, 900 N.Y.S.2d 476 (2010) (funds received by the husband under a severance agreement were not treated as marital property); Cease v. Cease, 900 N.Y.S.2d 182 (2010) (property acquired during the marriage is presumed to be marital property, but the presumption is subject to rebuttal); Gilliam v. McGrady, 691 S.E.2d 797 (Va. 2010) (presumption that assets received or acquired during the marriage are marital property did not apply to the husband's trust fund tax debt that he incurred alone during the marriage); Lucas v. Lucas, 307 S.W.3d 712 (Mo. App. 2010) (order prohibiting husband from transferring, concealing, disposing of or diminishing marital property); Michel v. Michel, 692 S.E.2d 381 (Ga. 2010) (military retirement benefits treated as marital property even though the couple had been married less than ten years); Gregg v. Gregg, 31 So. 3d 1277 (Miss. App. 2010) (increase in value of retirement funds treated as marital property); Newman v. Patton, 692 S.E.2d 322 (Ga. 2010) (wife's stock options that vested prior to the marriage but were exercised during the marriage were the wife's separate property); Puskar v. Puskar, 29 So. 3d 1201 (Fla. App. 2010) (proceeds from sale of home, which was the wife's premarital asset, were not marital property); Potts v. Potts, 303 S.W.3d 177 (Mo. App. 2010) (husband's business was non-marital property); Olson v. Olson, 226 P.3d 751 (Utah App. 2010) (because the parties had commingled their personal and corporate finances, the corporate debt was treated as marital property); Curry v. Curry, 987 A.2d 233 (R.I. 2010) (a co-op was determined to be marital property); Larsen-Ball v. Ball, 301 S.W.3d 228 (Tenn. 2010) (a $17 million attorney fee acquired by the husband after the petition for divorce was filed but before the final divorce judgment was treated as marital property).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.08

Supp. to § 37.08 Defining Marital Property in Community Property States.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.08(b) Statutory Definitions. [Go To Main]

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-213 should read as follows:

A spouse's real and personal property that is owned by that spouse before marriage and that is acquired by that spouse during marriage by gift, devise or descent, and the increase, rents, issues and profits of that property, is the separate property of that spouse.

Change citation to:

Swink v. Fingado, 850 P.2d 978 (N.M. 1993) .

Footnote 104 should read as follows:

According to § 766.01(5), "Determination date" means the last to occur of (a) marriage, (b) 12:01 a.m. on the date that both spouses are domiciled in Wisconsin, and (c) 12:01 a.m. on January 1, 1986, which was the effective date of Wisconsin's marital property legislation.

§ 37.08(c) The Community Property Presumption. [Go To Main]

Add:

Sullivan v. Sullivan, 159 S.W.3d 529 (Mo. Ct. App. 2005) ("All property acquired by either spouse subsequent to the marriage and prior to a decree of legal separation or dissolution of marriage is presumed to be marital property regardless of whether title is held individually or by the spouses in some form of co-ownership such as joint tenancy, tenancy in common, tenancy by the entirety, and community property"); McGee v. McGee, 2005 La. App. LEXIS 678 (La. Ct. App. 2005) ("Except as provided in Article 2363, all obligations incurred by a spouse during the existence of a community property regime are presumed to be community obligations") La. Civ. Code Art. 2361).

The third case in footnote 107, Hinckley v. Hinckley, along with all of the citation and parenthetical material should be replaced as follows:

Talbot v. Talbot, 864 So. 2d 590 (La. 2003) (presumption that things in the possession of a spouse during the existence of the marriage are community property is rebuttable by either spouse upon a showing by a preponderance of the evidence of the separate nature of property brought into the community);

The case Madsen's Estate v. C.I.R, 650 P.2d 196 should have further information attached to it. The case in whole should read as follows:

Madsen's Estate v. C.I.R., 650 P.2d 196 (1982) overruled by Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Wadsworth, 689 P.2d 46 (1984) (clear and convincing proof);

Add:

Prague v. Prague, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3143 (Tex. App. 2005) ("Property possessed by either spouse on dissolution of the marriage is presumed to be community property" Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.003(a) (Vernon 1998). "To overcome this presumption, the spouse claiming certain property as separate property must clearly identify the property claimed to be separate"); In re Bivins, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3182 (Tex. App. 2005) (noting that property obtained during a marriage is presumptively community property, and that "a party who contends that property is separate property bears the burden of proving that contention by clear and convincing evidence"); Pace v. Pace, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3100 (Tex. App. 2005) ("The testimony of a spouse seeking to overcome the community property presumption need not be corroborated to meet the clear and convincing standard"); In re Marriage of Lamp, 2004 Wash. App. LEXIS 2337 (Wash. Ct. App., 2004) ("A rebuttable presumption arises that property acquired during the marriage with separate funds is a gift to the community. Absent clear and convincing proof to the contrary, separate funds used to acquire property in the names of both spouses are subject to this presumption"); In re Marriage of Elkin, 2004 Wash. App. LEXIS 2242 (Wash. Ct. App. 2004) ("This presumption may be rebutted by the spouse claiming a separate property interest. The spouse with the separate property interest must trace the assets to a separate property source. Id. Tracing must be proved by clear and convincing evidence").

Add:

LeMere v. LeMere, 2003 WI 67 (Wis. 2003) (stating that "the court shall presume that all property is to be divided equally between the parties, but may alter this distribution without regard to marital misconduct after considering the length of the marriage").

Footnote 110 should be amended to read as follows:

Beck v. Beck, 51 Cal. Rptr. 491 (1996) superseded by statute as stated in In re Marriage of Weaver, 273 Cal. Rptr. 696 (1990) .

Footnote 114 should be amended to read as follows:

Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 4800.1 repealed by Stats. 1992, c.162 (A.B.2650), § 3, operative Jan. 1 1994.

Add:

Awad v. Rasmussen-Awad, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3226 (Tex. App. 2004) ("A deed executed and delivered during the marriage with no recital that the conveyance was to the separate estate of the grantee is presumptively community property") (quoting Van Zandt v. Van Zandt, 451 S.W.2d 322, 326 (Tex. App. 1970) .

The last citation in footnote 124 should be amended to read as follows:

La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2342(A).

Footnote 125 should be amended to read as follows:

In re Marriage of Saslow, 710 P.2d 346, 353, n.9 (Cal. 1985) . The court notes that the presumption can be overcome only by clear and convincing evidence. Ragan v. C.I.R., 135 F.3d 329 (5th Cir. 1998) (personal earnings, while community property, are subject to the sole management and control of the person who earned them) (citing Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.102(a)(1)).

Add:

Conley v. Conley, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 281 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2005) ("When a spouse treats separate property in such a way as to give evidence of an intention that it become marital property, this action creates a rebuttable presumption of a gift to the marital estate"); Sloan v. Hitt, 594 S.E.2d 259 (N.C. Ct. App. 2004) ("[P]roperty acquired by gift from the other spouse during the course of the marriage shall be considered separate property only if such an intention is stated in the conveyance." N.C. Gen. Stat. § 50-20(b)(2) (2003)).

Add:

In re Marriage of Black, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 460 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) ("A spouse's use of his or her separate funds to purchase property in the names of both spouses, absent any other explanation, permits a presumption that the purchase or transaction was intended as a gift to the community") (citing In re Marriage of Hurd, 848 P.2d 185 (1993))
.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.09

Supp. to § 37.09 Autonomous Classifications: Agreements and Other Transactions Between Spouses.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.09(a) Contract Formalities. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Marriage of Starkman, 2005 Cal. App. LEXIS 788 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that married persons may transmute the separate property of either spouse into community property "by agreement or transfer").

Footnote 133 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202A; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1611; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.040 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.002; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(1). Hardy v. United States, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11790 (D. Nev. 1997) (ruling than an oral agreement for opting out of the community property regime may be upheld under the doctrine of equitable estoppel).

Footnote 134 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202A; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1611; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 11-04.015 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.002; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(1).

Footnote 135 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.201; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1613; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.060 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.004; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(5).

Add:

Kudrov v. Kudrov, 2005 NY Slip Op. 50257U (N.Y. Misc. 2005) ("[t]he agreement itself must be acknowledged in the manner required to entitle a deed to be recorded. Thus, there must be an oral acknowledgment before an authorized officer, and a written certificate of acknowledgment must be attached to the agreement").

Footnote 137 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.204; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1614; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.070 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.005; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(4).

The first part of footnote 138, which lays out different statutes, should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.202C; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1615; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.080 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.006(A); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(6).

The last case in footnote 138, and the parenthetical information, should be replaced by the following:

J.A.D. v. F.J.D., 978 S.W.2d 336 (Mo. 1998) (ruling that agreements must be conscionable and entered into "freely, fairly, knowingly, understanding, and in good faith and full disclosure").

§ 37.09(b) Substance of Contracts in General. [Go To Main]

Footnote 139 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.203; Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1612; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.050 (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.003; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(3).

Footnote 142 should be amended to read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25.203B (1992); Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 1612(B); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 123A.050(2) (1992); Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 4.003(B); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.58(1).

Change citation to:

Idaho Code § 32-916. See also ...

Footnote 146 should be amended to read as follows:

N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-2-2

Footnote 153 should be amended to read as follows:

La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2434.

§ 37.09(d) Interspousal Transactions in California. [Go To Main]

Footnote 165 should be amended to read as follows:

Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 850(c).

Add:

In re Marriage of Weaver, 127 Cal. App. 4th 858 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 852(a), provides that a transmutation of property is not valid unless made in writing by an express declaration).

The last citation in footnote 166, Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 853, should be amended as follows:

Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 853(a).

Footnote 176 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. art. 1750

Footnote 177 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. art. 2343.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.10

Supp. to § 37.10 The Complications of Time and Mixed Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.10(a) Inception of Title vs. Pro Rata Apportionment. [Go To Main]

Add:

Pace v. Pace, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3100 (Tex. App. 2005) ("The inception of title doctrine fixes the character of certain property interests when a party first acquires a right or claim to the property; title need not be vested at such time"); D.B. v. K.B., 2005 Tex. LEXIS 232 (Tex. 2005) (noting that the characterization of property as either "community" or "separate" is determined by the inception of title to the property which occurs when a party first has the right of claim to the property).

The first case in footnote 183, Hawkins v. Hawkins, should be deleted.

Add:

In re Marriage of Elkin, 2004 Wash. App. LEXIS 2242 (Wash. Ct. App. 2004) (the trial court properly determined that the family home and the condo in Maui were community property, because they were purchased during the Elkins' marriage. However, the court also concluded that the down payments on both the family home and condo were made by Mr. Elkin with separate property funds).

Footnote 187 should be amended to read as follows.

Kingsbery v. Kingsbery, 379 P.2d 893 (Ariz. 1963) .

Add:

Gill v. Gill, 895 So. 2d 807 (La. Ct. App. 2005) ("A person's separate estate is comprised, among other things, of property acquired by a spouse prior to the establishment of a community property regime and property acquired by a spouse with separate things or with separate and community things when the value of the community things is inconsequential in comparison with the value of the separate thing use").

§ 37.10(b) Commingled Property and Tracing in General. [Go To Main]

Add:

Simpson v. Simpson, 2005 Va. App. LEXIS 169 (Va. Ct. App. 2005) (affirming the trial court in finding that certain property was separate, based on the husband's sufficient tracing of sources and based on the wife's failure to show that marital funds were commingled); In re Marriage of Marzetta, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 694 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) ("The character of separate property continues through transfers if it can be traced and identified; the separate property is not rendered community property unless the separate property is commingled to the extent that it may not be distinguished or apportioned"); Measor v. Measor, 160 Ohio App. 3d 60 (Ohio Ct. App. 2005) ("In order to establish separate property when it is commingled with property of any other type, the source of funds must be traceable"); Richard v. Richard, 2004 Minn. App. LEXIS 1475 (Minn. Ct. App. 2004) ("In order to maintain its nonmarital character, nonmarital property must be kept separate from marital property or, if commingled, be readily traceable. Because the record establishes that the parties retained separate accounts during the marriage and did not commingle the accounts with marital property, tracing was not necessary").

Add:

VanWormer v. VanWormer, 2005 Va. Cir. LEXIS 15 (Va. Cir. Ct. 2005) (noting that any appreciation in the accounts as of the date is to be apportioned as marital and separate property in the same ratio).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.11

Supp. to § 37.11 Classification of Particular Assets.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.11(a) Classification When Spouses Are Separated. [Go To Main]

Add:

Stageberg v. Stageberg, 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 484 (Minn. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that property acquired during cohabitation prior to marriage is not marital property); Chase v. Chase, 109 P.3d 942 (Alaska 2005) ("Property acquired by a couple prior to marriage may be considered marital property when the property was acquired during premarital cohabitation. So long as the parties do marry, the trial court is free to consider the parties' entire relationship, including any period(s) of premarital cohabitation, in making its property division") (citing Murray v. Murray, 788 P.2d 41, 42 (Alaska 1990)) .

§ 37.11(b) Professions and Employment. [Go To Main]

§ 37.11(b)(1) Salary and Wages.

Add:

In re Marriage of Marzetta, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 694 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005), overruled in part by, In re Marriage of McCausland, 159 Wn.2d 607, 152 P.3d 1013, 2007 Wash. LEXIS 124 (noting that all salaries or wages earned by either spouse becomes community property, granting each partner an undivided one-half interest in such community property); Greene v. Greene, 2004 Ohio 3529 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004) ("Many appellate courts have likened sick leave benefits to deferred bonus payments or pension plan accumulations and, thus, categorized these benefits as marital property").

The first case in footnote 212 should be amended to read as follows:

See, e.g., Donn v. Kunz, 79 P2d 965 (Ariz. 1900) (earnings belong to community, not to either individual spouse) overruled in part by Mortensen v. Knight, 305 P.2d 463 (Ariz. 1956) ;

The last case in footnote 212 should be amended to read as follows:

See also Emard v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 153 F.3d 949, 955 (9th Cir. 1998) (because fringe benefit is part of employee's earnings, fringe benefit is community property, under California law, to the extent that it is earned through employment during marriage) abrogation recognized by Connecticut Gen. Life. Ins. Co v. Riner, 351 F. Supp. 2d 492 (W.D. Va. 2005) (stating that under ERISA, courts are divided as to whether insurance proceeds from a decedents work can properly be paid to the spouse as community property or must go directly to the beneficiaries' estate).

§ 37.11(b)(2) Retirement Benefits Generally.

Add:

In re Marriage of Schriner, 2005 Iowa Sup. LEXIS 58 (Iowa, 2005) ("As with pensions, a future interest is properly considered as a marital asset subject to distribution at the time of the divorce to the extent the future interest accrues during the marriage").

Add:

Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 2004 Ala. Civ. App. LEXIS 309 (Ala. Civ. App. 2004) (recognizing that retirement funds--vested or nonvested, matured or not matured--are marital property divisible upon divorce) (citing Johnson v. Johnson, 851 P.2d 4 (Wyo. 1993) and Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 20-2-114); Jordan v. Jordan, 2004 Va. App. LEXIS 285 (Va. Ct. App. 2004) ("The court may direct payment of a percentage of the marital share of any pension, profit-sharing or deferred compensation plan or retirement benefits, whether vested or nonvested, which constitutes marital property and whether payable in a lump sum or over a period of time") (citing Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.3).

Add:

Navas v. Navas, 43 Va. App. 484 (Va. Ct. App. 2004) ("The court may direct payment of a percentage of the marital share of any pension ... or retirement benefits, whether vested or nonvested, which constitutes marital property and whether payable in a lump sum or over a period of time") (Va. Code Ann. § 20-107.3(G)(1)).

Add:

McKnight v. McKnight, 2005 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 5257 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) ("The court has discretion and flexibility in selecting valuation dates for marital assets that are appropriate and fair under the circumstances").

Add:

Prague v. Prague, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3143 (Tex. App. 2005) (noting that when the value of such benefits is in issue, the benefits are to be apportioned to the spouses based upon the value of the community's interest at the time of divorce, not at the time of retirement) (citing Berry v. Berry, 647 S.W.2d 945, 947 (Tex. 1983)) .

Footnote 226 should amended to read as follows:

McCarty v. McCarty, 453 U.S. 210 (1981) superseded by statute as stated in Brown v. Robertson, 606 F. Supp. 494 (D.C. Tex. 1985) (noting that the McCarty decision was "overruled by Congressional action in the passage of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act," 10 U.S.C. § 1408 (1983); See infra § 37.11(b)(3) n.229.

§ 37.11(b)(3) Government Retirement Benefits.

Add:

In re Marriage of Birt, 208 Ariz. 546 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2004) ("The Arizona Supreme Court found that Congressional intent to wipe out the effects of McCarty on persons who had been divorced in the interim period provided express authorization for setting aside such decrees").

§ 37.11(b)(4) Disability Benefits.

Add:

Hoback v. Hoback, 2004 Tenn. App. LEXIS 205 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2004) (In Gragg, this Court held that disability benefits do not represent deferred compensation earned during the marriage, but "replace income which is lost before retirement," and therefore, were not marital property absent a showing "that a portion of a spouse's 'disability benefits' is actually representative of retirement benefits").

The case Hyde v. Hyde should be amended to read as follows:

Hyde v. Hyde, 697 So. 2d 1061, 1065 (La. App. 1997) (holding that disability funds were separate property where employer paid disability insurance premiums and husband would have no right to the funds absent the injury) declined to follow by Bordes v. Bordes, 730 So. 2d 443 (La. 1999) .

§ 37.11(b)(6) Worker's Compensation and Severance Pay.

The last case in footnote 244 should be amended to read as follows:

In re Marriage of Stachofsky, 90 Wn. App. 135, 951 P.2d 346 (Wash. App. Div. 3) (holding that stocks purchased during the marriage and those purchased after separation with community funds were community property; options that vested after separation but were awarded 50% for past employment and 50% for future contributions to company were only 50% community property).

§ 37.11(c)(2) Professional Education and Licenses.

Footnote 271 should be amended to read as follows:

La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 121. Cf. Barrow v. Barrow, 669 So. 2d 622 (La. App. 1996) (husband was not entitled to reimbursement for his financial contributions to wife's degree due to his substantial income during this period and lack of sacrifice toward degree).

Footnote 274 should be amended to read:

Mahoney v. Mahoney, 442 A.2d 1062 (N.J. App. Div. 1982) reversed by Mahoney v. Mahoney, 91 N.J. 488 (N.J. 1982) ; Milteer v. Milteer, 720 N.Y.S.2d 194 (2001) (the wife's nursing license was considered marital property); Hassanin v. Hassanin, 719 N.Y.S.2d 254 (2001) (the husband's undergraduate degree in engineering was considered marital property).

In the text, the line before the quotation based on note 274 should be amended to read:

At least one common law court has suggested a similar analysis, though this analysis was not accepted when it was reviewed by a higher court:

§ 37.11(c)(4) Income from Property and Investments.

Footnote 284 should read as follows:

"Community property consists of the property, other than separate property, acquired by either spouse during marriage." Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.002. Ridgell v. Ridgell, 960 S.W.2d 144 (Tex. App. 1997) .

Add:

Neibaur v. Neibaur, 125 P.3d 1072 (Idaho 2005) (the community was entitled to reimbursement from husband's corporation in divorce action).

§ 37.11(c)(5) Mixing Labor of One Estate with Capital of Another

Footnote 299 should read as follows:

In Texas, the court has discretion in dividing the community estate upon divorce, Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 7.002, but they do not have discretion to award separate real property of one spouse to the other. Eggemeyer v. Eggemeyer, 554 S.W.2d 137 (Tex. 1977) . In a similar case, a dissenter wrote that "the majority has confused discretion in division of property with discretion in classifying property ... a trial court, however, has no discretion in classifying property." Vallone v. Vallone, 644 S.W.2d 455, 460 (Sondock, J., dissenting).

§ 37.11(d) Personal Injury Awards [Go To Main]

Footnote 308 should read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.002. This section places everything other than separate property, which would include loss of earning capacity during marriage, into the category of community property.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.12

Supp. to § 37.12 Management and Control of Marital Property.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.12(a) Management of Separate Property [Go To Main]

The text before footnote 326 should be amended to read as follows:

Under the current Texas statute, "each spouse has the sole management, control, and disposition of that spouse's separate property."

Footnote 326 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.101.

The text before footnote 327 should be amended to read as follows:

Whether the family homestead is separate property of either spouse or community property, "neither spouse may sell, convey, or encumber the homestead without the joinder of the other spouse."

Footnote 327 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. § 5.001.

Footnote 328 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. § 5.002 (separate property) & 5.003 (community property).

Footnote 329 should read as follows:

Id. § 5.101 (separate property).

Footnote 330 should read as follows:

Id.

§ 37.12(b) Duties Between Spouses [Go To Main]

Footnote 336 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 2.501.

§ 37.12(c) Management of Community Property in Texas [Go To Main]

The statute based on footnote 353 in the text should be amended to read as follows:

During marriage, each spouse has the sole management, control, and disposition of the community property that the spouse would have owned if single, including:

personal earnings;

revenue from separate property;

recoveries for personal injuries; and the increase and mutations of, and revenue from, all property subject to the spouse's sole management, control, and disposition.

* * * * * *

(c) Except as provided in Subsection (a), community property is subject to the joint management, control, and disposition of spouses unless the spouses provide otherwise by power of attorney in writing or other agreement.

Footnote 353 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.102.

Footnote 355 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.102(b).

§ 37.12(e) Protection of Third Parties [Go To Main]

The statute quoted on pages 453-454 of the text should be amended to read as follows:

During marriage, property is presumed to be subject to the sole management, control, and disposition of a spouse if it is held in that spouse's name, as shown by muniment, contract, deposit of funds, or other evidence of ownership, or if it is in that spouse's possession and is not subject to such evidence of ownership.

A third person dealing with a spouse is entitled to rely, as against the other spouse or anyone claiming from that spouse, on that spouse's authority to deal with the property if:

the property is presumed to be subject to the sole management, control, and disposition of the spouse; and the person dealing with the spouse:

is not the part to a fraud on the other spouse or another person; and does not have actual or constructive notice of the spouse's lack of authority.

Footnote 389 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.104.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.13

Supp. to § 37.13 Marital Debt and Liability

[Go To Main]

Footnote 400 should be amended to read as follows:

See Idaho Code Ann. §§ 32-910 & 32-911; 35 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 1700-1; Wash Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.55.

§ 37.13(b) Missing [Go To Main]

§ 37.13(b)(2) Liability for Torts.

The last citation in footnote 428 should be amended to read as follows:

See Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201(a).

Footnote 434 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201(d). See also, Lawrence v. Hardy, 583 S.W.2d 795 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978) .

§ 37.13(b)(3) Liability for Premarital Debts.

Footnote 442 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201(b) & (c). Paragraph (b) provides that community property subject to a spouse's sole management and control is not subject to liabilities incurred by the other spouse before marriage; paragraph (c) provides that community property subject to a spouse's sole management and control is subject to liabilities incurred by him before or during marriage. For discussion of the Texas system of management of marital property, see supra 37 .12(c). During marriage, each spouse has sole management of property that the spouse would have owned if single, including personal earnings and revenue from separate property. Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.102.

§ 37.13(b)(4) Liability of Separate Property Generally.

Footnote 448 should be amended to read as follows:

Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 913(b)(1); Idaho Code § 32-911 (1983) (applicable by its terms only to wife's debts and property); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-10A; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201(a); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 26.16.200. See also Leasefirst v. Borelli, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114 (1993) , in which the earnings of a wife had been designated as separate property by a prenuptial agreement.

Footnote 452 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201.

Footnote 458 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.201(a).

§ 37.13(b)(5) Liability of Community Property in General.

Footnote 462 should be amended to read as follows:

Cal. Fam. Code Ann. § 911.

Footnote 466 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.102.

Footnote 467 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. § 3.201(b).

Footnote 469 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. § 3.201(c).

Footnote 470 should be amended to read as follows:

Id. § 3.201(b).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.14

Supp. to § 37.14 Disposition of Marital Property at Death in Community Property States.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.14(c) Inheritance in Community Property States. D.C. Code Ann. § 45-1404

Footnote 524 should be amended to read as follows:

Cal. Prob. Code Ann. § 6401(a); Idaho Code § 15-2-102; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 45-2-102; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 11-04.015. But see Succession of Richaud, 793 So. 2d 1252 (La. App. 2002) (the decedent's spouse does not have usufruct over the decedent's share of community property).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.15

Supp. to § 37.15 Division of Marital Property at Divorce in Community Property States.

[Go To Main]

The first citation in footnote 545 should be amended to read as follows:

Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 7.001(a).

Footnote 546 should be amended to read as follows:

Eggemeyer v. Eggemeyer, 554 S.W.2d 137 (1977) . When community property is not divided in the divorce proceeding, the two parties become owners as tenants in common. Subsequent actions to partition the property can be and have been brought at a later date. This has occurred with some frequency in disputes involving retirement benefits that had not matured at the time of the divorce. Until 1987, such a partition was necessarily an equal division of the property, unlike the equitable division possible at divorce. In 1987, the Texas legislature adopted a statutory partition for some situations in what is now §§ 9.201- 9 .204 of the Texas Family Code. Sections 9.203 and 9.204 provide that when the divorce court fails to divide community property, "the court [if later asked to partition the property] shall divide the property in a manner that the court deems just and right." This is the same standard applied in division upon divorce. Lawyers have been admonished in numerous decisions, however, to deal with all property of the spouses in the divorce proceeding, and the careful lawyer's clients should not generally be required to use these provisions of the Family Code. In In re Marriage of Moore, 890 S.W.2d 821 (Tex. App. 1994) , a residuary clause of the divorce decree stated that "any community property or its value not otherwise awarded by this Decree shall continue to be owned by the parties in equal undivided interests." The husband objected to this provision on the basis of the Family Code partition provisions, claiming that "any property not divided is not owned in equal interests under those statutory provisions." The court did not agree but rather concluded that the provisions of §§ 9.201-9.204 were not applicable, since all community property had been divided.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.16

Supp. to § 37.16 Multi-State Marital Property and Conflict of Laws.

[Go To Main]

§ 37.16(c) Quasi Community Property [Go To Main]

Footnote 580 should read as follows:

Estate of Thornton, 33 P.2d 1 (Cal. 1934) .

Footnote 584 should read as follows:

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 25-318; Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 7.002; See, e.g., In re Estate of Lamparella, 109 P.3d 959 (Ariz. App. 2005) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 37 Marital Property

4-37 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 37.17

Supp. to § 37.17 Bibliography

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles

Acker, Sarah C. "All's Fair in Love and Divorce: Why Divorce Attorney's Fees Should Constitute a Dissipation of Marital Assets in Order to Retain Equity in Marital Property Distributions," 15 Am. U. J. Gender Soc. Pol'y & L. 147 (2006).

Ellis, Benjamin M. "Protecting the Right to Marital Property: Ensuring A Full Equitable Distribution Award with Fraudulent Conveyance," 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1709 (March, 2009).

Featherston, Tom, and Allison Dickson. "Marital Property Liabilities," 73 Tex. B.J. 16 (January, 2010).

Flannery, Michael T. "Military Disability Election and the Distribution of Marital Property Upon Divorce," 56 Cath. U. L. Rev. 297 (Winter, 2007).

Musselman, James L. "Once Upon a Time in Bankruptcy Court: Sorting Out Liability of Marital Property for Marital Debt is No Fairy Tale," 41 Fam L.Q. 249 (Summer, 2007).

Pagel, Brian F., Jr. "After the Split: The Marital Property Act's Effects on Debt After Marriage," 80 Wis. Law. 8 (November, 2007).

Sheldon, John C. "Defining Marital Property," 25 Me. B.J. 48 (Winter, 2010).

Annotations

Delete last Annotation on page 513.

Add to Annotations

Annotation, Copyright, patent, or other intellectual property as marital property for purposes of alimony, support, or divorce settlement, 80 A.L.R.5th 487 .

Annotation, Default decree in divorce action as estoppel or res judicata with respect of marital property, 22 A.L.R.2d 724 .

Annotation, Divorce and separation: Determination of whether proceeds from personal injury settlement or recovery constitute marital property, 109 A.L.R.5th 1 .

Annotation, Divorce and separation: Workers' compensation benefits as marital property subject to distribution, 30 A.L.R. 5th 139 .

Annotation, Spouses's professional degree or license as marital property for purposes of alimony, support, or property settlement, 3 A.L.R.6th 447 .

LexisNexis®

32 of 189 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 38.syn

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.syn Synopsis to Chapter 38: PARTITION

§ 38.01 Introduction.

§ 38.02 Voluntary Partition.

§ 38.02(a) General Principles.

§ 38.02(b) Effect of Voluntary Partition.

§ 38.03 Involuntary Partition.

§ 38.03(a) Rules of Law.

§ 38.03(a)(1) Partition as a Matter of Right.

§ 38.03(a)(2) Exceptions to the Right.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i) Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(A) Written Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(B) Oral Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(C) Implied Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(ii) Testamentary and Trust Restrictions on the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(iii) Equitable Considerations Barring the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(3) Partition of More Than One Tract in a Single Action.

§ 38.03(a)(4) Partition of Property Subject to a Lease.

§ 38.03(b) Rules of Procedure.

§ 38.03(b)(1) Complaint or Prayer for Partition.

§ 38.03(b)(2) Parties -- Plaintiff.

§ 38.03(b)(3) Parties -- Defendant.

§ 38.03(b)(4) Intervention.

§ 38.04 Physical Partition or Partition in Kind.

§ 38.04(a) Partition in Kind.

§ 38.04(b) Owelty.

§ 38.04(c) Allocation of Shares.

§ 38.04(d) Incidental Effects of Physical Partition.

§ 38.05 Partition by Sale.

§ 38.05(a) Mechanics of Sale.

§ 38.05(b) Alternate Method -- Appraisal and Sale to One of the Co-Owners.

§ 38.05(c) Disposition of Proceeds of Sale.

§ 38.06 Final Accounting -- Improvements, Expenses, Rents and Profits.

§ 38.07 Costs of Litigation and Attorneys' Fees.

§ 38.08 Partition of Successive Interests.

§ 38.09 Partition of Condominiums or Time-Share Arrangements.

§ 38.09(a) Condominiums.

§ 38.09(b) Time-Shares.

Patricia Reyhan
Albany Law School
Union University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.01

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.01 Introduction.

[Go To Supp]

Co-ownership of land has many benefits, especially at its inception. Two or more parties who cannot afford to purchase or maintain desired realty alone may join forces to accomplish a shared purchase. One who desires to give or devise real property to the objects of his or her bounty can do so in a manner treating all equally, if that is the desire. For its benefits, however, co-ownership also carries considerable burdens. These burdens are most troublesome when cotenants cannot agree on the use, occupation, improvement or, ultimately, disposition of the shared realty. The judicial right of partition exists to allow cotenants to sever their relationship in a manner that neither unduly benefits nor harms any individual cotenant. n1 As the Maine Supreme Court once stated, the purpose of partition is:

> to eliminate by a simple and inexpensive procedure the evils and injustices which often are incident to the holding of land in common or joint tenancy. As the common owners have equal rights in the use and enjoyment of the estate, serious injury is likely to occur to the interest of all if they are not in accord in its management. To meet this difficulty [partition statutes provide] for a prompt division of their respective interests. n2

Put more positively, a partition action "enable[s] those who own property in common to sever their interests" in order to "take possession [of], enjoy and improve [their] separate estate[s]." n3

The law of partition falls into two general categories:

(1) voluntary partition and

(2) judicial or involuntary partition.

Within each of these categories are two subcategories:

(a) actual physical partition (partition in kind) and

(b) partition by sale.

Partition of real property is governed by statute in every state. n4

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition! w/30 co-own! w/15 land!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Frame v. Frame, 740 P.2d 655 (Mont. 1987) (the fundamental objective of a partition proceeding is to be fair and equitable and confer no unfair advantage upon any of the cotenants). Occasionally, partition serves this function even in the absence of a co-tenancy. County of Blue Earth v. Turtle, 593 N.W.2d 258 (Minn. App. 1999) presents the issue of partition rights where partition is sought of two adjoining, but separately owned, parcels of land on both of which stands a single indivisible structure. The county gained title to parcel 1 through a tax foreclosure proceeding by which the Turtles lost all of their interest in that parcel. They continued, however, to own parcel 2. Prior to the foreclosure proceeding, the Turtles had built a 12-unit apartment building across the two parcels. After the proceeding the county sought partition. Neither parcel 1 nor parcel 2 was held in co-tenancy. The court found the existence of the common building sufficient to support an equitable right to partition.

(n2)Footnote 2. Hoadley v. Wheelwright, 163 A. 790 (Me. 1933).

See also Little v. Penney, 517 P.2d 809 (Okla. App. 1973) (main purpose of partition is to avoid inconvenience of joint possession). For an example of the acrimony that can arise between cotenants, see Tillett v. Lippert, 909 P.2d 1158 (Mont. 1996).

(n3)Footnote 3. Rosenbaum v. Rosenbaum, 349 N.E.2d 73 (Ill. App. 1976), appeal after remand, 382 N.E.2d 270 (Ill. App. 1978), appeal dismissed, 442 U.S. 935, reh'g denied, 444 U.S. 888 (1979). See also Lichtenstein v. Lichtenstein Bldg. Corp., 442 S.W.2d 765 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969) (partition is a right much favored upon the ground that it not only secures peace but promotes industry and enterprise); Peters v. Robinson, 636 A.2d 926 (Del. 1994) (purpose of partition is to sever joint ownership so that each owner may enjoy property in severalty).

(n4)Footnote 4. Ala. Code § 35-6-20 et seq.; Alaska Stat. § 09.45.260 et seq.; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1211 et seq.; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-401 et seq.; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.010 et seq.; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-28-101 et seq.; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-495 et seq.; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 721 et seq.; D.C. Code Ann. § 16-2901 et seq.; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.011 et seq.; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-140 et seq.; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-1 et seq.; Idaho Code § 6-501 et seq.; Ill. Comp. Ann. Stat. ch. 735, § 5-17-101 et seq.; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-8; Iowa Code Ann. § 651.1 et seq.; Rules of Court Rule 270 et seq.; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 381.135 et seq.; La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 807; La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. art. 4601 et seq.; Md. Code Ann., Real Prop. § 14-107 et seq.; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6501 et seq.; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3301 et seq.; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.01 et seq.; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-1 et seq.; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.010 et seq.; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-101 et seq.; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-21.100; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.010 et seq.; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:1 et seq.; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-1 et seq.; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-1 et seq.; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts § 901 et seq.; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-1 et seq.; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-01 et seq.; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.01 et seq.; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1501.1 et seq.; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.205 et seq.; 42 Pa. Con. Stat. Ann. § 1552; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-1 et seq.; S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-10 et seq.; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-1 et seq.; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-101 et seq.; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 23.001 et seq.; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-1 et seq.; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5161 et seq.; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-81 et seq.; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.010 et seq.; W. Va. Code § 37-4-1 et seq.; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 842.01 et seq.; Wyo. Stat. § 1-32-101 et seq.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.02

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.02 Voluntary Partition.

[Go To Supp]

§ 38.02(a) General Principles.

The law governing voluntary partition is relatively straightforward. n5 One of the general incidents of land ownership is the power to convey, and the power of partition is one example of the general power to convey. The key requirement of a voluntary partition is that all of the co-owners of the co-owned estate must join in the partition of the parcel. n6 In the simplest of scenarios, A, B and C are co-owners of a parcel. All agree

(1) on the fact that they desire to sever their joint tenancy,

(2) on the proper division of the property into aliquot (proper individual) shares, and

(3) on the assignment of shares to individual owners.

A, B and C will then exchange mutual deeds n7 in which all join as grantors to one as grantee for each of the three parcels. Each of the previous co-owners becomes sole owner of one of the parcels. n8 A voluntary partition entered into by all co-owners will be legally effective unless there is some contractual defense to its recognition, such as fraud or unconscionability, or if the partition has as its primary purpose the defrauding of third parties. n9

An important requirement is that there must be agreement not only as to the desirability of the severance of the common ownership but also on the precise nature of it. n10 Discord among the co-owners about allocation of the divided shares may prevent voluntary partition. This discord may be eliminated in practice without the necessity of court action by allowing a neutral third party to allocate the shares. n11 Where the physical description of the shares has resulted in shares of greater or lesser value, the parties may agree on a monetary value reflecting the difference to be paid by a recipient of a greater share to a recipient of a smaller share. n12

Another alternative, where the precise mechanics of a physical partition are a subject of discord among co-owners, is sale of the entire parcel. n13 This alternative may also be attractive to co-owners who are not in discord but who agree that the value of the parcel as a whole exceeds the sum of the values of its parts. Whatever the motivation for a partition by sale, it is essential in voluntary partitions that all of the co-owners agree to the sale. Once the sale is completed the former co-owners divide the proceeds according to their respective shares.

The above discussion assumes a written conveyance by the co-owners either to each other or to a third party. Serious legal problems arise when the co-owners reach a parol agreement which is not followed by written conveyances and then go into separate possession of their agreed-upon parcels. Before adoption of the Statute of Frauds, the oral agreement combined with the individual possession sufficed to sever the joint tenancy. The Statute of Frauds clouded the issue considerably, inasmuch as it requires a writing to convey an interest in land. Relatively recent cases addressing the issue, recognizing that partition is an equitable remedy, have on the basis of estoppel given effect to parol partitions followed by separate possession. n14 In essence, courts in these cases apply a general exception to the Statute of Frauds based upon part performance of an oral contract. n15

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: voluntary w/5 partition w/30 co-own! w/15 land!

§ 38.02(b) Effect of Voluntary Partition.

While there is no question of the right of co-owners to partition voluntarily their co-owned land, the precise legal effect of their actions has caused troublesome questions when raised in certain post-partition contexts. These questions are raised by the traditional judicial view that a voluntary partition simply severs the unity of possession and does not operate to convey title. n16 While this view of the effect of partition is understandable in the context of parol partitions, it may also be applied where the partition was accomplished by deed. n17 Even where parties use full warranty deeds to effect the conveyance, the same rule is applied. n18

The primary context in which this issue has arisen is in a voluntary partition, if a co-owner and spouse obtain their portions of the property as tenants by the entirety where the co-owner but not the spouse previously held the co-owned interest. The traditional rule described above results in the conclusion that the spouse takes nothing. n19 The same result is reached where the conveyance is to the co-owner and the co-owner's children. n20

A few courts have indicated a willingness to recognize a new title where the intent of the parties to create one is manifestly clear. n21 Of course, even where partition is ineffective in the creation of a new title in a non-co-owner, the co-owner who does receive separate ownership of the parcel may accomplish the desired result by a second conveyance as sole grantor to the grantees of choice.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: voluntary w/5 partition w/30 co-own! w/15 land! w/15 effect!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 5. Douglas v. Douglas, 280 So. 2d 146 (Ala. App. 1973) (co-owners may partition acreage in any fashion they desire); Rowland v. McAlester Fuel Co., 201 S.W.2d 742 (Ark. 1947) (a voluntary partition is a partition made through the mutual consent of co-owners); Harmon v. Harmon, 508 So. 2d 616 (La. App. 1987), writ denied, 513 So. 2d 1210 (La. 1987) (co-owners may agree to voluntary and binding partition).

(n2)Footnote 6. Moore v. Hill, 79 A.2d 840 (N.H. 1951) (voluntary partition by deed executed by fewer than all tenants was invalid unless none of the owners of the conveyed land was required to give the non-participating cotenant his share); State v. Kirkpatrick, 299 S.W.2d 394 (Tex. Civ. App. 1957) (all cotenants must be party to voluntary partition); Dierschke v. Central Nat'l Branch of First Nat'l Bank, 876 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. App. 1994).

(n3)Footnote 7. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 391 N.Y.S.2d 502 (1976) (partition may be accomplished by written instrument in deed form or otherwise); Houston Oil Co. of Tex. v. Kirkindall, 145 S.W.2d 1074 (Tex. 1941) (co-owners may partition through deed or other written instrument).

(n4)Footnote 8. Prothro v. Holder, 479 S.W.2d 248 (Ark. 1972) (voluntary partition is effected by mutual releases or conveyances to each individual owner by co-owners); Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990) (partition of lands may be accomplished voluntarily by co-tenants); Weever v. Weever, 579 P.2d 216 (Okla. App. 1978) (partition agreement is not a conveyance but a remedial measure to relieve multiple undivided landowners of potential inconveniences and incompatibilities); Stradt v. First United Methodist Church of Huntington, 567 S.W.2d 810 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), rev'd, 573 S.W.2d 186 (Tex. 1978) (common owners may agree to partition co-owned land so that each receives a separate share in severalty).

(n5)Footnote 9. Young v. Bozeman, 190 S.E.2d 523 (Ga. 1972) (agreements to partition will generally be upheld in absence of injury to third persons); Carter Oil Co. v. McQuigg, 112 F.2d 275 (Ill. 1940) (partition will be set aside if purpose was to defraud innocent third parties such as those with mortgages or leases on undivided interest).

(n6)Footnote 10. Swindle v. Curry, 129 S.E.2d 144 (Ga. 1962) (a partition agreement may be set aside for indefiniteness); Giardina v. Giardina, 158 So. 615 (La. 1935) (agreement held unenforceable as indefinite where parties agreed not to partition until real estate values rose).

(n7)Footnote 11. Hemphill v. Hemphill, 7 S.E.2d 762 (Ga. App. 1940) (partition may be made by arbitrators selected by co-owners); Glovier v. Dingus, 4 S.E.2d 551 (Va. 1939) (partition may be made by commissioners selected by co-owners).

(n8)Footnote 12. See general discussion of owelty infra at nn.124-128. Sayers v. Pyland, 161 S.W.2d 769 (Tex. 1942) (agreement to pay owelty is a lien which may be implied even if not express).

(n9)Footnote 13. Krokroskia v. Martin, 61 So. 2d 630 (La. App. 1952) (private partitions in form of sale are valid).

(n10)Footnote 14. Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, 115 So. 21 (Ala. 1927) (parol agreement binding if accompanied by exclusive possession); Herrman v. Golden, 418 N.E.2d 187 (Ill. App. 1981) (oral partition valid if it exists, is followed by separate possession, is reasonably certain as to its subject matter, is based on valuable consideration and is fair); Howard v. Carmichael, 35 S.W.2d 852 (Ky. 1931) (where co-owners take individual possession of separate parts and hold individually for a number of years, partition is presumed); Cave v. Wells, 5 S.W.2d 636 (Mo. 1928) (parol partition and exclusive possession held valid); Hughes v. Kay, 242 P.2d 788 (Or. 1952) (parol partition with exclusive possession does not violate Statute of Frauds); Martin v. Taylor, 521 S.W.2d 581 (Tenn. 1975) (parol partition followed by exclusive possession is binding and enforceable); Reynolds v. Mangrum, 250 S.W.2d 283 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952) (parol partition with possession is valid); Allen v. Allen, 166 P. 1169 (Utah 1917) (parol partition plus separate possession is valid).

(n11)Footnote 15. Johnson v. Long, 199 A. 459 (Md. 1938) (parol partition with possession is part performance which takes the agreement out of the Statute of Frauds).

(n12)Footnote 16. Prothro v. Holder, 479 S.W.2d 248 (Ark. 1972) (exchange of partition deeds without any other consideration does not convey title); Harvey v. Moran's Adm'r, 245 S.W.2d 452 (Ky. 1952) (partition does not transfer title); Thurmon v. Hogg, 72 So. 2d 500 (La. 1954) (partition does not transfer title); Holt v. Holt, 202 S.W.2d 650 (Tenn. 1947) (partition does not transfer title, but merely severs unity of possession); Foster v. Foster, 151 S.E. 157 (Va. 1930) (partition creates no new title). Dierschke v. Central Nat'l Branch of First Nat'l Bank, 876 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. App. 1994).

(n13)Footnote 17. Brown v. Smith, 405 S.W.2d 249 (Ark. 1966) (partition deed does not create a title but merely severs unity of possession); Combs v. Combs, 160 S.E.2d 308 (N.C. 1968) (partition deed does not convey title).

(n14)Footnote 18. Keith v. Keith, 599 S.W.2d 214 (Mo. App. 1980); Combs v. Combs, 160 S.E. 308 (N.C. 1968). Keith v. Keith was superseded by statute as stated in Plant v. Plant 825 S.W.2d 674 (Mo. App. 1992).

(n15)Footnote 19. Powell v. Powell, 183 S.W. 625 (Mo. 1916) (no tenancy by the entirety was created in deed to co-owner and her non-co-owner spouse); Harris v. Ashley, 248 S.E.2d 393 (N.C. 1978) (partition severs unity of possession; it does not create a new tenancy by the entirety); Johnson v. Beard, 332 S.W.2d 208 (Tenn. 1960) (partition severs unity of possession; it does not create a new tenancy by the entirety). Powell v. Powell was superseded by statute as stated in Stephens v. Stephens 842 S.W.2d 909 (Mo. App. 1992).

(n16)Footnote 20. Edwards v. Batts, 97 S.E.2d 101 (N.C. 1957) (children who were not co-owners could not take title through partition).

(n17)Footnote 21. Douglas v. Douglas, 280 So. 2d 146, cert. denied, 280 So. 2d 149 (Ala. 1973); Brown v. Brown, 297 S.E.2d 619 (N.C. App. 1982), rev. den., 301 S.E.2d 388 (N.C. 1983).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.03

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.03 Involuntary Partition.

[Go To Supp]

§ 38.03(a) Rules of Law.

§ 38.03(a)(1) Partition as a Matter of Right.

Unless exceptional circumstances exist, n22 any tenant in common or joint tenant has a right to seek a judicial partition of land in which the common interest is held. n23 This right exists even where every other co-owner of the land objects to the partition. Objections to this right on constitutional grounds have not succeeded. n24

Although the opposite was once the case, a cotenant is now not required to be in actual possession of the land in order to seek partition. n25 But, at least as to those claiming a present, as opposed to future, n26 interest, a right to possession is essential. n27 As a result, courts have held that a cotenant who is ousted from the co-owned property must succeed in an action to recover possession as a prerequisite to a suit for partition. Similarly, where, as part of a divorce decree, an ex-spouse has been given exclusive possession of realty held in tenancy in common with the former spouse, the ex-spouse who is out of possession may not sue for partition. n28 An allegation of ownership will normally be held to imply a right of possession so parties are not required to allege separately their possessory rights. n29

The motive of the plaintiff in seeking partition is irrelevant even in equity. n30 A court in equity may, however, deny partition where the interests of the other parties would be irreparably harmed. n31 Equity courts rarely find such irreparable harm. Arguments that partition will displace children or spouses have failed. n32 The following illustrates the kind of situation where the standard may be met. A owns parcel 1, B owns parcel 2 and A, B and C are co-owners of parcel 3. C brings an action for partition of parcel 3. Where parcel 3 is the only reasonable means of access to the other two parcels and partition cannot be made without denying or substantially restricting that access, partition may be denied. n33

At one time, courts followed the rule that if there were any challenge to the existence or extent of a party's title or interest in the property sought to be partitioned, a court hearing the partition petition could not or should not evaluate or decide the title or interest question. n34 Thus, once the defendant challenged plaintiff's title, the partition proceeding was dismissed or held in abeyance until the title issues could be resolved in a separate action. Only a small majority of states continue to adhere to this limiting view of the court's power in a partition proceeding. n35 The majority of states have changed this rule and now allow a court hearing a partition action to adjudge challenged claims and interests, decide all questions of title and remove clouds on title where appropriate. n36 As one court put it, "[i]f one owner by merely filing a plea setting up want of title in the petitioner could force him to establish his title in a suit at law before proceeding with his petition for partition, the salutary purpose of [the statutory right of partition] would be thwarted." n37

If one party challenges the title or interest of another, the timing of the resolution of the challenge depends upon whether the partition is to be made in kind or through sale. n38 If the land is to be actually divided among those with a rightful claim to it, issues of title and interest often must be resolved before the partition is made, simply because the number and size of the shares must be known in advance. Where, however, both the number and size of the shares are known and the title dispute involves only identification of the rightful claimant to one of the shares, the court may proceed with the physical partition of the land, allot the undisputed shares and then resolve title issues involving the disputed share.

Where partition is to be by sale, statutes in many states require that title issues be resolved in advance of the sale. n39 In other states the court is required to resolve title issues only before full distribution of the proceeds of the sale. n40

In one instance a title dispute must be decided before either kind of partition. Because a court may not order a partition if none of the interested parties seek it, n41 if there is a single petitioner and the title of that person is challenged the court must determine that person's title initially in order to determine the right to sue for partition:

> The person wishing the partition brings a civil action in which he claims the right to a partition. If another party in the action claims that the person bringing the action does not have title the question of title can be tried as a claim in the action. If it is found that the person bringing the action has no title to the premises the case will be terminated at that point. If, on the other hand, it is found that he has a sufficient title to maintain a claim for partition he will proceed to do so in the same action. n42

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: involuntary or right! w/5 partition w/15 land!

§ 38.03(a)(2) Exceptions to the Right.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i) Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

The right to partition which is held by cotenants may be voluntarily relinquished by them through agreements to waive the right. In most cases these are written agreements, and some courts have held that the Statute of Frauds requires that they be. A few courts, however, have enforced oral agreements under principles applicable to the general Statute of Frauds exceptions based on past performance. In occasional cases, courts have shown a willingness to recognize implied agreements by cotenants to waive partition rights based upon a course of conduct by the cotenants or upon evidence that the purpose of the co-tenancy would be undermined by recognition of a unilateral right to partition.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: agreement! w/15 waiv! w/5 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(A) Written Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

Despite some objections that written agreements waiving the right to partition interfere with the alienability of land, virtually every court that has addressed the issue has recognized a general power of co-tenants to bind themselves to agreements in writing waiving the right of partition. n43 The burden of proof is on the party alleging the agreement. n44 Because such agreements do function to restrict the alienability of land, most courts require that such agreements not be unreasonable or extend for an indefinite period of time. n45 Agreements which are binding only during the lives of the cotenants are held to satisfy this standard. n46 Where agreements are silent as to duration, most courts will not imply a reasonable duration n47 unless the agreement clearly indicates a basis for such implication.

The majority of courts have held that a valid agreement by cotenants waiving the right to partition, where the agreement purports to do so, will be held binding on the successors in interest to the contracting cotenant. n48 It is essential, however, that the mutual agreement indeed purport to bind successors. n49 A similar bar to the exercise of a right to partition arises not only when the cotenants contract with each other to waive the right but when the instrument through which a cotenant took the interest prohibits exercise of the right. n50

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: writ w/2 agreement! w/15 waiv! w/5 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(B) Oral Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

Oral agreements not to partition have raised more troublesome questions for courts asked to enforce them. The major obstacle to enforcement of such agreements has been the Statute of Frauds. n51

Increasingly, courts have overcome the obstacle and enforced oral agreements by employing general exceptions to the operation of the statute. Thus, the statute has not been a bar where the oral agreement has been substantially performed, so that the refusal to enforce it would essentially amount to fraud. n52

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: oral w/2 agreement! w/15 waiv! w/5 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(C) Implied Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

Agreements not to seek a partition have been implied by courts where the purpose of the cotenants in holding the property in cotenancy would be defeated by a partition. n53 "It is settled law that if it appears the tenants in common of a tract of land have formulated plans and entered into agreements in reference to the management of the common property and the plans and agreement are of such a character that to grant partition would be to destroy the mutual agreement of the parties, then an agreement not to partition will be implied." n54 It is not sufficient that the parties have merely contemplated they would not partition the property. n55 Rather, there must be affirmative evidence from writings or conduct that this was the intention of the parties.

A common situation where a court appears willing to imply an agreement waiving a partition right is if formerly married parties agree that one can remain in the marital home in exchange for a forbearance in demanding support from the other. This arises most often when the wife is allowed to remain in the home and the husband agrees to pay costs of maintaining the home and, as a result, the wife does not seek alimony. Courts uniformly have rejected the husband's later request for partition, reasoning that the other agreements imply an agreement by the husband to waive the right to partition. n56 An agreement not to exercise the right of partition has also been implied where cotenants agreed that any and all decisions regarding the property were to be made by majority decision of the cotenants. n57

In a number of cases, defendants seeking to bar a partition have argued that the cotenants impliedly agreed not to partition when they took title as joint tenants with right of survivorship, the survivorship language suggesting the cotenants were to remain in that relationship until there was a single survivor. Courts uniformly reject this argument.

n58

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: implied w/2 agreement! w/15 waiv! w/5 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(2)(ii) Testamentary and Trust Restrictions on the Right to Partition.

Courts will uphold a testamentary restriction on the right of partition where that restriction is limited in its duration. n59 Partition will be barred even if the restriction does not apply to plaintiff's interest if plaintiff's interest is derived from a common instrument restricting the partition right of another cotenant. For example, in Rodkey v. Rees, n60 partition was denied because a cotenant of the plaintiff was a testamentary trustee barred by the terms of the trust from selling, transferring or disposing of the trust. The court stated the rule that where the cotenancy interests derived from the decedent, partition is not allowed "if to do so contravenes a condition or restriction imposed on the estate by will or deed of the one through whom the person seeking partition claims." n61

Partition will not be granted if to do so would violate the terms of a trust or defeat the trust's purposes. n62 Some courts hold that property held in an active trust may not be partitioned unless expressly authorized by the trust. n63 The fact that a co-ownership interest in land is held in trust will never bar other cotenants, whose interests are not in trust, from seeking partition. n64

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: testament! or trust w/5 restrict! w/30 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(2)(iii) Equitable Considerations Barring the Right to Partition.

The rule that partition is a matter of right is qualified by the equitable principle that that right will not be recognized where to order partition will work a fraud, hardship or undue oppression on a party resisting the partition. n65 This exception is applied only in rare circumstances. n66

Hassell v. Workman n67 exemplifies the rare case where a court refused partition on the ground that to allow it would work an injustice on one of the cotenants. Plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common with equal shares of adjoining lots on which a warehouse had been built. Defendant managed the property, which was worth less than $10,000 at the time of purchase. Plaintiff sought partition by sale. Defendant resisted. Evidence at trial indicated that plaintiff was fully satisfied with defendant's management of the property; that the premises were subject to a lease generating $620 per month; that plaintiff's interest individually was likely to bring more money if sold than as a share of proceeds of a public auction of the premises; that defendant, while unable to purchase plaintiff's share, had offered to assist plaintiff in selling it to a third party; that defendant did not desire to sell the defendant's interest because the defendant did not know of any other investment that would bring so great a return; and that the property sought to be partitioned by sale was, at the time of trial, worth between $60,000 and $65,000, which would subject both plaintiff and defendant to considerable tax liability. On these facts, the trial court concluded that a partition at that time would work a hardship and be an "instrument of oppression" upon the defendant. n68 The Oklahoma Supreme Court affirmed.

Another of the rare cases in which partition is refused solely on the ground that to order it would work an injustice unacceptable to the court is Condrey v. Condrey. n69 Two elderly parents in poor health and unable to support themselves conveyed their residence and property to themselves and their son and daughter-in-law as joint tenants with right of survivorship. The reason for the conveyance was protection of the parties. The parents desired to retain their home but needed the son and daughter-in-law to live on the property to maintain and improve it. The son and daughter-in-law wanted assurance that the labor and money they expended would accrue to them on the parents' death rather than being shared with the other children of the parents. In denying the son and daughter-in-law's prayer for partition the court noted, "[i]t is not conceivable under these facts that the parents ... intended by said arrangement to put themselves in position to be forced from their home or surrender their right to live there... . Where the effect of granting partition would be to reach a result such as would exist in this case we believe that a court of equity has the right in its discretion to refuse to grant it... ." n70

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: equit! w/30 right! w/5 partition

§ 38.03(a)(3) Partition of More Than One Tract in a Single Action.

Where co-owners hold separate tracts in common, it is well-established that these tracts may be partitioned in a single action. n71 It is not necessary that each co-owner have the same share in each tract. n72

As a general rule, multiple tracts cannot be included in one partition action if a co-owner of one tract does not have a co-ownership interest in another included tract. An exception exists where the tracts in question once had co-owners in common. For example, if A, B, and C were, at one time, co-owners of parcels 1 and 2, and C sold C's interest in parcel 2 to D, A or B could bring a single action to partition parcels 1 and 2, making both C and D parties.

The above paragraphs address the permissiveness of joining multiple co-owned tracts in a single action. The general rule is that multiple tracts should be included in a single proceeding where the co-ownership of the multiple tracts was created in a single instrument, such as a will or through the legal effect of a single event, such as death intestate. n73

When multiple tracts, co-owned by the same persons, are joined in a single partition proceeding, the court is to consider the tracts together in considering whether a physical partition can be fairly and equitably made. n74 The fact that one tract cannot be divided in kind will not justify a sale if it is possible to divide the multiple tracts among the multiple owners equitably.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/15 multiple w/2 tracts

§ 38.03(a)(4) Partition of Property Subject to a Lease.

Partition is complicated somewhat if the property to be partitioned is subject to a lease. The basic rule in such a case is that neither a partition in kind nor a partition sale will affect the lessee's possessory rights. n75 If the lease was executed by all co-owners, any partition will be subject to the lease. n76 A partition in kind will be delayed in possessory effect until the lease is terminated. A partition by sale could be consummated but the purchaser would take subject to the lease. n77

A lease executed by fewer than all the co-owners does not bar a partition action. n78 Where the lease is executed by one co-owner only and a physical partition is ordered, the lease will normally continue on the property allotted to the lessor. n79 A partition sale would cause greater problems but the appropriate answer seems to be that the lessee and the purchaser would be tenants in common for the remainder of the lease.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/15 property w/5 subject w/2 lease!

§ 38.03(b) Rules of Procedure.

§ 38.03(b)(1) Complaint or Prayer for Partition.

Many states define by statute those matters that must be specifically set out in the complaint or petition for partition. The following seem to be consistently required:

(1) a sufficient description of the property to be partitioned;

(2) the names and shares of each owner, known and unknown; and

(3) a prayer for division or, if sale is sought, an averment that the standard for sale has been met. n80

Some statutes require in addition a statement of the estimated value of the land. n81 Others require a statement of the "origin, nature and extent" of the respective shares. n82 Many states require that the fact of unknown owners be specifically alleged in the complaint. n83 Where there are unknown owners, notice must be given to such owners through publication. n84 In some states, the court is statutorily empowered to appoint counsel or a guardian to represent unknown owners. n85

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: complaint! or prayer! w/15 partition!

§ 38.03(b)(2) Parties -- Plaintiff.

By either statute or case law, every state requires that a party plaintiff be an "interested" party. An "interested" party is a tenant in common or joint tenant, or a party who claims a recognized right on behalf of a tenant in common or joint tenant. n86 In general, tenants by the entirety cannot seek partition without converting that interest to a tenancy in common or joint tenancy. n87 Most community property states similarly do not allow a unilateral action for partition. n88 Courts that have addressed the issue have held that cotenant lessees may partition a leasehold as long as the lessor's rights are not thereby affected. n89 A judgment creditor of a cotenant does not have such an interest as to give the judgment creditor a right to partition. n90

Devisees of real property generally are not permitted to bring an action for partition if partition is directly contrary to the terms of a will through which they took their interest. n91 Additionally, no property held wholly in an estate may be partitioned until the estate is ready for distribution. n92 But if a cotenant's interest is not part of an estate that includes other cotenants' interests, an action may be brought by the former. n93 A trustee in bankruptcy of a cotenant may bring an action for partition where authorized by the bankruptcy court. n94

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: plaintiff! w/15 interested w/1 part! w/30 partition!

§ 38.03(b)(3) Parties -- Defendant.

All states require that the plaintiff name as defendants all others who claim "interests" in the same property. Minimally, "interested" persons include all others who are co-owners of the subject property. Some states require that each of such defendants set forth in the answer the origin, nature and extent of the defendant's interest. n95

Courts have held that any purchaser under contract to buy the interest of a cotenant should be made a party. n96

States vary on whether persons who hold liens on the property sought to be partitioned must be made parties. Some differentiate between holders of liens against the entire property and holders of liens on less than the entire property. n97 Others require that all lienholders of record be made parties, whether the lien is on all or part of the subject property. n98 Still others prohibit making any person who does not hold legal title a party. n99 Such states usually provide for notice to others having a claim or encumbrance against the property, such as mortgagees, lienholders and attaching creditors and allow these persons to intervene to protect or establish their rights. n100 Other states allow but do not require persons holding liens to be made parties. n101

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: defendant! w/15 interested w/1 part! w/30 partition

§ 38.03(b)(4) Intervention.

Most states provide a right of intervention for an "interested" person who has not been made a party. n102 The definitions of "interested person" for purposes of intervention are similar to definitions of persons who should be made party-defendants, n103 except in those rare states that provide for intervention by persons who by statute cannot be made defendants. n104 It has been held that a person who holds a simple money judgment against one or more co-owners cannot intervene in a partition action. n105

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: interven! w/30 interested w/1 person w/50 partition!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 22. See discussion infra at § 38.03(a)(2).

(n2)Footnote 23. Ragland v. Walker, 387 So. 2d 184 (Ala. 1980), appeal after remand, 411 So. 2d 106 (Ala. 1982); Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-404. Arkansas' rule is unique. It provides that a stranger who purchases a co-ownership interest in real property of ten acres or more may not sue for partition for three years after the date of purchase unless the purchaser individually or collectively with other plaintiffs owns 50% of the property to be partitioned. Farmer v. Farmer, 526 A.2d 1365 (D.C. App. 1987); Hazelwood v. Hazelwood, 345 So. 2d 819 (Fla. App. 1977); Ellis v. Jenkins, 295 S.E.2d 736 (Ga. 1982); Heldt v. Heldt, 193 N.E.2d 7 (Ill. 2d 1963); Ind. Code Ann. § 32-4-5-1; La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 807; Baltimore Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bowers, 157 A.2d 610 (Md. 1960); Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.01; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.030; Martinez v. Martinez, 650 P.2d 819 (N.M. 1982); Yeshiva Univ. v. Edelman, 176 N.Y.S.2d 534, aff'd, 181 N.Y.S.2d 180 (1958); First Trust Co. of N.D. v. Mast, 385 N.W.2d 104 (N.D. 1986); Wilson v. Hartman, 545 P.2d 742 (Okla. 1976); Ware v. Ware, 809 S.W.2d 569 (Tex. App. 1991); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5161; Prario v. Novo, 645 N.Y.S.2d 269 (1996) (tenancy by the entirety cannot be divided absent consent of both spouses or divorce); Dierschke v. Central Nat'l Branch of First Nat'l Bank, 876 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. App. 1994). But see Dunn v. Patton, 718 N.E.2d 264 (Ill. App. 1999) (mineral rights are subject to partition only if held in co-tenancy and severed from the surface estate; where, as here, the party seeking partition owned the mineral rights and the party resisting partition had mineral and surface rights, partition is not available); Glover v. Ware, 510 S.E.2d 895 (Ga. App. 1999) (where a sheriff's sale of a debtor's co-owned interest occurs, this sale does not itself constitute a partition but is rather an involuntary conveyance; purchaser in sheriff's sale becomes co-tenant and may seek partition).

(n3)Footnote 24. McNeely v. Bone, 698 S.W.2d 512 (Ark. 1985) (upheld against 5th and 14th Amendment challenges); Kluthe v. Hammerquist, 188 N.W. 749 (S.D. 1922) (upheld against state constitutional law challenge); Coolidge v. Coolidge, 287 A.2d 566 (Vt. 1971) (upheld against state constitutional law challenge); Hegewald v. Neal, 626 P.2d 535 (Wash. App. 1981) (partition is not a "taking" within meaning of Due Process Clause); Leonardo v.

Leonardo, 746 N.Y.S.2d 90 (2002) (withdrawal provision of partnership agreement required partition of partners' interests in real property).

(n4)Footnote 25. Harrington v. Harrington, 568 A.2d 468, cert. denied, 573 A.2d 315 (Conn. App. 1990); Dugan v. Dugan, 287 N.Y.S. 230 (1936).

(n5)Footnote 26. See discussion infra at § 38.08.

(n6)Footnote 27. Melcher v. Melcher, 263 A.2d 91 (Conn. Supp. 1970); Wallace v. Wallace, 396 S.E.2d 208 (Ga. 1990); Bronson v. Bronson, 448 N.E.2d 1231 (Ind. App. 1983); Lima v. Lima, 570 N.E.2d 158 (Mass. App. 1991); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-3; Brelsford v. Scheltz, 564 S.W.2d 404 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978); Stillings v. Stillings, 280 S.E.2d 689 (W. Va. 1981); Bryan v. Looker, 640 N.E.2d 590 (Ohio App. 1994) (plaintiff must have title and right of possession); Treiber v. Citizens State Bank, 598 N.W.2d 96 (N.D. 1999) (where land was held in fee simple as to an undivided two-thirds of the property and the holder of that share held a life estate only in the remaining third, partition was not permitted under the rule that partition is available only when there are two or more co-tenants with the possessory interest; here plaintiff was sole owner of the possessory interest).

(n7)Footnote 28. Cannon v. Morris, 407 So. 2d 372 (Fla. App. 1981) (ultimately holding that under the decree the remarriage of the spouse in possession terminated the exclusiveness of that possession); Bronson v. Bronson, 448 N.E.2d 1231 (Ind. App. 1983); Thurmond v. Thurmond, 547 N.Y.S.2d 385 (1989); Moore v. Baker, 24 S.E.2d 749 (N.C. 1943). Estate of Goodwin v. Goodwin, 721 N.E.2d 886 (Ind. App. 1999); Ayers v. Ayers, 711 N.Y.S.2d 426 (2000).

(n8)Footnote 29. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 60.1003 (a)(4).

(n9)Footnote 30. Schmit v. Klumpyan, 663 N.W.2d 331 (Wis. App. 2003) (although sale of the property contrary to the wishes of one co-owner was the motivation for the second co-owner's partition action, the second co-owner did not improperly initiate the partition action); Futura Realty, Inc. v. Wigdor, 421 So. 2d 536 (Fla. App. 1982); Rosenbaum v. Rosenbaum, 349 N.E.2d 73 (Ill. App. 3d 1976), appeal after remand, 382 N.E.2d 270 (Ill. Dec. 1978), appeal dismissed, 442 U.S. 935, reh'g denied, 444 U.S. 888 (1979).

(n10)Footnote 31. See discussion infra at §§ 38.03(a)(2)(iii).

(n11)Footnote 32. Heldt v. Heldt, 193 N.E.2d 7 (Ill. 2d 1963).

(n12)Footnote 33. Louisiana has addressed this and related scenarios by statute. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 1303 provides:

There can be no partition, when the use of the thing held in common is indispensable to the coheirs, to enable them to enjoy, or to derive an advantage from the portion of the effects of the succession falling to them, such as an entry which serves as a passage to several houses, or a way common to several estates, and other things of the same kind.

Whether the statute applies equally to co-purchasers was raised but not decided in Vusovich v. Thorne, 498 So. 2d 1072 (La. 1986). See also Putnam v. Putnam, 78 N.Y.S. 987 (1902).

(n13)Footnote 34. Hoffman v. Beard, 22 Mich. 59 (1870).

(n14)Footnote 35. Cook v. Boehl, 53 A.2d 555 (Md. 1947) (questions of title cannot be decided in a partition proceeding); Lemay v. Hardin, 48 S.W.3d 59 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001); Kinkead v. Spillers, 983 S.W.2d 425 (Ark. 1999) (if title is in dispute, as here due to possible adverse possession claim against property by third-party, partition is not appropriate).

(n15)Footnote 36. Ala. Code § 35-6-23Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1213;Johnston v. Smith, 454 S.W.2d 649 (Ark.

1970); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.610; Halton v. Johnson, 103 S.E. 233 (Ga. 1920); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-7; Idaho Code § 6-508; Hartman v. Hartman, 297 N.E.2d 199 (Ill. App. 3d 1973); Iowa Civ. Proc. Rules § 275; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-9; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-201; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.080; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 907; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-08; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-19; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-12; Smith v. Cooper, 541 S.W.2d 274 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976); Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-8; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-81; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.070; Witzel v. Tena, 295 P.2d 1115 (Wash. 2d 1956); W. Va. Code § 37-4-1. But see Schair v. Duquet, 650 N.E.2d 809 (Mass. App.), rev. den., 652 N.E.2d 145 (Mass. 1995) (partition action is not to be used where primary purpose of party requesting partition is to try title rather than partition land); Green v. Pearson, 937 S.W.2d 743 (Mo. App. 1996) (appeals court rejected argument that trial court committed reversible error by ordering land partitioned without first requiring plaintiff to adjudicate her right to possession through an action in ejectment against defendant).

(n16)Footnote 37. Hoadley v. Wheelwright, 163 A. 790, 791 (Me. 1933).

(n17)Footnote 38. See discussion, infra, at § 38.04.

(n18)Footnote 39. Bean v. Northcutt, 199 So. 7 (Ala. 1940) (where shares are in dispute, the dispute should be resolved before sale; held error to do the reverse); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-203; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.080; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-08 (when the sale of the premises is necessary, the title must be ascertained ... before the judgment of sale can be made... .); S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 27-45-12; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-8.

(n19)Footnote 40. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.410 (sale may precede determination of shares). For an example of the difficulties that may arise in determining the exact percentage of ownership interests held by competing co-tenants, see Marsh Cattle Farms v. Vining, 707 So. 2d 111 (La. App. 1998).

(n20)Footnote 41. Wiley v. Wiley, 485 So. 2d 2 (Fla. App. 1986) (court cannot order partition where no party wants it).

(n21)Footnote 42. Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3301 Committee Comment. See, e.g., Spears v. Spears, 769 A.2d 523 (Pa. Super 2001) (there is no per se rule that precludes a co-tenant from asserting adverse possession as a defense to another co-tenant's action for partition; if first co-tenant can show acquisition of title by adverse possession, second co-tenant no longer has an ownership interest and thus has no right to seek partition); Tinney v. Tinney, 770 A.2d 420 (R.I. 2001) (alleged co-tenant of sixty-room mansion sought partition); Williams v. Brown, 476 S.E.2d 753 (Ga. 1996) (under law as it existed in 1961, illegitimate children would not qualify as "children" designated as takers in deed; therefore claimants had no interest in land and no right to partition).

(n22)Footnote 43. American Med. Int'l, Inc. v. Feller, 131 Cal. Rptr. 270 (1976); Rayhol Co. v. Holland, 148 A. 358 (Conn. 1930); Carter v. Carter, 516 A.2d 917 (D.C. App. 1986); Smith v. Moughan, 442 So. 2d 338 (Fla. App. 1983); Bowers v. Bowers, 65 S.E.2d 153 (Ga. 1951); Johnson v. Johnson, 297 N.E.2d 285 (Ill. App. 3d 1973); La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 807 (agreement for up to fifteen years); Stout v. Stout, 564 S.W.2d 89 (Mo. App. 1978); Terrible v. Terrible, 534 P.2d 919 (Nev. 1975); Bessen v. Glatt, 566 N.Y.S.2d 750 (1991); Schultheis v. Schultheis, 675 P.2d 634 (Wash. App. 1984). Gore v. Beren, 867 P.2d 330 (Kan. 1995); Diggs v. Diggs, 446 S.E.2d 873 (N.C. App. 1994); Marchetti v. Karpowich, 667 A.2d 724 (Pa. Super. 1995) (recognizing the rule that joint owners are free to enter into agreements restricting the right to partition but holding that the agreement at issue did not purport to bar partition in the factual circumstances presented); MCEN 1996 Partnership v. Glassell, 42 S.W.3d 262 (Tex. App. -- Corpus Christi 2001) (enforcing a written agreement among co-owners waiving the right to partition).

(n23)Footnote 44. Bydalek v. Bydalek, 71 N.E.2d 19 (Ill. 1947).

(n24)Footnote 45. Harrison v. Domerque, 78 Cal. Rptr. 797 (1969); Condrey v. Condrey, 92 So. 2d 423 (Fla. 1957); Rosenberg v. Rosenberg, 108 N.E.2d 766 (Ill. 1952); Valley v. Valley, 199 A.2d 93 (N.H. 1964); Goodpasture v. Goodpasture, 278 A.2d 531 (N.J. Super. 1971); Prude v. Lewis, 430 P.2d 753 (N.M. 1967); Raisch v. Schuster, 352 N.E.2d 657 (Ohio App. 1975); Shoup v. Shoup, 364 A.2d 1319 (Pa. 1976); Schultheis v. Schultheis, 675 P.2d 634

(Wash. App. 1984) (an agreement never to partition is not enforceable). For an example of such an agreement that was held to violate the Rule Against Perpetuities, see Nash v. Scott, 966 S.W.2d 936 (Ark. App. 1998).

(n25)Footnote 46. Condrey v. Condrey, 92 So. 2d 423 (Fla. 1957).

(n26)Footnote 47. Hyatt v. Hyatt, 417 A.2d 726 (Pa. Super. 1979) (agreement did not limit duration and therefore was an unreasonable restraint on alienation).

(n27)Footnote 48. Bowers v. Bowers, 65 S.E.2d 153 (Ga. 1951); Altman v. Altman, 67 N.Y.S.2d 119 (1946), aff'd 297 N.Y. 973, 80 N.E.2d 359 (1948); Kayann Props., Inc. v. Cox, 149 S.E.2d 553 (N.C. 1966); Davis v. Davis, 44 S.W.2d 447 (Tex. Civ. App. 1931).

(n28)Footnote 49. Flournoy v. Kirkman, 192 S.W. 462 (Mo. 1917).

(n29)Footnote 50. American Med. Int'l Inc. v. Feller, 131 Cal. Rptr. 270 (1976); Bowers v. Bowers, 65 S.E.2d 153 (Ga. 1951); Altman v. Altman, 67 N.Y.S.2d 119 (1946), aff'd 80 N.E.2d 359 (N.Y. 1948); Davis v. Davis, 44 S.W.2d 447 (Tex. Civ. App. 1931); Carter v. Weowna Beach Community Corp., 429 P.2d 201 (Wash. 2d 1967).

(n30)Footnote 51. Hotchkin v. Hotchkin, 253 A.2d 184 (N.J. Super. 1969). Prario v. Novo, 645 N.Y.S.2d 269 (1996) (agreement not to partition that is not in writing violates the statute of frauds).

(n31)Footnote 52. Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Bond, 401 P.2d 586, cert. denied, 382 U.S. 902 (Colo. 1965); Condrey v. Condrey, 92 So. 2d 423 (Fla. 1957); Beach v. Beach, 56 P.3d 1125 (Colo. App. 2002) (right to partition not orally waived).

(n32)Footnote 53. Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Bond, 401 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 902 (1965).

(n33)Footnote 54. Nagel v. Kitchen, 44 N.E.2d 853 (Ill. 1942).

(n34)Footnote 55. Coolidge v. Coolidge, 287 A.2d 566 (Vt. 1971); Gore v. Beren, 867 P.2d 330 (Kan. 1994) (recognizing right to waive expressly or impliedly the right to partition; parties held to have impliedly waived their right to partition during period of preemptive rights created by written agreement of the parties); In re Marriage of Homann, 658 N.E.2d 492 (Ill. App. 1995) (recognizing the general rule that cotenants may validly agree not to partition but holding there existed no basis for implying an agreement barring partition in this case).

(n35)Footnote 56. Goodpasture v. Goodpasture, 278 A.2d 531 (N.J. Super. 1971); McDowell v. McDowell, 301 S.E.2d 729 (N.C. App. 1983); Braaten v. Braaten, 278 N.W.2d 448 (S.D. 1979); Diggs v. Diggs, 446 S.E.2d 873 (N.C. App. 1994) (right to partition may be expressly or impliedly waived; implied waiver recognized where ex-spouse was given the right to live in the home).

(n36)Footnote 57. Raisch v. Schuster, 352 N.E.2d 657 (Ohio App. 2d 1975).

(n37)Footnote 58. Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990) (overruling Ames v. Cheyne, 287 N.W. 439 (Mich. 1939) which had implied an agreement not to partition from use of survivorship language); Stout v. Stout, 564 S.W.2d 89 (Mo. App. 1978); Spires v. Hoover, 466 S.W.2d 344 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971). But the mere filing of a partition action does not sever joint tenancy nor destroy right of survivorship, Rausch v. Hogan, 28 P.3d 460 (Mont. 2001).

(n38)Footnote 59. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-413; Peterson v. Damoude, 152 N.W. 786 (Neb. 1915); Greene v. Greene, 26 N.E. 739 (N.Y. 1891); Tombs' Estate, 39 A.2d 367 (Pa. Super. 1944).

(n39)Footnote 60. 527 P.2d 1150 (Okla. App. 1974).

(n40)Footnote 61. Id. at 1152.

(n41)Footnote 62. Rayhol Co. v. Holland, 148 A. 358 (Conn. 1930).

(n42)Footnote 63. Altschuler v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 43 N.E.2d 673, (1942) aff'd in part, rev'd in part, Yedor v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 44 N.E.2d 604 (Ill. 1942).

(n43)Footnote 64. Tibbetts v. Tibbetts, 93 A. 178 (Me. 1915).

(n44)Footnote 65. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-141 (court may, at its discretion, postpone or deny a prospective partition "if it appears that the present interest of any cotenant may not be protected thereby"); Hulslander v. Hulslander, 371 N.E.2d 652 (Ill. Dec. 1977) (cotenant does have a right to partition, but may be denied where equitable principles in furtherance of other interests of parties so require); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(d).

(n45)Footnote 66. Condrey v. Condrey, 92 So. 2d 423, 427 (Fla. 1957) (litigants should be wary of relying on the expectation that the court will so exercise its discretion (to deny partition), since it should be exercised only in extreme cases or where manifest injustice, fraud or oppression will result if partition is granted); Cook v. Williams, 546 S.E.2d 767 (W. Va. 2001) (trial court erred in refusing partition to ex-wife solely because ex-husband used the property for a business and had made improvements to the property).

(n46)Footnote 67. 260 P.2d 1081 (Okla. 1953).

(n47)Footnote 68. Id. at 1083.

(n48)Footnote 69. 92 So. 2d 423 (Fla. 1957).

(n49)Footnote 70. Id. at 427. See also Freundschuh v. Freundschuh, 559 N.W.2d 706 (Minn. App. 1997) (case remanded to determine whether property purchased by father in father and son's name in fact created a constructive trust in son's share for father, thus barring son's right to partition); Bermudez Y. Santos v. Bermudez Y. Santos, 773 So. 2d 568 (Fla. App. 3d Dist. 2000) (in light of elderly co-tenant's ill health, suggesting to parties and court on remand that Florida law (Condrey v. Condrey, 92 So. 2d 423 (Fla. 1957)) allows refusal to authorize partition if the effect is to oust ill and financially weak elderly co-tenant from home).

(n50)Footnote 71. Murphy v. Superior Ct., 70 P. 1070 (Cal. 1902); Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 746; Hoyt v. Ruge, 197 N.Y.S. 527 (1922); Keystone State Theatre Co. v. Widmyer, 79 A.2d 239 (Pa. 1951).

(n51)Footnote 72. Keystone State Theatre Co. v. Widmyer, 79 A.2d 239 (Pa. 1951); Yturria v. Kimbro, 921 S.W.2d 338 (Tex. App. 1996) (partition should generally encompass the entire estate held in co-tenancy even if comprised of numerous parcels; it is not necessary to assign each cotenant a share of each parcel).

(n52)Footnote 73. Lovett v. Lovett, 112 So. 768 (Fla. 1927); Corbin v. Corbin, 217 S.W.2d 798 (Ky. 1949); Barnes v. Lynch, 24 N.E. 783 (Mass. 1890); Contra Price v. Simpson, 29 S.E.2d 394 (Va. 1944).

(n53)Footnote 74. Martin v. Carroll, 177 So. 144 (Ala. 1937).

(n54)Footnote 75. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.260; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1220; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 1; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 247-C:1; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-91 (Michie 1992).

(n55)Footnote 76. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 1.

(n56)Footnote 77. McLear v. Balmat, 186 N.Y.S. 180, aff'd, 132 N.E. 883, appeal granted, 132 N.E. 904 (N.Y. 1921).

(n57)Footnote 78. Thomas v. Farr, 44 N.E.2d 434 (Ill. 1942); Cook v. Boehl, 53 A.2d 555 (Md. 1947); In re McCullough, 119 A. 585 (Pa. 1923).

(n58)Footnote 79. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 247-C:1.

(n59)Footnote 80. Ala. Code § 35-6-42; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1211; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-401; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.230; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.041; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-160; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-3; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-2; Iowa Civ. Proc. Rule 271; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(a)(1); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 381.135(1); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6502; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.03; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.050; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-103; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:2; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 905; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.03; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1501.1; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5163; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 842.05.

(n60)Footnote 81. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1211.

(n61)Footnote 82. S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-11.

(n62)Footnote 83. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.520; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.041; Idaho Code § 6-502; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60.1003a(2); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.070; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.020; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:4; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-2; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-02; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1502; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.215; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-6; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-110; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-2.

(n63)Footnote 84. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.280; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1212; Cal. Civ. Code §§ 872.310, 872.320; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-9; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6503; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 588.02; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.060; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:6; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-b; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.230; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-7; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-111; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-2; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.050.

(n64)Footnote 85. Ala. Code § 35-6-25; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 9; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.060; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-6.

(n65)Footnote 86. Richardson v. Richardson, 417 So. 2d 158 (Ala. 1982); Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-28-101; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-495; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/o17-101; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-104 (no person other than a joint tenant or tenant in common may be a plaintiff); N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 901; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-3; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.205; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-1; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-101; Tex. Prop. Code § 29.001; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-1; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-81; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.010; Lathem v. Hestley, 514 S.E.2d 440 (Ga. 1999) (if plaintiff could prove implied constructive trust in his favor he would have right to partition).

(n66)Footnote 87. Lowe v. Morrison, 711 S.W.2d 833 (Ark. 1986); Robinson v. Evans, 554 A.2d 332 (D.C. App. 1989); Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/17-103; Maddams v. Maddams, 223 N.E.2d 519 (Mass. 1967); V.R.W., Inc. v. Klein, 503 N.E.2d 496 (N.Y.S. 2d 1986); Newman v. Chase, 359 A.2d 474 (N.J. 1976); Shoup v. Shoup, 364 A.2d 1319 (Pa. 1976) (when a tenancy by the entirety is converted to a tenancy in common, partition is appropriate); Clark v. Clark, 644 A.2d 449 (D.C. App. 1994) (no partition of tenancy by the entirety).

(n67)Footnote 88. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code. § 872.210.

(n68)Footnote 89. Baldwin v. Baldwin, 516 So. 2d 560 (Ala. 1987); Home Stake Prod. Co. v. Tri-State Pipe Co., 415 P.2d 377 (Kan. 1966).

(n69)Footnote 90. Roy v. Abraham, 92 So. 792 (Ala. 1922); Bauer v. Migliaccio, 561 A.2d 674 (N.J. Super. 1989). But see United States v. Hopkins, 859 F. Supp. 208 (S.D. W. Va. 1994) (under West Virginia law, creditor of joint tenant could seek partition if interests of other cotenants were not prejudiced).

(n70)Footnote 91. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-413; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.130. See discussion supra § 38.03(a)(2)(ii).

(n71)Footnote 92. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-503; Leonard v. Browne, 134 So. 2d 872 (Fla. App. 1961); Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-5; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.140. Under certain circumstances the administrator of an estate may bring a partition action. Gallant v. Cavallaro, 50 Conn. App. 132, 717 A.2d 283 (1998) (administrator of estate has standing to seek partition, even over objection of heirs or devisees where administrator alleges that the property's value is necessary to settle claims against the estate).

(n72)Footnote 93. McQueen v. Forsythe, 55 So. 2d 545 (Fla. 1951); Tom v. Tom, 26 N.E.2d 410 (Ind. App. 1940).

(n73)Footnote 94. Washington v. Phillips, 60 So. 2d 337 (Ala. 1952); Langford v. Brickell, 138 So. 75 (Fla. 1931).

(n74)Footnote 95. Idaho Code § 6-507; Iowa Code Ann. § 651.2; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(b); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-112; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.070; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-07; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1504; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.235; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-7; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.060; Pinckney v. Atkins, 454 S.E.2d 339 (S.C. App. 1995) (master erred in failing to require that plaintiff name and serve the heirs of a deceased co-owner).

(n75)Footnote 96. Gilstrap v. Gilstrap, 397 N.E.2d 1277 (Ind. App. 1979). Coastland Corp. v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Com'n, 517 S.E.2d 661 (N.C. App. 1999) (sovereign immunity does not bar a suit for partition by a co-owner with the sovereign).

