(n10)Footnote 640. See 3 Collier on Bankruptcy 365.04[7][a] (15th ed. 1998). See 11 U.S.C. 365(d)(3). See also Thinking Machines Corp. v. Mellon Fin. Servs. Corp., 67 F.3d 1021 (1st Cir. 1995) (dispute over when the obligation to pay rent at the contract rate terminated; the court concluded that judicial approval was a condition precedent to rejection, and determinative of its effective date; however, the court also stated that a bankruptcy court has the equitable power to make rejection retroactive to the date of the trustee's motion to reject).

(n11)Footnote 641. See 11 U.S.C. § 365(b)(1). In 2005, an exception was added to this section that permits assumption notwithstanding the existence of an incurable nonmonetary default by the debtor. There is some authority for the proposition that, prior to deciding whether to accept or reject a nonresidential lease, a debtor in possession may exercise an option to renew a lease, even though the lease is in default, and even though the lease itself says that the debtor cannot be in default at the time of the renewal. See In re Circle K Corp., 127 F.3d 904 (9th Cir. 1997).

(n12)Footnote 642. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 365(f)(1), Ga. Code § 44-7-1. Ga. Code § 44-7-13 allows a debtor to assign a lease "notwithstanding a provision that prohibits, restricts, or conditions the assignment." But there is some tension between this section and language in section 365(b)(3) that contemplates the provision of adequate assurance that an assignment is subject to lease provisions limiting the use of the leased space in a shopping center. In In re Trak Auto Corp., 367 F.3d 237 (4th Cir. 2004) , the court concluded that the more specific provision of 365(b)(3), regarding shopping centers, took precedence over the general prohibition against anti assignment clauses in 365(f)(1).

(n13)Footnote 643. See Ga. Code § 44-6-105(l).

(n14)Footnote 644. See 11 U.S.C. § 545. Section 545 states that it applies to "statutory liens," but the definition of "statutory lien" in 101 of the Code incorporates a "lien of distress for rent, whether or not statutory." See 5 Collier on Bankruptcy 545.01[2] (15th ed. 1998).

(n15)Footnote 645. See 4 William M. Collier, Collier on Bankruptcy 545.04[4] (15th ed. 1992) [hereinafter Collier on Bankruptcy]; see also In re King Furniture City, Inc., 240 F. Supp. 453 (E.D. Ark. 1965) (consensual lien not a lien of distress for rent).

(n16)Footnote 646. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 544(a), Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70 (trustee status); U.C.C. § 9 301(1)(b) (vulnerability of unperfected security interest).

(n17)Footnote 647. See Benjamin Weintraub and Alan N. Resnick, Bankruptcy Law Manual 5.05[2] (1986).

(n18)Footnote 648. See Oldden v. Tonto Realty Corp., 143 F.2d 916 (2d Cir. 1944) ; Collier on Bankruptcy § 502.02[d].

(n19)Footnote 649. See 11 U.S.C. § 365(e)(1); Collier on Bankruptcy § 365.06.

(n20)Footnote 650. See Precision Industries, Inc. v. Qualitech Steel SBQ, LLC, 327 F.3d 537 (7th Cir. 2003) . Subject to some conditions, 363 permits sales of estate property "free and clear of any interest in such property." On the other hand, 365(h) provides that if the trustee in bankruptcy or the debtor in possession rejects an unexpired lease of real property, the tenant will be permitted to "retain its rights under such lease." In Precision Industries, the court considered whether the tenant protections in 365(h) trump the provisions of 363. The court said not. It did not regard the two sections as being in conflict:

> Where estate property under lease is to be sold, section 363 permits the sale to occur free and clear of lessee's possessory interest provided that the lessee (upon request) is granted adequate protection for its interest. Where the property is not sold, and the debtor remains in possession thereof but chooses to reject the lease, section 365(h) comes into play and the lessee retains the right to possess the property. So understood, both provisions may be given full effect without coming into conflict with one another and without disregarding the rights of lessees.

327 F.3d at 548 . The result in Precision Industries was that the tenant's possessory interest was extinguished by the sale.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.14

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.14 Condemnation.

[Go To Supp]

Both landlord and tenant have interests in the leased property that may be affected by an eminent domain proceeding. Depending on the extent of the condemnation, and the provisions of the lease, both landlord and tenant may be entitled to a portion of the condemnation award. And, depending on the extent of the condemnation, the lease may be terminated, and the landlord's right to receive rent may be cut off, or the tenant may be entitled to a partial abatement of the rental obligation. This section of the chapter considers how condemnation affects the interests of the landlord, with emphasis on the allocation of the condemnation award between landlord and tenant and the landlord's right to receive rent.

§ 40.14(a) Total Condemnation.

There is little dispute about the effect of a total condemnation of the leased premises. When there is a total, permanent, taking of the entire fee simple interest that is subject to the lease, it is generally agreed that the lease is terminated. n651 A total taking causes the tenant's leasehold interest and the landlord's reversionary interest to be held by the condemning authority and to be merged into a new present estate in land. n652

Upon termination of the tenancy, the landlord will not be entitled to the receipt of unaccrued future rent from the tenant. Instead, the landlord will be entitled to a portion of the condemnation award based on the value of the landlord's reversionary interest in the property, which will usually be the difference between the value of the property in fee and any leasehold value allocable to the tenant. n653 Unless the tenant is a tenant at will, or a tenant at sufferance, the tenant will also be entitled to a portion of the condemnation award, based on the value of the tenant's leasehold interest. n654 While courts have described the tenant's measure of damages in different ways, n655 generally the tenant will be able to receive compensation to the extent that the rental value of the leased premises over the remaining lease term exceeds the cost of the tenant's rental obligations, discounted to present value. n656 This is sometimes referred to as "bonus value."

§ 40.14(b) Partial Condemnation.

There is significant disagreement over the consequences of a partial condemnation -- one that affects less than all of the property subject to the lease. The prevailing view is that if only a portion of the property is taken, the tenant remains liable for the stated rent under the lease. n657 The rationale is that the tenant, as the owner of an estate in land, is entitled to compensation from the government for what is taken; however, the tenant is not entitled to be relieved from the contractual obligation to pay rent to the landlord. n658 Under this approach, the compensation award to the tenant is an amount equal to the difference between the fair market value of the leasehold before and after the taking, without diminution for the continuing rental obligation, and the landlord's award is for the loss in market value to the reversion. n659 However, since the tenant's award effectively includes the present value of future rental payments to the landlord, this result puts the landlord at risk. Once the portion of the land is taken and the award is given to the tenant, the landlord cannot repossess that portion of the land in the event the tenant fails to make rent payments; the landlord has to rely on the unsecured obligation of the tenant to pay the entire amount of the rent. The risk to the landlord could be reduced by placing the funds in trust. n660

An alternative view, represented by a minority of cases, and reflected in some statutes, considers a partial taking of the leased premises to partially end the landlord-tenant relationship, and to partially extinguish the obligation of the tenant to pay rent to the landlord. The result is a pro rata abatement of future rent. n661 As to the portion subject to the condemnation, both the reversion and the leasehold are held by the condemning authority, causing a merger. n662 Where the rent abatement rule prevails, the tenant does not receive a portion of the condemnation award based on the discounted present value of future rental payments for the property taken. Instead, the tenant's portion, if any, of the award will be based on the bonus value of the leasehold attributable to the portion taken. n663 Under this approach, the landlord receives compensation for the diminution in rent attributable to the property taken, and does not have to depend upon an unsecured obligation of the tenant to pay that rent in the future.

The Restatement takes a somewhat different approach. Although it favors rent abatement when the taking does not result in lease termination, the Restatement is also of the view that, in the absence of a valid agreement to the contrary, a lease should be terminated if a partial taking significantly interferes with the use of the property contemplated by the parties. n664 Under the Restatement approach, the tenant does not have an option to continue to lease, with an abatement of the rent, because this would compel the landlord to accept an arrangement substantially different from the one the landlord bargained for. n665 Consistent with the result advocated by the Restatement, some courts have held that the lease should be terminated when a partial taking is so substantial that the remaining portion of the property is untenantable for the purposes of the lease. n666

The Uniform Eminent Domain Code would permit the court to determine that a partial taking results in lease termination if the part taken is essential for the purpose of the lease or if the remaining portion is unsuitable for the purpose of the lease. n667

§ 40.14(c) Temporary Taking.

A taking may also be for a temporary period of time. When the temporary taking is for a period that is shorter than the remaining term of the lease, it has been held that the lease will not be terminated and the tenant's rental obligation to the landlord will be unaffected. n668 Because the condemnation does not affect the landlord's reversion, it is thought that the entire condemnation award should be allocable to the tenant. n669 But this approach again seems to place the landlord at risk, because the tenant could, following receipt of the condemnation award, fail to make lease payments to the landlord. n670

The Restatement would apply the same rule here that it applies to a partial physical taking. That is, even if the period of the taking is for a shorter period than the remaining lease term, if the taking significantly interferes with the use of the premises contemplated by the parties, the lease will be terminated. n671 Moreover, the Restatement contemplates that, unless the taking is for a "very short period of time," it will significantly interfere with the parties' contemplated use of the property. n672 If the taking is for so short a period that it would not result in lease termination, then the Restatement provides that the rent may be abated. n673 Not surprisingly, the Restatement also provides for lease termination in the event the temporary taking of the property is for a period that includes the entire unexpired term of the lease. n674

§ 40.14(d) Effect of Lease Provisions.

The parties are generally free to agree on the leasehold consequences of condemnation. n675 They could, for example, agree that, in the case of a partial condemnation, rent will be proportionately abated, and the tenant will receive no compensation for the value of the leasehold. n676 On the other hand, they could agree that the lease will automatically terminate, or that either the landlord or the tenant will have the option to terminate, in the event that all or a portion of the leased property is condemned by governmental authority. n677

A provision stating that the lease is to terminate upon the taking of all or a portion of the leased property is usually interpreted to reflect an intention that the tenant not obtain compensation for the leasehold from the condemnation award. n678 However, disliking forfeitures, courts tend, where possible, to construe such termination clauses so as not to apply to particular condemnations. n679 There is some authority for the proposition that lease provisions concerning condemnation are subject to the contract doctrine of unconscionability. n680

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 651. See, e.g., Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 33 N.E. 746 (Ill. 1893) ; Lowell Hous. Auth. v. Save Mor Furn. Stores, Inc., 193 N.E.2d 585 (Mass. 1963) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1 (1977); K. A. Drechsler, Annotation, Condemnation of Premises or Part Thereof as Affecting Rights of Landlord and Tenant Inter Se, 163 A.L.R. 679, 680 (1946) , supplementing Annotation, 43 A.L.R. 1176 (1926) .

(n2)Footnote 652. See Leonard v. Autocar Sales & Serv. Co., 64 N.E.2d 477 (Ill. 1945) , cert. denied, 327 U.S. 804 (1946) ; Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 33 N.E. 746 (Ill. 1893) ; Alan N. Polasky, The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests, 48 Va. L. Rev. 477 (1962).

(n3)Footnote 653. See, e.g., Arlen of Nanuet, Inc. v. State, 258 N.E.2d 890 (N.Y. 1970) ; 4 Nichols on Eminent Domain §§ 12.05[1], 12D.04[2] (LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

(n4)Footnote 654. See Nichols on Eminent Domain §§ 5.06[5], 5.06[6] ((LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

(n5)Footnote 655. See Annotation., Eminent Domain: Measure and Elements of Lessee's Compensation for Condemnor's Taking or Damaging of Leasehold, 17 A.L.R.4th 337 (1982) .

(n6)Footnote 656. See, e.g., Alamo Land & Cattle Co. v. Arizona, 424 U.S. 295 (1976) ; Barnini v. Sun Oil Co., 283 A.2d 217 (Conn. 1971) ; Alan N. Polasky, The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests, 48 Va. L. Rev. 477, 493 (1962); Edward D. McKirdy, How to Value a Leasehold in an Eminent Domain Case, PRAC. REAL EST. L., March 1994, at 11, 12.

(n7)Footnote 657. See, e.g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 323 U.S. 373 (1945) ; Elliott v. Joseph, 351 S.W.2d 879 (Tex. 1961) ; Annotation, Condemnation of Premises or Part Thereof as Affecting Rights of Landlord and Tenant Inter Se, 43 A.L.R. 1176 (1926) , supplemented, 163 A.L.R. 679 (1946) .

(n8)Footnote 658. See, e.g., Lehigh Valley R.R. v. Metropolitan Lumber Co., 148 A. 568 (N.J. 1930) ; Elliott v. Joseph, 351 S.W.2d 879 (Tex. 1961) .

(n9)Footnote 659. See, e.g., City of Pasadena v. Porter, 257 P. 526 (Cal. 1927) ; Batcheller v. Iowa State Hwy. Comm'n, 101 N.W.2d 30 (Iowa 1960) ; Elliott v. Joseph, 351 S.W.2d 879 (Tex. 1961) ; Alan N. Polasky, The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests, 48 Va. L. Rev. 477, 494 (1962); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 10:6 (1980).

(n10)Footnote 660. See N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-16-13.1; Stubbings v. Village of Evanston, 26 N.E. 577 (Ill. 1891) .

(n11)Footnote 661. See, e.g., Lee v. Indian Creek Drainage Dist., 148 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1963) ; Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. State, 238 N.E.2d 705 (N.Y. 1968) ; S.D. Codified Laws §§ 43-32-8-- 43-32-10; R.I. Gen. Law Ann. § 24 3 12; W. Va. Code Ann. § 37-6-29.

(n12)Footnote 662. See Alan N. Polasky, The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests, 48 Va. L. Rev. 477, 493 (1962); Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 10:6 (1980).

(n13)Footnote 663. See, e.g., Lee v. Indian Creek Drainage Dist., 148 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1963) .

(n14)Footnote 664. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1(2)(a) (1977).

(n15)Footnote 665. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1 cmt. b (1977).

(n16)Footnote 666. See, e.g., Yellow Cab Co. v. Howard, 243 Ill. App. 263 (1927) (73% of taxi garage taken); Farr v. Williams, 101 S.E.2d 483 (S.C. 1957) (taking of much of the land and a store).

(n17)Footnote 667. See Uniform Eminent Domain Code § 1013(b).

(n18)Footnote 668. See, e.g., Leonard v. Autocar Sales & Serv. Co., 64 N.E.2d 477 (Ill. 1945); but see State ex rel. Department of Hwys. v. Cefalu, 233 So. 2d 273 (La. Ct. App. 1970) (tenant may seek lease termination or diminution in rental payments).

(n19)Footnote 669. See, e.g., United States v. General Motors Corp., 323 U.S. 373 (1945) ; 2 Nichols on Eminent Domain § 5.06.

(n20)Footnote 670. See Nichols on Eminent Domain § 10:6Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 10:6 (1980).

(n21)Footnote 671. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1(2)(a) (1977).

(n22)Footnote 672. See id. cmt. b.

(n23)Footnote 673. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1(2)(b) (1977).

(n24)Footnote 674. Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1(1) cmt. b (1977).

(n25)Footnote 675. See, e.g., United States v. Petty Motor Co., 327 U.S. 372 (1946) .

(n26)Footnote 676. See, e.g., United Cigar Stores Co. v. Norwood, 208 N.Y.S. 420 (Sup. Ct. 1925) .

(n27)Footnote 677. See, e.g., Waesche v. Redevelopment Agency of New London, 229 A.2d 352 (Conn. 1967) ; State v. Starzinger, 179 N.W.2d 761 (Iowa 1970) ; Exxon Corp. v. M & Q Holding Corp., 269 S.E.2d 371 (Va. 1980) .

(n28)Footnote 678. See, e.g., United States v. Petty Motor Co., 327 U.S. 372 (1946) ; Sugarman v. City of Baltimore, 191 A.2d 240 (Md. 1963) ; In re Site for Library, 95 N.W.2d 112 (Minn. 1959) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.2 cmt. f, Reporter's Note 9 (1977); but see City of Vista v. W.O. Fielder, 919 P.2d 151 (Cal. 1996) (lease provided that lease terminates if the property is condemned; court considers the meaning of this provision in light of the language of California's eminent domain legislation, and concludes that it does not deprive the tenant of any right to compensation for the taking of the leasehold or other property); cf. Eller Media Co. v. Mississippi Transp. Com'n, 900 So. 2d 1156 (Miss. 2005) (lease provision requiring tenant to remove billboard structure and terminate lease upon sale of property, following landlord's notice, did not apply to a condemnation; the result was the sharing of the condemnation award).

(n29)Footnote 679. See, e.g., United States v. 150.29 Acres, 148 F.2d 33 (7th Cir.); Belmont Clothes, Inc. v. Pleet, 184 A.2d 731 (Md. 1962) ; 2 Nichols on Eminent Domain § 5.06[2].

(n30)Footnote 680. See Honolulu v. Midkiff, 616 P.2d 213 (Haw. 1980) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 8.1 cmt. e (1977).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.15

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.15 Destruction of Improvements Located on the Leased Premises.

§ 40.15(a) The Traditional Rule.

The traditional rule at common law is that a tenancy is not terminated, and the tenant's rental obligation is unaffected, when the buildings on the leased premises are destroyed, in whole or in part, by a casualty that is not the fault of either party. n681 Courts have articulated several justifications for the rule. An English court reasoned, in an early case, that an express obligation to pay rent could only be modified by an express limitation, and that such a limitation should not be implied by the court. n682 Other courts have justified the rule on the grounds that: 1) a lease is a conveyance of real property, and that the tenant should bear the risk of casualty loss following the conveyance; n683 2) when neither landlord nor tenant cause the loss, the consequences of the loss should be divided, with the tenant losing the property for the term, and the landlord losing it thereafter; n684 3) an exemption from loss would make the tenant less careful, because the tenant would, in some cases, benefit from a destruction of the leased premises if the lease would thereby be terminated; n685 and 4) the land itself, rather than the improvements located thereon, constitutes the essential subject matter of the lease, and the destruction of improvements leaves the subject matter intact. n686

The last mentioned justification for the rule also gave rise to an important exception. American courts came to recognize that if the tenant rented only rooms in a building, and the building were totally destroyed, the tenant could claim that the subject matter of the lease itself had been destroyed, and that lease termination was justified. n687 The same rationale has been used to excuse a tenant from rent liability when the tenant rented only a storeroom in a building that was destroyed by casualty, n688 and when the tenant rented only a riverfront that was washed away by river turbulence. n689

§ 40.15(b) Departures from the Traditional Rule.

The vitality of the traditional rule has been reduced in modern times by statutory developments, judicial decisions, and by the common inclusion, at least in commercial leases, of provisions permitting the tenant to be relieved from rent liability when leasehold improvements are substantially damaged by fire or other casualty. n690

A majority of states now have statutes that, at least in some circumstances, relieve the tenant of the obligation to pay rent to the landlord when the leased premises are destroyed without fault of the tenant. n691 A number of the statutes

apply both to commercial and residential tenancies, but many apply only to residential tenancies. n692 Most of the statutes appear to relieve the tenant of rent liability only if the level of destruction makes the premises untenantable, n693 but some statutes provide for lease termination if the cost of repairs would exceed a certain amount, n694 or if the landlord is obligated to repair the premises and does not do so within a reasonable time. n695 Termination is not necessarily automatic; a number of the statutes provide the tenant with an option to terminate the lease. n696 Moreover, some statutes provide that if the premises are only partially destroyed, the rent is suspended or abated until the landlord makes the needed repairs. n697

In a few cases, the traditional rule has been rejected or abrogated by court decision, independent of statute. The Nebraska Supreme Court rejected the traditional rule many years ago, holding that destruction of improvements resulted in termination of the tenancy. n698 In more recent times, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court held that a tenant could be excused from further performance under the lease when a garage located on the leased premises was destroyed by fire. Even though the tenant had leased land as well as the garage, the Court concluded that the intended purpose of the lease had been frustrated by the destruction of the garage, and that the tenant should be relieved of rent liability. Instead of applying the traditional property based rule, the Court used a contract based frustration of purpose analysis. n699

The Restatement also rejects the traditional rule. Its position is that, absent an agreement to the contrary, the tenant should be able to terminate the lease when a non manmade force suddenly makes the leased premises unsuitable for the parties contemplated use, and the landlord does not correct the condition within a reasonable time after being requested to do so. n700 The Restatement also takes the position that the tenant's only remedy should be lease termination, because it would be unfair to burden the landlord with other remedies when the landlord is not at fault for the damage. n701

The traditional rule has also been eroded, in many states, by the statutory enactment or judicial adoption of a warranty of habitability on the part of the landlord for residential leases. n702 In these jurisdictions, the failure of the landlord to repair residential premises that are rendered uninhabitable by accidental fire or other casualty would result in a breach of the warranty of habitability, and would entitle the tenant to exercise remedies, such as rent withholding or lease termination, that are available in the particular jurisdiction.

§ 40.15(c) Effect of Lease Provisions.

Whether or not the traditional rule would otherwise apply, the parties are generally free to agree as to what effect destruction of buildings will have on the landlord-tenant relationship. n703 However, a number of the statutes that deal with destruction of buildings on leased premises do not permit the parties to enter into an agreement that is contrary to the statutory provisions. Statutes that are based on the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, for example, permit the tenant to terminate the lease or to obtain a reduction in rent liability in the event the leased premises are destroyed or substantially damaged by fire or other casualty. n704 They also prohibit waiver of these rights. n705

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the common law imposed no obligation on either landlord or tenant to rebuild improvements that were destroyed by accidental fire or other casualty. n706 But lease provisions requiring one of the parties to rebuild leased improvements are common in long term commercial leases. n707 The typical difficulty concerning such lease provisions is their interpretation. One type of lease provision -- the unlimited general repair covenant -- has been a particular source of trouble. This is a covenant that requires a party to repair the premises, or to keep the premises in repair, that is otherwise unlimited by other provisions in the lease. Some courts have held that general repair covenants are sufficient to impose an obligation to rebuild improvements that have been totally destroyed by casualty. n708 Some courts have held otherwise, reasoning that a covenant to repair does not contemplate the rebuilding of a destroyed, or substantially destroyed, structure. n709

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 681. See, e.g., Lawson v. Taylor Hotels, 411 S.W.2d 669 (Ark. 1967) ; Sigal v. Wise, 158 A. 891 (Conn.

1932) .

(n2)Footnote 682. See Paradine v. Jane, 82 Eng. Rep. 897 (1648).

(n3)Footnote 683. See, e.g., Fowler v. Bott, 6 Mass. 63 (1809) .

(n4)Footnote 684. See Harvey v. Weisbaum, 113 P. 656 (Cal. 1911) .

(n5)Footnote 685. See id.

(n6)Footnote 686. See Baker v. Holtpzaffell, 34 Eng. Rep. 261 (1811).

(n7)Footnote 687. See, e.g., Stockwell v. Hunter, 52 Mass. 448 (1846) ; Crow Lumber and Bldg. Materials Co. v. Washington County Library Bd., 428 S.W.2d 758 (Mo. Ct. App. 1968) ; Restatement of Property (Second) § 5.4 Reporter's Note 4 (1977).

(n8)Footnote 688. See White v. Steele, 33 S.W.2d 224 (Tex. Ct. App. 1930) .

(n9)Footnote 689. See Waite v. O'Neil, 76 F. 408 (6th Cir. 1896) .

(n10)Footnote 690. See generally Kristine C. Karnezis, Annotation, Modern Status of Rule as to Tenant's Rent Liability after Injury to or Destruction of Demised Premises, 99 A.L.R.3d 738 (1980) .

(n11)Footnote 691. See Restatement (Second) of Property ch. 5, Statutory Note 2 (1977).

(n12)Footnote 692. See id.

(n13)Footnote 693. See, e.g., N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 227.

(n14)Footnote 694. See, e.g., North Carolina Gen. Stat. § 42 12 (more than one year's rent).

(n15)Footnote 695. See, e.g., W. Va. Code. Ann. § 37 6 28.

(n16)Footnote 696. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1932(2).

(n17)Footnote 697. See, e.g., N.J. Rev. Stat. § 46:8 6; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07(4). Further discussion of the statutes may be found in chapter 43 § 43.06(f).

(n18)Footnote 698. See Wattles v. South Omaha Ice & Coal Co., 69 N.W. 785 (Neb. 1897) .

(n19)Footnote 699. See Albert M. Greenfield & Co. v. Kolea, 380 A.2d 758 (Pa. 1977) .

(n20)Footnote 700. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.4 (1977).

(n21)Footnote 701. See id. cmt. f.

(n22)Footnote 702. The implied warranty of habitability is discussed in chapter 41. See § 41.06.

(n23)Footnote 703. See, e.g., Standard Indus. v. Alexander Smith, Inc., 133 A.2d 460 (Md. 1957) ; Corbett v. Spring Garden Ins. Co., 50 N.E. 282 (N.Y. 1898) ; Mawardi v. Purple Potato, Ltd., 590 N.Y.S.2d 132 (N.Y. App. 1992) ; Flame v. Oak Lane Shopping Center, Inc., 369 A.2d 1220 (Pa. 1977) .

(n24)Footnote 704. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.106.

(n25)Footnote 705. See id. § 1.403.

(n26)Footnote 706. The tenant was obligated to avoid waste, but that obligation did not extend to the restoration of accidentally destroyed improvements. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.78 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n27)Footnote 707. See, e.g., Quinerly v. Dundee Corp., 31 So. 2d 533 (Fla. 1947) (tenant obligation); Burnstine v. Margulies, 87 A.2d 37 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1952) (landlord obligation).

(n28)Footnote 708. See, e.g., Rose v. Freeway Aviation, Inc., 585 P.2d 907 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1978) (landlord obligated to rebuild); Chambers v. The North River Line, 102 S.E. 198 (N.C. 1920) (tenant obligated to rebuild); H.D. Warren, Landlord's Duty Under Express Covenant to Repair, Rebuild, or Restore, Where Property is Damaged or Destroyed by Fire, Annotation, 38 A.L.R.2d 682 (1954) .

(n29)Footnote 709. See, e.g., Garrett v. Mayor, 216 P.2d 965 (Okla. 1950) (landlord not obligated to rebuild); Orr v. Vandygriff, 251 S.W.2d 573 (Tex. Ct. App. 1952) (tenant not obligated to rebuild); Cf. Lexington Ins. Co. v. All Regions Chem. Labs, Inc., 647 N.E.2d 399 (Mass. 1995) (tenant is shielded from contract liability to the landlord for fire loss or damage caused by negligence under a "yield up" lease clause. The clause provided that, at the expiration of the lease, tenants would yield up the leased premises in the same condition and repair as at lease commencement, damage by fire or other casualty excepted).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.16

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.16 Illegal Use of Leased Premises.

Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58

From the perspective of the landlord, an illegal use of the leased premises is something of a two edged sword. In some circumstances, the tenant's illegal use of the leased premises will enable the landlord to recover possession of the leased premises, something that the landlord may wish to do. On the other hand, the illegal use may enable the tenant to employ the contract doctrine of illegality to avoid lease obligations to the landlord. Issues of lease illegality arise both when the tenant's use is illegal at the outset of the lease and when there is a change in the law that renders an existing tenant use illegal.

§ 40.16(a) Illegal Use at the Time of Leasing.

§ 40.16(a)(1) General Rules.

A conclusion that a lease has been made for an illegal purpose means that the lease is void and unenforceable. n710 The landlord will not be able to require the tenant to pay rent or to comply with other covenants under an illegal lease. n711 The tenant will not be able to sue, on the basis of the illegal lease, to enforce covenants of the landlord, or to retain or reacquire possession of the premises. n712 However, the landlord will be able, as landowner, to recover possession of the premises. n713 The unenforceability of the lease follows from application of the contract doctrine of illegality, rather than from traditional conveyancing concepts.

The effects of lease illegality are fairly clear. But the question remains: What makes a lease illegal? The answer generally involves both use, or proposed use, and intent. In the first place, it should be noted that lease illegality does not follow from a unilateral decision of the tenant to undertake an illegal use on the leased premises, without the knowledge of the landlord. In that situation, the lease will be enforceable. n714 The landlord may be able to recover damages resulting from the illegal use, and to enjoin that use. n715 However, the landlord will normally be unable to terminate the lease based on the tenant's unilateral illegal use unless an applicable power of termination is set forth in the lease or unless a right to terminate is otherwise provided by statute. n716 Some courts have also required, as a predicate to lease termination, that the tenant's illegal use amount to a continuous violation of the law, as opposed to isolated illegal conduct. n717

In contrast, lease illegality will be found when the tenant's proposed use is illegal, and the landlord enters into the lease intending that the premises be put to that use. n718 Of course, the lease will usually not contain language limiting the premises to an illegal use. But the landlord's intent that the premises be so used may be shown by the landlord's participation, at least to some degree, in the illegal activity, n719 or it may be indicated by the landlord's conduct in connection with the making of the lease. n720

Courts are divided over whether the landlord's mere knowledge of the intended illegal use is sufficient to render the lease illegal. Some courts are of the view that such knowledge is sufficient, but other courts take a contrary view, reasoning that mere knowledge is not equivalent to intent, and that the tenant could, in any event, have a change of mind. n721 However, when the tenant's intended use of the premises involves a "heinous" crime, it has generally been held that the landlord's knowledge of the tenant's proposed use is sufficient to render the lease illegal. n722

If the tenant's illegal use is merely "incidental," or if the premises are used for several purposes, some of which are legal, and some of which are not, the illegality doctrine will not apply. n723 A conclusion of lease illegality in these circumstances is thought to impose too great a burden on one or both of the parties to the lease. However, where the illegal use is the primary use intended by the parties, the illegality doctrine will apply. n724

§ 40.16(a)(2) Zoning Violations and Lease Illegality.

Cases in which the intended use violates applicable zoning regulations should be mentioned separately, because they often feature a somewhat different lease illegality analysis. To be sure, some courts have decided zoning violation cases based on the same principles discussed above. n725 However, a number of courts have declined to apply the illegality doctrine in cases involving a use that violates zoning restrictions when the applicable zoning ordinance allows zoning variances to be obtained or allows nonconforming uses to continue. n726

The reasoning of the courts in such cases may be illustrated by reference to the leading case of Warshawsky v. American Automotive Prods. Co. n727 There the court said that the circumstance of a tenant who proposes to use leased property for a purpose that is prohibited by a zoning ordinance is analogous to the case of a tenant who proposes to use the premises for a legal activity for which a license is required. In such a case, the court said that the tenant may be presumed to have contemplated that a license would be obtained, and if not, to have assumed the risk of not obtaining it. n728 With respect to the zoning issue before it, the Warshawsky court said that if the parties could be presumed to know that the proposed use was contrary to the zoning ordinance, then the only legitimate reason for the tenant's execution of the lease was a belief that a zoning variance could be obtained or that the operation of the premises could otherwise be legal. n729 In light of the foregoing, a tenant who wishes to avoid lease obligations in the event that zoning restrictions prohibit the intended use should include a pertinent termination provision in the lease.

§ 40.16(a)(3) Statutory Prohibitions.

States have enacted a number of statutes that prohibit landowners or occupants from granting or permitting the use of real property for illegal purposes, such as prostitution or gambling. n730 Such statutes typically provide for criminal sanctions. A few of them impose criminal liability on landlords for failing to take steps to regain possession of leased premises when they are being used for an illegal purpose. Some statutes expressly provide that leases entered into for the prohibited purpose are void; others provide for lease termination at the option of the landlord. n731

§ 40.16(b) Supervening Illegality.

The tenant's legal use of the premises may become illegal as a result of a change in the law. In this situation, the issue is not whether the lease was illegal from the outset, but whether the change in the law permits the tenant to avoid lease obligations and to terminate the lease. Most courts are of the view that if a lease restricts the tenant to a particular use of the premises, and a change in the law prohibits that use, the tenant will be able to terminate. n732 The same result normally follows if the lease restricts the use of the property to multiple purposes, and the principal purpose becomes illegal. n733 However, if only a minor purpose is rendered illegal, the landlord may still enforce the lease. n734 If the lease does not restrict the tenant to a specified use of the premises, the general rule is that the tenant's obligations under the lease are not rendered unenforceable by later restrictions against the intended use. The tenant is thought to be free to make other uses of the premises. n735

The minority view is that a change in the law that renders the tenant's use illegal does not result in lease termination or excuse the tenant from fulfilling lease obligations. Courts that take this position typically reason that the tenant who desires to terminate the lease after the tenant's designated use becomes illegal should have included an appropriate termination provision in the lease; in the absence of such a provision, the tenant, as owner of the leasehold estate, should bear the risk of a change in the law. n736

The Restatement position is closer to the majority than to the minority view. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the Restatement would grant the tenant an option to terminate the lease if the tenant's use becomes illegal, without fault of the tenant, after the lease is made. n737 However, the Restatement also permits the landlord to waive a lease provision restricting the tenant to the now illegal use, and thereby avoid lease termination, unless it would be unreasonable "to place on the tenant the burdens of the lease after converting to the other use." n738 The Restatement would also permit the tenant to terminate the lease, even when other uses are permitted under the lease, if the particular use engaged in by the tenant is made illegal, and if it would be unreasonable to place the burden of the lease on the tenant after converting to a changed use. n739

Courts are not entirely consistent, or clear, in articulating reasons for the result under the majority view. Some courts state that the change in the law that makes the tenant's use illegal renders the lease void. n740 Other courts that permit the tenant to terminate the lease state that the tenant's performance has become impossible n741 or that the purpose of the lease has become frustrated. n742 What is clear is that contract principles are at work in connection with the majority view: traditional conveyancing concepts alone would not excuse the tenant from lease obligations because a change in the law impairs the tenant's purpose in leasing the property.

The view of most commentators is that the result is best explained under the rubric of frustration of purpose. n743 The change in the law is not a breach of the landlord's lease obligations that would justify rescission. Nor does a change in the law make performance of lease covenants, such as payment of rent, impossible. However, a change in the law that prevents the tenant from using the property for the only purpose, or the principal purpose, permitted under the lease, could qualify as a frustration of purpose. n744 The doctrine of frustration of purpose is discussed in the next section of this chapter.

Chapter 41 considers the application of the illegality doctrine when the leased premises violate the provisions of an applicable housing code. n745

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 710. See, e.g., Musco v. Torello, 128 A. 645 (Conn. 1891) ; Berni v. Boyer, 97 N.W. 121 (Minn. 1903) ; Central States Health & Life Co. v. Miracle Hills Ltd. Partnership, 456 N.W.2d 474 (Neb. 1990) .

(n2)Footnote 711. See, e.g., Howell v. City of Hamburg Co., 131 P. 130 (Cal. 1913) ; Walker v. Southern Trucking Corp., 219 So. 2d 379 (Ala. 1969) ; see also Sippin v. Ellam, 588 A.2d 660 (Conn. App. 1991) (landlord could not recover use and occupancy payments).

(n3)Footnote 712. See, e.g., Berni v. Boyer, 97 N.W. 121 (Minn. 1903) .

(n4)Footnote 713. See, e.g., Lozano v. Brant, 343 P.2d 177 (Cal. Ct. App. 1959) ; Berni v. Boyer, 97 N.W. 121

(Minn. 1903) .

(n5)Footnote 714. See, e.g., Kessler v. Pearson, 55 S.E. 963 (Ga. 1906) .

(n6)Footnote 715. See, e.g., Keating v. Preston, 108 P.2d 479 (Cal. Ct. App. 1940) .

(n7)Footnote 716. See, e.g., Morris v. Austraw, 152 S.E.2d 155 (N.C. 1967) ; McKenzie v. A.C. Carte, 385 S.W.2d 520 (Tex. Ct. App. 1965) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.5 reporter's note 2 (1977); but see Voght v. State, 24 N.E. 680 (Ind. 1890) (illegal use justifies rescission in equity).

(n8)Footnote 717. See, e.g., 167 East 86th Street Corp. v. Wienecke, 229 N.Y.S. 473 (N.Y. Mun. Ct. 1928) ; see also Gilbert v. Peck, 121 P. 315 (Cal. 1912) .

(n9)Footnote 718. See, e.g., Musco v. Torello, 128 A. 645 (Conn. 1925) .

(n10)Footnote 719. See Gorman v. Keough, 46 A. 37 (R.I. 1900) (landlord agreed to provide alcohol for illegal sale); Rundle Spence Mfg. Co. v. Jakopichek, 229 N.W. 550 (1930) (receipt of unusually large consideration).

(n11)Footnote 720. Rosenblath v. Sanders, 91 So. 252 (La. 1922) .

(n12)Footnote 721. See, e.g., Ashford v. Mace, 146 S.W. 474 (Ark. 1912) (knowledge insufficient); Musco v. Torello, 128 A. 645 (Conn. 1925) (knowledge is sufficient); Kessler v. Pearson, 55 S.E. 963 (Ga. 1906) (knowledge insufficient); see also J.E. Macy, Annotation, Seller's, Bailor's, Lessor's, or Lender's Knowledge of the Other Party's Intention to Put the Property or Money to an Illegal Use as Defense to Action for Purchase Price, Rent, or Loan, 166 A.L.R. 1353 (1947) .

(n13)Footnote 722. See, e.g., Ashford v. Mace, 146 S.W. 474 (Ark. 1912) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.1 Reporter's Note 2 (1977). Courts do not always agree on what crimes will qualify. Compare Ashford v. Mace, 146 S.W. 474 (Ark. 1912) with Dougherty v. Seymour, 26 P. 823 (Colo. 1891) .

(n14)Footnote 723. See, e.g., Warshawsky v. American Automotive Prods. Co., 138 N.E.2d 816 (Ill. Ct. App. 1956) ; Smith v. Simon, 224 So. 2d 565 (Miss. 1969) .

(n15)Footnote 724. See, e.g., The Stratford, Inc. v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 162 P. 31 (Wash. 1916) .

(n16)Footnote 725. See, e.g., Walker v. Southern Trucking Corp., 219 So. 2d 379 (Ala. 1969) (lease unenforceable); Central States Health & Life Co. v. Miracle Hills Ltd. Partnership, 456 N.W.2d 474 (Neb. 1990) (lease unenforceable); Erwin S. Barbre, Annotation, Rights Between Landlord and Tenant as Affected by Zoning Regulations Restricting Contemplated Use of Premises, 37 A.L.R.3d 1018, 1026 1027 (1971) .

(n17)Footnote 726. See, e.g., Entrepreneur, Ltd. v. Yasuna, 498 A.2d 1151 (D.C. Ct. App. 1985) ; Schlesinger v. Levine, 212 N.Y.S.2d 904 (Sup. Ct. 1961) ; See Erwin S. Barbre, Annotation, Rights Between Landlord and Tenant as Affected by Zoning Regulations Restricting Contemplated Use of Premises, 37 A.L.R.3d 1018 (1971) .

(n18)Footnote 727. 138 N.E.2d 816 (Ill. Ct. App. 1956) .

(n19)Footnote 728. 138 N.E.2d at 821 . This is the approach taken by most courts when the contemplated use requires a license or permit. See, e.g., Burke v. San Francisco Breweries, 131 P. 83 (Cal. Ct. App. 1913) ; Raner v. Goldberg, 155 N.E. 733 (N.Y. 1927) ; See Sonja A. Soehnel, Annotation, Inability to Obtain License, Permit, or Charter Required for Tenant's Business as Defense to Enforcement of Lease, 89 A.L.R.3d 329 (1979) . A minority of cases permit the tenant to terminate if the license or permit is denied. See, e.g., Lyke v. Pursley, 340 P.2d 709 (Cal. Ct. App. 1959) .

(n20)Footnote 729. 138 N.E.2d at 818-819 .

(n21)Footnote 730. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.1, Statutory Note (1977). The Statutory Note catalogs various statutes according to type of illegal conduct, who may be criminally sanctioned, and impact of the illegal conduct on the lease.

(n22)Footnote 731. See id.; Restatement (Second) of Property § 12.5, Statutory Note (1977).

(n23)Footnote 732. See, e.g., Greil Bros. v. Mabson, 60 So. 876 (Ala. 1912) ; Brunswick Balke Collender Co. v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 167 P. 58 (Wash. 1917) ; see also Heart v. East Tennessee Brewing Co., 113 S.W. 364 (Tenn. 1908) .

(n24)Footnote 733. See, e.g., McCullough Realty Co. v. Laemmle Film Serv., 165 N.W. 33 (Iowa 1917) ; The Stratford, Inc. v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 162 P. 31 (Wash. 1916) .

(n25)Footnote 734. See, e.g., Warm Springs Co. v. Salt Lake City, 165 P. 788 (Utah 1917) .

(n26)Footnote 735. See, e.g., Plaza Amusement Co. v. Rothenberg, 65 F.2d 254 (5th Cir. 1933); Jones Shutter Prods., Inc. v. Edmanuel, Inc., 168 So.2d 682 (Fla. Ct. App. 1964) ; Conklin v. Silver, 174 N.W. 573 (Iowa 1919) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.2, Reporter's Note 4 (1977).

(n27)Footnote 736. See, e.g., J.J. Goodrum Tobacco Co. v. Potts Thompson Liquor Co., 66 S.E. 1081 (Ga. 1910) ; Imbeschied v. Lerner, 135 N.E. 219 (Mass. 1922) .

(n28)Footnote 737. See Restatement (Second) § 9.2 (1977).

(n29)Footnote 738. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.2(2) cmt. b (1977).

(n30)Footnote 739. See id.

(n31)Footnote 740. See, e.g., Industrial Dev. & Land Co. v. Goldschmidt, 206 P. 134 (Cal. Ct. App. 1922) ; Kahn v. Wilhelm, 177 S.W. 403 (Ark. 1915) ; Heart v. East Tenn. Brewing Co., 113 S.W. 364 (Tenn. 1908) .

(n32)Footnote 741. See, e.g., Greil Bros. v. Mabson, 60 So. 876 (Ala. 1912) .

(n33)Footnote 742. See, e.g., McCullough Realty Co. v. Laemmle Film Serv., 165 N.W. 33 (Iowa 1917) .

(n34)Footnote 743. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 3.104 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); 6 Arthur L. Corbin, Corbin on Contracts §§ 1320, 1322 (1962); 18 Samuel Williston and Walter H.E. Jaeger, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1955 (3rd ed. 1978); William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.87 (3d ed. 2000).

(n35)Footnote 744. See id.

(n36)Footnote 745. See § 41.05(f).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.17

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.17 Casualty Insurance.

Both the landlord and the tenant have insurable property interests in the leased premises, but, in the absence of an agreement in the lease to the contrary, neither has an obligation to obtain casualty insurance with respect to the leased premises. n746 Moreover, absent a covenant in the lease to obtain casualty insurance, neither party may normally share in insurance proceeds paid out under a policy procured by the other. n747 The usual reason given is that the insurance contract is a personal contract of indemnity that does not inure to the benefit of the other party to the lease. n748 However, a few cases have required the insurance proceeds to be shared in proportion to the parties' respective interests if one of the parties to the lease voluntarily obtains a casualty insurance policy whose proceeds are payable jointly to the landlord and the tenant. n749

The foregoing rules will often be inapplicable, however, because modern leases, particularly commercial leases, frequently require a party to obtain casualty insurance on the premises, and specify how insurance proceeds are to be applied. If one party covenants to obtain casualty insurance coverage, the policy proceeds will normally be considered to be for the benefit of both landlord and tenant, whether or not the policy actually states that the proceeds are for the benefit of both parties, and both landlord and tenant will be entitled to share in the insurance proceeds in proportion to the value of their respective interests in the property. n750 To the landlord, this typically means the value of the reversion and the value of improvements that are not to be removed from the property at the conclusion of the lease. n751 A well drafted insurance clause will specify the type and amount of required insurance, to whom the insurance proceeds are to be paid, and how the insurance proceeds are to be applied. The insurance clause should also be coordinated with lease provisions regarding destruction or damage to the leased premises and provisions obligating a party to repair or restore improvements. n752

If the tenant breaches a covenant to obtain insurance, and an uninsured casualty occurs, the landlord is generally able to recover damages from the tenant in the amount of the landlord's loss, up to the amount of the insurance coverage the tenant agreed to provide. n753 In a few cases in which the landlord knew, in advance of the casualty loss, that the tenant had not obtained insurance coverage as required under the lease, the landlord's recovery has been limited to the cost of the insurance. n754 If the tenant breaches the covenant to obtain casualty insurance, the landlord may purchase the insurance coverage and recover the cost of the policy from the tenant. n755 Tenant breach of a lease covenant to obtain insurance may also entitle the landlord to exercise a lease termination right. n756

American jurisdictions are divided on whether a covenant by the tenant to provide insurance is a real covenant, whose burden runs with the land, or a personal covenant, whose burden does not. If the covenant to provide insurance does not run with the land, the landlord would not be able to enforce it against an assignee of the tenant, at least in the absence of an assumption of the covenant by the assignee. A number of courts have held that a "bare covenant" to provide insurance -- that is, one that involves no reciprocal obligation on the part of the landlord to rebuild or repair, or to use the insurance money for that purpose -- is personal and does not run with the land. n757 However, if the lease requires the proceeds of the insurance policy to be used to restore the premises, there is general agreement that the covenant is a real covenant that runs with the land. n758 The insurance covenant has also been held to be a real covenant when the lease provides that the insurance premiums are part of the tenant's rental obligation. n759

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 746. See, e.g., Alexander v. Security First Nat'l Bank, 62 P.2d 735 (Cal. 1936) ; Yoshida v. Security Ins. Co., 26 P.2d 1082 (Or. 1933) .

(n2)Footnote 747. See, e.g., Alexander v. Security First Nat'l Bank, 62 P.2d 735 (Cal. 1936) ; Yoshida v. Security Ins. Co., 26 P.2d 1082 (Or. 1933) ; Spires v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 70 A.2d 828 (Pa. 1950) , overruled on other grounds, Guy v. Liederbach, 459 A.2d 744 (Pa. 1983) ; Annotation, Right of Lessor or Lessee or His Privies to Benefit of Insurance Taken Out by Other or His Privies, 66 A.L.R. 864 (1930) .

(n3)Footnote 748. See, e.g., id.

(n4)Footnote 749. See, e.g., Hale v. Simmons, 139 S.W.2d 696 (Ark. 1940) ;See C.T. Drechsler, Annotation, Right to Proceeds, or to Apportionment Thereof, Where Fire Insurance Policy is Issued Jointly to Lessor and Lessee Covering Destruction of or Damage to Building, 8 A.L.R. 2d 1445 (1949) ; Cf. Lumber Mut. Ins. Co. v. Zoltek Corp., 647 N.E.2d 395 (Mass. 1995) (subrogation case; commercial lease agreement required tenant to contribute to payment of casualty insurance premium; landlord advised tenant that because of its contribution to the premium payment it need not carry its own property hazard liability policy; court concludes that landlord and tenant were coinsureds).

(n5)Footnote 750. See, e.g., Grand Forks Seed Co. v. Northland Greyhound Lines, Inc., 168 F. Supp. 882 (D. N.D. 1959) ; Alexander v. Security First Nat'l Bank, 62 P.2d 735 (Cal. 1936) ; Cambron v. Carlisle, 435 So. 2d 1216 (Ala. 1983) ; Annotation, Right of Lessor or Lessee or His Privies to Benefit of Insurance Taken Out by Other or His Privies, 66 A.L.R. 864, 866 (1930) .

(n6)Footnote 751. See, e.g., Hale v. Simmons, 139 S.W.2d 696 (Ark. 1940) .

(n7)Footnote 752. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.61 (3d ed. 2000).

(n8)Footnote 753. See, e.g., St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 665 P.2d 223 (Mont. 1983) ; Robinson v. Janay, 253 A.2d 816 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1969) , cert. denied, 257 A.2d 107 (N.J. 1969) .

(n9)Footnote 754. See, e.g., Rodriguez v. Nachamie, 395 N.Y.S.2d 51 (App. Div. 1977) .

(n10)Footnote 755. See, e.g., Richmond v. Kelsey, 114 N.E. 319 (Mass. 1916) ; Parkway Corp. v. Clark Equipment Co., 401 N.E.2d 879 (Mass. Ct. App. 1980) .

(n11)Footnote 756. See, e.g., Select Properties, Ltd. v. Rando, 453 So. 2d 980 (La. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n12)Footnote 757. See, e.g., Burton v. Chesapeake Box & Lumber Corp., 57 S.E.2d 904 (Va. 1950) ; C.R. McCorkle, Annotation, Covenant of Lessee to Insure as Running with the Land, 18 A.L.R.2d 1051 (1951) .

(n13)Footnote 758. See, e.g., Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 341 (1859) ; C.R. McCorkle, Annotation, Covenant of Lessee to Insure as Running with the Land, 18 A.L.R.2d 1051 (1951).

(n14)Footnote 759. See, e.g., St. Regis Restaurant, Inc. v. Powers, 219 N.Y.S. 684 (App. Div. 1927) . It should be noted that the landlord in the St. Regis case was not seeking to recover for an uninsured casualty loss, but was instead seeking reimbursement for insurance payments. The lease required the tenant to pay for any increase in insurance costs resulting from the tenant's use of the property, and it provided that if the tenant did not do so, the landlord could make the payments, and the amount so paid would be added to unpaid rent. The court concluded that the covenant to pay the increased insurance costs did not itself run with the land, but the covenant to pay the rent did, and, under the language of the lease, this included an amount paid by the landlord for increased costs. Cf. Burton v. Chesapeake Box & Lumber Corp., 57 S.E.2d 904, 908 (Va. 1950) ("If the insurance premium constituted a part of the rent payable by defendant, it was liable only for its failure to pay the amount of the premium. An obligation to pay rent did not make the defendant liable for the fire damage.")

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.18

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.18 Real Estate Taxes and Assessments.

In the absence of a lease agreement to the contrary, a landlord generally has no right to require the tenant to pay real estate taxes or property assessments with respect to the leased premises. Indeed, it is frequently said that the landlord has a duty to pay the taxes. n760 But it seems incorrect to say that the landlord owes a distinct duty to the tenant to pay taxes, unless the lease so provides. The tenant should not be able to sue the landlord for nonpayment of taxes; however, the tenant should be able to claim that the covenant of quiet enjoyment has been breached if the property is lost for nonpayment of taxes, and the tenant's possession is thereby disturbed. n761

Although a landlord normally has no right to require the tenant to pay taxes unless the lease provides otherwise, in some instances an obligation on the part of the tenant to pay taxes may be implied. Courts have generally concluded that the tenant is obligated to pay real estate taxes when the lease is perpetually renewable or the term of the lease is otherwise so long as to be equivalent to a fee simple estate in land. n762 A tenant obligation to pay taxes has also been implied when the tax burden increases due to the construction of improvements that the tenant has the right to remove at the end of the term or that otherwise will have no value to the landlord. n763

Many leases, particularly commercial leases, contain express covenants on the part of the tenant to pay real estate taxes. The landlord's right to require the tenant to pay taxes pursuant to lease covenant will depend on the language of the covenant. It has been held, for example, that a tenant covenant to pay "taxes," does not obligate the tenant to pay special assessments for public improvements. n764 If the tenant breaches a covenant to pay taxes, the landlord may pay the taxes and recover the amount paid from the tenant, or pursue other remedies that are available for breach of the lease. n765 Covenants to pay real estate taxes are generally held to run with the land, and to therefore bind assignees of the tenant. n766

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 760. See, e.g., Wycoff v. Gavriloff Motors, Inc., 107 N.W.2d 820 (Mich. 1961) ; City of Norfolk v. J.W. Perry Co., 61 S.E. 867 (Va. 1908) , aff'd, 220 U.S. 472 (1911) ; W.C. Crais, III, Annotation, Liability as Between Lessor and Lessee, Where Lease Does Not Specify, for Taxes and Assessments, 86 A.L.R.2d 670 (1962) .

(n2)Footnote 761. See, e.g., Rustin Co. v. Bowen, 30 A.2d 70 (N.J. 1943) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A.

Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.60 (3d ed. 2000).

(n3)Footnote 762. See, e.g., Piper v. Town of Meredith, 139 A. 294 (N.H. 1927) ; Annotation, Taxation of Land Under Perpetual Lease or Ground Rent, 55 A.L.R. 154 (1928) .

(n4)Footnote 763. See, e.g., Wycoff v. Gavriloff Motors, Inc., 107 N.W.2d 820 (Mich. 1961) ; W.C. Crais, III, Annotation, Liability as Between Lessor and Lessee, Where Lease Does Not Specify, for Taxes and Assessments, 86 A.L.R.2d 670, 674 (1962) .

(n5)Footnote 764. See, e.g., Crestview Bowl, Inc. v. Womer Constr. Co., 592 P.2d 74 (Kan. 1979) ; Blake v. Metropolitan Chain Stores, 225 N.W. 587 (Mich. 1929) ; see also John D. Perovich, Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Construction of Provision of Lease Providing for Escalation of Rental in Event of Tax Increases, 48 A.L.R.3d 287 (1973) .

(n6)Footnote 765. See, e.g., Whitney v. Leighton, 30 N.W.2d 329 (Minn. 1947) ; Walker v. Stein, 225 N.Y.S. 209 (App. Div. 1927) .

(n7)Footnote 766. See, e.g., Williams v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 175 A. 331 (Md. Ct. App. 1934) ; Whitney v. Leighton, 30 N.W.2d 329 (Minn. 1947) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.19

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.19 Selection of Tenants.

§ 40.19(a) Freedom to Select or Reject Tenants.

Landlords were historically free to select or reject tenants for any reason that they chose. n767 This freedom has been said to be analogous to the individual's right not to enter into contracts. n768 It also reflects the landlord's traditional right to control property. n769 In any event, it is clear that landlord freedom with respect to tenant selection is not absolute today.

§ 40.19(b) Prohibitions Against Discrimination in Tenant Selection.

Landlords are prohibited from engaging in discrimination in tenant selection. In some instances, the United States Constitution limits discrimination by landlords. The Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58 guarantees equal protection of the laws, and thereby prohibits various forms of discrimination. However, the Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 521 applies only when there is state action. n770 While state action will be found if the government is the landlord, as in forms of public housing, n771 it will generally not be found in private leasing arrangements.

The primary prohibitions against landlord discrimination in leasing are statutory. One of the federal statutes that is important in this area, 42 U.S.C. § 1982, provides that all "citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property." This legislation, which in its original form was part of the Civil Rights Act of 1866, actually had little impact on discrimination in private housing until the United States Supreme Court held, in the 1968 case of Jones v. Alfred H. Meyer Co., n772 that § 1982 prohibits race discrimination in the public or private sale or rental of property.

The Federal Fair Housing Act, originally enacted in 1968, and subsequently amended, prohibits a number of specific discriminatory housing practices, including leasing practices, based on race, color, religion, national origin, sex, handicap, and familial status. n773 The scope of the Fair Housing Act is in one sense broader than the scope of § 1982, in that it prohibits more than discrimination based on race. However, the scope of the Fair Housing Act is narrower in another sense, in that it is limited to discrimination in housing practices, while § 1982 applies to commercial as well as to residential leasing. Moreover, § 1982 is not subject to some exceptions to coverage, such as an exception for owner occupied dwellings, found in the Fair Housing Act. n774

States and municipalities have also enacted a number of statutes limiting discrimination in housing practices. n775 Depending on the provisions of particular statutes, a landlord who violates prohibitions against discrimination may be subject to administrative proceedings, private litigation, or litigation brought by governmental authorities. n776

Several state statutes have ventured beyond the scope of the Federal Fair Housing Act and have also prohibited landlords from discriminating against prospective tenants on the basis of their marital status. n777 But enforcement of such prohibitions has sometimes been challenged by landlords on constitutional grounds. Several landlords have argued, sometimes successfully, sometimes not, that their right to free exercise of religion was violated, or would be violated, by enforcement of antidiscrimination statutes against them for declining to rent to unmarried couples on religious grounds. The conflict between the landlord's right to free exercise of religion and the requirements of the antidiscrimination statute has been difficult for courts to resolve. n778

The Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 n779 had begun to figure into some cases involving landlord free exercise claims. n780 But the United States Supreme Court invalidated the legislation in 1997. n781

Chapter 43 contains additional information regarding limitations on discriminatory practices by landlords.

§ 40.19(c) Landlord Use of Tenant Screening Services.

Some commercial enterprises, which may be referred to as "tenant screening services," collect the names of tenants who have been defendants in summary possession actions, and sell that information to landlords. n782 Landlords who purchase the information may use it to screen prospective tenants; that is, they may decline to rent to individuals who are listed as defendants in summary possession actions. n783 Such information may be valuable to some landlords, but inaccurate information could be unfairly harmful to some prospective tenants. Concerns about fairness have prompted some states to enact tenant protection legislation with respect to the activities of tenant screening services. n784

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 767. See, e.g., Corrigan v. Buckley, 299 F. 899 (D.C. Cir. 1924) , appeal dismissed, 271 U.S. 323 (1924) ; Alsberg v. Lucerne Hotel Co., 92 N.Y.S. 851 (App. Div. 1905) .

(n2)Footnote 768. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 3.1 Introductory Note (1977).

(n3)Footnote 769. See § 43.03(a).

(n4)Footnote 770. See, e.g., Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163 (1972) .

(n5)Footnote 771. See, e.g., Cole v. Housing Auth., 435 F.2d 807 (1st Cir. 1970) . Federal statutes and regulations impose a number of limitations on tenant selection for public housing by public housing authorities. Those limitations are discussed in Chapter 45.

(n6)Footnote 772. 392 U.S. 409 (1968) .

(n7)Footnote 773. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601- 3619. See § 43.03(b)(1)(C).

(n8)Footnote 774. See § 43.03(b)(1)(B).

(n9)Footnote 775. See § 43.03(b)(3).

(n10)Footnote 776. See §§ 43.03(b)(1)(C), 43.03(b)(2).

(n11)Footnote 777. See e.g., Md. Code Ann. Real Prop. § 8-211; Cal. Gov't Code§ 12920; Colo. Rev. Stat. §

24-34-502.

(n12)Footnote 778. See Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 220 F.3d 1134 (9th Cir. 2000) (lower court ruled that Alaska's antidiscrimination statutes placed a substantial and unjustified burden on the landlords' observation of a central religious belief or practice, and that granting an exception to the landlords did not violate the establishment clause; however, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the landlords' claims were not ripe for review); Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 979 (1994) (ordinance upheld against free exercise claims under federal and state constitutions); Smith v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 913 P.2d 909 (Cal. 1996) , cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1129 (1997) (landlord was charged with violation of discrimination statute and was required to post notices that she had violated the law by refusing to rent to unmarried couples; court rejects the landlord's free exercise claim); Attorney General v. Desilets, 636 N.E.2d 233 (Mass. 1994) (state has burden of establishing that its interest in eliminating housing discrimination against cohabiting couples is strong enough to justify the burden placed on landlord's free exercise of religion; case remanded for such a determination); McCready v. Hoffius, 564 N.W.2d 493 (Mich. Ct. App. 1997), rev'd, 586 N.W.2d 723 (Mich. 1998), vacated in part, 593 N.W.2d 545 (Mich. 1999) (landlords refused to rent to unmarried couples, claiming that this would violate their religious beliefs; the Michigan Supreme Court ruled that the landlords' conduct violated the civil rights act, and that requiring landlord compliance with the act would not violate the landlords' right of free exercise of religion; subsequently, however, the Michigan Supreme Court vacated the portion of its opinion dealing with free exercise of religion and remanded for further consideration of the issue); Cooper v. French, 460 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. 1990) (the expression "marital status" is ambiguous; court concludes that the statute does not protect cohabiting couples; also concludes that landlord is entitled to exemption from the antidiscrimination statute because state failed to meet its burden to show a compelling state interest). Cf. County of Dane v. Norman, 497 N.W.2d 714 (Wis. 1993) (landlord's policy of not renting to unmarried people who intend to live together does not violate county antidiscrimination ordinance; landlord's decision is based on conduct, rather than status, of prospective tenants; to the extent the ordinance protects "cohabitants," it is inconsistent with public policy promoting the stability of marriage and family).

(n13)Footnote 779. 42 U.S.C. 2000bb.

(n14)Footnote 780. See Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 979 (1994) , Smith v. Fair Employment [#38] Hous. Comm'n, 913 P.2d 909 (Cal. 1996) , cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1129 (U.S. 1997) .

(n15)Footnote 781. See City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997) .

(n16)Footnote 782. See Gary Williams, Can Government Limit Tenant Blacklisting? 24 SW. U.L. Rev. 1077, at 1079 (1995).

(n17)Footnote 783. See Gary Williams, Can Government Limit Tenant Blacklisting? 24 SW. U.L. Rev. 1077, at 1079-83 (1995).

(n18)Footnote 784. See W. Va. Code Ann. § 37-6-30 (prohibits consumer credit reporting agencies from including information on unlawful detainer actions in their reports, unless the landlord was the prevailing party); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.241(requires tenant screening services to make disclosures of file information, to reinvestigate if the completeness or accuracy of information is disputed by the prospective tenant, to delete inaccurate or unverifiable information, and to permit the prospective tenant to explain unlawful detainer reports or disputed items that are not resolved by reinvestigation). Constitutional issues with respect to this type of legislation are discussed in Gary Williams, Can Government Limit Tenant Blacklisting? 24 SW. U.L. Rev. 1077(1995).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 40.20

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 40.20 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Blundell, Lionel A. & V.G. Wellings. Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant. Vol. 1, 619620. 26th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1960.

Casner, James A., ed. American Law of Property. Vol. 1. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952.

Corbin, Arthur L. Corbin on Contracts. Vol. 4 959989. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1951.

Cowans, Daniel R. Cowans Bankruptcy Law and Practice. Vol. 2. 11.5, 11.11 & 12.15. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1989.

Cunningham, Roger A., William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman. The Law of Property. 2d ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1993.

Dukeminier, Jesse & James E. Krier. Property. 3d ed. Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1993.

Farnsworth, E. Allan. Contracts 2d ed. 8.208.21, 9.7 & 9.9. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1990.

Friedman, Milton R. Friedman on Leases. Vols. 13. 3d ed. Practicing Law Institute, 1990.

Gaudio, Arthur R., ed. The American Law of Real Property. Vol. 1. Matthew Bender & Co., 1991.

Harper, Fowler V., Fleming James, Jr. & Oscar S. Gray. The Law of Torts Vol. 1 3.15. 2d ed. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1986.

Hernandez, Michael V. "The Right of Religious Landlords to Exclude Unmarried Cohabitants: Debunking the Myth of the Tenant's 'New Clothes.'" 77 Neb. L. Rev. 494 (1998).

Holdsworth, Sir William. A History of English Law. Vol. 7. 2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973.

Jones, Basil & Herbert T. Tiffany. The Law of Real Property. Vols. 1 & 3. 3d ed. Chicago: Callaghan & Co., 1939.

Keeton, W. Page, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen. Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts. 144, 189194, 436438, 440441, 443446. 5th ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1984.

King, Lawrence P., ed. Collier on Bankruptcy. Vol. 2 & 365.06, Vol. 3 & 502.02[d], Vol. 4 & 545.04[4]. 15th ed. Matthew Bender & Co., 1994.

Nichols on Eminent Domain . Vol. 2 5.06. Vol. 4, 12.05[1] & 12D.04[2] (LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

Nelson, Grant S. & Dale A. Whitman. Real Estate Finance Law. 3d ed. 7.12. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1994.

Powell on Real Property(R) Vol. 2 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

Randolph, Patrick A., Jr., ed. The Commercial Property Lease. American Bar Association, 1993.

Rogers, William H., Jr., Environmental Law: Hazardous Wastes and Substances. Vol. 4 8.12. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1992.

Schoshinski, Robert S. American Law of Landlord and Tenant. Rochester: Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. and Bancroft Whitney Co., 1980.

Stoebuck, William B. &. Whitman, Dale A. The Law of Property. St. Paul: West Group (3d ed. 2000).

Thomas, J.H. Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England. Vol. 1. 344 & 368. 1836. Reprint. Buffalo: William S. Hein Co., 1986.

Weintraub, Benjamin & Alan N. Resnick. Bankruptcy Law Manual. 5.05[2] Boston: Warren, Gorham & Lamont, 1986.

Williston, Samuel & Walter H.E. Jaeger. A Treatise on the Law of Contracts. Vols. 6 & 18. 3d ed. Mount Kisco, N.Y.: Baker, Voorhis & Co., 1968.

Articles

Aalberts, Robert J. "Drug Testing Tenants: Does it Violate Rights of Privacy?" Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 38 (2003) 479.

Aalberts, Robert J. "Look Who's Getting Drug Tested Now: Tenants Must Be Clean or They're Out." 30 Real Estate L.J. 3 (2001).

Abbott, Samuel Bassett. "Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration." B.U. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1976) 1.

Ackerman, Bruce. "Regulating Slum Housing Markets on Behalf of the Poor: Of Housing Codes, Housing Subsidies and Income Redistribution Policy." Yale L.J. Vol. 80 (1971) 1093.

Andrew, Michael T. "Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy: Understanding 'Rejection.'" Colo. L. Rev. Vol. 59 (1988) 845.

Bell, Deborah Hodges. "Providing Security of Tenure for Residential Tenants: Good Faith as a Limitation on the Landlord's Right to Terminate." Ga. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1985) 483.

Bennett, Dale E. "The Modern Lease An Estate in Land or a Contract?" Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1937) 47.

Bopp, Fred W., III. "The Unwarranted Implication of a Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases An Alternative Approach." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1988) 1057.

Brennan, Robert J. "The Implied Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases and the Subrogating Insurance Company." Forum Vol. 18 (1983) 683.

Browder, Olin L. "The Taming Of A Duty The Tort Liability of Landlords." Mich. L. Rev., Vol. 81 (1982) 99.

Cappell, Shana R. "Lead Paint Poisoning and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act: A New Partnership for the Twenty First Century." 35 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Probs. 175 (2002).

Cargile, Ann Peldo & Noble, Michael B. "Assignments and Subleases: The Basics." Prob. & Prop. (Sept./Oct. 2003) 40.

Chase, Edward & E. Hunter Taylor, Jr. "Landlord and Tenant: A Study in Property and Contract." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1985) 571.

Christiansen, Patrick T. & Geoffrey B. Di Mauro. "An Ounce of Prevention: Planning for Environmental Issues in Leases." Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1995) 40.

Comment. "Fixtures in the Landlord/Tenant Relationship." U. Chi. L. Rev. Vol 34 (1967) 617.

Comment. "Landlord and Tenant Lessee's Recovery of an Advance Payment of Rent." Ill. L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1931) 716.

Comment. "Landlord Tenant: Proving Motive In Retaliatory EvictionMinnesota's Solution." Minn. L. Rev. Vol. 61 (1977) 523.

Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, American Bar Association. "Security Deposits and Guarantees Under Leases." Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 1 (1966) 405.

Cunningham, Roger A. "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." Urb. L. Ann. Vol. 16 (1979) 3.

Davis, Michael J. & Phillip E. DeLaTorre. "A Fresh Look At Premises Liability As Affected By The Warranty Of Habitability." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 59 (1984) 141.

DeGraffe, Luis Jorge. "The Development Of Unlawful Evictions And Tenant Remedies For Injurious Conduct In New York." Syracuse L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1990) 1179.

DeGraffe, Luis Jorge. "The Historical Evolution of American Forcible Entry and Detainer Statutes." Seton Hall Legis.

J., Vol. 13 (1990) 129.

"Expanding the Scope of the Implied Warranty of Habitability: A Landlord's Duty to Protect Tenants From Foreseeable Criminal Activity." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1980) 1493.

Fejfar, Anthony J. "Landowner Lessor Liability Under CERCLA." Md. L. Rev. Vol. 53 (1994) 157.

Fejfar, Anthony J. "Permissive Waste and the Warranty of Habitability In Residential Tenancies." 31 Cumb. L. Rev. 1 (2000 2001).

Field, Karen E. "The Americans with Disabilities Act 'Readily Achievable' Requirement for Barrier Removal: A Proposal for the Allocation of Responsibility Between Landlord and Tenant." Cardozo L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1993) 569.

Flynn, Stephanie G. "Duty to Mitigate Damages Upon a Tenant's Abandonment." Real Prop. Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 34 (2000) 721.

Freyermuth , R. Wilson. "Modernizing Security in Rents: the New Uniform Assignment of Rents Act." 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1 (2006).

Genovese, Christopher C. "Precision Industries v. Qualitech Steel: Easing the Tension Between Sections 363 and 365 of the Bankruptcy Code?" Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 39 (2004) 627.

Gibbons, Gerald R. "Residential Landlord Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems With Reference to the Proposed Model Code." Hastings L.J. Vol. 21 (1970) 369.

Glazerman, Michael J. "Asbestos in Commercial Buildings: Obligations and Responsibilities of Landlords and Tenants." Real Prop., Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 22 (1987) 661.

Glazerman, Michael J. "Who Pays for Asbestos Remediation Landlord or Tenant?" Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1995) 35.

Glendon, Mary Ann. "The Transformation of American Landlord Tenant Law." B.C.L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1982) 503.

Glesner, B.A. "Landlords as Cops: Tort, Nuisance & Forfeiture Standards Imposing Liability on Landlords for Crime on the Premises." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 42 (1992) 679.

Goldman, Gary. "Uniform Commercial Landlord and Tenant Act A Proposal to Reform 'Law Out of Context.'" T.M. Cooley L. Rev. Vol. 19 (2002)175.

Grant, Eugene L. "Disturbing Concepts: Quiet Enjoyment and Constructive Eviction in the Modern Commercial Lease." 35 Real Prop. Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 35 (2000) 57.

Grant, Eugene L. "First Class Condition: Responsibilities, Rights, and Remedies Respecting the Condition of Commercial Leasehold Premises." Real Prop., Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 29 (1995) 735.

Green, Shelby D. "The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law that Give Security of Tenure and Control." Cath. U.L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1994) 681.

Greenfield, Gerald G. & Michael Z. Margolies. "An Implied Warranty of Fitness in Nonresidential Leases." Alb. L. Rev. Vol. 45 (1981) 855.

Heskin, Alan David. "The Warranty of Habitability Debate: A California Case Study." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 66 (1978) 37.

Hicks, John Forrester. "The Contractual Nature of Real Property Leases." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1972) 443.

Hirsch, Werner Z., Joel G. Hirsch & Stephen Margolis. "Regression Analysis of the Effects of Habitability Laws upon Rent: An Empirical Observation on the Ackerman Komesar Debate." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1975) 1098.

Hirsch, Werner Z. & Joel G. Hirsch. "The Changing Landlord Tenant Relationship in California: An Economic Analysis of the Swinging Pendulum." SW. U.L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1983) 1.

Humbach, John A. "The Common Law Conception of Leasing: Mitigation, Habitability, and Dependency of Covenants." Wash. U.L.Q. Vol. 60 (1983) 1213.

Iwamoto, R.S. "Insurance and the Commercial Lease, Part I." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 22 (Jan. 2006) 57.

Jones, Carol C. "An Exculpatory Provision that Will Protect the Lessor." 1946 Ins. L.J. 79.

Jones, Michael F. "Commercial Leases Under the Americans with Disabilities Act." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 22 (1994) 185.

Jones, William K. "Private Revision of Public Standards: Exculpatory Agreements In Leases." N.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1988) 717.

Kalish, Stephen A. "Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal." 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569.

Kelley, Robert H. "Any Reports of the Death of the Property Law Paradigm for Leases Have Been Greatly Exaggerated." Wayne L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1995) 1563.

Kennedy, Duncan. "The Effect of the Warranty of Habitability on Low Income Housing: 'Milking' and Class Violence." Fla. St. U.L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1987) 485.

Komesar, Neil K. "Return to Slumville: A Critique of the Ackerman Analysis of Housing Code Enforcement and the Poor." Yale L.J. Vol. 82 (1973) 1175.

Korngold, Gerald. "Whatever Happened to Landlord Tenant Law?" 77 Neb. L. Rev. 703 (1998).

Kowantz, Robyn A. "Property Landlord Tenant The New Jersey Anti Eviction Act Prohibits Foreclosing Mortgagee from Evicting Tenants of the Mortgagor Without Cause." Seton Hall L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1995) 1292.

Kublicki, Nicolas M. "Heavy Metal: Residential Lead Rule." Probate & Property (Sept/Oct 1996) at 39.

Levinson, Robert A. and Michael N. Silver. "Do Commercial Property Tenants Possess Warranties of Habitability?" Real Estate L.J. Vol. 14 (1985) 59.

Lesar, Hiram H. "The Landlord Tenant Relation in Perspective: From Status to Contract and Back in 900 Years?" U. Kan. L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1961) 367.

Love, Jean C. "Landlord's Liability for Defective Premises, Caveat Lessee, Negligence, or Strict Liability." 1975 Wis. L. Rev. 19.

Love, Sarajane. "Landlord's Remedies When The Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, And Leases." U. Kan. L. Rev.

Vol. 30 (1982) 533.

Madison, Michael. "The Real Properties of Contract Law." 82 B.U. L. Rev. 405 (2002).

Markey, Maureen E., "The Landlord/Tenant Free Exercise Conflict in a Post RFRA World," Rutgers L. J. Vol. 29 (1998) 487.

Markey, Maureen E. "The Price of Landlord's "Free" Exercise of Religion: Tenant's Right to Discrimination Free Housing and Privacy." Fordham Urb. L.J. Vol. 22 (1995) 699.

Markovits, Richard S. "The Distributive Impact, Allocative Efficiency, and Overall Desirability of Ideal Housing Codes: Some Theoretical Clarifications." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 89 (1976) 1815.

Marley, John A. Note. "Landlord Tenant Should a Warranty of Fitness Be Implied in Commercial Leases?" Rutgers L.J. Vol. 13 (1981) 91.

Mastroianni, Francis N. "Caveat Lessor: Courts' Unwillingness to Find Implied Covenants of Continuous Use in Commercial Real Estate Transactions." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 24 (1996) 236.

McCloskey, Michael P. Comment. "Commercial Leases: Behind the Green Door." Pac. L.J. Vol. 12 (1981) 1067.

McCormick, Charles T. "The Rights of the Landlord Upon Abandonment of the Premises by the Tenant." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1925) 211.

McDonough, Lawrence R. "Still Crazy After All These Years: Landlords and Tenants and the Law of Torts." 33 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 427 (2006).

McDowell, William S., Jr. "Pledging Lease Security Deposits." Prac. R.eal Est. Law. Vol. 13 (Jan. 1997) 9.

McGovern, William M., Jr. "Dependent Promises in the History of Leases and Other Contracts." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 52 (1978) 659.

McKirdy, Edward D. "How to Value a Leasehold in an Eminent Domain Case." Prac. Real Est. Law (March 1994) 11.

McLaughlin, John P. "The Foreseeable Risks Of Apartment Living: Pennsylvania Defines A Landlord's Duty To Provide Security." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 31 (1986) 627.

Merrill, Irma W. "Landlord Liability for Crimes Committed by Third Parties Against Tenants on the Premises." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1985) 431.

Meislik, Ira. "Advising Tenants on Security Deposits." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 13 (May 1997) 83.

Merrill, Thomas W. & Henry E. Smith. "The Property/Contract Interface." 101 Colum. L. Rev. 773 (2001).

Meyers, Charles J. "The Covenant of Habitability and the American Law Institute." Stan. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1975) 879.

Morgan, Patrick J. & Julie Ann Stulce Williamson. "Rent Insurance: Are You Covered?" Prob. & Prop. (July/Aug 1996) 25.

Murray, John C., The New Bankruptcy Act: Observations on Some of the Provisions Affecting Real Estate, Prob. &

Prop. (Nov/Dec 2005) 43.

Murray, Paula C. "The Evolution of Implied Warranties in Commercial Real Estate Leases." U. Rich. L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1994) 145.

Note. "Constructive Eviction." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1905) 50.

Note. "Effect of Renewal of a Lease Without Reservation of the Right to Remove Fixtures." Iowa L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1932) 527.

Note, "The Fourth Amendment in the Hallway: Do Tenants Have a Constitutionally Protected Privacy Interest in the Locked Common Areas of Their Apartment Buildings?" Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 101 (2002) 273.

Note. "The Percentage Lease--Its Functions and Drafting Problems." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 61 (1947) 317.

Ostrow, S.E.. "What You Need to Know About the Treatment of Commercial Leases Under the Bankruptcy Reform Act." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 22 (Jan. 2006) 27.

Pinto, Donald R. Note. "Modernizing Commercial Lease Law: The Case for an Implied Warranty of Fitness." Suffolk U.L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1985) 929.

Polasky, Alan N. "The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1962) 477.

Quinn, Thomas M. and Earl Phillips. "The Law of Landlord Tenant: A Critical Evaluation of the Past with Guidelines for the Future." Fordham L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1969) 225.

Rabin, Edward H. "The Revolution in Residential Landlord Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences." Cornell L. Rev. Vol. 69 (1984) 517.

Randolph, Patrick A., Jr. "Does a Shopping Center Landlord Have an Implied Operating Duty?" Prob. & Prop. (Mar/Apr 2003) 26.

Randolph, Patrick A. Jr. "Going Dark Aggressively" Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1996) 6.

Rapacz, Max P. "Origin and Evolution of Constructive Eviction in the United States." De Paul L. Rev. Vol. 1 (1951) 69.

Rosen, Albert. "Receivership: A Useful Tool for Helping to Meet the Housing Needs of Low Income People." Harv. C.R. C.L. L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1968) 311.

Rosenthal, Trent L. & Collins Lee A. "When the Best Offense is a Strong Defense: A Commercial Landlord's Guide to Dealing with Financial Distress and the Bankruptcy of a Tenant." Prob. & Prop. Vol. 18 (Nov/Dec 2004) 46.

Saghir, Peter J. "Home is Where The No Fault Eviction Is: The Impact of the Drug War On Families in Public Housing." J.L. & Policy. Vol. 12 (2003) 369.

Saltz, Sidney G. "Allocation of Insurable Risks in Commercial Leases." Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 37 (2002) 479.

Saltz, Sidney, G. "Nonresidential Security Deposits." 27 Real Est. L.J. 225 (1999).

Saxer , Shelley Ross . "Government and Religion as Landlord and Tenant." 58 Rutgers L. Rev. 409 (2006).

Scherer, Edward P. & Cook, Darrell F. "Counseling the Landlord on Physical Security Issues." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 13 (May 1997) 7.

Schnebly, Merrill I. "Operative Facts in Surrenders." Ill. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1927) 22.

Schwallie, Daniel P. "The Implied Warranty of Habitability As a Mechanism for Redistributing Income: Good Goal, Bad Policy." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 40 (198990) 525.

Schwartz, James E. & Serebro, Boris. "Allocation of Environmental Risk as Between Landlords and Tenants: The New York View." 19 Pace Env. L. Rev. 49 (2001).

Shaffer, Brent C. "Pre foreclosure Lease Defaults." Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1996) 49.

Shaffer, Brent C. "Sublease Due Diligence." Prob. & Prop. (Sept./Oct 2003) 44.

Siegel, Stephen A. "Is the Modern Lease a Contract or a Conveyance? A Historical Inquiry." J. Urb. L. Vol. 52 (1975) 649.

Snitzer, Edward L. "Valuation And Condemnation Problems Involving Trade Fixtures." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1971) 467.

Sophie, Kenneth J., Jr. "Landlord Tenant: The Medieval Concepts of Feudal Property Law are Alive and Well in Leases of Commercial Property in Illinois." J. Marshall J. Prac. & Proc. Vol. 10 (1977) 338.

Spector, Mary B. "Tenants' Rights, Procedural Wrongs: The Summary Eviction and the Need for Reform." 46 Wayne L. Rev. 135 (2000).

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC Part II." Com. L. J. Vol. 89 (1984) 569.

Stein, Marc R. "California's Common Law Defense Against Landlord Retaliatory Conduct." U.C.L.A. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1975) 1161.

Stone, Douglas S. "Negotiating Environmental Provisions for the Commercial Lease." Prac. Law. Vol. 42 (Oct. 1996) 45.

"Tenant Rent Strikes." Colum. J.L. & Soc. Probs. Vol. 3 (1967) 1.

Taylor, John F. Note. "Landlord and Tenant: Leases: Landlord's Remedies Following Default or Repudiation by Tenant: Civil Code 3308: Rent Acceleration Clauses." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1955) 344.

Temkin, Harvey L. "The Value in Protecting the Tenant's Interest: Leasehold Title Insurance." Probate & Property 35 (May/June 2002).

Thompson, Robert S. "Landlord Eviction Remedies Act Legislative Overreaction To Landlord Self Help." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1982) 25.

Trafford, Sherry, "Using Reasonable Accommodations to Preserve Rights of Tenants with Disabilities." Clearinghouse Rev. Vol. 33 (1999) 131.

Updegraff, Clarence M. "The Element of Intent in Surrender by Operation of Law." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1924) 64.

Vlatas, Anthony J. "An Economic Analysis of Implied Warranties of Fitness in Commercial Leases." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 94 (1994) 658.

Weinberg, Michael. "From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 18001920 (Part I)." 1980 So. Ill. U.L.J. 29.

Weissenberger, Glen. "The Landlord's Duty To Mitigate Damages On The Tenant's Abandonment: A Survey Of Old Law And New Trends." Temp. L.Q. Vol. 53 (1980) 1.

Weissenberger, Glen. "The Landlord's Duty To Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform." U. Cin. L. Rev. Vol. 46 (1977) 937.

Wenner, Daniel E. "Renting in Collegetown." 84 Cornell L. Rev. 543 (1999).

Westray, Laura L. Note. "Are Landlords Being Taken By The Good Cause Eviction Requirement?" S. Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 62 (1988) 321.

Whelan, Gabrielle P. "The 'Public Access' Provisions of Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act: A Guide for Commercial Landlords and Tenants." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1993) 215.

Whelan, Thomas M., "Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a Tenant's Personal Property," Tex. Wes. L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1997) 283.

Williams, Gary. "Can Government Limit Tenant Blacklisting?" SW U.L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1995) 1077.

Wilson, James R. "Lease Security Deposits." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1934) 426.

Wistner, Rebecca A. "Cohabitation, Fornication and the Free Exercise of Religion: Landlords Seeking Religious Exemption from Fair Housing Laws." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 46 (1996) 1071.

Annotations

Annotation, Applicability of Exculpatory Clause in Lease to Lessee's Damages Resulting from Defective Original Design or Construction, 30 A.L.R. 4TH 971.

Annotation, Application of Statutory Landlord's Lien to Property of Third Person Used by Tenant on Rented Premises, 95 A.L.R. 3D 1205.

Annotation, Binding Effect on Tenant Holding Over of Covenants in Expired Lease, 49 A.L.R. 2D 480.

Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R. 2d 1414.

Annotation, Breach of Lessor's Agreement as Ground of Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or One in Privity with Latter, 78 A.L.R. 2D 1238.

Annotation, Condemnation of Premises or Part Thereof as Affecting Rights of Landlord and Tenant Inter Se, 163 A.L.R. 679.

Annotation, Consideration for Modification of Terms of Existing Tenancy, 43 A.L.R. 1451.

Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision of Lease or Bond Saving Liability of Tenant or Sureties in Case of Forfeiture of Lease or Re entry by Landlord, 99 A.L.R. 42.

Annotation, Contractual Jury Trial Waivers in State Civil Cases, 42 A.L.R. 5TH 53.

Annotation, Covenant of Lessee to Insure as Running with the Land, 18 A.L.R. 2D 1051.

Annotation, Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 42 A.L.R. 4TH 963.

Annotation, Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 68 A.L.R. 590.

Annotation, Demand of Rent Due as Prerequisite of Enforcement of Forfeiture or Termination of Lease Providing for Nonpayment, 28 A.L.R. 2D 803.

Annotation, Effect, on Nonsigner, of Provision of Lease Exempting Landlord from Liability on Account of Condition of Property, 12 A.L.R. 3D 958.

Annotation, Eminent Domain: Measure and Elements of Lessee's Compensation for Condemnor's Taking or Damaging of Leasehold, 17 A.L.R. 4TH 337.

Annotation, Employment of Independent Contractor as Affecting Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or to One in Like Case with Tenant, 162 A.L.R. 1111.

Annotation, Failure of Landlord to Make, or Permit Tenant to Make, Repairs or Alterations Required by Public Authority as Constructive Eviction, 86 A.L.R. 3D 352.

Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106.

Annotation, Holding Over Under Lease, or Renewal or Extension Thereof, As Extending Time for Exercise of Option to Purchase Contained Therein, 15 A.L.R. 3D 470.

Annotation, Implied Covenant by Lessor To Put Lessee in Possession, 70 A.L.R. 151.

Annotation, Implied Covenant or Obligation to Provide Lessee With Actual Possession, 96 A.L.R. 3D 1155.

Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commercial Leases Modern Status, 76 A.L.R. 4TH 928.

Annotation, Inability of Obtain License, Permit, or Charter Required for Tenant's Business as Defense to Enforcement of Lease, 89 A.L.R. 3D 329.

Annotation, Infestation of Leased Dwelling or Apartment with Vermin as Entitling Tenant to Abandon Premises or as Constructive Eviction by Landlord, in Absence of Express Covenant of Habitability, 27 A.L.R. 3D 924.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Construction of Provision of Lease Providing for Escalation of Rental in Event of Tax Increases, 48 A.L.R. 3D 287.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction Based on Flooding, Dampness, or the Like, 33 A.L.R. 3D

1356.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction by Another Tenant's Conduct, 1 A.L.R. 4TH 849.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Respective Rights in Excess Rent when Landlord Relets at Higher Rent During Lessee's Term, 50 A.L.R. 4TH 403.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Violation of Statute or Ordinance Requiring Landlord to Furnish Specified Facilities or Services as Ground of Liability for Injury Resulting from Tenant's Attempt to Deal With Deficiency, 63 A.L.R. 4TH 883.

Annotation, Landlord's Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Right to Forfeit Because of Tenant's Past or Future Violations of Terms of Lease, 109 A.L.R. 1267.

Annotation, Landlord's Consent to Extension or Renewal of Lease as Shown by Acceptance of Rent from Tenant Holding Over, 45 A.L.R. 2D 827.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, To Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R. 3D 534.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages By Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R.5th 1.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty Under Express Covenant to Repair, Rebuild, or Restore, Where Property is Damaged or Destroyed by Fire, 38 A.L.R. 2D 682.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death Caused by Defective Condition of Interior Steps or Stairways Used in Common by Tenants, 67 A.L.R. 3D 587.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death Due to Defects in Areas of Building (Other Than Stairways) Used in Common by Tenants, 65 A.L.R. 3D 14.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death of Tenant's Child from Lead Paint Poisoning, 19 A.L.R. 5TH 405.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury or Death Due to Defects in Appliances Supplied for Use of Different Tenants, 66 A.L.R. 3D 374.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Child for Personal Injuries Resulting from Defects in Premises, as Affected by Tenant's Negligence with Respect to Supervision of Child, 82 A.L.R. 3D 1079.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Third Person for Injury Resulting from Attack on Leased Premises by Dangerous or Vicious Animal Kept by Tenant, 87 A.L.R. 4TH 1004.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability To Tenant or Tenant's Invitees for Injury or Death Due to Ice or Snow in Areas or Passageways Used in Common by Tenants, 49 A.L.R. 3D 387.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability To Tenant's Business Patron Injured As a Result of Defective Condition of Premises, 17 A.L.R. 3D 422.

Annotation, Landlord's Lien or Right of Distress on Property Sold to Tenant on Conditional Sale, 45 A.L.R. 949.

Annotation, Landlord's Obligation to Protect Tenant Against Criminal Activities of Third Persons, 43 A.L.R. 3D 331.

Annotation, Landlord's Remedy by Way of Distress or Lien on Defaulting Tenant's Property on Leased Premises as Including Right to Collect for All Unpaid Utility Expenses, 99 A.L.R. 3D 1100.

Annotation, Landlord's Tort Liability to Tenant for Personal Injury or Property Damage Resulting From Criminal Conduct of Employee, 38 A.L.R. 4TH 240.

Annotation, Lease Provisions Allowing Termination or Forfeiture for Violation of Law, 92 A.L.R. 3D 967.

Annotation, Lease Provisions Providing for Rent Adjustment Based on Event or Formula Outside Control of Parties, 87 A.L.R. 3D 986.

Annotation, Lessee's or Lessor's Right to Recover on Fire Insurance Policy for Destroyed or Damaged Property Which the Other Has Replaced or Repaired, 53 A.L.R. 2D 1383.

Annotation, Lessor's Retention of Past Due Rental Payments as Precluding Termination of Lease and Dispossession of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent, 39 A.L.R. 4TH 1204.

Annotation, Liability as Between Lessor and Lessee, Where Lease Does Not Specify, for Taxes and Assessments, 86 A.L.R. 2D 670.

Annotation, Liability for Breach of Farming Lease or Contract, 35 A.L.R. 5TH 285

Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injuries Due to Defective Halls, Stairways, and the Like, for Use of Different Tenants, 75 A.L.R. 154.

Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injury or Death Due to Inadequacy or Lack of Lighting on Portion of Premises Used in Common by Tenants, 66 A.L.R. 3D 202.

Annotation, Liability of Lessee to Persons Injured by Defects in Premises or Property After Surrender of Possession by Lessee, 11 A.L.R. 4TH 579.

Annotation, Liability of Lessee Who Refuses to Take Possession Under Executed Lease or Executory Agreement to Lease, 85 A.L.R. 3D 514.

Annotation, Liability of Owner, Operator, or Other Parties, for Personal Injuries Allegedly Resulting From Snow or Ice on Premises of Parking Lot, 75 A.L.R.5th 49.

Annotation, Life Tenant's Death as Affecting Rights Under Lease Given by Him, 14 A.L.R. 4TH 1054.

Annotation, Measure and Elements of Damages for Lessee's Breach of Covenant as to Repairs, 45 A.L.R. 5TH 251.

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Breach by Lessor of Contract To Lease or To Put Lessee Into Possession, 104 A.L.R. 132.

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Landlord's Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability, 1 A.L.R. 4TH 1182.

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Lessor's Breach of Contract to Lease or to Put Lessee into Possession, 88 A.L.R.

2D 1024.

Annotation, Modern Status of Landlord's Tort Liability for Injury or Death of Tenant or Third Person Caused by Dangerous Condition of Premises, 64 A.L.R. 3D 339.

Annotation, Modern Status of Rule as to Tenant's Rent Liability After Injury to or Destruction of Demised Premises, 99 A.L.R. 3D 738.

Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises As Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R. 2D 586.

Annotation, Modern Status of the Rules Regarding Impossibility of Performance as Defense in Action for Breach of Contract, 84 A.L.R. 2D 12.

Annotation, Modern Views as to Validity, Under Federal Constitution, of State Prejudgment Attachment, Garnishment, and Replevin Procedures, Distraint Procedures Under Landlord, or Innkeepers, Lien Statutes, and Like Procedures Authorizing Summary Seizure of Property, 18 A.L.R. FED. 223.

Annotation, Necessity and Nature of Consideration Supporting Landlord's Reduction of Rent, 30 A.L.R. 3D 1259.

Annotation, Notice by Landlord of Change in Rent or Other Modification of Tenancy as Affecting Rights and Liabilities Incident to Tenant's Holding Over After Expiration of Term or Tent Period or Time Fixed by Notice, 109 A.L.R. 197.

Annotation, Oral Surrender of Written Lease, 78 A.L.R. 2D 933.

Annotation, Provision in Lease for Pecuniary Forfeiture Where Lease is Prematurely Terminated as One for Liquidated Damages, 106 A.L.R. 292.

Annotation, Recovery of Expected Profits Lost by Lessor's Breach of Lease Preventing or Delaying Operation of New Business, 92 A.L.R. 3D 1286.

Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, 23 A.L.R. 5TH 140.

Annotation, Relation and Rights Inter Se of Purchaser Under Foreclosure of Mortgage and Tenant Under Lease Subsequent to Mortgage, 109 A.L.R. 447.

Annotation, Remedy of Tenant Against Stranger Wrongfully Interfering with His Possession, 12 A.L.R. 2D 1192.

Annotation, Rent Period as Criterion of Term Implied by Holding Over After Expiration of Lease for a Fixed Term, 108 A.L.R. 1464.

Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, 40 A.L.R. 3D 753.

Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R. 3D 177. Annotation, Right of Lessor or Lessee or His Privies To Benefit of Insurance Taken Out by Other or His Privies, 66 A.L.R. 864.

Annotation, Right of Lessor to Retain Advance Rental Payments Made Under Lease Terms upon Lessee's Default in Rent, 27 A.L.R. 2D 656.

Annotation, Right of Tenant Holding Over After Termination of Definite Term to Notice to Quit, 19 A.L.R. 1405.

Annotation, Right to Proceeds, or to Apportionment Thereof, Where Fire Insurance Policy is Issued Jointly to Lessor and Lessee Covering Destruction of or Damage to Building, 8 A.L.R. 2D 1445.

Annotation, Right To Remove Fixtures Or Improvements Placed upon Property by One Holding Under Lease As Affected by Renewal or New Lease Made to Him or His Successor Without Reservation of the Right to Remove, 110 A.L.R. 480.

Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant Upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 1448.

Annotation, Rights Between Landlord and Tenant as Affected by Zoning Regulations Restricting Contemplated Use of Premises, 37 A.L.R. 3D 1018.

Annotation, Seller's, Bailor's, Lessor's or Lender's Knowledge of the Other Party's Intention to Put the Property or Money to an Illegal Use as Defense to Action for Purchase Price, Rent, or Loan, 166 A.L.R. 1353.

Annotation, Strict Liability of Landlord for Injury or Death of Tenant or Third Person Caused by Defect in Premises Leased for Residential Use, 48 A.L.R. 4TH 638.

Annotation, Sufficiency of Description of Terms and Conditions of Lease, or Lease Provision, so as to Comply with Statute of Frauds, 12 A.L.R. 6th 123.

Annotation, Surrender and Acceptance of Term as Affecting Right to Recover Rent or on Obligation Given for Rent, 58 A.L.R. 906.

Annotation, Taxation of Land Under Perpetual Lease or Ground Rent, 55 A.L.R. 154.

Annotation, Tenant's Recovery of Damages for Emotional Distress Under Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 6 A.L.R. 4TH 528.

Annotation, Tenant's Right, Where Landlord Fails to Make Repairs, to Have Them Made and Set Off Cost Against Rent, 40 A.L.R. 3D 1369.

Annotation, Third Party Defense to Liability Under 107 of Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (42 USCS 9607), 105 A.L.R. FED. 21.

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant Must Yield or Abandon Premises After Claimed Constructive Eviction, 91 A.L.R. 2D 638.

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must be Exercised, 109 A.L.R.5th 421, 6 A.L.R. 2D 322.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Statute or Ordinance Authorizing Withholding or Payment into Escrow of Rent for Period During Which Premises Are Not Properly Maintained by Landlord, 40 A.L.R. 3D 821.

Annotation, Validity and Effect of Acceleration Clause in Lease or Bailment, 58 A.L.R. 300.

Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Specific Provision of Lease or Statute Relating to Rights and Compensation of Lessee in Event of Condemnation, 96 A.L.R. 2D 1140.

Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor from Liability, 49 A.L.R. 3D 321.

Annotation, Waiver of Statutory Demand For Rent Due or of Notice To Quit Prerequisite of Summary Eviction of Lessee for Nonpayment of RentModern Cases, 31 A.L.R. 4TH 1254.

Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R. 3D 873.

Annotation, What Constitutes Abandonment of Residential or Commercial LeaseModern Cases, 84 A.L.R. 4TH 183.

Annotation, What Constitutes Willfulness or Malice Justifying Landlord's Collection of Statutory Multiple Damages for Tenant's Wrongful Retention of Possession, 7 A.L.R. 4TH 589.

Annotation, Who, as Between Landlord and Tenant, Must Make, or Bear Expense of, Alteration, Improvements, or Repairs Ordered by Public Authorities, 22 A.L.R. 3D 521.

Restatements Restatement (Second) of Property (1977).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.03

Supp. to § 40.03 Rent.

[Go To Main]

§ 40.03(h) Rent Acceleration Clauses [Go To Main]

Add the following to footnote 65, just after the citation to the Aurora Bus. Park case:

Cummings Properties, LLC v. National Communications Corp., 869 N.E.2d 617 (Mass. 2007) .

Add the following at the end of footnote 69:

But see Cummings Properties, LLC v. National Communications Corp., 869 N.E.2d 617 (Mass. 2007) (Landlord that was awarded possession of the leased premises following tenant default was also entitled to rent acceleration, as liquidated damages. The court did not directly focus on the duplication of remedies issue).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.07

Supp. to § 40.07 Landlord Rights in Tenant Fixtures.

[Go To Main]

§ 40.07(b) Fixtures and Trade Fixtures. [Go To Main]

In the sentence in the main text that begins immediately after the indication of footnote 299, indicate the addition of new footnote 299.1, as follows:

The concept has been applied not only to equipment that the tenant utilizes in the tenant's trade,[299.1] but also ...

Add new footnote 299.1, as follows: n299.1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 299.1. See, e.g., C.W. 100 Louis Henna, Ltd. v. El Chico Restaurants of Texas, L.P., 295 S.W.3d 748 (Tex. Ct. App. 2009) (Rooftop HVAC units that had been installed by the tenant on the roof of a restaurant building that the tenant had constructed on the leased premises--which building became the property of the landlord at the end of the lease term - were found to be trade fixtures).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.10

Supp. to § 40.10 The Holdover Tenant.

[Go To Main]

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to Supp. to §

[Go To Main]

§ 40.10(a) The Landlord's Election [Go To Main]

Add the following to footnote 507, immediately after the citation to the A.H. Fetting case:

Of course, a new tenant whose possession is blocked by a holdover tenant may also have some legal options. See, e.g., Havana Central NY2 LLC v. Lunney's Pub, Inc., 852 N.Y.S.2d 32 (App. Div. 2007) (New tenant able to sue holdover tenant for tortious interference with new tenant's contracts rights under the new lease). For additional information regarding the rights of a new tenant in a holdover situation, see Idaho Code § 55- 2715. of this volume, which discusses the landlord's implied covenant to deliver possession of the leased premises to the tenant.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.14

Supp. to § 40.14 Condemnation.

[Go To Main]

§ 40.14(d) Effect of Lease Provisions. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33

Add the following to footnote 677, in a new paragraph within that footnote:

In Metropolitan Airports Commission v. Noble, 763 N.W.2d 639 (Minn. 2009) , the lease provided for termination upon condemnation. It also provided for allocation of a portion of the award to the tenant for removal of the tenant's stock and fixtures. However, in construing this allocation provision literally in light of the nature of the condemnation award, the court concluded that it did not apply and that the tenant was entitled to no portion of the award.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.16

Supp. to § 40.16 Illegal Use of Leased Premises.

[Go To Main]

§ 40.16 (a) Illegal Use at the Time of Leasing. Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. § 8-208.1(e)

§ 40.16(a)(1) General Rules.

Add the following to footnote 711, at the end:

Caldwell v. American Package Co., Inc., 866 N.Y.S.2d 275 (App. Div. 2008) (Tenants used commercial premises for residential purposes without a residential certificate of occupancy, in violation of a statutory prohibition; the court held that the landlord could not recover the value of use and occupancy; it also held that the tenants could not bring claims for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 40 LANDLORD RIGHTS AND TENANT DUTIES

5-40 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 40.20

Supp. to § 40.20 Bibliography.

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521- 74

Add the following:

Brescia, Raymond H. "Sheltering Counsel: Towards a Right to a Lawyer in Eviction Proceedings." Touro L. Rev. Vol. 5 (2009) 187.

Ferretti, Daniel J. "Eviction Without Rejection--The Tenant's Bankruptcy Dilemma: Bankruptcy Code Sections 363(F) AND 365(H)(1)(A) and the Divergent Interpretations of Precision Industries, Inc, v. Qualitech Steel SBQ, LLC and In re Haskell." Cumb. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (2009) 707.

Whitehead, Roy, Jr. "Christian Landlords and the Free Exercise Clause: An Economic and Philosophical Analysis of Discrimination." 33 Okla. City U. L. Rev. Vol. 33 (2008) 115.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 41.syn

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.syn Synopsis to Chapter 41: TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

§ 41.01 Overview of Tenant Rights and Landlord Duties.

Ark. Code Ann. 18Outline of the Chapter.

Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-7-14Implied Covenants of Landlord Relating to Tenant Possession.

§ 41.03(a) Implied Covenant of the Power to Demise.

§ 41.03(b) Implied Covenant to Deliver Possession.

§ 41.03(b)(1) English and American Rules.

§ 41.03(b)(2) Consequences of Breach.

§ 41.03(b)(2)(i) Lease Avoidance and Lease Affirmation.

§ 41.03(b)(2)(ii) Damages.

§ 41.03(b)(2)(iii) Additional Remedial Issues.

§ 41.03(b)(3) Comparison with the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c) Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c)(1) Origin and Nature of the Implied Covenant.

§ 41.03(c)(2) Actual Eviction by the Landlord.

§ 41.03(c)(3) Constructive Eviction by the Landlord.

§ 41.03(c)(3)(i) Landlord's Wrongful Act or Omission.

§ 41.03(c)(3)(ii) Requirement that Tenant Vacate the Leased Premises.

§ 41.03(c)(3)(iii) Partial Constructive Eviction.

§ 41.03(c)(3)(iv) Relationship Between Constructive Eviction and the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c)(4) Interference by Holders of Paramount Title.

§ 41.03(c)(5) Interference by Strangers to Title.

§ 41.03(c)(6) Consequences of Breach.

§ 41.03(c)(6)(i) Effect on Rental Obligations.

§ 41.03(c)(6)(ii) Lease Termination.

§ 41.03(c)(6)(iii) Damages.

§ 41.03(c)(7) Current Importance of the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

§ 41.04 Rights and Duties Relating to the Condition of the Leased Premises--The Traditional Rules.

§ 41.04(a) Initial Condition of the Premises.

§ 41.04(a)(1) The Traditional Caveat Emptor Rule.

§ 41.04(a)(2) Exceptions to the Traditional Rule.

§ 41.04(a)(2)(i) Lease of Furnished House.

§ 41.04(a)(2)(ii) Fraud and Non-Disclosure.

§ 41.04(a)(2)(iii) Building Under Construction.

§ 41.04(b) During the Lease Term.

§ 41.04(b)(1) Effect of Express Covenant to Repair.

§ 41.05 Rights and Duties Relating to the Condition of the Leased Premises--Departures from the Traditional Rules.

§ 41.05(a) Introduction.

§ 41.05(b) Housing Codes.

§ 41.05(c) Repairs Required by the Government.

§ 41.05(d) Rent Withholding Legislation.

§ 41.05(e) Receivership Statutes.

§ 41.05(f) Judicial Application of the Illegal Lease Theory.

§ 41.05(g) 19th Century Fitness and Repair Legislation.

§ 41.05(g)(1) The Louisiana Civil Code.

§ 41.05(g)(2) Georgia Legislation.

§ 41.05(g)(3) Legislation in Other States.

Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 521The Implied Warranty of Habitability.

§ 41.06(a) The Judicially Adopted Implied Warranty of Habitability.

§ 41.06(a)(1) Judicial Development of the Implied Warranty.

§ 41.06(a)(2) Leases Subject to the Implied Warranty.

§ 41.06(a)(2)(i) Commercial Leases.

§ 41.06(a)(2)(ii) Leases of Public Housing.

§ 41.06(a)(2)(iii) Residential Leases.

§ 41.06(a)(3) Warranty Standards.

§ 41.06(a)(4) Defects Subject to the Implied Warranty.

§ 41.06(a)(5) Waiver.

§ 41.06(a)(6) Consequences of Breach.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(i) Lease Termination.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(ii) Damages.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(iii) Rent Withholding.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(iv) Repair and Deduct Remedy.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(v) Equitable Remedies.

§ 41.06(b) Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 41.06(b)(1) Introduction.

§ 41.06(b)(2) The Uniform Act.

§ 41.06(b)(2)(i) Remedies.

§ 41.06(b)(2)(ii) Waiver of Tenant Rights.

§ 41.06(b)(3) Other Statutes.

§ 41.06(c) Relationship Between Statutory and Judicially Adopted Warranties of Habitability.

Md. Ann. Code, Real Property § 8-105Dependency of Covenants in Commercial Leases.

§ 41.08 Prohibitions Against Retaliatory Conduct By Landlords.

§ 41.08(a) Introduction.

§ 41.08(b) Protected Tenant Activities.

§ 41.08(c) Prohibited Retaliatory Conduct.

§ 41.08(d) Proof of Retaliatory Motive.

§ 41.08(e) Tenant Remedies.

§ 41.08(f) Dissipation of Retaliatory Motive.

§ 41.08(g) Limits to the Retaliatory Conduct Doctrine.

§ 41.08(h) Constitutional Issues.

§ 41.09 Rights and Duties Arising Under Tort Law.

§ 41.09(a) The Traditional Rule of Landlord Tort Immunity.

§ 41.09(b) Exceptions to the Traditional Rule.

§ 41.09(b)(1) Dangerous Condition on a Portion of the Property Controlled by the Landlord.

§ 41.09(b)(1)(i) The Issue of Landlord Control.

§ 41.09(b)(1)(ii) Conditions to Which the Exception Applies.

§ 41.09(b)(1)(iii) Nature of the Landlord's Duty.

§ 41.09(b)(1)(iv) Effect of Tenant's Knowledge of the Condition.

§ 41.09(b)(2) Undisclosed Dangerous Condition Known to the Landlord.

§ 41.09(b)(3) Conditions Dangerous to Persons Outside of the Premises.

§ 41.09(b)(4) Premises Leased for Public Purpose.

§ 41.09(b)(5) When the Landlord Contracts to Repair.

§ 41.09(b)(6) When the Landlord Is Negligent in Making Repairs.

§ 41.09(b)(7) Breach of Furnished House Warranty.

§ 41.09(b)(8) Breach of Duty Under Statute or Regulation.

§ 41.09(b)(9) Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability.

§ 41.09(c) Departures from the Traditional Framework for Tort Liability.

§ 41.09(c)(1) Liability Based on Ordinary Negligence.

§ 41.09(c)(2) Strict Liability.

§ 41.09(d) Duty to Protect Tenants Against Criminal Acts of Third Parties.

§ 41.09(d)(1) The Traditional Rule.

§ 41.09(d)(2) The Modern Movement Toward Imposition of Landlord Liability.

§ 41.09(d)(2)(i) Source of the Landlord's Duty.

§ 41.09(d)(2)(ii) Foreseeability.

§ 41.09(e) Exculpatory Agreements.

§ 41.09(f) Tenant Liability for Criminal Acts of Third Parties.

§ 41.10 Frustration of Tenant's Use.

§ 41.11 Environmental Obligations.

§ 41.12 Bibliography.

N. Gregory Smith
G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law
Louisiana State University

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.01

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.01 Overview of Tenant Rights and Landlord Duties.

This chapter, which deals with tenant rights and landlord duties, is the counterpart of chapter 40, which deals with landlord rights and tenant duties. The division is admittedly somewhat arbitrary, because landlords and tenants generally have concomitant rights and duties. But the division is also defensible, because there are many areas of landlord-tenant law in which the rights or the duties of either the landlord or the tenant dominate consideration of an issue. That aside, whether one chooses to refer first to one party's rights or another party's duties is often little more than a matter of perspective.

Many of the traditional common law rules relating to landlord-tenant law arose out of the concept that a lease is a conveyance of an interest in real property. The landlord conveyed a present non-freehold estate to the tenant and retained a future estate -- a reversion. Because the tenant had the possessory interest, the landlord was, in general, not required to maintain or repair the leased premises and was, in general, not responsible for injuries to tenants or to others caused by dangerous conditions on the leased premises. Indeed, the landlord was thought to enjoy an immunity from tort liability.

Unless the lease provided otherwise, if the landlord defaulted in the performance of covenants set forth in the lease, the tenant was generally not excused from the obligation to pay rent or from other lease obligations. Under the traditional rules, the obligations of landlord and tenant were generally considered to be independent of each other, in the sense that breach of an obligation by one party did not excuse performance by the other.

In conveying the leasehold estate to the tenant, the landlord was not regarded as warranting that the leased premises would be suitable for the tenant's purpose. Neither was the landlord regarded as having an obligation to maintain the premises for the tenant's benefit. However, tenants were considered to have rights against the landlord under some implied covenants: an implied covenant that the landlord had the power to demise the property; an implied covenant that the landlord would deliver possession of the leased premises to the tenant; and an implied covenant that the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises would not be disturbed by the landlord, persons acting under the landlord's authority, or persons with paramount title. Breach of one of these implied covenants would generally excuse the tenant from performing under the lease.

Over time, tenants were recognized as having other rights as well. For example, court decisions and statutes limited the landlord's ability to engage in self help repossession of the leased premises. And housing codes were enacted that imposed obligations on landlords with respect to the condition of leased urban housing.

The pace of change accelerated rapidly in the 1960s. Many of the modern changes in landlord-tenant law can be attributed to a judicial emphasis on the contractual nature of a lease and to the statutory regulation of matters once left to private agreement or to judicial resolution. Judicial and legislative developments were, in turn, influenced by the changed nature of the modern lease. Unlike the sturdy tenant farmers of former times, many modern residential tenants are not primarily interested in renting land, but are primarily interested in renting safe, urban area apartment units that are adequately served by customary utilities and other services and that are properly maintained by landlords. Courts and legislatures considered some of the traditional landlord-tenant rules to be inappropriate in this setting.

In general, the modern changes have limited the landlord's rights and have increased the landlord's duties, both resulting in the enlargement of tenant rights. As a result of judicial or statutory adoption of the implied warranty of habitability, for example, modern residential landlords generally have significant duties with respect to the condition and ongoing maintenance of leased residential premises. Moreover, breach of those duties entitles the tenant to exercise a variety of remedies, including the withholding of rent. Other changes have also occurred. For example, by statute and by court decision, modern landlords are frequently prohibited from retaliating against tenants who complain to government housing authorities about housing conditions that violate the applicable housing code. And the ancient shield of landlord tort immunity, already subject to a number of exceptions, has been altogether discarded by some courts, at least in the residential landlord-tenant context.

While modern developments have substantially changed the law relating to tenant rights and landlord duties, the changes have not altogether supplanted the traditional rules. Indeed, in the commercial leasing context, many of the traditional rules have continued dominance. Accordingly, a consideration of tenant rights and landlord duties must include both what is old and what is new.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.02

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.02 Outline of the Chapter.

Chapter 41 begins with a consideration of tenant rights, and landlord duties, arising out of some implied covenants of the landlord relating to possession of the leased premises. Specifically, § 41.03(a) discusses tenant rights arising under the landlord's implied covenant of the power to demise; § 41.03(b) discusses the landlord's implied covenant to deliver possession; and, § 41.03(c) discusses the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment.

Section 41.04 begins a consideration of rights and duties relating to the condition of the leased premises, both at the inception of the lease and during the lease term. The initial focus is on the traditional caveat emptor rule and its exceptions. It also discusses the traditional view that the landlord has no duty to repair the premises during the term of the lease. Section 41.04 goes on to consider a number of departures from the traditional rules, including those arising under housing codes and fitness and repair legislation.

Consideration of rights and duties relating to the condition of the leased premises continues in § 41.06, which deals with the implied warranty of habitability. The section discusses both judicially adopted and legislatively enacted warranties of habitability.

Rights and duties relating to the condition of the leased premises are also relevant to § 41.07, which discusses the concept, expressed in some court decisions, of dependency of lease covenants.

Section 41.08 discusses prohibitions against retaliatory conduct by landlords. The retaliatory conduct doctrine provides some protection to residential tenants who report building code violations to governmental authorities.

Tenant rights and landlord duties arising under tort law are the focus of § 41.09. The traditional rule of landlord tort immunity is discussed, and various exceptions to, and departures from, the immunity rule are considered. The section also discusses the landlord's duty to protect tenants against criminal acts of third parties, and it considers agreements by which the landlord seeks to be exculpated from tort liability. The section also discusses tenant liability for criminal acts of third parties.

Section 41.10 considers tenant rights arising under the doctrine of frustration of purpose. And § 41.11 includes a brief discussion of environmental obligations.

A bibliography is included at the end of the chapter.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.03

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.03 Implied Covenants of Landlord Relating to Tenant Possession.

[Go To Supp]

The most fundamental rights of the tenant relate to possession of the leased premises. If the tenant is granted no right to possession, there is no lease. n1 There are three implied covenants by the landlord relating to tenant possession: the implied covenant of the power to demise; the implied covenant to deliver possession; and the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. Each of these implied covenants is considered below.

§ 41.03(a) Implied Covenant of the Power to Demise.

The tenant will not be legally entitled to possess the leased premises under a lease unless the landlord has an interest in the property sufficient to enable the landlord to enter into the lease. A lease may contain an express warranty that the landlord has title; if it does, no such warranty will be implied. n2 In the absence of an express warranty, however, a covenant, or warranty, that the landlord has the legal power to demise the premises may be implied.

An implied covenant of title by the landlord has been recognized from at least the 15th century. This implied covenant, like the covenant of quiet enjoyment, discussed below, appears to have been derived from an old common law rule that there could be an implied warranty of title in a feoffment for an estate of freehold. n3 The old rule implied a warranty of title from the use of particular words, such as "demise" and "grant." n4 If such words are used in a modern lease, the law will also imply a covenant that the landlord has the power to demise the leased premises. n5 There is some authority to the effect that a landlord's covenant of title will not be implied without the use of such words in the lease n6 but it has also been indicated that the warranty will be implied from the conveyance itself. n7

The Restatement rejects any requirement that the lease contain particular words in support of a landlord's title covenant. Its position is that, unless the parties agree otherwise, a lease is subject to "an implied agreement" that the tenant does not have to begin the tenancy if there is outstanding a paramount title that could prevent the tenant from enjoying the contemplated use of the leased premises. n8

There is little authority dealing with breach of the landlord's covenant of the power to demise. The likely reason is the availability of other actions to the tenant in circumstances giving rise to a breach. n9 Thus, if the tenant is unable to obtain possession of the premises, the tenant might bring an action for breach of the landlord's implied covenant to deliver possession. If the tenant takes possession of the premises, but is thereafter evicted under a paramount title, the tenant might bring an action for breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n10

There is some authority affirming the tenant's ability to cancel the lease and to seek damages from the landlord if the implied covenant of the power to demise is breached, and if the tenant does not take possession. n11 However, if, notwithstanding the landlord's breach, the tenant is able to take possession without suffering eviction, the tenant's damages for breach of the implied covenant will be nominal. n12

§ 41.03(b) Implied Covenant to Deliver Possession.

The overwhelming weight of authority recognizes that every lease contains an implied covenant by the landlord to deliver possession of the leased premises to the tenant at the time occupancy is to begin. n13 At a minimum, the landlord covenants to provide legal possession to the tenant. That is, the landlord covenants that the landlord will not prevent the tenant from taking possession of the leased premises, and warrants that there is no third party with paramount title that will prevent the tenant from taking possession. n14

American courts are divided over whether the landlord also impliedly covenants to provide actual physical possession of the premises. Stated another way, courts are divided over whether the landlord impliedly warrants that there will be no third person wrongfully occupying the leased premises at the time the new tenant has the legal right to take possession. The issue typically arises when a new tenant is unable to take actual possession of the leased premises at the outset of the lease because a prior tenant is wrongfully holding over. Courts have fashioned two different rules regarding the extent of the landlord's obligation when a third person is in wrongful possession.

§ 41.03(b)(1) English and American Rules.

The first rule was developed by English courts and subsequently adopted by many American jurisdictions. The English rule recognizes an implied covenant on the part of the landlord that the leased premises will be physically open to entry by the tenant at the beginning of the lease. Thus, if a holdover tenant interferes with the ability of a new tenant to obtain possession, then the landlord has the obligation to remove the holdover tenant. The English rule applies at the beginning of the lease -- the implied covenant to deliver possession to the tenant does not extend beyond the day when the tenant's term begins. Accordingly, if a trespasser interferes with the tenant's possession after the first day of the lease term, the tenant's remedy is against the trespasser, not against the landlord. n15

The second rule is known as the American rule. Under the American rule, the landlord does not impliedly covenant that the incoming tenant will receive actual possession of the premises; the landlord covenants only that the tenant will receive legal possession. If a holdover tenant wrongfully interferes with possession by the incoming tenant, the landlord is not obligated to resolve the problem, and the claim of the incoming tenant is against the wrongful occupier, not against the landlord. n16

Substantial support for both positions exists, though it appears that the English rule has been followed by a majority of American jurisdictions that have considered the question. n17 The Restatement adopts the English rule, stating that the landlord breaches its obligations to the new tenant "if a third person is improperly in possession of the leased property on the date the tenant is entitled to possession and the landlord does not act promptly to remove the person and does not in fact remove him within a reasonable period of time." The Restatement also indicates that the parties can agree that the landlord has no obligation to remove the third person. n18 The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act may be construed to adopt the English rule, but there is a difference of opinion on the issue. n19 It provides that the landlord "shall deliver possession" to the tenant at the beginning of the lease term. It permits the landlord to bring an action for possession against any person who is then wrongfully in possession. The Uniform Act also permits the tenant to obtain possession from the landlord or from any person wrongfully in possession. n20

The English rule has been principally justified on grounds of fairness and tenant expectations. Thus, it has been said that: 1) the tenant entering into a lease expects possession, not the mere "chance of a lawsuit"; n21 2) as between the landlord and the new tenant, the landlord is in a better position to know whether a tenant in possession intends to hold over; n22 and 3) because an action to expel the holdover tenant would likely have to be supported by testimony by the landlord as to the facts relating to the wrongful nature of the occupancy, the landlord instead of the new tenant should be required to bring the action for possession. n23

Several justifications have been offered in support of the American rule as well. It has been said that: 1) the incoming tenant has received a conveyance of land, and the right to possess and control the premises, and should therefore bear the responsibility for dealing with trespassers; 2) there is no substantial reason to distinguish (as does the English rule) a trespass on the first day of the lease term from a trespass on a later day of the term; and 3) the landlord should not be required to protect the tenant against a trespass by a third party absent an express covenant to do so. n24 The availability of a summary possession action may also influence the court's decision about whether to follow the English rule or the American rule. If the language of the summary possession statute permits only the incoming tenant, as the party entitled to possession, to bring the action, the American rule should be followed. n25

§ 41.03(b)(2) Consequences of Breach.

As discussed above, the scope of the landlord's implied covenant to deliver possession depends on which rule -- English or American -- has been adopted in a given jurisdiction. However, regardless of the scope of the implied covenant, a number of consequences flow from its breach. The actual consequences of the landlord's breach of the implied covenant largely depend upon the objectives of the tenant.

§ 41.03(b)(2)(i) Lease Avoidance and Lease Affirmation.

If the landlord breaches the implied covenant of possession, the incoming tenant is entitled to repudiate the lease, n26 to assert the landlord's breach as a defense to the landlord's action for rent, n27 and to sue the landlord for damages. n28 Although the issue of lease termination does not frequently arise, at least explicitly, some authorities state that the tenant is entitled to terminate the lease. n29

Alternatively, an incoming tenant who wishes to affirm the lease may bring an action for possession of the leased premises and for damages. A possessory action will be available when breach of the implied covenant results from wrongful possession by the landlord. n30 The incoming tenant may also be able to bring a possessory action, in an English rule jurisdiction, when the covenant is breached due to wrongful possession of the premises by a third party. In some English rule jurisdictions, there is authority for the proposition that only the landlord may seek possession against a wrongfully occupying third party, n31 but that is not the universal rule. n32 Of course, the incoming tenant will not be able to assert a possessory claim against a third party who is rightfully in possession of the leased premises; in that situation, the incoming tenant's remedy will be against the landlord.

An incoming tenant who affirms the lease will not be obligated to pay rent to the landlord for the period during which possession was denied. n33 An exception has been recognized by some courts when the incoming tenant is prevented from occupying only a portion of the leased premises, and takes possession of the remainder. In that situation, it has been held that rent will be equitably abated. n34 However, it has been held that when the landlord is the party holding the other portion of the premises, the landlord may not recover rent or occupancy payments from a tenant who occupies the remainder. n35

An incoming tenant who decides to affirm the lease may also be able to exercise another right when, in an English rule jurisdiction, the implied covenant is breached due to wrongful occupancy by a holdover tenant. This is a right to act in the capacity of a landlord, and to bind the holdover tenant to a new lease. n36 Exercise of this right would not enable the incoming tenant to obtain immediate possession of the leased premises, but it would entitle the incoming tenant to collect rent, and to assume the status of a landlord with respect to the party in possession. The Restatement recognizes this right, reasoning that if the power to bind a holdover tenant were not transferred from the landlord to the incoming tenant, the landlord could defeat the rights of the incoming tenant by electing to hold the original tenant over for another term. n37

§ 41.03(b)(2)(ii) Damages.

It is well established that the incoming tenant is entitled to damages for breach of the landlord's implied covenant of possession. Absent a valid agreement for liquidated damages, n38 an incoming tenant who does not wish to affirm the lease is entitled to recover general damages measured by the difference, if any, between the rental value of the leased premises and the agreed rental amount over the term of the lease, discounted to present value. n39 The tenant may also recover special damages resulting from the breach, depending upon what the tenant is able to plead and prove. n40 Such a recovery might, for example, include damages for relocation costs or lost profits. n41 However, recovery of lost profits has been denied when they are considered to be speculative. n42 The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act provides that if the landlord's failure to deliver possession is "willful and not in good faith," the tenant may recover an amount equal to the greater of three months' periodic rent or threefold the actual damages sustained, plus reasonable attorney's fees. n43

An incoming tenant who decides to affirm the lease may be entitled to recover damages from the landlord for costs incurred in renting temporary alternative premises and in bringing an action for possession. n44 However, the incoming tenant should not be able both to recover the cost of temporary quarters and to receive a rent abatement, because that would amount to a double recovery. n45 In some cases, the incoming tenant has been able to recover lost profits for the period during which possession was delayed. n46

§ 41.03(b)(2)(iii) Additional Remedial Issues.

There is some authority for the proposition that the incoming tenant's rights will be affected by knowledge, at the time the incoming tenant signs the lease, that the prior tenant is likely to remain in wrongful possession of the leased premises after lease expiration. One court in an English Rule jurisdiction suggested that such knowledge would be sufficient to vitiate the landlord's implied duty to provide actual possession. n47 Another court concluded that such knowledge would prevent the incoming tenant from recovering special damages from the landlord. n48 The Restatement view is that if incoming tenant knew, at the time of lease execution, of "the impending improper possession," the landlord's duty to provide actual possession will not be breached until the landlord has been given "whatever period of time is usually required for the removal of the possessor under the actions locally available to the landlord." n49

In an American rule jurisdiction, there is no breach of the implied covenant of possession when a wrongfully occupying third party prevents the incoming tenant from obtaining possession at the beginning of the term. Accordingly, the tenant's recourse will be to bring an action against the third party trespasser. n50 Because third party occupancy does not breach the implied covenant, the incoming tenant will be obligated to pay rent to the landlord notwithstanding the inability to take possession. n51 However, it has been observed that some courts have contrived to avoid this result. n52

§ 41.03(b)(3) Comparison with the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

Some courts have stated that the landlord's obligation to provide possession to the new tenant arises under the covenant of quiet enjoyment -- a covenant that is discussed in the following section of this chapter. n53 In some cases, it is not clear whether the court considers the landlord's obligation to provide possession to the tenant to be distinct from the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n54 However, the better view is that the covenants are distinct.

The implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is an implied covenant on the part of the landlord that the tenant's possession of the leased premises will not be disturbed by the landlord, by someone acting under the landlord's authority, or by a holder of paramount title to the property. n55 Unlike the implied covenant of possession, the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is usually breached when a tenant in possession of the leased premises is actually or constructively evicted from the leased premises. Moreover, the general rule is that the covenant of quiet enjoyment will not be breached as a result of the independent acts of third parties -- so called "strangers to title." n56 Under the English rule, however, the landlord will be in breach of the implied covenant of possession if the incoming tenant is denied actual possession by an independent third party who is in wrongful occupancy at the beginning of the lease term. n57 Accordingly, the implied covenant of possession should be regarded as a covenant that is distinct from the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c) Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c)(1) Origin and Nature of the Implied Covenant.

As early as the 15th century, the common law recognized an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease for a term of years. n58 It is thought that the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment was derived from an older warranty for quiet enjoyment and title associated with a feoffment for an estate of freehold. The existence of this older warranty was dependent upon the particular words used, n59 and some English authorities indicated that the existence of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease also depended on the inclusion of particular words, such as "demise" or "grant" in the lease. However, it has been said that the better view of the English precedents, and the view "most in accordance with historical fact," is that the creation of the landlord-tenant relationship, not the words used, gave rise to the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n60

The implied covenant of quiet enjoyment concerns the tenant's possession of the leased premises. It is a covenant and warranty that the landlord, and individuals claiming under or through the landlord, will not wrongfully disturb the possession of the tenant, and that the tenant's possession will not be disturbed by individuals with paramount title to the property. n61 The covenant may be breached when the tenant is actually evicted from the leased premises; however, as discussed below, it may also be breached by conduct that falls short of actual eviction. Breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment exposes the landlord to a variety of potential consequences, including suspension of the tenant's obligation to pay rent and liability for damages.

Although some American cases have expressed the view that the existence of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment depends upon the use of particular words in the lease, n62 the rule in nearly all jurisdictions today is that, in the absence of a lease provision to the contrary, n63 a covenant of quiet enjoyment will be implied from the existence of the landlord-tenant relationship itself. n64 Of course, a covenant of quiet enjoyment will not be implied when the lease contains an express covenant of quiet enjoyment. n65 The parties may provide for an express covenant that is more or less extensive than the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n66 It has also been held that the parties may include a provision in the lease that conditions the operation of an express covenant of quiet enjoyment upon the tenant's own performance of lease obligations. n67

§ 41.03(c)(2) Actual Eviction by the Landlord.

The landlord will be in breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment if the landlord, or someone for whose acts the landlord is responsible, wrongfully ousts the tenant from the leased premises. n68 The cases refer to this conduct, which can take the form of a physical expulsion or a physical exclusion of the tenant from the leased premises, as an actual eviction. n69 Particular acts by the landlord that have been found to be sufficient to constitute actual eviction of a tenant have included changing the locks on the leased premises, n70 refusing to permit the tenant to enter a building in which space had been leased, n71 padlocking the entry to the leased premises, n72 and taking possession of the leased premises with threats of violence against the tenant or members of the tenant's family if they attempt to re-enter. n73

The cases also recognize that the landlord's eviction efforts may deprive the tenant of only a portion of the leased premises, leaving the tenant in possession of the remainder. If the landlord deprives the tenant of a significant portion of the leased premises, the landlord's conduct will generally be regarded as constituting a partial actual eviction, and a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n74

§ 41.03(c)(3) Constructive Eviction by the Landlord.

The earliest cases in which courts implied a covenant of quiet enjoyment were cases in which the tenant was physically dispossessed from the land. However, courts later recognized that some acts of the landlord, while not depriving the tenant of actual physical possession, could prevent the tenant from obtaining the beneficial use of the leased premises. Accordingly, the doctrine of constructive eviction was developed to provide the tenant with the same remedies that were available in the case of an actual physical eviction. n75

The earliest constructive eviction case appears to have been Dyett v. Pendleton, n76 a case arising out of New York. At least that is the case in which the term "constructive eviction" seems to have been coined. n77 However, some English courts had earlier indicated a willingness to relax the requirement that the tenant be actually ousted from the premises in order to obtain a suspension of the rent. n78 In one late Eighteenth Century case, for example, the court suggested that a tenant whose landlord had pulled down the roof and ceiling of a rented house might have been able to obtain a suspension of rent by pleading an eviction. n79

A constructive eviction arises not because the tenant is physically ousted from the leased premises, but because the wrongful acts of the landlord, or individuals acting under the landlord's authority, substantially interfere with the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises. n80 To succeed on a constructive eviction claim, a tenant must show that there has been some wrongful act or omission by the landlord, that the landlord's wrongful act or omission resulted in a substantial interference with the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises, and that, in consequence thereof, the tenant abandoned possession of the leased premises within a reasonable time. n81

§ 41.03(c)(3)(i) Landlord's Wrongful Act or Omission.

A constructive eviction claim must be supported by a showing that some wrongful act or omission by the landlord resulted in a substantial interference with the tenant's use and enjoyment of the leased premises. Many cases say that the landlord's interference must be of a "grave and permanent character." n82 But literal permanency is not required. Although a single, non-continuing interference would not support a constructive eviction claim, either a continuous or a recurring interference could do so. n83 The severity of the interference must; at least in theory, be enough to make the premises "untenantable" -- meaning that the premises are unfit for the purpose for which they are leased. n84 A minor inconvenience to the tenant will not suffice. n85

A wide variety of wrongful acts and omissions by landlords have been found to be sufficient to support constructive eviction claims. These have included repeated trespasses, n86 obstructing an access-way, n87 repeated harassment of tenant customers, n88 making declaration of default and making repeated unreasonable demands, n89 permitting a nuisance to continue on parts of the premises within the landlord's control, n90 and engaging in construction activity that deprives the tenant of the full use of the leased premises. n91

A constructive eviction claim based on a wrongful omission by the landlord depends, of course, on the existence of a landlord's duty to perform. Most of the cases in which landlord omissions have been legally sufficient to support claims of constructive eviction have involved failure to make repairs or to provide services promised under the lease. n92 But constructive eviction claims have also been based on the landlord's failure to perform other obligations relating to the leased premises. Thus, courts have permitted constructive eviction claims to be based on the landlord's failure to make repairs or alterations required by government authorities, n93 to comply with statutory obligations, n94 or to comply with other judicially recognized duties regarding the condition of the leased premises. n95

Residential tenants have sometimes attempted to base constructive eviction claims on the landlord's failure to correct conditions that render the leased premises uninhabitable. n96 Such a claim may be successful when the condition results from breach of a duty by the landlord. Even if there is no express lease provision that is violated by the uninhabitability of the premises, a constructive eviction claim would seem to be readily available in a jurisdiction that recognizes the implied warranty of habitability. n97 However, if the landlord's omission gives rise to a breach of the implied warranty of habitability, the tenant would probably prefer to assert that breach directly instead of utilizing a constructive eviction theory, because the tenant would not have to abandon the leased premises to rely on the habitability warranty. n98

Most of the constructive eviction cases involving breach of a lease obligation by the landlord are concerned with the physical condition of the leased premises. In some instances, however, successful constructive eviction claims have been based on the landlord's breach of a covenant not to rent nearby premises to an enterprise in business competition with the tenant. n99 The Restatement would also permit such a result. It adopts a "dependence of obligations doctrine" with respect to promises of the landlord, and would allow the tenant to, among other options, terminate the lease and recover damages if the landlord fails to perform a lease covenant, and, in consequence of that failure, the tenant is deprived of "a significant inducement to the making of the lease." n100

It is frequently said that the landlord must have intended to deprive the tenant of the use and enjoyment of the leased premises in order for a constructive eviction to arise. n101 However, it is clear that the landlord will be held to have intended the natural consequences of the landlord's acts and omissions. n102 To the extent that intent is required, it will generally be implied from the conduct of the landlord. n103

§ 41.03(c)(3)(ii) Requirement that Tenant Vacate the Leased Premises.

A tenant who wishes to rely on the doctrine of constructive eviction must vacate the leased premises within a reasonable time after the occurrence of the events constituting the constructive eviction, or the constructive eviction claim will be lost. n104 What constitutes a reasonable time generally depends on the facts of the case. However, courts have articulated a few standards of general applicability. A tenant cannot claim a constructive eviction if the lease term expires before the tenant vacates the premises. n105 Nor can a tenant assert constructive eviction as a defense to a landlord's claim for rent that comes due before the tenant vacates the premises. n106 It has also been held that the tenant loses the right to rely on the constructive eviction doctrine once the interference with use and enjoyment has ceased. n107

In most cases, tenant abandonment has been considered to be within a reasonable time if it occurs within a month after the occurrence of the events constituting the constructive eviction. n108 Whether the tenant has actually vacated within a reasonable time may be affected by a number of factors, including the tenant's physical condition, the difficulty of finding another rental location, and delay caused by reliance on the landlord's promise to make repairs. n109

The tenant is normally required to give the landlord notice of the interference with use and enjoyment and to provide the landlord with a reasonable opportunity to remedy the situation before vacating the premises. n110 However, notice has not been required when the landlord already has knowledge of the interference. n111 If the landlord actually does remedy the interference before the tenant vacates, the tenant's right to rely on the constructive eviction doctrine will be lost. n112

The requirement that the tenant vacate the premises can present significant difficulties for a tenant. If the tenant vacates, and if a court later concludes that the landlord's interference was not substantial enough to justify the vacation, or that the tenant did not provide the landlord with required notice of the interference before vacating the premises, or that the tenant did not vacate the premises within a reasonable time, the tenant's constructive eviction claim will fail. If the constructive eviction claim fails, and if no other valid claim, such as one for breach of an implied warranty of habitability, prevents such a result, the tenant will be liable for the rent that accrued while the tenant was not in possession. If the tenant has entered into another lease following abandonment of the premises, the tenant will then be liable for rent to two landlords.

The risks to the tenant would be reduced, of course, if the tenant could remain in possession of the leased premises and pursue a claim based on breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. However, a number of courts have stated that a tenant cannot maintain an action for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment if the tenant remains in possession of the leased premises. n113 This view does not distinguish a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment from one of the remedies that a tenant might utilize for its breach. It should be possible to consider the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment to be breached by wrongful conduct of the landlord that substantially interferes with the tenant's use and enjoyment, regardless of whether the tenant vacates the premises. Whether the tenant wishes to engage the remedy of rent suspension, by vacating the premises pursuant to the doctrine of constructive eviction, can be considered separately. n114

In fact, a number of courts have permitted tenants to sue their landlords for damages for breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment without requiring the tenants to vacate the premises. n115 Some courts have also permitted tenants in possession to seek equitable relief by suing to enjoin conduct in breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n116

A few courts have permitted the tenant to remain in possession of the leased premises and to sue for a declaration that the lease is a nullity as a result of landlord conduct that violates the covenant of quiet enjoyment. n117 Following such a declaration, the tenant could abandon the premises without risk of rental liability for the period after abandonment. Even where available, however, this approach would probably not be very attractive to a short term residential tenant, who would have to bring a relatively expensive and time consuming lawsuit to test the propriety of rent abatement or lease termination. But the approach might be attractive to a longer term commercial tenant who desires to avoid the obligation to pay rent, and who would otherwise be faced with the risk of having to pay relatively expensive rental payments for the period of abandonment if a court should determine, after the fact, that the tenant were not entitled to exercise constructive eviction remedies.

Statutes in some jurisdictions may permit a tenant who remains on the premises to recover damages for landlord conduct that might otherwise support a constructive eviction claim. n118

§ 41.03(c)(3)(iii) Partial Constructive Eviction.

A few courts, mostly in New York, have permitted tenants to rely on a partial constructive eviction theory by abandoning a portion of the leased premises. n119 There is some disagreement among the reported decisions as to whether the effect of a partial constructive eviction is to abate all or only a portion of the tenant's rent during the period of the partial constructive eviction. n120

§ 41.03(c)(3)(iv) Relationship Between Constructive Eviction and the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

There has been some confusion about the relationship between constructive eviction and the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. The confusion is reflected in occasional statements to the effect that a tenant who remains in possession of the leased premises cannot maintain an action for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. n121 Statements like these fail to distinguish between the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment and a remedy that may be available for its breach.

A breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment results from some act or omission of the landlord. A constructive eviction involves a response by the tenant -- vacation of the leased premises. Where applicable, the constructive eviction doctrine permits the tenant to vacate the premises and to avoid liability for later-accruing rent.

"It is probably true," wrote one commentator, "that every constructive eviction is preceded by a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, but ... every breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment does not lead to a constructive eviction." n122 As discussed in 40.22(c)(3)(ii), a number of courts have recognized the distinction and have concluded that a tenant may sue for damages or injunctive relief, n123 without abandoning the leased premises, when the landlord has breached the covenant of quiet enjoyment.

§ 41.03(c)(4) Interference by Holders of Paramount Title.

From at least the time of Henry VI, the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment was generally thought to include a warranty that the tenant's possession would not be disturbed by persons claiming the land by title paramount to that of the landlord. n124 The idea was that if the tenant's possession were disturbed by a wrongdoer, the tenant could bring an action against the wrongdoer; however, if the tenant's possession were disturbed by a someone with title paramount to that of the landlord, the tenant had no remedy of ejectment, and could therefore sue the landlord for breach of the implied covenant. n125 Although English courts later took the contrary view that the implied covenant applied only to acts of the landlord, or those claiming under the landlord, n126 it is well-established in American law that the implied covenant protects the tenant's possession against holders of paramount title.

The Restatement provides a useful definition of "paramount title." It states:

> Except to the extent an applicable recording law provides otherwise, a legal interest in the leased property held by a third party at the time the lease is made, and not terminable at the will of the landlord or by the time the tenant is entitled to possession, is paramount to the interest of the landlord, and unless the third party agrees otherwise, is an interest paramount to that of the tenant. n127

Examples of paramount interests in third parties include a previously existing remainder, where the landlord owns a life estate; a power of termination, where the landlord owns a fee simple on condition subsequent; a reversion, where the landlord owns a life estate or a sublease; the interest of a mortgagee, where the landlord has encumbered the property with a mortgage, and the leasehold interest of a prior tenant whose lease term has not ended. n128

The mere existence of a paramount title does not breach the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. If there is to be a breach, the holder of paramount title must also disturb the tenant's possession. n129 The majority of the cases indicate that the covenant is breached only when the interference by the holder of paramount title results in dispossession of the tenant. n130 Some cases, however, have indicated that the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment may be breached without an actual dispossession of the tenant if the paramount holder asserts the paramount interest and the tenant attorns to the paramount holder. n131 The theory seems to be that there has been an ouster under the landlord's old title and a resumption of possession under the new title. n132

Based on the foregoing, it would seem that the covenant of quiet enjoyment would be breached in the case of a life estate when the landlord life tenant dies before the designated end of the tenant's lease, and the holder of the remainder or the reversion takes possession of the property. There is some English authority to the contrary, based on the reasoning that the implied covenant is an incident of the landlord-tenant relationship, and that it ends upon the death of the landlord. n133 This reasoning has been described as questionable, on the ground that the covenant is also implied from the lease itself. n134 However, more recent cases permit the tenant to sue for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment in this situation. n135

The paramount title issue has been considered with some frequency in connection with mortgages. The relevant situation is one in which the leased property is subject to a mortgage that is prior to the lease. If the landlord mortgagor defaults on the mortgage obligations, the mortgagee will have the right to initiate foreclosure proceedings. Mere initiation of foreclosure proceedings by the mortgagee does not result in breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment. However, a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment would occur if the tenant were to be dispossessed as a result of the foreclosure. n136 It should be noted that the majority rule is that if the tenant on a junior lease is not joined in the foreclosure action, the tenant's interest is unaffected by the foreclosure. n137

A taking of all or a portion of the leased property by the government under an eminent domain proceeding does not breach the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n138 Some courts have reasoned that the tenant has adequate remedy against the condemning authority, or that the impairment to the tenant's use and enjoyment does not result from an act of the landlord. n139 However, it seems sufficient to say that the interference with the tenant's possession does not result from any defect in the landlord's title, and cannot be prevented by the landlord. n140

In contrast, a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment may be found if a leased building is demolished on account of non compliance with municipal regulations. n141 In these instances, some fault may be attributed to the landlord. But the cases are not uniform on the issue of breach of the implied covenant. n142

If the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is breached as a result of the actions of a holder of paramount title, the tenant's remedies will be against the landlord, rather than against the holder of paramount title.

§ 41.03(c)(5) Interference by Strangers to Title.

Although the landlord's implied covenant of quiet enjoyment may be breached when the tenant's possession is disturbed by a holder of paramount title, the general rule is that the covenant is not breached when possession is disturbed by a third party who is a stranger to title. n143 In this situation, the tenant will normally be required to proceed directly against the third party.

There are exceptions to this general rule. If the landlord expressly or impliedly authorizes conduct by a third party that substantially interferes with a tenant's use and enjoyment of the property, the third party's conduct will be chargeable to the landlord. n144 And a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment has usually been found when, with knowledge of the landlord, other tenants use their leased premises for lewd and immoral purposes that substantially interfere with a complaining tenant's use and enjoyment. n145

There is a division of authority as to whether the landlord is chargeable with other varieties of offensive conduct by tenants that the landlord is aware of, has the legal right to control, but does not control. Although a number of courts have permitted tenants to claim a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment in such circumstances, n146 it appears that the majority of the decided cases hold otherwise. n147 The Restatement takes the position that the landlord is chargeable with offensive conduct of other tenants that the landlord could legally control, but notes that the weight of authority is otherwise. n148

§ 41.03(c)(6) Consequences of Breach.

Conduct by the landlord that breaches the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment may expose the landlord to a variety of legal consequences, some of which arise under other law. For example, as owner of a possessory estate in land, a tenant may sue in trespass for the landlord's unlawful entry, and may sue for possession if the landlord wrongfully evicts the tenant from the land. n149 A substantial interference with the tenant's use and enjoyment of the premises may constitute a nuisance, although traditionally, the interference must originate off the leased premises. n150 And aggravated conduct by the landlord in evicting a tenant may give rise to an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. n151

§ 41.03(c)(6)(i) Effect on Rental Obligations.

A number of other consequences may follow from breach of the implied covenant itself. These include suspension of the tenant's rent obligation, lease termination, and landlord liability for damages. With respect to the first of these, it is clear that an actual or constructive eviction of the tenant, in breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, suspends the tenant's obligation to pay rent during the time the tenant is out of possession. Historically, the justification for permitting the tenant to suspend the payment of rent seems to have been based on the concept that rent issued out of the land. An eviction of the tenant deprived the tenant of the source of rent, and the landlord was not entitled to recover it. n152 American authorities confirm that the tenant's rental obligation is suspended during the period of the breach, but they generally do not discuss this result in terms of the tenant being deprived of income from the land. Instead, when they discuss the rationale at all, American courts typically do so in contractual terms, such as characterizing continued possession of the leased premises as consideration for, or as a condition to, payment of the rent. n153 The idea that the covenant to pay rent is dependent upon the landlord's performance of the covenant of quiet enjoyment represents an exception to the traditional notion that leasehold covenants are independent of each other, and that breach of a covenant by one party does not excuse non performance by the other. n154

In the case of a partial actual eviction, the majority rule is that the tenant may continue in occupancy of the remaining portion of the premises without liability for rent during the period of the deprivation, even though other covenants in the lease remain enforceable. n155 Abatement of all of the rent may be explained, at least in part, as a reflection of the traditional concept that rent issues out of the land, and is charged on every part of the land. n156 In addition, it has sometimes been said that a landlord should not be able to "apportion his own wrong." n157 A minority of jurisdictions are of the view that the tenant should be obligated to pay for the fair rental value of the portion of the premises occupied. n158 The Restatement also favors rent apportionment. n159 And it has been held that the landlord may receive a proportionate amount of rent in the case of a partial actual eviction caused by a holder of paramount title. n160 In that case, of course, the eviction does not result from a wrongful act of the landlord. n161

§ 41.03(c)(6)(ii) Lease Termination.

Although early English authorities provided that the tenant could suspend payment of rent during the period of wrongful eviction, they did not indicate that the lease itself could be terminated based on the landlord's breach. n162 The issue of lease termination has not explicitly arisen in most of the cases. In most instances, breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is asserted as a defense to the landlord's action to recover rent, or as a basis for recovering damages, following an actual or constructive eviction. In most cases, the tenant neither seeks, nor obtains, a judgment that pronounces the lease to be terminated. However, the prevailing rule is that breach of the implied covenant entitles a tenant who has been deprived of possession to recover damages based on the full remaining lease term n163 / a result that is consistent with lease repudiation by the tenant. n164 And a number of courts have explicitly recognized that such a breach permits the tenant to repudiate the lease or to treat it as terminated. n165

§ 41.03(c)(6)(iii) Damages.

The landlord may also be obligated to pay damages for breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. The prevailing rule is that, when the tenant is evicted from the premises, and the implied covenant is thereby breached, general damages will be measured by the difference between the amount of the rent specified in the lease and the fair rental value of the premises for the remainder of the lease term. n166 This general measure of damages is also normally applicable to an eviction by a holder of paramount title; however, a minority view limits the tenant's recovery to nominal damages in that situation, if the tenant has not paid rent in advance, and if the landlord is not at fault. n167

Special damages may also be awarded, if properly pleaded and proved. Courts have awarded special damages based on a variety of tenant losses or costs, including the cost of tenant relocation, loss of good will, and damage to tenant personal property. n168 Lost profits have sometimes been recoverable, n169 but courts have declined to award lost profits when they appear to be speculative. n170 Landlords have sometimes been liable for punitive damages when their conduct towards tenants has been malicious and wanton. n171

Some courts have recognized that a tenant may remain in possession of the leased premises and sue for damages based on conduct of the landlord that breaches the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n172 In that situation, damages have been awarded based on the difference between the value of the use of the property with and without the interference.

n173

The Restatement view is that, if the landlord interferes with the tenant's permissible use of the leased premises, and does not promptly stop the interference after being requested to do so, the tenant may terminate the lease and recover damages, or continue with the lease and obtain legal and equitable relief. n174

§ 41.03(c)(7) Current Importance of the Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment.

Modern legal developments have diminished the importance of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, at least in the residential landlord-tenant context. A majority of jurisdictions have now adopted, either by court decision or legislative enactment, an implied warranty of habitability on the part of residential landlords. This warranty, where adopted, typically provides a residential tenant with an array of remedial options, including rent withholding, when the landlord fails to maintain the habitability of the leased premises. Because the tenant need not vacate the leased premises in order to utilize the rent withholding remedy under the habitability warranty, an informed tenant will almost always elect that remedy over constructive eviction, where both are available under the circumstances.

Nonetheless, the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment continues to be important in leasing situations. That would be particularly true in a jurisdiction that has not adopted the implied warranty of habitability. However, even where it has been adopted, the implied warranty of habitability generally does not apply to all leases. Commercial leases, for example, are generally not subject to the implied warranty of habitability. n175 And some breaches of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, such as wrongful eviction by the landlord, or eviction by a party with paramount title, are simply not covered by the implied warranty of habitability.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See, e.g., Sproul v. Gilbert, 359 P.2d 543 (Or. 1961) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 1.2 (1977).

(n2)Footnote 2. See Johnson v. Missouri Kansas Texas R.R., 216 S.W.2d 499 (Mo. 1949) .

(n3)Footnote 3. See Sir William Holdsworth, 7*A History of English Law* 251 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n4)Footnote 4. Sir William Holdsworth, 7*A History of English Law* 255 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Ford v. Ball, 86 S.E. 562 (W. Va. 1915) .

(n6)Footnote 6. See Gano v. Vanderveer, 34 N.J. L. 293 (1870) .

(n7)Footnote 7. See McAlester v. Landers, 11 P. 505 (Cal. 1886) ; see also Restatement (Second) of Property § 4.2 cmt. b (1977).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 4.2 cmts. a, b (1977).

(n9)Footnote 9. See James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.46 (Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n10)Footnote 10. These implied warranties are discussed in §§ 41.03(b) and 41.03(c) of this chapter.

(n11)Footnote 11. See Mostyn v. The West Mostyn Coal & Iron Co., 1 C.P. D. 145 (1876) . In this case, the landlord was aware of the title defect, but the tenant was not.

(n12)Footnote 12. See Harms v. McCormick, 22 N.E. 511 (Ill. 1889) .

(n13)Footnote 13. See Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, note 2 (1977).

(n14)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Snider v. Deban, 144 N.E. 69 (Mass. 1924) ; Hannan v. Dusch, 153 S.E. 824 (Va. 1930) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.21 (3d ed. 2000); Kristine Cordier Karnezis, Annotation, Implied Covenant or Obligation to Provide Lessee with Actual Possession, 96 A.L.R.3d 1155, 1160 (1979) ; Annotation, Implied Covenant by Lessor to Put Lessee in Possession, 70 A.L.R. 151 (1931) .

(n15)Footnote 15. See, e.g., Hannan v. Dusch, 153 S.E. 824 (Va. 1930) ; King v. Reynolds, 67 Ala. 229 (1880) ; Kristine Cordier Karnezis, Annotation, Implied Covenant or Obligation to Provide Lessee with Actual Possession, 96 A.L.R.3d 1155, 1160 (1979) .

(n16)Footnote 16. See, e.g., Hannan v. Dusch, 153 S.E. 824 (Va. 1930) ; Kristine Cordier Karnezis, Annotation, Implied Covenant or Obligation to Provide Lessee with Actual Possession, 96 A.L.R.3d 1155, 1161 (1979) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, 966- 968 (1977).

(n18)Footnote 18. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.2 (1977).

(n19)Footnote 19. See Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, 957 (1977) (noting differences of opinion among commentators regarding whether the Uniform Act adopts the English rule or the American rule and contending that the Uniform Act is neutral on the issue).

(n20)Footnote 20. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 2.103, 4.102.

(n21)Footnote 21. See King v. Reynolds, 67 Ala. 229, 231 (1880) (quoting from Coe v. Clay, 130 Eng. Rep. 1131 (C.P. 1829)).

(n22)Footnote 22. See Herpolsheimer v. Christopher, 111 N.W. 359 (Neb. 1907) .

(n23)Footnote 23. Id.

(n24)Footnote 24. See Hannan v. Dusch, 153 S.E. 824 (Va. 1930) .

(n25)Footnote 25. See, e.g., Gazzolo v. Chambers, 73 Ill. 75 (1874) ; Snider v. Deban, 144 N.E. 69 (Mass. 1924) ; West v. Kitchell, 68 So. 469 (Miss. 1915) .

(n26)Footnote 26. See, e.g., Dengler v. Michelssen, 18 P. 138 (Cal. 1888) ; Miller v. Ready, 108 N.E. 605 (Ind. Ct. App. 1915) ; Sloan v. Hart, 63 S.E. 1037 (N.C. 1909) .

(n27)Footnote 27. See, e.g., Wallace v. Carter, 299 P. 966 (Kan. 1931) .

(n28)Footnote 28. See, e.g., Sloan v. Hart, 63 S.E. 1037 (N.C. 1909) ; Dieffenbach v. McIntyre, 254 P.2d 346 (Okla. 1952) .

(n29)Footnote 29. See, e.g., Draper Mach. Works, Inc. v. Hagberg, 663 P.2d 141 (Wash. Ct. App. 1983) ; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.102; Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.2 Reporter's Note 6 (1977).

(n30)Footnote 30. See, e.g., Cooper v. Gordon, 164 N.W. 21 (N.D. 1917) ; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.102(a)(2).

(n31)Footnote 31. See, e.g., King v. Reynolds, 67 Ala. 229 (1880) .

(n32)Footnote 32. See, e.g., Gregory v. Pribbeno, 9 N.W.2d 485 (Neb. 1943) (either landlord or tenant may seek possession). See generally Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, 949 n.68 (1977).

(n33)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Adrian v. Rabinowitz, 186 A. 29 (N.J. 1936) ; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.102.

(n34)Footnote 34. See Wallace v. Carter, 299 P. 966 (Kan. 1931) ; Lalekos v. Manset, 47 A.2d 617 (D.C. Mun. Ct. App. 1946) ; see also Poston v. Jones, 37 N.C. 350 (1842) .

(n35)Footnote 35. See Moore v. Mansfield, 65 N.E. 398 (Mass. 1902) .

(n36)Footnote 36. See Mulhauser v. Conley, 186 P.2d 830 (Okla. 1947) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.4. The same right has been held to be available to an incoming tenant in an American rule jurisdiction. See United Merchants' Realty & Imp. Co. v. Roth, 86 N.E. 544 (N.Y. 1908) . The right of a landlord to bind a holdover tenant to a new lease is discussed in chapter 40. See § 40.10.

(n37)Footnote 37. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.4 cmt. h (1977).

(n38)Footnote 38. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 10.2 cmt. h (1977).

(n39)Footnote 39. See, e.g., Foreman & Clark Corp. v. Fallon, 479 P.2d 362 (Cal. 1971) ; Ivy v. Argentieri, 471 P.2d 122 (Wash. Ct. App. 1970) ; J.A. Connelly, Annotation, Measure of Damages for Lessor's Breach of Contract to Lease or to Put Lessee Into Possession, 88 A.L.R.2d 1024 (1963) ; but see Panagos v. Plack, 121 A. 306 (Pa. 1923) (landlord in good faith; damages limited to expenditures made by the tenant).

(n40)Footnote 40. See, e.g., Darling Shops, Inc. v. Brack, 95 F.2d 135 (8th Cir. 1938) ; Sloan v. Hart, 63 S.E. 1037 (N.C. 1909) .

(n41)Footnote 41. See, e.g., Fera v. Village Plaza, Inc., 242 N.W.2d 372 (Mich. 1976) (lost profits); Restatement (Second) of Property § 10.2(3) cmt. d (1977) (relocation costs); see generally J.A. Connelly, Annotation, Measure of Damages for Lessor's Breach of Contract to Lease or to Put Lessee Into Possession, 88 A.L.R.2d 1024, 1036, 1042 (1963) ; Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.2 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n42)Footnote 42. See, e.g., Dieffenbach v. McIntyre, 254 P.2d 346 (Okla 1952) ; see generally Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.2 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n43)Footnote 43. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.102(b).

(n44)Footnote 44. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 10.2 cmts. e, g (1977).

(n45)Footnote 45. See id., illus. 4, 5.

(n46)Footnote 46. See, e.g., Vogue v. Shopping Centers, Inc., 266 N.W.2d 148 (Mich. 1978) .

(n47)Footnote 47. See Sloan v. Hart, 63 S.E. 1037 (N.C. 1909) .

(n48)Footnote 48. See Morrison v. Weinstein, 236 S.W. 585 (Ark. 1921) .

(n49)Footnote 49. Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.2 cmt. d, at 241 (1977).

(n50)Footnote 50. See, e.g., Southwest Drug Co. v. Howard Bros. Pharmacy of Jackson, Inc., 320 So. 2d 776

(Miss. 1975) ; Nodine v. State, 79 N.Y.S.2d 834 (Ct. Cl. 1948) ; Taylor v. Kaufhold, 84 A.2d 347 (Pa. 1951) ; J.E. Macy, Annotation, Remedy of Tenant Against Stranger Wrongfully Interfering with His Possession, 12 A.L.R.2d 1192 (1950) .

(n51)Footnote 51. See Snider v. Deban, 144 N.E. 69 (Mass. 1924) .

(n52)Footnote 52. See Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, 950 (1977) (citing, e.g., Harris v. Greenberger, 64 N.Y.S. 136 (App. Div. 1900) .

(n53)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Obermeier v. Mattison, 192 P. 283 (Or. 1920) ; Heywood v. Ogden Motor Car Co., 266 P. 1040 (Utah 1928) .

(n54)Footnote 54. See, e.g., King v. Reynolds, 67 Ala. 229 (1880) .

(n55)Footnote 55. See discussion in § 41.03(c) of this chapter.

(n56)Footnote 56. See discussion in § 40.22(c)(5) of this chapter.

(n57)Footnote 57. *See*James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.37 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952); Glen Weissenberger, The Landlord's Duty to Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform, 46 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 937, 943 (1977).

(n58)Footnote 58. .Sir William Holdsworth, 7*A History of English Law* 251 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n59)Footnote 59. Sir William Holdsworth, 7*A History of English Law* 251, 255 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n60)Footnote 60. Sir William Holdsworth, 7*A History of English Law* 251, 255 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n61)Footnote 61. See, e.g., McDowell v. Hyman, 48 P. 984 (Cal. 1897) ; Hannan v. Harper, 208 N.W. 255 (Wis. 1926) ; C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1430, 1431 (1955) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.30 (3d ed. 2000).

(n62)Footnote 62. See, e.g., Mershon v. Williams, 44 A. 211 (N.J. 1899) .

(n63)Footnote 63. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1 cmt. i (1977).

(n64)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579 (N.Y. 1917) ; C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1420 (1955) . In Louisiana, the lessor has a statutory obligation to "protect the lessee's peaceful possession for the duration of the lease." See La. Civ. Code art. 2682(3). The lessor also "warrants the lessee's peaceful possession of the leased thing against any disturbance caused by a person who asserts ownership, or right to possession of, or any other right in the thing." La. Civ. Code art. 2700. In some cases, statutes that prohibit implied covenants in real estate conveyances have been held applicable to leases. See, e.g., Pickalo v. Mack, 186 N.W. 502 (Mich. 1922) . But courts have held otherwise as well. See, e.g., Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579 (N.Y. 1917) .

(n65)Footnote 65. See, e.g., Best v. Crown Drug Co., 154 F.2d 736 (8th Cir. 1946) .

(n66)Footnote 66. See, e.g., Vican v. Lederer Realty Corp., 110 A. 594 (R.I. 1920) (less extensive); Paddell v. Janes, 152 N.Y.S. 948 (Super. Ct. 1915) (more extensive).

(n67)Footnote 67. See Greene v. Rainbow Properties, Ltd., 496 A.2d 178 (Vt. 1985) .

(n68)Footnote 68. See, e.g., Barash v. Pennsylvania Term. Real Estate Corp., 256 N.E.2d 707 (N.Y. 1970) ; Goad v. Maxwell, 542 P.2d 488 (Or. 1975) (en banc).

(n69)Footnote 69. See, e.g., Barash v. Pennsylvania Term. Real Estate Corp., 256 N.E.2d 707 (N.Y. 1970) ; Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579 (N.Y. 1917) .

(n70)Footnote 70. See, e.g., Burdan v. Walton, 689 S.W.2d 543 (Ark. 1985) ; Lester v. Griffin, 108 N.Y.S. 580 (Super. Ct. 1908) .

(n71)Footnote 71. See Lawrence v. Edwin A. Denham Co., 109 N.Y.S. 752 (Super. Ct. 1908) .

(n72)Footnote 72. See, e.g., Morgan v. Short, 34 N.Y.S. 10 (N.Y. City Ct. 1895) .

(n73)Footnote 73. See, e.g., Foster v. Keena, 714 S.W.2d 180 (Mo. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n74)Footnote 74. See, e.g., Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 136 N.W. 362 (Mich. 1912) ; Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579 (N.Y. 1917) .

(n75)Footnote 75. See Note, Constructive Eviction, 19 Harv. L. Rev. 50 (1905); James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.50, 351 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n76)Footnote 76. 8 Cow. 727 (N.Y. 1826)

(n77)Footnote 77. See Michael Weinberg, From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 1800-1920 (Part I), 1980 S. ILL. U. L.J. 29, 71 (1980).

(n78)Footnote 78. See Michael Weinberg, From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 1800-1920 (Part I), 1980 S. ILL. U. L.J. 29, 71 (1980).

(n79)Footnote 79. See Hunt v. Cope, 98 Eng. Rep. 1065 (K.B. 1775); see also Cherbourn v. Rye, 78 Eng. Rep. 590 (Q.B. 1594).

(n80)Footnote 80. See, e.g., Reste Realty Corp. v. Cooper, 251 A.2d 268 (N.J. 1969) ; City of New York v. Pike Realty Corp., 160 N.E. 359 (N.Y. 1928) ; Sally A. Smith, Annot., "Failure of Landlord to Make, or Permit Tenant to Make, Repairs or Alterations Required by Public Authority as Constructive Eviction," 86 A.L.R.3d 352, 354 (1978) .

(n81)Footnote 81. See, e.g., Barash v. Pennsylvania Terminal Real Estate Corp., 256 N.E.2d 707 (N.Y. 1970) ; Schaaf v. Nortman, 19 Wis. 2d 540, 120 N.W.2d 654 (Wis. 1963) ; Sally A. Smith, Annot., "Failure of Landlord to Make, or Permit Tenant to Make, Repairs or Alterations Required by Public Authority as Constructive Eviction," 86 A.L.R.3d 352, 354 (1978) .

(n82)Footnote 82. See, e.g., Fleming v. King, 28 S.E. 239 (Ga. 1897) ; Applegate v. Inland Real Estate Corp., 441 N.E.2d 379 (Ill. Ct. App. 1982) .

(n83)Footnote 83. See, e.g., Talbot v. Citizens Nat'l Bank of Evansville, 389 F.2d 207 (7th Cir. 1968) (mere trespass is no constructive eviction); Fleming v. King, 28 S.E. 239 (Ga. 1897) (same; no constructive eviction); Reste Realty Corp. v. Cooper, 251 A.2d 268 (N.J. 1969) (recurring flooding; constructive eviction).

(n84)Footnote 84. See May v. Marijo Corp., 299 N.W.2d 433 (Neb. 1980) ; Hannan v. Harper, 208 N.W. 255 (Wis. 1926) . William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.33 (3d ed. 2000); cf. Wesson v. Leone Enterprises, Inc., 774 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 2002) (Commercial tenant contended that landlord's failure to repair a leaking roof resulted in a constructive eviction; the court rejected this claim because while the failure may have made the tenant's situation more inconvenient and expensive it did not render the premises untenantable; however, the court allowed the tenant to terminate the lease anyway; the court used a mutually dependant covenant analysis and concluded that the landlord's breach of its covenant to keep the roof in good repair allowed the tenant to terminate the lease).

(n85)Footnote 85. See e.g., Myers v. Western Farmers Association, 449 P.2d 104 (Wash. 1969) (no constructive eviction when, after tenants quit the premises, landlord changed the locks; landlord did not intend to evict or to interfere with possession, and changed the locks because of a concern over "outstanding keys" that could not be accounted for; tenants were faced only with the "inconvenience" of needing to ask for a new key).

(n86)Footnote 86. See Glyco v. Schultz, 289 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1972) (landlord induced farming activities).

(n87)Footnote 87. See Hotel Marion Co. v. Waters, 150 P. 865 (Or. 1915) .

(n88)Footnote 88. See Thompson v. Poirier, 420 A.2d 297 (N.H. 1980) .

(n89)Footnote 89. See Tenn-Tex Properties v. Brownell-Electro, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 423 (Tenn. 1989) .

(n90)Footnote 90. See, e.g., Ray Realty Co. v. Holtzman, 119 S.W.2d 981 (Mo. Ct. App. 1938) .

(n91)Footnote 91. See, e.g., Briargrove Shopping Center Joint Venture v. Vilar, Inc., 647 S.W.2d 329 (Tex. Ct. App. 1982) .

(n92)Footnote 92. See, e.g., Dolph v. Barry, 148 S.W. 196 (Mo. Ct. App. 1912) (failure to make repairs); Las Vegas Oriental, Inc. v. Sabella's of Nev., Inc., 630 P.2d 255 (Nev. 1981) (failure to provide heating and cooling); Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Kaminsky, 768 S.W.2d 818 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) (failure to provide promised security service; failure to respond to tenant complaints about abortion protestors who interfered with tenant's use and enjoyment). See also Gibbons v. Hoefeld, 132 N.E. 425 (Ill. 1921) (landlord assumed duty to make basement water tight).

(n93)Footnote 93. See, e.g., Scott v. Prazma, 555 P.2d 571 (Wyo. 1976) .

(n94)Footnote 94. See, e.g., Di Massimo v. Clearwater, 805 F.2d 1536 (11th Cir. 1986) (statutory obligation to provide water); cf. Posnanski v. Hood, 174 N.W.2d 528 (Wis. 1970) (administrative enforcement contemplated).

(n95)Footnote 95. See, e.g., Johnson v. Snyder, 221 P.2d 164 (Cal. Ct. App. 1950) (failure to eliminate nuisance); Giddings v. Williams, 168 N.E. 514 (Ill. 1929) (duty to supply heat); Scudder v. Marsh, 224 Ill. App. 355 (1922) (breach of obligation to disclose latent defect). See also Adams v. Green, 452 N.Y.S.2d 143 (City Ct. 1982) (implied obligation to furnish heat where heating equipment is under landlord's exclusive control).

(n96)Footnote 96. See, e.g., Leech v. Husbands, 152 A. 729 (Del. 1930) (insect infestation); Higgins v. Whiting, 131 A. 879 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1926) (failure to supply heat).

(n97)Footnote 97. The implied warranty of habitability is discussed in § 41.06 of this chapter

(n98)Footnote 98. See Hilder v. St. Peter, 144 Vt. 150, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n99)Footnote 99. See In re Consumers World, Inc., 160 F. Supp. 238 (D. Mass. 1958) ; Kulawitz v. Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co., 155 P.2d 24 (Cal. 1944) .

(n100)Footnote 100. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 7.1 and Reporter's Note (1977). Section 7.2 of the Restatement explicitly permits the tenant to terminate the lease and to seek other relief if the landlord breaches a non competition covenant in the lease. Id. at § 7.2.

(n101)Footnote 101. See, e.g., Automobile Supply Co. v. Scene In Automobile Supply Co., 340 Ill. 196, 172 N.E. 35

(Ill. 1930) ; Tracy v. Long, 3 N.E.2d 789 (Mass. 1936) .

(n102)Footnote 102. See, e.g., Applegate v. Inland Real Estate Corp., 441 N.E.2d 379 (Ill. Ct. App. 1982) ; Scott v. Prazma, 555 P.2d 571 (Wyo. 1976) .

(n103)Footnote 103. See, e.g., Scott v. Prazma, 555 P.2d 571 (Wyo. 1976) ; Deseret Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 714 P.2d 1143 (Utah 1986) . See also Hotel Marion Co. v. Waters, 150 P. 865 (Or. 1915) (landlord's intent is generally not material).

(n104)Footnote 104. See, e.g., Automobile Supply Co. v. Scene In Automobile Supply Co., 340 Ill. 196, 172 N.E. 35 (Ill. 1930) ; Strupp v. Canniff, 150 N.W.2d 574 (Minn. 1967) ; Merritt v. Tague, 23 P.2d 340 (Mont. 1933) ; R.W. Gascoyne, Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant Must Yield or Abandon Premises After Claimed Constructive Eviction, 91 A.L.R.2d 638, 641, 644 (1963) .

(n105)Footnote 105. See Edwards v. Candy, 21 N.Y. Sup. Ct. 596 (1878).

(n106)Footnote 106. See, e.g., Chelten Ave. Bldg. Corp. v. Mayer, 172 A. 675 (Pa. 1934) .

(n107)Footnote 107. See, e.g., Gateway Co. v. Charlotte Theatres, Inc., 297 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. 1961) (tenant brought action to rescind the lease).

(n108)Footnote 108. See R.W. Gascoyne, Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant Must Yield or Abandon Premises After Claimed Constructive Eviction, 91 A.L.R.2d 638, 641 (1963) .

(n109)Footnote 109. See, e.g., Hartenbauer v. Brumbaugh, 220 Ill. App. 326 (1920) (tenant had broken leg); Rome v. Johnson, 174 N.E. 716 (Mass. 1931) (listing several factors); Lynder v. S.S. Kresge Co., 45 N.W.2d 319 (Mich. 1951) (landlord assurances that defective stairway would be remedied).

(n110)Footnote 110. See, e.g., Pague v. Petroleum Prods., Inc., 461 P. 2d 317 (Wash. 1969) ; Erickson v. Elliott, 31 P.2d 506 (Wash. 1934) ; Schaaf v. Nortman, 120 N.W.2d 654 (Wis. 1963) .

(n111)Footnote 111. See, e.g., Milheim v. Baxter, 103 P. 376 (Colo. 1909) .

(n112)Footnote 112. See, e.g., Gateway Co. v. Charlotte Theatres, Inc., 297 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. 1961) ; R.W. Gascoyne, Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant Must Yield or Abandon Premises After Claimed Constructive Eviction, 91 A.L.R.2d 638, 651 (1963) .

(n113)Footnote 113. See, e.g., Callahan v. Goldman, 103 N.E. 689 (Mass. 1913) ; El Paso Natural Gas Co. v. Kysar Ins. Agency, Inc., 645 P.2d 442 (N.M. 1982) ; Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N.Y.S. 1073 (Super. Ct.) , aff'd, 112 N.Y.S. 924 (App. Div. 1908) ; 401 Boardwalk Corp. v. Gutzwiller, 368 N.Y.S.2d 122 (N.Y. City Ct. 1975) ; C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1423 (1955) .

(n114)Footnote 114. See Moe v. Sprankle, 221 S.W.2d 712 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1948) ; James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.50 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n115)Footnote 115. See, e.g., Barry v. Holmesley, 210 P. 318 (Ariz. 1922) ; Nate v. Galloway, 408 N.E.2d 1317 (Ind. Ct. App. 1980) ; Kuiken v. Garrett, 51 N.W.2d 149 (Iowa 1952) ; Moe v. Sprankle, 221 S.W.2d 712 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1948) ; Northern Terminals, Inc. v. Smith Grocery & Variety, Inc., 418 A.2d 22 (Vt. 1980) . See also Stevan v. Brown, 458 A.2d 466 (Md. Ct. App. 1983) ; Echo Consult. Servs., Inc. v. North Conway Bank, 669 A.2d 227 (N.H. 1995) . There is some authority for the proposition that the covenant of quiet enjoyment is breached when the landlord wrongfully initiates litigation that threatens to impair the tenant's possessory interest. See Kuiken v. Garrett, 51 N.W.2d 149 (Iowa 1952) (landlord maliciously initiated forcible entry and detainer actions); Kohl v. PNC Bank Nat. Ass'n, 912 A.2d 237 (Pa. 2006) (court states that suit by a landlord that substantially impairs a tenant's possessory interest, brought in bad faith, maliciously, or otherwise without probable cause and primarily for a purpose unrelated to seeking legal redress, constitutes a breach of the landlord's covenant of quiet enjoyment).

(n116)Footnote 116. See, e.g., Baltimore Butchers Abattoir & Live Stock Co. v. Union Rendering Co., 17 A.2d 130 (Md. 1941) ; Hannan v. Harper, 208 N.W. 255 (Wis. 1926) ; see also Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1 (1977) (tenant may continue with the lease and obtain legal and equitable relief); See also Branish v. NHP Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 694 A.2d 1106 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1997) (landlord issued "no trespassing" letter to tenant's boyfriend, stating that he was no longer permitted on the leased premises; tenant sued for a declaration that the letter was invalid; court concluded that the letter breached the landlord's implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, and it invalidated the letter).

(n117)Footnote 117. See Charles E. Burt, Inc. v. Seven Grand Corp., 163 N.E.2d 4 (Mass. 1959) . See also Stevan v. Brown, 458 A.2d 466 (Md. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n118)Footnote 118. See Cal. Civ. Code § 789.3 (prohibits residential landlords from, among other things, willfully cutting off utility service, changing locks or removing windows with intent to terminate the tenant's occupancy; permits tenant to recover actual damages, additional damages for each day the landlord remains in violation, attorneys' fees, and injunctive relief).

(n119)Footnote 119. See Dennison v. Marlowe, 744 P.2d 906 (N.M. 1987) ; Minjak, Co. v. Randolph, 528 N.Y.S.2d 554 (App. Div. 1988) ; East Haven Assocs., Inc. v. Gurian, 313 N.Y.S.2d 927 (City Ct. 1970) .

(n120)Footnote 120. See, e.g., East Haven Associates, Inc. v. Gurian, 313 N.Y.S.2d 927 (City Ct. 1970) (entire rent abated); Dennison v. Marlowe, 744 P.2d 906 (N.M. 1987) (partial abatement).

(n121)Footnote 121. See the discussion on this point in § 41.03(c)(3)(ii) of this chapter.

(n122)Footnote 122. 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases 29.301 at 1485 (3d ed. 1990). The same commentator noted that the "distinction is blurred because of the few cases and many dicta that indicate that there is no remedy for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment without an eviction." Id.

(n123)Footnote 123. Of course, the tenant must prove his or her damages, and, if injunctive relief is sought, must satisfy the normal standards for the awarding of injunctive relief.

(n124)Footnote 124. See Sir William Holdsworth, 7A History of English Law 252 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973); 1 Lionel A. Blundell and V.G. Wellings, Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 619 (26th ed. 1960).

(n125)Footnote 125. See Sir William Holdsworth, 7A History of English Law 252 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n126)Footnote 126. See Jones v. Lavington, 1 K.B. 253 (1903); 1 Lionel A. Blundell and V.G. Wellings, Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant 619-620 (26th ed. 1960).

(n127)Footnote 127. Restatement (Second) of Property § 4.1 (1) (1977).

(n128)Footnote 128. See id. Illustrations; Sandall v. Hoskins, 137 P.2d 819 (Utah 1943) (prior tenant).

(n129)Footnote 129. See, e.g., Bates v. Smith, 243 N.W. 829 (Mich. 1932) .

(n130)Footnote 130. See, e.g., Standard Live Stock Co. v. Pentz, 269 P. 645 (Cal. 1928) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.31 (3d ed. 2000).

(n131)Footnote 131. See, e.g., Casassa v. Smith, 91 N.E. 891 (Mass. 1910) ; In re O'Donnell, 147 N.E. 541 (N.Y.

1925) .

(n132)Footnote 132. See id. It has also been indicated that such an attornment must be accompanied by notice to the original landlord. See Mosher v. Cole, 70 N.W. 275 (Neb. 1897) .

(n133)Footnote 133. See Swan v. Stransham, 73 Eng. Rep. 570 (K.B. 1567).

(n134)Footnote 134. See James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.48 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n135)Footnote 135. See, e.g., Dupree v. Worthen Bank & Trust Co., 543 S.W.2d 465 (Ark. 1976) ; In re O'Donnell, 147 N.E. 541 (N.Y. 1925) ; Annotation, Life Tenant's Death as Affecting Rights Under Lease Given By Him, 14 A.L.R.4th 1054, 1083 (1982) .

(n136)Footnote 136. See, e.g., Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Childs Co., 130 N.E. 295 (N.Y. 1921) ; Walgreen Co. v. Moore, 173 A. 587 (N.J. Ch. 1934) ; see also Conference Cent., Ltd. v. TRC The Research Corp. of New England, 455 A.2d 857 (Conn. 1983) (mortgagee demanded, and tenant surrendered, possession; trial ordered on whether tenant had been constructively evicted.

(n137)Footnote 137. See, e.g., Markantonis v. Madlan Realty Corp., 186 N.E. 862 (N.Y. 1933) ; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Childs Co., 130 N.E. 295 (N.Y. 1921) ; Grant S. Nelson and Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 7.12 (2d ed. 1985); Annotation, Relation and Rights Inter Se of Purchaser Under Foreclosure of Mortgage and Tenant Under Lease Subsequent to Mortgage, 109 A.L.R. 447, 452 (1937) .

(n138)Footnote 138. See, e.g., Cornell Andrews Smelting Co. v. Boston & P.R. Corp., 89 N.E. 118 (Mass. 1909) ; Dolman v. United States Trust Co., 138 N.E.2d 784 (N.Y. 1956) .

(n139)Footnote 139. See Cornell Andrews Smelting Co. v. Boston & P.R. Corp., 89 N.E. 118 (Mass. 1909) ; Ellis v. Welch, 6 Mass. 246 (1810) .

(n140)Footnote 140. See James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.54 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n141)Footnote 141. See Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1442 (1955) .

(n142)Footnote 142. Compare Burofsky v. Turner, 175 N.E. 90 (Mass. 1931) (breach of covenant when landlord tore down building instead of making ordered repairs); with Ripps v. Kline, 275 P.2d 381 (Nev. 1954) (no breach of covenant where landlord compelled to demolish).

(n143)Footnote 143. See, e.g., McDowell v. Hyman, 48 P. 984 (Cal. 1897) ; Blomberg v. Evans, 138 S.E. 593 (N.C. 1927) ; Smith v. Nortz Lumber Co., 7 N.W.2d 435 (N.D. 1943) .

(n144)Footnote 144. See, e.g., Bowers v. Sells, 123 N.E.2d 194 (Ind. Ct. App. 1954) (landlord cooperated with eviction); Hannan v. Harper, 208 N.W. 255 (Wis. 1926) (landlord entered into land contract to sell a two family house to a fraternity).

(n145)Footnote 145. See, e.g., Milheim v. Baxter, 103 P. 376 (Colo. 1909) ; Phyfe v. Dale, 130 N.Y.S. 231 (N.Y. Super. 1911) ; Robert M. Schoenhaus, Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction by Another Tenant's Conduct, 1 A.L.R.4th 849, 857 (1980) .

(n146)Footnote 146. See, e.g., Colonial Court Apartments, Inc. v. Kern, 163 N.W.2d 770 (Minn. 1968) (excessive noise); Gottdiener v. Mailhot, 431 A.2d 851 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1981) (excessive noise).

(n147)Footnote 147. See, e.g., Thompson v. Harris, 452 P.2d 122 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1969) (unsanitary activities of neighboring tenant); Stewart v. Lawson, 165 N.W. 716 (Mich. 1917) (offensive language and other offensive conduct by tenants); see generally Robert M. Schoenhaus, Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction by Another Tenant's Conduct, 1 A.L.R.4th 849 (1980) .

(n148)Footnote 148. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1, cmt. d & Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n149)Footnote 149. See, e.g., Walker v. Clifford, 29 So. 588 (Ala. 1901) (possessory action); Schuler v. Bordelon, 177 P.2d 959 (Cal. Ct. App. 1947) (trespass); Kuriger v. Cramer, 498 A.2d 1331 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1985) (trespass).

(n150)Footnote 150. See, e.g., Kent v. Humphries, 281 S.E.2d 43 (N.C. 1981) (nuisance action by tenant based on noxious use by landlord of adjoining property).

(n151)Footnote 151. See, e.g., Mauala v. Milford Management Corp., 559 F. Supp 1000 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) ; Danyew v. Phelps, 676 P.2d 707 (Colo. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n152)Footnote 152. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.32 (3d ed. 2000); Sir William Holdsworth, 7A History of English Law 267, 270 (2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973).

(n153)Footnote 153. See, e.g., Automobile Supply Co. v. Scene In Automobile Supply Co., 340 Ill. 196, 172 N.E. 35 (Ill. 1930) ; Dolph v. Barry, 148 S.W. 196 (Mo. Ct. App. 1912) ; cf. Fifth Avenue Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579 (N.Y. 1917) (eviction as a defense to claim for rent does not depend upon a covenant for quiet enjoyment; it suspends the obligation to pay rent because it involves a failure of consideration for which rent is paid).

(n154)Footnote 154. See, e.g., Talbot v. Citizens Nat'l Bank of Evansville, 389 F.2d 207 (7th Cir. 1968) ; Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; 6 Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 890 (3d ed. 1962). In discussing the rule that excuses the tenant from paying rent when the tenant is evicted by the landlord, Williston observes that the rule "serves in some degree as a substitute for dependency of covenants in leases." 6 Samuel Williston, A Treatise on The Law of Contracts 891 (3d ed. 1962). Articles that discuss the concepts of independency and dependency of covenants in leases include: Edward Chase & E. Hunter Taylor, Jr., Landlord and Tenant: A Study in Property and Contract, 30 Vill. L. Rev. 571 (1985); John Forrester Hicks, The Contractual Nature of Real Property Leases, 24 BAYLOR L. REV. 443 (1972); John A. Humbach, The Common Law Conception of Leasing: Mitigation, Habitability, and Dependency of Covenants, 60 WASH. U. L.Q. 1213 (1983); William M. McGovern, Jr., Dependent Promises in the History of Leases and Other Contracts, 52 Tul. L. Rev. 659 (1978); Stephen A. Siegel, Is the Modern Lease a Contract or a Conveyance? A Historical Inquiry, 52 J. Urb. L. 649 (1975). Cf. Wesson v. Leone Enterprises, Inc., 774 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 2002) (court uses a mutually dependant covenant analysis and concludes that the landlord's breach of its covenant to keep roof in good repair allowed tenant to terminate the lease).

(n155)Footnote 155. See, e.g., Talbot v. Citizens Nat'l Bank of Evansville, 389 F.2d 207 (7th Cir. 1968) ; Giraud v. Milovich, 85 P.2d 182 (Cal. Ct. App. 1938) ; Smith v. McEnany, 48 N.E. 781 (Mass. 1897) .

(n156)Footnote 156. See, e.g., Smith v. McEnany, 48 N.E. 781 (Mass. 1897) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1, Reporter's Note 6 (1977).

(n157)Footnote 157. See Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Kernochan, 117 N.E. 579, 580 (N.Y. 1917) .

(n158)Footnote 158. See, e.g., Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188 (1883) .

(n159)Footnote 159. See Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 6.1 & cmt. b, 11.1 (1977).

(n160)Footnote 160. See Duhain v. Mermod, Jaccard & King Jewelry Co., 105 N.E. 657 (N.Y. 1914) .

(n161)Footnote 161. See id.; Smith v. McEnany, 48 N.E. 781 (Mass. 1897) .

(n162)Footnote 162. See, e.g., Walker's Case, 76 Eng. Rep. 676 (K.B. 1587); Dalston v. Reeve, 91 Eng. Rep. 948 (K.B. 1697); 1 J.H. Thomas, Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England 368 (1986); William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.32 (3d ed. 2000).

(n163)Footnote 163. See § 41.03(c)(6)(iii), below.

(n164)Footnote 164. Professor Max P. Rapacz has observed:

> It is submitted that speaking in terms of the obligation to pay rent being terminated is more in accord with actuality than saying that the rent is merely suspended. There seems to be no case indicating or holding that a tenant has a duty to return after an eviction, but we do have the contrary assertions that he is not obliged to return after the cause of the eviction has been removed. So it seems that the only meaning which the typical statement can have is that the tenant would be obliged to pay rent upon his voluntary return which practically never happens.

Max P. Rapacz, Origin and Evolution of Constructive Eviction in the United States, 1 De Paul L. Rev. 69, 87-88 (1951) (footnote omitted).

(n165)Footnote 165. See, e.g., Gateway Co. v. Charlotte Theaters, Inc., 297 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. 1961); Kulawitz v. Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co., 155 P.2d 24 (Cal. 1944) ; J.C. Penney Co. v. Birrell, 32 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1934) ; Charles E. Burt, Inc. v. Seven Grand Corp., 163 N.E.2d 4 (1959) ; Scott v. Prazma, 555 P.2d 571 (Wyo. 1976) . See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1 & Reporter's Note 6 (1977).

(n166)Footnote 166. See, e.g., Radinsky v. Weaver, 460 P.2d 218 (Colo. 1969) ; Suhr v. City of Scribner, 275 N.W.2d 596 (Neb. 1979) ; C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1454 (1955) .

(n167)Footnote 167. See, e.g., In re Strasburger, 30 N.E. 379 (N.Y. 1892) ; C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1455 (1955) .

(n168)Footnote 168. See, e.g., Thompson v. Poirier, 420 A.2d 297 (N.H. 1980) (moving expenses); Burdan v. Walton, 689 S.W.2d 543 (Ark. 1985) (damages for conversion of personal property); Queen v. Postell, 513 A.2d 812 (D.C. App. 1986) (loss of personal property); Johnson v. Snyder, 221 P.2d 164 (Cal. Ct. App. 1950) (loss of goodwill); C.S. Parnell, Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414, 1455-1459 (1955)

(n169)Footnote 169. See, e.g., Pierce v. Nash, 272 P.2d 938 (Cal. Ct. App. 1954) .

(n170)Footnote 170. See, e.g., Ciraolo v. Miller, 525 N.Y.S.2d 861 (App. Div. 1988) ; Pollock v. Morelli, 369 A.2d 458 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1976) .

(n171)Footnote 171. See, e.g., Albert Properties, Inc. v. Watkins, 237 S.E.2d 670 (Ga. Ct. App. 1977) ; Nate v. Galloway, 408 N.E.2d 1317 (Ind. Ct. App. 1980) ; Kuiken v. Garrett, 51 N.W.2d 149 (Iowa 1952) ; Suffolk Sports Ctr., Inc. v. Belli Constr. Corp., 628 N.Y.S.2d 952 (App. Div. 1995) .

(n172)Footnote 172. See discussion in § 41.03(c)(3)(ii) of this chapter.

(n173)Footnote 173. See City of New York v. Pike Realty Corp., 160 N.E. 359 (N.Y. 1928) ; James A. Casner, ed., 1 American Law of Property. § 3.52 (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952).

(n174)Footnote 174. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 6.1 (1977).

(n175)Footnote 175. Of course, the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment would take on a lesser significance, even in the commercial leasing context, if the court were willing to depart from traditional common law rules and allow tenants to terminate their leases in the event of landlord breach of a lease covenant, on the theory that lease covenants are mutually dependent. This approach was taken in Wesson v. Leone Enterprises, Inc., 774 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 2002) . In that case, a commercial tenant contended that the landlord's failure to repair a leaking roof resulted in a constructive eviction. The court rejected this claim because while the failure may have made the tenant's situation more inconvenient and expensive it did not render the premises untenantable. However, the court allowed the tenant to terminate the lease anyway. It used a mutually dependant covenant analysis and concluded that the landlord's breach of its covenant to keep roof in good repair allowed the tenant to terminate the lease. See also Richard Barton Enterprises, Inc. v. Tsern, 928 P.2d 368 (Utah 1996) 928 P.2d 368 (Utah 1996) . (Based on a dependency of covenants concept, the court permitted a commercial tenant to obtain a rent abatement to the extent that the landlord's breach of a repair covenant resulted in a diminution in the value of the leased premises). Cf. Matte v. Shippee Auto, Inc., 876 A.2d 167 (N.H. 2005) (Court declines to abandon the traditional rule of independent covenants in the commercial leasing context).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.04

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.04 Rights and Duties Relating to the Condition of the Leased Premises--The Traditional Rules.

§ 41.04(a) Initial Condition of the Premises.

§ 41.04(a)(1) The Traditional Caveat Emptor Rule.

A landlord who leases real property to a tenant conveys an estate in land. The traditional common law view was that the landlord made no implied warranty in connection with this conveyance as to the initial condition of the leased property or as to its fitness for the tenant's intended purpose. In the absence of an express warranty of suitability, the risk that the premises might not be suitable for the tenant's purpose was borne by the tenant. The prevailing rule, in short, was one of caveat emptor. n176

The caveat emptor rule arose in an agrarian era, when agricultural land, not buildings, represented the essential subject matter of a lease. With increased urbanization, this changed. In recent times, the traditional caveat emptor rule has been substantially eroded in a majority of jurisdictions by statutes and by court decisions that have recognized an implied warranty of habitability for residential tenancies. However, outside of the residential landlord-tenant context, and in jurisdictions that do not recognize a warranty of habitability with respect to residential leases, the traditional rule of caveat emptor generally prevails.

A tenant who is subject to the caveat emptor rule could reduce the risk that the premises might be unsuitable for the tenant's intended purpose by making a careful inspection of the premises. The tenant could also bargain with the landlord for an express warranty of suitability in the lease. In some instances, the tenant might also be able to take advantage of recognized exceptions to the caveat emptor rule. Those exceptions are considered below.

§ 41.04(a)(2) Exceptions to the Traditional Rule.

§ 41.04(a)(2)(i) Lease of Furnished House.

A few jurisdictions have recognized an exception to the caveat emptor rule when a tenant leases a furnished residence for a short term. n177 The exception, which typically arises in connection with the seasonal rental of a vacation dwelling, is usually justified on the ground that the parties intend the tenant to take immediate occupancy, and there will not be sufficient time for the tenant to inspect the premises to determine their suitability. n178 In jurisdictions that recognize this exception, the landlord impliedly warrants that the furnished premises will be initially suitable for tenant occupancy. n179

This "furnished house" exception to the caveat emptor rule is limited in several respects. In the first place, most jurisdictions have not adopted it. n180 Second, it applies only to short term leases. In the leading case of Ingalls v. Hobbs, n181 this period was described as one for "a few days, a few weeks, or months." It has also been said that the test for applying the exception is whether the lease is made for a temporary purpose. n182 The implied warranty that arises under the furnished house exception does not apply to minor inconveniences, n183 to conditions that arise after the execution of the lease, n184 or to unfurnished premises. n185

In the event the implied warranty is breached, the tenant is entitled to terminate the lease and to assert the breach as a defense in the landlord's action to recover rent. n186 It has also been held that the tenant will be able to recover money previously advanced to the landlord. n187 If a person is injured as a result of a defect covered by the warranty, the landlord may also be subject to liability in tort. n188

§ 41.04(a)(2)(ii) Fraud and Non-Disclosure.

The caveat emptor rule does not protect the landlord from a fraudulent misrepresentation to the tenant regarding the condition of the premises. n189 If the landlord misrepresents the condition of the premises, and the usual elements of actionable fraud are present, the tenant may be entitled to recover damages, to terminate the lease, or to assert the fraud as a defense to the landlord's action for rent. n190

The landlord is also under a duty to disclose latent defects or dangerous conditions on the premises, known to the landlord, that are not discoverable by ordinary inspection. n191 The landlord's failure to disclose is typically described as a fraudulent concealment, and may entitle the tenant to the same remedies mentioned above. n192 As discussed in § 41.09(b)(2) of this chapter, non-disclosure may also subject the landlord to personal injury liability.

§ 41.04(a)(2)(iii) Building Under Construction.

Another exception to the caveat emptor rule has been recognized by some courts when the lease restricts the premises to a specified use, and the lease is made before the landlord completes construction or alteration of improvements needed for that use. This circumstance has been found to give rise to an implied warranty on the part of the landlord that the premises will be suitable for the tenant's intended use. n193 The justification appears to be similar to that for the furnished house exception: the tenant is unable to fully inspect the leased premises at the time the lease is made.

§ 41.04(b) During the Lease Term.

The traditional common law rule was that, in the absence of a lease covenant to the contrary, the landlord was not obligated to maintain or repair the leased premises during the term of the lease. n194 This result was justified on the basis that the tenant had received a conveyance of a non-freehold estate that was subject to the tenant's exclusive control. n195 However, the landlord did have an obligation, sounding in tort, to maintain areas, such as common stairways and entrances, that remained within the landlord's control. n196

In the absence of a contrary agreement, it was the tenant, not the landlord, who had obligations with respect to the maintenance and repair of the leased premises during the term of the lease. These obligations arose under the doctrine of waste. n197 In order to avoid injury to the landlord's reversion, the tenant was, in general, obligated to make reasonable, ordinary, and necessary repairs to preserve the estate in the condition that existed at the beginning of the tenancy. The tenant could be required, for example, to repair dilapidated fences or structures, or to undertake efforts, such as roof repairs, to prevent deterioration of the property. However, the tenant was generally not obligated, under the doctrine of waste, to make repairs for ordinary wear and tear, to repair defects that existed at the beginning of the tenancy, or to rebuild a building destroyed by accidents or natural forces for which the tenant was not responsible. n198

§ 41.04(b)(1) Effect of Express Covenant to Repair.

Although the common law traditionally did not impose a duty on the landlord to maintain or repair the leased premises, such a duty could arise under a lease provision. The parties could include an express covenant by the landlord in the lease to maintain the leased premises or to make specified repairs. Violation of the covenant would expose the landlord to liability for damages, and sometimes to other consequences.

The language of the lease is obviously important to a determination of the existence and scope of a landlord repair covenant. Some lease provisions relating to repairs may not involve a covenant to repair at all. For example, a lease provision that permits the landlord to enter the leased premises and make repairs has been held not to amount to a promise by the landlord to make repairs. n199 Even when a lease does contain a covenant by the landlord to make repairs, it may be restricted to repairs of a specified type. n200 And a covenant to "repair" may not require a party to make "improvements" to a building, n201 or to "replace" elements of a building that have fallen into disrepair. n202

Breach by the landlord of a repair covenant has traditionally entitled the tenant to make the repair, if minor, and to sue the landlord for reimbursement. n203 In the case of a major repair, the tenant may do the same, or simply bring an action against the landlord for damages based on breach of the repair covenant. n204 Some courts have indicated that specific performances may be available as well, n205 but most courts have declined to allow that remedy. n206

The tenant's remedies for landlord breach of a repair covenant traditionally have not included rent withholding or termination of the lease. This followed from the common law concept that lease covenants are independent of each other, and that breach of a lease covenant by one party does not excuse performance by the other. An exception to the traditional concept of independence of lease covenants has been recognized, however, when the landlord's failure to make repairs deprives the tenant of the use and enjoyment of the leased premises to such an extent that the covenant of quiet enjoyment is breached. In this case, the tenant may vacate the premises and avoid liability for future rent. n207

It is appropriate, as well, to note that the Restatement offers a non traditional rule that, if adopted, would, in some circumstances, permit a tenant to terminate a lease based upon breach of a lease covenant by the landlord, where that breach has deprived the tenant of a significant inducement to the making of the lease. The Restatement offers this formulation:

> Except to the extent the parties to a lease validly agree otherwise, if the landlord fails to perform a valid promise contained in the lease to do, or to refrain from doing, something on the leased property or elsewhere, and as a consequence thereof, the tenant is deprived of a significant inducement to the making of the lease, and if the landlord does not perform his promise within a reasonable period of time after being requested to do so, the tenant may ... terminate the lease. n208

The parties may also provide for remedies in the lease. Thus, the parties may agree that the landlord is obligated to make certain repairs, and if the landlord fails to do so, the tenant may make the repairs and deduct the cost of those repairs from rent. n209 The parties may also agree that the tenant is entitled to terminate the lease. n210

Inasmuch as the tenant is in a better position than the landlord to know the condition of the leased premises during the term of the lease, the landlord's duty under a repair covenant has generally been subject to the condition that the tenant give notice of the condition requiring repair. n211 The landlord has also been entitled to a reasonable period of time following the notice in which to make the repair. n212 However, a court may conclude that notice is unnecessary if the landlord already knows of the need for the repair. n213

Damages for breach of an express covenant of repair have normally been equal to the difference in the rental value of the leased premises with and without the repairs. n214 However, some courts have awarded damages for the cost of repairs and for losses resulting from the landlord's breach of the repair covenant. n215 In some cases, the tenant's recovery has included special damages, such as lost profits. n216

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 176. See, e.g., Daly v. Wise, 30 N.E. 837 (N.Y. 1892) ; Anderson Drive In Theatre, Inc. v. Kirkpatrick, 110 N.E.2d 506 (Ind. Ct. App. 1953) .

(n2)Footnote 177. See, e.g., Ingalls v. Hobbs, 31 N.E. 286 (Mass. 1892) .

(n3)Footnote 178. See, e.g., Young v. Povich, 116 A. 26 (Me. 1922) ; Pines v. Perssion, 111 N.W.2d 409 (Wis. 1961) .

(n4)Footnote 179. See, e.g., id.

(n5)Footnote 180. By way of illustration, the North Carolina Supreme Court declined to recognize the exception in Conley v. Emerald Isle Realty, Inc. 513 S.E.2d 556 (N.C. 1999) . The Conley case involved personal injuries caused by a defect in an oceanfront vacation cottage that had been rented for two weeks. The court first concluded that the leased cottage was not covered by the North Carolina Residential Rental Agreements Act, which obligates landlords to keep leased premises in a "fit and habitable condition." It then said: "This Court has never adopted an implied warranty of suitability doctrine as an exception to our traditional landlord-tenant law, and we decline to do so now." 513 S.E.2d at 559 . However, after the Conley decision came down, the North Carolina legislature enacted a statutory warranty of habitability for the rental of vacation residential property. See N.C. Gen. Stat. 42A-31 (2000).

(n6)Footnote 181. 31 N.E. 286 (1892) .

(n7)Footnote 182. See Young v. Povich, 116 A. 26 (Me. 1922) .

(n8)Footnote 183. See Michtom v. Miller, 178 N.Y.S. 395 (Sup. Ct. 1919) .

(n9)Footnote 184. See, e.g., Davenport v. Squibb, 70 N.E.2d 793 (Mass. 1947) .

(n10)Footnote 185. See Ingalls v. Hobbs, 31 N.E. 286 (Mass. 1892) .

(n11)Footnote 186. Id.

(n12)Footnote 187. See Young v. Povich, 116 A. 26 (Me. 1922) .

(n13)Footnote 188. See discussion in § 41.09, below.

(n14)Footnote 189. See, e.g., Perkins v. Marsh, 37 P.2d 689 (Wash. 1934) ; Anderson Drive In Theatre, Inc. v. Kirkpatrick, 110 N.E.2d 506 (Ind. Ct. App. 1953) .

(n15)Footnote 190. See, e.g., Highmont Music Corp. v. J.M. Hoffman Co., 155 A.2d 363 (Pa. 1959) (damages); Daly v. Wise, 30 N.E. 837 (N.Y. 1892) (rescission and rent defense).

(n16)Footnote 191. See, e.g., Steefel v. Rothschild, 72 N.E.112 (N.Y. 1904) ; Perkins v. Marsh, 37 P.2d 689 (Wash. 1934) .

(n17)Footnote 192. See, e.g., Capitol Amusement Co. v. Anheuser Busch, Inc., 30 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1934) (rent defense); Service Oil Co. v. White, 542 P.2d 652 (Kan. 1975) (damages).

(n18)Footnote 193. See, e.g., The Hardman Estate v. McNair, 111 P. 1059 (Wash. 1910) ; Panagos v. Fox, 16 N.W.2d 700 (Mich. 1944) .

(n19)Footnote 194. See, e.g., Chambers v. Lowe, 169 A. 912 (Conn. 1933) ; Divines v. Dickinson, 174 N.W. 8 (Iowa 1919) .

(n20)Footnote 195. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.13 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n21)Footnote 196. See discussion in § 41.09(b)(1), below.

(n22)Footnote 197. The doctrine is discussed in chapter 70, below.

(n23)Footnote 198. See §§ 70.08(b)(3)(A) and 70.08(b)(3)(B), below.

(n24)Footnote 199. See, e.g., Palimas v. Aress Realty Co., 37 A.2d 243 (Conn. 1944) .

(n25)Footnote 200. See, e.g., Piano & Organ Center, Inc. v. Southland Bonded Warehouse, Inc., 228 S.E.2d 615 (Ga. Ct. App. 1976) .

(n26)Footnote 201. See Prudential Ins. Co. v. L.A. Mart, 68 F.3d 370 (9th Cir. 1995) . In the Prudential case, two engineering firms hired by the landlord had recommended seismic upgrading of an existing building. The landlord wanted the tenant to pay the costs of the upgrade. The lease contained provisions requiring the tenant to keep the premises in good condition and to make necessary repairs and replacements. But the government had not ordered a seismic upgrade, and the structure was in compliance with all applicable building and safety requirements. The court concluded that in the absence of a government order to perform specified seismic upgrades, it could not require the tenant to pay for the costs of the upgrade desired by the landlord.

(n27)Footnote 202. See Seoane v. Drug Empor., Inc., 457 S.E.2d 93 (Va. 1995) . The commercial lease in the Seoane case obligated the landlord to make repairs. When the landlord did not respond to tenant advice that roof and exterior heating and air conditioning units had fallen into repair and should be replaced, the tenant replaced them and then withheld rent in order to recover the costs of replacement. The Virginia Supreme Court said that the landlord's "repair" duty did not extend to "replacement" of the building elements. It also concluded that the lower court had erred in crediting the replacement costs against the tenant's liability for rent, and in denying the landlord possession of the premises. See also Miller v. Gammon & Sons, Inc., 67 S.W.3d 613 (Mo. Ct. App. 2001) (lease provision requiring tenant to keep premises in good repair did not require tenant to resurface the parking lot, which the court regarded as a "structural" repair).

(n28)Footnote 203. See, e.g., Young v. Berman, 131 S.W. 62 (Ark. 1910) .

(n29)Footnote 204. See, e.g., id.; See Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant Upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 1448 (1924) .

(n30)Footnote 205. See, e.g., Continental & Vogue Health Studios, Inc. v. Abra Corp., 120 N.W.2d 835 (Mich. 1963) .

(n31)Footnote 206. See, e.g., Beck v. Allison, 56 N.Y. 366 (1874) ; Darnall v. Day, 37 N.W.2d 277 (Iowa 1949) .

(n32)Footnote 207. See, e.g., Talbott v. English, 59 N.E. 857, 860 (Ind. 1901) .

(n33)Footnote 208. Restatement (Second) of Property 7.1 (1977). The Restatement approach is discussed more fully in 41.07 of this chapter.

(n34)Footnote 209. See, e.g., Dayton Hudson Corp. v. Macerich Real Estate Co., 751 F.2d 219 (8th Cir. 1984) ; Edith Invest. Co. v. Fair Drug, Inc., 617 S.W.2d 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1981) .

(n35)Footnote 210. See, e.g., Verges v. Life Ins. Co. of Va., 485 So. 2d 616 (La. Ct. App. 1986) ; Arnett v. U.S.X. Corp. 763 S.W.2d 169 (Mo. Ct. App. 1988) .

(n36)Footnote 211. See, e.g., Woodbury Co. v. Williams Tackaberry Co., 148 N.W. 639 (Iowa 1914) .

(n37)Footnote 212. See, e.g., Tyson v. Weil, 53 So. 912 (Ala. 1910) .

(n38)Footnote 213. See, e.g., Rittenberg v. Donohoe Constr. Co., 426 A.2d 338 (D.C. 1981) .

(n39)Footnote 214. See, e.g., Williams v. Fenster, 137 A. 406 (N.J. 1926) ; Gordon v. Reinheimer, 29 P.2d 596 (Okla. 1934) ; Annotation Rights and Remedies of Tenant Upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 1448 (1938) .

(n40)Footnote 215. See, e.g., Cato Ladies Modes of N.C., Inc. v. Pope, 203 S.E.2d 405 (N.C. Ct. App. 1974) .

(n41)Footnote 216. See Mills v. Ruppert, 333 P.2d 818 (Cal. Ct. App. 1959) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.05

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.05 Rights and Duties Relating to the Condition of the Leased Premises--Departures from the Traditional Rules.

§ 41.05(a) Introduction.

It has been frequently observed that the traditional rules with respect to the condition and repair of leased premises arose in an agrarian society in which the use of land rather than improvements was the principal object of the lease, and in which the typical tenant, a sturdy farmer, was quite capable of making the simple repairs that might be required. Increased urbanization and technological advances have, over time, considerably changed both the principal object of the lease and the extent of the burden of repair. Modern residential tenants are more interested in adequate housing than in arable land. And the modern tenant is generally inexperienced in performing maintenance work on mechanical and electrical equipment associated with modern urban dwellings. Consequently, application of the traditional rules regarding the condition of the leased premises can have harsh results.

Changed needs and circumstances have contributed to legislative and judicial efforts to reform the traditional common law rules regarding the condition of leased premises at the outset of the tenancy, and with respect to maintenance and repair during the lease term. Statutory housing codes represented an early legislative effort to establish and enforce standards for residential dwellings. Other legislation permitted tenants to withhold rent or to make repairs to leased premises and to deduct the cost of repairs from rent when applicable housing standards were violated. A few courts utilized the contract doctrine of illegality to assist tenants who were involved in disputes with landlords over poor housing conditions. More recently, residential landlord tenant law has been revolutionized by the adoption of an implied warranty of habitability on the part of residential landlords.

But the traditional rules must not be ignored. They continue to apply, at least to some extent, to residential leases in jurisdictions that have not recognized the implied warranty of habitability. And, in the absence of lease provisions to the contrary, the traditional rules generally continue to prevail outside the residential landlord-tenant context.

§ 41.05(b) Housing Codes.

Housing codes represent a significant legislative departure from the traditional common law concept that the landlord had no obligation with respect to the condition of the leased premises. These codes generally establish minimum standards for human habitation by regulating the following aspects of subject dwelling units: 1) structural elements, such as walls and roofs; 2) facilities, such as sinks, toilets, electrical outlets, and heating fixtures; 3) services, such as heat, electricity, water, and sewage disposal; and 4) occupancy limits. Housing codes also provide enforcement mechanisms to deal with code violations. n217

The New York Tenement House Law of 1867 is regarded as the pioneer of modern housing codes. It required lodging houses and specified multi unit dwellings in New York City to have watertight roofs, fire escapes, refuse containers, ventilators, adequate chimneys, and "good and sufficient water closets or privies." n218 The Metropolitan Board of Health was identified as the enforcement agency for compliance with the legislation, indicating that the principal purpose of the statute was to promote public health. n219 Other early housing codes were also enacted to combat the perceived threat to public health presented by dilapidated and crowded tenements. n220 Today, housing codes are in effect in thousands of communities, and several states have state wide housing codes. n221

Until recently, housing codes did not provide for enforcement by the tenants themselves. Instead, government agencies were commissioned to enforce the code provisions against landlords. These agencies were typically charged with the duty to make inspections, to issue notices of code violations, and to conduct hearings regarding violations. If the landlord did not bring the building up to code standards within a specified period, the government agency was typically authorized to bring a criminal action, or to obtain an order for the vacation or demolition of the building. Some jurisdictions provided the government agencies with additional enforcement tools. These included authorization to directly undertake needed repairs; or authorization to sue for an injunction, for the imposition of civil penalties, or for the appointment of a receiver to take over building operations. n222

It has been said that substantial success in the application of traditional modes of housing code enforcement probably would have made the 1960's and 1970's "revolution" in landlord-tenant law unnecessary. n223 However, government enforcement of housing codes has been regarded as ineffective, for a variety of reasons. One problem with many housing code administrative remedies is that they require personal jurisdiction over the owner of a non complying structure. Obtaining jurisdiction has sometimes been rendered difficult by the practice of placing title to low income apartments in corporations whose officers and places of business cannot be located and whose agents cannot identify their principals. n224 Even when personal jurisdiction can be obtained, it has been suggested that an order to vacate the premises could play into the hands of a landlord who wishes to get rid of bothersome tenants without going through the eviction process. n225

Additional reasons for the ineffectiveness of administrative housing code enforcement have been said to include: understaffing of enforcement agencies, corruption of government officials, continuances granted by courts to encourage eventual code compliance, lack of enthusiasm by prosecutors for code enforcement cases, frequent granting of variances for non compliance, and the imposition of small fines on landlords. n226

§ 41.05(c) Repairs Required by the Government.

