§ 92.04(a) General Operation.

American recording systems are administered mainly at the county level of government; thus, records are maintained on a county-by-county basis. n34 By contrast, in some foreign countries records are maintained by districts separate from political subdivisions, such as counties or municipalities. It has been estimated that approximately 3,600 counties or other local jurisdictions in the United States maintain title records. n35

The American recording systems operate through private initiative. n36 The administrators of American recording systems are essentially data custodians. The data are contained in copies of recorded real estate transaction documents which indicate the creation or transfer of interests or claims. The administrators have very little control over input of data into their systems. The government makes no affirmations about the legal effect or even accuracy of the data. The evaluation of land title data in governmental custody is left entirely to interested private parties. Consequently, recording systems are relatively easy for governments to administer and they demand less government resources than title registration systems. Title registration systems, however, are easier for title examiners to use.

Initiation of recordation also is largely left to the discretion of private parties. Generally, an interest claimant is not required by law to record and, with some localized exceptions, recordation is not a prerequisite to validity of a transfer between the immediate parties. The incentive to record is that ownership or priority may be lost if a real estate claim created or evidenced by a written instrument is not recorded.

Publicly maintained land title record systems are intended to facilitate transfer of real estate interests by enabling purchasers to acquire interests promptly, inexpensively, and with assurance that title to the interests is as indicated by the records. Recording acts facilitate transfer by voiding or subordinating certain prior unrecorded claims evidenced by written instruments in favor of subsequent transferees entitled to the protection of the applicable recording act. The New York recording act provides a specific illustration:

> A conveyance of real property ... may be recorded... . Every such conveyance not so recorded is void as against any person who subsequently purchases ... in good faith and for a valuable consideration, from the same [transferor,] ... and whose conveyance ... is first duly recorded... ." n37

Modern American recording law was influenced by the equitable doctrine of bona fide purchase. n38 The law mainly protects purchasers for a valuable consideration and certain other persons who may have changed their positions in reliance on title actually being as indicated by the record. Almost universally, donees are not protected. Other transferees, such as judgment creditors, may or may not be protected, depending on the wording and interpretation of the applicable statute. In addition to payment of value, with few exceptions, the recording acts require a party to be in good faith or without notice to attain protection. Good faith generally means that the party must be without knowledge or notice of the prior unrecorded claim or interest. n39 Actual knowledge will disqualify a person from protection. Additionally, in some situations a party will not attain protection because the law will impute knowledge or notice to that party. Such imputed knowledge is referred to as constructive or inquiry notice. About half of the recording acts in the United States additionally require that in order to be protected the subsequent transferee must record before the instrument evidencing the prior claim or interest is recorded. Recording a deed six days after disbursing sale proceeds to the seller is considered negligent, and buyers can be damaged by a cloud on their title caused by a judgment entered against the seller before the recording. n40

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: good faith purchase* w/30 deed or value bona fide purchase* w/30 deed or value

NOTE:
Many cases relevant to this section pre-date the earliest cases in the database.

§ 92.04(b) Physical Components.

Generally, recording functions are not regulated by federal, state, or regional agencies. The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act (USOLTA) proposes the creation of a "State Recording Officer." n41 This official would be authorized to regulate local recording offices and to approve consolidations of local offices to lower costs. Neither the USOLTA nor this specific proposal has been adopted in any jurisdiction. However, consolidation of local recording offices has been initiated in some states. n42

Title records are usually found in a number of different places, not in a single office. There has been a trend over many years to consolidate all records in a single office headed by an official who is elected (or, in places, appointed) and designated the "Recorder of Deeds," "Register of Deeds," or by some similar title. n43 Although the trend has been to consolidate local records in a single office, it is still usually necessary to visit at least a few other offices to gather all relevant title data. These offices may include places where records of real property taxes or assessments, judgment dockets or probate records are kept.

A recorder's office records and copies instruments presented for recordation. The originals are normally returned to the person who initiated recordation, or to such person's designee. The copies are stored and indexed in the recorder's office. These records are public and accessible to anyone, usually free of charge. Generally, the recorder's office plays a very small or no formal role in the retrieval of recorded documents. Interested parties must retrieve recorded instruments using the available indexes.

When an instrument is presented for recordation, it is reviewed for form. If it appears to satisfy the few formal requirements for recordability, it will be accepted for recordation upon payment of a recordation fee. Upon acceptance, the document will be:

(1) date and time stamped;

(2) assigned a document number; and

(3) noted in a document log.

A copy may be immediately made so that the original can be returned at once. Usually, however, the original will be retained for a short time for copying and other processing. The copies are photographic and may be full sized or in microform. Where the copies are full sized, they are usually stored in bound volumes. The instruments that are placed in bound volumes can be located by volume and page numbers. Equivalent location identifiers are used when storage is in microform. While electronic storage is not widely used today, it will most likely become prevalent in the future.

Indexing is a highly important function of a recorder's office. Because of the often large number of recorded instruments, an index is necessary to enable retrieval of documents containing information relevant to the titles of particular interests. While computer-based indexing will eventually become dominant, most indexes in current use are manual. Deeds and mortgages are usually indexed by either names or parcels. Indexes based on names are called grantor-grantee indexes; indexes based on parcels are called tract indexes. Filed judgment liens are normally indexed alphabetically by the debtors' names in a separate index. There may be other separate indexes for different kinds of instruments.

Grantor-grantee indexes are widely used. They are relatively undemanding of government resources to administer, but they are more difficult for title searchers to use. Documents are indexed in chronological order in grantor-grantee indexes according to the initial letter or letters of the grantors' or grantees' surnames. n44

The grantee index is used to reach back into time to establish the chain of ownership. The search is begun with the name of the current owner, as a grantee. The index is used to ascertain the identity of the apparent present owner's transferor. Once the transferor is ascertained, the grantee index is then examined to discover that person's transferor and so on until the chain of ownership is determined. Once the chain has been established, the grantor index is examined for recorded adverse conveyances or encumbrances indexed under each owner's name as grantor.

Tract indexes are much less common than grantor-grantee indexes. n45 Nationally, they are used in less than one-third of all recorders' offices. n46 Tract indexes are authorized or required by statute in only 10 states. Usually, such indexes are "unofficial" and are maintained in addition to the "official" grantor-grantee index. Although tract indexes are much easier for title searchers to use, they are more costly and difficult for recorders to administer and maintain.

In tract indexes, instruments are indexed according to the specific property affected by them. There may be a segment of the index that includes a number of different parcels. For example, there might be a segment for indexing all instruments involving lots in a particular platted subdivision or in a block of such a subdivision. Instruments affecting a parcel within the group (e.g., the subdivision) may be indexed in the segment for that group with an entry indicating the particular parcel involved. A tract index may be parcel specific. There may be a segment of the index exclusively for indexing instruments affecting a single parcel. Tract indexes may be supported by maps marked to indicate the parts of the index that include instruments affecting land located in specific areas. The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act requires recorders to maintain tract indexes supported by maps that are sufficient to enable title searchers to determine the portion of the index that should be consulted. n47 Computer-based systems may also use specific land parcel identifiers (usually numbers) assigned to individual parcels to organize and retrieve recorded documents affecting particular parcels. n48

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: uniform simplification of land transfers act usolta

§ 92.04(c) Formal Requirements.

The administrators of American recording systems have very little authority to reject instruments presented for recordation. n49 There are some formal requirements which may be enforced by the administrator. A certificate of acknowledgment or attestation is universally required to qualify an instrument for recordation. n50 While other formal requirements created by statute or local rules may be in force, American recorders do not have the authority to screen documents for substantive content similar to that given to recorders in Latin America, France, Scotland and Spain. n51 For example, recorders in France and Spain must determine whether the person appearing as the transferor in the document filed for record has the power to transfer or encumber the property. Thus, if the instrument filed for record is a contract of sale, the recorder must reject the petition for recordation whenever the seller does not appear as the owner of record. n52 In contrast, administrators of American recording systems typically pay little or no attention to the substantive contents of the instruments they accept. n53

Generally, recording statutes authorize recordation of any instrument that creates, transfers, or evidences a claim or interest in real estate. n54 Such instruments include deeds, mortgages, mortgage assignments, contracts, powers of attorney, long-term leases, options to purchase, judgments, and various written notices, statements, and affidavits. Statutes differ in the detail in which the types of instruments eligible for recordation are described. For example, the Illinois statute is broad and sweeping: "Deeds, mortgages, powers of attorney, and other instruments relating to or affecting the title to real estate... ." n55 In contrast, the Alaska statute contains a long list of instruments eligible for recordation and then ends with "any other document that creates an interest in real property." n56 The Colorado statute is somewhere in between: "All deeds, powers of attorney, agreements, or other instruments in writing conveying, encumbering, or affecting the title to real property, certificates, and certified copies of orders, judgments, and decrees of courts of record... ." n57 The short-term written lease is the only type of written instrument affecting real estate that is expressly ineligible for recordation in a substantial number of states. n58 Formerly, real estate sales contracts were not entitled to recordation in some jurisdictions, but this is no longer true.

The most common and important formal requirement for recordability is a certificate of acknowledgment or attestation. Less common formal requirements may include sealing, typed or printed names of signers, and names and addresses of preparers of instruments. Other requirements found in some statutes include permanent attachment of riders (to facilitate microfilming), n59 disclosure of the actual consideration paid for transferred property (for tax purposes), transfer tax stamps and permanent identification numbers assigned to the parcels. The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act ("USOLTA") proposes the elimination of the formal requirements of acknowledgment, sealing, and witnessing. n60

No American jurisdiction currently requires conveyances to be on state-prescribed forms to be eligible for recordation. Commentators have argued that use of state-prescribed forms should be required to promote economy and efficiency in recording and title examination. n61 Ontario, Canada, has authorized the use of prescribed forms since 1984 and it is possible that U.S. jurisdictions may in the future. n62

If the recorder accepts an instrument that lacks a required formality, the consequences vary. If a required certificate of acknowledgment or attestation is absent: (1) the recording may be a nullity; or (2) the instrument may give constructive record notice to subsequent purchasers, but may not be admissible in evidence as a self-proved document. In a limited number of jurisdictions, absence of a required certificate of acknowledgment may affect the validity of the instrument between the parties. n63 In the case of most formalities, there usually is no legal consequence if the formality is absent.

In most jurisdictions, instruments are not eligible for recordation unless they are either acknowledged or authenticated in some other way. n64 Acknowledgment is a practice with deep historical roots. In some parts of Germany almost 1,000 years ago, acknowledgment in court was necessary to carry out legal transactions affecting land. n65 Currently, the maker of the instrument or witness to its execution may be required to acknowledge the instrument before a notary public, a judge, or some other state official. A person acknowledging the transaction evidenced by the instrument recites the facts of execution and states that the instrument was voluntarily executed. The notary or other official then certifies that the acknowledgment was made and also usually certifies that the person giving the acknowledgment was known to the official as in fact being that person.

Requiring a certificate of acknowledgment is intended to achieve two goals:

> (1) Facilitation of real estate transfer by making the record more reliable. This goal is attained in two ways. First, the certificate of acknowledgment provides evidence that the document was validly executed. Second, the acknowledged recorded document is admissible into evidence without any additional foundation for its admission being necessary, i.e., the document is self-proving.
>
> (2) Prevention of the recordation of documents that are void because of fraud, forgery, or duress. This goal is achieved through two requirements. First, the person giving the acknowledgment is required to recite that it was freely executed. Second, the officer taking the acknowledgment is required to certify the identity of the person giving the acknowledgment. n66

The USOLTA proposal to eliminate the formal requirements of acknowledgments, seals or witnesses generated some controversy. Members of an American Bar Association Committee that studied the USOLTA argued that an authentication of some kind should still be required, perhaps by an attorney or bank officer. They noted "that even the transfer of a simple corporate stock certificate requires some guaranty of the signature." n67

The USOLTA proposal is sound. The drafters were sound in their contention that requirements for acknowledgments, seals, and witnesses are anachronisms that cause unnecessary trouble and do very little to prevent fraud. Most acknowledgments are taken by notaries public who, except in Louisiana, qualify for their offices by paying a required fee, furnishing a bond, and by not having a serious criminal record. n68 It is ludicrous to refer to such common-law state notaries as "state officials." If such notaries routinely performed as they are supposed to when taking acknowledgments, perhaps there would be at least some reason for retaining the requirement. In actual practice, however, many common-law state notaries notarize any instrument presented to them without regard to the circumstances of its alleged execution or the identity of its maker. n69 Instead of abandoning the present ineffectual authentication procedures, as proposed by USOLTA, one alternative would be to develop effective authentication procedures, perhaps by relying on attorneys or bank officials to perform the basic function. Whether legislators would perceive attorneys or bank officials as potentially more responsible authenticators is, of course, an open question. Increasing the professionalism of notaries is another alternative.

In most jurisdictions, unacknowledged or unwitnessed instruments are effective between the parties. n70 In a few states, unauthenticated instruments will transfer equitable but not legal interests. n71 A Florida statute provides that no estates or interests for a term of more than one year shall be transferred other than by an instrument in writing signed in the presence of subscribing witnesses. n72 When this statute is applicable, an unwitnessed instrument will be ineffective to pass any interest, whether equitable or legal in nature.

When an unauthenticated instrument is accepted by the recorder and physically placed in the records, that instrument usually does not give constructive or record notice of the transaction it evidences. n73 However, a subsequent purchaser searching the public real estate records may discover the unauthenticated instrument and thereby acquire actual notice of the contents. n74 Therefore, a subsequent purchaser who does not comply with the duty to search the public records will not have notice, but the diligent purchaser who performs the duty will have actual notice. Although this result is anomalous, it represents the prevailing view in the United States. n75 In a few states, instruments not qualified for recordation but physically recorded will not give actual notice, even if they are found by subsequent purchasers. n76 While this view may be soundly based in policy, it is not adequately supported by logic. One has notice of what one knows.

In some states, unauthenticated instruments accepted for recordation will give constructive record notice. For example, an Illinois statute provides that recorded instruments shall give constructive notice from the time of recordation, "though not acknowledged or proven according to law... ." n77 This kind of statute is generally referred to as a "curative act" because it cures defects caused by a failure to comply with legal requirements. Curative acts concerned with defective acknowledgments are in effect in almost every state. Frequently, they cover defects due to formalities of execution and recording, in addition to acknowledgment. n78 In some states, the instrument must be on the record for a period of time before the statute applies to cure the defect. For example, a Colorado statute provides that an unacknowledged or defectively acknowledged instrument must be on the record for ten years before it will give constructive record notice. n79 The reason for the ten-year requirement is unclear. Perhaps the idea is that an unauthenticated recorded instrument may qualify for authenticated status through seniority, or it may be some indication that the instrument is authentic if the authenticity of the instrument has been not successfully challenged during the ten-year period.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: certificate* of acknowledgment w/30 record! w/10 deed certificate* of attestation w/30 record! w/10 deed

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 34. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 12 (1980). In a few places, cities, towns and townships administer recording systems. Id.

(n2)Footnote 35. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 12 (1980). Farro v. Tax Claim Bureau of Monroe County, 704 A.2d 1137 (Pa. Cmmw. Ct. 1997) (fifth class county not required to maintain a property ownership registry because of size).

(n3)Footnote 36. See Paul E. Goldstein, Real Estate Transactions: Cases and Material on Land Transfer, Development and Finance (2d ed. rev. 1985).

(n4)Footnote 37. N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 291.

(n5)Footnote 38. See, e.g., Barrett v. Littles, 607 N.Y.S.2d 134 (N.Y. App. Div. 1994), where the court held that the purported owner of a parcel of land could not invoke the protection of the recording act because he failed to establish as a matter of law that he was a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration; Sun Valley Land & Minerals, Inc. v. Burt, 853 P.2d 607 (Idaho 1993), where the court recognized a mortgagee as a bona fide purchaser, because it found the existence of valuable consideration, good faith, and lack of notice.

(n6)Footnote 39. In re Carpio, 213 B.R. 744 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 1997) (good faith purchase for value is valid despite bankruptcy proceeding in progress at time of foreclosure sale); In re D'Alfonso, 211 B.R. 508 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1997); In re McDonald, 210 B.R. 648 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 1997).

(n7)Footnote 40. Meerhoff v. Huntington Mortgage Co., 658 N.E.2d 1109 (Ohio App. 1995).

(n8)Footnote 41. §§ 6-302, 6-302. Ethan Glass, Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal for Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law by Federal Action, 27 Ohio N.U.L. Rev. 69 (2000).

(n9)Footnote 42. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 6-302, cmt. 4, 14 U.L.A. 371 (1990).

(n10)Footnote 43. Bureau of Conveyances:
Haw. Rev. Stat. § 502-83.

City or Town Clerk:
R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-11-1.3.
Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 402.

Clerk of the Circuit Court:

Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 3-301.
Va. Code Ann. § 55-96.

County Recorder:
Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-411.
Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.34.
Utah Code Ann. § 17-16-2.

Office of the Clerk/County Clerk:
Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-108.
Ga. Code Ann. § 44-2-1.
Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 382.120.
Miss. Code Ann. § 89-5-5.
Mont. Code Ann. § 70-21-302.
N.M. Stat. Ann. § 14-8-1.
N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 29.
Or. Rev. Stat. § 93.620.
Tex. Prop Code Ann. § 11.004.
W. Va. Code § 39-2-1.
Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-121.
Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-11.
Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 402.

Office of Recorder:
Ark. Code Ann. § 14-15-404.
Iowa Code Ann. § 558.41.
Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.38.
N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-1.
Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.25.
Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 351.
Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 65.08.070.

Office of Judge of Probate:
Ala. Code § 35-4-50.

Parish Recorder:
La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 9:2721.

Register:
Tenn. Code. Ann. § 66-24-101.

Register of Deeds:
Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2221.
Me. Rev. Stat Ann. tit. 33, § 201.
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.29.
Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 193, § 4.
Neb. Rev. Stat. § 76-237.
N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:3-a.
N.C. Gen. Stat. § 47-17.1.
N.D. Cent. Code § 47-19-08.

Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 16, § 15.
S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 43-28-1.
Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.05.
S.C. Code Ann. § 30-7-10.
Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-121.

Recorder:
Alaska Stat. § 40.17.070.
Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 151.
Idaho Code § 55-812.
Ind. Code Ann. § 32-1-2-16.
Nev. Rev. Stat. § 111.320.

Recorder of Deeds:
D.C. Code Ann. § 45-801.

Town Recorder:
Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-11.

(n11)Footnote 44. For a detailed account of the administration of a grantor-grantee index in one jurisdiction, see Richard B. Johnson, Title Examination in Massachusetts, in Cases and Text on Property 869-75 (A. James Casner & W. Barton Leach eds., 3d ed. 1984).

(n12)Footnote 45. U.S. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 12 (1980).

(n13)Footnote 46. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law 797 (2d ed. 1985).

(n14)Footnote 47. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act §§ 6-206, 6-207, 14 U.L.A. 367, 368 (1990). Diversified, Inc. v. Hall, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 6873.

(n15)Footnote 48. American Bar Foundation, Land Parcel Identifiers for Information Systems (1973); Paul E. Basye, A Uniform Land Parcel Identifier /- Its Potential for All Our Land Records, 22 Am. U. L. Rev. 251 (1973).

(n16)Footnote 49. Kenneth G. Lore, Comment, A Facelift for the Recorder of Deeds: Tendering a Calumet to Real Estate Reformers, 22 Am. U. L. Rev. 639, 640 (1973). S & H Petroleum Corp., Inc. v. Register of Deeds for County of Bristol, 707 N.E.2d 843 (Mass. App. 1999) (county registry of deeds has ministerial function to record documents; county register of deeds does not owe a duty to advise members of the public regarding the applicable law, referring to M.G.L.A. c. 36, § 1 et seq.).

(n17)Footnote 50. Robert Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 571 (1981).

(n18)Footnote 51. Alejandro M. Garro, the Louisiana Public Records Doctrine and the Civil Law Tradition 188 (1989); Ted J. Fiflis, Security and Economy In Land Transactions: Some Suggestions From Scotland and England, 20 Hastings L. J. 171, 189 (1968); Alejandro M. Garro, Recording of Real Estate Transactions in Latin America: A Comparison with the Recording System in the United States, 1984 Ariz. J. OF and Comp. L. 90, 110-11.

(n19)Footnote 52. Alejandro M. Garro, the Louisiana Public Records Doctrine and the Civil Law Tradition 113 (1989).

(n20)Footnote 53. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 307 (3d ed. 1989).

However, a property description in a mortgage that states only what town and county the property was located in was "grossly inadequate" under state law. In re Poteat, 176 B.R. 734 (Bankr. D. Del. 1995).

(n21)Footnote 54. WorldCom Network Services, Inc. v. Thompson, 698 N.E.2d 1233 (Ind. App. 1998) (general recording statute refers to conveyances but not to public highway right-of-way established by law, referring to West's A.I.C. 32-1-2-16 and IC 8020-1-1 et seq (1988 Ed.)); Bolen v. Ferry Trust, 949 P.2d 82 (Colo. App. 1997) (purpose is to give notice of ownership and provide accessible history of title); Feinzig v. Ficksman, 674 N.E. 2d 1329 (purpose is to provide method for making titles to land certain, indefeasible, and readily ascertainable, referring to M.G.L.A. c. 185, § 1 et seq); Estate of Bowgren v. C.I.R., 105 F.3d 1156 (7th Cir. 1998) (land trust permitting greater secrecy in ownership is not required to be matter of public record).

(n22)Footnote 55. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/28.

(n23)Footnote 56. Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080. The Alaska statute (40.17.080) now contains no list of instruments eligible for recordation, but instead, Alaska Stat. 40.17.035 clearly states that the recorder may not consider whether the contents of documents submitted for recordation are legally sufficient to create an interest in the property.

(n24)Footnote 57. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-109(1).

(n25)Footnote 58. Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080(b) (lease for less than one year not required to be recorded); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-411.01 (all leases); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-19 (leases for one year or less); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 695.01 (leases for less than one year); Haw. Rev. Stat. § 502-83 (leases for one year or less); Idaho Code § 55-812 (leases for less than one year); Ind. Code Ann. 32-1-2-11 (leases for three years or less); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 382.080 (leases for five years or less); Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. Tit. 33, § 201 (leases for two years or less); Mass. Gen. L. Ann. ch. 183, § 4 (leases for seven years or less); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.35 (leases for three years or less); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.01 (leases for three years or less); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:16-1(a) (leases for life or less than two years); N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 290(3) (leases for less than three years); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 47-18(a)(iv) (leases for three years or less); Okla. Stat. Ann. Tit. 16, § 15 (leases for less than one year); R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-11-1 (leases for one year or less); S.C. Code Ann. § 30-7-10 (leases for one year or less); S.D. Codified Laws Ann., § 43-28-17 (leases for one year or less); Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-7-101 (leases for three years or less); VT. Stat. Ann., Tit. 27, § 342 (leases for one year or less); W. VA. Code § 40-1-8 (leases for five years or less); Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 65.08.060(3) (leases for two years or less); Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-102 (leases for three years or less).

(n26)Footnote 59. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/35c.

(n27)Footnote 60. Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 2-301. Ethan Glass, Old Statutes Never Die ... Nor Do They Fade Away: A Proposal for Modernizing Mechanics' Lien Law by Federal Action, 27 Ohio N.U.L. Rev. 69 (2000).

(n28)Footnote 61. Dale A. Whitman, Optimizing Land Title Assurance Systems, 42 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 40 (1973).

(n29)Footnote 62. Registration Division, Ministry of Consumer & Commercial Relations, Ontario Document User Guide, Land Registration Reform Act, 1984 (1986).

(n30)Footnote 63. Robert D. Brussack,Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 567 (1981).

(n31)Footnote 64. Lewis M. Simes, A Handbook for More Efficient Conveyancing 27 (1961).

(n32)Footnote 65. Rudolf Huebner, A History of Germanic Private Law 219 (Francis S. Philbrick trans., 1918).

(n33)Footnote 66. In re Franklin, 214 B.R. 826, 833 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1997) ("in deciding when [the] deed was admitted to record ... [the] court is not bound by clerk's certificate as to the date and time of recordation but may examine parol evidence to determine when recordation actually occurred").

(n34)Footnote 67. James M. Pedowitz, Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act--A Commentary, 13 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. J. 696, 701 (1978).

(n35)Footnote 68. North Carolina is the only common-law state that requires applicants for notary commissions to satisfy an educational requirement; they must graduate from a community college course. Carol Kleinman, Notaries Give Work Stamp of Approval, Chi. Trib., April 19, 1992, § 8, at 1.

(n36)Footnote 69. See Hoffman v. Schroeder, 186 N.E.2d 381 (Ill. App. 1962) (describing how a modern common-law state notary typically performs her duties as a "public official").

(n37)Footnote 70. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L.J. 561, 567 (1981).

(n38)Footnote 71. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L.J. 561, 568 (1981).

(n39)Footnote 72. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.01.

(n40)Footnote 73. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 573 (1981).

(n41)Footnote 74. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 574 (1981).

(n42)Footnote 75. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 574 (1981).

(n43)Footnote 76. Robert D. Brussack, Reform of American Conveyancing Formality, 32 Hastings L. J. 561, 576-78 (1981).

(n44)Footnote 77. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/31.

(n45)Footnote 78. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 26 (1960).

(n46)Footnote 79. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-106.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.05

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.05 Recording System Indexes.

[Go To Supp]

§ 92.05(a) Grantor-Grantee and Tract.

The public land title records in populous urban counties already contain vast amounts of information, and additional information is pouring in daily. In 1978, the Cook County, Illinois (i.e., the Chicago area, with a population of 4,774,850 at that time) recorder's office processed 246,983 documents. n80 Even in rural counties, the amount of data stored annually may be substantial. For example, in 1978, the recorder's office in largely rural Jefferson County, Wisconsin (with a population of 60,000 at that time) processed 10,518 documents. n81 Necessarily, access to this data is through indexes. n82 The task of searching in these records for title data concerning specific property would be virtually impossible without adequate indexes. The two types of indexes in general use in the United States are name (grantor-grantee) and parcel (tract) indexes.

§ 92.05(a)(1) Grantor-Grantee Indexes.

Indexes that are based on names are called grantor-grantee indexes. In grantor indexes, instruments are indexed according to the initial letter or letters of transferors' surnames. In grantee indexes, instruments are indexed according to the initial letter or letters of transferees' surnames. Usually, no attempt is made to keep the entries in strict alphabetical order. However, in some places, pressure-sensitive strip indexes are arranged alphabetically on a daily basis or annual computer-generated indexes in strict alphabetical order are produced. n83 Both grantor and grantee indexes will usually give the names of the parties, the date of recordation, the date of the instrument, the kind of instrument and the place in the records where a copy of the instrument may be found, usually by book and page numbers. There may be separate indexes for different kinds of instruments, such as judgment liens. n84

The grantor-grantee type of index is by far the more prevalent type of publicly maintained index. It is the type of index that the recorder is required by statute to maintain (as the "official" index) in all but a very few states. n85 It is the only type of index available in about two-thirds of recorders' offices nationwide. n86 The prevalence of the public grantor-grantee index is not due to its recognized superiority; it is generally appreciated that this type of index is not user-friendly. From the user's perspective, tract or parcel indexes are clearly superior. Proof of this superiority is found in the fact that all privately maintained sets of land title records ("title plants") use tract or parcel deed and mortgage indexes. The popularity of the official grantor-grantee index is due to the relatively low cost and ease of administration involved with this type of index, compared with that of tract or parcel indexes. Government employees indexing instruments are only required to be able to recognize the initial letter of letters of grantor and grantee surnames. Also, grantor-grantee indexes do not require maps because indexing is by name instead of parcel. Indexing in a tract index is more difficult, as it requires some degree of knowledge and skill on the part of the government employees indexing the documents, because they have to identify the specific property affected and the part of the index where the entry should be made. Maps are very useful because they show the segments of the index where entries affecting specific parcels are located.

§ 92.05(a)(2) Tract Indexes.

In tract indexes, a page, sets of pages or a book is devoted to a segment of land, such as an individual parcel, particular blocks in a subdivision, an entire subdivision, or a segment of land (such as a quarter-quarter section under the U.S. Government Rectangular Survey System). Maps may be maintained that will show the areas covered by different segments of the index. Instruments are indexed according to the property affected by them. Index references may include the names of the parties, the date of recordation, the date of the instrument, the kind of instrument and the book and page where a copy of the instrument is stored. Unless the tract index is parcel-specific, the index reference will also contain information in order to enable the searcher to determine the specific parcel affected by the instrument. A few places use combined tract and grantor-grantee indexes; the county is divided into segments such as blocks in the tract index, and instruments affecting land located within a particular block or other segment are indexed in a grantor-grantee index for that block or other segment. n87

Searching a title using a tract index is very easy. The searcher simply locates the segment of the index that includes the property to be searched. The searcher then goes back in time, noting the book and page references to instruments that may affect the subject property. Normally, as one goes back into the past, a point will be reached where the index was reorganized, usually due to subdivisions that created additional titles. The index will contain a reference to the prior segment of the index where entries concerning the subject property were made prior to the reorganization.

The superiority of tract indexes has been appreciated for many years. The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act quite sensibly would require official tract ("geographic") indexes. n88 Nonetheless, official tract indexes are found in only a few states and there appears to be no movement toward replacement of grantor-grantee indexes with tract or parcel indexes, despite the long-standing consensus that such replacement would make the public land title records substantially more user friendly. These should be sobering facts to land-law reformers inclined to propose more ambitious schemes, such as replacement of recording with Torrens or some other form of title registration. n89 Many county governments simply do not want the additional fiscal and administrative burdens involved with tract indexes. n90 Tract indexes require that recording office employees be able to identify the subject property usually from the legal description, with or without the aid of accurate maps.

§ 92.05(a)(3) Using the Grantor-Grantee Index.

Searching a title using grantor-grantee indexes can be an arduous and sometimes nearly impossible task in some places. In Cook County, Illinois, the recorder keeps an official grantor-grantee index and an unofficial tract index, but it is time-consuming to complete a search using the official index. n91 A reason for this is that the entries are not in strict alphabetical order. The physical difficulty of searching title may also be compounded by the sheer number of index books that might have to be consulted or re-consulted. In some places, separate books were kept for each class of recordable instruments. In Cook County, Illinois, separate books for each calendar-year quarter were kept. n92 Usable grantor-grantee indexes do in fact exist. In Massachusetts, for example, grantor-grantee indexes are reorganized in strict alphabetical order on an annual basis. n93 Full computerization of grantor-grantee indexes would make constant alphabetization possible.

In the grantee index, conveyances are indexed alphabetically and then chronologically, according to the initial letter or letters of the grantees' surnames. The grantee index exists to enable the searcher to reach back into the past in order to establish the chain of ownership. The searcher starts in the present with the name of an apparent present owner. The grantee index is then used to ascertain the name of the person who transferred the property to the apparent present owner. Once that person has been identified, the grantee index is used to discover that person's transferor. The process is repeated for each owner in turn until the chain of title has been established. The record has to then be examined for adverse conveyances made by or against each owner during the time when that person was a record or actual owner. This means that the grantor index has to be examined as well, because that is where references to conveyances indexed by each owner's name are found.

It would be more descriptive to call the grantor index an index of owners. Each owner in the chain should be searched in the appropriate segment of the grantor index. Like the grantee index, the grantor index lists conveyances alphabetically and chronologically, according to the initial letter or letters of the grantors' surnames. If the number of entries in each appropriate segment are few in number, it would not be unreasonable to expect the searcher to examine them all, beginning with the oldest entry down to the most recent one. In practice, however, requiring this would be unreasonable because of the large number of entries that would have to be examined for each owner in the chain of title.

§ 92.05(a)(4) Chain of Title Doctrine.

Under the chain of title doctrine, the scope of a reasonable search of each owner in the grantor index is limited by time boundaries. The entries in the grantor index are in chronological order. Each owner should be examined in the grantor index from the date such owner actually acquired the title interest being searched through the date of recordation of the transaction that transferred the interest from the owner. n94 Transactions indexed before or after these time boundaries may be considered to be recorded outside of the chain of title. Under strict chain of title doctrine, recordation outside of the chain of title is equivalent to not being recorded at all. As a result, a searcher is not charged with notice of any documents outside the chain of title.

§ 92.05(a)(5) Examination of Recorded Documents.

Whether the searcher has used a grantor-grantee or tract index, the next step is to examine the copies of the recorded instruments using the page and volume references found in the indexes. The copies originally were written by clerks into books by hand. Handwritten copying was replaced with typing and then photographic means as they became available. Prior to photographic copying, recording errors occurred from time to time when clerks miscopied instruments. The risk of loss due to such errors was borne by the party initiating recordation whose recourse, if any, was against the recorder on his or her bond. The advent of photocopying has virtually eliminated this kind of error. Storage today, especially in populous counties with large amounts of data to manage, is frequently in microform with microfilming being fairly common. As technology develops, it is likely that electronic storage will become prevalent.

§ 92.05(a)(6) Attachment or Judgment Lien Indexes.

Examination of the grantor-grantee or tract index and the copies of the instruments referred to in the index is the central part, but only one part, of the search. Almost all jurisdictions provide for separate attachment or judgment lien indexes. Originally, when a judgment for money was docketed, the judgment attached as a lien against the real estate of the judgment debtor in the county or other geographic jurisdiction for the court that entered the judgment. The judgment would remain viable as a lien or potential lien for a period of time provided by statute, such as seven to ten years. This basic period was sometimes extendable. After the lien was docketed and while it was still viable, it would attach to any real estate acquired by the judgment debtor in the county or other geographic jurisdiction of the court. Once a judgment attached to a title, it remained attached during the period of the judgment's viability, even if the real estate was later transferred. Thus, the property subject to a judgment lien was normally rendered unmarketable, which is exactly what the creators of judgment lien laws intended. They thought that the encumbrance on the debtor's land would pressure the debtor to pay the debt without further court involvement. Further court involvement was possible through a proceeding to execute or foreclose the judgment lien, which would result in a forced public sale of the property to satisfy the debt.

Because judgment liens would bind the land even after it was transferred, it was incumbent on title searchers to examine the judgment dockets of various courts to determine if the title being searched was encumbered by any judgment liens. Before modern court reform, various state trial courts with different functions or jurisdictions had the power to enter judgments or decrees that could attach to real estate. Federal courts could also enter judgments that could attach as liens against the judgment debtors' real estate. As a result, the title searcher had to also examine the judgment dockets in the clerks' offices for these various courts. n95 This became an increasingly difficult task physically as the volume of judgments being entered in particular counties increased. In response to this growing burden, there has been a tendency to consolidate judgment lien records in the recorder's or court clerk's office. Currently, in a number of states, judgment liens will not attach unless an abstract of the judgment has been filed in the recorder's or court clerk's office for the county in which the debtor's land is located. n96 This is now also generally true of federal court judgments because Congress has generally consented to the application of state recording laws to federal judgments. n97

Judgment liens are indexed alphabetically according to the judgment debtors' names. In almost all states, a judgment does not have to be filed specifically against identified real estate that might belong to the debtor to attach as a lien against that real estate. Instead, a general filing by the debtor's name will suffice; specific real estate owned by the debtor does not have to be identified. n98 Because more than one individual may have the identical or nearly identical name, it is normally impossible to ascertain from the record alone whether a judgment debtor and an owner in the chain of title with a similar name are the same person. Title insurance companies may require affidavits from parties stating information that might enable the companies to determine whether a particular judgment debtor and such an owner are the same person. This procedure may be adequate if the affiants are truthful and knowledgeable about the relevant facts.

It would be a significant improvement in the system if judgment creditors were required: (1) to file abstracts of all judgments in the applicable recorder's office; and (2) to identify in the filings each specific property against which the lien is to attach. Torrens title registration acts have required filing of judgment liens against particular titles before the judgments would attach as liens. n99 Nevertheless, the drafters of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act (USOLTA) were convinced by creditors' interests that it would be politically impossible to replace the current system of filing by debtor's name with a system of filing by property affected, even though such replacement would promote economy and efficiency in real estate transfers. n100 Instead, the drafters proposed a compromise. Under this compromise, the viability of a lien as to a subsequent good faith purchaser would be limited to three years from the time of its recording n101 and all general lien indexes would be located in the recorder's office. n102

§ 92.05(a)(7) Other Liens.

The title searcher may have to visit other offices that store information concerning other liens or adverse claims. Liens to secure general real property taxes or special assessments made against specific real estate by units of local government have to be searched and notice of them may not be found in the recorder's office. Instead, notice of these liens may be found in the offices of county or municipal clerks, treasurers or assessors. n103 Regardless of where these lien records are kept, they are organized by parcel and not by the names of owners or debtors. Consequently, they are usually easier to identify and locate than are judgment liens. It would be more efficient to integrate these tax lien records into the recorder's office. Of course, with computerization, these records could be accessed from the recorder's office or elsewhere through remote terminals.

In addition to judgment and tax liens, the searcher may have to search for other liens in the recorder's office or elsewhere. Persons furnishing labor or materials to premises are usually entitled to mechanics' liens (called "construction liens" in the USOLTA) on the properties benefitted to secure payment for the work or materials. n104 To perfect the lien as to subsequent purchasers, the lienor must file timely notice of the lien in the recorder's office. When the lien is filed, its priority will normally relate back to some earlier time. Consequently, purchasers of real estate may take subject to a "hidden mechanic's lien" when they purchase real estate, i.e., a lien that has not yet been filed but that may be filed and relate back to a date prior to the purchase of the property. Typically, the mechanic liens are filed against named owners and the recorder keeps an alphabetical index of these liens by owners' names.

The title searcher also has to look for other liens. One study identified 47 different statutory liens created by state law. n105 For examples, Illinois statutes authorize public aid assistance liens, n106 sales tax liens, n107 liens to secure employer unemployment contributions n108 and mobile home tax liens. n109 There are various liens that may secure the payment of other state or federal taxes. These liens are normally filed in the recorder's office and are indexed either separately or together in a miscellaneous lien index. State law may also provide for financing statement filings in the recorder's office under the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.). n110 When a U.C.C. filing concerns a security interest in fixtures, it should be indexed in the official index in the same way that real estate mortgages are indexed; however, the recorder may fail to do so. Therefore, it may be prudent for the title searcher to examine the U.C.C. financing statement index to ascertain whether there are any fixture filings against the title being searched. Certificates of release, such as for federal tax liens, should sufficiently identify the lien and recording information for the filed and refiled notices of lien. n111

§ 92.05(a)(8) Other Methods of Transfer.

Interests in real estate may also transfer by will or intestate succession. Generally, notice of such transfer need not be recorded in the recorder's office because the transferees are not required to record their interests to perfect their priority with respect to subsequent purchasers. n112 Where a decedent's estate has been formally administrated, records of the administration will be maintained in the office of the probate court clerk or elsewhere. Currently, in most places, title searchers also have to examine these records as part of a complete search.

The indexes in probate record offices are alphabetical according to the names of the decedents. Where only the grantor-grantee index is available to the title searcher, it may be difficult to ascertain the name of a decedent who held title to the property being searched. As discussed in § 92.07(c) supra, a searcher reaches back in time by using the grantee index to discover the names of prior owners. Where an interest passes through a decedent's estate, normally no entry is made in the grantee index. As a result, the grantee index will not reveal the name of a prior owner's transferor where the transfer to the owner was through a decedent's estate. The title searcher must use ingenuity and effort to locate the relevant probate records to determine the name of the prior owner's transferor. The searcher may begin by checking the probate index for decedents with surnames identical to the name of the last known prior owner, on the assumption that the transfer may have been from a relative (such as a spouse or parent) with the same surname. If a tract index is available, it is usually not difficult to discover the name of a decedent owner, because the name will usually appear in the tract index. Even in places with available tract indexes, some notice of transfers at death should be in the recorder's records. In areas where the records are computerized, information concerning transfers at death should be readily accessible.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: official index!
tract index!
grantor-grantee index!
torrens

§ 92.05(b) Computers and Land Parcel Identifiers. n113

Commentators appear to agree that there is a world-wide movement toward the computerization of land title record systems. n114 American title insurance companies have been developing computerized title plants since the 1960s. n115 Computerization of a Torrens system was initiated in Australia in 1969. n116 By 1982, computerization of the Austrian title registration system was well underway. n117 American local governments have been implementing unofficial computerized land title record systems since the late 1970s. By 1978, at least eight counties in Illinois had at least partially computerized their title records. n118 In 1984, Ontario, Canada, authorized an official computerized recording and title registration system called "POLARIS." n119 There is reason to believe that computerization of land title records will further accelerate. Appreciation of computer capabilities was limited when computers were only expensive mainframes operated by skilled specialists. The microcomputer revolution that began in the late 1970s contributed to a vastly increased and wider understanding of the great power of computers as data management and retrieval tools, while making them more user-friendly and affordable to individuals and organizations with limited resources. n120 Land title records in the future will be largely computer-based. Electronic storage will eventually replace paper records.

The computerized land title record system that appears to be emerging has two basic components:

(1) a database containing information relevant to questions of ownership and title, consisting primarily of information concerning past title transactions and past legal evaluations of such information; and

(2) computer-based maps showing the units of ownership in the system with a permanent identifying symbol, called a land parcel identifier, assigned to each unit.

Systems using permanent numbers to identify land parcels for real property taxation purposes have been used for many years in various parts of the United States. n121 These systems are really parcel-specific tract indexes. Their suitability for use in computer-based land title data systems is readily apparent. Currently, computerized title plants maintained by some U.S. local governments and title insurance companies use permanent identification numbers as does the POLARIS system in Ontario, Canada. n122 Where the party initiating recordation or registration is required to supply the identifier for the parcel affected, administration of the indexing system is even less burdensome to government than is a grantor-grantee index.

Identifying land titles and parcels by permanent numbers is not as simple as identifying human beings with such numbers. The development of a usable system of permanent land parcel identifiers is difficult, because the dimensions and quantity of parcels may change over time through subdivisions, consolidations, and other accretions and deletions. There are two basic approaches which may be used in combination:

(1) systems based on grid coordinates and

(2) systems not based on grid coordinates.

In the first type of system, a grid is established with lines that intersect at regular intervals. The points of intersection are assigned permanent, unique identifiers. Land parcels are identified by the intersection point or points located within their boundaries. n123 While this type of system does not require renumbering when boundaries change, it has a number of drawbacks. Very accurate maps showing precise location of parcel boundaries are necessary because inaccurate maps may cause an incorrect identifier to be used to refer to a parcel. Additionally, as boundaries change, an identification point may refer to different parcels at different times. Under our system of real estate ownership, the parcel remains a unit even though it may increase or decrease in size with a change of boundaries. Therefore, it would be important to know what the parcel boundaries were at various times when retrieving data through grid coordinate identifiers. Consequently, making a historical search of the title to a particular parcel using grid coordinate identifiers would require a map history search in order to perform an accurate and thorough document search. Another drawback to ordinary grid coordinate identifiers is that they can be used to describe two-dimensional parcels, but not three-dimensional condominium unit ownerships.

Under systems not based on grid coordinates, a permanent number is assigned to each parcel or condominium unit. The number may be purely arbitrary or it may be geo-coded in some way. For example, part of the number may indicate that the property is located within a particular township or section under the U.S. Government Rectangular Survey System, or it may refer to a particular subdivision or block within a subdivision. A point established by general grid coordinates may be referred to by a particular part of an identifier. The main difficulty with numbering systems not based on grid coordinates is that renumbering is required when subdivisions occur and, usually, when there are consolidations. Experience has shown that renumbering due to consolidations and subdivisions can be handled administratively without great difficulty or delay. n124

Maps are still used under this system; however, boundaries do not have to be depicted with exactness if no affirmation of boundaries is made by government. n125 The maps are sufficient if they adequately identify the various numbered parcels so that each can be distinguished from other parcels. Therefore, a costly comprehensive survey is not necessary. Adequate maps can be assembled mainly from existing tax assessment maps or subdivision and condominium plats. n126 Maps for rural areas covered by the U.S. Government Rectangular Survey System can be derived largely from that system and aerial mapping, when necessary. n127

Digitizing the boundaries of individual parcels on computers is a cost-effective way of assembling computer-based maps from existing paper maps. n128

Computerization of recording systems can do much to improve them. Computer searches using land parcel identifiers take seconds rather than hours to complete. n129 Computers and the use of land parcel identifiers to identify parcels may finally put to rest the archaic grantor-grantee indexes.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: parcel identifier*
rectangular survey system

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 80. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 71 (1980).

(n2)Footnote 81. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 71 (1980).

(n3)Footnote 82. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 71 (1980).

(n4)Footnote 83. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 17 (1980).

(n5)Footnote 84. In re Bruder, 207 B.R. 151 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1997) (a recorded instrument is effective against subsequent purchasers and creditors if it operates to give notice to anyone looking through the grantor-grantee index).

(n6)Footnote 85. Note, The Tract and Grantor-Grantee Indices, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 481 (1962).

(n7)Footnote 86. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 17 (1980). John R. Lee, Esq., A Primer on Conducting Oil and Gas Operations in the Northern Rocky Mountain States: A Strange New World?, 38 Alberta L. Rev. 74 (June 2000).

(n8)Footnote 87. See, e.g., Allison Dunham, Land Parcel Identifiers and the Uniform Land Transactions Act, 43 U. Cin. L. Rev. 469, 481-83 (1974).

(n9)Footnote 88. § 6-207, 14 U.L.A. 368 (1990).

(n10)Footnote 89. E.g., Martin Lobel, A Proposal for a Title Registration System for Realty, 11 U. Rich. L. Rev. 501 (1977); Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 661 (1982).

(n11)Footnote 90. In Illinois, the state where the author is admitted and has practiced, the official index is grantor-grantee. A number of counties maintain unofficial tract indexes in addition to the official indexes. The most populous county in Illinois, Cook, has a publicly maintained tract index. Many counties, however, do not. For example, Lake County, the county just north of Cook, has no public tract index. A private company, the Chicago Title Insurance Company, maintains a tract index for Lake County records in its Waukegan, Illinois, office. Lake County is currently implementing a computerized index. Penn Title Ins. Co. v. Deshler, appeal denied, 670 A.2d 145 (Pa. 1995). 661 A.2d 481 (Pa. Commw. 1995) (recorder of deeds has no duty to index a mortgage by location).

(n12)Footnote 91. Cornelius Houtsma, Recording Procedure, Registration Procedure and Title Searching in Cook County 6 (2d ed. 1966).

(n13)Footnote 92. Cornelius Houtsma, Recording Procedure, Registration Procedure and Title Searching in Cook County 6 (2d ed. 1966).

(n14)Footnote 93. Richard B. Johnson, Title Examination in Massachusetts, in Cases and Text on Property 869, 875 (A. Casner & W. Leach eds., 3d ed. 1984).

(n15)Footnote 94. Edward S. Bade, Cases and Material on Real Property Conveyancing 237 (1954). Yamashita v. Guam, 59 F.3d 114 (9th Cir. 1995) (good title not proved where no documentary evidence existed for earliest grantor in the chain of title).

(n16)Footnote 95. See George W. Warevelle, A Practical Treatise on Abstracts and Examinations of Title to Real Property 403-19 (1883) (describing how judgment liens might be attached to real estate and discovered by a title searcher in Illinois in the early 1880s).

(n17)Footnote 96. U.S Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms II-32 (1979). Bianchi v. Lorenz, 701 A.2d 1037, 1042 (Vt. 1997) ("traditional encumbrances, such as mortgages, easements, liens, judgments ...must be recorded in the land records and indexed so that one may readily ascertain their existence or nonexistence").

(n18)Footnote 97. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1962 (this statute does not, however, apply to judgments entered in favor of the United States). Borgman v. Aikens, 681 N.E.2d 213 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997), reh'g denied, transfer denied by, 698 N.E.2d 1182 (Ind. 1998). (purpose of federal lien statute is to ensure that a properly indexed judgment is treated in the same manner as a state court judgment).

(n19)Footnote 98. Hole-In-One, Inc. v. Kansas Land Corp., 913 P.2d 1225. (Kan. App. 1996).

(n20)Footnote 99. See Minn. Stat. Ann. § 508.63.

(n21)Footnote 100. Peter B. Maggs, Land Records of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act, 1981 So. Ill. L.J. 491, 502.

(n22)Footnote 101. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-210, 14 U.L.A. 280 (1990).

(n23)Footnote 102. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 6-208, 14 U.L.A. 368 (1990).

(n24)Footnote 103. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms II-41 (1979).

(n25)Footnote 104. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law 860-82 (2d ed. 1985). Home Lumber Co. v. Kopfmann Homes, Inc., 535 N.W.2d 302 (Minn. 1995) (payments made out of a construction loan but after a mechanics' lien attached retained their priority as of the date the mortgage was recorded).

(n26)Footnote 105. Fairfax Leary, Jr. & David G. Blake, Twentieth Century Real Estate Business and Eighteenth Century Recording, 22 Am. U. L. Rev. 275, 330-331 (1973). First Community Bank of Blanchard v. Hodges, 907 P.2d 1047 (Okla. 1995) (filing a divorce decree in the county where property is located perfects a wife's decree-imposed lien).

(n27)Footnote 106. 305 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/3-10.

(n28)Footnote 107. 35 Ill. Comp. Stat. 120/5a.

(n29)Footnote 108. 820 Ill. Comp. Stat. 405/2401.

(n30)Footnote 109. 35 Ill. Comp. Stat. 515/1.

(n31)Footnote 110. 810 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/9-401(1) & 5/9-403(4).

(n32)Footnote 111. Griswold v. United States, 59 F.3d 1571 (11th Cir. 1995).

(n33)Footnote 112. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms II-40 (1979).

(n34)Footnote 113. Portions of the text in § 92.05(b) have been adapted from John V. Orth, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61 (1992), and used with the permission of The William Mitchell Law Review.

(n35)Footnote 114. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U. L. Rev. 196, 213 (1984).

(n36)Footnote 115. Ted J. Fiflis, Security and Economy in Land Transactions: Some Suggestions From Scotland and England, 20 Hastings L. J. 171, 173 (1968).

(n37)Footnote 116. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U. L. Rev. 196, 213 (1984).

(n38)Footnote 117. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 43 (1983).

(n39)Footnote 118. Michael J. Rooney, Searching Illinois Real Estate Titles § 4.10 (1983).

(n40)Footnote 119. Land Registration Reform Act, R.S.O. ch. 32 (1984).

(n41)Footnote 120. Before the microcomputer revolution greatly increased the public awareness of computer capabilities, some commentators tended to disparage the idea that computer technology could solve many of the serious problems with recording systems as sources of land title assurance. E.g., Martin Lobel, A Proposal for a Title Registration System for Realty, 11 U. Rich. L. Rev. 501, 511 (1977); Dale A. Whitman, Optimizing Land Title Assurance Systems, 42 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 40, 66 (1973).

(n42)Footnote 121. The permanent numbering system used by the Assessor in Cook County, Illinois, was authorized by the Illinois legislature in 1945. 1945 Ill. Laws § 1. See also Richard R. Almay, Assessors' Parcel

Identification Systems, in Land Parcel Identifiers for Information Systems I-277 (D. David Moyer & Kenneth P. Fisher eds., 1973). This book has a wealth of information about land parcel identifiers.

(n43)Footnote 122. Data is retrievable from the Chicago Title Insurance Company computer by street address as well as permanent identification number. Data may be retrieved from POLARIS through names of parties, document numbers, street addresses and permanent identification numbers. Province of Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Introducing POLARIS 5 (Nov. 1989).

(n44)Footnote 123. See D. David Moyer, County Cadastres and Compatible Parcel Identifiers: Needs and Costs, in Land Parcel Identifiers for Information Systems I-65 (D. David Moyer & Kenneth P. Fisher eds. 1973).

(n45)Footnote 124. See Real Property Registration Branch, Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, An Introduction to POLARIS, Appendix B 9, in Canada Bar Association--Ontario, POLARIS Update (June 4, 1990). The Ontario maps are computer-based. An effort is made to update them continuously as subdivisions or consolidations occur. In Cook County, Illinois, the County Clerk is responsible for processing applications to change or issue new permanent identification numbers. Currently, it is taking about two years to process these applications.

(n46)Footnote 125. The government of Ontario does not affirm boundaries depicted by the POLARIS computer-based maps. The maps used in Cook County, Illinois, also give no guarantees of accuracy. They were prepared and maintained by a private company, the Sidwell Company of West Chicago, Illinois.

(n47)Footnote 126. These are the main source for the Ontario POLARIS computer-based maps. John L. McCormack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61, 120 n.243 (1992). Hersh Props., LLC v. McDonald's Corp, 588 N.W.2d 728 (Minn. 1999).

(n48)Footnote 127. For a description of how maps were developed for a rapidly growing county, see John C. Lay, Fairfax County Maps--Their Origin and Cost, in Land Parcel Identifiers for Information Systems I-129 (D. David Moyer & Kenneth P. Fisher eds. 1973). Eric Kades, The Dark Side of Efficiency: Johnson v. M'Intosh and the Expropriation of American Indian Lands, 148 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1065 (Apr. 2000).

(n49)Footnote 128. Digitizing is the process of recording numerical representations of geographical points on a map in a computer. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U. L. Rev. 196, 214 (1974). "Graphic recording, or digitizing, involves the recording of individual land parcels, by manually pointing a device (like an electronic pen) at the lot corners already drawn on the standard maps. The computer then automatically calculates the lot's position on the earth's surface." A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information 215 (1983).

(n50)Footnote 129. In July 1991, the author visited Toronto, Ontario, and observed searches made in POLARIS using land parcel identifiers. The computer searches in POLARIS took less than one minute to complete. The current plan in Ontario is to authorize remote terminals for interested solicitors who will be able to search title or register documents in POLARIS from terminals in their offices. This will eliminate the need for lawyers or clerks to visit Land Registration Branch offices. The computer searches in the Chicago Title Insurance Company Cook County title plant are also rapid and can be made from remote terminals in branch offices of Chicago Title Insurance Company and other companies with access. In Florida, attorneys participating in the Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund have access to title information in the Fund database through terminals in their offices. Taylor Mattis, The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act: Article 2--Conveyancing and Recording, 1981 So. Ill. L.J. 511, 535 n 124.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.06

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.06 Statutes of Limitation, Curative Acts and Marketable Title Acts.

[Go To Supp]

In the American system of ownership, title to real estate is determined by the aggregate legal effect of past transactions involving the subject property. Evidence of these past transactions may or may not be found in the public real estate records. The relevance of a past transaction to the question of the current state of the title can be diminished by the mere passage of time. Additionally, the effect of a past transaction can be nullified or reduced by a statute of limitation or a marketable title act. Generally, these acts may extinguish or diminish old title defects.

Statutes of limitation are not very effective in curing title defects or limiting the length of title searches. In part, this is because statutes of limitation operate by barring a claimant's right to bring a lawsuit to enforce the claim. If the claimant suffers from a legal disability, the running of the statute of limitations may be suspended. Consequently, a cause of action may be viable even though the time period referred to in the statute of limitations has expired. Furthermore, the statute normally will not begin to run against a future interest holder until the interest becomes possessory. Moreover, as statutes of limitation have become a part of our constitutional doctrine of procedural due process, judges and lawyers are limited in their freedom to adapt the statutes to changing circumstances and specific cases. n130

By the second decade of this century, land-law reformers realized that a new form of statute was needed to cleanse title defects and to reduce the burden of title search and examination. In title registration systems such as Torrens, the current governmental statement about the state of the title is intended to provide a "curtain" which will eliminate the relevance of prior transactions and the need for historical searches. n131 Land-law reformers attempted to create similar curtains for recording systems in the form of marketable title acts.

Marketable title acts were at the heart of the reforms of the recording system proposed by the American Bar Association and the University of Michigan Research Project headed by Professor Lewis M. Simes. n132 Marketable title acts operate by extinguishing claims against the title holder of record that were not preserved by recording within the immediately preceding period specified by the act. Unlike statutes of limitation, the running of this period is not suspended by legal disability and the same time period applies to all claims regardless of their type, unless specifically excepted. Marketable title acts clearly promote marketability of titles by eliminating old title defects in favor of holders of record title. However, marketable title acts fail to provide an adequate curtain that would eliminate the need to do lengthy historical searches. Due to various policy considerations and political pressures, certain interests are excepted from extinguishment by marketable title acts. As a result, the title searcher must search back into the past beyond the period of the marketable title act, or accept the risk that an interest not extinguished by the marketable title act might encumber the title.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: adverse possession w/30 title w/15 defect

§ 92.06(a) Statutes of Limitation.

Statutes of limitation limit the time during which an action may be brought to enforce a claim or right. Statutes providing for limited periods in which actions may be brought to assert real estate claims are as ancient as the actions themselves. n133 Early English statutes provided that novel disseisin could not be brought to restore possession if the disseisin complained of took place before particular dates, such as the coronation day of a king or the date of the king's last voyage to Britanny. n134 Modern American statutes typically provide for a period of ten to twenty years after a right of action accrues during which a person, claiming to be a paramount owner, is permitted to bring an action to enforce the claim where the land is in the adverse possession of another. n135 If no action is brought within the statutory period, the right to bring the action is extinguished and the adverse possessor becomes the owner in the eyes of the law.

Adverse possession has served to cleanse numerous titles of defects. Nevertheless, it does not provide a great deal of aid to the title examiner because its existence depends on a number of facts that normally do not appear in the record. To qualify as adverse possession, for the time period specified in the statute of limitations, the possession must be:

(1) hostile or adverse,

(2) actual,

(3) visible, notorious and exclusive,

(4) continuous, and

(5) under claim of ownership. n136

Facts establishing the existence to these requirements normally will not be found in the public real estate records. Even if an adverse possessor records a document such as an affidavit that sets forth a claim to ownership by adverse possession and factual allegations in support of the claim, the title examiner could not safely rely on such a statement because it may later be found to be untrue by a court. A final judgment validating the adverse possession claim in an action such as quiet title would be required by the prudent title examiner. A title insurance company might agree to indemnify an insured on the basis of an affidavit supporting a claim of adverse possession. In such a case, the company would be accepting the risk that the facts stated in the affidavit may be found to be inadequate or untrue.

The utility of statutes of limitation to title examiners is also limited because of the manner in which the statutes operate. The statutes work by limiting the time in which a lawsuit may be brought to enforce a claim. A statute will not begin to run until a cause of action accrues and the wronged party is qualified to sue. Because a person under a legal disability such as infancy or insanity cannot sue on his or her own behalf, the running of the statute is suspended as long as the disability continues. n137 Consequently, the adverse possession may have to continue beyond the time period in the statute before it will ripen into legal ownership.

Future interests in the property may also extend a statute of limitations. n138 The statute normally will not begin to run against a future interest holder until the interest becomes possessory. Adverse possession is not a wrong to a future interest holder because that holder does not have a presently possessory interest in the property. Therefore, the holder will not have a right to sue the adverse possessor until such time as the future interest may become possessory.

Statutes of limitation frequently do not apply to bar governmental claims to real estate. n139 This exception for government is intended to prevent persons from obtaining public real estate through adverse possession. When the real estate is held for public use such as streets, roads or parks, the exemption is justifiable; however, this exception is not justified in all instances and some statutes now provide that certain real estate held by government is subject to adverse possession. n140

Another difficulty involved with using statutes of limitation in title examination is that it is often difficult to determine which statute may apply to a particular claim or transaction.

> Local statutes are often so incongruous, disorganized, overlapping and filled with varying exceptions that it is difficult or impossible to say which one may apply or whether it is fully effective according to its terms. In some collections of statutes there is no clear method of determining which apply to real property and which to personal actions. Often different provisions apply to titles acquired from judicial or official sales; and still different provisions may be found for asserting specific interests. n141

However, statutes of limitation are of some general assistance to the title examiner. While it is generally impossible to determine with certainty whether a particular claim has been extinguished by a statute from facts in the public real estate records, the probability of extinguishment of certain claims increases with time. This allows title examiners to give record facts which may indicate a defect less weight as the facts grow older. The farther back in the record that the possible defect appears, the higher the probability that the adverse claimant will be barred by the statute of limitations from asserting the claim.

Statutes of limitation have also been useful in resolving boundary disputes. From time to time, a question may arise concerning the precise location of a boundary between two parcels, sometimes as a result of conflicting legal descriptions. Where the parcels are separated by a fence or other physical evidence of possession, adverse possession may serve to establish the legal boundary at the location of the fence or other physical evidence. Because the possession in these situations frequently will be under color of title with payment of real estate taxes, a short statutory period may be applicable.

Statutes of limitations also serve to correct title defects caused by encroachments. There are basically two types of encroachment defects:

> (1) where a structure on adjacent property encroaches on the subject property or violates a building line established for its benefit; or
>
> (2) where a structure on the subject property encroaches on adjacent property or violates a building line established for its benefit.

Both types of encroachment may create serious title defects. The latter type frequently creates a substantial defect because the owner of the adjacent property generally has a right to demand the removal of the encroachment, even if the owner of the subject property is willing to pay fair and adequate compensation. Removal might involve substantial damage to or destruction of the structure. However, an encroachment will not have to be removed if the owner of the adjacent property does not bring an action against the owner of the encroachment within the period of time in the applicable statute of limitations.

Some legislative provisions aimed at extinguishing specific claims or types of interests, have been very effective in cleansing defects from titles. These include provisions concerning ancient mortgages, interests of vendees under land sale contracts, judgment liens, and possibilities of reverter and rights of entry.

§ 92.06(a)(1) Ancient Mortgage Statutes.

Generally, when the obligation secured by a mortgage ceases to exist, the lien of the mortgage ends. n142 Until a release of the mortgage is recorded, however, a recorded mortgage will remain a lien of record even though it is no longer a lien in fact. Occasionally, releases of mortgages that are no longer valid liens are not obtained and recorded. This is probably caused in part by the failure of debtors to appreciate the necessity of recording such releases to clear title. While the lender may be knowledgeable about this necessity, it no longer has any interest in the title to the security property once the debt has been paid. Normally, mortgagees will not give a release for a mortgage that is no longer a lien because the obligation it secured has been extinguished or barred, but not paid. For example, the statute of limitation for the enforcement of a debt secured by a mortgage may have expired. In a minority of jurisdictions, when the remedy on the obligation is barred, enforcement of the mortgage is also barred. n143 In such a case, it is unlikely that the mortgagee would voluntarily execute a release of the lien.

As a result, many old mortgages remain on the record as unsatisfied, even though it is probable that they are not liens in fact. Near the end of the 19th century, state legislatures began enacting corrective measures known collectively as "ancient mortgage statutes." n144

An ancient mortgage statute terminates mortgage liens of record where the mortgage has not been preserved by recordation of notice within the immediately preceding period provided in the statute. Much ancient mortgage legislation in the United States is based on either provisions in an earlier draft of the Uniform Real Estate Mortgage Act or a section in the final approved draft. n145 The earlier draft and the legislation based on it are more effective than the final version in their approach to ancient mortgages. n146 The Illinois statute is representative of this group of legislation. n147 The statute automatically terminates mortgage liens that have not been preserved by a filing within twenty years after the due date stated in the mortgage. If no due date is stated, the applicable period is thirty years from the date of the mortgage. The period can only be extended by a filing. It does not matter whether the mortgagee was under the type of disability that might suspend the running of an ordinary statute of limitation. n148 It is, also, immaterial whether subsequent transferees failed to pay value or had notice of the mortgage lien.

The Ohio statute is typical of the legislation based on the final approved draft of the Uniform Real Estate Mortgage Act. n149 This statute provides that a recorded mortgage with a date or debt maturity date (if both are stated, then whichever is later) more than twenty-one years old will not give constructive or inquiry notice to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value unless the lien is preserved by recording a prescribed notice within the immediately preceding twenty-one years. n150 The lien of the mortgage, unless preserved, is deemed to be expired with respect to such purchasers. The facts that establish that a party was a bona fide purchaser are normally not ascertainable through an examination of the record. Consequently, this type of statute is less effective in eliminating title defects caused by old mortgages because its application depends on whether particular transferees were entitled to the protection of the statute (i.e., on whether a particular transferee was a bona fide purchaser for value).

§ 92.06(a)(2) Statute of Limitations on Installment Land Contracts.

The installment land contract is a popular alternative to mortgage financing of real estate purchases. Under the usual contract, the purchaser takes possession while agreeing to pay the seller for the property through regular installments which extend over a period of time, perhaps for many years. The seller retains legal title to the property as security. The buyer usually has an equitable title interest in the property. At some point, either after full payment or at some earlier time, the buyer will be entitled to a deed conveying legal title. The contract will contain a provision that authorizes the seller to declare a forfeiture if the buyer defaults. In the event of forfeiture, the buyer's right to possession is terminated, and the usual contract purports to allow the seller to keep all payments made by the buyer.

Recordation of an installment land contract can cloud title. n151 A title examiner may be unable to determine from the record alone whether the buyer still has enforceable rights. It is not unusual for a recorded land contract to have been forfeited or abandoned in fact but not released of record. n152 Several states have statutes aimed at removing clouds on title caused by recorded land contracts that are no longer in force. For example, an Iowa statute frees titles of defects resulting from recorded contracts that have been executed more that ten years earlier if the record does not disclose performance and "more than ten years have elapsed since the contract by its terms was to be performed... ." n153 The Iowa statute also provides that on or after July 1, 1992, it will apply to contracts that have not been recorded but that are referred to in a recorded document. n154 Another approach to this problem is to provide for a formal contract termination procedure with written notices that may be recorded in order to establish extinguishment of the buyer's interest. n155

§ 92.06(a)(3) Statute of Limitations on Judgment Liens.

Judgments against persons may attach as liens on their real estate within the county or territorial jurisdiction of the courts rendering the judgments. n156 Judgment liens are subject to special statutes of limitation. These statutes limit the lifetimes of judgment liens to a specific number of years, usually from five to fifteen years, with a ten-year period being fairly common. n157 Some statutes permit extensions of the basic period under varied conditions or circumstances. n158 Unlike ordinary statutes of limitation, the running of the period cannot usually be suspended by disabilities. In a few instances, the duration of the lien may depend on the duration of the judgment itself, which may be limited by an ordinary statute of limitations. If that is the case, then it is possible that the duration of the lien may be extended by a disability. n159

§ 92.06(a)(4) Statute of Limitations on Possibilities of Reverter and Rights of Entry.

Possibilities of reverter and rights of entry may present difficult problems to title examiners. These interests arise in transferors when certain defeasible estates are created in transferees. For example, a land owner might convey it to a church "so long as the property is used for church purposes" or "on the condition that the property shall be used for church purposes; when the property is no longer used for church purposes, the grantor or her transferees shall have the right to enter." The first conveyance would create a fee simple determinable in the church and a possibility of reverter in the transferor. The second would create a fee simple on a condition subsequent in the transferee and a right of entry in the grantor. These defeasible estates are usually employed by donors to create land use or ownership restrictions that, if violated, can cause title to the land to revert to the holder of the reversionary future interest. Normally, the record will not disclose whether the restrictions have been violated. As a result, it may be difficult or impossible to determine from the record whether title has been or may be lost because of a violation. The mere presence of a defeasible estate as an essential link in the chain of title may render the title unmarketable. n160 Not infrequently, older defeasible estate restrictions are inappropriate in the modern context and many appear to serve no appropriate purpose.

The impact of possibilities of reverter and rights of entry on the marketability of titles is exacerbated because they are not subject to the rule against perpetuities. n161 Furthermore, equitable defenses to the enforcement of restrictive covenants are generally inapplicable to these interests. Finally, it may be difficult or impossible to obtain a release from the future interest holder.

Legislation aimed at title problems caused by these reversionary future interests has been proposed and adopted. The Commissioners on Uniform State Laws promulgated a Uniform Act Relating to Reverter of Realty in 1944. n162 The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act has a section that will eliminate stale possibilities of reverter and rights of entry. n163 A number of states have enacted legislation concerning this problem. The existing legislation is far from uniform. Some statutes provide for an absolute maximum duration of these interests. n164 Others specify a maximum lifetime for reversionary interests but provide for extensions by re-recording the interest or filing a notice of an intent to preserve it. n165 Some statutes are prospective and apply only to interests created after the effective date of the legislation. n166 Others purport to have retroactive effect as well. n167 A Minnesota statute makes equitable defenses available in suits to enforce restrictive covenants also available in actions to enforce reversionary future interests. n168

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: ancient mortgage installment land contract* w/50 statute of limitation* judgment lien* w/50 statute of limitation* possibilit! of reverter w/50 statute of limitation*
"right* of entry" w/50 "statute of limitation*"
"right* of re-entry" w/50 "statute of limitation*"

NOTE:
Many cases relevant to this section pre-date the earliest cases in the database.

§ 92.06(b) Marketable Title Acts.

The first marketable title act was enacted in Iowa in 1919. n169 Currently, marketable title acts are in force in eighteen states. At least fourteen n170 of these acts are based on the Model Marketable Title Act (the "Model Act"). n171 The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act 1 (USOLTA) contains a proposed marketable title act. n172 Although these actual and proposed statutes vary in language and specific provisions, most of them share the same basic pattern. If the owner has a chain of title going back to a title transfer conveyance (usually referred to as the "root of title") that was recorded prior to a time period specified by the act (the periods vary from twenty to fifty years, with forty years being the most common), title to the property is generally subject only to claims and interests recorded within the basic period plus any additional time back to the root of title. Claims recorded prior to the root of title are generally invalid if they have not been re-recorded after the root of title, unless they qualify under one of the exceptions to the act. Exceptions to a marketable title act may include claims and interests of the United States, state governmental interests, interests of lessors upon the termination of leases, adverse possession interests where some part of the adverse possession occurred after the root of title, easements observable by physical inspection, railroad or utility easements, mineral interests, reversionary future interests and restrictive covenants, remainders, and mortgages and other property security interests. n173

To qualify for the protection of most American recording acts, one must be a good faith purchaser for value without notice of the prior conflicting interest. In contrast, the marketable title acts currently in force do not require a person to be good faith purchaser for value to qualify for the protection of the act. n174 The original Iowa marketable title act required one to be in possession to qualify for its benefits. n175 Currently, possession is required by statute only in North Dakota. n176 The Minnesota Act, by judicial interpretation, benefits only persons claiming fee simple titles. n177 The Model Act, the USOLTA provisions and most of the other enacted statutes protect persons claiming any interest in the real estate. n178 Disabilities that might suspend the running of a statute of limitation are irrelevant under marketable title acts.