(n76)Footnote 97. Iowa Rules of Civ. Proc. 273 (a holder of a lien against less than the entire property must be made a party; a holder of a lien against the whole property may be made a party); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-105 (plaintiff may make any lienholder against the whole property a defendant; any such lienholder of record not made a defendant is not bound by the action).

(n77)Footnote 98. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(a)(3); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 588.02; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-107 (if there are outstanding lienholders of record not made parties, the court must order that they are made parties or appoint a referee to determine validity of lien); Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.050; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-03; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.220; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-4; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-3.

(n78)Footnote 99. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241 § 6; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 913.

(n79)Footnote 100. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 6.

(n80)Footnote 101. N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 904; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.030.

(n81)Footnote 102. Ala. Code § 35-6-21; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-408; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.080; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-4.

(n82)Footnote 103. See discussion supra at § 38.03(b)(3).

(n83)Footnote 104. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 6.

(n84)Footnote 105. Slusarz v. Slusarz, 151 N.E.2d 411 (Ill. App. 1958); Winn v. Maddox, 263 S.W.2d 470 (Mo. App. 1953).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.04

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.04 Physical Partition or Partition in Kind.

[Go To Supp]

In all but a few jurisdictions, n106 partition in kind is at least nominally favored over partition by sale. n107 In most states, sale is authorized only if physical partition would result in great prejudice to one or more of the co-owners. n108 Other states apply a lower standard. n109 Regardless of which standard for favoring partition in kind is applied, it is usually easily met by making one of two showings: (1) the physical attributes of the property make equitable partition in kind impracticable, or (2) the interests of the owners would better be promoted by partition by sale, which usually means that the value of the whole is materially greater than the sum of its parts. n110 Schnell v. Schnell n111 is illustrative of the view held by the majority of states on what constitutes great prejudice:

> In determining if great prejudice would result from a partition, the question is not which alternative would provide optimal economic value or maximum functional use. The resultant parcels need not be the economic, functional or aesthetic equivalent of the original parcel. Rather, great prejudice exists when "the value of the share of each in case of a partition would be materially less than his share of the money equivalent that could probably be obtained from the whole." Thus, sale of land in partition should not be ordered unless it is necessary to protect the parties from "serious pecuniary injury." n112

The burden of proof is on the party desiring a sale. n113 In many states, courts are expressly allowed to physically partition a part of the property and sell the rest where the court determines that prejudice to the parties is reduced thereby. n114

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: physical or kind w/2 partition!

§ 38.04(a) Partition in Kind.

The process by which partition in kind is accomplished is remarkably similar from state to state. The court determines that the plaintiff has the right to a partition and enters an order or writ of partition establishing the shares of each of the co-owners. n115 Most states authorize the court to order a partial physical partition where the shares of one or more of the co-owners are undisputed but the shares or entitlements of others remain in dispute. n116 The court normally does not physically divide the property, however. That task is given to a panel of commissioners or referees, usually three in number. n117

This panel divides the property into shares n118 and decides upon an allocation of those shares to individual owners. n119 If the court deems it appropriate, the panel may determine that physical partition cannot be made. n120 The result of the panel's efforts are then reported to the court and parties. The parties may file objections to the report. Unless the court on its own initiative upholds an objection or finds a ground for rejecting the panel's report, the court confirms the report and enters a judgment of partition. The judgment passes title without the execution of conveyances. n121

The statutes and case law give relatively little guidance on the proper method of physically dividing the property except to mandate that the division reflect the number of shares and the fractional size of the shares (where the land is held in tenancy in common). The number of shares does not necessarily correspond to the number of co-owners, inasmuch as most states allow two or more co-owners to combine their shares for partition purposes. n122 In such instances, these co-owners remain co-owners as to themselves, and only the co-ownership relationship with the others is severed. Where each part of the land is fungible, the task of physical division is simplified. Where, however, some portions are more valuable than others, it is clear that quality and value are to control over identical quantity in making the division. n123

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/2 kind

§ 38.04(b) Owelty.

It is not uncommon that the realty that is the subject of the partition action cannot be divided into shares in a manner that makes rational use of the land. A road or river may bisect property creating a natural partition line but not creating the appropriately sized parcels. The particular placement of buildings may make equal partition difficult without dividing the buildings. In cases where the most sensible division of land does not create the appropriate shares courts are empowered to award owelty. Owelty is a means through which a court can equalize shares by requiring the recipient of the larger share to pay a compensating sum of money to the recipient of the smaller share. Owelty is only available where there is a partition in kind. n124

In most states the power to award owelty is recognized by statute. n125 Whether by statute or case law, these states normally caution that the power to award owelty is to be used sparingly. n126 At least one state, Mississippi, provides that when owelty is awarded, it is a lien superior to all other liens. n127 Most states provide that owelty cannot be required to be made by unknown owners or by minors unless the minor has personal property sufficient for that purpose. n128

§ 38.04(c) Allocation of Shares.

A court, with the assistance of the commissioners, must not only divide the shares but must allocate the shares among the co-owners. Again, the case law and statutes give little assistance in this regard. If a co-owner has individually improved one part of the land that co-owner should be awarded that part, n129 unless other factors counsel otherwise. It is also appropriate, but not mandatory, for a court to allot to one co-owner a part adjacent to other land owned by that co-owner. n130 A few states have recognized that if a co-owner sells a specific parcel purporting to sell full title, that part should be allotted to that purchaser if to do so will not materially injure the other co-owners. n131

Where there is no compelling reason to allot any particular lot to a particular owner, n132 it is normally the practice of the panel to allot the lots randomly or by lottery. n133 As long as the means employed is not irregular or unfair it will normally be upheld. n134

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/50 allocat! w/5 share!

§ 38.04(d) Incidental Effects of Physical Partition.

It is the rule in all states that a recorded lien attaching to the co-owned interest of one cotenant will attach to the share allotted to that cotenant. n135 These liens are subordinated, however, to the partition costs assigned to the owner. n136

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 106. Harris v. Johnson, 356 N.E.2d 1107 (Ill. Dec. 1976); Iowa Rules of Civ. Proc. Rule § 278 (property will be sold unless there is a specific prayer for partition in kind and a showing that partition in kind is equitable and practicable); Fannin v. Fannin, 75 S.W.2d 1042 (Ky. 1934) (this rule does not govern town lots).

(n2)Footnote 107. Anderson v. Anderson, 108 S.E. 907 (Ga. App. 1921); Kauffman v. Eckhardt, 263 N.W. 610 (Minn. 1935), amended 264 N.W. 781 (1936); Brown v. Boger, 139 S.E.2d 577 (N.C. 1965); Weever v. Weever, 579 P.2d 216 (Okla. App. 1978); Robertson v. Robertson, 425 S.W.2d 707 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

(n3)Footnote 108. Alaska Stat. §§ 09.45.290, 09.45.330; Ark. Code Ann. § 18.60.401; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-28-107; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-1; Idaho Code § 6-501 (1990); Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/17-116; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3332; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.01; Mo. Ann. Stat. 528.250, 528.340; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-202; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.010; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:25; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-2; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 52-5-7; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 921; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-12; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.245; De Bartolo v. Di Battista, 367 A.2d 701 (R.I. 1976); S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-28; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-12; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.080. Ark-La-Miss Timber Co., Inc. v. Wilkins, 833 So. 2d 1154 (La. App. 2002) (because partition in kind would not be equitable to both parties, partition by licitation (auction) was ordered); Ashley v. Baker, 867 P.2d 792 (Alaska 1994) (great prejudice refers to economic harm); Heartland Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Camp, 870 P.2d 182 (Okla. App. 1994) (attorneys' fee award to purchaser's attorney upheld where purchaser had intervened in partition action and services had benefitted interests of cotenants). Courts also consider the prejudice to cotenants desiring partition in kind, including prejudice that results from failure to value sentimental attachment to land. In Eli v. Eli, 557 N.W.2d 405 (S.D. 1997), the court emphasized the fact that the land in question had been held in the family for generations and that one cotenant desired to keep at least her share of the land in the family for exactly that reason.

(n4)Footnote 109. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.820 (sale authorized if parties agree or if more equitable than partition in kind); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-500; Delfino v. Vealencis, 436 A.2d 27 (Conn. 1980) (sale appropriate if it is in best interest of owners); Wilcox v. Willard Shopping Ctr. Assoc., 544 A.2d 1207 (Conn. 1988), appeal after remand, 579 A.2d 130 (Conn. App. 1990) (party requesting sale must show that partition in kind is impracticable or inequitable or that the interests of the owners are better promoted by a sale); Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 729 (sale permitted if partition is detrimental to the interests of the parties); Ga. § 44-6-166.1; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-5 (sale only if partition in kind cannot be made without damage to the owners); La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. § 4606; Md. Code Ann. Real Prop. § 14-107(a) (sale only if partition in kind will cause loss or injury to an interested party); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-11 (sale appropriate if it better promotes interests of all parties or if equal division cannot be made); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.09 (sale appropriate if partition would cause manifest injury); S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-20 (sale appropriate if partition in kind cannot be made without injury or unfairness to owners); Johnson v. Hendrickson, 24 N.W.2d 914 (S.D. 1946) (sale is authorized if the sum of the value of the parts is materially less than the whole); Nicely v. Nicely, 293 S.W.2d 30 (Tenn. App. 1956); Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-03 (sale authorized if physical partition cannot conveniently be made or if interests of the parties will be promoted).

(n5)Footnote 110. Geary v. Kirksey, 351 S.W.2d 846 (Ark. 1961) (partition in kind found impracticable where property consisted of two long narrow strips intersecting each other and used as runways); Wilcox v. Willard Shopping Ctr. Assoc., 544 A.2d 1207 (Conn. 1988) (subject property was a shopping mall; determination that partition in kind was impracticable upheld); Bulliard v. Bienvenu, 663 So. 2d 373 (La. App. 1995) (partition in kind of 13.01 acres inappropriate where property was irregular in shape, had a house located on one part of it, was encumbered with a servitude; and where partition would landlock many of the 120 equal lots into which the 13.01 acres were to be divided); Connally v. Nevils, 702 So. 2d 1043 (La. App. 1997) (regardless of parties' stipulation that land was susceptible to partition in kind, ultimate decision on this mixed question of law and fact lies with the judge); Schneider v. Putnam, 705 A.2d 1117 (Me. 1998) (partition by sale is appropriate where in kind partition would create a worthless lot in violation of zoning ordinance); Friend v. Friend, 964 P.2d 1219 (Wash. App. 1998) (partition in kind is rendered inappropriate where resulting lots would violate zoning ordinance).

See Liner v. Lewis, 792 So. 2d 822 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2001) (containing a recitation of the basic standards to be employed in determining whether partition in kind or partition by sale is appropriate).

(n6)Footnote 111. 346 N.W.2d 713 (N.D. 1984).

(n7)Footnote 112. Id. at 716 (citations omitted). In accord, see Brown v. Boger, 139 S.E.2d 577 (N.C. 1965). As Robertson v. Robertson, 484 S.E.2d 831 (N.C. App. 1997), indicates, not all pecuniary loss is considered. See also Anderson v. Anderson, 560 N.W.2d 729 (Minn. App. 1997) (tax consequences to one party of a sale are not a mandated consideration in the court's exercise of discretion as to whether to order partition in kind or by sale).

(n8)Footnote 113. Madison v. Lambert, 399 So. 2d 840 (Ala. 1981); Richmond v. Dofflemyer, 164 Cal. Rptr. 727 (1980); Rice v. Dowling, 581 A.2d 1061 (Conn. App. 1990), cert. denied, 584 A.2d 1190 (Conn. 1991); Boyd v. Boyd, 361 A.2d 146 (Md. App. 1976) (proof must be by preponderance of the evidence); Vinson v. Johnson, 493 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 1986); Kayann Props., Inc. v. Cox, 149 S.E.2d 553 (N.C. 1966); Schnell v. Schnell, 346 N.W.2d 716 (N.D. 1984); Sensabaugh v. Sensabaugh, 349 S.E.2d 141 (Va. 1986); Hegewald v. Neal, 582 P.2d 529 (Wash. App. 1978). For an interesting illustration of variant motivations among disputing co-tenants in seeking physical partition on the one hand, or partition by sale on the other, see Cecola v. Ruley, 12 S.W.3d 848 (Tex. App. 2000).

(n9)Footnote 114. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.340; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.830; Richmond v. Dofflemyer, 164 Cal. Rptr. 727 (1980) (court may order part division of property and part sale if this is more equitable than division of the whole); Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 730; D.C. Code Ann. § 16-2901; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-4; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-4; Iowa Code Ann. § 651.3 (part partition in kind and part sale is authorized if partition in kind cannot conveniently be made of entire parcel); Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241 § 4; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.14; Swogger v. Taylor, 68 N.W.2d 376; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-11; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-204; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-3; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-16; Bennett v. Floyd, 115 S.E.2d 659 (S.C. 1960); Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-83; W. Va. Code § 37-4-3.

(n10)Footnote 115. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.710(b); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(2); Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 10; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.04; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. § 915; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.04; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1505; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-15. Langevin v. York, 907 P.2d 981 (Nev. 1995) (In this case, the court applied the presumption that where cotenants contribute unequally to the purchase price, they intend "to share in proportion to the amount contributed to the purchase price." Since one of the cotenants paid the entire purchase price of two of the disputed parcels, he was awarded the two parcels outright). Id. at 984, quoting Sack v. Tomlin, 871 P.2d 298, 303 (Nev. 1994).

(n11)Footnote 116. Idaho Code § 6-509 (1990); Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 5; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-6; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 916; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-16; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-9; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.080.

(n12)Footnote 117. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1215(b); Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-414; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §

872.710(c); Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-28-105; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 724; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-163; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-13; Idaho Code § 6-513; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/o17-106; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-4-56; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(2); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 381.135(4); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6511; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 12; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.04; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-15; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.200; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:11; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-6; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 915; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-7; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-13; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.04; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1506; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.255; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-24; S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-60; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-15; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-114; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-13; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 5169; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.080; Wyo. Stat. § 1-32-104.

(n13)Footnote 118. See discussion infra at § 38.04(b). Hart v. Hart, 497 S.E.2d 496 (Va. App. 1998) (partitioning court has the power to grant an easement over one parcel for the benefit of the other as part of a partition in kind).

(n14)Footnote 119. See discussion infra at § 38.04(c). Crawford v. Crawford, 2002 Tenn. App. LEXIS 814 (No. E2202-00372-COA-RS-CV, Nov. 14, 2002) (statute permitted a partial partition in kind).

(n15)Footnote 120. See discussion supra at § 38.04(d). Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1218; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-415; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(2); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-17; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.340. Kubish v. Zega, 767 A.2d 148 (Conn. App.), cert. den., 769 A.2d 62 (Conn. 2001) (court is not bound by recommendations contained in committee's or commissioner's report); Dunn v. BL Development Corp., 747 So. 2d 284 (Miss. App. 1999) illustrates some problems with physical partition when there are numerous owners with variant shares. Here the ownership interests were, among others, 2323/3360ths, 1/56th, 11/480th and 1/28th.

(n16)Footnote 121. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-142; Von Behren v. Oberg, 902 S.W.2d 338 (Mo. App. 1995) (in evaluating the commissioners' recommended in-kind partition, court is to consider equality of division, not based solely on numbers of acres but also on all factors that bear on value); Tillett v. Lippert, 909 P.2d 1158 (Mont. 1996) (trial judge modified referee's suggested division of land in order to provide cotenant with access to cotenant's federally leased land); Wilson v. McGuire, 463 S.E.2d 614 (S.C. App. 1995) (noting that the trial court should not reject the commissioners' report unless the division proposed by the commissioners is clearly shown to be "erroneous, unfair, unjust and inequitable" and holding that the trial judge abused his discretion in rejecting the commissioners' report in the absence of competent evidence that in kind partition was impossible, impracticable or unfair).

(n17)Footnote 122. Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/o17-113; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-8; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 5; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.170; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-4; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 917; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-13; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-13; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 1735; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-82; W. Va. Code § 37-4-2. Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-11 (amended in 1995 to clarify internal statutory reference). The fact that two or more co-owners may combine their shares for partition purposes may impact the decision as to whether physical partition is possible or practicable. In Cain v. Christie, 937 P.2d 119 (Okla. Civ. App. 1997), one cotenant, holding a 1/6 share, demanded a partition by sale of parcels he co-owned with numerous members of the Cherokee Nation. If each of the co-owners were to be given individual shares, partition in kind would have been impossible. All of the Cherokee Nation co-owners desired to have their interests considered together and to have a partition in kind. Viewed as a division into only two shares, one representing plaintiff's interest and the other representing the collectivity of defendants' interests, partition in kind was possible and appropriate. Accord, Sims v. Sims, 930 P.2d 153 (N.M. 1996) (cotenants are permitted to "pool" their interests; the purposes for allowing partition are not undermined if some but not all cotenants wish to retain their collective proportion of the property).

(n18)Footnote 123. Dondero v. Van Sickel, 11 Nev. 389 (1876) (if land cannot be divided into parcels of equal size without placing too much value on one parcel, court should divide land into parcels of equal value rather than size); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-10; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-17; Spires v. Hoover, 466 S.W.2d 344 (Tex. App. 1971); Clawson v. Silver, 26 P.3d 209 (Utah 2001) (simple fact that "like kind" partition was not possible because structure stood on one part of property and not another did not, of itself, compel partition by sale; case was remanded for consideration of partition in kind with award of owelty to allow land to stay in family with "strong attachment" to it).

(n19)Footnote 124. English v. Brantley, 361 So. 2d 549 (Ala. 1978). Devco, Inc. v. Richey, 707 So. 2d 161, 164 (La. App. 1998) contains an excellent summary of the practical function of owelty:

> ... [i]t is possible to determine an amount to award the disadvantaged party in order to achieve equality. Once the value of each parcel has been determined, the focus turns to the amount of the difference in value of each parcel. The party who is awarded the more valuable parcel must compensate the co-owner with an amount that would make the parcels equal or nearly equal in value. Here, for example, if there are two parcels, equality can be gained by conveying an amount that equals one-half of the total difference in value of the two parcels to the disadvantaged co-owner.

Clawson v. Silver, 26 P.3d 209 (Utah 2001) (simple fact that "like kind" partition was not possible because structure stood on one part of property and not another did not, of itself, compel partition by sale; case was remanded for consideration of partition in kind with award of owelty to allow land to stay in family); Kubish v. Zega, 767 A.2d 148, cert. den. 769 A.2d 62 (Conn. 2001) (award of owelty functions "to preserve the action as one of partition in kind, rather than converting it into a partition by sale").

(n20)Footnote 125. Ala. Code § 35-6-24 (1991); Alaska Stat. § 09.45.590 (1992); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §§ 872.140, 873.250; Filipetti v. Filipetti, 479 A.2d 1229, cert. denied, 482 A.2d 709 (Conn. App. 1984); Borum v. Deese, 26 S.E.2d 538 (Ga. 1943); Idaho Code § 6-541; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6515; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 14; Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.11; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-13; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-209; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. 39.440; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:22; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 943; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-41; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.250; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-19; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-117; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-41; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.440.

(n21)Footnote 126. Washington v. Phillips, 60 So. 2d 337 (Ala. 1952); Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3336; Hoverson v. Hoverson, 12 N.W.2d 501 (Minn. 1943); Anderson v. Anderson, 560 N.W.2d 729 (Minn. App. 1997) (owelty is appropriate when a sale is disadvantageous to the parties but an equal division cannot be had without great prejudice to the owners); Culley v. McFadden Lake Corp., 674 N.E.2d 208 (Ind. App. 1996) (trial court had power to award owelty even in absence of consent from all cotenants).

(n22)Footnote 127. Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-33.

(n23)Footnote 128. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.590; Idaho Code § 6-541; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.11; Mont. Code § 70-29-209; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. 39.440; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-41; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.250; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-19; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-41.

(n24)Footnote 129. Washington v. Phillips, 60 So. 2d 337 (Ala. 1952); Graham v. Inlow, 790 S.W.2d 428 (Ark. 1990); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.220 (the value of the improvement is excluded from valuing the share); Boley v. Skinner, 20 So. 1017 (Fla. 1896); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-4; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6514 (value of improvement is considered in valuing share); Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 23; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-207 (the value of the improvement is excluded from valuing the share); Webb v. Mitchell, 371 S.W.2d 754 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963); Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-13; Cummings v. Anderson, 614 P.2d 1283 (Wash. 2d 1980).

(n25)Footnote 130. Gray v. Crotts, 293 S.E.2d 626 (N.C. App. 1982); Barth v. Barth, 901 P.2d 232 (Okla. App. 1995) (trial court did not abuse its discretion in allotting share to cotenant who owned adjoining land; in fact, court suggested in dictum that failing to so allocate the parcel in issue might have constituted an abuse of discretion).

(n26)Footnote 131. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.230; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-208; Johnson v. MacIntyre, 740 A.2d 599 (Md. 1999) (conveyance to a third party by one joint tenant, without the consent of the other joint-tenant, of a parcel, described by metes and bounds, out of a larger, jointly held tract, after which the third party sought partition).

(n27)Footnote 132. Iowa Rules of Civ. Proc. § 285 (court may for good reason order referees to make specific allotment of a particular contract to a particular individual); Chesmore v. Chesmore, 484 P.2d 516 (Okla. 1971) (court may direct commissioners to allot a particular portion to a particular owner); Connally v. Nevils, 702 So. 2d 1043 (La. App. 1997) (after parties have sought judicial partition in kind, parties may not by stipulation avoid drawing by lots to assign parcels).

(n28)Footnote 133. Arnett v. Deem, 220 S.W. 725 (Ky. App. 1920) (commissioners could use lottery or any other fair measure); La. Code Civ. Proc. § 4642; Miss. Code Ann. §§ 11-21-21, 11-21-23; Gray v. Crotts, 293 S.E.2d 626 (N.C. App. 1982) (parcels must be equally divided in terms of value for lottery to be appropriate); McNeal v. McNeal, 732 So. 2d 663 (La. App. 1999).

(n29)Footnote 134. Gray v. Crotts, 293 S.E.2d 626 (N.C. App. 1982). Robertson v. Robertson, 484 S.E.2d 831 (N.C. App. 1997) (assigning parcels by a flip of a coin is not improper).

(n30)Footnote 135. Ala. Code § 35-6-51; Wood v. Barnett, 94 So. 338 (Ala. 1922); Alaska Stat. § 09.45.270; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873, 260; Baltzell v. Daniel, 149 So. 639 (Fla. 1933); Idaho Code § 6-518; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/17-114; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6525; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 28; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3350; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.09; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-39; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-215; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.210; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-16; N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 929; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-18; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.220; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-27; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-18; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.030; Davis v. Lyons, 700 So. 2d 794 (Fla. App. 1997) (contested existence of judgment lien against one co-tenant did not preclude other co-tenant from receiving her share of proceeds of partition sale); Ponton v. Poisson, 709 A.2d 1047 (R.I. 1998) (holding that a co-tenant's interest may be unilaterally mortgaged during a partition by sale proceeding; the mortgage lien attaches to the mortgaging co-tenant's share and in the resultant proceeds from the sale).

(n31)Footnote 136. See discussion infra at nn.167-174. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.270; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.09; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-215; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.480; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-16; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.220; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-27; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-18; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.030.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.05

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.05 Partition by Sale.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a-15

Unless all parties to the partition action agree, a court may not order a partition sale of the subject property absent a finding that under the governing standard, a partition in kind will harm the interests of one or more of the parties. As noted in the section on partition in kind, the most common rule is that physical partition will be ordered unless such partition will result in manifest prejudice. n137 A court is not to make such a finding without some evidence before it on the issue. n138 This evidence normally comes from one of two sources. First, parties themselves may offer evidence on the issue and the court may make a finding based upon that evidence. Second, the referees or commissioners appointed by the court to devise a physical partition of the land n139 may report to the court that a physical partition will, in their judgment, cause the requisite injury and offer supporting evidence to support this judgment. n140 In such case, the commissioner may appraise the land and include that appraisal in their report to the court. n141

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/2 sale!

§ 38.05(a) Mechanics of Sale.

Once it is determined that a partition sale is appropriate, the court will so order and will set the general terms of the sale and any special requirements for the process under which the sale is undertaken. Although courts are authorized to conduct the sale, n142 the far more common practice, authorized by statute, is to appoint commissioners or referees to do so. n143

In a few states, the court may order the land sold either by private sale or public auction, whichever is more likely to produce the highest sum for distribution. n144 California and Massachusetts further require the court to use whatever means of sale is agreed to by the parties. n145 The most common statutory requirement, however, is that which directs that the sale be made to the highest bidder at a public auction. n146

Any proceeding for partition sale which is conducted by a commissioner or referee must be submitted to the court ordering it. Only when the court confirms the sale is it final. n147 Any objections to the proceeding or the price may be submitted to the court prior to the final confirmation. n148 Courts are authorized to set aside a public sale if the price is too low. n149

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: term! w/15 partition w/2 sale!

§ 38.05(b) Alternate Method -- Appraisal and Sale to One of the Co-Owners.

Most courts addressing the issue have held that it is improper to order one cotenant to sell the cotenant's interest in the entire property to another cotenant. n150 A minority have held otherwise, allowing such an order if full payment is received by the party ordered to sell. n151

While, as a general rule, a court may not compel a co-owner to sell to or buy from another co-owner, many states provide a statutory mechanism for appraisals and sale of the subject property to a co-owner or co-owners who want to buy. n152 This mechanism avoids the need for a public sale and often results in a higher price for the co-owner whose interest is sold. Although the statutory schemes in these states vary in minor detail, they provide essentially as follows: once the court has determined that a partition by sale is appropriate, it appoints commissioners to conduct an appraisal of the property and set an appraised price. This price is communicated to the parties. Each party then informs the court of whether the party wishes to be a buyer or seller. If there are no sellers, the action is either dismissed n153 or a public sale is held. If there are no buyers, or in some states, if no more than one buyer, n154 a public sale is held. Ideally, one or more of the co-owners will wish to sell and one (or more) will wish to buy. The court oversees the payments under this scheme.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: appraisal! w/2 sale! w/50 partition

§ 38.05(c) Disposition of Proceeds of Sale.

The proceeds of the partition sale are applied as follows: general costs, cost of referees, satisfaction of liens, distribution to the owners according to their share. n155 Most states have specific rules that direct what is to be done with shares allotted to unknown co-owners. n156 The most common direction is that the funds are to be invested in specified government bonds or deposited with designated types of banking institutions. n157

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: proceed! w/15 partition w/2 sale!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 137. See text supra at nn.108-114.

(n2)Footnote 138. Ragland v. Walker, 387 So. 2d 184 (Ala. 1980), appeal after remand, 411 So. 2d 106 (Ala. 1982); Thompson v. Mitchell, 429 So. 2d 388 (Fla. App. 1983);Vinson v. Johnson, 493 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 1986). Joseph v. Joseph, 719 N.E.2d 323 (Ill. App. 1999) (holding that the commissioners' report is not to be judged by the "manifest weight of the evidence" standard but rather is to be received as an aid to the court in making its own independent determination); State ex rel. Bowser v. Hill, 550 S.E.2d 62 (W. Va. 2001) (court did not abuse its discretion by ordering sale at public auction when neither co-tenant would acquiesce in allotment of property to the other). The court's determination will be given a high level of deference on appeal.

(n3)Footnote 139. See text supra at n.117.

(n4)Footnote 140. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1218; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-415; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-28-107; Mass. Ann. Laws. ch. 241, § 14; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.250; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-7; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 842.11.

(n5)Footnote 141. S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-80.

(n6)Footnote 142. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-424. Forney v. Forney, 926 S.W.2d 889 (Mo. App. 1996) (sale is to be conducted in compliance with specifics of court decree but will be set aside for irregularity only if non-compliance is so substantial as to be prejudicial to the parties).

(n7)Footnote 143. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-420; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.510; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-502; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.061.

(n8)Footnote 144. Copeland v. Giles, 123 So. 2d 147 (Ala. 1960); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.520; Iowa Rules Civ. Proc. § 289; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 31; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.01. Welch v. Zucco, 665 So. 2d 697 (La. App. 1995) (trial court could not order plaintiffs to sell their interest to defendant); Orgain v. Butler, 496 S.E.2d 433 (Va. 1998) (noting the standard that the Chancellor was to order the method of sale likely to obtain the highest sales price unless that method was unachievable because of the circumstances or the parties' conduct, the court reversed the Chancellor's conclusion that sale should be by public auction rather than through a private real estate broker).

(n9)Footnote 145. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.600; Mass. Ann. Laws. ch. 241, § 6.

(n10)Footnote 146. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.420; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-420; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.071; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-167; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668.14; Idaho Code § 6-524; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-301; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.340; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.270; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-24; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.11; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.280; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-30; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-24; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.270; Wyo. Stat. 1-32-111.

(n11)Footnote 147. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-422; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.710; Fla. Stat. Ann. 64.071; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668.14; Tillett v. Lippert, 909 P.2d 1158 (Mont. 1996) (trial court acted within its sound discretion in modifying referee's recommended partition boundaries upon concluding that recommended boundaries were inequitable).

(n12)Footnote 148. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.720. See also, Gray v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 428 (1997) (party who seeks partition is not entitled to take a voluntary dismissal after an unfavorable referee's report; allowing such dismissal would circumvent statutory scheme that provides specific procedures for filing objections).

(n13)Footnote 149. Deverell v. Horton, 234 So. 2d 879 (Ala. 1970); Kaecek v. Knight, 447 So. 2d 900 (Fla. App. 1984).

(n14)Footnote 150. McCready v. McCready, 810 P.2d 624 (Ariz. 1991); Hairston v. Hairston, 454 A.2d 1369 (D.C. App. 1983); Janik v. Janik, 474 N.E.2d 1054 (Ind. App. 1985).

(n15)Footnote 151. Libby v. Lorrain, 430 A.2d 37 (Me. 1981); S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-90.

(n16)Footnote 152. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.910 et seq. (requires agreement of the parties to use the partition by appraisal procedures); Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-166; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(c)(5); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.09; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1512; Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-83; Wyo. Stat. § 1-32-109. The major issue that arises through this method is whether the established price at which the sale is to be made is a fair one. In determining the fair market value of land, the judge is normally empowered to consider all uses to which the property might be put. These uses are not necessarily those the parties would consider but rather those that third parties in arms-length transactions would consider the highest and best use of the land. Delta Materials Corp. v. Bagdon, 682 N.E.2d 927 (Mass. App. 1997).

(n17)Footnote 153. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-166.

(n18)Footnote 154. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(c)(5).

(n19)Footnote 155. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.380; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.820; Idaho Code § 6-520; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.16; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.230; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-20; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.285; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-51; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-218; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-20; Wash. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 7.52.220; Wawrzusin v. Wawrzusin, 623 N.Y.S.2d 255 (1995) (reimbursement out of partition sale proceeds for improvements is not appropriate where improvement is made for improver's own purposes without the agreement or consent of the other cotenant).

(n20)Footnote 156. Haw. Rev. Stat § 668-9; Idaho Code § 6-529; Iowa Code Ann. § 651.1; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.400; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.370; R.I. Gen. Laws. § 34-15-18; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-218.

(n21)Footnote 157. Mass. Ann. Laws. ch. 241, § 34 (savings bank or trust company); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.29 (interest-bearing securities); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-329 (United States or Montana bonds); N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-37 (United States bonds); S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-55 (United States bonds); Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-37 (United States or Utah bonds).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.06

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.06 Final Accounting -- Improvements, Expenses, Rents and Profits.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 4-15

Often when judicial partition is sought, whether in kind or by sale, one of the co-owners will seek compensation for improvements made to the co-owned property. Where a partition in kind is made, the party making the improvement will be allotted the improved portion of the land if this can be done without working an unfairness to the other co-owners. n158 Where partition is to be made by sale or where the improved portion cannot be allotted to the improver in a partition in kind, the improving co-owner may ask the court to award money to the co-owner to reflect the value of the improvement. Because a partition action is equitable in nature, courts will make such an award if appropriate, n159 treating the action as akin to an equitable accounting. n160 The proper valuation of the improvement is not its cost but the amount by which it enhanced the value of the property. n161 This rule considering increase in value rather than cost applies only where the improvement was made without the knowledge or consent of the other cotenants. In Denton v. Lazenby, n162 the court addressed the credit issue where the cotenants had agreed to the improvement. The court initially noted the rationale for the "increased value" rule if such agreement is not present:

> A rationale for allowing compensation for the value of improvements is to prevent a nonimproving cotenant from being unjustly enriched by improvements to which he or she did not contribute. One of the reasons for limiting the amount of reimbursement to the increase in value of the property is to prevent one cotenant from negating another cotenant's interest in the property by making expensive improvements and then being reimbursed for the cost of improvements which the nonimproving cotenant did not desire or which do not comparably increase the value of the property. [This rule] protects both the improving cotenant and the nonimproving cotenant: The nonimproving cotenant is not burdened with the cost of improvident improvements, and the improving cotenant is protected when his or her improvements have greatly appreciated in value. n163

Because this rationale did not apply to improvements made with the consent of cotenants, the court found cost to be the more equitable measure. The court may make similar adjustments where one party has borne an undue share of the expenditures associated with the property, n164 including funds paid in discharge of a mortgage. n165

Just as a cotenant may recover for expenses or improvements made to benefit the co-owned property, the cotenant may be charged for rents and profits that were received by the cotenant in excess of the pro rata share. n166 In addition, a cotenant who has excluded other cotenants from possession may be required to account to the others for their share of the fair rental value of the property. n167 A court will not order such reimbursements unless a demand for them is made by the other co-owners. n168

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/2 sale! w/30 improvement! or expense! or rent! or profit!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 158. See discussion supra at n.129.

(n2)Footnote 159. Graham v. Inlow, 790 S.W.2d 428 (Ark. 1990); Martinez v. Martinez, 638 P.2d 834 (Colo. App. 1981); Hackett v. Hackett, 598 A.2d 1112 (Conn. Supp. 1990), aff'd, 598 A.2d 1103, cert. denied, 600 A.2d 1359 (Conn. 1991); Borum v. Deese, 26 S.E.2d 538 (Ga. 1943); Janik v. Janik, 474 N.E.2d 1054 (Ind. App. 1985); Renensland v. Ellenberger, 574 P.2d 217 (Kan. App. 1977); La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. § 4626; Mass. Ann. ch. 241, § 25; Knowlton v. Knowlton, 673 S.W.2d 502 (Mo. App. 1984) (award for improvements may be enforced in equity where they are made in good faith, are of a substantial nature, materially enhance the value of the property and it is equitable to enforce them); N.Y. Real Prop. Acts § 944; In re Sivak's Estate, 58 A.2d 456 (Pa. 1948); White v. Pleasants, 317 S.E.2d 489 (Va. 1984); Heyse v. Heyse, 176 N.W.2d 316 (Wis. 2d 1970); Butler v. Hayes, 487 S.E.2d 229 (Va. 1997) (Cotenants, who believed they had been deeded a 5/8 interest, were correctly informed by other cotenants that their deed was defective, since the grantor held only a 1/8 interest. Despite this information, the mistaken cotenants made numerous improvements for which they later sought credit in a partition action. In denying their request even though they did validly hold a 1/8 interest, the court noted that the improvements were made at a time when the claimants did not know whether they held any interest at all. In the court's view, the claimants had unclean hands and thus were not worthy of equitable relief). Burnett v. Burnett, 742 So. 2d 859 (Fla. App. 1999) offers an explanation of the proper sequence of legal determinations in order to partition a marital residence under Florida law. The first step calls upon the trial court to make a finding of the value of the marital residence. The second step is to order a sale. The third step is to impound the proceeds of that sale. The fourth step, and final one before payment to the parties, is to hold an ancillary proceeding to establish credits due between the parties. See also, Biondo v. Powers, 743 So. 2d 161 (Fla. App. 1999), where trial court improperly valued joint tenants' interests in partition based upon their respective investments in the property and its maintenance, thus valuing one joint tenant's share at 85% and the other at 15%. The appeals court held that the proper method required an initial 50/50 split between the two joint tenants. Once that split is made, offsets may be applied to reflect individual contributions to the expenses of maintaining the property, including mortgage payments, insurance payments, taxes and necessary repairs.

(n3)Footnote 160. Wood v. Barnett, 94 So. 338 (Ala. 1922); Worthing v. Cossar, 93 A.D.2d 515, 462 N.Y.S.2d 920 (1983).

(n4)Footnote 161. Graham v. Inlow, 790 S.W.2d 428 (Ark. 1990); Gerontopoulos v. Gerontopoulos, 66 P.2d 724 (Cal. App. 1937); Martinez v. Martinez, 638 P.2d 834 (Colo. App. 1981); Janik v. Janik, 474 N.E.2d 1054 (Ind. App. 1985); Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 241, § 25; Dalgarno v. Baum, 30 S.E.2d 559 (Va. 1944). But see, Bednar v. Bednar, 688 A.2d 1200 (Pa. Super. 1997) (remodeling of bathroom, erecting a sunroom and landscaping were not necessary to preserve and safeguard the property; therefore cotenant was not entitled to contribution); Hernandez v. Hernandez, 645 So. 2d 171 (Fla. App. 1994); In re Marriage of Marr, 638 N.E.2d 303 (Ill. App. 1994) (in order to get credit for improvement made without the knowledge or consent of other cotenants, proper consideration is increase in value, not cost);Christen v. Christen, 38 S.W.3d 488 (Mo. App. S.D. 2001) (refusing to authorize reimbursement to improving co-tenant in absence of proof of increased value attributable to improvement).

(n5)Footnote 162. 879 P.2d 607 (Kan. 1994).

(n6)Footnote 163. Id. at 609 (citations omitted).

(n7)Footnote 164. Hackett v. Hackett, 598 A.2d 1112 (Conn. Supp. 1990), aff'd, 598 A.2d 1103 (Conn. App. 1991), cert. denied, 600 A.2d 1359 (Conn. 1992); Borum v. Deese, 26 S.E.2d 538 (Ga. 1943); Beckham v. Eggleston, 341 S.W.2d 337 (Mo. App. 1960); Worthing v. Cossar, 462 N.Y.S.2d 920 (1983); Community Bank of Chillicothe v. Campbell, 870 S.W.2d 838 (Mo. App. 1994) (expenses for repairs made in good faith for substantial benefit of all cotenants may be divided in partition where circumstances indicate such is equitable); Hernandez v. Hernandez, 645 So. 2d 171 (Fla. App. 1994) (expenditures preserving property are legitimate items for credit, including necessary and reasonable repairs, maintenance and replacement). But see Bednar v. Bednar, 688 A.2d 1200 (Pa. Super. 1997) (in Pennsylvania, a cotenant, by statute, is legally obliged to pay only his or her share; cotenants who voluntarily pay other cotenants' shares are not entitled to contribution from that cotenant); Richardson v. Gibson, 793 So. 2d 801 (Ala. Civ. App. 2001) (a co-tenant in exclusive occupation is entitled to contribution from co-tenants of their pro-rata share of taxes paid by occupying cotenant but not of insurance premiums, pest control expenses and replacement of the water heater).

(n8)Footnote 165. Lawrence v. Harvey, 607 P.2d 551 (Mont. 1980); Henson v. Henson, 72 S.E.2d 873 (N.C. 1952); Hawkins v. Hawkins, 464 N.E.2d 199 (Ohio Misc. 2d, Comm. Pl. 1984).

(n9)Footnote 166. Spence v. Spence, 195 So. 717 (Ala. 1940); Janik v. Janik, 474 N.E.2d 1054 (Ind. App. 1985); La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. § 4626; Hawkins v. Hawkins, 464 N.E.2d 199 (Ohio Misc. 2d, Comm. Pl. 1984).

(n10)Footnote 167. Stylianopoulos v. Stylianopoulos, 455 N.E.2d 477 (Mass. App. 1983), rev. denied, 459 N.E.2d 824 (Mass. 1984); Cahill v. Kerins, 784 So. 2d 685 (La. App. 2d Cir. 2001) (co-tenant in exclusive possession may sue for contribution by co-tenants of their pro-rata share of mortgage; no off-set for value of exclusive possession; off-set was permissible against occupying co-tenant's charges for repair and maintenance).

(n11)Footnote 168. Bessen v. Glatt, 566 N.Y.S.2d 750 (1991).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.07

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.07 Costs of Litigation and Attorneys' Fees.

[Go To Supp]

Most states provide specific statutory directives on the apportionment of costs. Costs associated with partition typically include attorneys' fees for the common benefit, n169 fees and expenses of the commissioners or referees, compensation paid to the surveyor, reasonable costs of the title report, and any other expenses determined to be of common benefit to the parties. n170 Whether partition has resulted from partition in kind or sale, these costs are uniformly applied to the parties in relation to their proportionate interest in the property or the proceeds. n171 Where partition is in kind, these costs become a lien on the owner's allotted parcel superior to other liens. n172 The one consistent exception to the general rule of cost allocation is that, where costs are generated by a dispute between fewer than all the co-owners or other interested parties, costs specific to that dispute will be shared only by the parties to the dispute. n173

States that make statutory provision for attorneys' fees fall into two groups. The majority provide for the inclusion of attorneys' fees in the general costs to be allocated to the parties regardless of which parties' attorneys generated the fees, to the extent those fees were generated for the common good of the co-owners and other interested parties. n174 A minority authorize inclusion only of plaintiff's attorney's fees and only to the extent such fees were generated for the common good. n175 The determination of which fees accrued to the common good is made by the court. n176 The burden of proof is on the party seeking the award of such fees.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/2 sale! w/50 litigation w/5 cost! partition w/2 sale! w/30 attorney! w/5 fee!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 169. See discussion infra at nn.174-176. See also Williams v. McIntyre, 632 So. 2d 446 (Ala. 1993) (upholding award of attorneys' fees); Diaz v. Security Union Title Ins. Co., 639 So. 2d 1004 (Fla. App. 1994) (awarded attorneys' fees in a partition suit where the fees were accrued in proceedings outside the partition action, because those outside proceedings had established and protected the interests of the cotenants); Buchanan v. Mitchell, 873 S.W.2d 945 (Mo. App. 1994) (factors a court may consider in awarding attorneys' fees include "amount and character of the legal services rendered, the nature and importance of the litigation, the decree of responsibility assumed by the attorney, the degree of professional skill and expertise the attorney demonstrates, and the value of the property."); Jernigan v. Jernigan, 678 So. 2d 1169 (Ala. 1996) (defendant's as well as plaintiff's attorneys' fees may be ordered paid out of common fund if and to the extent that defendant's attorney's efforts served the interests of all cotenants); Hopper v. Daniel, 38 S.W.3d 370 (Ark. App. 2001) (where case presented alternative claims, only one of which involved partition, award of attorney's fees was properly limited to those fees incurred in relation to partition claim).

(n2)Footnote 170. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 874.010.

(n3)Footnote 171. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.620; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-418; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 874.040; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 735; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.081; Idaho Code § 6-545; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 5/o17-125; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-21; Iowa Rules Civ. Proc. § 893 (all costs are to be advanced by the plaintiff and eventually apportioned per share except as to contests which are billed to the loser); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1003(5); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 381.135(11) (costs apportioned except costs associated with a specific dispute of law or fact, which are charged to the loser); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6516; Mass. Ann. Laws tit. 241, § 22 (rule applies unless court determines that an alternative allocation is more equitable); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.10; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 528.460; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-218; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.170; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:56-11; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-1; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-45; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.25; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 12, § 1515; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-22; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-24; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-45; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.480. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.081 (amended in 1995 to provide gender-neutral language).

(n4)Footnote 172. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.620; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-24; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-45.

(n5)Footnote 173. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.620; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-218; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.405; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-24; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-45; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.480.

(n6)Footnote 174. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 874.010; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 64.081; Idaho Code § 6-545; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-4-21; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-218; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-8; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-45; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5307.25; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.405; S.C. Code Ann. § 15-61-110; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-24; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-121; Utah Code Ann. § 78-39-45; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.480; Wyo. Stat. § 1-32-101.

(n7)Footnote 175. Ark. Code Ann. §§ 18-60-419, 18-60-419; Iowa Code Ann. § 894 (fee is calculated as percentage of appraised price if partition in kind or sale price); La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. § 4613 (but this fee is not to be paid out of the share of any party represented in the proceeding by an attorney); Kuller v. Kuller, 109 N.W.2d 561 (Minn. 1961); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-31; Richards v. Stuckenberg, 478 S.W.2d 405 (Mo. App. 1972). Lux v. Schroeder, 645 N.E.2d 1114 (Ind. App. 1995) (statute authorizing plaintiff attorney's fees not intended to apply when all sides are represented by counsel, defendant contests matters in the complaint and the defendant does not derive a benefit from plaintiff's counsel's services).

(n8)Footnote 176. Padgett v. Haston, 651 S.W.2d 460 (Ark. 1983); O'Neill v. O'Neill, 551 So. 2d 228 (Miss. 1989) (plaintiff's attorneys' fees are awarded at discretion of court, but usually will not be allowed if suit is resisted and defendant employs an attorney in good faith); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-8; In re Marriage of Marr, 638 N.E.2d 303 (Ill. App. 1994) (no attorneys' fees to plaintiff where defendant proffered substantial defense in good faith); Buchanan v. Mitchell, 873 S.W.2d 945 (Mo. App. 1994) (plaintiff's attorneys' fees should not be awarded for those services that did not inure to the defendant's benefit, as where plaintiff and defendant were contesting the size of their shares); Parks v. Rapp, 907 S.W.2d 286 (Mo. App. 1995) (court lists appropriate factors in determining amount of attorneys' fees as "consideration of the amount and character of legal services rendered, the nature and importance of the litigation, the degree of responsibility imposed or incurred by the attorney, and the degree of professional ability, skill and experience called for and exercised" as well as "the prime and most significant factor" -- the sale price; Rahat v. Golmirzaie, 966 S.W.2d 883 (Ark. 1998) (notes that statutory provisions for attorneys' fees in partition actions exist to reflect an appreciation for "the painstaking preparation before filing of the suit and the necessity for meticulous compliance with procedural requirements thereafter... .") The Rahat court found nothing per se unreasonable in basing the amount of attorney's fees on a percentage of the sales price of the partitioned property. Hopper v. Daniel, 38 S.W.3d 370 (Ark. App. 2001) (where case presented alternative claims, only one of which involved partition, award of attorney's fees was properly limited to those fees incurred in relation to partition claim).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.08

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.08 Partition of Successive Interests.

Partition developed as a remedy for parties with concurrent ownership interests in real property. The applicability of partition rules to circumstances involving successive interest holders has provided an array of troublesome questions for courts.

The traditional rule was that, because co-owners of remainders or reversionary interests did not have a right to possession, they could not maintain a partition action even of only their future interests. This ban was recognized because the policies behind recognition of a right of partition were not implicated. "[P]ersons having estates in land under which they had no right to possession, were in no respect inconvenienced or damnified by the undivided possession held by others." n177 A minority of states continue to adhere to this rule. n178

Some states have changed this rule by statute and authorize partition actions among the holders of future interests when a life tenant is still in possession. n179 This authorization is limited to those who hold vested as opposed to contingent interests. n180 The reason for this rule appears to be that those with vested interests are legally assumed to have a future possessory interest while those whose interests are contingent may never have a possessory interest. Where there are only two estate holders, one holding a life estate and one holding a future interest, there are no "co-owned" interests and partition is generally not allowed by either of the estate holders. n181

Although these statutes allow partition of future interests, such partition normally cannot affect a life tenant of the whole of the property without the life tenant's consent. n182 Without such consent the partition must be made subject to the possessory rights of the life tenant. n183 Some statutory schemes do permit sale of a life estate in part but not all of the land under certain circumstances. n184 Where the life estate is sold, most statutory schemes offer the life tenant a choice. The court may, if the life tenant consents, value the interest of the life tenant, usually through annuity principles, in order to adequately compensate the life tenant. n185 The life tenant is paid that sum outright. If the tenant does not consent, the court must determine a just sum to be invested for the life tenant. n186 In essence the court determines the value of the share to which the life estate attaches and gives the life tenant a "life estate" in that sum of money. The principal is then turned over to the future interest holder at the termination of the life estate. In other states, the statute does not differentiate between situations where the life tenant consents or does not but simply provides that where a sale is made the court shall order investment of the proceeds in such a way as to protect all persons having an interest in the proceeds. n187 Where partition is part in kind and part through sale and there is a life estate in an undivided share of the property, the life estate may be set off in the unsold portion. n188 Many states apply these same rules in favor of a tenant for years. n189

In most jurisdictions a life tenant, although in possession, may not compel a partition against a remainderman. n190 A life tenant may be able to compel a partition in kind against another life tenant who co-owns the life estate, n191 but will not be able to compel a partition sale without the consent of the remaindermen. n192 If, however, a life tenant co-owns the life estate with one co-owner and co-owns the remainder with another, the life tenant may have partition because of co-ownership of the fee simple estate. n193 An example of a state's unwillingness to extend this rule is provided by Barden v. Pappas: n194

A, the life tenant, brought an action for partition against the two remaindermen, B and C. B agreed to the partition; C did not and challenged on the ground that A had no right to the relief requested. A then transferred one-half of A's life interest to B and B transferred one-half of B's remainder to A. The court refused to allow the life tenant to partition against C in this circumstance, holding that the rule that a life tenant cannot maintain partition against a remainderman "is not affected by the fact that the plaintiff shares an interest with one of the defendants in the remainder." n195

A few states will allow a life tenant to seek partition but will leave the court discretion as to whether to order it. California's statutory section is illustrative:

> Partition as to successive estates in the property shall be allowed if it is in the best interest of all the parties. The court shall consider whether the possessory interest has become unduly burdensome by reason of taxes or other charges, expense of ordinary or extraordinary repairs, character of the property and change in the character of the property since creation of the estates, circumstances under which the estates were created and change in the circumstances since creation of the estates, and all other factors that would be considered by a court of equity having in mind the intent of the creator of the successive estates and the interests and needs of the successive owners. n196

Missouri's statute is similar, authorizing suit by a defendant for a partition sale on the same grounds.

Georgia allows partition in kind by a life tenant against remaindermen but does not allow a sale. n197 This allowance is given only to owners of an undivided portion for life, not to sole owners of a life estate. n198

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/30 successive w/2 interest! partition w/30 life w/2 tenant!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 177. A.C. Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition § 440 at 582-83 (San Francisco: Bancroft-Whitney 2d ed. 1886).

(n2)Footnote 178. Weed v. Knox, 27 So. 2d 419 (Fla. 1946) (one remainderman cannot bring a suit for partition against another remainderman where there is an outstanding life estate in a third person); Ga. Code Ann. § 85-1504; Idaho Code § 6-501; Mass. Laws Ann. ch. $1, § ; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3308; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-3; Golick v. Lukus, 215 A.2d 551 (N.J. Super. 1965); N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-01; Foppe v. Foppe, 103 N.E.2d 319 (Ohio Mis. 1951); Fry v. Stetson, 87 A.2d 305 (Pa. 1952).

(n3)Footnote 179. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.260 (held to authorize suit for partition among co-remaindermen in Dimond v. Kelly, 629 P.2d 533 (Alas. 1981)); Ark. Code Ann. § 18-60-401; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.710; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 721; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-1; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-17-5-1; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 547-C:1; N.J. Stat. Ann. §

2A:56-37; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 42-5-1.

(n4)Footnote 180. Hayden v. McNamee, 63 N.E.2d 876 (Ill. 1945) (citing rule that where the life estate extends to the whole estate and the remainder is contingent, the contingent remainderman may not seek partition); Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990) (contingent remainders are not subject to partition); Garland v. Raunheim, 288 N.Y.S.2d 417 (1968).

(n5)Footnote 181. Beach v. Beach, 74 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2003) (Colorado law did not allow a mother to partition her life estate interest in real property from her daughter's remainder interest in the same property); Bernat v. Kivior, 494 N.E.2d 425 (Mass. App. 1986); In re Estate of Alban, 591 N.W.2d 725 (Min. App. 1999) (life tenant cannot have partition against remainderman because they are not co-tenants).

(n6)Footnote 182. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.320; Aniton v. Robinson, 134 So. 2d 764 (Ala. 1961) (one who has a mere reversionary interest cannot compel partition against one owning an outstanding life estate in and to the entire property); Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 737; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.08; N.C. Gen. Stat. 46-23; Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-27-123; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.110. But see Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.840(c) (authorizing sale of whole property and placement of proceeds in trust with life income paid to life tenant and corpus paid to remainderman at termination of life estate).

(n7)Footnote 183. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.230; Monroe v. Monroe, 294 S.W.2d 338 (Ark. 1956); Schmidt v. Schmidt, 143 N.E. 75 (Ill. 1924); Heintz v. Wilhelm, 186 N.W. 305 (Minn. 1922); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-23; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.265; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-25; Puryear v. Belcher, a*4 S.W.2d 344 (Tenn. 1981);* Wis. Stat. Ann. § 842.11.

(n8)Footnote 184. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.450 (if life tenant of part of property is a party, court may set off a portion of property to which the life estate attaches and either sell that part subject to the life estate or "if in the judgment of the court a due regard to the interest of all the parties requires the sale of that estate also, the sale may be ordered"); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.840; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.315.

(n9)Footnote 185. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.460; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-12; Idaho Code § 6-527; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.26; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-29-326; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.300; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 46-24; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-27; Or. Rev. Stat. 105.320; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-53; Utah Code Ann. 78-39-27.

(n10)Footnote 186. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.470; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-12; Idaho Code § 6-528; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 558.26; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.310; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-28; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105-325.

(n11)Footnote 187. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 52-500.

(n12)Footnote 188. Alaska Stat. § 09.45.340; Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 873.830; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-12; Idaho Code § 6-519; Mont. Code. Ann. § 70-29-214; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 39.220; N.D. Cent. Code § 32-16-19; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.310; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.140.

(n13)Footnote 189. Alaska Stat. §§ 09.45.320, 09.45.340; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 668-12; S.C. Codified Laws Ann. § 21-45-29; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 7.52.140.

(n14)Footnote 190. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1220; Garcia-Tunon v. Garcia-Tunon, 472 So. 2d 1378 (Fla. App. 1985); Rekovsky v. Glisczinski, 212 N.W. 595 (Minn. 1927); Burrow v. Haywood, 466 S.W.2d 892 (Tenn. 1971); Tex. Prop Code Ann. § 23.003; Whitby v. Overton, 413 S.E.2d 42 (Va. 1992); Plano Mfg. Co. v. Kindschi, 111 N.W. 680 (Wis. 1907); Peters v. Robinson, 636 A.2d 926 (Del. 1994) (life tenant may not seek partition against remainderman).

(n15)Footnote 191. Cottingham v. Love, 99 So. 907 (Ala. 1924); Whittaker v. Porter, 151 N.E. 905 (Ill. 1926); Albro v. Allen, 454 N.W.2d 85 (Mich. 1990) (life tenant co-owners may have partition in kind of life estate only); Rupp

v. Molitor, 9 S.W.2d 609 (Mo. 1928); R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-15-2 (Michie 1984).

(n16)Footnote 192. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-172. An interesting application of these rules is found in Laired v. Salata, 659 So. 2d 65 (Ala. 1995).

(n17)Footnote 193. Mich. Stat. Ann. § 27A.3316; Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-3. Westerdale v. Grossman, 728 N.E.2d 67 (Ill. App. 2000) (the fact that a remainder was contingent did not bar a life tenant from seeking partition).

(n18)Footnote 194. 532 So. 2d 707 (Fla. App. 1988).

(n19)Footnote 195. 532 So. 2d 707, 709 (Fla. App. 1988).

(n20)Footnote 196. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 872.010. See also Golick v. Lukas, 215 A.2d 551 (N.J. Super. 1965); Alaska Stat. § 09.45.260.

(n21)Footnote 197. Ga. Code Ann. § 44-6-172.

(n22)Footnote 198. Williams v. Colleran, 195 S.E.2d 413 (Ga. 1973).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 38.09

AUTHOR: Patricia Reyhan Albany Law School Union University

§ 38.09 Partition of Condominiums or Time-Share Arrangements.

§ 38.09(a) Condominiums.

With the advent of condominiums as a popular type of property ownership, a number of states established special rules to govern one aspect of condominium ownership. In the typical condominium arrangement, the owner owns not only an individual unit but an interest in the common areas of the condominium development, which each unit owner owns in common with the other unit owners. Some states provide by statute that condominium owners cannot sue to partition the commonly owned areas. n199 A few others recognize this basic rule but provide exceptions where material damage has occurred to the common areas and the condominium association has determined not to repair the damage, or where, after a statutorily defined time, the entire condominium project is economically unprofitable and the condominium association has determined not to undertake improvements to make it profitable. n200

Where partition of a unit is sought by co-owners thereof, the normal partition rules apply with the result that partition by sale rather than partition in kind is ordered.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: partition w/30 condominium! or time-shar!

§ 38.09(b) Time-Shares.

The partition rule regarding time-shares, where set out by statute, appears to be uniform. An owner of a time share may not bring an action for partition except as permitted in the time-share instrument. n201

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 199. Fla. Stat. Ann § 718.107; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 33, § 1602-107; Mich. Stat. Ann. § 26:50 (137).

(n2)Footnote 200. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-74; Idaho Code § 55-1511; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 765, § 605/8; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183A, § 5; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-9-15; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 448.140(4); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-23-405; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 117.050; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 47A-7; N.D. Cent. Code § 47.04.1-9; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit.

60, § 527; Or. Rev. Stat. § 100.515.

(n3)Footnote 201. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-14-307; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 721.22; Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. ch. 735, § 100/11; La. Rev. Stat. Ann. art. 9:1131.7; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 33, § 592; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183B, § 14; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 93A-43; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-41-204; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 221.014; Va. Code Ann. § 55-372; W. Va. Code § 36-9-20.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.01

Supp. to § 38.01 Introduction.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Sclafani v. Dweck, 856 A.2d 487 (Conn. App. 2004) (holding that in Conn., right to partition is discretionary to the court in equity); McMillan v. Follansbee, 93 P.3d 809 (Or. App. 2004) ; Taylor v. Canterbury, 92 P.3d 961 (Colo. 2004) (recognizing that a voluntary partition severs a joint tenancy).

Add:

Southard v. Southard, 105 S.W.3d 560 (Mo. App. 2003) (holding that partition of land is statutory according to state); Ark Land Co. v. Harper, 599 S.E.2d 754, 758-59 (W. Va. 2004) .

See, John Mark Huff, "Chop It Up for Sell It Off: An Examination of the Evolution of West Virginia's Partition Statute," 111 W. Va. L. Rev. 169 (Fall, 2008).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.02

Supp. to § 38.02 Voluntary Partition.

Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 52-71

§ 38.02(a) General Principles. [Go To Main]

Add:

Burdette v. Estate of Burns, 200 S.W.3d 358 (Tex. App. 2006) (equal partition settlement agreement and stipulation was not set aside by the court).

Eisenberg v. Tuchman, 892 A.2d 1016 (Conn. App. 2006) (Cotentants agreed to stipulate to the proposed partition).

Add:

Glovier v. Dingus, 4 S.E.2d 551 (1939) (after executing a voluntary parol partition followed by a written agreement with the other side, a party was not entitled to a judicial partition instead).

Add:

Lack v. Payne, 151 S.W.3d 862 (Mo. App. 2004) (holding that partition is appropriate when the trial court is asked to divide the interests of the property where ownership is not at issue).

Add:

Bissonnette v. Ventura, 2004 R.I. Super. LEXIS 202 (R.I. Super. 2004) (recognizing availability of partition by sale as valid).

Add:

But see In re Estate of Duran, 66 P.3d 326 (N.M. 2003) (holding that oral partition agreements are nevertheless subject to other contract restrictions [here oral partition declared void because minor did not validate partition agreement]).

§ 38.02(b) Effect of Voluntary Partition. [Go To Main]

Add:

Young Properties v. Wolflick, 87 P.3d 235 (Colo. App. 2003) (holding that in partition proceedings, court need not create new interests in property, but must only severe unity of possession).

Wittich v. Wittich, 948 So. 2d 195 (La. App. 2006) (arbitrator's decision regarding partition of property was not set aside).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.03

Supp. to § 38.03 Involuntary Partition.

[Go To Main]

§ 38.03(a) Rules of Law. [Go To Main]

§ 38.03(a)(1) Partition as a Matter of Right.

Add:

Watson v. Pascal, 811 N.Y.S.2d 422 (2006) (a former landowner claiming she was tricked into conveying was not entitled to seek partition).

Add:

See e.g.,; Brewer v. Schalansky, 102 P.3d 1145 (Kan. 2004) ; Arthur v. Dist. of Columbia, 857 A.2d 473 (D.C. App. 2004) .

Add:

Sclafani v. Dweck, 856 A.2d 487 (Conn. App. 2004) (holding that no person can be compelled to remain the owner with another of real estate); Food Services Corp. v. Rheam, 145 S.W.3d 484 (Mo. App. 2004) (holding that partition is available at request of one or more of the joint tenants).

Add:

United States v. Wendling, 359 F. Supp. 2d 850 (D. N.D. 2005) .

Add:

Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (holding that partition is available only where cotenants have current posssessory interests).

Jackson v. Estate of Green, 771 N.W.2d 675 (Mich. 2009) (a tenant's estate could not pursue an already commenced partition action after the tenant's death).

Add:

But see Sclafani v. Dweck, 856 A.2d 487 (Conn. App. 2004) (holding that a court has power to create easements where such an exercise will facilitate an equitable partition in kind).

Add:

Lack v. Payne, 151 S.W.3d 862 (Mo. App. 2004) (holding that trial court did not abuse its equitable powers in quieting title in Plaintiff, rather than partitioning property, where ownership of property was at issue); Pedersen v. Brook, 851 A.2d 627 (N.H. 2004) (noting that court has power within partition proceedings to also settle title concerns).

§ 38.03(a)(2) Exceptions to the Right.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i) Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(A) Written Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

Add:

Libeau v. Fox, 892 A.2d 1068 (Del. 2006) (joint tenant by written agreement waived right to partition).

Williams v. Moody Land & Cattle, L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2302 , unreported opinion, (Tex. App. 2005). But see McMillan v. Follansbee, 93 P.3d 809 (Or. App. 2004) (holding that although one can choose to waive right to partition, written waiver of right to partition is unenforceable where no clear and unequivocal manifestation to waive is present).

Add:

Cf. Brewer v. Schalansky, 102 P.3d 1145 (Kan. 2004) (holding that because right to partition have a favored status, any waivers of such should be strictly construed).

Add:

Cf. McMillan v. Follansbee, 93 P.3d 809 (Or. App. 2004) (holding that although one can choose to waive right to partition, such waivers must be both clearly and manifestly accepted to be enforceable).

§ 38.03(a)(2)(i)(C) Implied Agreements Waiving the Right to Partition.

Add:

Brewer v. Schalansky, 102 P.3d 1145 (Kan. 2004) .

Add:

McMillan v. Follansbee, 93 P.3d 809 (Or. App. 2004) (holding that although one can choose to waive right to partition, written waiver of right to partition is unenforceable where no clear and unequivocal manifestation to waive is present).

Add:

See Mansour Properties LLC. v. I-85/GA. 20 Ventures, Inc., 592 S.E.2d 836 (Ga. 2004) (holding that a "right of first refusal" agreement implied a waiver of right to partition).

§ 38.03(a)(2)(iii) Equitable Consideration Barring the Right to Partition.

Add:

See Adair Holdings, LLC. v. Duwa, 686 N.W.2d 235 (Iowa App. 2004) (recognizing that presence of "special equities" in a particular case may limit absolute right to partition); O'Connell v. O'Connell, 694 N.W.2d 429 (Wisc. App. 2005) (noting that in equitable actions like that of partition, courts will not enforce it to the extent of doing inequity to others). Cf. Delucca v. Delucca, 871 A.2d 72 (N.H. 2005) (noting that a court's partition powers are equitable in nature, and court must consider circumstances of each case to achieve complete justice); Hunt v. Hunt, 788 N.Y.S. 2d 219 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) (noting that equitable nature of partition action grants court authority to adjust the rights of parties so each receives his or her proper share of the property and its benefits).

§ 38.03(b)(1) Complaint or Prayer for Partition.

Add:

Golden v. Waterhouse, 953 So. 2d 927 (La. Ct. App. 2007) (the trial court that had entered the judgment of divorce had continuing jurisdiction to partition the property).

Cf. Kimura v. Kamalo, 107 P.3d 430 (Haw. 2005) (holding that court may use its powers in equity to partition on the behalf of unknown owners, even if such owners do not directly make an appearance in the partition action).

add new text and footnote 85.1 at end of subsection:

The state constitution may guarantee a right to a jury trial in a partition action. n85.1

§ 38.03(b)(2) Parties--Plaintiff.

add:

Mayfair Investment Corp. v. Bryant, 922 N.E.2d 123 (Ind. App. 2010) (An owner of a one-sixth interest in a tract was entitled to bring an action for partition of the tract).

Add:

Arthur v. District of Columbia, 857 A.2d 473 (D.C. App. 2004) (recognizing that neither cotenant may unilaterally seek partition of property held by tenancy by the entirety); Scarison, Inc. v. Paracha, 777 N.Y.S. 2d 131 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) (holding that property held by tenancy by the entirety is not partionable so long as the marriage exists, even where one owner's part interest was bought by a subsequent purchaser at a judicial sale); In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2004) (same).

Add after But see:

In re Sampath, 314 B.R. 73 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2004) (holding that creditors have all the rights of an individual cotenant-debtor and may partition, but not where the cotenant has no such individual right [as in the case of property held by tenancy by the entirety]).

§ 38.03(b)(3) Parties--Defendant.

Add:

Ransom v. Holman, 608 S.E.2d 600 (Ga. 2005) (holding that defendant was correctly dismissed because he no longer holds no interest in the property in this case).

§ 38.03(b)(4) Intervention.

Add:

Coker Properties, L.P. v. Brooks, 604 S.E.2d 766 (Ga. 2004) (holding that former cotenant had no right to intervene in partition action between successors of original cotenants).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 85.1. See, e.g., Gilman v. Lake Sunapee Properties, LLC, 977 A.2d 483 (N.H. 2009) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.04

Supp. to § 38.04 Physical Partition or Partition in Kind.

[Go To Main]

Add:

McCorison v. Warner, 859 A.2d 609 (Conn. Super. 2004) (holding partition in kind is preferred method of partition); Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (holding same); Ark Land Co. v. Harper, 599 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 2004) (holding same).

Add:

Sheets v. Simms, 138 P.3d 1249 (Kan. App. 2006) (partition in kind not ordered because it was not practicable).

Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (holding that partition in kind should be ordered unless great prejudice to one or more cotenants is shown); Delucca v. Delucca, 871 A.2d 72 (N.H. 2005) (holding that court must determine viability of partition in kind without causing great prejudice to any cotenant before ordering partition by sale).

Add:

Hunt v. Hunt, 788 N.Y.S.2d 219 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004 (holding that court may partition by sale based upon parties' preference for such).

Add:

Lasseigne v. Baker, 924 So. 2d 1074 (La. Ct. App. 2006) (No. 05-CA-734, Feb. 27, 2006, La. App.) (parcel not qualified to be partitioned in kind).

McCorison v. Warner, 859 A.2d 609 (Conn. Super. 2004) (holding that court could not partition in kind even though majority of cotenants wished to do so, because topography of land made it impracticable); Chaney v. Upchurch, 603 S.E.2d 255 (Ga. 2004) (noting that court may order sale when partition in kind cannot be done conveniently and sale would better suit the parties' interests); Entrada Co. v. Unopened Succession, 882 So. 2d 661 (La. App. 2004) (holding that court may not partition in kind when division would result in loss of [overall] value or inconvenience to cotenants); Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (holding great prejudice is shown when the value of the share of each in case of a partition would be materially less than the share of the money equivalent that each could probably obtain from the whole). See also Ark Land Co. v. Harper, 599 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 2004) (holding that in addition to the usual tests for impracticability of partition in kind, court may also consider longstanding ownership and sentimental or emotional interests).

McNamara v. Mossman, 230 P.3d 1286 (Colo. App. 2010) (partition in kind determined to not result in manifest prejudice to the parties).

Add:

Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) ; Ark Land Co. v. Harper, 599 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 2004) .

Add:

McCorison v. Warner, 859 A.2d 609 (Conn. Super. 2004) (holding that Conn. law authorizes court to either partition in kind or partition by sale, but not a combination of both).

§ 38.04(a) Partition in Kind. [Go To Main]

Add:

Flood v. Kalinyaprak, 84 P.3d 27 (Mont. 2004) (holding that where a party can prove unequal contribution towards the property to be partitioned, the property will be partitioned in proportion to each tenant's contribution); Bixler v. Oro Mgmt., LLC., 86 P.3d 843 (Wyo. 2004) (holding same).

Gibbs v. Kashak, 883 N.E.2d 825 (Ind. App. 2008) (the court did not abuse its discretion in ordering a partition in kind).

Add:

Kimura v. Kamalo, 107 P.3d 430 (Haw. 2005) (commissioner undertook to partition land commensurate with order of the court so to do); Laurita v. Estate of Moran, 607 S.E.2d 506 (W. Va. 2004) (accepting commissioner's recommendation in manner of partitioning in kind).

Add:

Romero v. Bernell, 603 F. Supp. 2d 1333 (D. N.M. 2009) (partition ordered despite argument that associated inchoate wind power rights were not capable of being partitioned).

Laurita v. Estate of Moran, 607 S.E.2d 506 (W. Va. 2004) (recognizing that commissioner's report is not final and may be rejected by the court).

Insert new footnote 121.1 after "The statutes and case law give relatively little guidance on the proper method of physically dividing the property except to mandate that the division reflect the number of shares and the fractional size of the shares (where the land is held in tenancy in common)." n121.1

Add:

In re Last Will and Testament of Lynn, 878 So. 2d 1052 (Miss. App. 2004) (holding that court may order further partitioning where prior partitioning resulting in gross inequities amongst shares).

§ 38.04(c) Allocation of Shares. [Go To Main]

Add:

Cf. In re Last Will and Testament of Lynn, 878 So. 2d 1052 (Miss. App. 2004) (holding that where "improvements" actually decreased the value of the land to be partitioned, those "improvements" were appropriately ordered destroyed by the responsible parties before final determination of the partition).

Add:

Zimmerman v. Marsh, 618 S.E.2d 898 (S.C. 2005) (partition by allotment).

Laurita v. Estate of Moran, 607 S.E.2d 506 (W. Va. 2004) (holding that cotenant is entitled to have share of partitioned land allotted adjacent to land he may already hold if such can be done without damage to the interests of other cotenants).

§ 38.04(d) Incidental Effects of Physical Partition. [Go To Main]

Add:

Cf. Clark v. Dady, 131 S.W.3d 382 (Mo. App. 2004) (noting that "[i]n the case of a partition in kind, reimbursement for expenses is effectuated by placing an equitable lien on the property partitioned to the other party").

FOOTNOTES:
(n2)Footnote 121.1. But see Delucca v. Delucca, 871 A.2d 72 (N.H. 2005) (holding that in New Hampshire the "primary method of partition is by division of the land itself by metes and bounds among the tenants in common").

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.05

Supp. to § 38.05 Partition by Sale.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Cathey v. McPhail & Associates, Inc., 989 So.2d 494 (Miss. App. 2008) (the burden of proving the property was not subject to partition in kind was met).

Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (acknowledging that court may order partition by only when there is sufficient evidence of great prejudice to a party); Delucca v. Delucca, 871 A.2d 72 (N.H. 2005) (noting that trial court should consider certain factors [here, value of land as a whole versus value of land subdivided into lots] before ordering partition by sale); Ark Land Co. v. Harper, 599 S.E.2d 754 (W. Va. 2004) (holding that court may consider evidence other than value of land to be partitioned [such as longtime ownership and emotional attachment] when determining whether partition in kind or by sale is appropriate).

McCormick v. Pickert, 856 N.Y.S.2d 306 (2008) (the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering a partition by sale before an accounting had occurred); Keen v. Campbell, 249 S.W.3d 927 (Mo. App. 2008) (substantial evidence supported a determination that partition in kind could not be accomplished without prejudice to the parties).

§ 38.05(a) Mechanics of Sale. [Go To Main]

Add:

Hataway v. Nicholls, 893 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. 2005) (special master ordered to conduct sale).

Add:

Hataway v. Nicholls, 893 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. 2005) (special master ordered to deliver deed to the "highest bidder for cash").

Add:

Long v. Spencer, 137 S.W.3d 923 (Tex. App. 2004) (holding that any objections to the terms of a sale must be made before property is sold).

Add:

But see Necaise v. State, 916 So. 2d 553 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005) (holding that appellate court may not set aside sale for low price alone when trial court did not so find).

§ 38.05(b) Alternate Method--Appraisal and Sale to One of the Co-Owners. [Go To Main]

Add:

McCorison v. Warner, 859 A.2d 609 (Conn. Super. 2004) (holding that court cannot order one cotenant to buy the interests of another).

Add:

Ala. Code § 35-6-100 (2005).

§ 38.05(c) Disposition of Proceeds of Sale. [Go To Main]

Add:

Sullivan v. Dorsa, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 547 (Cal. App. 2005) (referee's attorney's fees); Segal v. Segal, 863 A.2d 221 (Conn. App. 2004) (judgment lien to be satisfied out of proceeds of sale); Kimura v. Kamalo, 107 P.3d 430 (Haw. 2005) (general costs to be apportioned according to proportionate interests in property to be partitioned); Parker v. Shecut, 597 S.E.2d 793 (S.C. 2004) (escrow agent's fees and costs of appraisal to be shared according to proportionate interest in property). But see Pedersen v. Brook, 851 A.2d 627 (N.H. 2004) (holding that "[e]quity does not require that the proceeds in partition always be divided strictly according to the relative value of the estates held by the respective parties").

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.06

Supp. to § 38.06 Final Accounting--Improvements, Expenses, Rents and Profits

[Go To Main]

Add:

Clark v. Dady, 131 S.W.3d 382 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) (recognizing that court is authorized to award 100% of the property in kind to one party and place an equitable lien on it for reimbursement of repairs and improvements made to it by the other party).

Add:

Bahnmiller v. Bahnmiller, 181 P.3d 443 (Idaho 2008) (compensation for improvements ordering for one of the tenants in common upon partition).

Add:

Laughon v. O'Braitis, 602 S.E.2d 108 (S.C.App. 2004) (sister entitled to credit based on increase in value of property as a result of her renovation of living room, dining room, and kitchen despite doing so unilaterally).

Add:

Moises v. Guzman, 904 So. 2d 1 (La. Ct. App. 2004) (co-owner entitled to reimbursement for money spent on upkeep of property even when not only personal payments, but payments from companies the co-owner owned, also made payments on the property); Clark v. Dady, 131 S.W.3d 382 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) (recognizing entitlement to reimbursement for taxes, insurance and necessary repairs and improvements on the property); Schmidt v. Wittinger, 687 N.W.2d 479 (N.D. 2004) (parties entitled to reimbursement for another farmers share of the taxes and other expenses they paid for him). But see Hutchins v. Payless Auto Sales, Inc., 85 P.3d 1010 (Wyo. 2004) (Party not entitled to reimbursement for repairs and improvements when business foreclosed on the co-tenant's property because party could not establish that business was liable for waste or loss of rent the co-tenant caused the party). England v. Alicea, 1090625 (Ind. App. 2005) (husband must reimburse ex-wife for the amount she spent remodeling the real estate because divorce decree required).

Add:

Moises v. Guzman, 904 So. 2d 1 (La. Ct. App. 2004) (co-owner entitled to reimbursement for mortgage payments made on property even when not only personal payments, but payments from companies the co-owner owned, also made payments on the property); Clark v. Dady, 131 S.W.3d 382 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) (recognizing that parties are entitled to reimbursement for finance or mortgage payments made on the property); England v. Alicea, 1090625 (Ind. App. 2005) (husband required to reimburse ex-wife for amount she spent on mortgage payments).

Add:

McCorison v. Warner, 859 A.2d 609 (Conn. Super. 2004) (man required to pay taxes and rent for occupancy and use of a building and surrounding farm that were part of the partitioned property); Nicholson v. Johnston 855 A.2d 97 (Pa. Super. 2004) (mortgage expenses incurred by one party offset any claims by the other party for rental payments).

Add:

Clark v. Dady, 131 S.W.3d 382 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) (recognizing that party out of possession, even if not ousted, is entitled to reimbursement for his share of the reasonable rental value of the premises during the other party's exclusive possession if the party in possession is given credit for expenditures made in maintaining and improving the property); Laughon v. O'Braitis, 602 S.E.2d 108 (S.C.App. 2004) (sister required to pay for sibling's share of the property although sibling not considered ousted); Parker v. Shecut, 597 S.E.2d 793 (S.C. 2004) (brother who ousted co-tenant sister required to pay her one-half rental value of the property minus allowable expenses).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 38 PARTITION

4-38 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 38.07

Supp. to § 38.07 Costs of Litigation and Attorneys' Fees.

[Go To Main]

add:

Wedge v. Millard, 228 P.3d 452 (Mont. 2010) (awarded attorney's fees in connection with motion to compel and motion directing transfer of property).

add:

Poruba v. Poruba, 919 N.E.2d 1066 (Ill. App. 2009) (sole life tenant not permitted to bring partition action against sole remainderman; they are not considered "co-owners" of the property).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 39.syn

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.syn Synopsis to Chapter 39: LEASEHOLD ESTATES

§ 39.01 Overview of Leasehold Estates.

§ 39.02 Historical Development of Leasehold Estates.

§ 39.02(a) Conveyance and Contract Characteristics.

§ 39.02(b) Real Property or Personal Property Characteristics.

§ 39.03 Real Property Interests of Landlords and Tenants.

§ 39.04 Leaseholds Distinguished from Other Relationships.

§ 39.04(a) Sign Cases.

§ 39.04(b) Concession Cases.

§ 39.04(c) Housing Related to Employment.

§ 39.04(d) Lodging Cases.

§ 39.04(e) Possession Related to Purchase Contract.

§ 39.04(f) Lender in Possession.

§ 39.05 Traditional Types of Leasehold Estates.

§ 39.05(a) Tenancy (or Term) for Years.

§ 39.05(b) Periodic Tenancy.

§ 39.05(b)(1) Circumstances.

§ 39.05(b)(2) Characteristics.

§ 39.05(b)(3) The Residual Tenancy.

§ 39.05(c) Tenancy at Sufferance.

§ 39.05(d) Tenancy at Will.

§ 39.06 Creation and Termination of Leasehold Estates.

§ 39.06(a) Creation.

§ 39.06(a)(1) Invalid Leases.

§ 39.06(a)(2) Enforceable Contracts to Execute a Lease.

§ 39.06(a)(3) Interesse Termini.

§ 39.06(a)(4) Statute of Frauds Compliance Issues.

§ 39.06(a)(5) Invalid Tenancy for Years Recognized as Another Form of Tenancy.

§ 39.06(a)(6) Part Performance and Estoppel Exceptions to Compliance with the Statute of Frauds.

§ 39.06(a)(7) Fully Enforceable Leases.

§ 39.06(b) Termination.

§ 39.06(b)(1) Termination of the Various Forms of Tenancy.

§ 39.06(b)(2) Landlord Remedies.

§ 39.06(b)(3) Tenant Remedies.

§ 39.06(b)(4) Abandonment, Surrender and Mitigation of Damages.

§ 39.06(b)(5) Restrictions on Termination.

§ 39.06(b)(6) Summary Proceeding for Possession.

§ 39.07 Bibliography.

Professor James H. Backman
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.01

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.01 Overview of Leasehold Estates.

Property interests in residential apartments, commercial office space, retail space, and agricultural lands are commonly held as leasehold estates. In some locations, especially in Hawaii, it is common to find major property developments, including entire subdivisions or large skyscrapers on lands made available by the property owners under long-term leases, often of 99-year terms. The same historical common law doctrines and modern statutory rules governing leasehold estates apply whether the lease creates an interest in the tenant for a week or for several decades, and whether the property consists of space in a small apartment or storage shed or covers thousands of acres of undeveloped land. The common feature of all leasehold estates is the right of the lessee or tenant to possess specified real property in which the lessor or landlord has a greater estate or property interest. In every lease, the property interests in the property are shared between the landlord and the tenant. The landlord retains the ownership of the property as a future interest in the form of a reversion. The tenant obtains the present possessory interest in the leased property for the duration of the lease.

Leases of personal property are also common in our modern society. However, the interest created is not a leasehold estate, and the parties are not designated as landlord and tenant. These characteristics apply only to leases of real property. In fact, the law of leasehold estates -- most often called landlord/tenant law today -- developed in feudal England and became an important part of modern American land laws. n1 Many features of today's landlord/tenant doctrines result from that ancient land-based tradition, even though many leasehold estates, in particular leases of space in high-rise buildings, no longer have any connection to the land under the structure.

Doctrines affecting the landlord/tenant relationship have undergone more major revisions in the past generation than in many previous centuries. The changes are based on the shift in the primary object of the leasehold -- from the agricultural lease of land to the residential lease of dwellings and the commercial lease of business structures. The changes have occurred primarily through rejection of the traditional doctrine of caveat emptor and the replacement of the property doctrine of independent covenants by the contract rule that covenants are mutually dependent. n2

This chapter begins with a general overview of the forms of leasehold estates, including the relationship between the landlord and the tenant, the distinctions between leasehold estates and other interests resembling them, the characteristics of conveyance and contract, and the historical characterization of leasehold estates as both personal and real property interests. Historically, four distinct types of leasehold estates have been recognized, although today the distinctions have been modified so that many states now identify only two forms of residential leasehold estates: the tenancy for definite term and the periodic tenancy. n3 The other traditional designations of the tenancy at will and the tenancy at sufferance are far less frequently encountered. They are, however, still employed in many jurisdictions to designate leasehold interests which do not satisfy the definitions of the two dominant forms of leasehold estates. n4

The historical portion of this chapter explains the development of the traditional landlord/tenant doctrines. Crucial changes have resulted through statutes modifying the inherited common law and through judicial decisions, especially ones in recent decades. Governmental regulation of leases has become more common, particularly in residential leases. Courts and legislatures have expanded tenant rights by adopting consumer protection principles based on public policy as contained in local housing codes as the basis for imposing an implied warranty of habitability on residential lease arrangements. Important models for public regulation of landlord/tenant law have influenced widespread modification of the traditional law of leases. The Commissioners on Uniform State Laws have produced the Uniform Residential Landlord/Tenant Act. n5

A significant minority of states have adopted this Act. n6 The American Law Institute published the *Restatement (Second) of Pro*perty (Landlord and Tenant) in 1976. n7 The first *Restatement of Pro*perty did not originally cover landlord/tenant law. n8 Finally, the chapter focuses on modern leasing practices, including legislation affecting evictions, an area of landlord/tenant law generally requiring the assistance of lawyers through court action.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Restatement (Second) of Property, Introduction p. 1-6 (1977).

(n2)Footnote 2. Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.10 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (explaining the early development of landlord/tenant law and the traditional rule of caveat lessee).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.6, statutory note (2) (1977) (listing the states which have modified or done away with the common law presumptions which create a tenancy at will).

(n4)Footnote 4. Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.6, statutory note (1) (listing the states which have codified the common law presumption of tenancy at will). It is worth noting that almost every state now requires some period of advance notice before termination of a "tenancy at will." Id. § 1.6, statutory note (3).

(n5)Footnote 5. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 7b U.L.A. 427.

(n6)Footnote 6. States that have adopted the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act include: Alaska, Arizona, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 7b U.L.A. 427. (1974 & Supp. 1990) (Citing statutes whereby states have enacted U.R.L.T.A.).

(n7)Footnote 7. Restatement (Second) of Property (1977).

(n8)Footnote 8. The definition of "real property" from the Restatement of Property does not include estates for years, periodic tenancies, tenancies at will or tenancies at sufferance. Restatement of Property § 8 cmt. (1944).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.02

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.02 Historical Development of Leasehold Estates.

[Go To Supp]

Leasehold estates have existed since the early days of feudal England. The purposes served by these forms of property interests and the rights created in the parties have shifted over the centuries. They apparently had their beginnings in the money-lending business as a means of subverting the prohibitions on usury. n9 Leasehold interests were created in the lender by the owner of the property as a means of repaying a loan of money. The lender could use the land and its crops until the loan and the agreed value of the usurious "interest" had been satisfied. The primary function of leases over the centuries has changed, however. A landowner generally uses a leasehold estate to make income from property by transferring the possessory interest to another person. In the usual transaction, the landowner keeps a future interest in the property in the form of a reversion. Following expiration of the leasehold estate, the possessory right in the property reverts back to the landlord.