In addition to housing codes, government units have adopted a variety of health and safety ordinances and regulations relating to the condition of commercial and residential structures. Government agencies sometimes order building repairs or alterations to be made based on legislative or regulatory requirements. Following inspection of a structure, for example, a government agency might order a roof to be repaired, a stairway to be widened, an additional exit to be created, or fire control sprinklers to be added, in order to bring the structure into compliance with applicable health or safety ordinances or regulations. When the building in question is leased, it may not be clear from the lease who, as between the landlord and the tenant, will be responsible for making the required repairs or alterations.

The allocation of the duty to make the changes or alterations generally depends on the intention of the parties, as expressed in the lease, or, if the lease is silent, upon the presumed intention of the parties determined in light of the circumstances. n227 In attempting to discern the presumed intention of the parties, courts have considered such factors as the nature of the government ordered repair or alteration, its cost, the reason why the repair or alteration has been ordered, and the remaining length of the lease term. n228

Many of the reported cases are ones in which the tenant has generally covenanted to make repairs, but the lease covenant does not clearly deal with changes ordered by a government agency. In that situation, the tenant has usually been found to be responsible for complying with orders that involve the making of ordinary repairs. n229 However, when the changes have involved substantial alterations to a building, or repairs to structural parts of a building, the landlord, not the tenant, has generally been found to be responsible for the changes, unless the changes were ordered because of the particular use that the tenant makes of the leased premises. n230 The results have been similar when the tenant has entered into a general covenant to comply with laws and regulations applicable to the premises. n231 A few courts have indicated that the general common law rule that the landlord is not obligated to make repairs during the term of the lease applies even with respect to repairs required by public authorities. n232

A landlord who is obligated to make government-ordered repairs or alterations, and who fails to do so, may, in addition to incurring administrative or criminal penalties, violate the covenant of quiet enjoyment. Several courts have permitted the tenant to vacate the leased premises, and, on a constructive eviction theory, to avoid further liability to the landlord, when the landlord did not comply with a government order to make changes in the leased premises. n233

Landlords and tenants may also be obligated to make alterations to the premises under legislation prohibiting discrimination against physically disabled individuals. Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act n234 requires modifications of some existing buildings to accommodate access by persons with disabilities. Among other things, the Act requires the removal of "architectural barriers" from existing places of "public accommodation," where the removal is "readily achievable." n235 A Rule implementing the Act provides that both landlords and tenants are subject to these requirements, but that the parties may allocate compliance responsibility between themselves by lease or other contract. n236 The Rule itself does not designate which party would be responsible for compliance in the absence of an agreed allocation of responsibility; however, an "Analysis of the Rule" prepared by the Department of Justice suggests that the landlord would normally be responsible for compliance with respect to common areas, while the tenant would normally be responsible with respect to "its own place of public accommodation." n237 As a practical matter, where leased premises are subject to the Act, the parties should consider how responsibilities under the Act should be allocated and provide for those allocations in their lease.

§ 41.05(d) Rent Withholding Legislation.

In an effort to improve compliance with housing codes, beginning in the 1960s, many legislatures enacted statutes that provided tenants with private remedies for landlord housing code violations. The principal remedy was an authorization for the tenant to withhold rent from the landlord. n238

Rent withholding had actually been a feature of earlier legislation, but the remedy did not have much impact in prior years. Statutes enacted in Connecticut, in 1905, and Iowa, in 1919, provided that the landlord's failure to obtain a certificate of compliance with the housing code would bar an action by the landlord to recover rent from the tenant or to evict the tenant for nonpayment of rent. However, neither statute saw much use. n239 A similar statute was enacted in New York in 1929, but it has received little use since the adoption of more effective rent withholding legislation in the 1960s. n240

Rent withholding statutes enacted in the 1960s and in later years typically authorize tenant rent withholding during the existence of substantial violations of the applicable housing code. In order to justify rent withholding, most of the statutes require the tenant to show that an official inspection of the dwelling unit has been made and that the inspector reported one or more housing code violations to the enforcement agency. n241 In addition, several statutes require a prior judicial determination of substantial code violation before rent may be withheld. n242 If a prior judicial determination is required, the statutes typically provide that the tenant or a housing code enforcement agency may bring the action to establish the basis for rent withholding. n243 Some statutes provide that the government welfare agency that distributes housing funds to welfare recipients may withhold funds from landlords if the leased premises are in an unhealthful or unsafe condition. n244

Modern rent withholding statutes usually provide for rental payments to be escrowed in some manner. n245 Most statutes also provide that escrowed funds may be used to pay for repair of the premises. n246 The landlord normally has the right to receive unexpended funds following the making of the repairs, but this right is sometimes limited. For example, the Pennsylvania statute allows the landlord to receive unexpended funds only if the leased premises are certified to be "fit for human habitation" within six months of the initial unfitness certification. If a fitness certification is not obtained within the deadline, the funds are to be distributed to the tenant or they may be applied to leasehold repairs or payment for leasehold utility services. n247

Most statutes contain provisions protecting tenants against landlord retaliation for the assertion of statutory rights. n248 Some statutes that provide for rent withholding also provide for additional tenant remedies for substandard housing, such as rent abatement and injunctive relief. n249

Commentators have questioned the effectiveness of rent withholding legislation in improving the habitability of leased dwelling units. n250 One of the concerns is delay. As noted above, most rent withholding legislation requires, as a predicate to withholding, that the leased premises be inspected by a government official and be certified to be out of compliance with code requirements before a tenant can withhold rent. Even though the conditions of the dwelling may be unhealthy or dangerous, delay in inspection or certification, or both, will mean delay in the exercise of the tenant's rent withholding remedy. Potential problems of delay are even greater if the applicable statute requires the tenant to bring suit against the landlord before rent may be withheld. Even when rents are withheld, they may be insufficient to rectify substandard housing problems. n251

Rent withholding legislation has generally survived landlord claims that the legislation violates constitutional due process and equal protection standards, or claims that the legislation unconstitutionally impairs contracts. n252

§ 41.05(e) Receivership Statutes.

If the landlord does not fulfill the obligation to maintain the leased premises in accordance with applicable legal standards, a receivership statute may permit a tenant or a government official to petition the court to have the property operated by a receiver. The receivership remedy represents an extension of the rent withholding and escrow remedies featured in rent withholding legislation. n253

If appointed, the receiver will not take title to the landlord's property, but the receiver will manage the property, collect the rents, and apply the rent money to repairs, to rehabilitation of the property, and to other purposes in accordance with priorities specified in the statute. n254 Because rental income may be insufficient to repair or rehabilitate the property, some statutes permit the receiver to borrow money to accomplish approved purposes, and to secure the borrowing by encumbering the property. n255

While receivership has been described as a useful tool for helping to meet the housing needs of low income people, n256 its benefits for the individual tenant may be limited. Tenants may not be included within the category of individuals who can actually initiate receivership proceedings. n257 Some statutes require the petitioner to allege deficiencies that amount to a public nuisance. n258

§ 41.05(f) Judicial Application of the Illegal Lease Theory.

Another departure from traditional common law rules relating to the condition of leased premises is based on the contract doctrine of illegality. n259] The seminal case is Brown v. Southall Realty Co. n260 In that case, a residential tenant asserted, as a defense to the landlord's eviction action for nonpayment of rent, that no rent was due because the leased premises had been in violation of applicable housing regulations prior to the signing of the lease, and that the landlord had known of the violations. The District of Columbia Court of Appeals agreed with this contention. Reversing a judgment in favor of the landlord, the court held that the lease was void as an illegal contract, because it violated housing regulations that, among other things, prohibited the renting of "any habitation" unless it was in a "clean, safe, and sanitary condition, in repair, and free from rodents or vermin." n261 Since the lease was illegal, and void, the landlord could not enforce it against the tenant.

Subsequent decisions by the District of Columbia courts further developed the Brown v. Southall doctrine. It was held that application of the doctrine did not depend on actual knowledge by the landlord of housing code violations before entering into the lease; it was enough that the landlord should have known of the violations. n262 However, application of the doctrine was limited to violations that substantially affected habitability, n263 and that were in existence at the beginning of the tenancy. n264 Although the landlord was not entitled to rent under a void lease, it was held that the landlord could recover the reasonable value of the premises when occupied. n265

Although the Brown v. Southall doctrine does provide a tenant with a private remedy for some housing code violations, its usefulness is somewhat limited. To the extent that the doctrine applies only when the housing code defects exist at the beginning of the tenancy, the doctrine would be of little assistance to tenants whose premises become uninhabitable after the lease commences. Moreover, the doctrine does not provide for rent withholding as such; once application of the doctrine results in a conclusion that the lease is void, the landlord should be able to evict a tenant who does not pay rent. However, the landlord's eviction ability may be limited by application of the separate doctrine of retaliatory eviction. n266

The Brown v. Southall doctrine has enjoyed only limited application outside of the District of Columbia. n267 The Supreme Court of Wisconsin declined to apply the doctrine in the housing code enforcement context, reasoning that the legislature had contemplated only administrative enforcement of the applicable housing code. n268 In any event, the doctrine seems to have been eclipsed by judicial recognition and statutory adoption of the implied warranty of habitability.

§ 41.05(g) 19th Century Fitness and Repair Legislation.

Several states adopted legislation in the 19th century that diverged from traditional common law concepts by requiring the landlord to deliver the leased premises in a condition fit for the tenant's intended use and to make repairs during the lease term. Statutes in Louisiana and Georgia were clearly based on civil law sources. The ultimate source for the other early legislation may have been the civil law as well. n269

§ 41.05(g)(1) The Louisiana Civil Code.

The earliest, and most expansive, American legislation of this type was adopted in Louisiana. Based on civil law sources that considered a lease to be a contract, the Louisiana Civil Code of 1808 imposed significant obligations on the lessor with respect to the initial suitability and continued maintenance of leased property. The key provisions continue to be found in the current Louisiana Civil Code.

Since 1808, the Louisiana Civil Code has required the lessor to deliver the leased property in "good condition." n270 The 1808 Civil Code also required the lessor to "maintain the thing in a condition such as to serve for the use for which it is hired." n271 It also required the lessor to guarantee the leased property against "vices and defects of the thing which may prevent its being used." n272 Since 1825, this guarantee by the lessor has clearly applied both to vices and defects that exist at the time the lease is made and to those that arise later on, with the exception of vices and defects that are the fault of the lessee. n273 The lessor has, since 1808, also been required to make necessary repairs during the continuance of the lease. n274 Some repairs, such as repairs of locks and accidentally broken window glass, were allocated to the

lessee. n275

The lessee's remedies for the lessor's breach of lease obligations have, since 1808, included damages n276 and, in some circumstances, lease dissolution. n277 The 1825 Civil Code added an important lessee remedy that continues to be available in Louisiana: if the lessor does not make all required repairs after being called upon to do so, the lessee may make the repairs and deduct the price from the rent, on proving that the price is just and reasonable and that the repairs are "indispensable." n278

The provisions of the Louisiana Civil Code referred to in this section apply to all leases, not just to leases of residential property.

§ 41.05(g)(2) Georgia Legislation.

Georgia legislation has also been influenced by civil law concepts. Since 1863, Georgia statutes have provided that, in the absence of a contrary agreement, a lease for fewer than five years is presumed to create a usufruct, and a lease for five years or longer is presumed to create an estate for years. n279 In the case of a usufruct, a civil law concept regarding repairs is applicable, with the consequence that the landlord is obligated to keep the premises in repair. n280 In the case of an estate for years, a common law concept is applicable: the tenant is liable for repairs necessary for the preservation and protection of the property. n281

The Georgia statute providing for the application of the civil law to a usufruct has long been construed to require the landlord to lease the property in a condition reasonably fit for its intended purpose, if full rent is reserved. n282 Tenant remedies for breach of the landlord's statutory obligations have been held to include damages, rent reduction or recoupment, and the right to repair the premises and deduct the cost of the repairs from rent. n283

The usufruct concept under Georgia law is not limited to residential tenancies.

§ 41.05(g)(3) Legislation in Other States.

Other states that adopted 19th century legislation imposing warranty and repair obligations on landlords were influenced, directly or indirectly, by a proposed civil code for New York drafted by David Dudley Field. n284 In 1872, California adopted legislation, based on Field Code provisions, that obligated the lessor of a building intended for human occupancy, "to put it into a condition fit for such occupation, and repair all subsequent dilapidations thereof, which render it untenantable." n285 The legislation also provided that if the lessor did not make repairs for which the lessor was responsible within a reasonable time after notice, the lessee could make the repairs and deduct the cost of doing so from the rent. n286 Statutory amendments limited the repair and deduct remedy to repair costs that did not exceed one month's rent. The lessee was also permitted to vacate the premises and to be discharged from lease obligations. n287 Early legislation in Montana, Oklahoma, North Dakota, and South Dakota was based, in turn, on the provisions of the California Civil Code referenced above. n288

Modern legislation has substantially changed many of the Field Code influenced statutes. In Montana and Oklahoma, the statutory provisions have been superseded by the adoption of comprehensive landlord-tenant legislation based on the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n289 In California, North Dakota, and South Dakota, the statutes have been amended to provide greater protections to residential tenants. n290 For example, the amended California legislation provides that a dwelling will be "deemed untenantable" if it substantially lacks such elements as: 1) plumbing or gas facilities, maintained in good working order; 2) an approved water supply, capable of producing hot and cold running water; 3) heating facilities, maintained in good working order; and 4) electrical lighting and related wiring and equipment, all maintained in good working order. If the premises become untenantable, and the landlord does not make needed repairs within a reasonable time after notice, the tenant may either vacate the premises, and thereby be relieved of further lease obligations, or undertake needed repairs and deduct the cost of the repairs from future rent. The landlord is prohibited from retaliating against the tenant for the exercise of statutory rights. An agreement that waives or modifies the statutory rights of a tenant is void as contrary to public policy with respect to any condition that renders the premises untenantable. n291

The California amendments have also provided protections to landlords. The amended legislation requires a residential tenant to keep the occupied portion of the leased premises clean and sanitary; to properly use all gas, electrical, and plumbing fixtures; to properly dispose of rubbish and waste; and not to permit persons on the premises with the tenant's permission to willfully destroy or damage the premises. A substantial breach of the tenant's statutory obligations will bar the tenant from utilizing the repair and deduct remedy. It may also relieve the landlord from the obligation to make repairs. n292 The amended legislation retains the provision limiting the cost of repairs made under the repair and deduct remedy to one month's rent, and it also limits tenant recourse to the remedy to not more than twice in a twelve month period. n293 The limitation on the cost of repair, in particular, means that the repair and deduct remedy will be of little utility to a tenant faced with substantial defects in the leased premises.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 217. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 40, 49, 56 (1976).

(n2)Footnote 218. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 40, 41, 42 (1976).

(n3)Footnote 219. See id. at 42.

(n4)Footnote 220. See id.

(n5)Footnote 221. See id. at 44.

(n6)Footnote 222. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.37 (3d ed. 2000).

(n7)Footnote 223. See Roger A. Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urban L. Ann. 3, 15 (1979).

(n8)Footnote 224. See Roger A. Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urban L. Ann. 3, 16 (1979).

(n9)Footnote 225. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 49, 50 (1976).

(n10)Footnote 226. See id.

(n11)Footnote 227. See, e.g., 4370 Park Ave. Corp. v. Hunter Paper Co., 171 N.Y.S.2d 358 (Sup. Ct. 1958) , aff'd, 174 N.Y.S.2d 949 (App. Div. 1958) ; Cf. Fresh Cut, Inc. v. Fazli, 650 N.E.2d 1126 (Ind. 1995) (court considers whether a landlord may, by written agreement, shift responsibility to a tenant for compliance with a municipal ordinance that requires an owner of commercial property to maintain a fire prevention sprinkler system; court concludes that, on the record before it, that there is no public policy impediment to such an agreement).

(n12)Footnote 228. See, e.g., Gaddis v. Consolidated Freightways, Inc., 398 P.2d 749 (Or. 1965) .

(n13)Footnote 229. See, e.g., Friedman v. Le Noir, 241 P.2d 779 (Ariz. 1952) .

(n14)Footnote 230. See, e.g., Taylor v. Finnigan, 76 N.E. 203 (Mass. 1905) ; see generally C.T. Drechsler, Annotation, Who, As Between Landlord and Tenant, Must Make, or Bear Expense of, Alteration, Improvements, or Repairs Ordered by Public Authorities, 22 A.L.R.3d 521 (1968) .

(n15)Footnote 231. See C.T. Drechsler, Annotation, Who, As Between Landlord and Tenant, Must Make, or Bear Expense of, Alteration, Improvements, or Repairs Ordered by Public Authorities, 22 A.L.R.3d 521 (1968) ; See also Brown v. Green, 884 P.2d 55 (Cal. 1994) (states the general rule; identifies several factors relevant to the allocation of responsibility for compliance with government orders; concludes that tenant is responsible for abatement of asbestos hazard under the circumstances); Brown v. Green, 884 P.2d 55 (Cal. 1994);. Hadian v. Schwartz, 884 P.2d 46 (Cal. 1994) (landlord responsible for complying with seismic reconstruction order); Wolf v. 2539 Realty Assocs., 560 N.Y.S.2d 24 (App. Div. 1990) (lease provisions requiring tenant compliance with laws, regulations, and government orders do not apply to abatement of asbestos hazard).

(n16)Footnote 232. See, e.g., Wall Estate Co. v. Standard Box Co., 128 P. 1020 (Cal. Ct. App. 1912) .

(n17)Footnote 233. See, e.g., Magnolia Warehouses v. Morton Realty Co., 117 S.E.2d 552 (Ga. Ct. App. 1960) ; Scott v. Prazma, 555 P.2d 571 (Wyo. 1976) .

(n18)Footnote 234. 42 U.S.C. §§ 12181-12189.

(n19)Footnote 235. See 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(iv). The Act contains a long list of "private entities" that are considered "public accommodations," so long as the operations of those entities "affect commerce." The list includes, but is not limited to: places of lodging (such as hotels and motels), establishments serving food or drink (such as restaurants and bars), public gathering places (such as auditoriums and convention centers), sales or retail establishments (such as shopping centers and retail stores), and service establishments (such as banks, medical offices, and hospitals). See 42 U.S.C. § 12181(7). Title III has other provisions that apply to new construction and to alterations in public accommodations and commercial facilities. See 42 U.S.C. § 12183.

(n20)Footnote 236. See 28 C.F.R. § 36.201(b) . Issues with respect to the allocation of compliance responsibility are discussed in: Karen E. Field, The Americans with Disabilities Act "Readily Achievable" Requirement for Barrier Removal: A Proposal for the Allocation of Responsibility Between Landlord and Tenant, 15 Cardozo L. Rev. 569 (1993); Michael F. Jones, Commercial Leases Under the Americans with Disabilities Act, 22 Real Est. L.J. 185 (1994); Gabrielle P. Whelan, The "Public Access" Provisions of Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act: A Guide for Commercial Landlords and Tenants, 34 Santa Clara L. Rev. 215 (1993).

(n21)Footnote 237. See 28 C.F.R. Pt. 36, App. B § 36.201. See also Article 9 of the UCC, and the articles referenced in the previous footnote.

(n22)Footnote 238. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 , 25 (1979).

(n23)Footnote 239. See 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 , 23 (1979).

(n24)Footnote 240. See 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 , 24 (1979).

(n25)Footnote 241. See 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 , 25 (1979).

(n26)Footnote 242. See, e.g., Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.570; N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:42-88.

(n27)Footnote 243. See, e.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.510; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42-88.

(n28)Footnote 244. See, e.g., N.Y. Social Services Law § 143-b.

(n29)Footnote 245. See, e.g., R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11 (code enforcement agency); Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570 (clerk of court).

(n30)Footnote 246. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42- 92.

(n31)Footnote 247. See 35 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1700-1.

(n32)Footnote 248. See, e.g., 35 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 1700-1.

(n33)Footnote 249. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.395 et seq. (rent abatement); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 125.536 (damages and injunctive relief).

(n34)Footnote 250. See, e.g., Thomas M. Quinn and Earl Phillips, The Law of Landlord and Tenant: A Critical Evaluation of the Past with Guidelines for the Future, 38 Fordham L. Rev. 225, 242 49 (1969); Tenant Rent Strikes, 3 Colum. J. of Law and Social Problems 1 (1967).

(n35)Footnote 251. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.43 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n36)Footnote 252. See Jonathan M. Purver, Annotation, Validity and Construction of Statute or Ordinance Authorizing Withholding or Payment into Escrow of Rent for Period During Which Premises Are Not Properly Maintained By Landlord, 40 A.L.R.3d 821 (1971) .

(n37)Footnote 253. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.44 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n38)Footnote 254. See, e.g., Ind. Stat. Ann. § 36-7-9-20.

(n39)Footnote 255. See, e.g., Ind. Stat Ann. § 36-7-9-20; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 125.535.

(n40)Footnote 256. See Albert Rosen, Receivership: A Useful Tool for Helping to Meet the Housing Needs of Low Income People, 3 Harv. Civ. Rights -- Civ. Lib. L. Rev. 311 (1968).

(n41)Footnote 257. See Albert Rosen, Receivership: A Useful Tool for Helping to Meet the Housing Needs of Low Income People, 3 Harv. Civ. Rights -- Civ. Lib. L. Rev. 311, 335-36 (1968)

(n42)Footnote 258. See, e.g., Ind. Stat. Ann. § 36-7-9-20; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.530.

(n43)Footnote 259. The doctrine is discussed in chapter 40. See § 40.16.

(n44)Footnote 260. 237 A.2d 834 (D.C. 1968) .

(n45)Footnote 261. Id. at 836 .

(n46)Footnote 262. See Diamond Hous. Corp. v. Robinson, 257 A.2d 492 (D.C. 1969) .

(n47)Footnote 263. See Reese v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 259 A.2d 112 (D.C. 1969) .

(n48)Footnote 264. See Saunders v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 245 A.2d 836 (D.C. 1968) , rev'd on other grounds, sub nom. Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir.) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) . It should be noted that the District of Columbia housing regulations have been amended to permit the illegal contract defense to apply to housing code violations that arise after the beginning of the tenancy. See D.C. Municipal Regulations tit. 14 § 302.1.

(n49)Footnote 265. See William J. Davis, Inc. v. Slade, 271 A.2d 412 (D.C. 1970) .

(n50)Footnote 266. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) . The retaliatory eviction doctrine is discussed in § 41.08 of this chapter.

(n51)Footnote 267. See, e.g., King v. Moorehead, 495 S.W.2d 65 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973) ; Glyco v. Schultz, 289 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1972) .

(n52)Footnote 268. See, e.g., Posnanski v. Hood, 174 N.W.2d 528 (Wis. 1970) .

(n53)Footnote 269. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 51 (1979).

(n54)Footnote 270. The 1808 Code also required the thing to be delivered "free from any repairs," La. Civ. Code of 1808, p. 374 art. 18. Article 2684 of the current Civil Code requires the lessor to deliver the thing "in good condition suitable for the purpose for which it was leased."

(n55)Footnote 271. La. Civ. Code of 1808, p. 374 art. 17. Article 2691 of the current Civil Code requires the lessor to "make all repairs that become necessary to maintain the thing in a condition suitable for the purpose for which it was leased, except those for which the lessee is responsible.".

(n56)Footnote 272. La. Civ. Code of 1808, page 374 art. 19. The corresponding provision of the current Civil Code is art. 2696. It requires the lessor to warrant that the thing "is suitable for the purpose for which it was leased and that it is free of vices or defects that prevent its use for that purpose."

(n57)Footnote 273. La. Civ. Code of 1825, art. 2665. The corresponding provision of the current Civil Code is art. 2696.

(n58)Footnote 274. La. Civ. Code of 1808, page 374 Art. 18. The corresponding provision of the current Civil Code is art. 2691.

(n59)Footnote 275. La. Civ. Code of 1808, page 378 Art. 30. The current provision includes a more general obligation on the lessee to repair damage to the thing "caused by his fault or that of persons who, with his consent, are on the premises or use the thing, and to repair any deterioration resulting from his or their use to the extent it exceeds the normal or agreed use of the thing." La. Civ. Code art. 2692. But the underlying notion is that repairs that are not expressly assigned to the lessee are the responsibility of the lessor. See La. Civ. Code art. 2691, cmt. b.

(n60)Footnote 276. The relevant provision of the 1808 Civil Code was page 374 art. 19. The current provisions of the Louisiana Civil Code dealing with leases do not appear to include an express provision relating to damages, but they do include a provision stating that, with respect to matters not covered by the lease articles "the contract for lease" is governed by code articles dealing with "obligations" (contracts). See La. Civ. Code art. 2669. The articles on obligations contemplate that damages are available for breach. See La. Civ. Code arts. 1758 & 1989

(n61)Footnote 277. La. Civ. Code art. 2719. This has been changed somewhat from the 1808 Civil Code, but dissolution was provided for there as well. Civil Code of 1808, page 378 art. 40.

(n62)Footnote 278. La. Civ. Code of 1825, arts. 2663 2664. The corresponding provision of the current Civil Code permits the lessee to make the repairs if the lessor does not make them within a reasonable time after demand. Thereafter the lessee "may demand immediate reimbursement of the amount expended for the repair or apply that amount to the payment of rent, but only to the extent that the repair was necessary and the expended amount was reasonable." See La. Civ. Code art. 2694.

(n63)Footnote 279. Ga. Code § 44-7-1. The former provision, under the Georgia Code of 1863, was § 2261.

(n64)Footnote 280. See Ga. Code § 44-7-13. The former provision, under the Georgia Code of 1863, was § 2266.

(n65)Footnote 281. See Ga. Code § 44-6-105. The former provision, under the Georgia Code of 1863, was § 2259. See Mayer & Crine v. Morehead, 32 S.E. 349 (Ga. 1899) (discussing the distinction made by the Civil Code); Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 54-55 (1979).

(n66)Footnote 282. See, e.g., Driver v. Maxwell, 56 Ga. 11 (1876) .

(n67)Footnote 283. See, e.g., Lewis & Co. v. Chisholm, 68 Ga. 40 (1881) ; Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 55 (1979).

(n68)Footnote 284. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 56 (1979).

(n69)Footnote 285. See Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 1941, Legislative History.

(n70)Footnote 286. See Cal. Civ. Code Ann. § 1942, Legislative History.

(n71)Footnote 287. Id.

(n72)Footnote 288. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 57 (1979).

(n73)Footnote 289. See Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70 24 101 - 70 24 442; 41 Okla. Stat. Ann. §§ 101 to 135; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.39 (3d ed. 2000).

(n74)Footnote 290. See Cal. Civ. Code Ann. §§ 1941-1942.5; N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-16-13.1; S.D. Codified Laws §§ 43-32-8-- 43-32-10.

(n75)Footnote 291. See Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1941, 1941.1, 1942.1, and 1942.5.

(n76)Footnote 292. See Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1941.2 and 1942(c).

(n77)Footnote 293. See id. § 1942(a).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.06

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.06 The Implied Warranty of Habitability.

[Go To Supp]

The "revolution" n294 in landlord-tenant law that occurred in the 1960s and the 1970s is best exemplified by the widespread adoption of landlord warranties with respect to the habitability of leased residential premises. As a result of judicial decision or statutory enactment, or both, over 40 states and the District of Columbia now require the landlord to maintain the habitability of residential leased premises and provide the tenant with contractual remedies if the landlord fails to do so. This portion of the chapter considers the judicially recognized implied warranty of habitability. The next portion of the chapter considers statutes that impose habitability obligations on landlords.

§ 41.06(a) The Judicially Adopted Implied Warranty of Habitability.

§ 41.06(a)(1) Judicial Development of the Implied Warranty.

The first case to recognize an implied warranty of habitability on the part of landlords in residential leases appears to have been Delamater v. Foreman, n295 a 1931 decision by the Minnesota Supreme Court. The court held that a landlord who leased out an apartment in a "modern" apartment building was subject to an implied covenant that the apartment would be habitable at the outset of the tenancy. The decision did not turn on whether the apartment was furnished or leased for a short term. The landlord's covenant, in other words, was broader than that recognized under the traditional "furnished house" exception to the caveat emptor rule.

Thirty years later, the concept was articulated again in the Wisconsin case of Pines v. Perssion. n296 In that case, the court permitted some tenants who had vacated a rented house, shortly after beginning occupancy, to avoid rental liability and to recover advance rental payments made to their landlord on the ground that the landlord had not provided them with a habitable dwelling. Although some language in the opinion can be read to indicate that the case involved the "furnished house" exception to the caveat emptor rule, other language in the opinion is substantially more expansive. Thus, the court said that the rule that no warranty of habitability would be implied was "obsolete" and inconsistent with "current legislative policy concerning housing standards." n297 Referring to the traditional concept of caveat emptor, the court also said that the need for adequate housing was "too important to be rebuffed by that obnoxious legal cliche." n298

The leading implied warranty of habitability case is Javins v. First National Realty Corporation n299 decided by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals in 1970. In that case, the court held that leases of urban dwelling units contain an implied warranty by the landlord that the premises are fit for occupancy at the beginning of the lease term, and that the premises will remain in habitable condition during the balance of the tenancy. The court said that the "the common law itself must recognize the landlord's obligation to keep his premises in a habitable condition." n300 It also concluded that a warranty of habitability was implied by the District of Columbia Housing Regulations.

The Javins court offered three reasons for its conclusion that the common law must recognize an implied warranty of habitability. First, the court said that the factual assumptions on which the old common law rule was based are no longer true. The modern residential tenant, unlike the agrarian tenant of a former day, has little interest in the land itself, but seeks a place to live. In particular, the modern tenant seeks "a well known package of goods and services" that include "adequate heat, light, and ventilation, serviceable plumbing facilities, secure windows and doors, proper sanitation, and proper maintenance." n301 The typical modern tenant also lacks both the funds and the ability to repair defects in the leased premises. Second, the court said that warranties of quality, such as implied warranties of fitness and merchantability, had become well established in modern contract law, and that the old common law rule should be abandoned in order to bring residential landlord-tenant law into harmony with modern contract concepts. Third, the court stated that the nature of the modern urban housing market dictated abandonment of the old rule. In this connection, the court referred to the inequality of bargaining power between landlord and tenant, as well as to the detrimental effect of bad housing on society as a whole.

As indicated above, the court also held that the District of Columbia Housing Regulations implied a warranty of habitability in residential leases. The court said that, in light of the Brown v. Southall Realty Co. decision, n302 it was clear that the housing code created privately enforceable duties with respect to the condition of the leased premises. It further stated that the purposes and structure of the housing code required that code be read into housing contracts. Citing Pines v. Perssion, the court concluded that to follow the traditional common law rule would be inconsistent with the policy judgment of the legislature concerning housing standards.

Although some of the arguments advanced in the Javins case for implying a warranty of habitability have been criticized, n303 the Javins opinion has been widely cited, and has clearly influenced the thinking of other courts with respect to the legal obligations of the landlord in residential tenancies.

The highest courts in at least seventeen jurisdictions have issued opinions recognizing an implied warranty of habitability in residential leases. Jurisdictions in which the highest courts have adopted the implied warranty of habitability include California, n304 the District of Columbia, n305 Hawaii, n306 Illinois, n307 Indiana, n308 Iowa, n309 Kansas, n310 Massachusetts, n311 Missouri, n312 Mississippi, n313 New Hampshire, n314 New Jersey, n315 Pennsylvania, n316 Texas, n317 Utah, n318 Vermont, n319 Washington, n320 and West Virginia. n321 Lower courts in several other jurisdictions have also recognized the implied warranty of habitability. n322

A few states have declined to adopt an implied warranty of habitability by judicial action. n323 And there is a debate about whether adoption of an implied warranty results in better or poorer housing conditions for low income tenants. n324

§ 41.06(a)(2) Leases Subject to the Implied Warranty.

In jurisdictions where it has been adopted, the implied warranty of habitability imposes substantial obligations and liabilities on the landlord. But the implied warranty of habitability does not apply to all leases in jurisdictions that recognize it. It generally does not apply in the commercial leasing context. And, at least in some jurisdictions, it does not apply to all residential housing.

§ 41.06(a)(2)(i) Commercial Leases.

Several courts have considered, and rejected, the application of the implied warranty of habitability to commercial leases. n325 This is not altogether surprising. The concept of "habitability" seems rather out of place in a non residential setting. The housing codes on which the implied warranty is often based do not regulate non residential premises. And the public policy justifications for the implied warranty in the residential landlord-tenant context are less pertinent in the commercial sphere.

Nonetheless, some courts have recognized that an implied warranty of suitability may apply to commercial leases. Indeed, the Texas Supreme Court has held that there is an implied warranty in a commercial lease that the premises are suitable for their intended purpose, and that essential lease facilities will remain in suitable condition. n326 The court has also said that the tenant's obligation to pay rent is dependent upon the landlord's performance of warranty obligations. n327 Other courts, without much analysis, have indicated that an implied warranty of fitness could be found in a commercial lease, depending upon the relationship of the landlord and tenant, the nature of the tenant's business, and the condition of the leased premises. n328 A number of commentators have called for the recognition of a warranty of suitability in commercial leases. n329

As previously mentioned, some statutes impose obligations on the landlord with respect to the initial suitability or ongoing maintenance of leased commercial premises. n330

§ 41.06(a)(2)(ii) Leases of Public Housing.

The question of the applicability of the implied warranty of habitability to public housing has received inconsistent answers in the courts. In the 1970s, several courts in jurisdictions that recognize an implied warranty of habitability for residential tenancies indicated that the implied warranty also applies to leases of public housing. n331 However, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals held that the applicability of an implied warranty of habitability to federally owned public housing was a federal question, and it declined to establish a federal implied warranty of habitability. The court reasoned that establishing an implied warranty of habitability in that context would constitute an affirmation that the goals of national housing policy -- to remedy unsafe and unsanitary housing conditions and the shortage of low income housing -- had been attained, and that such a determination should be left to the Congress. The court also concluded that legislation setting forth Congressional purposes for public housing did not impose warranty obligations on the federal government, when acting as landlord. n332

The Seventh Circuit's approach has been followed in some subsequent court decisions, n333 but other courts have rejected it, and, in cases involving federally owned public housing, or public housing in which the federal government acts as landlord, have adopted an implied warranty of habitability as a matter of federal common law. n334

The applicability of the implied warranty of habitability to public housing is also discussed in Chapter 45. n335

§ 41.06(a)(2)(iii) Residential Leases.

A number of courts that have recognized the implied warranty of habitability have said that it should be implied in all residential leases. n336 In some jurisdictions, however, the warranty is more limited. In New Hampshire, for example, the implied warranty is limited to residential apartment units. n337 In Kansas, the implied warranty was initially limited to urban residential property, n338 but was subsequently broadened by statute to cover substantially all property leased for residential use. n339 An Indiana court declined to apply the warranty of habitability to the rental of a single family home by a landlord who was not principally in the residential leasing business. The court said that there was no reason to believe that the landlord had any more expertise in rental matters than did the tenant, or that the landlord was any better able than the tenant to absorb the cost of maintaining the residence. n340 Some courts have held that the implied warranty applies to the leasing of a lot for a mobile home. n341

§ 41.06(a)(3) Warranty Standards.

Whether a particular condition on the leased premises causes a landlord to be in breach of the implied warranty of habitability depends on the content of the warranty itself, or, stated another way, on the standards for determining habitability. In some jurisdictions, the standards are determined by reference to applicable housing codes. For example, a District of Columbia court said that breach of the implied warranty is determined "by the standards set out in the Housing Regulations." n342 Even where the content of the implied warranty is determined by a housing code, however, not every code violation will threaten the health or safety of residential tenants. Not every violation will affect habitability. The Javins court put it this way: "[O]ne or two minor violations standing alone which do not affect habitability, are de minimis. " n343

In a number of jurisdictions, the landlord's implied warranty obligation is not to comply with the provisions of the housing code as such, but to meet a more general standard of habitability. Thus, courts have indicated that the landlord's obligation is to maintain the premises in a manner fit for "human occupation", n344 to provide premises that meet "an adequate standard of habitability," n345 or to provide and maintain "premises that are safe, clean and fit for human habitation." n346 It has also been said that the implied warranty does not require the landlord to ensure "aesthetically pleasing" conditions, but does require the landlord to meet "bare living requirements." n347 Proof of a violation of the housing code might constitute evidence, perhaps compelling evidence, of breach of the implied warranty, but other factors, such as the nature of the defect, its effect on habitability, and the length of time that the defect has persisted, will be relevant to a determination that the implied warranty has been breached. n348 Indeed, a breach of the warranty could be found whether or not there is an applicable housing code. n349

The warranty standard articulated by the Restatement is one of suitability for residential use. n350 The Restatement test for determining whether a condition renders the premises unsuitable for residential use is "if it would be unsafe or unhealthy for the tenant to enter on the leased property and use it as a residence." n351 The Restatement further indicates that a "significant violation of any controlling building or sanitary code, or similar public regulation, which has a substantial impact upon safety or health, is conclusive that the premises are unsafe or unhealthy, but other modes of proof are acceptable." n352

§ 41.06(a)(4) Defects Subject to the Implied Warranty.

The implied warranty of habitability generally covers defects that exist at the beginning of the tenancy, and those that arise later on. n353 It is true that a few implied warranty cases do not expressly state that the warranty has a continuing aspect. n354 However, in the Javins case, the issue was precisely whether the landlord had a duty to correct housing code violations that arose after the commencement of the lease term. In adopting the implied warranty of habitability, the Javins court confirmed that the landlord did have such a duty. Since the Javins decision, court decisions adopting the implied warranty have consistently said that the landlord has a continuing duty to maintain the habitability of the leased premises. n355

There has been more uncertainty about whether the implied warranty of habitability covers patent defects that exist at the beginning of the tenancy. In Marini v. Ireland, the New Jersey Supreme Court said that a residential landlord impliedly covenants "that at the inception of the lease, there are no latent defects in facilities vital to the use of the premises for residential purposes because of faulty original construction or deterioration from age or normal usage." n356 Very similar language concerning latent defects has been used by other courts that recognized the implied warranty of habitability. n357 However, the significance of the language regarding latent defects is unclear, because the cases also said that the implied warranty includes a continuing duty on the part of the landlord to maintain the leased premises in habitable condition. n358

A number of other implied warranty cases either indicate or state more directly that existing patent defects are subject to the implied warranty of habitability. For example, in Pines v. Perssion, n359 many of the defects in the residence were patent, but the court did not indicate that this made a difference regarding the implied warranty. In Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, n360 the Massachusetts Supreme Court expressly included existing patent defects within the coverage of the implied warranty. The Supreme Court of Vermont said, in Hilder v. St. Peter n361 that the implied warranty covers both latent and patent defects in essential facilities, and that "a tenant who enters into a lease agreement with knowledge of any defect in the essential facilities cannot be said to have assumed the risk, thereby losing the protection of the warranty." Other implied warranty cases suggest no limitation on the warranty with respect to latent defects.

It is clear that the implied warranty of habitability does not cover defective conditions resulting from the wrongful conduct of the tenant. n362 In the Javins case, for example, the court said that "the contract principle that no one may benefit from his own wrong will allow the landlord to defend by proving the damage was caused by the tenant's wrongful action." n363

§ 41.06(a)(5) Waiver.

Several courts have considered whether the landlord's implied warranty of habitability may be waived by the tenant. The majority have prohibited waiver on public policy grounds. n364 In the portion of its opinion basing the implied warranty on the existence of a housing code, the Javins court said that a private agreement to shift to the tenant the duties that are imposed on the landlord by the housing code would be unenforceable as an attempt to nullify the object of the legislation. n365 In the Hilder v. St. Peter case, which adopted the implied warranty of habitability without reliance on the existence of a housing code, the Vermont Supreme Court stated that the tenant who enters into a lease with knowledge of a defect in essential facilities does not assume the risk of the defect, and does not thereby lose the protection of the implied warranty. The court also said that the landlord's implied warranty could not be waived by written provision of the lease or by oral agreement. n366 The California Supreme Court has stated that landlords should not be "permitted to use their superior bargaining power to negate the warranty of habitability rule." n367

Some courts have indicated that the implied warranty could be waived. n368 The Texas Supreme Court has suggested that a tenant may waive the landlord's implied warranty of habitability by express agreement. n369 In Mease v. Fox, n370 and in Berzito v. Gambino, n371 the courts said that one of the factors to be considered in testing the alleged breach of the implied warranty is whether the tenant waived the defects, or is estopped to raise the question of the breach. However, in the Berzito case, the court said that the scarcity of available housing precluded a waiver when the tenant had been in occupancy and paying rent for nearly a year and a half.

The Restatement contemplates that the tenant may waive the benefit of the implied warranty of habitability, but, on public policy grounds, it narrowly limits the circumstances in which waiver may occur. More specifically, the Restatement provides that the parties may agree "to increase or decrease what would otherwise be the obligations of the landlord with respect to the condition of the leased property," so long as the agreement is not "unconscionable or significantly against public policy." n372 Among the factors that the Restatement identifies as relevant to an unconscionability analysis are inequality of bargaining position between landlord and tenant, and tenant financial inability to eliminate a condition that renders the leased premises unsafe and unhealthy. n373 Those factors are, of course, likely to be present in urban residential leases by tenants of modest means. Moreover, a comment to the Restatement states that the tenant is, as a matter of law, unable to waive remedies that are available to the tenant at the time of entry, "if it would be unsafe or unhealthy to use the leased premises in the manner contemplated by the parties." n374 In this connection, a Reporter's Note states that, for public policy reasons, housing code violations may not be waived. n375 One court that adopted the Restatement position added the qualifications that any waiver would have to be express in order to be effective, and that it would be effective only as to specific defects listed as waived. n376

§ 41.06(a)(6) Consequences of Breach.

Landlords that breach a judicially established implied warranty of habitability may be subject to a variety of tenant remedies. A number of courts have said that breach of the warranty entitles the tenant to exercise standard contract remedies of damages, rescission, and reformation. n377 A few courts have added specific performance to the list of basic contract remedies. n378 Several additional remedies have been identified as well. The most expansive catalog of potential remedies is set forth in the Hilder v. St. Peter case, n379 where, in addition to the standard contract remedies of rescission, reformation, and damages, the Vermont Supreme Court said that the tenant could: 1) sue for damages for discomfort and annoyance resulting from the landlord's breach; 2) withhold payment of future rent and obtain court ordered rent abatement in the landlord's later action for possession based on nonpayment of rent; 3) repair the defect and deduct the cost of repair from future rent upon proper notice to the landlord; and 4) recover punitive damages if the landlord's conduct has been of a willful, wanton, or fraudulent nature.

Not all courts that recognize the implied warranty of habitability would allow tenants to take advantage of the full panoply of remedies mentioned in the Hilder case. Moreover, even when a broad range of remedies is permitted under a judicially established implied warranty, not all of the remedies are simultaneously available to the tenant. For example, if the tenant terminates the lease, the tenant cannot also remain in possession, repair a defect, and deduct the cost of the repair from future rent. The actual remedies that the landlord encounters will depend on which remedies are available in the jurisdiction, and on what choices the tenant makes.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(i) Lease Termination.

There is general agreement among the courts that a breach by the landlord of the implied warranty of habitability entitles the tenant to terminate the lease and to avoid liability for future rent. n380 Lease termination, or "rescission," is thought to be justified on the ground that the tenant's obligation to perform under the lease and the landlord's obligation to perform under the implied warranty are mutually dependent; the landlord's breach of the implied warranty entitles the tenant to terminate the lease and to avoid additional liability for rent. n381

A tenant who wishes to terminate the lease must, of course, vacate the premises. n382 In this respect, the termination remedy resembles the remedy of constructive eviction for breach of the landlord's implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. n383 The risk to the tenant seems to be similar as well. That is, if the court subsequently determines, in the landlord's action for unpaid rent, that the landlord has not breached the implied warranty of habitability, lease termination would not have been justified, and the tenant will continue to have rental liability even though the tenant has vacated the premises. The tenant might seek to minimize the risk by bringing a declaratory judgment action regarding the tenant's rights prior to vacating the premises. n384 As a practical matter, however, a low income tenant faced with an urban housing shortage is likely to find other remedies for breach of the implied warranty, such as rent withholding, to be more attractive.

The availability of the lease termination remedy will probably depend on whether the tenant takes reasonable steps to provide prior notice to the landlord. The implied warranty cases generally have not discussed notice as a required predicate to lease termination, but several of the cases have indicated that the tenant must attempt to provide notice to the landlord before exercising other remedies for breach of the implied warranty of habitability. n385 It has also been said that the availability of basic contract remedies makes the tenant subject to basic contract duties, including the obligation "to give landlord notice of a deficiency or defect not known to the latter." n386 The Restatement requires a tenant who exercises a right to terminate a lease to take "reasonable steps to assure that the landlord has knowledge of his decision to terminate the lease and the reason therefor." n387 It should also be noted that the tenant is normally required to provide prior notice to the landlord before exercising the similar remedy of constructive eviction. n388 If the landlord actually corrects the defect before the tenant vacates the premises, it would seem that, consistent with the rule in the constructive eviction context, the tenant should not thereafter be entitled to rely on the lease termination remedy.

§ 41.06(a)(6)(ii) Damages.

Breach of the implied warranty of habitability will also expose the landlord to liability for damages, whether or not the lease is terminated. The tenant may assert a claim for damages in a direct action against the landlord or by means of a counterclaim in the landlord's action for unpaid rent. n389 The tenant may also be able to assert a claim for damages as a defense for the landlord's action to recover possession of the leased premises based on nonpayment of rent. n390 In this instance, the courts sometimes refer to the tenant's claim as one for rent abatement. n391

Courts have developed three principal formulas for determining damages for the tenant's economic loss when there is a breach of the implied warranty of habitability. One formula measures the difference between the rental amount set forth in the lease and the fair rental value of the leased premises during occupancy by the tenant in their uninhabitable condition. n392 A second formula for damages measures the difference between the fair rental value of the leased premises if they had been as warranted and the fair rental value of the leased premises during occupancy by the tenant in their actual, defective, condition. n393 Finally, several courts have said that damages should be determined by reducing the agreed upon rent by a percentage equal to the percentage of use lost to the tenant as a result of the landlord's breach of the implied warranty. n394

Application of these different formulas can result in different monetary liabilities for landlords, depending on the circumstances. For example, the first formula mentioned above will yield a recovery for the tenant if the leased premises are in initial compliance with the implied warranty, if the agreed rental amount is based on such initial compliance, and if the leased premises become uninhabitable later on in the tenancy. But if the premises are patently uninhabitable at the outset of the lease, and if the parties have agreed to a rental amount that takes into account the uninhabitable condition of the premises, then literal application of the formula could result in a conclusion that the landlord is not liable for damages at all. n395

The second formula should yield the same result as the first when the leased premises are in compliance with the implied warranty at the outset of the lease, the agreed-to rental amount reflects that compliance, and the leased premises subsequently become uninhabitable. However, application of the second formula yields a different result than the first when the rent agreed to has been established at the beginning of the tenancy to reflect then existing patently uninhabitable conditions. In that situation, there would be a difference between the rental value of the leased premises if they had been "as warranted," and the rental value of the premises in their actual, uninhabitable, condition. Indeed, the difference could be greater than the amount of the rent agreed to by the parties, which could, at least theoretically, produce the strange result that the landlord would have to pay the tenant for occupying the residential unit. n396

The third damage formula, involving a percentage reduction in use concept, appears to have been adopted by courts to avoid problems in determining damages under the other approaches, including the problem of requiring a low-income tenant to provide expert testimony on the rental value of the leased premises. n397 This approach to calculating damages requires the trier of fact to "exercise broad discretion and some subjective judgment" in order to determine the degree to which habitability has been diminished. n398

Some courts have adopted a two tiered approach to determining damages, when the tenant vacates the leased premises based on breach of the implied warranty. Under this approach, one measure of damages, calculated according to either the first or the second formula for damages referred to above, applies during the period of tenant occupancy. However, as to the term of the lease remaining after the tenant vacates, another measure of damages applies: the difference between the fair rental value of the premises if they had been as warranted and the amount of the rent agreed to in the lease. n399 The rationale for the change is that, after the tenant vacates the premises, the tenant is unaffected by the condition of the premises, and that the new measure of damages focuses more on the potential loss of the benefit of the bargain to the tenant, assuming that the tenant had an advantageous lease. n400

Other damages may also be recoverable. A number of courts have indicated that, in addition to damages based on the diminished value of the leasehold, the tenant is also entitled to recover special damages if the usual standards for their recovery are satisfied. n401 A few courts have said that conduct by the landlord in breach of the warranty could entitle a tenant to recover damages for emotional distress. n402 It has also been said that the tenant may be entitled to recover punitive damages if the landlord's breach of the warranty is of a willful and wanton or fraudulent nature. n403 Breach of the implied warranty of habitability may also expose the landlord to liability for personal injuries resulting from defects on the leased premises. n404

It has been recognized that a tenant who remains in possession and uses self help to correct a defect that is covered by the implied warranty may be entitled to recover the cost of correcting the defect. In Pugh v. Holmes, n405 for example, the court said that the tenant could assert a counterclaim against the landlord "to recover damages from already paid rents based upon expenses incurred in making repairs of defective conditions after failure of the landlord to repair within a reasonable time following proper notice." n406 The court saw little difference between this remedy and a repair and deduct remedy.

The Restatement also permits recovery of damages in the event the landlord breaches the obligation to provide premises suitable for residential use. n407 It does not adopt the traditional distinction between "general" and "special" damages. Instead, the Restatement lists a number of items of damages that are recoverable when the landlord fails to fulfill obligations under the lease, so that the court may apply them "individually or in combination to achieve the goal of proper compensation to the tenant without double recovery." n408 Recoverable items of damages include: reasonable relocation costs, if the tenant terminates the lease; reasonable costs of substituted premises, if the tenant does not terminate; losses sustained due to reasonable expenditures made by the tenant prior to the default, if the landlord could reasonably have foreseen that the expenditures would be made; reasonable costs of eliminating the default, if the tenant eliminates the default; and, if the tenant has the right to terminate the lease, and does so, the fair market value of the lease when terminated. n409 A Reporter's Note describes the latter item of damages as one for loss of the bargain, and indicates that the measure of its loss is the "difference between the fair rental value of the property and the agreed rental value." n410

§ 41.06(a)(6)(iii) Rent Withholding.

It has generally been recognized, in jurisdictions that have adopted the implied warranty of habitability, that the tenant may remain in possession following the landlord's breach of the implied warranty, cease making payments of rent, and assert the landlord's breach in a counterclaim to the landlord's action to recover rent, or as a defense to the landlord's action to recover the leased premises based on nonpayment of rent. n411 If it is determined that the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability, the result will be a judicially approved reduction, or abatement, of the tenant's rental obligation. n412 In most situations, this will probably be the most important remedial option available to a tenant.

The basic rationale for the availability of this remedy is set forth in the court's opinion in Javins v. First National Realty Corporation n413 Applying contract principles, the court said that a tenant's obligation to pay rent is dependent upon the performance of the landlord's obligations under the lease, including the landlord's obligation to maintain the leased premises in habitable condition. On that basis, the court said that breach of the implied warranty by the landlord may suspend some or all of an occupying tenant's obligation to pay rent. Further, the tenant must be given an opportunity to prove, in the landlord's action for possession based on nonpayment of rent, that the landlord breached the implied warranty. If the "entire rental obligation has been extinguished by the landlord's total breach," then the landlord's action for possession based on nonpayment of the rent would fail. n414 On the other hand, if only part of the rental obligation has been suspended, and a portion of the unpaid back rent is therefore owed to the landlord, then the court said that "no judgment for possession should issue if the tenant agrees to pay the partial rent found to be due. If the tenant refuses to pay the partial amount, a judgment for possession may then be entered." n415

The tenant's rent withholding remedy will normally be tested when the landlord brings an action for possession of the leased premises based on nonpayment of rent. Given the traditional limitations that have been placed on affirmative claims and defenses in summary possession proceedings, n416 it is not surprising that landlords have challenged the tenant's ability to assert claims based on breach of the warranty of habitability in such proceedings. However, the clear trend in the cases is to permit the tenant to do so. n417 For example, in Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little, n418 the Illinois Supreme Court considered whether tenants in two consolidated cases could assert a breach of warranty claim in a summary action, in light of a statute that prohibited the introduction of issues that were not "germane to the distinctive purpose of the proceeding." The court concluded that a breach of the implied warranty was "germane." It noted that if the landlords' actions were for rent, rather than for possession, the tenants would be permitted to prove that their damages for breach of warranty equalled or exceeded the rent claimed to be due. But the landlords in the consolidated cases admittedly were not entitled to possession, said the court, unless rent remained due and unpaid after demand. As a result, the "sole and decisive issue" in the summary possession action was "whether the tenants owe the landlords rent which is due and remains unpaid." n419 Because the affirmative defenses based on breach of warranty were germane to that issue, the court held that the affirmative defenses must be allowed.

Rent withholding could appear to involve a risk to the tenant that possession will be lost if it is ultimately determined that the landlord did not breach the implied warranty, or if the landlord did breach the warranty, but the damages caused by the breach are less than the withheld rent. A few trial courts seem to have taken the harsh position that, even if the tenant is able to prove that the implied warranty of habitability has been breached, the tenant cannot escape eviction for nonpayment of rent unless the damages from the breach equal or exceed the amount of the rent that is due. n420 However, a number of appellate courts have stated that the tenant will be allowed a short period of time in which to pay the balance of rent due, and thereby avoid eviction by the landlord. n421 The same result may be required under an applicable summary possession statute. n422

Rent withholding, and the tenant's ability to assert a breach of the implied warranty as a defense in the landlord's summary eviction proceedings, do involve potential economic risks for landlords. In the first place, permitting implied warranty claims to be addressed in summary eviction proceedings means that the proceedings may proceed less summarily, postponing the time when the landlord may obtain possession, or recover the unpaid rent, assuming that the landlord is able to do so. Second, even if the landlord does prevail on the breach of warranty issue, the tenant may have no money to pay the back rent. This risk may be reduced by the use of procedures, approved in many jurisdictions, by which the tenant "escrows" all or a portion of withheld rent pending a resolution of the breach of warranty claim. n423 Some summary possession statutes also provide procedures under which the landlord may seek payment of accruing rent into the court during the pendency of the action. n424

§ 41.06(a)(6)(iv) Repair and Deduct Remedy.

Several courts have indicated that the tenant has a self help remedy for breach of the implied warranty of habitability: the tenant may repair the defect in the leased premises, and deduct the repair costs from future rent. n425 The remedy is relatively simple and effective, but its application may compel the landlord to contribute to improvements on the property that the landlord deems unwise. n426 Accordingly, it is subject to several limitations.

The remedy is available, of course, only if the defect is one that renders the leased premises uninhabitable under the standards of the implied warranty of habitability. n427 Tenant resort to the remedy generally must be preceded by notice to the landlord of the defect, and the landlord generally must be given a reasonable time in which to correct the condition. n428 Proper notice will permit the landlord to comply with warranty obligations; it will also provide the landlord with an opportunity to dispute the tenant's claim before money is allocated to the repair. n429 However, it has been said that the tenant may proceed to make the repair if the tenant is unable to provide notice to the landlord after a reasonable attempt to do so. n430

Courts have indicated that there are also monetary limits on the availability of the remedy. In Marini v. Ireland, for example, the court indicated that the right to offset the repair costs against the rent was conditioned on the costs being "reasonable in light of the value of the leasehold against the rent." n431 In Pugh v. Holmes, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court said that "[r]epairs must be reasonably priced and cannot exceed the amount of the rent available to apply against the cost, i.e., the amount of rent owed for the term of the lease." n432 If it should be determined that the repair was actually not needed, or that the repair costs were excessive, the court said that the landlord would be entitled to recover the amount that should not have been deducted. n433

The Restatement would also permit a tenant to use a repair and deduct remedy to correct conditions that render leased residential premises unsuitable for residential use. n434 The comments to § 11.2 of the Restatement set forth guidelines for availability of the remedy. The "default" must be one that the tenant is capable of repairing, and "at a cost that does not exceed the amount of the rent that will be available to apply against the cost." The repairs should also "be commensurate with the age and overall condition of the premises, the condition of the surrounding neighborhood, and the alternate uses to which the premises might be put, in order for them to meet the test of being accomplished at a reasonable cost." n435 The comments further state that the tenant must present evidence to the landlord that the rent has actually been applied to eliminate the default. In the absence of a special situation, such as when there is a need for emergency repairs and the tenant lacks readily available funds other than rent money, the tenant is generally not entitled to make the deductions until the default has been eliminated. n436

The Restatement would, in some circumstances, actually require the tenant to use the rent application remedy. Thus, if the particular default may be eliminated by tenant resort to the remedy "without unreasonable inconvenience and at comparatively little expense compared with the damages that would accrue if the default went uncured, the tenant must do so or have his damages limited to the cost of eliminating the default." n437 This rule represents an application of the general rule requiring a party to take reasonable steps to mitigate damages arising from the other party's breach. n438

§ 41.06(a)(6)(v) Equitable Remedies.

Some courts have identified specific performance as a potential tenant remedy for breach of the landlord's implied warranty of habitability. n439 A number of other courts have stated, more generally, that basic contract remedies are available for the landlord's breach. n440 In this context, the application of a specific performance remedy would presumably require the landlord to repair a defect or to provide a service, if the defect, or the absence of the service, renders the leased premises uninhabitable. Such a remedy could be of considerable value to a tenant who desires to remain in possession of the leased premises.

Although specific performance has occasionally been sought for breach of the implied warranty, n441 and although specific performance has occasionally been approved as a remedy with respect to the performance of express covenants by landlords, n442 there does not appear to be any appellate case in which a landlord has been ordered to specifically perform an implied warranty of habitability. Indeed, in Pugh v. Holmes, one of the cases that identified specific performance as an available remedy, the court said that "specific performance is an equitable remedy not available as a matter of course but only in unique situations." n443 The general rule, of course, is that the equitable remedy of specific performance is available only when the party seeking relief has no adequate remedy at law. n444

§ 41.06(b) Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 41.06(b)(1) Introduction.

Although a few 19th century statutes had imposed obligations on landlords with respect to the initial suitability and continued maintenance of leased premises, n445 legislative momentum to impose habitability warranties on residential landlords did not develop until the 1970s, after some courts had already adopted the implied warranty of habitability. Judicial adoption of the implied warranty of habitability provided both an impetus and a standard for the new warranty legislation.

Over 30 states have now enacted statutes that, expressly or in substance, impose a warranty of habitability on landlords in residential leases. n446 Many of the statutes were significantly influenced by the judicially created implied warranty of habitability. The influence may be seen, by way of example, in the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, which was promulgated in 1972, and which has become a model for legislation in many states. A comment to § 2.104 of the Uniform Act, which imposes substantial obligations on the landlord with respect to the condition of the leased premises, states that the section follows the "warranty of habitability doctrine," and cites several cases in which the doctrine was recognized. n447

Statutory warranties of habitability are similar to judicial warranties in several respects. Both warranties are typically limited to residential tenancies. Both impose obligations on landlords with respect to the initial condition and the ongoing habitability of the premises. Under both types of warranties, the landlord's breach will usually entitle the tenant to exercise remedies such as lease termination, rent withholding, and damages. However, many statutory warranties are different from most judicial warranties in one important respect: they are very detailed regarding the nature of the landlord's obligations and the remedies that are available in the event of landlord breach.

Most statutory warranties of habitability are patterned after either the Model Residential Landlord/Tenant Code or the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. n448 Both the Model Code and the Uniform Act contain detailed listings of landlord and tenant rights and duties, including duties regarding the condition of the leased premises. Because the Uniform Act has been adopted, in some form, in about 20jurisdictions, n449 it will be the primary point of reference for discussing statutory warranties of habitability.

§ 41.06(b)(2) The Uniform Act.

The first observation that should be made about the Uniform Act is that it does not use the expression "warranty of habitability." However, the Uniform Act does impose obligations on the landlord with respect to the initial condition of leased residential premises and it imposes a continuing duty on the landlord to maintain those premises in a habitable condition. Thus, § 2.104 of the Uniform Act requires that the landlord:

> (1) comply with the requirements of applicable building and housing codes materially affecting health and safety;
>
> (2) make all repairs and do whatever is necessary to put and keep the premises in a fit and habitable condition;
>
> (3) maintain all common areas of the premises in a clean and safe condition;
>
> (4) maintain in good and safe working order and condition all electrical, plumbing, sanitary, heating, ventilating, air conditioning, and other facilities and appliances, including elevators, supplied or required to be supplied by him;
>
> (5) provide and maintain appropriate receptacles and conveniences for the removal of ashes, garbage, rubbish, and other waste incidental to the occupancy of the dwelling unit and arrange for their removal; and
>
> (6) supply running water and reasonable amounts of hot water at all times and reasonable heat [between [October 1] and [May 1]] except where the building that includes the dwelling unit is not required by law to be equipped for that purpose, or the dwelling unit is so constructed that heat or hot water is generated by an installation within the exclusive control of the tenant and supplied by a direct public utility connection. n450

These provisions generally apply to all leased dwelling units located in the state. Exceptions to coverage include, but are not limited to: residence at an institution that is incidental to the provision of medical, educational, religious, or similar services; transient occupancy in a hotel or motel; and occupancy under a rental agreement relating to premises that the occupant uses primarily for agricultural purposes. n451

§ 41.06(b)(2)(i) Remedies.

Breach of the foregoing obligations, or breach of obligations under the lease, will subject the landlord to a variety of potential tenant remedies. The potential remedies are quite comprehensive and very detailed.

One of the principal remedies is lease termination. Section 4.101 of the Uniform Act provides that if there is a material non compliance by the landlord with the provisions of the lease, or a non compliance with § 2.104 that materially affects health and safety, the tenant may, upon proper notice, terminate the lease. The tenant's notice must set forth, in writing, the acts and omissions constituting the landlord's breach, and, in most cases, must state that the lease will terminate on a date not fewer than 30 days after receipt of the notice, if the breach is not remedied in 14 days. n452 However, the tenant will not be entitled to terminate the lease if the landlord adequately remedies the breach prior to the date specified in the tenant's notice. Nor will the tenant be entitled to terminate the lease based on a condition caused by the deliberate or negligent act or omission of the tenant, a member of the tenant's family, or another person on the premises with the consent of the tenant. If the lease is terminated, the landlord will be obligated to return prepaid rent and any security to which the tenant is entitled. n453

The Uniform Act also states, in § 4.101(b), that, except as provided elsewhere in the Act, the tenant will be entitled to recover actual damages and to obtain injunctive relief against the landlord for non compliance with the lease or with § 2.104. The tenant will be able, then, to recover damages for breach of the landlord's maintenance obligations even if the breach does not affect health and safety. If the landlord's breach is willful, the landlord will also be liable for the tenant's reasonable attorneys' fees. n454

As an alternative to the remedy for damages referred to above, the Act provides that, in some instances, the tenant may be able to use self help by repairing a defect and by deducting the cost of the repair from the rent. Section 4.103 states that this remedy is available if the landlord does not comply with the lease or with § 2.104, when the cost of required repairs is less than $100, or an amount equal to one half of the periodic rent, whichever is greater. To exercise the remedy, the tenant must notify the landlord of the tenant's intention to correct the defective condition at the landlord's expense. If the landlord fails to correct the condition within 14 days after the tenant's notice, or as promptly as conditions require in the case of an emergency, the tenant may cause the work to be done, may submit an itemized statement to the landlord, and may deduct the reasonable cost of the repairs from the rent. n455 The Uniform Act provides that this repair and deduct remedy is not available to the tenant if the defective condition is caused by the deliberate or negligent act or omission of the tenant, a member of the tenant's family, or another person on the premises with the tenant's consent. n456

Other remedies are available, under § 4.104 of the Uniform Act, if the landlord willfully or negligently fails to provide "heat, running water, hot water, electric, gas, or other essential service." In this situation, if the tenant provides a written notice to the landlord, specifying the breach, the tenant may: (1) take reasonable measures to obtain the service and deduct the actual and reasonable cost from the rent; 2) recover damages from the landlord for the diminution in fair rental value of the leased premises; or 3) obtain reasonable substitute housing during the period of landlord non compliance, in which case, the tenant will be excused from paying rent for that period. If the tenant obtains substitute housing, the tenant may also recover "the actual and reasonable cost or fair and reasonable value of the substitute housing not in excess of an amount equal to the periodic rent." In any case, the tenant will be entitled to recover reasonable attorneys' fees. n457 Again, these remedies are not available to the tenant if the condition was caused by the deliberate or negligent act or omission of the tenant, a member of the tenant's family, or another person on the leased premises with the tenant's consent. n458 They are also unavailable if the tenant elects remedies under § 4.101 or § 4.103, referred to above.

If the landlord sues the tenant for unpaid rent, or sues for possession based on nonpayment of rent, § 4.105 of the Uniform Act permits the tenant to make a counterclaim against the landlord for any amount that the tenant may be entitled to recover under the lease or under the provisions of the Act. This would include damages for breach of the landlord's obligation to maintain the leased premises. If the tenant is in possession of the premises, the Uniform Act further provides that the court may order the tenant to pay accrued and accruing rent into court and thereafter determine the amount due to each party. If the court determines, based on the tenant's defense or counterclaim, that no rent remains due, the Uniform Act provides that judgment shall be entered for the tenant in the landlord's action for possession. However, if the tenant's defense or counterclaim is without merit, and not raised in good faith, the landlord will be entitled to recover reasonable attorneys' fees. n459 This section of the Uniform Act in effect permits the tenant to utilize a rent withholding remedy. n460

The Uniform Act also sets forth remedies that are available to the tenant if the landlord unlawfully ousts the tenant from possession or if the landlord willfully diminishes services running to the tenant. Such landlord conduct entitles the tenant to recover possession of the premises or to terminate the lease, and, in either case, to recover the greater of three months' periodic rent or treble the actual damages sustained by the tenant, plus reasonable attorney's fees. n461

§ 41.06(b)(2)(ii) Waiver of Tenant Rights.

The Uniform Act prohibits lease provisions in which the tenant agrees to "waive or forego rights or remedies" under the Act. n462 However, it does permit the landlord and the tenant of a single family residence to agree in writing, and in good faith, that the tenant may assume some of the duties regarding the leased premises that are otherwise allocated to the landlord under the Act. n463 Tenants in multifamily structures may also agree to undertake certain repairs and other tasks as well, but such an agreement is subject to greater limitations. n464 The Uniform Act provides that the landlord may not treat performance of this separate agreement "as a condition to any obligation or performance of any rental agreement." n465

§ 41.06(b)(3) Other Statutes.

While many statutes that impose habitability obligations on landlords are based on either the Uniform Act or the Model Code, several states have adopted comprehensive residential landlord-tenant statutes that are based on neither. n466 These statutes, like the Uniform Act, set forth specific obligations of the landlord with respect to the condition of the leased premises, and they set forth specific remedies that the tenant may exercise in the event of landlord breach. n467

Still other jurisdictions have enacted more limited statutes that have the effect of adding a habitability obligation to the landlord's duties under previously existing statutes or judge made law. n468 A few of these statutes include provisions taken from § 2.104 of the Uniform Act. n469 Some of the statutes do not expressly provide for tenant remedies in the event the landlord breaches the obligation to maintain the habitability of the leased premises. n470 When remedies are not set forth in the statutes, courts have nevertheless permitted tenant recourse to contractual remedies, based on the concept that the obligations of landlord and tenant are mutually dependent. n471

§ 41.06(c) Relationship Between Statutory and Judicially Adopted Warranties of Habitability.

A number of the jurisdictions that have enacted statutory warranties of habitability previously adopted an implied warranty of habitability by court decision. Comprehensive legislation that incorporates detailed habitability requirements and tenant remedies would seem to entirely or substantially supersede a judge made implied warranty of habitability. n472 Indeed, the Texas legislation expressly provides that the duties of the landlord and the remedies of the tenant are in lieu of existing common law duties, warranties, and remedies. n473 However, the judge made implied warranty may apply to tenancies that are not covered by legislation. n474

In contrast, some jurisdictions that adopted the implied warranty of habitability by court decision had previously enacted legislation providing the tenant with remedies against the landlord for failing to maintain statutory standards regarding the condition of the leased premises. In both California and Massachusetts, for example, judicial adoption of the implied warranty of habitability provided the tenant with remedies beyond those available under previous legislation. n475

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 294. See Mary Ann Glendon, The Transformation of American Landlord-Tenant Law, 23 B.C.L. Rev. 503 (1982). Edward H. Rabin, The Revolution in Residential Landlord/Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences, 69 Cornell L. Rev. 517 (1984).

(n2)Footnote 295. 239 N.W. 148 (Minn. 1931) . The court actually used the term "covenant" instead of "warranty."

(n3)Footnote 296. 111 N.W.2d 409 (Wis. 1961) .

(n4)Footnote 297. See id. at 412 13.

(n5)Footnote 298. See id. at 413 . The continuing authority of the Pines case in Wisconsin may be in doubt. See Posnanski v. Hood, 174 N.W.2d 528 (Wis. 1970) (rejecting claim that housing code creates contractual duties on the part of the landlord); See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 75 (1979)(suggesting that the Pines case may have been overruled sub silentio by the Posnanski case).

(n6)Footnote 299. 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir.) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n7)Footnote 300. Id. at 1077 .

(n8)Footnote 301. Id. at 1074 .

(n9)Footnote 302. 237 A.2d 834 (D.C. 1968) .

(n10)Footnote 303. For example, it has been said that the court was "on shaky ground" when it relied, by analogy, on U.C.C. warranties in the sale of goods to support its holding that the landlord has a continuing duty to keep the leased premises in repair. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 76 (1979). The U.C.C. does not provide an implied warranty "that the seller will repair defects arising from ordinary deterioration over time." See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 31 (1976). See also Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 112 (1982). It has also been suggested that the landlord's ongoing obligation to maintain the premises during the lease term would be more properly characterized as arising under an implied promise than under a "warranty." See id.

(n11)Footnote 304. Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) .

(n12)Footnote 305. Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir.) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n13)Footnote 306. Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470 (Haw. 1969) .

(n14)Footnote 307. Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little, 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972) .

(n15)Footnote 308. Johnson v. Scandia Associates, Inc., 717 N.E.2d 24 (Ind. 1999) (In this case, the Indiana Supreme Court acknowledged the existence of an implied warranty of habitability, but said that it was "not universally imposed by law." Instead, the court stated that such a warranty may be implied in fact from the agreement between the landlord and the tenant).

(n16)Footnote 309. Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) .

(n17)Footnote 310. Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974) .

(n18)Footnote 311. Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) .

(n19)Footnote 312. Detling v. Edelbrock, 671 S.W.2d 265 (Mo. 1984) .

(n20)Footnote 313. O'Cain v. Harvey Freeman and Sons, Inc. of Mississippi, 603 So. 2d 824 (Miss. 1991) , as stated in Moorman v. Tower Management Co., 451 F. Supp.2d 846 (S.D. Miss. 2006) .

(n21)Footnote 314. Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248 (N.H. 1971) .

(n22)Footnote 315. Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526 (N.J. 1970) .

(n23)Footnote 316. Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1979) .

(n24)Footnote 317. Kamarath v. Bennett, 568 S.W.2d 658 (Tex. 1978) , court-imposed warranty superseded by statute, as stated in Garza Vale v. Kwiecien, 796 S.W.2d 500 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n25)Footnote 318. Wade v. Jobe, 818 P.2d 1006 (Utah. 1992) .

(n26)Footnote 319. Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n27)Footnote 320. Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160 (Wash. 1973) .

(n28)Footnote 321. Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n29)Footnote 322. See Breezewood Mgt. Co. v. Maltbie, 411 N.E.2d 670 (Ind. Ct. App. 1980) ; Tonetti v. Penati, 367 N.Y.S.2d 804 (App. Div. 1975) ; Glyco v. Schultz, 289 N.E.2d 919 (Ohio Mun. Ct. 1972) .

(n30)Footnote 323. See Osborn v. Brown, 361 So.2d 82 (Ala. 1978) ; Hurst v. Field, 661 S.W.2d 393 (Ark. 1983) ; Blackwell v. Del Bosco, 558 P.2d 563 (Colo. 1977) . See also Worden v. Ordway, 672 P.2d 1049 (Idaho 1983) (court declines to recognize an implied warranty of habitability where the legislature has already imposed habitability-type obligations by statute); Bellikka v. Green, 762 P.2d 997 (Or. 1988) (same).

(n31)Footnote 324. See e.g., Allan David Heskin, The Warranty of Habitability Debate: A California Case Study, 66 Cal. L. Rev. 37, 48 (1978) (case study said to provide tentative support for proponents of the implied warranty of habitability); Werner Z. Hirsch and Joel G. Hirsch, The Changing Landlord-Tenant Relationship in California: An Economic Analysis of the Swinging Pendulum, 14 SW. U. L. Rev. 1 (1983) (suggests that habitability laws are counter-productive with respect to indigent black tenants); Duncan Kennedy, The Effect of The Warranty of Habitability on Low Income Housing: "Milking" and Class Violence, 15 Fla. ST. U. L. Rev. 485 (1987) (argues that selective enforcement of the warranty of habitability can increase the supply of low income housing and exert downward pressure on rents); Charles J. Meyers, The Covenant of Habitability and the American Law Institute, 27 Stan. L. Rev. 879, 889-897 (1975) (argues that enforcement of the Restatement's warranty will likely result in poorer conditions for low income tenants); Edward H. Rabin, The Revolution in Residential Landlord-Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences, 69 Cornell L. Rev.517, 558-578 (1984) (states that the "mainstream" view is that low-income tenants lose more than they gain from increased tenant protections; concludes that the theory is plausible, but that the evidence neither proves nor disproves it); Daniel P. Schwallie, The Implied Warranty of Habitability as a Mechanism for Redistributing Income: Good Goal, Bad Policy, 40 Case W. Res. L. Rev.525 (1989-90) (argues that the warranty of habitability results in scarcer and more expensive housing for low-income tenants). Other commentators have considered the economic implications of enforcing housing codes. See, e.g., Bruce Ackerman, Regulating Slum Housing Markets on Behalf of the Poor: Of Housing Codes, Housing Subsidies and Income Redistribution Policy, 80

Yale L.J. 1093 (1971); Werner Z. Hirsch, et al., Regression Analysis of the Effects of Habitability Laws Upon Rent: An Empirical Observation on the Ackerman-Komesar Debate, 63 Cal. L. Rev. 1098 (1975); Neil K. Komesar, Return to Slumville: A Critique of the Ackerman Analysis of Housing Code Enforcement and the Poor, 82 Yale L.J. 1175 (1973); Richard S. Markovits, The Distributive Impact, Allocative Efficiency, and Overall Desirability of Ideal Housing Codes: Some Theoretical Clarifications, 89 Harv. L. Rev. 1815 (1976).

(n32)Footnote 325. See, e.g., B.W.S. Investments v. Mid Am Restaurants, Inc., 459 N.W.2d 759 (N.D. 1990) ; Golub v. Colby, 419 A.2d 397 (N.H. 1980) ; Thomas A. Fleming, Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commercial Leases Modern Status, 76 A.L.R.4th 928 (1990) ; see also Chausse v. Coz, 540 N.E.2d 667 (Mass. 1989) (notes that there is no trend to apply the warranty of habitability to commercial leases; declines to do so under the circumstances of the case). The Restatement takes no position on the matter. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.5, Caveat to Subsection (1) (1977).

(n33)Footnote 326. See Davidow v. Inwood North Prof. Group -- Phase I, Respondent, 31 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 247, 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988) . A Texas appellate court found that the landlord breached the implied warranty of suitability in a commercial lease when the landlord leased property to a tenant for a use that was prohibited under a deed restriction. The lease limited the tenant's use to sale, financing, and insurance of automobiles. The deed restriction provided for residential use. The court rejected the argument that, because the deed had been recorded, the tenant had constructive notice of the deed restriction. See Lee v. Perez, 120 S.W.3d 463 (Tex. Ct. App. 2003) .

(n34)Footnote 327. See Davidow v. Inwood North Prof. Group -- Phase I, Respondent, 31 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 247, 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988). A subsequent Texas decision articulated some limitations on the scope of the implied warranty. See Coleman v. Rotana, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 867 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) (implied warranty of suitability covers only latent physical or structural defects within the leased premises that the landlord has a duty to repair; it does not cover inadequate parking caused by co-tenants' use of their premises in a manner that violates their leases).

(n35)Footnote 328. See 40 Associates, Inc. v. Katz, 446 N.Y.S.2d 844 (Civ. Ct. 1981) (implied warranty found); see also Four Seas Inv. Corp. v. International Hotel Tenants' Ass'n, 146 Cal. Rptr. 531 (Ct. App. 1978) (no warranty found; dictum that implied warranty of habitability could be extended to small commercial enterprises if facts warrant).

(n36)Footnote 329. See Robert J. Brennan, The Implied Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases and the Subrogating Insurance Company, 18 Forum 683 (1983); Gerald G. Greenfield & Michael Z. Margolies, An Implied Warranty of Fitness in Nonresidential Leases, 45 Alb. L. Rev. 855 (1981); Robert A. Levinson &; Michael N. Silver, Do Commercial Property Tenants Possess Warranties of Habitability? 14 Real Est. L.J. 59 (1985); John A. Marley, Note, Landlord-Tenant Should a Warranty of Fitness Be Implied in Commercial Leases?, 13 Rutgers L.J. 91 (1981); Michael P. McCloskey, Comment, Commercial Leases: Behind the Green Door, 12 Pac. L.J. 1067 (1981); Paula C. Murray, The Evolution of Implied Warranties in Commercial Real Estate Leases, 28 U. Richmond L. Rev. 145 (1993); Donald R. Pinto, Note, Modernizing Commercial Lease Law: The Case for an Implied Warranty of Fitness, 19 Suffolk U. L. Rev. 929 (1985); Kenneth J. Sophie, Jr., Comment, Landlord-Tenant: The Medieval Concepts of Feudal Property Law are Alive and Well in Leases of Commercial Property in Illinois, 10 John Marshall J. Prac. & Proc. 338 (1977); Anthony J. Vlatas, Note, An Economic Analysis of Implied Warranties of Fitness in Commercial Leases, 94 Colum. L. Rev. 658 (1994). But see Fred W. Bopp, III, Note, The Unwarranted Implication of a Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases An Alternative Approach, 41 Vand. L. Rev. 1057 (1988); 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases 1407 & n.14 (1990) (states that the implied warranty of habitability in residential leases covers a definable and relatively restricted situation, and that a "comparable rule in business and industrial property opens a potential liability of landlords that is almost without limit").

(n37)Footnote 330. See § 41.05(q) above.

(n38)Footnote 331. See, e.g., National Capital Hous. Auth. v. Douglas, 333 A.2d 55 (D.C. 1975) ; Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) .

(n39)Footnote 332. See Alexander v. U.S. Dep't of Housing & Urban Development, 555 F.2d 166, (7th Cir. 1977) , aff'd, 441 U.S. 39 (1979) .

(n40)Footnote 333. See, e.g., Kingston Square Tenants' Ass'n v. Tuskegee Gardens, Ltd., 792 F. Supp. 1566 (S.D. Fla. 1992) .

(n41)Footnote 334. See, e.g., Conille v. Secretary of Hous. & Urban Dev., 840 F.2d 105 (1st Cir. 1988) ; Chase v. Theodore Mayer Bros., 592 F. Supp. 90 (S.D. Ohio 1983) ; Techer v. Roberts Harris, 83 F.R.D. 124 (D. Conn. 1979) .

(n42)Footnote 335. See § 45.14(c).

(n43)Footnote 336. See, e.g., Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Boston Hous. Authority v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; Berzito v. Gambino, 308 A.2d 17 (N.J. 1973) ; Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160 (Wash. 1973) .

(n44)Footnote 337. See Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248 (N.H. 1971) .

(n45)Footnote 338. See Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974) .

(n46)Footnote 339. Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58 2541, 58 2543, 58 2553.

(n47)Footnote 340. See Zimmerman v. Moore, 441 N.E.2d 690 (Ind. Ct. App. 1982) (personal injury case).

(n48)Footnote 341. See, e.g., Moorman v. Tower Management Co., 451 F.Supp. 2d 846 (S.D. Miss. 2006) ; Staley v. Bouril, 718 A.2d 283 (Pa. 1998) .

(n49)Footnote 342. See Winchester Mgt. Corp. v. Staten, 361 A.2d 187, 190 (D.C. 1976) .

(n50)Footnote 343. Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d at 1082, note 63, (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) . No such limitation is articulated in Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974) . But Kansas subsequently adopted legislation that defines the warranty obligation to include compliance with building and housing codes requirements that materially affect health and safety. See Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58 2540 - 58 2573.

(n51)Footnote 344. See Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831, 843 (Mass. 1973) .

(n52)Footnote 345. See Berzito v. Gambino, 308 A.2d 17, 21 (N.J. 1973) .

(n53)Footnote 346. See Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202, 208 (Vt. 1984) .

(n54)Footnote 347. Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168, 1182 (Cal. 1974) .

(n55)Footnote 348. See, e.g., Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d at 844 ; cf. McAllister v. Boston Housing Authority, 708 N.E.2d 95 (Mass. 1999) (Even if a natural accumulation of ice and snow violates the state sanitary code, it does not amount to a defect covered the by the implied warranty of habitability).

(n56)Footnote 349. See Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n57)Footnote 350. Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.1 (1977).

(n58)Footnote 351. Id. cmt. e.

(n59)Footnote 352. Id. cf. McAllister v. Boston Housing Authority, 708 N.E.2d 95 (Mass. 1999) (Even if it violates the state sanitary code, a natural accumulation of ice and snow is not a defect covered the by the implied warranty of habitability).

(n60)Footnote 353. See, e.g., Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n61)Footnote 354. See, e.g., Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470 (Haw. 1969) . It should be noted that Hawaii has adopted legislation imposing a continuing duty on the landlord to correct defects that arise during the tenancy. See Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 521 1 et seq.

(n62)Footnote 355. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 92 (1979).

(n63)Footnote 356. 265 A.2d 526, 534 (1970) .

(n64)Footnote 357. See Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248, 252 (N.H. 1971) ; Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791, 796 (Iowa 1973) ; Kamarath v. Bennett, 568 S.W.2d 658, 661 (Tex. 1978) court-imposed warranty superseded by statute, as stated in Garza Vale v. Kwiecien, 796 S.W.2d 500 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n65)Footnote 358. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 89 (1979).

(n66)Footnote 359. 111 N.W.2d 409 (Wis. 1961) .

(n67)Footnote 360. 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) .

(n68)Footnote 361. 478 A.2d 202, 208 (Vt. 1984) .

(n69)Footnote 362. See, e.g., Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526 (N.J. 1970) ; Wade v. Jobe, 818 P.2d 1006 (Utah 1992) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.1 & cmt. i (1977).

(n70)Footnote 363. 428 F.2d at 1082 n.62 .

(n71)Footnote 364. See, e.g., Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168, 1173 74 n.9 (Cal. 1974) ; Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831, 843 (Mass. 1973) ; Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114, 130 31 (W. Va. 1978) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202, 208 (Vt. 1984) . Waiver would, in any case, be less likely to be permitted when the source of the implied warranty is a statutory duty. See Edward H. Rabin, The Revolution in Residential Landlord Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences, 69 Cornell L. Rev. 517, 526 (1984).

(n72)Footnote 365. 428 F.2d at 1082 n.58 .

(n73)Footnote 366. 478 A.2d at 208.

(n74)Footnote 367. Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168, 1173, 1174 n.9 (Cal. 1974) .

(n75)Footnote 368. See, e.g., Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) ; Berzito v. Gambino, 308 A.2d 17 (N.J. 1973) ; P.H. Inv. v. Oliver, 818 P.2d 1018 (Utah 1991) .

(n76)Footnote 369. See Kamarath v. Bennett, 568 S.W.2d 658, 660 n.2 (Tex. 1978) court-imposed warranty superseded by statute, as stated in Garza Vale v. Kwiecien, 796 S.W.2d 500 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n77)Footnote 370. 200 N.W.2d 791, 797 (Iowa 1972) .

(n78)Footnote 371. 308 A.2d 17, 22 (N.J. 1973) .

(n79)Footnote 372. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 5.6 (1977).

(n80)Footnote 373. Id., § 5.6, cmt. e.

(n81)Footnote 374. Id. § 5.3, cmt. c.

(n82)Footnote 375. Id. § 5.3, Reporter's Note 3.

(n83)Footnote 376. See P.H. Inv. v. Oliver, 818 P.2d 1018 (Utah 1991) .

(n84)Footnote 377. See, e.g., Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470, 475 (Haw. 1969) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) . Although the reformation remedy has been frequently mentioned, it has not been applied in a reported appellate case dealing with breach of the implied warranty of habitability, and it is not clear what benefit it would be to a tenant in such a case.

(n85)Footnote 378. See, e.g., Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071, 1082 n.61, (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n86)Footnote 379. 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n87)Footnote 380. See, e.g., Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470 (Haw. 1969) ; Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n88)Footnote 381. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.41 (3d ed. 2000).

(n89)Footnote 382. See, e.g., Young v. Berman, 131 S.W. 62 (Ark. 1910) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 10.1 (1977).

(n90)Footnote 383. Constructive eviction is discussed in § 40.22(c)(3), above.

(n91)Footnote 384. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 100 (1979).

(n92)Footnote 385. See Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526, 535 (N.J. 1970) ; Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897, 906 (Pa. 1979) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202, 209 (Vt. 1984) .

(n93)Footnote 386. See Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791, 797 (Iowa 1972) .

(n94)Footnote 387. Restatement (Second) of Property § 10.1 (1977).

(n95)Footnote 388. See discussion in § 40.22(c)(3)(B), above.

(n96)Footnote 389. See, e.g., Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470 (Haw. 1969) (action for damages); Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) (counterclaim).

(n97)Footnote 390. See, e.g., Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little, 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972) .

(n98)Footnote 391. See, e.g., Wade v. Jobe, 818 P.2d 1006 (Utah. 1991) .

(n99)Footnote 392. See, e.g., Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248 (N.H. 1971) .

(n100)Footnote 393. See, e.g., Green v. Superior Court, 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n101)Footnote 394. See, e.g., Academy Spires, Inc. v. Brown, 268 A.2d 556 (N.J. Super. 1970) ; Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1979) ; see generally Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 , 103-04 (1979); Debra T. Landis, Annotation, Measure of Damages for Landlord's Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability, 1 A.L.R.4th 1182 (1980) .

(n102)Footnote 395. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 21 (1976).

(n103)Footnote 396. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 22 (1976).

(n104)Footnote 397. See, e.g., Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d at 909 ; see generally Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 104 & n.459. (1979).

(n105)Footnote 398. See Wade v. Jobe, 818 P.2d 1006 (Utah 1991) . As a result, the approach has been characterized as amounting to a "civil fine levied on the landlord," based on the court's judgment as to the condition of the rental unit. See Samuel Bassett Abbott, Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 1, 24 (1976).

(n106)Footnote 399. See Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) ; King v. Moorehead, 495 S.W.2d 65 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973) .

(n107)Footnote 400. See Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d at 797 .

(n108)Footnote 401. See, e.g., Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) ; Detling v. Edelbrock, 671 S.W.2d 265 (Mo. 1984) .

(n109)Footnote 402. See Simon v. Solomon, 431 N.E.2d 556 (Mass. 1982) ; Fair v. Negley, 390 A.2d 240 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1978) ; see also Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202, 209 (Vt. 1984) (damages should be allowed for discomfort and annoyance).

(n110)Footnote 403. See Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n111)Footnote 404. See discussion in § 41.09(b)(9).

(n112)Footnote 405. 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1979) .

(n113)Footnote 406. See id. at 908 .

(n114)Footnote 407. See Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 5.1 5.2 (1977).

(n115)Footnote 408. See id. § 10.2, cmt. a.

(n116)Footnote 409. See id. at § 10.2.

(n117)Footnote 410. See id. at § 10.2, Reporter's Note 1.

(n118)Footnote 411. See, e.g., Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) ; Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n119)Footnote 412. See, e.g., id.

(n120)Footnote 413. 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n121)Footnote 414. See id. at 1083 . The court did not explain how the entire rental obligation might be extinguished while the tenant remains in possession. It has been suggested that the court might have contemplated the possibility that the tenant could pay rent for a period of time after the occurrence of the breach, creating a rent credit in the tenant's favor. This rent credit, added to the amount of the tenant's damages for the breach, might equal or exceed the amount of the unpaid rent. See Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 116 117 n.515. (1979).

(n122)Footnote 415. See 428 F.2d at 1082 (footnote omitted).

(n123)Footnote 416. See discussion in § 40.09(c)(3).

(n124)Footnote 417. See, e.g., Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Berzito v. Gambino, 308 A.2d 17 (N.J. 1973) ; Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1979) .

(n125)Footnote 418. 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972) .

(n126)Footnote 419. Id. at 213 .

(n127)Footnote 420. See, Roger A. Cunningham, "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 121 (1979).

(n128)Footnote 421. See, e.g., Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) ; Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n129)Footnote 422. See § 40.09(c)(2).

(n130)Footnote 423. See, e.g., Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d at 1083 n.67 ; Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168, 1182 (Cal. 1974) ; King v. Moorehead, 495 S.W.2d at 77 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973) ; Restatement (Second) of Property, § 11.3 & cmt. e (1977).

(n131)Footnote 424. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 1170.5; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1923.061(B).

(n132)Footnote 425. See, e.g., Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d 526 (N.J. 1970) ; Jackson v. Rivera, 318 N.Y.S.2d 7 (Civ. Ct. 1971) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n133)Footnote 426. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 11.2, cmt. a (1977).

(n134)Footnote 427. See Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d at 535 ; Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897, 908 (Pa. 1979) .

(n135)Footnote 428. See Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d at 535 ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d at 209 (Pa. 1979).

(n136)Footnote 429. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 11.2, cmt. a (1977).

(n137)Footnote 430. See Marini v. Ireland, 265 A.2d at 535 .

(n138)Footnote 431. 265 A.2d at 535 .

(n139)Footnote 432. 405 A.2d at 908 .

(n140)Footnote 433. See id.

(n141)Footnote 434. See Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 5.1(2)(c) and 5.2(2)(c).

(n142)Footnote 435. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 11.2, cmt. c (1977).

(n143)Footnote 436. See id., cmt. b.

(n144)Footnote 437. See id., cmt. e.

(n145)Footnote 438. See id., Reporter's Note 9; § 10.2 Comment i.

(n146)Footnote 439. See Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071, 1082, n.61 (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) ; Pugh v. Holmes, 405 A.2d 897, 908 (Pa. 1979) .

(n147)Footnote 440. See, e.g., Lemle v. Breeden, 462 P.2d 470, 475 (Hawaii 1969) ; Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n148)Footnote 441. See Habib v. Thurston, 517 A.2d 1 (D.C. 1985) (claim voluntarily dismissed); Steele v. Latimer, 521 P.2d 304 (Kan. 1974) (tenant sought injunction against continued housing code violations).

(n149)Footnote 442. See, e.g., Jones v. Parker, 40 N.E. 1044 (Mass. 1895) ; cf. Bartley v. Walentas, 434 N.Y.S.2d 379 (App. Div. 1980) (injunctive relief denied with respect to performance of statutory warranty).

(n150)Footnote 443. 405 A.2d at 908 .

(n151)Footnote 444. See Tyson Breeders, Inc. v. Harrison, 940 So.2d 230 (Miss. 2006) ; 11 Duke Street, Ltd. v. Ryman, 721 N.Y.S.2d 502 (App. Div. 2001) .

(n152)Footnote 445. The legislation is discussed in § 41.05(g), above. As noted in § 41.05(g)(1),Louisiana landlords have long been subject to extensive warranty type obligations.

(n153)Footnote 446. See §§ 43.05(a) & (b), below. Chapter 43 includes a comprehensive discussion of statutes that provide for a warranty of habitability.

(n154)Footnote 447. See cmt. to U.R.L.T.A. § 2.104.

(n155)Footnote 448. See § 43.05(a), below.

(n156)Footnote 449. See id.

(n157)Footnote 450. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 2.104(a).

(n158)Footnote 451. See id. § 1.202.

(n159)Footnote 452. The notice period is shorter if the non compliance is a recurring one. See id. § 4.101(a)(2).

(n160)Footnote 453. See id. § 4.101(a) & (d).

(n161)Footnote 454. See id. § 4.101(b).

(n162)Footnote 455. See id. § 4.103(a).

(n163)Footnote 456. See id. § 4.103(b).

(n164)Footnote 457. See id. § 4.104.

(n165)Footnote 458. See id. § 4.104(d).

(n166)Footnote 459. See id. § 4.105.

(n167)Footnote 460. See, e.g., Napolski v. Champney, 667 P.2d 1013 (Or. 1983) (construing a corresponding Oregon statutory provision to provide for rent withholding).

(n168)Footnote 461. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 4.107.

(n169)Footnote 462. See id. § 1.403.

(n170)Footnote 463. See id. § 2.104(c).

(n171)Footnote 464. See id. § 2.104(d).

(n172)Footnote 465. See id. § 2.104(e).

(n173)Footnote 466. See, e.g., Md. Code Ann. Real Prop. § 8-211; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. §§ 92.001 et seq.

(n174)Footnote 467. See § 43.05(c)(1), below for additional information regarding these statutes.

(n175)Footnote 468. See, e.g., Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6021; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 235 b. The New York statute incorporates, among other things, a covenant and warranty by the landlord that the premises "are fit for the uses reasonably intended by the parties." N.Y. Real Prop. Law 235 b. In a 1995 case, some tenants who lived in a "fashionable" part of Manhattan pointed to this language, and claimed that the warranty should encompass "the level of services and amenities that tenants reasonably expect to be provided under the financial and other terms of their individual leases." See Solow v. Wellner, 658 N.E.2d 1005, 1007 1008 (N.Y. 1995) . The New York Court of Appeals said no. It said that "the implied warranty sets forth a minimum standard to protect tenants against conditions that render residential premises uninhabitable or unusable." See id. at 1008 .

(n176)Footnote 469. See, e.g., W. Va. Code Ann. § 37-6-30.

(n177)Footnote 470. Id.

(n178)Footnote 471. See, e.g., Fritz v. Warthen, 213 N.W.2d 339 (Minn. 1973) .

(n179)Footnote 472. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.39 (3d ed. 2000).

(n180)Footnote 473. See Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 92.061.

(n181)Footnote 474. For example, the Washington Residential Landlord/Tenant Act exempts specified residential arrangements, such as certain farm tenancies, from statutory coverage. See Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.040. In Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160, 164 (Wash. 1973) , however, the Washington Supreme court held that the implied warranty of habitability applied to all contracts for the renting of premises.

(n182)Footnote 475. See Green v. Superior Ct., 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; cf. Bellikka v. Green, 762 P.2d 997 (Or. 1988) (existing comprehensive landlord tenant legislation, which includes landlord habitability obligations, leaves no room for judicial creation of implied warranty of habitability).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.07

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.07 Dependency of Covenants in Commercial Leases.

As noted previously in this chapter, the traditional rule of the common law was that lease covenants were independent of each other and that breach by one party of a lease covenant did not entitle the other to terminate the lease. Some departures from the traditional rule have occurred. One would be the doctrine of constructive eviction, which, under appropriate circumstances, permits a tenant to avoid lease obligations. Another would be a statute that permits the landlord to terminate the lease for non payment of rent. Still another would be the modern implied warranty of habitability, with respect to residential leases. In the non residential context, though, it might be expected that the traditional independence of covenants rule would still be largely in place. For the most part, that appears to be true, but there have been some dependency inroads.

The Restatement departs from the traditional approach. It serves up a rather reformist n476 rule that is not, by its terms, limited to the residential landlord tenant context:

> Except to the extent the parties to a lease validly agree otherwise, if the landlord fails to perform a valid promise contained in the lease to do, or to refrain from doing, something on the leased property or elsewhere, and as a consequence thereof, the tenant is deprived of a significant inducement to the making of the lease, and if the landlord does not perform his promise within a reasonable period of time after being requested to do so, the tenant may ... terminate the lease. n477

Given the near universal adoption of the implied warranty of habitability, the Restatement formulation does not offer much in the residential landlord tenant context. However, it could offer some relief to commercial tenants, if a court were willing to depart from the traditional independence of covenants rule. An example was provided by the decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court in Wesson v. Leone Enterprises, Inc. n478 In that case, a commercial tenant claimed that the landlord's failure to repair a leaking roof resulted in a constructive eviction. The court rejected the claim because, while the failure may have made the tenant's situation more inconvenient and expensive, it did not render the premises untenantable. However, the court still allowed the tenant to terminate the lease. Citing the Restatement, the court used a mutually dependent covenant analysis and concluded that the landlord's breach of a covenant to keep the roof in good repair allowed the tenant to terminate the lease.

Another example can be seen in the decision of the Utah Supreme Court in Richard Barton Enterprises, Inc. v. Tsern. n479 There, the landlord breached a covenant to put a freight elevator into "good working order." The tenant responded by withholding rent. The court adopted a dependency of covenants rule, but it said that only a "significant breach of a covenant material to the purpose for which the lease was consummated justifies a lessee in abating rent." n480 The elevator repair covenant qualified, and the court allowed rent to be abated to the extent that the value of the leased premises had been reduced by the landlord's breach.

Even if a court were disposed to adopt a dependency of covenants rule, like the one articulated by the Restatement, such a rule would be of assistance to a tenant, of course, only when there has been a breach of a lease covenant by the landlord. Indeed, in the Massachusetts case, the landlord sought to avoid lease termination by arguing that it was the tenant, not the landlord, who had an obligation to keep the roof in repair. However, the lower court had concluded that it was the landlord's obligation to keep the roof in repair, and the breach of that obligation opened the door to non traditional relief by the tenant.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 476. The Introduction to the Restatement indicates that what it has to say about dependency of lease covenants goes beyond "restating" existing law:

> In dealing with landlord and tenant law, the approach of the Institute has two distinct features that an introduction should disclose. The first is the extent of the rejection of the ancient dogma that the covenants of the respective parties are entirely independent, in favor of a concept of mutual dependence akin to the accepted law of contracts. The second is the extent to which it is conceived to be appropriate that courts, in assessing the continuing validity of precedents, rules and doctrines of the past, may give weight to the policies reflected in more recent, widespread legislation, though the statutes do not by their terms apply...
>
> ...
>
> ... Mutual dependence was established long ago by statute on what is certainly the most crucial point the landlord's right to terminate the lease and regain possession for non-payment of rent. Such dependence is, however, recognized by the Restatement in other situations thought to be analogous in point of policy but not thus far within the terms of any statutory mandate.

Restatement (Second) of Property vii-viii (1977).

(n2)Footnote 477. Restatement (Second) of Property 7.1 (1977).

(n3)Footnote 478. 774 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 2002) . For a contrary example, see Matte v. Shippee Auto, Inc., 876 A.2d 167 (N.H. 2005) (Court declines to abandon the traditional rule of independent covenants in the commercial leasing context).

(n4)Footnote 479. 928 P.2d 368 (Utah 1996) .

(n5)Footnote 480. Id. at 377 .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.08

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.08 Prohibitions Against Retaliatory Conduct By Landlords.

[Go To Supp]

§ 41.08(a) Introduction.

Traditionally, a landlord's motives in evicting a tenant, or in failing to renew a tenancy, were not relevant to the landlord's legal right to do so. A landlord could, for example, terminate a periodic tenancy and evict a tenant for any reason whatsoever, so long as the proper notice and other requirements were met. In recent years, however, by statute or judicial decision, a majority of jurisdictions have restricted the landlord's ability to evict residential tenants when the landlord's motive is to retaliate against tenants for reporting substandard housing conditions to governmental authorities or for exercising certain other tenant rights. In most of these jurisdictions, the landlord is also prohibited from retaliating against tenants using means other than eviction proceedings. Because the doctrine, or policy, at work here generally prohibits more than retaliatory eviction, it will be referred to as the "retaliatory conduct" doctrine.

In the landmark case of Edwards v. Habib, n481 the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit ruled that a landlord could not evict a tenant under a periodic tenancy in retaliation for tenant reporting of housing code violations to governmental authorities. The court observed that the enactment of housing code provisions reflected a strong legislative policy in favor of safe, adequate housing, and that enforcement of housing code provisions depended to a considerable extent on private reporting of violations. Reasoning that intimidation of those who report housing code violations would inhibit the effectiveness of housing code legislation, the court stated: "[W]hile the landlord may evict for any legal reason or for no reason at all, he is not, we hold, free to evict in retaliation for his tenant's report of housing code violations to the authorities." n482 Accordingly, the court permitted the tenant to raise the landlord's retaliatory motive as a defense to the landlord's action to recover possession of the leased premises.

Courts in several states have followed the Edwards v. Habib decision, and have prohibited landlords from retaliating against residential tenants for reporting housing code violations to governmental authorities. n483 In addition, more than half the states, and many municipalities, have adopted statutes that prohibit landlord retaliation against tenants. n484 This area of landlord-tenant law is one of recent and rapid change.

§ 41.08(b) Protected Tenant Activities.

In Edwards v. Habib, the retaliatory motive of the landlord was recognized as a defense to the landlord's effort to evict tenants who report housing code violations to governmental authorities. But the retaliatory conduct doctrine has expanded to protect other tenant activities as well. Courts have applied the doctrine to prohibit landlords from retaliating against tenants for exercising rights under repair and deduct statutes and for legally withholding rent because of building code violations. n485 The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, adopted in many jurisdictions, protects residential tenants against landlord retaliation for: 1) complaining to governmental authorities of a housing or building code violation that materially affects health and safety; 2) complaining to the landlord of the landlord's failure to maintain the premises as provided under the Act; or 3) organizing or joining a tenant's union or a similar organization. n486 Some statutes broadly protect tenants against retaliation for exercising their legal rights. n487

Courts have occasionally considered whether the retaliatory conduct doctrine should also apply to commercial tenancies. In this context, of course, the public policies related to the improvement of substandard housing that were central to the Edwards v. Habib case are not applicable. Indeed, several courts have rejected claims that the retaliatory conduct doctrine should apply in the commercial leasing context. n488 However, some statutes that prohibit landlord retaliatory conduct are not limited to residential tenancies. n489 And a few courts have prohibited retaliatory conduct by landlords when the public policies at issue were quite different from those involved in Edwards v. Habib. In particular, courts have prohibited landlord retaliation against tenants for opposing a zoning change sought by the landlord, n490 for reporting the landlord's criminal conduct, n491 for filing litigation charging the landlord with a violation of federal farm labor legislation, n492 and for refusing to perjure themselves in litigation to which the landlord was a party. n493 On the other hand, one court refused to apply the retaliatory eviction doctrine to an eviction that the tenant alleged was in retaliation for the tenant's participation in a labor strike; the court took the position that the defense must relate to activities of the tenant that are incidental to the tenancy. n494

§ 41.08(c) Prohibited Retaliatory Conduct.

Recognizing that landlords who wish to retaliate against tenants may effectively do so in ways other than bringing eviction actions, courts and legislatures have prohibited a variety of landlord retaliatory actions. Thus, court decisions have prohibited landlords from retaliating against tenants by raising the amount of the rent, by reducing the level of services provided to the tenant, or by failing to renew a residential lease. n495 One court suggested that any landlord actions are impermissible when they are motivated by a desire to punish the tenant for exercising tenant rights or to chill the exercise of rights by other tenants. n496

Although a few statutes prohibit little more than retaliatory eviction, n497 many impose greater limitations on retaliatory conduct by landlords. The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act prohibits landlords from increasing rents, decreasing services, or evicting or threatening to evict a tenant. n498 Some statutes prohibit landlords from retaliating against tenants by substantially altering the terms of the tenancy, n499 refusing to renew the lease, n500 or otherwise causing the tenant to quit possession involuntarily. n501

The Restatement position is that landlords should be prohibited from retaliating against tenants by terminating a lease, by refusing to renew a lease for a specified term, or by offering to continue a tenancy on terms more burdensome than those offered to other, similarly situated, tenants. n502 An offer to continue a tenancy on burdensome terms is, notes the Restatement, the equivalent of attempting to terminate a tenancy. n503

§ 41.08(d) Proof of Retaliatory Motive.

The landlord's motive is obviously critical in a retaliatory conduct case: if the landlord's conduct is not in retaliation for protected tenant activity, the tenant cannot prevail on the retaliatory conduct claim or defense. In the absence of a damaging admission by the landlord, however, the landlord's motive may be difficult for the tenant to prove. The outcome may well depend on whether an evidentiary presumption is available to aid the tenant, and on how the standard of proof is defined with respect to landlord motive.

In many instances, the tenant may be able to benefit from the existence of a presumption that the landlord's action is retaliatory. Statutes that prohibit retaliatory conduct commonly create a presumption of retaliatory action when the landlord's actions take place within a prescribed period of time after the tenant's protected activity. n504 For example, the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act establishes a presumption that the landlord's action is retaliatory if it is taken within one year of a complaint by the tenant of a housing code violation. If the presumption arises, the burden will then be on the landlord to show that the landlord's action was not retaliatory. However, the presumption does not arise if the tenant's complaint was made after notice by the landlord of a proposed rent increase or a diminution in services to the tenant. n505

Presumptions have also been established by court decision. For example, one court, in considering how a tenant could show that a landlord's action is retaliatory, indicated that if the tenant could show that the conduct of the landlord was "inherently destructive" of tenant rights or "unavoidably chills their exercise," a presumption would arise that the landlord intended such results. n506 The Restatement position is that a presumption of retaliatory motive arises once the tenant establishes that the landlord's exercise of rights was "discriminatory" and followed the tenant's protected activity "at the first opportunity." n507

Jurisdictions vary considerably in defining the standard of proof with respect to landlord's retaliatory motive. The most difficult standard for the tenant is one of sole motive. As articulated in by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Dickhut v. Norton, n508 this standard requires the tenant to prove by "clear and convincing" evidence that the landlord's action was taken "for the sole purpose of retaliation." n509 Some jurisdictions have adopted this standard by statute. n510 Because the landlord may be able to show that there was, at least in part, another motive for the landlord's conduct, the requirement of proving a "sole" motive is a heavy burden for a tenant to bear.

A less stringent standard requires the tenant to show that landlord's retaliatory motive was the dominant motive for the landlord's action. n511 The Restatement favors this standard; it requires the tenant to show that the landlord's action was "primarily motivated" by the tenant's protected activity. n512 As noted above, the Restatement would also allow the tenant to take advantage of an evidentiary presumption of retaliatory motive. Once the presumption arises, the burden would shift to the landlord to produce evidence that the primary motivation for the landlord's actions was non retaliatory. n513 In any event, the ultimate burden of persuasion remains with the tenant. n514

Other standards of proof have been articulated in terms of the showing that the landlord must make in order to overcome a presumption of retaliatory motive. Thus, it has been said that the landlord must show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that there was a substantial non retaliatory reason for the landlord's conduct. n515 It has also been said that the landlord must show that the landlord's conduct was motivated by "some legitimate business purpose." n516 A more difficult standard requires the landlord to prove that the decision to evict the tenant was "independent" of the tenant's protected activity. n517

§ 41.08(e) Tenant Remedies.

The most common application of the retaliatory conduct doctrine is to permit the tenant to assert the landlord's retaliatory motive as an affirmative defense in the landlord's action for possession of the leased premises. This remedy is set forth in statutes that incorporate tenant protections against retaliation. n518 It is also established by court decisions that adopt the retaliatory conduct doctrine. n519

Another potential application of the retaliatory conduct doctrine is as a basis for injunctive relief. Several courts, and the Restatement, have recognized that the tenant may obtain an injunction against the landlord's action for possession of the premises when the landlord's motive is retaliatory. n520 Injunctive relief could benefit a tenant who is a defendant in a summary possession action in a jurisdiction that does not permit tenants to raise equitable and affirmative defenses in summary possession proceedings. n521

Injunctive relief could also benefit a tenant whose landlord declines to renew a periodic tenancy, reduces the level of services to the leased premises, or raises the rent in retaliation for protected activity. However, there is not much case authority regarding the availability of injunctive relief in these situations, and most statutes that prohibit landlord retaliation do not specifically provide for injunctive relief. n522 An injunction has been ordered to prevent a landlord from retaliating against the tenant by raising the amount of the rent. n523 Courts have reached different results on whether a tenant can obtain injunctive relief against the landlord's retaliatory refusal to renew a lease. n524 The Restatement does not take a position on whether injunctive relief is available other than with respect to an eviction proceeding. n525

Damages may also be a remedial option. A number of statutes permit the tenant to terminate the lease and to recover damages, or to recover possession of the premises and damages, if the tenant is dispossessed of the premises by a landlord's retaliatory eviction. n526 Some statutes permit a tenant to recover damages in an amount equal to a multiple of the tenant's actual damages or a multiple of the rental amount. n527 The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act provides that the tenant may recover the greater of three months' rent or three times the tenant's actual damages, plus reasonable attorneys' fees, in the event that the landlord engages in prohibited retaliatory conduct. If the tenant terminates the lease, the Uniform Act also provides for recovery of prepaid rent and any security deposit that is recoverable by the tenant. n528 In the absence of an applicable statutory provision, some courts have permitted tenant recovery of damages based on the unlawful conduct of the landlord. n529 In a proper case, the landlord could also be subject to a claim for punitive damages n530 or damages for the tenant's emotional distress. n531

§ 41.08(f) Dissipation of Retaliatory Motive.

A tenant who avoids eviction on the basis that the landlord's motive was retaliatory should not be entitled to remain on the premises in perpetuity if grounds for eviction by the landlord are present. In the Edwards v. Habib case, the court said that the landlord could proceed with a new eviction action when the illegal motive has "dissipated." n532 But the court did not discuss how that point should be determined. Several approaches have emerged.

One approach, advanced by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals, is to require a landlord, who has been previously barred from evicting a tenant by the retaliatory eviction doctrine, to establish that the new eviction is motivated by legitimate business purposes. n533 This could be a difficult burden for the landlord to carry, once a retaliatory motive has been found in the initial eviction action.

Another alternative is to permit the landlord to proceed with eviction, assuming proper grounds, after the landlord repairs the condition that was the subject of the tenant's complaint to governmental authorities. n534 This approach would not require the landlord's retaliatory motive to be dissipated at all; however, in one case in which the court used this approach, it said that the tenant should be given sufficient time to obtain other suitable housing, and that if the landlord's motive was unlawful, the tenant should be entitled to damages, possibly including punitive damages. n535 Of course, to the extent that this approach ultimately permits the landlord to engage in deferred retaliation against the tenant by means of a later eviction, it entails a risk of deterring tenant from reporting housing code violations. n536

The Restatement regards the matter of dissipation of retaliatory motive as a matter of intent, to be determined from the weight of the evidence. n537 Factors that are relevant to determining whether the landlord's current motivation is retaliatory include the length of time that has elapsed since the time of the previous determination of retaliatory action, and whether the tenant has repeated the acts that previously caused the landlord to engage in the retaliation. n538 It should also be noted that, under the Restatement rule, a landlord will not be found to have taken retaliatory action against a tenant if the tenant is materially in default in the performance of lease obligations at the time the landlord acts. n539

A Maryland statute offers another approach to dissipation of motive. It simply permits the landlord to evict a tenant for any reason once six months have elapsed from the time a determination has been made that the landlord's action was retaliatory. n540

§ 41.08(g) Limits to the Retaliatory Conduct Doctrine.

As noted above, the application of the retaliatory conduct doctrine has been generally limited to the residential landlord-tenant context. Additional, more specific, limitations on the doctrine are set forth in some statutes, and advocated by the Restatement.

Statutes limit the application of the retaliatory conduct doctrine in various ways. For example, statutes that are based on the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act permit the landlord to bring an action for possession, notwithstanding a retaliatory motive, if: 1) the violation of the building code complained of by the tenant was caused primarily by lack of reasonable care by the tenant, a member of the tenant's family, or another person on the premises with the tenant's consent; 2) the tenant is in default in the payment of rent; or 3) if compliance with the building code would require alterations that would effectively deprive the tenant of the use of the dwelling unit. n541 Some statutes permit the landlord to recover the premises if the tenant is committing waste or using the property for illegal purposes, or if the leased premises are in full compliance with all applicable housing codes at the time the landlord's complaint for possession is filed. n542

The Restatement limits the scope of its retaliatory action rule to landlords who are "in the business of renting residential property." Coverage is also limited to landlord actions that are in retaliation for tenant complaints made "in good faith and with reasonable cause." The Restatement rule does not apply when the tenant is materially in default in the performance of lease obligations at the time the landlord acts. n543

§ 41.08(h) Constitutional Issues.

Tenants have occasionally contended that retaliatory conduct by private landlords violated their constitutional rights of free speech or assembly, or the right to petition the government for redress of grievances. However, in order for the landlord's conduct to be subject to constitutional constraints, there must be sufficient state action to engage the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. In the vast majority of retaliatory conduct cases, a constitutional violation has not been found. Some courts have observed that the constitutional claims could be successful on a showing of state action, but have not resolved the issue, concluding instead that public policy prohibits the landlord's retaliatory conduct. n544 Most courts that have reached the constitutional issue have not found sufficient state involvement in the landlord's resort to summary eviction proceedings to support a constitutional violation. n545 In a few cases, however, the tenant's constitutional contentions have been successful. n546

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 481. 397 F.2d 687 (D.C. Cir. 1968) , cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1016 (1969) .

(n2)Footnote 482. 397 F.2d at 699 .

(n3)Footnote 483. See, e.g., Wright v. Brady, 889 P.2d 105 (Idaho App. 1995) ; Building Monitoring Sys., Inc. v. Paxton, 905 P.2d 1215 (Utah 1995) ; Dickhut v. Norton, 173 N.W.2d 297 (Wis. 1970) ; Jonathan M. Purver, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, Annotation, 40 A.L.R.3d 753 (1971) .

(n4)Footnote 484. See chapter 43 § 43.05(e)(1), n.753 (lists state statutes that prohibit retaliatory conduct by landlords); see also Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 14.8 Statutory Note, 14.9 Reporter's Note 1(b) (1977).

(n5)Footnote 485. See, e.g., Schweiger v. Superior Court, 476 P.2d 97 (Cal. 1970) (repair and deduct); Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) (rent withholding).

(n6)Footnote 486. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 5.101.

(n7)Footnote 487. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 34.03.310; Chapter 43 § 43.05(e)(1); Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 Statutory Note (1977).

(n8)Footnote 488. See, e.g., William C. Cornitius, Inc. v. Wheeler, 556 P.2d 666 (Or. 1976) .

(n9)Footnote 489. See, e.g., Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5516; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 566.03.

(n10)Footnote 490. See Pohlman v. Metropolitan Trailer Park, Inc., 312 A.2d 888 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1973) ; Windward Partners v. Delos Santos, 577 P.2d 326 (Hawaii 1978) .

(n11)Footnote 491. See Barela v. Superior Court, 636 P.2d 582 (Cal. 1981) .

(n12)Footnote 492. See S.P. Growers Ass'n v. Rodriquez, 552 P.2d 721 (Cal. 1976) .

(n13)Footnote 493. See Custom Parking, Inc. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. Rptr. 674 (Ct. Ct. App. 1982) .

(n14)Footnote 494. See Imperial Colliery Co. v. Fout, 373 S.E.2d 489 (W. Va. 1988) .

(n15)Footnote 495. See, e.g., E. & E. Newman, Inc, v. Hallock, 281 A.2d 544 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1971) ; Schweiger v. Superior Court, 476 P.2d 97 (Cal. 1970) ; Golphin v. Park Monroe Assocs., 353 A.2d 314 (D.C. 1976) .

(n16)Footnote 496. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) .

(n17)Footnote 497. See, e.g., Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6001.

(n18)Footnote 498. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 5.101.

(n19)Footnote 499. N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 540:13 a, 540:13 b.

(n20)Footnote 500. See Idaho Code § 55- 2715.

(n21)Footnote 501. See N.Y. Unconsol. Laws §§ 8590, 8609 (rent control statute); see generally Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 Statutory Note (1977).

(n22)Footnote 502. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 cmt. b (1977).

(n23)Footnote 503. See id.

(n24)Footnote 504. See chapter 43, § 43.05(e); Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 Statutory Note (1977).

(n25)Footnote 505. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 5.101.

(n26)Footnote 506. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) .

(n27)Footnote 507. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 cmt. f (1977).

(n28)Footnote 508. 173 N.W.2d 297 (Wis. 1970) .

(n29)Footnote 509. 173 N.W.2d at 302 .

(n30)Footnote 510. See, e.g., Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8-208.1.

(n31)Footnote 511. See, e.g., McQueen v. Druker, 438 F.2d 781 (1st Cir. 1971) ; Cal. Civ. Code § 1942.5;

Comment, California Common Law Defense Against Landlord Retaliatory Conduct, 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1161, 1176 1180 (1975).

(n32)Footnote 512. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8(4) (1977).

(n33)Footnote 513. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 cmt. f (1977).

(n34)Footnote 514. See id.; see also Hillview Associates v. Bloomquist, 440 N.W.2d 867 (Iowa 1989) (burden of persuasion remains with the tenant).

(n35)Footnote 515. See Parkin v. Fitzgerald, 240 N.W.2d 828 (Minn. 1976) .

(n36)Footnote 516. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp., 463 F.2d 853, 865 (D.C. Cir. 1972) .

(n37)Footnote 517. See Silberg v. Lipscomb, 285 A.2d 86, 88 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1971) .

(n38)Footnote 518. See chapter 43 § 43.05(e)(2); Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.9 statutory note (1977) (lists statutes based on tenant remedies).

(n39)Footnote 519. See, e.g., Edwards v. Habib, 397 F.2d 687 (D.C. Cir. 1968) , cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1016 (1969) .

(n40)Footnote 520. See, e.g., E. & E. Newman, Inc. v. Hallock, 281 A.2d 544 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1971) ; Markese v. Cooper, 333 N.Y.S.2d 63 (Co. Ct. 1972) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.9 Reporter's Note 3 (1977); but see Hosey v. Club Van Cortlandt, 299 F. Supp. 501 (S.D.N.Y 1969) (injunctive relief denied on the ground that tenant could raise a retaliatory eviction defense in the summary possession proceeding).

(n41)Footnote 521. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.9 Reporter's Note 2 (1977).

(n42)Footnote 522. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.9 Statutory Note (1977).

(n43)Footnote 523. See E. & E. Newman, Inc. v. Hallock, 281 A.2d 544 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1971) .

(n44)Footnote 524. See, e.g., Engler v. Capital Mgt. Corp., 271 A.2d 615 (N.J. Ch. Div. 1970) (relief granted); Lincoln Square Apts. v. Davis, 295 N.Y.S.2d 358 (Civ. Ct. 1968) , aff'd, 316 N.Y.S.2d 130 (Sup. Ct. 1969) (no relief).

(n45)Footnote 525. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.9 caveat (1977).

(n46)Footnote 526. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33 1381.

(n47)Footnote 527. See, e.g., Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.385 (two months' rent or two times actual damages).

(n48)Footnote 528. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act §§ 4.107, 5.101.

(n49)Footnote 529. See, e.g., Aweeka v. Bonds, 97 Cal. Rptr. 650 (Cal. Ct. App. 1971) ; Markese v. Cooper, 333 N.Y.S.2d 63 (Co. Ct. 1972) ; See also Murphy v. Smallridge, 468 S.E.2d 167 (W. Va. 1996) (residential tenant does not have to continue to live on the leased premises to preserve a cause of action for retaliatory eviction; a tenant who vacates may assert an affirmative claim for relief for retaliatory eviction).

(n50)Footnote 530. See, e.g., id.

(n51)Footnote 531. See, e.g., Gokey v. Bessette, 580 A.2d 488 (Vt. 1990) .

(n52)Footnote 532. 397 F.2d 687 at 702 .

(n53)Footnote 533. See Robinson v. Diamond Hous. Corp. 463 F.2d 853 (D.C. Cir. 1972) .

(n54)Footnote 534. See, e.g., Cornell v. Dimmick, 342 N.Y.S.2d 275 (City Ct. 1973) .

(n55)Footnote 535. See Markese v. Cooper, 333 N.Y.S.2d 63 (Co. Ct. 1972) ; accord, Building Monitoring Sys., Inc. v. Paxton, 905 P.2d 1215 (Utah 1995) (once repairs have been made, landlord may serve tenant with eviction notice without proffering evidence of intent; however, the burden is on the landlord to show that the landlord has given the tenant reasonable opportunity to procure other housing).

(n56)Footnote 536. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 12.6 (Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. 1980).

(n57)Footnote 537. Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 Reporter's Note 7 (1977).

(n58)Footnote 538. See id., cmt. i.

(n59)Footnote 539. See id., § 14.8(3) cmt. e.

(n60)Footnote 540. See Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. § 8-208.1(e).

(n61)Footnote 541. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 5.101.

(n62)Footnote 542. See, e.g., Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521- 74.

(n63)Footnote 543. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 14.8 (1977).

(n64)Footnote 544. See, e.g., Edwards v. Habib, 397 F.2d 687 (D.C. Cir. 1968) , cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1016 (1969) (extensive discussion of the constitutional issues).

(n65)Footnote 545. See, e.g., Newby v. Alto Riviera Apts., 131 Cal. Rptr. 547 (Cal. App. 1976) ; Aluli v. Trusdell, 508 P.2d 1217 (Haw. 1973) , cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1040 (1973) ; modified on other grounds, Windward Partners v. Delos Santos, 577 P.2d 326 (Haw. 1978) .

(n66)Footnote 546. See, e.g., McQueen v. Druker, 438 F.2d 781 (1st Cir. 1971) (federally assisted housing project); Lavoie v. Bigwood, 457 F.2d 7 (1st Cir. 1972) (§ 1983 action; landlord monopoly resulted from zoning laws); Hosey v. Club Van Cortlandt, 299 F. Supp 501 (S.D.N.Y. 1969) (landlord recourse to summary proceedings involved sufficient state action); Engler v. Capital Mgt. Corp., 271 A.2d 615 (N.J. Ch. Div. 1970) (retaliation for formation of tenant union).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.09

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.09 Rights and Duties Arising Under Tort Law.

[Go To Supp]

When land is leased to a tenant, the tenant acquires an estate in land, and becomes an owner and occupier of the premises. As a result, the tenant has traditionally been considered to be subject to the normal responsibilities of someone who is in possession, including the responsibility for harms caused by negligently created or maintained conditions on the leased premises. n547 The traditional approach has been to classify entrants onto the land as trespassers, licensees, or invitees, and to allocate different duties to the possessor of the land for each classification. n548 Most courts continue to apply this approach, but some have moved toward the imposition of a generalized duty of ordinary care. n549

In contrast, the landlord has traditionally enjoyed an immunity from tort liability for personal injuries that occur to the tenant, and to others, as a result of dangerous conditions on the leased property. To be sure, the traditional rule has long been subject to several important exceptions, but it has nonetheless prevailed for many years in the common law. In recent times, however, the conceptual foundations for the traditional rule have eroded to a significant degree, and the trend has been to impose tort liability on landlords.

To some extent, the increased tort liability of landlords has resulted from an expansion of the exceptions to the traditional rule. However, in a number of jurisdictions, the traditional rule has itself been repudiated and replaced by a general standard of negligence liability, at least in the residential landlord-tenant context. This section considers the traditional rule of landlord non liability in tort, the exceptions to the traditional rule, and more recent developments that have imposed tort liability on landlords under ordinary negligence and strict liability theories. It also discusses the duty of the landlord to protect tenants against the criminal conduct of third parties. The section considers whether landlords may shield themselves from tort liability by including exculpatory provisions in their leases. And it discusses the related issue of tenant liability for criminal acts of third parties.

§ 41.09(a) The Traditional Rule of Landlord Tort Immunity.

The traditional common law rule is that the landlord is immune from tort liability for physical harm resulting from dangerous conditions on the leased property. The rule has generally been rationalized on the theory that a lease is a conveyance of real property to which the doctrine of caveat emptor applies. The landlord was thought to make no warranties, and was thought to have no duties, with respect to the condition of the leased premises at the time of their conveyance to the tenant. n550 Furthermore, in "selling" the land to the tenant, the landlord was thought to have surrendered both possession and control, retaining only a reversionary interest. The tenant, as temporary owner and occupier of the land, was regarded as being subject to the responsibilities of one in possession, including the responsibilities of maintaining the premises in a reasonably safe condition to protect persons who come upon the land. n551

§ 41.09(b) Exceptions to the Traditional Rule.

The traditional rule of landlord tort immunity persists in most jurisdictions, but it is subject to a number of exceptions. These exceptions, which have been created as a matter of social policy, are generally applicable to both residential and commercial tenancies. Modern courts are increasingly willing to impose tort liability on landlords for personal injuries to tenants or to others that result from dangerous conditions on the leased premises. In many instances, courts have imposed such liability through the application, or the expansion, of exceptions to the traditional rule. Liability issues may also be addressed by statute. n552

§ 41.09(b)(1) Dangerous Condition on a Portion of the Property Controlled by the Landlord.

It is well established that the landlord's traditional tort immunity is not available when injuries to tenants or to others result from dangerous conditions on portions of the property that are within the control of the landlord. In this situation, the position of the landlord is essentially that of a possessor of land who invites or permits others to use the property, and who thereby owes such users a duty of reasonable care to maintain the property in a reasonably safe condition for the contemplated use. n553 The landlord is therefore under an affirmative obligation to exercise reasonable care to inspect portions of the land that are within the landlord's control and to repair dangerous defects located there. The obligation extends not only to the tenant, but also to the tenant's family members, employees, invitees, and guests, and to others who are rightfully on the land. n554

§ 41.09(b)(1)(i) The Issue of Landlord Control.

One of the most frequently litigated issues regarding this exception is that of landlord control, or, more precisely, whether the personal injury in question has been caused by a dangerous condition located on property that is within the control of the landlord. The vast majority of the cases in which the exception has been found to apply are cases involving common areas or cases involving other portions of property, retained by the landlord, that are necessary for the safe use of the leased premises. Thus, the landlord's duty of reasonable care has been found to apply to common areas such as entrances, n555 stairways, n556 elevators, n557 escalators, n558 basements, n559 parking lots n560 and playgrounds. n561 The landlord has also been found to have a duty of reasonable care with respect to the condition of structural portions of the property within the control of the landlord, such as roofs n562 exterior walls, n563 and systems providing sewage disposal and other services to the leased premises. n564

In some instances, the exception has been extended to impose tort liability on landlords for injuries that have occurred within portions of the property leased to tenants. Some courts have found sufficient landlord control over such portions of the leased property based on lease provisions obligating the landlord to make repairs and providing the landlord with the right to enter the leased premises to make the repairs. n565 A few courts seem to have found sufficient landlord control from the mere reservation of a right to enter to make repairs, n566 but most courts that have considered the issue have held otherwise. n567 The Restatement, which recognizes the general exception to landlord tort immunity for areas within the landlord's control, n568 takes the sensible position that the exception "does not apply to any part of the leased property specifically transferred to the tenant under the lease with regard to which the landlord retains a right to inspect, to repair, or to enter for some other purpose." n569

Landlord control issues have arisen with some frequency when personal injuries have been caused by vicious animals owned by tenants. n570 The general rule of landlord tort immunity, where it is recognized, should provide some protection for the landlord in such cases, and landlords have, in fact, often avoided liability on the ground that the animal was under the control of the tenant, not the landlord. n571 But landlords have been found to be subject to tort liability in some cases. Most of these cases are ones in which the landlord knew about the vicious animal and had some right to "control" the presence of the animal on the premises. For example, the landlord has been exposed to tort liability when the dangerous animal has been located on common areas controlled by the landlord, n572 or kept by the landlord's on site property manager. n573 Some courts have imposed liability on landlords based, at least in part, on lease provisions that prohibit tenants from keeping animals on the premises. Here the theory seems to be that it is reasonable to impose liability on the landlord if the landlord knew of the vicious animal and had the right, under the lease, to eliminate the problem, but failed to do so. n574 A different variation on the control theme was reflected in a California case in which the landlord repeatedly renewed a month to month lease to a tenant who kept a vicious dog on the premises even though the landlord apparently knew that the dog had bitten several people. The court said that if the landlord had enough control over the premises to obviate the danger, "enlightened public policy" would impose a duty of ordinary care. n575 But the Nevada Supreme court discerned another policy reason generally not to impose liability on landlords in such cases. Requiring landlords to "evict tenants with dangerous dogs would merely result in the tenants' moving off to another location with their still dangerous animals." n576 And that, thought the court, would not solve the problem. n577

§ 41.09(b)(1)(ii) Conditions to Which the Exception Applies.

It is clear that the exception applies to dangerous artificial conditions, such as defects in stairways or heating systems. n578 The prevailing view is that the exception also reaches naturally occurring dangerous conditions, such as accumulations of ice and snow, n579 but there is some authority to the contrary. n580

The view that natural accumulations of ice and snow should be handled under the general duty of care that landlords have with respect to common areas is sometimes referred to as the "Connecticut rule," on account of the Connecticut Supreme Court's decision in Reardon v. Shimelman. n581 The contrary view is sometimes called the "Massachusetts rule," in reference to the Massachusetts Supreme Court's decision in Woods v. Naumkeag Steam Cotton Co. n582 In the Woods case, the court indicated that a landlord had a duty to keep common areas in safe repair, but said that the landlord had no duty to remove "naturally" accumulated patches of ice and snow. The rule has been justified, at least in part, on the ground that imposition of a landlord duty of care with respect to snow and ice accumulations would be unreasonable in areas of frequent snowfall. n583 There is also an intermediate view, reflected in New York cases, that a landlord is not liable for injuries connected with natural accumulations of ice and snow, but the landlord has a duty to remove rough and bumpy accumulations, such as hummocks or ridges, in the path of a user of a walk. n584

Even where no general common law duty to remove ice or snow accumulations may be recognized, the landlord could still be liable for resulting injuries if the landlord negligently breaches a contract or undertaking to remove such accumulations. n585

A number of courts have considered whether the landlord can be liable, under this exception to tort immunity, for failing to provide lighting to common areas. Most jurisdictions appear to adhere to the view that a landlord owes no general duty to provide artificial lighting to common areas, at least in the absence of conditions that would make the common areas peculiarly dangerous if unlighted. n586 Some courts have adopted the position that the landlord's duty to use ordinary care to keep common areas safe applies to common area illumination. n587 In actuality, landlords are often found to have a duty to provide lighting to common areas, either because a statute requires the landlord to do so, n588 or because the landlord is found to have assumed a duty to provide such lighting. n589

The vast majority of courts apply the exception to dangerous conditions that arise after the beginning of the tenancy, as well as to dangerous conditions existing at the time the tenancy began. n590

§ 41.09(b)(1)(iii) Nature of the Landlord's Duty.

The landlord's duty, under this exception to tort immunity, is one of reasonable care. The landlord will not be liable in tort, even if an injury occurs on land within the landlord's control, if no injury was reasonably to be anticipated from the condition, or if the condition was not subject to discovery by reasonable inspection. n591 It must be shown that the landlord knew of the condition that caused the injury, or that the landlord would have known of the condition had the landlord exercised reasonable care in inspecting the premises. n592 The Restatement would not impose liability on the landlord, under this exception to tort immunity, unless the landlord, "by the exercise of reasonable care could have: (1) discovered the condition and the unreasonable risk involved therein; and (2) made the condition safe." n593

§ 41.09(b)(1)(iv) Effect of Tenant's Knowledge of the Condition.

The tenant's knowledge of the dangerous condition will not prevent an injured third party from recovering from the landlord. n594 However, the tenant may be liable for injuries to a third party if the tenant had knowledge of an unsafe condition and failed to provide proper warning. n595 If the tenant is the injured party, the tenant's knowledge of the unsafe condition may give rise to a landlord defense of contributory negligence. n596

§ 41.09(b)(2) Undisclosed Dangerous Condition Known to the Landlord.

Another well recognized exception to landlord tort immunity arises when the landlord knows of a dangerous latent condition on the leased premises, but fails to disclose the existence of the condition to the tenant at the time the tenant takes possession. If an injury proximately results from the dangerous condition, the landlord may be liable in tort. n597 Landlord liability under this exception has been justified on the theory that the landlord has maintained a concealed danger or has set a trap for the tenant. n598 Liability has also been justified on grounds of deceit. n599

The landlord's duty concerning existing latent defects is generally one of disclosure, not of inspection or repair. n600 Indeed, it has been held that the landlord does not incur liability under this exception for defects that were not discovered because of a negligent inspection. n601 In some jurisdictions, however, the landlord must, in order to avoid tort liability under this exception, exercise reasonable care to discover latent defects prior to entering into a lease. n602 Even in these jurisdictions, a landlord should not be liable if the dangerous condition is not discoverable through reasonable inspection. n603

It is not necessary that the landlord have actual knowledge of a dangerous condition in order to have a duty to disclose it to the tenant. It is sufficient that the landlord be aware of facts from which a reasonable person would conclude there is a danger. n604 In this connection, it has been said that the landlord has a duty to disclose to the tenant information, already known to the landlord, that would cause a reasonably prudent landowner to suspect that a danger exists. n605 The Restatement, which recognizes this exception to landlord tort immunity, would require the landlord to disclose the dangerous condition if the landlord "knows or has reason to know of the condition, realizes or should realize the risk involved, and has reason to expect that the tenant will not discover the condition or realize the risk." n606

The landlord will not be liable, under this exception to tort immunity, if the tenant has actual knowledge of the dangerous condition, or if the condition is so obvious that the tenant cannot reasonably be expected to fail to discover it when the tenant takes possession of the leased premises. n607

The general rule appears to be that the landlord is not required to report the existence of a latent dangerous condition to the tenant if the landlord becomes aware of it after the tenant takes possession of the property. n608 An exception to this rule has been recognized when the condition is a structural defect. n609 The Restatement departs from the general rule, and would require the landlord to disclose the existence of a dangerous condition, existing at the time that the tenant takes possession, that is subsequently discovered by the landlord. n610

Landlords who are subject to liability under this exception to tort immunity have been found liable for injuries to the tenant, to members of the tenant's family, to guests and invitees of the tenant, and to others who are rightfully on the premises. n611

§ 41.09(b)(3) Conditions Dangerous to Persons Outside of the Premises.

Another exception to the general rule of landlord tort immunity arises with respect to conditions on the leased premises that involve an unreasonable risk of harm to others outside of the premises. If the landlord knows, or should know, that such a condition exists at the time possession of the leased premises is transferred to the tenant, the landlord will be liable for injuries to others, outside of the leased premises, proximately caused by the condition. n612 Liability under this exception has been said to be based on the landlord's failure to eliminate the dangerous condition when the property was within the landlord's control. n613 It has also been noted that the doctrine of caveat emptor, which supports general landlord tort immunity, has no application to individuals who are not parties to the lease and who are injured outside of the leased premises. n614

Most of the cases in which this exception has been applied are ones involving private nuisances or conditions dangerous to individuals on roadways or sidewalks that adjoin the leased premises. Examples of dangerous conditions that have been covered by the exception include explosions on the leased property, n615 a defective parapet, n616 and a dangerous awning hook. n617 In a few cases, the landlord has been liable for a nuisance created by the activities of the tenant, to which the landlord consented at the time the lease was made. n618 The Restatement provides that this exception does not apply to conditions arising from purely natural causes; however, it also provides that if human forces have contributed in an essential way to the creation of the dangerous condition, the landlord may be liable in tort. n619

It appears to be generally agreed that the landlord's lack of actual knowledge of the condition will not be a defense to tort liability under this exception. It is sufficient, for purposes of imposing tort liability, that the landlord could have discovered the dangerous condition by the exercise of reasonable care. n620 This is the Restatement position. It states that a landlord who transfers possession of leased property in a condition "which he realizes, or should realize," will involve an unreasonable risk of physical harm to persons outside of the leased property, "is subject to the same liability for physical harm subsequently caused to them by the condition as though he had remained in possession." n621

The fact that the tenant knows of the existence of the dangerous condition does not shield the landlord from liability to others outside of the leased premises. n622 Indeed, it has been held that an express agreement by the tenant to eliminate a known dangerous condition will not relieve the landlord from liability when the tenant fails to eliminate the condition and third persons outside of the premises are thereby injured. n623

§ 41.09(b)(4) Premises Leased for Public Purpose.

Courts have also recognized an exception to landlord tort immunity when the property is leased for a purpose involving admission of the public. In that situation, there is general agreement that the landlord has an affirmative duty to exercise reasonable care to inspect and make repairs on the premises, prior to the transfer of possession, in order to eliminate any unreasonable risk of harm to members of the public. n624 Landlord tort liability under this exception arises out of defects that exist prior to tenant occupancy; the landlord is not liable for the negligence of the tenant in maintaining property that is turned over to the tenant in good condition. n625

Some older cases indicated that landlord liability under this exception is justified on the basis that the landlord has impliedly "invited" members of the public to enter the leased premises. n626 However, a more persuasive justification may be that public policy requires that a landlord be held to a higher level of responsibility when the landlord knows that the purpose of the lease will involve admission of members of the public, who have the right to expect reasonably safe conditions on the property. n627

The earliest cases in which this exception to tort immunity was applied involved wharves and piers. n628 But the exception has also been applied when property has been leased for such purposes as the operation of hotels, n629 amusement parks, n630 theatres, n631 retail stores and shops, n632 restaurants, n633 business offices, n634 and public garages. n635

A number of courts have stated that the exception does not apply unless the public is expected to enter the leased premises in large numbers at a time. n636 However, the weight of authority is that the applicability of the exception does not depend on the number of public admissions expected or achieved. Instead, the nature of the use itself is determinative. n637

There has been some disagreement over whether the members of the public must pay for admission to the leased premises in order for the exception to apply. Some decisions have considered the payment of an admission price to be a basis for determining the existence of a public use and for establishing the existence of a contractual type relationship between the landlord and the injured member of the public. n638 But the weight of authority does not require paid admission in order to impose tort liability on the landlord. n639 This is the Restatement view as well. n640 However, it should be noted the payment of admission is relevant to the question of landowner tort liability under some statutes that limit the liability of landowners who make their property available for public recreational use. A number of these statutes provide that the statutory limitation on liability is not available when consideration is charged for permission to enter the property. n641

Some courts have declined to apply this exception to landlord tort immunity when the tenant is not obligated to pay rent to the landlord under the lease. n642 However, it seems to be more generally held that the tenant does not have to pay rent to the landlord in order for the exception to apply. In other words, landlord liability may arise under a gratuitous lease of real property for a purpose involving admission of the public. n643

In many instances, portions of the leased premises are intended to be open for public admission and other portions are not. The rule that has emerged is that the landlord will not be liable for injuries occurring on a non public portion of the property. n644 Moreover, landlord liability will generally be found only when the plaintiff is on the premises for the purpose for which the premises are open to the public. n645

§ 41.09(b)(5) When the Landlord Contracts to Repair.

There is substantial disagreement among courts as to whether the landlord's breach of a covenant to make repairs on the leased premises should make the landlord liable in tort for resulting injuries. The traditional view is that the landlord's breach of a repair covenant entitles the tenant to sue for breach of the covenant, but does not enable the tenant to bring a tort action for the injuries. n646 This traditional rule has been rationalized on the ground that landlord liability is based on control, and the right to enter to make repairs does not give the landlord sufficient control over the premises to justify the imposition of tort liability. n647 This is still the rule in many jurisdictions. However, there is a modern trend to the contrary, and an apparent majority of jurisdictions have now concluded that the landlord may be liable in tort for breach of a repair covenant, if the landlord fails to exercise reasonable care to perform the covenant, and personal injuries result. n648 The Restatement also recognizes this exception to landlord tort immunity. n649 And such liability may arise by statute, as well. n650

Several justifications have been advanced for this exception to tort immunity, not all of which are persuasive. One justification is that the landlord retains the right, under the repair covenant, to enter the leased premises and to inspect its condition, and that the landlord is therefore in control of the leased premises. But such "control" by the landlord has been described as a fiction, and it has been said that the landlord's privilege to enter the property does not differ in any significant respect from that of a carpenter hired to do the work. n651 It has also been suggested that the landlord's promise induces the tenant to forego making repairs, and that the landlord should be liable for the consequences of the tenant's being misled. n652 A similar, more persuasive justification, is that the peculiar relationship between landlord and tenant gives the tenant a special reason and right to rely on the landlord's contract to make the repair, and that the responsibility for the harm should be placed on the party best able to bear it. n653

Regardless of the theory on which the exception is justified, courts that recognize the exception are agreed that the covenant to repair must be supported by consideration. n654 A gratuitous promise by the landlord to undertake repairs, made after the commencement of the lease term, would not satisfy this standard. n655 But courts have found consideration in the tenant's initial acceptance of the lease, or in the tenant's agreement to stay on for a new term. n656

The general rule is that the landlord has no duty to inspect premises occupied by the tenant unless the landlord has contracted to do so. Accordingly, the landlord is ordinarily responsible, under this exception to landlord tort immunity, only for injuries that arise after the landlord has notice of the dangerous condition and after the landlord has had a reasonable time to correct the condition. n657 It has been held that the tenant need not give notice to the landlord, however, when the landlord is already sufficiently aware of the condition requiring repair. n658

There is some difference of opinion regarding the scope of landlord liability. Some cases indicate that the injured person must be a party to the repair contract with the landlord in order to recover. n659 Where tenant guests are concerned, some decisions have limited the responsibility of the landlord to that of refraining from willful harm or from recklessly or wantonly exposing guests to danger. n660 However, recognizing that a tenant rents property with the intention of having guests or serving customers, many courts permit recovery by other persons who are lawfully on the premises. n661 The Restatement view is that landlord tort liability extends "to the tenant and others upon the leased property with the consent of the tenant or his subtenant." n662

This exception to landlord tort immunity has occasionally been applied to permit a tenant to sue for indemnification when the landlord's failure to make repairs causes personal injury to a third person who recovers damages from the tenant. n663

§ 41.09(b)(6) When the Landlord Is Negligent in Making Repairs.

If a landlord is negligent in making repairs on the leased premises, there is general agreement that the landlord is liable for resulting injuries to the tenant, to members of the tenant's family, or to others rightfully on the premises. n664 This exception to landlord tort immunity does not require the existence of an agreement or a statutory duty to repair. Even if the landlord is a volunteer, the landlord may be liable in tort for injuries resulting from negligent repair efforts. n665

Most of the cases to which the exception applies involve landlord repair efforts that make the leased premises more dangerous than before or that give the leased premises a deceptive appearance of safety. n666 Indeed, it has been held that the exception does not otherwise apply. n667 Nonetheless, a number of courts have declined to condition tort liability upon a showing that the repair efforts worsened the condition of the premises or gave the premises a deceptive appearance of safety. Instead, these courts have indicated that the exception applies when the landlord fails to exercise reasonable care in making the repairs. n668 The Restatement, which recognizes the general exception to landlord tort immunity, takes no position on whether the exception extends that far. n669

Although there is some authority to the contrary, n670 many courts, and the Restatement, have taken the position that the landlord is not liable under this exception when the tenant either knows, or should know, of the landlord's negligence in making the repairs. n671 It has been said, for example, that tenant reliance on the landlord's repair efforts is the "sine qua non" for imposing liability on the landlord. n672 Thus, tenants have been denied recovery when they were not aware of the landlord's repair efforts, n673 or were aware of the repair efforts but also were aware that defects continued to exist after the repair efforts were undertaken. n674 Recovery has also been denied to tenant guests when the landlord has partially completed a repair job, leaving the premises in a condition whose danger was obvious to the tenant. n675

There is some difference of opinion regarding the effect on landlord liability when the negligent repair work is done by an independent contractor hired by the landlord. Courts are in general agreement that the landlord will be liable for the contractor's negligence when the work is done on common areas or other areas over which the landlord has retained control, n676 or when the work is done on the leased premises pursuant to a covenant or statutory duty to repair. n677 However, there is disagreement regarding the liability of the landlord when repairs on the leased premises are undertaken gratuitously. n678 The Restatement position is that a landlord who hires an independent contractor to make repairs that the landlord is under no duty to make, is subject to the same liability for physical harm resulting from the contractor's negligence as if the repair efforts had been undertaken directly by the landlord. n679 There is growing support for this view. n680

§ 41.09(b)(7) Breach of Furnished House Warranty.

Several jurisdictions recognize the existence of an implied warranty of fitness for occupancy when a landlord enters into a short term lease of a furnished house or apartment for immediate occupancy. n681 The basis of the implied warranty is that the tenant cannot be expected to adequately inspect the premises before entering into the lease. In most instances, breach of the landlord's warranty will entitle the tenant to vacate the premises and to avoid liability for rent. n682 However, in some cases, courts have permitted tenants to sue for personal injuries resulting from landlord breach of the implied warranty. n683

§ 41.09(b)(8) Breach of Duty Under Statute or Regulation.

The violation of a statute or administrative regulation as a basis for landlord tort liability is not ordinarily mentioned as an exception to the traditional rule of landlord tort immunity. n684 It has been suggested that the reason may be that the rule of liability that is involved is not a landlord-tenant rule as such, but a rule of tort law generally. n685 In any event, it is clear that landlord tort liability may arise out of the breach of a statutory or administrative duty.

In some instances, statutes relating to the condition of leased premises directly provide for tenant recovery of damages for injuries resulting from breach of the landlord's statutory obligations. n686 Even when, as is usually the case, the statute does not directly provide the tenant with a tort remedy, courts may use statutory requirements to define a standard of conduct for purposes of tort liability. n687 Of course, many enacted requirements do not lend themselves to such treatment; those that do are likely to be requirements that are imposed not merely for the general public interest but for the protection of certain classes of persons. In the latter instance, the purpose of the enactment might be served by providing a tort remedy to persons who are injured by a violation of the enacted standard. n688 Some requirements imposed on landlords under housing codes seem to fall into this category. n689

In fact, courts have often held that landlord violation of a statute or regulation requiring the landlord to keep the leased premises in repair constitutes evidence of negligence n690 or, perhaps, negligence per se. n691 Courts have also imposed tort liability on landlords when personal injuries resulted from the violation of statutory standards for safety. n692

The Restatement position is that landlord tort liability may arise from breach of a statutory or administrative duty to make repairs to the leased premises. It provides that a landlord will be subject to liability for personal injury if the landlord fails to exercise reasonable care to repair a dangerous condition, when the existence of the condition violates a duty created by statute or administrative regulation. n693 A comment to the Restatement states that the rule is based on the assumption that the statute or regulation represents a legislative determination of a standard of conduct required of landlords, and that imposing tort liability on the landlord will increase the likelihood that the will of the legislature, as expressed in the statute or regulation, will be effectuated. n694

The Restatement also takes the position, well supported in the case law, that the landlord is subject to tort liability for breach of a statutory obligation only when the landlord knows, or should have known, of the dangerous condition on the leased premises, and has had a reasonable opportunity to remedy the condition. n695 The Restatement further provides that the landlord is ordinarily chargeable with knowledge of a defect that exists at the time the tenant takes possession. n696

Some courts have refused to infer a tort remedy from the violation of a statutory duty when the applicable statute is silent on the subject, reasoning that the legislature did not intend to abrogate landlord tort immunity by enacting the legislation. n697

§ 41.09(b)(9) Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability.

As a result of court decision or statute, a majority of American jurisdictions recognize an implied warranty of habitability on the part of the landlord with respect to leased residential premises. Breach of the warranty of habitability typically suspends the tenant's rental obligations and subjects the landlord to remedies for breach of contract. A number of courts have also considered whether breach of the warranty of habitability should subject the landlord to liability in tort for resulting personal injuries. Because many jurisdictions recognize that tort liability may be based on the landlord's breach of a contractual duty to make repairs on the leased premises, n698 it would seem that tort liability for personal injuries could also be based on the landlord's breach of a warranty of habitability. A number of courts have so held. Most of the cases in which courts have concluded that the landlord may be liable in tort based on a breach of the implied warranty of habitability have indicated that the plaintiff's cause of action is one in negligence. n699 But it has also been suggested that violation of a statutory warranty of habitability may give rise to a cause of action based on negligence per se. n700 And there is some authority for the proposition that the landlord may be strictly liable for injuries that result from breach of a warranty of habitability. n701

The Restatement takes the position that breach of a warranty of habitability may expose the landlord to tort liability in negligence. It provides that a landlord is subject to tort liability if the landlord fails to exercise reasonable care to repair a dangerous condition located on the leased premises, if the existence of the dangerous condition violates an implied warranty of habitability, and if the tenant, or someone on the premises with the tenant's permission, is thereby harmed. n702 In advocating this position, a reporter's note to the Restatement states:

> Once it has become socially and judicially accepted that the implied warranty of habitability imposes a duty on the landlord to provide his tenant with housing which does not subject the tenant to unreasonable danger of harm, it will be difficult to insulate the landlord from tort liability when his failure to meet his duty results in injury to the tenant or one on the leased property with his consent. It would be disconcerting if the tenant who fell through the rotten floor of his kitchen could withhold rent until the hole was repaired, but could not recover for the personal injury he had sustained. The tort liability of the landlord in this situation serves the deterrent, compensatory, and loss distribution functions of tort law. n703

Not all courts that have considered the issue have concluded that breach by the landlord of a warranty of habitability may give rise to liability in tort. In Dapkunas v. Cagle, n704 for example, an Illinois appellate court declined to recognize a new exception to landlord tort immunity based on the existence of the previously recognized implied warranty of habitability, reasoning that adoption of the implied warranty did not mean that the rule of caveat emptor had been "completely discarded." n705 In Johnson v. Scandia Associates, Inc., n706 the Indiana Supreme Court drew a distinction between express and implied warranties of habitability for purposes of tort recovery. It stated that where the warranty of habitability is express, consequential damages for personal injury may be available as a remedy; however, where the warranty is implied in fact, consequential damages may not be awarded because personal injury is outside the parties' contemplation. n707 And in Dexheimer v. CDS, Inc., n708 the court concluded that remedies for violation of Washington's Residential Landlord Tenant Act were limited to those set forth in the legislation. Those remedies did not include damages based on tort.

§ 41.09(c) Departures from the Traditional Framework for Tort Liability.

§ 41.09(c)(1) Liability Based on Ordinary Negligence.

Although the general rule in most jurisdictions is that the landlord enjoys a shield of immunity from tort liability, the foregoing discussion indicates that the shield is subject to a number of significant, and rather technical, exceptions. In some jurisdictions, however, the traditional rule and its exceptions have been superseded, at least in some circumstances, by application of general principles of negligence liability.

The leading case adopting a general negligence standard of landlord liability is Sargent v. Ross, n709 a 1973 decision by the New Hampshire Supreme Court. The facts were that a guest of the tenant, a four year old child whom the tenant was babysitting, was killed in a fall from an exterior stairway leading up to the tenant's second floor apartment. In a wrongful death action against the landlord, the child's mother claimed that the stairs were too steep and that the railing on the stairway was inadequate. Attempting to bring the case within one of the recognized exceptions to landlord tort immunity, the plaintiff argued that the stairway constituted a common area, and that the landlord was responsible for its negligent construction and maintenance. The landlord contended that the stairway was part of the leased premises, and was under the control of the tenant. The New Hampshire Supreme Court declined to decide the case based on the traditional rule and its exceptions, and instead announced that the proper standard for landlord liability was one of ordinary negligence: "A landlord must act as a reasonable person under all of the circumstances, including the likelihood of injury to others, the probable seriousness of such injuries, and the burden of reducing or avoiding the risk." n710 Questions of control, common areas, and hidden defects were henceforth to be considered only as they "bear on the basic tort issues such as the foreseeability and unreasonableness of the particular risk of harm." n711

Following the lead of the Sargent court, a number of other courts have abandoned the traditional rule of landlord tort immunity and have sanctioned application of general negligence principles instead. n712 However, some courts have also rejected application of the Sargent doctrine, upholding the traditional approach to landlord liability in tort. n713

Even when general negligence is the liability standard for landlords, not every injury caused by defects in the leased premises will be compensable. The normal elements of a cause of action in negligence will have to be satisfied, and the normal defenses applicable to a negligence action would be available to the landlord. For example, the landlord should not be liable if there is no duty to protect against the particular risk involved, n714 an injury is not reasonably foreseeable, n715 or if the landlord neither knew nor should have known of the existence of a dangerous defect. n716

The Sargent court stated that its rejection of the traditional rule of landlord tort immunity followed "naturally and inexorably" from the court's previous recognition of an implied warranty of habitability in residential leases. n717 The court did not indicate that the ordinary negligence rule also applied to commercial tenancies. And, thus far, there does not appear to be a movement to apply the rule of the Sargent case to commercial leases.

§ 41.09(c)(2) Strict Liability.

Application of one of the traditional exceptions to landlord tort immunity generally requires that the landlord know, or should know, of the existence of a dangerous defect, and that the landlord fail to correct it within a reasonable time, or, in some cases, that the landlord fail to warn protected persons of the existence of the defect. In other words, the traditional exceptions to landlord tort immunity generally concern liability based on negligence. However, in a few jurisdictions, courts have taken a significantly different approach to the question of landlord tort liability, and have imposed strict liability.

In Kaplan v. Coulston, n718 a New York court held that strict liability could follow from the landlord's breach of a warranty of habitability. The tenants in that case had been injured by a falling kitchen cabinet. Their original complaint alleged landlord negligence, but they sought permission to amend their complaint to assert a cause of action for breach of an implied warranty of habitability, on the assumption that such a breach would result in strict liability, without proof of any notice to the landlord of a defect in the leased premises. The court granted the motion to amend. In the course of its opinion, the court acknowledged that there were a number of problems involved in the imposition of strict liability in the landlord-tenant context, including: 1) a lease is not a sale of a product; 2) the leased premises may be either new or very old; 3) some defects may exist at the time of the letting, while others may not arise until much later; and 4) the landlord may not be able to take corrective action unless the tenant notifies the landlord of a defect. But the court also identified several policy based arguments in favor of strict liability, including arguments that: 1) the landlord has superior knowledge, and is in a better position than the tenant to prevent defects in the leased premises; 2) the landlord is more able than the tenant to bear and distribute losses, because the landlord can purchase liability insurance and pass the cost on to other tenants; and 3) adoption of a strict liability standard eliminates the difficulty of having to prove negligence, including the difficulty of proving that the landlord knew or should have known of the defective condition.

The Kaplan case appears to have had a rather chilly reception in New York. n719 Thus far, courts in other jurisdictions have not expressed much enthusiasm for the idea of imposing strict liability on landlords based on breach of a warranty of habitability. n720

Another approach to strict liability was adopted, and later rejected, by the California Supreme Court. In the 1985 case of Becker v. IRM Corp., n721 the California Supreme Court held a landlord strictly liable in tort for injuries that occurred when a tenant in a multi unit apartment complex slipped and fell against an untempered glass shower door. The court considered the untempered glass to be a latent defect, and it held that "a landlord engaged in the business of leasing dwellings is strictly liable in tort for injuries resulting from a latent defect in the premises when the defect existed at the time the premises were let to the tenant." n722 According to the court, the tenant in a modern apartment building was in no position to inspect for latent defects or to bear the cost of their repair. On the other hand, the landlord, who "markets the product," was in a better position to look for and repair latent defects. Absent a disclosure of defects, the court said that landlord made an implied representation upon renting the premises that they were fit for use as a dwelling. In these circumstances, said the court, strict liability would be applied for latent defects existing at the time of renting, "to insure that the landlord who markets the product bears the costs of injuries resulting from the defects, 'rather than the injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves.'" n723

In the years following the Becker decision, other California court decisions limited its scope, holding that the strict liability rule was not applicable to commercial leases, n724 or to the isolated leasing of a family residence. n725 It was also held that an apartment complex itself, as distinguished from its equipment and facilities, is not a "product" for purposes of applying the strict liability concept. n726 Finally, in 1995, the California Supreme Court took another look at the larger issue, and overruled Becker itself. In Peterson v. Superior Court, n727 the court was asked to hold a hotel proprietor strictly liable for personal injuries suffered by a hotel guest when she slipped and fell in a bathtub. The court concluded that it would be improper to impose strict liability on the proprietor under products liability principles. With respect to its earlier decision, the court said that Becker's reasoning was "flawed in several respects" n728 The court further stated:

> In the present case, for example, plaintiff's product liability claim is premised upon the assertion that the bathtub in the hotel room was defective because its surface was slippery. But a hotel owner is not a part of the chain of distribution of a bathtub that is installed in a hotel room, just as a restaurant owner is not the equivalent of a retailer of toilets simply because the restaurant provides restroom facilities to its patrons, and just as an owner of a business is not the equivalent of a retailer of ceiling fans simply because one is installed on the premises to promote the comfort of customers of the business. n729

The court said "we erred in Becker in applying the doctrine of strict products liability to a residential landlord that is not a part of the manufacturing or marketing enterprise of the allegedly defective product that caused the injury." n730

The Becker case did not generate much of a following. Indeed, a number of court decisions have expressly rejected application of strict products liability concepts to the landlord tenant relationship. n731 In Dwyer v. Skyline Apartments, Inc., n732 for example, a New Jersey appellate court stated its view that a residential landlord "is not engaged in mass production whereby he places his product the apartment in a stream of commerce exposing it to a large number of consumers." Neither did the court regard an apartment as a product in which defects can be prevented by greater care at the time of manufacture. The court thought that an apartment, which is constructed by many artisans and is subject to constant use and deterioration "is a commodity wholly unlike a product which is expected to leave the manufacturer's hands in a safe condition with an implied representation upon which the consumer justifiably relies." n733

It should be noted that Louisiana has long applied a statutory rule of strict liability to landlords for injuries caused by defects in the leased premises that were in existence at the beginning of the lease. This statutory rule, which is based on civil law antecedents, is not limited to residential tenancies. n734

§ 41.09(d) Duty to Protect Tenants Against Criminal Acts of Third Parties.

§ 41.09(d)(1) The Traditional Rule.

Landlords have traditionally not been liable to tenants or to others on the leased premises for physical injuries caused by the criminal acts of third parties. This result is consistent with the general rule at common law that an individual has no affirmative duty to protect others from the criminal activities of a third person. n735

An exception to the general common law rule was recognized in the case of a special relationship between the parties, such as that between innkeeper and guest or common carrier and passenger. In such a special relationship, a duty of protection was recognized because of the submission of one party to the control of the other. n736 However, the relationship between landlord and tenant traditionally has not been regarded as one of the special relationships on which liability could be based. n737 Reasons for applying the general rule to landlords have included:

> judicial reluctance to tamper with the traditional common law concept of the landlord-tenant relationship; the notion that the act of a third person in committing an intentional tort or crime is a superseding cause of the harm to another resulting therefrom; the oftentimes difficult problem of determining foreseeability of criminal acts; the vagueness of the standard which the landlord must meet; the economic consequences of the imposition of the duty; and conflict with the public policy allocating the duty of protecting citizens from criminal acts to the government rather than the private sector. n738

This traditional rule, like the general rule of landlord tort immunity, has increasingly come under attack. In recent years, courts have been more willing to impose tort liability on landlords based on third party criminal acts.

§ 41.09(d)(2) The Modern Movement Toward Imposition of Landlord Liability.

The case that initiated the modern movement toward landlord liability for third party criminal acts is Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Avenue Apartment Corporation n739 In that case, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals considered whether a landlord should be liable for tenant personal injuries following a criminal assault in the hallway of a multi unit apartment building. The landlord had been aware of previous criminal assaults against tenants in common areas, but the landlord had diminished, not strengthened, building security measures. In holding the landlord liable in tort for the injuries suffered by the tenant, the court found that "there is a duty of protection owed by the landlord to the tenant in an urban multiple unit apartment building." The standard of care to which the landlord is bound is that of exercising "reasonable care in all the circumstances." Although the landlord is not an insurer of tenant safety, said the court, the landlord does have a "duty to take those measures of protection which are within his power and capacity to take, and which can reasonably be expected to mitigate the risk of intruders assaulting and robbing tenants." n740

The court provided several reasons for its conclusion. First, the court referred to the landlord's common law duty to use ordinary care to maintain common areas, and other areas retained in the landlord's control, in reasonably safe condition.

The court indicated that the rationale for this exception to traditional landlord tort immunity also applied to predictable criminal acts by third parties in common areas. As between the landlord and the tenant, only the landlord has control over common areas and is in a position to provide needed security. Second, based on the reasoning of its prior opinion in Javins v. First National Realty Corporation, n741 the court said there is "implied in the contract between landlord and tenant an obligation on the landlord to provide those protective measures which are within his reasonable capacity." In this case, the court indicated that the tenant was entitled to expect that the level of security measures in place when she began occupancy would be maintained by the landlord. Finally, the court analogized the modern landlord-tenant relationship to that of an innkeeper and guest -- a relationship in which the common law did recognize a duty on the part of the landowner to provide protection against criminal acts by third parties.

The issue of landlord tort liability for injuries resulting from third party criminal acts has arisen with considerable frequency since the Kline case was decided in 1970. There has been a trend to impose liability on landlords. n742 Indeed, it has been said that "[i]f one simply counts up results, far more appellate decisions have held landlords liable for injuries from criminal acts since 1970 than have denied liability." n743

Most of the cases in which tort liability has been imposed since 1970 have involved residential tenancies, but commercial landlords have also occasionally been affected. n744 Most of the cases have focused on personal injuries, but, in a few instances, loss of tenant personal property has also been involved. n745 In some cases, landlords have been held liable to tenants for injuries resulting from the criminal acts of other tenants. n746

It should be noted that there have also been a number of post-1970 court decisions, including some relatively recent court decisions, that have not imposed tort liability on landlords for third party criminal acts. n747 Not all courts have been willing to recognize a general duty on the part of landlords to protect tenants against criminal acts. n748 Some courts have said that landlords are not liable for injuries caused by third party criminal acts because there is no special relationship between landlord and tenant. n749 It has also been said that the imposition of tort liability would detract from the need to ensure affordable housing. n750

§ 41.09(d)(2)(i) Source of the Landlord's Duty.

One of the more interesting issues concerning landlord liability for third party criminal acts is the source of the landlord's duty. Most of the cases in which tort liability has been imposed are cases involving inadequate common area security arrangements. As a result, liability has often been imposed through an extension of the general rule that the landlord has a duty of reasonable care to maintain the safety of common areas. n751 However, some courts have declined to extend the landlord's common area duties this far, stating that the landlord has no general duty to provide common area security against criminal activities. n752 But even when no such general duty applies, landlord liability may still be found on another basis, such as under a duty to carry out voluntarily undertaken security arrangements, n753 or under a contractual duty to provide tenant security. n754 The landlord may also be liable for negligently selecting or supervising employees who commit criminal acts. n755 And it has been indicated that a landlord could be liable in tort based on the failure of security guards to prevent criminal acts. n756

When the security defect is located in an area leased by the tenant, as in the case of a defective lock on the door to the tenant's apartment, the landlord's general duty to maintain the safety of common areas will not apply. If it can be found at all, a duty to provide security arrangements in this situation must have another basis, such as an agreement by the landlord to make specific repairs, n757 or a statute requiring the landlord to provide specific security measures. n758 However, some courts seem to have imposed an obligation on the landlord to provide security arrangements in areas leased by tenants without much attention to the source of the duty. n759

Although legislation has sometimes been the source of a landlord's duty to provide security against third party criminal acts, courts generally have been hesitant to conclude that statutes and regulations requiring landlords to maintain leased premises in a "safe condition" also impose a duty on the landlord to provide tenant security measures against criminal acts. n760 Courts seem more willing to impose liability if the landlord breaches a statutory obligation to provide a specific safety measure, such as door locks, and criminal activity is thereby facilitated. n761 Texas has recently adopted legislation requiring most residential landlords to equip leased dwellings with door locks, window latches, and other security devices. n762

A few courts have considered whether a duty to provide security from criminal activities may be based on an implied warranty by the landlord. One of the questions here is whether the warranty includes an obligation to provide security arrangements for tenants. The leading case of Trentacost v. Brussel, n763 answered this question in the affirmative. In Trentacost, the landlord had failed to provide a door lock for the common entrance to an apartment building, and a tenant was assaulted and robbed on a common stairway by a criminal who had apparently obtained entrance through the unlocked door. There was evidence of prior criminal activity in the area and of notice to the landlord regarding the presence of unauthorized people in the hallways. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded that the previously recognized warranty of habitability extended to all facilities that were vital to the residential use of the premises, including facilities relating to tenant security. Accordingly, the warranty obligated the landlord to furnish reasonable safeguards to protect tenants from foreseeable criminal acts on the leased premises and common areas. n764 The court held that the landlord had breached the warranty of habitability by failing to provide adequate security and was therefore liable to the tenant for injuries attributable to the breach. n765

§ 41.09(d)(2)(ii) Foreseeability.

Even when the landlord is held to have a duty to protect tenants against criminal activities, the landlord will not be liable for injuries caused by every criminal intruder. If negligence is the applicable theory of landlord liability, the elements of a cause of action for negligence will need to be established. Among other things, this means that the landlord should not be liable unless the criminal conduct in question was reasonably foreseeable. n766

Courts have applied different standards to the foreseeability question in the landlord-tenant context. Foreseeability of criminal conduct has typically been established by evidence of previous criminal activity on the property. n767 However, in some instances, courts have considered evidence of generally rising crime rates n768 or repeatedly expressed fears of criminal assault to be sufficient. n769 Prior similar criminal acts can be relevant, but other factors can be as well. Expressing this view in a case involving the rape of a residential tenant at her apartment, the Supreme Court of Texas said:

> Whether such risk was foreseeable must not be determined in hindsight but rather in light of what the premises owner knew or should have known before the criminal act occurred. In determining whether the occurrence of certain criminal conduct on a landowner's property should have been foreseen, courts should consider whether any criminal conduct previously occurred on or near the property, how recently it occurred, how often it occurred, how similar the conduct was to the conduct on the property, and what publicity was given the occurrences to indicate that the landowner knew or should have known about them. n770

But a number of courts have said that "prior similar incidents" need not be shown to establish foreseeability, reasoning that "only the general risk of harm need be foreseen, not the specific mechanism of injury." n771

In contrast, the Georgia Supreme Court declined to find a landlord liable to a residential tenant who had been raped and robbed after parking her car beneath her residential apartment. The court affirmed summary judgment for landlord the landlord, concluding that prior property related crimes did not establish the foreseeability of the violent sexual assault at issue. n772

And in a 1993 decision involving the rape of a tenant's employee on the tenant's premises, the California Supreme Court expressed the view that a > a high degree of foreseeability is required in order to find that the scope of a landlord's duty of care includes the hiring of security guards. We further conclude that the requisite degree of foreseeability rarely, if ever, can be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents of violent crime on the landowner's premises. To hold otherwise would be to impose an unfair burden upon landlords and, in effect, would force landlords to become the insurers of public safety, contrary to well established policy in this state. n773

§ 41.09(e) Exculpatory Agreements.

Many leases contain provisions that attempt to relieve the landlord from tort liability. Some provisions of this nature are quite broad, and attempt to cover liability for personal injury or property damage resulting from the existence of any condition on the leased premises or from any other cause. n774 Some leases also contain provisions in which the tenant agrees to hold the landlord harmless from any claim for damages. n775 Courts have traditionally enforced such exculpatory provisions, on the theory that the parties to the lease are free to enter into private contracts. n776 In recent years, however, the trend has been to invalidate exculpatory provisions in residential leases.

When they are upheld, lease provisions purporting to exculpate the landlord from tort liability generally have been strictly construed against the landlord. n777 By strictly construing an exculpatory provision, a court might limit its application to liability for property damage, and exclude liability for personal injury. n778 Or a court might limit application of the provision to future acts of negligence, and exclude existing latent defects known to landlord. n779 A court might also limit application of the provision so as not to excuse the landlord from the consequences of his or her own negligence. n780

The trend of recent decisions has been to invalidate exculpatory provisions, at least in residential leases. Courts that have invalidated exculpatory provisions have often done so on public policy grounds. Thus, courts have said that any attempt to contract away negligence liability is contrary to public policy. n781 Courts have also concluded that exculpatory clauses should not be enforced in residential leases because such clauses are inimical to the enforcement of housing codes and safety regulations. n782

Courts have also invalidated exculpatory provisions on grounds of unconscionability n783 or inequality of bargaining power. n784 In one case, it was held that an exculpatory clause was unenforceable, due to inequality of bargaining power, even though the clause provided that the tenant could eliminate the application of the provisions by paying two dollars more each month in rent. n785 Another court indicated that an exculpatory provision in the lease of a unit of a multi family dwelling is always unconscionable. n786 Of course, facts going to unconscionability will be more difficult to find in the case of a commercial lease, and, in that case, an exculpatory provision is more likely to be upheld. n787

Some courts have drawn a distinction between "active" and "passive" negligence, and have invalidated exculpatory clauses when the landlord's negligence was of the active variety. n788

Exculpatory clauses in leases may also be invalidated based on statutory provisions. A number of jurisdictions have enacted statutes that prohibit lease provisions purporting to exculpate residential landlords from tort liability. n789 For example, the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act prohibits residential lease provisions in which the tenant "agrees to the exculpation or limitation of any liability of the landlord arising under law" or in which the tenant agrees "to indemnify the landlord for that liability." n790 Any such provision contained in a residential lease is, according to the Uniform Act, unenforceable. n791 Several statutes, not based on the Uniform Act, provide that exculpatory provisions in residential leases are void. n792 A few statutes appear to apply both to commercial and residential leases. n793

In contrast, a Louisiana statute provides that the owner of premises "leased under a contract whereby the lessee assumes responsibility for their condition," is not liable for injuries caused by defects on the premises, "unless the owner knew or should have known of the defect or had received notice thereof and failed to remedy it within a reasonable time." n794

Even when an exculpatory provision would otherwise be upheld, it may not apply if the person who is injured is not a tenant. Some courts have concluded that if the injured person was not a party to the exculpatory agreement, he or she should not be bound by it. n795 The Restatement takes the position that an exculpatory clause does not affect the landlord's liability to third persons, such as licensees or guests of the tenant, who are not parties to the lease. n796 On the other hand, some courts have concluded that persons who did not sign the lease should be in no better position than the tenant on the question of landlord liability. Under this view, if the exculpatory provision would prevent the tenant from recovering against the landlord, it would prevent the third party from recovering as well. n797

Some courts have declined to enforce exculpatory clauses in leases with public housing authorities, reasoning that enforcement would allow the housing authorities to escape their statutory obligations to provide safe housing to low income people, and that the exculpatory clauses result from unequal bargaining positions. n798

§ 41.09(f) Tenant Liability for Criminal Acts of Third Parties.

It should be noted that some of the same considerations that have contributed to the imposition of liability on landlords for third party criminal acts could lead a court to impose such liability upon a tenant. In McClung v. Wal Mart Stores, Inc., n799 for example, the surviving spouse of a victim who had been kidnapped, raped and murdered, sued the anchor tenant of a shopping mall, claiming that the victim had been abducted from the mall's parking lot, and that the anchor tenant, Wal Mart, was liable in tort for failing to provide adequate security for customers who used the lot. Applying Tennessee law, the court concluded that a duty to take reasonable steps to protect customers arises if the tenant knows or has reason to know that criminal acts against customers on its premises are reasonably foreseeable. There was an issue in the case concerning the area of the parking lot from which the victim had been abducted. Wal Mart argued that its "premises" included only that portion of the lot that was subject to the specific lighting and space ratio requirements that had been set forth in its lease. However, the court concluded that Wal Mart's premises included the parking area for the entire shopping center, because Wal Mart had rights to the entire parking area and its customers were free to park anywhere on the lot.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 547. See e.g., Borders v. Roseberry, 532 P.2d 1366 (Kan. 1975) .

(n2)Footnote 548. See Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts 232 (2000).

(n3)Footnote 549. See Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts 232, 237 (2000).

(n4)Footnote 550. See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 101 (1982).

(n5)Footnote 551. See Borders v. Roseberry, 532 P.2d 1366 (Kan. 1975) ; Jean C. Love, Landlord's Liability for Defective Premises, Caveat Lessee, Negligence, or Strict Liability?, 1975 Wis. L. Rev. 19 (1975); It is conceivable that a qualifying landlord would enjoy immunity on another theory as well - immunity as a "governmental entity". See e.g, O'Connell v. New Jersey Sports & Exposition Auth., 766 A.2d 786 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2001) , cert. denied, 773 A.2d 1156 (N.J. 2001) (spectator, who slipped and fell on ice on the steps in a football stadium, sued several defendants; landlord, which was a legislatively established sports authority, enjoyed tort immunity).

(n6)Footnote 552. See Ark. Code Ann. 18-16-110 (landlord not liable to tenant, licensee or invitee for personal injury or property damage caused by defect or disrepair on the premises absent: 1) the landlord's consideration-supported agreement, or the assumption of a duty, to maintain or repair the leased premises; and 2) the landlord's failure to maintain or repair the leased premises in a reasonable manner).

(n7)Footnote 553. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n8)Footnote 554. See Keeton, W. Page, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63, at 440 (5th ed. West 1984); Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, cmt. i, § 17.4, cmt. f (1977).

(n9)Footnote 555. See, e.g., Weiss v. Autumn Hills Inv. Co., 395 N.W.2d 481 (Neb. 1986) .

(n10)Footnote 556. See, e.g., Burch v. University of Kansas, 756 P.2d 431 (Kan. 1988) .

(n11)Footnote 557. See, e.g., Lee v. Jerome Realty, Inc., 154 N.E.2d 126 (Mass. 1958) .

(n12)Footnote 558. See, e.g., Ludgin v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 495 N.E.2d 1237 (Ill. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n13)Footnote 559. See, e.g., Wright & Taylor, Inc. v. Smith, 315 S.W.2d 624 (Ky. 1958) .

(n14)Footnote 560. See, e.g., Hankard v. Beal, 543 A.2d 1376 (Me. 1988) .

(n15)Footnote 561. See, e.g., Calkins v. Cox Estates, 792 P.2d 36 (N.M. 1990) .

(n16)Footnote 562. See, e.g., Knapp v. Fulton County Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 174 N.Y.S.2d 296 (App. Div. 1958) .

(n17)Footnote 563. See, e.g., Cornell v. Feltman, 125 N.Y.S.2d 620 (App. Div. 1953) .

(n18)Footnote 564. See, e.g., Boatright v. Berkley United Methodist Church, 518 P.2d 309 (Colo. Ct. App. 1974) (heater); Duke v. Clark, 267 N.W.2d 63 (Iowa 1978) (sewer gas).

(n19)Footnote 565. See, e.g., Torres v. Piggly Wiggly Shop Rite Foods, Inc., 600 P.2d 1198 (N.M. Ct. App. 1979) ; Jones v. Houston Aristocrat Apts., Ltd., 572 S.W.2d 1 (Tex. Ct. App. 1978) .

(n20)Footnote 566. See, e.g., Dalton v. Anderson, 33 S.E.2d 115 (Ga. Ct. App. 1945) ; Paine v. Gamble Stores, Inc., 279 N.W. 257 (Minn. 1938) .

(n21)Footnote 567. See, e.g., Humphrey v. Byron, 850 N.E.2d 1044 (Mass. 2006) ; Milne v. Pevely Dairy Co., 641 S.W.2d 158 (Mo. Ct. App. 1982) ; Gelardo v. ASMA Realty Corp., 525 N.Y.S.2d 334 (App. Div. 1988) . A 2001 case shows that lease provisions that give the landlord maintenance responsibility over part of the leased premises will not necessarily be enough to divest tenant control, at least when the tenant is entitled to maintain that area if the landlord defaults, and if the tenant is otherwise able to use that area of the leased premises. See O'Connell v. New Jersey Sports Exposition Auth., 766 A.2d 786 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2001) , cert. denied, 773 A.2d 1156 (N.J. 2001) (court concluded that the landlord's responsibility for maintenance of stadium does not shield the tenant from liability for injury to a third party, based on breach of a duty to exercise ordinary care, because the tenant was entitled, under the lease, to maintain the premises if the landlord failed to do so, and therefore the landlord did not have exclusive control).

(n22)Footnote 568. See Restatement (Second) of Property §§ 17.3 and 17.4. Although the Restatement sets forth a number of exceptions to the traditional rule of landlord tort immunity, and describes them as such, the Restatement does not actually adopt a general rule of landlord tort immunity. Indeed, the Restatement notes that the traditional rule of tort immunity has been challenged by recent developments in landlord-tenant law and by trends in tort law. See Restatement (Second) of Property, ch. 17, intro. note, at 155 (1977).

(n23)Footnote 569. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, cmt. a (1977).

(n24)Footnote 570. For a collection of cases dealing with the subject of landlord liability for injuries caused by tenant animals, see Danny R. Veilleux, Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Third Person for Injury Resulting from Attack on Leased Premises by Dangerous or Vicious Animal Kept by Tenant, 87 A.L.R.4th 1004 (1991) .

(n25)Footnote 571. See e.g., Denagy v. Doscher, 243 N.Y.S.2d 575 (N.Y. 1963) ; Frobig v. Gordon, 881 P.2d 226 (Wash. 1994) ; Gonzales v. Wilkinson, 227 N.W.2d 907 (Wis. 1975) ; cf. McDonald v. Talbott, 447 S.W.2d 84 (Ky. 1969) (residential tenant kept vicious dog on back porch; same property also had beauty shop and real estate office "which were open for public admission" and injury occurred on publicly open portion of the premises); Ragsdale v. Harris, 293 S.E.2d 475 (Ga. App. 1982) (no indication that the dog was owed by a tenant; no landlord liability because tenant had complete control of the premises).

(n26)Footnote 572. See Castillo v. County of Santa Fe, 755 P.2d 48 (N.M. 1988) (complaint alleged that dogs ran loose in the common areas of a housing project, and that the landlord knew this).

(n27)Footnote 573. See Siegel v. 1536- 46 St. John's Place Corp., 57 N.Y.S.2d 473 (N.Y. 1945) .

(n28)Footnote 574. See e.g., Gallick v. Barto, 828 F. Supp. 1168 (M.D. Pa. 1993) ; Alaskan Village, Inc. v. Smalley, 720 P.2d 945 (Alaska 1986) ; Matthews v. Amberwood Associates Limited Partnership, Inc., 719 A.2d 119 (Md. 1998) .

(n29)Footnote 575. Uccello v. Laudenslayer, 118 Cal. Rptr. 741 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975) . It should be noted, however, that this case has been criticized by a number of courts. See e.g., Klitzka ex rel. Teutonico v. Hellios, 348 Ill. App.3d 594 (Ill. Ct. App. 2004) ; Feister v. Bosack, 497 N.W.2d 522 (Mich. Ct. App. 1993) .

(n30)Footnote 576. Wright v. Schum, 781 P.2d 1142 (Nev. 1989) .

(n31)Footnote 577. See id. But the court concluded, on the facts of the case before it, that the landlord had actually undertaken a duty to protect the injured plaintiff from harm. For a collection of cases dealing with the subject of landlord liability for injuries caused by tenant animals, see Danny R. Veilleux, Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Third Person for Injury Resulting from Attack on Leased Premises by Dangerous or Vicious Animal Kept by Tenant, 87 A.L.R.4th 1004 (1991) .

(n32)Footnote 578. See, e.g., Menard v. Cashman, 55 A.2d 156 (N.H. 1947) (stairway); Levine v. Bochiaro, 59 A.2d 224 (N.J. 1948) (heating system); Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n33)Footnote 579. See, e.g., Ross v. Heberling, 109 N.E.2d 586 (Ohio. Ct. App. 1952) ; Goodman v. Corn Exchange Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 200 A. 642 (Pa. 1938) ; Cf. Degel v. Majestic Mobile Manor, Inc., 914 P.2d 728 (Wash. 1996) (en banc) (Infant tenant in mobile home park injured by fall into creek on edge of the park; court holds that landowner is not excused from the duty to exercise reasonable care to protect "invitees" from potentially dangerous conditions on the land even when the dangers are inherent in a natural body of water); McMann v. Benton County, Angeles Park Communities, Ltd., 946 P.2d 1183 (Wash. App. 1997) (infant drowned in irrigation canal adjacent to leased premises; court distinguishes Degal case, and concludes that the landlord had no affirmative obligation to the tenant, because there was "no common area on its premises or other condition on its land which can be claimed to be unreasonably safe due to the proximity of the canal on adjacent property"). See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, Reporter's Note 8 (1977); Thomas J. Goger, Annotation, Landlord Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Injury or Death Due to Ice or Snow in Areas or Passage Ways Used in Common by Tenants, 49 A.L.R.3d 387 (1973) .

(n34)Footnote 580. See, e.g., Rogers v. Dudley Realty Corp., 16 N.E.2d 244 (Mass. 1938) ; Thomas J. Goger, Annotation, Landlord Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Injury or Death Due to Ice or Snow in Areas or Passage Ways Used in Common by Tenants, 49 A.L.R.3d 387, 404 (1973) ; Cf. McAllister v. Boston Housing Authority, 708 N.E.2d 95 (Mass. 1999) (Natural accumulation of ice and snow is not a defect covered the by the implied warranty of habitability).

(n35)Footnote 581. 128 A. 705 (Conn. 1925) .

(n36)Footnote 582. 134 Mass. 357 (1883) . The two views are discussed in Langley Park Apartments, Sec. H., Inc. v. Lund, 199 A.2d 620 (Md. 1964) .

(n37)Footnote 583. See Cronin v. Brownlie, 109 N.E.2d 352, 356 (Ill. App. 1952) . Cf. Fuller v. Housing Authority, 279 A.2d 438 (R.I. 1971) (adopting Connecticut rule, court says modern landlord is up to the challenge of dealing with natural accumulations of ice and snow).

(n38)Footnote 584. See e.g., Klein v. United States, 339 F.2d 512 (2d Cir. 1964) ; Greenstein v. Springfield Development Corp., 204 N.Y.S.2d 518 (N.Y. 1960) .

(n39)Footnote 585. See Thomas J. Goger, Annotation, Landlord Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Injury or Death Due to Ice or Snow in Areas or Passage Ways Used in Common by Tenants, 49 A.L.R.3d 387, 404 (1973) .

(n40)Footnote 586. See, e.g., Denny v. Burbeck, 130 N.E.2d 542 (Mass. 1955) ; Landes v. Barone, 127 N.Y.S.2d 112 (App. Div. 1954) , aff'd, 122 N.E.2d 750 (N.Y. 1954) ; Allan D. Korpela, Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injury or Death Due to Inadequacy or Lack of Lighting on Portion of Premises Used in Common by Tenants, 66 A.L.R.3d 202, 210, 218 (1975) .

(n41)Footnote 587. See, e.g., Kay v. Cain, 154 F.2d 305 (D.C. Cir. 1946) ; Jones v. Bierek, 755 P.2d 698 (Or. 1988) .

(n42)Footnote 588. See, e.g., Turner v. Thompson, 430 N.E.2d 157 (Ill. Ct. App. 1981) .

(n43)Footnote 589. See, e.g., Coan v. Adams, 127 N.E.2d 198 (Mass. 1955) ; Sherman v. Bobrecker, 322 S.W.2d 898 (Mo. 1959) ; Allan D. Korpela, Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injury or Death Due to Inadequacy or Lack of Lighting on Portion of Premises Used in Common by Tenants, 66 A.L.R.3d 202, 211 (1975) .

(n44)Footnote 590. See, e.g., Primus v. Bellevue Apts., 44 N.W.2d 347 (Iowa 1950) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n45)Footnote 591. W. Page Keeton, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63, at 441 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n46)Footnote 592. See, e.g., Raspilair v. Bruno's Food Stores, Inc., 514 So. 2d 1022 (Ala. 1987) ; Pollack v. Gampel, 313 A.2d 73 (Conn. 1972) ; Ross v. Belzer, 85 A.2d 799 (Md. 1952) .

(n47)Footnote 593. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3 (1977).

(n48)Footnote 594. See, e.g., Gibson v. Hoppman, 143 A. 635 (Conn. 1928) ; see also Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injuries Due to Defective Halls, Stairway, and the Like, for Use of Different Tenants, 75 A.L.R. 154 (1931) .

(n49)Footnote 595. See, e.g., Combs v. Aetna Ins. Co., 410 So. 2d 1377 (Fla. Ct. App. 1982) ; Cannon v. S.S. Kresge Co., 116 S.W.2d 559 (Mo. Ct. App. 1938) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, cmt. e (1977).

(n50)Footnote 596. See, e.g., Sutton v. Mitchell Co., 534 So. 2d 289 (Ala. 1988) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, cmt. f (1977).

(n51)Footnote 597. See, e.g., Taylor v. Leedy & Co., 412 So. 2d 763 (Ala. 1982) ; W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises as Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R.2d 586 (1963) .

(n52)Footnote 598. See, e.g., Honan v. Kinney, 286 N.W. 404 (Minn. 1939) ; overruled on other grounds, Johnson

v. O'Brien, 105 N.W.2d 244 (Minn. 1960) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n53)Footnote 599. See, e.g., Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S.W. 921 (Ky. 1912) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n54)Footnote 600. See, e.g., Moore v. Muntzel, 642 P.2d 957 (Kan. 1982) ; Shinkle, Wilson & Kreis Co. v. Birney & Seymour, 67 N.E. 715 (Ohio. 1903) ; See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 103 (1982).

(n55)Footnote 601. See, e.g., Home Owners' Loan Corp. v. Huffman, 124 F.2d 684 (8th Cir. 1942) , cert. denied, 316 U.S. 681 (1942) .

(n56)Footnote 602. See, e.g., Mora v. Baker Commodities, Inc., 258 Cal. Rptr. 669 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989) ; Mansur v. Eubanks, 401 So. 2d 1328 (Fla. 1981) ; Francis v. Pic, 226 N.W.2d 654 (N.D. 1975) ; Glassman v. Martin, 269 S.W.2d 908 (Tenn. 1954) ; W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises as Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R.2d 586 (1963) .

(n57)Footnote 603. See Fitzgerald v. Cestari, 569 So. 2d 1258 (Fla. 1990) .

(n58)Footnote 604. See Keeton, W. Page, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63, at 436 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n59)Footnote 605. See, e.g., Johnson v. O'Brien, 105 N.W.2d 244 (Minn. 1960) ; W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises as Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R.2d 593 (1963) .

(n60)Footnote 606. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1(1)(b) (1977).

(n61)Footnote 607. See, e.g., Masterson v. Atherton, 179 A.2d 592 (Conn. 1962) ; Hyde v. Bryant, 151 S.E.2d 925 (Ga. Ct. App. 1966) ; Lemley v. Penner, 630 P.2d 1086 (Kan. 1981) .

(n62)Footnote 608. See, e.g., Shute v. Bills, 78 N.E. 96 (Mass. 1906) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1, Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n63)Footnote 609. See, e.g., Marr v. Dieter, 109 S.E. 532 (Ga. Ct. App. 1921) .

(n64)Footnote 610. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.1, cmt. h (1977).

(n65)Footnote 611. See, e.g., Downs v. Powell, 108 S.E.2d 715 (Ga. 1959) (family members); Kraus v. Webber, 270 N.E.2d 789 (Mass. 1971) (guests and invitees); Smith v. Green, 260 N.E.2d 656 (Mass. 1970) (tenant); Harrill v. Sinclair Refining Co., 35 S.E.2d 240 (N.C. 1945) (sub-tenants).

(n66)Footnote 612. See, e.g., Barrett v. Stoneburg, 29 N.W.2d 420 (Iowa 1947) ; Whalen v. Shivek, 93 N.E.2d 393 (Mass. 1950) .

(n67)Footnote 613. See, e.g., Kelly v. Laclede Real Estate & Inv. Co., 155 S.W.2d 90 (Mo. 1941) .

(n68)Footnote 614. See Isham v. Broderick, 95 N.W. 224 (Minn. 1903) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 18.1, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n69)Footnote 615. See Boyle v. Pennsylvania R.R., 31 A.2d 89 (Pa. 1943) .

(n70)Footnote 616. See Whalen v. Shivek, 93 N.E.2d 393 (Mass. 1950) .

(n71)Footnote 617. See Mitchell v. Foran, 53 P.2d 490 (Kan. 1936) .

(n72)Footnote 618. See, e.g., City of San Angelo v. Sitas, 183 S.W.2d 417 (Tex. 1944) ; W. Page Keeton, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n73)Footnote 619. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 18.1, cmt. i & Reporter's Note 12 (1977).

(n74)Footnote 620. See, e.g., Whiffin v. DeTweede Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheek Bank, 12 P.2d 271 (Idaho 1932) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 18.1, Reporter's Note 10 (1977).

(n75)Footnote 621. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 18.1 (1977).

(n76)Footnote 622. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Foran, 53 P.2d 490 (Kan. 1936) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 18.1, cmt. a (1977).

(n77)Footnote 623. See, e.g., Whalen v. Shivek, 93 N.E.2d 393 (Mass. 1950) .

(n78)Footnote 624. See, e.g., Webel v. Yale Univ., 7 A.2d 215 (Conn. 1939) ; Nelson v. Hokuf, 299 N.W. 472 (Neb. 1941) ; Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984); J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 882 (1968) . Not all courts have recognized this exception to landlord tort immunity. See Appalachian Power Co. v. Sanders, 349 S.E.2d 101 (Va. 1986) .

(n79)Footnote 625. See, e.g., Goodman v. Harris, 253 P.2d 447 (Cal. 1953) ; Rice v. Forby, 228 N.W.2d 581 (Minn. 1975) .

(n80)Footnote 626. See, e.g., Bunnell v. Waterbury Hosp., 131 A. 501 (Conn. 1925) ; J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 881 (1968) .

(n81)Footnote 627. See Junkerman v. Tilyou Realty Co., 108 N.E. 190 (N.Y. 1915) ; Fitchett v. Buchanan, 472 P.2d 623 (Wis. 1970) ; Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984); Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n82)Footnote 628. See, e.g., Swords v. Edgar, 59 N.Y. 28 (1874) ; Albert v. State, 7 A. 697 (Md. 1887) .

(n83)Footnote 629. See, e.g., Colorado Mtg. & Inv. Co. v. Giacomini, 55 Colo. 540, 136 P. 1039 (Colo. 1913) .

(n84)Footnote 630. See, e.g., Larson v. Calder's Park Co., 180 P. 599 (Utah 1919) .

(n85)Footnote 631. See, e.g., Lang v. Stadium Purchasing Corp., 215 N.Y.S. 502 (App. Div. 1926) .

(n86)Footnote 632. Turner v. Kent, 7 P.2d 513 (Kan. 1932) .

(n87)Footnote 633. See, e.g., Schlender v. Andy Jansen Co., 380 P.2d 523 (Okla. 1962) .

(n88)Footnote 634. See, e.g., Gilligan v. Blakesley, 26 P.2d 808 (Colo. 1933) .

(n89)Footnote 635. See, e.g., Warner v. Lucey, 201 N.Y.S. 658 (App. Div. 1923) , aff'd, 144 N.E. 924 (N.Y 1924) ; see generally J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 903-927 (1968) (groups cases by place).

(n90)Footnote 636. See, e.g., Warner v. Fry, 228 S.W.2d 729 (Mo. 1950) ; Marx v. Standard Oil Co., 69 A.2d 748 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1949) .

(n91)Footnote 637. See, e.g., Goodman v. Harris, 253 P.2d 447 (Cal. 1953) ; Webel v. Yale Univ., 7 A.2d 215 (Conn. 1939) ; J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 885 (1968) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, Reporter's Note 6 (1977).

(n92)Footnote 638. See, e.g., Gentry v. Taylor, 185 S.W.2d 521 (Tenn. 1945) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, Reporter's Note 5 (1977).

(n93)Footnote 639. See, e.g., Rau v. Redwood City Woman's Club, 245 P.2d 12 (Cal. Ct. App. 1952) ; Bunnell v. Waterbury Hosp., 131 A. 501 (Conn. 1925) ; Howe v. Jameson, 13 A.2d 471 (N.H. 1940) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, Reporter's Note 5 (1977).

(n94)Footnote 640. Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, cmt. c (1977).

(n95)Footnote 641. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 846; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, statutory note (1977).

(n96)Footnote 642. See, e.g., Davis v. Schmitt Bros., 192 N.Y.S. 15 (App. Div. 1922) ; cf. Karlowski v. Kissock, 175 N.E. 500 (Mass. 1931) (licensor situation).

(n97)Footnote 643. See, e.g., Tulsa Entertainment Co. v. Greenlees, 205 P. 179 (Okla. 1922) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.2, cmt. g (1977); J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 897 99 (1968) .

(N98)Footnote 644. See, e.g., Brenner v. Central Realty, 37 A.2d 230 (Conn. 1944) ; Strade v. Ryan, 470 N.Y.S.2d 707 (App. Div. 1983) ; Regan v. Seattle, 458 P.2d 12 (Wash. 1969) ; J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 894 (1968) .

(n99)Footnote 645. See, e.g., Sherwood Bros. v. Eckard, 105 A.2d 207 (Md. 1954) ; Van Avery v. Platte Valley Land & Inv. Co., 275 N.W. 288 (Neb.1937) ; J.F. Rydstrom, Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R.3d 873, 890 (1968) .

(n100)Footnote 646. See, e.g., Shaw v. Still, 192 S.E.2d 206 (S.C. 1972) ; Caudill v. Gibson Fuel Co., 38 S.E.2d 465 (Va. 1946) .

(n101)Footnote 647. See, e.g., Caudill v. Gibson Fuel Co., 185 Va. 233, 38 S.E.2d 465 (Va. 1946) .

(n102)Footnote 648. See Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984). Prosser notes that a number of earlier decisions adopting the traditional rule have been overruled. See id. n.21. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5, Reporter's Note §§ 4 and 5 (1977) (lists jurisdictions that recognize, and reject, this exception to landlord tort immunity); see generally L.S. Tellier, Annotation Breach of Lessor's Agreement as Ground of Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or One in Privity with Latter, 78 A.L.R.2d 1238 (1961) .

(n103)Footnote 649. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5 (1977).

(n104)Footnote 650. See Ark. Code Ann. 18-16-110 (landlord not liable to tenant, licensee or invitee for personal injury or property damage caused by defect or disrepair on the premises absent: 1) the landlord's consideration-supported agreement, or the assumption of a duty, to maintain or repair the leased premises; and 2) the landlord's failure to maintain or repair the leased premises in a reasonable manner).

(n105)Footnote 651. See Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n106)Footnote 652. See id.

(n107)Footnote 653. See id. See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5, cmt. b (1977).

(n108)Footnote 654. See, e.g., Burdell v. Carpentier, 504 So. 2d 261 (Ala. 1987) ; Childress v. Bowser, 546 N.E.2d 1221 (Ind. 1989) .

(n109)Footnote 655. See, e.g., Metcalf v. Chiprin, 31 Cal. Rptr. 571 (Ct. App. 1963) .

(n110)Footnote 656. See, e.g., Deveaux v. Spekter, 190 A.2d 484 (Conn. 1963) ; Rampone v. Wanskuck Buildings, Inc., 227 A.2d 586 (R.I. 1967) .

(n111)Footnote 657. See, e.g., Vieyra v. Engineering Inv. Co., 473 P.2d 44 (Kan. 1970) ; See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5, Reporter's Note 7 (1977).

(n112)Footnote 658. See, e.g., La Montain v. Calvanese, 189 N.Y.S.2d 420 (App. Div. 1959) ; Johnson v. Dye, 230 P. 625 (Wash. 1924) .

(n113)Footnote 659. See, e.g., Thomas v. Lane, 109 N.E. 363 (Mass. 1915) .

(n114)Footnote 660. See, e.g., Tomei v. Center, 116 So. 2d 251 (Fla. Ct. App. 1959) (guest regarded as licensee); Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5, Reporter's Note 10 (1977).

(n115)Footnote 661. See, e.g., Faber v. Creswick, 31 N.J. 234, 156 A.2d 252 (N.J. 1959) ; Rampone v. Wanskuck Bldgs., Inc., 227 A.2d 586 (R.I. 1967) .

(n116)Footnote 662. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.5 (1977).

(n117)Footnote 663. See, e.g., Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. Yanofsky, 380 Mass. 326, 403 N.E.2d 370 (Mass. 1980) ; Renfro Drug Co. v. Lewis, 235 S.W.2d 609 (Tex. 1950) .

(n118)Footnote 664. See Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n119)Footnote 665. See, e.g., Southern Apts., Inc. v. Emmett, 114 So. 2d 453 (Ala. 1959) ; Green v. Long, 118 So. 705 (Miss. 1928) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7, Reporter's Note 7 (1977). Such liability may also arise by statute. See Ark. Code Ann. 18 16 110 (landlord not liable to tenant, licensee or invitee for personal injury or property damage caused by defect or disrepair on the premises absent: 1) the landlord's consideration supported agreement, or the assumption of a duty, to maintain or repair the leased premises; and 2) the landlord's failure to maintain or repair the leased premises in a reasonable manner).

(n120)Footnote 666. See, e.g., Kearns v. Smith, 131 P.2d 36 (Cal. Ct. App. 1942) ; Good v. Von Hemert, 131 N.W. 466 (Minn. 1911) ; Buck v. Miller, 181 P.2d 264 (Okla. 1947) ; Dunnigan v. Kirkorian, 25 A.2d 221 (R.I. 1942) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7, Reporter's Note 3 (1977).

(n121)Footnote 667. See, e.g., Kearns v. Smith, 131 P.2d 36 (Cal. Ct. App. 1942) ; Kuchynski v. Ukryn, 200 A. 416 (N.H. 1938) .

(n122)Footnote 668. See, e.g., Marks v. Nambil Realty Co., 157 N.E. 129 (N.Y. 1927) ; Jordan v. Savage, 232 N.E.2d 580 (Ill. Ct. App. 1967) ; Bauer v. 141 149 Cedar Lane Holding Co., 130 A.2d 833 (N.J. 1957) ; Canada v. McCarthy, 567 N.W.2d 496 (Minn. 1997) Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 64 (5th ed. West 1984).

(n123)Footnote 669. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7, Caveat (1977).

(n124)Footnote 670. See, e.g., Brewer v. Bankord, 387 N.E.2d 344 (Ill. Ct. App. 1979) .

(n125)Footnote 671. See, e.g., Borders v. Roseberry, 532 P.2d 1366 (Kan. 1975) ; Bauer v. 141 149 Cedar Lane Holding Co., 130 A.2d 833 (N.J. 1957) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.7 (1977).

(n126)Footnote 672. See Bauer v. 141 149 Cedar Lane Holding Co., 130 A.2d 833 (N.J. 1957) .

(n127)Footnote 673. See, e.g., Kuchynski v. Ukryn, 200 A. 416 (N.H. 1938) .

(n128)Footnote 674. See, e.g., Hines v. Cielo, 35 N.E.2d 188 (N.Y. 1941) .

(n129)Footnote 675. See, e.g., Borders v. Roseberry, 532 P.2d 1366 (Kan. 1975) .

(n130)Footnote 676. See, e.g., Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 143 P.2d 929 (Cal. 1943) ; Banaghan v. Dewey, 162 N.E.2d 807 (Mass. 1959) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 19.2 (1977).

(n131)Footnote 677. See, e.g., Vitale v. Duerbeck, 62 S.W.2d 559 (Mo. 1933) (covenant); Rietze v. Williams, 458 S.W.2d 613 (Ky. 1970) (statutory duty); Restatement (Second) of Property § 19.1 (1977).

(n132)Footnote 678. See, e.g., Bains v. Dank, 74 So. 341 (Ala. 1917) (no liability); Schatzky v. Harber, 164 N.Y.S. 610 (App. Term. 1917) (no liability); Dalkowitz Bros. v. Schreiner, 110 S.W. 564 (Tex. Ct. App. 1908) (liability); Bancroft v. Godwin, 83 P. 189 (Wash. 1905) (liability).

(n133)Footnote 679. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 19.3 (1977). A Reporter's Note to the Restatement indicates that, "on one theory or another," most jurisdictions have held that the landlord may be liable when the landlord uses an independent contractor, even when the repairs are gratuitously undertaken. See id. Reporter's Note 4.

(n134)Footnote 680. See Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 63 (5th ed. West 1984); See, e.g., Livingston v. Essex Investment Co., 14 S.E.2d 489 (N.C. 1941) ; Rubin v. Girard Trust Co., 35 A.2d 601 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1944) .

(n135)Footnote 681. This implied warranty is discussed in § 41.04(a)(2)(i), above.

(n136)Footnote 682. See id.

(n137)Footnote 683. See, e.g., Hacker v. Nitschke, 39 N.E.2d 644 (Mass. 1942) ; Horton v. Marston, 225 N.E.2d 311 (Mass. 1967) .

(n138)Footnote 684. See, e.g., Borders v. Roseberry, 532 P.2d 1366 (Kan. 1975) (listing various exceptions to landlord tort immunity, but omitting liability based on violation of statute or administrative regulation).

(n139)Footnote 685. See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 106 (1982).

(n140)Footnote 686. See, e.g., Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-7-14 (landlord responsible for damages arising from defective construction or failure to keep premises in repair).

(n141)Footnote 687. See e.g., New Haverford Partnership v. Stroot, 772 A.2d 792 (Del. 2001) (tenant injured by mold in apartment; court concludes that the Landlord Tenant Code imposes a duty on the part of the landlord to maintain buildings in safe and sanitary condition and that breach of the statutory duty can give rise to an action for negligence against the landlord); Gore v. People's Sav. Bank, 665 A.2d 1341 (Conn. 1995) (presence of lead paint, in violation of statute, amounts to negligence per se); Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 106 (1982); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 286 (1965).

(n142)Footnote 688. See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 106 (1982).

(n143)Footnote 689. See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of a Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 106, 107 (1982).

(n144)Footnote 690. See, e.g., Whetzel v. Jess Fisher Mgt. Co., 282 F.2d 943 (D.C. Cir. 1960) ; Austin v. Buettner, 124 A.2d 793 (Md. 1956) .

(n145)Footnote 691. See, e.g., McNally v. Ward, 14 Cal. Rptr. 260 (Cal. Ct. App. 1961) ; Panaroni v. Johnson, 256 A.2d 246 (Conn. 1969) ; Morningstar v. Strich, 40 N.W.2d 719 (Mich. 1950) .

(n146)Footnote 692. See, e.g., Williams v. Fontes, 417 N.E.2d 963 (Mass. 1981) (fire safety ordinance); Higgins v. Investments, Inc. v. Sturgill, 509 S.W.2d 266 (Ky. 1974) (ordinance requiring two exits for safety reasons); see also Swanberg v. O'Mectin, 203 Cal. Rptr. 701 (Cal. Ct. App. 1984) (landlord liable for injuries to motorist whose vision was blocked by overgrown plants that violated a city ordinance); See also Shump v. First Continental Robinwood Assocs., 644 N.E.2d 291 (Ohio 1994) (landlord has duty, under city ordinance, to provide smoke alarms in rental units; breach of the duty renders the landlord liable in tort to persons who are lawfully on the leased premises and who are injured as a result of the breach). Cf. Schiernbeck v. Davis, 143 F.3d 434 (8th Cir. 1998) (South Dakota statute that imposes a duty on residential landlord to keep the leased premises "in reasonable repair and fit for human habitation and in good and safe working order" did not require landlord to equip the premises with a smoke detector); Gore v. People's Sav. Bank, 665 A.2d 1341 (Conn. 1995) (presence of lead paint, in violation of statute, amounts to negligence per se, but does not give rise to strict liability).

(n147)Footnote 693. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.6 (1977).

(n148)Footnote 694. See id. cmt. a.

(n149)Footnote 695. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.6, cmt. c (1977); See, e.g., Abram v. Litman, 501 N.E.2d 370 (Ill. Ct. App. 1986) ; Altz v. Leiberson, 134 N.E. 703 (N.Y. 1922) ; Yoder v. Greenwald, 246 So. 2d 148 (Fla. Ct. App. 1971) ; but see Monsour v. Excelsior Tobacco Co., 115 S.W.2d 219 (Mo. Ct. App. 1938) .

(n150)Footnote 696. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.6, cmt. c (1977).