§ 92.06(b)(1) Objectives.

Marketable title acts have two objectives:

(1) to promote economy in title examination by limiting the scope of title search and examination to the fairly recent past; and

(2) to promote marketability of titles by cleansing them of various types of older title defects.

While the acts are effective to promote the second objective, the exceptions to extinguishment of claims by the acts greatly undermine attainment of the first objective. If a title examination only goes back to the root of title, there will be a risk that some excepted interest may be on the prior record. As a result, conservative title examiners will search and examine back beyond the root of title. n179

Conservative title examiners may also decline to rely on a marketable title act where the constitutionality of the act has not been upheld by the highest court of the state. A marketable title act may be found to be unconstitutional because it may extinguish a real estate interest recorded before the root of title with no notice of any kind being given to its holder. The holder of such an interest may claim that the act is unconstitutional under due process or impairment of contractual obligation clauses. n180

Marketable title acts are aimed at facilitating commerce in real estate by making title examination less burdensome and title more marketable by extinguishing old title defects. Clearly, these objectives of marketable title acts promote important public interests and, therefore, provide a sound basis for these acts as constitutionally permissible exercises of police power. The harder question is whether individuals are unfairly deprived of property rights because they are not given individual notice that their interests will be extinguished unless they are preserved by a filing under the marketable title act.

The United States Supreme Court has never considered the constitutionality of any of the general purpose marketable title acts and few state supreme courts have passed on the validity of their acts. n181 Perhaps the best available United States Supreme Court precedent is Texaco, Inc. v. Short, n182 which involved the validity of the Indiana Mineral Lapse Act. n183 The Act reunited severed mineral interests with surface rights where the interests were not used for twenty years. An owner of unused mineral rights could preserve them by filing a claim in the local recorder's office. The statute was retroactive; however, holders of mineral rights unused for eighteen years or more were given a grace period of two years after the statute became effective to preserve their rights by filing a claim. After the Indiana Supreme Court upheld the statute, n184 an appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court affirmed in a five-to-four decision with a dissent by Justice Brennan joined by Justices White, Marshall and Powell.

The majority opinion by Justice Stevens emphasized that a state has the power to condition the retention of a property interest on the performance of reasonable conditions that indicate an intention to retain the interest. He further observed that the Indiana statute was similar to a recording statute. "Such statutes provide that a valid transfer of property may be defeated by a subsequent purported transfer if the earlier transfer is not properly recorded." n185 The Court found that the statute furthered legitimate state goals and used reasonable means to achieve them. The Court also determined that the two-year grace period gave persons who might lose their property interests a reasonable amount of time to become familiar with the law. The Court was persuaded that those subject to losing mineral interests by operation of the statute were not entitled to specific notice from the State or from surface owners until litigation was commenced to establish that mineral rights had been extinguished by the statute. A holder of mineral rights argued that the statute unconstitutionally impaired the obligation of contracts because the holder had leased the mineral rights to a third party. Justice Stevens noted, however, that the mineral leases were made after the rights had lapsed under the statute. "The statute cannot be said to impair a contract that did not exist at the time of its enactment." n186

In his dissent, Justice Brennan agreed that the legislation promoted a legitimate state interest. He also agreed that extinguishment of a mineral owner's rights may be an appropriate sanction for a failure to file a claim. His main disagreement with the majority was about the retroactive effect of the statute. Justice Brennan thought that the two-year grace period was inadequate to give the persons about to lose their interests sufficient notice of the imminent loss.

Texaco, Inc. v. Short indicates that the United States Supreme Court would most likely uphold retroactive general purpose marketable title acts with grace periods against attacks based on federal constitutional claims. The state interest in stabilizing land titles and providing certainty to real estate ownership appears to provide a sound basis for this particular exercise of police power. The most serious constitutional problem with general purpose marketable title acts comes from their retroactive application. Justice Brennan's dissent shows that Professor Payne's concerns about the retroactive effect of marketable title acts with no specific notice to those losing interests was not unfounded. n187 However, the majority opinion held that even the relatively brief grace period of two years was sufficient to satisfy due process notice requirements.

Wichelman v. Messner n188 is the leading case upholding the validity of a general purpose marketable title act against a constitutionality challenge. In Wichelman, the subject property was conveyed by Hoppenstedt in 1887 subject to a condition or limitation which provided that the property was to revert to the grantors, their heirs or assigns whenever it ceased being used as a school house site. This transfer created a determinable fee or a fee upon a condition subsequent. n189 The school on the site was closed in 1946. In 1952, the school district which then owned the property sold and conveyed the property to Messner. Wichelman, who had also bid for the property when it was sold to Messner, contacted the Hoppenstedt heirs. The heirs released or quitclaimed to Wichelman any interests they then had in the subject property. Wichelman then sued Messner and others seeking to establish that the title reverted to the Hoppenstedt heirs when the property ceased to be used for school purposes. Wichelman claimed ownership as the purchaser from the heirs. The trial court held for Wichelman, apparently on the ground that title reverted to the Hoppenstedt heirs in 1946 when the school use ceased.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota reversed, holding that the Minnesota Marketable Title Act (the "Act") applied to extinguish any reversionary interests that were created by the 1887 conveyance. At the time, the Minnesota Act protected an owner with a record chain of title at least forty years old from claims founded upon any event or transaction that was more than forty years old, unless the claimant recorded notice of the claim within forty years after the occurrence of the event or transaction. Because no notice was recorded to preserve the reversionary interests that may have been created by the 1887 conveyance, they were extinguished by the Act.

In discussing the constitutional challenges made to the Act, the Court was mainly concerned about its retroactive effect. The interest, if any, acquired by Wichelman from the Hoppenstedt heirs and extinguished by the statute was created years before the enactment of the statute. The Hoppenstedt heirs were not notified that they would have only nine months to preserve their interest by filing notice. Wichelman argued that the statute violated both the due process and the impairment of the obligation of contract clauses because the statute extinguished pre-existing interests without notice to their owners and gave only a brief nine-month grace period in which to preserve them. The Court rejected this argument, relying on precedents upholding the validity of curative acts, statutes of limitation and recording acts against similar challenges.

The Court observed that the Act was a comprehensive plan for reform in conveyancing procedures which combined the collective sanctions of curative acts, statutes of limitation, and recording acts. n190 Curative acts do not impair the obligation of contracts even though they are a form of retrospective legislation because "[t]hey operate to complete a transaction which the parties intended to accomplish but carried out imperfectly." n191 Statutes of limitation promote valid public purposes and may have retrospective effect if persons whose claims may be extinguished are given a reasonable time to assert those claims. "It is recognized that an amendment to a recording statute which shortens or limits the time during which a recorded instrument shall be effective and provides for renewal of such instrument by recording or refiling is constitutional as to existing recorded instruments where a reasonable time is allowed for compliance with the statute." n192 The Court refused to hold the nine-month grace period to be unreasonably brief, emphasizing legislative discretion in setting such periods and observing that the Bar of Minnesota had knowledge of the enactment of the legislation.

§ 92.06(b)(2) Other Concerns.

While a marketable title act that extinguishes prior interests with no notice to their owners and with little opportunity for them to learn of the impending extinguishment may satisfy minimum constitutional requirements, there remains a question about the basic fairness of such an act. A commentator has articulated the central concern:

> The crucial argument made in justification of allowing marketable title acts to extinguish express interests outstanding of record is that, even if live interests of possibly continuing social utility are subject to extinguishment, they can all be preserved by the simple expedient of filing notices of claim. But how are people going to learn of this saving procedure, or even of the threat of extinguishment? n193

To say that everyone is presumed to know the law is an unsatisfactory response to this concern, which is based on the practical realities, and not on what the law might presume. The problem is that many people will not know that they have an interest or that the statute that may extinguish that interest exists. There is no red flag of possession or notice from some other source that might catch their attention. The clock of the marketable title act silently advances. On the other hand, identifying, searching for, and specially notifying those who might lose interests would be costly and time-consuming. A general notice by publication might adequately warn corporations that routinely examine published legal notices; however, other owners are not likely to acquire notice in fact through such means.

§ 92.06(b)(3) Competing Chains of Title.

One of the more troubling aspects of marketable title acts is their application to the problem presented by competing chains of title to the same interest. The competing chains of title situation is uncommon but occurs frequently enough to be a cause of concern. Competing chains of title may arise when an owner conveys the same interest to two or more persons. This situation can also occur because of a "wild deed" executed by a grantor with no record ownership of the interest, or when a subsequent deed contains a legal description that overlaps the description in a prior deed. A marketable title act may apply to this situation so as to reverse the result that would be reached under the common-law priority rules and the recording acts.

For example, suppose that in 1950, O, the then owner in fact and of record of Blackacre, conveyed it to A, who promptly recorded. In 1951, O conveyed the same interest to M, who also promptly recorded. Generally, under the common-law priority rules n194 and the recording acts, n195 A would have priority over M. However, under a marketable title act with a basic 40-year period, in 1991, M could attain priority over A if no further transfers or recordation occurred. M would have an unbroken chain of title with a root of title recorded at least 40 years ago. As a result, A's interest would be extinguished. The same result can be reached if the second deed was a forgery or "wild," executed by a complete stranger to the title. n196

Under marketable title acts, perfectly genuine claims to title may be extinguished by forged or otherwise void conveyances. Under recording acts, a real estate owner cannot lose title through a void conveyance, even to a good faith purchaser for value without notice unless estoppel applies. n197 However, a marketable title act may validate a chain of title based on a void conveyance. For example, in a Florida case, n198 a man died in 1923, leaving to his wife and sole heir his interest in a corporation that owned land in Florida. The widow died in 1945, never having learned of her inheritance. After the man died, a wrongdoer set into motion a scheme designed to defraud the decedent's estate of all interests in the corporation and the real estate it held. A deed from the corporation to the wrongdoer and his accomplices was forged. These grantees then purported to convey the property to another corporation which, in turn, purported to transfer it to a third corporation. This third corporation then sold portions of the land to apparently innocent parties. Some of the buyers improved their lots. In 1966, a brother of the decedent uncovered the wrongdoer's actions. The brother then sued the current owners of the land in 1967 to establish title in the heirs of the decedent. Upon the defendants' motion, the complaint was dismissed for failure to state a cause of action because the estate's claims were barred by the Florida Marketable Title Act. In affirming the lower court's dismissal, the Florida Supreme Court upheld the interests of the current owners because the thirty-year period of the Florida marketable title act had passed, even though their roots of title were forged deeds.

The early marketable title statutes were enacted in states where official and unofficial (both publicly and privately maintained) tract indexes were used. The problem of competing chains of title to the same interest is not as serious where such indexes are used because the tract index will normally disclose the problem to a prospective purchaser. In some of the later states to enact marketable title legislation, the only available public indexes are grantor-grantee indexes. n199 While a genuine recorded interest may be extinguished through the recordation of a forged or wild deed regardless of the index used, tract indexes will disclose the existence of conflicting chains of title to subsequent purchasers. Where grantor-grantee indexes are used, it is likely that a person searching one of the conflicting chains of title will not discover the existence of another chain, unless both chains involved a common grantor and the root of the other chain was recorded in the chain of title for the interest being searched.

Several approaches to this problem have been suggested. One commentator has proposed that the benefit of marketable title acts should be limited to persons claiming ownership where they and any predecessors in title have paid the real estate taxes on the property for the preceding five years, and where no conflicting claimant has paid the taxes during the same five-year period. n200 The reasoning behind this proposal seems to be that the claim of the taxpaying party is similar to that of an adverse possessor under color of title with payment of taxes, which justifies the application of a shorter statute of limitations. Furthermore, if a claimant is paying taxes, conflicting claimants who are not paying taxes or not being billed for them should have notice that someone may be claiming their interests. The local tax records will most likely reveal the identity of that person. While this proposal has merit, it would deny the benefits of marketable title acts to tax exempt organizations such as churches, charities, and governments. The USOLTA contains a variation on this proposal. n201 Instead of limiting the benefits of marketable title acts to real estate taxpayers, the USOLTA preserves the "rights of a person in whose name the real estate or an interest therein was carried on the real property tax rolls within 3 years of the time when marketability is to be determined, if the relevant tax rolls are accessible to the public... ." n202

Another approach to the problem of conflicting chains of title is to preserve the rights of parties in possession from extinguishment by the marketable title act. The drafters of the Model Marketable Title Act rejected this approach because it violated their fundamental principle that the record should be a "mirror" of title. n203 Excepting the rights of parties in possession from extinguishment by the marketable title act alone would be enough to make a physical inspection of the property imperative. The USOLTA excepts the interests of parties in possession where their occupancy would be revealed by a reasonable inspection or inquiry "where their use or occupancy is inconsistent with the marketable record title... ." n204

The USOLTA approach to the problem of conflicting chains of title provides a solution that is both satisfactory and practical. Under the Uniform Act, an examination of the property and the relevant tax rolls will almost always give a purchaser of real estate notice of any conflicting chain of title. The interest of the real estate owner in possession or paying taxes will be protected from extinguishment by the marketable title act. While this solution is inconsistent with the goal of making the record a full and accurate mirror of the state of the title, experience with recording and title registration shows that the goal is, in any event, unattainable. n205

§ 92.06(b)(4) Exceptions.

A basic objective of marketable title acts is to reduce the burden of title search and examination of the record to the fairly recent past (the period of time specified in a particular act; usually forty years plus any additional time back to the root of title). The attainment of this goal is greatly impaired by the exception of certain interests from extinguishment by the acts. A searcher who stops at the root of title is taking a risk that an excepted interest lies beyond.

Because of the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, state laws cannot extinguish claims held by the United States without its consent. Therefore, all marketable title acts, the Model Act, and the USOLTA exclude interests of the United States. The Model Act simply excepts "any right, title or interest of the United States... ." n206 The USOLTA exception for interests held by the United States is limited to claims "not subjected by federal law to the recording requirements of [the] State... ." n207 This leaves open the possibility that a claim of the United States could be extinguished if the United States adequately consents.

Although the Model Act and the USOLTA do not except interests held by state or local government, at least eight of the eighteen enacted statutes do except these interests. While it would appear to be reasonable to except publicly owned streets, alleys and observable easements, the exception of other governmental claims is difficult to justify. Obviously, in states with these exceptions, the legislative intent was to promote economy of government by relieving state and local governments from the burden of keeping track of their interests and recording or filing under the marketable title act to preserve them. This is not an adequate basis, however, for exempting state and local governments from the rules that apply to private individuals and organizations. Generally, private individuals and organizations are in no better position than the state or local government to keep track of and preserve their interests. The governmental exception is also not justified by public policy. This exception appears to be a product of reluctance by state legislators to impose an avoidable fiscal burden on state and local governments.

In addition to the exceptions for state and local government interests, there are other exceptions in the enacted statutes that appear to be politically based. These include utility easements, railroad easements, water rights, and mineral interests.

Utility and railroad easements apparent by use present little or no difficulty to purchasers. Underground utility easements are more troublesome because they may not be apparent through a physical inspection. Usually, underground easements will not, however, interfere with the owner's use of the surface. As it would be unduly burdensome on utility companies to keep track of and re-record these easements owing to their great number, their exemption from marketable title acts appears justified.

Unused utility and railroad easements are another matter. These easements may not be apparent due to lack of use. Furthermore, non-use for a long period of time suggests that these easements have little or no utility to their owners or society. In this case, the twin goals of marketable title acts, to reduce the burden of searches and to enhance the marketability of titles, should take precedence. Utility companies and railroads should be required to keep track of these interests and preserve them by re-recording.

The Model Act and the acts that have been enacted exempt easements that are observable by physical inspection. n208 The USOLTA excepts "a restriction, the existence of which is clearly observable by physical evidence of its use ... ." n209 This exemption appears to be justified, because a prudent purchaser of real estate will make a physical inspection of the property. For the same reason, exceptions for parties in possession which are found in some statutes are also justifiable. The Model Act and the USOLTA contain no exceptions for mineral interests. However, seven of the eighteen enacted statutes do except these interests. A commentator has referred to the omission of any reference to minerals as an "almost inexplicable defect" in the Model Act. n210 Mineral rights may be easements ("profits a prendre" in older terminology) or separate estates. If mineral rights are easements, they are encumbrances on or claims against general ownership. However, if they exist as separate estates, they are estates in their own right. Under the latter view, a commentator has argued that a conveyance of mineral rights "divides the land horizontally, just as the sale of a single lot from a larger tract divides the land vertically. A marketable title in the owner of the surface, therefore, does not defeat title to the severed minerals any more than a marketable title in Lot A defeats title to Lot B in the same subdivision." n211 After referring to decisions stating that a marketable title act did not extinguish severed mineral rights, Simes and Taylor, drafters of the Model Act, quote from a contrary Ontario decision and point out that the Model Act was directly influenced by the Ontario Act. n212 They also assert that under the Model Act "it is very clear that re-recording of mineral rights is necessary..." n213 to preserve them. However, these authors do advise that it may be desirable in mineral areas to make the Model Act "even more explicit in its application to mineral interests." n214 The Model Act clearly would apply to extinguish mineral rights held as easements; however, contrary to the drafters' assertion, it is not at all clear that it would similarly affect mineral rights held as separate estates.

In states with significant mining activity, it is vital for real estate purchasers to know whether mineral rights are included in the purchase or whether they may be held by someone else. The owner of the mineral interest may have broad rights to use the surface to reach the minerals. Exercise of these rights can effectively damage or completely destroy the use of the land by the surface owners, with no obligation to pay them compensation.

In Appalachian and Western states, there are thousands of outstanding mineral deeds, many over a century old. n215 Because some land title records are disorganized and poorly maintained, the precise state of ownership of various mineral rights is undetermined. Mining companies are very reluctant to sort through and identify the real estate in which they may hold mining interests so that those interests can be preserved by re-recording. Instead, the mining companies prefer to wait until deposits are discovered before attempting to search for and ascertain the precise legal state of mineral rights and associated interests in specific locations. n216 The mining companies' basic approach toward marketable title legislation has been to lobby for an exception for mineral interests. A blanket exception for mineral interests in marketable title acts greatly undermines the goal of limiting the length of searches. Because of the drastic effect that mineral rights can have on marketability of the title to the surface, no prudent purchaser would end a search at the root of title in states where mineral interests are excepted from the acts.

A few marketable title acts except rights of entry, possibilities of reverter and restrictive covenants. A few also except reversionary interests and remainders. Because of the adverse impact on marketability of titles caused by rights of entry and possibilities of reverter, it is difficult to justify excepting them from a marketable title act. As time passes, the social utility, if any, of a use restriction may decrease and, at some point, giving effect to a long-dead grantor's intent may be the only plausible basis for enforcement. After the basic time period referred to in a marketable title act has passed, the policy of promoting marketability of titles should prevail over the policy of giving effect to the grantor's intent, and these interests should be extinguished unless preserved by re-recording. n217 Restrictive covenants present a different problem. They do not necessarily have a severely negative effect on marketability. As a result, the case for their extinguishment is not as strong. Nonetheless, there is some basis for limiting their lifetimes, because the utility of covenant use restrictions may also diminish with time. n218

Remainders and reversions are excepted by some marketable title acts. These exceptions are justifiable. Extinguishment of such interests defeats the intent of their creators. Furthermore, in many cases the owners may not be aware of the threat of extinguishment and may not be aware of the need to preserve them by re-recording. However, these interests are currently of little importance. Life estates, remainders, and reversions are rarely created today as legal estates in land. These interests are normally created as equitable interests in trusts which may include legal title to real estate in the trust corpus. Dividing real estate into legal estates and future interests is unwise because such a division negatively affects marketability. No prudent developer will invest substantial sums in improving a life estate which might terminate at any time.

§ 92.06(b)(5) Summary.

While marketable title acts do promote marketability of titles by voiding old defects in a number of instances where they would have remained viable, n219 in general they have failed to accomplish their objectives. The goal of making the root of title a "curtain" which would cut off the need to conduct historical searches has not been achieved due to the exceptions in the acts. The principal architect of a proposed but never enacted marketable title act for Alabama reported that the Alabama Law Institute preferred to withdraw the bill rather than proceed with a blanket exception for mineral interests. n220 While a marketable title act with such a debilitating exception can still accomplish some good, the position of the Alabama Law Institute has merit. Marketable title acts do not come cost free. Compliance costs include keeping track of interests and re-recording them. From a cost-benefit perspective, a minimally effective statute may not be worth the costs it generates.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: marketable w/20 act w/20 record! or title wild deed

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 130. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems Legal Constraints and Reforms II-79 (1979).

(n2)Footnote 131. However, historical searches may be required in title registration systems because of "holes in the curtain," i.e., exceptions to the conclusiveness of the register.

(n3)Footnote 132. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation (1960).

(n4)Footnote 133. 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, the History of English Law 51 (2d ed. 1959).

(n5)Footnote 134. 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, the History of English Law 51 (2d ed. 1959).

(n6)Footnote 135. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 54 (1970). E.g., Wis. Stat. Ann. § 893.25. Where possession is under color of title, in good faith or with payment of real estate taxes, a shorter period may apply. E.g., 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/13-101.; Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 893.26 & 893.27.

(n7)Footnote 136. E.g., Wanless v. Wraight, 559 N.E.2d 798, 800 (Ill. App. 1990).

(n8)Footnote 137. Lewis M. Simes, A Handbook for More Efficient Conveyancing 52 (1961); U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems Legal Constraints and Reforms II-72 (1979).

(n9)Footnote 138. Lewis M. Simes, A Handbook for More Efficient Conveyancing 58 (1961).

(n10)Footnote 139. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Title § 51 (1970).

(n11)Footnote 140. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Title § 53 (1970).

(n12)Footnote 141. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Title § 52 (1970).

(n13)Footnote 142. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 2.1 (2d ed. 1985). There are a number of exceptions and qualifications to this general proposition. See id.

(n14)Footnote 143. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law 453 (2d ed. 1985).

(n15)Footnote 144. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 71 (2d ed. 1985). See id. §§ 78 to 114 for description of the statutes in force in various states.

(n16)Footnote 145. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 76 (2d ed. 1985); Uniform Real Estate Mortgage Act, § 12.

(n17)Footnote 146. Carol M. Rose, Crystals and Mud in Property Law, 40 Stan. L. Rev. 577 (1988).

(n18)Footnote 147. Carol M. Rose, Crystals and Mud in Property Law, 40 Stan. L. Rev. 577 (1988).

(n19)Footnote 148. See Livingston v. Meyers, 129 N.E.2d 12 (Ill. 1955).

(n20)Footnote 149. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.30 (Anderson).

(n21)Footnote 150. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.30 (Anderson).

(n22)Footnote 151. To prevent recordation, sellers may deliberately omit certificates of acknowledgement or prohibit recordation in contract provision.

(n23)Footnote 152. Paul E. Bayse, Clearing Land Titles § 132 (1970).

(n24)Footnote 153. Iowa Code Ann. § 558.5.

(n25)Footnote 154. Iowa Code Ann. § 558.5.

(n26)Footnote 155. E.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 559.21. In some cases, contract sellers concerned about the quality of their titles after forfeiture will use mortgage foreclosure, where available, to terminate the buyer's interest.

(n27)Footnote 156. Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 571 (1957).

(n28)Footnote 157. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 134 (1970).

(n29)Footnote 158. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 161-62 (1960).

(n30)Footnote 159. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 162 (1960).

(n31)Footnote 160. Marygold S. Melli, Subdivision Control in Wisconsin, 1953 Wis. L. Rev. 391, 450-51.

(n32)Footnote 161. Lewis M. Simes & Allen F. Smith, the Law of Future Interests 311, § 825 (2d ed. 1956); Lewis M. Simes, Handbook of the Law of Future Interests 264 (2d ed. 1966).

(n33)Footnote 162. Handbook of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and Proceedings of the Fifty-Fourth Annual Conference 209-10 (1944).

(n34)Footnote 163. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-409, 14 U.L.A. 301 (1990).

(n35)Footnote 164. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.18 (21 years); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.20 (if unrecorded, until subsequent conveyance is properly recorded). Knights and Ladies of Samaria v. Board of Educ. of Charles County, 688 A.2d 933 (Md. App. 1997) (the out-of-possession owner of a fee simple absolute title, acquired by a reversion after the determinable event occurs, must institute an action for possession within the seven-year statutory period or lose all claim to the land).

(n36)Footnote 165. Iowa Code Ann. § 614.24; Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 6-102; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 184, § 19; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 345; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.772.

(n37)Footnote 166. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.18; Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 6-101; Mass Ann. Laws ch 183, § 19; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.2; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 345; Or. Rev. Stat. § 105.772.

(n38)Footnote 167. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 330/5.

(n39)Footnote 168. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 500.20(1).

(n40)Footnote 169. Tesdell v. Hanes, 82 N.W.2d 119, 121-22 (Iowa 1957); Kenneth D. Benhart, Note, The Mechanics of Iowa's Marketable Title Legislation, 22 Drake L. Rev. 326 (1973). Rebecca C. Bell, Virtual Adoption: The Difficulty of Creating an Exception to the Statutory Scheme, 29 Stetson L. Rev. 415 (Fall 1999).

(n41)Footnote 170. Powell on Real Property § 82.04[3][a] (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n42)Footnote 171. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 6-10 (1960).

(n43)Footnote 172. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act §§ 3-301 - 3-309, 14 U.L.A. 290-95 (1990 & Supp. 1992). The U.S.O.L.T.A. Proposal is based on the Model Marketable Title Act.

(n44)Footnote 173. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms II-59 TO II-66 (1979).

(n45)Footnote 174. A proposed act for Alabama would have required protected persons to be good faith purchasers for value. See John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part 1, 24 Ala. L. Rev. 175, 183-84 (1971).

(n46)Footnote 175. Iowa Code Ann. § 614.17.

(n47)Footnote 176. N.D. Cent. Code § 47-19.1-01.

(n48)Footnote 177. Wichelman v. Messner, 83 N.W.2d 800, 816 (Minn. 1957). See Weber v. Eisentrager, 498 N.W.2d 460 (Minn. 1993), in which the Minnesota Supreme Court discusses the amendments to the state's Marketable Title Act, enacted after the Wichelman case.

(n49)Footnote 178. Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 47-33d - 33l.; Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 712.01 - 712.10; Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32-1-5 - 32-1-10; Iowa Code Ann. §§ 614.29 - 614.38; Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58-3401 - 58-3412; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 565.101 - 565.123; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 541.23; Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-288 - 76-298; N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 47B-1 - 47B-9; N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-19.1-.01 - 47-19.1-.11; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 5301.47 - 5301.56; Okla. Stat. Tit. 16; §§ 71 - 80; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. §§ 43-30-1 - 43-30-15; Utah Code Ann. §§ 57-9-1 - 57-9-10; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 893.33; Wyo. Stat. §§ 34-10-101 - 34-10-109.

(n50)Footnote 179. For example, in Cook County, Illinois, the Chicago Title Insurance Company searches back beyond the root of title when it does an initial search for a particular title.

(n51)Footnote 180. E.g., Board of Educ. of Cent. Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. Miles, 207 N.E.2d 181 (N.Y. 1965) (holding the New York statute voiding stale reversionary interests unconstitutional on these grounds). But see Trustees of Sch. of Twp. No. 1 v. Batdorf, 130 N.E.2d 111 (Ill. 1955) (upholding the Illinois state reversionary interest statute).

(n52)Footnote 181. Three state supreme courts have upheld the constitutional validity of marketable title acts. Miami v. St. Joe Paper Co., 364 So. 2d 439 (Fla. 1978); Presbytery of Southeast Iowa v. Harris, 226 N.W.2d 232 (Iowa 1975); and Wichelman v. Messner, 83 N.W.2d 800, (Minn. 1957). See also Tesdell v. Hanes, 82 N.W.2d 119 (Iowa 1957); Ralph W. Aigler, Constitutionality of Marketable Title Acts, 50 Mich. L. Rev. 185 (1951); Ralph W. Aigler, A Supplement to "Constitutionality of Marketable Title Acts" /- 1951-1957, 56 Mich. L. Rev. 225 (1957); and Note, Constitutionality of Marketable Title Legislation, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 413 (1962).

(n53)Footnote 182. 454 U.S. 516 (1982).

(n54)Footnote 183. Ind. Code §§ 32-5-11-1 to 32-5-11-8.

(n55)Footnote 184. Short v. Texaco, Inc., 406 N.E.2d 625 (Ind. 1980).

(n56)Footnote 185. 454 U.S. 516, 528.

(n57)Footnote 186. 454 U.S. 516, 531.

(n58)Footnote 187. John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part I, 24 Ala. L. Rev. 175, 182-84 (1971).

(n59)Footnote 188. 83 N.W.2d 800 (Minn. 1957).

(n60)Footnote 189. The Minnesota Supreme Court did not decide which type of defeasible fee was created because it held that the marketable title act applied "with equal force to both a determinable fee and a fee upon condition subsequent... ." 83 N.W.2d at 810.

(n61)Footnote 190. 83 N.W.2d at 816.

(n62)Footnote 191. 83 N.W.2d at 816.

(n63)Footnote 192. 83 N.W.2d at 817.

(n64)Footnote 193. Walter E. Barnett, Marketable Title Acts--Panacea or Pandemonium, 53 Cornell L. Rev. 45, 89 (1967).

(n65)Footnote 194. A is first in time.

(n66)Footnote 195. A has recorded in the chain of title. Recording acts void or subordinate prior unrecorded claims evidenced by written instruments.

(n67)Footnote 196. See Miami v. St. Joe Paper Co., 364 So. 2d 439 (Fla. 1978); Whaley v. Wotring, 225 So. 2d 177 (Fla. App. 1969); Mobbs v. City of Lehigh, 655 P.2d 547 (Okla. 1982); see also Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 13-14 (1960). But see Exchange Nat'l Bank v. Lawndale Nat'l Bank, 243 N.E.2d 193 (Ill. 1968), where the Illinois Supreme Court held that the Illinois marketable title act was not intended to apply to a case involving two competing record chains of title. The Illinois Supreme Court cited no statutory authority for this holding other than the legislative purpose of "simplifying and facilitating land title transactions by allowing persons to rely on a chain of title... ." 243 N.E.2d at 196.

(n68)Footnote 197. Stone v. French, 14 P. 530 (Kan. 1887); Clevenger v. Moore, 259 P. 219 (Okla. 1927). But see Eliason v. Wilborn, 281 U.S. 457 (1930) (holding that, under the Torrens system of land title registration, an owner may lose title to a subsequent purchaser in good faith through the registration of a void conveyance).

(n69)Footnote 198. Marshall v. Hollywood, Inc., 236 So. 2d 114 (Fla. 1970).

(n70)Footnote 199. North Carolina, Connecticut and Vermont.

(n71)Footnote 200. John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part I, 24 Ala. L. Rev. 175, 184-86 (1971).

(n72)Footnote 201. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-306(3), 14 U.L.A. 50 (Supp. 1992).

(n73)Footnote 202. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-306(3), 14 U.L.A. 50 (Supp. 1992).

(n74)Footnote 203. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 353 (1960). Even Simes and Taylor thought that the rights of a party in possession for 40 years or more should be protected from extinguishment by a record chain of title based on a void or wild deed. Id. at 8 & 353.

(n75)Footnote 204. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-306(2), 14 U.L.A. 50 (Supp. 1992).

(n76)Footnote 205. See Thomas W. Mapp, Torrens' Elusive Title (1978) which shows that even title registration systems fall short of achieving this goal.

(n77)Footnote 206. Model Marketable Title Act § 6; Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, The Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 6 (1960).

(n78)Footnote 207. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-306(4), 14 U.L.A. 50 (Supp. 1992).

(n79)Footnote 208. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 9 (1960); U.S. Dept. of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms II-59 to II-61 (1979); Kerri M. Millikan, The Lucas Exception: Inclusion, Exclusion, and a Statute of Limitations, 68 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 134 (Dec. 1999).

(n80)Footnote 209. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-306(1), 14 U.L.A. 50 (Supp. 1992).

(n81)Footnote 210. John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part I, Ala. L. Rev. 175, 186 (1971).

(n82)Footnote 211. John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part I, Ala. L. Rev. 175, 186 (1971).

(n83)Footnote 212. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 246 (1960).

(n84)Footnote 213. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 246 (1960).

(n85)Footnote 214. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 246 (1960).

(n86)Footnote 215. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems Legal Constraints and Reforms II-62 (1979).

(n87)Footnote 216. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems Legal Constraints and Reforms II-62 (1979).

(n88)Footnote 217. Walter E. Barnett, Marketable Title Acts - Panacea or Pandemonium, 53 Cornell L. Rev. 45, 87 (1967) (noting preservation of a reversionary future interest by a re-recording is no guarantee that the interest has any social utility). While this is true, the act of preservation indicates that the actor thought that the interest was worth the cost of re-recording.

(n89)Footnote 218. Florida's marketable title act, for instance, denotes several exceptions to the act, such as easements and use restrictions, which are not extinguished. Fla. Stat. § 712.03. These exceptions apply, however, only when evidence of such restrictions can be found in prior recorded instruments or "muniments of title." Id. See, e.g., Sunshine Vistas Homeowners Ass'n v. Caruana, 623 So. 2d 490 (Fla. 1993).

(n90)Footnote 219. In many instances, statutes of limitation or the mere passage of time will terminate old defects, legally or practically.

(n91)Footnote 220. John C. Payne, The Alabama Law Institute's Land Title Acts Project: Part I, 24 Ala. L. Rev. 175, 193 (1971).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.07

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.07 Off the Record Risks.n221

[Go To Supp]

A major deficiency of recording systems as sources of land title assurance is that title as shown by the record and title in fact may be substantially different. Various claims and interests may be valid even though no reference to them appears in the record and even though a purchaser of the real estate does not have any kind of notice about them. These claims and interests are generally referred to as "off the record risks."

There are several types of off the record risks. They include governmental claims to real estate legally exempt from recordation requirements, defects due to recorded void conveyances, short-term leases, claims perfected by possession or not based on written instruments entitled to recordation, hidden mechanics' liens, risks due to indexing errors, and traditionally non-title related matters such as zoning, building laws and environmental restrictions.

§ 92.07(a) Federal Interests.

Under the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, n222 real estate interests held by the United States and transfers by it are exempt from state recording laws unless a federal statute consents to the applicability of state recording laws to federal interests. The United States has consented to record its tax liens. n223 Generally, under federal statutes, an innocent purchaser of real estate from the taxpayer does not take subject to a tax lien unless the Internal Revenue Service has filed a notice of its lien in a place designated by state law. Most state laws designate the recorder's office for the county in which the real estate is located as the place of filing. n224 Additionally, the federal government follows a policy of recording instruments of conveyance when it acquires real estate. Except in cases where recordation is mandated by federal statute, however, a failure to record has no general legal effect and a purchaser's title is subject to any unrecorded federally owned interests.

§ 92.07(b) Recordation of Void or Defective Instrument.

Under recording statutes, instruments are not effective to transfer legal interests until they are properly executed. An instrument that appears to be valid on its face may be void or voidable because of non-delivery, forgery, incapacity, fraud or other reasons. Recordation of a void instrument does not make the conveyance effective, although recordation may raise a presumption of execution. n225 Consequently, a purchaser of real estate under a recording act usually takes subject to a risk that title may be void or defective because of a void or defective link in the chain of title. n226 The recording system provides no protection to the subsequent purchaser because of the manner in which it operates. Recording systems void or subordinate prior unrecorded claims in favor of subsequent transferees entitled to the protection of the system, who are usually purchasers for value without notice. Recording statutes simply do not address the situation where there is a prior recorded void conveyance that a subsequent purchaser may have relied on as being an effective conveyance. n227

§ 92.07(c) Claims of Parties in Possession.

In many jurisdictions, a purchaser of real estate has a duty to physically inspect it and is charged with notice of all facts that a reasonable inspection would have revealed. Where this duty exists, an unrecorded claim may be perfected by its owner's possession.

§ 92.07(d) Short-Term Leases.

Many recording statutes exempt short-term leases from recordation. A majority of these statutes limit the exemption to leases for terms not exceeding one year (or terms of less than one year). The remaining statutes refer to two-, three-, five- or seven-year periods. In most of these statutes, the time period refers to the basic term of the lease. In several instances, however, the reference is from the time of its making to the end of the term. n228

The justification for exempting short-term leases from recording acts is to relieve lessees and recorders from the burdens involved with recording leasehold interests of brief duration and of normally little value. Usually, the purchaser will have notice of the lessee's interest because the lessee will be in possession. However, the exemption preserves leases that otherwise might be extinguished by recording acts regardless whether the tenant is in possession. It is not likely that this would result in hardship to purchasers of the real estate in most cases. However, in some cases even a short-term lease could have a severe impact on a purchaser's plans for the future development, sale or use of the property.

§ 92.07(e) Claims Not Based on Written Instruments.

Recording acts operate by voiding or subordinating claims to real estate evidenced or created by written instruments in favor of subsequent purchasers qualified for the protection of the acts. Some claims to real estate are not based on or created by instruments. Recording acts do not apply to such claims because there is nothing to record. These claims include adverse possession and easements by prescription or implication.

Under the doctrine of adverse possession, a person in wrongful possession of the land of another may acquire title to the property. The length of the adverse possession must be for the period of time under the applicable statute of limitation in which the owner could bring an action to remove the adverse possessor. n229

Prescription is similar to adverse possession. Prescription involves adverse use of the land. If no action is brought to terminate the adverse use within the period established by the statute of limitations, the owner is barred from bringing an action. The adverse user acquires an easement by prescription, giving the user a legal right to continue the use. n230

An easement by implication does not involve adverse use or statutes of limitation. Such an easement is based on an implication of an intent to create it. An easement by implication may arise where a use of one part of a parcel of real estate then in single ownership benefits another part of that same parcel. When the parcel of land is subdivided in a manner that separates the portion of the parcel benefitted from the portion of the parcel that provided the beneficial use, an easement may arise by implied grant or reservation if the use would be apparent to a purchaser of the burdened portion, i.e., the parcel that provided the benefit. n231 Such an easement will give the owner of the portion benefitted a legal right to continue the use of the burdened portion, even though it is owned by someone else. For example, suppose a parcel with a building that has a utility pipe running underground from the building out to an exterior facility. The parcel is then subdivided so that part of the underground pipe and the building are now on separate parcels. An easement appurtenant to the parcel with the structure may be implied giving its owner the right to maintain the pipe through the other parcel. In cases involving buried pipes or other facilities, there may be a serious question about whether the adverse use was sufficiently apparent to a subsequent good faith purchaser of the burdened parcel to give rise to an implied easement. n232

Possession or use alone may be adequate to give a purchaser notice of the possessor's or the user's claim. A purchaser of real estate is generally obliged to make a reasonable physical inspection of the property. The inspection will normally uncover possessory claims to the real estate or, at least, give the purchaser reason to conduct further inquiries which may reveal the existence of adverse claims. While adverse possession or use must be open and notorious for it to ripen into title or an easement, once the statute has tolled, the adverse claim may be valid against a good faith purchaser, even if the possession or use is no longer apparent. n233 The leading case supporting this proposition is Mugass v. Smith. n234

In Mugass v. Smith, Mrs. Mugass was in adverse possession of a strip of land adjacent to her property for the requisite period of time to acquire title. During the period of adverse possession, a fence on the property provided some physical notice of the adverse possession. But after the claim ripened into title, the fence disintegrated. When the defendants purchased the property which had once included the strip acquired by Mugass, the fence no longer existed. The defendants claimed that they acquired the strip as bona fide purchasers of the real estate because the record did not disclose Mugass's claim and there was no physical indication of it. The Washington Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that the recording act did not apply to a transfer of title by adverse possession because no unrecorded instrument was involved. Recording acts void or subordinate prior unrecorded claims based on written instruments.

While Mugass v. Smith is consistent with basic recording act principles, its negative impact on facility of transfer is obvious. If the adverse possessor does not have to remain in possession to preserve the claim once it has ripened, purchasers from or through the former owner may have no notice of any kind of it. Furthermore, it seems anomalous to require implied easements to be preserved by apparent use without requiring the same for adverse possession titles and prescriptive easements. Identical considerations are involved: possessory claims to real estate not created by documents and the rights of subsequent purchasers.

§ 92.07(f) Spousal Rights.

Various claims may attach to real estate through the marital relationship. These include dower n235 and curtesy, n236 homestead rights, n237 and community property rights. n238 These interests do not have to be recorded to be enforceable against subsequent good faith purchasers. n239

It is customary to specify the marital status of an individual party to a deed so that title examiners are able to ascertain whether marital claims may be attached to the title being examined. n240 Indeed, the custom is so well established that title examiners may object if the marital status of an individual party to a deed in the chain of title is not specified. n241 While it is customary to state marital status, there is no assurance that the statement is accurate. If the statement is inaccurate, there may be no recourse against the person, if any, responsible for the inaccuracy.

At common law, dower and curtesy were a significant cause of insecurity and unmarketability of titles because dower and curtesy attached to all real estate owned in fee simple or fee tail by the other spouse during the marriage, not just to real estate owned at death. A spouse could release a dower or curtesy interest by joining in a conveyance of the property. If the interest was not released, the spouse's interest in the real estate became possessory if he or she survived the spouse who once owned the property, even if the property was now held by an innocent third party purchaser.

Where the record indicated that the real estate was transferred by a married individual whose spouse did not join in the conveyance or otherwise waive the dower or curtesy right, it was clear that a title defect was created. Where the record indicated that a conveyance was made by an unmarried person, it was always the possible that the individual was, in fact, married at the time. If so, the spouse of that individual may have had a valid dower or curtesy interest in the property that was not extinguished. Today, in most states, dower and curtesy are no longer the plague on title examiners that they once were. Curtesy has been universally abolished n242 and dower also has been abolished in most states. n243 In some states that still retain dower, it applies only to real estate owned by the decedent spouse at death. n244 This modification of common-law dower eliminates the most objectionable feature of it from the title examiner's perspective, because the examiner does not have to be concerned about whether a dower right may have attached to the title through some prior owner.

Homestead rights remain a source of some concern for title examiners. n245 Homestead rights are state constitutional or statutory rights. Any possessory interest in property that is used as a home may be homestead property. The homestead may be titled in the name of any member of a family. Usually, the real estate will be held in the name of the husband or wife, or in the names of both spouses. If the homestead is owned solely by the husband or wife, it cannot be transferred free of homestead rights unless the instrument of conveyance is executed by both spouses in the manner prescribed by statute. n246

Homestead rights create problems for title examiners because it is frequently impossible to determine from the records whether property was a homestead at the time it was conveyed. If a conveyance in the chain of title of real estate was made by a married person, with no release of the homestead right by the other spouse, it is possible that the conveyance was void or defective if the property was, in fact, a homestead.

Various factors ameliorate the impact of homestead rights on marketability of titles. Homestead rights may be terminated by abandonment or divorce. A few states have curative acts that remove defects caused by homestead rights, usually after the conveyance made by the titled spouse has been recorded for a period of time. n247 The Model Act Limiting Actions with Respect to Marital Interests in Real Property bars actions asserting homestead rights where the conveyance made by only one spouse has been recorded for twenty years. n248 Because the maximum duration of a homestead right is for a spouse's life, the passage of time also works to cure defects due to homestead rights. Some title examination standards reflect this by providing that the failure of a spouse to join in a conveyance may be disregarded if a specific period of time has passed since the conveyance was executed or recorded. n249

In the nine community property states, n250 real estate may be titled in only one spouse but still be owned by both in community. Statutes in some community property states provide that conveyances of community real estate made by one spouse are void unless the spouse conveying the property has a sufficient power of attorney from the other spouse. n251 This is true even if the property is titled in the sole name of the conveying spouse. Such a conveyance may be void even if made to good faith purchasers. n252

§ 92.07(g) Lis Pendens.

The common-law doctrine of lis pendens created a serious risk for real estate purchasers. While it is not completely accurate to call this risk an "off the record" one, it was such a risk de facto. The common law doctrine of lis pendens provided that a purchaser of real estate involved in litigation was bound by the eventual outcome. The filing of a complaint involving real estate was constructive notice to purchasers that the property was in litigation. n253

The lis pendens doctrine assured that the court retained power over property involved in the litigation regardless of whether a purchaser knew of the pending litigation. n254 The property could be transferred during the pendency of the suit but the purchaser was bound by the court's judgment because filing the suit gave constructive notice of the litigation to any subsequent purchaser.

While purchasers took with constructive notice of pending litigation, as a practical matter, it was often very difficult, if not impossible, for them to learn of it by searching court records. To ameliorate the often harsh impact of lis pendens on innocent purchasers, statutes were enacted in most states requiring the filing of notice of pending litigation concerning real estate in recorders' offices. n255 This notice must identify the pending action, the parties to it and the property. n256 These filing requirements make it much less difficult for prospective purchasers to discover whether particular real estate is the subject of litigation.

§ 92.07(h) Hidden Mechanics' Liens.

Mechanics' lien acts give persons who furnish labor or material to real estate the right to obtain liens on the real estate to secure payment. n257 These liens are purely statutory and were unknown at common law. Such liens present a serious off the record risk to real estate purchasers. n258 The person furnishing labor or material to premises may have a fixed period of time after the completion of the work to perfect the lien by filing notice of it in the recorder's office. n259 The priority of a lien that has been properly filed will relate back to some earlier date. n260 In many states, all mechanics' liens relating to a particular construction project relate back to the beginning of the project, including the liens of mechanics whose work was done at some time after the project was commenced. n261 This relation back aspect of mechanics' lien laws is responsible for the "hidden" mechanic's lien. A person may purchase real estate subject to an unfiled mechanic's lien. If the mechanic files within the statutory period, the priority of the lien may relate back to some time before the purchase was made. The lien will have priority over the purchaser, even though the lien was not of record at the time of purchase and the purchaser had no notice of the lien. Physical inspection of the property may reveal recent improvements or repairs which may indicate a greater probability that there may be hidden mechanics' liens. Affidavits and other statements by sellers, owners or other parties may provide some protection, but the most effective protection is title insurance to cover the risk.

§ 92.07(i) Indexing Errors and Idem Sonans.

Because of the great number of recorded instruments, the title searcher must use indexes to locate the instruments pertaining to a particular title or interest. If an indexing error is made, an instrument may be difficult or impossible for a title searcher to find. n262 In 1864, in distinguishing a Vermont case, the Iowa Supreme Court described the critical importance of indexes to title searchers:

> With us the practice has always been to search for titles through the names of the successive owners, and by means of the index. With us alienations of real estate are easy and numerous. There is not, as in Vermont, a registry in each town, but only one for each county. The record books are consequently numerous and voluminous. It is utterly impracticable to examine them page by page. It is stated in the argument that the record books in Lee county already number some thirty volumes. An index is a necessity... .
>
> A deed, in the language of counsel, might as well be "buried in the earth as in a mass of records without a clue to its whereabouts,' or in the language of the Supreme Court of Vermont,... the instrument might as well be written "on a slate or copied into the Recorder's family Bible, as into a book without being indexed'. n263

Although it is difficult or impossible to locate relevant documents without the aid of an index, the prevailing view in the United States is that the index is not an essential part of the record. n264 An innocent purchaser of real estate is deemed to have notice of a recorded document even if an error in indexing made it very difficult or impossible for a title searcher to find the document in the course of a reasonable search. n265 Some courts adopting this view have argued that it is unfair to penalize a party initiating recording because of the negligence of the recording officer. It also has been asserted that it would be impractical to require the party initiating recording to verify that the instrument has been properly recorded and indexed. The Supreme Court of Vermont asserted that if the recorder does not promptly complete the task of recording and indexing, several visits to the recorder's office might be necessary to see if the work has been properly completed. n266 Furthermore, the Court said that imposing on a grantee the responsibility to check the recorder's work would particularly disadvantage an "out-of-state filer." n267

Whether a purchaser should have record notice of a recorded but misindexed instrument is an issue of risk allocation. Frequently, misconduct by a party is the basis for allocating a risk; however, the reported cases dealing with misindexing usually involve situations where neither party was guilty of misconduct. n268 In allocating the risk to either the party initiating recording or the subsequent purchaser, the cost of avoiding the risk may be a consideration. The cost to the party initiating recording to review the work of the recorder would not be great. n269 At most, it would involve a single visit to the recorder's office by the party or his or her agent. Usually, repeated visits would not be necessary. The party initiating recording in many places will direct the recorder to return the original document to the party after the recording process has been completed. The return of the document to the party may serve as notice that the recorder believes that the process of recording has been completed. Upon receipt of such notice, the party could then verify that the instrument has been properly recorded and indexed. An out-of-state filer could have an agent such as a title company or attorney review the work of the recorder. On the other hand, the subsequent purchaser has no efficient way to uncover indexing errors. Generally, the only way for the purchaser to check would be by examining every recorded conveyance. Finally, the recording system goal of facilitating real estate transfer is better served by a more reliable record. The reliability of the record would be enhanced if the index is held to be an essential part of it and the party initiating the recording was required to review the recorder's work or bear the risk that an error was made. As applied to title searching, the doctrine of idem sonans accords constructive notice to different spellings of the record owner's name if they are pronounced alike and begin with the same letter. However, recent cases demonstrate courts' reluctance to apply or extend the doctrine. n270

§ 92.07(j) Encroachments.

Encroachment defects are ascertainable through surveys or physical inspection of the property but they normally will not appear on the record. There are two types of title defects due to encroachments:

(1) a structure on the subject property encroaches on adjacent property or violates a building line on the subject property established by a restriction for the benefit of adjacent property; or

(2) a structure on adjacent property encroaches on the subject property or violates a building line established for the benefit of the subject property. n271

If the encroachment is substantial, it creates a title defect which may render the title unmarketable. n272 Both types may present serious title problems. However, the first type is usually more serious because it may result in the costly removal or even destruction of the encroaching structure. The second type presents a serious problem when the encroachment interferes with the beneficial use of the subject property. An examination of a current survey of the property can provide a real estate purchaser with satisfactory protection against encroachments defects because the survey will normally reveal them. Where the encroachment involves a structure on the subject property crossing a building or lot line, title insurance coverage of the risk may be available. n273

§ 92.07(k) Planning, Zoning, Building and Environmental Regulations.

Restrictions on ownership and use created by planning, zoning, building and environmental laws traditionally have not been considered title matters, although violations have sometimes been considered title defects. n274 Recording systems typically do not include information regarding restrictions on ownership and land use created by such laws, even though these restrictions may have a dramatic impact on real estate value or suitability for a purchaser's intended use. By the 1960s, with powerful computer technology widely available, proposals surfaced to create computer data banks containing a wide variety of data about individual real estate parcels. n275 Some of these proposals recommended the inclusion of data on applicable planning, zoning and similar laws not contained in existing recording systems. n276 It is questionable whether land title records should contain information about planning, zoning and similar laws. The experience of the title industry is instructive.

Title insurance companies were reluctant to provide zoning coverage because of difficulties in determining the zoning classification and provisions applicable to specific properties. n277 Standard American Land Title Association title insurance policies exclude from coverage any losses caused by a "law, ordinance or government regulation (including, but not limited to, building and zoning ordinances ...)." n278 Under pressure from lending interests, the title insurance industry agreed to offer limited zoning coverage by endorsement to policies. n279 If title insurance companies find that zoning coverage involves personnel and administrative problems, government should anticipate similar difficulties in attempting to store zoning and other land use legislation information for particular parcels.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: negative easement easement w/30 "prior use" plat! subdiv! w/20 impli! w/30 easement easement w/30 statute of limitation* covenant w/10 run* w/10 land covenant w/30 statute of frauds inten! w/10 covenant w/10 run* w/10 bind dower w/10 deed or title curtesy w/10 deed or title homestead w/10 deed or title community property w/10 deed or title lis pendens w/10 deed or title idem sonans w/10 deed or title encroach! w/10 deed or title

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 221. Portions of the text in § 92.07 have been adapted from John L. McCormack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61 (1992), and used with the permission of the William Mitchell Law Review.

(n2)Footnote 222. U.S. Const. art. VI.

(n3)Footnote 223. I.R.C. §§ 6321, 6322, 6323; George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages § 221A (2d ed. 1970).

(n4)Footnote 224. See Unif. Fed. Tax Lien Registration Act, 7A U.L.A. 373.

(n5)Footnote 225. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 62 (1957). The presumption may be based on case law or a statute. See Utah Code Ann. § 57-4a-4 for an example of a very specific set of presumptions raised by recordation.

(n6)Footnote 226. The purchaser may prevail where the true owner is estopped from claiming priority.

(n7)Footnote 227. Stone v. French, 14 P. 530 (Kan. 1887).

(n8)Footnote 228. Ind. Code Ann. § 32-1-2-11; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183, § 4 (Law. Co-op.); and Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 27, § 342.

(n9)Footnote 229. Erck v. Church, 11 S.W. 794 (Tenn. 1889); Wilson v. Braden, 49 S.E. 409 (W. Va. 1904); Pittman v. Cottonwood Sch. Dist. No. 4, Coal County, 614 P.2d 582 (Okla. App. 1980). Denman v. Gans, 607 N.W.2d 788 (Minn. Ct. App. 2000) (finding that, between co-tenants, the limitations period does not begin to run until there has been an ouster).

(n10)Footnote 230. State ex. rel. Haman v. Fox, 594 P.2d 1093 (Idaho 1979); Leesch v. Krause, 65 N.E.2d 370 (Ill. 1946); Northwest Cities Gas Co. v. Western Fuel Co., 123 P.2d 771 (Wash. 1942); Haines v. Galles, 303 P.2d 1004 (Wyo. 1956).

(n11)Footnote 231. Tiller v. Hinton, 482 N.E.2d 946 (Ohio 1985). Canali v. Satre, appeal denied, 699 N.E.2d 1030 (Ill. 1998). 688 N.E.2d 351, 353 (Ill. App. Ct. 1997) ("an easement implied from a prior existing use arises by law when one portion of an estate derives a benefit and advantage from another, of a permanent, open, and visible character; when that portion is severed, the grantee takes that portion with all the benefits and burdens that appear to belong to it"); Tedder v. Alford, review denied, 501 S.E.2d 917 (N.C. 1998). 493 S.E.2d 487 (N.C. App. 1997); Penny v. Burch, 941 P.2d 1049 (Or. App. 1997).

(n12)Footnote 232. Otero v. Pacheo, 612 P.2d 1335 (N.M. App. 1980) (concluding that the purchasers had notice from the "visibility" of a buried sewer line); see also, Annotation, Implied Easement in Respect of Drains, Pipes or Sewers Upon Severance of Tract, 58 A.L.R. 824 (1929).

(n13)Footnote 233. Mugass v. Smith, 206 P.2d 332 (Wash. 1949); Crescent Harbor Water Co. v. Lyseng, 753 P.2d 555 (Wash. App. 1988).

(n14)Footnote 234. 206 P.2d 332 (Wash. 1949).

(n15)Footnote 235. Powell on Real Property § 15.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n16)Footnote 236. Powell on Real Property § 15.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender). Curtesy was a right given to surviving widowers.

(n17)Footnote 237. Thomas E. Atkinson, Handbook of the Law of Wills § 34 (2d ed. 1953).

(n18)Footnote 238. Statutes in some jurisdictions protect bona fide purchasers of community real estate where title was held in the name of only one of the spouses. W.S. Mcclanahan, Community Property in the United States § 9.10 (1982).

(n19)Footnote 239. Smith v. Fuller, 115 N.W. 912 (Iowa 1908).

(n20)Footnote 240. In a few states, recital of the marital status of individual parties to instruments is one of the qualifications for recordation. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 35 (2d ed. 1970).

(n21)Footnote 241. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 276 (2d ed. 1970).

(n22)Footnote 242. The term "curtesy" is still used in a few states. "Curtesy" in these states refers to a form of dower for surviving husbands. Powell on Real Property § 15.05 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n23)Footnote 243. Powell on Real Property § 15.04 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n24)Footnote 244. Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 45a-436.; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 189, § 1.

(n25)Footnote 245. 2 Rufford G. Patton and Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles §§ 395, 396 (1957).

(n26)Footnote 246. For example, in Illinois the instrument of conveyance must contain "a clause expressly releasing or waiving [the homestead] ... right." 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/27. Where the right is limited to a maximum value, a conveyance made by one spouse may be effective to transfer the property that is subject to the homestead right to the extent of the land's excess in value over the statutory amount. The deed coveys no interest and the title remains in the grantor for all homestead property whose value does not exceed the statutory amount. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 159 N.E. 274 (Ill. 1927); White v. Van Patten, 117 N.E. 472 (Ill. 1917).

(n27)Footnote 247. Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 275 (2d ed. 1970).

(n28)Footnote 248. Model Act Limiting Actions with Respect to Marital Interests in Real Property, § 3 (reprinted in its entirety in Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 192-194 (1960)).

(n29)Footnote 249. For example, in Illinois, the period is twenty years. "Failure to properly convey homestead shall be disregarded after twenty years from the date of conveyance in the absence of evidence that homestead is being claimed by virtue of such failure to convey." Ill. State Bar Ass'n, Revised Recommended Uniform Rules for the examination of Abstracts of Title Rule 6-2 (1959).

(n30)Footnote 250. These states are Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin. Wisconsin joined the community property states in 1986 when the Wisconsin Marital Property Act became effective. See W.S. Mcclanahan, Community Property in the United States 270-86 (1982).

(n31)Footnote 251. Idaho Code § 32-912; La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2347; Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 123.230; and N.M. Stat. Ann. § 40-3-13.

(n32)Footnote 252. In Marquez v. Marquez, 513 P.2d 713 (N.M. 1973), the titled spouse purported to convey community real estate to his son and his wife. The grantor's wife died and the son and his wife then sued to quiet title in the property. The New Mexico Supreme Court held that the grantor's deed was a nullity because his wife did not join and, therefore, he was the owner of the property. California also requires conveyances of community real estate to be made jointly by both spouses. Where the real estate is titled in the name of one of the spouses, however, a conveyance made by the titled spouse is not void, only voidable. A conveyance made by the titled spouse to a purchaser in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation is presumed to be valid. Furthermore, after a conveyance by the titled spouse of community real estate held in the name of that spouse only has been recorded for one year, an action to set it aside is barred by statute. Cal. Civil Code § 5127. But see Wis. Stat. Ann. § 766.57 which protects bona fide purchasers who take title from a solely titled spouse.

(n33)Footnote 253. Admiral Bldrs. Corp. v. Robert Hall Village, 427 N.E.2d 1032, 1035 (Ill. App. Ct. 1981). Matter of 2003 & 2007 Ala Wai Blvd, City & County of Honolulu, 944 P.2d 1341 (Haw. App. 1997) (lis pendens gives constructive notice to any prospective purchaser that the property is the subject of ongoing litigation and that the purchaser will be bound by the outcome of the litigation); Cortellesso v. Zanni, 694 A.2d 751 (R.I. 1997); Disabatino v. Salicete, 695 A.2d 1118 (Del. 1997); Breeding v. NJH Enters., LLC., 940 P.2d 502 (Okla. 1997); Garza v. Pope, 949 S.W.2d 7 (Tex. App. 1997); Redondo Const. Corp. v. U.S., 157 F.3d 1060 (6th Cir. 1998) (under Kentucky law, lis pendens notice alone does not create lien on property, referring to KRS 382.440); Sheehan v. Mahoney Chevrolet-Olds, Inc., 23 F. Supp. 2d 926 (N.D. Ind. 1998) (purpose is to give constructive notice to third parties); U.S. v. Property Identified as Lot Numbered 718, 20 F. Supp. 2d 27 (D.D.C. 1998) (lis pendens in civil forfeiture action); In re Lee, 223 B.R. 594 (Bankr. M.D.Fla. 1998) (Under Florida law, filing lis pendens does not create a lien); In re Borison, 226 B.R. 779 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998) (purpose under Oklahoma law); In re Medlin, 229 B.R. 353 (Bankr. E.D.N.C. 1998) (under North Carolina law, lis pendens puts world on notice of attachment to property); Lewis v. Jordan Inv., Inc., 725 A.2d 495 (D.C. 1999) (under lis pendens, one acquiring interest in property while suit is pending is bound by the results of the litigation); Russell v. Lawrence, 507 S.E.2d 161 (Ga. App. 1998) (referring to Ga. Code Ann. § 23-1-18); Grubb v. Childers, 705 N.E.2d 180 (Ind. App. 1998) (lis pendens allows person to put third parties on notice that interest in real property is subject of pending legal dispute); Crawfordsville Apt. Co. v. Key Trust Co. of Florida, 692 N.E.2d 478 (Ind.

App. 1998) (referring to West's A.I.C. 34010401 et seq); Savasta v. Duffy, 683 N.Y.S.2d 511 (N.Y. App. Div. 1999) (cooperative apartment shares are not real property, and no lis pendens is required); Lake George Park, L.L.C. v. IBM Mid America Employees Federal Credit Union, 576 N.W.2d 463 (Minn. App. 1998) (lis pendens provides notice of claim but does not change parties' rights); Interlaken Service Corp. v. Interlaken Condo. Ass'n, Inc., 588 N.W. 2d 262 (Wis. App. 1998) (plaintiff which brought action for breach of contract seeking money damages against condominium association could properly file lis pendens, since any judgment would be a judgment against each unit in a proportional share); TSA Int'l Ltd. v. Shimizu Corp., 990 P.2d 713 (Haw. 1999) (stating that "[a]t common law under the doctrine of lis pendens the mere existence of a lawsuit affecting real property was considered to impart constructive notice that anyone who acquired an interest in the property after the suit was filed would be bound by any judgment in that suit").

(n34)Footnote 254. 5303 Realty Corp. v. O & Y Equity Corp., 476 N.E.2d 276, 280 (N.Y. 1984). In re Borison, 226 B.R. 779 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998) (lis pendens supports jurisdiction, power, and control which court retains over property).

(n35)Footnote 255. See, e.g., Admiral Bldrs. Corp. v. Robert Hall Village, 427 N.E.2d 1032, 1036 (Ill. App. 1981); In re Thomas and Agnes Carvel Found., 36 F. Supp. 2d 144 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (state statute [N.Y. McKinney's CPLR 6501] requires plaintiff to file lis pendens, and federal district court could not validly file lis pendens with land records at request of plaintiff).

(n36)Footnote 256. See, e.g., 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/2-1901. In re Borison, 226 B.R. 779 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998) (party in federal action must still comply with statutory requirements of state law); Stratman v. Leisnoi, Inc., 969 P.2d 1139 (Alaska 1998) (administrative action to decertify native village was pending action for purposes of lis pendens statute, referring to AS 09.45.940); Joge Investments, Inc. v. Millennium Capital, 724 So. 2d 728 (Fla. App. 1999) (lis pendens was defective when it did not make proper statement of relief sought and failed to include the time of the institution of the action); Rose v. Montt Assets, Inc., 673 N.Y.S.2d 406 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998) (litigant must strictly comply with statutory requirements); Doughty v. Birkholtz, 964 P.2d 1108 (Or. App. 1998) (subject of suit must be actual interest in property, not a speculative future one).

(n37)Footnote 257. See generally Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 12.4 (2d ed. 1985). Westminster v. Brannan Sand & Gravel Co., Inc., 940 P.2d 393 (Colo. 1997) (finding that the mechanic's lien relates back to the time the lienholder commenced work).

(n38)Footnote 258. The seriousness of this risk is indicated by the claims experience of title insurance companies. Their aggregate annual claim payments due to losses caused by mechanics' liens have ranged over a number of years from 8.7% to 22% of total annual claims paid. Jack Tickner, Mechanics Liens, Title News, Jan. 1976, at 40.

(n39)Footnote 259. For example, in Minnesota, the period is 120 days. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 514.08. The date of completion may be at issue and difficult to determine. See, e.g., Daily v. Mid-America Bank & Trust Co. of Carbondale, 474 N.E.2d 788 (Ill. App. 1985).

(n40)Footnote 260. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 12.4 (2d ed. 1985).

(n41)Footnote 261. Robert Kratovil, Modern Mortgage Law and Practice § 214 (1972).

(n42)Footnote 262. In some places with official grantor-grantee indexes, it is impossible to find desired information using the official index, which results in the searcher resorting to an unofficial tract index to find the desired information. With photographic copying methods, recording errors are presently rare. However, consider First Constitution Bank v. Harbor Village L.P., 230 Conn. 807 (1994), where the Supreme Court of Connecticut validated a mechanic's lien even though the description of the property, required by law to be attached to the certificate of the mechanic's lien, became detached from the certificate before it was recorded.

(n43)Footnote 263. Barney v. McCarty, 15 Iowa 510, 520-21 (1864). Currently, there are hundreds of thousands and even millions of documents lodged in some recorders' offices. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms [unpublished] II-21 (1979).

(n44)Footnote 264. Gregor v. City of Fairbanks, 599 P.2d 743 (Alaska 1979); Haner v. Bruce, 499 A.2d 792 (Vt. 1985); and 4 American Law of Property § 17.25 (A. James Casner ed., 1952); Annotation, Failure Properly to Index Conveyance or Mortgage of Realty Affecting Constructive Realty Affecting Constructive Notice, 63 A.L.R. 1057 (1929). Statutes in some states make the index an essential part of the record. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 68 (2d ed. 1957).

(n45)Footnote 265. Gregor v. City of Fairbanks, 599 P.2d 743 (Alaska 1979); Haner v. Bruce, 499 A.2d 792 (Vt. 1985).

(n46)Footnote 266. Haner v. Bruce, 499 A.2d 792 (Vt. 1985).

(n47)Footnote 267. Haner v. Bruce, 499 A.2d 792 (Vt. 1985) Some courts, however, have held that the index does constitute an essential part of the record, and the title searcher will therefore be considered to have no constructive notice of a recorded instrument that cannot be found through the official index. D. Barlow Burke, Real Estate Transactions 178 (1993). Courts in Iowa, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Washington, and Wisconsin treat indexing as the final necessary step in recording. An innocent purchaser therefore has no obligation to check the record for mistakes in indexing. Id. In Mlecka v. Citrus County, 610 So. 2d 677 (Fla. App. 1992), a Florida appellate court also refused to hold the innocent purchaser responsible for indexing errors. See also Curtis J. Berger & Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfer and Finance 756 (4th ed. 1993).

(n48)Footnote 268. See, e.g., Mortensen v. Lingo, 99 F. Supp. 585 (D. Alaska 1951).

(n49)Footnote 269. See Prouty v. Marshall, 74 A. 550 (Pa. 1909) (holding that a person who initiated recordation has a duty to see that the instrument was properly recorded).

(n50)Footnote 270. See, e.g., Teschke v. Keller, 650 N.E.2d 1279 (Mass. App. 1995) (recording under hyphenated name insufficient to provide constructive notice); Orr v. Byers, 244 Cal. Rptr. 13 (1988) (variant spelling did not impart constructive notice to bona fide purchaser).

(n51)Footnote 271. 2 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 676 (2d ed. 1957).

(n52)Footnote 272. 2 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 676 (2d ed. 1957); Warner v. Denis, 933 P.2d 1372 (Haw. App. 1997) (encroachment was sufficient to make title to remainder of property unmarketable).

(n53)Footnote 273. Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role, 1985 A.B.A. Sect. Pub. Real Property, Probate and Trust Law 160 (James M. Pedowitz ed.); Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide to Title Insurance 7-17 (Ill. Inst. for CLE, 1984); Charles B. Allott, The Ebb and Flow of the Public Trust Doctrine, 48 RI Bar J. 5 (June 2000).

(n54)Footnote 274. 2 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 676 (2d ed. 1957). WorldCom Network Services, Inc. v. Thompson, 698 N.E.2d 1233 (Ind. App. 1998) (public highway right-of-way established by 1905 law not required to be recorded in county recorder's office).

(n55)Footnote 275. See Robert N. Cook, Land Data Systems: The Next Step, 43 U. Cin. L. Rev. 527, 527-38 (1974).

(n56)Footnote 276. For a fairly recent proposal,see A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U. L. Rev. 196, 209-13 (1984).

(n57)Footnote 277. See Charles C. Smith, Title Insurance and Zoning Coverage, the Guarantor, Spring 1976, at 3.

These difficulties included retaining persons competent to sort through complex zoning ordinances and the poor record-keeping of some municipalities. Smith also suggested that providing zoning coverage might constitute the unauthorized practice of law.

(n58)Footnote 278. Usually, this provision is found in Part One of the "Exclusions From Coverage" in standard A.L.T.A. policies. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 3.2 (1986).

(n59)Footnote 279. See Allen Axelrod et al., Land Transfer and Finance: Cases and Materials 798-99 (3d ed. 1986).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.08

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.08 Types of Recording Acts.

[Go To Supp]

At the time that American states or territories first adopted recording statutes, there was no uniform or model recording act. As a result, there is much diversity in the specific wording of these acts. However, some of the acts are similar because some states or territories modeled their legislation after the recording statutes of other states. n280 While the recording acts are far from uniform, there are only three basic types:

(1) race,

(2) notice, and

(3) race-notice. n281

Recording acts operate by conferring priorities on persons who qualify for the protection of the acts. The three types of acts differ in the requisites for qualifying for protection.