The law of leasehold estates developed in the context of agricultural lands. In recent centuries, commercial buildings and tenant housing have become the primary objects of leases. As the land itself has become less important than the structures on the land, statutes have altered many traditional leasehold doctrines. Shelter and commercial space in urban and suburban areas have replaced the historically primary focus on farm lands for a large majority of tenants in today's society.

Today, leasehold estates function in a wide variety of commercial and residential settings. Important protections for the tenant apply today in residential leasehold estates, even though the contractual lease may not mention them. n10 Commercial tenants can obtain similar protections if they are covered in the lease agreement.

§ 39.02(a) Conveyance and Contract Characteristics.

Historically, leases have been characterized as a conveyance and have been governed by the property laws of each state. n11 This view of a lease is warranted because a lease creates an interest in land. Accordingly, a tenant's interest is designated as an estate in land.

A lease is also a contract between the landlord and tenant. The typical written lease contains numerous covenants regarding the rights and duties of the parties to the lease agreement. Over the centuries, the contract feature of a lease has been less prominent than its nature as a property conveyance. n12 Although express provisions in the lease have been enforceable in courts, as in the case of any other form of contract, general principles governing the relationship were generally lifted from property law rather than contract law. n13

The essence of a lease was historically viewed as creation of possessory property rights in the land. General contract principles that might have applied were ignored. Thus, for example, the contract principle of frustration of purpose was generally not applied, even though the structures on the leased property may have been destroyed. n14 The tenant was still bound under the lease because the estate in land continued in the tenant despite loss of the structures. Another contract principle requiring mitigation of damages was likewise considered inapplicable in lease situations. n15 Thus, if a tenant abandoned the property, the landlord was permitted to ignore the tenant's action and continue to hold the tenant responsible for the rent. Because of the conveyance of the leasehold estate, the law viewed the tenant as holding the right to possession of the land, even though the tenant was no longer occupying the property. Today, the law has changed by often applying the mitigation of damages principle from contract law. n16 The court may inquire as to what the landlord could reasonably receive from a new tenant in determining the rent that can be recovered by the landlord from an abandoning tenant.

Thus courts and legislatures now pay increasing attention to the contract nature of a lease. The emphasis has shifted away from a focus on the rights obtained by a tenant in land owned by the landlord. The lease, especially in the residential context, is viewed as an agreement for space and services related to a building. The tenant is often recognized as a consumer; the product is a dwelling. Principles developed in other consumer contexts relating to protected expectations of the product quality or product liability have been increasingly applied in defining the rights of tenants. n17 Increased attention to health, safety, and the relative bargaining positions of the parties has resulted in newly articulated duties imposed on the landlord.

Because of the dual nature of the lease as a conveyance and a contract, lawmakers and judges are able to apply principles from both property law and contract law in establishing rules to govern the lease arrangement and in determining the respective rights and duties of the landlord and tenant.

In recent decades, the tenant's rights under a lease have been strengthened through two significant developments based on consumer protection principles applied to leases. First, tenants have received increased protections because of adoption of the implied warranty of habitability in residential leases to replace the age-old doctrine of caveat emptor. n18 Previously, the tenant was solely responsible for the physical condition of the property. Because a lease involved a conveyance of an estate in land, the protections available to the purchaser of goods were not considered applicable. So, although purchasers of goods were entitled to implied warranties regarding suitability of the personal property involved, through either a general warranty of merchantability or the more specific warranty of fitness for specific purposes, n19 tenants received no comparable implied warranties regarding the condition of the real property. Exceptions to this tenant responsibility existed. For example, if the landlord knew of defects in the condition of the premises that were not readily observable -- the latent defect exception to the doctrine of lessee beware -- then the landlord had both contractual and tort responsibilities based on the defective conditions. n20 Similarly, landlords were responsible for unsafe conditions if they existed because of the landlord's negligence in repairing or constructing the premises. n21 Much expansion of these tenant remedies has occurred over recent decades, as courts and legislatures in almost all states have modified the common law rule by adopting the implied warranty of habitability in residential leases. n22

The second major change in the law of residential leases is the abandonment of the traditional property law principle of independence of covenants. n23 Under that traditional approach, the landlord was entitled to receive rent from the tenant as long as the tenant had the possessory estate in the land. Creation of a leasehold estate in the tenant was similar to a sale of the property, with the rent obligation serving the same purpose as the purchase price. It did not matter what covenants were left unfulfilled on the landlord's part. If the tenant was in possession of the land, the tenant had no excuse to breach covenants in the lease. The only remedy available to the non-breaching tenant was a court action for damages caused by the landlord's failure to perform as promised. n24 Specifically recognized exceptions existed, relieving the tenant of the rent obligation if the landlord actually or constructively evicted the tenant from the land. Alternatively, an ousted tenant could seek to recover possession through the help of the courts. n25

Because lease covenants were considered independently enforceable, the landlord was similarly blocked from terminating the tenant's rights under the lease, even if the tenant failed to abide by the lease covenants. Typically, however, the landlord inserted a forfeiture provision in the lease permitting termination of the lease if the tenant defaulted in paying the rent. Statutes have also given landlords power to terminate a lease based on the tenant's breach of the rental covenant. n26 Without an express forfeiture clause in the lease or a statutory authorization permitting termination, the independent covenant principle from common law would be in force, and the landlord would have to allow the tenant to continue occupying the property under the lease. The landlord would be limited to a suit for damages to recover the rent owed.

Under the contrasting contract law principle, based on interdependency of covenants, the parties' covenants are viewed as mutually dependent. Breach by one party serves as an excuse for non-performance by the other party. Either party may seek rescission of the contract or may apply the remedy of an offset to compensate for the other party's breach of a covenant. Apparently, these contract doctrines developed after and in a different direction from, the property doctrines of landlord and tenant law. n27 The traditional approach has been largely replaced by the adoption of the rule from contract law that covenants are mutually dependent. Now, a tenant may have a defense justifying underpayment of the rent based on the landlord's failure to perform contractual obligations owed to the tenant. n28 These duties of the landlord may be express promises in the lease or they may be imposed on every landlord under the recently recognized implied warranty of habitability. n29

These two major shifts have given tenants new rights to assert as defenses in eviction actions based on nonpayment of rent. Tenants also have broader opportunities under the habitability warranty and the mutually dependent covenant principle to initiate tort actions to recover damages against landlords who have failed to perform their duties under the lease. These modern developments affecting the tenant's rights and the landlord's obligations are covered in Volume 5, Chapter 40 (§ 40.23) infra.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: leasehold w/1 estate! w/30 character! w/15 contract! or conveyance!

§ 39.02(b) Real Property or Personal Property Characteristics.

A lease creates a recognized interest in land. It would seem that leases should be included in the broad category of real property for all purposes. However, leases have historically been defined in a separate category because they are sometimes treated as personal property and other times as real property. At common law, this hybrid nature of the treatment of leases was expressed by the designation of a lease as a "chattel real," indicating "its rather curious status as a personal property interest in land." n30

The reasons for considering a lease as personal property are historical. In feudal England, real property interests were protected by so-called real actions. An aggrieved party was allowed to recover possessory interests in land from anyone interfering with the claimant's exclusive rights. A tenant under a lease did not have access to these court remedies. An ousted tenant could not seek help from the courts in regaining possession of the property. The tenant's rights were limited to the recovery of damages in a suit against the landlord. In today's world, the original reasons for treating a lease as personal property no longer apply. Every jurisdiction provides a summary proceeding for possession designed to adjudicate possessory rights in the property between disputing parties under a lease. n31 Courts and legislatures have, nonetheless, perpetuated the confusion.

The definition of a lease as real or personal property may make a difference in a number of issues. First, in probate proceedings the category of property may determine who obtains the rights in specific items owned by the decedent. Before adoption of the Statute of Wills in England in 1540, personal property could be transferred under a will but real property could not. Even today, a will may specify that personal property goes to one individual and real property goes to another. In earlier eras, intestate succession statutes often defined a different group to receive the personal property of a person who died without a will than the persons designated to receive the real property of the estate. Those kinds of distinctions have been removed in intestacy statutes, but they may continue in the case of a will. One distinction in probate proceedings continues. Since the law of the decedent's domicile governs disposition of personal property, a court in the state of domicile has power to determine who receives personal property, even if the property is located in another state. In contrast, a real property interest in another state cannot be administered in a court in the decedent's state of domicile. Ancillary proceedings must be conducted in the state where the real property is located. A lease is generally considered personal property in this context; therefore, no ancillary probate proceedings are necessary for distributing a decedent's interest in a lease of property in another state. n32

Second, every state statutorily requires certain actions to validly execute real property transactions, such as written documentation to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, recording, or other conveyancing requirements.

Third, some states have a statute defining real property generally. In all of these situations, the consequences will differ depending on the categorization of a lease as a personal or a real property interest. The most helpful statutes will specifically refer to leases because of the historical background. This potential confusion should be a sufficient reason for drafting private documents carefully, to make clear whether leases are to be included or excluded by a broad reference to either real property or personal property.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/30 property w/15 real or personal

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 9. 2 Frederick Pollock and Frederic William Maitland, The History of English Law 111-113 (2d ed. 1903). See also Restatement of Property, Introduction p. 1-2.

(n2)Footnote 10. See § 40.23, infra, which addresses the warranty of habitability. See also Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.16-3.29 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980).

(n3)Footnote 11. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.10 (West, 3d ed., 2000) (hereinafter Stoebuck and Whitman). Stonehedge Square L.P. v. Movie Merchants, Inc., 715 A.2d 1082 (Pa. 1998) ("Thus, in modern landlord-tenant law, leases have a dual nature, both as conveyances of protected property interests and also as contracts. Because of this historical background in which leases are sometimes viewed as conveyances and sometimes as contracts, problems in leases may be resolved either by principles of property law or by principles of contract law. At common law, the mitigation of damages in a lease was regarded as being controlled by property law. Because the lease was a conveyance of real property, the tenant owned a non-freehold estate, and the landlord had no duty to mitigate damages arising from the tenant's breach of the lease"). See also, Lisa Kerszencwejg, "Contracts vs. Conveyances: A Criticism of Stonehedge Square Ltd. Partnership v. Movie Merchants, Inc.," 61 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 559 (2000).

(n4)Footnote 12. Originally the lease was viewed only as a contract. Over time, the lease became recognized only as a conveyance. Presently, the shift is once again toward a recognition of the contract nature of a lease. For an explanation of this evolution, see Restatement (Second) of Property, Introduction (1977); Michael Weinberg, From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 1800-1920 (Part I), 1 S. Ill. U. L.J. 29-32 (1980). For a good overview of the historical evolution of the landlord/tenant relationship, see Hiram H. Lesar, The Landlord-Tenant Relation in Perspective: From Status to Contract and Back in 900 Years?, 9 Kan. L. Rev. 369 (1961).

(n5)Footnote 13. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.10 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n6)Footnote 14. Traditional common law held that the destruction of a leased building by fire, flood, wind or some other force of nature would not relieve the tenant of his obligation to pay rent or grant him a right to terminate the lease. See, e.g., Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U.S. 707, 30 L. Ed. 776, 7 S. Ct. 962 (1887); National Motels, Inc. v. Howard Johnson, Inc., 373 F.2d 375 (4th Cir. 1967); Lawson v. Taylor Hotels, Inc., 411 S.W.2d 669 (Ark. 1967); Sigal v. Wise, 158 A. 891 (Conn. 1932); Romer v. Topel, 414 N.W.2d 787 (Minn. App. 1987); Bradley v. McCabe 438 P.2d 468 (Okla. 1967). But see, e.g., Albert M. Greenfield & Co. v. Kolea, 380 A.2d 758 (Pa. 1977) (court relieved party whose expectations were not met due to destruction of the structure); See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.4 (1977) (a court may grant relief when a change occurs, caused suddenly by a non-manmade force which renders the property unsuitable for the purpose for which the lease was created).

(n7)Footnote 15. The traditional view is that the landlord has no duty to mitigate damages. E.g., Heckel v. Griese, 171 A. 148 (N.J. 1934). See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. i (1977) (explaining rationale for traditional rule). Stonehedge Square L.P. v. Movie Merchants, Inc., 715 A.2d 1082 (Pa. 1998) ("Thus, in modern landlord-tenant law, leases have a dual nature, both as conveyances of protected property interests and also as contracts. Because of this historical background in which leases are sometimes viewed as conveyances and sometimes as contracts, problems in leases may be resolved either by principles of property law or by principles of contract law. At common law, the mitigation of damages in a lease was regarded as being controlled by property law. Because the lease was a conveyance of real property, the tenant owned a non-freehold estate, and the landlord had no duty to mitigate damages arising from the tenant's breach of the lease").

(n8)Footnote 16. Courts are divided over whether a landlord must damages. See, e.g., Wright v. Baumann, 398 P.2d 119 (Or. 1965); Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977).

(n9)Footnote 17. While most progress in the legal protection of consumer expectations occurred in the area of contracts for the sale of goods, it was eventually extended to other sales contracts, including the sale of a new house by a vendor/builder. See U.C.C. §§ 2-314, 2-315. See also Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071, 1075-1076 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970); Wawak v. Stewart, 449 S.W.2d 922 (Ark. 1970); Schipper v. Leavitt & Sons, Inc., 207 A.2d 314 (N.J. 1965); James H. Backman, The Tenant As A Consumer? A Comparison of Developments in Consumer Law and In Landlord/Tenant Law, 33 Okla. L. Rev. 1 (1980); John Forrester Hicks, *The Contractual Nature of Real Pro*perty Leases, 24 Baylor L. Rev. 443, 487-89 (1972). Among the states adopting or acknowledging the implied warranty of habitability are: Alaska, Alaska Stat. §§ 34.03.100, 34.03.160, 34.03.180 (1990); Arizona, Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33-1324, 33-1361, 33-1365; California, Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1941-42; Green v. Superior Court, 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974); Connecticut, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 47a-7, 47a-13; Todd v. May, 316 A.2d 793 (Conn. 1973); Delaware, Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 5303; District of Columbia, Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970); Florida, Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.51, 83.56; Georgia, Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-13; Warner v. Arnold, 210 S.E.2d 350 (Ga. App. 1974); Hawaii, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-42; Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470 (Haw. 1969); Idaho, Idaho Code § 6-320; Illinois, Glasoe v. Trinkle, 479 N.E.2d 915 (Ill. 1985); Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little, 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972); Indiana, Breezewood Mgt. Co. v. Maltbie, 411 N.E.2d 670 (Ind. Ct. App. 1980); Iowa, Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.15; Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972); Kansas, Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974); Kentucky, Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 383.595-383.625; Maine, Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6021; Maryland, Md. Real Prop Code Ann. § 8-211; Massachusetts, Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 239, § 8A; Boston Housing Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973); Michigan, Mich. Stat. Ann. § 26.1109; Rome v. Walker, 196 N.W.2d 850 (Mich. App. 1972); Minnesota, Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504.18 (repealed 1999); Fritz v. Warthen, 213 N.W.2d 339 (Minn. 1973); Missouri, King v. Moorehead, 495 S.W.2d 65 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973); Montana, Mont. Code. Ann. § 70-24-303; Nebraska, Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1419; Nevada, Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 118A.290; *New Hampshire, Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248 (N.H. 1971); New Jersey, Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526 (N.J. 1970); Berzito v. Gambino, 308 A.2d 17 (N.J. 1973); New Mexico,*N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-8-20; New York, N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 235-b; Park W. Mgt. Corp. v.

Mitchell, 404 N.Y.S.2d 115 (1978), aff'd, 391 N.E.2d 1288, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 992 (1979); North Carolina, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-42; North Dakota, N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.1; Ohio, Glyco v. Schultz, 289 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio 1972); Oklahoma, Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41, § 118; Oregon, Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.320; L & M Inv. Co. v. Morrison, 594 P.2d 1238 (Ore. 1979); Pennsylvania, Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1979); Rhode Island, R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-22; *South Caro*lina, S.C. Code Ann. § 27-40-440; Tennessee, Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-304; Texas, Kamarath v. Bennett, 568 S.W.2d 658 (Tex. 1978) superseded by statute as stated in, Garza-Vale v. Kwiecien, 796 S.W.2d 500 (Tex. Ct. App 1990); Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 92.052, 92.056; Utah, Wade v. Jobe, 818 P.2d 1006 (Utah 1991) superseded by statute as stated in, Carlie v. Morgan, 922 P.2d 1 (Utah 1996); Vermont, Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 §§ 4457-58; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984); Virginia, Va. Code Ann. §§ 55-248.13, 55-248.21; Washington, Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 59.18.060, 59.18.070; Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160 (Wash. 1973); West Virginia, W. Va. Code § 37-6-30 (establishes landlord's obligations but does not provide a specific statutory remedy for breach); Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W.Va. 1978); Wisconsin, Pines v. Perssion, 111 N.W.2d 409 (Wis. 1961). See Briggs & Stratton Corp. v. Concrete Sales & Servs., 20 F. Supp. 2d 1356 (M.D. Ga. 1998) (court notes that leases are regarded as contractual relationships--this is a commercial lease case) affirmed by, Concrete Sales & Servs., Inc. v. Blue Bird Body Co., 211 F.3d (11th Cir. 2000); Sauve v. Nix, 985 P.2d 997 (Alaska 1999) ("we agree with the general trend in the case law allowing such suits and conclude that commercial landlords in Alaska owe a duty of reasonable care under the circumstances to employees of their commercial lessees"); Johnson v. Scandia Assocs., 717 N.E.2d 24 (Ind. 1999) (discussing what remedies are available to a tenant for breach of implied warranties); McAllister v. Boston Hous. Auth., 708 N.E.2d 95 (Mass. 1999) (stating that the implied warranty of habitability applies to significant defects in the property, not to the natural accumulation of snow and ice); Antwuan A. v. Heritage Mut. Ins. Co., 596 N.W.2d 456 (Wis. 1999) (holding that a breach of implied warranty of habitability allows for only contractual damages).

(n10)Footnote 18. See n.17, supra.

(n11)Footnote 19. See U.C.C. § 2-314 (1977) (Implied warranty of merchantability); U.C.C. § 2-315 (1977) (Implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose).

(n12)Footnote 20. Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1. See also, Becker v. I.R.M. Corp., 698 P.2d 116 (Cal. 1985) (landlord held strictly liable for injuries resulting from latent defects on rental premises) overruled, Peterson v. Superior Ct., 899 P.2d 905 (Cal. 1995) (holding that there is no strict liability); Johnson v. O'Brien, 105 N.W. 2d 244 (Minn. 1960) (landlord held liable for injuries to a tenant's daughter-in-law where he had no actual knowledge of, but should have known of, a defect to back stairway of home); William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.10 (West, 3d ed., 2000). Stewart ex rel Stewart v. Aldrich, 788 A.2d 603 (Me. 02) (landlord not liable for injuries caused by tenant's dog, because the landlord did not have knowledge of or control over the dog).

(n13)Footnote 21. Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7 (1977). All courts agree that the landlord is liable if, in attempting to repair a defect, the landlord conceals it or actually makes it more dangerous. Jurisdictions are split as to liability if the defect is not worsened or concealed. See Janofsky v. Garland, 109 P.2d 750 (Cal. 1941) (landlord liable for injury resulting from negligent repair of leased premises even though defect not worsened or concealed). But see Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7, Caveat (1977) (expressing no opinion as to whether landlord will be liable for injury occurring on leased premises after negligent repair which neither concealed nor made more dangerous the defect).

(n14)Footnote 22. See n.17, supra.

(n15)Footnote 23. See generally 6 Samuel Williston, Williston on Contracts §§ 816-17 (3d ed. Jagger 1962).

(n16)Footnote 24. 6 Samuel Williston, Williston on Contracts § 816 n.11 (3d ed. Jagger 1962) (action for damages).

(n17)Footnote 25. 6 Samuel Williston, Williston on Contracts § 816 n.11 (3d ed. Jagger 1962) (action to compel fulfillment of covenant).

(n18)Footnote 26. See, e.g., Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.20 (a), 7 B U.L.A. 427 (1974) (landlord entitled to terminate lease in cases of material non-compliance by the tenant with the rental agreement).

(n19)Footnote 27. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.10, at 265 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Huber Inv. Corp. v. Warner, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 649 (No. 16545, Jan. 30, 1998) (an action to evict is an election to rescind the contract of lease, and is a remedy available to landlord upon tenant's non-compliance with lease terms).

(n20)Footnote 28. Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.30 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (categorizing state statutes by tenant remedy into: those providing for comprehensive remedies including rent abatement; those providing a repair-and-deduct remedy; those authorizing rent escrow; and those providing for the appointment of a receiver).

(n21)Footnote 29. See n.17, supra (list of jurisdictions adopting the implied warranty of habitability doctrine).

(n22)Footnote 30. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.11 (West, 3d ed., 2000). see also, Matter of Dibert, Bancroft & Ross Co., Ltd., 117 F.3d 160 (5th Cir. 1997) (in Louisiana, a lease of real property is a personal contract but it still enjoys many of the attributes of a real contract); First Southern Sav. Bank v. Tuton, 443 S.E.2d 345 (N.C. App. 1994) (chattels real are subject to the rules applicable to personal property).

(n23)Footnote 31. Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.10-6.22 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (statutory summary proceeding available in all jurisdictions).

(n24)Footnote 32. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.11-6.12 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.03

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.03 Real Property Interests of Landlords and Tenants.

[Go To Supp]

A leasehold estate divides the interests in property between the landlord and tenant. The tenant has the possessory right to the property for a period of time that is shorter in duration than the landlord's rights in the property. The landlord always retains a non-possessory interest in the form of a future interest estate in the property called a reversion. n33 Generally, the landlord owns the fee title to the property before creating the leasehold estate in the tenant. In that case, the landlord's reversionary interest is a future interest that will once again become a possessory fee title as soon as the tenant's interest in the property terminates. It is possible, however, that the tenant receives an interest through a sub-lease, meaning that the sub-tenant's possessory rights end and revert back to the sub-tenant's landlord (the tenant under the original lease) for the remaining period of the original lease. n34 The crucial characteristic is that landlords never give away all of their ownership interest in the property when a leasehold estate is created. If they do, the transaction would not be designated as a lease but would be a conveyance of the landlord's ownership interest through a sale or gift of a freehold estate or, in the case of a sub-lease, through a transfer of a leasehold interest in the property. n35

The leasehold is usually created by an agreement to lease. It is possible but unusual for a landlord to establish the leasehold estate through a deed or in a will establishing the tenant's rights.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: leasehold w/1 estate! w/30 landlord! w/15 tenant!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 33. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.12 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n2)Footnote 34. For a general discussion of the distinction between subleases and assignments, see Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.11 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980).

(n3)Footnote 35. Secret Oaks Owner's Ass'n, Inc., v. Dep't of Envtl. Protection, 704 So. 2d 702 (Fl. App. 1998)

(easement holders have non-possessory interests only).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.04

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.04 Leaseholds Distinguished from Other Relationships.

[Go To Supp]

A lease conveys the possessory interest in property from a landlord to a tenant. Other types of conveyancing -- the creation of present freehold estates and future interests -- are distinguished from creation of a lease because either they convey something more than the present right to possession or they create interests in the property that never will be possessory. These non-possessory rights include easements, real covenants running with the land, and equitable servitudes.

Originally the common law distinguished between leases, considered non-freehold estates, and the range of ownership interests called freehold estates. Unlike freehold estates, leases are not the means of transferring ownership in property. A lease creates possessory rights in the tenant, but nothing more. Like the creation of leases, the transfer of freehold estates other than future interests -- the fee simple absolute, the fee tail, and the life estate -- involves the transfer of the owner's rights to possessory rights. In the case of freehold conveyances, however, the grantee receives something more than present possessory rights. The grantor no longer owns the freehold interest conveyed, and the grantee of a freehold estate becomes an owner of the property. As far as the interest being conveyed is concerned, the grantee of a freehold estate replaces the grantor as owner of that particular interest. The grantor may retain certain interests in the property but transfers ownership of the particular interest conveyed to the grantee. Others may share that ownership as co-owners. In contrast, the landlord conveying a leasehold estate to a tenant retains the ownership of the estate, or interest involved, but carves out the present possessory interest for the tenant. n36

Freehold estates may also be divided between present and future interests in the property. n37 Although the conveyance of remainder interests and other freehold estates included in the category of future interests does not transfer present possessory rights in the property, the grantee receiving a future interest estate is considered a present owner of the property. Thus, the ownership of the property is split between the life tenant, who is entitled to possession of the property, and the remaindermen, whose interests become possessory upon the life tenant's death. In contrast, the tenant never shares in the ownership of the property. A lease transfers the owner's present possessory rights but does not make the tenant an owner of the property. Ownership remains in the landlord, whose present possessory interest in the property is transformed into a future interest estate, a reversion, at the moment the leasehold estate is created. The landlord continues to have the freehold estate in the property.

The landlord/tenant relationship is the one remaining tenurial estate left over from the feudal English systems of land ownership. Originally, all freehold estates were held under some lord of the land, with the king as the supreme lord. The owners of an estate owed certain formal obligations to their immediate overlord. The overlords continued to be entitled to certain feudal incidents arising from the conveyance of an estate in the land to new tenurial owners. Today, the designations of landlord and tenant represent that tenurial relationship from earlier eras. Conveyances of freehold estates and future interests in property no longer involve tenurial forms of ownership, but the conveyance of a leasehold estate continues the tenurial form of ownership. The tenant receives the right to possess property of the landlord. The landlord remains the owner of the property and is entitled to rent from the property, one of the age-old incidents dating back to feudal England.

The possessory rights of a tenant represent a lesser estate than the ownership rights available through the freehold estates -- both present possessory and future interest estates. A tenant has the right to possess real property, but the property remains the property of another. At the other end of the spectrum of rights in property are the non-possessory rights to use the property of another. In the hierarchy of property interests, a tenant's possessory rights are ranked higher than these non-possessory property rights. A lease is to be distinguished from these interests. Even though they involve similar rights to use or occupy the property of another, the rights under a license, an easement or a covenant are distinguished from a lease because they are rights of use, but do not include the right to possession associated with lease. n38 Several situations arise where the distinction is a close question. A variety of factors are considered by the courts when they need to distinguish between a lease and one of several closely related non-possessory interests in property. Typically adjudicated situations where the distinction between a possessory lease and a non-possessory right to use or occupy property include sign or billboard cases, vending machines or other concessions cases, innkeeper or lodger cases, and cases involving housing for employees. n39

The key for the courts in determining whether possessory rights result in a lease or whether an interest exists permitting use or occupancy without possessory rights is the intent of the parties. n40 The circumstances of the transaction, including the language used by the parties, are considered in deciding whether they intended to create a lease or some lesser interest in the property. n41 Possession is characterized by the power to control designated property by excluding others from using it. n42 In ambiguous situations, courts focus on circumstances related to control of the property. n43

The consequences of determining that an interest is possessory include property-based remedies available through the courts to protect and regain possession against anyone interfering with these rights. A tenant enjoying possessory rights may bring trespass actions to protect those rights. n44 In contrast, a licensee may recover damages for interference with its non-possessory rights, but only against the owner. n45 Non-possessory rights may also be protected through an injunction, but not against the property owner if the interest is revocable. n46

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/50 freehold w/2 estate! l lease! w/50 future w/1 interest! l lease! w/50 possess! w/2 right! w/30 intent!

§ 39.04(a) Sign Cases.

It is possible to lease property for a sign or a billboard. It is also common to obtain a non-possessory license or easement permitting the sign to be installed. In an ambiguous situation, the court will weigh the various circumstances bearing on the feature of control. If the property owner retains control of the area for maintenance, continues to use the area for other purposes, and restricts access to the area, the court will tend to find a lease was not created, because the property owner retained primary control of the space. The court's conclusion would be that the right to use the property existed but not the right of possession that is essential for determining whether a lease was created. n47 Leasehold interests in billboards and signs may have sufficient value to require compensation if taken by government action. n48

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/30 sign! or billboard!

§ 39.04(b) Concession Cases.

The right to use or occupy a specific space for business purposes generally arises under a lease giving the business tenant full rights of possession. Several situations commonly occur, however, where it is ambiguous whether possessory rights under a lease or use rights under a license or other non-possessory interest are intended. Common examples arise from the installation of laundry equipment or other types of vending machines within a commons area in a housing or commercial building. n49 The same question exists regarding specialized departments in a store or refreshment stands in malls or theaters. n50 Agreements permitting sharecropping may also raise the same issue in some situations. Each of these situations could be conducted under a possessory lease. However, it is also possible that the relationship should be categorized as a non-possessory interest involving a license, an easement or an employment relationship. Factors to be considered by a court include whether the space is permanently set or can be altered, whether the property owner's employees have access to the space, and who controls maintenance and upkeep of the physical space.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease w/30 business w/15 possess! w/5 right! or interest!

§ 39.04(c) Housing Related to Employment.

Usually, housing arrangements furnished by employer to employees will create possessory rights under a lease. The control given to the employee regarding the use of the housing is usually broad and unrestricted. Situations exist, however, as in the case of housing for a maid or a property guard, where the employer retains rights to control who can have access to the employee's housing, what hours the housing is available, what activities are allowed, and even what furnishings are permitted. n51 In such cases, the usual incidents of control and right to exclude others associated with a possessory right are largely missing. The less control the employee has over the space being used for employee housing, the more likely the arrangement will be considered a license or other non-possessory interest in the employee.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: employee! w/15 possess! w/30 hous! w/5 arrange! w/30 lease!

§ 39.04(d) Lodging Cases.

The issue of a lease or a non-possessory interest in lodging cases illustrates another set of consequences flowing from characterization of the interest. n52 The parties' liabilities are affected, as well as their rights. If a lease is not involved, the property owner owes to the guest or lodger a higher degree of protection against personal injury than a landlord owes a tenant. The standard of care for safety of occupants increases proportionately with the level of control exercised by the owner of the property. A number of arrangements exist in which the use of the property involved falls short of the possession determination required for a lease. Guests in hotels and motels are usually transient occupants for short periods of time. A lodger or boarder occupies housing space for a longer time but is still distinguished from a residential tenant who is under a lease. Factors leading to designation of one of these non-lease categories include control features such as maid service, duration of stay, preparation of meals, degree of unrequested access by the owner, and how the use of the space is advertised to the public.

In two situations described in the following two subsections, someone other than the tenant has the right to possess property owned by someone else.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lodg! w/30 lease! w/15 possess!

§ 39.04(e) Possession Related to Purchase Contract.

Between the time parties enter into a purchase agreement and the date on which the seller conveys title to the property, the purchaser is viewed as the equitable owner, even though the seller is still the legal owner of the title. n53 Often a purchaser is permitted to take possession of the property before obtaining the seller's deed. During this interim period, the purchaser, like the tenant under a lease, is in possession of property owned by another person. Yet the positions of the tenant and the purchaser are different. The purchaser is considered the beneficial owner of the property before receiving the deed from the seller, for the purchaser is entitled to enforce the contract against the seller through a suit for specific performance. If, on the other hand, the seller stays in possession even though the title has been conveyed or the agreement specifies that the purchaser should have possession, the seller is considered to be a tenant of the purchaser. The purchaser is entitled to recover the fair rental value of the property from the seller.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: possess! w/15 purchase w/5 contract! or agreement!

§ 39.04(f) Lender in Possession.

Under the principles of mortgage law, lenders are permitted to take possession of the mortgaged property in certain situations. n54 The main purpose of this right to possession is to protect the lender in the case of a default in the borrower's payment obligations. The lender in possession must take care of the property and must account to the borrower for any profits obtained through the possession by applying them to the obligation owed by the borrower. Here again, the lender, like the tenant, is in possession of property owned by another.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lender w/5 possess! w/30 mortgage!

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 36. Velarde v. United States, 992 F. Supp. 1235 (D. Colo. 1998) (the right to purchase ownership is a right to the freehold estate while the right to lease is less than a freehold estate); De Leon v. Creely, 972 S.W.2d 808 (Tex. App. 1998) (a crucial element in a valid lease arrangement is a manifest intent of the lessor to not occupy the premises and of the lessee to occupy them; the lessee obtains a present possessory interest in the estate while the lessor obtains a future reversionary interest). In Ohio, a ninety-nine year lease that is renewable forever is a "perpetual lease" and although it is called a perpetual lease, it is treated as a freehold estate. See, Quill v. R.A. Investment Corp., 707 N.E.2d 35 (Ohio Ct. App. 1997).

(n2)Footnote 37. For a general discussion of future interests, see Arthur R. Gaudio, Ed., the American Law of Real Property §§ 3.01-3.08 (Arthur R. Gaudio ed. 1991).

(n3)Footnote 38. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.2 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.2 (1977); Restatement of Property §§ 450, 512, 530 (1936).

(n4)Footnote 39. See §§ 39.04(a)-(d), infra, and accompanying notes.

(n5)Footnote 40. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). Doll v. Grand Union Co., 925 F.2d 1363 (11th Cir. 1991) but see, DPLM, Ltd. v. J.H. Harvey Co., 526 S.E.2d 409 (Ga. Ct. App. 1999). American Jewish Theatre, Inc. v. Roundabout Theatre Co., 610 N.Y.S.2d 256 (1st Dept. 1994) (the action to determine whether an agreement was a license or a lease; the manifest intention of the parties was to create a lease and that intent was more persuasive than the actual language in the agreement).

(n6)Footnote 41. In re Yachthaven Restaurant, Inc., 103 B.R. 68 (E.D. N.Y. 1989).

(n7)Footnote 42. Soderholm v. Chicago Nat'l League Ball Club, Inc., 587 N.E.2d 517 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992); Davis v. Dinkins, 585 N.Y.S.2d 978 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1992), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 206 A.D.2d 365 (N.Y. App. Div. 1994).

(n8)Footnote 43. See, e.g., Delaware v. Penn Cent. Corp., 445 A.2d 939, 946-47 (Del. Sup. Ct. 1982); Slutzky v. Cuomo, 498 N.Y.S.2d 550 (1986); T-Vestco Litt-Vada v. Lu-Cal One Oil Co., 651 S.W.2d 284, 289-91 (Tex. Ct. App. 1983). Bruyn Produce Co. v. Romero, 508 N.W.2d 150 (Mich. App. 1993) (an agreement with employees was not a lease).

(n9)Footnote 44. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.34 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n10)Footnote 45. See, e.g., Powell on Real Property (R) §§ 39.04, 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). Cf. Patterson v. Shoffner Sand of Okla., Inc., 530 P.2d 580 (Okla. App. 1974) (holding that licensees can recover against third parties).

(n11)Footnote 46. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n12)Footnote 47. For a general discussion of sign cases, see William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.3 (West, 3d ed., 2000) and 1 American law of Property § 3.2 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

For discussion of aesthetic and historic preservation values in land use regulation, including sign control provisions, see Powell on Real Property (R) § 79D.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n13)Footnote 48. Reg'l Transp. Dist. v. Outdoor Sys. Inc., 34 P.3d 408 (Colo. 2001) (terminating billboard lease is not a taking requiring compensation); DOT v. Drury Displays, Inc., 764 N.E.2d 166; (Ill. App. 2002) (where state DOT condemns billboards, DOT must pay fair market value to companies leasing space from railroad); Adams Outdoor Adver. v. City of E. Lansing, 614 N.W.2d 634 (Mich. 2000) (no compensation for lease interest where city's sign code prohibited rooftop signs; leasehold interest does not include right to display signs on rooftop).

(n14)Footnote 49. For a discussion of cases involving coin-operated laundries, see Powell on Real Property (R) §§ 39.04, § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). Linro Equip. Corp. v. Westage Tower Assoc., 650 N.Y.S.2d 399 (App. Div. 1996) (Company's agreement to install and maintain coin-operated laundry machines in condominium complex and to pay condominium's managing corporation "rent" each month created license to use designated space for purpose of providing service to tenants, rather than lease, since company did not have sole and exclusive dominion and control over designated space).

(n15)Footnote 50. For a discussion of cases involving department stores and refreshment stands, see William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.4 (West, 3d ed., 2000). Park v. Automotive Realty Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 857 (No. 94 Civ. 4451, Jan. 29, 1998, S.D.N.Y.) (in determining whether an agreement for sales booths constituted a license or lease, the court looked to whether the lessee/licensee had exclusive possession and the right to exclude the lessor/licensor from a specific area).

(n16)Footnote 51. For a discussion of cases involving employee housing, see Powell on Real Property (R) §§ 39.04, 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n17)Footnote 52. For a discussion of cases involving lodging, see William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.6 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Goode v. St. Stephens United Methodist Church, 494 S.E.2d 827 (S.C. Ct. App. 1997) (social guest of tenant at apartment complex, who was assaulted by third persons while at complex, was a licensee, so owner did not owe any duty to protect the guest).

(n18)Footnote 53. For a discussion of cases involving purchase contracts, see William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.8 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); Edwards v. Van Skiver, 681 N.Y.S.2d 893 (1998) (plaintiffs, having entered into a purchase contract, took possession and, therefore, equitable title to the property).

(n19)Footnote 54. For a discussion of cases involving lenders in possession, see William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.9 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); In re Rodriguez, 218 B.R. 764 (E.D. Pa. 1998) (discusses the proper steps to be taken by a lender in order to become a legitimate mortgagee-in-possession. Also, the duty of the mortgagee in possession to maintain the premises is discussed).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.05

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.05 Traditional Types of Leasehold Estates.

[Go To Supp]

Two major characteristics of a leasehold estate are the duration of the tenant's rights and the means by which those rights can be terminated.

The doctrines governing duration and termination differ depending on the type of leasehold estate involved. Thus, the term for years is primarily characterized by the definite maximum duration of the tenant's rights. Unless circumstances arise triggering a recognized ground for earlier termination, the tenant's rights under the estate for a term of years continue until the specified end of the term. The other recognized leasehold estates have no set expiration date. Their duration is continuous until events triggering a termination occur.

Traditionally, the law has recognized four distinct forms of leasehold estates. Virtually every text lists them as: (1) the tenancy for years (sometimes called a tenancy for a term or a term for years); (2) the periodic tenancy (or tenancy from period to period); (3) the tenancy at will; and (4) the tenancy at sufferance (or occupancy at sufferance). In practical terms, however, only two types of tenancy are commonly used. In fact, a number of states, including the states that have adopted the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, recognize these two forms of tenancy only. n55 Under the Uniform Act, a rental agreement either fixes a definite term or creates a periodic tenancy. n56

The necessity to consider all four of the traditionally recognized tenancy estates will continue. Even where the Uniform Act has been enacted to govern residential tenancies, traditional doctrines still apply to commercial leases. In other states, the four traditional tenancies continue to exist in both residential and commercial contexts. As a practical matter, almost all tenancies are either a tenancy for years or a periodic tenancy.

The two primary forms of tenancies for years or periodic tenancies are sufficient to cover almost all leasehold purposes. When the tenant or landlord is concerned about certainty regarding the duration of the lease, the tenancy for years will be the preferred choice. Certainty is most important when either party needs to make plans that can be relied on. A definite term for a tenancy is most crucial when plans are being made for significant investment of resources in a particular piece of property. For example, if the property is being improved or renovated for specific purposes or if the location is significant for commercial or personal reasons, the tenancy for a definite term is the preferred type of tenancy. Commercial tenancies and relatively high-priced residential tenancies are most often in the form of a tenancy for years. The tenants in these circumstances generally desire to secure the right to retain the property for the specified term. Through renewal or extension provisions in the lease, they often have further rights to choose to remain beyond the period set as the term in the original lease. A tenant or landlord subject to a long-term tenancy for years may always assign the remaining tenancy for years to another person if plans change and the tenant or landlord no longer desires to exercise the rights under the lease. Even under a term for years, a tenancy may end prematurely if either party breaches the lease agreement. In particular, a tenant who fails to keep current on rent payment obligations may lose the tenancy through the landlord's court action to dispossess the tenant. n57

The choice of tenancy will be a periodic tenancy when flexibility is the main objective of the parties. This type of tenancy has no definite ending date. The tenant's rights to occupy the property and the landlord's rights to receive rent continue indefinitely until something happens to bring the tenancy to an end. Termination may occur at any time by either party giving proper notice that the tenancy will no longer continue beyond the date specified in the termination notice. The periodic tenancy is particularly common in residential leases for low or moderately priced housing. Neither party is bound for a lengthy term, yet each is entitled to continual rights under the tenancy until the necessary steps are taken to terminate the periodic tenancy.

A number of states have erased a primary distinction between the common periodic tenancy and the less common tenancy at will. Traditionally, a tenancy at will had virtually no protection against an unexpected termination by either party. The tenancy ended any time either party decided to discontinue the tenancy at will. Today it is common for statutes to require advance notice before a tenancy at will can be terminated by either party. n58 Once notice is a prerequisite for the termination of a tenancy at will, this form of tenancy becomes more similar to the periodic tenancy category and may differ only in the number of days of advance notice specified in the state's statutes for termination of this type of tenancy.

In a similar manner, many states have eliminated important distinctions between the tenancy at sufferance and the periodic tenancy. At common law, the landlord had the right to remove an occupying holdover tenant by means of court action or by self-help force. Today, many states protect the holdover tenant by requiring the landlord to bring an action for possession in the same manner as the landlord would remove a periodic tenant who has stayed beyond the termination date announced in a proper tenancy-ending notice. n59

In some circumstances, even the distinction between the definite term of a tenancy for years and the indefinite duration of a periodic tenancy is negated. New Jersey became the first state to adopt a good-cause termination requirement in residential tenancies. n60 Subject to certain specified exceptions, a periodic tenant has the right to remain a tenant under a periodic tenancy and to renew an expired term for years, as long as the landlord has no good reason for bringing the tenancy to an end. Similarly, landlords in federally subsidized housing projects are limited in their traditional rights to end a periodic tenancy or to refuse to renew a tenancy for years. n61 In these instances, the form of tenancy as traditionally categorized becomes less meaningful. No matter what form is specified in the lease or under traditional doctrines, every tenancy protected by these residential statutes creates an entitlement to continued rights as a tenant. Terminations are prohibited unless they are based on specific situations recognized by the statutes as constituting a good cause for termination.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: leasehold w/1 estate! w/30 categor!

§ 39.05(a) Tenancy (or Term) for Years.

The term for years is the most common form of leasehold estate when the lease is for agricultural lands or commercial structures. The term for years is also frequently used by tenants in high-priced dwellings. The reason for preferring an estate for years in these circumstances is the greater certainty regarding the duration of the lease in comparison with the other types of leasehold estate. Certainty is important for both the landlord and the tenant, so that they can make efficient plans for the future.

A leasehold estate is designated as a term for years if the lease establishes a fixed duration for the lease. n62 The fact that the term can be either cut short under powers given to the parties in cases of breach of lease obligations or extended under a renewal provision does not alter the characterization of a lease that otherwise qualifies as a tenancy for years. The duration of most fixed-term leases is actually uncertain because they are usually defeasible estates -- subject to early termination under specific circumstances such as nonpayment of rent. In such cases, the leases are actually terms for years subject to conditions subsequent.

Nevertheless, the term for years must specify in advance a definite ending date of the tenancy. n63 The fixed time for termination establishes the maximum length of the initial leasehold term. Some courts have permitted the termination date to be tied to an event with an uncertain date, as long as the event is certain to occur and capable of being ascertained by objective observers. Examples of this judicial flexibility are the cases specifying the end of the lease term "at the end of the war." n64 The usefulness of this kind of a lease for defense-related purposes has justified this relaxation of the certainty requirement.

The beginning date must also be certain, but it may be either a fixed date or a date that is capable of being computed precisely. Thus, a lease may begin upon the occurrence of a specified event or action, such as the date the tenant commences employment in the community or the date a prior tenant vacates the property.

Courts have usually ignored the possible problem that a lease with an uncertain beginning date may violate the rule against perpetuities. Potentially, the beginning date may not occur for a very long time, and that is impermissible under the rule. One means of avoiding the problem is a presumption that the lease must commence within a reasonable time, which is defined as 21 years or less. By specifying a reasonable time as a shorter period than the theoretically indeterminate time, the courts avoid exceeding the perpetuities period of lives in being 21 plus years. n65

The length of a tenancy for years may be as short as a specified number of days or as long as the parties specify. Thus, any tenancy with a fixed duration, whether it is a tenancy for a day, a week, or for 100 years is designated as a tenancy for years.

Some states limit the duration of all leases or of certain types of leases. A typical example is the 10-year limitation placed on agricultural leases in North Dakota. n66 Other leases with maximum duration limits include leases of city lots, leases from the government, and leases of oil land or shellfish land. n67 In some cases, long-term leases extending beyond a specific length such as 100 years are converted into fee estates. n68

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenancy or term w/2 year!

§ 39.05(b) Periodic Tenancy.

The periodic tenancy has become increasingly important because it fits the circumstances of so many lease arrangements better than the other categories of tenancies. Its primary characteristics are continuity, informality and flexibility. The periodic tenancy fits between the certainty and definiteness of the tenancy for years and the instability and transitional nature of the tenancy at will and the tenancy at sufferance. It is truly the catch-all category of leases. In numerous instances, it arises to replace one of the other categories, either because the formalities required for a valid tenancy for years were not satisfied or because the temporary, transitional feature of the tenancy at will or tenancy at sufferance merely served as a bridge leading to the more secure features of the periodic tenancy. n69

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: periodic w/1 tenanc!

§ 39.05(b)(1) Circumstances.

The periodic tenancy is better adapted to the modern circumstance of leasing than the other categories of leases. As in the case of consumer purchases of durable goods, many transactions are arranged with the focus on convenient financing. The purchaser is attracted by the availability of low down-payments and low monthly payments based on long-term, flexible financing.

Commercial leases and leases of large homes or luxury apartments are more likely arranged as tenancies for years rather than periodic tenancies, but among the majority of residential tenants, the periodic tenancy is the most common. Usually, the socio-economic level of residential tenants is the middle or low income class. The upwardly mobile middle class may rent for the beginning years after leaving their parents' home, eventually moving on to enjoy home ownership, the continuing dream of American families. For large numbers of poorer families, however, the periodic tenancy is the only prospect for obtaining a suitable place to live through their entire lives. In both cases, the periodic tenancy is more accessible to them financially than the alternatives of long-term tenancies for years or the relatively more expensive requirements of achieving home ownership with its attendant down payment, credit eligibility requirements, property taxes, and capital maintenance expenses.

In arranging a periodic tenancy, the consumer/tenant's primary financial concerns are the amounts of the monthly rent and the security deposit. The landlord's main objective is to fill the vacancy so the apartment can generate a continuing monthly cash flow required to cover the mortgage and other ownership expenses. The tenant's source of income is based on regular wages, payable at least once a month if not more often. The landlord's mortgage payments also come due on a monthly basis. Each party to the residential lease is interested in continuing the arrangement as long as the monthly wages or salary are sufficient and the monthly mortgage obligations are covered.

Certainty of duration is not as important. In fact, a long term lease may be a problem. If the tenant's circumstances change, it is convenient to have the option of moving to another residence. Perhaps the tenant needs to move because of a new job or because of a transfer from the present employer. Or the tenant may discover that a more modest or a better residence would be preferable because of being financially overextended on the one side, or earning a better income on the other end of a fluctuating economic situation. From the landlord's point of view, flexibility may be preferred over certainty in order to be able to terminate a relatively undesirable tenant's lease with the hope of obtaining a tenant who is more dependable or more quiet or less prone to complaining or demanding.

Many landlords prefer the informality of periodic tenancies. Unless they have many apartments for rent, they are probably not very experienced on the business side of leasing. Formal contracts are more common in apartment complexes large enough to justify employment of a resident manager to deal with the tenants. A periodic tenancy may be the chosen arrangement, largely because it can be created as an oral lease. n70 In many cases, it is likely that the only terms discussed in negotiating the lease are the date the tenancy can begin, the monthly rent, and the security deposit. By necessity, the periodic tenancy is the only type of lease that can arise with that degree of informality.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: periodic w/1 tenanc! w/30 circumstance! periodic w/1 tenanc! w/30 commercial w/5 lease!

§ 39.05(b)(2) Characteristics.

A periodic tenancy is a lease involving the obligation to pay rent at regular intervals, which continues indefinitely until one of the parties terminates the lease by giving proper notice. n71 Its primary features are continuity, informality, and flexible security. The original period automatically extends for as many successive periods as the parties desire. Unlike the tenancy for years, no definite termination is established. In comparison to the tenuous nature of the tenancy at will, the death of either party or a transfer of the property interest by either party does not interrupt the continuity of the lease. n72 Neither the landlord nor the tenant can abruptly bring the tenancy to an end as was possible under the common law's tenancy at will or tenancy at sufferance. Each party is afforded a period of time after the required notice of termination, during which the lease continues until the date of termination announced in the notice arrives.

The informality of a periodic tenancy is one of the features distinguishing it from the tenancy for years. Although it may be created by an express formal document specifying that the parties intend to create a tenancy from period to period, this kind of formality is generally present only if the residential or commercial landlord uses a form lease containing that kind of specific language. More often, the parties' agreement is placed in the category of a periodic tenancy by inference because the parties do not pay any attention to the type of lease they are creating. n73 In the typical situation, the tenant is permitted to move into the apartment after agreeing to pay rent on a monthly basis. No one mentions the duration of the lease or specifically designates the lease as a periodic tenancy. The law merely imposes the periodic tenancy title on the "general rental" arrangement initiated by the parties. n74 In accordance with the parties' course of dealing with each other, including the payment of the monthly rental obligation by the tenant, the law infers that they intend to form a periodic tenancy. Thus, the relationship will continue from month to month until one of the parties provides the notice required by the state's statute for terminating a periodic tenancy. n75

Although the periodic tenancy arrangement is permitted to be casually formed, the parties obtain a degree of security that is unavailable under the tenancy at will or the tenancy at sufferance. The notice requirement is the only means available for either party to force a termination of the lease. The security is present in the periodic tenancy, but it remains flexible in comparison to the strict certainty of the term for years. For either party, there is a means available for terminating a lease that is no longer desirable. The security provided by the notice requirement lasts only until the notice is received and the required number of days following proper notice have passed.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: periodic w/1 tenanc! w/30 feature! or character!

§ 39.05(b)(3) The Residual Tenancy.

As noted previously, a periodic tenancy can be created by express intent of the parties or by inference from the parties' course of dealing when the probable intent is not specifically stated. In addition to these two methods of consensual creation of the periodic tenancy, there are three other common leasing arrangements that result in the formation of a periodic tenancy. In each of these three situations, the original or intended form of tenancy ends up inadvertently, but inevitably, as a periodic tenancy. In these cases, a periodic tenancy is formed not because the parties negotiated with the original intent of forming a periodic tenancy, but because that category of lease is the residual category for characterizing leases that do not otherwise fit in one of the other categories. In each of these situations, the original form of the tenancy or the form of tenancy intended by the parties was either a tenancy at will, a tenancy at sufferance, or a tenancy for years. Despite its origins or the parties' intent, each of these arrangements ends up as a periodic tenancy. First, an "informal" periodic tenancy may result from an invalid attempt to create a tenancy for years. n76 Second, creation of a periodic tenancy is one of the possible elections available to a landlord confronted with a holdover tenant originally characterized as a tenant at sufferance. n77 Finally, a lease originally fitting within the category of the tenancy at will may be transformed into a more securely protected periodic tenancy based on the parties' course of dealing. n78

The distinction between the tenancy for years and the periodic tenancy is found in varying requirements for creation and for termination of lease in the two categories. The relationship between the parties during the existence of the tenancy is the same under either type of tenancy. Thus, it is natural for courts to remedy deficiencies in the formal requirements for the creation of a tenancy for years by treating the existing relationship between the leasing parties as a periodic tenancy. The formalities required to create a tenancy for years do not apply to the periodic tenancy. Thus, when a tenant enters into possession of property with permission of the landlord, even though the intended term for years is invalid because the parties failed to satisfy the applicable Statute of Frauds writing requirement, courts generally validate the arrangement by treating the invalid tenancy for years as a periodic tenancy instead. n79 All other terms of the attempted lease apply, except the designation of the duration or term. The duration feature of the intended but deficiently created lease is eliminated from the relationship because that provision of the lease subjected the arrangement to the unmet requirements of the Statute of Frauds. The rent to be paid, the maintenance responsibilities, and other provisions in the originally intended lease remain applicable. The automatic termination date specified in the aborted tenancy for years is replaced by the periodic tenancy's continuity characteristic. The lease may be terminated earlier or later than the originally specified date. In any case, the method for terminating the resulting periodic tenancy is by the requisite notice for that category of leases.

The second residual situation resulting in creation of a periodic tenancy is the holdover tenant relationship. Whenever any category of lease properly comes to an end, the tenant loses any further right to possession. An occasional tenant, however, wrongfully continues to occupy the property. In the holdover situation, the landlord is free to deal with the tenant in one of two ways without regard to the tenant's desires. The landlord can seek either to remove the tenant from possession or to impose a new lease on the tenant. n80 Prior to the landlord's choice, the tenant is considered to be a tenant at sufferance. n81 If the landlord chooses to keep the holdover tenant obligated under a new lease, the lease will generally be in the category of a periodic tenancy, if the tenant is making periodic payments of rent. After the landlord makes that election, the tenancy at sufferance is transformed into a periodic tenancy and the tenant is obligated to continue making rental payments until the lease is terminated by proper notice by one of the parties. If the landlord chooses not to transform the holdover's tenancy at sufference into a new tenancy, the holdover may be dealt with as a trespasser.

Another means by which a periodic tenancy arises is the natural course of events transforming what was originally a mere tenancy at will into the more common periodic tenancy form of lease. Whenever a tenant under a tenancy at will begins making regular periodic payments of rent which the landlord accepts, the law infers that the parties intended to change the original tenancy at will into a periodic tenancy. n82 By being transformed into a periodic tenancy, the lease is made subject to notice requirements as a prerequisite to its termination.

Termination of periodic estates must be triggered by notice given in advance by either party that the tenancy is ending on a specified date. n83 If the required notice is not given, the periodic tenancy is automatically renewed for a new period. Advance notice is needed so the parties can make arrangements necessitated by the termination of the lease. The tenant must relinquish possession on the termination date.

To accomplish that task, the tenant must pack and remove personal belongings from the premises and arrange for new accommodations, if necessary. The landlord needs the time between the date of the notice and the time set for termination to make arrangements to find a replacement tenant or to personally take over possession previously held by the periodic tenant.

The notice requirements for terminating periodic tenancies are set by statute. A typical notice requirement may be 15 days or one month prior to the end of the current period. n84 Originally, the common law requirement was notice equal to the length of the period with a maximum of six months advance notice. n85 A periodic tenancy from year to year required the full six months notice. n86 Now, statutes have reduced the advance notice requirement to terminate a year to year periodic tenancy to a shorter period ranging from 15 days to three months. Both the statutory and the original common law notice requirements have been allowed to be changed by agreement in the lease, except where a statute specifically prohibits modification of the statutory notice periods. n87

The notice requirements are strictly applied. If the notice requirement is 30 days, the notice must be given no less than 30 days prior to the end of the current period. An example is helpful to understand proper application of the notice requirement. If, for example, a periodic tenancy ends on the 31st day of December, then the 30-day notice must be given no later than December 1st. A notice given on December 15th is not sufficient to end the tenancy on December 31st. Nor will the periodic tenancy come to an end in the middle of January, even though that date is 30 days after the notice date of December 15th. In fact, some states have been so strict that they will not permit the December 15th notice to end the periodic tenancy on January 31st, (even though 30 days have clearly elapsed) unless the notice specifically mentioned termination of the estate on January 31st. n88 Some more lenient states would consider such notice sufficient to terminate the tenancy at the end of the next period that is at least 30 days after the notice. n89

In that case, even though the December 15th notice may have improperly designated December 31st or January 15th as the termination date, the defective notice would have been effective in terminating the periodic tenancy on January 31st.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: residual w/5 tenanc!

§ 39.05(c) Tenancy at Sufferance.

Traditionally, courts and authors have referred to the tenancy at sufferance as an additional form of tenancy. n90 It differs from the other three categories, however, in significant ways. First, it is not an actual estate involving possessory rights. In fact, it is considered as wrongful possession by a tenant whose original right to possession under one of the other three forms of tenancy has terminated. n91 Second, it is not a consensual relationship. It exists because of the unauthorized retention of possession of a tenant whose landlord has not yet acted in response to the wrongful actions of the holdover tenant. For these reasons, it seems appropriate to designate this category of a landlord/tenant relationship as an occupancy at sufferance rather than as a tenancy at sufferance. n92

An occupancy at sufferance continues until the landlord takes some action to alter the unexpected extension of the tenant's presence on the landlord's property. n93 Two alternatives are available to the landlord in response to the tenant's intrusive action. First, because the tenant's right to remain in possession has ended, the landlord can elect to treat the tenant as a trespasser. n94 Historically, the landlord could forcibly remove the tenant and the tenant's goods as long as the landlord acted reasonably. n95 Today, many jurisdictions require the landlord to initiate court proceedings to remove the tenant from the property, unless the tenant turns over possession voluntarily. Self-help force is prohibited. n96

Courts have not considered the occupant at sufferance a trespasser until the landlord has ordered the holdover tenant to vacate the property. n97 The courts' characterization is based on a concern for the landlord's rights rather than the tenant's protection. If the holdover tenant were viewed as a trespasser from the beginning of the holdover period, then the landlord could potentially lose title to the property under the doctrine of adverse possession if the wrongful occupancy by the tenant lasted a sufficiently long period of time. n98 In fact, the landlord owed no greater care historically to the occupying tenant at sufferance than to a normal trespasser. The landlord was liable only for intentional injuries to a holdover tenant or a trespasser. n99

The landlord has a second alternative in dealing with an unanticipated holdover tenant. The occupancy at sufferance can be converted into a new lease relationship at the election of the landlord. The holdover tenant has no means of backing out from the new lease imposed upon the tenant by the landlord. The tenant's wrongful occupancy is viewed as a sufficient basis for inferring the tenant's approval of continuing possession under a new lease. The new lease can be formally created as one of the other three types of tenancies -- for a definite term, at will or as a periodic tenancy. It is more common for an implied tenancy from period to period to result from the holdover relationship. Once the tenant offers to pay rent and the landlord accepts it, an implied periodic tenancy exists. The resulting new tenancy is recognized retroactively to the beginning of the holdover period. n100

Statutes have modified the rights and duties arising through an occupancy at sufferance. First, the landlord is often required to provide notice to an occupying tenant before terminating the possession of the tenant, even though the continued occupancy is wrongful. n101 Second, statutes typically provide for the landlord's right to recover fair rental value from the tenant for the period of time the occupancy at sufferance extends. n102

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenanc! w/2 sufferance

§ 39.05(d) Tenancy at Will.

The tenancy at will created rights of possession in a tenant for an indefinite time, so it is considered an estate in land. n103 It differs from a tenancy from period to period because it is not measured by any specific period of time. It lasts only as long as neither party does anything to terminate the tenant's possessory interest or until the tenancy at will is transformed into a periodic tenancy. If the landlord has sole rights to terminate the tenancy at will, it is nonetheless considered a tenancy at will. n104 Some courts infer a reciprocal right in the tenant, even if the creating document only mentions the landlord's termination rights. n105 On the other hand, if the tenant has exclusive rights to terminate the interest, courts generally consider the tenant to have a life estate or a fee simple in the property rather than a tenancy at will. n106

The tenancy at will arises in most cases by implication rather than by express creation by the parties. n107 It is possible, but uncommon, for the parties to expressly agree that the tenant will have possession under a tenancy at will. In that case, both parties should know that their relationship is vulnerable to being terminated at any time, for the tenancy at will continues only as long as both parties mutually consent to its existence. If either party conveys or assigns its interest in the property to another, then the tenancy at will comes to an end because one of the original parties no longer has an interest in the property to support the tenancy based on the mutual will of the original landlord and the original tenant. n108 A sub-lease by the tenant does not result in termination of the tenancy at will, however. n109 The death of either party destroys the tenancy at will. n110 Any other action by either party that is inconsistent with the continuation of a tenancy at will results in termination of the tenancy. n111 These illustrations underscore the personal, license-like characteristics of the tenancy at will. Another means of terminating the tenancy at will is the announced decision by either the landlord or the tenant that the tenancy no longer exists.

The most frequently encountered tenancy at will is created by operation of law, based on circumstances resulting in the unintentional creation of this form of tenancy. Typically, tenancies at will that are created by operation of law exist as such for only a short period and are ultimately treated as periodic tenancies. In several states, however, every tenancy created under an invalid oral lease is viewed as a tenancy at will. n112 Whenever a party takes possession of property under an invalid deed or lease, the owner of the property becomes the landlord and the person in possession becomes the tenant under a tenancy at will. The tenant has a legal right to be in possession, but that right may be removed or relinquished at any time. In the situation involving an invalid term for years lease because of failure to meet the formal requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the tenant generally begins making regular rental payments to the landlord. As soon as the payments are made and accepted, the tenancy at will is replaced by a periodic tenancy, measured by the period covered by the rental payment. It is possible to have a tenancy at will in which rental payments are expected, but only if the parties expressly intend to create such a tenancy. If the tenancy at will arises by implication, then the payment of rent changes the tenancy into a tenancy from period to period.

In its original form, the parties under a tenancy at will had no protections against immediate termination of their rights under a tenancy at will. By requiring advance notice in order to legally terminate a tenancy at will, modern statutes have attempted to protect the tenant from sudden evictions and the landlord from unexpected loss of rental income. n113 Sometimes the notice statutes apply to terminations based on transfer of a party's interest or death of one of the parties. Usually, though, the notice requirement applies only to the more common termination situations in which a party ends a tenancy at will by merely announcing or demanding its termination. A major distinction between the categories of tenancies at will and periodic tenancies is largely eliminated if prior notice is required by statute in order to terminate the tenancy at will.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenanc! w/2 will

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 55. See § 39.01, supra n.6.

(n2)Footnote 56. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 1.401 (d), 7B U.L.A. 427 (1974).

(n3)Footnote 57. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.79 - 6.81 (West, 3d ed., 2000); Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note (1977) (summary eviction proceedings for nonpayment of rent).

(n4)Footnote 58. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note (1977) (summary eviction proceedings for nonpayment of rent).

(n5)Footnote 59. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note (1977).

(n6)Footnote 60. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A: 18-61.1.

(n7)Footnote 61. Under regulations of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, federally assisted, publicly owned housing is an exception to the general rule regarding evictions. 24 CFR §§ 247.1-247.10; Thorpe v. Housing Auth., 393 U.S. 268 (1969); Caulder v. Housing Auth., 433 F.2d 998 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 1003 (1970); Housing Auth. v. Mosby, 192 N.W.2d 913 (Wis. 1972). See also Joy v. Daniels, 479 F.2d 1236 (4th Cir. 1973); Kutcher v. Housing Auth., 119 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1955). State and local regulations may also regulate public housing. Escalera v. Housing Auth., 425 F.2d 853 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 853; Sanders v. Cruise, 173 N.Y.S.2d 871 (1958) Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.8 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980).

(n8)Footnote 62. Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.4 (1977).

(n9)Footnote 63. Restatement of Property § 19 cmts. a and b (1944); Good Ol' Days Commissary, Inc. v. Longcrier Family L.P., 522 S.E.2d 249 (Ga. App. 1999) (a lease for a term of 40 years or during the lifetimes of the lessees establishes a definite ending date of the tenancy).

(n10)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Beeson v. LaVasque, 223 S.W. 355 (Ark. 1920); Jones v. Schneer, 63 N.Y.S.2d 627 (1946); but cf. Stanmeyer v. Davis, 53 N.E.2d 22 (Ill. App. Ct. 1944); Michael Tuck Found. v. Hazelcorn, 65 N.Y.S.2d 387 (1946) (holding that a lease "for the duration of the war" and for one year after the signing of an armistice between the U.S. and Germany and Italy was too indefinite and created a tenancy at will); Lace v. Chantler, 1 K. B. 368 (1944) (English Court of Appeal holding a lease "for a duration" of World War II was too indefinite to create a tenancy for years). The English Parliament overturned Chantler by statute, 7 & 8 Geo. 6, ch. 34 (1944).

(n11)Footnote 65. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.8 cmt. b (1977); Wonderfair Stores, Inc. of Ariz. v. Walgreen Ariz. Drug Co., 511 F.2d 1206, 1213 (9th Cir. 1975) (citing Wong v. Di Grazia, 386 P.2d 817, 823 (Cal. 1963)); Shaver v. Clanton, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 (Cal. App. 1994) (the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities, which has been adopted by California, explicitly excludes from the rule interests created in commercial transactions such as options to renew and rights of first refusal and commercial leases).

(n12)Footnote 66. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-02.

(n13)Footnote 67. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-02 (limiting leases of city lots to periods of 99 years); Ark. Code Ann. § 22-4-501 (limiting leases of public parks, playgrounds, golf courses, and swimming pools to 99 years); Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-7-103 (limiting oil and gas leases to periods of 10 years); R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 20-10-3, 20-10-6 (limiting leases of underwater lands for aquaculture to periods of 10 years).

(n14)Footnote 68. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.4 stat. note at 20-21 (1977) (listing state statutes that convert long-term leases to freeholds). In Ohio, a ninety-nine year lease that is renewable forever is a "perpetual lease" and, although it is called a perpetual lease, it is treated as a freehold estate. See, Quill v. R.A. Investment Corp., 707 N.E.2d 35 (Ohio Ct. App. 1997).

(n15)Footnote 69. See generally William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.17 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n16)Footnote 70. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.17 (West, 3d ed., 2000); David S. Hill, Landlord and Tenant law in a Nutshell 13 (3d ed., 1995).

(n17)Footnote 71. Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 cmt. f (1977); Mobile Eye Center, P.C. v. Van Buren Partnership, 826 So.2d 135 (Ala. 2002) (renewal provision which stated that the lease "may" be renewed with the mutual consent of the parties did not operate to automatically renew the lease, but was an unenforceable agreement to agree to a renewal of the lease; although provision stated that the lessee would give written notice if he did not intend to renew the lease, the provision did not say that renewal was automatic if no such notice was given.)

(n18)Footnote 72. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n19)Footnote 73. See Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender) (listing the three situations in which the law infers a periodic tenancy). Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. v. Calco Enterprises, 511 S.E.2d 671 (N.C. Ct. App. 1999) (if a tenant and landlord have an invalid lease, but the tenant makes rental payments and the landlord accepts them, a periodic tenancy is assumed at law).

(n20)Footnote 74. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.17 (West, 3d ed., 2000) (stating that the most common form of periodic tenancy is a "general letting" in which the parties discuss only payment of rent).

(n21)Footnote 75. Most state statutes provide for a notice period between 30 days and 3 months if the periodic tenancy is for one-year periods. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1946 (30 days notice); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-40-107 (3 months notice). If the period is less than a year, most state statutes require notice of one full period. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.134 (requiring notice of one full period for any periodic tenancy for less than three months). Cf. Alaska Stat. § 34.03.290 (a) (requiring 14 days notice for a week-to-week tenancy); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-341 (a) (a year-to-year tenancy terminates automatically after end of the period unless the landlord grants permission for the tenant to remain).

(n22)Footnote 76. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.17 (West, 3d ed., 2000); but see Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender) (listing cases where courts still infer a tenancy at will instead of a periodic tenancy when a lessee takes possession under an invalid lease).

(n23)Footnote 77. Id.

(n24)Footnote 78. See, e.g., Metzer v. Connally Realty Co., 45 S.E.2d 199 (Ga. 1947) (holding that parties' prior course of dealing indicates the tenancy period intended); Longmier v. Kaufman, 663 S.W.2d 385 (Mo. Ct. App. 1983) (holding that an invalid attempt to make an oral 50-year lease created a tenancy at will, which became a month-by-month periodic tenancy when the tenant made, and the landlord accepted, monthly rent payments); Prescott v. Smits, 505 A.2d 1211 (Vt. 1985). First Interstate Bank v. Tanktech, Inc., 864 P.2d 116 (Colo. 1993) (although the acceptance of rent by a landlord upon expiration of the lease is sufficient to create a holdover tenancy, if the landlord and tenant were original parties to the lease, they should not be bound to the terms of a lease which they might not be aware of and which they had no power to negotiate); 1400 Broadway Assoc. v. Henry Lee & Co., 614 N.Y.S.2d 704 (1994) (a holdover tenant, by continuing to pay rent, and an owner, by continuing to accept it, have crafted only a month-to-month periodic tenancy).

(n25)Footnote 79. See § 39.05, supra n.59 and accompanying text. But see John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the law of Property 56, n.9 and accompanying text (3d ed. 1989). Santacroce Associates v. Cambino, 1998 Conn. Super. LEXIS 220 (No. CV 970257458, Feb. 3, 1998) (tenancy for years, invalid because of the Statute of Frauds, results in year to year periodic tenancy when lessee takes possession of the premises).

(n26)Footnote 80. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the law of Property 58 (3d ed. 1989). See, e.g., Steiner v. Minkowski, 596 N.E.2d 492 (Ohio Ct. App. 1991); City of Cleveland v. A.J. Rose Mfg. Co., 624 N.E.2d 245 (Ohio App. 1993) (in Ohio there is no privity of contract between the original lessor and a subtenant and that a subtenant's right to possession terminates when the rights of the original lessee terminate).

(n27)Footnote 81. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the law of Property 58 (3d ed. 1989); see also 49 Am. Jur. 2d landlord AND Tenant § 81 (1970); A. O. Smith Corp. v. Kaufman Grain Co., 596 N.E.2d 1156 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992); Meyer v. Cohen, 632 N.E.2d 22 (Ill. App. 1993) (under Illinois law, the termination of a lease and the surrender of the premises are different events, and a tenant who remains in possession of the premises after his lease expires or is terminated becomes a tenant at sufferance); Clark v. Whitehead, 874 S.W.2d 282 (Tex. App. 1994) (a landlord may elect to treat a lessee in possession after the expiration of the lease as either a trespasser or as a tenant holding over under the terms of the original lease).

(n28)Footnote 82. See Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). See, e.g., Weishaar v. Strimbu, 601 N.E.2d 587 (Ohio Ct. App. 1991).

(n29)Footnote 83. Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 cmt. f (1977); see also Dickens v. Hall, 718 P.2d 683 (N.M. 1986) (holding that a month-to-month periodic tenancy requires notice before termination).

(n30)Footnote 84. For a list of different states' statutory notice requirements, see Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 stat. note at 29-33 (1977). Cf. Uniform Residential Landlord AND Tenant Act § 4.301(b) (1972), which requires 60 days' written notice to terminate a month-to-month periodic tenancy.

(n31)Footnote 85. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n32)Footnote 86. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n33)Footnote 87. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186, § 15A (waiver of notice is void as against public policy). Havington v. Glover, 722 A.2d 500 (N.H. 1998) (though common law suggested that period for notice in terminating periodic tenancies could be agreed upon, such common law tradition did not survive a legislative enactment that precisely proscribed the way in which notice was to be given).

(n34)Footnote 88. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). Boss v. Koch, 589 N.W.2d 456 (Wis. App. 1998) (an example of a court refusing to honor termination because notice of termination to the tenant was improper); Davidson v. Kenney, 971 S.W.2d 896 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998) (Missouri follows strict construction in determining whether notice requirements have been complied with in terminating a periodic tenancy).

(n35)Footnote 89. See, e.g., Harry's Village, Inc. v. Egg Harbor Township, 446 A.2d 862 (N.J. 1982). This is the position accepted by Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 cmt. f (1977). But cf. Market Dundee Corp. v. Jaramillo, 582 A.2d 850 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1990) (holding to strict common law if the requirements of notice are not substantially complied with) overruled, 809*B811 Washington Street Associates v. Grego, 600 A.2d 1222 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1992); Phillips v. Albanese, 755 N.Y.S.2d 403 (2003)* (tenant was not prejudiced as a result of claimed defects in termination notices because he received adequate notice of the charges against him and available remedies)

(n36)Footnote 90. See, e.g., Jesse Dukeminier & James E. Krier, Property 451-456 (5th ed. 2002); Restatement of Property § 22 (1936); Leslie Pontiac, Inc. v. Novak, 202 N.W.2d 114 (Iowa 1972); Gray v. Gray, 286 P.2d 138 (Or. 1955) (citing Oregon statute that classified recognized types of tenancies, which included tenancy at sufferance).

(n37)Footnote 91. Cornelius J. Moynihan and Sheldon Kurtz, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 92-93 (3d ed. 2002); Restatement of Property § 22 (1936). Dale v. H.B. Smith Co., 136 F.3d 843 (1st Cir. 1998) (tenancy at sufferance can arise before, and after, summary proceedings); Amcor Trust Co. v. Minnesota Diversified Prods., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11893 (No. 97- 0619, Jul. 28, 1998, N.D. Ill.) (court notes that under Illinois law, tenant's failure to vacate after lease expires creates tenancy at sufferance or holdover tenancy); Herrera v. Colon, No. 971219035, 1998 Conn. Super. LEXIS 789 (court notes that termination of a lease does not necessarily end the tenancy since the tenant might hold over and become a tenant at sufferance). City of New York v. Utsey, 714 N.Y.S.2d 410 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000) (a trespasser who never had a proper right to possession cannot claim a tenancy at sufferance).

(n38)Footnote 92. Arthur Gaudio (ed.), the American law of Real Property § 5.03[5] (1991).

(n39)Footnote 93. Benton v. Williams, 88 N.E. 843 (Sup. Ct. Mass. 1909) (holding that the tenancy continues due to laches or forbearance by the landlord).

(n40)Footnote 94. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.20 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n41)Footnote 95. Benton v. Williams, 88 N.E. 843 (Sup. Ct. Mass. 1909). See generally William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n42)Footnote 96. Most states have enacted a statute requiring the landlord to give the tenant written notice before commencing an action for eviction. See, e.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.695; D.C. Code Ann. § 45-1404.

(n43)Footnote 97. See, e.g., Slusher v. Indiana, 437 N.E.2d 97 (Ind. Ct. App. 1982); Brown v. Guerrier, 457 N.E.2d 630 (Mass. 1983).

(n44)Footnote 98. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.06 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n45)Footnote 99. See, e.g., Slusher v. Indiana, 437 N.E.2d 97 (Ind. Ct. App. 1982); Brown v. Guerrier, 457 N.E.2d 630 (Mass. 1983). Selvy v. Beigel, 670 N.E.2d 784 (Ill. App. 1996) (lessor was not liable to residents of apartment building for exposure to lead paint because the residents did not establish landlord/tenant relationship).

(n46)Footnote 100. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.20 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n47)Footnote 101. See § 39.05, supra n.58 and accompanying text.

(n48)Footnote 102. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186, § 3 (allowing recovery of fair rental value); Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a-3c (in absence of agreement, landlord is entitled to fair rental value).

(n49)Footnote 103. Restatement of Property § 21 (1936) (defining this estate as one with no "designated period of duration").

(n50)Footnote 104. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n51)Footnote 105. Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); 49 Am. Jur. 2d Landlord and Tenant § 77, (1970). The Restatement of Property has adopted the reciprocal termination view, Restatement of Property § 21 cmt. a (1936).

(n52)Footnote 106. The Restatement (Second) of Property agrees with this view, Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.6 cmt. g (1977).

(n53)Footnote 107. See, e.g., Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); Napier v. Napier, 564 S.E.2d 418 (W.Va. 2002) (payment of rent is not a prerequisite to being a tenant and, in the absence of a lease agreement to contrary, a tenancy-at-will is created where one occupies residential property with the permission of its owner, but without being required to make periodic payments of rent); Bernet v. Rogers, 519 N.W.2d 808 (Iowa 1994) (tenancy at will is not created without the assent, express or implied, of both parties) But see Petty v. Faith Bible Christian Outreach Center, Inc., 584 N.W.2d 303 (Iowa 1998). Some courts have held that a mortgagor who remains in possession after foreclosure is a tenant at will. Also, some court have held that when a mortgagee requests rent payments after foreclosure, the tenant is no longer a tenant at sufferance but a tenant at will. Diner One, Inc. v. Bank South, 466 S.E.2d 234 (Ga. App. 1995); City of New York v. Utsey, 714 N.Y.S.2d 410 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000) (The occupancy of a squatter can eventually mature into a tenancy at will).

(n54)Footnote 108. Irving Oil Corp. v. Maine Aviation Corp., 704 A.2d 872 (Me. 1998) (court notes that a tenancy at will cannot be assigned or conveyed, and attempts to do so by will or deed will automatically terminate the tenancy at will).

(n55)Footnote 109. See Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n56)Footnote 110. 49 Am. Jur. 2d landlord and Tenant § 76 (1970).

(n57)Footnote 111. 49 Am. Jur. 2d landlord and Tenant §§ 77, 80 (1970).

(n58)Footnote 112. See Cornelius J. Moynihan and Sheldon Kurtz, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 88-93 (3d ed. 2002); Eldridge v. Loftis, 723 So. 2d 562 (Ala. 1998) (court notes that a parol gift in land, though invalid to convey title, can create a tenancy at will); Hawkins Pro-Cuts, Inc., v. Garcia, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 96 (No. 97APE09-1249, Apr. 23, 1998) ("A party who takes possession of premises under an invalid lease creates a periodic tenancy at will, and the period of the tenancy is determined by the provisions for the payment of rent").

(n59)Footnote 113. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.6 stat. note at 41-45 (1977) (list of state statutes that have modified the common law by, among other things, requiring notice); Davidson v. Kenney, 971 S.W.2d 896 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998) (example of statute governing the termination of month-to-month tenancy by requiring one month's notice, in writing, to person in possession, requiring person to move); Dismuke v. Abbott, 505 S.E.2d 58 (Ga. App. 1998) (statute imposes certain notice requirements in terminating tenancy at will); Cochran v. Motorcar Techs., No. 97*APE09-1249, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 1702* (when a tenant holds over, payment and acceptance of rent obligates the tenant to commit to a new term identical to the prior term).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.06

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.06 Creation and Termination of Leasehold Estates.

[Go To Supp]

§ 39.06(a) Creation.

The creation of a valid and enforceable lease is governed by general contract principles and by the Statute of Frauds provisions requiring a written document in specified situations. Because required formalities are not always met, some attempts to create a lease are ineffective. In other situations, courts have validated a lease arrangement even though certain formal deficiencies exist. This section discusses the range of possibilities recognized by the law in dealing with the creation of leases. At one end of the spectrum are the attempts to create a lease that failed completely. These are the situations where no agreement was reached. Two common categories are the unenforceable agreements to agree and the agreement that fails because the parties intended the preliminary negotiations to be finalized at a later point. In the middle of the range of possibilities, courts may determine that the parties have a binding contract to lease the property but not an actual lease. In a related situation, the common law recognized a distinction between a tenant's rights before taking possession under a lease and after a formal entry into possession occurs. The pre-possession rights under a valid lease were called interesse termini. n114 A final set of lease categories have been established to deal with a lease that failed to meet the strict requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Under these doctrines, the parties may end up with a different type of lease than they attempted to create. It was essential to permit deficient leases to be partially enforceable even though they lacked the formalities to be fully recognized. If the parties acted as if their lease were enforceable, then the courts could not totally reject the existence of the lease. Courts have also excused compliance with the Statute of Frauds in situations where doctrines of part performance or estoppel justify enforcement of the parties' attempted lease agreement even though certain formal requirements were lacking. The ultimate possibility is the creation of a fully enforceable lease meeting all the formalities for its validity.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: leasehold w/1 estate w/30 creat!

§ 39.06(a)(1) Invalid Leases.

The minimum formalities required for a binding contract are consideration and the agreement of the parties through the requisite meeting of the minds. A lease could arise as a gift if the prerequisites of intent, delivery and acceptance were met. Most leases, however, are both conveyances and contracts. n115

Leases may fail at the creation stage because the prerequisites for an enforceable contract are not met. Usually that means that the parties never reached the level of coming to an agreement. The most typical examples are the cases where the parties never proceeded beyond the stage of preliminary negotiations. n116 Sometimes the parties actually reach an agreement, but the courts refuse to enforce it in two recurring cases. First, if the parties merely agreed to agree at a later date, then no binding contract exists. n117 The essential terms of the intended lease agreement are lacking so the agreement to agree is invalid for indefiniteness. In addition, the required consideration to support a valid contract is missing because neither party has given anything of value. The other situation arises when the original agreement is documented by an informal binder that is to be formalized at a later time by a more complete, formal document. n118 In that case, the parties lack the necessary intent to be presently bound by their agreement. Each of these situations lacks the present intent to agree to something but includes the intention to postpone coming to an agreement until a later time.

Another category of invalid leases is the lease for an illegal purpose. n119 An illegal lease is often considered void from the outset, and neither party is entitled to any remedies for failure to abide by the terms of the lease agreement. n120 In other cases, the court considers the lease terminated when the illegality is brought to its attention, but the court works out a remedy so the parties are given fair treatment under the circumstances of the case. n121

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/5 invalid! or fail!

§ 39.06(a)(2) Enforceable Contracts to Execute a Lease.

The law distinguishes between a lease and a contract to make a lease. Each of these forms of agreement is binding and creates enforceable rights and duties between the parties. A lease being a conveyance of an interest in land is more than a contract because it creates a leasehold estate in the tenant. The distinction is important for identifying the remedies available in the case of a breach of the agreement. n122 If the agreement is characterized as a lease, both contract remedies and remedies available for the protection of possessory interests are applicable. Breach may give a party the right to terminate the lease agreement and seek damages for the losses connected with the breach. The rent specified in the lease agreement is the standard for measuring damages under a broken lease. If, in contrast, the agreement is a contract to execute a lease, then no rights of possession have been transferred; in other words, no conveyance has occurred. The parties merely have the contractual right to enforce the promise to execute a lease. The remedy for breach is the recovery of damages. However, damages are measured by a different standard than in the case of the failure to abide by the terms of a lease agreement. Rather than recovering rent, the non-breaching party is entitled to damages based on the difference between the rent that would have been received under the unexecuted lease and the fair rental value of the property. n123

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: enforc! w/2 contract! w/2 execut! w/2 lease!

§ 39.06(a)(3) Interesse Termini.

The common law tradition treated the tenant under a term for years lease that was to begin at a future date differently from the tenant who had already entered into possession under the lease. This is a different distinction than the contract to execute a lease category, discussed in the previous paragraph. The tenant under a valid lease agreement who had not yet taken possession, because the lease was to commence in the future, had rights called interesse termini. n124 In essence, these rights were considered to be merely contractual rights until the tenant entered into actual possession. A tenant with rights under interesse termini had only the same remedies as the parties with a mere contract to execute a lease described previously. Damages were not measured by the rent owed under the lease but by the difference between the specified rent and the fair rental value of the leased property.

The lease agreement which is to commence in the future is not the same as a contract to execute a lease. As long as the present intent of the parties is to give an immediate interest in the property to the tenant, the fact that the present interest involves a possession date to commence in the future does not change the fact that a present interest is given. The situation is analogous to the law of future interests where an immediate transfer of a future interest, with the present possessory interest to commence at a future date, is nonetheless considered a valid transfer in the present of a future interest.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: interesse termini

§ 39.06(a)(4) Statute of Frauds Compliance Issues.

The original Statute of Frauds and the version currently in effect in most jurisdictions have two provisions potentially governing leases. First, the real property clause requires leases, like other transfers of property interests, to be in writing, unless the lease is for a term of less than a specified period. n125 Originally, the maximum length of an oral lease was three years. Now, it is generally one year. Second, the contract clause requires a writing if the contract is not to be performed within a one year maximum time limit. n126

The lease category affected by these writing requirements of the Statute of Frauds is the tenancy for years, because many leases of this type designate a term exceeding the common one-year limitation. It is possible to have a periodic tenancy that is governed by the Statute of Frauds. Virtually all periodic tenancies, however, designate an initial period of one year or less and thus fit within the exception permitting oral leases of one year or less. The fact that periodic tenancies continue until terminated by one of the parties, and often extend beyond one year, does not change the outcome. As long as the recurring period designated in the oral lease is no longer than a year-to-year tenancy, the writing requirement does not apply.

Courts are split on the related issue of lease renewal provisions. If the lease term is for one year, but the lease provides for renewals or extensions, must the lease be in writing because the original term plus the possible renewal result in a lease that exceeds the permitted one year term for an oral lease? n127 The Restatement rule allows an oral lease by considering the renewal period as separable from the designated initial term. n128

Most courts have also validated an oral lease for a term of one year, even though the lease agreement is arranged several weeks or months before the lease term is to commence. n129 Unless the contract can be performed within one year, the question arises whether the contract provision requiring a writing should apply. The usual answer is that the more specific provision authorizing oral leases for a term of one year or less should govern. This lenient position is consistent with the common practice of agreeing to a lease in advance of the date of occupancy.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: statute w/1 frauds w/30 lease!