(n151)Footnote 697. See, e.g., Hatfield v. Palles, 537 F.2d 1245 (4th Cir. 1976) ; Hallock v. Smith, 93 So. 588 (Ala. 1922) ; Clarke v. Kerchner, 181 S.E.2d 787 (N.C. Ct. App. 1971) , cert. denied, 183 S.E.2d 241 (N.C. 1971) .

(n152)Footnote 698. See § 40.24(b)(5), above.

(n153)Footnote 699. See, e.g., Henderson v. W.C. Haas Realty Mgt., 561 S.W.2d 382 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977) ; Dwyer v. Skyline Apts., Inc., 301 A.2d 463 (N.J. Super. Ct. 1973) , aff'd, 311 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1973) ; Rivera v. Selfon Home Repairs & Imp. Co., 439 A.2d 739 (Pa. Super. 1982) ; see also Antwaun A. v. Heritage Mutual Ins., 596 N.W.2d 456, 468 (Wis. 1999) (court notes that a tenant's claim for breach of the implied warranty of habitability is a breach of contract claim for contractual damages, while an injured parties' claim for personal injuries is a tort claim in negligence for compensatory damages; it states that such claims may coexist, may be caused by the same act, and may be owned by the same party if it is the tenant who was injured; court also states: "It is not the breach of warranty, however, that gives rise to the cause of action for the personal injury. Instead, it is the negligent act or omission."); cf. Johnson v. Scandia Associates, Inc., 717 N.E.2d 24 (Ind. 1999) (court states that where the warranty of habitability is express, consequential damages for injury may be available as a remedy; however, where the warranty is implied in fact, consequential damages may not be awarded because personal injury is outside the parties' contemplation).

(n154)Footnote 700. See Shroades v. Rental Homes, Inc., 427 N.E.2d 774 (Ohio. 1981) , clarified, Sikora v.

Wenzel, 427 N.E.2d 1277 (Ohio 2000) (court states that landlord violation of specified statutory duties constitutes negligence per se, but also states that landlord will be excused from liability if landlord neither knew nor should have known of the factual circumstances that caused the violation); See also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 288B (1965) (provides that violation of statute or regulation adopted as a standard of conduct is "negligence in itself," unless the violation is one of several "excused violations.").

(n155)Footnote 701. See Kaplan v. Coulston, 381 N.Y.S.2d 634 (Civ. Ct. 1976) . Strict liability is discussed in § 41.09(c)(2), below.

(n156)Footnote 702. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.6 (1977).

(n157)Footnote 703. Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.6, Reporter's Note 8 (1977).

(n158)Footnote 704. 356 N.E.2d 575 (Ill. Ct. App. 1976) .

(n159)Footnote 705. The decision has been followed by other Illinois courts. See, e.g., Cuthbert v. Stempin, 396 N.E.2d 1197 (Ill. Ct. App. 1979) .

(n160)Footnote 706. 717 N.E.2d 24 (Ind. 1999) .

(n161)Footnote 707. 717 N.E.2d 24 at 32 .

(n162)Footnote 708. 17 P.3d 641 (Wash. Ct. App. 2001) .

(n163)Footnote 709. 308 A.2d 528 (N.H. 1973) .

(n164)Footnote 710. See id. at 534 .

(n165)Footnote 711. See id.

(n166)Footnote 712. See, e.g., George Washington Univ. v. Weintraub, 458 A.2d 43 (D.C. 1983) ; Presson v. Mountain States Props., Inc., 501 P.2d 17 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1972) ; Swanberg v. O'Mectin, 203 Cal. Rptr. 701 (Cal. Ct. App. 1984) ; Mansur v. Eubanks, 401 So. 2d 1328 (Fla. 1981) ; Stephens v. Stearns, 678 P.2d 41 (Idaho 1984) ; Young v. Garwacki, 402 N.E.2d 1045 (Mass. 1980) ; Turpel v. Sayles, 692 P.2d 1290 (Nev. 1985) ; Collingwood v. General Elec. Real Estate Equities, Inc., 376 S.E.2d 425 (N.C. 1989) ; Williams v. Melby, 699 P.2d 723 (Utah 1985) ; Pagelsdorf v. Safeco Ins. Co., 284 N.W.2d 55 (Wis. 1979) ; see generally Jean C. Love, Landlord's Liability for Defective Premises: Caveat Lessee, Negligence, or Strict Liability?, 1975 Wis. L. Rev. 19 (1975); W.E. Shipley, Annotation, Modern Status of Landlord's Tort Liability for Injury or Death of Tenant or Third Person Caused by Dangerous Condition of Premises, 64 A.L.R.3d 339 (1975) .

(n167)Footnote 713. See Murphy v. Hendrix, 500 So. 2d 8 (Ala. 1986) ; Broughton v. Maes, 378 N.W.2d 134 (Minn. Ct. App. 1985) ; Webster v. Heim, 399 N.E.2d 690 (Ill. Ct. App. 1980) .

(n168)Footnote 714. See, e.g., Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgt. Corp., 264 Cal. Rptr. 756 (Ct. App. 1989) (no duty to provide fencing in order to keep tenant children away from adjacent street); cf., Udy v. Calvary Corp., 780 P.2d 1055 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989) (finding such a duty).

(n169)Footnote 715. See Trotter v. Chicago Hous. Auth., 516 N.E.2d 684 (Ill. Ct. App. 1987) . Courts have struggled with the foreseeability of risks associated with lead paint on the leased premises. Compare Kolojeski v. John Deisher, Inc., 239 A.2d 329 (Pa. 1968) (no foreseeability; lead paint dangers are not within the common knowledge of landlords) with Antwaun A. v. Heritage Mutual Ins., 596 N.W.2d 456 (Wis. 1999) (dangers of lead paint poisoning are now so well known that when peeling or chipping paint is present in a pre 1978 residential structure it is foreseeable that lead paint may be present that would expose inhabitants to an unreasonable risk of harm).

(n170)Footnote 716. See Bradley v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 369 S.E.2d 86 (N.C. 1988) ; Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 137 (1982).

(n171)Footnote 717. See id.

(n172)Footnote 718. 381 N.Y.S.2d 634 (Civ. Ct. 1976) .

(n173)Footnote 719. The Kaplan court's approach to strict liability has been expressly rejected by at least one New York court. See Segal v. Justice Court Mut. Hous. Coop., Inc., 432 N.Y.S.2d 463 (1980) , aff'd per curiam, 442 N.Y.S. 686 (App. Term. 1981) (the imposition of strict liability on the landlord would be against the best interests of the parties and would create greater problems). Another court, without mentioning the Kaplan decision, allowed a landlord to assert lack of notice as a defense to a tenant personal injury claim arising out of an alleged dangerous condition of the leased residential premises. See Alharb v. Sayegh, 604 N.Y.S.2d 243 (App. Div. 1993) . The court concluded that breach of the implied warranty of habitability did not, as a matter of law, require a finding that the landlord was strictly liable. Id. See also Curry v. New York City Hous. Auth., 430 N.Y.S.2d 305 (N.Y.A.D. 1980) (stating the "fundamental principle" that landlords owe a duty of reasonable care under the circumstances; questioning the propriety of a strict liability theory).

(n174)Footnote 720. See Dwyer v. Skyline Apts., Inc., 301 A.2d 463 (N.J. 1973) , aff'd per curiam, 311 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1973) (rejecting strict liability); but cf. Crowell v. McCaffrey, 386 N.E.2d 1256 (Mass. 1979) (suggesting the possibility that a landlord could be liable in tort based on breach of the warranty even if the landlord could not have discovered the defect in the exercise of reasonable care); Shroades v. Rental Homes, Inc., 427 N.E.2d 774 (Ohio 1981) (court concludes that violation of statutory warranty of habitability constitutes negligence per se).

(n175)Footnote 721. 698 P.2d 116 (Cal. 1985) , overruled, Peterson v. Superior Court, 899 P.2d 905 (Cal. 1995) .

(n176)Footnote 722. 698 P.2d at 122 .

(n177)Footnote 723. 698 P.2d at 123 .

(n178)Footnote 724. See Mora v. Baker Commodities, Inc., 258 Cal. Rptr. 669 (Cal. App. 1989) .

(n179)Footnote 725. See Vaerst v. Tanzman, 272 Cal. Rptr. 503 (Cal. App. 1990) .

(n180)Footnote 726. See Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp., 264 Cal. Rptr. 756 (Cal. App. 1989) .

(n181)Footnote 727. 899 P.2d 905 (Cal. 1995) .

(n182)Footnote 728. 899 P.2d at 912 .

(n183)Footnote 729. 899 P.2d at 913 .

(n184)Footnote 730. 899 P.2d at 906 . The court did not decide whether "different considerations would apply in the event the landlord or hotel owner had participated in the construction of the building," but it noted that "in such circumstances strict liability would attach, if at all, based upon the landlord's status as a builder who is engaged in the business of constructing (i.e. manufacturing) rental properties." Id. at 913-914 .

(n185)Footnote 731. See e.g., McMichael v. United States, 856 F.2d 1026 (8th Cir. 1988) (Arkansas strict liability and products liability statutes do not apply to the lease of a commercial building); Armstrong v. Cione, 738 P.2d 79 (Haw. 1987) (tenant injured by glass door of a shower; court rejects application of strict products liability theory, stating that it is "unpersuaded" by the Becker opinion); Dwyer v. Skyline Apts., Inc., 301 A.2d 463 (N.J. Super. 1973) , aff'd per curiam, 311 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1973) (tenant injured as a result of latent plumbing defect; court refuses to impose strict products liability on residential landlord; states that an apartment is not a product placed in the "stream of commerce" by the landlord); Young v. Morrisey, , 285 S.C. 236, 329 S.E.2d 426 329 S.E.2d 426 (S.C. 1985) (tenant's guests died in apartment fire caused by defective wiring; court rejects strict liability claim, declining to hold that landlords are "insurers" of the safety of tenants and guests from injuries caused by latent defects); cf. Livingston v. Begay, 652 P.2d 734 (N.M. 1982) (motel operator is not strictly liable for defects in fixtures and furnishings of rooms that the operator holds out to the public).

(n186)Footnote 732. 301 A.2d 463 (N.J. Super. 1973) , aff'd per curiam, 311 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1973) .

(n187)Footnote 733. 301 A.2d at 467 .

(n188)Footnote 734. See La. Civ. Code §§ 2696 & 2697 ("warranty ... also encompasses vices or defects that are not known to the lessor."); Wilson v. United States 434 F. Supp. 72 (E.D. La. 1977) ; Entrevia v. Hood, 427 So. 2d 1146 (La. 1983) .

(n189)Footnote 735. See, e.g., Walls v. Oxford Mgmt. Co., 633 A.2d 103 (N.H. 1993) ; E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Comment, Note. -- Private Person's Duty and Liability for Failure to Protect Another Against Criminal Attack by Third Person, 10 A.L.R.3d 619, 626 (1966) .

(n190)Footnote 736. See Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Ave. Apt. Corp., 439 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1970) ; E.L. Kellett, Annotation, Comment, Note. -- Private Person's Duty and Liability for Failure to Protect Another Against Criminal Attack by Third Person, 10 A.L.R.3d 619, 623 (1966) .

(n191)Footnote 737. See, e.g., Cramer v. Balcor Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 441 S.E.2d 317 (S.C. 1994) .

(n192)Footnote 738. See Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Ave. Apt. Corp., 439 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1970) ; See also Walther v. KPKA Meadowlands Ltd., 581 N.W.2d 527 (S.D. 1998) (court holds that no special relationship exists between landlord and tenant, citing several cases in support of that proposition).

(n193)Footnote 739. 439 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1970) .

(n194)Footnote 740. 439 F.2d at 487 .

(n195)Footnote 741. 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C.) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n196)Footnote 742. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 346 (3d ed. 2000); see generally Gary D. Spivey, Annotation, Landlord's Obligation to Protect Tenant Against Criminal Activities of Third Persons, 43 A.L.R.3d 331 (1972) .

(n197)Footnote 743. William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 346 (3d ed. 2000).

(n198)Footnote 744. See, e.g., Doe v. Dominion Bank, N.A., 963 F.2d 1552 (D.C. Cir. 1992) ; Samson v. Saginaw Prof. Bldg. Inc., 224 N.W.2d 843 (Mich. 1975) ; Richmond Medical Supply Co. v. Clifton, 369 S.E.2d 407 (Va. 1988) ; See also McClung v. Delta Sq. Ltd. Partnership, 937 S.W.2d 891 (Tenn. 1996) (court reverses summary judgment in favor of anchor tenant and owner of shopping center and concludes that "businesses" have a duty "to take reasonable measures to protect their customers from foreseeable criminal attacks");. see generally Gary D. Spivey, Annotation, Landlord's Obligation to Protect Tenant Against Criminal Activities of Third Persons, 43 A.L.R.3d 331, 363 (1972) .

(n199)Footnote 745. See, e.g., Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Ave. Apt. Corp., 439 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1970) (damages for criminal assault and robbery); Braitman v. Overlook Terrace Corp., 346 A.2d 76 (N.J. 1975) (property loss); but see Royal Neckwear Co. v. Century City, Inc., 252 Cal. Rptr. 810 (Cal. Ct. App. 1988) (Commercial landlord has no duty to safeguard tenant property from third party criminal acts).

(n200)Footnote 746. See e.g., Salerno v. Hart Fin. Corp., 521 So.2d 234 (Fla. App. 1988) (landlord had prior knowledge of previous criminal conduct). Cf. Lew v. Superior Court, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 (Ct. App. 1993) (landlord liable on nuisance theory to neighbors as a result of drug-related activities by non-tenants on leased premises). Theories under which a landlord may be liable for criminal acts of their tenants are discussed in B.A. Glesner, Landlords as Cops: Tort, Nuisance [#38] Forfeiture Standards Imposing Liability on Landlords for Crime on the Premises, 42 CASE W. RES. L. REV. 679 (1992). It should also be noted that some statutes impose criminal liability on landlords who permit their premises to be rented for illegal purposes. See, e.g., State v. Sigman, 826 P.2d 144 (Wash. 1992) (landlord convicted under statute that made it unlawful to knowingly lease, or make available, space for illegal drug purposes; landlord knew that tenant was growing marijuana in the basement).

(n201)Footnote 747. Relatively recent cases in this category include: Doe v. Prudential-Bache/A.G. Spanos Realty Partners, 492 S.E.2d 865 (Ga. 1997) (residential tenant was raped and robbed after parking her car beneath her apartment building; court affirmed summary judgment for landlord; court concluded that prior property-related crimes did not establish the foreseeability of the violent sexual assault in question); Cramer v. Balcor Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 848 F. Supp. 1222 (D.S.C. 1994) (landlord did not owe or assume a duty to protect tenant from criminal attack); Bartley v. Sweetser, 890 S.W.2d 250 (Ark. 1994) (residential tenant raped in her apartment unit; court confirms the traditional rule that the landlord does not owe a duty to protect the tenant or social guest from criminal acts); Sharon P. v. Arman, LTD, 989 P.2d 121 (Cal. 1999) , cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1243 (2000) (tenant sexually assaulted in underground commercial parking garage; court said that improved lighting and maintenance might have diminished the risk of criminal attacks in the garage, but, in the absence of similar incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of criminal assaults in the garage, it could not conclude that the landlord was required to take such measures); Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center, 863 P.2d 207 (Cal. 1993) (tenant's employee raped on tenant's premises; court concludes that violent criminal assaults were not sufficiently foreseeable to impose a duty upon the landlord to provide security guards in common areas); Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400, 23 P.3d 1143 (Cal. 2001) (delivery person was assaulted while attempting to make a delivery at an apartment complex; the court entered summary judgment for the property owner/landlord on a causation rationale); Gross v. Empire State Bldg. Assocs., 4 A.D.3d 45, 773 N.Y.S.2d 354 (App. Div. 2004) (landlord not liable for harms caused by deranged individual who fired a pistol into a crowd on the observation deck of the Empire State Building); Miller v. Whitworth, 455 S.E.2d 821 (W. Va. 1995) (rejecting general duty of liability on landlords for injuries caused by third party criminal acts; evidence of various police reports of crimes at the landlord's mobile home park was not sufficient to impose a duty on the landlord to protect the tenant from third party criminal activity). See also Kuzmicz v. Ivy Hill Park Apts., Inc., 688 A.2d 1018 (N.J. 1997) (tenant assaulted in vacant lot owned by municipal entity located next to landlord's apartment complex; court concludes that, in the absence of landlord control over an adjacent lot, or realization of significant commercial benefit from tenant use of the lot, landlord owes no duty to warn tenants of the risk of criminal assault on the lot).

(n202)Footnote 748. See, e.g., Deem v. Charles E. Smith Mgt., Inc., 799 F.2d 944 (4th Cir. 1986) ; Bartley v. Sweetser, 890 S.W.2d 250 (Ark. 1994) ; Rodgers v. Rosen, 737 P.2d 562 (Okla. 1987) ; Feld v. Merriam, 485 A.2d 742 (Pa. 1984) .

(n203)Footnote 749. See, e.g., Pippin v. Chicago Hous. Auth. 399 N.E.2d 596 (Ill. 1979) ; Gulf Reston, Inc. v. Rogers, 207 S.E.2d 841 (Va. 1974) ; cf. Miller v. Whitworth, 455 S.E.2d 821 (W. Va. 1995) (landlord does not have a duty to protect tenants from criminal activities of third persons merely because there is a landlord/tenant relationship; however, such a duty will be imposed if a landlord's affirmative actions or omissions have unreasonably created or increased the risk of injury to tenants from third party criminal activities).See also Estate of Hough v. Estate of Hough, 519 S.E.2d 640 (W. Va. 1999) (court reversed the dismissal of a wrongful death action against landlord, stating that the complaint stated a claim that the landlord's affirmative actions or omissions unreasonably created or increased the risk of injury to the tenant from the husband's criminal activity).

(n204)Footnote 750. See Deem v. Charles E. Smith Mgt., Inc., 799 F.2d 944 (4th Cir. 1986) .

(n205)Footnote 751. See, e.g., Scott v. Watson, 359 A.2d 548 (Md. 1976) ; Samson v. Saginaw Professional Bldg., Inc., 224 N.W.2d 843 (Mich. 1975) ; Aaron v. Havens, 758 S.W.2d 446 (Mo. 1988) .

(n206)Footnote 752. See, e.g., Pippin v. Chicago Hous. Auth., 399 N.E.2d 596 (Ill. 1979) ; Feld v. Merriam, 485 A.2d 742 (Pa. 1984) ; Gulf Reston, Inc. v. Rogers, 207 S.E.2d 841 (Va. 1974) .

(n207)Footnote 753. See, e.g., Phillips v. Chicago Hous. Auth., 431 N.E.2d 1038 (Ill. 1982) ; Feld v. Merriam, 485 A.2d 742 (Pa. 1984) But some courts have been reluctant to carry this idea too far. See e.g., ; Dailey v. Housing Auth., 639 So. 2d 1343 (Ala. 1994) ; Hall v. Rental Management, Inc., 913 S.W.2d 293 (Ark. 1996) (in Hall, a 17 year old tenant was shot and killed while participating in an activity in a part of the apartment complex; the landlord had produced a tenant handbook that expressed concern for tenant safety, and had issued an employee manual that instructed its employees to be security conscious; the resident manager or a maintenance employee would sometimes patrol the premises, checking the lights, looking for security problems, and communicating with residents about suspicious activities; but the court said: "We are reluctant to hold that a landlord's use of these modest, conscientious measures imposes a full blown duty to protect tenants from third party criminal activities."

(n208)Footnote 754. See, e.g., Lay v. Dworman, 732 P.2d 455 (Okla. 1986) ; Richmond Med. Supply Co. v. Clifton, 369 S.E.2d 407 (Va. 1988) . Liability based on an agreement may not extend to those who are not parties to the agreement. See, e.g., Taylor v. Hocker, 428 N.E.2d 662 (Ill. Ct. App. 1981) (shopping center landlord who agreed to provide common area security personnel did not agree to protect customers from criminal assault).

(n209)Footnote 755. See, e.g., Ponticas v. K.M.S. Inv., 331 N.W.2d 907 (Minn. 1983) ; John H. Derrick, Annotation, Landlord's Tort Liability to Tenant for Personal Injury or Property Damage Resulting from Criminal Conduct of Employee, 38 A.L.R.4th 240, 247 (1985) .

(n210)Footnote 756. See Pippin v. Chicago Hous. Auth., 399 N.E.2d 596 (Ill. 1979) .

(n211)Footnote 757. See, e.g., Richmond Med. Supply Co. v. Clifton, 369 S.E.2d 407 (Va. 1988) .

(n212)Footnote 758. See Paterson v. Deeb, 472 So. 2d 1210 (Fla. Ct. App. 1985) , review denied, 484 So. 2d 8 (Fla. 1986) ;cf. Walther v. KPKA Meadowlands Ltd., 581 N.W.2d 527 (S.D. 1998) (court concludes that a statute requiring the landlord to keep leased residential premises in reasonable repair, fit for human habitation, and in good and safe working order, did not create a duty on the part of the landlord to protect tenants from criminal acts of third persons).

(n213)Footnote 759. See, e.g., Lay v. Dworman, 732 P.2d 455 (Okla. 1986) ; William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.47 (3d ed. 2000).

(n214)Footnote 760. See Gary D. Spivey, Annotation, Landlord's Obligation to Protect Tenant Against Criminal Activities of Third Persons, 43 A.L.R.3d 335 (1972) .

(n215)Footnote 761. See, e.g., Paterson v. Deeb, 472 So. 2d 1210 (Fla. Ct. App. 1985) , review denied, 484 So. 2d 8 (Fla. 1986) ; Brichacek v. Hiskey, 401 N.W.2d 44 (Iowa 1987) . In this connection, it should be noted that an ordinance in Newark, New Jersey requires security guards to be provided for most public or private "housing buildings" that contain over 100 housing units. See 515 Associates v. City of Newark, 623 A.2d 1366 (N.J. 1993) .

(n216)Footnote 762. See TEX. PROP. CODE92.151 et seq.

(n217)Footnote 763. 412 A.2d 436 (N.J. 1980) .

(n218)Footnote 764. The court also said that, since the existence of the implied warranty did not depend on landlord knowledge of any risks, the plaintiff need not prove notice to the landlord of an unsafe condition. Of course, it is not inevitable that strict liability, or something akin to it, follow from a decision to base tort liability on breach of a warranty of habitability. Most of the courts that have held landlords liable in tort for dangerous defects that violate a warranty of habitability have indicated that liability sounds in negligence. See § 41.09(b)(9) of this chapter.

(n219)Footnote 765. See also Brichacek v. Hiskey, 401 N.W.2d 44 (Iowa 1987) (implied warranty incorporates statutory requirement for secure lock); Flood v. Wisconsin Real Estate Inv. Trust, 503 F. Supp 1157 (D. Kan. 1980) (implied warranty to maintain same level of security existing at the beginning of the lease); but see, e.g., Walls v. Oxford Mgmt. Co., 633 A.2d 103 (N.H. 1993) (implied warranty of habitability does not require landlord to take affirmative measures to provide security against criminal attack); Jack v. Fritts, 457 S.E.2d 431 (W. Va. 1995) (neither statutory nor implied warranties of habitability impose a duty on the landlord to protect a tenant from injuries arising out of the criminal conduct of a third party); see generally, Caroline Hudson, Note, Expanding the Scope of the Implied Warranty of Habitability: A Landlord's Duty to Protect Tenants From Foreseeable Criminal Activity, 33 Vand. L. Rev. 1493 (1980).

(n220)Footnote 766. See, e.g., Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Ave. Apartment Corp., 439 F.2d 477 (D.C. Cir. 1970) ; O.H. v. Ballard Realty Co., 516 So. 2d 519 (Ala. 1987) ; Sharon P. v. Arman, LTD, 989 P.2d 121 (Cal. 1999) , cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1243 (2000) ; N.W. v. Amalgamated Trust & Sav. Bank, 554 N.E.2d 629 (Ill. Ct. App. 1990) ; C.S. v. Sophir, 368 N.W.2d 444 (Neb. 1985) ; but see Paterson v. Deeb, 472 So. 2d 1210 (Fla. Ct. App. 1985) , review denied, 484 So. 2d 8 (Fla. 1986) (foreseeability need not be shown when landlord failed to provide security device required by a statute).

(n221)Footnote 767. See, e.g., Scott v. Watson, 359 A.2d 548 (Md. 1976) .

(n222)Footnote 768. See Dick v. Great S. Bay Co., 435 N.Y.S.2d 240 (Civ. Ct. 1981) , modified on other grounds, 442 N.Y.S.2d 348 (App. Term 1981) .

(n223)Footnote 769. See Samson v. Saginaw Prof. Bldg., Inc., 224 N.W.2d 843 (Mich. 1975) ; see generally Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 155 (1982).

(n224)Footnote 770. See Timberwalk Apartments, Partners, Inc. v. Cain, 972 S.W.2d 749, 757 (Tex. 1998) (tenant raped in her apartment; after analyzing the several listed factors, the court concluded that the rape was not foreseeable).

(n225)Footnote 771. See, e.g., Sharp v. W.H. Moore, Inc., 796 P.2d 506, 510 (Idaho 1990) ; Rowe v. State Bank of Lombard, 531 N.E.2d 1358 (Ill. 1988) ; see also Gans v. Parkview Plaza Partnership, 571 N.W.2d 261 (Neb. 1997) (commercial tenant was sexually assaulted in leased office building; court says that although a single prior criminal incident may not be alone sufficient to impose a duty on the landlord "the controlling question is whether, under the facts presented, one incident constitutes sufficient notice to make the criminal acts sued upon reasonably foreseeable"); but see Knoll v. Board of Regents, 601 N.W.2d 757 (Neb. 1999) (foreseeability is a legal question for the court; to the extent that the Gans case indicates otherwise, it is, to that extent, overruled).

(n226)Footnote 772. Doe v. Prudential-Bache/A.G. Spanos Realty Partners, 492 S.E.2d 865 (Ga. 1997) .

(n227)Footnote 773. Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shop. Ctr., 863 P.2d 207 , 215-216 (Cal. 1993) .

(n228)Footnote 774. See Carol C. Jones, An Exculpatory Provision that Will Protect the Lessor, 1946 Ins. L.J. 79, 93 (1946).

(n229)Footnote 775. See Olin L. Browder, The Taming of a Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 141 (1982).

(n230)Footnote 776. See, e.g., John D. Perovich, Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor from Liability, 49 A.L.R.3d 321, 325, 328 (1973) ; Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 141 (1982).

(n231)Footnote 777. See, e.g., Carbone v. Cortlandt Realty Corp., 277 A.2d 542 (N.J. 1971) ; Kotwasinski v. Rasner, 258 A.2d 865 (Pa. 1969) .

(n232)Footnote 778. See, e.g., Jewett v. Rechler, 529 N.Y.S.2d 16 (App. Div. 1988) .

(n233)Footnote 779. See, e.g., Taylor v. Leedy & Co., 412 So. 2d 763 (Ala. 1982) .

(n234)Footnote 780. See, e.g., Carbone v. Cortlandt Realty Corp., 277 A.2d 542 (N.J. 1971) ; Federal Pac. Elec. v. Carolina Prod. Enters., 378 S.E.2d 56 (S.C. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n235)Footnote 781. See, e.g., Ransburg v. Richards, 770 N.E.2d 393 (Ind. Ct. App. 2002) ; Papakalos v. Shaka, 18 A.2d 377 (N.H. 1941) .

(n236)Footnote 782. See, e.g., Henrioulle v. Marin Ventures, Inc., 573 P.2d 465 (Cal. 1978) ; George Washington Univ. v. Weintraub, 458 A.2d 43 (D.C. 1983); Contra O'Callaghan v. Waller & Beckwith Realty Co., 155 N.E.2d 545 (Ill. 1958) (landlord-tenant relationship does not have monopolistic features that courts have relied on in invalidating such clauses in other contexts; exculpatory clause may mean lower rent for tenant), abrogated by statute as stated in Calef v. West 652 N.W.2d 496 (Mich. Ct. App. 2002) .

(n237)Footnote 783. See, e.g., Cardona v. Eden Realty Co., 288 A.2d 34 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1972) ; Johnson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 415 F. Supp. 264 (E.D. Mich. 1976) .

(n238)Footnote 784. See, e.g., Weaver v. American Oil Co., 276 N.E.2d 144 (Ind. 1971) ; Galligan v. Arovitch, 219 A.2d 463 (Pa. 1966) ; Cardona v. Eden Realty Co., 288 A.2d 34 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1972) ; see generally Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 141-144 (1982); John D. Perovich, Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor from Liability, 49 A.L.R.3d 321, 339, 345 (1973) .

(n239)Footnote 785. See Cardona v. Eden Realty Co., 288 A.2d 34 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1972) .

(n240)Footnote 786. See McCutcheon v. United Homes Corp., 486 P.2d 1093 (Wash. 1971) .

(n241)Footnote 787. See, e.g., Price v. Amoco Oil Co., 524 F. Supp. 364 (S.D. Ind. 1981) (commercial lease; knowledgeable lessee); Anderson v. Union P.R. Co., 790 P.2d 438 (Kan. Ct. App. 1990) (lessee's questions indicated understanding of lease provisions); Bedrosky v. Hiner, 430 N.W.2d 535 (Neb. 1988) (no inequality of bargaining power); Princeton Sportswear Corp. v. H & M Assocs., 507 A.2d 339 (Pa. 1986) (no inequality of bargaining power).

(n242)Footnote 788. See, e.g., Matthews v. Mountain Lodge Apts., Inc., 388 So. 2d 935 (Ala. 1980) ; Armi v. Huckabee, 94 So. 2d 380 (Ala. 1957) ; John D. Perovich, Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor from Liability, 49 A.L.R.3d 321, 342 (1973) .

(n243)Footnote 789. See statutes listed in Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, statutory note (1977); see generally, Olin L. Browder, The Taming of A Duty -- The Tort Liability of Landlords, 81 Mich. L. Rev. 99, 142-144 (1982),

(n244)Footnote 790. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act § 1.403(a)(4).

(n245)Footnote 791. See id., § 1.403(b).

(n246)Footnote 792. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1953; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 521 33.

(n247)Footnote 793. See Md. Ann. Code, Real Property § 8-105; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186 § 15; N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5 321.

(n248)Footnote 794. La. Rev. Stat. § 9:3221.

(n249)Footnote 795. See, e.g., Larson v. Santa Clara Valley Water Conservation Dist., 32 Cal. Rptr. 875 (Cal. Ct. App. 1963) ; Vernon Fire and Cas. Ins. Co. v. Graham, 336 N.E.2d 829 (Ind. Ct. App. 1975) ; E.T. Tan, Annotation, Effect, on Nonsigner, of Provision of Lease Exempting Landlord from Liability on Account of Condition of Property, 12 A.L.R.3D 958, 959 (1967).

(n250)Footnote 796. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 17.3, cmt. j (1977).

(n251)Footnote 797. See, e.g., Deen v. Holderfield, 155 So. 2d 314 (Ala. 1963) ; Levins v. Theopold, 95 N.E.2d 554 (Mass. 1950) ; E.T. Tan, Annotation, Effect, on Nonsigner, of Provision of Lease Exempting Landlord from Liability on Account of Condition of Property, 12 A.L.R.3D 958, 960 (1967).

(n252)Footnote 798. See, e.g., Crowell v. Housing Auth. of Dallas, 495 S.W.2d 887 (Tex. 1973) ; Thomas v. Housing Auth. of Bremerton, 426 P.2d 836 (Wash. 1967) ; contra Manius v. Housing Auth. of Pittsburgh, 39 A.2d 614 (Pa. 1944) (court will not restrict contractual freedom).

(n253)Footnote 799. 270 F.3d 1007 (6th Cir. 2001) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.10

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.10 Frustration of Tenant's Use.

In some circumstances, the rights of the landlord may be limited by application of the contract doctrine of frustration of purpose, or commercial frustration, as it is sometimes called. Frustration of purpose arises when the performance of contractual obligations is possible, but "the expected value of performance to the party seeking to be excused has been destroyed by a fortuitous event, which supervenes to cause an actual but not literal failure of consideration." n800 In other words, the unforeseen event defeats the purpose for which the contract was made. n801 If the doctrine applies, it excuses the contract performance of the party whose purpose has been frustrated. This, in turn, affects the other parties' duties of performance under the contract in the same way that a breach of contract would: in the case of a material breach, the other party can suspend performance, and, if an appropriate time to cure has passed, terminate the contract. n802 Although many courts have recognized that the doctrine applies to real estate leases, tenants have not had much success satisfying the requirements of the frustration of purpose doctrine. n803

In order for the doctrine of frustration of purpose to apply to a real estate lease, the weight of authority requires: 1) that the use that is frustrated be the use that the parties intended for the leased premises upon entering into the lease; 2) that there be a total or near total frustration of the use; and; 3) that the event resulting in the frustration be one that was not reasonably foreseeable by the parties at the time they entered into the lease. n804 Courts have sometimes said that they will not grant relief under the doctrine unless there is extreme hardship to the tenant. n805 A loss of profits by the tenant is usually not enough. n806 Courts have also declined to find frustration of purpose if the tenant is free to put the leased premises to another use. n807 In a number of cases, tenants have been denied relief on the ground that the purpose impairing occurrence was foreseeable. n808

The majority of the cases in which the doctrine of commercial frustration has been applied to real estate leases have been cases involving governmental action or regulation. Tenants have sometimes been permitted to avoid lease obligations when the intended use of the premises is made illegal by government action. n809 Courts have also indicated that the doctrine may apply in consequence of other government action, such as when government officials lock the doors to the leased premises and seize the tenant's goods n810 or when government officials deny a tenant permits to remodel the leased premises for their intended use. n811 The Restatement indicates that other governmental actions that might frustrate the intended use of the leased premises include the rationing of items needed by the tenant in the tenant's business operations, and a freeze on prices of products produced by the tenant on the leased premises. n812

In a few instances, courts have invoked the frustration of purpose doctrine to excuse tenant performance when the frustrating occurrence was accidental destruction of leased improvements. n813 In the Albert M. Greenfield & Co. v. Kolea, n814 case, for example, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court excused a commercial tenant from lease obligations after a garage that had been used in the tenant's business operations had been destroyed by accidental fire. The court refused to apply traditional property based rules regarding the continuance of lease obligations following accidental destruction of improvements, and said it was obvious that the purpose of the lease had been frustrated. n815

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 800. Lloyd v. Murphy, 153 P.2d 47, 50 (Cal. 1944) . The doctrine was first applied in the so called "coronation cases." See Krell v. Henry, 2 K.B. 740 (1903) .

(n2)Footnote 801. See Arthur L. Corbin, Corbin on Contracts, § 1322 (1962).

(n3)Footnote 802. See E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.9, at 729 730 (2d ed. 1990).

(n4)Footnote 803. See Perry v. Champlain Oil Co., 134 A.2d 65 (N.H. 1957) ; E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.7, at 725 (2d ed. 1990).

(n5)Footnote 804. See, e.g., Maryland Trust Co. v. Tulip Realty Co., 153 A.2d 275 (Md. 1959) ; Perry v. Champlain Oil Co., 134 A.2d 65 (N.H. 1957) ; Wood v. Bartolino, 146 P.2d 883 (N.M. 1944) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.3, Reporter's Note 3 (1977); C.T. Foster, Annotation, Modern Status of the Rules Regarding Impossibility of Performance as Defense in Action for Breach of Contract, 84 A.L.R.2d 12, 70 76 (1962) .

(n6)Footnote 805. See, e.g., Maryland Trust Co. v. Tulip Realty Co., 153 A.2d 275 (Md. 1959) .

(n7)Footnote 806. See, e.g., Lloyd v. Murphy, 153 P.2d 47 (Cal. 1944) ; Mel Frank Tool & Supply, Inc. v. Di Chem Co., 580 N.W.2d 802 (Iowa 1998) .

(n8)Footnote 807. See, e.g., Deibler v. Bernard Bros. Inc., 53 N.E.2d 450 (Ill. 1944) ; see also Mel Frank Tool & Supply, Inc. v. Di Chem Co., 580 N.W.2d 802 (Iowa 1998) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.3 cmt. b (1977).

(n9)Footnote 808. See, e.g., Essex Lincoln Garage v. City of Boston, 175 N.E.2d 466 (Mass. 1961) (tenant of parking garage not permitted to terminate based on change in traffic regulations that diminished its business); North American Capital Corp. v. McCants, 510 S.W.2d 901 (Tenn. 1974) (failure of government officials to approve tenant's site for a thrift institution was foreseeable).

(n10)Footnote 809. Chapter 40 includes a discussion of the issue. See § 40.16(b).

(n11)Footnote 810. 119 Fifth Ave., Inc. v. Taiyo Trading Co., Inc., 73 N.Y.S.2d 774 (Sup. Ct. 1947) , aff'd, 87 N.Y.S.2d 430 (App. Div. 1949) .

(n12)Footnote 811. Garner v. Ellingson, 501 P.2d 22 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1972) .

(n13)Footnote 812. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 9.3 cmt. b (1977).

(n14)Footnote 813. See Albert M. Greenfield & Co. v. Kolea, 380 A.2d 758 (Pa. 1977) ; Smith v. Roberts, 370 N.E.2d 271 (Ill. Ct. App. 1977) ; Eggen v. Wetterborg, 237 P.2d 970 (Or. 1951) .

(n15)Footnote 814. 380 A.2d 758 (Pa. 1977) .

(n16)Footnote 815. 380 A.2d at 760 .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.11

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.11 Environmental Obligations.

A landlord may have obligations regarding the condition of leased premises under federal and state environmental legislation. While a detailed treatment of environmental issues is beyond the scope of this chapter, a reference to landlord liability under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act ("CERCLA") n816 is in order, because CERCLA has been the most important legislative vehicle for imposing environmental liability on landowners.

CERCLA establishes a strict liability scheme with respect to the release, or threatened release, of hazardous substances. Section 9607 of the Act provides that persons potentially responsible for such liability include current owners and operators of facilities where hazardous substances are released, or threatened to be released, as well as owners and operators of facilities at the time hazardous substances were disposed of. n817 A "facility" is broadly defined under the Act, n818 and has been said to include "any place where hazardous substances come to be located." n819 It is not necessary, for liability purposes, that the owner of the land actively participate in the release of hazardous substances, and courts have had no difficulty concluding that landlords are owners of facilities for purposes of CERCLA liability. n820 Of course, if the tenant is the "operator" of the facility that generates the hazardous substances, the tenant will also be subject to liability. n821

A statutory defense is available under CERCLA if the release, or threatened release, of a hazardous substance resulted from the act or omission of a third party, if the defendant establishes: 1) that the defendant exercised due care with respect to the hazardous substance, and 2) that the defendant took precautions against foreseeable third party acts or omissions. n822 But reported court decisions do not indicate that this defense has, at least thus far, been of much assistance to landlords. The Act provides that the affirmative defense does not apply when the third party "act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship existing directly or indirectly, with the defendant." n823 "Contractual relationship" is defined broadly by the Act, n824 and has been construed to include leases. n825 Based on the "contractual relationship" proviso, it has been held that the third party defense is unavailable to a landlord who has an oral lease with the party who was at fault in connection with the release of a hazardous substance. n826

Issues regarding tenant liability and recovery for environmental problems have also arisen. As noted above, a tenant could incur liability as an "operator" of a facility that releases hazardous substances. Some courts have considered whether tenants, when acting as sublessors, should be subject to liability as owners. n827 And a commentator has argued that tenants may be able to use the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act: (RCRA) to impose liability on landlords if landlord renovations of leased space generate hazardous levels of lead particles. n828.

Additional information regarding landowner environmental liability is contained in chapter 75.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 816. 42 U.S.C. §§ 9601 -- 9675.

(n2)Footnote 817. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607.

(n3)Footnote 818. See 42 U.S.C. § 9601(9).

(n4)Footnote 819. See United States v. Bliss, 667 F. Supp. 1298, 1305 (E.D. Mo. 1987) , quoting United States v. Conservation Chem. Co., 619 F. Supp. 162, 185 (W.D. Mo. 1985) .

(n5)Footnote 820. See, e.g., United States v. Monsanto Co., 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1106 (1989) ; Caldwell v. Gurley Refining Co., 755 F.2d 645 (8th Cir. 1985) ; Weyerhaeuser Corp. v. Koppers Co., 771 F. Supp. 1406 (D. Md. 1991) ; 4 W. Rogers, Environmental Law: Hazardous Wastes and Substances § 8.12 (1992); Anthony J. Fejfar, Landowner Lessor Liability Under CERCLA, 53 Md. L. Rev. 157 (1994).

(n6)Footnote 821. See Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Koppers Co., Inc., 771 F. Supp. 1420 (D. Md. 1991) (allocating liability between landlord as owner and tenant as operator).

(n7)Footnote 822. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607(b)(3).

(n8)Footnote 823. See id.

(n9)Footnote 824. See 42 U.S.C. § 9601(35)(A) (the expression includes, but is not limited to "land contracts, deeds or other instruments transferring title or possession."

(n10)Footnote 825. See International Clinical Laboratories, Inc. v. Stevens, 710 F. Supp. 466 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) . For a discussion of the "contractual relationship" issue as applied to landlord tenant relationships, see Anthony J. Fejfar, Landowner Lessor Liability Under CERCLA, 53 Md. L. Rev. 157 (1994).

(n11)Footnote 826. See United States v. Monsanto, 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988) .

(n12)Footnote 827. See, e.g., U.S. v. A & N Cleaners and Launderers, Inc., 788 F. Supp. 1317 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (tenant that was also sublessor was "owner" for CERCLA purposes); Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equipment Corp., 215 F.3d 321 (2d Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 979 (2000) (court said that some lessees may have the requisite indicia of ownership to be considered owners for purposes of CERCLA liability, but it declined to find the sublessor in question to be an owner); Servco Pacific Inc. v. Dods, 193 F. Supp. 2d 1183 (D. Haw. 2002) (considers tenant liability under CERCLA for chemical contamination).

(n13)Footnote 828. See Cappell, Shana R., Lead Paint Poisoning and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act: A New Partnership for the Twenty-First Century, 35 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Probs. 175 (2002).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 41.12

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 41.12 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Blundell, Lionel A. & V.G. Wellings. Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant. Vol. 1, 619620. 26th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1960.

Casner, James A., ed. American Law of Property. Vol. 1. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1952.

Corbin, Arthur L. Corbin on Contracts. Vol. 4 959989. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1951.

Cowans, Daniel R. Cowans Bankruptcy Law and Practice. Vol. 2. 11.5, 11.11 & 12.15. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1989.

Dukeminier, Jesse & James E. Krier. Property. 3d ed. Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1993.

Farnsworth, E. Allan. Contracts 2d ed. 8.208.21, 9.7 & 9.9. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1990.

Friedman, Milton R. Friedman on Leases. Vols. 13. 3d ed. Practicing Law Institute, 1990.

Gaudio, Arthur R., ed. The American Law of Real Property. Vol. 1. Matthew Bender & Co., 1991.

Harper, Fowler V., Fleming James, Jr. & Oscar S. Gray. The Law of Torts Vol. 1 3.15. 2d ed. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1986.

Hernandez, Michael V. "The Right of Religious Landlords to Exclude Unmarried Cohabitants: Debunking the Myth of the Tenant's 'New Clothes.'" 77 Neb. L. Rev. 494 (1998).

Holdsworth, Sir William. A History of English Law. Vol. 7. 2d ed. 1925. Reprint. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. and Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., 1973.

Jones, Basil & Herbert T. Tiffany. The Law of Real Property. Vols. 1 & 3. 3d ed. Chicago: Callaghan & Co., 1939.

Keeton, W. Page, Dan B. Dobbs, Robert E. Keeton & David G. Owen. Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts. 144, 189194, 436438, 440441, 443446. 5th ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1984.

King, Lawrence P., ed. Collier on Bankruptcy. Vol. 2 & 365.06, Vol. 3 & 502.02[d], Vol. 4 & 545.04[4]. 15th ed. Matthew Bender & Co., 1994.

Nichols on Eminent Domain . Vol. 2 5.06. Vol. 4, 12.05[1] & 12D.04[2] (LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

Nelson, Grant S. & Dale A. Whitman. Real Estate Finance Law. 3d ed. 7.12. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1994.

Powell on Real Property(R) Vol. 2 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

Randolph, Patrick A., Jr., ed. The Commercial Property Lease. American Bar Association, 1993.

Rogers, William H., Jr., Environmental Law: Hazardous Wastes and Substances. Vol. 4 8.12. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1992.

Schoshinski, Robert S. American Law of Landlord and Tenant. Rochester: Lawyers Co Operative Publishing Co. and Bancroft Whitney Co., 1980.

Stoebuck, William B. &. Whitman, Dale A. The Law of Property. St. Paul: West Group (3d ed. 2000).

Thomas, J.H. Systematic Arrangement of Lord Coke's First Institute of the Laws of England. Vol. 1. 344 & 368. 1836. Reprint. Buffalo: William S. Hein Co., 1986.

Weintraub, Benjamin & Alan N. Resnick. Bankruptcy Law Manual. 5.05[2] Boston: Warren, Gorham & Lamont, 1986.

Williston, Samuel & Walter H.E. Jaeger. A Treatise on the Law of Contracts. Vols. 6 & 18. 3d ed. Mount Kisco, N.Y.: Baker, Voorhis & Co., 1968.

Articles

Aalberts, Robert J. "Drug Testing Tenants: Does it Violate Rights of Privacy?" Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 38 (2003) 479.

Aalberts, Robert J. "Look Who's Getting Drug Tested Now: Tenants Must Be Clean or They're Out." 30 Real Estate L.J. 3 (2001).

Abbott, Samuel Bassett. "Housing Policy, Housing Codes and Tenant Remedies: An Integration." B.U. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1976) 1.

Ackerman, Bruce. "Regulating Slum Housing Markets on Behalf of the Poor: Of Housing Codes, Housing Subsidies and Income Redistribution Policy." Yale L.J. Vol. 80 (1971) 1093.

Andrew, Michael T. "Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy: Understanding 'Rejection.'" Colo. L. Rev. Vol. 59 (1988)

845.

Bell, Deborah Hodges. "Providing Security of Tenure for Residential Tenants: Good Faith as a Limitation on the Landlord's Right to Terminate." Ga. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1985) 483.

Bennett, Dale E. "The Modern Lease An Estate in Land or a Contract?" Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (1937) 47.

Bopp, Fred W., III. "The Unwarranted Implication of a Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases An Alternative Approach." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1988) 1057.

Brennan, Robert J. "The Implied Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases and the Subrogating Insurance Company." Forum Vol. 18 (1983) 683.

Browder, Olin L. "The Taming Of A Duty The Tort Liability of Landlords." Mich. L. Rev., Vol. 81 (1982) 99.

Cappell, Shana R. "Lead Paint Poisoning and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act: A New Partnership for the Twenty First Century." 35 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Probs. 175 (2002).

Cargile, Ann Peldo & Noble, Michael B. "Assignments and Subleases: The Basics." Prob. & Prop. (Sept./Oct. 2003) 40.

Chase, Edward & E. Hunter Taylor, Jr. "Landlord and Tenant: A Study in Property and Contract." Vill. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1985) 571.

Christiansen, Patrick T. & Geoffrey B. Di Mauro. "An Ounce of Prevention: Planning for Environmental Issues in Leases." Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1995) 40.

Comment. "Fixtures in the Landlord/Tenant Relationship." U. Chi. L. Rev. Vol 34 (1967) 617.

Comment. "Landlord and Tenant Lessee's Recovery of an Advance Payment of Rent." Ill. L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1931) 716.

Comment. "Landlord Tenant: Proving Motive In Retaliatory EvictionMinnesota's Solution." Minn. L. Rev. Vol. 61 (1977) 523.

Committee on Leases, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, American Bar Association. "Security Deposits and Guarantees Under Leases." Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 1 (1966) 405.

Cunningham, Roger A. "The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status." Urb. L. Ann. Vol. 16 (1979) 3.

Davis, Michael J. & Phillip E. DeLaTorre. "A Fresh Look At Premises Liability As Affected By The Warranty Of Habitability." Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 59 (1984) 141.

DeGraffe, Luis Jorge. "The Development Of Unlawful Evictions And Tenant Remedies For Injurious Conduct In New York." Syracuse L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1990) 1179.

DeGraffe, Luis Jorge. "The Historical Evolution of American Forcible Entry and Detainer Statutes." Seton Hall Legis. J., Vol. 13 (1990) 129.

"Expanding the Scope of the Implied Warranty of Habitability: A Landlord's Duty to Protect Tenants From Foreseeable Criminal Activity." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 33 (1980) 1493.

Fejfar, Anthony J. "Landowner Lessor Liability Under CERCLA." Md. L. Rev. Vol. 53 (1994) 157.

Fejfar, Anthony J. "Permissive Waste and the Warranty of Habitability In Residential Tenancies." 31 Cumb. L. Rev. 1 (2000 2001).

Field, Karen E. "The Americans with Disabilities Act 'Readily Achievable' Requirement for Barrier Removal: A Proposal for the Allocation of Responsibility Between Landlord and Tenant." Cardozo L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1993) 569.

Flynn, Stephanie G. "Duty to Mitigate Damages Upon a Tenant's Abandonment." Real Prop. Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 34 (2000) 721.

Freyermuth , R. Wilson. "Modernizing Security in Rents: the New Uniform Assignment of Rents Act." 71 Mo. L. Rev. 1 (2006).

Genovese, Christopher C. "Precision Industries v. Qualitech Steel: Easing the Tension Between Sections 363 and 365 of the Bankruptcy Code?" Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 39 (2004) 627.

Gibbons, Gerald R. "Residential Landlord Tenant Law: A Survey of Modern Problems with Reference to the Proposed Model Code." Hastings L.J. Vol. 21 (1970) 369.

Glazerman, Michael J. "Asbestos in Commercial Buildings: Obligations and Responsibilities of Landlords and Tenants." Real Prop., Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 22 (1987) 661.

Glazerman, Michael J. "Who Pays for Asbestos Remediation Landlord or Tenant?" Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1995) 35.

Glendon, Mary Ann. "The Transformation of American Landlord Tenant Law." B.C.L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1982) 503.

Glesner, B.A. "Landlords as Cops: Tort, Nuisance & Forfeiture Standards Imposing Liability on Landlords for Crime on the Premises." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 42 (1992) 679.

Goldman, Gary. "Uniform Commercial Landlord and Tenant Act A Proposal to Reform 'Law Out of Context.'" T.M. Cooley L. Rev. Vol. 19 (2002)175.

Grant, Eugene L. "Disturbing Concepts: Quiet Enjoyment and Constructive Eviction in the Modern Commercial Lease." 35 Real Prop. Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 35 (2000) 57.

Grant, Eugene L. "First Class Condition: Responsibilities, Rights, and Remedies Respecting the Condition of Commercial Leasehold Premises." Real Prop., Prob. and Tr. J. Vol. 29 (1995) 735.

Green, Shelby D. "The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law that Give Security of Tenure and Control." Cath. U.L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1994) 681.

Greenfield, Gerald G. & Michael Z. Margolies. "An Implied Warranty of Fitness in Nonresidential Leases." Alb. L. Rev. Vol. 45 (1981) 855.

Heskin, Alan David. "The Warranty of Habitability Debate: A California Case Study." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 66 (1978) 37.

Hicks, John Forrester. "The Contractual Nature of Real Property Leases." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1972) 443.

Hirsch, Werner Z., Joel G. Hirsch & Stephen Margolis. "Regression Analysis of the Effects of Habitability Laws upon Rent: An Empirical Observation on the Ackerman Komesar Debate." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1975) 1098.

Hirsch, Werner Z. & Joel G. Hirsch. "The Changing Landlord Tenant Relationship in California: An Economic Analysis of the Swinging Pendulum." SW. U.L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1983) 1.

Humbach, John A. "The Common Law Conception of Leasing: Mitigation, Habitability, and Dependency of Covenants." Wash. U.L.Q. Vol. 60 (1983) 1213.

Iwamoto, R.S. "Insurance and the Commercial Lease, Part I." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 22 (Jan. 2006) 57.

Jones, Carol C. "An Exculpatory Provision that Will Protect the Lessor." 1946 Ins. L.J. 79.

Jones, Michael F. "Commercial Leases Under the Americans with Disabilities Act." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 22 (1994) 185.

Jones, William K. "Private Revision of Public Standards: Exculpatory Agreements In Leases." N.Y.U. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1988) 717.

Kalish, Stephen A. "Residential Tenant Security Deposits: A Legislative Proposal." 1974 U. Ill. L.F. 569.

Kelley, Robert H. "Any Reports of the Death of the Property Law Paradigm for Leases Have Been Greatly Exaggerated." Wayne L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1995) 1563.

Kennedy, Duncan. "The Effect of the Warranty of Habitability on Low Income Housing: 'Milking' and Class Violence." Fla. St. U.L. Rev. Vol. 15 (1987) 485.

Komesar, Neil K. "Return to Slumville: A Critique of the Ackerman Analysis of Housing Code Enforcement and the Poor." Yale L.J. Vol. 82 (1973) 1175.

Korngold, Gerald. "Whatever Happened to Landlord Tenant Law?" 77 Neb. L. Rev. 703 (1998).

Kowantz, Robyn A. "Property Landlord Tenant The New Jersey Anti Eviction Act Prohibits Foreclosing Mortgagee from Evicting Tenants of the Mortgagor Without Cause." Seton Hall L. Rev. Vol. 25 (1995) 1292.

Kublicki, Nicolas M. "Heavy Metal: Residential Lead Rule." Probate & Property (Sept/Oct 1996) at 39.

Levinson, Robert A. and Michael N. Silver. "Do Commercial Property Tenants Possess Warranties of Habitability?" Real Estate L.J. Vol. 14 (1985) 59.

Lesar, Hiram H. "The Landlord Tenant Relation in Perspective: From Status to Contract and Back in 900 Years?" U. Kan. L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1961) 367.

Love, Jean C. "Landlord's Liability for Defective Premises, Caveat Lessee, Negligence, or Strict Liability." 1975 Wis. L. Rev. 19.

Love, Sarajane. "Landlord's Remedies When The Tenant Abandons: Property, Contract, And Leases." U. Kan. L. Rev. Vol. 30 (1982) 533.

Madison, Michael. "The Real Properties of Contract Law." 82 B.U. L. Rev. 405 (2002).

Markey, Maureen E., "The Landlord/Tenant Free Exercise Conflict in a Post RFRA World," Rutgers L. J. Vol. 29 (1998) 487.

Markey, Maureen E. "The Price of Landlord's "Free" Exercise of Religion: Tenant's Right to Discrimination Free Housing and Privacy." Fordham Urb. L.J. Vol. 22 (1995) 699.

Markovits, Richard S. "The Distributive Impact, Allocative Efficiency, and Overall Desirability of Ideal Housing Codes: Some Theoretical Clarifications." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 89 (1976) 1815.

Marley, John A. Note. "Landlord Tenant Should a Warranty of Fitness Be Implied in Commercial Leases?" Rutgers L.J. Vol. 13 (1981) 91.

Mastroianni, Francis N. "Caveat Lessor: Courts' Unwillingness to Find Implied Covenants of Continuous Use in Commercial Real Estate Transactions." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 24 (1996) 236.

McCloskey, Michael P. Comment. "Commercial Leases: Behind the Green Door." Pac. L.J. Vol. 12 (1981) 1067.

McCormick, Charles T. "The Rights of the Landlord Upon Abandonment of the Premises by the Tenant." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1925) 211.

McDonough, Lawrence R. "Still Crazy After All These Years: Landlords and Tenants and the Law of Torts." 33 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 427 (2006).

McDowell, William S., Jr. "Pledging Lease Security Deposits." Prac. R.eal Est. Law. Vol. 13 (Jan. 1997) 9.

McGovern, William M., Jr. "Dependent Promises in the History of Leases and Other Contracts." Tul. L. Rev. Vol. 52 (1978) 659.

McKirdy, Edward D. "How to Value a Leasehold in an Eminent Domain Case." Prac. Real Est. Law (March 1994) 11.

McLaughlin, John P. "The Foreseeable Risks Of Apartment Living: Pennsylvania Defines A Landlord's Duty To Provide Security." VILL. L. REV. Vol. 31 (1986) 627.

Merrill, Irma W. "Landlord Liability for Crimes Committed by Third Parties Against Tenants on the Premises." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1985) 431.

Meislik, Ira. "Advising Tenants on Security Deposits." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 13 (May 1997) 83.

Merrill, Thomas W. & Henry E. Smith. "The Property/Contract Interface." 101 Colum. L. Rev. 773 (2001).

Meyers, Charles J. "The Covenant of Habitability and the American Law Institute." Stan. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1975) 879.

Morgan, Patrick J. & Julie Ann Stulce Williamson. "Rent Insurance: Are You Covered?" Prob. & Prop. (July/Aug 1996) 25.

Murray, John C., The New Bankruptcy Act: Observations on Some of the Provisions Affecting Real Estate, Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 2005) 43.

Murray, Paula C. "The Evolution of Implied Warranties in Commercial Real Estate Leases." U. Rich. L. Rev. Vol. 28

(1994) 145.

Note. "Constructive Eviction." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1905) 50.

Note. "Effect of Renewal of a Lease Without Reservation of the Right to Remove Fixtures." Iowa L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1932) 527.

Note, "The Fourth Amendment in the Hallway: Do Tenants Have a Constitutionally Protected Privacy Interest in the Locked Common Areas of Their Apartment Buildings?" Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 101 (2002) 273.

Note. "The Percentage Lease Its Functions and Drafting Problems." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 61 (1947) 317.

Ostrow, S.E. "What You Need to Know About the Treatment of Commercial Leases Under the Bankruptcy Reform Act." Prac. Real. Est. Law. Vol. 22 (Jan. 2006) 27.

Pinto, Donald R. Note. "Modernizing Commercial Lease Law: The Case for an Implied Warranty of Fitness." Suffolk U.L. Rev. Vol. 19 (1985) 929.

Polasky, Alan N. "The Condemnation of Leasehold Interests." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 48 (1962) 477.

Quinn, Thomas M. and Earl Phillips. "The Law of Landlord Tenant: A Critical Evaluation of the Past with Guidelines for the Future." Fordham L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1969) 225.

Rabin, Edward H. "The Revolution in Residential Landlord Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences." Cornell L. Rev. Vol. 69 (1984) 517.

Randolph, Patrick A., Jr. "Does a Shopping Center Landlord Have an Implied Operating Duty?" Prob. & Prop. (Mar/Apr 2003) 26.

Randolph, Patrick A. Jr. "Going Dark Aggressively" Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1996) 6.

Rapacz, Max P. "Origin and Evolution of Constructive Eviction in the United States." De Paul L. Rev. Vol. 1 (1951) 69.

Rosen, Albert. "Receivership: A Useful Tool for Helping to Meet the Housing Needs of Low Income People." Harv. C.R. C.L. L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1968) 311.

Rosenthal, Trent L. & Collins Lee A. "When the Best Offense is a Strong Defense: A Commercial Landlord's Guide to Dealing with Financial Distress and the Bankruptcy of a Tenant." Prob. & Prop. Vol. 18 (Nov/Dec 2004) 46.

Saghir, Peter J. "Home is Where The No Fault Eviction Is: The Impact of the Drug War On Families in Public Housing." J.L. & Policy. Vol. 12 (2003) 369.

Saltz, Sidney G. "Allocation of Insurable Risks in Commercial Leases." Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 37 (2002) 479.

Saltz, Sidney, G. "Nonresidential Security Deposits." 27 Real Est. L.J. 225 (1999).

Saxer , Shelley Ross . "Government and Religion as Landlord and Tenant." 58 Rutgers L. Rev. 409 (2006).

Scherer, Edward P. & Cook, Darrell F. "Counseling the Landlord on Physical Security Issues." Prac. Real. Est. Law.

Vol. 13 (May 1997) 7.

Schnebly, Merrill I. "Operative Facts in Surrenders." Ill. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1927) 22.

Schwallie, Daniel P. "The Implied Warranty of Habitability As a Mechanism for Redistributing Income: Good Goal, Bad Policy." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 40 (198990) 525.

Schwartz, James E. & Serebro, Boris. "Allocation of Environmental Risk as Between Landlords and Tenants: The New York View." 19 Pace Env. L. Rev. 49 (2001).

Shaffer, Brent C. "Pre foreclosure Lease Defaults." Prob. & Prop. (Nov/Dec 1996) 49.

Shaffer, Brent C. "Sublease Due Diligence." Prob. & Prop. (Sept./Oct 2003) 44.

Siegel, Stephen A. "Is the Modern Lease a Contract or a Conveyance? A Historical Inquiry." J. Urb. L. Vol. 52 (1975) 649.

Snitzer, Edward L. "Valuation And Condemnation Problems Involving Trade Fixtures." VILL. L. REV. Vol. 16 (1971) 467.

Sophie, Kenneth J., Jr. "Landlord Tenant: The Medieval Concepts of Feudal Property Law are Alive and Well in Leases of Commercial Property in Illinois." J. Marshall J. Prac. & Proc. Vol. 10 (1977) 338.

Spector, Mary B. "Tenants' Rights, Procedural Wrongs: The Summary Eviction and the Need for Reform." 46 Wayne L. Rev. 135 (2000).

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC Part II." Com. L. J. Vol. 89 (1984) 569.

Stein, Marc R. "California's Common Law Defense Against Landlord Retaliatory Conduct." U.C.L.A. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1975) 1161.

Stone, Douglas S. "Negotiating Environmental Provisions for the Commercial Lease." Prac. Law. Vol. 42 (Oct. 1996) 45.

"Tenant Rent Strikes." Colum. J.L. & Soc. Probs. Vol. 3 (1967) 1.

Taylor, John F. Note. "Landlord and Tenant: Leases: Landlord's Remedies Following Default or Repudiation by Tenant: Civil Code 3308: Rent Acceleration Clauses." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1955) 344.

Temkin, Harvey L. "The Value in Protecting the Tenant's Interest: Leasehold Title Insurance." Probate & Property 35 (May/June 2002).

Thompson, Robert S. "Landlord Eviction Remedies Act Legislative Overreaction To Landlord Self Help." Wake Forest L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1982) 25.

Trafford, Sherry, "Using Reasonable Accommodations to Preserve Rights of Tenants with Disabilities." Clearinghouse Rev. Vol. 33 (1999) 131.

Updegraff, Clarence M. "The Element of Intent in Surrender by Operation of Law." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 38 (1924) 64.

Vlatas, Anthony J. "An Economic Analysis of Implied Warranties of Fitness in Commercial Leases." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 94 (1994) 658.

Weinberg, Michael. "From Contract to Conveyance: The Law of Landlord and Tenant, 18001920 (Part I)." 1980 So. Ill. U.L.J. 29.

Weissenberger, Glen. "The Landlord's Duty To Mitigate Damages On The Tenant's Abandonment: A Survey Of Old Law And New Trends." Temp. L.Q. Vol. 53 (1980) 1.

Weissenberger, Glen. "The Landlord's Duty To Deliver Possession: The Overlooked Reform." U. Cin. L. Rev. Vol. 46 (1977) 937.

Wenner, Daniel E. "Renting in Collegetown." 84 Cornell L. Rev. 543 (1999).

Westray, Laura L. Note. "Are Landlords Being Taken By The Good Cause Eviction Requirement?" S. Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 62 (1988) 321.

Whelan, Gabrielle P. "The 'Public Access' Provisions of Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act: A Guide for Commercial Landlords and Tenants." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1993) 215.

Whelan, Thomas M., "Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a Tenant's Personal Property," Tex. Wes. L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1997) 283.

Williams, Gary. "Can Government Limit Tenant Blacklisting?" SW U.L. Rev. Vol. 24 (1995) 1077.

Wilson, James R. "Lease Security Deposits." Colum. L. Rev. Vol. 34 (1934) 426.

Wistner, Rebecca A. "Cohabitation, Fornication and the Free Exercise of Religion: Landlords Seeking Religious Exemption from Fair Housing Laws." Case W. Res. L. Rev. Vol. 46 (1996) 1071.

Annotations

Annotation, Applicability of Exculpatory Clause in Lease to Lessee's Damages Resulting from Defective Original Design or Construction, 30 A.L.R. 4 TH 971.

Annotation, Application of Statutory Landlord's Lien to Property of Third Person Used by Tenant on Rented Premises, 95 A.L.R. 3 D 1205.

Annotation, Binding Effect on Tenant Holding Over of Covenants in Expired Lease, 49 A.L.R. 2 D 480.

Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R. 2 D 1414.

Annotation, Breach of Lessor's Agreement as Ground of Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or One in Privity with Latter, 78 A.L.R. 2 D 1238.

Annotation, Condemnation of Premises or Part Thereof as Affecting Rights of Landlord and Tenant Inter Se, 163 A.L.R. 679 .

Annotation, Consideration for Modification of Terms of Existing Tenancy, 43 A.L.R. 1451 .

Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision of Lease or Bond Saving Liability of Tenant or Sureties in Case of Forfeiture of Lease or Re entry by Landlord, 99 A.L.R. 42 .

Annotation, Contractual Jury Trial Waivers in State Civil Cases, 42 A.L.R. 5 TH 53.

Annotation, Covenant of Lessee to Insure as Running with the Land, 18 A.L.R. 2 D 1051.

Annotation, Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 42 A.L.R. 4 TH 963.

Annotation, Death of Lessee as Terminating Lease, 68 A.L.R. 590 .

Annotation, Demand of Rent Due as Prerequisite of Enforcement of Forfeiture or Termination of Lease Providing for Nonpayment, 28 A.L.R. 2D 803 .

Annotation, Effect, on Nonsigner, of Provision of Lease Exempting Landlord from Liability on Account of Condition of Property, 12 A.L.R. 3D 958 .

Annotation, Eminent Domain: Measure and Elements of Lessee's Compensation for Condemnor's Taking or Damaging of Leasehold, 17 A.L.R. 4 TH 337.

Annotation, Employment of Independent Contractor as Affecting Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or to One in Like Case with Tenant, 162 A.L.R. 1111 .

Annotation, Failure of Landlord to Make, or Permit Tenant to Make, Repairs or Alterations Required by Public Authority as Constructive Eviction, 86 A.L.R. 3 D 352.

Annotation, Goods Owned by Stranger or Subject to an Encumbrance in His Favor as Subject to Distraint for Rent, 62 A.L.R. 1106 .

Annotation, Holding Over Under Lease, or Renewal or Extension Thereof, As Extending Time for Exercise of Option to Purchase Contained Therein, 15 A.L.R. 3 D 470.

Annotation, Implied Covenant by Lessor To Put Lessee in Possession, 70 A.L.R. 151 .

Annotation, Implied Covenant or Obligation to Provide Lessee with Actual Possession, 96 A.L.R. 3 D 1155.

Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commercial Leases Modern Status, 76 A.L.R. 4 TH 928.

Annotation, Inability of Obtain License, Permit, or Charter Required for Tenant's Business as Defense to Enforcement of Lease, 89 A.L.R. 3 D 329.

Annotation, Infestation of Leased Dwelling or Apartment with Vermin as Entitling Tenant to Abandon Premises or as Constructive Eviction by Landlord, in Absence of Express Covenant of Habitability, 27 A.L.R. 3 D 924.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Construction of Provision of Lease Providing for Escalation of Rental in Event of Tax Increases, 48 A.L.R. 3 D 287.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction Based on Flooding, Dampness, or the Like, 33 A.L.R. 3 D 1356.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction by Another Tenant's Conduct, 1 A.L.R. 4 TH 849.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Respective Rights in Excess Rent when Landlord Relets at Higher Rent During Lessee's Term, 50 A.L.R. 4 TH 403.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Violation of Statute or Ordinance Requiring Landlord to Furnish Specified Facilities or Services as Ground of Liability for Injury Resulting from Tenant's Attempt to Deal with Deficiency, 63 A.L.R. 4 TH 883.

Annotation, Landlord's Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Right to Forfeit Because of Tenant's Past or Future Violations of Terms of Lease, 109 A.L.R. 1267 .

Annotation, Landlord's Consent to Extension or Renewal of Lease as Shown by Acceptance of Rent from Tenant Holding Over, 45 A.L.R. 2 D 827.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, To Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 21 A.L.R. 3 D 534.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages By Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R.5th 1 .

Annotation, Landlord's Duty Under Express Covenant to Repair, Rebuild, or Restore, Where Property is Damaged or Destroyed by Fire, 38 A.L.R. 2 D 682.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death Caused by Defective Condition of Interior Steps or Stairways Used in Common by Tenants, 67 A.L.R. 3 D 587.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death Due to Defects in Areas of Building (Other Than Stairways) Used in Common by Tenants, 65 A.L.R. 3 D 14.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Injury or Death of Tenant's Child from Lead Paint Poisoning, 19 A.L.R. 5 TH 405.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury or Death Due to Defects in Appliances Supplied for Use of Different Tenants, 66 A.L.R. 3 D 374.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Child for Personal Injuries Resulting from Defects in Premises, as Affected by Tenant's Negligence with Respect to Supervision of Child, 82 A.L.R. 3 D 1079.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability to Third Person for Injury Resulting from Attack on Leased Premises by Dangerous or Vicious Animal Kept by Tenant, 87 A.L.R. 4 TH 1004.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability To Tenant or Tenant's Invitees for Injury or Death Due to Ice or Snow in Areas or Passageways Used in Common by Tenants, 49 A.L.R. 3 D 387.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability To Tenant's Business Patron Injured As a Result of Defective Condition of Premises, 17 A.L.R. 3 D 422.

Annotation, Landlord's Lien or Right of Distress on Property Sold to Tenant on Conditional Sale, 45 A.L.R. 949 .

Annotation, Landlord's Obligation to Protect Tenant Against Criminal Activities of Third Persons, 43 A.L.R. 3 D 331.

Annotation, Landlord's Remedy by Way of Distress or Lien on Defaulting Tenant's Property on Leased Premises as Including Right to Collect for All Unpaid Utility Expenses, 99 A.L.R. 3 D 1100.

Annotation, Landlord's Tort Liability to Tenant for Personal Injury or Property Damage Resulting From Criminal Conduct of Employee, 38 A.L.R. 4 TH 240.

Annotation, Lease Provisions Allowing Termination or Forfeiture for Violation of Law, 92 A.L.R. 3 D 967.

Annotation, Lease Provisions Providing for Rent Adjustment Based on Event or Formula Outside Control of Parties, 87 A.L.R. 3 D 986.

Annotation, Lessee's or Lessor's Right to Recover on Fire Insurance Policy for Destroyed or Damaged Property Which the Other Has Replaced or Repaired, 53 A.L.R. 2 D 1383.

Annotation, Lessor's Retention of Past Due Rental Payments as Precluding Termination of Lease and Dispossession of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent, 39 A.L.R. 4 TH 1204.

Annotation, Liability as Between Lessor and Lessee, Where Lease Does Not Specify, for Taxes and Assessments, 86 A.L.R. 2 D 670.

Annotation, Liability for Breach of Farming Lease or Contract, 35 A.L.R. 5 TH 285

Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injuries Due to Defective Halls, Stairways, and the Like, for Use of Different Tenants, 75 A.L.R. 154 .

Annotation, Liability of Landlord for Personal Injury or Death Due to Inadequacy or Lack of Lighting on Portion of Premises Used in Common by Tenants, 66 A.L.R. 3 D 202.

Annotation, Liability of Lessee to Persons Injured by Defects in Premises or Property After Surrender of Possession by Lessee, 11 A.L.R. 4 TH 579.

Annotation, Liability of Lessee Who Refuses to Take Possession Under Executed Lease or Executory Agreement to Lease, 85 A.L.R. 3 D 514.

Annotation, Liability of Owner, Operator, or Other Parties, for Personal Injuries Allegedly Resulting From Snow or Ice on Premises of Parking Lot, 75 A.L.R.5th 49 .

Annotation, Life Tenant's Death as Affecting Rights Under Lease Given by Him, 14 A.L.R. 4 TH 1054.

Annotation, Measure and Elements of Damages for Lessee's Breach of Covenant as to Repairs, 45 A.L.R. 5 TH 251.

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Breach by Lessor of Contract To Lease or To Put Lessee Into Possession, 104 A.L.R. 132 .

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Landlord's Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability, 1 A.L.R. 4 TH 1182.

Annotation, Measure of Damages for Lessor's Breach of Contract to Lease or to Put Lessee into Possession, 88 A.L.R. 2 D 1024.

Annotation, Modern Status of Landlord's Tort Liability for Injury or Death of Tenant or Third Person Caused by Dangerous Condition of Premises, 64 A.L.R. 3 D 339.

Annotation, Modern Status of Rule as to Tenant's Rent Liability After Injury to or Destruction of Demised Premises, 99 A.L.R. 3 D 738.

Annotation, Modern Status of Rule Requiring Actual Knowledge of Latent Defect in Leased Premises As Prerequisite to Landlord's Liability to Tenant Injured Thereby, 88 A.L.R. 2 D 586.

Annotation, Modern Status of the Rules Regarding Impossibility of Performance as Defense in Action for Breach of Contract, 84 A.L.R. 2 D 12.

Annotation, Modern Views as to Validity, Under Federal Constitution, of State Prejudgment Attachment, Garnishment, and Replevin Procedures, Distraint Procedures Under Landlord, or Innkeepers, Lien Statutes, and Like Procedures Authorizing Summary Seizure of Property, 18 A.L.R. FED. 223.

Annotation, Necessity and Nature of Consideration Supporting Landlord's Reduction of Rent, 30 A.L.R. 3 D 1259.

Annotation, Notice by Landlord of Change in Rent or Other Modification of Tenancy as Affecting Rights and Liabilities Incident to Tenant's Holding Over After Expiration of Term or Tent Period or Time Fixed by Notice, 109 A.L.R. 197 .

Annotation, Oral Surrender of Written Lease, 78 A.L.R. 2 D 933.

Annotation, Provision in Lease for Pecuniary Forfeiture Where Lease is Prematurely Terminated as One for Liquidated Damages, 106 A.L.R. 292 .

Annotation, Recovery of Expected Profits Lost by Lessor's Breach of Lease Preventing or Delaying Operation of New Business, 92 A.L.R. 3 D 1286.

Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, 23 A.L.R. 5 TH 140.

Annotation, Relation and Rights Inter Se of Purchaser Under Foreclosure of Mortgage and Tenant Under Lease Subsequent to Mortgage, 109 A.L.R. 447 .

Annotation, Remedy of Tenant Against Stranger Wrongfully Interfering with His Possession, 12 A.L.R. 2 D 1192.

Annotation, Rent Period as Criterion of Term Implied by Holding Over After Expiration of Lease for a Fixed Term, 108 A.L.R. 1464 .

Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, 40 A.L.R. 3 D 753.

Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R. 3D 177. Annotation, Right of Lessor or Lessee or His Privies To Benefit of Insurance Taken Out by Other or His Privies, 66 A.L.R. 864 .

Annotation, Right of Lessor to Retain Advance Rental Payments Made Under Lease Terms upon Lessee's Default in Rent, 27 A.L.R. 2 D 656.

Annotation, Right of Tenant Holding Over After Termination of Definite Term to Notice to Quit, 19 A.L.R. 1405 .

Annotation, Right to Proceeds, or to Apportionment Thereof, Where Fire Insurance Policy is Issued Jointly to Lessor and Lessee Covering Destruction of or Damage to Building, 8 A.L.R. 2 D 1445.

Annotation, Right To Remove Fixtures Or Improvements Placed upon Property by One Holding Under Lease As Affected by Renewal or New Lease Made to Him or His Successor Without Reservation of the Right to Remove, 110 A.L.R. 480 .

Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant Upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R. 1448 .

Annotation, Rights Between Landlord and Tenant as Affected by Zoning Regulations Restricting Contemplated Use of Premises, 37 A.L.R. 3 D 1018.

Annotation, Seller's, Bailor's, Lessor's or Lender's Knowledge of the Other Party's Intention to Put the Property or Money to an Illegal Use as Defense to Action for Purchase Price, Rent, or Loan, 166 A.L.R. 1353 .

Annotation, Strict Liability of Landlord for Injury or Death of Tenant or Third Person Caused by Defect in Premises Leased for Residential Use, 48 A.L.R. 4 TH 638.

Annotation, Sufficiency of Description of Terms and Conditions of Lease, or Lease Provision, so as to Comply with Statute of Frauds, 12 A.L.R. 6 TH 123.

Annotation, Surrender and Acceptance of Term as Affecting Right to Recover Rent or on Obligation Given for Rent, 58 A.L.R. 906 .

Annotation, Taxation of Land Under Perpetual Lease or Ground Rent, 55 A.L.R. 154 .

Annotation, Tenant's Recovery of Damages for Emotional Distress Under Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 6 A.L.R. 4 TH 528.

Annotation, Tenant's Right, Where Landlord Fails to Make Repairs, to Have Them Made and Set Off Cost Against Rent, 40 A.L.R. 3 D 1369.

Annotation, Third Party Defense to Liability Under 107 of Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (42 USCS 9607), 105 A.L.R. FED. 21 .

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant Must Yield or Abandon Premises After Claimed Constructive Eviction, 91 A.L.R. 2 D 638.

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must be Exercised, 109 A.L.R.5th 421, 6 A.L.R. 2 D 322.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Statute or Ordinance Authorizing Withholding or Payment into Escrow of Rent for Period During Which Premises Are Not Properly Maintained by Landlord, 40 A.L.R. 3 D 821.

Annotation, Validity and Effect of Acceleration Clause in Lease or Bailment, 58 A.L.R. 300 .

Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Specific Provision of Lease or Statute Relating to Rights and Compensation of Lessee in Event of Condemnation, 96 A.L.R. 2 D 1140.

Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor from Liability, 49 A.L.R. 3 D 321.

Annotation, Waiver of Statutory Demand For Rent Due or of Notice To Quit Prerequisite of Summary Eviction of Lessee for Nonpayment of RentModern Cases, 31 A.L.R. 4 TH 1254.

Annotation, What Constitutes a "Public" Use Affecting Landlord's Liability to Tenant's Invitees for Defects in Leased Premises, 17 A.L.R. 3 D 873.

Annotation, What Constitutes Abandonment of Residential or Commercial LeaseModern Cases, 84 A.L.R. 4 TH 183.

Annotation, What Constitutes Willfulness or Malice Justifying Landlord's Collection of Statutory Multiple Damages for Tenant's Wrongful Retention of Possession, 7 A.L.R. 4 TH 589.

Annotation, Who, as Between Landlord and Tenant, Must Make, or Bear Expense of, Alteration, Improvements, or Repairs Ordered by Public Authorities, 22 A.L.R. 3 D 521.

Restatements

Restatement (Second) of Property (1977).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 41.03

Supp. to § 41.03 Implied Covenants of Landlord Relating to Tenant Possession.

[Go To Main]

[Go To Main]

§ 41.03(b)(2)(iii) Additional Remedial Issues.

Add the following new paragraph after the first paragraph of the section:

The landlord is not the only potential defendant in a lawsuit by a new tenant whose possession has been blocked by a holdover tenant. As indicated in the earlier discussion of the American rule, the new tenant might be able to bring a possessory action against the holdover tenant.[49.1] In an appropriate case, the new tenant might be able to pursue an action against the holdover tenant for interference with the new tenant's contract rights under the new lease.[49.2]

§ 41.03(c) Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment. [Go To Main]

§ 41.03(c)(3) Constructive Eviction by the Landlord.

§ 41.03(c)(3)(ii) Requirement that Tenant Vacate the Leased Premises.

Add the following at the end of the footnote:

Cf JS Properties, L.L.C. v. Brown and Filson, Inc., 914 A.2d 297 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2006) (Court questions the advisability of recognizing a constructive eviction claim based upon the malicious filing by the landlord of an eviction suit; states that such a claim "would have a tendency to chill a landlord's right to lawfully seek possession for fear of retaliation in the form of a constructive eviction claim"; in any event, the court rejects the tenant's claim because the tenant remained on the premises for more than six months after the landlord's eviction suit had been filed).

§ 41.03(c)(6) Consequences of Breach.

§ 41.03(c)(6)(ii) Lease Termination.

Add a second paragraph to footnote165, as follows:

The potential power of a constructive eviction claim is illustrated in ReliaStar Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 570 F.3d 513 (2d Cir. 2009) (per curiam). There, a commercial tenant vacated the leased premises after encountering serious defects in the earthen pad that its landlord had constructed on the leased premises. The tenant sought to assert a constructive eviction claim when the landlord's mortgagee (and rent assignee) sued for rent. The trial court entered summary judgment for the mortgagee, focusing on the tenant's execution of an estoppel certificate with respect to the condition of the leased premises, and the tenant's execution of an agreement that unconditionally obligated the tenant to pay rent to the mortgagee. The Second Circuit reversed. It observed that a provision of Article 9 of the UCC would permit a good faith assignee for value to take a contract free of ordinary defenses, but it was of the view that a constructive eviction claim was similar to claims of fraud and duress that could be assertable against an assignee. The estoppel certificate expressed the knowledge of the tenant at the time it had been executed, and the court concluded that it did not prevent the tenant from asserting a constructive eviction claim arising out of conditions that the tenant did not know about when it signed the certificate. Although there was a provision stating an unconditional obligation to pay the rent, which the court characterized as a "hell or high water clause," the court thought that constructive eviction would nonetheless terminate the lease and relieve a tenant of rental obligations. The court remanded for, among other things, a determination whether the tenant had been constructively evicted.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 41.06

Supp. to § 41.06 The Implied Warranty of Habitability.

[Go To Main]

N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540-A6

§ 41.06(a)(2)(i) Commercial Leases.

Add at the end of the footnote:

And the Texas Supreme Court has determined that the implied warranty can be waived by use of appropriate language in a written lease. See Gym-N-I Playgrounds, Inc. v. Snider, 220 S.W.3d 905 (Tex. 2007) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 41.08

Supp. to § 41.08 Prohibitions Against Retaliatory conduct by Landlords.

[Go To Main]

§ 41.08(b) Protected Tenant Activities. N.D. Cent. Code § 46-16-07.1

Add two new sentences at the end of the last paragraph in section 41.08(b), as follows:

Another court declined to apply the doctrine to an eviction that the tenant claimed was in retaliation for the tenant's demand for compensation following a slip and fall accident on the leased premises. The court was of the view that assertion of a personal injury claim did not amount to tenant enforcement of rights and remedies under the URLTA. n494.1

Add new footnote 494.1, as follows:

§ 41.08(g) Limits to the Retaliatory Conduct Doctrine. [Go To Main]

Add a new paragraph at the end of section 41.08(g), as follows:

It should also be noted that the tenant's claim of retaliation will not succeed when the landlord retaliates against the tenant for tenant conduct that is outside the scope of the retaliatory conduct doctrine. n543.1

Add new footnote 543.1, as follows:

FOOTNOTES:
(n3)Note 494.1. See Helfrich v. Valdez Motel Corp., 207 P.3d 552 (Alaska 2009) .

(n4)Note 543.1. See, e.g., Helfrich v. Valdez Motel Corp., 207 P.3d 552 (Alaska 2009) (Tenant claimed that he had been evicted for demanding compensation following a slip and fall accident on the leased premises; the court concluded that assertion of a personal injury claim did not amount to tenant enforcement of rights and remedies under the URLTA).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 41.09

Supp. to § 41.09 Rights and Duties Arising Under Tort Law.

[Go To Main]

§ 41.09(b) Exceptions to the Traditional Rule. [Go To Main]

§ 41.09(b)(1)(i) The Issue of Landlord Control.

Add the following just before the citation to the Humphrey v. Byron case:

Gilley v. Kiddel, 865 N.E.2d 262 (Ill. Ct. App. 2007) ;

In the second paragraph of the subsection, add the following sentence after the third sentence (immediately after the designation of footnote 567):

In one case, a California court concluded that a commercial landlord had a duty to conduct periodic inspections of the leased premises from the time that the landlord obtained a judgment of possession in an unlawful detainer action, even though the tenant was still in possession of the leased premises.[567.1]

§ 41.09(b)(5) When the Landlord Contracts to Repair.

Add the following to footnote 657, after the reference to the Vieyra case:

Litwack v. Plaza Realty Investors, Inc., 898 N.E.2d 571 (N.Y. 2008) .

§ 41.09(b)(7) Breach of Furnished House Warranty.

Add the following to footnote 683, at the end:

Cf. Reyes v. Egner, 962 A.2d 542 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2009) (Tenant's father was injured at a beach house rented on a short term basis for a vacation when he fell while stepping onto an allegedly defective deck; the court reversed summary judgment for the landlord, stating:

> [W]e hold that the lessors' duty should be defined consistent with the precepts of Section 358 of the Second Restatement. As we have noted, that provision permits liability, even in the absence of a lessor's concealment, if the plaintiff demonstrates that the lessor has failed to disclose a condition "which involves unreasonable risk of physical harm to persons on the land" if "(a) the lessee does not know or have reason to know of the condition or risk involved, and (b) the lessor knows or has reason to know of the condition, and realizes or should realize the risk involved, and has reason to expect that the lessee will not discover the condition or realize the risk."

962 A.2d at 556 .

§ 41.09(b)(9) Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability.

Add the following sentence to the last paragraph of the section, immediately after the designation for footnote 707:

In Isbell v. Commercial Investment Associates, Inc.,[707.1] the Virginia Supreme Court said that, in adopting that state's version of the Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, the legislature "did not plainly manifest an intention, either through express language or by necessary implication, to abrogate the common law and make a landlord liable in tort ... as a result of the landlord's breach of duties imposed by the Act."[707.2]

[Go To Main]

The Modern Movement Toward Imposition of Landlord Liability.

§ 41.09(d)(2)(i) Source of the Landlord's Duty.

Add the following new paragraph, just before the last paragraph of the section:

A landlord duty issue arose in a California case in which a mobile home park tenant was shot by another tenant who was a gang member.[762.1] The injured tenant claimed that the landlord had a duty not to rent to gang members and that the landlord's breach of that duty was the proximate cause of his injuries. The California Supreme Court rejected the claim. Noting that gang members typically do not advertise their gang affiliations in lease applications, the court said that the imposition of such a duty would cause landlords to decline to rent to individuals who might be gang members. And the "result in many cases would be arbitrary discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, family composition, dress and appearance, or reputation."[762.2] Absent "circumstances showing extraordinary foreseeability," the court declined to recognize such a duty.[762.3]

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 41 TENANT RIGHTS AND LANDLORD DUTIES

5-41 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 41.12

Supp. to § 41.12 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Articles

Add the following*:

La Fetra, Deborah J. "A Moving Target: Property Owners' Duty to Prevent Criminal Acts on the Premises." 28 Whittier L. Rev. 409 (2006).

Schwemm, Robert G. "Why Do Landlords Still Discriminate (And What Can Be Done About It)? 40 J. Marshall L. Rev. 455 (2007).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 42.syn

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.syn Synopsis to Chapter 42: TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

§ 42.01 Overview of Landlord and Tenant Transfers.

§ 42.02 Overview of Chapter.

§ 42.03 Transfer of Landlord's Interest.

§ 42.03(a) Landlord's Right to Transfer.

§ 42.03(b) Restrictions on Landlord's Right to Transfer.

§ 42.03(c) Rights and Obligations of Landlord-Transferor.

§ 42.03(d) Rights and Obligations of Transferee.

§ 42.03(d)(1) Rights of Transferee.

§ 42.03(d)(2) Obligations of Transferee.

§ 42.04 Transfer of Tenant's Interest.

§ 42.04(a) Overview.

§ 42.04(b) Right of Tenant to Transfer.

§ 42.04(b)(1) In General.

§ 42.04(b)(2) Restrictions On Transfer.

§ 42.04(b)(2)(i) What Constitutes a Transfer.

§ 42.04(b)(3) Consent Requirements.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(i) General Validity.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(ii) Reasonableness Requirements.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iii) What Constitutes Unreasonable Withholding of Consent.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iv) Waiver/Implied Consent.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v) Effect of a Breach.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v)(1) Breach by Tenant.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v)(2) Breach by Landlord.

§ 42.04(c) Requirements for a Valid Transfer.

§ 42.04(d) Distinction Between Assignment and Sublease.

§ 42.04(e) Legal Effect of Assignment and Sublease.

§ 42.04(e)(1) Overview.

§ 42.04(e)(2) Assignments.

§ 42.04(e)(2)(i) Rights and Obligations of Assignee.

§ 42.04(e)(2)(ii) Rights and Obligations of Assignor.

§ 42.04(e)(3) Subleases.

§ 42.04(e)(3)(i) Rights and Obligations of Subtenant.

§ 42.04(e)(3)(ii) Rights and Obligations of Sublessor.

§ 42.05 Bibliography.

by Professor Mark W. Cordes
Northern Illinois University
College of Law

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 42.01

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.01 Overview of Landlord and Tenant Transfers.

The landlord-tenant relationship involves two separate interests in property: a present possessory leasehold estate held by the tenant and a reversion, usually in fee simple, held by the landlord. Absent an agreement to the contrary, both landlords and tenants are free to transfer their respective interests in the lease. Although early common law required a tenant to "attorn" or consent to a landlord transfer, both statutes and case law today provide that landlords are free to transfer their reversions without tenant consent, subject to a few exceptions.

The original lease creates both privity of contract and privity of estate between the landlord and tenant, either of which can serve as a basis of liability between the parties. After transfer of the landlord's reversion, the original landlord retains no ongoing rights against the tenant, since privity of estate ceases to exist and it is assumed that the landlord transferred contract rights to the assignee. Although the landlord no longer remains liable under privity of estate, the landlord does remain liable under privity of contract, since a party cannot unilaterally sever contractual obligations.

The transferee of the landlord's reversion takes the property subject to the existing lease, although state recording acts provide that leases of a certain duration must be recorded or are void. When a transferee takes subject to the lease, the transferee is bound by lease covenants that run with the land. Similarly, the transferee may enforce lease covenants that run with the land.

Issues of consent to transfer sometimes arise. Leases frequently provide that the tenant may not assign the tenant's interest in the land without the consent of the landlord. Courts traditionally held that, unless the lease itself provided that the withholding of consent be reasonable, landlords could refuse consent for any reason. But the trend is clearly in favor of imposing a reasonableness standard on refusing consent. Courts that impose a reasonableness standard typically emphasize the need to avoid unnecessary restraints on alienation and an implied landlord duty to engage in good faith and fair dealing. Where a reasonableness standard is implied or imposed by the lease itself, courts have examined a variety of factors to assess reasonableness, including the financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or subtenant, how the property will be used, the need for alterations, and whether the proposed assignee or subtenant would pose competition problems.

A tenant assignment or sublease that is contrary to the terms of the lease is not void, but rather is voidable at the landlord's option. Where a landlord breaches a reasonableness standard, the tenant is entitled to consent and may proceed with the assignment or sublease. The tenant may also be entitled to recover consequential damages. Several courts have considered the reasonableness obligation under the rubric of dependency of covenants, with the consequence that the landlord's breach of the reasonableness "covenant" entitles the tenant to terminate the lease and stop paying rent.

Transfer of a tenant's interest can be either by assignment or by sublease. The distinction is an important one, since an assignment places the landlord in privity of estate with the assignee, whereas there is no privity between the original landlord and a subtenant. The traditional and still-dominant test for distinguishing between the two is that a transfer of the entire term is an assignment, whereas transfer for less than the complete term is a sublease. Most courts hold that the retention of a right of entry does not create a sublease, but a significant minority of courts hold that it does. A few courts have also applied an intent test, examining whether the parties intended an assignment or a sublease.

An assignment transfers privity of estate to the assignee, who will be liable for any covenants of the primary lease that run with the land. The assignee remains liable only as long as privity of estate continues, however, and ends with a further assignment, unless the assignee enters into an assumption agreement regarding lease obligations. The tenant remains liable to the landlord under privity of contract, unless there is a novation or agreement otherwise.

Under a sublease, both privity of contract and privity of estate remain with the original tenant, who is liable to the landlord on both grounds. Since the subtenant is not in any privity with the landlord, however, the subtenant is, in general, neither liable to nor can enforce rights against the primary landlord, unless there is an express assumption of obligations under the primary lease. But there could be liability if the requirements for an equitable servitude are satisfied.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 42.02

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.02 Overview of Chapter.

This chapter examines transfers of landlord and tenant interests in property. Section 42.03 examines transfer of the landlord's reversionary interest. Section 42.03(a) examines the landlord's right to transfer, § 42.03(b) discusses restrictions on that right, § 42.03(c) discusses the rights and obligations of the landlord after transfer, and § 42.03(d) discusses the rights and obligations of the transferee.

Section 42.04 examines transfer of the tenant's interest. Section 42.04(a) provides an overview of issues regarding transfer of a tenant's interest, § 42.04(b) concerns the right of a tenant to transfer, landlord consent requirements, and the imposition of reasonableness standards. Section 42.04(c) examines the requirements for a valid transfer. Section 42.04(d) considers the distinction between an assignment and a sublease, and § 42.04(e) examines the legal effect of assignments and subleases.

A bibliography is included in § 42.05.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 42.03

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.03 Transfer of Landlord's Interest.

§ 42.03(a) Landlord's Right to Transfer.

A landlord typically retains a reversion in fee simple absolute after transfer of a leasehold estate. Although a landlord's reversion is freely transferrable today, early English common law required that a tenant "attorn" or assent to the transfer of the landlord's interest for it to be valid. n1 This was likely due to the personal nature of the landlord-tenant relationship. n2 However, the requirement of attornment was eliminated in 1705 by the Statute of Anne, which provided that landlords were free to transfer their reversionary interests in property without the tenant's consent. n3

Landlords clearly have the right to transfer their reversionary interests today. More than twenty states have attornment statutes, which specifically provide that a tenant's "attornment" is unnecessary when a landlord conveys the landlord's interest, n4 thus permitting landlords to freely transfer their interests. In addition, states often have statutes that give assignees of a landlord's reversion the same rights as the landlord. Such statutes have been construed as eliminating the need for attornment. n5 Even in the absence of such statutes, courts have recognized that attornment is unnecessary and that a landlord is free to transfer the landlord's interest. n6 The policy favoring free alienability of land supports such a position, since a landlord's reversion represents a substantial property interest. n7

The alienability of the landlord's interest includes the right to mortgage the property, subject to the lease. n8 The landlord can also transfer a part of the reversion, either by another lease to commence upon termination of the current lease, n9 or by leasing the landlord's reversion itself. This latter device is often referred to as a "concurrent lease," n10 and provides the tenant with the rights of the landlord for a stated term, such as the right to collect rent and enforce terms and conditions of the lease. n11

§ 42.03(b) Restrictions on Landlord's Right to Transfer.

Although generally alienable, a landlord's right to transfer the landlord's interest could be restricted in some situations. First, courts have generally held that a landlord cannot transfer the landlord's interest in a tenancy at will. n12

Second, an inherent restriction on the landlord's right to transfer arguably exists where the landlord provides "significant personal services" that the landlord is "uniquely qualified to provide." n13 This position is taken by the Restatement of

Property which, although generally recognizing the free alienability of the landlord's reversion, states that in limited circumstances a transfer would interfere with reasonable expectations by the tenant and might be prohibited. n14 The comments suggest that this would most likely occur in connection with commercial developments, such as shopping centers, where the landlord might bring unique expertise and status. n15 This would be a rare circumstance, however, and the Restatement cites only one case for the proposition. n16

Finally, the Restatement also provides that the landlord's right to transfer can be subject to a valid tenant consent requirement. n17 Although landlord consent requirements for transfer of the tenant's interest are very common, n18 requirements that the tenant consent to a transfer of the landlord's interest are quite rare. However, the Restatement would hold such consent provisions to the same standard as landlord consent requirements for tenant transfers, meaning that consent cannot be unreasonably withheld unless the parties have freely agreed to "an absolute right to withhold consent." n19

There is virtually no case law addressing the validity of tenant consent requirements on landlord transfers. As the Restatement acknowledges, however, such restraints on alienation are more problematic than those on tenant transfers because they involve a restraint on a fee simple interest, rather than on a leasehold. n20 Courts have traditionally been unwilling to tolerate most restraints on fee simple estates because of the significant impact such restraints potentially have on productive land use, n21 even where the restraint is limited in both duration and scope. n22

Some authority exists, however, for permitting forfeiture and promissory restraints, as opposed to disabling restraints, that are reasonably limited in duration and scope. n23 This would apply to reasonable consent requirements for transfer of a landlord's reversion, which typically take the form of a "promissory restraint" n24 and are limited in duration to the length of the lease. Moreover, the requirement that the withholding of consent be reasonable would mitigate the impact of any actual restraint by limiting it to those rare instances in which the identity of the landlord is uniquely important to the tenant's interest. Courts in other contexts have been willing to permit limited restraints that are reasonable under the circumstances, n25 typically when they are tailored to serve legitimate concerns. In the same way, a reasonableness requirement would limit restraints to instances in which they would serve legitimate concerns. As a practical matter, this would be quite rare with regard to landlord transfers, since a tenant's enjoyment of the lease is rarely dependent upon a particular landlord.

§ 42.03(c) Rights and Obligations of Landlord-Transferor.

The original lease creates both privity of estate and privity of contract between the landlord and the tenant, n26 either of which can serve as a basis for liability between the parties. Privity of estate is premised on the landlord-tenant relationship itself and the shared interest in the land, while privity of contract arises from specific covenants entered into by the parties. n27 Transfer of the landlord's reversion severs privity of estate between the original parties, who remain in privity of contract. n28

A landlord generally retains no on-going rights against the tenant after transfer of the reversion, since privity of estate ceases to exist and it is assumed that the landlord transferred the contract rights to the assignee. n29 Courts have noted, however, that the intention of the parties is controlling and that the original landlord can retain rights to enforce contractual provisions of the lease. n30 Moreover, the original landlord retains the right to sue on tenant breaches that occurred prior to the transfer, n31 unless the transfer includes an express assignment of the cause of action. n32

The scope of landlord-transferor's continuing obligations under the lease is less clear. Although the assignor no longer remains liable under the privity of estate concept, courts have held that the assignor still remains liable under privity of contract, since a party cannot unilaterally sever the party's own obligations. n33 This corresponds to a tenant's continuing liability under privity of contract after an assignment. n34 Thus, the assignor remains liable under the original lease unless there is a clear intent that transfer of the reversion release the assignor from liability. n35 Merely permitting the assignee to undertake the assignor's obligations is not enough. n36

Landlords generally are not liable in tort for injuries that occur after the expiration of a reasonable period of time following transfer of the reversion. For example, where a new owner was aware of a ceiling defect and had time to remedy it, the previous owner/landlord was not held liable for injuries suffered from ceiling plaster falling and injuring a tenant. n37 Similarly, the former owner of a building was not held liable for damages to tenants after the building collapsed, since he no longer had control of the building and could not have prevented the collapse. n38

§ 42.03(d) Rights and Obligations of Transferee.

§ 42.03(d)(1) Rights of Transferee.

"The modern law of covenants running with the land" n39 has its origins in the statute of 32 Henry VIII ch. 34 and its subsequent interpretation in Spencer's Case. Although there is some uncertainty, it appears that prior to that time the common law did not permit the landlord to assign covenants to another. n40 Under this early view, the transferee of the landlord was considered a stranger to the lease, which precluded either suing or being sued upon covenants in the lease. n41

This posed a problem to Henry VIII, who had confiscated substantial church property, much of which was leased to tenants. In order to enforce provisions in those leases, including the obligation to pay rent, Henry passed the statute 32 Henry VIII, ch. 34 in 1541. n42 That statute provided that lessors and their assigns had the right to enforce covenants against tenants and their assigns. The statute went further, however, and also provided tenants and their assigns with comparable rights against landlords and their assigns. In essence, therefore, the statute established that both the benefit and the burden of covenants should run to assignees of both the landlord and the tenant.

Although the above statute established that covenants could run to a landlord or tenant's assignee, it was in Spencer's Case n43 in 1583 that requirements were set for when they would run. Perhaps most important in the landlord and tenant context, the court indicated that for a covenant to run there must be an intent that it run and that it must touch and concern the land. These were distinguished from "covenants collateral to the land," which did not run. n44

The current American law largely reflects the above principles. A majority of the states currently have statutes based on 32 Henry VII ch. 34, which similarly give assignees of the landlord's reversion the same rights as the landlord. n45 Although the statutes vary in language, the language of the North Carolina statute is typical. It states, inter alia, that the "grantee in every conveyance of reversion in lands, tenements or hereditaments has the like advantages and remedies by action or entry against the holders of particular estates in such real property, and their assigns, for nonpayment of rent, and for the nonperformance of other conditions and agreements contained in the instruments by the tenants of such particular estates, as the grantor or lessor or his heirs might have ...." n46 Even in the absence of a statute, courts have consistently held that transferees can sue on covenants in the primary lease that run with the land, under the principles established in Spencer's Case. n47

Courts have also held that covenants must meet the requirements of running with the land to be enforceable, even when grounded in a statute. Although there is some language to the contrary, suggesting that the statutes operate independent of running covenant doctrine, n48 courts in jurisdictions with statutes have generally held that, to be enforceable, the covenant must run with the land. n49 This position is consistent with the historical origins of running covenants, since the limitations on running covenants laid down in Spencer's Case were imposed pursuant to rights created under the Statute 32 Henry VIII, ch. 34. More importantly, it serves as a practical and common sense limitation on when covenants in the original lease can be enforced by or against subsequent parties.

There are two primary requirements for the benefit or burden of a covenant to run with the land when the landlord's reversion is transferred. n50 First, the parties must intend for the benefit or burden to run. n51 As a practical matter, courts today assume that the covenants are to run unless a contrary intent is clearly shown. n52

The second, and more critical, requirement is that the covenant touch and concern the property. n53 The gist of this requirement is to distinguish between merely personal covenants, which do not run, and those that concern the land itself. Courts have not been successful in clearly articulating a touch and concern test. At times they have suggested standards such as whether the covenant affects the value of the property, n54 that it have an "actual connection with the land," n55 or that it "relates directly to the property." n56 Other formulations require that the covenant affect the legal relations of the parties as owners of the land n57 or that "its performance directly affects the rights of the parties with respect to their interests in the land." n58

Despite the often ambiguous nature of the proffered tests, the majority of lease covenants are deemed to touch and concern the land and thus run to assignees of the reversion. n59 Indeed, courts often simply state that the rights and benefits of the landlord go to the transferee as the new landlord, without a rigorous analysis of whether they run with the land. n60 This is understandable, since typical lease provisions easily meet the requirements for touch and concern. For example, a tenant's covenant to pay rent, n61 to remove fixtures, n62 to surrender the premises in a particular condition, n63 or to make repairs n64 have all been held to touch and concern the property and are assignable to the transferee.

At times, however, it is more debatable whether a particular provision touches and concerns the land. For example, a covenant for the appointment of an agent for service of process was held to be a covenant that was personal to the original landlord, and thus not binding on transferees. n65 And it was held that a seal on a lease, which extended the statute of limitations for lawsuits on rent from three to ten years, is not a covenant at all. n66

Notice of the transfer is an issue in some cases. Where a covenant touches and concerns the land, and is therefore assignable, it has been held that the transferee of the reversion is required to give the tenant notice of the transfer. Until notice is given, the tenant is not obligated to perform the covenant for the benefit of the transferee. n67

Although transferees generally take all rights and benefits of their predecessors that run with the land, they are limited by the nature of the primary lease and can take no greater rights than their landlord had. n68 Thus, they take subject to any deficiencies in the primary lease. n69 Moreover, courts have consistently held that the transferee takes subject to waivers or modifications of lease provisions by the original landlord, of which the transferee had notice. n70

A transferee's taking subject to waivers and modifications created by the transferee's predecessor is generally assumed to require notice. Although courts often state that a tenant's possession is notice to a transferee of any rights the tenant can establish, n71 this principle is arguably limited to waivers or modifications readily apparent from an inspection of the property. n72 For example, a transferee will be deemed to have notice of any waiver of use restrictions on the property, since they would be readily apparent from inspection. Conversely, a waiver of timely rent payment is not apparent, and thus not binding on a transferee without actual notice. n73

Consistent with the above, courts have also held that a transferee takes subject to conditions of the premises at the time of the transfer. Thus, where the previous landlord allowed a tenant to occupy more space than permitted under the lease, and to install a refrigerator room and locker in that space, the transferee took subject to those conditions. n74 Similarly, a transferee cannot sue for breaches prior to transfer, but is limited to post-transfer breaches, unless there is an express assignment of a related cause of action. n75 However, a transferee can sue for a breach which, though initially occurring prior to the transfer, continues after the transfer. n76

§ 42.03(d)(2) Obligations of Transferee.

The transferee of the landlord's reversion takes the property subject to the existing lease and covenants that run with the land. n77 State recording acts, however, generally provide that leases of a certain duration, typically three years or longer, must be recorded or they will be void against subsequent bona fide purchasers without notice. n78 Although recording puts subsequent purchasers on constructive notice of a tenant's interest, a transferee is also subject to actual or inquiry notice of any tenants in possession. Thus, even if a tenant has failed to properly record a lease, the grantee is deemed to have notice of a tenant's actual occupation of the property, and takes subject to the lease. n79

By this reasoning the purchaser at a foreclosure sale takes the property subject to a pre-mortgage lease, since the mortgage was taken on property already encumbered by the lease. n80 The reverse is generally true if the lease is junior to the mortgage -- the foreclosure will extinguish the junior lease. n81 However, if the foreclosing mortgagee does not join the junior lessee in the foreclosure action, the majority rule is that the lease is unaffected by the foreclosure. n82 Application of the majority rule gives the mortgagee an option to have the property sold subject to the junior lease (by choosing not to join the lessee in the foreclosure action), or to have the property sold free of the lease at the foreclosure sale (by choosing to join the lessee in the foreclosure action). n83 Some courts also recognize an ability in the foreclosure purchaser to choose to terminate a post-mortgage lease or to affirm the lease. n84 The post-foreclosure persistence of a lease can also be affected by subordination agreements. n85

When a transferee takes subject to a lease, the transferee is bound by lease covenants that run with the land. At least a dozen states have statutory provisions, derivative of the statute of 32 Henry VIII ch. 34, n86 that give tenants the same rights against assignees of the landlord as against the landlord. n87 Even in the absence of a statute, courts have consistently recognized that the transferee takes subject to burdens that run with the land. n88

As was discussed with the transferee's rights, covenants that impose obligations will generally run to a transferee where there is intent that they run and where they touch and concern the property. n89 Courts assume there was an intent that obligations be shifted to the transferee, unless otherwise clearly stated. Courts have also used a similar analysis for touch and concern, examining whether the obligation lessens the value of the promisor's interest in the property. n90

As was true with benefits, most lease obligations touch and concern and therefore run with the land. For example, landlord covenants to repair, n91 to restore destroyed property, n92 to furnish parking n93 and a tenant's right to renew the lease n94 have all been found to run with the land to subsequent owners.

One particularly problematic issue is whether the obligation to return security deposits runs with the land. n95 A majority of cases have held that the duty does not run with the land and therefore the grantee-landlord is not bound by the promise to return the deposit, n96 at least where the deposits were not actually transferred to the grantee. One case reasoned that unless the security deposit agreement specifically required that the moneys be used to benefit the land, which it did not, it did not touch and concern the property. n97 Often, courts have emphasized that the obligation is a personal one, and does not run to a subsequent landlord who had not received the moneys. n98

Several courts, however, have held that the promise to return the security deposit runs to a subsequent grantee, even where the funds were never transferred to the grantee. n99 In so holding, one court relied on a statute providing tenants with the same remedies against the landlord's assignee as against the landlord. It also emphasized that since the assignee received the benefits of the landlord-tenant relationship, it necessarily should incur its obligations. n100

Additionally, a number of states have statutes that impose different degrees of obligation on transferees of the reversion for return of the deposit. n101 Some statutes, including the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, n102 provide that transferees of the reversion are bound by provisions of security deposit legislation that require that they return deposits at the end of the tenancy. n103 Other states have statutes that expressly require that the security deposits be transferred to the landlord's successor in interest who then becomes liable to the tenant for the security deposit. n104 Finally, several statutes provide that upon transfer of the landlord's interest, the landlord must either transfer the security deposit to the transferee, or return the deposit to the tenant. n105

The liability of a transferee is generally limited to breaches that arise after, rather than before, the transfer. n106 However, the transferee is liable for breaches which, though initially occurring prior to transfer, constitute a continuing violation. n107 For example, a covenant not to compete or a covenant to repair, though initially breached by the original landlord, will also constitute a breach by the transferee if the condition continues after the transfer, with recovery against the transferee limited to that post-transfer period. n108 The transferee will also be held liable for damages and liabilities of the previous owner where there is an express assumption. n109

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.60 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n2)Footnote 2. See id. Herbert T. Tiffany, The Law of Real Property § 115 (3d ed. 1939).

(n3)Footnote 3. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.60 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n4)Footnote 4. See Ala. Code 35-4-32; Cal. Civ. Code § 1111; Iowa Code Ann. § 562; Ind. Stat. Ann. § 32-31-1-10; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2513; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.100; Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8-104; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-17; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.140; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 111.090; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:3-8; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-2; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-10-20; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41, § 119; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-11-60; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-25-28; Tenn. Ann. § 66-5-106; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 12 § 2805; Va. Code Ann. § 55-220; W. Va. Code § 37-6-3; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.13. See also Minn. Stat. § 504B.121 (tenant in possession of real property under a lawful lease may not deny the landlord's title in an action brought by the landlord to recover possession).

(n5)Footnote 5. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.60 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n6)Footnote 6. See Stasyszyn v. Sutton E. Assocs., 623 N.Y.S.2d 879 (App. Div. 1995) ; Rafolin Constr. Corp. v. Lippman, 457 N.Y.S.2d 712 (1982) ; Avenue Plaza, L.L.C. v. Falgoust, 654 So. 2d 838 (La. App. 1995) ; cf. Westport Land Properties, Inc. v. Latham, 875 S.W.2d 630 (Mo. Ct. App. 1994) (attornment unnecessary where tenant agreed in lease to be bound to landlord's successors and assigns).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Restatement of Property (Second) § 15.1 cmt. a (1977).

(n8)Footnote 8. See Miller v. Lemon Tree Inn of Roanoke Rapids, 233 S.E.2d 69, 72 (N.C. App. 1977) .

(n9)Footnote 9. This is commonly known as a "lease in reversion". See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.6 (3d ed. 1990).

(n10)Footnote 10. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.59 (James Casner, ed. 1952); 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.6 (3d ed. 1990).

(n11)Footnote 11. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.6 (3d ed. 1990).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1(1) (1977).

(n13)Footnote 13. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 (1977).

(n14)Footnote 14. Id.

(n15)Footnote 15. Id.

(n16)Footnote 16. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 Reporter's Note 4 (1977) (citing Moore v. Thompson, 67 S.W.2d 680 (Mo. App. 1902)) .

(n17)Footnote 17. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 (1977).

(n18)Footnote 18. See § 42.04, infra.

(n19)Footnote 19. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 (1977).

(n20)Footnote 20. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 reporter's note 3 (1977).

(n21)Footnote 21. See generally William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 2.2 (3d ed. 2000).

(n22)Footnote 22. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 31 (3d ed. 2000).

(n23)Footnote 23. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 31 (3d ed. 2000).

(n24)Footnote 24. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 cmt. d (1977).

(n25)Footnote 25. See, e.g. , Smith v. Mitchell, 269 S.E.2d 608 (N.C. 1980) (preemptive purchase right valid because reasonable).

(n26)Footnote 26. See, e.g., Mrotek Enters. v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. App. 1969) ; Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1 (Md. App. 1988) ; see also S. Kurtz and H. Hovenkamp, Property 540-541 (2d ed. 1993); cf. P.S.G. v. August Income Growth Fund III, 855 P.2d 1043 (N.M. 1993) (a lease is both a conveyance and a contract ,which results in two types of rights: property rights and contract rights).

(n27)Footnote 27. See Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1 (Md. App. 1988) ; see also, S. Kurtz and H. Hovenkamp, Property 540-541 (2d ed. 1993).

(n28)Footnote 28. See Vallely Inv., L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 689 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.63 (James Casner ed. 1952).

(n29)Footnote 29. See R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 8.4 (1980); see also 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 3.64 (3d ed. 1990).

(n30)Footnote 30. See Commonwealth Mem., Inc. v. Telophase Soc'y of Am., Inc., 134 Cal. Rptr. 58 (Cal. App. 1976) .

(n31)Footnote 31. See Ginsberg v. Austin, 968 F.2d 1198 (Fed. Cir. 1992) ; Richey v. Stop N Go Mkts. of Tex., 654 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1983) .

(n32)Footnote 32. See Cote v. A. J. Bayless Mkts., Inc., 626 P.2d 602 (Ariz. App. 1981) ; Richey v. Stop N Go Mkts. of Tex., 654 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1983) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See Intaglio Serv. Corp. v. J. L. Williams, 420 N.E.2d 634, 639-40 (Ill. App. 1981) .

(n34)Footnote 34. See § 42.04(d)(2), infra.

(n35)Footnote 35. See Vallely Inv., L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 689 (Cal. App. 4th Dist. 2001) (Assignor remains liable to landlord absent an express release); Won's Cards, Inc., v. Samsondale/Haverstraw Equities, Ltd., 165 566 N.Y.S.2d 412 (1991) (original lease clearly stated that transfer of reversion released original landlord from liability).

(n36)Footnote 36. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Wetzel, 423 N.E.2d 1170 (Ill. App. 1981) (tenant agreement to accept performance of repayment obligation from assignee did not show clear intent to release original landlord).

(n37)Footnote 37. See Levine v. 465 West End Ave. Assocs., 461 N.Y.S.2d 283 (N.Y. App. 1983) .

(n38)Footnote 38. See Spink v. Cohen, 548 N.Y.S.2d 460 (N.Y. App. 1989) .

(n39)Footnote 39. Bordell, English Property Reforms and Its American Aspects, 37 Yale L.J. 1, 18 (1927).

(n40)Footnote 40. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.1 (3d ed. 1990).

(n41)Footnote 41. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.1 (3d ed. 1990); C. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 92 n.2 (2d ed. 1988); Annotation, 34 A.L.R. 782-784 (1925) .

(n42)Footnote 42. See Powell on Real Property(R) P 248.(3) (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

(n43)Footnote 43. See Spencer's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 16a. 77 Eng. Rep. 72 (K.B. 1583) .

(n44)Footnote 44. Id. For general discussions of Spencer's Case as it applies to landlord and tenant law, see R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 8.2 (1980).

(n45)Footnote 45. See Ala. Code §§ 35-9-9, 35-9-65; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-362; Cal. Civ. Code § 822; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-29; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 6704; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-14-344; Idaho Code §§ 55-301 - 55-302; 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/9-215; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-31-1-13; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2516; Md. Code Ann. Real Prop. § 8-101; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-15; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.230; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-26-105; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540:27; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-2; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-1-24; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 223; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-8; N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-16-28, 47-16-30; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41, § 15; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68, § 250.104; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-11-28; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-50; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-20; Va. Code Ann. § 55-217; W. Va. Code § 37-6-1; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.09(4); see also, Restatement (Second) of Property § 16.2 statutory note 1 (1977) (citing many of above statutes).

(n46)Footnote 46. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-8.

(n47)Footnote 47. See, e.g., Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (1982) ; Cote v. A. J. Bayless Mkts., Inc., 626 P.2d 602 (Ariz. App. 1982) .

(n48)Footnote 48. See Word v. Tiber, 491 A.2d 521 (D.C. Ct. App. 1985) (suggesting that under statute court need not decide whether covenant runs with land, since statute gives assignee all rights of assignor).

(n49)Footnote 49. See, e.g., Anderson v. Island Creek Coal Co., 297 F. Supp. 283 (W.D. Ky. 1969) ; see also Mrotek Enters. v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. Ct. App. 1969) ; Murphrey v. Winslow, 318 S.E.2d 849 (W. Va. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 327 S.E.2d 878 (N.C. 1985) .

(n50)Footnote 50. Standard analysis for running covenants also requires that there be horizontal privity between the original parties to the covenant and vertical privity between the assignor and assignee. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property §§ 8.17 - 8.18 (3d ed. 2000). The landlord-tenant relationship itself, however, provides sufficient horizontal privity, see id. § 8.18, and thus does not necessitate additional inquiry when discussing whether covenants run to a transferee of the landlord's reversion. Similarly, transfer of the landlord's reversion establishes the requirement of vertical privity. See id. § 8.17.

(n51)Footnote 51. See generally, Restatement (Second) of Property, §§ 15.1 - 15.2.

(n52)Footnote 52. See Kirk Corp. v. First Am. Title Co., 270 Cal. Rptr. 24 (Cal. App. 1990) ; Blankenau v. Landess, 626 N.W.2d 588 (Neb. 2001) (when land that is subject to a lease is sold the terms of the lease run with the land); see also MHW Ltd. Family P'ship v. Farrokhi, 693 N.W.2d 66 (S.D. 2005) (court held that a grant of a reversion conveyed to a transferee gives the transferee the right to recover rent required by a preexisting lease; the deed provided no evidence through its words that indicated that the lessor reserved its rights to the lease.)

(n53)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (N.Y. Cir. Ct. 1982) ; Mrotek Enters. v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. Ct. App. 1969) ; see also Neponsit Prop. Owners' Ass'n v. Emmigrant Indus. Sav. Bank, 15 N.E.2d 793 (N.Y. 1938) . See generally Restatement (Second) of Property § 16.2 (1977).

(n54)Footnote 54. See Peters v. Stone, 79 N.E. 336 (Mass. 1905) .

(n55)Footnote 55. See Mrotek Enters., Inc. v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. App. 1969) .

(n56)Footnote 56. See Smith v. Gulf Ref. Co., 134 S.E. 446 (Ga. 1926) .

(n57)Footnote 57. See Nicholson v. 300 Broadway Realty Corp., 164 N.E.2d 832 (N.Y. 1959) ; Neponsit Prop. Owners' Ass'n v. Emigrant Indus. Sav. Bank, 15 N.E.2d 793 (N.Y. 1938) .

(n58)Footnote 58. C. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 96 (2d ed. 1988).

(n59)Footnote 59. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.4 (3d ed. 1990).

(n60)Footnote 60. See, e.g., City of St. Petersburg v. Competition Sales, Inc., 449 So. 2d 852 (Fl. App. 1984) ; 815 Park Owners, Inc., v. West LB Admin., Inc., 463 N.Y.S.2d 1015, 1017 (1983) .

(n61)Footnote 61. See, e.g., Anderson v. Island Creek Coal Co., 297 F. Supp. 283 (W.D. Ky. 1969) ; Bobhic Assocs. v. Carrabba OB-GYN, 692 A.2d 826 (Conn. Ct. App. 1997) (assignee of landlord's interest has right to rents due and payable subsequent to the conveyance); MHW Limited Family P'ship v. Farrokhi, 693 N.W.2d 66 (S.D. 2005) (according to statute, landlord's successor-in-interest was entitled to unpaid rent because former landlord had not reserved any rights to the lease).

(n62)Footnote 62. See Clemente Bros., Inc. v. Peterson-Ashton Fuels, Inc., 287 N.Y.S.2d 955, 959 (1968) .

(n63)Footnote 63. See Griffin Grocery Co. v. McBride, 217 Ark. 949, 235 S.W.2d 38 (Ark. 1951) .

(n64)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Foss v. Stanton, 57 A. 942 (Vt. 1904) ; Bailey v. Meade, 144 N.E. 110 (Mass. 1924) .

(n65)Footnote 65. See Mrotek Enters. v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. App. 1969) .

(n66)Footnote 66. See Murphrey v. Winslow, 318 S.E.2d 849 (N.C. Ct. App. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 327 S.E.2d 878 (N.C. 1985) (however, court concluded that the seal was an "advantage" or remedy by action that came within the coverage of a statute giving rights to assignees of the lessor).

(n67)Footnote 67. See Snortland v. Olsonawski, 238 N.W.2d 215 (Minn. 1976) ; Mobil Oil Corp. v. First W. Sav. Ass'n, 614 P.2d 6 (Nev. 1980) (per curiam). This is an application of the concept that, although notice to an obligor is not essential to the validity of an assignment as between an assignor and an assignee, until such notice has been given, the obligor may continue to regard the assignor as the owner of the interest or the thing assigned. See Pillsbury Inv. Co. v. Otto, 65 N.W.2d 913 (Minn. 1954) .

(n68)Footnote 68. See Orange Improvements Partnership v. Cardo, Inc., 984 F. Supp. 85 (D. Conn. 1994) ; Turner Commun. Corp. v. Hickcox, 289 S.E.2d 260, 263 (Ga. App. 1982) ; Grey v. Wilson, 554 S.W.2d 867 (Ky. App. 1977) , rev'd on other grounds, 560 S.W.2d 561 (Ky. 1978) .

(n69)Footnote 69. See Balram v. Etheridge, 449 N.Y.S.2d 389, 391 (N.Y. Cir. Ct. 1982) .

(n70)Footnote 70. See, e.g., Word v. Tiber Island Co-op Homes, Inc., 491 A.2d 521 (D.C. App. 1985) ; Tehan v. Thomas Peters Printing, Inc., 421 N.Y.S.2d 465 (App. Div. 1979) ; see also Haslacha, Inc. v. Jubilee, Inc., 801 N.Y.S.2d 777 (Civ. Ct. 2005) (contrary to Tehan, in the present case the petitioner could not prevail on the issue in the Notice to Cure; court said in this case a painting was readily apparent and therefore the presence of the painting fits within the rule demanding requisite notice to a new successor.)..

(n71)Footnote 71. See, e.g., Adelson v. Sacred Assocs. Realty Corp., 183 N.Y.S. 265 (1920) .

(n72)Footnote 72. See Tehan v. Thomas Peters Printing, Inc., 421 N.Y.S.2d 465 (App. Div. 1979) ; Rocky 116 L.L.C. v. Weston, 717 N.Y.S.2d 823 (N.Y. 2000) ("The key to the liability of the successor in interest is notice of the relevant lease provisions or waiver thereof.").

(n73)Footnote 73. Id.

(n74)Footnote 74. See Laten v. Prajo, Inc., 222 A.2d 707, 708 (D.C. App. 1966) .

(n75)Footnote 75. See, e.g., Cote v. A.J. Bayless Mkts., Inc., 626 P.2d 602 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1982) ; Richey v. Stop N Go Mkts. of Tex., 654 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1983) ; Berman v. Sinclair Ref. Co., 451 P.2d 742 (Colo. 1969) .

(n76)Footnote 76. See Childs v. Goode, 548 S.W.2d 827 (Ark. 1977) ; cf. Elca Enters., Inc. v. Sisco Equip. Rental & Sales, Inc., 53 F.3d 186 (8th Cir. 1995) (transferee of landlord's interest could be substituted as party in landlord's action against former tenants).

(n77)Footnote 77. See, e.g., Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (1982) ; Financial Land Corp. v. Visible Difference, Inc., 639 N.E.2d 795 (Ohio Ct. App. 1994) ; 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 36.4 (3d ed. 1990).

(n78)Footnote 78. See, e.g., Ohio Rev. Code §§ 5301.08, 5301.25; Avenue Plaza, L.L.C. v. Falgoust, 654 So. 2d 838 (La. Ct. App. 1995) .

(n79)Footnote 79. See In re Fry Bros. Co., 52 B.R. 169 (S.D. Ohio 1985) .

(n80)Footnote 80. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 7.12 (4th ed. 2001); DeMarco v. City of Philadelphia, 494 A.2d 875 (Pa. Comm. 1985) .

(n81)Footnote 81. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 7.12 (4th ed. 2001).

(n82)Footnote 82. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 7.12 (4th ed. 2001).

(n83)Footnote 83. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 7.12 (4th ed. 2001).

(n84)Footnote 84. See Reilly v. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., 764 F.2d 167 (3d Cir. 1985) (applying Pennsylvania law); cf. First Interstate Bank v. Tanktech, Inc., 864 P.2d 116 (Colo. 1993) (lease extinguished).

(n85)Footnote 85. See, e.g., HRPT Advisors v. McDonald, Levine, Jenkins & Co., 43 Mass. App. Ct. 613, 686 N.E.2d 203 (Mass. Ct. App. 1997) (bank subordinated its mortgage to a lease); See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 12.9 (4th ed. 2001)(discussion of subordination agreements).

(n86)Footnote 86. See § 42.03(D)(1), infra.

(n87)Footnote 87. See & Ala. Code 1975 § 35-9-10; Cal. Civ. Code § 823; Idaho Code Ann. § 55-303; 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/9-216; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-31-1-13; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2516; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-21; Mont. Code Ann. § 70-26-106; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-3; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-8; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-29; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 15; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-21.

(n88)Footnote 88. See, e.g., Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (1982) .

(n89)Footnote 89. See Neponsit Property Owners' Ass'n v. Emigrant Indus. Sav. Bank, 15 N.E.2d 793 (N.Y. 1938) ; Mullendore Theaters, Inc., v. Growth Realty Invs. Co., 691 P.2d 970 (Wash. App. 1984) .

(n90)Footnote 90. See Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (1982) ; see also Nicholson v. 300 Broadway Realty Corp., 164 N.E.2d 832 (N.Y. 1959) .

(n91)Footnote 91. See City of St. Petersburg v. Competition Sails, Inc., 449 So.2d 852 (Fla. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n92)Footnote 92. See Arroyo v. Rosenbluth, 454 N.Y.S.2d 610 (1982) .

(n93)Footnote 93. See Bank of New York v. Hirschfeld, 45 A.D.2d 670, 361 N.Y.S.2d 54, 56 (1974) .

(n94)Footnote 94. See Bickford v. Dillon, 71 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 1947) .

(n95)Footnote 95. For an in-depth discussion, See generally, R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.35 (1980).

(n96)Footnote 96. See Federated Mtg. Invs. v. American S & L Ass'n, 121 Cal. Rptr. 137 (Cal. 1975) ; McDonald's Corp. v. Blotnik, 328 N.E.2d 897 (Ill. App. 1975) ; Central Savings Bank v. Fashoda, Inc., 463 N.Y.S.2d 335 (1983) ; Mauro v. Alvino, 90 Misc. 328, 152 N.Y.S. 963 (1915) ; Kaufman v. Williams, 104 A. 202 (N.Y. 1918) ; Tuteur v. P. & F. Enters., 21 Ohio App. 2d 122, 50 Ohio Op. 2d 219, 255 N.E.2d 284 (Ohio App. 1970) ; Mullendore Theaters, Inc. v. Growth Realty Invs. Co., 691 P.2d 970 (Wash. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n97)Footnote 97. See Mullendore Theaters, Inc. v. Growth Realty Invs. Co., 691 P.2d 970 (Wash. App. 1984) .

(n98)Footnote 98. See, e.g., McDonald's Corp. v. Blotnik, 328 N.E.2d 897 (Ill. App. 1975) .

(n99)Footnote 99. See Moskin v. Goldstein, 196 N.W. 415 (Mich. 1923) ; Bay View State Bank v. Liber, 148 N.W.2d 122 (Wis. 1967) .

(n100)Footnote 100. See Bay View State Bank v. Liber, 148 N.W.2d 122 (Wis. 1967) .

(n101)Footnote 101. See generally R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.35 (1980).

(n102)Footnote 102. See U.R.L.T.A. §§ 2.101(a), 2.105(a).

(n103)Footnote 103. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.070; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 33-1321; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 521-44; Idaho Code § 6-321; 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 710/1.1; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-31-3-12; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-203; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1416; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-07.1; Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.300; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-19; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-40-410; Tex. Prop. Code § 92.105; Va. Code Ann. § 55-248.15:1.

(n104)Footnote 104. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-21; Fl. Stat. Ann. § 83.49; La. Civ. Code Ann. § 3251; First Amendment; First Amendment; First Amendment; First Amendment; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4461; Article III of the Constitution.

(n105)Footnote 105. See Article III of the Constitution; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 38-12-103; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6035; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.178; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-54; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 115.

(n106)Footnote 106. See e.g., Berman v. Sinclair Ref. Co., 451 P.2d 742 (Colo. 1969) ; Regency Advantage Ltd. Partnership v. Bingo Idea-Watauga, Inc., 936 S.W.2d 275 (Tex. 1996) ; Richey v. Stop N Go Mkts. of Tex., 654 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1983) .

(n107)Footnote 107. See Childs v. Goode, 548 S.W.2d 827, 828 (Ark. 1977) .

(n108)Footnote 108. See Won's Cards, Inc. v. Samsondale Equities, Ltd., 566 N.Y.S.2d 412 (App, Div. 1991) .

(n109)Footnote 109. See Ames v. George Victor Corp., 424 N.W.2d 106 (Neb. 1988) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 42.04

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.04 Transfer of Tenant's Interest.

[Go To Supp]

§ 42.04(a) Overview.

Courts have long held that, absent an agreement to the contrary, tenants are free to transfer, in whole or part, their possessory interests in the lease. Such transfers can take two forms: assignments or subleases. Courts have historically found an assignment where the tenant transfers the entire term to an assignee, and retains no reversionary interest. n110 A sublease is found where the tenant retains some reversionary interest in the leasehold, n111 although a slight majority of courts require that it be more than a mere right of entry. n112

Although tenants are generally free to transfer their interests, courts have consistently held that the right to transfer can be made subject to the landlord's prior consent. n113 Although such a consent requirement is a restraint on alienation, the on-going and personal nature of the landlord-tenant relationship justifies recognition of consent requirements. The traditional and still majority position does not require that withholding consent be reasonable, but permits arbitrary refusals. n114 A significant and near-equal number of cases now require that a refusal to consent be reasonable. n115 Several courts have held that a refusal to consent must be reasonable, unless the lease expressly provides that the landlord may withhold consent for any reason. n116

Where a reasonableness standard is imposed, courts have usually applied a good faith commercial reasonableness standard in evaluating a landlord's refusal to consent to a transfer. n117 Factors include the financial responsibility of the proposed tenant, the type of business, and the suitability of the proposed use for the premises. n118 Courts typically place the burden on the tenant to show that the tenant offered a willing and able transferee. n119

An assignment places the landlord and assignee in privity of estate and terminates privity of estate with the original tenant. n120 The assignee becomes liable for any covenants that run with the land, and can similarly enforce such covenants against the landlord. n121 Although no longer in privity of estate, the original tenant remains liable to the landlord under privity of contract, unless expressly released. n122 Under a sublease both privity of estate and privity of contract remain with the original tenant, who is liable on both grounds. n123 The subtenant is neither liable to nor can enforce rights against the primary landlord, unless there is a specific assumption of obligations under the original lease. n124 However, the result may be otherwise if an equitable servitude is found to exist. n125

§ 42.04(b) Right of Tenant to Transfer.

§ 42.04(b)(1) In General.

Courts universally recognize that, absent an agreement to the contrary, a tenant has the right to either assign or sublet the tenant's interest in land. n126 In this respect courts have noted that a leasehold interest is assignable like any other contract right, and that the law encourages the free alienability of land. Of course, a tenant cannot transfer or assign a greater interest than he or she has. Thus, a month-to-month tenant can transfer only an interest in a month-to-month tenancy. n127

There are several exceptions to the general right to transfer. First, courts have held that a tenancy at will is not transferable, noting that the nature of the tenancy at will is that it exists only with respect to the original parties. n128 Second, a tenant might be prohibited from transferring where the terms or circumstances of a transfer are inconsistent with the purpose or intent of the original lease. For example, where the lease requires performance of personal services by the tenant, there might be an implied consent requirement. n129 Some courts have indicated that a percentage rental provision could impliedly prohibit transfer without the landlord's consent, n130 noting that the identity of the tenant is central to the landlord's decision whether to accept the risks inherent in a percentage lease. n131 Most courts, however, have held that absent an express consent provision, the tenant of a percentage lease has the right to transfer the lease without the landlord's consent. n132

§ 42.04(b)(2) Restrictions On Transfer.

Although tenants normally have the right to assign or sublet their interests, leases frequently impose restrictions or conditions on a tenant's right to transfer. n133 Most common is the requirement that the tenant cannot transfer an interest without the landlord's consent. Before discussing the parameters of consent requirements, this section will consider what qualifies as a transfer of an interest.

§ 42.04(b)(2)(i) What Constitutes a Transfer.

Most instances of transfer involve a tenant who either assigns or sublets his or her interest to another tenant. In such cases, there is little doubt that a transfer has occurred. Questions occasionally do arise, however, whether a particular tenant activity or transaction constitutes an assignment that requires prior landlord consent.

One common situation in which this issue arises is in connection with a change in the tenant's form of business ownership, with the leasehold interest being technically transferred to a new business entity. Courts have usually held that changes in the form of ownership do not constitute an assignment. For example, courts have held that a tenant's sale of its own stock to a purchaser does not constitute an assignment, n134 even where the stock is transferred to a party previously rejected by the landlord as an assignee. n135 Similarly, neither a change in form of a medical practice from a partnership to a corporation n136 or a tenant's transfer of the lease to a corporation wholly owned by the tenant constituted assignments. n137 In a Colorado case, the landlord contended that a withdrawing partner's assignment of an interest in a partnership caused a breach of a clause prohibiting assignment of the lease. The court rejected the claim, noting that even if continued occupancy by the partnership after the partner's withdrawal was an assignment in breach of the lease, the landlord had waived any objection by accepting rent for over two years. n138

On the other hand, some changes in corporate form that go beyond the mere transfer of stock constitute an assignment of a lease. For example, it was held that transferring a lease from a subsidiary to its corporate parent as part of a dissolution plan for the subsidiary constituted an assignment. n139 Similarly, a corporate tenant's creation of a subsidiary that took over a lease constituted an assignment, since it went beyond a mere change in the form of ownership. n140 Courts have also found assignments where a corporate tenant's assets, including the leasehold interest, were transferred to a new corporation designed to carry on the same business. n141 Despite the close connection between the various corporate entities in these cases, courts have reasoned that separate corporate entities were involved and thus the lease was necessarily assigned from one to the other.

Courts have differed, however, on whether the merger of a corporate tenant with another corporation constitutes an assignment of a lease. n142 Noting that a merged corporation succeeds to a corporate tenant's assets, including the leasehold, by operation of a statute, several decisions have turned on whether the non-assignment provisions included prohibitions against transfer by operation of law. On that ground the Missouri Supreme Court in a leading case, Dodier Realty v. St. Louis Nat'l Baseball Club, n143 held that since the leasehold was transferred by operation of law pursuant to statute when corporations merged, rather than by voluntary actions, it could not be considered an assignment under the lease. In a subsequent decision following the logic of Dodier, however, a court held that transfer by corporate merger violated the non-assignability provision of the lease, when the lease specifically included within its prohibitions assignments by operation of law. n144 A 1988 decision specifically rejected the rationale that a corporate merger involving the tenant constitutes an assignment of a tenancy, even where the lease specifically includes a prohibition against assignments by operation of law. n145

Finally, courts have also held that granting a license or another type of limited use does not constitute an assignment or sublease. n146 For example, a concession agreement for vending machines, though labeled a "concession lease," did not constitute a sublease of the property, since no exclusive right to possession was transferred. n147 Similarly, a corporate tenant's permitting an affiliate to hold concerts on the premises did not constitute a sublease, where the tenant retained possession and control of the property. n148

§ 42.04(b)(3) Consent Requirements.

Although tenants are free to transfer their interests in absence of a contrary agreement, leases frequently prohibit a tenant from assigning or subletting without the consent of the landlord. Some states also have statutes that require the landlord's consent before the tenant can assign or sublet the leasehold. n149 These statutes typically apply only to leases of short duration, such as less than two or five years. n150

§ 42.04(b)(3)(i) General Validity.

Prohibitions on assignments or subleases without the landlord's consent constitute restraints on alienation, which the law generally disfavors. The reasons for disfavor are substantial, but primarily concern the inefficiencies they place on land use by prohibiting transfer from less to more desirable uses. This concern obviously applies to transfer of tenant interests, since permitting a tenant to assign or sublet the lease will typically permit more productive uses of the property.

Despite these concerns, courts have recognized that the nature of the landlord-tenant relationship justifies some restraints. Unlike transfers of fee simple estates, where the grantor typically does not retain an interest in the land, landlords retain significant reversionary interests in the property which can be adversely affected by a tenant. Moreover, tenants and landlords perform on-going covenants, such as the duty to pay rent or to make repairs, which create a continuing relationship between the parties. For these reasons courts have recognized that landlords may impose consent requirements despite their restraining affect. n151 In doing so, however, they have emphasized that such provisions will be strictly construed. n152

§ 42.04(b)(3)(ii) Reasonableness Requirements.

Consent provisions at times expressly provide that any withholding of consent must be reasonable. In such cases the only question is whether withholding consent was, in fact, reasonable. Leases often contain "silent consent" clauses, however, which do not impose any standard for refusing consent. n153 A significant body of case law has development on whether a reasonableness standard is implied in such cases.

The traditional majority rule has been that unless the lease expressly imposes a reasonableness standard, the landlord has an absolute right to withhold consent and may arbitrarily do so for any reason, or for no reason. n154 This rule is based on two grounds. The first is the supposed intent of the parties, as expressed in the lease, which did not impose a reasonableness standard. Courts have interpreted "silent consent" provisions as an indication that the parties intended to provide the landlord with an absolute right to withhold consent. Noting that tenants could have bargained for a reasonableness provision, courts are reluctant to overturn the perceived intent of the parties. n155

Second, courts have also emphasized that landlords have exercised a personal choice in the selection of a tenant, which would be interfered with if the landlord did not have an absolute right to withhold consent. n156 It has also been noted that protecting the landlord's right to select who will use and occupy the property outweighs concerns over any resulting restraint on alienation, which is often viewed as minor because it affects only a leasehold interest. n157

A growing number of decisions, as well as the Restatement of Property, reject this traditional position and instead impose a reasonableness standard, at least in the absence of a freely-negotiated absolute right to withhold consent. n158 The Restatement provides:

> A restraint on alienation without the consent of the tenant of the landlord's interest in the leased property is valid, but the tenant's consent to an alienation by the landlord cannot be withheld unreasonably, unless a freely negotiated provision in the lease gives the tenant an absolute right to withhold consent. n159

Courts rejecting the majority position and imposing a reasonableness standard have done so for several reasons. First, they have emphasized that consent requirements impose restraints on alienation and should be strictly construed. n160 Several courts and commentators have emphasized the need for free alienation of residential and commercial space in the face of shortages. n161 In this sense, the minority position represents a balance between the competing policy concerns of avoiding unreasonable restraints on alienation and still protecting the landlord's property interest. To the extent that valid reasons for rejecting an assignee or subtenant exist, such as financial concerns or problems with the proposed use of the property, the minority position permits withholding of consent. n162 Thus, the primary purpose supporting the majority rule, protection of the landlord's property interest, is preserved. It is only where the restraint is gratuitous, imposing costs on society without concomitant benefits to the landlord, that the minority position prohibits the withholding of consent.

A second reason articulated for a reasonableness standard is the recognition of a good faith and fair dealing standard inherent in every contract. n163 Whereas the policy of avoiding restraints on alienation is based on the lease as a conveyance, this rationale arises from the growing recognition of the lease as a contract. n164 Thus, where the lease provides the landlord discretion, as with a consent provision, it must be exercised in good faith and in fair dealing. This, in turn, requires that landlords have a reasonable basis for refusal to consent, and prohibits arbitrary refusals. n165

Finally, several courts have questioned the majority assumption that, in the absence of an express reasonableness requirement, the parties intended the landlord to have an absolute right to refuse. Instead, courts have noted that tenants might assume landlords would act in a reasonable manner. Similarly, inherent in a clause permitting assignments and subleasing with the landlord's consent is the idea that such transfers are possible, which is largely negated if landlords can arbitrarily withhold consent. For these reasons courts have noted that the clauses are at least ambiguous and even create tenant expectations of a right to assign or sublet. n166

Although imposition of a reasonableness standard remains a minority position, n167 it most certainly represents the modern trend. To date, approximately 15 states have adopted the position. Importantly, a clear majority of courts that have addressed the issue in the past 20 years have adopted the minority position, with 14 states following the minority position n168 and only 7 holding to the majority position. n169

The exact scope of the minority position is unclear, however, with regard to whether the tenant can expressly waive the reasonableness requirement. Although states adopting the minority position clearly impose a reasonableness standard where the clause itself is silent, most cases have not clearly decided whether the lease itself can expressly give the landlord an absolute right to withhold consent. As noted earlier, the Restatement imposes a reasonableness standard on landlord consent, but would recognize "a freely negotiated provision in a lease [giving] the landlord an absolute right to withhold consent." n170

A number of courts have approvingly cited the Restatement in adopting the minority position. n171 In doing so, however, they have not usually considered whether the reasonableness standard may be expressly waived, as provided by the Restatement. Although not altogether clear, most decisions suggest that the holding is limited to "silent consent" leases, and do not address whether consent can be waived. n172 Several decisions, however, have clearly adopted the Restatement as the controlling standard, n173 apparently including the ability to expressly waive the reasonableness standard.

The validity of an express provision giving the landlord an absolute right to withhold consent in part turns on the policy rationale for imposing a reasonableness requirement. To the extent that a reasonableness requirement is based on tenant expectations and recognition of a good faith and fair dealing standard inherent in contracts, an express waiver provision would be acceptable. Tenant expectations would be formed by the lease itself, permitting an absolute right to withhold consent, and a landlord would be acting in a fair manner consistent with the terms of the contract. n174 On the other hand, an express waiver provision would arguably contravene the policy against restraints on alienation. Although reasonable promissory restraints are generally tolerated, granting a landlord an absolute right to withhold consent arguably fails to further significant concerns that would justify the resulting restraint.

Finally, at least three states statutorily impose a reasonableness standard on landlord consent provisions. n175 The California statute, enacted in 1989, in effect codifies the previous recognition of a reasonableness standard by that state's Supreme Court in Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. n176 The statute also adopts the Restatement position, however, providing that the lease may give the landlord an absolute right to prohibit transfer, n177 a question left open in Kendall. The Alaska statute, which applies only to residential tenancies, in effect imposes a reasonableness standard by providing that a landlord can withhold consent only for the seven justifications set forth in the statute, including insufficient credit or financial responsibility, the number of people or the number of children that would be in the house, the unwillingness of the proposed transferee to accept the terms of the primary lease, proposed maintenance of pets, proposed commercial activity, or a written statement by a previous landlord of prior abuses by the proposed transferee. n178

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iii) What Constitutes Unreasonable Withholding of Consent.

Where a reasonableness requirement is implied by law or expressly stated in the lease, courts have generally applied a good faith commercial reasonableness standard in evaluating a landlord's refusal to consent to a tenant transfer. n179 Courts have noted that the reason for refusal must be objectively sensible, often articulating a reasonable person standard. n180 Conversely, the reason must not be based on subjective grounds, n181 such as personal taste or sensitivity. n182 The Restatement comments state that to be reasonable a refusal "must be objectively sensible and of some significance and not based on mere caprice or whim or personal prejudice." n183

The burden of showing that the withholding of consent is unreasonable is on the tenant. n184 On that basis, some courts have held that the tenant has a duty to tender to the landlord a person who is ready, willing and able to accept the lease and meets commercial standards, and in the absence of any such tender a refusal is reasonable. n185 Similarly, courts have noted that withholding consent is reasonable where the tenant fails to provide sufficient financial information or fails to inform the landlord of the transferee's proposed use of the property. n186

Courts have indicated that a number of factors can be considered in assessing reasonableness, including the financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or subtenant, how the property will be used, the need for alterations, and whether the proposed assignee or subtenant would pose competition problems. n187 These, of course, are not exhaustive factors nor are they to be applied with mathematical precision. n188 Rather, they are to be assessed in terms of the legitimate purpose of consent requirements, generally viewed as protection of the landlord's interest in the property in question. n189 For this reason, a determination of whether a refusal is reasonable might turn on the cumulative weight of several factors, making generalizations even more difficult.

Probably the most common factor identified by courts is the financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or subtenant. Courts have noted that where the transferee is of dubious financial stability n190 or has a poor payment record, n191 the landlord has reasonable grounds to withhold consent. Similarly, prospective receipts from the proposed use relative to rent owed can be considered. n192 At the same time, courts have emphasized the financial stability of the proposed assignee or subtenant in finding the withholding of consent to be unreasonable. n193

It can be argued that the financial status of the transferee should not be relevant at all, since the current tenant remains liable to the landlord in any event under privity of contract. Courts have generally looked beyond this guaranty, however, implicitly recognizing that a financially unstable assignee is problematic despite the original tenant's continuing liability. For this reason, assurances of payment from the current tenant are generally not an effective substitute for a financially responsible transferee, since the tenant would be liable in any event. n194 Some courts have considered the current tenant's secondary liability as an additional reason for permitting a transfer when the transferee is financially responsible, however. n195 Others have also indicated that a tenant's willingness to guarantee all lease covenants is a factor in assessing whether a refusal is reasonable. n196

Conditioning consent on compliance with a demand for higher rent might be permitted where it is expressly provided for in the original lease. California has a statute that permits this outcome. It provides: "A restriction on transfer of a tenant's interest in a lease may provide that the transfer is subject to any express standard or condition, including, but not limited to, a provision that the landlord is entitled to some or all of any consideration the tenant receives from a transferee in excess of the rent under the lease." n197 The statute's legislative history clearly indicates this was to permit landlords to participate in the appreciated value of property when an assignment or sublease occurs, if the original lease so provided. n198

Although a landlord can reject a tenant of questionable financial stability, courts have held it unreasonable to refuse consent simply to improve the landlord's economic position. This often occurs where a landlord conditions consent on an increase in rent without a showing of additional risk or expense. In such circumstances the landlord is, in effect, conceding the suitability of the proposed assignee and is only seeking additional economic gain. Courts have consistently held refusals in such situations to be unreasonable, n199 noting that seeking such additional gain has nothing to do with the purpose of the consent provision, which is protecting the landlord's property interest, and thus cannot serve to justify withholding consent. n200

Courts have noted, however, that a demand for additional rent is reasonable where the proposed assignee or subtenant poses additional risk or expense. n201 For example, where rent is primarily based on gross sales and the proposed assignee would not generate sales equivalent to those of the current tenant, a landlord can condition the assignment on a rent increase sufficient to put the landlord in the same position as with the current tenant. n202

Courts have also usually found a refusal unreasonable where the landlord was willing to lease directly to the rejected assignee or sublessee, n203 often for the purpose of receiving a higher rent. As was true with conditioned consent, the landlord's willingness to lease the property to the proposed assignee strongly suggests the person's suitability. On that basis, courts have usually noted that the apparent reason for rejection of the party as an assignee, but acceptance as a direct tenant, was to increase the rent. As was true with conditioned consent, the landlord cannot improve the landlord's economic condition in this manner, at the tenant's expense.

Although landlords may not be able to withhold consent to improve their economic position, refusal is reasonable in order to avoid potential economic harm to the rental property. This implicates not only the financial instability of transferees, but also uses that would decrease a landlord's return from current levels. For example, refusal is reasonable where rent is in part based on a percentage of sales, and the proffered assignee is likely to generate a smaller rent than the current tenant. n204 This was situation in a case in which the lessee of a women's apparel store wanted to assign its lease to a hobby antique store, which would have generated substantially less income. n205 Similarly, where the proposed assignee was an inexperienced business manager and the current tenant was the most profitable store in the landlord's malls, the landlord's refusal to consent was reasonable where a percentage lease was involved. n206

Withholding consent is also reasonable where the proposed transferee's use would compete with the landlord's use. n207 Although the harm in such a situation is not to the rental property as such, courts have nevertheless found refusal to be reasonable. This makes sense if reasonableness is determined by reference to the original tenant, since a landlord would likely have rejected the original tenant on that basis as well. However, it has been held that a landlord cannot refuse consent because the proposed subtenant is a tenant of the same landlord in another building. Although the landlord will lose the person as a tenant if the sublease is approved and thereby suffer a loss, consent provisions are not for a landlord's general economic protection. n208

The nature of the proposed use might be a reasonable ground for withholding consent where it would disadvantage the landlord or be inconsistent with the purposes of the original lease. For example, in Warmack v. Merchants National Bank, n209 the court found a landlord's refusal to consent to a sublease reasonable where the tenant mix in a shopping mall was critical to the mall's success, and where the substitution of a savings and loan for a bank would have changed the mix. Courts have also held that where the primary lease expressly provides that the property is to be used only for a limited purpose, it is reasonable to refuse consent to an assignment or sublease involving a use different from that permitted in the primary lease. For example, where the lease limited use to the practice of general dentistry, the landlord's refusal to consent to a sublease to an orthodontist was reasonable. n210 Similarly, where a lease limited use to a roller rink and evidence indicated that the proposed sublease would be a "bar/dance concert hall," refusal was reasonable. n211 However, a New York decision held that relying solely on the purpose clause in the lease as a basis to withhold consent was not reasonable, in the absence of other objective factors. n212

Finally, considerations of personal taste or sensibility are not reasonable grounds for refusing consent to an assignment or sublease. n213 Thus, refusal is unreasonable where a transferee is rejected because she is a widow, n214 because of the landlord's personal dislike for the assignee, n215 or where the landlord personally objects to a tavern on the premises. n216 Similarly, it was held that a religious organization unreasonably refused consent of a sublease to a planned parenthood organization, despite the potentially controversial nature of the activity and religious objections of the landlord. n217 In so holding, the court said that because the institution was engaged in a commercial enterprise, it would be held to standards of commercial reasonableness. n218

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iv) Waiver/Implied Consent.

A landlord may waive a consent provision by conduct suggesting acquiescence in an assignment or sublease. n219 The most common evidence of waiver is where a landlord accepts rent payments knowing that they come from an assignee or subtenant. Almost all courts have held that this constitutes waiver of the consent requirement, since the landlord has, in effect, elected to treat the lease as transferred. n220

Courts have noted, however, that waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a right, and therefore knowledge of the assignment is a necessary prerequisite to any waiver. n221 Notice might come from actual knowledge of the assignment or be implied from an assignee's possession of the property together with tender of rent. n222 However, where the landlord does not have notice of the assignment, there is no waiver even when rent has been accepted from a proposed assignee. For example, there was no waiver in a case in which a landlord had accepted rent payment from an assignee bank when the bank had earlier informed the landlord that it would be making payments on behalf of the tenant from an escrow account to protect the bank's security interest. n223 Since no actual notice of the assignment had been given, subsequent payments were consistent with the previous understanding. Similarly, there was no waiver despite acceptance of rent payments in a case in which a tenant had told the landlord that the payments from a third party were being made on behalf of the tenant. n224

Although acceptance of rent is the primary factor in finding waiver, other factors may also be relevant. For example, the lack of any reasonable grounds to object to a subtenant has been seen as additional support for the conclusion that acceptance of rent constitutes waiver. n225 Similarly, where a tenant told the landlord that he was renewing a sublease and sent a confirmation letter with no objection by the landlord, there was a waiver of the requirement for written consent. n226

One final issue is whether a landlord, by giving express consent to an assignment, thereby impliedly waives consent to all future assignments. According to Dumpor's Case, n227 once a landlord consents to an assignment, the lease condition requiring consent is destroyed. n228 The tenant is thereafter free to transfer the property without the landlord's consent.

Although the rule in Dumpor's Case was abolished by statute in England more than a century ago, n229 American cases discussing it have often purported to recognize the rule, n230 and it is generally considered to be the majority position. n231 The rule has been frequently criticized by courts, n232 however, and it has been made subject to some exceptions. Thus, the rule has been applied to assignments, and not subleases, n233 and it does not apply when consent occurs by waiver. n234 Moreover, the rule does not apply if the landlord expressly reserves the right to consent to future assignments. n235 Several courts have rejected the rule outright. n236

Commentators universally criticize the rule, n237 and it is rejected by the Restatement. n238 The rule does not comply with the intent of the parties and is inconsistent with the purpose of a consent provision, which is to protect landlords against unsuitable assignees. It also discourages knowledgeable landlords from granting permission to appropriate assignments, since they thereby waive further control.

Even though the rule in Dumpor's Case is still generally recognized as the prevailing position, n239 its current status is questionable. Most case law supporting it is quite old, and few cases have addressed the issue in recent years. Considering the significant criticism of the rule and the lack of sound policy supporting it, it should no longer have the support of American courts.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v) Effect of a Breach.

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v)(1) Breach by Tenant.

A tenant assignment or sublease contrary to the terms of the lease does not void the transfer, but renders it voidable at the landlord's option. n240 The landlord may therefore declare a forfeiture and dispossess the assignee or subtenant, or conversely can elect to treat the transfer as valid. n241 The apparent reasoning behind this position is that consent requirements are for the benefit of the landlord, and are therefore not enforceable by the transferee. n242

Courts that treat unpermitted transfers as voidable have held that only the landlord can void the transfer, and not the assignee or subtenant. Thus, an assignee or subtenant generally cannot assert as a defense to an action by the landlord the landlord's lack of consent to the assignment. n243 Although courts have sometimes stated that an assignment without required consent is invalid or a nullity, suggesting that either party could raise the lack of consent as a claim or defense, they have applied the concept when the landlord elected not to accept the transfer. n244

Even if the jurisdiction imposes a reasonableness requirement on the exercise of the landlord's consent under a consent

clause in the lease, a tenant who undertakes a transfer without seeking the consent of the landlord will be found to have breached the lease. n245 In an Alaska case, the court stated that, in this situation, it "need not consider whether there were reasonable grounds for withholding consent to the assignment." n246 The court remanded for a determination whether the breach justified termination of the lease. However, as noted earlier, a landlord waives the consent requirement when the landlord acquiesces in accepting the new tenant. n247

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v)(2) Breach by Landlord.

Tenants have several basic forms of relief when a landlord breaches a lease by unreasonably withholding consent. The first is that the tenant is entitled to the consent, thus permitting the tenant to proceed with the assignment or sublease. n248

Second, courts have held that tenants can recover consequential damages as typically permitted for breach of a contract provision. n249 A preliminary issue regarding a tenant's right to damages is whether a reasonableness requirement imposed on the consent provision is a covenant by the landlord or merely a qualification to the tenant's own covenant to obtain consent before transfer. n250 Several older decisions before the mid-century mark held that the reasonableness requirement is not a covenant, and only a qualification of the tenant's covenant. n251 An unreasonable withholding of consent is therefore not a breach of a promise for which money damages can be recovered, but only the violation of a condition, with the tenant's remedy being performance of the assignment or sublease. n252

More recent decisions that have addressed the issue have held that the reasonableness requirement represents a covenant from the landlord to the tenant. n253 As such, it is the same as any other contract provision and can be a basis of a claim for damages if breached. n254

Courts that take this view will apply normal contract principles in assessing the scope of possible damages, including consequential damages. n255 In this regard, tenants can recover damages that arise naturally and are of the nature contemplated by the parties at the time the contract was made. n256 The parties need not contemplate the specific act or injury, but rather that it is the type that might naturally occur from a breach of the contract. n257 Thus, a tenant can recover the difference between the rent the rejected assignee would have paid and the lesser rent obtained by another sublessee. n258 Courts have also permitted recovery for lost profits, n259 damages sustained when a tenant was forced to liquidate his business, n260 and the amount that a rejected subtenant was willing to pay for fixtures. n261

A final issue is whether a tenant can terminate the lease and be released from owing rent when a landlord unreasonably refuses to consent. This, in effect, turns on whether the covenants are considered independent or dependent. The common law treated leases as conveyances and their covenants as independent, n262 which would preclude termination as a remedy. This reasoning was adopted in several earlier decisions, in which courts held that tenants were not free to vacate and stop paying rent for a landlord's unreasonable refusal. For example, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that since, under Wisconsin law, leases longer than three years were considered conveyances, the covenants were not necessarily to be treated as independent. n263 A New York decision similarly held that a tenant was not relieved of the duty to pay rent, but did indicate that the tenant could counterclaim in the landlord's action for back rent. n264

Several more recent decisions, however, have treated the covenants as dependent and held that the landlord's breach of the reasonableness standard permits a tenant to terminate the lease and stop paying rent. In one leading decision, Ringwood Associates v. Jack's of Route 23, n265 a New Jersey appellate court noted the erosion of independent covenant doctrine in commercial leases, and said that covenants should be treated as dependent where the landlord breaches a "substantial and material element of the contract." Noting that the right to assign is an important and valuable component of commercial leases and that other remedies were inadequate, the court held that the landlord's breach of a reasonableness requirement in the lease permitted the tenant to vacate and stop paying rent. At least two other decisions, n266 as well as the Restatement, n267 support this position. A California statute also permits tenants to terminate the lease when a landlord unreasonably withholds consent. n268

§ 42.04(c) Requirements for a Valid Transfer.

Assignments and subleases, as transfers of interests in land, are subject to the Statute of Frauds in the same manner as leases. A number of states have statutes that specifically require that a transfer of the tenant's interest be in writing. Most of these statutes refer to "assignments" of the lease, n269 although some refer to "transfers" of the tenant's interest. n270 A few of the statutes require a writing for an assignment of any duration. n271 Most, however, require a writing for transfers longer than a year, n272 with Pennsylvania requiring it for assignments longer than three years. n273

Even in the absence of an express statutory provision on transfer of a tenant's interest, the more general Statute of Frauds provisions should apply to transfers. Subleases are by nature leases, and therefore subject to statutory requirements that leases beyond certain lengths be in writing. n274 Similarly, assignments are transfers of interests that fall under the Statute of Frauds. n275 At the same time, courts have recognized that standard exceptions to the Statute of Frauds, such as part performance and estoppel, apply to leasehold transfers. n276

In addition to the Statute of Frauds, assignments and subleases are subject to other requirements for the transfer of property, most notably delivery and acceptance. Thus, where an assignment agreement was never delivered or accepted, the attempted assignment is ineffective. n277

§ 42.04(d) Distinction Between Assignment and Sublease.

Whether a particular transfer constitutes an assignment or a sublease has significant effects on the rights of the parties. Conceptually, of course, an assignment is the transfer of the existing lease, whereas a sublease is the creation of a new tenancy between the original tenant and the subtenant. An assignment will therefore bind the assignee to all covenants that run with the land in the primary lease, including rent, and permit the landlord to directly enforce those covenants against the assignee. On the other hand, a subtenant is bound only to the sublease itself, and is not directly liable to the landlord. n278

The traditional and still dominant approach for determining whether an agreement is an assignment or a sublease is that transfer of the tenant's entire interest, with no reversion, is an assignment, while a transfer for less than the entire term is a sublease. n279 This distinction traces back to English feudal law, at least as far back as 1371, n280 but was not solidified in English law until the mid-19th century. n281 Although the origins of the rule are not entirely clear, it appears to rest in part on principles drawn from the Statute Quia Emptores, which required retention of some interest for tenure to remain between a grantor and grantee. n282 Otherwise, the grantee merely stepped into the grantor's shoes. Similarly, courts have noted that an essential element of a lease is retention of a property interest. n283 Thus, a sublease, which is considered a separate lease between the tenant and the tenant's transferee, cannot exist without the retention of some property interest by the tenant.

A West Virginia case considered the assignment/sublease distinction in a situation involving a tenant's retention of lease renewal options. n284 The original lease provided for four lease renewal options of five years each. One of these had been exercised prior to the transfer in question. The tenant n285 transferred the remainder of the current term to another party, but retained three renewal options. The court concluded that this created a sublease. It reasoned that the "subtenant" had not received the full term available under the head lease, because the tenant had retained renewal options for three additional five-year terms. n286

Although most courts follow the traditional distinction, courts have differed regarding what qualifies as retention of a reversionary interest sufficient to avoid an assignment. Courts have consistently noted that the retention of any specific reversion period, no matter how short, creates a sublease rather than an assignment. n287 Thus, reserving a one-day reversion at the end of the tenancy creates a subtenancy rather than an assignment. n288 This, of course, provides a relatively simple way for knowledgeable parties to create a sublease.

More problematic is whether the original tenant's right of entry for condition broken, such as nonpayment of rent, is a sufficient reversionary interest to create a sublease. The apparent majority position is that a right of entry does not create a sublease, since at common law it was treated only as a chose in action. n289 A substantial number of courts, however, following what is known as the Massachusetts rule, n290 have held that a right of entry is a sufficient reversionary interest to create a sublease. n291 In doing so, these courts often state that the right of entry is a "contingent reversionary interest," n292 although it has been noted this would not qualify as a common-law reversion. n293 A few courts have gone even further and have held or suggested that the retention of any rights by the original tenant, such as an increase in rent n294 or new covenants or terms advantageous to the tenant, n295 create a sublease rather than an assignment. These decisions apparently have reasoned that variations from the original lease indicate that the original lease was not assigned, but rather that a separate tenancy was created. The clear majority of cases, however, have treated a transfer of the entire term, even with changed provisions, as an assignment.

A second approach to the assignment/sublease distinction, expressly advocated by a few courts and arguably present when courts recognize more tenuous reversionary interests under the traditional test, is to focus on the intent of the parties. Under this test, courts ask whether the parties intended to assign the primary lease to the transferee, or intended to create a separate tenancy. This approach was perhaps most strongly stated in Jaber v. Miller, n296 where the Arkansas Supreme Court rejected the traditional approach in favor of one based on the intent of the parties. In doing so, the court stated that the traditional rule was based on feudal considerations no longer relevant today. It also emphasized the potential unfairness of the traditional rule, since it might impose on transferees unintended obligations to the primary landlord when they actually intended to create a separate tenancy.

Where less than the entire term is transferred, an intent analysis as articulated in Jaber would reach the same result as does the traditional rule -- that the transfer is a sublease. By transferring less than the original term, the tenant clearly would be creating a separate tenancy, rather than assigning the current one, even where terms and conditions otherwise remain the same. Indeed, no case has suggested, including those articulating an intent analysis, that retention of a reversion is anything other than a sublease.

The potential difference between an "intent" analysis and the traditional rule would therefore only exist when the original tenant has transferred the entire term. Whereas the traditional rule would treat this as an assignment, and thus establish privity of estate between the landlord and the assignee, an intent analysis would consider whether the agreement was simply an assignment of the primary lease, or, even though for the same duration, was a separate tenancy. In particular, courts would assess whether the parties intended to be bound to the original lease or whether they created a new lease between themselves. The length of the lease, the creation of new covenants, retention of higher rent, and form of the agreement have all been identified as potential factors in discerning intent. n297

It has been suggested that the intent approach adds little to the traditional analysis, since courts will typically discern intent by looking to see whether a reversion or right of entry has been retained. n298 As noted above, that would certainly be true when a reversion is retained, since that would be a clear indication that a separate tenancy was created. The test might well lead to different results, however, where the entire term is transferred but the agreement contains significant differences in terms. The intent test goes to the real distinction that is involved, that is, that an assignment is the transfer of the existing lease, whereas a sublease is the creation of a new tenancy. n299

Most courts have properly held that the transfer of a portion of the premises for the complete term is a partial assignment and not a sublease, n300 although a few older decisions labeled it a sublease. n301

It is conceivable that a proposed arrangement by the tenant will be regarded as not creating either an assignment or a sublease. In an Oregon case, a retail tenant complained that the landlord had declined to consent to some proposed "subleases." n302 However the court concluded that the "subleases" were different from the existing lease in a number of significant respects, including the use that the "sublessees" could make of the property and the percentage rent that would be paid. The court noted, too, that a provision releasing the tenant from any liability for rent was inconsistent with the nature of a sublease, in which the original lessee remains fully liable on the existing lease. Although the court observed that the landlord had a duty to act reasonably with respect to the matter of consent to assignments or subleases by the tenant, that duty applied only when the tenant produced a true assignment or sublease. Because, in the court's view, the tenant never presented the landlord with a proposal that satisfied the basic requirements of an assignment or a sublease or that substantially complied with the requirements of the existing lease, the court held that the landlord was under no obligation to consent to the proposed arrangement. n303

§ 42.04(e) Legal Effect of Assignment and Sublease.

§ 42.04(e)(1) Overview.

The rights and liabilities between landlords and "parties with a leasehold interest" are normally based on the concept of privity. n304 The original lease creates both privity of contract and privity of estate between the landlord and tenant. n305 The lease agreement itself creates privity of contract. Privity of estate results from the landlord's right to possession upon termination of the tenancy. n306

An assignment of the lease transfers privity of estate to the assignee, since the landlord will succeed to the property upon termination of the assignee's interest. n307 The tenant remains liable to the landlord under privity of contract, however, unless there is a novation or an agreement to the contrary. n308 Since the assignee is in privity of estate with the landlord, the assignee will be liable for any covenants of the primary lease that run with the land. n309 The assignee remains liable only as long as privity of estate continues, however, and ends with a further assignment, unless the assignee assumed the lease obligations. n310

Under a sublease, both privity of contract and privity of estate remain with the original tenant, who is liable to the landlord on both grounds. n311 Since the subtenant is not in any privity with the landlord, however, the subtenant is neither liable to nor can enforce rights against the primary landlord, unless there has been a specific assumption of obligations of the original lease. n312 But enforcement in equity may be possible if the requirements for an equitable servitude have been satisfied. n313

The effect of an assignment is to place the landlord and assignee in privity of estate and to terminate privity of estate between the landlord and the original tenant. As such, the assignee is liable for any "real covenants" that run with the land, and can similarly enforce such covenants against the landlord. n314 Although the original tenant is no longer in privity of estate with the landlord, that tenant remains in privity of contract and thus liable on that basis. n315

§ 42.04(e)(2) Assignments.

§ 42.04(e)(2)(i) Rights and Obligations of Assignee.

As noted, an assignment places the landlord and the assignee in privity of estate. n316 On that basis, courts frequently state that the assignee takes all rights and obligations of the assignor. n317 More precisely, the assignee receives the benefits and the burdens of all covenants that run with the land. n318 Since the privity requirements for running covenants are clearly met with regard to an assignment, n319 the primary limitation on whether covenants run to the assignee is whether they touch and concern the land. n320 A covenant will be deemed to "touch and concern" the land if "its performance directly affects the rights of the parties with respect to their interests in the land," n321 rather than being collateral to it.

As a practical matter, most lease covenants touch and concern the land and therefore run with the land. Perhaps the most common source of contention, the duty to pay rent, has been consistently held to run to the assignee, providing the landlord with the right to bring a direct cause of action. n322 Courts have also recognized the burden of other types of covenants such as a covenant to arbitrate n323 or a tenant covenant to repair, n324 as running to the assignee. The assignee's liability is limited to the period of the assignment, however, and does not include liability for breaches that occurred prior to the assignment. n325

Although an assignment imposes liability on an assignee, it also grants the assignee the right to enforce running covenants against the landlord. Thus, an assignee can sue the landlord for constructive eviction and breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, n326 and breach of a landlord's covenant to repair. n327 Courts have also held that options to renew and purchase run to an assignee. n328

An assignee who subsequently sublets the property remains in privity of estate with the landlord and thus liable with respect to covenants that run with the land. n329 However, because an assignee's liability is based on privity of estate, a subsequent assignment by the assignee terminates the privity of estate and, absent an assumption of obligations, releases the original assignee from liability. n330 However, where the original assignee assumes obligations under the original lease, the assignee remains liable under privity of contract theory even after assigning the lease and terminating privity of estate. n331

For example, if the original tenant assigns to the original assignee, who assumes the lease obligations, and who in turn assigns to another assignee, then the original tenant and original assignee remain liable under privity of contract theory, while the subsequent assignee is liable under privity of estate. Where the original assignee did not assume obligations under the primary lease, that assignee would not be liable since neither privity of estate nor privity of contact would exist. n332

A significant issue, therefore, is whether particular language in an assignment agreement constitutes an assumption of the lease contract. An assumption is not implied by acceptance of an assignment. n333 Further, mere reference to covenants in the lease, n334 or even providing that the assignment is "subject" to the lease covenants, n335 have generally not been found sufficient to demonstrate an assumption. On the other hand, where the assignee expressly binds or obligates itself to the lease, courts have found an assumption. n336

§ 42.04(e)(2)(ii) Rights and Obligations of Assignor.

The original tenant to a lease is in both privity of estate and privity of contract with the landlord. Although the tenant/assignor is no longer in privity of estate with the landlord after an assignment, the tenant/assignor and landlord remain in privity of contract. n337 The tenant therefore remains liable under the contract, even when the assignee assumes obligations under the lease, unless there is a novation or release by the landlord. n338

In such a situation, the tenant/assignor is generally treated as a surety or guarantor of the assignee, and thus is secondarily liable after the assignee. n339 The landlord can hold the assignor directly liable, in which case the assignor can seek indemnification from the assignee. However, the assignor typically cannot retake the property upon the assignee's default, since that is a remedy limited to a landlord-tenant relationship. n340

A tenant/assignor's continuing liability under privity of contract can be terminated in two ways. The first occurs when the landlord releases the tenant from liability. n341 Any such release must be expressly stated, and will not be implied merely by the landlord's consent to an assignment. n342 Similarly, the assignee's assumption of performance under the lease does not constitute a novation unless the primary lease so provides. n343

The tenant/assignor can also be released from liability when the landlord and assignee materially change the terms of the lease. The idea here is that a new lease has been created. n344 This generally applies only when the changes impose additional burdens upon the assignee and were not contemplated by the original lease. n345 Thus where, as a condition to assignment, rent is increased beyond increases contemplated in the lease, or where the assignee's right to use the property is significantly limited compared to the use by the assignor, a novation occurs. n346 Minor changes, or those that do not disadvantage the assignor, however, do not give rise to a release of the assignee's liability. n347 Courts have also noted that an assignee's exercise of an option to renew a lease does not release the assignor from liability during the renewal period, since it was contemplated by the original lease. n348

Finally, the effect of an assignment is to relieve the assignor of any on-going interest in the property; n349 unless a right of entry is specifically retained. Thus, even though the assignor remains liable to the landlord under privity of contract, the assignor cannot assert a possessory right to the property. For example, when an assignee abandoned the lease, the landlord was free to accept the surrender and terminate the lease, and was not required to accept a check from the assignor. n350 Similarly, the assignor is not entitled to possession after the assignee defaults in rent, n351 unless the assignor has expressly reserved a right of entry.

§ 42.04(e)(3) Subleases.

§ 42.04(e)(3)(i) Rights and Obligations of Subtenant.

A sublease, as compared to an assignment, does not create privity of estate between landlord and subtenant, since the property reverts to the original tenant upon completion of the subtenancy. Rather, the original tenant remains in both privity of estate and privity of contract with the landlord. n352 The sublease itself creates a new landlord-tenant relationship between the original tenant and the subtenant with the normal rights and obligations that such a relationship entails. n353

Because a subtenant shares neither privity of estate nor privity of contract with the original landlord, the subtenant cannot enforce any covenants in the primary lease against the landlord. n354 Rather, the subtenant's rights are determined by the sublease itself, and can only be enforced against the tenant/sub-landlord. n355

Similarly, courts often state that the lack of privity precludes the landlord from enforcing lease covenants against the subtenant. n356 It has been noted, however, that the lack of privity only prohibits enforcing covenants as real covenants, but not as equitable servitudes. n357 Under an equitable servitude theory the landlord should be able to enforce covenants that touch and concern the land against a subtenant who took with notice of the covenant. n358 Recovery would be limited to equitable relief, however, and would not include damages. Although this would not necessarily preclude enforcement of a rent provision, n359 courts have generally stated that a subtenant is obligated to pay only rent reserved in the sublease, and is not liable to the primary landlord for rent. n360 However, a subtenant will be directly liable to the landlord on a third-party beneficiary basis where the subtenant has assumed the obligations in the primary lease. n361

Even when a landlord cannot directly enforce the primary lease against the subtenant, the sublease agreement cannot adversely affect or limit the rights of the landlord established in the primary lease. Any rights granted the subtenant in the sublease are in effect measured or limited by those of the original tenant in the primary lease. n362 For example, breach of the original lease, such as failure to pay rent, will give the landlord grounds to terminate the primary lease, and thereby terminate the sublease. n363

Courts have held, however, that the rights of a subtenant cannot be affected by the voluntary surrender of the primary lease, n364 at least in the absence of clear language to that effect. In effect, courts have reasoned that the tenant/sublessor is disabled from surrendering to the landlord an interest already conveyed to the subtenant. Additionally the subtenant should be protected from a tenant's attempts to destroy rights the tenant granted to the subtenant. n365 A tenant's voluntary surrender of the primary lease is therefore a transfer of the tenant's reversionary interest in the sublease, resulting in the landlord becoming the subtenant's immediate landlord. n366

This rule does not apply, however, where the sublease itself clearly provides that a voluntary surrender terminates the sublease. n367 Courts have generally required that such a provision must be clearly stated. Thus, merely providing that the property should revert to the primary landlord upon termination of the primary lease was insufficient to terminate the sublease in the case of a voluntary surrender. n368 Further, it has been held that a tenant/sublessor could not voluntarily surrender the lease and thereby terminate the sublease even though the sublease spoke of termination for any reason, where the sublease also granted the subtenant the same renewal rights as the tenant. n369 Conversely, it was held that, where the sublease stated that if the "overlease terminated for any reason whatsoever" the sublease would also terminate, the language permitted the tenant/sublessor voluntarily to surrender the primary lease and thereby terminate the sublease. n370

A related issue is whether the sublessor must exercise options to renew. As noted above in the case of an assignment, such options are typically viewed as running with the land to the assignee, who is then capable of exercising them. n371 With a sublease, however, any option to renew remains with the sublessor. As with the issue of voluntary termination, courts have typically answered the issue by reference to the parties' intent as expressed in the sublease.

Generally, courts have held that sublessors are not required to exercise options for the benefit of subtenants. n372 However, where circumstances of the sublease indicate an intent to exercise the option for the subtenant, courts have held that the option must be exercised. For example, a sublessor was required to exercise the option where the sublease extended beyond the normal period but would be covered by the option, the court noting that the subtenant's knowledge of the option provision together with the extended sublease created an expectation that the option would be exercised. n373

§ 42.04(e)(3)(ii) Rights and Obligations of Sublessor.

Since a sublease does not transfer privity of estate to the subtenant, the original tenant remains in both privity of estate and in privity of contract with the landlord. n374 The tenant therefore remains liable to the landlord for the full terms of the original lease, including rent reserved in the lease. n375 The original tenant also remains liable to the landlord for actions of the subtenant that constitute breach of the primary lease or waste. n376

The sublease itself creates a separate landlord-tenant relationship between the original tenant and the subtenant that forms the basis of rights and obligations between those parties. n377 The subtenant is, of course, obligated to pay any rent reserved in the sublease, as well as to comply with other sublease provisions. And the tenant/sublessor may utilize normal landlord remedies, such as an unlawful detainer action, for subtenant breaches. n378

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 110. See, e.g. In re Service Merchandise Co., 256 B.R. 755 (M.D. Tenn. 2000) ; Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1 (Md. 1988) ; Middle Village Assoc. v. Pergament Home Centers, 708 N.Y.S.2d 840 (Sup. Ct. 2000) ; Berkeley Dev. v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 518 A.2d 790 (N.J. Super. 1986) ; OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629 (Wash. 1989) .

(n2)Footnote 111. See, e.g., Joseph Bros. Co. v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 641 F. Supp. 822 (N.D. Ohio 1985) ; Warnert v. MGM Properties, 362 N.W.2d 364 (Minn. App. 1985) ; Carolina Place Jt. Venture v. Flamers Charburgers, Inc., 552 S.E.2d 647 (N.C. Ct. App. 2001)

(n3)Footnote 112. See, e.g., Rocklen, Inc. v. Radulesco, 10 Conn. App. 271, 522 A.2d 846 (Conn. App. 1967) ; Jensen v. O.K. Inv. Corp., 507 P.2d 713 (Utah 1973) .

(n4)Footnote 113. See, e.g., Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 839 (Cal. 1985) ; Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; see also Harara v. Conoco Phillips Co., 377 F. Supp. 2d 779 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (stating that the California legislature limited the holding in Kendall case).

(n5)Footnote 114. See, e.g. Honig v. St. George Tower & Grill, 217 A.D.2d 572, 629 N.Y.S.2d 285 (App. Div. 1995) ; Dobyns v. South Carolina Dep't of Parks, Recreation and Tourism, 454 S.E.2d 347 (S.C. Ct. App. 1995) ; Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; B & R Oil Co., Inc. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) .

(n6)Footnote 115. See, e.g., Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) ; Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) ; Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) ; Pacific First Bank v. New Morgan Park Corp., 876 P.2d 761 (Or. 1994) .

(n7)Footnote 116. See Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) .

(n8)Footnote 117. See, e.g., Jack Frost Sales v. Harris Trust and Sav. Bank, 433 N.E.2d 941 (Ill. App. 1982) .

(n9)Footnote 118. See Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) .

(n10)Footnote 119. See Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) .

(n11)Footnote 120. See, e.g., First Am. Nat'l Bank of Nashville v. Chicken System of America, Inc., 616 S.W.2d 156 (Tenn. App. 1980) .

(n12)Footnote 121. See Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1 (Md. App. 1985) .

(n13)Footnote 122. See Jedco Dev. Co., v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664 (N.D. 1989) ; OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629 (Wash. 1989) .

(n14)Footnote 123. See First Am. Nat'l Bank v. Chicken Sys. of Am., Inc., 510 S.W.2d 906 (Tenn. App. 1974) .

(n15)Footnote 124. See Employees Consumer Organization, Inc. v. Gorman's, Inc., 395 S.W.2d 162 (Mo. App. 1965) .

(n16)Footnote 125. See the discussion on this point in § 42.04(e)(3)(i) of this chapter.

(n17)Footnote 126. See, e.g., Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) ; Collia v. McJunkin, 178 W. Va. 158, 358 S.E.2d 242 (W. Va. 1987) ; Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc., 350 So. 2d 1035, 1037 (Ala. 1977) ; cf. 718 Associates, Ltd. v. Sunwest N.O.P., Inc. 1 S.W.3d 355 (Tex. Ct. App. 1999 (in the absence of a clear agreement, as a matter of public policy a provision requiring prior consent of landlord to assign a lease for real property is incorporated into all leases by operation of law).

(n18)Footnote 127. See Dickens v. Hall, 718 P.2d 683 (N.M. 1986) .

(n19)Footnote 128. See, e.g., Ferrigno v. O'Connell, 53 N.E.2d 384 (Mass. 1944) ; Randolph v. Koury Corp., 312 S.E.2d 759 (W. Va. 1984) . See also Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 (1977).

(n20)Footnote 129. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 (1977).

(n21)Footnote 130. See Rowe v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. 402 N.Y.S.2d 593 (1978) , rev'd, 385 N.E.2d 566 (N.Y. 1978) ; Nassau Hotel Co. v. Barnett & Barse Corporation 147 N.Y.S. 283 (App. Div. 1914) , aff'd, 106 N.E. 1036 (N.Y. 1914) . Lippman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 280 P.2d 775 (Cal. 1955) (implied covenant from percentage lease that tenant engage in particular use).

(n22)Footnote 131. See Rowe v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. 402 N.Y.S.2d 593 (1978) , rev'd, 385 N.E.2d 566 (N.Y. 1978) ; Nassau Hotel Co. v. Barnett & Barse Corporation 147 N.Y.S. 283 (App. Div. 1914) , aff'd, 106 N.E. 1036 (N.Y. 1914) .

(n23)Footnote 132. See Williams v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 424 P.2d 541 (Kan. 1967) ; Crestwood Plaza, Inc. v. Kroger Co., 520 S.W.2d 93 (Mo. App. 1974) ; 1 M. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.302(e) (3d ed. 1990).

(n24)Footnote 133. See also Shakey's Inc. v. Caple, 855 F. Supp. 1035 (E.D. Ark. 1994) (dissolution of corporation and assignment of all assets, including lease, to sole shareholder, not considered assignment of lease requiring landlord's consent).

(n25)Footnote 134. See, e.g., In re Ames Dep't Stores, Inc., 127 B.R. 744 (N.Y. 1991) ; Richardson v. La Rancherita La Jolla, Inc., 159 Cal. Rptr. 285 (Cal. 1979) ; National Bank of Albany Park in Chicago v. S.N.H., Inc., 336 N.E.2d 115 (Ill. App. 1975) .

(n26)Footnote 135. See Burrows Motor Co. v. Davis, 76 A.2d 163 (D.C. App. 1950) ; Rubinstein Bros. v. Ole of 34th St., Inc., 101 Misc. 2d 563, 421 N.Y.S.2d 534 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1979) ; see also Dennis' Natural Mini-Meals, Inc. v. 91 Fifth Ave. Corp., 568 N.Y.S.2d 740 (N.Y. App. 1991) (dictum).

(n27)Footnote 136. See Aiello v. Austrian, 479 A.2d 1234 (Conn. App. 1984) .

(n28)Footnote 137. See Sexton v. Nelson, 39 Cal. Rptr. 407 (Cal. App. 1964) ; contra, Guardia v. 250 West Street Corp., 613 N.Y.S.2d 10 (App. Div. 1994) (an assignment of lease to a wholly owned subsidiary is invalid without landlord's consent where the lease requires consent); see also, Pacific First Bank v. New Morgan Park Corp., 876 P.2d 761 (Or. 1994) (tenant's merger into wholly owned subsidiary constitutes transfer by operation of law requiring landlord consent).

(n29)Footnote 138. See Webster & Co. v. Nestle, 669 P.2d 1046 (Colo. App. 1983) .

(n30)Footnote 139. See Lord Baltimore Filling Stations, Inc. v. Hoffman, 117 A.2d 397 (D.C. App. 1955) .

(n31)Footnote 140. See Reston Rec. Ctr. Assocs. v. Reston Prop. Investors Ltd. P'ship, 384 S.E.2d 607 (Va. 1989) .

(n32)Footnote 141. See H. P. Hood & Sons v. Perry, 142 N.E. 794 (Mass. 1924) ; White v. Huber Drug Co., 157 N.W. 60 (Mich. 1916) .

(n33)Footnote 142. See generally Annotation, "Merger or Consolidation of a Corporate Lessee," 39 A.L.R.4th 879 (1983) .

(n34)Footnote 143. 238 S.W.2d 321 (Mo. 1951) .

(n35)Footnote 144. See Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Barlow Corp., 456 A.2d 1283 (Md. App. 1983) .

(n36)Footnote 145. See Standard Operations, Inc. v. Montague, 758 S.W.2d 442 (Mo. 1988) (en banc).

(n37)Footnote 146. See, e.g., Mann Theatres Corp. v. Mid-Island Shopping Plaza Co., 94 A.D.2d 466, 464 N.Y.S.2d 793 (N.Y. App. 1983) (license not an assignment or a sublease); Young v. Riley, 365 P.2d 769 (Wash. 1961) (permitting adult sons to pay rent and live in home is not a subletting in violation of lease).

(n38)Footnote 147. See Armendariz v. Mora, 553 S.W.2d 400, 404 (Tex. App. 1977) .

(n39)Footnote 148. In re Babylon Ltd. P'ship, 76 B.R. 270 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) .

(n40)Footnote 149. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.060; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1454; Ark. Code Ann. § 18-16-102; Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.310; Iowa Code Ann. § 562 B.21; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2511; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 383.180; Mo. Stat. Ann. 441.030; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 48-6-14; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 226-b; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-60; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 91.005; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.20.073 (mobile homes); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.09.

(n41)Footnote 150. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2511; see generally R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 8.18 (1980); see also In re Estate of David, 714 N.Y.S.2d 175 (App. Div. 2000) (statute governing the landlord's consent that was enacted after the lease was executed did not apply to the lease).

(n42)Footnote 151. See, e.g., Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) (reasonableness requirement); Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) (reasonableness requirement); 200 Eighth Avenue Restaurant Corp. v. Daytona Holding Corp., 740 N.Y.S.2d 330 (App. Div. 2002) (assignee is without recourse to challenge the landlord's withholding of consent to an assignment); Rakowsky v. Excelsior 57th Corp., 635 N.Y.S.2d 920 (Civ. Ct. 1995) (subletting fee may be imposed); Honig v. St. George Tower & Grill Owners Corp., 217 A.D.2d 572, 629 N.Y.S.2d 285 (App. Div. 1995) (cooperative-housing corporation could withdraw permission for a tenant-shareholder to continue subletting apartment); Nexsen v. Haddock, 576 S.E.2d 183 (S.C. 2002) (lease agreement providing that tenant could "use and occupy the premises as desired," did not give tenant the right to sublease the property without landlord's written consent); Dobyns v. South Carolina Dep't of Parks, Recreation & Tourism, 454 S.E.2d 347 (S.C. Ct. App. 1995) (under anti-assignment clause of leases, leases could be transferred only after written consent by the lessor); Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) (no reasonableness requirement); B & R Oil Co. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) (no reasonableness requirement); see also Waterside Redevelopment Co., L.P. v. Department of Housing Preservation and Development of City of New York, 704 N.Y.S.2d 63 (App. Div. 2000) (tenant's conduct in repeatedly subletting portion of apartment without express written approval justified eviction); Yochim v. McGrath, 165 Misc. 2d 10, 626 N.Y.S.2d 685 (City Ct. 1995) (subtenant forced to vacate because tenant was not authorized to sublet was able to recover damages from tenant) .

(n43)Footnote 152. See, e.g., Jung v. Zemel, 545 N.E.2d 242 (Ill. App. 1989) ; American Community Stores Corp. v. Newman, 441 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1989) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) .

(n44)Footnote 153. "In a 'silent consent' clause requiring a landlord's consent to assign or sublease, there is no standard governing the landlord's decision." Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738 (Md. 1990) .

(n45)Footnote 154. See, e.g., Abrahamson v. Brett, 21 P.2d 229 (Or. 1933) ; Dobyns v. South Carolina Dep't of Parks, Recreation and Tourism, 454 S.E.2d 347 (S.C. Ct. App. 1995) ; Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; B & R Oil Co. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) ; Johnson v. Yousoofian, 930 P.2d 921 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996) ; see generally 1 American Law of Property § 3.58 (J. Casner, ed. 1952); 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304(a) (3d ed. 1990); cf. Giordano v. Miller, 733 N.Y.S.2d 94 (App. Div. 2001) (example of express reasonableness provision).

(n46)Footnote 155. See First Fed. Sav. Bank of Ind. v. Key Mkts., Inc., 559 N.E.2d 600 (Ind. 1990) ; Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; B & R Oil Co. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 442 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) .

(n47)Footnote 156. See First Fed. Sav. Bank of Ind. v. Key Mkts., Inc., 559 N.E.2d 600 (Ind. 1990) ; Gruman v. Investors Diversified Servs., 78 N.W.2d 377 (Minn. 1956) .

(n48)Footnote 157. See Jacobs v. Klawans, 169 A.2d 265 (Md. 1961) , overruled, Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) .

(n49)Footnote 158. See Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) ; Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) ; Tucson Medical Ctr. v. Zoslow, 147 Ariz. 612, 712 P.2d 459 (Ariz. 1985) ; Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Cafeteria Operators L.P. v. AMCAP/Denver Ltd. Partnership,972 P.2d 276 (Colo.Ct. App. 1998) ; Basnet v. Vista Village Mobile Home Park, 699 P.2d 1343 (Colo. App. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 731 P.2d 700 (Colo. 1987) ; 1010 Potomac Assocs. v. Grocery Mfrs., 485 A.2d 199 (D.C. 1984) ; Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. App. 1981) ; Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; Jack Frost Sales v. Harris Trust and Sav. Bank, 433 N.E.2d 941 (Ill. App. 1982) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) ; Boss Barbara, Inc. v. Newbill, 638 P.2d 1084 (N.M. 1982) ; Pacific First Bank v. New Morgan Park Corp., 876 P.2d 761 (Or. 1994)

(n50)Footnote 159. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 (1977).

(n51)Footnote 160. See, e.g., Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738-739 (Md. 1990) .

(n52)Footnote 161. See, e.g., Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 843-844 (Cal. 1985) ; Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) .

(n53)Footnote 162. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; Ernst Home Ctr., Inc. v. Sato, 910 P.2d 486 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n54)Footnote 163. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 844-845 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738-739 (Md. 1990) .

(n55)Footnote 164. See Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. App. 1981) .

(n56)Footnote 165. See Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738-739 (Md. 1990) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) ; Rosenberg v. Park Avenue Corp., 679 N.Y.S.2d 56 (App. Div. 1998) .

(n57)Footnote 166. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 846-847 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738 (Md. 1990) .

(n58)Footnote 167. Both courts and commentators consistently represent the traditional position to be that landlords have an absolute right to withhold consent, even arbitrarily, as the majority position. See, e.g., B & R Oil Co., Inc. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) ; Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 reporters note 7 (1977); 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304(a) (3d ed. 1990). Even courts imposing a reasonableness standard indicate it is a minority position, although noting it is a growing one. See, e.g., Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. App. 1981) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) . But see Powell on Real Property(R) P 248.(1) (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender) (suggesting that validity of traditional rule is questionable today).

(n59)Footnote 168. See Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) ; Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) ; Tucson Medical Ctr. v. Zoslow, 147 Ariz. 612, 712 P.2d 459 (Ariz. 1985) ; Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Cafeteria Operators L.P. v. AMCAP/Denver Ltd. Partnership,972 P.2d 276 (Colo.Ct. App. 1998) ; Basnett v. Vista Village Mobile Home Park, 699 P.2d 1343 (Colo. App. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 731 P.2d 700 (Colo. 1987) ; 1010 Potomac Assocs. v. Grocery Mfrs., 485 A.2d 199 (D.C. 1984) ; Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. App. 1981) ; Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; Jack Frost Sales v. Harris Trust and Sav. Bank, 433 N.E.2d 941 (Ill. App. 1982) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. 1990) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) ; Boss Barbara, Inc. v. Newbill, 638 P.2d 1084 (N.M. 1982) ; Pacific First Bank v. New Morgan Park Corp., 876 P.2d 761 (Or. 1994) .

(n60)Footnote 169. See First Fed. Sav. Bank of Ind. v. Key Mkts., Inc., 559 N.E.2d 600 (Ind. 1990) ; Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; B & R Oil Co., v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) .

(n61)Footnote 170. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 (1977).

(n62)Footnote 171. See, e.g., Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733, 735 (Ark. 1981) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 844 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735-737 (Md. 1990) .

(n63)Footnote 172. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 844 n.14 (Cal. 1985) (expressly not deciding waiver issue; but California statute later adopted Restatement position); Newman v. Hinky-Dinky

Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50, 55 (Neb. 1988) (expressly not deciding waiver issue); Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) (does not address issue); Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. App. 1981) (does not address issue).

(n64)Footnote 173. See Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733, 735 (Ark. 1981) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 740 (Md. 1990) .

(n65)Footnote 174. See, e.g, Pacific First Bank v. New Morgan Park Corp., 876 P.2d 761 (Or. 1994) (reasonable contractual expectations of the parties are shown by the unambiguous terms a lease provision encompassing the landlord's right to withhold consent, at its discretion, to a "transfer" of the lease; under that provision, the parties expressly agreed to a unilateral, unrestricted exercise of discretion by Landlord).

(n66)Footnote 175. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.060; Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.250; Del. Code Ann. § 25-5512.

(n67)Footnote 176. 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) .

(n68)Footnote 177. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.220.

(n69)Footnote 178. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 46a.

(n70)Footnote 179. See, e.g., Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc., v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035, 1038 (Ala. 1977) ; Rowley v. City of Mobile, 676 So. 2d 316 (Ala. Ct. App. 1995) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) .

(n71)Footnote 180. See, e.g., Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; Ernst Home Center, Inc. v. Sato, 910 P.2d 486 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n72)Footnote 181. See Maxima Corp. v. Cystic Fibrosis Found., 568 A.2d 1170, 1175 (Md. 1990) .

(n73)Footnote 182. See, e.g., Stowe v. 19 East 88th Street, Inc., 683 N.Y.S.2d 60 (App. Div. 1999) ; Kruger v. Page Mgt. Co., 432 N.Y.S.2d 295 (Sup. Ct.1980) ; Ernst Home Ctr., Inc. v. Sato, 910 P.2d 486 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996) ; Stern v. Taft, 361 N.E.2d 279 (Ohio Ct. App. 1976) .

(n74)Footnote 183. See Restatement (Second) of Property, § 15.2, cmt. g (1977).

(n75)Footnote 184. See Rowley v. City of Mobile, 676 So. 2d 316 (Ala. Ct. App. 1995) ; Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; Jack Frost Sales v. Harris Trust & Sav. Bank, 433 N.E.2d 941, 949 (Ill. App. 1982) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 512 N.W.2d 410 (Neb. Ct. App. 1994) .

(n76)Footnote 185. Id.

(n77)Footnote 186. See, e.g., Rowley v. City of Mobile, 676 So.2d 316 (Ala. Ct. App. 1995) ; D'Oca v. Delfakis, 636 P.2d 1252 (Ariz. App. 1981) ; Fairchild Realty Co. v. Spiegel, Inc., 98 S.E.2d 871 (N.C. 1957) .

(n78)Footnote 187. See, e.g., Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50, 54 (Neb. 1988) .

(n79)Footnote 188. See, e.g., Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) ; Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50, 54 (Neb. 1988) .

(n80)Footnote 189. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; Ringwood Assocs. v.

Jack's of Route 23, Inc., 379 A.2d 508, 512 (N.J. Super. 1977) .

(n81)Footnote 190. See Pakwood Industries, Inc. v. John Galt Associates, 466 S.E.2d 226 (Ga. Ct. App.1995) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) .

(n82)Footnote 191. See Riggs v. Murdock, 458 P.2d 115 (Ariz. App. 1969) .

(n83)Footnote 192. See Newman v. Hinky-Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50, 54 (Neb. 1988) .

(n84)Footnote 193. See, e.g., Tollius v. Dutch Inns of Am., 244 So. 2d 467 (Fl. App. 1970) .

(n85)Footnote 194. See Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Fort Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Johnson v. Jaquith, 189 So. 2d 827 (Fla. 1966) ; Basse Truck Line v. Strickland Transp. Co., 359 S.W.2d 477 (Tex. 1962) .

(n86)Footnote 195. See Arlington Dev. v. Maxima Corp., 573 A.2d 1337 (Md. App. 1990) .

(n87)Footnote 196. See Johnson v. Jaquith, 189 So. 2d 827 (Fla. 1966) ; Ringwood Assocs. v. Jack's of Route 23, 379 A.2d 508 (N.J. Super. 1977) .

(n88)Footnote 197. Cal. Civ. Code 1995.240.

(n89)Footnote 198. See Ilkhchooyi v. Best, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766 (Cal. Ct. App. 1995) .

(n90)Footnote 199. See, e.g., Magna Inv. & Dev. Corp. v. Brooks Fashion Stores, Inc., 669 P.2d 1024 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1981) , overruled on other grounds, DVM Co. v. Stag Tobacconist, Ltd., 671 P.2d 907 (Ariz. 1983) ; Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Rose,760 N.E.2d 791 (Mass. Ct. App. 2002) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) ; cf. Winslow v. First Union Nat. Bank of Florida, 639 So. 2d 86 (Fla. Ct. App. 1994) (landlord refused consent to alterations in context of lease assignment).

(n91)Footnote 200. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; see also D.L. Dev. v. Nance, 894 S.W.2d 258 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) (conditioning consent on renegotiation of underlying lease for landlord's benefit unreasonable).

(n92)Footnote 201. See Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 739 (Md. 1990) .

(n93)Footnote 202. See John Hogan Enters. v. Kellogg, 231 Cal. Rptr. 711 (Cal. 1986) .

(n94)Footnote 203. See, e.g., Homa-Goff Interiors, Inc. v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) ; Cowan v. Chalamidas, 644 P.2d 528 (N.M. 1982) .

(n95)Footnote 204. See John Hogan Enters. v. Kellogg, 231 Cal. Rptr. 711 (Cal. 1986) ; Haack v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 603 S.W.2d 645 (Mo. App. 1980) ; Newman v. Hinky Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 512 N.W.2d 410 (Neb. Ct. App. 1994) ; Jonas v. Prutaub Joint Venture, 567 A.2d 230 (N.J. 1989) ; Jones v. Andy Griffith Prods., Inc., 241 S.E.2d 140 (N.C. 1978) .

(n96)Footnote 205. See John Hogan Enters. v. Kellogg, 231 Cal. Rptr. 711 (Cal. 1986) .

(n97)Footnote 206. See Jonas v. Prutaub Joint Venture, 567 A.2d 230 (N.J. 1989) .

(n98)Footnote 207. See Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc. v. Superior Ct., 258 Cal. Rptr. 816 (Cal. 1989) ; Medinvest Co. v. Methodist Hosp., 359 N.W.2d 714 (Minn. App. 1984) .

(n99)Footnote 208. See Krieger v. Helmsley-Spear, Inc., 302 A.2d 129 (N.J. 1973) .

(n100)Footnote 209. 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) .

(n101)Footnote 210. See Van Geffen v. Herbert, 439 So. 2d 1257 (La. Ct. App. 1983) ; see also Tenet HealthSystem Surgical, L.L.C. v. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Serv. Dist. No. 1, 426 F.3d 738 (La. Ct. App. 2005) (holding that the assignee's proposed use of the premises did not exceed the permitted use under the lease and that the lessor's reason for denying the use was personal to the lessee and did not relate to any objective evaluation).

(n102)Footnote 211. See Commack Roller Rink v. Commack Arena Mktg., Inc., 545 N.Y.S.2d 804 (App. Div. 1989) ; see also Lincoln Place LLC v. RVP Consulting, Inc., 791 N.Y.S.2d 31 (App. Div. 2005) (refusal was not unreasonable where the proposed use of the assignment was materially different from that specified in the lease).

(n103)Footnote 212. See Astoria Bedding, Mr. Sleeper Bedding Center Inc. v. Northside Partnership, 657 N.Y.S.2d 796 (App. Div. 1997) .

(n104)Footnote 213. See, e.g., Chanslor-Western Oil & Dev. Co. v. Metropolitan San. Dist., 266 N.E.2d 405 (Ill. App. 1970) ; American Book Co. v. Yeshiva Univ. Dev. Found., 297 N.Y.S.2d 156 (1969) .

(n105)Footnote 214. See Stern v. Taft, 361 N.E.2d 279 (Ohio App. 1976) .

(n106)Footnote 215. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.2 cmt. g (1977).

(n107)Footnote 216. See Roundup Tavern, Inc. v. Pardini, 413 P.2d 820 (Wash. 1970) .

(n108)Footnote 217. See American Book Co. v. Yeshiva Univ. Dev. Found., Inc., 297 N.Y.S.2d 156 (1969) .

(n109)Footnote 218. Id.

(n110)Footnote 219. See, e.g. LaSalle Nat'l Bank v. Bachmann, 108 B.R. 1013 (N.D. Ill. 1989) ; Holman v. Halford, 518 So. 2d 442 (Fla. Ct App. 1988) ; American Nat. Trust Co. of Chicago v. Kentucky Fried Chicken of Southern California, Inc., 719 N.E.2d 201 (Ill. Ct. App. 1999) .

(n111)Footnote 220. See, e.g., Sarete, Inc. v. 1344 U Street Ltd. Partnership 871 A.2d 480 (D.C. Cir. 2005; American Dairy Queen Corp. v. Brown-Port Co., 621 F.2d 255 (7th Cir. 1980) ; LaSalle Nat'l Bank v. Bachmann, 108 B.R. 1013 (Ill. 1989) ; Lewiston Pre-Mix Concrete, Inc. v. Rohde, 718 P.2d 551 (Idaho App. 1980) ; Batson v. Clark, 980 S.W.2d 566 (Ky. Ct. App. 1998) .

(n112)Footnote 221. See Amjems, Inc. v. F. R. Orr Constr. Co., 617 F. Supp. 273 (S.D. Fla. 1985) ; Centerre Bank of Independence, N.A. v. Bliss, 765 S.W.2d 276 (Mo. App. 1989) .

(n113)Footnote 222. See Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) (noting that assignee in possession of property 5 years); Lewiston Pre-Mix Concrete, Inc. v. Rohde, 718 P.2d 551 (Idaho App. 1989) (noting assignee in possession of property 7 years).

(n114)Footnote 223. See Centerre Bank of Independence v. Bliss, 765 S.W.2d 276 (Mo. App. 1989) .

(n115)Footnote 224. See Mattas Motors v. Heritage Homes of Neb., Inc., 749 P.2d 458 (Colo. App. 1987) .

(n116)Footnote 225. See Jung v. Zemel, 545 N.E.2d 242 (Ill. App. 1989) .

(n117)Footnote 226. See Holman v. Halford, 518 So. 2d 442 (Fl. App. 1988) .

(n118)Footnote 227. Dumpor's Case, 4 Coke 119b, 76 Eng. Rep. 1110 (K.B. 1603) .

(n119)Footnote 228. Id. See generally 1 American Law of Property § 3.58 (James Casner ed. 1952); 1 Friedman on Leases § 7.304 e (3d ed. 1990).

(n120)Footnote 229. Law of Property Amendment Act of 1859, 22 & 23 Vict. C. 35, § 1 C, cited in American Law of Property § 3.58 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n121)Footnote 230. See, e.g., German-American Sav. Bank v. Gollmer, 155 Cal. 683, 102 P. 932 (Cal. 1909) ; Reid v. John F. Weissner Brewing Co., 40 A. 877 (Md. 1898) ; Aste v. Putnam's Hotel Co., 141 N.E. 666 (Mass. 1923) ; Lipster v. Billings Boot Shop, 129 Mont. 420, 288 P.2d 660 (Mont. 1955) ; Barber v. Hyder, 200 P.2d 717 (N.M. 1949) ; Gillette Brothers v. Aristocrat Restaurant, Inc., 145 N.E. 748 (N.Y. 1924) ; Easley Coal Co. v. Brush Creek Coal Co., 112 S.E. 512 (W. Va. 1922) .

(n122)Footnote 231. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 3.58 (James Casner, ed. 1952); 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304 (3d ed. 1990); Restatement (Second) of Property § 16.1, reporter's note 7 (1977); see also William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.71 (3d ed. 2000) (noting that it is said to be the majority rule); but see Powell on Real Property(R) P 248[1] (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

(n123)Footnote 232. See, e.g., Reconstruction Fin. Corp. v. Kentucky River Coal Corp., 114 F.2d 942 (6th Cir. 1940) ; Investors' Guaranty Corporation v. Thomson, 225 P. 590 (Wyo. 1924) .

(n124)Footnote 233. See Kendis v. Cohn, 90 Cal. App. 41 p. 844 (1928); Fay v. Klots, 199 N.Y.S. 49 (1923) .

(n125)Footnote 234. See Gazlay v. Williams, 210 U.S. 41 (1903) .

(n126)Footnote 235. See, e.g., Merritt v. Kay, 295 F. 973 (D.C. Cir. 1924) ; Springer v. Chicago Real Estate, Loan & Trust Co., 66 N.E. 850 (Ill. 1903) ; Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1 (Md. App. 1988) .

(n127)Footnote 236. See Investors' Guaranty Corporation v. Thomson, 225 P. 590 (Wyo. 1924) .

(n128)Footnote 237. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 3.58 (James Casner, ed. 1952); Coskran, Assignment and Sublease Restrictions: The Tribulations of Leasehold Transfers, 22 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 405, 552 (1989). see also R. William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.71 (3d ed. 2000).

(n129)Footnote 238. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 16.1, reporters' note 7 (1977).

(n130)Footnote 239. See, e.g., 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304(C) (3d ed. 1990)); Restatement (Second) of Property § 16.1, reporter's note 7 (1977); but see Powell on Real Property(R) P 248[1] (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

(n131)Footnote 240. See, e.g., Page v. U.S. 51 Fed.Cl. 328 (2001) ; Lewiston Pre-Mix Concrete, Inc. v. Rohde, 718 P.2d 551 (Idaho App. 1985) ; Bolingbrook Equity I Ltd. Partnership v. Zayre of Illinois, Inc., 624 N.E.2d 1287 (Ill. Ct. App. 1993) ; Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629, 631 (Wash. 2d 1989) .

(n132)Footnote 241. See Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. App. 1987) ; see also Lampasas v. Spring Center, Inc., 988 S.W.2d 428 (Tex. Ct. 1999) (subtenant without the consent of the landlord is merely a trespasser).

(n133)Footnote 242. See OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629, 631 (Wash. 1989) .

(n134)Footnote 243. Id.

(n135)Footnote 244. See, e.g., B & R Oil Co., Inc. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) .

(n136)Footnote 245. See Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) .

(n137)Footnote 246. See Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1980) .

(n138)Footnote 247. See Jung v. Zemel, 545 N.E.2d 242 (Ill. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n139)Footnote 248. See, e.g., American Book Co. v. Yeshiva Univ. Dev. Found., Inc., 297 N.Y.S.2d 156 (1969) .