§ 92.08(a) Race Recording Acts.

The race recording act is the oldest type of recording act. n282 Such an act protects the first purchaser to record. While one must be a purchaser to be protected, notice or knowledge of prior unrecorded claims is irrelevant. For example, if the owner conveys to Purchaser 1, who does not record, and then to Purchaser 2, who does record, Purchaser 2 has priority over Purchaser 1. It does not matter whether Purchaser 2 had knowledge or notice of the conveyance to Purchaser 1. This type of recording act is called "race" because it involves a race to record. The purchaser who wins the race prevails.

Race recording acts of general application are found in only two states: Louisiana and North Carolina. n283 Some other states have race statutes applicable to mortgages, but have notice or race-notice statutes for other conveyances. n284

The strengths of a race recording act are simplicity and certainty of application. The purchaser shown by the record to be the first to record has priority. The record is very reliable because notice or knowledge is irrelevant. There is no chance that the first person to record may be disqualified due to knowledge or notice of some prior unrecorded claim. The weakness of a race recording act is that it gives no deference at all to the fundamental notion of Anglo-American justice that persons who take with notice of an interest should be bound by it. n285

§ 92.08(b) Notice Recording Acts.

About half of the states have notice type recording acts. n286 The notice type recording acts developed mainly through judicial decisions interpreting race recording acts. By the early 1800s, courts had held that if a subsequent purchaser had notice of a prior unrecorded instrument, the subsequent purchaser could not attain priority over the prior claimant. To hold otherwise, would work a fraud on the prior claimant. n287 Gradually, legislation was enacted to require those seeking the protection of recording acts to be without notice of prior unrecorded claims to prevail over them.

Notice recording acts confer on subsequent purchasers, who pay value without notice or knowledge of the prior unrecorded claims, priority over them. One need not record to qualify for the protection of a notice type recording act. For example, if the owner conveys to Purchaser 1, who does not record, and then to Purchaser 2 who pays value without knowledge or notice of the conveyance to Purchaser 1, Purchaser 2 has priority even if Purchaser 2 has not recorded. If Purchaser 1 then records before Purchaser 2 does, the recordation has no effect. Purchaser 2 retains priority.

Notice statutes are more in accordance with our notions of fairness and justice than race recording acts. Under a notice act, a purchaser who takes with notice of a prior conflicting unrecorded claim is not protected while such a purchaser will be protected under a race statute. Notice recording acts, therefore, may lead to fairer results. But this greater fairness is achieved at the expense of efficiency and reliability of the record. Whether a subsequent purchaser had knowledge or notice of the prior unrecorded claim may depend on facts that do not appear on record and that may require extensive investigation and litigation to determine.

§ 92.08(c) Race-Notice Recording Acts.

Race-notice statutes are in force in about half of the states. n288 The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act includes a race-notice statute. n289 As is the case under notice statutes, a person seeking the protection of a race-notice act must be a purchaser for value without knowledge or notice of the prior unrecorded claim. However, race-notice statutes have an additional requirement to qualify a purchaser for protection. The person seeking protection must record before the prior unrecorded claim is recorded. For example, the owner conveys the real estate to Purchaser 1 who does not immediately record. Then the owner conveys the same interest to Purchaser 2 who pays value without knowledge or notice of the prior conveyance. Before Purchaser 2 records, Purchaser 1 records. Purchaser 1 has priority over Purchaser 2 even though Purchaser 2 paid value without notice of the conveyance to Purchaser 1. Recordation by Purchaser 1 before Purchaser 2 results in it being impossible for Purchaser 2 to qualify for the protection of a race-notice recording act.

The rationale for the additional requirement that a claim be recorded first is not clear. It has been said that such a requirement encourages prompt recordation because a purchaser can not qualify for protection until recordation occurs. On the other hand, pure notice statutes also appear to promote prompt recordation. Under pure notice, until a transferee records, priority may be lost immediately to a subsequent purchaser without notice when the subsequent purchase occurs, with no need for the subsequent purchaser to record.

It is possible that the combination of race and notice elements was a product of deliberate choice. The race aspect of race-notice statutes may be due to a notion that one who seeks the benefits of recording laws should be required to record. On the other hand, the basis for race-notice may be mainly historical and due to inertia. As the early race recording acts evolved to include a notice element, the "race to the records" feature may have been retained in some cases without serious thought being given to whether its retention was appropriate and based on sound policy. A number of the early American recording acts were patterned after the English registry act adopted in 1707 for Middlesex County. n290 It is inaccurate to refer to this English statute as a recording act. n291 However, this law was much like an American pure race recording act. The American statutes based on it added an express notice element. These early recording acts, in turn, influenced recording statutes adopted in many other states and territories. n292 The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act proposes a race-notice statute in § 3-202. The comments to the section do not explain why a race-notice type act was chosen instead of pure notice. Published commentaries by the drafters of the Uniform Act concerning the act do not address the question. n293

§ 92.08(d) Notice or Race-Notice: Lessons from Illinois and Colorado.

It is usually not very difficult to determine whether a recording act was intended to be pure notice or race-notice. For examples, the statutes in Michigan, New Jersey, New York and Wisconsin were obviously intended to be race-notice. The Florida, Massachusetts and Texas statutes are clearly pure notice acts. Although a statute on its face may appear to be one type or the other, judicial gloss may make the appearance misleading. For example, respected scholars continue to classify the Illinois act as a notice type, ignoring an 1882 Illinois Supreme Court decision n294 applying the act as if it were race-notice. n295

In Simmons v. Stum, n296 the property was owned by McHenry. McHenry mortgaged it to the plaintiff, Stum, who did not record until much later. McHenry then transferred the property to Cochran and Strong who knew about Stum's unrecorded mortgage and, therefore, took subject to it. Cochran and Strong then conveyed the property to defendant Simmons who claimed she purchased it in good faith. The Court suspected that she knew or had reason to know of Stum's mortgage, although the record contained no direct proof of any such knowledge or notice. The Court decided that it was unnecessary to determine whether Simmons knew or had notice of Stum's mortgage. Two days after the property was conveyed to Simmons, the mortgage to Stum was finally recorded. Because Simmons failed to plead and prove that her deed was recorded before Stum's mortgage, the Court held that she took subject to the mortgage. If the Illinois recording act had been a typical notice statute, Simmons would have earned priority at the instant she paid value without notice for the property. Whether or when she recorded would be immaterial.

The Illinois statute provides:

> All deeds, mortgages and other instruments of writing which are authorized to be recorded, shall take effect, and be in force, from and after the time of filing the same for record, and not before, as to all creditors and subsequent purchasers, without notice; and all such deeds and title papers shall be adjudged void as to all such creditors and subsequent purchasers, without notice, until the same shall be filed for record. n297

The statute as quoted in the Court's opinion lacks a few commas found in the modern version. The Court interpreted the statute as meaning that the deed to Simmons could not cut off Stum's mortgage until the deed was recorded. This interpretation seems to be a misapplication of the statute. The language referring to instruments not being effective as to creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice seems to refer to an unrecorded prior conveyance, not a subsequent conveyance made to a transferee claiming priority over the previous unrecorded instrument. The Court's interpretation applies the "not taking effect until recorded" language to Simmons' deed, a conveyance subsequent to the prior unrecorded one, Stum's mortgage. n298 This is contrary to the usual operation of recording acts which void or subordinate prior unrecorded claims in favor of subsequent transferees who qualify for the protection of the acts.

Because of Simmons v. Stum, it is not completely clear whether the Illinois recording act is notice, race-notice or unique unto itself. n299 While the status of the Illinois recording act has been muddled for over a century, the distinction of having the most muddled status probably belonged to the Colorado recording act. In 1968, the Colorado Supreme Court labelled the act a "race-notice statute." n300 A dissenting opinion in a subsequent Supreme Court case called this characterization "obiter dictum" and concluded that the statute was "pure notice" n301 with the majority's approval. n302 In 1984, the Colorado act was amended to include the following statement: "[t]his is a race-notice recording act." n303

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: recording act* w/10 race or notice or race-notice

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 280. 4 American Law of Property § 17.5 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n2)Footnote 281. Lewis M. Simes, A Handbook for More Efficient Conveyancing 18 (1961); Corwin W. Johnson, Purpose and Scope of Recording Statutes, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 231 (1962). Some commentators also discuss a fourth type of recording act, period of grace. Period of grace recording acts preserved the priority of the prior unrecorded instrument for a brief time, usually fifteen days, during which its holder was given an opportunity to record. Period of grace provisions were appropriate in the past when travel and communication were relatively slow. Delaware was the last state with a period of grace statute which was repealed in 1968. 56 Del. Laws 318.

(n3)Footnote 282. Carol M. Rose, Crystals and Mud in Property Law, 40 Stan. L. Rev. 577, 586 (1988).

(n4)Footnote 283. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 2721, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 47-18. North Carolina, however, may have become a race-notice state by judicial decision. See, e.g., Rowe v. Walker, aff'd by, 455 S.E.2d 160 (N.C. 1995). 441 S.E.2d 156 (N.C. 1994) (John, J., dissenting) (finding that the state's recording statutes require a purchaser to be innocent and without notice, and citing Hill v. Pinelawn Mem'l Park, 304 N.C. 159 (1981), where the state Supreme Court held purchasers must be innocent to be protected by recording statutes).

(n5)Footnote 284. 4 American Law of Property § 17.5, 545 n.63 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n6)Footnote 285. See, e.g., Tulk v. Moxhay, 41 Eng. Rep. 1143 (1848).

(n7)Footnote 286. Ala. Code § 35-4-90; Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 33-411 & 33-412; Ark. Code Ann. § 14-15-404; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-10; Del. Code Ann. Tit. 25, § 153; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 695.01; Iowa Code Ann. § 558.41; Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 58-2221-58-2223; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 383.080; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. Tit. 33, § 201; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183, § 4; Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 442.380, 442.390, 442.400; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:3-a; N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 14-9-1-14-9-3; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.25; Okla. Stat. Ann. Tit. 16, §§ 15 & 16; R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-11-1; S.C. Code Ann. § 30-7-10; Tenn. Code Ann. § 66-5-106; Tex. Prop. Code Ann. §§ 13.001 & 13.002; Vt. Stat. Ann. Tit. 27, § 342; Va. Code Ann. § 55-96; W. Va. Code §§ 40-1-8 & 40-1-9. While Alabama enacted a notice recording act, Ala. Code § 35-4-90, it may have become race-notice by recent judicial decision. See Baxter v. South Trust Bank of Dothan, 584 So. 2d 801, 804 (Ala. 1989); Nelson v. Barnett Recovery Corp., 652 So. 2d 279. 1994 Ala. Civ. App. LEXIS 544, 4 (noting that "when two or more persons claim an interest in the same piece of property, the order of priority is determined by the order in which the instruments or documents creating the interests are filed for record"). South Carolina, like Alabama, may have become race-notice by a recent judicial decision, despite notice statute. See Mi Co., Ltd. v. Mclean, 482 S.E.2d 597, 602 (S.C. App. 1997).

(n8)Footnote 287. Francis S. Philbrick, Limits of Record Search and Therefore of Notice (Part 1), 93 U. Pa. L. Rev. 125, 159 (1944).

(n9)Footnote 288. Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080; Cal. Civ. Code § 1107; Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 38-35-108 & 38-35-105; D.C. Code Ann. §§ 45-801 & 45-802; Ga. Code Ann. § 695.01; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 502-83; Ind. Code Ann. §§ 32-1-2-11 & 32-1-2-16; 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/30 (by judicial decision, this act is considered a race-notice act); Idaho Code § 55-812; Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 3-203; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.29; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.34;

Miss. Code Ann. § 89-5-5; Mont. Code Ann. §§ 70-21-201, 70-21-302 & 70-21-304; Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-237 & 76-238; Nev. Rev. Stat. §§ 111.320 & 111.325; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-1; N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 291; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-19-41; Or. Rev. Stat. § 93.640; Pa. Stat. Ann. Tit. 21, § 351; S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 43-28-17; Utah Code Ann. § 57-3-103.; Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 65.08.070; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.08; Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-121. Alabama may also be a race-notice jurisdiction. See Baxter v. SouthTrust Bank of Dothan, 584 So. 2d 801, 804 (Ala. 1989).

(n10)Footnote 289. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-202, 14 U.L.A. 281 (1990).

(n11)Footnote 290. Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 10 (2d ed. 1957).

(n12)Footnote 291. Ralph W. Aigler, Foreword; Symposium--Notice and Recordation, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 221, 225 (1962). The English statute required the subsequent purchaser to record first to prevail over the prior claimant. While the statute did not require the subsequent purchaser to be without notice, it appears that some English courts denied priority to subsequent purchasers who took with notice, even though they recorded first. See Hine v. Dodd, 26 Eng. Rep. 569 (1741).

(n13)Footnote 292. According to the Pattons, the Pennsylvania statute alone was the model for the recording acts of about one-third of the states. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 10 (2d ed. 1957).

(n14)Footnote 293. See, e.g., Peter B. Maggs, Land Records of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act, 1981 S. Ill. L. J. 491.

(n15)Footnote 294. Simmons v. Stum, 101 Ill. 454 (1882).

(n16)Footnote 295. See,e.g., 4 American Law of Property § 17.5 (A. James Casner ed., 1952 & Supp. 1977).

(n17)Footnote 296. 101 Ill. 454 (1882).

(n18)Footnote 297. The wording of the statute still remains unchanged. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/30.

(n19)Footnote 298. For additional criticism of Simmons v. Stum, see, Ralph W. Aigler, Cases on Titles 848, n.17 (3d ed. 1942). Professor Aigler concluded that the Illinois Supreme Court "read something into the statute." Commentators have put forward a creative interpretation of Simmons v. Stum: "The statute made unrecorded instruments void 'as to all creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice.' The first conveyee in the case took a mortgage rather than a deed, and was therefore a 'creditor.' Since the word 'subsequent' in the statute seemed to modify only 'purchasers' and not 'creditors,' the Court reasoned that even prior creditors were protected, and hence that the second conveyee could prevail only by recording first." Roger A. Cunningham et al., the Law of Property 777, n.17 (1984). The Court does not articulate its reasoning as clearly as this comment indicates. The authors' version of the Court's reasoning may be correct, but it is not fully supported by the rather cryptic opinion of the Illinois Court. The reference to "creditors" in the Illinois recording act was added in 1833, after the Illinois Supreme Court held that judgment lien creditors were not entitled to recording act protection, in order to bring them within the protection of the act. See Guard v. Rowan, 3 Ill. (Breese) 499 (1830). The word "creditors" in the statute refers to judgment lien creditors and not to mortgagees or creditors in general. Martin v. Dryden, 6 Ill. (1 Scam.) 187, 217 (1844).

(n20)Footnote 299. The Illinois recording act is generally believed to be a race-notice act. Patrick M. McFadden, Oral Transfers of Land in Illinois, 1988 U. Ill. L. Rev. 667, 702 n.161.

(n21)Footnote 300. Eastwood v. Shedd, 442 P.2d 423, 425 (Colo. 1968).

(n22)Footnote 301. Page v. Frees-Krey, Inc., 617 P.2d 1188, 1200 (Colo. 1980).

(n23)Footnote 302. Page v. Frees-Krey, Inc., 617 P.2d 1188, 1191 (Colo. 1980). It is clear that the majority's approval of the dissent's characterization was obiter dictum.

(n24)Footnote 303. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-109.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.09

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.09 Qualifying for Recording Act Protection.

[Go To Supp]

Notice and race-notice recording acts are statutory expressions of the equitable doctrine of bona fide purchase. Unrecorded claims evidenced by written instruments are subordinated by these acts in favor of bona fide purchasers. n304 The basic idea is that the expectations of a person who changes his or her position by paying value in reliance on the record as indicating the true state of title and ownership should not be defeated. Persons who knew about or could have discovered the existence of prior adverse claims through reasonable investigations should not be protected. n305 Therefore, the application of a notice or race-notice recording act may involve two central inquiries:

(1) Did the person seeking protection pay sufficient value?; and

(2) Did the person do so without knowledge or notice of the prior claim?

Where a race-notice recording act applies, there is the additional question of whether the person seeking protection was the first to record. This last question usually presents no great difficulty because instruments are usually date and time stamped when they are presented for recordation. The stamp supplies at least presumptive evidence of the time of recording and cases where recording of conflicting claims has occurred at the same instant are very rare. Usually, the recordations will be separated by at least a few minutes. n306

§ 92.09(a) Burden of Proof and Presumptions.

The determination of whether a person is entitled to the protection of a notice or race-notice recording act may involve issues of payment of value and notice. The practical effectiveness of a recording system as the foundation of land title assurance for real estate purchasers depends substantially on the allocation of the burden of proof n307 on these issues. n308 If the subsequent purchaser seeking protection has the burden of proof on these issues, recording systems will generally provide weaker title assurance than if the burden were placed elsewhere.

The recording statutes generally do not allocate the burden of proof. n309 The cases support a variety of positions: n310 burden on prior unrecorded claimants; burden on persons seeking the protection of the act as good faith purchasers; burden on purchasers of equitable rather than legal interests; burden on subsequent purchasers but not on judgment lien creditors; and burden on subsequent purchasers (on the payment of value issue) and on unrecorded prior claimants (on the notice issue).

While some authorities disagreed, the subsequent purchaser usually had the burden of proving good faith and payment of value under the equitable doctrine of bona fide purchase. n311 The purchaser was required to plead and prove that the purchase was for value and in good faith. n312 This requirement had a practical basis. In most cases, compared to other parties, the purchaser was likely to have more knowledge about and access to facts concerning the circumstances of the purchase. Nelson v. Hughes, n313 a recent case involving the allocation of the burden of proof under a recording act, adopted this basis for placing the burden on a subsequent purchaser.

Where the problem is the allocation of the burden of proof under the doctrine of bona fide purchase where a recording act is not involved, it may be appropriate to consider access to proof, relative fault or other factors. n314 When the problem arises under a recording act, however, the advantage should tip strongly in favor of the subsequent purchaser. A basic goal of modern recording acts is to facilitate real estate transactions by providing information to purchasers which should enable them to ascertain ownership and the state of title. Reliability of the record is central to the achievement of this goal. The record is more reliable to purchasers if the burden of establishing the validity or priority of non-record claims is on those holding them. If the burden of proof is on the party who failed to record, the record is, prima facie the true state of the title and, as a result, it is more reliable. n315

§ 92.09(b) Purchaser for Value.

Almost all recording acts protect only purchasers for value. Even if the applicable statute simply refers to "purchasers," without mentioning "value" or "valuable consideration," payment is required to qualify a party for protection. n316 The basic notion is that protection should be limited to persons who may have parted with value in reliance on title being as indicated by the record. Actual reliance on the record is not required. A person who paid value without notice of a prior unrecorded interest may be protected even if such person did not examine the record at all.

§ 92.09(b)(1) Purchaser for Value: Status of Devisees and Other Donees.

Heirs, devisees, and donees are not entitled to recording act protection because they are not purchasers for value. n317 While an heir or devisee takes subject to unrecorded conveyances made by the ancestor or testator, purchasers from the heir or devisee may be protected. n318

§ 92.09(b)(2) Value: Full Fair Market to Nominal Consideration.

Clearly, money or property approximately equal to the fair market value of the interest purchased would be "value." There is general agreement that less than fair market value will suffice if the amount is not grossly inadequate. n319 The difficult question is how much below full fair market may the consideration be and still satisfy the payment of value requirement. Nominal consideration has been held to be sufficient, n320 but usually more is required. n321

If the law required approximately full fair market to satisfy the payment of value requirement, the reliability of recording systems as sources of title assurance for purchasers would be impaired. If full consideration were required, there would always be a substantial risk that a court might subsequently find that the consideration was insufficient. A purchaser who paid a substantial amount might be held unprotected because the amount paid fell short of fair market value. The benefits of recording acts should not be withheld from persons simply because they struck good bargains. The guideline should be whether the purchasers substantially changed their position in exchange for the conveyance of the interest to them.

It is questionable whether the payment of nominal consideration should suffice. The basic policy of recording acts and the doctrine of bona fide purchase is that those who materially change their positions should be protected. Payment of a nominal consideration involves no such change of position. One who pays a nominal consideration is practically a donee. On the other hand, a rule that nominal consideration is sufficient does have the administrative advantages of certainty and ease of application. This is true because once it is established that payment was made, the value payment requirement is satisfied. There is no need to inquire into the adequacy of payment.

§ 92.09(b)(3) Value: Promise as Value.

Generally, a promise to give valuable consideration is insufficient. n322 Even a promise to pay value secured by a property security interest will not suffice. n323 If the promise is revocable, it does not involve a permanent change of position and, as a result, it is not supported by the basic policy that only purchasers who materially change their position should be protected. However, there may be cases where the promisor has irrevocably and materially changed position. In such cases, the promisor should be entitled to the protection of the recording act. n324

A non-negotiable promissory note is not value for recording act purposes. n325 Negotiable instruments dishonored by a bank were held to be value, however, as the purchaser was irrevocably bound to make payment. n326 An instrument negotiated to a holder in due course should constitute value, because the holder takes it free of most defenses to payment. n327

A fully executed promise may be value. n328 In Larkins v. Howard, n329 the owner conveyed an interest in the property to Howard, who did not record. In 1927, the owner, then aged and infirm, executed a will giving all of his property to his wife in consideration for her promise to care for and support him for the rest of his life. The wife carried out her part of the bargain. The owner died on October 17, 1942. On October 24, 1942, the conveyance to Howard was finally recorded. The Alabama Supreme Court held that the wife was a purchaser for value under the recording act and, as a result, took the real estate free and clear of the conveyance to Howard. Although donees and devisees are not normally considered to be purchasers for value, the wife in this case qualified as such a purchaser because her fully performed promise to care for the owner was valuable consideration.

§ 92.09(b)(4) Notice After Partial Payment.

A purchaser may receive actual notice of a prior unrecorded claim after paying only part of the agreed consideration. It is generally agreed that the purchaser cannot qualify as a bona fide purchaser for value with respect to the unpaid balance. n330 A number of cases hold that a subsequent purchaser who has not paid the entire consideration prior to receiving actual notice of the prior claim becomes a bona fide purchaser pro tanto. n331 The prior claimant is given priority but the subsequent purchaser (i.e., the bona fide purchaser pro tanto) is entitled to reimbursement from the claimant for all sums paid before the actual notice was received. n332 In a case where a purchaser received actual notice of a prior ineffectively recorded mortgage before completing payment, the lien of the mortgage bound the land to the extent of the amount of the remaining unpaid balance. n333

A different situation is presented where the prior claimant records before the subsequent purchaser completes payment. The problem then becomes whether the recordation should give the subsequent purchaser constructive record notice of the claim. n334 Some courts have held that the recordation is constructive notice to the subsequent purchaser of the prior claim. n335 Other courts have held that recordation of the prior conveyance before the subsequent purchaser completes payment does not give constructive notice to the subsequent purchaser. n336 As the specific wording of the applicable recording act may dictate the result in a particular case, n337 an important consideration should be whether the subsequent purchaser had a duty to search the record during the period after the prior claim was recorded but before payment by the subsequent purchaser was completed. If the real estate already has been deeded to the purchaser, it might be unreasonable to expect that purchaser to conduct a subsequent search of the record. Furthermore, if the subsequent purchaser is paying for the property through a series of installment payments, as is often the case, it may be unreasonable to expect the purchaser to search the record before paying each installment. n338

§ 92.09(b)(5) Payment of Value: Pre-existing Debt as Value.

A debtor may convey an interest in either real or personal property to a creditor in satisfaction of or as security for a pre-existing ("antecedent") debt. In many jurisdictions, subject to certain exceptions, it has been held that a person who gave only a release of an antecedent debt in exchange for property was not entitled to the protection of the equitable doctrine of bona fide purchase. n339 It, also, has been generally held that a security interest given to secure an antecedent debt was not valuable consideration, subject to exceptions. n340 The rationale behind these holdings was that if the property or security was taken away or subordinated, the transferee was no worse off than before the transfer; therefore, the transfer did not involve a permanent, detrimental change of position. The exceptions that allowed the antecedent debt to serve as valuable consideration mainly involved cases where a permanent change of position occurred at the time of the transfer. For example, when a transfer was given to secure an antecedent debt, the secured creditor was considered to have paid value if as part of the exchange the creditor gave the debtor a binding extension of time in which to pay. Generally, the courts that have considered whether an antecedent debt is value sufficient to qualify a purchaser for the protection of recording statutes have followed these principles. n341

Years ago, commentators criticized the general rule that a transfer for or to secure an antecedent debt was not a purchase for value. n342 It was argued that a person who enters into a commercial transaction expects to receive the benefit of the bargain. Where a purchaser releases a debt owed for a conveyance of real estate, reviving the debt may restore the status quo but the purchaser does not receive the benefit of the bargain. Furthermore, restoring the debt does not necessarily restore the status quo. If the transfer had not been made, the creditor may have taken steps to enforce or collect the debt. Collection or enforcement of the debt may have become more difficult or impossible with the passage of time. Where the transfer was of a security interest to secure an antecedent debt, it may be inaccurate to say that voiding or subordinating the interest results in the creditor being in no worse position than before. It is possible that the creditor was then an unsecured creditor with a reasonable chance of collecting the debt and is now has little or no chance of collecting. These considerations may have influenced the drafters of the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act, who define "value" to include rights given as security for, or in satisfaction of, a "pre-existing claim." n343

§ 92.09(b)(6) Payment of Value: Judgment Lien Creditors.

By statute, a judgment for money based on a debt or tort may attach as a lien against real estate owned by the judgment debtor. The precise time of the attachment of such a lien depends largely upon the applicable statute. n344 In many jurisdictions, judgment liens will not attach until docketed in court records or filed in the recorder's office. n345 The judgment lien will normally attach to any real estate owned by the judgment debtor in the county in which the lien is docketed or recorded. The lien will also attach to any real estate subsequently acquired by the debtor in that county while the lien is still viable. In some states, judgment liens will not attach until formal attachment and execution proceedings are commenced. n346 Once the judgment has attached, it remains a lien on the real estate even if the real estate is transferred. A money judgment may not, however, attach to property when the judgment debtor has already conveyed the property and delivered the deed before the judgment was recorded, even when the judgment was recorded first. n347

Judgment lien creditors are not "purchasers" in the ordinary sense of the word. As a result, they are not protected by the recording acts of many states. n348 Judgment lien creditors may also be denied protection on the basis that their liens can only attach to the actual interests of judgment debtors, rather than the debtors' apparent interests. n349 The statutes of about half of the states provide protected status to creditors under the recording act. n350 Some acts clearly provide that protected parties may be "subsequent judgment creditors." n351 Other statutes are less precise and refer to "creditors" generally without specifying whether the creditor must have judgments or the debt must be subsequent to the prior unrecorded conveyance. n352 While there is authority to the contrary, these latter statutes are usually construed as including only subsequent creditors who have fastened an attachment, judgment, or execution lien upon the property. n353

Most, but not all, statutes protecting creditors expressly require the creditor to be without notice in order to qualify for protection. n354 For statutes that do not state that creditors must be without notice, it has generally been implied that they must be without notice where that requirement applies to purchasers. n355

If the guiding policy is to protect persons who may have relied on the title as disclosed by the record, it is debatable whether judgment lien creditors should be protected. An opinion in an old case asserts that creditors "in giving credit, confide as much, and rely as confidently for the payment of their dues, upon the real estate to which their debtors appear, by the records, to have title, as upon the personalty...". n356 While this argument might have some merit with respect to judgments based on contractual debts, it has no force at all where the judgments are based on torts. Furthermore, lenders rarely search public real estate records before extending credit. n357 Protecting judgment lien creditors from prior unrecorded conveyances might prevent fraud on creditors where a pre-dated deed, which is claimed to have been executed by the debtor before the attachment of the lien, was actually executed afterwards. It is uncertain whether the possibility of such fraud justifies recording act protection for judgment creditors. This type of fraud could only occur in pure notice jurisdictions, as the lien creditor would normally prevail under race-notice acts as the first to record. Furthermore, this type of fraud is really a specific aspect of a larger problem, one that is caused by the tendency of debtors to protect their property from creditors by any available means, legal or illegal. Fraudulent conveyance laws may provide sufficient remedies. n358

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: purchase* for value w/10 deed purchase* for value w/10 title

NOTE:
Many cases relevant to this section pre-date the earliest cases in the database.

§ 92.09(c) In Good Faith, Without Notice.

Notice and race-notice statutes n359 protect persons who are without notice of prior unrecorded interests that are subject to the recording act. There are several kinds of notice that may disqualify a person from attaining the protection of a notice or race-notice recording act:

(1) Actual notice: notice from the subsequent purchaser's actual knowledge of the prior interest;

(2) Constructive notice: the subsequent purchaser is deemed to have notice of all facts that a reasonable physical inspection of the property and a reasonable title search of the public real estate records would have revealed;

(3) Inquiry notice: notice from the subsequent purchaser's actual knowledge or constructive notice of facts which would have caused a reasonable person to make further inquiries; a subsequent purchaser is deemed to have notice of all facts that such inquiries would have uncovered.

The doctrine of constructive notice is based on two duties of the purchaser of real estate, the duty to examine the real estate and the duty to search the record. The purchaser is deemed to have notice of all facts that a physical examination of the property would have revealed. In many cases, received or imputed facts do not directly notify the purchaser of an adverse claim; instead, they may form the basis for inquiry notice. For example, a physical inspection may reveal a well-worn path which appears to be used by the occupants of adjacent property. The inspection does not establish that this use is wrongful, permissive or a matter of right. Notice of the use would probably be enough to put the purchaser on inquiry. Further inquiry may reveal whether there is an unrecorded easement or some other legal basis providing the adjacent occupants a right to use the path. If a reasonable investigation would have uncovered the existence of an unrecorded easement of right of way or an irrevocable license, then the purchaser would have inquiry notice of it.

A purchaser of real estate also has a duty to search the record. It is sometimes stated that recordation of an instrument is "notice to the world" of the facts stated in it. n360 Such statements are overly broad. It is more precise to say that recorded instruments give constructive notice to those who are bound to search for them. n361 A purchaser of real estate has a duty to search the public real estate records using the official index (usually of the grantor-grantee type) and is deemed to have notice of all facts contained in legally recorded instruments that would have been found through such a search, whether the search was in fact conducted. This can lead to some anomalous results. Under the laws of many states, an instrument not entitled to recordation, such as an unacknowledged deed, will not give constructive record notice, even if it is recorded in fact. It is sometimes said that such an instrument is recorded in fact, but not in law. Most purchasers of real estate, however, do search the record. If a purchaser actually searches the record, the purchaser will probably come across such an instrument and will, in a majority of jurisdictions, thereby have actual notice of the instrument. If the purchaser had not searched the title, however, the purchaser would not have constructive notice of this actually recorded instrument, because it was not entitled to be recorded. Thus, a purchaser who complies with the duty to search the record is penalized by gaining actual knowledge of the recorded instrument, while a purchaser who does not comply with this duty is rewarded by not being deemed to have constructive knowledge of the recorded instrument.

§ 92.09(c)(1) Actual Notice.

The development of the American law of recording was influenced by the equitable doctrine of good faith purchase. Early recording statutes did not require subsequent purchasers to be in good faith or without notice for the statutes to apply. The courts, however, influenced by the doctrine of good faith purchase, read such a requirement into the statutes. n362 Eventually, the statutes in most states expressly provided that they applied only where a subsequent purchaser lacked notice or was in good faith. The precise wording of the requirement varies. A fairly large number of recording acts state that the purchaser must be "bona fide" or in "good faith" without referring to "notice" or its absence. n363 Another fairly large number state that the purchaser must be without "notice" with no reference to good faith. n364 A few require absence of "actual notice." n365 Some state that the purchaser must be in good faith (or bona fide) without "notice" or "actual notice." n366 At least two states provide that the purchaser must be without "knowledge." n367 Pennsylvania requires the purchaser to be "bona fide" "without actual or constructive notice." n368

Courts and commentators differ about how the different kinds of notice should be defined and classified. Upon analysis, even the seemingly simple concept of "actual notice" becomes slippery and hard to define. It is generally agreed that actual knowledge of the existence of the claim directly and personally communicated to the purchaser is actual notice. n369 But there is a wide diversity of opinion about how complete the information about the claim must be before the purchaser has actual notice of it. n370 To have actual notice, the purchaser should not need to know the precise nature of the prior claim. Knowledge of its existence should be sufficient. The purchaser should not have to know that the claim is valid. The purchaser should have notice if the purchaser has enough information to determine that there is a reasonable probability that the claim is valid.

Many authorities also find actual notice where the purchaser has actual knowledge, not of the existence of the prior interest itself, but of facts that would have caused a prudent purchaser to make further inquiries which would then have uncovered the interest. n371 Whether notice from such inquiries should be considered "actual" is questionable. It does seem more consistent and sensible to treat all legally imputed notice, including all forms of inquiry notice, as constructive rather than actual notice. n372 In many jurisdictions, it is of little importance whether actual notice also includes this species of inquiry notice. Whether the notice is labelled "actual" or "inquiry," the purchaser will be denied recording act protection if, as most do, the jurisdiction recognizes the doctrine of inquiry notice. n373

The source of actual notice may be oral or written statements. Sometimes, a title searcher will come across a recorded instrument that is ineffective to give constructive record notice. n374 In a majority of jurisdictions, the purchaser will be held to have actual notice of the claim or interest evidenced by the instrument. n375 Sometimes a purchaser will have actual knowledge or constructive notice of a statement in a recorded instrument that refers to a prior unrecorded claim. Such a statement may be sufficient to give notice or to put the purchaser on inquiry. n376 The knowledge may be from almost any source but a mere rumor will not suffice to give notice or to put the purchaser on inquiry. n377 Notice to the purchaser's agent, such as an attorney, is notice to the principal if the agent receives notice while acting in that capacity. n378

§ 92.09(c)(2) Constructive Notice.

A purchaser of real estate has a duty to search the public real estate records pertaining to the interest being purchased, to make a reasonable physical inspection of the property, and in most states, to make inquiries of anyone found in possession. n379 These duties provide the foundation of the doctrine of constructive notice. n380

Originally, the doctrine of constructive notice was judge-made, not statutory. n381 The early recording statutes did not say that a purchaser of real estate shall be deemed to have notice of all facts that title searches would have uncovered. These statutes did not explicitly create any duty to search. They did not say that a recorded instrument shall be effective to give notice. Instead, the consequences of failing to record were stated: unrecorded instruments shall be void as to persons entitled to protection. If an instrument is effectively recorded, the statute cannot apply to void or subordinate it. Currently, the doctrine of constructive notice is statutory in at least a dozen states. Statutes in these states explicitly provide that recordation of an instrument will give constructive notice. n382

§ 92.09(c)(2)(A) Record Notice: Duty to Search the Records.

Courts continue to make broad statements to the effect that recordation is "notice to the whole world" of the claim evidenced by the document. n383 It is more accurate to say that information contained in a recorded document will be imputed to a person who is bound to search for it. n384 A person who does not have an interest in the title to the property has no duty to search the record. n385 However, purchasers of an interest are bound to search the records pertaining to that interest. The purchaser is, in general, only bound to search the direct chain of title for the interest being purchased. n386 Furthermore, the purchaser is not bound to search all public records that may contain information about claims or interests in real estate. n387

§ 92.09(c)(2)(B) Record Notice: Chain of Title.

Early recording statutes did not provide for indexes to recorded documents. n388 Until indexes were made available, title searches must have involved paging through the volumes of recorded documents. n389 Today, title searches are initiated in indexes. Because of the thousands or, in some places, even millions of instruments on the record in some counties, searching title without using an index would be impossible. n390 The most common type of index currently in use is the grantor-grantee or name index. The index has two major parts, one for grantors and the other for grantees. At the time an instrument is recorded, it is indexed twice, once in the grantor index and again in the grantee index. The grantee index is used to build the chain of ownership, because it generally identifies the transferor of each owner. The grantor index is used to find adverse conveyances made by or through each owner in the chain of ownership.

§ 92.09(c)(2)(B)(i) Problems Encountered Using Grantor-Grantee Indexes.

Deeds, mortgages and other instruments are indexed chronologically in grantor-grantee indexes according to the initial letter of letters of the grantors' or grantees' surnames. For example, there may be a segment in a grantor index for surnames beginning with "Aa" through "Ad." The reference for each recorded instrument will name the grantor and grantee, describe the instrument and property involved, contain the date of recordation and will refer to the precise place in the record (e.g., by book and page) where a copy of the instrument may be found.

A particular segment of a grantor index may contain references to hundreds or even thousands of recorded documents. Therefore, in all offices with a large volume of recorded documents, it is nearly impossible to examine the entire relevant segment of the grantor index for adverse conveyances made by or through each owner in the chain of title. Consequently, title searchers may focus on only a portion of the grantor index when looking for adverse conveyances. This portion is the part of the index beginning with the date of the transfer of ownership to the grantor down to the time of the recordation of the transaction through which the grantor gave up ownership. n391 In other words, the grantor index will be examined for each owner from the time each actually became an owner down to the time that each ceased being an owner of record. Conveyances recorded within these time boundaries are said to be recorded "within the chain of title." If conveyances made by an owner are indexed before the owner took title or after the recordation of the transaction through which the owner parted with ownership, the conveyances are recorded "outside the chain of title." It is not likely that the title searcher will discover such conveyances.

One general situation where conveyances may be recorded too soon to be within the chain of title involves the doctrine of estoppel by deed or after acquired title. Under this doctrine, if a grantor purports to convey an interest that the grantor does not have, the interest may effectively transfer to the grantee should the grantor subsequently acquire it. n392 Suppose a grantor purports to convey an interest by warrantee deed that the grantor does not have and the grantee promptly records. Then the owner of the interest conveys it to the grantor. If the doctrine of after acquired title applies, the grantee in the first conveyance becomes the owner of the interest. Suppose the grantor promptly records the deed from the owner and then purports to convey the interest to a second grantee, who purchases without knowledge of the conveyance to the first grantee. The problem here is whether the subsequent purchaser should be held to have had constructive record notice of the first deed. n393 Resolution of this problem requires a choice between security of ownership and facility of transfer.

Security of ownership favors the first grantee. The first grantee has, in fact, recorded and usually can do no more to perfect his or her interest except re-record, an act that first grantee would not be likely to perform. The recording acts do not provide any express basis for voiding or subordinating the first grantee's interest. It is sometimes argued that the first grantee should lose because the first grantee was on notice, actual or constructive, that the grantor did not own the interest at the time of the conveyance. This argument fails to recognize the manner in which recording statutes operate. They provide an exception to the result that would be reached under the "first in time, first in right" principle in favor of a subsequent purchaser who qualifies for protection. Under the recording acts, unless fraud or estoppel applies, what a prior grantee knew or had notice of should be irrelevant. n394 A better argument for giving priority to the subsequent purchaser is that doing so is more in accord with the foal of recording acts to facilitate real estate transfer by protecting purchasers from undisclosed claims. n395 As a practical matter, it is unlikely that the first grantee's deed would be found through a search of the record. If the first grantee prevails, there is another "off the record" risk for purchasers and the reliability of the recording system as a source for land title assurance consequently less.

A majority of the courts have held that the subsequent purchaser prevails over the prior grantee claiming after acquired title. n396 However, a substantial number of cases hold for the prior grantee. n397

Another general situation involves the recordation of an adverse conveyance after the recordation of the transaction showing its maker giving up ownership. An owner conveys to a first grantee who does not immediately record. The owner then conveys to a second grantee who records but does not prevail over the prior unrecorded interest because the second grantee does not qualify for recording act protection for some reason, such as actual notice of the prior interest or a failure to pay value. (If the second grantee did qualify for protection, the prior unrecorded interest would be subordinated or cut off entirely. It would not matter whether a subsequent transferee from the protected grantee took with notice. After the property passes to a party protected by a recording act, the unrecorded claim is "filtered out" and the protected party generally may transfer the interest to almost anyone, even persons with notice. n398) Suppose after the conveyance to the disqualified (second) grantee, the prior adverse conveyance to the first grantee is finally recorded and indexed in the grantor index under the former owner's name. Suppose the disqualified second grantee then transfers to a person who would qualify for recording act protection, except for the possibility that he or she took with constructive notice because the adverse conveyance was finally recorded before he or she took title. The relevant considerations in this problem are almost the same as those encountered with the after acquired title problem previously discussed. However, there are arguments that the situations are distinguishable.

First, in the case of the recordation after the deed out from the owner, it might not be unreasonable to require the searcher to continue the search to the present after the deed out, especially in cases where only a few years of the grantor index would have to be examined before the searcher would reach the last entry made. In contrast, excluding the time in the distant past when the records first began being kept, there is no second time boundary to limit the search where the search is back into the past after the date of the acquisition of ownership by the owner. Second, the after acquired title prior claimant has the expedient method of protecting his or her interest by re-recording within the chain of title. By contrast, once the deed out by the owner has been recorded, the prior unrecorded claimant has no such expedient method available to bring notice of his or her claim into the chain of title. Regardless of the merit of these arguments, this problem also boils down to a choice between security of title and facility of transfer, a choice that may be resolved by the value placed on each. Again, the effectiveness of the recording system in giving assurance to purchasers is impaired if the late recorded instrument gives constructive record notice.

There are reported cases on both sides. Some hold that the late recorded instrument is ineffective to give record notice because it is recorded outside of the chain of title and, therefore, not likely to be found by the title searcher. n399 In jurisdictions that accept this view, a purchaser might sometimes be deemed to have notice of the late recorded instrument where the purchaser had notice of facts that would have caused a prudent purchaser to continue the search for some time after the recordation of the deed out from the owner. n400 Other cases have held the late recordation effective to give notice. n401

There is another chain of title problem that is also encountered only when grantor-grantee indexes are used to search title. This problem is sometimes referred to as the "wild deed" problem. The basic outline of this problem involves an adverse conveyance by the owner to a transferee who does not record. The transferee then transfers the interest to a second transferee who does record. The original owner then transfers to a purchaser who is entitled to recording act protection, except for the possibility that the purchaser has constructive record notice of the transfer to the second transferee because it is recorded. While the conveyance to the second transferee is on the record, it is very unlikely that the subsequent purchaser from the original owner would find it using a grantor-grantee index. Neither the first nor the second transferee will be known to the purchaser, because the conveyance to the first transferee is not recorded and, therefore, it will not be found in the grantor index under the name of the original owner. The conveyance to the second transferee would appear to be a "wild deed" because the record shows no connection between the transferor and the chain of title to the property. Because the conveyance to the second transferee would rarely be found through a search of the record by the purchaser, it is generally held that it is recorded outside of the chain of title and, consequently, the purchaser does not have constructive record notice of it. n402

The problems discussed above disappear when tract (or parcel) indexes are used to search title. n403 In tract indexes, instruments are indexed according to the property affected. Unless the recorder makes an indexing error, all instruments will be found regardless of when they are recorded. A failure to record a link in the chain of title makes no difference because the searcher does not search through the names of parties to instruments. There is, however, another chain of title problem encountered when using either tract or grantor-grantee indexes. This problem occurs where a common owner of two or more parcels conveys one of them while purporting to encumber retained land in the instrument of conveyance.

§ 92.09(c)(2)(B)(ii) Problems Encountered Where a Common Grantor Encumbers Property Retained in a Conveyance of Other Property.

The owner of two or more parcels may encumber n404 property retained by the owner in a conveyance of one of the parcels. If the grantor later conveys the encumbered retained parcel to a purchaser, there may be a problem concerning whether the purchaser has constructive record notice of the encumbrance. The recorder should have indexed the conveyance that created the encumbrance as affecting the retained land. However, it is quite possible that the recorder indexed the instrument as affecting only the conveyed property. If so, the purchaser of the retained land probably would not discover the encumbrance while searching the title to that land. This problem may be encountered with tract as well as grantor-grantee indexes.

The reported cases are about equally divided on whether a purchaser of the retained property has constructive record notice of an encumbrance created in a conveyance of another parcel owned by the grantor. n405 At least one case holding that the subsequent purchaser of retained property has constructive notice is based on the dubious conclusion that the failure of the recorder to index the first conveyance as affecting the retained property is immaterial because the recorder is not required by statute to index instruments by parcel. n406 This argument has no basis at all in the few jurisdictions with official tract indexes where recorders are required to index by parcel. n407

In practice, the title searcher will not find the instrument creating the encumbrance unless it is indexed as affecting the title to the subject property. The problem here is related to the question of whether the index is an essential part of the record, and whether the risk of recorders' indexing errors is allocated to the party initiating recordation or to the subsequent purchaser. n408 As is true with a number of other recording act problems, security of ownership and facility of transfer are important considerations. If the purchaser is deemed to have record notice of an instrument that probably would not be uncovered by a search, the title to the encumbrance is made more secure at the cost of reduced facility of transfer and reliability of the record. Economics may also be an appropriate consideration. It may be more efficient to require the party owning or having the benefit of the encumbrance to be responsible for proper indexing, rather than to require subsequent purchasers to bear the costs of looking outside the chain of title for adverse conveyances. n409

§ 92.09(c)(3) Inquiry Notice.

The doctrine of inquiry notice is contrary to one of the fundamental goals of recording systems: to facilitate real estate transactions by enabling interested parties to swiftly and efficiently determine ownership and the state of the title by examining the public real estate records. The broadening of the concept of notice sufficient to disqualify a purchaser, from actual knowledge and record notice to include other types of imputed notice, is clearly contrary to this fundamental goal. n410 Under the doctrine of inquiry notice, a purchaser of real estate is held to have a duty to make inquiries where the purchaser has actual knowledge from any source or constructive notice of facts that would have aroused the suspicions of a prudent purchaser and caused that purchaser to make further investigations. n411 The purchaser is deemed to have notice of all facts that such investigations would have revealed. Whether certain facts would have been discovered, of course, is determined with the benefit of hindsight, a benefit the purchaser does not have. As a result, in jurisdictions that recognize inquiry notice, the purchaser always faces the risk that the interest purchased may be later be held to be subordinate to some unrecorded claim, because the purchaser should have made some inquiry or investigation which would have revealed it. Furthermore, even if the purchaser did make an investigation, a court might later decide that the investigation was insufficient to satisfy the duty to inquire. n412

§ 92.09(c)(3)(A) Notice from Possession.

In many jurisdictions, the purchaser of real estate has a duty to make a reasonable physical inspection of the property and is deemed to have notice of all facts (mainly those indicating possession) that such an inspection would have revealed. n413 The indications of possession must be actual and visible and in existence at the time of purchase. n414

In most states, there is no statutory foundation at all for the doctrine of constructive notice based on a duty to make a physical inspection of the property. n415 Some cases reject the doctrine, n416 as do statutes in a few states. n417 In the few places in the United States with Torrens registered real estate, the doctrine does not apply to registered real estate.

n418 While a purchaser of real estate has no duty to make a physical inspection of the property in some jurisdictions, such an inspection would be very advisable. An inspection is likely to uncover such off the record risks as adverse possession claims, encroachments, prescriptive easements and short-term leases not subject to the recording act. n419

Usually, the indications of possession alone are not enough to give constructive notice to the purchaser of the existence and nature of the prior unrecorded claim. However, actual or constructive notice of physical facts suggesting the possible existence of an adverse claim may be enough to trigger a duty to inquire. n420 And if further inquiry would have uncovered the adverse claim, the purchaser will be deemed to have inquiry notice of it. Because of the frequently close association between inquiry notice and constructive notice from possession, it is frequently considered to be a form of inquiry notice. n421

Possession inconsistent with record title is a type of use or occupancy that may give rise to a duty to inquire. n422 Generally, the duty to inquire arises where the purchaser has actual knowledge of the possession or constructive notice from the duty to search or inspect. n423 Where, after examination of the public records, the person in possession is someone other than the person who appears to be the record owner, the purchaser is under a duty to inquire into the possessor's right, if any, to occupy the property. The purchaser is charged with constructive notice of the information that the inquiry would have revealed. Where the possession is consistent with record title, there is no duty on the purchaser to inquire. n424 For example, where the fee owners were in possession of the property, the purchasers of mineral interests were not charged with inquiry notice of the owners' non-record claim, that the mineral deeds they executed to the purchasers' predecessor were obtained by fraud, because the possession was entirely consistent with record title. n425

Generally, no inquiry need be made of those in possession along with the record owner. n426 There is also no duty to inquire where an inquiry would be fruitless. n427 If an inquiry is made and if no information about the adverse claim is produced, the possession becomes immaterial. n428 However, the inquiry made may be held to have been inadequate. n429

Not infrequently, a tenant will be in possession of the property at the time of purchase. The tenant's possession is generally effective to give notice of the lease. n430 An examination of the lease itself may not uncover all of the tenant's rights. The purchaser may be held to inquiry notice of other rights such as prepaid rent, options to purchase, lease extensions and rights under an unrecorded contract to purchase the property. n431 Consequently, where a tenant is in possession, the purchaser may have inquiry notice of unrecorded tenant rights, even if the lease is recorded and thus the tenant's possession is consistent with record title. However, possession by the tenant consistent with record title may not give inquiry notice of the rights of a third party creditor with a security interest in the tenant's lease. n432 Where the purchase was made from a person other than the landlord, the tenant's possession will give inquiry notice of the landlord's rights in the land. n433

The acts of possession that will either give constructive notice or cause the purchaser to have a duty to inquire depend on the particular facts and circumstances. Important considerations include the nature of the unrecorded claim and the physical characteristics and location of the property. In Wineberg v. Moore, n434 the subject property was 880 acres of timberland in northern California. The plaintiff claimed ownership under a deed that was not recorded until after the property was sold to purchasers who recorded before plaintiff did. At the time of the purchase by plaintiff, there was a residence and garage on the property. A wire fence extended along two sides of the property. The road leading to the property was obstructed by a gate which bore a "No Trespassing" sign with the plaintiff's name and address on it. There were other "No Trespassing" signs on the property. The plaintiff and his friends used the property occasionally for recreational purposes. He paid the taxes on it and left personal property in the residence which was identifiable as his. Even though the property was not completely enclosed by the fence and although only a small portion contained visible signs of use, the court held that the plaintiff's possession was sufficiently open, notorious and visible to put the purchasers on inquiry. The court emphasized that the physical inspection required in this case was to go onto the land itself. Although an inspection from the air might be sufficient if the property was inaccessible by land, in this case the land was accessible by automobile. A person coming to inspect the land would have discovered the sign on the gate and that, coupled with other facts, would have apprised them of plaintiff's possible claim which would have been discovered upon further inquiry.

Another leading case, Miller v. Green, n435 involved a tenant who contracted to purchase the property under a contract that was not recorded until after the landlord deeded the property to a purchaser who promptly recorded. The property was a 63-acre tract, 40 acres of which were cultivated land and 23 acres of which were pasture and woods. The buildings on the land included a small house, a barn and some sheds. The house was uninhabitable and the buildings were dilapidated and unused for years. When the property was deeded to the purchaser in December, the crops had already been harvested and the livestock had been removed with the onset of cold weather in early November. At the time of the purchase, the tenant's father was hauling 59 to 60 loads of manure onto the land. Prior to the purchase, the tenant had plowed two of the 63 acres and the plowed area was visible from the abutting highway. Part of the 63-acre tract was visible from the purchaser's farm which was about one half mile away. The majority of the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the acts of possession were sufficiently "open, visible, exclusive and unambiguous" to give inquiry notice to the purchaser, given that they were the customary acts of possession that could be exercised on unoccupied farmland at such time of the year. The dissenting judge thought that the acts of possession were insufficient to impart notice, especially since they were not inconsistent with the record ownership.

Various possessory acts may be sufficient to put a purchaser on inquiry notice of unrecorded easements or restrictive covenants. Where a utility company was maintaining power lines and poles pursuant to a valid but unrecorded easement, a purchaser was held to have had inquiry notice of the easement. n436 The presence of manholes on the surface may be sufficient to give a purchaser inquiry notice that water and sewer lines are being maintained below by the municipality pursuant to easements. n437 However, manhole covers that might have been sufficient to give notice of a sewer easement held by the municipality did not give the purchaser notice of a private sewer easement claim. n438 And where there was no external evidence of the existence of buried sewer pipes, the purchaser was not charged with notice of the easement. n439 The strictly uniform residential character of the area in the vicinity of the subject property was sufficient to give the purchaser inquiry notice of a restrictive covenant limiting use to residential, even though it was not recorded in the direct chain of title. n440

§ 92.09(c)(3)(B) Notice from Reference in a Recorded Instrument.

In many jurisdictions, a reference in a document in the chain of title to a claim evidenced by a document not in the chain may be notice of the claim or, at least, enough to put the purchaser on inquiry. n441 This doctrine may create a serious burden for the title searcher. As a practical matter, it may be difficult or impossible for the title searcher to locate the other document. As a result, the searcher may not even attempt to find the document, the purchaser takes subject to an additional risk, and the reliability of the recording system as a source of land title assurance is reduced. On the other hand, if the reference to the other document includes the precise location in the public record, or in some other not inconvenient place where it may be found, it is not unreasonable to require the searcher to look for the document in that location.

Statutes in a few states limit notice from references in recorded documents to cases where the reference is to an instrument recorded in the county or district where the real estate is located. n442 The Model Act Concerning Indefinite References n443 provides that an "indefinite reference" to encumbrances or interests in a recorded instrument will not give notice. The definition "indefinite reference" includes all references that do not refer to a recorded instrument and identify the place in the public records where the instrument may be found. The Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act also has a provision dealing with indefinite references which is based on the Model Act Provision. n444 Under the Uniform Act, a reference to another document does not impart notice of it unless its "record location" is included. "Record location" refers to a specifically identified file, or book and page.

§ 92.09(c)(3)(C) Notice from Taking by a Quitclaim Deed.

Statutory deeds are used today in many states. n445 The statutes provide for warranty and quitclaim deeds. n446 When real estate is conveyed by warranty deed, the grantor makes various warranties to the grantee. The precise content and scope of these warranties depends on the applicable law of the jurisdiction but, generally, they warrant that the grantor has a good fee simple title to the property and has the power to convey that title. n447 When the conveyance is by quitclaim deed, no warranties are given. Both types of deed may be effective to transfer the title or interest of the grantor in the property. n448 If the grantor has a perfect title, either type of the deed will transfer it to the grantee. If the grantor has a defective title or no title at all, that is what the grantee will receive. A conveyance by warranty deed will not cure a defective title. However, if the grantee of a warranty deed suffers a loss because of a defect, the grantee may be able to recover from the grantor if the presence of the defect caused a breach of one of the warranties.

In applying the equitable doctrine of bona fide purchase, some courts have held that one who takes by quitclaim deed cannot be a bona fide purchaser because the deed purports to convey only such right, title or interest as the grantor may have, and thus the deed carries notice of every defect in the grantor's title. n449 Similar reasoning has been used to deny grantees of quitclaim deeds the protection of recording acts. n450 However, the precise reasoning in some cases seems to be that the quitclaim deed is sufficient to give inquiry notice to the grantee that the grantor's title is defective. n451

The prevailing view, however, is that conveyance by quitclaim deed does not disqualify the grantee from recording act protection. n452 Some statutes specifically provide that taking by quitclaim deed shall not constitute notice of prior unrecorded conveyances. n453 Most of the minority of jurisdictions that deny the grantee who took by quitclaim deed recording act protection held that a taker by warranty deed could have protected status, even if the grantor or some other prior owner took by a quitclaim. n454 In some jurisdictions, taking by quitclaim deed alone may not be enough to give the grantee inquiry notice about the state of the title, but a quitclaim deed coupled with other facts may be sufficient. n455

The prevailing view that a quitclaim deed grantee may be protected by the recording acts is sound. A refusal to convey by warranty deed might be an indication that the grantor believes title to be defective. However, it is at least as likely that the refusal indicates that the grantor does not know the current state of the title and does not wish to be potentially liable for losses caused by possible title defects for an indefinite period of time. n456 Conveyance by quitclaim deed occurs because grantors wish to break cleanly from the property. The effectiveness of the recording statutes in facilitating real estate transfers is reduced where quitclaim grantees do not qualify for protection.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: actual notice w/10 deed actual notice w/10 title constructive notice w/10 deed constructive notice w/10 title record notice w/10 deed or title inquiry notice w/10 deed or title

NOTE:
Many cases relevant to this section pre-date the earliest cases in the database.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 304. Associates Fin. Servs. of Am., Inc. v. District of Columbia, 689 A.2d 1217 (D.C. 1997) (purchaser for value takes title free of any claims of the estate and incurs no personal liability to the estate).

(n2)Footnote 305. City of Fargo v. D.T.L. Properties, IMC., 564 N.W.2d 274 (N.D. 1997) (a good faith purchaser is not protected if the purchaser is aware or should be aware of the deficiencies in title).

(n3)Footnote 306. See, e.g., Daughters v. Preston, 476 N.E.2d 445 (Ill. App. 1985). In that case, the Appellate Court held that prior purchasers had superior title where they recorded their deeds one hour before subsequent purchaser recorded his deed, even if the subsequent purchaser was a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice at the time he acquired his deed, which occurred before recordation by the prior purchasers.

(n4)Footnote 307. "Burden of proof" is ambiguous. The term may refer to the burden of producing evidence or the burden of persuasion. Charles Tilford Mccormick, Mccormick on Evidence § 336 (John William Strong ed., 4th ed. 1992).

(n5)Footnote 308. Corwin W. Johnson, Purpose and Scope of Recording Statutes, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 231, 237 (1962).

(n6)Footnote 309. However, recordation may raise presumptions. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann. § 57-4a-4. Under this statute, recordation raises, among others, presumptions that the transferee was in good faith and paid any necessary consideration. See also Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 2-305, 14 U.L.A.; Model Act Concerning Evidentiary Effect of the Record, Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 30-31 (1960); and Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.09(1)(d).

(n7)Footnote 310. Corwin W. Johnson, Purpose and Scope of Recording Statutes, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 231, 237 (1962).

(n8)Footnote 311. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages §§ 208, 364 (2d ed. 1970).

(n9)Footnote 312. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages §§ 208, 365 (2d ed. 1970).

(n10)Footnote 313. 625 P.2d 643 (Or. 1980). This case was decided solely on the allocation of burden of proof. The unrecorded prior claimants did not allege that the subsequent purchaser was not a bona fide purchaser for value. The subsequent purchaser did not allege that she purchased in good faith without notice.

(n11)Footnote 314. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages §§ 208, 366 (2d ed. 1970).

(n12)Footnote 315. An argument can also be made that placing the burden on the party who fails to record is more economically efficient. Recording is relatively inexpensive and doing so precludes subsequent expensive litigation in which the application of the recording act may be considered. If one accepts the premise that placing the burden of proof on the prior claimant encourages parties to record, then one may conclude that such an allocation of the burden promotes economic efficiency. An obvious problem with this argument is that it assumes that parties to real estate instruments would in fact be aware of the allocation of the burden of proof and that this awareness would actually influence their decision of whether to record.

(n13)Footnote 316. American Law of Property § 17.10 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n14)Footnote 317. Whetstone v. Michigan Consol. Gas Co., 219 F. Supp. 121 (E.D. Mich. 1963). The Colorado recording act appears to be the only act that protects donees. Eastwood v. Shedd, 442 P.2d 423 (Colo. 1968). The Colorado statute does not use the terms "purchaser," "for value" or "valuable consideration." Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-109.

(n15)Footnote 318. Earle v. Fiske, 103 Mass. 491 (1870); Reddoch v. Williams, 92 So. 831 (Miss. 1922); 5 Herbert Thorndike Tiffany, the Law of Real Property § 1278 (Basil Jones ed., 3d ed. 1939). There is some authority to the contrary. Id.

(n16)Footnote 319. American Law of Property § 17.10 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n17)Footnote 320. Strong v. Whybark, 102 S.W. 968 (Mo. 1907). In this case, "natural love and affection and five dollars" was held to be adequate. See also Bagala v. Bagala, 110 So. 2d 526 (La. 1959). The definition of "value" in the Uniform Simplification of Land Transfers Act, taken from the Uniform Commercial Code, includes "any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract." Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 1-201(31)(iv), 14 U.L.A. 46.

(n18)Footnote 321. Alexander v. O'Neil, 267 P.2d 730 (Ariz. 1954); Anderson v. Anderson, 435 N.W.2d 687 (N.D. 1989); Phillips v. Latham, 523 S.W.2d 19 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975); 4 American Law of Property § 17.10 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n19)Footnote 322. American Law of Property § 17.10 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n20)Footnote 323. Chevron Oil Co. v. Clark, 291 F. Supp. 552, 559 (S.D. Miss. 1968), rev'd in part, 432 F.2d 280 (5th Cir. 1969).

(n21)Footnote 324. American Law of Property § 17.10 n.11 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n22)Footnote 325. American Law of Property § 17.10 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n23)Footnote 326. Dunn v. Stack, 418 So. 2d 345 (Fla. App. 1982). See also Middlemas v. Wright, 493 S.W.2d 282 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973) (holding that a grantee's personal check was sufficient consideration even though the check was never presented for payment by the payee during her lifetime).

(n24)Footnote 327. U.C.C. § 3-305(2), 2 U.L.A. 577 (1991).

(n25)Footnote 328. Larkins v. Howard, 39 So. 2d 224 (Ala. 1949). James C. Hardin III, Transfer of Real Estate at Death--Do Probate Code Changes Resolve the Issue, 12 S. Carolina Lawyer 20 (Jan./Feb. 2001).

(n26)Footnote 329. 39 So. 2d 224 (Ala. 1949).

(n27)Footnote 330. Westpark, Inc. v. Seaton Land Co., 171 A.2d 736 (Md. 1961); Annotation, Right of One Otherwise Protected by Recording Law Against Prior Unrecorded Deed or Mortgage as Affected by Fact that All or Part of the Consideration Was Unpaid at the Time He Received Notice, Actual or Constructive, of the Prior Instrument, 109 A.L.R. 163 (1937).

(n28)Footnote 331. Annotation, Right of One Otherwise Protected by Recording Law Against Prior Unrecorded Deed or Mortgage as Affected by Fact that All or Part of the Consideration Was Unpaid at the Time He Received Notice, Actual or Constructive, of the Prior Instrument, 109 A.L.R. 163 (1937).

(n29)Footnote 332. Annotation, Right of One Otherwise Protected by Recording Law Against Prior Unrecorded Deed or Mortgage as Affected by Fact that All or Part of the Consideration Was Unpaid at the Time He Received Notice, Actual or Constructive, of the Prior Instrument, 109 A.L.R. 163 (1937).

(n30)Footnote 333. Annotation, Right of One Otherwise Protected by Recording Law Against Prior Unrecorded Deed or Mortgage as Affected by Fact that All or Part of the Consideration Was Unpaid at the Time He Received Notice, Actual or Constructive, of the Prior Instrument, 109 A.L.R. 163, 170 (1937).

(n31)Footnote 334. If the applicable statute is race-notice, the subsequent purchaser, of course, will be subordinate if his or her instrument has not been recorded.

(n32)Footnote 335. Alexander v. Andrews, 64 S.E.2d 487 (W. Va. 1951); 3 John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States of America § 759b (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941).

(n33)Footnote 336. Dame v. Mileski, 340 P.2d 205, 212 (Wyo. 1959); John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States of America § 759b (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941).

(n34)Footnote 337. John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States of America § 759b (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941).

(n35)Footnote 338. In Alexander v. Andrews, 64 S.E.2d 487 (W. Va. 1951), the subsequent purchaser paid $1,000 when the property was deeded to him. As additional consideration, the purchaser agreed to care for the grantor for the rest of his life and bury him after he died. Before the rest of the consideration was given, the prior grantee recorded her deed. The court held that the recordation of the prior deed was constructive notice to the subsequent purchaser. The subsequent purchaser was, however, entitled to reimbursement for all consideration given before the prior deed was recorded. This decision indicates that the court did not recognize that the doctrine of constructive record notice is based on a duty to search the record. In Alexander, the continuing consideration at the time the prior deed was recorded was caring for the grantor for the rest of his life and burying him after death. It follows from the court's decision that the subsequent purchaser was obligated to conduct frequent searches of the record as the purchaser grantee continued to provide the agreed upon consideration to the grantor.

(n36)Footnote 339. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages § 187 (2d ed. 1970); 3 John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States of America § 749a (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941); and Austin Wakeman Scott, Abridgment of the Law of Trusts § 304 (1960).

(n37)Footnote 340. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages § 188 (2d ed. 1970); 3 John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States of America § 749 (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941); and Austin Wakeman Scott, Abridgment of the Law of Trusts § 305 (1960).

(n38)Footnote 341. American Law of Property § 17.10 n.29 (A. James Casner ed., 1952); Annotation, Extension of Time or Forbearance to Sue as Consideration Constituting Mortgagee Bona Fide Purchaser, 39 A.L.R.2d 1088 (1955).

(n39)Footnote 342. Samuel Williston, the Law Governing Sales of Goods at Common Law and Under the Uniform Sales Act [Williston on Sales], § 620 (2d ed. 1924). "The importance of giving value is that thereby a purchaser from one whose title was only voidable acquires an indefeasible title... .The question involved has been much litigated in the law of negotiable paper, and it [is] almost uniformly held ... that the cancellation or payment of an antecedent debt was sufficient value to make an indorsee a purchaser for value, as he would have been had he taken money. By the great weight of authority, the transfer of a negotiable instrument to secure a precedent debt also made the indorsee a holder for value... .Many courts have taken a distinction between chattels and negotiable paper, so that it has been generally held that taking chattels even in absolute payment of a pre-existing debt does not constitute the holder a purchaser for value. But in England, and in some of the United States, it is held that such a person is a purchaser for value. On principle the latter view seems clearly right. The cancellation of a debt is a surrender of something valuable... .It is also most commonly held that one who takes chattels as collateral security for an antecedent debt is not a purchaser for value. Some States, however, here also regard the taker as a purchaser for value... . There seems no reason to distinguish what constitutes value where negotiable paper is purchased and where property of other sorts is purchased. The purchaser for value of negotiable paper may get greater rights than the purchaser for value of property of other kinds, but it seems an unnecessary and undesirable complication of the law to maintain a distinction as to what constitutes value." Id., at 1561-1563 (citations omitted); see also Austin Wakeman Scott, Trusts § 298.5 (1st ed. 1939).

(n40)Footnote 343. Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 1-201 (31)(ii), 14 U.L.A. 46. The definition is taken directly from the U.C.C. § 1-201(44), 1 U.L.A. 70.

(n41)Footnote 344. A.C. Freeman, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 918 (Edward W. Tuttle ed., 5th ed. 1925).

(n42)Footnote 345. Allan Axelrod et al., Land Transfer and Finance 698-99 (3d ed. 1986).

(n43)Footnote 346. Richard B. Johnson, Title Examination in Massachusetts, in A. James Casner & W. Barton Leach, Cases and Text onProperty 886, 917 (1st standard ed. 1964).

(n44)Footnote 347. See, e.g., Casey v. Gray, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538 (1993).

(n45)Footnote 348. In re Mellor, 734 F.2d 1397, 1401 n.4 (9th Cir. 1984); Holden v. Garrett, 23 Kan. 98 (1879); Kartchner v. State Tax Comm'n, 294 P.2d 790 (Utah 1956).

(n46)Footnote 349. Hannah v. Martinson, 758 P.2d 276 (Mont. 1988).

(n47)Footnote 350. See., e.g., Ark. Code Ann. § 14-15-404(b); 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/31.; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-1; and S.C. Codee Ann. § 30-7-10; 4 American Law of Property § 17.29 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n48)Footnote 351. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-1.

(n49)Footnote 352. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/31.

(N50)Footnote 353. George E. Osborne, Handbook on the Law of Mortgages § 210 (2d ed. 1970).

(n51)Footnote 354. Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 17 (2d ed. 1957).

(n52)Footnote 355. Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 17 (2d ed. 1957).

(n53)Footnote 356. Martin v. Dryden, 6 Ill. (1 Scam.) 187, 214 (1844).

(n54)Footnote 357. Osin v. Johnson, 243 F.2d 653, 657 (D.C. Cir. 1957); John Hanna, The Extension of Public Recordation, 31 Colum. L. Rev. 617, 629 (1931); Corwin W. Johnson, Purpose and Scope of Recording Statutes, 47 Iowa L. Rev. 231, 235-37 (1962).

(n55)Footnote 358. John G. Curran, Note, Status of Judgment Creditors Under the Recording Act, 32 Notre Dame Law. 471, 474 (1957).

(n56)Footnote 359. Pure race statutes protect purchasers who record first; notice plays no part in the statutory scheme.

(n57)Footnote 360. Klock v. Echols, 295 N.E.2d 319, 320 (Ill. App. 1973).

(n58)Footnote 361. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Kelton, 285 P.2d 168 (Ariz. 1955).

(n59)Footnote 362. Francis S. Philbrick, Limits of Record Search and Therefore of Notice, 93 U. Pa. L. Rev. 128-29 (1944).

(n60)Footnote 363. See, e.g., Cal. Civil Code § 1214; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.29; and Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.08.

(n61)Footnote 364. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-411; 2 Iowa Code Ann. § 558.41; and N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 291.

(n62)Footnote 365. See, e.g., Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183, § 4; and Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.38.

(n63)Footnote 366. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080; and N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-1.

(n64)Footnote 367. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 14-9-3; and Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.25.

(n65)Footnote 368. Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 21, § 351.