§ 39.06(a)(5) Invalid Tenancy for Years Recognized as Another Form of Tenancy.

Many oral leases violate the Statute of Frauds because they exceed the time period in which the writing requirement does not apply. Even though the oral lease agreement is not enforceable, the parties generally proceed as if the lease were valid. In most cases, the tenant moves in and begins to pay the rent, just as the parties agreed. By the time one of the parties challenges the validity of the lease, a landlord/tenant relationship has usually existed for a period of time. Courts typically invalidate only part of such an oral lease agreement. Complete refusal to recognize the lease relationship would be absurd, because the parties have, in fact, acted as if a lease existed. The courts do, however, alter the type of tenancy involved. Although the parties orally agreed to a tenancy for years, they are treated as if they had agreed to a periodic tenancy. n130 Many other features of the lease arrangement are upheld, including the rent, maintenance obligations, and restrictions on permitted activities. The major difference is that the set duration of the oral lease is ignored and replaced by a periodic tenancy with the period measured by the time intervals between payments of rent. n131 It is possible, but rare, that the new tenancy will be considered a tenancy at will based on the fact that the landlord has allowed the tenant to take possession of the property under an unenforceable term for years. n132 As soon as the landlord accepts rent from the tenant, however, courts have a basis for considering the lease as a periodic tenancy tied to the length of the period covered by the rent payment. If the rent has been paid once a month, then the invalid term for years will be recognized as a month-to-month periodic tenancy.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: invalid! w/2 tenanc! w/2 year!

§ 39.06(a)(6) Part Performance and Estoppel Exceptions to Compliance with the Statute of Frauds.

Occasionally, the requisite facts exist to permit enforcement of an oral lease that would otherwise be unenforceable for failure to meet the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Courts have excused compliance with the Statute of Frauds under the exception doctrines of part performance or estoppel. These equitable doctrines are applied in two major types of cases. Under the part performance doctrine, the court must be convinced by compelling evidence that the acts of one of the parties would not have occurred unless there had, in fact, been the oral lease agreement as asserted. n133 Generally, the acts required must be more than transfer of possession and payment of rent, because those acts are as consistent with a short-term periodic tenancy as they are with a lengthy term for years. Other acts that may be considered sufficient include substantial permanent improvements on the property constructed by the tenant to meet its special long-term requirements or by the landlord in order to accommodate the tenant's intended use of the property over the asserted term of the oral lease. n134

The second doctrine, equitable estoppel, is applied in cases when non-enforcement of the oral lease would cause irreparable damage to one of the parties who has reasonably relied on the existence of the oral lease agreement. n135

In both of these situations, the parties are allowed to enforce the oral lease, including its definite term, despite failure to meet the Statute of Frauds requirement. Courts have justified these exceptions to prevent the Statute of Frauds from producing inequitable results. n136 In the case of most oral leases, the possibility of recognizing a periodic tenancy in place of the unenforceable tenancy for years will be the preferred outcome. Application of the equitable exceptions to the Statute of Frauds based on part performance or equitable estoppel is less often the result.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/50 part w/1 performance w/30 statute of frauds lease! w/50 estoppel w/30 statute of frauds

§ 39.06(a)(7) Fully Enforceable Leases.

A lease agreement, whether written or oral, consists of four essential terms: designation of the parties, the description of the property, the rent obligation, and the duration of the lease. n137 Each may be expressly mentioned, or the required provisions of the lease agreement may be implied from the circumstances of the transaction. n138 General rules of construction apply to leases. Courts, in construing the terms of a lease, consider the language of the parties, their actions, the purpose of the lease arrangement, and any other circumstances surrounding the transaction. n139

The parties may not be specifically named in the agreement, as long as someone with an ownership interest, including any one of several co-owners of the property, completes transfer of the tenant's possessory interest to an ascertainable person or entity. Every party to the agreement, however, must have the capacity to hold or transfer property interests under the general law of the jurisdiction. Mental illness, age of minority, imprisonment, duress, and lack of authority to act on behalf of a corporation or trust are examples of incapacitating circumstances.

The necessary description of the property may be ascertained by the physical acts of the tenant in asserting possessory rights in the leased property.

If rent is not specifically discussed in negotiating the lease agreement, then the parties' course of dealing may supply the necessary designation of rent. In the rare case of a lease arising as a gift, rent may not be expected. In all other cases, however, courts are able to impose a fair rental valuation on the parties if they have not otherwise set the rent through their agreement or actions. n140

Today's presumption, in the absence of a specified duration for the lease agreement, is that the parties intended a periodic tenancy. The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act provides that, "unless the rental agreement fixes a definite term, the tenancy is ... month to month." n141

The Statute of Frauds also requires specified signatures in addition to its writing requirement. Some states indicate that both parties must sign the lease; n142 others require the signature of the landlord. n143 The most common approach is to require the signature of the party to be charged in an action to enforce the terms of a lease. n144 The practical effect of this rule is that each party should ensure that the other party's signature is included because it is not known at the time of the agreement which of the parties may need to seek judicial enforcement.

Most leases are created by express agreement of the parties. In certain circumstances, however, a court may impose a lease relationship on the parties by operation of law. Thus, as previously mentioned, in the case of an invalid term for years, for failure to meet the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the court may determine that the parties nonetheless have a periodic tenancy. The parties may also be subject to a continuing lease relationship in the holdover situation. A tenant may be obligated under a new lease even though it does not agree to one following the natural termination of a tenancy for years. The fact that the tenant remains in possession beyond the end of the lease term is a sufficient basis for the landlord to enforce continuing obligations against the tenant. Some jurisdictions permit the landlord to hold the tenant to a term equal in length to the original, expired term of the lease. n145 Others limit the new term to one additional year. n146 Most states, however, consider the holdover to be bound under a new lease, but with a duration measured as a periodic tenancy from month to month. n147

As indicated, oral leases are enforceable if the period of the lease term does not exceed the length of time set by the Statute of Frauds. Most states have a one-year period. Virtually all periodic tenancies, and many short-term tenancies for years, are fully enforceable even though they are not in writing. In fact, the leniency of the Statute of Frauds has probably contributed to the wide-spread informality of leasing, especially in residential leases. Commercial leases and longer-term residential leases are generally enforceable as long as they are in writing.

Some states impose other requirements, such as recording, on leases that are subject to the Statute of Frauds writing requirement. n148 Failure to record does not invalidate the lease transaction between the landlord and tenant, but may affect the validity of the lease in relation to purchasers of the leased property. A purchaser in good faith who is without notice of the unrecorded lease for a valuable consideration takes the property free of the tenant's interest in the property. By recording the lease, the parties are protected against legally protected purchasers because recording constitutes constructive notice of the interest. Possession by the tenant, however, is sufficient notice of the tenant's interest in the property to prevent a purchaser from qualifying for the protected position of a bona fide purchaser without notice.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! w/2 fully w/2 enforc!

§ 39.06(b) Termination.

Termination of leasehold estates is also governed by numerous, ancient common-law rules. However, a termination of a leasehold estate that is initiated by the landlord through eviction proceedings is primarily governed by modern statutes in every jurisdiction. The statutes typically prescribe the necessary steps to be taken for the termination by eviction for each particular type of leasehold estate. n149

Traditionally, termination of leases has been the primary focus of statutes governing the landlord/tenant relationship. Common law rules have continued to govern the characteristics of leasehold estates in all respects except termination. Except for the Statute of Frauds, the statutes do not normally deal with creation of leases. Statutes have also been relatively silent on the permissible rights and duties of the leasehold parties during the duration of the lease. As the warranty of habitability doctrine has developed, however, numerous states have adopted statutory approaches defining these new tenant rights and landlord duties. n150

Statutes dealing with leasehold estates continue predominantly to regulate termination issues. Termination is affected by statutes detailing landlord and tenant remedies in case of non-compliance with lease provisions. Termination also arises in statutes dealing with abandonment, surrender, mitigation of damages, retaliatory eviction, and the holdover tenant. Recently, the traditional rights to terminate have been restricted in several statutes requiring a good cause for eviction of tenants. n151 Finally, virtually every state has adopted some form of dealing expeditiously with possession issues once a lease has terminated. The summary dispossession proceedings, often prescribed in forcible entry and unlawful detainer statutes, have become the primary forum in which courts deal with landlord/tenant issues.

These modern statutes focus on prompt resolution of landlord/tenant disputes. The speedy proceeding is available because shelter in residential leases and office space in commercial leases are crucial necessities. In earlier eras, when farming was the primary purpose of leases, the land was the important commodity. Crops were the crucial source for payments required under the lease. Now, the structures are generally more important than the land. Cash earned by a commercial tenant's use of the office space or wages earned by the residential tenant have replaced crops as the basis for required payments to the landlord. Growing seasons have given way to significantly shorter pay periods. To preserve the income-producing purpose of leasehold estates, landlords must be able to regain possession of property quickly from nonpaying tenants.

The most significant differences today between the various forms of leasehold estates are based on statutory prerequisites for evicting a tenant in summary proceedings for possession. Thus, the landlord is required to serve notice on the tenant as a prerequisite for a court-ordered eviction involving every type of leasehold estate except the term for years. n152 Moreover, even the term for years can be terminated through proper notice if the tenant has failed to pay rent, just as in the case of other types of leasehold estates. n153

Tenancies are generally subject to termination in several ways: (1) tenancies expire naturally; (2) landlords may exercise specified powers to terminate tenancies; (3) tenants may exercise specified powers to terminate tenancies; (4) the landlord's estate may end; and (5) the parties may terminate the tenancy by agreement. n154 The tenancy for a term is the only form of tenancy that ends automatically by the mere passage of time. Otherwise, tenancies are terminated only by some act, agreement or event.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: leasehold w/1 estate! w/30 terminat!

§ 39.06(b)(1) Termination of the Various Forms of Tenancy.

The term for years is distinguished by a provision setting a definite ending date for the tenancy. Unless the tenancy has terminated earlier, the tenancy ends automatically once the specified date arrives. Either the landlord or tenant may generally terminate the tenancy earlier if the other party fails to comply with the duties established in the lease.

As with other forms of tenancy, the tenant's rights under the lease no longer exist if the landlord's estate comes to an end in any way other than a voluntary transfer to a successor. Four common situations arise; first, if the landlord's estate was less than a fee simple in the property, both the landlord's and the tenant's rights in the property end when the landlord's estate is extinguished. This occurs if the landlord holding a mere life estate dies. n155 In that situation, both the life estate and the tenant's leasehold estate are terminated upon the landlord's death. A similar result occurs if the landlord had some other form of defeasible estate, such as a fee subject to a condition subsequent, and the prescribed events to extinguish the landlord's estate occur. Second, if the landlord's property is taken under the government's power of eminent domain, then the tenant's interest is also extinguished. n156 The tenant may be entitled to share in the compensation received because of the taking. Third, a tenant's interest in a lease may be rejected by the bankruptcy trustee in the case of the landlord's bankruptcy. n157 Finally, a mortgage foreclosure in which the landlord's interest is involuntarily relinquished to satisfy a debt obligation which was secured by the landlord's property prior to creation of the lease results in termination of the tenant's interest in the property. n158

In contrast, periodic tenancies never expire automatically because they are continuous by definition. Termination by either party requires giving proper notice to the other party. The same events listed above that result in termination of the landlord's estate also curtail the tenant's periodic tenancy. n159

In the case of the tenancy at will, either party was previously able to bring the lease to an end by any act or statement indicating that the tenancy had terminated. Some states now treat the tenancy at will like a periodic tenancy by requiring advance notice to terminate the lease unless termination is caused by the death of one of the parties or the transfer of the party's interest in property to another. n160

Unless the state requires advance notice, the landlord is permitted to terminate the holdover's wrongful possession of the leased property at any time.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: lease! or tenanc! w/15 terminat!

§ 39.06(b)(2) Landlord Remedies.

Termination due to the tenant's non-compliance with the terms of the lease agreement is one of the landlord's primary remedies. n161 The landlord may seek damages or an injunction as an alternative remedy available because of a tenant's breach. If the lease is terminated, the landlord becomes eligible to reclaim possession of the property. At the same time, the landlord may seek damages occasioned by the tenant's breach of the lease.

A landlord may be denied termination, however, in several situations. The court may determine that the alleged breach did not occur. The tenant may successfully assert the defense of waiver or estoppel. The landlord may not have given sufficient advance notice of a breach determined to have been readily curable.

Nonpayment of rent is most often the basis for a landlord's right to terminate the tenancy. State statutes often provide for termination by the landlord because of a tenant's failure to pay rent. n162 The landlord is usually required to provide notice in the alternative requiring either payment of delinquent rent within a specified period or calling for termination of the tenancy. n163

A tenant may also be evicted for failure to abide by specified conditions in the lease or for acts of nuisance. n164 Unless the state's statute provides for termination based on these failures of the tenant, the lease must specify that the tenant is subject to forfeiting its rights under the lease due to these prescribed acts or because of the tenant's failure to meet the conditions specified.

The landlord is allowed to apply the tenant's security deposit to satisfy monetary damages caused by the tenant's breach. n165 The landlord may also be assisted in recovering damages through a statutory provision giving the landlord a lien in the tenant's personal property remaining on the premises. n166

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: landlord! w/15 remed! w/50 terminat! or evict!

§ 39.06(b)(3) Tenant Remedies.

A landlord's failure to comply with specified conditions in the lease opens to the tenant two alternative remedies. First, the tenant may seek termination based on the landlord's breach, together with monetary damages or injunctive relief. n167 Second, the tenant may choose to affirm continuation of the lease and recover for any damages resulting from the landlord's noncompliance. Injunctive relief is also available. The tenant's right to withhold rent and the repair-and-deduct remedy are two new affirmative remedies available to a tenant when the landlord has breached its warranty of habitability. n168

The tenant remedies must often be preceded by a notice to the landlord demanding compliance with the lease or, alternatively, calling for termination of the lease. n169 Some statutes provide that, in the case of a recurring noncompliance by the landlord within a specified period after the initial notice to comply or terminate was given, the tenant may give notice of termination without having to allow for compliance that could potentially forestall termination. n170 The tenant may directly assert the landlord's acts of noncompliance in an action or counterclaim or may assert them as a defense in an action initiated by the landlord.

In termination situations. the tenant's damages are measured as the difference between the fair rental value of the property and the rent called for under the terms of the lease. Special damages are awarded to cover the tenant's consequential costs prior to the landlord's breach, such as initial costs of moving to the property, fixture or improvement expenses, and other costs occasioned by the breach, such as relocation costs. Damages for lost profits are often not awarded without clear, non-speculative proof of a reasonable certainty.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: tenant! w/15 remed! w/50 terminat! or continu!

§ 39.06(b)(4) Abandonment, Surrender and Mitigation of Damages.

Termination by agreement of the parties may cut short any form of tenancy. Three very different situations result in termination by agreement of the parties: (1) express agreement to terminate; (2) abandonment by the tenant and express acceptance of the termination by the landlord; and (3) abandonment by the tenant and conduct by the landlord construed as an acceptance of a surrender by operation of law.

The clearest surrender is a written document signed by the parties agreeing that the lease should terminate on a specified date. Because a surrender involves the transfer of a property interest, the Statute of Frauds applies, and a writing is necessary unless the surrender is implied from the actions of the parties.

An abandonment is viewed by the law as the equivalent of the tenant's agreement to terminate the lease. n171 The landlord's side of the agreement to terminate may arise in one of two ways. First, the landlord may explicitly declare an intent to accept the tenant's surrender, resulting in termination of the lease. Second, the landlord's actions in response to the tenant abandonment may be the basis for implying the landlord's acceptance of the tenant's proffered surrender of the lease. n172

Often the landlord's actions are equivocal, so it is difficult to predict the status of the lease. Traditionally, the landlord was entitled to the tenant's continuing performance of obligations under the lease despite the tenant's abandonment of possession. n173 Thus, the landlord could elect to do nothing in response and could continue to hold the tenant liable for payment of rent obligations for the continuing duration of the lease. Today, however, courts often impose a duty on the landlord to make reasonable efforts to find a new tenant in order to mitigate the damages arising because of the tenant's abandonment. n174 Under the mitigation doctrine, the landlord must attempt to lease the property to a new tenant. To be safe, the landlord should notify the tenant that the efforts to find a new tenant should not be considered an unconditional acceptance of the tenant's abandonment. Landlords have been permitted by the courts to enter into a new lease on behalf of the original tenant in order to continue the original tenant's liability for any deficiency in rental payments arising under the new lease. n175 In that case, the original tenant is still bound in case the new tenant fails to pay the agreed rent or in the situation where the new lease reasonably provides for a lower rental obligation than the original lease. Otherwise, the landlord's actions in renting to a new tenant could be interpreted as an acceptance of the surrender of the lease by operation of law. n176

The category of the lease makes a difference in the abandonment/surrender situations. Under a term for years lease, the tenant's obligation potentially extends to the end of the term, even if the tenant abandons the property early in the term. The landlord must make reasonable efforts to obtain a new tenant, and the original tenancy ends as soon as a new tenancy begins or should have begun had reasonable attempts to re-rent been made. In the case of a periodic tenancy, the original tenant's obligation is automatically renewed for an indefinite series of periods as long as the landlord is meeting its obligations under the mitigation of damages doctrine by taking reasonable steps to find a new tenant. The tenant's abandonment terminates the tenancy in either a tenancy at will or an occupancy at sufferance. n177 The tenant's unilateral action is sufficient to terminate the ongoing mutual agreement of the parties required to continue a tenancy at will. In the occupancy at sufferance, the tenant has no duty to continue the wrongful holdover giving rise to this form of tenancy. However, the tenant's abandonment must occur before the landlord exercises the right to hold the tenant bound under a new tenancy. Modern statutes may obligate the tenant to pay the fair rental value for the period of time prior to the tenant's abandonment of the property.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: terminat! w/15 agreement! w/50 abandonment or surrender!

§ 39.06(b)(5) Restrictions on Termination.

Most terminations are based neither on abandonment and surrender nor on non-compliance with lease obligations by one of the parties. These terminations arising problem situations are few in number compared to the more common terminations based on natural changes in circumstances. Many tenancies for a term are renewed repeatedly, with provisions for rent revised to reflect changes in the economy. A new lease is required because the original term for years has ended. When a tenant decides to vacate the property at the pre-determined end of the tenancy, no action is necessary to terminate the term for years which expires automatically under its own lease provisions.

Periodic tenancies, in contrast, continue automatically until one of the parties triggers a termination. Usually, the reason for terminating is based on personal decisions unrelated to any fault or deficiency caused by the other party in the lease. Residential tenants move on to new locations because of changed family circumstances, job and income situations or personal expectations. Commercial tenants move because of a variety of business motivations. Landlords decide to terminate tenancies in order to renovate the property, to utilize the property for themselves, and for many other reasons based on personal or business choices.

Traditionally, no restrictions have blocked either party from terminating a tenancy at will or an occupancy at sufferance at any time unless the jurisdiction requires advance notice.

Under current laws, several restrictions have been imposed on landlords to prevent them from exercising their traditional rights to terminate tenancies in certain situations. These doctrines, primarily applied in residential tenancies, have been established in recognition of the fact that many tenants need protection from unwarranted or unreasonable terminations. Because a tenant's home comes to have important personal meaning, several new limitations have been imposed on landlords in order to minimize unwarranted disruption of tenants' lives and expectations. Tenants are often viewed as consumers, and the residential lease is treated as the consumer product deserving of special protections because of perceived differences in bargaining power and knowledge in dealing with more sophisticated and powerful landlords. These protections are particularly important to elderly tenants and tenants with limited means who are hardest hit by dislocation expenses and difficulties and by limited low-cost housing availability.

First, under the doctrine of retaliatory eviction, a tenant has a defense to certain court actions by the landlord aimed at terminating the tenant's possessory rights under the lease. If an eviction is motivated by retaliation due to the tenant's conduct in complaining about conditions of habitability of the premises, then the defense of retaliatory eviction is available to allow the tenant's rights to continue under the tenancy. n178

Second, tenants in housing provided or subsidized by the government have the right to continue their tenancies unless their landlords can establish specifically listed grounds for terminating the tenancy. n179 These good cause restrictions apply to continuation of periodic tenancies and to the right of a term for years tenant to lease renewals when the term comes to an end. The tenant is protected from being forced out of the housing if the landlord has no good reason for ending the tenancy.

New Jersey was the first state to adopt good cause eviction restrictions that apply to all private residential leases. n180 A landlord can no longer evict a tenant merely to free up the apartment for a new tenancy. The good causes recognized by the statute include tenant breaches, abandonment and misconduct. The landlord may also remove the apartment from the market for the landlord's personal or family use, in order to make renovations or repairs, and to use the property for non-residential purposes. The mere desire to be freed from a specific tenant for personal reasons or for no specific reason is no longer a legal basis for evicting a tenant in that jurisdiction.

Rent control ordinances also place restrictions on landlords in their traditional freedom to terminate tenancies. By removing the right of landlords to increase rent amounts, these laws eliminate one of the motivations leading to terminations of residential tenancies. If the landlord is unable to increase the rent for a new tenant, then the existing tenant is less likely to face a termination.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: restrict! w/15 terminat!

§ 39.06(b)(6) Summary Proceeding for Possession.

Once a termination occurs, the landlord has the right to retake possession of the property. Usually the tenant voluntarily vacates the premises. If the tenant remains in possession in defiance of the landlord, the tenant is technically a holdover tenant under an occupancy at sufferance. At common law, the landlord was permitted to oust the tenant through self-help measures, as long as the landlord did not use undue force. n181 In most jurisdictions today, statutes prohibit the landlord from forcibly removing the tenant. n182Instead, the landlord must seek assistance from the courts in dispossessing a holdover tenant. All states make stream-lined summary proceedings available to the landlord for regaining possession from tenants whose rights under their tenancy have been terminated. n183

Under these summary dispossession or unlawful detainer statutes, the landlord is able to obtain relatively quick relief -- usually within a few days or weeks -- compared to the normal time period for most civil actions, which may require several years before the matter is tried by the court. The procedures usually provide for the following: a shortened period for filing the tenant's answer to the landlord's pleadings, limitations on the issues and defenses that can be raised, expedited or limited discovery, an early hearing date, non-availability of juries, and quick enforcement by local officials under some type of a writ of restitution.

In order to qualify for the summary dispossession proceedings, the landlord must rigorously meet the procedural requirements. The tenancy must be properly terminated before the court will act. Thus, the requirements for terminating the various categories of tenancies must be carefully observed. The term for years does not require any advance notice, but the date set by the lease must have passed. The statutes typically provide for differing notice periods for proper termination of the tenancy depending on whether it was a periodic tenancy from month to month or year to year, or a tenancy at will or sometimes even if the holdover tenant merely has a tenancy at sufferance but has received no prior notice as required by the dispossession statute.

As a penalty for holding over beyond the legal termination of a tenant's rights, the statutes typically impose treble damage liability or some other penalty amount on the tenant. If the termination was based on the tenant's nonpayment of the rent, some statutes provide a grace period for the tenant to pay the delinquent rent and preserve a right to remain in possession under a continuing tenancy.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: summary w/30 proceeding w/30 possess!

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 114. The term interesse termini has been used to refer both to the tenant's rights before the leasehold begins if the leasehold is to begin in futuro, and also to the tenant's rights after the leasehold has begun but before he takes possession. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.13 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n2)Footnote 115. See Cornelius J. Moynihan and Sheldon Kurtz, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 94 (3d ed. 2002); Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); Przybylski, Inc. v. Corcoran, 1999 Wash. App. LEXIS 91 (No. 40698-1-I, Jan. 19, 1999) (a lease, like any contract, is not formed unless the parties mutually assent).

(n3)Footnote 116. Such cases are decided using standard contract law principles. See, e.g., I.K. Corp. v. One Financial Place Partnership, 558 N.E.2d 161 (Ill. App. Ct. 1990).

(n4)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n of Am. v. Tribune Co., 670 F. Supp. 491 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (holding that a "mutual commitment to a contract," if major terms are left to be negotiated, does not create a binding contract, but an informal agreement or letter of intent may create a binding contract); Carmon v. Soleh Boneh, Ltd., 614 N.Y.S.2d 555 (1994) (letter of intent was only evidence of an agreement to agree); Sayer v. Bowley, 503 N.W.2d 166 (Neb. 1993) (oral understanding between the parties was an agreement to agree rather than a complete contract that could simply be memorialized at a later time). See also Johnson Intern., Inc. v. City of Phoenix, 967 P.2d 607 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1998) (concluding that a "memorandum of understanding" between a developer and a city was not sufficient to support a claim of promissory estoppel); Gorodensky v. Mitsubishi Pulp Sales Inc., 92 F. Supp. 2d 249 (S.D. N.Y. 2000) (stating that a letter of intent between a new company and a potential purchaser of the company's product was not a binding contract based on all factors considered) affirmed by, Gorodensky v. Mitsubishi Pulp Sales, Inc., 242 F.3d 365 (2d Cir. 2000).

(n5)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Chapman v. Brokaw, 588 N.E.2d 462 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992); Philmer Mid-Atl., Inc. v. York St. Assocs. II, 566 A.2d 1253 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1989). Schroth v. Seminole Supermarket, Inc., 829 So.2d 597 (La. App. 2002) (whether co-owner of property who did not sign lease nonetheless consented to lease).

(n6)Footnote 119. For an overview of the area of leases for illegal purposes, see Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.1, rep. note at 308 (1977); Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n7)Footnote 120. See, e.g., Lozano v. Brant, 343 P.2d 177 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 1959) (citing §§ 1598 and 1668 of the California Civil Code, which state that contracts, including leases, for illegal purposes are void); see also Louis Friedman Realty Co. v. De Stefan, 217 N.Y.S. 142 (1926).

(n8)Footnote 121. See, e.g., 220 West 42 Assocs. v. Cohen, 302 N.Y.S.2d 494 (1969) (holding that a landlord can void a lease for an illegal purpose, but the tenant cannot, as this would allow a tenant to abort a lease at any time merely by performing illegal acts upon the premises).

(n9)Footnote 122. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.11 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n10)Footnote 123. See, e.g., Quality Wig Co. v. J. C. Nichols Co., 728 S.W.2d 611 (Mo. Ct. App. 1987); Tel-Ex Plaza, Inc. v. Hardees Restaurants, Inc., 255 N.W.2d 794 (Mich. Ct. App. 1977).

(n11)Footnote 124. As mentioned above, the term interesse termini has been used to refer both to the tenant's rights before the leasehold begins if the leasehold is to begin in futuro, and also to the tenant's rights after the leasehold has begun but before he takes possession. See William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.13 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n12)Footnote 125. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.1 stat. note at 68-76 (1977) (detailed list of state Statute of Frauds provisions).

(n13)Footnote 126. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 2.5 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980).

(n14)Footnote 127. See Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.03 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). See also Carter v. Schick, 817 S.W.2d 238 (Ky. Ct. App. 1991) (holding that when both parties agree that an oral lease was for successive monthly periods, the Statute of Frauds was no bar to recovery or rent arrearage if renewals of the oral lease exceeded 12 months).

(n15)Footnote 128. Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.1 cmt. f (1977).

(n16)Footnote 129. See, e.g., Bell v. Vaughn, 53 P.2d 61 (Ariz. 1935); accord, Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.1 (1977); but cf. Jellet v. Rhode, 45 N.W. 13 (Minn. 1890); Greenwood v. Strother, 16 S.W. 138 (Ky. 1891).

(n17)Footnote 130. Three views govern how a court will infer the length of the periodic tenancy which results in this situation. For an explanation of each view and supporting cases, see Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.3 rep. note at 86-87 (1977). Santacroce Associates v. Cambino, 1998 Conn. Super. LEXIS 220 (No. CV 970257458, Feb. 3, 1998) tenancy for years, invalid because of the Statute of Frauds, results in year to year periodic tenancy when lessee takes possession of the premises).

(n18)Footnote 131. Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.3 (1977).

(n19)Footnote 132. This is the view of the Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.3 (1977).

(n20)Footnote 133. See, e.g., Rich Taubman Assocs. v. Harvyn Stamford, Inc., 645 A.2d 1039 (Conn. App. 1993); Aylett v. Aylett, 60 P.3d 1114 (Or. App. 2003) (defendant's acts of part performance under oral lease agreement were exclusively and unequivocally referable to agreement and took it out of scope of statute of frauds); Tiegs v. Watts, 954 P.2d 877 (Wash. 1998) ("we have recognized as enforceable leases ones that do not fully comply with statutory requisites when under the facts it would be inequitable for the challenging parties to assert invalidity of their own agreements. An instrument may be taken out of operation of the statute of frauds by a form of equitable estoppel based upon the notion it would be inequitable for the challenging party to assert invalidity of the instrument to which that party agreed. An unacknowledged lease, which is to some extent a parol contract concerning real estate, must be proven by clear and convincing evidence. A lease prepared by the lessor should be interpreted in favor of the lessee. Leases have been sustained where the lessee had performed acts called for in the lease in reliance upon it, giving rise to estoppel or part performance").

(n21)Footnote 134. See, e.g., Sutton v. Warner, 15 Cal. Rptr 2d 632 (Ct. App. 1993); Wing v. Munns, 849 P.2d 954 (Idaho Ct. App. 1992) rev'd, Wing v. Munns, 849 P.2d 924 (Idaho 1993); Kruse v. Hemp, 853 P.2d 1373 (Wash. 1993) modified, Berg v. Ting, 886 P.2d 564 (Wash. 1995); Fandley v. Lee, 880 S.W.2d 164 (Tex. App. 1994) (an oral agreement for the sale of land may be enforced in equity provided the purchaser can show that (1) partial consideration was paid; (2) the purchaser took possession of the property; and (3) the purchaser made valuable permanent improvements to the property. In order for the improvements to be "valuable," so as to allow an oral agreement sale of land to be enforced in equity, improvements must be substantial and add materially to the value of the property).

(n22)Footnote 135. See, e.g., Player v. Chandler, 382 S.E.2d 891 (S.C. 1989); Kolkman v. Roth, 656 N.W.2d 148 (Iowa 2003) (promissory estoppel exception of the statute of frauds applied to admit into evidence an oral lease in excess of one year); EP Operating Co. v. MJC Energy Co., 883 S.W.2d 263 (Tex. App. 1994) (in order to establish an equitable estoppel sufficient to preclude the Statute of Frauds defense, the party had the burden to raise and prove during the trial: (1) a false representation or concealment of material facts; (2) made with knowledge, actual or constructive, of those facts; (3) with the intention that it should be acted on; (4) to a party without knowledge, or the means of knowledge of those facts; and (5) who detrimentally relied upon the misrepresentation); Davis v. Nelson, 880 S.W.2d 658 (Mo. App. 1994) (the Statute of Frauds did not preclude enforcement of the oral agreement to execute documents terminating the condominium arrangement and creating a party wall agreement because: (1) the owner of the adjoining unit relied on the promise by purchasing the adjoining lot; (2) the reliance on the promise was foreseeable; and (3) failure to enforce the contract would result in injustice); Tiegs v. Watts, 954 P.2d 877 (Wash. 1998).

(n23)Footnote 136. See, e.g., Magcobar N. Am. v. Grassco Oilfield Servs., Inc., 736 S.W.2d 787 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987). Tiegs v. Watts, 954 P.2d 877 (Wash. 1998); Corder v. Idaho Farmway, Inc., 986 P.2d 1019 (Idaho App. 1999) (Idaho law allows courts to compel specific performance of an oral lease even if it exceeds a term of one year in the case of partial performance).

(n24)Footnote 137. See, e.g., Sunset Mobile Home Park v. Parsons, 324 N.W.2d 452 (Iowa 1982); Davis v. Dinkins, 613 N.Y.S.2d 933 (1994).

(n25)Footnote 138. See, e.g., Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. v. Bluvshtein, 281 Cal. Rptr. 298 (Ct. App. 1991), but see, Notrica v. State Compensation Ins. Fund, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 89 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999).

(n26)Footnote 139. See, e.g., Mouton v. P.A.B., Inc., 450 So. 2d 410 (La. Ct. App. 1984) (determining amount of rent by examining parties' intent and actions).

(n27)Footnote 140. Most states have enacted statutes that allow the landlord to recover fair rental value for a leasehold. See § 39.05, supra n.104 and accompanying text.

(n28)Footnote 141. Uniform Residential Landlord & Tenant Act § 1.401(d) (1972).

(n29)Footnote 142. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68, § 250.202.

(n30)Footnote 143. See, e.g., Idaho Code § 9-503.

(n31)Footnote 144. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 8-9-2. For a comprehensive listing of state statutes dealing with the signing requirement for leases, see Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.1 stat. note at 68 (1977).

(n32)Footnote 145. See, e.g., Mont. Code Ann. § 70-26-204.

(n33)Footnote 146. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1161 (tenants who hold over for more than 60 days get an additional one-year term).

(n34)Footnote 147. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-342; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46-8-10.

(n35)Footnote 148. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.1 stat. note at 74-76 (1977) for a complete listing of state statutes which require recording of long-term leases.

(n36)Footnote 149. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1 stat. note at 3-11 (1977) for a list of state statutes governing eviction of tenants; Havington v. Glover, 722 A.2d 500 (N.H. 1998) (though common law suggested that period for notice in terminating periodic tenancies could be agreed upon, such common law tradition did not survive a legislative enactment that precisely prescribed the way in which notice was to be given).

(n37)Footnote 150. See Restatement (Second) of Property stat. note to ch. 5 at 150-168 (1977) for a list of state statutes imposing obligations on landlords to maintain leaseholds in liveable condition; see also Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.30 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (categorizing state statutes by tenant remedy). For examples, see Pick v. Cohen, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839 (2000) (West Hollywood's Rent Stabilization Ordinance is upheld as a permissible exercise of police power designed to protect tenants from involuntary displacement).

(n38)Footnote 151. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 stat. note at 54-60 (1977) (comprehensive listing of state statutes prohibiting retaliatory eviction by landlord, including statutes which create a presumption of landlord retaliation in certain circumstances); see also Deborah Hodges Bell, Providing Security of Tenure for Residential Tenants: Good Faith as a Limitation on the Landlord's Right to Terminate, 19 Ga. L. Rev. 483 (1985); Kenneth Salzberg & Audrey A. Zibelman, Good Cause Eviction, 21 Williamette L. Rev. 61 (1985); Daine M. Goodman, Note, Just Cause Eviction: Limiting a Landlord's Ability to Evict, 11 San Fern. V. L. Rev. 71 (1983). Minneapolis Pub. Hous. Auth. v. Lor, 591 N.W.2d 700 (Minn. 1999) (good cause for eviction exists when a member of the household engages in threatening criminal activity).

(n39)Footnote 152. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.73 - 6.76 (West, 3d ed., 2000). Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note 1 (1977); Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3 d 177 (1966).

(n40)Footnote 153. William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.79 (West, 3d ed., 2000).

(n41)Footnote 154. Napleton v. Ray Buick, Inc., 704 N.E.2d 864 (Ill. App. 1998).

(n42)Footnote 155. See Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.03 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n43)Footnote 156. See City of Manhattan v. Galbraith, 945 P.2d 10 (Kan. App. 1997) (lessee's interest in leased property terminated when title vested in condemnor).

(n44)Footnote 157. See § 84.03(f), infra.

(n45)Footnote 158. Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. App. 1996) (foreclosure of mortgage terminated lease).

(n46)Footnote 159. Boss v. Koch, 589 N.W.2d 456 (Wis. App. 1998) (the court refused to honor termination because notice of termination to the tenant was improper); Davidson v. Kenney, 971 S.W.2d 896 (Mo. App. 1998) (Missouri follows strict construction in determining whether notice requirements have been complied with in terminating a periodic tenancy).

(n47)Footnote 160. See § 39.05(d), supra n.113 and accompanying text.

(n48)Footnote 161. See, e.g., Uniform Residential Landlord & Tenant Act § 4.20(a); Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7 and cmts. a, f (1977); Darnet Realty Associates. v. 136 East 56th St. Owners, Inc., 246 A.D.2d 312 (N.Y.S. Ct. 1998) (parties limited to remedies agreed upon in lease); Brentwood Investors v. Wal-Mart Stores, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9222 (No. C-95-0853, Ju. 17, 1998, N.D. Cal.) (illustrates that termination is a remedy available to the landlord) affirmed by, Brentwood Investors v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 225 F.3d 661 (9th Cir. 2000).

(n49)Footnote 162. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.2 Statutory Note at 399-405 (1977) (list of state statutes allowing for summary recovery of possession of property for nonpayment of rent).

(n50)Footnote 163. Id. Cache County v. Beus 978 P.2d 1043 (Utah App. 1999) (landlords must strictly comply with the statute before they are entitled to terminate the tenancy).

(n51)Footnote 164. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.2 Statutory Note at 450-452 (list of state statutes governing waste and alterations by tenant, and landlord's remedies); id. at stat. note to ch. 5, 152-154 (list of state statutes addressing the question of destruction of the leasehold). See generally 49 Am. Jur. 2d Landlord and Tenant § 85 (1970) (discussing landlord remedies for nuisance). Huber Inv. Corp. v. Warner, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 649 (No. 16545, Jan. 30, 1998) (an action to evict is an election to rescind the contract of lease, and is a remedy available to landlord upon tenant's non-compliance with lease terms); Housing Auth. of Portland v. Comstock, 988 P.2d 407 (Ore. Ct. App. 1999) (holding that state law allows a landord to terminate a lease when the tenant threatens the landlord or an employee of the landlord).

(n52)Footnote 165. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 Statutory Note at 413-16 (list of state statutes governing security deposits).

(n53)Footnote 166. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 Statutory Note at 409-415 (list of state statutes giving the landlord a lien on tenant's goods to satisfy rent obligation); see generally Powell on Real Property (R) § 16A.01 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.22 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980).

(n54)Footnote 167. Shoemaker v. Whitt, 718 N.E.2d 932 (Oh. App. 1998) (mentions tenants' right to terminate upon breach by landlord).

(n55)Footnote 168. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.30 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (categorizing state statutes by tenant remedy, including repair-and-deduct, rent escrow, appointment of a receiver, etc.); Rutherford v. Bee Gee Excelsior Management, Inc., 750 N.Y.S.2d 611 (2002) (plaintiff could not seek recovery of rent overcharge against building's managing agent where she failed to exhaust administrative remedies); Committed Community Assoc. v. Croswell, 659 N.Y.S.2d 691 (1997); Law v. Franco, 690 N.Y.S.2d 893 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1999) (under certain circumstances a tenant may withhold rent when the landlord has breached the warranty of habitability) affirmed by, Committed Community Assocs. v. Croswell, 673 N.Y.S.2d 708 (App. Div. 2d Dep't 1998); CAP Partners v. Cameron, 599 N.W.2d 309 (N.D. 1999) (statutory law can provide tenants additional remedies, while not limiting existing common law remedies).

(n56)Footnote 169. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.07; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 92.052.

(n57)Footnote 170. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4-101. CAP Partners v. Cameron, 599 N.W.2d 309 (N.D. 1999) (state statute allows a tenant to terminate the contract when landlord's actions, or inactions, with regard to habitability of the building constructively evict the tenant); Decade 80-I, Ltd, v. PDQ Food Stores, 593 N.W.2d 94 (Wis. Ct. App. 1999) (tenant had right to declare lease terminated if landlord did not repair default within 30 days of notification).

(n58)Footnote 171. State v. Hawkins, 967 P.2d 966 (Ut. Ct. App. 1998) (the abandonment of a lease is manifest when the tenant leases the premises with the intent to terminate possession, control, and the terms of the lease contract).

(n59)Footnote 172. See Carlton Chambers Co. v. Trask, 158 N.E. 786, 789 (Mass. Sup. Ct., 1927) ("Any acts which are equivalent to an agreement on the part of a tenant to abandon and on the part of the landlord to resume possession of demised premises amount to a surrender of a term by operation of law"); Quarles v. Shoemaker, 978 S.W.2d 551 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1998) ("Abandonment acquiesced in by the landlord amounts to a surrender, and is a restoration of the landlord's occupancy. Abandonment of the lease" -- that is, the leaving of the premises with the intention not to return "-- or the relinquishment by the lessee of rights under the lease, without intention to resume them, may therefore be treated by the landlord as a termination of the lease... . The abandonment of possession by the tenant will not work a surrender of the premises, unless it is assented to by the lessor, and such acceptance must be shown by word or acts, such, for example, as entry into possession"); 159 East, Inc. v. Margolis, 702 So. 2d 286 (Fla. Dist Ct. App. 1997) (lessor lawfully retook possession of leased premises upon lessee's abandonment, as defined by terms of parties' commercial lease).

(n60)Footnote 173. See Cornelius J. Moynihan and Sheldon Kurtz, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 114-115 (3d ed. 2002).

(n61)Footnote 174. See Cornelius J. Moynihan and Sheldon Kurtz, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 114-115 (3d ed. 2002). See, e.g., Properties Inv. Group of Mid-America v. J.B.A., Inc., 495 N.W.2d 624 (Neb. 1993); Hilliard v. Robertson, 570 N.W.2d 180 (Neb. 1997) (evidence that the only advertising used by landlord to relet apartment was faded sign on front lawn warranted finding that landlord did not mitigate damages); Finish Line, Inc. v. Jakobitz, 557 N.W.2d 914 (Iowa Ct. App. 1996) (lessor failed to mitigate damages by renting the building out to businesses that did not pay rent); Seramonte Assocs. v. Smith, 1998 Conn. Super. LEXIS 787 (No. 97068247, Jan. 20, 1998) (the court found that plaintiff has exerted reasonable efforts to mitigate damages after defendant abandoned premises).

(n62)Footnote 175. See, e.g., Nylen v. Park Doral Apts., 535 N.E.2d 178 (Ind. Ct. App. 1989); United States Nat'l Bank of Or. v. Homeland, Inc., 631 P.2d 761 (Or. 1981).

(n63)Footnote 176. See, e.g., Grueninger Travel v. Lake County Trust Co., 413 N.E.2d 1034 (Ind. Ct. App. 1980). See also Mileusnich v. Novogroder Co., Inc., 643 N.E.2d 937 (Ind. Ct. App. 1994).

(n64)Footnote 177. Dale v. H.B. Smith Co., 136 F.3d 843 (1st Cir. 1998) (abandonment terminates the tenancy at sufferance).

(n65)Footnote 178. See Murphy v. Fermano, 2002 Mass. App. Div. 220 (2002) (tenant's written response to landlord's inquiry, denying he had anything to do with his smoke alarm going off, did not qualify as a report of a code violation and, thus, could not form basis for retaliatory eviction); Ghadamian v. Channing, 742 N.Y.S.2d 632 (2002) (tenant's claim of retaliatory eviction was invalid due to lack of good faith effort); Youssef v. United Mgmt. Co., 683

A.2d 152 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (lessor had burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence nonretaliatory purpose behind tenants' eviction).

(n66)Footnote 179. See generally Powell on Real Property (R) § 16.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender) (discussing federal legislation in public housing); William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.81 (West, 3d ed., 2000). Department of Housing and Urban Development v. Rucker, 535 U.S. 125 (2002) (Court held that the Anti-Drug Abuse Act is constitutional-the Act allows for evictions on basis of drug-related criminal activity engaged in by tenant's household members, guests, or other persons under their control absent tenants' knowledge of such activities) (emphasis added); Lohman v. New York City Housing, 291 A.D.2d 288 (NYAD 2002) (excessive noise constituted sufficient ground for termination of tenancy under doctrine of non-desirability); Padilla v. Martinez, 752 N.Y.S.2d 28 (2002) (New York Housing Authority decision to evict tenant on the ground of non-desirability overturned because Authority violated policy designed to afford procedural safeguards to tenants whom it suspects are mentally disabled).

(n67)Footnote 180. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A 18-61.3. Franklin Tower One, L.L.C. v. N.M, 725 A.2d 1104 (N.J. 1999) (a landlord's refusal to accept housing or rental vouchers from low income tenants is not good cause for termination and violates New Jersey law).

(n68)Footnote 181. See § 39.05, supra n.59 and accompanying text.

(n69)Footnote 182. See § 39.05, supra n.59 and accompanying text.

(n70)Footnote 183. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1 stat. note at 3-11 (1977) (list of state statutes allowing actions for summary dispossession and unlawful detainer); see also Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant §§ 6.10-6.21 (Lawyers Co-op. 1980) (statutory summary proceedings available in all jurisdictions); Gonzalez v. Peterson, 678 N.Y.S.2d 855 (1998) (statute requires the existence of a holdover tenancy in order for the court to acquire jurisdiction in summary proceedings. Here, because termination was improper, no holdover tenancy was created; hence, no jurisdiction).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 39 LEASEHOLD ESTATES

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 39.07

AUTHOR: Professor James H. Backman J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 39.07 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

William B. Stoebuck and Dale A. Whitman. The Law of Property. St. Paul: West Pub. Co., 3d ed.,. 2000.

Gaudio, Arthur, ed. American Law of Real Property. Ch. 5. Matthew Bender, 1991.

Moynihan, Cornelius J. Introduction to the Law of Real Property. St. Paul: West Pub. Co., 1962.

National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act (1972).

7B Uniform Laws Annotated 427. West Pub. Co., 1985.

Powell on Real Property. Ch. 16 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

Salzberg and Zibelman. "Good Cause Eviction." Willamette L. Rev. Vol. 21 (1985) 61, 73-77.

Schoshinski. American Law of Landlord and Tenant. Lawyers Co-op, 1980.

Articles

Backer, Ronald G. "Pennsylvania Landlord Remedies: An Update" 107 Dick. L. Rev. 75 (Summer 2002).

Becker, David M. "Debunking the Sanctity of Precedent." Wash.U. L.Q. Vol. 76 (1998) 853. This article includes a substantial discussion on the distinction between freehold defeasibles and various non-freehold estates as pertaining to testamentary transfers of land.

Bell. "Providing Security of Tenure for Residential Tenants: Good Faith as a Limitation on the Landlord's Right to Terminate." Ga. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1985) 483.

Brown, Jeremy K. "A Landlord's Duty to Mitigate in Arkansas: What it was, What it is, and What it Should be." 55 Ark. L. Rev. 123 (2002).

Chase and Taylor. "Landlord and Tenant: A Study in Property and Contract." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1985) 571.

Christopher S. Brennan, "The Next Step in the Evolution of the Implied Warranty of Habitability: Applying the Warranty to Condominiums." 67 Fordham L. Rev. 3041 (May, 1999).

Comment. "Effect of the Statutes (of Frauds) Upon Leases and the Estate Taken Under a Non-Conforming Lease." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1962) 219.

Goldman, Gary. "Uniform Commercial Landlord and Tenant Act-A Proposal to Reform 'Law Out of Context.'" 19 T.M. Cooley L. Rev. 175 (Trinity Term 2002).

Hicks. "The Contractual Nature of Real Property Leases." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1972).

Humbach. "The Common-Law Conception of Leasing: Mitigation, Habitability, and Dependence of Covenants." Wash. U. L.Q. Vol. 60 (1983).

Kerszencwejg, Lisa, "Contracts vs. Conveyances: A Criticism of Stonehedge Square Ltd. Partnership v. Movie Merchants, Inc." 61 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 559 (2000).

Love. "Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases." Kan. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1982).

Note, "Contract -- Interpretation of Contract Terms -- Meaning of 'War' in Termination Clause of Insurance Contract." Dick. L. Rev. Vol. 57 (1953) 172.

Note, "Effect of Statutory Notice for Termination of Tenancies at Will." Iowa L. Rev. Vol. 26 (1940).

Note, "Just Cause Eviction: Limiting a Landlord's Ability to Evict." San Vern. V.L. Rev. Vol. 11 (1983) 71.

Note, "Landlord and Tenant -- "Lease' Defined -- Tenancy at Will." Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1936) 109.

O'Leary, Kimberly E., "The Inadvisability of Applying Preclusive Doctrines To Summary Judgment Evictions," 30 U. Tol. L. Rev. 49 (1998).

Skinner, David C. "Remedies: Rent Acceleration and Mitigation of Damages in Alabama." Ala. L. Rev. 45 (1993) 275.

Strand, Nicole. "Restructuring Public Housing: An Examination of the 'One Strike and You're Out' Policy." 24 Hamline J. Pub. L. & Pol'y 111 (Fall 2002).

Weinberg. "From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 1800-1920 (Part I)." S. Ill. U. L.J. Vol. 29 (1980).

Weissenberger. "The Landlord's Duty to Mitigate Damages on the Tenant's Abandonment: A Survey of Old Law and New Trends." Temp. L. Q. Vol. 53 (1980) 1.

Whelan, Thomas M., "Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a Tenant's Personal Property," 3 Tex. Wesleyan L. Rev. 283 (1997).

Annotations

Annotation, Eminent Domain: Measure and Elements of Lessee's Compensation for Condemnor's Taking or Damaging of Leasehold, 17 A.L.R.4th 337 (1981).

Annotation, Landlord's Duty on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R.3d 534 (1999).

Annotation, Landlord's Permitting Third Party to Occupy Premises Rent-Free as Acceptance of Tenant's Surrender of Premises, 18 A.L.R.5th 437 (1996).

Annotation, Liability of Lessee of Particular Premises in Shopping Center for Injury to Patron from Condition on Portion of Premises Not Included in His Leasehold, 48 A.L.R.3d 1163 (1973).

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Lessor's Breach of Contract to Lease or to Put Lessee into Possession, 88 A.L.R.2d 1024 (1997).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.02

Supp. to § 39.02 Missing

Ala. Code § 35

§ 39.02(a) Conveyance and Contract Characteristics. Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-9

Add:

Christopher Vaeth, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R.5th 1 (2005) .

Add:

Manglona v. Gov't. of the Commonwealth of the N. Mariana Islands, 2005 N. Mar. I. LEXIS 13 PP 48-55, 2005 MP 15 (N. Mar. I. Oct. 4, 2005) (discussing the two different schools of thought, noting that the majority of states require the landlord to mitigate damages).

Sylva Shops, Ltd. P'ship v. Hibbard, 623 S.E.2d 785 (N. C. Ct. App. 2006) (discussing landlord's duty to mitigate).

JJ&C Realty v. Crooks, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 102, *11 (Jan. 11, 2005) ("A landlord has a duty to mitigate a tenant's damages.")

Add:

In re; Stancil, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2185 (Bankr. D.C. Nov. 7, 2005) (DC circuit follows the implied warranty of habitability).

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2545(c) (2006) (Substantial Breach of Warranty of Habitability; Prevailing Party). Correct:

Del. Code Ann. Tit. 25 § 5305 (2005) (discussing landlord's obligations, including to "provide a rental unit which shall not endanger the health, welfare or safety of the tenants or occupants and which is fit for the purpose for which it is expressly rented.") (§ 5303 is just the landlord's duty to deliver the premises on time).

Add:

D.C. Code Ann. § 14-301 (codifying the implied warranty of habitability for leases).

Add and Correct:

O.C.G.A. § 44-7-14 Tort Liability of Landlord (Looks like § 44-7-13 should be changed to O.C.G.A. as well)

Add:

Ameripride Linen & Apparel Servs. v. Eat Well, Inc., 836 N.E.2d 1116 (Mass. App. Ct. 2005) (applying Massachusetts statute for implied warranty of habitability/damages).

Correct:

Mich Stat. Ann. § 26.1109 should be changed to Mich. Comp. Laws § 554.139 (2005) (Covenant that the premises are fit for their intended use, implied warranty of habitability); § 554.633 (2005) (a lease agreement cannot covenant away the implied warranty of habitability).

Fritz v. Warthen, 213 N.W.2d 339 (Minn. 1973) superseded by statute as contained in Fraser v. Fraser, 642 N.W.2d 34 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002) .

Add:

Minn. Stat. § 504B.161 (2005) (covenant of lessor to keep the premises in a condition "fit for the use intended by the parties").

Edie v. Gray, 121 P.3d 516 (Mont. 2005) (applying Montana's statute for the implied warranty of habitability).

Correct:

R.R.S. Neb. § 76-1419 (2005).

Add:

Matte v. Shippee Auto Inc., 876 A.2d 167 (N.H. 2005) (Implied warranty of habitability does not extend to commercial leases)

Edge Mgt. Consulting Inc. v. Blank, 807 N.Y.S.2d 353 (N.Y. App. Div. 2006) (applying the statute and stating that there is no indemnification against others participating in creating the unfit premises because landlord has independent duty to maintain the premises).

Dean v. Hill, 615 S.E.2d 699 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) ; Gibbs v. Cobb, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 916 (filed May 3, 2005) (applying statute).

Correct:

Glyco v. Schultz, 62 Ohio Op. 2d 459, 289 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio 1972) , superseded by statute as contained in Laster v. Bowman, 370 N.E.2d (Ohio Ct. App. 1977),

Add:

Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (Anderson 2006).

Article 9 of the U.C.C. (2005) (lessor cannot collect rents while a dwelling is unfit for habitation).

Correct:

Kamarath v. Bennett, 568 S.W.2d 658 (Tex. 1978) superseded by statute as contained in Bolin Dev. Corp. v. Indart, 803 S.W.2d 817 (Tex. App. 1991) (not in Garza-Vale as stated in the footnote. Garza-Vale only questioned it).

Add:

Gym-N-I Playgrounds, Inc. v. Snider, 158 S.W.3d 78 (Tex. App. 2005) (discussing the different approaches the Texas courts of appeal take in addressing the implied warranty of habitability).

Correct:

Wade v. Jobe (it isn't clear this is superseded because they used Wade to decide the case in Carlie).

Add:

Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (2005) (Owner's Duties--Maintenance of Common Areas, Building, and Utilities--Duty to Correct--No Duty to Correct Condition Caused by Renter--Owner May Refuse to Correct)

Willard v. Parsons Hill P'ship, 882 A.2d 1213 (Vt. 2005) (Vermont's statute habitability of premises did not supersede the common law implied warranty of habitability in regards to latent defects; only in regards to patent ones. The common law implied warranty of habitability still applies to latent defects and no notice need be given).

Cromer v. Johnson Vill., L.L.C., 68 Va. Cir. 442 (Va. Cir. Ct. 2005) (Cannot contract away the duty of implied warranty of habitability).

Monohon v. Antilla, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 2751 (filed Oct. 25, 2005) (applying the warranty involves the rental agreement); but see also Powers v. Hollinger Family Props., L.L.C., 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 836 (filed Apr. 25, 2005) (the landlord's duty extends only to those duties listed in the statute).

Willbanks v. Ombrellaro, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 676 (filed Apr. 19, 2005) (applying the statute).

Pies v. Perssion, 111 N.W.2d 409 (Wis. 1961) is codified in Wis. Stat. § 704.07 as stated in Zehner v. Vill. of Marshall, 2006 WI App. 6, 2005 Wisc. App. LEXIS 1083 (Dec. 8, 2005) .

Wielen v. Simonson, 701 N.W.2d 653 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (full rent abatement is not proper unless the tenant is no longer in possession).

Correct:

Suave v. Nix should actually read Suave v. Winfree.

Add:

Mankiewicz v. Leominster Regency Assocs. L.P., 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 156 (Mar. 29, 2005) (no new cause of action for negligence is created by the sanitary code).

Holt v. Hegwood, 708 N.W.2d 21 (Wis. App. 2005) (General welfare and safety statutes should not be construed to create private causes of action if it does not purport to create them.)

Add:

W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises as Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R.2d 586 (2005) .

W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Liability for Injury to Guest in Home or Similar Premises, 25 A.L.R. 2d 598 (2005) .

Danny R. Veilleux, Landlord's Liability to Third Person for Injury Resulting from Attack on Leased Premises by Dangerous or Vicious Animal Kept by Tenant, 87 A.L.R. 4th 1004 (2005)

Rhaney v. Univ. of Maryland E. Shore, 880 A.2d 357, 364-365 (Md. 2005) ("[A] landlord has no obligation to maintain the leased premises for the safety of the tenant.' In certain circumstances, a duty to a tenant in the leased premises may arise out of dangerous and defective conditions within the common areas controlled by the landlord, but only in a narrow context- the landlord must have actual knowledge of activity taking place in the common areas that may affect the demised premises or, in the alternative, the landlord should have had such knowledge and foreseen the harm suffered.")(quoting MACROBUTTONHtmlResAnchor Hemmings v. Pelham Wood Ltd. Liab. Ltd. P'ship, 826 A.2d 443, 452 (Md. 2003)) .

Jessop v. Carmichael Mgmt., 614 S.E.2d 827, 828 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) ("A landlord has no duty to inspect premises while a tenant is in possession, and if the premises fall into disrepair it is the tenant's duty to notify the landlord.").

Kane v. Bd. of Appeals, 887 A.2d 1060 (Md. 2005) (landlord may be liable when harm is caused by a dangerous condition the landlord promised to, but ultimately failed to fix; voluntarily repairs but repairs negligently; and the landlord may be liable for negligence for violating safety ordinances.).

Add:

Matte v. Shippee Auto Inc., 876 A.2d 167 (N.H. 2005) (discussing independent and dependent lease covenants and refusing to adopt the concept of dependent covenants. Id. at 170-173).

Nathan Lane Assocs., L.L.P. v. Merchs. Wholesale of Iowa, Inc., 698 N.W.2d 136, 139 (Iowa 2005) (no right to possession, then no duty to pay rent).

Add:

Livinggood v. Balsdon, 2006 N.D. LEXIS 17 , P 5, 2006 N.D. 11 (filed Jan. 31, 2006) ("Specific performance is one of the available remedies in cases involving an interest in real estate when it has unique character or if monetary damages are otherwise inadequate compensation for a breach of contract.").

§ 39.02(b) Real Property or Personal Property Characteristics [Go To Main]

Add:

Matter of Lupo v. Bd. of Assessors of Town of Huron, 799 N.Y.S.2d 405, 413 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) ("[A] lease is chattel real constituting the personal property of the lessee ...").

Frank C. Minvielle, L.L.C. v. IMC Global Operations, Inc., 380 F. Supp. 2d 755, 774 (W.D. La. 2005) (contractual considerations, characterizing mineral lease as a "limited personal servitude").

Morris v. Solomon State Bank (In re Elder), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2143, *16 (Bankr. Kan. Nov. 7, 2005) (Kansas statute provides that a manufactured home is a fixture and personal property.).

Trenolone v. Cook Exploration Co., 166 S.W.3d 495 (Tex. App. 2006) (parties can contract for easement to revert to landowners while certain fixtures on the easement remain the easement holder's personal property).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.03

Supp. to § 39.03 Real Property Interests of Landlords and Tenants

[Go To Main]

insert after the sentence ending "shorter in duration than the landlord's rights in the property."

Add new footnote 32.1:

Clean Earth Dredging Techs., Inc. v. Hudson County Improvement Auth., 877 A.2d 363, 368 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2005) ("[A] lease gives the right of exclusive possession for all purposes not prohibited by its terms.") (alterations in original) (quoting Thiokol Chem. Corp. v. Morris County Bd. of Taxation, 41 N.J. 405, 417, 197 A.2d 176 (1964)) .

Add:

Goff v. State, 875 A.2d 132, 144 n.12 (Md. 2005) ("A leasehold estate or tenancy is more than a non-possessory interest in property, yet something less than a present freehold estate.")(quoting Douglas M. Bregman & Gary G. Everngam, Maryland Landlord-Tenant Law Practice and Procedure, at 15-16 (3d ed. 2003)).

Santa Fe Trail Neighborhood Redev. Corp. v. W.F. Coen & Co., 154 S.W.3d 432, 439-443 (Mo. Ct. App. 2005) (discussing the different attributes of a license and a lease and stating that condemnation awards should be split between lessor and tenant (pursuant to state law)).

Brennan Hous. Auth. v. Davies, 158 S.W.3d 53, 60 (Tex. App. 2005) ("However, a lessor's contractual right to enter the premises to make repairs and alterations is not a reservation of control over a part of the premises.").

Riverwood Commer. Park, LLC v. Standard Oil Co., 698 N.W.2d 478, 482 (N.D. 2005) ("The major distinction between a lease and an easement or license is that a lease confers exclusive use and possession of the property against the world, including the landowner, whereas an easement or license merely grants a right or permission to nonexclusive use of the land for a specific, limited purpose.")

Add:

Kiehm v. Adams, 126 P.3d 339, n. 19 (Haw. 2005) ("[A] mutual agreement to end a lease before the term ends is in effect a surrender, the rights of the sublessee are the same as when there is a surrender.")

Pinzon v. A & G Props., 874 A.2d 347, 353 (D.C. 2005) (If a landlord sues for possession of the premises, the tenant cannot create a defense based on the landlord's failure to perform certain obligations.)

Add:

Goff v. State, 875 A.2d 132, 144 n.12 (Md. 2005) ("A leasehold estate or tenancy is more than a non-possessory interest in property, yet something less than a present freehold estate.")(quoting Douglas M. Bregman & Gary G. Everngam, Maryland Landlord-Tenant Law Practice and Procedure, at 15-16 (3d ed. 2003)).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.04

Supp. to § 39.04 Leaseholds Distinguished from Other Relationships.

[Go To Main]

§ 39.04(a) Sign Cases. Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. §§ 8-304, 8-305, 8-314

Add:

Goff v. State, 875 A.2d 132, 144 n.12 (Md. 2005) ("A leasehold estate or tenancy is more than a non-possessory interest in property, yet something less than a present freehold estate.")(quoting Douglas M. Bregman & Gary G. Everngam, Maryland Landlord-Tenant Law Practice and Procedure, at 15-16 (3d ed. 2003)) .

Sugarhill Ltd. v. Brezo, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1811 , P 40-42, 2005 Ohio 1889 (Apr. 22, 2005) (comparing what would constitute a freehold estate and what would constitute a leasehold).

Ward v. Brown, 2005 Fla. App. LEXIS 9374, * 5-6, 30 Fla. L. Weekly D 1532, (June 17, 2005) (tenants pursuant to a perpetual lease were considered the equitable owners of the property).

Brennan Hous. Auth. v. Davies, 158 S.W.3d 53, 60 (Tex. App. 2005) ("However, a lessor's contractual right to enter the premises to make repairs and alterations is not a reservation of control over a part of the premises.").

Kiehm v. Adams, 126 P.3d 339, *19-24 (Haw. 2005) ("In contrast to a lease, a license in the law of real property conveys no estate in land, is not assignable, and is revocable at the will of the licensor." Also, roomers and lodgers are different than tenants, and therefore can be accepted by a lessee without violating a prohibition on subletting. The difference between a lease and a license is determined by the "intention of the parties as ascertained from the nature of the agreement.")

Nathan Lane Assocs., L.L.P. v. Merchs. Wholesale of Iowa, Inc., 698 N.W.2d 136, 139 (Iowa 2005) ("A landlord-tenant relationship exists only if the landlord transfers the right to possession of the leased property.") (quoting Rest. 2d Property § 1.2 (1977)).

Santa Fe Trail Neighborhood Redev. Corp. v. W.F. Coen & Co., 154 S.W.3d 432, 439-441 (Mo. Ct. App. 2005) (discussing the different attributes of a license and a lease).

Dyke v. Jackson, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6461 (filed Aug. 10, 2005).

Massawa Enterprises v. Silverstein, 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 3167 (Dec. 20, 2005) (differences between a license and a lease).

Pope v. Lee, 879 A.2d 735, 740 (N.H. 2005) (courts will enforce perpetual leases if it is the parties' intent).

Nagle v. GOM Shelf, L.L.C., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34759, *12 (S.D. Tex. Jun. 24, 2005) ("[A] 'property owner' includes one holding the mineral leases for the land on which an oil and gas well is located because a mineral lease conveys a fee simple determinable in real property.").

after the sentence "The possessory rights of a tenant represent a lesser estate than the ownership rights available through the freehold estates--both present possessory and future interest estates.

Add new footnote 37.1:

Sugarhill Ltd. v. Brezo, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1811 , P 40-42, 2005 Ohio 1889 (Apr. 22, 2005) (comparing what would constitute a freehold estate and what would constitute a leasehold).

Brennan Hous. Auth. v. Davies, 158 S.W.3d 53, 60 (Tex. App. 2005) ("However, a lessor's contractual right to enter the premises to make repairs and alterations is not a reservation of control over a part of the premises.").

Add:

Kohman v. Rochambeau Realty & Dev. Corp., 792 N.Y.S.2d 458, 461 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) (Sullivan, J., Dissenting) ("If a building owner allows a tenant to use a portion of the owner's property that is not part of the lease, such use is recognized as a license... . A license with respect to the use and occupancy of the grantor's premises is cancelable at will and without cause.")

Add:

Kiehm v. Adams, 126 P.3d 339, 19-21 (Haw. 2005) ("In contrast to a lease, a license in the law of real property conveys no estate in land, is not assignable, and is revocable at the will of the licensor." Also, roomers and lodgers are different than tenants, and therefore can be accepted by a lessee without violating a prohibition on subletting. The difference between a lease and a license is determined by the "intention of the parties as ascertained from the nature of the agreement.")

Slue v. New York Univ. Med. Ctr., 2006 US Dist. LEXIS 401 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2006) (Oral lease is enforceable, but it still must agree on "area to be leased, the duration of the lease, and the price to be paid.") (citing Rest. 2d Property: Landlord & Tenant § 2.1 (1977); quoting Davis v. Dinkins, 206 A.D.2d 365, 613 N.Y.S.2d 933, 935 (2d Dep't. 1994)) .

Add:

First Franklin Square Assocs. v. Franklin Square Prop. Account, 790 N.Y.S.2d 527 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) ("The central distinguishing characteristic of a lease is the surrender of absolute possession and control of property to another party for an agreed-upon rent." This possession even excludes the landlord except as provided in the lease agreement.) (quoting Matter of Plaza v City of New York, 305 A.D.2d 604, 606, 759 N.Y.S.2d 748 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003)) .

Add:

But see In re Goldstein (In re Will of Diamondstein), 6 Misc. 3d 1014A, 800 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Surrogate Ct. of N.Y. 2005) ("[I]n order for an agreement, oral or written, to be enforceable as a lease, all of the essential terms must be agreed upon, including duration.") (internal citations omitted).

Add:

Upper Southampton Twp. v. Upper Southampton Twp. Zoning Hearing Bd., 885 A.2d 85 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2005) (Lease for billboard created new economic development even though the exact location for the sign was not specified. Because the entire property was chosen to put the sign up, the exact location of the sign was irrelevant and the right was considered a lease, not a license.).

Trading Fair Houston, Inc. v. SignAd, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5636, *7 (Jul, 19, 2005) (Right to erect a billboard was a lease, not a license for several reasons, mostly dealing with the language in the agreement).

Harrell v. Lamar Co. L.L.C., 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 664, * 8-9 (Sep. 20, 2005) (A lease for a billboard was found to be valid even though the description was subject to several configurations. The parties' intent controlled).

Denny Wiekhorst Equip., Inc. v. Tri-State Outdoor Media Group, Inc., 693 N.W.2d 506 (Neb. 2005) (when lessee failed to take down billboard within a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease the sign became realty and belonged to the owner of the property).

Page 572 note 48: Add:

Clear Channel Outdoor v. City of Lakewood, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26408 (W.D. Wash. Jun. 3, 2005) (owner of billboard brought takings action. Action was not ripe because he did not exhaust all other resources to receive compensation).

Pima County v. Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc., 2006 Ariz. App. LEXIS 4 (Jan. 25, 2006) (Billboard owner had to remove billboards because of condemnation proceeding. He was given other land to erect the billboards as just compensation, but he was not exempt from the zoning restrictions and building codes on the new realty).

Sunshine Props. L.L.C. v. State DOT, 900 So. 2d 714 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) (lessor of land that lessees had trade fixtures on did not have to pay the lessees a portion of the lessor's condemnation award because the lessees were not represented in the settlement).

Lamar Whiteco Outdoor Corp. v. City of W. Chicago, 823 N.E.2d 610, 623 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) ("billboard owners have a right to just compensation for any condemned sign")(citing DOT v. Drury Displays, Inc., 764 N.E.2d 166, 172 (Ill. App. Ct. 2002)) .

Eller Media Co. v. Miss. Transp. Comm'n., 900 So. 2d 1156 (Miss. 2005) .

Adams Outdoor Adver. v. City of Madison, 2005 Wisc. App. LEXIS 1099, 14-20 (Dec. 14, 2005) (determining whether a "cost less depreciation" or a "income" method of valuation for condemnation awards for condemned billboards should be adopted, question on cert to the Wisconsin Supreme Court).

§ 39.04(b) Concession Cases. [Go To Main]

Add:

Theatre Confections v. Sunstar Theatres Coral Springs, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12604 (D.N.Y. 2003) (according to the lease agreement, the theatre was required to deposit funds from the sale of concessions directly into the bank account of the tenant).

§ 39.04(d) Lodging Cases Va. Code Ann. § 55

Add:

Goff v. State, 875 A.2d 132, 144 n.12 (Md. 2005) ("A leasehold estate or tenancy is more than a non-possessory interest in property, yet something less than a present freehold estate.")(quoting Douglas M. Bregman & Gary G. Everngam, Maryland Landlord-Tenant Law Practice and Procedure, at 15-16 (3d ed. 2003)) .

Ashley v. Waffle House, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2880 (D.S.C. Jan. 10, 2006) (duty that an owner owes to an invitee or business visitor is reasonable care).

Matthew D. Lincoln, Note: Landowners' Duty to Guests of Invitees and Tenants: Vogt v. Murraywood Swim & Racquet Club and Goode v. St. Stephens United Methodist Church, 57 S.C.L. Rev. 387 (2005).

§ 39.04(e) Possession Related to Purchase Contract [Go To Main]

Add:

Hans v. Lucas, 703 N.W.2d 880 (Neb. 2005) (equitable conversion for buyers in possession was not applicable because the contract put the risk of loss on the seller while the buyer was in occupancy).

After the sentence "Yet the positions of the tenant and the purchaser are different." add new footnote 53.1:

Renault & Handley Oakmead Solar Joint Venture, et al. v. Applied Materials, Inc., 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 1073 (Cal. Ct. App. filed Feb. 7, 2005) (When a tenant exercises an option to purchase, the tenant is no longer a lessee, but is instead a vendee and the lessor/lessee relationship and its incidents no longer exist. Vendee is under no obligation to pay rent from that time on if vendee has paid the purchase price; if the purchase price has not been paid, then the vendee must pay either rent or interest on the purchase price.) (citing Sacks v. Hayes, 146 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 885, 887-888 (1956) In re Zach's Estate, 257 Iowa 234, 131 N.W.2d 484, 486 (1965)) .

After the sentence "If, on the other hand, the seller stays in possession even though the title has been conveyed or the agreement specifies that the purchaser should have possession, the seller is considered to be a tenant of the purchaser." add new footnote 53.2:

Grimm v. Huckabee, 891 So. 2d 608 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) (Tenants in possession pursuant to a sales contract were to pay rent in exchange for their possession. The owner they contracted with was a predecessor in interest to the landlord, and the owner transferred title to the landlord, who did not show at closing and never completed the sales contract. Tenants claimed they could not be evicted during this time, that they were not holdover tenants, and that they should not have to pay statutory damages for holding over. The court found they were allowed an evidentiary hearing before they were evicted.).

Khatib v. Bolton, 614 S.E.2d 811 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (buyer in possession before closing was in possession as a tenant, not a purchaser).

Spraybary v. Mallinson, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 2416 (filed Sep. 15, 2005) (panel decision) (Purchasers took possession pursuant to a sales contract. The property did not sell at the closing date and because time was of the essence, the sales contract was extinguished. At that point the purchasers became monthly tenants and were subject to an unlawful detainer action).

Barnes v. Jackson, 2005 Del. Ch. LEXIS 127 (Aug. 29, 2005) (option to purchase does not survive the termination/expiration of a lease).

§ 39.04(f) Lender in Possession N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 48-6-1 and 48-3-6

Add:

Lucas v. Fairbanks Capital Corp., 618 S.E.2d 488, 500-502 (W. Va. 2005) (Starcher, J., dissenting) (brief history of mortgages and lenders in possession).

Sensenich v. Molleur (In re Chase), 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 196, *6 (Bankr. Vt. Jan. 27, 2005) (discussing Vermont's strict foreclosure process).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.05

Supp. to § 39.05 Traditional Types of Leasehold Estates.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, * 9-11 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (Michigan recognizes three types of tenancies: tenancy at will, estate for years, and tenancy at sufferance; discusses the differences between the three).

Add:

Megan J. Ballard, Legal Protections for Home Dwellers: Caulking the Cracks to Preserve Occupancy, 56 Syracuse L. Rev. 277 (2006) (discussing federally subsidized housing and preserving occupancy in it).

Blatch v. Hernandez, 360 F. Supp. 2d 595 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (describing procedures to terminate tenant's occupancy).

§ 39.05(a) Tenancy (or Term) for Years. [Go To Main]

Add:

Air Pegasus of D.C., Inc. v. United States, 60 Fed. Cl. 448 (Ct. Cl. 2004) (even though the lessee entered into a real property lease that allowed it to operate a heliport in Washington, D.C., no property right to public navigable airspace arose, and the government could prevent the tenant from operating its business).

After the sentence "Thus, a lease may begin upon the occurrence of a specified event or action, such as the date the tenant commences employment in the community or the date a prior tenant vacates the property." add new footnote 64.1:

Cape Oil Delivery, Inc. v. Hayes, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 671, * 20-21 (Dec. 14, 2005) ("The term of the lease need not be keyed to a fixed calendar date. 'It is generally held to be essential to the validity of a lease for years that it prescribe with reasonable certainty the date of commencement and the duration of the term of the lease, but this rule does not prevent the creation of tenancies in which the term is not absolutely fixed and where the time of commencement is stated to depend upon the happening of an event. After the happening of the event any uncertainty is removed and the lease in this respect is valid.") (quoting Wunsch v. Donnelly, 19 N.E.2d 70, 71 (Mass. 1939)) .

Correct:

Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-7-103 (2005) says that the terms will be limited to ten years unless natural gas or oil is being produced. If production ends for any six month period after the original ten years, then the lease will be terminated.

R.I. Gen. Laws § 20-10-3 (2006) says that the original lease term for leases of coastal waters may be for a period of 15 years, followed by ten year renewals.

§ 39.05(b) Periodic Tenancy. [Go To Main]

Add:

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *7 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (a person without a lease becomes a periodic tenant under Wisconsin law).

Vander Wielen v. Van Asten, 706 N.W.2d 123 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (discussing Wisconsin's tenancy statutes).

Gulf Coast Realty Co. v. Prof'l Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123 (released Aug. 12, 2005) (Alabama law presumes that if no duration is set, that a periodic tenancy arises from Dec. to Dec., unless it is expressly provided that it is a tenancy at will).

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1, 303 n. 9 (6th Cir. 2005) (A tenant that takes possession under an invalid lease is only a tenant at will. At the point that he pays rent and the rent is accepted, the tenancy becomes a periodic tenancy. Tenant's rights in periodic tenancy are possessory, and landlord can be liable for trespass if they enter during the tenant's term.) (citing State v. Brisbin, 1989 Ohio App. LEXIS 571 (Feb. 16, 1989)) .

Gulf coast Realty Co. v. Prof'l Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123, *39 n. 16 (released Aug. 12, 2005) (presumption periodic tenancy may be rebutted by the surrounding circumstances showing a different intent) (citing Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant § 1.5 cmt. d.).

Macray v. Clubs, Inc., 32 Kan. App. 2d 711 (Kan. App. 2004) (a payment of rent by tenant would automatically create a year-to-year tenancy); Ruiz v. New Garden Twp., 376 F.3d 203 (3d Cir. 2004) (where tenants had month to month leases, they could not have expected more than 30 days additional occupancy upon notice that their landlord decided to terminate their lease, and they received sufficient notice of a decision that the property was not zoned for residential use).

§ 39.05(b)(1) Circumstances

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Add:

Gulf Coast Realty Co. v. Prof'l. Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123, *37-38 (released Aug. 12, 2005) ("A landlord-tenant relationship may be created to endure until one of the parties has given the required notice to terminate the tenancy at the end of a period.") (quoting Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 (1977)) (month's notice is sufficient for terminating a periodic tenancy).

After the sentence "Each party is afforded a period of time after the required notice of termination, during which the lease continues until the date of termination announced in the notice arrives." add new footnote 72.1:

Mabe v. Montague, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1218, *5 (filed July 5, 2005) (a holdover tenant recognized by the landlord from an original tenancy of a year or more becomes a periodic tenant without any further action and is subject to the terms as they "may be applied to existing conditions." Periodic tenancy may be terminated at the year's end by one thirty days notice.)

Kilcoyne Props., LLC v. Fischbach, 2004 Ohio 7272 (Ohio App. 2004) (an improperly executed commercial lease, signed by both parties, was invalid; accordingly, a month-to-month tenancy was created); Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 2005 Wisc. App. LEXIS 405 (Wis. App. 2005) (the parties' agreement did not amount to a lease, and without a lease the tenant became a periodic tenant).

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Ohio law requires notice before terminating a periodic tenancy, and the landlord cannot use self help.)

E.C. Dev., LTD. v. Gen. Conf. Corp. of the Seventh Day Adventist, 2005 Guam 9, 2005 Guam LEXIS 10 (filed July 20, 2005) (applying law based on California's statute).

See also Wasatch Property Management v. Degrate, 112 P.3d 647 (Cal. 2005) (discussing the interaction between § 1946 and § 1954.535, which provide for 90 days notice to tenants affected by the termination of a landlord's contract with the government that limits rent) for determining the length of notice that must be given under California law).

Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-40-107 (2005) provides for decreasing lengths of notice, depending on the length of the tenancy. It ranges from three months to a day.

Horizon Homes v. Nunn, 684 N.W.2d 221 (Iowa 2004) (owner of a federally subsidized housing project could not terminate a tenant's month-to-month lease, as the landlord had to show good cause and specify those grounds constituting good cause in its notice of termination); Owens v. Shoreline Real Estate Co., 2004 Wi. App 109 (Wis. App. 2004) (in a month to month tenancy, the tenant was required to give 60 days notice to vacate, as indicated by the contract, instead of the 28 day statutory period); Hyder v. Montgomery County, 160 Md. App. 482 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2004)) cert. denied, 386 Md. 181 (Md. 2005) (tenants' obligation for rent under a month to month contract terminated on April 30 where they gave written notice to the landlord on April 1).

§ 39.05(b)(3) The Residual Tenancy

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *7 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (a person without a lease becomes a periodic tenant under Wisconsin law)

T.C. Williams, Annotation, Character and Duration of Tenancy Created by Entry under Invalid or Unenforceable Lease, 6 A.L.R.2d 685 (2005) .

Add:

Mabe v. Montague, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1218, *5 (filed Jul. 5, 2005) (a holdover tenant recognized by the landlord from an original tenancy of a year or more becomes a periodic tenant without any further action and is subject to the terms as they "may be applied to existing conditions." Periodic tenancy may be terminated at the year's end by thirty days notice.)

Add:

Roth v. Dillavou, 835 N.E.2d 425, 429-430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (discussing a tenant in possession after the expiration of his lease and the options that present themselves to the landlord when a tenant is in possession after the term of its lease. Also mentions that the discretion of how to treat the tenant resides solely with the landlord) (citing A.O. Smith corp. v. Kaufman Grain Co., 596 N.E.2d 1156 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992) & Bransky v. Schmidt Motor Sales, Inc., 584 N.E.2d 892 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991)) .

Zirp-Burnham LLC v. E. Terrell Assocs., 826 N.E.2d 430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (when a month to month tenancy is created, it is governed by the terms of the original lease) (citing A.O. Smith corp. v. Kaufman Grain co., 596 N.E.2d 1156 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992)) .

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *8 (Wisc. Ct. App. 2005) (notice required for termination).

Burgos v. Cross Sound Cable Co., 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2537, *29 (Sep. 20, 2005) ("[A] person who takes possession of premises under an invalid lease creates a tenancy at will.") (citing Weishaar v. Strimbu, 601 N.E.2d 587, 592 (Ohio Ct. App. 1991)) .

Add:

Gulf Coast Realty Co. v. Prof'l. Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123, *34-39 (released Aug. 12, 2005) (quoting the restatement and analyzing the different notice requirements, while finally adopting a month's notice as appropriate).

Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.5 stat. note 2(a)-(c) (1977).

Add:

Barran v. Kinas, 2005 Ohio 2002, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1906 , P 15 (Apr. 28, 2005) (Landlord was allowed to keep security deposit to cover rent for month that tenant vacated when the tenant did not give proper notice for termination)

Wis. Stat. § 704.19 (2005) (If a tenant moves out without giving notice, then the lease is terminated as if notice was given to the landlord on the date that the landlord learns of the vacation of the premises).

Correct:

Market Dundee Corp. v. Jaramillo, 582 A.2d 850 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996) overruled in 809-811; Washington Street Assoc. v. Grego, 600 A.2d 1222, 1228 n. 3 (1992)

§ 39.05(c) Tenancy at Sufferance. [Go To Main]

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, *10 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (recognizing the tenancy at sufferance as a distinct type of tenancy).

Add:

United States v. Hunyady, 409 F.3d 297, 301 (6th Cir. 2005) (a tenant at sufferance is created after a wrongful holding over after an initial lawful period of possession) (citing Ryal's, Inc. v. Stavropoulos, 263 N.W. 770, 770 (Mich. 1935) ; School Dist. v. Batsche, 64 N.W. 196, 197 (Mich. 1895))

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, *10-11 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (the right to original possession had to be by agreement, no landlord/tenant relationship exists in a tenancy at sufferance).

In re Lawson, 333 B.R. 503, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2187 (Bankr. D.C. Oct. 28, 2005) (there must be consideration and a contractual relationship to create tenant at sufferance; otherwise they are merely a licensee or a permissive user) (citing to the code and several cases).

Qureshi v. Fiske Capital Mgmt., 59 Mass. App. Ct. 463 (Mass. App. 2003) (after negotiations for a new lease had ended unresolved, tenant became a tenant at sufferance).

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, *11-12 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (landlord may treat tenant as either trespasser or a tenant under the terms of the original lease) (quoting John G. Cameron, Jr., Michigan Real Property Law; Principles and Commentary, pp. 893 (2d ed. 1993)).

Roth v. Dillavou, 835 N.E.2d 425, 430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (landlord may either treat tenant as trespasser or a holdover tenant).

After the sentence "Today, many jurisdictions require the landlord to initiate court proceedings to remove the tenant form the property, unless the tenant turns over possession voluntarily." add new footnote 95.1:

McAdam v. Lorden, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21900, *9 (D. N.H. Sep. 26, 2005) (some cases have held that the "debtor in possession of leased property has an equitable interest that may be included in the bankruptcy estate and protected by the automatic stay.")(citing Schewe v. Fairview Estates (In re Schewe), 94 B.R. 938, 946 (Bankr. W.D. Mich. 1989) ; In re Onio's Italian Rest. Corp., 42 B.R. 319, 321 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1984)) .

But see also In re Turner, 326 B.R. 563, 573 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 2005) as cited in McAdam v. Lorden, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21900, *11-12 (D. N.H. Sep. 26, 2005) ("[A] mere possessory interest (for instance, a 'squatter' or tenant at sufferance) in an expired lease at the time of filing is not enough to sustain the protections of the automatic stay.").

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Ohio law requires notice before terminating a periodic tenancy, and the landlord cannot use self help.)

Reeves v. Rodgers, 2006 Ore. App. LEXIS 197, *7 (filed Feb. 15, 2006) (no notice required before terminating a tenancy at sufferance).

Correct:

D.C. Code Ann. § 45-1404 needs to be changed to § 42-3204 (2006).

Add:

United States v. Hunyady, 409 f.3d 297, 301 (6th Cir. 2005) (At common law, the tenant at sufferance had the "passive acquiescence by the property owner." If the landlord re-enters and disallows the occupancy, then the tenant becomes a trespasser.) (citing Allen v. Carpenter, 15 Mich. 25 (1866)) .

Add:

Witcher v. Bennett, 120 S.W.3d 922 (Tex. App. 2003) appeal dismissed Witcher v. Bennett, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 159 (Jan. 10, 2006) (tenants did not have continuous possession necessary for an adverse possession claim, and instead were considered tenants at sufferance).

After the sentence "The occupancy at sufferance can be converted into a new lease relationship at the election of the landlord." add new footnote 99.1:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, *11-12 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (landlord may treat tenant as either trespasser or a tenant under the terms of the original lease) (quoting John G. Cameron, Jr., Michigan Real Property Law; Principles and Commentary, pp. 893 (2d ed. 1993)).