(n140)Footnote 249. See, e.g., Passaic Distributors, Inc. v. Sherman Co., 386 F. Supp. 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) ; 1401 Brickell Assocs. v. Stinson, Lyons, & Schuette, D.A., 522 So. 2d 459 (Fl. App. 1988) ; Vranas & Assocs. v. Family Pride Finer Foods, Inc., 498 N.E.2d 333 (Ill. App. 1986) ; see also, Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.310 (providing for damage remedy when landlord unreasonably withholds consent); but cf. WHTR Real Estate Ltd. Partnership v. Venture Distributing, Inc. 825 N.E.2d 105 (Mass. Ct. App. 2005) (landlord is not in default for failure to consent unless the tenant produces a candidate ready, willing, and able to fulfil the tenant's obligations under the sublease).

(n141)Footnote 250. See generally, Annotation, 54 A.L.R.3 d 679 (1972).

(n142)Footnote 251. See Mann v. Steinberg, 188 Misc. 652, 64 N.Y.S.2d 68 (1946) ; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Fulton & Elm Leasing Co., 132 Misc. 366, 229 N.Y.S. 86 (1928) ; Fairchild Realty Co. v. Spiegel, Inc., 98 S.E.2d 871 (N.C. 1957) (dictum); Hedgecock v. Mendel, 263 P. 593 (Wash. 1928) ; see generally, Annotation, 54 A.L.R.3 d 679 (1972).

(n143)Footnote 252. See Mann v. Steinberg, 64 N.Y.S.2d 68 (1946) .

(n144)Footnote 253. See Chanslor-Western Oil and Dev. Co. v. Metropolitan San. Dist., 266 N.E.2d 405 (Ill. App. 1970) ; Adams, Harkness & Hill, Inc. v. Northeast Realty Corp., 281 N.E.2d 262 (Mass. 1972) ; Broad & Branford Place Corp. v. J. J. Hockenjos Co., 39 A.2d 80 (N.J. 1944) ; Arlu Associates, Inc. v. Rosner, 14 A.D.2d 272, 220 N.Y.S.2d 288 (1961) ; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Eastway Plaza, Inc., 158 N.Y.S.2d 647 (1957) ; Rock County Sav. & Trust Co. v. Yost's Inc., 153 N.W.2d. 594 (Wis. 1967) ; see also Mitchell's, Inc. v. Nelms, 454 S.W.2d 809 (Tex. App. 1970) ; see generally, Annotation, 54 A.L.R.3 d 679 (1972).

(n145)Footnote 254. See Passaic Distributors, Inc. v. Sherman Co., 386 F. Supp. 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) ; Vranas & Associates, Inc. v. Family Pride Finer Foods, Inc., 498 N.E.2d 333 (Ill. Ct. App. 1986) ; Rock County Sav. & Trust Co. v. Yost's, Inc., 153 N.W.2d 594 (Wis. 1967) . Of course, the landlord will have to be found in breach of the covenant for that to be the result. See WHTR Real Estate Ltd. Partnership v. Venture Distributing, Inc. 825 N.E.2d 105 (Mass. Ct. App. 2005) (landlord is not in default for failure to consent unless the tenant produces a candidate ready, willing, and able to fulfil the tenant's obligations under the sublease).

(n146)Footnote 255. See, e.g., Passaic Distributors, Inc. v. Sherman Co., 386 F. Supp. 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) ; 1401 Brickell Assocs. v. Stinson, Lyons, & Schuette, D.A., 522 So. 2d 459 (Fl. App. 1988) ; Vranas & Associates, Inc. v. Family Pride Finer Foods, Inc., 498 N.E.2d 333 (Ill. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n147)Footnote 256. See, e.g., Passaic Distributors, Inc. v. Sherman Co., 386 F. Supp. 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) ; Vranas & Assocs. v. Family Pride Finer Foods, Inc., 498 N.E.2d 333 (Ill. App. 1986) .

(n148)Footnote 257. Id.

(n149)Footnote 258. See Passaic Distributors, Inc. v. Sherman Co., 386 F. Supp. 647 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) .

(n150)Footnote 259. See Vranas & Assocs. v. Family Pride Finer Foods, Inc., 498 N.E.2d 333 (Ill. App. 1986) .

(n151)Footnote 260. See Haritas v. Goveia, 345 Mass. 774, 188 N.E.2d 854 (Mass. 1963) .

(n152)Footnote 261. See Wasserman v. N.R.G. Realty Corp., 500 N.Y.S.2d 109 (1986) .

(n153)Footnote 262. See generally William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.10 (3d ed. 2000).

(n154)Footnote 263. See Rock County Sav. & Trust Co. v. Yost's, Inc., 153 N.W.2d 594 (Wis. 1967) .

(n155)Footnote 264. See 601 West 26 Corp. v. John Wiley and Sons, Inc., 298 N.Y.S.2d 1018 (App. Div.1969) .

(n156)Footnote 265. 398 A.2d 1315 (N.J. Super. 1979) .

(n157)Footnote 266. See The Maxima Corp. v. Cystic Fibrosis Found., 568 A.2d 1170 (Md. App. 1990) ; Adams, Harkness & Hill, Inc. v. Northeast Realty Corp., 281 N.E.2d 262 (Mass. 1972) .

(n158)Footnote 267. See Restatement (Second) of Property § 15.1 cmt. h (1977) (permitting termination remedy only when the parties have expressly covenanted for a reasonableness standard).

(n159)Footnote 268. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.310.

(n160)Footnote 269. See Ark. Stat. Ann. § 4-59-102; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 354; Idaho Code § 9-503; 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 775; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 566.106; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 573.04; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 36-103; N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-703; Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. § 5-103; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 183, § 3; 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 775; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:15; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1335.04; S.C. Code Ann. § 32-3-10; Utah Code Ann. § 25-5-1; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 304; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68, § 250.203.

(n161)Footnote 270. See Alaska Stat. § 09.25.010(12)(b); Cal. Civ. Code § 1091; Iowa Code Ann. § 622.32(3); Mont. Rev. Code Ann. § 70-20-101; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-10-01; Const. Art. 1, § 19; S.D. Comp. Laws Ann. § 43-25-1.

(n162)Footnote 271. See Md. Ann. Code Real Prop. § 5-103.

(n163)Footnote 272. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 4-59-102; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-10-106; Mont. Rev. Code Ann. § 70-20-101.

(n164)Footnote 273. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68, § 250.203.

(n165)Footnote 274. See Millicom, Inc. v. Breed, Abbott & Morgan, 554 N.Y.S.2d 160, 162 (1990) .

(n166)Footnote 275. See Herring v. Volume Merchandise, Inc., 106 S.E.2d 197 (N.C. 1958) .

(n167)Footnote 276. See Abbott v. Bob's U-Drive, 352 P.2d 598 (Or. 1960) .

(n168)Footnote 277. See Jones v. Inn Keepers, Inc., 676 S.W.2d 761 (Ark. App. 1984) ; Nedick's Stores, Inc. v. T.S.N.Y. Realty Corp., 548 N.Y.S.2d 172 (App. Div. 1989) .

(n169)Footnote 278. See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr.2d 689 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) ; Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) & § 42.04(c) of this chapter.

(n170)Footnote 279. See, e.g., Haynes v. Eagle-Picher Co., 295 F.2d 761 (1961) ; Estate of Basile v. Famest, Inc., 718 So. 2d 892 (Fla. Ct. App. 1998) ; Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) ; Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) ; L&M Corp. v. Loader, 688 P.2d 448 (Utah 1984) ; Warnert v. MGM Props., 362 N.W.2d 364 (Minn. App. 1985) ; see generally 1 The American Law of Real Property § 5.07(1)(C) (A. Gaudio ed. 1993).

(n171)Footnote 280. See Ferrier, Can There be a Sublease for the Entire Term?, 18 Cal. L. Rev. 1 (1929).

(n172)Footnote 281. Id.

(n173)Footnote 282. See Langford v. Selmes, 3 K. & J. 220, 69 Eng. Reprint 1089 (1853); Ferrier, Can There be a Sublease for the Entire Term?, 18 Cal. L. Rev. 1 (1929); See also Jaber v. Miller, 239 S.W.2d 760 (Ark. 1951) .

(n174)Footnote 283. See Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 605 (1856) ; see also Salmat Pizza Enterprises, Inc. v. Dezzara Restaurant Corp., 643 N.Y.S.2d 890 (City Ct. 1996) (noting that subleases are crafted to end prior to the expiration of tenant's term).

(n175)Footnote 284. Burgess Pic-Pac, Inc. v. Fleming Companies, Inc., 437 S.E.2d 742 (W. Va. 1993) .

(n176)Footnote 285. This tenant was actually an assignee of the original tenant.

(n177)Footnote 286. Burgess Pic-Pac, Inc. v. Fleming Companies, Inc., 437 S.E.2d 742 (W. Va. 1993) .

(n178)Footnote 287. See, e.g., Warnert v. MGM Props., 362 N.W.2d 364 (Minn. App. 1985) .

(n179)Footnote 288. See, e.g., Joseph Bros. Co. v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 641 F. Supp. 822 (N.D. Ohio 1985) ; Warnert v. MGM Props., 362 N.W.2d 364, 367 (Minn. App. 1985) .

(n180)Footnote 289. See, e.g., Rocklen, Inc. v. Radulesco, 522 A.2d 846 (Conn. App. 1987) ; Nedick's Stores, Inc. v. T.S.N.Y. Realty Corp., 548 N.Y.S.2d 172 (App. Div. 1989) ; Jensen v. O.K. Inv. Corp., 507 P.2d 713 (Utah 1973) .

(n181)Footnote 290. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.57 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n182)Footnote 291. See American Community Stores Corp. v. Newman, 441 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1989) ; Novosad v. Clary, 431 S.W.2d 422 (Tex. Ct. App. 1968) ; Dunlap v. Bullard, 131 Mass. 161 (1881) .

(n183)Footnote 292. See, id.

(n184)Footnote 293. See 1 American Law of Property § 3.57 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n185)Footnote 294. See D.A.C. Uranium Co. v. Benton, 149 F. Supp. 667, 677-78 (D. Colo. 1956) ; Collamer v. Kelley, 12 Iowa 319, 12 Iowa 318 (1881) .

(n186)Footnote 295. See Morrisville Shopping Ctr. v. Sun Ray Drug Co., 112 A.2d 183 (Pa. 1955) . See Wallace,Assignment and Sublease, 8 Ind. L.J. 359 (1933).

(n187)Footnote 296. 239 S.W.2d 760 (Ark. 1951) .

(n188)Footnote 297. See id. R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 8.11 (1980).

(n189)Footnote 298. See 1 The American Law of Real Property § 5.07(1)(c) (A. Gaudio, ed. 1993).

(n190)Footnote 299. See Jaber v. Miller, 239 S.W.2d 760 (Ark. 1951) .

(n191)Footnote 300. See, e.g., Entroth Shoe Co. v. Johnson, 260 Ky. 309, 85 S.W.2d 686 (Ky. 1935) ; Stacy v. Midstates Oil Corp., 36 So. 2d 714 (La. 1947) .

(n192)Footnote 301. See Fratcher v. Smith, 62 N.W. 832 (Mich. 1895) ; see generally, 1 American Law of Property § 3.57 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n193)Footnote 302. Lamonts Apparel, Inc. v. SI-Lloyd Associates, 967 P.2d 905 (Or. Ct. App. 1998) .

(n194)Footnote 303. Lamonts Apparel, Inc. v. SI-Lloyd Associates, 967 P.2d 905 (Or. Ct. App. 1998) .

(n195)Footnote 304. 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.501a (3d ed. 1990).

(n196)Footnote 305. See S. Kurtz and H. Hovenkamp, Property 559 (2d ed. 1993).

(n197)Footnote 306. Id.

(n198)Footnote 307. See, e.g. Sarete, Inc. v. 1344 U Street Ltd. Partnership, 871 A.2d 480 (D.C. Cir. 2005) ; Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) ; Employees Consumer Org., Inc. v. Gorman's, Inc., 395 S.W.2d 162 (Mo. 1965) .

(n199)Footnote 308. See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr.2d 689 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) ; Peiser v. Mettler, 328 P.2d 953 (Cal. 1958) ; Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1, 4 (Md. App. 1988) ; Jenkins v. John Taylor Dry Goods Co., 179 S.W.2d 54 (Mo. 1944) ; Jedco Dev. Co. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664, 666 (N.D. 1989) ; OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629 (Wash. 1989) .

(n200)Footnote 309. See, e.g., Employees Consumer Org., Inc. v. Gorman's, Inc., 395 S.W.2d 162 (Mo. 1965) .

(n201)Footnote 310. See Gateway Co. v. DiNoia, 654 A.2d 342 (Conn. 1995) ; Bornel, Inc. v. City Prods. Corp., 432 P.2d 489 (Wyo. 1967) .

(n202)Footnote 311. See First Am. Nat'l Bank v. Chicken Sys. of Am. Inc., 510 S.W.2d 906 (Tenn. 1974) .

(n203)Footnote 312. See Rittenberg v. Donohoe Constr. Co., 426 A.2d 338 (D.C. App. 1981) ; Regency Advantage Ltd. Partnership v. Bingo Idea-Watauga, Inc.,936 S.W.2d 275 (Tex. 1996) ; Amco Trust, Inc. v. Naylor, 317 S.W.2d 47 (Tex. 1958) .

(n204)Footnote 313. See the discussion on this point in § 42.04(e)(3)(i) of this chapter.

(n205)Footnote 314. See Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1, 4 (Md. App. 1988) .

(n206)Footnote 315. See OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629, 632 (Wash. 1989) .

(n207)Footnote 316. See Flynn v. Mikelian, 25 Cal. Rptr. 138 (Cal. App. 1962) ; Baehr v. Penn-O-Tex Oil Corp., 104 N.W.2d 661 (Minn.) ; Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc.,938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n208)Footnote 317. See, e.g., Stenke v. Masland Dev. Co., 394 N.W.2d 418 (Mich. App. 1986) ; Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n209)Footnote 318. See Italian Fisherman, Inc. v. Middlemas, 545 A.2d 1, 4 (Md. App. 1988) ; Mrotek Enterprises v. Dryer, 256 A.2d 557 (D.C. App. 1969) ; Spivak v. Madison - 54th Realty Co., 303 N.Y.S.2d 128 (Sup. Ct. 1969) .

(n210)Footnote 319. Traditional covenant doctrine requires that for a burden to run with land there must be both horizontal and vertical privity. Horizontal privity, between the original covenanting parties, is met by the landlord-tenant relationship itself. Vertical privity is met by the assignor's transfer of interest to the assignee.

(n211)Footnote 320. See, e.g., Abbott v. Bob's U-Drive, 352 P.2d 598, 603 (Or. 1960) ; Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n212)Footnote 321. C. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 96 (2d ed. 1988).

(n213)Footnote 322. See, e.g., Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc., 195 Cal. Rptr. 303, 310 (Cal. 1983) ; Paul v.

Kanter, 172 So. 2d 26, 27 (Fla. App. 1965) ; Rauch v. Circle Theatre, 176 Ind. App. 130, 374 N.E.2d 546, 549-550 (Ind. 1978) ; Abbott v. Bob's U-Drive, 352 P.2d 598, 604 (Or. 1960) ; Amco Trust, Inc. v. Naylor, 317 S.W.2d 47 (Tex. 1958) .

(n214)Footnote 323. See Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc., 195 Cal. Rptr. 303, 311 (Cal. 1983) ; Abbott v. Bob's U-Drive, 352 P.2d 598, 604 (Or. 1960) .

(n215)Footnote 324. See McFerran v. Heroux, 269 P.2d 815 (Wash. 1954) .

(n216)Footnote 325. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.501c1 (3d ed. 1990).

(n217)Footnote 326. See Infinity Broadcasting Corp. of Ill. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 869 F.2d 1073 (7th Cir. 1989) .

(n218)Footnote 327. See Income Props. Inv. Corp. v. Trefethen, 284 P. 782 (Wash. 1930) .

(n219)Footnote 328. See McIntyre v. Coker, 150 So. 2d 220, 224 (Ala. 1963) ; Stenke v. Masland Dev. Co. 394 N.W.2d 418 (Mich. App. 1986) ; see also Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) (right to terminate).

(n220)Footnote 329. See Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) ; O.T.R. v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 770 P.2d 243 (Wash. 1989) .

(n221)Footnote 330. See First Am. Nat'l Bank of Nashville v. Chicken System of America, Inc., 616 S.W.2d 156 (Tenn. App. 1980) ; Bornel, Inc. v. City Prods. Corp., 432 P.2d 489 (Wyo. 1967) .

(n222)Footnote 331. See Gateway Co. v. DiNoia, 654 A.2d 342 (Conn. 1995) ; Leitch v. New York C. R. Co., 388 Ill. 236, 58 N.E.2d 16, 18-19 (Ill. 1944) ; Broida v. Hayashi, 464 P.2d 285 (Haw. 1970) ; Bornel, Inc. v. City Prods. Corp., 432 P.2d 489 (Wyo. 1967) .

(n223)Footnote 332. See First Am. Nat'l Bank of Nashville v. Chicken System of America, Inc., 616 S.W.2d 156 (Tenn. App. 1980) .

(n224)Footnote 333. See First Am. Nat'l Bank of Nashville v. Chicken System of America, Inc., 616 S.W.2d 156 (Tenn. App. 1980) ; Packard-Bamberger & Co. v. Maloof, 214 A.2d 45 (N.J. Super. 1965) .

(n225)Footnote 334. See Hart v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 50 N.E.2d 285 (N.Y. 1943) .

(n226)Footnote 335. See Dassori v. Zarek, 75 N.Y.S. 841 (1902) ; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Peers, 46 N.E. 1105 (Ill. 1896).

(n227)Footnote 336. See American Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Hoyne Indus., 738 F. Supp. 297 (N.D. Ill. 1990) ; Gateway Co. v. DiNoia, 654 A.2d 342 (Conn. 1995) ; Sander v. Piggly Wiggly Stores, Inc., 95 S.W.2d 1266 (Tenn. App. 1936) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.61 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n228)Footnote 337. See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr.2d 689 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) ; Peiser v. Mettler, 328 P.2d 953 (Cal. 1958) ; Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) ; Lincoln Place LLC v. RVP Consulting, Inc., 791 N.Y.S.2d 31 (App. Div. 2005) ; Jones v. Dokos Enters., Inc., 357 S.E.2d 203 (Va. 1987); O.T.R. v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 770 P.2d 629 (Wash. 1989) .

(n229)Footnote 338. See Siragusa v. Park, 913 S.W.2d 915 (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n230)Footnote 339. See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837, 845 (Cal. 1985) ; Lincoln Place LLC v.

RVP Consulting, Inc., 791 N.Y.S.2d 31 (App. Div. 2005) ; Twelve Oaks Tower I, Ltd. v. Premier Allergy, Inc., 938 S.W.2d 102 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n231)Footnote 340. See 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.501d (3d ed. 1990).

(n232)Footnote 341. See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Commercial Corp., 106 Cal. Rptr.2d 689 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) ; Shadeland Dev. Corp. v. Meek, 489 N.E.2d 1192 (Ind. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n233)Footnote 342. See Jedco Dev. Co. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664 (N.D. 1989) ; OTR v. Flakey Jake's, Inc., 112 Wn.2d 243, 770 P.2d 629 (Wash. 1989) .

(n234)Footnote 343. See Shadeland Dev. Corp. v. Meek, 489 N.E. 1192 (Ind. App. 1986) ; R. William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.69 (3d ed. 2000).

(n235)Footnote 344. See J.G.M.C.J. Corp. v. Sears, Roebuck & Company 391 F.3d 364 (1st Cir. 2004) ; Jedco Dev. Co., Inc. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664, 667 (N.D. 1989) ; Rauch v. Circle Theatre, 176 Ind. App. 130, 374 N.E.2d 546 (Ind. App. 1976) .

(n236)Footnote 345. See Jedco Dev. Co. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664 (N.D. 1981) (rent increase permissible where contemplated by original lease).

(n237)Footnote 346. See Keeley v. Beenblossom, 183 Iowa 861, 167 N.W. 638 (Iowa 1918) .

(n238)Footnote 347. See Jedco Dev. Co. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664 (N.D. 1981) ; 1 American Law of Property § 3.61 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n239)Footnote 348. See Jedco Dev. Co. v. Bertsch, 441 N.W.2d 664 (N.D. 1981) ; 3 Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.501b (3d ed. 1990).

(n240)Footnote 349. See Flynn v. Mikelian, 25 Cal. Rptr. 138, 142 (Cal. 1962) ; see also Siragusa v. Park 913 S.W.2d 915, (Mo. Ct. App. 1996) ; Howard Stores Corp. v. Robison Rayon Co., 64 Misc. 2d 913, 315 N.Y.S.2d 720 (Sup. Ct. 1970) , aff'd, 320 N.Y.S.2d 861 (App. 1971) .

(n241)Footnote 350. See Flynn v. Mikelian, 25 Cal. Rptr. 138, 142 (1962) .

(n242)Footnote 351. See Howard Stores Corp. v. Robison Rayon Co., 64 Misc. 2d 913, 315 N.Y.S.2d 720 (1970) , aff''d, 320 N.Y.S.2d 861 (1971) .

(n243)Footnote 352. See First Am. Nat'l Bank v. Chicken Sys. of Am., Inc., 510 S.W.2d 906 (Tenn. App. 1974) .

(n244)Footnote 353. See Marcellus v. K.O.V., Inc., 615 P.2d 170, 172 (Kan. App. 1980) .

(n245)Footnote 354. See Summit Foods, Inc. v. Greyhound Food Mgt., Inc., 752 F. Supp. 363, 365 (D.C. Colo. 1990) ; Employees Consumer Organization, Inc. v. Gorman's Inc., 395 S.W.2d 162 (Mo. 1965) ; Cleveland v. A.J. Rose Mfg. Co., 624 N.E.2d 245 (Ohio Ct. App. 1993) .

(n246)Footnote 355. See Rittenberg v. Donohoe Constr. Co., 426 A.2d 338 (D.C. App. 1981) ; Christensen v. Tidewater Fibre Corp. 616 S.E.2d 583 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) ; Neal v. Craig Brown, Inc., 356 S.E.2d 912 (N.C. Ct. App. 1987) .

(n247)Footnote 356. See, e.g., American Community Stores Corp. v. Newman, 441 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1989) ; LaVack v. National Shoes, Inc., 507 N.Y.S.2d 293, 295 (1986) ; Christensen v. Tidewater Fibre Corp., 616 S.E.2d 583 (N.C. Ct. App. 2005) ; Neal v. Braun Craig Brown, Inc., 356 S.E.2d 912 (N.C. Ct. App. 1987) .

(n248)Footnote 357. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.70 (3d ed. 2000); 1 American Law of Property § 3.62 (James Casner, ed. 1952).

(n249)Footnote 358. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.70 (3d ed. 2000).

(n250)Footnote 359. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.70 (3d ed. 2000)(suggesting that the tenant's covenant to pay rent money could be enforced as an equitable servitude).

(n251)Footnote 360. See J. E. Martin, Inc. v. Interstate 8th St., 582 P.2d 299 (Colo. App. 1978) ; Riverbend Investors v. Progressive Surface Preparation, L.L.C., 660 N.W.2d 373 (Mich. Ct. App.,2003) .

(n252)Footnote 361. See C.R. Anthony Co. v. Wal-Mart Properties, Inc., 54 F.3d 514 (8th Cir. 1995) .

(n253)Footnote 362. See, e.g., Johnson Lakes Development, Inc. v. Central Nebraska Public Power & Irrigation District, 568 N.W.2d 573 (Neb. Ct. App. 1997) ; 231 Centre Street Associates v. Post Bros. Service Stations, Inc., 675 N.Y.S.2d 92 (App. Div. 1998) ; Spanish Oaks, Inc. v. Hy-Vee, Inc., 655 N.W.2d 390 (Neb. 2003) ; First Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n of Rochester v. Moore, 599 N.Y.S.2d 410 (City Ct. 1993) ; Hawley Corp. v. West Virginia Broadcasting Corp., 197 S.E.2d 628 (W. Va. 1938) .

(n254)Footnote 363. See Precision Dynamics v. Retailers Representatives, 120 Misc. 180, 465 N.Y.S.2d 684-686 (1983) ; Cleveland v. A.J. Rose Mfg. Co., 624 N.E.2d 245 (Ohio Ct. App. 1993) .

(n255)Footnote 364. See, e.g., Warnert v. MGM Props., 362 N.W.2d 364 (Minn. App. 1985) ; Parris-West Maytag Hotel Corp. v. Continental Amusement Co., 168 N.W.2d 735 (Iowa 1969) ; DaCosta's Automotive v. Birchwood Plaza Shell, 106 A.D.2d 484, 482 N.Y.S.2d 832 (1984) .

(n256)Footnote 365. See Warnert v. MGM Props., 362 N.W.2d 364 (Minn. App. 1985) .

(n257)Footnote 366. See DaCosta's Automotive v. Birchwood Plaza Shell, 106 A.D.2d 484, 482 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (1984) ; Precision Dynamics v. Retailers Representatives, 465 N.Y.S.2d 684, 686 (1983) .

(n258)Footnote 367. See Northridge Hosp. Found. v. Pic 'N' Save No. 9, 232 Cal. Rptr. 329 (Cal. 1986) .

(n259)Footnote 368. See Byrd v. Peterson, 186 P.2d 955 (Ariz. 1947) .

(n260)Footnote 369. See Morgan Plan Co. v. Vellianitis, 116 So. 2d 600 (Ala. 1959) .

(n261)Footnote 370. See Northridge Hosp. Found. v. Pic 'N' Save No. 9, 232 Cal. Rptr. 329 (Cal. 1986) .

(n262)Footnote 371. See Stenke v. Masland Dev. Co., 394 N.W.2d 418 (Mich. App. 1986) .

(n263)Footnote 372. See Minister, Elders & Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of N.Y. v. 198 Broadway, Inc., 451 N.E.2d 164 (N.Y. 1983) .

(n264)Footnote 373. See Texas Co. v. Adelman, 99 P.2d 874 (Okla. 1939) ; see also Burgess Pic-Pac, Inc. v. Fleming Companies, Inc., 437 S.E.2d 742 (W. Va. 1993) (tenant/sublessor liablto sublessee for damages if fails to renew option in head lease after granting an option to renew in the sublease).

(n265)Footnote 374. See Broida v. Hayashi, 464 P.2d 285 (Haw. 1970) ; First Am. Nat'l Bank v. Chicken Sys. of Am., Inc., 510 S.W.2d 906 (Tenn. App. 1974) .

(n266)Footnote 375. See Herbert T. Tiffany, The Law of Real Property § 124 (3d ed. 1939).

(n267)Footnote 376. See, e.g., Marcellus v. K.O.V., Inc., 615 P.2d 170, 172-173 (Kan. App. 1980) ; Lustig v. U. M.

C. Industries, Inc., 637 S.W.2d 55 (Mo. App. 1982) ; Barba v. Lindissimo Boutique, Inc., 149 Misc. 2d 117, 564 N.Y.S.2d 698 (1991) ; Capital Commercial Properties, Inc. v. Vina Enterprises, Inc., 462 S.E.2d 74 (Va. 1995) .

(n268)Footnote 377. See Marcellus v. K.O.V., Inc., 615 P.2d 170, 172 (Kan. App. 1980) .

(n269)Footnote 378. See R. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 8.13 (1980).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 42.05

AUTHOR: by Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 42.05 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Boyer, R., H. Hovenkamp and S. Kurtz. The Law of Property. 4th ed. § 9.10, 1991.

Casner, James A. ed. American Law of Property. Vol. 1 §§ 3.56-3.63. Boston: Little, Brown, and Co., 1952.

Friedman, Milton R. Friedman on Leases. Vol. 1 & 3, 3rd ed. Practising Law Institute, 1991.

Gaudio, Arthur R. The American Law of Real Property. Edited by A. Gaudio. Vol. 1, § 5.07. New York: Matthew Bender & Co., 1993.

Jasper, Margaret C., Landlord and Tenant Law, 1998.

Powell on Real Property(R) Vol. 2 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., LexisNexis Matthew Bender).

Smith, Roger. Property Law., 1996.

William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property. St. Paul: West Group. 3d ed. 2000.

Tiffany, Herbert T. The Law of Real Property. 3rd. ed. §§ 110-133. Munderlein: Callaghan & Co., 1939.

Articles

Bartel, Laura. "Revisiting Rejection: Secured Party Interests in Leases and Executory Contracts." 103 Dick. L. Rev. 497 (Spring, 1999).

Bloom, Edward M., et al. "Transfer of the Landlord's or Tenant's Interest in the Lease," in Lease Drafting in Massachusetts, Vol. II, Ch. 9 (Mass. Continuing Legal Education, Inc., 2001).

Breemer, J. & Radford, R. S., The (Less?) Murky Doctrine of Investment-Backed Expectations After Palazzolo, and the Lower, Courts' disturbing Insistence on Wallowing in the Pre-Palazzolo Muck, 34 Sw. U. L. Rev. 351 (2005).

Coskran, William "Assignments and Sublease Restrictions: The Tribulations of Leasehold Transfers." Loy. L.A. L. Rev. Vol. 22 (1989) 405.

Comment. J. Kirkman. "Landlord/Tenant: Sublet or Assignment of Tenancy Without Landlord Consent." Mass. L. Rev. Vol. 76 (1991) 97.

Davis, Joseph. "Assignment or Subleasing?" Mercer L. Rev. Vol. 2 (1951) 412.

Feldmeier, Robert C., "Enforcing Assignment-of-Rents Provisions in Illinois," 86 Ill. B. J. 436 (1998) .

Ferrer, W. W. "Can There Be a Sublease for the Entire Unexpired Portion of a Term?" Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1929) 1.

Garfinkel, Marvin. "Lease Terminations, Assignments and Subleases as Fraudulent Conveyances." Commercial Real Estate Leases: Selected Issues in Drafting and Negotiating in Current Markets SD73 ALI-ABA (June 3, 1999).

Gennaro, Michael A., The "Public Trust" Servitude: Creating a Policy-Based Paradigm for Copyright Dispute Resolution and Enforcement, 37 Tex. Tech L. Rev. 1131 (2005).

Herz, Andrew L. "Subleases: The Same Thing as Leases, Only Different," 35 Real Property, Probate and Trust Journal 667 (Fall, 2000).

Kaiser, Stephen. "Giving Up on Voluntary Surrender: The Rights of a Sublessee when the Tenant and Landlord Cancel the Main Lease." 24 Cardozo L. Rev. 2149 (2003).

Levin, Murray. "Withholding Consent to Assignment: The Changing Rights of the Commercial Landlord." DePaul Vol. 30 (1980) 109.

Mashian, Bryan . "Strategies for Assigning and Subletting in Commercial Leasing," Los Angeles Lawyer, p. 14 (Jan. 22, 2000).

Murray, John C. "Nonassignability Clauses in Commercial Leases: when Is An Assignment not An Assignment." 87 Ill. B. J. 658 (December, 1999).

Myster, Susan E. "Protecting Landlord Control of Transfers: The Status of 'Sole Discretion' Clauses in California Commercial Leases." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 35 (Summer 1995) 845.

Ominsky, Harris. "Lease Assignments: Who Is Being 'Unreasonable?'" Real Estate Law Report, p. 4 (Mar. 29, 2000).

Orth, John V. "Confusion Worse Confounded: The North Carolina Residential Rental Agreements Act." 78 N.C. L. Rev. 783 (March, 2000).

Pitney, Thaddeus L., "Note: Loans, and Takings, and Buildings OH MY!: A Necessary Difference Between Public Purpose and Public Use in Economic Development", 56 Syracuse L. Rev. 321 (2006).

Saltz, Sidney G. and Martin P. Miner. "Subleases: A New Approach and Proposal." 34 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 1 (Spring, 1999).

Schehr, Thomas M., Annual Survey of Michigan Law: June 1, 2003May 31, 2004: Business Associations, 51 Wayne L. Rev. 571 (2005).

Wallace, Leon. "Assignment and Sublease." Ind. L.J. Vol. 8 (1933) 359.

Wenner, Daniel E. Note, "Renting in Collegetown." 84 Cornell L. Rev. 543 (January, 1999).

White, Richard J., Kopf, Kenneth J., & Katz, Allan S. Annual Survey of Texas Law: Article: Real Property, 58 SMU L. Rev. 1077 (2005).

Zerunyan, Frank V. "Most Commonly Negotiated Commercial Lease Provisions." 116 Banking L.J. 158 (February, 1999).

Note. "Covenant Against Assignment of Leases." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1926) 487.

Note. "Covenant Against Assignment of Lease, Declaration of Trust." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1929) 90.

Note. "Covenant Against Assigning, Subletting or Using." Temp. L.Q. Vol. 2 (1927) 74.

Note. "Covenant Not to Assign Without Lessor's Consent." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1929) 690.

Note. "Effort of Leasehold Provisions Requiring the Lessor's Consent to Assignment." Hastings L.J. Vol. 21 (1970) 516.

Note. "Distinction Between an Assignment and a Sublease." Ark. L. Rev. Vol. 7 (1952) 71.

Note. "Julian v. Christopher: New Standards for Landlord's Consent to Assignment and Sublease." Md. L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1991) 464.

Note. "Lessor's Rejection of Sublease Agreement. Pursuant to a Consent Clause must be Judged Under a Reasonable Commercial Standard." Cumb. L. Rev. Vol. 9 (1978) 309.

Note. "Lessor's Arbitrary Withholding of Consent to Sublease." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 55 (1957) 1029.

Note. "Liability of an Assignee of a Lease After Reassignment." Wis. L. Rev. Vol. 7 (1931) 51.

Note. "Liability of Sublessee and Assignee to Owner for Rent." Ky. L.J. Vol. 32 (1944) 219.

Note. "Merger of Lessee Corporation and Another Held Not to Cause Forfeiture of Lease Under Non-assignability Provision." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 37 (1951) 1003.

Note. "Need for Lessee Who Transfers Whole Term to Base Right of Reentry on Condition of "Substantial Advantage' to Him." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 55 (1957) 605.

Note. "Release of Assignee After Assignment Over from Covenant to Pay Rent to Assignor." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 20 (1934) 382.

Note. "Release of Lessee Implied from Assignment of Long-term Lease." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 23 (1937) 838.

Note. "Release or Lessee by Agreement Between Lessor and Assignee of Lease." Yale L.J. Vol. 41 (1932) 1239.

Note. "Rule in Dumpor's Case." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1926) 328.

Note. "Sublease and Assignment, Underlease of Part of Premises." Fordham L. Rev. Vol. 5 (1936) 177.

Note. "Sublease for the Entire Unexpired Portion of a Term." Cal. L. Rev. Vol. 18 (1930) 571.

Note. "Transfer by Lessee as Sublease, Not Assignment." Mich. L. Rev. Vol. 50 (1952) 946.

Note. "Assignment of Commercial Leases The Reasonableness Standard and Withholding Consent: Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc." DePaul L. Rev. Vol. 36 (1987) 285.

Note. "Assignment or Sublease-Nature of Reversionary Interest." Or. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1948) 251.

Note. "Assignment of Lease, Liability of Assignee After Reassignment." Tex. L. Rev. Vol. 14 (1935) 108.

Note. "Assignment and Subletting, Assignee's Liability on a Covenant." Harv. L. Rev. Vol. 43 (1930) 1310.

Note. "Covenant Not to Sublease or Assign-Liability of Landlord for Unreasonably Withholding Consent." Fordham L. Rev. Vol. 26 (1957) 352.

Note. "When an Assignment May Be a Sublease." St. John's L. Rev. Vol. 1 (1926) 62.

Note. "Withdrawing Partner's Transfer of Lease to Remaining Partner Not a Breach of Covenant Forbidding Assignment." N.Y.L.F. Vol. 7 (1961) 118.

Annotations

Annotation, Assignee's Right to Enforce Lessor's Covenant to Renew or Extend Lease, 29 A.L.R. 2D 837 .

Annotation, Breach of Covenant For Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R.2d 1414 (2005) .

Annotation, Circumstances Excusing Lessee's Failure to Give Timely Notice of Exercise of Option to Renew or Extend Lease, 27 A.L.R.4th 266 (2005) .

Annotation, Commercial Leases: Application of Rule That Lease May be Canceled Only For "Material" Breach, 54 A.L.R.4th 595 (2005) .

Annotation, Construction and Effect of Lease Provision Relating to Attorney's Fees, 77 A.L.R.2d 735 (2005) .

Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision in Lease that Consent to Subletting or Assignment will not be Arbitrarily or Unreasonably Withheld, 54 A.L.R.3d (1974) 679.

Annotation, Continued Possession of Tenant as Constructive Notice to Third Person of Unrecorded Transfer of Title of Original Lessor, 1 A.L.R. 2 D 322.

Annotation, Estoppel of Assignee or Sublessee to Dispute Lessor's Title Where Assignment or Sublease is Conditioned

Upon Validity of the Title, 36 A.L.R. (1925) 1287.

Annotation, Grazing or Pasturage Agreement a Violation of Covenant in Lease or Provision of Statute Against Assigning or Subletting Without Lessor's Consent, 71 A.L.R.4th (1983) 188.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, On Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R.5th 1 (2005) .

Annotation, Liability of Lessee Who Assigns Lease for Rent Accruing Subsequently to Extension or Renewal of Term, 10 A.L.R.3d (1966) 818.

Annotation, Landlord's Consent to One Assignment or Sublease as Obviating Necessity of Consent to Subsequent Assignment or Sublease, 31 A.L.R. (1924) 153, Supp. 32 A.L.R. (1924) 1080.

Annotation, Liability for Interference With Lease, 96 A.L.R.3d 862 (2005) .

Annotation, Merger or Consolidation of Corporate Lessee as Breach of Clause in Lease Prohibiting, Conditioning, or Restricting Assignment or Sublease, 39 A.L.R.4th (1985) 879.

Annotation, Relief Against Forfeiture of Lease for Nonpayment of Rent, 31 A.L.R.2d 321 (2005) .

Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Assignee or Sublessee as Against Assignor or Sublessor Who Misrepresents Facts Regarding Lessor's Consent, 78 A.L.R. (1932) 356.

Annotation, Right of Lessee in Absence of Covenant to Assign Lease or Sublet Premises, 23 A.L.R. (1923) 135, Supp. 70 A.L.R. (1931) 486.

Annotation, Right of Lessor Arbitrarily to Refuse or Withhold Consent to Subletting or Assignment which is Barred Without Such Consent, 31 A.L.R.2d (1953) 831.

Annotation, Right to Exercise Option to Renew or Extend Lease as Affected by Tenant's Breach of Other Covenants or Conditions, 23 A.L.R.4th 908 (2005) .

Annotation, Right to Recover Exaction by Lessor as Condition of Consent to Assignment or Sublease, 40 A.L.R. (1926) 553.

Annotation, Rights and Remedies of Tenant Upon Landlord's Breach of Covenant to Repair, 28 A.L.R.2d 446 (2005) .

Annotation, Sublessee's Rights With Regard to Primary Lessee's Option to Renew, 39 A.L.R.4th (1985) 824.

Annotation, Subletting or Renting Part of Premises as Violation of Lease Provision as to Subletting, 56 A.L.R. 2 D 1002.

Annotation, Sufficiency as to Method of Giving Oral or Written Notice Exercising Option to Renew or Extend Lease, 29 A.L.R.4th 903 (2005) .

Annotation, Time Limits on Assumption or Rejection of Executory Contract or Lease Under 365 of Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C.A. 365), 137 A.L.R. Fed. 137 (2005) .

Annotation, What Constitutes Abandonment of Residential or Commercial Lease Modern Cases, 84 A.L.R.4th 183

(2005) .

Annotation, What is Objectionable Purpose Within Provision of Lease Against Assigning or Subletting for Objectionable Purpose, 61 A.L.R. (1929) 708.

Annotation, When Lessor May Withhold Consent Under Unqualified Provision in Lease Prohibiting Assignment or Subletting of Leased Premises Without Lessor's Consent, 21 A.L.R.4th 188 (2005) .

Annotation, Validity and Effect, As Between Assignor and Assignee or Claimants Under Them, of Assignment by Purchaser Under Land Contract, or by Tenant Under Lease, as Affected by Provision of Contract or Lease Restricting or Prohibiting Assignment, 148 A.L.R. (1944) 1361.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 42.04

Supp. to § 42.04 Transfer of Tenant's Interest.

[Go To Main]

[Go To Main]

§ 42.04(b)(3)(i) General Validity.

Add:

New Stadium LLC v. Greenpoint-Goldman Corp., 843 N.Y.S.2d 290 (2007) (lessor refused to comply with contractual obligation to consent to an assignment of the lease, which gave rise to a claim for tortious interference with business relations).

Cement Shoes, Inc. v. Mak, 859 N.Y.S.2d 65 (2008) (landlord who delayed in consenting to proposed assignment was liable for damages from abandonment of proposed assignment deal).

§ 42.04(b)(3)(ii) Reasonableness Requirements.

Line 5 of subsection

Change "development" to "developed"

Darin, LLC v. StratEdge Corp., 2008 Mass. App. Div. 91 (Mass. App. Div. 2008) (withholding of landlord's consent was not unreasonable).

Add:

Seedway SuperAmerica, LLC v. Tropic Enterprises, Inc., 966 So. 2d 1 (Fla. App. 2007) (the lease provision on government assignments is subject to an implied covenant of good faith).

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iii) What Constitutes Unreasonable Withholding of Consent.

Add:

Van Sloun v. Agans Bros., Inc., 778 N.W.2d 174 (Iowa 2010) (landlord reasonably withheld consent to sublease, because proposed subtenant would unduly compete with other existing tenants).

Add:

140 East 46th Street LLC v. Murray, 895 N.Y.S.2d 813 (2010) (landlord's failure to ask additional information of tenant rendered withholding of consent unreasonable).

Add:

See also Van Sloun v. Agans Bros., Inc., 778 N.W.2d 174 (Iowa 2010) (landlord reasonably withheld consent to sublease, because proposed subtenant would unduly compete with other existing tenants).

§ 42.04(b)(3)(iv) Waiver/Implied Consent.

Add:

Homeland Training Center, LLC v. Summit Point Auto. Research Center, 594 F.3d 285 (4th Cir. 2010) (lessor waived right to claim breach of lease by the assignment by never expressing any opposition to the assignment).

§ 42.04(b)(3)(v)(1) Breach of Tenant.

Add:

NP Anderson Cotton Exchange, L.P. v. Potter, 230 S.W.3d 457 (Tex. App. 2007) (assignment of lease did not result in automatic termination of the lease; written consent had been signed by former landlord).

[Go To Main]

§ 42.04(e)(2)(i) Legal Effect of Assignment and Sublease.

Add:

Katherine R. Napleton Revocable Self-Declaration of Trust v. Vatterott Educational Centers, Inc., 745 N.W.2d 325 (Neb. 2008) (assuming assignee was not liable for property tax obligations arising prior to the assignment).

§ 42.04(e)(2)(ii) Rights and Obligations of Assignor.

Add:

But see, Herricks Fore Plan, Inc. v. State, 870 N.Y.S.2d 173 (2009) (assigning tenant did not assign rights to possible condemnation award).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 42 TRANSFER OF LANDLORD AND TENANT INTERESTS

5-42 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 42.05

Supp. to § 42.05 Bibliography

[Go To Main]

Articles

Add the following:

"Leases: Sublease and Assignment Distinguished," 36 Real Est. L. Rep. 4 (March 2007).

Annotations

Add the following:

Annotation, Assignment of Lease as Breach of Covenant Against Subletting, 79 A.L.R. 1379 .

Annotation, Consideration for Assumption of Obligation of Lease by Assignee Thereof, 100 A.L.R. 1232 .

Annotation, Statute of Frauds: Validity of Lease or Sublease subscribed by One of the Parties Only, 46 A.L.R.3d 619.

Annotation, What Agreement or Conduct Subsequent to Assignment of Lease Amounts to Assumption by Assignee of Covenants of Lease, or Estoppel to Deny Such Assumption, 148 A.L.R. 393 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 43.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.syn Synopsis to Chapter 43: STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

§ 43.01 Overview of Statutory Modifications.

§ 43.02 Overview of the Chapter.

§ 43.03 Anti Discrimination.

§ 43.03(a) Traditional Right of Landlord to Select Tenants.

§ 43.03(b) Erosion of Traditional Right to Select Tenants.

§ 43.03(b)(1) Federal Law.

§ 43.03(b)(1)(i) Constitutional Limitations.

§ 43.03(b)(1)(ii) Section 1982.

§ 43.03(b)(1)(iii) The Fair Housing Act.

§ 43.03(b)(2) State Statutes.

§ 43.03(b)(3) Local Law.

§ 43.03(c) Protected Classes.

§ 43.03(c)(1) Race.

§ 43.03(c)(2) National Origin.

§ 43.03(c)(3) Religion.

§ 43.03(c)(4) Sex.

§ 43.03(c)(5) Familial Status.

§ 43.03(c)(6) Age.

§ 43.03(c)(7) Handicap.

§ 43.03(c)(8) Marital Status.

§ 43.03(c)(9) Sexual Orientation.

§ 43.03(c)(10) Other.

§ 43.03(d) Proving Discrimination.

§ 43.03(d)(1) The Plaintiff's Burden of Proof.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i) The Fair Housing Act.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(A) Disparate Treatment.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(B) Disparate Impact.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(C) Mixed Motives.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(ii) Section 1982.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(iii) State Law.

§ 43.03(d)(2) Evidence of Discrimination.

§ 43.03(e) Prohibited Conduct.

§ 43.03(e)(1) Refusal to Rent or Negotiate.

§ 43.03(e)(2) Terms, Conditions, Privileges, and Provision of Services.

§ 43.03(e)(3) Advertising.

§ 43.03(e)(4) Intimidation and Interference.

§ 43.03(f) Enforcement and Remedies.

§ 43.03(f)(1) The Fair Housing Act.

§ 43.03(f)(1)(i) Administrative Enforcement.

§ 43.03(f)(1)(ii) Civil Action.

§ 43.03(f)(1)(iii) Enforcement by the Attorney General.

§ 43.03(f)(2) Section 1982.

§ 43.03(f)(3) State Laws.

§ 43.03(g) Practice and Procedure.

§ 43.03(g)(1) Jurisdiction.

§ 43.03(g)(2) Standing.

§ 43.03(g)(3) Parties Defendant.

§ 43.04 Rent Control.

§ 43.04(a) In General.

§ 43.04(b) History of Rent Control.

§ 43.04(b)(1) Early War-Created Emergencies.

§ 43.04(b)(2) Modern Rent Control Laws.

§ 43.04(b)(3) The Emergence of Statutory Prohibitions on Rent Control.

§ 43.04(c) Limits to Rent Control.

§ 43.04(c)(1) Municipal Authority.

§ 43.04(c)(2) Declaration of Housing Emergency.

§ 43.04(c)(3) Federal Preemption.

§ 43.04(c)(4) Antitrust.

§ 43.04(c)(5) Substantive Due Process.

§ 43.04(c)(6) Takings.

§ 43.04(d) Overview of Rent Control Provisions.

§ 43.04(d)(1) Coverage and Exemptions.

§ 43.04(d)(2) Eviction Controls.

§ 43.04(d)(3) Vacancy Decontrols.

§ 43.04(d)(4) Rent Adjustments.

§ 43.04(d)(5) Maintenance Requirements.

§ 43.04(d)(6) Removals.

§ 43.04(e) Critique of Rent Control.

§ 43.05 Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 43.05(a) Overview and Relationship to Judicial Reform.

§ 43.05(b) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

§ 43.05(c) Adoption of Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 43.05(c)(1) Statutory Warranties Based on Uniform or Model Acts.

§ 43.05(c)(2) Other Statutory Warranties.

§ 43.05(d) Remedies for Breach of Statutory Warranties.

§ 43.05(d)(1) Termination.

§ 43.05(d)(2) Damages.

§ 43.05(d)(3) Rent Withholding.

§ 43.05(d)(4) Repair and Deduct.

§ 43.06 Retaliatory Conduct Statutes.

§ 43.06(a) Prohibitions Against Retaliatory Conduct.

§ 43.06(b) Remedies.

§ 43.07 Repair and Deduct Statutes.

§ 43.08 Rent Escrow Statutes.

§ 43.08(a) General Provisions.

§ 43.08(b) Receivership Provisions.

§ 43.08(c) Constitutional Challenges.

§ 43.09 Security Deposit Statutes.

§ 43.09(a) Deposit and Interest Requirements.

§ 43.09(b) Itemization and Use Requirements.

§ 43.09(c) Remedies.

§ 43.09(d) Transfer of the Landlord's Interest.

§ 43.10 General Statutory Modifications and Enactments.

§ 43.10(a) Creation and Termination of Tenancies.

§ 43.10(b) Holdover Tenants.

§ 43.10(c) Distress for Rent.

§ 43.10(d) Landlord Liens.

§ 43.10(e) Abandonment and Mitigation.

§ 43.10(f) Destruction of Premises.

§ 43.10(g) Tort Liability.

§ 43.10(h) Transfers of Landlord-Tenant Interests.

§ 43.10(i) Removal of Fixtures.

§ 43.10(j) Statute of Frauds.

§ 43.11 Bibliography.

Professor Mark W. Cordes
Northern Illinois University
College of Law

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.01

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.01 Overview of Statutory Modifications.

Although largely a creation of the common law, landlord and tenant law in recent years has undergone significant statutory modification. These statutory enactments fall into several categories. First are those statutes that codify common law rules, sometimes with only minor modifications. Most states today have general landlord and tenant statutes that codify the basic provisions of landlord and tenant law.

Second, and the primary focus of this chapter, are statutory modifications that have substantially changed the nature of the landlord-tenant relationship. The last quarter of the Twentieth Century witnessed what has been described as a "revolution" in landlord-tenant law. n1 Although much of this revolution has been judicial, statutory change has been a fundamental component of the realignment of the landlord-tenant relationship.

The primary beneficiaries of these changes have been tenants. n2 Although statutes typically accommodate some landlord concerns, such as "fair return" standards in rent control, n3 the undeniable impact of most statutory modifications has been to significantly limit a landlord's ability to control the terms of the lease. Traditional landlord prerogatives, such as selection of tenants, determination of rent, and bargaining for repairs and services, have become subject to substantial constraints.

There had been, of course, some earlier statutory modifications of the landlord-tenant relationship in these areas. A few states passed legislation in the 19th century required landlords to deliver the leased premises in a condition fit for the tenant's intended use and to make repairs during the lease term. n4 Rent control legislation was adopted during and after both World Wars in a number of American cities and states. n5 And several states enacted some form of fair housing legislation in the 1950s and 1960s. As a practical matter, however, these did not have the same widespread and revolutionizing impact as events during the last quarter of the Twentieth Century.

The first widespread and significant statutory impact came in 1968, when the federal Fair Housing Act was enacted n6 and the Supreme Court held that § 1982 of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1866 applied to private persons. n7 The effect was to prohibit landlord discrimination in selecting tenants, most importantly with respect to race. In more recent years anti-discrimination protections have been extended to discrimination based on gender, handicap, and familial status.

A second significant development beginning in the early 1970s has been the adoption of statutory warranties of habitability. Warranty adoption began in the courts, but over 30 states have now enacted statutory warranty provisions. Often based on comprehensive legislation such as the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, many statutes provide detailed landlord obligations and tenant remedies. A number of states have also adopted legislation prohibiting retaliatory actions against tenants and regulating security deposits.

Finally, the 1970s saw re-emergence of rent control in a number of American cities. In contrast to the widespread impact of anti discrimination statutes and habitability requirements, rent control is practiced in only about a dozen states. Those states include many of the nation's population centers, however, so the resulting impact on traditional landlord-tenant law has been significant.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. See Rabin, The Revolution in Residential Landlord Tenant Law: Causes and Consequences, 69 Cornell L. Rev. 517 (1984).

(n2)Footnote 2. See id. at 517, 521.

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 43.04(d)(4) of this chapter.

(n4)Footnote 4. See Roger Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 51-58 (1979) (discussing Louisiana, Georgia, California, Montana, Oklahoma, North Dakota and South Dakota statutes).

(n5)Footnote 5. See infra § 43.04(b)(1).

(n6)Footnote 6. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-3619.

(n7)Footnote 7. See Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.02

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.02 Overview of the Chapter.

This chapter examines statutory modifications of landlord-tenant law, with a primary emphasis on the fundamental changes described above. Statutory attempts to prohibit various forms of discrimination in leasing are examined in § 43.03. Section 43.04 discusses rent control. Section 43.05 considers statutory warranties of habitability. The next four sections, §§ 43.06 through 43.09, take up retaliatory conduct statutes, repair and deduct legislation, rent escrow statutes, and legislation regarding security deposits. Finally, § 43.10 briefly summarizes examples of other statutory modifications of traditional landlord-tenant law.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.03

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.03 Anti Discrimination.

[Go To Supp]

§ 43.03(a) Traditional Right of Landlord to Select Tenants.

Landlords traditionally have been free to select or reject tenants on any grounds they choose. There is relatively little authority on the issue, presumably because a landlord's right to refuse to rent was generally assumed. Where courts did address the issue, usually in dicta, they consistently noted that private landlords were free to reject tenants for any reason, including reasons of racial and religious discrimination. n8 Thus, when a landlord rejected an applicant because of religion, a court noted that the landlord had simply exercised the right of every landlord "to make his own selection of tenants." n9 Similarly, when the New York Court of Appeals held that a corporation organized under a state redevelopment law was not an agency of the state and therefore not subject to constitutional restraints, it concluded that the corporation had the same rights as any private landlord to reject tenants on the basis of race. n10

This traditional right to select tenants arguably corresponded to a person's freedom not to enter into contracts. n11 It also reflected a landlord's traditional right to control and dispose of property. In other contexts, such as restraints on tenant assignments, courts noted the on going and personal nature of the landlord-tenant relationship as a reason to permit landlords to control who is on their property. n12

As will be discussed below, this traditional right to discriminate in the selection and retention of tenants was radically changed in the 1960s and since, with federal and state statutes prohibiting discrimination against various classes of people. It is important to remember, however, that these statutory modifications create only specific limitations on a landlord's otherwise broad and traditional right to select tenants. Modern decisions often note that landlords remain free to select and discriminate to the extent that a particular action does not fall within a statutory prohibition. n13 For example, a landlord was permitted to reject an applicant because she was a lawyer, since that was not a protected class under applicable local, state and federal statutes. n14

§ 43.03(b) Erosion of Traditional Right to Select Tenants.

Most early limitations on the traditional right to select tenants involved public housing. Several states enacted legislation in the 1940s that prohibited racial or religious discrimination in public housing. n15 Moreover, courts began to recognize that the equal protection clause applied to public housing. n16 Although most courts initially held that "separate but equal" public housing did not violate the equal protection clause, n17 Brown v. Board of Education n18 and other Supreme Court decisions clearly established that public facilities could not be segregated. n19

Some state restrictions on private discrimination also began to emerge during this period. Although Illinois prohibited discrimination against children in housing as early as 1909, n20 it was during the 1950s and 1960s that a significant number of states began to enact legislation limiting discriminatory housing practices. n21

Clearly the most important change took place in 1968 with two events. First, Congress passed the federal Fair Housing Act, which prohibited various discriminatory housing practices, including those involving leases, when based on race, color, religion or national origin. n22 Second, the Supreme Court recognized that § 1982 of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 prohibited private as well as public housing discrimination. n23 Although protections under the Fair Housing Act and under state legislation have significantly expanded since that time, those two events established the current framework for prohibiting discrimination in the landlord-tenant relationship. n24

§ 43.03(b)(1) Federal Law.

§ 43.03(b)(1)(i) Constitutional Limitations.

The primary federal constitutional limitation on discriminatory action is the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The limitations of the Fourteenth Amendment apply only if there is state action. n25 This is clearly met where the government is the landlord, such as in various forms of public housing. n26 Courts have also found state action in private housing that was government-subsidized, n27 but have been split on whether it exists in certain housing programs with other forms of government participation. n28 State action does not exist for most forms of private housing, however, making the equal protection clause inapplicable.

Courts have used a three-level analysis to assess discriminatory actions when state action is present. At the first level, courts have applied strict scrutiny to discrimination involving suspect classes, such as race, or where a fundamental right is implicated. n29 At this level, the usual analysis is whether the restriction is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest. n30 For discriminatory restrictions on semi suspect classifications, such as gender, courts have applied an intermediate standard of review requiring that the regulation be substantially related to an important or significant governmental interest. n31 For most other discriminatory restrictions courts require only that the restriction meet a rationality standard, which requires that the restriction be rationally related to a legitimate governmental purpose. n32

Although the Supreme Court has held that housing is not a fundamental right, n33 the equal protection clause clearly requires heightened scrutiny of discriminatory actions involving suspect and semi suspect classifications. Thus it has been held that the government cannot discriminate for racial reasons in the site selection for public housing. n34 And at least one court has also held that discrimination against families with children infringes on the fundamental right of privacy and therefore is subject to strict scrutiny. n35 Apart from classifications on the basis of suspect or semi suspect classes, courts have generally permitted other forms of discriminatory classifications. n36

Constitutional standards play a rather limited role in anti discrimination efforts. Not only are they inapplicable to private housing discrimination, but the federal Fair Housing Act provides statutory protection against discrimination in public housing. Whereas a constitutional violation requires a showing of intent, n37 the Fair Housing Act is usually interpreted to require only evidence of discriminatory effect. n38

§ 43.03(b)(1)(ii) Section 1982.

Section 1982 of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 provides that "[a]ll citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property." n39 Although § 1982 was long thought to apply only to government action, in 1968 the Supreme Court held in Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co. n40 that it applied to private discrimination in the sale and rental of homes. n41 Since that time, § 1982 has been the basis for a number of challenges to racial discrimination in housing rentals. n42

The major limitation of a § 1982 action is that it applies only to racial discrimination and does not prohibit discrimination on other grounds, such as sex, handicap, or religion. n43 It does not cover some of the acts prohibited by the Fair Housing Act, such as discrimination in advertising. Nor does it provide the same enforcement provisions as the Fair Housing Act, including the assistance of the federal government.

Where applicable, however, § 1982 provides broader protection than the Fair Housing Act and many state statutes. First, unlike the Fair Housing Act and some state statutes, § 1982 applies to commercial as well as to residential real property. n44 Second, it is not subject to the exceptions found in the Fair Housing Act and state statutes, such as for owner occupied dwellings. n45 Finally, prior to the 1988 amendment of the Fair Housing Act, courts often held that § 1982 had a longer statute of limitations than the Fair Housing Act and was not subject to the punitive damage cap found in the Fair Housing Act. n46

For these reasons § 1982 has played an important role against racial discrimination. Although in many cases of racial discrimination both § 1982 and the Fair Housing Act apply, n47 there have been a number of cases where § 1982 provided protection beyond that found in the Fair Housing Act. For example, courts have held landlords liable under § 1982 when the landlords fell within an exemption to the Fair Housing Act. n48 Courts have also found § 1982 violations when Fair Housing Act claims were time barred, n49 and they have granted punitive damages beyond those permitted under the Fair Housing Act. n50 However, the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act greatly reduced the relative advantages of § 1982 by lengthening the statute of limitations for Fair Housing Act claims to two years and by removing the cap on punitive damages. n51

It should be noted, in connection with this discussion of § 1982, that courts have tended to give a fairly broad reading to the concept of race. The meaning of "race" arose in a pair of 1987 decisions by the United States Supreme Court. In the first of these, Saint Francis College v. Al Khazraji, n52 the Court considered whether individuals of Arabic descent were entitled to protections against discrimination under § 1981. That statute gives "persons within the jurisdiction of the United States" the same legal protections with respect to contracts and some other matters "as is enjoyed by white citizens." n53 the Court said:

> Based on the history of § 1981, we have little trouble in concluding that Congress intended to protect from discrimination identifiable classes of persons who are subjected to intentional discrimination solely because of their ancestry or ethnic characteristics. Such discrimination is racial discrimination that Congress intended § 1981 to forbid, whether or not it would be classified as racial in terms of modern scientific theory. n54

Subsequently, the Court considered whether the protections of § 1982, which is also one of the post-Civil War civil rights statutes, applied to Jews. As noted above, Section 1982 provides all citizens of the United States with the same right to "inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property" "as is enjoyed by white citizens." n55 In*Shaare TeFila Congregation v. Cobb*, n56 the Court referred to the Saint Francis College decision and rejected the contention that Jews could not assert a claim under § 1982. The Court stated: "It is evident from the legislative history of the section reviewed in Saint Francis College, a review that we need not repeat here, that Jews and Arabs were among the peoples then considered to be distinct races and hence within the protection of the statute." n57

The Supreme Court has thus given a broad reading to the coverage of § 1982. And it should be noted that lower courts have held that whites have standing to sue under § 1982 for harms suffered as a result of discrimination against non whites. n58

Courts have also given a broad construction to § 1982 with respect to the types of discriminatory conduct that it prohibits. Not only does it prohibit refusals to rent, n59 it also prohibits refusals to negotiate, n60 and discrimination in the terms, conditions, and services of a lease. n61 Landlord toleration of racial harassment of one tenant by another has also been held actionable under § 1982. n62 However, § 1982 does not reach some conduct, such as discriminatory advertising, that is covered by the Fair Housing Act. n63

Most courts have applied the same standards for establishing a prima facie case for a § 1982 violation that they apply to establishing a prima facie case for Fair Housing Act violations, at least in disparate treatment cases. n64

§ 43.03(b)(1)(iii) The Fair Housing Act.

The Fair Housing Act of 1968 n65 is comprehensive anti discrimination legislation that forms the primary basis for prohibiting discrimination in housing sales and rentals. As originally enacted in 1968, the statute prohibited discrimination on the basis of race, religion, national origin, and color. The statute was expanded in 1974 to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex. n66 It was amended in 1988 to prohibit discrimination on the basis of handicap and familial status. n67

Like § 1982, the Fair Housing Act applies to private actions and therefore reaches the broad spectrum of landlord-tenant relationships. The Act specifies a number of prohibited acts, including the refusal to rent or negotiate a rental; discrimination in the terms, conditions, or privileges of a lease; discrimination in the provision of services; discrimination in the content of advertising; and discrimination in representing to any person that any dwelling is not available for inspection, sale, or rental when such dwelling is, in fact, so available. n68 The Act also prohibits various types of against handicapped tenants. n69

Although the coverage of the Fair Housing Act is more expansive, in some respects, than the equal protection clause or § 1982, it is also subject to several important limitations. First, it applies only to "dwellings," which the Act defines as buildings intended for occupancy as a residence. n70 Second, even dwellings are subject to several exemptions, including a single family house rented without the aid of a broker. n71 Neither does the legislation apply to a "Mrs. Murphy" boarding house situation, in which rooms or units in dwellings are occupied or intended to be occupied by no more than four families, and in which the owner occupies one of the living quarters as his or her own residence. n72

The Fair Housing Act provides three basic enforcement methods for violations of the act. First, an aggrieved party may file a complaint with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to seek administrative abatement of the alleged discriminatory practice. n73 Second, an aggrieved party may file a complaint in local, state, or federal court without first seeking administrative relief. n74 Civil remedies under the Fair Housing Act include actual damages, punitive damages, and injunctive relief. Finally, the Attorney General may bring a federal suit when there has been a "pattern or practice" of discrimination or when a denial of rights "raises an issue of general public importance." n75

§ 43.03(b)(2) State Statutes.

All states and the District of Columbia have enacted some form of fair housing legislation that prohibits discrimination in leases of property. In many instances these state provisions preceded the federal Fair Housing Act--some of them were enacted in the 1950s and early 1960s. n76 In some instances, states responded to and were influenced by the federal legislation. n77

Although these statutes vary, they share some features common to each other and to the federal Fair Housing Act. First, all of the statutes prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, religion, national origin, and sex. n78 This essentially reflects the protected classes under the Fair Housing Act after 1974 and before the 1988 amendments. Second, the statutes generally prohibit types of conduct comparable to those prohibited under the Fair Housing Act, including discriminatory refusal to rent or negotiate; discrimination in the terms, conditions or privileges of services; and discrimination in advertising for housing. n79

Although varying in details, state enforcement schemes resemble the federal scheme and each other in several respects. First, all states provide for some administrative mechanism to receive, investigate, and possibly resolve discrimination complaints. n80 In most states this includes a commission or some other body to conduct hearings and order appropriate relief. n81 Second, states typically provide for a private civil action for alleged discriminatory conduct. n82

Some state statutes include protections that go beyond those of the Fair Housing Act. Some state statutes, unlike the Fair Housing Act, extend coverage to all real property and not just to residential dwellings. n83 Some jurisdictions have extended protection to classes beyond those covered by the federal scheme. Thus, individual jurisdictions have legislated prohibitions against discrimination based on classifications such as marital status, n84 age, n85 sexual orientation, n86 military status, n87 source of income, n88 and personal appearance. n89 In addition, some jurisdictions include more descriptive language relating to disabilities than does the federal legislation. n90

It should be noted that provisions of a state's constitution may also be relevant to housing discrimination. For example, the Illinois Constitution includes a provision stating, in part, that "[a]ll persons with a physical or mental handicap shall be free from discrimination in the sale or rental of property." n91

§ 43.03(b)(3) Local Law.

In addition to state regulation, a large number of local governments, both municipalities and counties, have enacted fair housing legislation. n92 The coverage of most local laws is similar in scope to those of states, but in some instances the local laws have expanded the types of protected classes.

§ 43.03(c) Protected Classes.

§ 43.03(c)(1) Race.

Discrimination on the basis of race is at the heart of the Fair Housing Act and other fair housing legislation. It was the original impetus for fair housing legislation. The majority of fair housing cases have involved claims of racial discrimination. Although problems of proof often exist, where racial discrimination has been established, courts have consistently prohibited discrimination on the basis of race in the landlord-tenant context. n93

Although most claims of racial discrimination in reported cases have alleged discrimination against African Americans, some have involved alleged discrimination against Hispanics n94 and Asians. n95 Courts have also held that whites have standing to sue if they have been harmed by discrimination against non whites. n96

And some decisions have held that whites have standing to sue under the Fair Housing Act if they themselves have been discriminated against on the basis of race. n97

As discussed in an earlier section of this chapter, the United States Supreme Court has given a broad construction to "race" for purposes of the application of § 1982. n98 In particular, the Court has indicated that the meaning of race is broad enough to include all "identifiable classes of persons who are subjected to intentional discrimination solely because of their ancestry or ethnic characteristics." n99 Before the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Francis College v. Al Khazraji, n100 and Shaare TeFila Congregation v. Cobb, n101 courts had generally held that § 1982 did not apply to claims relating to national origin, n102 although there had been suggestions to the contrary where there was a racial element to the claim. n103 That changed as a result of the Supreme Court's opinions.

A particularly problematic issue with regard to racial discrimination is whether integration quotas or other race based efforts to integrate housing violate the Fair Housing Act. These race conscious efforts are aimed at racial integration, which is an acknowledged purpose behind the Fair Housing Act. At the same time, however, the selection of tenants based on race seems to violate the clear language of the Act. n104

An early case in which use of such quotas was approved was Otero v. New York City Housing Authority. n105 There, the Second Circuit held that the New York City Housing Authority could use an integration quota that imposed a limit on the percentage of minority tenants. The purpose of the quota was to avoid racial "tipping" -- the point at which the percentage of minority residents in a complex will cause white residents to leave. In upholding the quota, the court emphasized that integration was a primary purpose of fair housing, and therefore such quotas were valid if essential to "promote a racially balanced community" and avoid loss of existing racial integration. n106

Subsequent decisions have generally struck down such quotas, however, suggesting they are subject to strict scrutiny and permitted only where they are temporary and are essential to integration goals. For example, in Williamsburg Fair Housing Committee v. New York City Housing Authority n107 the court held the use of racial quotas invalid, since it was not shown that they were essential to achieve racial balance. Similarly, in Burney v. Housing Authority of Beaver County, n108 a federal district court held that use of quotas to avoid "tipping" violated both the equal protection clause and the Fair Housing Act. Despite the "benign" purpose of the discrimination, the court said it would be subject to strict scrutiny and would be valid only if narrowly tailored to avoid tipping, which it was not. n109

A more recent decision involving race-based housing quotas, United States v. Starrett City Associates, n110 appears to go even further. The court in that case indicated that a "race conscious affirmative action plan does not necessarily violate federal constitutional or statutory provisions." n111 But it also said that a race conscious plan cannot be "ageless in [its] reach into the past, and timeless in [its] ability to affect the future." n112 Such a plan, in order to be valid, "must be temporary in nature with a defined goal as its termination point." n113 The court observed that societal discrimination alone seemed "'insufficient and over expansive'" as the basis for adopting so called 'benign' practices with discriminatory effects 'that work against innocent people,'" n114 Instead, some history of racial discrimination or imbalance within the entity seeking to employ quotas should generally be required. Finally, the court noted that measures designed to increase or ensure minority participation, in the nature of "access" quotas have generally been upheld, while programs designed to maintain integration by limiting minority participation, were of "doubtful validity." n115 In the case before it, the court said that none of these standards had been met. So it struck down a longstanding quota system designed to maintain a balance of 64% white, 22% black, and 8% Hispanic in a housing complex. The court distinguished its previous decision in Otero, stating that the quota there had been temporary and designed to establish an initial racial balance. n116

It appears that use of racial quotas, especially those that operate as a ceiling on minorities, are highly suspect and are not likely to be tolerated. However, courts may be more likely to approve "race conscious" criteria that satisfy the standards referenced in the Starrett City Associates case. n117

§ 43.03(c)(2) National Origin.

Discrimination on the basis of national origin is prohibited under the Fair Housing Act and under all state fair housing provisions. Only a limited number of national origin claims have been brought under the Fair Housing Act, often by people of eastern or middle eastern origin. n118 As noted above, although § 1982 does not expressly apply to claims of discrimination based on national origin, in the Saint Francis College case, n119 the Supreme Court interpreted "race" broadly enough to include what might be viewed as national origin claims. n120

§ 43.03(c)(3) Religion.

Religious discrimination has been prohibited under the Fair Housing Act since its inception in 1968 and is currently included in all state statutes. Despite this longstanding and widespread status, there have been few reported cases claiming religious discrimination.

Even when a housing decision imposes a burden on religious practice, it will not necessarily violate the Fair Housing Act. For example, some New York tenants were unsuccessful in claiming that their landlord violated the Fair Housing Act, and state and city prohibitions against religious discrimination, by installing electric door locks on the front entrances to their building. As orthodox Jews, the tenants were prohibited from breaking electrical circuits on the Sabbath and on religious holidays. The court held for the landlord. It observed: "Undoubtedly, the act of installing electric locks placed an added burden upon the plaintiffs in the exercise of their religious observations. However, merely because an act creates a burden does not, in our pluralistic society, mean that it is a discriminatory act." n121 In this case, the court thought that it was reasonable to assume that the act of installing electric locks was done for the sole purpose of deterring crime, rather than with a discriminatory intent. Moreover, the court did not consider the allegations to be sufficient to establish a prima facie case of discriminatory effect. The inconvenience to the plaintiffs, said the court, was "not of such a nature as to be deemed discriminatory." n122

One important issue in this area is the extent to which an exemption might apply to accommodate the preferences of religious groups. The Fair Housing Act and most comparable state statutes provide an exemption for religious groups or non profit organizations operated or controlled by religious groups. The exemption permits them to limit rentals of property to persons of the same faith, provided that membership is not limited on the basis of race, color, or national origin. n123 Courts have found the exemption to be applicable when a religious body refuses to lease to those outside the faith. n124 However, one case held that the exemption did not apply to a private country club that was involved in renting homes and that required its members to be Catholic. The court held that despite the emphasis on Catholicism, the club itself was not a religious organization. Neither was it controlled by, nor operated in conjunction with, the Catholic Church. Accordingly, it was not entitled to an exemption. n125

A court has also noted that the "existence of the limited exemption for religious organizations demonstrates that charitable agencies not embraced by the exemption are covered by the Act." n126

§ 43.03(c)(4) Sex.

Although not included in the original Fair Housing Act, a prohibition against sex discrimination was added to the Fair Housing Act in 1974. n127 All states with fair housing legislation also prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex.

As with other protected classes, the Fair Housing Act and state statutes protect against sex discrimination in the renting; terms, conditions, and privileges; provision of services; and advertising of rentals. Thus, placing special conditions on women tenants, such as a car ownership requirement, constitutes a discriminatory housing practice. n128 Similarly, a refusal to rent to applicants because of their gender, either male or female, is illegal. n129

The mere reference to gender, however, without some unequal treatment or impact, does not constitute sex discrimination. For example, in Braunstein v. Dwelling Managers, Inc., n130 the court held that a policy that single parents with a child of the same sex received one bedroom apartments, while single parents with a child of the opposite sex received two bedroom apartments, did not violate the Fair Housing Act. Looking to employment cases under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the court held that sex discrimination is premised on disparate treatment of gender. Thus, even though apartment allocations were based on sex distinctions, males and females were treated equally and therefore the policy was not discriminatory. n131

Courts have also rejected sex discrimination claims based on distinctions with an arguably disparate impact on women. In Harris v. Capital Growth Investors, n132 the California Supreme Court held that a landlord's policy of requiring that a tenant have income of three times the rent was not sex discrimination, even though it had a disparate impact on women because of their generally lower incomes. Similarly, in United States v. Aubine, n133 the court held that a landlord's practice of considering only the higher of a married couple's incomes when assessing rent eligibility did not discriminate against women, even though, in most cases, this would result in the woman's income being ignored.

A growing area of sex discrimination claims under the Fair Housing Act and state statutes involves sexual harassment, usually by landlords against women tenants. Initially looking to Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act for guidance, courts have held that sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination under both the Fair Housing Act and state laws. n134

As with employment discrimination, courts have recognized two forms of sexual harassment. One form is where a landlord's actions or remarks create "an intimidating, hostile or offensive environment." n135 The essence of this type of sexual harassment involves landlord actions that are pervasive and persistent and that make "the tenancy burdensome and significantly less desirable than if the harassment were not occurring." n136 Courts have found this to exist when a landlord made repeated offensive comments of a sexual nature to the tenant, n137 and where several offensive comments were made, together with a death threat. n138 However, one court has held that two requests for sexual favors in three months did not create a "hostile environment." n139 And another court held that a one time incident of touching and requested sexual favors did not create a hostile environment. n140

The second type of sexual harassment is "conditioned tenancy" or quid pro quo situation, in which a landlord conditions the tenancy or terms of the tenancy on sexual favors. n141 For example, in Shellhammer v. Lewallen, n142 the court held that a landlord's eviction of a tenant for refusing sexual favors constituted sexual harassment and therefore sex discrimination. Similarly, in Grieger v. Sheets, n143 the court held that conditioning a term or privilege, such as a landlord's obligation to make repairs, on sexual favors constitutes sexual harassment.

Several state statutes include specific provisions regarding sexual harassment. For example, a Minnesota statute defines sexual harassment to include "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, sexually motivated physical contact or other verbal or physical conduct or communication" when "submission to that conduct or communication is made a term or condition ... of housing," when "submission to or rejection of that conduct or communication by an individual is used as a factor in decisions affecting that individual's ... housing," or when "that conduct or communication has the purpose or effect of substantially interfering with an individual's ... housing, or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive ... housing environment." n144 Several other state statutes similarly include specific prohibitions against sexual harassment in housing. n145

§ 43.03(c)(5) Familial Status.

The 1970s and 1980s saw a rapid rise in restrictions prohibiting children in rental units. The reasons for such restrictions varied, but studies indicated that landlords could charge higher rents for adult only units because of their desirability to many tenants. One commentator's summary of an Atlanta study said that "[v]acancy rates were lower, rents higher, and waiting lists longer for adults only units than for those who accepted children." n146 Whatever its benefit to landlords, the trend posed considerable problems for families with children.

Although families with children had been given protection against discrimination in public housing and in federally-subsidized housing prior to 1988, it was not until that year that the Fair Housing Act was amended to prohibit discrimination against families with children in the private housing arena. n147 But protection was available in some states before 1988, usually on the basis of express statutory provisions. n148

During this period, California was the leading state in extending protection to families with children. Although California did not have a specific provision prohibiting discrimination against families with children, in Marina Point Ltd. v. Wolfson n149 the California Supreme Court held that the state's civil rights act prohibited an apartment owner from discriminating against children. The court's view was that the act's reference to specific types of discrimination -- "sex, color, race, religion, ancestry or national origin" -- was only illustrative, and that the act barred all types of arbitrary discrimination. The court held that the landlord could not justify a restriction against children on the basis that children are "noisier, rowdier, more mischievous and more boisterous" than adults, stating that exclusions based on such generalizations were impermissible under the act. n150

However, in the absence of legislative provisions dealing with the matter, other state courts had declined to prohibit discrimination against children. For example, in Department of Civil Rights v. Beznos, n151 the Michigan Court of Appeals held that a prohibition on age discrimination did not prohibit discrimination against children. n152 Similarly, in White Egret Condominium v. Franklin, n153 the Florida Supreme Court held that a condominium could bar minor children from apartments. n154 Both courts were more sympathetic than the California court to the justifications supporting such restrictions, noting that age restrictions were reasonable means to accommodate varying tenant desires. n155

The 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act Amendments responded to this growing national problem by prohibiting discrimination on the basis of familial status. n156 Familial status was defined to refer to one or more individuals under 18 who are domiciled with a parent, a person with legal custody, or with a designee of one of those parties. The protections afforded by the legislation against discrimination on the basis of familial status were also made applicable "to any person who is pregnant or is in the process of securing legal custody of any individual who has not attained the age of 18 years." n157 At the same time, the 1988 amendments provided that the legislation did not limit "the applicability of any reasonable local, State, or Federal restrictions regarding the maximum number of occupants permitted to occupy a dwelling." n158

Claims that landlords violated the familial status provision of the Fair Housing Act have been raised in a number of cases, with varying results. Cases in which such claims have been successful, at least to some extent, include a case in which it was alleged that the landlord refused to rent upper story apartment units to applicants with children; n159 a case in which the tenants alleged that the landlord had engaged in discrimination by prohibiting children from playing outdoors in the grounds immediately adjacent to the tenants' dwellings, but allowed adults to "congregate" there; n160 and a case in which the owners of mobile home parks imposed rules that denied or limited the access of children to recreational facilities and limited their ability to engage in activities, such as bicycle riding, on streets and in common areas. n161

In contrast, some tenants failed in their claim that their landlord's decision to charge more rent based on the number of persons occupying the apartment, when some of the occupants were children, was discriminatory on the basis of familial status. n162 The court was of the view that treating children like adults for this purpose did not constitute impermissible discrimination. And the federal government was unsuccessful in challenging the decision of some landlords to impose a four-person occupancy limit on a small rental house in order to preserve the property's value. n163 The United States Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that the Department of Housing and Urban Development had acted unfairly in requiring the landlords to show a compelling business necessity to justify the occupancy limitation, and it dismissed the discrimination charge. n164

In several cases, courts have recognized that a disparate impact approach can be used to establish a prima facie case that occupancy limits discriminate against families with children. n165 They have also indicated that a landlord may rebut the prima facie case with a showing of business necessity, though there has been disagreement about the extent of the landlord's burden. n166

Some of the case law regarding the "familial status" provision has been concerned with a "housing for older persons" exemption contained in the Fair Housing Act. According to the legislation, "housing for older persons" refers to housing that is operated under approved state or federal programs that is "intended for and solely occupied by persons 62 year of age or older," or, in some instances, housing "intended and operated for occupancy by " by person 55 years of age or older. n167 To qualify for the "55 years of age or older" exemption, at least 80 percent of the occupied units in the housing program must be occupied by at least one person who is 55 years of age or older, the relevant housing facility or community must publish and adheres to policies and procedures that demonstrate the intent to assist elderly persons, and the housing facility or community must comply with rules issued by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for verification of the occupancy. n168

In some cases, housing has not qualified for the exemption. For example, in one case in which the issue arose, fewer than 80% of the units were occupied by qualifying occupants. n169 In another case, the owner failed to show compliance with then-applicable requirements n170 that there be significant facilities and services for seniors. n171

A decision of the United States Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the "housing for older persons" exemption against an equal protection attack. n172 The court employed a rational basis level of equal protection scrutiny, and concluded that the exemption bears a rational relationship to the federal government's legitimate interest in preserving and promoting housing for older persons. The court observed that Congress had reasonably determined that "older persons have a particular need for an affordable 'safe, supportive environment.'" n173 It also concluded that the exemption permits older persons to obtain housing at lower cost and to obtain housing with facilities more appropriate for older persons than for children.

There also have been some challenges to the constitutionality of the familial status provision of the Fair Housing Act. Although the litigants claiming unconstitutionality of the familial status provision have asserted various arguments, including arguments based on privacy, freedom of association, vagueness, equal protection, due process, and the commerce clause, the courts have had little difficulty in upholding the constitutionality of the provision. n174

§ 43.03(c)(6) Age.

In theory, age discrimination in leasing could occur when a landlord imposed minimum or maximum age requirements on tenants or prospective tenants. The Fair Housing Act does not directly prohibit discrimination on the basis of age; however, the prohibition against familial discrimination acts as a form of age protection by prohibiting discrimination against children. n175 However, at the same time, the Fair Housing Act makes it clear that, in some circumstances, housing can be limited to "older persons," which implicates a form of age discrimination. n176

A number of state statutes prohibit some form of age discrimination in housing. n177 By way of example, the Rhode Island statute includes a definition of "age" that refers to "anyone over the age of eighteen." n178 This presumably means that the age discrimination protections do not extend to children. However, the Rhode Island statute also provides protection against discrimination based on "familial status." n179

§ 43.03(c)(7) Handicap.

In addition to extending protection to families with children, the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act also prohibited discrimination on the basis of "handicap." n180 By way of definition, the Act states:

> "Handicap" means, with respect to a person"--
>
> (1) a physical or mental impairment which substantially limits one or more of such person's major life activities,
>
> (2) a record of having such an impairment, or
>
> (3) being regarded as having such an impairment,
>
> but such term does not include current, illegal use of or addiction to a controlled substance. n181

HUD regulations provide additional details regarding the meaning of "physical or mental impairment." n182 The following are specifically included:

> (1) Any physiological disorder or condition, cosmetic disfigurement, or anatomical loss affecting one or more of the following body systems: Neurological; musculoskeletal; special sense organs; respiratory, including speech organs; cardiovascular; reproductive; digestive; genito urinary; hemic and lymphatic; skin; and endocrine; or
>
> (2) Any mental or psychological disorder, such as mental retardation, organic brain syndrome, emotional or mental illness, and specific learning disabilities. The term physical or mental impairment includes, but is not limited to, such diseases and conditions as orthopedic, visual, speech and hearing impairments, cerebral palsy, autism, epilepsy, muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, cancer, heart disease, diabetes, Human Immunodeficiency Virus infection, mental retardation, emotional illness, drug addiction (other than addiction caused by current, illegal use of a controlled substance) and alcoholism. n183

HUD regulations have also given a broad reading to the term "impairment," and have included "physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities only as a result of the attitudes of others toward such impairment." n184 The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that this provision was applicable to individuals who were involved in an alcohol and drug rehabilitation program. n185

Several courts have held that the Fair Housing Act protects elderly individuals with various physical or mental impairments. n186

As indicated above, the HUD regulations include AIDS as a handicap warranting protection under the Fair Housing Act. n187 Although the Fair Housing Act provides that housing can be denied if a health or safety threat is posed, n188 there is some authority for the proposition that persons with AIDS do not present such a threat. n189

In addition to the general forms of prohibited conduct under the Fair Housing Act, such as refusing to rent and discrimination in the terms, conditions and provision of services, the legislation gives a more detailed description of prohibited conduct against the handicapped. n190 In particular, it requires that landlords be willing to make reasonable modifications of the dwelling, at the expense of the tenant, if such modifications are necessary for the enjoyment by the tenant. n191 The landlord is, however, permitted to "condition permission for a modification on the renter agreeing to restore the interior of the premises to the condition that existed before the modification, reasonable wear and tear excepted." n192

The Fair Housing Act requires the landlord to make "reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices, or services, when such accommodations may be necessary" to afford a handicapped person "equal opportunity to use and enjoy a dwelling." n193 It also requires that new construction must meet various design standards set out in the Act that will create more accessible and usable facilities for handicapped tenants. n194

The majority of the states also prohibit discrimination on the basis of handicap in housing. Most of these statutes predated the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act. Prior to 1988, then, state legislation provided the primary source of protection in this area. n195

§ 43.03(c)(8) Marital Status.

Landlords have sometimes engaged in discrimination on the basis of marital status, such as refusing to rent to unwed mothers, divorced people, or unmarried couples. The Fair Housing Act does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of marital status as such. Although the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act added protection against discrimination on the basis of familial status, the definition of "familial status" refers to one or more individuals (who have not attained the age of 18 years) being domiciled with --

(1) a parent or another person having legal custody of such individual or individuals; or

(2) the designee of such parent or other person having such custody, with the written permission of such parent or other person. n196

This language of the Act, then, does not focus on situations involving discrimination against unwed mothers, divorced people, or unmarried couples.

However, many states and the District of Columbia prohibit discrimination on the basis of marital status. n197 The Illinois legislation defines "marital status" to be "the legal status of being married, single, separated, divorced or widowed." n198 This would appear to be the common-sense meaning of the term.

Courts have held that protections against discrimination under the label of marital status also apply to two single people of the same gender. n199 However, the prohibition has been held not to apply to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. n200 Of course, some state statutes prohibit discrimination on that basis as well.

The primary issue regarding a prohibition against discrimination on the basis of marital status is whether it applies to cohabitation of unmarried couples. Courts have been divided on the issue. For example, in State of Minnesota v. French, n201 the Minnesota Supreme Court held that the state's policy against fornication and in favor of marriage supported an interpretation of the term that did not include unmarried couples. n202 Courts in other states have taken a similar position. n203

A number of courts have concluded that marital status provisions prohibit discrimination against unmarried couples. n204 For example, in Foreman v. Anchorage Equal Protection Commission n205 the Alaska Supreme Court held that the plain meaning of the statute would appear to include unmarried couples. n206 A similar interpretation was given in Donahue v. Fair Employment and Housing Commission, n207 in which the California Court of Appeals held that a California statute prohibiting discrimination on the basis of marital status extended to cohabitation by unmarried couples. n208 The court based this conclusion, in part, on the plain meaning of the term, the absence of criminal penalties for cohabitation, and legislative history. n209 But the court also concluded that the landlords in question were exempt from liability because their refusal to rent was based on sincerely held religious beliefs protected by the California Constitution. n210 Conflicts between the landlord's right to free exercise of religion and statutory prohibitions against discrimination on the basis of marital status have been difficult for courts to resolve. n211

The Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 n212 had begun to figure into some cases involving landlord free exercise claims. n213 But the United States Supreme Court invalidated the legislation in 1997. n214

§ 43.03(c)(9) Sexual Orientation.

Although the Fair Housing Act does not extend anti-discrimination protection to sexual orientation, the District of Columbia and a growing number of states and units of local government have done so. n215

Statutory provisions relating to marital status have been found not to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. n216 However, a lower California court has held a landlord's refusal to rent on the basis of sexual orientation violated that state's civil rights law. n217 And a New York court declined to enforce a clause in a residential lease that limited occupancy "to the tenant and immediate family of tenant and to no others." n218 In doing so, the court stated:

In the housing field, these are not ordinary times and "strict adherence to technical concepts of landlord and tenant law" which might have justified eviction in the past is now to be avoided... It is > simply no longer feasible or desirable to mechanically impose eviction for breach of the "immediate family" clause, nor do we think it productive to spend judicial time conjuring up artificial distinctions among various types of sexual, fraternal, and economic relationships. n219

§ 43.03(c)(10) Other.

Some state statutes include protected classes beyond those identified in the previous parts of this subsection. Many states prohibit discrimination on the basis of ancestry, which appears to be comparable to national origin. n220 A few states prohibit discrimination on the basis of source of income. n221 A limited number of states prohibit discrimination against persons receiving public assistance. n222 A few prohibit discrimination on the basis of military status. n223 The District of Columbia legislation includes prohibitions relating to "personal appearance," "gender identity or expression," "family responsibilities," "matriculation," "political affiliation," and "place of residence or business of any individual." n224

It should be noted that, in a 1982 decision, the California Supreme Court stated that the state's Unruh Civil Rights Act, which then prohibited discrimination on the basis of "sex, race, color, religion, ancestry or national origin," n225 was only illustrative of the categories of protected classes, and that the Act bars all arbitrary discrimination by a business establishment. n226 On that basis the court invalidated restrictions against families with children. n227 And lower courts in California have used this reasoning in other cases, including a case involving a refusal to rent an apartment on account of sexual orientation. n228 More recently, however, the California Supreme Court gave a narrower reading to the Unruh Act, as amended, and permitted a landlord to impose minimum income requirements on prospective tenants even though the imposition allegedly had disparate impact on female tenants. n229

§ 43.03(d) Proving Discrimination.

The Fair Housing Act prohibits certain discriminatory conduct "because of race, color, religion, sex, familial status, or national origin." n230 State and local enactments include similar language. The language indicates that a plaintiff must show that the landlord's action was "because of" one of the listed reasons.

Although rare, sometimes landlords have admitted their intent to discriminate against a protected class in the legal proceedings themselves. n231 More common are instances in which extrajudicial statements indicate a discriminatory motive or in which landlords have instructed managers to discriminate. n232 Because landlords typically deny having made such statements, the issue often turns on the credibility of the witnesses.

Direct evidence of discriminatory intent can also be established by policies or rules that, on their face, discriminate against a protected class. For example, rules stating that female tenants must have a car or that the landlord will not consider alimony or child support payments for female applicants for purposes of financial qualification, obviously treat women differently from men. They are discriminatory. n233

But proof of discriminatory intent is often not so easy to produce. Landlords can hide discriminatory intent behind neutral-seeming facades. And a landlord might have several motives for a particular action, only one of which involves discriminatory intent. Finally, a landlord's action might not have any discriminatory intent but could still result in a disparate impact, with a discriminatory effect. n234

Courts have been sensitive to these concerns, often noting the difficulty or impossibility of proving subjective intent or motive. n235 They have responded by articulating standards of proof of discrimination, primarily utilizing standards established by the Supreme Court for analyzing employment discrimination claims under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The following sections will discuss these standards.

§ 43.03(d)(1) The Plaintiff's Burden of Proof.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i) The Fair Housing Act.

The Supreme Court has not decided a Fair Housing Act case involving a burden of proof issue, and therefore has not directly addressed the standard of proof for establishing a violation. The Court has, however, decided several important cases involving employment discrimination under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. And the language of Title VII resembles the Fair Housing Act's prohibition. Thus, Title VII prohibits employers from taking certain actions relating to employees "because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin." n236 Lower courts have consistently applied the Supreme Court standards for Title VII cases to Fair Housing Act claims. n237

In deciding employment discrimination cases under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the Supreme Court has articulated two general theories that lower courts have applied to the Fair Housing Act cases. First, for a case involving the rejection of an individual applicant, the Court has articulated a "disparate treatment" theory. Second, where a rule or regulation results in a statistical impact against a protected class, the Court has applied a "disparate impact" theory.

Lower courts have generally applied some form of these two theories in deciding Fair Housing Act cases. They have not always articulated them as such, and in some instances courts have unnecessarily mixed the theories. Nevertheless, the theories reflect the basic analytical approaches courts typically take. The next two subsections will discuss each of these theories and their applicability to housing discrimination cases. n238

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(A) Disparate Treatment.

Most Fair Housing Act cases involve rejection of, or discrimination against, an individual applicant. Most of the cases, then, are disparate treatment cases. The Supreme Court first identified the test for this type of discrimination, in the employment context, in the 1973 case of McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green. n239 The case involved the rejection of an individual job applicant. The Court noted that the case was not one in which a rule imposed a statistical impact on a certain group, but rather was one in which there was an instance of a single applicant being rejected, allegedly for discriminatory reasons. In such a case, the appropriate standard was not one of "disparate impact" identified two years earlier in Griggs v. Duke Power Co, n240 but one of actual disparate treatment. n241

In establishing a standard, the Court noted that the essence of the claim was one of discriminatory intent on the part of the employer. The Court recognized the difficulty in proving subjective intent, and therefore said that a plaintiff could establish a prima facie case by showing:

1 - That the plaintiff belonged to a protected class;

2 - That the plaintiff applied for and was qualified for the job;

3 - That the plaintiff was rejected;

4 - That the position remained open, and the employer continued to seek applications from persons with the plaintiff's qualifications. n242

The Court said that, if these elements of a prima facie case were established, the burden would shift to the defendant "to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection." n243 If the defendant meets that burden, the plaintiff must then be given an opportunity to prove that the defendant's asserted rationale was only a pretext. n244

Lower courts have consistently held that this same three part burden of proof formula applies to "disparate treatment" cases under the Fair Housing Act. n245 A typical case applying the formula is Asbury v. Broughman, n246 in which a black was denied an apartment. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals began its analysis by noting that the three part McDonnell Douglas burden of proof analysis, as described above, had been widely applied to both the Fair Housing Act and § 1982 claims and supplied the appropriate analytical framework for the case. n247 The court then stated that, to establish her prima facie case, the plaintiff would need to show that

1 - she was a member of a racial minority;

2 - she applied for and was qualified to rent the apartment;

3 - she was denied the opportunity to rent or to inspect or to negotiate for the rental;

4 - the housing opportunity remained available. n248

Courts have noted that this three-part test is premised on the realization that direct proof of discrimination is often hard to obtain. n249 The scheme therefore serves the purpose of allowing the plaintiff to make an initial showing that raises a presumption of discriminatory intent. In most cases this is relatively easy to do.

Similarly, the initial burden of the defendant should not be difficult to meet. The Supreme Court has noted, with regard to employment discrimination cases, that, when the burden shifts to the defendant, he or she is required only to articulate "legitimate, non discriminatory" reasons for his or her actions. The defendant is not required to persuade the court, but rather to offer admissible evidence that raises a genuine issue of fact. n250

This burden shifting approach is designed to "expeditiously and fairly" focus attention on the ultimate issue of intent. n251 As a practical matter, neither the initial prima facie case nor the defendant's burden are difficult to establish, but they serve to focus attention on the intent question. At the third stage, the plaintiff can persuade the court by producing direct evidence of discrimination, or by persuading the court that the defendant's asserted reason is pretextual, or by using a combination of the two. n252

As suggested by the above, the essence of a "disparate treatment" claim is that the plaintiff was the victim of discriminatory intent. n253 Therefore, despite the fact that courts have sometimes indicated that intent is unnecessary for a Fair Housing Act claim, even when discussing disparate treatment claims, n254 the test is in fact designed to establish whether intentional discrimination has occurred. A more accurate characterization is that, under a "disparate treatment" analysis, the plaintiff is not required to prove subjective intent. Instead, intent can be inferred from establishment of the prima facie case and other supporting facts.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(B) Disparate Impact.

The second type of case under the Fair Housing Act is one in which an ostensibly non discriminatory or neutral rule results in a "disparate impact" on a protected class. n255 The Supreme Court first expressed this theory in Griggs v. Duke Power Co., n256 a 1971 employment discrimination case under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. There, the Court held that Title VII of the Act did not require a showing of discriminatory intent, but that a discriminatory "effect" was enough to establish a prima facie case. The Court concluded, in that case, that the prima facie case had been met by a showing that the use of a standardized intelligence test and the requirement of a high school diploma had a statistically disparate impact on racial minorities. Once the prima facie case had been met, the burden shifted to the defendant to justify the practice by a showing of business necessity. n257

Although the United States Supreme Court has not held that the "disparate impact" theory is applicable to cases under the Fair Housing Act, there is widespread agreement among lower federal courts that it is. n258 For example, courts have utilized the theory to analyze decisions, such as zoning-related decisions, that have had a disparate housing impact on racial minorities. n259 In such cases, a substantial majority of federal circuits have held that discriminatory effect alone is enough to establish a prima facie case. n260 significant discussion, the standard is not as likely to apply to situations in the landlord-tenant context as it is in the employment context. The majority of cases in the landlord-tenant context involve individual instances of alleged discrimination that are more suitable to "disparate treatment" analysis. The disparate impact analysis is appropriately applied, however, when a landlord's neutral rule or policy has a disparate impact on a protected class.

Although the "disparate impact" standard, and the consequent "effect" versus "intent" analysis, have generated

An early case in which the disparate impact test was considered and rejected was Boyd v. Lefrak, n261 in which the Second Circuit Court of Appeals held that a rule that tenants have a weekly income equal to 90% of the monthly rental amount for an apartment did not violate either the Fair Housing Act or § 1982 because it was not racially motivated. The plaintiffs had argued that the rule had a disparate impact on minorities, since a relatively larger number of minorities were on public assistance. The court specifically rejected the Griggs "disparate impact" analysis, however, and instead held that it was necessary to show discriminatory intent, which the plaintiff had failed to do. n262 However, a subsequent Second Circuit decision indicated that a showing of discriminatory effect would be enough to establish a prima facie case of discrimination. n263

Other cases also indicated that courts will consider a disparate impact analysis, where appropriate, in the landlord-tenant context. n264

An example is the Fourth Circuit's decision in Betsey v. Turtle Creek Associates. n265 There, the landlord instituted an all adult rental policy, requiring that eviction notices be sent to all tenants with children. The court found that the rule had a "disparate impact" on blacks who were current tenants in the complex, and thus established a prima facie case. n266 The court remanded the case to the district court for a determination of business necessity. n267

A similar analysis was used in Bronson v. Crestwood Lake, n268 in which a federal district court held that a landlord's rental policy barring use of income vouchers and requiring an annual income at least three times the annual rent had a disparate impact on minorities, and established a prima facie case under the Fair Housing Act. The landlord failed to meet its burden of showing that its policy was reasonably necessary to ensure the payment of rent.

Several courts have indicated that a disparate impact analysis could be used to show occupancy limits had a discriminatory impact on families with children. n269

In contrast, the California Supreme Court declined to apply the disparate impact analysis under a state public accommodations statute. n270

§ 43.03(d)(1)(i)(C) Mixed Motives.

Landlords may have several reasons for rejecting or otherwise unfavorably treating a particular tenant, only one of which might be discriminatory. Although discrimination against a tenant on racial or other protected grounds is illegal, courts have noted that landlords can reject tenants for reasons that are not prohibited. n271 When the motives are mixed, the analysis becomes more problematic.

Although there are expressions in cases indicating that, for a plaintiff to succeed, a discriminatory motive must be the sole reason for a housing decision n272 the vast majority of lower court cases decided under both the Fair Housing Act and § 1982 have held that it need only be one reason, or a significant reason, for the decision. n273 As a practical matter, once a discriminatory intent has been found, courts have also found a Fair Housing Act violation.

Although the Supreme Court has not addressed the issue under the Fair Housing Act, in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins it analyzed a "mixed motives" case under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. n274 In that case, a plurality of the Court stated that once a plaintiff proves that gender played a motivating part in the employment decision, the defendant can avoid liability only by proving by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have reached the same decision even if it had not taken gender into account. n275 Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion in essence agreed that such an analysis is appropriate when discriminatory intent is based on direct evidence. n276

Price Waterhouse suggests that a discriminatory purpose need not be the sole reason for a decision in order to have a violation of the Fair Housing Act, but it also suggests that a discriminatory motive does not automatically result in a violation. Several decisions after Price Waterhouse have held that the standard is applicable to claims under the Fair Housing Act. For example, in Miko v. Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities, n277 the Connecticut Supreme Court held that the Price Waterhouse analysis applied when a showing of discrimination was based on direct evidence. The Court held that when direct evidence shows a discriminatory motive, the defendant must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that legitimate reasons would have led to the same decision. The Seventh Circuit had also stated in dictum that Price Waterhouse established a "but for" test for "mixed motive" fair housing cases. n278

In 1991, Congress in effect overruled Price Waterhouse by amending Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act to state that "except as otherwise provided in this title, an unlawful employment practice is established when the complaining party demonstrates that race, color, religion, sex or national origin was a motivating factor for any employment practice, even though other factors also motivated the practice." n279 Because the Title VII analytical framework has so often been adapted to Fair Housing Act cases, it might be wondered whether the 1991 amendment to Title VII should affect mixed-motive cases brought under the Fair Housing Act. But there are indications that the Price Waterhouse approach continues to have vitality in the Fair Housing Act context.

For example, in a 1992 decision, the Chief Administrative Law Judge for the Department of Housing and Urban Development ruled that the Price Waterhouse analysis remains appropriate for mixed-motive cases under the Fair Housing Act. n280 The judge emphasized that Congress amended only the equal employment opportunity provisions in Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, not the Fair Housing Act. He expressed the view that while Congress overruled the specific result in Price Waterhouse, the amendment did not address the Price Waterhouse analysis for determining liability in a mixed motive case involving statutory language that proscribes conduct "because of" certain unlawful factors. n281 And the judge distinguished prior fair housing cases that held that a discriminatory motive need only be a factor for a violation to occur, stating that those cases involved § 1982 claims as well as claims under the Fair Housing Act.

In any event, several post-1991 Fair Housing Act cases have referenced the Price Waterhouse analysis in discussions of the mixed-motive issue. n282

As a practical matter, application of the Price Waterhouse standard probably would not change most results under a disparate treatment test, which involves an analysis of motives. When a finder of fact determines that the plaintiff has established that asserted justifications for a housing decision are pretextual, it is unlikely that it will also conclude that the defendant would have made the same housing decision in any event. The Price Waterhouse analysis would appear to be most relevant in rare situations in which discriminatory intent is based on direct evidence, such as statements or admissions, but there is also objective evidence that the tenant would not have qualified for the tenancy in any event.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(ii) Section 1982.

Most courts have held that the McDonnell Douglas standards, including prima facie case standards, apply to § 1982 actions as well as to claims brought under the Fair Housing Act. n283 Courts are divided, however, on whether intent is required for a § 1982 action. Although earlier courts had often said that intent was unnecessary, n284 more recent cases have pointed to the Supreme Court's decision in General Building Contracts Association v. Pennsylvania, n285 as indicating intent is required. n286 This arguably would preclude a "disparate impact" claim under § 1982, since it is based on effect rather than intent. It does not affect the more common "disparate treatment" test, however, which is designed to establish discriminatory intent.

§ 43.03(d)(1)(iii) State Law.

State courts have generally applied the analysis used in Fair Housing Act cases to actions brought under state fair housing statutes. Thus, state courts typically apply the McDonnell Douglas three-part burden analysis, including its four-part standard for establishing a prima facie case. In doing so they have at times noted the similarity of the statutes as a rationale for using a comparable analysis. At least one decision has applied the Price Waterhouse analysis to a mixed-motive case. n287

State courts do sometimes depart from the federal analysis, based on the particular characteristics of the state statute. For example, a North Carolina court required that racial discrimination be a landlord's sole motive in order to establish a discriminatory housing practice, noting the statutory use of the term "sole." n288 The California Supreme Court also declined to apply a disparate impact analysis to discrimination under the Unruh Civil Rights Act, noting not only conflicts among differing federal court decisions, but also the different nature of the state statute. n289

§ 43.03(d)(2) Evidence of Discrimination.

As noted above, the three part McDonnell Douglas analysis is primarily a means of focusing on the ultimate question of discriminatory intent. In most instances, a Fair Housing Act case ultimately turns on whether the plaintiff can establish direct evidence of discrimination or convince the court that the defendant's asserted justifications are pretextual.

One common type of evidence in racial discrimination cases is evidence resulting from the use of testers. n290 In this context, testers are people sent to "test" whether a landlord is willing to rent an apartment. They are typically whites who are sent to an apartment after a black applicant has been rejected, or, more commonly, has been told that the apartment is unavailable. The tester will pose as an interested applicant with a background and qualifications comparable to the rejected minority applicant. n291

Testers play several important roles in housing discrimination cases. First, a landlord's willingness to rent to a tester helps establish the fourth element for a disparate treatment prima facie case by showing that the apartment was still available. Second, the tester also helps establish that asserted reasons for rejecting the minority applicant are pretextual, by showing a willingness to rent to someone of a different race but with comparable qualifications.

Courts have not only accepted the evidence from testers and accepted the credibility of their testimony, n292 but have often emphasized the important role that they play in enforcing fair housing legislation. n293 Courts have noted that in addition to establishing violations, they also protect good faith landlords by eliminating false claims of discrimination. n294 For these reasons, courts have rejected attempts to discredit their testimony. n295 Courts have also struck down several state laws that attempted to prohibit the use of testers. n296

In addition to considering evidence resulting from the use of testers, courts have evaluated other types of evidence in determining whether a discriminatory housing practice has occurred. Most relevant are admissions of discrimination or statements indicating an intent to discriminate. In this regard evidence has been introduced that landlords instructed apartment managers not to rent to minorities, n297 or that the landlord made statements that he or she would not do so. n298

Courts have also viewed statistics as significant, not only in establishing a prima facie "disparate impact" case, but also in assessing evidence in disparate treatment cases. Although noting that statistics alone are not enough, they have recognized that a poor track record of renting to minorities is evidence that supports discrimination. n299 This is particularly true when there have been no previous minority tenants. Thus, one court noted that "nothing is as emphatic as zero." n300 Similarly, a strong record of renting to blacks is supportive evidence there was no discriminatory intent. n301

At the same time, however, courts have stated that statistics are not dispositive. Thus, a history of renting to blacks will not necessarily negate other evidence of discrimination, since a landlord might want to limit minority tenants to a certain number. n302

Courts have also indicated that, when evaluating a landlord's justifications for a housing decison, they will scrutinize subjective rationales. n303 Although they have recognized that landlords can legitimately reject a tenant for subjective reasons, such as personality, demeanor, or appearance, n304 they recognize that such reasons can be pretextual and have generally viewed them with skepticism. Thus, courts have rejected or showed skepticism toward defenses that an applicant did not "fit in," n305 was "belligerent appearing," n306 had an offensive odor, n307 or showed animosity in the application process. n308

Courts have said that a landlord can consider factors such as credit, n309 standing in the community, reputation, and age. n310 Thus, an applicant can be rejected for nonpayment of rent at a former residence or negative information about his or her finances. n311 In relying upon such justifications, however, landlords must treat all applicants in a comparable manner. n312 Moreover, a landlord cannot assert such factors without making an attempt to ascertain how they actually would apply to an applicant. n313

As a general matter, courts will also give substantial attention to whether a plaintiff has received similar or different treatment from other applicants. Courts are more willing to accept justifications based on rules or policies applied in an even manner. Conversely, where rules are applied unevenly, there is more likely to be a violation. n314 As noted earlier, testers have played a crucial role in determining whether an applicant is being singled out for discriminatory treatment.

§ 43.03(e) Prohibited Conduct.

§ 43.03(e)(1) Refusal to Rent or Negotiate.

The most basic form of prohibited conduct under the Fair Housing Act, § 1982, and state statutes is the refusal to rent or negotiate a rental. Section 3604(a) of the Fair Housing Act prohibits refusing to rent or negotiate on the basis of a person's protected status. n315 In addition, § 3604(d) prohibits a landlord from representing to any person, on account of his or her protected status, that an available housing unit is unavailable. n316

These provisions are violated, of course, when a landlord directly refuses to rent or negotiate a lease. n317 Courts have emphasized, however, that this prohibition includes not only direct refusals, but also instances in whch a landlord indirectly refuses to negotiate a lease. n318 Perhaps the most typical fair housing violation occurs when a landlord represents to a minority applicant that no vacancies exist when, in fact, they do. When such evidence is established, usually by a tester, courts have held that this constitutes both a refusal to rent under § 3604(a) and a representation of unavailability under § 3604(d). n319

Courts have held that other indirect methods of refusing to negotiate also constitute a violation of § 3604(a). For example, the imposition of burdensome procedures, the use of delaying tactics, and the failure to provide an applicant with necessary and correct information have all been held to constitute refusals to negotiate. n320

"Steering" of prospective applicants has also been held to be a violation of § 3604(a). n321 Steering occurs when a landlord deliberately directs or steers applicants away from some units and toward others. n322 This is often done by not showing particular units or by telling an applicant that no units are available in certain complexes. Although the landlord is willing to rent some unit to the applicant in such situations, courts have appropriately held that this practice violates § 3604(a) when there are some units the landlord is unwilling to rent because of a person's protected status. n323

§ 43.03(e)(2) Terms, Conditions, Privileges, and Provision of Services.

Section 3604(b) of the Fair Housing Act makes it unlawful to discriminate "in the terms, conditions, or privileges of sale or rental of a dwelling, or in the provision of services" because of a person's protected status. n324 Section 1982 has also been held to prohibit discrimination in terms, conditions and services. n325

Courts have found violations of § 3604(b) by the imposition of various terms or conditions that have the effect of making it more difficult to rent the property, such as different security deposit requirements n326 or higher rents. n327 They have also held invalid the imposition of different qualification requirements, such as credit reports n328 or previous lease experience. n329 Courts have emphasized, however, that § 3604(b) is not limited to terms designed to make apartments unavailable, and have held that it also applies to discrimination in the provision of services once a tenancy has commenced, n330 and to discriminatory renewal policies. n331 Section 3604(b) has also been violated when a white tenant was prohibited from having black guests in her apartment. n332 Courts have also held that sexual harassment by a landlord constitutes a violation of § 3604(b) when the terms or conditions of the tenancy are conditioned on sexual favors. n333

§ 43.03(e)(3) Advertising.

Section 3604(c) provides that it is unlawful

> [t]o make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published any notice, statement, or advertisement, with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin, or an intention to make any such preference, limitation, or discrimination. n334

Unlike other forms of prohibited conduct in § 3604, this prohibition on statements and advertising is not subject to exemptions for the rental of a single-family home or for the rental of rooms or units in an owner-occupied dwelling that is occupied or intended to be occupied by no more than four families. n335 Thus, § 3604(c) might be violated by advertising a discriminatory restriction that itself might be exempt under the Act. n336

The language of § 3604(c) prohibits statements expressing preference based on race -- the types of statements that can be used as evidence of discriminatory intent in refusing to rent or negotiate. Although courts generally have not used a violation of this provision as a sole basis for liability under the Fair Housing Act, they have noted that the making of such statements constitutes a violation of § 3604(c). n337

Some litigants have contended that enforcement of the advertising provisions of § 3604(c) violates the free speech guaranty of the First Amendment. But courts generally have rejected those claims, emphasizing the commercial character of the speech.

For example, in Ragin v. New York Times Co., n338 the Second Circuit held that discriminatory advertising is outside the protection of the First Amendment. The court relied on Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Human Relations Commission, n339 in which the Supreme Court rejected a First Amendment challenge to a Pittsburgh ordinance that prohibited any advertisement involving sex discrimination. In that decision the Supreme Court held that the advertising related to illegal activity, and was therefore unprotected commercial speech. n340 The Second Circuit in Ragin reasoned that a comparable analysis applied to discriminatory housing advertising, which is illegal under the Fair Housing Act. n341 The court also stated that it was not circular to determine the speech's illegality by reference to the statute under challenge, since Congress clearly had power to prohibit discriminatory housing advertisements. n342

The Sixth Circuit, however, in Housing Opportunities Made Equal, Inc. v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., n343 held that such speech was protected in some circumstances. That case involved a Fair Housing Act challenge to real estate advertising in a newspaper by different advertisers over a twenty year period that, in almost every instance, pictured only white human models. The court concluded that a complaint alleging a violation of section 3604(c) based on the single publication of an advertisement that used a small number of all white models does not, without more, state a cognizable claim under section 3604(c). It also rejected the plaintiff's contention that the aggregate message created and sent by the publication of multiple advertisements violates section 3604(c) notwithstanding the legality of each advertisement. In this connection, the court noted that the plaintiff was not attacking "an advertisement, or a message derived by an ordinary reader from a particular advertisement, but a message separate from and incidental to the individually placed advertisements." n344 The court was of the view that the claim went beyond the language of the Fair Housing Act. It also thought that the claim suffered from "constitutional infirmity." n345 In this connection, the court observed that commercial speech was at issue, and that the speech was entitled to some constitutional protection. It stated:

> At the outset, we must determine whether the expression is protected by the First Amendment. For commercial speech to come within that provision, it at least must concern lawful activity and not be misleading. Next, we ask whether the asserted governmental interest is substantial. If both inquiries yield positive answers, we must determine whether the regulation directly advances the governmental interest asserted, and whether it is not more extensive than is necessary to serve that interest. n346

In this instance, the court concluded that the speech in question was lawful and not misleading, and that the government interest in avoiding discrimination in housing was substantial. However, the court thought that holding a newspaper liable for the impact of advertising would do little to promote the governmental interest in eradicating housing discrimination, but it would impose significant burdens on publishers. In light of the nominal promotion of the asserted governmental interest and the significant burden imposed upon the press, the court determined that the construction of the Fair Housing Act urged by the plaintiff was "constitutionally infirm." n347

Constitutional issues aside, a court must determine whether a challenged advertisement falls within the prohibitions of the Fair Housing Act. Starting with the Fourth Circuit decision in United States v. Hunter n348 courts have consistently applied an "ordinary reader" test, which states that the statute is violated if an advertisement suggests to an ordinary reader that a particular race is preferred. n349 In that case the court held that an advertisement for an apartment in a "white home" indicated such a preference, and therefore violated § 3604(c). n350

More recent cases have focused on whether advertising that exclusively or predominately uses white models indicates a preference under the ordinary reader test. In Saunders and HOME v. General Services Corp., n351 the court held that the management of apartment complexes engaged in discriminatory advertising when it used no black models in a brochure containing sixty eight photographs. The court applied the "ordinary reader" standard, concluding that a preponderance of the evidence indicated a preference for white residents. n352

In Ragin v. New York Times Co., n353 the Second Circuit recognized that, in certain circumstances, the use of white models might constitute a violation under the ordinary reader test:

> An ad depicting a single model or couple of one race that is run only two or three times would seem, absent some other direct evidence of an intentional racial message, outside Section 3604(c)'s prohibitions as a matter of law. A housing complex that runs ads several times a week for a year depicting numerous white models as consumers and black models as doormen or custodial employees would have difficulty persuading a trier of fact that its ads did not facially indicate a racial preference. It thus seems inevitable that the close questions of liability will involve advertisers that either use a large number of models and/or advertise repetitively. n354

In stating that such advertisements might violate § 3604(c), the court indicated that the statute applied only to individual advertisers and that liability cannot be based on an aggregation of advertisements by different advertisers. n355 This same result was reached in Housing Opportunities Made Equal, Inc. v. Cincinnati Enquirer n356 in which the Sixth

Circuit dismissed a complaint that alleged that a newspaper's twenty-year history of publishing real estate advertisements in which fewer than one percent of the models were non white violated § 3604(c). The court held that the plaintiffs did not show that any advertisement was discriminatory, and that the newspaper was not liable for the possible aggregate message of the advertisements. n357

§ 43.03(e)(4) Intimidation and Interference.

Section 3617 of the Fair Housing Act makes it unlawful to coerce, intimidate, threaten or interfere with any person in the exercise of rights under the Act, on account of the exercise of rights, or on account of having aided or encouraged another person in the exercise of his or her rights. n358 This section has been used in cases outside the landlord-tenant context in which protected classes, usually racial minorities, have been the subject of threats and acts of violence. n359

Most applications of § 3617 to landlord-tenant relationships have involved landlord interference with a person's exercise of rights or interference with the encouragement of the exercise of another's rights. For example, it has been held that § 3617 is violated when an apartment manager is fired for renting to racial minorities, since it constitutes an interference with encouraging another person's exercise of protected rights. n360

Courts have also indicated that threats by a landlord can violate § 3617. For example, in a sexual harassment case, the court noted that § 3617 might be violated by the landlord's threat to shoot a husband if he interfered with the landlord's demand of sexual favors from the wife. n361

§ 43.03(f) Enforcement and Remedies.

§ 43.03(f)(1) The Fair Housing Act.

The Fair Housing Act creates three primary enforcement mechanisms in cases of housing discrimination. First, an "aggrieved party" may file a complaint with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for administrative relief. n362 Second, an aggrieved party may bring a civil suit independent of administrative action. n363 Third, the attorney general may bring a suit where there is a "pattern or practice" of discrimination or where the case is one of general public importance. n364

§ 43.03(f)(1)(i) Administrative Enforcement.

Sections 3610 to 3612 of the Fair Housing Act permit a party to file a complaint with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for administrative relief. As originally enacted, these sections basically provided a mechanism for conciliation of disputes, with any relief being ultimately voluntary. n365 If conciliation efforts were unsuccessful, an aggrieved party's only recourse was to pursue litigation. The 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act significantly strengthened administrative enforcement by authorizing the Department of Housing and Urban Development to institute and prosecute proceedings before an administrative law judge. n366

Under the current provisions, an aggrieved party has one year from the occurrence or termination of a discriminatory housing practice to file a complaint with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. n367 When a complaint has been filed, the Secretary is generally required to investigate the alleged discrimination and complete the investigation within 100 days. The Secretary is to prepare a final investigative report at the end of the investigation, which is to be available to both the complainant and any respondents named in the complaint. n368

The Act provides that if the complaint is made within the jurisdiction of a state or local government agency that has been certified by the Secretary as operating under a fair housing scheme that is "substantially equivalent" to the Fair Housing Act, the Secretary must refer the complaint to the state or local agency. n369 In determining whether to certify a state or local agency, the Secretary is to consider the substantive rights protected by the agency, the procedures the agency follows, the remedies that are available to the agency, and the availability of judicial review. n370 The Secretary is also to consider the current performance and past practices of the agency. n371 When the matter is referred to a certified agency, the Secretary cannot take further action without the consent of the agency, unless the agency fails to initiate proceedings within 30 days, fails to proceed with reasonable promptness after having commenced proceedings, or the Secretary determines that the agency no longer qualifies for certification. n372

Where a complaint is retained by the Secretary, the Act provides that the Secretary is to "engage in conciliation" to the extent that is feasible. n373 Unless a conciliation agreement has been reached, the Secretary is generally required, within 100 days after the filing of the complaint, to determine whether reasonable cause exists to believe that a discriminatory housing practice has occurred or is about to occur. n374 If reasonable cause exists, the Secretary is to "immediately" issue a "charge" on behalf of the aggrieved person for further proceedings under 42 U.S.C. § 3612. n375

Once a charge is filed, § 3612 provides that a complainant, a respondent, or an aggrieved person on whose behalf a complaint has been filed, may elect within twenty days to have the claims decided in a civil action. n376 If such an election is not made, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is to "provide an opportunity for a hearing on the record" with respect to the charge before an administrative law judge. n377 Unless it is impracticable to do so, the hearing is to commence within 120 days of the issuance of a charge, and the administrative law judge is to issue findings of fact and conclusions of law within 60 days after the hearing. n378 If the administrative law judge finds that the respondent has engaged in a discriminatory housing practice, or is about to do so, the judge is to promptly issue an order for such relief as may be appropriate. The relief could include actual damages, injunctive or other equitable relief, and civil penalties. n379 The decision of the administrative law judge is subject to review by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and any party may seek judicial review of the decision. n380

§ 43.03(f)(1)(ii) Civil Action.

As an alternative to administrative relief, the Fair Housing Act has two provisions under which a civil action may be pursued. First, § 3612(a) provides that when a charge has been filed under § 3610, a complainant, a respondent, or an aggrieved party on whose behalf a complaint has been filed, may elect to file a civil action in lieu of an administrative hearing. n381 Second, § 3613 provides that an aggrieved party may altogether bypass efforts at administrative relief under § 3610 and instead bring a civil action in federal district court. Section 3613 further provides that an aggrieved person may commence a civil action whether or not a complaint has been filed under section 3610 and without regard to the status of any such complaint. n382 However, a lawsuit cannot be brought on the discrimination charge if a conciliation agreement has been reached or if an administrative hearing has begun. n383

Prior to the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act, the statute of limitation for commencement of a § 3613 suit was 180 days from the occurrence of the alleged discriminatory housing practice. n384 This resulted in a number of the Fair Housing Act cases being dismissed as time barred. n385 In many cases, however, the plaintiff was still able to proceed with a § 1982 claim, which typically had a longer statute of limitations based on comparable state law. n386 The 1988 amendments lengthened the statute of limitations for commencement of a civil suit to two years. n387

Courts were in some disagreement prior to 1988 with respect to the running of the statute of limitations after administrative relief had been pursued under § 3610. The earlier legislation had provided that an aggrieved party had 180 days to file a complaint with HUD. If HUD had not secured compliance within 30 days of filing the complaint, the party had an additional 30 days to initiate a civil suit. Most courts held that this gave a party 60 additional days from the filing of an administrative complaint, beyond the initial 180 day period, in which to file a lawsuit. Several courts, however, held that filing an administrative complaint did not affect the requirement that a civil action be initiated no later than 180 days from the alleged discriminatory act. n388 Thus, under that interpretation, the statute of limitations for administrative relief and filing a civil suit ran concurrently. The 1988 amendments resolved this issue by providing a two-year statute of limitations for commencing a civil action, and stating that the statute of limitations does not run during the pendency of administrative relief. n389

If the court finds that a discriminatory housing practice has occurred, or is about to occur, it may award both actual and punitive damages, and, where appropriate, injunctive or other relief as well. n390 Actual damages can include recovery for humiliation, emotional distress, and embarrassment. n391 Punitive damages may also be available in cases of housing discrimination. n392 Prior to 1988, there was a $1,000 cap on punitive damages under the Fair Housing Act, although courts sometimes awarded larger amounts pursuant to § 1982. n393 The 1988 amendments removed the cap on punitive damages. A court may also allow the prevailing party reasonable attorney fees and costs. n394

As indicated above, courts may grant injunctive relief or other relief. This includes ordering "such affirmative action as may be appropriate." n395 The granting of a preliminary injunction before trial has been found to be appropriate upon a showing of discrimination, on the theory that irreparable harm is almost certain to occur. n396 One form of injunction that has been employed by courts upon finding a discriminatory refusal to rent is a prohibition against continued refusal to rent. n397 Courts have also ordered broad prohibitions on future discriminatory practices. n398

In addition to enjoining future discriminatory practices, courts have sometimes ordered landlords to implement affirmative programs, such as establishing objective standards and criteria for processing applications n399 conducting a "fair housing seminar" at a shareholder meeting, n400 and placing advertisements in newspapers serving minority communities. n401 Courts have also mandated record keeping to facilitate monitoring of compliance. n402

§ 43.03(f)(1)(iii) Enforcement by the Attorney General.

The third Fair Housing Act enforcement mechanism permits the United States Attorney General to bring a civil action in federal district court. The Attorney General can do so whenever the Attorney General "has reasonable cause to believe that any person or group of persons is engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of the rights granted" by the Fair Housing Act, "or that any group of persons has been denied any of the rights granted" by the Act, and the denial "raises an issue of general public importance." n403

Courts have considered what constitutes a "pattern or practice" for purposes of Act. They have said that the expression was intended to encompass more than a single or isolated event, and that, in order to be actionable, an act must be part of a regular practice or procedure. n404 Thus, if there is no reason to believe there were more incidents, courts have not found a pattern or practice. n405

At the same time, courts have recognized the difficulty of proving repeated violations and have thus looked to other evidence to indicate a pattern or practice. Particularly significant are extrajudicial admissions n406 and instructions to employees to discriminate. n407 These things can strongly suggest that a discriminatory act is part of a larger pattern.

When a pattern or practice is shown, a court may award preventive relief, including permanent or temporary injunctions, n408 and issue other orders necessary to assure full enjoyment of rights protected by the Fair Housing Act. n409 Such relief may include affirmative duties designed to rectify past practices, such as special marketing plans and record-keeping. n410

One issue related to actions brought by the Attorney General is whether the federal district court can award monetary damages to the victims of discrimination. The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals answered that question in the negative. It said that the Attorney General was empowered to seek only equitable remedies. n411 But Congress amended the Fair Housing Act to permit the court to award such other relief as the court deems appropriate in actions brought by the Attorney General, "including monetary damages to persons aggrieved." n412

§ 43.03(f)(2) Section 1982.

Where applicable, § 1982 of the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 generally permits enforcement and remedies that are comparable to enforcement and remedies under the Fair Housing Act. Courts have recognized that, under § 1982, a plaintiff can obtain injunctive relief, compensatory damages, and punitive damages. n413 Prior to the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act, this was particularly important, since, up to that time, the Fair Housing Act had a $1,000 cap on an award of punitive damages. In a number of cases, courts awarded substantial punitive damages under § 1982. n414

Of course, as discussed previously in this chapter, the scope of § 1982 is both broader and narrower than the scope of the Fair Housing Act. n415

§ 43.03(f)(3) State Laws.

Although varying considerably in the details, most states have enforcement mechanisms similar to the federal scheme. Indeed, prior to the 1988 amendments thirty eight states were certified as having "substantially equivalent" procedures. n416

In addition to providing an opportunity to file a civil action, most states provide for some form of administrative procedure to deal with claims of housing discrimination. The government entity that handles the administrative process is often a civil rights or human rights commission that also deals with employment discrimination claims, and other claims of discrimination, in addition to those arising in the housing context. n417 In all such schemes, an aggrieved party may file a complaint with the appropriate commission, triggering administrative action. n418 As with the federal scheme, the commission or appropriate body is empowered to investigate the alleged activity and to provide notice and an opportunity for the respondent to answer. n419 All statutes provide that the commission is to seek conciliation if possible. n420

If the investigation indicates a basis for a violation, the state statutes offer different options. Most provide that the commission can bring an action for relief in civil court. n421 Most statutes also provide for some form of hearing, either by the commission, a panel of the commission, a hearing examiner, or an administrative law judge. n422 Hearing procedures vary, but typically include a right to subpoena and to call witnesses. n423

Various forms of relief are available if the hearing results in a finding that a discriminatory housing practice has occurred. All states with a hearing procedure provide that the commission may issue a "cease and desist," or comparable order, restraining future conduct. n424 Statutes often also provide that affirmative action or relief may be ordered as needed, including ordering the rental of property in question and imposing reporting requirements. n425

Most states also empower the commission to order payment of damages, sometimes specifying that the award includes recovery for humiliation and embarrassment. n426 The commission can also order recovery of attorney fees and costs. n427 Some states permit punitive damages, and some permit the commission to assess civil penalties. n428

State statutes typically provide that an action can be brought in civil court for violation of the state fair housing law. In some states, complainants must seek administrative relief before filing an action. If a charge is not filed, the aggrieved parties may then bring suit in court. In other states, however, as with the federal scheme, the right to bring a suit for discriminatory housing practices is independent of administrative remedies. n429

§ 43.03(g) Practice and Procedure.

§ 43.03(g)(1) Jurisdiction.

The Fair Housing Act includes jurisdictional provisions. Section 3613 states that any aggrieved person may file a lawsuit in an appropriate federal district court or state court. n430 Section 3614 provides that a "pattern or practice" case may be brought in an appropriate federal court. n431 And § 3612 provides that if, after a complaint has been filed with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, a party elects to have a case decided in court, the Attorney General may commence an action in federal district court. n432

§ 43.03(g)(2) Standing.

Standing is a necessary prerequisite for challenging a discriminatory housing practice under federal or state law. Although it is clear that those who have been directly discriminated against have standing to sue under fair housing statutes, standing for others who may want to challenge a discriminatory practice is more problematic. At a minimum, plaintiffs must meet the standing requirements of Article III of the Constitution, which the United States Supreme Court has said requires an "injury in fact." n433 Litigants must meet any other standing requirements related to the applicable statute.

The Supreme Court addressed the basic principles for standing under the Fair Housing Act in a series of three cases. In the first case, Trafficante v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. , n434 the Court held that current tenants of an apartment complex had standing under § 3610 of the Fair Housing Act to challenge their landlord's discriminatory housing practices, even though they themselves were not specifically discriminated against. In that case, the tenants claimed that they had been injured by the loss of the social benefits of living in an integrated community, by the loss of business opportunities that would accrue from living with minorities, and by being stigmatized as residents of a "white ghetto." n435

The Court began its analysis by noting that the definition of "persons aggrieved" under § 3610 was "broad and inclusive." Since complaints by private persons are the primary enforcement mechanism for the Act, the Court concluded that Congress intended to define standing as broadly as Article III of the Constitution permits. Article III requires that there be a palpable injury in fact. n436 The Court held that the alleged injuries, arising out of the loss of benefits from interracial associations, clearly met that standard. n437

In the second case, Gladstone Realtors v. Bellwood, n438 the Court examined whether a town and several individuals residing there had standing to challenge alleged steering by local realty firms, even though they themselves had not been steered. Although the suit had been brought under former § 3612, n439 which did not refer to "aggrieved persons," as did § 3610, the Court held that the legislative history, purpose, and language of § 3612 suggested a construction as broad as § 3610. As such, the alleged injury to the individual residents was very similar to that recognized in Trafficante, in that they had been denied the benefits of associating with racial minorities. n440 The Court held that the town also had standing, based on the injury to the real estate market resulting from the effects discrimination. n441

In the third case, Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, n442 the Court addressed whether black and white "testers," and a civil rights organization that had sponsored them, had standing to sue. The Court began by stating that the sole requirement for standing under § 3612 was the Article III requirement that a plaintiff allege a distinct and palpable injury. n443

The Court considered the standing of the testers. Because a black tester had been rejected for an apartment, the Court held she had standing. However, the Court held that a white tester did not have standing, because he had been offered the apartment. n444 The Court proceeded to hold, however, that both testers had standing in their capacity as residents of the community under the analysis recognized in Gladstone and Trafficante. n445

The Court also held that HOME, the civil rights organization that had sponsored the testers, had standing to sue. The Court found that HOME had alleged an "injury in fact" by claiming that the defendants' racial steering practices had frustrated its efforts to increase equal housing access and had forced it to devote significant resources to combat such practices. n446 The Court did not reach the issue of whether the group had standing to sue for its members.

The three Supreme Court decisions indicate that plaintiffs must meet only minimum injury in fact requirements in order to have standing in Fair Housing Act cases.

Lower courts have followed the Supreme Court's lead. n447 Even so, not every plaintiff will be found to have standing to bring a claim under the Fair Housing Act. For example, in Arkansas ACORN Fair Housing, Inc. v. Greystone Development, Ltd. Co., n448 the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals determined that a fair housing advocacy organization lacked standing to bring a discriminatory advertising lawsuit against a developer. ACORN, the plaintiff, had presented evidence that it had devoted resources to monitoring advertisements of a broad base of housing providers and had worked to counteract the effects of discriminatory advertising. However, the court said that ACORN had presented no facts to quantify the resources that it has expended to counteract the effects of a single, allegedly discriminatory, advertisement by the defendant. The court stated: "Absent specific facts establishing distinct and palpable injuries fairly traceable to [the defendant's] advertisements, ACORN cannot satisfy its burden at the summary judgment stage to establish the injury in fact requirement for standing under the FHA." n449

And in Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, n450 some Yale students were found to lack standing to complain that their university had engaged in discrimination by denying their request to live off campus. The students were Orthodox Jews who objected, on religious grounds, to the co-educational arrangements at Yale's on-campus residence halls, where, subject to two exemptions, all first-year and second-year undergraduates were required to reside. The court concluded that the students' complaint set forth no factual allegations that satisfied the injury in fact element of the standing requirement. It noted that Yale had neither refused to provide residence hall accommodations to the plaintiffs nor denied the plaintiffs rooms in the residence halls. Yale did allow exemptions from its on-campus residency requirements, but the students did not qualify for them. The students argued that Yale should have provided exemptions for them based on religion, but the court was of the view that this would have amounted to an accommodation, and it observed that the "reasonable accommodations" provision of the Act applied only to handicap discrimination claims.

Standing requirements are also relevant to lawsuits brought under § 1982. Courts have tended to employ somewhat relaxed standing requirements in that context, as well. n451

§ 43.03(g)(3) Parties Defendant.

The question of who may be a defendant in a fair housing case is largely determined by the words of the applicable statute. When discrimination occurs with regard to rentals, the defendants have most commonly been landlords. And courts have held that landlords will be liable for the acts of agents under the doctrine of respondeat superior. n452 They have also held that landlords can be liable even where they did not instruct an agent to discriminate and were ignorant of the discriminatory acts. n453 At the same time, however, an apartment manager can be individually liable for discriminatory acts even if done pursuant to the instructions of the landlord. n454

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 8. See Corrigan v. Buckley, 299 F. 899 , appeal dismissed, 271 U.S. 969 (1924) (landlord free to refuse to lease property to individual or group of individuals).

(n2)Footnote 9. See Alsberg v. Lucerne Hotel Co., 92 N.Y.S. 851 (1905) .

(n3)Footnote 10. See Dorsey v. Stuyvesant Town Corp., 87 N.E.2d 541 , cert. denied, 339 U.S. 981, 70 S. Ct. 1019, 94 L. Ed. 1385 (1950) .

(n4)Footnote 11. See Restatement (Second) of Landlord and Tenants § 3.1 (introductory note).

(n5)Footnote 12. See generally 2 Richard Powell on Real Property, § 248[1] (1991).

(n6)Footnote 13. See, e.g., Wilson v. Glenwood Intermountain Properties, Inc., 98 F.3d 590 (10th Cir. 1996) (landlord free to prefer college students over non college students); Ryan v. Ramsey, 936 F. Supp. 417 (S.D. Tex. 1996) ; Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) .

(n7)Footnote 14. See Kramarsky v. Stahl Mtg., 401 N.Y.S.2d 943 (Sup. Ct. 1977) .

(n8)Footnote 15. See 14 A.L.R.2d 153, 158-159 (1950) .

(n9)Footnote 16. See Favors v. Randall, 40 F. Supp. 743 (D.C. Pa. 1941) ; Housing Auth. of Dallas v. Higginbotham, 143 S.W.2d 95 (Tex. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n10)Footnote 17. See Denard v. Housing Auth. of Ft. Smith, 159 S.W.2d 764 (Ark. 1942) .

(n11)Footnote 18. 347 U.S. 483 (1954) .

(n12)Footnote 19. See Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 3-9 (1990).

(n13)Footnote 20. See Rackow v. Illinois Human Rights Comm'n, 504 N.E.2d 1344 (Ill. Ct. App. 1987) (citing 1909 Illinois statute that made exclusion of families with children from housing a crime).

(n14)Footnote 21. See U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1961 Commission on Civil Rights Report 198-99 (1961) (listing 17 states with some form of fair housing legislation).

(n15)Footnote 22. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-3619.

(n16)Footnote 23. See Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968) .

(n17)Footnote 24. For in depth analysis of Fair Housing law issues, see James Kushner, Fair Housing (1983); Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation (1990).

(n18)Footnote 25. See Moose Lodge No. 7 v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163 (1972) ; United States v. Nelson, 277 F.3d 164 (2d. Cir. 2002) ; Ponticelli v. Zurich American Ins. Group, 16 F. Supp. 2d 414 (S.D. N.Y. 1998) .

(n19)Footnote 26. See, e.g., Cole v. Housing Auth. of the City of Newport, 435 F.2d 807 (1st Cir. 1970) .

(n20)Footnote 27. See Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., 672 F.2d 1305 (9th Cir. 1982) ; Male v. Crossroads Assocs., 469 F.2d 616 (2nd Cir. 1972) ; Braunstein v. Dwelling Managers, Inc., 476 F. Supp. 1323, 1328-1331 (S.D. N.Y. 1979) .

(n21)Footnote 28. See Miller v. Hartwood Apts., Ltd., 689 F.2d 1239, 1242-1244 (5th Cir. 1982) ; Jeffries v. Georgia Residential Fin. Auth., 678 F.2d 919 (11th Cir. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 971 (1982) ; Swann v. Gastonia Hous. Auth., 675 F.2d 1342, 1346 (4th Cir. 1982) .

(n22)Footnote 29. See John Nowak and Ronald Rotunda, Constitutional Law § 14.3 (1991).

(n23)Footnote 30. See Grutter v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 306 (2003) ; City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, 473 U.S. 432 (1985) ("suitably tailored" formulation).

(n24)Footnote 31. See Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71 (1971) .

(n25)Footnote 32. See City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, 473 U.S. 432 (1985) ; Male v. Crossroads Assocs., 469 F.2d 616 (2d Cir. 1972) .

(n26)Footnote 33. See Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972) .

(n27)Footnote 34. See Hills v. Gautreaux, 425 U.S. 284 (1976) .

(n28)Footnote 35. See Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., 672 F.2d 1305 (9th Cir. 1982) .

(n29)Footnote 36. See, e.g., Daubner v. Harris, 514 F. Supp. 856 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (preference for performing artists upheld under rational relationship standard); but see Male v. Crossroads Assocs., 469 F.2d 616 (2d Cir. 1972) (refusal to rent to welfare recipients not rationally related to legitimate government interest).

(n30)Footnote 37. See Village of Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp., 429 U.S. 252 (1977) ; Metropolitan Housing Development Corp. v. Village of Arlington Heights, 558 F.2d 1283 (7th Cir. 1977) , cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025 (1978) .

(n31)Footnote 38. See, e.g., Huntington Branch NAACP v. Town of Huntington, 844 F.2d 926 (2nd Cir. 1988) ; Homeowner/Contractor Consultants Inc. v. Ascension Parish Planning & Zoning Commission, 32 F. Supp. 2d 384, 395 (M.D. La. 1999) (violation of Fair Housing Act may be shown either by proof of discriminatory intent or by a showing of significant discriminatory effect); United States v. Lorantffy Care Center, 999 F. Supp. 1037, 1042 (N.D. Ohio 1998) (impermissible discrimination under Fair Housing Act may take two forms: intentional discrimination or discriminatory effect); Schanz v. Village Apartments, 998 F. Supp. 784, 788 (E.D. Mich. 1998) (plaintiff may prove discrimination under FHA by showing (1) discriminatory effect; (2) intentional discrimination; or (3) failure to provide reasonable accommodation). See also David A. Thomas, "Fixing Up Fair Housing Laws: Are We Ready for Reform?" 53 S.C. L. Rev. 7 (2001) (criticizing enactment of original Fair Housing Act on constitutional grounds).

(n32)Footnote 39. 42 U.S.C. § 1982.

(n33)Footnote 40. 392 U.S. 409 (1968) .

(n34)Footnote 41. Id. at 413 .

(n35)Footnote 42. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231 (8th Cir. 1976) ; Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390 (5th Cir. 1981) . See also James Kushner, Fair Housing § 1.02.

(n36)Footnote 43. See Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409, 413 (1968) ; Collins v. Differ, 456 U.S. 1008 (1979) (does not apply to sex discrimination); Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., 672 F.2d 1305, 1308 (9th Cir. 1982) (§ 1982 does not apply to discrimination against family); see also Williamson v. Hampton Mgt. Co., 339 F. Supp. 1146 (N.D. Ill. 1972) (does not apply to sex discrimination).

(n37)Footnote 44. See Phiffer v. Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, 648 F.2d 548 (9th Cir. 1980) .

(n38)Footnote 45. See, e.g., Johnson v. Zaremba, 381 F. Supp. 165 (N.D. Ill. 1973) ; Warren v. Norman Realty Co., 513 F.2d 730 (8th Cir. 1975) ; Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) ; Fred v. Kokinokos, 347 F. Supp. 942 (E.D.N.Y. 1972) .

(n39)Footnote 46. See, e.g., SternJohn v. Kreisler, 238 F. Supp. 2d 1104 (D. Minn. 2003) (Minnesota's six year statute of limitations for personal injury claims applies to § 1982 claims).

(n40)Footnote 47. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231 (8th Cir. 1976) .

(n41)Footnote 48. See, e.g., Warren v. Norman Realty Co., 375 F. Supp. 478 (D. Neb. 1974) , aff'd 513 F.2d 730 (8th Cir. 1975) ; Johnson v. Zaremba, 381 F. Supp. 165 (N.D. Ill. 1973) ; Fred v. Kokinokos, 347 F. Supp. 942 (E.D. N.Y. 1972) ; Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) .

(n42)Footnote 49. See Johnson v. Ganino, 11 EOHC P 13,1701 (N.D. Cal. 1972); James v. Stratford Hill Gen. P'ship, 1 EOHC P 13,532 (M.D. N.C. 1975).

(n43)Footnote 50. See Miller v. Apartments & Homes of N.J., Inc., 646 F.2d 101 (3rd Cir. 1981) (Title VIII $1,000 cap on punitive damages does not apply to § 1982; $25,000 award upheld).

(n44)Footnote 51. See establishment clause.

(n45)Footnote 52. 481 U.S. 604 (1987) .

(n46)Footnote 53. 42 U.S.C. § 1981.

(n47)Footnote 54. 481 U.S. at 613 .

(n48)Footnote 55. 42 U.S.C. § 1982.

(n49)Footnote 56. 481 U.S. 615 (1987) .

(n50)Footnote 57. 481 U.S. at 617 .

(n51)Footnote 58. See Walker v. Pointer, 304 F. Supp. 56 (N.D. Tex. 1970) .

(n52)Footnote 59. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231, 234 (8th Cir. 1976) ; Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390, 397 (5th Cir. 1981) .

(n53)Footnote 60. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1989) .

(n54)Footnote 61. See Concerned Tenants Ass'n of Indian Trails Apts. v. Indian Trails Apts. 496 F. Supp. 522 (N.D. Ill. 1980) .

(n55)Footnote 62. See Bradley v. Carydale Enters., 707 F. Supp. 217 (E.D. Va. 1989) .

(n56)Footnote 63. See Ragin v. The New York Times, 726 F. Supp. 953, 965 (S.D. N.Y. 1989) , aff'd, 923 F.2d 995 (2d Cir. 1991) , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 821, (1991) ; Saunders v. General Servs. Corp., 659 F. Supp. 1042, 1063 (E.D. Va. 1987) .

(n57)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279-1280 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Phiffer v. Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, 648 F.2d 548 (9th Cir. 1980) .

(n58)Footnote 65. 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 775. See David A. Thomas, "Fixing Up Fair Housing Laws: Are We Ready for Reform?" 53 S. C. L. Rev. 7-61 (2001).

(n59)Footnote 66. See Pub. L. 93-383, § 808, 88 Stat. 633.

(n60)Footnote 67. See Pub. L. 100-430, 102 Stat. 1619.

(n61)Footnote 68. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a) (d). See Jancik v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 44 F.3d 553 (7th Cir. 1995) ; Cousins v. Bray 297 F. Supp. 2d 1027 (S.D. Ohio 2003) .

(n62)Footnote 69. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f); see Ryan v. Ramsey 936 F. Supp. 417 (S.D. Tex. 1996) (a person with AIDS is considered handicapped within the meaning of the Fair Housing Act).

(n63)Footnote 70. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(b).

(n64)Footnote 71. 42 U.S.C. § 3603(b)(1).

(n65)Footnote 72. 42 U.S.C. § 3603(b)(2).

(n66)Footnote 73. 42 U.S.C. § 3610. If a state or local statute provides equivalent protection and procedures, then HUD must refer the complaint to the appropriate state or local agency.

(n67)Footnote 74. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 101.22(1). See Mitchell v. Cellone, 389 F.3d 86 (3d Cir. 2004) (dual enforcement scheme of the Fair Housing Act allows aggrieved party to pursue both private and administrative enforcement until such time as either avenue has achieved resolution of the claim).

(n68)Footnote 75. 42 U.S.C. § 3614.

(n69)Footnote 76. See Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 3.5 (1990).

(n70)Footnote 77. See North Carolina Human Relations Council v. Weaver Realty Co., 340 S.E.2d 766 (N.C. App. 1986) (stating that North Carolina Fair Housing legislation was modeled after the federal Fair Housing Act).

(n71)Footnote 78. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 41-1491.14; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46a.

(n72)Footnote 79. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46a.; Va. Code Ann. § 36-96.3.

(n73)Footnote 80. See, e.g., Wis. Stat. Ann. § 101.22(1).

(n74)Footnote 81. See, e.g., Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 368-14.

(n75)Footnote 82. See, e.g., Idaho Code § 67-5908.

(n76)Footnote 83. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 18.80.240; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 46a 58; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 515-3; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1016; Minn. Stat. § 363.03; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 354 A:8; Or. Rev. Stat. § 659.033;S.D. Comp. Laws § 20-13-20.

(n77)Footnote 84. See, e.g., 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 775 5/1-103 & 5/3-102; N.Y. Exec. Law § 296.

(n78)Footnote 85. See e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 37.2502; Mont. Code Ann. § 49-2-305; N.Y. Exec. Law § 296; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-37-4.

(n79)Footnote 86. See, e.g., D.C. Code § 2-1402.21; 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 775 5/1-103 & 5/3-102; Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 151B § 4; N.H. Rev. Stat. § 354-A:8.

(n80)Footnote 87. See e.g., 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/1-103 & 5/3-102; Mass. Gen. L. Ann ch. 151B § 4; N.Y. Exec. Law § 296.

(n81)Footnote 88. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a-64c ("lawful source of income"); Utah Code Ann. § 57-21-5.

(n82)Footnote 89. See D.C. Code § 2-1402.21. The District of Columbia Code also lists "matriculation," and "political affiliation," as prohibited bases of discrimination. See id.

(n83)Footnote 90. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a-64c (refers to discrimination based on "learning disability or physical or mental disability"); Mont. Code Ann. § 49-2-305 (refers to "physical or mental disability").

(n84)Footnote 91. Ill. Const. Art. 1, § 19.

(n85)Footnote 92. As of 1987, approximately 75 cities had been certified as having substantially equivalent laws, with a number of others not certified. See 52 Fed. Reg. 41, 419 .

(n86)Footnote 93. See, e.g., Fair Housing of Marin v. Combs, 285 F.3d 899 (9th Cir. 2002) ; Janick v. HUD, 44

F.3d 553 (7th Cir. 1995) ; Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390 (5th Cir. 1981) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231(8th Cir. 1976) ; United States v. Lorantffy Care Center, 999 F. Supp. 1037, (N.D. Ohio 1998) .

(n87)Footnote 94. See Jiminez v. Southridge Coop., Section I, Inc., 626 F. Supp. 732 (E.D. N.Y. 1985) .

(n88)Footnote 95. See Wang v. Lake Maxinhall Estates, Inc., 531 F.2d 832 (7th Cir. 1976) .

(n89)Footnote 96. See Wilkey v. Pyramid Constr. Co., 619 F. Supp. 1453 (D. Conn. 1985) .

(n90)Footnote 97. See Jordan v. Khan, 969 F. Supp. 29 (N.D. Ill 1997) (white tenants state race discrimination claim under the Fair Housing Act if denied services provided to tenants of other racial groups); Miller v. Towne Oaks East Apts., 797 F. Supp. 557 (E.D. Tex. 1992) (white tenant who was victim of discriminatory eviction proceeding was entitled to recover damages under the Fair Housing Act).

(n91)Footnote 98. See the discussion on this point in § 43.03(b)(1)(ii) of this chapter.

(n92)Footnote 99. See Saint Francis College v. Al Khazraji, 481 U.S. 604 (1987) ; see also Shaare TeFila Congregation v. Cobb, 481 U.S. 615 (1987) and the discussion in § 43.03(b)(1)(i) of this chapter.

(n93)Footnote 100. 481 U.S. 604 (1987) .

(n94)Footnote 101. 481 U.S. 615 (1987) .

(n95)Footnote 102. See Patel v. Holley House Motels, 483 F. Supp. 374 (S.D. Ala. 1979) .

(n96)Footnote 103. See Khawaja v. Wyatt, 494 F. Supp. 302 (W.D. N.Y. 1980) (§ 1981 action).

(n97)Footnote 104. See generally Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 11.2(2) (1990); Note The Legality of Integration Maintenance Quotas: Fair Housing or Forced Housing? 53 Brooklyn L. Rev. 197 (1989).

(n98)Footnote 105. 484 F.2d 1122 (2d Cir. 1973) .

(n99)Footnote 106. Id. at 1132-1137 ; 1140.

(n100)Footnote 107. 493 F. Supp. 1225 (S.D. N.Y. 1980) .

(n101)Footnote 108. 551 F. Supp. 746 (W.D. Pa. 1982) .

(n102)Footnote 109. Id. at 764 .

(n103)Footnote 110. 840 F.2d 1096 (2d Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 488 U.S. 946 (1988) .

(n104)Footnote 111. 840 F.2d at 1101 .

(n105)Footnote 112. 840 F.2d at 1101 .

(n106)Footnote 113. 840 F.2d at 1101 .

(n107)Footnote 114. 840 F.2d at 1102 .

(n108)Footnote 115. 840 F.2d at 1102 .

(n109)Footnote 116. Id. at 1102-1103 .

(n110)Footnote 117. One court has held that targeting a particular racial mix in such situations is permissible, but the court noted that such a target should not be interpreted as a strict quota. See Jaimes v. Lucas Metro. Hous. Auth., 833 F.2d 1203 (6th Cir. 1987) .

(n111)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Khawaja v. Wyatt, 494 F. Supp. 302 (W.D. N.Y. 1980) ; United States v. Dittmar Co., 1 EOHC P 13,730 (P H) (E.D. Va. 1975). See also Ohana v. 180 Prospect Place Realty Corp., 996 F. Supp. 238 (E.D. N.Y. 1998) (Jewish national origin).

(n112)Footnote 119. Saint Francis College v. Al-Khazraji, 481 U.S. 604 (1987) .

(n113)Footnote 120. See § 43.03(c)(1) above.

(n114)Footnote 121. Siegel v. Blair Hall, Inc., 615 N.Y.S.2d 937, 938 (App. Div. 1994) .

(n115)Footnote 122. Siegel v. Blair Hall, Inc., 615 N.Y.S.2d 937 (App. Div. 1994) .

(n116)Footnote 123. 42 U.S.C. § 3607.

(n117)Footnote 124. See Cowen v. Lily Dale Assembly, 354 N.Y.S.2d 269 (1974) .

(n118)Footnote 125. See United States v. Columbus Country Club, 915 F.2d 877 (3d Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1205 (1991) .

(n119)Footnote 126. See United States v. Hughes Mem. Home, 396 F. Supp. 544, 550 (W.D. Va. 1975) .

(n120)Footnote 127. See Pub. L. 93-383, § 808, 88 Stat. 633.

(n121)Footnote 128. United States v. Reece, 457 F. Supp. 43 (D. Mont. 1978) .

(n122)Footnote 129. See Baumgardner v. HUD , 960 F.2d 572 (6th Cir. 1992) (landlord violated Fair Housing Act when he refused to negotiate for the rental of dwelling unit to a group of males, but had shown the same property to females); cf. Cavalieri Conway v. Butterman & Assoc., 992 F. Supp. 995, 1004 (N.D. Ill. 1998) , aff'd, 172 F.3d 52 (7th Cir. 1999) , cert. denied, 528 U.S. 847, 120 S. Ct. 121, 145 L. Ed. 2d 103 (1999) (female apartment tenant failed to provide direct evidence that refusal of landlord to negotiate new lease resulted from discrimination based on her sex in violation of Fair Housing Act).

(n123)Footnote 130. 476 F. Supp. 1323 (S.D. N.Y. 1979) .

(n124)Footnote 131. Id. at 1327 .

(n125)Footnote 132. 52 Cal. 3d 1142, 278 Cal. Rptr. 614, 805 P.2d 873 (Cal. 1991) .

(n126)Footnote 133. Id. at 1170-1175; 278 Cal. Rptr. at 630-634.

(n127)Footnote 134. See Krueger v. Cuomo, 115 F.3d 487 (7th Cir. 1997) ; Grieger v. Sheets, 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1989) ; Shellhammer v. Lewallen, Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,472 (N.D. Ohio 1983) aff'd without opinion, 770 F.2d 167 (6th Cir. 1985) ; Gnerre v. Massachusetts Comm'n Against Discrimination, 524 N.E.2d 84 (Mass. 1988) ; Chomicki v. Wittekind, 381 N.W.2d 561 (Wis. App. 1985) . See generally Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 11.4(2) (1990).

(n128)Footnote 135. See Grieger v. Sheets, 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1988) ; Shellhammer v. Lewallen, 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,472 (N.D. Ohio 1983), aff'd without opinion, 770 F.2d 167 (6th Cir. 1985) .

(n129)Footnote 136. Shellhammer v. Lewallen, 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,472 at 136 (N.D. Ohio 1983).

(n130)Footnote 137. Gnerre v. Massachusetts Comm'n Against Discrimination, 524 N.E.2d 84 (Mass. 1988) .

(n131)Footnote 138. See Grieger v. Sheets, 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1988) .

(n132)Footnote 139. See Shellhammer v. Lewallan, 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P-H) 15,472 (N.D. Ohio 1983), aff'd without opinion, 770 F.2d 167 (6th Cir. 1985) .

(n133)Footnote 140. DiCenso v. Cisneros, 96 F.3d 1004 (7th Cir. 1996) .

(n134)Footnote 141. See U.S. v. Koch, 352 F. Supp. 2d 970 (D. Neb. 2004) .

(n135)Footnote 142. 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,472 (N.D. Ohio 1983)aff'd without opinion, 770 F.2d 167 (6th Cir. 1985) .

(n136)Footnote 143. 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1988) .

(n137)Footnote 144. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 363A.03.

(n138)Footnote 145. See, e.g., Mich. Comp. Law Ann. § 37.2103; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-02.4-02.

(n139)Footnote 146. Note Why Johnny Can't Rent -- An Examination of Laws Prohibiting Discrimination Against Families in Rental Housing, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 1829, 1836 (1981).

(n140)Footnote 147. See Michael P. Seng, Discrimination Against Families with Children and Handicapped Persons Under the 1988 Amendments to the Fair Housing Act, 22 J. Marshall L. Rev. 541 (1989).

(n141)Footnote 148. See Alaska Stat. § 18.80.200; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1317(A); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-2a; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 5116; 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-102; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, § 6024.

(n142)Footnote 149. 640 P.2d 115 (Cal. 1982) .

(n143)Footnote 150. Id. at 124-129 .

(n144)Footnote 151. 336 N.W.2d 494 (Mich. Ct. App. 1983) .

(n145)Footnote 152. Id. at 496 .

(n146)Footnote 153. 379 So. 2d 346 (Fla. 1979) .

(n147)Footnote 154. Id. at 348 .

(n148)Footnote 155. Id. at 350-351, 336 N.W.2d at 496.

(n149)Footnote 156. Pub. L. No. 100-430, 102 Stat. 1619.

(n150)Footnote 157. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(K).

(n151)Footnote 158. 42 U.S.C. § 3607 (b)(1). See also City of Edmonds v. Oxford House, Inc., 514 U.S. 725,735 n.9 (1995) ("Section 3607(b)(1) makes it plain that, pursuant to local prescriptions on maximum occupancy, landlords legitimately may refuse to stuff large families into small quarters."); Tim Iglesias, "Clarifying the Federal Fair Housing Act's Exemption for Reasonable Occupancy Restrictions." 31 Ford. Urb. L.J. 1211 (Oct. 2004).

(n152)Footnote 159. United States v. Garden Homes Mgmt., Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d 413 (D. N.J. 2001) (issue of fact on the claim precluded summary judgment).

(n153)Footnote 160. Khalil v. Farash Corp., 260 F. Supp.2d 582, (W.D. N.Y. 2003) (summary judgment for landlord denied).

(n154)Footnote 161. U.S. v. Plaza Mobile Estates, 273 F. Supp.2d 1084 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (partial summary judgment for the federal government).

(n155)Footnote 162. Maki v. Laakko, 88 F.3d 361 (6th Cir. 1996) , cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1114 (1997) .

(n156)Footnote 163. Pfaff v. United States HUD, 88 F.3d 739 (9th Cir. 1996) .

(n157)Footnote 164. See Pfaff v. United States HUD, 88 F.3d 739 (9th Cir. 1996) ; cf. Norville v. Department of Human Rights, 792 N.E.2d 825 (Ill. Ct. 2003) (occupancy limit in Illinois statute upheld against claim of familial status discrimination).

(n158)Footnote 165. See Fair Housing Council of Orange County, Inc. v. Ayres 855 F. Supp. 315 (C.D. Cal. 1994) ; U.S. v. Weiss, 847 F. Supp. 819 (D. Nev. 1994) ; Snyder v. Barry Realty, Inc., 953 F. Supp. 217 (N.D. Ill. 1996) but see Hispanics United of DuPage County v. Village of Addison, Ill., 988 F. Supp. 1130 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (expressing disagreement with Snyder).

(n159)Footnote 166. See Fair Housing Council of Orange County, Inc. v. Ayres, 855 F. Supp. 315 (C.D. Cal. 1994) (court adopts "least restrictive means" standard to cases of housing discrimination based on familial status, and concludes that landlord failed to rebut the prima facie case); U.S. v. Weiss, 847 F. Supp. 819 (D. Nev. 1994) (discussing the issue; concluding that landlord demonstrated compelling business justification for its decision); Snyder v. Barry Realty, Inc., 953 F. Supp. 217 (N.D. Ill. 1996) ("in order for the court to grant summary judgment in the instant case, [the landlord] must produce sufficient unrebutted evidence of its business necessity or the [prospective tenants] must unequivocally demonstrate that [the landlord's] non-discriminatory reason is more restrictive than necessary). See also Hispanics United of DuPage County v. Village of Addison, Ill., 988 F. Supp. 1130 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (expressing disagreement with Snyder).

(n160)Footnote 167. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(b)(2).

(n161)Footnote 168. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(b)(2).

(n162)Footnote 169. United States v. Keck, 2 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,673 (W.D. Wash. 1990).

(n163)Footnote 170. The specific requirements at issue were later eliminated from the legislation. See Taylor v. Rancho Santa Barbara, 206 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 874 (2000) (holding that amendment to Fair Housing Act that eliminated a requirement that the housing community provide significant services and facilities for older persons in order to qualify for an exemption allowing discrimination based on familial status did not violate equal protection).

(n164)Footnote 171. See Park Place Home Brokers v. P K Mobile Home Park, 773 F. Supp. 46 (N.D. Ohio 1991) .

(n165)Footnote 172. Taylor v. Rancho Santa Barbara, 206 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 874 (2000) .

(n166)Footnote 173. 206 F.3d at 936 .

(n167)Footnote 174. See Seniors Civil Liberties Ass'n, Inc. v. Kemp, 965 F.2d 1030 (11th Cir. 1992) (per curiam) (rejecting arguments based on the commerce clause, due process, privacy, freedom of association, and vagueness); United States v. Tropic Seas, Inc. 887 F. Supp. 1347 (D. Haw. 1995) (court rejects argument that the Fair Housing Act is void for vagueness, in light of the language of the occupancy limit provision); Park Place Home Brokers v. P K Mobile Home Park, 773 F. Supp. (N.D. Ohio 1991)(court rejects due process and equal protection challenges).

(n168)Footnote 175. See generally Robert G. Schwemm and Michael Allen, "For the Rest of Their Lives: Seniors and the Fair Housing Act." 90 Iowa L. Rev. 121 (Oct. 2004).

(n169)Footnote 176. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(b). This exemption is discussed in § 43.03(c)(5) of this chapter.

(n170)Footnote 177. See e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 37.2502; Mont. Code Ann. § 49-2-305; N.Y. Exec. Law § 296; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-37-4.

(n171)Footnote 178. R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-37-3.

(n172)Footnote 179. R.I. Gen. Laws 34-37-4. Some exemptions are set forth in Alaska Stat. §§ 18.80.10 - 80.145.

(n173)Footnote 180. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604

(n174)Footnote 181. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(h). Although the legislation does not protect current drug users, former drug use presents a different situation. See United States v. Southern Mgmt. Corp., 955 F.2d 914 (4th Cir. 1992) (persons perceived as being drug users or addicts are covered under the Fair Housing Act's definition of handicap if they can demonstrate they are impaired and are not currently using illegal drugs).

(n175)Footnote 182. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 46a.

(n176)Footnote 183. 24 C.F.R. § 100.201.

(n177)Footnote 184. See Ind. Code Ann. § 22-9-1.

(n178)Footnote 185. See U.S. v. Southern Management Corp.,955 F.2d 914, 918 (4th Cir. 1992) .

(n179)Footnote 186. See Association of Relatives & Friends of AIDS Patients v. Regulations & Permits Admin., 740 F. Supp. 95 (D. Puerto Rico 1990) ; see also " K Care" v. Town of Lac du Flambeau, 510 N.W.2d 697 (Wis. App. 1993) (elderly residents of group home requiring assistance with daily living because of disabilities commonly affecting the elderly qualify as handicapped persons under Fair Housing Act).

(n180)Footnote 187. See also Ryan v. Ramsey, 936 F. Supp. 417 (S.D. Tex. 1996) .

(n181)Footnote 188. Iowa Code Ann. §§ 601A.1 - 601A.19.

(n182)Footnote 189. See Baxter v. City of Belleville, Ill., 720 F. Supp. 720 (S.D. Ill.,1989) ; cf. Giebeler v. M & B Associates, 343 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 2003) (landlord must make reasonable accommodation regarding rent payment arrangement of prospective tenant with AIDS, rather that inflexibly apply policy refusing cosigners on the rent).

(n183)Footnote 190. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(3) - (8).

(n184)Footnote 191. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(3)(a).

(n185)Footnote 192. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(3)(a). At least "where it is reasonable to do so." See Ocean Gate Assocs. v. Dopico, 441 N.Y.S.2d 34 (Civ. Ct. 1981) .

(n186)Footnote 193. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(f)(3)(B). See also Shapiro v. Cadman Towers, Inc., 51 F.3d 328 (2d Cir. 1995) (Owner of cooperative apartment, who was afflicted with multiple sclerosis brought action against cooperative complex and president of its board of directors, alleging that the refusal to provide her with immediate indoor parking space violated antidiscrimination provisions of Fair Housing Amendments Act; preliminary injunction ordered in favor of plaintiff); cf., Congdon v. Strine, 854 F. Supp. 355 (E.D. Pa. 1994) (although a handicapped tenant had been unable to reach her apartment without assistance during elevator breakdowns, court found no proof of discriminatory effect based on landlord's elevator policies; neither did court find discriminatory intent).

(n187)Footnote 194. See Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15.

(n188)Footnote 195. See Department of Civil Rights v. Beznos, 336 N.W.2d 494 (Mich. App. 1983) .

(n189)Footnote 196. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(k). "The protections afforded against discrimination on the basis of familial status [also] apply to any person who is pregnant or is in the process of securing legal custody of any individual who has not attained the age of 18 years." Id.

(n190)Footnote 197. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-502; Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15 & 5/3-102; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 151B, § 4; N.Y. Exec. Law § 296; Or. Rev. Stat. 659.033; Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15.

(n191)Footnote 198. 775 Ill. Ann. Stat. 5/1-103(J).

(n192)Footnote 199. See Zahorian v. Russell Fitt Real Estate Agency, 301 A.2d 754, 757 (N.J. 1973) ; Loveland v. Leslie, 583 P.2d 664 (Wash. App. 1978) ; Bachman v. State Div. of Human Rights, 481 N.Y.S.2d 858, 860 (N.Y. App. Div. 1984) .

(n193)Footnote 200. See Avest Seventh Corp. v. Ringelheim, Eq. Opp. Hous. Cases (P H) 16,618 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1981).

(n194)Footnote 201. 460 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. 1990) .

(n195)Footnote 202. Id. at 6-7 .

(n196)Footnote 203. See State v. French, 460 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. Sup. Ct. 1990) ; Mister v. A.R.K. P'ship, 197 Ill. App. 3d 105, 143 Ill. Dec. 166, 553 N.E.2d 1152, 1157 (Ill. App. 1990) , said to have been superseded by statute in Jasniowski v. Rushing, 678 N.E.2d 743 (Ill. Ct. App. 1997) , but Jasniowski was vacated in 685 N.E.2d 622 (Ill. 1997) ; Maryland Comm'n on Human Relations v. Greenbelt Homes, Inc., 49 Md. App. 314, 431 A.2d 745, 747-748 (Md. App. 1981) ; McFadden v. Elma Country Club, 613 P.2d 146, 148 (Wash. App. 1980) ; Hudson View Props. v. Weiss, 450 N.E.2d 234-235 (Ct. App. N.Y. 1983) .

(n197)Footnote 204. See Foreman v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 779 P.2d 1199 (Alaska 1989) ; Donahue v. Fair Employment and Housing Commission, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 32 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991) , review dismissed, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 591, 859 P.2d 671 (Cal. 1993) ; Housing Auth. v. Commission Against Discrimination, 547 N.E.2d 43 (Mass. 1989) .

(n198)Footnote 205. 779 P.2d 1199 (Alaska 1989) .

(n199)Footnote 206. Id. at 1201-1202 .

(n200)Footnote 207. 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 32 (Cal. App. 1991) , review dismissed, 859 P.2d 671 (Cal. 1993) .

(n201)Footnote 208. Id. at 38 .

(n202)Footnote 209. Id. at 36-38 .

(n203)Footnote 210. Id. at 46 .

(n204)Footnote 211. See Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 220 F.3d 1134 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1143 (2001) (lower court ruled that Alaska's antidiscrimination statutes placed a substantial and unjustified burden on the landlords' observation of a central religious belief or practice, and that granting an exception to the landlords did not violate the establishment clause; however, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the landlords' claims were not ripe for review); Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 979 (1994) (ordinance upheld against free exercise claims under federal and state constitutions); Smith v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 913 P.2d 909 (Cal. 1996) , cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1129 (1997) (landlord was charged with violation of discrimination statute and was required to post notices that she had violated the law by refusing to rent to unmarried couples; court rejects the landlord's free exercise claim); Attorney General v. Desilets, 636 N.E.2d 233 (Mass. 1994) (state has burden of establishing that its interest in eliminating housing discrimination against cohabiting couples is strong enough to justify the burden placed on landlord's free exercise of religion; case remanded for such a determination); McCready v. Hoffius, 564 N.W.2d 493 (Mich. Ct. App. 1997) , rev'd, 586 N.W.2d 723 (Mich. 1998) , vacated in part, 593 N.W.2d 545 (Mich. 1999) (landlords refused to rent to unmarried couples, claiming that this would violate their religious beliefs; the Michigan Supreme Court ruled that the landlords' conduct violated the civil rights act, and that requiring landlord compliance with the act would not violate the landlords' right of free exercise of religion; subsequently, however, the Michigan Supreme Court vacated the portion of its opinion dealing with free exercise of religion and remanded for further consideration of the issue); Cooper v. French, 460 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. 1990) (the expression "marital status" is ambiguous; court concludes that the statute does not protect cohabiting couples; also concludes that landlord is entitled to exemption from the antidiscrimination statute because state failed to meet its burden to show a compelling state interest). Cf. County of Dane v. Norman, 497 N.W.2d 714 (Wis. 1993) (landlord's policy of not renting to unmarried people who intend to live together does not violate county antidiscrimination ordinance; landlord's decision is based on conduct, rather than status, of prospective tenants; to the extent the ordinance protects "cohabitants," it is inconsistent with public policy promoting the stability of marriage and family).

(n205)Footnote 212. 42 U.S.C. 2000bb.

(n206)Footnote 213. See Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 979 (1994) , Smith v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 913 P.2d 909 (Cal. 1996) , cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1129 (U.S. 1997) .

(n207)Footnote 214. See City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997) .

(n208)Footnote 215. See e.g., Haw. Rev. Stat. § 368-1; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a 5/1-103 & 5/3-102; Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 151B § 4; 5 Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 4553; N.H. Rev. Stat. § 354-A:8; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46a; R.I. Gen. Laws 34-37-2 ; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4503; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 101.22(1); D.C. Code, § 2-1402.21.

(n209)Footnote 216. See 420 East 80th Co. v. Chin, 455 N.Y.S.2d 42 (Sup. Ct. 1982) (per curiam), aff'd, 468 N.Y.S.2d 9 (App. Div. 1983) .

(n210)Footnote 217. See Hubert v. Williams, 184 Cal. Rptr. 161 (Cal. 1982) .

(n211)Footnote 218. See 420 East 80th Co. v. Chin, 455 N.Y.S.2d 42,43 (Sup. Ct. 1982) (per curiam), aff'd, 468 N.Y.S.2d 9 (App. Div. 1983) (however, the court held against the landlord on another ground).

(n212)Footnote 219. 455 N.Y.S.2d at 44 .

(n213)Footnote 220. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-502; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a 64c.

(n214)Footnote 221. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46a 64c (lawful source of income); Utah Code Ann. § 57-21-5; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 101.22(1). See also Knapp v. Eagle Property Mgmt. Corp., 54 F.3d 1272 (7th Cir. 1995) (interpreted phrase "source of income" under Wisconsin statute as not including section 8 vouchers) and Godinez v. Sullivan Lackey, 52 Ill. App.3d 87 (2004) (declining to follow Knapp).

(n215)Footnote 222. See Minn. Stat. Ann. § 363.03; N.D. Cent. Code § 14-02.4-01.

(n216)Footnote 223. See e.g., 775 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/1-103 & 5/3-102; Mass. Gen. L. Ann ch. 151B § 4; N.Y. Exec.

Law § 296.

(n217)Footnote 224. See D.C. Code § 2-1402.21.

(n218)Footnote 225. See Marina Point Ltd. v. Wolfson, 640 P.2d 115, 120 n.4 (Cal. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858 (1982) The language of the Act was changed to refer to "sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation." See Cal. Civ. Code § 51.

(n219)Footnote 226. See, e.g., Marina Point Ltd. v. Wolfson, 640 P.2d 115, 116-17 (Cal. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858 (1982) .

(n220)Footnote 227. See Marina Point Ltd. v. Wolfson, 640 P.2d 115(Cal. 1982) , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858 (1982)

(n221)Footnote 228. See Hubert v. Williams, 184 Cal. Rptr. 161 (Cal. 1982) .

(n222)Footnote 229. See Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV, 805 P.2d 873 (Cal. 1991) .

(n223)Footnote 230. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a).

(n224)Footnote 231. See, e.g., Oliver v. Shelly, 538 F. Supp. 600 (S.D. Tex. 1982) (admission in deposition).

(n225)Footnote 232. See, e.g., Todd v. Lutz, 2 EOHC (P H) P 13,787 (W.D. Pa. 1976) (instruction to manager); United States v. L & H Land Corp., Inc., 407 F. Supp. 576 (S.D. Fl. 1976) (told white tenants that corporation would not rent to blacks); United States v. Dittmar, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,730 (E.D. Va. 1975) (memorandum to manager not to rent to foreign nationals); Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) (statement).

(n226)Footnote 233. See United States v. Reece, 457 F. Supp. 43 (D. Mont. 1978) .

(n227)Footnote 234. See James Kushner, Fair Housing (1983); Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 3.01 (1990).

(n228)Footnote 235. See, e.g., Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1040 (2d Cir. 1979) .

(n229)Footnote 236. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.

(n230)Footnote 237. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Selden Apartments v. United States Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 785 F.2d 152, 159 (6th Cir. 1986) .

(n231)Footnote 238. For a thorough discussion of these theories as applied to housing discrimination, see Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation §§ 10.2-10.4 (1990).

(n232)Footnote 239. 411 U.S. 792 (1973) .

(n233)Footnote 240. 401 U.S. 424 (1971) .

(n234)Footnote 241. 411 U.S. at 806 .

(n235)Footnote 242. Id. at 802 .

(n236)Footnote 243. 411 U.S. at 802 .

(n237)Footnote 244. 411 U.S. at 804 .

(n238)Footnote 245. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1989) ; Selden Apartments v. United States Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 785 F.2d 152, 159 (6th Cir. 1986) ; Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1038 (2d Cir. 1979) ; Llanos v. Estate of Coehlo, 24 F. Supp. 2d 1052, 1056 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (plaintiffs made out prima facie case of discrimination on the basis of familial status under the Fair Housing Act by showing facially discriminatory rules regarding swimming pool access that treated children, and families with children, differently and less favorably than adults only households; defendants did not assert any reasonable and nondiscriminatory reasons justifying the rules; court granted plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment).

(n239)Footnote 246. 866 F.2d 1276 (10th Cir. 1989) .

(n240)Footnote 247. Id. at 1279 .

(n241)Footnote 248. Id. at 1279-1280 .

(n242)Footnote 249. See, e.g., Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032 (2d Cir. 1979) .

(n243)Footnote 250. Texas Dep't of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 254-255 (1981) .

(n244)Footnote 251. Id.

(n245)Footnote 252. Id. at 254-256 .

(n246)Footnote 253. Texas Dep't of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 253, 101 S. Ct. 1089, 67 L. Ed. 2d 207 (1981) ("The ultimate burden of persuading the trier of fact that the defendant intentionally discriminated against the plaintiff remains at all times with the plaintiff."); see also Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 335 n.15 (1977) (disparate treatment test requires discriminatory motive).

(n247)Footnote 254. See, e.g., Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1038 (2d Cir. 1979) .

(n248)Footnote 255. See generally James Kushner, Fair Housing (1983); Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 10.4 (1990).

(n249)Footnote 256. 401 U.S. 424 (1971) .

(n250)Footnote 257. Id. at 431-432 .

(n251)Footnote 258. See 2922 Sherman Ave. Tenants' Ass'n v. District of Columbia, 444 F.3d 673 (D.C. Cir. 2006) . In that case, the court stated:

> The Supreme Court has yet to consider the availability of disparate impact claims under the FHA. Significantly, however, the FHA's language prohibiting discrimination--"because of ... race ... or national origin"--is identical to Title VII's, and since Griggs, every one of the eleven circuits to have considered the issue has held that the FHA similarly prohibits not only intentional housing discrimination, but also housing actions having a disparate impact.

444 F.3d at 679 . (citing John F. Stanton, The Fair Housing Act and Insurance: An Update and the Question of Disability Discrimination, 31 Hofstra L.Rev. 141, 174 n. 180 (2002)).

(n252)Footnote 259. See, e.g., Keith v. Volpe, 858 F.2d 467 (9th Cir. 1988) ; Huntington Branch NAACP v. Town of Huntington, 844 F.2d 926, 933-934 (2d Cir. 1988) ; Resident Advisory Bd. v. Rizzo, 564 F.2d 126, 147-148 (3d Cir. 1977) ; Metropolitan Hous. Dev. Corp. v. Village of Arlington Heights, 558 F.2d 1283, 1289-90 (7th Cir. 1977) , cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025 (1978) .

(n253)Footnote 260. See, e.g., Huntington Branch NAACP v. Town of Huntington, 844 F.2d 926, 934 (2d Cir. 1988) ; Resident Advisory Board v. Rizzo, 564 F.2d 126, 147-148 (3d Cir. 1977) ; Metropolitan Hous. Dev. Corp. v. Village of Arlington Heights, 558 F.2d 1283, 1289-1290 (7th Cir. 1977) , cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025 (1978) ; United States v. City of Black Jack, 508 F.2d 1179, 1184-1185 (8th Cir. 1974) ; cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1042 (1975) ; see generally Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 10.4 (1990).

(n254)Footnote 261. 509 F.2d 1110 (2d Cir. 1975) .

(n255)Footnote 262. Id. at 114-115.

(n256)Footnote 263. See Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1038 (2d Cir. 1979) .

(n257)Footnote 264. See e.g., Salute v. Stratford Greens Garden Apartments, 136 F.3d 293 (2d Cir. 1998) (court mentions that a violation of the Fair Housing Act may be premised on a theory of disparate impact, but declines to find such an impact in the case before it); Villas West II of Willowridge v. McGlothin, 841 N.E.2d 584 (Ind. Ct. App. 2006) (court concludes that a subdivision restriction that prohibited the leasing of residences violated the Fair Housing Act); Llanos v. Estate of Coehlo, 24 F. Supp. 2d 1052 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (to establish a prima facie disparate impact claim in the housing context, a plaintiff must show at least that the defendant's actions had a discriminatory effect; the elements of a prima facie disparate impact case include: "(1) the occurrence of certain outwardly neutral practices, and (2) a significantly adverse or disproportionate impact on persons of a particular type produced by defendant's facially neutral acts or policies."); cf. United States v. Weiss, 847 F. Supp. 819 (D. Nev. 1994) (court applies disparate impact theory, but concludes that policy limiting occupancy based on limited hot water supply constitutes a compelling business necessity).

(n258)Footnote 265. 736 F.2d 983 (4th Cir. 1984) .

(n259)Footnote 266. Id. at 987-988 .

(n260)Footnote 267. Id. at 989 .

(n261)Footnote 268. 724 F. Supp. 148 (S.D. N.Y. 1989) .

(n262)Footnote 269. See Snyder v. Barry Realty, Inc., 953 F. Supp. 217 (N.D. Ill. 1996) ; Fair Housing Council of Orange County, Inc. v. Ayres, 855 F. Supp. 315 (C.D. Cal. 1994) ; cf. United States v. Weiss, 847 F. Supp. 819 (D. Nev. 1994) (court applies disparate impact theory, but concludes that policy limiting occupancy based on limited hot water supply constitutes a compelling business necessity); see also Hispanics United of DuPage County v. Village of Addison, Ill., 988 F. Supp. 1130 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (expressing disagreement with the Snyder decision).

(n263)Footnote 270. See Harris v. Capital Growth Investors, 805 P.2d 873 (1991) .

(n264)Footnote 271. See, e.g., Normal v. St. Louis Concrete Pipe Co., 447 F. Supp. 624 (E.D. Mo. 1978) ; Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151, 46 Ohio Op. 2d 329 (N.D. Ohio 1969) .

(n265)Footnote 272. See Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) (section 1982 action; plaintiffs were successful).

(n266)Footnote 273. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1988) ; Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390, 395 (5th Cir. 1981) ; Williams v. Matthews, 499 F.2d 819, 826 (8th Cir. 1974) .

(n267)Footnote 274. 490 U.S. 228 (1989) . For an analysis of Price Waterhouse in the context of Title VIII, see Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 10.3 (1990).

(n268)Footnote 275. Id. at 244-245 .

(n269)Footnote 276. See id. at 276-277 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

(n270)Footnote 277. 596 A.2d 396 (1991) .

(n271)Footnote 278. See Bachman v. St. Monica's Congregation, 902 F.2d 1259, 1262-63 (7th Cir. 1990) .

(n272)Footnote 279. Civil Rights Act of 1991, § 107, Pub. L. No. 102-166, § 107(a), codified at 42 U.S.C. § 2000e 2(m).

(n273)Footnote 280. See HUD v. Denton, 2 Fair Hous. Fair Lend (P H) 25,024 (HUD ALJ 1992).

(n274)Footnote 281. For example, 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a) makes it illegal "[t]o refuse to sell or rent after the making of a bona fide offer, or to refuse to negotiate for the sale or rental of, or otherwise make unavailable or deny, a dwelling to any person because of race, color, religion, sex, familial status, or national origin." (emphasis added).

(n275)Footnote 282. See United States v. Big D. Enters., 184 F.3d 924 (8th Cir. 1999) , cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1018, 120 S. Ct. 1419, 146 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2000) (claim of race discrimination against apartment owner; court refers to Price Waterhouse formula, but states that evidence of a legally-permissible motive was insufficient to justify a mixed-motive jury instruction); Cabrera v. Jakabovitz, 24 F.3d 372, (2d Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 876 (1994) (discussion of the propriety of giving a jury instruction incorporating Price Waterhouse approach to dual motive housing decision); Texas v. Crest Asset Management, Inc., 85 F. Supp.2d 722 (S.D. Tex. 2000) (stating that if the plaintiff produces direct evidence of discrimination, the Price Waterhouse mixed-motives theory of discrimination comes into play).

(n276)Footnote 283. See, e.g., Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276 (10th Cir. 1989) .

(n277)Footnote 284. See Phiffer v. Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc., 648 F.2d 548 (9th Cir. 1980) .

(n278)Footnote 285. 458 U.S. 375 (1982) .

(n279)Footnote 286. See, e.g., Hamilton v. Svatik, 779 F.2d 383 (7th Cir. 1985) .

(n280)Footnote 287. See Miko v. Commission on Human Rights & Opportunities, 596 A.2d 396 (1991) .

(n281)Footnote 288. See North Carolina Human Relations Council v. Weaver Realty Co., 340 S.E.2d 766 (N.C. App. 1986) .

(n282)Footnote 289. See Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV, 805 P.2d 873 (1991) .

(n283)Footnote 290. See, e.g., Hamilton v. Svatik, 779 F.2d 383 (7th Cir. 1985) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231, 234 (8th Cir. 1976) ; Davis v. Mansards, 597 F. Supp. 334 (N.D. Ind. 1984) .

(n284)Footnote 291. See, e.g., Davis v. Mansards, 597 F. Supp. 334 (N.D. Ind. 1984) .

(n285)Footnote 292. See Richardson v. Howard, 712 F.2d 319 (7th Cir. 1983) ; Wharton v. Knefel, 562 F.2d 550 (8th Cir. 1977) ; Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231, 234 n.2 (8th Cir. 1976) ; United States v. Lorantffy Care Center, 999 F. Supp. 1037 (N.D. Ohio 1998) .

(n286)Footnote 293. See Education -- Instruccion Inc. v. Copley Mgt. & Dev. Corp., 3 EOHC (P H) P 15,453 (D.C. Mass. 1982); Zuch v. Hussey, 394 F. Supp. 1028, 1051 (E.D. Mich. 1975) , aff'd and remanded, 547 F.2d 1168 (6th Cir. 1977) .

(n287)Footnote 294. See Richardson v. Howard, 712 F.2d 319 (7th Cir. 1983) .

(n288)Footnote 295. See Wharton v. Knefel, 562 F.2d 550 (8th Cir. 1977) .

(n289)Footnote 296. See Education -- Instruccion Inc. v. Copley, 3 EOHC (P H) P 15,453 (D.C. Mass. 1982) (striking down Massachusetts law that made testers liable for the tort of misrepresentation); United States v. Wisconsin, 395 F. Supp. 732 (W.D. Wis. 1975) (striking down Wisconsin statute that prohibited testers).

(n290)Footnote 297. See United States v. Reddoch, 467 F.2d 897, 898-899 (5th Cir. 1972) ; Todd v. Lutz, 2 EOHC (P H) P 13,787 (W.D. Pa. 1976); Riddick v. Hill, (N.D. Cal. 1973); United States v. Worrell, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,727 (S.D. Ga. 1974); United States v. Hilton Sykes Rental Agency, 1 EOHC P 13,727 (P H) (M.D. Ill. 1975); United States v. Dittmar, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,730 (E.D. Va. 1975).

(n291)Footnote 298. See, e.g., Young v. Parkland Village, 460 F. Supp. 67 (D. Md. 1978) ; Lamb v. Sallee, 417 F. Supp. 282 (E.D. Ky. 1976) ; United States v. L & H Land Corp., Inc., 407 F. Supp. 576 (S.D. Fla. 1976) ; United States v. Youritan Constr. Co., 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) ; Walker v. Pointer, 304 F. Supp. 56 (N.D. Tex. 1970) .

(n292)Footnote 299. See Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390, 397 (5th Cir. 1981) ; United States v. Reddoch, 467 F.2d 897, 899 (5th Cir. 1972) ; Young v. Parkland Village, 460 F. Supp. 67 (D. Md. 1978) ; Bishop v. Pecsok 431 F. Supp. 34(N.D. Ohio 1976) ; United States v. Youritan Constr. Co., 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) .

(n293)Footnote 300. United States v. Reddoch, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,569 (S.D. Ala. 1972), aff'd, 467 F.2d 897 (5th Cir. 1972) .

(n294)Footnote 301. See Lee v. Minnock, 417 F. Supp. 436 (W.D. Pa. 1976) (87% percent of units rented to blacks); cf. Soules v. HUD, 967 F.2d 817 (2d Cir. 1992) (landlord's attempt to rent apartment to another family with children was evidence that refusal to rent to plaintiff was not based on her familial status), aff'd, 104 F.3d 349 (2d Cir. 1996) .

(n295)Footnote 302. See Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1281-1282 (10th Cir. 1988) ; Davis v. Mansards, 597 F. Supp. 334, 345 (N.D. Ind. 1984) .

(n296)Footnote 303. See Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1040 (2d Cir. 1979) ; Portee v. Hastava, 853 F. Supp. 597 (E.D. N.Y. 1994) ; Irizarry v. *120 West 70*th Owner's Corp., 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P.H.) 15,551 (S.D. N.Y. 1986).

(n297)Footnote 304. See Soules v. HUD, 967 F.2d 817 (2d Cir. 1992) ; Hamilton v. Miller, 477 F.2d 908, 910 (10th Cir. 1973) (rejected because believed would be a "troublesome" tenant); Normal v. St. Louis Concrete Pipe Co., 447 F. Supp. 624 (E.D. Mo. 1978) (rejected because of harassing and rude telephone calls); Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) .

(n298)Footnote 305. See United States v. Youritan Constr. Co., 370 F. Supp. 643, 650 (N.D. Cal. 1973) .

(n299)Footnote 306. See United States v. West Peachtree Tenth Corp., 437 F.2d 221, 223-224 (5th Cir. 1971) .

(n300)Footnote 307. See Stevens v. Dobs, Inc., 483 F.2d 82, 83 (4th Cir. 1973) .

(n301)Footnote 308. See Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1041 (2nd Cir. 1979) .

(n302)Footnote 309. Schanz v. Village Apartments, 998 F. Supp. 784 (E.D. Mich. 1998) . Gentry v. Northeast Mgt. Co., 472 F. Supp. 1248 (N.D. Tex. 1979) (poor credit history)

(n303)Footnote 310. United States v. Grooms, 348 F. Supp. 1130 (M.D. Fla. 1972) ; Bush v. Kaim, 297 F. Supp. 151 (N.D. Ohio 1969) .

(n304)Footnote 311. See Kaplan v. 442 Wellington Coop. Bldg. Corp., 567 F. Supp. 53 (N.D. Ill. 1983) ; Gentry v. Northeast Mgt. Co., 472 F. Supp. 1248 (N.D. Tex. 1979) .

(n305)Footnote 312. See Davis v. Mansards, 597 F. Supp. 334, 345 (N.D. Ind. 1984) ; Bishop v. Pecsok, 431 F. Supp. 34 (N.D. Ohio 1976) ; Walker v. Pointer, 304 F. Supp. 56 (N.D. Tex. 1970) (late payments cannot justify eviction because accepted late payments from white tenants); Hall v. Freitas, 343 F. Supp. 1099 (N.D. Cal. 1972) .

(n306)Footnote 313. See Hall v. Freitas, 343 F. Supp. 1099 (N.D. Cal. 1972) .

(n307)Footnote 314. See Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390, 397 (5th Cir. 1981) ; Johnson v. Ganino, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,532 (N.D. Cal. 1972); United States v. Gilman, 341 F. Supp. 891 (S.D.N.Y. 1972) .

(n308)Footnote 315. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a).

(n309)Footnote 316. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(d).

(n310)Footnote 317. See, e.g., Hamilton v. Svatik, 779 F.2d 383, 388 (7th Cir. 1985) ; Marable v. Walker & Assocs., 644 F.2d 390 (5th Cir. 1981; Villegas v. Sandy Farms, Inc., 929 F. Supp. 1324 (D. Or. 1996) ; cf. Van Den Berk v. Missouri Commission on Human Rights, 26 S.W.3d 406 (Mo. 2000) (refusal to negotiate constituted a prima facie case of discrimination under state human rights statute).

(n311)Footnote 318. See Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1988) (failure to provide information about availability).

(n312)Footnote 319. See, e.g., Smith v. Anchor Bldg. Corp., 536 F.2d 231 (8th Cir. 1976) ; Fort v. White, 383 F. Supp. 949 (D. Conn. 1974) , modified, 530 F.2d 1113 (2d Cir. 1976) ; United States v. Youritan Constr. Co., 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) .

(n313)Footnote 320. See Asbury v. Brougham, 866 F.2d 1276, 1279 (10th Cir. 1988) ; United States v. Youritan, 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) ; United States v. Reddoch 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,569 (S.D. Ala. 1972), aff'd, 467 F.2d 897 (5th Cir. 1972) ; see also Cabrera v. Jakabovitz, 24 F.3d 372, 390 (2d Cir. 1994) (court states: "As long as a plaintiff can prove that a defendant afforded an African American person fewer housing opportunities than a similarly situated White person on account of race, the plaintiff has made out a case under Title VIII").

(n314)Footnote 321. See United States v. Mitchell, 580 F.2d 789, 791 (5th Cir. 1978) ; United States v. Henshaw Bros., 401 F. Supp. 399 (E.D. Va. 1975) ; Zuch v. Hussey, 394 F. Supp. 1028 (E.D. Mich. 1975) , aff'd, 547 F.2d 1168 (6th Cir. 1977) .

(n315)Footnote 322. Llanos v. Estate of Coehlo, 24 F. Supp. 2d 1052, 1057 (E.D. Cal. 1998) .

(n316)Footnote 323. See United States v. Mitchell, 580 F.2d 789, 791 (5th Cir. 1978) .

(n317)Footnote 324. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(b).

(n318)Footnote 325. See Khalil v. Farash Corp., 260 F. Supp. 2d 582 (W.D. N.Y. 2003) ; Concerned Tenants Ass'n v. Indian Trails Apts., 496 F. Supp. 522 (N.D. Ill. 1980) ; McGraw v. Oliver 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,539 (E.D. Va. 1985).

(n319)Footnote 326. See United States v. Long, 1 EOHC P 13,631 (C.D. S.C. 1974); Brown v. Lo Duca, 307 F. Supp. 102 (E.D. Wis. 1969) .

(n320)Footnote 327. See City of Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations v. DeFelice, 782 A.2d 586 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2001) ; Brown v. Lo Duca, 307 F. Supp. 102 (E.D. Wis. 1969) .

(n321)Footnote 328. See U.S. v. Balistrieri, 981 F.2d 916 (7th Cir. 1992) (dispensing with usual credit check for a white applicant); United States v. Long, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,631 (C.D.S.C. 1974).

(n322)Footnote 329. McGraw v. Oliver, 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 13,539 (E.D. Va. 1985).

(n323)Footnote 330. Khalil v. Farash Corp., 260 F. Supp. 2d 582 (W.D. N.Y. 2003) (claim that landlords prohibited children from congregating in areas where adults were allowed to congregate); Concerned Tenants Ass'n v. Indian Trails Apts., 496 F. Supp. 522 (N.D. Ill. 1980) .

(n324)Footnote 331. United States v. Gilman, 341 F. Supp. 891 (S.D. N.Y. 1972) .

(n325)Footnote 332. See United States v. L & H Land Corp., 407 F. Supp. 576 (S.D. Fla. 1976) .

(n326)Footnote 333. See Grieger v. Sheets, 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1988) ; Shellhammer v. Lewallen, 1 Fair Hous. Fair Lend. (P H) 15,472 (N.D. Ohio 1983) .

(n327)Footnote 334. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(c).

(n328)Footnote 335. See 42 U.S.C.§ 3603(b).

(n329)Footnote 336. See United States v. Hunter, 459 F.2d 205 (4th Cir. 1972) .

(n330)Footnote 337. See, e.g., Jancik v. HUD, 44 F.3d 553 (7th Cir. 1995) (statements that landlord did not want families with children and did not want teenagers violated the Fair Housing Act); United States v. Long, 1 EOHC P 13,631 (D. S.C. 1974), remanded, 537 F.2d 1151 (4th Cir. 1975) , cert. denied, 429 U.S. 871 (1976) ; United States v. L & H Land Corp., Inc., 407 F. Supp. 576 (S.D. Fla. 1976) .

(n331)Footnote 338. 923 F.2d 995 (2d Cir. 1991) , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 821 (1991) .

(n332)Footnote 339. 413 U.S. 376 (1973) .

(n333)Footnote 340. Id. at 389 .

(n334)Footnote 341. 923 F.2d at 1003 .

(n335)Footnote 342. Id.

(n336)Footnote 343. 943 F.2d 644 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n337)Footnote 344. 943 F.2d at 650 .

(n338)Footnote 345. 943 F.2d at 650 .

(n339)Footnote 346. 943 F.2d at 652 .

(n340)Footnote 347. 943 F.2d at 653 .

(n341)Footnote 348. 459 F.2d 205 (4th Cir. 1972) , cert. denied, 409 U.S. 934 (1972) .

(n342)Footnote 349. Ragin v. Harry Macklowe Real Est., 6 F.3d 898 (2d Cir. 1993) ; United States v. Hunter, 459 F.2d 205, 215 (4th Cir. 1972) , cert. denied, 409 U.S. 934 (1972) .

(n343)Footnote 350. Id.

(n344)Footnote 351. 659 F. Supp. 1042 (E.D. Va. 1987) .

(n345)Footnote 352. Id. at 1058 ; see also Ragin v. Harry Macklowe Real Est., 6 F.3d 898 (2d Cir. 1993) (Fair Housing Act violated by exclusive use of white models in ads).

(n346)Footnote 353. 923 F.2d 995 (2d Cir. 1991) , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 821 (1991) .

(n347)Footnote 354. 923 F.2d at 1002 .

(n348)Footnote 355. Id. at 1001-1002 .

(n349)Footnote 356. 943 F.2d 644 (6th Cir. 1991) .

(n350)Footnote 357. Id. at 650-651 .

(n351)Footnote 358. 42 U.S.C. § 3617.

(n352)Footnote 359. See, e.g., Marshall v. Bramer, 828 F.2d 355 (6th Cir. 1987) ; Whisby Myers v. Kiekenapp 293 F. Supp.2d 845 (N.D. Ill. 2003) ; Stirgus v. Benoit, 720 F. Supp. 119 (N.D. Ill. 1989) .

(n353)Footnote 360. See Tokaji v. Toth, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,679 (N.D. Ohio 1974); see also Nevels v. Western World Ins., 359 F. Supp 2d 1110 (W.D. Wash. 2004) (interference by insurer); cf. Lawrence v. Courtyards at Deerwood Ass'n, 318 F. Supp. 2d 1133 (S.D. Fla. 2004) (court rejects claim that homeowners' association and property manager violated the Act by failing to prevent neighbors from creating a hostile housing environment).

(n354)Footnote 361. See Grieger v. Sheets, 689 F. Supp. 835 (N.D. Ill. 1988) .

(n355)Footnote 362. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 3610-3612.

(n356)Footnote 363. See 42 U.S.C. § 3613.

(n357)Footnote 364. See 42 U.S.C. § 3614.

(n358)Footnote 365. See James Kushner, Fair Housing (1983); Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation 411-412 (1990).

(n359)Footnote 366. 42 U.S.C. § 3612.

(n360)Footnote 367. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(a)(1)(A).

(n361)Footnote 368. 42 U.S.C. § 3610.

(n362)Footnote 369. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(f).

(n363)Footnote 370. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(f)(3).

(n364)Footnote 371. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(f)(3).

(n365)Footnote 372. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(f)(2).

(n366)Footnote 373. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(b).

(n367)Footnote 374. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(g). See also United States v. Beethoven Assocs. Ltd. Partnership, 843 F. Supp. 1257 (N.D. Ill. 1994) (failure to strictly adhere to requirement that HUD complete investigations within 100 days or notify parties of reasons for failing to do so does not give rise to a jurisdictional barrier to a subsequent lawsuit on the discrimination claim).

(n368)Footnote 375. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(g)(2)(A).

(n369)Footnote 376. 42 U.S.C. § 3612(a).

(n370)Footnote 377. 42 U.S.C. § 3612(b).

(n371)Footnote 378. 42 U.S.C. § 3612(g)(1)(2).

(n372)Footnote 379. 42 U.S.C. § 3612(g)(3). The amount of any civil penalty is limited by statute. See id.

(n373)Footnote 380. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3612 (h) & 1K.

(n374)Footnote 381. 42 U.S.C. § 3612(a).

(n375)Footnote 382. See 42 U.S.C. § 3613(a).

(n376)Footnote 383. Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 §§ 4451-4468. But a lawsuit may be brought to enforce the terms of a conciliation agreement. See id.

(n377)Footnote 384. The 180-day period was set forth in the pre-amendment version of 42 U.S.C. § 3612. See Hickman v. Fincher, 483 F.2d 855, 856 n.3 (4th Cir. 1973) .

(n378)Footnote 385. Hickman v. Fincher, 483 F.2d 855 (4th Cir. 1973) ; Hampton v. Roberts, 386 F. Supp. 609 (W.D. Va. 1974) ; Smith v. Woodhollow, 463 F. Supp. 16 (W.D. Okla. 1978) ; James v. Hafler, 320 F. Supp. 397 (N.D. Ga. 1970) .

(n379)Footnote 386. Hampton v. Roberts, 386 F. Supp. 609 (W.D. Va. 1974) ; Smith v. Woodhollow, 463 F. Supp. 16 (W.D. Okla. 1978) ; James v. Hafler, 320 F. Supp. 397 (N.D. Ga. 1970) .

(n380)Footnote 387. 42 U.S.C. § 3613(a)(1)(A).

(n381)Footnote 388. See James Kushner, Fair Housing (1983); Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 802 (1990).

(n382)Footnote 389. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3613(a)(1)(A) & (B).

(n383)Footnote 390. 42 U.S.C. § 3613(c). The court does not have to award damages in the event that discrimination is found. See U.S. v. Southern Management Corp.,955 F.2d 914 (4th Cir. 1992) .

(n384)Footnote 391. See, e.g., Steele v. Title Realty Co., 478 F.2d 380 (10th Cir. 1973) ; Parker v. Shonfeld, 409 F. Supp. 876 (N.D. Cal. 1976) ; Bishop v. Pecsok, 431 F. Supp. 34 (N.D. Ohio 1976) .

(n385)Footnote 392. See Lincoln v. Case, 340 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 2003) (court upholds award of punitive damages in Federal Housing Act case, stating that the question for the availability of punitive damages is whether the defendant acted with malice or reckless indifference that his actions might violate a federal statute of which he was aware); Alexander v. Riga, 208 F.3d 419 (3d Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1069 (2001) (discussing standards of punitive damages; stating that jury could award punitive damages even if no actual damages awarded).

(n386)Footnote 393. See, e.g., Miller v. Apartments & Homes of N.J., Inc., 646 F.2d 101 (3rd Cir. 1981) ; Parker v. Shonfeld, 409 F. Supp. 876 (W.D. Cal. 1976) ($10,000 punitive damage award).

(n387)Footnote 394. 42 U.S.C. § 3613(c).

(n388)Footnote 395. See 42 U.S.C.§ 3613(c).

(n389)Footnote 396. See Gresham v. Windrush Partners Ltd., 730 F.2d 1417 (11th Cir. 1984) , cert. denied, 469 U.S. 882 (1984) .

(n390)Footnote 397. See, e.g., Hall v. Freitas, 343 F. Supp. 1099 (N.D. Cal. 1972) (against continued refusal); Williamson v. Hampton Mgt. Co., 339 F. Supp. 1146 (N.D. Ill. 1972) (order to rent).

(n391)Footnote 398. See, e.g., Guillory v. Bryan 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,642 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

(n392)Footnote 399. See United States v. West Peachtree Tenth Corp., 437 F.2d 221 (5th Cir. 1971) .

(n393)Footnote 400. See Rogers v. 66- 36 Yellowstone Blvd. Coop. Owners, 599 F. Supp. 79 (E.D. N.Y. 1984) .

(n394)Footnote 401. See Cabrera v. Fischler, 814 F. Supp. 269 (E.D. N.Y 1993) , aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 24 F.3d 372 (2d Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 876 (1994) .

(n395)Footnote 402. See United States v. Youritan Constr. Co. 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) .

(n396)Footnote 403. 42 U.S.C. § 3614.

(n397)Footnote 404. See, e.g., United States v. Hunter, 459 F.2d 205 (4th Cir. 1972) ; United States v. Grooms, 348 F. Supp. 1130 (M.D. Fla. 1972) .

(n398)Footnote 405. See United States v. Saroff, 377 F. Supp. 352 (E.D. Tenn. 1974) , aff'd, 516 F.2d 902 (6th Cir. 1975) .

(n399)Footnote 406. United States v. West Peachtree Tenth Corp., 437 F.2d 221, 227 (5th Cir. 1971) ; United States v. L & H Land Corp., 407 F. Supp. 756 (S.D. Fla. 1976) ; United States v. Long, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,618 (M.D. Fla. 1973).

(n400)Footnote 407. See United States v. Youritan Constr. Co., 370 F. Supp. 643 (N.D. Cal. 1973) ; United States v. Reddoch, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,569 (S.D. Ala. 1972), aff'd, 467 F.2d 897 (5th Cir. 1972) .

(n401)Footnote 408. 42 U.S.C. § 3614(d).

(n402)Footnote 409. See 42 U.S.C. § 3614(d).

(n403)Footnote 410. See United States v. Reddoch, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,569 (S.D. Ala. 1972).

(n404)Footnote 411. See United States v. Mitchell, 580 F.2d 789 (5th Cir. 1978) , superseded by statute, as stated in U.S. v. City of Jackson, Miss., 359 F.3d 727 (5thCir. 2004).

(n405)Footnote 412. See 42 U.S.C. § 3614(d). See also U.S. v. City of Jackson, Miss., 359 F.3d 727 (5thCir. 2004) (discussing the legislative history and the effect of the amendment).

(n406)Footnote 413. See Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968) ; Phiffer v. Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc., 648 F.2d 548 (9th Cir. 1980) ; Elliott v. Sherwood Manor Mobile Home Park, 947 F. Supp 1574 (M.D. Fla. 1996) .

(n407)Footnote 414. See, e.g., Miller v. Apartments & Homes of N.J., Inc., 646 F.2d 101 (3rd Cir. 1981) .

(n408)Footnote 415. See the discussion in § 43.03(b)(1)(ii) of this chapter.

(n409)Footnote 416. See 52 Fed. Reg. 41, 419 (1987) .

(n410)Footnote 417. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. §§ 18.80.10 - 80.145 (Commission on Human Rights); Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 24-34-301 - 308, 24-34-501 - 510 (Civil Rights Commission); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 46a 64b, 46a-64c & 46a 82 (Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities); Idaho Code §§ 67-5901 - 5912 (Commission on Human Rights); Ind. Code Ann. § 22-9-1 (Civil Rights Commission); Iowa Code Ann. §§ 601A.1 - 601A.19 (Civil Rights Commission); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1003 (Commission on Civil Rights).

(n411)Footnote 418. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 18.80.100; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-306; Idaho Code § 67-5907; Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1005.

(n412)Footnote 419. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-306; Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1005.

(n413)Footnote 420. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 18.80.110; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-306; Idaho Code § 67-5907; Iowa Code Ann. § 601A.15; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1005.

(n414)Footnote 421. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 760.34; cf. La. Rev. Code. Ann. §51:2614 (action by attorney general).

(n415)Footnote 422. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-306; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a 84.

(n416)Footnote 423. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-305; Del. Code Ann. tit. 6, § 4609.

(n417)Footnote 424. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24-34-306(a); Conn. Gen. Stat. § 46a 86.

(n418)Footnote 425. See Alaska Stat. § 18.80.130; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 368-17; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-1005(K).

(n419)Footnote 426. See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 344.230; Minn. Stat. § 363.071 (damages for mental anguish and suffering).

(n420)Footnote 427. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a 86.

(n421)Footnote 428. See Minn. Stat. § 363.071; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 20-337; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4112.05(G); S.C. Code Ann. § 31-21-130(L).

(n422)Footnote 429. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 41-1491.31.

(n423)Footnote 430. 42 U.S.C. § 3613.

(n424)Footnote 431. 42 U.S.C. § 3614.

(n425)Footnote 432. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3612(a) & (o). See generally Robert Schwemm, Housing Discrimination Law and Litigation § 31.1 (1990).

(n426)Footnote 433. See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962) .

(n427)Footnote 434. 409 U.S. 205 (1972) .

(n428)Footnote 435. Id. at 208 .

(n429)Footnote 436. Id. at 208-209 .

(n430)Footnote 437. Id. at 209-210 .

(n431)Footnote 438. 441 U.S. 91 (1979) .

(n432)Footnote 439. The former § 3612 was changed to the current § 3613 by the 1988 amendments to the Fair Housing Act.

(n433)Footnote 440. Id. at 114 .

(n434)Footnote 441. Id. at 110-111 .

(n435)Footnote 442. 455 U.S. 363 (1982) .

(n436)Footnote 443. Id. at 372 .

(n437)Footnote 444. Id. at 374-375 .

(n438)Footnote 445. Id. at 376-377 .

(n439)Footnote 446. Id. at 379 .

(n440)Footnote 447. See, e.g., Smith v. Pacific Properties and Development Corp.,358 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. 2004) (testers and civil rights organization have standing to allege disability discrimination in violation of the Fair Housing Act); Lincoln v. Case, 340 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting that the "Supreme Court has held that the sole requirement for standing under the FHA is the Article III minima;" but also stating:

> First, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact-an invasion of a legally protected interest that is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of... Third, it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

340 F.3d at 289).

(n441)Footnote 448. 160 F.3d 433 (8th Cir.1998) .

(n442)Footnote 449. 160 F.3d at 435 .

(n443)Footnote 450. 16 F. Supp.2d 183 (D. Conn. 1998) , aff'd, 237 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 534 U.S. 888 (2001) .