(n66)Footnote 369. Olympia Produce Co. v. Associates Fin. Servs. of Ala., Inc., 584 So. 2d 477 (Ala. 1991) 2 John

N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence as Administered in the United States
OF America § 595 (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941). Petition of Willmus, 568 N.W.2d 722 (Minn. Ct. App. 1997) (actual notice requires actual knowledge); Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 956 F. Supp. 989 (S.D. Ala. 1997) (tax liens listed in warranty deed gave purchaser actual notice of encumbrances on the property). aff'd by, 127 F.3d 41 (11th Cir. 1997).

(n67)Footnote 370. Powell on, Real Property § 82.02 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

(n68)Footnote 371. First Ala. Bank of Tuscaloosa v. Brooker, 418 So. 2d 851 (Ala. 1982); First Ala. Bank of Huntsville v. Key, 394 So. 2d 67 (Ala. Civ. App. 1981); Chisholm v. Mid-Town Oil Co., 419 S.W.2d 194 (Tenn. App. 1966); Herbert T. Tiffany, the Law of Real Property § 1284 (Basil Jones ed., 3d ed. 1939).

(n69)Footnote 372. Roger A. Cunningham et al., the Law of Property § 11.10 n.26 (1984).

(n70)Footnote 373. However, consider Emrick v. Multicon Bldrs., Inc., 566 N.E.2d 1189 (Ohio 1991), in which the court held that it had to be determined that the purchaser actually knew that the prior unrecorded restrictions applied to the property purchased. It was not sufficient if the purchaser had notice of facts that might put a purchaser on inquiry. The Ohio recording act says that the purchaser, to be protected, must have "no knowledge" of the prior conveyance or interest. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.25. This has been interpreted to mean "without actual knowledge" in the strict sense. Varwig v. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis R.R. Co., 44 N.E. 92, 94 (Ohio 1896). See also In re Dlott, 43 B.R. 789 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1983). As a result, Ohio appears to be one of the few jurisdictions in which the doctrine of inquiry notice is not recognized. Recording acts elsewhere refer to purchasers being "without notice" or "in good faith," terms which leave more room for finding notice through the doctrine of inquiry notice.

(n71)Footnote 374. In many jurisdictions, instruments recorded in fact which were ineligible for recordation, due to the absence of some formal requirement (such as acknowledgement), will not give constructive record notice. H.D. Warren, Annotation, Record of Instrument Without Sufficient Acknowledgment as Notice, 59 A.L.R.2d 1299 (1958). A recorded in fact instrument may also fail to give constructive notice because it is recorded outside of the chain of title. Witter v. Taggart, 577 N.E.2d 338, 340 (N.Y. 1991); Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Nieves, 272 A.D.2d 435 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000).

(n72)Footnote 375. Anderson v. Anderson, 96 N.E. 265 (Ill. 1911). In that case, in 1899 the owner of the subject property signed a ten-year lease with her son, who retained in the contract an option to purchase the land at anytime during the lease at a particular price. In September 1904, the mother asked the son to purchase the subject property at a price much higher than the option price. The son refused, and then filed the contract in the Recorder's Office on September 14, 1904. On September 23, 1904, the mother conveyed the subject property to her daughters for the expressed consideration of one dollar. The circuit court dismissed the son's bill filed against the daughters for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. The Illinois Supreme Court reversed and remanded (with directions to enter a decree in conformity with the prayer of the bill), holding that "[t]here is nothing unconscionable in enforcing the contract as against the daughters and declaring the deed void, as the record shows conclusively that they took the deed with full notice of the contract, and knew at the time it was executed and delivered to them that appellant claimed his contract was enforceable." Id. at 268.

(n73)Footnote 376. Bays v. Matthews, 440 N.E.2d 142 (Ill. App. 1982). In that case, plaintiffs brought action to quiet title to the mineral estate in certain described real estate, and the trial court found that the action was barred by laches and that title to the mineral estate was vested in defendants. Plaintiffs claim title to the mineral estate as heirs of Robert A. Prowell, who acquired title to the mineral estate of the property in 1909. However, plaintiffs made no attempt to search the county records to determine who was paying the property taxes, after they discovered by published notice in 1961 that the property was on the delinquent tax roll. Plaintiffs testified they first received actual notice that someone else was claiming the mineral estate in 1974 or 1975, when they first searched the records after learning that the mineral rights had been granted to someone else. Through this search, plaintiffs discovered the tax deed to the subject property issued in 1947 to Williams, through which defendants claim title to the mineral estate. The Appellate Court affirmed, holding the plaintiffs "are chargeable with constructive notice of the public records... .The test is not what the appellant knows, but what he might have known by the use of the means of information within his reach with the vigilance the law requires of him." Id. at 147 (citation omitted).

(n74)Footnote 377. Jaeger v. Hardy, 27 N.E. 863, 865 (Ohio 1891). See also Illinois Nat'l Bank v. Chegin, 220 N.E.2d 226 (Ill. 1966). The trial court entered a decree of specific performance of vendee's agreement to buy land, despite vendee's assertion of unmarketability due to possible existing and future liens based upon a recent criminal forfeiture statute. The Illinois Supreme Court affirmed, holding that "purchasers have reposed in the thought that they could rely on public records in security, and that they would be subject to unrecorded claims only if they had or were in some manner chargeable with actual notice thereof. And because any departure from the security placed on recordation could endanger the structure upon which our land economy rests, as well as the stability of land titles, it has been held that the legislative intent to depart from a policy of recordation will not be implied but must be clearly expressed... .In the present case there was no lis pendens notice of pending litigation, no record of unpaid fines or judgments arising under the forfeiture statute with respect to the contract property, and defendant conceded that she had no actual knowledge which would deny her the protection afforded to a bona fide purchaser for value." Id. at 229.

(n75)Footnote 378. Tamburine v. Center Sav. Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942, 949 (Tex. Civ. App. 1979); Dunlap Investors Ltd. v. Hogan, 650 P.2d 432, 435 (Ariz. 1982). See also USOLTA § 3-205(b), 14 U.L.A. § 3-205(b) (1990).

(n76)Footnote 379. Bump v. Dahl, 133 N.W.2d 295 (Wis. 1965).

(n77)Footnote 380. Professor Philbrick used "constructive notice" to refer solely to notice imputed to purchasers arising out of the duty to search the record. Francis S. Philbrick, Limits of Record Search and Therefore of Notice, 93 U. Pa. L. Rev. 125 n.1 (1944). The term "constructive notice" in common usage has a broader meaning; it is sometimes used to refer to any form of imputed notice including "inquiry notice." First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998) (there are two kinds of constructive notice, notice arising from documents filed with county recorder and inquiry notice).

(n78)Footnote 381. Francis S. Philbrick, Limits of Record Search and Therefore of Notice, 93 U. Pa. L. Rev. 129-30 (1944).

(n79)Footnote 382. Ala. Code § 35-4-51; Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080; Ark. Code Ann. § 14-15-404 (a) (Michie); Idaho Code § 55-811; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2222; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.390 (Vernon); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-21-302 (1); Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 111.320; N.M. Stat. Ann. 14-9-2; Okla. Stat. Ann. Tit. 16, § 16; Utah Code Ann. § 57-3-2 (1); and Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-121(a). Ala. Code § 35-4-51; Alaska Stat. § 40.17.080; Ark. Code Ann. § 14-15-404 (a) (Michie); Idaho Code § 55-811; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2222; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.390 (Vernon); Mont. Code Ann. § 70-21-302 (1); Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 111.320; N.M. Stat. Ann. 14-9-2; Okla. Stat. Ann. Tit. 16, § 16; Utah Code Ann. § 57-3-102; and Wyo. Stat. § 34-1-121(a). Orange Improvements P'ship v. Cardo, Inc., 984 F. Supp. 85 (D. Conn. 1997) (constructive notice is given only of that which could be revealed by a search of the change of title); order aff'd by, 1998 WL 998575 (2nd Cir. 1999). Matter of Estate of Zahn, 702 A.2d 482 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1997) ("when a deed conveyed by a mortgagor is absolutely silent about outstanding mortgage, if the grantee has actual or constructive notice by record or otherwise, grantee takes land encumbered by mortgage"); Matter of Hamilton, 125 F.3d 292 (5th Cir. 1997) (defines statutory requirements for constructive notice).

(n80)Footnote 383. See, e.g., Nile Valley Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Security Title Guar. Corp., 813 P.2d 849, 852 (Colo. App. 1991). At least one legislature made the same broad statement: "Such records shall be notice to all the world of the existence and contents of the instruments so recorded from the time of recording." N.M. Stat. § 14-9-2. The New Mexico Supreme Court has limited "all the world" to include only those who were bound to search the record. Angle v. Slayton, 697 P.2d 940, 942 (N.M. 1985); and Romero v. Sanchez, 492 P.2d 140, 143-144 (N.M. 1971).

(n81)Footnote 384. Angle v. Slayton, 697 P.2d 940, 942 (N.M. 1985); and Romero v. Sanchez, 492 P.2d 140, 143-144 (N.M. 1971). Caballero Planting Co., Inc. v. Hymel, 713 So. 2d 1277 (La. App. 1998) (unrecorded verbal lease not protected by record notice doctrine, but landlords still obligated to honor unrecorded lease).

(n82)Footnote 385. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Kelton, 285 P.2d 168, 170-171 (Ariz. 1955).

(n83)Footnote 386. Genovese Drug Stores, Inc. v. Connecticut Packing Co., Inc., 732 F.2d 286, 289-290 (2d Cir. 1984) (applying Connecticut law); Witter v. Taggart, 577 N.E.2d 338 (N.Y. 1991).

(n84)Footnote 387. Ellingsen v. Franklin County, 778 P.2d 1072, 1075-1076 (Wash. App. 1989) (holding that information regarding a road in county board minutes was not imputed to purchasers because they had no duty to search the voluminous minutes, for which there was no usable index).

(n85)Footnote 388. Harry M. Cross, The Record "Chain of Title" Hypocrisy, 57 Colum. L. Rev. 787, 792 (1957).

(n86)Footnote 389. Harry M. Cross, The Record "Chain of Title" Hypocrisy, 57 Colum. L. Rev. 787, 788 (1957).

(n87)Footnote 390. Over twenty years ago, the recorder's office in Suffolk County, Massachusetts (Boston) received approximately 7,000 instruments per month; in Cook County, Illinois (Chicago) about 15,000 per month; and in Los Angeles, California, between 5,000 and 6,000 per day. Paul E. Basye, A Uniform Land Parcel Identifier--Its Potential for All Our Land Records, 22 Am. U. L. Rev. 251 (1973).

(n88)Footnote 391. Friendship Manor, Inc. v. Greiman, 581 A.2d 893, 896-897 (N.J. Super., 1990); 4 American Law of Property § 17.19 (A. James Casner ed., 1952); Edward S. Bade, Cases and Materials on Real Property and Conveyancing 238 (1954).

(n89)Footnote 392. Harry M. Cross, The Record "Chain of Title" Hypocrisy, 57 Colum. L. Rev. 787, 794 (1957). See, e.g., 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/7.

(n90)Footnote 393. Glen Ellyn Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. State Bank of Geneva, 382 N.E.2d 1267 (Ill. App. 1978) involved a variation on this basic problem situation. In this case, one of the mortgagors had contracted to sell the property before they acquired title. The contract was recorded and then title was conveyed to the mortgagor. The mortgagors then mortgaged the property to the mortgagee. The court held that the mortgagee did not have constructive notice of the contract because it was recorded too soon to be in the chain of title. Id., at 1273.

(n91)Footnote 394. Of course, under other law (e.g., estoppel) what the prior grantee had notice of may be very relevant.

(n92)Footnote 395. Wheeler v. Young, 55 A. 670, 672 (Conn. 1903).

(n93)Footnote 396. Sabo v. Horvath, 559 P.2d 1038, 1044 (Alaska 1976); Stanley M. Johanson, Estoppel by Deed and the Recording System: The "Ayer Rule" Reexamined, 43 B.U. L. Rev. 441, 442, 458 n.83 (1963).

(n94)Footnote 397. Stanley M. Johnson, Estoppel by Deed and the Recording System: The "Ayer Rule" Reexamined, 43 B.U. L. Rev. 441, at 460 n.91 (1963).

(n95)Footnote 398. John N. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence § 754 (Spencer W. Symons ed., 5th ed. 1941). The filtering effect is necessary for the protection of the protected party. If those who took from the protected party also had to qualify for protection themselves, the universe of potential purchasers from the protected party might be small or non-existent. The exception to the filtering effect is where an owner who was disqualified from attaining protection reacquires the property. This revives or restores the priority of the unrecorded claim. Id. Sometimes the filtering effect is also referred to as the "shelter" principle. Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 11.10, 794 (1984).

(n96)Footnote 399. Morse v. Curtis, 2 N.E. 929 (Mass. 1885), is the leading case of several adopting this view. Oddly, a leading case holding that a prior after acquired title claimant prevails over a subsequent claimant, even though the prior deed was recorded prior to the grantor's acquisition of the interest, was decided by the Massachusetts Supreme Court less than a decade later. Ayer v. Philadelphia & Boston Face Brick Co., 34 N.E. 177 (Mass. 1893).

(n97)Footnote 400. Friendship Manor, Inc. v. Greiman, 581 A.2d 893 (N.J. Super. 1990). Cox v. RKA Corp., 753 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 2000).

(n98)Footnote 401. Woods v. Garnett, 16 So. 390 (Miss. 1894) is the leading case.

(n99)Footnote 402. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 4 (2d ed. 1957).

(n100)Footnote 403. When computerization of land title records becomes universal, these chain of title problems will be of interest only to legal historians. In computer systems, data is retrievable by the property affected, usually by a land parcel identifier (the computer-age version of a parcel-specific tract index) assigned to the property. Paul E. Basye, A Uniform Land Parcel Identifier--Its Potential for All Our Land Records, 22 Am. U. L. Rev. 251 (1973); Paul E. Basye, Clearing Land Titles § 9, at 2-7 (2d ed. Supp. 1989).

(n101)Footnote 404. The encumbrance is usually a restrictive covenant (e.g., Bishop v. Rueff, 619 S.W.2d 718 (Ky. App. 1981)) or an easement (e.g., Piper v. Mowris, 351 A.2d 635 (Pa. 1976)).

(n102)Footnote 405. Bishop v. Rueff, 619 S.W.2d 718 (Ky. App. 1981); Guillette v. Daly Dry Wall, Inc., 325 N.E.2d 572 (Mass. 1975); Buffalo Academy of the Sacred Heart v. Boehm Bros., Inc., 196 N.E. 42 (N.Y. 1935); Finley v. Glenn, 154 A. 299 (Pa. 1931); 4 American Law of Property § 17.24 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n103)Footnote 406. Guillette v. Daly Dry Wall, Inc., 325 N.E.2d 572 (Mass. 1975). This reasoning is consistent with the equally dubious notion that the index is not an essential part of the record. Id., at 575.

(n104)Footnote 407. Roger A. Cunningham et al., the Law of Property § 11.11, 802 (1984).

(n105)Footnote 408. See § 92.05 and § 92.08 supra.

(n106)Footnote 409. Bishop v. Rueff, 619 S.W.2d 718, 723 (Ky. App. 1981) (concurring opinion).

(n107)Footnote 410. Carol M. Rose, Crystals and Mud in Property Law, 40 Stan. L. Rev. 577, 589-90 (1988). Professor Philbrick blames John Norton Pomeroy (the original author the treatise on equity jurisprudence which has been cited many times in this chapter) for much of the damage done to the recording system by the importation of broad notice concepts from equity. Francis S. Philbrick, Limits of Record Search and Therefore of Notice (Part II), 93 U. Pa. L. Rev. 259, 267-73 (1945). Professor Carol M. Rose's article suggests that deeper forces may have been behind the "mudding" of pristine original "crystalline" recording system concepts. Pomeroy may have been as influential as Philbrick believed, but the influence of Pomeroy's thinking may have been due largely to a readiness of judges to accept it. If another scholar had contemporaneously published views supporting a narrow concept of notice, those views may have been disregarded by courts. First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998) (there two kinds of constructive notice, record notice and inquiry notice arising from a knowledge of facts that should impart to a person knowledge of the ultimate fact).

(n108)Footnote 411. Grose v. Sauvageau, 942 P.2d 398 (Wyo. 1997) (a third party's possession of the property was not contrary to the rights of the record title holder and therefore does not trigger inquiry notice); Matter of Hamilton, 125 F.3d 292 (5th Cir. 1997) (inquiry into deed would have been sufficient to put purchaser on inquiry notice).

(n109)Footnote 412. Willis v. Stager, 481 P.2d 78, 82-83 (Or. 1971).

(n110)Footnote 413. Wineberg v. Moore, 194 F. Supp. 12 (N.D. Cal. 1961); Bump v. Dahl, 133 N.W.2d 295 (Wis.

1965); and Miller v. Green, 58 N.W.2d 704 (Wis. 1953).

(n111)Footnote 414. 5 Herbert T. Tiffany, the Law of Real Property § 1288 (3d ed. 1939).

(n112)Footnote 415. In Maryland, by statute, possession by a grantee under an unrecorded deed that is inconsistent with record title will give constructive notice "of what an inquiry of the possessor would disclose as to the existence of the unrecorded deed." Md. Real Property Code Ann. § 3-202. The USOLTA provides for a duty to inspect and constructive notice of facts concerning use and occupancy that would have been revealed "by reasonable inspection or inquiry... ." Unif. Simplification of Land Transfers Act § 3-302 (a) (2), 14 U.L.A. § 3-302 (a) (2) (1990).

(n113)Footnote 416. Kansas City Granite & Monument Co. v. Jordan, 295 S.W. 763, 768-770 (Mo. 1927).

(n114)Footnote 417. N.M. Stat. Ann. § 14-9-3; Va. Code Ann. § 55-96 (A)(1). But see Platte Valley Cattle Co. v. Goldberg, 1993 Neb. App. LEXIS 60 (Neb. App. Feb. 9, 1993) (not approved for publication in permanent law reports), where the purchaser had a duty not only to inspect the property and question the seller about a possible easement that had not been recorded, but also to make further inquiry even after the seller misled the purchaser about the use of a well-traveled path.

(n115)Footnote 418. 2 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 682 (2d ed. 1957).

(n116)Footnote 419. Dale A. Whitman, Transferring North Carolina Real Estate Part I: How the Present System Functions, 49 N.C. L. Rev. 413, 430 (1971).

(n117)Footnote 420. Miller v. Green, 58 N.W.2d 704 (Wis. 1953).

(n118)Footnote 421. See, e.g., Powell on Real Property § 82.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n119)Footnote 422. McCannon v. Marston, 679 F.2d 13 (3d Cir. 1982) (applying Pennsylvania law).

(n120)Footnote 423. 4 American Law of Property § 17.12 (A. James Casner ed., 1952). In some jurisdictions, constructive notice of the fact of possession will not suffice; the purchaser must have actual knowledge of the possession before there is a duty to inquire. Id. In Ohio, even actual knowledge may not give rise to a duty to inquire. Varwig v. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis R.R., 44 N.E. 92 (Ohio 1896). Possession will give notice of all of the rights of the party in possession, rather than just part of the rights, but it will not give notice of any rights obtained by a third party through the possessor. Mellon Nat'l Mtg. Co. of Ohio v. Jones, 374 N.E.2d 666 (Ohio App. 1977). Generally, Ohio cases appear to value facility of real estate transfer over the security of title to non-record claims. The doctrine of inquiry notice is barely recognized in Ohio, if at all. See, e.g., Emrick v. Multicon Bldrs., Inc., 566 N.E.2d 1189 (Ohio 1991).

(n121)Footnote 424. Valley Nat'l Bank of Ariz. v. Avco Dev. Co., 480 P.2d 671, 676 (Ariz. App. 1971).

(n122)Footnote 425. Dixon v. Kaufman, 58 N.W.2d 797 (N.D. 1953).

(n123)Footnote 426. Roger A. Cunningham, et al., the Law of Property § 11.10 (1984). There are a few contrary decisions. Id.

(n124)Footnote 427. American Law of Property § 17.12 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n125)Footnote 428. American Law of Property § 17.12 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n126)Footnote 429. Bacote v. Wyckoff, 310 S.E.2d 520 (Ga. 1984); Willis v. Stager, 481 P.2d 78 (Or. 1971); Webb v. Stewart, 469 P.2d 609 (Or. 1970).

(n127)Footnote 430. Dana Point Condo. Ass'n v. Keystone Serv. Co., 491 N.E.2d 63 (Ill. App. 1986).

(n128)Footnote 431. Cohen v. Thomas & Son Transfer Line, 586 P.2d 39 (Colo. 1978); Martinique Realty Corp. v. Hull, 166 A.2d 803 (N.J. Super. 1960); Miller v. Green, 58 N.W.2d 704 (Wis. 1953); 4 American Law of Property § 17.12 (A. James Casner ed., 1952).

(n129)Footnote 432. Valley Nat'l Bank of Ariz. v. Avco Dev. Co., 480 P.2d 671 (Ariz. App. 1971).

(n130)Footnote 433. Mader v. Kallos, 365 N.W.2d 408 (Neb. 1985); Powell on Real Property § 82.02 (Michael Allan Wolf ed., Matthew Bender).

(n131)Footnote 434. 194 F. Supp. 12 (N.D. Cal. 1961).

(n132)Footnote 435. 58 N.W.2d 704 (Wis. 1953).

(n133)Footnote 436. Florida Power & Light Co. v. Rader, 306 So. 2d 565 (Fla. App. 1975).

(n134)Footnote 437. Lake Meredith Dev. Co. v. City of Fritch, 564 S.W.2d 427 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

(n135)Footnote 438. Fanti v. Welsh, 161 S.E.2d 501 (W. Va. 1968).

(n136)Footnote 439. Wolek v. Di Feo, 159 A.2d 127 (N.J. Super. 1960).

(n137)Footnote 440. Sanborn v. McLean, 206 N.W. 496 (Mich. 1925).

(n138)Footnote 441. Harper v. Paradise, 210 S.E.2d 710 (Ga. 1974); Guerin v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 218 P. 949 (Mont. 1923); Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 101 (1960). However, where a statute requires the purchaser to have "actual notice," a mere reference to an unrecorded mortgage in a probate inventory will not be sufficient and knowledge of facts that ordinarily would put a person on inquiry will not be enough. Tramontozzi v. D'Amicis, 183 N.E.2d 295 (Mass. 1962).

(n139)Footnote 442. Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 38-35-108; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 184, § 25; Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-275.04, 76-275.06. New Jersey and New York have statutes of more limited application. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 46:22-2; New York Real Property Law § 291 (McKinney). The Colorado statute has been applied in two reported cases. Swofford v. Colo. Nat'l Bank of Denver, 628 P.2d 184 (Colo. App. 1981); Gilpin Inv. Co. v. Blake, 712 P.2d 105 (Colo. App. 1985).

(n140)Footnote 443. Lewis M. Simes & Clarence B. Taylor, the Improvement of Conveyancing by Legislation 103-06 (1960).

(n141)Footnote 444. USOLTA § 3-207, 14 U.L.A. 285 (1990).

(n142)Footnote 445. Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 4 (2d ed. 1957).

(n143)Footnote 446. See, e.g., 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/9 (warranty deed); 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/10 (quitclaim deed).

(n144)Footnote 447. Brown v. Lober, 389 N.E.2d 1188 (Ill. 1979).

(n145)Footnote 448. 2 William F. Walsh, Commentaries on the Law of Real Property § 202 (1947).

(n146)Footnote 449. K.A. Drechsler, Annotation, Rights or Interests Covered by Quitclaim Deed, 162 A.L.R. 556, 560-62 (1946).

(n147)Footnote 450. Manville M. Heisel, Comment, Deeds - Quitclaim Grantee as a Bona Fide Purchaser, 28 Or.

L. Rev. 258 (1949); Annotation, Grantee or Mortgagee by Quitclaim Deed or Mortgage in Quitclaim Form as within Protection of Recording Laws, 59 A.L.R. 632 (1929).

(n148)Footnote 451. Rucker v. Tennessee Coal, Iron and R. Co., 58 So. 465, 468 (Ala. 1912).

(n149)Footnote 452. Manville M. Heisel, Comment,Deeds--Quitclaim Grantee as a Bona Fide Purchaser, 28 Or. L. Rev. 258 (1949); Annotation, Grantee or Mortgagee by Quitclaim Deed or Mortgage in Quitclaim Form as within Protection of Recording Laws, 59 A.L.R. 632 (1929).

(n150)Footnote 453. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.29; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.34; N.D. Cent. Code § 47-19-41; and Va. Code Ann. § 55-96. In at least Michigan and Virginia, the statutes reject contrary prior state supreme court decisions. Peters v. Cartier, 45 N.W. 73 (Mich. 1890); Virginia & T. Coal & I. Co. v. Fields, 26 S.E. 426 (Va. 1896).

(n151)Footnote 454. Manville M. Heisel, Comment, Deeds--Quitclaim Grantee as a Bona Fide Purchaser, 28 Or. L. Rev. 258, 259 (1949).

(n152)Footnote 455. Harper v. Paradise, 210 S.E.2d 710 (Ga. 1974); Knutson v. Christeson, 684 S.W.2d 549 (Mo. App. 1984).

(n153)Footnote 456. For instance, in Cook County, Illinois, corporate trustees of Illinois land trusts routinely refuse to execute conveyances with warranties for this reason. These trustees are typically paid very little for acting as trustees, because they have very few responsibilities and little liability.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.10

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.10 Title Registration.n457

[Go To Supp]

Commentators have exhaustively discussed the weaknesses of the American recording system n458 as a source of land title assurance. n459 Many reforms of the system have been proposed and a few have even been implemented. n460 One of the most radical reform proposals is to replace the recording system with the Torrens system of title registration. n461 Unlike recording, title registration does not usually create or transfer a legal interest until government makes a conclusive assessment of the current state of the title.

While title registration has been used in continental Europe since the early Middle Ages, n462 modern European title registration systems were not established until the 1800s. n463 England considered adopting a recording system during the 1800s, but in 1862 it adopted a registration system instead. n464 England employed some antecedents of the American recording system to a limited extent, but a comprehensive land title records system did not exist in England until this century. After substantial modifications and a number of false starts, n465 registration was finally implemented throughout England and Wales after the enactment of the Land Registration Act of 1925. n466 In Australia, Sir Robert Richard Torrens invented and implemented the Torrens system of title registration in the 1850s. n467

§ 92.10(a) The Torrens System.

Sir Robert Richard Torrens based his system of land title registration on the English method of ship registration. Each ship was assigned a page in the registry, on which there appeared the ship's name and description, the name of the ship's owner, and a statement of the liens and encumbrances against the ship. The owner of the ship received a duplicate of the page as a certificate of title and proof of ownership. Upon sale of the ship, the instrument of transfer and the certificate were sent to the registry office, and a new page was then prepared to evidence the transfer of ownership.

Sir Robert reasoned that a similar system could be used to register ownership of real estate, and he drafted legislation to accomplish that result. Sir Robert promised that the new system would have four "grand characteristics": certainty, economy, simplicity, and facility. n468 In 1857, his proposed legislation was enacted in South Australia, and enactment of similar legislation in other British territories soon followed. n469

Torrens is one of five general types of title registration systems used in the world, n470 and it is the only type used in the United States. In 1895, Illinois became the first American state to enact Torrens legislation; n471 Torrens was adopted by nineteen other states within the next few decades. n472 Since that time, nine of those states have either repealed the legislation or have allowed it to lapse. n473 Today, the Torrens system is used to a substantial extent in only five states: Hawaii, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Ohio. n474

In Hawaii and Massachusetts, Torrens is used state-wide. In the other three states, its use is limited to a few localities: Illinois (Cook County only), Minnesota (Hennepin and Ramsey Counties, with minimal registrations elsewhere) and Ohio (Hamilton County, with minimal registrations elsewhere). In none of these states or localities are a majority of parcels registered under Torrens. The highest incidence of use is most probably in Hawaii, where nearly forty-five percent of all parcels are so registered. n475 § 92.10(b) The Torrens System in Operation: Mirror, Curtain and Indemnity.

The Torrens system of title registration has three major components:

(1) the register of titles;

(2) the document vault; and

(3) the assurance or indemnity fund.

The basic goal is to make the governmentally maintained record a conclusive statement of ownership and of the condition of title. This conclusive statement is intended to function both as a "mirror" of the true state of the title and as a "curtain" between the present and the past so as to make it unnecessary to conduct the kind of historical searches performed in recording systems. n476

Under Torrens, original certificates of title are maintained by the administrator of the system, normally called the Registrar of Titles. The certificate names the owner, describes the property and the estate owned, and contains a list of the liens or encumbrances on the property. n477 Where these liens or encumbrances are created by registered instruments, the original or a copy of the instrument can be retrieved from the document vault or other storage facility for examination.

Upon initial registration or a transfer of ownership, the transferee receives a duplicate certificate of title. n478 The owner's duplicate is not normally kept up-to-date as subsequent claims, liens, or other encumbrances are registered on the original. The deed of conveyance and the owner's duplicate, or an acceptable substitute, must be presented to register a transfer of ownership. When an interest is transferred, the former certificate showing the transferor as owner is canceled, and a new certificate is issued showing the transferee as the new owner. Any active liens or encumbrances on the old certificate are carried forward to the new one.

At the time an instrument is presented for registration, the Torrens office may compare the signature on the instrument with a specimen of the owner's signature on file. When this procedure is followed, Torrens has a built-in protection against the registration of forged instruments; recording systems have no comparable protection against recordation of forgeries.

The assurance or indemnity fund is the third important component of the Torrens system. This fund is used to compensate those who suffer losses because of errors of the Torrens office personnel and those who wrongfully lose interests in real estate due to the operation of the Torrens system. n479 Upon initial registration, or at some time thereafter, the owner or other party may be required to make a contribution to this fund.

Confidence in the Torrens system in California was shaken in 1937 when the entire state assurance fund was wiped out by a single claim; n480 repeal of the California Torrens Act followed in 1955. n481 In Illinois and Massachusetts, local funds are backed up by the assets and credit of the state or local government. n482 In Hawaii and Minnesota, special state funds supply this back-up. n483

§ 92.10(c) Initial Registration.

Initial registration of title is not a simple matter. The procedure has often been compared to an action to quiet title. n484 Once an initial registration becomes final, it has about the same effect as a final judgment in a quiet title action. Aside from the important exceptions of off-certificate risks and overriding interests, the registration is binding against the whole world. Indeed, it is often said that the main difference between recording and Torrens is that in Torrens the title itself is registered, while under recording the evidences of title are recorded. n485

Since initial registration usually involves a binding determination of the rights in the title being registered, possible claimants must be given due process under state and federal constitutions. Reasonable efforts must be made to identify and notify these claimants of the initial registration, and they must be given sufficient opportunity to be heard on their claims. This process requires title searches and examinations and the possible expense of preparing and conducting hearings on claims. Until fairly recently, initial registration under American statutes was handled almost exclusively through judicial proceedings. n486

Initial registration of a title can be expensive. It is generally agreed that the high cost of initial registration was a primary cause of the failure of Torrens to take hold in much of the United States. n487 In addition to the required contribution to the assurance fund, the title must be examined to identify possible encumbrances or claimants, the property may be surveyed, court documents must be filed, notices must be published, and hearings may be held before the initial registration of the title. Attorneys and other experts may be also required.

It is difficult to determine precisely the average cost of initial registration, even in a particular location. Attorney fees can vary considerably. Depending on local practices and procedures, some of the costs may be absorbed by the public, but most are usually borne by the owner seeking registration. In the rare occurrence of a registration being contested, these costs will rapidly escalate. In 1985, Richard W. Edblom, the Examiner of Titles for Hennepin County, Minnesota, estimated the cost to the registrant for the initial registration of a parcel in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area at somewhere between one and two thousand dollars. n488 This estimate is not inconsistent with published cost figures for other localities, adjusted for inflation. n489

§ 92.10(d) Administrative Initial Registration of Possessory Title.

In 1982, Minnesota became the first American state to authorize administrative initial registration of possessory titles. n490 These titles become absolute after a certain period of time. n491 Apparently, administrative initial registration of possessory titles is valid under American due process clauses if adequate notice is given to possible claimants and if the period during which a possessory title registration could be challenged is sufficiently long. n492 The Minnesota authorizing legislation was heralded as having "the potential for removing the remaining disincentive for Torrens registration--the high cost of registering uncontested titles by judicial proceeding." n493

As is the case with judicial registrations proceedings, the Minnesota possessory title registration statute requires the applicant to submit an abstract of title with the application for registration. n494 This is done so that record claimants can be identified and notified of the registration, thereby satisfying due process requirements. The cost of preparing this abstract should be about the same as that for preparing one for a sale under the attorney opinion method of title assurance. This cost may be a financial disincentive for owners to register, unless they feel reasonably sure that registration will significantly lower their title costs in a subsequent sale or loan transaction. n495

On August 1, 1990, approximately eight years after passage, Hennepin n496 became the first Minnesota county to adopt the statute. n497 While Ramsey n498 and Anoka Counties have also expressed an interest in adopting possessory title initial registration, as of November, 1990, neither had done so. n499 While representatives of the Minnesota title insurance industry opposed the adoption of possessory title registration, n500 its failure to be adopted elsewhere in Minnesota may be due to a perception that it does not significantly reduce the disincentive to the property owner to register.

The main thrust of the Minnesota possessory title registration statute is to take initial registration out of the courts and into the administrative jurisdiction of the Examiner of Titles. Even if it is assumed that this alone will result in savings, the costs of identifying claimants to the title and giving them due process still remain, and these costs still have to be borne by either property owners or government. The financial disincentive to register remains if the property owner is assigned a major portion of these costs.

While American Torrens advocates recognize that the cost of initial registration is a serious barrier to implementation, most of them fail to appreciate that the quality and security of registered titles or interests are not as great as they may appear to be. Usually, a prospective transferee of a registered interest still needs professional title examination services. Furthermore, while the need for title insurance or its equivalent is not as great for registered titles as for recorded ones, registered titles usually involve title risks that may make such coverage appropriate, if not necessary. As a result, from a cost-benefit perspective, the incentives for an individual to register and for the government to both mandate registration and to accept the burdens of administering registration are not as great as they may initially appear. While a registered title may appear more secure to a transferee than a recorded title, the question is whether this apparent greater security justifies the related costs and difficulties.

§ 92.10(e) The Torrens System in Operation: Security of Title.

Initially, Torrens appears to have an appealing simplicity compared with recording. Instead of having to search for and examine the entire recorded legal history of a parcel, it seems that the title examiner under Torrens simply has to examine the original certificate of title which "conclusively establishes the legal status of the parcel's title, subject to some limited exceptions." n501 These so-called "limited" exceptions are usually referred to as "off-certificate risks" or "overriding interests." These exceptions make the Torrens register substantially less conclusive than it is sometimes perceived to be. n502 Except where a party loses an interest in land to a good faith purchaser from a party due to fraud, those suffering losses from off-certificate risks are generally not entitled to indemnification from the assurance fund, unless the registrar's actions constituted misconduct. n503

In no title registration system is the register absolutely conclusive. n504 Exceptions to conclusiveness found in Torrens systems, which are both statutory and judge-made, n505 fall into eight categories: n506

1. Caveats: notices on certificates of possible claims or interests which are not technically registered; n507

2. Governmental Interests:(a) rights under federal law in nations with federal systems of government, (b) liens or equivalent interests which secure payment of taxes, and (c) governmental lands for uses such as streets and highways;

3. Private special interest exceptions:(a) mechanics liens, and (b) judgment creditor or execution liens;

4. Possessory interests:(a) short-term leases, usually where the lessee is in possession, (b) easements by implication, and (c) other private easements (although these are rare);

5. Equity: equitable title, due process, and fairness claims or interests: (a) rights to appeal or contest initial registrations, (b) exceptions in certain cases of fraud, (c) exceptions to protect the relatively weak or disadvantaged, such as contract vendees or the uniformed, and (d) equitable title interests;

6. Error exceptions: Exceptions due to errors in the administration of the system;

7. Encroachments:(a) encroachments by structures on the property onto adjacent property or over a building line, and (b) encroachments by structures on adjacent property onto the subject property or over building lines;

8. Non-title related restrictions on ownership or use:(a) planning laws, (b) zoning ordinances or statutes, (c) building or housing codes, (d) environmental laws or regulation, and (e) lack of access to the property. n508

Even with these exceptions, the typical register is probably more reliable than the record in the typical recording system, and thus Torrens better promotes facility of transfer. The register also provides better, though by no means perfect, protection against non-record interests. Nonetheless, the belief that registration systems may be capable of eliminating the roles played by title insurance companies or attorneys in modern conveyancing is probably overly optimistic. The prudent purchaser of a registered interest will still need professional title services. In addition, the exceptions to the conclusiveness of the register may make title insurance advisable in many cases. n509

§ 92.10(f) Torrens and Title Insurance Compared: Recovery from the Torrens Assurance Fund.

The coverage afforded by the assurance fund is sometimes likened to title insurance; however, the two kinds of protection have important differences. First, title insurance may provide indemnification for insureds when the state of title turns out to be other than as insured. In contrast, the Torrens assurance fund may provide compensation for those who lose or fail to attain interests because of errors or misdeeds by the registrar, or because they are barred by the Torrens Act from recovering interests. n510 The typical title insurance policy will cover the insured against losses due to either off-the-record risks under recording or to off-certificate risks under Torrens. n511 The Torrens assurance fund, however, will generally not provide indemnification for losses caused by off-certificate risks, unless registrar misconduct is involved.

Second, title insurance and the Torrens assurance fund differ in the coverage of litigation expenses. The typical title insurance policy contains an agreement by the insurer to either defend the title as insured or to indemnify the insured for litigation expenses incurred because of covered title defects. n512 In contrast, the Torrens registered owner or claimant may have to bear the cost of title litigation alone. Pursuant to established policy, the Registrar in Cook County, Illinois, intervened in litigation concerning Torrens titles; n513 this policy tended to supply the title defense coverage available from title insurance.

Third, a Torrens claimant may have to exhaust remedies against those who might be responsible for the loss before the claimant is entitled to claim from the fund. Under some Torrens acts, a lawsuit against the registrar may be required before a claim is paid; n514 in other Torrens systems, the registrar may pay claims without being sued. In Cook County, Illinois, the Registrar could recommend to the county that a claim should be paid without a lawsuit being necessary. n515 In contrast, a title insurance company may pay claims without being sued, and the insured does not have to exhaust remedies against others in order to recover. Furthermore, where others may be responsible, the insured is simply obligated to assist the title insurance company in being subrogated to the rights of the insured against other responsible parties. Of course, title insurance companies may unjustifiably refuse to pay claims.

Fourth, contributory negligence may bar recovery from a Torrens fund. n516 In Illinois, contributory negligence did not bar recovery from the assurance fund where the Registrar committed gross errors contributing to the loss. n517

Contributory negligence does not bar recovery under the terms of the typical title insurance policy. However, failure to disclose known adverse material facts to the company at the time of the issuance of the policy may bar recovery.

Fifth, individual claims against a Torrens fund are not usually limited to a maximum money amount; title insurance claims are subject to a limit set at the date the policy was issued (which in some instances may be adjusted upward with inflation through optional inflation endorsements). n518 In some jurisdictions, insureds under title policies may be able to recover in excess of policy limits where bad faith or tortious conduct is proved. n519

Finally, various coverages are available from title insurance companies which are simply not provided by the Torrens assurance fund. The typical title policy issued currently covers off-certificate risks not covered by the Torrens assurance fund, such as some statutory overriding interests, and off-the-record risks not included in the protection given good faith purchasers under the recording system, such as a void link in the chain of title. This coverage may also include certain tax liens in existence at the date of policy, right of access to the property, hidden mechanics liens, zoning classifications or violations, and encroachments.

In summary, the coverage provided by typical title insurance policies is more extensive than that available from existing Torrens assurance funds, with the important exception of the policy limit on claims in title insurance policies. Of course, if it is decided that such coverage should be furnished by government, the title registration assurance fund component could always be expanded to include the broader coverages found in title insurance policies. n520

§ 92.10(g) User Difficulties with Torrens.

At first glance, Torrens appears to be more user-friendly than recording. It is obviously less burdensome for the user to examine the original certificate of title in the register than it is for him or her to wade through an often complicated recorded chain of title. While title examiners may find a registration system less painful and arduous, the parties initiating registration may have a quite different experience. The rigidity and inflexibility of a Torrens office can be frustrating and time-consuming.

Under recording, users ordinarily evaluate title data whenever they deem it necessary. These evaluations do not absolutely control whether data are added to the record. The recorder's acceptance of data for recording does not subject government to potential liability from an erroneous evaluation because the recorder usually makes no such evaluation. In contrast, title registration operates as a piecemeal yet never-ending quiet title action, albeit without all of the due process requirements applicable to initial registration. n521 Government makes the evaluations one at a time, and they usually are conclusive. The act of acceptance includes a governmental judgment that the instrument was effective to create, transfer, modify or cancel the interest referred to therein. Consequently, the government may be liable for erroneous or wrongful evaluations. Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that registrars are frequently quite careful about accepting instruments for registration.

An Australian lawyer's comment about registrar attitudes in his country, where initial registration is administrative rather than judicial, is pertinent to this discussion, although he was specifically referring only to acceptance of applications for initial registration:

> One of the principal criticisms of the administration of the Australian Torrens acts ... has been that registrars have been far too finicky in scrutinizing applications for registration... . n522 These failures on the part of the administrators of the Torrens scheme do not reveal a fundamental inefficiency or incompetence on their part, but simply a lack of imagination in seeking the most effective means of implementing the goals of the scheme. They have not been able to appreciate that their duty does not lie in protecting the assurance fund at all costs, but also in broadening the reach of the scheme, and their real duty lies in achieving a sensible accommodation between these two aims. n523

Critics of Torrens have referred to registrar inflexibility as a problem, usually without describing or even citing specific examples. n524

Instruments are examined when they are presented for registration. If the examiner believes the instrument is irregular or defective in some respect, the examiner will refuse registration. n525 For example, at some offices, the examiner may refuse registration if the signature appears to be forged. Registration of a forged instrument may cause the true owner to lose title to the land. n526 To satisfy the registrar, a proceeding subsequent to registration may be necessary or, at a minimum, the transferring owner may have to appear in the Torrens office to acknowledge the authenticity of the signature and to prove his or her identity. n527

Examiners may also refuse to accept instruments that contain minor discrepancies in the description of the parties or the property. To satisfy the registrar, an owner may have to either continue an error or to resort to court or administrative proceedings to correct it. n528 Such administrative inflexibility inconveniences the parties to a Torrens transaction n529 and creates additional user costs, such as time expenditures and added closing costs.

The inflexibility that may be encountered in Torrens systems causes other problems as well. For example, registrars may refuse to remove memorials of encumbrances which no longer exist, even those that cannot reasonably still exist. n530 While memorials may render the title unmarketable, they may only be eliminated through a subsequent proceeding in court. n531 This process is costly and further undermines the owner's confidence in Torrens. At times, Torrens systems also require subsequent proceedings in court to establish title or the transfer of title. For example, upon the death of a registered owner, the Torrens office may require a subsequent proceeding, separate from any probate proceedings, in order to establish devolution of ownership. n532

Title insurance companies and title examiners under the attorney opinion method of title assurance are often inflexible and overly conservative, but their pronouncements are not backed up by the state. In addition, title insurance companies will generally retract their objections after the owner either pays an additional premium or furnishes statements, affidavits, or title indemnity bonds. All of these items are usually less costly and more expeditious than obtaining court or administrative orders. n533 Finally, an unsatisfied owner usually has the option of using another company or examiner, but he or she cannot choose another Torrens office.

§ 92.10(h) Operation and Administration of Torrens: Economy and Efficiency?

At their extreme, registration advocates paint the private title industry as being populated by parasites who feed off of the inefficiencies of the recording system. n534 These advocates claim that the replacement of recording with Torrens registration will result in substantial savings to the public through the elimination or reduction of title examination or insurance costs. However, the comparative public and private costs of different land title assurance systems are difficult to assess. The available data are incomplete and, in some instances, unreliable.

Even if reliable data were readily available, meaningful quantification of the relevant costs presents difficult analytical problems. Despite the well-financed and in-depth studies of recordation and title registration in the United States made in the 1970s by Arthur D. Little, Inc. n535 and Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., n536 a statement published in 1966 by Professor Ted Fiflis remains true today: "There is no reliable, current analysis of the comparative out-of-pocket costs under the title registration, recording, and title insurance systems." n537 Thus, the economics of Torrens in relation to recordation remain difficult to quantify and evaluate.

While the comparative user costs of Torrens and recording have not been satisfactorily determined and measured, governmental costs of operation are another matter. In contrast to the paucity of reliable and meaningful comparative user cost data, published reliable data on comparative governmental costs are available. This data includes information from the County of York, Ontario, and three American jurisdictions where Torrens and recording systems operate side by side: Illinois (Cook County), Minnesota (Hennepin County) and Ohio (Hamilton County).

Comparative governmental costs have frequently been overlooked in published commentary comparing Torrens and recording. They are of vital significance in explaining the failure of Torrens to take hold in much of the United States. In order to work efficiently and satisfactorily, a title registration office must be adequately staffed with competent people who are capable of swiftly and accurately evaluating instruments presented for registration. These staffing requirements make it more costly to run a title registration office than a recorder's office.

In 1978, under contract from HUD, Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., conducted extensive field research on actual land record-keeping activities at twenty sites in the United States. n538 The Booz, Allen report on this research contains comparative cost data on three locations with dual Torrens and recording systems: Cook County, Illinois; Hennepin County, Minnesota; and Hamilton County, Ohio.

The following table is excerpted from a table in the Booz, Allen report: n539

RECORDER'S COSTS:	COOK n540	HENNEPIN	HAMILTON
Documents Processed	246,983	88,060	82,584
Transfers	81,112	26,683	27,230
Total Expenditures	$1,556,628	$536,964	$425,902
Cost Per Document	$6.30	$6.10	$5.16
Cost Per Transfer	$19.19	$20.12	$15.64

TORRENS COSTS:	COOK n541	HENNEPIN	HAMILTON
Documents Processed	35,825	50,310	15,403
Transfers	16,324	17,000	5,080
Total Expenditures	$2,000,084	$546,000	$104,604
Cost Per Document	$55.83	$10.85	$6.79
Cost Per Transfer	$122.52	$32.12	$20.59

The Ontario Law Reform Commission data for the County of York also indicate that the cost to government of operating a title registration office is greater than the cost of operating a title recordation office. The staff costs for each recordation in the recording office was $4.50, the cost for space was $2.50, and the entire cost for one recordation was $7.75. To register a title, the cost was significantly higher: the staff costs for each registration was $6.50, the cost for space was $2.25, and the entire cost for one registration was $9.50. n542

The Booz, Allen study also reveals that American recorder's offices are profit centers for their counties. n543 In contrast, American Torrens offices usually require a subsidy because the income they receive often falls short of operational costs. n544 While the high cost of initial registration and the opposition from the title assurance industry may have contributed to the failure of Torrens to take hold in the United States, the high public cost and burden of continuing administration of Torrens has been the most significant contributing factor behind this failure. For users, Torrens is actually or potentially a more efficient and less costly system of land title assurance and transfer than is recording. Arguably, title risks are or can be made to be so much less under Torrens compared with recording that title insurance may be unnecessary. It is clear, however, that Torrens, or any other true registration system, is more costly and difficult for government to administer than is recording. This higher cost is inherent in title registration systems because much of the data consolidation, evaluation and management done by private parties under recording is done by government employees or their agents under registration. n545 While title registration procedures can be reformed or improved, n546 this aspect of title registration cannot thereby be reduced to insignificance, except perhaps through either a radical (and probably unacceptable) simplification of a jurisdiction's real property laws or through limiting registerable interests to a very few types.

Since local governments have had a first-hand appreciation of the administrative difficulties and costs involved with Torrens, it is not surprising that some of the most effective opposition to title registration came from local governments responsible for its implementation and not, contrary to conventional wisdom, from the title assurance industry. n547 The worst enemies of Torrens included administrators charged with implementing it who were generally ill-equipped and disinclined to do so. Informed n548 government administrators are not likely to welcome with enthusiasm a system that is more difficult and costly for them to administer. Informed local legislators and administrators normally will not support replacing a system that generates profits with one that may require a subsidy. The high cost to local government for continued administration tends to make government unsupportive of registration, unless adequate resources are allocated to support the greater burden. n549 The failure to provide adequate resources has contributed to an inertia that caused little registration to occur after twenty states passed enabling legislation, except in a few instances where special facts and circumstances overcame this inertia. n550

§ 92.10(i) Prospects for Implementing Title Registration in the United States.

Torrens is superior to recording in a number of respects. An Ontario Law Reform Commission Study indicates that the overall economic efficiency of title registration is greater than that of recording. This greater efficiency is mainly due to the superior data management and retrieval characteristics of title registration compared to recording. Usually, no involved historical search is necessary, as most of the relevant information is consolidated on the register. The repeated re-evaluation of data that occurs in recording systems does not often take place in title registration systems. These comparative advantages of title registration are reduced somewhat by the practice of abstracting recorded titles and preserving the abstracts. Reliance by title examiners on previous searches and examinations of recorded titles also lessens the comparative economic superiority of title registration over recording systems. The growing computerization of land title records has further reduced the difference by replacing the slow and cumbersome manual indexes to data in the recording system with rapid and flexible electronic means of assembling relevant data.

Torrens might have had a chance to replace recording in the United States if its administration had been entrusted to competent administrators with access to adequate resources. Instead, for political reasons, the elected county recorders were charged with implementing Torrens in most of the states that passed enabling legislation. Because these officials were not particularly qualified to administer title registration systems, their poor performance in doing so should have been predictable. The higher administrative costs associated with Torrens compounded the difficulties in administering it. While the prospects for implementing Torrens in the Unites States were never very good, today they are non-existent. The existence of recording systems that functioned reasonably well was, by itself, enough to cause Torrens to fail. At present, the good quality of service provided by title insurance companies and other segments of the title assurance industry makes replacement of recording with title registration unwarranted, absent a showing of a substantial savings to the public. Even if such a savings can be demonstrated, the political and practical barriers to the implementation of title registration in the United States appear to be insurmountable.

COMPUTER ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: torrens assurance fund*
indemnity fund*
initial registration possessory title*

NOTE:
Many cases relevant to this section pre-date the earliest cases in the database.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 457. Portions of the text in § 92.10 have been adapted from John L. McComack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61 (1992), and used with the permission of The William Mitchell Law Review.

(n2)Footnote 458. The term "recording" will be used to refer to land title record systems where the government simply acts as a custodian of land title data. "Title registration" will refer to systems where the government evaluates data, usually as it comes in, and where the record maintained is intended to be a generally conclusive governmental statement concerning ownership and title. The term "Torrens" will refer specifically to the title registration system adopted in Australia in 1857 and systems found elsewhere in the world which are directly based on the Australian model.

Some commentators use "Torrens" to refer to systems, actual or proposed, which may include some aspects of the Australian model without intending to refer to such model in its entirety. Of course, classifications are rarely perfect and some systems do not neatly fit into either the, "recording," or "registration," categories as defined above. Indeed, title registration systems usually store some data for notice purposes without affirming that the data represent valid interests, while some recording systems give affirmations that certain data stored in the database represent legally binding interests or events.

(n3)Footnote 459. Much of this commentary exaggerates the inefficiencies and weaknesses of the recording system. See, e.g., Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 UCLA L. Rev. 661, 665-67 (1982). For a comprehensive and fairly balanced discussion, see generally U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms IV-1 (1979).

(n4)Footnote 460. The principal reforms adopted include Marketable Title acts and official tract (parcel) indexes.

(n5)Footnote 461. See Martin Lobel, A Proposal for a Title Registration System for Realty, 11 U. Rich. L. Rev. 501 (1977) (proposing the adoption of a Torrens system for the District of Columbia).

(n6)Footnote 462. Sir Ernest Dowson & V.L.O. Sheppard, Land Registration, Colonial Research Pub. No. 13, 173 (2d ed. 1964); Rudolf Huebner, A History of Germanic Private Law 218-19 (Francis S. Philbrick trans., reprint 1968) (1918).

(n7)Footnote 463. Sir Ernest Dowson & V.L.O. Sheppard, Land Registration, Colonial Research Pub. No. 13, 63, 180, 187 (2d ed. 1964); Rudolph Huebner, A History of Germanic Private Law 252 (Francis S. Philbrick trans., reprint 1968) (1918). Land title record systems similar in basic concept to the American recording system were adopted in Europe many years ago and are still used today. European countries using recording include Greece, Belgium, the Netherlands, France, the Republic of Ireland, Northern Ireland, and Scotland; the Republic of Ireland, Northern Ireland, and Scotland are currently converting (very slowly) to the English form of title registration. European countries using title registration include the United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland. See John L. McCormack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61, 70 n.31 (1992). Land title assurance in Italy appears to be based on notaries. See Paul B. Rava, Italian Procedure in Real Estate Conveyancing, 1964 A.B.A. Sec. Pub. International and Comparative Law (1965).

Torrens was established in Brazil in 1890, but it did not take hold and it is not used much there today. Torrens also failed to take hold in other parts of Latin America and Spain. See Alejandro M. Garro, the Louisiana Public Records Doctrine and the Civil Law Tradition § 36, at 81 n.18 (1989); Francisco V. Igartua, The Public Registry of Property in Mexico, 11 Miami L.Q. 457 (1957). Puerto Rico uses notaries, registration and title insurance. See U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev. and VA Report on Mortgage Settlement Costs 1213 (Supp. 1972). Very little about Asian land title record practices has been published in English. See Thomas H. Clarke, Mortgage and Title Assurance in Asia, 11 Int'l Bus. Law. 127 (1983). See also Batalov, Lev. S., The Russian Title Registration for Realty and Its Effect on Foreign Investors, 73 Wash. L. Rev. 989 (1998).

(n8)Footnote 464. Sir Ernest Dowson & V.L.O. Sheppard, Land Registration 39 (2d ed. 1964); See also C. Dent Bostick, Land Title Registration: An English Solution to an American Problem, 63 Ind. L.J. 55, 74-75 (1987).

(n9)Footnote 465. Land Transfer Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict., ch. 87 (Eng.).

(n10)Footnote 466. Land Registration Act, 1925, 15 & 16 Geo. 5, ch. 21 (Eng.). The English program of compulsory registration is approaching completion of the mammoth task of registering every parcel in England and Wales. See C. Dent Bostick, Land Title Registration: An English Solution to an American Problem, 63 Ind. L.J. 55, 74-77 (1987); Ted J. Fiflis, Security and Economy in Land Transactions: Some Suggestions from Scotland and England, 20 Hastings L.J. 171, 201-06 (1968).

(n11)Footnote 467. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U.L. Rev. 196, 197 (1984).

(n12)Footnote 468. A.G. Lang, Computerized Land Title and Land Information, 10 Monash U.L. Rev. 196, 197 (1984).

(n13)Footnote 469. British Honduras (Belize), 1859; Vancouver Island (British Columbia), 1860; Tasmania, 1862; New South Wales, 1862; Ireland, 1865; New Zealand, 1870; Wales, 1875; Jamaica, 1888; Nova Scotia, 1904; and Uganda, 1908. Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 17 (1978); U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 23 (1980). The Torrens system continues to be successful in South Australia. Today, the South Australian system encompasses much more than information regarding ownership. It also contains other data, such as: (1) existing land uses; (2) land uses permitted on the site; (3) planning proposals to change these uses; (4) the location of utility cables and easements; (5) topographical features (flood plains, drainage, sea levels); (6) geological features (groundwater, liquefaction, landfills); (7) soils (type, Ph structure); (8) rainfall conditions; (9) biological environmental data (vegetation, fauna, land cover, endangered species); (10) pollution management and transport information; and (11) a description of all buildings on the site. George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions 230 (1993).

(n14)Footnote 470. Sir Ernest Dowson & V.L.O. Sheppard, Land Registration, 98 (2d ed. 1964). The other four are the English, German, Swiss, and Ottoman title registration systems. Id. Anh T. Le, Property--The Effect of the Hersh Decision on the Torrens Act: Getting to the Root of the Problem, 26 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 601 (2000).

(n15)Footnote 471. The system was approved by the voters in Cook County on November 5, 1895; however, the statute was held unconstitutional in the following year. People ex rel. Kern v. Chase, 46 N.E. 454 (Ill. 1896). A second act was adopted and approved by the voters in 1897; this statute was held constitutional. People ex rel. Deneen v. Simon, 52 N.E. 910 (Ill. 1898). The Torrens office in Cook County opened on March 1, 1899, and has been in continuous operation ever since. However, in January 1991, legislation was signed which abolished Torrens in Illinois, effective January 1, 1992. 1990 Ill. Legis. Serv. 2959 (West); see also David Heckelman, Bill Abolishes Torrens Title Registration, Chi. L. Bull., Jan. 15, 1991, at 1.

(n16)Footnote 472. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-4 (1979); see also U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev. and VA, Report on Mortgage Settlement Costs II-A-4 (Supp. 1972).

(n17)Footnote 473. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev. and VA, Report on Mortgage Settlement Costs II-A-4, II-A-9; U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-4 (1979). The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws adopted the Uniform Land Registration Act in 1916; this act was withdrawn by the commissioners as obsolete in 1934. See U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-6 (1979).

(n18)Footnote 474. See U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-4, III-5 (1979).

(n19)Footnote 475. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-10 (1979). In Hawaii, Torrens did not have to displace a well-entrenched recording system.

(n20)Footnote 476. Historical searches are sometimes necessary in Torrens. See, e.g., Ivan L. Head, Real Property--Torrens System of Land Registration in Saskatchewan--Exception to Indefeasibility--Error in Not Reserving Minerals to Crown Pursuant to Original Grant, 34 Canadian B. Rev. 736, 737-38 (1956). Likewise, historical searches are a necessary part of the Ontario title registration system. See D.J. Donahue & P.D. Quinn, Real Estate Practice in Ontario 20 (4th ed. 1990). In the Matter of the Petition of Carolyn McGinnis, 536 N.W.2d 33 (Minn. App. 1995) (an adverse possession claim is invalid against Torrens property where no disputed interest existed at the time of registration and there was no ambiguity in the property description).

(n21)Footnote 477. See 2 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles §§ 683, 684 (2d ed. 1957). Assistant Recorder of the North Registry Dist. of Bristol County v. Spinelli, 651 N.E.2d 411 (Mass. App. 1995) (the assistant recorder had statutory authority to petition the land court to amend a certificate of title that contained an error).

(n22)Footnote 478. In Cook County, Illinois, the owner must give the Registrar a receipt (called a "signature card") for the duplicate bearing the owner's signature.

(n23)Footnote 479. See Minn. Stat. § 508.76; 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/101; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, para. 101.

(n24)Footnote 480. See Gill v. Johnson, 69 P.2d 1016 (Cal. App. 1937).

(n25)Footnote 481. Land Title Law, Cal. Gov't Code, foll. § 27297.5, repealed by 1955 Cal. Stat. ch. 332, § 1.

(n26)Footnote 482. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/102a; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, § 104.

(n27)Footnote 483. See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 501-214; Minn. Stat. § 508.75; see also Comment, Possessory Title Registration: An Improvement of the Torrens System, 11 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 825, 839 (1985).

(n28)Footnote 484. See, e.g., John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 353 (3d ed. 1989).

(n29)Footnote 485. See, e.g., People v. Mortenson, 88 N.E.2d 35, 38 (Ill. 1949).

(n30)Footnote 486. The first American Torrens act, enacted in Illinois, was held unconstitutional because it provided for administrative initial registration. A second Illinois act was passed in 1897 providing for in rem judicial initial registration. See People ex rel. Deneen v. Simon, 52 N.E. 910, 911 (Ill. 1898).

(n31)Footnote 487. Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 UCLA L. Rev. 661, 688 (1982).

(n32)Footnote 488. Comment, Possessory Title Registration: An Improvement of the Torrens System, 11 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 825, 838 (1985).

(n33)Footnote 489. In the late 1970s, uncontested initial registrations in the United States cost about $550 to $750. See U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement III-14 (1979).

(n34)Footnote 490. Act of March 10, 1982, ch. 396, 1982 Minn. Laws 192 (codified as amended at Minn Stat. §§ 508A.01-.85 (1990)). Administrative initial registration of possessory titles has been used for years in England and Australia. See U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Improving Land Title Registration Systems V-19 (1979).

(n35)Footnote 491. This period is five years in Minnesota. Minn. Stat. § 508A.01, subd. 2 (1990). Hawaii authorities perform initial registration of possessory titles, but such titles do not ripen into absolute ones. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 501-72 (1988).

The Minnesota legislation was initially prepared by Mr. Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Titles, Hennepin County, Minnesota, and his staff at the request of a HUD consultant. Interview with Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Titles, and Jan Witkowski, Registered Property Analyst, Office of the Registrar of Titles, Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minnesota (Nov. 26, 1990). At the time, Torrens advocates were hopeful that administrative registration of possessory titles could lead to effective implementation of Torrens throughout the United States. The attractiveness of possessory title registration would be greater if such titles could be administratively registered without the expense of searching for, identifying, and notifying possible claimants. Such a "pure" form of possessory title registration probably would be unconstitutional under due process clauses, unless the registration remained inconclusive for a long time, such as 10 or 20 years. See id. It is possible that "pure" possessory registrations could be made immediately conclusive if a provision is made to pay just compensation to those who lose interests. This would be a novel application of the power of eminent domain. Petition of Geis, 576 N.W.2d 747 (Minn. App. 1998) (Torrens confers conclusive title, free from all adverse claims and encumbrances not listed on certificate of title); But see Hersh Properties, L.L.C. v. McDonald's Corp., 573 N.W.2d 386 (Minn. App. 1999) (certificate is conclusive evidence of an interest, but it does not conclusively establish validity of the interest; it may contain invalid interests).

(n36)Footnote 492. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement V-9 - V-12 (1979); See also Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 UCLA L. Rev. 661, 700-03 (1982).

(n37)Footnote 493. Diana Sclar, Minnesota Simplifies Land Registration, 11 Real Est. L.J. 258, 261 (1983).

(n38)Footnote 494. Minn. Stat. § 508A.11. Among other things, the abstract identifies record interest holders or claimants who should be notified of the proceeding. Hennepin County requires the abstract to "be certified to all of the land to be registered, as of a recent date, and must include the deed or other instrument by which the applicant acquired title." Richard W. Edblom, Registration of Title Without a Court Proceeding 2 (1990) (unpublished report, on file with author).

(n39)Footnote 495. While not used as often as in Cook County, Illinois, title insurance is commonly used in Torrens transactions in Hennepin County, Minnesota. See Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 98-99 (1978).

(n40)Footnote 496. Hennepin County includes the Minneapolis area.

(n41)Footnote 497. Richard W. Edblom, Registration of Title Without a Court Proceeding 1 (1990) (unpublished report, on file with author). The Hennepin County Board did not choose to limit eligibility for possessory registration to cases where applicants owned tracts that were already partially registered. Id.

(n42)Footnote 498. Ramsey County includes St. Paul and the surrounding area.

(n43)Footnote 499. Comment, Possessory Title Registration: An Improvement of the Torrens System, 11 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 825, 844 n.144 (1985); See also Interview with Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Titles, and Jan Witkowski, Registered Property Analyst, Office of the Registrar of Titles, Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minnesota (Nov. 26, 1990). In addition to Hennepin, another county in northern Minnesota may have adopted the statute in 1991. Letter from Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Titles, Hennepin County, to Kathleen Milner, Staff Member, William

Mitchell Law Review 2 (Nov. 26, 1991) (on file with the William Mitchell Law Review).

(n44)Footnote 500. Comment, Possessory Title Registration: An Improvement of the Torrens System, 11 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 825, 843 (1985). Contra Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 UCLA L. Rev. 661, 692 (1982).

(n45)Footnote 501. Barry Goldner, Comment, The Torrens System of Title Registration: A New Proposal for Effective Implementation, 29 UCLA L. Rev. 661, 678-79 (1982). Matter of 2003 & 2007 Ala Wai Blvd, City & County of Honolulu, 944 P.2d 1341 (Haw. App. 1997) (purpose of Torrens system is to establish an indefeasible title free from all rights or claims not registered); Petition of Willmus, 568 N.W.2d 722 (Minn. App. 1997) (purpose of Torrens system of land registration is to ensure that person need look no further than certificate of title); Scanlan v. Nielsen, 561 N.W.2d 917 (Minn. App. 1997) (when ownership is transferred in a Torrens registered property to a good faith purchaser for value and subsequently the interest of record is transferred without notice to prior owner or good faith purchaser to another good faith purchaser, the registered interest prevails).

(n46)Footnote 502. "[R]egistration is neither as conclusive nor indefeasible in fact as in theory." Milton R. Friedman, Contracts and Conveyances of Real Property § 3.12, at 304 (4th ed. 1984).

(n47)Footnote 503. See 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/101; Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, § 101; Minn. Stat. § 508.76.

(n48)Footnote 504. The English title registration statute permits a broad range of overriding interests: legal easements, rights relating to adverse possession and "rights of every person in actual occupation of the land or in receipt of the rents and profits thereof, save where enquiry is made of such person and the rights are not disclosed." Additionally, the administrator has authority to change the record by "rectifying" it. Land Registration Act, 15 & 16 Geo. 5, ch. 21, § 70 (1) (Eng.); see also C. Dent Bostick, Land Title Registration: An English Solution to an American Problem, 63 Ind. L.J. 55, 94 (1987).

(n49)Footnote 505. The existence of some of these excepted claims or interests can, in some instances, be discovered through other records in the registration office (and elsewhere) and through physical inspection of the property.

(n50)Footnote 506. At least some strong or pervasive influences or policies are involved because these exceptions are not peculiar to title registration; some are found in recording systems and marketable title acts as well. Carol M. Rose, Crystals and Mud in Property Law, 40 Stan. L. Rev. 577, 589 n.70 (1988). See, e.g., Hersh Properties, L.L.C. v. McDonald's Corp., 588 N.W.2d 728 (Minn. 1999) (stating that Torrens registration allows state of title to be determined by the certificate of title, citing Minn. Stat. Ann. § 508.24); Minn. Stat. Ann. § 508.24, which lists the seven statutory exceptions as:

(1) liens, claims, or rights arising or existing under the laws or the constitution of the United States, which this state cannot require to appear of record;

(2) the lien of any real property tax or special assessment for which the land has not sold at the date of the certificate of title;

(3) any lease for a period not exceeding three years when there is actual occupation of the premises thereunder;

(4) all rights in public highways upon the land;

(5) the right of appeal, or right to appear and contest the application, as is allowed by this chapter;

(6) the rights of any person in possession under deed or contract for deed from the owner of the certificate of title; and

(7) any outstanding mechanics lien rights which may exist under sections 514.01 to 514.17.

(n51)Footnote 507. Illinois abolished caveating in 1979 because it was little used there. 1979 Ill. Laws 415, § 1 (effective Jan. 1, 1980).

(n52)Footnote 508. For a full discussion of these exceptions to conclusiveness, see John L. McCormack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61, 91-98 (1992). In the Matter of the Petition of Carolyn McGinnis, 536 N.W.2d 33 (Minn. App. 1995) (an adverse possession claim is invalid against Torrens property where no disputed interest existed at the time of registration and there was no ambiguity in the property description).

(n53)Footnote 509. The Torrens assurance fund usually does not provide compensation for losses caused by off-certificate risks. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. § 508.76. However, in Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Co. v. Fogarty, 153 N.W. 871 (Minn. 1915), the court held that the failure of the Registrar to report the existence of an overriding U.S. government interest was an "omission" within the meaning of the Minnesota statute, entitling the insured purchaser to recover from the assurance fund. Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Co. v. Fogarty, 153 N.W. 873 (Minn. 1915). Another serious risk is lack of access to the property, which can result in catastrophic loss and is usually covered by title insurance, but it is not covered by the Torrens assurance fund. See, e.g., L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co., 418 N.E.2d 650, 652 (N.Y. 1981) (rendering real estate worth over $600,000 valueless from lack of access).

(n54)Footnote 510. See Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, § 101.

(n55)Footnote 511. See Michael J. Rooney, A Primer for Attorneys, in Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 3, 4 (1979).

(n56)Footnote 512. See Michael J. Rooney, A Primer for Attorneys, in Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 9 (1979).

(n57)Footnote 513. See, e.g., Echols v. Olsen, 347 N.E.2d 720 (Ill. 1976).

(n58)Footnote 514. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, §§ 101 & 102, Minn. Stat. § 508.76. In Minnesota, however, a party is entitled to recovery under § 508.76 only when the Torrens registration laws preclude the party from bringing an action regarding the registered property. A party may not recover under this statute after litigating and losing an action. See, e.g., Zahradka v. State, 515 N.W.2d 611 (Minn. App. 1994).

(n59)Footnote 515. See, .e.g., 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/101-102a.

(n60)Footnote 516. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 185, § 101.

(n61)Footnote 517. See, e.g., Hoffman v. Schroeder, 186 N.E.2d 381, 388 (Ill. App. 1962) (holding set forth in supplemental opinion).

(n62)Footnote 518. See Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide to Title Insurance 14 (1984). However, see Minn. Stat. Ann. § 508.78, limiting recovery from the Torrens assurance fund to no more than the fair market value of the subject real estate "at the time of the last payment into such fund, on account thereof."

(n63)Footnote 519. See, e.g., Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 354 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1984).

(n64)Footnote 520. See generally D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance (1986 & Supp. 1991). Nigel Bankes and Alicia Quesnel, Recent Judicial Developments of Interest to Oil and Gas Lawyers, 38 Alberta L. Rev. 294 (June 2000).