Roth v. Dillavou, 835 N.E.2d 425, 430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (landlord may either treat tenant as trespasser or a holdover tenant).

After the sentence "The new lease can be formally crated as one of the other three types of tenancies--for a definite term, at will or as a periodic tenancy." add new footnote 99.2:;

Batesville Casket Co. v. Merlin Enters. Realty Trust et al., 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 564 (Oct. 28, 2005) (tenancy at sufferance can become tenancy at will by agreement, express or implied, by the parties)(quoting Staples v. Collins, 73 N.E.2d 729, 729 (Mass. 1947)) .

Vander Wielen v. Van Asten, 706 N.W.2d 123, 132 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (when landlord accepted rent from an individual, that individual was the landlord's tenant, either at will or periodic).

After the sentence "It is more common for an implied tenancy from period to period to result from the holdover relationship." add new footnote 99.3:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Add:

But see Roth v. Dillavou, 835 N.E.2d 425, 430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (no notice is needed to terminate possession).

Olmstead v. Nodland, 828 N.E.2d 338, 340 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (can terminate tenancy at sufferance by demanding possession).

Some states go further, as shown in AIMCO Props., LLC v. Dziewisz, 883 A.2d 310 (N.H. 2005) (tenancy at sufferance can only be terminated for good cause).

Reeves v. Rodgers, 2006 Ore. App. LEXIS 197, *7 (filed Feb. 15, 2006) (no notice required before terminating a tenancy at sufferance).

NY CLS Real P. § 228 (2005) (notice is required to terminate tenancy at sufferance)

Add:

But see Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, 13-14 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (following the common law as explained by Blackstone and not allowing a property owner burdened by a tenancy at sufferance to collect rent because it is the landowner's own fault for allowing a tenancy at sufferance. Landowner may only recover rent if a demand is made) (citing 2 Blackstone Comm.150-1 and Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351 (1868)) .

§ 39.05(d) Tenancy at Will. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 48-3-5.

After the sentence "It lasts only as long as neither party does anything to terminate the tenant's possessory interest or until the tenancy at will is transformed into a periodic tenancy." add new footnote 103.1:

Olmstead v. Nodland, 828 N.E.2d 338, 340 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (demand for possession can terminate a tenancy at will)

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, 10 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (either party may terminate a tenancy at will at their discretion).

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, 10 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (tenancy at will is based on an agreement, express or implied, that there will be a landlord/tenant relationship).

64 Wall St., LLC v. City of Norwalk, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2278, *2 (Aug. 26, 2005) (memorandum of decision) (lease agreement without determinate time limit is a tenancy at will) (quoting 1 S. Williston, Contracts (4th Ed. 1990) § 4.19, p. 443-44)

Comcast of California I, Inc. v. City of Walnut Creek, 371 F. Supp. 2d 1147, 1155 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (if parties operate a franchise without a formal agreement, then they are holdover tenants "subject to termination by either side at will").

Keeton Corr., Inc. v. RJ & RK, Inc., 858 So. 2d 349, 350 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2003) (a double rent provision applied to a tenancy at will and was not limited to a written lease with a fixed expiration date); Gu v. Liu, 262 Ga. App. 443 (Ga.

App. 2003) (an oral agreement to rent property that contained no specified time for termination of the tenancy, was treated as a tenancy at will).

After the sentence "In that case, both parties should know that their relationship is vulnerable to being terminated at any time, for the tenancy at will continues only as long as both parties mutually consent to its existence." add new footnote 107.1:

Coleman v. Mula, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 440, 5 (Aug. 18, 2005) (tenancy at will only exists as long as both parties mutually desire it).

Add:

Sugarhill Ltd. v. Brezo, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1811 , P 42, 2005 Ohio 1889 (Apr. 22, 2005) (generally, tenant at will cannot sublet the premises) (citing Motor Service Co. v. Public Utilities Com., 66 Ohio Op. 2d 1, 305 N.E.2d 788, 792 (Ohio 1974)) .

Add:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291 (6th Cir. 2005) (invalid lease makes a tenancy at will).

Nacoochee Corp. v. Suwanee Inv. Partners, LLC, 620 S.E.2d 641, 644 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (oral lease creates a tenancy at will).

Lewis v. Marcum, 2003 Ohio 3861 (Ohio App. 2003) (a tenancy at will was created when possession of the property was taken under an invalid lease).

After the sentence "In the situation involving an invalid term for years lease because of failure to meet the formal requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the tenant generally begins making regular rental payments to the landlord." add new footnote 112.1:

But see Batesville Casket Co. v. Merlin Enter. Realty Trust, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 564, *6-7 (Oct. 28, 2005) (accepting rent after the lease has expired creates "prima facie proof" of a tenancy at will) (quoting Staples v. Collins, 73 N.E.2d 729, 729 (Mass. 1947)) .

Add:

Mulholland v. Poole, 866 A.2d 122 (Me. 2005) (Maine statute requires thirty day notice to terminate a tenancy at will, except for in certain circumstances).

14 M.R.S. § 6002 (2005).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.06

Supp. to § 39.06 Creation and Termination of Leasehold Estates.

[Go To Main]

§ 39.06(a) Creation. Kan. Stat Ann. § 58

§ 39.06(a)(1) Invalid Leases

Add:

Nesco Acceptance Corp. v. Jay (In re Jay), 432 F.3d 323, 326 (5th Cir. 2005) ("A lease does not constitute a contract of sale.")

Add:

But see Lowes Home Ctrs. v. LL&127, LLC, 147 Fed. Appx. 516, 522, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 17021 (6th Cir. filed Aug. 11, 2005) (In Michigan, "parties can enter into an enforceable contract that requires them to execute another contract at a later date." However, the original contract must have the essential and material terms of the contemplated future agreement included in it; otherwise it will fail for indefiniteness.).

Ski River Dev., Inc. v. Mccalla, 167 S.W.3d 121, 133-134 (Tex. App. 2005) (if the essential and material terms are absent from an agreement, then the agreement is not enforceable; "a contract providing for an agreement to be negotiated in the future is void" The court may supply terms for the agreement.).

Sproviero v. J.M. Scott Assocs., Inc., 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1452 (June 1, 2005) ("An agreement to agree to a material term at a later time is no agreement at all.") (quoting Drayton v. Petteway, 2003 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1350, *4 (May 5, 2003)) (memorandum decision).

GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 108 P.3d 507, 510 (Mont. 2005) ("An agreement that requires the parties to agree to material terms in the future is not an enforceable agreement whereby specific performance will be granted." Court found the agreement unenforceable because is didn't have "complete and material terms for determining duration and payments for another lease term in the negotiation clause.")

Hostcentric Techs, Inc. v. Republic Thunderbolt, LLC, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11130 *17-19 (S.D.N.Y. June 9, 2005) (discussing preliminary agreements and the circumstances under which they are valid or invalid).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *5 (Wisc. Ct. App. 2005) (under Wisconsin law, the lease must have a "fixed commencement date" to be valid) (citing Wis. Stat. § 704.01 (2005)).

Ater the sentence "The essential terms of the intended lease agreement are lacking so the agreement to agree is invalid for indefiniteness." add new footnote 117.1:

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253 (Wisc. Ct. App. 2005) .

Add:

First Am. Kickapoo Operations, L.L.C. v. Multimedia Games, Inc., 412 F.3d 1166, 1177 (10th Cir. 2005) ("One who by appropriate means causes the nonperformance of an illegal agreement or an agreement having a purpose or effect in violation of an established public policy is not liable for pecuniary harm resulting from the nonperformance.") (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 774 (1979)).

New York City Housing Authority v. Pretto, 795 N.Y.S.2d 871, 873-874 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) (illegal lease is void; tenant cannot use laches to defend against an action brought by the landlord to evict the tenant for illegal actions on the property)

Correct:

Louis Friedman Realty Co. v. De Stefan, 217 N.Y.S. 142 (N.Y. App. Term 1926) , rev' d by Louis Friedman Realty Co v. De Stefan, 222 N.Y.S. 371 (Sup. Ct. NY App. Div. 1927)

Add:

Walburn v. City of Naples, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37805 (M.D. Fla. Sep. 22, 2005) (individual entered into an illegal contract with the city and the contract was void ab initio).

Pierce County v. Wash. Shellfish, Inc., 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 391 (filed Mar. 8, 2005) (illegal portion of the contract was severable, so the entire contract should not be declared illegal).

Matter of Waldman v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, 10 Misc.3d 1075A, (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Dec. 30 2005) (a change in law that would otherwise render a lease void ab initio does not give a right to "unilaterally abrogate" the lease, but instead the lease "remains in effect for the duration of the term.")

N.Y. City Housing Authority v. Taylor, 2005 N.Y. Slip. Op. 50209U (N.Y. App. Term. Feb. 18, 2005) .

§ 39.06(a)(2) Enforceable Contracts to Execute a Lease

After the sentence "Breach may give a party the right to terminate the lease agreement and seek damages for the losses connected with the breach." add new footnote 122.1:

Lichtefeld v. Mactec Engineering & Consulting, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7933, 6 (W.D. Ky. Feb. 4, 2005) ("cases involving a lessee's breach of a covenant contained in a lease, the lessor is entitled to recover his actual damages, but may not receive a windfall").

After the sentence "The remedy for breach is the recovery of damages." add new footnote 122.2:

Cape Oil Delivery, Inc. v. Hayes, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 671, 25 (Dec. 14 2005) (agreement for present demise that commenced at a future time was not a contract to make a lease, but was a lease itself).

GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 108 P.3d 507, 510 (Mont. 2005) ("An agreement that requires the parties to agree to material terms in the future is not an enforceable agreement whereby specific performance will be granted." Court found the agreement unenforceable because is didn't have "complete and material terms for determining duration and payments for another lease term in the negotiation clause." The court declined to calculate damages.).

After the first full sentence on the page, add new footnote 122.1: n122.1

§ 39.06(a)(3) Interesse Termini

After the sentence "As long as the present intent of the parties is to give an immediate interest in the property to the tenant, the fact that the present interest involves a possession date to commence in the future does not change the fact that a present interest is given." add new footnote 124.1:

Cape Oil Delivery, Inc. v. Hayes, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 671, *25-27 (Dec. 14, 2005) ("Based on the language of the Agreement and the circumstances surrounding the drafting of the Agreement, the parties manifested an intent for a present demise to commence in the future, and this Court has no doubt that the instrument is a lease rather than an agreement to form a lease at some future time." Even though there was no specific date, the time that the lease was to commence was seven days after a specified event, which was enough to make it valid.).

§ 39.06(a)(4) Statute of Frauds Compliance Issues.

Add:

Prof'l. Bull Riders, Inc. v. Autozone, Inc., 144 Fed. Appx. 735, 737, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 17262 *8 (filed Aug. 15, 2005) (Even if the contract provides for a term longer than one year, if there is an option in the contract that would allow it to be performed in less than one year it is not within the statute of frauds).

30 Carmine LLC v. Depierro, 791 N.Y.S.2d 383, 390-391 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) (lease that otherwise ran afoul of the statue of frauds was enforced because (1) an agency relationship authorizing signature could be found after piecing together different written documents (2) the lease was ratified, (3) the attornment was accepted).

Lipton v. Kiamie Princess Marion Realty Corp., 2 A.D.3d 318 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003) (since lease agreement was signed on behalf of defendant landlord by person who did not have binding authority set forth in writing, it was unenforceable according to the statute of frauds).

Add:

Szymanowski v. Brace, 987 A.2d 717 (Pa. Super. 2009) (statute of frauds precludes enforceability of any unwritten agreement to assign a lease).

Add:

Gulf Coast Marine Assocs. v. C-Port Galveston, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27950, *5 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 8, 2005) (if the option for renewal is at the lessee's option, then the original and renewed period are considered for statute of frauds purposes; if the option requires the lessor's permission, then only the original term is considered to determine whether the statute of frauds requires it in writing)

Mabe v. Montague, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1218, *6-7 (filed July 5, 2005) (tenancy renewable annually did not violate the statute of frauds under a statute of frauds not requiring written leases for leases less than three years).

§ 39.06(a)(5) Invalid Tenancy for Years Recognized as Another Form of Tenancy

Add:

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *7 (Wisc. Ct. App. 2005) ("Because there was no lease, [the tenant] became a periodic tenant.")

Add:

Nacoochee Corp. v. Suwanee Inv. Partners, LLC, 620 S.E.2d 641, 644 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (discussing a case in which an oral lease created a tenancy at will) (discussing Norris v. Downtown LaGrange Dev. Auth., 259 S.E.2d 729 (Ga. Ct. App. 1979)) .

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

After the sentence "As soon as the landlord accepts rent from the tenant, however, courts have a basis for considering the lease as a periodic tenancy tied to the length of the period covered by the rent payment." add new footnote 132.1:

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (Oral lease was invalid, but created a tenancy at will that could be converted into a periodic tenancy by paying and accepting rent.).

Connolly v. Powell, 118 P.3d 1232, 1236 (Idaho Ct. App. 2005) (landlord could not evict a tenant because there was no written agreement).

§ 39.06(a)(6) Part Performance and Estoppel Exceptions to Compliance with the Statute of Frauds

Add:

In re Camelot Casino Cruises, Inc., 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1663, * 8, 14 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. July 6, 2005) ("[T]o remove the agreement from the statute based on part performance, the party must establish acts that 'relate clearly and unequivocally to the agreement, exclusive of any other relation between the parties touching the agreement.' " There was not sufficient meeting of the minds on several key terms.) (quoting Player v. Chandler, 382 S.E. 2d 891, 894 (S.C. 1989)) . See also In re Camelot Casino Cruses, Inc., 330 B.R. 263, 267-268, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2152, *9 (M.D. Fla. 2005) .

Santaro v. Jack of Hearts Carpet Co., 800 N.Y.S.2d 356, *9-10 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (improvements to the property were not enough to establish part performance because the improvements were not "unequivocally referable" to documents purported to be the lease. Also, the part performance must be completed by the party insisting on performance.)

FMS Mgmt. Sys. v. Rodriguez, 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 65, *32-33 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 17, 2006) (taking possession according to a lease removes that lease from the statute of frauds).

Rentz v. Grant, 934 So. 2d 368, 2006 Ala. LEXIS 10, *12-14 (released Jan. 13, 2006) (In order to save a contract using part performance, part of all of the purchase price must be paid and possession must have been taken. Payment may consist of anything of monetary value or improvements constructed pursuant to a contract of sale. Possession will not be found if there is any other explanation for the possession than an alleged contract) (this case was dealing with a sale, but its rules were interesting).

Brown v. Brown, 2005 Ohio 1838, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1757 (Apr. 14, 2005) (part performance allowed to validate a life estate in property).

Mukai Living Trust v. Lopez, 111 P.3d 1150, 1152 (Or. Ct. App. 2005) (denying part performance excusal of non-compliance with the statute of frauds).

Nacoochee Corp. v. Suwanee Inv. Partners, LLC, 620 S.E.2d 641, 644 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (talking about case in which possession and rental payments were not enough to validate the lease under the statute of frauds when the duration of the lease term was absent from the agreement) (discussing Norris v. Downtown LaGrange Dev. Auth., 259 S.E.2d 729 (Ga. Ct. App. 1979)) .

Rosenberg v. Ridge St. Partners, LLC, 801 N.Y.S.2d 781 (N.Y. App. Term 2005) (Money payments are not enough to establish part performance; there must be another action such as improving the property or taking possession.).

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 296 n.1 (6th Cir. 2005) ("partial performance will not take a parol agreement out of the Statute of Frauds without a showing of detrimental reliance by the party arguing partial perfomance, or an unconscionable advantage obtained by the party raising the statute") (quoting Manifold v. Schuster, 586 N.E.2d 1142, 1144-1145 (Ohio Ct. App. 1990)) .

Add:

Portsmouth Redevelopment & Hous. Auth. v. Ison, 66 Va. Cir. 336, 358, 2005 Va. Cir. LEXIS 39, *50 (Jan. 18, 2005) (reasonable reliance and continued improvements because of an oral amendment to a written agreement will squash a statute of frauds claim).

Correct:

Wing v. Munns was not reversed by the second Wing v. Munns case, it was affirmed by it.

Add:

Kanistros v. Holeman, (Feb. 18, 2005), 2005 Ohio 660 (using estoppel to award a landlord the security deposit pursuant to an oral lease).

Merci Corp. v. World Int'l. Corp., 2005 N. Mar. I. LEXIS 8, 2005 MP 10 , P 31 (June 27, 2005) (in order for promise to qualify for promissory estoppel, the promise must be "clear and definite")

Smith v. Smith, 2005 Tenn. App. LEXIS 733, *14-28 (filed Nov. 22, 2005) (discussing equitable estoppel as it relates to the statute of frauds in land sale agreements).

Massaro Ltd. P'ship (Park West Two) v. Baker & Taylor Inc., 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 27993, *6 (3d Cir. Dec. 15, 2005) (even if a party "reasonably and foreseeably relies" relies on a promise, whether the promise is enforceable depends on "the reasonableness of the promisee's reliance, on its definite and substantial character in relation to the remedy sought, on the formality with which the promise is made, on the extent to which the evidentiary, cautionary, deterrent and channeling functions of form are met by the commercial setting or otherwise, and on the extent to which such other policies as the enforcement of bargains and the prevention of unjust enrichment are relevant.") (quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 90 cmt. b (1981)).

Meshbesher & Spence, Ltd. v. Sprint Spectrum, L.P., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13565 , PP 2-8 (D. Minn. July 6, 2005).

Odens Family Props., LLC v. Twin Cities Stores, Inc., 393 F. Supp. 2d 824, 829 (D. Minn. 2005) ("[P]romissory estoppel can not be used to alter the terms of a contract that has been reduced to writing.")

Nakada v. De la Floor, 2005 Cal. Unpub. LEXIS 5346, *17 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) ("Tenants' abandonment of further negotiations to obtain a suitable property was reasonable detrimental reliance.")

Cape Oil Delivery, Inc. v. Hayes, 2005 Mass. Super LEXIS 671, *37 (Dec. 14, 2005) ("material reliance" and the absence of a "binding contract" are required to apply estoppel).

Mukai Living Trust v. Lopez, 111 P.3d 1150, 1154 (Or. Ct. App. 2005) ("[D]octrine of part performance subsumes doctrine of equitable estoppel ...") (citing Luckey v. Deatsman, 343 P.2d 723, 725 (Or. 1959)) .

Zheng v. Bradley Operating L.P., 2006 Wisc. App. LEXIS 157, *6 (Feb. 16, 2006) ("If, as here, a contract covers all the material elements of a party's relationship, the remedy of estoppel is not available.")

Robert A. Brazener, Annotation, Coment Note.-- Promissory Estoppel as Basis for Avoidance of Statute of Frauds, 56 A.L.R.3d 1037 (2005) .

Add:

30 Carmine LLC v. Depierro, 791 N.Y.S.2d 383, 390 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) (court will enforce a lease that otherwise does not comply with the statute of frauds in order to prevent injustice or to prevent fraud from being committed on one of the contracting parties).

§ 39.06(a)(7) Fully Enforceable Leases

Add:

Nacoochee Corp. v. Suwanee Inv. Partners, LLC, 620 S.E.2d 641, 643 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (essential term of a lease is a description of the property).

Renouf v. Heller, 2005 Mich. App. LEXIS 1698, *4 (July 14, 2005) (price is an essential term of a lease).

In re Goldstein (In re Will of Diamondstein), 800 N.Y.S.2d 346, *3 (Surr. Ct. N.Y. 2005) (duration of a lease is an essential term).

Slue v. New York Univ. Med. Ctr., 409 F. Supp. 2d 349, *27 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) ("Nevertheless, certain essential factors must be present in the agreement to establish an oral lease under New York law, including the 'area to be leased, the duration of the lease, and the price to be paid.' ") (quoting Davis v. Dinkins, 613 N.Y.S.2d 933, 935 (1994)) .

NIPCMUC Props., LLC v. PDC-El Paso Meriden, LLC, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2094 *11 n. 12 (Aug. 11, 2005) (listing statutory elements of writing).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *7 (Wisc. Ct. App. 2005) (valid elements for a lease under Wisconsin law include description of the property, signatures of all parties, and rent obligation) (citing Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1372 (2005)).

Meshbesher & Spence, Ltd. v. Sprint Spectrum, L.P., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13565, *13 (D. Minn. 2005) (when the agreement is to commence is a material term) (dictum).

Add:

FMS Mgmt. Sys. v. Rodriguez (In re Ranch House Motor Inn Int'l. Inc.), 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 65, *26-27 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. Jan. 17, 2006) ("Parol evidence is admissible to determine the description of a piece of property 'so long as the instrument itself shows that the parties were contemplating a particular piece of property--rather than an unspecified piece of property or alternative descriptions or property to be obtained later.' ") (quoting Bajrangi v. Magnethel Enterprises, Inc., 589 So. 2d 416, 419 (Fla. 5th DCA 1991)) .

after the sentence "General rules of construction apply to leases."

Add new footnote 138.1:

Kuehl Farms v. Barth, 2006 Minn. App. Unpub. LEXIS 16, *3-4 (Filed Jan. 3, 2006) (applying contract construction to a lease).

after the sentence "The necessary description of the property may be ascertained by the physical acts of the tenant in asserting possessory rights in the leased property."

Add new footnote 139.1:

FMS Mgmt. Sys. v. Rodriguez (In re Ranch House Motor Inn Int'l. Inc.), 2006 Bankr. LEXIS 65, *26-27 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. Jan. 17, 2006) ("Parol evidence is admissible to determine the description of a piece of property 'so long as the instrument itself shows that the parties were contemplating a particular piece of property--rather than an unspecified piece of property or alternative descriptions or property to be obtained later.' ") (quoting Bajrangi v. Magnethel Enterprises, Inc., 589 So. 2d 416, 419 (Fla. 5th DCA 1991)) .

Adams v. Adams, 2006 Alas. LEXIS 30, (Feb. 24, 2006) *10-15 (allowing reformation of a property description contained in a lease as that description pertained to an option to purchase included in the lease).

Nacoochee Corp. v. Suwanee Inv. Partners, LLC, 620 S.E.2d 641, 643 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005) (To avoid running afoul of the statute of frauds, "a lease agreement must describe the property to be leased with sufficient clarity and definiteness to disclose the lessor's intentions and permit identification of the property.").

Add:

Nakada v. De la Flor, 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5346, *24-25 (Cal. Ct. App. Filed June 21, 2005) (actual agreed rental will take precedence over expert opinion as to fair rental value).

Bombora House, Inc. v. Dufour Pastry Kitchens, Inc., 805 N.Y.S.2d 218 (N.Y. App. Term 2005) (term providing for rent to be determined at "fair market value as reasonably determined by the Landlord" was sufficiently definite).

Add:

But see GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 108 P.3d 507, 510 (Mont. 2005) (if no "clear and definite mode for determining the amount of payment" is absent, the "essential terms in the lease agreement were not enforceable.") (citing Riis v. Day, 613 P.2d 696, 698 (Mont. 1980)).

Kiehm v. Adams, 126 P.3d 339, *10 n. 5 (Haw. 2005) (Hawaii law provides that if no duration is specified, then the tenancy is month to month) (quoting H.R.S. § 521-22 (1993)).

Add:

C.R.S. 4-2.5-201 (2005).

N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 46:8-19 to 46:8-26 (2005).

after the sentence "Thus, as previously mentioned, in the case of a ninvalid temr for years, for failure to meet the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the court may determine that the parties nonetheless have a periodic tenancy."

Add new footnote 144.1:

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *7 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (a person without a lease becomes a periodic tenant under Wisconsin law).

Radvansky v. City of Olmsted Falls, 395 F.3d 291, 297 n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (A tenant that takes possession under an invalid lease is only a tenant at will. At the point that he pays rent and the rent is accepted, the tenancy becomes a periodic tenancy).

after the sentence "The parties may also be subject to a continuing lease relationship in the holdover situation."

Add new footnote 144.2:

Roth v. Dillavou, 835 N.E.2d 425, 430 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) ("Even when a holdover tenancy is not created, the parties' conduct may create a month-to-month tenancy.").

Correct:

Mont. Code. Ann. § 70-26-204 (2005) (this states that it should be on the same terms and the same time, but it also states that if the rent is payable monthly that the holdover should not exceed one month, and in total, not more than one year).

Add:

N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42 (2006) (month to month tenancy not to exceed one year).

Add:

; Cal. Civ. Code § 1945 (2006).

25 Del. C. § 5108 (2005).

Wis. Stat. § 704.25 (2005).

Correct:

N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-10

§ 39.06(b) Termination. Ga. Code Ann. § 44

after the sentence "Termination also arises in statutes dealing with abandonment, surrender, mitigation of damages, retaliatory eviction, and the holdover tenant."

Add new footnote 150.1:

Cal. Civ. Code § 1951.2 (2006) (tenant abandoning the premises terminates the lease; this statute lists the landlord's remedies).

Sarah Clinton, Note: Evicting the Innocent: Can the Innocent Tenant Defense Survive a Rucker Preemption Challenge? 85 B.U.L. Rev. 293, 296- 297 (2005) (discussing eviction in public housing).

Terrence M. Gilbride, 2003-2004 Survey of New York Law: Real Property Law, 55 Syracuse L. Rev. 1293 (2005).

Add:

Scarborough v. Winn Residential L.L.P./Atlantic Terrace Apts, 890 A.2d 249, *27 (D.C. 2006) (Under case law, a landlord is not required to "weigh additional considerations opposing and favoring eviction before pursuing lease termination" in cases where there has been criminal activity).

Add:

West Side Ltd. P'ship. v. W.B.Y. Ventures, L.L.C., 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1470 (filed Aug. 2, 2005) (lease provision could eliminate the need for notice of termination of possession upon default).

Crabtree Ave. Inv. Group, LLC v. Steak & Ale of N.C., Inc., 611 S.E.2d 442 (N.C. App. 2005) (where a lease did not require any notice of termination, plaintiff could effectively terminate the lease without notice following defendant's failure to pay rent within 10 days of written demand for rent past due).

§ 39.06(b)(1) Termination of the various Forms of Tenancy.

after the sentence "Unless the tenancy has terminated earlier, the tenancy ends automatically once the specified date arrives."

Add new footnote 154.1:

Crawford Square Cmty. v. Turner (In re Turner), 326 B.R. 563, 575 (W.D. Pa. 2005) (comparing the difference between "expiration' of a lease with 'termination' of a lease").[155]

Add:

Olmstead v. Nodland, 828 N.E.2d 338, 340-341 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) ("At common law ... upon the death of the life tenant, the lessee became a tenant by sufferance or at will." Although a statute would allow for continuation of a current lease term to finish (or continue longer if provided by the parties to the lease) if the landlord holding a life estate died, the provision in the lease did not allow for a longer continuation of the lease) (citing Craig v. Launer, 104 N.E.2d 830 (Ill. App. Ct. 1952)) .

Balboa Bay Club, Inc. v. Howard, 2005 Cal. Unpub. LEXIS 3271 (filed Apr. 11, 2005) ("Although the death of a tenant automatically terminates a tenancy at will or at sufferance, it does not under ordinary circumstances terminate a tenancy for a fixed term.")

Add:

But see USA Independence Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. City of Lake City, 908 So. 2d 1151, 1155 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) ("[A] partial taking of a leasehold estate under the power of eminent domain does not constitute an eviction of the lessee and he remains bound to perform the obligations assumed by him under the terms and provisions of the lease.") (quoting Orange State Oil Co. v. Jacksonville Expressway Auth., 143 So. 2d 892, 894 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1962)) .

Singh v. BP Prods. N. Am. Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3778, *7-13 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 31, 2006) .

Zoeller v. United States, 65 Fed. Cl. 449, 460-462 (2005) (eminent domain under a contract in which the government is the lessor is governed by breach of contract principles, not a taking).

Redevelopment Agency of San Diego v. Attisha, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 126, 133 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) ("Where all the property subject to a lease is acquired for public use, the lease terminates.") (quoting Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1265.110 n. 2 (2006)).

after the sentence "The tenant may be entitled to share in the compensation received because of the taking."

Add new footnote 156.1:

In re Condemnation by the DOT, 871 A.2d 896, 900 n. 3 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2005) (stating that where a complete taking has occurred, lessee can recover the difference between the "fair rental value of the leased premises and the rent actually reserved in the lease ... projected over the remaining term of the lease and discounted to present worth" but cannot recover future income.)

Santa Fe Trail Neighborhood Redevelopment Corp. v. W.F. Coen & Co., 154 S.W.3d 432, 444-448 (W.D. Mo. 2005) .

Redevelopment Agency of San Diego v. Attisha, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 126, 133-134 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) .

Houlihan Rests., Inc. v. APAC-Florida, Inc., 911 So. 2d 816, 819 (2005) (if the terms of the lease provide, tenant's share in interest can include the value of a sublease by the tenant).

Sunshine Props. L.L.C. v. State DOT, 900 So. 2d 714 (2005) .

Blood v. Hartland Township, 2005 Ohio 3860, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 3553 , P 23 (July 29, 2005) ("It is well-settled law that a lessee has standing to pursue a takings claim where the leasehold interest was appropriated, and the lessee may assert claims for damages and receive compensation for resulting losses.").

Eller Media Co. v. Miss. Transp. Comm'n., 900 So. 2d 1156 (Miss. 2005) .

Add:

In re Haskell L.P., 321 B.R. 1, 7 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005) ("In the case of a Debtor/lessor's rejection of a lease, however, the power is limited and. (sic) tenants are given two options: either treat the lease as terminated and make a claim for damages, or continue in possession and pay rent.")

Jetz Laundry Sys. v. Wingates, LLC, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11301, *6 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio June 10, 2005) ("With respect to an executory lease of real property, the Bankruptcy Code limits the power of rejection 'so as to preclude eviction of the lessee.' ") (quoting Precision Industries, Inc. v. Qualitech Steel SBQ, LLC, 327 F.3d 537, 546 (7th Cir. 2003)) .

In re Smith, 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 2389, *7 (C.D. Ill. Dec. 4, 2005) ("[T]he automatic stay does not apply to 'any act by a lessor to the debtor under a lease of nonresidential real property that has terminated by the expiration of the stated term of the lease before the commencement of or during a case under this title to obtain possession of such property.' ") (quoting Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-21(d)(2)).

But see 8648 KBLA, LLC v. Cross, 2005 Cal. Unpub. LEXIS 9037, *33 (filed Oct. 3, 2005) ("some courts have held that rejection of an unexpired lease by the bankruptcy trustee does not terminate the lease") (citing McLaughlin v. Walnut Properties, Inc., 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 369, 374-376 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) .

Add:

McAdam v. Lorden, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21900, *10 (D.N.H. Sep. 26, 2005) ("State law provides that the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale may recover possession from an occupant through a possessory action after providing notice in writing to quit the premises.") (citing RSA § 540:12 (1997)).

12 U.S.C. § 3713 (2006) (gives tenants of qualified multifamily dwellings may retain possession for the remainder of their lease or one year, whichever is less).

Medford II, LLC v. Scope Int'l. Inc., 808 N.Y.S.2d 918, *3 (D.N.Y. Suffolk 2005) ("It is well established that a tenant is a necessary party to a foreclosure action and the failure to name a tenant in possession pursuant to a lease which is subordinate to the mortgage in the foreclosure action leaves the tenant's rights unaffected by the judgment and sale.")

Rockaway Improvement, LLC v. Danco Transmission Corp., 801 N.Y.S.2d 138, 141 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) .

Danzy v. Nia Abstract Corp., 7 Misc.3d 1025A (N.Y. Sup. Ct. May 12, 2005) .

Potter v. Mullen, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4304, *3-4 (filed Jun. 3, 2005) (forcible detainer action allowed against defendant that refuses to relinquish possession after demand and proper notice and is, inter alia, "a tenant at will or by sufferance, including an occupant at the time of foreclosure of a lien superior to the tenant's lease").

Page 603 after the sentence "Termination by either party requires giving proper notice to the other party."

Add new footnote 158.1:

Gulf Coast Realt Co. v. Prof'l Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123, *37 (Aug. 12, 2005) ("A landlord-tenant relationship may be created to endure until one of the parties has given the required notice to terminate the tenancy at the end of a period.") (quoting Restatement (Second) of Property: Landlord and Tenant § 1.5 (1977)).

Mabe v. Montague, 2005 N.C. App. LEXIS 1218, *7 (filed Jul. 5, 2005) ("one month is sufficient notice to terminate the agreement for this year to year periodic tenancy.")

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.17 (2006) (as cited in Barran v. Kinas, 2005 Ohio 2002, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 1906 , P 14 (Apr. 28, 2005)).

Rev. Code Wash. § 59.04.020 (2005) (as cited in Spraybary v. Mallinson, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 2416, *7 (Sep. 15, 2005)) .

Vander Wielen v. Van Asten, 706 N.W.2d 123, (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (If any periodic tenant vacates the premises without notice to the landlord and fails to pay rent when due for any period, such tenancy is terminated as of the first date on which it would have terminated had the landlord been given proper notice on the day the landlord learns of the removal.) (quoting Wis. Stat. § 704.19 (6) (2005)).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W. 2d 253 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005)

Wis. Stat. § 704.19 (2005).

But see Comcast of Cal. I, Inc. v. City of Walnut Creek, 371 F. Supp. 2d 1147, 1155 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (either side may terminate a holdover tenancy at will).

200 W. 58th St., LLC v. Little Egypt Corp., 7 Misc.3d 1017A, 1017A (N.Y. Civ. Ct. Feb. 10, 2005) ("The right to terminate a tenancy is conditioned on a fully valid predicate notice.")

Add:

Cecil v. Viacom Outdoor Group, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19361, *9 (E.D. Mich. Sep. 8, 2005) (tenancy at will "may be terminated at the discretion of either party.").

Code of Ala. § 35-9-3 (2005) (as quoted in Gulf Coast Realty Co. v. Prof'l. Real Estate Partners, Inc., 2005 Ala. LEXIS 123, *36-37 (Aug. 12, 2005)) (termination of tenancy at will is by notice).

AGI v. Leonhardt, 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 7975, *19 (filed Sep. 1, 2005) (either party may terminate a tenancy at will at their will).

Balboa Bay Club, Inc. v. Howard, 2005 Cal. Unpub. LEXIS 3271 (filed Apr. 11, 2005) ("Although the death of a tenant automatically terminates a tenancy at will or at sufferance, it does not under ordinary circumstances terminate a tenancy for a fixed term.")

Olmstead v. Nodland, 828 N.E.2d 338, 340 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) ("Tenancies at will or by sufferance are terminated by a proper demand for possession.").

Mulholland v. Poole, 866 A.2d 122, 124 (Me. 2005) (citing statute that requires notice before termination of tenancy at will).

Kosa v. Legg, 2006 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 296, *28, 2006 N.Y. Slip Op. 26061, *9 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Feb. 10 2006) (may terminate a tenancy at will at any time).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W. 2d 253, *4 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) (citing Wis. Stat. § 704.19 (2005) and its provisions for terminating tenancies at will).

*RPC Props. v. Olson, 2005 Minn. App. Unpub. LEXIS 121 ,  (Aug. 2, 2005) (citing Minn. Stat. § 504B.135 (2005) requiring notice to terminate a tenancy at will).

§ 39.06(b)(2) Landlord Remedies

Add:

Lu v. Grewal, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623, 627 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) ("Under the common law in effect prior to the enactment, the breach of the lease, if treated as a termination, ended the lessee's obligation to pay rent, forcing a lessor to abandon its claim. If the lessor opted not to terminate, the choices were also limited: sue on each monthly rental payment as it came due; or re-lease for the benefit of the tenant.") (citing Landlord-Tenant Legislation: Revising an Old Common Law Relationship" 2 Pacific L.J. 259, 261-263 (1971)).

Jet 1 Ctr., Inc. v. City of Naples Airport Auth. (In re Jet 1 Ctr., Inc., 335 B.R. 771, *28-29 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. Aug. 26, 2005) (listing three different remedies for a commercial lessor to pursue in event of breach by the lessee and requirements for a lease to be terminated pre-petition).

After the sentence "The landlord may seek damages or an injunction as an alternative remedy available because of a tenant's breach." add new footnote 161.1:

Often, the statutory remedies are held to be exclusive and the landlord cannot resort to remedies that are not prescribed in the statute. See Connolly v. Powell, 118 P.3d 1232, 1235 (Idaho Ct. App. 2005) ; Sarete, Inc. v. 1344 U. St. Ltd. P'shp., 871 A.2d 480, 489-490 (D.C. 2005) .

after the sentence "If the lease is terminated, the landlord becomes eligible to reclaim possession of the property."

Add new footnote 161.2:

In re WD Ins. Servs., 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 567, *11 (Bankr. E.D. Va. Feb. 28, 2005) ("at common law a landlord's election to reenter and terminate the lease based on the tenant's default entitled the landlord to recover only for the rent then due.")

But see Swinson v. Coates & Lane, Inc., 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 9048, *3 (D.C. App. Mar. 18, 2005) (landlord could not retake possession of the premises because there was no provision in the lease agreement allowing for that; instead, the landlord had to settle for breach of contract damages).

after the sentence "At the same time, the landlord may seek damages occasioned by the tenant's breach of the lease."

Add new footnote 161.3:

Lu v. Grewal, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623, 627 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (California statute changed the common law in treated abandonment as "de facto termination of the lease," which changed the landlord's "continuing right to rent under the lease into a damage claim for rent lost through the tenant's abandonment.")

M.J. Realty Trust II v. Dinnocenzo, 2005 Mass. App. Div. 35, 38, 2005 Mass. App. Div. LEXIS 1 *10 (Mar. 17, 2005) (absent a lease provision to the contrary, upon a "termination of the lease ... any claim ... for rent thereafter accruing according to the terms of the lease [is] barred.") (parenthetical, alterations in original) (quoting Locke v. Fahey, 288 Mass. 341, 344, 193 N.E. 26 (1934)) .

Nick & Duke LLC v. John Hollings, Inc., 2006 N.Y. Slip. Op. 50372U, *6 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. Jan. 4, 2006) ("impossibility of performance by one of the parties to a lease may constitute a defense to an action based on breach of the lease") (citing 74 NY Jur 2d, Landlord and Tenant § 109 (2006)).

after the sentence "The landlord may not have given sufficient advance notice of a breach determined to have been readily curable."

Add new footnote 161.4:

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a-15 (2004)

after the sentence "Nonpayment of rent is most often the basis for a landlord's right to terminate the tenancy."

Add new footnote 161.5:

Crawford Square Cmty. v. Turner (In re Turner), 326 B.R. 563, 574 (W.D. Pa. 2005) .

McKee Realty, LLP v. Futons Plus III, LLC, 2006 Conn. Super. LEXIS 91, *12-13 (Jan. 9, 2006) ("commercial summary process action based on nonpayment of rent, the Landlord must prove all the elements of the case by a fair preponderance of the evidence. The essential elements are: (1) On or about a certain date, the landlord and the tenant entered into an oral or written, lease/rental agreement for a weekly/monthly/yearly term for use and occupancy of a certain premises; (2) The tenant agreed to pay an agreed-upon rent by a certain date; (3) The tenant took possession of the premises pursuant to the lease; (4) The tenant failed to pay the rent due under the lease by a certain date; (5) The landlord caused a proper Notice to Quit Possession to be served on the tenant to vacate the premises on or before a certain termination date; and (6) Although the time given in the Notice to Quit Possession of the premises has passed, the tenant still continues in possession of the premises. Failure of the landlord to establish any of the necessary elements, by a fair preponderance of the evidence, results in judgment for the tenant.").

Matte v. Shippee Auto, Inc., 876 A.2d 167 (N.H. 2005) .

PWV Acquisition, LLC v. Maddox, 801 N.Y.S.2d 781, 781 (2005) (per curiam) ("A history of repeated nonpayment proceedings brought to collect chronically late rental payments supports an eviction proceeding on the ground that the tenant has violated a 'substantial obligation' of the tenancy[.]") (quoting Adam's Tower Ltd. Partnership v. Richter, 186 Misc. 2d 620, 621, 717 N.Y.S.2d 825, 826 (N.Y. App. Term 2000)) .

Add:

Southway Corp. v. Metro. Realty & Dev. Co., LLC, 2005 Ark. App. LEXIS 284 (Apr. 6, 2005) (late rent was a material breach of the contract).

Amber Resources Co. v. U.S., 78 Fed. Cl. 508 (2007) (restitution damages calculated upon anticipatory repudiation).

§ 39.06(b)(2) Landlord Remedies.

Add:

Gallogly v. Kurrus, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1286, *29 (May 16, 2005) ("it has long been 'the common method in drafting leases ... to gather some or all of the covenants, by reference, into a condition subsequent, an agreement by the parties, that a breach by the tenant of any or all of the covenants on his part shall give the landlord the right to terminate the tenancy by means and in a manner usually indicated.' ") (quoting Robinson v. Weitz, 370 A.2d 1066, 1069 (Conn. 1976)) .

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 4-15 (2004).

DiBella v. Fiumara, 63 Mass. App. Ct. 640, 644, 2005 Mass. App. LEXIS 522, *7 (June 2, 2005) ("a landlord may only terminate a lease if the tenant commits a material breach, defined in our cases as a breach of an 'essential and inducing feature of the contract[].' " (alterations in original) (quoting Bucholz v. Green Bros. Co., 272 Mass. 49, 52, 172 N.E. 101, 102 (1930)) .

Healthsouth Corp. v. HRES1 Props. Trust, 2005 Mass. Super. LEXIS 482 (Sep. 25, 2005) .

Alonzo v. Perichon, 2006 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 282, *2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Feb. 22, 2006) (landlord is entitled to possession if tenant creates a nuisance, even if the tenant remedies part of the nuisance after the evidence closed).

CHI-AM Realty, Inc. v. Guddahl, 794 N.Y.S.2d 778, 779 (N.Y. App. Term 2005) (five episodes of flooding in a year and a half was enough to constitute a nuisance).

After the sentence "Unless the state's statute provides for termination based on these failures of the tenant, the lease must specify that the tenant is subject to forfeiting its rights under the lease due to these prescribed acts or because of the tenant's failure to meet the conditions specified.", add new footnote 164.1:

Anastacio Ramirez v. Superior Court of Ventura County, 2005 Cal. Unpub. LEXIS 9573, (filed Oct. 20, 2005)

("Language creating forfeiture must be "so clear as to leave no doubt that the grantor intended that an estate upon condition subsequent should be created.") (quoting Hawley v. Kafitz, 83 P. 248, 249 (Cal. 1905)) .

Jenkins v. Eckerd Corp., 913 So. 2d 43, 54 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005) ("while forfeitures are not favored under Florida law, the law allows for parties to make contracts that will result in forfeiture 'and when it is clear from the terms of the contract that the parties have so agreed, a court of law as well as the court of equity, will enforce the forfeiture.' ") (quoting Nelson v. Hansard, 143 Fla. 898, 899-900, 197 So. 513, 514 (1940)) .

Henry & Baltic Assoc. v. K & Q Food Corp., 796 N.Y.S.2d 837, 838 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) ("Language in written instruments that work a forfeiture must be strictly construed.")

Add:

200 W. 58th St., LLC v. Little Egypt Corp., 7 Misc. 3d 1017A, 1017A (N.Y. Civ. Ct. Feb. 10, 2005) ("The right to terminate a tenancy is conditioned on a fully valid predicate notice.")

Matter of Lee v. Ho-Park, 16 A.D.3d 986, 793 N.Y.S.2d 214 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) (landlord could not prove that operators had abandoned possession, nor did the landlord give notice of default or a demand for rent; therefore, the operators could retain possession).

Add:

250 L.L.C. v. PhotoPoint Corp., 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296, 301 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (security deposit can only offset rent currently due) (quoting St. James, Landlord Beware: Will a Security Deposit Survive a Bankruptcy? 26 Cal. Bankr. J. 44, 47 (2001))

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2550 (Page 2006).

Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1321(A) (Deering 2006).

Turner v. 1212 S. Mich. P'ship., 823 N.E.2d 1062, 1072 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) .

Durf v. Molter, 839 N.E.2d 1208, 1210-1211 (Ind. Ct. App. 2005) (landlord must provide notice before keeping the security deposit).

Bacon v. Atlas Home Corp., 2005 Ohio 6979 , PP 9-10, 2005 Ohio App. LEXIS 6324, *7-9 (Dec. 30, 2005) (landlord liable for double damages for failing to itemize deductions from security deposit).

Budler v. Empire Mgmt. Group, 2005 Ohio 2144 (Ohio App. 2005) (because the landlord released tenants from the lease and re-leased the premises, the tenants were not further liable for rent, and while the landlord itemized deductions from the security deposit, the remaining amount was improperly withheld).

§ 39.06(b)(3) Tenant Remedies

Add:

Simpson v. Young, 2005 N.H. LEXIS 184, * 1-10 (Dec. 29, 2005) (awarding statutory damages to tenant for actions of landlord in preventing the tenant from entering the premises).

Eastside Exihibition Corp. v. 210 E. 86th St. Corp., 801 N.Y.S.2d 568, 571 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) ("a more proportionate remedy than a total abatement of the rent may be fashioned for the compensation of a tenant who has been partially evicted") (citing Paine & Chriscott v. Blair House Associates, 417 N.Y.S.2d 68, *69 (N.Y. App. Div. 1979)) .

Lebrun v. Cal-Am Props., 106 P.3d 647, 651 (Or. Ct. App. 2005) (Regardless of whether tenants seek injunctive relief or termination of the lease, they are able to seek damages.) (citing Testimony, House Judiciary Committee, HB 2628, Apr 2, 1985, Ex E (statement of Michael H. Marcus)).

Masjid Usman, Inc v. Beech, LLC, 892 N.Y.S.2d 430 (2009) (upholding a preliminary injunction enjoining defendants from interfering with plaintiff's leasehold interest during pendency of action).

Correct:

Law v. Franco was not affirmed by Committed Commmunity Assocs. v. Croswell, but Committed Community Assocs. v. Croswell (659 N.Y.S.2d 691) was.

Add:

In re Tiny's Cafe, Inc., 322 B.R. 224, 228-229 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2005) .

Add:

605 Park Garage Assocs. LLC v. 605 Apt. Corp., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13023 (D.N.Y. 2004) affirmed by 605 Park Garage Assocs. LLC v. 605 Apt. Corp., 412 F.3d 304 (2d Cir. 2005) ((because new provisions created a new lease, the notice of termination was void).

§ 39.06(b)(4) Abandonment, Surrender and Mitigation of Damages.

after the sentence "The clearest surrender is a written document signed by the parties agreeing that the lease should terminate on a specified date."

Add new footnote 170.1:

Kiehm v. Adams, 126 P.3d 339, *56 (Haw. 2005) (Under state law, "no requirement of advance notice attaches to the ending of a lease by 'mutual agreement.' ") (citing Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 52-71 (Michie 2005)).

after the sentence "Because a surrender involves the transfer of a property interest the Statute of Frauds applies, and a writing is necessary unless the surrender is implied form the actions of the parties."

Add new footnote 170.2:

Graybeal-Miller v. Graybeal, 2005 ML 561, *34, 2005 Mont. Dist. LEXIS 734, *11 (Jan. 11, 2005) ("An agreement to terminate [a lease] need not be express, but may be implied from the conduct and language of the parties, and a written lease, including one under seal, may be terminated by a parol agreement, provided such agreement is supported by a valuable consideration, and the surrender of the premises may provide such consideration." quoting Rodgers v. Saunders, (1964) 396 P.2d 817, 818 (Mont. 1964) .

Add:

Aris Vision Inst., Inc. v. Wasatch Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 121 P.3d 24, 28-29 (Utah Ct. App. 2005) .

Lu v. Grewal, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623, 627 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (California statute changed the common law in treated abandonment as "de facto termination of the lease," which changed the landlord's "continuing right to rent under the lease into a damage claim for rent lost through the tenant's abandonment.")

United States v. Stevenson, 396 F.3d 538, 547 (4th Cir. 2005) ("At common law, 'if ... the tenant forfeits his lease or entirely abandons the premises, then the right to the possession reverts to the landlord and he may lawfully enter.' ")(alterations in original)(quoting Chancey v. Smith, 25 W. Va. 404, 407 (1885)) .

Add:

Cal. Civ. Code § 1951.2 (2006) (tenant abandoning the premises terminates the lease; this statute lists the landlord's remedies).

Highlands Ranch Univ. Park v. Uno of Highlands Ranch, Inc., 2005 Colo. App. LEXIS 109 (Colo. App. 2005) cert. dismissed Highlands Ranch Univ. Park, LLC v. Uno of Highlands Ranch, Inc., 2005 Colo. LEXIS 335 (Mar. 30, 2005) (where the tenant unequivocally repudiated the lease agreement, he was not liable for extra costs incurred by the landlord who built a larger building than had been agreed to in the original lease).

Add:

JJ&C Realty v. Crooks, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 102, *11 fn. 2 (Jan. 11, 2005) (pursuant to a state statute, if a landlord does not mitigate damages after a tenant abandons the premises, the landlord is considered to have terminated the agreement "as of the date the landlord has notice of the abandonment.") (quoting Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a-11a (2004)).

Christopher Vaeth, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R. 5th 1 (2005) .

Matter of Lee v. Ho-Park, 16 A.D.3d 986, 793 N.Y.S.2d 214 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005) (landlord could not prove that operators had abandoned possession, nor did the landlord give notice of default or a demand for rent); De La Concha of Hartford, Inc. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 269 Conn. 424 (Conn. 2004) (although a lessor pursued its own self-interest in limiting its losses in the operation of a mall, it did not do so because of a dishonest purpose, and thus, there was no violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing).

Knudsen v. Lax, 842 N.Y.S.2d 341 (2007) (an abandonment clause in the lease permitting the landlord to charge full rent for the balance of the lease term was held unconscionable).

Add:

Manglona v. Gov't of the Commonwealth of the N. Mariana Islands, 2005 MP 15 , PP 47-62, 2005 N. Mar. I. LEXIS 13, *36-55 (Oct. 4, 2005) (discussing extensively the landlord's duty to mitigate damages).

Add:

Manglona v. Gov't of the Commonwealth of the N. Mariana Islands, 2005 MP 15 , PP 47-62, 2005 N. Mar. I. LEXIS 13, *36-55 (Oct. 4, 2005) (discussing extensively the landlord's duty to mitigate damages).

§ 39.06(b)(5) Restrictions on Termination.

Add:

Green v. Boehrig, 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 11309, *19 (filed Dec. 7, 2005) ("Retaliatory eviction is ... an independent tort.")

Ligia Rus Card v. Park Newpot, Ltd., 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 7629, *5 (filed Aug. 24, 2005) (retaliatory eviction is a valid defense against an unlawful detainer action) (quoting Barela v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. Rptr. 618, 620 (Cal. 1981)) .

Connolly v. Powell, 118 P.3d 1232, 1233-1234 (Idaho Ct. App. 2005) (Tenant raised defense of retaliatory eviction against unlawful detainer action. Tenant had complained about "electrical rate charges" and "late fees.")

Jablonski v. Casey, 835 N.E.2d 615, 620 (Mass. App. Ct. 2005) ("where ... eviction is based on nonpayment of rent, a finding of retaliation ill not normally lie.").

Zimbovsky v. Tokar, 2005 Mass. App. Div. 100, 1005 Mass. App. Div. LEXIS 36 (Sep. 7, 2005) (The receipt of any notice of termination of tenancy, except for nonpayment of rent ... within six months after the Tenant has ... made [a] report or complaint ... shall create a rebuttable presumption that such notice ... is a reprisal against the tenant for engaging in such activities. Such presumption shall be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence that [the Landlord's] action was not a reprisal against the tenant and that [the Landlord] had sufficient independent justification for taking such action ... [emphasis supplied].) (alterations in original) (quoting Mass Gen. Laws. ch. 186, § 18 (2005)).

Clover Belt Farms v. Rademacher, 699 N.W.2d 253, *11 (Wis. Ct. App. 2005) ("While a landlord may terminate a month-to-month tenancy for any legitimate reason, or for no reason at all, the landlord may not terminate a tenancy for an illegal purpose, such as for retaliation.") (citing Dickhut v. Norton, 173 N.W.2d 297, 301-302 (Wis. 1970)) .

Add:

Scarborough v. Winn Residential L.L.P./Atlantic Terrace Apts., 890 A.2d 249, *21-22 (D.C. 2006) (landlord is not required to give tenant a second chance before eviction if crimin al activity has occurred).

Camco, Inc. v. Lowery, 839 N.E.2d 655, 670 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) (even lease prohibiting the tenant to "engage or permit" drug related activity would allow for eviction of tenant if drug related criminal activity occurred on the premises without the tenant's knowledge).

N.Y. City Hous. Auth. v. Taylor, 800 N.Y.S.2d 351, *2 (N.Y. App. Term 2005) (pursuant to a statute allowing for eviction because of an "illegal trade or business," tenant must know or have reason to know about the illegal activity and "acquiesced therein" before eviction will be allowed).

Pultz v. Economakis, 803 N.Y.S.2d 20 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (discussing whether plans to turn a building into a one-family home is a proper reason for terminating tenancies in a rent-stabilized building).

Seldin Co. v. Calabro, 702 N.W.2d 504, 507 (Iowa Ct. App. 2005) (tenant could not be evicted for not paying late fees).

Sarah Clinton, Note: Evicting the Innocent: Can the Innocent Tenant Defense Survive a Rucker Preemption Challenge? 85 B.U.L. Rev. 293 (2005).

Anne C. Fleming, NOTE: Protecting the Innocent: The Future of Mentally Disabled Tenants in Federally Subsidized Housing after HUD v. Rucker, 40 Harv. C.R.-C.L.L. Rev. 197 (Winter 2005).

Megan J. Ballard, Legal Protections for Home Dwellers: Caulking the Cracks to Preserve Occupancy, 56 Syracuse L. Rev. 277 (2006).

Correct:

Lohman v. New York City Housing should read Lohmann v. New York City Housing.

Horizon Homes v. Nunn, 684 N.W.2d 221 (Iowa 2004) (owner of a federally subsidized housing project could not terminate a tenant's month-to-month lease, as the landlord had to show good cause and specify those grounds constituting good cause in its notice of termination).

Add:

See also AIMCO Props., LLC v. Dziewisz, 883 A.2d 310, 312-313 (N.H. 2005) (expiration of a lease is not "good cause" for termination as described in the state statute).

N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540:2 (2005).

After sentence "If the landlord is unable to increase the rent for a new tenant, then the existing tenant is less likely to face a termination." add new footnote 180.1:

Rosario v. Diagonal Realty, LLC, 803 N.Y.S.2d 343 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (discussing tax abatement program and rent stabilization laws).

§ 39.06(b)(6) Summary Proceeding for Possession.

Add:

Underwood v. Corsino, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 542, 544 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) (the only issue for an unlawful detainer action is the right to possession; "a defendant is not permitted to file a cross-complaint or counterclaim and, 'a defense normally permitted because it 'arises out of the subject matter' of the original suit is generally excluded ... if such defense is extrinsic to the narrow issue of possession.' ") (quoting Vasey v. California Dance Co., 139 Cal. Rptr. 72, 74-75 (Cal. Ct. App. 1977)) .

Terry v. Levens, 2005 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 1004, *23 (filed Feb. 3, 2005) (summary proceedings that co-exist with other civil proceedings will not be streamlined but will be treated as normal civil proceedings) (quoting Lynch & Freytag v. Cooper, 267 Cal. Rptr. 189, 192 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990)) .

Trinity United Methodist Church v. Levesque, 870 A.2d 1116, 1121 (Conn. App. Ct. 2005) (under state law, for summary proceedings, one only has to prove ownership of the property and then demand possession; no need to prove that individuals being ejected are tenants).

McKee Realty, LLP v. Futons Plus III, LLC, 2006 Conn. Super. LEXIS 91, *12-13, 15-16 (Jan. 9, 2006) (listing elements for commercial summary process action that is "based on nonpayment of rent"; counterclaims in summary process proceeding have to be related only to the issue of possession).

V&R Props., LLC v. Carino, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2377, *2-5 (Aug. 31, 2005) (counterclaims must relate to possession to be allowed, court did not allow counterclaim seeking monetary damages).

Perrone Realty, LLC v. J&P Enterprises of New Milford, LLC, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2053, *2-4 (July 22, 2005) .

Abrimson v. Ethel Kidd Real Estate, 2006 La. App. LEXIS 575, *5 (Jan. 18, 2006) ("When lessee's right of occupancy ceases for any reason, lessor is entitled to utilize summary eviction proceedings to obtain possession of the premises.") (emphasis added).

Matte v. Shippee Auto, Inc., 876 A.2d 167, 170 (N.H. 2005) (if landlord does not claim unpaid rent, then defendants have no right to off-set how much they owe the plaintiff).

Reade Broadway Assoc. v. Capogrosso, 9 Misc. 3d 139A (N.Y. App. Term Nov. 10, 2005) (Under state law, either a landlord or a lessor may bring summary proceedings for possession).

Graham Ct. Owners Corp. v. Powell, 804 N.Y.S.2d 530, 531 (N.Y. App. Term 2005) (counterclaim in summary proceeding will not be allowed unless it amounts to a defense) (quoting Siegel, New York Practice, § 576, at 996 (4th ed)).

Ascot Realty LLC v. Richstone, 10 A.D.3d 513 (N.Y. App. Div. 2004) appeal dismissed, Ascot Realty LLC v. Richstone, 797 N.Y.S.2d 413, 830 N.E.2d 311 (2005) (the court erred in awarding possession to landlord in a summary proceeding, because it was not proven that the apartment was not the tenant's primary residence while he was staying with a friend).

After the sentence "The procedures usually provide for the following: a shortened period for filing the tenant's answer to the landlord's pleadings, limitations on the issues and defenses that can be raised, expedited or limited discovery, an early hearing date, non-availability of juries, and quick enforcement by local officials under some type of a writ of restitution." add new footnote 183.1:

Gallogly v. Kurrus, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 1286, *34-35 (May 16, 2005) (equitable defenses may be allowed in summary proceedings if they are "properly raised") (quoting Cumberland Farms, Inc. v. Dairy Mart, Inc., 627 A.2d 386, 390 (Conn. 1993)) .

Riverwood Commer. Park, LLC v. Standard Oil Co., 698 N.W.2d 478 (N.D. 2005) (summary procedure is not suited "to resolve complex legal and factual issues ...").

Sesko v. McConkey, 12 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 574 (filed Apr. 5, 2005) (court may hear counterclaim in summary proceedings where it "is based on facts which excuse a tenant's breach") (quoting Sprincin King St. Partners v. Sound Conditioning Club, 925 P.2d 217, 223 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996)) .

Andries v. Covey, 113 P.3d 483 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) (discussing counterclaims in summary proceedings).

After the sentence "In order to qualify for the summary dispossession proceedings, the landlord must rigorously meet the procedural requirements." add new footnote 183.2:

Westview Assocs. v. Carraccini, 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 698, *2-4 (Mar. 10, 2005) (landlord failed to comply strictly with the statute by stating the contents of the notice or attaching the notice to his complaint and therefore the summary proceedings were dismissed).

Empire Properties, L.L.C. v. Hardy, 873 A.2d 1187, 1190-1195 (Md. 2005) (foreclosure sale purchaser could not use forcible entry and detainer statute to gain possession from the mortgagors still in possession).

Henry & Baltic Assoc. v. K & Q Food Corp., 796 N.Y.S.2d 837, 838 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (notice was inadequate when it told tenant to contact the landlord's attorney but failed to state the attorney's name).

Brown v. Kula-Amos, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2227, *5-11 (Mar. 24, 2005) (because contract provided that buyer became a tenant at sufferance upon default, there was the necessary landlord/tenant relationship to pursue a forcible detainer action in a contract for deed sale).

Spraybary v. Mallinson, 2005 Wash. App. LEXIS 2416, *8 (filed Sep. 15, 2005) (when sale did not close, the buyers became month to month tenants that were subject to an ejectment action).

After the sentence "The statutes typically provide for differing notice periods for proper termination of the tenancy depending on whether it was a periodic tenancy from month to month or year to year, or a tenancy at will or sometimes even if the holdover tenant merely has a tenancy at sufferance but has received no prior notice as required by the dispossession statute." add new footnote 183.3:

Kosa v. Legg, 2006 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 296, *10 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Feb. 10, 2006) ("The statutory notice requirement in a summary proceeding is not relevant to the question of whether notice is required in an ejection action or if it is required, how much notice is required.")

W. Bushwick NRP Assoc., L.P. v. Bushwick Coop. Fed. Credit Union, 10 Misc. 3d 1078A (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 2005) (must be proof that individual sending the notice to quit premises has authority to act for the landlord).

Adams v. Woods, 609 S.E.2d 429, 431 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) (because there was no enforceable lease agreement, there was no landlord/tenant relationship and no availability of summary proceedings).

After the sentence "As a penalty for holding over beyond the legal termination of a tenant's right, the statutes typically impose treble damage liability or some other penalty amount on the tenant." add new footnote 183.4:

Aris Vision Inst., Inc. v. Wasatch Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 121 P.3d 24 (Utah Ct. App. 2005) (Treble damages for wrongful detainer, conversion, etc).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 122.1. Vic's Parking Corporation v. Nash, 890 N.Y.S. 2d 803 (2009) ("A leasehold is not created when the contract to form a leasehold fails.").

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 39 Leasehold Estates

4-39 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 39.07

Supp. to § 39.07 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles

Dick, Andrew. "Indiana Leasehold Estates: A Closer Look at Landlord-Tenant Relationships," 51 Res Gestae 12 (September 2007).

Gray, Robert W. "The Applicability of Constructive Eviction, Implied Warranty of Habitability, Common-Law Fraud, and the Consumer Fraud Act to Omissions of Material Fact in a Commercial Lease," 38 John Marshall L. Rev. 1289 (2005).

Hendrick, Will. "Pay or Play? On Specific Performance and Sports Franchise Leases," 87 N.C. L. Rev. 504 (January, 2009).

Meier, Scott W. "Issues to Consider in Drafting of Commercial Leases," 31 Wyo Law. 24 (April, 2008).

Merges, Robert P. "A Transactional View of Property Rights," 20 Berkeley Tech. L.J. 1477, 1487 (2005) (discussing "precontractual liability" and "enforcement flexibility" and the nexus between contract law and property rights).

Moore, Marie A. "Indemnification Provisions in Leases: What We Ask for and What Really Matters," 22 Prob. & Prop. 33 (September/October, 2008) .

Note, "Landlord-Tenant Law: Protecting the Small Landlord's Rights During Summary Process." 37 Suffolk U. L. Rev. 1109 (2004).

Orth, John V. "Leases Like Any Other Contract?" 12 Green Bag 2d 53 (Autumn, 2008).

Pang, Michael. "Imminent Domain": Viewpoints on Leasehold Conversion of Hawaiian Lands: Leasehold Perspective."

4 Asian-Pacific L. & Pol'y J. 547 (Summer 2003).

Smeltzer, Natalie. "Freedom to Contract in Texas--Enforceability of an 'As Is" Clause in a Commercial Lease," 61 SMU L. Rev. 509 (Spring 2008).

White, Bruce H. and William L. Medford. "Rejection Via Sale of Real Estate: Is Your Leasehold Interest Protected?" 26 Am Bankr. Inst. J. 28 (September, 2007).

Zeiner, Carol L. "Establishing a Leasehold Through Eminent Domain: A Slippery Slope Made More Treacherous by Kelo," 56 Cath. U. L. Rev. 503 (Winter, 2007).

Annotations

Add:

Delete all the Annotations in the supplement and replace them with the following:

Annotation, Character and Duration of Tenancy Created By Entry Under Invalid or Unenforceable Lease, 6 A.L.R.2d 685 .

Annotation, Commercial Leases: Application of Rule that Lease May be Canceled only for " Material" Breach, 54 A.L.R. 4th 595 .

Annotation, Enforceability of mechanic's lien attached to leasehold estate against landlord' s fee, 74 A.L.R.3d 330 .

Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commercial Leases --Modern Status, 76 A.L.R. 4th 928.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R. 5th 1 .

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Damage to Tenant's Property Caused by Water, 30 A.L.R.3d 143 .

Annotation, Leasehold estate in exempt property as subject or tax or special assessment, 23 A.L.R. 248 .

Annotation, Leasehold Interest as Real Property Within Tax Laws, 59 A.L.R. 701 .

Annotation, Lessor's Retention of Past-Due Rental Payments as Precluding Termination of Lease and Dispossession of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent, 39 A.L.R. 4th 1204 .

Annotation , Maintainability, by Lessee, of Action to Quiet Title to Leasehold, 51 A.L.R.2d 1227 .

Annotation, Modern Status of Rules as to Existence of Implied Warranty of Habitability or Fitness for Use of Leased Premises, 40 A.L.R. 3d 646 .

Annotation, Modern Status of Rules Conditioning Landowner's Liability Upon Status of Injured Party as Invitee, Licensee, or Trespasser, 22 A.L.R.4th 294 .

Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 2d 446 .

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Statute or Ordinance Authorizing Withholding or Payment into Escrow of Rent for Period During Which Premises are not Property Maintained by Landlord, 40 A.L.R. 3d 821 (2005) .

Annotation, Lessor's Retention of Past-Due Rental Payments as Precluding Termination of Lease and Dispossession of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent, 39 A.L.R. 4th 1204 (2005) .

Roland F. Chase, Annotation, Commercial Leases: Application of Rule that Lease May be Canceled only for " Material" Breach, 54 A.L.R. 4th 595 (2005) .

Joseph E. Edwards, Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Damage to Tenant's Property Caused by Water, 30 A.L.R.3d 143 (2005) .

Thomas M. Fleming, Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commercial Leases-- Modern Status, 76 A.L.R. 4th 928 (2005) .

Vitauts M. Gulbis, Annotation, Modern Status of Rules Conditioning Landowner's Liability Upon Status of Injured Party as Invitee, Licensee, or Trespasser, 22 A.L.R.4th 294 (2005)

F.G. Madara, Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 2d 446 (2005) .

Jonathan M. Purver, Annotation, Modern Status of Rules as to Existence of Implied Warranty of Habitability or Fitness for Use of Leased Premises, 40 A.L.R. 3d 646 (2005) .

Jonathan M. Purver, Annotation, Validity and Construction of Statute or Ordinance Authorizing Withholding or Payment into Escrow of Rent for Period During Which Premises are not Property Maintained by Landlord, 40 A.L.R. 3d 821 (2005) .

Christopher Vaeth, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R. 5th 1 (2005) (superseding 21 A.L.R.3d 534 (1999) .

T.C. Williams, Annotation, Character and Duration of Tenancy Created By Entry Under Invalid or Unenforceable Lease, 6 A.L.R.2d 685 (2005) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 40.syn

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.syn Synopsis to Chapter 40: LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

(g)Overview of Landlord Rights and Tenant Duties.

§ 40.02 Outline of the Chapter.

§ 40.03 Rent.

§ 40.03(a) Historical Background.

§ 40.03(b) Rental Payments and Payments for Use and Occupancy.

§ 40.03(c) Rent Covenants and Rent Reservation.

§ 40.03(d) Rent Accrual and Rent Apportionment.

§ 40.03(d)(1) When Rent Is Payable.

§ 40.03(d)(2) General Rule that Rent Is Not Apportionable.

§ 40.03(d)(3) The View that Rent May Be Apportioned.

§ 40.03(d)(4) Waiver of Right to Insist on Prompt Payment.

§ 40.03(e) Place of Payment.

§ 40.03(f) Mode of Payment.

§ 40.03(g) Amount of Payment.

§ 40.03(h) Rent Acceleration Clauses.

§ 40.03(i) Late Charges.

§ 40.03(j) Agreements to Modify Rental Obligations.

§ 40.03(j)(1) The Requirement of Consideration.

§ 40.03(j)(2) Application of the Statute of Frauds.

§ 40.03(k) Rent and Lease Termination.

§ 40.03(k)(1) In General.

§ 40.03(k)(2) Survival of Monetary Obligations.

§ 40.03(k)(2)(i) Nature of Surviving Obligation.

§ 40.03(l) Rent Control.

§ 40.04 Landlord Liens.

§ 40.04(a) Distraint.

§ 40.04(a)(1) At Common Law.

§ 40.04(a)(2) Current Status of Distraint.

§ 40.04(a)(3) Consequences of Unlawful Resort to Distraint.

§ 40.04(b) Statutory Liens in Favor of Landlords.

§ 40.04(b)(1) Time of Attachment.

§ 40.04(b)(2) Property Reached.

§ 40.04(b)(3) Distinctions Between Distraint and Statutory Liens.

§ 40.04(b)(4) Constitutional Issues.

§ 40.04(c) Liens Created by Lease Provision.

§ 40.04(c)(1) Applicability of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code.

§ 40.04(c)(2) Scope of the Lien.

§ 40.05 Rights Regarding Tenant Deposits.

§ 40.05(a) Security Deposits.

§ 40.05(a)(1) Ordinary Security Deposit.

§ 40.05(a)(2) Security Deposit as Fund for Liquidated Damages.

§ 40.05(a)(3) Relationship Between Parties with Respect to Security Deposit Funds.

§ 40.05(a)(3)(i) Debt.

§ 40.05(a)(3)(ii) Pledge.

§ 40.05(a)(3)(iii) Trust.

§ 40.05(a)(4) Obligation to Return Security Deposit to Tenant.

§ 40.05(a)(5) Security Deposits and Transfer of Landlord's Interest.

§ 40.05(a)(6) Statutory Regulation of Security Deposits.

§ 40.05(b) Other Types of Tenant Deposits.

§ 40.05(b)(1) Advance Payment of Rent.

§ 40.05(b)(2) Consideration for Execution of Lease.

§ 40.06 Right to Enter the Leased Premises.

§ 40.07 Landlord Rights in Tenant Fixtures.

§ 40.07(a) Introduction.

§ 40.07(b) Fixtures and Trade Fixtures.

§ 40.07(c) Constraints on Removability.

§ 40.07(c)(1) Damage to the Realty.

§ 40.07(c)(2) Timing of Removal.

§ 40.07(d) Third Party Claims.

§ 40.07(e) Condemnation.

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2564Right to Terminate the Lease.

§ 40.08(a) Introduction.

§ 40.08(b) Termination Based on Lease Provision.

§ 40.08(b)(1) Special Limitations and Powers of Termination.

§ 40.08(b)(2) Exercise of the Power of Termination.

§ 40.08(b)(3) Limitations on Landlord's Right to Terminate the Lease.

§ 40.08(b)(3)(i) Construction of Lease Provisions.

§ 40.08(b)(3)(ii) Waiver.

§ 40.08(b)(3)(iii) Estoppel.

§ 40.08(b)(3)(iv) Equitable Relief from Forfeiture.

§ 40.08(c) Statutory Lease Termination Rights.

§ 40.08(d) The Requirement of Good Cause for Lease Termination.

§ 40.09 Recovery of Possession from the Tenant.

§ 40.09(a) Introduction.

§ 40.09(b) Landlord Self Help.

§ 40.09(b)(1) Availability of Self Help.

§ 40.09(b)(2) The Requirement of Peaceable Entry.

§ 40.09(b)(3) Landlord Civil Liability.

§ 40.09(b)(4) Effect of Lease Provisions.

§ 40.09(c) Summary Possession by the Landlord.

§ 40.09(c)(1) Introduction.

§ 40.09(c)(2) Nature of the Summary Possession Remedy.

§ 40.09(c)(3) Issues Appropriate for Summary Proceedings.

§ 40.09(c)(4) Statutory Limitations on Landlord Possessory Remedies.

§ 40.09(c)(5) Landlord Liability for Injury to Tenant Personal Property.

§ 40.09(c)(6) Constitutional Issues.

§ 40.09(c)(6)(i) Early Trial Requirements and Limitations on Triable Issues.

§ 40.09(c)(6)(ii) Right to Jury Trial.

§ 40.09(c)(6)(iii) Additional Issues.

§ 40.10 The Holdover Tenant.

§ 40.10(a) The Landlord's Election.

§ 40.10(b) Nature of the New Lease.

§ 40.10(c) Terms of the New Lease.

§ 40.10(d) Limitations on the Landlord's Election.

N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:18-55Landlord Rights When the Tenant Abandons the Premises.

§ 40.11(a) Acceptance of Offer of Surrender.

§ 40.11(a)(1) Surrender by Express Agreement.

§ 40.11(a)(2) Surrender by Operation of Law.

§ 40.11(a)(3) Effect of Surrender on Tenant Liability.

§ 40.11(b) Landlord Election to Relet the Premises.

§ 40.11(b)(1) Nature of the Abandoning Tenant's Liability.

§ 40.11(c) Election to Keep the Premises Vacant and Sue for Rent.

§ 40.11(c)(1) Nature and Consequences of the Mitigation Requirement.

§ 40.12 Death or Dissolution of Tenant.

N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:18-61.1Bankruptcy.

N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:18-61.3Condemnation.

§ 40.14(a) Total Condemnation.

§ 40.14(b) Partial Condemnation.

§ 40.14(c) Temporary Taking.

§ 40.14(d) Effect of Lease Provisions.

N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:18-61.8Destruction of Improvements Located on the Leased Premises.

§ 40.15(a) The Traditional Rule.

§ 40.15(b) Departures from the Traditional Rule.

§ 40.15(c) Effect of Lease Provisions.

§ 40.16 Illegal Use of Leased Premises.

§ 40.16(a) Illegal Use at the Time of Leasing.

§ 40.16(a)(1) General Rules.

§ 40.16(a)(2) Zoning Violations and Lease Illegality.

§ 40.16(a)(3) Statutory Prohibitions.

§ 40.16(b) Supervening Illegality.

§ 40.17 Casualty Insurance.

§ 40.18 Real Estate Taxes and Assessments.

§ 40.19 Selection of Tenants.

§ 40.19(a) Freedom to Select or Reject Tenants.

§ 40.19(b) Prohibitions Against Discrimination in Tenant Selection.

§ 40.19(c) Landlord Use of Tenant Screening Services.

§ 40.20 Bibliography.

N. Gregory Smith
G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law
Louisiana State University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.01

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.01 Overview of Landlord Rights and Tenant Duties.

This chapter considers both traditional and modern rules regarding landlord rights and tenant duties. The following chapter -- chapter 41 -- considers tenant rights and landlord duties. The division is admittedly somewhat arbitrary, because landlords and tenants generally have concomitant rights and duties. But the division is also defensible, because there are many areas of landlord-tenant law in which the rights or the duties of either the landlord or the tenant dominate consideration of an issue. That aside, whether one chooses to refer first to one party's rights or another party's duties is often little more than a matter of perspective.

Many of the traditional common law rules relating to landlord rights and tenant duties arose out of the concept that a lease is a conveyance of an interest in real property. The landlord conveyed a present non freehold estate to the tenant and retained a future estate -- a reversion. Because the tenant was the owner of the possessory estate, the landlord was generally prohibited from entering the premises during the term of the lease without the consent of the tenant. However, the landlord could enter the premises in some situations, including when the tenant wrongfully abandoned the property. Abandonment by the tenant presented the landlord with several options; the landlord could accept a surrender of the lease, allow the premises to remain vacant and sue for rent, or attempt to relet the premises for the benefit of the tenant.

The landlord also enjoyed a number of other important rights. One of the most important was the right to receive rent. If the tenant did not pay the rent, the landlord could seize the tenant's personal property located on the leased premises and hold it hostage for the rent, or the landlord could sue the tenant for the rent. The landlord could also terminate the lease if the landlord remembered to include a power of termination in the lease.

Upon termination of the lease, the landlord had the right to remove the tenant using self help, or the landlord could bring an ejectment action to obtain possession. At early common law, the landlord also had the right to retain personal property that the tenant had affixed to the leased premises. If the tenant held over on the premises after lease expiration, the landlord had the power to elect either to treat the tenant as a trespasser or to bind the tenant to a new lease.

As the owner of the possessory estate, the tenant was traditionally considered to bear the risk of accidental damage to improvements located on the leased premises. Even if improvements were destroyed by fire or other casualty, the landlord was entitled to continued receipt of rental payments. Unless the lease provided otherwise, if the landlord defaulted in the performance of covenants set forth in the lease, the tenant was generally not excused from the obligation to pay rent or from other lease obligations. Under the traditional rules, the obligations of landlord and tenant were generally considered to be independent of each other, in the sense that breach of an obligation by one party did not excuse performance by the other.

In conveying the leasehold estate to the tenant, the landlord made no implied warranty that the land would be suitable for the tenant's purposes. Neither did the landlord make an implied covenant to keep the premises in repair. However, the landlord was considered to be subject to, and the tenant benefited by, other implied covenants: an implied covenant that the landlord had the power to demise the property; an implied covenant that the landlord would deliver possession of the leased premises to the tenant; and an implied covenant that the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises would not be disturbed by the landlord, persons acting under the landlord's authority, or persons with paramount title. Breach of one of these implied covenants would generally excuse the tenant from performing under the lease.

Many of the traditional rules relating to landlord rights and tenant duties were changed over time, by court decision and by legislation. For example, court decisions and statutes limited the landlord's ability to engage in self help repossession of the leased premises. But the landlord was, by legislation, given access to summary proceedings for speedy judicial recovery of the premises. By means of the "trade fixtures" doctrine, commercial tenants were afforded substantial rights with respect to the removal of personal property that they affixed to the realty during the lease term. Housing codes were enacted that imposed new obligations on landlords with respect to the condition of leased urban housing. Court decisions and statutes constrained the rights of landlords with respect to security for tenant performance of lease obligations.

The pace of change accelerated rapidly in the 1960s. Many of the modern changes in landlord-tenant law can be attributed to a judicial emphasis on the contractual nature of a lease and to the statutory regulation of matters once left to private agreement or to judicial resolution. Judicial and legislative developments were, in turn, influenced by the changed nature of the modern lease. Unlike the sturdy tenant farmers of former times, many modern residential tenants are not primarily interested in renting land, but are primarily interested in renting safe, urban area apartment units that are adequately served by customary utilities and other services and that are properly maintained by landlords. Courts and legislatures considered some of the traditional landlord-tenant rules to be inappropriate in this setting.

In general, the modern changes have limited the landlord's rights and have increased the landlord's duties, both resulting in enlargement of tenant rights. As a result of judicial or statutory adoption of the implied warranty of habitability, for example, modern residential landlords generally have significant duties with respect to the condition and ongoing maintenance of leased residential premises. Moreover, breach of those duties entitles the tenant to exercise a variety of remedies, including the withholding of rent. Other changes have also occurred. If a residential tenant wrongfully abandons the premises, many courts and statutes now require residential landlords who do not wish to accept a surrender of the lease to mitigate damages by attempting to relet the premises for the benefit of the tenant. By statute and by court decision, modern landlords are frequently prohibited from retaliating against tenants who complain to government housing authorities about housing conditions that violate applicable housing code. The ancient shield of landlord tort immunity, already subject to a number of exceptions, has been altogether discarded by some courts, at least in the residential landlord-tenant context.

While modern developments have substantially changed the law relating to landlord rights and tenant duties, the changes have not altogether supplanted the traditional rules. Indeed, in the commercial leasing context, many of the traditional rules relating to landlord rights and tenant duties have continued dominance. Accordingly, a consideration of the rights of landlords and the duties of tenants must include both what is old and what is new.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.02

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.02 Outline of the Chapter.

The chapter begins with a consideration of fundamental landlord rights concerning rent (§ 40.03), landlords' liens (§ 40.04), and tenant deposits (§ 40.05). The next two sections of the chapter, § 40.06 and § 40.07, discuss the landlord's right to enter the leased premises during the pendency of the lease, and the landlord's rights in tenant fixtures when the lease comes to an end. The landlord's right to terminate the lease is discussed in § 40.08, and the right to recover possession of the leased premises is considered in § 40.09.

The next several sections of the chapter consider the rights of the landlord upon the occurrence of specific events. Section 40.10 discusses the rights of the landlord when a tenant wrongfully holds over on the leased premises after lease termination. Subsequent sections consider landlord rights on tenant abandonment of the leased premises (§ 40.11), the death or dissolution of the tenant (§ 40.12), bankruptcy (§ 40.13), condemnation of the leased premises (§ 40.14), and destruction of improvements located on the leased premises (§ 40.15). Section 40.16 discusses the effect on the rights of the landlord of the tenant's illegal use of the leased premises.

Landlord rights regarding casualty insurance are discussed in § 40.17. And landlord rights regarding the payment of taxes and assessments are considered in § 40.18.

Section 40.19 discusses selection of tenants, including prohibitions against discrimination in tenant selection and landlord use of tenant screening services.

A bibliography is included at the end of the chapter.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.03

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.03 Rent.

[Go To Supp]

§ 40.03(a) Historical Background.

One of the basic rights of a landlord is the right to receive rent. Rent is usually thought of today as a payment that the tenant is obligated by contract to make to the landlord for use of the leased premises. However, the early common law concept of rent was rather different. In earlier times, rent was considered to be a type of property; indeed, a rent reserved on a freehold estate was considered to be part of the reversion on that estate. n1 A landlord's action to recover rent was a real action, the same type of action that was used to claim an estate in land. From the standpoint of procedure and from the standpoint of the rights of the parties, rent was treated very much like an estate in the land. n2

Rent was also thought to issue out of the land itself, n3 or, in the words of Coke, to be "reserved out of the profits of the land." n4 This did not necessarily mean that rent had to be paid by delivery to the landlord of actual products of the soil; rent could be reserved and made payable in almost any medium. According to Coke, "the rent may as well be in delivery of hens, capons, roses, spurs, bows, shafts, horses, hawks, pepper, cummin, wheat, or other profit, that lieth in render, office, attendance, and such like, as in payment of money." n5

Two consequences were deduced from the common law concept that rent was something that issued out of the land. The first was that rent was not due "until the profits were taken by the lessee." n6 From this it followed that rent was not payable until the end of the term. n7 The second consequence was that, since rent was not due until the end of the term, if the lease were terminated prior to that time, no rent would be payable to the landlord. n8

These early common law concepts are the source of many modern rules regarding rent. But the modern rules regarding rent have also been significantly shaped by concepts from the realm of contract law. This section of the chapter considers the resulting legal rules relating to the landlord's right to receive rent.

§ 40.03(b) Rental Payments and Payments for Use and Occupancy.

The payment of rent is a normal, but not essential, incident to the existence of the landlord-tenant relationship. In almost all jurisdictions a valid lease may be created that does not impose a rental obligation on the tenant. n9 However, even if there is no agreement regarding rent, the owner of the land will normally be entitled to payments for use and occupancy of the land.

The early English statute of 11 George II provided that a landowner could bring an action for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of land when there was no promise to pay rent. n10 Similar statutes have been enacted in many American jurisdictions. n11 Even in the absence of an applicable statute, however, a number of courts have concluded that a landowner is entitled to receive payment for the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of the land from an occupant, if no rent is reserved in the lease and no gift is intended by the landowner. n12 The Restatement also takes this position, which a Reporter's Note describes as well-settled by statute or by court decision. n13

Whether a gift of occupancy is intended by the landowner is determined in light of the circumstances surrounding the occupancy. Circumstances in which courts have found that no occupancy payments were intended include occupancy of the premises by an employee in connection with the employee's responsibilities to an employer landowner, n14 and occupancy by a contract purchaser prior to the closing of the sale of the property. n15

The distinction between the payment of rent and payment for the reasonable value of use and occupancy of the premises may have significant remedial consequences for the landowner. If an occupant who is obligated to do so does not pay the landowner for the value of the use and occupancy, the landowner will be entitled to bring an action to recover the amount that is owed. However, since the amount that is owed is not rent, the landlord may be barred from exercising remedies that are based on nonpayment of rent by tenants. n16 It has been held, for example, that the landowner cannot utilize the remedy of distraint n17 or have recourse to summary possession procedures when the occupant fails to pay for use and occupancy of the premises. n18

§ 40.03(c) Rent Covenants and Rent Reservation.

Normally, the parties to a lease will have an understanding regarding the amount of the rent. If the amount of the rent is set forth in a written lease, it may be subject to an express covenant on the part of the tenant to pay, or it may simply be "reserved" in the lease. The rent may be reserved, for example, if the lease agreement states that the premises are leased subject to a specified rental amount, or if the lease agreement identifies the amount of the rental without setting forth a covenant on the part of the tenant to pay. n19

The distinction between a rent covenant and a reservation of rent can represent more than a theoretical difference to a landlord. When there is only a reservation of rent, instead of a covenant to pay it, some courts have held that the assignment of the tenant's leasehold interest to a third party releases the tenant from paying rent. n20 The rationale is that, when the lease contains a covenant to pay rent, there is privity of contract between the landlord and the tenant, n21 but if the lease contains no such covenant, and rent is merely reserved in the lease, the obligation to pay rent depends on privity of estate. n22

§ 40.03(d) Rent Accrual and Rent Apportionment.