(n444)Footnote 451. See, e.g., Lamb v. Sallee, 417 F. Supp. 282 (E.D. Ky. 1976) ; Walker v. Pointer, 304 F. Supp. 56 (N.D. Tex. 1970) (whites have standing to sue for eviction for having black guests).

(n445)Footnote 452. See, e.g., Cleveland v. Caplaw Enterprises, 448 F.3d 518 (2d Cir. 2006) ; Jankowski Lee & Associates v. Cisneros, 91 F.3d 891 (7th Cir. 1996) ; Cabrera v. Jakabovitz, 24 F.3d 372 (2d Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 876 (1994) .

(n446)Footnote 453. See Cabrera v. Jakabovitz, 24 F.3d 372 (2d Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 876 (1994) ; Collins v. Spasojcevic, 1 EOHC (P H) P 13,654 (N.D. Ill. 1974).

(n447)Footnote 454. See Jeanty v. McKey & Poague, Inc., 496 F.2d 1119 (7th Cir. 1974) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.04

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.04 Rent Control.

[Go To Supp]

§ 43.04(a) In General.

Rent controls are a significant limitation on the traditional right of landlords and tenants to set rent by agreement. Although initially imposed as emergency measures during the First and Second World Wars, modern rent controls became popular in the 1970s as a means to control inflationary rent increases. In the 1990s, however, some states adopted legislation that prohibited or significantly limited rent controls.

As the name suggests, rent controls are governmentally imposed limitations on the amount of the rent that can be charged to a tenant. Although taking various forms, most rent control arrangements share some common features. First, and most important, is a method to set a base rent and to calculate subsequent adjustments to ensure landlords a fair return. In many instances this is done by a rent control board, which also has authority to review hardship petitions and other matters. Rent control ordinances often contain other features, including eviction controls, vacancy decontrol provisions, removal restrictions, and provisions for exemption. n455

Imposition of rent controls is subject to several limitations. First, a municipality must have authority to enact controls. n456 In some states this is established by special enabling legislation that authorizes municipalities to impose rent controls. In the absent of such a statute, municipalities have looked to their general municipal powers, often under home rule statutes, for the authority to control rents. Courts are divided on whether this is a sufficient basis, with decisions often turning on the particular language granting general municipal power.

Despite numerous challenges, rent controls have been upheld as constitutional and not violative of antitrust laws. Although in early cases courts required rent controls to be justified by a housing emergency, that is no longer the case. Courts today generally recognize rent controls as a legitimate form of economic regulation. To be valid, however, the controls must allow landlords a "fair and reasonable" return.

Rent controls have long been controversial. n457 Proponents of rent control argue that they are a necessary response to housing shortages that would otherwise lead to excessive and unfair rents. However, critics argue that controls lead to an inefficient and improper allocation of housing resources. They also contend that controls create disincentives to housing investment and therefore tend to exacerbate the very problem that they were intended to remedy.

§ 43.04(b) History of Rent Control.

§ 43.04(b)(1) Early War-Created Emergencies.

Early rent control efforts were in response to housing shortages during World War I. n458 These controls initially involved the formation of citizen committees designed to direct attention to, and bring pressure upon, rent profiteering. n459 These committees were promoted by the Federal Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation. They were located in a number of American cities, where they were instrumental in combatting price gouging. n460

During the war, several states and the District of Columbia passed rent control measures. n461 Voluntary efforts at controlling rent became less effective after the end of the war, and more cities and states passed formal rent control laws to address continued housing shortages brought on by the war. n462 The impact of rent control was especially great in the state of New York, which passed legislation in 1920 to combat more than 100,000 pending dispossession proceedings in New York City alone. n463

The constitutionality of rent control laws was addressed by the Supreme Court in a series of decisions beginning with Block v. Hirsh n464 and Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Felding, n465 in 1924. In two five-to-four decisions, the Court upheld the validity of rent control laws in New York and the District of Columbia. In doing so, the Court emphasized the emergency nature of the laws, designed to address critical housing shortages following the war. n466 Three years later, the Court observed, in a case about rent controls: "A law depending upon the existence of an emergency or other certain state of facts to uphold it may cease to operate if the emergency ceases or the facts change even though valid when passed." n467

Rent control emerged again with the United States' entry into World War II. The Federal Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 authorized the imposition of rent controls as part of its wartime price control program, permitting the Office of Price Administration to stabilize or reduce rents in designated rental areas. n468 By 1942 the entire nation had been designated as a defense rental area, although not all areas were eventually brought under regulation. n469

The federal rent control provisions were continued after the end of the war until 1952 through a series of temporary renewals. These renewals reaffirmed the continued existence of housing shortages in the post war years, but they also had the purpose of gradually phasing out controls. n470 Unlike earlier rent controls, these post war controls provided that landlords were to receive adjustments if rents were inadequate. The Supreme Court upheld the validity of these post war controls in 1948, stating that they were justified by war-created housing shortages. n471

As federal controls came to an end during the late 1940s and early 1950s, a number of state and local governments enacted legislation to replace them. n472 These laws typically were adopted to become effective upon the termination of the federal controls and were designed to be of a temporary nature. For example, the New Jersey statute took effect when federal controls terminated in 1953, for the stated purpose of continuing rent controls in needed areas. The controls were annually renewed until 1956, at which time the statute permitted municipalities to continue them for one additional year. n473

A number of local governments also imposed some form of rent control during this post war period. At times these were pursuant to state statutes, but in other cases they were enacted in the absence of explicit state authorization. A number of these provisions were challenged, with courts divided on whether municipalities had authority to impose rent controls in the absence of enabling legislation. n474

By the mid-1950s most rent controls from the World War II era had come to an end. One notable exception was in New York City, which has had a unique rent control history. Rent controls were first imposed there in 1921 and have been in continuous existence except between 1929 and 1942. n475

§ 43.04(b)(2) Modern Rent Control Laws.

Modern rent control laws, often referred to as "second generation" rent control, began in the late 1960s and early 1970s in response to inflationary rent increases. n476 An early and short lived experiment involved federal price controls from August 15, 1971 to January 12, 1973. This began with a 90-day rent freeze on rents, wages and prices. That was followed by rent regulation that limited annual rent increases to 2.5%, with some additional specified increases. n477

Apart from this short federal effort, modern rent controls have been imposed by state and local governments. Beginning in 1969, a number of states and municipalities began to enact new rent control legislation. n478 In a few instances, state legislation imposed state wide controls independent of local implementation. n479 More common have been state statutes that authorize local controls pursuant to specified guidelines. n480 The majority of actual controls are developed and imposed at the local level, either pursuant to state enabling legislation or under a general grant of municipal power.

Today rent controls are found or permitted in some ten states. n481 Historically, rent control has been most widely practiced in California, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York. One commentator estimated that, as of 1983, about 10% of rental housing stock nationally was subject to rent controls. n482 However, in the 1990s several states adopted legislation that prohibited or limited rent controls. n483

Although varying considerably, rent control laws today commonly include several basic components. Most fundamental are rent adjustment provisions to ensure landlords a fair return. These provisions, which are quite varied, will be considered in a later section of this chapter. n484 Probably most typical are provisions for an automatic rent increase and additional adjustments under special circumstances. Most legislation also creates a rent control board, with the authority to set increases and to act on special petitions.

Another central feature of most modern rent control ordinances are eviction controls to ensure that landlords cannot defeat rent control objectives by evicting tenants. Other common components are rollback provisions to offset rent increases made in anticipation of controls, exemptions for certain buildings, code compliance requirements, and enforcement provisions. Finally, some ordinances also include restrictions on conversion of rent control property to other uses.

§ 43.04(b)(3) The Emergence of Statutory Prohibitions on Rent Control.

In the 1990s, several states enacted legislation that prohibited rent controls to one degree or another. This section of the chapter references statutory prohibitions in California, Illinois, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. The legislation represents something of a modern trend to do away with existing rent control arrangements.

California adopted the "Costa Hawkins Rental Housing Act" in 1995. n485 In enacting the legislation, the California legislature included the following statement: "It is the intent of the Legislature to streamline and improve the efficiency of state housing policy efforts by repealing various obsolete, outmoded, and inoperative housing programs and statutes." n486 One of the principal provisions of the legislation states that, "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law, an owner of residential real property may establish the initial and all subsequent rental rates" for a qualifying "dwelling" or "unit." n487

Initially, the qualifying dwellings or units generally included those that had a certificate of occupancy issued after February 1, 1995; were already exempt from rent control ordinances on or before February 1, 1995, on account of a local exemption for newly constructed units; or were alienable separate from the title to any other dwelling unit or were a subdivided interest in a subdivision, under a provision of the California Business and Professions Code. n488 But the legislation also included provisions for ending rent controls for other dwellings or units, as time passed and as new tenancies were created. n489

However, the legislation includes some exceptions. Dwellings or units that will not be free from otherwise applicable rent controls include: 1) dwellings or units for which the owner has agreed otherwise in a contract with a public entity in consideration for financial assistance, and 2) dwellings or units that contain "serious health, safety, fire, or building code violations, excluding those caused by disasters for which a citation has been issued by the appropriate governmental agency and which has remained unabated for six months or longer preceding the vacancy." n490

Illinois adopted a "Rent Control Preemption Act" in 1997. n491 The legislation prohibits units of local government from enacting, maintaining, or enforcing "an ordinance or resolution that would have the effect of controlling the amount of rent charged for leasing private residential or commercial property." n492 A separate provision makes it clear that home rule units of government "may not regulate or control the amount of rent charged for leasing private residential or commercial property." n493 But it also provides that the legislation does not "impair the right of a unit of local government to manage and control residential property in which the unit of local government has a property interest." n494

In 1997, Massachusetts adopted a Rent Control Prohibition Act, n495 that prohibits most forms of rent control state-wide. The legislation includes the following statement of purpose:

> The purpose of this chapter is to establish a uniform statewide policy that broadly prohibits any regulatory scheme based upon or implementing rent control, except where, following an initial six month period, compliance with such a scheme is voluntary and uncoerced on the part of property owners. Even when voluntary, rent control should be severely restricted in scope. This policy is based on the belief that the public is best served by free market rental rates for residential properties and by unrestricted home ownership. The terms of this chapter shall be liberally construed to effect this purpose. n496

The operative provisions of the Massachusetts legislation generally prohibit cities or towns from enacting, maintaining, or enforcing rent controls of any kind, other than voluntary controls that take effect six months after the adoption of a rent control regulation. n497 In addition, the legislation provides that a municipality adopting such a regulation is to compensate owners of rent-controlled units for the difference between the unit's fair market rent and the unit's below-market, rent-controlled rent, with the compensation coming from the municipality's general funds, so that the cost of rent controls will be borne by all taxpayers of a municipality and not just by the owners of regulated units. n498

The definition of "rent control" under the Massachusetts legislation excludes "the regulation of, or agreements affecting, publicly owned housing, publicly subsidized housing, federally assisted housing, or mobile homes." n499

In 1999, New Jersey adopted legislation that made permanent a 1987 "experimental" program n500 that had generally abolished rent controls for newly constructed "multiple dwellings" for the lesser of 30 years after completion of construction or the amortization period of the mortgage on the building. n501 The definition of "multiple dwelling" applies to "any building or structure and land appurtenant thereto containing four or more dwelling units, other than dwelling units constructed for occupation by senior citizens, rented or offered for rent to four or more tenants or family units." n502

A New Jersey landlord who is entitled to the exemption provided by the legislation is required to furnish prospective tenants with a written statement that the multiple dwelling is exempt from rent controls, and to include a provision to that effect in the lease as well. n503

§ 43.04(c) Limits to Rent Control.

§ 43.04(c)(1) Municipal Authority.

The initial limitation on rent controls is the requirement that there be governmental authority to regulate rents. When controls are imposed at the state level this is not an issue, since rent control clearly falls within a state's general police powers. n504 Such state wide controls have occurred at various times, especially after World War II. n505

But most modern rent control legislation has been enacted by municipalities. It is a well established principle of municipal law that cities are governments of limited power whose existence is dependent on the state. n506 For that reason, courts have long held that municipalities can exercise only those powers that are granted by the state. n507 In the absence of some grant, therefore, municipalities are without authority to impose rent controls.

Some states have enacted rent control enabling legislation that specifically grants such power to cities. n508 Some states permit rent controls to be adopted by municipalities under home rule authorization. n509

In the absence of a specific enabling statute, courts have been evenly divided on whether a general grant of power to local governments includes the authority to impose rent controls. In making this determination, courts have looked at several factors, foremost among which are the granting language of the statute itself and a state's basic position on how broadly grants of power to local governments should be construed.

When the statutory language provides that a municipality may exercise power to the same extent as the state, courts have usually held that this permits rent controls. Thus, when a home rule act provided that a city could exercise power "to the full extent that the General Assembly may legislate in reference thereto," the city clearly could impose rent controls. n510 Also, when a grant provided that a municipality "may exercise any power or . . . function" that is not denied to it, there is a broad grant of authority sufficient to impose rent controls. n511

Courts have split on whether a statute conferring on municipalities the right to legislate for the general health, safety, or welfare authorizes rent control. This primarily turns on a jurisdiction's view of municipal power and on whether such a grant is an independent source of municipal power or only gives auxiliary power relating to specific grants. n512 In several decisions, courts have held that such a general grant was insufficient to authorize rent controls without a more specific delegation of authority. n513 Some of these decisions also pointed to other considerations, such as the termination of state rent controls, as evidence that local governments were not intended to exercise rent control power. n514

Several courts, however, have held that such "general welfare" clauses are independent sources of power sufficient to support rent control. In so holding, these courts have indicated that they viewed home rule legislation as granting cities police powers of considerable breadth as long as they were consistent with state law. n515 The California Supreme Court emphasized this in holding that municipalities could impose rent controls, stating that the California Constitution granted municipalities authority "as broad as the police powers exercisable by the legislature itself." n516

Decisions permitting municipal rent controls recognize that they must be consistent with and not preempted by state laws. n517 Courts that have otherwise found municipal authority to enact rent controls have held that they do not conflict with general state landlord-tenant laws. n518 They have noted that these state laws do not touch on the specific subject of rent regulation, and therefore do not preempt municipal rent controls. n519 One court, however, which held that a municipal grant did not include the power to impose rent controls, also stated that the general landlord-tenant law was evidence that the legislature did not intend municipalities to have rent control authority. n520

Even though a municipality might have authority to impose rent controls generally, particular components of a rent control ordinance might be preempted by state law. Whether a rent control provision conflicts with and is therefore preempted by state law obviously turns on the particular ordinance and statute involved. As a general matter, most courts have not found a conflict or preemption based only on a general landlord-tenant statute, n521 but only when rent control provisions touch on specific statutory subject matter.

One particular area of conflict has concerned eviction control components of rent control laws. Several courts have invalidated such controls as being in conflict with state eviction law. n522 For example, the Maryland Supreme Court struck down a rent control provision that prohibited eviction of tenants in good standing, stating that it conflicted with a state statute permitting such evictions. n523 Conversely, the California Supreme Court found no conflict with rent control provisions that limited the substantive grounds for eviction, since the California statutory scheme was procedural in nature. n524 For that reason, however, it invalidated a requirement that landlords obtain an eviction certificate, finding that it conflicted with the procedures of a California statute. n525

§ 43.04(c)(2) Declaration of Housing Emergency.

Until somewhat recently, most courts assumed that, to be valid, rent controls must be in response to a housing emergency. This requirement, which was first stated by the Supreme Court in several decisions in the 1920s that addressed the constitutionality of post World War I controls, was consistent with the economic substantive due process jurisprudence prevalent at the time. Despite a change in the Court's own jurisprudence in the 1930s, the emergency requirement continued to find its way into almost all rent control decisions until the 1970s, at which time it was largely rejected. n526

The emergency requirement was first suggested in 1924 in Block v. Hirsh, n527 and Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Felding, n528 in which the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of District of Columbia and New York rent control laws. In a 5-4 decision for the Court, Justice Holmes in Block emphasized the "exigency" of the housing shortage facing the District and brought on by the war. n529 He stated that controls were "justified only as a temporary measure," noting that "[a] limit in time, to tide over a passing trouble, well may justify a law that could not be upheld as a permanent change." n530 The Court confirmed the emergency requirement three years later in Chastleten Corp. v. Sinclair, n531 in which it indicated that the District of Columbia's controls would be invalid, if, upon remand, the emergency conditions upon which they had been initially based were found no longer to exist. n532

These early Supreme Court decisions clearly premised the validity of rent controls on war-created emergencies. They arose during a period in which the Court regularly struck down forms of economic regulation under the guise of substantive due process, n533 including minimum wages for women and children, n534 the regulation of employment agency fees, n535 and controls on dairy n536 and gasoline prices. n537 Thus, the existence of an emergency was a permissible and even necessary basis on which to regulate rents in an era when such regulation would otherwise have been viewed as impermissible economic regulation.

Economic substantive due process was repudiated in a series of decisions in the 1930s. Beginning with Nebbia v. New York n538 in 1934, the Supreme Court replaced its former scrutiny of economic legislation with a deferential standard of review, and stated that states were free to regulate a business in all its aspects, including its prices. n539 Indeed, the regulation upheld in Nebbia was a New York statute fixing retail milk prices. The Court held that such regulation was valid if it had a "reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose." n540

Despite the demise of substantive due process, in Woods v. Cloyd W. Miller Co. n541 the Court again relied on war-created housing shortages to justify post World War II rent controls. In holding that such controls after the cessation of hostilities were constitutional, the Court stated that the war power continued to be a basis to sustain the controls, noting: "Since the war effort contributed heavily to that [housing] deficit, Congress has the power even after the cessation of hostilities to act to control the forces that a short supply of the needed article created." n542 The Court's reliance on a war-created emergency likely contributed to the perception that an emergency was required in order to sustain rent controls.

For the next twenty years courts proceeded on the assumption that an "emergency" was necessary to justify rent control legislation, but they applied the requirement with varying degrees of rigor. In Warren v. City of Philadelphia, n543 for example, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court upheld a Philadelphia rent control ordinance that declared the existence of an emergency related to housing. But the case came to the court following a judgment on the pleadings, and, in that context, the court said that the facts pleaded by the city concerning "an emergency housing shortage, affecting the public health, safety and welfare," had to be taken to be true. n544 The court upheld the ordinance as a valid exercise of the police power.

Other courts during this time accepted the requirement of an emergency, but applied a strong presumption in favor of any legislative declaration of emergency. The New Jersey Supreme Court, although indicating it would not accept legislative findings as conclusive, said they only needed to be supported by a "rational basis." n545 A series of New York decisions in the 1950s and 1960s also took this position. Although the decisions acknowledged the requirement of an emergency, they also upheld the findings of emergency, at times in a very deferential fashion. n546

On the other hand, in some cases, courts struck down, in whole or in part, rent control provisions because of the absence of a declaration of emergency, n547 or because the emergency conditions no longer existed. n548

In more recent years, courts have rejected the emergency requirement altogether. The first court to express such a view was the Second Circuit in Eisen v. Eastman n549 in 1969. Relying on the Supreme Court's rejection of economic substantive due process in Nebbia, the court noted in dictum that rent controls were a form of price controls and therefore did not need to be premised on an emergency. n550 In the mid-1970s the supreme courts of New Jersey, n551 California, n552 and Maryland n553 all took similar positions, holding that an emergency was no longer required to support rent controls. All of these decisions viewed the emergency requirement as being a byproduct of Lochner -era substantive due process, and thus obsolete after Nebbia. They considered rent controls indistinguishable from other forms of price regulation and therefore subject only to the reasonable relationship standard now used for review of economic regulation. n554

The United States Supreme Court decision in Pennell v. San Jose n555 confirms this position. Although the Court did not specifically address the question as to whether there must be an emergency to support rent controls, it analyzed the rent controls at issue there as a form of price controls and subjected them to the deferential standard established in Nebbia. n556 Implicit in the analysis was a rejection of an emergency requirement for rent controls. Therefore, although rent control ordinances may continue to contain declarations of emergency, n557 an emergency no longer appears to be necessary for their validity.

§ 43.04(c)(3) Federal Preemption.

Municipalities have never applied rent controls to housing owned and operated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. But some municipalities did, however, apply rent controls to various forms of federally subsidized housing. Courts tended to upheld the application of rent controls to subsidized housing, rejecting arguments based on preemption and impairment of contact. n558 In 1975, however, the Department of Housing and Urban Development issued an administrative regulation that preempted rent controls for federally subsidized housing, but permitted their application to federally insured but unsubsidized units. n559

Current federal regulations provide that HUD will generally not interfere in the regulation of rents by a rent control board or agency with respect to unsubsidized housing projects with mortgages insured or held by HUD. n560 However, the regulations provide that HUD will preempt the regulation of rents under certain conditions. In particular, preemption may occur if HUD determines that a decision of a rent control board prevents a mortgagor from achieving a level of residential income necessary to adequately maintain and operate the housing project, which includes an inability to meet financial obligations under the mortgage. n561 The regulations contemplate that the mortgagor will initiate the effort to obtain this preemption. n562

The situation is different with respect to housing projects with mortgages insured or held by HUD that also benefit from designated federal subsidies. The subsidy programs include those for interest reduction payments under section 236 of the National Housing Act, below market interest rates under section 221(d)(3) and (5) of the National Housing Act, direct loans at below market interest rates under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, and some assistance payments under Sections 8 and 23 of the United States Housing Act of 1937. n563 HUD has determined that "it is necessary and desirable to minimize defaults by the mortgagor in its financial obligations" with respect to these projects, and to assist mortgagors to preserve the continued viability of the projects as a housing resource for low income families. n564 Accordingly, the regulations preempt "the entire field of rent regulation" with respect to these projects. n565 The regulations provide that a mortgagor can apply to HUD for an increase in rental charges and that HUD will notify the rent control board or entity that it is processing the application and that HUD has "preempted the entire field of rent regulation by a board acting pursuant to state or local law as it affects the project." n566

HUD regulations also make preemptive provision for housing projects that are owned by HUD itself. Not surprisingly, the regulations provide that HUD has "exclusive jurisdiction over the rents of all projects which it owns, irrespective of the existence, or the provisions, of any State or local rent control law or ordinance." n567 They also provide that HUD will notify the local rent control board that it is considering an increase in rent and that it will provide the board with a schedule of any new rents. n568

§ 43.04(c)(4) Antitrust.

By their very nature, rent controls constitute a form of price fixing, which, under certain circumstances, is prohibited conduct under federal antitrust laws. n569 For a number of years, however, it appeared that municipal rent controls would be exempt from antitrust laws under the state action exemption first recognized in 1945 in Parker v. Brown. n570 Beginning in 1978, however, the Supreme Court, in a series of decisions, established that the state action exemption applies to municipalities only if they are acting pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. n571 Although this exemption standard would seem to be met when controls are imposed pursuant to state enabling legislation, it is less certain when they are enacted in the absence of such a statute.

Based on those decisions, the issue of whether local rent controls violate federal antitrust law became a viable one and was brought before the Supreme Court in Fisher v. City of Berkeley. n572 There the Court held that rent controls, as enacted in a Berkeley ordinance, did not violate antitrust laws. In so holding, the Court did not address the issue of immunity, but rather held that the city's unilateral imposition of rent controls lacked the element of concerted action that was necessary for an antitrust violation.

Initially, the Court noted that a state statute "should be struck down on pre emption grounds 'only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.'" n573 The Court acknowledged that had "the owners of residential rental property in Berkeley voluntarily banded together to stabilize rents in the city, their activities would not be saved from antitrust attack by claims that they had set reasonable prices out of solicitude for the welfare of their tenants." n574 However, it stated that the Court had long required that price fixing be the result of concerted activity. Thus, the city's unilateral imposition of rents did not violate the antitrust laws. n575

The Court also noted that this was not a "hybrid" form of restraint, previously recognized as impermissible, in which some degree of participatory power to set price levels is given to market participants. While tenants under a rent control ordinance have some power to trigger enforcement, the actual rent ceilings themselves were exclusively set by a rent board. This avoided the "hybrid" nature of regulations invalidated in previous cases. n576

§ 43.04(c)(5) Substantive Due Process.

Since the Supreme Court's 1934 decision in Nebbia v. New York, n577 it has applied a deferential standard of review for economic legislation, stating that it must be reasonably related to a proper legislative purpose. n578 The Supreme Court has reaffirmed this standard in the context of rent control. n579

Lower courts have also evaluated rent controls from a substantive due process standpoint. In doing so, they have in essence articulated two prongs to the due process analysis. First, as established by Nebbia, regulations must be rationally or reasonably related to a legitimate purpose. Second, the regulation must not be confiscatory, but must allow for a "just and reasonable return." n580

The first prong of due process protection requires that both the ordinance in general, and the particular components of the controls, constitute rational means to a legitimate end. Although the constitutionality of rent control in general is well established, any particular ordinance itself must serve legitimate purposes. n581 Rent control ordinances typically state that their purpose is to alleviate problems attendant to housing shortages. Courts have held that facts supporting such an asserted purpose will be presumed in the absence of any showing to the contrary. n582 However, they have also indicated that the nonexistence of such facts can be established. n583

Even when an ordinance in general serves legitimate purposes, courts will consider whether particular provisions of the ordinance reasonably serve those purposes. Again, a deferential standard will typically apply, and courts will not require mathematical precision. For this reason, courts have usually upheld challenges to specific components of rent control programs. For example, the New Jersey Supreme Court upheld, against a due process challenge, a rent control adjustment method that limited rent increases to a percentage of a general economic index, rather than to actual increases in a landlord's operating costs. The court stated that the scheme needed only to be a rational means of achieving a fair return, which it was. n584

The deferential due process assessment of particular components of rent control laws is also illustrated by the Supreme Court's decision in Pennell v. San Jose. n585 Although the legitimacy of the rent control statute as a whole was not challenged, the plaintiff argued that a tenant hardship provision was facially invalid since it served no purpose but to transfer wealth from landlords to tenants. The Supreme Court rejected the challenge, stating that a "legitimate and rational goal of price . . . regulation is the protection of consumer welfare," which was clearly served by the provision. n586

The second and more significant dimension of the due process inquiry engaged in by state courts is that the regulation not be confiscatory. Courts have equated this with the requirement that rent control measures provide landlords with a "just and reasonable return." n587 This standard appears to have been derived from cases involving price controls for public utilities, in which the Supreme Court stated that, to be constitutional, rates must not be confiscatory -- a term it contrasted with "just and reasonable." n588 The requirement that rent controls not be confiscatory, but permit a just and reasonable return, is similar to a formulation that appears in the regulatory takings context. n589

Two leading cases from the mid-1970s illustrate the basic focus of the "just and reasonable" return requirement. In Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, n590 the New Jersey Supreme Court established that, to be constitutional, price controls must permit an efficient landlord to obtain a just and reasonable return on the investment; otherwise they would be deemed confiscatory and invalid. In making this determination, the court emphasized that the rate of the return need not be as high as before regulation, nor provide as high a return as investing the money elsewhere. Rather, the return should be commensurate with levels of return in an enterprise with similar risks. n591

The court stated that, in most instances, the issue of reasonable return is a mixed question of law and fact and will turn on the actual operation of the controls. For this reason an ordinance will be confiscatory on its face only when it is so restrictive as to preclude any possibility of a fair return. n592 The ordinance in question, which permitted landlords to obtain annual increases as a matter of course, and to obtain special increases under certain conditions, was not facially invalid. n593

The California Supreme Court applied a similar analysis in Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley. n594 There, the court stated that an ordinance was valid if it was reasonably calculated to eliminate excessive rents and provided landlords with a just and reasonable return. n595 The court stated that whether an ordinance was confiscatory must usually be assessed by actual results, and that an ordinance is facially confiscatory if it cannot avoid confiscatory results when administered. n596

Under that standard, the court held the Berkeley ordinance, which prohibited any adjustments in rents except under a unit by unit method, invalid. The court observed that a scheme that retained rent at the same level, without a means of adjustment, would necessarily be confiscatory. n597 It indicated that an adjustment mechanism was constitutionally necessary to provide for changes in circumstances and special situations when base rent does not reflect market conditions. Although the ordinance had an adjustment method, the court found it to be extremely cumbersome and would inevitably result in unreasonable delays. The effect of the delays would be to deny a reasonable return. n598

In most cases, courts have upheld rent control provisions against constitutional due process challenges, finding that provisions provide for just and reasonable returns. n599 This is not surprising, since almost all rent control ordinances provide for some form of rent adjustments. n600

§ 43.04(c)(6) Takings.

The Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704-07(4) prohibits the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. The Supreme Court has held that this requires just compensation not only when the government explicitly and intentionally takes property, but also when government actions, though not explicitly involving a taking of property, effectively result in a taking.

The Supreme Court has articulated different standards for cases in which it is alleged that government regulation has resulted in a taking. One involves a physical invasion, or physical occupation, of the property in question. Cases of this type are ones in which the government physically invades a landowner's possessory interest or authorizes others to do so. n601 A physical invasion will always result in a taking. The Supreme Court has explained that the reason for the distinction is that a physical invasion of a person's property "is a government intrusion of an unusually serious character." n602

Other standards for takings resulting from government regulation focus more on the economic harm to the landowner. Thus, in Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Council, n603 the Court stated that a taking would occur if the regulation deprives an owner of all economically beneficial use of the land. Short of that, in Penn Central Transportation Co. v. City of New York, n604 the Court said that a takings analysis would involve an evaluation of several factors, including the character of the government action, the economic impact of the regulation on the claimant, and the extent to which the regulation has interfered with distinct investment backed expectations.

In Lingle v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., n605 the Court noted that, in earlier cases, it had stated that a taking might be found if a regulation does not substantially advance a legitimate state interest. But in Lingle, the Court departed from that formulation. It stated that the "substantially advances" inquiry > reveals nothing about the magnitude or character of the burden a particular regulation imposes upon private property rights. Nor does it provide any information about how any regulatory burden is distributed among property owners. In consequence, this test does not help to identify those regulations whose effects are functionally comparable to government appropriation or invasion of private property. n606

The Court concluded that the test was not a valid method of determining whether a regulatory taking has occurred. n607

Rent controls are certainly subject to scrutiny under a takings analysis. Such controls have an economic impact on the landowner, and could be evaluated in light of the multi-factor balancing formula articulated in the Penn Central case. However, application of that formula in cases outside of the rent control context often does not result in a conclusion that there has been a taking. And the separate takings standard from the Lucas case will probably be difficult to meet when a rent control ordinance is at issue. n608 Nonetheless, if a rent control scheme does not permit a landlord to obtain any rate of return on the landlord's investment, a taking could be found. n609

In a 1997 decision, Richardson v. City and County of Honolulu, n610 Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that a Honolulu rent control ordinance was constitutionally infirm because it failed to substantially further its stated goal of creating affordable housing. n611 The ordinance applied to condominium units that were built on leased land. It did limit the ability of the ground lessor to increase the rents, but it did not prevent the lessee-condominium owner from obtaining a premium from a transferee. The court said, of this arrangement:

> The absence of a mechanism that prevents lessees from capturing the net present value of the reduced land rent in the form of a premium, means that the Ordinance will not substantially further its goal of creating affordable owner occupied housing in Honolulu. Incumbent owner occupants who sell to those who intend to occupy the apartment will charge a premium for the benefit of living in a rent controlled condominium. The price of housing ultimately will remain the same. The Ordinance thus effects a regulatory taking. n612

The case provides support for the idea that a rent control ordinance can effect a taking. However, it should be observed that Ninth Circuit employed the takings test that the United States Supreme Court rejected in the Lingle decision. n613

In some instances, the effect of a rent control law, particularly where it restricts the termination of a leasehold, might arguably constitute a physical invasion. Indeed, in the late 1980s, several federal appellate courts struck down rent controls involving mobile homes as physical invasions. The Supreme Court subsequently rejected this position; but it suggested that extreme forms of control might constitute physical takings.

The genesis of the physical invasion analysis for rent control laws was in the Supreme Court's 1982 decision in Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan Cable CATV Co. , n614 in which it held that a New York law that permitted cable television companies to install cable on private buildings and pay owners one dollar a year was a physical invasion and thus a taking. The Court acknowledged that it had permitted substantial regulation of private property in other contexts, but stated that it had long treated physical invasions differently. Such an invasion interferes with the power to exclude, "one of the most treasured strands in an owner's bundle of rights." n615 The Court held that the New York law contributed to such a physical invasion, since it gave a cable company a legal right to physically occupy the owner's land. n616

According to the Court, it was irrelevant that the occupation was by a third party rather than the state, since the invasion was authorized by state law. It also said that its decision was consistent with cases in which it had upheld regulation of the landlord-tenant relationship, since none of those decisions involved a physical invasion of property. n617

The Loretto holding provided an analytical springboard to challenge certain rent control laws. In particular, rent control provisions, such as eviction controls, that limit a landlord's ability to terminate a leasehold arguably constitute a physical invasion and a taking.

A landlord sought to bring the issue before the Supreme Court in Fresh Pond Shopping Center, Inc. v. Callahan. n618 There, a rent control ordinance required landlords to obtain permission before removing rental property from the market. The rent control board denied permission to an owner who wanted to demolish an apartment building for a parking lot. The ordinance was upheld as constitutional by a Massachusetts trial court and affirmed without opinion by an equally divided Massachusetts Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for lack of a substantial federal question. Dissenting, Justice Rehnquist argued that refusing to let a landlord demolish a building and forcing the landlord to keep it as an apartment was analogous to the physical invasion in Loretto. He said that it constituted a transfer of the property's reversionary interest from the landlord to the tenant. n619

Notwithstanding the Supreme Court's action in the Fresh Pond Shopping Center case, two federal circuits used the Loretto analysis to strike down rent controls involving mobile home parks. In the first case, Hall v. City of Santa Barbara, n620 the Ninth Circuit addressed a rent control ordinance that required tenants to be offered leases of unlimited duration, terminable at will by the tenant but terminable by the landlord only for good cause. Tenants could also sell their leasehold interest when they moved, thus giving them, rather than the landlord, the right to select successors to the tenancy. The ordinance also permitted an indexed rent increase a year, and a ten percent increase when the space became vacant. n621

The court held that the facts set forth in the pleadings amounted to a taking under the Loretto analysis. The court noted that a right to occupy property in perpetuity is the type of interest protected by the takings clause, and that the ordinance in effect transferred that interest to the tenants. Particularly significant here was the fact that tenants could transfer their interest indefinitely to others, which distinguished the case from Fresh Pond Shopping Center. n622 In sum, "the landlord has no meaningful say as to who will live on the property, now or in the future." n623 The court concluded that the ordinance thus authorized a physical occupation by a third party, as in Loretto.

A similar result was reached several years later by the Third Circuit in Pinewood Estates v. Barnegat Township Leveling Board. n624 Relying on Loretto, the court held that a rent control ordinance, when operating in concert with a state law that imposed eviction controls and permitted tenants to sell their leaseholds, constituted a physical invasion. Employing an analysis similar to that used in Hall, the court concluded that the combined effect of the laws was to grant tenants an interest in perpetuity. n625

Although the cases involved rent controls for mobile homes, the Hall and Pinewood Estates decisions raised broader questions regarding when rent controls might constitute a taking. As a practical matter, to be effective, rent controls must place some limitations upon a landlord's ability to evict tenants or convert the premises to other uses. The Hall and Pinewood Estates decisions suggested that in more extreme forms such restrictions might be perceived as authorizing physical invasion by third parties.

In a 1992 decision, however, Yee v. Escondido, n626 the United States Supreme Court rejected a physical invasion claim involving a mobile home rent control ordinance. In Yee the Court reviewed a rent control ordinance very similar to those struck down in the Hall and Pinewood Estates decisions. As in those decisions, a rent control ordinance was combined with a state statute permitting a landlord to terminate the lease only for nonpayment of rent or when the owner desired to convert the property to another use. The statute gave tenants, rather than the landlord, the right to transfer the leasehold interest when the tenant moved. n627 The landlords argued that, as in Hall and Pinewood Estates, this in effect granted to tenants and their successors the right to permanently occupy the land, which amounted to a physical invasion under Loretto.

In a unanimous decision, the Supreme Court disagreed, holding that this did not constitute a taking by physical invasion. The Court began its analysis by noting that a physical taking occurs "only where it requires the landowner to submit to the physical occupation of land." n628 The Court said that, in this case, the landlords had voluntarily rented their property to mobile home owners. The tenants were not forced upon them by the government. The Court also emphasized that the state law provided that an owner who wished to change the use of the property could evict tenants with six months notice. n629 Thus, landlords were not required to keep tenants and were not deprived of their right to exclude others.

The Court did state, however, that a different case would be presented if the statute on its face, or as applied, "compelled a landlord over objection to rent his property or to refrain in perpetuity from terminating a tenancy." n630 Here, though, the statute only regulated the use of property by regulating the landlord-tenant relationship, which was something that the government could do.

Yee effectively overruled Hall and Pinewood Estates, both of which involved statutory schemes almost identical to that in Yee. At the same time, however, the Court did indicate that extreme forms of controls might constitute a taking. At a minimum this would require significant restrictions on removal of rental property, which did not exist in Yee. n631

An example of an extreme form of rent control that was found to create a taking is provided by Aspen Tarpon Springs Limited Partnership v. Stuart, n632 a 1994 decision by the Florida Court of Appeals. At issue there was an ordinance that required mobile home park owners desiring to change the use of their property either to purchase the tenant's mobile homes or to pay to have their tenants' mobile homes moved to other mobile home parks. The court noted that the evidence that had been presented to the trial court had demonstrated that neither option was economically feasible. As a result, the court concluded that the ordinance effectively authorized a permanent physical occupation of the owner's property and an unconstitutional taking. n633 This holding appears to be consistent with the Supreme Court's discussion in Yee, which stated that legislation that compelled an owner to rent the property would constitute a taking.

It may also be appropriate to refer, in this context, to a 1994 decision of the New York Court of Appeals. In Manocherian v. Lenox Hill Hospital, n634 some apartment building owners challenged the constitutionality of a "rent-stabilization" n635 statute that required the landowners to provide renewal leases to non-private hospitals, for the benefit of their employees. Under the legislation, the hospital had the right to sublease apartments to affiliated employees without first obtaining the landowners' consent. The subleases were "durationally unrestricted and open ended." n636 Because the rents were subject to "stabilization," the landowners were not able to charge rents at the level that a free market would permit. And the arrangement could last as long as the corporate existence of the hospital.

The underlying purpose of rent stabilization legislation is to "ameliorate the dislocations and risk of widespread lack of suitable dwellings." n637 But the court perceived the legislation at issue here as being "designed essentially to subsidize the nonprofit hospital's special fringe benefit to some of its special health care employees." n638 And it concluded that the arrangement amounted to a taking. It stated:

> A proffered State interest, which by definition should serve and protect the general populace on a fairly and uniformly applied basis, should not be countenanced when, as occurs here, the statute instead benefits one special class for an essentially unrelated economic redistribution and societal relationship ... Moreover, the employer [the hospital] here is transformed into the de facto landlord and receives a benefit directly related to conserving its capital or operating expenditures. As a health care provider, it would otherwise have to recoup those costs by direct expense reimbursement formulas or charges, like others similarly situated, for the true, full cost of medical services rendered in its community. This statute thus diverts and subverts that equal treatment regime. It does not even really protect housing for the subtenant employees as such, and certainly provides no benefit to the citizenry at large on a fair opportunity and equal access basis. Rather, it bestows a State enacted indirect gift to a preferred supplicant, the nonoccupying prime tenant, underwritten by the improperly burdened property owners...
>
> ...
>
> We conclude that the peripheral and generalized State interests offered as justification for the regulatory mandates of [the legislation] fail to sustain the legislation, as constitutionally required for such State action. n639

The court also indicated that it found support for its analysis in the argument that the statute had effected a taking of the landowners' reversion, but it did not consider that to be "dispositive by itself in this case." n640 It ended up basing its conclusion that there had been a taking on the failure of the legislation to substantially advance a legitimate state interest. n641

§ 43.04(d) Overview of Rent Control Provisions.

§ 43.04(d)(1) Coverage and Exemptions.

Although World War II rent controls regulated all forms of housing, modern ordinances usually regulate only multi family residential units. Thus, hotels, rooming houses, and single family homes are usually not subject to rent controls. n642

Ordinances also typically exempt various categories of multi family dwellings. Common exemptions are buildings of fewer than three or four units, luxury units, and charitable housing. n643 New construction is also usually exempt from rent controls, so that controls do not discourage new construction. This sort of exemption might take several forms, including a permanent exemption for a new development; an initial exemption that permits establishment of a base rent, but that provides for regulation of subsequent increases; or an exemption that applies for a specified period. n644

There has been considerable litigation over whether particular dwellings fall within an exemption. n645 Such cases typically turn on the intent behind the exemption. Exemptions have been upheld against legal challenges, including equal protection challenges. n646

§ 43.04(d)(2) Eviction Controls.

Almost all rent control ordinances include provisions limiting a landlord's ability to evict tenants. n647 These limitations are critical when an ordinance has vacancy decontrol, n648 since a landlord could otherwise defeat rent control objectives by frequently evicting tenants. Even under ordinances that do not have vacancy decontrols, eviction controls are important to guarantee the security of rent tenure.

Eviction control provisions take various forms, but usually impose substantive limits on the ability to evict tenants. Ordinances typically permit eviction only for "good cause," such as nonpayment of rent; conduct that constitutes a nuisance; illegal use of the premises; or some other material violation of the lease. n649 Eviction is also generally permitted when a landlord seeks to permanently remove the property from the housing market or when a landlord or close relatives of the landlord intends to occupy the property. n650

The initial issue presented by local eviction controls is whether they are preempted by state laws. In New Jersey, for example, state law sets out grounds for tenant eviction, and this has been held to preempt eviction controls in rent control ordinances. n651 Courts are divided, however, on whether statutes that provide landlords with the right to evict holdover tenants preempt eviction control provisions. Several courts have held they do, reasoning that the state statutes created a substantive right for landlords to terminate leases at the end of a term, which cannot be denigrated by rent control provisions. n652

It has also been held, however, that such statutes are procedural, rather than substantive, in nature, and therefore do not conflict with substantive rent control provisions. n653 Under this view, a statute permitting eviction at the end of a term provides the landlords with a way to exercise property rights once the consensual basis for a tenant's occupancy comes to an end. n654 From there, some courts have reasoned that the statute did not prohibit municipalities from imposing substantive limits on the landlord's right to end the tenancy.

In Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, n655 the California Supreme Court noted that state eviction statutes were procedural in nature and generally did not preempt substantive eviction controls in a rent control regime. However, the court held that the state's summary eviction scheme did preempt a rent control requirement that a landlord first obtain an eviction certificate from the rent control board. The court held that requiring landlords to obtain a certificate of eviction would raise procedural barriers between the landlord and judicial relief. In particular, the elaborate procedures for obtaining a certificate would defeat the summary nature of the reposses a certificate would defeat the summary nature of the repossession procedure. n656

§ 43.04(d)(3) Vacancy Decontrols.

Vacancy decontrols, which exist in some form in about half of all rent control ordinances, provide that, when a unit becomes vacant, rent controls are temporarily or permanently removed. Most common are ordinances that provide that the initial rent for a new tenant will be set by the market, which initial rent will then operate as the new base for calculating subsequent rent increases subject to rent control provisions. Some ordinances permit the market to set new rents, but place a ceiling on the amount. In a few extreme forms, units become exempt altogether from rent controls. n657

What constitutes a vacancy for decontrol purposes will, of course, depend on the statute involved. Several courts have held that when the dwelling remains occupied despite a nominal change in tenants, there is no vacancy. For example, one court held that no vacancy occurred when there was a change in tenants, but the same subtenant never left the property. n658 The court reasoned that the purpose of the decontrol provision, which permitted a ten percent rent increase upon vacancy, was to permit recovery of "vacancy loss," that would not occur if the property were never unoccupied. It has also been held that there is no vacancy when a subtenant replaces the tenant. n659

Another issue relating to vacancy decontrols concerns whether particular persons may succeed to a tenant's interest in the property. Most ordinances with decontrol provisions provide that certain persons, usually family members, who have lived in the unit with the tenant, may succeed to the tenant's interest. The effect of such a succession is to avoid the effects of decontrol, in particular the landlord's right to charge a higher rent. These provisions operate in different ways, but most require that the successor be related to the tenant and have lived in the unit prior to the end of the tenancy. Ordinances often provide for succession when the previous tenant has either died or voluntarily vacated the apartment, although the requirements might be more rigorous in the latter instance. n660

The question of who qualifies as "family" and successor is therefore an important question. New York courts in particular have struggled with succession rights under New York City's rent control scheme, which permits rent control apartments to become rent-stabilized (which is a less onerous classification) upon a tenant's death. However, a landlord may not dispossess a member of the deceased's family who had been living with him or her. Although lower courts initially interpreted "family" in a traditional sense, limiting succession rights to blood relatives, in more recent years several courts have recognized less traditional relationships. n661 For example, in Zimmerman v. Burton the court held that the surviving partner of an unmarried, cohabiting couple qualified as immediate family, analogizing it to marriage under the particular facts. n662

In Braschi v. Stahl Associates Co. , n663 the New York Court of Appeals went further and held that the surviving partner in a long term homosexual relationship could qualify as a family member for successor rights. The plurality decision stated that successor rights should be extended to relationships having "all of the normal family characteristics." n664 The court emphasized that this would serve the purposes of decontrol provisions by distinguishing between family like relationships deserving protection and those of mere roommates or distant relatives. n665

It should be noted that vacancy decontrol arrangements can also give rise to constitutional issues. In 1997, a federal district court rejected an equal protection challenge to a New Jersey vacancy decontrol provision. n666 The claim in that case was that it was an equal protection violation to permit vacancy decontrol for owners of single units but not to permit it for owners of multiple units. The court found the distinction to be rationally related to the goal of affordable housing, noting that there was testimony that large scale landlords tended to be "less caring" and to be "rent maximizers," and that vacancy decontrol, in that context, could lead to landlord harassment of tenants in order to cause them to vacate units and bring about an increase in rents. n667

§ 43.04(d)(4) Rent Adjustments.

The central and most problematic aspect of rent controls is the matter of adjustments for rent increases. This typically involves establishing an initial base rent, often by rollback provisions, and providing for annual rent increases, on either a general or individual basis. Finally, almost all rent control ordinances also provide landlords with a right to petition for an individual adjustment to ensure a "fair return."

Ordinances typically establish the initial base rent by a rollback provision, which sets the rent at the level charged at an earlier point in time. n668 The purpose of the rollback provision is to offset rent increases that took place in anticipation of rent controls. n669 Rollback provisions have been upheld by courts against various challenges, including challenges based on impairment of contract, equal protection, and due process. n670

Once a base rent has been established, almost all controls provide for periodic adjustments in rent. These increases are the central and most complicated component of rent control laws and have generated substantial litigation and controversy. The methods and formulas used are quite diverse, and the actual computations are often very complex.

As a general matter, however, rent adjustment mechanisms fall into some overlapping categories and share some common features. Most adjustment provisions include some method for making an annual across-the-board adjustment, as well as a procedure permitting landlords to petition for an individual "fair return" adjustment. n671

Two basic methods have been used to determine across-the-board rent increases. One method involves a form of individualized return on investment in property. The ordinance will generally set out criteria, guidelines, or factors that a rent control board or administrator is to use. n672 An example of this was a Massachusetts rent control scheme, under which local boards calculated a "fair net operating income." n673 Although this method typically confers substantial authority on the board or administrator, it has been upheld in court decisions. n674

Second, and more common, are forms of general percentage increases using either a fixed percentage or a percentage tied to an index. n675 The most common indexes used are the Consumer Price Index or Cost of Living Index. n676 The obvious advantage of fixed percentage or index systems is that unlike investment-based increases, they require minimal calculation and administration. On the other hand, they lack the precision of a more individualized approach.

For this reason, controls that use a percentage approach also provide for some individual adjustment for certain costs. n677 Permissible costs typically include property taxes and utility costs, which are largely unavoidable and objective in their determination. n678 To encourage investment and housing quality, most rent control ordinances also permit landlords to recover the cost of capital improvements. n679

In addition to the annual across the board rent increases described above, almost all rent control ordinances permit landlords to petition for individual adjustments to ensure a "fair return." Ordinances use a variety of formulae in determining what constitutes "fair return," including return on value, return on investment, maintenance of net operating income, and combinations of the same. n680

The above rent adjustment mechanisms, both across the board increases and provisions for "fair return" adjustments, have produced substantial litigation. Courts have held that rent controls may not be confiscatory, and must provide for a "just and reasonable" return. n681 The primary issue therefore has been whether a particular method meets that basic standard. Despite numerous challenges, courts have struck down rent control schemes in only a few cases.

Courts have generally said that the constitutionally mandated "fair and reasonable" return standard does not require any particular form or formula, as long as there is assurance of a just return. n682 For this reason courts have held that various formulae are permissible, including fixed percentages or index percentages, n683 as long as provision is made for fair return in individual or hardship cases. Courts have also held that across the board increases need not be based on actual operating expenses or even a general inflation index. n684 In so holding, they have emphasized that more generalized standards are neither arbitrary nor capricious, and provide a much less burdensome method for adjusting rents.

Most courts have suggested that the validity of generalized increases is premised on the availability of individual "fair return" increases where necessary. The New Jersey Supreme Court has indicated that, to be valid, controls must provide for such individual increases. A New Jersey court has also held that limiting increases to a maximum 25% a year was unconstitutional, since it did not provide for landlord hardships that might surpass that amount. n685

Courts have also held unconstitutional individual adjustment mechanisms that involve unreasonable delays. For example, in Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley n686 the California Supreme Court invalidated a rent control ordinance that provided no across the board increase and instead permitted landlords to petition for increases on an individual basis. The court reasoned that the volume of potential petitions was so great that time delays in processing applications would result in denials of a "fair and reasonable" return. n687

The New Jersey Supreme Court applied a similar analysis in Helmsley v. Ft. Lee, n688 in which a rent control arrangement provided for a fixed across the board increase of 2.5% and the right to petition individually for a "fair return." The court found that the 2.5% increase was clearly insufficient to cover operating expenses and that the individual adjustment provisions would result in several years' delay. The court concluded that the combined effect of the two provisions, neither of which was unconstitutional in itself, was invalid because it would result in an erosion of income. n689

At the same time, however, courts have held that an ordinance does not need to provide general adjustments if individual adjustment petitions will not result in unreasonable delay. In Fisher v. City of Berkeley n690 the California Supreme Court upheld a revised Berkeley ordinance that permitted landlords to consolidate petitions in the same building and provided sufficient administrative support to process petitions. Similarly, the court held that a mobile home ordinance that provided only for individual petitions was not unconstitutional since it involved a far smaller number of units than in Birkenfeld and required that petitions be processed within 105 days. n691

Despite general judicial recognition that ordinances must provide a "fair return," courts have encountered difficulties in assessing individual formulas for determining how a"fair return" is to be achieved. In part this reflects conceptual and practical difficulties inherent in almost any fair return standard.

Landlords have often argued that they are entitled to a fair return based on the value of their property, which, with appreciating property values, would tend to result in higher increases than under other standards. Although some early rent control decisions reflected the view that a return on value standard was constitutionally required, n692 more recent decisions have rejected that position. n693 In doing so, courts have suggested that the test is circuitous, since value turns on a property's income potential, which would be based on value. At least one court has suggested that this makes the test itself infirm, n694 although most courts would apparently find it permissible but not mandatory.

Courts have generally upheld return on investment standards, often in response to arguments that a return on value standard is required. n695 A return on investment approach can take various forms, but typically permits recovery of operating expenses and mortgage payments plus some percentage return on the landlord's original cash equity in the property. A variation on this would be to adjust the original cash investment for inflation.

§ 43.04(d)(5) Maintenance Requirements.

Rent control ordinances typically include some form of landlord maintenance requirements. n696 One form of maintenance requirement permits tenants to petition for rent reductions if there has been a decline in services provided by landlords or if there are substantial defects in the dwelling. The purpose of such a provision is to avoid a backdoor increase in rent by a decrease in services. n697 For this reason courts have indicated that the primary issue is whether the decrease in services reflects a diminution in value of the rental. n698

Cases involving rent reduction petitions have usually arisen in the context of decreases in services. For example, the closing of a swimming pool has been held to be a substantial decrease in services, justifying a rent reduction. n699 It was also held that the loss of a live in supervisor, together with a decrease in heat, water and janitorial services, justified a rent reduction. n700 And a District of Columbia court ordered a rent refund in a case involving a 45 day loss of air conditioning. n701 On the other hand, a court has indicated that temporary interruptions, not the fault of the landlord, do not justify a rent reduction. n702

Some courts have permitted local rent control boards to decrease rent levels for substantial defects or decreases in services. The idea is that, since a board is empowered to deny an increase due to defects, it may also effect a rent reduction. n703

The second type of maintenance requirement typically found in rent control ordinances provides for denial of rent increases unless the dwelling meets applicable housing code requirements and there has been no decrease in services. This not only helps prevent backdoor rent increases, but it also serves the goal of preventing deterioration of rental units. Thus, courts have upheld denials of rent increases when a landlord failed to provide adequate security measures or when a unit violated local housing codes. n704

The validity of such code compliance requirements has been challenged on several occasions. In one early case, Modular Concepts v. South Brunswick, n705 a New Jersey appellate court struck down a code compliance provision that conditioned rent increases on compliance with all state, county, and local health and building codes. The court said that the provision was unrelated to the stated rent leveling purposes of the ordinance and might deny the owner a fair return on investment. Further, the provision might result in excessive penalties, because the amount of the denied rent increase might exceed the statutory penalties for noncompliance. Finally, requiring proof of compliance from three levels of government was unreasonable and impracticable, since even the most trivial violation might be used to deny a rent increase. n706

Several years later, however, the New Jersey Supreme Court upheld the validity of a provision that prohibited rent increases for units lacking a certification that the dwelling was in "substantial compliance" with municipal housing codes. n707 Only the landlord's certification was required in the case of periodic rent increases. For hardship petitions or capital improvement petitions, however, the landlord needed to obtain a certification from a municipal department. n708

The court held that the certification provision was valid, carefully distinguishing, rather than overruling, the previous Modular Concepts decision. The court emphasized that the certification requirement was clearly related to the rent control ordinance, noting that its goal was to provide tenants "decent housing within their means." The court also noted that the certification requirement was less burdensome than the requirements in Modular Concepts, since it required only one, rather than three, approvals. The court also held that denial of rent increases was not a penalty, since its purpose was regulatory and not punitive. n709

§ 43.04(d)(6) Removals.

Landlords often have a strong incentive to remove property from the rental market and devote it to other purposes. Most rent control ordinances, however, are premised on the assumption that a housing shortage exists, and that rents would be excessive if they not regulated. Removal of property from the rental market would exacerbate the underlying problem.

For this reason, removal of rental property presents potential problems for effective rent controls.

Municipalities take different approaches to removals. Many do not attempt to restrict them, and provide in their ordinances that removal of property from the rental market provides a justification for eviction of tenants. A number of municipalities, however, restrict removals of rent-controlled property in some manner. In some instances, ordinances prohibit removal for the purpose of condominium conversion. n710 These provisions address what is perhaps the most common motivation behind removals. Moreover, rent-controlled property is often subject to more general state or local restrictions on condominium conversion. n711

A few ordinances have gone further and regulate removals for any purpose, including demolition of the structure. These ordinances typically require that the owner obtain a permit from the rent control board before removal can occur. An example of this is a Cambridge, Massachusetts ordinance that conditioned permit approval on consideration of factors that included the hardship to the tenants and the impact of the removal on the shortage of decent housing accommodations. n712

Removal restrictions have met with mixed reception in the courts. The Massachusetts Supreme Court indicated that because removal restrictions are not within the normal scope of municipal power, they would be valid only if deemed necessary to implement rent control objectives. The court concluded that this standard had been met in Flynn v. City of Cambridge, n713 in which it upheld a removal regulation that did not prohibit condominium conversion, but did require that converted units remain within the rental market. n714 In other decisions, however, the court held that particular removal restrictions were not authorized by rent control enabling statutes. n715 For example, in Greater Boston Real Estate Bd. v. Boston, n716 the court held that a removal restriction that prohibited condominium conversion even when no tenant was evicted and no units were removed from the rental market was not authorized by the enabling statute.

Removal restrictions can also draw the attention of the state legislature. In Nash v. City of Santa Monica, n717 the California Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a removal control that, in effect, prohibited any removals of rental property. Thereafter, the California legislature enacted legislation that prohibited public bodies from compelling an owner of residential property to continue in the rental market. The statute specifically declared its intent to overrule the Nash decision to the extent that it prohibited landlords from going out of business. n718 In subsequent decisions, California appellate courts held that removal controls that required a permit before any removal were preempted by the statute. n719

Removal restrictions, when combined with eviction controls, raise potential takings concerns. It could be contended, for example, that such restrictions amount to a physical occupation of the property. As previously discussed, this argument has its genesis in the Supreme Court's decision in Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., n720 in which it stated that government-required occupation of property by third parties constitutes a physical taking. n721 This has led to arguments that removal prohibitions result in physical occupations.

To date, such arguments have met with little success. In Fresh Pond Shopping Center v. Callahan, n722 the United States Supreme Court dismissed an appeal, n723 involving a challenge to an ordinance that prohibited an owner from removing rent controlled property from the market. In that case, an owner had purchased a rent controlled apartment to demolish it and to replace it with a parking lot. The Cambridge rent control ordinance required a removal certificate, which was denied. In dismissing the appeal, the Supreme Court declined to overturn the lower court decision that there was no taking. Justice Rehnquist wrote a dissent to the dismissal, in which he said that the effect of the ordinance was to impose a physical occupation of the property similar to that recognized in Loretto. n724

The California Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a similar ordinance the following year. n725 Although the landlord did not make a takings argument, in dicta the California court suggested that Fresh Pond established that a removal prohibition would not constitute a taking. n726

The United States Supreme Court's 1992 decision in Yee v. Escondido n727 further demonstrates the difficulty of establishing that a rent control ordinance results in a physical taking. Unlike Fresh Pond and Nash, however, Yee did not involve a removal restriction. Indeed, the landowner's right to remove property and change to another use was central to the Court's conclusion that there was no physical taking. The Court observed that neither the city nor the state compelled the landowners, after having rented their property to tenants, to continue doing so. "To the contrary," noted the Court, "the Mobilehome Residency Law provides that a park owner who wishes to change the use of his land may evict his tenants, albeit with 6 or 12 months notice." n728 The Court acknowledged that it would be a different question if the statute were to "compel a landowner over his objection to rent his property or to refrain in perpetuity from terminating a tenancy." n729

Yee would therefore suggest that an extreme removal provision, which compelled a landowner to continue to rent to tenants in something like perpetuity, might constitute a taking. n730 How this squares with Fresh Pond, where the statute arguably came close to doing so, is unclear.

§ 43.04(e) Critique of Rent Control.

Rent control has long been controversial from a policy perspective. A comprehensive discussion of the pros and cons of rent controls is beyond the scope of this chapter. Rather, a short summary of the basic arguments for and against rent controls will be presented.

Rent controls are usually justified as a necessary response to housing shortages that contribute to excessive rents. n731 Proponents argue that, in the absence of regulation, landlords will take advantage of the low housing supply to charge exorbitant rents. Controls are therefore a way to stabilize rents and ensure tenant security while providing landlords with a fair return on their investment.

Next to landlords, the most critical group of rent control opponents consists of economists. Economists commonly condemn rent controls as contributing to an inefficient and improper allocation of housing resources. n732 Most of the arguments against rent controls reflect a theoretical economic analysis of problems inherent in any rent control scheme.

Perhaps the most fundamental criticism leveled against rent controls are that they create disincentives to investment and will exacerbate the very housing shortages that was the impetus for their imposition. n733 Economists state that in an unregulated market the supply of housing will naturally rise to meet demand. By their very nature, rent controls place rents below market price, which in turn will lead suppliers to invest elsewhere, thus leading to housing shortages. n734 A related criticism is that controls will also discourage maintenance of property. n735

Critics further argue that the conditions necessary to justify price controls for public utilities do not exist for the rental market and therefore cannot be justified on that basis. n736 Because public utilities exist in markets with monopoly potential, controls are viewed as necessary. The housing market, however, is usually viewed as competitive and characterized by a large number of smaller suppliers.

Finally, critics assert that rent controls are nothing but a tenant subsidy scheme, and a very inequitable one at that. n737 They claim that rent controls primarily benefit existing tenants, some of whom are well to do and have little need of protection. Conversely, potential tenants are harmed by exclusion from units and low income tenants are harmed by poor maintenance. In the long run, it is argued, rent controls harm tenants as well as landlords.

Proponents of rent control have offered some counter arguments. They note that rent controls address investment concerns by assuring landlords a "fair and reasonable" return on investments, providing for pass-throughs of capital improvement costs, and often exempting new construction from controls. n738 They have also challenged some of the underlying assumptions of the economic critique, including the competitiveness of housing markets. n739

Perhaps the most significant response by rent control proponents is their claim that criticisms of rent control tend to be only theoretical, and that there is a paucity of empirical data to support the critics' position. n740 In particular they argue that studies do not support the thesis that rent controls decrease housing supply or that they result in decreased maintenance of units. n741 Significant new construction often exists in rent controlled cities, and, when decreases in housing stock occur, they are often attributable to other factors that are not unique to cities practicing rent control. n742

The economic arguments appear to have had some impact. In 1997, for example, Massachusetts adopted the "Massachusetts Rent Control Prohibition Act," n743 which significantly limited the ability to impose rent controls in that state. One of the provisions of the legislation states that the prohibition policy "is based on the belief that the public is best served by free market rental rates for residential properties and by unrestricted home ownership." n744 Other states have also adopted legislation prohibiting or limiting rent controls. n745

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 455. See generally Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723 (1983).

(n2)Footnote 456. See § 43.04(c)(1) of this chapter.

(n3)Footnote 457. See the discussion in § 43.04(e) of this chapter.

(n4)Footnote 458. See M. Lett, Rent Control 1 (1976); Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 456-461 (1975). See also, Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135 (1921) .

(n5)Footnote 459. See M. Lett, Rent Control 1 (1976); Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 456-461 (1975); Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 456 (1975).

(n6)Footnote 460. M. Lett, Rent Control 1 (1976).

(n7)Footnote 461. Id.

(n8)Footnote 462. Rent controls were adopted in Washington, D.C., New York, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Illinois, Arizona, Delaware, Maine, and Oregon, as well as in Baltimore, Denver and Los Angeles. See M. Lett, Rent Control 20 (1976).

(n9)Footnote 463. See Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 457 (1975).

(n10)Footnote 464. 256 U.S. 135 (1924) .

(n11)Footnote 465. 256 U.S. 170 (1924) .

(n12)Footnote 466. 256 U.S. at 157 & 198-199.

(n13)Footnote 467. Chastleton Corp. v. Sinclair, 264 U.S. 543, 547-548 (1927) .

(n14)Footnote 468. See M. Lett, Rent Control 4 (1976).

(n15)Footnote 469. See Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 473-474 (1975).

(n16)Footnote 470. See M. Lett, Rent Control 3-4 (1976).

(n17)Footnote 471. Woods v. Miller, 333 U.S. 138 (1948) .

(n18)Footnote 472. See M. Lett, Rent Control 4 (1976) (listing Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Virginia and Wisconsin as having rent control laws during this period).

(n19)Footnote 473. See Inganamort v. Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298 (N.J. 1973) (discussing the evolution of New Jersey's post war rent control provisions).

(n20)Footnote 474. Compare, e.g., Warren v. Philadelphia, 115 A.2d 218 (Pa. 1955) (authority to impose rent controls within home rule power) with Tietjens v. St. Louis, 222 S.W.2d 70 (Mo. 1949) (no authority to impose rent controls in absence of specific enabling legislation). See also § 43.04(c)(1) of this chapter.

(n21)Footnote 475. For a discussion of New York City's rent control laws, see M. Lett, Rent Control 10-12 (1976).

(n22)Footnote 476. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant 503 (1980).

(n23)Footnote 477. See M. Lett, Rent Control 5 (1976).

(n24)Footnote 478. The Massachusetts legislature passed special enabling legislation in 1969 authorizing Boston to undertake rent control. 1969 Mass. Acts ch. 797. By 1975, rent controls had been "adopted in Boston, Washington, D.C., Miami Beach, Berkeley, and other localities." Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 727-728 (1983). More recently, however, Massachusetts has adopted legislation expressing a state-wide policy in favor of free rental markets and imposing significant limitations on rent controls. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. 40P §§ 1 - 5. Other states also adopted legislation in the 1990s that prohibited or limited rent controls. These developments are discussed in § 43.04(b)(3) of this chapter.

(n25)Footnote 479. Maryland enacted a state wide statute in 1973, which took effect upon termination of federal controls. Md. Ann. Code art. 53 § 45 (1973). The controls expired in 1975. Alaska enacted legislation in 1975 authorizing state wide controls.

(n26)Footnote 480. See § 43.04(c)(1) of this chapter.

(n27)Footnote 481. Rent control is practiced or expressly permitted by statute in Alaska, California, Connecticut, Florida, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, and Washington, D.C. It should be noted, however, that, in 1997, Massachusetts adopted legislation expressing a state-wide policy in favor of free rental markets and imposing significant limitations on rent controls. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. 40P §§ 1 - 5.

(n28)Footnote 482. Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 725 (1983).

(n29)Footnote 483. These developments are discussed in § 43.04(b)(3)of this chapter.

(n30)Footnote 484. See § 43.04(d)(4) of this chapter.

(n31)Footnote 485. See Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1954.50, et seq .

(n32)Footnote 486. See 1995 Cal. Stat. ch. 331 § 2. (A.B. 1164).

(n33)Footnote 487. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1954.52

(n34)Footnote 488. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1954.52.

(n35)Footnote 489. See Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704-07(4).

(n36)Footnote 490. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a.

(n37)Footnote 491. Ill. Laws 90-313 (1997). The legislation is codified at 50 Ill. Comp. Stat. 825/1 - 825/99.

(n38)Footnote 492. See 50 Ill. Comp. Stat. 825/5.

(n39)Footnote 493. See 50 Ill. Comp. Stat. 825/10.

(n40)Footnote 494. See 50 Ill. Comp. Stat. 825/5.

(n41)Footnote 495. 1997 Mass. Acts, ch. 19, § 10.

(n42)Footnote 496. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 40P § 2.

(n43)Footnote 497. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 40P § 4.

(n44)Footnote 498. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 40P § 4.

(n45)Footnote 499. See Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41, §§ 101-135.

(n46)Footnote 500. See 21A N.J. Practice Series § 41:15.

(n47)Footnote 501. See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42-84.2.

(n48)Footnote 502. See N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:42-84.1.

(n49)Footnote 503. See N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:42-84.3.

(n50)Footnote 504. See, e.g., Warren v. Philadelphia, 115 A.2d 218 (Pa. 1955) .

(n51)Footnote 505. See M. Lett, Rent Control 3-4 (1976).

(n52)Footnote 506. See, e.g., Old Colony Gardens, Inc. v. Stamford, 147 Conn. 60, 156 A.2d 515 (Conn. 1959) ; Hardy v. Housing Mgt. Co., 444 A.2d 457 (Md. Ct. App. 1982) ; Tietjens v. St. Louis, 222 S.W.2d 70 (Mo. 1949) ; Wagner v. City of Newark, 132 A.2d 794 (N.J. 1957) .

(n53)Footnote 507. See, e.g., Hardy v. Housing Mgt. Co., 444 A.2d 457 (1982) ; Wagner v. City of Newark, 24 N.J. 467, 132 A.2d 794 (1957) .

(n54)Footnote 508. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 7-148b f; N.Y. Unconsolidated Laws §§ 8601 - 8617; Fla. Ann. St. § 125.0103, 166.043.

(n55)Footnote 509. Maine, for example, repealed its rent control legislation in 1995, but the legislation provided:

> The Legislature intends to permit municipalities to continue to adopt and enforce rent control ordinances under home rule authority. A municipality that adopted rent control under the Maine Revised Statutes, Title 30-A, former chapter 167 may continue to operate a rent control program.

1995 Me. Laws ch. 194, § 2.

(n56)Footnote 510. See Warren v. Philadelphia, 115 A.2d 218, 221 (Pa. 1955) ; see also Heubeck v. Baltimore, 107 A.2d 99 (Md. 1954) ; but see, Girard v. Town of Allenstown, 428 A.2d 488 (N.H. 1981) (language applied only to procedural considerations).

(n57)Footnote 511. Hardy v. Housing Mgt. Co., 444 A.2d 457 (1982) .

(n58)Footnote 512. See Inganamort v. Borough of Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298, 306 (N.J. 1973) .

(n59)Footnote 513. See Old Colony Gardens, Inc. v. Stamford, 147 Conn. 60, 156 A.2d 515 (Conn. 1959) ; City of Miami Beach v. Fleetwood Hotel, Inc., 261 So. 2d 801 (Fla. 1972) ; Ambassador East v. City of Chicago, 77 N.E.2d 803 (Ill. 1948) ; Tietjens v. City of St. Louis, 222 S.W.2d 70 (Mo. 1949) ; Wagner v. City of Newark, 132 A.2d 794 (N.J. 1957) .

(n60)Footnote 514. See Old Colony Gardens, Inc. v. Stamford, 147 Conn. 60, 156 A.2d 515 (Conn. 1959) ; see also Wagner v. City of Newark, 132 A.2d 794 (N.J. 1957) .

(n61)Footnote 515. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1009-1010 (Cal. 1976) ; Inganamort v. Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298, 306 (N.J. 1973) .

(n62)Footnote 516. Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1009 (Cal. 1976) .

(n63)Footnote 517. See generally Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 7.2 (1980).

(n64)Footnote 518. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1010-1011 (Cal. 1976) ; Inganamort v. Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298, 307 (N.J. 1973) ; Warren v. Philadelphia, 115 A.2d 218 (Pa. 1955) .

(n65)Footnote 519. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1010-1011 (Cal. 1976) ; Inganamort v. Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298, 307 (N.J. 1973) .

(n66)Footnote 520. See Wagner v. City of Newark, 132 A.2d 794 (N.J. 1957) .

(n67)Footnote 521. See, e.g., Inganamort v. Ft. Lee, 303 A.2d 298 (N.J. 1973) .

(n68)Footnote 522. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1016-1018 (Cal. 1976) ; Lifschitz v. Miami Beach, 339 So. 2d 232 (Fla. Ct. App. 1972) ; Heubeck v. Baltimore, 107 A.2d 99, 102 (Md. 1954) ; Brunetti v. Borough of New Milford, 350 A.2d 19, 32-33 (N.J. 1975) .

(n69)Footnote 523. Heubeck v. Baltimore, 107 A.2d 99, 102 (Md. 1954) .

(n70)Footnote 524. Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1015-1016 (Cal. 1976) .

(n71)Footnote 525. Id. at 1016-1018 .

(n72)Footnote 526. For an in depth examination of the emergency requirement for rent controls and its relationship to economic substantive due process, see Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447 (1975). See also Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant 513-516 (1980).

(n73)Footnote 527. 256 U.S. 135 (1924) .

(n74)Footnote 528. 256 U.S. 170 (1924) .

(n75)Footnote 529. 256 U.S. at 156 .

(n76)Footnote 530. Id. at 157 .

(n77)Footnote 531. 264 U.S. 543 (1927) .

(n78)Footnote 532. Id. at 548-549 .

(n79)Footnote 533. For a general discussion of Lochner era substantive due process, see Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447 (1975).

(n80)Footnote 534. Adkins v. Children's Hosp., 261 U.S. 525 (1923) .

(n81)Footnote 535. Ribnik v. McBride, 277 U.S. 350 (1928) .

(n82)Footnote 536. Fairmont Creamery v. Minnesota, 274 U.S. 1 (1927) .

(n83)Footnote 537. Williams v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U.S. 235 (1928) .

(n84)Footnote 538. 291 U.S. 502 (1934) .

(n85)Footnote 539. Id. at 539 .

(n86)Footnote 540. Id.

(n87)Footnote 541. 333 U.S. 138 (1948) .

(n88)Footnote 542. 333 U.S. at 143 .

(n89)Footnote 543. 115 A.2d 218 (Pa. 1955) .

(n90)Footnote 544. 115 A.2d at 220 .

(n91)Footnote 545. Jamouneau v. Harner, 109 A.2d 640 (N.J. 1954) . See also, Russell v. Treasurer and General Receiver, 120 N.E.2d 388 (Mass. 1954) .

(n92)Footnote 546. See, e.g., Lincoln Bldg. Assocs. v. Barr, 135 N.E.2d 801 (N.Y. 1956) , appeal dismissed, 355 U.S. 12 (1957) ; see generally Baar and Keating, The Last Stand of Economic Substantive Due Process -- The Housing Emergency Requirement for Rent Control, 7 Urb. L. 447, 481-485 (1975)..

(n93)Footnote 547. Miami Beach v. Fleetwood Hotel, Inc., 261 So. 2d 801 (Fla. 1972) ; cf. City of Miami Beach v. Forte Towers, Inc.,305 So.2d 764 (Fla. 1974) (sufficient declaration of emergency present at inception of rent control ordinance, but ordinance found to be constitutionally infirm on account of an improper delegation of legislative power).

(n94)Footnote 548. See Kress, Dunlap, and Lane, Ltd. v. Downing, 193 F. Supp. 874 (D. V.I. 1961) (emergency justifying rent control legislation continued only with respect to low and medium rental housing accommodations, and did not have application to high rental housing accommodations or business accommodations).

(n95)Footnote 549. 421 F.2d 560 (2nd Cir. 1969) .

(n96)Footnote 550. Id. at 567 .

(n97)Footnote 551. Hutton Park Gardens v. Town Council of West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 12 (N.J. 1975) .

(n98)Footnote 552. Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. Superior Court, 968 P.2d 993, 1005-06 (Cal. 1999) , cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1131 (1999) . Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1022-1023 (Cal. 1976) .

(n99)Footnote 553. Westchester West No. 2 Ltd. P'ship v. Montgomery County, 348 A.2d 856, 865 (Md. 1975) .

(n100)Footnote 554. See, e.g., 440 Co. v. Borough of Fort Lee, 950 F. Supp. 105 (D. N.J. 1996) , aff'd, 129 F.3d 1254 (3d Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1020 (1998) . Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1019-1022 (Cal. 1976) .

(n101)Footnote 555. 485 U.S. 1 (1988) .

(n102)Footnote 556. Id. at 11 .

(n103)Footnote 557. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant 513 (1980).

(n104)Footnote 558. See, e.g., Columbia Plaza Ltd. Partnership v. Cowles, 403 F. Supp 1337 (D.C. 1975) . See generally Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant 509-513 (1980)..

(n105)Footnote 559. 40 FR 49 , 318, Oct. 22, 1975.

(n106)Footnote 560. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.5.

(n107)Footnote 561. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.5.

(n108)Footnote 562. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.6

(n109)Footnote 563. Other programs are identified in the pertinent regulation. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.20.

(n110)Footnote 564. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.21.

(n111)Footnote 565. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.21.

(n112)Footnote 566. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § § 47a.

(n113)Footnote 567. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.30.

(n114)Footnote 568. See 24 C.F.R. § 246.31.

(n115)Footnote 569. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344-348 (1982) .

(n116)Footnote 570. 317 U.S. 341 (1943) .

(n117)Footnote 571. See Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40 (1982) ; City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389 (1978) .

(n118)Footnote 572. 475 U.S. 260 (1986) .

(n119)Footnote 573. Id. at 264 .

(n120)Footnote 574. Id. at 266 .

(n121)Footnote 575. Id. at 266-267 .

(n122)Footnote 576. Id. at 267-269 .

(n123)Footnote 577. 291 U.S. 502 (1934) .

(n124)Footnote 578. Id. at 539 .

(n125)Footnote 579. See Pennell v. San Jose, 485 U.S. 1 (1988) , in which the Court held that rent controls are a form of price control subject to the rational basis test applied to other forms of economic regulation. Id. at 11 .

(n126)Footnote 580. See, e.g., Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1027 (Cal. 1976) ; Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 12-13 (N.J. 1975) .

(n127)Footnote 581. See Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 12-13 (N.J. 1975) .

(n128)Footnote 582. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1024 (Cal. 1976) .

(n129)Footnote 583. Id.

(n130)Footnote 584. Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 17-18 (N.J. 1975) .

(n131)Footnote 585. 485 U.S. 1 (1988) .

(n132)Footnote 586. Id. at 12-13 .

(n133)Footnote 587. See, e.g., Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 14 (N.J. 1975) .

(n134)Footnote 588. See, e.g., Federal Power commission v. Texaco, Inc., 417 U.S. 380 (1974) ; Permian Basin Area Rate Cases, 390 U.S. 747 (1968) ; FPC v. Hope Nat. Gas Co., 320 U.S. 591 (1944) .

(n135)Footnote 589. See Penn Cent. Transp. Co. v. New York, 438 U.S. 104 (1978) ; cf. Richardson v. City and County of Honolulu, 759 F. Supp. 1477 (D. Hawaii 1991) (discusses takings law and rent control ordinance). Takings are discussed in the next section of this chapter.

(n136)Footnote 590. 350 A.2d 1 (N.J. 1975) .

(n137)Footnote 591. Id. at 15-16 .

(n138)Footnote 592. Id. at 16 .

(n139)Footnote 593. Id.

(n140)Footnote 594. 550 P.2d 1001 (Cal. 1976) .

(n141)Footnote 595. Id. at 1027 ; The California Supreme Court confirmed this analysis for rent control regulations in Kavanau v. Santa Monica Rent Control Board, 941 P.2d 851 (Cal. 1997) , cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1077 (1998) . There, the court stated that "the essential inquiry in due process cases involving price controls is whether the regulatory scheme's result is just and reasonable." 941 P.2d at 683.

(n142)Footnote 596. Id.

(n143)Footnote 597. 550 P.2d at 1030 .

(n144)Footnote 598. Id.

(n145)Footnote 599. See § 43.04(d)(4) of this chapter.

(n146)Footnote 600. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 728 (1983). However, in the absence of an emergency, freezing rent levels will be unconstitutional. See Richardson v. Honolulu, 759 F. Supp. 1477 (D.C. Haw. 1991) .

(n147)Footnote 601. See, e.g., Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419 (1982) (state law authorizing cable company to place cable on private property a taking); Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164 (1979) (imposition of navigational servitude a taking); United States v. Causby, 328 U.S. 256 (1946) (overhead flights a taking).

(n148)Footnote 602. Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419, 433 (1982) .

(n149)Footnote 603. 505 U.S. 1003 (1992) .

(n150)Footnote 604. 438 U.S. 104 (1978) .

(n151)Footnote 605. 544 U.S. 528 (2005) .

(n152)Footnote 606. 544 U.S. at 542 .

(n153)Footnote 607. 544 U.S. at 545 .

(n154)Footnote 608. See Rent Stabilization Ass'n of New York City, Inc. v. Higgins, 630 N.E.2d 626 (N.Y. 1993) (applying Lucas standard, but stating that the regulations do not affect the owner's right to receive the regulated rents, unchallenged as a reasonable return, and that because tenancies are not made perpetual the owners are not deprived of their reversionary interest).

(n155)Footnote 609. See, e.g., 152 Valparaiso Associates v. City of Cotati, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 551 (Ct. App. 1997) .

(n156)Footnote 610. 124 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 525 U.S. 871 (1998), 525 U.S. 921 (1998), 525 U.S. 1018 (1998) .

(n157)Footnote 611. See Richardson v. City and County of Honolulu, 124 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 525 U.S. 871 (1998), 525 U.S. 921 (1998), 525 U.S. 1018 (1998) .

(n158)Footnote 612. 124 F.3d at 1166 .

(n159)Footnote 613. Cf. Manocherian v. Lenox Hill Hosp. 643 N.E.2d 479 (N.Y. 1994) , cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1109 (1995) (court concludes that rent control statute did not substantially advance a legitimate state interest; the court thought that the statute vested lease renewal rights in an entity of "unlimited" existence).

(n160)Footnote 614. 458 U.S. 419 (1982) .

(n161)Footnote 615. Id. at 435-436 .

(n162)Footnote 616. Id. at 438 .

(n163)Footnote 617. Id. at 440 .

(n164)Footnote 618. 464 U.S. 875 (1983) .

(n165)Footnote 619. Id.

(n166)Footnote 620. 833 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir. 1986) .

(n167)Footnote 621. Id. at 1273-1274 .

(n168)Footnote 622. Id. at 1278-1279 .

(n169)Footnote 623. Id. at 1276 .

(n170)Footnote 624. 898 F.2d 347 (3rd Cir. 1989) .

(n171)Footnote 625. Id. at 355 .

(n172)Footnote 626. 503 U.S. 519 (1992) .

(n173)Footnote 627. Id. at 163.

(n174)Footnote 628. Id. at 165 (emphasis in original).

(n175)Footnote 629. Id.

(n176)Footnote 630. Id. at 166.

(n177)Footnote 631. See also Rent Stabilization Ass'n of New York City, Inc. v. Higgins, 630 N.E.2d 626 (N.Y. 1993) (rejecting claim that enlarging the definition of family members who could succeed to rent controlled apartment did not constitute a taking, in part because landlords could always convert to another use).

(n178)Footnote 632. 635 So.2d 61 (Fla. Ct. App. 1994) .

(n179)Footnote 633. 635 So. 2d at 68 .

(n180)Footnote 634. 643 N.E.2d 479 (N.Y. 1994) , cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1109 (1995) .

(n181)Footnote 635. 643 N.E.2d 479 (N.Y. 1994) , cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1109 (1995) .

(n182)Footnote 636. 643 N.E.2d at 481 .

(n183)Footnote 637. 643 N.E.2d at 484 .

(n184)Footnote 638. 643 N.E.2d at 484 .

(n185)Footnote 639. 643 N.E.2d at 484-85 .

(n186)Footnote 640. 643 N.E.2d at 485 .

(n187)Footnote 641. This basis for the court's conclusion is subject to question, at least from the standpoint of federal takings law, in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Lingle v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 544 U.S. 528 (2005) , discussed earlier in this section of the chapter.

(n188)Footnote 642. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 757 (1983).

(n189)Footnote 643. Id. at 757-759 .

(n190)Footnote 644. Id. at 759-760 .

(n191)Footnote 645. See generally Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 7.6 (1980).

(n192)Footnote 646. See id.

(n193)Footnote 647. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 833 (1983).

(n194)Footnote 648. Vacancy decontrols are discussed in the next section of this chapter.

(n195)Footnote 649. See id. at 833-34 .

(n196)Footnote 650. Id. at 833 .

(n197)Footnote 651. Brunetti v. New Milford, 350 A.2d 19, 33 (N.J. 1975) (statute that sets forth specific grounds of eviction preempts rent control eviction controls).

(n198)Footnote 652. See Miami Beach v. Fleetwood Hotel, Inc., 261 So. 2d 801 (Fla. 1972) ; Heubeck v. Baltimore, 107 A.2d 99, 102 (Md. 1954) .

(n199)Footnote 653. See Birkenfeld v. City Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1015-1016 (Cal. 1976) ; Warren v. Philadelphia, 115 A.2d 218 (Pa. 1956) .

(n200)Footnote 654. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1015 (Cal. 1976) .

(n201)Footnote 655. 550 P.2d 1001 (Cal. 1976) .

(n202)Footnote 656. Id. at 1016-1018 .

(n203)Footnote 657. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723 (1983).

(n204)Footnote 658. See Guerra v. District of Columbia Rental Hous., 501 A.2d 786 (D.C. App. 1985) .

(n205)Footnote 659. See Little v. Guadron, 232 Cal. Rptr. 516 (1986) .

(n206)Footnote 660. See Note, Braschi v. Stahl Assocs. Co.: Much Ado About Nothing? 35 Villanova L. Rev. 361 (1990) (discussing New York City ordinance).

(n207)Footnote 661. See id. at 371-377.

(n208)Footnote 662. 434 N.Y.S.2d 127 (City Ct. 1980) .

(n209)Footnote 663. 543 N.E.2d 49 (N.Y. 1989) .

(n210)Footnote 664. 544 N.Y.S.2d at 789-790.

(n211)Footnote 665. 543 N.E.2d at 49 .See also Rent Stabilization Association of New York City, Inc. v. Higgins, 630 N.E.2d 626 (N.Y. 1993) , cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1213 (1994) (upholding new rent control regulations that enlarged definition of family to include certain nontraditional relationships beyond marriage or blood).

(n212)Footnote 666. 440 Co. v. Borough of Fort Lee, 950 F. Supp. 105 (D. N.J. 1996) , aff'd, 129 F.3d 1254 (3d Cir. 1997) , cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1020 (1998) .

(n213)Footnote 667. 950 F. Supp. at 110 .

(n214)Footnote 668. See Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley, 550 P.2d 1001, 1015 (Cal. 1976) .

(n215)Footnote 669. Id.

(n216)Footnote 670. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 7.7 (1980).

(n217)Footnote 671. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 728 (1983).

(n218)Footnote 672. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 7.7 (1980).

(n219)Footnote 673. See Marshal House, Inc. v. Rent Control Bd. of Brookline, 266 N.E.2d 876 (Mass. 1971) .

(n220)Footnote 674. See, e.g., Carson Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v. City of Carson, 672 P.2d 1297 (Cal. 1983) .

(n221)Footnote 675. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 7.7 (1980).

(n222)Footnote 676. See Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant 520 (1980).

(n223)Footnote 677. See Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 774-775 (1983)..

(n224)Footnote 678. Id.

(n225)Footnote 679. See M. Lett, Rent Control 10-12 (1976); Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 817-826 (1983).

(n226)Footnote 680. Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 784-817 (1983)..

(n227)Footnote 681. See § 43.04(c)(5) of this chapter.

(n228)Footnote 682. See, e.g., Hutton Park Gardens v. West Orange, 350 A.2d 1, 15 (N.J. 1975) .

(n229)Footnote 683. Id. at 17-18 .

(n230)Footnote 684. Id.

(n231)Footnote 685. See Cromwell Assocs. v. Newark, 511 A.2d 1273 (N.J. 1985) .

(n232)Footnote 686. 550 P.2d 1001 (Cal. 1976) .

(n233)Footnote 687. Id. at 1016-1018 .

(n234)Footnote 688. 394 A.2d 65 .

(n235)Footnote 689. Id. at 86 .

(n236)Footnote 690. 693 P.2d 261 (Cal. 1984) .

(n237)Footnote 691. See Carson Mobilehome Park Owners Ass'n v. City of Carson, 35 Cal. 3d 184, 197 Cal. Rptr. 284, 672 P.2d 1297 (Cal. 1983) .

(n238)Footnote 692. See Karrick v. Cantrill, 277 F. 578, 51 App. D.C. 176 (D.C. Cir. 1922) ; Olin J. Stephens, Inc. v. American Real Estate Co., 279 F. 435 (S.D. N.Y. 1921) .

(n239)Footnote 693. See Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 693 P.2d 261, 293 (Cal. 1984) ; Mayes v. Jackson Township Rent Leveling Bd., 511 A.2d 589 (N.J. 1986) ; Helmsley v. Borough of Ft. Lee, 394 A.2d 65 (N.J. 1978) .

(n240)Footnote 694. See Helmsley v. Borough of Ft. Lee, 394 A.2d 65, 71 (N.J. 1978) .

(n241)Footnote 695. See Carson Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v. City of Carson, 672 P.2d 1297 (Cal. 1983).

(n242)Footnote 696. See generally Baar, Guidelines for Drafting Rent Control Laws: Lessons of a Decade, 35 Rutgers L. Rev. 723, 830-832 (1983).

(n243)Footnote 697. See Doric Realty Co. v. Union City Rent Leveling Bd., 442 A.2d 652, 655 (N.J. 1981) .

(n244)Footnote 698. Id.

(n245)Footnote 699. See Midstate Mgt. Corp. v. New York City Conciliation & Appeals Bd., 491 N.Y.S.2d 634 (1985) .

(n246)Footnote 700. See 230 East 52nd Street Assocs. v. State Div. of Hous. & Community Renewal, 517 N.Y.S.2d 2 (1987) .

(n247)Footnote 701. Interstate General Corp. v. District of Columbia Rental Hous. Comm'n, 501 A.2d 1261 (D.C. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n248)Footnote 702. See Doric Realty Co. v. Union City Rent Leveling Bd., 442 A.2d 652, 655-656 (N.J. 1981) .

(n249)Footnote 703. Sterling v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd., 214 Cal. Rptr. 71 (Cal. 1985) .

(n250)Footnote 704. See Altschuler v. Boston Rent Control Board, 438 N.E.2d 73 (Mass. 1982) .

(n251)Footnote 705. 369 A.2d 32 (N.J. 1977) .

(n252)Footnote 706. Id. at 35-37 .

(n253)Footnote 707. See Orange Taxpayers Council, Inc. v. Orange, 416 A.2d 353 (N.J. 1980) .

(n254)Footnote 708. Id. at 355-356 .

(n255)Footnote 709. Id. at 359-361 .

(n256)Footnote 710. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:18-61, 1K; Greater Boston Real Estate Bd. v. Boston, cited 494 N.E.2d 1301 (Mass. 1986) (citing Boston ordinance).

(n257)Footnote 711. See generally Schlein, Government Regulation of Condominium Conversion, 8 B.C. Envir. L. Rev. 919 (1980).

(n258)Footnote 712. See Flynn v. City of Cambridge, 418 N.E.2d 335, 337 n.4 (1981) (quoting Cambridge ordinance).

(n259)Footnote 713. 418 N.E.2d 335 (1981) .

(n260)Footnote 714. Id. at 338 .

(n261)Footnote 715. See Greater Boston Real Estate Bd. v. Boston, 494 N.E.2d 1301 (Mass. 1986) ; Zussman v. Rent Control Bd., 326 N.E.2d 876 (Mass. 1975) .

(n262)Footnote 716. 494 N.E.2d 1301 (Mass. 1986) .

(n263)Footnote 717. 688 P.2d 894 (Cal. 1984) .

(n264)Footnote 718. See Cal. Gov. Code § 7060 et seq . In a 2003 decision, the California Supreme Court held that the provisions of the statute were subject to separate statutory provisions protecting tenants from retaliatory eviction. See Drouet v. Superior Court, 73 P.3d 1185 (Cal. 2003) . Retaliatory eviction is discussed in § 43.06 of this chapter.

(n265)Footnote 719. See Javidzad v. City of Santa Monica, 251 Cal. Rptr. 350 (Ct. App. 1988) ; City of Santa Monica v. Yarmark, 249 Cal. Rptr. 732 (Ct. App. 1982) .

(n266)Footnote 720. 458 U.S. 419 (1982) .

(n267)Footnote 721. See § 43.04(c)(6) of this chapter.

(n268)Footnote 722. 464 U.S. 875, 104 S. Ct. 218, 78 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1983) .

(n269)Footnote 723. The Court dismissed the appeal for lack of a substantial federal question.

(n270)Footnote 724. Id. at 876-877 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

(n271)Footnote 725. Nash v. City of Santa Monica, 688 P.2d 894 (Cal. 1984) , appeal dismissed, 470 U.S. 1046 (1985) .

(n272)Footnote 726. Id. at 901-902 .

(n273)Footnote 727. 503 U.S. 519(1992) .

(n274)Footnote 728. 503 U.S. at 528 .

(n275)Footnote 729. 503 U.S. at 528 .

(n276)Footnote 730. Cf. Aspen-Tarpon Springs Limited Partnership v. Stuart, 635 So.2d 61 (Fla. Ct. App. 1994) (requiring mobile home park owners desiring to change use of their property either to pay tenants' cost of moving to other parks or to buy tenants' mobile homes constituted a taking of property; the court reasoned that since evidence established that neither option was economically feasible, the statute in effect authorized a permanent physical occupation of the property).

(n277)Footnote 731. See, e.g., Keating, Commentary on Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1223, 1224-1225 (1989).

(n278)Footnote 732. See Frey et al., Consensus and Dissension Among Economists: An Empirical Inquiry, 74 Am. Econ. Rev. 986 (1984) ; Epstein, Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 741, 759-760 (1988); but see Guy McPherson, It's the End of the World as We Know it (and I Feel Fine): Rent Regulation in New York City and the Unanswered Questions of Market and Society, 72 Fordham L. Rev. 1175 (2004) (discusses the pros and cons of rent controls and ultimately concludes that rent control does more good than harm and the traditional discussion should be scrapped)..

(n279)Footnote 733. See, e.g., Epstein, Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 741, 767 (1988); T. Downs, Rental Housing in the 1980's 140-141 (1983); Comment, Challenges to Rent Control: Strategies for Attack, 34 UCLA L. Rev. 149-150 (1986).

(n280)Footnote 734. See, e.g., Epstein, Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 741, 767 (1988).

(n281)Footnote 735. Id. at 766.

(n282)Footnote 736. See Epstein, Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 741, 769-770 (1988); Comment, Challenges to Rent Control: Strategies for Attack, 34 UCLA L. Rev. 149, 154 (1986).

(n283)Footnote 737. See, e.g., Epstein, Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 741, 761-770 (1988); Salins, Reflection on Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 775, 775 (1988).

(n284)Footnote 738. See Keating, Commentary on Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1223, 1228-1229 (1989); Mandel, Does Rent Control Hurt Tenants?: A Reply to Epstein, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1267, 1268-1271 (1989).

(n285)Footnote 739. See Keating, Commentary on Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1223, 1228-1229 (1989).

(n286)Footnote 740. See, e.g., Baar, Would the Abolition of Rent Controls Restore a Free Market, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1231, 1232 (1989) (critics of rent control fail to provide "one iota of data on new apartment construction in rent controlled jurisdictions"); Keating, Commentary on Rent Control and the Theory of Efficient Regulation, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1223, 1228-1229 (1989).

(n287)Footnote 741. See Baar, Would the Abolition of Rent Controls Restore a Free Market, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1231, 1232-1233 (1989) (listing studies that suggest that rent controls do not have a negative impact on housing supply).

(n288)Footnote 742. See Baar, Would the Abolition of Rent Controls Restore a Free Market, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1231, 1234-1237 (1989); Berger, Home Is Where the Heart Is: A Brief Reply to Professor Epstein, 54 Brooklyn L. Rev. 1239, 1246-1247 (1989).

(n289)Footnote 743. Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. 40P § 1.

(n290)Footnote 744. Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. 40P § 2.

(n291)Footnote 745. See the discussion on this point in § 43.04(b)(3) of this chapter.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.05

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.05 Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 43.05(a) Overview and Relationship to Judicial Reform.

Until fairly recently, the common law view of a lease as a conveyance of an estate in land dominated the rules governing the landlord-tenant relationship. n746 Landlords were generally under no obligation to repair or maintain the premises, since the estate belonged to the tenant. n747 Moreover, any obligations that did exist were considered independent of a tenant's own duties to continue the lease and pay the rent. n748

This common law view underwent substantial changes in the 1970s as a result of judicial and statutory developments. n749 The initial impetus for change came primarily through the courts. The first significant judicial initiative was Javins v. First National Realty Group, Inc., n750 in which the District of Columbia Court of Appeals recognized an implied warranty of habitability in residential leases and found it to be interdependent with the tenant's duty to pay rent. n751 A number of state court decisions in the early 1970s followed Javins in recognizing an implied warranty of habitability. n752

Despite the significant attention given to these judicial developments, in most states the implied warranty of habitability has been created by statute. Although some earlier statutes granted tenant rights, n753 significant statutory change began in the mid-1970s. The most important development was the issuance of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act (URLTA) in 1972, n754 which has now been adopted in some form in twenty states. n755 Several other states have adopted comprehensive landlord-tenant legislation, n756 and others have enacted individual statutory warranties of habitability. n757 In a few instances, statutes were enacted in states that had already recognized the implied warranty of habitability as a result of a court decision, n758 but, in most states, the statutes were enacted without prior judicial recognition.

Judicial reform therefore preceded and was an important impetus to statutory reform. Indeed, the comment to the URLTA's section on the landlord's duty to maintain fit premises states that it follows the implied warranty of habitability doctrine previously recognized in several states. n759 Judicially created warranties have also continued to be a source for resolving issues not addressed in habitability statutes.

In many respects the nature and scope of the statutory warranties are similar to those of the judicial warranties. Both typically apply only to residential tenancies and are premised on changes in the nature of residential tenancies. Both adopt an interdependent view of landlord-tenant covenants, in which breach of a landlord's obligation to maintain the premises can release a tenant from certain obligations. Both statutory and judicial warranties also often recognize some of the same fundamental remedies for a landlord breach, including termination, damages, and rent withholding.

At the same time, however, there are some important differences between statutory reforms and judicial reforms. This is particularly true with regard to comprehensive statutes, such as the URLTA, that describe in detail a landlord's duty to maintain the premises and specify remedies for a violation. The URLTA provides a list of six landlord duties, including compliance with "housing codes materially affecting health and safety," maintaining the premises in a "fit and habitable condition," maintaining common areas in a "safe and clean condition," and provision of essential services. Although the list is rather expansive, in all instances the duty concerns issues related to health, safety, or habitability.

§ 43.05(b) Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

The Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act (URLTA) was drafted by the National Conference of Commissions on Uniform State Laws in 1972. It has been enacted in some form by about twenty states and comprises the largest single influence on statutory landlord-tenant reforms. Because of its substantial influence, an overview of the URLTA is beneficial.

As its title indicates, the URLTA applies only to residential tenancies. The Act itself states that two of its purposes are to "simplify, clarify, modernize and revise" landlord-tenant law, and to "encourage landlords to maintain and improve the quality of housing." n760 The comments state that the Act rejects the earlier "conveyance" view of landlord-tenant law as inappropriate for modern conditions, and that it adopts an interdependent, or contract, view of lease covenants. n761

The URLTA imposes duties on and grants remedies to both landlords and tenants. At the heart of the Act, however, are the duties imposed on landlords and the remedies provided to tenants. The Act imposes several general obligations on landlords, including obligations related to the handling of security deposits, disclosure to tenants, and delivery of possession. n762 Most important, however, is a duty to maintain the premises. Among other things, the ULRTA requires the landlord to comply with housing codes that "materially affect health and safety;" make repairs to keep the premises in "fit and habitable condition;" keep common areas "clean and safe;" maintain electrical, plumbing, heating, sanitary, air-conditioning, and other services in good and safe working order; and supply running water and reasonable amounts of hot water. n763

The URLTA provides tenants with various remedies for landlord breaches, including termination, damages, and injunctive relief. n764 It offers two forms of self help relief, one for remedying minor defects n765 and one relating to essential services. n766 In the latter instance, a tenant, after giving notice to the landlord, may procure such services and deduct the cost from rent. Perhaps the most significant remedy is what amounts to rent withholding. It permits tenants to raise the breach of a landlord's duty as a counterclaim in an eviction action for nonpayment of rent. n767 The tenant must give the landlord notice of the breach in order to access the remedies referenced here. In any event, the remedies will not be available if the problem was caused by the tenant.

Tenant duties under the Act include maintenance of the dwelling unit, compliance with reasonable rules, and permitting the landlord and other specified parties reasonable access to the dwelling. n768 Landlords may terminate the lease for nonpayment of rent or noncompliance with duties materially affecting health and safety. n769 In both instances the landlord must first give the tenant notice and an opportunity to cure. n770 The landlord may also recover actual damages and obtain injunctive relief for a tenant's noncompliance with the rental agreement or the tenant's failure to comply with applicable maintenance requirements. n771

Finally, the URLTA also prohibits retaliatory conduct and eviction on the part of landlords. It prohibits landlords from increasing rent, decreasing services or evicting tenants in retaliation for the assertion of various rights. The Act also creates a presumption of retaliation if the landlord pursues such conduct within a year after a tenant complains to a government agency or to the landlord regarding the landlord's noncompliance with relevant obligations regarding the condition of the premises. n772

It should be noted that a Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code n773 published in 1969 has apparently influenced statutes in Delaware and Hawaii. n774 Although differing in details, the Model Code creates duties and remedies comparable to those of the URLTA and shares the same fundamental objectives. These statutes are quite similar to those following the URLTA, and are often included in lists as URLTA statutes. n775

§ 43.05(c) Adoption of Statutory Warranties of Habitability.

§ 43.05(c)(1) Statutory Warranties Based on Uniform or Model Acts.

Over twenty states have enacted comprehensive landlord-tenant statutes that impose a duty upon landlords to maintain the leased premises. Almost all of these statutes are based on the URLTA, which imposes the following six duties on residential landlords:

> (1) comply with the requirements of applicable building and housing codes materially affecting health and safety;
>
> (2) make all repairs and do whatever is necessary to put and keep the premises in a fit and habitable condition;
>
> (3) keep all common areas of the premises in a clean and safe condition;
>
> (4) maintain in good and safe working order and condition all electrical, plumbing, sanitary, heating, ventilating, air conditioning, and other facilities and appliances, including elevators, supplied or required to be supplied by him;
>
> (5) provide and maintain appropriate receptacles and conveniences for the removal of ashes, garbage, rubbish, and other waste incidental to the occupancy of the dwelling unit and arrange for their removal; and
>
> (6) supply running water and reasonable amounts of hot water at all times and reasonable heat [between [October 1] and [May 1]] except where the building that includes the dwelling unit is not required by law to be equipped for that purpose, or the dwelling unit is so constructed that heat or hot water is generated by an installation within the exclusive control of the tenant and supplied by a direct public utility connection. n776

Most URLTA states have enacted all six duties, but some have deleted or modified provisions. For example, Alaska does not include number (1), n777 Tennessee does not include numbers (4) and (6), n778 and Kentucky does not include number (5). n779 Florida and Kansas do not include number (2), n780 regarding provision of "a fit and habitable condition," while New Mexico simply requires a "safe condition." n781 The Mississippi version includes only number (1) and a modified version of number (3). n782

The most substantial variation of landlord duties is in the Washington statute, which states that a landlord must at all times "keep the premises fit for human habitation," and then states ten detailed requirements. Those include control of pest infestation, keeping the dwelling weather tight, and providing locks and keys. n783 Nevada also imposes a general requirement that the dwelling be in a habitable condition, which is then defined by reference to a detailed list. n784

Despite these modifications, the habitability requirements created by these statutes appear to be quite broad. As previously indicated, the initial language of the Washington statute states: "The landlord will at all times during the tenancy keep the premises fit for human habitation." n785 The Nevada statute includes similar language. n786

State statutes provide that the landlord's duties regarding the condition of the premises cannot be waived. However, the URLTA provides that, in the case of a single family residence, the parties may agree that the tenant will perform the landlord's duties under numbers (5) and (6). n787 The agreement must be in writing and be entered into in good faith. n788 Most of the state statutes that are based on the URLTA include this provision, although, in some states, it is expanded to include two or three dwelling units. n789

In addition to URLTA based statutes, several other states have comprehensive residential landlord-tenant statutes that include habitability requirements. Two sets of statutes, Hawaii's and Delaware's, are based on the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code, and contain landlord obligations very similar to those found in the URLTA. n790 In contrast, Maryland has enacted legislation that is based on neither the URLTA nor the Model Code, but obligates the landlord to repair and eliminate conditions and defects that constitute, or, if unremedied, will constitute, a fire hazard or a serious and substantial threat to the life, health or safety of occupants. n791 Similarly, Vermont has legislation under which landlords warrant residential premises to be "safe, clean and fit for human habitation" and in compliance with "applicable building, housing and health regulations." n792

§ 43.05(c)(2) Other Statutory Warranties.

At least ten states have enacted statutory warranties of habitability that are not part of comprehensive landlord and tenant legislation. n793 Several states, including North Carolina, North Dakota, Utah, and West Virginia, have enacted provisions based on § 2.104 of the URLTA. The North Dakota statute adopts it in full. n794 North Carolina n795 and West Virginia n796 have enacted modified versions, while the Utah statute appears to be loosely based on the URLTA. n797

At least ten other states, including Idaho, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, New York and Wisconsin, have enacted separate statutory warranties of habitability imposing duties on landlords. The Maine n798 and New York n799 statutes offer very clear examples of a habitability requirement. Both use nearly identical language, stating that in every residential lease "the landlord shall be deemed to covenant and warrant that the dwelling is fit for human habitation." n800

The Michigan n801 and Minnesota n802 statutes are similar to each other. They impose covenants on the lessor that the premises "are fit for the use intended by the parties," covenants "to keep the premises in reasonable repair," and to comply with health and safety codes. Although not directly using habitability language, the expression "fit for the use intended by the parties" in effect creates a residential habitability requirement. A Texas statute imposes an obligation on the landlord to remedy conditions that materially affect the physical health or safety of an ordinary tenant, after the landlord has received proper notice from the tenant. n803 Finally, the Idaho n804 and Wisconsin n805 statutes do not directly impose habitability requirements, but specify certain types of repairs that landlords must make, and require that plumbing, electrical, heating, cooling, and comparable services be in good working order.

Of the states referenced above, the Idaho, Maine, Texas, Utah, and Wisconsin statutes specify remedies for a breach. The Idaho statute provides that a tenant may recover damages and seek specific performance. n806 The Maine statute provides comparable remedies, stating that a court can issue an injunction ordering repair and that a tenant can recover a rebate of the amount by which the rent the tenant paid exceeded the use and occupancy value of the premises. n807 The Texas statute incorporates a number of remedies, including lease termination, repair and deduct, and separate judicial remedies. n808 The Wisconsin statute provides that the tenant may, in some cases, "remove" from the premises and avoid rent liability or the tenant may remain and obtain a rent abatement to the extent the breach deprives the tenant of the full normal use of the premises. n809 The Utah statute provides that a tenant may seek damages and injunctive relief, which includes possible judicial termination of the lease. n810

These statutes take varying positions on whether the landlord's obligations can be waived. The Minnesota, New York, and Wisconsin statutes prohibit waiver, n811 and Michigan permits the statutory obligations to be modified if the current term of the lease is at least one year. n812 The Maine statute permits waiver of specified conditions in exchange for a stated reduction of rent or other fair consideration. n813 The North Carolina provision permits the parties to enter into a "subsequent written contract" under which the tenant agrees to perform work on the premises. However, this contract must be supported by consideration, and cannot be made for the purpose of avoiding the landlord's obligations regarding the condition of the premises. n814 The North Dakota statute permits good faith agreements in which the tenant takes on obligations of the landlord regarding trash removal, water, and heat. n815 The statute also provides that, outside of the single-family residential context, agreements with respect to other matters may also be made, if they are in good faith, in writing, supported by adequate consideration, and do not diminish the landlord's obligations to other tenants. n816 Some of the statutes appear to be silent as to waiver. n817 However, a court could still conclude, as did the West Virginia Supreme Court, that the implied warranty of habitability cannot be waived. n818

As with warranties based on comprehensive statutes, courts have given these warranties a broad interpretation. For example, the New York Court of Appeals has interpreted New York's statutory warranty as including the following three warranties: "first, that the premises are fit for human habitation; second, that the condition of the premises is in accord with the uses reasonably intended by the parties; and third, that the tenants are not subjected to any conditions endangering or detrimental to their life, health, or safety." n819

§ 43.05(d) Remedies for Breach of Statutory Warranties.

The URLTA provides five basic remedies for breach of the landlord's duties: termination of the lease, damages, repair and deduct, rent withholding, and injunctive relief. Individual states have enacted statutes that incorporate these remedies as well. n820 In some instances, states had adopted legislation providing for rent withholding and repair and deduct remedies before the promulgation of the URLTA.

Before discussing remedies that are available to the tenant for breach of the implied warranty of habitability, it is important to note two important qualifications that run throughout the URLTA and most other schemes. First, the remedies are unavailable if the tenant was responsible for the problem. n821 Second, in order to access the remedies, the tenant generally must give the landlord prior notice of the condition at issue. n822 In most instances the landlord is also provided a period of time after notice to respond. However, where essential services are involved, the tenant, after giving notice, can immediately engage in a form of repair and deduct relief. n823

§ 43.05(d)(1) Termination.

All states with comprehensive landlord-tenant legislation provide that tenants may terminate the lease for a landlord's material noncompliance with a duty that materially affects health and safety. Under the URLTA the tenant must first give notice that the tenancy will terminate in 30 days if the problem is not remedied within 14 days. The Act also provides that if there had been a prior noncompliance within six months, the tenant can terminate the agreement within 14 days. n824 Although all URLTA states include the notice and opportunity to remedy provision, some have shortened the time periods for notice and repair. n825 Termination does not preclude recovery of damages. n826

Some other state statutes also include a lease termination remedy. For example, a Wisconsin statute states that the tenant may vacate the leased premises, if occupancy becomes untenable for various reasons, including a condition hazardous to health. n827 Utah provides that a court may judicially terminate the lease. n828 Some state statutes are silent on termination, but judicial interpretations of these statutes have generally recognized that breach of the landlord's duties gives rise to normal contract remedies for breach, including rescission. n829

§ 43.05(d)(2) Damages.

All comprehensive statutes provide tenants with a right to recover damages for a landlord's breach. n830 Under the ULRTA, a tenant's right to terminate is contingent on a material breach that materially affects health and safety. In contrast, recovery of damages is permitted for noncompliance with the lease or statutory duties. n831 Most states that pattern their legislation on the URLTA use the language of "actual damages," but several say only "damages."

Provisions for damages also appear in the legislation of other states. An Idaho statute provides that a tenant may recover damages. n832 A statute in Maine provides that a tenant can recover what amounts to diminution in value for uninhabitable conditions, but specifically precludes recovery for consequential damages. n833 Wisconsin permits rent abatement for violation of the landlord's obligation. n834 Some state statutes that include simple warranty provisions are silent as to the availability of damages, but they have been construed to provide that remedy. n835

Although providing for damages, the URLTA and most states are silent as to what is included in damages and how damages are to be calculated. Courts have generally recognized that the primary recovery for damages is for diminution in value of the rental property, which is a loss of the bargain concept.

Commentators have identified three formulas for calculating loss of bargain damages under judicially adopted warranties of habitability. n836 It will be useful to mention them here. First, damages are the difference between the value of the building as warranted and the value in its defective condition, with the agreed rent being evidence of the value as warranted. Second, damages are equal to "the difference between agreed rent and the fair rental value of the premises" in a defective condition. Third, "the agreed rent is reduced by a percentage equal to the percentage of use lost by the tenant because of the landlord's breach." n837

Courts that have applied statutory warranties have generally adopted one of the first two formulas, or a combination of the two. Perhaps most common has been an approach that measures diminution in value by the difference between the fair market value of the property as warranted and the fair market value in its defective condition. n838 Several courts have, in essence, equated the two standards, stating that the fair market value is measured by the agreed rent. n839

In addition to recovering damages for diminution in value, most courts have also held that tenants can recover consequential damages. n840 At least one court has indicated that this can include damages for annoyance and inconvenience resulting from the breach. n841

Some courts have indicated that tenants can recover for emotional distress. n842 In a case arising under the Arizona Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, an Arizona appellate court observed:

> A tenant who is not provided with necessary services and maintenance of the leased premises as required under the Act suffers property damage because the value of his leasehold is decreased by the absence of adequate water, heat, cooling or proper maintenance of the building. However, the more immediate damage that he suffers is the annoyance and discomfort of living in inadequate housing... Whether this condition was intentionally or negligently caused by the landlord is not relevant to the actual damages suffered by the tenant. n843

But courts have disagreed about whether tenants can recover damages for personal injury based on landlord breach of the implied warranty of habitability. n844 Additional information regarding landlord tort liability is contained in Chapter 41. n845

Courts are also divided on whether punitive damages can be recovered for violations of statutory provisions. Some courts have, in essence, precluded their availability under URLTA-based statutes, on the basis that allowing such damages would be "inconsistent with the attention given to the choice of noncompensatory measures of damages elsewhere" in the legislation. n846 Elaborating on this point, the Oregon Supreme Court noted that sometimes the drafters of the legislation had selected the sum of three months' rent beyond actual damages, sometimes twice the otherwise relevant amount, and sometimes the stated measure of damages was compensatory in a purely financial sense. "When a statute includes such differentiated provisions for compensatory and for more than compensatory damages for specified violations we find no justification for superimposing upon the statutory scheme an additional remedy of punitive damages, unlimited in amount, for violations of the act." n847

Other courts, however, have held that punitive damages may be awarded for intentional and malicious violations of landlord obligations regarding the condition of the premises. n848

§ 43.05(d)(3) Rent Withholding.

The URLTA does not provide for rent withholding as such, but permits a tenant to raise the landlord's noncompliance as a counterclaim in an eviction proceeding based on nonpayment of rent. It provides that the court may order the tenant to pay all or part of the rent, and determine the amount owed each party. If no rent remains due after any necessary payments are made, judgment in the eviction action is entered for the tenant. n849 This in effect permits a tenant to withhold rent for a landlord's noncompliance. n850

Almost all URLTA states have enacted § 4.105 in this form. n851 Virginia, however, limits its use to noncompliance that poses a serious threat to a tenant's health and safety and requires that payments be made to a court even before eviction proceedings are commenced. n852 Florida also requires that payments be made to a court. n853 New Mexico requires that even though a tenant can counterclaim, the tenant must continue to pay rent while in possession. n854 Ohio, whose statute is loosely based on the URLTA, provides a procedure whereby tenants, upon a landlord's breach, may deposit rent with the clerk of a court. n855

A number of statutes that are not based on the URLTA do not expressly provide for rent withholding. However, courts in these jurisdictions typically hold that tenants may raise a landlord's breach of the habitability requirement as a defense to nonpayment of rent in an action for possession. n856 North Carolina's provision expressly states that landlord-tenant obligations are "mutually dependent," but also declares that tenants cannot withhold rent without judicial approval. n857 The North Carolina Court of Appeals has held that, although tenants cannot withhold rent, they can remain on the premises and bring an affirmative action for rent abatement. n858

Courts have noted that a tenant can withhold rent only for substantial noncompliance with the landlord's statutory duties. Withholding is not authorized for every complaint; neither is it authorized for claims unrelated to the landlord's statutory warranty of habitability. n859 When the diminution in value because of breach of the landlord's duty is less than the rent withheld, the tenant can retain possession by paying the landlord any additional rent owed. n860

§ 43.05(d)(4) Repair and Deduct.

A repair and deduct remedy permits a tenant to make needed repairs and then deduct that amount from the rent. In effect it is a forced application of the landlord's rent proceeds to make required repairs. n861

Although not identified as such, the URLTA provides two forms of repair and deduct remedies. First, § 4.103 provides that a tenant may make minor self help repairs and deduct the cost from the rent. As with other remedies, the tenant must first give the landlord notice of the problem and time to make repairs. n862 The second and more substantial repair and deduct remedy is found in § 4.104. It provides that if a landlord willfully or negligently fails to supply "heat, running water, hot water, electric, gas or other essential service" the tenant, after giving notice, may procure the essential service and deduct the cost from the rent. n863 Alternatively, the tenant may procure "reasonable substitute housing" and be excused from paying rent for the period of landlord noncompliance. n864 If the tenant selects this last option, the tenant will also be able to recover "the actual and reasonable cost or fair and reasonable value of the substitute housing not in excess of an amount equal to the periodic rent." n865

A majority of the URLTA states have adopted these provisions, with some variations. However, New Mexico and Oklahoma n866 do not include either provision, and Alaska, Iowa, and Oregon do not include self help for minor repairs. n867 Several states have modified the essential service provision, limiting it to willful deprivations of service. n868 The ability to use self help is less certain in other states with statutory warranties. But New York has recognized that tenants have a repair and deduct remedy for breaches of the statutory warranty. n869 And Maine provides tenants with a repair and deduct remedy for conditions that endanger or impair a tenant's health or safety. n870

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 746. See Quinn & Phillips, The Law of Landlord -- Tenant: A Critical Evaluation of the Past with Guidelines for the Future, 38 Fordham L. Rev. 225 (1969).

(n2)Footnote 747. Id. at 228.

(n3)Footnote 748. Id. at 234.

(n4)Footnote 749. See Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3 (1979).

(n5)Footnote 750. 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir.) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) .

(n6)Footnote 751. Id. at 1072-73 , 1082-1083.

(n7)Footnote 752. See Green v. Superior Court, 517 P.2d 1168 (Cal. 1974) ; Jack Spring, Inc. v. Little, 280 N.E.2d 208 (Ill. 1972) ; Mease v. Fox, 200 N.W.2d 791 (Iowa 1972) ; Boston Hous. Auth. v. Hemingway, 293 N.E.2d 831 (Mass. 1973) ; Kline v. Burns, 276 A.2d 248 (N.H. 1971) ; Foisy v. Wyman, 515 P.2d 160 (Wash. 1973) .

(n8)Footnote 753. See Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 51-59 (1979) (discussing 19th century legislation based on civil law sources).

(n9)Footnote 754. 7B Uniform Laws Annotated 289 (2006).

(n10)Footnote 755. See 7B Uniform Laws Annotated 285 (2006) (table of jurisdictions that have adopted the URLTA).

(n11)Footnote 756. See e.g., 2 Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, §§ 5101-5517; Md. Code, Real Property § 8-201 et seq.; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 §§ 4451-4468.

(n12)Footnote 757. See Idaho Code § 6-320; 14 Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6021; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.139; N.Y. - McKinney's Real Prop. Law § 235-b; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-32; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.1; Utah Code Ann. §§ 57-22-1 - 57-22-6; W. Va. Code § 37-6-30; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07.

(n13)Footnote 758. See N.J. Stat. § 2A; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 59.18.010-59.18.900.

(n14)Footnote 759. See Comment to URLTA § 2.104.

(n15)Footnote 760. URLTA § 1.102.

(n16)Footnote 761. URLTA, comment to § 1.102.

(n17)Footnote 762. URLTA §§ 2.101 - 2.103.

(n18)Footnote 763. URLTA § 2.104(a).

(n19)Footnote 764. URLTA § 4.101.

(n20)Footnote 765. URLTA § 4.103.

(n21)Footnote 766. URLTA § 4.104.

(n22)Footnote 767. URLTA § 4.105.

(n23)Footnote 768. URLTA §§ 3.101 - 3.103.

(n24)Footnote 769. URLTA § 4.201.

(n25)Footnote 770. Id.

(n26)Footnote 771. URLTA § 4.201(c).

(n27)Footnote 772. URLTA at § 5.101.

(n28)Footnote 773. Model Residential Landlord Tenant Code (American Bar Foundation 1969).

(n29)Footnote 774. Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 47a-56a; Hawaii Rev. Stat. §§ 521-1 - 521-77 .See Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 67 (1979) (indicating that the Delaware and Hawaii Statutes are based on the Model Code rather than the URLTA).

(n30)Footnote 775. Indeed, a table published in the volume that includes the URLTA lists Hawaii as a state that has adopted the URLTA. See 7B Uniform Laws Annotated 285 (2006).

(n31)Footnote 776. URLTA § 2.104.

(n32)Footnote 777. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.160.

(n33)Footnote 778. Tenn. Code § 66-28-304.

(n34)Footnote 779. Ky. Rev. Stat. § 383.595.

(n35)Footnote 780. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.51; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2553.

(n36)Footnote 781. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-8-20.

(n37)Footnote 782. See Miss. Code Ann. § 89-8-23. As of this writing, there is some proposed legislation to add an obligation to provide and maintain the dwelling unit in a habitable condition. See 2007 Miss. H.B. 1257.

(n38)Footnote 783. Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.060.

(n39)Footnote 784. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 118A.290.

(n40)Footnote 785. See Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.060.

(n41)Footnote 786. See Nev. Rev. Stat. § 118A.290.

(n42)Footnote 787. URLTA § 2.104(c).

(n43)Footnote 788. See URLTA § 2.104(c)

(n44)Footnote 789. See, e.g., Mont. Rev. Codes Stat. § 70-24-303 (applies to one, two or three family residence).

(n45)Footnote 790. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5303; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-51.

(n46)Footnote 791. See Md. Code Real Prop. § 8-211.

(n47)Footnote 792. See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4457.

(n48)Footnote 793. See generally William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property (2000). See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant, ch. 5.

(n49)Footnote 794. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.1.

(n50)Footnote 795. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-42.

(n51)Footnote 796. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a.

(n52)Footnote 797. Utah Code Ann. § 57-22-4.

(n53)Footnote 798. 14 Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6021.

(n54)Footnote 799. N.Y. McKinney's Real Prop. Law § 235-b.

(n55)Footnote 800. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6021.

(n56)Footnote 801. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 823.22.

(n57)Footnote 802. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.161.

(n58)Footnote 803. Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 92.056.

(n59)Footnote 804. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 823.22.

(n60)Footnote 805. Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 704.07.

(n61)Footnote 806. Idaho Code § 6-320.

(n62)Footnote 807. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6021.

(n63)Footnote 808. Tex. Prop. Code § 92.056.

(n64)Footnote 809. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07.

(n65)Footnote 810. Utah Code Ann. § 57-22-6.

(n66)Footnote 811. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, §§ 6031-6038; N.Y. McKinney's Real Prop. Law § 235-b; Iowa Code Ann. § 562.A.12. The Wisconsin statute would permit waiver in the case of a nonresidential tenancy, if the waiver is in writing. See Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07.

(n67)Footnote 812. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.139.

(n68)Footnote 813. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 554.601-554.616.

(n69)Footnote 814. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-42.

(n70)Footnote 815. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.1.

(n71)Footnote 816. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 §§ 6031-6038.

(n72)Footnote 817. See Idaho Code § 6-320; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a; W. Va. Code § 37-6-30.

(n73)Footnote 818. See Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114, 130-31 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n74)Footnote 819. Park West Mgt. Corp. v. Mitchell, 391 N.E.2d 1288, 1293 (N.Y. 1979) , cert. denied, 444 U.S. 992 (1979) .

(n75)Footnote 820. For the Restatement position, see Restatement (Second) of Property, §§ 5.2-5.4.

(n76)Footnote 821. See, e.g., URLTA §§ 4.01(a)(3); 4.103(b)& 4.104(d) (remedies do not arise if the condition was caused "by the deliberate or negligent act or omission of the tenant, a member of his family, or other person on the premises with his consent."

(n77)Footnote 822. See, e.g., URLTA §§ 4.101(a); 4.103(a) & 4.104(d). It does not appear that the URLTA requires the tenant to provide prior notice to the landlord if the tenant decides to bring an action for damages or injunction. See URLTA § 4.101(b) & 4.103(a).

(n78)Footnote 823. See, e.g., URLTA § 4.104.

(n79)Footnote 824. URLTA § 4.101.

(n80)Footnote 825. See, e.g., N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540 (will terminate in 20 days if not remedied in 10).

(n81)Footnote 826. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 34.03.160; URLTA § 4.101.

(n82)Footnote 827. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704-07(4).

(n83)Footnote 828. Utah Code Ann. § 57-22-6.

(n84)Footnote 829. See Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n85)Footnote 830. See, e.g., Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.21; URLTA § 4.101. See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant, § 10.2.

(n86)Footnote 831. See URLTA § 4.101(b).

(n87)Footnote 832. See Idaho Code § 6-320(a).

(n88)Footnote 833. 14 Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6021(4).

(n89)Footnote 834. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 554.601-554.616.

(n90)Footnote 835. See, e.g., Park West Mgt. Corp. v. Mitchell, 391 N.E.2d 1288 (N.Y. 1979) ; Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n91)Footnote 836. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 336-337 (2000). See also, Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant, § 11.1.

(n92)Footnote 837. Id.

(n93)Footnote 838. See, e.g., Roeder v. Nolan, 321 N.W.2d 1 (Iowa 1982) .

(n94)Footnote 839. See, e.g., Lane v. Kelley, 643 P.2d 1375 (Or. 1981) .

(n95)Footnote 840. See, e.g., Roeder v. Nolan, 321 N.W.2d 1 (Iowa 1982) ; Love v. Monarch Apts., 771 P.2d 79 (1989) .

(n96)Footnote 841. See Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) .

(n97)Footnote 842. See Thomas v. Goudreault, 786 P.2d 1010 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989) ; Brewer v. Erwin, 600 P.2d 398 (Or. 1979) .

(n98)Footnote 843. Thomas v. Goudreault, 786 P.2d 1010 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n99)Footnote 844. See, e.g., Schuman v. Kobets, 760 N.E.2d 682 (Ind. Ct. App. 2002) (no recovery as a matter of law); Tucker v. Hayford, 75 P.3d 980 (Wash. Ct. App. 2003) (recovery permitted).

(n100)Footnote 845. See § 41.09.

(n101)Footnote 846. See Brewer v. Erwin, 600 P.2d 398 (Or. 1979) .

(n102)Footnote 847. 600 P.2d at 443.

(n103)Footnote 848. See Pleasant East Assocs. v. Cabrera, 480 N.Y.S.2d 693 (1984) (landlord failed to provide services to an apartment with the clear intent to cause one or both of the tenants to vacate).

(n104)Footnote 849. See URLTA § 4.105.

(n105)Footnote 850. See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant, § 11.3 (regarding rent withholding).

(n106)Footnote 851. See, e.g., R.I. § 34-18-32; but see Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a 12 (does not include); Miss. Code Ann. §§ 89-8-1 - 89-8-27. The Mississippi statute does not include any form of § 4.105.

(n107)Footnote 852. See Va. Code § 55-248.25.

(n108)Footnote 853. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.60.

(n109)Footnote 854. See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4661.

(n110)Footnote 855. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.07.

(n111)Footnote 856. See Park West Mgt. Corp. v. Mitchell, 391 N.E.2d 1288 (N.Y. 1979) ; Teller v. McCoy, 253 S.E.2d 114 (W. Va. 1978) ; Fritz v. Warthen, 213 N.W.2d 339 (Minn. 1973) .

(n112)Footnote 857. See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-44(c).

(n113)Footnote 858. See Miller v. C. W. Myers Trading Post, Inc., 355 S.E.2d 189 (N.C. App. 1987) .

(n114)Footnote 859. See Napolski v. Champney, 667 P.2d 1013 (Or. 1983) .

(n115)Footnote 860. Id.

(n116)Footnote 861. See Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant § 11.2.

(n117)Footnote 862. URLTA § 4.103.

(n118)Footnote 863. URLTA § 4.104.

(n119)Footnote 864. Id.

(n120)Footnote 865. URLTA § 4.104(b).

(n121)Footnote 866. See N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 47-8-1 -47-8-52; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 41, §§ 101-135.

(n122)Footnote 867. See Alaska Stat. §§ 34.03.010-34.03.380; Iowa Code Ann. §§ 562A.1-562A.37; Ore. Rev. Stat. §§ 90.360 - 90.361.

(n123)Footnote 868. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2563.

(n124)Footnote 869. See Katurah Corp. v. Wells, 454 N.Y.S.2d 770 (1982) .

(n125)Footnote 870. Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 14 § 6026.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.06

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.06 Retaliatory Conduct Statutes.

[Go To Supp]

§ 43.06(a) Prohibitions Against Retaliatory Conduct.

Landlord-tenant reforms are of little utility if a landlord can evict or otherwise punish tenants for asserting their rights. This is particularly true if there are housing shortages and if comparable defective conditions exist at alternative housing sites. For that reason, most jurisdictions prohibit retaliatory conduct by landlords.

Prohibitions against retaliatory eviction emerged at the very beginning of the landlord-tenant reform movement. At least fourteen states had statutory prohibitions even before the URLTA was issued in 1972. n871 The URLTA, which includes a retaliatory conduct provision, has been adopted in some form in some 20 states, though a few of them had already adopted a prohibition against landlord retaliation. n872 As a result of these, and other, statutory enactments, a clear majority of states have some statutory provisions prohibiting retaliatory conduct by landlords.

Retaliatory conduct statutes are designed to prohibit landlords from retaliating against tenants for asserting their rights or joining tenant groups. For example, the URLTA protects tenants who: 1) complain to a government agency concerning a housing code violation applicable to the premises that materially affects health and safety; 2) complain to the landlord about a violation of the landlord's statutory obligations to maintain the premises; and 3) have organized or become members of a tenants' union or similar organization. n873

Anti-retaliation statutes typically prohibit landlords from retaliating against a tenant in specified ways. Thus, the URLTA prohibits landlords from increasing rents, decreasing services, or evicting or threatening to evict a tenant after the tenant has engaged in one of the activities protected by the Act. n874

The prohibition against retaliatory eviction could apply even if the landlord seeks to evict the tenant while claiming that he or she intends to take the rental unit off the market. n875 In Drouet v. Superior Court, n876 a tenant contended that a landlord who sought to do this should be compelled to prove not merely that the landlord had a bona fide intent to go out of business but also that the bona fide intent was not motived by the tenant's exercise of rights protected under the retaliatory conduct legislation. The California Supreme Court rejected the tenant's contention, and stated:

> We therefore hold that where a landlord has complied with [legislation permitting removal of a rental unit from the market] and has instituted an action for unlawful detainer, and the tenant has asserted the statutory defense of retaliatory eviction, the landlord may overcome the defense by demonstrating a bona fide intent to withdraw the property from the market. If the tenant controverts the landlord's bona fide intent to withdraw the property, the landlord has the burden to establish its truth at the hearing by a preponderance of the evidence.

Id. at 1196 .

The purpose of retaliatory conduct statutes is to prohibit retaliatory actions by landlords. Accordingly, the statutes do not prohibit particular conduct of the landlord in all instances, but only if the conduct has a retaliatory motive behind it. The most problematic aspect of these statutes is establishing whether there is retaliatory motive.

A number of statutes address the concern by creating a presumption of retaliatory motive if a landlord's conduct occurs within a specified period after designated tenant activities. For example, the URLTA creates a presumption of retaliation if the landlord's conduct occurs within a year of a complaint by the tenant that comes within the protection of the Act. n877 The burden then shifts to the landlord to introduce evidence that the landlord's conduct was not retaliatory. n878 Some URLTA have not included this provision in their statutes, or have modified it in some way. n879 By way of example, the Virginia statute states that the tenant has the burden of proof in establishing retaliatory motive. n880

Finally, a number of state statutes include exceptions to retaliatory conduct prohibitions, under which a landlord may evict a tenant notwithstanding a retaliatory motive. These fall into two general groups. First, some states incorporate exceptions similar to those in the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code. n881 These include exceptions if the tenant is committing waste or using the property illegally, if the tenant caused the problem forming the basis of the complaint, and if the leased premises are in full compliance with applicable codes. n882

A second group of state statutes, based on the URLTA, provide that, notwithstanding retaliatory motive, a landlord may evict a tenant: 1) if the violation of the building or housing code was caused by the tenant, a member of the tenant's family, or a person on the leased premises with the tenant's consent; 2) if the tenant is in default in rent; and 3) if compliance with applicable codes would require alterations that would effectively deprive the tenant of the use of the leased premises. n883 Most states that have adopted the URLTA include these exceptions in their legislation.

§ 43.06(b) Remedies.

If established, retaliatory conduct is a defense to eviction actions by landlords. It can also be a basis of additional remedial assistance.

The URLTA provides that, in addition to providing the tenant with an affirmative defense against eviction, retaliatory conduct by the landlord may allow the tenant to recover up to three months' rent or three times the tenant's actual damages, whichever is greater. n884 This provision has been adopted in most URLTA states, although most of those statutes have modified the amount of recovery. For example, in Kansas a tenant can recover up to one and a half times rent or actual damages. n885 Virginia limits recovery to actual damages. n886

Most other states also permit retaliatory conduct to be the basis for recovery of damages. For example, Massachusetts permits a minimum recovery of one month's rent and a maximum recovery of three months' rent. n887

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 871. See Comment to URLTA § 5.101.

(n2)Footnote 872. See 7B Uniform Laws Annotated 285 (2006) (table of jurisdictions where URLTA has been adopted); URLTA § 5.101, Comment.

(n3)Footnote 873. See URLTA § 5.101(a).

(n4)Footnote 874. See URLTA § 5.101(a).

(n5)Footnote 875. See Drouet v. Superior Court, 73 P.3d 1185 (Cal. 2003) .

(n6)Footnote 876. 73 P.3d 1185 (Cal. 2003) .

(n7)Footnote 877. See URLTA § 5.101(b). However, the presumption does not arise if the tenant "made the complaint after notice of a proposed rent increase or diminution of services." See id.

(n8)Footnote 878. See URLTA § 5.101(b).

(n9)Footnote 879. See, e.g., Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1439; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-8-39; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-514.

(n10)Footnote 880. See Va. Code § 55-248.39.

(n11)Footnote 881. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § § 47a 20a; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5516; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-74. Of these statutes, the one in Delaware includes the most extensive list of exceptions.

(n12)Footnote 882. See Model Residential Landlord Tenant Code § 2-407 (American Bar Foundation).

(n13)Footnote 883. See URLTA § 5.101.

(n14)Footnote 884. See URLTA §§ 5.101(b) & 4.107.

(n15)Footnote 885. See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2572.

(n16)Footnote 886. See Va. Code Ann. § 55-248.39.

(n17)Footnote 887. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-21.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.07

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.07 Repair and Deduct Statutes.

At least five states have special repair and deduct statutory provisions. Several of these trace their roots to the Field Code, portions of which were adopted in California in 1872. n888 The current California statute contains several sections, the first of which imposes a duty upon landlords of residential property to put the property into a condition fit for human occupation and to repair "all subsequent dilapidations thereof, which render it untenantable." n889 A subsequent section identifies particular conditions that will render the dwelling untenantable. n890 The legislation also provides that if a landlord fails to remedy defects, the tenant may repair and deduct or may vacate the premises. However, the tenant can only deduct one month's rent and can exercise this remedy only once every twelve months. n891

North Dakota and South Dakota have similar statutes. The South Dakota statute first imposes a duty on landlords to keep the premises in good repair and fit for human habitation. n892 It further provides that if a landlord breaches the duty the tenant may repair and deduct or vacate the premises. n893 The legislation also provides that if the cost of necessary repairs exceeds a month's rent, the tenant may, after notice, withhold payment of the rent. n894 The North Dakota statute gives tenants a repair and deduct remedy, without stated limitations, and the right to vacate the premises. n895

Louisiana has a repair and deduct statute based on the civil law. Under the provisions of the Louisiana Civil Code, the "lessor is bound to make all repairs that become necessary to maintain the thing in a condition suitable for the purpose for which it was leased, except those for which the lessee is responsible." n896 If the lessor fails to perform the obligation to make the necessary repairs within a reasonable time after demand by the lessee, the lessee may cause the repairs to be made. Thereafter, the lessee may demand immediate reimbursement for the amount of the repair, or the lessee may apply that amount to the payment of the rent. n897 However, these rights are available only to the extent that the repair was necessary and the expended amount was reasonable. n898

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 888. See generally Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 51-59 (1979).

(n2)Footnote 889. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1941.

(n3)Footnote 890. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1941.1.

(n4)Footnote 891. See N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540-A6.

(n5)Footnote 892. See S.D. Comp. Laws Ann. § 43-32-8.

(n6)Footnote 893. See S.D. Comp. Laws Ann. § 43-32-9.

(n7)Footnote 894. See S.D. Comp. Laws Ann. § 43-32-9.

(n8)Footnote 895. See N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.

(n9)Footnote 896. N.D. Cent. Code § 46-16-07.1. Another article imposes obligations on the lessee to repair damage caused by the lessee's fault or by the fault of persons who are on the premises with the consent of the lessee, as well as to repair deterioration resulting from excessive use. See La. Civ. Code art. 2692.

(n10)Footnote 897. La. Civ. Code art. 2694.

(n11)Footnote 898. La. Civ. Code art. 2694.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.08

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.08 Rent Escrow Statutes.

§ 43.08(a) General Provisions.

In addition to rent withholding for breach of statutory remedies, a number of states have enacted special rent withholding and escrow statutes for housing code violations. Several such statutes date back to the early part of this century. n899 A 1905 Connecticut statute, for example, required a landlord to obtain a certification of housing law compliance in order to collect rents or to evict a tenant for nonpayment of rent. n900 The majority of these statutes, however, were enacted in the 1960s and 1970s. Although varying in form, they generally give tenants the right to place rent payments into an escrow account until a landlord remedies substantial housing code violations.

These statutes take several approaches on what triggers the right to suspend rent. n901 First, a number of statutes require a judicial determination that there has been a housing code violation before a tenant can suspend rent payments. n902 These statutes typically provide that either tenants or a code enforcement agency can bring the action. n903 The statutes typically require that a substantial housing code violation be found. n904 However, the Delaware statute premises withholding on a lack of specified essential services, or "other conditions imminently dangerous to the life, health, or safety of the tenant." n905 At least two states require a court determination that defects constitute a "nuisance." n906

Second, several statutes provide that rent withholding is triggered by a governmental agency determination that a building is unfit for habitation. n907 Under the Pennsylvania statute, for instance, a tenant's duty to pay rent is suspended if an appropriate government agency certifies that a building is "unfit for human habitation." n908 Similarly, the Michigan statute provides that rent may be placed into escrow if a certificate of housing code compliance has been suspended. n909 The Rhode Island statute states that rent is suspended if a housing code enforcement officer determines that the dwelling poses a "serious hazard or imminent peril to the health, safety, or welfare" of the tenants. n910

Almost all statutes require that tenants place rent payments into an escrow account. n911 When statutes first require a judicial determination of defects, the escrow is often set up by the clerk of the court. n912 In other states the escrow is set up with the code enforcement agency, n913 or with a bank or trust company. As discussed below, a number of statutes also provide that a receiver may be appointed to collect rents.

Most statutes provide that rent placed into escrow is available to the landlord to fund repairs of the leased premises. n914 Statutes often provide that, once defects are corrected, any surplus goes to the landlord. n915 Thus, although withholding serves as an incentive for repair, it does not necessarily provide tenants with rent abatement for the diminished value of the property. Several states, however, provide for forms of rent abatement. For example, the Delaware statute provides that a receiver may use collected rents to compensate tenants for "deprivations" caused by the poor conditions. n916 Similarly, the Minnesota statute provides that a court may order rent abatement for impaired use and enjoyment of the property. n917 The Pennsylvania statute does not directly provide for rent abatement, but does state that if defects are not remedied within six months deposited rents are to be returned to the tenants. n918

Some statutes authorize other forms of relief. The Michigan statute, for example, provides that tenants may seek damages and injunctive relief. n919 Several other statutes provide that a court may order injunctive relief. n920 And a number of statutes provide for the appointment of a receiver. n921

Finally, several states have rent withholding statutes applicable only to buildings occupied by welfare recipients. An Illinois statute, for example, authorizes welfare agencies to withhold rent allowances and direct payments to landlords when there are substantial housing code violations in buildings occupied by welfare recipients. n922 The statute also prohibits tenant eviction as a result of withholding. Several other states have similar statutes. n923

§ 43.08(b) Receivership Provisions.

Some rent withholding statutes authorize a court to appoint a receiver to collect rents and to supervise repairs. n924 Under most statutes, receivership is one of several options available to a court, although, in some instances, the receivers may be appointed only upon judicial determination of substantial housing code violations.

The primary purpose of the receivership is to facilitate the repair of the property and to remedy housing code violations. n925 To this end, receivers are usually given broad management powers, including collection of rents, payment of taxes and other management costs, and general management of the property. n926 They may apply collected rents n927 or borrow funds n928 to make repairs. Some receivership provisions permit the receiver to compensate tenants or abate the rent for diminished value of the property. n929

§ 43.08(c) Constitutional Challenges.

Rent withholding statutes of the kind described here have been challenged for invalidity. The most common challenge has been that they violate due process, with landlords asserting that the statutes are arbitrary and capricious and constitute an unconstitutional deprivation of property. Courts have held, however, that the statutes are a legitimate exercise of the police power. n930 Courts have noted that the purpose of these statutes is to ensure an adequate supply of decent and safe housing, n931 and that permitting rent withholding is substantially related to that purpose.

Courts have rejected arguments that such statutes are an unduly oppressive means of seeking to meet otherwise legitimate goals. In this regard, they have emphasized that the statutes do not relieve a tenant of the duty to pay rent, but rather require rent payments to be made in a manner that encourages landlord repairs. n932

Courts have also rejected various other challenges to the validity of the statutes. For example, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has held that permitting a code enforcement agency to determine if rent can be withheld is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, since the statute provides adequate standards with respect to the withholding decision. n933 Courts have also held that the statutes do not deny equal protection n934 and do not unconstitutionally impair contracts. n935

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 899. See Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 23-25 (1979) (listing Connecticut 1905; Iowa 1919; and New York 1929 as having early statutes).

(n2)Footnote 900. Cunningham, The New Implied and Statutory Warranties of Habitability in Residential Leases: From Contract to Status, 16 Urb. L. Ann. 3, 23 (1979).

(n3)Footnote 901. See generally Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.40 (1980).

(n4)Footnote 902. See, e.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570; N.J. Stat. Ann. 2A:42-92.

(n5)Footnote 903. See, e.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:42-88.

(n6)Footnote 904. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. § 2A: 42-88.

(n7)Footnote 905. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 5901.

(n8)Footnote 906. See Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 47a-56a; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570. The Connecticut statute defines "nuisance" as a serious fire hazard or other threat to the life, health, or safety of the tenants.

(n9)Footnote 907. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.385.

(n10)Footnote 908. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35, § 1700-1; cf. Notre Dame Leasing, LLC v. Rosario 761 N.Y.S.2d 292 (App. Div. 2003) , aff'd, 812 N.E.2d 291 (N.Y. 2004) (state welfare officials may exercise the power to withhold rent for the general good of the public, but individual welfare recipients cannot).

(n11)Footnote 909. See Utah Code Ann. § 78-36-6.

(n12)Footnote 910. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11.

(n13)Footnote 911. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.385; R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11.

(n14)Footnote 912. See, e.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570; N.J. Stat. § 2A:42-92.

(n15)Footnote 913. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11.

(n16)Footnote 914. See, e.g., Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35, § 1700-1.

(n17)Footnote 915. See, e.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570; R.I. Gen. Laws § 45-24.2-11.

(n18)Footnote 916. Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5901.

(n19)Footnote 917. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a.

(n20)Footnote 918. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35, § 1700-1.

(n21)Footnote 919. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 125.536.

(n22)Footnote 920. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 566.25.

(n23)Footnote 921. Receivership provisions are discussed in the following section of this chapter.

(n24)Footnote 922. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 23 § 11-23.

(n25)Footnote 923. See N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 143(b); R.I. Gen. Laws Ann. § 40-6-14.

(n26)Footnote 924. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47a 56a; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-7-1-7; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 125.535; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.570; N.J. Stat. § 2A:42-93; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 823.22.

(n27)Footnote 925. See Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 125.535.

(n28)Footnote 926. See, e.g., Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5906.

(n29)Footnote 927. See, e.g., id.

(n30)Footnote 928. See Wis. Stat. Ann. § 823.22.

(n31)Footnote 929. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5906; Utah Code Ann. § 78-36-3.

(n32)Footnote 930. See, e.g., Second Nat'l Bank v. Loftus, 185 A. 423 (Conn. 1936) ; DePaul v. Kauffman, 272 A.2d 500 (Pa. 1972) .

(n33)Footnote 931. See, e.g., DePaul v. Kauffman, 272 A.2d 500 (Pa. 1972) .

(n34)Footnote 932. Id.

(n35)Footnote 933. See DePaul v. Kauffman, 272 A.2d 500 (Pa. 1972) .

(n36)Footnote 934. See Schaeffer v. Montes, 233 N.Y.S.2d 444 (1962) .

(n37)Footnote 935. See Farrell v. Drew, 227 N.E.2d 824 (N.Y. 1967) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.09

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.09 Security Deposit Statutes.

Almost all residential landlords require tenants to provide a security deposit, often equal to one month's rent, at the commencement of the lease. Although varying in form, lease agreements typically permit landlords to apply the deposit to unpaid rent, damages caused by the tenant, and other breaches. Any remaining funds are to be returned to the tenant at the end of the lease.

The actual use of security deposits in practice has been subject to substantial abuse. It is frequently asserted that landlords abuse the use of security deposits either by simply keeping the money or by fabricating claims of tenant breach. Since the landlord has the money in hand, this places a substantial burden on tenants to recover moneys rightfully owed to them.

The perception of substantial landlord abuse of security deposits has led over forty states to enact statutes regulating the use of security deposits. One fundamental restriction imposed by all statutes is in the amount of the deposit, with most limitations ranging from one to two months' rent. n936 Most statutes impose itemization and use requirements. And a number of statutes impose deposit and interest requirements as well.

§ 43.09(a) Deposit and Interest Requirements.

Approximately half of the states with security deposit legislation require that security deposits be placed into special accounts. In most instances the money must be placed into an escrow or trust account, with statutes often specifying the nature of the bank and that it be federally insured. n937 For example, the Maine statute requires that security deposits be placed into a bank or other financial institution account. n938 Similarly, the Iowa statute requires that moneys be deposited into a federally insured bank account. n939 Several statutes provide that the landlord can post a bond in lieu of placing the money into an account. n940

The primary purpose of such deposit requirements is to insure that the tenant's money be available for refunds. To this end, several statutes also prohibit commingling of security deposits with other landlord assets. n941 But the statutes usually permit landlords to place security deposits together into a single account.

A number of states also require that landlords pay interest on the amount on deposit. n942 In some states, the interest payment requirement applies only in particular situations. For example, in Illinois, interest must be paid if the landlord has 25 or more dwelling units in a single building or complex of buildings on contiguous parcels and if the deposits are held more than six months. n943 Similarly, both New Hampshire n944 and New Mexico n945 require payment of interest on deposits held more than a year, and Pennsylvania requires payment on accounts held longer than two years. n946 In contrast, Iowa's statute specifically provides that any interest belongs to the landlord. n947 Many statutes are silent on the payment of interest.

§ 43.09(b) Itemization and Use Requirements.

Perhaps the primary concern raised by use of security deposits is landlord abuse in their retention at lease end. Security deposit legislation addresses this concern in several ways. First, almost all statutes require that landlords return the security deposit within a specified period and provide an itemized list to the tenant that supports any amounts withheld. For example, the URLTA provides that the landlord must return the deposit with an itemized list supporting amounts withheld within fourteen days of termination of the lease and demand by the tenant. n948 Most statutes provide a comparable scheme, with return within 30 days being the most common period. n949

Second, almost all statutes limit the reasons for which a landlord may retain a security deposit. Most statutes provide that landlords may apply the security deposit to accrued rent and to damages caused by a tenant's breach of a lease obligation. n950 The URLTA for example, provides that a landlord may apply the security deposit to payment of accrued rent and to damages suffered as a result of a tenant's noncompliance with applicable duties to maintain the dwelling. n951

Statutes provide other grounds for retention as well. These include the payment of cleaning charges, n952 unpaid utility bills, n953 or expenses incurred in removing articles the tenant left behind. n954 The Colorado statute, for example, provides that the landlord can apply the security deposit to nonpayment of rent, nonpayment of utility bills, repairs, and cleaning costs. n955 A number of statutes specifically state, however, that a landlord cannot apply the security deposit to repairs caused by ordinary wear and tear. n956

§ 43.09(c) Remedies.

Almost all statutes provide that if a landlord wrongfully withholds a security deposit a tenant may recover the money owed plus a specified amount. n957 Most common are statutes that provide that the tenant may recover twice the amount wrongfully withheld. n958 Several statutes provide that the tenant can recover treble damages. n959 Some statutes provide for punitive damages. n960

§ 43.09(d) Transfer of the Landlord's Interest.

A number of states have statutes that impose different degrees of obligation on transferees of the landlord's reversion for return of the deposit. n961 Some statutes, including the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, n962 provide that transferees of the reversion are bound by provisions of security deposit legislation that require that they return deposits at the end of the tenancy. n963 Other states have statutes that expressly require that the security deposits be transferred to the landlord's successor in interest who then becomes liable to the tenant for the security deposit. n964 Several statutes provide that, upon transfer of the landlord's interest, the landlord must either transfer the security deposit to the transferee, or return the deposit to the tenant. n965

Some statutes include provisions that give special protections to transferees. For example, the Iowa statute provides that, upon termination of the landlord's interest in the dwelling unit, the landlord's successor in interest will have all the rights and obligations of the landlord with respect to rental deposits. However, the successor can send the tenant a written notice stating the amount of the deposit. If the tenant does not object to the stated amount within twenty days, the obligation of the successor to return the deposit will be limited to the amount contained in the notice. n966

Additional information relating to security deposits and transfer of the landlord's reversion is contained in Chapter 42. n967

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 936. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 34.03.070 (two months); Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58-2550 - 58-2559 (one month).

(n2)Footnote 937. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 34.03.070 (shall deposit in trust or escrow account); Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12 (shall hold in an insured savings account).

(n3)Footnote 938. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14, §§ 6031-6038.

(n4)Footnote 939. See Iowa Code Ann. § 562.A.12.

(n5)Footnote 940. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.49(3)(a); Ga. Code Ann. § 8-3-202; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 554.601-554.616.

(n6)Footnote 941. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.49(3)(a); Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 §§ 6031-6038; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-301.

(n7)Footnote 942. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a 21; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-203.

(n8)Footnote 943. See 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 715/1.

(n9)Footnote 944. See N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540 A:6.

(n10)Footnote 945. See N.M. Stat. Ann. § 47-8-18.

(n11)Footnote 946. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 68 §§ 250.511a 250.512.

(n12)Footnote 947. See Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12 ("Any interest earned on a rental deposit during the first five years of a tenancy shall be the property of the landlord.").

(n13)Footnote 948. See URLTA § 2.101.

(n14)Footnote 949. See, e.g., Ga. Code Ann. § 8-3-202; Idaho Code Ann. § 6-321.

(n15)Footnote 950. See, e.g., La. Rev. Stat. Ann. 9:3251; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 554.601-554.616.

(n16)Footnote 951. See URLTA § 2.101.

(n17)Footnote 952. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § § 38-12-101 - 38-12-104; Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70-25-201 - 70-25-206.

(n18)Footnote 953. See Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 38-12-101 - 38-12-104; N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-50 - 42-57; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4661.

(n19)Footnote 954. See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4461.

(n20)Footnote 955. See Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 38-12-101 - 38-12-104.

(n21)Footnote 956. See, e.g., Idaho Code Ann. § 6-321; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-203.

(n22)Footnote 957. Issues can arise, however, with respect to when the time starts to run on the landlord's obligation to return the deposit. See, e.g., Mitchell v. First Real Estate Equities, Inc., 671 A.2d 621 (N.J. Sup. Ct. 1996) .

(n23)Footnote 958. See, e.g., Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70-25-201 - 70-25-206. Of course, the landlord might have claims to assert against the tenant as well. See, e.g., Granberry v. Islay Investments, 889 P.2d 970 (Cal. 1995) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 866 (1995) (landlords who failed to timely return security deposit permitted to assert setoff against amounts on deposit).

(n24)Footnote 959. See, e.g., Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-7-30 - 44-7-36; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-203.

(n25)Footnote 960. See Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12.

(n26)Footnote 961. See generally Robert Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 6.35 (1980).

(n27)Footnote 962. See URLTA §§ 2.101(a), 2.105(a).

(n28)Footnote 963. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.070; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 33-1321; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 521-44; Idaho Code § 6-321; 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 710/1.1; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-31-3-12; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-203; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1416; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-07.1; Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.300; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-19; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-40-410; Tex. Prop. Code § 92.105; Va. Code Ann. § 55-248.15:1.

(n29)Footnote 964. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a-21; Fl. Stat. Ann. § 83.49; La. Civ. Code Ann. § 3251; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186 § 15b; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540-A6; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-20; N.D. Cent. Code § 46-16-07.1; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4461; Wash. Rev. Code § 59.18.270.

(n30)Footnote 965. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1950.5; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 38-12-103; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 14 § 6035; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.178; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-54; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 115.

(n31)Footnote 966. See Iowa Code Ann. § 562A.12.

(n32)Footnote 967. See § 42.03(d)(2).

127 of 189 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.10

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.10 General Statutory Modifications and Enactments.

Almost all states have statutory landlord-tenant enactments beyond those described above. The nature, scope, and extent of these statutes vary substantially. In some instances they are rather modest modifications of common law principles. More typical, however, are statutes that cover a variety of subjects relating to landlord-tenant law, often including both codification of common law principles and enactment of more modern landlord-tenant provisions.

All states have some form of summary eviction statute, often as part of a forcible entry and unlawful detainer scheme. These statutes typically prohibit unlawful possession of or forcible entries onto premises and list grounds for which a landlord can recover possession of the property. The main import of these statutes today, however, is to provide a summary eviction proceeding by which the landlord may recover possession of the property in an expedited fashion. The statutes vary, but they typically include the basis for invoking summary proceedings, notice and service requirements, pleading provisions, jurisdiction requirements, and limitations on joining unrelated claims. n968 These statutes will occasionally also include other provisions, such as notice requirements for termination of leases n969 and distress for rent provisions. n970 In most states, however, summary proceeding statutes are separate from other landlord-tenant statutory provisions.

Almost half the states have also adopted some form of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act (URLTA) or the Model Residential Landlord-Tenant Code. n971 To the extent that they track the model statutes, these state statutes include the warranties and remedies, security deposit provisions, and retaliatory conduct provisions discussed in § 43.06 of this chapter. Moreover, to the extent that they track the model statutes, the state statutes also include provisions dealing with landlord-tenant obligations, n972 creation and termination of periodic tenancies, n973 tenant rights when the leased premises are damaged or destroyed by fire or casualty, n974 landlord remedies for holdover tenants, n975 abolition of distraint for rent, n976 prohibition of landlord exculpatory clauses, n977 regulation of tenant abandonment, n978 the landlord's duty to mitigate damages, n979 the landlord's obligation to deliver possession of the premises, n980 limitations on recovery of possession, n981 and other matters.

Most URLTA states have statutory provisions in addition to the URLTA. Several states have separate commercial leasing statutes. n982 A number of states also have separate statutory provisions concerning agricultural leases. n983 Finally, some states have separate statutes for mobile home leases. n984

The variety and total number of statutory provisions is substantial, and a detailed discussion of such provisions is beyond the scope of this work. For this reason the discussion will be limited to the areas discussed below, which represent some of the common areas of statutory enactments.

§ 43.10(a) Creation and Termination of Tenancies.

Most states have statutes that concern the creation and termination of tenancies. If the type of tenancy is not specified, the statute typically provide for creation of either a tenancy at will, n985 or a periodic tenancy based on the payment period. n986

A significant number of states have statutes that codify the common law rule that a tenancy for years terminates automatically at the end of its term. n987 There is, however, some variation in notice requirements for tenancies that can be terminated with notice. The common law requirement of six months' notice for termination of a year to year periodic tenancy has been reduced in most states to three months, n988 although a number establish shorter periods. n989 Week to week tenancies typically require seven days' notice, but that is not always the case. n990 Most month to month tenancies require thirty days' notice, n991 although some statutes provide shorter periods, n992 and a few longer. n993

The common law rule that tenancies at will can be terminated without prior notice has also been modified in some states by requiring notice, though there are variations in the required notice period. n994

Some statutes impose different notice periods for the landlord and the tenant. n995 Several statutes also have different notice periods for residential and nonresidential tenancies. n996

§ 43.10(b) Holdover Tenants.

Most states provide tenants with a statutory right to evict holdover tenants and to collect damages. Most common are recovery of double rent for the time retained, n997 although a few limit recovery to actual damages, n998 and several provide for treble rent recovery. n999 The URLTA provides that, for willful tenant holdovers, the landlord can recover three months' periodic rent or threefold actual damages, whichever is greater. n1000 However, statutes often provide that landlord acceptance of rent after the termination of a tenancy creates a periodic tenancy. n1001

§ 43.10(c) Distress for Rent.

The common law distress for rent remedy gave landlords the right to seize and retain a tenant's property on the premises in return for rent owed. n1002 Several statutes recognize distress for rent but modify the common law by eliminating self help and instead requiring issuance and service of a distress warrant by a public official. n1003 Several such statutes have been held unconstitutional. n1004

A greater number of states, as well as the URLTA, abolish the remedy altogether. n1005 A few states, such as Delaware, abolish distress for rent for residential tenancies, but retain it for other tenancies. n1006

§ 43.10(d) Landlord Liens.

A number of states have statutes that provide landlords with liens on tenants' property. n1007 Many have special provisions for crop liens, n1008 while others have more general lien provisions. n1009 Although generalizations are difficult, such statutes typically grant landlords a lien on the tenant's property when rent is unpaid. Some statutes also provide procedures for lien enforcement, such as foreclosure and sale. At the same time, however, several states, as well as the URLTA, have specifically abolished landlord liens on a tenant's property. n1010 The abolition is often stated in conjunction with abolishing the remedy of distress for rent.

§ 43.10(e) Abandonment and Mitigation.

Many states have statutes that address the parties' rights when a tenant abandons the property. Some statutes provide landlords with the right, under some circumstances, to claim property left after abandonment. n1011 For example, the Vermont statute provides that a landlord is required to notify the tenant of property left on the premises and to store the property for 45 days if its value is less than $1,000 and for six months if its value is greater. If the property is unclaimed, it becomes the property of the landlord. n1012 Some states also provide that the landlord may seize crops when a tenant has abandoned the premises. n1013

Some statutes reject the common law rule that a landlord has no duty to mitigate damages when a tenant abandons the leased premises. These statutes, many of which apply to residential leases, typically require that the landlord make reasonable efforts to rent the property upon abandonment, or they provide that if the landlord fails to make reasonable efforts it is assumed the landlord has accepted an offer of surrender and terminated the lease. n1014 Several statutes also impose duties on both landlords and tenants to mitigate damages when possible. n1015

§ 43.10(f) Destruction of Premises.

Two types of statutory provisions cover destruction of leased premises by fire or other casualty. First, one type provides that a tenant's covenant to repair does not include a duty to rebuild premises that have been destroyed. n1016 Second, several states, generally following the URLTA, provide that a tenant may vacate the premises and be released from rent if the premises have been destroyed. n1017 A Georgia statute, however, states that the destruction of a tenement by fire or the loss of possession by a casualty not caused by the landlord will not abate the rent. n1018 Most statutes dealing with destruction of the premises apply when the premises have been substantially destroyed, although a few also deal with partial destruction. n1019

§ 43.10(g) Tort Liability.

A large number of states statutorily prohibit landlord exculpatory clauses for tort liability, usually as part of a broader list of prohibited clauses. n1020 Some states also modify common law principles of landlord-tenant tort liability. Illinois, for example, abolishes the common law distinction between invitees and licensees and provides that the standard of care for entrants is that of reasonable care under the circumstances. n1021 A Georgia statute provides that landlords are not liable in tort for injuries or damages resulting from the tenant's negligent use of the premises, but is liable in damages for defective construction or for failing to keep the premises in repair. n1022

§ 43.10(h) Transfers of Landlord-Tenant Interests.

Many states have statutes addressing transfer of landlord/tenant interests. Some state statutes codify the common law rule that "attornment" is unnecessary when a landlord's interest is conveyed, or provide that a tenant's attornment to a stranger is void. n1023 The effect of these statutes is to provide that landlords may transfer their reversionary interests without the consent of the tenant.

Other state statutes address a tenant's ability to transfer an interest in property. Some statutes provide that a tenant can assign or sublet without the landlord's consent, unless the parties agree otherwise. n1024 An equal number, however, provide that tenants cannot assign or sublet without the landlord's consent. n1025 In some instances, this is limited only to tenancies of a limited duration, such as one that is shorter than two years. n1026 Some statutes provide that consent to transfer cannot be unreasonably withheld. n1027

Finally, statutes often provide that whatever rights the landlord has against a tenant, the landlord has those same rights against an assignee of the tenant. n1028 Similarly, by statute, tenants retain their basic remedies against assignees of their landlords. n1029

§ 43.10(i) Removal of Fixtures.

Several states have statutes regulating removal of fixtures by a tenant, typically providing that the tenant may remove fixtures unless their removal would cause injury to the premises or they have become a permanent part of the business. n1030

§ 43.10(j) Statute of Frauds.

All fifty states have statutes, based on the English Statute of Frauds, that require that voluntary transfers of land, including leaseholds, be in writing. n1031 Whereas the English statute applied only to leases exceeding three years, most American jurisdictions require a writing for leases exceeding one year. n1032 A few states follow the English statute and require a writing only for leaseholds exceeding three years, n1033 while several others appear to require a writing for all leases. n1034 The majority of statutes state that the effect of violating the statute is to void or make the lease ineffectual. n1035 A few states provide that the effect of violating the statute is to create a tenancy at will. n1036

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 968. See, e.g., Iowa Code Ann. §§ 648.1 - 648.23.

(n2)Footnote 969. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-40-107; Utah Code Ann. § 78-36-6.

(n3)Footnote 970. See, e.g., 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. § 5/9-301 et seq .

(n4)Footnote 971. See § 43.05(b) of this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 972. See URLTA §§ 2.101-2.105, 3.101-3.104.

(n6)Footnote 973. See URLTA § 4.301.

(n7)Footnote 974. See URLTA § 4.106.

(n8)Footnote 975. See URLTA § 4.301.

(n9)Footnote 976. See URLTA § 4.205.

(n10)Footnote 977. See URLTA § 1.403.

(n11)Footnote 978. See URLTA § 4.203.

(n12)Footnote 979. Id.

(n13)Footnote 980. See URLTA § 2.103.

(n14)Footnote 981. URLTA § 4.207.

(n15)Footnote 982. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.001 et seq. (non residential); §§ 83.40 et seq. (residential); R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 34-18-1 - 34-18-56 (residential); 34-18-1 - 34-18-20 (non residential).

(n16)Footnote 983. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 18-41-101 - 108; Ga. Code Ann. §§ 44-7-100 - 44-7-103.

(n17)Footnote 984. See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 38-12-201 - 38-12-220.

(n18)Footnote 985. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.01; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-6; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540:1.

(n19)Footnote 986. See Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47a 3b; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5107(b); Mo. Stat. Ann. §

441.060; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-30; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.04.020.

(n20)Footnote 987. See e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-341; Cal. Civ. Code § 1933; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 13-40-107; Ind. Code Ann. § 32-7-1-7; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2509; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-23; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.070; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 40.250; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 232 b; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-14; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 8; Or. Rev. Stat. § 91.080; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-22; Utah Code Ann. § 78-36-3; Va. Code Ann. § 55-222; Wash. Rev. Code § 59.04.030; W. Va. Code § 37-6-5.

(n21)Footnote 988. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-40-107; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540:3; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 5; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-37; W. Va. Code § 37-6-5.

(n22)Footnote 989. Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-23 (two months); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.050 (60 days); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-14 (one month); N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-15 (30 days); S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-15; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.134 (one year's notice).

(n23)Footnote 990. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.03; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-77 (10 days); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2570; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1437; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-14 (two days); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.17; Or. Rev. Stat. § 91.070 (10 days); R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-37; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-512 (10 days).

(n24)Footnote 991. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-40-107; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-71 (28 days for tenant); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2570; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.134; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-402(b); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1437; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 232 b; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-15; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.17; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 4; Or. Rev. Stat. § 91.070; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-37; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-120; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-13; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-512; W. Va. Code § 37-6-5.

(n25)Footnote 992. See Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.03, 83.57 (15 days).

(n26)Footnote 993. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5107; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-71 (60 days for landlord); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4467 (60 days unless written agreement for 30 days).

(n27)Footnote 994. See Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-7 (60 days for landlord, 30 days for tenant); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2504; Mo. Stat. Ann. § 441.060; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 4; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-120 (20 days); but see N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 540:2 (may terminate by mere notice). See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant § 1.6.

(n28)Footnote 995. See Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-7 (60 days notice from landlord, 30 days notice from tenant to terminate a tenancy at will); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-71 (45 days notice for landlord, 28 days notice from tenant to terminate a month to month tenancy).

(n29)Footnote 996. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.03 (three months notice for non residential year to year); § 83.57 (two months notice for residential year to year).

(n30)Footnote 997. See Ala. Code § 6-6-314; Alaska Stat. § 34.03.290; Ark. Stat. § 18-16-106; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5509(c); Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 83.06, 83.58; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-71; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2570(c) (11/2 rent or 11/2 actual damages); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.080; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-170.

(n31)Footnote 998. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12-1271; Wash. Rev. Code § 59.18.290.

(n32)Footnote 999. See Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1437; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-38.

(n33)Footnote 1000. See URLTA § 4.301.

(n34)Footnote 1001. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code § 1945; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-10; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 232 C;

Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.25 (residential tenancies). See also Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-71 (if landlord fails to evict tenant within 60 days, then month to month tenancy established); See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant §§ 14.1-14.7 (regarding holdover tenants).

(n35)Footnote 1002. See William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.57 (2000).

(n36)Footnote 1003. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.08 (non residential); Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-70; S.C. Code Ann. §§ 27-39-210 to 27-39-360.

(n37)Footnote 1004. See Restatement (Second) of Property, § 12.1, statutory note 5 (1977) (listing Florida, Illinois, Kentucky, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia as having distress statutes that were declared unconstitutional).

(n38)Footnote 1005. See Alaska Stat. §34.03.250; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 6301 (except pursuant to rental agreement for commercial unit); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2567; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 504B.101; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1434; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-25.7; Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.420; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-42; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.230; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.11; URLTA § 4.205.

(n39)Footnote 1006. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 6301.

(n40)Footnote 1007. See Ala. Code § 35-9-60; Ark. Stat. §§ 18-41-101 - 18-41-108; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.08; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-51; Mo. Stat. Ann. §§ 441.280-441.300; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-15; Okl. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 133; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-509 (if perfected under UCC); Utah Code Ann. §§ 38-3-1 - 38-3-8; W. Va. Code § 37-6-17.

(n41)Footnote 1008. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 35-9-30; Ark. Stat. §§ 18-4-101 - 18-4-108; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-15; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 27.

(n42)Footnote 1009. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 35-9-60; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.08; Utah Code Ann. §§ 38-3-1 - 38-3-8.

(n43)Footnote 1010. See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2567; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1434; URLTA § 4.205.

(n44)Footnote 1011. See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-56.

(n45)Footnote 1012. See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 § 4462(c).

(n46)Footnote 1013. See, e.g., 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/9-318.

(n47)Footnote 1014. See Ala. Code 1975 § 35-9A-423; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-1370 (residential leases); Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1951.2, 1951.4; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-70; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.670; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-207 (residential leases); Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 129; Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.410; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-40; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-40-730; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-507 (residential leases); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.310; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.29; Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant § 12.1 (no duty to mitigate when tenant abandons).

(n48)Footnote 1015. See Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1405; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-13.5.

(n49)Footnote 1016. See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.170; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-113; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.010; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-9; Va. Code Ann. § 55-226.

(n50)Footnote 1017. See Alaska Stat. §§ 34.03.040, 34.03.200; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-343; Cal. Civ. Code § 1932; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5308; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.56; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-65; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2562; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-112; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 554.201; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1429; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-7; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-12; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-17; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.11; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-18-33; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-40-650; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-19; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-28-503; Va. Code Ann. § 55-226; W. Va. Code § 37-6-28; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07. See also Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant §

5.2.

(n51)Footnote 1018. See Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-15.

(n52)Footnote 1019. See, e.g., Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.170; Article 9 of Uniform Commercial Code; N.J. Rev. Stat. § 46:8-7.

(n53)Footnote 1020. See 43 U.S.C.S. 1427 et seq.; Conn. Gen. Laws § 47a-7; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5515; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.47; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-33; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2547; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-105; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 186 § 15; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-1415; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 70-7-16; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5321.13; Or. Rev. Stat. § 90.245; Va. Code Ann. § 55-248.9; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 59.18.230.

(n54)Footnote 1021. See 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. § 130/2; see also Best v. Taylor Mach. Works 689 N.E.2d 1057 (Ill. 1997) (reform amendments held unconstitutional).

(n55)Footnote 1022. See Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-14.

(n56)Footnote 1023. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1111; Idaho Code § 55-610; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.100; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-17; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.150; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 111.090; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-2; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-10-20; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 119; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-80; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-17; Va. Code Ann. § 55-220; W. Va. Code § 37-6-3; cf. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.13.

(n57)Footnote 1024. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5512(a); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 521-37; La. Civ. Code art. 2713.

(n58)Footnote 1025. See Alaska Stat. § 34.03.060; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2511; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.180(2); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 441.030; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 10; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-60; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.09(1).

(n59)Footnote 1026. See, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2511 (two years or less); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.180(2) (two years or less); Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 10 (two years or less); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.09(1) (less than a year to year tenancy).

(n60)Footnote 1027. See Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5512(b) (if landlord requires consent it cannot be unreasonably withheld).

(n61)Footnote 1028. See Cal. Civ. Code §§ 821, 822; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-29; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 6704; Idaho Code § 55-302; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2516; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-101; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-15; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-2; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-8; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-30; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 15; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-20; Va. Code Ann. § 55-217; W. Va. Code § 37-6-1; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.09.

(n62)Footnote 1029. See Cal. Civ. Code § 823; Idaho Code Ann. § 55-303; Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58-2515 - 58-2516; Miss. Code Ann. § 89-7-21; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:8-3; N.C. Gen. Stat. § 42-8; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-16-29; Okla. Rev. Stat. tit. 41 § 15; S.D. Comp. Laws § 43-32-21; Va. Code Ann. § 55-218. See generally Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant §§ 15.1-15.2 (regarding transfer of interests).

(n63)Footnote 1030. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1019; Ga. Code Ann. § 44-7-12; Idaho Code § 55-308; Md. Real Prop. Code § 8-114; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-06-04; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.05.

(n64)Footnote 1031. See generally Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant §§ 2.1-2.5.

(n65)Footnote 1032. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 8-9-2; Cal. Civ. Code § 1624; First Amendment; First Amendment of the United States Constitution; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 432.010; Or. Rev. Stat. § 41.580; Va. Code Ann. § 11-2.

(n66)Footnote 1033. See Ind. Code § 32-21-1-1; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 25:1-12 (but can prove by clear and convincing evidence); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 22-2; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 33 § 1.

(n67)Footnote 1034. See Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 33 § 51; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 259 § 1; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:15; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 1335.04 - 1335.05.

(n68)Footnote 1035. See, e.g., Del. Code Ann. tit. 25 § 5107; S.C. Code Ann. § 27-35-20.

(n69)Footnote 1036. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 83.01; Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 33 § 1.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 43 STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 43.11

AUTHOR: Professor Mark W. Cordes Northern Illinois University College of Law

§ 43.11 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Articles

Backer, Ronald G., "Pennsylvania Landlord Remedies: An Update," 107 Dick. L. Rev. 75 (Summer, 2002).

Bell, Deborah. "The Mississippi Landlord Tenant Act of 1991." Miss. L.J. Vol. 61 (Winter 1991) 527.

Bischoff, Mike, "Theories of Toxic Mold Liability Facing Arizona Homebuilders," 34 Ariz. St. L.J. 681 (Summer, 2002).

Blandon, Elizabeth. "Reasonable Accommodation or Nuisance? Service Animals for the Disabled," 75 Fla. B. J. 12 (Mar. 2001).

Brumbaugh, Christopher T. & Heaven, Lewis A., "Advising Clients on the Consequences of Withholding Rent in a Commercial Lease." 54 J. Mo. B. 130 (May/June, 1998).

Dale, Renee Sims. "Landlord Tenant&Forcible Entry and Detainer&Statutory Prohibition of Landlord Self Help Remedies." U. Ark. Little Rock L. J. Vol. 9 (Fall 1986) 683.

Delaney, Brian J. "Landlord Tenant Law: Protecting the Small Landlord's Rights During Summary Process." 37 Suffolk U. L. Rev. 1109 (2004).

Dorelli, Michael A. and Joseph C. Bowman. "Recent Developments in Property Law." 32 Ind. L. Rev. 973 (1999).

Dixon, Joshua W., "The Case Against a Nondelegable Duty on Owners to Prevent Fair Housing Act Violations," 69 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1293 (Summer 2002).

Fejfar, Anthony J. "Permissive Waste and the Warranty of Habitability in Residential Tenancies," 31 Cumb. L. Rev. 1 (2000-2001).

Friedlander, Jerome P., III. "The Virginia Residential Landlord Tent Act: A Comparison with the Common Law." Va. B.A. J. Vol. 20 (Summer 1994) 18.

Garner, S. Keith. "'Novel' Constitutional Claims: Rent Control, Means Ends Tests, and the Takings Clause," 88 Calif. L. Rev. 1547 (October, 2000).

Gaudio, Arthur R. "Wyoming's Residential Rental Property ActA Critical Review," 35 Land & Water L. Rev. 455 (2000).

Gentle, Terry W., Jr. "Rethinking Conciliation Under the Fair Housing Act," 67 Tenn. L. Rev. 425 (Winter, 2000).

Goetz, Edward G., Karen Chapple & Barbara Lukermann, "The Minnesota Land Use Planning Act and the Promotion of Low and Moderate Income Housing in Suburbia." 22 Law & Ineq. J. 31 (Winter 2004).

Grant, Eugene L. "Disturbing Concepts: Quiet Enjoyment and Constructive Eviction in the Modern Commercial Lease," 35 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 57 (Spring, 2000).

Hamer, John, "Handicap Discrimination, Zoning, and the Federal Fair Housing Act." 13 Me. B. J. 166 (July, 1998).

Hansen, Christine L. "Lead Astray, and Back Again: Alternative Solutions to the Lead Paint Poisoning Problem in Wisconsin's Rental Housing," 2000 Wis. L. Rev. 1073.

Herrion, John P. "Developments in Housing Law and Reasonable Accommodations for New York City Residents with Disabilities," 27 Fordham Urb. L. J. 1295 (April, 2000).

Huss, Rebecca J. "No Pets Allowed: Housing Issues and Companion Animals." 1 Animal L. 69 (2005).

Kennedy, Duncan, "The Limited Equity Coop as a Vehicle for Affordable Housing in a Race and Class Divided Society," 46 How. L.J. 85 (Fall 2002).

Mahoney, Peter E., "The End(s) of Disparate Impact: Doctrinal Reconstruction, Fair Housing & Lending Law, and the Antidiscrimination Principle." 47 Emory L. J. 409 (Spring, 1998).

Marshall, Richard D. "Statutorily Protected Tenants Vis a vis the Free Market." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 16 (Winter 1988) 265.

Moran, Timothy J. "Punitive Damages in Fair Housing Litigation: Ending Unwise Restrictions on a Necessary Remedy," 36 Harv. C.R. C.L. L. Rev. 279 (2001)

Naughton, Elizabeth. "San Francisco's Owner Move In Legislation: Rent Control or Out of Control?" 34 U. S. F. L. Rev. 357 (Spring, 2000).

O'Rourke, John, "Representing Homebuyers in Post Caveat Emptor Illinois," 90 Ill. B.J. 421 (August, 2002).

Orth, John V. "Confusion Worse Confounded: The North Carolina Residential Rental Agreements Act," 78 N.C. L. Rev. 783 (March, 2000).

Osborne, Christy. "Tort Law & Landlord Liability for the Criminal Acts of Third Parties & A Statutory Duty to Protect Tenants." Cumberland L. Rev. Vol. 22 (Winter 1992) 387.

Peterson, Megan, "Seller Beware: Mandatory Disclosure Provisions In Iowa Put Sellers of Residential Real Estate on Alert," 50 Drake L. Rev. 569 (2002).

Powell, Frona M. "Unconscionability in the Lease of Commercial Real Estate," 35 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 197 (Spring, 2000).

Prestes, Brian S. "Application of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act to Housing Leases," 67 U. Chi. L. Rev. 865 (Summer, 2000).

Robert G. Schwemm, "Discriminatory Housing Statements and 3604(c): A New Look at the Fair Housing Act's Most Intriguing Provision," 29 Fordham Urb. L.J. 187 (2001).

Schwemm, Robert G. and Oliveri, Rigel C., "A New Look at Sexual Harassment Under the Fair Housing Act: The Forgotten Role of 3604(c)," 2002 Wis. L. Rev. 771.

Spector, Mary B. "Tenants' Rights, Procedural Wrongs: The Summary Eviction and the Need for Reform," 46 Wayne L. Rev. 135 (Spring, 2000).

Stanton, John F., "The Fair Housing Act and Insurance: An Update and the Question of Disability Discrimination," 31 Hofstra L. Rev. 141 (Fall 2002).

Weber, Matthew J., "The Legislature's Assistance to Tenants in a Tight Rental Market: Will it Work or Just End Up Making the Rental Market Even Tighter?" 33 McGeorge L. Rev. 207 (Winter 2002).

White, Frederic. "Fair Housing for the Mentally Handicapped and Their Right to Privacy Versus the Landlord's Duty to Warn and Protect," 28 Fordham Urb. L. J. 667 (Feb. 2001).

Wilcox, Robert M. "A Lawyer's Guide to the South Carolina Residential Landlord and Tenant Act." S.C. L. Rev. Vol. 39 (Spring 1988) 493.

Wilson, Jr., Lloyd T., "Fulfilling the Deterrent and Restitutionary Goals of the Security Deposits Statute and Other Developments in Indiana Property Law," 35 Ind. L. Rev. 150l (2002).

Annotations

Annotation, Applicability of Article 9 of Uniform Commercial Code to Assignment of Rights Under Real Estate Sales Contract, Lease Agreement, or Mortgage as Collateral for Separate Transaction, 76 A.L.R. 4th 765 .

Annotation, Application of Statutory Landlord's Lien to Property of Third Person Used by Tenant on Rented Premises, 95 A.L.R. 3d 1205 .

Annotation, Coverage of Leases Under State Consumer Protection Statutes, 89 A.L.R. 4th 854 .

Annotation, Federal Housing and Rent Act of 1947 and Amendments, 10 A.L.R.2d 249.

Annotation, Landlord Tenant Security Deposit Legislation, 63 A.L.R. 4th 901 .

Annotation, Modern Views as to Validity, Under Federal Constitution, of State Prejudgment Attachment, Garnishment, and Replevin Procedures, Distraint Procedures Under Landlords' or Innkeepers' Lien Statutes, and Like Procedures Authorizing Summary Seizure of Property, 18 A.L.R. Fed. 223 .

Annotation, Modern Status of Rules as to Existence of Implied Warranty of Habitability or Fitness for Use of Leased Premises, 40 A.L.R.3d 646 .

Annotation, Prohibition, Under State Civil Rights Laws, of Racial Discrimination in Rental of Privately Owned Residential Property, 96 A.L.R. 3d 497 .

Annotation, Retaliatory Eviction of Tenant for Reporting Landlord's Violation of Law, 23 A.L.R. 5th 140 .

Annotation, State Civil Rights Legislation Prohibiting Sex Discrimination in Housing, 81 A.L.R. 4th 205 .

Annotation, Statute Requiring Property to be kept in Good Repair as Affecting Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury to Tenant or his Privies, 17 A.L.R.2d 704 .

Annotation, Substantive Issues Relative to Rent Levels and Termination of Benefits Under United States Housing of 1937 (43 U.S.C.S. 1427 et seq.), 77 A.L.R. Fed. 884 .

Annotation, Tenants Procedural Rights Prior to Eviction or Termination of Benefits under 8 of Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C.S. 1437 et seq.), 81 A.L.R. Fed. 844 .

Annotation, Validity of Statute, Ordinance, or Regulation Requiring Compliance with Housing Standards Before Rent Increase or Possession by New Tenant, 20 A.L.R. 4th 1246 .

Annotation, Waiver of Statutory Demand for Rent Due or of Notice to Quit Prerequisite of Summary Eviction of Lessee for Nonpayment of Rent & Modern Cases, 31 A.L.R. 4th 1254 .

Annotation, What Constitutes Illegal Discrimination Under State Statutory Prohibition Against Discrimination in Housing Accommodations on Account of Marital Status, 33 A.L.R. 4th 964 .

State Treatises

Hausser, Robert L. "Summary, Statutory Protection to Residential Tenants." 59.01 Oh. Real Est. L. & Prac. (2d ed.) 2000.

Miller, Harry, D. and Marvin B. Starr. "Municipal Regulation of Rent ('Rent Control')." 6 Cal. Real Est. (2000) 18:67.

New Jersey Practice Skills and Methods (Publisher's Editorial Staff). "Eviction Law and Procedure 3016: Two Basic Eviction Statutes." 21A N.J. Prac. Skills and Methods (3d ed.) 2000 (pocket part).

New York Jurisprudence. "Applicability of Rent and Eviction laws to Cooperative Conversions." 19A NYJUR Condomin (2d ed.) 138 (1999).

White, Frederic. "Liability for Injuries on Leased Premises; Liability for Injuries Under the Statute: In General." 11.2 Ohio Landlord Tenant Law (2000).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 43 MODIFICATION OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 43.03

Supp. to § 43.03 Anti Discrimination.

[Go To Main]

[Go To Main]

§ 43.03(b)(1)(iii) The Fair Housing Act.

add:

Human Resource Research and Management Group, Inc. v. County of Suffolk, 687 F. Supp. 2d 237 (E.D. N.Y. 2010) (action challenging regulation of substance abuse recovery houses as in violation of the Fair Housing Act).

[Go To Main]

§ 43.03(c)(3) Religion.

add:

Intermountain Fair Housing Council v. Boise Rescue Mission Ministries, 655 F. Supp. 2d 1150 (D. Idaho 2009) (action accusing operator of homeless shelter and alcohol recovery program of violating Fair Housing Act on the basis of religion and sex).

§ 43.03(c)(4) Sex.

Add:

Quigley v. Winter, 584 S. Supp. 2d 1153 (N.D. Iowa 2008) (action against landlord for sex discrimination by harassment).

§ 43.03(c)(7) Handicap.

Add:

Elmowitz v. Executive Towers at Lido, LLC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88967 (E.D.N.Y. July 22, 2008) (tenant suffering from bi-polar disorder, depression and anxiety stated a claim for retaliation against landlord who refused to renew lease).

[Go To Main]

§ 43.03(e)(1) Refusal to Rent or Negotiate.

Add:

Villas West II of Willowridge Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McGlothin, 885 N.E.2d 1274 (Ind. App. 2008) (a no-lease covenant did not violate the Fair Housing Act).

§ 43.03(e)(2) Terms, Conditions, Privileges, and Provisions of Service.

add:

Bloch v. Frischholz, 587 F.3d 771 (7th Cir. 2009) (action by Jewish condominium owners challenging, as a violation of the Fair Housing Act, a condominium association rule prohibiting placing objects outside of unit entrance doors).

add:

Quigley v. Winter, 598 F.3d 938 (8th Cir. 2010) (action by female tenant alleging discrimination on the basis of sex in violation of the Fair Housing Act).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 43 MODIFICATION OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 43.04

Supp. to § 43.04 Rent Control.

[Go To Main]

[Go To Main]

§ 43.04(c)(6) Takings.

add:

Guggenheim v. City of Goleta, 582 F.3d 996 (9th Cir. 2009) (rent control ordinance that effectively transferred 90% of the property value from the mobile home park owners to the tenants was ruled a regulatory taking).

[Go To Main]

§ 43.04(d)(6) Removals.

add:

Osoria v. West New York Rent Control Bd., 982 A.2d 1185 (N.J. Super. 2009) (following conversion, the tenant did not have a right to continue rent control protection).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 43 MODIFICATION OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 43.06

Supp. to § 43.06 Retaliatory Conduct Statutes.

[Go To Main]

§ 43.06(a) Prohibitions Against Retaliatory Conduct [Go To Main]

Add:

Pendergrass v. Fagan, 180 P.3d 110 (Or. App. 2008) (the landlord's refusal to renew the lease after the lease had expired did not constitute retaliatory eviction).

Add:

Perdergrass v. Fagan, 218 Or. App. 533, 180 P.3d 110 (Or. App. 2008) (a tenant's action for retaliatory eviction was not rendered moot when the tenant vacated the premises).

§ 43.06(a)(1) Remedies.

Add:

2132- 38 Wallace Ave. Corp. v. Gibson, 876 N.Y.S.2d 33 (2009) (discrimination by landlord against tenant on the basis of the tenant's disability).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 43 MODIFICATION OF LANDLORD-TENANT LAW

5-43 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 43.11

Supp. to § 43.11 Bibliography

[Go To Main]

add to Articles:

Articles

Add the following:

Brumfield, Gregory. "A Closer Look at the Fair Housing Act of 1968: Can the Disparate Impact Theory Affect the Urban Crisis in the City of New Orleans? 37 S. U. L. Rev. 41 (Fall, 2009).

Daniel, Tamica H. "Bringing Real Choice to the Housing Choice Voucher Program: Addressing Voucher Discrimination Under the Federal Fair Housing Act," 98 Geo. L.J. 769 (March, 2010).

Esses, Daniella Lichtman. "Afraid to Be Myself, Even at Home: A Transgender Cause of Action Under the Fair Housing Act," 42 Colum. J.L. & Soc. Probs. 465 (Summer, 2009).

Lamari, Paul. "Montgomery County v. Glenment Hills Assocs. Privacy World: Landlords Who Refuse Tenants Solely Because Tenants Intend to Use Section 8 Vouchers Violate Montgomery County's Housing Discrimination Law, Regardless of the Landlord's Lack of Intent to Discriminate," 38 Balt. L.F. 179 (Spring 2008).

Ligatti, Christopher C. "No Training Required: The Availability of Emotional Support Animals As a Component of Equal Access for the Psychiatrically Disable Under the Fair Housing Act," 35 T. Marshall L. Rev. 139 (Spring, 2010).

McElhatton, Shaun C. "Condominiums: Lease Restrictions May Violate Fair Housing Act," 37 Real Est. L. Rep. 5

(April 2008).

Oyama, Rebecca. "Do Not (Re)enter: The Rise of Criminal Background Tenant Screening As a Violation of the Fair Housing Act," 15 Mich. J. Race & L. 181 (Fall 2009).

Ross, Lisa Marie. "Cyberspace: The New Frontier For Housing Discrimination-An Analysis of the Conflict Between the Communications Decency Act and the Fair Housing Act," 44 Val. U. L. Rev. 329 (Fall, 2009).

Rotem, Rebecca Tracy. "Using Disparate Impact Analysis in Fair Housing Act Claims: Landlord Withdrawal from the Section 8 Voucher Program," 78 Fordham L. Rev. 1971 (March, 2010).

Schepis, Benjamin A. "Making the Fair Housing Act More Fair: Permitting Section 3604(b) to Provide Relief for Post-Occupancy Discrimination in the Provision of Municipal Services-A Historical View," 41 U. Tol. L. Rev. 411 (Winter 2010).

Wong, Karen. "Narrowing the Definition of 'Dwelling' Under the Fair Housing Act," 56 UCLA L. Rev. 1867 (August, 2009).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 44.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.syn Synopsis to Chapter 44: COMMERCIAL LEASING

§ 44.01 Introduction to Commercial Leasing.

§ 44.02 Leased Premises.

§ 44.02(a) Description of Property.

§ 44.02(b) Size of Premises.

§ 44.02(c) Construction of Leased Area.

§ 44.02(d) Substitute Premises.

§ 44.02(e) Lease Expansion Rights.

§ 44.03 Restrictions On Tenant's Use of Premises.

§ 44.03(a) Specificity of Commercial Uses.

§ 44.03(b) Hazardous Use Restrictions.

§ 44.03(c) Noise Level, Floor Load Restrictions.

§ 44.04 Rental Clauses.

§ 44.04(a) Fixed Rent Clause.

§ 44.04(b) Percentage Rent Clause.

§ 44.04(b)(1) Gross Sales Basis.

§ 44.04(b)(2) "Breakpoint" Provisions.

§ 44.04(c) Escalations in Rent.

§ 44.04(c)(1) Fixed Increases.

§ 44.04(c)(2) CPI Based Increases.

§ 44.04(c)(3) Rent Review/Re-evaluation.

§ 44.04(d) Rent Concession Clauses.

§ 44.04(e) Tenant Equity Clauses.

§ 44.05 Taxes.

§ 44.05(a) Real Estate Taxes Defined.

§ 44.05(b) Tenant's Real Estate Tax Burden.

§ 44.05(b)(1) Proportional Share.

§ 44.05(b)(2) Tax Increases in Excess of a Given Base.

§ 44.06 Common Area Maintenance (CAM) Fees.

§ 44.07 Maintenance and Repair.

§ 44.07(a) Placing the Duty to Repair.

§ 44.07(b) Remedies for Failure to Repair.

§ 44.07(b)(1) Self-help.

§ 44.07(b)(2) Constructive Eviction.

§ 44.07(b)(3) Retaliatory Eviction.

§ 44.07(c) Implied Warranty of Suitability.

§ 44.07(d) Exculpation Clauses.

§ 44.08 Assignment/Subletting.

§ 44.08(a) Landlord's Objectives.

§ 44.08(b) Tenant's Objectives.

§ 44.08(c) Landlord's Right to Refuse Consent.

§ 44.08(c)(1) Common Law Approach.

§ 44.08(c)(2) Modern Judicial and Legislative Approaches.

§ 44.09 Insurance/Indemnity Clauses.

§ 44.09(a) Landlord Insurance.

§ 44.09(b) Tenant Insurance.

§ 44.09(c) Waiver of Subrogation.

§ 44.09(d) Indemnity Clauses.

§ 44.10 Environmental Considerations in Commercial Leases.

§ 44.10(a) Environmental Laws Affecting Commercial Leases.

§ 44.10(a)(1) Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA or Superfund).

§ 44.10(a)(2) Other Environmental Laws.

§ 44.10(a)(3) Environmental Laws Regulating Development.

§ 44.10(b) Landlord Liability.

§ 44.10(b)(1) Responsibility Based on Ownership.

§ 44.10(b)(2) Minimizing Landlord Liability.

§ 44.10(c) Tenant Liability.

§ 44.10(c)(1) Responsibility As Operator.

§ 44.10(c)(2) Responsibility As Owner.

§ 44.10(c)(3) Minimizing Tenant Liability.

§ 44.11 Major Damage, Destruction, and Condemnation.

§ 44.11(a) Defining Major Damage and Destruction.

§ 44.11(b) Rent Abatement.

§ 44.11(c) Right to Terminate Lease.

§ 44.11(d) Use of Insurance Policy Proceeds.

§ 44.11(e) Duty to Restore.

§ 44.11(f) Condemnation.

§ 44.11(f)(1) Total Condemnation.

§ 44.11(f)(2) Partial Condemnation.

§ 44.12 Default and Related Issues.

§ 44.12(a) Materiality of Breach.

§ 44.12(b) Eviction.

§ 44.12(c) Landlord's Duty to Mitigate.

§ 44.12(d) Estoppel Certificates.

§ 44.12(e) Subordination.

§ 44.12(e)(1) Subordination Agreement.

§ 44.12(e)(2) Non-disturbance Agreement.

§ 44.12(e)(3) Attornment Agreement.

§ 44.13 Special Types of Commercial Leases and Their Related Issues.

§ 44.13(a) Ground Leases.

§ 44.13(b) Sale and Leaseback Arrangements.

§ 44.14 Shopping Center Leases.

§ 44.14(a) Shopping Center Layout.

§ 44.14(a)(1) Key or Anchor Tenants.

§ 44.14(a)(2) Satellite Tenants.

§ 44.14(b) Use Restrictions.

§ 44.14(c) Easements and Appurtenances.

§ 44.14(d) Shopping Center Common Areas.

§ 44.14(e) Covenants Against Competition.

§ 44.14(f) Operating Covenants.

§ 44.14(f)(1) Express.

§ 44.14(f)(2) Implied.

§ 44.14(f)(3) Radius Clause.

§ 44.14(g) Merchants' Association.

§ 44.15 Bibliography.

Professor Alan M. Weinberger
School of Law
Saint Louis University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.01

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.01 Introduction to Commercial Leasing.

Perhaps more than other chapters of this work, this chapter is addressed to the practical concerns of those who negotiate and draft commercial leases on behalf of landlords and tenants. As aptly expressed by a leading commercial leasing practitioner in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area, "[W]hen your client hands you a 20- to 40-page single-spaced lease ... and asks you to negotiate the best possible deal, in the shortest possible time, and, of course, at the least possible expense, you need a checklist of the basic issues to consider." n1

Accordingly, these materials address issues that have traditionally been of the greatest concern in lease negotiations, discuss strategies and tactics for representing clients in commercial leasing transactions, and suggest approaches to resolving differences that balance the legitimate needs and rights of both parties. Liberal use is made of sample lease provisions. Where appropriate, the materials also discuss how courts and legislatures have addressed legal issues relating to commercial leasing. n2

In order to avoid duplication, the chapter focuses on topics unique to commercial lease transactions. Issues that arise in both commercial leasing and residential leasing generally are not considered separately in this chapter. Reference should be made to appropriate sections elsewhere in Volume 5 of this work for a discussion of such topics as the nature and duration of the landlord-tenant relationship, formalities required for creation of the landlord-tenant relationship, and the basic rights and obligations of landlords and tenants.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 23.

(n2)Footnote 2. It must be understood that, in a subject of this complexity and scope, these materials represent a survey of the field and a starting point for research. A good source of information for current developments in the law is the ABA Real Estate Quarterly Report sponsored by the American Bar Association Section on Real Property, Probate & Trust Law.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.02

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.02 Leased Premises.

§ 44.02(a) Description of Property.

An adequate description of the leased premises is essential to the validity of a lease agreement. n3 "The usual judicial formula is that a description is adequate though it is not a formal legal description or even a complete informal one, if it gives a clue that, with extrinsic evidence, identifies the intended premises. Street addresses and nicknames have been held adequate. In some jurisdictions, stricter standards for descriptions may be the rule, possibly even requiring a legal description. A saving principle, in its nature apt to save many questionable descriptions, is that an inadequate description is cured if the tenant takes possession." n4

In the case of a building not yet completed, the lease should contain a formula for precise identification of the location of the leased premises by the time of occupancy, typically by reference to a site plan attached as an exhibit to the lease and initialled by the parties at the time of execution.

Even if the lease is silent on the subject, easements will be implied, affording tenant the right of access over the common areas of the property for itself, its customers, and its employees. n5 A carefully drafted lease, from the tenant's perspective, will expressly grant tenant easements for use of the parking area as it existed on the lease commencement date, as well as walkways, malls, restrooms, lobbies, elevators, sewer and water conduits, utilities and the like. The landlord should consider the potential effect of any such easements on possible future expansion of the property. n6 A shopping center tenant facing a less attractive location may assert easement rights in seeking to prevent the landlord from building additional structures. n7

§ 44.02(b) Size of Premises.

Because the rent in a commercial lease is generally a function of the size of the leased premises, the lease will typically make reference to the size of the space and the method of rent calculation. In the case of a building not yet completed, the lease should contain an agreed mechanism for determining the size of the premises with precision, and for memorializing the result in a certificate signed on the lease commencement date. Subject to negotiation by the parties, the area for which a tenant will be charged rent (the so-called "rentable square footage") under local real estate custom may exceed the usable square footage within the actual boundaries of the demised premises. n8

§ 44.02(c) Construction of Leased Area.

If the leased premises are located in a new building, the landlord should be obligated to complete the shell, core, central systems, and common areas by a date certain or within a certain number of months following issuance of a building permit, subject to delays in the landlord's construction timetable for causes beyond the landlord's reasonable control, such as weather, strikes, shortages of material, and the like. n9

The lease should allocate responsibility for making improvements to the leased premises to accommodate the tenant's business needs and the cost of leasehold improvements. The tenant will typically receive an allowance toward the cost of such improvements in a fixed dollar amount per square foot of leased space. Alternatively, the landlord may agree, at the landlord's own expense, to furnish so-called "building standard" improvements, such as ceiling, wall, window and floor coverings, lighting, entrance and interior doors and hardware, of uniform quality to all tenants of the building. The tenant would be responsible for the cost of leasehold improvements in excess of the allowance or building standard.

Where the tenant is responsible for making improvements to the leased premises, the landlord will want the right to approve the tenant's contractors, protection against mechanic's liens, and proof of insurance coverages. n10

Leases for new space should provide a triggering mechanism for the tenant's obligation to move in and begin paying rent. Where the landlord is obligated to deliver the space on a turnkey basis, ready for installation of the tenant's fixtures, the lease commencement date is typically the date the landlord's architect certifies that the leased premises (and essential common areas, e.g., lobby, elevators, hallways, parking) are substantially complete so that the tenant can use the premises for the intended purpose, subject only to insubstantial "punch-list" items (e.g., mechanical adjustments, touch-up plastering and painting) to be completed after occupancy. n11 The tenant should be entitled to receive adequate prior written notice of the date the landlord intends to deliver possession of the space. n12 Where the tenant is responsible for making improvements, the lease commencement date will be the date the landlord delivers the premises to the tenant in condition for tenant improvements. n13

§ 44.02(d) Substitute Premises.

What once was a clear sign of a particularly overreaching landlord's form lease is a clause that is becoming increasingly common, n14 reserving to the landlord the right to relocate the tenant, against its will, to comparable substitute premises in the subject property (grandly, at the landlord's expense) n15 in the event the tenant's space might more profitably be rented as part of a larger block of space to another tenant. n16 Although not unheard of in leases for shopping centers, relocation clauses are generally found in leases for office buildings and other commercial contexts in which location is perceived as being less important to the tenant. n17 Large tenants often successfully negotiate for the elimination of this clause.

Courts have tended to reject the theoretical argument that the identification of particular premises of which the tenant has the exclusive right to possession for the duration of the term is one of the essential attributes of a valid lease, and that reservation of the right to relocate the tenant transforms the lease into a license. n18

§ 44.02(e) Lease Expansion Rights.

An option to expand the size of the premises anticipates the tenant's possible future growth without binding the tenant to pay more than necessary to meet its current space requirements. n19 The flexibility to lease additional space in the subject property during the term of the lease is particularly valuable during uncertain economic conditions, for start-up ventures, and for established businesses moving to new locations where success is uncertain. n20 For these reasons, lease expansion rights might perhaps be more appropriately considered in connection with the discussion of concession clauses. n21

From the landlord's perspective, expansion options limit the landlord's flexibility in leasing the expansion space to third party tenants, and they can negatively affect the amount that the landlord receives for rent. n22

The issues to be addressed in an expansion option clause include the location of the additional space, whether the tenant will accept the expansion space "as is" or the allocation of responsibility for making improvements, the notice period for tenant exercise of its expansion option (including whether time is of the essence), and whether or not the expansion space will be subject to all of the terms and conditions of the lease with respect to rent, services, and the like. Provision should be made for adjusting the tenant's proportionate share of common area expenses. n23 It is typically a condition of exercise of the expansion option that the tenant not be in default under any of the terms of the lease. n24

The expansion option may be expressed as a right of first refusal, by which the landlord agrees not to enter into any lease with a third party for space that becomes available in the building without first offering an existing tenant the right to lease such space on the same terms and conditions as the proposed third party lease.

Issues sometimes arise with respect to the manner in which a tenant has attempted to exercise an expansion option. A tenant that does not give notice in the form prescribed in the lease might be able to take advantage of the doctrines of waiver or estoppel. n25

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 3. William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.13 (3d ed. 2000). "Specificity of description in leases is equally as important as it is for deeds. An inadequate legal description can vitiate the entire instrument. Nonetheless, legal descriptions in leases are chronically deficient." Theodore H. Hellmuth, Missouri Practice -- Real Estate Law § 444 (1985).

(n2)Footnote 4. Id.

(n3)Footnote 5. Robert Kratovil, Modern Real Estate Documentation § 631 (1975).

(n4)Footnote 6. See M.N.S. Brandell, Inc. v. Roosevelt Nassau Oper. Co., 345 N.Y.S.2d 608 (1973) .

(n5)Footnote 7. The following example of a legal description, making extensive use of exhibits, attempts to accommodate the legitimate interests of both parties:

> Suite 703 as outlined in red on the attached floor plan marked Exhibit "A' and incorporated herein by reference, located on the 4th floor of premises having a legal description as shown on the attached Exhibit "B', together with non-exclusive right to use all elevators, stairs, restrooms, halls, common areas and access points servicing such Suite 703, as reasonably modified by Landlord from time to time, provided that no such modification shall materially interfere with convenient use and access by Tenant, its licensees and invitees of such Suite, and together with exclusive possession of Parking Spaces outlined in red on attached Exhibit "C', together with access thereto. All of the foregoing shall be hereinafter referred to as the Leased Premises.

Theodore H. Hellmuth, Missouri Practice -- Real Estate Law § 444 (1985).

(n6)Footnote 8. "[L]andlord will allocate a percentage of the common areas and non-rentable space in the building (e.g., mechanical areas, lavatories, and staircases) to the usable square footage in order to arrive at rentable square footage. This formula should be identified in the lease along with the resulting square footage in which both base rent and additional charges are determined." Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 30 (1989).

(n7)Footnote 9. The lease should also provide for tenant remedies, if possession is delayed through no fault of the tenant, ranging from money damages (measured by the difference between the rent at the tenant's present location and the agreed rent under the lease), in the case of a short delay, to cancellation at the tenant's option if construction is delayed beyond some predetermined limit. See Bates Advertising USA, Inc. v. 498 Seventh, LLC, 850 N.E.2d 1137 (N.Y. 2006) (lease provision entitling tenant to rent abatement if landlord did not complete improvements by a particular date, was enforceable liquidated damages provision, rather than an unenforceable penalty). If the lease is silent on the subject, or even if it provides that the lease shall remain in effect despite lengthy delays in completion, the court may grant the tenant rescission after a reasonable time has passed.See Hartwig v. 6465 Realty Co., 324 N.Y.S.2d 567 (Sup. Ct. 1971) (allowing tenant recovery of prepaid rent and security deposit after delay of eight months).

(n8)Footnote 10. A typical lease provision on the subject states as follows:

> All entry on the Leased Premises by Tenant and all work done by Tenant shall be at Tenant's sole risk. Tenant shall furnish to owner all certificates and approvals with respect to work done by Tenant or on Tenant's behalf that may be required from an authority for the issuance of a certificate of occupancy, and Owner shall have no responsibility or liability whatsoever for any loss or damage to any fixtures or equipment installed or left in the Leased Premises. Owner may require Tenant, before entering on the Leased Premises for any purpose or at any time prior to the completion of Tenant's Work, to furnish Owner for the benefit of Owner and its designees a bond in an amount satisfactory to Owner written by a surety company licensed and authorized to issue such bonds in the State of _____, guaranteeing the payment and performance of Tenant's Work, free of mechanics' or other liens. In addition, Owner may require Tenant to deposit with Owner a sum equal to One Dollar for each square foot of Floor Area or the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, whichever amount is greater, guaranteeing the same to be held by Owner without liability for interest until Tenant has completed Tenant's Work in conformance with the Working Plans, has received its final occupancy permit and has opened for business in the Leased Premises. Should Tenant fail to so complete Tenant's Work, Owner may, in addition to any other remedies available, retain said deposit.

See generally Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 22.8 (3d ed. 1990).

(n9)Footnote 11. Alternatively, if available in the jurisdiction, the issuance of a permanent certificate of occupancy by the local municipality may provide the trigger.

(n10)Footnote 12. The landlord will require protection against tenant change orders causing delay in completion of the leased premises. Typically the lease commencement date will be the earlier of the date the premises are substantially complete, or the date the landlord proves (or the landlord's architect certifies) the premises would have been substantially complete but for delays caused by tenant-requested change orders. The lease should provide that disputes over this, or any other issue in connection with construction of the premises, should be resolved by arbitration.

(n11)Footnote 13. In the shopping center context the lease commencement date is more likely to be the later of such date or the grand opening date for the anchor tenant(s). Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 24.

(n12)Footnote 14. Gary Goldman, How to Draft a Fair Office Relocation Clause, 6 Prac. Real Est. Law. 49 (November 1990).

(n13)Footnote 15. It may be questioned whether the tenant under these circumstances could ever be completely made whole in terms of lost goodwill and business.

(n14)Footnote 16. Relocation clauses are enforceable by the landlord. See Mosley & Mosley Builders, Inc. v. Landin Ltd., 361 S.E.2d 608 (N.C. Ct. App. 1987) . If the proposed substitute space is truly comparable to the demised premises, failure to comply with the landlord's exercise of the reserved right to relocate the tenant may justify termination of the lease. See Camalier & Buckley-Madison, Inc. v. Madison Hotel, Inc., 513 F.2d 407 (D.C. Cir. 1975) . However, if the substitute space is not comparable, the landlord will be in breach. See e.g., Kite v. Gus Kaplan Inc., 747 So. 2d 503 (La. 1999) .

(n15)Footnote 17. One particularly outrageous version of this clause went so far as to provide that the tenant could be relocated "to alternate space in the Building or another building in the area of Houston, Texas in which the Building is located." Gary Goldman, How to Draft a Fair Office Relocation Clause, 6 Prac. Real Est. Law. 58 (November 1990).

(n16)Footnote 18. See, e.g., City of Tacoma v. Smith, 750 P.2d 647 (Wash. Ct. App. 1988) .

(n17)Footnote 19. The alternative of leasing more space than currently required and subleasing the excess until it is needed to accommodate the tenant's future growth is less satisfactory for several reasons: The tenant may not be able to sublease the space at the same rent it is paying under its lease. The tenant may not wish to incur the obligations and responsibilities of a landlord. The lease itself may restrict subleasing. See § 44.08 of this chapter.