(n65)Footnote 521. See, e.g., Eliason v. Wilborn, 281 U.S. 457 (1930).

(n66)Footnote 522. Ronald Sackville, Some Aspects of the Torrens System in Victoria: A Comparison 37 (1966) (unpublished manuscript on file with the Yale Law School Library collection), quoted in Allen Axelrod et al., Land Transfer and Finance: Cases and Material 908-09 (3d ed. 1986).

(n67)Footnote 523. Ronald Sackville, Some Aspects of the Torrens System in Victoria: A Comparison 37 (1966) (unpublished manuscript on file with the Yale Law School Library collection), quoted in Allen Axelrod et al., Land Transfer and Finance: Cases and Material 908-09 (3d ed. 1986). Registrar zeal in protecting the indemnity or assurance fund reached its zenith (or perhaps its nadir) in Hoffman v. Schroeder, 186 N.E.2d 381 (Ill. App. 1962). In this case, the court held that a savings and loan that took a forged mortgage from an imposter did not acquire a lien against the property, even though a memorial of the mortgage was registered. Id. at 388. The court said that the Illinois Torrens Act protects those who take from a party to fraud only where they take from a registered owner in good faith. Id. at 386. Since the savings and loan took from an imposter and since it lacked good faith because its officer improperly notarized the mortgage, no lien attached to the subject property. Id. However, the court held that the savings and loan was entitled to indemnification because of the Registrar's failure to discover the "palpable" forgeries on the mortgage documents. Id. at 388. In his petition for rehearing, the Registrar cited an 1889 New Zealand decision holding that contributory negligence may bar a party from recovering from the assurance fund. Id. at 388-89 (citing case Miller v. Davy, 7 N.Z.L.R. 515 (P.C. 1889)). The Registrar argued that the improper notarization by the officer of the savings and loan was contributory negligence which barred recovery from the assurance fund. The court rejected this argument:

> As we pointed out in our opinion, the indemnity fund is in the nature of insurance against mistakes of the registrar... .To import into this type of transaction the doctrine of contributory negligence, whereby gross errors of a registrar might be completely cancelled out by some slight mistake on the part of an insured, could discredit the whole system and destroy it as an effective means of assuring titles in this county.

Hoffman v. Schroeder, 186 N.E.2d 381, 389 (Ill. App. 1962)

(n68)Footnote 524. Richard C.B. Risk, The Records of Title to Land: A Plea for Reform, 21 U. Toronto L.J. 465, 478 (1971). See, e.g., Capitol Indem. Corp. v. West Fargo Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 145 F.3d 998 (8th Cir. 1998) (Minnesota's Torrens registration system did not recognize lien between parties, in spite of indemnity agreement assigning to surety all of principal's interest in property, until the instrument was registered).

(n69)Footnote 525. This examination process, of course, has the advantage of detecting potential defects before they are entered into the record. A similar method of quality control exists in the Scottish recording system. There, the recorder (called the "Keeper of the Public Register") examines the instruments presented for recordation. See Ted J. Fiflis, Security and Economy in Land Transactions: Some Suggestions from Scotland and England, 20 Hastings L.J. 171, 189 (1968).

Under this process of examination, mistakes are caught rather than buried, as is the case under the American recording system. This positive feature of the Torrens system, however, may not be worth the cost to government and the cost and aggravation to the users of the system. Adjournment of real estate closings and repeated trips to the government office until the bureaucrats are satisfied are real costs, although difficult to measure. Few real defects are caught, and the Registrar's objections often appear to be bureaucratic nitpicking.

Years ago, scandals occasionally arose in the Torrens office in Cook County, Illinois, involving the bribing of counterpersons. In some instances, it appears that illegal payments were used to inject flexibility into the system. See United States v. Gannon, 684 F.2d 433 (7th Cir.) (en banc) (affirming conviction of counterman at Cook County Recorder of Deeds office for accepting payments in excess of what law required), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 940 (1981);

William Juneau, Boss Defends Bribed Aide as "a Bit Guilty," Chi. Trib ., Sept. 25, 1980, at 1, 22 (quoting Cook County Recorder of Deeds). Presently, a cleaner regime prevails in Cook County, Illinois. Since 1977, the following notice has been displayed conspicuously at several places in the Torrens office: "ATTENTION--Office regulations prohibit members of the staff from accepting gratuities from any source in the conduct of office business." United States v. Gannon, 684 F.2d 433, 435 (7th Cir.); see also Fred I. Feinstein, The Torrens System, in 2 Basic Real Estate Practice 1-7, 1-43 (Ill. Inst. of Continuing Legal Educ., 1988 Supp. 1990).

(n70)Footnote 526. See Eliason v. Wilborn, 281 U.S. 457, 459 (1930).

(n71)Footnote 527. The author once represented a person who owned a Torrens-registered condominium unit. He wanted to convey the unit to his fiance and himself in joint tenancy. The Registrar in Cook County, Illinois, refused to accept the deed that was prepared to accomplish that result because the Torrens office workers suspected that the signature might have been forged. The client was accordingly required to appear in person with two pieces of identification to prove his identity and acknowledge the execution of the deed.

(n72)Footnote 528. See Workshop on the Torrens System: A Panel Discussion, Title News, Jan. 1977, at 34. For example, where the name or marital status of an owner has changed since the previous registration, a proceeding subsequent to registration may be necessary to establish the owner's identity or claim to ownership. Id. By contrast, the Registrar in Cook County, Illinois, normally will accept affidavits to establish identities or claims to ownership after legal name changes or changes in marital status; as a result, subsequent court proceedings are usually unnecessary.

(n73)Footnote 529. Torrens closings in Cook County, Illinois, must take place in the Torrens office because the paperwork has to be scrutinized by the employees or deputies of the Registrar. Members of the general public must reserve closing space at least one month in advance. See Report of the Blue Ribbon Committee Prepared at the Request of Carol Moseley Braun, Cook County Recorder of Deeds/Registrar of Titles 51 (June 13, 1989) (unpublished report on file with author).

(n74)Footnote 530. Workshop on the Torrens System: A Panel Discussion, Title News, Jan. 1977, at 34.

(n75)Footnote 531. In an attempt to cure this problem, a 1979 amendment to the Illinois Torrens Act authorized the Registrar to cancel memorials claimed to be no longer valid, in return for a title indemnity agreement backed by a surety bond from a title insurance company, a bonding company, or some other such security. If the Registrar later paid a claim from the assurance fund because the cancellation was wrongful, the Registrar would be entitled to indemnification under the title indemnity agreement. See 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/65a. Previously, the established title insurance practice had been to furnish a title insurance company with a title indemnity bond (frequently issued by itself or a related company) to induce the company to remove an exception to coverage based on a title defect of questionable validity.

(n76)Footnote 532. See Rufford G. Patton, Evolution of Legislation on Proof of Title to Land, 30 Wash. L. Rev. 224, 234 (1955). In Illinois, this kind of proceeding was called a "transmission proceeding." In the early 1970s, the Registrar in Cook County, Illinois, without statutory authority, began transferring certificates without court orders from transmission proceedings. If the estate had been probated, the Registrar relied on the determinations made by the probate court. If no proceedings had been conducted in probate court, the Registrar administratively determined the devolution of the property and accordingly re-registered the property. While this chagrined the judges who normally conducted transmission proceedings, the Illinois Legislature amended §§ 71 and 72 of the Illinois Torrens Act in 1977 to authorize the Registrar's creative way of enabling owners to avoid transmission proceedings. See 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/71.

(n77)Footnote 533. In Cook County, Illinois, the Registrar has developed a set of affidavits which may suffice to cure objections without going to court. Additionally, transferee title objections to Torrens titles can often be satisfied by title insurance coverage.

(n78)Footnote 534. See, e.g., Myres S. McDougal & John W. Brabner-Smith, Land Title Transfer: A Regression, 48 Yale L.J. 1125, 1142 (1939).

(n79)Footnote 535. The Arthur D. Little study was conducted mainly for the American Land Title Association. See Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 17 (1978).

(n80)Footnote 536. The reports include the following: Land Title Systems: Legal Bibliography (1978), Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms (1979), Land Title Recordation Systems: Eliminating Repetitive Title Searches (1979), and Land Title Registration Systems: Proposals for Improvement (1979).

(n81)Footnote 537. Ted J. Fiflis, Land Transfer Improvement: The Basic Fact and Two Hypotheses for Reform, 38 U. Colo. L. Rev. 431, 458 (1966). The cost comparisons published since 1965 include Ted J. Fiflis, Land Transfer Improvement: The Basic Facts and Two Hypotheses for Reform, 38 U. Colo. L. Rev. 431 (1966); Ontario Law Reform Commission, Dep't of Justice, Report on Land Registration (1971); Joseph T. Janczyk, An Economic Analysis of the Land Title Systems for Transferring Real Property, 6 J. Legal Stud. 213 (1977); and Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States. For a discussion and criticism of these studies, see John L. McCormack, Torrens and Recording: Land Title Assurance in the Computer Age, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 61, 105-10 (1992).

(n82)Footnote 538. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 68 (1980).

(n83)Footnote 539. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 71 (1980). Anyone who evaluates this data should be aware that the three Torrens systems were hardly equivalent. For example, Cook County, Illinois, checked the signatures on documents presented for registration for forgeries, while Hennepin County, Minnesota, did not. Also, at that time, Cook County government was still saddled with the burdens of a now largely defunct political patronage system. When recording and Torrens costs are compared, it should be appreciated that the Registrar or Examiner of Titles performs quasi-judicial functions. The Registrar or Examiner determines title questions that otherwise might have to be handled by the general court system. Letter from Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Titles, Hennepin County, to Kathleen Milner, Staff Member, William Mitchell Law Review 2 (Nov. 26, 1991) (on file with the William Mitchell Law Review). There is no available data that could be used to assess the economic impact of these quasi-judicial functions.

(n84)Footnote 540. This excludes costs incurred by Chicago Title Insurance Company.

(n85)Footnote 541. Id.

(n86)Footnote 542. Ontario Law Reform Commission Dep't of Justice, Report on Land Registration 22 (1971).

(n87)Footnote 543. In 1972, the total operating expenses of the U.S. recording offices were in excess of $137 million; revenue received in the same year exceeded $240 million. U.S. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 13 (1980).

(n88)Footnote 544. Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 58 (1978). "While there are considerable variances among the data-reporting formats used by the different systems examined, we estimate that the 1976 'subsidy' ranged from $140,000 in Ramsey County to a high of $625,000 for the statewide Massachusetts program." Id.

Shick and Plotkin's cost conclusions are in accord with recent Cook County data. The Blue Ribbon Committee appointed by the Cook County Recorder/Registrar estimated 1989 Torrens office revenues of $3,305,000 and expenditures of $3,850,000. This deficit was expected, even though fully one-half of Torrens transfers are handled by deputized title insurance company employees who are not on the County payroll. Report of the Blue Ribbon Committee Prepared at the Request of Carol Moseley Braun, Cook County Recorder of Deeds/Registrar of Titles 44 (June 13, 1989) (unpublished report on file with author). The Hennepin County, Minnesota, Torrens office currently requires no subsidy. Letter from Richard W. Edblom, Examiner of Title, Hennepin County, to Kathleen Milner, Staff Member, William Mitchell Law Review 2 (Nov. 26, 1991) (on file with the William Mitchell Law Review).

(n89)Footnote 545. Experience in Ontario, Canada, indicates that computerization can reduce this burden on government.

(n90)Footnote 546. Over the years, Illinois has developed the following improvements to its Torrens system: (1) created tax lien files for federal and state tax liens and required the Registrar to search for and memorialize filed liens against a registered title whenever a memorial is entered on the original certificate for such title; (2) replaced lost certificates by affidavits without resort to subsequent proceedings; (3) used title indemnity bonds to induce the Registrar to remove memorials of encumbrances which are probably no longer valid without having to resort to subsequent proceedings; (4) administratively processed the devolution of descendants' interests; (5) required judgment lien creditors to memorialize their judgments on original title certificates; and (6) backed up the assurance fund with the assets and credit of the county. See 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 35/40, 58, 65a, 70-71, 85, 102a.

(n91)Footnote 547. The Cook County Recorder/Registrar led a successful campaign to eliminate her Torrens system, the oldest and one of the largest (in terms of the numbers of titles registered) in the United States. No credible evidence exists that the title industry was behind this effort to abolish Torrens. While title insurance company officials did serve on the committee that recommended abolition of Torrens, the industry certainly had little or no financial interest in the outcome, as it was insuring over 90% of Torrens transactions in Cook County at the time the effort to eliminate Torrens was initiated. Report of the Blue Ribbon Committee Prepared at the Request of Carol Moseley Braun, Cook County Recorder of Deeds/Registrar of Titles 52 (June 13, 1989) (unpublished report on file with author). The Torrens system in Cook County, Illinois, failed after 91 years precisely because the government failed to provide the resources necessary to make the system reasonably efficient. See Fred I. Feinstein, The Torrens System, in 2 Basic Real Estate Practice 1-7, 15-3 (Ill. Inst. for Continuing Legal Educ., 1988 & 1990 Supp.).

The demise of Torrens in southern California in 1955, after 40 years of implementation, appears to have been due to grossly incompetent management. Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 149 (1978). To attribute this incompetence to a title assurance industry anti-Torrens conspiracy is absurd. The "reputation of American county government for being incompetent" referred to by Professor Johnstone is well founded. Quintin Johnstone, Systems of Land Title Protection in the United States and Possibilities for Their Improvement, reprinted in James L. Winokur, American Property Law: Cases, History, Policy and Practice 1096 (1982). This incompetence is largely due to the fiscal or political constraints that bind many county governments, rather than the people who administer and work for these governments.

In some states, Torrens acts were repealed, not at the urging of the title industry, but at the request of local recorders, who found the existence of little-used registration statutes to be a nuisance. Blair C. Shick & Irving H. Plotkin, Torrens in the United States 18 (1978); Charles D. Knight, Comment, A Fly-Specker's Manual for the Illinois Torrens Act, 1978 U. Ill. L.F. 487, 488 n.13. In Minnesota, Torrens administrators successfully lobbied for amendments making possessory registration available, at the option of each county, only where a part of the applicant's tract was already registered. The administrators feared the costs and burdens that a relatively sudden and substantial increase in registrations would place on county government. Comment, Possessory Title Registration: An Improvement of the Torrens System, 11 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev.825, 848-49 (1985).

The conventional wisdom that the title assurance industry was a major cause of the failure of Torrens in the United States is rather simplistic. As Professor Percy Bordwell pointed out in 1940, the conventional wisdom does not explain why Torrens was a relative success in the state legislatures (20 states or territories enacted Torrens acts between 1895 and 1917, when both state legislatures and the title assurance industry were dominated by lawyers), and an almost complete failure in implementation. If the title assurance industry was a major force in blocking Torrens, one wonders why the industry was relatively ineffectual at the state legislative level. See Percy Bordwell, The Resurrection of Registration of Title, 7 U. Chi. L. Rev. 470 (1940). The title assurance industry may have contributed to the failure of Torrens by remedying problems caused by weaknesses in the recording system, and thereby removing the need for its replacement.

The notion that the title assurance industry's lobbying against or disparagement of Torrens significantly caused its failure is not based on established fact. Today, title insurers generally believe that Torrens is cumbersome, archaic and no serious threat to their industry. For example, William McAuliffe, then Senior Vice President of the American Land Title Association, stated that the Torrens system "has not proven itself" and is unlikely to "'put the title companies out of business.'" Cheryl Frank, Title Firms Dying?, A.B.A. J., Nov. 1985, at 33. Furthermore, according to Leonard Donahoe, then General Counsel for Chicago Title Insurance Company, even in an ideal system, "'[t]here are still going to be elements of risk, exposure and potential loss.'" Id. Thus, property owners may still need title insurance.

(n92)Footnote 548. One source of their information about the costs and administrative difficulties involved with Torrens was almost certainly the title assurance industry.

(n93)Footnote 549. However, consider a 1972 newsletter issued by the late Sidney Olsen, then the Cook County, Illinois, Recorder/Registrar, who touted the alleged superiority of registration and urged owners to register. See Sidney R. Olsen, A Dozen Reasons Why You Should Register Your Property Under the Torrens System, Cook Co. Recorder, Sept. 1, 1972, at 9. Despite his urging, few Cook County real estate owners followed his advice. Between 1969 and 1981, only 120 initial registrations occurred; no initial registrations have been made in Cook County since 1981. Report of the Blue Ribbon committee Prepared at the Request of Carol Moseley Braun, Cook County Recorder of Deeds/Registrar of Titles 40 (June 13, 1989) (unpublished report on file with author).

A former Cook County Recorder/Registrar, Carol Moseley Braun, a lawyer and former state legislator, led the successful movement to abolish Torrens in Illinois. Recorder Urges End to Torrens System, Chi. Trib., May 31, 1990, § 2 at 6. Former Recorder Braun was elected to the United States Senate in 1992.

(n94)Footnote 550. In Cook County, Illinois, these special facts included the need for re-establishing title after the Great Chicago Fire of 1871 destroyed the public land title records.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.11

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.11 Responsibilities and Liabilities of Title Service Providers.

[Go To Supp]

Because the title to real estate in the United States is frequently complex, purchasers of real estate interests usually find it necessary or, at least, advisable to use professional title examination services. Because title registration is very little used in the United States, most title services are provided by the private sector and not government. n551 However, in some localities using recording systems, abstracts or certificates of title may be prepared by government employees or officials and those suffering damages because of their negligence may be able to recover from government. n552 Even where the Torrens system of land title registration is used, private sector title service providers are not infrequently used and these service providers may be subject to professional liability.

Title service providers in the United States include Torrens title registration offices, other governmental title certifiers or insurers, title insurance companies, abstractors, surveyors and lawyers. All of these providers owe duties to persons who use their services and, in some cases, third parties who rely on their work. A breach of one of these duties may entitle an injured party to recover from the title service provider. In the following sections of this chapter, the duties owed to those who may be injured by acts or omission of abstractors, surveyors and lawyers providing title services are considered. The liability of Torrens offices is generally governed by statute and is largely limited to the terms of statutes providing for assurance funds. n553 The duties of title insurance companies owed to their insureds and third parties are discussed in the following chapter. n554

The professional liabilities of real estate brokers or salespersons providing title examination services n555 are not considered herein because such acts generally would be considered the unauthorized practice of law. While real estate brokers in some states are permitted to prepare a wide range of real estate transaction documents, n556 title examination services provided by brokers and salespersons involving the interpretation of title evidence would appear to be the unauthorized practice of law. n557 Brokers providing real estate transaction services traditionally considered to be the practice of law may be held to the standard of care of attorneys regardless of whether the actions of the brokers constitute the "authorized" or "unauthorized" practice of law. n558

§ 92.11(a) Responsibilities and Liabilities of Abstractors of Title.

Abstractors of title prepare summaries of the public real estate records pertaining to a particular title. n559 An abstractor has a duty to search for and report all matters that may affect the subject property that could be discovered in the course of a reasonably diligent search of the public real estate records. n560 The abstractor is liable for all damages proximately caused by a breach of this duty. The abstractor's liability is based on his or her contract with his or her customer which is reflected by the abstractor's certificate attached to the abstract and normally signed by him or her. n561

In actual practice, persons other than the abstractor's customer will rely on the abstract. Traditionally, the lack of privity of contract between the abstractor and third parties has been a bar to recovery for injuries caused by abstractor's negligence. n562 There is some authority that an injured party may recover as a third party beneficiary of the abstractor's contract. n563 Statutes in a number of states have created a direct liability from abstractors to third parties. n564 In recent years, the privity requirement has been avoided by basing the liability of the abstractor on a tort theory, one of the most popular being negligent misrepresentation. n565 The leading case holding that an abstractor may be liable to a person proximately injured by his or her negligent misrepresentation is Williams v. Polgar. n566

In the Williams case, the vendees furnished the purchasers with an abstract of title which failed to report a prior recorded deed which conveyed a portion of the subject property to the county government. After the contract was executed, the purchasers alleged that they then learned of the county's interest under the deed and as a result of the county's claim, the purchasers alleged that they were required to remove an entire building and that they incurred other damages as well. The Michigan Supreme Court held that a third party injured by an abstractor's negligent misrepresentation of title may be able to recover where it was foreseeable that the third party would rely on the abstract. n567 A subsequent Michigan case holds that the privity requirement may still apply where an action is based on contract and not tort. n568

§ 92.11(b) Responsibilities and Liabilities of Attorney Title Examiners.

An attorney examining a real estate title will base his or her opinion on an attorney search of the public real estate records, an abstract of title, a survey of the property or a title insurance commitment or policy. Where the attorney searches the records to obtain the data necessary for a title opinion, the attorney is under a duty to make a diligent, reasonable search. If the attorney breaches this duty, he or she may be liable under the contract of employment to the client and possibly to other persons. Where the attorney's opinion is based on an abstract, survey or title insurance, the attorney is generally not responsible for errors by the title information provider--abstractor, surveyor or title insurer--unless the errors were reasonably apparent on the face of the abstract, survey or title insurance document. In the absence of an agency relationship that makes the attorney responsible for the errors of title information providers, the attorney is not liable for such errors. n569

An examining attorney does not guarantee that title to the property is good but does warrant to the client that the title examination has been conducted with reasonable skill and care. n570 To have the requisite skill, the attorney must possess knowledge of the applicable law sufficient to enable the attorney to evaluate the available information relevant to determining the current state of the title. n571 The knowledge required includes statutes and decisions in the jurisdiction in addition to settled principles which should be known by real estate conveyancers. n572

An attorney examining title serves as an adviser. When the attorney advises the client whether a title is marketable, the client must be advised of any reasonable doubts about the title. n573 Reasonable title examiners, however, may differ about whether particular matters render a title unmarketable. However, in advising whether a title is marketable, the attorney will not liable to the client if his or her opinion is simply erroneous. n574 The attorney is not liable for good faith errors of judgment not involving negligence. However, a failure by the attorney to report the existence of a record lien, encumbrance or other adverse claim that may be valid may be actionable negligence. n575 Attorneys may also be liable for client losses caused by their failure to report errors in the legal description of the property discernible from instruments recorded in the chain of title or a survey. n576

Parties other than an attorney's client may rely on the attoney's title opinion. For example, purchasers of homes are often not represented by independent counsel and rely on title opinions of their sellers' or lenders' attorneys. This reliance is commonly known among conveyancers. n577 Although commentators have argued that lack of privity of contract between the negligent examining attorney and a foreseeably injured third party should not bar his or her recovery, n578 courts have been reluctant to extend liability to attorneys for sellers for negligent misrepresentation of title in favor of allegedly injured buyers. n579 Mortgagors have met some success in attempts to hold attorneys or their mortgagee-lenders responsible for losses caused by allegedly negligent title examination. n580 Lender and borrower, and buyer and seller, are in adversarial relationships. Therefore, it is arguable that a party to one of these relationships has no right to rely on the opinions or advice of the other party's attorney. Consequently, cases holding abstractors of title liable under tort theories to third parties who foreseeably might rely on the abstractors' work product are distinguishable. n581

Where an attorney is liable because of a negligent title examination, the measure of damages depends on the specific facts and circumstances. Generally, the lawyer will be liable to the extent of the impairment of the client's interest in the property. n582 The damages may be the difference in value between what the client actually received and what the client would have received if the attorney had not been negligent. n583 If the title can be cleared by purchasing the interest causing the loss, the cost of doing so may be used as the measure. n584 Consequential damages may also be recoverable. This may include costs such as litigation expenses incurred in trying to correct or cope with the attorney's error. n585 Other consequential damages may also be recoverable. n586

§ 92.11(c) Responsibilities and Liabilities of Surveyors.

A surveyor may be liable to a client or third parties who foreseeably suffer losses proximately caused by defective surveys attributable to the surveyors' negligence. n587 It is highly foreseeable that third parties such as buyers from or mortgage-lenders will rely on a survey procured by the surveyor's client in order to examine the title to the subject property. Consequently, lack of privity is generally no impediment to recovery by a third party against a surveyor. n588

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 551. In addition to title services provided by government employees in Torrens title registration offices, government employees may search records that are not available to private sector searchers. See Chemical Bank v. Title Servs., Inc., 708 F. Supp. 245 (D. Minn. 1989).

(n2)Footnote 552. See. e.g., American Legion Ed Brauner Post, Inc. v. Southern Title & Ins. Co., 218 So. 2d 612 (La. 1969).

(n3)Footnote 553. See § 92.10(f) supra.

(n4)Footnote 554. See Chapter 93 infra. N.E. Properties, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 660 A.2d 926 (Me. 1995) (insurer owed no duty to insured to exercise due care in generating a description of the mortgaged property); Somerset Sav. Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 649 N.E.2d 1123 (Mass. 1995) (the policy did not cover a statutory restriction on use of the property); Citibank, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 632 N.Y.S.2d 779 (1995) (no cause of action for insured's alleged negligence in conducting a title search); Charney v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 625 N.Y.S.2d 911 (1995) (no policy coverage unless certain prior conditions are met).

(n5)Footnote 555. Merely searching for recorded documents, by itself, would not be the practice of law.

(n6)Footnote 556. See, e.g., Pope County Bar Ass'n v. Suggs, 624 S.W.2d 828 (Ark. 1981).

(n7)Footnote 557. Eric L. Brossman & Moses K. Rosenberg, Title Companies And The Unauthorized Practice Rules: The Exclusive Domain Reexamined, 83 Dick. L. Rev. 437, 452-53 (1979).

(n8)Footnote 558. See, e.g., Cultum v. Heritage House Realtors, Inc., 694 P.2d 630 (Wash. 1985).

(n9)Footnote 559. See Attebery v. Blair, 91 N.E. 475 (Ill. 1910).

(n10)Footnote 560. Erskine Fla. Properties v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 557 So. 2d 859 (Fla. App. 1989); Garton v. Title Ins. and Trust Co., 165 Cal. Rptr. 449 (1980); Ray E. Sweat, Abstractor or Abstracter,in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1987: the New Policy Forms 347, 348 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1987).

(n11)Footnote 561. Ray E. Sweat, Abstractor or Abstracter, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1987: the New Policy Forms 347, 348 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1987).

(n12)Footnote 562. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 44 (2d ed. 1957); Susan Lorde Martin, If Privity Is Dead, Let's Resurrect It: Liability of Professional to Third Parties for Economic Injury Caused by Negligent Misrepresentation, 28 Am. Bus. L.J. 649, 649-50 (1991).

(n13)Footnote 563. See, e.g., Glanzer v. Shepard, 135 N.E. 275, 276 (N.Y. 1922) (dicta, opinion by Cardozo, J.).

(n14)Footnote 564. William B. Johnson, Annotation, Negligence in Preparing Abstract of Title as Ground of Liability to One Other than Person Ordering Abstract, 50 A.L.R.4th 314, 363-67 (1986); Oscar A. Hall, Comment, Abstracter's Liability in Examination of Title, 6 Wyo. L.J. 184 (1952).

(n15)Footnote 565. William B. Johnson, Annotation, Negligence in Preparing Abstract of Title as Ground of Liability to One Other than Person Ordering Abstract, 50 A.L.R.4th 314, 358-63 (1986).

(n16)Footnote 566. 215 N.W.2d 149 (Mich. 1974).

(n17)Footnote 567. Williams v. Polgar, 215 N.W.2d 149, 156 (1974). The opinion of the court is followed by a summary of the liabilities of abstractors to third parties in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Id. at 160-65.

(n18)Footnote 568. National Sand, Inc. v. Nagel Const., Inc., 451 N.W.2d 618 (Mich. App. 1990), appeal denied, 456 N.W.2d 390; Associated Mut. Hosp. Serv. v. Health Care Serv. Corp., 2000 U.S. 6th Dist. LEXIS 17136.

(n19)Footnote 569. The attorney is not a guarantor of the title; the attorney merely undertakes to exercise reasonable care in examining the title. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 52 (2d ed. 1957).

(n20)Footnote 570. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 52 (2d ed. 1957).

(n21)Footnote 571. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 52 (2d ed. 1957).

(n22)Footnote 572. Ronald E. Mallen & Jeffrey M. Smith, Legal Malpractice § 25.8 (3d ed. 1989).

(n23)Footnote 573. Ronald E. Mallen & Jeffrey M. Smith, Legal Malpractice § 25.8 (3d ed. 1989).

(n24)Footnote 574. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 52 (2d ed. 1957).

(n25)Footnote 575. Ronald E. Mallen & Jeffrey M. Smith, Legal Malpractice § 25.9 (3d ed. 1989).

(n26)Footnote 576. Ronald E. Mallen & Jeffrey M. Smith, Legal Malpractice § 25.11 (3d ed. 1989).

(n27)Footnote 577. Barbara Morgan Theberge, Note, Attorney Negligence In Real Estate Title Examination And Will Drafting: Elimination Of The Privity Requirement As A Bar To Recovery By Foreseeable Third Parties, 17 New Eng. L. Rev. 955, 977 (1982).

(n28)Footnote 578. Barbara Morgan Theberge, Note, Attorney Negligence In Real Estate Title Examination And Will Drafting: Elimination Of The Privity Requirement As A Bar To Recovery By Foreseeable Third Parties, 17 New Eng. L. Rev. 955, 977 (1982).

(n29)Footnote 579. Joan Teshima, Annotation, What Constitutes Negligence Sufficient To Render Attorney Liable To Person Other Than Immediate Client, 61 A.L.R.4th 464, § 24 (1988).

(n30)Footnote 580. Joan Teshima, Annotation, What Constitutes Negligence Sufficient To Render Attorney Liable To Person Other Than Immediate Client, 61 A.L.R.4th 464, § 26 (1988).

(n31)Footnote 581. Gerald W. Boston, Liability of Attorneys to Nonclient in Michigan: A Re-examination of Friedman v. Dozorc and a Rule of Limited Liability, 68 U. Det. L. Rev. 307, 311 (1991).

(n32)Footnote 582. John H. Bauman, Damages For Legal Malpractice: An Appraisal Of The Crumbling Dike And The Threatening Flood, Temp. L. Rev. 1127, 1151 (1988).

(n33)Footnote 583. John H. Bauman, Damages For Legal Malpractice: An Appraisal Of The Crumbling Dike And The Threatening Flood, Temp. L. Rev. 1127, 1151 (1988).

(n34)Footnote 584. Boecher v. Borth, 377 N.Y.S.2d 781 (1976).

(n35)Footnote 585. John H. Bauman, Damages For Legal Malpractice: An Appraisal Of The Crumbling Dike And The Threatening Flood, Temp. L. Rev. 1127, 1151 (1988).

(n36)Footnote 586. John H. Bauman, Damages For Legal Malpractice: An Appraisal Of The Crumbling Dike And The Threatening Flood, Temp. L. Rev. 1127, 1152 (1988).

(n37)Footnote 587. Walter G. Robillard & Lane J. Bouman, Clark on Surveying and Boundaries § 2.04 (7th ed LEXIS); James R. Adams, From Babel to Reason: An Examination of the Duty Issue, 31 Mcgeorge L. Rev. 25 (Fall 1999).

(n38)Footnote 588. Walter G. Robillard & Lane J. Bouman, Clark on Surveying and Boundaries § 2.04 (7th ed LEXIS).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 92.12

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University, Chicago

§ 92.12 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Brown, Curtis M., et al. Brown's Boundary Control and Legal Principles. New York: J. Wiley, 1995.

Maley, Terry S. Mineral Title Examination. Boise, ID: Mineral Land Publications, Inc., 1984.

Morgenthaler, George J. Oil and Gas Title Examination. New York: Practicing Law Institute, 1984.

Mosburg, Lewis G. The Petroleum Explorationist's Guide to Titles, Leases & Contracts (Oklahoma City, Okla.: Energy Textbooks International, 1984).

"Recording Acts and Priorities." In Powell on Real Property, ch. 82 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

"Registration of Title." In Powell on Real Property, ch. 83 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

Articles

Batalov, Lev. S., "The Russian Title Registration for Realty and Its Effect on Foreign Investors," 73 Wash. L. Rev. 989 (1998).

Burkhart, Ann M., "Third Party Defenses to Mortgages," 1998 BYU L. Rev. 1003.

Carpenter, Willis, "The Rules Have Changed for Quiet Title Actions," 27 May Colo. Law 69 (1998).

Duca, James N., "The Interaction Between Mechanic's Lien Law and the Bankruptcy Code," 53 Bus. Law. 1283 (1998).

Dunley, Kevin J. and Chris Belline, "State and Federal Tax Liens on Minnesota Real Estate," 21 Hamline L.Rev. 395 (1998).

Ebner, David G. "Professional Responsibilities of Mineral Title Examiners." Mineral Law Series: Rocky Mt. Min. L. Found. Vol. 1992 (Annual) 6-1.

Fisher, John W., II. "The Scope of Title Examination in West Virginia: Can Reasonable Minds Differ?" W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 98 (1996) 449.

Flynn, Michael C. and Thomas R. McGrath, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 33 Tort & Ins. L.J. 699 (1998).

Hanstad, Tim, "Designing Land Registration Systems for Developing Countries," 13 Am. U. Int'l L.Rev. 647 (1998).

Hargrave, Lee. "Public Records and Property Rights." La. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1996) 535.

Henrickson, Gregory R., "Perfecting Oregon's Land Sale Contract: Beyond Notice and Cure", 76 Or. L.Rev. 945 (1997).

Jennings, Marianne M. "Public Records and Property Rights." La. L. Rev. Vol. 56 (1997) 535.

Jennings, Marianne M. "Separating the Search from the Insurance." Real Est. L. J. Vol. 25 (1997) 302.

Johns, Richard B. "Title Examinations on Unitized Land." Mineral Law Series: Rocky Mt. Min. L. Found. Vol. 1990 (Annual) 17-1.

Keller, Matthew J. Jr., "Adverse Possession: A Title Insurer's Perspective," 11 -APR CBA Rec. 28 CBA Record (1997).

Lefcoe, George, "How Buyers and Sellers of Development Land Deal With Regulatory Risk," 32 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 301 (1997).

Mattis, Taylor. "Recording Acts: Anachronistic Reliance." Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. Vol. 25 (Spring 1990) 17.

McKee, Thomas G. "Guidelines for Landmen in Conducting Records Searches and Preparing Reports for Attorneys (Or What Does the Client Want?)." Mineral Law Series: Rocky Mt. Min. L. Found. Vol. 1994 (Annual) 10A-1.

Morgan David D. and Kraettli Q. Epperson. "Oklahoma Title Examination Standards and Curative Acts Relating to Oil and Gas Interests." Tulsa L.J. Vol. 24 (1989) 547.

Nelson, Grant S., "The Contract for Deed as a Mortgage: The Case for the Restatement Approach,"1998 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 1111.

Reeves, George E. "Priority of Recording." Colo. Law. Vol. 24 (1995) 2209.

Shade, Joseph. "Petroleum Land Titles: Title Examination & Title Options." Baylor L. Rev. Vol. 46 (1994) 1007.

Shuman, Robert Louis. "The Amended and Reenacted Delinquent and Nonentered Land Statutes--The Title Examination Ramifications." W. Va. L. Rev. Vol. 98 (1996) 537.

Tehan, Maureen, "Customary Title, Heritage Protection, and Property Rights in Australia: Emerging Patterns of Land Use in the Post-Mabo Era," 7 Pac. Rim L. & Pol'y J. 765 (1998).

Thomsen, Randall, "Washington State Property Tax Foreclosures: Quoerere Dat Sapere Quoe Sunt Legitima Vere,"32 Gonz. L. Rev. 123 (1997).

Wittrock, Monica Amis, "Residential Liens and Foreclosures (Oklahoma Focus),"51Okla. L. Rev. 269 (1998).

Annotations

Annotation, Abstracter's Duty and Liability to Employer Respecting Matters to Be Included in Abstract, 28 A.L.R. 2d 891.

Annotation, Construction and Application of Statutory Provision Respecting Registration of Mortgages or Other Liens on Personal Property in Case of Residents of Other States, 10 A.L.R. 2d 764.

Annotation, Defect in, or Condition of, Adjacent Land or Way as Within Coverage of Title Insurance Policy, 8 A.L.R. 4th 1246.

Annotation, Description with Reference to Highway as Carrying Title to Center or Side of Highway, 49 A.L.R. 2d 982.

Annotation, Liability of Attorney for Negligence in Connection with Investigation or Certification of Title to Real Estate, 59 A.L.R. 3d 1176.

Annotation, Liability on One Preparing Abstract of Title, for Deficiency Therein, to One Other Than Person Directly Contracting for Abstract, 34 A.L.R. 3d 1122.

Annotation, Negligence, Inattention, or Professional Incompetence of Attorney in Handling Client's Affairs in Matters Involving Real-Estate Transactions as Ground for Disciplinary Action-Modern Cases, 65 A.L.R. 4th 24.

Annotation, Negligence in Preparing Abstract of Title as Ground of Liability to One Other Than Person Ordering Abstract, 50 A.L.R. 4th 314.

Annotation, "Real Property Quiet-Title Actions Against United States Under Quiet Title Act (28 U.S.C. § 2409A)," 60 A.L.R. Fed. 645.

Annotation, Title by Adverse Possession as Affected by Recording Statutes, 9 A.L.R. 2d 850.

Annotation, Title Examination Activities by Lending Institutions, Insurance Company, or Title and Abstract Company, as Illegal Practice of Law, 85 A.L.R. 2d 184.

Annotation, Title Insurer's Negligent Failure to Discover and Disclose Defect Bases for Liability in Tort, 19 A.L.R. 4th 695.

Annotation, Transferees Entitled to Protection under Torrens Act Certificate of Title, 42 A.L.R. 2d 1387.

Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Application of Entirety Clause in Oil and Gas Lease, 48 A.L.R. 3d 706.

Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Land Sale Contract Providing That Title Must Be Satisfactory to Purchaser, 47 A.L.R. 2d 455.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.04

Supp. to § 92.04 The American Recording System.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.04(a) General Operation. [Go To Main]

Add:

Island Venture Assocs. v. N.J. Dep't of Envtl. Prot., 179 N.J. 485, 846 A.2d 1228 (N.J. 2004) (a developer was not bound by a restriction that could not be found by a diligent search of the record title).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.05

Supp. to § 92.05 Recording System Indexes.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.05(a) Grantor--Grantee and Tract. [Go To Main]

§ 92.05(a)(1) Grantor-Grantee Indexes.

Add new footnote 86.1 at end of line 6, paragraph 2: n86.1

§ 92.05(a)(4) Chain of Title Doctrine.

Add:

Richardson v. Amresco Residential Mortgage Corp., 592 S.E.2d 65 (Va. 2004) (recorded instruments in the chain of title placed mortgagees under a duty of inquiry).

Add:

Langley v. Billiot, 28 So. 3d 1154 (La. App. 2009) (unbroken chain of title back to the sovereign required).

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 86.1. First Citizens National Bank v. Sherwood, 817 A.2d 501 (Pa. Super. 2003) (with regard to a mortgage that was properly recorded but defectively indexed, the result of the record search constituted notice).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.06

Supp. to § 92.06 Statutes of Limitation, Curative Acts, and Marketable Title Acts.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.06(b) Marketable Title Act. [Go To Main]

Add:

Blanton v. City of Pinellas Park, 854 So.2d 729 (Fla. App. 2003) (a claim for a statutory way of necessity was subject to the limitations period of the marketable record title act).

§ 92.06(b)(1) Objectives.

Add:

Berger v. Riverwind Parking, LLP, 842 So.2d 918 (Fla. App. 2003) (subdivision restrictions more than 30 years old and recorded prior to the root of title were extinguished by the marketable record title act).

Add:

Mannweiler v. LaFlamme, 781 A.2d 497 (Conn. App. 2001) (a failure to record a notice of subdivision restrictions, as required by the marketable record title act, did not extinguish those restrictions).

§ 92.06(b)(4) Exceptions.

At the end of the first sentence in the third paragraph of the subsection, add new footnote: n207.1

FOOTNOTES:
(n2)Footnote 207.1. Dennison v. N.D. Dep't of Human Servs., 2002 ND 39, 640 N.W.2d 447 (N.D. 2002) (the restraint on alienation is a right or interest excepted from the state's marketable record title act).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.07

Supp. to § 92.07 Off the Record Risks.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.07(b) Recordation of Void or Defective Instrument. [Go To Main]

Add:

Burger v. Singh, 816 N.Y.S.2d 478 (2006) (issue of due care when imposter signed fraudulently at closing).

§ 92.07(h) Hidden Mechanics' Liens [Go To Main]

Add:

Imperial Developers, Inc. v. Calhoun Development, LLC, 775 N.W.2d 895 (Minn. App. 2009) (mortgage interests not memorialized on the certificate of title were not interests of record when mechanics' liens attached).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.08

Supp. to § 92.08 Types of Recording Acts.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.08(a) Race Recording Acts. [Go To Main] change the first sentence of paragraph 2 of the section to read as follows:

Race recording acts of general application are found in only three states: Delaware, Louisiana, and North Carolina.[283].

Add at the beginning of the footnote:

Del. Code Ann. § tit. 25, § 153; N & W Development Co. v. Carey, 1983 Del. Ch. LEXIS 410 (Civil Action No. 6885, Jan. 26, 1983).

§ 92.08(b) Notice Recording Acts. [Go To Main] delete:

N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:3-a; S.C. Code Ann. § 30-7-10.

§ 92.08(c) Race-Notice Recording Acts. [Go To Main]

Add:

N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:3-a, Amoskeag Bank v. Chagnon, 133 N.H. 11, 572 A.2d 1153 (N.H. 1990); S.C. Code Ann. § 30-7-10, Leasing Enterprises v. Livingston, 363 S.E.2d 410 (S.C. App. 1987) .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.09

Supp. to § 92.09 Qualifying for Recording Act Protection.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Salt Lake County v. Metro West Ready Mix, Inc., 53 P.3d 499 (Utah App. 2002) (bona fide purchaser protected by the recording statute, even though purchasers' grantor never had legal title); Salt Lake County v. Metro West Ready Mix, Inc., 89 P.3d 155 (Utah 2004) (a purchaser through a wild deed cannot be a good faith purchaser as against an unrecorded interest in the property).

§ 92.09(c) In Good Faith, Without Notice. [Go To Main]

§ 92.09(c)(2) Constructive Notice.

Add:

United Savings and Loan Bank v. Pallis, 27 P.3d 629 (Wash. App. 2001) (lis pendens gives constructive notice of a claim).

§ 92.09(c)(2)(B) Record Notice: Chain of Title.

§ 92.09(c)(2)(B)(I) Problems Encountered Using Grantor-Grantee Indexes.

Add:

Salt Lake County v. Metro West Ready Mix, Inc., 89 P.3d 155 (Utah 2004) (a purchaser acquiring by means of a wild deed is not a good faith purchaser as against an unrecorded interest in the land).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.10

Supp. to § 92.10 Title Registration.

[Go To Main]

§ 92.10(a) The Torrens System. [Go To Main]

Add:

McLaughlin v. Town of Marblehead, 863 N.E.2d 61 (Mass. App. 2007) (petition filed by landowners seeking to register title to their land).

§ 92.10(c) Initial Registration. [Go To Main]

Add:

Cowan v. Fifth Third Mortgage Co., 70 Fed. Appx. 797 (6th Cir. 2003) (mortgage interest not properly perfected under state registration act).

Add:

Poor v. Lombard, 893 N.E.2d 1255 (Mass. App. 2008) (action to confirm title without registration: evidence showed a lost, unrecorded deed).

§ 92.10(e) The Torrens System in Operation: Security of Title. [Go To Main]

Add:

Bavely v. Huntington National Bank, 273 B.R. 98 (Bankr. 6th Cir. 2002) (the doctrine of equitable estoppel may not be used to create an interest in registered land, which interest is in derogation of a registered title).

§ 92.10(h) Operation and Administration of Torrens: Economy and Efficiency? [Go To Main]

Add:

Cowan v. Huntington National Bank, 273 B.R. 98 (6th Cir. 2001) (mortgagee could not use the doctrine of equitable estoppel to create an interest in registered land in derogation of the state's Registration of Land Titles Act).

Add:

Walther v. Lundberg, 654 N.W.2d 694 (Minn. App. 2002) (registrar had a duty to refer the certificate to the examiner of titles).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 92 RECORDING, REGISTRATION, AND SEARCH OF TITLE

11-92 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 92.11

Supp. to § 92.11 Responsibilities and Liabilities of Title Service Providers.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Fidelity National Title Insurance Co. of New York v. Suburban West Abstractors, 2004 Pa. Super. LEXIS 1243 (No. 2290 EDA 2003, May 24, 2004) (action against title search company for failing to discover judgment entered against mortgagors); Fountainhead Title Group Corporation v. Courthouse Search of Northern Virginia, 122 Fed. Appx. 10 (4th Cir. 2005) (action by title insurance corporation against title search company for negligence in connection with the title search (failure to report a judgment on the property)).

Add:

Ex Parte Watson, 589 S.E.2d 760 (S.C. 2003) (examining titles and preparing title abstracts constitute the unauthorized practice of law in this state).

Bender v. Kansas Secured Title and Abstract Co., 119 P.3d 670 (Kan. App. 2005) (blanket pipeline easement overlooked during title search); Fountainhead Title Group Corp. v. Courthouse Search of Northern Virginia, 122 Fed. Appx. 10 (4th Cir. 2005) (action against title search company for negligence and breach of contract).

§ 92.11(a) Responsibilities and Liabilities of Abstractors of Title. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Crystal Cascases Civil, LLC, 398 B.R. 23 (D. Nev. 2008) (the standard for what is a reasonable title search is from the perspective of a nonprofessional title searcher).

Add:

Wackrow v. Niemi, 899 N.E.2d 273 (Ill. 2008) (legal malpractice claim against an attorney who failed to conduct a sufficient title search).

U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Integrity Land Title Corp., 914 N.E.2d 320 (Ind. App. 2009) (title company failed to discover a prior recorded lien in its title search); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Residential Title Services, Inc., 607 F. Supp. 2d 959 (E.D. Wis. 2009) (claim that issuer of title insurance policy failed to timely update its title search).

Add:

Midwest Bankcentre v. Old Republic Title Co. of St. Louis, 247 S.W.3d 116 (Mo. App. 2008) (negligence action against title company for not recording deed of trust); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Arkansas Riverview Development, LLC, 573 F. Supp. 2d 1152 (E.D. Ark. 2008) (action in tort for negligent failure to conduct a diligent title search not permitted).

§ 92.11(b) Responsibilities and Liabilities of Attorney Title Examiners. [Go To Main]

Add:

Erpenbeck v Kentucky Bar Ass'n, 295 S.W.3d 435 (Ky. 2009) (attorney conducted faulty title searches).

Add:

Doe v. Condon, 568 S.E.2d 356 (S.C. 2002) (title search and preparation of title documents for a lender without attorney supervision constitute the unauthorized practice of law in South Carolina).

Add:

Lawyers Title Insurance Corp. v. Groff, 808 A.2d 44 (N.H. 2002) (an attorney may delegate to an independent contractor the duty to examine land title in real estate transactions).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. to § 92.12 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles:

Baker, Matthew, et al. "Optimal Title Search," 31 J. Legal Stud. 139 (January, 2002).

Burton, Bruce W. "Search of John Constable's White Horse: A Case Study in Tortured Provenance for A Torrens-Like System of Title Registration for Art Works," 59 Fla. L. Rev. 531 (July, 2007).

McStotts, Jennifer Cohoon. "In Perpetuity or for Forty Years, Whichever is Less: The Effect of Marketable Record Title Acts on Conservation and Preservation Easements," 27 J. Land Resources & Envtl. L. 41 (2007).

Meyer, Malcolm A. "Louisiana Heirship Property: Solutions for Establishing Title," 55 La. B.J. 328 (February/March 2008).

Poliakoff, Gary A. and Donna D. Berger, "The Reinstatement of Covenants, Conditions, and Restrictions Extinguished by the Marketable Record Title Act," 79 Fla. B.J. 14 (May, 2005).

Stroud, Joel. "Looking Beyond the Title Search: Attorneys Must Consider Environmental Regulations." 25 N.C. Cent. L. J. 182 (Spring 2003).

"Title Systems and Land Values," 45 J.L. & Econ. 565 (October, 2002).

Annotations

Add:

Annotation, "Necessity of recording tax deed to protect title as against interest derived from former owner," 65 A.L.R. 1015 .

Annotation, "Rule which makes priority of title depend upon priority of record as applied to record of later instruction in second chain of title which antedates record of original instrument in first chain, record of which, however, antedated record of original instrument in second chain," 133 A.L.R. 886 .

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 93.syn

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.syn Synopsis to Chapter 93: TITLE INSURANCE

§ 93.01 Overview of the Title Insurance Industry.

§ 93.02 Nature of Title Insurance.

§ 93.02(a) Introduction.

§ 93.02(b) Contract of Indemnity.

§ 93.02(c) The Title Policy.

§ 93.02(d) Construction of Title Policies.

§ 93.02(e) Obligation of Good Faith and Fair Dealing.

§ 93.03 Statement of Coverage.

§ 93.03(a) Insuring Clauses.

§ 93.03(a)(1) Title Being Vested Other Than as Stated.

§ 93.03(a)(2) Any Defect in or Lien or Encumbrance on Such Title.

§ 93.03(a)(3) Access to and from the Land.

§ 93.03(a)(4) Unmarketability of the Title.

§ 93.03(b) Coverages Included in Loan Policies Only.

§ 93.04 Exclusions from Coverage.

§ 93.04(a) Matters Exclusively Known or Controlled by the Insured.

§ 93.04(b) Defect Resulting in No Loss or Damage.

§ 93.04(c) Defects That Attach or Are Created After the Policy Date.

§ 93.04(d) Loss or Damage That Would Not Have Been Sustained If the Insured Had Paid Value.

§ 93.04(e) Creditors' Rights.

§ 93.04(f) Unenforceability of the Lien of the Insured Mortgage Because of Failure to Comply with Applicable "Doing Business" Laws.

§ 93.04(g) Invalidity or Unenforceability of Mortgage Lien Because of Usury or Consumer Credit Protection or Truth in Lending Laws.

§ 93.05 Conditions and Stipulations.

§ 93.05(a) Definitions.

§ 93.05(a)(1) Definition of "Insured."

§ 93.05(a)(1)(A) The Meaning of "Insured" in the Loan Policy.

§ 93.05(a)(1)(B) The Meaning of "Insured" in the Owner's Policy.

§ 93.05(a)(2) Effect of Property Transfer on Meaning of "Insured"

§ 93.05(b) The Duty to Search Title and Report Adverse Matters.

§ 93.05(b)(1) The Insurer's Duty to Search for and Report Adverse Claims.

§ 93.05(b)(2) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Implied Contract.

§ 93.05(b)(3) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Tort.

§ 93.05(b)(3)(A) Negligent Search and Examination.

§ 93.05(b)(3)(B) Negligent Misrepresentation of Title.

§ 93.05(b)(4) Proper Scope of the Insurer's Duty to Search and Report Defects.

§ 93.05(b)(5) Summary of Duty to Search Rules.

§ 93.05(c) The Duty to Defend.

§ 93.05(c)(1) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Covered Grounds.

§ 93.05(c)(2) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Non-Covered Grounds.

§ 93.05(d) Subrogation.

§ 93.05(e) Arbitration of Claims.

§ 93.05(f) Measurement of Losses Under Title Insurance Policies.

§ 93.06 Exceptions.

§ 93.06(a) General Exceptions.

§ 93.06(b) Rights of Parties in Possession.

§ 93.06(c) Encroachments or Other Matters Which Would Be Disclosed by an Accurate Survey and Inspection.

§ 93.06(d) Easements Not Shown by the Public Records.

§ 93.06(e) Hidden Mechanics' Liens.

§ 93.06(f) Taxes or Special Assessments Not Shown as Liens by the Public Records.

First AmendmentEndorsements.

§ 93.08 Regulation of Title Insurers.

§ 93.08(a) Regulation Aimed at Assuring Ability of Insurers to Pay Claims.

§ 93.08(b) Other Consumer Protection Regulations.

§ 93.09 Other Types of Real Property Insurance.

§ 93.09(a) Title Insurance Compared to Some Other Types of Real Property Insurance.

§ 93.09(b) Property Insurance.

§ 93.09(c) Mortgage Insurance.

§ 93.09(c)(1) Federal Mortgage Insurance.

§ 93.09(c)(2) Private Mortgage Insurance.

§ 93.10 Bibliography.

Professor John L. McCormack
School of Law
Loyola University Chicago

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.01

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.01 Overview of the Title Insurance Industry.n1

[Go To Supp]

A purchaser of an interest in real estate faces many title risks. The public land title records are not reliable indicators of title and ownership. Claims against a title may be valid or enforceable even if there is no record or other indication of their existence. The record owner may not be the owner in fact, an apparently good title may be defective or encumbered in fact, an owner in the chain of title may have lacked the power or capacity to transfer, or a transfer may have been void or defective for some other reason. n2 Furthermore, the information derived from the public land records may be imperfect because of errors in their administration. Other title risks include errors in the collection and evaluation of title data. Any of these risks could cause losses. If risks cannot be eliminated, the purchaser may bear the risk of loss alone or seek to shift it elsewhere.

The warranty deed is a means of title risk shifting. The warranties given by the grantor to the grantee usually include some, but not all, potential title defects. Compensation for losses through deed warranties may depend on whether a judgment against the warrantor/grantor can be obtained and satisfied.

Hiring an attorney to examine title may shift search and examination error risks to the attorney but will provide no protection against risks due to imperfections of the public land title records. Attorneys will not assume risks that cannot be ascertained by an examination of the public real estate records and a survey. Furthermore, a party suffering a loss caused by a title defect will have the burden of proving that the loss was caused by the attorney's negligence.

Title insurance is an effective means of shifting and spreading both known and unknown title risks. It is the dominant form of land title assurance in much of the United States, and in some areas it is almost the sole form used. n3 Title insurance is basically a non-casualty type of insurance. The term "title insurance" is almost a misnomer. A title policy does include insurance against title risks, but the primary service furnished by title insurers is title search and examination. When called upon to insure a title, the company searches and examines the title records. If this examination reveals a possible adverse claim, the insurer will normally report it to the prospective insured. A reported matter will be excepted from the coverage of the title policy when it is finally issued, unless the insurer has been persuaded to waive the exception based on the possible adverse claim. If the company fails to report a title defect or encumbrance of record which later causes the insured to suffer a loss, the title insurance company is generally obligated by the contract of insurance to indemnify the insured or to defend the insured in any litigation based on the title defect.

Whether the company either was negligent or exercised reasonable care in searching and examining the title is immaterial when the insured's claim is based on the contract of insurance. The liability of an attorney for an erroneous title opinion requires proof of negligence. n4 In contrast, the title insurer, under the policy, is strictly liable for covered losses resulting from title defects not reported to the insured and not excepted or excluded from coverage by a policy provision. The examining attorney is only responsible for title claims or defects that can be determined from information on the record, but the typical title policy will cover many of the title risks that do not appear on the record, including the possibility of a total failure of title due to a void link in the chain of title.

Title insurance was an American innovation, and little title insurance is written today outside of the United States. Whether the use of title insurance will increase outside of the United States in the future, however, is an open question. n5

The first organization created to insure titles was established in Philadelphia in 1853. n6 State enabling legislation for the incorporation of title insurance companies was enacted in Pennsylvania in 1874, and the first title insurance company was incorporated in Philadelphia in 1876. n7 Within a short time, title insurance companies were established in New York and Baltimore. n8 By 1895, a standard text on insurance stated that passing notice must be given to corporations organized in many large cities which combined title insurance with the business of searching titles. n9 In the 1909 edition of this same work, the author stated that title insurance had assumed such commercial importance that it required more than passing notice. n10 Between World War I and World War II, title insurers developed a national market for their policies. n11 As the realization grew that the relatively standardized coverage provided by title insurers made mortgage paper more marketable in the developing secondary mortgage markets, lenders began to require borrowers to title insure their mortgages. n12 After World War II, the title insurance business experienced tremendous growth, displacing attorneys as the dominant source of land title assurance in much of the United States. n13 Between 1968 and 1981, operating revenues of the title insurance industry grew from $317 million to $1.285 billion. n14

As the volume of title insurance business increased, the number of commercial title insurers decreased. By the 1950s, approximately 150 corporations wrote title insurance. n15 By 1980, about fifteen large insurance holding companies dominated the commercial title insurance industry. n16 During the 1980s, the trend toward consolidation and reduction in the number of insurers continued.

As the title insurance industry grew tremendously during the post-World War II period, attorneys began to implement an effective response to their loss of title examination business to commercial title insurers. This response was the development of bar-related title insurance funds. The first bar-related title insurance organization was created in Florida in 1947. n17 By the mid-1980s, ten title companies were members of the National Association of Bar-Related Title Insurers, and bar-related title insurers were operating in at least nineteen states. n18 The most significant feature which distinguishes bar-related title insurers from other title insurers is that the title policies are issued through member attorneys. Some bar-related title insurers are sponsored by or affiliated with bar associations. n19 Most of the bar-related title insurance companies are incorporated, but a few conduct business as trusts. n20 Once an attorney becomes a member, the attorney is usually authorized to issue title policies within certain established limits. n21 The policy is backed by the assets and credit of the bar-related insurer. Essentially, a member attorney can offer the same insurance services that are available from commercial title companies.

Commercial title insurance companies have bitterly opposed bar-related insurers. n22 Nationally, the bar-related insurers have only a small fraction of the business; n23 in certain areas, however, bar-related companies have captured a significant portion of the title insurance business. n24 For example, a commercial title insurer, Chicago Title Insurance, had a virtual monopoly on the title insurance business in the Chicago area (Cook County, Illinois) for many years. In the mid-1970s, however, the Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund (the Illinois bar-related insurer) entered the market in Cook

County, and by 1989, the fund insurer led Chicago Title in the residential resale market and had 21 percent of the total Cook County market compared to Chicago Title's 38 percent. n25

Because of poor public records, n26 and possibly other reasons, title insurance companies sometimes find it economical to partially or even completely duplicate public records. These privately maintained records are referred to as "title plants." The scope of private title plants varies from county to county, depending mainly on the quality of the public records and on the volume of title insurance business done in the county. In some counties where no public tract index is available, title insurance companies may maintain a tract index to the public records. Searches may be conducted in the public records by using the private tract index. In other places, the title plant may duplicate much or all of the public records. Elaborate title plants are maintained jointly by several companies in Los Angeles County, elsewhere in California, Maricopa County (the Phoenix area) in Arizona, Denver, and Dallas. n27 The computerized title plant maintained by the Chicago Title Insurance Co. for Cook County, Illinois, is probably unique because it not only duplicates the public records but also contains more data than the public records. n28 In some localities, the volume of title business may be insufficient to warrant the maintenance of a title plant, or even an office. In such places, title companies may rely on approved attorneys who search and examine titles using abstracts or public records before policies are issued.

When a title insurance company is requested to insure a title, it will search and examine the title using a private title plant, public records, or a combination of the two. Title companies keep records of their searches and examinations, and normally if the company has previously insured the title, it will simply update the prior examination. Sometimes a company may update a search and examination made by another company. n29

After the title examination, the company will issue a commitment to insure the title. In some places, this commitment is referred to as a "preliminary title report," "binder," or "certificate of title." n30 The report serves the same purposes, among others, as an attorney's title opinion where that method is used to prove title. n31 As is the case with abstracts and attorney title opinions, the report is used by vendors to prove that their titles meet the quality standards of the sales contract. The commitment is also used by mortgage lenders, along with other information, to evaluate the subject real estate as security for their loans.

The commitment contains an undertaking by the company to insure the title, subject to certain exceptions. The "special exceptions" include defects, liens, encumbrances, and other adverse claims revealed by the title examination. Basically, the company uses the commitment to inform the proposed insured that these matters will not be covered by the final title policy. After the commitment is furnished, the company may be persuaded to waive special exceptions upon the presentation of various forms of evidence indicating that the exceptions do not represent true title defects. Where permitted by state law, a company may agree to waive an exception that may very well represent a valid defect, often upon the payment of an additional premium. This is called "insuring over" or "insuring around" the risk. When a company does this, it is truly providing insurance because it is assuming a known risk. If a special exception has been waived, it will not appear on the final title policy.

There is a national organization of title companies n32 called the American Land Title Association (ALTA). Among other things, ALTA promulgates title insurance policy forms. Major revisions of ALTA forms were completed in 1970, n33 1987, n34 and 1990. n35 Title insurers are currently using both the 1970 and 1990 forms. Most title insurers issue their policies on ALTA forms, the exceptions being mainly in California, New York n36 and Texas. Consequently, there is substantial uniformity in title insurance policies issued by different companies.

Title insurance is used to insure owners and lenders. The interest insured by an owner's policy usually is a fee simple estate but other ownership interests such as leasehold estates are also insured. A policy which insures the title to a lender's mortgage is called a "loan" or "mortgagee's" policy. ALTA provides separate policy forms for the two kinds of insurance, i.e., owner's and lender's insurance. In addition to ALTA forms, California title insurers also use California Land Title Association (CLTA) forms. n37 The CLTA promulgates combined policy forms which can be used to insure both owners and lenders in one policy. n38 These forms are also sometimes used in Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, and Wyoming. n39 In New York and Texas, forms unique to each state are also used. n40

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "American Land Title Association" or (ALTA w/50 title)

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. The most useful works on title insurance are D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance (2d. ed. 1993) and Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law (1994). Despite its vintage, the best general law review article on title insurance is Quintin Johnstone, Title Insurance, 66 Yale L.J. 492 (1957). For a more current expression of Professor Johnstone's thoughts on title insurance and other subjects, see Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493 (1988). Other good articles, among others, include Joyce D. Palomar, Bank Control of Title Insurance Companies: Perils to the Public That Bank Regulators Have Ignored, 44 SW. L.J. 905 (1990); James M. Pedowitz, Title Insurance--What Every New York Lawyer Should Know, 52 N.Y. ST. B.J. 292 (1980); and Michael M. Rooney, Title Insurance: A Primer for Attorneys, 14 Real Prop. Prob. & TR. J. 608 (1979). Except for Burke's treatise and Palomar's treatise and law review articles, the best recent commentary on title insurance has been made mostly by practicing lawyers and title insurance company officials.

(n2)Footnote 2. Some, but by no means all, non-record defects, interests, or claims can be discovered by searches or investigations beyond the land title records.

(n3)Footnote 3. These include most metropolitan areas and the entire Pacific Coast of the United States. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Systems: Legal Constraints and Reforms I-2 (1979). In Cook County, Illinois, the jurisdiction where the author teaches and has practiced, title insurance has been almost the sole form of land title assurance for recorded real estate titles for over forty years. Until recently, Cook County was one of the few places in the United States that had many titles registered under a Torrens system. At the time that the Cook County Torrens title registration system was abolished, approximately 95% of all Torrens transfers were title insured. Report of the Blue Ribbon Committee Prepared at the Request of Carol Moseley Braun, Cook County Recorder of Deeds/Registrar of Titles 52 (June 13, 1989) (unpublished report on file with author).

(n4)Footnote 4. Title insurers may also be liable: (1) under tort law for negligent search, examination, or misrepresentation of title; or (2) for a bad faith breach of the contract of insurance. The tort liabilities of title insurers will be discussed later in this chapter.

(n5)Footnote 5. Some title insurance is written in Canada, England, the Caribbean, Mexico and Tahiti. Allen Axelrod, et al., Land Transfer and Finance 764 n.20 (Boston, Toronto and London; Little, Brown 1986). An American title insurance company official has predicted that title insurance will spread to Canada, England, perhaps other parts of western Europe, and Japan by the 21st century. Russell W. Jordan, III, Title Insurance in the 21st Century, 69 Title News 12 (Aug. 1990). Efforts to market title insurance in the United Kingdom in the 1970s faced stiff opposition from solicitors. John C. Payne, Second Thoughts on the Future of Title Insurance in England, 124 Solic. J. 699 (1980). After about a 10-year effort, Chicago Title Insurance, one of a few American companies that attempted to penetrate the British market, terminated its operations in the United Kingdom in the mid 1980s. Telephone Interview with Michael Nolan, Corporate Communications Office, Chicago Title Insurance Co., in Chicago, Illinois (Sept. 14, 1990). As of 1989, at least six companies were pursuing title insurance business across Canada. Linda A. Sequin, Title Insurance, in Canadian Bar Ass'n-Ontario, Real Property Hot Spots 1 (1989). A Canadian commentator expressed doubt about whether the admitted benefits of title insurance justified its cost and predicted that title insurance would not become entrenched in Canada unless lenders banded together to require it. James D. M. Fraser, Title Insurance--Do We Need It?, in Canadian Bar Ass'n--Ontario, Real Property Hot Spots 11 (1989). It seems reasonable to predict that title insurers would have a more difficult marketing task than they faced in the United Kingdom in European civil law countries because notaries in those countries provide services that are similar to some of the services provided by title insurance companies in the United States. A French lawyer once described to the author her frustration in failing to convince American investors in a development in Tahiti that title insurance on their interests was "completely unnecessary" because the notary "takes care of everything." As of the early 1980s, title insurance was not used at all in Asia. Thomas H. Clarke, Mortgage and Title Assurance in Asia, 11 Int'l Bus. Law 127 (1983).

(n6)Footnote 6. Sumner B. Young, et al., Report of the Special Committee of the Hennepin County Bar Association Appointed to Study Title Insurance, 19 Minn. L. Rev. 354, 357 (1935).

(n7)Footnote 7. Sumner B. Young, et al., Report of the Special Committee of the Hennepin County Bar Association Appointed to Study Title Insurance, 19 Minn. L. Rev. 354, 357 (1935). For a more extensive discussion of the development of title insurance in Pennsylvania, see Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 1.01[2] (1994).

(n8)Footnote 8. Ernest F. Roberts, Jr., Et Al., Public Regulation Of Title Insurance Companies and Abstracters 2 (1961).

(n9)Footnote 9. Ernest F. Roberts, Jr., Et Al., Public Regulation Of Title Insurance Companies and Abstracters 2 (1961).

(n10)Footnote 10. Ernest F. Roberts, Jr., Et Al., Public Regulation Of Title Insurance Companies and Abstracters 2 (1961).

(n11)Footnote 11. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.1 (1986).

(n12)Footnote 12. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.1 (1986). Purchasers in a secondary mortgage market purchase debts from the original lenders. At the time of the purchase, the debt and the mortgage security interest are assigned to the purchaser. If the title to the mortgage is insured, the title policy will also be assigned to the purchaser. While title policies insuring owners are normally not assignable by sellers to buyers, policies covering mortgage are assignable.

(n13)Footnote 13. Allen Axelrod, Et Al., Land Transfer and Finance 764 (1986); Noel D. Uri, The Title Insurance Industry: A Reexamination, 17 Real Estate L.J. 313, 314 (1989). Attorneys still dominate the land title assurance field in New England, much of the rural South and Midwest, and in the state of Iowa where it is illegal for a private insurer to issue a title policy on Iowa land within the state. However, the Attorney General of Iowa has opined that it is permissible for an out-of-state title insurer to issue a policy out-of-state on Iowa real estate. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.1 (1986). Since 1987, the Iowa State Finance Authority has been authorized to offer what appears to be a form of title insurance. iowa Code Ann. §§ 220.2, 220.91. When title insurance is used as land title assurance, attorneys still play a role as a source of independent advice about title insurers, title insurance documents and the different coverages which may be advisable. This role is lesser in several respects than that played by the attorney when title insurance is not involved. The attorney's malpractice exposure is less because a title insurer assumes the principal liability for the quality of the search and examination. The in-depth knowledge of applicable real property law that is required to evaluate a chain of title in the record or on an abstract is not required to evaluate a title insurance commitment or policy. Furthermore, examining title insurance documents requires less time than required for examination of record chains or abstracts of title. This may make it difficult for an attorney to justify a large fee for title examination.

(n14)Footnote 14. Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide To Title Insurance 1-8 (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education, 1984). In constant 1968 dollars, the growth was from $317 million to $492.2 million. Id.

(n15)Footnote 15. Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide To Title Insurance 1-8 (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education, 1984).

(n16)Footnote 16. Michael J. Rooney, Bar-Related Title Insurance: The Positive Perspective, 1980, S. Ill. U. L.J.

263, 292 n.149.

(n17)Footnote 17. Michael J. Rooney, The Role of the Lawyer as a "Member" of a Bar Guaranty Fund, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 333, 334 (1985). See Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 2.05 (1994).

(n18)Footnote 18. Michael J. Rooney, The Role of the Lawyer as a "Member" of a Bar Guaranty Fund, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 335 (1985); D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.1 (1986).

(n19)Footnote 19. Michael J. Rooney, The Role of the Lawyer as a "Member" of a Bar Guaranty Fund, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 333, 336 (1985).

(n20)Footnote 20. Michael J. Rooney, The Role of the Lawyer as a "Member" of a Bar Guaranty Fund, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 337 (1985).

(n21)Footnote 21. Michael J. Rooney, The Role of the Lawyer as a "Member" of a Bar Guaranty Fund, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 338 (1985).

(n22)Footnote 22. Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493, 511 (1988).

(n23)Footnote 23. Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493, 511 (1988).

(n24)Footnote 24. Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493, 511 n.50 (1988).

(n25)Footnote 25. J. Linn Allen, Who Cares about Title Insurance?, Chi. Trib., Apr. 30, 1989, § 16, at 1.