§ 40.03(d)(1) When Rent Is Payable.

The early common law concept of rent was that it issued out of the land, and that it was not payable until the "profits were taken by the lessee" at the end of the term. n23 In the modern era, the idea of the lessee taking profits at the end of the term has little application, outside the agricultural leasing context. Nonetheless, the basic common law rule still persists: in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, rent is not payable until the end of the term. n24 Indeed, it has been said that there is no obligation to pay rent until midnight of the day it is due. n25 In the case of a periodic tenancy, the rent will be due at the end of a period. n26

§ 40.03(d)(2) General Rule that Rent Is Not Apportionable.

The idea that rent is payable at the end of the term has given rise to the general rule that rent accrues on the day it is payable; it does not, like interest, accrue from day to day. n27 One consequence of this rule is that, in the absence of an agreement or statute to the contrary, no debt for payment of rent generally arises upon premature termination of the lease. In other words, the landlord may not recover pro rata rent from a tenant for the period between the date rent was last payable and the date of lease termination. n28 Another consequence of the rule is that if a tenant is required to pay the rent in advance, the landlord is generally entitled to a retain the full amount of the payment if the lease is terminated prematurely. n29 However, the potential harshness of this rule has been reduced by court decisions that prohibit the landlord from profiting by the landlord's own breach of the lease, such as when the tenant pays rent in advance and the landlord wrongfully evicts the tenant. n30 Some courts have also apportioned rent in cases when accidental destruction of the premises results in lease termination. n31 In any event, the parties are free to agree to apportion the rent. n32

§ 40.03(d)(3) The View that Rent May Be Apportioned.

The minority view, articulated in some court decisions and adopted by the Restatement, is that rent will be apportioned if the lease is terminated prematurely. n33 In the event of premature lease termination, this rule would enable a tenant to obtain a pro rata refund of advance rent or would enable a landlord to recover a pro rata portion of unpaid rent. n34 The Restatement indicates that, by analogy, the same rule should apply to monetary obligations of the tenant other than rent, such as utility costs and taxes that are not payable as rent. n35 The minority view has been justified on the ground that it is probably not the parties' intention that one of them receive a windfall in the event of premature lease termination. n36

A number of statutes provide for rent apportionment as well. n37 Some of the statutes are limited to situations in which the landlord is a life tenant, and dies before the date rent is due. Such statutes provide for proportionate recovery of rent by the landlord's estate. n38 Other statutes permit proportionate recovery of rent in residential leases. n39

§ 40.03(d)(4) Waiver of Right to Insist on Prompt Payment.

Regardless of when rent is due, the landlord may be held to have waived the right to insist on prompt payment if the landlord has previously accepted late rental payments without objection. n40 However, the result has been held to be otherwise when the lease provides that landlord acceptance of late payments does not constitute a waiver. n41 If it occurs, a waiver by the landlord need not be permanent. The landlord may regain the right to insist on prompt payment of rent by providing notice to the tenant that future rental payments must be made on time. n42

§ 40.03(e) Place of Payment.

The parties to a lease are, of course, free to agree on the place where rent is to be paid. n43 In the absence of such an agreement, the general rule is that rent is payable at the leased premises. n44 Under the general rule, then, the landlord will be obliged to call for rent at the leased premises. n45

An agreement to change the place of rental payment may be established as a result of the parties' prior practice regarding the payment of rent. n46 However, the landlord may not unilaterally change the place where rent is to be paid. n47

§ 40.03(f) Mode of Payment.

Although rent normally consists of the payment of money, the common law has long permitted a wide variety of other payments or performances, as evidenced by the statement of Coke, quoted previously. n48 The parties may agree that rent is payable in money, property, or services. n49 A farm lease, for example, may specify that rent will consist of a share of crops produced on the leased land. n50

§ 40.03(g) Amount of Payment.

The general rule with respect to the amount of rent is that it must be certain, or capable of being reduced to certainty by the time it is to be paid. n51 The rule will certainly be satisfied if the parties designate, as they commonly do in residential leases, a fixed amount that is payable on calendared dates throughout the lease term. But a number of alternatives are available to the parties. Specific methods that courts have approved include the designation of a percentage of crop production in a farm lease, n52 an agreement to change the amount of rent based on appraisals, n53 and an agreement to change the rent based on increased costs incurred by the landlord. n54 Basically, any method of computing the rent is permissible as long as it permits a determination of the rental amount. n55

Commercial leases involving retail stores often specify that some or all of the rent will be based on a percentage of tenant sales on the leased premises. A common type of percentage lease provision entitles the landlord to a fixed minimum rent, plus a percentage of tenant sales in excess of a specified amount over a defined period. Such provisions are potentially advantageous to the landlord as a hedge against inflation. They are also enforceable; indeed, courts have tended to enforce percentage rent provisions broadly in favor of landlords. n56 In cases in which the only specified rent is a percentage rent, or in which the specified minimum rent is minimal, courts have generally implied obligations on the tenant to use reasonable diligence in operating the retail business located on the leased premises, and not to divert business to another location in order to decrease the percentage rent. n57

Long term commercial leases frequently incorporate clauses providing for changes in the rental amount over the term of the lease. A rent adjustment provision may set forth a schedule of previously determined increases in the rent to take effect at specified intervals, n58 describe a procedure to adjust the rental amount at specified periods based on appraisals of the leased premises, n59 or describe a procedure to periodically modify the rent based on changes in a cost of living index, such as the Consumer Price Index. n60 Such provisions will be enforceable if the lease amount may be determined based on their application. A provision that rent will be adjusted "depending upon general business conditions" is too indefinite to be enforced. n61

Payments to third parties, such as payments for utilities, insurance, and taxes, are not usually considered to be part of the tenant's rental obligation, but they may be so considered if the parties so provide in their lease. n62 If the additional payments are not considered to be part of the rent, the landlord may be unable to use remedies applicable to the nonpayment of rent, such as distraint, for the tenant's failure to pay them. n63

A landlord might be tempted to include a provision in a lease providing for higher rent in the event that the tenant breaches the lease. Whether such a provision is enforceable could depend, among other things, on whether a court considers the provision to be one that calls for appropriate liquidated damages or a penalty. n64

§ 40.03(h) Rent Acceleration Clauses.

A rent acceleration clause permits the landlord to declare all future rent installments to be presently due and payable in the event of a tenant default in lease obligations. This result is at odds with the traditional common law concept that rent is payable only at the end of a lease term. However, most courts that have considered the question have upheld the validity of rent acceleration clauses, either as valid provisions for liquidated damages, or on the theory that since the parties can agree to an advance payment of rent, they can also agree that rent will be due on the occurrence of a default. n65 A smaller number of court decisions have declined to enforce rent acceleration clauses, reasoning that they provide for a penalty. n66

In jurisdictions that otherwise enforce rent acceleration clauses, it is sometimes said that a landlord cannot have both possession of the leased premises and accelerated rent. n67 The reasoning is that this would represent a duplication of remedies. n68 But possession by the landlord does not always prevent enforcement of an acceleration clause. Courts have allowed acceleration of rent when the landlord has taken possession for the account of the tenant following tenant abandonment. In that situation, the landlord's possession does not terminate the lease, and the tenant retains the right to occupy the premises. n69 The duplication of remedies problem arises when the landlord's possession involves lease termination.

The issue is also addressed in the Restatement. A comment to § 12.1 of the Restatement provides that if an acceleration clause is enforced, the landlord cannot terminate the lease for the tenant's default that generated the rent acceleration. Neither can the landlord terminate the lease for any other default of the tenant, without reimbursing the tenant for the rent the tenant has paid in advance, less any damages to which the landlord may be entitled. The comment also provides that if the landlord terminates the lease before the acceleration clause is enforced, the landlord may not recover rent for the period after the termination. If the tenant abandons the premises, the Restatement would permit the landlord to enforce the acceleration clause, so long as the landlord does not terminate the lease. In this event, the landlord would be obligated to account to the abandoning tenant for any rent received from a new tenant. n70

In some circumstances, rent may be "accelerated" even in the absence of a rent acceleration clause. Many modern courts would consider a tenant's refusal to pay rent and abandonment of the premises to constitute an anticipatory breach, and permit the landlord to recover immediate damages for breach of the lease. n71 The Bankruptcy Code also permits a form of rent acceleration by allowing the landlord to recover damages based on future rent if the tenant files bankruptcy and the lease is rejected by the bankruptcy trustee or the debtor in possession. n72 In light of the availability of these remedies, it has been suggested that the main value of an acceleration clause is as a spur to encourage solvent tenants to perform their lease obligations. n73

§ 40.03(i) Late Charges.

Leases often provide for the assessment of late charges on delinquent rental payments. The late charge itself is usually expressed either as a percentage of the rental payment or as a set dollar amount. In some instances, courts have invalidated late charges on the ground that they are unreasonable, in the nature of a penalty, or excessive, n74 but late charges have also been upheld on a finding that they represent a reasonable estimate of the loss that the landlord is likely to incur because of the tenant's failure to pay rent in a timely fashion. n75 Courts have also considered the enforceability of late charges in light of tenant contentions that particular charges violate usury limits. n76 In some states, late charges are explicitly regulated by statute. A Massachusetts statute, for example, prohibits a late charge on rents that are delinquent fewer than 30 days. n77

§ 40.03(j) Agreements to Modify Rental Obligations.

The parties to a lease sometimes agree to change the amount of the stipulated rent during the term of the lease. Assuming compliance with the statute of frauds, an agreement to modify rent might be considered to give rise to a new lease and a surrender of the old. n78 But most courts do not appear to analyze rent modification agreements in this manner; instead, they typically analyze such agreements as contract modifications, and consider whether their enforceability might be limited by the doctrine of contract consideration or by application of the statute of frauds. n79

§ 40.03(j)(1) The Requirement of Consideration.

Although statutes in some jurisdictions permit rent modification agreements to be enforced even if they are not supported by consideration, n80 in the absence of such a statute, most courts require agreements to change rental amounts to be supported by consideration. n81 This rule clearly applies to the executory portion of an agreement to modify the rental amount. To the extent that a rent modification agreement has already been executed, by the payment of the modified rental amount for a period of time, most courts either do not require consideration, n82 or they consider the transaction to involve a gift or a waiver. n83

Courts have not had great difficulty finding consideration in most of the cases involving rent modification agreements. Consideration has frequently been found in an additional agreement or promise made by one of the parties. For example, agreements to reduce the rent have been supported by tenant promises to make repairs or to occupy the leased premises when the tenant was not otherwise obligated to do so. n84 Consideration for agreements to increase the rent has been found in the landlord's promise to make improvements in the leased premises or to permit the tenant to use the leased premises for a new purpose. n85 Even in the absence of an additional covenant or promise, some courts have concluded that an agreement to reduce the rent is adequately supported by the benefit to the landlord of continued tenant occupancy. n86

§ 40.03(j)(2) Application of the Statute of Frauds.

The issue under the Statute of Frauds, of course, is whether the rent modification agreement must be in writing. Some situations involve little controversy. If the original lease is a valid oral lease, then an agreement to modify the amount of the rent for the remainder of the lease term may clearly be oral as well. n87 On the other hand, if the original lease was required to be in writing, and its remaining term exceeds the period set forth in the statute of frauds for which oral leases may be made, the rent modification agreement will also need to be in writing. n88 However, the rent modification agreement may not need to be written in every case in which the original lease term is subject to the statute of frauds. If the remaining term of the original written lease is so short that a new lease for that period would not have to be in writing, then it would seem that an agreement to modify the rent for that remaining period should not have to be written either. n89 Some courts have so held. n90 But other decisions indicate that compliance with statutory formalities in this situation is nonetheless necessary, reasoning that the rent modification agreement is simply part of a larger agreement that is subject to the statute of frauds. n91

In some instances, rent modification agreements that run afoul of the formal requirements of the statute of frauds may still be enforceable under the doctrine of part performance. This doctrine may be engaged if a party carries out substantial activities in reliance on the modification. n92

§ 40.03(k) Rent and Lease Termination.

§ 40.03(k)(1) In General.

The landlord's right to receive rent will often continue until the normal expiration of the lease. But it could be, and frequently is, ended earlier. This could happen if the parties mutually agree, prior to lease expiration, to terminate the landlord-tenant relationship and the tenant's obligation to pay rent. However, even if there is no such agreement, the lease could come to a premature end as a result of the proper exercise of rights by either the landlord or the tenant following a default by the other, or on re-entry by the landlord following tenant abandonment of the leased premises. In some instances, a party may be able to terminate the lease following the occurrence of an event, such as accidental destruction of leasehold improvements, that the applicable jurisdiction recognizes as justifying lease termination. Regardless of the basis of lease termination, once it occurs, the parties' ongoing obligations under the lease, including ongoing rental obligations, generally come to an end. n93

§ 40.03(k)(2) Survival of Monetary Obligations.

Termination of the lease does not necessarily mean that the tenant will have no obligation to make further monetary payments to the landlord. The landlord may still seek to recover unpaid rents that accrued prior to the time of lease termination. n94 In addition, the landlord may also be able to recover money from the tenant based on the existence of a lease provision specifying that the tenant's obligation to pay rent will continue after premature termination of the lease. Such a provision might provide that, following forfeiture or other premature termination of the lease based on a default by the tenant, the landlord may hold the tenant liable for subsequently accruing rents or for any deficiency in rents resulting from a reletting. n95

The prevailing rule with respect to the survival of lease obligations after forfeiture, re-entry, or dispossession by the landlord is that the parties may agree that the tenant is liable for subsequently accruing "rents." n96 However, courts tend to construe rent survival provisions against landlords. n97 And most courts limit landlord recovery under survival provisions to a deficiency in rents if the landlord relets, or to the landlord's actual damages. n98

§ 40.03(k)(2)(i) Nature of Surviving Obligation.

Although judicial opinions do not always make clear whether the liability of the tenant under a survival provision following lease termination is for damages or for rent, n99 because the tenancy has ended, the tenant's liability is best characterized as liability for damages. n100

If the landlord does seek to recover damages under a survival provision after lease termination, the landlord may not be permitted to use remedies, such as distraint, that are considered to be applicable only to the recovery of rent. n101 Moreover, the landlord may also be barred from bringing an action to recover damages pursuant to a survival provision until after the time originally set for the expiration of the lease, on the theory that the damages will not be known until that time. n102 But courts have permitted the landlord to bring periodic actions for damages if such a right is set forth in the lease agreement. n103

The position of the Restatement is that an "obligation of the tenant to pay rent does not arise for any period after the lease is terminated." n104 While the parties to a lease may agree that the tenant will continue to make payments equal to rental payments after premature lease termination, the Restatement view is that such payments will not amount to rent, and the landlord may have to take reasonable steps to mitigate the tenant's liability by reletting the premises. n105

§ 40.03(l) Rent Control.

Governmentally imposed rent controls, where applicable, sometimes limit the landlord's ability to increase residential tenant rents. Although initially employed as emergency measures to control rents during housing shortages associated with World War I and World War II, rent controls have more recently been imposed to control peacetime inflationary rent increases. n106 Rent control ordinances typically provide a method to establish base rents and to calculate permissible subsequent rental adjustments. If the lease provides for rent in an amount greater than that permitted under a rent control statute, the lease provision will be void as to the excess amount. n107 Rent control legislation has generally survived constitutional attack, but particular statutes may be defeated if they do not allow a reasonable rate of return to the landlord. n108 Rent control issues are discussed more fully in Chapter 43.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See 7 Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 264, 265 (2d ed. 1937).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 262, 263 (2d ed. 1937).

(n3)Footnote 3. See Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 262 (2d ed. 1937).

(n4)Footnote 4. J.H. Thomas, 1 Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England 344 (1986).

(n5)Footnote 5. J.H. Thomas, 1 Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England 345 (1986) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 267 (2d ed. 1937).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 267 (2d ed. 1937).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 268 (2d ed. 1937).

(n9)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Pinnell v. Woods, 121 S.W. 2d 679 (Ky. Ct. App. 1938) ; Najewitz v. City of Seattle, 152 P.2d 722 (Wash. 1944) ; Bachenheimer v. Palm Springs Management Corp., 254 P.2d 153 (Cal. Ct. App. 1953) . In Louisiana, however, a rent is, by statute, necessary to the existence of a lease. See La. Civ. Code art. 2668 (lease is a contract in which the lessor binds himself to give the lessee the use and enjoyment of the thing "in exchange for a rent that the lessee binds himself to pay"); see also La. Civ. Code art. 2675 & cmt.(d) (referring to jurisprudence, the comment states that "in the absence of rent there is no lease.")

(n10)Footnote 10. See 11 Geo. 2, c. 19 § 14 (1738).

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 35 9 100; see also Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 1.401(b); Model Residential Landlord-tenant Code § 2 301(1) 8.

(n12)Footnote 12. See, e.g., Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566 (1855) ; see also 1 American Law of Property § 3.64 (A. James Casner ed. 1952). [hereinafter American Law of Property].

(n13)Footnote 13. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. b & Reporter's Note 4 (1977).

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Najewitz v. City of Seattle, 152 P.2d 722 (Wash. 1944) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See, e.g., Carpenter v. United States, 84 U.S. 489 (Wall 1873) . In the latter instance, if the sale is not consummated, the contract purchaser has been held liable to pay the reasonable rental value for the period of occupancy. See, e.g., id.

(n16)Footnote 16. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. b (1977).

(n17)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Banta v. Carroll W. Griffith Co., 171 A. 450 (Del. Super. Ct. 1934) .

(n18)Footnote 18. See, e.g., Nicholas v. Howard, 459 A.2d 1039 (D.C. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n19)Footnote 19. See, e.g., Samuels v. Ottinger, 146 P. 638 (Cal. 1915) ; National Bank of Commerce v. Dunn, 78 P.2d 535 (Wash. 1938) .

(n20)Footnote 20. See, e.g., Springer v. DeWolf, 62 N.E. 542 (Ill. 1901) ; Consumers' Ice Co. v. Bixler, 35 A. 1086 (Md. 1896) .

(n21)Footnote 21. See, e.g., Glendale v. Barclay, 385 P.2d 230 (Ariz. 1963) .

(n22)Footnote 22. See, e.g., Samuels v. Ottinger, 146 P. 638 (Cal. 1915) .

(n23)Footnote 23. See discussion in § 40.03(a), above.

(n24)Footnote 24. See, e.g., Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Illinois Merchants' Trust Co., 160 N.E. 597 (Ill. 1928) ; First Nat'l Bank of Omaha v. Omaha Nat'l Bank, 214 N.W.2d 483 (Neb. 1974) , Noble v. Tyler, 56 N.E. 191 (Ohio 1900) .

(n25)Footnote 25. See, e.g., Wolf v. Ranck, 129 N.W. 319 (Iowa 1911) ; Herrmeyer v. Kleeman, 251 N.W.2d 445 (Wis. 1975) .

(n26)Footnote 26. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank v. Omaha Nat'l Bank, 214 N.W.2d 483 (1974) ; Bernard v. Triangle Music Co., 95 P.2d 43 (Wash. 1939) .

(n27)Footnote 27. See, e.g., Wilson v. Campbell, 425 S.W.2d 518 (Ark. 1968) ; Hall v. City of Baltimore, 250 A.2d 233 (Md. 1969) ; Bernard v. Triangle Music Co., 95 P.2d 43 (Wash. 1939) .

(n28)Footnote 28. See, e.g., Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 146 P. 1056 (Cal. Ct. App. 1915) ; Annotation, Surrender and Acceptance of Term as Affecting Right to Recover Rent or an Obligation Given for Rent, 58 A.L.R. 906 (1929) , supplementing 18 A.L.R. 957 (1922) .

(n29)Footnote 29. See, e.g., Pedro v. Potter, 242 P. 926 (Cal. 1926) ; Lochner v. Martin, 147 A.2d 749 (Md. 1959) ; Friedman v. Isenbruck, 244 P.2d 718 (Cal. Ct. App. 1952) .

(n30)Footnote 30. See, e.g., Cottrell v. Gerson, 20 N.E.2d 74 (Ill. 1939) ; Johnson v. Snyder, 221 P.2d 164 (Cal. Ct. App. 1950) .

(n31)Footnote 31. See Calechman v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 180 A. 450 (Conn. 1935) .

(n32)Footnote 32. See, e.g., Bates v. Phinney, 8 N.W. 88 (Mich. 1881) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Deringer v. Pappas, 164 So. 2d 569 (Fla. Ct. App. 1964); Conner v. Warner, 152 P. 1116 (Okla. 1915) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. e (1977).

(n34)Footnote 34. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. e (1977).

(n35)Footnote 35. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. e (1977).

(n36)Footnote 36. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Reporter's note 6 (1977).

(n37)Footnote 37. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note (1977) (Lists statutes providing for rent apportionment).

(n38)Footnote 38. See, e.g., N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 42.

(n39)Footnote 39. See, e.g., R.I. Gen. Laws § 34; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 1.401(c) (1972); Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code § 2-301(3).

(n40)Footnote 40. See, e.g., Cottrell v. Gerson, 20 N.E.2d 74 (Ill. 1939) .

(n41)Footnote 41. See, e.g., S.H.V.C., Inc. v. Roy, 450 A.2d 351 (Conn. 1982) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. c (1977).

(n42)Footnote 42. See, e.g., Butterfield v. Duquesne Mining Co., 182 P.2d 102 (Ariz. 1947) ; A.P. Dev. Corp. v. Band, 550 A.2d 1220 (N.J. 1988) .

(n43)Footnote 43. See, e.g., Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N.Y. 135 (1849) ; Farmer v. Pitts, 187 N.W. 95 (Neb. 1922) (tenant consent to change).

(n44)Footnote 44. See, e.g., Williams v. Aeroland Oil Co., 20 So. 2d 346 (Fla. 1944) ; Parks v. Dunn, 68 N.E.2d 357 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1946) ; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 1.401(c).

(n45)Footnote 45. See, e.g., Slothower v. Lally, 74 N.E.2d 654 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1947) ; see generally Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 5:38 (1980).

(n46)Footnote 46. See, e.g., Lund v. Ozanne, 84 P. 710 (N.M. 1906) .

(n47)Footnote 47. See Farmer v. Pitts, 187 N.W. 95 (Neb. 1922) ; see also, Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 5:38 (1980).

(n48)Footnote 48. According to Coke, "the rent may as well be in delivery of hens, capons, roses, spurs, bows, shafts, horses, hawks, pepper, cummin, wheat, or other profit, that lieth in render, office, attendance, and such like, as in payment of money." J.H. Thomas, 1 Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England 345 (1986).

(n49)Footnote 49. See, e.g., Kuiper v. Miller, 207 N.W. 489 (N.D. 1926) ; Mayer v. Norton, 310 N.Y.S.2d 576 (Civ. Ct. 1970) ; See also Trostel v. American Life & Casualty Ins. Co., 133 F.3d 679 (8th Cir. 1998) (court enforces lease provision requiring rent payment in gold coin).

(n50)Footnote 50. See, e.g., Silveira v. Ohm, 201 P.2d 387 (Cal. 1949) .

(n51)Footnote 51. See, e.g., Walker v. Keith, 382 S.W.2d 198 (Ky. 1964) ; Dutcher v. Culver, 24 Minn. 584 (1877); Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. a & Reporter's note 3 (1977).

(n52)Footnote 52. See, e.g., Kandra v. Higgins, 281 P.2d 243 (Wash. 1955) .

(n53)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Rice v. Ritz Assoc., 460 N.Y.S.2d 510 (N.Y. 1983) .

(n54)Footnote 54. See, e.g., Frank B. Hall & Co. v. Orient Overseas Assocs., 401 N.E.2d 189 (N.Y. 1979) .

(n55)Footnote 55. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. a (1977).

(n56)Footnote 56. See, e.g., Professional Bldg. of Eureka, Inc. v. Anita Frocks, Inc., 2 Cal. Rptr. 914 (Cal. Ct. App. 1960) ; Cissna Loan Co. v. Baron, 270 P. 1022 (Wash. 1928) ; See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.51 (3d ed. 2000). Additional information about percentage rent clauses is contained in chapter 44.

(n57)Footnote 57. See, e.g., Fox v. Fox Valley Trotting Club, 134 N.E.2d 806 (Ill. 1956) ; Food Fair Stores, Inc. v. Blumberg, 200 A.2d 166 (Md. 1964) ; Marvin Drug Co. v. Couch, 134 S.W.2d 356 (Tex. Ct. App. 1939) ; See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.51 (3d ed. 2000); Note, The Percentage Lease-- Its Functions and Drafting Problems, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 317 (1948).

(n58)Footnote 58. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. (1977).

(n59)Footnote 59. See, e.g., Chicago Auditorium Ass'n v. Corporation of Fine Arts Bldg., 91 N.E. 665 (Ill. 1910) ; McMillan v. Great Northern Ry., 278 P.2d 316 (Wis. 1954) .

(n60)Footnote 60. See, e.g., Bonfanti v. Davis, 487 So. 2d 165 (La. Ct. App. 1986) ; Satterfield v. Layton, 669 S.W.2d 287 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n61)Footnote 61. See Beal v. Dill, 252 P.2d 931 (Kan. 1953) . Additional information regarding rent provisions in commercial leases is contained in chapter 44.

(n62)Footnote 62. See, e.g., Allbaugh v. United States, 184 F.2d 109 (8th Cir. 1950) ; University Plaza Shopping Center, Inc. v. Garcia, 367 A.2d 957 (Md. 1977) ; but see H.T. Tiffany, The Law of Real Property § 879 (3d ed., B. Jones 1939) (States that the proper view is that payments to third parties do not constitute rent).

(n63)Footnote 63. See, e.g., In re Uni-Lab, Inc., 180 F. Supp. 176 (D.C. Pa. 1959); Elmira Corp. v. Bulman, 135 A.2d 645 (D.C. App. 1957) ; Donald M. Zupanec, Annotation, Landlord's Remedy by Way of Distress or Lien on Defaulting Tenant's Property on Leased Premises as Including Right to Collect for all Unpaid Utility Expenses, 99 A.L.R.3d 1100 (1980) .

(n64)Footnote 64. See Harbor Island Holdings, L.L.C. v. Kim, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 406 (Ct. App. 2003) (Landlord reluctantly agreed to commercial lease extension, with greatly increased rental payments, including double rent in the event of tenant breach. When landlord sought double rent after lease expiration, court concluded that, under the circumstances of the case, the double rent provision was unenforceable as a penalty).

(n65)Footnote 65. See, e.g., Aurora Bus. Park Assocs., L.P. v. Michael Albert, Inc., 548 N.W.2d 153 (Iowa 1996) ; Platt v. Johnson, 31 A. 935 (Pa. 1895) ; John F. Taylor, Note, Landlord and Tenant: Leases: Landlord's Remedies Following Default or Repudiation by Tenant: Civil Code 3308: Rent Acceleration Clauses, 43 Cal. L. Rev. 344, 346 (1955); Annotation, Validity and Effect of Acceleration Clause in Lease or Bailment, 58 A.L.R. 300 (1929) .

(n66)Footnote 66. See, e.g., Ricker v. Rombough, 261 P.2d 328 (Cal. Ct. App. 1953) ; 884 West End Ave. Corp. v. Pearlman, 193 N.Y.S. 670 (Ct. App. 1922)138 N.E. 458 (N.Y. 1922); Patton v. Milwaukee Com. Bank, 268 N.W. 124 (Wis. 1936) .

(n67)Footnote 67. See, e.g., Gentry v. Recreation, Inc., 7 S.E.2d 63 (S.C. 1940) ; 1 American Law of Property, § 3.74(A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n68)Footnote 68. See, e.g., Geiger Mut. Agency, Inc. v. Wright, 233 So. 2d 444 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1970) .

(n69)Footnote 69. See, e.g., CB Institutional Fund VIII v. Gemballa U.S.A., Inc., 566 So. 2d 896 (Fla. Ct. App. 1990) ; Jimmy Hall's Morningside, Inc. v. Blackburn & Peck Enters., 235 So. 2d 344 (Fla. Ct. App. 1970) .

(n70)Footnote 70. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. k (1977). The Restatement contemplates that an acceleration clause may be unconscionable if it provides for acceleration without first requiring the landlord to demand that the tenant eliminate the default, and without permitting the tenant a reasonable time in which to comply. See id. Cf. Aurora Bus. Park Assocs., L.P. v. Michael Albert, Inc., 548 N.W.2d 153 (Iowa 1996) (tenant abandonment case; court upholds acceleration clause as valid liquidated damages provision; citing the Restatement, court states that tenant is entitled to credit for rents received by landlord for reletting property during the remainder of the leased term).

(n71)Footnote 71. See, e.g., Hawkinson v. Johnston, 122 F.2d 724 (8th Cir. 1941); contra, Wells v. Twenty First St. Realty Co., 12 F.2d 237 (6th Cir. 1926) ; See also Onal v. BP Amoco Corp., 275 F. Supp. 2d 650 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (Tenant attempted to terminate a commercial lease. Tenant found to have breached its lease obligations. However, landlord was unable to obtain damages based on future rents, because the lease did not include a rent acceleration clause). Anticipatory breach is discussed in § 40.11(a)(3), below.

(n72)Footnote 72. See discussion in § 40.13, below.

(n73)Footnote 73. See 1 American Law of Property, § 3.74 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n74)Footnote 74. See, e.g., Hankin v. Armstrong, 451 N.Y.S.2d 334 (Sup. Ct. 1981) ; 447 Associates v. Miranda, 115 N.J. 522, 559 A.2d 1362 (N.J. 1989) .

(n75)Footnote 75. See, e.g., Oami v. Delk Interchange, Ltd., 388 S.E.2d 706 (Ga. Ct. App. 1989) ; Weinberg Properties v. Kenner, 498 N.Y.S.2d 144 (App. Div. 1986) .

(n76)Footnote 76. See, e.g., Hayes v. First Nat'l Bank, 507 S.W.2d 701 (Ark. 1974) ; Fellows v. National Can Co., 257 F. 970 (6th Cir. 1919); Bonfanti v. Davis, 487 So. 2d 165 (La. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n77)Footnote 77. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186, § 15B; see also N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 233(r) (limitation on late charge in mobile home lease).

(n78)Footnote 78. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.70 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n79)Footnote 79. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.70 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n80)Footnote 80. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 566.1.

(n81)Footnote 81. See, e.g., Green v. Millman Bros., 151 N.W.2d 860 (Mich. Ct. App. 1967) (oral modifications);

R.H. Lockwood, Annotation, Necessity and Nature of Consideration Supporting Landlord's Reduction of Rent, 30 A.L.R.3d 1259 (1970) ; Annotation, Consideration for Modification of Terms of Existing Tenancy, 43 A.L.R. 1451 (1926) .

(n82)Footnote 82. See, e.g., C.S. Brackett Co. v. Lofgren, 167 N.W. 274 (Minn. 1918) ; contra, Levine v. Blumenthal, 186 A. 457 (N.J. Sup. Ct. 1936).

(n83)Footnote 83. See, e.g., Hurlbut v. Butte Kansas Co., 243 P. 324 (Kan. 1926) (waiver); McKenzie v. Harrison, 24 N.E. 458 (N.Y. 1890) (gift).

(n84)Footnote 84. See, e.g., Cohen v. Homonoff, 41 N.E.2d 193 (Mass. 1942) ; Natelsohn v. Reich, 99 N.Y.S. 327 (Misc. 1906) .

(n85)Footnote 85. See, e.g., Brill v. Carsley, 84 P. 57 (Cal. Ct. App. 1905) ; Jensen v. Anderson, 167 P. 811 (Utah 1917) (right to cultivate land); Annotation, Consideration for Modification of Terms of Existing Tenancy, 43 A.L.R. 1451 (1926) .

(n86)Footnote 86. See, e.g., William Lindeke Land Co. v. Kalman, 252 N.W. 650 (Minn. 1934) ; contra, Green v. Millman Bros., 151 N.W.2d 860 (Mich. Ct. App. 1967) .

(n87)Footnote 87. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.4, cmt. b, illus. 2 (1977).

(n88)Footnote 88. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.4 (1977).

(n89)Footnote 89. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.4, cmt. b (1977).

(n90)Footnote 90. See, e.g., Sherman Clay & Co. v. Buffum & Pendleton, Inc., 179 P. 241 (Or. 1919) .

(n91)Footnote 91. See, e.g., Bonicamp v. Starbuck, 106 P. 839 (1910) ; Vance Lumber Co. v. Tall's Travel Shops, Inc., 142 P.2d 904 (Wash. 1943) .

(n92)Footnote 92. See, e.g., Nonamaker v. Amos, 76 N.E. 949 (Ohio 1905) (additional oil exploration); See Restatement (Second) of Property § 2.4, cmt. c (1977).

(n93)Footnote 93. See, e.g., Blond v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 80 S.W.2d 675 (Mo. 1935) ; Heuss v. Olson, 264 P.2d 875 (Wash. 1953) ; Annotation, Surrender and Acceptance of Term as Affecting Right to Recover Rent or on Obligation Given for Rent, 58 A.L.R. 906 (1929) , supplementing 18 A.L.R. 957 (1922) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. g (1977).

(n94)Footnote 94. See, e.g., Geiger Mutual Agency, Inc. v. Wright, 233 So. 2d 444 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1970) ; Anderson v. Ferguson, 135 P.2d 302 (Wash. 1943) .

(n95)Footnote 95. See, e.g., Frey v. Abdo, 441 So. 2d 1383 (Miss. 1983) (termination of a lease generally terminates liabilities to accrue in the future, such as rent, except where, by express provision in lease, termination is not to affect the accrual of such liabilities; here, the lease provision was not clear enough to impose such liability); International Publications v. Matchabelli, 184 N.E. 51 (N.Y. 1933) (court construes lease to provide that even if the relationship of landlord and tenant shall have terminated the tenant will not be deemed to have been absolved of any liability under the lease); Sunset Fuel & Engineering Co. v. Compton, 775 P.2d 901 (Or. Ct. App. 1989) (tenant, by failing to pay rent timely, forfeits his estate in the real property, but remains liable for damages for breach of the agreement to rent the premises in the future); 49 Am. Jur. 2d Landlord and Tenant § 1055 (1970).

(n96)Footnote 96. See, e.g., Rucker v. Wynn, 441 S.E.2d 417 (Ga. Ct. App. 1994) ; International Publications, Inc. v. Matchabelli, 184 N.E. 51 (N.Y. 1933) ; Hermitage Co. v. Levine, 162 N.E. 97 (N.Y. 1928) ; Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision of Lease or Bond Saving Liability of Tenant or Sureties in Case of Forfeiture of Lease or Re-entry by Landlord, 99 A.L.R. 42 (1935) .

(n97)Footnote 97. See, e.g., Sacher v. Taco Grande of Iowa, Inc., 313 N.W.2d 257 (Neb. 1981) ; Michaels v. Fishel, 62 N.E. 425 (N.Y. 1902) ; Walling v. Christie & Hobby, Inc., 54 S.W.2d 186 (Tex. Ct. App. 1932) .

(n98)Footnote 98. See, e.g., Central Investment Co. v. Melick, 108 N.E. 681 (Ill. 1915) ; Guthrie v. Hagen, 203 N.W. 216 (Minn. 1925) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Reporter's Note 7 (1977).

(n99)Footnote 99. See, e.g., Selts Investment Co. v. Promoters of Federated Nations, 222 N.W. 812 (Wis. 1929) ; W.W. Allen, Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision of Lease or Bond Saving Liability of Tenant or Sureties in Case of Forfeiture of Lease or Re entry by Landlord, 99 A.L.R. 42 (1935) .

(n100)Footnote 100. See, e.g., Benderson v. Poss, 530 N.Y.S.2d 362 (App. Div. 1988) ; Hermitage Co. v. Levine, 162 N.E. 97 (N.Y. 1928) .

(n101)Footnote 101. See, e.g., Burnett v. Boukedes, 125 S.E.2d 10 (S.C. 1962) .

(n102)Footnote 102. See, e.g., Hermitage Co. v. Levine, 162 N.E. 97 (N.Y. 1928) .

(n103)Footnote 103. See, e.g., Sanders v. Kahn, 134 A.2d 107 (D.C. Ct. App. 1957) ; Lewyt Patchogue Co. v. Cantor, 440 N.Y.S.2d 693 (App. Div. 1981) ; see also Hermitage Co. v. Levine, 162 N.E. 97 (N.Y. 1928) .

(n104)Footnote 104. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. g (1977).

(n105)Footnote 105. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1 cmt. g (1977).

(n106)Footnote 106. See § 43.04(a), below.

(n107)Footnote 107. See, e.g., Properties of Cent. Park S., Inc., v. Romoff, 200 N.Y.S.2d 459 (Sup. Ct. App. Term. 1960) .

(n108)Footnote 108. See, e.g., Helmsley v. Borough of Fort Lee, 394 A.2d 65 (N.J. 1978), clarified on other grounds, 411 A.2d 203 (N.J. 1980).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.04

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.04 Landlord Liens.

§ 40.04(a) Distraint.

§ 40.04(a)(1) At Common Law.

The ancient common law right of distraint, or distress, as it is often called, permitted a landlord to enter the leased premises, to seize personal property located there, and to retain the personal property until overdue rent was paid. n109 Exercising the right of distraint, the landlord could generally reach all personal property located on the leased premises, not just that belonging to the tenant. n110 However, the right did not apply to chattels that had been bailed to the tenant in the course of the tenant's trade or business; nor did it reach the tenant's own tools of trade if sufficient other property were available from which the rental obligation could be satisfied. n111

While the common law right of distraint did provide a remedy for the collection of rent, the landlord did not obtain an interest in the tenant's personal property until it was seized for failure to pay rent. n112 Nor could the landlord sell the personal property in satisfaction of the tenant's rent obligation; the landlord could only hold the property until the tenant paid the rent. n113 However, in the latter part of the 17th century, the landlord's hand was strengthened by legislation that gave the landlord the right to sell distrained property and to apply the proceeds of sale to the tenant's rent obligation. n114 In 1709, further legislation permitted the landlord to recover chattels that were removed from the leased premises for purposes of avoiding distraint, and required judgment creditors of the tenant to pay up to one year's past due rent to the landlord before they could sell the tenant's personal property under an execution. n115

§ 40.04(a)(2) Current Status of Distraint.

The distraint remedy is generally not available in its traditional common law form in the United States today. Courts in this country have not looked with favor on this form of self help because of the opportunity it affords for injustice and oppression, and because it discriminates in favor of a particular class of creditors. n116 Accordingly, courts in several states held that distraint was not part of the common law in their jurisdictions. n117 In a number of other states, distraint has been expressly abolished by statute. n118 Both the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act and the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code eliminate distraint as a remedy for residential tenancies. n119

Where distraint has not been abolished, it has frequently been modified by statute. n120 A number of statutes have removed the self help nature of the remedy, and have provided for a government official to control landlord access to personal property on the leased premises. n121 Under such a statute, the landlord may be required to file a claim for unpaid rent with a court or magistrate before a distress warrant may be issued and before property on the leased premises may be made subject to levy by a court officer. n122 The landlord may also be required to post a bond. n123 Concerns about potential constitutional deficiencies, discussed below, have prompted some states to adopt legislation providing tenants with notice and hearing opportunities. n124 Other statutory modifications have excepted certain property from distraint, such as the property of strangers, property held under bailment, property subject to chattel mortgage, or specific property of the tenant. n125

§ 40.04(a)(3) Consequences of Unlawful Resort to Distraint.

At common law, the landlord who unlawfully resorted to the distraint remedy, as in the case when no rent was owed, was subject to potential actions in trespass, trespass on the case, trover, or replevin. n126 Under an early statute, the landlord could also be liable in damages for seizing an excessive amount of personal property. n127 Of course, the remedies of trespass and replevin remain available to modern tenants in the case of unlawful distraint. n128 Wrongful exercise of the remedy may expose the landlord to a claim of damages, n129 perhaps including punitive damages. n130 In some instances, landlord liability is provided for by statute. n131

§ 40.04(b) Statutory Liens in Favor of Landlords.

Many jurisdictions have enacted legislation providing landlords with lien rights in tenant personal property. n132 Although statutory lien provisions are quite varied, there are some broad distinctions between the traditional common law remedy of distraint and the typical statutory lien.

§ 40.04(b)(1) Time of Attachment.

One of the principal differences concerns when the landlord acquires an interest in the personal property. In the case of common law distraint, the landlord's interest in the personal property arose at the time the property was seized for nonpayment of rent. In contrast, the statutory lien rights of the landlord generally attach at the commencement of the tenancy or at the time the particular personal property is brought onto the premises. n133

The early attachment of statutory lien rights may be advantageous to the landlord in disputes with other creditors of the tenant. A number of statutes make express provision for the priority of landlord liens. Many statutes state, in general terms, that landlord liens are preferred over other encumbrances. n134 Some statutes are more specific, and provide that the landlord's lien is prior to claims other than taxes or previously existing security interests in the subject property. n135 Even when the statutes have not expressly provided for priority, when the landlord's lien arises at the commencement of the tenancy, courts have concluded that the lien is prior to other encumbrances on the tenant's personal property that were created after the commencement of the lease. n136 However, this does not mean that the lien will survive an attack by the tenant's trustee in bankruptcy. n137

It should be noted that statutory liens in favor of landlords are not subject to the provisions of Article Nine of the Uniform Commercial Code. n138 Accordingly, landlords are generally not required to record or file notice of their statutory liens in order to preserve lien priority. n139

§ 40.04(b)(2) Property Reached.

Another difference between distraint and the typical statutory lien relates to the property that may be reached by the landlord. With some exceptions, the traditional distraint remedy at common law could be asserted against all property located on the leased premises, whether or not the property belonged to the tenant. Statutory liens, in contrast, generally do not give landlords rights in the property of third persons. n140 In addition, lien statutes often exempt tenant personal effects n141 or limit the amount of rent that the lien may secure. n142 In a point in common with common law distraint, landlord lien statutes often exempt property that is used in the tenant's trade or business. n143

§ 40.04(b)(3) Distinctions Between Distraint and Statutory Liens.

Unlike the traditional common law right of distraint, which was a self help remedy for the landlord, most statutory liens are enforceable only through the judicial process. n144 Particular statutes may characterize the process as one in attachment, n145 or as an action for rent, n146 but resort to the courts is in any case generally required.

Statutory liens vary as to the types of tenancies to which they apply. Some statutory liens apply only to residential leases. n147 Others apply only to non residential tenancies. n148 Still other statutory liens apply only to agricultural leases. n149 Both the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act and the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code prohibit the application of landlord liens to residential tenancies. n150

§ 40.04(b)(4) Constitutional Issues.

A number of statutory distraint and landlord lien procedures have been invalidated for constitutional deficiencies. Court decisions invalidating such procedures have generally relied on the standards for due process of law articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Sniadach v. Family Finance Corp. n151 Fuentes v. Shevin, n152 and other cases involving prejudgment creditors' remedies. n153 In those cases, prejudgment remedial procedures that did not provide the debtor with adequate notice or adequate opportunity for hearing were found by the Supreme Court to violate Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12-1171--1183 requirements for due process of law.

Courts have invalidated a number of distraint and statutory lien procedures based on the due process standards articulated in the Supreme Court cases. n154 For example, courts have invalidated procedures that: 1) permitted the sale of tenant personal property without a hearing; n155 2) allowed seizure of a third party's personal property without notice or hearing; n156 and 3) permitted a writ of attachment to be issued by a court clerk instead of by a judge, did not require prompt notice or hearing to the tenant in connection with the property seizure, and did not require the tenant to be informed of possible exemptions from attachment. n157

State action has been an issue in some of the cases. Because most distraint and statutory lien procedures provide for some involvement by judicial or other public officials, this should be sufficient to satisfy the state action element of a Fourteenth Amendment analysis. But if the procedures in question are of a self help variety, sufficient state action may not be present. Indeed, several courts have concluded that where no state officer is involved, the procedures are not subject to a due process attack. n158 A few courts have disagreed, reasoning that state action is present in self help cases on the ground that the landlord's actions were authorized by statute and involved delegation of a sovereign function. n159 In an analogous setting, the United States Supreme Court has held that enforcement of a warehouseman's lien by private sale pursuant to the provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code did not amount to state action, where public officials were not involved in the procedure and where the state did not compel its use. n160

§ 40.04(c) Liens Created by Lease Provision.

A landlord's lien in tenant personal property may also be created by a provision in the lease. n161 When not prohibited by statute, a consensual lien in favor of the landlord may exist independently of distraint or statutory lien rights. n162 However, statutes in a number of jurisdictions prohibit or limit the enforcement of contractual liens in the residential landlord-tenant context. n163

§ 40.04(c)(1) Applicability of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code.

Several courts have considered the applicability of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code to consensual liens in favor of landlords. Section 9-109(d)(1) of the U.C.C., like its predecessor, Section 9-104(b), expressly excludes landlord liens from the scope of Article 9. However, the Article 9 exclusion has been regarded as referring to non consensual landlord liens. n164 Courts usually consider consensual landlord liens to be chattel mortgages, n165 to which Va. Code Ann. § 55-248.35 expressly applies. n166

Accordingly, Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1375 should generally govern the perfection, priority, and enforcement of a landlord's consensual lien on tenant personal property. n167 Among other things, this means that the landlord should file a financing statement to perfect a security interest created by the lien-creating provision in the lease. n168 However, several courts have required the landlord to resort to judicial enforcement of consensual liens, even though self help remedies are permitted under Article 9. n169

§ 40.04(c)(2) Scope of the Lien.

The terms of the lease will determine the property that is covered by the lien and the lease covenants that it secures. n170 Some courts have held that a consensual landlord's lien may reach tenant property that would otherwise be exempt from a statutory lien. n171 However, other courts have concluded that an agreement giving the landlord a lien on exempt property represents an invalid waiver of the tenant's exemption rights. n172 It has also been held that a consensual lien will reach after acquired property if the lease so provides. n173 With some limitations, the Uniform Commercial Code permits security agreements to reach after acquired property. n174

A consensual lien agreement is usually considered to constitute a personal covenant between the landlord and tenant, not binding on the property of third parties, including sublessees and assignees. n175

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 109. See, e.g., Henderson v. Mayer, 225 U.S. 631 (1912) ; Jones v. Ford, 254 F. 645 (8th Cir. 1918) ;.

(n2)Footnote 110. See Jones v. Ford, 254 F. 645(8th Cir. 1918) ; Annotation, Landlord's Lien or Right of Distress on Property Sold to Tenant on Conditional Sale, 45 A.L.R. 949 (1926) ; Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106 (1929) .

(n3)Footnote 111. See 1 American Law of Property § 9.47 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106 (1929) .

(n4)Footnote 112. See, e.g., Henderson v. Mayer, 225 U.S. 631 (1912) .

(n5)Footnote 113. See Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106 (1929) .

(n6)Footnote 114. See Act Enabling the Sale of Goods Distrained, 2 W. & M., c. 5 § 2 (1689).

(n7)Footnote 115. See Act for the Better Security of Rents, 8 Anne, c. 14 § 1 (1709).

(n8)Footnote 116. See 1 American Law of Property § 9.47 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n9)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Heer v. Johnson, 18 P. 342 (Colo. 1888) ; In re Wait, 24 Mass. 100 (1828) ; Howland v. Forlaw, 13 S.E. 173 (N.C. 1891) .

(n10)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.101; Or. Rev. Stat. § 91.835.

(n11)Footnote 119. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.205; Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code § 3 403(2).

(n12)Footnote 120. See generally Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:21 (1980).

(n13)Footnote 121. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note 5 (1977).

(n14)Footnote 122. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.11-12.

(n15)Footnote 123. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.11-12.

(n16)Footnote 124. See, e.g., Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. §§ 8-304, 8-305, 8-314.

(n17)Footnote 125. See Annotation, Landlord's Lien or Right of Distress on Property Sold to Tenant on Conditional Sale, 45 A.L.R. 949 (1926) ; Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106 (1929) ; 1 American Law of Property § 9.47 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); but cf. Tolemac, Inc. v. United Trading, Inc., 484 S.E.2d 593 (S.C. 1997) (South Carolina distraint statute reaches property belonging to third parties; however, notice and an opportunity for hearing must be afforded before the third party property is subject to sale).

(n18)Footnote 126. See 2 Herbert Thorndike Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant § 346, at 2073, 2076 & 2079 (1912).

(n19)Footnote 127. See, 2 Herbert Thorndike Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant § 346, at 2081 (1912).

(n20)Footnote 128. See, e.g., Brown v. Stackhouse, 26 A. 669 (Pa. 1893) ; Crocker v. Mann, 3 Mo. 472 (1834) .

(n21)Footnote 129. See, e.g., Newman & Prichard v. Robson, 104 S.E. 127 (W. Va. 1920) .

(n22)Footnote 130. See Luria Bros. & Co., Inc. v. Allen, 672 F.2d 347 (3d Cir. 1982) .

(n23)Footnote 131. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68 § 250.313; Va. Code Ann. § 55 236.

(n24)Footnote 132. See statutes listed below § 43.06(d) note 881; see also Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note 5 (1977); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:22 (1980).

(n25)Footnote 133. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1861a; Bates & Springer of Arizona, Inc. v. Friermood, 507 P.2d 668 (Ariz. 1973) (beginning of tenancy); Herringer v. Mercantile Bank of Jonesboro, 866 S.W.2d 390 (Ark. 1993) (when personal property is placed on the leased premises); Hall v. Yarbrough's Pharmacy, Inc., 493 So. 2d 814 (La. Ct. App. 1986) (when chattels brought onto leased premises); but see Jordan v. Wilhelm, 770 P.2d 74 (Or. Ct. App. 1989) (lien does not attach until 20th day after rents or advances become due or when tenant attempts to remove property from leased premises while rent is due).

(n26)Footnote 134. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:18-61.1.

(n27)Footnote 135. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692-1692o.

(n28)Footnote 136. See, e.g., Spilman v. Geiger, 58 F.2d 890 (D.C. Cir. 1932) ; Lovett v. Lee, 193 So. 538 (Fla. 1940) ; Cf. Herringer v. Mercantile Bank of Jonesboro, 866 S.W.2d 390 (Ark. 1993) (bank's purchase money security interest attached at the same time as landlord's lien; bank prevails against landlord).

(n29)Footnote 137. See discussion of bankruptcy issues in § 40.13.

(n30)Footnote 138. See U.C.C. § 9-109(d)(1) (article nine "does not apply to ... a landlord's lien, other than an agricultural lien.").

(n31)Footnote 139. See, e.g., Rivenbark v. Moore, 291 S.E.2d 293 (N.C. Ct. App. 1982) ; but see Montgomery County Farm Bureau Cooperative Ass'n v. Deseret Title Holding Corp., 513 N.E.2d 193 (Ind. Ct. App. 1987) (statute requires landlord desiring to hold a lien on crops to file notice of intention to do so in county recorder's office); Bank of North America v. Kruger, 551 S.W.2d 63 (Tex. Ct. App. 1977) (Texas statute requires the filing of an affidavit with the country clerk if the landlord wishes to preserve priority of the lien with respect to rents more than six months past due); cf. In re Esparza, 821 P.2d 1216 (Wash. 1992) (en banc) (filing of landlord's lien is necessary to establish its priority against valid security interests or crop liens filed prior to the time of landlord's lien).

(n32)Footnote 140. See, e.g., Chapman Bros. Stationery & Office Equip. Co. v. Miles Hiatt Invs., Inc., 580 P.2d 540 (Or. 1978) ; See Janet Fairchild, Annotation, Application of Statutory Landlord's Lien to Property of Third Person Used by Tenant on Rented Premises, 95 A.L.R.3d 1205 (1979) ; but see, State ex rel. Childers v. 2525 East Arizona Biltmore Circle Corp., 731 P.2d 1239 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1986) (imposition of landlord's lien upon property of assignee or sublessee of tenant); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 60.72.010 (reaches all property on premises, with some exceptions).

(n33)Footnote 141. See, e.g., Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41 § 41.

(n34)Footnote 142. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 60.72.010 (lien for two months rent).

(n35)Footnote 143. See, e.g., Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41 § 133.

(n36)Footnote 144. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:22 (1980); but see La. Civ. Code arts. 2709 & 3218.

(n37)Footnote 145. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 60.72.040.

(n38)Footnote 146. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1861a.

(n39)Footnote 147. See, e.g., N.M. Stat. Ann. § 48-3-5.

(n40)Footnote 148. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 60.72.010.

(n41)Footnote 149. See, e.g., Kan. Stat Ann. § 58 2524 et seq.

(n42)Footnote 150. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.205(a); Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code § 3.403 (1).

(n43)Footnote 151. 395 U.S. 337 (1969) .

(n44)Footnote 152. 407 U.S. 67 (1972) .

(n45)Footnote 153. See Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600 (1974) ; North Georgia Finishing, Inc. v. Di Chem, Inc., 419 U.S. 601 (1975) .

(n46)Footnote 154. See cases collected in Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Reporter's Note 12 (1977) and Gary D. Spivey, Annotation, Modern Views as to Validity, Under Federal Constitution, of State Prejudgment Attachment, Garnishment, and Replevin Procedures, Distraint Procedures Under Landlords' or Innkeepers' Lien Statutes, and Like Procedures Authorizing Summary Seizure of Property, 18 A.L.R. Fed. 223 (1974).

(n47)Footnote 155. See Ragin v. Schwartz, 393 F. Supp. 152 (W.D. Pa. 1975) .

(n48)Footnote 156. See Pettigrew v. Womble, 589 F. Supp. 242 (D.S.C. 1984) .

(n49)Footnote 157. See McCrory v. Johnson, 755 S.W.2d 566 (Ark. 1988) .

(n50)Footnote 158. See, e.g., Luria Bros. & Co. v. Allen, 672 F.2d 347 (3d Cir. 1982) ; S.M.I. Indus., Inc. v. Lanard & Axilbund, Inc., 481 F. Supp. 459 (E.D. Pa. 1979) ; U.S.A. Lehndorff Vermoegensverwaltung GmbH and Cie v. Cousins Club, 348 N.E.2d 831 (Ill. 1976) .

(n51)Footnote 159. See, e.g., Hall v. Garson, 430 F.2d 430 (5th Cir. 1970) ; Adams v. Department of Motor Vehicles, 520 P.2d 961 (Cal. 1974) ; Culbertson v. Leland, 528 F.2d 426 (9th Cir. 1975) .

(n52)Footnote 160. See Flagg Brothers, Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149 (1978) .

(n53)Footnote 161. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) ; Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) .

(n54)Footnote 162. See, e.g., Ginsberg v. Lindel, 107 F.2d 721 (8th Cir. 1939) ; Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) .

(n55)Footnote 163. See, e.g., S.D. Codified Laws § 21; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1372; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.205(a).

(n56)Footnote 164. See, e.g., In re Leckie Freeburn Coal Co., 405 F.2d 1043 (6th Cir. 1969) ; Shurlow v. Bonthuis, 553 N.W.2d 366 (Mich. App. 1996), app. granted, 568 N.W.2d 88 (Mich. 1997), aff'd in part & rev'd in part, 576 N.W.2d 159 (Mich. 1998); 8 William D. Hawkland et al., Uniform Commercial Code Series § 9 104:03, note 1 (1990).

(n57)Footnote 165. See, e.g., Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) ; Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Congressional Motors, Inc., 228 A.2d 463 (Md. 1967) ; Shurlow v. Bonthuis, 553 N.W.2d 366 (Mich. App. 1996) , appeal granted, 568 N.W.2d 88 (Mich. 1997) , aff'd in part & rev'd in part, 576 N.W.2d 159 (Mich. 1998) ; Lone Oak Farm Corp. v. Riverside Fertilizer Co., 428 N.W.2d 175 (Neb. 1988) ; but see Marquam v. Sengfelder, 32 P. 676 (Or. 1893) (equitable lien instead).

(n58)Footnote 166. See U.C.C. § 9-102(2).

(n59)Footnote 167. But see Kuemmerle v. United New Mexico Bank, 831 P.2d 976 (N.M. 1992) (common law governs priority).

(n60)Footnote 168. See U.C.C. § 9 310 (formerly §9-302); Dallas v. S.A.G., Inc., 836 F.2d 1307 (11th Cir. 1988) ; In re Leckie Freeburn Coal Co., 405 F.2d 1043 (6th Cir. 1969) , cert. denied, sub nom., Foster v. Hamblin, 395 U.S. 960 (1969) ; United States v. Globe Corp., 546 P.2d 11 (Ariz. 1976) . Failure to file a financing statement may have consequences beyond the mere loss of lien priority. In Shurlow v. Bonthuis, 553 N.W.2d 366 (Mich. App. 1996) , app. granted, 568 N.W.2d 88 (Mich. 1997) , aff'd in part & rev'd in part, 576 N.W.2d 159 (Mich. 1998) , the Michigan Court of Appeals concluded that the landlord's failure to file a financing statement also resulted in the discharge of a guarantor of the lease. The court affirmed the conclusion of the trial court that the failure to file amounted to an impairment of collateral, which gave the guarantor a defense of discharge.

(n61)Footnote 169. See U.C.C. § 9-609 (formerly § 9-503); See, e.g., McCrory v. Johnson, 755 S.W.2d 566 (Ark. 1988) ; Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) ; Bass v. Boetel & Co., 217 N.W.2d 804 (Neb. 1974) ; but see Colonial Self Storage, Inc. v. Concord Properties, 249 S.E.2d 310 (Ga. Ct. App. 1978) .

(n62)Footnote 170. See, e.g., Strickland Bros. v. Stiles, 33 S.E. 85 (Ga. 1899) ; Citizens Bank v. Elks Bldg., N.V., 663 P.2d 56 (Utah 1983) .

(n63)Footnote 171. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) ; Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) .

(n64)Footnote 172. See, e.g., Curtiss v. Ellenwood, 59 Ill. App. 110 (1894) ; See K.H. Larsen, Annotation, Validity of Contractual Stipulation or Provision Waiving Debtor's Exemption, 94 A.L.R.2d 967 (1964) .

(n65)Footnote 173. See, e.g., Powell v. Daily, 45 N.E. 414 (Ill. 1896) ; Borden v. Croak, 22 N.E. 793 (Ill. 1889) .

(n66)Footnote 174. See U.C.C. § 9 204 & cmt. 2.

(n67)Footnote 175. See, e.g., Hill v. Morris, 186 S.W. 609 (Ark. 1916) ; Buhl Land Co. v. Franklin Co., 242 N.W. 772 (Mich. 1932) (assignee); Leckie v. Dunbar, 59 P.2d 275 (Okla. 1936) (sublessee); but see Foster v. Reid, 42 N.W. 649 (Iowa 1889) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.05

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.05 Rights Regarding Tenant Deposits.

Landlords frequently require an advance deposit of tenant monies at the beginning of the lease term. Several types of deposits are possible. Most often, a deposit will be made to secure the performance of tenant covenants and lease obligations. A common form of deposit, usually referred to simply as a "security deposit," is one that the landlord may draw upon and apply against losses or damages resulting from breach of lease obligations by the tenant. The landlord's recourse against the security deposit may be accomplished quickly, without application to a court of law, pursuant to the provisions of the lease. The usual expectation is that the landlord will refund the unused portion of the security deposit to the tenant at the end of the lease term. A variation on the ordinary security deposit is a deposit that is, by its terms, wholly forfeited to the landlord in the event of tenant default. In effect, this sort of deposit is one for liquidated damages, and it may be so characterized in the lease. Another type of security arrangement, frequently required of residential tenants, is an advance payment of rent. The landlord may require, for example, that the tenant deposit a sum with the landlord, at the outset of the lease, to pay the last month's rent under the lease. Still another type of tenant deposit is one that is not characterized for security purposes at all, but is instead characterized as additional consideration for signing the lease. Each type of deposit will be considered below.

§ 40.05(a) Security Deposits.

§ 40.05(a)(1) Ordinary Security Deposit.

A common tenant deposit arrangement is one in which the tenant deposits money with the understanding that, upon a tenant default, the landlord may draw against the deposit to cover losses or damages, and with the further understanding that amounts not withdrawn will be refunded to the tenant at the end of the lease term. Indeed, if the tenant fully performs under the lease, the understanding would be that tenant would be entitled to the return of all deposited funds at end of the lease term. On the other hand, if, upon tenant default, the landlord's losses or damages exceed the amount on deposit, the landlord would be entitled to apply the deposit to the losses or damages and to pursue the tenant for the balance. n176

The provisions of the lease normally identify the purpose of the security deposit. It may have a specialized purpose, such as to cover the costs of cleaning the premises if the tenant does not do so as required under the lease, or it may more generally secure the performance of rental and other tenant obligations under the lease. The purpose is important in determining whether the landlord has a right to draw against the security deposit. If, for example, the lease provides that the deposit may be applied to defaults in the payment of rent, and does not provide that the deposit may be applied to other defaults, the landlord may not draw against the security deposit for defaults other than in the payment of rent. n177 Because of the conditional nature of the landlord's rights in a security deposit, it has been held that the deposit does not represent taxable income to the landlord until the landlord applies the deposit to a tenant default. n178

The existence of a security deposit generally imposes no obligation on the landlord to apply amounts on deposit against tenant defaults. The landlord may choose to preserve the deposit for application to some future default. n179 It has been held that, in the absence of a lease provision to the contrary, the tenant does not have a right to require the application of the security deposit to defaults in the payment of rent in order to avoid termination of the lease. n180

§ 40.05(a)(2) Security Deposit as Fund for Liquidated Damages.

The lease may also provide that the landlord is entitled to retain the entire amount of the tenant's security deposit if the tenant breaches obligations under the lease. Such a forfeitable deposit is essentially a fund to pay liquidated damages, and may be so characterized in the lease. n181 Under this view of the deposit, if the tenant fully performs the tenant's lease obligations, the landlord would be required to return the full amount of the deposit to the tenant. n182 However, if the forfeiture provision is valid, the landlord would be able to retain the entire amount of the deposit on tenant breach of a lease covenant secured by the deposit. n183 But the landlord would not be entitled to recover additional damages from the tenant beyond the amount of the liquidated damages represented by the deposit. n184

Courts have not viewed agreements providing for the forfeiture of security deposits with great enthusiasm. Such provisions have sometimes been justified as reasonable advance resolutions of questions about damages. n185 But courts have often declined to enforce the provisions on the ground that they provide for a penalty. n186 In particular, deposit forfeiture provisions have been held to be unenforceable when the actual damages resulting from the tenant's breach can be readily ascertained, when the amount of the liquidated damages is unreasonably large, or when the nature of the breach is not, in the view of the court, significant enough to justify forfeiture. n187 In this connection, some courts have observed that the damages resulting from a failure to pay rent can be readily ascertained. n188 If a forfeiture provision is invalidated, the deposit becomes a conventional security deposit, and, upon tenant default, the landlord will be able to draw against the deposit only to the extent of the landlord's actual loss or damages. n189

§ 40.05(a)(3) Relationship Between Parties with Respect to Security Deposit Funds.

Disputes regarding security deposits frequently focus on whether the landlord has a right to use or commingle the deposited funds during the tenancy, whether the tenant has a right to interest on deposited funds, or whether the tenant has any preferred claim to the deposited funds in the event of landlord insolvency. In some instances, the resolution of the dispute may be governed by statute or by the language of the lease itself. In other instances, the dispute may be resolved based on the characterization of the relationship between landlord and tenant with respect to the deposit. Courts usually characterize the relationship as involving a debt, a pledge, or a trust. n190

§ 40.05(a)(3)(i) Debt.

The most common characterization of the relationship between landlord and tenant with respect to a security deposit is that of debtor and creditor. n191 The thought here is that, by making the deposit, the tenant has made a loan to the landlord, which the landlord is to repay upon completion of the tenant's obligations under the lease. n192 If the security deposit is regarded as a loan from the tenant to the landlord, the landlord is free to commingle the deposited funds with other monies of the landlord, or to use the deposited funds as the landlord sees fit, subject to the obligation to repay the loan at the end of the lease term. n193 The deposit is also subject to the claims of creditors of the landlord. n194 In the event of landlord insolvency, the tenant's claim for a return of the deposit would be that of an unsecured creditor. n195

A lease provision that requires payment of interest on the security deposit indicates that a debtor creditor relationship was intended. n196 However, it is not necessary for the landlord to have an obligation to pay interest on the deposit in order for the deposit to be regarded as creating a debt. n197 Indeed, in the absence of an applicable statute or lease provision to the contrary, the landlord is generally regarded as having no duty to pay interest on the deposit. n198 The Restatement takes a contrary position, stating in a comment that, unless there is an agreement otherwise, the landlord "should pay the tenant the going rate of interest." n199 However, a Reporter's Note acknowledges that the interest requirement "can be supported only on the basis that various statutes dealing with security deposits so provide." n200

§ 40.05(a)(3)(ii) Pledge.

An alternative characterization of a security deposit, made by some courts, is that the deposit is a pledge made by the tenant to the landlord. n201 There is little case authority regarding the practical implications of pledge status on the parties' rights. n202 The landlord is apparently not required to segregate the deposited funds, n203 or to invest them for the benefit of the tenant; however, it has been said that if income is earned on the funds, the income belongs to the tenant. n204 Although the tenant cannot expect that the identical money deposited with the landlord will be returned, the theory of the pledge is that the tenant retains title to, n205 or some corresponding interest in, the subject matter of the pledge. n206 If a pledge relationship is found, the pledged property should not be considered part of the landlord's estate in the event of landlord insolvency. n207

§ 40.05(a)(3)(iii) Trust.

A tenant's security deposit has sometimes been said to involve a trust relationship between landlord and tenant, with the landlord serving as trustee for the deposited funds. n208 If a trust relationship were to be created between landlord and tenant, the tenant would have a beneficial interest in the deposit, and the deposit should not be considered part of the landlord's estate upon landlord insolvency. n209 As a trustee, the landlord would seem to have certain obligations with respect to the security deposit, such as the obligation to account to the tenant for trust assets, including amounts earned by the trust, at the end of the trust. n210 However, the conflict of interest inherent in the landlord's serving as a trustee for deposited funds in which the landlord also claims an interest probably prevents a security deposit from being a true trust. n211

Most of the trust cases have been decided in New York, where, for many years, a trust characterization has been required by statute. n212 However, in the absence of specific legislative direction, the New York courts have tended not to impose significant fiduciary responsibilities on the landlord. n213 The current New York legislation provides, among other things, that: 1) tenant security deposits, as well as prepaid rents, held by the landlord shall be held in trust; 2) the landlord cannot commingle tenant deposits with the landlord's personal funds; 3) the landlord is to account to the tenant for interest earned on funds deposited by the tenant; and 4) if the rental property contains six or more rental units, the landlord is to place the deposits in interest bearing accounts. n214

§ 40.05(a)(4) Obligation to Return Security Deposit to Tenant.

The landlord's obligation to return a security deposit normally arises when the lease term expires. But the obligation may also arise if the lease is prematurely terminated, such as when termination results from the parties' agreement, the exercise of rights after accidental destruction of the leased premises, n215 or the exercise of rights upon default. n216 However, if the lease is terminated following a default by the tenant, and if the security deposit is subject to an enforceable liquidated damages provision that is triggered by the default, the landlord will be able to retain the deposited funds notwithstanding the termination of the lease. n217

In some instances, the landlord may be able to retain the security deposit for a period of time after expiration or termination of the lease. The lease may provide, for example, that tenant liability for "rent" will continue if the lease is prematurely terminated on account of tenant default. In this situation, the landlord may be permitted to retain the deposit until the liability of the tenant has been determined. n218 In addition, it has been held that when the deposit was intended to provide security against tenant waste, the deposit may be retained by the landlord for a reasonable time after lease termination to permit the landlord to determine whether waste has occurred. n219

Before returning deposited funds to the tenant, the landlord may deduct amounts equal to the losses or damages for which the tenant is responsible. n220 Of course, the landlord's deductions may be only for losses or damages resulting from breach of lease obligations that are secured by the deposit. n221 But the landlord need not wait until there is an obligation to return the security deposit before the landlord deducts amounts for damages or losses covered by the deposit; recourse may be had against the deposit when the damages or losses occur. n222

§ 40.05(a)(5) Security Deposits and Transfer of Landlord's Interest.

If the landlord conveys the reversionary interest in the leased premises to another party during the term of the lease, the landlord might or might not also transfer the tenant's security deposit to that party. In either case, the potential liability of the transferee for the return of the security deposit may become an issue if the deposit is not returned to the tenant when the tenant is entitled to receive it. In the absence of a statutory resolution, n223 or an enforceable agreement by the transferee to be bound by the obligation to return the deposit, the liability of the transferee is usually considered to depend on whether the obligation to return the tenant's security deposit is a personal covenant of the landlord, or whether it is a covenant whose burden runs with the land. The cases are in conflict on the issue.

A few cases articulate the view that a security deposit secures obligations, such as rent, that run with the land, and that a covenant to return the deposit to the tenant should also run and bind a transferee. n224 A larger number of cases state the contrary view that the obligation to return the tenant's deposit is only a personal covenant of the landlord, not binding on the transferee unless the transferee agrees to be bound. n225 Indeed, a Washington court held that a covenant to return the deposit was personal even when language in the lease stated that the covenant was to run with the land. The court reasoned that the covenant did not sufficiently "touch and concern" the land. n226 However, it has also been held that an agreement to assume the obligation to return the deposit may be implied from the transferee's receipt of the deposited funds, or from the transferor's deduction of the amount of the deposit from the transferee's purchase price of the property. n227

One explanation for the decisions concluding that the covenant to return the deposit is a personal one may be concern by courts that transferees could be unaware of the existence of the security deposit at the time of the conveyance. n228 Whether or not the transferee is obligated to return the security deposit, in the absence an agreement or statute to the contrary, the original landlord will be bound by the covenant to do so. n229

The analysis is somewhat different if the security deposit is regarded as creating a pledge relationship between the landlord and the tenant. In that case, the obligation to return the deposit to the tenant has been said to follow the pledge. n230 Under this view, transferee liability seems to arise if the transferee receives the deposited funds or if the amount of the deposit is deducted from the purchase price of the property. n231

§ 40.05(a)(6) Statutory Regulation of Security Deposits.

The perception that landlords have engaged in substantial abuses of tenant security deposits has led more than forty states to adopt regulatory legislation. n232 Although the statutes vary widely, common areas of regulation involve the amount of the security deposit, interest on deposited funds, itemization of deductions by the landlord, and penalties for non-compliance. Some statutes also impose obligations on tenants. Most of the statutes apply only to residential leases.

Statutes frequently limit the amount of the security deposit. The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, which has been adopted in many states, provides that the landlord may not demand or receive a security deposit in an amount greater than one month's rent. n233 Other statutes contain similar limitations, but some have different limits for different types of residential tenancies. For example, a California statute limits the amount of the deposit to two months' rent for an unfurnished residential unit and to three months' rent for a furnished residential unit. n234 A North Carolina statute provides that the maximum deposit is two weeks' rent for a week to week tenancy, one and one half month's rent for a month to month tenancy, and two months' rent for other tenancies. n235

Approximately half of the states with security deposit legislation require security deposits to be placed in special accounts. n236 The primary purpose of the requirement is to ensure the availability of the deposited funds for refund to the tenant. A minority of jurisdictions also require the landlord to pay interest on security deposits. n237 Under some statutes, the landlord's obligation to make interest payments is triggered by the size of the deposit, n238 the length of the period the deposit is to be held, n239 or the number of rental units leased by the landlord. n240

Nearly all of the security deposit statutes require the deposit to be returned within a specified time, with an accounting for any amounts that have been withheld. n241 A few statutes impose an obligation upon the landlord to make a reasonable effort to locate a tenant after unsuccessfully mailing the deposit to the tenant's last known address. n242 Some statutes also restrict the types of losses that can be deducted from tenant deposits, typically limiting the deductions to unpaid rent or to damages caused by the tenant. n243

Penalties for landlord non-compliance vary. A number of statutes provide for forfeiture of landlord rights in the security deposit if the landlord does not timely provide the tenant with a listing of deductions made. n244 Most of the statutes allow the tenant to recover a monetary penalty if the landlord wrongfully withholds a security deposit. n245 Most of the statutes also prohibit the landlord from obtaining tenant waivers of statutory protections. n246

A number of jurisdictions have enacted legislation concerning the obligation of a transferee of the landlord's reversionary interest in the property to return the tenant's deposit at lease termination. Several statutes require the transferee to return the deposit to the tenant upon termination of the tenancy, whether or not the transferee actually receives the deposit from the original landlord. These statutes also provide for the continued liability of the transferor to the tenant with respect to the return of the security deposit. n247 Other statutes provide that the transferee will be liable to return the security deposit only if the transferee receives the deposit from the original landlord. n248 Some statutes permit the original landlord to avoid liability to the tenant by giving the deposit to the tenant at the time of the conveyance of the reversion, n249 or by turning the security deposit over to the transferee and by notifying the tenant of the security deposit transfer. n250

A number of security deposit statutes also impose obligations or liabilities upon tenants. Several statutes require the tenant to provide the landlord with a forwarding address on termination of the lease. If the tenant fails to do so, the landlord may be relieved of an obligation to render a written statement of damages, n251 or may be entitled, after the passage of time, to keep the monies that are on deposit. n252 Some statutes require the tenant to object to the landlord's written statement of damages within a specified period of time, or have that statement be regarded as conclusive proof of damages. n253 A Kansas statute provides that, unless the lease states otherwise, the tenant forfeits the security deposit if the tenant applies or deducts any portion of the security deposit from the last month's rent or uses or applies the security deposit at any time in lieu of the payment of payment. n254

§ 40.05(b) Other Types of Tenant Deposits.

Not all tenant deposits are security deposits, though there is a constructional preference in their favor. n255 Other alternatives are a deposit that is described as an advance payment of rent and a deposit that is described as consideration for execution of the lease. The landlord may prefer one of these other deposit characterizations in order to avoid the restrictions on security deposits that are discussed above, but that preference, without more, will not be controlling.

§ 40.05(b)(1) Advance Payment of Rent.

A tenant deposit may be considered to be an advance payment of rent, if that is the intent of the parties. The usual agreement of this type is that the deposit is a prepayment of rent for the last rental period of the lease term. Unlike a security deposit, an advance payment of rent is generally not refundable to the tenant; it is considered to be the property of the landlord when paid. Accordingly, in the absence of a lease provision or statute to the contrary, the tenant may not recover an advance payment of rent if the lease is prematurely terminated on account of tenant default. n256 Consistent with this view of the deposit, it has been held that a deposit that represents an advance payment of rent represents taxable income to the landlord when it is received. n257

The rule that the landlord retains the advance rental deposit when the lease is terminated due to tenant default has sometimes been justified on the ground that rent is non apportionable. n258 One court reached the same result by reasoning that, although the landlord is not entitled to the deposit until the beginning of the rental period for which the deposit has been made, a tenant default that results in lease termination also accelerates the time when the advance rent becomes the landlord's property. n259

If the lease is wrongfully terminated by the landlord, courts have required the landlord to return the advance payment. n260 However, the cases are in conflict regarding the refundability of the advance rental deposit when leased improvements are accidentally destroyed. n261 Courts have permitted the landlord to retain the deposit when the lease agreement provides for that result. n262

Whether a deposit arrangement constitutes an advance payment of rent generally depends on the intent of the parties as expressed in the lease. However, courts tend to construe lease provisions as providing for a security deposit instead of an advance rental payment when such a construction is possible. n263 And some statutes that regulate security deposits treat advance rental payments as security deposits. n264 Among other things, a conclusion that the deposit is a security deposit means that the deposit is refundable to the tenant upon compliance with the tenant's lease obligations. It also means that the landlord is able to retain only the amount of the landlord's actual damages or losses in the event the tenant breaches a lease obligation secured by the deposit.

§ 40.05(b)(2) Consideration for Execution of Lease.

Some tenant deposits are characterized as representing consideration to the landlord for the execution of the lease. When the deposit is of this type, so long as the lease is executed, the deposit belongs to the landlord. n265 It is not refundable to the tenant, even if the landlord subsequently defaults in the performance of lease obligations or wrongfully terminates the lease. n266 Moreover, the landlord's receipt of the payment does not prevent the landlord from seeking damages for subsequent non performance of lease obligations by the tenant. n267 These aspects of the deposit are attractive from the landlord's point of view. A negative feature, from the landlord's point of view, is that an unconditional payment in consideration of lease execution represents taxable income to the landlord when received. n268

If the parties expressly provide that a tenant payment is made in consideration of lease execution, that intention will generally be given effect. n269 But even if the deposit is said to be in consideration for lease execution, it may be regarded as a security deposit if there are features of the lease that seem to undermine the otherwise unconditional nature of the payment. For example, if the lease provides that the payment is returnable to the tenant upon the tenant's full performance of lease obligations, or if the lease requires interest to be paid by the landlord on the amount of the payment, a court may well conclude that a security deposit was intended by the parties. n270 A few courts have considered the effect of a lease provision entitling the tenant to recover the payment in the event of accidental destruction of leasehold improvements. The cases are in conflict as to whether such a provision causes the payment to be a security deposit. n271

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 176. See, e.g., James S. Black & Co. v. Charron, 587 P.2d 196 (Wash. Ct. App. 1978) ; See generally

James R. Wilson, Lease Security Deposits, 34 Colum. L. Rev. 426 (1934); Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, American Bar Association, Security Deposits and Guaranties Under Leases, 1 Real Property, Prob & Tr. J. 405 (1966).

(n2)Footnote 177. See, e.g., Michaels v. Fishel, 62 N.E. 425 (N.Y. 1902) .

(n3)Footnote 178. See Warren Service Corp. v. Commissioner, 110 F.2d 723 (2d Cir. 1940) .

(n4)Footnote 179. See, e.g., Evans v. McClure, 158 S.W. 487 (Ark. 1913) ; Barrett v. Monro, 124 P. 369 (Wash. 1912) .

(n5)Footnote 180. See 6701 Realty, Inc. v. Deauville Enter., 84 So. 2d 325 (Fla. 1955) .

(n6)Footnote 181. See, e.g., Caesar v. Rubinson, 67 N.E. 58 (N.Y. 1903) .

(n7)Footnote 182. See, e.g., Palace Theatre, Inc. v. Northwest Theatres Circuit, Inc., 243 N.W. 849 (Minn. 1932) .

(n8)Footnote 183. See, e.g., Wichita Eagle & Beacon Publishing Co. v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 493 F.2d 1285 (9th Cir. 1974) ; Burns Trading Co. v. Welborn, 81 F.2d 691 (10th Cir. 1936) .

(n9)Footnote 184. See, e.g., Mon Wai v. Parks, 262 P.2d 196 (Wash. 1953) (en banc).

(n10)Footnote 185. See, e.g., Burns Trading Co. v. Welborn, 81 F.2d 691 (10th Cir. 1936) ; Stuco Corp. v. Gates, 145 So. 2d 527 (Fla. Ct. App. 1962) ; Mon Wai v. Parks, 262 P.2d 196 (Wash. 1953) (en banc).

(n11)Footnote 186. See L.S. Tellier, Annotation, Provision in Lease for Pecuniary Forfeiture Where Lease is Prematurely Terminated as One for Liquidated Damages, 106 A.L.R. 292 (1937) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.73 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n12)Footnote 187. See, e.g., Spialter v. Testa, 392 A.2d 1265 (N.J. Sup. Ct. 1978); Central Trust Co. v. Wolf, 237 N.W. 29 (Mich. 1931) .

(n13)Footnote 188. See, e.g., Knight v. Marks, 191 P. 531 (Cal. 1920) ; Roberts v. Dehn, 416 S.W.2d 851 (Tex. Ct. App. 1967) .

(n14)Footnote 189. See, e.g., Redmon v. Graham, 295 P. 1031 (Cal. 1931) ; Cunningham v. Stockton, 106 P. 1057 (Kan. 1910) .

(n15)Footnote 190. See James R. Wilson, Lease Security Deposits, 34 Colum. L. Rev. 426, 458, 464 (1934). Security Deposits and Guaranties Under Leases, 1 Real Property, Prob & Tr. J. 405, 415 416 (1966).

(n16)Footnote 191. See, e.g., Young v. Cobbs, 83 So. 2d 417 (Fla. 1955) ; Commercial Nat'l Bank v. Cutter Realty Co., 170 S.E. 139 (N.C. 1933) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.73 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. l (1977) (absent manifestation of contrary intent, a debtor creditor relationship is established).

(n17)Footnote 192. See, e.g., Korens v. R.W. Zukin Corp., 261 Cal. Rptr. 137 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n18)Footnote 193. See, e.g., Jones v. Wayne Circuit County Judge, 235 N.W. 238 (Mich. 1931) ; Handle v. Real Estate Land Title & Trust Co., 173 A. 313 (Pa. 1934) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. l (1977).

(n19)Footnote 194. See, e.g., Handle v. Real Estate Land Title & Trust Co., 173 A. 313 (Pa. 1934) ; Malco Trading Corp. v. Mendelson Silverman, 269 N.Y.S. 95 (App. Div. 1934).

(n20)Footnote 195. See, e.g., In re Banner, 149 F. 936 (S.D.N.Y. 1907) ; Stephen A. Kalish, Residential Tenant

Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal, 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569, 598.

(n21)Footnote 196. See Mendelson Silverman, Inc. v. Malco Trading Corp., 260 N.Y.S. 881 (App. Div. 1932) (per curiam), aff'd, 262 N.Y.S. 991 (App. Div. 1933), aff'd, 188 N.E. 92 (N.Y. 1933).

(n22)Footnote 197. See, e.g., Handle v. Real Estate Land Title & Trust Co., 173 A. 313 (Pa. 1934) .

(n23)Footnote 198. See, e.g., E. & S. Investment Corp. v. Richland Bowl, Inc., 216 S.E.2d 522 (S.C. 1975) .

(n24)Footnote 199. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. l (1977).

(n25)Footnote 200. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Reporter's Note 11 (1977).

(n26)Footnote 201. See, e.g., Reed v. Bristol County Realty Co., 145 N.E. 455 (Mass. 1924) ; Kaufman v. Williams, 104 A. 202 (N.J. 1918) . Some cases have also classified the deposit as a bailment. See, e.g., National Corp. for Hous. Pt'ship v. Liberty State Bank, 836 F.2d 433 (8th Cir. 1988) .

(n27)Footnote 202. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:32, at 469 (1980).

(n28)Footnote 203. See Colantuoni v. Balene, 123 A. 541 (N.J. 1924) ; Haskel v. 60 W. Fifty Third Street Corp., 26 N.Y.S. 698 (Mun. Ct. 1929), aff'd, 246 N.Y.S. 875 (App. Div. 1930).

(n29)Footnote 204. See, e.g., Ingram v. Pantages, 260 P. 395 (Cal. Ct. App. 1927) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. l (1977).

(n30)Footnote 205. See Stephen A. Kalish, Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal, 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569, 572, 598.

(n31)Footnote 206. See James R. Wilson, Lease Security Deposits, 34 Colum. L. Rev. 426, 460 (1934).

(n32)Footnote 207. See Partington v. Miller, 5 A.2d 468 (N.J. 1939) ; Stephen A. Kalish, Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal, 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569, 572, 598; Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, American Bar Association, Security Deposits and Guaranties Under Leases, 1 Real Property, Prob & Tr. J. 405, 416 (1966).

(n33)Footnote 208. See, e.g., Peterson v. Oklahoma City Hous. Auth., 545 F.2d 1270 (10th Cir. 1976) ; Mallory Assocs. v. Barving Realty Co., 90 N.E.2d 468 (N.Y. 1949) .

(n34)Footnote 209. See Stephen A. Kalish, Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal, 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 598, 599.

(n35)Footnote 210. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. l (1977).

(n36)Footnote 211. See James R. Wilson, Lease Security Deposits, 34 Colum. L. Rev. 426, 462 (1934).; Stephen A. Kalish, Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal, 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569, 572.

(n37)Footnote 212. See Mallory Associates, Inc. v. Barving Realty Co., 90 N.E.2d 468 (N.Y. 1949) .

(n38)Footnote 213. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:32 (1980).

(n39)Footnote 214. See N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 7-103(1) and (2 a); see also N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 46:8-19 to 46:8-26 (statutory trust).

(n40)Footnote 215. See, e.g., Pizzalato v. Traina, 577 So. 2d 1058 (La. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n41)Footnote 216. See, e.g., In re Consumers World, Inc., 160 F. Supp. 238 (D. Mass 1958) (election to forfeit); In re Morrison-Barnhart Motors, Inc., 142 F. Supp. 845 (N.D. Ohio 1956) (re-entry following abandonment).