(n18)Footnote 20. In a rising real estate leasing market an expansion option may be a valuable source of potential profit for a tenant. In a jurisdiction that requires the landlord to act in a commercially reasonable manner in consenting to proposed subleases, the landlord will be unable to prevent the tenant from exercising its expansion option for the sole purpose of subleasing the expansion space to a third party at a profit. See 1010 Potomac Associates v. Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., 485 A.2d 199 (D.C. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n19)Footnote 21. See § 44.04(d) of this chapter.

(n20)Footnote 22. Neil N. Gluck & Ray B. Gliner, Negotiating Expansion Rights in Multi-Tenant Projects, Real Est. Fin., 59, 62 (Spring 1992):

> Options to expand will generally narrow the field of prospective tenants to those willing to lease the subject space for restricted lease terms (and perhaps with less beneficial tenant improvement packages), with limited and subordinate rights to extend their lease terms and often limited or no expansion rights. As a result, landlords will generally receive less effective rent on an interim basis for space encumbered with a fixed option to expand than they could have received for space unencumbered by the expansion right.

(n21)Footnote 23. See § 44.06 of this chapter.

(n22)Footnote 24. See § 44.12 of this chapter.

(n23)Footnote 25. See, e.g., Kenyon & Kenyon v. Logany, LLC, 823 N.Y.S.2d 72 (App. Div. 2006) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.03

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.03 Restrictions On Tenant's Use of Premises.

§ 44.03(a) Specificity of Commercial Uses.

Unless the lease provides to the contrary, the tenant is free to use the demised premises for any lawful purpose, n26 subject only to common law prohibitions against committing waste and engaging in nuisance. A leasehold covenant restricting the tenant's use negates this rule by describing and limiting the range of permitted business activities that commercial tenants can conduct at the leased premises.

Courts typically enforce restrictive use provisions by awarding damages and issuing orders for injunctive relief. n27 and less frequently by forfeiture and rescission. n28 Typical in this regard is Anzalone v. Normant Drugs, Inc. n29 Pursuant to a lease clause restricting use of the premises for a drug store, the tenant removed a video game that was on the premises, but refused the landlord's demand to refrain from the display, sale, rental, and repair of video tapes and equipment. The court granted the landlord's request to enjoin these activities, rejecting the tenant's contention that such items should be considered incidental to the operation of a drug store.

However, because the lease will be construed against the landlord as the drafting party and because the common law disfavors burdens on land, ambiguities and doubts as to the meaning of restrictive use covenants are generally resolved against enforcement. n30 For example, in Cox v. Ford Leasing Development Co., n31 the lease recited the tenant's intention that the demised premises be used and occupied for the automobile dealership business. The tenant sought to sublease the property to a third party for an unrelated use. Because the lease did not expressly limit the use of the premises, the court held that a lease for a specific purpose is regarded as permissive rather than restrictive. Accordingly, the tenant had the right to sublease the property for any lawful purpose for which it was adapted.

The importance of a restrictive use clause is to a large extent a function of the length of the term of the lease. In the context of a long-term commercial lease, the extent of the tenant's use rights is among the most important "non-economic" considerations of the transaction, n32 and often is the subject of intense negotiation. From the tenant's perspective, the use clause should protect its interest in responding to changing consumer tastes during the term of the lease by expanding into new product or service lines. The ideal pro-tenant use clause would broadly provide for the tenant to use the premises for any lawful purpose. n33 "Each tenant would love to have the right to sell anything and use its store for any legal purpose. The love of a tenant for the right to use its store without restriction is exceeded only by the same tenant's burning ambition to avoid competition by restricting the use of every other store in the shopping center." n34

Assuming that it satisfies the common law requirements for covenants running with the land, the restrictive use clause will bind potential subtenants and assignees. n35 Accordingly, a long-term tenant's focus in negotiating use rights should be wider than merely seeking to protect its own current and projected future business activities. As a developing minority of jurisdictions begin to imply a requirement that the landlord act reasonably in consenting to assignments and subleases, n36 the use clause takes on increased importance as a backstop to protect the landlord against transfers of the tenant's interest. n37 For these reasons, the use and transfer clauses should be negotiated in tandem.

§ 44.03(b) Hazardous Use Restrictions.

The typical commercial lease will prohibit the tenant from causing or permitting any hazardous material to be stored, used or disposed on or about the premises. A broad definition of "hazardous material" will generally include radioactive and toxic substances, asbestos, petroleum products, polychlorinated biphenyls, and other substances identified as hazardous by various environmental statutes and regulations. n38 The use clause may include a more general provision prohibiting the tenant from engaging in a use of the premises that would cause the landlord's fire or extended coverage insurance to be canceled or its premium to be increased.

Even if such uses are not expressly prohibited by the terms of the lease, the law of nuisance could provide relief in the case of a tenant whose activities are hazardous. n39

§ 44.03(c) Noise Level, Floor Load Restrictions.

The weight of, and the noise and vibration emanating from, heavy machinery may interfere with the business activities of other tenants, threaten damage to the subject property, and increase the cost to the landlord for insurance coverage. Even in the case of office tenants, the weight of a safe or other heavy equipment might exceed the floor load. Accordingly, the typical commercial lease will reserve for the landlord the right to prescribe the weight and position of heavy equipment and fixtures located in the leased premises.

In leasing to retailers, the landlord desires protection against the attraction of potential shoppers through the use of loudspeakers or music systems operated at a level that causes annoyance to other tenants of the subject property. Other advertising media that are exposed outside the premises, such as flashing lights and searchlights, may also be prohibited.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 26. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant § 12.5 (1977). But see McKenzie v. Carte, 385 S.W.2d 520 (Tex. Ct. App. 1964) ("At common law, the lessee does not forfeit his lease by using the demised premises for illegal purposes in the absence of a provision in the lease contract for a forfeiture in such cases.").

(n2)Footnote 27. 49 52A C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 761 & 762 (2003). But see Ray-Ron Corp. v. DMY Realty Co., 500 N.E.2d 1163 (Ind. 1986) (permitting use of leased premises beyond those expressly permitted in lease after finding the intended use would not cause harm to landlord).

(n3)Footnote 28. Stroup v. Conant, 520 P.2d 337 (Or. 1974) (affirming rescission of lease providing that premises were to be used "for the sale of gifts, novelties, etc." where retail store tenant's inventory consisted solely of "adult" magazines and books).

(n4)Footnote 29. 519 N.Y.S.2d 601 (Sup. Ct. 1987) .

(n5)Footnote 30. See, e.g., Sky Four Realty Co. v. C.F.M. Enters., Inc., 513 N.Y.S.2d 546 (Appl Div. 1987) (lease restricting use of space to the operation of a convenience food market not violated by sale of New York State Lottery tickets); Boyd v. Shell Oil Co., 311 A.2d 616 (Pa. 1973) (lease to tenant for construction and operation of two automobile service stations not violated by tenant converting the third bay of each service station into automatic car wash); see also Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591 (7th Cir. 1995) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1159 (1996) (court does not believe that a use restriction as to the sale of groceries restricts the tenant from leaving the store vacant; it reasons that allowing a store to remain vacant is different from opening a hardware or music store on the leased premises).

(n6)Footnote 31. 316 S.E.2d 182 (Ga. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n7)Footnote 32. "How an occupant can use its premises and the extent of activity that can be conducted from that locale may be one of the most important determinants of a tenant's profitability in a particular location." Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 38 (1989) .

(n8)Footnote 33. Even that clause should not be construed as granting the tenant an unlimited right to use the leased premises. Besides the lease itself, other sources of restrictions often overlooked by tenants include the certificate of occupancy for the subject property, restrictive covenants, zoning ordinances and subdivision restrictions affecting the subject property.

(n9)Footnote 34. Emanuel B. Halper, Can You Find a Fair Lease?, 14 Real Est. L.J. 99, 111 (1985).

(n10)Footnote 35. Assuming that the requirements are otherwise met for a covenant to run, assignees would be subject to covenants that run at law or that run in equity. Subtenants would be subject to covenants that constitute equitable servitudes. The issue is discussed in chapter 42.

(n11)Footnote 36. See § 44.08(c)(2) of this chapter.

(n12)Footnote 37. "For instance, if a medical office lease expressly provides that space only be used by medical doctors practicing conventional medicine and prohibits performance of abortions on the premises, it is less likely that a lessee will attempt to assign his lease to an abortion clinic, which might cause unwanted disturbances and controversy to other tenants." Theodore H. Hellmuth, Missouri Practice -- Real Estate Law § 516 (1985).

(n13)Footnote 38. Authoritative compilations hazardous materials, and other information relating to the regulation of such materials, may be found in the United States Department of Transportation Hazardous Materials Table (49 C.F.R. § 172.101, App. A); regulations promulgated by the Environmental Protection Agency (40 C.F.R. § 61.01 and 40 C.F.R. § 302.4); §§ 301 and 307 of Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C. §§ 1251 & 1317; §§ 1002 and 1004 of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, 42 U.S.C. § 6901 & 6903; and § 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, 42 U.S.C. § 9601.

(n14)Footnote 39. See See Graham Oil Co. v. BP Oil Co., 885 F. Supp. 716 (W.D. Pa. 1994) ; Arawana Mills Co. v. United Technologies Corp., 795 F. Supp. 1238 (D. Conn. 1992) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.04

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.04 Rental Clauses.

[Go To Supp]

Commercial tenants generally pay as rent a minimum or fixed base rent which often escalates during the course of the term pursuant to a ladder of fixed amounts agreed to in advance and set forth in the lease, or in accordance with changes in an index that is external to the lease, such as the Consumer Price Index. Retail tenants usually pay an additional or bonus rent constituting a percentage of the gross sales generated at the demised premises.

§ 44.04(a) Fixed Rent Clause.

The fixed (or minimum base) rent is a specific U.S. dollar amount generally paid in advance in successive monthly installments on the same calendar day of each month. The fixed rent will typically be expressed both as an annual rental amount and as a monthly rental. Unlike the percentage rent described below, n40 fixed rent does not depend on the volume of tenant sales generated at the leased premises. The rent clause of the lease should provide the location at which the rent is payable, n41 the acceptable form of payment, and for proration if the first and last months of occupancy are less than full calendar months. n42

Although the typical commercial lease will specify that minimum base rent is payable without notice or prior demand, commercial tenants will seek to negotiate for grace periods (anywhere from five to 30 days is customary) and written notice before sanctions (i.e., late fees, penalties, acceleration and other default remedies) can be imposed. n43

The rent clause will provide that fixed rent is payable "without offset or deduction" in an attempt to preserve the traditional common law separation and independence of the tenant's covenant to pay rent from any express or implied promises by the landlord, and to negate any modern common law or statutory remedy entitling commercial tenants to deduct the cost of unperformed repairs or services omitted to be provided by the landlord with respect to the premises.

A sophisticated pro-landlord lease form will define as "additional rent" all sums of money required to be paid by the tenant under the lease. The purpose of this characterization is to make sure that the landlord's summary right of eviction and other remedies under the lease or at common law for nonpayment of rent are available to enforce all monetary obligations of the tenant.

It has become increasingly common for commercial landlords in metropolitan areas to protect against enactment of rent control ordinances by requiring that tenants pay the maximum lawful rent for the duration of any period that the agreed rent cannot be collected, with the balance to accrue. n44

Inadequacy of the fixed minimum annual base rent is an argument for implication of a covenant of continuous operation at the leased premises. n45

§ 44.04(b) Percentage Rent Clause.

The percentage rent clause provides protection against inflation for the landlord in shopping center and other retail store leasing by entitling the landlord to some percentage of the sales receipts generated by the tenant from the leased premises. In theory the percentage rent feature affords considerable flexibility for accommodating start-up ventures by allowing the landlord to charge a lower fixed rent in the early years of the lease in exchange for a higher percentage of the tenant's sales from the premises during this period.

In practice, however, the landlord's hands are tied by the requirements of institutional lenders who tend to regard percentage rents with suspicion. In order to obtain financing for construction of the center, the landlord must be able to furnish the lender with a pro forma rent roll demonstrating that fixed minimum base rentals will be sufficient to satisfy debt service on the mortgage loan, and pay operating costs. Percentage rent, if any, is the landlord's profit. n46

The percentage rent rate paid by retail tenants varies by region, by line of merchandise or type of service, and by the market's perception of the value of the site. It is not unusual for grocers and other high volume, low profit-margin, retailers to pay as little as one percent of gross sales. At the other extreme, restaurants, piano and organ stores, and other high-margin tenants pay as much as 15% of sales. n47

Tenants offering multiple lines of merchandise, such as drug stores, may pay varying percentage rental rates on sales of different products. For example, restaurants often pay different percentage rental rates on food and liquor, and movie theaters pay different levels of percentage rent on admission tickets, popcorn and candy, and video games. Alternatively, the lease may provide for a sliding scale of percentage rental rates on different levels of gross sales (e.g., five percent on the first $1 million of sales, 4% on the next $2 million, and 2% on sales in excess of $3 million).

Although it might be thought that a percentage rent arrangement converts the landlord-tenant relationship into a partnership of sorts, substantial common law and statutory authority negates any inference that the "sharing" of profits creates a partnership relationship as a matter of law, n48 particularly in the typical situation where the percentage rent clause is based on the tenant's gross sales rather than net profits. n49 The boilerplate clause by which both landlord and tenant disclaim general partner liability for each other's debts is harmless but probably superfluous. n50

One implication that would seem to logically follow from a legal partnership relationship, but which has been consistently rejected by most courts, would be an implied obligation of the tenant to generate percentage rent. n51

§ 44.04(b)(1) Gross Sales Basis.

The definition of gross sales for purposes of the percentage rent clause is often the subject of heated negotiation between sophisticated landlords and tenants. n52

The landlord seeks to include the gross proceeds of all sales (including sales by subtenants and concessionaires) less the sum of all returns.

Sales taxes, commissions paid to third-party credit card issuers, significantly discounted sales to employees, charges for delivery, installation and service, and sales of fixtures, equipment and other items not part of tenant's inventory are generally regarded as appropriate items for exclusion. n53 Tenants might claim that because the location of the demised premises did not stimulate telephone and mail order sales, the landlord in fairness should claim no share of the profit from off-premises sales. Landlords will not only resist this claim, but might react by expanding the use clause to prohibit use of the premises for purposes that do not generate sales upon which the tenant is required to pay percentage rent. Sales from vending machines owned by third parties, pay telephones, and lottery tickets should be included only to the extent of the tenant's income therefrom. n54 The need to thoroughly understand the tenant's business before drafting the percentage rent clause may be illustrated by contemplating the percentage rent payable by a florist located in a St. Louis shopping center who takes a February order for $75 of long-stem red roses for Florists' Transworld Delivery to the customer's valentine in New Orleans.

Percentage rent tenants are required to keep accurate records of all sales at the leased premises, and to certify periodic sales reports to the landlord. n55 The tenant's records must be available for audit by the landlord for a specified period of time. Understatement of gross sales typically subjects the tenant to liability for reimbursement of the cost of the landlord's audit, as well as payment of the shortfall plus interest. The uncovering of material or chronic discrepancies will constitute an event of default. n56

§ 44.04(b)(2) "Breakpoint" Provisions.

Although a lease could very simply require the tenant to pay as percentage rent a fixed percentage of all defined sales at the leased premises, it is far more common to provide for a threshold or "breakpoint" level of sales before the tenant's obligation to pay percentage rent arises. The so-called "natural" breakpoint is calculated by dividing the fixed minimum annual base rent figure by the percentage of gross sales the tenant has agreed to pay. n57 The lease might provide that failure to achieve a minimum level of sales after some initial period of time gives the landlord the right to terminate the lease and recapture the premises. n58

Commercial landlords consider seasonal fluctuations in retail sales in structuring percentage rental arrangements. For example, retail store tenants typically record a disproportionately large percentage of their business for the year during the fourth calendar quarter. n59 Accordingly, the percentage rental clause commonly prorates the breakpoint by requiring the tenant to pay percentage rent to the extent gross receipts for the month or quarter exceed 1/12 or 1/4 of the breakpoint amount. The tenant may be surprised to discover that the landlord is entitled to percentage rent even during years when gross sales do not exceed the breakpoint on an annualized basis. n60

§ 44.04(c) Escalations in Rent.

Except for short-term (i.e., one to three year) leases and leases providing for percentage rental, n61 commercial leases will provide for some method of periodically adjusting the fixed rent so that the landlord's purchasing power is maintained at approximately the same level as at lease commencement. This may be accomplished either by a provision for specific increases in the fixed rent, for increases tied to an authoritative and readily available external measurement of the general cost of living, or for periodic re-evaluation of the fair market rental value of the premises.

§ 44.04(c)(1) Fixed Increases.

Although not as common among sophisticated parties as adjustments to reflect changes in the cost of living, n62 provisions for periodic specific increases (decreases would be extremely rare indeed) or step-ups in the fixed rental are not unusual in commercial leases. The abandonment of fixed increases in rent for cost of living escalation was probably a function of the inflationary period of the 1970s and early 1980s that victimized landlords who were unable to pass along their rapidly increasing operating expenses and real estate taxes.

Unlike the cost of living escalation clauses, provisions for specific dollar increases at stated intervals during the lease term are relatively straightforward to draft, n63 explain to tenants, and implement. From the perspective of both parties, fixed increases are predictable and make it possible to budget with confidence. The certainty of fixed increases appeals to risk-averse tenants. Start-up business tenants find the idea of lower rent during early lease years particularly attractive. The disadvantage of fixed step-ups is the lack of precision in matching escalations to changes in the landlord's costs. At best the fixed increases reflect the landlord's best estimate of the fair market rental value of the premises at various times during the term of the lease.

§ 44.04(c)(2) CPI Based Increases.

Annual rental escalations linked to the percentage of increase in the Consumer Price Index have become something of a fixture of commercial leases in modern times. n64 The Consumer Price Index is actually a family of statistical measurements of the average change in the prices of goods and services purchased for everyday living by consumers. Both an aggregate index and separate indices for the largest metropolitan areas are published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor.

The two indices most frequently used for purposes of calculating rental escalations are the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers ("CPI-U") and the Consumer Price Index for Wage Earners and Clerical Workers ("CPI-W"). Reasonable persons differ and have spilled considerable ink over whether either index favors one party over the other, and whether it makes any difference which index is used. n65

From the tenant's perspective, inflation indexation suffers from two basic defects. First, unless the increases are capped at a stated percentage per year, the risk of sharply higher rents may threaten the viability of start-up business ventures. Second, the economic assumption underlying CPI based increases (that tenants will keep pace with inflation by steadily increasing prices for their products and services, so that rent increases will simply be passed through to customers and clients) overlooks the fact that the basket of goods and services measured by the Consumer Price Index does not necessarily have any relevance to any particular tenant or to the fair market value of any particular premises. n66

A competently drafted CPI escalator clause will (a) identify with specificity the particular index to be used in calculating the increase, n67 (b) state the initial rent adjustment date and intervals for subsequent rent adjustments, (c) state whether the rent will decrease in the unlikely event of a decline in the index, (d) provide the formula for calculating increases (including a numerical example illustrating operation of the formula), n68 (e) provide for any limitation on the allowable annual increase, and (f) provide a method for handling a revision or discontinuation of the governmental index during the term of the lease. n69

§ 44.04(c)(3) Rent Review/Re-evaluation.

Appraisal may be used to establish the fair market rental value of the demised premises in connection with the exercise of a renewal option, or at periodic intervals of long-term leases as an alternative method of escalation. The procedural elements of re-evaluation include the method of selecting appraisers, their qualifications, and how to reconcile divergent valuations. A typical appraisal clause calls for the landlord and the tenant to each appoint an appraiser, who jointly select a third appraiser. The fair market rental value is determined by averaging the valuations submitted by the three appraisers. n70 The clause should provide for the allocation of the substantial cost of the appraisers.

In the shopping center context, expansion of the center to include additional anchor tenants may be the occasion for an escalation of the fixed minimum annual rental payable by satellite tenants. n71

§ 44.04(d) Rent Concession Clauses.

Abatement of rent and similar rent concession clauses are common inducements to attract tenants in over-built and otherwise depressed real estate markets. Consideration should be given in negotiation and drafting to whether rent-free occupancy applies to the fixed rent only, or other tenant charges for utilities, real estate taxes, and operating expenses. The concession typically will expire in the event of tenant default. n72

In a rare example of landlord-tenant mutuality of interest, both parties tend to prefer rent abatement to a reduction in the fixed rental rate over the entire term of the lease, even when the economic effect would be identical. Landlords are highly reluctant to lower the stated rental rate. Once the abatement period expires, appraisers will use the higher fixed rate to value the property for purposes of sale and refinancing. Tenants prefer up-front concessions to offset initial moving and fixturization expenses, and other start-up costs of doing business at the new premises. n73

Although the rent abatement period generally coincides with the commencement of the term of the lease, there is no reason why it could not be structured differently. Many landlords have experienced the marginal or unscrupulous tenant who takes advantage of the free rent period only to default immediately thereafter. Such landlords soon discover that it is safer to abate rent for the last month(s) of the term, or perhaps allocate free rent to the first month of each lease year.

§ 44.04(e) Tenant Equity Clauses.

Department store and other anchor tenants believe (or at least claim) that their very presence in a retail project adds value to the property that entitles them to participate in any appreciation through the ownership of an equity interest. In the over-built and under-leased commercial real estate markets of the early 1990s, competition among landlords to attract key tenants included the offering of so-called "equity leases" by which the tenant was to receive a share of the benefits of ownership of the entire subject property, including the cash flow generated by the property and the proceeds of any future refinancing or sale. Equity interests may be offered in lieu of rent abatement or other concessions. Such participation by the tenant may take the form of a limited partnership interest or stock in the ownership entity, or an off-set against rent. n74

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 40. See § 44.04(b) of this chapter.

(n2)Footnote 41. If the lease fails to specify the landlord's mailing address, the common law place of payment is the leased premises. See Chrones v. Wade, 94 A.2d 242 (R.I. 1953) .

(n3)Footnote 42. A fairly common mistake made both by inexperienced drafters and landlords who complete the blanks in a form lease is to express the rent as a condition of the tenant's right to occupy the premises. What the landlord really wants and intends (but often fails to express) is the tenant's express promise to pay rent in the specified amount ("Tenant covenants and agrees to pay $ _____ as rent."). One practical effect of the distinction is that the tenant's obligation to pay rent in the former situation would not survive assignment of the lease.

(n4)Footnote 43. See § 44.12 of this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 44. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> In the event that any law, decision, rule or regulation of any governmental body having jurisdiction shall have the effect of limiting for any period of time the amount of rent or other charges payable by Tenant to any amount less than that otherwise provided pursuant to this Lease, the following amounts shall nevertheless be payable by Tenant: (a) throughout such period of limitation, Tenant shall remain liable for the maximum amount of rent and other charges that are legally payable; (b) at the termination of such period of limitation, Tenant shall pay to Landlord, on demand but only to the extent legally collectible by Landlord, any amounts that would have been due from the Tenant during the period of limitation but that were not paid because of such limiting law, decision, rule or regulation; and (c) for the remaining term of this Lease following the period of limitation, Tenant shall pay to Landlord all amounts due for such portion of the term of this Lease in accordance with the terms hereof calculated as though there had been no intervening period of limitation.

(n6)Footnote 45. See § 44.14(f)(2)of this chapter.

(n7)Footnote 46. Or, as one expert on the subject of shopping center leases has described it, "a delicious dessert to be consumed after a belly full of minimum rent." Emanuel B. Halper, Shopping Center and Store Leases § 5.03 (1990).

(n8)Footnote 47. For a summary of percentage rental rates charged for various businesses in various locales, see Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 6.3 (3d ed. 1990).

(n9)Footnote 48. For example, the Revised Uniform Partnership Act provides that a "person who receives a share of the profits of a business is presumed to be a partner in the business, unless the profits were received in payment ... of rent." Revised Uniform Partnership Act § 202(c) (2006). See also Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 6.101 (3d ed. 1990).

(n10)Footnote 49. Joseph E. Browdy, Rent, Escalations and Other Economic Terms of a Lease, Commercial Leases 155, 159 (ALI/ABA January 1991).

> Leases rarely provide for percentage rent based on net, as opposed to gross, income. One reason for this is that computation of net income is extremely difficult -- how does one account for home office overhead, or for the price of goods purchased from an affiliate? Another even more compelling reason is that certain types of institutions, such as Real Estate Investment Trusts, cannot share in net income of their tenants, and therefore cannot acquire an interest in a center which has any leases with percentage rents based on net.

(n11)Footnote 50. The typical lease clause on the subject states as follows:

> Nothing contained in this Lease shall be deemed or construed by the parties hereto or by any third person to create the relationship of partnership or of joint venture or of any association between Landlord and Tenant, and neither the method of computation of rent nor any other provision contained in this Lease nor any acts of the parties hereto shall be deemed to create any relationship between Landlord and Tenant other than the relationship of landlord and tenant.

(n12)Footnote 51. See § 44.14(f)(2) of this chapter. Where, however, the lease does contain an express covenant on the tenant's part to operate its business "with due diligence in an effort to produce all of the gross sales" it can produce by employing that "manner of operation ... during the customary days and hours for such type of business in the city or trade area in which the demised premises are located," the tenant may not close its sales operations and devote the leased premises to storage. See United Dominion Realty Trust v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 413 S.E.2d 866 (S.C. Ct. App. 1992) . Compare Mayfair Operating Corp. v. Bessemer Properties, Inc., 7 So. 2d 342 (Fla. 1942) (movie theater tenant having covenanted to use its best efforts to obtain and maintain the highest volume of business on the leased premises could not suspend operations during summer months but was required to operate continuously) with Diltz v. J & M Corp., 381 So. 2d 272 (Fla. Ct. App. 1980) (where lease did not require fast-food restaurant tenant to use best efforts to operate business on demised premises, tenant did not breach lease by discontinuing business and locating elsewhere).

(n13)Footnote 52. An example of a definition of "gross sales" appears in the percentage rent clause of a form lease for a regional shopping center in suburban St. Louis:

> The term "Gross Sales' means: (i) the entire amount of the actual sales price as of the date of the transaction, regardless of when or whether the payment is actually made, whether wholly or partly for cash or on credit, or for any other consideration, of all goods and merchandise sold, leased, licensed or otherwise transferred, including all financing charges by Tenant or anyone on Tenant's behalf, including, but not limited to, all subtenants, assignees, licensees and concessionaires for the rendition of services of any kind whatsoever, and all other receipts of all business conducted in, at or from the Demised Premises; (ii) all deposits not refunded to purchasers; (iii) orders taken in, at or from the Demised Premises whether the orders are made by telephone, mail or any electronic device although the orders may be filled elsewhere; (iv) all uncollected or uncollectible credit accounts; and (v) gross receipts from all vending or similar machines or devices, whether coin operated or otherwise in the Demised Premises or under any arrangement. All sales and orders originally made in, at or from the Demised Premises shall be considered as made and completed therein, even though payment of the account may be transferred to some other office of Tenant for collection, or although delivery of goods or merchandise sold or the performance of service ordered in, at or from the Demised Premises be made from or at a place other than the Demised Premises. The term "Gross Sales" shall not include (or if included, there shall be deducted to the extent of such inclusion) only the following:

(a) Sums collected and paid out for any sales, excise or similar tax based upon the sale of merchandise and required by law, whether now or hereafter in force, to be paid by Tenant or collected from its customers;

(b) Transfers or exchanges of merchandise between stores or warehouses of Tenant, or between Tenant and stores affiliated with Tenant, where such transfers or exchanges of merchandise are made solely for the convenient operation of the business of Tenant and not for the purpose of consummating a sale which has heretofore been made in, at or from the Demised Premises or for the purpose of depriving Landlord of the benefit of a sale which otherwise would be made in, at or from the Demised Premises;

(c) The amount of returns to shippers or manufacturers;

(d) The sales price of all merchandise returned by customers and accepted for full credit;

(e) The sales price of trade fixtures, machinery or equipment which Tenant has the right to remove from the Demised Premises after use thereof in the conduct of Tenant's business in the Demised Premises;

(f) Sums and credits received in the settlement of claims for loss of or damage to merchandise;

(g) Alteration workroom charges and delivery charges paid to third parties;

(h) Receipts from public telephones, stamp machines, or vending machines installed solely for the use of Tenant's employees.

(n14)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Washington Nat'l Corp. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 474 N.E.2d 116 (Ind. Ct. App. 1985) .

(n15)Footnote 54. See, e.g., In re Circle K Corp., 98 F.3d 484 (9th Cir. 1996) ("gross sales" in percentage rent term did not include total sales price of state lottery tickets but, rather, included only commissions that tenant received in exchange for its services in selling the tickets); Anest v. Bellino, 503 N.E.2d 576, (Ill. Ct. App. 1987) , appeal denied,

508 N.E.2d 725 (Ill. 1987) (gross sales did not include entire amount received by tenant from sale of lottery tickets but, rather, only the five percent commission received by tenant); Cloverland Farms Dairy, Inc. v. Fry, 587 A.2d 527 (Md. Ct. App. 1991) (tenant not required to include gross receipts from the sale of lottery tickets in gross sales; only tenant's 5% commission from such sales need be included).

(n16)Footnote 55. In the case of a tenant with multiple locations, the landlord should reserve the right to inspect the books and records of sales at locations other than the leased premises in order to detect possible diversion of sales by a percentage rent paying tenant to a warehouse or other location with lower or perhaps no percentage rent.

(n17)Footnote 56. A record-keeping provision appears in the percentage rent clause of a form lease for a regional shopping center in suburban St. Louis:

> Tenant agrees to record all sales and all revenue derived from the conduct of business in, at or from the Demised Premises in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, which records shall be preserved by Tenant for thirty-six (36) months, either at the Demised Premises or at the home or regional offices of Tenant. Tenant shall, for each sale or other transaction, issue and keep duplicate sales slip, invoice, or non-resettable cash register receipt, serially numbered, whether the sale or other transaction is for cash, credit or otherwise. Landlord may inspect or audit any or all of Tenant's sales records and those of Tenant's assignees, subtenants, licensees and concessionaires, if any, which shall in any manner relate to Gross Sales; and Tenant, on twenty-four (24) hours' notice, from time to time from Landlord, shall make all such data available for such examination where Tenant keeps the data at such times as Landlord shall specify in such written request. Landlord's right to commence an audit or inspection with respect to any Lease Year shall expire thirty-six (36) months after receipt by Landlord of Tenant's Annual Gross Sales Statement for such Lease Year. If Landlord determines by any such audit or inspection that any statement previously delivered by Tenant to Landlord was not accurate, an adjustment shall be made and one party shall pay to the other upon demand such sum as may be necessary so that the correct amount of rent will have been paid by Tenant to Landlord. If the Gross Sales shown by Tenant's Annual Gross Sales Statement for any Lease Year are found to be understated by Two Percent (2%) or more, Tenant shall pay to Landlord the cost of such audit or inspection. If the Gross Sales shown by Tenant's Annual Gross Sales Statement for any Lease Year are found to be understated by Six Percent (6%) or more, Landlord may, at its option, terminate this Lease in addition to any other rights and remedies available under this Lease, in law or in equity.

(n18)Footnote 57. For example, assuming a minimum annual base rent of $2,000 per year and a percentage rental rate of two percent of gross revenues, the natural breakpoint is $100,000. The tenant would not be required to pay percentage rent until sales reached $100,000, and would pay percentage rent only on sales in excess of $100,000.

(n19)Footnote 58. Tenants seek to modify this provision by reserving the right to keep the lease in effect by simply paying extra percentage rent as if the specified minimum level of sales had been achieved. Although this may seem equitable at first glance, landlords of multi-tenant properties tend to resist on the ground that each retail tenant's success in generating sales brings business into the center. Increased shopper traffic produces spill-over benefits for other tenants. See I. Aaron Cohen, Advice for Landlords and Tenants on Percentage Rent, 5 Prac. Real Est. Law, 13, 26-27 (November 1989).

(n20)Footnote 59. Also the weeks before Easter and Labor Day, in the case of clothing stores, and before Mother's Day, in the case of jewelers. Emanuel B. Halper, Shopping Center and Store Leases § 5.03(a)(i) (1990).

(n21)Footnote 60. Using the figures in the foregoing example, a tenant with quarterly sales of $15,000, $7800, $10,000 and $40,000 does not reach the $100,000 breakpoint on an annualized basis. However, if the lease provides for quarterly percentage rental payments with the breakpoint figure amortized ratably, the landlord would be entitled to $300 as percentage rent.

(n22)Footnote 61. See § 44.04(b) of this chapter.

(n23)Footnote 62. See § 44.04(c)(2)of this chapter.

(n24)Footnote 63. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> During the term of this Lease, Tenant covenants and agrees to pay to Landlord a fixed minimum rent (the "minimum rent"), in lawful money of the United States of America, in equal monthly installments on the first day of each and every month in advance, at the office of Landlord, or such other place as Landlord may designate, without set-off or deduction, as follows:
>
> > (1) Commencing on and terminating on _____, an annual minimum rent of $_____ payable in equal monthly installments of $_____; and
> >
> > (2) Commencing on and terminating on _____, an annual minimum rent of $_____ payable in equal monthly installments of $ _____.

(n25)Footnote 64. Rent typically increases by some negotiated percentage (e.g., 30% - 40%) of the increase in the CPI.

(n26)Footnote 65. Compare, e.g., David A. Rahm, Escalation Clauses In Urban Office Leases, 12 Real Est. Rev. 55 (Summer 1982) (no significant difference between the CPI-U and the CPI-W for lease applications) with Thomas J. Coyne, The CPI and Escalator Clauses In Commercial Leases: Additional Considerations, 19 Real Est. Rev. 21 (Summer 1989) (selection of index can effect significant differences in rental payments over time). See also Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 34 (1989).

> ("Generally speaking, based on the findings of a number of one-to five-year surveys, the CPI-W typically favored tenants, since the change in that index is considerably lower than its counterpart. For example, in San Diego between November 1982 and November 1985, the percentage change in the CPI-W was only 7.5 percent whereas the CPI-U was 17.8 percent. Between 1986 and 1987, the change in the CPI-U was 4.3 percent whereas the increase in CPI-W was considerably lower.").

(n27)Footnote 66. It is also possible for the real estate market to be depressed during inflationary times. Nancy Ann Connery, Leasehold Mortgage Financing, 479 PLI/Real 575, 594 (2002).

(n28)Footnote 67. For example, the provision should identify whether the index to be used is the average for all U.S. cities or one of the regional indices published for specific local areas.

(n29)Footnote 68. There are two basic methods of calculating the CPI increase. If the rent increase is 100% of the increase in the cost-of-living index, it makes no difference which method is used because the result will be identical. However, in the far more typical situation where the rent increase is some percentage of the CPI increase, the differences in rent depending upon which method is used can be significant over the term of the lease. See, e.g., David E. Kaplan and Robert J. Gage, Hold That Line, Wash. Law. 32, 34 (January/February 1992); David M. Gilson, The CPI Clause -- Read It Carefully, Wash. Law. 24 (May/June 1987).

Under the so-called "prior year" method, the base rent in effect during the immediately preceding lease year is escalated by adding to the prior year's base rent the product of the prior year's base rent times a fraction, the numerator of which is the difference between the applicable consumer price index published immediately before the increase is to go into effect and the index published one year earlier, and the denominator of which is the index published one year earlier. The prior year method has been expressed by the following formula: New Base Rent = Base Rent in Prior Year + Percentage of CPI Increase X Base Rent in Prior Lease Year X Current CPI - Prior Year CPI/Prior Year CPI. See Victoria Eve De Ganon, Playing the Leasing Numbers Game: A Tenant's Analysis of Rent, Escalation, and Operating Expense Provisions, 21 Real Estate L.J. 239, 245 (Winter 1993).

Under the so-called "base year" method, the new base rent each year equals the initial base rent escalated by the agreed percentage of the aggregate increase in the CPI since the lease commencement date. This version yields greater increases, particularly in the latter years of a long-term lease. The base year method has been expressed by the following formula: New Base Rent = Original Base Rent + Percentage of CPI Increase X Original Base Rent X Current CPI - Base Year CPI/Base Year CPI. See Victoria Eve De Ganon, Playing the Leasing Numbers Game: A Tenant's Analysis of Rent, Escalation, and Operating Expense Provisions, 21 Real Estate L.J. 239, 245 (Winter 1993).

"Some lease formulas have become so complicated that no one understands them. This is not merely a cynical remark, it is rather a truism." Theodore H. Hellmuth, Missouri Practice -- Real Estate Law § 450 (1991 Supp.).

(n30)Footnote 69. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> If the index shall be discontinued with no comparable successor index, the parties shall attempt to agree upon a substitute formula. If the parties are unable to agree upon a substitute formula, then the matter shall be determined by arbitration in accordance with the then prevailing rules of the American Arbitration Association.

(n31)Footnote 70. A variant of the clause counteracts the potential skewing effect on the average of an appraiser whose valuation differs radically from the other two by providing that the middle of the three valuations shall govern.

(n32)Footnote 71. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> If at any time during the term of this Lease, the Center shall contain any Large User that operates retail facilities containing more than fifty thousand (50,000) square feet of Floor Area in addition to those Large Users of retail facilities that are operating in the Center on the Commencement Date, the Minimum Rent shall be increased by Ten Percent (10%), commencing on the date when each such Large User of a retail facility containing more than fifty thousand (50,000) square feet of Floor Area first opens for business.

(n33)Footnote 72. See § 44.12 of this chapter.

(n34)Footnote 73. See generally Joseph Viola, Jr., Alternate Structures for Rental Abatements, Real Est. Fin. 27 (Winter 1990) (demonstrating a methodology for quantifying the effects of upfront rental abatement compared with a flattened-out rental rate).

(n35)Footnote 74. Lewis R. Kaster, Tax and Securities Implications of Tenant Equity Participations, Real Est. Rev., 36-37 (Spring 1989):

> During the heyday of tax shelters, the prospective tenant's prime inducement for acquiring an equity participation was to share in the property's tax losses (losses that usually were based on substantial depreciation write-offs) and thus to reduce its taxable income, its tax liability, and, effectively, its rent... The advent of the passive loss limitations introduced by the 1986 Tax Reform Act has significantly narrowed the ability of individuals and closely held corporations to offset losses from real estate > operations against portfolio income and earned income... However, there do exist a substantial number of individuals and corporations that seek appreciation and cash flow benefits and that have been significant investors in real estate. These entities discover that, despite the passive loss restrictions on tax deductibility and despite reduced income tax rates that diminish the tax loss value of depreciation losses, the benefits of equity ownership, particularly the tenant's participation in the residual value of the building and occasionally in cash flow, make such equity arrangements attractive.

Mr. Kaster warns that the offer of a limited partnership interest in consideration for tenant entry into a lease constitutes the sale of a security under federal and state securities laws. However, the investment is likely to qualify for exemption from registration. Id. at 37.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.05

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.05 Taxes.

[Go To Supp]

In the unlikely event that the lease is silent on the subject, the landlord is obligated to pay real estate taxes with respect to the building and land within which the demised premises are located. n75 Modern commercial leases transfer all or a portion of this obligation to the tenant.

§ 44.05(a) Real Estate Taxes Defined.

The definition of real estate taxes in the typical commercial lease covers general real estate taxes on the land and improvements, sewer and water taxes, special assessments, and interest on assessments payable over time. n76 Reasonable attorneys' fees and actual costs incurred in cotesting and appealing increases in real estate tax assessments (regardless of whether any reduction is obtained) are commonly included in the definition.

Commonly excluded from the definition of real estate taxes are federal and state income taxes, inheritance, estate, succession, transfer, gift and similar taxes imposed upon the landlord. Tenants also seek to limit their exposure to increases in tax rates in light of the condition of the premises at the time the lease was executed by excluding increases caused by the expansion or improvement of the property, increases in value of the property. n77

Sophisticated tenants seek to limit their exposure to dramatic increases in assessments immediately following (and probably generated by) the reporting of a sale of the property to the local taxing jurisdiction. This has become a hotly contested issue in commercial office lease negotiations in major metropolitan areas. Compromise on this issue may take the form of an exclusion if the property is sold during the first five years of the lease, a stretch-out of the obligation to pay such increases, thereby reducing the budget-busting implications for tenants, or a limitation based on the percentage increase in real estate taxes incurred in a basket of comparable buildings in the same locale.

Commercial landlords worry that, some day, the real property taxation system as we know it may be abolished. In its place governmental units may decide to impose a tax on rents, or some other substitute form of raising revenue, to finance governmental functions, particularly the cost of public education. Long-term leases commonly provide sufficient flexibility in the definition of real estate taxes to protect the landlord against this risk. n78

§ 44.05(b) Tenant's Real Estate Tax Burden.

In recent years, the most significant type of increased operating cost for commercial landlords has been real estate taxes. Most leases, therefore, seek to protect the landlord's profit against erosion by passing along to tenants responsibility for payment of increases in real estate taxes imposed during the lease term, whether resulting from increases in the rate of tax or from an increase in the valuation of the property. In a multi-tenant building, this involves a proration of the increase so that all tenants pay a proportionate share based upon the relative size of their premises. Alternatively, "net" leases impose on the tenant the entire obligation for the payment of real estate taxes (rather than merely the increase experienced during the term). An amount equal to one-twelfth of the tenant's share of real estate taxes is generally payable each month as additional rent.

It is common for commercial tenants with significant negotiating strength to seek a "cap" on increases in real estate taxes that may be passed through to them. The lease should assign to the tenant its share of any real estate tax refund resulting from a successful contest or appeal, even after the term of the lease has expired.

§ 44.05(b)(1) Proportional Share.

For multi-tenant buildings in which the tenant's premises are not separately assessed for real estate tax purposes, each tenant's share of such taxes (or the increase in such taxes during the term of the lease, as the case may be) is prorated. Each tenant's proportional share of such taxes (or increase) is based on the ratio that the square footage of such tenant's premises bears to the total number of square feet of leasable space in the subject property.

§ 44.05(b)(2) Tax Increases in Excess of a Given Base.

The typical commercial lease makes the landlord responsible for real estate taxes during the first full calendar year of the term (the "base year"). The tenant bears the burden of increases in real estate taxes above the level in existence during the base year.

A common concern of tenants' counsel is that the typical commercial landlord would appear to have very little incentive to vigorously resist increased assessments, because it knows that it can simply pass them on to its tenants. n79 As a result, commercial tenants expend precious negotiating capital, and add considerably to the length of the real estate tax clause, by reserving the right to contest increased assessments on the landlord's behalf and in the landlord's name if the landlord fails or refuses to do so. There is little basis, either in fact or economics, for this concern. Except in a mythical fully-leased real estate market, landlords who most successfully restrain increases in operating costs (of which real property taxes is the largest single component) will be able to charge the highest rents and earn the most profits.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 75. See Valencia Ctr., Inc. v. Publix Super Mkts., Inc., 464 So. 2d 1267 (Fla. Ct. App. 1985) (dramatic increase in real estate taxes over term of lease does not release lessor under either the doctrine of commercial frustration or impossibility).

(n2)Footnote 76. Commercial leases often use the term "impositions" to collectively describe real estate taxes and other governmental charges.

(n3)Footnote 77. In Blackstar Publishing Co. v. 460 Park Associates, 520 N.Y.S.2d 922 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1987) , a New York appellate court relieved an existing tenant from being charged a pro-rata share of dramatic real estate tax increases caused by the landlord's renovation of the lobby and six floors of the building that were leased to a major new tenant. The existing tenant successfully argued that it did not intend to be responsible for tax increases due to unanticipated renovations. Similarly, in Gold Medal Stamp Co. v. Carver, 270 N.E.2d 834 (Mass. 1971) , the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts held that where the building renovation amounted to an extraordinary permanent improvement not contemplated by the parties at the time of lease execution, the tenant would not be liable for the resulting increased tax assessment.

(n4)Footnote 78. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> Landlord and Tenant recognize and acknowledge that there may be changes in the current real property tax system and that there may be imposed new forms of taxes, assessments, charges, levies or fees, or there may be an increase in certain existing taxes, assessments, charges, levies or fees placed on, or levied in connection with the ownership, leasing, occupancy or operation of the demised premises. All such new or increased taxes, assessments, charges, levies or fees that are imposed or increased as a result of any changes in the structure of the real property tax system or any limitations on the real property taxes that can be assessed on real property including, but not limited to, any and all taxes, assessments, charges, levies and fees assessed or imposed due to the existence of this Lease (including any surcharge on the income directly derived by Landlord therefrom) or for the purpose of funding special assessment districts of the type funded by real property taxes, shall also be included within the meaning of "Taxes".

(n5)Footnote 79. It is also assumed that landlords lack incentive to seek to minimize assessments because of the fear that a contest or appeal may result in an increase in the assessment.

139 of 189 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.06

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.06 Common Area Maintenance (CAM) Fees.

Commercial landlords seek to pass through to and recover from tenants as additional rent the expenses that relate directly to maintaining and operating the subject property. Alternatively, the lease may provide for tenants to pay only the increase in the owner's costs over a specified floor or base amount, which may be the operating expenses during the first lease year or the initial year of occupancy of the property. n80 Such expenses are typically described as common area maintenance (CAM) fees. Along with the rent and tax provisions, CAM fee provisions are among the most important economic provisions of the lease. n81

Each tenant's share of CAM expenses is generally based upon the proportion that the size of the leased premises bears to the total number of rentable square feet of space in the subject property. Landlords generally seek to collect monthly, together with the rent, an amount equal to 1/12 of the tenant's estimated annual CAM obligation (usually based on the experience for the previous year plus an adjustment to reflect the increase in the cost of living), with a reconciliation after the end of each year when a final calculation of expenses becomes available.

Care must be taken by tenants to exclude from the definition of CAM expenses such items as mortgage payments, capital improvements, n82 leasing commissions, depreciation, works of art, defective construction, landlord negligence and costs incurred with respect to a specific tenant such as renovation and eviction expenses. n83 Tenants should also negotiate for the right to audit within a fixed period of time the landlord's records of CAM costs. n84 Tenants with considerable negotiating leverage will seek a limit on the maximum amount of annual increases in their operating expense pass-through obligations.

Particular care must be taken by tenants in mixed-used projects (i.e., developments that combine a mix of office, retail, hotel and residential uses) to avoid paying for operating expenses with respect to facilities or services that exclusively or disproportionately benefit tenants in other portions of the complex, n85 rather than expenses attributable to the property generally, such as real estate taxes, exterior maintenance, public area utilities, and insurance. n86

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 80. The base amount for operating expenses should reflect the expenses for a fully occupied and operational building. If not, these expenses may rise dramatically when the building becomes fully occupied as additional tenants increase demand on building systems and services. See Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 36 (1989).

(n2)Footnote 81. "In a downtown Washington office building, 1992 operating expenses will range from $10 to $15 per square foot, or 30 to 50 percent of the total rent." David E. Kaplan and Robert J. Gage, Hold That Line, Wash. Law. 32 (January/February 1992).

(n3)Footnote 82. Capital improvements and items of equipment that serve to reduce operating expenses or that effect other economies in the operation or maintenance of the property (e.g., energy and labor saving devices) should be amortized over a reasonable period and included to that extent in CAM expenses.

(n4)Footnote 83. "Certain costs of operating a building should be considered part of the cost of doing business. These costs should be included in the base rent rather than recovered through operating expense passthroughs." David E. Kaplan and Robert J. Gage, Hold That Line, Wash. Law. 32, 34 (January/February 1992).

(n5)Footnote 84. "Such a provision allows the tenant to make judgments about efficiency and economy as well as to have the opportunity to uncover improper line-item expenses, such as snow removal for a southern Florida mall or miscellaneous expense allowance for cigars for a mall manager and his 100 closest friends." Jeffrey H. Newman, Common Area Costs -- The Hidden Rent, Real Est. Rev. 65, 66 (Winter 1990).

(n6)Footnote 85. "One example would be the landscaping and maintenance costs of a pool area located within the complex grounds but accessible only by, say, the condominium residents. Another example would be the heating, air conditioning and other utility costs incurred by the retail and restaurant tenants." David M. Gilson, Mixing Up Operating Costs in Those Mixed-Used Projects, Wash. Law. 12 (January/February 1988).

(n7)Footnote 86. "If there has not been a proper allocation of responsibility for the cost of those services, then one or another use within the project -- usually the office components -- will find itself bearing an unfair share of those costs without receiving the commensurate benefit." Id.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.07

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.07 Maintenance and Repair.

[Go To Supp]

§ 44.07(a) Placing the Duty to Repair.

The traditional common law rule was that, in the absence of a lease covenant to the contrary, the landlord was not obligated to maintain or repair the leased premises during the term of the lease. n87 This result was justified on the basis that the tenant had received a conveyance of a non-freehold estate that was subject to the tenant's exclusive control. n88 In the absence of a contrary agreement, it was the tenant, not the landlord, who traditionally had obligations with respect to the maintenance and repair of the leased premises during the term of the lease. These obligations arose under the doctrine of waste. n89

In the residential landlord-tenant arena, these traditional rules regarding maintenance and repair of the leased premises have been largely eclipsed by the adoption of the implied warranty of habitability. n90 However, with some exceptions, n91 the traditional rules persist in the commercial leasing sphere. But those rules frequently do not apply, because the parties to commercial leases usually include provisions about maintenance and repair in their written leases. As a result, the resolution of disputes about maintenance and repair obligations often depends on the interpretation of lease provisions. n92

Issues sometimes arise regarding structural repairs. n93 A tenant generally would be responsible for making such repairs only if the lease specifically and unambiguously allocates such responsibility to the tenant. n94 On the other hand, the tenant is customarily responsible for repairs required to be made to interior portions of its premises, exclusive of structural elements, such as pipes and conduits. The potentially staggering cost of remediation in the event of discovery of asbestos and hazardous wastes has become a major issue in contemporary commercial lease negotiation. n95

§ 44.07(b) Remedies for Failure to Repair.

§ 44.07(b)(1) Self-help.

Refusal by the landlord to fulfill its duty to make repairs after adequate notice and demand may entitle the tenant to make the repairs itself and offset the reasonable cost against later rents. n96 Tenants seeking to assure themselves of this remedy by attempting to negotiate for a "repair and deduct" clause in the lease should be prepared to encounter resistance from the landlord, ostensibly on behalf of the landlord's institutional mortgage lender. n97 Counsel advising tenants contemplating the exercise of self-help should anticipate objections that would be expected to be raised by the landlord and protect against the likelihood of disputed issues of fact. n98

§ 44.07(b)(2) Constructive Eviction.

There is an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in commercial real estate leases. The implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is breached when a material act or omission of the landlord, or those acting for the landlord or with its permission, or someone with paramount title, permanently deprives the tenant of the ability to make commercial use of the premises. n99 Under the doctrine of constructive eviction, such a breach relieves the tenant of any further obligation to pay rent if the tenant abandons the premises within a reasonable period of time after the act or omission. n100

When the actions allegedly constituting constructive eviction are by third parties without the landlord's authority or permission, as a general proposition the tenant cannot complain that the landlord breached the covenant of quiet enjoyment. However, in Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Robert P. Kaminsky, M.D., P.A., n101 a gynecologist tenant successfully claimed constructive eviction after anti-abortion protestors repeatedly picketed the medical office building in which tenant leased space. The jury heard testimony that the landlord was aware that singing and chanting demonstrators would occupy the stairs leading to the tenant's office and prevent patients from entering by blocking the doorway, but took no effective action to respond to the problem. The tenant finally abandoned the building and successfully defended against the landlord's action for rent for the balance of the lease term.

The landlord's failure to perform its repair and maintenance obligations under the terms of the lease may constitute a partial constructive eviction when the tenant is forced to temporarily abandon its business operations. n102

§ 44.07(b)(3) Retaliatory Eviction.

The tenant may be able to prevent the landlord from terminating the tenancy, increasing rent, decreasing services, or perhaps refusing to renew a tenancy following good faith complaints or other action by a tenant based on the condition of the premises, if the tenant is able to prove that the landlord's conduct was in retaliation against the tenant. Although a majority of states have adopted some form of retaliatory eviction doctrine in the residential landlord-tenant context by legislation or judicial rule, or both, n103 few jurisdictions recognize retaliatory eviction of commercial tenants. n104 The Restatement of Property expressly declines to take a position on whether the doctrine of retaliatory eviction should be extended to commercial leases. n105

§ 44.07(c) Implied Warranty of Suitability.

During the 1970s and 1980s virtually all states adopted an implied warranty of habitability, either by judicial opinion or by statute, in the residential landlord-tenant context. n106 However, the extension of this doctrine to commercial leasing has been slow. The implied warranty does not travel well from residential to commercial leasing for several reasons. First, its founding father, the late Judge J. Skelly Wright of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, relied heavily upon principles derived from consumer protection cases recognizing a cause of action against manufacturers for breach of implied warranties of fitness and merchantability, where serious defects rendered mass-produced chattels unfit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used. n107 According to Judge Wright, the need for an implied warranty in part arose from the great disparity between the residential landlord and tenant in terms of their respective opportunity, incentive, and capacity to inspect and maintain the condition of the property. Judge Wright was also influenced by the existence of the District of Columbia's housing code, which he thought required a warranty of habitability to be implied in the leases that it covers. Housing codes do not apply to non-residential leases.

One of the earliest decisions to recognize an implied warranty by a commercial landlord that the leased premises are suitable for their intended commercial purpose, Davidow v. Inwood North Professional Group, n108 arose in what is likely to be the most attractive context for importing an implied warranty from the residential setting in which it was born to the commercial arena. Davidow involved the short-term lease of medical office space in a multi-tenant building. The landlord agreed to provide air conditioning, electricity, hot water, maintenance, and security. After experiencing air conditioning breakdowns, a leaking roof, rodent and pest infestation, no hot water, vandalism, burglary, and a temporary deprivation of electricity, the tenant vacated the premises.

At trial Dr. Davidow successfully defended against the landlord's action to collect unpaid rent by raising the affirmative defense of the breach of implied warranty of suitability of the premises for use as a medical office. The court of appeals reversed the trial court judgment, holding that the implied warranty of habitability does not extend to commercial leaseholds. The Texas Supreme Court reversed. Finding that many of the same disparities exist between the parties to a short-term commercial lease of space in a multi-tenant medical office building that Judge Wright had observed in the residential landlord-tenant context, n109 the court saw no valid reason to justify limiting the implied warranty of habitability to residential leases.

In what is still a minority view, Davidow holds that commercial landlords impliedly warrant that their premises are suitable for their intended commercial purpose. n110 This warranty means that at the inception of the lease there are no latent defects in facilities, both within the leased premises and common areas, that are essential to the use of the premises for their intended commercial purpose, and that the essential facilities will remain in a suitable condition throughout the term. Whether the implied warranty has been breached depends upon the nature of the defect and its effect on the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the space, whether the defect resulted from any unusual or abnormal use by the tenant, the amount of the rent, and the age of the structure. n111

Most courts that have faced the issue have rejected an implied warranty of suitability for commercial leaseholds, n112 sometimes without analyzing whether the distinctions between residential and commercial leases justify limiting the warranty to the residential context. n113 Some courts base rejection on the argument that commercial tenants do not occupy inferior bargaining positions to their landlords. n114 Sometimes, of course, they will.

Unlike the residential implied warranty of habitability, which generally cannot be effectively waived, n115 the implied warranty of suitability for leased commercial space apparently can be waived if, for example, the parties expressly agree that tenant will repair certain defects. n116

§ 44.07(d) Exculpation Clauses.

Landlords seek to limit their personal liability for damages to third parties through the use of indemnification provisions. n117 Landlords also attempt to exculpate themselves from liability to their tenants.

Exculpation in commercial leasing takes several principal forms. The first method is the express contractual allocation to the tenant of all responsibility for damages or injuries to persons or property arising from the use of the premises and common areas, including damage and injury caused by the landlord's own negligence. Although such clauses have been enforced in the commercial context, n118 even in jurisdictions where they would not be enforced in residential leases, n119 they are strictly construed against the landlord. n120 In a number of jurisdictions, both as a matter of common law and statute, it is considered contrary to public policy for landlords to exempt themselves from liability for their own negligence. n121

Another method of denying the tenant an effective remedy against the landlord is to limit the tenant's recourse to the landlord's interest in the premises, or the office building or other structure in which the premises are located. n122

By regularly refinancing the property to the full extent of its value, the landlord can effectively drain any equity in the property. n123

A provision establishing a short limitations period for filing an action against the landlord may effectively limit the tenant's recourse. n124

Finally, landlords sometimes seek to limit their exposure by holding title to rental property in separate limited liability entities, such as corporations or limited partnerships.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 87. See, e.g., Chambers v. Lowe, 169 A. 912 (Conn. 1933) ; Divines v. Dickinson, 174 N.W. 8 (Iowa 1919) .

(n2)Footnote 88. See Robert S. Schoshinski, American Law of Landlord and Tenant § 3.13 (1980).

(n3)Footnote 89. The doctrine is discussed in chapter 70.

(n4)Footnote 90. This implied warranty is discussed in chapter 41.

(n5)Footnote 91. See, e.g., Davidow v. Inwood North Professional Group-- Phase I, 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988) (implied warranty of suitability in commercial leases); see also Wesson v. Leone Enterprises, Inc., 774 N.E.2d 611 (Mass. 2002) (dependency of covenants rule applies to commercial leases); Richard Barton Enterprises, Inc. v. Tsern,928 P.2d 368 (Utah 1996) (dependency of covenants analysis in commercial lease).

(n6)Footnote 92. See, e.g., Hadian v. Schwartz, 884 P.2d 46 (Cal. 1994) . See also Todd D. Ruggiero. note, Brown v. Green and Hadian v. Schwartz: Determining Who Is Responsible for Major Structural Repairs in Commercial Leases, Pac. L. J. 28 (Winter, 1997) 417 (urges that the lessor should be held liable for all major structural repairs and that an implied warranty of fitness should be incorporated within commercial leases).

(n7)Footnote 93. Structural elements of a building include the footings, foundation, load-bearing walls, columns, beams, roof and the components of the electrical and mechanical building systems serving more than one tenant, such as conduits, wires and pipes.

(n8)Footnote 94. Sandelman v. Buckeye Realty, Inc., 576 N.E.2d 1038 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991) ; 428 Camera Corp. v. Tandy Corp., 707 N.Y.S.2d 101 (App. Div. 2000) (landlord obligated to provide heat; landlord also obligated to repair heating system); but see Washington Univ. v. Royal Crown Bottling Co., 801 S.W.2d 458 (Mo. Ct. App. 1990) (tenant under long-term, net lease responsible for cost of structural repairs). "However, even though primary responsibility for performing or doing repairs shifts over to the lessor, the tenant should remember that the costs for performing these obligations usually end up being passed through to the tenant as an operating expense." Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 41 (1989). See also § 44.06, of this chapter.

(n9)Footnote 95. See Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 42 (1989). See § 44.10 of this chapter.

(n10)Footnote 96. See Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 10.501a2 (3d ed. 1990).

(n11)Footnote 97. Emanual B. Halper, Shopping Center and Store Leases III-19 -- III-20 (Rev. ed. 1991):

> Rights to make deductions from rent are a big problem. Mortgage lenders can be quite concerned about the integrity of the income stream if tenants have this right. Why shouldn't they be? It's easy to fantasize about a tenant claiming that the landlord owes him so much money that no rent is payable at all for the balance of the term of the lease. If no rent is payable, there's nothing in the kitty to be applied to the principal and interest due on the mortgage, the real estate taxes, and the operating expenses.

What's to be done? Although the tenant should have the right to make deductions from rent in case of a default by the landlord (assuming, of course, that the landlord actually has agreed to perform some obligation under the lease), the draftsman should consider the possibility of disputes. Perhaps the tenant will claim that the landlord has failed to reimburse the tenant for expenses incurred pursuant to the self-help clause but, in the landlord's opinion, this claim is not justified. Under these circumstances, the tenant should be permitted to cure the default but should not have the right to make deductions from rent until the dispute is resolved. The tenant can be protected against interminable delays if the lease requires that proceedings to resolve the dispute be started promptly and the proceedings be prosecuted diligently.

(n12)Footnote 98. Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 10.501a2 (3d ed. 1990):

The landlord may deny there was any need for the repair, may claim that any need therefor was due to the tenant's fault, that the repairs went beyond the scope of the tenant's authority and were in fact improvements, and that the claimed cost of the work was excessive. It is therefore advisable for the tenant to make a clear and complete record showing conditions existing before the work was begun, possibly with photographs, the work thereafter done, and a justification of the expenses.

(n13)Footnote 99. Additional information about the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is found in chapter 41.

(n14)Footnote 100. Reste Realty v. Cooper, 251 A.2d 268 (N.J. 1969) (successful constructive eviction defense to landlord's claim for rent); Shaker and Associates, Inc. v. Medical Technologies Group, Ltd., 733 N.E.2d 865 (Ill. Ct. App. 2000) (tenant waived constructive eviction claim by not vacating within a reasonable time); Winrock Inn Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 928 P.2d 947 (N.M. Ct. App. 1996) (constructive eviction occurs when landlord's actions substantially deprive tenant of beneficial use of leased premises and tenant vacates, or when landlord acts maliciously and landlord's actions are so severe as to interfere with tenant's peaceful enjoyment of premises); ARE-100/800/ ARE-100/800/801 Capitola, LLC v. Triangle Laboratories, Inc., 550 S.E.2d 31 (N.C. Ct. App. 2001) (commercial tenant who did not abandon leased property was precluded from arguing that he was constructively evicted as a result of the landlord's failure to make repairs).

(n15)Footnote 101. 768 S.W.2d 818 (Tex. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n16)Footnote 102. Manhattan Mansions v. Moe's Pizza, 561 N.Y.S.2d 331 (City Ct. 1990) (pizza parlor tenant deprived of beneficial use of leased premises by landlord's failure to repair recurrent water leak in grill area); see also Echo Consulting Services, Inc. v. North Conway Bank, 669 A.2d 227 (N.H. 1995) (construction interfered with use of the leased premises; court concludes that evidence supported constructive eviction claim).

(n17)Footnote 103. Jesse Dukeminier & James E. Krier, Property 538 (3d ed. 1993).

(n18)Footnote 104. Compare 1266 Apartment Corp. v. New Horizon Deli, Inc., 847 A.2d 9 (N.J. Super. Ct. 2004) (equitable defense of retaliatory eviction does not apply to commercial leases); William C. Cornitius, Inc. v. Wheeler, 556 P.2d 666 (Or. 1976) (limiting retaliatory eviction doctrine to situations in which the landlord's alleged violations deal with conditions on residential premises affecting safety and health) with Custom Parking, Inc. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. Rptr. 674 (Cal. Ct. App. 1982) (extending retaliatory eviction defense to commercial tenancies).

(n19)Footnote 105. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant, § 14.8 Caveat at 50 (1977).

(n20)Footnote 106. Sandra H. Johnson, et al., Property Law 347 (1992).

(n21)Footnote 107. Javins v. First Nat'l Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 925 (1970) (citing Henningsen v. Bloomfield Motors, Inc., 161 A.2d 69 (N.J. 1960) to support the proposition that "the buyer of goods and services in an industrialized society must rely upon the skill and honesty of the supplier to assure that the goods and services purchased are of adequate quality").

(n22)Footnote 108. 747 S.W.2d 373 (Tex. 1988) .

(n23)Footnote 109. Davidow v. Inwood North Professional Group, 747 S.W.2d 373, 376 (Tex. 1988):

> It cannot be assumed that a commercial tenant is more knowledgeable about the quality of the structure than a residential tenant. A businessman cannot be expected to possess the expertise necessary to adequately inspect and repair the premises, and many commercial tenants lack the financial resources to hire inspectors and repairmen to assure the suitability of the premises... Additionally, because commercial tenants often enter into short-term leases, the tenants have limited economic incentive to make any extensive repairs to their premises... Consequently, commercial tenants generally rely on their landlords' greater abilities to inspect and repair the premises.

.

(n24)Footnote 110. Wisconsin has imposed significant duties on commercial landlords with respect to the condition of the leased premises by statute. See Wis. Stat. Ann. § 704.07. However, these statutory obligations may be waived. See id. Louisiana, with its civil law tradition, imposes obligations on landlords with respect to the condition of the premises in both residential and non-residential leases. See, e.g., La. Civ. Code art. 2696 ("The lessor warrants the lessee that the thing is suitable for the purpose for which it was leased and that it is free of vices or defects that prevent its use for that purpose.").

(n25)Footnote 111. Davidow v. Inwood North Professional Group, 747 S.W.2d at 377.

(n26)Footnote 112. E.P. Hinkel & Co. v. Manhattan Co., 506 F.2d 201 (D.C. Cir. 1974) ; J.B. Stein & Co. v. Sandberg, 419 N.E.2d 652 (Ill. App. Ct. 1981) ; McArdle v. Courson, 402 N.E.2d 292 (Ill. App. Ct. 1980) ; Yuan Kane Ing v. Levy, 326 N.E.2d 51 (Ill. App. Ct. 1975) ; Knapp v. Simmons, 345 N.W.2d 118 (Iowa 1984) ; Chausse v. Coz, 540 N.E.2d 667 (Mass. 1989) ; Mobil Oil Credit Corp. v. DST Realty, Inc., 689 S.W.2d 658 (Mo. Ct. App. 1985) ; Gehrke v. General Theatre Corp., 298 N.W.2d 773 (Neb. 1980) ; Truetried Service Co. v. Hager, 691 N.E.2d 1112 (Ohio Ct. App. 1997) .

(n27)Footnote 113. Sandra H. Johnson, et al., Property Law 356 (1992).

For an analysis of the justifications for distinguishing between residential and commercial leaseholds with respect to the implied warranty of fitness for use, see Note, The Unwarranted Implication of a Warranty of Fitness In Commercial Leases -- An Alternative Approach, 41 Vand. L. Rev. 1057 (1988) (commercial tenants are better able to make a meaningful inspection of the premises, effect necessary repairs, pass the cost of repairs and inspections along to customers, and bargain for express warranties). Additional writings on this topic are referenced in § 41.06, in chapter 41.

(n28)Footnote 114. Service Oil Co. v. White, 542 P.2d 652 (Kan. 1975) .

(n29)Footnote 115. Hilder v. St. Peter, 478 A.2d 202 (Vt. 1984) .

(n30)Footnote 116. Davidow v. Inwood North Professional Group Davidow, 747 S.W.2d 373, 377 (Tex. 1988). See also Gym-N-I Playgrounds, Inc. v. Snider, 158 S.W.3d 78 (Tex. Ct. App. 2005) (warranty waived when lessee accepted the premises "as is").

(n31)Footnote 117. See § 44.09(d) of this chapter.

(n32)Footnote 118. J.B. Stein & Co. v. Sandberg, 419 N.E.2d 652 (Ill. Ct. App. 1981) ; Fena v. Wickstrom, 348 N.W.2d 389 (Minn. Ct. App. 1984) ; Princeton Sportswear Corp. v. H & M Assoc., 484 A.2d 185 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 507 A.2d 339 (Pa. 1986) .

(n33)Footnote 119. The distinction drawn by courts in such jurisdictions is that while a residential tenant must be protected against unfair disparity in bargaining power, no such inequality of position exists in a commercial setting. Compared with residential tenants, commercial lease tenants are considered to have a better opportunity to "shop around" and negotiate terms with a landlord. Bedrosky v. Hiner, 430 N.W.2d 535 (Neb. 1988) ; Kuzmiak v. Brookchester, Inc., 111 A.2d 425 (N.J. Ct. App. 1955) .

(n34)Footnote 120. See, e.g., Burnett v. Chimney Sweep, 20 Cal. Rptr.3d 562 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (agreement that seeks to limit liability generally without mentioning negligence is construed to shield a party only for passive negligence, not for active negligence); Galligan v. Arovitch, 219 A.2d 463 (Pa. 1966) (landlord held liable for injuries on lawn notwithstanding leasehold exculpation of landlord from liability for injuries on sidewalk); see also Parkside Center., Ltd. v. Chicagoland Vending, Inc., 552 S.E.2d 557 (Ga. Ct. App. 2001) (exculpatory clause in commercial lease was not enforceable for landlord's failure to make clause explicit, prominent, clear, and unambiguous).

(n35)Footnote 121. See, e.g., SRH, Inc. v. Millard Refrigerated Services, Inc., 339 F.3d 738 (8th Cir. 2003) (lease provision exempting lessor from ordinary negligence is not contrary to public policy); Barnes v. Pearman, 294 S.E.2d 619 (Ga. Ct. App. 1982) ; Vermes v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 251 N.W.2d 101 (Minn. 1977) ; Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 8-105 (1988).

(n36)Footnote 122. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> Landlord shall be under no personal liability with respect to any of the provisions of this Lease, and if Landlord is in breach or default with respect to Landlord's obligations or otherwise under this Lease, Tenant shall look solely to the equity of Landlord in the premises for the satisfaction of Tenant's remedies. It is expressly understood and agreed that Landlord's liability under the terms, covenants, conditions, warranties and obligations of this Lease shall in no event exceed the loss of Landlord's equity interest in the premises.

(n37)Footnote 123. However, following the landlord's sale of the property, the tenant may have recourse against the proceeds of the sale notwithstanding an exculpatory provision limiting the landlord's liability to its equity in the property. See Won's Cards, Inc. v. Samsondale/Haverstraw Equities, Ltd., 566 N.Y.S.2d 412 (App. Div. 1991) .

(n38)Footnote 124. See West v. Henderson, 278 Cal. Rptr. 570 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991) (rejecting tenant's argument that a six-month limitation period for claims against landlord was unconscionable).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.08

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.08 Assignment/Subletting.

§ 44.08(a) Landlord's Objectives.

Assignment and subletting both involve the transfer of the tenant's right to use the leased premises to a third party. An assignment is said to occur when the tenant transfers its entire interest or estate in the demised premises to a third party. The transfer of anything less than the tenant's entire interest or estate results in a sublease, with the original tenant retaining a reversion.

The original tenant remains liable to the landlord following a sublease or assignment based on privity of contract, unless the landlord expressly releases the original tenant from liability for further obligations by entering into a novation. However, the direct liability of the transferee to the landlord is affected by the form of transfer. Following an assignment, the assignee effectively steps into the shoes of the original tenant and is considered to be in privity of estate (though not in privity of contract) with the landlord, who thus may enforce its rights under the lease directly against the transferee. n125 The sublessee, being neither in privity of estate nor in privity of contract with the prime landlord, is not directly liable to the prime landlord.

Although the tenant's right to transfer its interest in the leased premises might be "the most highly contested legal clauses in a negotiation," n126 commercial landlords generally require the unrestricted discretionary right to approve any transfer by the tenant to a third party. n127

A majority of jurisdictions enforce the commercial landlord's absolute discretion to arbitrarily withhold consent to transfers by the tenant. n128 A minority of jurisdictions, by case law authority or by statute, require commercial landlords to act reasonably and in good faith in granting such consent, particularly where the lease is silent on the subject of the standard for the landlord's exercise of its approval power. n129 In such jurisdictions, a denial of consent based on personal taste, convenience, sensibility, or in order to extract a higher rent than originally reserved would likely be considered unreasonable, arbitrary, and in bad faith. n130 In applying a standard of commercial reasonableness, the landlord may properly consider such factors as the financial responsibility of the proposed transferee, the nature of the proposed use by the transferee, and the need for alterations to the demised premises. n131

A secondary objective from the landlord's perspective is the ability to claim for itself any profit realized by the tenant upon a transfer of its interest in the premises. n132 Parties to a commercial lease should be free to agree among themselves upon the allocation of the consideration attributable to the value of the leased premises in the case of a transfer by tenant. n133 The lease may also provide for the landlord to "recapture" the premises by giving the landlord the right to cancel the lease as an alternative to consenting to assignment, or to re-enter the proposed sublease space as an alternative to consenting to a sublease. n134 In either event, the original tenant is thereafter discharged from liability with respect to the premises recaptured by the landlord.

§ 44.08(b) Tenant's Objectives.

For a variety of business reasons it may become necessary or desirable for a commercial tenant to transfer all or a portion of the leased premises before the expiration of the term of the lease. n135 For most commercial tenants, the ability to transfer is a specific example of the flexibility they require to conduct business without interference from the landlord.

A secondary objective from the tenant's perspective is the ability to resist recapture by the landlord of any profit the tenant might be in a position to realize if the market rental value of the demised premises should appreciate during the term of the lease, or if the tenant managed to negotiate for a bargain rental rate under the original lease.

§ 44.08(c) Landlord's Right to Refuse Consent.

§ 44.08(c)(1) Common Law Approach.

If a lease is totally silent on the subject, n136 the common law gave the tenant absolute freedom to assign or sublease without the consent of the landlord. . n137 However, the typical commercial space lease drafted from the landlord's perspective is likely to negate this rule and provide instead that the tenant does not have the right to assign the lease or sublet the premises without the landlord's prior written consent. A more sophisticated variant of the clause will go on to provide that such consent may be granted or withheld at the landlord's sole and absolute discretion. n138

Courts in a majority of jurisdictions enforce either version of the consent clause as written, n139 by not requiring the landlord to act reasonably or in good faith in determining whether to grant its consent to proposed transfers of the tenant's interest, or even to give the tenant any explanation for its refusal. n140 Such courts reason that requiring landlords to act reasonably would contradict the apparent intent of the parties in the case of the former clause, and their express intent in the case of the latter. They reject the tenant's argument that arbitrary withholding of consent constitutes an illegal restraint on alienation.

§ 44.08(c)(2) Modern Judicial and Legislative Approaches.

When the lease contains a clause prohibiting the tenant from subletting or assigning without the consent of the landlord, a growing minority of jurisdictions, by case law or statutory authority, require commercial landlords under long-term leases to act in a commercially reasonable manner in consenting to assignments and subleases, even if the lease does not expressly require the landlord to do so. n141 This requirement is usually based upon some combination of the common law property aversion to unreasonable restraints on alienation and contract law principles of implied covenants of good faith and fair dealing, n142 and by reasoning that allowing a landlord to arbitrarily refuse consent would virtually nullify the right to assign or sublease suggested by the clause, thus defeating the legitimate expectations of the tenant. n143

Absent a statutory provision to the contrary, it would not appear that this requirement is such a burning issue of public policy that it could not be knowingly and voluntarily contracted away by a commercial tenant of relatively equal bargaining strength, expressly agreeing that the landlord may act arbitrarily in withholding consent to transfers, n144 although this remains an open question in most jurisdictions. n145 It is recommended that such a clause be initialled to indicate that it was read by the tenant and that it include a statement to the effect that the clause was freely negotiated by legal counsel on behalf of the tenant. It is further recommended that such a clause expressly provide that the landlord's consent to any assignment or sublease does not dispense with the necessity for seeking the landlord's consent to subsequent transfers by the tenant. n146

Within the minority of jurisdictions that imply a requirement of commercial reasonableness, the landlord's refusal to consent tends to be measured against an objective standard, i.e., that of a reasonably prudent person in the position of owning and leasing similar property and exercising reasonable commercial responsibility. n147 Under such a standard, the landlord's legitimate interest is limited to determining that the prospective transferee is comparable in quality to, will use the space for purposes comparable to, and will pay the same rent that the landlord contemplated receiving at the commencement of the term from the original tenant.

Commercial landlords may reasonably consider such criteria as (i) the identity, business character, and financial condition of the proposed transferee; (ii) the nature and legality of the proposed transferee's use of the demised premises and its suitability for the subject property; and (iii) the necessity of altering the premises to suit the proposed transferee's business. n148 Denying consent solely on the basis of idiosyncratic reasons of "personal whim or taste," or personal ... convenience or sensibility" would not be considered commercially reasonable. n149

It has generally not been considered commercially reasonable for a landlord to deny consent in order to extract higher rental payments than originally reserved in the lease. n150 And it has been held not to be commercially reasonable to deny consent because the proposed transfer would create a vacancy in another building owned by the landlord. n151

However, if there are reasonable commercial objections to a proposed transfer, it could be commercially reasonable for the landlord to demand all or part of the premium the tenant receives from a transferee in excess of the rent reserved under the lease as a condition for consenting to the transfer. n152 It should be considered within the realm of commercial reasonableness for the landlord to limit the number of subtenants. n153 And it would appear to be commercially reasonable to prohibit the tenant from assigning or subletting to an existing occupant in the building if similar space is available elsewhere in the building itself. n154

In American Book Company v. Yeshiva University Development Foundation, Inc., n155 the court considered the reasonableness of the landlord in refusing to consent to a proposed sublease on the basis that the landlord was affiliated with a religion whose orthodox branch opposes most forms of birth control and the proposed transferee (an affiliate of Planned Parenthood) advocated birth control. The court held that personal taste, sensibility, and convenience could not form the basis for refusal to consent to the proposed transfer, nor could greater weight be given to ideological and philosophical inconsistency. However, the impact of the decision may be tempered by two facts: First, Yeshiva University was itself the transferee of the original landlord, thus suggesting that the tenant was entitled to rely upon the objective reasonableness of a secular landlord in making decisions affecting its freedom to transfer. Second, Albert Einstein College of Medicine, the medical school affiliated with Yeshiva University, offered instruction in birth control, thus suggesting that the landlord was already tolerating a degree of controversy or potential source of embarrassment on the family planning issue.

The landlord must be given adequate time to respond to requests for consent to sublet. Occupancy by a proposed subtenant without affording the landlord sufficient time to determine whether the proposed subtenancy meets commercially reasonable standards is a breach of the prohibition against subleasing without the prior written consent of the lessor. n156

Whether the landlord's consent has been unreasonably withheld in a particular case is a question of fact on which the tenant has the burden of proof. The tenant may satisfy its burden of proof by showing that, in response to the tenant's written request for a statement of reasons for withholding consent, the landlord has failed, within a reasonable time, to state in writing its reasonable objection to the transfer. n157

A limitation of the tenant's remedies for the landlord's refusal to exercise its power of consent in a commercially reasonable manner is another form of restriction on transfer. If the landlord specifically covenants and agrees not to unreasonably withhold or delay consent, failure to act reasonably subjects the landlord to liability for damages. However, if the landlord's agreement is merely a qualification or condition to the tenant's covenant not to assign or sublet, n158 then the tenant's only remedy is a declaratory judgment.

Assume, after extensive negotiation, the landlord finally concedes the point of not unreasonably withholding consent, but asks in return for the tenant's agreement not to sue for damages for breach. n159 If the tenant agrees to this seemingly modest request, it has won the battle but may have lost the war. A declaratory judgment that the landlord unreasonably withheld consent, or specific performance, may provide scant solace to the tenant seeking to assign the leased premises because, during the litigation delay, the typical office or retail space assignee is likely to rent elsewhere. n160

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 125. The direct liability of the assignee to the landlord is limited to matters arising subsequent to the date of assignment. Absent an express assumption of liability, the transferee has no liability for breaches that occurred prior to the assignment.

(n2)Footnote 126. Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 39 (1989).

(n3)Footnote 127. Among the most common justifications typically advanced by landlords for this position are the following: (i) unlike the tenant, the landlord, being in the real estate business, is entitled not only to any profit realized upon the leasing of space in the property, but also to exercise unrestricted control over all leasing decisions; (ii) the existence of a percentage rent feature, by which the rental is based in part on a percentage of the tenant's gross receipts generated at the demised premises, makes the identity of any transferee, its line of business and competence, and its financial ability and experience, of critical economic significance to the landlord; (iii) maintaining a consistent quality and style of retail operations at the subject property, and an appropriate "mix" of tenants, is crucial for the success of the subject property and of all tenants; (iv) the landlord must have the right to approve transfers to protect exclusivity clauses negotiated by other tenants of the subject property; and (v) the tenant should be prevented from competing with the landlord in the leasing of space in the subject property.

In some instances, however, the lease will provide that the landlord's consent "shall not be unreasonably withheld." See, e.g., Ernst Home Center, Inc. v. Sato, 910 P.2d 486 (Wash. Ct. App. 1996) .

(n4)Footnote 128. See § 44.08(c)(1) of this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 129. See § 44.08(c)(2)of this chapter.

(n6)Footnote 130. See the discussion in § 44.08(c)(2) of this chapter.

(n7)Footnote 131. See the discussion in § 44.08(c)(2) of this chapter.

(n8)Footnote 132. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> _____% of any sums received by Tenant as a result of any assignment or subleasing which exceed the total sums which Tenant is obligated to pay Landlord under this Lease shall be payable to Landlord as additional rent under this Lease.

(n9)Footnote 133. Dicta to this effect in Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) , has since been codified in California. Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.240.

(n10)Footnote 134. In Carma Devs. v. Marathon Dev., 826 P.2d 710 (Cal. 1992) , the California Supreme Court upheld the landlord's right to enforce a recapture clause in a commercial lease giving the landlord an absolute right to terminate the lease upon the tenant's request for permission to sublet a portion of the premises. The tenant unsuccessfully argued that a clause giving the landlord the right to cancel the lease if the tenant attempted to transfer its interest constituted an unreasonable restraint on alienation, a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and a violation of public policy.

(n11)Footnote 135. For example, the tenant may desire to transfer its interest if the location becomes unprofitable, if the business becomes so profitable as to result in the need for larger quarters than are available at the subject property, or because of changes incident to a merger or incident to the retirement, death, or disability of a principal.

(n12)Footnote 136. However, because an assignment or sublease generally gives the transferee tenant no greater rights than those held by the original tenant, some provisions of the lease may significantly limit the tenant's practical ability to assign or sublease the space to a third party, regardless of how favorable the lease provision on transferability or how liberal the jurisdiction in restricting the landlord's right to refuse consent to transfer. For example, the transferee could be bound by a narrow and restrictive use clause:

> ("The premises shall be used and occupied solely for the purpose of the retail sale of men's shoes and for no other purpose whatsoever. The specific character of Tenant's business, the anticipated use of the premises and the relationship between such use and other uses within the Shopping Center were a material inducement and pre-condition to Landlord's agreement to execute this Lease with Tenant. Any change in the character of Tenant's business or use shall constitute a material default under this lease."), a minimum sales requirement:

> ("Landlord has entered into this Lease for the rental reserved herein in reliance on Tenant's representation that it will generate gross sales of not less than $_____ per year during each year of the Term. If Tenant fails to achieve gross sales of $_____ during any calendar year then, in addition to all other rights and remedies of Landlord herein, Landlord shall have the right at its election to terminate this Lease upon not less than thirty (30) days notice."), or a clause requiring the use of a designated trade name:

> ("Tenant's business in the demised premises shall be conducted under the trade name _____. Tenant shall not use or permit the premises to be used under any other trade name without the Landlord's prior written consent, which consent may be withheld at Landlord's sole and absolute discretion.").

Restrictive alteration, signage, and hours of operation provisions will similarly limit the practical transferability of the tenant's interest by requiring a proposed transferee to seek further consents or approvals from the landlord.

(n13)Footnote 137. See, e.g., Randolph v. Koury Corp., 312 S.E.2d 759 (W. Va. 1984) . However, a tenancy at will at common law is terminable at the will of either party and is an exception to the general rule permitting the tenant to transfer its interest. The traditional rules can, of course, be altered by statute. See Trinity Professional Plaza Associates v. Metrocrest Hosp. Authority, 987 S.W.2d 621 (Tex. Ct. App. 1999) (discussing Texas statute that bars tenants from assigning or subleasing without the consent of the landlord).

(n14)Footnote 138. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> Tenant shall not voluntarily, involuntarily or by operation of law assign, transfer, mortgage, or otherwise hypothecate or encumber this lease, in whole or in part, or any interest therein, nor sublet all or any part of the Leased Premises or permit any other persons to occupy same without the prior written consent of Owner in each instance, any references elsewhere herein to assignees, subtenants or other persons notwithstanding. In the event that Tenant so requests Owner's consent, Owner may in its sole and absolute discretion elect to give or withhold consent. Any attempted transfer, assignment, subletting, mortgage, hypothecation or encumbrance without Owner's written consent shall be void, shall confer no rights upon any third person, and shall, at the option of Owner, terminate this lease.

(n15)Footnote 139. However, covenants against assignments and subleases by the tenant constitute restraints on alienation and, as such, are disfavored and must be construed strictly against the landlord. For example, there is substantial authority that subleasing does not violate a lease clause prohibiting assignment, and vice versa. See, e.g., American Community Stores v. Newman, 441 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1989) (upholding tenant's restructuring of form of transfer as sublease after landlord exercised its right under lease to refuse permission for proposed assignment to same transferee); Dennis' Natural Mini-Meals, Inc. v. 91 Fifth Ave. Corp., 568 N.Y.S.2d 740 (N.Y. App. Div. 1991) (absent express reference to stock transfers by corporate tenant, sale to third party of stock of tenant corporation does not constitute breach of lease restriction against assignments); Aiello v. Austrian, 479 A.2d 1234 (Conn. Ct. App. 1984) (change in lessee's form of business, from medical partnership to professional corporation, but without change in personnel, does not violate lease provision against assignment); cf. Zona, Inc. v. Soho Centrale LLC., 704 N.Y.S.2d 38 (App. Div. 2000) (court enforces lease provision stating that "the transfer or other disposition of in excess of twenty-five percent ... of the beneficial ownership of Tenant ... shall constitute an assignment of this lease ....").

The landlord can protect itself against an indirect transfer of the lease by a corporate or partnership tenant by inserting a clause along the following lines:

> If Tenant or its guarantor is a corporation, partnership, or other business entity and if at any time during the term of this lease any part or all of such corporation's shares shall be transferred by sale, assignment, bequest, inheritance, dissolution, merger, consolidation or other reorganization, by operation of law or other disposition, so as to result in a change in the present effective voting control of such corporation by a person or persons owning a majority of said corporate shares on the date of this lease, or if twenty-five percent (25%) of the interest in such partnership or business entity is transferred, assigned, sold or otherwise disposed of, or if by any transfer of interest in such partnership or business entity a change in the effective control results, Tenant shall promptly notify Owner in writing of such change. Any such change in the ownership or control of Tenant's business shall be deemed to be an assignment for purposes of this lease, and Owner may terminate this lease at any time after such change in control by giving Tenant ninety (90) days' prior written notice of such termination.

(n16)Footnote 140. See, e.g., Carleno v. Vollmert Tire Co., 540 P.2d 1149 (Colo. Ct. App. 1975) . But see Bert Bidwell Inv. v. LaSalle & Schiffer, 797 P.2d 811 (Colo. Ct. App. 1990) ; Friedman v. Thomas J. Fisher, 88 A.2d 321 (D.C. 1952) ; Tap Room, Inc. v. Peachtree-Tsg Associates, LLC., 606 S.E.2d 13 (Ga. Ct. App. 2004) ; Vaswani v. Wohletz, 396 S.E.2d 593 (Ga. Ct. App. 1990) ; Food Pantry, Ltd. v. Waikiki Bus. Plaza, Inc., 575 P.2d 869 (Haw. 1978) ; First Fed. Sav. Bank of Ind. v. Key Mkts., Inc., 559 N.E.2d 600 (Ind. 1990) ; Hill v. Rudd, 35 S.W. 270 (Ky. Ct. App. 1896) ; Merchants Row Corp. v. Merchants Row, Inc., 587 N.E.2d 788 (Mass. 1992) ; White v. Huber Drug Co., 157 N.W. 60 (Mich. 1916) ; Gruman v. Investors Diversified Servs., 78 N.W.2d 377 (Minn. 1956) ; Stephenson v. Morrissey, 230 S.W.2d 124 (Mo. Ct. App. 1950) (dicta); Segre v. Ring, 170 A.2d 265 (N.H. 1961) ; Brower v. Glen Wild Lake Co., 206 A.2d 899 (N.J. Ct. App. 1965) ; Caridi v. Markey, 539 N.Y.S.2d 404 (App. Div. 1989) ; Isbey v. Crews, 284 S.E.2d 534 (N.C. Ct. App. 1981) ; F & L Center Co. v. Cunningham Drug Stores, 482 N.E.2d 1296 (Ohio Ct. App. 1984) ;

Reynolds v. McCullough, 739 S.W.2d 424 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987) ; B & R Oil Co. v. Ray's Mobile Homes, Inc., 422 A.2d 1267 (Vt. 1980) ; Coulos v. Desimone, 208 P.2d 105 (Wash. 1949) .

See also Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304a (3d ed. 1990) ("An absolute prohibition against assignment and subletting has traditionally authorized a landlord to refuse permission for any reason or no reason."); James C. McLoughlin, Annotation, When Lessor May Withhold Consent Under Unqualified Provision In Lease Prohibiting Assignment or Subletting of Leased Premises Without Lessor's Consent, 21 A.L.R.4th 188 (1983) .

(n17)Footnote 141. Homa-Goff Interiors v. Cowden, 350 So. 2d 1035 (Ala. 1977) ; Hendrickson v. Freericks, 620 P.2d 205 (Alaska 1981) ; Campbell v. Westdahl, 715 P.2d 288 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1985) ; Tucson Med. Ctr. v. Zoslow, 712 P.2d 459 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1985) ; Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Ft. Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.260 (codifying the rule of Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., for leases executed on or after September 23, 1983); Bert Bidwell Inv. v. LaSalle & Schiffer, 797 P.2d 811 (Colo. Ct. App. 1990) ; Warner v. Konover, 553 A.2d 1138 (Conn. 1989) ; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 5508; Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. Ct. App. 1981) ; Stern's Gallery of Gifts, Inc. v. Corporate Prop. Investors, Inc., 337 S.E.2d 29 (Ga. Ct. App. 1985) (dicta); Funk v. Funk, 633 P.2d 586 (Idaho 1981) ; Golf Mgt. Co. v. Evening Tides Waterbeds, 572 N.E.2d 1000 (Ill. Ct. App. 1991) ; Jack Frost Sales v. Harris Trust & Sav. Bank, 433 N.E.2d 941 (Ill. Ct. App. 1982) ; Associates Commercial Corp. v. Bayou Mgt., Inc., 426 So. 2d 672 (La. Ct. App. 1982) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. Ct. App. 1990) ; Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Century Realty Co., 119 S.W. 400 (Mo. 1909) (dicta); Newman v. Hinky Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) ; Boss Barbara, Inc. v. Newbill, 638 P.2d 1084 (N.M. 1982) . Not all statutes favor the tenant. See, e.g., Trinity Professional Plaza Associates v. Metrocrest Hosp. Authority, 987 S.W.2d 621 (Tex. Ct. App. 1999) (discussing Texas statute that bars tenants from assigning or subleasing without the consent of the landlord).

(n18)Footnote 142. Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) . For a criticism of the wholesale importation of arguably incompatible contract principles into the interpretation of long-term commercial leases, see Alex M. Johnson, Correctly Interpreting Long-Term Leases Pursuant to Modern Contract Law: Toward a Theory of Relational Leases, 74 Va. L. Rev. 751 (1988).

(n19)Footnote 143. Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735, 738 (Md. Ct. App. 1990) :

> Because most people act reasonably most of the time, tenants might expect that a landlord's consent to a sublease or assignment would be governed by standards of reasonableness. Most tenants probably would not understand that a clause stating "this lease may not be assigned or sublet without the landlord's written consent" means the same as a clause stating "the tenant shall have no right to assign or sublease."

(n20)Footnote 144. E.g., "Landlord's refusal of consent shall be final and binding on Tenant, without citing any reason or ground for such refusal."

(n21)Footnote 145. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant § 15.2(2) (1977) (emphasis added):

> A restraint on alienation without the consent of the landlord of the tenant's interest in the leased property is valid, but the landlord's consent to an alienation by the tenant cannot be withheld unreasonably, unless a freely negotiated provision in the lease gives the landlord an absolute right to withhold consent.

Tucson Med. Ctr. v. Zoslow, 712 P.2d 459 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1985) ; Warmack v. Merchants Nat'l Bank of Ft. Smith, 612 S.W.2d 733 (Ark. 1981) ; Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.230; Basnett v. Vista Village Mobile Home Park, 699 P.2d 1343 (Colo. Ct. App. 1984) , rev'd on other grounds, 731 P.2d 700 (Colo. 1987) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. Ct. App.

1990) ; Newman v. Hinky Dinky Omaha-Lincoln, Inc., 427 N.W.2d 50 (Neb. 1988) ; Leeirv Corp. v. S & E Realty Co., 577 N.Y.S.2d 106 (App. Div. 1991) .

(n22)Footnote 146. Otherwise, under the common law rule in Dumpor's Case, the consent to one assignment constitutes a total waiver of the requirement of consent and makes the lease freely assignable. Milton R. Friedman, Friedman on Leases § 7.304e (3d ed. 1990); 1 American Law of Real Prop. § 5.07 (1992); Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant § 16.1, Reporter's Note 7 (1977).

(n23)Footnote 147. First Am. Bank of Nashville v. Woods, 781 S.W.2d 588 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n24)Footnote 148. Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., 709 P.2d 837 (Cal. 1985) ; Fernandez v. Vazquez, 397 So. 2d 1171 (Fla. Ct. App. 1981) ; Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. Ct. App. 1990) ; First Am. Bank of Nashville v. Woods, 781 S.W.2d 588 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n25)Footnote 149. First Am. Bank of Nashville v. Woods, 781 S.W.2d 588 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n26)Footnote 150. 1010 Potomac Assoc. v. Grocery Manufacturers of America, 485 A.2d 199 (D.C. Ct. App. 1984) (unreasonable for a landlord to withhold consent to a sublease solely to extract an economic concession or to improve its economic position); Chanslor-Western Oil & Dev. Co. v. Metropolitan San. Dist., 266 N.E.2d 405 (Ill. App. Ct. 1970) (where lease provided for rent increases based on increase in value of property); Associates Commercial Corp. v. Bayou Mgt., Inc., 426 So. 2d 672 (La. Ct. App. 1983) (landlord rejected proposed sublease, then leased vacated space to the proposed sublessee); Julian v. Christopher, 575 A.2d 735 (Md. Ct. App. 1990) (refusal to consent solely for the purpose of securing a rent increase would be unreasonable unless the new subtenant would necessitate additional expenditures by, or increased economic risk to, the landlord).

(n27)Footnote 151. See Krieger v. Helmsley-Spear, Inc., 302 A.2d 129 (N.J. 1973) (consent clause was for the protection of the landlord in its ownership and operation of the particular property-not for its general economic protection; otherwise the landlord could refuse consent if it had vacancies in its other building).

(n28)Footnote 152. See John Hogan Enters., Inc. v. Kellogg, 231 Cal. Rptr. 711 (Cal. Ct. App. 1986) (when lessor has reasonable commercial objections to a lease assignment, it does not breach the lease by requiring a new lease be entered into or that the premium paid lessee for the assignment be paid to lessor, where lessor would be justified in an outright refusal without further negotiations). See also Cal. Civ. Code§§ 1995.240 - 1995.260 cmts.

(n29)Footnote 153. "This prevents excessive subdivision of the premises, which require, among other things, additional landlord approvals, alterations and strain on building services." Gary A. Lieberman, Assignment and Subletting: When May an Owner Withhold Consent?, Real Est. Fin.,33, 35 (Winter 1990).

(n30)Footnote 154. See Gary A. Lieberman, Assignment and Subletting: When May an Owner Withhold Consent? Real Est. Fin.,33, 35 (Winter 1990).

(n31)Footnote 155. 297 N.Y.S.2d 156 (Sup. Ct. 1969).

(n32)Footnote 156. Losurdo Bros. v. Arkin Distrib. Co., 465 N.E.2d 139 (Ill. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n33)Footnote 157. Cal. Civ. Code § 1995.260.

(n34)Footnote 158. E.g., "Tenant's right to sublet or assign shall be subject to its having first obtained the prior written consent of Landlord, which may be withheld by Landlord in the good faith exercise of its reasonable business judgment."

(n35)Footnote 159. E.g., "Tenant shall have no right or claim to damages against Landlord by reason of its refusal to grant consent or approval, and Tenant's only remedy therefor shall be specific performance to compel consent or approval."

(n36)Footnote 160. Sandra H. Johnson, et al., Property Law 330 (1992).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.09

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.09 Insurance/Indemnity Clauses.

Both landlord and tenant have an insurable interest in a leased building, although the tenant's interest is limited to the demised premises, and in the tenant's personal property and fixtures located therein. The appropriate allocation of responsibility to carry insurance may depend more on the type of property than on the relative bargaining power of the parties.

The lease may afford either party able to demonstrate sufficient net worth the option to satisfy its insurance obligations under the lease through a program of self-insurance, although the lease may require reinsurance for losses over a stated amount.

§ 44.09(a) Landlord Insurance.

Except in the case of a building occupied by a single tenant, property damage and public liability insurance are generally carried by the landlord, although the expense of such insurance is often passed through to the tenant as part of the common area maintenance fee. Liability coverage insures against loss arising from bodily injury and property damage to third parties with respect to the leased premises. Property damage coverage insures against damage to the building, as well as to the personal property, equipment, and fixtures of the landlord and the tenant as a result of fire or other casualty. n161 Because the landlord's duty to restore the building in the event of fire or other casualty is generally limited to the proceeds of the landlord's insurance policy, the tenant should require the landlord to carry property damage insurance in an amount equal to the full replacement cost of the building, as opposed to its insurable value, which may be significantly less, depending upon the age of the building.

Because the tenant's duty to pay rent is likely to be abated during the period required to repair the building following a fire or other casualty, n162 the landlord should carry rent loss insurance to assure sufficient income to satisfy its fixed expenses for mortgage debt service and real estate taxes.

§ 44.09(b) Tenant Insurance.

The landlord will require the tenant to maintain various insurance coverages in effect throughout the term of the lease at the tenant's own expense, in prescribed minimum amounts and with licensed insurance carriers having a satisfactory financial rating. The landlord will request to be named as an additional insured under the tenant's policies. The tenant will be required to produce certificates of insurance on the lease commencement date, and paid premiums or other proof of renewal thereafter. Cancellation or failure to maintain such insurance will constitute a material event of default entitling the landlord to terminate the lease. n163

The tenant is typically required to carry at its sole cost and expense insurance covering physical damage to its trade fixtures, merchandise, and other personal property from time to time located in the demised premises, and all leasehold improvements to the premises, on a replacement cost basis.

The tenant should also carry business interruption insurance to protect against the inability to use the demised premises during the period required to restore the property following a fire or other casualty. Notwithstanding the abatement of rent provided by the lease, n164 such insurance would seem to be advisable to protect the tenant against lost profits.

Commercial general liability coverage protects the tenant n165 against liability for damages the insured is required to pay third parties arising from bodily injury, property damage, and personal injury in the nature of false arrest or defamation with respect to the tenant's operation of the business conducted at the demised premises.

§ 44.09(c) Waiver of Subrogation.

Subrogation involves the substitution of one party in place of another with respect to a claim, demand, or right. In this context, subrogation describes the process by which an insurance carrier that pays an insured loss to the landlord arising from damage to a leased building caused by the negligence of the tenant in effect acquires the landlord's right to recover from the tenant for negligently causing the damage. Conversely, an insurance carrier that pays an insured loss to the tenant arising from the negligence of the landlord similarly acquires the tenant's right to recover from the landlord by way of subrogation.

The lease may require the parties to obtain waivers of the right of subrogation in any insurance coverages required under the terms of the lease. n166 An insurer waives its right of subrogation by agreeing in its policy, perhaps in return for an additional premium, not to proceed against the negligent landlord or tenant, as the case may be, after paying an insured loss to the other.

A waiver of subrogation provision, by itself, does not prevent one party to the lease from suing the other over a loss that is not required to be covered by insurance. n167

§ 44.09(d) Indemnity Clauses.

The typical pro-landlord commercial lease provides for the tenant to broadly indemnify the landlord and hold the landlord harmless against any and all claims, actions, damages, liabilities, and expenses that the landlord may experience in connection with personal injury or property damage arising out of the tenant's occupancy of the demised premises. n168 A more narrow and less satisfactory form of indemnity is limited to judgments against the landlord. Some jurisdictions by statute or case law prohibit indemnification of the landlord for its own negligence outside of areas controlled exclusively by the tenant. n169

The tenant should seek a comparable level of indemnification from the landlord with respect to liabilities the tenant may incur arising out of the landlord's operation of the common areas of the property under the landlord's control.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 161. The other perils insured against by typical forms of property damage coverage include lightning, explosion, windstorm, hail, riot and civil unrest, vandalism, volcanic eruption, falling objects, and damage from snow, ice, and water.

(n2)Footnote 162. See § 44.11(b)of this chapter.

(n3)Footnote 163. Bowman v. Drum, 389 S.E.2d 125 (N.C. Ct. App. 1990) (refusing to enjoin landlord's recovery of possession of space leased to child day care center that carried liability insurance in the amount of $300,000 in violation of a lease provision requiring coverage of $500,000); but see Metropolitan Transportation Authority v. Kura River Management, Ltd., 739 N.Y.S.2d 668 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002) (landlord could not terminate lease because of tenant's alleged failure to acquire and maintain required kind of insurance).

(n4)Footnote 164. See § 44.11(b) of this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 165. It also protects the landlord, as additional insured, against vicarious liability as owner of the property.

(n6)Footnote 166. See May Dept. Store v. Center Developers, Inc., 471 S.E.2d 194 (Ga. 1996) (upholding waiver of subrogation clause).

(n7)Footnote 167. See Reade v. Reva Holding Corp., 818 N.Y.S.2d 9 (App. Div. 2006) .

(n8)Footnote 168. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> Tenant shall save and hold Owner harmless from and hereby indemnifies Owner against all Claims to or by Tenant, Tenant's agents, customers, invitees or any other person or persons whomsoever for or on account of any death or injury to persons, any damage to property or any business interruption in or about the Leased Premises or any improvements thereon or any part thereof, or for or on account of any death or injury to persons or any damage to property that may result by reason of any condition or present or future lack of repair of the Leased Premises or Improvements thereon or any part thereof or caused by or resulting from any acts of God or the elements, or the wiring, equipment, furnishings, utilities, fixtures, apparatus or any sign, advertising or display device, awning or other like covering therein or thereof, or by or from plumbing, gas, water, steam, snow, ice or other pipes, or any sewerage, leakage, or by or from the use, misuse or disuse of the Leased Premises or improvements thereon or any part thereof, or any equipment, furnishings or fixtures therein or apparatus thereof, or by or from any person or persons lawfully or unlawfully upon the Leased Premises or any part thereof, including Tenant, Tenant's agents, customers and invitees, or by or from any act, omission or neglect of any such person, or in any manner whatsoever growing out of the past, present or future condition or use of the Leased Premises or improvements thereon or any part thereof. Tenant shall save and hold Owner harmless from and hereby indemnifies Owner against all Claims to or by Tenant, Tenant's agents, customers and invitees or any other person or persons whosoever for or on account of any death or injury to person or any damage to property of any nature or sort or any business interruption in or about the common areas herein described or any part thereof due directly or indirectly to the act, negligence or omission of Tenant, Tenant's agents, customer or invitees. Tenant shall at its cost defend any Claims against Owner with respect to the foregoing or in which Owner may be impleaded. Tenant shall pay, satisfy and/or discharge any judgments, orders and decrees that may be rendered against Owner in connection with the foregoing. As used herein, Claims shall mean all claims, suits, proceedings, actions, demands, causes of action, responsibility, liability, judgments, executions, damages, loss and expense.

(n9)Footnote 169. See, e.g., Prince Philip Partnership v. Cutlip, 582 A.2d 992 (Md. Ct. App. 1990) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.10

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.10 Environmental Considerations in Commercial Leases.

§ 44.10(a) Environmental Laws Affecting Commercial Leases.

§ 44.10(a)(1) Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA or Superfund).

In the wake of the Love Canal scandal in the 1970s, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 n170 was enacted in the hectic final days of the lame duck 96th Congress, immediately prior to the first inauguration of President Reagan, under a suspension of the rules that precluded amendments, and with no conference report or other significant legislative history to resolve ambiguities and unaddressed issues. n171

CERCLA imposes broad liability on owners or operators of facilities n172 for releases of hazardous substances. n173 But the legislation also sets forth some "innocent landowner" defenses. n174

§ 44.10(a)(2) Other Environmental Laws.

Potential environmental liabilities are created for landlords and tenants by numerous environmental management statutes besides CERCLA. At the federal level, such statutes include:

-- The Clean Air Act, n175 which prohibits the discharge of hazardous air pollutants, including asbestos;

-- The Occupational Safety and Health Act, n176 which requires the monitoring of asbestos concentrations in the workplace and regulates employee exposure to airborne concentrations of asbestos fibers exceeding certain specified levels; and

-- The Federal Water Pollution Prevention and Control Act, n177 which prohibits the discharge of pollutants into navigable waters and imposes liability for cleanup costs on owners and operators of discharging facilities.

§ 44.10(a)(3) Environmental Laws Regulating Development.

Federal statutes limit or regulate development in such environmentally sensitive areas as shorelines and coastal areas, n178 wetlands and floodplains, n179 seismically active and geologically unstable areas, n180 land that supports endangered species, n181 and historically and archaeologically significant property. n182 Counterparts to these federal statutes exist in many states.

§ 44.10(b) Landlord Liability.

§ 44.10(b)(1) Responsibility Based on Ownership.

In order to fully understand the broad reach of the federal environmental laws, one need only imagine the most passive of real estate investments, e.g., the acquisition for cash at fair market value of a parcel of vacant land zoned for retail development and intended to be leased on a long-term, triple-net basis for the operation of a convenience store. Hazardous waste may have been deposited at the site more than 40 years before. Property ownership may have changed hands several times since then.

Under CERCLA the current owner of this property, merely by virtue of such ownership, is strictly liable for the entire cost to remedy the contamination without regard to lack of causation. n183 Courts have had no difficulty concluding that landlords are owners of facilities for purposes of CERCLA liability. n184 Of course, if the tenant is the "operator" of the facility that generates the hazardous substances, the tenant will also be subject to liability. n185

An "innocent landowner" defense is available if the property owner can prove that the release or threatened release of hazardous substances was caused by an act of God or by an act of war. n186 Such a defense is also available if the property owner can establish that the release or threatened release was caused by the act or omission of a third party, that the owner exercised due care with respect to the hazardous substance, and that the owner took precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of the third party and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions. n187 But reported court decisions do not indicate that the third party defense has, at least thus far, been of much assistance to landlords. The Act provides that the affirmative defense does not apply when the third party "act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship, existing directly or indirectly, with the defendant" n188"Contractual relationship" is defined broadly by the Act, n189 and has been construed to include leases. n190 Based on the "contractual relationship" proviso, it has been held that the third party defense is unavailable to a landlord who has an oral lease with the party who was at fault in connection with the release of a hazardous substance. n191 In short, conduct by a tenant that leads to contamination of the property can create liability for the landlord. n192

Additional information regarding landowner environmental liability is contained in chapter 75.

§ 44.10(b)(2) Minimizing Landlord Liability.

Assuming that the tenant has substantial net worth, the contractual allocation of environmental risk within the lease itself provides the most effective mechanism to minimize the landlord's environmental liability. The lease should contain a specific provision affirmatively obligating the tenant to comply, at its sole cost and expense, with all applicable environmental laws, regulations, and orders of federal, state, county, and municipal authorities. It should include a power of termination applicable for a violation of this provision. And it should include an indemnification (which survives lease termination) against any loss, cost, damage or expense (including attorney fees) to which the landlord may be subject by reason of the tenant's failure to so comply. Because of the magnitude of the potential liability in the event environmental remediation is required, the landlord should not rely upon a court's willingness to enforce a general covenant requiring the tenant to comply with laws or governmental regulations, or to repair and maintain the leased premises. n193

Consideration should be given, particularly in net leases with long-term tenants, to the allocation of responsibility for repairs, replacements and improvements caused by environmental laws and regulations. The tenant insurance provision should include a specific requirement for insurance coverage against environmental hazards, to the full extent available.

§ 44.10(c) Tenant Liability.

§ 44.10(c)(1) Responsibility As Operator.

The commercial tenant is also subject to liability under CERCLA. The same clause that renders the landlord potentially responsible as owner subjects the tenant to liability as an "operator." n194 It is unclear whether a defense comparable to the innocent landowner defense is available to a tenant who could prove that it leased the premises after the toxic discharge, and neither knew nor had reason to know that the property was contaminated. However, a small space tenant in an office building or other commercial property might be able to escape liability as operator by demonstrating lack of practical control over the property.

§ 44.10(c)(2) Responsibility As Owner.

Although a tenant can become liable under CERCLA as the operator of a facility, courts have also considered, in some instances, whether they can be held liable as owners. The issue has occasionally arisen in connection with subleases. Although the reasoning has varied, in that context, courts have indicated, n195 and have sometimes held, n196 that a tenant can be considered an owner of a facility under CERCLA.

For example, in Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equipment Corp., n197 the United States Second Circuit Court of Appeals considered whether a sublessor was liable as an owner. The court was of the view that the typical lessee should not be held liable as owner; however it stated that some lessees may have the requisite indicia of ownership vis-a-vis the record owner to be de facto owners and therefore liable under CERCLA. The court listed the following factors as relevant to the determination:

> (1) whether the lease is for an extensive term and admits of no rights in the owner/lessor to determine how the property is used; (2) whether the lease cannot be terminated by the owner before it expires by its terms; (3) whether the lessee has the right to sublet all or some of the property without notifying the owner; (4) whether the lessee is responsible for payment of all taxes, assessments, insurance, and operation and maintenance costs; and (5) whether the lessee is responsible for making all structural and other repairs. n198

In the case before it, the court concluded that the sublessor did not have sufficient indicia of ownership to be considered as the owner of the facility in question.

In United States v. South Carolina Recycling & Disposal, Inc., n199 a federal district court held that a sublessor was an owner of a facility for purposes of CERCLA liability. It stated in part:

> The fact that during part of its leasehold [the tenant] sublet a portion of the site does not diminish its responsibility. If anything, it strengthens the case against [the tenant]. As a general rule, a lessor or sublessor who allows property under his control to be used by another in a manner which endangers third parties or which creates a nuisance, is, along with the lessee or sublessee, liable for the harm...
>
> Thus, this court concludes that by virtue of its lessee/sublessor interest in the ... facility at a time during which hazardous substances were disposed of at the facility, [the tenant] can be held liable as an "owner" pursuant to Section 107(a)(2) of CERCLA, 42 U.S.C. § 9607(a)(2). n200

§ 44.10(c)(3) Minimizing Tenant Liability.

Short-term tenants will, of course, object to being required to make repairs, replacements, and improvements for environmental law compliance purposes, or to finance such compliance indirectly through the common area maintenance expense pass-through provision. n201 A tenant may negotiate for the right to terminate the lease as an alternative to complying with environmental requirements that necessitate making costly alterations to the leased premises. The landlord may compromise by offering a cancellation provision if the useful life of improvements for environmental law compliance arising during the term of the lease would extend beyond the expiration of the balance of the term.

In order to protect against liability for activities by previous owners or tenants, receipt by the tenant of a satisfactory audit of the environmental condition of the subject property should be made a condition precedent to the tenant's obligation to occupy the premises. Such an audit should include an inspection of the leased premises and common areas n202 for asbestos-containing material. Similarly, an environmental audit conducted at the expiration of the term will help refute any subsequent claim by evidencing the satisfactory condition of the property at the conclusion of the tenancy.

The lease should contain the landlord's representation and warranty that there have been no hazardous waste discharges at the subject property, and that the property is in compliance with all applicable environmental laws, regulations, and orders of federal, state, county, and municipal authorities. The environmental indemnification provision described above should be made mutual. Care should be taken to assure that substantial resources support the landlord's indemnity. For example, it may be necessary to carve out a specific exception from any general leasehold exculpation provision or from any provision limiting the landlord's liability to its equity in the building. n203 The landlord also may be required to carry insurance against environmental liability.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 170. Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, as amended by the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986 (collectively known as "CERCLA"), 42 U.S.C. § 9601.

(n2)Footnote 171. Sandra H. Johnson, et al., Property Law 616 (1992); United States v. Maryland Bank & Trust Co., 632 F. Supp. 573 (D. Md. 1986) .

(n3)Footnote 172. A "facility" includes a "building, structure, installation, equipment, pipe or pipeline ..., well, pit, pond, lagoon, impoundment, ditch, landfill, storage container, motor vehicle, rolling stock, or aircraft, or ... any site or area where a hazardous substance has been deposited, stored, disposed of, or placed, or otherwise come to be located." 42 U.S.C. § 9601.

(n4)Footnote 173. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 9607(a).

(n5)Footnote 174. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 9607(b).

(n6)Footnote 175. 42 U.S.C. § 7401, et seq.

(n7)Footnote 176. 29 U.S.C. § 651, et. seq.,

(n8)Footnote 177. 33 U.S.C. § 1251, et seq.,

(n9)Footnote 178. The Coastal Zone Management Act, 16 U.S.C. § 1451, et. seq.

(n10)Footnote 179. National Environmental Policy Act, 42 U.S.C. § 4321; Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C. § 1251 et seq.

(n11)Footnote 180. National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program Reauthorization Act, 478

(n12)Footnote 181. Endangered Species Act, 16 U.S.C. § 1531 et seq.

(n13)Footnote 182. Historic Sites, Buildings, Objects and Antiquities Act, 16 U.S.C. § 461 et seq.

(n14)Footnote 183. 42 U.S.C. § 9607(a). Current property ownership, without more, has been held sufficient to create liability. See United States v. Moore, 698 F. Supp. 622, 624 n.1 (E.D. Va. 1988) ; United States v. Maryland Bank & Trust Co., 632 F. Supp. 573 (D. Md. 1986) .

(n15)Footnote 184. See, e.g., United States v. Monsanto Co., 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988); Weyerhaeuser Corp. v. Koppers Co., 771 F. Supp. 1406 (D. Md. 1991) ; 4 W. Rogers, Environmental Law: Hazardous Wastes and Substances§ 8.12 (1992); Anthony J. Fejfar, Landowner-Lessor Liability Under CERCLA, 53 MD. L. Rev.. 157 (1994).

(n16)Footnote 185. See Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Koppers Co., Inc., 771 F. Supp. 1420 (D. Md. 1991) (allocating liability between landlord as owner and tenant as operator).

(n17)Footnote 186. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607(b).

(n18)Footnote 187. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607(b). A defense is also available if "any combination" of the foregoing three situations applies. See id.

(n19)Footnote 188. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607(b).

(n20)Footnote 189. See 42 U.S.C. § 9601(35)(A) (the expression includes, but is not limited to "land contracts, deeds or other instruments transferring title or possession").

(n21)Footnote 190. See International Clinical Laboratories, Inc. v. Stevens, 710 F. Supp. 466 (E.D. N.Y. 1989) . For a discussion of the "contractual relationship" issue as applied to landlord-tenant relationships, see Anthony J. Fejfar, Landowner-Lessor Liability Under CERCLA, 53 MD. L. Rev. 157 (1994).

(n22)Footnote 191. See United States v. Monsanto, 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988) .

(n23)Footnote 192. By way of contrast, the landlord's lack of knowledge of the tenant's allegedly illegal activity in connection with operation of a landfill has been held to constitute a valid defense to a state claim that, by failing to terminate the lease, the landlord had sanctioned the violation of environmental laws and the maintenance of a public nuisance on the leased premises. See Director of Dep't of Nat. Resources v. Acme Disposal Co., 473 N.W.2d 824 (Mich. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n24)Footnote 193. See Wolf v. 2539 Realty Assocs., 560 N.Y.S.2d 24 (App. Div. 1990) (tenant repair and governmental compliance clauses ineffective to require tenant to remove asbestos-containing material).

(n25)Footnote 194. See 42 U.S.C. § 9607(a).

(n26)Footnote 195. See Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equipment Corp., 215 F.3d 321 (2d Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 979 (2000) .

(n27)Footnote 196. See United States v. A & N Cleaners and Launderers, Inc., 788 F. Supp. 1317 (S.D. N.Y. 1992) (sublessor exercised a degree of site control over the property that it was an owner for purposes of CERCLA liability); United States v. South Carolina Recycling & Disposal, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 984, 1003 (D. S.C. 1984) , aff'd in part and vacated in part, sub nom., United States v. Monsanto Co., 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1106 (1989) (sublessor regarded as owner for CERCLA purposes).

(n28)Footnote 197. 215 F.3d 321 (2d Cir. 2000) , cert. denied, 531 U.S. 979 (2000) .

(n29)Footnote 198. 215 F.3d at 330-331 .

(n30)Footnote 199. 653 F. Supp. 984, 1003 (D. S.C. 1984) , aff'd in part and vacated in part, sub nom., United States v. Monsanto Co., 858 F.2d 160 (4th Cir. 1988) , cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1106 (1989) .

(n31)Footnote 200. 653 F. Supp. at 1003.

(n32)Footnote 201. See § 44.06 of this chapter.

(n33)Footnote 202. The presence of asbestos in the common areas of the subject property, such as the roof, boiler room, pipes and tile flooring, presages a potentially significant expense for removal or encapsulating. Because most commercial leases apportion common area maintenance expenses among all space tenants, the inspection report can provide a basis for the tenant to negotiate a shift of liability to the landlord for remediation expenses, or at least to accurately forecast and budget for such costs.

(n34)Footnote 203. See § 44.07(d) of this chapter.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.11

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.11 Major Damage, Destruction, and Condemnation.

§ 44.11(a) Defining Major Damage and Destruction.

Various definitional methods are used for purposes of triggering a party's option to terminate the lease in the event of damage to the leased premises. Probably least satisfactory are attempts to condition the rights of the parties on such subjective criteria as untenantability or similar concepts. More common approaches seek to measure the extent of the damage objectively in terms of the percentage of space destroyed, the time required to restore, or the replacement cost. An enhanced level of objectivity might be provided by requiring that the determination of damage or destruction be made by the landlord's licensed architect.

§ 44.11(b) Rent Abatement.

In the event the tenant is unable to use the demised premises, in whole or in part, following a fire or other casualty, the tenant's duty to pay rent is typically abated to the extent of such loss of use, assuming that the fire or other casualty was not caused by the tenant's own negligence. Rent is abated during the period that the demised premises are unfit for commercial use. The term of the lease may likewise be extended for the period of restoration.

§ 44.11(c) Right to Terminate Lease.

In the event of major damage or destruction, most commercial leases grant the landlord the option of restoring the premises or terminating the lease. Such an option is exercisable by the landlord sending written notice to the tenant promptly following the fire or other casualty.

Destruction of the premises by fire or other casualty is not an excuse for the tenant to terminate the lease at common law, unless the right to terminate is expressly reserved in the lease. n204 Notwithstanding the provision for rent abatement and the availability of business interruption insurance, the tenant should also have the flexibility to terminate the lease in the event the time to restore or rebuild the premises would be disproportionate to the unexpired term of the lease, or in the event of unreasonable delays in the restoration past the time indicated in the landlord's notice of election to restore, as extended by acts of God and other conditions beyond the landlord's control.

§ 44.11(d) Use of Insurance Policy Proceeds.

The landlord's ability to use the proceeds of insurance to repair the building following fire or other casualty depends upon whether the landlord's mortgage lender is required to make insurance proceeds available for restoration under the terms of its mortgage. Standard form financing documentation generally directs that such proceeds be paid to the lender and applied by the lender, at its option, either to restoration or to reduce the unpaid principal balance secured by the mortgage.

Most institutional lenders will agree in advance of a casualty to disburse insurance proceeds (undertaking to serve in effect as a construction lender) to the borrower for repair, so long as the proceeds are sufficient for restoration and the borrower is not otherwise in default. A prudent tenant will determine in advance of leasing space that the landlord's mortgage contains such a provision (or that the landlord has obtained a side letter from its lender to this effect), and the lease should require the landlord to obtain such a provision in connection with any subsequent financing.

Because the landlord's duty to restore the building following a fire or other casualty is generally limited to the proceeds of insurance received under the landlord's casualty insurance policy, the tenant should require that the landlord carry fire and extended coverage insurance in an amount equal to the full replacement cost of the building.

§ 44.11(e) Duty to Restore.

Knowledgeable landlords disclaim any obligation to repair or rebuild the building in the event of fire or other casualty. Rather, the restoration of the building generally is at the landlord's option and is limited to the proceeds of insurance received by the landlord under its casualty insurance policy. Although the need to preserve flexibility with respect to restoration is primarily a function of the landlord's mortgage financing with respect to the property, n205 there are a variety of other legitimate reasons why the landlord would be unwilling to incur the unrestricted duty to restore. n206

In the case of a long-term lease of a building to a single tenant, it may be appropriate to allocate the duty to repair casualty damages to the tenant. The tenant also may be required to restore the property at its expense in the event of damage or destruction caused by the tenant's own negligence, or the negligence of its employees or agents, in which event rent will not be abated.

§ 44.11(f) Condemnation.

A competently drafted condemnation clause will address two issues: the effect of condemnation of the leased premises or essential common area (e.g., parking areas) in whole or in part, on the continuing responsibility of the parties to perform their obligations under the lease, and the method of allocating the condemnation award between landlord and tenant.

§ 44.11(f)(1) Total Condemnation.

In the unlikely event of total condemnation, it is in the landlord's best interest that the lease be terminated as of the date of the taking without further obligation under the lease for either party, and with the landlord entitled to receive the entire award payable by the condemnor, except for any separately stated award for the tenant's trade fixtures and leasehold improvements made by tenant. The tenant may require the flexibility to terminate the lease at an earlier date -- between the time that notice of condemnation is given and the actual taking. Also, the tenant may realize that there is not likely to be a separately stated award for leasehold improvements but rather a single award to be allocated between the parties as provided by the lease.

§ 44.11(f)(2) Partial Condemnation.

A balanced lease clause would give either party the right, exercisable at its option, to cancel the lease in the event of condemnation involving more than a specified minimum percentage of the demised premises. The clause would proceed to allocate responsibility for restoration of the remaining portion of the premises using the condemnation proceeds for financing. n207 The clause would also provide for abatement of rent to the extent that the tenant is unable to conduct business at the leased premises during the restoration period, and for diminution of rent for the balance of the term in proportion to the space taken.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 204. But see Albert M. Greenfield & Co. v. Kolea, 380 A.2d 758 (Pa. 1977) (destruction of improvements by fire excused tenant from obligation to pay rent, applying contract law doctrine of impossibility of performance).

(n2)Footnote 205. See § 44.11(d) of this chapter.

(n3)Footnote 206. Reasonable landlords would not likely obligate themselves to restore the property if an anchor tenant's space was destroyed, if the casualty was uninsured, or if only a year or so remained on the tenant's lease.

(n4)Footnote 207. As in the case of insurance proceeds, the landlord's mortgage lender may have the right to require, at its option, that condemnation award proceeds be applied to the mortgage debt.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.12

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.12 Default and Related Issues.

[Go To Supp]

Under the terms of a typical pro-landlord commercial lease, even a non-material event of default, which would not trigger the landlord's right to terminate the lease, n208 nevertheless exposes the tenant to adverse consequences. A defaulting tenant will be responsible for paying the landlord's costs of enforcement, including attorneys' fees. Various rights of the tenant, such as the right to transfer its interest and to exercise options for expansion space and renewal, may be exercisable only if the tenant remains in good standing. Rent concessions may only be available so long as the tenant is not in default.

One of the tenant's lease negotiation objectives, therefore, should be the limitation of landlord remedies upon tenant default. The tenant should obtain notice and cure periods, which may vary in length depending upon the monetary and non-monetary nature of the default. As a practical matter, some non-monetary defaults may not be capable of being cured within a specific period of time, in which event the tenant's grace period should extend for a reasonable time as the tenant is making diligent efforts in good faith to cure the default. n209

§ 44.12(a) Materiality of Breach.

Most jurisdictions by statute confer a right of re-entry and termination upon the landlord for tenant breach of a commercial lease. Most commercial leases contain a contractual provision to the same effect, often providing for written notice and cure periods. Judicial enforcement of such statutes and leasehold provisions is tempered by the interplay between property and contract law.

At early common law, neither landlord nor tenant was empowered to terminate a leasehold by reason of the other's breach in the absence of a power of termination provision in the lease. n210 Today, by statute in most jurisdictions and by contractual provision in most commercial leases, a material breach of lease by tenant is a ground for the landlord to terminate the lease and recover possession of the premises. Material defaults include the failure to pay rent and other monetary obligations, bankruptcy, abandonment, and transfers without consent.

Equitable abhorrence of forfeiture combined with discretionary common sense are likely to influence the modern court's decision whether to permit a commercial landlord to terminate a lease. Commercial landlords may be denied the right to terminate the lease and recover possession of the premises for tenant defaults that the court considers technical, inadvertent, non-prejudicial, immaterial, or trivial. n211 In making this determination, the court is likely to consider such factors as the tenant's history of previous breaches; whether the landlord suffered loss, injury, or damage by reason of the tenant's breach; the relative amount of a monetary default in comparison with the annual rental; and the extent of the tenant's investment in fixtures and leasehold improvements. Even a material provision of the lease, including the obligation to pay rent, n212 may be breached in such a trivial manner that to enforce a forfeiture would be unconscionable and inequitable. n213 In such event, the landlord will be relegated to bringing an action for damages, if any, for the breach.

Materiality in this context refers to the manner of the breach as well as the nature of the provision. In other words, breach of the rent clause, which obviously is a material provision of the lease, may be material or trivial depending upon the particular facts and circumstances, thus complicating the identification of a workable standard of evaluation. Failure to carry required insurance coverages has been held to constitute a material breach by the tenant. n214 Both the Restatement of Contracts n215and the Restatement of Property n216 provide analytical frameworks for determining the materiality of a particular breach in the landlord-tenant context.

§ 44.12(b) Eviction.

Eviction proceedings have the legal effect of terminating the tenant's estate in the real property and restoring possession of the premises to the landlord. Unless the lease provides otherwise, following eviction, the tenant may be released from liability for damages based on the lease but accruing after its termination, including unpaid rent. n217 In a minority of jurisdictions, eviction and termination of the leasehold estate does not impair the tenant's contractual obligation or liability for anticipatory breach of the covenant to rent the premises in the future. n218

In some jurisdictions, following eviction or abandonment, the landlord cannot stand idly by and look to the tenant for damages in the amount of the rent that would accrue during the remainder of the term. In such jurisdictions, the measure of damages for breach of the covenant to pay rent would be the difference between the stipulated rent and the fair rental value of the premises, which is the amount the law presumes the landlord could obtain by making a reasonable effort to re-let the premises, or the entire amount of the rent at the agreed rate if a reasonable effort is made but the landlord is unable to re-let the premises. n219

Commercial landlords in most jurisdictions are permitted, under an express provision in the lease, to utilize self-help eviction for nonpayment of rent. n220 However, a number of states preclude commercial landlords from self-help and have adopted the rule that landlords must, in all cases, resort to the courts for possession of the premises, even if the lease expressly grants the landlord the right to re-enter and even if it can do so peacefully. n221

§ 44.12(c) Landlord's Duty to Mitigate.

The issue of whether a landlord has a duty to mitigate the damages of a tenant can arise in at least two situations. The first situation involves lease termination. Termination of a lease normally ends a tenant's obligation to pay rent. However, the lease could provide otherwise. n222 If it does, the Restatement of Property provides: "If there is such a provision, the landlord is required to take reasonable steps to obtain a new tenant on terms that will mitigate the original tenant's liability as much as is feasible under the circumstances. The cost to the landlord of mitigation is chargeable to the original tenant." n223

The Massachusetts Supreme Court considered a commercial landlord's obligation to mitigate in a situation involving such a lease provision. n224 After referring to the above-quoted language from the Restatement, the court indicated that there was more than one way to satisfy the mitigation requirement:

> The landlord and defendants here had just such an agreement in their lease. No provision is made for any form of mitigation beyond reletting the premises to a new tenant; however, it is clear that the purpose of the common-law rule and the lease provision is that the renter's liability be mitigated as much as is feasible, or, in the language of the lease, "commercially reasonable." A landlord can mitigate damages in other ways, and selling the property is one such way... When the landlord sold the property, it was compensated for the rental value of the property through the end of the defendants' lease term and beyond. n225

The issue of mitigation has arisen more frequently in connection with tenant abandonment of the leased premises. Commercial landlords have traditionally not been obligated to plead and prove mitigation of the tenant's damages in actions for nonpayment of rent following tenant abandonment. n226 This may still be the majority view. n227

However, in recent years, a number of jurisdictions, borrowing from contract law, have held that a commercial landlord has an obligation to take reasonable steps to mitigate damages by finding a suitable replacement tenant following tenant abandonment of the leased premises. n228 The landlord's failure to mitigate should not give rise to a cause of action in favor the tenant, but it does provide the tenant with a defense to the landlord's action for unpaid rent. n229

There is a division of authority on the issue of who should bear the burden of proof on the question of whether the landlord has made reasonable efforts to mitigate damages. n230

It remains an open issue in many jurisdictions whether a commercial landlord's obligation to mitigate the tenant's damages is a waivable. n231

§ 44.12(d) Estoppel Certificates.

The stream of income generated by tenant leases is the key determinant of the value of commercial real estate for purposes of sale or refinancing. The landlord will represent and warrant to a potential purchaser or lender that the leases are in good standing and have not been amended or modified except as specified, that there are no options to renew, options to purchase, or rights of first refusal except as specified, that rent has not been prepaid for more than one month in advance, that no concessions are due except as expressly provided by the terms of the written leases, and that no event of default by either party has occurred. However, it is essential that the potential purchaser or mortgage lender be able to verify these facts directly from the tenants themselves.

Accordingly, the typical commercial lease requires the tenant, promptly upon request, to certify the status of the lease to any purchaser or mortgage lender. n232

The purpose of the requirement is to prevent the tenant from contradicting statements made in the certification by later claiming, for example, that rent had been prepaid or that the landlord had promised to make improvements to the premises.

Because the inability to produce these so-called "estoppel certificates" from all tenants may prevent the timely closing of a sale or refinancing, unscrupulous tenants have sought to take advantage of the occasion to extract concessions from landlords as a condition to delivering their certificates. Knowledgeable landlords provide in the lease that failure to execute estoppel certificates is an event of default by tenant. n233 The lease may appoint the landlord as attorney-in-fact to execute and deliver an estoppel certificate on behalf of a recalcitrant tenant.

§ 44.12(e) Subordination.

Foreclosure of a mortgage or deed of trust (both referred to herein as a "mortgage") terminates subordinate leases of the premises within the property encumbered by the mortgage. The leasehold estates of tenants are extinguished by the foreclosure. The mortgagee or other purchaser at the foreclosure sale will take title to the secured property free of subordinate leases. On the other hand, leases that are superior to the mortgage survive foreclosure. The mortgagee or other foreclosure sale purchaser remains liable to tenants under such leases for all obligations of the landlord that satisfy the requirements for covenants that run with the land.

A lease will be deemed subordinate to the mortgage in one of three circumstances: if the mortgage was properly recorded prior to execution of the lease, n234 if the lease contains a provision stating that it is automatically subordinate to a later recorded mortgage, or if the tenant executes a subordination agreement and delivers it to the mortgagee. n235

From the perspective of the secured party, the termination of subordinate leases may be a mixed blessing. On the one hand, the ability to rid the property of below-market-rent tenants may be essential to restoring the foreclosed property to economic viability. On the other hand, the last thing that a foreclosing lender needs is to wind up owning a commercial property without tenants.

Ideally, the landlord's mortgage lender would like the option to pick and choose among subordinate leases by naming as parties to the foreclosure, and thereafter evicting, only those tenants with below-market rental rates or that have other concessions that impact adversely on cash flow from the property. n236 By intentionally omitting to name tenants as parties to the foreclosure, the landlord's mortgage lender seeks to leave tenants with market-rent leases intact after the foreclosure dust settles.

Some courts have thwarted this attempt by manipulative mortgage lenders to have their cake and eat it too. Omitted subordinate lessees have been held to be entitled to elect whether to consider their leases terminated by the foreclosure or to recognize the purchaser at the foreclosure sale as their new landlord under the terms of the original lease. n237 Real estate-secured lenders must take steps, therefore, to assure themselves that valuable subordinate leases will remain in effect following foreclosure. n238

From the commercial tenant's perspective, the risk presented by subordination is catastrophic and unacceptable. Long-term tenants will be reluctant to make significant investments in leasehold improvements and advertising to develop goodwill if an event entirely beyond their control -- default by the landlord under the mortgage -- could result in the premature termination of the subordinate lease as a consequence of foreclosure.

Through a complex set of three agreements, which are typically combined into a single subordination, non-disturbance, and attornment agreement, it is possible to structure the relationship among tenant, landlord, and lender to meet the legitimate objectives of all parties. n239 Each aspect of this agreement is described separately below.

§ 44.12(e)(1) Subordination Agreement.

A lease is deemed to be subordinate to a mortgage if the lease was created after the mortgage was recorded. n240 If the mortgage was properly recorded in the public land records before the lease was executed, it is assumed that the tenant entered into the lease with notice that the lease will be subordinate. If, however, the lease had been executed prior to recordation of the mortgage, the lien of the mortgage would be junior to the estate of the tenant. n241

A lease that would otherwise be prior in interest to a mortgage by virtue of having been executed prior to recordation of the mortgage may nevertheless be made subordinate to a later recorded mortgage by the terms of a subordination agreement. n242 In this sense, a subordination agreement reverses the relative priorities between the tenant and mortgagee of the property.

The subordination agreement may be contained within the lease itself. It is typical for a commercial lease to provide that it shall be subordinate to any mortgage that may thereafter be placed upon the premises. A tenant who executes a lease containing such an agreement is assumed to be aware of the possibility that its leasehold estate will be subject to extinction by foreclosure of its landlord's mortgage. n243

§ 44.12(e)(2) Non-disturbance Agreement.

The tenant under a subordinate lease can obtain protection against the premature termination of its lease following the foreclosure of a mortgage encumbering the leased premises by requiring its landlord to obtain a non-disturbance agreement from any lender under a mortgage to which the lease is subordinate. n244 Under the terms of a non-disturbance agreement, the mortgagee agrees that, as long as tenant performs all of its obligations under the lease, the mortgagee will recognize the tenant's leasehold estate and the tenant may remain in possession of its premises for the duration of the lease term notwithstanding foreclosure of the landlord's mortgage. n245

§ 44.12(e)(3) Attornment Agreement.

Attornment refers to the agreement by a tenant to attorn to, or recognize, a successor in interest to the original landlord (typically, the real estate-secured lender or other purchaser at a foreclosure sale) as the tenant's new landlord, and to remain contractually bound by the terms of the original lease notwithstanding the new landlord's succession to the interest of the original landlord. n246

Lenders generally require that tenants agree that, after the mortgagee becomes owner of the leased premises following foreclosure or delivery of a deed in lieu of foreclosure, the mortgagee will not be liable to the tenant for lease defaults by the original landlord, be subject to any offsets or defenses that the tenant may have had against the original landlord, be responsible for rent concessions granted by the predecessor landlord, or be bound by the tenant's prepayment of rent for more than one month in advance.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 208. See § 44.12(a) of this chapter.

(n2)Footnote 209. Commercial leases will typically provide that successive breaches of the same type (e.g., if the tenant's records respecting gross sales for purposes of calculating percentage rent are erroneous on more than one occasion) are sufficient evidence of intentional misconduct by the tenant to constitute automatic default without provision for notice or cure. But see Jeffrey H. Newman, The Defaultless Lease, Real Est. Rev. 78, 80 (Fall 1989).

(n3)Footnote 210. William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property § 6.78 (3d ed. 2000).

(n4)Footnote 211. See Foundation Dev. Corp. v. Loehmann's, 788 P.2d 1189 (Ariz. 1990) (notwithstanding time of the essence clause in lease, delay of three days in paying common area maintenance charge held not to be a material breach of long-term commercial lease so as to permit forfeiture); Garland v. Titan West Assocs., 543 N.Y.S.2d 56 (App. Div. 1989) (cosmetic alterations, including installing light fixtures and wall coverings, replacing a vinyl floor, and removing two partitions, held not to constitute a material breach of lease clause prohibiting alterations by tenant without landlord's prior written consent).

(n5)Footnote 212. See Barraclough v. Atlantic Ref. Co., 326 A.2d 477, 489 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1974) (denying forfeiture where tenant defaulted on rental payment for two months because of clerical error 15 years into lease term).

(n6)Footnote 213. Smith v. Winn-Dixie Stores, Inc., 448 So. 2d 62 (Fla. Ct. App. 1984) (tenant's default constituted excusable neglect on account of the long-term nature of the lease, tenant's prompt willingness to cure its default, as evidenced by tender, and the size and complexity of tenant's corporate structure).

(n7)Footnote 214. See Bowman v. Drum, 389 S.E.2d 125 (N.C. Ct. App. 1990) (refusing to enjoin landlord's recovery of possession of space leased to child day care center that carried liability insurance in the amount of $300,000 in violation of lease requiring coverage of $500,000).

(n8)Footnote 215. The Restatement of Contracts requires the factfinder to consider the following factors:

> (a) the extent to which the injured party will be deprived of the benefit which he reasonably expected;
>
> (b) the extent to which damages will adequately compensate the injured party for the part of that benefit of which he will be deprived;
>
> (c) the extent to which the party failing to perform will suffer forfeiture;
>
> (d) the likelihood that the party failing to perform will cure his failure, taking account of all the circumstances including any reasonable assurances; and
>
> (e) the extent to which the behavior of the party failing to perform comports with standards of good faith and fair dealing.

Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 241 (1979).

(n9)Footnote 216. The Restatement of Property provides that if a tenant fails to perform a valid promise contained in the lease, the landlord may terminate the lease if he is deprived of a significant inducement to the making of the lease and if the tenant does not perform his promise within a reasonable time after being requested to do so. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant, § 13.1 (1977).

(n10)Footnote 217. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant, § 12.1, cmt. (g) and Reporter's Note at 423-424 (1977).

(n11)Footnote 218. See Sunset Fuel & Engineering Co. v. Compton, 775 P.2d 901 (Or. Ct. App. 1989) .

(n12)Footnote 219. See § 44.12(c) of this chapter.

(n13)Footnote 220. See Watson v. Brown, 686 P.2d 12 (Haw. 1984) .

(n14)Footnote 221. See Berg v. Wiley, 264 N.W.2d 145 (Minn. 1978) . Additional information about self-help is included in § 40.09, of chapter 40.

(n15)Footnote 222. For more discussion on the survival of the tenant's rent obligation following lease termination, see § 40.03(k) in this volume.

(n16)Footnote 223. Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord and Tenant § 12.1 comment i (1977). Comment g discusses the principal rules applicable to this situation, but it refers to comment i for elaboration on the mitigation requirement.

(n17)Footnote 224. Krasne v. Tedeschi and Grasso, 762 N.E.2d 841 (Mass. 2002) .

(n18)Footnote 225. Krasne v. Tedeschi and Grasso, 762 N.E.2d 841 (Mass. 2002) (footnote omitted).

(n19)Footnote 226. See, e.g., MRI Northwest Rentals Invs. I, Inc. v. Schnucks-Twenty-Five, Inc., 807 S.W.2d 531 (Mo. Ct. App. 1991) ; Holy Properties Ltd., L.P. v. Kenneth Cole Productions, Inc. 661 N.E.2d 694 (N.Y. 1995) ; Liberty Plan Co. v. Adwan, 370 P.2d 928 (Okla. 1962) ; Pennsylvania No. Stonehedge Square L. P. v. Movie Merchants, Inc., 685 A.2d 1019 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1996) , aff'd, 715 A.2d 1082 (Pa. 1998) .

Traditionally, if a tenant "wrongfully abandons leased premises before the expiration of the terms, the landlord may, at his election: (a) At once enter and terminate the contract and recover the rent due up to the time of abandonment; or (b) he may suffer the premises to remain vacant and sue on the contract for the entire rent; or (c) he may give notice to the tenant of his refusal to accept a surrender, when such notice can be given, and sublet the premises for the unexpired term for the benefit of the lessee to reduce his damages." Liberty Plan Co. v. Adwan, 370 P.2d 928, 930 (Okla. 1962) . Additional discussion of tenant abandonment may be found in § 40.11 of this volume.

(n20)Footnote 227. It is difficult to know.

> A recent survey published in Commercial Leasing Law & Strategy charted the law in all states-as well as the District of Columbia-on the duty to mitigate when a tenant abandons the property. The score was 21 "yes," 16 "no" and 14 "uncertain." The survey made no distinction between residential and commercial leases. While similar factors should apply, the courts in some states, like Pennsylvania, may favor mitigation only with residential tenants.
>
> At the time of the survey, Pennsylvania was listed in the "uncertain" column with a footnote stating, "Issue addressed only in dicta with inconsistent positions taken." Probably, Pennsylvania should now be moved into the "no" column.

Ominsky, Harris, Duties to Mitigate Vary State by State, National L.J., vol. 19, No. 34, B9 (April 21, 1997) (footnotes omitted).

The Restatement of Property offers the following rationale for its position against imposing a duty to mitigate damages: "Abandonment of property is an invitation to vandalism, and the law should not encourage such conduct by putting a duty of mitigation of damages on the landlord." Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant, § 12.1, cmt. (i) at 392 (1977). However, a persuasive argument could be made that the problem of vacancy inviting vandalism cuts in favor of a mitigation requirement to discourage landlords from allowing property to lie idle following abandonment by tenants.

(n21)Footnote 228. Consolidated AG of Curry, Inc. v. Rangen, Inc., 912 P.2d 115 (Idaho 1996) (duty to mitigate applies when tenant refuses to pay rent and abandons the premises); Bert Bidwell Inv. v. LaSalle & Schiffer, 797 P.2d 811 (Colo. Ct. App. 1990) ; S.N. Mart, Ltd. v. Maurice's Inc., 451 N.W.2d 259 (Neb. 1990) ; H.L. Grays v. Brooks, 561 N.Y.S.2d 515 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1990) ; United States Nat'l Bank of Or. v. Homeland, Inc., 631 P.2d 761 (Or. 1981) ; Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc.,948 S.W.2d 293 (Tex. 1997) (listing jurisdictions that have adopted a mitigation requirement).

(n22)Footnote 229. See Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc.,948 S.W.2d 293 (Tex. 1997) .

(n23)Footnote 230. Compare Sommer v. Kridel, 378 A.2d 767 (N.J. 1977) ("While generally in contract actions the breaching party has the burden of proving that damages are capable of mitigation, here the landlord will be in a better position to demonstrate whether he exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to re-let the premises.") with MAR-SON, Inc. v. Terwaho Enters., Inc., 259 N.W.2d 289 (N.D. 1977) (tenant must prove landlord acted unreasonably).

(n24)Footnote 231. See Note, 8 Seton Hall L. Rev. 736, 759-761 (1977). In a 1997 decision recognizing a duty of mitigation on the part of commercial landlords, the Texas Supreme Court stated: "We therefore recognize that a landlord has a duty to make reasonable efforts to mitigate damages when the tenant breaches the lease and abandons the property, unless the commercial landlord and tenant contract otherwise." Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc.,948 S.W.2d 293, 299 (Tex. 1997) . See also New Towne L.P. v. Pier 1 Imports (U.S.), Inc., 680 N.E.2d 644 (Ohio Ct. App. 1996) (enforcing lease term that negated duty to mitigate).

(n25)Footnote 232. A typical lease provision on the subject states as follows:

> Within ten days after request therefor by Owner, or in the event that upon any sale, assignment or hypothecation of the Leased Premises and/or the land thereunder by Owner, an estoppel certificate shall be required from Tenant, Tenant agrees to deliver in recordable form a certificate to any proposed mortgagee or purchaser, or to Owner, certifying (if such be the case) that Owner has completed construction of the Leased Premises, that this lease is in full force and effect, and that there are no defenses or offsets thereto (or stating those claimed by Tenant) and the dates, if any, to which any rent or charges have been paid in advance. Tenant shall also, upon request by Owner, deliver to Owner:
>
> > (i) such financial information concerning Tenant and/or any Guarantor hereof and their business operations as may be requested by any mortgagee, purchaser, prospective mortgagee or prospective purchaser of the fee of the Leased Premises (any financial information and any statement delivered pursuant thereto may be relied upon by any mortgagee, purchaser, prospective mortgagee or prospective purchaser of the fee of the Leased Premises); provided, however, that any such financial information and any such statement shall be utilized only for bona fide business reasons related to such mortgage and/or purchase; and
> >
> > (ii) an executed and acknowledged instrument amending this lease in such respects as may be required by any mortgagee or prospective mortgagee under any said first mortgage, provided that any such amendment shall not materially alter or impair any of the rights and remedies of Tenant under this lease.

(n26)Footnote 233. Intentional submission of false claims of landlord's default to landlord's mortgage lender has been held to constitute tortious interference with a contractual relationship, entitling the landlord to recover punitive damages. See John A. Henry & Co. v. T. G. & Y. Stores Co., 941 F.2d 1068 (10th Cir. 1991) .

(n27)Footnote 234. Lenders have argued unsuccessfully that the lien of their mortgages should have priority over leases that, although executed prior to acquisition by the lender of its security interest, were unrecorded, on the ground that the lender was without constructive notice of the tenant's leasehold estate. The standard judicial response to this argument has been that the tenant's possession and occupancy of the leased premises places the lender on inquiry notice of the tenant's interest in the property and charges the lender with knowledge of the lease's terms to the same extent as if the lease had been recorded among the public land records. See Ontiveros v. Mbank Houston, N.A., 751 F. Supp. 128 (S.D. Tex. 1990) .

(n28)Footnote 235. See § 44.12(e)(1) of this chapter.

(n29)Footnote 236. The mortgagee similarly may seek to selectively extinguish the subordinate lease of a tenant who has pre-paid substantial rent to the landlord/borrower.

(n30)Footnote 237. See Grant S. Nelson and Dale A. Whitman, Real Est. Fin. Law § 7.12 (3d ed. 1994).

(n31)Footnote 238. For the method by which this is accomplished see § 44.12(e)(3) of this chapter.

(n32)Footnote 239. See Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) .

(n33)Footnote 240. See Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Prods., Inc., 270 Cal. Rptr. 183 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n34)Footnote 241. See Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Prods., Inc., 270 Cal. Rptr. 183 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n35)Footnote 242. See Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Prods., Inc., 270 Cal. Rptr. 183 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n36)Footnote 243. T. D. Bickham Corp. v. Hebert, 432 So. 2d 228 (La. 1983) .

(n37)Footnote 244. It potentially makes a significant difference whether the landlord is required to obtain a non-disturbance agreement or merely obligated to use its "best efforts" to obtain a non-disturbance agreement.

(n38)Footnote 245. See Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) .

(n39)Footnote 246. See Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) . A typical lease provision on the subject states as follows:

> Tenant shall, in the event any proceedings are brought for the foreclosure of, or in the event of exercise of the power of sale under any mortgage made by Owner covering the Leased Premises, or upon the sale or other transfer of Owner's interest in this lease, attorn to the transferee upon any such foreclosure, sale or transfer and recognize such transferee as the Owner under this lease. Tenant further agrees upon request to execute and deliver a recordable instrument setting forth the provisions of this Section.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.13

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.13 Special Types of Commercial Leases and Their Related Issues.

§ 44.13(a) Ground Leases.

In many ways ground leasing bears a closer relationship to the fee purchase of real property than to the short-term commercial lease transaction considered elsewhere in this chapter. Indeed, the ground lease has traditionally been used to acquire the functional equivalent of fee simple ownership of property for development in situations in which an owner was reluctant to relinquish title to land that had been in the family for generations, or unwilling to incur the tax consequences of conveying the fee interest in property with a low basis.

The estate created by a ground lease is for a relatively long period. The typical ground lease extends for at least the term of the mortgage used to finance the tenant's development of the property; 99-year ground leases are not uncommon. The tenant pays all property taxes, utilities, insurance, and other costs of property ownership so that the rent is fully net to the landlord. Unlike a short-term lease in which the landlord's consent is required for such things as improvements, subleases, and changes in use, the tenant under a long-term ground lease generally has the same unqualified freedom with respect to the property as a fee simple owner. Because the tenant is the owner of the improvements, it is entitled to tax deductions for depreciation.

The most significant issues in ground leasing concern provisions enabling the tenant to obtain leasehold financing. In order to finance the construction of improvements on the property, the tenant requires the freedom to encumber its interest as collateral security. Considerable attention must be given in structuring the ground lease to anticipate and satisfy the predictable requirements of leasehold mortgage lenders.

Ideally, the lender would prefer that the landlord agree to subordinate its fee interest in the property. n247 Then, in the event of default and foreclosure, the lender would acquire fee simple title to the land and improvements, free of the ground lease. n248 Lenders offer more favorable economic terms for loans secured by subordinated ground leases, such as lower interest rates, longer terms, and higher loan-to-value ratios. This enables ground lessees in turn to offer higher rentals to landlords that are willing to subordinate.

A subordinated ground lease will seek to protect the landlord by imposing strict limitations on the maximum size of the loan, the interest rate, and the use of loan proceeds. Notice provisions afford the landlord the ability to protect the fee by alerting the landlord to the tenant's financial problems in sufficient time to terminate the lease, regain control of the property, and avert foreclosure by curing defaults under the leasehold mortgage.

Notwithstanding such protections, many ground lessors find subordination simply too risky to justify even in return for higher rent. n249 Lenders willing to make mortgage loans on the security of unsubordinated leasehold interests require provisions to protect against termination of the lease and extinction of the security for their loans in the event of a default by the tenant under the ground lease. Such provisions include lengthy notice and cure rights enabling the lender to discover the default in sufficient time to foreclose the mortgage, acquire the tenant's position under the lease, and remedy the default. Lenders then require the ability to enter into a new lease directly with the ground lessor for the balance of the lease term, on the same terms and conditions as the lease with the tenant. n250 A financeable unsubordinated ground lease will protect the lender against unlimited rental escalations tied to inflation in the event the lender takes over the tenant's leasehold interest following mortgage default and foreclosure. n251

§ 44.13(b) Sale and Leaseback Arrangements.

The sale and leaseback arrangement is a mortgage substitute. It is used to free capital invested in real property for more productive uses in the owner's business. n252 The owner of a parcel of real property sells it to a life insurance company or other investor for cash. The investor simultaneously leases the property back to the original owner under the terms of a long-term, net lease. Thus, the seller-tenant pays rent to the buyer-landlord and continues to operate the property as before. For federal income tax purposes, if the arrangement is structured properly, the buyer-landlord is entitled to depreciate the property, and the seller-tenant is entitled to deduct rent as an ordinary and necessary business expense.

The sale and leaseback offers several advantages over more traditional mortgage financing. From the tenant's perspective, rent payments should be fully deductible as compared with mortgage payments, which are deductible only with respect to the interest component. Also, the fair market value sale and leaseback may yield the seller more cash than mortgage financing because the investor may not be subject to institutional or regulatory lending limits. n253 For the investor, the ability to take depreciation deductions is the principal comparative advantage of the sale and leaseback over traditional mortgage financing.

The leasing aspects of the transaction are functionally identical to the long-term ground lease discussed above. n254 All costs for insurance, utilities, property taxes, and other operating expenses are paid by the tenant so that the rent is absolutely net to the investor. The tenant's interest closely resembles fee title, with minimal limitations on the tenant's freedom to use or improve the property, or to transfer or encumber its interest, including as collateral security for additional financing.

The Internal Revenue Service has sought to recharacterize sales and leasebacks as disguised mortgages, thereby denying the investor the tax benefits of the depreciation deduction. The Service has tended to focus its attack on sales and leasebacks on the existence of leasehold repurchase options as evidence that investors possessed none of the risks or benefits of owners of real property as a matter of economic reality. n255 Such attacks are more likely to be successful if the repurchase price is fixed in advance at an amount equal to the original selling price rather than fair market value determined by appraisal at the time of exercise of the repurchase option.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 247. Care must be taken in properly documenting the transaction in order to accomplish a valid subordination of the landlord's reversion in the fee simple estate. For example, one court has held that an attempted subordination was ineffective because the landlord had not formally executed the mortgage. The landlord's promise to subordinate was not sufficient to subject its fee to the mortgage lien. See Old Stone Capital Corp. v. John Hoene Implement Corp., 647 F. Supp. 916 (D. Idaho 1986) .

(n2)Footnote 248. The landlord should be expected to execute the mortgage only for the limited purpose of effectuating the valid subordination of the fee. The landlord should not assume or agree to perform any of the covenants of the mortgage or deed of trust, including without limitation the promise to repay the secured debt. It should go without saying that the landlord should not be required to sign the promissory note evidencing the debt.

(n3)Footnote 249. It should be understood that the lessor under a long-term, net ground lease has effectively given up a real estate investment in return for what is essentially a fixed-return investment, comparable to a bond. Ground leases thus tend to attract the most risk-averse investors.

(n4)Footnote 250. Martin Kobren, Three Perspectives on Ground Lease Negotiations, 19 Real Est. L.J. 40, 56-57 (1990).

(n5)Footnote 251. Wallace Boothby, Jr., The Ground Swell in Ground Leasing, Real Est. Rev. 94, 96 (Winter 1980):

> As a general rule, it is extremely dangerous, from a financing point of view, to seek to vary the minimum rent according to an inflation indicator like the Consumer Price Index... The lessee whose rentals are tied to such an escalator may find great difficulty in obtaining a leasehold mortgage. A lender that wishes to underwrite a leasehold mortgage must try to determine what the rental and other charges that are payable pursuant to the ground lease will be. Unless the rental is firmly fixed in an amount certain for the entire period of the leasehold mortgage, it is possible that the mortgagee may decide that the risk of inflationary cost increases is so great that it is reluctant to make a commitment.

(n6)Footnote 252. Marvin Milich, The Real Estate Sale-Leaseback Transaction: A View Toward the 90s, 21 Real Est. L.J. 66, 67-68 (1992).

(n7)Footnote 253. Marvin Milich, The Real Estate Sale-Leaseback Transaction: A View Toward the 90s, 21 Real Est. L.J. 66, 67-68 (1992):

> By obtaining 100 percent financing of the property, the seller-lessee can realize a greater amount of that needed working capital than would be possible in a conventional mortgage, in which typically lenders and/or applicable law rarely allow the loan-to-value ratio to exceed 75 percent to 80 percent of the property's true market value.

(n8)Footnote 254. See § 44.13(a) of this chapter.

(n9)Footnote 255. See, e.g., Frank Lyon Co. v. United States, 435 U.S. 561 (1978) (rejecting attempt by Service to recharacterize a sale-leaseback as a financing transaction based on such highly individual facts and circumstances as the potential for economic risk and benefit on the part of the buyer/landlord, and the existence of a tax-independent business purpose for entering into the transaction).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.14

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.14 Shopping Center Leases.

Although shopping center leasing involves most of the same legal issues and techniques discussed previously in this chapter, the context is considered separately because of its complexity n256 and enormous contemporary social significance. n257

§ 44.14(a) Shopping Center Layout.

The success of a shopping center is measured by the dollar volume generated by all tenants (but particularly the non-anchor or so-called "satellite tenants" for reasons discussed below), and is a function of the frequency with which shoppers visit the center combined with the duration of average visit. Shopping center developers truly believe that the things they do to design and continuously update the design of their properties, n258 to create the proper mix of retail merchants, n259 and even to control the emotions of customers, n260 all contribute directly both to the frequency of visits and also to the length of time spent per visit. n261 The location of anchor tenants in relation to specialty shops is strategically designed to maximize customer traffic flow through the mall. n262

§ 44.14(a)(1) Key or Anchor Tenants.

Established supermarkets and major pharmacies are the indispensable magnets that draw shoppers from the immediate vicinity to the neighborhood shopping center on a weekly basis to purchase grocery, drugstore, and other convenience items, and to take advantage of the services of dry cleaners, barbers, shoe repairers, and cinemas. Self-service general merchandisers, such as K-mart and Wal-Mart, anchor the discount shopping centers that have become increasingly successful in recent years. Major department stores draw shoppers from surrounding communities to regional shopping centers. n263 It is the promise of such shoppers that in turn attracts smaller stores to lease space in the center, n264 and institutional lenders to finance the development of the center.

Use of the term "anchor tenant" may be inappropriate because the anchor may not be a tenant. It is common for the department store anchors to own the parcels underlying their stores either in fee simple or pursuant to the terms of favorable long-term ground leases. Accordingly, anchor stores do not contribute directly to profit for the shopping center developer to the same extent as the higher rents per square foot paid by the satellite tenants that are attracted to the center by their presence. n265 Operation of the respective parcels owned by the anchors and the mall developer is integrated pursuant to a complex reciprocal set of operating covenants and easements. n266

§ 44.14(a)(2) Satellite Tenants.

Clustered around the anchor tenants and dependent upon their drawing power are the smaller satellite tenants offering retail merchandise and services. Satellite tenants will offer merchandise and services in a price range and at a level of quality (e.g., fashion, discount, etc.) that are consistent with the anchors. n267 Early regional shopping centers usually had a department store at each end to stimulate shopping traffic past the smaller retailers located in between. Stores selling similar lines of merchandise tend to be located as far apart as possible to encourage comparison shopping traffic back and forth throughout the center in the hope of stimulating impulse purchases.

In order to satisfy the underwriting requirements of the institutional lender providing permanent financing for the shopping center, the lion's share of satellite space must be occupied by high credit national chain retailers with established track records. This explains why shopping centers in all regions of the country closely resemble one another.

§ 44.14(b) Use Restrictions.

Restrictions on the use of the demised premises in commercial leases have been discussed previously. n268 Such restrictions are common in the shopping center context. The shopping center landlord's objectives in drafting a restrictive use provision include:

-- Honoring leases granting to existing tenants of the center exclusive privileges to engage in particular types of operations; n269

-- Preserving flexibility in leasing other space in the center by limiting the lines of business in which the tenant may compete with future tenants; and

-- Seeking to achieve synergy through an optimal tenant mix, n270 and to influence shopper traffic patterns through the location of each store in relation to others, the key tenants, and the layout of the entire property.

§ 44.14(c) Easements and Appurtenances.

Harmonious integration of the separate parcels owned by shopping center anchor tenants and the developer is accomplished by a comprehensive reciprocal set of covenants and easements that is recorded among the land records and governs all aspects of the operation of the center. Among its provisions are covenants running with the land requiring that all improvements be compatible as to exterior architectural decor and signage; that each owner construct and maintain sufficient parking to achieve a prescribed parking ratio, together with appropriate lighting facilities, driveways, walkways, perimeter roads, sidewalks, curbs, truck loading docks and landscaping; that their respective portions of common electrical, telephone, water, gas, drainage, sewer and other utility lines be maintained in good operating condition and repair; that all stores be open for business, and customer ingress and egress, during standard operating hours; and that anchor tenants affirmatively covenant to operate full-line stores continuously under their established trade names and merchandising policies for a specified period of time.

A reciprocal series of easements granted by and to each owner allows for the use in common by each owner, and their respective employees and customers of the parking lots, driveways, perimeter roads, walkways, and other common areas, and assures the unrestricted flow of traffic by foot and vehicle among the parcels. Easements of support may be necessary if a building or portion thereof depends for its foundation on another parcel.

§ 44.14(d) Shopping Center Common Areas.

The reciprocal operating and easement agreement described above will limit the areas where buildings may be constructed by each party on its respective parcel, and the extent to which a building may be expanded. The remaining areas within the shopping center are available for common use by all tenants, their employees and customers. The common areas include the parking areas, malls, roadways, sidewalks, landscaped areas, loading docks, and the like.

The description of the leased premises in each space tenant's lease should make reference to the common areas described on the site plan exhibit, and expressly grant the tenant a non-exclusive easement to use the common areas for itself, its employees, customers, and suppliers. n271

The shopping center developer and anchor tenants are each responsible for the maintenance of the shopping center common areas located on their respective parcels, including paving, cleaning, snow removal, lighting of parking areas, security, and maintenance of common reciprocal utility easements. Alternatively, the shopping center developer may be responsible for common area maintenance, with each owner of a parcel contributing a proportionate share of the costs.

Although the landlord is likely to retain flexibility with respect to use of the common areas, the tenant should seek protection against the location of kiosks or other obstructions in the vicinity of the leased premises, as well as a requirement that demonstrations that may tend to block visibility or impede access by shoppers be restricted to other areas of the center. n272

§ 44.14(e) Covenants Against Competition.

A provision prohibiting the landlord from permitting space in the remainder of the shopping center to be used by any third party in the same line of business as the tenant is in partial restraint of trade. Nevertheless, the covenant against competition will be enforced if it is sufficiently limited in geographic area and type of business covered, and if it is not perceived as having been designed to prevent competition with any particular competitor. n273 An exclusivity clause will be invalidated only when the court finds that alternative sites in the relevant geographic market are unavailable, that a site within the shopping center in question is the only place from which a third party could effectively compete in the market, and that the exclusion of a competitor from the center would have a significant anti-competitive impact given the total competition extant in the relevant market. n274

A clause granting the tenant an exclusive right to sell a particular type of merchandise in the center will contain an exception for supermarket, department store, and full-line chain drug store anchor tenants that tend to require the right to sell anything they desire.

An exclusive use clause may be enforced not only against the landlord for damages and injunctive relief, but also against another tenant selling the same items with knowledge of the restriction in the original tenant's lease. n275

More broadly, the tenant should consider negotiating for a restriction against the landlord leasing space in the center (or at least in the vicinity of the tenant) for categories of uses that would be inconsistent with the tenant's business operation (e.g., pool hall, video arcades, and adult bookstores), and other uses that would be likely to monopolize available parking spaces for long periods of time without generating business for other tenants of the center. n276

§ 44.14(f) Operating Covenants.

§ 44.14(f)(1) Express.

As noted above, n277 the anchor tenant has a critical impact on the shopping center's success in obtaining financing, attracting satellite tenants, and insuring the financial viability of the center by generating the necessary volume of customer traffic. n278 Accordingly, the anchor tenant's lease will typically include an express covenant that the tenant will occupy the premises and thereafter continuously operate during prescribed business hours. Leases with satellite tenants generally require that they operate during all hours that the anchor tenants are open for business. Because chain stores tend to have the bargaining clout to resist such provisions, a customary compromise position is to limit the duration of the express operating covenant to, for example, the first five years of the term.

Express operating covenants will often go into great detail by requiring that the tenant operate for a minimum number of hours per week, adequately stock the premises, employ sufficient labor, advertise, and take such other steps as are reasonably required to promote business activities at the premises. n279

The continuous operating clause is likely to provide for exceptions due to causes beyond the tenant's reasonable control (e.g., strikes, weather, and casualties), during periods of major repairs and alterations, during closures by the anchor tenant(s), and designated holidays. n280

Because the landlord's damages for breach will be difficult to calculate with precision, enforcement of express operating covenants is problematic. n281 An agreement to pay a fixed sum as liquidated damages is enforceable when it bears some reasonable relation to what the parties at the time the lease was drafted could have reasonably forecast as the damages that would be suffered by the landlord, regardless of the landlord's actual damages. n282 The landlord will claim that breach of an express operating covenant causes irreparable injury because each tenant is carefully selected for its unique contribution to the total tenant mix. n283 Nevertheless, judicial reluctance to become involved in the business of managing a shopping center is likely to prevent most courts from specifically enforcing continuous operating covenants. n284

§ 44.14(f)(2) Implied.

Whether or not the tenant occupies its space makes little or no difference to the office building or warehouse landlord. For the shopping center landlord, however, it is critical that all tenants remain open for business during normal shopping hours, and continuously offer their goods or services throughout the term of their respective leases. Faced with supermarket chain anchors and other key tenants "going dark" (i.e., closing low-volume stores rather than operating at a loss, but continuing to pay minimum annual base rent to avoid default), shopping center landlords have besieged courts in many jurisdictions to require tenants to occupy and operate their premises for the purpose described in the use clause without interruption throughout the lease term.

Absent an express covenant of continuous operation, a successful action to enforce an implied covenant to use and operate requires substantial evidence of the landlord's economic interest in the tenant's continuous active operation of the premises beyond the mere payment of fixed monthly rent. n285 For example, if there is no minimum base rental, or if the minimum rental is nominal, a covenant of continuous operation may be implied. n286 Otherwise, courts have consistently refused landlords' invitations to construe the typical restrictive use clause as an affirmative covenant requiring the tenant to continuously occupy the premises throughout the lease term, or to conduct any particular business from the leased premises without interruption in order to generate percentage rent, n287 or to refrain from diverting business from the demised premises by opening a competing location in the vicinity. n288

§ 44.14(f)(3) Radius Clause.

Radius clauses are of two types. The first is the landlord's agreement that none of the property owned by the landlord within the specified radius of the tenant's premises will be occupied during the term of the lease by any other store that carries the same line of merchandise or renders the same services as the tenant. Although it is intended to protect the tenant if the landlord incorporates adjacent land into the center during the lease term and attempts to introduce competing users into the expansion space, n289 its application is broader. n290 Assuming that the lease so provides, a radius clause that is reasonable in terms of its duration and extent is binding on the landlord's successors and assigns (including a mortgagee in the event of foreclosure), and enforceable by the tenant's transferees. n291

The second category of radius clauses involves the tenant's duty to refrain from opening another retail operation within a specified distance from the center. Such a clause is a necessary corollary to the percentage rent clause in that the tenant is prevented from opening a site so close to the shopping center that it would necessarily divert customers from the center and thereby reduce the percentage rent that would otherwise be payable.

Courts will enforce such clauses by injunctive relief when they are perceived as being no broader in terms of time and distance than necessary to protect the landlord's enjoyment of the benefits of the lease and the interest of other tenants of the center in the flow of traffic to their stores. n292 Because of the difficulty in establishing how much income the landlord lost by reason of a tenant's breach of the radius clause, the lease may provide, as liquidated damages, that sales by the tenant at other operations within the prescribed radius shall be deemed to have occurred at the leased premises for purposes of calculating percentage rent.

The antitrust implications of radius clauses in commercial leases have been explored in several court decisions and scholarly publications. The consensus of these authorities appears to be that such clauses, while not per se violations of the antitrust laws, are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis of such factors as the duration and geographic area of the restrictions, and whether the beneficiary of the restrictions already enjoys such a dominant position in the market as to evidence an anticompetitive effect or purpose. n293 Because such clauses are at least partial restraints of trade, they will be strictly construed. n294

§ 44.14(g) Merchants' Association.

The merchants' association is a cooperative organization established by the shopping center to provide advertising and promotional events designed to generate increased sales for the benefit of the center as a whole. n295 Although the landlord attempts to require all tenants to become dues-paying members of the merchants' association, the department stores and other anchor tenants often use their negotiating clout to gain exemption from participation. n296 Dues levels for tenants typically vary by size or sales volume. Knowledgeable tenants bargain for a cap on the maximum contribution requirement. n297 The association typically has its own corporate entity, and is governed by a committee (often consisting of a representative of the landlord, participating anchor tenants, and smaller tenants) that determines the level of assessments necessary to support its marketing activities. The lease may also impose minimum advertising requirements on tenants, in addition to required membership in the merchants' association. n298

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 256.

> Space leases must be structured with care, for the shopping center is a complex organism and depends for its health on the deft coordination of use clauses, covenants not to compete and percentage rent clauses as well as reciprocal operating covenants tying the anchor stores into the life of the center.

Paul Goldstein & Gerald Korngold, Real Est. Transactions 952 (3d ed. 1993).

(n2)Footnote 257. Daniel L. Feldman, The Logic of American Government 98-99 (1990).

> American suburban life has changed over the past few decades. The shopping mall has arisen, quite visibly, as a new physical and social institution. In 1950 there were fewer than 100 in the United States; by 1985 there were 25,000. This has had some real and potentially enormous impact on the exercise of First Amendment rights by those without the funds necessary to engage in paid advertising. To a significant extent, these malls have replaced the downtown or "Main Street" commercial business districts, where leafleters could cheaply and effectively communicate their message to the public.

(n3)Footnote 258. See, e.g., Gary Hinsche, Reviving a Shopping Center to Attract Customers, J. of Prop. Mgt. 14

(September/October 1987).

(n4)Footnote 259. There is considerable art involved in striking the proper balance between avoiding duplication, while still providing the consumer the opportunity for comparative shopping. Because the developer's leases call for percentage rent to be paid based on individual store volumes, the developer's success in this regard greatly influences the total income it will derive from the center.

(n5)Footnote 260. William S. Kowinski, The Malling of America 359 (1985).

(n6)Footnote 261. Early industry studies showed that the average shopper went to the center for one item and returned home, spending less than one-half hour per visit. Later research demonstrated that people spend an average of 1-11/2 hours per visit. The difference in length of visit data reflect changed consumer habits that developers attribute in part to the broad range of activities provided by the center (e.g., blood pressure and cholesterol testing, flower and antique shows, meet-the-candidates nights, and the like). See Lynn N. Woodward, Modern Shopping Center Design: Psychology Made Concrete, Real Est. Rev. 52 (Summer 1978).

(n7)Footnote 262. See Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Associated Dry Goods Corp., 786 F. Supp. 1403, 1413 (N.D. Ind. 1992) .

(n8)Footnote 263. The West Edmonton Mall in Edmonton, Alberta is the largest mall in North America, with 800 stores, 110 restaurants, 21 theaters,, a five-acre water park, man-made lake complete with anchored replica of the Santa Maria, 18-hole miniature golf course and 354-room hotel, all spread over 5.3 million square feet. See http://www.westedmall.com/home/default.asp. The largest U.S. shopping mall, at least in total area, is the Mall of America in Bloomington, Minnesota, a suburb of Minneapolis. Built on 4.2 million square feet, it contains 520 stores and the largest indoor amusement park in the nation. See http://www.easternct.edu/depts/amerst/MallsWorld.htm and http://www.mallofamerica.com. As of 2006, the world's largest shopping mall was the South China Mall, located in Dongguan, China, with 9.6-million square feet and 1500 stores. See http://www.easternct.edu/depts/amerst/MallsWorld.htm

(n9)Footnote 264. Indeed, the addition of another anchor tenant may be the occasion for escalation of the fixed minimum annual rental payable by satellite tenants. See § 44.04(c)(3) of this chapter. Conversely, the closure by an anchor tenant, or the destruction of an anchor tenant's premises by fire or other casualty, or the condemnation of an anchor tenant's premises, if not replaced by a comparable customer attraction within a reasonable period of time, may constitute grounds for termination of the lease at a satellite tenant's option. See, e.g., Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Associated Dry Goods Corp., 786 F. Supp. 1403, 1412 (N.D. Ind. 1992) .

> However, just as legitimate is the landlord's need to keep up the appearance of a fully leased, viable retail complex when negotiating with a new anchor tenant or draw. For the most part, the landlord's concern will override the tenant's and termination rights will not be granted in such circumstances, although a rent concession may be.

Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 25.

(n10)Footnote 265. Because the satellite tenants tend to generate a higher volume of sales per square foot than the anchors, they also yield higher percentage rentals.

(n11)Footnote 266. See § 44.14(c) of this chapter.

(n12)Footnote 267. Bankruptcy Reform: Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Courts of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Shopping Center Tenancy Amendments, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 381-91 (1983) (statement of Nathan B. Feinstein), quoted in In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 135 B.R. 941 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1991) :

> Consider a shopping center such as the Water Tower Shopping Center in Chicago, Illinois, which has as its anchor stores a Marshall Fields Department Store and a Lord & Taylor Department Store. The character of that shopping center is established by those stores as a "high-end' shopping center, attractive to smaller boutiques, relatively expensive men's clothing stores, fashion shoe stores and similar uses. Depending upon the character of the anchor stores, the other tenants have entered into long-term leases.

Bankruptcy Reform: Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Courts of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Shopping Center Tenancy Amendments, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 381-91 (1983) (statement of Nathan B. Feinstein), quoted in In re Federated Dep't Stores, Inc., 135 B.R. 941 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 1991) .

(n13)Footnote 268. See § 44.03 of this chapter.

(n14)Footnote 269. Although not per se unlawful, leasehold "exclusive" clauses are subject to challenge by both government and private parties under state and federal antitrust laws as constituting an unreasonable restraint of trade. See, e.g., Recetas Por Menos, Inc. v. Five Development Corp., 368 F. Supp. 2d 124 (D. P.R. 2005) ; Child World, Inc. v. South Towne Centre, Ltd., 634 F. Supp. 1121 (S.D. Ohio 1986) ; Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assocs., 472 F. Supp. 665 (N.D. N.Y. 1979) ; Hibbett Sporting Goods, Inc. v. Biernbaum, 391 So. 2d 1027 (Ala. 1980) ; Winrock Enters. v. House of Fabrics of N.M., 579 P.2d 787 (N.M. 1978) ; Adrienne J. Marsh, The Federal Antitrust Laws and Radius Clauses in Shopping Center Leases, 32 Hastings L.J. 839 (1981); Alan M. DiSciullo, Geographic and Product Markets for Radius Clauses Under the Rule of Reason, 19 Real Est. L.J. 121 (1990).

(n15)Footnote 270. Tenants need not accept this rationale uncritically. See, e.g., .Emanuel B. Halper, Can You Find a Fair Lease?, 14 Real Est. L.J. 99, 114 (1985).

> Some landlords claim that the selection of tenants for a shopping center and the types of businesses that will be conducted in a shopping center is an advanced science. These landlords claim that they choose tenants on the basis of the quality and kinds of merchandise the tenants sell and that the choice [known in the trade as the "tenant mix'] is the main ingredient to success in the shopping center business. I'm less than enthusiastic when asked to endorse these claims. I'm convinced that some landlords actually try to do this. But the pattern I see most often is that landlords lease vacant space to somebody who's willing to pay rent, and, if more than one merchant is interested, the space is usually leased to the merchant who's willing to pay a higher rate of rent.

(n16)Footnote 271. See § 44.02(a) of this chapter.

(n17)Footnote 272. Under the First Amendment of the United States Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Lloyd Corp. v. Tanner, 407 U.S. 551 (1972) , shopping centers may enforce a uniform, content-neutral policy excluding petitioning, distribution of leaflets, and other forms of free speech activities of a political nature. A minority of states interpret the freedom of speech rights granted under their own constitutions more expansively to require that shopping center owners allow free speech activities on their premises. See, e.g., Pruneyard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74 (1980) (rejecting shopping center owner's arguments that such interpretation of the California Constitution effected a taking of property without due process); New Jersey Coalition Against War in the Middle East v. J.M.B. Realty Corp., 650 A.2d 757 (N.J. 1994) , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 812 (1995) (discussing the cases; stating that New Jersey constitutional protections are broader than those under the federal constitution); cf. United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 919, AFL-CIO v. United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 919, AFL-CIO v. Crystal Mall Associate, L.P., 852 A.2d 659 (Conn. 2004) (discussing the cases; emphasizing state action requirement). Even in states that protect free speech activities in this context, shopping center owners are permitted to impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on speech. See, e.g., Westside Sane/Freeze v. Ernest W. Hahn, 274 Cal. Rptr. 51 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990) .

(n18)Footnote 273. See Parkside Center, Ltd. v. Chicagoland Vending, Inc., 552 S.E.2d 557 (Ga. Ct. App. 2001) ; Hibbett Sporting Goods, Inc. v. Biernbaum, 391 So. 2d 1027 (Ala. 1980) .

(n19)Footnote 274. See Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assocs., 472 F. Supp. 665 (N.D. N.Y. 1979) (upholding clause providing that landlord would not rent space in enclosed regional mall to another optical store unless center was expanded to include a third department store).

(n20)Footnote 275. Won's Cards, Inc. v. Samsondale/Haverstraw Equities, Ltd., 566 N.Y.S.2d 412 (App. Div. 1991) .

(n21)Footnote 276. Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 25.

(n22)Footnote 277. See § 44.14(a)(1) of this chapter.

(n23)Footnote 278. Leases with satellite tenants are often dependent upon the anchor tenant's remaining in business. As noted previously, failure by the anchor to continuously occupy its space may constitute an event of default by the landlord, entitling satellite tenants to cancel their leases. See § 44.14(a)(1) of this chapter.

(n24)Footnote 279. A typical lease clause on the subject provides as follows:

> Tenant shall continuously and uninterruptedly use, occupy and operate all of the Leased Premises during the entire term of this lease for the use(s) permitted herein with due diligence and efficiency and in a high grade and reputable manner so as to produce all of the Gross Sales which may be produced by such manner of operation, unless prevented from doing so by causes beyond Tenant's control. Subject to inability by reason of strikes or labor disputes, Tenant shall provide adequate personnel and shall carry at all times in said premises a full and complete stock of seasonable merchandise of such size, character and quality as shall be reasonably designed to produce the maximum return to Owner. Tenant shall conduct its business in the Leased Premises during the regular customary days and hours for such type of business in the city or trade area in which the Shopping Center is located and will keep the Leased Premises open for business during the same days, nights and hours as the majority of the department stores located in the Shopping Center are open and for such further days and hours as may be designated by Owner from time to time. Tenant shall install and maintain at all times displays of merchandise in the display windows (if any) of the Leased Premises. Tenant shall keep the display windows and the signs on the Leased Premises well lighted during the hours from 9:00 A.M. to 10:00 P.M., unless prevented by causes beyond the control of Tenant. Tenant shall not, during business hours, lock, barricade or otherwise prevent access into the Leased Premises through any door opening onto the mall or sidewalk adjacent to the Leased Premises. If Tenant fails to keep the Leased Premises open each and every business day during the hours specified herein or to operate 100% of the Leased Premises, or to adequately stock or staff the Leased Premises, then Tenant shall pay as minimum rent an amount equal to double the minimum rent provided for in Article II hereof calculated for each and every day that the Leased Premises are not open or are not fully operated or in which such hours are not maintained. Said amount represents the agreed liquidated damages to Owner, as the exact amount of damages to Owner cannot be ascertained with certainty.

(n25)Footnote 280. Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 24.

(n26)Footnote 281. But see Hornwood v. Smith's Food King No. 1, 772 P.2d 1284 (Nev. 1989) (reversing lower court refusal to award damages for anchor tenant's breach of lease by ceasing operations, and remanding with instructions to determine and award landlord damages measured by the difference in value of the shopping center with anchor tenant lease and without, plus attorney fees and costs provided under terms of lease to the prevailing party).

(n27)Footnote 282. See W & G Seafood Assoc. v. Eastern Shore Mkts., 714 F. Supp. 1336 (D. Del. 1989) .

(n28)Footnote 283. 2 Richard R. Powell et al., Powell on Real Property § 257[3] 1992.

(n29)Footnote 284. See 800 Assoc. v. Wearguard Corp., 737 F. Supp. 44 (E.D. Mich. 1990) ; Lorch, Inc. v. Bessemer Mall Shopping Ctr., Inc., 310 So. 2d 872 (Ala. 1975) (citing the knowledge, skill and judgment involved in selecting and investing in inventory, selecting, training and compensating personnel, and innumerable other day-to-day business decisions as grounds for denial of specific performance); CBL Assoc., Inc. v. McCrory Corp., 761 F. Supp. 807 (M.D. Ga. 1991) ; New Park Forest Assoc. II v. Rogers Enters., 552 N.E.2d 1215 (Ill. Ct. App. 1990) (noting the numerous detailed leasehold provisions for hours, signs, displays, painting, common areas, and other operational requirements, including one requiring the operation of the premises for the sale and repair of "better quality" jewelry); Security Builders v. Southwest Drug Co., 147 So. 2d 635 (Miss. 1962) ; Price v. Herman, 81 N.Y.S.2d 361 (Sup. Ct. 1948) , aff'd, 87 N.Y.S.2d 221 (App. Div. 1949) ; Grossman v. Wegman's Food Mkts., Inc., 350 N.Y.S.2d 484 (App. Div. 1973) ; Summit Towne Centre, Inc. v. Shoe Show of Rocky Mount, Inc., 828 A.2d 995 (Pa. 2003) .

But see Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Associated Dry Goods Corp., 786 F. Supp. 1403 (N.D. Ind. 1992) ("Courts ordinarily do not enter injunctions that will require the court's long-term involvement, but frequent court involvement is unlikely in light of the Scottsdale Ayres store's eighteen-year history and the defendant's interest in its stores' reputation."); Lincoln Tower Corp. v. Richter's Jewelry Co., 12 So. 2d 452 (Fla. 1943) ; Dover Shopping Ctr., Inc. v. Cushman's Sons, 164 A.2d 785 (N.J. Ct. App. 1960) (landlord waived any judicial supervision with respect to the method of operating the business or the quality of the products sold, stating it would rely solely on tenant's self-interest in maintaining a good business reputation).

(n30)Footnote 285. See First Am. Bank & Trust v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 729 P.2d 938 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1986) ; M.H. Stein v. Spainhour, 521 N.E.2d 641 (Ill. Ct. App. 1988) ; Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Associated Dry Goods Corp., 786 F. Supp. 1403 (N.D. Ind. 1992) ; Slidell Inv. Co., Inc. v. City Prod. Corp., 202 So. 2d 323 (La. Ct. App. 1967) ; Hornwood v. Smith's Food King No. 1, 772 P.2d 1284 (Nev. 1989) ; Ingannamorte v. Kings Super Mkts., Inc., 260 A.2d 841 (N.J. 1970) ; Slater v. Pearle Vision Ctr., Inc., 546 A.2d 676 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1988) .

(n31)Footnote 286. See, e.g., East Broadway Corp. v. Taco Bell Corp., 542 N.W.2d 816 (Iowa 1996) (base rent insubstantial compared to percentage rent); Mercury Inv. Co. v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 706 P.2d 523 (Okla. 1985) .

(n32)Footnote 287. See College Block v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 254 Cal. Rptr. 179 (Cal. Ct. App. 1988) (remanding for further factual determination trial court's "premature" ruling that a covenant of continuous operation should be implied as a matter of law where service station lease provided for monthly minimum base rent of $1,000). See also Rothe v. Revco D.S., Inc., 148 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 1998) ; Allen v. Nash-Finch Co., 927 F.2d 420 (8th Cir. 1991) ; Hamilton West Development, Ltd. v. Hills Stores Co., 959 F. Supp. 434 (N.D. Ohio 1997) ; Center Dev. Venture v. Kinney Shoe Corp., 757 F. Supp. 34 (E.D. Wis. 1991) ; Evans v. Grand Union Co., 759 F. Supp. 818 (M.D. Ga. 1990) ; Congressional Amusement Corp. v. Weltman, 55 A.2d 95 (D.C. 1947) ; Piggly Wiggly Sourthern, Inc. v. Heard, 405 S.E.2d 478 (Ga. 1991) ; DPLM, Ltd. v. J.H. Harvey Co., 526 S.E.2d 409 (Ga. Ct. App. 1999) ; Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Southland Corp., 443 N.E.2d 294 (Ill. Ct. App. 1982) ; Gerardi v. Vaal, 523 N.E.2d 1327 (Ill. Ct. App. 1988) ; Casa D'Angelo, Inc. v. A & R Realty Co., 553 N.E.2d 515 (Ind. Ct. App. 1990) ; Burns & Schaffer Amusement Co. v. Conover, 168 A. 304 (N.J. 1933) ; Dickey v. Philadelphia Minit-Man Corp., 105 A.2d 580 (Pa. 1954) ; Baron Bros. v. National Bank, 155 N.W.2d 300 (S.D. 1968) ; Kroger Co. v. Chemical Sec. Co., 526 S.W.2d 468 (Tenn. 1975) ; Weil v. Ann Lewis Shops, 281 S.W.2d 651 (Tex. Ct. App. 1955) ; Nalle v. Taco Bell Corp., 914 S.W.2d 685 (Tex. Ct. App. 1996) ; Davis v. Wickline, 135 S.E.2d 812 (Va. 1964) ; Bradlees Tidewater, Inc. v. Walnut Hill Inv., Inc., 391 S.E.2d 304 (Va. 1990) ; Thompson-Development Inc. v. Kroger Co., 413 S.E.2d 137 (W. Va. 1991) .

(n33)Footnote 288. See, e.g., Kauder, Klotz & Venitt v. Rose's Stores, Inc., 359 F. Supp. 1280 (E.D. N.C. 1973) .

Downtown Assocs., v. Burrows Bros. Co., 518 N.E.2d 564 (Ohio Ct. App. 1986) .

(n34)Footnote 289. This phenomenon is quite common because developers tend to "stage" construction of the shopping center to avoid the problem of building a larger project than the area can support in the early years. The center expands in phases as the market grows and the institutional lender becomes increasingly comfortable with the project.

(n35)Footnote 290. See, e.g., Child World, Inc. v. South Towne Centre, Ltd., 634 F. Supp. 1121 (S.D. Ohio 1986) (federal and state antitrust laws do not prevent issuance of injunction to enforce six-mile radius restriction in toy retailer's lease against landlord's sale of property one-half mile from the leased premises to Toys "R' Us, the largest toy supermarket retailer in the United States).

(n36)Footnote 291. Some controversy exists over whether a restrictive covenant against competing businesses "touches and concerns" the land to support the common law requirement for a burden to run with the land. See, e.g., Whitinsville Plaza, Inc. v. Kotseas, 390 N.E.2d 243 (Mass. 1979) . However, courts of equity will enforce, as an equitable servitude, a radius restriction that the original parties intended to bind their successors in interest, so long as the party to be charged had notice of the covenant. The purchaser or mortgagee of the landlord's interest in a shopping center should be charged with inquiry or constructive notice of the terms of tenant leases.

(n37)Footnote 292. See Winrock Inn Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 928 P.2d 947 (N.M. Ct. App. 1996) . An attempt to restrict the tenant from operating the type of business conducted at the demised premises within a two-block radius of the premises for one year following expiration of the lease was held to be unenforceable. See American Nat'l Bank & Trust of Chicago v. Tufano, 584 N.E.2d 400 (Ill. Ct. App. 1991) .

(n38)Footnote 293. See, e.g., Harold Friedman, Inc. v. Thorofare Mkts., Inc., 587 F.2d 127 (3d Cir. 1978) ; Dunafon v. Delaware McDonald's Corp., 691 F. Supp. 1232 (W.D. Mo. 1988) ; Drabbant Enters. v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 688 F. Supp. 1567 (D. Del. 1988) ; National Super Mkts., Inc. v. Magna Trust Co., 570 N.E.2d 1191 (Ill. Ct. App. 1991) ; Alan M. DiSciullo, Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective, 18 Real Est. L.J. 27, 30 (1989).

(n39)Footnote 294. See, e.g., Marriott Corp. v. Combined Props. Ltd. Pt'ship, 391 S.E.2d 313 (Va. 1990) (covenant in lease to Marriott for operation of a Hot Shoppes Restaurant prohibiting drive-in restaurant within 2000 feet of demised premises was not violated by lease to McDonald's for operation of fast food restaurant).

(n40)Footnote 295. In some shopping centers the merchants' association may take on additional responsibilities, such as determining the required hours of operation, and regulating employee parking.

(n41)Footnote 296. Anchor tenants argue persuasively that their very presence and reputation serve as the functional equivalent of advertising for the center and satellite tenants, and that shoppers drawn into the center by the anchor's own print and broadcast media advertising will patronize the satellites.

(n42)Footnote 297. "If the tenant does a lot of its own advertising, it may be able to obtain a corresponding discount for the merchants' association fees or the advertising fund contributions." Kenneth L. Samuelson, The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For, Legal Times, Apr. 7, 1986, at 23.

(n43)Footnote 298. A typical lease provision on the subject states as follows:

> Tenant agrees to advertise, with a display type advertisement of a size not less than one-quarter page of tabloid section or one-eighth page of full section in the printed media or on television or radio up to eight (8) times during each calendar year in conjunction with events sponsored by Owner. Tenant understands that this covenant is a material consideration to Owner and agrees that in the event that Tenant shall fail or refuse to comply with such minimum advertising requirements, Tenant will pay to the Owner an amount equal to the cost of one-quarter page tabloid section advertisement in such printed media for each time or times, up to a maximum of eight (8) per fiscal year, which Tenant shall have failed or refused to advertise as provided herein, such amount to be payable to Owner upon demand and to be considered as Additional Rent for the purpose of this lease. In the event that Tenant shall continuously fail or refuse to comply with such minimum advertising requirements, Owner shall be entitled to terminate this lease.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 44.15

AUTHOR: Professor Alan M. Weinberger School of Law Saint Louis University

§ 44.15 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Gaudio, Arthur R. American Law of Real Property § 5.07. New York: Matthew Bender, 1992.

Browdy, Joseph E. "Rent, Escalations and Other Economic Terms of a Lease." In Commercial Leases. Philadelphia: ALI-ABA, 1991.

Dukeminier, Jesse and James E. Krier. Property. 3rd ed. Boston: Little, Brown and Co., 1993.

Feldman, Daniel L. The Logic of American Government: Applying the Constitution to the Contemporary World. New York: Morrow, 1990.

Friedman, Milton R. Friedman on Leases. 3d ed. NYC: Practising Law Institute, 1990.

Goldstein, Paul and Gerald Korngold. Real Estate Transactions. 3d ed. Foundation Press, 1993.

Halper, Emanuel B. Shopping Center and Store Leases. Rev. ed. New York: Law Journal Seminars, 1991.

Hellmuth, Theodore H. Missouri Practice -- Real Estate Law. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1985.

Johnson, Sandra H. et al., Property Law: Cases, Materials and Problems. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1992.

Kowinski, William S. The Malling of America. New York: Morrow, 1985.

Kratovil, Robert. Modern Real Estate Documentation. Edgewood Cliffs: Prentice Hall, Inc., 1975.

Nelson, Grant S. and Dale A. Whitman. Real Estate Finance Law. 3d ed. St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1994.

Powell, Richard R. and Patrick J. Rohen. Powell on Real Property. § 257[3]. NYC: Matthew Bender, 1992.

Restatement (Second) of Property, Landlord & Tenant §§ 12.1, 12.5, 13.1, 14.8, 15.2, 16.1 St. Paul: West Publishing Co., 1977.

Stoebuck, William B. & Whitman, Dale A., The Law of Property. 3d ed. St. Paul: West Group. 2000.

Articles

Adler, Barry. "A Moving Experience: Acquiring Good, Affordable Office Space Can Provide a New Lease on Life." A.B.A. J. Vol. 81 (February 1995) 87.

Arnold, Alvin L. & Tracht, Marshall E. "Leases: Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment." Real Estate L. Rep. Vol. 26, No. 5 (1996) 4.

Arnold, Diane. "Causes of Action Against Commercial Lessor for Refusing Consent to Assignment or Sublease." 29 Causes of Action 337 (2001).

Ashauer-Miler, Rena. Note, "Dependent Covenants and Commercial Leases After Barton v. Tsern: Rhetoric of Reform Claims an Easy Victory in Utah" Utah L. Rev. 1997 (1997) 807.

Barth, Stephen; Bastian, Andrea. "Defining Hospitality Entities in Contracts and Statutes: A Proactive and Preventative Aproach." Golden Gate U.L. Rev. Vol. 33 (Spring 2003) 105.

Boothby, Wallace, Jr. "The Ground Swell in Ground Leasing." Real Estate Review Vol. 9, No. 4 (1980) 94.

Brown, Jeffrey N. "Use Provisions in Commercial Leases," 28 L.A. Law. 21 (Jan., 2006).

Carbone, Michael P. "Negotiating a Letter of Intent for an Anchor Store." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (May 1995) 85.

Casenote. "Brown v. Green and Hadian v. Schwartz: Determining Who Is Responsible for Major Structural Repairs in Commercial Leases." Pac. L.J. Vol. 28 (1997) 417.

Chupack, Edward A. "Lease Renewals: What Your Mother Never Told You (with Forms)." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (September 1995) 41.

Cohen, I. Aaron. "Advice for Landlords and Tenants on Percentage Rent," Prac. Real Est. Law Vol. 5 (1989) 13.

Coyne, Thomas J. "The CPI and Escalator Clauses in Commercial Leases: Additional Considerations," Real Estate Review Vol. 19 (1989) 21.

Victoria Eve De Ganon, "Playing the Leasing Numbers Game: A Tenant's Analysis of Rent, Escalation, and Operating Expense Provisions," 21 Real Estate L.J. 239 (Winter 1993).

DiSciullo, Alan M. "Geographic and Product Markets for Radius Clauses Under the Rule of Reason." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 19 (1990) 121.

DiSciullo, Alan M. "Negotiating a Commercial Lease from the Tenant's Perspective." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 18 (1989) 27.

Di Sciullo, Alan M. "When Disaster Strikes Will Your Lease Survive?" Prob. & Prop. Vol. 9 (July/August 1995) 34.

Fisher, Morton P., Jr. "The Ritual Dance Between Lessee and Lender Subordination, Nondisturbance, and Attornment." Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 30 (Fall 1995) 355.

Gilson, David M. "Mixing Up Operating Costs in Those Mixed-Use Projects." Washington Lawyer Vol. 2, No. 3 (1988) 12.

Gilson, David M. "The CPI Clause -- Read It Carefully." Washington Lawyer Vol. 1 (1987) 24.

Gluck, Neil N. and Ray B. Gliner. "Negotiating Expansion Rights in Multi-Tenant Projects." Real Estate Finance Vol. 9 (1992) 59.

Goldman, Gary. "Drafting a Fair Right of First Offer Lease Option (with Form)." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (January 1995) 79.

Goldman, Gary. "How to Draft a Fair Office Downsizing Option (with Forms)." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 10 (July 1994) 47.

Goldman, Gary. "How to Draft a Fair Office Relocation Clause." Prac. Real Est. Law Vol. 6 (1990) 49.

Goldman, Gary. "Uniform Commercial Landlord and Tenant Act - A Proposal to Reform "Law Out of Context," 19 T.M. Cooley L. Rev. 175 (2002).

Goldstein, Michael R. & Joseph D. Richards. "Environmental Liabilities in Commercial Leasing: Perspectives in Litigation, Drafting and Tenant Management." Fla. B.J. Vol. 69 (January 1995) 64.

Goschka, Gladys, and Frederick Melamed, "Contract Law II: A Uniform Leasing Law at Last." Mich. B.J. Vol. 76 (1997) 1200.

Goschka, Gladys, and Frederick Melamed, "Contract Law II: A Uniform Leasing Law at Last." Mich. B.J. Vol. 76 (1997) 1200.

Gray, Robert W. "The Applicability of Constructive Eviction, Implied Warranty of Habitability, Common-Law Fraud, and the Consumer Fraud Act to Omissions of Material Facts in a Commercial Lease," 38 J. Marshall L. Rev. 1289 (Summer 2005).

Hagan, Robert K. "How to Draft CPI Escalators in Leases (with Form)." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (July 1995) 27.

Halper, Emanuel B. "Can You Find a Fair Lease." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 14 (1985) 99.

Hinsche, Gary. "Reviving a Shopping Center to Attract Customers." Journal of Property Management Vol. 52 (1987) 14.

Johnson, Alex M. "Correctly Interpreting Long-Term Leases Pursuant to Modern Contract Law: Toward a Theory of Relational Leases." Va. L. Rev. Vol. 74 (1988) 751.

Hollyfield, John S. "Negotiating Tenant Allowances in Office Leases." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (March 1995).

Kaplan, David E. and Robert J. Gage. "Hold That Line," Washington Lawyer Vol. 6 (1992) 34.

Kaster, Lewis R. "Tax and Securities Implications of Tenant Equity Participations." Real Estate Review Vol. 19, No. 1 (1989) 36.

Kobren, Martin. "Three Perspectives on Ground Lease Negotiations." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 19 (1990) 40.

Lieberman, Gary A. "Assignment and Subletting: When May an Owner Withhold Consent." Real Estate Finance Vol. 6 (1990) 33.

Lucero, Orlando, "The Nuts and Bolts of Commercial Lease Listing Agreements", Probate and Property, July/August (2000) 7.

Marsh, Adrienne J. "The Federal Antitrust Laws and Radius Clauses in Shopping Center Leases." Hastings L.J. Vol. 32 (1981) 839.

Mastroianni, Francis N. "Caveat Lessor: Courts' Unwillingness to Find Implied Covenants of Continuous Use in Commercial Real Estate Leases." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 25 (Winter 1996) 236.

Milich, Marvin. "The Real Estate Sale-Leaseback Transaction: A View Toward the 90s." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 21 (1992) 66.

Myster, Susan E. "Protecting Landlord Control of Transfers: The Status of 'Sole Discretion' Clauses in California Commercial Leases." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 35 (Summer 1995) 845.

Newman, Jeffrey H. "Common Area Costs -- The Hidden Rent." Real Estate Review Vol. 19, No. 4 (1990) 65.

Newman, Jeffrey H. "The Defaultless Lease." Real Estate Review Vol. 19, No. 3 (1989) 78.

Note. "Better Late than Never: Texas Landlords Owe a Duty to Mitigate Damages When a Tenant Abandons Leased Property: Austin Hill Country Realty, Inc. v. Palisades Plaza, Inc., 40 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 228 (Jan. 10, 1997)." Tex. Tech L. Rev. Vol. 28 (1997) 1281.

Offenkrantz, Ronald J. "The Warning from Pittsburgh's Golden Triangle: Home of the Steelers, the Pirates and the Amorphous Favored Nation Clause in the Commercial Lease." Fordham Urb. L.J. Vol. 23 (Fall 1995) 69.

Rahm, David A. "Escalation Clauses in Urban Office Leases." Real Estate Review Vol. 12 (1982) 55.

Rudisill, Cathy M. "A Primer on Commercial Leases." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (November 1995) 43.

Ruggiero, Todd D. Note, "Brown v. Green and Hadian v. Schwartz: Determining Who Is Responsible for Major Structural Repairs in Commercial Leases." Pac. L. J. 28 (Winter, 1997) 417.

Samuelson, Kenneth L. "The Retail Lease: What to Look For, Bargain For." Legal Times Vol. 8, No. 43 (1986) 23.

Saltz, Sidney G. "Allocation of Insurable Risks in Commercial Leases," 37 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 479 (Fall, 2002).

"The Unwarranted Implication of a Warranty of Fitness in Commercial Leases -- An Alternative Approach." Vand. L. Rev. Vol. 41 (1988) 1057.

Theurer, Kenneth Michael. "Sharing the Risk of CERCLA Clean-Up Costs." 7 Envtl. Law 477 (2001).

Viola, Joseph, Jr. "Alternate Structures for Rental Abatements." Real Estate Finance. Vol. 6 (1990) 27.

Weddle, Paul J. "Reasonable Withholding of Consent to Commercial Lease Assignments." Willamette L. Rev. Vol. 31 (Summer 1995) 713.

Wheeler, Thomas M. "Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a tenant's Personal Property." Tex. Wesleyan L. Rev. 3 (Spring 1997) 283.

Whelan, Gabrielle P. "The 'Public Access' Provisions of Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act: A Guide for Commercial Landlords and Tenants." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 34 (January 1994) 215.

Whelan, Thomas, M. "Enforcement of Commercial Leases: Evictions and Dealing with a Tenant's Personal Property." Tex. Wesleyan L. Rev. Vol. 3 (1997) 283 (extensive discussion).

Woodward, Lynn N. "Modern Shopping Center Design: Psychology Made Concrete," Real Estate Review. Vol. 8, No. 2 (1978) 52.

Zimmerman, Bruce G. "Shopping Center 'Deal Making Documents' Revisited." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 12 (January 1996) 45.

Annotations

Annotation, Applicability of Exculpatory Clause in Lease to Lessee's Damages Resulting from Defective Original Design or Construction, 30 A.L.R. 4TH 971.

Annotation, Application of Statute of Limitations (42 U.S.C..A. 9613(g)(2)) in Action Under 107 of Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) (42 U.S.C.A. 9607) for Recovery of Costs for Removal or Remedial Action 142 A.L.R. Fed. 115.

Annotation, Breach of Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment in Lease, 41 A.L.R. 2d 1414.

Annotation, Calculation of Rental Under Commercial Percentage Lease, 58 A.L.R. 3d 384.

Annotation, Circumstances Excusing Lessee's Failure to Give Timely Notice of Exercise of Option to Renew or Extend Lease, 27 A.L.R. 4TH 266.

Annotation, Commercial Leases: Application of the Rule that Lease May be Canceled Only for 'Material Breach,' 54 A.L.R. 4TH 595.

Annotation, Common-Law Strict Liability in Tort of Prior Landowner or Lessee to Subsequent Owner for Contamination of Land with Hazardous Waste Resulting from Prior Owner's or Lessee's Abnormally Dangerous or Ultrahazardous Activity, 13 A.L.R. 5TH 600.

Annotation, Construction and Application of Provision in Lease Under Which Landlord is to Receive Percentage of Lessee's Profits or Receipts, 38 A.L.R. 2d 1113.

Annotation, Construction and Effect of Provision in Lease that Consent to Subletting or Assignment Will Not Be Arbitrarily or Unreasonably Withheld, 54 A.L.R. 3d 679.

Annotation, Implied Duty of Oil and Gas Lessee to Protect Against Drainage, 18 A.L.R. 4TH 14.

Annotation, Implied Warranty of Fitness or Suitability in Commerical LeasesModern Status, 76 A.L.R. 4TH 928.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Constructive Eviction Based on Flooding, Dampness, or the Like, 33 A.L.R.3d 1356.

Annotation, Landlord and Tenant: Respective Rights in Excess Rent When Landlord Relets at Higher Rent During Lessee's Term, 50 A.L.R. 4TH 403.

Annotation, Landlord's Duty, on Tenant's Failure to Occupy, or Abandonment of, Premises, to Mitigate Damages by Accepting or Procuring Another Tenant, 75 A.L.R. 5TH 1.

Annotation, Landlord's Liability for Personal Injury or Death of Tenant or His Privies From Plumbing System or Equipment, 84 A.L.R. 2d 1143.

Annotation, Merger or Consolidation of Corporate Lessee as Breach of Clause in Lease Prohibiting, Conditioning, or Restricting Assignment of Sublease, 39 A.L.R. 4TH 879.

Annotation, Modern Status of Rules as to Existence of Implied Warranty of Habitability or Fitness for Use of Leased Premises, 40 A.L.R. 3d 646.

Annotation, Negligence, Inattention, or Professional Incompetence of Attorney in Handling Client's Affairs in Matters Involving Real Estate Transactions as Ground for Disciplinary Action --Modern Cases, 65 A.L.R. 4TH 24.

Annotation, Provision in Lease as to Purpose for which Premises Are to be Used as Excluding Other Uses, 86 A.L.R. 4TH 259.

Annotation, Punitive Damages for Interference with Contract or Business Relationship, 44 A.L.R. 4TH 1078.

Annotation, Right of Landlord Legally Entitled to Possession to Dispossess Tenant Without Legal Process, 6 A.L.R. 3d 177.

Annotation, Right to Exercise Option to Renew or Extend Lease as Affected by Tenant's Breach of Other Covenants or Conditions, 23 A.L.R. 4TH 908.

Annotation, Shopping Center Lease Restrictions on Type of Business Conducted by Tenant, 1 A.L.R. 4TH 941.

Annotation, Sufficiency as to Method of Giving Oral or Written Notice Exercising Option to Renew or Extend Lease, 24 A.L.R. 4TH 903.

Annotation, Sufficiency of Provision of Lease to Effect Second or Perpetual Right of Renewal, 29 A.L.R. 4TH 172.

Annotation, Validity of Exculpatory Clause in Lease Exempting Lessor From Liability, 49 A.L.R. 3d 321.

Annotation, What Constitutes Abandonment of Residential or Commercial LeaseModern Cases, 84 A.L.R. 4TH 183.

Annotation, What Constitutes Timely Notice of Exercise of Option to Renew or Extend Lease, 29 A.L.R. 4TH 956.

Annotation, What is 'Shopping Center' Within Meaning of Bankruptcy Code Provision Governing Assumption and

Assignment of Debtor's Leases by Bankruptcy Trustee (11 U.S.C.S. 365(b)(3)), 117 A.L.R. FED. 321.

Annotation, When Lessor May Withhold Consent Under Unqualified Provision in Lease Prohibiting Assignment or Subletting of Lease Premises Without Lessor's Consent, 21 A.L.R. 4TH 188.

Annotation, Who, as between Landlord and Tenant, must make, or Bear Expense of, Alterations, Improvements, or Repairs Ordered by Public Authorities, 22 A.L.R. 3d 521.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 44.04

Supp. to § 44.04 Rental Clauses.

[Go To Main]

§ 44.04(a) Fixed Rent Clause. [Go To Main]

Add:

Brunswick Ltd. Partnership v. Feudo, 870 N.E.2d 804 (Ohio App. 2007) (a provision of the commercial lease imposing double rent during a holdover tenancy was an enforceable liquidated damages provision).

§ 44.04(b) Percentage Rent Clause. [Go To Main]

Add:

Giessow Restaurants, Inc. v. Richmond Restaurants, Inc., 232 S.W.2d 576 (Mo. App. 2007) (the commercial lease agreement did not contain an implied covenant of continuous business activity).

CHANGE Giessow Restaurants, Inc. v. Richmond Restaurants, Inc., 232 S.W.2d 576 (Mo. App. 2007) TO Giessow Rests., Inc. v. Richmond Rests., Inc., 232 S.W.3d 576 (Mo. App. 2007).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 44.05

Supp. to § 44.05 Taxes.