(n26)Footnote 26. The quality of public land title record-keeping varies from place to place. For examples, the public land title records in Minneapolis-St. Paul and parts of New England are very good. In some other localities, the quality ranges from poor to atrocious. Additionally, the only available index to the records in approximately two-thirds of recorders' offices nationwide is the grantor-grantee name index type. Where this type of index is well kept and periodically reorganized so that entries are in strict alphabetical order, the index is usable to conduct a chain of title search. Grantor-grantee indexes that are not so well maintained are difficult or practically impossible to use. In the Chicago area (Cook County, Illinois), the official grantor-grantee index to deeds and mortgages is unusable to conduct a search. Fortunately, Cook County also maintains a usable, unofficial tract index.

(n27)Footnote 27. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., Land Title Recordation Practices: A State-of-the-Art Study 43 (1980).

(n28)Footnote 28. The official Cook County records were destroyed by the Chicago fire in 1871. A predecessor of Chicago Title Insurance Co. was maintaining a tract index that was saved from the fire. By statute, these pre-fire records may be treated as prima facie evidence of the information that they contain. 765 ILCS 45/8 & 24. Title insurance companies may make access agreements under which one company may have access to the computerized records of another company through remote terminals.By statute, these pre-fire records may be treated as prima facie evidence of the information that they contain. 765 ILCS 45/8 & 24.

(n29)Footnote 29. The results of a company's examination appear in the final title policy which is dated. When a company relies on a prior examination, the company may be liable for defects, liens, or encumbrances that were not reported in the prior title policy. Where the prior policy was issued by another company, there normally will be no recourse for the subsequent title insurance company against the other company for losses it must indemnify that were not reported on the prior policy but that existed when it was issued. Title insurance companies have no duty to issue title insurance when requested. Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 364 (1996), rev'd on other grounds, 960 P. 2d 513 (Cal. 1998).

(n30)Footnote 30. See, e.g., Caravan Prods. Co. v. Ritchie, 259 A.2d 223, 226 (N.J. 1969).

(n31)Footnote 31. To avoid abstractors' liabilities, title companies may state in the commitment that it is a contract to insure the title as described therein and nothing more. See Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (1975) (holding that title insurance commitments could be a source of abstractors' liabilities for negligent search was overruled by statute); Southland Title Corp. v. Superior Ct., 282 Cal. Rptr. 425, 427 (Cal. 1991). Although a title insurance commitment is not an abstract because it does not attempt to summarize the entire recorded chain of title, whether title companies should have at least some of the responsibilities of abstractors is still a complex question. Parties to real estate transactions expect and believe the commitment to be a current report of the state of the title.

(n32)Footnote 32. The member companies are mainly title insurers; however, a few abstracting companies which apparently do not offer title insurance are currently members. Lawyers and other persons in the real estate industry may be admitted as associate members.

(n33)Footnote 33. The 1970 forms were substantially revised in 1984. Although the 1970 forms have been officially withdrawn by ALTA effective December 31, 1990, some title insurers were still using them in 1992. Practicing Law Institute, Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, 496 (1992). Chicago Title Insurance Co. uses the 1970 forms as the "Formerly 1970" forms.

(n34)Footnote 34. Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1988: Comparing the 1987 and 1970 ALTA Policies (1988).

(n35)Footnote 35. Practicing Law Institute, Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, 299-324 (1992).

(n36)Footnote 36. In 1991, the New York State Insurance Department directed the exclusive use of the 1990 ALTA forms with a "New York Endorsement" after January 1, 1992. New York State Insurance Department, Title Insurance, Memorandum Decision & Opinion (Nov. 19, 1991). Among other things, the New York Endorsement provides broad coverage of mechanics' liens, as well as coverage of the "gap" between the date of the policy and any later recordation date of the instrument creating the insured interest. The Endorsement does not provide full coverage for all liens and encumbrances which might attach during a "gap" period. Intervening real estate taxes, assessments, water charges and sewer rents are not covered. Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 15-16 (1994).

(n37)Footnote 37. ALTA policies are compared with CLTA policies in Lick Mill Creek Apts. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal. Rptr. 231, 233 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991).

(n38)Footnote 38. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role 3, 7 (1985).

(n39)Footnote 39. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role 3, 7 (1985).

(n40)Footnote 40. In Texas, title insurers must use forms promulgated by the Texas State Board of Insurance. Tex. Ins. Code Ann., art. 9.07, ch. 9, Texas Title Ins. Act.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.02

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.02 Nature of Title Insurance.

[Go To Supp]

§ 93.02(a) Introduction.

Title insurance is a unique form of insurance because generally it does not insure against future risks but only against those in existence at the time the policy is issued. Another unique feature of title insurance is that the coverage continues indefinitely, and only a single premium is paid. Another different feature of title insurance is that the insurer, upon notification of the loss, frequently has the option of curing the title defect causing the loss, in lieu of compensating the insured for the loss.

Commentators have sometimes compared title insurance with boiler insurance where inspections aimed at the elimination of risks may be of more value to the insured than the assumption of risks through the insurance coverage. n41 Title insurance is issued only after a search and examination of the title. n42 Most substantial risks disclosed by this process will be reported to the prospective insured and excluded from coverage, unless the company can be persuaded to cover them. The focus on risk elimination results in low loss ratios for title insurers. Most losses are due to either negligence in search and examination or to risks that are not readily ascertainable through searches and examinations. n43

§ 93.02(b) Contract of Indemnity.

Modern title insurance policies are contracts of indemnity and not of guaranty. n44 The title insurer as indemnitor is not obligated to take action until the insured has suffered a loss covered by the policy. The title insurer does not guarantee that the title is good, marketable, and free of defects. n45 The insurer does not agree to pay for a loss suffered because of title defects, as a guarantor would. Instead, the insurer undertakes to "make good" on losses covered by the policy. n46 When a loss occurs, the insurer may choose to make good by paying the insured for the loss, but other forms of indemnification may also be available. The insurer may indemnify the insured by clearing the title or by pursuing others who may be responsible, such as grantors who warranted that the title was free of the defect that caused the loss. n47

§ 93.02(c) The Title Policy.

There are basically two kinds of title insurance policies, owner's and loan. n48 Owner's policies are used to insure the titles to ownership interests such as fees simple or leaseholds. n49 Loan (sometimes called "mortgagees") policies insure the title to mortgages or other real property security interests. Both types of policies are divided into six parts:

(1) statement of coverage;

(2) exclusions from coverage;

(3) conditions and stipulations;

(4) Schedule A (which includes the name of insured, a description of interest insured, the date of policy, and the amount of insurance);

(5) Schedule B (which includes general exceptions, if any, in owner's policies, and special exceptions, if any, which are mainly title defects or possible adverse claims found by the insurer when searching and examining the title); and

(6) endorsements, if any.

§ 93.02(d) Construction of Title Policies.

One of the most basic principles of insurance law is that ambiguities in the policy are to be construed against the insurer. n50 Insurance contracts have been considered one-sided contracts of adhesion which tend to deny consumers the protection they expect or are led to believe that they will receive. The principle that ambiguities in a policy are construed against the insurer provides some relief to the consumers of insurance services. This rule of construction also applies to title insurance policies. n51

It may not be appropriate to apply to all title insurance policies the principle that ambiguities in an insurance policy should be construed against the insurer. While owners who purchase title insurance policies have relatively little direct input regarding the substance of ALTA owner's policy forms, n52 the lending industry has substantially influenced the provisions in ALTA loan policies and the underwriting practices of title insurers. Additionally, it is debatable whether the principle of construing ambiguities against the insurer should be applied with the same force to loan policies in which the insured is a large corporate lender, for example, if a rationale for the principle is that it serves to protect the weak from the strong by giving some relief from generally one-sided bargains. n53

§ 93.02(e) Obligation of Good Faith and Fair Dealing.

Title insurance transactions include an implied obligation to deal fairly and in good faith with the other party to a contract of insurance. An insurer who breaches this obligation may be liable in damages to the insured. n54 A title insurance company that wrongfully handles a claim may be liable in damages for bad faith breach of the policy. n55 While most of the cases dealing with this implied obligation have concerned the duties of the insurer, the insured is also obligated to deal fairly and in good faith with the insurer. Although some courts in recent years have characterized the relationship between insured and insurer as a "fiduciary" one, the relationship is normally not truly fiduciary. n56 The implied obligation of fair dealing does not by itself make the relationship between the insured and the insurer a fiduciary one. n57

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: constru! w/5 ambig! w/20 (policy or policies) and "title insurance"

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 41. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role 4 (1985). Werner states that a more current analogy may be found in environmental impairment liability insurance. Id.

(n2)Footnote 42. At one time, "casualty" title insurance was not uncommon. Casualty title insurers issued title policies without searching and examining the titles involved. In some states, conventional title insurers successfully lobbied state legislatures to prohibit the issuance of casualty insurance. Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 468-69, n.73 (1987). Of course, there is a casualty aspect to all title insurance. Title insurance usually covers certain "off the record" risks which may not be discoverable through a reasonable search and examination of the property records. And the typical policy may also cover losses caused by matters discoverable by search and examination but not reported to the insured. Finally, when permitted by applicable law, title insurers may assume known risks, usually upon the payment of an additional premium. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 1.03[2] (1994).

(n3)Footnote 43. Hidden mechanics' liens (liens that do not appear on the record at the time of a search but that may be perfected by a later recordation) have been a significant cause of title insurer claim payments. Jack Tickner, Mechanics Liens, Title News, Jan. 1976, at 40.

(n4)Footnote 44. Sattler v. Philadelphia Title Ins. Co., 162 A.2d 22 (Pa. Super. 1960). However, because of the title search and examination which normally precede the issuance of a policy, a few courts have held that a "title insurance policy is more in the nature of a covenant against encumbrances or a title guaranty." Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 1.03[3] (1994). In re Seko Inv., Inc., 156 F.3d 1005 (9th Cir. 1998) (contract of indemnity); Golden Sec. Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co., 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 442 (Cal. App. 1997) (contract for indemnity).

(n5)Footnote 45. Compare First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 793 F. Supp. 265, 270 (D. Colo. 1992) with Citicorp Sav. of Ill. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 840 F.2d 526 (7th Cir. 1988).

(n6)Footnote 46. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.3.1 (1986). In re Seko Inv., Inc., 156 F.3d 1005 (9th Cir. 1998) (contract of indemnity); Golden Sec. Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co., 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 442 (Cal. App. 1997) (contract for indemnity). Oak Park Trust & Sav. Bank v. Intercounty Title Co. of Illinois, 678 N.E.2d 723 (Ill. App. 1997) (purpose is to protect insured from possible losses through defects that may cloud title).

(n7)Footnote 47. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 1.3.1 (1986); Baum v. Colombian Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 763 S.W.2d 194 (Mo. App. 1988).

(n8)Footnote 48. The American Land Title Association promulgates separate forms for owners' and loan policies. The California Land Title Association publishes a joint protection policy which may be used to insure an owner or lender. Sheldon Rubin, Title Insurance, in 3 the American Law of Real Property § 24.02[4], [3] (Arthur R. Gaudio ed. 1991).

(n9)Footnote 49. A policy insuring a leasehold interest is sometimes referred to as a "lessee's" policy.

(n10)Footnote 50. Warren Freedman, Freedman's Richard on the Law of Insurance § 11:2[f] (6th ed. 1990). Other rules of construction from general insurance law have also been applied to title insurance policies. For a list of these rules, see Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 1.03[4] (1994).

Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Kiefer, 984 F. Supp. 984 (E.D. La. 1997) (citing Louisiana Ins. Guar. Assoc. v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 630 So. 2d 759, 764 (La. 1994) holding "if after applying the other general rules of construction an ambiguity remains, the ambiguous contractual provision is to be construed against the drafter").

(n11)Footnote 51. Lick Mill Creek Apts. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal. Rptr. 231, 234 (1991); Paramount Props. Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 83 Cal. Rptr. 394, 398 (1970). See Jerome J. Curtis, Jr., Title Assurance in Sales of California Residential Realty: A Critique of Title Insurance and Title Covenants with Suggested Reforms, 7 Pac. L.J. 1, 8-10 (1976). United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. 1999) (where title's insurer's certificate of title explicitly disclaimed liability after policy issued, the certificate could not be relied upon to provide coverage not listed in policy, especially where policy was an integrated document stating the full scope of insurer's obligations); Utting v. Commwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 676 N.Y.S. 2d 637 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998) (ambiguous exception language was insufficient to qualify as exception from coverage); First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998) (unless policy provision is deemed ambiguous, insured is not entitled to strong presumption of coverage); Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co., 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 714 (Ct. App. 1997) (title insurance construed according to law applicable to general insurance policies).

(n12)Footnote 52. Consumer influence may be expressed in policy forms approved or promulgated by state agencies or through statutory requirements.

(n13)Footnote 53. See generally Eagle Leasing Corp. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 540 F.2d 1257 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 967 (1977) (stating that the court did "not feel compelled to apply ... the general rule that an insurance policy is construed against the insurer in the commercial insurance field when the insured is not an innocent but a corporation of immense size... ." Id. at 1261).

(n14)Footnote 54. 2 Warren Freedman, Freedman's Richards on the Law of Insurance 9.1 (6th ed. 1990). Stewart Title Guaranty Co. v. Aiello, 911 S.W.2d 463 (Tex. App. 1995) (the insurer's duty of good faith and fair dealings survived the entry of an agreed judgment), aff'd in part, rev'd in part by, 491 S.W.2d 68 (Tex. 1997) (Texas Supreme Court held that the duty ended when parties signed agreement and judgment was entered by the trial court).

(n15)Footnote 55. 2 Warren Freedman, Freedman's Richards on the Law of Insurance 9.15 (6th ed. 1990). Some jurisdictions do not recognize bad faith breach of an insurance policy as an independent tort. See, e.g., Heinson v. Porter, 772 P.2d 778 (Kan. 1989). Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp., 904 F. Supp. 818 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (insurer liable for misconduct of its agent); Forman v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 (1995) (the two-year statute of limitations period on a title insurance policy was equitably tolled while the insurer took 16 months to determine whether to honor or reject a claim that was timely filed); Wainco Funding v. First American Title Ins. Co. of N.Y., 631 N.Y.S.2d 81 (1995) (insurer was prejudiced and had no liability under the policy when the insured delayed for 20 months notifying the insurer of a proceeding).

(n16)Footnote 56. William T. Barket et al., Is An Insurer A Fiduciary To Its Insureds?, 25 Tort & Ins. L.J. 1 (1989).

(n17)Footnote 57. Hassard, Bonnington, Roger & Huber v. Home Ins. Co., 740 F. Supp. 789, 791 (S.D. Cal. 1990). United States v. Barrett, 51 F.3d 86 (7th Cir. 1995) (although insurer's employee participated in misconduct, insurer could still be considered a victim).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.03

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.03 Statement of Coverage.

[Go To Supp]

§ 93.03(a) Insuring Clauses.

Most title insurance policies are issued on American Land Title Association (ALTA) forms, with the important exceptions of policies issued in California and Texas. Forms promulgated in 1970 have been revised in 1987, 1990, 1992, and 1998. n58 In response to "plain language" legislation requiring legal documents to be in "plain language" understandable to non-lawyers, in 1979 ALTA approved a short form "Residential Title Insurance Policy" for one-to-four family residences supposedly written in "plain language." n59 This "plain language" form was revised in 2000.

The coverage statements in the 1970, 1992, and 1998 forms begin by emphasizing that the coverage afforded is subject to the exclusions, exceptions, conditions, and stipulations stated in the policy. This introductory portion of the coverage statement also makes it clear that the contract is an indemnity contract. The coverage statement provides that as of the date specified in Schedule A, the insurer insures against losses or damages, not in excess of the amount of insurance, sustained or incurred due to one of the specific causes stated in the policy.

All of the forms refer to specific potential causes of loss which are covered, including title being vested other than as stated; defect in or lien or encumbrance on the title; lack of right of access; and other items. n60

§ 93.03(a)(1) Title Being Vested Other Than as Stated.

Schedule A names the insured and contains a legal description of the property and a description of the nature of the estate or interest held by the insured, i.e., fee simple, leasehold, mortgage or other interest. The statement of coverage contains the obligation of the title insurer to indemnify the insured for any loss or damage caused by the title vested in the insured being different than the title as stated in Schedule A. If the insured owns (or in the case of a loan policy, has a mortgage on) an interest which is other than as stated in Schedule A (e.g., a life estate when Schedule A states that the interest is a fee simple), then any actual loss suffered by the insured is covered unless an exclusion or exception applies. If the legal description in Schedule A is defective, this provision may obligate the insurer to indemnify the insured for any actual loss due to the defective legal description. n61 Generally, application of this provision to claims against insurers has presented courts with relatively little difficulty.

§ 93.03(a)(2) Any Defect in or Lien or Encumbrance on Such Title.

One of the coverage provisions in ALTA policies is loss or damage sustained or incurred by reason of "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on such title." The words "defect," "lien," and "encumbrance" are often used loosely and imprecisely even by lawyers and title insurers. Strictly speaking, the three words have distinct meanings.

A "defect" in title is a want or absence of something needed for perfection or completeness. n62 For example, if a person granting an option owns less land than described in the option, the option has a "defect in title," not a "deficiency in quantity," for the optionor does not have title to all of the land covered by the option. n63 A title is defective if it is void or voidable. n64

The term "encumbrance" is broader than "lien" and includes a variety of rights or interests in land (e.g., liens, easements, or restrictive covenants) which may diminish the value of the encumbered property but which are not inconsistent with the transfer of fee simple title. n65 In contrast, a "lien" is a specific type of encumbrance which secures the performance of an obligation. Liens may be voluntary or involuntary. A mortgage creates a voluntary lien. n66 Examples of involuntary liens include judgment liens, tax liens, and special assessment liens. If the obligation secured by a lien is not satisfied, the secured party has recourse against the security property either directly or by forcing its sale. n67

§ 93.03(a)(3) Access to and from the Land.

Even though lack of access to real property traditionally has not been considered to be a title defect, it can have a dramatic impact on the value of the property. n68 A survey of the property or a physical inspection may not always show whether there is adequate access. Standard ALTA policies insure against loss or damage by reason of lack of a right of access to and from the land. Whether the insured has sufficient access to the property depends on the particular facts and circumstances. n69 The title insurer does not, however, insure that the insured will have the most convenient access to the property n70 or that the access route will be physically passable. n71 The policy insures a legal "right of access," rather than "access" only. n72

In Gates v. Chicago Title Insurance Co., n73 the insured was told at the time of purchase that there was access to the property by way of a well-maintained gravel county road. The purchaser later discovered that this road was private, and its owner denied him use. As a result, the purchaser's only remaining access was by way of a road he described as a "goat path," which, from the highway to the property, was about twice as long as the private gravel road. A witness described the road or path as negotiable by foot, horseback, or four-wheel drive when the road was dry. The purchaser sued the title insurer for his loss due to lack of a right of access. Although the jury awarded the purchaser $50,000, the trial judge granted the title insurer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the appellate court affirmed. The appellate court acknowledged that the access road was a difficult one of limited usefulness. Nonetheless, the purchaser failed to make a prima facie case for recovery under the policy because he had a right of access to the property. The court stated: "A title insurance company may not be expected to investigate the physical condition of a way of legal access to the insured property to determine if it is passable." n74 The dissenting judge argued that "right of access" must be given a reasonable, rather than a strict, construction. n75

Title insurers are specialists in searching and examining records pertaining to real estate titles and normally do not evaluate the physical condition or characteristics of property. Indeed, title policies specifically exclude or except a number of matters ascertainable by physical inspection. n76 A strict construction of the Lack of Access Clause to mean legal right of access may be warranted if the focus is on the type of service provided by the title insurers. If the problem is viewed from the perspective of the consumer of the service, however, a more liberal interpretation of the policy language may be appropriate. The consumer expects that if the right of access is insured, the consumer will be able to reach the property through some reasonable means. Absent very unusual circumstances, a title insurer would be liable under the Access Clause to the insured owner of a completely landlocked parcel, even though the insured has a legal right to access the property by air using a helicopter. The decision of the Gates' court that access was adequate to preclude coverage where the property could be reached on foot, horseback, or by four-wheel drive when the road was dry, may have been defensible because the insured knew that the parcel was in rough country and fairly isolated.

§ 93.03(a)(4) Unmarketability of the Title. n77

Title insurance policies written on ALTA forms insure against the risk of loss because of unmarketability of the title. n78 The concept of "marketable" or "merchantable" title is difficult to define. The usual definitions are not very helpful in conveying an understanding of the concept. The Illinois Supreme Court defined "marketable" title as "one that persons of reasonable prudence and intelligence, guided by competent legal advice, would be willing to take and pay the fair value of the land for." n79 A better understanding of the concept can be gained by reviewing a list of the specific matters which have formed the basis of title litigation. Some seventy Illinois title marketability cases "turned on the following points: will construction, deed construction, necessary party omitted in a proceeding, break in chain of record title, mortgage, dower, lease, taxes, special assessments, judgments, claims against a decedent's estate, building restrictions, easements, encroachments, title based on judicial or tax sale, defectively executed instruments, variation in names, defect in description of realty, lack of possession by vendor, competency of the grantor, lost deed, outstanding contract of purchase, title tainted with fraud, no patent or land grant from the government, and suits pending against the vendor." n80

A title defect does not have to be a defect in fact to cloud the title and affect its marketability. Title will be clouded if the title records, a survey, or an examination of the property itself reveals facts which could reasonably provide a basis for litigation about the title. n81

Generally, defects that merely diminish the value of the property and that do not cloud its title will not render title unmarketable within the meaning of a title insurance clause insuring marketability. n82 Marketability is a legal concept, not an economic one. A defect in the property which reduces its market value without creating a cloud on title will not render the title to the property unmarketable in the legal sense. For example, lack of access to the subject property may substantially diminish its value but will not in itself render the title unmarketable. n83 In a case where the title insurer failed to report a proposed change in the grade of a street abutting the subject property, the court held that the title insurer was not liable. The proposed change appeared on a map that had been adopted by the appropriate governmental entity and that was on file in a public office at the time the policy was issued. When the change was later implemented, the insured had to have a structure on the property razed. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the insured for the expenses incurred, but the reviewing court reversed. After quoting from the policy, the court said that the policy "provisions concern themselves with defects to the title to the property or an incumbrance or lien upon the property, any one of which would cause the title to be unmarketable. These provisions do not concern any situation affecting the value of the property as distinguished from affecting the title to the property." n84

§ 93.03(b) Coverages Included in Loan Policies Only.

The four coverages discussed above are found in both owner's and loan policies. The loan policy forms contain additional coverages which are not found in the owner's policies but which are of concern to real estate secured lenders. These provisions are included in loan policies because they insure the lien of the mortgage and its priority, in addition to the state and quality of the underlying title to the encumbered property as security. These provisions are as follows:

(1) the invalidity or unenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage,

(2) the priority of any lien or encumbrance over the lien of the insured mortgage,

(3) lack of priority of the lien of the insured mortgage over certain mechanics' liens, and

(4) the invalidity or unenforceability of any assignment of the insured mortgage.

After these insuring clauses, a commitment to pay litigation costs incurred in defending the title or the lien of the insured mortgage appears on current ALTA forms. n85

The coverage for the "invalidity or unenforceability of the lien" is an agreement by the company to indemnify the insured for losses caused by the invalidity or unenforceability of the mortgage lien. A mortgage may be invalid if improperly executed, not supported by an underlying obligation, n86 or void against a person protected by a recording act. A mortgage may also be invalid or unenforceable under statutes such as usury or consumer protection laws. n87 However, such policies do not cover losses resulting from invalid notes that are evidence of the mortgage debt. n88

The coverage of the "priority of any lien or encumbrance over the lien of the insured mortgage" obviously complements the invalidity coverage. In the event of default by the mortgagor, the value of the lien as security may depend on its priority in relation to other claims against the property. n89 Generally, no indemnifiable loss exists if enough value remains in the property, after satisfying the prior lien, to repay the amount due to the insured. However, if a prior lien covered by the policy causes the insured to become undersecured, the insurer may be obligated to indemnify the insured before foreclosure by clearing the title to the mortgage. n90

A "mechanic's lien" is a special statutory lien which may attain a priority over a previously attached mortgage lien. Persons furnishing labor or materials in the improvements of premises may acquire a mechanic's lien on the title to the premises. This lien secures the payment for the labor or material. The mechanic's lien can be a serious off-the-record risk because the mechanic may have some time after completion of the work to file notice of it in the recorder's office. When timely filed, the priority of the lien may relate back to an earlier date defined by the applicable statute, e.g., the date of the mechanic's contract or the date the work was commenced. As a result, the purchaser of real estate, including the mortgagee, faces the risk of a hidden mechanic's lien which may be perfected by a filing after the date of purchase which may attain priority over the purchaser's interest. While inspections of the premises for signs of recently completed work and statements of parties may provide the purchaser with some protection, title insurance provides better protection. n91

Although the coverage for losses due to certain mechanics' liens in the 1970 and 1987-1992 ALTA loan policy forms is basically the same, the specific language used in the coverage provisions substantially differs. Both policy forms provide coverage where mechanics' liens gain priority over the lien of the insured mortgage with stated exceptions. A provision in the 1970 form excepts losses where the mechanic's lien arose "from an improvement on the land contracted for and commenced subsequent to Date of Policy not financed in whole or in part by proceeds of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage which at Date of Policy the insured has advanced or is obligated to advance." The 1990 form affirmatively provides coverage for losses caused by subsequent liens "(a) arising from an improvement or work related to the land which is contracted for or commenced prior to Date of Policy; or (b) arising from an improvement or work related to the land which is contracted for or commenced subsequent to Date of Policy and which is financed in whole or in part by proceeds of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage which at Date of Policy the insured has advanced or is obligated to advance."

Under both policy forms, mechanics' liens arising out of a project contracted for or commenced after the date of policy are not covered unless financed, at least in part, by funds secured by the mortgage and advanced by the date of policy, or after that date if the insured was obligated to make them. These provisions cover losses due to record and hidden mechanics' liens in existence as of the date of policy.

Under mechanics' lien statutes, subsequent mechanics' liens which have no relation to a prior insured mortgage may gain priority over the prior mortgage to the extent that the labor or material furnished to the property enhanced its value.

A literal reading of the American Title Association Loan Policy Forms in use prior to 1960 seems to indicate that they covered such mechanics' liens. n92 Additionally, the policy forms then in use appear to have required the title insurer to defend the mortgagee in litigation brought by a subsequent mechanic's lien claimant, even though the lien had nothing whatsoever to do with the loan and the insured mortgage. Since 1960, the mechanic's lien is covered only if some portion of the work which was the basis for the lien is to be paid for by proceeds of the insured mortgage. n93 The loan policy provides no protection against the risk of subsequent mechanics' liens unless the work is financed, at least in part, by an advance made by the date of policy or an obligatory advance made thereafter.

The final additional loan policy coverage insures against "the invalidity or unenforceability of any assignment of the insured mortgage, provided the assignment is shown in Schedule A, or the failure of the assignment shown in Schedule A to vest title to the insured mortgage in the named insured assignee free and clear of all liens." n94 Many mortgages are sold by the original lenders in the secondary mortgage market. Normally, when a person purchases a mortgage, the debt and the mortgage security are assigned to the buyer. When the debt is assigned, the insurance covering the title to the security automatically extends to the assignee of the debt. n95 No amendment or endorsement of the policy is necessary. In fact, the insurer does not even have to be notified of the assignment. However, there is a serious risk that the assignment itself could be invalid and that risk is not covered unless the assignment is shown in Schedule A. Therefore, when the insured mortgage is assigned, it is customary for the policy to be amended or endorsed to show the assignment.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "vested other than as stated" w/50 title defect w/5 lien w/5 encumbrance w/20 land w/20 title unmarketability w/20 title

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 58. The 1970 forms have been officially withdrawn by ALTA but some title insurers continued to use them.

(n2)Footnote 59. A copy of this form may be found in ABA, Section of Real Property Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role (1985) 96.

(n3)Footnote 60. The 1998 form lists 29 categories of covered risks.

(n4)Footnote 61. See, e.g., Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Treat, 810 S.W.2d 953 (Ark. 1991) (upholding lower court's decision that title was vested otherwise than the title insured where the legal descriptions in both Schedule A and the insured mortgage, erroneously included 32.5 acres which did not belong to the mortgagors, which resulted in the mortgage not attaching to 32.5 acres of land that the mortgagors did own and which the parties had intended to encumber). See also Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 241 N.W.2d 434 (Wis. 1976); Rancher's Life Ins. Co. v. Banker's Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 190 So. 2d 897 (Miss. 1966). See, e.g., Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.04 (1994).

(n5)Footnote 62. Devlin v. Bowden, 641 P.2d 1094, 1098 (N.M. 1982). See, e.g., Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.05 (1994). Linder v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Cal., Inc., 647 N.E.2d 37 (Ind. App. 1995) (the insured was not entitled to the full amount of the policy because the defect was not entirely removed and the insured therefore did not receive title to the extent insured by the policy).

(n6)Footnote 63. Lawton v. Byck, 124 S.E.2d 369, 372-373 (Ga. 1962). See, e.g., Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.05 (1994).

(n7)Footnote 64. See, e.g., Livingston v. American Title & Ins. Co., 133 So. 2d 483 (Fla. App. 1961). See, e.g., Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.05 (1994).

(n8)Footnote 65. Compare Hopkins v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 514 So. 2d 786 (Ala. 1987) (holding that a release agreement under which a developer agreed to waive all rights for itself and its successors in title against the city for damages caused by flooding was held to be an "encumbrance" within the meaning of a title policy) with Lick Mill Creek Apts. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal. Rptr. 231 (1991) (holding that the presence of hazardous material on the land did not create an "encumbrance" even though federal and state agencies might impose liens on the property for violations of environmental laws).

(n9)Footnote 66. Personal Fin. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 678 So. 2d 463 (Fla. App. 1996) (no insurer defense to claim based on forged mortgage).

(n10)Footnote 67. The largest number of cases construing this clause involve liens for taxes or special assessments. In the typical case, a unit of local government authorizes a public improvement. At the time the title policy is issued, the improvement might have been completed or the governing body may have authorized an assessment against the subject property. The problem occurs when no notice appears in the public real estate records. The question presented is whether there was a "lien or encumbrance" in existence as of the date of the policy. Most courts hold that no lien or encumbrance existed at that time. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.05 (1994).

(n11)Footnote 68. See, e.g., L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co., 418 N.E.2d 650 (N.Y. 1981), where property worth at least $600,000 was rendered valueless by lack of access.

(n12)Footnote 69. In a case where the subject property was located adjacent to a heavily traveled street in a densely developed commercial district, pedestrian access only was insufficient and vehicular access was intended by the parties. Marriott Fin. Servs. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 217 S.E.2d 551 (N.C. 1975). "We hold that when an insurer contracts to insure against lack of access to property, it must be deemed to have insured against the absence of access which, given the nature and location of the property, is reasonable access under the circumstances. In the instant case mere pedestrian access cannot be deemed to be reasonable access."Id. at 565 (emphasis in original).

(n13)Footnote 70. MacBean v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 405 A.2d 405, 408 n.2 (N.J. Super. 1979). Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co., 984 S.W.2d 47 (Ark. App. 1998) (no coverage for insureds -- lack of access easement to landlocked riverfront property for recreational use).

(n14)Footnote 71. Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo. App. 1991); Title & Trust Co. v. Barrows, 381 So. 2d 1088 (Fla. App. 1979).

(n15)Footnote 72. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 2.2.4 (1986).

(n16)Footnote 73. 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo. App. 1991).

(n17)Footnote 74. Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10, 12 (Mo. App. 1991).

(n18)Footnote 75. Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10, 12 (Mo. App. 1991) (dissenting opinion) (citing Marriott Fin. Servs. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 217 S.E.2d 551 (N.C. 1975)).

(n19)Footnote 76. See, e.g., 1987 ALTA Owner's Policy Form Exclusions 1(a)(ii) & (iv), in Practicing Law Institute, Supplemental Materials For Title Insurance 1988; Comparing THE 1987 AND 1970 ALTA Policies 8 (1988). Title policies commonly exclude matters that would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises. See Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208, 216 (N.J. 1989).

(n20)Footnote 77. The 1970 ALTA Owner's Policy, Form A, did not include this coverage.

(n21)Footnote 78. "Marketable" and "merchantable" are usually used as synonymous terms. Sometimes "merchantable title" is used to refer to a title which can be readily transferred.

(n22)Footnote 79. Eggers v. Busch, 39 N.E. 619, 620 (Ill. 1895). See John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 174-177 (3d ed. 1989); 3 american Law of Property §§ 11.48 et seq. (A. James Casner ed. 1952).

(n23)Footnote 80. John E. Cribbet, et al., Cases and Materials on Property 1062-1063 (6th ed. 1990).

(n24)Footnote 81. In 1987, ALTA added the following definition of "unmarketability of title" to its policy forms: "an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land, not excluded or excepted from coverage, which would entitle a purchaser of the estate or interest described in Schedule A to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title." ALTA 1992 Owner's And Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation (1)(g). The words "alleged or apparent" make it clear that those who are insured do not have to get a judgment that their title is unmarketable, before being entitled to title defense or indemnification from the title insurance company. Furthermore, the language "which would entitle a purchaser ... to be released" indicates that the coverage may apply even if there is no actual purchase contract from which a purchaser would be entitled to escape. "It would seem to be sufficient for the insured to establish the existence of a lien, encumbrance or other title defect 'which would entitle' any purchaser to rescind the contract on the basis that the title is unmarketable." Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.06 (1994).

(n25)Footnote 82. Joel E. Smith, Annotation, Defects Affecting Marketability of Title Within Meaning of Title Insurance Policy, 18 A.L.R. 4th 1311, 1313 (1982). See Jerome J. Curtis, Jr., Title Assurance in Sales of California Residential Realty: A Critique of Title Insurance and Title Covenants with Suggested Reforms, 7 Pac. L.J. 1, 10 (1976) for criticism of this position. According to Professor Curtis, "the average purchaser of a title policy would not be impressed with the subtle distinction" between marketability of the title and marketability of the land, and that any ambiguity about the meaning of the "marketability" in a title policy "should have been resolved in favor of the insured." Id.

(n26)Footnote 83. Sinks v. Karleskint, 474 N.E.2d 767 (Ill. App. 1985).

(n27)Footnote 84. Sperling v. Title Guar. & Trust Co., 236 N.Y.S. 553, 557 (1929). See also Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co., 984 S.W.2d 47 (Ark. App. 1998) (where insured could not obtain easement to access landlocked riverfront property for recreational use, there was no coverage because insureds were aware of problem when purchasing property, and the problem was reflected in lower purchase price); Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. 1998) (policy covers right of owner to assert ownership against others even if property has no value); Logan v. Barretto, 675 N.Y.S.2d 102 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998) (county department of health issued notices of non-compliance due to sewage discharges on property; notices were not deemed to render title unmarketable).

(n28)Footnote 85. In addition to general loan policy forms, ALTA has promulgated leasehold loan and construction loan policy forms. A construction loan form is compared to a general loan policy form in Edmund T. Urban, Future Advances and Title Insurance Coverage, 15 Wake Forest L. Rev. 329 (1979).

(n29)Footnote 86. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 2.1 (2d ed. 1985).

(n30)Footnote 87. See discussion of exclusion of losses due to invalidity caused by usury or consumer credit protection or truth in lending laws, infra § 93.04(g). See also Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.08 (1994).

(n31)Footnote 88. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.08 (1994).

(n32)Footnote 89. In the days prior to the "deregulation" of the banking industry, statutes and regulations generally limited commercial banks to making first mortgage loans. These laws also addressed acquiring a lien with first priority for that reason.

(n33)Footnote 90. Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Goldome Credit Corp., 494 So. 2d 10 (Ala. 1986). Obtaining less than the full amount owed at foreclosure is the most common but not the exclusive way to establish a loss attributable to a prior lien. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 5.08 (1994).

(n34)Footnote 91. See generally Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 12.4 (2d ed. 1985).

(n35)Footnote 92. The coverage provision in the ALTA 1946 Loan Policy Form stated that "[a]ny statutory lien for labor or material which now has gained or hereafter may gain priority over the lien upon said land of said mortgage or deed of trust... ." was covered. Ray E. Sweat, Obligatory Advances: Mechanics' Liens and the 1987 ALTA Loan Policy, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1988; Comparing The 1987 And 1970 ALTA Policies 389, 392 (1988).

(n36)Footnote 93. Ray E. Sweat, Obligatory Advances: Mechanics' Liens and the 1987 ALTA Loan Policy, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1988; Comparing The 1987 And 1970 ALTA Policies 393 (1988).

(n37)Footnote 94. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form Insuring Clause 8.

(n38)Footnote 95. See § 93.05(a)(1)(A), infra.§ 93.04. Exclusions from Coverage.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.04

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.04 Exclusions from Coverage.

[Go To Supp]

The exclusions from coverage are after the insuring clauses in the ALTA title insurance policies. These provisions limit the applicability of the insuring clauses. n96 Since title insurance is a non-casualty form of insurance, certain risks which can only be insured on a pure casualty basis are excluded from coverage. These risks include matters that the insurer cannot discover and evaluate through land title records or other readily accessible sources. n97 These matters include police power regulations, such as zoning, building, or environmental laws, n98 unless notice of a defect, lien, or encumbrance resulting from a violation of a police power regulation has been recorded at the date of policy. n99 Exercise by government of the power of eminent domain is also excluded unless notice of such exercise has been recorded as of the policy date. n100

§ 93.04(a) Matters Exclusively Known or Controlled by the Insured.

Certain matters within the exclusive knowledge or control of the insured are also excluded. These matters include defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims, and other matters "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the insured claimant... ." Generally, courts have applied this exclusion to cases where the loss resulted from the insured's deliberate, wrongful conduct. n101 While mere negligence that contributes to or causes a title defect will not bring this exclusion into play, n102 intentional, deliberate conduct will. n103 This policy language (or its plain English equivalent) has appeared basically unchanged in ALTA policy forms for many years, and a number of reported cases have construed it. n104 Most of those cases are in accord with a leading case, Arizona Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Smith. n105

In the Arizona Title case, the City of Tucson levied a special assessment on the subject property in 1964. The insured agreed to exchange certain property that he owned for the subject property. At the time the insured acquired the subject property in May 1966, approximately $13,000 remained unpaid on the 1964 assessment. The exchange contract stated that the property was to be conveyed subject to twenty first mortgages payable at "$6,756 including principal, interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the balance remaining from time to time unpaid, taxes, insurance, and assessments... ." n106 The printed form portion of the contract referred to assessments in two other places. The 1964 special assessment was not, however, specifically referred to anywhere in the agreement. The balance due and the amount of the annual payments on the assessment were not stated. The title insurance commitment (i.e., the preliminary title report) failed to mention the assessment even though it was recorded because of an admitted error by the title company employee who searched the title. The estate of the insured, after his death, sued the title company for the remaining balance of the special assessment. The jury awarded the plaintiff $13,000, and the title company appealed.

The title company argued that the loss was excluded because it was caused by a defect which was "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the Insured... ." n107 The court rejected this contention. After first referring to the rule that any ambiguity in an insurance policy is to be construed against the insurer and in favor of coverage, the court said that "created" would require some affirmative act on the part of the insured in bringing about the assessment. n108 Furthermore, "the word 'suffered' is synonymous with the word 'permit' and implies the power to prohibit or prevent the lien which has not been exercised... ." n109 The court concluded that since the insured did not bring about the assessment or allow it to be brought about, he did not "create" or "suffer" the assessment. Furthermore, the insured did not "assume" the assessment because "to assume" means to agree to be personally liable on an obligation. Finally, the insured did not "agree" to the assessment because he was not a party to an agreement creating it. The court expressed doubt whether "agreed" referred to assent by the buyer in the exchange contract to accept the title with the defect. n110 The court assumed for the sake of argument that the term included such assent. The court held that actual knowledge on the part of the insured about the full extent and amount of the assessment would be required before there could be an "agreement" to the defect in the exchange contract. Because no such knowledge was proved, the exclusion did not apply.

Another exclusion excepts losses caused by defects actually known by the insured and not known to the Company, not recorded in the public records at Date of Policy, but known to the insured claimant and not disclosed in writing to the Company by the insured claimant prior to the date the claimant became an insured... . n111 This exclusion is similar in some respects to the Misrepresentation Clause found in policies used in New York and elsewhere which states, "[a]ny untrue statement made by the insured with respect to any material fact, or any suppression of or failure to disclose any material fact, or any untrue answer by the insured to material inquiries before the issuance of this policy shall void this policy." n112

The New York Misrepresentation Clause has been construed in a number of cases. n113 This clause has been interpreted to mean that the policy is not rendered void unless the insured has been guilty of intentional concealment tantamount to fraud. n114 The insured has no duty to disclose facts which are readily ascertainable from the public records. n115 A fact is construed to be "material" under this clause if it is information that might reasonably affect the insurer's decision to accept or reject the application for insurance. n116 The question is not whether the company might have issued the policy even if the information had been furnished, n117 but whether the information might be useful to the insurer in deciding whether to insure.

The ALTA disclosure exclusion has also been a subject of litigation. n118 The exclusion explicitly provides that the insured claimant has no duty to disclose facts that are recorded in the public records. The exclusion does not require disclosure of matters in the public record even if the insured claimant had actual knowledge of them. n119 The 1970 ALTA policy forms briefly defined "public records" to include "those records which by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to ... land." n120 The 1990 ALTA policy forms contain the following expanded definition: "records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without knowledge. With respect to ... [the disclosure exclusion], "public records' shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States District Court for the district in which the land is located." n121 The 1998 homeowner's form, in Definition 1.g of Conditions, defines public records simply as "records that give constructive notice of matters affecting your title, according to the state statutes where the land is located."

The meaning of "public records" in the disclosure exclusion has been discussed in a number of reported cases. A defect will be considered on the public record if notice of it appears in records which are customarily examined by title searchers. For example, a pending housing code violation lawsuit was on the public record within the meaning of the disclosure exclusion even though no lis pendens giving notice of the suit had been filed in the recorder's office. n122 The term "public records" includes more than just the records in the recorder's office. One case even held that the Federal Register was a "public record" within the meaning of a title policy definition almost identical to the one in the 1970 ALTA forms. n123 Court records are also "public records" because they are routinely searched by title insurers. n124 However, if a defect is not discovered in the course of a reasonable search of the public real estate records, it may not be of record within the meaning of the exclusion even if the defect is recorded in fact. For example, a judgment lien recorded in the judgment debtor's maiden name only was considered recorded outside the chain of title because it was unlikely that a title searcher would find the judgment lien since only the debtor's married name was used to identify her as an owner. Even though the judgment was physically present in the records, it was not considered recorded within the meaning of the exclusion because a purchaser would not have constructive notice of the lien. n125

Under ALTA form policies currently used, the insured claimant must have actual knowledge of the defect before incurring a duty to disclose it to the insurer. n126 The 1990 ALTA policy forms define knowledge as "actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of the public records... ." n127 In reliance on this definition, courts have held that constructive notice will not suffice to give rise to a duty to disclose. n128 Constructive notice also has been rejected as a basis for applying the exclusion without express reliance on such a definition. n129 Inquiry notice is sometimes considered to be a form of actual notice. By the weight of authority, inquiry notice also will not usually suffice to invoke the exclusion. A leading case Enterprise Timber, Inc. v. Washington Title Ins. Co. n130 which held that inquiry notice may be sufficient to make the disclosure exclusion applicable, apparently construed a title insurance policy that did not contain the definition of "knowledge" that appears in current ALTA form policies.

The more recent cases have rejected the view that inquiry notice may be sufficient to qualify under the exclusion for failure to disclose. n131 Generally, these cases appear to be on sounder ground. The exclusion requires "actual knowledge" not "notice." "Knowledge" and "notice" are not synonyms. "'Knowledge' is what one actually perceives while 'notice' is what the law tells us that the person has knowledge of even if it was never actually perceived... ." n132 The decisions in these cases are also supported by the principle that ambiguities in the insurance policy should be construed against the insurer. In addition to these somewhat formalistic reasons which support these recent cases, there are policy reasons which support this new view.

There is a strong modern policy that contracts should be construed to reflect the reasonable expectations of the parties. The application of the doctrine of inquiry notice to the disclosure exclusion is inconsistent with a principle reason for purchasing title insurance. Title insurance provides assurance that unknown title risks are borne by the insurer who investigated the title. This assurance is more apparent than real if a court may hold that the insured is barred from recovery because the defect would have been discovered if an investigation had been made.

On the other hand, semantic distinctions between "notice" and "knowledge" should not be carried to the point where proof is required of the insured claimant's subjective perception of the defect. Mere knowledge by the insured claimant that a party to a transaction may have engaged in "shady dealings" in the past should not trigger a duty to make further inquiries. n133 However, in cases where the insurer proves that the insured claimant actually knew of strong indications that something might be wrong with the title, application of the exclusion could be appropriate if the insured claimant did not disclose the indications to the insurer. n134 The insurer should not be allowed to escape liability where further investigation by the insured claimant reveals title defects, for it is the insurer's job to investigate the title. If the insurer proves, however, that the insured claimant had knowledge of facts which by themselves, and without further investigation, strongly pointed to a substantial probability of title defects or adverse claims, the disclosure exclusion should apply if the other requirements for applicability are satisfied. n135 Also, the "intentional concealment tantamount to fraud" standard developed in the New York Misrepresentation Clause n136 certainly should apply to exclude coverage when such conduct is proved and the relevant facts do not appear on the public record. n137

§ 93.04(b) Defect Resulting in No Loss or Damage.

The presence of a defect, lien, or encumbrance by itself does not necessarily obligate the insurer to indemnify the insured because title insurance policies are contracts of indemnity and not guarantees of good title. n138 When notified of an insured defect, the title insurance company may be obligated to clear the title but may have no immediate obligation to indemnify the insured because of a diminution of the value of the property attributable to the defect. n139

Title policies usually require the insured to suffer an "actual loss" before there is an obligation to indemnify. n140 Generally, no compensable loss has occurred until the insurer has been given an opportunity to pursue the various indemnification options that may be open to it. n141 If the insured has suffered a loss, however, and the only option available to the insurer is paying the insured, then a compensable loss has occurred unless the company has some valid defense to a claim for payment. n142

Generally, there is no actual loss unless the title defect covered by the policy reduces the value of the property or otherwise has an economic impact on the insured. n143 Where the policy insures an owner, any substantial diminution of the value of the property provides a basis for establishing a loss.

In the case of a loan policy insuring the title to a mortgagee's security interest, there is no loss unless the secured obligation is not performed and the security proves to be inadequate because of the covered title defect. n144 Policies do not insure that the loans will be repaid or that the value of the security property will not diminish because of market forces unrelated to covered title defects. The title insurer insures the title to the mortgage and agrees to indemnify the insured for losses that would not have occurred but for the covered title defect. To the extent that the inadequacy of the security is attributable to an insured title defect, there is an actual loss. n145 An actual loss appears most clearly after foreclosure occurs, when a deficiency can subsequently be attributed to a covered superior lien or defect in the title to the mortgage. An indemnifiable loss, however, can be established apart from foreclosure. If the superior lien or title defect impairs the insured mortgagee's security, the title insurer may be obligated "to make the insured good" by acting within a reasonable time to defend or clear the title. n146 An insured mortgagee may be entitled to indemnification for interest lost because the title to the mortgage failed. n147 One commentator argued that an indemnifiable loss may occur because of the mere existence of a covered prior lien. She contended that original lenders routinely sell mortgages to investors in the secondary mortgage market. The existence of a prior lien may diminish the value of the mortgage in this market. "Thus, the insured lender may experience an actual loss even where no party has commenced a foreclosure action or asserted a superior claim and the prior lien(s) have not made the lender undersecured." n148

Apparent defects appearing on the record that are not defects in fact may still be the causes of "actual losses." Sometimes a recorded adverse claim will be invalid on its face or the probability of it being a defect in fact will be very low. n149 If the recorded claim is obviously invalid, there may be a question whether the insurer should be required to indemnify the insured by clearing title or paying for the loss. One court has suggested that the insurer should not be obligated to clear a title unless the facts and circumstances of the case contain "some indicia that the encumbrance with which the policy holder is concerned is a genuine cloud upon his title." n150 Perhaps the test should be whether the adverse claim has a substantial impact on the market value of the insured interest or would serve as a reasonable basis for title litigation. Even if an experienced title examiner opines that the probability of the adverse claim being genuine is slight or non-existent, there is an economic loss if it substantially depreciates the market value of the property. The market may be uninformed or irrational in giving an obviously invalid adverse claim any credence at all, but the insured has still suffered an economic loss.

If a defect merely diminishes the value of a mortgagee's security, that alone does not establish an "actual loss" under the typical loan policy. n151 Mere diminution in market value alone may be insufficient to establish an actual loss under an owner's policy as well. Some additional event or circumstance triggering the obligation of the insurer to indemnify the insured may also be required. Generally, there should be a fairly immediate impact on the insured's rights as the owner of the property in order to trigger the obligation. Suppose that the holder of a covered adverse claim is not asserting it, n152 the insured has no immediate plans to sell the property or use it for security, and the claim does not interfere in any way with the insured's present or future use of the real estate. It is debatable whether the insured has realized an actual loss even though the adverse claim is in existence. If, in such a situation, the insurer pays the insured an amount equal to the diminution in value of the property due to the defect, the insured will receive a windfall if the defect is later extinguished, e.g., by a Marketable Title Act.

In several cases, title insurers have argued that the "no loss" exclusion barred recovery by the insured where the insured actually received less than was believed to have been purchased and described in the title policy. In these cases the title insurer argued that the insured had not suffered any loss because the insured never received the missing interests and could not lose what the insured never had. n153 The courts have rejected this argument. If the argument of the title insurance companies had prevailed, the exclusion could have barred recovery in all cases where the actual title received was less than the title represented in the title policy. Indeed, if this argument is carried to its logical extreme, the exclusion would bar recovery in cases where the insured suffered a complete failure of title on the basis that the insured never received anything and had therefore lost nothing. A New York court articulated perhaps the best response by stating, "[t]he word 'loss' is a relative term. Failure to keep what a man has or thinks he has is a loss... . To say that when a defect subsequently develops he has lost nothing and, therefore, can recover nothing, is to misinterpret the intention both of the insured and the insurer... ." n154

Cases where the insured received less than what the insured believed was purchased and insured are distinguishable from situations where the insured received what was bargained for but where the policy, usually through mistake, described and insured a larger interest. If the insured received what was bargained for, the insured has suffered no compensable loss where an erroneous legal description in the deed and title policy included a greater amount of property than the insured actually received. n155 However, the loss of use or of rental value of property during litigation of a claim that the property was included in the descriptions in the deed and title policy through fraud or mistake was held to be a compensable loss. n156 Also, the expense of defending the insured's apparent interest in litigation over such an erroneous description may also be compensable. n157

The title insurer should not be liable simply because the legal description in the title policy erroneously included land or interests that the insured did not in fact receive where the insured did not expect and was not entitled to receive them. The basic insuring clause, however, provides coverage where "[t]itle to the estate or interest described in Schedule A ... [is] vested otherwise than stated therein... ." If the insured did not know that the description in Schedule A was erroneous and did not contribute to the error, it should be appropriate for the insurer to indemnify the insured for economic losses, such as litigation expenses, attributable to the error. The legal description and the statement of ownership in Schedule A is what the company undertakes to insure. Where the description is erroneous, the insurer undertakes to indemnify the insured for losses attributable to the error unless the insured is responsible for them.

§ 93.04(c) Defects That Attach or Are Created After the Policy Date.

Title insurance is a unique form of insurance because it provides coverage for losses due to title risks in existence at the time the policy is issued. Losses due to defects, liens, or encumbrances that come into existence after the policy date are generally not covered. The exclusion of losses due to defects, liens, or encumbrances attaching after the date of policy emphasizes and amplifies the statement on the coverage page that the insurance is as of date of policy shown in Schedule A.

Most cases concerning whether a lien or encumbrance existed at the date of the policy involve a common set of facts: A local government authorizes a public improvement, to be financed by future assessments against the benefited property. The improvement may be completed or bonds to finance it may be issued before any assessments are made. At the date the title insurance policy is issued, no lien in fact exists. Under the applicable statutes, a lien to secure the payment of the assessment will not attach until some official action is taken. The official action required might be filing the assessment ordinance with a county clerk, entering it on an assessment roll or even filing against specific property after the assessment against it is unpaid. n158 Before the official action is taken to create a lien in fact, the insured purchases an interest in benefitted property which is almost certain to be specially assessed. The title policy is issued without any mention in Schedule B or anywhere else of the high probability (almost a certainty) that the subject property will be specially assessed in the future. The insured then discovers the "inchoate" lien and claims that the policy covers the loss because a lien or encumbrance was in existence as of the date of the policy. Most of the reported cases hold that the insured is not entitled to recover because there was no "lien" as of the policy date. n159 Coverage has been denied even where the statute authorizing the special assessment is on the public record as of the policy date. n160

The "date of policy" exclusion in the ALTA 1990 loan policy form contains an exception not found in the owner's policy form: "except to the extent that this policy insures the priority of the lien of the insured mortgage over any statutory lien for services, labor or material... ." n161 This refers to provision 7 of the insuring clauses which provides coverage for certain mechanics' liens which may attach or be perfected after the date of policy. n162 The exception makes it clear that the "date of policy" exclusion is inapplicable to insured mechanics' liens even though they attach or are perfected after that date.

§ 93.04(d) Loss or Damage That Would Not Have Been Sustained If the Insured Had Paid Value.

Under the recording acts of most states, a transferee must qualify as a "purchaser for value" without notice of a prior conflicting interest to attain legal priority over the prior interest. n163 Both the 1990 owner's and loan policy forms exclude losses that would not have been sustained if the insureds had paid value for the interest insured. n164 This provision could apply where an insured purchaser suffers a loss due to a prior unrecorded interest that is valid against the purchaser because the purchaser failed to qualify for protection under the recording act. For example, if a mortgage is given to secure an antecedent debt, the prevailing but criticized view is that the antecedent debt is not "value" sufficient to entitle the mortgagee to recording act protection. n165 Donees are not entitled to recording act protection in most states because they do not pay value for their interests. This exclusion could apply to preclude coverage for a donee who suffers a loss because of a failure to qualify for recording act protection.

Under federal law, a donee takes subject to an unrecorded federal tax lien, and the exclusion could apply to preclude recovery on the title policy for any resulting loss. Unrecorded federal tax liens are not valid against a "purchaser." Federal statutes define "purchaser" as "a person who, for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, acquires an interest (other than a lien or security interest) in property which is valid under local law against subsequent purchasers without actual notice." n166

§ 93.04(e) Creditors' Rights.

In 1990, ALTA added a creditors' rights exclusion to its policy forms. n167 Generally, the creditors' rights exclusion applies to losses arising out of a transaction creating or purporting to create the insured interest which is defective under federal bankruptcy law, similar state laws, or the law of fraudulent conveyances. The exclusion would apply to cases where the transaction purporting to create the interest is held to be void or defective as either a preference under the bankruptcy law or a fraudulent conveyance. n168 It is not coincidental that ALTA adopted this exclusion following the Savings and Loan debacle and the era of leveraged buyouts of the 1980s, n169 at a time of steadily increasing claims against title insurers.

Because the creditors' rights exclusion is relatively new, there is little reported case law on it. In practice, title insurers sometimes have been willing to waive the exclusion in loan policies upon request. If a transaction presents a high risk of either bankruptcy of the insured or a fraudulent conveyance attack, a waiver will not usually be granted.

Title insurers will not grant a waiver where the mortgage was given as part of a leveraged buyout. In a leveraged buyout, the acquisition of a corporation or its assets may be financed by a loan secured by the assets of the acquired corporation. n170 A mortgage on the real estate given to secure such a loan may be found to be part of a fraudulent transfer. n171 The mortgage can be vulnerable to such an attack because the money obtained through the loan does not remain with the borrower corporation but is paid to those bought out, frequently leaving the borrower corporation assets depleted or even insolvent.

Title insurers may also refuse to waive the exception when the mortgage is given to secure an antecedent debt because such a mortgage is vulnerable to attack as a preference under the bankruptcy law since the creditor does not extend any new money or other value. n172 It is also possible that a mortgage given to secure an antecedent debt may also be deemed a fraudulent conveyance under federal or state law.

§ 93.04(f) Unenforceability of the Lien of the Insured Mortgage Because of Failure to Comply with Applicable "Doing Business" Laws.

The 1990 ALTA loan policy form excludes losses caused by "[u]nenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage because of the inability or failure of the Insured at Date of Policy, or the inability or failure of any subsequent owner of the indebtedness, to comply with the applicable doing business laws of the state in which the land is situated." n173 Foreign corporations must qualify under a state's "doing business" laws to conduct intrastate business. n174 These laws generally require the filing of documents disclosing certain information along with a copy of the articles of incorporation and a designation of a resident agent for service of process. n175 There are various sanctions for failing to comply with these laws, including disability of the foreign corporation to sue in the state's courts generally or on contracts made within the state. n176 If a foreign corporation mortgagee has failed to comply with the "doing business" laws of the state in which the real estate is located, the mortgage lien may be unenforceable. Under the "doing business" exclusion, the mortgagee will not be covered for any loss attributable to the unenforceability of the mortgage lien. This exclusion is reasonable because compliance with "doing business" laws is almost entirely within the control of the insured foreign corporation mortgagee. While non-compliance may be ascertainable from public records maintained by state officers or county recorders, n177 it is not customary for title searchers to search and examine these particular records. n178 Furthermore, it is not unreasonable to place the risk of loss due to non-compliance on a corporate mortgagee, since that is the one who failed to comply.

§ 93.04(g) Invalidity or Unenforceability of Mortgage Lien Because of Usury or Consumer Credit Protection or Truth in Lending Laws.

The ALTA 1992 Loan Policy excludes losses caused by the "[i]nvalidity or unenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage, or claim thereof, which arises out of the transaction evidenced by the insured mortgage and is based upon usury or any consumer credit protection or truth in lending law." n179 The 1970 loan policy form had no such exclusion; however, losses due to unenforceability of the mortgage due to these laws were excepted in the insuring clauses. n180 Title insurers took the position that these causes of invalidity should be excepted because it was the responsibility of the lender to ensure that these laws were not violated. The lending industry was not pleased with these exceptions, especially the one concerning usury laws because of the unclear state of usury laws in some jurisdictions. The lenders have been successful in getting title insurers to remove these exceptions in some instances, usually by means of an endorsement to the policy. n181

The exclusion has been held to apply only when the insured was found guilty of knowledgeable and intentional wrongdoing. n182 While courts have held that an assignee of a mortgage will not be imputed to have knowledge of the assignor's violation of truth in lending laws, assignees should request a nonimputation endorsement from the title insurer. Such an endorsement insures against the risk that violations of usury or consumer protection laws will be imputed to the assignee. n183

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "created, suffered, assumed or agreed" "known to the insured claimant" "public records" w/15 ("constructive notice" or "actual knowledge" (usury or "consumer protection" or "truth in lending") w/50 "title insurance"

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 96. Oscar Beasley, Special Forms of Coverage, in A.B.A., Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 19, 20 (James M. Pedowitz ed. 1985). Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 52 F.3d 1575 (11th Cir. 1995) (no coverage for challenges to collectability of the underlying debt); Somerset Sav. Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 649 N.E.2d 1123 (Mass. 1995) (no coverage for statutory restriction on use of the property).

(n2)Footnote 97. Peoples Bldg. & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., No. 10569, 1988 Ohio App. LEXIS 2782 (Ohio App. July 5, 1988).

(n3)Footnote 98. The 1970 ALTA policies were amended in 1984 to expressly exclude the effect of any law, statute or regulation pertaining to environmental protection unless notice of a violation has been recorded. This exclusion was also included the 1990 policy forms. See 1990 ALTA Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Exclusion 1(a). See Timothy G. Hayes & William J. Dinkin, Environmental Liability in Real Property Transactions, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 349 (1989) (discussing liabilities which may be incurred in real estate transactions due to environmental laws). Aldrich v. Hawrylo, 656 A.2d 1304 (N.J. Super. 1995) (police power exclusion applies to loss caused by setback requirement).

(n4)Footnote 99. Limited zoning coverage may be offered in an endorsement to the policy. Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. 1998) (environmental buffer zone created by municipal zoning ordinance fell under exclusion where there was no recorded notice of enforcement or notice of violation or ordinance).

(n5)Footnote 100. In addition to excluding certain risks from coverage that cannot be discovered through an examination of land title records, the language of these policies also eliminates certain title defects for which the insured bears at least some responsibility. Such exclusions supplement other policy provisions by denying coverage where the insured has suffered no loss or damage. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.01 (1994).

(n6)Footnote 101. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 27 (James M. Pedowitz ed. 1985). Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Cal. v. FFCA/IIP 1988 Property Co., 898 F. Supp. 633 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (coverage precluded by defects created by insured); Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 911 P.2d 209 (Mont. 1996) (exclusion for loss created by insured applied).

(n7)Footnote 102. Title Ins. Corp. v. Wagner, 431 A.2d 179 (N.J. Super. 1981); Keown v. West Jersey Title & Guar. Co., 371 A.2d 370 (N.J. Super. 1977).

(n8)Footnote 103. Proof of an insured's mere knowledge of prior encumbrances will not establish that the insured "agreed" to them as defects. It must be proved that the insured "agreed" that its interest would be subordinate to the prior encumbrances. Taussig v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 171 F.2d 553 (7th Cir. 1948). Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995); Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 911 P.2d 209 (Mont. 1996).

(n9)Footnote 104. Most of these cases are discussed or cited in Joel E. Smith, Annotation, Title Insurance: Exclusion of Liability for Defects, Liens, or Encumbrances Created, Suffered, Assumed, or Agreed to by the Insured, 87 A.L.R.3d 515 (1978).

(n10)Footnote 105. 519 P.2d 860 (Ariz. App. 1974).

(n11)Footnote 106. Arizona Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Smith, 519 P.2d 860, 862 (Ariz. App. 1974).

(n12)Footnote 107. Arizona Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Smith, 519 P.2d 860, 862 (Ariz. App. 1974).

(n13)Footnote 108. In another case, "created" in the title policy was construed to mean conscious, deliberate causation. Hansen v. Western Title Ins. Co., 33 Cal. Rptr. 668 (1963). Most of the cases are in accord and hold that "created" means that the defect must be caused by the deliberate or conscious action of the insured. See, e.g., Safeco

Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 172 Cal. Rptr. 248 (1981); Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 209 A.2d 640 (N.J. Super. 1965).

(n14)Footnote 109. Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Smith, 519 P.2d 860, 863 (Ariz. App. 1974). Other courts have also adopted this interpretation of "suffer." E.g., Bourland v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 627 S.W.2d 567 (Ark. App. 1982).

(n15)Footnote 110. Several cases have accepted this interpretation. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Minneapolis v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 572 F.2d 155 (8th Cir. 1978).

(n16)Footnote 111. The duty to disclose is on the "insured claimant." An "insured claimant" may be a person other than the insured named in the policy (usually in Schedule A). Even if the named insured had knowledge of the defect which was not disclosed to the insurer, the insured claimants, who were different from the insured, were not precluded from recovery where the mortgage was assigned to them and they had no knowledge of the defect. Southern Title Ins. Co. v. Crow, 278 So. 2d 294 (Fla. App. 1973).

(n17)Footnote 112. New York Board of Title Underwriters Form 100E, Condition 9. ALTA, California and Texas policy forms contained the quoted exclusion but no Misrepresentation Clause similar to the one used in New York.

(n18)Footnote 113. These cases are discussed in Wanda Ellen Wakefield, Annotation, Misrepresentation or Concealment by Insured or Agent Avoiding Liability by Title Insurer, 17 A.L.R.4th 1077 (1982).

(n19)Footnote 114. L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co., 418 N.E.2d 650 (N.Y. 1981).

(n20)Footnote 115. L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co., 418 N.E.2d 650 (N.Y. 1981). See also Dinges v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 485 N.E.2d 944 (Ill. App. 1982).

(n21)Footnote 116. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939).

(n22)Footnote 117. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939).

(n23)Footnote 118. Indeed, this has been one of the most litigated title insurance policy provisions. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.05 (1994).

(n24)Footnote 119. Cameron v. Benson, 643 P.2d 1360, 1365 (Or. App. 1982), rev'd on other grounds, 664 P.2d 412 (Or. 1983); Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 242 N.W.2d 434, 438 (Wis. 1976) (dictum).

(n25)Footnote 120. ALTA 1970 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation 1(f).

(n26)Footnote 121. ALTA 1990 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation 1(f).

(n27)Footnote 122. Radovanov v. Land Title Co. of Am., 545 N.E.2d 351 (Ill. App. 1989).

(n28)Footnote 123. Hahn v. Alaska Title Guar. Co., 557 P.2d 143 (Alaska 1976). In the 1990 forms, the Federal Register would not be a "public record" because it is not established under state statutes.

(n29)Footnote 124. Radovanov v. Land Title Co. of Am., 545 N.E.2d 351, 355 (Ill. App. 1989)

(n30)Footnote 125. Ball v. Vogtner, 362 So. 2d 894 (Ala. 1978)(dictum).

(n31)Footnote 126. Zions First Nat'l Bank v. National Am. Title Ins. Co., 749 P.2d 651, 654 (Utah 1988).

(n32)Footnote 127. ALTA 1990 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation 1(c); the 1970 policy forms contained a similar definition. ALTA Standard Loan Policy Revised - 1946, Condition and Stipulation 2 has a similar definition of "knowledge," but it applies only to the duty to notify the company of the assertion of an adverse claim against the title after the policy has been issued. This policy form does not have an "Exclusions" section. However, Condition and Stipulation 8 provides, among other things, that the Company will not be liable for losses due to defects in existence "at the date of this Policy and known to the Insured claiming such loss or damage ...but not known to The Company or disclosed to it in writing by the Insured." No exception is made for losses due to defects which are on the record. The 1998 homeowner's form refers simply to "things about which you have actual knowledge." Definition 1.b of Conditions.

(n33)Footnote 128. See, e.g., International Charter Mtg. Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 538 F. Supp. 1154, 1157 (D.P.R. 1982). See also Jesko v. American-First Title & Trust Co., 603 F.2d 815, 819 (10th Cir. 1979). In Jesko, the insured claimant made some inquiries which might have revealed the adverse claim if they had been more vigorously pursued. Although the court said that the claimant "could have done more to discover" the adverse claim, the law did not require him to do more. Id. The court did not rely on any definition of "knowledge" in the policy which excluded forms of constructive notice.

(n34)Footnote 129. Zions First Nat'l Bank v. National Am. Title Ins. Co., 749 P.2d 651, 654 (Utah 1988).

(n35)Footnote 130. 457 P.2d 600 (Wash. 1969).

(n36)Footnote 131. International Charter Mtg. Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 538 F. Supp. 1154, 1157 (D.P.R. 1982); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Fed. Sav. Bank & Trust, 744 F. Supp. 778 (E.D. Mich. 1990); Peoples Bldg. & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., No. 10569, 1988 Ohio App. LEXIS 2782 (Ohio App. July 5, 1988); Zions First Nat'l Bank v. National Am. Title Ins. Co., 749 P.2d 651, 654 (Utah 1988).

(n37)Footnote 132. Peoples Bldg. & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., No. 10569, 1988 Ohio App. LEXIS 2782 (Ohio App. July 5, 1988). The Ohio court's analysis was based on the work of John Norton Pomeroy.

(n38)Footnote 133. International Charter Mtg. Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 538 F. Supp. 1154 (D.P.R. 1982).

(n39)Footnote 134. If the insured claimant knew enough to adopt a "don't tell me, I don't want to know" stance, it would seem fair to require the insured to disclose what the insured in fact knew to the title company. Enterprise Timber, Inc. v. Washington Title Ins. Co., 457 P.2d 600, 602 (Wash. 1969).

(n40)Footnote 135. In Peoples Bldg. & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 534 N.E.2d 357 (Ohio 1988), the insured was an experienced banker who was previously defrauded by a wrongdoer. Later, the banker extended additional credit to the wrongdoer on the security of a forged mortgage. The wrongdoer told the banker that the owners of the property could not appear at the closing because of their vacation plans. The banker was persuaded to give the wrongdoer unsigned mortgage documents for execution by the owners "at some unknown location south of town." It is difficult to believe that the banker did not at least suspect the possibility of forgery unless he was suffering from some mental infirmity at the time which is not disclosed in the court's opinion. The banker did not disclose any of these suspicious circumstances to the title company. The signatures obtained later were found to be forged and, as a result, the mortgage was worthless as security. A majority of the court held that the disclosure exclusion did not apply to bar recovery because it was not proved that the banker had actual knowledge that the mortgage might be void or defective. The dissenting justice argued that "Even in criminal cases, which require proof beyond a reasonable doubt, the proof of the element of knowledge is frequently dependent upon attending facts and circumstances... ." While it was not proved that the banker actually knew that the mortgage was forged, the circumstances known to the banker pointed to that possibility.

(n41)Footnote 136. L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co., 418 N.E.2d 650 (N.Y. 1981); Wanda Ellen Wakefield, Annotation, Misrepresentation or Concealment by Insured or Agent Avoiding Liability by Title Insurer, 17 A.L.R.4th 1077 (1982).

(n42)Footnote 137. See Conway v. Title Ins. Co., 277 So. 2d 890 (Ala. 1973), where the conduct of the insureds met this standard.

(n43)Footnote 138. Sattler v. Philadelphia Title Ins. Co., 162 A.2d 22 (Pa. Super. 1960). Bear Fritz Land Co. v. Kachemak Bay Title Agency, Inc., 920 P.2d 759 (Alaska 1996).