(n42)Footnote 217. See discussion in § 40.05(a)(2). above.

(n43)Footnote 218. See, e.g., Hand v. Rifkin, 189 N.E. 476 (N.Y. 1934) ; Grays v. Brooks, 561 N.Y.S.2d 515 (Civ. Ct. 1990) .

(n44)Footnote 219. See, e.g., United Cigar Stores Co. v. Friend, 257 Ill. App. 359 (1930) .

(n45)Footnote 220. See, e.g., Garfinkle v. Montgomery, 248 P.2d 52 (Cal. Ct. App. 1952) ; Carr v. Ed Stein Realtors, 461 N.E.2d 930 (Ohio Ct. App. 1983) .

(n46)Footnote 221. See, e.g., S & W Holding Co. v. Kuriansky, 317 F.2d 666 (2d Cir. 1963) ; Miami Beach Vacations, Inc. v. Wofford, 262 So. 2d 683 (Fla. Ct. App. 1972) (per curiam); Michaels v. Fishel, 62 N.E. 425 (N.Y. 1902) .

(n47)Footnote 222. See, e.g., Partington v. Miller, 5 A.2d 468 (N.J. 1939) .

(n48)Footnote 223. Statutory provisions relevant to the issue are discussed § 40.05(a)(6).

(n49)Footnote 224. See, e.g., Moskin v. Goldstein, 196 N.W. 415 (Mich. 1923) .

(n50)Footnote 225. See, e.g., Federated Mortgage Investors v. American Sav. & Loan Assn., 47 Cal. App. 3d 917, 121 Cal. Rptr. 137 (Ct. App. 1975) ; Richards v. Browning, 212 N.Y.S. 738 (App. Div. 1925) .

(n51)Footnote 226. See Mullendore Theatres, Inc. v. Growth Realty Investors Co., 691 P.2d 970 (Wash. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n52)Footnote 227. See Walter H. Sullivan, Inc. v. Johnson, 3 P.2d 72 (Cal. Ct. App. 1931) .

(n53)Footnote 228. See 1 American Law of Property § 3:73, at 337 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n54)Footnote 229. See, e.g., Federated Mortgage Investors v. American Sav. & Loan Assn., 47 Cal. App. 3d 917, 121 Cal. Rptr. 137 (Ct. App. 1975) ; Mallory Associates, Inc. v. Barving Realty Co., 90 N.E.2d 468 (N.Y. 1949) .

(n55)Footnote 230. See, e.g., Cummings v. Freehold Trust Co., 191 A. 782 (N.J. 1937) ; Kaufman v. Williams, 104 A. 202 (N.J. 1918) .

(n56)Footnote 231. See Four G Corp v. Ruta, 138 A.2d 18 (N.J. 1958) ; Cummings v. Freehold Trust Co., 191 A. 782 (N.J. 1937) .

(n57)Footnote 232. See § 43.05(h), below; see also Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note 6 (1977).

(n58)Footnote 233. See Uniform Residential Landlord Tenant Act § 2 101(a).

(n59)Footnote 234. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1950.5(c).

(n60)Footnote 235. See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42 51. See also Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68 § 250.511a (two month's rent for first year of tenancy; one month's rent thereafter).

(n61)Footnote 236. See § 43.05(h)(a), below.

(n62)Footnote 237. See § 43.05(h)(a), below.

(n63)Footnote 238. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68 § 250.511(b) (deposit over $100.00).

(n64)Footnote 239. See, e.g., Ill. Comp. Stat. 710/1 (deposits held longer than six months).

(n65)Footnote 240. See, e.g., N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 7 103(2)(a) (deposit for lease in project with six or more units).

(n66)Footnote 241. See, e.g., Ill. Comp. Stat. 710/1 Mich. Comp. Laws § 554.614; Uniform Residential Landlord Tenant Act § 2.101.

(n67)Footnote 242. See, e.g., Ga. Code Ann. § 44 7 34.

(n68)Footnote 243. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.607; see also Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8 203(g) (utility bills may be deducted).

(n69)Footnote 244. See, e.g., Ill. Comp. Stat. 710/1; Fla. Stat. § 83.49(3). But compare Garcia v. Thong, 895 P.2d 226 (N.M. 1995) (landlord forfeited the right to withhold portions of the security deposit to cover damages to the leased premises when landlord did not provide to tenant timely written itemization of deductions for the damages) with Bruce v. Attaway, 918 P.2d 341 (N.M. 1996) (landlord did not forfeit the right to withhold portions of the security deposit for application to unpaid rent by failing to provide itemized statement; court reasons that different considerations apply when the landlord applies the security deposit to a deficient rent payment).

(n70)Footnote 245. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-21(d)(2) (twice the amount of the deposit); Ill. Comp. Stat. 710/1 (same); Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8-203 (treble damages).

(n71)Footnote 246. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:43 (1980).

(n72)Footnote 247. See, e.g., Md. Real Prop. Code Ann., § 8 203(e) and (f); Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 2.101(e) and 2.105(a).

(n73)Footnote 248. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1950.5; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.614; N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 7-105.

(n74)Footnote 249. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1950.5.

(n75)Footnote 250. See, e.g., N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 7-105.

(n76)Footnote 251. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws § 554.611.

(n77)Footnote 252. See, e.g., Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12(4). But this was not the result in Lae v. Householder, 789 N.E.2d 481 (Ind. 2003) . There, the residential tenants vacated with the landlord's consent but failed to give a forwarding address. The applicable statute required the landlord to refund the security deposit or provide an itemized list of damages within 45 days. Forty-seven days after tenants vacated, they demanded return of their security deposit. The landlord declined to do this and instead filed a complaint for damages to the premises. But the landlord did not itemize the damages, and the tenants counterclaimed for their deposit, plus attorney fees. In this situation, the Indiana Supreme Court concluded that the landlord's obligations to the tenants had been extended, rather than discharged, and that, because the landlord had not itemized the damages, the tenants were able to recover their deposit and attorney fees.

(n78)Footnote 253. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. ch. 83.49(3); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 554.612, 554.613.

(n79)Footnote 254. See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2550 d (1976).

(n80)Footnote 255. See, e.g., In re Frey, 26 F.2d 472 (E.D. Pa. 1928) ; Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate, and Trust Law, American Bar Association, Security Deposits and Guarantees Under Leases, 1 Real Property, Prob. & Tr. J. 405, 419 (1966).

(n81)Footnote 256. See, e.g., Lochner v. Martin, 147 A.2d 749 (Md. 1959) ; State v. Demarest, 503 P.2d 682 (Or. 1972) ; H.D. Warren, Annotation, Right of Lessor to Retain Advance Rental Payments Made Under Lease Terms Upon Lessee's Default in Rent, 27 A.L.R.2d 656 (1953) .

(n82)Footnote 257. See Hyde Park Realty v. Commissioner, 211 F.2d 462 (2d Cir. 1954) .

(n83)Footnote 258. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.73 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n84)Footnote 259. See Schoen v. New Britain Trust Co., 150 A. 696 (Conn. 1930) . This analysis was criticized in Comment, Landlord and Tenant -- Lessee's Recovery of an Advance Payment of Rent, 25 Ill. L.R. 716 (1931).

(n85)Footnote 260. See, e.g., Sierad v. Lilly, 22 Cal. Rptr. 580 (Ct. App. 1962) .

(n86)Footnote 261. See, e.g., Loew v. Antonick, 310 P.2d 825 (Ariz. 1956) (no refund); Smith v. J. Weingarten, Inc., 120 S.W.2d 878 (Tex. Ct. App. 1938) (no refund); Fink v. Weinholzer, 123 N.W. 931 (Minn. 1909) (refund); Porter v. Tull, 33 P. 965 (Wash. 1893) (refund).

(n87)Footnote 262. See, e.g., Felix v. Griffiths, 45 N.E. 1092 (Ohio 1897) .

(n88)Footnote 263. See, e.g., Cunningham v. Stockton, 106 P. 1057 (Kan. 1910) ; Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, American Bar Association, Security Deposits and Guaranties Under Leases, 1 Real Property, Prob & Tr. J. 405, 419 (1966); H.D. Warren, Annotation, Right of Lessor to Retain Advance Rental Payments Made Under Lease Terms Upon Lessee's Default in Rent, 27 A.L.R.2d 656 (1953) .

(n89)Footnote 264. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1321(A); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.601(e).

(n90)Footnote 265. See, e.g., Warming v. Shapiro, 257 P.2d 74 (Cal. Ct. App. 1953) ; Dutton v. Christie, 115 P. 856 (Wash. 1911) . It has been suggested that the tenant's payment should not be regarded as being given in consideration for a mere signature by the landlord, but rather for rights under a lease. See 2 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 20.3 (3d ed. 1990).

(n91)Footnote 266. See, e.g., Wilson v. Savon Stations, Inc., 486 P.2d 816 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1971) .

(n92)Footnote 267. See, e.g., A 1 Garage v. Lange Investment Co., 44 P.2d 681 (Cal. Ct. App. 1935); Dutton v. Christie, 115 P. 856 (Wash. 1911) .

(n93)Footnote 268. See Gates v. Helvering, 69 F.2d 277 (8th Cir. 1934) ; 1 Jacob Mertens, Jr., The Law of Federal Income Taxation 6A.77 (1994).

(n94)Footnote 269. See, e.g., A 1 Garage v. Lange Inv. Co., 44 P.2d 681 (Cal. Ct. App. 1935), cert. denied, 296 U.S. 642 (1935).

(n95)Footnote 270. See Stern v. Green, 221 P. 601 (Wash. 1923) .

(n96)Footnote 271. See, e.g., L.B. Menefee Lumber Co. v. Abrams, 5 P.2d 709 (Or. 1931) (consideration for lease execution); J. & J. Food Centers, Inc. v. Selig, 456 P.2d 691 (Wash. 1969) (same).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.06

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.06 Right to Enter the Leased Premises.

During the existence of the lease, the tenant owns a present possessory estate, and the landlord owns a reversion, which is a future estate. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the landlord generally has no right to enter the leased premises during the existence of the lease. Indeed, an unlawful entry by the landlord could subject the landlord to an action by the tenant in trespass. n272

Several exceptions to the general rule against landlord entry during the term of the lease have been recognized. At common law, if the tenant failed to pay rent on time, the landlord could enter the leased premises to distrain the tenant's personal property, thereby obtaining a possessory lien to secure the rental obligation. n273 However, the distraint remedy is generally not available today in its common law form. Under modern lien statutes, landlord access to the tenant's personal property generally depends on a court order. n274

Another exception recognized at common law has greater modern application. It has long been the rule that if the lease is silent about the place where rent is to be paid, rent is payable at the leased premises. n275 In order to collect the rent, the landlord has the right to enter the leased premises at a reasonable hour to demand payment. n276

Tenant abandonment of the leased premises gives rise to another well recognized exception to the general rule against landlord entry. If the tenant abandons the premises, leaving them vacant, the landlord may enter in order to protect the premises or to prepare them to be re let. However, if the landlord takes possession of the leased premises for the landlord's own account, a surrender and lease termination would likely result. n277

In addition to the foregoing exceptions to the general rule, some courts have held that the landlord has a right to enter the leased premises to make repairs to avoid waste, n278 to remedy dangerous conditions, n279 or to comply with governmental requirements. n280 However, it has also been held that the landlord must have tenant consent to make even necessary repairs. n281

There is some authority for the proposition that the tenant will be liable to the landlord for an unreasonable refusal to allow the landlord to exhibit the premises to prospective tenants prior to lease expiration. n282

A right to enter the leased premises may arise under statute. The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act provides that the landlord may enter without consent of the tenant in case of emergency, and that the tenant shall not unreasonably withhold consent when the landlord desires to enter to inspect the premises, to make necessary or agreed repairs or improvements, to supply necessary or agreed services, or to exhibit the premises to prospective tenants, mortgagees, or other designated parties. n283 The Uniform Act further provides that the landlord may enter if the tenant abandons or surrenders the premises, if the tenant is absent for more than seven days, if the entry is pursuant to court order, or if entry is undertaken to correct a condition materially affecting health and safety that the tenant was obligated to correct, but did not. n284 Except when there is an emergency, or unless it would be impracticable to do so, the landlord is required to provide at lease two days' notice of an intent to enter the premises, and may enter only at reasonable times. n285

A landlord who wishes to have the right to enter the leased premises during the tenancy for particular purposes would be well advised to include an agreement to that effect in the lease. Such provisions are frequently included in leases, and are generally enforced by courts. n286 Indeed, even if the lease does not expressly provide the landlord with a right of entry to make repairs, it has been held that when the landlord is obligated under the lease to make repairs, the landlord has an implied right to enter the premises in order to do so. n287

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 272. See e.g., North Main Street Bagel Corp., v. Duncan, 775 N.Y.S.2d 362 (App. Div. 2004) .

(n2)Footnote 273. See discussion in § 40.04(a).

(n3)Footnote 274. See discussion in §§ 40.04(a)(2) and 40.04(b)(3).

(n4)Footnote 275. See discussion in § 40.03(e), above.

(n5)Footnote 276. See, e.g., Smith v. Caldwell, 95 S.W. 467 (Ark. 1906) ; Cline v. Altose, 290 P. 809 (Wash. 1930) .

(n6)Footnote 277. See discussion in § 40.11(a)(2).

(n7)Footnote 278. See, e.g., Flanders v. New Hampshire Sav. Bank, 7 A.2d 233 (N.H. 1939) .

(n8)Footnote 279. See, e.g., Zwerin v. Geiss, 237 N.Y.S.2d 280 (Civ. Ct. 1963) .

(n9)Footnote 280. See, e.g., Dunn v. Mellon, 23 A. 210 (Pa. 1892) .

(n10)Footnote 281. See, e.g., Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Yates, 232 S.W.2d 796 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1950) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.38 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n11)Footnote 282. See Gronek v. Neuman, 201 N.E.2d 617 (Ill. Ct. App. 1964) .

(n12)Footnote 283. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 3.103.

(n13)Footnote 284. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 3.103, 4.202, 4.203.

(n14)Footnote 285. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 3.103(c).

(n15)Footnote 286. See, e.g., Klugherz v. Sutphin Food Shop, Inc., 393 N.Y.S.2d 638 (Civ. Ct. 1977) (agreement that landlord may enter the premises to inspect and to make repairs).

(n16)Footnote 287. See, e.g., Appel v. Muller, 186 N.E. 785 (N.Y. 1933) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.07

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.07 Landlord Rights in Tenant Fixtures.

[Go To Supp]

§ 40.07(a) Introduction.

During the term of the lease, some tenants, usually tenants on long term commercial leases, construct improvements, or affix items of personal property to existing improvements located on the leased premises. n288 When the lease comes to an end, a dispute may arise regarding the relative rights of landlord and tenant in such tenant annexations, with the tenant claiming the right to remove them, and the landlord claiming that they have become part of the real property and pass to the landlord.

The parties' relative rights to tenant annexations may be defined by the lease. The lease may provide, for example, that tenant annexations become the property of the landlord, and that they are to be left by the tenant at the expiration of the lease. Or it may provide that the tenant may remove the annexations at the expiration of the lease so long as removal may be done without injury to an existing building. Where applicable, such lease provisions will generally determine the rights of the parties. n289 However, in the absence of applicable lease provisions, the removability of tenant annexations is generally determined in light of rules relating to fixtures.

§ 40.07(b) Fixtures and Trade Fixtures.

As discussed elsewhere in this treatise, the term "fixture" has been variously defined, and courts have identified different tests for determining whether a chattel has become a fixture. n290 In general, however, a "fixture" may be said to be a chattel that has become related to a piece of real property to such an extent that an interest in it arises under real property law. n291 Whether a chattel is considered to be a fixture has commonly been said to depend on: 1) whether there has been actual annexation of the chattel to the realty or something appurtenant to the realty; 2) whether the chattel has been adapted to the use for which the realty is devoted; and 3) whether there is an intent that the chattel become a permanent accession to the realty. n292 Intent is to be determined objectively, considering such factors as the nature of the article affixed and the mode of its annexation. n293 Although courts sometimes speak of "fixtures" as being removable by the tenant at lease expiration, for purposes of the present discussion, the conclusion that a chattel is a fixture means that the chattel becomes the property of the landlord at the termination of the lease.

In contrast, a "trade fixture" is removable by the tenant. A trade fixture is, generally speaking, a chattel that is brought onto the leased premises by the tenant and installed or affixed there for use in the tenant's trade or business. n294 English courts developed the concept to permit tenants who used fixtures in their trade to remove them from the leased premises prior to lease expiration. n295 Initially, English courts did not apply the trade fixtures concept to agricultural fixtures, on the ground that agriculture was not a "trade," n296 but this result was subsequently changed by legislation. n297 Early American cases also reflected a reluctance to extend the trade fixtures concept to agricultural fixtures, but later cases applied the concept to them. n298

A wide variety of tenant annexations may be considered to be trade fixtures, and American courts have been rather liberal in their application of the concept. It has been said, for example, that "it is difficult to conceive that any fixture, however solid, permanent and closely attached to the realty, placed there for the mere purpose of trade, may not be removed at the end of the term." n299 The concept has been applied not only to equipment that the tenant utilizes in the tenant's trade, but also to domestic and ornamental items of tenant property, n300 and even to buildings. n301

Even in the absence of lease provisions expressly permitting tenants to remove annexed personal property from the leased premises, tenants are quite likely to be permitted to do so. This result follows from the liberal application of the trade fixture concept, mentioned above. It also follows from a tendency of courts to conclude that a tenant did not intend, in attaching a chattel to the leased premises, that it become a permanent accession to the realty. In this connection, it has been said that there is a presumption that the tenant annexes chattels to the premises for the tenant's own benefit, and not for the benefit of the landlord's realty. n302

§ 40.07(c) Constraints on Removability.

While the modern tenant has a broad right to remove items of property that the tenant has affixed to the realty during occupancy, the right has been limited by at least three qualifications that benefit the landlord. One qualification is that the tenant may not remove an annexation that the tenant made in substitution for an item of property located on the leased premises and owned by the landlord. Otherwise, the tenant would leave the premises in worse condition than when the tenancy began. n303 Additional qualifications, discussed below, are that the removal be accomplished without substantial damage to the realty, and that the removal be timely.

§ 40.07(c)(1) Damage to the Realty.

The requirement that removal be accomplished without substantial damage to the realty has been articulated in many court decisions, and codified in a number of statutes. n304 Some states have enacted legislation that grants broad removal rights to tenants, conditioned on restoring the premises or reimbursing the landlord for the cost of resulting damage. n305 The Restatement rule is that, unless the parties have agreed otherwise, permissible annexations may be removed by a tenant if the leased property "can be and is restored to its former condition after removal," and if the removal and restoration are accomplished within certain time limits. n306

§ 40.07(c)(2) Timing of Removal.

The landlord's ability to relet or to utilize the leased premises after the termination of a lease may be impaired if the previous tenant is thereafter able to re-enter the leased premises to remove annexed personalty. However, if the annexation in question concerns the tenant's property, and it is otherwise removable by the tenant, there are circumstances in which it would be unreasonable not to permit the tenant to remove the annexation following lease termination. Such concerns have given rise to a somewhat confused body of law on the timing of removal.

The traditional rule with respect to the removal of tenant annexations is that, in the absence of a contrary agreement, a tenant must exercise the right to remove annexations during the term of the lease or the right to do so will be lost. n307 Although this rule has been frequently referred to in the cases, it does not address some removal situations. Moreover, the modern tendency is to not apply the rule, at least as literally stated. In many instances, the loss of the right to remove annexations will be determined by when the tenant relinquishes possession of the leased premises, rather than by the date of lease termination. n308

It is generally recognized that a tenant may remove annexations following expiration of the lease term while the tenant remains in possession of the premises with the express or implied consent of the landlord. n309 This situation commonly arises when the tenant remains in possession during negotiations for a new lease that were not completed before lease expiration. n310 The Restatement view is that a tenant under a fixed term must remove annexations on or before lease expiration, unless "equitable considerations" justify an extension of time; n311 however, the lease is not considered to be terminated, for purposes of the tenant's removal rights, if the tenant remains on the premises with the consent of the landlord. n312

The tenant may also be able to remove annexations after expiration of a lease, when the tenant remains on the premises under the terms of a renewal lease. The old rule was that a tenant who failed to remove annexations under the original term of a lease could not remove the annexations during the period of a renewal lease, unless the tenant reserved the right to do so. n313 It was thought that the new lease resulted in a surrender of the old lease, and in an implied surrender of possession, by reason of which the right to remove annexations was terminated and the annexations became part of the realty. n314 At one time, this seems to have been the majority rule. n315 However, the rule has been rejected by a number of courts, n316 substantially limited by many others, n317 and abrogated in some states by statute. n318 The Restatement position, which reflects the modern trend, is that the tenant does not have to remove annexations prior to the end of the original lease term if, as a result of the exercise of a lease renewal right, the tenant's occupancy continues. n319

The tenant's right to remove annexations is generally not ended upon the expiration of a lease for an indefinite term. On the theory that a tenant under a lease for an indefinite term, such as a tenancy at will, is unable to foresee the end of the lease and to plan for its termination, it is well settled that the tenant will be allowed a reasonable period of time after termination of the lease to remove tenant annexations. n320

There is a division of authority regarding the tenant's right to remove annexations after premature lease termination and dispossession of the tenant due to breach of the tenant's lease obligations. Some courts apply the rule that is used for leases of uncertain duration, and allow the tenant a reasonable period of time after termination in which to remove annexations. n321 Other courts are of the view that a tenant generally loses the right to remove annexations if the lease is terminated and the tenant is dispossessed of the premises on account of a default. n322 The Restatement position is that, if the lease termination is due to a breach of the tenant's obligations, removal must be made on or before the termination of the lease, "unless equitable considerations justify some extension of time." n323 If an extension is given, the Restatement contemplates that the landlord would be entitled to recover special damages that may be sustained as a result. n324

There is some authority for the proposition that a tenant who wrongfully holds over after the expiration of a lease loses the right to remove annexations. n325 The Restatement view is that, if the landlord elects to bind such a tenant over to a new lease, the date the original lease terminated controls the right to remove tenant annexations. The reasoning is that a contrary result would "work against the goal of making it less likely a tenant would wrongfully hold over after his lease ends." n326

A tenant who surrenders possession of the leased premises is generally held to have forfeited the right to remove annexations. n327

§ 40.07(d) Third Party Claims.

Tenant annexations may also be claimed by parties such as assignees or sublessees of the tenant, or by chattel mortgagees or other creditors of the tenant. Since the rights of such parties in tenant annexations derive from the tenant, they will generally have no greater removal rights against the landlord than the tenant would have had. n328 An exception has been recognized, however, when the tenant surrenders possession of the leased premises prior to lease expiration. Although such a surrender and vacation of the premises may bring about a forfeiture of the tenant's removal rights, it has been held that a chattel mortgagee of tenant fixtures will be given a reasonable time thereafter in which to remove the fixtures that are subject to the chattel mortgage. n329 This result has been codified in § 9 334 of the Uniform Commercial Code. n330

§ 40.07(e) Condemnation.

If the government takes the leased property under power of eminent domain, the government will be obligated to provide compensation for fixtures that are condemned along with the realty. Generally, the tenant will be entitled to compensation for fixtures so condemned if the tenant otherwise would have had a right to remove them from the leased premises. n331 However, if the tenant has no right to remove condemned fixtures, the compensation for their taking will go to the landlord. n332

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 288. The tenant's right to make changes to the premises is subject to limitations imposed by the doctrine of waste. The law of waste is discussed in Chapter 70.

(n2)Footnote 289. See, e.g., Holy Ghost Catholic Church v. Clinton, 211 N.W. 13 (Minn. 1926) ; Isman v. Hanscom, 66 A. 329 (Pa. 1907) ; Bolin v. Laderberg, 153 S.E.2d 251 (Va. 1967) .

(n3)Footnote 290. See ch. 46, below.

(n4)Footnote 291. See U.C.C. § 9 334 & cmt. 3.

(n5)Footnote 292. See Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) . The Teaff case is extensively discussed in chapter 46.

(n6)Footnote 293. See Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) .

(n7)Footnote 294. See, e.g., LaFarge Bldg. Materials, Inc. v. Stribling, 880 So. 2d 415 (Ala. 2003) ; Supervisor of Assessments of Anne Arundel County v. Hartge Yacht Yard, Inc., 842 A.2d 732 (Md. Ct. App. 2004) ; R & D Amusement Corp. v. Christianson 392 N.W.2d 385 (N.D. 1986) .

(n8)Footnote 295. See 7 Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 264, 285 (2d ed. 1937).

(n9)Footnote 296. See Elwes v. Maw, 102 Eng. Rep. 510, 3 East 38 (K.B. 1802).

(n10)Footnote 297. See 7 Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 264, 286 (2d ed. 1937).

(n11)Footnote 298. See Note, Fixtures in the Landlord/Tenant Relationship, 34 U. Chi. L. Rev. 617 (1967).

(n12)Footnote 299. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & Miss. Ry., 142 U.S. 396 (1892) ; see also Handler v. Horns, 65 A.2d 523 (N.J. 1949) (examples of trade fixtures).

(n13)Footnote 300. See, e.g., Old Line Life Ins. Co. v. Hawn, 275 N.W. 542 (Wis. 1937) .

(n14)Footnote 301. See, e.g., Van Ness v. Pacard, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 137 (1829) ; Cameron v. Oakland County Gas & Oil Co., 269 N.W 227 (Mich. 1936) ; Dickerman v. Town of Pittsford, 80 A.2d 529 (Vt. 1951) .

(n15)Footnote 302. See, e.g., Van Ness v. Pacard, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 137 (1829) ; Handler v. Horns, 65 A.2d 523

(N.J. 1949) .

(n16)Footnote 303. See, e.g., Webb v. New Haven Theatre Co., 87 Conn. 129, 87 A. 274 (Conn. 1913) ; Slane v. Curtis, 286 P. 372 (Wyo. 1930) .

(n17)Footnote 304. See, e.g., Kenneally v. Standard Elecs. Corp., 364 F.2d 642 (8th Cir. 1966) ; Neely v. Jacobs, 673 S.W.2d 705 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984) ; Cal. Civ. Code § 1019; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.2, statutory note 6 (1977). Some courts have added the further, questionable, requirement that the removal must be accomplished without substantial damage to the affixed item itself. See, e.g., Della Corp. v. Diamond, 210 A.2d 847 (Del. 1965) ; Collamore v. Gillis, 22 N.E. 46 (Mass. 1889) . But many courts have rejected this requirement. See, e.g., Andrews v. Williams, 173 P.2d 882 (Colo. 1946) ; Frost v. Schinkel, 238 N.W. 659 (Neb. 1931) . See generally Note, Fixtures in the Landlord Tenant Relationship, 34 U. Chi. L. Rev. 617 (1967).

(n18)Footnote 305. See, e.g., W. Va. Code Ann. § 37-6-29.

(n19)Footnote 306. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.2 (4) (1977); cf. § 12.2(3) (right of landlord to require tenant to restore premises to their former condition at the conclusion of the tenancy).

(n20)Footnote 307. See, e.g., Wright v. Michelman, 141 N.E. 234 (Mass. 1923) ; In re Starr Street, 131 N.Y.S. 71 (Sup. Ct. 1911) ; L.S. Tellier, Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 6 A.L.R.2d 322, 324 (1949) ; see also William M. Howard, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 109 A.L.R.5th 421 (2003) (updated annotation).

(n21)Footnote 308. See, e.g., Phelps v. Ayers, 125 N.W. 919 (Wis. 1910) (tenant may remove annexations during the term of the lease, or during a period after lease expiration when the tenant remains in possession); Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3, Reporter's Note 4 (1977) (Stating that the rule in most jurisdictions is that the tenant for a fixed term "must remove his annexations before the expiration of that term, or at least before he relinquishes possession of the premises.").

(n22)Footnote 309. See, e.g., Andrews v. Williams, 173 P.2d 882 (Colo. 1946) ; Rothery v. Dohrse, 240 N.W. 296 (Neb. 1932) ; State Highway Com. v. Demarest, 503 P.2d 682 (Or. 1972) ; Blackwell Printing Co. v Blackwell Wielandy Co., 440 S.W.2d 433 (Mo. 1969) ; Henderson v. Robbins, 138 A. 68 (Me. 1927) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3, Reporter's Note 8 (1977); Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 6 A.L.R.2d 322, 329, 330, 338, 341 (1949).

(n23)Footnote 310. See, e.g., Ray v. Young, 142 N.W. 393 (Iowa 1913) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3, cmt. k (1977).

(n24)Footnote 311. If such an extension is given, the landlord is, according to the Restatement, entitled to special damages resulting from the delay. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3 & cmt. k (1977).

(n25)Footnote 312. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3 & cmt. k (1977).

(n26)Footnote 313. See, e.g., Wadman v. Burke, 81 P. 1012 (Cal. 1905) ; Loughran v. Ross, 45 N.Y. 792 (1871) .

(n27)Footnote 314. See George Bauernschmidt Brewing Co. v. McColgan, 42 A. 907 (Md. 1899) ; Teddy Rose Enterprises, Inc. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 427 A.2d 1081 (Md. Ct. App. 1981) ; P. H. Vartanian, Annotation, Right to Remove Fixtures or Improvements Placed Upon Property by One Holding Under Lease as Affected by Renewal or New Lease Made to Him or His Successor Without Reservation of the Right to Remove, 110 A.L.R. 480, 484 (1937) .

(n28)Footnote 315. See Right to Remove Fixtures or Improvements Placed Upon Property by One Holding Under Lease as Affected by Renewal or New Lease Made to Him or His Successor Without Reservation of the Right to Remove

, 110 A.L.R. 480, 484 (1937) (stating no one will question that this was once the majority rule); but see Note, Effect of Renewal of a Lease Without Reservation of the Right to Remove Fixtures, 18 Iowa L. Rev. 527 (1933) (questioning the majority status of the rule).

(n29)Footnote 316. See, e.g., Handler v. Horns, 65 A.2d 523 (N.J. 1949) ; Blake McFall Co. v. Wilson, 193 P. 902 (Or. 1920) .

(n30)Footnote 317. See, e.g., Greenspan-Greenberger Co. v. Goerke Co., 111 N.J. Eq. 249, 162 A. 87 (N.J. Eq. 1932) (limiting application of rule to structural improvements); Ory v. Tate, 85 S.E.2d 36 (Ga. 1954) (rule not applicable to trade fixtures); Radey v. McCurdy, 58 A. 558 (Pa. 1904) (rule applies to new leases rather than to lease extensions).

(n31)Footnote 318. *See, e.g., N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 226*a.

(n32)Footnote 319. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3, cmt. j (1977).

(n33)Footnote 320. See, e.g., McLeon v. Wells, 180 S.W.2d 325 (Ark. 1944) ; Henderson v. Robbins, 138 A. 68 (Me. 1927) ; Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 6 A.L.R.2d 322, 342 (1949) .

(n34)Footnote 321. See, e.g., Bergh v. Herring Hall Marvin Safe Co., 136 F. 368 (2d Cir. 1905) ; Shepard v. Alden, 201 N.W. 537 (Minn. 1924).

(n35)Footnote 322. See, e.g., Cabana, Inc. v. Eastern Air Control, Inc., 487 A.2d 1209 (Md. Ct. App. 1985) ; Morey v. Hoyt, 26 A. 127 (Conn. 1893) ; Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 6 A.L.R.2d 322, 348, 349 (1949) .

(n36)Footnote 323. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3 (1) & cmt. d (1977). The Reporter's Note to § 12.3 acknowledges that an extension based on equitable considerations is not consistent with the weight of authority, but refers to the rule as an expansion of a general rule favoring "relief against forfeiture in hardship cases." Id., Reporter's Note (1).

(n37)Footnote 324. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3 (2).

(n38)Footnote 325. See, e.g., Wilson v. Davis, 153 S.W.2d 171 (Ark. 1941) ; but see Pearson v. Harper, 392 P.2d 687 (Idaho 1964) (construing statute to permit holdover tenant to remove annexations while in possession).

(n39)Footnote 326. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.3, cmt. k.

(n40)Footnote 327. See, e.g., National Housewares Corp. v. Trahin, 444 S.W.2d 68 (Ark. 1969) ; Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 6 A.L.R.2d 322, 330 (1949) .

(n41)Footnote 328. See, e.g., Weisberg v. Loughridge, 61 Cal. Rptr. 563 (Cal. Ct. App. 1967) ; Tunis Lumber Co. v. R.G. Dennis Lumber Co. 34 S.E. 613 (Va. 1899) .

(n42)Footnote 329. See Weisberg v. Loughridge, 61 Cal. Rptr. 563 (Cal. Ct. App. 1967) ; see also Landmark Enterprises, Inc. v. M.I. Harrisburg Associates, 554 N.W.2d 119 (Neb. 1996) (after lease termination, contractor hired by tenant to make improvements on the leased premises sued to foreclose a construction lien; court considered whether the termination of the lease merged the leasehold interest and the construction lien into the landlord's title; no merger found, and the foreclosure action was dismissed).

(n43)Footnote 330. North Carolina Gen. Stat. § 42 & W. Va. Code. Ann. § 37 (formerly § 9 313(5)(b)).

(n44)Footnote 331. See, e.g., Roffman v. Wilmington Hous. Auth., 179 A.2d 99 (Del. 1962) ; State v. Demarest, 503 P.2d 682 (Or. 1972) .

(n45)Footnote 332. See, e.g., Marraro v. State, 189 N.E.2d 606 (N.Y. 1963) ; See Edward L. Snitzer, Valuation and Condemnation Problems Involving Trade Fixtures, 16 Vill. L. Rev. 467, 489 (1971).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.08

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.08 Right to Terminate the Lease.

§ 40.08(a) Introduction.

This section discusses the right of the landlord to terminate a lease upon tenant breach of lease obligations. The traditional common law rule is that, unless the lease provides otherwise, the landlord is not entitled to prematurely terminate the lease based on the tenant's breach of a lease covenant. n333 Breach of a lease covenant by the tenant might permit the landlord to sue for breach of contract, but it does not enable the landlord to terminate the lease. n334 The rule is based on the concept that the tenant has an estate in land, and that the lease covenants of landlord and tenant are independent of each other.

The Restatement favors a different approach. Based on its view of the dependency of lease covenants, the Restatement would permit the landlord to terminate a lease, notwithstanding the absence of a lease termination provision, if the tenant breaches a valid lease promise, if the landlord is thereby deprived of a significant inducement to the making of the lease, and if the tenant does not perform within a reasonable time after being requested to do so. n335 However, the Restatement position is not reflective of the case law in this area. n336

The traditional common law rule has been widely modified by statute. Statutes in a majority of American jurisdictions permit the landlord to terminate a tenancy for specified tenant defaults, even if the lease does not contain a provision setting forth the landlord's right to do so. n337 However, statutory grounds for lease termination are frequently quite limited. In light of the traditional rule regarding lease termination, and the limitations on statutory lease termination rights, it is not surprising that termination provisions are commonly included in modern leases.

§ 40.08(b) Termination Based on Lease Provision.

§ 40.08(b)(1) Special Limitations and Powers of Termination.

As with any other estate in land, a leasehold estate may be limited so that it will automatically terminate upon the occurrence of a particular event. n338 Such a provision is properly referred to as a "special limitation," but it often called an "automatic termination clause." A tenancy that automatically terminates upon the occurrence of an event has traditionally been referred to as a determinable term for years, a determinable periodic tenancy, or a determinable tenancy at will, as appropriate. n339 Examples of special limitations in the leasehold context are clauses that provide for automatic lease termination upon the death of the tenant or upon the tenant's vacation of the leased premises.

A lease that is subject to a special limitation should be distinguished from a lease that provides the landlord with the right to terminate the lease if a specified condition, such as an event of default, exists. The right of the landlord to terminate the lease is usually referred to as a "power of termination." A lease that is subject to a power of termination has traditionally been referred to as a term of years subject to a condition subsequent or a periodic tenancy subject to condition subsequent, as appropriate. n340 A tenancy at will is, by its nature, terminable at the option of either party, so there is no tenancy at will subject to a condition subsequent. n341

Whether a particular lease provision creates a special limitation or a power of termination is generally a matter of the parties' intent, as determined from the language used in the lease and from the circumstances. Durational expressions, such as "until," "during," or "so long as" are typically associated with a special limitation; and conditional expressions, such as "on condition that" and "provided that" are typically associated with a power of termination. n342 However, courts do not favor provisions in leases that seem to provide for automatic termination. While a clear special limitation may be given effect, n343 because of the potential harshness of automatic lease termination, courts prefer to construe lease language in favor of a power of termination. n344

Judicial reluctance to conclude that a lease provides for a special limitation upon the occurrence of a tenant default may seem to favor the tenant, but it could benefit the landlord as well. The effect of a valid special limitation could be to deprive the landlord of an opportunity to continue the tenancy, assuming the landlord desires to do so, notwithstanding the occurrence of a tenant default. Moreover, a tenant who desires to avoid lease obligations to the landlord might intentionally breach the lease in order to cause automatic lease termination. n345 The Restatement position is that when the language of lease is unclear as to whether automatic or optional lease termination is intended, and the termination provision relates to the performance of lease obligations by a party, there is a presumption that termination is optional. Otherwise, the party "could take advantage of his own wrong to avoid future liability under the lease." n346

In light of the foregoing, a landlord's interests are probably better served in most cases by a power of termination than by a special limitation. However, in a few instances, courts have required landlords to bring more cumbersome ejectment actions instead of summary possession actions to recover possession of the leased premises when the lease did not provide for automatic termination for the tenant's default. n347

§ 40.08(b)(2) Exercise of the Power of Termination.

The landlord who wishes to exercise a power of termination must do so by some unequivocal act. n348 At common law, the landlord exercised a power of termination by reentry or by bringing an ejectment action. n349 In more recent times, it has been recognized that a power of termination may also be exercised by bringing a summary possession action or by providing notice to the tenant of the landlord's election to terminate the lease. n350 If the landlord exercises the power of termination by giving notice, it must be unequivocal. If the landlord provides notice of a default, and also provides the tenant with an opportunity to cure the default, the landlord's acts may not constitute an unequivocal election to terminate the lease. n351 As noted below, the lease itself may set forth the procedures that the landlord must follow in order to exercise the power of termination.

Before a power of termination may be exercised by the landlord for nonpayment of rent, the landlord is generally required to make demand on the tenant for payment. n352 Indeed, the old common law rule was that the landlord had to make demand for the exact sum due at a notorious place on the leased premises between sunrise and sunset on the day the rent was due. n353 The common law demand requirement may be, and commonly is, modified in some way or even dispensed with by lease provision n354 or by statute. n355 In the absence of such a modification, however, it has been held that the common law rule is generally in force. n356

If the lease sets forth the manner in which the landlord is to exercise a power of termination, the landlord is generally held to the specified procedure. n357 But courts have sometimes excused strict compliance with termination procedures when such compliance would be meaningless. Thus, the landlord has not been required to send a certified mail notice to the leased premises, as specified in the lease, when the tenant has previously vacated them. n358 Some courts have excused the landlord's failure to send notice of lease termination by registered mail, as required in the lease, when the tenant received actual notice of termination. n359

§ 40.08(b)(3) Limitations on Landlord's Right to Terminate the Lease.

The successful exercise by the landlord of a power of termination results in the forfeiture of the tenant's interest in real property. But forfeitures are not favored in the law, and courts have used a variety of means to limit the effect or application of lease termination provisions. These include construing lease provisions to avoid forfeiture, application of the doctrines of waiver and estoppel, and refusal to enforce lease termination provisions when the result would be inequitable. In addition to the limitations imposed by courts, statutes in many jurisdictions restrict the landlord's ability to terminate a lease. Each of these limitations on the landlord's ability to terminate the lease will be considered below.

§ 40.08(b)(3)(i) Construction of Lease Provisions.

Because forfeitures are not favored in the law, courts have tended to strictly construe lease provisions permitting the landlord to terminate the lease upon tenant default. n360 It has been said, for example, that a forfeiture right must be clearly stated in order to be available to a landlord. n361 Even when the forfeiture right is clearly stated, courts have sometimes prevented a forfeiture by narrowly construing the tenant's lease obligations, thereby avoiding a conclusion that the lease has been breached. n362 Moreover, as noted above, courts have, with some exceptions, also required strict adherence by landlords to lease provisions setting forth termination procedures. n363

§ 40.08(b)(3)(ii) Waiver.

The landlord may be held to have waived the right to terminate the lease for a tenant breach when, following the breach, the landlord engages in conduct that indicates an intent to continue the landlord-tenant relationship. The issue commonly arises in connection with the landlord's acceptance of tenant rental payments. When the landlord accepts rental payments accruing after a tenant breach, with knowledge of the breach, the landlord will generally be held to have waived the right to exercise a power of termination based upon that breach. n364 The landlord's conduct is thought to acknowledge the continuing existence of the lease. n365 The result is otherwise if the landlord accepts payment of rent that accrued prior to the tenant's breach; such acceptance does not acknowledge a continuing existence of the lease, and no waiver should be found. n366

Once the lease has actually been terminated, there is no continuing landlord-tenant relationship to acknowledge, and the landlord should be able to accept payment for the rent that accrued between the time of the tenant's breach and lease termination without causing a reinstatement of the tenancy. Several courts have so held. n367 It would also seem that, without reinstating a previously terminated tenancy, the landlord could accept payment of the same rent whose nonpayment was the basis of lease termination. However, while courts have so held, n368 there is some authority to the contrary. n369 There is also some conflict in the cases on whether the landlord waives the right to terminate the lease when, after initiating procedures to terminate the lease for nonpayment of rent, but before the lease is terminated, the landlord accepts rent that accrued after the tenant's breach. n370

On the theory that waiver is a matter of intent, a number of courts have permitted the landlord to avoid a waiver by expressly reserving the right to terminate the lease when the landlord accepts rent that accrued after a tenant breach. n371 However, other courts, reluctant to enforce forfeitures, have declined to permit the landlord to qualify the acceptance of rent in this manner. n372 Similarly, courts have sometimes upheld lease provisions that purport to permit the landlord to accept tenant rent payments or other performances after a breach, without waiving a power of termination. n373 But it is not uncommon for courts to conclude that the landlord waived the right to terminate the lease notwithstanding a lease provision to the contrary. n374

Although the issue of waiver is most commonly presented by the landlord's acceptance of rental payments after a tenant breach, it may arise whenever, following a tenant breach, the conduct of the landlord evidences an intent to continue the landlord-tenant relationship. Thus, waiver may be found when the landlord, with knowledge of a tenant breach, thereafter makes demand on the tenant for the payment of rent, brings a suit for rent, or modifies the terms of the lease. n375 Waiver has also been found when the landlord unreasonably delays exercising the power of termination following tenant default. n376

If the landlord is held to have waived the right to exercise a power of termination for a tenant breach, the waiver applies only to that breach. The waiver does not prevent the landlord from exercising the power of termination in the event of a later occurring breach, even a repetition of the same breach for which the power of termination was previously waived. n377

§ 40.08(b)(3)(iii) Estoppel.

The landlord's right to exercise a power of termination under a lease may also be limited by application of the equitable doctrine of estoppel. The doctrine is sometimes confused with waiver, and court decisions that prohibit the exercise of a power of termination do not always clarify which doctrine is involved. In general, the doctrine of estoppel could apply to prevent the exercise of a power of termination if the landlord makes a representation, expressly or impliedly, that a lease covenant or condition will not be strictly enforced, and the tenant detrimentally relies upon the representation. n378

The doctrine of estoppel is most commonly applied in connection with late rental payments. If a landlord has repeatedly accepted late rental payments, the landlord would likely be estopped from exercising a power of termination based upon late payment until the landlord notifies the tenant that strict performance will now be required. n379 The landlord has also been estopped from exercising a power of termination when the landlord is aware that the tenant is making alterations to the leased premises that are prohibited by the lease, and the landlord stands by while the alterations are made. n380

§ 40.08(b)(3)(iv) Equitable Relief from Forfeiture.

As discussed above, the doctrines of waiver and estoppel may apply in some circumstances to limit the landlord's right to exercise a power of termination. However, even if waiver and estoppel are not applicable on the facts of a particular case, the landlord's attempt to exercise a power of termination might be limited by general principles of equity. Equity, of course, "abhors a forfeiture."

If the tenant's default is the failure to pay rent or some other sum of money, equity ordinarily intervenes to prevent the exercise of a power of termination, provided that the money is paid. n381 In ordering relief from forfeiture upon the payment of the monetary obligation, courts sometimes refer to a theory, developed in English cases, that a power of termination represents security for the payment of a monetary obligation, and that enforcement of the power of termination is not required if payment will make the landlord whole. n382

If the tenant breaches a lease covenant other than for the payment of money, courts are less willing to bar landlord exercise of a power of termination on grounds of equity. In that situation, it is more difficult to condition equitable relief on a monetary payment that will make the landlord whole. n383 Nonetheless, courts have sometimes ordered relief from forfeiture, conditioned upon payment of damages to the landlord. n384

Equity might also intervene to prevent forfeiture when the tenant's default is trivial, or where it results from mistake, accident, or misconduct on the part of the landlord. n385 On the other hand, equitable relief would be less appropriate when tenant defaults have been persistent, deliberate, or willful. n386 The court may also decline to grant equitable relief if it concludes that there is an adequate alternative remedy at law. n387 Equitable relief is in the discretion of the court, and the outcome in each case will depend on the court's view of the equities involved.

§ 40.08(c) Statutory Lease Termination Rights.

At common law, unless the lease provided otherwise, a landlord could not terminate a lease before the end of the term on account of a tenant default. This result has been modified in most states by the adoption of legislation permitting the landlord to terminate the lease for specified tenant defaults. n388 Most frequently, the statutes provide the landlord with a right to terminate the lease, or to bring a summary action for possession of the leased premises, based upon the tenant's failure to pay rent. n389 However, individual statutes also permit the landlord to terminate based upon the tenant's illegal use of the premises, n390 commission of waste, n391 or use that is contrary to a covenant in the lease. n392 A federal statute permits a public housing agency to terminate the lease of a public housing tenant based upon drug related criminal activities of the tenant, a member or the tenant's household, or a guest or other person under the tenant's control. n393 The United States Supreme Court has held that the statute permits a public housing authority to terminate the tenancy regardless of whether the tenant knew, or should have known, of the drug related criminal activity. n394 The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act permits the landlord to terminate a residential lease, subject to certain notice requirements, if the tenant fails to pay rent when due; materially defaults in the performance of lease obligations; or fails to comply with specified statutory duties regarding the condition of the leased premises, and health and safety are thereby materially affected. n395

Many of the statutes providing for lease termination rights in favor of landlords include tenant protections. Thus, statutes frequently require the landlord to provide the tenant with prior notice and an opportunity to cure a breach of the lease before the landlord may terminate. n396 When termination is sought based upon nonpayment of rent, a number of statutes provide for lease reinstatement if the tenant pays the past due rent and costs prior to the conclusion of the landlord's action for possession or prior to the execution of a writ of possession. n397 Some statutes, such as those based upon the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, expressly adopt a requirement that the breach for which lease termination is sought be "material." n398 The Uniform Act also provides that a landlord may not recover possession of a tenant's dwelling unit "except in case of abandonment, surrender, or as permitted in this Act." n399

In the absence of clear direction from the lease or from legislation, several courts have held that the forfeiture provisions of a lease are not exclusive, and that, where both the lease provisions and the statutory provisions regarding termination could apply, the landlord could elect to take advantage of statutory termination rights. n400 But it has also been held that the termination provisions of the lease supersede statutory termination remedies. n401

As with attempts to exercise rights of termination set forth in the lease, attempts to exercise statutory rights of termination have been subject to defenses of waiver and estoppel. n402 However, general equitable relief is less likely to be granted to prevent exercise of a statutory right of termination than it is to prevent the exercise of a power of termination set forth in a lease. Such relief has been withheld on the theory that to grant it would be to defeat a legislative mandate providing for forfeiture. n403 But not all courts follow this rule. Some courts have granted equitable relief from statutory termination when the tenant's breach was trivial or where the default could be remedied by the payment of money. n404 Courts have, in any event, generally been willing to grant equitable relief from statutory forfeiture when tenant default results from fraud or mistake. n405 However, courts may be disinclined to grant equitable relief if they believe there is an adequate alternative remedy at law. n406

§ 40.08(d) The Requirement of Good Cause for Lease Termination.

There is no generally recognized requirement that a landlord have good cause in order to terminate a lease. However, such a requirement is nonetheless recognized in some circumstances. One of these circumstances arises in connection with the retaliatory conduct doctrine. n407 Once the landlord has been barred from evicting a tenant on grounds of illegal retaliation, before the landlord can succeed with a new eviction action, the landlord may, at least in some jurisdictions, be required to establish a legitimate business justification for the eviction. n408

More frequently, a requirement of good cause for lease termination arises under statute. Rent control statutes, for example, often provide that the landlord may evict the tenant only for specified grounds, such as failure to pay rent, illegal use of the premises, or some other material violation of the lease. n409 Tenants in federally subsidized public housing are, by statute, protected against lease termination other than for material lease violation, violation of applicable law, or for other good cause. n410 New Jersey legislation permits termination or nonrenewal of most residential leases only upon a showing of good cause. n411

Some commentators have suggested that public policy and contract law considerations similar to those supporting the implied warranty of habitability for residential leases might also justify a good cause termination requirement for residential tenancies. In this instance, the public policy orientation would be on the continuity, rather than the quality, of possession. n412 It has also been suggested that a requirement of good cause for lease termination might be included within the obligation of good faith in § 1.302 of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n413 There is, as yet, little evidence in the cases that the courts will adopt these suggestions.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 333. See, e.g., Hyde v. Bains, 22 So. 2d 324 (Ala. 1945) ; Barnett v. Dooley, 212 S.W.2d 598 (Tenn. 1948) .

(n2)Footnote 334. See, e.g., Indian Land & Trust Co. v. Clement, 109 P. 1089 (Okla. 1908) ; Continental Grain Co. v. Afram Bros. Co., 151 N.W.2d 685 (Wis. 1967) . However, lease termination could result from tenant abandonment of the leased premises. See discussion in § 40.11(a).

(n3)Footnote 335. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 13.1 & cmt. a (1977).

(n4)Footnote 336. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 13.1 & cmt. a (1977), reporter's n.1. For a case that adopts the Restatement approach, see Cain Partnership, Ltd. v. Pioneer Inv. Servs. Co., 914 S.W.2d 452 (Tenn. 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 337. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note (1977).

(n6)Footnote 338. See, e.g., Sutton v. Hiram Lodge, 10 S.E. 585 (Ga. 1889) .

(n7)Footnote 339. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7, cmt. d (1977).

(n8)Footnote 340. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7, cmt. e (1977).

(n9)Footnote 341. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7, cmt. e (1977).

(n10)Footnote 342. See, e.g., Markey v. Smith, 16 N.E.2d 20 (Mass. 1938) .

(n11)Footnote 343. See, e.g., Remedco Corp. v. Bryn Mawr Hotel Corp., 257 N.Y.S.2d 525 (Civ. Ct. 1965) .

(n12)Footnote 344. See, e.g., Markey v. Smith, 16 N.E.2d 20 (Mass. 1938) ; Annotation, Lease Provisions Allowing Termination or Forfeiture for Violation of Law, 92 A.L.R.3d 967, 972 (1979) .

(n13)Footnote 345. See Miller v. Compton, 185 S.W.2d 754 (Tex. Ct. App. 1945) .

(n14)Footnote 346. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7 cmt. a (1977).

(n15)Footnote 347. See, e.g., Grabino v. Howard Stores Corp., 442 N.Y.S.2d 713 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1981) ; Morris v.

Austraw, 152 S.E.2d 155 (N.C. 1967) .

(n16)Footnote 348. See, e.g., Padilla v. Sais, 414 P.2d 223 (N.M. 1966) ; Larsen v. Sjogren, 226 P.2d 177 (Wyo. 1951) .

(n17)Footnote 349. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.94 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n18)Footnote 350. See, e.g., Sandra Frocks, Inc. v. Ziff, 74 N.E.2d 699 (Ill. 1947) (summary possession action); Johnson v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 130 N.W. 807 (Iowa 1911) (notice).

(n19)Footnote 351. See, e.g., Dang v. Cox Corp., 655 P.2d 658 (Utah 1982) .

(n20)Footnote 352. See, e.g., Duran v. Housing Authority of Denver, 761 P.2d 180 (Colo. 1988) ; Lee v. Park, 793 N.Y.S.2d 214 (App. Div. 2005) ; Barnett v. Dooley, 212 S.W.2d 598 (Tenn. 1948) ; See F.G. Madara, Annotation, Demand of Rent Due as Prerequisite of Enforcement of Forfeiture of Termination of Lease Providing Termination for Nonpayment, 28 A.L.R.2d 803 (1953) .

(n21)Footnote 353. See, e.g., Indian Land & Trust Co. v. Clement, 109 P. 1089 (Okla. 1908) .

(n22)Footnote 354. See, e.g., Miller Dairy Products Co. v. Puryear, 310 S.W.2d 518 (Ky. 1957) ; Santos v. Eagle Pass, 727 S.W.2d 126 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987) .

(n23)Footnote 355. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, statutory note & reporter's note 13 (1977).

(n24)Footnote 356. See, e.g., Independence Flying Service, Inc. v. Abitz, 386 S.W.2d 399 (Mo. 1965) ; Chrones v. Wade, 94 A.2d 242 (R.I. 1953) .

(n25)Footnote 357. See, e.g., Arlen Realty, Inc. v. Dozier, 393 So. 2d 489 (Ala. Ct. App. 1980); Siegel v. Kentucky Fried Chicken, Inc., 492 N.E.2d 390 (N.Y. 1986) (notice by a lawyer was insufficient when lease required notice by landlord); Russell v. Park City Utah Corp., 506 P.2d 1274 (Utah 1973) .

(n26)Footnote 358. See, e.g., Tkach v. American Sportsman, Inc., 316 N.W.2d 785 (N.D. 1982) .

(n27)Footnote 359. See, e.g., Dixon v. American Indus. Leasing Co., 253 S.E.2d 150 (W. Va. 1979) .

(n28)Footnote 360. See, e.g., Fritts v. Cloud Oak Flooring Co., 478 S.W.2d 8 (Mo. Ct. App. 1972) ; Annotation, Lease Provisions Allowing Termination or Forfeiture for Violation of Law, 92 A.L.R.3d 967, 972 (1979) .

(n29)Footnote 361. See Schlegel v. Hansen, 570 P.2d 292 (Idaho 1977) .

(n30)Footnote 362. See, e.g., Bentler v. Poulson, 141 N.W.2d 551 (Iowa 1966) ; Realty Developing Co. v. Wakefield Ready Mixed Concrete Co., 100 N.E.2d 28 (Mass. 1951) .

(n31)Footnote 363. See discussion in § 40.08(b)(2).

(n32)Footnote 364. See, e.g., Goldberg v. Pearl, 138 N.E. 141 (Ill. 1923) ; See Annotation, Lessor's Retention of Past Due Rental Payments As Precluding Termination of Lease and Dispossession of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent, 39 A.L.R.4th 1204 (1985) ; J.E. O'Brien, Annotation, Landlord's Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Right to Forfeit Because of Tenant's Past or Future Violations of Terms of Lease, 109 A.L.R. 1267 (1937) ; Cf. Midland Mgmt. Co. v. Helgason, 630 N.E.2d 836 (Ill. 1994) (landlord did not waive breach by accepting Section 8 housing assistance payments; court was of the view that such payments do not constitute "rent").

(n33)Footnote 365. See, e.g., Riverside Development Co. v. Ritchie, 650 P.2d 657 (Idaho 1982) .

(n34)Footnote 366. See, e.g., Connealy v. Mueller, 319 N.W.2d 86 (Neb. 1982) ; Sherrill v. Harlan Theater Co., 75 S.W.2d 775 (Ky. 1934) .

(n35)Footnote 367. See, e.g., Myers v. Herskowitz, 165 P. 1031 (Cal. Ct. App. 1917) ; Schultz v. Cardwell, 253 P. 822 (Wash. 1927) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.95, at 393 (A. James Casner ed. 1952) ;but see, e.g., Cuschner v. Westlake, 86 P. 948 (Wash. 1906) (landlord waived forfeiture by accepting rent on the same day forfeiture had been declared).

(n36)Footnote 368. See, e.g., Silva v. Campbell, 24 P. 316 (Cal. 1890) ; Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 31 N.W. 100 (Mich. 1887) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.95, at 393 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n37)Footnote 369. See Reeves v. Baker, 530 P.2d 30 (Or. 1974) ; Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.2 n.42 (1980).

(n38)Footnote 370. See, e.g., Shiflett v. Anchor Rome Mills, Inc., 50 S.E.2d 853 (Ga. Ct. App. 1948) (waiver); Rose & Crown, Ltd. v. Shaw Enterprises, Inc., 346 A.2d 459 (Md. Ct. App. 1975) (no waiver); Davidsohn v. Doyle, 825 P.2d 1227 (Nev. 1992) (no waiver); see generally Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.2 n.42 (1980).

(n39)Footnote 371. See, e.g., Jose v. Iglesias, 462 F.2d 214 (9th Cir. 1972) ; See Annotation, Lease Provisions Allowing Termination or Forfeiture for Violation of the Law, 92 A.L.R.3d 967 (1979) .

(n40)Footnote 372. See, e.g., Miller v. Reidy, 260 P. 358 (Cal. Ct. App. 1927) ; Girard v. Appleby, 660 P.2d 245 (Utah 1983) , abrograted on other grounds, Meadowbrook, LLC v. Flower 959 P.2d 115 (Utah 1998) .

(n41)Footnote 373. See, e.g., Hoffman Wall Paper Co. v. Hartford, 159 A. 346 (Conn. 1932) ; Haack v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 603 S.W.2d 645 (Mo. Ct. App. 1980) .

(n42)Footnote 374. See, e.g., Gonsalves v. Gilbert, 356 P.2d 379 (Hawaii 1960) ; Gainesville v. Charter Leasing Corp., 483 So. 2d 465 (Fla. Ct. App. 1986) ; TSS-Seedman's, Inc. v. Elota Realty Co., 72 N.Y.2d 1024, 534 N.Y.S.2d 925, 531 N.E.2d 646 (N.Y. 1988) .

(n43)Footnote 375. See, e.g., Allen v. Marshall County, 489 So. 2d 566 (Ala. 1986) (lease modification); Mid Continent Refrigerator Co. v. Williams, 285 So. 2d 247 (demand for rent); Sycamore Mills, Inc. v. Hervey Veneer Co., 44 S.E.2d 531 (N.C. 1947) (suit for rent).

(n44)Footnote 376. See, e.g., C & A. Land Co. v. Rudolf Inv. Corp, 296 S.E.2d 149 (Ga. Ct. App. 1982) ; Pacific Warehouse Co. v. McKenzie Hunt Paper Co., 141 P. 1147 (Wash. 1914) .

(n45)Footnote 377. See, e.g., Sherrill v. Harlan Theater Co., 75 S.W.2d 775 (Ky. 1934) ; J.E. O'Brien, Annotation, Landlord's Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Right to Forfeit Because of Tenant's Past or Future Violations of Terms of Lease, 109 A.L.R. 1267 (1937) .

(n46)Footnote 378. See, e.g., Easterling v. Peterson, 753 P.2d 902 (N.M. 1988) ; H.D. Warren, Annotation, Relief Against Forfeiture of Lease for Nonpayment of Rent, 31 A.L.R.2d 321 (1953) ; Howard C. Joyce, Annotation, Estoppel by Apparent Acquiescence In or Silence Concerning Improvements of Real Property to Assert Antagonistic Title or Interest, 76 A.L.R. 304 (1932) .

(n47)Footnote 379. See, e.g., Falk v. Allen, 739 F.2d 461 (9th Cir. 1984) ; Steinegger v. Fields, 425 A.2d 597 (Conn. Super. Ct. 1980) ; Entrepreneur, Ltd. v. Yasuna, 498 A.2d 1151 (D.C. Ct. App. 1985) ; Famous Permanent Wave Shops, Inc. v. Smith, 23 N.E.2d 767 (Ill. Ct. App. 1939) ; 269 Associates v. Yerkes, 113 Misc. 2d 450, 449 N.Y.S.2d 593 (1982) .

(n48)Footnote 380. See, e.g., D'Anna v. Rupp, 32 S.W.2d 136 (Mo. Ct. App. 1930) ; See 1 American Law of Property § 3.95 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); J.E. O'Brien, Annotation, Landlord's Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Right to Forfeit Because of Tenant's Past or Future Violations of Terms of Lease, 109 A.L.R. 1267 (1937) .

(n49)Footnote 381. See, e.g., Thomas v. Given, 251 P.2d 887 (Ariz. 1952) ; Nicoli v. Frouge Corp., 368 A.2d 74 (Conn. 1976) ; Ladner v. Pigg,919 So. 2d 100 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005) ; Moore v. Richfield Oil Corp., 377 P.2d 32 (Or. 1962) ; H.D. Warren, Annotation, Relief Against Forfeiture of Lease for Nonpayment of Rent, 31 A.L.R.2d 321 (1953) .

(n50)Footnote 382. See, e.g., Humphrey v. Humphrey, 48 So. 2d 424 (Ala. 1950) (dictum); Farmer v. Pitts, 187 N.W. 95 (Neb. 1922) .

(n51)Footnote 383. See, e.g., Southwest Village Water Co. v. Fleming, 442 So. 2d 89 (Ala. 1983) (breach of covenant to repair); Cesar v. Virgin, 92 So. 406 (Ala. 1922) (breach of prohibition against assignment without consent).

(n52)Footnote 384. See, e.g., Bethlehem Steel Corp. v. Shonk Land Co., 288 S.E.2d 139 (W. Va. 1982) (breach of covenant to pay royalties).

(n53)Footnote 385. See, e.g., Thomas v. Given, 251 P.2d 887 (Ariz. 1952) (mistake); Paducah Home Oil Co. v. Paxton, 2 S.W.2d 650 (Ky. 1928) (rent lost in the mail); Antur Realty Corp. v. Rivera, 442 N.Y.S.2d 732 (Civ. Ct. 1981) (landlord prevented rent payment in order to evict tenant and re let at higher rental).

(n54)Footnote 386. See, e.g., Mobilia, Inc. v. Santos, 492 A.2d 544 (Conn. Ct. App. 1985) (same); Halliday v. Auburn Mobile Homes, 511 N.E.2d 1086 (Ind. Ct. App. 1987) (deliberate breach); Haddad v. Francis, 537 A.2d 174, 537 A.2d 175 (willful conduct or gross negligence).

(n55)Footnote 387. See, e.g., Rokusek v. Jensen, 548 N.W.2d 570 (Iowa 1996) . In the Rokusek case, the landlords gave a statutory notice of noncompliance to their residential tenant, advising the tenant that the lease would terminate in 30 days if the tenant did not remedy several lease-violating conditions within 14 days. The tenant brought an action to enjoin the threatened eviction. The lower court issued a broad permanent injunction that restrained the landlords from evicting the tenant and from raising the rent. But the Iowa Supreme Court subsequently dissolved the injunction. It said that adequate remedies, short of injunction, were available to the tenant to deal with the threat of eviction. In particular, the tenant could, pursuant to statute, assert defenses against eviction if the landlord brought a forcible entry and detainer proceeding, and the tenant could also bring a statutory action for declaratory relief. The Iowa Supreme Court said that the lower court's injunction "effectively created a new lease" that prevented the landlords from evicting the tenant "for any reason." This went beyond the equitable authority of the court. But cf. Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies 2.5(3) (2d ed. 1993) (Stating that the rule regarding adequacy of legal remedies has declined in importance: it is "often ignored, sidestepped, or invoked in a way that means something else altogether").

See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6).

(n56)Footnote 388. Statutes providing for lease termination are identified in Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7, statutory note (1977).

(n57)Footnote 389. See, e.g., N.J. Rev. Stat. § 46:8; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 40.253. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7, statutory note 4 & § 12.1, statutory note 1. Summary possession statutes are discussed in § 40.09(c). Some statutes, however, are more limited. See Cain Partnership, Ltd. v. Pioneer Inv. Servs. Co., 914 S.W.2d 452 (Tenn. 1996) (commercial lease case in which tenant did not pay taxes as provided in the lease; the lease contained no termination provision, and the court said that the Tennessee detainer statute did not address the problem of a tenant who breaches the provisions of a lease whose term has not expired; however, the court adopted a Restatement rule that would permit lease termination if the tenant's breach deprives the landlord of a "significant inducement to the making of the lease").

(n58)Footnote 390. See, e.g., N.M. Stat. Ann. § N. 1978, §§ 30-19-11--40A-19-11 (gambling); Wis. Stats. 704.17 & 823.113(1) (landlord who receives written notice from law enforcement agency regarding drug related nuisances of tenant may evict tenant within five days after receiving notice).

(n59)Footnote 391. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.12.030(5).

(n60)Footnote 392. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2564. Lease termination statutes are listed and briefly described in Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.7 statutory note (1977).

(n61)Footnote 393. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6).

(n62)Footnote 394. See Department of Housing and Urban Development v. Rucker, 535 U.S. 125 (2002) (Federal housing statutes authorize expulsion of tenant if tenant's children or guests possess or traffic in illegal drugs, whether or not tenant had knowledge of the drug-related activity). Public housing is discussed in chapter 45.

(n63)Footnote 395. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.201.

(n64)Footnote 396. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68 § 250.501; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.201.

(n65)Footnote 397. See, e.g., Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8 401(e); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:18-55.

(n66)Footnote 398. See, e.g., Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.201.

(n67)Footnote 399. Id., § 4.207.

(n68)Footnote 400. See, e.g., Fifth & Broadway Partnership v. Kimny, Inc., 162 Cal. Rptr. 271 (Cal. Ct. App. 1980) ; Hunter v. Porter, 77 P. 434 (Idaho 1904) .

(n69)Footnote 401. See In re M.J.K., Inc., 18 B.R. 76 (B.C.S.D. Fla. 1982) ; Ivy Hill Park Apartments v. G.N.B. Parking Corp., 566 A.2d 565 (N.J. Sup. 1989).

(n70)Footnote 402. See, e.g., 269 Associates v. Yerkes, 113 Misc. 2d 450, 449 N.Y.S.2d 593 (Civ. Ct. 1982) ; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.204.

(n71)Footnote 403. See, e.g., Washington Square, Inc. v. First Lady Beauty Salons, Inc., 625 P.2d 1311 (Or. 1981) ; Rainey v. Quigley, 178 P.2d 148 (Or. 1947) .

(n72)Footnote 404. See, e.g., Foundation Dev. Corp. v. Loehmann's, Inc., 788 P.2d 1189 (Ariz. 1990) (trivial); Farmer v. Pitts, 187 N.W. 95 (Neb. 1922) (technical breach: mail was delayed).

(n73)Footnote 405. See, e.g., Thomas v. Given, 251 P.2d 887 (Ariz. 1952) (mistake); Caine v. Powell, 202 P.2d 931 (Or. 1948) (fraud); see generally Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.4 (1980).

(n74)Footnote 406. See Rokusek v. Jensen, 548 N.W.2d 570 (Iowa 1996) (broad injunction against threatened eviction dissolved on the ground that adequate remedies were available at law). But cf. Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies 2.5(3) (2d ed. 1993) (Stating that the rule regarding adequacy of legal remedies has declined in importance: it is "often ignored, sidestepped, or invoked in a way that means something else altogether").

(n75)Footnote 407. The doctrine is discussed in § 41.08.

(n76)Footnote 408. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp. 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) .

(n77)Footnote 409. See § 43.04(d)(2), below.

(n78)Footnote 410. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(d)(1)(B)(ii).

(n79)Footnote 411. See establishment clause (Statute provides that tenants shall not be removed from leased residential premises except upon a showing of good cause); N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:18-61.3(a) (Landlord may not evict residential tenant or fail to renew residential lease except for good cause). A statute also limits the ability of landlords to evict tenants in residential apartments that are being converted to condominium units. See N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:18-61.8; see also Vander Sterre Bros. Constr. v. Keating, 284 N.J. Super. 433, 665 A.2d 779 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1995) (Statutory restrictions apply to a residential unit that the owner originally constructed to be a condominium unit, thereafter rented to a tenant, and subsequently proposed to sell to a third party as a condominium unit). One of the provisions of the New Jersey Anti Eviction Act permits removal of a tenant when the tenant has been convicted of or pleaded guilty to a drug related offense. Focusing on this provision, a public housing tenant who had been convicted of a drug offense claimed that eviction would violate the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment. He lost. See Taylor v. Cisneros, 102 F.3d 1334 (3d Cir. 1996) .

(n80)Footnote 412. See, e.g., Kenneth Salzberg & Audrey Zibelman, Good Cause Eviction, 21 Willamette L. Rev. 61 (1985).

(n81)Footnote 413. See Deborah Hodges Bell, Providing Security of Tenure for Residential Tenants: Good Faith as a Limitation on the Landlord's Right to Terminate, 19 Ga. L. Rev. 483 (1985). Section 1.302 of the U.R.L.T.A. states: "Every duty under this Act and every act which must be performed as a condition precedent to the exercise of a right or remedy under this Act imposes an obligation of good faith in its performance or environment."

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.09

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.09 Recovery of Possession from the Tenant.

§ 40.09(a) Introduction.

At common law, a landlord had the right to recover possession of the leased premises from an occupying tenant upon expiration of the lease term, or, if the lease was of indefinite duration, following proper notice and passage of time, as appropriate. The landlord also had the right to recover possession of the leased premises from an occupying tenant after a premature termination of the lease, including a premature termination resulting from the landlord's exercise of a valid power of termination. However, the existence of a right on the part of the landlord to take possession of the premises did not necessarily ensure tenant cooperation. In many instances, particularly in cases of tenant breach and exercise of a power of termination by the landlord, the landlord who desired to take possession of the premises was required to take some action to remove the tenant from the premises.

One option that was open to the landlord was to bring a judicial action to eject a tenant from the premises. However, ejectment was a relatively slow, complex, and expensive procedure. n414 Delay incident to the ejectment action meant that tenant could deny the landlord the right to income from the property by refusing to pay rent and by preventing sale or rental to someone else. n415 Accordingly, landlords often resorted to a second recourse that was available at common law to remove a tenant: self help. Early common law permitted a landlord having a right to possession to enter the premises and to use force, short of bodily harm or death, to expel the tenant. n416 This remedy was speedy and inexpensive, but it sometimes led to violence.

Over time, some limitations were imposed on landlord entry and self help. In 1381, the Statute of Forcible Entry made it a crime for a landlord to enter the premises by self help in other than a "peaceable and easy manner." n417 However, the enactment of the criminal statute did not necessarily mean that forcible entry was tortious, and English courts declined to use the criminal statute as a basis of liability for trespass to land. Indeed, it was thought that the landlord could not be liable to the tenant in trespass if the tenant no longer had a right to possess the land. Nonetheless, the English courts eventually ruled that the landlord's privilege of entry did not include the right to use force on the occupant: use of force could make the landlord liable to the occupant for assault or battery. n418

In 1920, the English law regarding landlord self help changed. Newton v. Harland, the leading case for the proposition that the landlord could be liable for assault or battery for the use of force upon entry, was overruled. n419 The new rule permitted the landlord to expel a wrongfully possessing tenant from the property, without liability in tort, if the landlord used no more force than was reasonably necessary. This is the current English rule. n420

Given the rather confused development of English common law on self help repossession by landlords, it is not surprising that, as one commentator put it, "the state of the law in the United States is somewhat muddled." n421 The state of American law is also complicated by the widespread enactment of legislation providing for a summary possession remedy in favor of landlords and providing civil remedies to tenants who are wrongfully dispossessed as a result of the landlord's forcible entry.

§ 40.09(b) Landlord Self Help.

§ 40.09(b)(1) Availability of Self Help.

American jurisdictions are divided over whether the landlord may exercise self help to recover possession of the premises from a holdover tenant, or whether the landlord must resort to the courts. n422 An apparent majority of American jurisdictions permit self help, following the English rule that the landlord has a privilege to enter property held by a holdover tenant. n423 Under this view, a possessory remedy available to the landlord under a summary possession statute is considered to be a cumulative, not an exclusive, remedy. n424

However, an increasing number of American jurisdictions have taken the position that the landlord has no right of self help repossession against a holdover tenant. n425 Courts that prohibit landlord use of self help have focused on the importance of preserving the peace, and they have noted that modern summary possession statutes provide landlords with a means of obtaining relatively quick possession of the premises without resorting to self help. n426

The Restatement does not favor landlord self help. It provides that, if the controlling law offers a "speedy judicial remedy for recovery of possession," neither the landlord nor an incoming tenant may use self help to recover possession of the premises from a holdover tenant, unless the controlling law also preserves the right to self help. n427 Even if the controlling law does preserve the right of self help, the Restatement further prohibits the landlord from resorting to it unless a recovery by self help is accomplished: 1) within a reasonable time after lease termination; 2) without causing physical harm, or a reasonable expectation of physical harm, to the tenant or to others on the premises with the tenant's permission; and 3) by using reasonable care to avoid damage to the personal property of the tenant and others. n428

In many jurisdictions landlord self help is prohibited by legislation. Several statutes that provide a summary possession remedy for landlords also provide that a court action is the landlord's exclusive dispossession remedy for a holdover tenant, although the limitation may apply only to residential tenancies. n429 Both the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act and the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code require the landlord to resort to judicial action to recover the premises from a holdover residential tenant. n430 Given the large number of states that have adopted either the Uniform Act, the Model Code, or comparable legislation, as well as the jurisdictions that have otherwise prohibited self help by statute or by court decision, it is probable that, in the residential landlord-tenant context, a majority of the states do not permit landlord self help to recover possession from a holdover tenant. n431

§ 40.09(b)(2) The Requirement of Peaceable Entry.

The availability of a self help remedy in many jurisdictions does not necessarily mean that the landlord will actually be entitled to enter the premises and expel a holdover tenant. Even where self help is permitted, it is usually held that the landlord's entry must be "peaceable." n432 An entry that is other than peaceable may be found to violate an applicable forcible entry and detainer statute, entitling the tenant to regain possession of the premises. n433 It has been pointed out that this right may be of marginal utility to a tenant who, because of breach of the lease, may ultimately be subject to eviction anyway. n434 However, in a number of jurisdictions, landlord violation of the statute also entitles the tenant to recover damages. n435

What constitutes a "peaceable" entry varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and from case to case. In some cases, entry achieved by unlocking a door, or by breaking down a door, have been regarded as peaceable. n436 In other cases, entry achieved by deception, by picking a lock, by threat of force, or by climbing through an open window have been said to violate the standard. n437 Landlord entry has also been found to be unlawful when objected to by the tenant. n438

Even when the entry itself has been peaceable, the landlord's subsequent exclusion of the tenant from possession may not be. In some cases, for example, the landlord has been found to have engaged in unlawful conduct by changing locks to exclude a tenant from possession, n439 or by threatening a tenant who attempts to re-enter the premises. n440 It is not always clear whether the courts consider such exclusionary actions by landlords to constitute forcible entry, forcible detainer, or assault. n441 However, it is clear that some rather nonviolent conduct by landlords has been found to be unlawful.

§ 40.09(b)(3) Landlord Civil Liability.

Even when the landlord has a right to engage in self help repossession efforts, use of force may expose the landlord to tort liability for injury to the person or property of the holdover tenant. In every American jurisdiction, the landlord will be liable for injuries to the tenant or the tenant's personal property caused by the use of more force that is reasonably necessary for the eviction. n442 However, there is a division of authority among American jurisdictions regarding the tort liability of the landlord for using reasonable force to expel a holdover tenant from the premises.

A minority of jurisdictions that permit landlord self help follow the prevailing English rule that the privilege of the landlord to repossess the premises extends to the use of reasonable force to evict the tenant and the tenant's property. n443 So long as the landlord uses no more force than is reasonably necessary to recover possession, the landlord is not liable for injury to the person or property of the tenant. Under this view, the forcible entry and detainer statute does not make the landlord civilly liable for forcibly ejecting a holdover tenant. n444 In contrast, a greater number of jurisdictions have adopted the rule, for a time in effect in England, that the landlord's privilege of entry does not extend to the use of force against the person or property of the occupant. In those jurisdictions, use of force against the person or property of the holdover tenant is tortious. n445

§ 40.09(b)(4) Effect of Lease Provisions.

The right of a landlord to engage in self help repossession may also be affected by the provisions of the lease. In jurisdictions where self help is otherwise unavailable, the view expressed in the majority of decided cases is that the tenant may consent to the landlord's use of self help. n446 The minority view is that lease clauses providing for landlord self help are void as contrary to the public policy supporting forcible entry and detainer statutes. n447 The Restatement position is that, when the controlling law does not preserve the right of self help, a lease provision purporting to give such a right to the landlord is void. n448 In some jurisdictions, such agreements may be prohibited by statute. n449

§ 40.09(c) Summary Possession by the Landlord.

§ 40.09(c)(1) Introduction.

Concerns about injuries to persons and property resulting from landlord self help prompted many American legislatures, in the second half of the 19th century, to enact statutes providing for special judicially supervised repossession remedies. n450 These special remedies, often called "summary possession" remedies or "summary procedures," were intended to be quicker and simpler than the traditional common law remedy of ejectment. Such remedies are now available, by statute, in every state, the District of Columbia, and several territories. n451

In some states, the summary possession remedy has been made a part of a "forcible entry and detainer" statute. Modern forcible entry and detainer statutes are descendants of the English Statute of Forcible Entry, which, in 1381, made it a crime for a landlord to enter the premises by self help in other than a "peaceable and easy manner." n452 Later English legislation added a remedy for restitution of possession to tenants who had been illegally removed by landlords. n453 The remedy of restitution of possession was eventually made available to landlords whose tenants illegally held over after the end of the lease. n454 Among other things, modern forcible entry and detainer statutes typically prohibit landlord entry by force, provide a summary remedy for tenants who have been deprived of possession by forcible entry and detainer by landlords, and provide landlords with a summary remedy to take possession of the premises from tenants who are wrongfully in possession. n455

In other states, the summary possession remedy is separately provided for by statute. Separate summary possession statutes are devised exclusively to provide landlords with a judicially supervised possessory remedy that is simpler and more efficient than the common law ejectment action. n456

§ 40.09(c)(2) Nature of the Summary Possession Remedy.

The summary possession action is primarily a civil action for possession of the leased premises, although most jurisdictions also permit claims for rent to be joined with the landlord's possessory claim. n457 Some jurisdictions also provide for the recovery of monetary penalties if the tenant's holding over has been in bad faith. n458 The grounds upon which the action may be brought vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, but typically include nonpayment of rent and wrongful occupancy of the premises following lease termination. n459 Some summary possession statutes permit the landlord to bring an action for breach of any lease covenant. n460

The availability of a summary possession action generally does not depend upon the existence of a termination clause in the lease. Certainly a termination clause would not be required when the statutory grounds for the action include holding over by the tenant, and the tenant holds over following normal expiration of the lease. Neither is a lease termination clause required for most other tenant defaults that come within the prescribed statutory grounds for the summary possession action. Thus, in nearly all jurisdictions that permit summary possession actions based upon nonpayment of rent, the lease need not contain a power of termination in order for the landlord to exercise a summary possession remedy based upon nonpayment of rent. n461 A number of statutes permit the landlord to invoke the summary possession process for breach of any lease covenant or condition even though there is no termination clause set forth in the lease. n462 However, a few summary possession statutes require, as a predicate to the summary possession action, that the lease be terminated or forfeited by the landlord. n463 And some statutes permit the landlord to pursue a summary action based upon tenant defaults other than those expressly set forth in the statute if an applicable termination clause is set forth in the lease. n464

Before the landlord may bring a summary possession action, the landlord must generally provide a notice to the tenant that identifies the tenant's breach, and that requires the tenant either to cure the breach, if it is curable, or to vacate the premises within a specified period of time. n465 The notice period is typically quite short, usually between three and ten days for nonpayment of rent. If the tenant vacates the premises after receiving the landlord's notice, the lease will be considered to have terminated. If the tenant does not vacate, and the breach has not been cured by the end of the notice period, the tenant will usually be considered to be in unlawful detainer, and the landlord will be entitled to bring a formal summary possession action. The date for trial will usually be very soon after service of the summons, perhaps as few as two days thereafter. n466

If the landlord is successful in the summary action, a judgment for possession will be entered, and a writ of restitution will be issued for execution. A judgment for rent or monetary penalties may also be entered, depending upon the jurisdiction and the proof. The writ of restitution is usually to be executed immediately, but the applicable legislation may provide for a delay of execution to permit the tenant to vacate the premises voluntarily, or it may permit other stays of execution in the discretion of the court. Execution of the writ may also be suspended if the tenant posts an appeal bond. If the tenant's breach was nonpayment of rent, the tenant may also be permitted to cure the breach prior to execution and to be reinstated in the tenancy. However, if the writ of execution is not otherwise stayed, and if the tenant does not timely vacate or cure, where permitted to do so, the writ of restitution will be executed by an officer of the court. n467

§ 40.09(c)(3) Issues Appropriate for Summary Proceedings.

The range of issues that may be considered in summary possession proceedings has traditionally been rather limited. Because summary proceedings were developed to provide the landlord with a quick possessory remedy, the traditional focus was on whether the tenant had committed the breach alleged by the landlord. Thus, in order to defend against the landlord's possessory claim for nonpayment of rent, the tenant could contend that the rent had actually been paid, n468 but the tenant was generally not permitted to assert affirmative defenses and counterclaims related to the nonpayment of rent. n469 Instead, the tenant was generally required to assert the affirmative claims in a separate action. n470 Restricting the issues that a tenant could raise in a summary eviction proceeding affirmed the traditional common law notion that lease covenants are independent, and that the failure by one party to perform a lease covenant does not excuse nonperformance by the other. n471

This has changed in recent years. In many jurisdictions today, residential tenants in summary possession proceedings are permitted to assert affirmative defenses and counterclaims relating to the landlord's claims for rent or possession. An example may be seen in the Illinois Supreme Court's decision in Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little. n472 There, some tenants were threatened with summary eviction for nonpayment of rent. The tenants conceded that rent had not been paid; however, they contended that rent had been properly withheld on the ground that their landlords had breached their obligations regarding the habitability of the leased premises. The tenants argued that the landlords should not be entitled to possession of the premises based upon nonpayment of rent when rent was being properly withheld on account of the landlords' breach. The court agreed, and ruled that the alleged breach of the habitability warranty was a proper affirmative defense to the landlords' summary possession action.

A number of other courts have concluded that breach of the implied warranty of habitability is a proper affirmative defense in a summary possession proceeding. n473 Courts have also permitted residential tenants to assert a retaliatory eviction defense. This is an affirmative defense that the summary proceeding was brought in retaliation against the tenant for reporting substandard housing conditions to governmental authorities. n474 Other affirmative claims have sometimes been permitted as well. n475 Legislation in some jurisdictions has also enabled tenants to assert affirmative claims. n476

§ 40.09(c)(4) Statutory Limitations on Landlord Possessory Remedies.

The landlord's right to evict tenants from possession is, in some instances, subject to special limitations imposed by statute. For example, before evicting tenants from federally assisted public housing, a public housing authority is required, by federal statute, to provide the tenants with an opportunity to examine documents directly related to the eviction, and to provide them with an opportunity to participate in a grievance proceeding that incorporates basic elements of due process. n477 The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 provides, among other things, for a delay of eviction when the tenants are the spouse, children, or other dependents of a person in military service who occupy a dwelling for rent of $1,200 per month or less. n478

§ 40.09(c)(5) Landlord Liability for Injury to Tenant Personal Property.

If the landlord is successful in the summary possession action, the court will issue a writ of restitution, directing an officer to remove the tenant from the leased premises and deliver possession to the landlord. Removal of the tenant will usually also entail removal of the tenant's personal property. n479 Some summary possession statutes include provisions regarding the disposition of tenant personal property, n480 but others do not provide much guidance to the executing officer. n481

Sometimes, the taking of possession results in injury to the tenant's personal property. And tenants, sensitive about injury to their property, have sometimes attempted to recover damages against their former landlords. Courts typically are reluctant to impose liability on landlords in this situation, reasoning that the landlord is not responsible for the conduct of the officer n482 or that the landlord simply has no duty to safeguard the tenant's property. n483 But courts have also indicated that a landlord will be liable to the tenant if, under the facts, the landlord has assumed enough control over the tenant's personal property to be considered a bailee and the landlord has failed to satisfy the appropriate standard of care. n484

§ 40.09(c)(6) Constitutional Issues.