[Go To Main]

§ 44.05(a) Real Estate Taxes Defined. [Go To Main] in the second sentence of the second paragraph on the page:

CHANGE cotesting TO contesting.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 44.07

Supp. to § 44.07 Maintenance and Repair.

[Go To Main]

[Go To Main]

§ 44.07(b)(3) Retaliatory Eviction.

Add:

See also Nelson v. Johnson, 778 N.W.2d 773 (N.D. 2010) .

§ 44.07(c) Implied Warranty of Suitability. [Go To Main]

Add:

at the end of the Gym-N-I citation

aff'd, 220 S.W.3d 905 (Tex. 2007) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 44.12

Supp. to § 44.12 Default and Related Issues.

[Go To Main]

§ 44.12(a) Materiality of the Breach [Go To Main]

Add:

Gardner v. Ebeneezer, 190 N.C. App. 432, 660 S.E.2d 172 (N.C. App. 2008) (commercial lease terminated when tenants failed to pay rent within ten days after demand).

§ 44.12(c) Landlord's Duty to Mitigate. [Go To Main] in the second sentence of the first paragraph on the page:

CHANGE "cause of action in favor the tenant" TO "cause of action in favor of the tenant".

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 44 COMMERCIAL LEASING

5-44 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 44.15

Supp. to § 44.15 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Articles

Add the following:

Bogart, Daniel B. "Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Commercial Leasing: The Right Doctrine in the Wrong Transaction," 41 J. Marshall L. Rev. 275 (Winter 2008).

McKinney, Jerald Clifford II. "Are You Trying to Imply Something?: Understanding the Various State Approaches to Implied Covenants of Continuous Operation in Commercial Leases," 31 U. Ark. Little Rock L. Rev. 427 (Spring 2009).

Meier, Scott W. "Issues to Consider in Drafting of Commercial Leases," 31 Wyo Law. 24 (Apr. 2008).

Smeltzer, Natalie. "Freedom to Contract in Texas-Enforceability of An 'As Is' Clause in a Commercial Lease: Gym-N-I Playgrounds, Inc. v. Snider," 61 SMU L. Rev. 509 (Spring 2008).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 45.syn

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.syn Synopsis to Chapter 45: PUBLIC HOUSING

§ 45.01 What Is Public Housing?

§ 45.02 Outline of Chapter.

§ 45.03 Historical Background.

§ 45.04 The Public Housing Authority.

§ 45.04(a) Introduction.

§ 45.04(b) State Enabling Legislation.

§ 45.04(b)(1) California.

§ 45.04(b)(2) Illinois.

§ 45.04(b)(3) Louisiana.

§ 45.04(b)(4) New York.

§ 45.04(c) Composition of the Public Housing Authority's Governing Body.

§ 45.05 Development and Financing of Public Housing.

§ 45.05(a) In General.

§ 45.05(b) Local Cooperation.

§ 45.05(c) Contributions Contract Between HUD and the Public Housing Authority.

§ 45.05(d) Turnkey Development.

§ 45.05(e) Mixed-Finance Public Housing.

§ 45.06 Public Housing Accountability and Management.

§ 45.06(a) Introduction.

§ 45.06(b) Plans.

§ 45.06(c) Assessment of Performance.

§ 45.06(d) Housing Project Management.

§ 45.07 Tenant Eligibility and Selection.

§ 45.07(a) Introduction.

§ 45.07(b) Family and Income Eligibility.

§ 45.07(c) Income Targeting, Mixing, and Deconcentration.

§ 45.07(d) Local Preferences.

§ 45.07(e) Written Admission Policies and HUD Regulations.

§ 45.07(f) Undesirable Public Housing Applicants.

§ 45.07(f)(1) Background.

§ 45.07(f)(2) Commission of Criminal Activities that Adversely Affect other Residents.

§ 45.07(f)(3) Commission of Drug Crimes.

§ 45.07(f)(4) Drug Users and Alcohol Abusers.

§ 45.07(f)(5) Sex Offenders.

§ 45.07(g) Protections for Crime Victims.

§ 45.07(h) Procedures Relating to Eligibility Determinations and Admission.

§ 45.07(h)(1) Background.

§ 45.07(h)(2) Legislation.

§ 45.07(h)(3) Regulations.

§ 45.07(h)(4) Cases on Procedural Issues.

§ 45.08 The Public Housing Lease.

§ 45.08(a) Introduction.

§ 45.08(b) Due Process and the Public Housing Lease.

§ 45.08(b)(1) Background Developments.

§ 45.08(b)(2) Escalera.

§ 45.08(b)(3) Other Cases.

§ 45.08(c) Legislation and Regulations Relating to Lease Provisions.

§ 45.08(c)(1) Introduction.

§ 45.08(c)(2) Grievance Procedures.

§ 45.08(c)(3) Other Public Housing Lease Provisions.

§ 45.08(d) The Nature of a Public Housing Lease.

§ 45.09 Public Housing Rent.

§ 45.09(a) Introduction.

§ 45.09(b) Types of Rent.

§ 45.09(b)(1) Flat Rent.

§ 45.09(b)(2) Income-Based Rent.

§ 45.09(b)(3) Minimum Rent.

§ 45.09(c) Rent and Change in Tenant Circumstances.

§ 45.09(d) Rent Adjustments.

§ 45.09(e) Rent Challenges.

§ 45.10 Utilities: Charges, Surcharges, and Allowances.

§ 45.10(a) Introduction.

§ 45.10(b) Payment by Residents.

§ 45.10(c) Payment by the Public Housing Authority.

§ 45.10(d) Conversion to Individual Metering.

§ 45.10(e) Establishment of Allowances.

§ 45.10(f) Litigation Relating to Utilities.

§ 45.11 Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy.

§ 45.11(a) Introduction.

§ 45.11(b) Justifications for Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy.

§ 45.11(c) Procedures for Terminating a Tenancy.

§ 45.11(d) Eviction and Tenancy Termination Cases.

§ 45.11(e) Illegal Drugs, the "One-Strike" Rule, and Tenant Eviction.

§ 45.12 Restricting Individuals from Visiting Public Housing Projects.

§ 45.12(a) Introduction.

§ 45.12(b) Prior Approval Requirements.

§ 45.12(c) No-Trespass Policies.

§ 45.12(d) Stipulations Restricting Visits By Non-Desirable Family Members.

§ 45.13 Sweeps.

§ 45.14 Housing Quality.

§ 45.14(a) Introduction.

§ 45.14(b) Legislation and Regulations.

§ 45.14(c) Applicability of the Implied Warranty of Habitability.

§ 45.15 Community Service and Economic Self-Sufficiency Requirements.

§ 45.16 Tenant Displacement from Public Housing.

§ 45.16(a) Introduction.

§ 45.16(b) Damage to the Housing Unit.

§ 45.16(c) Demolition.

§ 45.16(c)(1) Statutory Provisions.

§ 45.16(c)(2) De Facto Demolition.

§ 45.16(c)(3) Consolidation.

§ 45.16(d) Sale or Transfer of the Housing Project.

§ 45.17 Tenant Purchase of Dwelling Units.

§ 45.18 Conversion to a Voucher Program.

§ 45.19 Pets.

§ 45.20 Liability of the Public Housing Authority.

§ 45.20(a) Introduction.

§ 45.20(b) Tort Liability.

§ 45.20(c) Contract Liability.

§ 45.20(d) Liability Based Upon Breach of a Statutory Obligation.

§ 45.21 HUD Liability.

§ 45.22 Other Federal Housing Programs that Benefit Low-Income Families.

§ 45.22(a) Section 221(d)(3) and Section 236.

§ 45.22(b) Section 202.

§ 45.22(c) Section 811.

§ 45.22(d) Section 8.

§ 45.22(d)(1) Project-Based Assistance.

§ 45.22(d)(2) Tenant-Based Assistance.

§ 45.22(d)(2)(i) Certificates and Vouchers.

§ 45.22(e) Section 515.

§ 45.22(f) Low Income Housing Tax Credit.

§ 45.23 Bibliography.

N. Gregory Smith
G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law
Louisiana State University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.01

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.01 What Is Public Housing?

A good place to begin this chapter is with a definitional question: what is public housing? Many individuals and families reside in housing that might be viewed as public housing from one perspective or another. For example, if one considers public housing to be housing that is owned by a governmental entity, one might include dormitory rooms on the campus of a state university and various forms of military housing owned by the military services of the United States. One might even consider prison and jail accommodations to be a form of public housing.

Another perspective on public housing might focus on government subsidies, and consider public housing to be housing that receives some form of subsidy from a governmental entity. But "some form of subsidy" might be broad enough to cover housing units whose owners deduct mortgage loan interest payments on their tax returns. If that type of housing were considered to be public housing, most housing in the United States would probably qualify.

Usually, however, when one thinks of public housing, one thinks of housing in which the tenants are low-income individuals and the landlord is the government. The traditional model for this type of housing involves a state-chartered public housing authority that owns or operates the housing. In the typical situation, the public housing authority receives federal financial assistance and is subject to the significant constraints of federal legislation and federal regulation.

The principal focus of this chapter will be on traditional public housing, including the federal statutory and regulatory provisions under which it is operated. There are low-income housing programs that do not receive federal funds. n1 They would not be subject to the United States Housing Act and related federal regulations that are discussed in this chapter. There are also a number of other federally sponsored housing programs, including programs that provide housing subsidies for low-income families who reside in privately owned dwelling units, that are not within the scope of traditional public housing. n2 A section of this chapter provides some information about some of these federal programs, n3 but a complete discussion of them is beyond the scope of this chapter.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. A website sponsored by the New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal states that "New York's Public Housing Law of 1939 launched the country's first state-subsidized public housing program." http://www.dhcr.state.ny.us/ohm/progs/public/ohmprgpu.htm. The website states that some of this housing has now been "federalized," but other housing units remain "under State Supervision." See id. It should be noted, however, that state-funded low-income housing could be subject to some federal legislation. See, e.g., Andover Housing Authority v. Shkolnik, 820 N.E.2d 815 (Mass. 2005) (Court refers to public housing for elderly and disabled persons as "state-assisted," but it analyzes the plaintiff's housing-related discrimination claims in light of, among other things, the provisions of the federal Fair Housing Act).

(n2)Footnote 2. The difficulty of precisely defining public housing is suggested in some language in the United States Housing Act:

> The term "public housing" means low-income housing, and all necessary appurtenances thereto, assisted under this chapter other than under section 1437f of this title. The term "public housing" includes dwelling units in a mixed finance project that are assisted by a public housing agency with capital or operating assistance. When used in reference to public housing, the term "low-income housing project" or "project" means (A) housing developed, acquired, or assisted by a public housing agency under this chapter, and (B) the improvement of any such housing.

42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)(1). A "mixed finance project" could be owned by a private entity. See § 45.05(e) of this chapter. Section 1437f focuses on "low income housing assistance" rather than public housing as such. It provides for tenant-based assistance, such as vouchers, and project-based assistance to private owners of dwelling units.

A HUD regulation offers this definition: "Public housing means housing assisted under the 1937 Act, other than under Section 8." 24 C.F.R. § 5.100 (italics in original). Section 8 housing programs are briefly discussed in § 45.22 of this chapter.

(n3)Footnote 3. See § 45.22 of this chapter.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.02

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.02 Outline of Chapter.

This chapter is principally concerned with legal issues relating to traditional public housing, in which a state-chartered public housing authority is the landlord and low-income residents are the tenants. n4 It begins, in § 45.03, with some history--the history of federally assisted public housing in the United States. Then, in § 45.04, it discusses the public housing authority itself, including its nature, composition, and powers. Examples of state enabling legislation are discussed by way of illustration.

Financing and development issues related to the activities of public housing authorities are discussed in § 45.05. That section also considers related issues of cooperation between public housing authorities and units of local government, and contributions contracts between public housing authorities and the federal government.

Issues of accountability and management are considered in § 45.06, including federally imposed planning requirements, federal assessment of performance, and changes in housing project management.

Section 45.07 is concerned with tenant eligibility and selection. Standards of income eligibility as well as other eligibility standards are discussed, including standards related to criminal activity and substance abuse. Procedural issues relating to tenant eligibility and admission to public housing are also considered.

The public housing lease is quite different, in many respects, from traditional residential leases. Section 45.08 considers the public housing lease. Due process issues are relevant here, and they are discussed in the early part of the section. Legislation and regulations related to public housing leases are also considered, including legislation and regulations relating to tenant grievance procedures and the content of public housing leases.

Affordable rent is an important matter to most tenants, but it is especially critical to low-income tenants. Section 45.09 considers different types of public housing rental structures and statutory and regulatory provisions that relate to them.

Charges for utilities are also important to public housing tenants, and there are statutes and regulations that relate to them as well. Section 45.10 discusses legal rules and issues related to the provision of utility services to public housing tenants.

As with other aspects of the landlord-tenant relationship, the matter of tenancy termination is highly regulated in the public housing context. Public housing tenancies are not terminable at the will of the landlord at the end of the "term." Tenants in public housing can be evicted, but only for good cause. However, some public housing tenancies have been terminated based on the conduct of family members. These, and related issues, are discussed in § 45.11.

To reduce criminal activity in public housing projects, some public housing authorities have engaged in efforts to restrict undesirable visitors. Legal issues related to such restrictions are discussed in § 45.12. Crime-reduction has also been behind the "sweeps" in public housing that are discussed in § 45.13.

The revolution in conventional landlord-tenant law has resulted in implied warranties of habitability and other rules relating to housing quality. Housing quality issues have also been a concern in the public housing context, and a number of statutory and regulatory provisions relate to the matter. Housing quality issues are discussed in § 45.14.

Federal legislation and regulation have imposed community service and economic self-sufficiency requirements on many public housing residents. Those requirements are discussed in § 45.15.

Section 45.16 discusses legal issues related to tenant displacement from public housing, whether the displacement comes as a result of damage to a public housing unit, the demolition of a building, or the sale of all or part of a public housing project.

Federal legislation and regulations include provisions for tenant purchase of public housing units. They also include provisions relating to the conversion of existing public housing tenancies into voucher-based tenancies that permit low-income tenants to have more flexibility in the rental housing marketplace. Legal issues relating to these matters are discussed in §§ 45.17 and 45.18.

There are some federally adopted rules relating to pets in public housing. They are briefly considered in § 45.19.

Public housing authorities and the Department of Housing and Urban Development have sometimes been defendants in cases arising out public housing disputes. Issues relating to their potential liability are discussed in § 45.20.

Section 45.22 includes some information about federally sponsored housing programs other than traditional public housing. One of the programs mentioned there is the Section 8 voucher program.

The final section of the chapter, § 45.23, is a bibliography.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 4. For additional discussion of "traditional public housing," see § 45.01 of this chapter.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.03

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.03 Historical Background.

The federal government has provided funding for construction of low-income housing since the mid-1930s. This was the Depression era, a time when many Americans who had not been poor, now were. There were vacant apartments, but many of the poor could not afford them. n5 In an effort to alleviate the problem, New Deal agencies purchased land, cleared slums, and constructed nearly 22,000 housing units. n6 However, in United States v. Certain Lands in Louisville, Jefferson County, Ky., n7 a 1935 decision, the United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the federal government could not use its power to condemn sites for public housing projects. The court stated: "The taking of one citizen's property for the purpose of improving it and selling or leasing it to another, or for the purpose of reducing unemployment, is not, in our opinion, within the scope of the powers of the federal government." n8 But courts had upheld the power of local governments to condemn property for public housing purposes. n9

In 1937, Congress enacted the United States Housing Act of 1937, n10 which established a national public housing program. n11 In this chapter, the legislation, as amended, will be referred to as the "United States Housing Act" or the "1937 Act."

Instead of providing for construction of housing by the federal government, the 1937 Act called for public housing to be constructed by local public housing authorities. n12 The main objective was to provide federal financial aid to public housing authorities in order to provide decent, sanitary, and safe housing for low-income families. n13 The legislation contemplated that the federal government and local housing authorities would enter into contracts under which the federal government would subsidize low-income housing projects and the housing authorities would administer them, subject to federal rules and regulations. The constitutionality of the 1937 Act was tested, but the United States Supreme Court determined that the legislation was within the power of Congress to provide for the general welfare. n14

The 1937 legislation called for public housing to be built by local public housing authorities. The housing authority would fund the purchase of the land and the construction of the housing units by issuing bonds. The federal government would provide a capital subsidy by making debt service payments on the bonds. n15 The housing authority and the federal government would execute an annual contributions agreement setting out the parties' rights and obligations. The housing authority would be obligated to operate the housing consistent with federal statutes and regulations while the annual contributions agreement was in effect. The municipality where the housing was located would be required to exempt the housing from real property taxes. n16

Public housing projects were originally intended to be for temporary occupancy by the "submerged middle class." n17 When occupants became better off, they were expected to move elsewhere. But these expectations became increasingly difficult to meet. In the 1950s, government programs and policies, such as tax breaks for home ownership and highway construction subsidies, encouraged the growth of suburbs and the movement of moderate-income families out of the inner city. This took place at a time of increasing migration of African-American families from southern states to northern cities. The central cities increasingly became home to low-income households. n18 Public housing became the permanent home of many poor, nonwhite, residents. n19

The public housing program has not been static. In the years since 1937, Congress has amended the United States Housing Act on several occasions, sometimes making very significant changes. For example, in the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, n20 Congress substantially revised the original legislation. Among other changes, and in contrast to earlier housing legislation, the 1974 legislation required public housing authorities to establish tenant-selection criteria aimed at achieving a broad range of incomes and at avoiding concentrations of families with low incomes. n21 The 1974 legislation also added a new housing program--the Section 8 program--which is referenced in a later section of this chapter. n22

In the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998, n23 Congress substantially revised the public housing legislation again, this time emphasizing property management matters, and including provisions to encourage the economic self-sufficiency of low-income residents of public housing. It encouraged public housing authorities to enter into public-private partnerships to transform public housing into mixed-income communities. n24 The legislation also consolidated federal assistance for public housing authorities into a capital fund and an operating fund. n25

Although other low-income housing programs, such as the housing choice voucher program, n26 have received increasing attention in recent years, the traditional public housing program remains a very significant housing program that presents distinct legal issues. Today, there are nearly 14,000 public housing developments in the United States, containing more than 1 million housing units, that provide homes for several million people. n27

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 5. See Lawrence M. Friedman, Public Housing and the Poor: An Overview, 54 Cal. L. Rev. 646 (1966). Earlier, some public housing had been constructed and operated by the Works Progress Administration. This proved to be expensive. The Housing Act of 1937 gave primary responsibility to local authorities, apparently with the expectation that costs could be better controlled at that level. See George Lefcoe, HUD's Authority to Mandate Tenant's Rights in Public Housing, 80 Yale L. J. 463, 477 (1971) (referring to 81 Cong. Rec. 7968 (1937) (remarks of Senator Wagner)).

(n2)Footnote 6. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 894 (1990).

(n3)Footnote 7. 78 F.2d 684 (6th Cir. 1935) , cert. granted, 296 U.S. 567 (1935) , appeal dismissed, 297 U.S. 726 (1936) .

(n4)Footnote 8. See 78 F.2d 684 at 688 .

(n5)Footnote 9. See e.g., New York City Housing Authority v. Muller, 1 N.E.2d 153 (N.Y. 1936) ; Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 689 (1994).

(n6)Footnote 10. Pub. L. No. 75-412, 50 Stat. 888 (1937). This was also called the Wagner-Steagall Act. See William Ebenstein, The Law of Public Housing, 23 Minn. L. Rev. 880, 886 (1939).

(n7)Footnote 11. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 894 (1990).

(n8)Footnote 12. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 894 (1990); Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 689 (1994).

(n9)Footnote 13. See Pub. L. No. 75-412, 50 Stat. 888 (1937); See William Ebenstein, The Law of Public Housing, 23 Minn. L. Rev. 880, 887 (1939). The current version of the legislation provides, among other things, that > "[i]t is the policy of the United States ... to assist States and political subdivisions of States to remedy the unsafe housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent and safe dwellings for low-income families; [and] to assist States and political subdivisions of States to address the shortage of housing affordable to low-income families."

42 U.S.C. § 1437(a). The legislation also provides that "our Nation should promote the goal of providing decent and affordable housing for all citizens through the efforts and encouragement of Federal, State, and local governments, and by the independent and collective actions of private citizens, organizations, and the private sector." Id.

(n10)Footnote 14. See City of Cleveland v. United States, 323 U.S. 329 (1945) .

(n11)Footnote 15. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 895 (1990).

(n12)Footnote 16. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 895 (1990).

(n13)Footnote 17. Members of this group have been described as "poor but honest workers." See Lawrence M. Friedman, Public Housing and the Poor, 54 Calif. L. Rev. 642, 648 (1966), quoted in Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 896, n. 66. (1990).

(n14)Footnote 18. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 896 (1990).

(n15)Footnote 19. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 896 (1990).

(n16)Footnote 20. Pub. L. No. 93-383, 88 Stat. 653 (1974).

(n17)Footnote 21. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 512 (1993).

(n18)Footnote 22. See § 45.22 of this chapter.

(n19)Footnote 23. Pub. L. No. 105-276, 112 Stat. 2518 (1998).

(n20)Footnote 24. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 54 (3d ed. 1999).

(n21)Footnote 25. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 93 (3d ed. 1999).

(n22)Footnote 26. This program, and some other government-assisted housing programs, are discussed in § 45.22 of this chapter.

(n23)Footnote 27. See Public Housing in National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development. This is available on the web at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2798&id=46. A HUD performance report indicates that, as of the end of fiscal year 2006, there were 1,172,204 HUD-assisted units/households in the public housing program. See U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Performance and Accountability Report, FY 2006. This publication is available on HUD's website at http://www.hud.gov/offices/cfo/reports.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.04

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.04 The Public Housing Authority.

§ 45.04(a) Introduction.

Under the 1937 Act, a local public housing authority, rather than the federal government, generally constructs, owns, and operates public housing for low-income households. n28 State enabling legislation typically authorizes the creation of public housing authorities and delegates governmental power to them. n29 The enabling legislation generally sets forth the powers, composition, and operations of the public housing authority. n30 A public housing authority is usually governed by a board of commissioners selected by the mayor and the city council, and is usually administered by a manager or executive director. n31

The 1937 Act uses the term "public housing agency" instead of "public housing authority." According to the legislation, a "public housing agency" generally means "any State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body (or agency or instrumentality thereof) which is authorized to engage in or assist in the development or operation of public housing." n32 A reference in this chapter to a "public housing agency" should be understood to have the meaning set forth in the legislation.

§ 45.04(b) State Enabling Legislation.

It will be helpful to illustrate the general propositions about housing authorities mentioned above by referring to some specific statutory provisions in a few states.

§ 45.04(b)(1) California.

A California statute provides that "[i]n each county and city there is a public body corporate and politic known as the housing authority of the county or city." n33 But the statute also provides that the "authority shall not transact any business or exercise its powers unless, by resolution, the governing body of the county or city declares that there is need for an authority to function in it." n34 The governing body may adopt a resolution declaring such a need if it finds that "insanitary or unsafe inhabited dwelling accommodations exist in the county or city," or that there is a shortage of safe or sanitary dwelling accommodations affordable to persons of low income. n35

When the mayor of a city receives notice of the adoption of the resolution, subject to the confirmation of the governing body, he or she is to appoint five commissioners of the authority. The mayor is to appoint two additional commissioners who are tenants of the authority, if the authority has tenants. One of the tenant appointees is to be over 62 years of age if the authority has tenants of that age. n36 Initial appointees are to serve for staggered terms. Thereafter, the terms are for four years, except in the case of tenant-commissioners, who serve for two. n37 The mayor also selects the initial chairman of the authority. n38 Comparable provisions apply when the resolution is adopted by the governing body of a county. n39

Governing bodies of cities or counties are permitted to enter into agreements to form area housing authorities as well. n40

According to the pertinent California legislation, a housing authority "is a corporate and politic public body, exercising public and essential governmental functions," and having the powers necessary or convenient to carry out the purposes for which it was established. n41 Specific powers are also set forth in statute, including the powers to sue and be sued; n42 to make and execute contracts; n43 to acquire, lease, and operate housing projects for persons of low income; to provide for the construction, improvement or repair of a housing project; to provide financing for the acquisition, development, or construction of low-income dwelling accommodations; to provide security for the protection of a project and its residents; n44 to issue bonds and make loans relating to housing projects; n45 to own, hold, and improve real and personal property; to purchase or lease real and personal property; to acquire property by eminent domain; n46 to investigate housing and living conditions and ways to improve those conditions; n47 to conduct investigations, hear testimony, and take proof at public or private hearings; n48 to borrow money or accept financial assistance from the federal government; and to take over or manage a housing project owned by the federal government. n49

California legislation also includes some provisions prohibiting the housing authority from undertaking particular acts or from obligating the housing authority to do particular things. Thus, for example, the housing authority is prohibited from evicting a tenant without reasonable cause. n50 And the housing authority is required to covenant in its leases to repair the premises to comply with building ordinances effective at the time of construction. n51

§ 45.04(b)(2) Illinois.

In Illinois, local governing bodies of counties, or of communities with populations greater than 25,000, are authorized to establish housing authorities. n52 Housing authorities may also be established "for more than one county." n53

Upon adoption of a resolution regarding the need for a housing authority, and upon obtaining a certificate from the state, the local presiding officer, with the approval of the local governing body, appoints housing authority commissioners for staggered terms and designates one of them as the chairman of the housing authority. n54 The number of commissioners varies with the size of the community. In municipalities larger than one million inhabitants, two commissioners are to be appointed from a list of housing authority residents generated by tenants' associations and another is to be appointed from among the officers of tenants' associations. n55

The housing authority is a municipal corporation, and a body "both corporate and politic, exercising public and essential government functions." n56 It has general powers to carry out its functions, as well as a number of enumerated powers. n57 Among these are powers to investigate housing conditions and needs; n58 to acquire property by purchase, lease, or by eminent domain; n59 to borrow, lend, or invest money; n60 to issue bonds; n61 to enter into contracts; n62 to sue and be sued; n63 to establish a police force; n64 to act as an agent for the federal government in connection with the acquisition, construction, and management of a housing project; n65 and to act as an agent for other governments regarding matters related to housing, including the clearing and redevelopment of blighted areas and the assembly of land for development or redevelopment. n66 Some of the enumerated powers, like that for establishing a police force, are tied to the size of the municipality. n67 Others, like the power to acquire real property for a conservation area, are subject to written approval of a department of state government. n68

Additional statutory provisions restrict the powers of the housing authority. For example, the housing authority is required to comply with federal statutes and regulations related to the determination of tenant income. n69 And the housing authority is prohibited from accepting a person as a tenant if the persons who would dwell in the project have an aggregate annual income that equals or exceeds an amount that the authority determines to be necessary to secure safe and uncongested dwelling accommodations and to provide an adequate standard of living. n70

§ 45.04(b)(3) Louisiana.

Louisiana housing authorities can be either local (meaning that they are established by a municipality or a parish) or regional or consolidated (meaning that they are established by two or more political subdivisions of the state). n71 For purposes of illustration, this discussion will focus on local housing authorities.

A local housing authority is defined as "a public body, corporate and politic ... exercising necessary and essential governmental functions." n72 A state statute provides that in each municipality and parish where one has not previously been established "there is hereby created a local housing authority." However, the authority will not be deemed to be established until the local governing body adopts a resolution declaring that there is a need for a local housing authority and finding that there exists a shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations or that such accommodations are not available and affordable to all residents regardless of income. n73 The powers of the local housing authority are vested in commissioners, n74 which are appointed by the chief elected official of the municipality or parish. n75 At least five commissioners are to be appointed, but more are required in larger communities. Depending on the circumstances, one or more of the additional commissioners must be selected from among public housing tenants. n76 The initial commissioners have staggered appointments; thereafter the term of office is for five years. n77

A local housing authority is, by statute, possessed of all powers necessary, convenient, or desirable in carrying out the purposes of the enabling legislation. n78 A number of specific powers are also enumerated, including the powers to sue and be sued; to adopt rules and regulations; to enter into contracts and intergovernmental agreements; n79 to conduct examinations and investigations, n80 to make investments; n81 to conduct studies of living and housing conditions and the means for their improvement; n82 to develop, construct, manage, own, and lease housing projects or developments; n83 to acquire interests in real or personal property by purchase, lease, or other means; n84 to borrow money or accept financial and other assistance from the local, state, or federal government; n85 and to issue bonds and other debt instruments. n86 However, a local housing authority is not permitted to consider net income to be "profit." n87

§ 45.04(b)(4) New York.

In New York, a municipal housing authority is a public corporation, and an agency and instrumentality of the state for the purposes for which it was created. n88 It is established by a special act of the legislature. n89 The mayor, or the town board, files a certificate with the state Commissioner of Housing and Community Renewal setting forth the date of the special legislation, the name of the authority, and the names of the members, specifying one of them as chairman. n90 Housing authorities having supervision of one hundred or more occupied dwelling units are required to include two tenants, elected by residents, as members. n91 The initial members serve for staggered terms, thereafter for five years. n92 When the office of the initial chairman becomes vacant, the new chairman is selected by the housing authority from among its members. n93

New York statutes list a number of powers of a housing authority, including the powers to borrow money, to issue notes, and to issue bonds; n94 to investigate living conditions and the means of improving them; to prepare plans for, carry out, and operate housing projects; to construct, reconstruct, or repair any project; to act as an agent for, or enter into contracts with, the federal government in connection with a federal or municipal project or a federally aided low-income housing program; to acquire or contract to acquire real or personal property; to own, hold, clear and improve real or personal property; to lease, purchase, or otherwise acquire, manage, or operate all or any part of a housing project undertaken or completed by any government or housing company; to make and execute contracts and other instruments; to sue or be sued; and to conduct examinations and investigations, hear testimony and take proof at public or private hearings. n95

§ 45.04(c) Composition of the Public Housing Authority's Governing Body.

The 1937 Act includes a provision about the composition of the governing body of the public housing agency. Subject to some exceptions, the legislation provides that the membership of the board of directors or similar governing body of a public housing agency "shall contain" not less than one member "(A) who is directly assisted by the public housing agency; and (B) who may, if provided for in the public housing agency plan, be elected by the residents directly assisted by the public housing agency." n96

It is possible for the federal requirement to mandate the appointment of a public housing resident to the board of directors in a situation in which state enabling legislation does not. This situation arose in an Ohio case, n97 in which the plaintiffs, acting on behalf of the board of directors of a public housing authority, challenged the mayor's appointment of a board member who was not a public housing resident. At the time of the appointment, no one on the board resided in housing operated by the housing authority.

The applicable Ohio legislation contained a provision requiring a member of a metropolitan housing authority board to be a resident of a dwelling unit owned or managed by the housing authority, but the provision applied only to housing authorities in districts containing more than a million persons. The housing authority in this case was not in such a district. But the court concluded that the appointment violated the federal requirement for tenant representation.

After the litigation had commenced, another member of the board resigned his position, creating a vacancy. The federal district court ordered the mayor to appoint a resident of the housing authority's public housing to fill the vacancy. It also issued an order requiring the mayor to continue to appoint public housing residents "to that seat" as long as the federal requirement remained in force.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 28. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 499 (1993). However, in Shimkus v. Hickner, 417 F. Supp.2d 884 (E.D. Mich. 2006) , the court concluded that a county government could itself operate public housing. The issue arose in that case because the county government had taken no action to form a housing commission after the county government has been reconstituted in 1979. But the court concluded that there was no state or federal impediment to having the county itself operate the public housing.

(n2)Footnote 29. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 180 (3d ed. 1999).

(n3)Footnote 30. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 180 (3d ed. 1999).

(n4)Footnote 31. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 894 n. 53 (1990).

(n5)Footnote 32. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)(6). There is a separate definition of "public housing agency" with respect to the tenant-based Section 8 housing program. Id. That program is discussed in § 45.22(d)(2) of this chapter, but it is not a traditional public housing program as such.

(n6)Footnote 33. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34240.

(n7)Footnote 34. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34240.

(n8)Footnote 35. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34242.

(n9)Footnote 36. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34270. The appointments are to be made by the governing body if the office of mayor is not elective.

(n10)Footnote 37. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34272.

(n11)Footnote 38. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34277.

(n12)Footnote 39. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34271. Two additional commissioners ma be appointed based on a county's size. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34271.5.

(n13)Footnote 40. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34240.1.

(n14)Footnote 41. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34310.

(n15)Footnote 42. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34311.

(n16)Footnote 43. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34311.

(n17)Footnote 44. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34312.

(n18)Footnote 45. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34312.3.

(n19)Footnote 46. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34315.

(n20)Footnote 47. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34317.

(n21)Footnote 48. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34318.

(n22)Footnote 49. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34327.

(n23)Footnote 50. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34331.

(n24)Footnote 51. See Cal. Health and Safety Code § 34332.

(n25)Footnote 52. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/3.

(n26)Footnote 53. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/3. In that case, the provisions of the "Housing Authorities Act" applies to them "[e]xcept as otherwise provided." See id.& § 10/1.

(n27)Footnote 54. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/3.

(n28)Footnote 55. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/3. This applies where such associations exist.

(n29)Footnote 56. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.

(n30)Footnote 57. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.

(n31)Footnote 58. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.1.

(n32)Footnote 59. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.3.

(n33)Footnote 60. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.4.

(n34)Footnote 61. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.4a.

(n35)Footnote 62. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.5.

(n36)Footnote 63. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.5.

(n37)Footnote 64. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.1a.

(n38)Footnote 65. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.2.

(n39)Footnote 66. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 §§ 10/8.1a & 8.15.

(n40)Footnote 67. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.1a.

(n41)Footnote 68. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 §§ 10/8.1 - 8.8.

(n42)Footnote 69. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/8.21.

(n43)Footnote 70. See Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 310 § 10/25(a).

(n44)Footnote 71. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:384.

(n45)Footnote 72. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:384.

(n46)Footnote 73. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:392.

(n47)Footnote 74. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 40:401.

(n48)Footnote 75. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 40:531. If there is no chief elected official, the governing body makes the appointments. See id.

(n49)Footnote 76. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 40:531.

(n50)Footnote 77. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:532.

(n51)Footnote 78. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:431.

(n52)Footnote 79. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:431.

(n53)Footnote 80. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:432.

(n54)Footnote 81. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:434.

(n55)Footnote 82. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:435.

(n56)Footnote 83. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:436.

(n57)Footnote 84. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:440.

(n58)Footnote 85. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:453.

(n59)Footnote 86. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 40:468 & 478.

(n60)Footnote 87. See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 40:482.

(n61)Footnote 88. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law §§ 2 & 3.

(n62)Footnote 89. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 30.

(n63)Footnote 90. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 30.

(n64)Footnote 91. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 30.

(n65)Footnote 92. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 30.

(n66)Footnote 93. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 32.

(n67)Footnote 94. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 41.

(n68)Footnote 95. See N.Y. Pub. Hous. Law § 37.

(n69)Footnote 96. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437(b). The exceptions relate to situations in which: 1) the state requires the members of the board to be salaried and to serve full-time; and 2) the housing authority operates fewer than 300 housing units, and, after giving reasonable notice of an opportunity to have a resident serve on the board, the housing authority has not been notified of the intention of any resident to participate. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437(b). The first exception was applicable in a 2006 Michigan case. See Shimkus v. Hickner, 417 F. Supp. 2d 884 (E.D. Mich. 2006) .

(n70)Footnote 97. State ex rel. Lorain Metropolitan Housing Authority Board of Commissioners v. Mayor of City of Lorain, 145 F. Supp. 2d 926 (N.D. Ohio 2001) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.05

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.05 Development and Financing of Public Housing.

§ 45.05(a) In General.

Federal financial assistance has been critical to the traditional public housing program. Originally, program sponsors sought a one-time grant for project construction costs, but the budgetary impact rendered that inadvisable. n98 Instead, the program was set up to have the public housing authority fund the purchase of land and the cost of public housing by issuing long-term bonds, normally with a forty-year maturity. n99 The bonds, which are tax-exempt, are purchased by private investors. For its part, in accordance with the terms of an annual contributions contract between HUD and the housing authority, the federal government pays the annual principal and interest costs over the life of the bonds. n100 In 1987, Congress authorized the Department of Housing and Urban Development to use one-time development grants in the financing of public housing. Under this approach, HUD and the housing authority still enter into a contributions contract with terms and conditions that remain in effect for 40 years. n101

At the commencement of the public housing program, only construction and financing costs were paid by the federal government, which left operating and maintenance costs to be covered by rents paid by project tenants. n102 However, in the 1960s, increases in operating and maintenance costs frequently prompted housing authorities to defer maintenance, and there was deterioration in the physical condition of much of the nation's public housing. Congress responded by authorizing operating subsidies to public housing authorities. n103

Subject to a number of requirements, the 1937 Act also permits grants to be made available to public housing authorities for the revitalization of severely distressed public housing. n104

§ 45.05(b) Local Cooperation.

The 1937 Act requires that there be local cooperation between the public housing authority and the local government as a precondition to HUD involvement in the development of federally assisted public housing. The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is not permitted to enter into a contract with a public housing agency for preliminary loans or planning with respect to a low-income housing project unless the governing body of the locality has approved the housing agency's application for a preliminary loan, and unless the public housing agency has demonstrated that there is need for low-income housing that is not being met by private enterprise. n105

In addition, before the Secretary enters into a contract for contributions with a public housing agency, the governing body of the locality must have entered into an agreement with the public housing agency providing for "local cooperation." n106 This agreement must provide that, before making amounts under a contract for contributions available for the development of public housing, the public housing agency is to notify the chief executive officer of the locality of that use, and provide such information regarding the public housing as may reasonably be requested by the locality. n107 Once a valid local cooperation agreement is made, it is binding on the unit of local government, and can be enforced by the housing authority. n108

An issue relating to local cooperation came before the United States Supreme Court in James v. Valtierra. n109 The California constitution had been amended to provide that no low-rent housing project could be developed in a city, town, or county unless it had been approved by a majority vote of the qualified electors voting in an election. The plaintiffs, who were from counties in which low-cost housing proposals had been defeated in elections, sought a declaration that the California provision violated the federal constitution. But the Supreme Court rejected arguments that the California provision violated the Supremacy Clause, the Privileges and Immunities Clause, and the Equal Protection Clause, and, in the course of its opinion, the Court stated: "By the Housing Act of 1937 the Federal Government has offered aid to state and local governments for the creation of low-rent public housing. However, the federal legislation does not purport to require that local governments accept this or to outlaw local referendums on whether the aid should be accepted." n110

§ 45.05(c) Contributions Contract Between HUD and the Public Housing Authority.

The public housing agency and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development execute a contract that identifies the parties' rights and obligations. n111 This could take the form of a contract regarding grant contributions, if grants are used in the development of the public housing project, or an annual contributions contract, if the funding approach involves annual contributions to the housing agency. n112 In either case, the contract will set forth the terms and conditions under which the federal assistance is being provided. The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may include any provisions deemed necessary to "insure the lower income character of the project." n113

Every contract for contributions is to provide, among other things, that no contributions will be made unless the housing project n114 is exempt from all real and personal property taxes. n115 In addition, the contract is required to include provisions, that, among other things: 1) require the public housing agency to determine that each family in the project was admitted in accordance with duly adopted regulations and approved income limits; n116 2) require the public housing agency to promptly notify any applicant determined to be ineligible for admission of the basis for the determination and to provide the applicant, upon timely request, with an opportunity for an informal hearing on the determination; n117 3) require the public housing agency to promptly notify any applicant determined to be eligible for admission of the approximate date of occupancy; n118 4) require the public housing agency to comply with such procedures and requirements as the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may prescribe to assure that sound management practices will be followed in the operation of the project; n119 5) require the public housing agency to maintain the public housing in a condition that complies with standards for safety and habitability established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development; n120 and 6) permits the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and other designated public officials, to have access to the books and records of the public housing agency in order to audit its operations. n121

Contributions under an annual contributions contract are not to exceed the amount of principal and interest that are payable on obligations issued by the public housing agency to finance the development and acquisition of the housing project. The contributions are to be paid over a period of time that is not to exceed 40 years. n122 The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is permitted to pledge the annual contributions as security for the obligations that are issued by the public housing agency to finance the development or acquisition of the housing project. n123

If a "substantial default" occurs under the terms of the contact for contributions, n124 the public housing agency is obligated, at the option of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, to convey either title to the housing project or possession of the project to the Secretary. n125 The Secretary, in turn, is obligated to reconvey title or possession to the public housing agency or its successor if the Secretary is satisfied that all defaults have been cured and that the project will thereafter be operated in accordance with the terms of the contract for contributions. n126

In United States v. Barrett, n127 there was a challenge to HUD's authority to take over a housing project following a claimed "substantial default." There, some individuals had filed a state court action challenging the legal existence of the public housing authority, and its ability to enter into contracts, after the contributions contract and a turnkey contract had been executed. n128 The plaintiffs sought an injunction against construction of the housing project. The contributions contract included a provision stating that a legal challenge to the housing authority's right to enter into the turnkey contract constituted a substantial default. The federal government brought an action in federal court, seeking to confirm its authority to take over the housing project, and seeking to enjoin the state court litigation. The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in favor of the federal government. It concluded that HUD had the authority to include, in the annual contributions contract, a provision making a legal challenge to the housing authority's existence a substantial default, and it upheld the federal government's right to take over the project. In enjoining the state court litigation, the federal court noted that the state court litigation had impaired the "financial responsibility" of the housing authority from the perspective of creditors and subcontractors. n129

The issue of whether HUD could terminate a contributions contract based upon lack of diligence by a housing authority arose in Silva v. East Providence Housing Authority. n130 In that case, there was significant local opposition to the housing project, and no dwelling units were constructed during a five-year period. HUD decided to terminate the contributions contract, but some prospective tenants sued to prevent that result. The United States First Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that HUD had the statutory authority to include a termination provision in the contributions contract, and that its decision to terminate the contract could be overturned only if arbitrary or capricious. However, First Circuit remanded the case to the district court for a determination as to whether HUD had considered any alternatives that were less severe than termination.

§ 45.05(d) Turnkey Development.

The original model for federally assisted public housing involved construction of housing by the public housing authority. Since the mid-1960s, however, it has been common for the housing authority to agree to buy a completed structure from a private developer, who "turns the keys over" to the housing authority. n131 A housing authority using this approach will receive a reservation of funds from the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, advertise for proposals from developers, and select the best proposal. n132

When the development arrangements are approved, the housing authority and HUD execute a contributions contract, and the housing authority and the developer execute a turnkey contract. The developer is responsible for obtaining construction financing, but is permitted to use the turnkey contract as part of the security for the loan. When the project is completed, the housing authority obtains title and pays for the project with funds from bond sales. n133

§ 45.05(e) Mixed-Finance Public Housing.

As part of the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998, n134 public housing authorities were permitted to own, operate, assist, or otherwise participate in "mixed-finance projects." n135 A "mixed-finance project" refers to a project that is financially assisted by private resources, including low-income housing tax credits, as well as assistance provided under the provisions of the 1937 Act. n136 Some, or all, of the housing units in the project will be public housing, but other housing units may not be. n137 Indeed, an increasing number of public housing authorities have entered into partnerships with other entities to build and manage developments in which a portion of the dwelling units are public housing units, while other units qualify for the low-income housing tax credit, and still others are occupied by families that can afford market rate rents. n138

Mixed-finance projects may include projects that are developed by a public housing agency, an entity affiliated with a public housing agency, or a partnership, limited liability company, or other entity in which the public housing agency, or an affiliated entity, is a general partner, managing member, or otherwise participates. n139

Housing units that are assisted with capital or operating assistance from the housing agency are to be developed, operated, and maintained in accordance with the requirements for public housing set forth in the 1937 Act. n140 A provision of that Act states that, for purposes of the legislation, "any reference to public housing owned or operated by a public housing agency shall include dwelling units in a mixed finance project that are assisted by the agency with capital or operating assistance." n141

The legislation includes provisions with respect to the number of public housing units in the project. It requires either: 1) that the ratio of public housing units to the total number of housing units be approximately the same as the ratio of the financial commitment provided by the public housing agency to the total financial commitment involved in the project; or 2) that the number of public housing units not be less than the number of units that could have been developed by conventional financing of public housing. n142

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 98. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 180 (3d ed. 1999).

(n2)Footnote 99. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497 (1993).

(n3)Footnote 100. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 180 (3d ed. 1999).

(n4)Footnote 101. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 180 (3d ed. 1999). The statutory authorization is set forth in 42 U.S.C. § 1437(a)(2).

(n5)Footnote 102. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 694-95 (1994).

(n6)Footnote 103. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 694-95 (1994). The section of the 1937 Act that provides for operating funds is 42 U.S.C. § 1437g.

(n7)Footnote 104. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437v.

(n8)Footnote 105. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(e).

(n9)Footnote 106. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(e).

(n10)Footnote 107. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(e).

(n11)Footnote 108. See Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority v. Harmody, 474 F.2d 1102 (6th Cir. 1973) (court states that "the policies underlying the national and state legislation under which the Cooperation Agreement in this case was made and entered into necessarily protect the Agreement against cancellation at the mere will of the city.").

(n12)Footnote 109. 402 U.S. 137 (1971) .

(n13)Footnote 110. See 402 U.S. at 140 .

(n14)Footnote 111. See Michael H. Schill, Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing, 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878, 895 (1990).

(n15)Footnote 112. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c.

(n16)Footnote 113. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(a).

(n17)Footnote 114. Excluding any portion of the project not assisted by HUD contributions.

(n18)Footnote 115. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(d). The housing agency is required, however, to make some payments in lieu of taxes. Id.

(n19)Footnote 116. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(2).

(n20)Footnote 117. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(4).

(n21)Footnote 118. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(4).

(n22)Footnote 119. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(5).

(n23)Footnote 120. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f).

(n24)Footnote 121. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(h).

(n25)Footnote 122. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(a).

(n26)Footnote 123. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(a). See also 42 U.S.C. § 1437c(g).

(n27)Footnote 124. According to 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(g)(1), "substantial default" is to be defined in the contract for contributions.

(n28)Footnote 125. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(g)(1).

(n29)Footnote 126. The Secretary will also be obligated to do so "after the termination of the obligation to make annual contributions available unless there are any obligations or covenants of the public housing agency to the Secretary which are then in default." See id.

(n30)Footnote 127. 442 F.2d 642 (4th Cir. 1971) .

(n31)Footnote 128. Turnkey contracts are discussed in § 45.05(d) of this chapter.

(n32)Footnote 129. See 442 F.2d at 645 .

(n33)Footnote 130. 565 F.2d 1217 (1st Cir. 1977) .

(n34)Footnote 131. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 181 (3d ed. 1999). There are other possible development approaches. According to a HUD regulation, a "PHA may use any generally accepted method of development including, but not limited to, conventional, turnkey, acquisition with or without rehabilitation, mixed-finance, and force account." See 24 C.F.R. § 941.102. The regulation includes definitions for each of these approaches.

(n35)Footnote 132. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 181 (3d ed. 1999).

(n36)Footnote 133. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 182 (3d ed. 1999). See also 24 C.F.R. § 941.102(a)(2).

(n37)Footnote 134. Pub. L. No. 105-276, title V. § 539, 112 Stat. 2594 (1998).

(n38)Footnote 135. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-7.

(n39)Footnote 136. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-7(d).

(n40)Footnote 137. See 24 C.F.R. § 941.600(a)(1). This regulation includes some helpful information about the nature of a mixed-finance project.

(n41)Footnote 138. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 200 (3d ed. 1999).

(n42)Footnote 139. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 200 (3d ed. 1999).

(n43)Footnote 140. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-7(c).

(n44)Footnote 141. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-7(c).

(n45)Footnote 142. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-7(e).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.06

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.06 Public Housing Accountability and Management.

§ 45.06(a) Introduction.

Federal financial assistance of public housing comes with federal oversight. Public housing authorities that receive federal funds are required to submit plans to the Department of Housing and Urban Development. They are also subject to regular assessment of their performance. Management changes may be required in case of unsatisfactory performance. Independent of issues regarding performance, federal legislation has encouraged tenant involvement in the management of public housing projects.

§ 45.06(b) Plans.

The provisions of the 1937 Act require public housing agencies to submit annual and five-year plans to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development with respect to federally assisted public housing projects.

A five-year plan is to set forth a mission statement on serving the needs of low-income and very low-income families and to include goals and objectives with respect to serving those needs. n143 The plan must also include goals, policies, or programs that "will enable the housing authority to serve the needs of child and adult victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking." n144 The housing agency is required to submit an initial five-year plan in the first year it receives assistance. Thereafter, the agency is required to submit a new plan at least every five years. n145

In addition to the five-year plan, the public housing agency is required to submit an annual plan to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for each year it receives financial assistance. Once the initial annual plan has been submitted, annual updates can satisfy the requirement. n146

The annual plan is required to include, among other things: 1) information about housing needs and how the housing agency intends to address them; 2) a statement of the housing agency's financial resources and plans for their use; 3) a statement of the housing agency's policies for tenant eligibility, selection, and admission; 4) a statement regarding the rules, standards, and policies of the public housing agency regarding the maintenance and management of the housing; 5) a statement of the public housing agency's grievance procedure; 6) a plan describing capital improvements needed to ensure long-term viability of the housing project; 7) a description of any housing for which the housing agency will apply for demolition or other disposition, together with a timetable for the demolition or disposition; 8) a description of projects that the housing agency has designated, or will seek designation, for occupancy by elderly or disabled families; 9) a description of any building that is to be converted to tenant-based assistance, together with information about assistance that will be used in connection with the conversion; 10) a description of policies and programs related to the enhancement of the economic and social self-sufficiency of assisted families; 11) a description of activities, services, or programs of the public housing agency to prevent, and to assist the victims of, domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking; 12) a plan to prevent crime and to ensure the safety of public housing residents; 13) the results of the most recent audit of the public housing agency; and 14) information about how the public housing agency will plan for the long-term operation, rehabilitation, and modernization of its housing inventory. n147

The public housing agency is required to seek input from residents and the public on its proposed plans before submitting them to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. More particularly, the public housing agency is required to establish one or more resident advisory boards, and to consult with the board, or boards, regarding the development of the public housing agency's plans. n148 In developing the plan, the public housing agency is required to conduct a public hearing to discuss the plan and to invite public comment. n149

The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may disapprove a plan if it does not comply with the applicable standards. n150 If a public housing agency has been designated as "troubled," n151 or is at risk of being so designated, the Secretary may require more extensive information to be included in the plan. n152 On the other hand, if the public housing agency is determined to be "high performing," the Secretary may streamline the requirements for plan submission. n153

§ 45.06(c) Assessment of Performance.

Pursuant to federal legislation, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is required to develop and publish "indicators" to assess the management performance of public housing agencies. n154 To the extent it is practicable, the Secretary is required, by statute, to use indicators that include such things as: the number and percentage of vacancies; the percentage of uncollected rents; the repair and turn-around time on vacant units; the proportion of maintenance work orders that are outstanding; the extent to which the housing agency implements effective screening, eviction policies, and other anti-crime strategies; the extent to which the housing agency promotes the economic self-sufficiency of public housing residents and provides residents with opportunities for involvement in administration of public housing; and the extent to which the public housing agency provides acceptable basic housing conditions. n155

HUD regulations refer to the assessment system as the "Public Housing Assessment System," and state that it is a system for measuring a public housing agency's "essential housing operations." n156 The regulations also state that the purpose is to improve the delivery of public housing services and to improve trust in the public housing system. n157

In implementing the statutory requirements, HUD's regulations provide that public housing agencies will be assessed based on four indicators: 1) the physical condition of their properties; 2) their financial condition; 3) their management operations; and 4) resident service and satisfaction feedback. n158 "Rewards" are provided to "high performers" and "consequences" come to "poor performers." n159

The regulations provide for the way in which performance "scores" are determined. n160 A public housing agency that achieves a score of at least 60% of the points available under each of the four indicators, and at least 90% of the points available overall, is designated as a "high performer." n161 High performers get relief from some reporting and other requirements. n162 Public housing agencies that receive less than 60% of the available points overall, or that receive less than 60% of the points under more than one of the first three indicators, are designated as "troubled." n163 A score of less than 60% of the points in one of the first three indicators is characterized as "substandard." n164 Troubled or substandard public housing authorities incur greater regulatory oversight and other consequences. However, even

"standard" performers are, in some cases, required to submit plans for improvement and to correct deficiencies. n165

A provision of the 1937 Act indicates that a public housing authority is "troubled" when it "fails on a widespread basis to provide acceptable basic housing conditions for its residents." n166 Such a designation leads to an independent on-site assessment and efforts to reach an agreement with the housing agency to improve its performance. n167

A troubled housing agency that is subject to an agreement to improve performance is also subject to some deadlines for the improvements. According to the relevant legislation, the housing agency must, within a year after being notified of its troubled status, improve its performance "by at least 50 percent of the difference between the most recent performance measurement and the measurement necessary to remove that agency's designation as troubled." n168 And within two years of being notified of its troubled status, the housing agency must improve its performance to the extent that it is no longer designated as troubled. n169 If the housing agency does not achieve these levels of performance, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is required to petition for the appointment of a receiver or take possession and appoint an administrator. n170

The statutory provisions describing the assessment process also provide that if there is a "substantial default" by the housing agency with respect to the covenants or conditions to which it is subject, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may, among other things, solicit proposals from other public housing agencies to manage all or part of the subject housing; petition for the appointment of a receiver; or take possession of all or part of the housing agency, including all or any part of any housing project. n171 These options appear to be in addition to those that are available in the event of a substantial default under the contributions contract between HUD and the housing agency. n172

In addition to the other rights and remedies available to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development referenced above, if the Secretary finds that a public housing agency that is receiving capital or operating funds from HUD has failed to comply substantially with its statutory obligations relating to the public housing program, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may terminate the assistance payments, withhold amounts, or reduce or the amounts of future payments. n173 Normal payments are to resume when the Secretary determines that the housing agency will comply with its obligations. n174

Additional details regarding these matters are set forth in HUD regulations. n175

§ 45.06(d) Housing Project Management.

Typically, a public housing project will be managed by the public housing authority, but other forms of management are possible. For example, as discussed in another section of the chapter, there are circumstances in which HUD itself will take over operation of a public housing project. n176

Since the mid-1980s, the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development has increasingly encouraged tenant involvement in the management of public housing projects. n177 Indeed, resident councils have been authorized to form resident management corporations and to enter into contracts with public housing authorities to manage individual projects. n178 Advocates of resident management in public housing have contended that it can improve the efficiency, safety, and quality of life at public housing developments, and that it can empower local residents to take control of their lives. n179

The 1937 Act permits the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to provide financial assistance to resident management corporations that manage public housing developments, if some conditions are satisfied. It also provides that, if such financial assistance is given, "the public housing agency shall not be responsible for the actions of the resident management corporation." n180

Independent of the provisions on resident management, federal legislation provides that the Secretary of Housing and

Urban Development may transfer management of a public housing project from a public housing agency to another management entity in some circumstances. n181 This can occur if there are physical deficiencies in the housing caused by mismanagement by the public housing agency, the housing is located in an area subject to recurrent vandalism and criminal activity, and the residents can demonstrate that the problems can be remedied by transfer of management to another entity. n182 A majority of the residents must vote to request the transfer. n183

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 143. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(a).

(n2)Footnote 144. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(a).

(n3)Footnote 145. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(a).

(n4)Footnote 146. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(b).

(n5)Footnote 147. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(d).

(n6)Footnote 148. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(e). The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may waive the requirement of establishing a resident advisory board if the public housing agency can demonstrate that there are existing resident councils or other resident organizations that can fulfil the advisory role. Id.

(n7)Footnote 149. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(f).

(n8)Footnote 150. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(i).

(n9)Footnote 151. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(2).

(n10)Footnote 152. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(i).

(n11)Footnote 153. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437c-1(k).

(n12)Footnote 154. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(1).

(n13)Footnote 155. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(1).

(n14)Footnote 156. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.3.

(n15)Footnote 157. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.1.

(n16)Footnote 158. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.1(c).

(n17)Footnote 159. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.1(a).

(n18)Footnote 160. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.9 et seq.

(n19)Footnote 161. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.67(a).

(n20)Footnote 162. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.67(a).

(n21)Footnote 163. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.67(c).

(n22)Footnote 164. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.67(c).

(n23)Footnote 165. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.73.

(n24)Footnote 166. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(2)(A)(i).

(n25)Footnote 167. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(2)(B) & (C).

(n26)Footnote 168. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(3)(B)(ii)(I).

(n27)Footnote 169. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(3)(B)(ii)(II).

(n28)Footnote 170. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(3)(B)(ii)(III). The Secretary is required to seek a receiver if the public housing agency is one with 1,250 or more units. Id. However, the statute also includes a sentence that says that the portion of the statute just referenced "shall not be construed to limit the courses of action available to the Secretary under subparagraph (A)." See id. Subparagraph A is the one, discussed next in the text, that lists the Secretary's options in the event of a substantial default.

(n29)Footnote 171. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(3)(A).

(n30)Footnote 172. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(3)(A); see also 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(g).

(n31)Footnote 173. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(4).

(n32)Footnote 174. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(j)(4).

(n33)Footnote 175. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.67 et seq.

(n34)Footnote 176. See § 45.06(c) of this chapter.

(n35)Footnote 177. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 549 (1993). The relevant provision of the 1937 Act is 42 U.S.C. § 1437r.

(n36)Footnote 178. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 549 (1993).

(n37)Footnote 179. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 550 (1993). Michael H. Schill wrote that '[i] is difficult to evaluate these claims." Id.

(n38)Footnote 180. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437r(e)(3).

(n39)Footnote 181. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437w(a).

(n40)Footnote 182. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437w(a).

(n41)Footnote 183. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437w(b).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.07

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.07 Tenant Eligibility and Selection.

§ 45.07(a) Introduction.

Millions of people live in federally assisted public housing. Others hope to live in such housing and are on waiting lists for admission. In order to be admitted, prospective tenants must satisfy some eligibility requirements. But public housing authorities are limited, by statute and by regulation, with respect to procedural and substantive aspects of public housing eligibility determinations and the admission of new tenants to public housing.

§ 45.07(b) Family and Income Eligibility.

According to a provision of the 1937 Act, "[d]welling units assisted under this chapter shall be rented only to families who are low-income families at the time of their initial occupancy." n184 A HUD regulation provides that, "at a minimum, the applicant must be a family ... and must be income-eligible." n185

The qualification that an applicant be a "family" is not difficult to satisfy. That is because the applicable definition of "family" is very broad, and includes, among other possibilities, a single person, a family with children, a family without children, and two or more persons living together who are either disabled or at least 62 years of age. n186 It also includes a "remaining family member" -- which a HUD publication states "is a member who was listed on the lease of a public housing unit and is the only family member still remaining in the unit." n187

Income eligibility is more complex. It should be remembered, however, that the basic idea behind the 1937 Act was to assist the states and their political subdivisions in addressing the shortage of decent, safe, and affordable housing for low-income families. n188 In keeping with that idea, a HUD regulation provides: "No family other than a low income family is eligible to a PHA's public housing program. n189 A "low income family" is defined as follows:

> A family whose annual income does not exceed 80 percent of the median income for the area, as determined by HUD with adjustments for smaller and larger families, except that HUD may establish income ceilings higher or lower than 80 percent of the median income for the area on the basis of HUD's findings that such variations are necessary because of unusually high or low family incomes. n190

The regulations include a number of provisions on how to determine "annual income." n191

The natural effect of an income qualification has been the concentration of low-income families in public housing. This has come with a price. As one observer wrote:

> The concentration of poor people in public housing underlies much of the distress experienced by public housing residents in large American cities. Rather than alleviating poverty and enhancing social mobility, as its early adherents had hoped, distressed public housing developments have magnified the problems faced by poor families and kept them out of the economic mainstream. n192

Perhaps, in part, to avoid "concentration" problems of this sort, housing authorities sometimes sought to avoid admission of the poorest of low-income families. However, it was held that a housing authority cannot categorically exclude applicants from the lowest income ranges from subsidized housing projects. n193

§ 45.07(c) Income Targeting, Mixing, and Deconcentration.

Income qualifications are important to public housing eligibility. But admission is not automatically given to applicants of the lowest income level. There are considerations of "targeting," "income mixing," and "deconcentration" that are relevant to admission decisions.

A provision of the 1937 Act requires that, with respect to > the public housing dwelling units of a public housing agency made available for occupancy in any fiscal year by eligible families, not less than 40 percent shall be occupied by families whose incomes at the time of commencement of occupancy do not exceed 30 percent of the area median income." n194

The implementing regulations characterize these families as "extremely low income families." n195 And the legislation refers to the concept of focusing on them as "targeting." n196 It also provides that the housing agency can receive "credit" that can be applied against the 40% target if the housing agency manages to exceed a separate target for providing "tenant-based" assistance to extremely low income families. n197

In addition to "targeting," the 1937 Act requires "income mixing." The legislation provides, in this connection, that "[a] public housing agency may establish and utilize income-mix criteria for the selection of residents for dwelling units in public housing projects." n198 This is expressed as an elective option. However, a separate section of the legislation provides that in complying with the targeting requirement for extremely low income families, the public housing agency may not "concentrate very low-income families (or other families with relatively low incomes) in public housing dwelling units in certain public housing projects or certain buildings within projects." n199 And the 1937 Act also requires the public housing agency to include, in its annual plan, a tenant admission policy that provides for "deconcentration of poverty" and "income-mixing." n200 According to the legislation, the idea involves "bringing higher income tenants into lower income projects and lower income tenants into higher income projects." n201

HUD regulations list some exceptions to income-mixing requirements that should be noted. While stating that the requirements are applicable to "general occupancy, family public housing developments," n202 the regulations provide that the requirements do not apply to, among other things, public housing developments with fewer than 100 public housing units, that house only elderly persons or persons with disabilities, or that are approved for demolition or conversion to tenant-based assistance. n203

It should also be noted that federal legislation permits public housing agencies, "for good cause" and with the approval of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, to establish and implement admission standards that vary from the statutory requirements for income targeting, mixing, and deconcentration. n204

There has been litigation over issues related to income mixing. In Gholston v. Housing Authority of City of Montgomery, n205 for example, a class of public housing applicants claimed that a housing authority had categorically denied admission to applicants with no incomes, or extremely low incomes, and preferred applicants with greater incomes. The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals stated that, in complying with congressionally established income-mixing requirements, "a local housing authority must not categorically exclude applicants from the lowest income ranges." n206 It remanded the case for a factual determination as to whether the housing authority had a policy or practice of doing so.

An income-mixing issue also arose with respect to the use of waiting lists for public housing applicants. In Paris v. United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, n207 some prospective tenants challenged a HUD-approved tenant selection scheme that sought a broad economic mix of tenants by permitting higher income families to "skip" over "very low income" families who were senior to them on the waiting list. The First Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the claim that the policy violated the then-existing provisions of the United States Housing Act or implementing regulations.

The decision was controversial at the time, and Congress subsequently prohibited public housing agencies from adopting or implementing policies that passed over very low-income families in favor of higher-income families. n208 However, the current version of the 1937 Act provides that public housing agencies may offer incentives to eligible higher income families to occupy dwellings in projects predominately occupied by lower-income families. n209 It also provides that the "skipping of a family on a waiting list to reach another family" in order to implement the deconcentration and income-mixing policy will "not be considered an adverse action." n210 HUD regulations also permit "skipping" in order to further the goals of the housing agency's deconcentration policy. n211 In contrast, such skipping is prohibited in connection with Section 8 housing. n212

§ 45.07(d) Local Preferences.

The 1937 Act provides for some flexibility in tenant eligibility standards for public housing by permitting public housing authorities to establish "local preferences." These are preferences for "families having certain characteristics" that are based on local housing needs and priorities, as determined by the public housing agency." n213 Local preferences were apparently permitted, in part, as one way to deal with the problem of poverty concentration in public housing.

The implementing regulations include some details about permissible local preferences, and procedures related to their use. Thus, they permit public housing agencies to adopt preferences for working families; persons with disabilities; n214 victims of domestic violence; and single persons who are elderly, displaced, homeless, or disabled. n215 Subject to some limitations, they are also permitted to adopt preferences based on residency, but not residency requirements. n216

The preference for "working families," in particular, appears to be a preference that might tend to help achieve an income-mix in public housing. In any event, the regulations provide that the establishment and implementation of local preferences are subject to HUD requirements concerning income-targeting, income-mixing, and deconcentration. n217

The regulations also require public housing agencies to inform applicants about the local preferences and to give them an opportunity to show that they qualify. n218 At the same time, the regulations state that housing agencies "may limit the number of applicants that qualify for any local preference." n219

§ 45.07(e) Written Admission Policies and HUD Regulations.

HUD regulations require public housing agencies to adopt written policies for the admission of tenants. n220 The regulations also require the policies to deal with a number of substantive admission matters.

For example, the regulations require admission policies to provide for targeting, income-mixing, and deconcentration of poverty. n221 They must provide for the preclusion from admission "of applicants whose habits and practices reasonably may be expected to have a detrimental effect on the residents or the project environment. n222 The policies must provide "[o]bjective and reasonable policies for selection by the PHA among otherwise eligible applicants, including requirements for applications and waiting lists ... and for verification and documentation of information relevant to acceptance or rejection of an applicant." n223 The policies must also be consistent with federal fair housing and equal opportunity provisions listed in HUD's regulations. n224

The regulations further require that tenant selection criteria "be reasonably related to individual attributes and behavior of an applicant and shall not be related to those which may be imputed to a particular group or category of persons of which an applicant may be a member." n225 Applicants to public housing have been able to use the concept as a basis on which to defeat categorical admission rules. n226

§ 45.07(f) Undesirable Public Housing Applicants.

§ 45.07(f)(1) Background.

In the years following the Great Depression, some housing authorities adopted policies to screen out undesirable residents. n227 Housing authorities implemented policies against illegitimacy, denying admission to families if a member had had a child out of wedlock. n228 They adopted eligibility requirements that required applicants to have been residents of the community for a period of time, such as two years. n229 Prospective tenant were sometimes excluded based on a history of unpaid rent n230 or felony convictions. n231

As time went on, courts did not always give the eligibility restrictions a good reception. n232 Some courts disapproved the automatic rejection of applicants based upon a history of unpaid rent n233 or felony convictions. n234 Exclusion on the basis of illegitimacy was disapproved for inflexibility and disharmony with the spirit and aim of the low rent housing program. n235 It was also held that due process protections apply in tenant selection, n236 but this view was not unanimous. Some courts were of the view that applicants to public housing did not have a property interest that was entitled to full due process protection. n237

Over time, legislative and regulatory provisions were adopted that dealt with a number of tenant eligibility issues other than family income. In particular, federal statutes and regulations include a number of provisions relating to admission to public housing of individuals who have been engaged in criminal activities and substance abuse. They also include some protections for victims.

§ 45.07(f)(2) Commission of Criminal Activities that Adversely Affect other Residents.

Public housing agencies are generally n238 permitted to deny admission to an applicant if the agency determines that the applicant, or any member of his or her household is or, within a reasonable period of time, was "engaged in any drug-related or violent criminal activity or other criminal activity which would adversely affect the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents." n239

§ 45.07(f)(3) Commission of Drug Crimes.

Public housing agencies are required by statute to establish "standards for occupancy" in public housing dwelling units that permanently prohibit occupancy by any person who has been convicted of manufacturing or producing methamphetamine on the "premises" in violation of law. n240 In addition, the regulations require the public housing agency to establish eligibility standards that "permanently prohibit admission to the PHA's public housing program if any household member has ever been convicted of drug-related criminal activity for manufacture or production of methamphetamine on the premises of federally assisted housing." n241

A separate statutory provision states that a tenant who has been evicted from federally assisted housing n242 for drug-related criminal activity n243 will be ineligible for federally assisted housing for three years, unless the person successfully completes an approved rehabilitation program. n244 In addition to the exception for rehabilitation, federal regulations indicate the housing agency could still admit the household if the circumstances leading to the eviction have changed, such as when the offender is in prison or has died. n245

§ 45.07(f)(4) Drug Users and Alcohol Abusers.

As a result of federal statute and regulation, public housing agencies are required to establish admission standards relating to drug use and alcohol abuse. As to the first of these, they must adopt standards prohibiting admission of any household in which a member is determined by the housing agency to be illegally using a controlled substance. n246 Public housing agencies are also required to adopt standards prohibiting the admission of a household if the public housing agency determines that it has reasonable cause to believe that a household member's illegal use of a controlled substance, or abuse of alcohol, "may interfere with the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents." n247 The public housing agency may consider evidence of rehabilitation in connection with its decision to deny admission. n248

§ 45.07(f)(5) Sex Offenders.

A federal statute that is applicable to various types of federally assisted housing, including public housing, n249 provides that, "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law, an owner of federally assisted housing shall prohibit admission to such housing for any household that includes any individual who is subject to a lifetime registration requirement under a State sex offender registration program." n250

The same statute requires public housing agencies to conduct criminal background checks on applicants and to make inquiries with state and local agencies to determine whether an applicant is subject to such a registration program. n251 If the public housing agency obtains information confirming that an individual is a registered sex offender, the agency is required to provide a copy of the information to the applicant and to give the applicant an opportunity to dispute its accuracy or its relevance. n252 The public housing agency is also required to have a system of records management that ensures that information regarding registered sex offenders is kept confidential and not misused. n253

§ 45.07(g) Protections for Crime Victims.

The 1937 Act includes a provision on admission of tenants that gives special protection to victims of some criminal activities. It prohibits a housing agency from denying admission to a housing project on the basis that an otherwise qualified applicant is or has been a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking. n254

§ 45.07(h) Procedures Relating to Eligibility Determinations and Admission.

§ 45.07(h)(1) Background.

Historically, there has been uncertainty over some procedural matters relating to the determination of eligibility for public housing and the admission of new tenants. Some of the uncertainty related to considerations of due process of law. Although due process of law issues are discussed more extensively in another section of this chapter, n255 it should be noted here that, in the 1970s, some courts had held that applicants to public housing were entitled to an evidentiary hearing in connection with a denial of their applications. n256 But this was not the universal view. In a 1972 case, for example, the New York Court of Appeals affirmed a lower court decision that had distinguished eviction from public housing from an eligibility determination and concluded that a full evidentiary hearing was not required. n257 The court stated that "a party aggrieved by loss of a pre-existing right or privilege may enjoy procedural rights not available to one denied the right or privilege in the first instance." n258

§ 45.07(h)(2) Legislation.

In the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, n259 the United States Housing Act was amended to include some provisions regarding procedures that housing agencies are to follow in the event they deny eligibility to an applicant. n260 The amended legislation requires every contract for contributions between a housing agency and HUD to include a provision obligating the housing agency to give prompt notification to the applicant of the basis for a determination of ineligibility. In addition, the contract for contributions must require the housing agency, upon the applicant's timely request, to provide the applicant "with an opportunity for an informal hearing" on the determination. n261

The legislation also includes a provision relating to notice if the housing agency determines that the applicant is eligible for admission. It states that the contributions contract is to include a provision requiring the housing agency to notify the applicant of the approximate date of occupancy. n262

The 1937 Act further requires that the contributions contract contain a provision requiring the public housing agency to determine that each family in the project was admitted in accordance with duly adopted regulations and approved income limits, and to so certify to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. n263

§ 45.07(h)(3) Regulations.

HUD regulations include significant provisions relating to procedures on eligibility determination and admission of tenants to public housing. They require, in the first instance, that public housing agencies adopt written policies for the admission of tenants, post the policies in the office where applications are received, and furnish the policies to applicants or tenants upon request. n264

When a unit becomes available for occupancy, HUD regulations require the public housing agency to select the new tenant from among applicants "with the same priority for admission" by using either the date and time of application or by using a "drawing or other random choice technique." n265 The regulations also require a "clear audit trail," so that use of a proper selection method can be verified. n266

The regulations provide that the housing agency may "match characteristics of the family with the type of unit available," including, for example, the number of bedrooms in a unit. n267 If the dwelling unit has special accessibility features for persons with disabilities, the housing agency is required to first offer the unit to families that include persons with disabilities. n268 If a single person is not elderly, displaced, or disabled, he or she may not be placed in a dwelling unit with two or more bedrooms. n269

It has been held, however, that an applicant for public housing does not have a right to be placed high on housing authority's waiting list or a right to be placed in a particular apartment unit. n270

With respect to the matter of criminal offenses, HUD regulations provide that, before a public housing agency denies admission to a public housing program on the basis of a criminal record, the housing agency is required to notify the household of the proposed action, provide the applicant and the offender with a copy of the criminal record, and provide an opportunity to dispute the accuracy and relevance of the record." n271

Regulations relating to tenant eligibility also include provisions relating to "screening." They state that the public housing agency is "responsible for screening family behavior and suitability for tenancy." n272 The housing agency is expressly permitted to consider "all relevant information," including: 1) the applicant's record in meeting financial obligations, "especially rent;" 2) a record of disturbing neighbors, property destruction, or habits that "may adversely affect the health, safety or welfare of other tenants;" and 3) "[a] history of criminal activity involving crimes of physical violence to persons or property and other criminal acts which would adversely affect the health, safety or welfare of other tenants." n273

With respect to this last criterion, the regulations provide that the housing agency could require an applicant to exclude a member of his or her household from occupancy, in order to qualify the rest of the household for admission, where that member has been involved in activities, generally of a drug-related type, that would justify denial of the application. n274

If the housing agency does receive "unfavorable" information relating to an applicant, the regulations state that the agency shall consider the time, nature, and extent of the applicant's conduct, including, where applicable, the seriousness of the offense. n275 This could include evidence of rehabilitation. n276

Screening issues are relevant to the assessment procedures that HUD uses to evaluate the performance of public housing agencies. n277 Housing agencies that can "document that they successfully screen out and deny admission to certain applicants with unfavorable criminal histories receive points" in the assessment process. n278 It is a plus, then, at least for assessment purposes, if the housing agency successfully screens out undesirable applicants. n279

Screening procedures might involve such basic elements as use of an application form, an interview with the applicant, and use of verification forms sent to third parties. n280 They might also be more elaborate. In a 1999 case, involving a screening issue, the housing authority required applicants to complete an application, which included a questionnaire and release forms giving the housing authority access to the applicant's criminal history and chemical-dependency treatment records. The housing authority also required a thirty-six-month rental history or three letters of reference. n281

§ 45.07(h)(4) Cases on Procedural Issues.

In some cases, housing authorities have been found to have violated procedural requirements of federal legislation or regulations regarding tenant admission. n282

By way of example, in a case arising in Wisconsin, a housing authority's procedures regarding rejected applicants were held not to comply with federally mandated notice and hearing requirements. The rejection forms that were sent to public housing applicants gave no factual basis for the rejection, and the same person who had made the determination to reject an application acted as one of two persons conducting the hearing. n283

In a Fifth Circuit case, the court found that the housing authority's rejection notice was inadequate because it merely parroted the broad language of HUD regulations. And a subsequent meeting did not qualify as a required "informal hearing" because no impartial hearing officer was present. n284

In contrast, a public housing applicant who had been denied admission to public housing met with less success in challenging an aspect of a housing authority's screening procedures. n285 The applicant claimed that the housing authority use of a question on its application form about drug and alcohol use, and its requirement that applicants sign medical record release forms, violated federal and state anti-discrimination laws and local ordinances. The question at issue was: ""Have you or any member of your family intending to live with you in public housing EVER been in a detoxification center or a chemical dependency treatment program? ... If yes, where?" n286 Based on provisions of the 1937 Act relating to use of illegal drugs, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the housing authority's use of the question and the related medical release requirements. However, it determined that the record on appeal was too incomplete for it to determine whether the applicant had been properly excluded from public housing, so it remanded the case to the district court.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 184. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(1).

(n2)Footnote 185. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.201. There are some exceptions that permit the admission of "over-income families" in limited circumstances and admission of police officers who are not otherwise eligible for public housing on terms and conditions determined by the public housing agency. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(4) & (5).

(n3)Footnote 186. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)(3); 24 C.F.R. § 5.403. The regulation lists several "family" configurations, but states that the definition of "family" is not limited to those in the list. See id. However, it has been held that a policy of not renting to minors does not run afoul of federal regulations. See Rodriguez v. Reading Housing Authority, 8 F.3d 961 (3d Cir. 1993) ; cf., Swann v. Finkel, 742 N.Y.S.2d 824 (App. Div. 2002) (court concludes that it was arbitrary and capricious to deny, without a hearing, a 16 year old daughter's right to succeed to her father's tenancy as a remaining family member and her request for a lease in her own name solely because she was a minor).

(n4)Footnote 187. One's status as a remaining family member is not a guarantee that he or she will be able to succeed to the tenancy of a deceased relative. See e.g., Castanon v. Franco, 736 N.Y.S.2d 337 (App. Div. 2002) (son of deceased public housing tenant failed to meet the requirements to succeed to a public housing lease as a remaining family member because his incarceration within five years of his succession application rendered him "not otherwise eligible" for a public housing tenancy); Faison v. New York City Housing Authority, 726 N.Y.S.2d 23 (App. Div. 2001) (son of deceased public housing resident rejected as a tenant; court concludes that federal statutes and regulations did not preclude applicability of housing authority regulations denying leases to persons with criminal records).

(n5)Footnote 188. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437(a)(1).

(n6)Footnote 189. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.201(a)(2). "PHA" stands for "Public Housing Agency," and refers to a "State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body, or agency or instrumentality of these entities, that is authorized to engage or assist in the development or operation of low-income housing under the 1937 Act." 24 C.F.R. § 5.100.

(n7)Footnote 190. 24 C.F.R. § 5.603(b). A public housing agency may terminate the tenancy of families who are "over income." See 24 C.F.R. § 960.261 However, there are some exceptions that permit the admission of "over-income families" in limited circumstances and admission of police officers who are not otherwise eligible for public housing on terms and conditions determined by the public housing agency. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(4) & (5). The only restrictions on admission of police officers seems to be that it be done in accordance with the public housing agency plan and that it be done for the purpose of increasing security for the residents of the public housing project. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(4).

(n8)Footnote 191. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.609.

(n9)Footnote 192. Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 552 (1993) (footnote omitted). See also Fletcher v. Housing Authority of Louisville, 525 F.2d 532 (6th Cir. 1975) (housing authorities contended that an income-mix was essential to the creation of economically viable housing and a healthy social environment).

(n10)Footnote 193. See Gholston v. Housing Authority of City of Montgomery, 818 F.2d 776 (11th Cir. 1987) .

(n11)Footnote 194. 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(2).

(n12)Footnote 195. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.603; 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(b)(I).

(n13)Footnote 196. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(2).

(n14)Footnote 197. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437n(a)(4) & (b). 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(f) distinguishes "project-based assistance" from "tenant-based assistance." Project-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is attached to the structure," while tenant-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is not project-based assistance and that provides for the eligible family to select suitable housing and to move to other suitable housing." *Id. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437f(f)*6 &7. Section 8 program certificates or vouchers that permit tenants to move to other apartments, operated by private landlords, are examples of tenant-based assistance. The Section 8 program is discussed in § 45.22(d) of this chapter.

(n15)Footnote 198. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(1).

(n16)Footnote 199. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(3).

(n17)Footnote 200. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(3)(B)(I). However, the legislation states that this requirement "may not be construed to impose or require any specific income or racial quotas for any project or projects." Id. See also 24 C.F.R. § 903.2(a)(2).

(n18)Footnote 201. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(B)(i). See also 24 C.F.R. § 903.2(a).

(n19)Footnote 202. See 24 C.F.R. § 903.2(b)(1).

(n20)Footnote 203. See 24 C.F.R. § 903.2(b)(2). 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(f) distinguishes "project-based assistance" from "tenant-based assistance." Project-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is attached to the structure," while tenant-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is not project-based assistance and that provides for the eligible family to select suitable housing and to move to other suitable housing." *Id. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437f(f)*6 &7. Demolition of public housing units is discussed in § 45.16(c) of this chapter. Conversion to tenant-based assistance is discussed in § 45.18.

(n21)Footnote 204. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(d).

(n22)Footnote 205. 818 F.2d 776 (11th Cir. 1987) ; see also Fletcher v. Housing Authority of Louisville, 491 F.2d 793 (6th Cir. 1974) , vacated and remanded, 419 U.S. 812 (1974) , reinstated, 525 F.2d 532 (6th Cir. 1975) (court concluded that a housing authority's "rent-range" formula violated the 1937 Act; the Act was subsequently amended to permit rent-ranges, but the court, on remand, concluded that the change was not retroactive).

(n23)Footnote 206. See 818 F.2d at 782 .

(n24)Footnote 207. 843 F.2d 561 (1st Cir. 1988) .

(n25)Footnote 208. See Pub. L. No. 100-628 § 1001, 102 Stat. 3224, 3263 (1988) (amending 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437d(c)(4)(A) & 1437n(c)). The Conference Report on the legislation states that the "anti-skipping language" was necessary in light of the decision in the Paris case. See H.R. Conf. Rep. No 100-718(I)100th Cong. 2d Sess. 91-92 (1988), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N.4395, 4475-76. See also Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 738 (1994).

(n26)Footnote 209. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(2)(B).

(n27)Footnote 210. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(a)(B)(iii). See also 24 C.F. R. § 903.2(c)(v)(D).

(n28)Footnote 211. See 24 C.F.R. § 903.2(c)(1)(v)(D).

(n29)Footnote 212. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(c)(4)).

(n30)Footnote 213. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(5).

(n31)Footnote 214. However, housing agencies are not permitted to adopt preferences targeting specific disabilities. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(b).

(n32)Footnote 215. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(b). Housing agencies are permitted to give preferences to "single persons who are age 62 or older, displaced, homeless, or persons with disabilities over other single persons." Id.

(n33)Footnote 216. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(b). Cf., Hess v. Ward, 497 F. Supp. 786 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (Housing authority's policy of granting preferences in filling public housing vacancies based upon the duration of residency was contrary to then-existing HUD regulations).

(n34)Footnote 217. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(a)(3).

(n35)Footnote 218. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(a)(4).

(n36)Footnote 219. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(a)(2).

(n37)Footnote 220. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(c).

(n38)Footnote 221. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(a).

(n39)Footnote 222. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(a).

(n40)Footnote 223. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(a).

(n41)Footnote 224. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(a). These are listed in 24 C.F.R. § 5.105. The list include statutes, regulations, and executive orders relating to discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, familial status, national origin, age, and disability.

(n42)Footnote 225. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(a).

(n43)Footnote 226. See James v. New York City Housing Authority, 622 F. Supp. 1356 (S.D. N.Y. 1985) (court struck down court struck down "duration-of-family composition" requirements; applicants who had been living apart from an unrelated adult or family member, but who sought to be united with that adult or family member, were automatically disqualified for public housing unless they lived together for one year before their application was filed; conversely, applicants who had been living with an unrelated adult or family member were automatically disqualified from public housing until they lived apart for at least six months). See also Atkisson v. Kern County Housing Authority, 130 Cal. Rptr. 375 (Cal. Ct. App. 1976) (based, in part, on the provisions of a HUD circular that prohibited automatic exclusion of a particular class of persons defined by their marital status, the court struck down a housing authority rule that forbade tenants from living with anyone of the opposite sex--other than individuals related to the tenants by blood, marriage or adoption).

However, it has been held that a policy of not renting to minors does not run afoul of federal regulations prohibiting automatic denial of admission to category of otherwise eligible applicants, because the regulations also allow admission criteria to be reasonably related to individual attributes and behavior. See Rodriguez v. Reading Housing Authority, 8 F.3d 961 (3d Cir. 1993) ; see also Rivera v. Reading Housing Authority, 819 F. Supp. 1323 (E.D. Pa. 1993) (court upholds housing authority requiring minor applicants to provide judicial decree of emancipation); cf., Swann v. Finkel, 742 N.Y.S.2d 824 (App. Div. 2002) (court concludes that it was arbitrary and capricious to deny, without a hearing, a 16 year old daughter's right to succeed to her father's tenancy as a remaining family member).

(n44)Footnote 227. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 735 (1994).

(n45)Footnote 228. See Thomas v. Housing Authority of Little Rock, 282 F. Supp. 575 (E.D. Ark. 1967) .

(n46)Footnote 229. See Cole v. Housing Authority of Newport, 435 F.2d 807 (1st Cir. 1970) (two-year residency requirement); but see Lane v. McGarry, 320 F. Supp. 562 (D. N.Y. 1970) (housing authority regulation that required residence in state for one year immediately prior to application was not unconstitutional). Current HUD regulations, it should be noted, permit preferences based on residency, but not residency requirements. See 24 C.F.R. § 982.207(b).

(n47)Footnote 230. See Neddo v. Housing Authority of Milwaukee, 335 F. Supp. 1397 (E.D. Wis. 1971) .

(n48)Footnote 231. See Maningo v. New York City Housing Authority, 273 N.Y.S.2d 1003 (App. Div. 1966) .

(n49)Footnote 232. See, e.g, Thomas v. Housing Authority of Little Rock, 282 F. Supp. 575 (E.D. Ark. 1967) ("unwed" mother status); Neddo v. Housing Authority of Milwaukee, 335 F. Supp. 1397 (E.D. Wis. 1971) (unpaid rent); Maningo v. New York City Housing Authority, 273 N.Y.S.2d 1003 (App. Div. 1966) (felony conviction). Some courts struck down residency requirements as interfering with the right to travel. See, e.g., King v. New Rochelle Municipal Housing Authority, 442 F.2d 646 (2d Cir. 1971) , cert. denied, 404 U.S. 863 (1971) (invalidation of five-year residency requirement); Cole v. Housing Authority of Newport, 435 F.2d 807 (1st Cir. 1970) (two-year residency requirement). But this was not the universal view. Cf., Fayerweather v. Town of Narragansett Housing Authority, 848 F. Supp. 19 (D. R.I. 1994) (Housing authority's use of a local residency preference was upheld); Lane v. McGarry, 320 F. Supp 562 (N.D. NY 1970) (one-year residency requirement upheld).

(n50)Footnote 233. Neddo v. Housing Authority of Milwaukee, 335 F. Supp. 1397 (E.D. Wis. 1971) .

(n51)Footnote 234. See Maningo v. New York City Housing Authority, 273 N.Y.S.2d 1003 (App. Div. 1966) .

(n52)Footnote 235. See Thomas v. Housing Authority of Little Rock, 282 F. Supp. 575 (E.D. Ark 1967) . The court said that the "desirability" rule in that case failed to account for "the circumstances of the illegitimate birth or births, the age, knowledge, training or experience of the mother, or the possibility or likelihood of future illegitimate births." Id. at 580 .

(n53)Footnote 236. See Holmes v. New York City Housing Authority, 398 F.2d 262 (2d Cir. 1968) ; but see Phelps v. Housing Authority of Woodruff, 742 F.2d 816 (4th Cir. 1984) (expressing disagreement with the Holmes decision).

(n54)Footnote 237. See Phelps v. Housing Authority of Woodruff, 742 F.2d 816 (4th Cir. 1984) (applicant preference provisions in the Housing Act do not create a constitutionally cognizable property interest). See also Sumpter v. White Plains Housing Authority, 328 N.Y.S.2d 649 (N.Y. 1972) (rejected applicant was entitled only to be informed of the reason or reasons for rejection at a personal interview, and was not entitled to a full evidentiary hearing; the court stated: "It has long been settled that a party aggrieved by loss of a pre-existing right or privilege may enjoy procedural rights not available to one denied the right or privilege in the first instance.").

(n55)Footnote 238. See 42 U.S.C. § 13661(c). The statute references exceptions relating to specific criminal activities, it acknowledges the possibility of rehabilitation. See id.

(n56)Footnote 239. See 42 U.S.C. § 13661(c).

(n57)Footnote 240. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437n(f). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(3). The regulation refers to conviction of "drug-related criminal activity for manufacture or production of methamphetamine on the premises of federally assisted housing." Id.

(n58)Footnote 241. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(3).

(n59)Footnote 242. This includes public housing. See 42 U.S.C. § 13664(a)(2).

(n60)Footnote 243. As defined in 42 U.S.C. 1437a(b).

(n61)Footnote 244. See 42 U.S.C. § 1366(a). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a).

(n62)Footnote 245. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a).

(n63)Footnote 246. See 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(2).

(n64)Footnote 247. See 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(2).

(n65)Footnote 248. See 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b)(2).

(n66)Footnote 249. See 42 U.S.C. § 13664(a)(2).

(n67)Footnote 250. See 42 U.S.C. § 13663(a). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(4).

(n68)Footnote 251. See 42 U.S.C. § 13663(b).

(n69)Footnote 252. See 42 U.S.C. § 13663(d).

(n70)Footnote 253. See 42 U.S.C. § 13663(f)

(n71)Footnote 254. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(3).

(n72)Footnote 255. See § 45.08(b) of this chapter.

(n73)Footnote 256. See, e.g., Neddo v. Housing Authority of Milwaukee, 335 F. Supp. 1397 (E.D. Wis. 1971) ; Davis v. Toledo Metropolitan Housing Authority, 311 F. Supp. 795 (N. D Ohio 1970) .

(n74)Footnote 257. See e.g., Sumpter v. White Plains Housing Authority, 278 N.E.2d 892 (N.Y. 1972) , cert. denied, 406 U.S. 928 (1972) .

(n75)Footnote 258. See 278 N.E.2d at 894 .

(n76)Footnote 259. Pub. L. No. 93-383, 88 Stat. 659 (1974).

(n77)Footnote 260. Pub. L. No. 93-383, tit. II §201; 88 Stat. 659 (1974).

(n78)Footnote 261. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(4). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.208.

(n79)Footnote 262. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(4). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.208.

(n80)Footnote 263. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(c)(2).

(n81)Footnote 264. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.202(c).

(n82)Footnote 265. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(e).

(n83)Footnote 266. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(e).

(n84)Footnote 267. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(c).

(n85)Footnote 268. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(c).

(n86)Footnote 269. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.206(d).

(n87)Footnote 270. See Hanrahan v. Housing and Redevelopment Authority of Duluth, Minn. 912 F. Supp. 428 (D.

Minn. 1995) , aff'd , 86 F.3d 1159 (8th Cir. 1996) .

(n88)Footnote 271. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.204(a)(4)(c).

(n89)Footnote 272. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(c).

(n90)Footnote 273. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(c).

(n91)Footnote 274. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(c)(3)(i). The specific criminal activities referred to are set forth in 24 C.F.R. § 960.204.

(n92)Footnote 275. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(d).

(n93)Footnote 276. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(d)(1)(i).

(n94)Footnote 277. Assessment procedures are discussed in § 45.06(c) of this chapter.

(n95)Footnote 278. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(b); see also See 24 C.F.R. § 902.43(a)(5).

(n96)Footnote 279. The regulation goes on to observe: "This policy takes into account the importance of screening to public housing communities and program integrity, and the demand for assisted housing by families who will adhere to lease responsibilities." 24 C.F.R. § 960.203(b).

(n97)Footnote 280. See United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, Public Housing Occupancy Guidebook 49-50 (2003).

(n98)Footnote 281. See Campbell v. Minneapolis Public Housing Authority ex rel. City of Campbell v. Minneapolis Public Housing Authority ex rel. City of Minneapolis, 168 F.3d 1069, 1071 (8th Cir. 1999) .

(n99)Footnote 282. See, e.g., Billington v. Underwood, 613 F.2d 91 (5th Cir. 1980) ; McNair v. New York City Housing Authority, 613 F. Supp. 910 (S.D. N.Y. 1985) ; Singleton v. Drew, 485 F. Supp. 1020 (D.C. Wis. 1980.

(n100)Footnote 283. See Singleton v. Drew, 485 F. Supp. 1020 (D.C. Wis. 1980) .

(n101)Footnote 284. See Billington v. Underwood, 613 F.2d 91 (5th Cir. 1980) .

(n102)Footnote 285. See Campbell v. Minneapolis Public Housing Authority ex rel. City of Campbell v. Minneapolis Public Housing Authority ex rel. City of Minneapolis, 168 F.3d 1069 (8th Cir. 1999) .

(n103)Footnote 286. See 168 F.3d at 1071 .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.08

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.08 The Public Housing Lease.

[Go To Supp]

§ 45.08(a) Introduction.

In the early days of public housing, public housing authorities "operated essentially like private landlords." n287 Most leases of public housing units were periodic tenancies, of a month-to-month variety. n288 It was thought that a housing authority could terminate a lease in accordance with normal landlord-tenant rules, without a showing of cause. Project managers typically "enjoyed considerable discretion over the admission, placement, and eviction of tenants, as well as responsibility for day-to-day management and maintenance of public housing." n289 Local housing authorities developed "desirability" requirements that included social and behavioral criteria that could be used to refuse admission to public housing applicants. n290 Project managers had "almost unchecked power to evict tenants." n291 There was little in the way of procedural protection for tenants threatened with eviction. n292 But this state of affairs did not continue unchanged.

§ 45.08(b) Due Process and the Public Housing Lease.

§ 45.08(b)(1) Background Developments.

In a relatively early case involving due process issues, Rudder v. United States, n293 the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit denied the government the landlord's traditional power to evict tenants on 30 days' notice for any reason or no reason at all, stating: "The government as landlord is still the government. It must not act arbitrarily, for, unlike private landlords, it is subject to the requirements of due process of law. Arbitrary action is not due process." n294

Due process issues were in the background in a subsequent public housing case that came before the United States Supreme Court. In Thorpe v. Housing Authority of the City of Durham, n295 the Court was asked to consider whether a public housing tenant on a month-to-month lease was entitled to procedural safeguards prior to eviction. The tenant's lease permitted the tenant to automatically renew for successive one-month terms, provided that the tenant maintained the same income level and family composition and otherwise complied with the terms of the lease. However, the lease also provided that either the tenant or the housing authority could terminate the lease by providing notice at least fifteen days prior to the end of a monthly term.

The day after the tenant had been elected president of a tenants' organization, the executive director of the housing authority notified the tenant that her lease would terminate at the end of the month. The housing authority offered no reasons for its action. While the termination proceedings were pending, HUD issued a circular requiring that, prior to evicting a tenant, a public housing authority had to provide a tenant with the specific reasons for the action and an opportunity to respond. The Supreme Court held that the HUD circular was binding on the housing authority and that the tenant could not be evicted unless the housing authority complied with the HUD requirements. The Court rejected the housing authority's argument that application of the HUD circular would unconstitutionally interfere with the housing authority's rights under its annual contributions contract with HUD and would also unconstitutionally interfere with its lease with the public housing tenant.

A year after its decision in the Thorpe case, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Goldberg v. Kelly. n296 Goldberg involved a challenge to the termination of welfare benefits. The Court said, of those benefits:

> Such benefits are a matter of statutory entitlement for persons qualified to receive them. Their termination involves state action that adjudicates important rights. The constitutional challenge cannot be answered by an argument that public assistance benefits are "a 'privilege' and not a 'right.'" n297

The Court also observed: "It may be realistic today to regard welfare entitlements as more like 'property' than a 'gratuity.'" n298 It concluded that a pre-termination hearing was required before such benefits could be terminated. This did not have to take the form of a "judicial or quasi-judicial trial." n299 But a welfare recipient was entitled to "timely and adequate notice detailing the reasons for a proposed termination, and an effective opportunity to defend by confronting any adverse witnesses and by presenting his own arguments and evidence orally." n300

Goldberg was not a public housing case. It was left to other courts to apply the teachings of Goldberg to public housing benefits.

§ 45.08(b)(2) Escalera.

One of the most influential of these cases was Escalera v. New York City Housing Authority. n301 It was class-action suit in federal court, brought by some month-to-month public housing tenants who claimed, among other things, that certain practices of the New York City Housing Authority violated the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The tenants challenged the procedures of the housing authority relating to: (1) termination of the tenancy on the ground of "non-desirability;" (2) termination of tenancy for violation of housing authority rules and regulations; and (3) assessment of "additional rent" charges based on undesirable tenant acts. n302

The housing authority's leases could be terminated on grounds of non-desirability with one-month's notice. n303 A tenant family was considered to be non-desirable if it constituted > a detriment to health, safety or morals of its neighbors or the community; an adverse influence upon sound family and community life; a source of danger or a cause of damage to the property of the Authority; a source of danger to the peaceful occupation of other tenants, or a nuisance. n304

If a tenant's undesirable acts reached a level where the manager of the housing project decided to recommend termination of the tenancy, the manager would have a meeting with the tenant at which the manager would inform the tenant of his or her proposed recommendation, review with the tenant the information in the tenant's folder, and discuss the undesirable activity. The tenant would be given a chance to explain his or her activity. If, after this meeting, the project manager still wished to recommend termination, the tenant would be notified that he or she could submit a written statement that would be sent, along with the project manager's recommendation, to the housing authority's tenant review board.

The tenant review board consisted of eight officers of the housing authority. The board would consider the tenant's folder and the project manager's recommendation. If the board made a preliminary determination of tenant non-desirability, it would inform the tenant in writing that it was "considering a recommendation" of termination, and that, if the tenant requested an appearance within ten days, the tenant would be notified of the conduct under consideration and could appear before the board to tell the tenant's side of the matter. If the tenant did not make the request within the ten-day period, the recommendation of the project manager would become final. n305 If the tenant made a timely request, he or she would be given notice of the time and place of the hearing, the general definition of a non-desirable tenant, a short statement of the nature of the non-desirable conduct under consideration, and the fact that the tenant could bring any person to represent the tenant at the hearing. n306 At the hearing, one of the members of the hearing panel would normally read a summary of the entries in the tenant's folder, the tenant would be permitted to comment, or to question witnesses who might be present. The tenant would generally not be permitted to see the contents of the folder, the names of those who had complained of the tenant's non-desirable activity, or the summary of the entries. The rules and regulations governing these procedures would not be made available to the tenant, even upon request. No transcript would be generated from the hearing. n307

The hearing panel could decide the non-desirability issue on the basis of the tenant's entire folder, including entries that were not referenced in the notice to the tenant or at the hearing itself. If the panel decided that the tenant was non-desirable, the tenant would be given one-month's notice for termination. But the tenant would not be given findings or reasons for the panel's decision. n308

Violation of "Tenant Rules and Regulations" also constituted a ground for terminating the lease of a tenant. In this situation, the project manager would meet with the tenant, inform the tenant of the alleged violation and the possibility of termination, and give the tenant an opportunity to tell the tenant's side of the story. If, after the meeting, the project manager decided that the tenancy should be terminated, the manager would forward the tenant's folder and a recommendation to terminate to the central office of the housing authority. If the central office approved the recommendation, a notice to vacate after one month would be sent to the tenant. n309

According to the "Tenant Rules and Regulations," the housing authority could charge "additional rent" to tenants for repair of damage to the leased premises, for additional services that were provided for a tenant, or for "liquidated damages" resulting from the tenant's violation of rules and requirements established for protection of the housing authority's property and of other tenants. The amount of any additional rent would be within the project manager's discretion. The project manager could impose additional rent after giving notice to the tenant. If the tenant failed to pay the additional rent, the housing authority could sue in civil court. n310

The case actually implicated several tenant leases. In one situation, the housing authority sought to terminate a family's lease based on an allegation that a son in that family had committed statutory rape. The authority sought to terminate another lease because of a tenant's arrest on a narcotics charge. It sought to terminate other leases for failure to pay "additional rent" based on undesirable acts. The tenants requested hearings. One tenant demanded other things, including advance notice of the charge, a hearing transcript, the opportunity to confront and to cross-examine witnesses, and to have an impartial hearing examiner. The tenant review board permitted the tenant's lawyer to inspect the tenant's file, but it did not grant the other requests, and the tenant refused to participate in the "hearing." Another tenant participated in a hearing but was not permitted to inspect the file.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit distinguished the rules and procedures mandated by the HUD circular, at issue in the Thorpe case, from the rules and procedures required by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Although the court considered the lease termination provisions on non-desirability to comport with the standards of the HUD circular, this was not determinative of the constitutional issue.

The court concluded that the "one-sentence notices" sent to the tenants were insufficient to apprise them of the conduct at issue. Moreover, the meeting with the manager did not cure the problem, because the manager did not divulge all entries in the folder, and some of them could influence the board's decision. Denying the tenants access to the material in their folders was also problematic, when the entire folder was considered by the board. And the hearing before the board was of questionable value when the board could base its decision on matters in the tenant's folder of which the tenant had no knowledge. The court also discerned constitutional deficiencies in the board's failure to set forth reasons for its decision, the inability of the tenant to confront and cross-examine individuals who supplied information on which the board's action was based, and the inability of the tenant to obtain the rules applicable to the termination proceedings. n311

The court found similar deficiencies in the procedures for terminating a tenancy for violation of the housing authority's rules and regulations and for the imposition of additional rent. With respect to the latter, the court observed that the fact that additional rent was contemplated in the lease was not "dispositive of the question of the fairness of the procedures under which said charges are imposed." n312 And the court had the following to say about the nature of the hearing that would be required in these situations: "Although a full-fledged adversary hearing need not be afforded in all cases, the tenant must be adequately informed of the nature of the evidence against him and accorded an adequate opportunity to rebut the evidence." n313

Because the plaintiffs' claims had been dismissed at the pleadings stage, the court was unable to make final determinations about the actual facts related to the tenants' claims, or what procedures would be required in each instance. However, the court was clear in stating that "[c]ertain aspects of the alleged ... procedures cannot stand without a convincing showing at trial that the [the housing authority] has a compelling need for procedural expedition." n314

§ 45.08(b)(3) Other Cases.

Other cases followed the Escalera lead. In Caulder v. Durham Housing Authority, n315 the housing authority advised a month-to-month tenant that her lease would be terminated because of complaints from neighbors. At a termination hearing, the hearing commissioners denied the tenant's request to learn the nature of the specific allegations that had been made against her, the names of those who had complained about her, and the procedural rules that governed the hearing. A judge heard the evidence of the complaining witnesses in camera, and the tenant did not have an opportunity to challenge or cross-examine them. The tenant challenged the termination of her lease on the ground that she had been denied due process of law. n316

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit stated that "[w]hatever question there might have been in the application of the due process clause or the scope of the protection which it affords with regard to the eviction of tenants in public housing has been laid to rest by the decision in Goldberg v. Kelly." n317 The court also agreed with the Escalera decision, and it ruled that the tenants were entitled to specific procedural safeguards, including timely and adequate notice stating the reasons for the proposed termination, the right to cross-examine adverse witnesses, the right to be represented by counsel, the right to a hearing decision based on evidence actually presented, the right to have the reasons for the hearing decision set forth in writing, and the right to a nonpartisan decision-maker. n318

Other courts held that tenants should receive notice and an opportunity to be heard with respect to actions with potentially adverse consequences, such as rent increases, capital improvements, or demolition or sale of housing units. n319 In Burr v. New Rochelle Municipal Housing, n320 for example, the court said that tenants should have had notice and the opportunity to challenge a service charge (rent increase) of $2.00 per unit, which was intended to offset increasing utility costs. The court did not impose a requirement for an "oral presentation," in connection with the challenge, but it did insist that tenants be able to file written objections. It also required the final decision to be evidenced by a written statement giving reasons for the decision. n321

The issue of whether a public housing tenant should have a right to court-appointed counsel in public housing cases has not been the subject of much judicial treatment. However, the issue arose in a New York case in which public housing tenants sued to prevent the housing authority from evicting them based on the conduct of their non-resident adult children. n322 The court concluded that appointment of counsel for an indigent tenant was not required by the Constitution. The tenant had the right to be heard, but due process was satisfied, said the court "[a]s long as a tenant is afforded the opportunity to be heard either pro se or by a retained attorney." n323

§ 45.08(c) Legislation and Regulations Relating to Lease Provisions.

§ 45.08(c)(1) Introduction.

In 1971, in the aftermath of some court decisions supporting due process protections for public housing tenants, the Department of Housing and Urban Development issued two circulars that imposed significant obligations on public housing authorities. n324 One of the circulars required public housing authorities to integrate a number of specific provisions into tenant leases, including provisions stating that the lease could be terminated only for good cause, requiring the housing authority to give the tenant the reasons for an eviction, and providing the tenant with an opportunity to reply at a hearing.

The other circular required housing authorities to adopt grievance procedures consistent with due process requirements. n325 The circulars were challenged by a number of housing authorities as contrary to a provision of the 1937 Act stating that it was the "policy of the United States to vest in the local public housing agencies the maximum amount of responsibility in the administration of the low-rent housing program." n326 However, in Housing Authority of the City of Omaha, Nebraska v. United States Housing Authority, n327 the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that HUD had "the ultimate supervision and authority in carrying out the objectives of the Housing Act," n328 and it upheld the issuance of the circulars.

In 1983, Congress enacted legislation relating to the legal issues referenced in the circulars. In the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, n329 Congress directed HUD to develop regulations requiring local housing authorities to implement administrative grievance procedures that provide due process protections to tenants. It also required local housing authorities to use leases that included substantive provisions protective of tenants. n330 In more recent times, legislation has required additional lease provisions relating to the behavior of public housing residents and other matters. n331

§ 45.08(c)(2) Grievance Procedures.

Pursuant to congressional action, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development was directed to issue regulations requiring public housing agencies to establish and implement administrative grievance procedures for the benefit of tenants. n332 The legislation states that such a procedure must provide for public housing tenants to: 1) be advised of the specific grounds of any proposed adverse action by the public housing agency; 2) have an opportunity for a hearing before an impartial party upon timely request; 3) have an opportunity to examine any documents, records, or regulations related to the proposed action; 4) be entitled to representation by another person of their choice at any hearing; 5) be entitled to question witnesses and have others make statements on their behalf; and 6) be entitled to receive a written decision by the public housing agency with respect to the proposed action. n333

The legislation permits the establishment of expedited grievance procedures in cases in which the grievance concerns an eviction or tenancy termination for activities that threaten the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises of other tenants or public housing agency employees. Expedited procedures are also appropriate if the grievance concerns any violent or drug-related criminal activity or any activity resulting in a felony conviction. n334 However, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is permitted to exclude such a grievance from the grievance procedure in a jurisdiction that requires that, prior to eviction, a tenant be given a court hearing that the

Secretary determines provides the basic elements of due process. n335

In some instances, it should be noted, court-available procedures have been found to be inadequate to protect the interests of public housing tenants. n336 And it was held in one case that a housing authority was not permitted to avoid the administrative grievance procedure in a case involving an alleged assault on a public housing authority employee, because the housing authority had not included sufficient provisions in the lease about the grievance procedure and when it would, and would not, apply. n337

Additional details regarding grievance procedures are set forth in HUD regulations. n338 These include provisions for informal settlement of disputes, procedures for obtaining a hearing, and hearing procedures. The regulations state that the procedures apply to "all individual grievances" between the tenant and the public housing authority. n339

According to the regulations, a grievance is to be presented to the office of the public housing agency, or to the office of the project where the tenant lives, so that the grievance can be discussed informally and settled without a hearing. n340 No hearing is required if the grievance is settled after informal discussion. If an informal resolution does not take place, and if the tenant timely requests a hearing, a hearing will be conducted before an impartial person or persons appointed by the public housing agency. If the tenant does not timely request a hearing, the housing authority's disposition of the grievance becomes final. n341 If the grievance involves the amount of the rent, the family is required to make rent deposits with the housing authority while the grievance is pending. n342

The decision of the hearing officer, or panel, is binding upon the public housing agency, unless the agency's board of commissioners timely determines that the matter did not amount to a grievance in the first place or if the decision was contrary to applicable law, regulations, or the provisions of the contributions contract with HUD. n343

Tenants have sometimes been successful in asserting claims that housing authorities failed to provide them with grievance procedures required under the 1937 Act and related regulations. n344 However, in one case, involving a claim by the tenant that the housing authority had not provided a proper hearing in connection with its refusal to allow her husband to become a tenant in her dwelling unit, the court concluded that the housing authority's failure was not actionable, because the husband's criminal record was so extensive that he would not have been permitted to have become a tenant in any event. n345

In a New York case, a public housing resident, who had lived in public housing with his tenant-mother, was held to be not entitled to a grievance proceeding on the question of his status as a "remaining family member." The housing authority had already terminated his mother's tenancy on account of her previous arrest for a drug infraction. n346 The court reasoned that, in such a case, there were no succession rights to the tenancy to consider, so no grievance proceeding was required.

§ 45.08(c)(3) Other Public Housing Lease Provisions.

Congress has also mandated significant additional content requirements for public housing agency leases. Many of the mandated provisions are protective of individual tenants. Others are for the benefit of the housing project itself, or the other tenants in the housing project, rather than for the benefit of the individual tenants whose conduct or status is called into question. Required lease provisions on rent, eviction, and the obligations of the housing authority with respect to the quality of the leased premises, are discussed in greater detail in other sections of this chapter. n347 But there are other lease provisions that are required by statute and by regulation that indicate the unique nature of a public housing lease.

Among other things, federal legislation requires public housing agencies to use leases that: 1) have a term of 12 months and are automatically renewable; n348 2) do not contain unreasonable terms and conditions; 3) obligate the public housing agency to maintain the housing project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition; 4) require the public housing agency to give adequate written notice of lease termination; n349 5) prohibit the public housing agency from terminating the tenancy "except for serious or repeated violation of the terms or conditions of the lease or for other good cause;" n350 6) specify that, with respect to any notice of eviction or termination, a public housing tenant shall be informed of the opportunity, prior to any hearing or trial, to examine documents, records, or regulations directly related to the eviction or termination; and (7) provide that it will be a cause for immediate lease termination if a tenant is fleeing prosecution, custody, or confinement after conviction, or if the tenant is violating a condition of probation or parole. n351

The legislation also mandates that public housing agencies use leases that provide for lease termination for certain kinds of criminal activities, including drug-related crimes or criminal acts that threaten the safety of other tenants, that are engaged in by the tenant, members of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control. n352

HUD regulations deal with a variety of lease-content matters as well. Some of them echo the statutory provisions just discussed. However, the regulations also include detailed provisions on a number of additional matters.

Some of the regulations concern payments due under the lease. For example, the regulations require the lease to provide for charges for repairs beyond normal wear and tear, and for charges for consumption of "excess utilities." n353 They permit the lease to provide for the assessment of late charges and security deposits. n354 The regulations also require the lease to provide for a periodic redetermination of rent and family composition. n355

The regulations require the lease to provide that the tenant will have the right to exclusive use and occupancy of the leased unit by members of the household, as well as the right to provide reasonable accommodation of guests. n356 But they also require the lease to include provisions that impose limitations or obligations on the tenant. These include provisions prohibiting subleasing or assignment; prohibiting tenants from providing accommodations for boarders or lodgers; prohibiting the use of the dwelling unit for purposes other than a private dwelling; requiring tenants to keep the dwelling unit in a clean and safe condition; requiring tenants to comply with reasonable and necessary regulations promulgated by the housing authority for the well-being of the housing project and other tenants; requiring tenants to pay reasonable charges for damages to the dwelling unit caused by the tenant, a household member or guest; n357 and requiring tenants to request housing agency approval to add any other family member as an occupant of the unit. n358

The regulations require the lease to set forth the circumstances under which the housing agency may enter the tenant's dwelling unit. The lease is to provide, for example, that upon reasonable advance notice, the housing agency may enter during reasonable hours to do routine inspections and maintenance, to make repairs, or to show the dwelling unit to others for re-leasing. n359 It is also to provide that the housing agency "may enter the dwelling unit at any time without advance notification when there is reasonable cause to believe that an emergency exists." n360 Abuse of this kind of lease provision will probably not receive a good reception in the courts. In a case arising out of Florida, a federal district court ruled that neither the housing authority, nor local law enforcement officers, could use a comparable paragraph in public housing leases "as a substitute for consent or probable cause to search the public housing apartments" of a housing authority. n361

Other regulations require the lease to set forth obligations of the public housing agency. Thus, the lease is required to include provisions that, among other things, require the housing agency to maintain the dwelling unit and the project in decent, safe, and sanitary condition; to comply with applicable codes and regulations materially affecting health and safety; to make necessary repairs to the dwelling unit; to keep buildings, facilities, and common areas that are not under the tenant's control in a clean and safe condition; and to maintain in good working order the electrical, sanitary, and other facilities that the housing agency is required to provide. n362

HUD regulations also identify some provisions that are not permitted in public housing leases. In particular, the regulations prohibit clauses confessing judgment in favor of the landlord; allowing the landlord to take property of the tenant and hold it as security for the performance of tenant obligations; agreeing not to hold the landlord or the landlord's agents liable for acts or omissions; agreeing that the landlord can bring a lawsuit without notice to the tenant that suit has been filed; authorizing the landlord to evict the tenant or hold or sell the tenant's possessions whenever the landlord determines that a lease default has occurred, without notice to the tenant or without a court determination of the rights and liabilities of the parties; authorizing the landlord's lawyer to appear in court for the tenant and to waive a trial by jury; authorizing the landlord's lawyer to waive the right to appeal or the right to file suit to prevent execution of a judgment; and agreeing that the tenant will pay attorneys' fees or costs even if the court determines that the tenant has prevailed. n363

Public housing agencies can include provisions in their leases that are in addition to those that are specified in statute or regulation, but the provisions cannot be unreasonable. n364

A public housing agency that desires to change the form of lease that it uses for public housing tenants is required to provide at least thirty days' notice to tenants and resident organizations, and to provide them with an opportunity to present written comments concerning the proposed changes. n365

§ 45.08(d) The Nature of a Public Housing Lease.

Public housing leases are, in many ways, quite different from private residential leases. Although private residential tenants may benefit from protections available under housing codes, warranties of habitability, and other legal protections articulated in statute or case law, the landlord-tenant relationship is still largely a matter of agreement between landlord and tenant. There is not a tremendous amount of governmental oversight of the landlord-tenant relationship. And, unless an anti-retaliation doctrine applies, a landlord is generally free to terminate a private residential tenancy in accordance with traditional rules applicable to non-freehold estates.

Public housing leases are much different. The content of the leases is largely mandated by statute or regulation. There is significant regulatory oversight. Changes and adverse actions are subject to significant due process limitations. And, absent good cause, and compliance with various procedures, tenant leases are not subject to termination by landlords.

These differences provide considerable protection to vulnerable tenants, and they hold public housing agencies accountable for the financial benefits they receive from public coffers. However, they do come with a price. For example, it has been suggested that the price of various due process protections available to public housing tenants, as calculated in terms of a housing authority's ability to combat crime and promote order in public housing, has been too high. n366 Of course, the beneficiaries of due process protections would see things differently.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 287. Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 578 (1998) (citing Richard Scobie, Problem Families and Public Housing 2 (1975)).

(n2)Footnote 288. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 720 (1994).

(n3)Footnote 289. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 578 (1998).

(N4)Footnote 290. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 579 (1998). The criteria might exclude, for example, applicants with illegitimate children or applicants with a history of arrest, incarceration, or drug or alcohol addiction. See id.

(n5)Footnote 291. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 581 (1998).

(n6)Footnote 292. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 581-82 (1998).

(n7)Footnote 293. 226 F.2d 51 (D.C. Cir. 1955) . The case is discussed in Florence Wagman Roisman, The Right to Public Housing, 39 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 691, 693 (1971).

(n8)Footnote 294. 226 F.2d at 53 .

(n9)Footnote 295. 393 U.S. 268 (1969) .

(n10)Footnote 296. 397 U.S. 254 (1970) .

(n11)Footnote 297. 397 U.S. at 262 (footnote omitted) (quoting from Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 627 n. 6 (1969) .

(n12)Footnote 298. 397 U.S. at 262, footnote 8 .

(n13)Footnote 299. 397 U.S. at 267 .

(n14)Footnote 300. 397 U.S. at 267 .

(n15)Footnote 301. 425 F.2d 853 (2d Cir.1970) , cert. denied, 400 U.S. 853 (1970) .

(n16)Footnote 302. See 425 F.2d at 857 .

(n17)Footnote 303. See 425 F.2d at 857 .

(n18)Footnote 304. See 425 F.2d at 858 n. 1 .

(n19)Footnote 305. See 425 F.2d at 858 n. 1 .

(n20)Footnote 306. See 425 F.2d at 858 .

(n21)Footnote 307. See 425 F.2d at 858 .

(n22)Footnote 308. See 425 F.2d at 858 .

(n23)Footnote 309. See 425 F.2d at 859 .

(n24)Footnote 310. See 425 F.2d at 860 .

(n25)Footnote 311. See 425 F.2d at 862-63 .

(n26)Footnote 312. See 425 F.2d at 864 .

(n27)Footnote 313. See 425 F.2d at 863 .

(n28)Footnote 314. See 425 F.2d at 861 .

(n29)Footnote 315. 433 F.2d 998 (4th Cir. 1970) ,cert. denied, 401 U.S. 1003 (1971) .

(n30)Footnote 316. See 433 F.2d at 1000-01

(n31)Footnote 317. See 433 F.2d at 1002 .

(n32)Footnote 318. See 433 F.2d at 1003 . The case is discussed in Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 725-726 (1994).

(n33)Footnote 319. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 597 (1998).

(n34)Footnote 320. 479 F. 2d 1165 (2d Cir. 1973) .

(n35)Footnote 321. See 479 F.2d at 1170 . Additional cases in which rent increases and due process considerations are discussed are referenced in § 45.09(e) of this chapter.

(n36)Footnote 322. Tyson v. New York City Housing Authority, 369 F. Supp. 513 (D. N.Y. 1974) .

(n37)Footnote 323. See 369 F. Supp. at 521 .

(n38)Footnote 324. The background is discussed in Housing Authority of the City of Omaha, Nebraska v. U.S. Housing Authority, 468 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1972) , cert. denied, 410 U.S. 927 (1973) .

(n39)Footnote 325. See Housing Authority of the City of Omaha, Nebraska v. U.S. Housing Authority, 468 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1972) , cert. denied, 410 U.S. 927 (1973) .

(n40)Footnote 326. See 468 F.2d at 5 .

(n41)Footnote 327. 468 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1972) , cert. denied, 410 U.S. 927 (1973) .

(n42)Footnote 328. 468 F.2d at 7 .

(n43)Footnote 329. House and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, Pub L. No. 98-181 § 204, 97 Stat. 1153, 1178 (1983) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k)).

(n44)Footnote 330. See House and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, Pub L. No. 98-181 § 204, 97 Stat. 1153, 1178 (1983) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k)).

(n45)Footnote 331. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k). But the legislation also provides:

> Such elements of due process shall not include a requirement that the tenant be provided an opportunity to examine relevant documents within the possession of the public housing agency. The agency shall provide to the tenant a reasonable opportunity, prior to hearing or trial, to examine any relevant documents, records, or regulations directly related to the eviction or termination.

Id.

(n46)Footnote 332. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k).

(n47)Footnote 333. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k).

(n48)Footnote 334. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k).

(n49)Footnote 335. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k). See also 24 C.F.R. § 966.51(a)(2). But the legislation also provides:

> Such elements of due process shall not include a requirement that the tenant be provided an opportunity to examine relevant documents within the possession of the public housing agency. The agency shall provide to the tenant a reasonable opportunity, prior to hearing or trial, to examine any relevant documents, records, or regulations directly related to the eviction or termination.

42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k).

(n50)Footnote 336. See, e.g., Simmons v. Kemp, 751 F. Supp. 815 (D.C. Minn. 1990) (Minnesota discovery rules inadequate to protect due process rights of public housing tenant); Housing Authority of Jersey City v. Jackson, 749 F. Supp. 622 (D. N.J. 1990) (summary eviction procedures do not provide adequate discovery protections for public housing tenants). See also Yesler Terrace Community Council v. Cisneros, 37 F.3d 442 (9th Cir. 1994) (HUD's determination that Washington State's eviction procedures satisfied basic elements of due process was flawed because HUD made the determination without giving tenants notice and an opportunity to comment).

(n51)Footnote 337. See Housing Authority of County of Salt Lake v. Snyder, 44 P.3d 724 (Utah 2002) .

(n52)Footnote 338. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.50 et seq.

(n53)Footnote 339. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.51(a). A definitional provision states that a grievance means "any dispute which a tenant may have with respect to PHA action or failure to act in accordance with the individual tenant's lease or PHA regulations which adversely affect the individual tenant's rights, duties, welfare or status." See 24 C.F.R. § 966.53(a).

(n54)Footnote 340. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.54.

(n55)Footnote 341. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.55(c).

(n56)Footnote 342. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.55(e).

(n57)Footnote 343. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.57.

(n58)Footnote 344. See, e.g., Samuels v. District of Columbia, 770 F.2d 184 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (tenants stated cause of action for relief under § 1983); Conway v. Housing Authority of City of Asheville, 239 F. Supp.2d 593 (W.D. N.C. 2002) (tenant entitled to § 1983 action); Housing Authority of City of Jersey City v. Jackson, 749 F. Supp. 622 (D. N.J. 1990) (New Jersey summary eviction proceedings did not meet due process standards; tenant entitled to administrative grievance proceedings).

(n59)Footnote 345. See Saxton v. Housing Authority of City of Tacoma, 1 F.3d 881 (9th Cir. 1993) .

(n60)Footnote 346. Figueroa v. Hernandez, 753 N.Y.S.2d 669 (Sup. Ct. 2002) .

(n61)Footnote 347. See §§ 45.09, 45.11 & 45.14 of this chapter.

(n62)Footnote 348. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l). There is an exception for non-compliance with community service requirements. Id. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c).

(n63)Footnote 349. The statute states that the notice "shall not be less than" the following:

> (A) a reasonable period of time, but not to exceed 30 days--
>
> > (i) if the health or safety of other tenants, public housing agency employees, or persons residing in the immediate vicinity of the premises is threatened; or

(ii) in the event of any drug-related or violent criminal activity or any felony conviction;

(B) 14 days in the case of nonpayment of rent; and

(C) 30 days in any other case, except that if a State or local law provides for a shorter period of time, such shorter period shall apply.

See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(4).

(n64)Footnote 350. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(5). The statute provides, however, > that an incident or incidents of actual or threatened domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking will not be construed as a serious or repeated violation of the lease by the victim or threatened victim of that violence and will not be good cause for terminating the tenancy or occupancy rights of the victim of such violence.

Id.

(n65)Footnote 351. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l).

(n66)Footnote 352. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6). Additional information about this justification for lease termination, and other criminally-connected justifications for lease termination, are contained in § 45.11 of this chapter.

(n67)Footnote 353. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(b).

(n68)Footnote 354. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(b).

(n69)Footnote 355. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(c).

(n70)Footnote 356. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(d).

(n71)Footnote 357. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(f).

(n72)Footnote 358. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(a)(v). This provision was relevant to the court's analysis in McFarlane v. New York City Housing Authority, 780 N.Y.S.2d 135 (App. Div. 2004) . There, two grandchildren of deceased public housing tenants claimed entitlement to their grandparents' dwelling unit. The grandparents had never requested that the housing authority permit the grandchildren to be recognized as family members for purposes of occupancy under their lease. The court concluded that application of the regulation "precluded the Housing Authority from permitting petitioners to be treated as additions to the tenant families in the absence of any such request." Id. at 136 .

(n73)Footnote 359. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(j)(1).

(n74)Footnote 360. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(j)(2).

(n75)Footnote 361. Noble v. Tooley, 125 F. Supp. 2d 481, 486 (M.D. Fla. 2000) .

(n76)Footnote 362. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(e).

(n77)Footnote 363. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.6.

(n78)Footnote 364. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l). See also Allegheny County Housing Authority v. Morisset, 651 A. 2d 632 (Pa. Comm. Ct. 1994) .

(n79)Footnote 365. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.3.

(n80)Footnote 366. See Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 576 (1998). Citing Amitai Etzioni, The Spirit of Community: Rights, Responsibilities and the Communitarian Agenda 7 (1993), the author writes:

> This proliferation of process rights stemmed ostensibly from a desire to protect public housing tenants. Yet, arguably these rights have contributed to the difficulties facing large urban PHAs. Indeed, important questions worth asking are: Do the benefits of due process in public housing exceed the costs? Are public housing residents better off because of due process rights? Has society been well served by these changes? Does the administrative reality of due process reflect and further the purposes of public housing?
>
> Sadly, after nearly three decades of due process advocacy, it is hard to answer these questions in the affirmative... The pendulum has swung too far toward the individualistic pole and it is time to hurry its return to a point where rights and responsibilities are better balanced.

30 Urb. Law. at 576. See also Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 516-17 (1993) ("Even when a PHA believes it has evidence to justify eviction, it must accord tenants hearings prior to bringing a court action for eviction. During this potentially lengthy period of administrative hearings and court proceedings, undesirable tenants usually may remain in possession of their homes, where they continue to engage in practices destructive to the community.")

In recent years, Congress has adopted legislation intended to assist public housing authorities in combating crime, including provisions of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. See Pub. L. No. 100-690 §§ 5121 et seq., 102 Stat 4181, 4301 (1988), codified at 42 U.S.C. § 11901, et seq.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.09

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.09 Public Housing Rent.

§ 45.09(a) Introduction.

The federal subsidy associated with the public housing program was originally designed to cover capital and financing costs. Tenants were expected to make rental payments that would cover the operating expenses and administrative costs of the housing project. n367 However, as time went on, the tenant composition of public housing changed, from a population of predominately moderate-income families to a population of families of low and very-low incomes, who were less able to afford higher rent. At the same time, public housing authorities needed more rental income in order to deal with higher maintenance costs as buildings aged. n368

In 1969, Congress intervened with the adoption of what came to be known as the Brooke Amendment. n369 It limited tenant rent payments to 25% of household income. Later, this was changed to 30%. n370 These rent restrictions naturally resulted in increased financial pressures on public housing authorities. Many housing authorities elected to defer maintenance on their buildings. n371 Congress eventually responded by authorizing the Department of Housing and Urban Development to make operating funds available to housing authorities. n372

§ 45.09(b) Types of Rent.

The 1937 Act provides that families residing in public housing are to pay a monthly rent. n373 HUD regulations require public housing leases to specify the initial amount of tenant rent at the beginning of the lease term. n374

Two basic types of rental structures are available for families residing in public housing--one is flat rent, the other is income-based rent. n375 The public housing authority is required to provide both options to resident families, and to do so on an annual basis once the tenancy begins. n376 Subject to a separate provision for a minimum monthly rental amount, discussed below, the family can then select which of the two types of rent it wishes to pay.

§ 45.09(b)(1) Flat Rent.

A flat rent is an amount that is based on the rental value of housing unit, as determined by the public housing agency. n377 The public housing agency is required to establish the amount of the flat rent for each dwelling unit and to maintain records showing how it does so. n378 According to HUD regulations, the amount of the flat rent is to be based on the market rent charged for comparable units in the private unassisted rental market. n379 In establishing the amount of the rent, the housing agency must consider the location, quality, size, unit type and age of the unit, as well as any amenities, housing services, maintenance, and utilities that are provided by the housing agency. n380 The public housing agency is also required to consider that flat rent is designed so as to not create disincentives for continued residency in public housing by families that are attempting to become economically self-sufficient. n381

HUD regulations provide that, for families paying flat rent, the public housing agency must conduct an annual reexamination of family composition, and conduct a reexamination of family income at least every three years. n382 The results of the reexamination may cause the housing agency to require the family to move to a housing unit of more appropriate size. n383 Although the amount of the flat rent is not income-based, income information is relevant to another issue: the public housing agency may terminate the tenancy of families who are "over income." n384

§ 45.09(b)(2) Income-Based Rent.

The amount of an income-based rent is an amount, determined by the public housing agency, that does not exceed the highest of the following:

(A) 30 per centum of the family's monthly adjusted income;

(B) 10 per centum of the family's monthly income; or

(C) if the family is receiving payments for welfare assistance from a public agency and a part of such payments, adjusted in accordance with the family's actual housing costs, is specifically designated by such agency to meet the family's housing costs, the portion of such payments which is so designated. n385

Subject to the foregoing limitation, the public housing agency has discretion to implement a rent structure that, among other things, adopts income exclusions, imposes ceiling rents, or requires that a portion of the rent be deposited into an escrow or savings account. n386

Application of the limitations referenced above depends on the how "income" and "adjusted income" are defined. The 1937 Act provides some guidance. "Income," as defined in the legislation, generally refers to "income from all sources of each member of the household." n387 HUD regulations elaborate by providing that income includes, among other things, wages and other compensation for personal services, net income from a business, interest and dividends, and welfare assistance payments. n388

The regulations also specify that some amounts are to be excluded from income. Among other things, the following are excluded: income from employment of children under eighteen years of age; payments received for the care of foster children or foster adults who are unable to live alone; lump-sum additions to family assets, such as inheritances and insurance payments; amounts in reimbursement of the cost of medical expenses for any family member; gifts; and amounts received under training programs funded by HUD. n389

"Adjusted income" refers to the income of family members residing in a dwelling unit, or the persons on a lease, after excluding some amounts. Some exclusions are mandatory; others are at the discretion of the public housing agency. The list of mandatory exclusions includes a specified amount for an elderly or disabled family; a specified amount for resident minors, students, and individuals with disabilities; unreimbursed medical expenses that exceed a specified level; child support payments, up to a limit for each child; spousal support payments, up to a limit for each person so supported; and the amount of any earned income of a minor. n390 Permissive exclusions include amounts for "excessive" employment-related or education-related travel expenses, subject to a weekly limit; the amount of a family's earned income; and other amounts established by the public housing agency. n391

In some circumstances, the 1937 Act encourages family self-sufficiency by temporarily suspending, and then phasing in, the inclusion of new earned income into income-based rental calculations. n392 As an alternative, upon the request of an eligible family, the housing agency may establish an individual savings account for the family. Under this arrangement, the family pays the full amount of the rent resulting from the increased income, but the housing agency makes deposits into the account that can be withdrawn for the purchase of a home, the payment of education costs or costs of moving out of public housing, or the payment of other expenses authorized by the public housing agency to promote economic self-sufficiency. n393

Rent issues can arise regarding who is part of the household. In a New York case, for example, the court held that a housing authority had the right to make a determination whether the tenant's spouse was a member of the household, for purposes of calculating the amount of the rent. n394 In that case, an alleged three-month absence from public housing by the tenant's husband unit was found to be a mere temporary absence that did not prevent the housing authority from considering the husband's income in calculating the rental amount.

HUD regulations provide that, for families paying income-based rent, the public housing agency must conduct an annual reexamination of family income and composition, and make appropriate rent adjustments after consulting with the family and verifying the information. n395 As in the case of families paying flat rent, the results of an annual reexamination may also cause the housing agency to require the family to move to a housing unit of more appropriate size. n396

Utility allowances can have an impact on the amount of tenant rent, or on the amount public housing tenants pay for utilities. These allowances are discussed in § 45.10 of this chapter.

§ 45.09(b)(3) Minimum Rent.

Public housing tenants are also subject to a minimum monthly rental amount requirement. Notwithstanding the provisions regarding flat rent and income-based rent, a family living in public housing is required to pay a minimum monthly rental amount that is established by the public housing agency. That amount cannot exceed $50 per month. n397 However, this requirement is subject to a hardship exception. n398

§ 45.09(c) Rent and Change in Tenant Circumstances.

As noted above, the public housing agency is required to give each family an opportunity to elect to pay either a flat rent or an income-based rent. However, if a family has elected to pay a flat rent, and a change in circumstances, such as a decrease in family income or an increase in family expenses, renders the family unable to pay the flat rent, the public housing agency is required to permit the family to pay income-based rent. n399

§ 45.09(d) Rent Adjustments.

As indicated previously in the discussion of due process, courts have held that a rent increase implicates a property interest, and that prior notification of the increase and a procedure for tenant involvement in the process are required. n400 There was some uncertainty about much tenant involvement would be required, but the prevailing view from the cases was that a rent increase did not require a full-blown adversary hearing. n401

Current HUD regulations require public housing leases to include provisions regarding the redetermination of the rental amount, including the frequency with which regular redeterminations will be made and the basis on which they will be made. n402 The lease must include an agreement by the tenant to furnish information that the public housing agency needs in order to make rent and eligibility determinations. n403 The regulations also provide that if the public housing agency redetermines the amount of the rent, the housing agency is required to notify the tenant that the tenant may request an explanation of the change, and if the tenant does not agree with the redetermination, the tenant will have the right to request a hearing under the public housing agency's grievance procedure. n404

Rent adjustments based on changes in family income are discussed in an earlier section of this chapter. n405

§ 45.09(e) Rent Challenges.

Public housing tenants have sometimes challenged rent level determinations. Tenants have had some success with claims that their income-based rents were wrong because they were based on incorrect computations of family income. n406 Tenants have also been successful, in some cases, with claims that rent levels were not reduced quickly enough following reported decreases in income. n407

In one case, a class of tenants successfully challenged a housing authority's practice of adding an arbitrary sum to the income levels of tenants based upon their accumulated savings and investments. n408 The class was also successful on a claim that the housing authority had not complied with federal requirements regarding income deductions for spouses and medical expenses.

On the other hand, in a Tenth Circuit case, tenants were unsuccessful in claiming that the imposition of a security deposit caused tenant rent to exceed the level permitted by the Brooke Amendment. n409

Tenants have litigated some rent-related issues involving payments for utilities. Issues regarding utilities are discussed in the next section of this chapter.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 367. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194 (3d ed. 1999); Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 505 (1993).

(n2)Footnote 368. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194 (3d ed. 1999); Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 505 (1993).

(n3)Footnote 369. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194 (3d ed. 1999); Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 505 (1993). See also Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969, Pub. L. No. 91-152, § 213(a), 83 Stat 379, 389 (1969). The current version of the provision is found in 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(1). For a discussion of the Brooke Amendment, see Roisman, Florence Wagman. "The Right to Public Housing." 39 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 691, 695-699 (1971).

(n4)Footnote 370. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194 (3d ed. 1999).

(n5)Footnote 371. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194 (3d ed. 1999); Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 505 (1993).

(n6)Footnote 372. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 194-95 (3d ed. 1999).

(n7)Footnote 373. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(2)(A).

(n8)Footnote 374. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(b)

(n9)Footnote 375. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(2). The legislation also provides for the continuation of certain flat rents or ceiling rents administered by housing agencies prior to the effective date of the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998. See id.

(n10)Footnote 376. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(2)(A)(i); 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(a).

(n11)Footnote 377. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(2)(A)(i); 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(a).

(n12)Footnote 378. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(2)(B)(i); 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(b).

(n13)Footnote 379. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(b).

(n14)Footnote 380. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(b).

(n15)Footnote 381. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(a)(2)(B); 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(b).

(n16)Footnote 382. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.257(a).

(n17)Footnote 383. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.257(a)(4).

(n18)Footnote 384. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.261(a).

(n19)Footnote 385. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437a(2)(B)(ii) & 1437a(1).

(n20)Footnote 386. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(2)(B)(ii).

(n21)Footnote 387. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)(4).

(n22)Footnote 388. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.609(b). There are some limitations on the inclusion of welfare assistance payments, and a provision regarding receipt of Social Security payments is qualified by an exclusion relating to deferred periodic amounts from supplemental security income and social security benefits. See id.

(n23)Footnote 389. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.609(c). An exclusion of deferred periodic amounts from supplemental security income and social security benefits qualifies the entry, in the earlier portion of the regulation, relating to the inclusion of periodic payments, such as Social Security payments, in income. Cases that have considered whether particular Social Security payments should be included in income include Garvey v. Worcester Housing Authority, 629 F.2d 691 (1st Cir. 1980) , cert. denied, sub nom., Larose v. Worcester Housing Authority, 450 U.S. 925 (1980) ; Head v. Jellico Housing Authority, 870 F.2d 1117 (6th Cir. 1989) ; and Flowers v. Smith, 726 F. Supp. 141 (S.D. Miss.1988) ,aff'd, 891 F.2d 903 (5th Cir. 1989) .

(n24)Footnote 390. See Bill of Rights. See also 24 C.F.R. § 5.611. Litigation sometimes arises over the application of exclusions. See, e.g., Jeffreys v. Housing Authority of City of Winston-Salem, 44 F. Supp.2d 749 (M.D. N.C.1998) (tenant claimed entitlement to rent reduction based on disabilities).

(n25)Footnote 391. See First Amendment. See also First Amendment.

(n26)Footnote 392. See First Amendment.

(n27)Footnote 393. See First Amendment.

(n28)Footnote 394. See Watertown Housing Authority v. McCormick, 546 N.Y.S.2d 929 (City Ct. 1989) .

(n29)Footnote 395. See First Amendment.

(n30)Footnote 396. See First Amendment.

(n31)Footnote 397. See First Amendment; First Amendment. The statutory language refers to a "minimum monthly rental amount (which amount shall include any amount allowed for utilities) of not more than $50 per month."

First Amendment. The regulation simply references $50 per month. First Amendment.

(n32)Footnote 398. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(3)(B).

(n33)Footnote 399. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(2)(C).

(n34)Footnote 400. See § 45.08(b)(iii) of this chapter. See also Burr v. New Rochelle Municipal Housing Authority, 479 F.2d 1165 (2d Cir. 1973) ; Braxton v. Poughkeepsie Housing Authority, 382 F. Supp. 992 (S.D. N.Y. 1974) .

(n35)Footnote 401. See, e.g., Burr v. New Rochelle Municipal Housing Authority, 479 F.2d 1165, 1169 (2d Cir. 1973) (notice required, but not formal adversary hearing); Thompson v. Washington, 497 F.2d 626, 639 - 41 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (notice and right to submit written objections to proposed general rent increase). See also Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 730-31 (1994).

(n36)Footnote 402. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(c).

(n37)Footnote 403. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(c).

(n38)Footnote 404. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(c)(4). In Beckham v. New York City Housing Authority, 755 F.2d 1074 (2d Cir. 1985) , the court permitted the public housing authority to raise the rent level of tenants who failed to provide timely information regarding the recertification of family income.

(n39)Footnote 405. See § 45.09(c) of this chapter.

(n40)Footnote 406. See Christopher Bello, Substantive Issues Relative to Rent Levels and Termination of Benefits Under United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USCS § 1437 et seq.), 77 ALR Fed. 884, 891, 892 (1986) .

(n41)Footnote 407. See Christopher Bello, Substantive Issues Relative to Rent Levels and Termination of Benefits Under United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USCS § 1437 et seq.), 77 ALR Fed. 884, 891, 902 (1986) .

(n42)Footnote 408. See Bloom v. Niagara Falls Housing Authority, 430 F. Supp. 1183 (D. N.Y. 1977) .

(n43)Footnote 409. See Peterson v. Oklahoma City Housing Authority, 545 F.2d 1270 (10th Cir. 1976) . HUD regulations permit housing authorities to include provisions for security deposits in their leases. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(b).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.10

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.10 Utilities: Charges, Surcharges, and Allowances.

§ 45.10(a) Introduction.

Low-income families who live in public housing benefit from legal requirements that are designed to keep rents affordable. They also benefit from legal requirements regarding charges for utilities. There are different legal incidents depending on whether the charges for utilities are paid for by the family or whether they are paid for by the public housing agency.

§ 45.10(b) Payment by Residents.

If residents pay the cost of utilities directly to the utilities provider, and pay income-based rent, they are entitled to have their rent reduced by an allowance established by the public housing agency. A separate allowance is established for each utility. n410 However, if they pay flat rent, they receive no allowance and are responsible for individually metered utilities charges. n411

If residents who pay income-based rent incur utility charges that are higher than the amount of the allowance, they are responsible to pay the excess charges. n412 On the other hand, if the utility charges are lower than the amount of the allowance, the residents receive the benefit of their conservation, because their rent is still reduced by the amount of the allowance. n413 If the amount of the allowance is larger than the amount of the rent, the residents are entitled to a reimbursement in that amount. n414 The public housing agency may, in this situation, pay the excess amount to the family, to the utility supplier, or to pay the utility bill on the family's behalf. n415 If the public housing agency pays the utility bill, it must notify the family. n416

No reimbursement is made if the family pays flat rent. n417

§ 45.10(c) Payment by the Public Housing Authority.

If the utilities are paid by the public housing agency, there is a difference in approach based on whether there are checkmeters n418 that show consumption by individual units or whether there are not.

If there are no checkmeters, the residents do not receive an allowance for utilities, even if they pay income-based rent. n419 The cost of utilities is considered to be part of the rent. However, residents are subject to the payment of surcharges for excess usage. In particular, the public housing agency is able to impose surcharges for estimated consumption of utilities attributable to resident-owned major appliances or for "optional functions of PHA-furnished equipment." n420 In order to impose surcharges, the public housing agency is required to establish schedules that show the appliances, equipment, and functions for which surcharges will be made, and that also show the applicable dollar amounts. n421

If there are checkmeters, the public housing agency may still impose surcharges, but the procedure is different. In this case, the housing agency establishes allowances for utilities that it furnishes, n422 but the amount of an allowance is not applied against the rent. Instead, the housing agency is able to impose a surcharge for consumption of utilities that is in excess of the allowance. n423

§ 45.10(d) Conversion to Individual Metering.

HUD regulations generally require public housing agencies to convert their buildings to individual metering, but provide for exceptions where this would be impractical, as in the case of a centrally heated building, or not financially advantageous for the housing agency, taking into account rates for the different systems and the cost of changing the system. n424 Housing agencies that plan to convert from a system in which utilities are paid for by the housing agency to one in which utilities are paid for by residents, are required to provide appropriate allowances, give notice to residents, work with resident organizations to plan the conversion, change tenant leases to account for the conversion, and, in the case of checkmeter installation, undertake a transition period with no surcharges. n425

In a case involving public housing in Tampa Bay, Florida, some public housing residents sought to enjoin their housing authority's conversion from a system of checkmetering to one in which tenants would directly pay for retail electrical service. n426 The tenants claimed, among other things, that the change would increase their rents in violation of the Brooke Amendment. n427 In particular, they objected to requirements that they pay a deposit and connection fee to initiate service with the utility companies, and that they pay arrearages attributable to earlier electrical service. The trial court denied the tenants' application for a preliminary injunction, and the Eleventh Circuit affirmed. In the course of its opinion, the court observed that the new charges did not constitute rent, because they were to be paid to the utility company, rather than to the housing authority.

§ 45.10(e) Establishment of Allowances.

HUD regulations require public housing agencies to establish utility allowances for checkmetered utilities that are furnished by the housing agency and for utilities that are purchased by residents directly from suppliers. n428

The amount of an allowance is supposed to take into account the size of a dwelling unit and to "approximate a reasonable consumption of utilities by an energy-conservative household of modest circumstances consistent with the requirements of a safe, sanitary, and healthful living environment." n429 In establishing an allowance, the public housing agency is to consider such things as the equipment and functions intended to be covered by the allowance, the climate, the energy efficiency of appliances and equipment intended to be covered, and the housing project's physical condition. n430

The public housing agency is required to give advance notice to residents of proposed allowances, scheduled surcharges, and revisions to either. It is also required to provide residents with a description of the basis for their determination, and to give residents an opportunity to submit written comments before they are adopted. n431 The public housing agency is required to maintain a record that shows the basis on which allowances, surcharges, and revisions are made, and to make this record available for inspection by residents. n432

HUD regulations provide that the public housing agency's determinations of allowances, scheduled surcharges, and revisions are final and valid unless the determinations are found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with the law. n433

§ 45.10(f) Litigation Relating to Utilities.

Public housing authorities have been permitted to sue tenants for utilities charges, and for other amounts, such as late fees, that have been assessed against tenants in accordance with applicable statutes and regulations. n434 However, it has been held that charges that are not part of the rent cannot be the basis for a summary dispossession action for nonpayment of rent. n435

Public housing tenants, in turn, have been permitted to sue public housing authorities when the housing authorities have overcharged them for utilities, or not provided them with an appropriate allowance for utilities. n436

In Wright v. Roanoke Redevelopment & Housing Authority, n437 the United States Supreme Court recognized that public housing tenants have a private right of action to sue housing authorities that overbill them for utility services. n438

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 410. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.503.

(n2)Footnote 411. See United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, Public Housing Occupancy Guidebook 136 (2003). This Guidebook states:

> There is no utility allowance or reimbursement with flat rents. Instead, the PHA takes the utility payment into consideration in setting the flat rents. In two otherwise identical properties, the flat rent would be higher for the property with PHA supplied utilities and lower for the property with tenant-paid utilities.

Id. at 136 . See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.253 (describing how flat rent is determined).

(n3)Footnote 412. See United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, Public Housing Occupancy Guidebook 171 (2003).

(n4)Footnote 413. See United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, Public Housing Occupancy Guidebook 171 (2003).

(n5)Footnote 414. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.632(b). See also 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(c)(3) ("The income-based tenant rent must not exceed the total tenant payment (§5.628 of this title) for the family minus any applicable utility allowance for tenant-paid utilities."). Section 5.628 is a section that tells how the amount of the rent is determined for a family that elects to pay income-based rent.

(n6)Footnote 415. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(c)(3). "Total tenant payment" is the amount of the rent payable by a family paying an income-based rent. It includes minimum rent, if that is applicable. See 24 C.F.R. § 5.628.

(n7)Footnote 416. See 24 C.F.R. § 960.253(c)(3).

(n8)Footnote 417. See 24 C.F.R. §§ 5.632 & 960.253(b)(4).

(n9)Footnote 418. A checkmeter is a device that measures the utility usage for an individual dwelling unit. The use of checkmeters is discussed in Crochet v. Housing Authority of City of Tampa, 37 F.3d 607 (11th Cir. 1994) (per curiam).

(n10)Footnote 419. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.501(b).

(n11)Footnote 420. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.506(b).

(n12)Footnote 421. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.506(b).

(n13)Footnote 422. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.502(a).

(n14)Footnote 423. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.506(a).

(n15)Footnote 424. See 24 C.F.R. §§ 965.401 - 407.

(n16)Footnote 425. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.405.

(n17)Footnote 426. See Crochet v. Housing Authority of City of Tampa, 37 F.3d 607 (11th Cir. 1994) (per curiam).

(n18)Footnote 427. The Brooke Amendment is discussed in § 45.09(a).

(n19)Footnote 428. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.502(a).

(n20)Footnote 429. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.505(a).

(n21)Footnote 430. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.505(c). Special provisions apply to air conditioning. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.505(e).

(n22)Footnote 431. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.502(c).

(n23)Footnote 432. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.505(b).

(n24)Footnote 433. See 24 C.F.R. § 965.505(e).

(n25)Footnote 434. See Binghamton Housing Authority v. Douglas, 630 NYS2d 144 (App. Div. 1995) .

(n26)Footnote 435. See Housing Authority & Urban Redevelopment Agency of City of Atlantic City v. Taylor, 796 A.2d 193 (2002) (state law permitted designation of attorneys' fees and late charges as "additional rent," but this designation was in conflict with the Brooke Amendment's limit on public housing tenant rent, and the matter was preempted by federal law; however, housing authority could pursue these other charges in a separate proceeding).

(n27)Footnote 436. See, e.g., Wright v. Roanoke Redevelopment & Housing Authority, 479 U.S. 418 (1987) ; Dorsey v. Housing Authority of Baltimore City, 984 F.2d 622 (4th Cir. 1993) (private right of action to challenge allowances); Brown v. Housing Authority of the City of McRae, Georgia, 802 F.2d 405 (11th Cir. 1986) . This could include an action for violation of the provisions of the lease. See Nelson v. Greater Gadsden Housing Authority, 802 F.2d 405 (11th Cir. 1986) . But see Hill v. Ogburn, 812 F.2d 679 (11th Cir. 1987) (no claim against HUD).

(n28)Footnote 437. 479 U.S. 418 (1987) .

(n29)Footnote 438. See 479 U.S. at 421 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.11

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.11 Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy.

[Go To Supp]

§ 45.11(a) Introduction.

As discussed in another section of this chapter, the public housing lease is rather different from a conventional residential lease. n439 Under the 1937 Act, the lease is required to be for a term of twelve months. And, subject to an exception for tenant non-compliance with congressionally mandated community service requirements, the lease is automatically renewable. n440 Even so, the lease is subject to termination for good cause, provided that the public housing authority follows the appropriate procedures.

Of course, there is still the problem of determining whether a particular justification for lease termination satisfies the good cause standard. Some specifics are set forth in the 1937 Act and related regulations. But many justifications have had to be tested in the courts.

§ 45.11(b) Justifications for Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy.

The 1937 Act provides that a public housing agency "may not terminate the tenancy except for serious or repeated violation of the terms or conditions of the lease or for other good cause." n441 Obviously, then, the provisions of the lease itself are important to the matter of lease termination. And, as discussed in another section of this chapter, federal legislation and regulations have a considerable amount to say about the content of the lease. n442

But there are also some specific statutory requirements, related to criminal activity, that apply to tenant eviction and termination of the tenancy. One of these, which is subject to some qualifications, mandates that public housing agencies use leases that provide > that any criminal activity that threatens the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other tenants or any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises, engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall be cause for termination of tenancy. n443

The principal qualification involves criminal activity directly relating to domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking, where the victim is the tenant or an immediate member of the tenant's family. n444 In that instance, the criminal conduct is not a cause for lease termination. That is, the victim's lease rights are not to be terminated on account of the criminal conduct of a household member, guest, or other person under the tenant's control.

The qualification is itself subject to qualifications, including one that permits the housing agency to "bifurcate" the lease, or remove a household member from a lease, in order to terminate occupancy rights or assistance payments to a person who engages in criminal acts of violence against family members or others, without penalizing the victim who is also a tenant or lawful occupant. n445 An additional qualification permits termination of the tenancy "of any tenant if the public housing agency can demonstrate an actual and imminent threat to other tenants or those employed at or providing service to the property if that tenant's tenancy is not terminated." n446

Other provisions of the legislation also identify criminally connected grounds for tenancy termination. Thus, the 1937 Act provides that it will be a cause of termination if there is any occupancy that violates a statutory provision relating to ineligibility for public housing by drug users or alcohol abusers. n447 It will also be a cause for termination if false or misleading information is furnished pursuant to a statutory provision relating to the termination of the tenancy of illegal drug users or alcohol abusers. n448

The legislation also states that it shall be cause for "immediate termination" of a tenancy if the tenant is "fleeing to avoid prosecution, or custody or confinement after conviction" for a crime that is a felony, or, "in the case of the State of New Jersey, is a high misdemeanor under the laws of such State." n449 And it is also a cause for "immediate termination" of a tenancy if a tenant "is violating a condition of probation or parole imposed under Federal or State law." n450

HUD regulations include additional information regarding justifications for termination of the tenancy. They set forth, for example, a non-exclusive list of "serious or repeated violation[s] of material terms of the lease" that will justify termination, including failure to make payments due under the lease, failure to fulfill household obligations set forth in HUD regulations, and being over the income limit for the program. n451

The regulations also set out some grounds for termination that will satisfy the "other good cause" provision of the 1937 Act. These include specified criminal activity or alcohol abuse; discovery of facts, subsequent to admission to public housing, that made the tenant ineligible; discovery of material false statements or fraud made by the tenant in connection with the public housing application or in connection with a reexamination of income; the failure of a family member to comply with community service requirements for public housing residents; and the failure to accept the public housing agency's offer of a lease revision that is made in compliance with applicable procedures. n452

One of the specific provisions dealing with termination for criminal activities states that the public housing agency "must immediately terminate the tenancy if the PHA determines that any member of the household has ever been convicted of drug-related criminal activity for manufacture or production of methamphetamine on the premises of federally assisted housing." n453

§ 45.11(c) Procedures for Terminating a Tenancy.

HUD regulations require public housing leases to state the procedures to be followed by the public housing agency and by the tenant in order to terminate the tenancy. n454 But procedural aspects of termination are largely governed by statute and by regulation.

The 1937 Act requires public housing authorities to give adequate written notice of termination. n455 The requirements vary, depending on the circumstances. If the cause of termination is nonpayment of rent, the legislation requires the housing authority to provide 14 days' notice. A more flexible notice period applies, however, if there is a threat to the health or safety of other tenants, public housing agency employees, or persons residing in the immediate vicinity of the premises. In that case, the notice requirement is for "a reasonable period of time, but not to exceed 30 days." n456 The same timing is required if the termination is in connection with a "drug-related or violent criminal activity or any felony conviction." n457 In all other cases, the notice is to be 30 days, "except that if a State or local law provides for a shorter period of time, such shorter period shall apply." n458

In addition to the requirements on the timing of the notice, the federal legislation requires public housing agencies to use leases that specify that "notwithstanding any State law," a public housing tenant shall be informed "of the opportunity, prior to any hearing or trial, to examine any relevant documents, records, or regulations directly related to the eviction or termination." n459 HUD regulations require the notice to state specific grounds for termination, and to inform the tenant of his or her right to reply. When the housing agency is required to provide the tenant with the opportunity for a grievance hearing, the notice must also inform the tenant of the tenant's right to request such a hearing. n460

The 1937 Act also requires public housing agencies to use leases that permit the public housing to "bifurcate a lease" or remove a household member from a lease, in order to evict, remove, or terminate the occupancy rights of any tenant or lawful occupant who engages in criminal acts of physical violence against family members or others, without evicting, removing, or otherwise penalizing the victim of the violence who is a tenant or a lawful occupant of public housing. n461

Public housing agencies are required to establish and implement an administrative grievance procedure for the benefit of public housing tenants. n462 The legislation regarding the grievance procedure requires, among other things, that public housing tenants be advised of the specific grounds of any proposed adverse action by the public housing agency; have an opportunity for a hearing before an impartial party upon timely request; and be entitled to receive a written decision by the public housing agency with respect to the proposed action. n463 The grievance procedure would, of course, be applicable to the termination of a tenancy. Additional information about grievance procedures is contain in § 45.08(c)(2) of this chapter.

When the public housing agency is required to provide the tenant with an opportunity for a hearing under the grievance procedure, HUD regulations provide that the tenancy may not be terminated until the time for the tenant to request a hearing has expired, or, if the tenant has timely requested a hearing, until the grievance process has been completed. n464 If the housing agency is not required to provide an opportunity for a hearing under the grievance procedure, and the housing agency decides to exclude the matter from the grievance procedure, the notice of lease termination must state that the tenant is not entitled to a grievance hearing, must specify the judicial eviction procedure that will be used, and must state that the Department of Housing and Urban Development has determined that the eviction procedure provides the opportunity for a court hearing that contains the basic elements of due process. n465

HUD regulations also provide that the public housing agency may evict a tenant from a housing unit by bringing a court action or, in a jurisdiction that permits eviction by a "due process" administrative action, by bringing such an action. However, in order to evict a tenant without bringing a court action, the housing agency must afford the tenant the opportunity for a pre-eviction hearing under the housing agency's grievance procedure. n466

§ 45.11(d) Eviction and Tenancy Termination Cases.

Courts have approved the termination of public housing tenancies for, among other things: failing, neglecting, or refusing to provide information about the tenant's income, as required under the lease; n467 being repeatedly late in the payment of rent, n468 failing to ensure that a guest, who engaged in violent criminal acts, did not disturb or endanger others; n469 failing to comply with an agreement to permanently exclude a son from the residence who been dealing drugs on the grounds of the housing project; n470 failing to comply with a stipulation to ensure that an undesirable friend did not visit the tenant's apartment; n471 possessing illegal drugs on the leased premises; n472 having a resident son whose conduct posed a serious threat to other residents; n473 and making excessive noise. n474

In a Pennsylvania case, an appellate court determined that the housing authority was justified in terminating the tenancy of a public housing tenant who had:

> 1) repeatedly played loud music at all hours of the night; 2) banged on the doors of other residents; 3) caused damage to another resident's door; 4) permitted his nephew to reside with him in excess of fourteen days without written consent from [the housing authority]; 5) allowed his nephew to engage in fighting, arguing, and creating loud noise during his stay; 6) engaged in disruptions requiring police intervention ... ; and 7) left the stove jets and oven pilot running, thereby causing the evacuation of his floor. n475

In a New York case, the court approved eviction of an individual from a public housing unit on the ground that he did not qualify as a "remaining family member" entitled to remain in public housing. He had never received written approval of the housing authority to be considered a permanent member of the then-authorized tenant family. n476

In a number of cases, tenants have been able to avoid eviction for nonpayment of rent. A tenant was able to avoid eviction in one case by showing that an administrative hearing officer, who had been evaluating an eviction claim based on chronic nonpayment of rent, had interrupted her testimony and had precluded her from offering evidence in mitigation. n477 In another case, the tenants were able to show by way of equitable defense, that they lacked the means to pay the rent. n478 A disabled tenant was able to avoid eviction for nonpayment of rent by showing that the amount of the rent claimed to be owing was incorrect. In that case, the housing authority had not reduced the amount of the rent to reflect a decrease in income, in accordance with the requirements of a HUD circular that was binding on the housing authority. n479

Tenants have had success in other cases as well. These include cases in which: the housing authority employed notice of termination forms that did not comply with federal requirements; n480 the tenant, who had been found to have had marijuana in his apartment, showed that the housing authority had waived the breach of the lease by continuing to accept rental payments for seven months after it had learned of the violation; n481 the tenant, who had allegedly assaulted a child with a clothes hanger, showed that the eviction order had been issued on incompetent evidence and without examination of the parties and witnesses as required by applicable law; n482 the housing authority, which had initiated termination proceedings after the tenant's son had been found on the premises in violation of an agreement, did not follow its own procedures in terminating the tenancy; n483 the housing authority did not hold an administrative hearing before bringing a state court eviction action based upon the tenant's alleged assault against the complex manager; n484 the court considered eviction to a shockingly excessive response to the tenant's confrontation with a housing authority representative who had come to inspect her apartment for repairs; n485 and in which the housing authority's decision to terminate the tenancy of a mentally incapacitated tenant was based upon unfounded conclusions and was reached after a hearing that did not provide adequate due process protections for the incapacitated tenant. n486

§ 45.11(e) Illegal Drugs, the "One-Strike" Rule, and Tenant Eviction.

Although other sections of this chapter reference public housing issues related to illegal drugs, there is more that ought to be included on the subject, especially in this section on eviction and tenancy termination. There have been some significant drug-related legal developments relating to eviction from public housing.

One author described the background here as follows:

> The increased use and sale of controlled substances in public housing developments has dramatically worsened the lives of tenants. In addition to lives destroyed by addiction, drugs are responsible for much of the violent crime that victimizes tenants. Battles between rival suppliers of drugs claim innocent > victims and cause residents to fear leaving their apartments. In addition, the need for money to purchase drugs has led to increased levels of robberies and burglaries. n487

Congress responded to drug-related problems in public housing by including provisions relating to public housing in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. n488 Among the findings set forth in the legislation were the following:

> (1) the Federal Government has a duty to provide public and other federally assisted low-income housing that is decent, safe, and free from illegal drugs;
>
> (2) public and other federally assisted low-income housing in many areas suffers from rampant drug-related or violent crime;
>
> (3) drug dealers are increasingly imposing a reign of terror on public and other federally assisted low-income housing tenants;
>
> (4) the increase in drug-related and violent crime not only leads to murders, muggings, and other forms of violence against tenants, but also to a deterioration of the physical environment that requires substantial government expenditures. n489

The legislation, which has been amended since its initial adoption, provides, among other things, that public housing agencies must include in their leases a clause providing that "any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises, engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall be cause for termination of tenancy." n490

Concerns over drug problems also came into focus during President Bill Clinton's State of the Union Message on January 23, 1996. On that occasion, the President said: "I challenge local housing authorities and tenant associations: Criminal gang members and drug dealers are destroying the lives of tenants. From now on, the rule for residents who commit crime and peddle drugs should be one strike and you're out." n491 HUD itself referred to its program for implementing the legislation as a "one-strike policy." n492

One of the important issues presented by the legislation was whether a public housing tenant has to have knowledge of the illegal activity in order to be evicted. Some courts interpreted the provision, and provisions in analogous statutes, as requiring that tenants have some knowledge of the prohibited activities, but other courts had taken the opposite view. n493

The legislation and HUD's implementing regulations were challenged in Department of Housing and Urban Development v. Rucker. n494 There, some tenants of the Oakland Housing Authority became subject to eviction proceedings for allegedly violating lease provisions that obligated them to assure that neither they, any member of their households, nor any guest or other person under their control would engage in any drug-related criminal activity on or near the premises. The housing authority claimed, in the eviction proceedings, that the grandsons of two tenants had been caught smoking marijuana in the apartment complex parking lot, that the daughter of a tenant had been found with cocaine and a crack cocaine pipe three blocks from the tenant's apartment, and that, on three instances, a care-giver and two other individuals had been found with cocaine in the apartment of a tenant. The affected tenants responded to the eviction proceedings by filing suit in federal district court against the housing authority, its director, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The federal district court entered an order enjoining the evictions, and the Ninth Circuit affirmed.

Before the United States Supreme Court, HUD and the other defendants argued that the federal legislation required "lease terms that allow a local public housing authority to evict a tenant when a member of the tenant's household or a guest engages in drug-related criminal activity, regardless of whether the tenant knew, or had reason to know, of that activity." n495 The tenants challenged HUD's interpretation of the statute, arguing that the legislation did not require lease terms authorizing the eviction of "innocent" tenants, and, that, if it did, the statute was unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit, and held that "42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6) unambiguously requires lease terms that vest local public housing authorities with the discretion to evict tenants for the drug-related activity of household members and guests whether or not the tenant knew, or should have known, about the activity." n496

The Court noted that,"[r]egardless of knowledge, a tenant who 'cannot control drug crime, or other criminal activities by a household member which threaten health or safety of other residents, is a threat to other residents and the project.'" n497 However, the Court also observed that the legislation did not require the eviction of a tenant who violates the lease provision; "[i]nstead, it entrusts that decision to the local public housing authorities, who are in the best position to take account of, among other things, the degree to which the housing project suffers from 'rampant drug-related or violent crime,' 'the seriousness of the offending action,' and 'the extent to which the leaseholder has ... taken all reasonable steps to prevent or mitigate the offending action.'" n498

The Ninth Circuit had been persuaded that HUD's interpretation of the legislation presented "serious questions under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment," because that interpretation permitted "tenants to be deprived of their property interest without any relationship to individual wrongdoing." n499 But the Supreme Court concluded that this was not a case in which the government was "attempting to criminally punish or civilly regulate respondents as members of the general populace. It is instead acting as a landlord of property that it owns, invoking a clause in a lease to which respondents have agreed and which Congress has expressly required." n500

The Court acknowledged that the tenants did have a property interest in their tenancies. But it noted that if the tenants were to be deprived of that interest, the deprivation would occur in the state court where the eviction proceedings had been brought, and there was no indication that those proceedings were procedurally deficient.

As indicated in the Rucker opinion, HUD regulations do not provide for automatic eviction of tenants, even when there are proper grounds for terminating the tenancy. The public housing authority has discretion whether to evict. According to the applicable regulation:

> [T]he PHA may consider all circumstances relevant to a particular case such as the seriousness of the offending action, the extent of participation by the leaseholder in the offending action, the effects that the eviction would have on family members not involved in the offending activity and the extent to which the leaseholder has shown personal responsibility and has taken all reasonable steps to prevent or mitigate the offending action. n501

At the same time, housing authorities are evaluated by HUD based on a number of criteria, including whether they implement effective eviction policies and other anti-crime strategies. n502 Thus, there is some incentive on the part of the housing authority to undertake evictions.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 439. See § 45.08(d) of this chapter.

(n2)Footnote 440. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l).

(n3)Footnote 441. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(5). The statute provides, however, > that an incident or incidents of actual or threatened domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking will not be construed as a serious or repeated violation of the lease by the victim or threatened victim of that violence and will not be good cause for terminating the tenancy or occupancy rights of the victim of such violence.

Id.

(n4)Footnote 442. See § 45.08(c) of this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 443. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6). The term "drug-related criminal activity" refers to "the illegal manufacture, sale, distribution, use, or possession with intent to manufacture, sell, distribute, or use, of a controlled substance (as defined in section 802 of Title 21)." The quote is found at the end of 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l).

(n6)Footnote 444. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6). There are additional provisions giving protection to the victims of domestic violence, dating violence, or stalking. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(5) & (6).

(n7)Footnote 445. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6).

(n8)Footnote 446. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6).

(n9)Footnote 447. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(7). The statutory provision in question is 42 U.S.C. § 13661(b). It provides, in part:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a public housing agency or an owner of federally assisted housing, as determined by the Secretary, shall establish standards that prohibit admission to the program or admission to federally assisted housing for any household with a member-

(A) who the public housing agency or owner determines is illegally using a controlled substance; or

(B) with respect to whom the public housing agency or owner determines that it has reasonable cause to believe that such household member's illegal use (or pattern of illegal use) of a controlled substance, or abuse (or pattern of abuse) of alcohol, may interfere with the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents.

The housing authority is permitted to consider evidence of rehabilitation. See id.

(n10)Footnote 448. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(7). The statutory provision in question is 42 U.S.C. § 13662. It provides, in part:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a public housing agency or an owner of federally assisted housing (as applicable), shall establish standards or lease provisions for continued assistance or occupancy in federally assisted housing that allow the agency or owner (as applicable) to terminate the tenancy or assistance for any household with a member--

(1) who the public housing agency or owner determines is illegally using a controlled substance; or

(2) whose illegal use (or pattern of illegal use) of a controlled substance, or whose abuse (or pattern of abuse) of alcohol, is determined by the public housing agency or owner to interfere with the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents.

The statute also includes provisions allowing the housing agency to consider evidence of rehabilitation. See id. It appears that the false or misleading information that is relevant to lease termination could relate either to information about the drug or alcohol abuse or the rehabilitation.

(n11)Footnote 449. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(9).

(n12)Footnote 450. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(9).

(n13)Footnote 451. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(2).

(n14)Footnote 452. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(2)(iii).

(n15)Footnote 453. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(5)(A).

(n16)Footnote 454. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(1).

(n17)Footnote 455. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(4).

(n18)Footnote 456. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(4).

(n19)Footnote 457. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(4).

(n20)Footnote 458. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(4).

(n21)Footnote 459. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(7).

(n22)Footnote 460. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(3).

(n23)Footnote 461. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6).

(n24)Footnote 462. See § 45.08(c)(2) of this chapter.

(n25)Footnote 463. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(k).

(n26)Footnote 464. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(3)(iv).

(n27)Footnote 465. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(3)(v).

(n28)Footnote 466. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(4).

(n29)Footnote 467. See Newton v. Municipal Housing Authority for City of Yonkers, 342 N.E.2d 491 (N.Y. 1976) .

(n30)Footnote 468. See Baker v. Housing Authority of City of Waynesboro, 601 S.E.2d 350 (Ga. Ct. App. 2004) .

(n31)Footnote 469. See Chavez v. Housing Authority of City of El Paso, 973 F.2d 1245 (5th Cir. 1992) . In this case, the guest happened to be the tenant's son, but he was a guest all the same.

(n32)Footnote 470. See Jimenez v. Popolizio, 180 A.D.2d 590, 580 N.Y.S.2d 302 (App. Div. 1992) ; Wooten v. Finkle, 728 N.Y.S.2d 152 (App. Div. 2001) .

(n33)Footnote 471. See Sanchez v. Martinez, 740 N.Y.S.2d 314 (App. Div. 2002) .

(n34)Footnote 472. See City of Phoenix v. Bellamy, 736 P.2d 1175 (Ariz. App. 1987; see also Boston Housing Authority v. Guirola, 575 N.E.2d 1100 (Mass. 1991) (the drugs were apparently kept there by an "occupant" of the premises rather than by the tenant).

(n35)Footnote 473. See Featherstone v. Franco, 720 N.Y.S.2d 93 (N.Y. 2000) . The tenant had been given the option to exclude her son from the dwelling unit, as a "mitigated sanction," but she had declined to do so.

(n36)Footnote 474. See Andover Housing Authority v. Shkolnik, 820 N.E.2d 815 (Mass. 2005) . This was state-assisted public housing. The court rejected a claim that the housing authority had an obligation to accommodate the medical condition of one of the elderly tenants by providing acoustical carpeting and a sound-absorbing drop-down ceiling.

(n37)Footnote 475. Allegheny County Housing Authority v. Johnson, 908 A.2d 336, 342-43 (Pa. Super. 2006) (footnote omitted) (there was also other misconduct involving the nephew).

(n38)Footnote 476. See Powell v. Franco, 714 N.Y.S.2d 77 (App. Div. 2000) . See also McFarlane v. New York City Housing Authority, 780 N.Y.S.2d 135 (App. Div. 2004) (Grandchildren of deceased public housing tenants claimed entitlement to their grandparents' dwelling unit, but the grandparents had never requested that the housing authority permit the grandchildren to be recognized as family members for purposes of occupancy under their lease; the court concluded that application of 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(a)(1)(v), requiring a request to approve the addition of a family member as an occupant of the unit, "precluded the Housing Authority from permitting petitioners to be treated as additions to the tenant families in the absence of any such request.").

(n39)Footnote 477. See Robertson v. Popolizio, 579 N.Y.S.2d 153 (App. Div. 1992) .

(n40)Footnote 478. See City of Albuquerque v. Brooks, 844 P.2d 822 (N.M. 1992) . See also Maxton Housing Authority v. McLean, 328 S.E.2d 290 (N.C.1985) (tenant occupying public housing rebutted presumption that good cause existed to terminate lease by proving lack of fault on tenant's part in nonpayment of rent); but see Charlotte Housing Authority v. Patterson, 464 S.E.2d 68 (N.C. App. 1995) (noting that the North Carolina legislature had, subsequent to the Maxton case, provided for termination of public housing lease for nonpayment of rent whether or not tenant was at fault).

(n41)Footnote 479. See Housing Authority of City of Passaic v. Torres, 362 A.2d 1254 (N.J. Super. 1976) .

(n42)Footnote 480. See Staten v. Housing Authority of City of Pittsburgh, 469 F. Supp. 1013 (W.D. Pa. 1979) , but cf., Ferguson v. Housing Authority of Middlesboro, 499 F. Supp. 334, (E.D. Ky. 1980) (Similar notice procedure found to be acceptable).

(n43)Footnote 481. See Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority v. Hairston, 790 N.E.2d 828 (Cleveland Mun. Ct. 2003) .

(n44)Footnote 482. See Housing Authority of City of Pasco and Franklin County v. Pleasant 109 P.3d 422 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) .

(n45)Footnote 483. See Robinson v. Finkel, 748 N.Y.S.2d 448 (Sup. Ct. 2002) .

(n46)Footnote 484. See Housing Authority of the County of Salt Lake v. Snyder, 44 P. 3d 724 (Utah 2002) .

(n47)Footnote 485. See Peoples v. New York City Housing Authority, 723 N.Y.S.2d 6 (App. Div. 2001) .

(n48)Footnote 486. See Padilla v. Martinez, 752 N.Y.S.2d 28 (App. Div. 2002) .

(n49)Footnote 487. Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L.

Rev. 497, 543 (1993) (footnotes omitted).

(n50)Footnote 488. Pub. L. No. 100-690 §§ 5121 et seq., 102 Stat. 4181, 4301 (1988), codified at 42 U.S.C. § 11901, et seq.

(n51)Footnote 489. 42 U.S.C. § 11901.

(n52)Footnote 490. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6); see also 42 U.S.C. § 13662.

(n53)Footnote 491. President Bill Clinton, State of the Union, January 23, 1996, quoted in Directive Number: 96-16, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Office of Public and Indian Housing, "One Strike and You're Out" Screening and Eviction Guidelines for Public Housing Authorities (Has) (April 112, 1996). This publication may be viewed at http://www.hudclips.org/sub_nonhud/cgi/nph-brs.cgi?d=PIHA&s1=@docn&l=100&SECT1=TXTHLB&SECT5=HEHB&u=./hudclips.c

(n54)Footnote 492. See the HUD directive referenced in the immediately-preceding footnote.

(n55)Footnote 493. Cases requiring the tenant to know or have reason to know of the misconduct include Rucker v. Davis, 237 F.3d 1113 (9th Cir. 2001) , rev'd, Department of Housing and Urban Development v. Rucker, 535 U.S. 125 (2002) ; Charlotte Housing Authority v. Patterson, 464 S.E.2d 68 (N.C. Ct. App. 1995) ; and Housing Opportunities Commission of Montgomery County v. Lacey, 585 A.2d 219 (Md. 1991) . Cases taking the opposite view include City of South San Francisco Housing Authority v. Guillory, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 367 (Cal. Ct. App. 1995) and Minneapolis Public Housing Authority v. Lor, 591 N.W.2d 700 (Minn.1999) . See generally Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 386-390 (3d ed. 1999); Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 544 (1993).

(n56)Footnote 494. 535 U.S. 125 (2002) . The Rucker case and the "one-strike" policy have been the focus of considerable commentary, much of it negative. See, e.g, Regina Austin, "Step on a Crack, Break Your Mother's Back": Poor Moms, Myths of Authority, and Drug-Related Evictions from Public Housing, 14 Yale Journal of Law and Feminism 273 (2002); Amy R. Bowser, "One Strike and You're Out - or Are You?: Rucker's Influence on Future Eviction Proceedings for Section 8 and Public Housing," 108 Penn St. L. Rev. 611 (2003); Castle, Caroline, You Call That A Strike? A Post-Rucker Examination of Eviction From Public Housing Due to Drug-Related Criminal Activity of a Third Party, 37 Ga. L. Rev. 1435 (2003); Corinne A. Carey, No Second Chance: People with Criminal Records Denied Access to Public Housing, 36 U. Tol. L. Rev. 545 (2005); Paul Stinson, Restoring Justice: How Congress Can Amend the One-Strike Laws in Federally-Subsidized Public Housing to Ensure Due Process, Avoid Inequity, and Combat Crime, 11 Geo. J. Pov. L. & Pol'y 435 (2004).

(n57)Footnote 495. See 535 U.S. at 127-28 .

(n58)Footnote 496. See 535 U.S. at 130 .

(n59)Footnote 497. See 535 U.S. at 134 (citing 56 Fed. Reg., at 51567).

(n60)Footnote 498. See 535 U.S. at 134 (citations omitted from quotation; the Court cited 42 U.S.C. § 11901(2) (1994 ed. and Supp. V)).

(n61)Footnote 499. See 535 U.S. at 135 .

(n62)Footnote 500. See 535 U.S. at 135 .

(n63)Footnote 501. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(l)(5)(vii)(B).

(n64)Footnote 502. See 42 U.S.C. 1437d(j)(1)(I); 24 C.F.R. § 902.43(a)(5)(i). See also Note, You Call That A Strike? A Post-Rucker Examination of Eviction From Public Housing Due to Drug-Related Criminal Activity of a Third Party, 37 Ga. L. Rev. 1435, 1454 (2002-2003).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.12

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.12 Restricting Individuals from Visiting Public Housing Projects.

[Go To Supp]

§ 45.12(a) Introduction.

In order to combat crime in public housing developments, some housing authorities have implemented procedures to restrict unwanted individuals from visiting housing projects. These approaches have sometimes been found to be in violation of applicable law.

§ 45.12(b) Prior Approval Requirements.

One approach has been to require tenants to obtain prior approval from the housing authority before inviting guests onto the premises. This approach has received a chilly reception in some court decisions.

For example, in McKenna v. Peekskill Housing Authority, n503 the Second Circuit Court of Appeals was of the view a prior permission policy violated tenant rights of privacy and freedom of association. The court acknowledged that housing authorities have a legitimate interest in maintaining the safety of public housing, but it was of the opinion that they could satisfy that interest using less intrusive means.

In Lancor v. Lebanon Housing Authority, n504 the First Circuit held that a tenant was entitled to a preliminary injunction against the housing authority's practice of requiring advance written permission in order to have overnight guests. The practice was supported by language in the lease, but the court was not persuaded that the practice was "necessary and reasonable" within the meaning of a HUD regulation requiring the tenant to abide by necessary and reasonable regulations promulgated by public housing agency. The court also observed that the policy appeared to violate HUD regulations requiring housing agencies to allow for reasonable accommodation of guests.

It should be noted, in this context, that current HUD regulations require public housing leases to provide that the tenant "shall have the right to exclusive use and occupancy of the leased unit by the members of the household authorized to reside in the unit in accordance with the lease, including reasonable accommodation of their guests." n505

§ 45.12(c) No-Trespass Policies.

In another approach to the problem, some housing authorities developed lists of individuals who were prohibited from entering the premises, notified the individuals that they were prohibited from entry, and brought trespassing charges against violators. n506 Provisions permitting the practice typically have been incorporated into a lease or the rules of the housing authority. n507 Housing authorities have used different standards to determine who should be added to the list. n508 There are some indications that the use of no-trespass lists has tended to reduce crime rates. n509

Legal issues regarding no-trespass policies have been considered in several cases, with mixed results. For example, in Thompson v. Ashe, n510 a person (Thompson) who had been arrested for trespass after he had been included on the housing authority's "no trespass list," brought a putative class action under § 1983 challenging the no trespass program on several grounds. The trial court granted summary judgment to the defendants, and denied the motion to certify the class. The United States Sixth Circuit affirmed. The court held that Thompson had not shown that he had been invited to the premises, and therefore he lacked standing to claim that the Tennessee criminal trespass statute did not apply to arrests of invited guests. Similarly, the court was of the view that Thompson lacked standing to claim that the policy violated the right of a tenant to entertain guests in their homes. He had not been invited to be a guest in anyone's home.

Thompson also contended that the no-trespass policy infringed his Fourteenth Amendment rights to "freedom of movement" and intimate association. The Sixth Circuit concluded that the freedom of movement claim was without merit. It said that to the extent the argument was based on the "right to travel," that right "is essentially a right of interstate travel." n511 The no trespass policy did not restrict Thompson's travel to other states; it only restricted his ability to be present on housing authority premises in Knoxville, Tennessee.

The court considered Thompson's intimate association claim under the substantive due process component of the Fourteenth Amendment. It noted that the Supreme Court "has recognized that the freedom to enter into and carry on certain intimate or private relationships is a fundamental element of liberty protected by the Bill of Rights." n512 But it also noted that the Supreme Court has not extended constitutional protection to "mere visitation with family members." n513 The Sixth Circuit said that "Thompson lives separately from his family members and there is no indication in the record that during the years he has been on the no-trespass list he has ever lived, or intended to live with any of them in [housing authority] properties." n514 It concluded that Thompson had no fundamental right to visit his family members on the housing authority's property. Applying a rational basis level of scrutiny, the court said that banning individuals with criminal histories from entering onto housing authority property reasonably advances the legitimate goal of crime prevention in public housing. Accordingly, the court rejected the substantive due process claim.

Thompson also claimed that procedural defects in the administration of the no-trespass program violated his Fourteenth Amendment right to procedural due process. The Sixth Circuit noted, in this connection, that individuals are entitled to notice and a hearing if the government deprives them of an interest in liberty or property. But it did not find that Thompson had a liberty interest that was entitled to such protection. Thompson claimed an interest in visiting public housing residents "in the absence of any showing that his visits are welcome, and in the absence of any showing that his ability to visit with these individuals will be substantially limited if he cannot visit them in that particular place." n515 This interest was not sufficient to require procedural due process protection.

In City of Bremerton v. Widell, n516 the Washington Supreme Court considered some challenges to a housing authority's anti-trespassing policy that arose in connection with the prosecution of two defendants for criminal trespass. The policy provided that any non-resident would be directed to leave and would be barred from returning to any city housing authority common areas if the nonresident were found to be engaging in specified criminal and offensive conduct, including the making of "unreasonable noise" and "fighting." Initially, the court observed that the defendants should not have been convicted of trespassing for times when they were present on the premises in response to the invitation of a resident. But in several instances the evidence was sufficient to support a conclusion that they were not present with permission. The defendants also claimed that the policy unconstitutionally infringed upon their rights of "intimate association," because they were on the premises to visit with their fiances. However, the court concluded that "an engaged couple who is not cohabitating is not entitled to constitutional protection" under the intimate association concept. n517 The defendants also contended that the policy was overbroad and void for vagueness. But the court concluded that no First Amendment considerations were presented on the facts, and it rejected the argument.

Another perspective on no-trespass policies is provided by Diggs v. Housing Authority of City of Frederick. n518 There, some residents and some guests of residents of properties owned by a city housing authority brought a §1983 action against the housing authority, alleging, among other things, that the housing authority's trespass policy violated residents' rights under the United States Housing Act and under the United States Constitution. Under the policy, local police officers, or private security guards, were authorized to issue citations to non-residents who loitered in the public housing "community." They were also warned that they would be arrested and charged with criminal trespass if they returned. The housing authority maintained a "trespass log" of individuals who had been issued citations.

The plaintiffs claimed that the no-trespass policy violated the United States Housing Act's statutory mandate that public housing leases not contain any "unreasonable terms and conditions," n519 and HUD's implementing regulation requiring that public housing leases "shall" provide for "reasonable accommodation" of tenants' guests. n520 The federal district court found that the policy, as enforced, was "a virtually permanent bar to a tenant's right to invite a guest into her own home, no matter how close a friend or relative that potential guest might be." n521 It also noted that tenants had been told that they would face eviction if they invited persons known to be on the trespass log into their homes. The court said that the harms caused by the policy were substantial; at the same time there was no evidence that the trespass policy was the only, or most effective, drug- and crime-fighting measure available to local authorities. The court concluded that the plaintiffs had shown a sufficient likelihood of success on the merits that they were entitled to a preliminary injunction against the housing authority's continuation of the no-trespass policy.

An issue regarding no-trespass policies also came before the United States Supreme Court, in Virginia v. Hicks. n522 In 1991, Kevin Hicks was arrested for trespassing on the sidewalk of the Witcomb Court public housing project in Richmond, Virginia. The area was described in court papers as "open-air drug market." n523 In an effort to combat crime and drug dealing by nonresidents, the housing authority had adopted a policy authorizing the Richmond police to serve notice on any person lacking "a legitimate business or social purpose" for being on the premises and to arrest for trespassing any person who remains or returns after having been so notified. n524 Hicks, a nonresident of the housing project, had been arrested twice before for trespassing at the housing project and one other time for damaging property there. He had also been the recipient of a notice that had been hand-delivered by a Witcomb Court manager that stated:

> This letter serves to inform you that effective immediately you are not welcome on Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority's Whitcomb Court or any Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority property. This letter is an official notice informing you that you are not to trespass on RRHA property. If you are seen or caught on the premises, you will be subject to arrest by the police. n525

After receiving this notice, Hicks came onto the premises again, and was arrested and convicted of trespass. He told the arresting officer that he was there to "to bring pampers for his baby." n526

At trial, Hicks maintained that the housing authority's policy limiting access to Whitcomb Court was unconstitutionally overbroad and was void for vagueness. He was convicted, but the Virginia Supreme Court vacated the conviction, concluding that the policy was unconstitutionally overbroad. While it acknowledged that the policy was "designed to punish activities that are not protected by the First Amendment," the court held that "the policy also prohibits speech and conduct that are clearly protected by the First Amendment." n527 It also said that the policy gave the project manager unreviewable authority to determine what constituted a "legitimate business or social purpose," and allowed the manager to "prohibit speech that she finds personally distasteful or offensive even though such speech may be protected by the First Amendment." n528

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the overbreadth issue. It reversed, holding that the trespass policy did not represent an overbroad speech restriction under the appropriate constitutional standard. It observed:

> As for the written provision authorizing the police to arrest those who return to Whitcomb Court after receiving a barment notice: That certainly does not violate the First Amendment as applied to persons whose postnotice entry is not for the purpose of engaging in constitutionally protected speech. And Hicks has not even established that it would violate the First Amendment as applied to persons whose postnotice entry is for that purpose. Even assuming the streets of Whitcomb Court are a public forum, the notice-barment rule subjects to arrest those who reenter after trespassing and after being warned not to return - regardless of whether, upon their return, they seek to engage in speech. Neither the basis for the barment sanction (the prior trespass) nor its purpose (preventing future trespasses) has anything to do with the First Amendment. Punishing its violation by a person who wishes to engage in free speech no more implicates the First Amendment than would the punishment of a person who has (pursuant to lawful regulation) been banned from a public park after vandalizing it, and who ignores the ban in order to take part in a political demonstration. Here, as there, it is Hicks' nonexpressive conduct - his entry in violation of the notice-barment rule - not his speech, for which he is punished as a trespasser. n529

The Court also concluded that Hicks had not shown that the policy prohibited a substantial amount of protected speech in relation to its many legitimate applications. n530

More recently, the Fifth Circuit largely rejected First Amendment-based challenges to some earlier and amended trespassing policies of an El Paso housing authority. n531 The litigation had its inception in the claims of a political candidate, who was not a public housing resident, that the policies of the housing authority unconstitutionally infringed upon his ability to distribute political literature and to campaign door-to-door at a public housing facility, and the claims of a resident that the policies infringed upon his First Amendment rights. The court concluded that public housing was not a public forum and that content-neutral and viewpoint-neutral restrictions applicable to visitors were permissible. However, the court remanded for a determination whether one of the earlier policies had been used in a manner that discriminated on the basis of viewpoint.

§ 45.12(d) Stipulations Restricting Visits By Non-Desirable Family Members.

In several cases, tenants have been faced with eviction for violating the terms of stipulations prohibiting visits by family members who had engaged in illegal conduct on housing authority property. n532 Such stipulations have been used, on at least some occasions, as an alternative to immediate eviction of a tenant in cases in which a member of the tenant's family had engaged in criminal conduct on the premises.

In some instances, courts have upheld the eviction of tenants for violating the stipulations, n533 while, in other cases, that remedy has been adjudged to be too harsh. n534 In Romero v. Martinez, n535 a New York appellate court generally upheld the enforcement of such stipulations, but it acknowledged that, in some circumstances, strict enforcement could be unfair. It stated: "Accordingly, although it may be unfair to construe such an exclusion agreement as violated by a visit which occurred without the tenant's knowledge, there is no practical or policy-based reason why the tenant should not be bound by the visitation exclusion under appropriate circumstances." n536

In another New York case, a tenant's refusal to enter into a stipulation to exclude her teenage son from her dwelling unit, where the son represented a serious threat to the safety of other public housing tenants, resulted in the tenant's eviction from public housing. n537

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 503. 647 F.2d 332 (2d Cir. 1981) .

(n2)Footnote 504. 760 F.2d 361 (1st Cir. 1985) .

(n3)Footnote 505. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(d)(1).

(n4)Footnote 506. See Note, Gregory A. Beck, Ban Lists: Can Public Housing Authorities Have Unwanted Visitors Arrested? 2004 U. Ill. L. Rev. 1223, 1225-26, 1234-35. The lists go by different names, including "ban lists," "no-trespass lists," and "barment notices." Id. at 1225-26.

(n5)Footnote 507. See, e.g., Williams v. Nagel, 643 N.E.2d 816 (Ill. 1994) .

(n6)Footnote 508. See, e.g., City of Bremerton v. Widell, 51 P.3d 733 (Wash. 2002) (eleven grounds for being barred from the property); Diggs v. Housing Authority, 676 F. Supp. 2d 522 (D. Md. 1999) (notices issued to non-residents who are on the property for no apparent reason); See also State v. Blair, 827 P.2d 356 (Wash. Ct. App. 1992) (housing authority entered into agreement with police department authorizing the police to warn and arrest anyone trespassing on the premises; the agreement allowed a police officer to "admonish" any person believed to have engaged in illegal activity, or who was arrested on the premises, not to return or he or she would be arrested for trespassing; the court said that the policy of excluding those engaging in illegal activities on the premises serves to further the legislative mandate of providing decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for low-income individuals).

(n7)Footnote 509. See Gregory A. Beck, Ban Lists: Can Public Housing Authorities Have Unwanted Visitors Arrested? 2004 U. Ill. L. Rev. 1223, 1239-40.

(n8)Footnote 510. 250 F.3d 399 (6th Cir. 2001) .

(n9)Footnote 511. See 250 F.3d at 406 . The court cited Saenz v. Roe, 526 U.S. 489 (1999) .

(n10)Footnote 512. See 250 F.3d at 406 .

(n11)Footnote 513. See 250 F.3d. at 407 .

(n12)Footnote 514. See 250 F.3d. at 407 .

(n13)Footnote 515. See 250 F.3d. at 408 .

(n14)Footnote 516. 51 P.3d 733 (Wash. 2002) .

(n15)Footnote 517. See 51 P.3d at 577.

(n16)Footnote 518. 67 F. Supp. 2d 522 (D. Md. 1999) .

(n17)Footnote 519. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(1)(2).

(n18)Footnote 520. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(d)(1).

(n19)Footnote 521. See 67 F. Supp. 2d at 533 .

(n20)Footnote 522. 539 U.S. 113 (2003) .

(n21)Footnote 523. See Commonwealth v. Hicks, 563 S.E.2d 674, 676 (Va. 2002) .

(n22)Footnote 524. See 539 U.S. at 113 .

(n23)Footnote 525. See Commonwealth v. Hicks, 563 S.E.2d 674, 677 (Va. 2002) .

(n24)Footnote 526. See Hicks v. Commonwealth, 535 S.E.2d at 680.

(n25)Footnote 527. See Commonwealth v. Hicks, 563 S.E.2d 674, 680 (2002) .

(n26)Footnote 528. 563 S.E.2d at 680-81 .

(n27)Footnote 529. 539 U.S. at 123 .

(n28)Footnote 530. See 539 U.S. at 124 . The Court did not consider whether the application of the policy interfered with the freedom of association. See Gregory A. Beck, Ban Lists: Can Public Housing Authorities Have Unwanted Visitors Arrested? 2004 U. Ill. L. Rev. 1223, 1257 (arguing that the freedom of intimate association is implicated by ban list policies).

(n29)Footnote 531. See de la O v. Housing Authority of City of El Paso, Texas, 417 F.3d 495 (5th Cir. 2005) .

(n30)Footnote 532. See, e.g., Wooten v. Finkle, 728 N.Y.S.2d 152 (App. Div. 2001) ; Romero v. Martinez, 721 N.Y.S. 2d 17 (App. Div. 2001) ; Jimenez v. Popolizio, 180 A.D.2d 590, 580 N.Y.S.2d 302 (App. Div. 1992) .

(n31)Footnote 533. See, e.g., Wooten v. Finkle, 728 N.Y.S.2d 152 (App. Div. 2001) .

(n32)Footnote 534. See e.g., Holiday v. Franco, 709 N.Y.S.2d 523 (App. Div. 2000) .

(n33)Footnote 535. 721 N.Y.S.2d 17 (App. Div. 2001) .

(n34)Footnote 536. See 721 N.Y.S.2d at 20 .

(n35)Footnote 537. See Featherstone v. Franco. 720 N.Y.S.2d 93 (App. Div. 2000) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.13

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.13 Sweeps.

In order to combat drug and crime problems in public housing, some housing authorities have conducted what have been called "sweeps." These are door-to-door searches for drugs, weapons, and squatters. One writer described them in this way:

> During sweeps, inspectors, lawyers, police, security guards, and construction workers would converge on a single project unannounced. Every apartment would then be searched for drugs, weapons, and squatters. Identification was issued to tenants and new security systems were installed. n538

The constitutionality of sweeps was considered by a federal district court in Pratt v. Chicago Housing Authority, n539 There, several tenants who objected to sweeps conducted by their housing authority, sued for declaratory and injunctive relief, claiming that the sweeps violated their civil rights. The sweeps were conducted, without search warrants, if "appropriate preconditions" were met, including random gunfire and intimidation by weapons. n540 The court ordered a preliminary injunction against the program, on the basis that there was a substantial likelihood that the sweep activity violated the Fourth Amendment rights of housing project residents. The court observed that, in order to overcome the presumption that warrantless searches are unconstitutional, the housing authority had to show that it had both probable cause for the search and exigent circumstances that excused its failure to obtain a warrant. However, in this case, sweeps had been ordered when there was no probable cause to believe that a search of any particular apartment would prevent the commission of a crime, unveil evidence of a crime, or lead to an arrest. Moreover, because the sweeps usually took place several days after shooting activity, and in no instance within forty-eight hours after the precipitating gunfire, the requirement of exigent circumstances was also unmet.

In a subsequent case, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit observed that the Pratt decision had precipitated some consideration of whether public housing residents who would like to improve their own security might agree to permit sweeps by means of waivers or advance consent clauses in their leases. n541 However, the court offered no opinion on whether such consents or waivers were either necessary or sufficient for Fourth Amendment purposes. "It is enough for present purposes, " said the court, "to note that no court has yet held that the police may search any apartment in a public housing project whenever they want, without a warrant, simply because they believe that drugs may plague that particular project." n542

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 538. Robyn Minter Smyers, High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime, 30 Urb. Law. 573, 609 (1998). See also Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 546 (1993).

(n2)Footnote 539. 848 F. Supp. 792 (N.D. Ill. 1994) .

(n3)Footnote 540. See 848 F. Supp. at 794 .

(n4)Footnote 541. U.S. v. Johnson, 170 F.3d 708 (7th Cir.1999) .

(n5)Footnote 542. See 170 F.3d at 719-720 . Consent clauses are discussed in Jason S. Thaler, Public Housing Consent Clauses: Unconstitutional Condition or Constitutional Necessity?, 63 Ford. L. Rev. 1777 (1995) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.14

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.14 Housing Quality.

§ 45.14(a) Introduction.

Much had been written about the poor quality of much of the nation's public housing. For example, one commentator wrote, in a 1993 article:

> Public housing increasingly commands public attention. Scarcely a day goes by without reports in the media about the physical, managerial, and social problems that plague some publicly-owned housing developments. Accounts of appalling apartment conditions, corrupt administrators, and innocent bystanders killed by gang warfare are commonplace. Negative images of public housing have even found their way into popular culture. Bestsellers have recounted the hardships of life in public housing, while films depict life in public housing as a horror story. n543

Some things have changed since 1993, but housing quality remains a concern. It is a concern that finds expression in legislation, regulation, and court decision.

§ 45.14(b) Legislation and Regulations.

The 1937 Act includes a number of provisions relating to the quality of public housing. In the first place, the legislation requires that each contract for contributions between HUD and a public housing agency include a requirement that the housing agency maintain its public housing in accordance with standards that "meet or exceed" standards established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to ensure that "public housing dwelling units are safe and habitable." n544

The legislation further provides that the Secretary's standards "shall include requirements relating to habitability, including maintenance, health and sanitation factors, condition, and construction of dwellings." n545 And it states that the "Secretary may determine whether the laws, regulations, standards, or codes of any State or local jurisdiction meet or exceed these standards." n546

The 1937 Act also requires public housing agencies to use leases that "obligate the public housing agency to maintain the project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition." n547 The legislation further requires public housing agencies to conduct an annual inspection of each of their housing projects to determine whether they are maintained in accordance with applicable quality standards. n548

HUD regulations include provisions relating to housing quality as well. In particular, the regulations relating to the "Public Housing Assessment System," n549 include a number of detailed provisions regarding physical requirements for public housing. For example, the "Physical Condition Indicator" is used to determine whether a public housing agency is meeting the standard of providing public housing that is "decent, safe, sanitary, and in good repair." n550 The regulations set forth specific conditions relating to the following "inspectable areas of public housing": site, building exterior, building systems, dwelling units, and common areas. n551 One of the provisions regarding dwelling units states:

> Each dwelling unit within a building must be structurally sound, habitable, and in good repair. All areas and aspects of the dwelling unit (for example, the unit's bathroom, call-for-aid, ceiling, doors, electrical systems, floors, hot water heater, HVAC (where individual units are provided), kitchen, lighting, outlets/switches, patio/porch/balcony, smoke detectors, stairs, walls, and windows) must be free of health and safety hazards, functionally adequate, operable, and in good repair. n552

The regulations include specific requirements relating to health and safety matters, as well. n553

§ 45.14(c) Applicability of the Implied Warranty of Habitability.

An implied warranty of habitability is generally recognized in private residential leases. The warranty typically obligates the landlord to provide the tenant with residential premises that are safe, clean, and fit for human habitation. The landlord is also generally obligated to maintain the leased premises in that condition throughout the tenancy. n554 Does the implied warranty of habitability also apply to leases of public housing? n555

The issue came up Ford ex rel. Pringle v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, n556 a case in which the Philadelphia Housing Authority was sued for lead paint injuries to a child that were allegedly caused by the condition of a public housing unit. The plaintiff prevailed at the trial court level. One of the issues on appeal was whether the implied warranty of habitability applicable to private residential leases applied in the public housing context. The appellate court said that it did not.

The court was influenced by the reasoning of Alexander v. U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, n557 an older decision of the Seventh Circuit, in which the court had rejected a claim that HUD itself was subject to an implied warranty of habitability in a situation in which it had taken over the operation of a low-income housing development following default by the private owner. In that case, the Seventh Circuit had said:

> [We] are not persuaded that such warranties should be implied in leases of dwelling units constructed and operated as public housing projects. In contrast to housing projects in the private sector, the construction and operation of public housing are projects established to effectuate a stated national policy "to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income"... As such, the implication of a warranty of habitability in leases pertaining to public housing units is a warranty that the stated objectives of national policy have been and are being met. We feel that the establishment of any such warranty that national policy goals have been attained or that those goals are being maintained is best left to that branch of government which established the objectives. n558

Quoting this language with approval, the Pennsylvania court said, in the Pringle case:

> [E]ven though the Authority owns the housing project, the federal government controls the > relationship, including what is in the lease: its terms, the price of rent and even who can be a tenant. Moreover, the federal government funds the Authority and provides it with detailed regulations on how it operates. What is involved here is not a marketplace lease entered into by two bargaining parties as envisioned by Pugh [the Pennsylvania case that recognized the implied warranty of habitability], but a public government program in which the Authority, under federal law, is required to provide safe and habitable housing. Because the concept of "warranty of habitability" was adopted to address the inequities in the marketplace and public housing is anything but marketplace housing, the reasoning set forth in Alexander is equally applicable, and we hold that the contract action for warranty of habitability does not apply to public housing. n559

A pre-Pringle Pennsylvania case had applied an implied warranty of habitability in a public housing context without apparent consideration of the larger issues addressed by Alexander. n560 But the court in Pringle said, of the earlier case: "All that was addressed in that case was whether the breach of the implied warranty of habitability could be brought under tort law, constituting a separate claim from negligence and making it inapplicable to whether such a claim exists as a contract claim in a public housing situation." n561

The Alexander case, which was important to the court in Pringle, was not a public housing case, as such. As indicated previously, it was a case in which HUD had taken over operation of a privately owned, but government-subsidized, housing development. In a similar situation that came up a few years later, the United States First Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that HUD was subject to an implied warranty of habitability.

The First Circuit case, Conille v. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, n562 involved a suit by a individual who had vacated an allegedly uninhabitable HUD-subsidized apartment. The plaintiff claimed that HUD had breached an implied warranty of habitability and should be liable for damages for the period that started when HUD had assumed management of the building until the tenant vacated.

The court observed that federal law was applicable to the dispute, but it indicated that where contractual obligations of the United States were not addressed by statute, but were resolvable under state law without any conflict with federal policy, it was appropriate to incorporate state law as the federal rule of decision. Disagreeing with Alexander, the court said that it was appropriate to incorporate an implied warranty of habitability. But this was not the same warranty that applied in the private landlord-tenant arena. Because the federal legislation then applicable to this situation only required the Secretary to "seek" to provide decent housing, and did not require the Secretary to provide it, the court said that HUD would meet its warranty obligation if it takes reasonable affirmative steps to bring the housing into habitable condition. n563

Some other cases have followed Alexander, and others have not. n564 A 1997 bankruptcy case questioned whether Alexander should have much influence in any event. In In re Day, n565 the court said:

> In Alexander the court decided, as a matter of federal common law, that there was no warranty of habitability implied in the leases of tenants in a federally-owned housing project. The underlying issues in the case were federal preemption of state law and the content of federal common law... A far different question is presented in the subsequent cases, and in the instant case, than was addressed in Alexander, i.e., whether a state-chartered housing authority is subject to a state law implied warranty of habitability. Alexander does not address this question and contains no guidance on this issue. n566

The court concluded that it would be appropriate to recognize an implied warranty of habitability; however, it also observed that the that the public housing leases at issue included provisions amounting to an express warranty of habitability.

Although the case law on the implied warranty issue is mixed, the observation of the court in Day about an express warranty deserves some elaboration in the present context. Current federal statutes and regulations, which are discussed in the preceding section of this chapter, impose substantial obligations on public housing agencies with respect to the condition of leased public housing. They include habitability requirements, including a requirement that public housing agencies use leases that "obligate the public housing agency to maintain the project in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition." n567 In light of these requirements, the issue of whether a public housing agency should be subject to an implied warranty of habitability may be less than pressing, at least if the housing agency includes the required habitability provisions in its leases, because the lease would be a contract with the tenant. A housing agency that does not include such provisions in its leases would violate its contributions contract with HUD, and could be subject to HUD-imposed sanctions. It might also be subject to lawsuits by tenants who claim entitlement to a private right of action under federal law. Private rights of action are discussed in another section of this chapter. n568

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 543. Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497-98 (1993).

(n2)Footnote 544. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f).

(n3)Footnote 545. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f)(2).

(n4)Footnote 546. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f)(2).

(n5)Footnote 547. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l).

(n6)Footnote 548. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f)(3).

(n7)Footnote 549. The assessment system is discussed in § 45.06(c) of this chapter.

(n8)Footnote 550. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.20(a).

(n9)Footnote 551. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.20(b).

(n10)Footnote 552. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.20(b)(4)(i).

(n11)Footnote 553. See 24 C.F.R. § 902.20(c).

(n12)Footnote 554. The implied warranty of habitability is discussed in chapter 41.

(n13)Footnote 555. For an law review piece arguing that it should, see Rachel Camber, The Incorporation of the Implied Warranty of Habitability In Public Housing Programs, 38 Wash. U. J. Urb. & Contemp. L. 205 (1990).

(n14)Footnote 556. 848 A.2d 1038 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2004) .

(n15)Footnote 557. 555 F.2d 166 (7th Cir.1977) , aff'd, Alexander v. U. S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, 441 U.S. 39 (1979) .

(n16)Footnote 558. 555 F.2d at 170 .

(n17)Footnote 559. 848 A.2d at 1057 .

(n18)Footnote 560. See McIntyre ex rel. Howard v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 816 A.2d 1204 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2003) .

(n19)Footnote 561. See 848 A.2d at 1058 .

(n20)Footnote 562. 840 F.2d 105 (1st Cir. 1988) .

(n21)Footnote 563. The current statutory provision with respect to maintenance of HUD-owned or HUD-possessed housing states, in part, that:

> In the case of multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession), the Secretary shall-
>
> (A) to the greatest extent possible, maintain all such occupied projects in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition and in compliance with any standards under applicable State or local laws, rules, ordinances, or regulations relating to the physical condition of the housing and any such standards established by the Secretary.

12 U.S.C. § 1701z-11.

(n22)Footnote 564. Cases that follow Alexander include Kingston Square Tenants Ass'n v. Tuskegee Gardens, Ltd., 792 F. Supp. 1566 (S.D. Fla.1992) and Gibson v. Gary Housing Authority 754 F.2d 205 (7th Cir.1985) . Cases that do not follow Alexander include In re Day, 208 B.R. 358 (E.D. Pa. 1997) and Techer v. Roberts-Harris, 83 F.R.D. 124 (D. Conn. 1979) .

(n23)Footnote 565. In re Day, 208 B.R. 358 (E.D. Pa. 1997) .

(n24)Footnote 566. See 208 B.R. 358 at 372 .

(n25)Footnote 567. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(3).

(n26)Footnote 568. See § 45.20(d) of this chapter.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.15

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.15 Community Service and Economic Self-Sufficiency Requirements.

In 1998, the United States Housing Act was amended to impose some community service and economic self-sufficiency requirements on residents of public housing. n569 According to the legislation, adult residents of public housing projects are required to contribute eight hours per month of community service or to participate in an economic self-sufficiency program for eight hours per month. n570 Political activities do not count against the eight hour requirement. n571

An "economic self-sufficiency program" refers to a program designed to encourage, assist, train, or facilitate the economic independence of participants and their families or to provide work for participants. Among the programs that would qualify would be ones for job training, employment counseling, work placement, basic skills training, education, workfare, financial or household management, and apprenticeship. n572

Some public housing residents are exempt from the community service and economic self-sufficiency requirements. These include residents who are 62 years of age or older, blind or disabled, or already engaged in a "work activity." n573

The legislation provides that, within 30 days before the expiration of a non-exempt resident's lease term, the public housing agency is to determine whether the resident is in compliance. The determination is to be done "in accordance with the principles of due process and on a nondiscriminatory basis." n574 If the public housing agency determines that the resident is not in compliance, the housing agency is to notify the resident of its determination, inform the resident that the determination is subject to the administrative grievance procedure, and inform the resident that unless he or she enters into an agreement with the public housing agency providing for compliance within twelve-month term of the lease, the resident's lease will not be renewed. n575

The legislation further provides that the public housing agency may not renew or extend the lease of a resident who is found to be out of compliance with the community service or economic self-sufficiency requirements, and instead must take action to terminate the tenancy, unless, before the lease term expires, the public housing agency and the resident enter into an agreement providing for the resident to cure the noncompliance. n576

Public housing agencies are also prohibited from entering into a new public housing lease with any household that includes a person who was subject to, but did not comply with, the community service or economic self-sufficiency requirements. n577

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 569. Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1988, Pub. L. 105-276, § 501, 112 Stat. 2518, 2539 (1998) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)).