(n44)Footnote 139. Sattler v. Philadelphia Title Ins. Co., 162 A.2d 22 (Pa. Super. 1960). Bear Fritz Land Co. v. Kachemak Bay Title Agency, Inc., 920 P.2d 759 (Alaska 1996). Hatch v. First American Title Ins. Co., 895 F. Supp. 10 (D. Mass. 1995) (coverage precluded if defect was cleared by litigation within a reasonable time).

(n45)Footnote 140. In re Seko Inv., Inc., 156 F.3d 1005 (9th Cir. 1998) (no duty to pay benefits absent a "loss").

(n46)Footnote 141. In re Seko Inv., Inc., 156 F.3d 1005 (9th Cir. 1998)

(n47)Footnote 142. Davis v. Stewart Title Guar. Co, 726 S.W.2d 839 (Mo. App. 1987).

(n48)Footnote 143. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Kidd, 349 S.E.2d 225 (N.C. App. 1990), the insureds were held to have suffered no actual losses where the insured purchaser and insured purchase money mortgagee/ovendor agreed that the purchaser's note was for $650,000.00 "or such proportionate amount as her [the vendor's] ultimate interest in property may bear to 100% with such payment to occur upon final clearing of title." Even though the title policy failed to report the existence of liens and encumbrances which clouded the title, the purchaser suffered no loss because it received what it bargained for and was obligated to pay for no more. The mortgagee/vendor suffered no loss, because she was entitled to payment only to the extent the title proved to be clear. On the other hand, there may be a loss where the policy insured that the customer was receiving more that she or he actually received. Where the property actually received is worth less than the amount insured, there may be a loss. In other words, a failure to receive what a person thinks she or he has received may be a compensable loss. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939). While it may not be logical to say that a person has lost what she or he never had in the first place, this result is sensible in the context of the service provided by title insurers to their customers.

(n49)Footnote 144. Falmouth Nat'l Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 920 F.2d 1058 (1st Cir. 1990); McHenry Sav. Bank v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 540 N.E.2d 357 (Ill. App. 1989). See, e.g., Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 912 (Cal. App. 4 Dist. 1993), aff'd, review denied by, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 374 (Cal. App. 4th. 1997).

(n50)Footnote 145. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939).

(n51)Footnote 146. Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Goldome Credit Corp., 494 So. 2d 10 (Ala. 1986).

(n52)Footnote 147. McHenry Sav. Bank v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 540 N.E.2d 357 (Ill. App. 1989).

(n53)Footnote 148. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.06 (1994).

(n54)Footnote 149. For example, the holder of a recorded easement of right of way may purport to grant an identical right of way without giving up her or his interest. Such an easement on an easement may be obviously void. If the obviously void conveyance is recorded, it should not be considered as creating a title defect. See Myers v. Berven, 137 P. 260 (Cal. 1913); Galletly v. Bockius, 82 P. 1109 (Cal. 1905); Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (1975). The precedential value of Jarchow in California was greatly eroded by subsequent cases and legislation. See Southland Title Corp. v. Superior Ct., 282 Cal. Rptr. 425 (1991).

(n55)Footnote 150. Southland Title Corp. v. Superior Ct., 282 Cal. Rptr. 425, 489 n.18 (1991).

(n56)Footnote 151. Falmouth Nat'l Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 920 F.2d 1058 (1st Cir. 1990); McHenry Sav. Bank v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 540 N.E.2d 357 (Ill. App. 1989).

(n57)Footnote 152. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. McKee, 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962), the insurer was held to have had a duty to act to clear the title where the adverse claim might have been validated by adverse possession in the absence of prompt action.

(n58)Footnote 153. Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp., 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975); Title Ins. Corp. v. Wagner, 431 A.2d 179 (N.J. Super. 1981); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939); Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 241 N.W.2d 434 (Wis. 1976).

(n59)Footnote 154. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703, 711 (1939).

(n60)Footnote 155. Booth v. New Jersey Hwy. Auth., 159 A.2d 460 (N.J. Super. 1960); Aja v. Appleton, 472 P.2d 524, 526 (Nev. 1970).

(n61)Footnote 156. Title Ins. Corp. v. Wagner, 431 A.2d 179 (N.J. Super. 1981).

(n62)Footnote 157. Polsfoot v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 614 P.2d 1173, 1178 (Or. App. 1980).

(n63)Footnote 158. See supra note 64 and accompanying text. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.07 (1994).

(n64)Footnote 159. Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 563 P.2d 979 (Colo. App. 1977); Union Realty Co. v. Ahern, 93 A.2d 84 (D.C. 1952); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 27 N.E.2d 225 (N.Y. 1940); compare Joel E. Smith, Annotation, What Constitutes a Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 A.L.R.3d 764, 766-769 (1978) with Atlanta Title & Trust Co. v. Inman, 155 S.E. 364 (Ga. App. 1931) (holding that the "inchoate" lien was an "encumbrance" within the meaning of the policy); Bel-Air Motel Corp. v. Title Ins. Corp., 444 A.2d 1119 (N.J. Super. 1981) (holding that an "inchoate" special assessment to finance a completed public improvement, although not a "lien," was a "defect" within the meaning of the policy). Citibank, N.A. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 645 N.Y.S.2d 826 (1996).

(n65)Footnote 160. Strass v. District-Realty Title Ins. Corp., 358 A.2d 251 (Md. App. 1976); Cummins v. United States Life Title Ins. Co. of N.Y., 357 N.E.2d 975 (N.Y. 1976). Title insurers usually take the position that a title policy does not cover a lien unless notice of it appeared in the real estate records normally searched by title insurers before they issue policies. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.07 (1994). These records include those found in the county recorder's office and in court files. Courts do not always agree with this position. See, e.g., Pohrer v. Title Insurance Co. of Minnesota, 652 F. Supp. 348 (N.D. Ill. 1987) vacated by, 882 F. Supp. 114 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

(n66)Footnote 161. ALTA 1990 Loan Policy Form, Exclusion from Coverage 3(d). See also the ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy, adopted Oct. 31, 2001.

(n67)Footnote 162. ALTA 1990 Loan Policy Form, Insuring Clause 7. The 1970 Loan Policy Form contains similar language in Insuring Clause 7.

(n68)Footnote 163. See § 92.14 supra.

(n69)Footnote 164. Exclusion 3(e). The 1970 ALTA Owner's Policy Form contained a similar exclusion while the 1970 ALTA Loan Policy Form did not.

(n70)Footnote 165. Gabel v. Drewrys Ltd., 68 So. 2d 372 (Fla. 1953).

(n71)Footnote 166. I.R.C. § 6323(h)(6).

(n72)Footnote 167. Bernard M. Rifkin, Title Insurance and Creditors' Rights, in Practicing Law Institute, Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, 35 (1992). In October 1992, the exclusion was modified to include language from the New York policy forms. For the New York policy language, see James M. Pedowitz, The Creditors' Rights Exclusion: Belt and Suspenders?, in Practicing Law Institute, Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, 16-17. See also Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.13 (1994).

(n73)Footnote 168. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. New York Title Ins. Co., 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (1939), where a mortgage given to secure an antecedent debt was held to be an unenforceable preference under the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

(n74)Footnote 169. Hugh A. Brodkey, Title Insurance Considerations for Lenders in Troubled Times, in American Law Institute-American Bar Association, Commercial Real Estate Financing in the 1990's: Drafting and Negotiation for Troubled Times 181-185 (1991). The savings and loan debacle is described in Paul Zane Pilzer, Other People's Money (1989). Congress enacted the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, signed by the President, on August 9, 1989, in response.

(n75)Footnote 170. See generally, Deborah A. DeMott, Directors' Duties in Management Buyouts and Leveraged Recapitalization, 49 Ohio St. L. J. 517, 519-534 (1988).

(n76)Footnote 171. See, e.g., Wieboldt Stores, Inc. v. Schottenstein, 131 B.R. 655 (N.D. Ill. 1991).

(n77)Footnote 172. Robert Kratovil, Modern Mortgage Law and Practice § 416 (1972).

(n78)Footnote 173. Exclusion 4. The 1970 ALTA Loan Policy Form had a similar exclusion. The 1990 form language makes it clear that coverage is excluded if the insured is unable to qualify to do business and consequently suffers a loss because the mortgage lien cannot be enforced.

(n79)Footnote 174. Harry G. Henn and John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations and Other Business Enterprises § 100 (3d ed. 1983).

(n80)Footnote 175. Harry G. Henn and John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations and Other Business Enterprises § 100 (3d ed. 1983).

(n81)Footnote 176. Harry G. Henn and John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations and Other Business Enterprises § 100, 101 (3d ed. 1983). An unqualified corporation may defend suits and may or may not be able to assert counterclaims. Id. The statute of at least one state, Colorado, provides for criminal penalties. See Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 866 F.2d 1284 (10th Cir. 1989).

(n82)Footnote 177. See, e.g., Ill. Ann. Stat. ch. 32, paras. 101.10, 113.15.

(n83)Footnote 178. Michael J. Rooney, The Art of Title Searching, in Ward on Title Examination 11-1 (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education 1986).

(n84)Footnote 179. Exclusion 5.

(n85)Footnote 180. ALTA 1970 Loan Policy Form, Insuring Clause 5.

(n86)Footnote 181. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 17 (James M. Pedowitz, ed., 1985).

(n87)Footnote 182. Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Title Guar. Co., 520 F.2d 1170 (D.C. Ct. App. 1975).

(n88)Footnote 183. Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law § 6.11 (1994).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.05

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.05 Conditions and Stipulations.

[Go To Supp]

The conditions and stipulations contain:

(1) definitions of terms;

(2) a stipulation which may continue coverage after the insured has conveyed the interest; n184

(3) provisions concerning the insurer's obligation to defend the title and the insured's duty to assist or cooperate in the defense;

(4) limitations on the insurer's liability;

(5) a provision subrogating the insurer to the rights of the insured claimant where the insurer has settled a claim, and, since 1987,

(6) an arbitration clause.

§ 93.05(a) Definitions.

Generally, the most important definition in the conditions and stipulations is that of the "insured." This definition has been the subject of a substantial amount of litigation. It is important because it defines the persons who are entitled to claim benefits under the terms of the title policy. As will be seen in the following discussion, those persons will not necessarily be the original purchasers of the title policies from the insurers.

Perhaps the second most important definition is that of "public records." This definition is important principally because a number of the Exclusions or General Exceptions from coverage are inapplicable if the claim or defect causing a loss appears in the "public records."

§ 93.05(a)(1) Definition of "Insured."

The term "insured" is defined differently in the ALTA loan and owner's policy forms. In the loan policy, the term includes purchasers of the secured debt, e.g., investors in the secondary mortgage market. The term as defined in the owner's policy, on the other hand, does not include purchasers of the property from the named insured. The owner's policy, however, does cover transferees from the named insured who do not take by purchase, such as heirs, devisees, and corporate or fiduciary successors.

§ 93.05(a)(1)(A) The Meaning of "Insured" in the Loan Policy.

The definition of "insured" in the loan policy form includes the insured named in Schedule A, "the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage and each successor in ownership of the indebtedness ...," n185 and any governmental agency or instrumentality which has insured or guaranteed the indebtedness. n186 Under this definition, the coverage of the policy is automatically assigned along with a transfer of the mortgage debt. The definition further provides that the insurer reserves defenses with respect to successors that it would have had against predecessor owners of the debt, unless the successor "acquired the indebtedness as a purchaser for value without knowledge of the of the asserted defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter ... covered by the policy." n187 These provisions facilitate the operation of the secondary mortgage market. When an insured mortgage debt is sold in the secondary mortgage market, no formal assignment of the title policy is required. The assignee of the debt is automatically covered. Under the 1992 ALTA loan policy form, transfer of the ownership of the debt is further facilitated because purchasers take free of prior defenses unless they had actual knowledge of the title defect or other covered risk which gave rise to the loss. It is not necessary that the assignor amend the policy or even notify the insurer to extend coverage to the assignee. However, it is possible that the assignment itself could be invalid. That risk is not covered by the policy unless the assignment is shown in Schedule A. Therefore, when the insured mortgage is assigned, the policy is usually amended or endorsed to show the assignment on Schedule A. n188

Because the definition of "insured" in the ALTA loan policy is clear and straightforward, there are relatively few reported cases concerning it. In one of them, Capital America, Incorporated v. Industrial Discounts, Incorporated, n189 an uninsured purchaser of the equity of redemption paid off the insured mortgage. It was later discovered that the property was still encumbered by some mortgages which had been fraudulently represented to the insured mortgagee as released. Apparently, the insured mortgagee's title policy did not except these prior mortgages from coverage. The purchaser argued that it was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the insured mortgagee in his title policy. If the mortgage had been assigned to the purchaser instead of being paid off, the purchaser would have been covered as a successor in ownership of the debt. The court rejected this argument, noting that there was no privity between the purchaser and the title insurer, and the definition of "insured" in the policy did not include the purchaser. n190

§ 93.05(a)(1)(B) The Meaning of "Insured" in the Owner's Policy.

The definition of "insured" in the ALTA owner's policy forms differs substantially from its counterpart in the loan policy forms and has generated a number of reported cases. While those who purchase the debt secured by an insured mortgage will be covered by the mortgage seller's loan policy, purchasers of the property itself are not intended to be covered by their sellers' policies. The owner's policy defines "insured" as "the insured named in Schedule A, and, subject to any rights or defenses the Company would have had against the named insured, those who succeed to the interest of the named insured by operation of law as distinguished from purchase including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next of kin, or corporate or fiduciary successors." n191

There is an obvious justification for distinguishing transfers by purchase from other types of transfers. At the time of purchase, it is normal to search and examine title because the purchaser wants assurance that the title conveyed will be worth the consideration given in return. When a transfer is not through purchase, the transferee gives no consideration and, as a result, has little or no economic incentive to examine the title.

The distinction between taking "by operation of law" and "from purchase" is imperfect because it implies that all real estate transfers fall under one of the two categories when, in fact, all transfers do not neatly fit under one or the other. Recipients of inter vivos gifts of real estate do not take "by operation of law"; instead, they take by the volitional acts of the donor of giving and the donees of accepting. The owner's policy definition of "insured" includes "devisees" and may exclude inter vivos donees. n192 Neither type of transferee is a purchaser; one is clearly included in the definition of "insured," and the other is not. The only real difference between the two appears to be that in one case the transfer occurs during the donor's lifetime, while in the other case the transfer occurs at the donor's death. Perhaps the taking "by operation of law" concept should be abandoned and replaced by a definition that includes as "insureds" all persons who take "other than by purchase."

Pioneer National Title Insurance Co. v. Child, Incorporated, n193 and Historic Smithville Development Co. v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co. n194 are presently the two leading cases addressing the meaning of "taking by operation of law" in the owner's policy definition of "insured." owner title policies. Both cases address the meaning of the concept of taking "by operation of law." Pioneer National describes "taking by operation of law" as "a generic term or phrase commonly used to express the manner in which rights (and/or liabilities) attach to a person by the "mere application to the particular transaction of the established rules of law, without the act or cooperation' of that person." n195 Under this approach, a distinction is made between voluntary transfers made by personal intervention and involuntary transfers made without it. Historic Smithville points out, however, that most transfers involve voluntary personal intervention: "[t]ruly automatic transfers of title to real property occur only by survivorship in a joint tenancy and through intestate succession." n196

In Pioneer National, title to the subject property had been held by Child Foundation which was the named insured in the title policy issued by Pioneer. Child Foundation conveyed the property to Henry du Pont, who with his wife, in turn, conveyed it to Child, Incorporated. The purpose of the transfers was to establish for the du Ponts a charitable deduction for income tax purposes. Child, Incorporated, later contracted to sell the property, but the buyer refused to close because of an alleged title defect. n197 Child, Incorporated, then sued the title insurer, Pioneer, claiming coverage under the policy issued to Child Foundation. Child, Incorporated, argued that it was an "insured" within the meaning of the policy because it succeeded to the interest of the named insured, Child Foundation, by operation of law. The trial court, construing the policy against the insurer, held that Child, Incorporated, was an insured because it was a corporate successor to Child Foundation. The reviewing court disagreed.

The reviewing court began its analysis by rejecting the notion that a dispute about the meaning of a policy provision which is not known to a certainty should be resolved against the insurer: "We agree that in the search for meaning, ambiguities and any uncertainty of meaning or language should be resolved against Pioneer [the insurer]. This presupposes, of course, that two or more meanings may be given to the language under scrutiny. It does not mean that because we do not know for certain what is intended that the ruling goes against Pioneer." n198 Then the court focused on whether Child, Incorporated, took from Child Foundation "by operation of law." The court decided that transfers by the voluntary act of the parties are distinct from those "by operation of law," where the transfers are automatic and occur by the application of the rules of law to the particular facts of the transactions. Since the corporations and the du Ponts made the transfers voluntarily, the court held that they were not made by operation of law and that therefore, Child, Incorporated, was not an insured within the meaning of the title policy.

The other leading case, Historic Smithville Development Co. v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co. n199 took a different approach to the policy language. Several times in its opinion, the court invoked the principle that title policies should be liberally construed in favor of the insured. The "automatic transfer" interpretation of "by operation of law" was rejected. The court observed that the policy "does not limit the terms 'insured' and 'operation of law' to strictly involuntary transferees." n200 Under express policy language, devisees, distributees, and fiduciary and corporate successors are insureds even though they do not take by strictly involuntary transfers.

The Historic Smithville case involved real estate owned by Historic Smithville Inns, Incorporated (Inns), a wholly owned subsidiary of ABC Leisure Attractions, Incorporated, a wholly owned subsidiary of the American Broadcasting Companies, Incorporated (ABC). In 1978, ABC sold Inns to a group which ultimately became known as Historic Smithville Development Co., a partnership. The group wished to purchase the assets of Inns, but ABC insisted upon a purchase of the stock of Inns. n201 At the time of the purchase, title to some of the real estate owned by Inns was being challenged in litigation and defended at the title company's expense. After the stock sale, Historic Smithville Development Co. adopted a plan for the liquidation of Inns, and the title to its real estate was deeded to the Development Co. Shortly thereafter the title insurer took the position that it was no longer obligated to defend the title litigation since the Development Co. was not an "insured" within the meaning of the title policy because it was a "purchaser." The court disagreed.

The court began its analysis by rejecting the premise of Pioneer National Title Insurance Co. v. Child, Incorporated n202 that "taking by operation of law" referred to automatic or involuntary transfers. In doing so, the court, in sharp contrast to the Pioneer court, relied on the rule that policies must be liberally construed in favor of the insured and strictly construed against the insurer. The court stated that the policy specifically referred to certain types of voluntary transfers as instances of taking "by operation of law." These transfers included taking by devise, distribution, and fiduciary or corporate succession. The court observed that truly automatic transfers of real estate occur only by joint tenancy survivorship and intestate succession and that "lands are 'purchased' whenever they are acquired by means other than descent or inheritance." n203

The sale of the stock of a corporation owning title insured real estate is not a "purchase" of the real estate by the stock buyer. The corporation is the "insured," not the stockholder. Therefore, when the Development Co. bought the stock of Inns, it did not become a purchaser of its real estate. The title insurer admitted that ABC would have been an "insured" if Inns had been liquidated instead of being sold to the Development Co. This admission was fatal to the insurer's argument that the transfer to the Development Co. of the real estate owned by Inns was a "purchase" because it was voluntary. The court concluded that "[a] transfer in dissolution to ABC is no different, in terms of voluntariness, than the transfer to the Development Co. in dissolution." n204

The insurer also made a "substance over form" argument in Historic Smithville which had some appeal. If the Development Co. members had directly purchased the real estate from Inns, there would have been no question that they were takers by "purchase" within the meaning of the policy. The title insurer argued that in substance the Development Co. was a new owner of the property which the insurer never intended to insure. The court rejected the argument observing that the policy, liberally construed, did appear to include those succeeding to the assets of a dissolved corporation:

> Here, an insurance policy must be interpreted, and our rules require a liberal construction, favoring coverage. If Chelsea's [the insurer's] policy may be so read, there is coverage regardless of the substance of the transaction. There is no reason, as a matter of law, why a title policy may not cover the successor in title to a dissolved corporation. The policy may recognize form over substance, at the discretion of the insurer. Chelsea's policy has been here construed to cover plaintiff. No more is necessary. The question of substance over form has no relevance. n205

The law on the meaning of the definition of "insured" might benefit by applying the familiar intention of the parties' standard. Since the named insured in an owner's policy almost never has input into the framing of policy provisions, realistically it is the intent of the insurer, which is assented to by the insured, that should be ascertained. Unclear, ambiguous provisions should be construed against the insurer under the usual rule of construction.

The policy provision distinguishes between transfers by "purchase" and other types of transfer. Before the listing of various specific transfers which take place "by operation of law," the words "including, but not limited to," are used. These words support a construction that the insurer intended the policy to transfer to all those who succeed to ownership of the insured interest except by purchase, e.g., donees and shareholders on dissolution of a corporation. Attempts to define taking "by operation of law" by distinguishing between voluntary and involuntary transfers are unsatisfactory, formalistic, and off the mark. The intent of the insurer as expressed in the language used is a better guide. The time of purchase is an opportune time to sell title services because purchasers giving consideration for the transfers need the services at that time for assurance of the current state of the title. The insurer intended the policy to be non-assignable to a transferee in only that situation.

As indicated by Pioneer National and Historic Smithville, the question of whether a transferor's policy covers a transferee could be complicated if one or more of the parties is a legal entity such as a corporation, trust or partnership. When an insured corporation is merged into or consolidated with another corporation, title insurance normally continues in favor of the successor because "corporate successors" are expressly referred to in the definition as those who succeed to the interest of the named insured "by operation of law as distinguished from purchase... ." n206 This is true even if the acquiring corporation obtained the insured corporation through purchasing it or its assets. Likewise, when a corporation dissolves and its assets are distributed to its shareholders, title insurance covering distributed real estate continues, because "distributees" are also expressly referred to in the policy definition of "insured." n207

Rate manuals filed with the New York Insurance Department address the situation where the insured title is transferred by a parent to a wholly owned subsidiary, by a wholly owned subsidiary to its parent, by a wholly owned subsidiary to another subsidiary in the same corporate group, or by an individual to a corporation in exchange for all of its stock. n208 In these situations, the New York rules provide that the title policy will cover the transferee where there has been "no real change in ownership." n209 However, at least one court has held that when a corporation acquires an insured title from individuals in exchange for shares of its stock, the corporation is not covered by the title insurance issued to the individuals. n210

Where the named insured is a corporation or trust, a change in ownership through a transfer of the corporate stock or the beneficial interest of the trust will not affect title insurance coverage of the corporation or trust. n211 This is true regardless of whether the transfer of stock or the beneficial interest is by purchase or otherwise and even if all of the stock or the entire beneficial interest is transferred. As a result, it is possible to structure a purchase of real estate as a stock or trust beneficial interest transfer to save title insurance premiums. The purchasers will get the benefit of the title policy covering the corporation or trust without having to pay any new or additional premium. However, it may be advisable for the new shareholders or beneficial interest owners to obtain title insurance to the date of their acquisition through a new policy or by a "date down" endorsement to the existing one. Otherwise, the existing policy only provides coverage as of the date it was issued to the insured corporation or trust. Defects, liens, encumbrances or adverse claims attaching thereafter are not covered. Additionally, in the case of stock transfers, the new shareholders may be barred from recovering on the title policy through the corporation, because former officers or directors failed to disclose material facts to the title insurer. A "non-imputation" endorsement may be sought from the insurer. Such an endorsement waives the insurer's defense based on what some prior party knew but failed to disclose to the insurer. n212

The purchase of shares in a title insured corporation should not, however, normally extend the benefits of the title policy directly to the stock purchaser. Extending the benefit of title insurance issued in the name of the corporation to its stock purchasers is contrary to the intent of the policy and could be unfair to the insurer. In structuring title policies and assessing risks, title insurers rely on their insureds being able in certain cases to attain priority over non-record claims through recording acts. n213 Purchasers of real estate may qualify for recording act protection. In contrast, purchasers of corporate stock are not entitled to recording act protection. A corporate purchaser of real estate may take subject to a non-record claim because the corporation has knowledge of it. As a taker with notice, the usual title policy exclusion where the insured has actual knowledge of the adverse claim might apply to bar recovery on the title policy by the corporation. If the benefits of the corporations's title policy are extended to its stock purchasers, the title company might be obligated to indemnify them in a case where no loss would have occurred if they had been real estate purchasers. As such purchasers, they might have avoided incurring a loss by attaining priority over the non-record claim through the recording act, but because they are stock purchasers, they will be denied recording act protection and the non-record claim retains priority over them even if they had no knowledge or notice of it. Although transfer of stock in a corporation has no effect on the title insurance issued to it, a transfer of a general partnership interest generally terminates title insurance issued to the partnership. Under partnership law, a general partnership may dissolve when a partner transfers the partner's interest in the partnership. Usually, a new partnership is formed with the transferee taking the place of the former partner. Technically, the new partnership is an entity separate from the former one. Where the former partnership was named as the insured under a title policy, that title insurance will not cover the new partnership. A leading case, Fairway Development Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., n214 held that the new partnership is a separate entity not covered by the former partnership's title policy. In Fairway Development, two of three general partners transferred their interests in the named insured partnership to the remaining partner and a third-party purchaser who formed a new partnership. The court held that the original partnership dissolved and that the new partnership was a separate entity which was not covered by the title policy. Currently, title insurers may offer what has been commonly termed a "Fairway" endorsement. This endorsement continues coverage in favor of a new general partnership formed when a predecessor named insured partnership was dissolved by the withdrawal of a former partner and the admission of a substitute. n215 By contrast, the transfer of a limited partnership interest is treated the same as a transfer of stock in a title insured corporation. The transfer does not affect the title insurance coverage. The limited partnership is not dissolved and the title insurance for the limited partnership continues in force. n216 However, withdrawal of a general partner from a limited partnership may dissolve it. A successor limited partnership may not be an "insured" under a title policy issued to the dissolved predecessor. n217

In some cases parties were entitled to enforce a title insurance policy even though the parties did not fit within the definition of "insured." In Happy Canyon Investment Co. v. Title Insurance Co. of Minnesota, n218 the title insurer was aware that the named insured was acting as the nominee for the real party in interest which was held to have standing to enforce the title policy in an action on its own behalf. In another case, although the title policy was issued in the name of a trustee, the beneficiaries of the trust were entitled to enforce directly the policy against the insurer where it was aware that the beneficiaries held equitable title. n219 In a third case, n220 the policy was issued in the name of a joint venture and a party to the joint venture was "entitled to invoke the protection of the policy." n221 Absent special circumstances, however, parties not in privity with the insurer have generally been unsuccessful in attempts to enforce title policies under third-party beneficiary or negligent misrepresentation theories. n222

§ 93.05(a)(2) Effect of Property Transfer on Meaning of "Insured"

Commentators have suggested that owners' policies should be assignable in order to eliminate repetitive title searches and examinations. n223 Implementation of this proposal would mean that the title search and examination at purchase could end at the date of the last title policy issued for the property with assurance that the purchaser would be covered for adverse claims insured against by the prior policy. Title insurers may be expected to oppose any law mandating assignability of owners' policies. A former title insurance company officer has written that owners' policies are not automatically assignable to purchasers from covered owners out of "economic necessity" because "the policies are issued for a one time premium... ." n224 In other words, if the owners' policies were assignable to purchasers, title insurance companies might receive less premium income. The balance sheets of title insurers might also be further enhanced if loan policies were not automatically assigned with the secured debts.

Some considerations weigh against making owners' policies assignable to purchasers. There is a very basic difference between owner's and loan policies. A loan policy has a built-in lifetime that expires when the secured debt no longer exists. By contrast, title insurers might reasonably object to insuring a potentially perpetual chain of owners even though the risks assumed by the insurer would be limited exclusively to those in existence at date of policy. n225 Such an objection could be met by providing for expiration of an owner's policy which had been assigned after some definite time period, such as forty years from issuance.

Another consideration weighing against assignability of owners' policies is that title insurers base their premiums on the assessment of their risk and exposure. Under current policies, a sale of the real estate terminates the seller's policy, except to the extent that the seller may be liable on deed warranties for insured adverse title matters. Making owners' policies assignable may cause title insurers to raise their premiums if they determine that assignment will increase their exposure. The reply to this argument is that most of the premium is to cover the cost of the title search and examination, while only a small portion covers the insurer's assumption of title risks. Therefore, assignability should not result in a substantial increase in premiums.

The effect of non-assignability or assignability on consumers buying homes should also be considered. Sophisticated real estate purchasers are likely to understand that the seller's title policy is a personal contract. Many consumers purchasing homes, however, may not understand that the seller's title policy does not cover subsequent purchasers. n226 While most consumers may understand that insurance contracts are normally personal, the term "title insurance" may cause confusion. The term may be misunderstood to mean that the property itself is insured when in fact the "insured" is some person who fits the definition of "insured" in the policy. n227 On the other hand, assignment of a seller's policy to a buyer may give the buyer a false sense of security, since the buyer may not realize that the coverage is as of the date of policy which may have been before serious adverse matters attached to the title.

§ 93.05(b) The Duty to Search Title and Report Adverse Matters.

Provisions in title policies attempt to limit the insurer's risk exposure. Title insurance policies specify a maximum amount of insurance, usually in Schedule A. In addition to covered litigation expenses, this amount is intended to be the maximum exposure of the insurer under the policy. n228 If the property subsequently increases in value, the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A will remain the same unless either the insured subsequently purchases additional coverage or the policy contains a provision which increases the amount of insurance when the value of the insured title increases. n229 Title policies also attempt to limit the type of damages which are compensable to title clearance, litigation expenses, and diminution in value of the subject real estate caused by the covered adverse claim or title defect. n230 Other consequential damages, even if foreseeable, are not included in the description of "losses" insured against by the typical title policy. These other consequential damages might include lost profits, lost opportunities (e.g., loss of a potential buyer), n231 delay in development plans due to the title problems, or emotional distress. n232 Exclusions, exceptions, conditions, and stipulations are intended to restrict further the insurer's exposure to risk.

In order to avoid policy limits on recovery, or the effect of policy exclusions or limitation on the insurers' liability, n233 plaintiffs have resorted to contract theories (both express and implied) and tort theories of recovery against title insurers with varying degrees of success. n234 The basic claim in most of these cases is that the insurer breached its duty to the plaintiff to search for and report adverse claims. Some of the cases involve failures to report adverse claims in the commitment (i.e., "preliminary report" or "binder"), which usually precedes the issuance of a final title policy. Others concern failures to report adverse claims in title policies.

In what appears to be a unique case, Red Lobster Inns of America, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, n235 a court held that a restaurant chain was entitled to recover lost profits caused by a delay in opening a store due to the title company's failure to report a restriction of record which prohibited use of the subject property as a restaurant site. In the Red Lobster case, the restaurant chain had entered into a national agreement with the title insurer under which the title insurer agreed to give the chain priority service in return for the bulk of its national title insurance business. The title insurer's liability for lost profits was based on this agreement and not on the title policy.

§ 93.05(b)(1) The Insurer's Duty to Search for and Report Adverse Claims.

Two of the most widely used methods of land title assurance in the United States are the attorney-abstract system and title insurance. Title insurance is now predominant, and the attorney-abstract system is declining. In some localities, title insurance is the sole method of land title assurance used. When the attorney-abstract system is used, abstractors search public real estate records and prepare abstracts of title. These abstracts are summaries of all of the instruments found, with quotations, where appropriate, of exact language used. The abstractor does not exercise discretion in deciding whether to report an instrument. n236 The abstract is then presented to an attorney for an opinion evaluating the information contained in the abstract. n237

Title insurance commitments and abstracts both provide evidence of the current state of the seller's title, but the two types of title evidence differ in an important respect. Title insurance commitments are issued after an evaluation of the data uncovered in a search. Indeed, statutes in some states require title insurers to search and examine a title before insuring it. n238 Risk elimination is a primary purpose of the search and examination. By reporting the adverse claims uncovered as special exceptions in the commitment, the insurer is providing notice that they will not be covered in any policy subsequently issued. The commitment will not report all relevant title data. It will report only matters which the insurer has determined could lead to losses which might otherwise be covered by the title policy. Title insurers may make an underwriting decision to omit reporting irregularities where the probability that they represent truly adverse matters is low. In contrast, the abstractor undertakes to find, summarize and report all of the relevant title information without exception. A title insurance commitment, therefore, is not the equivalent of an abstract of title.

While title insurance commitments are not equivalent to abstracts, they are used by parties to real estate transactions as if they were. Because of the manner in which title insurance is advertised and promoted, parties to real estate transactions frequently expect that: (1) the title search and examination conducted by the title company was performed for the benefit of the parties, n239 and (2) the parties should be able to rely on the commitment and any final title policy as an accurate report of the current state of the title. n240 Title insurers sometimes attempt to counter these expectations of the parties with express language in the commitments providing otherwise. n241

A majority of the jurisdictions that have considered the question whether the search and examination is conducted for the benefit of the insured as well as the insurer have answered in the affirmative. n242 A substantial number of cases, however, have held that the search and examination is conducted for the sole benefit of the insurer and that the insurer owes no duty to the insured beyond that which is assumed in the policy. n243 The theories used to hold the insurer liable include implied contract, negligent search and examination, and negligent misrepresentation of the state of the title. Attempts to extend the duty of the insurer to search and examine title competently to others not in privity with the insurer on the basis of third-party beneficiary contract theories have generally failed. n244

§ 93.05(b)(2) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Implied Contract.

Title insurance commitments and policies contain no express obligation on the insurer to search for and report adverse matters. n245 Some statutes impose a duty to search and report, and courts have implied such an obligation from sources such as the issuance of a commitment, a listing of title defects in the title policy or from the surrounding circumstances. n246 A number of cases have found liability because the insurer acts as a conveyancer or abstractor when it issues the commitment and thereby assumes the responsibilities of conveyancers or abstractors. n247 Basing the insurer's responsibility to search for and report defects on implied contract theories is hard to reconcile with policy provisions which attempt to limit the insurer's liability to those risks expressly undertaken and clauses in commitments which purport to terminate all liability under them when the policies are issued. n248 It is also difficult to reconcile an implied duty to search with express policy provisions which except from coverage many items that are clearly within the scope of a reasonable search. n249

§ 93.05(b)(3) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Tort.

§ 93.05(b)(3)(A) Negligent Search and Examination.

The duty of title insurers to search and report defects may be tort based. The tort theories relied on by courts in finding such a duty are general negligence or negligent misrepresentation. n250 The leading case holding a title insurer responsible for its search and examination on a pure negligence theory is Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co.

n251 In Jarchow, Transamerica, the title insurer, reported in the commitment the existence of an easement of right of way (hereinafter "the Hill easement") reserved by prior owners of the subject property, the Hills, for the benefit of other property which they retained. After the conveyance, the Hills purported to grant by a recorded conveyance an easement on their easement over the subject property to Pete and Annie Perez. The Perezes owned other property in the vicinity, and the purported easement was used for access. The court observed that reference to the Perez easement was omitted from the commitment "for some inexplicable reason." n252 Before the final title policy was issued, the title insurer was persuaded to waive the special exception for the Hill easement. Shortly after the insureds took title, they learned of the Perez easement claim. They contacted Transamerica and requested that Transamerica clear their title. Transamerica refused to take any action, taking the position that it was not obligated to take any action because the Perez easement claim was excluded from coverage. n253 The insureds then sued the Perezes and Transamerica, seeking damages and attorney fees. The insureds subsequently filed a supplemental complaint in which they sought general and punitive damages based on Transamerica's tortious failure to discover, disclose, or eliminate the Perez claim. Among the claimed torts were bad faith and negligent infliction of emotional distress. While the action was pending, plaintiffs applied to the city for site plan approval of the development they planned on the subject property. The Perezes had notified the city of the easement claim, and the approval of the site development plan was conditioned upon keeping access for the Perezes open. Because of the cloud on the title, the plaintiffs decided not to proceed with development.

The trial court found that the deed purporting to convey the easement to the Perezes was a void conveyance and was therefore excluded from coverage by the title policy. The court also found, however, that the failure to report the Perezes' claim on the commitment was negligent. Because of Transamerica's negligence, the court found that the insured had suffered $172 in actual damages and had incurred attorneys' fees of $7,184 in quieting the Perezes' claim. n254 After a jury trial on the tort claims, the jury found that each of the four plaintiffs was entitled to $50,000 in damages because of the emotional distress caused, in part, by Transamerica's negligent failure to disclose the Perezes' claim in the commitment. n255 The appellate court affirmed.

In affirming the decision that Transamerica was negligent in failing to report the recorded Perezes' claim in the commitment, the court said that the insurer breached the duty that an abstractor of title has to "list all matters of public record regarding the subject property... ." n256 Following this rather broad statement, the court then quoted from another California case in which it was stated that the abstractor must report all matters which could affect the client's interest and which are readily discoverable from the public records ordinarily examined by a diligent title searcher. n257 If the author of the Transamerica opinion really meant that a title insurer has a duty to report all matters of public record regarding the subject property, the author had a less-than-sophisticated understanding of the difference between abstracts of title and title insurance commitments or preliminary reports. A title insurer seeking to eliminate title risks from policy coverage exercises judgment in reporting possible adverse claims found in the record. The insurer may fail to except a claim of record when the insurer determines that the probability of the claim being a reasonable basis for litigation is extremely low or non-existent. n258 The title insurer may omit to report an adverse claim where the insurer decides to assume the risk of the validity of the claim. In contrast, the duty of the abstractor is a duty to summarize and report the entire record. The Jarchow court was simply wrong if it really meant that abstracts and title insurance commitments or reports are equivalent. Post-Jarchow California statutory law now makes it clear that the two types of title evidence are most certainly not equivalent in that state. n259

Southland Title Corporation v. Superior Court of California n260 made it clear that Jarchow is no longer good law in California on the question of the title insurer's liability under general negligence law for failure to report recorded adverse claims in title insurance commitments. In the Southland Title case, the title insurer failed to report a recorded flood control easement in the commitment. After the insureds took title, they discovered the easement and sued the company, seeking $100,000: the difference between the alleged value of the property without the easement ($150,000) and the alleged value encumbered with the easement ($50,000). The insureds claimed greater than the maximum amount of insurance stated in the policy, which was $92,000. The insureds alleged that they relied on the commitment in making their final decision to complete the purchase. The title insurer demurred to the insureds' complaint, the trial court overruled the demurrer, and the appellate court issued a writ of mandate to the trial court with directions to enter an order sustaining the insurer's demurrer.

The insureds argued that §§ 12340.10 and 12340.11 added to the California Insurance Code in 1981 were enacted in order to define the contractual relationship between title insurers and their customers, not to change the liability of title insurers for negligence in failing to accurately describe the title. The court rejected this argument relying on language in the statutes particularly the following language in § 12340.11: "'Preliminary report,' "commitment,' or "binder' are reports furnished in connection with an application for title insurance... . The reports are not abstracts of title, nor are any of the rights, duties or responsibilities applicable to the preparation and issuance of an abstract of title applicable to the issuance of any report." n261 While the "title insurer is abstractor" aspect of Jarchow has been laid to rest in the jurisdiction of its origin, it continues to be alive elsewhere. n262

§ 93.05(b)(3)(B) Negligent Misrepresentation of Title.

Negligent misrepresentation of title is another tort theory used to hold title insurers responsible for a failure to report title defects in commitments. Hawkins v. Oakland Title Insurance Co. n263 is a leading case using this theory. In Hawkins, the title insurer failed to report in the commitment a recorded grant of access held by the state. Relying on the commitment which apparently indicated clear title, the purchaser bought the property and improved it with a service station. After the state acted on its rights of access, the insured had to close the service station business. The trial court found that the insured failed to state a cause of action based on negligence. The appellate court reversed, finding that the insurer owed a duty to make an accurate report of the state of the title, quoting and approving § 552 of the Restatement of Torts. Section 552 of the Restatement holds those in the business of providing information liable for negligence in obtaining and communicating information to those who suffer harm in justifiable reliance on the information.

Courts in other jurisdictions have also held title insurers liable for failure to accurately report the state of title under the negligent misrepresentation theory. n264 One of the more interesting recent cases is Bank of California v. First American Title Insurance Co. n265 In Bank of California, the owner of the subject property deeded a fifty percent interest in it to his daughter. After the deed was recorded, Security Title issued a commitment for title insurance which incorrectly stated that the owner was the sole owner. No mention was made of the daughter's fifty percent interest received through the recorded deed. The owner alone then deeded the property to a corporation of which he was president and majority stockholder. The Bank of California made a loan to the corporation on the security of a mortgage executed by it on the subject property. After the closing of the loan transaction, First American Title issued a loan policy to the Bank insuring the title to its mortgage.

The mortgagor corporation eventually defaulted and filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Several months, later, the Bank learned of the daughter's interest in the property. The Bank then sued both title companies, First American and Security Title, claiming breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation. The trial court granted the title companies' motion to dismiss, and the Bank appealed. The Supreme Court of Alaska reversed, holding that title insurance companies owe their customers a duty of care concerning the preliminary title information they furnish them, citing § 552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. The court concluded that breach of this duty could make an insurer liable to its customer for negligent misrepresentation of title.

In support of its conclusion that title insurers could be liable for negligent misrepresentation of title, the court utilized a multi-factor analysis which it had employed in a prior negligent misrepresentation case. n266 These factors were:

> (1) knowledge that the information was desired for a serious purpose and that the recipient intended to rely on it;
>
> (2) the foreseeability of harm;
>
> (3) the "degree of certainty" that harm would result;

(4) the directness of causation, and

(5) the policy of preventing future harm. n267

The court decided that all of the factors were present when title insurers issue commitments which report the result of the insurers' search and examination of title.

The court observed that title insurers know that the information in commitments or preliminary reports will be relied upon by real estate purchasers and lenders in deciding whether or how to complete transactions. Furthermore, the court stated:

> Title searches are frequently required in situations involving transactions where the state of the title must be known accurately or the customer will foreseeably suffer harm which is both certain and direct. Further, the policy of preventing future harm is somewhat served by imposing a duty of care on the part of title insurers, although the deterrent supplied by tort liability is not likely to be of much additional consequence since the title company is usually liable under the title policy which ordinarily follows the preliminary commitment. n268

The court also considered whether a statement in the commitment was effective to disclaim negligence liability. The statement said: "This report and commitment shall have no force or effect except as a basis for the coverage specified herein." n269 The court applied a rule of strict construction of disclaimers of negligence liability and found that the language did not clearly state that the title company would not be liable even if it negligently misrepresented the title to the Bank. The court also expressed agreement with a California decision holding an exculpatory provision in a preliminary title report invalid on the ground that the insurer was engaged in a business which affected the public interest and, therefore, could not exculpate itself from negligence liability in a contract of adhesion. n270

The Alaska Supreme Court then considered whether certain policy clauses effectively precluded tort claims until the insurer had an opportunity to clear title. One clause provided that any claim of loss or damage "whether or not based on negligence" shall be restricted as provided in the policy. The Court said that this first clause did no more than trigger a review of the policy provisions to see if any of them applied to the case. The other clause relied on was a standard clause found in ALTA and other forms which reinforces the indemnity contract nature of title insurance. This is the provision which states that no claim shall be maintainable under the policy until the title company has been given a reasonable time to clear the title after being notified of an adverse claim. The provision further states that if the company clears the title within a reasonable time after notification, the company shall not be liable. This other clause was held to be inapplicable because it applied to claims arising under the policy and not to a claim based on negligent misrepresentation of title in the commitment.

§ 93.05(b)(4) Proper Scope of the Insurer's Duty to Search and Report Defects.

There are persuasive reasons that support limiting the liabilities of title insurers to those expressly assumed in the policy. Title insurance commitments are not intended to be abstracts of title. Instead, they are offers to issue title insurance policies in accordance with the specifications contained in the commitment. Strictly speaking, title insurance policies are not proof or evidence of title. They are contracts of indemnity under which the insurer undertakes to indemnify the insured in the event of losses caused by covered title defects. A failure to report record defects may not be due to careless or negligent search or examination. Defects may not be reported in commitments or policies because the title insurer may have made an underwriting decision that those defects are not defects in fact. Known defects may be omitted from commitments or policies because the insurer may have decided to assume the risk of losses due to such defects.

On the other hand, the manner in which title insurance is promoted by title companies and used by customers supports the imposition of greater liability than that expressly assumed in title policies. Consumers of title insurance services believe that commitments and policies are issued only after a careful search and examination of the record pertaining to the subject property. Title insurance industry advertising has frequently encouraged this perception. Title insurers successfully lobbied a number of state legislatures to require searches and examinations before issuance of title insurance. n271

Title insurance documents are used and accepted as "evidence" of title in many places. As title insurance has replaced the attorney-abstract method of title assurance, people naturally believed and expected the new service (i.e., title insurance) to be at least as extensive as the service replaced. As a result, parties to real estate transactions expect the commitment to be a report of the title problems found by the title company. When title insurers decide to ignore risks deemed minor or trivial, the insurer should at least report their existence to the insured or proposed insured. Similarly, when a title insurer decides to assume a risk by "insuring around" it, the existence of the risk should also be reported to the consumer.

§ 93.05(b)(5) Summary of Duty to Search Rules.

The court in Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co. n272 perhaps incorrectly treated title insurance commitments as the equivalent of abstracts. The court was probably unfair when it characterized the conduct of Transamerica as "inexplicable" and "fatuous." Under the facts of the case, the affirmance of a judgment awarding each of the four plaintiffs $50,000 in damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress was questionable. But the heart of the Jarchow decision was sound. Title insurers should have a duty to search and examine title competently, and they should be accountable if they are negligent in performing that duty.

§ 93.05(c) The Duty to Defend.

Title defense is one of the most important benefits provided by title insurance. Before the insurer is obligated to defend the title, the insured must make a written request. n273 The insured is also obligated to give the insurer written notice of any adverse title claims promptly after the insured has actual knowledge of them. n274 A failure to give this notice terminates the insurer's liability under the policy to the extent that the failure prejudices the insurer. The insurer must show that late notice caused "appreciable" harm to its position in order to establish prejudice. n275 If the insurer has actual notice of the adverse claim from a source other than the insured, a failure by the insured to give prompt notice causes no prejudice to the insurer. n276 The burden of proving prejudice is on the insurer. n277

The 1970 ALTA policy forms described the insurer's obligation to defend as follows:

> The Company, at its own cost and without undue delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in all litigation consisting of actions or proceedings commenced against such insured, or defenses, restraining orders or injunctions interposed against a foreclosure of the insured mortgage or a defense interposed against an insured in an action to enforce a contract for a sale of the estate or interest in said land, to the extent that such litigation is founded upon an alleged defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy. n278

This provision appears to require the insurer to defend in cases: (1) where the insured is being sued and the action is based on an adverse claim covered by the policy, or (2) where the insured is suing (such as in an action for specific performance of a real estate sales contract) a defendant who raises a covered title defect as a defense (such as a claim that title is unmarketable). There is no express language in the 1970 ALTA policy forms which requires the insurer to quiet or cure title in the absence of a lawsuit.

In the 1992 ALTA policy forms, the provision obligating the insured to defend contains a substantially different statement of the title defense obligation:

> Upon written request by the insured ... , the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim adverse to the title or interest as insured, but only as to those stated causes of action alleging a defect, lien or encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy. n279

This revised language in the 1990 form appears to limit expressly the obligation to defend exclusively to those claims which are covered by the policy. n280

Other policy provisions generally give the insurer the right to control any title defense litigation. n281 The 1970 ALTA policy forms did not, however, contain a provision giving the title insurer an express right to select title defense counsel. n282 In contrast, the 1992 ALTA policy forms give the insurer an express, qualified right to select counsel:

> The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the insured as to those stated causes of action and shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. n283

The selection of counsel is a potentially serious matter because the interests of the insured and insurer may come into conflict. Even if the insurer has a general right to control any title litigation, the insurer may be required to provide independent counsel to the insured in the event of a conflict of interest between the insurer and the insured. n284

When the insured requests a defense, the title insurer has a number of alternatives which include the following:

1. Defend the title in litigation (with or without a reservation of rights); n285

2. Bring a declaratory judgment action to determine whether the insurer is obligated to defend while the insurer defends with a reservation of rights;

3. Take affirmative action to clear the title through whatever means may be available;

4. Pay the insured the lesser of the amount of any loss or the maximum amount of insurance stated in Schedule A; or

5. Refuse to defend on the ground that no action is required.

The last alternative may be a risky choice for the insurer. By not defending, the insurer gives up its right to control the title litigation. If the insurer refuses to defend, it may be bound by an adverse determination which could have been avoided if the insurer had defended the insured. Furthermore, the insurer may be liable for damages based on a claim of a breach of the duty to defend. Such a liability may not be serious if the damages are limited to what the insurer might have spent anyway defending and indemnifying the insured. The insurer's breach, however, may result in tort liability for consequential damages for which it would not generally be responsible under the terms of the policy. n286 Furthermore, if an insurer wrongfully refuses to defend, it may be liable to satisfy a judgment for which it would not have been responsible, had the insurer defended the action. n287 In cases where the breach of the duty to defend is found to have been intentional and particularly egregious, punitive damages may be assessed. Unless it is very clear that the insurer is not obligated to defend, the insurer is well advised to provide a defense while reserving its rights if the insurer thinks that the matter involved is not covered by the policy.

A title insurer is not obligated to defend when the basis of the adverse claim is not covered by the policy. n288 The insurer may, however, be obligated to defend if a formal claim against the insured alleges facts which are within the coverage of the policy, even if the actual facts are different than those alleged. n289 It is frequently difficult or even impossible to determine if an adverse claim is covered by the title policy when the claim is asserted because title insurance and real property title problems are often difficult or complex. Necessarily, the obligation to defend has to be determined at the time that the adverse claim is first asserted and not when it is finally resolved. It would be absurd and contrary to the intent of the parties to require the insured under a title insurance contract to prove that the insurer will be obligated to indemnify the insured before the duty to defend arises. As a result, the duty to defend is a broader obligation than the insurer's ultimate liability under its duty to indemnify. n290

Generally, courts construe language describing the obligation to defend broadly and in accordance with the principle that ambiguities should be construed against the insurer. n291 The promise to defend is a promise to provide a service separate and distinct from the promise to indemnify the insured for covered losses. The reasonable expectations of the insured, regarding when this separate and distinct defense service would be provided, has guided the courts in these cases. n292 The title insurer's "duty to defend encompasses all claims potentially within the policy's coverage." n293

In Ticor Title Insurance Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., n294 a mortgagee purported to release an unrecorded mortgage by an unrecorded release. Later the mortgagee sued (among others) a participant in the insured joint venture, claiming that the release was obtained unfairly or fraudulently and seeking reinstatement of the mortgage. n295 The defendant requested the insurer to defend. The insurer elected to defend under a reservation of rights, but it also initiated a declaratory judgment action seeking to establish that it had no duty to defend or indemnify the insured.

The trial court granted summary judgment to the insurer, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeals reversed. The title insurance company relied on two principal arguments to support its claim that it was not obligated to defend. First, the trial court found that a settlement agreement between the mortgagee and the participants in the joint venture, including the defendant, meant that there was "no real possibility" that the defendant would face damages as a result of the litigation concerning whether the release of the mortgage was fraudulent or unfair. The insurer argued that since it was not possible for the insured to suffer a loss based on the title claim, the insured defendant no longer had an insurable interest. The court rejected this argument, stating:

> An insurer is not relieved of its duty to defend against a claim merely because the insured may be entitled to assert a valid affirmative defense such as the 1986 settlement agreement. Rather, we look to the face of the underlying complaint and try to determine therefrom whether any of the alleged claims fall within the title policy's coverage. n296

The court also stated:

> We observe that adoption of Ticor's [the insurer's] view would mean that an insured would have to defend itself in all situations where there exists an affirmative defense under a title insurance policy. For example, the insured would have to raise the defense of the statute of limitations, or, as in this case, a release or settlement agreement. Such a result is inconsistent with title insurance law. n297

The court also observed that an insurer may be obligated to defend frivolous, meritless, or false claims even though there is "no real possibility" of the insured being held liable for damages. n298

The insurer's second principal argument was that the defendant was not covered because it knowingly created a title defect when the defendant mortgaged the property and later obtained the release. Therefore, the insurer argued, the exclusion for non-record defects created by the insured and not disclosed to the insurer applied to preclude coverage. The court disagreed. After stating that the court had to assume that the release of the mortgage was valid for purposes of summary judgment, the court said:

> [T]he determination whether a duty to defend exists should not be made dependent on how the court anticipates the underlying dispute between the insured and the party suing will be resolved. Courts must not be lured into adjudicating the merits of that underlying dispute when deciding the threshold issue of the insurance company's duty to defend. Where genuine issues of disputed fact exist regarding the underlying events, the threshold question must be resolved on the basis of the factual version which supports coverage. n299

However, where the facts alleged in the adverse claim establish that the claim is specifically excluded or not covered, the insurer is not obliged to defend. n300

Current ALTA policy forms state that an insurer may terminate its obligation to defend by paying the insured claimant the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A "together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of [such] payment... ." n301 A similar provision was held effective to relieve a title insurer of the obligation to defend where the face amount of the policy was tendered to the insureds. n302

In some cases, it may be financially advantageous for the insurer to promptly tender the maximum amount stated in Schedule A to the insured because the insurer's maximum exposure under ALTA policy forms is that amount plus covered title defense expenses. If it appears likely that a claim will equal or exceed the amount stated in Schedule A, the most advantageous course for the insurer may be to "bail out" of the case before title defense expenses mount. It is possible, however, that some courts may not be willing to allow insurers to escape title defense liability so readily in this manner.

Title policies expressly require the insurer to defend in pending litigation where an adverse claim has been asserted against the title. There is no express obligation that requires the insurer to initiate litigation or other measures to quiet or cure title in the absence of a lawsuit. It is not unreasonable, however, to infer from policy language that the insurer is obligated to initiate measures to clear title under certain circumstances. The conditions and stipulations that give the insurance company the right to control title litigation refer to actions that the company may "institute and prosecute" n303 and cases where the company is permitted or required "to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action... ." n304

In Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation v. McKee, n305 the claimants were in adverse possession of the disputed land. If an action to remove them was not initiated, it was possible that the claimants could have eventually prevailed as adverse possessors without regard to the merits of the underlying claim. The insured requested that the title insurance company clear the title, and it refused. The insured then brought an action against the adverse claimants to try the title while continuously providing the insurer with information about the litigation and demanding that the insurer defend the insured's title. At the conclusion of the title action, the court entered a judgment validating the adverse claim and divesting the insured of his claim of title to the disputed land. The insured then sued the title company seeking to recover, among other items, costs incurred in prosecuting the unsuccessful action to try the title. The court held that the title company had been obligated to defend the insured's title by prosecuting the action against the adverse claimants:

> Plaintiff [the insured], being out of possession, stood in peril of losing the title by limitations if he did nothing, and was compelled to prosecute the suit so filed by bringing it to trial and obtaining an adjudication of his title. This was also necessary if plaintiff was to lay a predicate for his suit against the company under the policy, unless he was willing to forget his trespass to try title suit and in suit against the company assume the burden of proving that the Nash heirs' [adverse claimants'] title was superior to his own. n306

Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co. n307 also held that a title insurer had an affirmative obligation to clear title, even though the adverse claimants were not suing the insureds and no covered title defect was being asserted as a defense in an action brought by the insureds. In Jarchow, the adverse parties claimed an easement of right of way over the subject property. Instead of asserting this claim in a lawsuit against the insureds, the claimants persuaded the city planning commission to restrict the insureds' proposed development so that the claimed easement would be kept open. n308

A title insurer should not be required to take affirmative steps to clear title in every case where a covered adverse claim comes to light. An insured should not expect the title insurer to act until an obligation to clear title has matured. If loss has occurred or is imminent, the insurer may be bound to act, but title insurers do not guarantee that title is clear. Instead, title insurers undertake to indemnify insureds for covered losses. Once the insured has performed the policy obligation of notifying the insurer of adverse claims, the insurer should have some discretion in determining when and what action may be required in a particular case. Sometimes, the wisest approach to a title problem is to do nothing. With the passage of time, an adverse claim may be extinguished by, for instance, a statute of limitations or a marketable title act. Taking prompt action may notify an unaware claimant of a claim. Additionally, because title insurers do not undertake to guarantee that title is good, insecurity or anxiety in the mind of the insured should not by itself trigger a duty for an insurer to act affirmatively to clear title in the absence of present or impending economic impact. n309

§ 93.05(c)(1) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Covered Grounds.

A person insured under a liability insurance policy may be sued by a plaintiff alleging both covered and non-covered grounds for recovery. For example, a defendant may be sued for violations of anti-discrimination laws and a tort. n310 If the defendant's liability insurer is obligated by the policy to defend the tort claim and not the discrimination claim, the addition of the discrimination claim will not relieve the insurer of the obligation to defend the tort claim. n311

§ 93.05(c)(2) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Non-Covered Grounds.

While it is clear that the insurer has to defend the covered claim, the authorities disagree on whether the insurer has to bear the cost of defending the non-covered claim as well. Some cases follow the "in for one, in for all" rule holding that the insurer is obligated to defend the entire action including any non-covered claims. n312 Other cases hold that the insurer need only pay the costs of defending the covered claims where the costs of defense may be apportioned between covered and non-covered claims. n313

Few reported title insurance cases deal with the problem whether the "in for one, in for all" rule applies to suits involving title insurance. Generally, this problem could be resolved by a policy provision subject to the usual rule of strict construction of any ambiguity. The 1970 ALTA policy forms contained no specific language addressing the problem. The forms stated that the company was obligated to defend title litigation: "... to the extent that such litigation is founded upon an alleged defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy." n314 Arguably, the words "to the extent that" are ambiguous because they could refer to claims covered by the policy in an action involving other claims or any litigation which is founded on matters covered by the policy. In interpreting this language, some courts have followed the "in for one, in for all" rule while others have not.

In Enron Corporation v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, n315 the insured mortgagee foreclosed its mortgage. Lienholders defended on two grounds: (1) that their lien was actually prior to the plaintiff's, and (2) that another lien was a sham because its holder and the plaintiff were actually one and the same. The title insurer defended the priority claim, and separate counsel for the insured defended the sham lien claim which was not shown to be covered by the policy. After a settlement was reached, the insured submitted a claim to the title insurer for the expenses of its separate counsel. When the insurer refused to pay on the ground that the claim defended against was not covered by the policy, the insured sued the title insurer.

The trial court, following the "in for one, in for all" rule, held for the insured. The court of appeals reversed, stating:

> ... courts have taken a strong stand against holding insurers liable for the defense costs of claims their policies do not cover, even when those claims are joined with covered claims. For example, the Fifth Circuit has joined the Sixth Circuit in holding that an insurer should be held liable for the defense of covered and uncovered claims only where "there is no reasonable means of prorating the costs of defense between the covered and not-covered items." n316

The ALTA 1992 Policy Forms contain the following language: "The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the insured in the defense of those causes of action which allege matters not insured against by this policy." n317 This provision is an apparent attempt to limit the insurer's liability for defense costs to expenses incurred in defending covered claims. Whether the provision will accomplish its objective remains to be seen.

§ 93.05(d) Subrogation.

American Land Title Association (ALTA) Forms contain express subrogation clauses. n318 The clauses provides that if the insurer makes a payment on a claim to an insured claimant, the insurer is subrogated to the rights the insured claimant may have had against third parties with respect to the claim. For example, if the insurer settles a claim based on a title defect which may have been a breach of a deed warranty in the deed to the insured claimant from the insured claimant's grantor, the insurer is subrogated to the insured claimant's rights against the grantor under the deed. Through these rights, the insurer may be able to shift at least some of the claim settlement costs to the third-party grantor.

The insurer paying a claim might be entitled to subrogation to the rights of the insured claimant under general law even if no express subrogation right were contained in the policy. n319

The express clause, however, makes the insurer's case for subrogation stronger. The ALTA Subrogation Clause also states that the insurer will be relieved of its liability to the extent that the acts of the insured claimant impair the insurer's rights to subrogation. Courts have not been very sympathetic toward the claims of title insurers that their rights of subrogation have been impaired by their insureds. n320

§ 93.05(e) Arbitration of Claims.

In the 1980s, title insurance company litigation costs in handling claims increased significantly. Since 1987, the conditions and stipulations of ALTA policy forms have contained an arbitration clause. n321 The New York Board of Title Underwriters policy form has contained an arbitration clause in its Payment of Loss provision for many years. n322 The arbitration clause was added to ALTA forms in the hope that it would help to control both litigation costs and the amount of time taken to dispose of claims. n323 Under the clause, where the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A is $1,000,000 or less, any arbitrable dispute between the insured and the insurer may be submitted to arbitration at the option of either, unless prohibited by law. Where the amount of insurance is greater than $1,000,000, both parties must agree to submit the dispute to arbitration. Since its adoption, the ALTA Arbitration Clause has not actually been invoked very often by title insurers or attorneys for claimants. n324

§ 93.05(f) Measurement of Losses Under Title Insurance Policies.

Measurement of a mortgagee's loss under a loan policy where title to its mortgage is defective is fairly complex. The title insurer does not guarantee that the obligation secured by the mortgage will be performed. The insurer does not guarantee that the property will be adequate security. The insurer does, however, undertake to indemnify the mortgagee if a covered title defect causes the insured to suffer an economic loss. Therefore, if the real estate security turns out to be inadequate for reasons not involving the title to the insured mortgage, the insurer is not liable. If the title to the insured mortgage fails--totally or partially-- the insurer is not liable if the insured mortgagee is fully paid. If the mortgagee receives only partial satisfaction, the insurer is liable only to the extent that the deficiency is attributable to the failure of the title to be as it was insured in the loan policy. n325 Under owners' policies, the measurement of losses presents somewhat different problems.

One of the conditions and stipulations in the ALTA owner's policy form purports to limit the maximum liability of the title insurer under the policy, in addition to covered litigation expenses, to the lesser of (a) the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A, or (b) the difference between the value of the insured property as insured over its value subject to the title defect or encumbrance covered by the policy. n326 Prior to 1987, ALTA forms defined the upper limit of the company's liability under the policy as the lesser of the amount of insurance or the "actual loss" of the insured claimant. n327

When an insured owner suffers a total loss of title, the measure of the insured's loss is the value of the entire property. In most cases, this will at least equal the maximum amount of insurance stated in Schedule A. When the insured's loss is partial, there are two basic approaches to measuring the loss: (1) the diminution in value of the property caused by the covered defect or encumbrance, or (2) the cost of removing the defect or encumbrance to make the title as it was insured to be. n328 The second alternative is available only when it is feasible to remove the defect or encumbrance. n329 The most recent ALTA policy language appears to express a preference for the first approach.

The ALTA policy forms have never specified a valuation date for partial losses. Where a difference in value or diminution in value approach is used to measure an insured's loss, the loss may vary greatly with the valuation dates used. For example, in Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., when the title policy was issued, the subject property was being used for agricultural purposes. When an easement covered by the policy was discovered, the property was being used for industrial purposes. The easement diminished the value of the property for industrial use by at least $15,000. In contrast, using the value of the property for agricultural uses, the easement was found to have diminished the value of the property by only $1,000. n330

A majority of the courts that have considered the valuation date problem prefer to use the date on which the defect was discovered. n331 Other dates, however, have been used, including the date of purchase, the date of the policy, the date the insured contracted to resell, and the date of trial. n332

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "operation of law" and "title insurance" (attorney or lawyer) w/20 abstract and "title insurance" "title insurance commitment" (search or examination w/20 neglig! w/50 title misrepresent! w/20 neglig! w/20 title

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 184. ALTA Loan Policy Forms also have a stipulation which continues coverage in favor of the insured mortgagee after it has acquired title to the property.

(n2)Footnote 185. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 1(a)(i).

(n3)Footnote 186. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 1(a)(i).

(n4)Footnote 187. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 1(a)(i). The 1970 ALTA Loan Policy does not contain this specific provision. Defenses against purchaser successors are reserved with no exception for purchasers without knowledge of the adverse claim. See ALTA 1970 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 1(a).

(n5)Footnote 188. See supra, note 80.

(n6)Footnote 189. 383 So. 2d 936 (Fla. App. 1980), discussed in Daniel E. Murray, 1980 Developments in Florida Law: Part One, Commercial Law, 35 U. Miami L. Rev. 465 (1981).

(n7)Footnote 190. Capital Am., Inc. v. Industrial Discounts, Inc., 383 So. 2d 936, 938 (Fla. App. 1980). Steinle v. Knowles, 961 P.2d 1228 (Kan. 1998) (policy purchased by vendor who took back mortgage from purchaser only covered insured as lender and not in capacity as vendor).

(n8)Footnote 191. 1992 ALTA Owner's Policy, Condition and Stipulation 1(a).

(n9)Footnote 192. It is not clear whether such donees are "insureds" within the meaning of the policy definition. See Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Child, Inc., 401 A.2d 68, 70 (Del. 1979); Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide to Title Insurance 4-21 (Illinois Institute For Continuing Legal Education 1984).

(n10)Footnote 193. 401 A.2d 68, 70 (Del. 1979).

(n11)Footnote 194. 445 A.2d 1174, 1179 (N.J. Super. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. 1983).

(n12)Footnote 195. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Child, Inc., 401 A.2d 68, 70 (Del. 1979), citing Black's Law Dictionary.

(n13)Footnote 196. Historic Smithville Dev. Co. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 445 A.2d 1174, 1179 (N.J. Super. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. 1983). These transfers may not be "truly automatic" either, where the heir or surviving tenant may disclaim the property.

(n14)Footnote 197. Child, Inc. v. Rodgers, 377 A.2d 374, 376 (Del. 1977). The alleged defect was a restrictive covenant. Id.

(n15)Footnote 198. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Child, Inc., 401 A.2d 68, 70 (Del. 1979). To be "ambiguous" in the ordinary sense, a term does not have to have two or more meanings, usually, a lack of clarity is all that is required.

(n16)Footnote 199. 445 A.2d 1174, 1179 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1983).

(n17)Footnote 200. Historic Smithville Development Co. v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co., 445 A.2d 1174, 1179 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1983).

(n18)Footnote 201. If the members of the groups had their way, there would have been no question that the transfer was a "purchase" of the real estate and it would have been clear that the members were not "insureds" within the meaning of the Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co. title policy.

(n19)Footnote 202. 401 A.2d 68, 70 (Del. 1979).

(n20)Footnote 203. 445 A.2d 1174, 1179 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1983).

(n21)Footnote 204. 445 A.2d 1174, 1180 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1981), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1983).

(n22)Footnote 205. Historic Smithville Dev. Co. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 445 A.2d 1174, 1181 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1981) (emphasis in original), decision that appellant was insured by the policy, aff'd, 464 A.2d 1177 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1983).

(n23)Footnote 206. ALTA 1992 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation (1)(a).

(n24)Footnote 207. ALTA 1992 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation (1)(a).

(n25)Footnote 208. James M. Pedowitz, Twenty Common Questions About Title Insurance, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1990: the Basics and Beyond 49 (1990).

(n26)Footnote 209. James M. Pedowitz, Twenty Common Questions About Title Insurance, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1990: the Basics and Beyond 49 (1990).

(n27)Footnote 210. Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guar. Co., 331 P.2d 742 (Cal. App. 1958).

(n28)Footnote 211. Marc Weinrich, Commercial Transactions: Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?, 6 Prob. & Prop. 42, 43 & 46 (Mar./Apr. 1992).

(n29)Footnote 212. Marc Weinrich, Commercial Transactions: Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?, 6 Prob. & Prop. 42, 43 & 44 (Mar./Apr. 1992).

(n30)Footnote 213. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role 43 (James M. Pedowitz ed. 1985).

(n31)Footnote 214. 621 F. Supp. 120 (N.D. Ohio 1985).

(n32)Footnote 215. Marc Weinrich, Commercial Transactions: Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?, 6 Prob. & Prop. 42, 46 (Mar./Apr. 1992).

(n33)Footnote 216. Marc Weinrich, Commercial Transactions: Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?, 6 Prob. & Prop. 42, 46 (Mar./Apr. 1992).

(n34)Footnote 217. Marc Weinrich, Commercial Transactions: Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?, 6 Prob. & Prop. 42, 46 (Mar./Apr. 1992).

(n35)Footnote 218. 560 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1977).

(n36)Footnote 219. Spellings v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 644 S.W.2d 804 (Tex. App. 1982).

(n37)Footnote 220. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., 859 F.2d 772 (9th Cir. 1988) (applying language in a loan policy under Hawaiian law).

(n38)Footnote 221. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., 859 F.2d 772, 774 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n39)Footnote 222. See generally, Calamari v. Grace, 469 N.Y.S.2d 942 (1983); John Platt, Comment, Does A Title Insurer Qua Title Insurer Owe A Duty To Any But Its Insured?, 7 Okla. City U. L. Rev. 293 (1982).

(n40)Footnote 223. See, e.g., Dale A. Whitman, Optimizing Land Title Assurance Systems, 42 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 40, 51 (1973).

(n41)Footnote 224. Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance: the Lawyer's Expanding Role 39 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1985).

(n42)Footnote 225. Under current policy language, it is theoretically possible that a title insurer might insure a perpetual string of heirs, devisees and others who take by "operation of law" as distinct from purchase. The possibility is more theoretical than real in today's mobile society where transfers of real estate are frequent. The coverage of transferees "by operation of law" under current policies "also affects the inability of title insurers to obtain reinsurance from insurance carriers whose business is other than title insurance." James M. Pedowitz, Twenty Common Questions

About Title Insurance, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1990: the Basics and Beyond 51-52 (1990).