§ 40.09(c)(6)(i) Early Trial Requirements and Limitations on Triable Issues.

Several procedural aspects of the summary possession remedy have been challenged on constitutional grounds. The most important case to date, Lindsay v. Normet, n485 warrants some discussion. The residential tenants in the Lindsay case withheld rent from their landlord when the landlord refused to make repairs to bring the leased premises into compliance with housing code requirements. Faced with the threat of summary eviction based on nonpayment of rent, the tenants sued in federal court, contending that the Constitution was violated by provisions of the Oregon Forcible Entry and Detainer statute that: 1) required trial to be held no later than six days after service of the complaint unless security for accruing rent is provided, 2) limited the triable issues to the tenant's default and prohibited consideration of defenses based upon the landlord's breach of a duty to maintain the premises, and 3) required a tenant who appeals from an adverse judgment to post a bond in twice the amount of rent anticipated to accrue during the appeal. The tenants' contentions were based on the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The United States Supreme Court rejected the tenants' due process claims. With respect to the short time between summons and trial, the Court observed that, in the recurring cases in which the tenant fails to pay rent or holds over after expiration of the tenancy, the issues for trial will simply be whether the tenant paid the rent or held over. Given the simplicity of issues, the court said that it could not declare that the Oregon procedures provided "an unduly short time for trial preparation," and it could not conclude that the early trial requirement was invalid on its face under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. n486 Regarding the statutory limitation on triable issues, the Court said that due process did not require a tenant to be able to assert all claims against the landlord in a summary possession action; it was sufficient that such claims could be raised in a separate action brought by the tenant. Neither did the Constitution require that a landlord's failure to maintain the premises be recognized as a defense in the summary possession action or as an excuse for the nonpayment of rent. The Constitution, said the Court, does not "forbid Oregon from treating the undertakings of the tenant and those of the landlord as independent rather than dependent covenants." n487

The court also rejected the tenants' equal protection arguments that the early trial requirement and the limitation on triable issues unconstitutionally discriminated against tenants. Utilizing a rational basis level of equal protection scrutiny, the Court determined that the state had a legitimate interest in quick resolution of landlord possession claims, and that the provisions for early trial and simplification of issues were closely related to the state's objective. However, the tenants fared better with their equal protection arguments regarding the requirement of a double bond for appeal. While indicating that adequate security for the landlord was appropriate during an appeal, the Court said that the required amount of the bond violated equal protection standards because it arbitrarily discriminated against tenants and did not bear a reasonable relationship to a valid state objective.

The Lindsay v. Normet decision supports the constitutionality of two important aspects of summary proceedings: limitation of issues and early trial procedures. When the issues for trial are simplified, a short period for trial preparation does not offend the Constitution. However, the Lindsay v. Normet case obviously does not prohibit states from permitting additional issues to be raised in summary proceedings. And, as discussed above, a number of jurisdictions have permitted residential tenants to assert affirmative claims in summary proceedings, including affirmative claims based upon the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability. If the triable issues are allowed to become more complex than those at issue in Lindsay, the Constitution may require longer periods for trial preparation.

§ 40.09(c)(6)(ii) Right to Jury Trial.

A number of courts have considered whether the parties to a summary possession action are constitutionally entitled to a jury trial. In Pernell v. Southall Realty, n488 the United States Supreme Court held that parties to a summary possession action in the District of Columbia were entitled to a jury trial as a matter of constitutional right. The Court reasoned that the right to a jury trial, under the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution, depended on whether the common law antecedent to a modern summary possession action was triable to a jury. Because the closest common law antecedent was an ejectment action, which was triable to a jury at common law, the Court ruled that the Seventh Amendment required that the right to jury trial be preserved in summary proceedings in federal courts. The Court rejected the argument that a jury trial right would impair the summary nature of the action.

Because the Seventh Amendment is not regarded as being binding upon the states, n489 the Pernell decision is not controlling in most summary eviction cases. However, many state constitutions have jury trial guarantees similar to that of the Seventh Amendment, and some state courts have concluded that a jury trial in a summary proceeding is constitutionally required. n490 It should also be noted that many summary possession statutes expressly provide for the availability of a jury trial at the request of either landlord or tenant. n491

Even when the constitution generally requires a jury trial, the outcome in a particular case may depend on the effect of a lease provision purporting to waive the right to such a trial. n492

§ 40.09(c)(6)(iii) Additional Issues.

Courts have considered the constitutionality of a number of additional summary possession procedures. For example, the California Supreme Court invalidated a procedure in which marshals, executing writs of possession, evicted all adult occupants of the leased premises, whether or not they had been named in the writ of possession. As applied to occupants not named in the writ, the court concluded that the practice could deprive occupants of property rights without notice and an opportunity to be heard, in violation of the [Go To Main]. n493 It has been held that a statutory provision requiring accruing rents to be paid into court during appeal unconstitutionally impaired an indigent's exercise of the right to an appeal. n494 Appeals bond requirements have been invalidated on equal protection grounds. n495 Additional procedures or practices that have been found to be constitutionally deficient include: a statutory procedure permitting the landlord to recover possession of the premises prior to judgment without an adequate hearing; n496 a pervasive practice of executing stale writs of possession; n497 and a moratorium on the issuance of possessory writs during the "holiday season." n498

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 414. See Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 92 S. Ct. 862, 31 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1972) .

(n2)Footnote 415. See id.

(n3)Footnote 416. See 1 Fowler Harper, et al., Law of Torts § 3.15, at 255 (2d ed. 1986).

(n4)Footnote 417. 5 Rich. 2, c. 7 (1381).

(n5)Footnote 418. See, e.g., Newton v. Harland, 133 Eng. Rep. 490 (C.P. 1840); See P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177 (1966) .

(n6)Footnote 419. See Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club, Ltd., 1 K.B. 720 (1920).

(n7)Footnote 420. See Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177 (1966) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (3d ed. 2000).

(n8)Footnote 421. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:5, at 400 (1980).

(n9)Footnote 422. The question is not presented when the tenant abandons the premises. There, the landlord clearly has the right to enter the premises. See § 40.11, below.

(n10)Footnote 423. See, e.g., Gower v. Waters, 132 A. 550 (Me. 1926) ; see P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177 (1966) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 2 (1977).

(n11)Footnote 424. See, e.g., Shorter v. Shelton, 33 S.E.2d 643 (Va. 1945) .

(n12)Footnote 425. See Camacho v. 1440 Rhode Island Ave. Corp., 620 A.2d 242 (D.C. 1993) ; Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 186 (1966) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (3d ed. 2000).

(n13)Footnote 426. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) ; Adelhelm v. Dougherty, 176 So. 775 (Fla. 1937) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 2 (1977).

(n14)Footnote 427. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2 (1977).

(n15)Footnote 428. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.3 (1977).

(n16)Footnote 429. See, e.g., [Go To Main]; N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 42 25.6, 25.9 (residential tenancies); R.I. Gen. Laws § 34 18 17; Cf. Cal. Civ. Code 789.3 (statute that prohibits residential landlords from, among other things, willfully cutting off utility service, changing locks, or removing windows with intent to terminate tenant's occupancy; also permits tenants to recover damages, attorneys' fees, and injunctive relief).

(n17)Footnote 430. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.207; Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code § 2 408.

(n18)Footnote 431. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80, at 398 (3d ed. 2000).

(n19)Footnote 432. See, e.g., Malcolm v. Little, 295 A.2d 711 (Del. 1972) ; Kassan v. Stout, 507 P.2d 87 (Cal. 1973) ; See W. Page Keeton, et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 23, at 143 44 (5th ed. 1984) [hereinafter Prosser and Keeton on Torts]. P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 189 (1966) .

(n20)Footnote 433. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) (possession); Malcolm v. Little, 295 A.2d 711 (Del. Sup. 1972) (possession); Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 199 207 (1966).

(n21)Footnote 434. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:8 (1980).

(n22)Footnote 435. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1174 (damages); Del. Code Ann. tit 25 § 5517 (damages).

(n23)Footnote 436. See Smith v. Detroit Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 73 N.W. 395 (Mich. 1897) (unlocking door); Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82 (1859) (breaking door).

(n24)Footnote 437. See Karp v. Margolis, 323 P.2d 557 (Cal. Ct. App. 1958) (picking lock); Pelavin v. Misner, 217 N.W. 36 (Mich. 1928); Simhiser v. Farber, 71 N.W.2d 412 (Wis. 1955) (threat); Bank of Cal. v. Taaffe, 18 P. 781 (Cal. 1888) (open window); Prosser and Keeton on Torts 144.

(n25)Footnote 438. See, e.g., Spinks v. Taylor, 278 S.E.2d 501 (N.C. 1981) , superseded by statute, according to Stanley v. Moore 454 S.E.2d 225 (N.C. 1995) .

(n26)Footnote 439. See Pelavin v. Misner, 217 N.W. 36 (Mich. 1928); Ardell v. Milner, 166 So. 2d 714 (Fla. Ct. App. 1964) .

(n27)Footnote 440. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) .

(n28)Footnote 441. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (3d ed. 2000).

(n29)Footnote 442. See, e.g., Gower v. Waters, 132 A. 550 (Me. 1926) ; Maddix v. Gammon, 169 S.W.2d 594 (Ky. 1943) ; See P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 222 (1966) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 4 (1977).

(n30)Footnote 443. See, e.g., Shorter v. Shelton, 33 S.E.2d 643 (Va. 1945) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 4 (1977); William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (3d ed. 2000).

(n31)Footnote 444. See P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 182-186 (1966) .

(n32)Footnote 445. See, e.g., Daluiso v. Boone, 455 P.2d 811 (Cal. 1969) ; Maddix v. Gammon, 169 S.W.2d 594 (Ky. 1943) ; Nelson v. Swanson, 31 P.2d 521 (Wash. 1934) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 4 (1977); William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.80 (3d ed. 2000).

(n33)Footnote 446. See, e.g., Goshen v. People, 44 P. 503 (Colo. 1896) ; Rucker v. Wynn, 441 S.E.2d 417 (Ga. Ct. App. 1994) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2, Reporter's Note 5 (1977); P.A. Agabin, Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R.3d 177, 194-198 (1966) .

(n34)Footnote 447. See, e.g., Jordan v. Talbot, 361 P.2d 20 (Cal. 1961) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2 & Reporter's Note 5 (1977).

(n35)Footnote 448. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.2 (2) (1977).

(n36)Footnote 449. See, e.g., Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 1.403(a)(1), 4.207, and 4.302(b).

(n37)Footnote 450. See Gerald R. Gibbons, Residential Landlord/Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems With Reference to the Proposed Model Code, 21 Hastings L.J. 369 (1970); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:10 (1980).

(n38)Footnote 451. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1, Statutory Note (1977).

(n39)Footnote 452. 5 Rich. 2, c. 7 (1381).

(n40)Footnote 453. 8 Hen. 6, c. 9 (1429).

(n41)Footnote 454. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1, statutory note (1977).

(n42)Footnote 455. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12-1171--1183; Iowa Code Ann. §§ 648.1 - 648.5; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1, statutory note (1977) (listing of statutes).

(n43)Footnote 456. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.1, Statutory Note 2 (1977).

(n44)Footnote 457. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1174; Free Exercise Clause; See Gerald R. Gibbons, Residential Landlord/Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems With Reference to the Proposed Model Code, 21 Hastings L.J. 369, 372 (1970).

(n45)Footnote 458. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1375 (landlord may recover the greater of 2 months rent or double actual damages); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1174 (trebling of damages for wilful holdover).

(n46)Footnote 459. See, e.g., N.Y. Real Prop. Acts. Law § 711; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.115.

(n47)Footnote 460. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1161.

(n48)Footnote 461. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Statutory Note (1977).

(n49)Footnote 462. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1161; Pa. Stat Ann. tit. 68 § 250.501.

(n50)Footnote 463. See, e.g. Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 521-68 & 521-69; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Statutory Note (1977).

(n51)Footnote 464. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:18-61.1.

(n52)Footnote 465. A demand that the tenant cure the breach may, of course, take the form of a demand to pay unpaid rent. The United States Second Circuit Court of Appeals recently ruled that the requirements of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692-1692o, are applicable to an attorney's rent demand notice issued to a tenant pursuant to New York summary eviction procedures. See Romea v. Heiberger & Associates, 163 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 1998) .

(n53)Footnote 466. See, e.g., William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.79 (3d ed. 2000); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant §§ 6.11-6.14 (1980); Gerald R. Gibbons, Residential Landlord/Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems With Reference to the Proposed Model Code, 21 Hastings L.J. 369, 371 (1970).

(n54)Footnote 467. See Gerald R. Gibbons, Residential Landlord/Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems With Reference to the Proposed Model Code, 21 Hastings L.J. 369, 374, 380 (1970); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant §§ 6:18 6:20 (1980). Cf. Cardenas v. Noren, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 367 (1991) (tenant, who had not been served with process, and who had not been named in judgment for possession, was wrongfully evicted from the premises; however, tenant's remedy was not to seek possession by a writ of mandate against the sheriff; instead, under statute, tenant should have presented claim of possession to court or levying officer).

(n55)Footnote 468. See, e.g., Hoover v. Israel, 68 N.E.2d 90 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1946) .

(n56)Footnote 469. See, e.g., Lindsay v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972) ; Barela v. Superior Court, 636 P.2d 582 (Cal. 1981) .

(n57)Footnote 470. See, e.g., Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972) ; Class v. Carter, 645 P.2d 536 (Or. 1982) .

(n58)Footnote 471. See Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 92 S. Ct. 862, 31 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1972) .

(n59)Footnote 472. 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972) .

(n60)Footnote 473. See, e.g., Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526 (N.J. 1970) ; Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160 (Wash. 1973) . The implied warranty of habitability is discussed in § 41.06.

(n61)Footnote 474. See, e.g., Dickhut v. Norton, 173 N.W.2d 297 (Wis. 1970) ; Jonathon M. Purver, Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of the Law, 40 A.L.R.3d 753 (1971) ; see also Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law 23 A.L.R.5th 140 (1994) (updating the annotation). The retaliatory eviction doctrine is discussed in § 41.08.

(n62)Footnote 475. See, e.g., Banke v. Community Realty Corp., 497 F. Supp. 409 (D. Md. 1980) (landlord's action racially motivated); Mascaro v. Hudson, 496 So. 2d 428 (La. Ct. App. 1986) (landlord's conduct discriminatory, on the basis of national origin); cf. Marick Real Estate, LLC v. Ramirez, 812 N.Y.S.2d 210 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (landlord brought proceedings to recover possession of rent stabilized apartment, claiming that tenant was using the premises for a child-care service, contrary to lease provisions; the court stated that it was the public policy of the state to promote the availability of home child care by restricting private covenants that inhibited the expansion of day care services, and it concluded that the landlord's petition failed to state a cause of action).

(n63)Footnote 476. See, e.g., Herrell v. Seyfarth, Shaw, Fairweather & Geraldson, 491 So. 2d 1173 (Fla. Ct. App. 1986) (statute permits all defenses at law).

(n64)Footnote 477. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437d(k) & (l)(7) Additional information about eviction from public housing is contained in chapter 45.

(n65)Footnote 478. See 50 U.S.C.A. §§ 501-30.

(N66)Footnote 479. See e.g., Christensen v. Hoover, 643 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1982) (Officer's duty is not only to remove the tenant, but also to remove the tenant's personal property and effects).

(n67)Footnote 480. See e.g., Fla. Stat. 83.62 (at or after the time the writ of possession is executed, landlord or landlord's agent may remove tenant's personal property to near the property line of the leased premises); Tex. Prop. Code 24.0061(d) & (e) (writ shall instruct the tenant to remove, or allow the landlord or a person acting under the officer's direction, to remove all personal property and place it outside, but not while it is raining, sleeting, or snowing, and not so as to block a sidewalk, passageway, or street).

(n68)Footnote 481. See e.g., Christensen v. Hoover, 643 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1982) ; Khan v. Heritage Property Management, 584 N.W.2d 725 (Iowa Ct. App. 1998) .

(n69)Footnote 482. See e.g., Iorio v. City of New York, 410 N.Y.S.2d 195 (1978) (a party at whose initiative a warrant is duly issued is not responsible for the manner in which a sheriff or marshal executes it); Ringler v. Sias, 428 N.E.2d 869 (Ohio App. 1980) (two sons of landlord's employee assisted the sheriff in removing tenant's personal property from leased mobile home and in placing it outside, where the property was damaged; court said the sheriff was responsible for the restoration of the premises to the landlord, and that the assistance of the boys did not create a duty on the part of the landlord concerning the personal property).

(n70)Footnote 483. See e.g., McCready v. Booth, 398 So. 2d 1000 (Fla. Ct. App. 1981) (tenant's property removed from premises pursuant to writ of possession while he was away on business trip; the property was placed on the edge of the street, where it was stolen; court said that it knew of no authority permitting a lawfully evicted tenant to sue the landlord for damaged personal property, in the absence of a showing that the damage was intentionally or maliciously done); Khan v. Heritage Property Management, 584 N.W.2d 725 (Iowa App. 1998) (officer placed tenant's personal property outside the apartment building, where most of it was vandalized or stolen; court declined to impose a duty of care on the landlord to protect or care for an evicted tenant's personal property where the legislature had not acted to do so; court also said that, in the absence of evidence that the landlord assumed possession or control over the tenant's personal property, the law imposed no duty on the landlord to care for it or to store it); Campos v. Investment Mgmt. Props., 917 S.W.2d 351 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) (under sheriff's supervision, landlord removed tenant personal property from the premises and placed it on the front lawn covered by a tarpaulin; court said tenant failed to establish any duty owed by the landlord to the tenant).

(n71)Footnote 484. See e.g., In re Clarkson, 105 B.R. 266 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (landlord took possession of tenant's personal property following eviction, becoming a bailee, obligated to exercise reasonable care; court concluded that landlord's sale of tenant's personal property amounted to conversion); Christensen v. Hoover, 643 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1982) (upon eviction, landlords placed tenant's personal property in storage and the property was damaged; although the landlords were gratuitous bailees and there was no evidence of negligence presented with respect to them, the landlords were liable to the tenant for damage to the property because the landlords had hired a moving company to transport the property; the moving company was a bailee for hire, and was burdened by a presumption of negligence that it failed to rebut, and the trial court found that an agency relationship existed between the landlords and the movers); Banks v. Korman Associates, 527 A.2d 933 (N.J. Super. 1987) (landlord who agreed to allow evicted tenant to temporarily leave furniture on the formerly leased premises after eviction became a gratuitous bailee; furniture was subsequently stolen; court said that gross negligence is the liability standard for a gratuitous bailee, and that the evidence fell short of establishing gross negligence on the part of the landlord).

(n72)Footnote 485. 405 U.S. 56 (1972) .

(n73)Footnote 486. Id. at 65 .

(n74)Footnote 487. Id. at 68 .

(n75)Footnote 488. 416 U.S. 363 (1974) .

(n76)Footnote 489. See, e.g., Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry. v. Bombolis, 241 U.S. 211 (1916) ; Linton v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 964 F.2d 1480 (5th Cir. 1992) ; Daniel A. Farber et al., Constitutional Law 399 (1993).

(n77)Footnote 490. See, e.g., Hill v. Levenson, 383 S.E.2d 110 (Ga. 1989) ; North School Congregate Hous. v. Merrithew, 558 A.2d 1189 (Me. 1989) ; but see Fowler Court Tenants, Inc. v. Young, 463 N.Y.S.2d 686 (Civ. Ct. 1983) .

(n78)Footnote 491. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1171; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.210; See generally .Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6:16 (1980).

(n79)Footnote 492. See e.g., Malan Realty Investors, Inc. v. Harris, 953 S.W.2d 624 (Mo. 1997) . In the Malan case, a commercial landlord brought an action for possession and breach of contract. The lease agreement contained a jury trial waiver provision. The court held that jury trial may be waived by contract, but it said that the waiver must be "knowingly and voluntarily or intelligently waived." 953 S.W.2d at 627 . The court indicated that the waiver would not be enforced if it resulted from "overreaching as a result of unequal bargaining positions." Id. In this case, the waiver was prominently displayed on the last page of the lease, it featured clear and unambiguous language, and there was no evidence that the tenant was under a bargaining disadvantage, so the court enforced the waiver provision. See generally Jay M. Zitter, Annotation, Contractual Jury Trial Waivers in State Civil Cases, 42 A.L.R.5th 53 (1996) ; W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Validity and Effect of Contractual Waiver of Trial by Jury, 73 A.L.R.2d 1332 (1960) .

(n80)Footnote 493. See Arrieta v. Mahon, 644 P.2d 1249 (Cal. 1982) .

(n81)Footnote 494. See Fickey v. Cross Creek Apartments, Ltd., 700 S.W.2d 807 (Ky. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n82)Footnote 495. See, e.g., Blair v. Stump, 617 P.2d 791 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1980) (double bond); Usher v. Waters Ins. & Realty Co., 438 F. Supp. 1215 (W.D.N.C. 1977) (three months rent); but see Oaks v. District Court, 631 F. Supp. 538 (D.R.I. 1986) ($2,000 bond did not violate Fifth or Fourteenth Amendments).

(n83)Footnote 496. See Mihans v. Municipal Court, 87 Cal. Rptr. 17 (Ct. App. 1970) .

(n84)Footnote 497. See Wolf Lillie v. Sonquist, 699 F.2d 864 (7th Cir. 1983) .

(n85)Footnote 498. See Morrison v. Lipscomb, 877 F.2d 463 (6th Cir. 1989) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.10

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.10 The Holdover Tenant.

[Go To Supp]

A person who wrongfully remains on the premises after the end of a lease is often described as "holding over." Such a person is considered a tenant at sufferance. n499 That status would change, of course, if the landlord and the holdover tenant entered into a new lease with respect to the premises. Absent such a mutual agreement, however, the landlord is generally held to have the power to elect either to treat the holdover tenant as a trespasser and seek eviction, or to bind the holdover tenant to a new tenancy on the premises. n500

§ 40.10(a) The Landlord's Election.

If the landlord chooses to treat the holdover tenant as a trespasser, the landlord may resort to the remedies that are available in the jurisdiction to recover possession of the premises. The landlord may also seek a monetary recovery based on the holdover tenant's wrongful occupancy of the premises. However, because the lease has expired, the landlord will not be able to recover rent during the period of the wrongful occupancy, n501 even though, in order to prevent the holdover tenant from benefitting from the wrongful occupancy, the holdover tenant generally will be otherwise bound by the conditions of the lease. n502 Instead, the landlord will be entitled to recover damages for the value of the holdover tenant's use and occupation of the premises, based on the fair rental value of the premises during the period of wrongful occupancy. n503 In some circumstances, the landlord may be entitled to recover special or punitive damages as well. n504

The landlord's power to elect to bind the holdover tenant to a new lease has sometimes been said to arise out of the intention of the parties, with the holding over by the tenant regarded as an offer to enter into a new lease that the landlord may accept. n505 However, the position adopted by the vast majority of courts is that, once exercised, the landlord's election to bind the holdover tenant to a new lease is operative without regard to the intention of the tenant. n506 While the application of the rule may have harsh consequences in some circumstances, the rule has been justified, in part, on account of its supposed deterrent effect: it promotes the interests of incoming tenants by deterring prior tenants from holding over. n507 The rule has also been justified on the basis that it allows landlords to be compensated, by means of a new lease with the holdover tenant, when new tenants are lost because they cannot occupy the premises. n508

The landlord's election may be exercised by express notice, but it is more often implied from conduct. Thus, a decision to treat the holdover tenant as a trespasser may be implied from conduct that is inconsistent with the creation of a new lease between the landlord and the holdover tenant. Examples include the filing of a lawsuit to evict the holdover tenant from the premises, or the creation of a new lease with a new tenant. n509 In contrast, an election to bind the holdover tenant to a new lease may be implied from conduct that is inconsistent with the termination of the landlord-tenant relationship. Examples include a demand by the landlord that the holdover tenant pay rent, or landlord acceptance of a rent payment from the holdover tenant. n510 However, the result may be otherwise when the facts indicate that the landlord does not intend to enter into a lease, such as when the landlord does not know that the lease term has expired when the landlord accepts payment, or when the landlord accepts a payment during negotiations over a possible new lease. n511

It is sometimes said that an election by the landlord is irrevocable. This means that the landlord cannot unilaterally change the election, once it has been made. n512 Neither can the landlord indefinitely avoid making an election: it is generally held that the landlord must make an election within a "reasonable" period of time. n513 This is, of course, a rather uncertain standard, and some courts have permitted the landlord to make an election after a considerable period of inaction. n514 Some statutes set forth the period of time in which the landlord must make an election, failing which the holdover tenant will be regarded as occupying with the landlord's consent. n515 In the absence of a statutory resolution, some cases indicate that landlord inaction results in an election to bind the tenant to a new lease, n516 but that has not always been the result. n517 The Restatement position is that the landlord's failure to make a decision within a reasonable time is a factor in determining whether the landlord has waived the right to bind the holdover tenant to another term. n518

§ 40.10(b) Nature of the New Lease.

A tenancy that results from the landlord's election is not a mere extension of the old expired lease; it is a new tenancy. n519 But there is a divergence of views about the nature of the resulting lease. In most jurisdictions, an election to bind the holdover tenant to a new tenancy results in the creation of a periodic tenancy. n520 In some jurisdictions, however, the election results in a term for years. n521 As a result of statutory interpretation, the landlord's election has occasionally been found to create a tenancy at will, with the tenant's rental liability equal to the reasonable value of the use and occupancy of the leased premises. n522

There is also a divergence of views regarding the length of the lease term that results from an election to bind the holdover tenant to a new lease. Many courts base the length of the new lease on the length of the old, up to a maximum of one year. Using this approach, if the old lease had a one year term, the new lease would be either a year to year periodic tenancy, or a one year term for years tenancy, depending on the jurisdiction's preference for a periodic tenancy or a fixed term. n523 A number of other courts base the term of the new lease on the period between rental payments of the prior lease, up to a maximum of a year. Under this alternative, if rent on the old lease was payable monthly, then the new lease would be a month to month periodic tenancy or a fixed term for one month, depending on whether the jurisdiction favors a periodic tenancy or a term for years. n524 The Restatement adopts this approach, and opts for periodic tenancy. n525 In some jurisdictions, the length of the new tenancy is determined by statute. n526 The foregoing discussion does not apply, of course, when the new tenancy that results from the landlord's election is a tenancy at will.

§ 40.10(c) Terms of the New Lease.

The new lease that results from the landlord's election will generally be on the same terms and conditions as the old. n527 However, as noted above, the length of the lease term may differ from that of the original lease. And there is a division of authority over whether an option to purchase the leased premises carries over to the new lease. n528

The landlord may cause the terms of the new lease to differ from the terms of the old by providing notice to the tenant that holding over after lease expiration will be on new terms, and by specifying what the new terms will be. If the tenant thereafter holds over, without objection, the tenant will normally be bound by the new terms. n529 The cases are in conflict about whether the tenant may avoid being bound by the new terms articulated by the landlord if the tenant objects to the new terms but remains on the premises following lease expiration. n530 Even if the tenant objects to a change, however, if the tenant actually submits to the change, such as by paying an increased rent, the tenant will usually be bound by it. n531

§ 40.10(d) Limitations on the Landlord's Election.

The landlord's power to bind a holdover tenant to a new lease is subject to several potential limitations. Some limitations may be statutory: as previously noted, statutes in a number of jurisdictions limit the length of the lease term that results from a landlord's election. Other limitations may arise from the terms of the parties' original lease. It has been held, for example, that the landlord could not elect a new tenancy upon tenant holdover where the original lease provided that the tenant had to pay double rent during a holdover period. n532 If the original lease contains an automatic renewal provision, a holding over by the tenant could be regarded as an exercise of the renewal option, precluding the landlord from exercising a holdover election. n533

Even in the absence of limitations imposed by statute or deriving from lease provisions, courts have sometimes acted to temper the potential harshness of a landlord's election to bind the holdover tenant to a new tenancy. Thus, courts have held that the mere leaving of a few tenant articles on the leased premises after lease expiration was insufficient to constitute holding over. n534 It has been held that the landlord may not unilaterally elect to bind a holdover tenant to a new tenancy when the parties are negotiating about the terms of a new lease. n535 Some courts have declined to enforce a landlord's election when the holdover period is of very short duration and the landlord has suffered no damages. n536 Other courts have permitted exceptions to the holdover doctrine when, due to illness or other circumstance, the tenant is not at fault for remaining on the premises after lease expiration. n537 In this connection, the Restatement contemplates that equitable considerations could justify giving the tenant an extension of time to vacate the premises when the tenant does not intend to hold over but does so due to "circumstances beyond his control." n538

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 499. Tenancy at sufferance is discussed in chapter 39. See § 39.05(c).

(n2)Footnote 500. See, e.g., Arnold Realty Co. v. William K. Toole Co., 115 A. 565 (R.I. 1921) ; Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Prudential Storage & Van Corp., 161 S.E.2d 86 (Va. 1968) ; R.D. Hursh, Annotation, Landlord's Consent to Extension or Renewal of Lease as Shown by Acceptance of Rent from Tenant Holding Over, 45 A.L.R.2d 827 (1956) .

(n3)Footnote 501. See, e.g., Burke v. Willard, 137 N.E. 744 (Mass. 1923) ; Arnold Realty Co. v. William K. Toole Co., 125 A. 363 (R.I. 1924) .

(n4)Footnote 502. See, e.g., Rosamond v. Mann, 80 So. 2d 317 (Fla. 1955) ; Lewiston Pre Mix Concrete, Inc. v. Rohde, 718 P.2d 551 (Idaho Ct. App. 1985) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.7 reporter's note 2 (1977); R.D. Hursh, Annotation, Binding Effect On Tenant Holding Over of Covenants In Expired Lease, 49 A.L.R.2d 480 (1956) .

(n5)Footnote 503. See, e.g., Arnold Realty Co. v. William K. Toole Co., 125 A. 363 (R.I. 1924) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.5 (1977).

(n6)Footnote 504. See, e.g., Murphree v. Aberdeen Monroe County Hosp., 671 So. 2d 1300 (Miss. 1996) (applies Mississippi statute providing that holdover tenant who fails to deliver the premises following notice shall be obligated to pay double rent); Taylor v. Kaufhold, 84 A.2d 347 (Pa. 1951) (special damages recoverable if, at the time the lease was made, they reasonably could have been anticipated to follow from holding over at lease expiration); Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.6 and reporter's note 4 (1977) (special damages recoverable if foreseeable at the time the holdover occurs); 28 C.F.R. Pt. 36 3 8 (punitive damages if holdover is willful); Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.301(c) (damages equal to the greater of three months' periodic rent or three times the actual damages sustained for willful holdover).

(n7)Footnote 505. See, e.g., Stern v. Equitable Trust Co., 144 N.E. 578 (N.Y. 1924) .

(n8)Footnote 506. See, e.g., Maniatty v. Carroll Co., 41 A.2d 144 (Vt. 1945) ; Donnelly Advertising Corp. v. Flaccomio, 140 A.2d 165 (Md. 1958) .

(n9)Footnote 507. See, e.g., A.H. Fetting Mfg. Jewelry Co. v. Waltz, 152 A. 434 (Md. 1930) .

(n10)Footnote 508. See Restatement (Second) of Property part 4, ch. 14, tit. B, at 24 (1977).

(n11)Footnote 509. See, e.g., Kilbourne v. Forester, 464 S.W.2d 770 (Mo. Ct. App. 1970) (eviction action); Brown v. Music, Inc., 359 P.2d 295 (Alaska 1961) (leasing to another).

(n12)Footnote 510. See, e.g., Ochsner v. Langendorf, 115 Colo. 453, 175 P.2d 392 (Colo. 1946) .

(n13)Footnote 511. See, e.g., Rainwater v. Preas, 221 S.W.2d 829 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1949) (unaware of expiration); Rottman v. Bluebird Bakery, Inc., 88 N.W.2d 374 (Wis. 1958) (acceptance of payment; some discussion of a new lease and consideration of sale of the premises; insufficient evidence on which to conclude landlord had elected to hold the tenant over on a year-to-year lease); Cf. Clairton Corp. v. Geo Con, Inc., 635 A.2d 1058 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1993) (tenant remained in possession for seven months and continued to pay monthly rent following the end of two year commercial lease; under Pennsylvania law, this would normally have resulted in a year to year tenancy; however, because the parties were engaged in negotiations for a new lease during this period, the court concludes that a month to month tenancy resulted).

(n14)Footnote 512. See, e.g., Brown v. Music, Inc., 359 P.2d 295 (Alaska 1961) ; Crechale & Polles, Inc. v. Smith, 295 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 1974) , overruled, State v. Howie, 449 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 1984) .

(n15)Footnote 513. See, e.g., Millhouse v. Drainage Dist., 304 S.W.2d 54 (Mo. Ct. App. 1957) .

(n16)Footnote 514. See, e.g., Cairo & St. L. R.R. v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 82 Ill. 230 (1876) (ten months).

(n17)Footnote 515. See, e.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. § 383.160.

(n18)Footnote 516. See, e.g., Hobbs & Son v. Grand Trunk Ry., 108 A. 199 (Vt. 1919) .

(n19)Footnote 517. See Cairo & St. L. R.R. v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 82 Ill. 230 (1876) .

(n20)Footnote 518. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.4 cmts. d and c (1977).

(n21)Footnote 519. See Wanous v. Balaco, 107 N.E.2d 791 (Ill. 1952) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.35 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n22)Footnote 520. See, e.g., Maniatty v. Carroll Co., 41 A.2d 144 (Vt. 1945) ; Annotation, Right of Tenant Holding Over After Termination of Definite Term to Notice to Quit, 19 A.L.R. 1405 (1922) .

(n23)Footnote 521. See, e.g., Security Life & Accident Ins. Co., v. United States, 357 F.2d 145 (5th Cir. 1966) ; Spiritwood Grain Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry., 179 F.2d 338 (8th Cir. 1950) ; Annotation, Right of Tenant Holding Over After Termination of Definite Term to Notice to Quit, 19 A.L.R. 1405 (1922) .

(n24)Footnote 522. See, e.g., Townsend v. Singleton, 183 S.E.2d 893 (S.C. 1971) .

(n25)Footnote 523. See, e.g., Sinclair Refining Co. v. Shakespeare, 175 P.2d 389 (Colo. 1946) ; Annotation, Rent Period as Criterion of Term Implied by Holding Over After Expiration of Lease for a Fixed Term, 108 A.L.R. 1464 (1937) ; Cf. Clairton Corp. v. Geo Con, Inc., 635 A.2d 1058 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1993) (tenant remained in possession for seven months and continued to pay monthly rent following the end of two year commercial lease; under Pennsylvania law, this would normally have resulted in a year to year tenancy; however, because the parties were engaged in negotiations for a new lease during this period, the court concludes that a month to month tenancy resulted).

(n26)Footnote 524. See, e.g., A.H. Fetting Mfg. Jewelry Co. v. Waltz, 152 A. 434 (Md. 1930) ; Annotation, Rent Period as Criterion of Term Implied by Holding Over After Expiration of Lease for a Fixed Term, 108 A.L.R. 1464 (1937) .

(n27)Footnote 525. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.4, cmt. f (1977).

(n28)Footnote 526. See, e.g., N.Y. Real Prop. Laws § 232 c (month-to-month tenancy); Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 4.301(c) and 1.401(d) (no more than month-to-month tenancy).

(n29)Footnote 527. See, e.g., Krull v. Rose, 130 N.W. 272 (Neb. 1911) ; Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Prudential Storage & Van Corp., 161 S.E.2d 86 (Va. 1968) ; Barragan v. Munoz, 525 S.W.2d 559, 562 (Tex. Ct. App. 1975) .

(n30)Footnote 528. See, e.g., Straley v. Osborne, 278 A.2d 64 (Md. 1971) (option exercisable); Wanous v. Balaco, 107 N.E.2d 791 (Ill. 1952) (option not exercisable); D.E. Ytreberg, Annotation, Holding Over Under Lease, or Renewal or Extension Thereof, as Extending Time for Exercise of Option to Purchase Contained Therein, 15 A.L.R.3d 470 (1967) .

(n31)Footnote 529. See, e.g., David Properties, Inc. v. Selk, 151 So. 2d 334 (Fla. Ct. App. 1963) ; Heckman v. Walker, 167 Neb. 216 (1958) .

(n32)Footnote 530. See, e.g., Wilson v. Rodman, 243 Ill. App. 570 (1927) (tenant bound, despite objections); Abrams v. Sherwin, 112 A. 235 (Pa. 1920) (tenant not bound to pay increased rent); W.W. Allen, Annotation, Notice by Landlord of Change in Rent or Other Modification of Tenancy as Affecting Rights and Liabilities Incident to Tenant's Holding Over After Expiration of Term or Rent Period or Time Fixed by Notice, 109 A.L.R. 197 (1937) .

(n33)Footnote 531. See, e.g., Abraham v. Gheens, 265 S.W. 778 (Ky. 1924) .

(n34)Footnote 532. See Commonwealth Bldg. Corp. v. Hirschfield, 30 N.E.2d 790 (Ill. Ct. App. 1940) .

(n35)Footnote 533. See, e.g., Weber v. C & C Dry Goods, Co., 69 S.W.2d 731 (Ky. 1934) .

(n36)Footnote 534. See Byrns v. Pierce, 136 N.Y.S. 293 (1912) .

(n37)Footnote 535. See, e.g., Donnelly Advertising Corp. v. Flaccomio, 140 A.2d 165 (Md. 1958) .

(n38)Footnote 536. See, e.g., Byrns v. Pierce, 136 N.Y.S. 293 (1912) .

(n39)Footnote 537. See, e.g., Herter v. Mullen, 53 N.E. 700 (N.Y. 1899) (illness); Feiges v. Racine Dry Goods Co., 285 N.W. 799 (Wis. 1939) (employee strike).

(n40)Footnote 538. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.4, cmt. i (1977).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.11

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.11 Landlord Rights When the Tenant Abandons the Premises.

Wrongful abandonment of the leased premises by the tenant during the term of the lease has traditionally been regarded as presenting the landlord with three choices. First, the landlord could treat the abandonment as an offer by the tenant to surrender the leasehold estate, accept the offer, and terminate the lease. Second, the landlord could permit the premises to remain vacant, and sue for rent as it comes due under the lease. Third, the landlord could attempt to relet the premises to mitigate the tenant's damages, and preserve the liability of the abandoning tenant for rent and damages. In some jurisdictions, these traditional alternatives remain available to landlords when tenants wrongfully abandon the premises. However, in many jurisdictions today, the second alternative may be unavailable to the landlord, at least in residential tenancies; in those jurisdictions the landlord must either accept the surrender, or attempt to relet the premises in an effort to mitigate damages. Each of the traditional landlord options, and modern developments that have affected their availability, will be considered below.

§ 40.11(a) Acceptance of Offer of Surrender.

One of the options traditionally available to a landlord when a tenant wrongfully abandons the leased premises is to regard the abandonment as an offer to surrender the leasehold estate, to accept the offer of surrender, and to thereby terminate the lease. n539 The surrender will extinguish the tenant's liability for future rent, but it will not extinguish the tenant's liability for previously accrued rent or for damages based on previous breach of lease covenants. n540 In some jurisdictions, the landlord may also be able to recover damages for future rent loss. n541 Following surrender, the landlord will be entitled to occupy the premises, or to rent the premises to a new tenant.

§ 40.11(a)(1) Surrender by Express Agreement.

Surrender may be accomplished by an express agreement, or it may arise by operation of law. If the surrender is accomplished by agreement, it may be subject to the requirements of the applicable statute of frauds. The American statutes are not uniform on the subject of surrender agreements. Some, based on the English Statute of Frauds, n542 require all surrenders to be in writing, except those arising by operation of law. Even where such statutes are in effect, however, some courts enforce oral surrender agreements when the remaining term of the lease is short enough to be outside the statute of frauds. Other statutes expressly except surrenders of leases with short remaining terms, or do not mention surrender agreements at all. The cases from jurisdictions whose statutes do not mention surrender agreements are in conflict as to whether a surrender agreement must be in writing when the original lease was required to be in writing under the statute of frauds. n543

§ 40.11(a)(2) Surrender by Operation of Law.

Whether or not the parties enter into a valid written surrender agreement, a surrender may still arise by operation of law. As indicated above, surrenders by operation of law were excluded from the requirements of the original English Statute of Frauds; n544 such surrenders are generally considered to be outside of and unaffected by modern statutes of frauds as well. n545 Most authorities state that a surrender by operation of law arises by mutual agreement, but that the agreement may be implied or inferred from the conduct of the parties. n546 However, some authorities endorse a theory of estoppel, n547 or state that, regardless of the desire of the parties, a surrender by operation of law results when the landlord and the tenant engage in conduct that is inconsistent with the further existence of the lease. n548

It seems clear enough that a surrender by operation of law should result when the parties execute a new lease for the same premises before expiration of the prior lease. n549 A surrender should also result when, following tenant abandonment of the leased premises, the landlord repossesses the premises for the landlord's own use and enjoyment. n550 However, mere unilateral conduct, such as abandonment alone, will not amount to a surrender. n551

Courts have encountered some difficulties regarding the application of this doctrine. A threshold difficulty that can arise is in determining whether a tenant has, in fact, abandoned the leased premises. For example, in a Louisiana case, the tenant stopped using rented office space on a regular basis, stopped paying rent, asked the landlord for a rent reduction, and told the landlord that it was negotiating with another party to assume the lease. The landlord actually showed the premises to that party for possible rental. In the meantime, the tenant continued to store medical equipment and supplies on the premises. When the landlord leased the premises to a new tenant, the original tenant sued for breach of the lease, claiming that there had been no abandonment. The lower court concluded that there had been no abandonment, and this was affirmed on appeal. n552

Another difficulty that has been faced by courts in this area is in determining whether particular landlord actions actually amount to repossession of the premises for the landlord's own use and enjoyment, thereby resulting in a surrender by operation of law. The cases, not always consistent, turn on particular facts. By way of example, the following landlord conduct has been found not to give rise to surrender: entry to make repairs, n553 acceptance of keys to the premises, n554 and undertaking alterations to prepare the premises for reletting. n555 On the other hand, courts have concluded that a surrender resulted from the following landlord conduct, after tenant abandonment: substantial remodeling, n556 permitting the premises to be used for storage, n557 changing the locks, n558 and reletting the premises to a new tenant. n559 The circumstances under which reletting of the premises gives rise to a surrender are discussed below. n560

§ 40.11(a)(3) Effect of Surrender on Tenant Liability.

A surrender will extinguish the tenant's liability for future rent, but it will not extinguish the tenant's liability for previously accrued rent or for damages based on previous breach of lease covenants. Once surrender has occurred, of course, there is no landlord-tenant relationship, no privity of estate, on which to base continuing rental obligations. However, some courts, emphasizing the contractual nature of a lease, have concluded that, notwithstanding circumstances amounting to a surrender, the tenant who abandons the leased premises may be liable to the landlord for damages for unpaid future rent on the contract theory of anticipatory repudiation. n561 In California, this result is provided for by statute. n562

The California statute provides, in part, that "if a lessee of real property breaches the lease and abandons the property before the end of the term ... the lease terminates." But it also provides that the landlord is entitled to damages from the tenant for breach of the lease, and those damages may include amounts for loss of rental income and other amounts

"necessary to compensate the lessor for all the detriment proximately caused by the lessee's failure to perform his obligations under the lease." n563 Some of the landlord's recovery depends upon whether the lease provides for it. The landlord's recovery for loss of future rent can, in any event, be reduced to the extent that the tenant can show that the rental loss could have been avoided. n564 According to a decision by a California appellate court, the tenant may be liable for the landlord's loss of rental income even if, after lease termination, the landlord sells the property that had been subject to the lease. n565

The contract doctrine of anticipatory repudiation generally permits a promisee to bring an action for damages against a promisor when the promisor unequivocally repudiates the parties' executory contract and indicates that the promisor will not perform future contractual obligations. n566 A tenant who abandons the premises and refuses to pay rent would seem to qualify, assuming that the jurisdiction in question extends the doctrine of anticipatory repudiation to leases. Under this theory, the landlord's measure of damages would generally be the difference, if any, between the rent provided for in the original lease over the remaining lease term and the fair rental value of the premises for that period, reduced to present value. n567 However, if there is a long period remaining on the lease when the tenant abandons, the landlord is unlikely to be able to recover damages based on the entire remaining term; the court will likely limit recovery to a reasonable period of time. n568

Although a number of courts have applied the contract doctrine of anticipatory repudiation to the circumstance of tenant abandonment, courts in some jurisdictions have declined to do so. n569 Some courts have declined to apply the doctrine to leases, based on the traditional common law notion that no obligation to pay rent arises until the time stipulated for payment arrives. n570 The tenant's rental obligation has also been compared to a unilateral contract for the payment of money at fixed intervals, to which the doctrine of anticipatory repudiation does not apply. n571 In addition, it has been said that application of the doctrine, at least in the case of long term leases, would involve speculation about future rental values. n572

The Restatement position is that the landlord should be able to recover "damage caused by the abandonment," whether or not the lease is terminated. n573 Recoverable damages could include the difference, if any, between the stated rental amount and the fair rental value of the premises over the lease term, reduced to present value. n574 So long as there is a provision in the lease that permits the landlord to do so, the Restatement would also allow a landlord who accepts a surrender to notify the abandoning tenant that the landlord will hold the abandoning tenant liable in damages for the difference between what the abandoning tenant would have paid under the lease for the balance of the term and what the landlord is able to receive from a new tenant. In order to recover from the abandoning tenant, the landlord would have to undertake reasonable efforts to mitigate the abandoning tenant's damages. n575

§ 40.11(b) Landlord Election to Relet the Premises.

A second option that has traditionally been available to landlords when the tenant wrongfully abandons the leased premises is to attempt to relet the premises for the account of the abandoning tenant, holding the tenant liable for any loss of rent. n576 The option of reletting the premises for the account of the tenant continues to be generally available; indeed, many jurisdictions now require the landlord to attempt to relet the premises if the landlord seeks to recover rent from an abandoning tenant. However, by statute in some jurisdictions, the reletting of residential premises results in lease termination. n577 And, as discussed below, reletting of the premises may bring about a surrender of the lease.

There is a lack of uniformity among American jurisdictions regarding when surrender results from landlord reletting. New York cases have said that the landlord must obtain the consent of the tenant in order to preserve the tenant's liability following reletting. n578 Some jurisdictions require the landlord to provide notice to the tenant that the landlord intends to reenter in an effort to relet the premises for the account of the tenant. n579 Other jurisdictions see the abandoning tenant's liability for rental deficiency following landlord reentry and reletting as a question of fact, to be determined from the circumstances. n580

As a practical matter, a landlord who desires to avoid a surrender upon reentry and reletting will be more likely to succeed if the landlord provides notice to the tenant that the landlord does not accept a surrender and that the purpose of the re-entry is to relet the premises for the account of the tenant. n581 The landlord should also avoid actions that may indicate that the landlord is reletting for the landlord's own account. In this connection, some courts have concluded that reletting for a period longer than the original lease term results in a surrender. n582 But there is authority to the contrary. n583 Extensive landlord alterations to the leased premises could also be problematic. n584

§ 40.11(b)(1) Nature of the Abandoning Tenant's Liability.

Assuming that reletting does not result in surrender, there are some conceptual uncertainties regarding the nature of the abandoning tenant's liability to the landlord. A common theory is that the landlord, in reletting the premises, does so as an agent for the abandoning tenant, with the result that the abandoning tenant's estate remains intact, at least for purposes of continuing rent liability. n585 Under this theory, a landlord should be able to bring an action for rent deficiency as each rent installment comes due under the original lease. n586 A problem with the theory, however, is that the landlord, not the abandoning tenant, is the party who enters into the new lease, and the original lease may not empower the landlord to relet the property for the account of the abandoning tenant.

To deal with this difficulty, it has been suggested that tenant abandonment should be regarded as conferring a power upon the landlord to assign the abandoning tenant's estate. n587 However, because an assignment of a lease generally terminates the privity of estate between the landlord and the assigning tenant, it has been noted that, upon exercise of such a power, rent liability of the abandoning tenant would likely be based on privity of contract, rather than privity of estate. n588 In that case, the liability of the abandoning tenant may depend upon the existence of a covenant to pay rent in the original lease. n589

The Restatement approach is somewhat different. It simply states that a reletting by the landlord "will be deemed a sublease by the original tenant." n590 The Restatement would apply its sublease theory even if the landlord's reletting is for a period longer than the term of the original lease. n591 A sublease, of course, would preserve the privity of estate between the landlord and the abandoning tenant. The Restatement contemplates that any deficiency between the amount that the abandoning tenant is obligated to pay under the original lease and the amount received from the new tenant would be rent, not damages. n592

An alternative theory of liability for the abandoning tenant is based on privity of contract. Under this theory, the abandoning tenant's leasehold estate is considered to have been ended as a result of the reletting by the landlord, but the abandoning tenant remains liable to the landlord for damages under the lease contract. n593 This theory appears to be consistent with decisions that permit the landlord to treat tenant abandonment and failure to pay rent as constituting an anticipatory repudiation of the lease, entitling the landlord to an immediate recovery of damages.

If the theory of reletting is that the landlord acts on behalf of the abandoning tenant, and that the original leasehold estate continues, then it might be thought that the abandoning tenant should be entitled to any rent obtained upon reletting that is in excess of the amount reserved in the original lease. This is the Restatement position. It would require the landlord to account to the abandoning tenant for any excess, unless the landlord revokes any notice that the landlord is reletting for the account of the tenant and accepts a surrender. n594 But reported decisions are in disagreement on the issue, and vary widely in their approaches. n595 For example, some cases permit the tenant to have credit for the excess rent, reasoning that the landlord is entitled to recover no more than the landlord's actual losses resulting from the tenant's breach. n596 On the other hand, the abandoning tenant has been denied the benefit of the excess, on the ground that the tenant should not be permitted to benefit from the tenant's own wrongdoing. n597

§ 40.11(c) Election to Keep the Premises Vacant and Sue for Rent.

Another alternative traditionally available to a landlord whose tenant has wrongfully abandoned the leased premises is to keep the premises vacant and to sue for rent as it becomes due. The landlord is not required, in exercising this option, to attempt to relet the premises. If the landlord takes no action to terminate the lease, the leasehold estate continues in existence, and rent continues to accrue as provided in the lease. n598 In justification of this result, it has been said that the tenant has purchased an interest in real estate and has an obligation to pay for the purchase, that abandonment by the tenant is of the tenant's own property, that the tenant should not be able to impose a duty on the landlord through the tenant's own wrongdoing, and that to require the landlord to re-enter the premises to mitigate the tenant's damages could result in an undesired surrender of the lease. n599 The Restatement justifies the result on another ground: that tenant abandonment "is an invitation to vandalism," and that the law should not encourage tenants to abandon leased premises by imposing a duty on the landlord to mitigate damages. n600

The rule that the landlord may recover rent from an abandoning tenant without attempting to relet the premises is the apparent majority rule. n601 The principle of stare decisis has sometimes been called upon to sustain it. n602 However, a substantial number of American jurisdictions have rejected this rule, and the trend is to require a landlord to attempt to relet the premises if the landlord wishes to hold an abandoning tenant liable for rent. n603 Courts that have adopted this view have emphasized the contractual nature of a lease, and have characterized the landlord's obligation, in contract terms, as one of mitigating damages. n604 Courts have also said that the mitigation requirement is supported by a public policy against allowing leasable premises to remain idle. n605

In some jurisdictions, the mitigation requirement comes from legislation. n606 For example, the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act requires the landlord, upon tenant abandonment, to undertake reasonable efforts to rent the premises at a fair rental. If the landlord fails to do so, the lease is deemed to have been terminated as of the date that the landlord had notice of the abandonment. n607 Given the number of states that have adopted a mitigation requirement by judicial decision, and the number of states that have adopted legislation, such as the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, that impose mitigation obligations on landlords, it may be that a majority of states would, in the residential landlord-tenant context, require landlord mitigation when the landlord does not accept surrender of the premises following tenant abandonment. n608

§ 40.11(c)(1) Nature and Consequences of the Mitigation Requirement.

Courts that reject the traditional rule frequently refer to the landlord as having a "duty" to mitigate damages. However, the landlord's failure to mitigate does not provide the tenant with a claim for damages against the landlord. Instead, the landlord's failure to mitigate will affect the landlord's recovery of damages. As noted above, the rule under the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act is that the landlord's failure to use reasonable efforts to mitigate results in termination of the lease agreement. In contrast, some courts indicate that the landlord's failure to mitigate prevents the landlord from recovering damages that would have been avoided by reasonable mitigation efforts. n609 A few courts require that the landlord prove reasonable efforts at mitigation as an element of the landlord's cause of action against the abandoning tenant. n610 Under this view, failure of the landlord to carry the burden seems to bar the landlord from recovering rent subsequent to the abandonment. n611 The cases are in conflict as to who has the burden of proof on the mitigation of damages issue. n612

In jurisdictions where the landlord must mitigate in order to recover from the tenant, the landlord is generally obligated to accept a willing, suitable, substitute tenant offered by the abandoning tenant, and to otherwise undertake reasonable efforts to find a suitable substitute tenant. n613 In assessing whether the landlord has done so, courts will typically consider such factors as whether the landlord offered the premises to prospective tenants, advertised the availability of the leased premises, and offered the leased premises at a reasonable rental amount. n614

One of the difficulties with a mitigation requirement, from the landlord's perspective, is that it entails a risk of surrender. That is, the very conduct that the landlord is required to engage in to recover rent from the tenant -- reasonable efforts to re let -- may be found to constitute a surrender by operation of law. Such a result would, in turn, cut off the landlord's ability to recover rent. In recognition of the problem, some courts have simply declined to find that required mitigation efforts give rise to a surrender. n615

The Texas Supreme Court dealt with the issue in a different fashion in a 1997 decision. In Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc., n616 the court recognized that commercial landlords have a duty to mitigate when the tenant abandons. But the risk of surrender also caused the court to limit the scope of the mitigation obligation. Mitigation would be required if the landlord brought a contract action for anticipatory repudiation, in which the landlord repossessed the premises and sued for "the present value of future rental reduced by the reasonable cash market value of the property for the remainder of the lease term." n617 But mitigation would not be required when the landlord simply chose to maintain the lease and sue for rent as it becomes due, because mitigation would require the landlord to reenter the premises and risk lease termination. Even so, mitigation would be required if the landlord actually does reenter, or if the lease permits the landlord to reenter "without accepting surrender, forfeiting the lease, or being construed as evicting the tenant." n618

In McGuire v. City of Jersey City, n619 the New Jersey Supreme Court considered how the landlord's sale of the leased premises would affect the abandoning tenant's liability in the commercial leasing context. There, a commercial landlord sold the leased premises after the tenant had abandoned. The tenant sought to avoid liability by claiming that the sale amounted to the acceptance of a surrender by the landlord. The New Jersey Supreme Court said that the mitigation rule extends to leases of commercial property, but it also said that, in view of the tendency to analogize landlord tenant law to contract doctrines, "we think it is more appropriate to consider the landlord's sale of the premises as a mitigation, rather than as an acceptance of surrender." n620 And, if the landlord received a sale price "that compensates for the value of the future rental income of the property," the court was of the view that the tenant's liability for that rental income would end at the time of sale. n621

Some statutes provide that the landlord's failure to give notice to the tenant that the property will be relet does not deprive the landlord of the right to recover from the tenant. n622 However, in the absence of clear authority otherwise, the landlord who desires to preserve tenant rent liability upon reletting should be careful to provide notice to the tenant that the reletting is for the account of the tenant.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 539. See, e.g., Sagamore Corp. v. Willcutt, 180 A. 464 (Conn. 1935) ; Novak v. Fontaine Furniture Co., 146 A. 525 (N.H. 1929) ; Liberty Plan Co. v. Adwan, 370 P.2d 928 (Okla. 1962) .

(n2)Footnote 540. See, e.g., Morad v. Ramos, 116 N.E.2d 137 (Mass. 1953) ; Frisco Joes, Inc. v. Peay, 558 P.2d 1327 (Utah 1977) .

(n3)Footnote 541. See discussion in § 40.11(b)(1), below.

(n4)Footnote 542. 29 Car. 2, c. 3 § 3 (1677).

(n5)Footnote 543. See W.W. Allen, Annotation, Oral Surrender of Written Lease, 78 A.L.R.2d 933 (1961) ; see generally American Law of Property § 3.99 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.82 (3d ed. 2000).

(n6)Footnote 544. 29 Car. 2, c. 3 § 3 (1677).

(n7)Footnote 545. See W.W. Allen, Annotation, Oral Surrender of Written Lease, 78 A.L.R.2d 933 (1961) .

(n8)Footnote 546. See, e.g., Gordon v. Consolidated Sun Ray, Inc., 404 P.2d 949 (Kan. 1965) ; Bove v. Transcom Elects., Inc., 116 R.I. 210, 353 A.2d 613 (R.I. 1976) ; Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 545 (1982).

(n9)Footnote 547. See, e.g., Beall v. White, 94 U.S. 382 (1876) ; Lyon v. Reed, 153 Eng. Rep. 118 (1884).

(n10)Footnote 548. See, e.g., Jenkins v. Root, 112 A. 153 (Pa. 1920) ; Charles T. McCormick, The Rights of the Landlord Upon Abandonment of the Premises by the Tenant, 23 Mich. L. Rev. 211, 212 (1925); see generally Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 545 (1982).

(n11)Footnote 549. See, e.g., Capitol Funds, Inc. v. White, 306 S.E.2d 142 (N.C. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n12)Footnote 550. See, e.g., Hargrove v. Bourne, 150 P.121 (Okla. 1915) .

(n13)Footnote 551. See, e.g., Williams v. Aeroland Oil Co., 20 So. 2d 346 (Fla. 1944) .

(n14)Footnote 552. See Girgis v. Macaluso Realty Co., 778 So. 2d 1210 (La. Ct. App. 2001); Cf., Saul Subsidiary II Limited Partnership v. Venator Group Specialty, Inc., 830 A.2d 854 (D.C. Ct. App. 2003) (tenant ceased retail operations and removed its property from the premises, but also proposed using part of the premises for a specialty store, requested modifications of the lease, and asked for an extension of the term; after the negotiations failed, the tenant announced its intention to open a temporary outlet store on the premises, but ultimately did not do so; the landlord notified the tenant that it was in default, and claimed that the tenant owed substantial "additional" rent in accordance with lease provisions that described how to calculate such rent in the event the tenant vacated the premises; the tenant claimed that it had never intended to cease business operations on the leased premises and so it had not "vacated"; the appellate court was of the view that abandonment was not the issue, and it concluded that the physical acts of closing the store and moving out amounted to "vacating" the premises for purposes of the additional rent provision; because the tenant had vacated the premises, it owed the additional rent).

(n15)Footnote 553. See, e.g., Durbin Durco, Inc. v. Blades Mfg., Corp., 455 S.W.2d 449 (Mo. 1970) .

(n16)Footnote 554. See, e.g., Bumiller v. Walker, 116 N.E. 797 (Ohio 1917) .

(n17)Footnote 555. See, e.g., Book v. Asselstine, 203 N.W.2d 387 (Minn. 1972) .

(n18)Footnote 556. See, e.g., Ross v. Smigelski, 166 N.W.2d 243 (Wis. 1969) .

(n19)Footnote 557. See, e.g., John C. Cutler Ass'n v. De Jay Stores, Inc., 279 P.2d 700 (Utah 1955) .

(n20)Footnote 558. See, e.g., Ruchaber v. Short, 630 P.2d 915 (Or. Ct. App. 1981) .

(n21)Footnote 559. See § 40.11(b), below.

(n22)Footnote 560. See id.

(n23)Footnote 561. See, e.g., Sagamore Corp. v. Willcutt, 180 A. 464 (Conn. 1935) ; Kanter v. Safran, 68 So. 2d 553 (Fla. 1953) ; Grayson v. Mixon, 5 S.W.2d 312 (Ark. 1928) ; See Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 557, 561 (1982)

(n24)Footnote 562. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1951.2.

(n25)Footnote 563. See N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:42-88.

(n26)Footnote 564. The traditional way a landlord could avoid rental loss would be to relet the premises. Accordingly, if the tenant is able to show that the landlord has not been diligent about reletting the premises, the tenant could succeed in reducing the amount of the damages the landlord can recover. See Millikan v. American Spectrum Real Estate Services California, Inc., 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 459 (Ct. App. 2004) . In the Millikan case, a California appellate court indicated that rental loss might also be avoided, in some cases, if the landlord sells the property that had been subject to the lease. It reasoned that the sale price ought to take into account "the capitalized value of the reasonable net rental value attributable to the land and existing improvements." If the landlord sells the property at an unreasonably low price, though, the tenant may be able to show that rental loss could have been avoided. In other words, the tenant might show that rental loss could have been avoided if the landlord had sold the property for a more reasonable price. See id.

(n27)Footnote 565. See Millikan v. American Spectrum Real Estate Services California, Inc., 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 459 (Ct. App. 2004) .

(n28)Footnote 566. See generally 4 Arthur Corbin, Contracts §§ 959 989 (1951); Charles T. McCormick, The Rights of the Landlord Upon Abandonment of the Premises by the Tenant, 23 Mich. L. Rev. 211, 212 (1925) (advocates application of anticipatory repudiation doctrine to leases).

(n29)Footnote 567. See, e.g., Grayson v. Mixon, 5 S.W.2d 312 (Ark. 1928) ; Sagamore Corp. v. Willcutt, 180 A. 464 (Conn. 1935) ; but see Chapman & Cole v. Itel Container Int'l B.V., 665 F. Supp. 1283 (S.D. Tex.) , aff'd, 865 F.2d 676 (5th Cir. 1987) , cert. denied, sub nom. Urquhart & Hassell v. Chapman & Cole 493 U.S. 872 (1989) .

(n30)Footnote 568. See Hawkinson v. Johnston, 122 F.2d 724 (8th Cir.) (recovery permitted based on 10 years, rather than 67, as the longest period for which damages could be "reasonably forecast or soundly predicted").

(n31)Footnote 569. See, e.g., TenBraak v. Waffle Shops, Inc., 542 F.2d 919 (4th Cir. 1976) ; Adkins v. Hobson & Son, Inc., 666 S.W.2d 951 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984) ; Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 559, 561 (1982).

(n32)Footnote 570. See, e.g., Cooper v. Casco Mercantile Trust Co., 186 A. 885 (Me. 1936) .

(n33)Footnote 571. See, e.g., Jordon v. Nickell, 253 S.W.2d 237 (Ky. 1952) ; see generally E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 8.20 (2d ed. 1990).

(n34)Footnote 572. See Reid v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co., 776 P.2d 896 (Utah 1989) .

(n35)Footnote 573. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1(3)(a) & cmt. i (1977) 3.

(n36)Footnote 574. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1(3)(a) Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n37)Footnote 575. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i (1977).

(n38)Footnote 576. See, e.g., Grayson v. Mixon, 5 S.W.2d 312 (Ark. 1928) ; Kanter v. Safran, 68 So. 2d 553 (Fla. 1953) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i (1977).

(n39)Footnote 577. See, e.g., Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.203(c).

(n40)Footnote 578. See, e.g., Gray v. Kaufman Dairy & Ice Cream Co., 56 N.E. 903 (N.Y. 1900) .

(n41)Footnote 579. See, e.g., Bernard v. Renard, 165 P. 694 (Cal. 1917) ; Von Schleinitz v. North Hotel Co., 23 S.W.2d 64 (Mo. 1929) ; Casper Nat'l Bank v. Curry, 65 P.2d 1116 (Wyo. 1937) .

(n42)Footnote 580. See, e.g., McGrath v. Shalett, 159 A. 633 (Conn. 1932) ; Kanter v. Safran, 68 So. 2d 553 (Fla. 1953) ; Millison v. Clarke, 413 A.2d 198 (Md. Ct. App. 1980) ; Liberty Plan Co. v. Adwan, 370 P.2d 928 (Okla. 1962) ; Abbadessa v. Tegu, 173 A.2d 581 (Vt. 1961) .

(n43)Footnote 581. See, e.g., Liberty Plan Co. v. Adwan, 370 P.2d 928 (Okla. 1962) .

(n44)Footnote 582. See, e.g., Wilson v. Ruhl, 356 A.2d 544 (Md. 1976) ; In re Adams' Estate, 267 N.Y.S. 910 (1933) .

(n45)Footnote 583. See, e.g., McGrath v. Shalett, 159 A. 633 (Conn. 1932) ; Treff v. Gulko, 7 P.2d 697 (Cal. 1932) (no surrender); Millison v. Clarke, 413 A.2d 198 (Md. 1980) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i (1977).

(n46)Footnote 584. See H.S. Chase & Co. v. Evans, 160 N.W. 346 (Iowa 1916) .

(n47)Footnote 585. See, e.g., Underhill v. Collins, 30 N.E. 576 (N.Y. 1892) ; See .Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 536 (1982)

(n48)Footnote 586. See, e.g., Phillips Hollman, Inc. v. Peerless States, Inc., 291 P. 178 (Cal. 1930) ; Sanders v. Kahn, 134 A.2d 107 (D.C. Ct. App. 1957) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, illus. 11 (1977).

(n49)Footnote 587. See Merrill I. Schnebly, Operative Facts in Surrenders, 22 Ill. L. Rev. 22, 130 31 (1927).

(n50)Footnote 588. See Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 537, 538 (1982).

(n51)Footnote 589. See id. See the discussion regarding rent covenants and rent reservation in § 40.03(c).

(n52)Footnote 590. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i (1977).

(n53)Footnote 591. See id.

(n54)Footnote 592. See id.

(n55)Footnote 593. See, e.g., Peterson v. Wilson, 303 P.2d 129 (Kan. 1956) ; United States Rubber Co. v. White Tire Co., 97 S.E.2d 403 (S.C. 1956) ; See Clarence M. Updegraff, The Element of Intent in Surrender by Operation of Law, 38 Harv. L. Rev. 64, 70 & 80 n.53 (1924); Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 536, 537 (1982).

(n56)Footnote 594. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i & Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n57)Footnote 595. See James T. Payne, Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Respective Rights in Excess Rent When Landlord Relets at Higher Rent During Lessee's Term, 50 A.L.R.4th 403 (1986) .

(n58)Footnote 596. See, e.g., Dalamagas v. Fazzina, 414 A.2d 494 (Conn. Ct. App. 1979) .

(n59)Footnote 597. See, e.g., Whitcomb v. Brant, 100 A. 175 (N.J. Ct. App. 1917) .

(n60)Footnote 598. But cf. Holy Properties, Ltd., L.P. v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc., 637 N.Y.S.2d 964 (N.Y. 1995) . In this case, the tenant abandoned commercially leased premises. The landlord thereafter brought a summary eviction proceeding for nonpayment of rent, obtained a judgment and warrant of eviction, and then sued for rent and damages. The tenant contended, among other things, that the eviction terminated the lease, and that, as a result, the tenant should at most be liable for contract damages, not rent. The tenant also argued that the landlord had a duty to mitigate under contract law. The New York Court of Appeals held against the tenant. It said: "Although an eviction terminates the landlord-tenant relationship, the parties to a lease are not foreclosed from contracting as they please . If the lease provides that the tenant shall be liable for rent after eviction, the provision is enforceable." See also Stonehedge Square Ltd. v. Movie Merchants, Inc., 715 A.2d 1082 (Pa. 1998) (Court upholds the traditional rule that does not require mitigation, in part because "[l]eases have been drafted and bargained for in reliance on this rule").

(n61)Footnote 599. See, e.g., Jordon v. Nickell, 253 S.W.2d 237 (Ky. Ct. App. 1952) ; Gruman v. Investors Diversified Servs., 78 N.W.2d 377 (Minn. 1956) ; Enoch C. Richards Co. v. Libby, 10 A.2d 609 (Me. 1940) ; see generally E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R.3d 534 (1968) .

(n62)Footnote 600. Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, cmt. i (1977).

(n63)Footnote 601. See, e.g., Riggs v. Murdock, 458 P.2d 115 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1969) ; McGrath v. Shalett, 159 A. 633 (Conn. 1932) ; Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n64)Footnote 602. In rejecting an invitation to adopt a mitigation requirement in the commercial leasing context, the New York Court of Appeals said:

> Defendant urges us to reject this settled law and adopt the contract rationale recognized by some courts in this State and elsewhere. We decline to do so. Parties who engage in transactions based on prevailing law must be able to rely on the stability of such precedents. In business transactions, particularly, the certainty of settled rules is often more important than whether the established rule is better than another or even whether it is the "correct" rule. This is perhaps true in real property more than any other area of the law.

Holy Properties, Ltd., L.P. v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc., 637 N.Y.S.2d 964, 966 (N.Y. 1995) .

(n65)Footnote 603. See, e.g., Snyder v. Ambrose, 639 N.E.2d 639 (Ill. App. 1994) (statute imposes duty on landlord to mitigate damages); Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) (court states that Iowa is committed to the doctrine that when a tenant wrongfully abandons the leased premises, the landlord is under a duty to show reasonable diligence has been used to relet the property to obviate or reduce the resulting damage); Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) (application of the contract rule requiring mitigation of damages justified as a matter of basic fairness); E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R.3d 534, 540 (1968) ; Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Mitigate Damages on the Tenant's Abandonment: A Survey of Old Law and New Trends, 53 Temp. L.Q. 1 (1980).

(n66)Footnote 604. See, e.g., id. but see Stonehedge Square Ltd. v. Movie Merchants, Inc., 715 A.2d 1082 (Pa. 1998) (court acknowledges the contractual aspects of a lease, but upholds the traditional non mitigation rule, giving several reasons: 1) leases have been bargained for in reliance on the traditional rule, 2) the traditional rule is simple, 3) existing legislation does not require mitigation, and 4) a mitigation requirement would be unfair to impose on a non breaching landlord).

(n67)Footnote 605. See, e.g., MAR SON, Inc. v. Terwaho Enters., Inc., 259 N.W.2d 289 (N.D. 1977) ; Martin v. Siegley, 212 P. 1057 (Wash. 1923) .

(n68)Footnote 606. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42-88 1951.4; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.203(c); Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.1, Statutory Note 7 (1977).

(n69)Footnote 607. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.203(c).

(n70)Footnote 608. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.82 (3d ed. 2000). In some jurisdictions, the mitigation requirement applies only to residential leases. See Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Mitigate Damages on the Tenant's Abandonment: A Survey of Old Law and New Trends, 53 Temp. L.Q. 1, 42, 46 (1980). The Texas Supreme Court has ruled that commercial landlords have a duty to mitigate, but it limited the duty in an interesting way. See Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc., 948 S.W.2d 293 (Tex. 1997) . Mitigation would be required, said the court, if the landlord's action were a contract action for anticipatory repudiation, in which the landlord repossessed the premises and sued for "the present value of future rental reduced by the reasonable cash market value of the property for the remainder of the lease term." Id. at 300 . But mitigation would generally not be required, said the court, when the landlord simply chose to maintain the lease and sue for rent as it becomes due, because that would require the landlord to reenter the premises and risk lease termination. See also New Towne L. P. v. Pier 1 Imports (U.S.), Inc., 680 N.E.2d 644 (Ohio App. 1996) (court concludes that a waiver of the landlord's duty to mitigate is enforceable when the parties to a commercial lease freely agreed on the waiver).

(n71)Footnote 609. See, e.g., Hirsch v. Merchants Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 336 N.E.2d 833 (Ind. Ct. App. 1975) ; Whitehorn v. Dickerson, 419 S.W.2d 713 (Mo. Ct. App. 1967) ; MAR SON, Inc. v. Terwaho, Enters., 259 N.W.2d 289 (N.D. 1977) .

(n72)Footnote 610. See Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) ; Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) .

(n73)Footnote 611. See id.; see also Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 552, 554 (1982).

(n74)Footnote 612. See E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R.3d 534, 577 (1968) ; Snyder v. Ambrose, 639 N.E.2d 639 (Ill. Ct. App. 1994) (statute imposes duty on landlord to mitigate damages; court concludes that landlord should have burden of proof on mitigation).

(n75)Footnote 613. See, e.g., Gordon v. Consolidated Sun Ray, Inc., 404 P.2d 949 (Kan. 1965) ; Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) ; Wright v. Baumann, 398 P.2d 119 (Or. 1965) ; E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R.3d 534, 575 (1968) .

(n76)Footnote 614. See, e.g., Carpenter v. Wisniewski, 215 N.E.2d 882 (Ind. Ct. App. 1966) ; Vawter v. McKissick, 159 N.W.2d 538 (Iowa 1968) ; Ruud v. Larson, 392 N.W.2d 62 (N.D. 1986) ; Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) .

(n77)Footnote 615. See Guy v. Gould, 266 P. 925 (Kan. 1928) ; Martin v. Siegley, 212 P. 1057 (Wash. 1923) .

(n78)Footnote 616. 948 S.W.2d 293 (Tex. 1997) .

(n79)Footnote 617. 948 S.W.2d at 300 .

(n80)Footnote 618. 948 S.W.2d at 300 . The Texas legislature has also adopted a mitigation statute. The statute and the Austin Hill case are discussed in Whelan, Thomas M., Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a Tenant's Personal Property, 3 Tex. Wes. L. Rev. (1997) 283.

(n81)Footnote 619. 593 A.2d 309 (N.J. 1991) .

(n82)Footnote 620. 593 A.2d 309, 321 (N.J. 1991) .

(n83)Footnote 621. 593 A.2d 309, 321-322 (N.J. 1991) .

(n84)Footnote 622. See, e.g., Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8 207(c); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.29(4)(b); see generally see also Sarajane Love, Landlord's Remedies When the Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, and Leases, 30 Kan. L. Rev. 533, 552, 554 (1982).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.12

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.12 Death or Dissolution of Tenant.

The rights of the landlord will be significantly affected if the death of an individual tenant results in the termination of the lease. Whether or not it does so normally depends on the nature of the leasehold estate. If the tenancy is a tenancy at will, which may be terminated at any time by either party to the lease, the death of the tenant will result in lease termination. n623 However, the result is generally otherwise when the tenancy is a tenancy for years or a periodic tenancy. Upon the death of the tenant under a tenancy for years or a periodic tenancy, the leasehold generally passes to the tenant's estate, which remains liable to the landlord for the performance of lease obligations. n624

These results could be varied by agreement. The parties could agree, for example, that the lease will terminate upon the death of the tenant. n625 In a few instances, courts have also departed from the general rules and have permitted the tenant's estate to avoid continuing lease obligations on the ground that the lease was one of a personal nature. n626

It has often been held that the dissolution of a tenant corporation does not result in termination of the lease. n627 This is also said to be the rule with respect to a tenant that is a partnership. n628 Of course, this also means that, in the absence of a lease provision permitting the landlord to do so, the landlord is not free to terminate the lease upon the dissolution of a corporate tenant. n629 However, in one case a court found that the voluntary dissolution of a corporation constituted an anticipatory repudiation of the lease, providing the landlord with a cause of action in damages. n630

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 623. See, e.g., Hancock v. Maurer, 229 P. 611 (Okla. 1924) ; Annotation., Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 68 A.L.R. 590 (1930) .

(n2)Footnote 624. See, e.g., In re Estate of Conklin, 451 N.E.2d 1382 (Ill. Ct. App. 1983) ; Israel v. Beale, 169 N.E. 777 (Mass. 1930) ; Annotation, Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 68 A.L.R. 590 (1930) ; cf. Dobyns v. South Carolina Dep't of Parks, Recreation & Tourism, 480 S.E.2d 81 (S.C. 1997) (death of tenant under term for years lease does not terminate the tenancy; however, where option to renew the lease is personal, the lease passes to the estate or heirs of the tenant only until the end of the current lease period).

(n3)Footnote 625. See, e.g., Sutton v. Hiram Lodge, 10 S.E. 585 (Ga. 1889) .

(n4)Footnote 626. See, e.g., Warnecke v. Estate of Rabenau, 367 S.W.2d 15 (Mo. Ct. App. 1963) (lease solely for the purpose of carrying out decedent's profession as an accountant).

(n5)Footnote 627. See, e.g., Hampton v. Hampton Beach Imp. Co., 218 A.2d 442 (N.H. 1966) ; Perry v. Shaw, 152 Fla. 765, 13 So. 2d 811 (Fla. 1942) .

(n6)Footnote 628. See, e.g., Milmoe v. Sapienza, 142 A. 360 (N.J. Ch. 1928) .

(n7)Footnote 629. See Perry v. Shaw, 13 So. 2d 811 (Fla. 1942) .

(n8)Footnote 630. See South Main Akron, Inc. v. Lynn Realty, Inc., 106 N.E.2d 325 (Ohio Ct. App. 1951) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.13

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.13 Bankruptcy.

While a detailed discussion of bankruptcy issues is beyond the scope of this chapter, it is clear that the rights of parties are significantly affected by bankruptcy, and the principal bankruptcy implications should accordingly be mentioned.

One of the obvious effects of tenant bankruptcy is the automatic stay that results from the filing. While the automatic stay is in effect, it will shield the tenant from judicial and nonjudicial actions by the landlord to recover unpaid rent or to recover possession of the leased premises, notwithstanding tenant default. n631 A willful violation of the automatic stay could subject the landlord to liability for damages, costs, and attorneys' fees. n632

It should be noted that the Bankruptcy Code contains an exception from the automatic stay for a nonresidential lease whose term expires before or after the filing of bankruptcy. n633 Upon the expiration of a non residential lease, it ceases to be property of the bankruptcy estate, and the landlord may proceed to take possession. n634

Another potentially significant effect of tenant bankruptcy is lease rejection. The Bankruptcy Code permits the trustee in bankruptcy or the debtor in possession to reject an unexpired lease, subject to court approval. n635 An unexpired nonresidential real property lease will be deemed to be rejected if the trustee does not timely assume it or reject it. n636 Under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, rejection of the unexpired lease generally constitutes a breach of the lease, and entitles the landlord to make a claim for damages against the bankruptcy estate. n637 In effect, this allows the landlord to accelerate the tenant's future rental obligations. However, the landlord's claim for damages resulting from the breach is limited by statute. The amount of the claim for damages will be limited to the sum of: 1) the unpaid rent that accrued prior to the filing of the bankruptcy, the date that the landlord repossessed the property, or the date the property was surrendered to the landlord, whichever is earlier and; 2) later accruing rent in an amount not to exceed the rent reserved in the lease for the greater of one year or 15% of the remaining lease term, not to exceed three years. n638

In the case of a nonresidential lease, the landlord is also entitled to rental payments following the filing of the petition and until lease rejection. n639 In the case of a residential lease, the general rule is that, until the lease is assumed or rejected, the estate is not liable under the terms of the lease; however, the estate will be liable for the reasonable value of use and occupancy of the premises. n640

Instead of rejecting a lease, the trustee or the debtor in possession may elect to assume it, even if the lease is in default. In doing so, however, the trustee or the debtor in possession will be obligated to cure existing defaults in the payment of rent, to compensate the landlord for other pecuniary losses resulting from default, and to provide adequate assurance of future performance of leasehold obligations. n641 Upon assumption of the lease, the bankruptcy trustee or the debtor in possession may also be able to assign it to another party if there is adequate assurance of future performance by the assignee, even if the lease restricts assignment by the tenant. n642 In connection with the assignment, the landlord has the right to require a security deposit for the performance of the assignee's lease obligations. n643

Bankruptcy usually results in the invalidity of landlord liens, under the avoidance powers of the bankruptcy trustee. The Bankruptcy Code expressly gives the trustee power to avoid landlord liens for rent and liens of distress for rent that are created by statute or that arise at common law. n644 But this particular avoidance power has been thought to be inapplicable to consensual security interests in tenant property; n645 accordingly, a landlord with a consensual security interest for rent should be able to qualify as a secured, or partially secured, creditor. However, an unperfected consensual lien could still be defeated pursuant to the trustee's avoidance power as a judicial lien creditor. n646

Tenant bankruptcy may also have implications for tenant security deposits. If the landlord holds a security deposit, the landlord will be a secured creditor to the extent of the deposit. n647 If the landlord has a claim for damages, the security deposit apparently must be applied against the landlord's allowable claim; however, if the amount of the security deposit should exceed the amount of the landlord's allowable claim, the landlord seems to be required to pay the excess into the bankruptcy estate. n648

In an effort to avoid some of the constraints of bankruptcy, landlords have often included clauses in their leases providing for automatic lease termination in the event of tenant bankruptcy or insolvency. However such "ipso facto" clauses generally became unenforceable with the 1978 adoption of the Bankruptcy Code. n649

Leasehold issues can also arise if it is the landlord who files for bankruptcy. One of those issues arises under R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11, which, subject to some conditions, permits sale of the property of the bankruptcy estate "free of any interest." Could that include a lease? The United States Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals answered that question in the affirmative. It held that section 363 permitted sale of land in the bankruptcy estate free of an unrecorded tenant lease. The tenant in that case argued that its interest was entitled to protection under section 365(h), which provides that when the landlord is in bankruptcy and the tenant's lease is rejected, the tenant will nonetheless be permitted to "retain its rights under such lease." But the court concluded that section 365 was not applicable to a sale of bankruptcy estate property conducted pursuant to section 363. n650

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 631. See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42- 92. There are exceptions to the automatic stay. In some circumstances, for example, a residential landlord can pursue eviction proceedings based on illegal drug use or damage to the leased property notwithstanding the existence of the automatic stay. See 35 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1700-1(23.)

(n2)Footnote 632. See 35 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1700-1.

(n3)Footnote 633. See 11 U.S.C. § 362(b)(10).

(n4)Footnote 634. See 2 Daniel R. Cowans, Cowans Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 11.5, at 350 351 (1989).

(n5)Footnote 635. See 11 U.S.C. § 365; In re Thompson, 788 F.2d 560 (9th Cir. 1986) ; See 2 Daniel R. Cowans, Cowans Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 11.11, at 448 (1989).

(n6)Footnote 636. See 11 U.S.C. § 365(d)(4). There is some disagreement over whether, at that point, a landlord may obtain an order from the bankruptcy court to require surrender of the leased property. See In re Elm Inn, Inc., 942 F.2d 630 (9th Cir. 1991) (court has authority to issue order granting surrender of leased property to landlord once lease is deemed rejected); In re Williams, 171 B.R. 420 (Ga. 1994) (landlord must bring appropriate adversary proceeding to recover possession of the property). There has been some uncertainty over whether court approval constitutes a condition precedent or a condition subsequent to an effective rejection of a non-residential lease. In Thinking Machines Corp. v. Mellon Fin. Servs. Corp., 67 F.3d 1021 (1st Cir. 1995) , the court concluded that judicial approval was a condition precedent to rejection, and determinative of its effective date. However, the court also stated that a bankruptcy court has the equitable power to make rejection retroactive to the date of the trustee's motion to reject.

(n7)Footnote 637. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 365(g), 502(g); but see In re Knight, 8 B.R. 925 (D. Md. 1981) (rejection of a residential lease said to give rise to an abandonment of the lease by the estate, rather than a breach of the lease); Cf. Eastover Bank for Sav. v. Sowashee Venture (In re Austin Dev. Co.), 19 F.3d 1077 (5th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 201 (1994) (lease rejection brings about a breach, not a termination, of the lease); see generally Michael T. Andrew, Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy: Understanding "Rejection," 59 Colo. L. Rev. 845 (1988).

(n8)Footnote 638. See 11 U.S.C. § 502(b)(6); See 2 Daniel R. Cowans, Cowans Bankruptcy Law and Practice § 12.15 (1989).

(n9)Footnote 639. See 11 U.S.C. 365(d)(3). The majority view, based on statutory language, is that the landlord is entitled to the rental amount stated in the lease, and also automatically entitled to have that claim treated as an administrative expense. See e.g., In re Pacific-Atlantic Trading Co., 27 F.3d 401 (9th Cir. 1994) ; In re Potomac Systems Engineering, Inc., 208 B.R. 561 (Bankr. N.D. Ala. 1997) . But some courts have taken the position that if such payments are to be regarded as administrative expenses, they must satisfy the requirement that the payments benefit the bankruptcy estate. See e.g., In re JAS Enterprises, Inc., 180 B.R. 210 (Bankr. D. Neb. 1995) , aff'd, 113 F.3d 1238 (8th Cir. 1997) . See generally 3 Collier on Bankruptcy 365.04[3][f][ii] (15th ed. 1998).