(n2)Footnote 570. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c).

(n3)Footnote 571. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c).

(n4)Footnote 572. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(g).

(n5)Footnote 573. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)(2). The legislation references a definition for "work activity" in section 407(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 607(d)).

(n6)Footnote 574. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)(3)(B).

(n7)Footnote 575. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)(3)(C).

(n8)Footnote 576. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)(3)(C).

(n9)Footnote 577. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437j(c)(4).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.16

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.16 Tenant Displacement from Public Housing.

[Go To Supp]

§ 45.16(a) Introduction.

In addition to eviction for good cause, which is discussed in another section of this chapter, n578 public housing tenants could be displaced from public housing on account of damage to the building where their apartments are located; demolition of the building, or the part of the building, in which they live; or sale of the building to a purchaser who has different plans for its use. Statutes or regulations have some things to say about each of these situations. They offer significant protections to affected tenants.

§ 45.16(b) Damage to the Housing Unit.

Tenant displacement could occur as a result of damage to a public housing unit. According to HUD regulations, if the housing unit is damaged to the extent that conditions are hazardous to the "life, health, or safety of the occupants", n579 the tenant is to immediately notify project management of the damage. n580 The housing authority is responsible for making repairs, unless the damage was caused by the tenant, the tenant's household or the tenant's guests. In that case, the "reasonable cost of the repairs shall be charged to the tenant." n581 If the repairs cannot be made within a reasonable time, the housing authority "shall offer standard alternative accommodations, if available." n582 The regulations also provide for rent abatement if the repairs are not made or if alternative accommodations are not provided. n583 Significant damage to a building might also cause a housing authority to consider its demolition. Demolition is discussed in the next section.

§ 45.16(c) Demolition.

§ 45.16(c)(1) Statutory Provisions.

Public housing tenants also enjoy some protections against indirect termination of their tenancies through demolition of the housing project. n584 During the 1980s, some public housing authorities demolished housing projects instead of undertaking repairs. n585 Congress responded by adding some restrictions on demolition to the provisions of the 1937 Act. n586

Subject to an exception for "de minimis" types of demolition, n587 a housing agency that wishes to demolish all or part of a public housing project must submit an application to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and comply with a number of statutory requirements. n588 The application must be developed in consultation with affected public housing residents, resident advisory boards, resident councils, and "appropriate government officials." n589 If the application complies with statutory requirements, the Secretary is to approve the application; if it does not, the Secretary is to deny the application. n590 Courts have held that if the housing agency does not satisfy the applicable requirements, a tenant is entitled to bring suit to prevent the demolition. n591

The key provisions about demolition are found in 42 U.S.C. § 1437p, a section of the 1937 Act entitled "Demolition and disposition of public housing." The legislation provides that a housing authority must certify, in its application for demolition, that "the public housing project is obsolete as to physical condition, location, or other factors, making it unsuitable for housing purposes," and that "no reasonable program of modifications is cost-effective to return the public housing project or portion of the project to useful life." n592 If only a part of the housing project is proposed for demolition, the housing agency is required to certify that the partial demolition "will help to ensure the viability of the remaining portion of the project." n593

Other certifications are required as well. One deals with planning. The housing agency must certify to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that it has "specifically authorized" the demolition in its "public housing agency plan," and that the actions contemplated in the plan comply with requirements of the 1937 Act. n594

More significantly, insofar as the tenants are concerned, are legislative provisions that require the housing authority to certify that it will provide advance notice to the residents of the demolition, assuring the residents that the demolition will not commence until each resident of the building has been relocated and that each family will be offered comparable housing in an area. n595 In addition, the housing agency must certify to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that it will pay the family's actual and reasonable relocation expenses, that it will provide comparable housing in accordance with its notice to the family, that it will provide necessary counseling for displaced tenants, and that it will not commence demolition until all residents have been relocated. n596

§ 45.16(c)(2) De Facto Demolition.

In some instances, tenants have brought lawsuits claiming that a housing authority engaged in "de facto" demolition by permitting the project to become demolished through neglect. A number of courts have recognized a cause of action for de facto demolition. n597 Some courts have said that tenants have to show that the housing authority intended to allow housing units to deteriorate in order to establish a claim for de facto demolition. n598 But this has not been universally held. n599

Velez v. Cisneros n600 provides an example of the application of the de facto demolition doctrine. The plaintiffs in that case filed a class action on behalf of public housing tenants of the Chester Housing Authority ("CHA") against several defendants, including CHA, HUD, and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. The tenants asserted various violations of federal housing law, the Administrative Procedure Act, civil rights laws, and the annual contributions contract between CHA and HUD. The parties agreed to attempt to resolve the claims in mediation. While those efforts were under way, HUD declared CHA a "Troubled Housing Authority" that was in substantial breach of its obligations under the annual contributions contract, and assumed control of the assets and management of CHA.

When mediation failed, the case went to trial. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendants had "caused constructive demolition ('de facto demolition') of CHA housing by failure to fill vacant units, maintain occupied units in a habitable condition, train maintenance workers, perform routine inspections, and respond promptly to tenant complaints." n601

Following a non-jury trial, the court made findings of fact concerning the condition of the five housing projects at issue. Among other things, the court found that there had been an increasing number of vacant housing units at project locations; that many of the vacant units were unsecured, in poor condition, and open to vandalism and rain damage; that significant numbers of other units evidenced health and safety problems; and that maintenance of units was very poor. n602 The court also found that, after HUD had taken over the projects, the "availability of large HUD grants for modernization and reconstruction resulted in a decision not to rehabilitate vacant units for immediate occupancy," n603 and that vacancy rates continued to rise. n604 While some units were rehabilitated, the court found that "CHA/HUD believed it would be fiscally and managerially more efficient to allow units to remain vacant pending a large-scale modernization and reconstruction program than to perform interim repairs to rehabilitate vacant apartments for immediate occupancy." n605 CHA and HUD planned to reconstruct some of the residential buildings, using a "phased" reconstruction in which residents would be relocated within the development in order to vacate one or more buildings. When an empty building had been reconstructed, tenants would be moved there, and other buildings would be available for reconstruction. n606

The court concluded that a private right of action could be available to enforce the demolition requirements of the 1937 Act. It quoted language from a congressional conference report stating that the purpose of an amendment to the 1937 Act was to clarify that no public housing authority > shall take any steps toward demolition and disposition without having satisfied the statutory criteria. This provision is intended to correct a erroneous interpretation of the existing statute by the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit in Edwards v. District of Columbia and shall be fully enforceable by tenants of and applicants for the housing that is threatened. n607

Because there was a private right of action available to the tenants, the court concluded that they could enforce it under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. n608

As to the more particular issue of de facto demolition, the court noted that while the provisions of the 1937 Act prohibited a housing authority from taking any action to demolish public housing units without HUD approval, the legislation did not define "demolition." n609 But the court was of the view that the "clear purpose of § 1437p is to preserve the number of available public housing units." n610 HUD's position was that demolition occurred when a building was "razed." But the court thought that this was too narrow a view. It stated:

> It is arbitrary to distinguish housing that is "demolished" because the entire physical structure is destroyed from housing that is "demolished" because extensive interior reconstruction leaves only the exterior walls standing. In both cases, the inventory of public housing is diminished for a substantial period of time. HUD's definition cannot be sustained as a reasonable interpretation of the statute. n611

In this instance, the policies of the housing authority, and of HUD as operator of the project, had resulted in the removal of a substantial number of housing units from use as they became vacant. So the court concluded: "Because the total number of available housing units has been and will be greatly diminished for a substantial period, housing units have been de facto demolished." n612

There was a separate issue as to whether HUD itself could be a defendant in such an action. The court did not think that HUD, in its "general oversight capacity" should be liable for de facto demolition. But in this case, HUD had taken over operation of the housing projects in question, and it could be liable.

§ 45.16(c)(3) Consolidation.

After some de facto demolition cases had come down, Congress amended the 1937 Act to provide that certain types of residential "consolidation" do not violate the statute's prohibitions. Thus, 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(e) provides:

e) Consolidation of occupancy within or among buildings

Nothing in this section may be construed to prevent a public housing agency from consolidating occupancy within or among buildings of a public housing project, or among projects, or with other housing for the purpose of improving living conditions of, or providing more efficient services to, residents.

Where activities of the housing authority can be found to come within the scope of this provision, those activities should not be found to constitute a violation of the 1937 Act.

§ 45.16(d) Sale or Transfer of the Housing Project.

The same section of the 1937 Act that imposes limitations on the demolition of public housing also limits the ability of a public housing authority to sell or transfer a public housing project. n613 Before conducting such a sale or transfer, a public housing authority is required to submit an application to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and to satisfy a number of statutory requirements. n614 As in the case of a proposed demolition, the application must be developed in consultation with affected public housing residents, resident advisory boards, resident councils, and "appropriate government officials." n615 If the application complies with statutory requirements, the Secretary is to approve the application; if it does not, the Secretary is to deny the application. n616

In the case of a sale or transfer, the public housing agency is required to certify that the retention of the property is not in the best interests of the residents or the public housing agency. n617 This can be because conditions in the area of the project adversely affect the health or safety of the residents or the feasible operation of the project. n618 It can also be because the sale or transfer permits the development of other properties that will be more efficiently or effectively operated as low-income housing. n619

In addition, the housing agency is to certify that it has determined that the disposition is appropriate for reasons that are in the best interests of the public housing residents and of the public housing agency, are consistent with the goals of the housing agency and its plan, and are otherwise consistent with the legislation. n620 If the property to be disposed of consists of something other than dwelling units, the housing authority must certify that the subject property is "excess to the needs" of the housing project or that the disposition "is incidental to, or does not interfere with, continued operation" of the project. n621

The housing agency is required to certify to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that the housing agency has authorized the disposition in its public housing agency plan and that actions contemplated in the plan comply with statutory requirements. n622

The housing agency is also required to make certifications regarding the relocation of existing tenants that mirror those discussed above in the case of project demolition. n623 As in the case of a demolition, the housing agency is required to certify , among other things, that it will not dispose of the project until each tenant has been relocated to appropriate alternative housing, that it will cover the actual and reasonable costs of tenant relocation, and that it will provide tenants with needed counseling. n624

There are also some certifications that must be made by the public housing agency that do not mirror certifications that are required in the case of demolition. In particular, the housing agency must certify that the proceeds of the sale or disposition will be used to retire debt incurred to finance or modernize the housing project. The housing agency must also certify that, if there are remaining proceeds, they will be used to provide low-income housing, to benefit the residents of the housing agency, or to secure on site commercial enterprises to serve the needs of the residents. n625

In addition to these requirements, the legislation provides that, "in appropriate circumstances, as determined by the Secretary," the housing agency will > initially offer the property to any eligible resident organization, eligible resident management corporation, or nonprofit organization acting on behalf of the residents, if that entity has expressed an interest, in writing, to the public housing agency in a timely manner, in purchasing the property for continued use as low-income housing. n626

If one of these entities expresses interest in purchasing the housing project, the housing agency must give the entity time to obtain a firm commitment for financing the purchase. n627

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 578. See § 45.11 of this chapter.

(n2)Footnote 579. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(h).

(n3)Footnote 580. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(h).

(n4)Footnote 581. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(h)(2).

(n5)Footnote 582. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(h)(3).

(n6)Footnote 583. See 24 C.F.R. § 966.4(h)(4).

(n7)Footnote 584. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 733 (1994).

(n8)Footnote 585. See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 734 (1994).

(n9)Footnote 586. See Housing and Community Development Act of 1987, Pub. L. No. 100-242, § 121, 101 Stat. 1815, 1837-39 (1988) (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437p, 1437p(b)(3)(A)(v), 1437p(b)(3)(B)); Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 734 (1994).

(n10)Footnote 587. The language of the exception is as follows:

f) De minimis exception to demolition requirements

Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in any 5-year period a public housing agency may demolish not more than the lesser of 5 dwelling units or 5 percent of the total dwelling units owned by the public housing agency, but only if the space occupied by the demolished unit is used for meeting the service or other needs of public housing residents or the demolished unit was beyond repair.

42 U.S.C. § 1437p(f).

(n11)Footnote 588. See 24 C.F.R. § 970.4; 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(b).

(n12)Footnote 589. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(b)(2).

(n13)Footnote 590. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a) & (b).

(n14)Footnote 591. See, e.g., Concerned Tenants Association v. Pierce, 685 F. Supp. 316 (D. Conn. 1988) (court ruled that 42 U.S.C. § 1437p created an enforceable right in the tenants' favor), but cf., Benavides v. Housing Authority of City of San Antonio, Texas, 238 F.3d 667 (5th Cir. 2001) (claims of former residents, who were seeking to enjoin the demolition, that the demolition was in violation of the National Historic Preservation Act was moot when housing project had already been substantially demolished).

(n15)Footnote 592. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(1)(A).

(n16)Footnote 593. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(1)(B).

(n17)Footnote 594. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(1)(B).

(n18)Footnote 595. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(4)(A). Assistance to the displaced family may be either "tenant-based" or "project-based" assistance." Id.

(n19)Footnote 596. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(4)(B), (C), (D) & (E).

(n20)Footnote 597. See, e.g., Henry Horner Mothers Guild v. Chicago Hous. Auth., 780 F. Supp. 511, 515 (N.D. Ill. 1991) (holding that the legislation should be construed to include both actual and de facto demolition); Tinsley v. Kemp, 750 F. Supp. 1001, 1012 (W.D. Mo. 1990) (holding that plaintiffs' claims can be based on either actual or de facto demolition); Concerned Tenants Ass'n v. Pierce, 685 F. Supp. 316, 319 -21 (D. Conn. 1988) (stating that the legislation applies to either actual or de facto demolition); Velez v. Cisneros, 850 F. Supp. 1257 (E. D. Pa. 1994) (tenants may bring § 1983 action for de facto demolition against the housing authority and against HUD, in its capacity as operator of the project); but see Dessin v. Housing Authority, 783 F. Supp. 587 (M.D. Fla. 1990) rev'd in part, 948 F. 2d 730 (11th Cir. 1991) (court rejected cause of action, said the statute was ambiguous and that HUD's interpretation of demolition as razing should be given considerable weight); See Shelby D. Green, The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control, 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681, 733-34 (1994).

(n21)Footnote 598. See Gomez v. Housing Authority, 805 F. Supp. 1363 (W.D. Tex. 1992) ,aff'd sub nom., 20 F. 3d 1169 (5th Cir. 1994) , cert. denied, 513 U.S. 873 (1994) .

(n22)Footnote 599. See Henry Horner Mothers Guild v. Chicago Housing Authority, 780 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Ill. 1991) (tenants need not prove intent to demolish); Velez v. Cisneros, 850 F. Supp. 1257 (E. D. Pa. 1994) (tenants not required to prove that housing authority had a plan or intent to demolish the project; court concluded that high number of vacancies, the long period of the vacancies, the absence of a plan to make interim repairs amounted to de facto demolition).

(n23)Footnote 600. 850 F. Supp. 1257 (E.D. Pa. 1994) .

(n24)Footnote 601. See 850 F. Supp. at 1260 .

(n25)Footnote 602. See 850 F. Supp. at 1261-63 .

(n26)Footnote 603. See 850 F. Supp. at 1264 .

(n27)Footnote 604. See 850 F. Supp. at 1264 .

(n28)Footnote 605. See 850 F. Supp. at 1264 .

(n29)Footnote 606. See 850 F. Supp. at 1268 .

(n30)Footnote 607. See 850 F. Supp. at 1270 (italics in court's quotation from the conference report). The court identified the conference report as H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 426, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. (1987), reprinted in 1987

U.S.C.C.A.N. 3317, 3469.

(n31)Footnote 608. See 850 F. Supp. at 1270 .

(n32)Footnote 609. See 850 F. Supp. at 1270 .

(n33)Footnote 610. See 850 F. Supp. at 1270 .

(n34)Footnote 611. See 850 F. Supp. at 1271 .

(n35)Footnote 612. See 850 F. Supp. at 1273 . The court also found that CHA/HUD had "acted with the intent to make some units functionally unavailable for housing purposes and engaged in intentional de facto demolition of those units." Id.

(n36)Footnote 613. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p.

(n37)Footnote 614. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a).

(n38)Footnote 615. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(b)(2).

(n39)Footnote 616. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a) & (b).

(n40)Footnote 617. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(2).

(n41)Footnote 618. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(2).

(n42)Footnote 619. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(2).

(n43)Footnote 620. See (b).

(n44)Footnote 621. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(2)(C).

(n45)Footnote 622. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(3).

(n46)Footnote 623. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(4).

(n47)Footnote 624. See Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32-30-3.1 - 32-30-3.1-12.

(n48)Footnote 625. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437p(a)(5).

(n49)Footnote 626. See Ind. Code Ann. § 32-30-3.1.

(n50)Footnote 627. See Article 9 of the U.C.C..

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.17

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.17 Tenant Purchase of Dwelling Units.

The Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998 amended the 1937 Act to require that low-income families residing in public housing projects be provided with the opportunity to purchase their dwelling units. n628 Purchases by residents can be done through "a qualifying resident management corporation," n629 in accordance with the requirements set forth in the legislation.

The legislation contemplates that the resident management corporation will purchase, from a public housing agency, one or more multifamily buildings in a public housing project, and that it will thereafter be able to sell units in the building, or buildings, to public housing tenants. n630 There are a number of requirements that the resident management corporation will need to satisfy in order to do this. n631 These include obtaining a certification from HUD that the resident management corporation is prepared to undertake the ownership, management, and maintenance of the building or buildings with continued HUD assistance; and obtaining a certification from the public housing agency that it has and will implement a plan to replace public housing units thus sold within 30 months of the sale. n632

After the resident management corporation acquires the ownership of a building, it may sell a dwelling unit or ownership rights in a dwelling unit to a lower-income family residing in, or eligible to reside in, public housing, upon a determination by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that the purchase will not interfere with the rights of other families residing in the housing project or harm the efficient operation of the project, and that the family will be able to purchase and maintain the property. n633 If the family should later wish to resell its interest in the dwelling unit, it must resell it to the resident management corporation, to another eligible lower-income family, or to the public housing agency. n634

Low-income families that wish to purchase dwelling units might find it difficult to obtain financing. The legislation provides that if financing is not otherwise available, the resident management corporation may make a loan based on the security of the property involved. n635

There are separate statutory provisions that permit public housing agencies to carry out approved home ownership programs to make public housing units available for purchase by low-income families for use as their principal residence. n636

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 628. Pub. L. No. 105-276, Title V, § 501(a), § 563, 112 Stat. 2518, 2586 (1998). The provisions on ownership are codified in 42 U.S.C. § 1437s.

(n2)Footnote 629. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a).

(n3)Footnote 630. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(1)-(4).

(n4)Footnote 631. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(1)-(4).

(n5)Footnote 632. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(3).

(n6)Footnote 633. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(4).

(n7)Footnote 634. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(4)(C).

(n8)Footnote 635. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437s(a)(4)(D)(6).

(n9)Footnote 636. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-4.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.18

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.18 Conversion to a Voucher Program.

In the Quality Housing and Work Responsibility Act of 1998, Congress included provisions permitting public housing agencies to convert any public housing project, or portion of a housing project, owned by the housing agency to tenant-based assistance. n637 "Tenant-based assistance" is portable housing assistance that permits the tenant to select suitable housing. n638 The Section 8 voucher program is a tenant-based assistance program. n639

A conversion must be preceded by an assessment by the public housing agency. n640 The assessment must demonstrate that the conversion will not be more expensive than continuing to operate the housing as public housing; that the conversion will benefit public housing residents, the housing agency, and the community; and that the conversion will not adversely affect the availability of affordable housing in the community. n641 The housing agency must also develop a conversion plan that is consistent with the assessment and obtain HUD's approval for the plan. n642

Families residing in public housing that will be affected by the conversion are to be notified 90 days prior to the "displacement date" that the housing will be removed from the inventory of public housing, but that each family displaced by the conversion will be offered comparable housing. n643 The conversion plan must require that if the project is used for housing after the conversion, families that would like to remain in their units, but under tenant-based assistance, will be permitted to do so. n644 The plan must also provide for actual and reasonable relocation expenses for families displaced by the conversion. n645

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 637. Pub. L. No. 105-276, Title V, § 501(a), 112 Stat. 2518 (1998). The provisions on conversion are codified in 42 U.S.C. § 1437t.

(n2)Footnote 638. See (e) and § 42 U.S.C. § 1437(o). 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(f) distinguishes "project-based assistance" from "tenant-based assistance." Project-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is attached to the structure," while tenant-based assistance refers to rental assistance "that is not project-based assistance and that provides for the eligible family to select suitable housing and to move to other suitable housing." *Id. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437f(f)*6 &7. Section 8 program certificates or vouchers that permit tenants to move to other apartments, operated by private landlords, are examples of tenant-based assistance. The Section 8 program is discussed in § 45.22(d) of this chapter.

(n3)Footnote 639. The Section 8 program is discussed in § 45.22(d) of this chapter.

(n4)Footnote 640. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(b). The legislation generally required public housing agencies to undertake such an assessment of each of its public housing projects within two years of the effective date of the legislation. 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(b)(2).

(n5)Footnote 641. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(c).

(n6)Footnote 642. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437t(c), (d) & (e).

(n7)Footnote 643. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(d)(4).

(n8)Footnote 644. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(d)(4)(C).

(n9)Footnote 645. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437t(d)(4)(D).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.19

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.19 Pets.

As a result of a 1998 amendment to the United States Housing Act, public housing residents are permitted to have one or more common household pets in their dwelling units, subject to state and local legal requirements relating to animals, and subject to the reasonable requirements of the public housing agency. n646 The public housing agency may impose requirements based on the size and type of the building, or other relevant considerations. It can also limit the number of animals in a unit; prohibit dangerous animals or other animals based on factors such as size and weight; and require a nominal fee, or a pet deposit, or both. n647

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 646. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-3.

(n2)Footnote 647. See 42 U.S.C. § 1437z-3.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.20

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.20 Liability of the Public Housing Authority.

[Go To Supp]

§ 45.20(a) Introduction.

Public housing authorities that engage in tortious conduct, violate statutory obligations, or breach contracts (including leases), could be subject to liability claims. In some instances, however, issues of immunity can arise. And there are other considerations that could be relevant to liability.

§ 45.20(b) Tort Liability.

Public housing authorities are potentially subject to tort liability by individuals injured as a result of their tortious conduct, including negligent conduct. However, in some instances, public housing authorities will be entitled to raise a shield of tort immunity.

Although most states have enacted tort claims statutes waiving blanket common law tort immunity for the state and its agencies, immunities still persist in many situations. n648 Many states have abolished tort immunity generally, but have retained immunity in particular circumstances. n649 Other states have retained general immunity, but have abolished it in particular circumstances. n650 These differences are reflected in cases dealing with the tort liability of public housing authorities.

For example, in Wheeler v. Boston Housing Authority, n651 the plaintiff, who had been visiting a friend at a housing project, filed suit against a housing authority after she had been shot during an exchange of gunfire between persons on the rooftop of the housing project and persons in the housing project's parking area. She claimed that her personal injuries had been caused by the negligence of the housing authority in failing to take adequate security measures to protect persons lawfully on the premises. The housing authority sought summary judgment, on the ground that it was a "public employer" and that, as such, it was exempt from liability under a discretionary function exception to the Massachusetts Tort Claims Act. The trial court granted the motion, and it was affirmed on appeal, with the court stating that the housing authority's decision as to what security measures it would employ amounted to a discretionary function. n652

A housing authority was found to be immune from liability in a case in which a father had been shot and his daughter beaten by gang members at a public housing development. n653 The applicable tort immunity legislation included provisions exempting public entities and employees from liability for failing to provide police protection or, if such protection were provided, for failing to provide adequate protection. However another provision of the legislation stated that a public employee is not liable for an act or omission in the execution or enforcement of any law unless "such act or omission constitutes willful and wanton conduct." n654 In this case, the plaintiffs argued that the public housing authority should be liable on a theory of willful and wanton misconduct for failing to protect an invitee on housing authority property from criminal attack by a third party. But the court rejected this claim, noting that a public housing authority was not a public employee. The court also rejected the plaintiffs' arguments based on other provisions of the immunity legislation.

In an Illinois case, a housing authority was able to take advantage of a tort immunity defense to a claim arising out of an injury to a child on a playground used by public housing tenants and owned by the housing authority. n655 The plaintiff claimed that the housing authority had been negligent in the operation and maintenance of the playground. At issue was a provision of the Illinois Tort Immunity Act providing immunity for a local public entity with respect to injuries arising out of the existence of a condition on public property used as a park or playground, unless the entity were guilty of willful and wanton negligence. In this case, the playground was for the exclusive use of housing project residents and their guests. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the operation of the playground was a proprietary function, and it was therefore outside the purview of the Tort Immunity Act. "There can be no question," said the court, " that the providing of a playground is a governmental activity." n656 The court also rejected the plaintiffs' claim that the immunity protection should be available only if the playground were open to use by the general public. The court noted that the legislation defining public property did not require it to be open for public use.

No tort immunity was available, however, in Bligen v. Jersey City Housing Authority, n657 where the injured housing project tenant sued the housing authority for negligent snow removal. Tort immunity was available to a public housing authority for negligent snow removal from streets. In this case, however, the snow was on a driveway internal to the housing project.

Nor was immunity available in Moore v. Wilmington Housing Authority, n658 a case in which a guest who was visiting a relative at a housing unit leased by a housing authority was injured by the collapse of a ceiling. The Delaware Supreme Court concluded that the building where the injury occurred was a "public building," and that, as a result, the housing authority came within the scope of an exception to tort immunity applicable to public buildings.

An older Delaware case, decided under a different statutory regime for tort liability, had concluded that a provision of the enabling legislation permitting a housing authority to "sue or be sued" amounted to a waiver of tort immunity. n659 The same view has been expressed by other courts, in cases dealing with housing authorities and other governmentally created entities. n660 But this is not a universally accepted notion. n661 The contrary position is reflected in Self v. City of Atlanta, n662 a case in which the Georgia Supreme Court changed its mind about whether "sue or be sued" language waived tort immunity, and overruled a decision concerning a housing authority in which it had previously held otherwise:

> The list of opinions interpreting language of this type is long, and for our present purposes we need not recapitulate and analyze them. It is sufficient to say that, after careful reconsideration of those cases, we are now of the opinion that the correct view is that such language should be read as providing an entity with the status and capacity to enter courts, and not as waiving sovereign immunity. n663

A housing authority that otherwise would be entitled to tort immunity might be found to have waived the immunity protection by purchasing liability insurance, at least if the insurance covers the risk in question. n664

A housing authority that is found liable in tort will likely be faced with the matter of paying a judgment. A California housing authority had that problem, when it became subject to a $12 million judgment arising out of the deaths of persons in a fire at a housing development. The housing authority claimed that it could pay no more than the amount that it had received from an insurance company. However, the court concluded that the housing authority was obligated to satisfy the judgment, and that nothing in the annual contributions contract with HUD or in HUD regulations prohibited the housing authority from doing so, or from using HUD-obtained funds for the purpose. n665

§ 45.20(c) Contract Liability.

Public housing authorities enter into contracts in order to provide public housing for low-income families. These include contracts with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, such as contributions contacts, and leases with public housing tenants. A housing authority that violates its obligations to the Department of Housing and Urban Development may be subject to particular remedies set forth in statute or regulation. n666 However, a housing authority that breaches its contractual obligations would also subject to contractual remedies. These remedies might be sought, for example, by tenants who are suing for breach of a lease covenant.

By way of illustration, in Turner v. Chicago Housing Authority, n667 two tenants, representing a class, claimed that the housing authority had violated the provisions of their leases by terminating their leases based on criminal activities committed by their sons. The acts of the sons were apparently committed outside of the leased dwelling units, but on property owned by the housing authority. The housing authority relied on a lease provision that required the tenant to "conduct himself and cause other persons who are on the premises with his consent to conduct themselves in a manner which will not disturb his neighbors' peaceful enjoyment of their accommodations and will be conducive to maintaining the development in a decent, safe and sanitary condition." n668 The court interpreted the reference to "premises" as referring to the tenant's individual dwelling unit. It also concluded that lease termination based on criminal acts by non-tenants occurring outside the leased dwelling unit was contrary to the terms of the lease. n669 One of the named plaintiffs was entitled to injunctive relief. But there was a factual dispute about whether the son of the other named plaintiff might be a resident of the leased premises, which precluded summary disposition of that plaintiff's claim. Class members were entitled to injunctive relief where there was undisputed evidence of lease termination based on the conduct of non-residents outside of the leased dwelling unit.

By way of further illustration, in Nelson v. Greater Gadsden Housing Authority, n670 some public housing tenants were successful in obtaining injunctive relief and monetary damages based on a claim that their housing authority had violated lease provisions requiring it to comply with HUD regulations on utility allowances. n671

Of course, if a housing authority is to be subject to liability for breach of a contract, the requirements for the existence of a contract -- such as offer, acceptance, and consideration -- should be satisfied. n672

It should also be noted that contract liability is not a one-way proposition. If there is a valid contract between the housing authority and another party, a material breach by that other party will entitle the housing authority to assert its rights arising under the contract. n673

There have been a number of instances in which public housing tenants have sued public housing authorities, claiming that they were third-party beneficiaries of the contributions contract between their housing authorities and the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The results have been mixed. In a number of cases, courts have concluded that the terms of the contributions contract demonstrated that the purpose of the contract was to benefit public housing tenants, entitling them to claim third-party beneficiary status. n674 In other cases, courts have rejected the tenants' third-party beneficiary claims, concluding that they were only incidental beneficiaries of the contributions contract between HUD and the housing authority. n675

§ 45.20(d) Liability Based Upon Breach of a Statutory Obligation.

In a number of cases, plaintiffs have sued public housing authorities, seeking remedies based on alleged violation of federal statutory obligations. One of the issues in such cases is whether the breach of a statutory obligation gives rise to a private cause of action.

Federal statutes may include provisions permitting private parties to sue to redress harms resulting from statutory violation. In the absence of express provisions allowing such lawsuits, a federal court might conclude that the right to sue is nonetheless implied. n676 While a full discussion of this area of the law is beyond the scope of this chapter, there have been cases in which courts have considered whether public housing tenants have an implied right of action to enforce provisions of federal legislation related to public housing. The results have been mixed. To some extent, the different results have reflected differences in the statutory provisions under consideration. To some extent, the different results have also reflected somewhat different formulas for the recognition of an implied right of action.

The United States Supreme Court considered whether some public housing tenants had a private right of action against a housing authority in Wright v. Roanoke Redevelopment and Housing Authority. n677 There, the tenants brought a § 1983 action challenging the housing authority's imposition of a surcharge for utilities. They claimed that the surcharge violated rent ceilings imposed by federal legislation and HUD regulations. The court of appeals held that the 1937 Act and the Brooke Amendment, which included the ceilings, clearly manifested a congressional intent to vest in HUD the exclusive power to enforce the benefits due housing project tenants, so there was an intention to foreclose both a private cause of action under the 1937 Act and any private enforcement under § 1983. n678 But the United States Supreme Court reversed.

The Supreme Court indicated that § 1983 actions are available to enforce violations of federal statutes by agents of the state, but not where Congress had foreclosed such enforcement in the enactment itself or where the statute did not create enforceable rights, privileges, or immunities within the meaning of § 1983. n679 In this instance, however, the Court was of the view that the Brooke Amendment and its legislative history were devoid of any express indication that exclusive enforcement authority was vested in HUD. It also said that congressional and agency actions had indicated that enforcement authority was not centralized and that private actions were anticipated. For example, the Court noted that, in 1981, Congress had changed the maximum percentage of income that could be paid as "rent" from 25 percent to 30 percent. When it made the change, Congress gave the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development discretion to raise tenants' rent incrementally over a 5-year period. Congress also made the Secretary's decisions effectuating the phase-in immune from judicial review. The Court noted that at congressional hearings in which this exception to judicial review was discussed, HUD representatives explained that the exception "had no effect on tenants' ability to enforce their rights under the Housing Act in federal court other than the limited exception concerning the phase-in." n680 Thereafter, observed the Court, Congress repealed the provision precluding judicial review.

The Court stated that it found nothing in the Brooke Amendment or elsewhere in the 1937 Act setting forth a private judicial remedy, "thereby evidencing congressional intent to supplant the § 1983 remedy." n681 The legislation provided for a grievance procedure; however, the Court noted that the procedure was not open to class grievances. Even if the tenants could have used it to complain about the housing authority's utility allowance schedule, the Court observed that the existence of a state administrative remedy did not ordinarily foreclose resort to § 1983. n682

The Court also concluded that a regulatory provision for a "reasonable" allowance for utilities was not too vague and amorphous to confer enforceable rights on tenants. There was a rent ceiling based on 30% of income; a reasonable allowance for utilities was to be included in rent; and there were regulatory guidelines regarding the establishment of utility allowances. The Court thought that the benefits that Congress intended to confer upon tenants were sufficiently specific and definite to be enforceable under § 1983.

In other instances, courts have approved federal lawsuits against housing authorities or units of local government for failing to establish allowances for utilities in accordance with the provisions of the 1937 Act, n683 adopting a public housing revitalization plan that did not "affirmatively further fair housing," n684 failing to provide grievance procedures to tenants as required by the 1937 Act and accompanying regulations, n685 and failing to comply with the results of a grievance proceeding regarding the condition of the premises. n686

Not all public housing tenants have been successful in raising § 1983 claims. n687 In Johnson v. City of Detroit, n688 for example, a plaintiff brought a § 1983 action against the City of Detroit and City of Detroit Housing Commission, seeking damages for lead-based paint poisoning allegedly suffered by her minor son while he was a tenant at a public housing project. Relying on Gonzaga University v. Doe, n689 a 2002 decision of the United States Supreme Court, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals said that a key consideration in determining whether to recognize an implied right of action was whether "the statutory provision contains 'rights-creating' language critical to showing the requisite congressional intent to create new rights." n690 The court considered language from different provisions of the 1937 Act, including a provision stating that each annual contributions contract with a public housing agency requires the agency to maintain its public housing in a condition that is "safe and habitable." n691 But the court said: "Nothing in these provisions establishes a clear and unambiguous intent by Congress to create privately enforceable rights under § 1983 to ensure compliance with housing quality standards." n692 The court acknowledged that "residents of public housing undoubtedly 'benefit' from the statutory provisions at issue," but it also observed that "the language of § 1437f has an aggregate focus on the entity being regulated, thereby belying any intent to create rights enforceable by individual tenants." n693

In Hill v. San Francisco Housing Authority, n694 some plaintiffs brought a §1983 action after two of them had been injured and a relative had been killed as a result of a fire at their housing project. They had also brought claims in state court. In the federal action, the plaintiffs alleged that the city housing authority had violated provisions of the 1937 Act and HUD regulations providing for housing quality standards, and that the statute and related regulations created an enforceable federal right. The court rejected the claim. It said that the housing legislation reflected congressional intent to ensure that federal public monies are distributed to public housing agencies that maintain public housing in accordance with certain quality standards, but that the legislation and the regulations did not create an individual entitlement to a public housing unit in a particular condition. The court also said that the asserted "right" was too vague, because it would have varied depending on the content of local housing codes.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 648. See Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts 722 (2000).

(n2)Footnote 649. See Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts 722 (2000*).*

(n3)Footnote 650. See Dan B. Dobbs, The Law of Torts 722 (2000*).*

(n4)Footnote 651. 606 N.E.2d 916 (Mass. Ct. App. 1993) , review denied, 609 N.E.2d 89 (Mass.1993) .

(n5)Footnote 652. But cf. Ford v. Boston Housing Authority, 773 N.E.2d 471 (Mass. Ct. App. 2002) (a visitor, who had been injured in a fire, sued a housing authority that had locked a door of egress from the building; the housing authority relied on the discretionary act exception, but the court ruled that the exception did not apply in a case where the building code required another means of egress and the governmental actor had no discretion because a course of action was prescribed by a statute).

(n6)Footnote 653. See Barnes v. Chicago Housing Authority, 761 N.E.2d 283 (Ill. Ct. App. 2001) .

(n7)Footnote 654. See 761 N.E.2d at 290 .

(n8)Footnote 655. See Davis v. Chicago Housing Authority, 555 N.E.2d 343 (Ill. 1990) .

(n9)Footnote 656. See 555 N.E.2d at 345 .

(n10)Footnote 657. See 619 A.2d 575 (N.J. 1993) .

(n11)Footnote 658. 619 A.2d 1166 (Del. 1993)

(n12)Footnote 659. See Wilmington Housing Authority v. Williamson, 228 A.2d 782 (Del. 1967) . The Delaware legislature later enacted legislation providing that "sue or be sued" language in a charter or enabling legislation cannot be regarded as waiving tort immunity. See Sandt v. Delaware Solid Waste Authority, 640 A.2d 1030 (Del. 1994) .

(n13)Footnote 660. See e.g., Housing Authority of Birmingham Dist. v. Morris, 244 Ala. 557, 14 So. 2d 527 (Ala. 1943) ; see also Federal Housing Administration, Region No. 4 v. Burr, 309 U.S. 242 (1940) (discussing "sue and be sued" language).

(n14)Footnote 661. See, e.g., Nelson v. Maine Turnpike Authority, 170 A.2d 687 (Me.1961) ("sue or be sued" language insufficient to waive immunity) see generally W. E. Shipley, Liability and Suability, In Negligence Action, of State Highway, Toll Road, or Turnpike Authority 62 A.L.R.2d 1222 (1958) (stating: "Statutes creating state highway departments, commissions or authorities very commonly provide that such agencies may 'sue or be sued,' but such provisions have usually been held to authorize only such actions as are necessary to carry out the business of the agency, and not to authorize negligence actions."); 57 Am. Jur. 2d Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability § 45 (2001) (referring to the split in jurisdictions).

(n15)Footnote 662. 377 S.E.2d 674 (Ga. 1989) , overruling Knowles v. Housing Authority of City of Columbus, 95 S.E.2d 659 (Ga. 1956) .

(n16)Footnote 663. See 377 S.E.2d at 676 .

(n17)Footnote 664. See Evans v. Housing Authority of City of Raleigh, 602 S.E.2d 668 (N.C. 2004) (public housing tenant injured by lead paint; court remands for consideration of liability insurance coverage); see also Pippin v. Chicago Housing Authority, 374 N.E.2d 1055 (Ill. Ct. App. 1978) (wrongful death action brought by mother after son stabbed in lobby of housing project building; court concludes that housing authority waived immunity by purchasing liability insurance).

(n18)Footnote 665. See Joseph v. San Francisco Housing Authority, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 179 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) .

(n19)Footnote 666. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(g) regarding a "substantial default" regarding the covenants or conditions in the contract for contributions. HUD remedies are discussed in § 45.06 of this chapter.

(n20)Footnote 667. 760 F. Supp. 1299 (N.D. Ill. 1991) .

(n21)Footnote 668. See 760 F. Supp. at 1306 .

(n22)Footnote 669. It should be noted that current legislation requires public housing leases to include a clause providing that "any drug-related criminal activity on or off such premises, engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall be cause for termination of tenancy." 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(l)(6). This provision, and the "one strike" policy, are discussed in § 45.11(e) of this chapter.

(n23)Footnote 670. 802 F.2d 405 (11th Cir. 1986) .

(n24)Footnote 671. See Nelson v. Greater Gadsden Housing Authority, 802 F.2d 405 (11th Cir. 1986) .

(n25)Footnote 672. See Brown v. Philadelphia Housing Authority 159 F. Supp.2d 23 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (court concludes that there was no consideration for a promise by the housing authority not to evict the tenant).

(n26)Footnote 673. See, e.g., Allegheny County Housing Authority v. Morrissey, 651 A.2d 632 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1994) (public housing authority entitled to evict tenant based on tenant's breach of a then permissible no-pet provision of the lease; the court stated: "Under contract principles, unless there are federal or state regulations prohibiting specific terms in a lease agreement, the lease agreement is a valid contract when both parties agree to its terms and conditions").

(n27)Footnote 674. See, e.g., Gomez v. Housing Authority of City of El Paso, 805 F. Supp. 1363 (W.D. Tex. 1992) (public housing tenants and applicants are third-party beneficiaries of annual contributions contract); Hurt v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 806 F. Supp. 515 (E.D. Pa. 1992) (low-income tenants, complaining of lead paint problems, entitled to sue housing authority under third-party beneficiary concept); Henry Horner Mothers Guild v. Chicago Housing Authority, 780 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Ill.1991) (tenants claimed that housing authority's failure to maintain a housing project violated the terms of the annual contributions contract requiring the housing authority to maintain public housing in a safe and sanitary condition in exchange for receipt of HUD funds); Curtis v. Housing Authority of the City of Oakland, 746 F. Supp. 989 (N.D. Cal.1990) (housing authority breached its annual contributions contract with HUD concerning the provision of stoves in dwelling units, entitling tenants to seek relief against housing authority); Concerned Tenants Ass'n of Father Panik Village v. Pierce 685 F. Supp. 316 (D. Conn. 1988) (tenants have enforceable rights as intended beneficiaries to obtain compliance with the obligations under the annual contributions contract to provide decent and safe housing).

(n28)Footnote 675. See e.g., Perry v. Housing Authority of City of Charleston, 664 F.2d 1210 (4th Cir.1981) (court states that tenants, who sought relief from terrible housing conditions, were, at best, "incidental beneficiaries" of the annual contract for contributions between the housing authority and HUD); Kingston Square Tenants Ass'n v. Tuskegee Gardens, Ltd., 792 F. Supp. 1566 (S.D. Fla. 1992) (court rejects application of third-party beneficiary theory, stating that there was no indication that Congress intended to afford public housing tenants such a remedy).

(n29)Footnote 676. A good discussion of the issue may be found in Richard H. Fallon, Jr., et al., Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System 758-825 (5th ed. 2003).

(n30)Footnote 677. 479 U.S. 418 (1987) .

(n31)Footnote 678. In 42 U.S.C. § 1983, Congress created an express private remedy for violations of federal law that are committed "under color of" state law. See Richard H. Fallon, Jr., et al., Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System 787 (5th ed. 2003).

(n32)Footnote 679. See 479 U.S. at 423 .

(n33)Footnote 680. See 479 U.S. at 425 .

(n34)Footnote 681. See 479 U.S. at 427 .

(n35)Footnote 682. See 479 U.S. at 427-28 .

(n36)Footnote 683. See Hill v. Ogburn, 812 F.2d 679 (11th Cir. 1987) . See also McDowell v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 23 F.3d 233 (3d Cir. 2005) (Public housing tenants brought § 1983 action, alleging that the housing authority had deprived them of their federal rights by failing to factor rising gas rates into their gas allowances; following a settlement, the tenants sought to enforce a consent decree; the court determined that the tenants were entitled to damages).

(n37)Footnote 684. See Reese v. Miami-Dade County, 210 F. Supp. 2d 1324 (S.D. Fla. 2002) .

(n38)Footnote 685. See Samuels v. District of Columbia, 770 F.2d 184 (D.C. Cir. 1985) .

(n39)Footnote 686. See Farley v. Philadelphia Housing Authority, 102 F.3d 697 (3d Cir. 1996) .

(n40)Footnote 687. See, e.g., Johnson v. City of Detroit, 446 F.3d 614 (6th Cir. 2006) (court concludes that provisions of the United States Housing Act did not create rights enforceable in § 1983 action by a tenant whose child suffered from lead poisoning allegedly caused by paint in a public housing unit); Bullard v. Inkster Housing and Re-Development Com'n 126 Fed. Appx. 718 (6th Cir. 2005) (tenant, who was raped in her apartment, did not establish a violation of her civil rights from a state-created danger); Perry v. Housing Authority of City of Charleston, 664 F.2d 1210 (4th Cir. 1981) (Public housing tenants have no private right of action for injunctive and declaratory relief from poor housing conditions); L.B. III v. Housing Authority of Louisville, 345 F. Supp.2d 725 (W.D. Ky. 2004) (no private right of action under § 1983 based on alleged failure of housing authority to comply with the requirements of the Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act and the Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act); Hill v. San Francisco Housing Authority, 207 F. Supp. 2d 1021 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (No federal private right of action regarding condition of the premises).

(n41)Footnote 688. 446 F.3d 614 (6th Cir. 2006) . The case appears not to have involved traditional public housing, as such, because the court indicates that assistance for project came through Section 8, but the court refers to the housing as public housing, and its analysis is relevant to the present discussion.

(n42)Footnote 689. 536 U.S. 273 (2002) . In the Gonzaga University case, the Supreme Court referred to some confusion regarding the requirements for private enforcement of rights under § 1983, and stated: "We now reject the notion that our cases permit anything short of an unambiguously conferred right to support a cause of action brought under § 1983." Id. at 283 .

(n43)Footnote 690. See 446 F.3d at 621 .

(n44)Footnote 691. See 446 F.3d at 626 (referring to 42 U.S.C. § 1437d(f)(2). The court also considered provisions in 42 U.S.C. §§ 1437 and 1437f).

(n45)Footnote 692. See 446 F.3d at 626 .

(n46)Footnote 693. See 446 F.3d at 627 .

(n47)Footnote 694. 207 F. Supp. 2d 1021 (N.D. Cal. 2002) .

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.21

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.21 HUD Liability.

As a result of federal statute, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may sue and be sued "with respect to its functions under the United States Housing Act of 1937." n695 However, there are some constraints on federal court litigation that, in particular circumstances, might affect the ability of a plaintiff to succeed in HUD-focused litigation arising out of a public housing context. These include requirements associated with standing to sue n696 and the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies. n697 And if the claim in question is brought under the Administrative Procedure Act, n698 the court might deny review of an agency action if it concludes that the action in question has been "committed to agency discretion." n699

In some cases, plaintiffs have attempted to bring tort actions against the federal government based on injuries that occurred on public housing premises. n700 For example, in Perez v. United States, n701 the parents of child claimed that the United States should be liable, under the Federal Tort Claims Act, for injuries sustained by the child when she fell from the balcony of her parents' third-floor apartment in a public housing project. They alleged that the balcony railing had been defectively designed. But the First Circuit rejected the claim. It noted that HUD was not the owner of the project, and could not be liable as a landowner. It also concluded that the federal government could not be held liable for any negligence on the part of the housing authority; and that HUD's rights, under the annual contributions contract, to review the plans for the project and to inspect the construction, did not burden it with an affirmative duty to guarantee the safety of project tenants.

Public housing tenants that attempt to assert contract claims against HUD could have some difficulties, because they will typically have to demonstrate that they are third-party beneficiaries of a contract between HUD and the housing authority. However, there have been some instances in which courts have permitted public housing tenants to proceed against HUD. One of these situations arises when HUD has become the landlord. In National Tenants Organization, Inc. v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, n702 for example, a class of public housing tenants obtained summary judgment against HUD, as landlord, for its failure to comply with congressionally established requirements regarding deductions in the computation of family income.

In an appropriate case, HUD could be subject to liability for not complying with applicable provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. An example is provided by Committee For Fairness v. Kemp. n703 There, some public housing authorities brought an action against the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, challenging his implementation of a new method for calculating their operating subsidies. On a motion for summary judgment, the federal district court held that, in implementing the changes, HUD had improperly failed to comply with the notice and comment procedures of the Administrative Procedure Act. The court also ruled that the housing authorities were entitled to an injunction against retroactive recapture of subsidy funds, and a recalculation of the subsidy amount.

Plaintiffs who assert statutory claims against HUD may need to demonstrate that there is a implied right of action in their favor. n704 In Howard v. Pierce, n705 for example, there was an issue as to whether a public housing tenant could bring an action against the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development seeking to enjoin an alleged violation of the Brooke Amendment to the 1937 Act regarding the amount she could be charged for rent. n706 Citing Cort v. Ash, n707 the Sixth Circuit said that this was a matter of congressional intent. It referred to four factors from the Court v. Ash case to evaluate the claim: 1) whether the plaintiff was among the class of persons that Congress intended to benefit by enactment of the statute; 2) whether there was any legislative intent either to deny or to provide a private remedy; 3) whether the existence of a private remedy would be consistent with the underlying purposes of the legislative scheme; and 4) whether the action was one more appropriately a concern of state rather than federal law. n708

The court concluded, as to the first factor, that lower-income families who reside in public housing are the intended beneficiaries of the Brooke Amendment. Regarding the second factor, the court noted that Congress had included a waiver of sovereign immunity against HUD in the legislation providing for low income housing. n709 This, together with the absence of any other relevant expression of legislative intent, caused the court to conclude that Congress had not intended to deny a private cause of action to the intended beneficiaries of the Brooke Amendment. As to the third factor, the court thought that implying a private cause of action would further the purpose of the Brooke Amendment, which it said was to deal with a concern that the neediest families were being excluded from the public housing program. The court also noted the absence from the legislation of private enforcement mechanisms, and it indicated that recognition of a private cause of action would help avoid frustration of the purpose of the United States Housing Act to provide decent housing for low-income families. The court also thought that allowing declaratory and injunctive relief to be available would further the purpose of the legislation without adversely affecting HUD's primary enforcement responsibilities. n710 On the last factor, the court said that the case did not present "merely a question concerning landlord-tenant law" which would have been more appropriate for state regulation. n711

As something of a footnote, it should be noted that the court was not inclined to recognize a private right of action against the local housing authority. It said, in this connection, that the "policy of providing decent and affordable housing is federal in nature and, as a municipal corporation, [the housing authority] is not required to adopt such a policy." n712 And the court saw no evidence of congressional intent to allow an implied right of action against a local public housing authority.

Finally, it is possible that a plaintiff may have a claim arising under the Constitution. By way of illustration, a claim that HUD had engaged in race discrimination in the operation of the public housing program was recognized in Young v. Pierce. n713 There, some black applicants and residents of east Texas public housing brought an action against the Department of Housing and Urban Development, alleging that HUD had knowingly maintained, and continued to maintain, a system of racially segregated housing in violation of the Constitution and the laws of United States. According to the court:

> (1) the vast majority of projects are predominately one race; (2) the percentage of one-race sites is highest in the low rent projects; (3) blacks participate disproportionately in older insured-assisted projects; (4) whites participate disproportionately in Section 8 new construction projects; and (5) the races have roughly equivalent needs for public housing. n714

The court also said that the "history of public housing in the class action counties is simply that of HUD allowing PHA's to construct segregated housing projects and selectively enforcing its regulations in a way calculated to insure that these projects remained segregated." n715

On motions for summary judgment, the federal district court, held that HUD's funding, regulation, and assistance of local public housing authorities amounted to unconstitutional support of racial segregation; that the relationship between local public housing authorities and HUD was sufficient to give rise to HUD liability; and that the action against HUD was not barred by doctrine of sovereign immunity.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 695. See 42 U.S.C. § 1404a.

(n2)Footnote 696. See, e.g., Boston Public Housing Tenants' Policy Council, Inc. v. Lynn, 388 F. Supp. 493 (D. Mass. 1974) (no standing to sue under Administrative Procedure Act). See also Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 112 (3d ed. 1999).

(n3)Footnote 697. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 112, 120 (3d ed. 1999).

(n4)Footnote 698. 5 U.S.C. §§ 701 et seq.

(n5)Footnote 699. See, e.g., Boston Public Housing Tenants' Policy Council, Inc. v. Lynn, 388 F. Supp. 493 (D. Mass. 1974) ("Absent a duty owed by HUD to insure that federally funded low-cost housing be decent, safe, and sanitary, it is inconceivable that HUD's responsibilities in this case are anything but discretionary.") See also Richard H. Fallon, Jr., et al., Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System 943 (5th ed. 2003).

(n6)Footnote 700. See e.g, Perez v. U.S., 594 F.2d 280 (1st Cir. 1979) .

(n7)Footnote 701. 594 F.2d 280 (1st Cir. 1979) .

(n8)Footnote 702. 358 F. Supp. 312 (D. D.C. 1973) .

(n9)Footnote 703. 791 F. Supp. 888 (D. D.C. 1992) .

(n10)Footnote 704. Such a claim would, however, not arise under § 1983, because that legislation does not apply to federal actors. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 provides, in pertinent part:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress ...

(n11)Footnote 705. 738 F.2d 722 (6th Cir. 1984) .

(n12)Footnote 706. She was being charged an amount that was greater than the amount of the public assistance that she was receiving for her rent payment.

(n13)Footnote 707. 422 U.S. 66 (1975) .

(n14)Footnote 708. See 738 F.2d at 724 .

(n15)Footnote 709. The court cited "sue or be sued" language in 42 U.S.C. §1404a.

(n16)Footnote 710. But the court also indicated that the prospect of an award for damages would have been different: "[W]e doubt seriously that an implied action for damages would be appropriate." Id. at 730 . See also Bronston v. Kemp, 722 F. Supp. 372 (S.D. Ohio 1989) (tenants in HUD-owned housing have implied right of action for declaratory and injunctive relief regarding rental payments).

(n17)Footnote 711. See 738 F.2d at 730, footnote 15 .

(n18)Footnote 712. See 738 F.2d at 731 .

(n19)Footnote 713. 628 F. Supp. 1037 (E.D. Tex. 1985) .

(n20)Footnote 714. See 628 F. Supp. at 1044 (footnote omitted).

(n21)Footnote 715. See 628 F. Supp. at 1047 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.22

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.22 Other Federal Housing Programs that Benefit Low-Income Families.

As indicated in a previous section of this chapter, n716 the traditional public housing program is by no means the only housing program that is intended to benefit low-income families. Over time, a number of other government-sponsored programs have been created to assist low-income families with rental housing. Some programs have involved supply oriented assistance to private developers. Other programs have involved demand-oriented assistance to low-income tenants. n717 Because the focus of this chapter is on traditional public housing, rather than on privately owned, government-assisted housing, an in-depth discussion of these other programs is not warranted here; however, some of the major federal programs will be briefly mentioned. n718

§ 45.22(a) Section 221(d)(3) and Section 236.

Some housing assistance programs have featured mortgage subsidies. For example, under the Section 221(d)(3) n719 and Section 236 n720 programs, FHA-insured loans were provided to private developers, accompanied by below-market interest rate arrangements, to facilitate the development of low- and moderate-income housing. n721

Under the Section 221(d)(3) Below Market Interest Rate mortgage insurance program, below-market loans were made by private lenders that were, in turn, purchased by the federal government. In the Section 236 program, FHA mortgage insurance on private loans was combined with an interest rate subsidy to effectively lower the interest rate on the mortgage to 1%. n722

In exchange for participating in these programs, owners were required to make units available to low- and moderate-income families at HUD-approved rents for the term of the mortgage. In 1973, President Richard Nixon imposed a "moratorium" on new funding for housing subsidy programs. n723 Thereafter, the much of the impetus for housing subsidies shifted to the Section 8 program, which is discussed below. However, HUD continues to operate a Section 221(d)(3) mortgage insurance program to finance rental or cooperative family housing for households of moderate income. n724

§ 45.22(b) Section 202.

The Section 202 program was originally created by the Housing Act of 1959 n725 to provide affordable housing for elderly households in developments owned by nonprofit organizations. n726 Under this program, capital advances are made available to finance building construction or rehabilitation. The capital advances bear no interest, and repayment is not required so long as the housing remains available for very low-income elderly persons for not fewer than 40 years. The program also provides for project rental assistance, meaning that funds are available to cover the difference between the HUD-approved operating cost for the project and the tenants' contribution towards the rent. n727

§ 45.22(c) Section 811.

The Section 811 housing program n728 is similar to the Section 202 program, but its focus is on persons with disabilities. Capital advances, which have interest and repayment terms like those made under the Section 202 program, are available under this program to assist private nonprofit sponsors with the acquisition, construction, or rehabilitation of housing for persons with disabilities. As in the case of the Section 202 program, project rental assistance is available to owners of assisted housing units. n729

§ 45.22(d) Section 8.

The Section 8 housing program originated with the adoption of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. n730 The program was intended to provide a subsidy comparable to that offered by public housing, but applicable to privately developed, privately owned housing. n731

§ 45.22(d)(1) Project-Based Assistance.

The original Section 8 program included several sub-programs. Some, such as the ones for new construction and substantial rehabilitation, n732 involved "project-based assistance." n733 Under this form of assistance, long-term subsidies were provided to participating landlords who built or renovated low-income housing. n734 The owners of Section 8 projects were entitled to receive a subsidy equivalent to the difference between thirty percent of their tenants' adjusted incomes and a federally prescribed fair market rent for their units. n735 As a result of further legislation, n736 no additional units were approved for the program after 1983; however, over 800,000 housing units were developed under this program from 1974 to 1983. n737

§ 45.22(d)(2) Tenant-Based Assistance.

The 1974 legislation that enacted the Section 8 housing program provided for a sub-program for "existing housing." n738 This involved "tenant-based" assistance. HUD regulations state that "[w]ith tenant-based assistance, the assisted unit is selected by the family." n739 Landlords who participate in the program agree to select tenants from among those who have been issued certificates of eligibility or vouchers by a public housing authority. The public housing authority designates qualified tenants for participation, and the tenants choose their landlords and their dwelling units. The public housing authority makes subsidy payments to participating landlords, with HUD-derived funds. n740 It is also responsible to undertake inspections of dwelling units, approve leases, and administer the program. n741

§ 45.22(d)(2)(i) Certificates and Vouchers.

Under the certificate program, participating households are given certificates enabling them to rent dwellings from private landlords. n742 If the dwellings meet certain quality standards and do not cost more than the federally prescribed maximum "fair market rent" for the area, participating households generally pay no more than thirty percent of their income in rent, and the balance is subsidized. n743

Under the voucher program, there is greater flexibility, in that landlords can charge more than the federally prescribed maximum for rent, and tenants can pay more than 30% of their income for rent. n744

Both the certificate and the voucher programs operated side by side until, in 1999, they were merged into the "housing choice voucher" program. n745 HUD regulations provide that post-merger contracts between public housing agencies and landlords must be under the voucher program rather than under the certificate program. n746 HUD's website describes the "housing choice voucher program" as "the federal government's major program for assisting very low-income families, the elderly, and the disabled to afford decent, safe, and sanitary housing in the private market." n747

§ 45.22(e) Section 515.

The United States Department of Agriculture operates a multi-family housing program, referred to as the Section 515 program, that provides for very low interest rate loans for the development of rural rental housing. n748 The program authorizes loans to private or cooperative sponsors to provide rental housing in rural areas for low and moderate-income families, and for elderly and disabled persons.

§ 45.22(f) Low Income Housing Tax Credit.

Beginning in the mid-1980s, the Low Income Housing Tax Credit n749 began to have a significant supply oriented impact on the development of low-income housing. n750 Developers who agree to reserve units for low-income tenants are permitted to earn tax credits based on the cost of project construction or renovation. n751 Participating developers agree to maintain their units as affordable housing units for at least fifteen years. n752

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 716. See § 45.01.

(n2)Footnote 717. For a discussion of demand-oriented and supply-oriented programs see Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 524 (1993).

(n3)Footnote 718. A number of housing programs are described in U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Programs of HUD (Major Grant, Assistance, and Regulatory Programs) (2005). It is available on line through the HUD website at http://www.hud.gov/funds/index.cfm.

(n4)Footnote 719. See Housing Act of 1961, Pub. L. No. 87-70, 75 Stat. 149 (1961) (amended the National Housing Act to allow private developers to participate in the mortgage subsidy program).

(n5)Footnote 720. This program was established under the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, Pub. L. No. 90-448, § 201(a), 82 Stat. 476, 498 (1968).

(n6)Footnote 721. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance. This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46. Additional information about these programs may be found in National Housing Trust, Overview of Federally-Assisted Multifamily Housing Programs: Historical Perspective and Status of Legislation and Regulations. This publication may be found on the National Housing Trust's website at http://www.nhtinc.org/policy/legoverview.asp.

(n7)Footnote 722. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance . This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46.

(n8)Footnote 723. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance . This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46. More information on the moratorium can be found in See Orlebeke, Charles J. "The Evolution of Low-Income Housing Policy, 1949-1999." Federal National Mortgage Association, Office of Housing Policy Research, 11 Housing Policy Debate 489, 505 (2000).

(n9)Footnote 724. The program is available to public, non-profit, and cooperative entities. A separate Section 221(d)(4) program is available to profit-motivated entities. See U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Programs of HUD (Major Grant, Assistance, and Regulatory Programs 62 (2005). The statutory authority for the program is set forth in U.C.C. Article 9. Additional information may be found under "Descriptions of Multifamily Programs" on the HUD website at http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/mfh/progdesc/progdesc.cfm.

(n10)Footnote 725. Pub. L. No. 86-372, § 202, 73 Stat. 654, 667 (1959) (codified as amended at 12 U.S.C. § 1701q.

(n11)Footnote 726. See Fred Fuchs, Introduction to HUD-Public and Subsidized Housing Programs: A Handbook for the Legal Services Advocate 194 (1989).

(n12)Footnote 727. See HUD Handbook 4571.3 REV-1, Section 202 Supportive Housing for the Elderly 1-1, 1-5 (1993). The handbook may be found through http://www.hudclips.org/sub_nonhud/cgi/hudclips.cgi#congrec. Additional information about the Section 202 Program may be found on the HUD website at http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/mfh/progdesc/eld202.cfm.

(n13)Footnote 728. The program name is derived from Section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzales National Affordable Housing Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-625, 104 Stat. 4324 (1990), which is codified at 42 U.S.C. § 8013.

(n14)Footnote 729. See HUD Handbook 4571.2, Section 811 Supportive Housing for Persons with Disabilities 1-1, 1-2,1-10 (1991). The handbook may be found through http://www.hudclips.org/sub_nonhud/cgi/hudclips.cgi#congrec. Additional information about the program may be found on the HUD website at http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/mfh/progdesc/disab811.cfm.

(n15)Footnote 730. Pub. L. No. 93-383, 88 Stat. 633, 748 (1974).

(n16)Footnote 731. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 210 (3d ed. 1999).

(n17)Footnote 732. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 210 (3d ed. 1999). In 1978 another sub-program, the Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation program came into being. This program involved agreements with local housing authorities. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance . This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46.

(n18)Footnote 733. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance . This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46.

(n19)Footnote 734. The subsidies could last from twenty to forty years. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 524 (1993). See generally Kevin M. Cremin, The Transition to Section 8 Housing: Will the Elderly Be Left Behind? 18 Yale L. & Pol'y Rev. 405 (2000).

(n20)Footnote 735. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 524 (1993).

(n21)Footnote 736. Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, Pub. L. No. 98-181, 97 Stat. 1157, 1183 (1983).

(n22)Footnote 737. See National Low Income Housing Coalition, 2006 Advocates' Guide to Housing and Community Development Policy, Project-Based Rental Assistance . This publication may be found at http://www.nlihc.org/detail/article.cfm?article_id=2797&id=46.

(n23)Footnote 738. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 210 (3d ed. 1999).

(n24)Footnote 739. See 24 C.F.R. § 982.1(b).

(n25)Footnote 740. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 216-17 (3d ed. 1999).

(n26)Footnote 741. See Charles E. Daye, et al., Housing and Community Development 217 (3d ed. 1999).

(n27)Footnote 742. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 525 (1993).

(n28)Footnote 743. See Michael H. Schill & Susan M. Wachter, The Spatial Bias of Federal Housing Law and Policy: Concentrated Poverty in Urban America, 143 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1285, 1335 (1995); See 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(o)(2).

(n29)Footnote 744. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 525-26 (1993);See 42 U.S.C. § 1437f(o)(2). Under the voucher program, the public housing authority determines a payment standard for rents in the area, and the family is generally required to pay 30% of its monthly adjusted gross income for rent. But the landlord may charge more than the payment standard, and, if the landlord does so, the tenant family is required to pay the additional amount. See Housing Choice Vouchers Fact Sheet, at http://www.hud.gov/offices/pih/programs/hcv/about/fact_sheet.cfm

(n30)Footnote 745. See Orlebeke, Charles J. "The Evolution of Low-Income Housing Policy, 1949-1999." Federal National Mortgage Association, Office of Housing Policy Research, 11 Housing Policy Debate 489, 505 (2000). Program regulations may be found at 24 C.F.R. § 982.1 et. seq.

(n31)Footnote 746. 24 C.F.R. § 982.502.

(n32)Footnote 747. Housing Choice Vouchers Fact Sheet, at http://www.hud.gov/offices/pih/programs/hcv/about/fact_sheet.cfm.

(n33)Footnote 748. Section 515 was added to the Housing Act of 1949 in 1962. See Pub. L. No. 87-723, §4(b), 76 Stat. 671 (1962). It is codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1485(a).

(n34)Footnote 749. See Tax Reform Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-514, §252, 100 Stat. 2085, 2189 (1986). The legislation was codified in § 42 of the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. § 42.

(n35)Footnote 750. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 524-5 (1993).

(n36)Footnote 751. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 525 (1993); Internal Revenue Code § 42(b).

(n37)Footnote 752. See Michael H. Schill, Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here? 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497, 525 (1993). For additional information on the tax program, see Kirk McClure, The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit as an Aid to Housing Finance: How Well Has It Worked? 11 Housing Policy Debate 91 (2000). This publication is available online through http://www.fanniemaefoundation.org/programs. A pdf version is posted at http://www.fanniemaefoundation.org/programs/hpd/pdf/hpd_1101_mcclure.pdf.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 45.23

AUTHOR: N. Gregory Smith G. Frank & Winston Purvis Professor of Law Louisiana State University

§ 45.23 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Daye, Charles E., et al. Housing and Community Development (3d ed. 1999).

Dobbs, Dan B. The Law of Torts (2000).

Fallon, Jr., Richard H., et al. Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System (5th ed. 2003).

Fuchs, Fred. Introduction to HUD-Public and Subsidized Housing Programs: A Handbook for the Legal Services Advocate(1989).

United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, Public Housing Occupancy Guidebook (2003).

U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Programs of HUD (Major Grant, Assistance, and Regulatory Programs (2005).

Articles

Austin, Regina. "Step on a Crack, Break Your Mother's Back": Poor Moms, Myths of Authority, and Drug-Related Evictions from Public Housing." 14 Yale J. L. & Feminism 273 (2002).

Beck, Gregory A. "Ban Lists: Can Public Housing Authorities Have Unwanted Visitors Arrested?" 2004 U. Ill. L. Rev. 1223.

Bowser, Amy R. "One Strike and You're Out - or Are You?: Rucker's Influence on Future Eviction Proceedings for Section 8 and Public Housing." 108 Penn St. L. Rev. 611 (2003).

Camber, Rachel. "The Incorporation of the Implied Warranty of Habitability In Public Housing Programs." 38 Wash. U. J. Urb. & Contemp. L. 205 (1990).

Carey, Corinne A. "No Second Chance: People with Criminal Records Denied Access to Public Housing." 36 U. Tol. L. Rev. 545 (2005).

Carpenter, Kristen D.A. "Promise Enforcement in Public Housing: Lessons from Rousseau and Hundertwasser." 76 Tul. L. Rev. 1073 (2001-2002).

Caruso, F. Willis & Brennan, Mark. "Public Housing Privatization Using Section 8 Vouchers and I.R.C. Section 42 Low-Income Housing Tax Credits in Connection with the Use of Lease-Purchase Options." 16 St. Louis U. Pub. L. Rev. 355 (1997).

Castle, Caroline. "You Call That A Strike? A Post-Rucker Examination of Eviction From Public Housing Due to Drug-Related Criminal Activity of a Third Party." 37 Ga. L. Rev. 1435 (2003).

Cremin, Kevin M. "The Transition to Section 8 Housing: Will the Elderly Be Left Behind?" 18 Yale L. & Pol'y Rev. 405 (2000).

Dzubow, Jason. "Fear-Free Public Housing?: An Evaluation of HUD'S 'One Strike and You're Out' Housing Policy." 6 Temp. Pol. & Civ. Rts. L. Rev. 55 (1997).

Ebenstein, William. "The Law of Public Housing." 23 Minn. L. Rev. 880 (1939).

Foster, Kenneth J. "Public Housing Tenants as Third-Party Beneficiaries: Considering Ayala v. Boston Housing Authority." 27 New Eng. L. Rev. 85 (1992).

Friedman, Lawrence M. "Public Housing and the Poor: An Overview." 54 Cal. L. Rev. 642 (1966).

Green, Shelby D. "The Public Housing Tenancy: Variations on the Common Law That Give Security of Tenure and Control." 43 Cath. U. L. Rev. 681 (1994).

Harner, Paul E. "Implied Private Rights of Action Under the United States Housing Act of 1937." 1987 Duke L.J. 915.

Hoeflich, M.H. & Thies, John E. "Rethinking American Housing Policy: Defederalizing Subsidized Housing." 1987 U. Ill. L. Rev. 629 (1987).

Hornstein, Robert. "Mean Things Happening in This Land: Defending Third Party Criminal Activity Public Housing Evictions." 23 S.U.L. Rev. 257 (1996).

Jolin, Marc. "Good Cause Eviction and the Low Income Housing Tax Credit." 67 U. Chi. L. Rev. 521 (2000).

Lefcoe, George. " HUD's Authority to Mandate Tenant's Rights in Public Housing." 80 Yale L.J. 463 (1971).

McClure, Kirk. "The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit as an Aid to Housing Finance: How Well Has It Worked?" Federal National Mortgage Association, Office of Housing Policy Research, 11 Housing Policy Debate 91 (2000).

Mock, Nelson H. "Punishing the Innocent: No-Fault Eviction of Public Housing Tenants For the Actions of Third Parties." 76 Tex. L. Rev. 1495 (1998).

Orlebeke, Charles J. "The Evolution of Low-Income Housing Policy, 1949-1999." Federal National Mortgage Association, Office of Housing Policy Research, 11 Housing Policy Debate 489 (2000).

Powell, Julia Clayton. "De Facto Demolition: The Hidden Deterioration of Public Housing." 44 Cath. U. L. Rev. 885 (1995).

Roisman, Florence Wagman. "The Right to Public Housing." 39 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 691 (1971).

Schill, Michael H.& Wachter, Susan M. "The Spatial Bias of Federal Housing Law and Policy: Concentrated Poverty in Urban America." 143 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1285 (1995).

Schill, Michael H. "Distressed Public Housing: Where Do We Go From Here?" 60 U. Chi. L. Rev. 497 (1993).

Schill, Michael H. "Privatizing Federal Low Income Housing Assistance: The Case of Public Housing." 75 Cornell L. Rev. 878 (1990).

Smyers, Robyn Minter. "High Noon In Public Housing: The Showdown Between Due Process Rights and Good Management Practices In the War On Drugs and Crime." 30 Urb. Law. 573 (1998).

Stinson, Paul. "Restoring Justice: How Congress Can Amend the One-Strike Laws in Federally-Subsidized Public Housing to Ensure Due Process, Avoid Inequity, and Combat Crime." 11 Geo. J. Pov. L. & Pol. 435 (2004).

Thaler, Jason S. "Public Housing Consent Clauses: Unconstitutional Condition or Constitutional Necessity?" 63 Ford. L. Rev. 1777 (1995) .

Annotations

Annotation, Substantive Issues Relative to Rent Levels and Termination of Benefits Under United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 USCS §§ 1437 et seq.), 77 A.L.R. Fed 884 (1986)

Annotation, Tenants' Rights, Under Due Process Clause of Federal Constitution, to Notice and Hearing Prior to Imposition of Higher Rents or Additional Service Charges for Government-Owned or Government-Subsidized Housing, 28 A.L.R. Fed 739 (1976) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.08

Supp. to § 45.08 The Public Housing Lease.

[Go To Main]

§ 45.08(c) Legislation and Regulations Relating to Lease Provisions. [Go To Main]

§ 45.08(c)(3) Other Public Housing Lease Provisions.

Add the following sentence to the end of the paragraph that currently ends with footnote 352, immediately after the indication for that footnote:

Failure to include the provision in the lease might affect lease termination rights.[352.1]

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.11

Supp. to § 45.11 Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy.

[Go To Main]

§ 45.11(b) Justifications for Tenant Eviction and Termination of the Tenancy. [Go To Main]

Qualifications aside, questions can arise as to whether particular tenant conduct constitutes the kind of "criminal activity" for which the tenancy should be terminated.[446.1]

§ 45.11(d) Eviction and Tenancy Termination Cases. [Go To Main]

Add the following to the text, immediately after the indication of footnote 472:

> having a resident son who had committed an armed robbery, in violation of the "zero tolerance" provision of the lease; n472.1

Add new footnote 472.1, as follows:

Add the following new paragraph, immediately after the block quote in the second paragraph of the section from the Allegheny County Housing Authority case:

The Massachusetts Supreme Court concluded that a public housing authority could evict a tenant who committed a violent crime about a mile from his leased apartment.[475.1] The public housing lease included a provision permitting the public housing authority to terminate the lease for "any criminal activity that threatens the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment" of other public housing residents. The tenant did not dispute his involvement in violent criminal behavior, but he contended that it took place so far from the public housing development that the lease provision did not apply. Rejecting this contention, the court observed that > certain criminal activity, such as assault by means of a dangerous weapon and armed robbery, is so physically violent, or associated with violence, that one who engages in it normally would pose a threat to, or reasonably inspire a significant level of fear on the part of, tenants forced to live in close proximity to the offending tenant.[475.2]

Add the following new paragraph, after the paragraph that ends with the indication for footnote 476:

An Illinois court rejected the contention of a public housing tenant that the exclusionary rule should apply in a forcible entry and detainer action. n476.1 The tenant had been arrested for possession of marijuana. Although the criminal charges were eventually dropped, the public housing authority sent a termination notice and filed a complaint for possession. The tenant sought to suppress the evidence of drug possession by means of the exclusionary rule. But the state appellate court rejected the tenant's argument that the forcible entry and detainer action was "quasi-criminal" in nature. It also concluded that application of the exclusionary rule to forcible entry and detainer proceedings involving public housing tenants would hinder the housing authority's "ability to enforce lease agreements designed to promote safety and deter illegal conduct in public housing communities." n476.2

Add the following new footnotes:

Add the following sentence to the end of the paragraph that ends with the indication for footnote 479:

A federal court ruled that an anti-discrimination provision of the Bankruptcy Code--11 U.S.C. § 525(a) n479.1--prohibits eviction of a public housing tenant for non-payment of pre-petition rent that had been discharged in bankruptcy. n479.2

Add the following new footnotes:

Add the following to the last paragraph in § 45.11(d), immediately after the reference to footnote 485:

in which the housing authority sought to terminate the tenancy of a disabled tenant who had criminally assaulted another public housing tenant, without undertaking an "individualized assessment" as to whether the risk to others could have been eliminated by a reasonable accommodation;[485.1]

§ 45.11(e) Illegal Drugs, the "One-Strike" Rule, and Tenant Eviction. [Go To Main]

Add a new paragraph at the end of the section, as follows:

An issue that was not explicitly addressed in the Rucker decision was the preemptive effect of the federal legislation permitting "innocent" public housing tenants to be evicted based on illegal activities by household members. That issue arose in a post-Rucker case in which a Massachusetts public housing tenant sought to avoid eviction for the drug-related misconduct of her sons.[502.1] The tenant pointed to a 1982 decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, in which the court had concluded that a state requirement that tenant eviction be for "cause" permitted "relief from termination when special circumstances indicate that the tenant could not have foreseen the misconduct or was unable to prevent it by any available means."[502.2] The housing authority contended that the Massachusetts "special circumstances" rule had been preempted by the federal legislation. The Massachusetts Supreme Court agreed. It observed that the purposes of the federal legislation were to reduce drug-related crime in public housing and to ensure that such housing was decent, safe, and free from illegal drugs. It noted that Congress and HUD had required housing authorities to use clauses in their leases that permitted lease termination for crimes committed by household members, even when the tenant had no knowledge of and was not at fault for a household member's criminal activity. And it further noted that "the lodging of such discretionary authority with the housing authorities is integral to the accomplishment of the congressional objective because "[s]trict liability maximizes deterrence and eases enforcement difficulties.' "[502.3] Stating that application of the "special circumstances" defense would substantially interfere with congressional objectives, the court concluded that the defense was preempted.

FOOTNOTES:

(n13)Note 472.1. See Bishop v. Housing Authority of South Bend, 920 N.E.2d 772 (Ind. Ct. App. 2010) .

(n16)Note 476.1. See U.S. Residential Management and Development, LLC v. Head, 922 N.E.2d 1 (Ill. Ct. App. 2009) .

(n17)Note 476.2. Id. at 5 .

(n18)Note 479.1. The provision prohibits governmental units from discriminating against persons who have sought bankruptcy relief in connection with licenses, permits, charters, franchises, similar grants, and employment.

(n19)Note 479.2. See In re Stoltz, 315 F.3d 80 (2d Cir. 2002) (the Court concluded that a public housing lease was a "grant" for purposes of the anti-discrimination provision of the bankruptcy code; it concluded that the anti-discrimination provision protected the tenant from eviction for nonpayment of pre-petition rent; and it concluded that, to the extent that sections 525(a) and 365 of the Bankruptcy Code were in conflict, the rules of statutory construction and sound bankruptcy policy dictated that section 525(a) must prevail); but see, Housing Authority of New Orleans v. Eason, 12 So. 3d 970 (La. 2009) (per curiam) (the Court concluded that 11 U.S.C. § 525(a) was inapplicable to a case in which the housing authority sought to evict a tenant for failure to make rent payments that had been discharged in bankruptcy; the court indicated that post-petition tenders of rent were not a proper basis for denying the housing authority the right to evict the tenant for violating the terms of his lease; it stated that classification of pre-petition rent as discharged did not render the right of the housing authority to evict the tenant "non-existent," and it concluded that there was no legal support for the notion that an individual was "allowed to live rent-free for a period of two years without the lessor having eviction as an available avenue of recourse.").

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.12

Supp. to § 45.12 Restricting Individuals from Visiting Public Housing Projects.

[Go To Main]

§ 45.12(c) No-Trespass Policies. [Go To Main]

In the second paragraph of the text of section 45.12(c), at the end of the fifth sentence (the one that begins with "The court held that Thompson had not shown that he had been invited to the premises ... "), indicate the addition of a new footnote 509.1.

Add the following new footnote 509.1: n509.1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 509.1. Whether or not a person is present on the premises at the invitation of a public housing resident can make a difference. See, e.g., Commonwealth v. Nelson, 909 N.E.2d 42 (Mass. Ct. App. 2009) (Public housing tenant had invited a person to visit her; she had not known that the housing authority had previously forbidden her guest from entering the premises; the guest was charged with criminal trespass; the court concluded that a trespass conviction could not stand against a defendant who had been found to be passing through the halls of housing authority property in order to reach a tenant's apartment at the tenant's invitation).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.16

Supp. to § 45.16 Tenant Displacement from Public Housing.

[Go To Main]

§ 45.16(c) Demolition. [Go To Main]

§ 45.16(c)(1) Statutory Provisions.

Add the following new paragraphs, at the end of subsection § 45.16(c)(1):

Whether public housing tenants have a private right of action to prevent demolition of public housing developments was an issue in Anderson v. Jackson.[596.1] There, some New Orleans public housing tenants sought, among other things, to enjoin the demolition of four public housing developments. The court noted that some other courts had concluded that § 1437p created privately enforceable rights regarding demolition, but it also observed that many of those decisions had interpreted an earlier version of the statute, or had relied on cases that had done so. The court said that its initial task was to "consider whether § 1437p indicates that Congress has unambiguously conferred a right on individuals."[596.2] Concluding that Congress had not done so, the court held that 42 U.S.C. § 1437p does not create any private rights in public housing tenants to prevent demolition of public housing.[596.3]

§ 45.16(c)(2) De Facto Demolition.

Add the following new paragraph at the end of the subsection:

In its 2009 decision in Anderson v. Jackson,[612.1] the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals held that 42 U.S.C. § 1437p does not create any private rights in public housing tenants to prevent the demolition of public housing. There, some public housing tenants in New Orleans sought to prevent the demolition of four public housing developments. Although the case was not a de facto demolition case, its consideration of the private right of action issue is relevant to the larger issue discussed here. The case is discussed at the end of the preceding subsection.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.20

Supp. to § 45.20 Liability of the Public Housing Authority.

[Go To Main]

§ 45.20 (b) Tort Liability. [Go To Main]

Add the following at the end of footnote 650:

See, e.g., Moore v. Lorain Metropolitan Housing Authority, 905 N.E.2d 606 (Ohio 2009) (In a wrongful death suit resulting from a fire in a public housing unit, the Ohio Supreme Court concluded that the unit was a building used in connection with a governmental function, but it remanded for a determination whether the housing authority is liable under a negligence exception to tort immunity).

§ 45.20(d) Liability Based Upon Breach of a Statutory Obligation. [Go To Main]

Add the following at the end of footnote 687:

Delgado v. New York City Housing Authority, 888 N.Y.S.2d 19 (App. Div. 2009) (Public housing residents and a labor union sued to compel the housing authority to comply with the city's maintenance code requirement to repaint apartments and common areas every three years; the court rejected the claim, reasoning that, although the 1937 Act obligates housing authorities to maintain public housing in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition, it does not create a private right of action enforceable under § 1983 for proper maintenance of the housing project).

Add the following new paragraph at the end of subsection § 45.20(d):

Some additional discussion of the private right of action issue is included in §§ 45.16(c)(1) and 45.16(c)(2) of this chapter.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 45 PUBLIC HOUSING

5-45 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 45.23

Supp. to § 45.23 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Articles

Add the following:

Kelly, Sarah N. "Separating the Criminal from the Community: Procedural Remedies for 'Innocent Owners' in Public Housing Authorities." 51 N.Y.L. Sch. L. Rev. 379 (2006/2007).

Rooney, Martin J. "The Public Forum Doctrine and Public Housing Authorities: Can You Say That Here?" 21 B.Y.U. J. P.L. 323 (2007).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 46.syn

AUTHOR: Professor Ronald W. Polston Professor Emeritus School of Law Indiana University, Indianapolis

§ 46.syn Synopsis to Chapter 46: FIXTURES

§ 46.01 History.

§ 46.01(a) Introduction.

§ 46.01(b) The Physical Aspects of the Doctrine.

§ 46.01(c) The Roman Origin of the Doctrine.

§ 46.01(d) The Early Landlord/Tenant Cases.

§ 46.01(e) The Contribution of the Mortgagor/Mortgagee Cases.

§ 46.01(f) Current Trends.

§ 46.02 Current Law.

§ 46.02(a) In General.

§ 46.02(b) The Three-Part Test of Teaff v. Hewitt.

§ 46.02(b)(1) The Physical Annexation Requirement.

§ 46.02(b)(2) Adaptation to the Use of the Real Estate.

§ 46.02(b)(3) The Intent of the Annexor.

§ 46.02(c) The Vendor/Vendee.

§ 46.02(d) The Mortgagor/Mortgagee.

§ 46.02(e) The Bona Fide Purchaser.

§ 46.02(f) The Landlord/Tenant.

§ 46.02(g) The Licensor/Licensee.

§ 46.02(h) The Trespasser/Owner.

§ 46.02(i) The Uniform Commercial Code.

§ 46.03 Bibliography.

Professor Ronald W. Polston
Professor Emeritus
School of Law
Indiana University, Indianapolis

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 46.01

AUTHOR: Professor Ronald W. Polston Professor Emeritus School of Law Indiana University, Indianapolis

§ 46.01 History.

§ 46.01(a) Introduction.

In texts published during the latter part of the Nineteenth Century, the discussion of the fixtures concept usually begins with a caveat such as one of the following: the law of fixtures is confusing, n1 "often contradictory," n2 or "the most uncertain title in the entire body of American jurisprudence." n3 While the subject has received a great deal of attention by writers, courts, and legislatures in the ensuing decades, it is still necessary to commence any discussion of the subject with the same kind of caveat. It is still not a well understood concept, and there is considerable question as to whether it remains a vital one. It does, however, continue to receive attention in judicial opinions, law review articles, and texts, few of which reflect any better understanding of the collection of problems and policies that they purport to resolve than do those of preceding eras.

The fixtures concept is one that purports to transfer ownership of a chattel, or create a lien thereon, to the person who owns the land or has a mortgage on it. n4 The doctrine supposedly operates in situations in which the chattel has been used in connection with a tract of land, or building thereon, in such a way as to suggest that the ownership of the chattel has been merged with that of the land. In some situations it results in a non-volitional transfer. That is true when, for example, a trespasser erects a building or adds a chattel owned by the trespasser to an existing building, and the landowner is held to have acquired the title to the addition as soon as it acquired the requisite physical relationship to the land. It is also true when a tenant, mortgagee, licensee or other person adds something to the land of another. When one is deprived of property non-volitionally in these situations, the justification must, of course, be sought in some policy of the law that requires that result. In other situations the object of the doctrine is, apparently, to determine the intention of the parties or to impute to them the intention that reasonable persons would have under the circumstances. n5 In the latter situation, of course, the doctrine is simply an aid in construing a document or a basis for supplying a rule of fairness to govern a relationship.

In every situation in which the doctrine operates, it purports, according to existing as well as ancient authority, to transfer title to the landowner the moment the requisite physical facts occur and to do so because those facts have occurred regardless of the actual intention of the parties or the unfairness that may result therefrom. Thus the moment the trespasser or tenant or other person unites the disputed personal property to the real estate it belongs to the landowner. The same principle, strangely, purports to give to a vendee or mortgagee title to items on the land because of a status that item acquired at the time it was physically united to the land.

When the cases are examined more closely, however, it becomes clear that there are different policies and expectations that are being given effect in each of these situations and that the physical facts do not have the mystical quality that the doctrine purports to give them. It also becomes apparent, with respect to most relationships in which the doctrine operates, that it is seldom used to deprive a party of title to an item unfairly. The one possible exception to this last statement arises, as will be developed later, in the mortgagor/mortgagee relationship.

In fact, despite many statements to the contrary, there is no single fixtures doctrine or concept, but there are several situations, involving parties to many different relationships and varying policy considerations, in which the courts have purported to impose a single set of rules. The many areas in which the fixtures rules have been said to operate, however, have little in common other than the physical facts that usually involve the adaptation of a chattel for use in connection with land. The policies and expectations that grow out of those recurring physical fact patterns, in the many relationships that the doctrine is said to govern, are very different, however; and the results are not consistent from one relationship to another, regardless of what the cases may say. Indeed, it is arguable that the only remnants of the doctrine that survive today are those that serve as a cover for the implementation of otherwise unarticulated policies and biases.

§ 46.01(b) The Physical Aspects of the Doctrine.

The origin of the effort to force several distinct legal problems into a single doctrinal mold is not entirely clear. The recurrence of the same physical facts in disputes involving the many different relationships has undoubtedly been primarily responsible for the assumption that a single doctrine will suffice to decide all such disputes. This tendency to reduce legal analysis to the physical operates at several levels in the fixtures cases, and at each level it seems to add to the confusion that surrounds the area. In addition to the similarity of the physical facts in the many different disputes, those facts usually involve a physical relationship between the chattel and the land to which it is said to have become a part; and that physical relationship would have loomed large in the medieval legal minds in which the doctrine originated. n6 To such minds ownership was itself a physical concept, as evidenced by the ceremony of livery of seisin by which ownership was passed, and as evidenced by the fact that seisin, an almost purely physical concept, was then the equivalent of ownership. n7 Furthermore, the concept seems to have come out of feudal relationships or the pre-commercial landlord/tenant relationship in which the lord or landlord was clearly the superior party and the ownership of land was far more important than ownership of personal property. In fact the villeins, who were probably the first to suffer loss of property by the operation of the doctrine, were themselves the property of the lord. n8 It is little wonder that in such a situation the Latin phrase quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit n9 (that which is attached to the land cedes to the land) would be used to justify giving ownership of anything physically attached to the land to the overlord.

The physical concept of ownership is a part of a reification process that has even further implications with respect to the fixtures concept, however. Not only does it give great significance to the physical attachment of the structure to the land, it insists that legal consequences flow from and come into being at the moment the physical relationship is established. It seems to conceive of legal rights as coming into being, in an almost physical sense, the instant the chattel assumes a physical relationship to the land despite the fact that the same person may own both the land and the chattel. This aspect of the reification process is found, even today, in the cases in which it is frequently stated, even when the annexor owns both the land and the chattel, that the fixtures determination depends upon the intent of the annexor at the time of the annexation and that the character of the item as a fixture is acquired at that instant. n10 It is as though the courts were regarding the act of making the physical connection between the fixture and the land as a ceremony that has legal significance. It is obvious, however, that nothing of legal consequence has occurred in such a situation. The owner of the land and chattel may remove the chattel from the land, and no one can complain of such action. Furthermore the unsoundness of such an approach is apparent when one considers that the fixtures doctrine is a rule of law that, supposedly, results in a change in, or determination of, ownership. It is manifestly absurd to apply it to a situation in which the same person owns both the land and the chattel.

§ 46.01(c) The Roman Origin of the Doctrine.

Another aspect of the fixtures doctrine that has contributed to the confusion surrounding it is that it has attempted to blend into this chaotic body of law, in which there is such an emphasis on the physical, a policy and set of rules derived from the Roman doctrine of accessio. n11 In the common law this is known as the accessions doctrine but it has not been as well developed in the common law as it had been by the Romans. n12 The recurring factual patterns dealt with by this doctrine involve situations in which an article of property belonging to one person is combined with something belonging to another in such a way as to make it inconvenient, or economically wasteful, to attempt to separate the two. n13 The doctrine usually involves two items of personal ("movable") property, but the Roman Law apparently used the same set of principles to resolve disputes in which one of the items was real ("immovable") property. n14

The policy questions in this situation relate to the economic inefficiency of attempting to separate the parts of the new product because of the fact that the sum of the values of the separated parts would be less than the value of the combined whole. Indeed, in many cases the effort to separate would result in the total destruction of the value of one or both of the parts. Thus if a person steals some paint from one person and a canvas from another and uses the two items to paint a masterpiece, it would be ridiculous to allow the owners of the two items to separate them in order to give effect to their ownership rights. The same kind of problem can exist if one steals building materials from one person and uses them to construct or improve a structure on the land of another. In the personal property situations, the accessions doctrine would generally attempt to avoid economic waste by giving ownership of the new product to that person whose contribution was the greater and relegating the other to an action for damages. In the painting hypothetical it might even be the thief who obtains title on the theory that the skill and labor of the thief was the major component of the final product. n15

The Roman doctrine of accessio seems to be the source for the common law rule embodied in the Latin phrase quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit n16 which is the basic fixtures principle; and, while many of the fixtures cases do involve the economic waste policies on which the accessions principle is based, n17 the common law cases seldom distinguish between situations in which that principle is being applied and those in which the decision is based upon other policies or principles. As a result the accession principle is one of many principles and policies that are irrationally thrown together in an effort to find a universal rule to apply to the recurring physical fact patterns that are said to be governed by the fixtures doctrine.

§ 46.01(d) The Early Landlord/Tenant Cases.

While the fixtures principle was initially applied primarily to the landlord/tenant relationship n18 (and there in all its rigor), n19 there was, at a very early time, an exception developed in regard to trade fixtures. By the time of the 1703 decision in Poole's Case, n20 which became the leading authority in regard to the exception, the proposition had already become well-established to the effect that items placed on the land by a tenant for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business could be removed upon the expiration of the term. n21 The exception has been frequently justified on the basis of the desirability of encouraging trade or business, but some doubt has been expressed as to the validity of that rationale because of the fact that it was being applied "before England had become trade conscious"; n22 and it has been suggested that some of the early cases that allowed tenant removal of items affixed to the real estate did not involve trade tenants at all but, rather, reflected a broader exception in favor of all tenants. n23

The trade fixtures exception for a time appeared to be spreading beyond the landlord/tenant relationship to encompass any addition to property by a commercial enterprise. Ironically, the movement to expand the trade fixtures exception had its origin in what is probably the most regressive decision in the area -- that of Lord Ellenborough in Elwes v. Maw, n24 in which the court refused to extend the trade fixtures exception to agricultural tenants. The language of Lord Ellenborough, which gave rise to the belief that the trade fixtures exception would be extended to include all commercial relationships was: "Where the fixed instrument ... was an accessory to a matter of a personal nature then it should be considered a personalty." n25 The inference from this dictum was that commercial fixtures should be considered to be personal property regardless of the relationship of the parties. n26 If such a movement had been allowed to run its course, the fixtures doctrine might have developed along more rational lines in that it would have been freed, at least in the commercial cases, of the fixation on the physical aspects of the doctrine. Indeed a similar exception with regard to noncommercial landlord/tenant cases was also developed that related to ornamental fixtures. n27 It was not until Fisher v. Dixon in 1845 n28 that the House of Lords put an end to the idea that all trade fixtures were exempt from the doctrine and restricted the trade fixtures exception to the landlord/tenant cases.

Elwes v. Maw, was not the only major regressive decision in the cases dealing with the trade fixtures exception. Another such decision dealt with the right of the tenant to remove items after the end of the term. The trade fixtures doctrine had allowed the tenant to remove fixtures, but only if they were removed prior to the end of the term. n29 Fixtures left on the property beyond the end of the term became the property of the landlord. The implementation of this limitation on the trade fixtures exception spawned another major regressive fixtures decision, which was that if the tenant took a renewal lease that did not expressly reserve the right to remove fixtures placed on the premises during the prior term, the right of removal was lost. The leading American case to this effect was the New York case of Loughran v. Ross, n30 Fortunately, this rule is seldom followed today even in New York. n31

§ 46.01(e) The Contribution of the Mortgagor/Mortgagee Cases.

While the fixtures doctrine seems to have developed primarily with respect to the landlord/tenant relationship, in more recent years it has found its major application in mortgagor/mortgagee cases, with the leading American cases being decided in the early 19th century. n32 Before the present doctrine became settled, some of the early cases seemed to be developing an approach that de-emphasized the physical annexation requirement in favor of a test that looked for the extent to which the item was adapted for use in connection with the real estate. n33 The test was apparently designed to favor the mortgagee by including almost anything brought onto the land by the mortgagor within the coverage of the mortgage. n34

One justification for the doctrine, other than a simple commercial bias, may have been the policy of keeping a going business from being dismantled by the creditors levying on the equipment and machinery. Such a policy has played a role in areas other than the landlord/tenant cases. n35 The promising aspect of this line of authority was the extent to which it, similar to the ill-fated expanded trade fixtures exception, freed the area of the emphasis on the physical; but that promise was short-lived here also, as a result of the decision in Teaff v. Hewitt, in 1853, n36 in which the requirement of physical annexation was reasserted. That decision has become the leading case in the entire fixtures area, and it lays down a test that most courts purport to follow even today.

Teaff, involved an effort by a mortgagee of a woolen mill to enjoin the general creditors of the mortgagor from removing the machinery of the mill. The suit was premised upon the fixtures principle, which would have resulted in the machinery being covered by the mortgage executed subsequent to the machinery being placed on the property by the mortgagor. The court held for the mortgagee as to a steam engine and boilers that were attached to timbers embedded in the land or set upon brickworks, but it held for the creditors as to lighter machines that were fixed in place only by cleats that were attached to the floor. In doing so it established a three-point test for determining whether an item is a fixture: (1) actual annexation to the realty, (2) appropriation to the use of the realty to which it is connected, and (3) the intention of the annexor to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold. n37

The court went to great lengths to emphasize that by "annexation" it meant an actual physical connection to the land. n38 In doing so it rejected the line of authority that dispensed with the physical annexation requirement n39 and, instead, based the fixtures characterization upon "an adaptation to the use or purpose to which the realty is appropriated." n40 When this strict emphasis upon the physical annexation requirement is combined with requirement (3), which refers to the intention of the annexor at the time of the annexation, it becomes clear that this court viewed the fixtures concept as essentially a physical phenomenon. It viewed the legal incidents that flow from the fixtures concept as occurring at the time the physical events occur, if the annexor, at that time, has the requisite intent.

This physical approach is underscored when the court later indicates, by way of dictum, that the same test applies to resolve all disputes that may arise out of any of the various relationships that may be referred to the fixtures doctrine. n41 Thus, if the article became a fixture because of meeting the three requirements of the test at the time of annexation, it will be so regarded not only as to the parties who may have interests in the article or the realty at that time but also as to parties who may enter into such relationships at a later time.

Insofar as the test gives content to relationships existing at the time of the annexation, it may make some sense. In that context, it might seem rational to determine the intent of the annexor at the time of annexation and to fix consequences of annexation at that time. Thus if a tenant or mortgagor places a building on the land and the landlord or mortgagee claims an interest in it, it might be reasonable to examine the intent of the annexor. Even there the inquiry is misdirected, however, because it should seek the intent and weigh the expectations of both parties to the relationship.

When it is applied to relationships not in existence at that time, however, the test makes no sense at all. Physical facts and intent, on the part of the annexor, that occur at the time of annexation, cannot have legal consequences with respect to relationships that do not yet exist. If a landowner erects a structure on his or her land, nothing of legal consequence has occurred. Legal relationships exist between people, not between people and things. If title to the structure is to pass to a subsequent vendee because it is characterized as a fixture, that result must follow because the structure is so situated as to raise expectations on the part of the vendee at the time of the sale. It is the intent and expectations of the two parties at the time they establish their relationship from which legal consequences should flow. If the parties do not expressly agree as to the disposition of an item that is located on the land at the time of the sale, it should be characterized as a fixture, for purposes of that relationship, only if it is so situated with relation to the land that reasonable persons dealing with the land would expect it to pass with the land. The only intent, on the part of the vendor, that should be relevant is the intent to include or not include it in the sale. The fact that the item is located on the land in such a way as to mislead a purchaser may be relevant; but its relevance is as to its tendency to mislead, and it would have that tendency regardless of what intention the annexor may have had when it was placed there. If the intention of the vendor in this regard is relevant at all, it would be his or her intention to leave it in a position where it could mislead a prospective purchaser.

Much of what the court said in Teaff, is dictum because the dispute there arose out of a mortgagor/mortgagee relationship, and the fixtures were on the property at the time the mortgage was executed. It was the intention of the parties to include or not include the fixtures in the coverage of the mortgage that was important. As a matter of fact the court expressly recognized that the latter intention was the important one, rather than the intention at the time of annexation, when it went on to state that a chattel mortgage on the items in dispute, given by the mortgagor at the time of the execution of the real estate mortgage, was an indication that the parties did not intend the disputed items to be regarded as a part of the real estate. n42 There was no apparent recognition, however, that this latter statement was inconsistent with the main portion of the opinion, which would have fixed the character of the annexed items at the time of annexation based upon the annexor's intent at that time.

Further indication that even the Teaff, court did not believe that intention at the time of annexation was important is found in the way the court describes that intent. It is described as being "inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose for which the annexation has been made." n43 While subsequent writers have referred to the intention described by the court as an objective intent, rather than a subjective one, n44 it is clear that the reference is not to intent at all but to appearances that are being created by the annexor. The relevance of those appearances, at least as to their effect on subsequently formed relationships, is the extent to which they might cause expectations to be developed by the parties to such relationships. Insofar as the content of those subsequently formed relationships being dependent upon intention, it would be the intention that the parties might have formed at the time of entering those relationships, not the intention that one of the parties may have had when the chattels were fixed in place on the real estate.

While subsequent courts and scholars have occasionally recognized that the rationale of the Teaff, case is not valid insofar as it purports to lay down a principle that can be used to sort out all of the relationships in which the fixtures principle may be invoked, n45 it nevertheless provides the analytical basis for nearly all of the decisions on the subject; n46 and even the most insightful of its critics seem, invariably, to accept the Teaff, error of assuming that legal consequences flow from, and arise at the time of, the mere physical act of annexation to the real estate. n47

§ 46.01(f) Current Trends.

Despite the almost universal acceptance of the fixtures doctrine and the Teaff v. Hewitt n48 test for applying it, there is reason to question the continued vitality of the doctrine. The results in the cases in more recent years have, in fact, tended to reduce it to its accessions component in that, except in the mortgagor/mortgagee cases where it finds wide application, it is seldom applied in situations in which it would bestow a windfall on the owner of land and then only to prevent economic waste or to protect a bona fide purchaser. As will be demonstrated in the discussion of each of the relationships in which the doctrine purports to be applied, the courts seldom give it the effect of depriving one of property -- an effect that, on its face, it would seem to produce as a matter of course. In the landlord/tenant relationship, for example, the trade fixtures and ornamental fixtures exceptions result in the tenant being able to remove most items placed on the property unless there is evidence of a contrary intent between the parties. n49 To the same effect, the licensee-owner cases nearly always allow the licensee to retain ownership of items placed on the property unless a bona fide purchaser has intervened; n50 and in the trespasser/owner situation, an area where the principle may have at one time produced the harshest results, the more recent cases have been liberal in their efforts to prevent the unjust enrichment that would result from application of the rule even to the point of permitting the trespasser to remove structures placed upon the land. n51 Even if the principle operates to deprive a trespasser of title to a structure, the cases, or a commonly adopted form of statute, n52 require that the trespasser be compensated. In the vendor/vendee situation, the fixtures principle was probably never anything but an aid to construing the agreement between the parties or the basis for imputing to them an intent based upon that which reasonable people would have had under the circumstances. n53 This trend toward stripping the fixtures doctrine of its vitality is carried forward in the Uniform Commercial Code in which, as between the holder of a security interest in the chattel and the owners of interests in the land, the chattel security holder will prevail, providing the recording provisions have been complied with. n54 The one exception to the last statement is in regard to building materials that have been incorporated into an improvement on land, n55 and that, of course, is the situation in which an accession has clearly occurred. It is to be noted that the situation that is most commonly dealt with by the Uniform Commercial Code is that in which the holder of a security interest in the chattel is opposed to a mortgagee of the land, and the Code therefore disrupts the operation of the fixtures principle in the one area in which it still has vitality in the common law.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. John W. Hill, A Manual of the Law of Fixtures 2 (2d ed. 1871).

(n2)Footnote 2. Marshall D. Ewell, A Treatise on the Law of Fixtures 1 (1876).

(n3)Footnote 3. Ransom H. Tyler, A Treatise on the Law of Fixtures 34 (1877).

(n4)Footnote 4. At one time there was disagreement as to the meaning of the word "fixture" (See Marshall D. Ewell, A Treatise on the Law of Fixtures 4, 5 (1876); and, in fact, it was sometimes given an opposite meaning in which it was said to be an item that, although used in connection with the real estate, had not become a part of the land and was removable without the consent of the landowner. Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 2 (3d ed. 1883) [hereinafter cited as Amos & Ferard]. As to this latter definition, it has been said: "A removable fixture as a term of general application, is a solecism -- a contradiction in words." Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 524 (1853) .

Although the currently accepted definition is as stated in the text, the word is sometimes used, in special situations, to describe that which is removable without the consent of the landowner, as in "trade fixtures" -- which actually describes an exception to the fixtures doctrine.

A leading commentary on the U.C.C. defines "fixture" by distinguishing among things "that remain 'pure goods', those so substantially integrated into real estate as to become real estate themselves, i.e., 'pure realty", and those in the gray area that would pass in a deed to the real estate yet remain personal property." James J. White and Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code, 853 (5th ed. 2000). The treatise refers to the things in the latter group as fixtures. See id. Such a definition, while correct if limited to transactions covered by Article 9 of the Code, sounds a great deal like the Amos and Ferard definition.

The 1999 version of the U.C.C. states that "[f]ixtures means goods that have become so related to particular real property that an interest in them arises under real property law." See U.C.C. § 9-102(41). A comment to § 9-334, which deals, in part, with fixture filings, adds:

> Thus, this section recognizes three categories of goods: (1) those that retain their chattel character entirely and are not part of the real property; (2) ordinary building materials that have become an integral part of the real property and cannot retain their chattel character for purposes of finance; and (3) an intermediate class that has become real property for certain purposes, but as to which chattel financing may be preserved.

U.C.C. § 9-334, Official Comment 3. The U.C.C. offers little guidance on the question of what makes something a fixture.

(n5)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Stibor v. Farrell, 129 N.W.2d 449 (1964) , in which vendee was given title to a grain bin that was on the property at the time of the sale. The court was clearly giving effect to the intention of the parties even though the conveyance did not mention the item. See also Commonwealth v. Bundza, 763 N.E.2d 545 (Mass. Ct. App. 2002) ; Martin v. Pilaczynski, 25 N.E.2d 362 (Ohio Ct. App. 1939) ; McCraw Oil Co., Inc. v. Pierce, 83 P.3d 907 (Okla. Ct. App. 2003) .

(n6)Footnote 6. For a discussion of the antiquity and origin of the doctrine, See 7 Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 485 (2d ed. 1937).

(n7)Footnote 7. See Percy Bordwell, Seisin and Disseisin, 34 Harv. L. Rev. 592 (1921); 2 Sir Frederick Pollock and Frederic W. Maitland, History of English Law 29 (2d ed. 1968).

(n8)Footnote 8. See C.A. Tuttle, The Law of Fixtures, Its Historical Development and Present State, 3 Alb. L.J. 407, 408 (1871); 2 W. S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law 167 (1909); Harrison A. Bronson, The Law of Fixtures, 10 (1904).

(n9)Footnote 9. The spelling of the first word of the phrase is sometimes quidquid. See Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 525 (1853) .

(n10)Footnote 10. See, e.g., Marsh v. Spradling, 537 S.W.2d 402 (Mo. 1976) .

(n11)Footnote 11. 5 American Law of Property § 19.2 at 6 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 76 (1935).

(n13)Footnote 13. Capitol Chevrolet Co. v. Earheart, 627 S.W.2d 369 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1981) , in which purchaser of the stripped-down hull of a stolen auto was given title to it because of the addition by him of material and labor, which converted it into a more valuable automobile.

(n14)Footnote 14. The Roman concept of accessio was applied to both movable and immovable property because the Romans did not emphasize the difference between the two.See generally, 2 Patrick M.C. De Colquhoun, A Summary of the Roman Law §§ 979-993 (1988); Walter Warwick Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian §§ 208-214 (3d ed. 1966); Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law, §§ 346-349 (1927).

(n15)Footnote 15. But cf. Fanderlik-Locke Co. v. United States, 285 F.2d 939 (10th Cir. 1960) ; under the law of accession, the title to paint transferred from subcontractor to general contractor after the paint had been applied.

(n16)Footnote 16. Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 561 (1934); In 7 Sir William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 485 (2d ed. 1937), however, the phrase is said to have come from the Roman principle cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum.

(n17)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Fike v. Riddle, 677 S.W.2d 722 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984) , in which the court refused to allow an oil and gas lessee to remove the casing in a well, even though given that right in the lease, because to do so would destroy a producing well.

(n18)Footnote 18. There were also many early cases involving the heir/executor and life tenant/remainderman situations. See Charles A. Ferard and W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 41 (3d ed. 1883).

(n19)Footnote 19. For example, in one of the earliest cases, it was held that it was waste for a tenant to build a house on the property and then waste again to tear it down. Sir Edward Coke, Commentaries on Littleton *53a.

(n20)Footnote 20. 1 Salk Rep. 367, 91 Eng. Rep. 320 (K.B. 1703) in which the tenant was allowed to remove soap vats that he had placed on the premises for the furtherance of his trade.

(n21)Footnote 21. Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 40-49 (3d ed. 1883).

(n22)Footnote 22. See Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 564 (1934).

(n23)Footnote 23. See Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 44 (3d ed. 1883).

(n24)Footnote 24. 3 East 38, 102 Eng. Rep. 510 (K.B. 1802).

(n25)Footnote 25. Id. at 53, 102 Eng. Rep. at 516.

(n26)Footnote 26. See Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 580 (1934).

(n27)Footnote 27. For a discussion of the ornamental fixtures exception, See Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 97-126 (3d ed. 1883); and 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 344 (5th ed. 1844).

(n28)Footnote 28. 12 Cl. & F. 311, 8 Eng. Rep. 1426, as cited in Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 581 (1934).

(n29)Footnote 29. See, e.g., Blackwell Printing Co. v. Blackwell-Wielandy Co., 440 S.W.2d 433 (Mo. 1969) . There is a line of contrary authority. It gives the tenant a reasonable time after expiration of the lease to remove the fixtures.

Towne v. Sautter, 326 N.W.2d 694 (N.D. 1982) ; see also Annotation, Time Within Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 109 A.L.R.5th 421 (2003) (discussing varying approaches for dealing with the removal of trade fixtures).

(n30)Footnote 30. 45 N.Y. 792 (1871) .

(N31)Footnote 31. This decision came under rather sharp criticism early on. In Lewis v. Ocean Nav. & Pier Co., 26 N.E. 301 (1891) , the court said, "The decision in that case [Loughran v. Ross, 45 N.Y. 792 (1871)] was placed upon quite technical reasoning, supported, it is true, by some authorities, but it is not one of those cases whose principle should be extended." Id. at 350, 26 N.E. at 304. See also P. H. Vartanian, Annotation, Right to Remove Fixtures or Improvements Placed Upon Property by One Holding Under Lease as Affected by Renewal or New Lease Made to Him or His Successor Without Reservation of the Right to Remove, 110 A.L.R. 480 (1937) . The final blow to the Loughran rule in New York came in 1959, when the State Legislature specifically abrogated this rule. N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 226-a.

(n32)Footnote 32. See, e.g., Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) ; Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490 (1841) .

(n33)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490 (1841) . See also, Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201 (1829) , in which the same trend was developing with respect to the vendor/vendee relationship.

(n34)Footnote 34. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court explained the development as follows:

> Due to the demands and requirements of our changing economic order, we early developed in this State the principle of an 'industrial mortgage' which included, as part of the freehold, personal property in and about a manufactory. This principle became more important as our industrial life expanded, so that the necessary credits to sustain and finance manufactories and other like industries could be obtained with some degree of certainty that the security offered would be continued.

Roos v. Fairy Silk Mills, 5 A.2d 569, 571 (Pa. 1939) . See also Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 561 (1934), and Alphonse M. Squillante, The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the Uniform Commercial Code Part I, 15 Hofstra L. Rev. 191, 212 (1987).

(n35)Footnote 35. Between heir and executor, an early English case held that salt pans that were removable without damaging them or the building went to the heir as against the executor. Lord Mansfield reasoned that the intent of the owner was to increase the value of the inheritance by affixing the salt pans. The full enjoyment of the inheritance was not possible without them. Lawton v. Salmon, 1 H. Bl. 259, 126 Eng. Rep. 151 (1793) .

(n36)Footnote 36. 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) .

(n37)Footnote 37. Id. at 530 .

(n38)Footnote 38. Id. at 543 .

(n39)Footnote 39. See, e.g., Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490 (1841) . See also, Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201 (1829) , in which the same trend was developing with respect to the vendor/vendee relationship.

(n40)Footnote 40. Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 528 (1853) .

(n41)Footnote 41. Id. at 531 .

(n42)Footnote 42. Id. at 543 .

(n43)Footnote 43. Id. at 530 .

(n44)Footnote 44. Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.8 at 545 (3d ed. 1975) [hereinafter cited as Brown]; Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 72 (1935); Bingham, Some Suggestions Concerning the Law of Fixtures, 7 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 16-17 (1907). See also, Rayl v. Shull Enters., 108 Idaho 524, 700 P.2d 567 (Idaho 1984) . The intention sought is not the undisclosed purpose but rather the intention gathered from surrounding circumstances. This is the overwhelming view of the courts. See Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N.Y. 170 (1854) .

(n45)Footnote 45. For a discussion on this point See Bingham, Some Suggestions Concerning the Law of Fixtures, 7 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 15-16 (1907).

(n46)Footnote 46. See Squillante, The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the Uniform Commercial Code, 15 Hofstra L. Rev. 191, 195 (1987); Thomas W. Coffey, Foreword to Alphonse M. Squillante, The Law of Fixtures at x (1992), where it is said: "The legal rule announced in Teaff ... has remained substantially unchanged to this day, and it is the foundation of modern fixtures law." See also K & L Distributors, Inc. v. Kelly Elec., Inc., 908 P.2d 429 (Alaska 1995) ; . Pledger v. Halvorson, 921 S.W.2d 576 (Ark. 1996) (setting forth the three-part test).

(N47)Footnote 47. See Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 76 (1935), where he seems to contradict himself without realizing it:

> Therefore that passes which the average buyer or mortgagee would be justified in expecting under the circumstances. Not to be confused are the cases where the grantor intends to include personal property in the transaction, even though not mentioned in the writing, and where there is a change of possession. Such an intention will be presumed if articles of a doubtful nature are delivered with the realty.

Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 72-73 (1935). He then goes on to say, "[I]t is not the bargain or an agreement which makes a chattel a fixture. It is the unilateral 'act of the annexor.'" Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 74 (1935). Another commentator has been trapped by this same inconsistency. Brown is less emphatic than Niles, but he makes the same conceptual error:

> A landowner's testimony that he intended not a permanent annexation to the freehold but a retention and subsequent removal of the articles as personalty is ineffective to prevent a finding of fixture from objective evidence... . Undoubtedly, where the article in question is clearly by objective tests either realty or personalty, the intent of the owner to treat it otherwise is ineffective. Where, however, the article in question is of an ambiguous nature, not clearly one or the other, then the actual intent with which the article was placed on the ground may well be material and decisive (emphasis added).
>
> Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.5 at 537 (3d ed. 1975).

(n48)Footnote 48. 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) .

(n49)Footnote 49. See § 46.02(f) of this chapter.

(n50)Footnote 50. See §§ 46.02(e) and 46.02(g) of this chapter.

(n51)Footnote 51. See Duncan v. Akers, 262 N.E.2d 402 (1970) ; Pull v. Barnes, 350 P.2d 828 (1960) ; and other authorities cited in § 46.02(h) of this chapter.

(n52)Footnote 52. See Dickinson, Mistaken Improvers of Real Estate, 64 N.C. L. Rev. 37, 42 (1985), for a detailed discussion of "betterment" statutes.

(n53)Footnote 53. See § 46.02(c) of this chapter.

(n54)Footnote 54. U.C.C. § 9-334(e); for a more detailed discussion See § 46.02(i) of this chapter.

(n55)Footnote 55. U.C.C. § 9-334(a).

186 of 189 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 46.02

AUTHOR: Professor Ronald W. Polston Professor Emeritus School of Law Indiana University, Indianapolis

§ 46.02 Current Law.

§ 46.02(a) In General.

The fixtures concept purports to apply a single doctrinal set of rules to resolve disputes between parties to many different kinds of relationships; but, because it is obvious that past efforts to generalize across the entire range of fact patterns that deal with the concept have failed, fixtures cases are sometimes organized into two groups for analysis. n56 In the first group are those cases in which an item is placed upon the land by the owner thereof prior to the sale of the land or an interest therein to another. This group consists almost entirely of the vendor/vendee cases and is the simplest and most straightforward of all the fixtures cases in that the inquiry is simply that of finding the intent of the parties or that intent that will be imputed to them on the basis of reasonableness and fairness. The second group are those cases in which the item is placed on the land by one who does not own the land or who owns only a limited interest in the land. This group includes the landlord/tenant, licensor/licensee, mortgagor/mortgagee, and trespasser/owner cases.

The appeal of such an organization would seem to be that each group has common factors that permit generalizing within the group. Thus the first group would involve relationships formed after the item is placed upon the property and, therefore, represents a situation in which the parties had an opportunity to bargain with respect to the character of the item. The second group would involve those situations in which the item was placed on the property by one of the parties after the relationship had already been established and the opportunity to bargain with respect to the character of the item was, therefore, not necessarily present. The theory seems to be that, in the former situation, the relationship between the parties with respect to the thing is clearly volitional, whereas in the latter it is not. The problem with such an organization, however, is that it doesn't work. Each of the many relationships in which the fixtures concept is used has its own particular mix of expectations and policy considerations; and it is, for the most part, not possible to generalize to any degree with respect to any two of them. To the extent that generalization is possible the general principle, which imputes to the parties the intentions of reasonable people, applies to all volitional relationships regardless of whether the item was attached to the land before or after the establishment of the relationship.

The mortgagor/mortgagee cases, for example, should, if the volitional/non-volitional organization were used, be included in both categories, depending upon whether the mortgage was executed before or after the item was annexed to the land. If the item was annexed to the land by the mortgagor before the execution of the mortgage, a simple transferor-transferee fact pattern would be presented; but, if it was annexed after the execution of the mortgage, the case would fall into the second category. In fact, however, the mortgagor/mortgagee cases are, because of policies, expectations, and judicial biases unique to the area, analyzed the same regardless of when the mortgage was executed with respect to the annexation of the item to the land; n57 and the holdings in such cases bear little relationship to the results reached in situations involving other relationships.

Similarly the landlord/tenant cases would be grouped along with such clearly non-volitional relationships as the trespasser/owner cases even though the landlord/tenant cases bear a closer relationship to the vendor/vendee transactions in that the courts are generally, in both situations, seeking to adjust the rights of the parties to volitional relationships based upon fairness or imputed intent and are seldom required to deal with the kind of policy problems that are present in the trespasser cases. n58

Rather than attempt to organize this discussion on the basis of dividing the cases into subgroups, therefore, each of the several relationships will be treated separately. Such an organization recognizes that each of the recurring fact patterns represents a distinct mix of policies, expectations, and reasoning, and that there is no single fixtures doctrine. Since the cases purport to generalize across the entire area based upon the three-part test laid down in Teaff v. Hewitt, however, some consideration must be given to the validity of that approach and the application of that test.

§ 46.02(b) The Three-Part Test of Teaff v. Hewitt.

The problem with the analysis in Teaff v. Hewitt, n59 which is the analysis that most courts utilize in deciding fixtures cases, n60 is that it purports to establish three distinct factors that, when found to exist, will mechanically classify an item as a fixture with the result that it will belong to the owner of the land or be covered by a lien on the land. Despite the mechanical nature of the test, the only part of it that purports to isolate a concrete fact and give unambiguous significance to it is the first of the three requirements, which requires physical annexation; and even that results in an almost metaphysical inquiry when any attempt is made to apply it to the varying fact situations in which it is said to have significance. n61 The other two parts of the test refer vaguely to the relationship between the thing and the real estate and the intention of the party who created that physical relationship. Not only are these latter two parts of the test incapable of making the kind of precise measurement that the test suggests is being made, their relevance to any particular objective is unclear; and, furthermore, they are redundant in relation to each other and to the first. Their redundancy becomes apparent when one considers that the intention referred to in the third part of the test is not actual intention but rather to the appearance that is being created with respect to the relationship of the thing to the land. n62 In addition, the search for intention, to the extent that it is the intention at the time of annexation, is unrelated to the objectives of the doctrine in most of the cases in which it is said to be applicable.

§ 46.02(b)(1) The Physical Annexation Requirement.

The first of the three parts of the test, the physical annexation requirement, suggests that a precise determination can be made as to the existence of a physical fact and that, once made, this part of the test will have been satisfied. Since the test is stated in the conjunctive, it is clear, also, that the physical connection must exist in order for the item to be characterized as a fixture. n63 The cases in which the test has supposedly been applied, however, make it clear that there is no distinct line between what is physically connected to the land and what is not and that, furthermore, the test will be held to have been satisfied in many situations in which there is absolutely no physical connection between the thing and the land. Thus, while buildings will generally be considered to be fixtures without question, n64 there are many cases in which buildings are not held to be such. n65 Most buildings are, of course, simply sitting on foundations and are thus attached only by their own weight. The fact that the status of buildings as fixtures is seldom questioned obviously has more to do with customs and attitudes than it does with the physical attachment of the building to the land. Other cases in which extremely heavy items are attached only by their own weight sometimes result in a finding that the item is a fixture and sometimes that it is not. n66 There are also many cases in which items not attached at all are considered to be fixtures. n67

While many courts and writers frankly recognize that physical attachment is not an absolute requirement, despite the contrary statement in the three-part test that they almost uniformly purport to apply, they nevertheless continue to treat it as a fact of independent significance; n68 and, for that reason, it causes mischief in the adjudicatory process. For example, in a case in which two identical machines were on the premises and both were to be permanently attached but only one had been attached at the time the issue was raised, the attached one was held to be a fixture and pass with the land and the other was not; the physical attachment requirement was apparently the only basis for distinguishing between the two. n69

Even though physical attachment should not be considered a fact of independent significance in fixtures cases, the degree to which an item is mobile and the customs and attitudes about its mobility are facts to be considered in measuring the reasonableness of the expectations of the parties in any given factual situation. n70 They are only a few of the many facts that may bear upon the question of reasonableness in any given situation, however.

§ 46.02(b)(2) Adaptation to the Use of the Real Estate.

The second part of the test, which refers to the extent to which the thing has been adapted to the use of the land, probably in a general way sends the inquiry in a proper direction in that it refers to the relationship between the thing and the human activities being conducted on the land that have given a particular value to the land. n71 To the extent that the parties were bargaining for that value, in a transferor-transferee situation, or that it may have contributed to the expectations that each developed, such an inquiry is, of course, a proper one. Thus, in a case in which the parties bargained for the sale of land on which a sawmill was located and the dispute concerned a log chain that was used in the operation of that mill, n72 it would be relevant to inquire into the extent to which a log chain was an integral part of the sawmill operation. But even if it were to be concluded that the log chain did bear such a relationship to the sawmill, that conclusion should not be given the kind of controlling significance that is suggested by the Teaff v. Hewitt, test. There would undoubtedly be other factors that would be relevant to the expectations the parties might have developed in that situation. Such factors might include: the cost of log chains, the custom of the sawmill industry with respect to the extent to which log chains are moved from operation to operation, the extent to which log chains might have utility and value apart from their use in saw mills and particularly the extent of their utility in other activities of the vendor, and the extent to which any of these factors might have been known to the parties.

The Teaff v. Hewitt, test suggests, however, that the factor of adaptation to the use of the land can be determined with certainty and that, once the item has been determined to bear the requisite relationship to the land, one of the three parts of the test that will determine its ownership has been satisfied. If the other two parts of the test are satisfied, the ownership of the item has been determined.

§ 46.02(b)(3) The Intent of the Annexor.

The third part of the Teaff v. Hewitt, test is that which refers to the intent of the annexor at the time of annexation; and it is the part of the test which is still given the most credibility n73 and which, because of its misdirected thrust (in that it seeks the intention of only one party to any given transaction and that only at the time of the annexation rather than at the time of the transaction) is likely to cause the most mischief.

If intention is to be a factor in giving content to volitional relationships, it should be the intention that was shared by the parties to the relationship at the time the relationship was entered and not the intention that one of them may have had at the time of an event that preceded or followed the formation of the relationship. Or, if the parties formed no intention or, having formed one, failed to communicate such intention to the other in an effective manner, the dispute should be resolved on the basis of an intention that is imputed to them based upon what reasonable persons would have intended under the circumstances.

The usual analysis in the fixtures cases, however, instead of framing the issue in the foregoing manner, seeks, based on the test in Teaff v. Hewitt, the intention of the annexor at the time of annexation. Such an inquiry is, of course, absolutely irrelevant to the ultimate issue involved in such disputes. Nothing of legal consequence occurs when one who is the owner of land annexes to it an article of personal property also owned by such a person, and neither can the intention that may accompany such an act have any legal significance. Such an owner may at will, and any time, remove any annexed article or leave it attached. If the property is later sold, the parties to that transaction may treat the attached item as a part of the land or not, as they wish. It is only when such an owner enters into a relationship with another person concerning the land, and they do not deal with the matter, that the question arises as to whether ownership of the attached item is affected by the transaction; and, to the extent that intention is a factor in making such a determination, it must be an intention that is common to the parties to the relationship.

To the extent that the Teaff, rule actually does seek the intent of the annexor at the time of the annexation, it is misdirected. It purports to seek intent with respect to the permanence of the attachment of the item to the land. While such an inquiry might seem to have relevance to the proper issues in that the expectations of the parties may have been affected by the extent to which the item has, or appears to have, permanence at the time of the transaction, it is the latter appearance, rather than intent of one of the parties at the time of annexation, that is important to the resolution of the issue. Furthermore, since the Teaff v. Hewitt, test does not even refer to the intent of the parties at the time of the transaction, and since that should be the primary focus in most disputes, the search for intent at another time is confusing.

The emphasis in these kinds of cases upon intention at the time of annexation would seem to be the product of several errors in the reasoning process. It is first of all a result of the supposed need for a single rule to govern the several situations that have a common set of physical facts; they all involve an article of personal property that has been adapted to use in connection with real estate. By fixing the character of the property at the time of annexation, a single rule can supposedly be fashioned that will answer any questions that might thereafter arise between parties to any of the various relationships that may thereafter be entered into with respect to the property. The fallacy of this kind of thinking is the conclusion that these physical facts implicate the same policies and expectations in the various relationships in which they occur. That is, of course, not true. A second factor that may have tended to produce such an analysis is the continued influence of the primitive thought process in which people have legal relationships to things. Thus, when an article of personal property is annexed to the land by the owner of both, this thought process would conclude that the owner has a new and different relationship to the now united articles of property than existed before. A third may be the mystic quality that has always been thought to inhere in the ownership of land.

Although there appears to be near uniform acceptance of the Teaff, treatment of the intention factor, it is doubtful that the cases that have purported to apply a test based upon intention at the time of annexation have actually done so. n74 In fact, the statement of the test in Teaff v. Hewitt, itself, indicates that something more rational was intended. It is there made clear that the intent that is being sought is an "objective" intent and that the actual, or "subjective," intent of the annexor is irrelevant. The opinion does not use the phrase "objective intent," but it does make clear that the intention it describes is that which is apparent from the conduct of the annexor. n75 Subsequent writers and courts have, however, labeled the concept described in and derived from the opinion in Teaff as "objective intent." n76 The concept of "objective" intent is obviously borrowed from contract doctrine in which the purpose of the law is to find the common intent of the two parties and where it is used, to ensure that expectations that are raised by a party's conduct are not defeated because of a secret unexpressed mental state of that party as to the content of the relationship. Except for situations in which one's conduct is inconsistent with the actual intent, however, the inquiry in contract law is with respect to the actual intent of the parties. Actual intent is only ignored when necessary to protect the other party to the relationship from what amounts to deceit.

To attempt to apply the "objective" intent concept to fixtures, in the situations under discussion at this point, however, results in the absurdity that the intent of the only party to a transaction is being sought; and yet the actual intent of that party is considered irrelevant. It is, of course, a one-party transaction to the extent that the transaction consists of nothing more than the annexation of the item to the land, and that is the assumption in the Teaff, test.

It is apparent that the court in Teaff v. Hewitt, and decisions that have followed it, are not referring to intent at all but are describing a situation in which the owner of property has created an appearance that an item of personal property has become a functional part of the real estate. n77 To the extent that that appearance is a factor in determining the rights of parties to subsequently formed relationships, it may make some sense to inquire into the intent of the party creating it; but, even if the "intent" inquiry in Teaff, is so understood, it is still beside the mark because it insists that that intention be established, and that the appearance is important, at the time of annexation rather than at the time the relationship is entered into.

§ 46.02(c) The Vendor/Vendee.

The vendor/vendee cases represent the simplest and most straightforward of the several groups of fixtures cases in that they are generally simple two-party transactions that are unencumbered by policy considerations or judicial biases. n78 The issue in these cases is simply that of determining which of the two parties to the transaction has the most reasonable expectations with regard to the item in question. Since the parties were free to dispose of the item as they wished, had they dealt with the matter expressly, the problem is that of imputing to them the intent that most reasonable people would have had under the circumstances. It adds little to this analysis to phrase the result in terms of the item having become, or not become, a fixture.

The circumstances that may bear upon the reasonableness of party expectations can, of course, be as variable as human experience itself. They would include: custom; cultural attitudes; industry practices; the physical relationship between the contested item and the structures or activities being conducted upon the land; the mobility of the item; the situation of the parties, including their business and other activities and the extent to which the item has utility to them as a part of the land or separated from it; the relationship of the thing to the subject matter of the bargain; the knowledge that each party has or should have of the expectations of the other; and anything else that might have played a role in the development of party expectations. Expectations will depend upon not only the physical evidence but upon the customs of people in the area or those engaged in the business at that time. Expectations can vary with time and technology. There are cases in the last century, for example, holding that a bathtub was not a fixture. n79 Such a holding would be unthinkable today. n80

While physical attachment may play a role in the expectations that vendees may develop with respect to whether an item is a fixture, there are many cases in which items which would normally be considered to be fixtures are temporarily detached when the issue is raised; and such items will probably be held to be fixtures even though there is no physical attachment at all. For example, storm windows that were detached and stored before the property was sold, n81 or a heavy machine that had been disassembled for repairs and may not even be on the land at the time n82 may be held to be fixtures. Similarly, items that are intended for permanent attachment but that have not yet been put in place when the land is sold -- such as building materials intended for incorporation into a structure that is under construction on the premises, n83 or machines that were purchased for permanent installation but that have not yet been installed n84 -- are sometimes characterized as fixtures and sometimes not. Lastly, some items that have never been attached in any way, and never will be, such as keys, n85 are held to be fixtures.

The functional adaptation of an item to the land or to an activity being conducted on the land that gives special value to land may also be important. This is particularly true if the parties were bargaining for that special value even though the contract of sale or deed may describe only the land. One of the early American fixtures cases, Farrar v. Stackpole, n86 for example, held that a log chain passed with a sale of the land on which a sawmill was located. The sawmill was apparently what the parties had bargained for, and the chain was used to draw the logs into the mill.

§ 46.02(d) The Mortgagor/Mortgagee.

To the extent that a disputed item is located on the land at the time the mortgage is executed, and the question is whether the mortgage covers it, the question should be the same as that involved in the vendor/vendee cases. It should be simply a matter of determining whether most reasonable people would have thought the item to be one which would pass with the land in the absence of being expressly excluded. On the other hand, when the item is placed upon the property by the mortgagor after execution of the mortgage, and the mortgage does not expressly cover such additions to the property, n87 the mortgage should not cover the item unless its removal would damage the security of the mortgagee (the accessions principle). To include such items in the mortgage security is to increase the security of the mortgagee beyond that which is bargained for. n88

The mortgagor/mortgagee cases do not follow the pattern suggested above, however. The result will generally be the same in the mortgagor/mortgagee cases whether the mortgage was executed before or after the item was placed upon the property. n89 In the questionable cases in either category, the item will generally be held to have been covered by the mortgage; n90 and seldom is it based upon a holding that the removal of the item would damage the security of the mortgagee. n91 It is rather, nearly always, based upon an application of the three-point test of Teaff v. Hewitt, and a finding that it was the intent of the annexor (the mortgagor) at the time of the annexation to make the item a permanent part of the real estate. n92

It is not clear why the mortgage cases seem to so uniformly take what is rather clearly an illogical position and one that is seemingly unfair with respect to the automatic inclusion of items that are placed on the property after execution of the mortgage. Some part of the problem may be due to the factors that have confused fixtures law generally -- such as the use of outmoded thought processes, blind adherence to precedent, and the tendency to regard the concept as a purely physical one. One of the historical difficulties that may have played a role in the illogical approach to the fixtures question in the mortgagor/mortgagee cases is the need to classify everything as either realty or personalty. Thus, if a fixture is classified as real property, the mortgage, which is a lien on the real estate, must logically cover it. That reasoning has been used in some of the cases in which the mortgagee was preferred to a conditional vendor of the item that later became a fixture. n93 Such reasoning, however, amounts to nothing more than a restatement of the fixtures principle (i.e., that which is attached to the land becomes a part of the land and belongs to the owner thereof). There is no apparent reason, however, why it should retain more vitality here than in any of the other relationships where the fixtures concept plays a role.

That these factors have had a more disruptive effect in this area than others may be due, at least in part, to the fact that at the time the mortgage is executed; there is generally no occasion for the parties to form an intent with respect to which items on the land are fixtures and which are personal property. If the mortgage transaction takes its normal course there will never be such an occasion since the payment of the debt will free the land of the obligation and the mortgagor will have been the only person interested in both the land and the personal property for the whole time. It is only when the mortgage goes into default that the fixtures decision must be made. At that point the relationship becomes an adversary one with both parties seeking to salvage as much as possible from a losing situation. It is, perhaps, not surprising that the courts would be inclined to decide the question as a matter of law at that point and seek to apply a universal rule of fixtures that would supposedly be based on giving the items their character at the time of annexation. Such an explanation might, perhaps, explain the approach of including all questionable items within the coverage of the mortgage in those cases in which the item is on the property at the time the mortgage is executed, but it would not explain why the same approach is taken with respect to those added after execution of the mortgage. In the latter situation there would seldom seem to be an intent by the annexor to gratuitously bestow a benefit on the mortgagee. In fact, even in those cases in which the mortgagor clearly had no such intent, the item is often held to be a part of the mortgage security. n94

The accessions principle would probably justify extending the security of the mortgage in many situations, but there would seem to be no more reason for it having that effect in these cases than in the vendor/vendee situation. That would at least be true with respect to those items that were on the property at the time the mortgage was executed. If an item were so situated that a reasonable mortgagee would not assume that it would pass with the land, then such a mortgagee should anticipate whatever damage would occur in the removal process. If the item were situated, however, so that a reasonable mortgagee would assume that it was included, then it will be included without the aid of the accession principle. The same would perhaps not be true with respect to items added after the execution of the mortgage because the mortgagee was neither a party to the addition of the item to the realty nor in a position to protect the security of the mortgage at that point via the bargaining process; but then the cases do not seem to utilize the accessions principle and, in fact, include just about every questionable item in the coverage of the mortgage regardless of whether its removal would damage the land or structures which are covered by the mortgage.

A policy objective that may be influencing the courts in some of the mortgage cases, and that may explain results that otherwise seem to be unfair or illogical, is that of preserving a business as a going concern. n95 It is similar to the policy involved in the accession principle. In such cases the unsecured creditors will often be attempting to seize the component parts of the factory or mill and have them sold as personal property. If they are successful the business will be shut down. The mortgagee, who perhaps loaned money on the basis of the value of the property as the site of a going business, will lose part of the security of the mortgage if the creditors are successful. Again, however, if the business was on the property at the time the mortgage was executed, or the mortgage was executed for the purpose of obtaining the capital to create the business, the mortgagee, as a reasonable person, would have known that some items would not be included in a mortgage that simply covered the land and should have taken care to expressly include them within the security exacted of the mortgagor. If the business was not on the property at the time the mortgage was executed, the mortgagee did not lend money on the basis of the value that the business adds to the land.

In the absence of any satisfactory explanation for the tendency of the courts to include all questionable items within the coverage of the mortgage, it must be assumed that these cases are simply a manifestation of a bias in favor of creditors. n96 Such a bias, in favor of commercial interests, would not be the only one operating in the fixtures area. It will be recalled that the oldest exception in the fixtures area was in relation to trade fixtures in which the policy, clearly articulated by the courts, was that of favoring commercial tenants. n97 The commercial bias in the landlord/tenant cases, however, led the courts in the opposite direction from that taken in the mortgagor/mortgagee area. In the trade fixtures cases, the commercial bias resulted in the disruption of the tendency to give to the landowner the ownership of everything attached to the land. In the mortgagor/mortgagee cases it has reinforced that tendency. These diverse results are even more remarkable in light of the fact that, in both situations, the annexation is a result of the unilateral act of the annexor after the relationship has already been established and the parties, therefore, probably never bargained with respect to the item. The effect is, perhaps, to underscore the fact that the most important factor operating in both situations is the commercial bias.

If there is a policy favoring commercial interests, which explains the approach in the mortgage cases, the rationale of Teaff v. Hewitt, with its misdirected inquiry that seeks the intent of the annexor at the time of annexation, provides a perfect cover for the advancement of such a policy.

A couple of cases from Connecticut n98 illustrate several aspects of the approach taken by the courts to the fixtures question in mortgagor/mortgagee cases. Both cases involved the question of the extent to which bowling alleys were to be considered fixtures, and most of the facts were identical in the two cases. The common facts were that there was a first mortgage on the premises when the alleys were installed, and the alleys were sold to the mortgagor on a conditional sales contract that specified that they were to remain personalty. A second mortgagee was contending that the alleys were covered by a second mortgage and could be removed when the second mortgage was foreclosed. In both cases the alleys had been paid off by the time of litigation and the conditional vendor was therefore out of the picture. The first of the two cases n99 was a suit between the second mortgagee and the first mortgagee, and the court held that the alleys were fixtures as a matter of law and covered by the first mortgage, with the result that the second mortgagee could not dismantle and remove them. The second case n100 was between the second mortgagee and the mortgagor, and the court held that the alleys remained personal property and were not covered by the second mortgage and therefore could not be removed by the second mortgagee.

The court in the first case recognized that as long as the conditional sales contract remained unpaid the alleys would have remained personal property and would not have been covered by the first mortgage, but it said that when the conditional sales contract was paid off the items reverted to their status as realty and were covered by the mortgage. In that case the first mortgagee had not expressly subordinated its interest to the conditional sales contract. The second case accepted the continued validity of that reasoning and in fact relied upon it by holding that, because the conditional sales contract had not yet been paid off when the second mortgage was executed, the property was still personal property at that time and not covered by the second mortgage. n101

The position of the Connecticut Supreme Court in both of the cases thus seems to be that an item brought onto mortgaged premises will be considered realty and covered by an existing mortgage unless to do so would prejudice the interests of a conditional vendor of the item who has retained a security interest therein; and in its earlier case it held that, once the interests of the conditional vendor are removed from consideration and the dispute is between the mortgagor and mortgagee, the normal bias in favor of the mortgagee will be given effect. In its later decision, the Connecticut Supreme Court failed to extend that bias to a second mortgagee. It may be that the failure was because second mortgagees are less favored commercial interests or, perhaps, because the second mortgagee's interest, in the later case, ran counter to the policy of keeping a going business together and the latter policy was allowed to prevail, or a combination of the two. It will be noted that in the earlier case the policy of keeping a going business together coincided with the interest of the first mortgagee.

The creditor bias, which almost uniformly results in questionable items being classified as fixtures and given to the mortgagee when the litigation is between the mortgagor and mortgagee, will, apparently, with almost the same uniformity, be disregarded when it is canceled out by another commercial interest or policy consideration that competes for the courts' attention. Thus the Connecticut cases indicated that the bias would be canceled out when in conflict with the interests of a conditional vendor of the fixture. The existence of the bias was further emphasized by the statement, in those cases, that the cancelling out effect would last only as long as the conditional vendor's interest. In one of those cases the bias was held to have been canceled out when in conflict with the policy that discourages the dismantling of a going business.

Similarly, there is an almost uniform holding that if the items are placed on the property by a commercial tenant they will not be classified as fixtures in a dispute between the commercial tenant and the mortgagee of the landlord even though the same kind of item would probably be so classified if placed there by a mortgagor. n102 The mortgagee bias will, in this situation, be canceled out by the bias in favor of commercial tenants. Thus in Standard Oil Co. v. La Crosse Super Auto Service, n103 the mortgagor leased the property to an oil company for the operation of a service station. The oil company installed pumps and tanks. When the mortgage went into default the oil company, in a suit against the mortgagee, was allowed to remove the items installed by it. Such items would undoubtedly have been held to be fixtures covered by the mortgage if the litigation had been between the mortgagee and the mortgagor. n104

§ 46.02(e) The Bona Fide Purchaser.

Even if an item is held not to be a fixture as between the annexor and the party holding the residual interest in the property, such as the landlord or mortgagee, and there is, therefore, a right of removal in the annexor, it may, nevertheless, be held to pass with a conveyance of the land by such a residual owner to a bona fide purchaser. n105 Such a situation might occur upon foreclosure of a mortgage or a transfer by a landlord. The reason for that result might simply appear to be the same as that which applies in the vendor/vendee cases (i.e., the ownership of the item would appear to most reasonable persons dealing with the land to have been merged with that of the land, and that appearance was created or allowed to exist until the time of the sale by the owner of the item). In the vendor/vendee cases, however, the result follows because the transaction is regarded as a volitional transfer of the item, with the intent to make the transfer being imputed to the vendor; and there is no question of the vendor being deprived of title by a bona fide purchaser. In the cases under consideration, on the other hand, the owner of the item is not a party to the transaction; and the transfer, as to that person, cannot be regarded as volitional. If title to the item is to be lost to the bona fide purchaser it must be because of a policy or rule that allows the transferor of the land to pass title to the fixture even though that transferor had no title. Such a bona fide purchaser doctrine does operate in these cases, but it is not clear whether it grows out of the recording act or a common law doctrine developed with respect to personal property. n106

At any rate the bona fide purchaser will generally be held to acquire title in these situations. That result has been obtained in situations in which the annexor was a mortgagor n107 as well as those in which he was a tenant n108 or a licensee. n109 In any of such cases, of course, the same result would follow if the items were held to have become a fixture as between the annexor and the residual owner of the land because the transfer is by the residual owner. A court can, therefore, avoid the bona fide purchaser problem by simply so holding. In fact, the traditional fixtures approach, which insists that the character of the item is acquired at the time of annexation and focuses upon the intent of the annexor at that time, rather than the intent or expectations of the parties to the immediate transaction, probably results in many bona fide purchaser issues being disposed of in that manner. Thus in a case n110 in which a farm was purchased at a foreclosure sale and there was located on the land at the time of the sale a grain storage facility called a Harvestore, which has as one of its component parts a slurry pump, the purchaser was held to have acquired the slurry pump as against one claiming through the mortgagor/annexor. The decision simply recited the three-point test of Teaff v. Hewitt, and held that the pump became a fixture at the time of annexation. n111 By so doing the court avoided the necessity of examining the bona fide purchaser doctrine that operates in this area. Even if the pump had not been covered by the mortgage, however, because it was placed on the property subsequent to the mortgage, the purchaser should still have prevailed if reasonable persons dealing with the property would have assumed that the ownership thereof had been merged with that of the land and the purchaser had no knowledge of the rights of the mortgagor/annexor.

Cases in which the bona fide purchaser is opposed to a tenant/annexor are rare because the possession of the land by the tenant will be enough to put the purchaser on inquiry as to ownership of the fixture located on the land. n112 There was, however, a case n113 in which the tenant had left the property before removing trade fixtures, although reserving the right to do so as against the landlord, and the property was sold to a bona fide purchaser before removal. It was there held that the bona fide purchaser prevailed. The same holding prevails with respect to fixtures annexed to the property by a licensee. n114 Although the licensee may have a right of removal as against the licensor, that right will be lost if the land is sold to a bona fide purchaser.

§ 46.02(f) The Landlord/Tenant.

If the fixtures principle were applied to the landlord/tenant relationship in its pure form, or even in a manner similar to that which operates in regard to the mortgagor/mortgagee relationship, items adapted by the tenant for use in connection with the land or buildings located on it, would instantly become the property of the landlord. n115 From a very early time, however, those items installed by a commercial tenant have been excepted from the operation of the fixtures principle. n116 The exception has been rationalized, also from very early times, as being necessary to encourage commercial tenants to make the best use of their property. n117 As a result the commercial tenant will be allowed to remove, at the end of the lease, most items brought onto the property.

The trade fixtures exception does not, however, give the tenant an unlimited right of removal, but the effort to articulate the limitations upon the right of removal have been made more difficult by the fixtures doctrine with its insistence upon a single rule to cover all the various relationships and the attendant emphasis upon the intent of the annexor at the time of annexation. Efforts to analyze the cases on that basis have obscured the relatively simple principles that operate in the area. One of those principles is that which is involved in the accessions doctrine, n118 and another is the same as that involved in the vendor/vendee cases n119 (i.e., the intent of the parties so far as it can be ascertained from their expressions or that intent that will be imputed to reasonable persons under the circumstances).

The accession principle would limit the right of the tenant to removal of fixtures when removal would destroy or unreasonably damage that which clearly belongs to the landlord. The removal of items clearly integrated into the structures that belong to the landlord, for example, will not be permitted. Thus in a very early case the trade tenant was permitted to remove vats that were a part of his soap-making business but was not permitted to remove items that were installed to "complete the house, as hearths and chimney pieces." n120

It is when dealing with the cases in which the accessions principle is apparently involved that traditional fixtures doctrine creates confusion. This is particularly true when the item installed by the tenant is a building. Buildings can generally be removed without any serious damage to the land, but the trade tenant will generally meet resistance if an attempt is made to remove a building. n121 It is here that the courts begin to emphasize the intent of the annexor at the time of annexation and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the conclusion sometimes seems inescapable that anyone erecting a building is intending to make a permanent accession to the real estate. The proper inquiry should be, of course, the intent of both parties to the relationship, n122 if that can be ascertained, and, if not, the intent that would be imputed to reasonable persons under the circumstances. n123 In this situation, as in any other, the circumstances that might bear upon the ultimate issue are infinitely variable but might include such things as the cost of the structure, the amount of rent reserved in the lease, the length of the term of the lease, the mobility of the structure, and the utility of the structure to the parties. In fact the cases, while seemingly inconsistent if traditional fixtures doctrine is the only measure applied to them, can probably be explained only on this basis.

Another limitation on the trade fixtures exception is that which requires that the items be removed prior to the end of the tenancy. If the tenant departs from the premises leaving the items on the property they become the property of the landlord. n124 This rule has also been set out in statute. n125 There have been alternative rationalizations for this limitation. It has been argued that the items became a part of the real estate when annexed, as a result of the fixtures principle, but that the tenant, because of the trade fixtures exception, was given a limited right of removal. n126 If the tenancy ends without that right being exercised, it terminates. The other rationale, which is based on the theory that the trade fixtures exception prevented the items from becoming a part of the real estate, is that there is a presumed gift of the items to the landlord upon the tenant's departure from the premises leaving the disputed items. n127 In fact, apart from theory, this limitation can probably be justified on a policy basis today, in many cases, because of the need for the landlord to be able to re-rent the premises as quickly as possible to another tenant and the consequent need to quickly settle the ownership of such items. n128

Not only has the analysis of the cases involving the trade fixtures exception been burdened by traditional fixtures doctrine, there have also been a couple of notable backsliding cases that seem to reflect a judicial discomfort at having so completely freed the commercial landlord/tenant cases from the physical aspects of the traditional fixtures doctrine. In the first of these, Lord Ellenborough refused to extend the trade fixtures exception to the agricultural landlord/tenant cases. n129 In the second, the Court of Appeals of New York held, in*Loughran v. Ross*, n130 that a trade tenant who takes a renewal lease without expressly reserving the trade fixtures will be deemed to have lost the right to them.

As a result of Lord Ellenborough's decision in Elwes v. Maw, agricultural tenants in England were treated much the same as mortgagors are in the United States today; and the situation remained that way until the decision was overruled by Parliament in 1841. n131 While the decision had some following in the early decisions in the United States, n132 it never gained a firm foothold; and today agricultural tenants are treated in the same way as commercial tenants. n133

The mischievous decision of the New York Court of Appeals in Loughran v. Ross,, n134 however, has had a longer-lasting effect. In that case the tenant had erected buildings that were subject to a right of removal under the lease. When the original lease expired, a new lease was entered into that did not mention the right of removal. The court held that the right of removal that existed under the first lease was lost when that tenancy ended and the right was not renewed in the new lease. The theory was simply that the right of removal must be exercised prior to the end of the tenancy or the right is lost and the items become the property of the landlord, and that theory was extended to include the situation in which there was a renewal lease that did not expressly include the right of removal. The apparent logic of the decision appealed to several other courts, n135 but the tendency of most courts has been to reject it or to limit it as narrowly as possible. n136

Apart from the trade fixtures exception, one might assume that the law of fixtures would be applied in its purest form in the landlord/tenant area; but such an assumption would be false. In the non-commercial landlord/tenant cases, the disputes have centered around ornamental items that the tenant has brought onto the premises; and another exception has been made for them. n137 In the application of this exception, as was true with respect to trade fixtures, the accessions principle is a limitation. n138 If the item is held to have been made an integral part of the structure, the exception does not apply and the item becomes the property of the landlord. n139

As a result of the exceptions for trade fixtures and ornamental fixtures, the landlord/tenant cases have largely limited the operation of the fixtures principle to situations in which an accession has occurred or there is a basis for holding that the parties intended the property to pass to the landlord. n140 In the latter case, of course, it is not the fixtures principle but a volitional transfer that has resulted in the property passing to the landlord.

§ 46.02(g) The Licensor/Licensee.

There are occasional cases in which a structure is placed upon land by one who has no greater right than that of a licensee. n141 Such situations usually involve family members and might be created, for example, by a parent giving a child permission to build a structure on land owned by the parent. n142 Litigation in such cases is usually between the licensee and a successor in interest to the licensor, and the licensee is nearly always favored. n143 It is generally held that the buildings never become the property of the licensor and remain the personal property of the licensee. Furthermore, the right of removal by the licensee is not lost if the buildings are left on the property after revocation of the license. n144

The justification given for the favorable treatment accorded the licensee is sometimes based upon evidence that the parties intended that the structure remain the property of the licensee; but in situations in which there is no such evidence, the courts are apt to presume the intention to have been such. n145 The result, of course, is simply that the fixtures principle does not operate in this area.

§ 46.02(h) The Trespasser/Owner.

The litigation in the trespasser/owner cases has generally involved the erection of structures, often under mistake as to ownership, on the land of another; and the issue is whether the annexor can remove the structures when forced to vacate the premises. It was in this area that the fixtures principle was formerly applied with a vengeance to the end that the improvements were held to belong to the owner of the land. n146 Such a result was justified on the basis that, while exceptions had been made to the fixtures principle for tenants and others, the trespasser, being a wrongdoer, was in no position to seek an exception. n147 Such an argument does not, of course, seek justification beyond the fixtures principle itself except to the extent that there is implicit in it a policy in favor of punishing the wrongdoer, and that aspect of the rule is sometimes openly articulated. n148

As the validity of the fixtures principle is eroded and in view of the fact that most of the trespasser cases do not involve knowing or intentional trespasses and, therefore, any policy that involves punishment is inoperative, it is not surprising that results in these cases, in recent years, have tended to be less severe with respect to the trespasser than formerly.

A type of statute that has been adopted in many states, called the "Occupying Claimant's Acts" n149 or "Betterment Statutes," n150 represents a fairly long-standing break with the traditional harsh treatment of the trespassing improver. Such statutes do not challenge the fixtures principle. In fact they seem to accept its premise that the structures erected by the trespasser belong to the land owner in that they do not include a right of removal as one of the remedies available to the trespasser, but they generally provide a scheme for compensating the trespassing improver for the value of the improvements. Typically they condition the landowner's right to recover possession upon payment to the trespasser of the value that the improvements have added to the property; and, if the landowner does not elect to do so, the trespasser may be given the right to acquire the land by paying its value. Generally such statutes will operate only in favor of innocent trespassers or those whose possession was under color of title. n151

Interestingly, while such statutes, adopted in the last century while the fixtures principle had a firm place in the legal system, recognized the validity of the fixtures principle and provided only limited relief from its severity, the common law subsequently began to abandon the fixtures principle, with the result that those trespassers who do not qualify for the relief provided by the statute today may get even more favorable treatment than those who do. The Indiana statute limits relief, for example, to those who were in possession of the property under color of title. n152 The Indiana Court of Appeals n153 held, however, that a trespasser who mistakenly built a house on the wrong lot and did not have color of title was entitled to relief even though not qualified for the protection of the statute. The court further indicated that the "trial court is not limited in respect to the relief afforded," n154 and in its previous discussion had indicated that such relief could include either a lien on the land or a right of removal of the structure. n155 Other courts have reached a similar result without the aid of a statute. n156

Despite the liberalization of the fixtures principle with respect to the rights of trespassers, there are still some areas where the trespasser is given little consideration. The oil and gas developer, for example, who drills a producing well on land on which he has no lease, or on which his lease has expired, will generally be held to have lost title to the equipment installed on the well. Furthermore, if such a lessee is determined to be a bad faith trespasser, and the difference between bad faith and good faith is not marked by a clear bright line, credit will not be given for the cost of such equipment in the accounting for rents and profits. n157 Strangely the courts dealing with such disputes seldom recognize that this fact situation bears any relationship to the situations covered by the "Occupying Claimant" or "Betterment Acts." n158 While the accessions principle may explain the results in these cases to the extent that removal of the equipment would destroy a producing well, there is seldom any effort to distinguish between removable and non-removable equipment.

Apart from the producing well situation, the oil developer will apparently be treated as favorably as other trespassers. In a case, n159 for example, in which an oil developer laid a buried pipeline on land in which he had no interest, it was held that the pipeline could be removed.

A special group of trespasser cases, which perhaps has its own policy/expectations mix, is that involving a trespass by an entity that has a right of eminent domain. In such cases the entity may take possession of, and improve, property without having first taken the necessary steps to acquire it by eminent domain. When eminent domain proceedings are subsequently commenced, the owner claims a right to be compensated for the improvements placed on the property by the then trespassing entity on the theory that, under the fixtures principle, such improvements became the property of the owner the moment they were attached to the land. Compensation is generally denied in such cases. n160

The fixtures principle would thus seem to have retained little vitality in the one area -- the trespasser/owner area -- where one would expect it to have held most firm.

§ 46.02(i) The Uniform Commercial Code.

The Uniform Commercial Code is primarily concerned with transactions involving personal property and does not generally cover those involving real property. One of the exceptions to the foregoing statement is in relation to items that may trigger the application of the fixtures doctrine. n161 In such cases, the interests of a personal property security holder may conflict with those of owners of interests in the real property to which the item has been annexed. The Code attempts to work out the conflicts that may arise in the area. In doing so, and without defining the term "fixture," but rather leaving that to local law, n162 it sets up a system in which items are classified according to the degree to which they have become a part of the real estate. From that classification flow several consequences, including whether or not a security interest can be obtained in the item separate from the real estate n163 and where the security holder must file to protect the security interest. n164 Under this system, priorities will generally depend upon order and place of recording.

The classification system that is created by the Code recognizes several categories of fixtures. n165 The first category consists of building materials that are incorporated into an improvement on land. n166 Such items clearly invoke the accessions principle because of the waste that would be involved in attempting to separate them from the structure into which they have been incorporated. No separate security interest can exist in them under the Uniform Commercial Code. n167

The second category consists of the so-called "hard" fixtures. These are things that are firmly affixed to, or are clearly adapted for use in connection with, the realty. n168 Most states would include these in their definition of fixtures.

The third category consists of what can be called "soft" fixtures, and consists of "readily removable ... factory or office machines," "equipment that is not primarily used or leased for use in the operation of the real property," and "replacements of domestic appliances that are consumer goods." n169 These are the sorts of things that many states would not include within the fixtures definition.

A fourth category, which is new to the 1999 version of Article 9, consists of manufactured homes in manufactured-home transactions. n170 A "manufactured home" refers to a structure that, among other things, "is built on a permanent chassis and designed to be used as a dwelling without or without a permanent foundation when connected to the required utilities." n171 A "manufactured-home transaction" refers to a secured transaction that creates a purchase-money security interest in a manufactured home or in which a manufactured home is the primary collateral. n172

The different treatment of the second, third, and fourth categories largely relates to the place where the security interest holder files in order to perfect the interest.

The Code includes several provisions on the methodology of filing. In the present context, it may be best to begin with the concept of "fixture filing." This refers to "the filing of a financing statement covering goods that are or are to become fixtures" and that satisfies filing requirements referenced in U.C.C. § 9-502(a) and (b). n173 Section 9-502(b) states, that, in order to be sufficient, a financing statement that is filed as a fixture filing, with respect to goods that are or are to become fixtures, must:

(1) indicate that it covers this type of collateral;

(2) indicate that it is to be filed [for record] in the real property records;

(3) provide a description of the real property to which the collateral is related [sufficient to give constructive notice of a mortgage under the law of this State if the description were contained in a record of the mortgage of the real property]; and

(4) if the debtor does not have an interest of record in the real property, provide the name of a record owner. n174

Although § 9-502(b) requires the financing statement to indicate that it is to be filed in the real property records, it does not include a requirement that the filing actually be done. For that, recourse must be had to another section of the Code.

Section 9-501 sets out the rules regarding where to "file." Both the text of the section and a comment indicate that there are two ways to file with respect to goods that are or are to become fixtures. In the words of the comment:

> There are two ways in which a secured party may file a financing statement to perfect a security interest in goods that are or are to become fixtures. It may file in the Article 9 records, as with most other goods... Or it may file the financing statement as a "fixture filing," defined in Section 9-102, in the office in which a record of a mortgage on the related real property would be filed. n175

The reference to "Article 9 records" is to the records that are maintained in an office, such as the office of the Secretary of State, where secured creditors file standard financing statements to perfect security interests in goods. n176 Thus, there are, in general, two places to file a financing statement relating to fixtures.

In considering where to file, a prudent secured creditor will take into account the parties against whom the secured creditor wishes his or her security interest to be protected. For example, if the secured creditor wishes to obtain a perfected security interest that is good against others that have claims to "goods," the secured creditor will wish to file the financing statement in the standard "Article 9 records." If the secured creditor wishes to obtain a perfected security interest that is good against others that claim an interest in the debtor's real property, the secured creditor will wish to file a fixture filing in the real property records. n177 In some circumstances, the U.C.C. permits secured creditors who file in the standard "Article 9 records" to defeat the interests of real property claimants. n178 However, given some of the uncertainties that can arise when dealing with fixtures, a secured creditor may simply decide to file in both places. n179

A security interest that is properly perfected by a "fixture filing" (which, as indicated above, is filed in the real property records), will have priority against later recorded interests of encumbrancers or owners of the real property. n180 It will also have priority against liens on the real property obtained by legal or equitable proceedings. n181 Accordingly, where "hard" fixtures are involved, a secured creditor should undertake a fixture filing in the real property records.

Where "soft" fixtures are involved, the situation is somewhat different. Provided that perfection occurs "before the goods become fixtures," that is, before "they have become so related to particular real property that an interest in them arises under real property law," n182 and provided that the fixtures are "readily removable," a security interest in these thing may be perfected "by any method permitted by this article." n183 A security interest that is thus perfected has priority over the conflicting interest of an owner or encumbrancer of the real property. n184

The last category of "fixtures" includes manufactured homes n185 in manufactured-home transactions. n186 The Code provides that security interests in these will have priority against conflicting interests of encumbrancers or owners of real property if the security interests are perfected pursuant to a statute described in § 9-311(a)(2). n187 That section contemplates that an adopting state would list a certificate-of-title statute "covering automobiles, trailers, mobile homes, farm tractors, and the like, which provides for a security interest to be indicated on the certificate as a condition or result of perfection, and any non-Uniform Commercial Code filing statute." n188 This provision gives complying secured creditors priority against those who have prior or subsequent interests in the land on which the manufactured home rests.

Priority of security interests generally depends on the time they are filed. However, as indicated in the discussion of manufactured homes and "soft" fixtures, the priority of the secured creditor's interest against another claimant is not always so determined. In both cases, a complying secured creditor can generally defeat a previously recorded interest in the real property. The U.C.C. also contains a general provision that gives priority to purchase-money security interests in fixtures. That provision, § 9-334(d), states that, subject to an exception applicable to construction mortgages, n189 a perfected security interest in fixtures has priority against the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real property, if the security interest is a purchase-money security interest and if the security interest is perfected by a fixture filing before the goods become fixtures or within twenty days thereafter. n190

For all categories of fixtures in which a security interest may be had, the U.C.C. provides that "a perfected security interest in fixtures" has priority against "a lien on the real property obtained by legal or equitable proceedings after the security interest was perfected by any method permitted by this article." n191 A comment to U.C.C. § 9-334 explains:

> Judgment creditors generally are not reliance creditors who search real-property records. Accordingly, a perfected fixture security interest takes priority over a subsequent judgment lien or other lien obtained by legal or equitable proceedings, even if no evidence of the security interest appears in the relevant real-property records. Subsection (e)(3) thus protects a perfected fixture security interest from avoidance by a trustee in bankruptcy under Bankruptcy Code Section 544(a), regardless of the method of perfection. n192

This is a useful status.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 56. 5 American Law of Property § 19.1 (A. James Casner ed. 1952). See also Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.1 (3d ed. 1975), where the author adds a third category in which neither the chattel nor land is owned by the annexor, or the annexor has only a partial interest in one or both. This third category contains cases that are largely dealt with by the Uniform Commercial Code, or that are a variation on one of the first two categories.

(n2)Footnote 57. See .Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 73 (1935).

(n3)Footnote 58. One policy present in trespasser cases that is not present in any other situation is that of punishing the trespasser. Smith Dev., Inc. v. Flood, 403 S.E.2d 249 (Ga. App. 1991) . See also § 46.02(h) below.

(n4)Footnote 59. 1 Ohio St. 511 (1853) .

(n5)Footnote 60. See Squillante, The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the Uniform Commercial Code, 15 Hofstra L. Rev. 191, 195 (1987); Thomas W. Coffey, Foreword to Alphonse M. Squillante, The Law of Fixtures at x (1992), where it is said: "The legal rule announced in Teaff ... has remained substantially unchanged to this day, and it is the foundation of modern fixtures law." See also K & L Distributors, Inc. v. Kelly Elec., Inc., 908 P.2d 429 (Alaska 1995) ; . Pledger v. Halvorson, 921 S.W.2d 576 (Ark. 1996) (setting forth the three-part test).

(n6)Footnote 61. See § 46.02(b)(1) of this chapter.

(n7)Footnote 62. See § 46.02(b)(3) of this chapter.

(n8)Footnote 63. 1 Ohio St. 511, 530 (1853) .

(n9)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Dutton v. Ensley, 51 N.E. 380 (Ind. Ct. App. 1898) (home found to be fixture even though it was merely resting on skids); Williams v. Kirby Sch. Dist., 181 S.W.2d 488 (1944) (school building found to be fixture reverting back to grantor at the end of a fee simple determinable); In re Sasinouski, 52 B.R. 67 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1985) (mobile home placed on permanent foundation and had a garage attached held to be a fixture).

(n10)Footnote 65. Miller v. Waddingham, 27 P. 750 (Cal. 1891) (home resting upon timber blocks held not to be fixture based on intent of annexor); First Nat'l Bank of Aberdeen v. Jacobs, 273 N.W.2d 743 (S.D. 1978) (barn placed on concrete foundation found not to be fixture due to lease agreement that stated the barn was to remain personal property); Sutton v. Frost, 432 A.2d 1311 (Me. 1981) (manufactured home placed on land by tenant in possession held to be personal property against subsequent purchaser of real estate).

(n11)Footnote 66. Carpenter v. Walker, 5 N.E. 160 (Mass. 1886) (engine and boiler weighing 5,600 pounds resting on timbers and bricks in an enclosure found to be personal property); Supervisor of Assessments of Anne Arundel County v. Hartge Yacht Yard, Inc., 842 A.2d 732 (Md. Ct. App. 2004) (mooring buoys, with 100-300 pound anchors, found not to be fixtures); Prichard Petr. Co. v. Farmers Co-op, 161 P.2d 526 (Mont. 1945) (two 12,000-gallon water tanks held fixture, but two 15,000 gallon water tanks held not to be fixture when encumbered by chattel mortgage); M. P. Moller, Inc. v. Wilson, 63 P.2d 818 (Cal. 1936) (gravity is insufficient attachment to constitute fixture status); see also Nextel of New York, Inc. v. Assessor for Village of Spring Valley, 771 N.Y.S.2d 853 (Sup. Ct. 2004) (cell tower base station and its antennae, coaxial cables, and 40,000 pound communications shed are sufficiently "permanent" to be fixtures).

(n12)Footnote 67. See cases cited in § 46.02(c) of this chapter.

(n13)Footnote 68. See Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 76 (1935), where he seems to contradict himself without realizing it:

> Therefore that passes which the average buyer or mortgagee would be justified in expecting under the circumstances. Not to be confused are the cases where the grantor intends to include personal property in the transaction, even though not mentioned in the writing, and where there is a change of possession. Such an intention will be presumed if articles of a doubtful nature are delivered with the realty.

Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 72-73 (1935). He then goes on to say, "[I]t is not the bargain or an agreement which makes a chattel a fixture. It is the unilateral 'act of the annexor.'" Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 74 (1935). Another commentator has been trapped by this same inconsistency. Brown is less emphatic than Niles, but he makes the same conceptual error:

> A landowner's testimony that he intended not a permanent annexation to the freehold but a retention and subsequent removal of the articles as personalty is ineffective to prevent a finding of fixture from objective evidence... . Undoubtedly, where the article in question is clearly by objective tests either realty or personalty, the intent of the owner to treat it otherwise is ineffective. Where, however, the article in question is of an ambiguous nature, not clearly one or the other, then the actual intent with which the article was placed on the ground may well be material and decisive (emphasis added).
>
> Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.5 at 537 (3d ed. 1975).

(n14)Footnote 69. Geppelt v. Middle W. Stone Co., 146 P. 1157 (Kan. 1915) .

(n15)Footnote 70. See, e.g., In re Robert W. Metzgar, 242 B.R. 226 (W.D. N.Y. 1999) (where gas tanks provided on land during construction were considered fixtures as improvements to real property); Hyman v. Wellman Enterprises, 522 S.E.2d 150, (S.C. Ct. App. 1999) (where items physically attached to property and not removable were considered fixtures); Appeal of Town of Pelham, 736 A.2d 1223 (N.H. 1999) (truck trailer used as storage shed was not a fixture, because it was readily movable and transportable); Dinsmore v. Lake Electric Company, Inc., 719 N.E.2d 1282 (Ind. Ct. App. 1999) (piece of equipment called a "bagger" was not a fixture where it was portable equipment that could be detached from control center and moved in a truck); Schwend v. Schwend, 983 P.2d 988 (Mont. 1999) (irrigation pipe was not a fixture, because it was used only during irrigation season and detached and stacked when not in use); Kipps v. Susquehanna County Board of Assessment, 743 A.2d 539 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1999) (hay storage structure considered fixture); Noll v. Harrisburg Area YMCA, 643 A.2d 81(Pa. 1994) (diving board not fixture where easily removable without tools); see also, Vargo v. Koppers Co., Inc., Engineering and Const. Div., 715 A.2d 423 (Pa. 1998) (although door machine is very large and not easily removed from the coke works, it is not attached to the real property in any way, and it can can be moved without damaging the coke oven batteries that it services; court concludes that it it is not a fixture).

(n16)Footnote 71. See e.g., Christ v. Prater Indus., 67 F. Supp. 2d 491 (E.D. Penn. 1999) (grass seed mixer not fixture where found not an integral and necessary part of the real estate); In re Town of Pelham, 736 A.2d 1223 (N.H. 1999) (truck trailers found not fixtures where used as storage sheds and they could be equally useful elsewhere and not adapted to land); A and A Market, Inc. v. Pekin Insurance Co., 713 N.E.2d 1199 (Ill. Ct. App.. 1999) (gas pumps were fixtures where incorporated into the property and integral part of real estate operation); Amoco Production Co. v. Wyoming State Bd. of Equalization, 15 P.3d 728 (Wyo. 2001) (court concluded that underground oil flow lines did not benefit the land, and were not fixtures).

(n17)Footnote 72. Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201 (1829) .

(n18)Footnote 73. See, e.g., In re Northern, 294 B.R. 821 (E.D. Tenn. 2003) (intent controls whether an item is a fixture); In re Banks, 259 B.R. 848 (E.D. Va. 2001) (when an owner of land annexes chattels, any doubt as to the owner's intention to annex them permanently to the land will usually be resolved in favor of such intent); In re Rolle, 218 B.R. 636 (S.D. Fla. 1998) (in determining whether personal property has become a fixture, intention of party making the annexation is the primary criterion, while the method of annexation and character of article annexed are factors to determine intent); Pledger v. Halvorson, 921 S.W.2d 576 (Ark. 1996) (courts apply objective test and arrive at person's intention by looking to outward acts rather than to inner workings of the mind); Ford v. Venard, 340 N.W.2d 270 (Iowa 1983) (intent is "paramount" factor in determining fixture status; Rothermich v. Union Planters Nat. Bank, 10 S.W.3d 610 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000) (intent of the annexor controls when determining whether an item is a fixture or not); Kerman v. Swafford, 680 P.2d 622 (N.M. 1984) (adaptation and annexation are indicators of intent); Mastrangelo v. Manning, 793 N.Y.S.2d 94 (App. Div. 2005) (in determining whether an item constitutes a fixture, permanency of attachment to real property does not depend so much upon the degree of physical force with which the thing is attached as upon the motive and intention of the party in attaching it; and the intent that is controlling is determined from all of the circumstances); Oldham v. Fanno, 7 P.3d 672 (Or. Ct. App. 2000) (intent of the annexor is the most important factor in determining if an item is a fixture); Lehmann v. Keller, 684 A.2d 618 (Pa. Super. 1996) (a chattel's status as a fixture or as personalty depends upon the objective intent of the owner to the chattel permanently incorporate into real property, as evidenced by the proven facts and surrounding circumstances entered into evidence.); W.H.V., Inc. v. Assocs. Hous. Fin., LLC, 43 S.W.3d 83 (Tex. Ct. App. 2001) (intent is the most important factor; however, even if intention is established as a matter of law, it will not prevail over undisputed physical facts to the contrary). See also Alphonse M. Squillante, The Law of Fixtures, § 3.03[4] at 3-39 (1992).

(n19)Footnote 74. While the courts purport to be applying a test involving intent at the time of annexation, it is clear that by defining that intent as "objective" they are really shifting the time at which intent becomes material to the time of the formation of the relationship between the parties. Thus, in Hughes v. Young, 444 S.E.2d 248 (N.C. 1994) , the court indicated that the intention of the annexor at the time of annexation was to be determinative, but it went on to say that "the status of an item as realty or personalty may depend on the relation of the parties claiming an interest in the item to each other and to the land, as this relation is often indicative of the reasonably presumable intention of the annexor at the time he made the annexation... That is, the same item that may be considered personal property in one situation may be considered real property where a different relationship exists." In Vic Bernacchi & Sons, Inc. v. Loxas, 170 B.R. 647 (N.D. Ind. 1994) , however, the court went to great lengths to state that the intention was not that at the time of the transaction establishing the relationship between the parties, but was that at the time of annexation. On that basis it found some items, which were not as permanently attached as others, to be personal property, even though the parties to the transaction probably intended to include such items to be fixtures. See, e.g., Christ v. Prater Indus., 67 F. Supp. 2d 491 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (conduct of the party and whether it evinces an intent to permanently attach an object to the realty is a consideration; court concludes that there was no evidence of objective intention to incorporate the a grass seed mixer into the physical plant as to render it an actual part of the facility); In re Claxton, 239 B.R. 598 (N.D. Okla. 1999) (the determination as to whether the owner intended to create a fixture must be made by objectively examining the chattel's affixation to real property; court has little difficulty concluding that a residence was intended to be a fixture under the objective test); Dinsmore v. Lake Electric Co., 719 N.E.2d 1282 (Ind. Ct. App 1999) (intention may be determined by the nature of the article, relation and situation of the parties making the annexation, and the structure, use, and mode of annexation; in this case, piece of equipment was not a fixture); Rothermich v. Union Planters Nat'l Bank, 10 S.W.3d 610 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000) (lease agreement and subsequent transactions confirmed intent that pinspotters were to remain personal property).

(n20)Footnote 75. Thus, the court states:

> And whether articles are personal property or fixtures must be determinable and plainly appear from an inspection of the property itself, taking into consideration its nature, mode of attachment, purpose for which used, and the relation of the party making the annexation, and in some instances, perhaps, other attending circumstances, indicating the intention to make it a temporary attachment or a permanent accession to the realty... [T]he intention to make the article a permanent accession to the realty must affirmatively and plainly appear... But where the attachment is but slight, and does not enter into the physical structure of the realty, this intention must be gathered from the nature of the article and the other attending circumstances.

Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 533-534 (Ohio 1853) .

(n21)Footnote 76. See § 46.01(e) above.

(n22)Footnote 77. "[T]he question is not so much the actual subjective intention of the party making the annexation, but his intention reasonably apparent to such third person as manifested by physical facts and outward appearances." Little by Davis v. National Serv. Indus., 340 S.E.2d 510, 513 (N.C. Ct. App. 1986) .

(n23)Footnote 78. See Hyman v. Wellman Enterprises, Inc., 522 S.E.2d 150 (S.C. Ct. App. 1999) (court notes that, in general, it is considered more probable that an improvement, placed on the premises by the owner of the fee, was placed there for the betterment of his estate and during its continuance, while it is considered more probable that an improvement, placed on the premises by one who did not own the fee, was placed there for his personal convenience and during the limited term of his estate).

(n24)Footnote 79. Philadelphia Mtg. & Trust Co. v. Miller, 56 P. 382 (Wash. 1899) ; Hall v. Law Guar. & Trust Soc'y, 60 P. 643 (Wash. 1900) .

(n25)Footnote 80. Strain v. Green, 172 P.2d 216 (Wash. 1946) .

(n26)Footnote 81. Roderick v. Sanborn, 76 A. 263 (Me. 1909) . See also Fisher v. Baronti, 761 N.Y.S.2d 820 (City Ct. 2003) (detachable hose and accessories for central vacuum system in a residence were fixtures that should have been left with the property when the home was sold); E.M. Fish & Co. v. Young, 106 N.W. 795 (Wis. 1906) (window screens held fixtures).

(n27)Footnote 82. "... because the severance of a fixture while in process of repair cannot vary its nature or deprive it of the character which annexation has conferred upon it...." Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N.H. 503, 513 ; 77 Am. Dec. 780, 782 (1860) (cider mill that had been disassembled for the season and parts of a barn that had been taken down for repair were still fixtures despite the severance). As long ago as the time of Henry VIII, this doctrine was recognized in Wistow's Case at Gray's Inn, 14 Hen. VIII 25b (1522) as quoted in Liford's Case, 11 Coke Rep. 46b (K.B. 1614).

(n28)Footnote 83. Byrne v. Werner, 101 N.W. 555 (Mich. 1904) (stone work and steel specially designed for the building project held fixture even though they were not yet incorporated into the building). But see Blue v. Gunn, 87 S.W. 408 (Tenn. 1904) (materials left at construction site not fixtures).

(n29)Footnote 84. Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Harkins, 167 A. 278 (Pa. 1933) ; but cf. Planter's Bank v. Lummus Cotton Gin Co., 132 S.C. 16, 128 S.E. 876 (S.C. 1925) .

(n30)Footnote 85. "The same law of keys; although they are distinct things, yet they pass with the house." Liford's Case, 11 Coke Rep. 46b (K.B. 1614).

(n31)Footnote 86. 6 Greenl. (Me.) 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201 (1829) .

(n32)Footnote 87. While mortgages do generally contain clauses that seek this result, See, e.g., Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 9.3 (2001), the problem is not a simple one. In the first place, "there is no clear consensus as to their validity." See id. Second, the mortgage covers real estate, and any clause drafted for this purpose likely would have to describe "additions" or "improvements" to the real estate. Defining such terms would involve problems similar to those involved in determining whether an item is a fixture. See, e.g., White v. Murtha, 343 F.2d 831 (5th Cir. 1965) ; General Synod of Reformed Church v. Bonac Realty Corp., 75 N.E.2d 841 (1947) .

(n33)Footnote 88. This rule, which would include the item in the coverage of the mortgage despite the fact that the mortgagee's security has been increased beyond that bargained for, has come under intense criticism from several commentators. See, e.g., 5 American Law of Property § 19.7 at 30 (A. Casner ed. 1952); Richard R. Powell, Law of Real Property § 652[4] at 57-42 (1992); David Cohen and Albert B. Gerber, The After-Acquired Property Clause , 87 U. Pa. L. Rev. 635 (1939). But see , Russell Denison Niles, *The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 72-73 (1935)*who believes the rule is justified. See also, Westmore Supply Co. v. Frum, 44 N.E.2d 949 (Ill. 1942) (abstract opinion only) (prior mortgagee of real estate has no claim to chattels subsequently annexed to realty); In re Highland Silk Co., 41 F.2d 405 (3d Cir. 1930) (bargain made by the parties is what the court would look to); First Nat'l Bank of Mount Carmel v. Reichneder, 91 A.2d 277 (Pa. 1955) (Musmanno, J., dissenting). In an early Massachusetts case, the court indicated in dicta that this should be the proper rule; unfortunately the court failed to follow up on it: "And in the case before us, had the defendant, after making the mortgage deed, put this kettle into the mill, we should have considered him authorized to remove it before delivering possession to the plaintiffs." Union Bank v. Emerson, 15 Mass. 159 (1818) .

(n34)Footnote 89. See Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 19.7 at 543 (3d ed. 1975). The vendee in possession under a long-term installment contract will generally be treated in the same manner as a mortgagee. See Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 224 (1879) , which equated the two relationships and reflected a Kentucky position that was favorable to the mortgagor in that it did not generally include subsequently added fixtures within the coverage of the mortgage. The soundness of the latter holding was later questioned in First State Bank of Eubank v. Crab Orchard Banking Co., 75 S.W.2d 517 (Ky. 1934) .

(n35)Footnote 90. See, e.g., In re Ladd, 21 B.R. 579 (Bankr. D. Me. 1982) (manufactured home went to prior mortgagee even though there was no showing the mortgage had been given in contemplation of the home being placed on the land).

(n36)Footnote 91. See, e.g., Tifton Corp. v. Decatur Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 222 S.E.2d 115 (Ga. 1975) (court gave stoves to mortgagee regardless of whether or not the items could be removed without damaging the premises).

(n37)Footnote 92. Id.

(n38)Footnote 93. See .Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 91 (1935).

(n39)Footnote 94. See, e.g., In re Shelton, 35 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1983) . The mortgagor built a truck stop with proceeds from the mortgage but installed fuel tanks under agreement with the oil company that they would remain personal property for as long as the owner continued to purchase gas from the oil company. The mortgagor later decided to switch oil companies and purchased the tanks from the oil company. When the mortgagee foreclosed on the mortgage, the bankruptcy court awarded the tanks to the mortgagee even though the mortgagee did not extend any money on the basis of the fuel tanks.

(n40)Footnote 95. See, e.g., Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490 (1841) . This opinion developed into the "Pennsylvania assembled plant doctrine." This doctrine allows for a chattel to attain fixture status without actual annexation as long as it is integral to the operation of a manufacturing concern. New Jersey also developed a type of industrial doctrine theory. In the leading case of Feder v. Van Winkle, 53 N.J. Eq. 370, 33 A. 399 (N.J. 1895) , the intention of the annexor is decided by the fact that a chattel is involved in the business. The New Jersey courts require annexation to some extent, Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Penn Cordage Co., 58 A. 409 (N.J. 1904) . Many courts have followed these two courts. See generally, 5 American Law of Property § 19.4 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n41)Footnote 96. For an attempt to rationalize the bias, See Roberts v. The Dauphin Deposite Bank, 19 Pa. 71, at 76 (1852) where the court said:

> It is insisted, however, that because the engine, &c., were put up after the giving of the mortgage, therefore, they constituted no part of the mortgage security, and might be removed without doing any wrong to the mortgagee. But this is not so. As the mortgagee may suffer by the depreciation of the property, arising from fluctuations in value, from accident and neglect, so he may be benefited by its appreciation, whether the same arises from the proper cultivation and improvement of the property, or from any other cause. No other rule could be at all practical.

(n42)Footnote 97. "[But] in modern times the leaning has always been the other way in favour of the tenant, in support of the interest of trade which is become [sic] the pillar of the state." Penton v. Robart, 2 East 88, 102 Eng. Rep. 302 (1801) .

(n43)Footnote 98. Lesser v. Bridgeport City Trust, 198 A. 252 (Conn. 1938) ; Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Mauro, 368 A.2d 44 (Conn. 1976) .

(n44)Footnote 99. Lesser v. Bridgeport City Trust, 198 A. 252 (Conn. 1938) .

(n45)Footnote 100. Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Mauro, 368 A.2d 44 (Conn. 1976) .

(n46)Footnote 101. In this case the first mortgagee had expressly subordinated its interest to the conditional sales contract and, in that subordination agreement, had acquiesced in the characterization of the alleys as personal property. Presumably, the alleys would not have reverted to their character as realty and been covered by the first mortgage as in the first case. This does not explain why they did not revert to realty for purposes of the second mortgage when paid off and to this extent the two cases are inconsistent on this point. The court in the second case attempts to explain this difference on the basis of the intention of the parties to the relationship involved in the litigation and the differing evidence of the intention in the two cases.

(n47)Footnote 102. 35A Am. Jur. 2d, Fixtures § 39 (2001).

(n48)Footnote 103. 258 N.W. 791 (Wis. 1935) .

(n49)Footnote 104. See, e.g., In re Shelton, 35 B.R. 505 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1983) (court gave fuel tanks to the mortgagee over the mortgagor even though mortgagee did not make mortgage on strength of the fuel tanks); cf. In re Hot Shots Burgers & Fries, Inc.,169 B.R. 920 (E.D. Ark. 1994) (court found against the mortgagee and in favor of the officers of the mortgagor corporation as to a modular commercial building located on the land at the time of the execution of the mortgage; the building was owned by the officers of the corporation; this was so despite the fact that the building could only be moved by breaking up the concrete pad on which it was situated).

(n50)Footnote 105. 35A Am. Jur. 2d, Fixtures §§ 42 & 54 (2001).

(n51)Footnote 106. Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 81-82 (1935).

(n52)Footnote 107. Betz v. Verner, 19 A. 206 (N.J. 1890).

(n53)Footnote 108. See, e.g., Joslin v. Linder, 26 S.D. 420, 128 N.W. 500 (S.D. 1910) (tenant had rented pasture land for grazing purposes and was not in possession).

(n54)Footnote 109. See, e.g., Schmuck v. Beck, 234 P. 477 (Mont. 1925) .

(n55)Footnote 110. Lau v. Indiana Nat'l Bank, 506 N.E.2d 70 (Ind. Ct. App. 1987) .

(n56)Footnote 111. Id. at 71 . In Rochman v. Cape Mercantile Bank & Trust Co., 156 B.R. 794 (S.D. Ill. 1993) , a similar reasoning process was used to hold that a tax purchaser obtained title to a mobile home placed on the premises by the taxpayer after the tax sale but before the issuance of the tax deed. Again, the issue should have been based upon the reasonable expectations of the purchaser at the tax sale, but the traditional fixtures analysis led the court astray.

(n57)Footnote 112. Sutton v. Frost, 432 A.2d 1311 (Me. 1981) .

(n58)Footnote 113. Anglo American Mill Co. v. Wisconsin Hydro Electric Co., 189 Wis. 120, 207 N.W. 276 (Wis. 1926) .

(n59)Footnote 114. Rowand v. Anderson, 33 Kan. 264, 52 Am. Rep. 529 (1885) . But see Bond Inv. Corp. v. Dynasty Oil Co., 715 F. Supp. 1445 (W.D. Ark. 1989) in which equipment left on the land for three years after expiration of an oil and gas lease was sold by the landowner to a second lessee. The court held that the first lessee had not lost title and that the second lessee could not be a bona fide purchaser because the equipment had not become part of the land. While the opinion refers to the equipment as "drilling equipment," the attorney for the first lessee (in a telephone conversation with the author of this chapter) indicated that it was equipment dedicated to a well located on the property and included tubing in the ground at the time of the sale to the second lessee.

(n60)Footnote 115. "If a tenant build a new house, it is waste, and if he suffered it to be wasted, it is a new waste." Sir Edward Coke, Commentaries on Littleton *53a.

(n61)Footnote 116. Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 40-97 (3d ed. 1883), argue that the "trade fixture" exception from earliest time was actually a right to remove domestic fixtures. But, as the rule came down in history, it was narrowed to include only commercial tenants. See also Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 564 (1934). and § 46.01(d) above.

(n62)Footnote 117. See Poole's Case, 1 Salk. 368, 91 Eng. Rep. 320 (1703), where Chief Justice Holt gives the rationale for trade fixtures as one to encourage industry.

(n63)Footnote 118. See, e.g., Roberts v. Yancey, 165 S.E.2d 399 (Va. 1969) (tenant liable for removing false ceilings and sheet rock the tenant had installed when the removal damaged the property).

(n64)Footnote 119. See, e.g., City of Greenville v. Washington Am. League Baseball Club, 32 S.E.2d 777 (S.C. 1944) , where the tenant tried to remove stadium lights but the court held they were not removable trade fixtures because the court found the parties to have intended all improvements to go to the lessor based on the terms of the lease; Batson v. Clark, 980 S.W.2d 566 (Ky. Ct. App. 1998) , in which the court concluded that the parties had intended a "pole barn" to be a temporary structure. See also Supervisor of Assessments of Anne Arundel County v. Hartge Yacht Yard, Inc., 842 A.2d 732 (Md. Ct. App. 2004) (court states that the touchstone for the trade fixtures test is intent)

(n65)Footnote 120. Poole's Case, 1 Salk. 368, 368; 91 Eng. Rep. 320, 321 (1703) .

(n66)Footnote 121. See, e.g., Simmons v. Bank of Miss., 593 So. 2d 40 (Miss. 1992) ; Goff v. Case 17 S.W.3d 574, (Mo. Ct. App. 2000) (presumption in landlord/tenant context that a building has become part of the realty). The strength of the notion that buildings erected by the tenant should belong to the landlord is illustrated by an English statute found in 15 Vict. ch. 25 which gave the tenant the right to remove buildings erected by him with the written consent of the landlord but only after giving the landlord notice and an option to buy the same.

(n67)Footnote 122. The parties might include a provision about their intent in the lease. See Lilenquist v. Pitchford's, Inc., 525 P.2d 93 (Or. 1974) (en banc).

(n68)Footnote 123. See Ariz. Dep't of Revenue v. Ariz. Outdoor Advertisers, Inc., 202 Ariz. 93, 41 P.3d 631 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2002) (court adopts a reasonable person test for determining the existence of a fixture in a tax dispute case; the issue arose out of a landlord/tenant context, involving the construction of outdoor billboards by the tenant; even though the written agreements stated that the billboards were fixtures, and even though the billboards were connected to the realty with support poles that went deep into the ground, the court, stressing the parties' agreement that the tenant would remain the owner of the billboards and had the right to remove them, and that the that the billboards were constructed for easy disassembly, concludes that the billboards were personal property rather than fixtures).

(n69)Footnote 124. See, e.g., Revzen Bus. Interiors, Inc. v. Carrane, 391 N.E.2d 24 (Ill. Ct. App. 1979) (Illinois follows the rule that a tenant must remove fixtures prior to the expiration of the lease); cf. Dutchmen Mfg., Inc. v. Reynolds, 849 N.E.2d 516 (Ind. 2006) (scaffolding installed by tenant did not become landlord's property at lease termination; tenant had right to remove it, landlord demanded that tenant do so, but then agreed to allow it to remain for use of new tenant; under the circumstances, title to scaffolding passed to new tenant, and, when employee of new tenant was injured by scaffolding, original tenant was liable in tort for injury caused by defective chattel); Locke v. Palmore, 215 S.W.2d 544 (Ky. Ct. App. 1948) (lease permitted removal of fixtures at any time; court concludes that tenant had to remove them within a reasonable time after lease termination).

(n70)Footnote 125. See Chouinard v. Leah Enterprises, Inc., 422 S.E.2d 204 (Ga. Ct. App. 1992) (statute provided that any trade fixtures remaining after lease term and possession ended will be regarded as abandoned for the use of the landlord and will become the landlord's property; court rejects tenant's claim for conversion by landlord of trade fixtures after lease termination).

(n71)Footnote 126. See, e.g., Neely v. Jacobs, 673 S.W.2d 705 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984) .

(n72)Footnote 127. Chief Justice Holt called fixtures left by a tenant "a gift in law to [the lessor] in reversion." Poole's Case, 1 Salk. Rep. 368, 91 Eng. Rep. 320 (1703) .

(n73)Footnote 128. See, e.g., Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150, 33 Am. Rep. 362 (1878) .

(n74)Footnote 129. Elwes v. Maw, 3 East 38 (1802).

(n75)Footnote 130. 45 N.Y. 792 (1871) .

(n76)Footnote 131. See Russell Denison Niles, The Rationale of the Law of Fixtures: The English Cases, 11 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 560, 567-568 (1934).

(n77)Footnote 132. See Carver v. Gough, 25 A. 1124 (Pa. 1893) .

(n78)Footnote 133. Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.9 at 550-551 (3d ed. 1975); See also Van Ness v. Pacard, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 137 (1829) .

(n79)Footnote 134. 45 N.Y. 792 (1871) .

(n80)Footnote 135. See § 46.01(d) above.

(n81)Footnote 136. The leading case opposed to Loughran is Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150, 33 Am. Rep. 362 (1878) . Of course, the parties to the lease can always enter into an agreement, on renewing the lease, regarding the ultimate disposition of fixtures. See, e.g., Pocahontas Mining Ltd. Liability Co. v. Jewell Ridge Coal Corp., 556 S.E.2d 769 (Va. 2002) (tenant agreed to leave behind "an operational plant complete with equipment necessary for its operation.").

(n82)Footnote 137. See generally Charles A. Ferard & W. Howland Roberts, Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures 105-126 (3d ed. 1883); 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 344 (5th ed. 1844); Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.10 at 552 (3d ed. 1975), who states that this exception is more restrictive than the trade fixture exception because a non-commercial tenant probably could not remove a building erected by him.

(n83)Footnote 138. See, e.g., Wright v. Du Bignon, 40 S.E. 747 (Ga. 1902) (tenant was not allowed to take away a cement walk, plumbing, water spigots, and servants' quarters installed by him).

(n84)Footnote 139. But cf. Commonwealth v. Bundza, 763 N.E.2d 545 (Mass. Ct. App. 2002) (residential tenant removed parlor gas stove, glass shower doors, a shower head, medicine cabinet, vanity, ceiling lights and fans in the dining and living rooms, and a dishwasher; court states that the bias is toward the tenant's right of removal unless the parties by action, speech, or writing have demonstrated a different intent; in this case, there was nothing in the evidence from which it could reasonably be inferred that the personal property belonged to someone other than the tenant).

(n85)Footnote 140. But the situation would be different in a case in which the chattel is affixed to the leasehold property by the landlord. See Lehmann v. Keller, 684 A.2d 618 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1996) (court concludes that "general fixture principles, rather than the trade fixture rule," should determine the rights of the parties to chattels that are affixed to the leasehold estate by the lessor).

(n86)Footnote 141. 35A Am. Jur. 2d, Fixtures § 61 (2001).

(n87)Footnote 142. See, e.g., Forbes v. Forbes, 46 A.2d 62 (N.J. Ch. 1946) (mother allowed her son to build a restaurant on her property).

(n88)Footnote 143. See, e.g., Hill v. Eads, 970 S.W.2d 882 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998) . See 5 American Law of Property § 19.10 (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n89)Footnote 144. Harrison Bronson, Law of Fixtures § 106 (1904).

(n90)Footnote 145. Id.

(n91)Footnote 146. See, e.g., Pargas of Longview, Inc. v. Jones, 573 S.W.2d 571 (Tex. Ct. App. 1978) .

(n92)Footnote 147. See 5 American Law of Property § 19.9 at 35 (A. James Casner ed. 1952); Walter B. Raushenbush, Brown on Personal Property, § 16.8 at 545 (3d ed. 1975), § 16.15 at 569.

(n93)Footnote 148. See, e.g., Smith Dev., Inc. v. Flood, 403 S.E.2d 249 (Ga. App. 1991) . Another policy present is to protect the landowner's right to enjoyment and possession of the land. Crest v. Jack, 3 Watts 238 (Pa. 1834) . See also Russell Denison Niles, The Intention Test in the Law of Fixtures, 12 N.Y.U. L.Q. Rev. 66, 79 (1935) (quoting Robert Brooke, La Graunde Abridgement, Trespass pl. 23), where it is said that the trespasser loses his property by his "fraud or folly." To show the hostility of the courts to trespassers, an interesting case came out of the civil war. During the war the government rebuilt, without the owner's permission, some railroad bridges that had been destroyed. The government then tried to offset the costs of repair against money it owed to the railroad. The Supreme Court did not allow the offset. United States v. Pacific R.R., 120 U.S. 227 (1887) .

(n94)Footnote 149. See, e.g., Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32-30-3.1 - 32-30-3.1-12.

(n95)Footnote 150. See, e.g., N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 1-340 - 1-351.

(n96)Footnote 151. See generally Dickinson, Mistaken Improvers of Real Estate, 64 N.C. L. Rev. 37, 42 (1985).

(n97)Footnote 152. Ind. Code Ann. § 32-30-3.1.

(n98)Footnote 153. Duncan v. Akers, 262 N.E.2d 402 (Ind. 1970) .

(n99)Footnote 154. Id. at 522, 262 N.E.2d at 407.

(n100)Footnote 155. Id. at 521-522, 262 N.E.2d at 407.

(n101)Footnote 156. Pull v. Barnes, 350 P.2d 828 (Colo. 1960) .

(n102)Footnote 157. 1 Howard R. Williams & Charles J. Meyers, Oil and Gas Law § 226.1 (1992).

(n103)Footnote 158. Ronald W. Polston, Oil and Gas Law Developments, 10 Eastern Minn. L. Inst. § 21.02 at 21-2 to 21-8 (Matthew Bender & Co., 1989).

(n104)Footnote 159. Fuel Exploration v. Novotny, 374 N.W.2d 838 (Neb. 1985) .

(n105)Footnote 160. See generally Alphonse M. Squillante, The Law of Fixtures, § 3.04[3] (1992).

(n106)Footnote 161. Article 9 of the U.C.C. also applies to other real property situations. See U.C.C. § 9-109(b) and Official Comment 7 (pledge of a note secured by real property); § 9-301(4) and Official Comment 5(d) (security interest in minerals); § 9-102(44) (defines uncut timber and growing crops as goods). References to the U.C.C. in this chapter are to the 1999 version.

(n107)Footnote 162. U.C.C. §§ 9-102(41) & 9-334 Official Comment 3.

(n108)Footnote 163. U.C.C. § 9-334(a) and Official Comment 3 (security interest cannot be retained in "ordinary building materials").

(n109)Footnote 164. U.C.C. § 9-501.

(n110)Footnote 165. The Code does not define "fixtures" but, rather, leaves that to local law; however, the Code does recognize distinct situations in which goods, if fixtures under local law, will be treated differently. See U.C.C. § 9-334 and Official Comment 3.

(n111)Footnote 166. U.C.C. § 9-334(a).

(n112)Footnote 167. See U.C.C. § 9-334(a).

(n113)Footnote 168. See U.C.C. §§ 9-102(41), 9-334(a)&(e) & Official Comment 3.

(n114)Footnote 169. See U.C.C. § 9-313(4)(c) and Official Comment 3.

(n115)Footnote 170. U.C.C. § 9-334(e)(4).

(n116)Footnote 171. See U.C.C. § 9-102(53).

(n117)Footnote 172. See U.C.C. § 9-102(54). Manufactured homes held as inventory do not qualify. See id.

(n118)Footnote 173. See U.C.C. § 9-102(40). "Fixture filing" also refers to "the filing of a financing statement covering goods of a transmitting utility which are or are to become fixtures." See id.

(n119)Footnote 174. See U.C.C. § 9-502(b). The article also provides that a "record of mortgage" can serve as a financing statement if it satisfies several requirements. See U.C.C. § 9-502(c).

(n120)Footnote 175. U.C.C. § 9-501, Official Comment 4. The text of § 9-501 confirms that a fixture filing is to be filed in the office designated for recording a mortgage. The section includes additional details, including a specialized provision, in 9-501(b), dealing with perfection of security interests in the fixtures of a transmitting utility.

(n121)Footnote 176. See U.C.C. § 9-501 & Legislative Note.

(n122)Footnote 177. See U.C.C. § 9-501(e). Of course, the debtor will have to have an interest in the real property for this to work. The Code requires that the debtor have "an interest of record in the real property" or be "in possession of the real property and the security interest." See id.

(n123)Footnote 178. An example would be a filing with respect to readily removable factory or office machines that have not yet become fixtures. See U.C.C. § 334(e). The issue is discussed more fully below.

(n124)Footnote 179. A comment to the Code suggests that if there is uncertainty over whether a particular thing is or will be a fixture, a secured creditor may undertake a fixture filing as a "precaution." See U.C.C. § 9-334, Official Comment 3. The Comment also states: "Courts should not infer from a fixture filing that the secured party concedes that the goods are or will become fixtures." Id.

(n125)Footnote 180. See U.C.C. § 9-334(e).

(n126)Footnote 181. See U.C.C. § 9-334(e).

(n127)Footnote 182. See U.C.C. § 9-102(41).

(n128)Footnote 183. U.C.C. § 9-334(e). For most non-consumer goods, the rule is that perfection occurs upon the filing of the financing statement with the Secretary of State, or other comparable office designated in the relevant state's version of the U.C.C. See U.C.C. § 9-310.

(n129)Footnote 184. See U.C.C. § 9-334(e).

(n130)Footnote 185. "Manufactured home" is defined in U.C.C. § 9-102(53).

(n131)Footnote 186. "Manufactured-home transaction" is defined in U.C.C. § 9-102(54).

(n132)Footnote 187. See U.C.C. § 9-334(e).

(n133)Footnote 188. See U.C.C. § 9-311(a)(2).

(n134)Footnote 189. See U.C.C. § 9-334(h).

(n135)Footnote 190. See U.C.C. § 9-334(d). Of course, the debtor will have to have an interest in the real property for the fixture filing to work. See id. (debtor must have interest of record or be in possession of the real property).

(n136)Footnote 191. See U.C.C. § 9-334(e).

(n137)Footnote 192. See U.C.C. § 9-334, Official Comment 9.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 46.03

AUTHOR: Professor Ronald W. Polston Professor Emeritus School of Law Indiana University, Indianapolis

§ 46.03 Bibliography.

Articles

Berkley, E. Carolan. "Equipment Financing." PLI/Comm Vol. 739 (April, 1996) 161, 241 (protecting priority between a fixture lender and a real estate mortgagee).

Costan, Charlotte. "Article 9 and Fixtures: A Real Fix with No Perfect Solution." Loy. L.A. L. Rev. Vol. 17 (Fall 1984) 977.

Garfinkel, Marvin. "How Objects Become Fixtures." Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 1 (January 1985) 19.

Klimkiewica, Kelly D. "In Re Sheetz, Inc.: The Commonwealth Court Holds That Canopy Structures Covering Gasoline Pumps Are Fixtures To Real Estate And Are Thus Subject To Real Property Taxation." Widener J. Pub. L. Vol. 5 (1996) 917.

Long, Jason C., "Eminent Domain Fixture Qualification Property is a Fixture in Condemnation if it Satisfies the Three Step Analysis, and the Condemnee May Elect to Receive the Value-in-Place or the Detach/Reattachment Costs for the Fixtures." Wayne County v. William G., 503 N.W.2d 674 (Mich. 1997) . U. Det. Mercy L. Rev. Vol. 75 (Summer 1998) 717.

Scarberry, Mark S. "Fixtures in Bankruptcy." Cap. U. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (Spring 1987) 403.

Scarberry, Mark S. "How Not to Amend a Uniform Act: California's Misleading U.C.C. Article 9 Fixture Provisions." Loy. L.A. L. Rev. Vol. 23 (April 1990) 681.

Searles, Sidney Z. "The Role of Fixtures in Enhancing Values in Eminent Domain Proceedings." N.Y. ST. B.A. J. Vol. 66 (January 1994) 14.

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The Law of Fixtures: Common Law and the UCC." Com. L.J. Vol. 89 (November 1984) 501 (Part I); Vol. 89 (December 1984) 569 (Part II); Vol. 90 (January 1985) 18 (Part III); Vol. 90 (February 1985) 62 (Part IV).

Squillante, Alphonse M. "Common Law of Fixtures." Hofstra L. Rev. Vol. 15 (Winter 1987) 191.

Squillante, Alphonse M. "The UCC and Fixtures." Hofstra L. Rev. Vol. 15 (Spring 1987) 535.

Starnes, Dorothy Leach. "Fixtures: Tennessee's New Law on Resolution of Conflicts Between Article Nine Security Interests and Owners and Encumbrancers of Realty." Mem. ST. U. L. Rev. Vol. 16 (Fall 1985) 115.

Tanner, Gordon W. & Mansfield, Eugene D. "Recent Uniform Commercial Code Cases Affecting Agricultural Lenders and Borrowers," 73 Neb L. Rev. (1994) 238.

Annotations

Annotation, Agreement with owner that annexation to land shall not become fixture as affecting rights of subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of land, 58 A.L.R. 1352

Annotation, Bowling alleys as fixtures, 123 A.L.R. 690

Annotation, Amusement Apparatus or Device as Fixture, 41 A.L.R.2 D 664.

Annotation, Appliances, Accessories, Pipes, or Other Articles Connected with Plumbing as Fixtures, 52 A.L.R.2 D 222.

Annotation, Air Conditioning Appliance, Equipment, or Apparatus as Fixture, 69 A.L.R.4 TH 359.

Annotation, Air-conditioning Plant, Equipment, Apparatus, or the Like as Fixture, 43 A.L.R.2 D 1378.

Annotation, Carpets, Linoleum, or the Like as Fixtures, 55 A.L.R.2 D 1044.

Annotation, Carpets, linoleum, or the like as fixture, 55 A.L.R.2d 1044

Annotation, Compensation in eminent domain in respect of fixtures or chattels used in connection with real property taken or damaged, 90 A.L.R. 1495

Annotation, Cotton gin as fixture, 70 A.L.R. 1128

Annotation, Damages for wrongful removal or destruction of fixtures, 69 A.L.R. 914

Annotation, Electric fan as fixture, 62 A.L.R. 251

Annotation, Electronic Computing Equipment as Fixture, 6 A.L.R.3 D 497.

Annotation, Electric Range as Fixture, 57 A.L.R.2 D 1103.

Annotation, Eminent Domain: Valuation of Land and Improvements and Fixtures Thereon Separately or as Unit, 1 A.L.R.2 D 878.

Annotation, Estoppel to Assert that Article Annexed to Realty Is or Is Not a Fixture, 60 A.L.R.2 D 1209.

Annotation, Flagpole or other ornament in garden, yard, or park as fixture, 50 A.L.R. 640

Annotation, Garage as fixture, 36 A.L.R. 1519

Annotation, Heating plant as a fixture, or as a part of or attached to realty, 126 A.L.R. 599

Annotation, Installation of fixtures as part performance which will take parol lease out of statute of frauds, 10 A.L.R. 1495

Annotation, Labor in Examination, Repair, or Servicing of Fixtures, Machinery, or Attachments in Building, as Supporting a Mechanics' Lien, or as Extending Time for Filing Such a Lien, 51 A.L.R.3 D 1087.

Annotation, Liability of Owner or Operator of Store or Similar Place of Business for Injury to Child Climbing or Playing on Furniture, Fixtures, Displays, or the Like, 50 A.L.R.3 D 1227.

Annotation, Measure of Damages Where Vendor, After Execution Of Contract Of Sale But Before Conveyance Of Property, Removes Part Of Property Contracted For, 97 A.L.R.3 D 1220.

Annotation, Parol Exception of Fixtures from Conveyance or Lease, 29 A.L.R.3 D 1441.

Annotation, Pavement, flooring, platform, walks, and the like as fixtures, 13 A.L.R. 1454

Annotation, Pipe organ as fixture, 62 A.L.R. 368

Annotation, Refrigerator or refrigerating plant as fixture, 169 A.L.R. 478

Annotation, Right to Mechanic's Lien Upon Leasehold for Supplying Labor or Material in Attaching or Installing Fixtures, 42 A.L.R.2 d 664.

Annotation, Right to remove fixtures or improvements placed upon property by one holding under lease as affected by renewal or new lease made to him or his successor without reservation of the right to remove, 110 A.L.R. 480

Annotation, Sprinkler System as Fixture, 19 A.L.R.2 D 1300.

Annotation, Spur or switch track as fixture, 21 A.L.R. 1089

Annotation, Storage tank or other apparatus of gasoline station as fixture, 99 A.L.R. 69

Annotation, Time Within Which Tenant's Right to Remove Trade Fixtures Must Be Exercised, 109 A.L.R.5 th 421.

Annotation, Vaults, Vault doors, safes, or other repositories for valuables, or alarm system in connection therewith, as fixtures, 133 A.L.R. 427

Annotation, What are "fixtures" within provision of property insurance policy expressly extending coverage to fixtures, 17 A.L.R.3d 497

Annotation, What Constitutes Improvements, Alterations, or Additions Within Provisions of Lease Permitting or

Prohibiting Tenant's Removal Thereof at Termination of Lease, 30 A.L.R.3 d 998

Annotation, What Constitutes Trade Fixtures -- Modern Cases. 107 A.L.R.5 th 311.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Scope

Scope

Synopsis Add:

§ 46.03 Bibliography.

189 of 189 DOCUMENTS

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 46 FIXTURES

5-46 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 46.02

Supp. to § Current Law.

Add:
[Go To Main]