(n43)Footnote 226. Purchasers also sometimes mistakenly believe that their titles are insured by their lenders' loan policies. See Ortego v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 569 So. 2d 101, 106 (La. App. 1990) (holding that a mortgagee's loan policy did not cover the purchaser who had an opportunity to purchase coverage was refused). Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 (1996).

(n44)Footnote 227. Perhaps for this reason some owner's policies contain the following statement on the first page in a prominent place: IMPORTANT This policy necessarily relates solely to the title as of the date of the policy. In order that a purchaser of the real estate described herein may be insured against defects, liens or encumbrances, this policy should be reissued in the name of such purchaser." Chicago Title Ins. Co., ALTA Owner's Policy Form B-1970 (Amended 10-17-70).

(n45)Footnote 228. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 7. Where the policy insures an owner, the title company normally requires the amount of insurance in Schedule A to be at least equal to the purchase price for the property. If the policy insures the title to a mortgage securing a loan, the insurer normally requires the amount of insurance to be at least equal to the amount of the loan.

(n46)Footnote 229. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 14.7 (1986). Inflation coverage has been offered by some title insurers since 1974. Such coverage may be in the policy or an endorsement to it. Id. Without such coverage, the owner becomes more and more underinsured, as the value of the property increases or inflates.

(n47)Footnote 230. See, e.g., ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 7(a): "The liability of the Company under this policy shall not exceed ... (ii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy."

(n48)Footnote 231. See, e.g., Devlin v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 641 P.2d 1094 (N.M. App. 1982).

(n49)Footnote 232. See Comment, Title Insurance: Recovery for Emotional Distress for Wrongful Failure to Defend, 1976 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 895.

(n50)Footnote 233. See Comment, Title Insurance: The Duty to Search, 71 Yale L.J. 1161, 1162-1163 (1962).

(n51)Footnote 234. One of most successful cases against a title insurer based on both implied contract and tort theories was Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (1975). Jarchow was effectively overruled by legislation. Southland Title Corp. v. Superior Ct., 282 Cal. Rptr. 425 (1991).

(n52)Footnote 235. 656 F.2d 381 (8th Cir. 1981) (applying Arkansas law).

(n53)Footnote 236. For example, suppose the record reveals a mortgage that encumbered the title followed by a recorded release. The abstractor will summarize both the mortgage and the release.

(n54)Footnote 237. For example, the attorney may determine that a mortgage no longer encumbers the title because of an effective release.

(n55)Footnote 238. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 21.66.170 (requiring a "reasonable search and examination of title"); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 10-11-106 (requiring "a reasonable examination of the title" and "a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices"); Tex. Ins. Code Ann. § 9.34 (requiring a search and "a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices"); and Wyo. Stat. § 26-28-101 (requiring a title policy to be "based upon adequate evidence of the current condition of title"). These statutes were lobbied for by title insurers to prohibit "casualty" title insurance from being written. So-called "casualty" title insurers issue title policies without examining the title involved. Few, if any, casualty title policies are being written in the areas where the practice is allowed under statutes and regulations.

(n56)Footnote 239. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 12.3 (1986).

(n57)Footnote 240. See, e.g., Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 122 Cal. Rptr. 470, 479-80 (1975); Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 661 P.2d 12, 15 (Mont. 1983); Susan M. Stanley, Comment, Washington Title Insurers' Duty To Search And Disclose, 4 U. Puget Sound L. Rev. 212, 214 (1980).

(n58)Footnote 241. In Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 661 P.2d 12 (Mont. 1983), the commitment contained the following statement: "This Commitment is further conditioned by the conditions and stipulation and exclusions from coverage of the basic form of the policy or policies committed to be issued. The examination of the public records made by Company as to the land set out in schedule A was made wholly for determining the insurability of the title to said land and not for reporting on the condition of the record." Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 661 P.2d 12, 15 (Mont. 1983).

(n59)Footnote 242. Bank of Cal. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1992); Joyce Dickey Palomar,Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 491-492 (1987).

(n60)Footnote 243. Joyce Dickey Palomar,Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 492 (1987); Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co., 764 P.2d 423 (Idaho 1988); and Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208 (N.J. 1989). Citibank, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 632 N.Y.S.2d 779 (1995) (the mortgagee could recover under the policy only to the extent of the loss in value of its title as a result of the defects covered by the policy).

(n61)Footnote 244. See Walters v. Marler, 147 Cal. Rptr. 655 (1978); Sherrill v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 214 S.E.2d 410 (Ga. App. 1975); Gaines v. American Title Ins. Co., 220 S.E.2d 469 (Ga. App. 1975); and John Platt, Comment, Does A Title Insurer Qua Title Insurer Owe A Duty To Any But Its Insured?, 7 Okla. City U. L. Rev. 293 (1982). However, in Spellings v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 644 S.W.2d 804 (Tex. App. 1982), the title policy named a trustee holding title to the land in trust as the "insured." The court held that the beneficiaries of the trust were entitled to sue the title insurer directly on the basis that they were third-party beneficiaries of the contract of insurance.

(n62)Footnote 245. Courts in a few cases have found an express undertaking to search and examine title in title insurance documents. See Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 470-472 (1987).

(n63)Footnote 246. See Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 472 (1987).

(n64)Footnote 247. See Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 473 (1987). The basis for liability in Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975), was tort, not implied contract. However, the Jarchow court stated that the insurer assumed the responsibilities of an abstractor by presenting the preliminary title report: "When a title insurer presents a buyer with both a preliminary title report and a policy of title insurance, two distinct responsibilities are assumed. In rendering the first service, the insurer serves as an abstractor of title and must list all matters of public record regarding the subject property in its preliminary report." Id. at 485. In 1981, the California Insurance Code was amended to include the following statement: "'Preliminary report', 'commitment', or 'binder' are reports furnished in connection with an application for title insurance... . The reports are not abstracts of title, nor are any of the rights, duties or responsibilities applicable to the preparation and issuance of an abstract of title applicable to the issuance of any report." Cal. Ins. Code § 12340.11.

(n65)Footnote 248. Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 474 (1987). "This Commitment is preliminary to the issuance of such policy or policies of title insurance and all liability and obligations hereunder shall cease and terminate six months after the Effective Date hereof or when the policy or policies committed for shall issue... ." Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc. (Illinois), Fund Form 100, Commitment to Insure Title (Rev. May 1983).

(n66)Footnote 249. Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 475 n.94 (1987).

(n67)Footnote 250. Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 477 (1987).

(n68)Footnote 251. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (1975).

(n69)Footnote 252. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470, 477 (1975). The attempt to create an "easement on an easement" may have appeared to the title insurer to be so obviously ineffective under California law that no encumbrance existed. See Myers v. Berven, 137 P. 260 (Cal. 1913); Galletly v. Bockius, 82 P. 1109 (Cal. 1905). The owner of the servient tenement may grant additional easements if such easements and their use do not interfere with the use and enjoyment of a prior easement. Pasadena v. California-Michigan Land & Water Co., 110 P.2d 983 (Cal. 1941). The owner of the easement, however, has no right to grant additional easements in the original easement without the consent or authorization of the owner of the servient tenement. The failure of Transamerica to report the existence of the obviously invalid Perez easement claim may have been unwise but it was hardly "inexplicable."

(n70)Footnote 253. The title insurer was probably obligated to defend the title by taking some action to clear it of the Perez claim. However, because the Perez claim was so obviously invalid, it is arguable that it was not an "encumbrance on title" within the meaning of the 2nd Insuring Clause in the California Land Title Association Standard Coverage Policy. The insurer erred--especially when its failure to act is viewed from hindsight--in refusing to clear title but its position was not "fatuous," as the court described it.

(n71)Footnote 254. The Hill claim was found to have resulted in "substantial damages." However, no monetary amount was specified in this finding. While the action was pending, Transamerica obtained a release of the Hill easement from the Hills' successor-in-interest.

(n72)Footnote 255. The jury also found that the plaintiffs' emotional distress was caused by the insurer's bad faith breach of the title policy in failing to take prompt action to clear the title of the Perez and Hill easement claims.

(n73)Footnote 256. 122 Cal. Rptr. 477, 485 (Cal. App. 1975) (emphasis in original).

(n74)Footnote 257. 122 Cal. Rptr. 477, 485 (Cal. App. 1975) (emphasis in original).

(n75)Footnote 258. Title insurers tend to be very conservative in deciding whether to report adverse claims of record as exceptions to coverage. Generally, if there is the slightest probability that the claim may be upheld or serves as a reasonable basis for litigation, it will be reported and excepted from coverage. For example, the Chicago Title Insurance Co. continued to except racially restrictive covenants from coverage for years after the United States Supreme Court held them unenforceable under the Fourteenth Amendment in Shelley v. Kramer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948), and Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249 (1953).

(n76)Footnote 259. Cal. Ins. Code § 12340.11. Title insurers may be willing to prepare true abstracts of title for those willing to pay for them. In the author's geographical region (northeastern Illinois), title insurance customers rarely request this service.

(n77)Footnote 260. 282 Cal. Rptr. 425 (1991).

(n78)Footnote 261. Southland Title Corporation v. Superior Court of California, 282 Cal. Rptr. 425, 427 n.2 (1991).

(n79)Footnote 262. See, e.g., Moore v. Title Ins. Co., 714 P.2d 1303 (Ariz. App. 1985); Ford v. Guar. Abstract & Title Co., 553 P.2d 254 (Kan. 1976); Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 661 P.2d 12 (Mont. 1983); Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 354 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1984). Cases taking the position that a title insurer is not an abstractor include Booth v. New Jersey Hwy. Auth., 159 A.2d 460 (N.J. Super. 1960); Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 655 P.2d 82 (Idaho 1982); Horn v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 557 P.2d 206 (N.M. 1976).

(n80)Footnote 263. 331 P.2d 742 (Cal. App. 1958).

(n81)Footnote 264. Joyce Dickey Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability For Failure To Search Title And Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L. Rev. 455, 478 (1987).

(n82)Footnote 265. 826 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1992).

(n83)Footnote 266. Howarth v. Pfeifer, 443 P.2d 39 (Alaska 1968).

(n84)Footnote 267. Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126, 1129 (Alaska 1992).

(n85)Footnote 268. Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126, 1130 (Alaska 1992).

(n86)Footnote 269. Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126, 1130 (Alaska 1992).

(n87)Footnote 270. White v. Western Title Ins. Co., 221 Cal. Rptr. 509 (1985).

(n88)Footnote 271. See, e.g., Alaska Stat. § 21.66.170 (requiring a "reasonable search and examination of title"); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 10-11-106 (requiring "a reasonable examination of the title" and "a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices"); Tex. Ins. Code Ann. § 9.34 (requiring a search and "a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices"); and Wyo. Stat. § 26-28-101 (requiring a title policy to be "based upon adequate evidence of the current condition of title"); Quintin R. Johnstone, Title Insurance, 66 Yale L.J. 492, 516 (1957).

(n89)Footnote 272. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (Cal. App. 1975). See, Donald A. Wochna, "Personal Property and Security Interests: The Duty to Search," 9 Probate & Property 43 (May/June 1995).

(n90)Footnote 273. See, e.g., 1992 ALTA Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 4(b).

(n91)Footnote 274. 1992 ALTA Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 3.

(n92)Footnote 275. Costagliola v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 560 A.2d 1285, 1289 (N.J. Super. 1988).

(n93)Footnote 276. McLaughlin v. Attorneys' Title Guar. Fund, Inc., 378 N.E.2d 355, 360 (Ill. App. 1978).

(n94)Footnote 277. Moe v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 98 Cal. Rptr. 547 (1971).

(n95)Footnote 278. ALTA 1970 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 3(a). Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 888 P.2d 83 (Or. App. 1995) (no duty to defend with respect to claims that come within the policy exclusions).

(n96)Footnote 279. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 4(a).

(n97)Footnote 280. Under the general insurance law of some jurisdictions, if a complaint against the insured alleges some covered claims, the insurer may be obligated to defend against all claims, including those which are not covered. See, e.g., Donnelly v. Transp. Ins. Co., 589 F.2d 761, 765 (4th Cir. 1978). American Title Ins. Co. v. Carter, 670 So. 2d 1115 (Fla. App. 1996),on appeal aff'd, 710 So.2d 1020 (Fla. App. 1998) (no duty to defend); But see, Steinle v. Knowles, 948 P.2d 670 (Kan. App. 1997) (policy for sale of land paid for by promissory note secured by mortgage extended duty to defend to claims against validity of mortgage and duty to defend defects to title of land).

(n98)Footnote 281. See, e.g., ALTA 1970 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 3; ALTA 1990 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 4.

(n99)Footnote 282. Condition and Stipulation 3(e) of those forms supported the proposition that the insurer had a general right to select counsel, but the right was not expressly stated: "In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured hereunder shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense... ."

(n100)Footnote 283. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 4(a).

(n101)Footnote 284. See San Diego Navy Fed. Credit Union v. Cumis Ins. Soc'y, 208 Cal. Rptr. 494 (1984) contra, Tank v. State Fire & Cas. Co., 715 P.2d 1133 (Wash. 1986); 69th Street & 2nd Ave. Garage Assocs. v. Ticor Title Guar. Co., 622 N.Y.S.2d 13 (1995) (a conflict of interest entitled the insured to counsel of its own choosing).

(n102)Footnote 285. When an insurer defends under such a reservation, it expressly reserves the right to deny that it is obligated to indemnify the insured for any losses which may result from the adverse claim. Eliopoulos v. Nation's Title Ins. of N.Y., Inc., 912 F. Supp. 28 (N.D.N.Y. 1996) (duty to defend did not obligate the insurer to assist the insured in efforts to remove the clouds on the title).

(n103)Footnote 286. Comment, Title Insurance: Recovery for Emotional Distress for Wrongful Failure to Defend, 1976 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 895.

(n104)Footnote 287. Samson v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 178 Cal. Rptr. 343 (1981).

(n105)Footnote 288. Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 172 Cal. Rptr. 248 (1981). United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. 1999) (where policy protected "right of access," there was no duty to defend a lawsuit regarding a breach of promise for a "deeded access"); Penney v. Capitol City Transfer, Inc., 707 A.2d 387 (Me. 1998) (insurer required to defend insured in trespass suit, although insurer claimed that suit was a boundary dispute not covered by policy); Steinle v. Knowles, 948 P.2d 670 (Kan. App. 1997) (even if possibility of coverage is remote, insurer owes duty of defense).

(n106)Footnote 289. Daniel A. Miller, Note, The Insurer's Duty to Defend Made Absolute: Gray v. Zurich, 14 UCLA L. Rev. 1328, 1329 (1967).

(n107)Footnote 290. Mattson v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co. of the South, 641 S.W.2d 16 (Ark. 1982); 7C John Alan Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 4684 (Walter F. Berdal ed. 1979).

(n108)Footnote 291. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., 859 F.2d 772, 775 (9th Cir. 1988) (applying Hawaiian law).

(n109)Footnote 292. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., 859 F.2d 772, 775 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n110)Footnote 293. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Alaska Fed. Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 833 F.2d 775, 776 (9th Cir. 1987) (applying Alaska law).

(n111)Footnote 294. 859 F.2d 772, 775 (9th Cir. 1988) (applying Hawaiian law).

(n112)Footnote 295. A total of three lawsuits were eventually filed raising similar allegations.

(n113)Footnote 296. 859 F.2d 772, 774 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n114)Footnote 297. 859 F.2d 772, 775 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n115)Footnote 298. 859 F.2d 772, 775 n.4 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n116)Footnote 299. 859 F.2d 772, 775-776 (9th Cir. 1988).

(n117)Footnote 300. Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 172 Cal. Rptr. 248 (Cal. App. 1981).

(n118)Footnote 301. ALTA 1992 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 6(a)(i).

(n119)Footnote 302. Batdorf v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 702 P.2d 1211 (Wash. App. 1985).

(n120)Footnote 303. For example, see 1992 ALTA Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 4(b).

(n121)Footnote 304. 1992 ALTA Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 6(d).

(n122)Footnote 305. 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962).

(n123)Footnote 306. 354 S.W.2d 401, 407 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962).

(n124)Footnote 307. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975).

(n125)Footnote 308. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470, 487 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975).

(n126)Footnote 309. In the Jarchow case, the insureds suffered more than mental distress. The adverse claim interfered with their plans to develop the subject property. 122 Cal. Rptr. 470, 487 (Cal. Ct. App. 1975).

(n127)Footnote 310. E.E.O.C. v. Southern Pub'g Co., 894 F.2d 785 (5th Cir. 1990).

(n128)Footnote 311. R.D. Hursh, Annotation, Refusal of Liability Insurer to Defend Action against Insured Involving Both Claims within Coverage of Policy and Claims Not Covered, 41 A.L.R.2d 434 (1955).

(n129)Footnote 312. Golotrade Shipping and Chartering, Inc. v. Travelers Indem. Co., 706 F. Supp. 214, 218 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (applying New York law).

(n130)Footnote 313. Okada v. M.G.C.I. Indem. Corp., 823 F.2d 276, 282 (9th Cir. 1987) (applying Hawaii law).

(n131)Footnote 314. ALTA 1970 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation 3(a).

(n132)Footnote 315. 940 F.2d 307 (8th Cir. 1991) (applying both Nebraska and U.S. Virgin Islands law).

(n133)Footnote 316. 940 F.2d 307, 311 (8th Cir. 1991).

(n134)Footnote 317. ALTA 1992 Owner's and Loan Policy Forms, Condition and Stipulation 4(a).

(n135)Footnote 318. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 14.

(n136)Footnote 319. Robert E., Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law § 3.10 (1988).

(n137)Footnote 320. See, e.g., Marandino v. Lawyers' Title Ins. Corp., 159 S.E. 181 (Va. 1931).

(n138)Footnote 321. See ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 13; ALTA 1990 Loan Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 12.

(n139)Footnote 322. NYBTU Form 100E, Condition 5 (10-77).

(n140)Footnote 323. Oscar H. Beasley, Title Insurance: The New Policy Forms, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1987: The New Policy Forms 11, 27-28 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1987).

(n141)Footnote 324. For a successful attempt by the insurer to invoke the clause, see Imperial Sav. Ass'n v. Lewis, 730 F. Supp. 1068 (D. Utah 1990). Some of the difficulties involved in implementing and invoking Title Insurance Claim Arbitration Clauses are discussed in Samuel Kirschenbaum, Prosecuting and Defending Title Claims, in Practicing Law Institute, Current Developments In Title Insurance 1992, 125, 168-175 (James M. Pedowitz, et al., eds. 1992). Mister Kirschenbaum, a New York City practitioner, concludes that "It remains to be seen whether practitioners in this field or the insurance companies themselves will resort to arbitration as a means of resolving disputes between an insurer and insured." Id. at 175.

(n142)Footnote 325. Blackhawk Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 423 N.W.2d 521 (Wis. 1988); D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 10.3 (1986); see ALTA 1990 Loan Policy Form, Conditions and Stipulations 7, 8 & 9.

(n143)Footnote 326. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 7.

(n144)Footnote 327. ALTA 1970 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 6.

(n145)Footnote 328. Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 452 So. 2d 45, 48 (Fla. App. 1984).

(n146)Footnote 329. Evinger v. McDaniel Title Co., 726 S.W.2d 468, 475 (Mo. App. 1987).

(n147)Footnote 330. Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 253 P.2d 116 (Cal. App. 1953). Of course, the value of property may increase apart from any change of use because of inflation or other factors.

(n148)Footnote 331. Dolph Barnhouse, Note, Title Insurance - New Mexico Sets the Date for Determination of Value in Title Insurance Cases: Hartman v. Shambaugh, 12 N.M. L. Rev. 833 (1982).

(n149)Footnote 332. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 10.4 (1986).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.06

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.06 Exceptions.

[Go To Supp]

The exceptions to coverage are found in Schedule B of the ALTA, CLTA, Texas, and New York policies. The core of Schedule B, and of the policy itself, is the "special exceptions" portion of this schedule. Generally, the special exceptions are adverse matters uncovered by the insurer's search and examination of the title. Special exceptions that are commonly reported include unpaid real property taxes, mortgages and other liens, restrictive covenants, utility and other easements, possible judgments, lis pendens, building lines, and encroachments. The special exceptions are normally first reported in the commitment to issue a title insurance policy (i.e., the "preliminary report" or the "binder"). The commitment will then be sent to the lender and the buyer for review. If a party objects to a particular special exception, the insurer may agree to waive it, usually upon the presentation of evidence that indicates that the exception does not represent a valid claim or defect. In jurisdictions where title insurers are permitted n333 by law to "insure over" or "around" risks, the title company may simply remove n334 a particular special exception upon request, with or without the payment of additional premium, even if the claim or defect involved may be valid.

§ 93.06(a) General Exceptions.

The ALTA Owners' Policy Form and some of the other forms include pre-printed, boilerplate general exceptions in Schedule B. n335 Title insurers may be willing to waive these general exceptions upon presentation of certain documents which tend to establish that it is unlikely that the excepted matters are involved with the particular title. n336 The ALTA loan policy forms do not contain any general exceptions. n337 The ALTA Residential Title Insurance policy form (the so-called "plain language" form) also does not contain general exceptions; the influence of consumer interest groups is apparently responsible for this.

The matters generally excepted primarily consist of adverse claims that do not appear in the real estate records normally searched and examined by title insurance companies. n338 The following general exceptions appear in the 1990 ALTA owner's policy form: "(1) rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records; (2) encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, or other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises; (3) easements or claims of easements not shown by the public records; (4) any lien, or right to a lien for services, labor, or material heretofore or hereafter furnished which is imposed by law and not shown by the public records; and (5) taxes or special assessments which are not shown as existing liens by the public records."

§ 93.06(b) Rights of Parties in Possession.

Title insurers normally do not physically inspect the property when they search and insure a title. The primary service that the title insurer provides is searching and examining the records pertaining to the title. In contrast, buyers usually do inspect the property. Therefore, it is reasonable to except adverse claims that the buyer would likely discover through an inspection which the insurer will not find notice of in the record. Consequently, ALTA owners' policy forms generally except rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records. n339 The application of this exception, and others similar to it, has raised a number of problems which have been addressed in reported cases.

The exception does not apply unless the adverse claimant is a "party in possession." The acts of possession should be actual, apparent upon inspection, and sufficient to give the buyer notice of the adverse claim. n340 For example, in a case where a water company pipeline was not apparent from an inspection of the surface, there was insufficient possession for the rights of parties in possession exception to apply to the water company's recorded easement. n341 In another case, an unreported and unexcepted power company easement was located directly adjacent to another power company easement which was reported and excepted from coverage by the insurer. n342 The title insurer failed to report the first easement because it was mis-indexed in the public records. n343 A representative of the insured buyer testified that he saw power lines when he inspected the property and assumed that they were located on the reported easement. n344 The court held that there was insufficient possession to make the parties in possession exception applicable: "Generally, 'possession' within the context of title insurance policies refers to an open, visible and exclusive use. [Citations omitted.] As the possession was not visible, this exemption from coverage does not apply here." n345

Current ALTA forms limit the parties in possession exception to where the claims are "not shown by the public records." If a claim is on the record and if the insurer does not report and specifically except in the claim, the general exception does not apply regardless of whether the adverse claimant is in possession. In other words, the general exception will not apply to cases where the title insurer could have discovered the adverse claim by searching and examining the record even if the insured could have acquired notice of the claim by inspecting the property.

Several reported cases have involved claims of parties in possession exceptions which did not expressly limit the exception to cases where the claims were not of record. In one of these cases, a drainage district had a recorded easement giving it the right to maintain a drainage ditch 200 feet wide across the property. n346 The title insurer did not report or specially except this easement. The insured admitted that he knew that the district was maintaining a ditch 25 to 40 feet wide but did not know that the district had a 200-foot-wide easement. The court held that the general exception did not apply, based on the purpose of the exception which:

> ... is to except from the coverage of the policy the rights of parties in actual possession whose right or title is not of record. Therefore, we find it unnecessary to belabor the question of whether Drainage District was in actual possession of the ditch. Its easement was of record and there is nothing in the policy that suggested that the Insurer is not liable for damages flowing from recorded instrument which are not specifically excepted from coverage. n347

Another court, however, refused to imply that the exception applied only where the claim of the party in possession was not of record saying, "[w]e cannot, under the guise of construction, force from plain words unusual or unnatural meanings." n348

§ 93.06(c) Encroachments or Other Matters Which Would Be Disclosed by an Accurate Survey and Inspection.

Another general exception which may appear in ALTA owners' policy forms excepts loss or damage caused by

"[e]ncroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes or other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises." n349 This "survey exception" has been the subject of many reported cases. n350

As is the case with the exception for claims of parties in possession, the survey exception reflects the basic notion that the principal service provided by a title insurance company is searching and examining the real estate records pertaining to the title. Generally, title and other risks that are ascertainable from sources other than the records are not the responsibility of the title insurer. The survey exception is aimed at excluding from coverage certain risks that can be ascertained by a physical inspection of the property. The risks excepted specifically include those which can be discovered by examining both the property and an accurate survey of it. n351 For example, encroachment defects will normally appear on an accurate and current survey. n352 Overlaps and boundary line disputes also may be disclosed by such a survey. n353

In the current ALTA forms, the four other general exceptions that may appear on Schedule B are expressly limited to matters not shown by the public records. The survey exception contains no such express limitation and appears to apply to risks that would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection, even if notice of such risks also appears in the public records. Judicial construction of the exception, however, has resulted in it being inapplicable where the risk is ascertainable from the public records. n354

The survey exception has also been held inapplicable where the title insurer's agent represented that "the survey has been insured." n355 Furthermore, where the insurer deletes the survey exception due to its acceptance of a survey, the insurer may be held to have insured the accuracy of the survey. n356

The meaning of "what an accurate survey would disclose" has been litigated in a number of reported cases. An "accurate" survey should show encroachments, n357 buildings, and other visible improvements on the property. n358 An accurate survey should also relate to the legal description of the insured property as stated in the policy; n359 if the legal description is erroneous, however, an accurate survey should show where building or boundary lines are actually located and not where they would be located if the erroneous legal description was accurate. n360 If the legal description stated in the policy is by metes and bounds, then the survey should be a graphic depiction of the courses, distances, and monuments stated. But where the description is by reference to a recorded plat, a survey based on the plat may be sufficient. n361 The survey exception applies only to specified risks that are discoverable by examining an accurate survey and the property. If such an examination would not disclose the risk, this exception does not apply. n362

While the meanings of "encroachments," "overlaps," and "boundary line disputes" under the survey exception have been litigated, the meaning of "other matters" has presented one of the most difficult construction problems. Because the specific "encroachments," "overlaps," and "boundary line disputes" refer to claims which adjoining landowners could have against the owner of the subject property, it is arguable that "other matters" is limited to other similar matters, i.e., claims involving adjacent property. The New Jersey Supreme Court, in Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co., n363 rejected such a narrow interpretation of the language.

In the Rogge case, a survey done in 1975 incorrectly indicated that the subject property contained 18.01 acres. Both the title policy and the deed of conveyance used legal descriptions based on the incorrect 1975 survey, but did not state any specific amount of acreage. The insured paid $16,000 per acre for 18 acres when, in fact, it received 12.43 acres. In a suit by the insured against the title insurer, the trial court awarded the plaintiff $88,000 in damages for the shortage. On appeal, the New Jersey Supreme Court reversed, holding that the accurate survey exception absolved the title insurer from liability under the policy. The trial court had decided that the exception did not apply because the shortage did not involve any claim by an abutting property owner; therefore, it was not an "other matter" within the meaning of the survey exception. The Supreme Court disagreed:

> Whatever else the phrase "other matter" might mean in a survey exception, it clearly refers to the > dimensions of the lot lines and the size of the lot. The size of a tract simply cannot be ascertained with any certainty from a search of public records alone. The reason is that land exists on the ground, not on paper. When a description refers to a point in the line of another, only a survey can reveal the actual size of a piece of property and the amount of land included in a deed. A shortage in acreage is one of the facts that an accurate survey would disclose. n364

The Court in Rogge also rejected an argument that "accurate survey" meant a survey based on the legal description in the title insurance documents even if the description was erroneous.

§ 93.06(d) Easements Not Shown by the Public Records.

"Easements or claims of easements not shown by the public records... ." are the subject of another general exception. This exception is intended to preclude coverage for unrecorded easements which may be discoverable by a physical inspection of the land. n365

The exception clearly applies to exclude coverage where the easement was created or evidenced by an unrecorded instrument. Easements may, however, be created by implication or prescription with no written instrument being involved. Such easements will normally not be discoverable by examining the public record and sometimes not even by an inspection of the property. While the exception should apply to exclude coverage where an unrecorded easement is apparent from a physical inspection, perhaps there should be coverage where the easement is not so apparent. In other words, an unrecorded easement not discoverable through a physical inspection should perhaps be treated as one of the off-record risks covered by title policies. n366

§ 93.06(e) Hidden Mechanics' Liens.

In some jurisdictions, the hidden mechanics' lien is a serious off record risk. A mechanic or person furnishing labor or material may have a fixed period of time after the completion of the work to perfect a mechanic's lien to secure payment by recording notice of the claim. n367 Once filed, the priority of the lien may relate back to some earlier date, such as the date of the mechanic's contract or the date work commenced. As a result, real estate purchasers face the risk that an unrecorded mechanic's lien may exist which could be recorded later and gain priority over the purchaser's interest. A purchaser may reduce risk by inspecting the premises for signs of recent work, making inquiries, or getting affidavits from owners, but the best protection is title insurance.

A general exception used in ALTA policies specifically excepts coverage of these hidden liens: "Mechanics' or materialmen's liens or other statutory liens for labor or material not shown of record." This exception does not normally appear in loan policies which insure real estate secured lenders but may appear on other policies. n368 Title insurers may remove the exception from other policies if given affidavits and other evidence which indicate that no hidden mechanics' liens are likely to exist. Coverage of mechanics' liens has been an important source of title insurance company claims liability. Title insurance companies' aggregate annual claim payments due to mechanics' liens have ranged over a number of years from 8.7% to 22% of total annual claims paid. n369

§ 93.06(f) Taxes or Special Assessments Not Shown as Liens by the Public Records.

Taxes and special assessments may attach as liens against real estate. Whether taxes or special assessments are liens in fact depends on the specific application of state law. Generally, taxes or special assessments do not become liens in fact until notice of them appears in the public record. n370 Sometimes municipalities finance public improvements by issuing bonds which will be paid off in the future, at least in part, by periodic special assessments against real property benefitted by the improvements. These assessments may not become actual liens against the property until they are entered on the annual tax roll or entered in some other public record. n371 While the probable future assessments are not liens in fact, where improvements have been made and financed by money received from bonds, the probability may be very high that the assessments will attach as liens in the future.

Whether unrecorded taxes or special assessments are liens in existence at the date of policy has been litigated in a number of title insurance cases. n372 Generally, the courts have held that no coverage exists if the taxes or assessments were not liens in fact at the date of policy, even in cases where the probability that they would become liens in fact in the future was very high or almost a certainty. n373 These cases generally have involved title policies that did not use the current ALTA general exception which excepts "Taxes or special assessments which are not shown as existing liens by the public records."

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "parties in possession" w/50 title (encroachment or overlap or "boundary line") w/50 "title insurance" accurate w/20 "title insurance" (tax or "special assessment") w/10 "title insurance"

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 333. In a few jurisdictions, title insurers are restricted by law in assuming known title risks. Michael J. Rooney, Attorneys' Guide to Title Insurance 2-5 (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education, 1984).

(n2)Footnote 334. Physically, exceptions are normally removed by a stamp on the commitment which states that the exception is "waived." Sometimes an exception will remain on the commitment and any title policy issued thereafter with "removal" being accomplished by an endorsement to the policy which has the practical effect of canceling the exception.

(n3)Footnote 335. In some of the other forms, matters excluded in ALTA forms appear as general exceptions. For a good discussion of the exceptions in New York policies, see James M. Pedowitz, Title Insurance--What Every New York Lawyer Should Know, 52 N.Y. St. B.J. 292, 324-325 (1980). Exceptions in Texas policies are discussed in Jerel J. Hill, Title Insurance in Texas / A Guide for the General Practitioner, 20 S. Tex. L. J. 289, 291-294 (1979).

(n4)Footnote 336. The documentation may include: (1) a current survey of the property unless it is a condominium unit in which case no survey is required; (2) a composite mortgage statement signed by all persons holding title to the subject property during the preceding six months; and (3) satisfactory evidence (usually affidavits by owners) that all persons who furnished labor or materials to the premises in the recent past have been paid in full. Some insurers will not grant the waiver if the purchase price for the property exceeds some amount such as $100,000. The waiver may be granted without payment of additional premium. In some areas of the United States, an increased premium will be required.

(n5)Footnote 337. The ALTA Loan Policy Forms do not contain any general exceptions. This may be another example of the influence that the lending industry has on the content of ALTA Loan Policy Forms. Some or all of the exceptions which appear in the Owners' Policy Form may be added to a specific loan policy. The ALTA Residential Title Insurance Policy Form (the so-called "plain language" form) also does not contain general exceptions.

(n6)Footnote 338. McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So. 2d 852, 855 (Fla. App. 1976). Somerset Sav. Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 649 N.E.2d 1123 (Mass. 1995) (no protection for governmentally imposed impediments on the use of the land or impairments in the value of the land). In re Opinion 682 of the Advisory Com. on Professional Ethics, 687 A.2d 1000 (N.J. 1997) (exceptions to coverage include defects that would be apparent if property was physically inspected, defects that arise after policy is issued, defects known to insured, and hidden defects not disclosed by proper examination of public records).

(n7)Footnote 339. Joel E. Smith, Annotation, Construction of Clause in Title Insurance Policy Excepting Defects Resulting from the Rights of Parties in Possession, 94 A.L.R.3d 1188 (1979). Joyce Palomar, Title Insurance: The Exclusion for Creditors' Rights After 1992, 21 Real Est. L.J. 377 (Spring 1993).

(n8)Footnote 340. Carefree Villages, Inc. v. Keating Props., Inc., 489 So. 2d 99 (Fla. App. 1986); Horn v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 557 P.2d 206 (N.M. 1976); Halverson v. Nat'l Title & Abstract Co., 391 S.W.2d 112 (Tex. Civ. App. 1965).

(n9)Footnote 341. Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 216 So. 2d 255 (Fla. App. 1968). See also Shaver v. National Title & Abstract Co., 361 S.W.2d 867 (Tex. 1962).

(n10)Footnote 342. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co., 560 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1976).

(n11)Footnote 343. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co., 560 P.2d 839, 841 (Colo. App. 1976).

(n12)Footnote 344. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co., 560 P.2d 839, 842 (Colo. App. 1976).

(n13)Footnote 345. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co., 560 P.2d 839, 842 (Colo. App. 1976). See also McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So. 2d 852 (Fla. App. 1976), where a recorded utility easement that was not reported by the insurer ran across the edge of the property. The insureds asserted that they saw the power line when they purchased the land but did not know that the line crossed the subject property. (Apparently, they assumed that the line was over adjacent property.) They contended "that they relied upon the guarantee of the policy that there were no recorded encumbrances against the property." McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So. 2d 852, 855 (Fla. App. 1976). The court held that there was insufficient possession to make the exception for claims of parties in possession applicable.

(n14)Footnote 346. Pruett v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 271 So. 2d 920, 921 (Miss. 1973).

(n15)Footnote 347. Pruett v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 271 So. 2d 920, 922 (Miss. 1973).

(n16)Footnote 348. Horn v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 557 P.2d. 206, 209 (N.M. 1976).

(n17)Footnote 349. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, General Exception 2.

(n18)Footnote 350. Some of the more significant recent reported cases concerning the exception include McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So. 2d 852 (Fla. App. 1976); U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. v. Hutsell, 296 S.E.2d 760, 763 (Ga. App. 1982); Downing v. Eubanks, 557 N.E.2d 1027 (Ind. App. 1990); Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 351 N.W.2d 893 (Mich. App. 1984); Waterview Assocs. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 186 N.W.2d 803 (Mich. App. 1971); Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 354 N.W.2d 154 (Neb. 1984); Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208 (N.J. 1989); MacBean v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 405 A.2d 405 (N.J. Super. 1979); Swanson v. Mid-South Title Ins. Co., 692 S.W.2d 415 (Tenn. App. 1984); Stewart Title Guar. Co., v. City Nat'l Bank, 796 S.W.2d 308 (Tex. App. 1990). Professor Burke has stated that there has been a relatively large amount of litigation over this exception because it is easy for litigants to get past the summary judgment stage since surveys traditionally present questions of fact that must be reached on the merits. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 13.3 (1986). Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co., 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 442 (1997); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf, 674 A.2d 65 (Md. App. 1996).

(n19)Footnote 351. Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208, 217 (N.J. 1989).

(n20)Footnote 352. A good discussion of encroachment defects is in 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Title § 676 (2d ed. 1957).

(n21)Footnote 353. See Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co., 177 F. Supp. 925 (W.D. Mo. 1959).

(n22)Footnote 354. McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So. 2d 852, 855 (Fla. App. 1976). See also Kentucky Title Co. v. Hail, 292 S.W. 817 (Ky. 1927); Dallas Title Guar. Co. v. Valdes, 445 S.W.2d 26 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

(n23)Footnote 355. Hutsell v. United State Life Title Ins. Co., 278 S.E.2d 730 (Ga. App. 1981).

(n24)Footnote 356. United State Life Title Ins. Co. v. Hutsell, 296 S.E.2d 760, 763 (Ga. App. 1982).

(n25)Footnote 357. Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 351 N.W.2d 893, 895 (Mich. App. 1984).

(n26)Footnote 358. Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 351 N.W.2d 893, 895 (Mich. App. 1984); Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co., 560 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1976).

(n27)Footnote 359. Waterview Assocs. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 186 N.W.2d 803, 812 (Mich. App. 1971).

(n28)Footnote 360. Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208, 217 (N.J. 1989).

(n29)Footnote 361. Dallas Title & Guar. Co. v. Valdes, 445 S.W.2d 26, 30 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

(n30)Footnote 362. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 560 P.2d 839, 841-842 (Colo. App. 1976); Nautilus, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 534 P.2d 1388, 1391 (Wash. App. 1975).

(n31)Footnote 363. 562 A.2d 208, 217 (N.J. 1989).

(n32)Footnote 364. Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 562 A.2d 208, 216-217 (N.J. 1989).

(n33)Footnote 365. Hahn v. Alaska Title Guar. Co., 557 P.2d 143, 147 (Alaska 1976). First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998) (public road across land shown on road map filed with county clerk was not covered under unrecorded easement exception because public record definition only allowed constructive notice with easements recorded with county recorder).

(n34)Footnote 366. At least one case holds to the contrary. In Louisville Title Ins. Co. v. Guerard, 409 So. 2d 514 (Fla. App. 1982), the court held that the title insurer had no duty to defend a suit based on a claim of a prescriptive easement and statutory way of necessity because coverage of unrecorded easements was excepted on Schedule B of the policy involved. The trial court had held that there was a duty to defend, making a distinction between unrecorded easements and unrecorded claims of easements. Louisville Title Ins. Co. v. Guerard, 409 So. 2d 514, 515 (Fla. App. 1982).

(n35)Footnote 367. See, e.g., Minn. Stat. § 514.05(1); Armstrong v. Lally, 296 N.W. 405, 406 (1941); A list of statutes appears in D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 13.5 n.1 (1986).

(n36)Footnote 368. Russell W. Jordan, Mechanics' Lien Coverage, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1988, 355 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1988).

(n37)Footnote 369. Jack Tickner, Mechanics Liens, Title News, Jan. 1976, at 40.

(n38)Footnote 370. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 13.6 (1986).

(n39)Footnote 371. See, e.g., Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 27 N.E.2d 225 (N.Y. 1940).

(n40)Footnote 372. These cases are cited or discussed in Joel E. Smith, Annotation, What Constitutes a Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien Within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 A.L.R. 764, § 3 (1978).

(n41)Footnote 373. Joel E. Smith, Annotation, What Constitutes a Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien Within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 A.L.R. 764, § 3 (1978).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.07

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.07 Endorsements.

[Go To Supp]

The provisions of a title insurance policy may be modified or supplemented by endorsements to it. Endorsements may be either tailor-made or based on standard forms for a particular transaction. Sometimes an endorsement will be issued for no additional charge, but usually an additional premium is required. Endorsements may be issued routinely or as the result of negotiation between the insurer and a party to a real estate transaction. n374 They are normally used to extend the coverage provided by the basic policy. For example, endorsements are commonly used to cover encroachments revealed by surveys that would not be otherwise covered by the title policies. n375 Additionally, general or special exceptions to coverage on Schedule B may be waived by endorsement instead of directly on the Schedule B. n376 However, sometimes endorsements are used to limit the liability of the title insurer. n377 For example, an endorsement may be used to exclude a specific risk which would otherwise be covered by the policy.

In addition to policy forms, the American Land Title Association (ALTA) also promulgates standard endorsement forms. n378 Individual companies have also prepared endorsement forms. Some of the more commonly used standard endorsements which add to the basic coverage of title policies include Inflation, Variable Rate Mortgage, n379 Location, Encroachment, Condominium, n380 Zoning, n381 and Environmental Lien Endorsements. n382

The maximum liability of a title insurer under a particular policy is limited to the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A plus covered litigation costs. When the insurance is issued in the course of a purchase and sale transaction, the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A of an owner's policy is usually the purchase price for the property. If the value of the property subsequently increases because of inflation or other causes, the insured may progressively become underinsured. n383 While it is possible to increase the amount of insurance by purchasing additional coverage, most owners, especially owners of modest residences, are unlikely to do so. During the 1970s, an increased awareness developed that inflation caused underinsurance. In response, title insurers began routinely issuing, for no additional premium, inflation endorsements to policies insuring the owners of modest single-family residences. These endorsements automatically increase the amount of insurance by reference to an index. The most common index used is the U.S. Department of Commerce Composite Construction Cost Index (base period 1967). n384 The endorsement usually contains a ceiling on how much the amount of insurance may be increased by the endorsement, with 150% of the original amount of insurance being common. n385

The inflation of the late 1970s and early 1980s also contributed to the growth in the use of variable rate mortgage instruments. Before that inflationary period, almost all mortgages originating after World War II had been fixed rate, level payment mortgages under which the rate of interest remained constant throughout the life of the loan. In the mid-1960s, the average interest rate charged for first mortgage loans was around 6%. By 1981, rates had climbed to over 17%. Mortgage lenders such as Savings and Loans found themselves holding long-term portfolios of relatively low interest loans. In the 1970s, lenders began making many more loans with variable interest rates which could be adjusted upward or downward to reflect the fluctuation in market rates. Variable rate mortgages present special title risks to lenders, which include possible unenforceability of the mortgage security interest due to the variable rate and a loss of priority because of a change in interest rate.

Variable rate mortgages may involve a phenomenon called "negative amortization." For example, where a variable rate mortgage has a payment cap limiting the periodic payments due to a maximum dollar amount, an increase in rate may result in the periodic payment due being insufficient to cover the amount of interest on the loan. In such a case, the mortgage may provide for automatic advances to cover the deficiency which is then added to the principal debt. While the mortgage documents may include provisions intended to give such advances a priority equal to that of the original debt, there is a risk that these provisions may not be effective to do so. Another risk to lenders involved with negative amortization is that interest on the amount advanced to cover the deficiency may be treated as illegal (and hence uncollectible) interest on interest under state law. n386 There is also some risk that the entire loan agreement may be unenforceable on public policy grounds if it is construed as providing for forbidden interest on interest. Lenders demanded protection against these risks from title insurers, and the title industry complied by providing for variable rate mortgage endorsements which may cover these special risks. Of course, whether the endorsement will be issued in a particular case is at the discretion of the individual title insurer and, normally, an additional premium is charged for these endorsements. Additionally, these endorsements do not cover losses caused by lack of compliance with federal or state statutes or regulations.

Encroachments may create title defects which are not reflected in the public real estate records. There are two general kinds of encroachments: (1) a permanent structure on the subject property encroaches on adjacent property or crosses a building line on the subject property; or (2) a permanent structure on adjacent property encroaches on the subject property or crosses a building line on adjacent property established for the benefit of the subject property. n387 Either type may carry a serious risk of loss. The best way to discover encroachments is through an examination of a current accurate survey of the property. If an encroachment is discovered, there are several possibilities. If the encroachment has been in place for a long time, the owner of the structure may have acquired the right to maintain it under the doctrine of adverse possession or prescription. If a structure is easily moveable, an encroachment defect may be curable by moving the structure. Title insurers may insure an encroachment defect through an encroachment endorsement. Usually, an additional premium will be charged for this endorsement, and it may be issued only if the company determines under all the facts that the structure is not easily moveable and the risk of loss due to the encroachment is low.

The location endorsement is similar to the encroachment endorsement in that it deals with improvements to the property. Location endorsements are issued with loan policies because they address a matter of special concern to real estate secured lenders. A mortgage security interest attaches to land and permanent improvements on the land. Because the security includes these improvements, lenders want assurance that the improvements which they believe are on the encumbered land are in fact there. Location endorsements give lenders such assurance.

During the 1960s and 1970s, condominiums, which previously had been virtually unknown, n388 rapidly proliferated through new construction and conversion of rental projects. Most condominiums are residential, and by 1980 they had become a significant element in the housing market, especially in larger urban areas. n389 Condominiums present special risks to mortgagees and other purchasers, which include the possibilities that (1) the condominium may not validly exist under applicable law, (2) the subject condominium unit may not in fact be a unit in the condominium development, (3) a lien in favor of the condominium to secure assessments due from the subject unit may gain priority over the purchaser's interest, (4) the subject unit is in violation of condominium covenants, by-laws, or rules or encroaches on airspace belonging to another unit or allocated to common areas, or (5) title may fail because of a right of first refusal held by the condominium association. Title insurers may cover these risks by issuing condominium endorsements. n390

Restrictions on ownership and use created by planning, zoning, building, and environmental laws traditionally have not been considered title matters, although violations of these laws have sometimes been considered title defects. n391 Standard ALTA policies exclude from coverage losses caused by a "law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including, but not limited to, building and zoning ordinances... .") n392 In current ALTA forms, this exclusion does not apply where notice of a defect, lien, or encumbrance resulting from a violation of these laws has been recorded in the traditional public land title records. The current definition of "public records" in the ALTA policy forms does not include records in zoning or building departments, health boards, and the like. n393

Under pressure from lending interests, title insurers agreed to offer limited zoning coverage by endorsement. Title insurers were reluctant to provide zoning coverage because of difficulties in determining the zoning classification and the provisions applicable to specific properties. n394 The initial zoning endorsement form promulgated by ALTA provided rather modest zoning coverage. This endorsement assures that the owner can use the property for a specific purpose and that the existing improvements meet the requirements of the applicable zoning ordinance. n395 A newer ALTA endorsement form goes further and provides assurance that the applicable ordinances will not be violated with respect to (1) area, width, or depth of the land as a building site for an intended structure, (2) floor area of such structure, (3) setback of the structure from property lines, and (4) height of the structure. n396

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: endorsement w/20 (inflation or "variable rate mortgage" or location or encroachment or condominium or zoning or "environmental lien")

In the years since 1970, federal and state environmental laws have increasingly created risks for real estate purchasers. n397

Some of the most serious of these are from state and federal legislation addressed to the problem of hazardous wastes and responsibility for their cleanup. Under federal law, an owner or operator of land may be responsible for hazardous substance cleanup costs even if the owner had nothing at all to do with bringing hazardous substances to the property. n398 For example, a purchaser of real estate may be liable for the cost of cleaning up hazardous wastes deposited on the property prior to the purchase, unless the purchaser can establish an "innocent land owner" defense. A purchaser seeking to establish an "innocent land owner" defense must show that the purchaser did not know and had no reason to know that hazardous substances were on the property. n399 To establish this, the purchaser must show that an appropriate inquiry was made into the previous ownership and uses of the property. n400

Real estate secured lenders may assume cleanup cost liabilities in several ways. A mortgagee purchasing at its own foreclosure sale or accepting a deed in lieu of foreclosure may become liable as an owner of the property, unless the mortgagee establishes an "innocent landowner" defense. n401 A lender holding "indicia of ownership" primarily to protect its security interest is not an owner or operator unless it participates in the management of the property containing hazardous substances. n402 Real estate secured lenders not infrequently participate in the management of their real property security. This participation may be as slight as casual business advice. It may involve as much as day-to-day control, such as when a lender becomes a mortgagee in possession or when it forecloses on personal property security interests and takes over the management of the debtor's business on the land in the process. n403

Potential liability for cleanup costs is a casualty risk and not an appropriate subject for title insurance. Searching for and reporting adverse environmental claims disclosed by the traditional public real estate records is, however, a suitable activity for title insurers. The services of a title insurance company in searching title may also be employed in establishing that a purchaser made the appropriate inquiries necessary to qualify the purchaser as an innocent owner.

In addition to potential liability for cleanup costs, real estate secured lenders also face the risk that their mortgages may be subordinate to environmental liens that subsequently attach to their security properties. Where government finances a cleanup, it may acquire a "superlien" against the property to secure reimbursement. n404 Such a lien may attain priority over a previously recorded mortgage. n405 This creates a title risk which may be appropriate for title insurance coverage. n406

Until 1984, it was unclear whether losses due to title defects or adverse claims caused by environmental regulations were covered, excluded, or excepted by the 1970 ALTA policy forms. In 1984, the forms were amended to expressly exclude losses due to these risks unless notice of a defect lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation of environmental laws had been recorded in the public records by the date of the policy. n407 This exclusion was continued in the 1990 forms. n408 While the statement of coverage in the 1990 forms does not expressly cover losses caused by environmental laws, the exclusion indicates that losses due to violations are covered if notice of resulting title defects is recorded and not reported on schedule B or elsewhere by the title insurer. Liens, encumbrances or defects not in existence as of the date of policy are not currently covered. This is the case even if physical conditions in existence on the property at the date of policy may cause environmental liens to attach in the future. n409

A standard ALTA endorsement form may be used to provide limited coverage of environmental law risks to insured mortgagees. n410 The endorsement is effective only if the land is used or is to be used for residential purposes. Paragraph (a) of this form affirmatively covers any loss or damage caused by a lack of priority of the lien of the insured mortgage over certain environmental protection liens. These include liens not excepted in Schedule B which, as of the policy date, are recorded in the traditional public land title records or filed with the clerk of the U.S. court for the district in which the land is located. Under this paragraph, the title insurer is obligated to search for and report recorded or filed environmental protection liens. This obligation and service is very appropriate for title insurers because searching for and reporting recorded adverse claims to the insured or proposed insured is the principal service they provide.

Paragraph (b) of the endorsement is used to report any state statute which may affect the priority of the insured mortgage. This is essentially an opinion by the title insurer that there are no state statutes, other than those referred to on the endorsement, which could affect the priority of the insured mortgage. As one commentator has stated, paragraph (b) of the endorsement is really a legal opinion of the insurer. n411 It is arguable that the coverage afforded is not an appropriate one for title insurance. Before issuing an endorsement including paragraph (b), the prudent title insurer will search state statutes or codes and not just public real estate records. This is the type of service most often provided by lawyers and is clearly the practice of law. n412

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 374. Burnett v. Cincinnati Ins. Co., 690 N.E.2d 747 (Ind. App. 1998) (endorsement for additional insurance was provided for an additional premium).

(n2)Footnote 375. Chemical Bank v. Affiliated FM Ins. Co., 970 F. Supp. 306 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (facts show that endorsements were extended to cover goods during shipment and while in storage. The endorsement was also used to limit the liability of the insurer), aff'd in part, vacated in part by Chemical Bank v. Affiliated FM Ins. Co., 196 F.3d 373 (2d Cir.1999) rev'd by, 169 F.3d 121 (2d Cir. 1999) (policy validly terminated at the time of losses).

(n3)Footnote 376. In his treatise, Professor Burke defines "endorsement" as an agreement to extend the basic coverage of the policy "for matters of special concern to the insured." He distinguishes an "endorsement" as so defined from other supplements to title policies which are also called "endorsements" by title insurers. For example,

"endorsements" which are ued to update commitments to a more current date are called "date down" endorsements. Such "endorsements" do not fit Professor Burke's definition because they do not add any new additional basic coverage for matters of special concern to the insured even though they may increase the exposure of the title insurer issuing them. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 14.1 (1986).

(n4)Footnote 377. Affiliated FM Ins. Co. v. Jou Jou Designs, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3617 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (showing endorsement used to limit the liability of the insurer).

(n5)Footnote 378. Current ALTA endorsement forms are reprinted in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1990, 613-25 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1990).

(n6)Footnote 379. ALTA Forms 6, 6.1 and 6.2.

(n7)Footnote 380. ALTA Form 4.

(n8)Footnote 381. ALTA Forms 3 and 3.1.

(n9)Footnote 382. ALTA Form 8.1.

(n10)Footnote 383. When the author of this chapter was a practicing attorney, he handled a real estate transaction where the owner had owned the property for over 45 years. The title policy issued when the owner acquired the property in the late 1920s stated a maximum amount of insurance of approximately $5,000 for real estate which sold for almost $100,000 in the 1970s.

(n11)Footnote 384. Michael J. Rooney, A Primer for Attorneys, in A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 14 (James M. Pedowitz ed., 1979).

(n12)Footnote 385. Id.

(n13)Footnote 386. See Giventer v. Arnow, 333 N.E.2d 366 (N.Y. 1975).

(n14)Footnote 387. 1 Rufford G. Patton & Carroll G. Patton, Patton on Land Titles § 676 (2d. ed. 1957).

(n15)Footnote 388. Curtis J. Berger, Condominium: Shelter on a Statutory Foundation, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 987 (1963).

(n16)Footnote 389. David A. Fine, Comment, The Condominium Conversion Problem: Causes and Solutions, 1980 Duke L.J. 306.

(n17)Footnote 390. The current ALTA Condominium Endorsement Form (ALTA Endorsement Form 4) covers all of these risks and some additional ones as well.

(n18)Footnote 391. Richard H. Howlett, Report of Title Insurance Standard Forms Committee, Title News, Jan. 1962, at 63, 65.

(n19)Footnote 392. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Exclusion 1(a).

(n20)Footnote 393. ALTA 1992 Owner's Policy Form, Condition and Stipulation 1(f). "Public records" are defined as "records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value without knowledge." Federal records are also not included except for environmental protection liens "filed with the clerk of the United States District Court for the district in which the land is located. Id. Applying a prior definition of "public records" which did not limit the definition to records established under state statutes, the Alaska Supreme Court held that the Federal Register was a public record within the meaning of the policy definition. Hahn v. Alaska Title Guar. Co., 557 P.2d 143 (Alaska 1976).

(n21)Footnote 394. Charles C. Smith, Title Insurance and Zoning Coverage, the Guarantor, Spring 1976, at 3.

(n22)Footnote 395. ALTA Endorsement Form 3.

(n23)Footnote 396. ALTA Endorsement Form 3.1.

(n24)Footnote 397. Robert S. Bozarth, Environmental Liens and Title Insurance, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 305 (1989); Timothy G. Hayes & William J. Dinkin, Environmental Liability in Real Property Transactions, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 349 (1989).

(n25)Footnote 398. See New York v. Shore Realty Corp., 759 F.2d 1032, 1037 (2d Cir. 1985).

(n26)Footnote 399. 42 U.S.C. § 9601(35)(A).

(n27)Footnote 400. 42 U.S.C. § 9601(35)(B).

(n28)Footnote 401. Robert S. Bozarth, Environmental Liens and Title Insurance, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 305, 311 (1989). Under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA), the purchaser of previously contaminated real estate has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the purchaser was an "innocent landowner." 42 U.S.C. § 9601 (35).

(n29)Footnote 402. 42 U.S.C. § 9601(20)(A).

(n30)Footnote 403. See United States v. Fleet Factors Corp., 901 F.2d 1550 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 752.

(n31)Footnote 404. United States v. Fleet Factors Corp., 901 F.2d 1550 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 752.

(n32)Footnote 405. United States v. Fleet Factors Corp., 901 F.2d 1550 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 752.

(n33)Footnote 406. Title insurers may cover subordination of an insured mortgage by a subsequently recorded mechanic's lien.

(n34)Footnote 407. Russell W. Jordan, III, Title Insurance and Environmental Protection Liens, in Practicing Law Institute, Title Insurance 1990: the Basics and Beyond 487, 491 (1990).

(n35)Footnote 408. Exclusion 1(a)(iv).

(n36)Footnote 409. Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, 506 N.E.2d 154 (Mass. 1987); Robert S. Bozarth, Environmental Liens and Title Insurance, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 305, 334 (1989).

(n37)Footnote 410. ALTA Endorsement Form 8.1. While there is no affirmative coverage of environmental law related risks in the basic policy forms, the exclusion of these risks in both Loan and Owners' policy forms "except to the extent that ...a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy."

(n38)Footnote 411. Robert S. Bozarth, Environmental Liens and Title Insurance, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev.305, 341 (1989).

(n39)Footnote 412. The author has no opinion concerning whether provision of this service by a title insurer would be the unauthorized practice of law.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.08

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.08 Regulation of Title Insurers.n413

[Go To Supp]

With the exception of Iowa, where issuance of title insurance by private insurers is prohibited, all states regulate the title insurance industry. n414 Generally, title insurers are not as strictly regulated as other insurers. n415 This undoubtedly is due to the comparatively low loss ratios of title insurance companies. Present state regulation of title insurers is mainly aimed at (1) protecting their solvency and ability to pay claims, and (2) protecting consumers of title insurance services from unfair policy provisions, rates, and practices. n416

By late 1991, it became apparent that the title insurance industry would experience a fourth consecutive year of operating losses (exclusive of investment income). Regulators and the media expressed increasing concern about the ability of the industry to meet its claim payment responsibilities. Some even predicted the demise of the industry. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) decided that the industry needed closer examination to determine if additional regulation might be necessary. A Working Group appointed by the NAIC has developed the Model Title Insurer Act and the Model Title Insurance Agent Act. Among other things, these Acts would create new provisions intended to promote title insurance company solvency. n417 If these Acts are widely adopted, title insurers will be regulated substantially more than they have been in the past. Whether these Model Acts will be widely adopted by state legislatures is presently an open question.

Regulation of the title insurance industry at the federal level is minimal. The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 n418 prohibits the payment of kickbacks to those referring business to title insurers, among others. n419 Another section of this act prohibits sellers of property that will be purchased with the assistance of a federally related mortgage loan from requiring the buyer to purchase title insurance from a particular company. n420 Application of federal antitrust law to the business of title insurance is limited, largely because of the McCarran-Ferguson Act n421 and the state action exception to the federal antitrust laws. n422

§ 93.08(a) Regulation Aimed at Assuring Ability of Insurers to Pay Claims.

State regulations intended to promote the solvency of title insurers and their ability to pay claims commonly include minimum capitalization, paid-in surplus, and minimum reserve for loss payment requirements. n423 Almost all jurisdictions have minimum capitalization requirements. n424 The required amount ranges from $1,000,000 to $100,000, with a few states having substantially lower required amounts. n425 In addition to minimum capital, title insurers are also required to have a minimum amount on hand to pay claims. n426 In a number of states, a specified amount must be deposited with the state agency that regulates insurance companies. n427 Additionally, many states require title insurers to maintain an "unearned premium reserve fund." n428 This fund usually consists of a specified portion of premiums received. n429 Periodically, specified portions of the amount set aside may be released in those jurisdictions that require a relatively high percentage of premiums to be set aside. n430 Finally, some jurisdictions require title insurers to set aside an amount to cover claims made or claims of which the insurer has been notified. n431 The amount set aside is usually calculated by the insurer itself based on its claim estimates. n432

Some states limit the size of a single risk assumed by a title company to a percentage of its capital, surplus, or assets. n433 In the states with single risk limitations, title insurers may reinsure the excess over and above the single risk limitation with other insurers. n434 In jurisdictions having no single risk limitations, title insurers following sound business practices will routinely reinsure large risks, sometimes with a number of reinsurers. When a risk is reinsured, the primary insurer allocates a portion of the risk to the reinsurer. n435 The primary insurer remains fully liable under its policy to the extent of the policy limits. There is no privity of contract between the reinsurer and the insured, who may be completely unaware that the risk has been reinsured. When a risk has been reinsured, the rights of the insured against the reinsurer are unclear. n436 Direct rights have usually been asserted by insureds against reinsurers under third-party beneficiary contract theories.

Reinsurance should be distinguished from coinsurance. Coinsurers are primary insurers for specified portions of the total amount of insurance stated in the policy. When a loss occurs, it is apportioned among the coinsurers in accordance with the percentage of the total amount of insurance allocated to each. In contrast to the reinsurance situation, the insured has direct rights against each coinsurer. n437

Generally, the statutory restrictions on the investments of insurance companies also apply to title insurers. n438 Title insurers may be expressly authorized to invest in title plants, n439 but the percentage of a title insurer's assets that may be so invested may be limited. n440

§ 93.08(b) Other Consumer Protection Regulations.

Almost all states regulate the rates and policy forms of title insurers. n441 In most states, insurers are required to file their forms and rates with the state agency having jurisdiction over insurance companies. n442 Forms or rates may not be used unless they have been on file for a specified time period. n443 In most states with such filing requirements, the state regulator has authority to disapprove rates or forms which do not meet statutory or regulatory standards. n444 In a few jurisdictions, however, filing alone appears to satisfy the legal requirements. n445 Where the state has the authority to review and disapprove filed rates, the extent to which this authority can, in fact, be exercised varies from broadly to almost not at all. n446

In a few jurisdictions, rates or forms are set or promulgated by the state commissioner or board of insurance. n447

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH:

LEXIS: "real estate settlement procedures act"

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 413. Some useful works on the regulation of title insurers include D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance §§ 5.1-7.6.5 (1986); Ernest F. Roberts, Jr., Et al., Public Regulation of Title Insurance Companies and Abstractors (1961); Joyce D. Palomar, Bank Control of Title Insurance Companies: Perils to the Public That Bank Regulators Have Ignored, 44 Sw. L.J. 905 (1990); E.F. Roberts, Title Insurance: State Regulation and the Public

Perspective, 39 Ind. L.J. 1 (1963); Noel D. Uri, The Title Insurance Industry: A Reexamination, 17 Real Est. L.J. 313 (1989); and Note, The Title Insurance Industry and Governmental Regulation, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1523 (1967).

(n2)Footnote 414. Note, The Title Insurance Industry and Governmental Regulation, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1523, 1526 n.27 (1967).

(n3)Footnote 415. Note, The Title Insurance Industry and Governmental Regulation, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1523, 1527 (1967). Texas and a few other states comprehensively regulate the title insurance industry. Id.

(n4)Footnote 416. Note, The Title Insurance Industry and Governmental Regulation, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1523, 1526 (1967); In re Opinion 682 of the Advisory Committee on Professional Ethics, 687 A.2d 1000 (N.J. 1997).

(n5)Footnote 417. Richard W. McCarthy, Two Model Title Acts Advance, 73 Title News, No. 5, 6 (Sept./Oct. 1994).

(n6)Footnote 418. 12 U.S.C. §§ 2601-2617.

(n7)Footnote 419. 12 U.S.C. §§ 2607.

(n8)Footnote 420. 12 U.S.C. §§ 2608.

(n9)Footnote 421. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1011-1015 (1976).

(n10)Footnote 422. See F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992).

(n11)Footnote 423. Note, The Title Insurance Industry and Governmental Regulation, 53 Va. L. Rev. 1523, 1527 (1967). See, e.g., Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 73, paras. 1404, 1409, 1410 and 1411. Until 1990, the title insurance industry was virtually unregulated in Illinois. The Illinois Title Insurance Act (Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 73, paras. 1401-1425), effective January 1, 1990, authorized comprehensive regulation of the industry. For financial data of specific commercial title insurance companies and bar-related funds including capital and surplus and statutory premium reserves as of November 1, 1978, see A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 105-115 (1979). One commentator has observed: "For most insurers, these financial requirements are easily met. Such is their financial capability that the question arises as to why states bother with such requirements." D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3 (1986).

(n12)Footnote 424. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3 n.1 (1986).

(n13)Footnote 425. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3.1 (1986).

(n14)Footnote 426. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3.1 (1986).

(n15)Footnote 427. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3.1 (1986). See, e.g., ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3953.06 (Anderson). California requires a deposit of $100,000 with the Insurance Commissioner or other designated official of the title insurer's home state. Cal. Ins. Code § 12350.

(n16)Footnote 428. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3 (1986). See, e.g., ohio Rev Code Ann. § 3953.11 (10% of premiums).

(n17)Footnote 429. See, e.g., Arizona requires the fund to include 10cent(s) for each $1,000 of "net retained liability." Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 20-1569. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 500.7305 (5% of gross premiums. After an amount is held for 10 years, 10% per year may be released).

(n18)Footnote 430. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3 (1986). See, e.g., mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §

500.7305.

(n19)Footnote 431. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 20-1572; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 500.7306 and Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3953.12.

(n20)Footnote 432. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3 (1986).

(n21)Footnote 433. See, e.g., Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 73, para. 1408.

(n22)Footnote 434. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 73, para. 1408.

(n23)Footnote 435. See generally Reinsurance (Robert W. Strain ed., 1980).

(n24)Footnote 436. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.3.1 (1986).

(n25)Footnote 437. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.7.2 (1986).

(n26)Footnote 438. Ernest F. Roberts, Jr., et al., Public Regulation of Title Insurance Companies and Abstractors 202-220 (1961).

(n27)Footnote 439. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.8 (1986). See, e.g., ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 73, para. 1407(b).

(n28)Footnote 440. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Title Insurance § 5.8 (1986).

(n29)Footnote 441. A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 229-236 (1979).

(n30)Footnote 442. A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 229-236 (1979).

(n31)Footnote 443. See, e.g., Cal. Ins. Code § 12401.7 (rates must be filed at least 30 days before they may be used).

(n32)Footnote 444. See, e.g., Cal. Ins. Code § 12401.3.

(n33)Footnote 445. A.B.A., Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Title Insurance and You: What Every Lawyer Should Know! 229-236 (1979).

(n34)Footnote 446. See F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2174-76 (1992).

(n35)Footnote 447. See, e.g., Tex. Ins. Code Ann. § 9.07.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.09

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.09 Other Types of Real Property Insurance.

[Go To Supp]

§ 93.09(a) Title Insurance Compared to Some Other Types of Real Property Insurance.

In addition to title insurance, certain other types of insurance are commonly involved in real estate transactions, most notably property and mortgage insurance. n448

Title and property insurance are both contracts of indemnity. Title insurance provides indemnification where a covered title risk has caused the insured to suffer an economic loss. Property insurance will indemnify the insured where a physical injury to the property has triggered a covered loss. Property insurance is a form of fire or casualty insurance; n449 it covers the interest of the insured in the property against economic loss caused by physical injury or damage due to covered perils.

Property insurance does not insure the property itself but the interest of the insured in it. n450 To qualify for property insurance, the insured must have an "insurable interest" in the property. n451 The insurable interest requirement means that there must be some significant relationship between the insured and the property. n452 The insured must receive a benefit from the interest or suffer a pecuniary loss from its destruction. n453 Legal or equitable title to the property, or a right to use or possess it, is a basis for insurability, but an insured may have an insurable interest in property without having title or possessory rights. n454 In addition to legal title ownership of the property, other insurable interests include those of vendors and vendees under real estate sales contracts, optionees, lessors and lessees, and mortgagees and other lienors.

Mortgage insurance is like title insurance in that it is a special kind of insurance that does not fit into any of the three traditional principal classes of insurance: "fire and marine," "life and accident," and "casualty" insurance. n455 Title insurance on a mortgagee's interest does not insure that the secured debt will be paid. By contrast, mortgage insurance does insure payment. Modern mortgage insurance creates a relationship similar to suretyship. The insurer, in effect, stands as a kind of surety for the principal debtor, the mortgagor. If the mortgagor does not satisfy the debt, the insured mortgagee, or its successor, may recover from the insurer. This relationship, however, is not truly one of suretyship. In a suretyship relationship, the surety, after paying the creditor, is subrogated to its rights against the principal debtor, including any personal obligations. By contrast, the mortgage insurer is usually limited to the insured's interest in the land and will have no right to reach the debtor through any personal obligation owed to the insured.

§ 93.09(b) Property Insurance.

Various parties to real estate transactions may have insurable interests in the property that is the subject of the particular transaction. In addition to general owners, these parties may include, among others, vendors and vendees, optionees, lessors and lessees, and mortgagees and other lien holders. The parties to a real estate transaction will frequently contract about insurance coverage for the property and the responsibility to procure or maintain it. For example, mortgage lenders commonly require their borrowers to maintain property insurance which is payable directly to the lenders. n456 Long-term installment land contracts often require the vendee to maintain insurance for the benefit of the vendor. Additionally, real estate sales contracts sometimes provide that the vendor will add the vendee as a named insured on the vendor's insurance, or they may contain agreements that the vendee will be entitled to the proceeds. n457 Not infrequently, however, the contract is silent about a duty to insure and the right of a party to receive the benefit of the other party's insurance.

While a real estate sales contract is executory, the property may be damaged by fire or other casualty without either party being at fault. If the parties have made an agreement which applies to allocate the loss, the agreement will generally be enforced. In the absence of an agreement, the statutory or case law will allocate the loss. At least five different views about how the burden of such a loss should be allocated by the law have been adopted or advanced. n458 Depending on the provisions of the contract or the applicable law, either the vendee or vendor may solely bear the risk of loss.

In most jurisdictions, where the vendee has the risk of loss but inadequate or no insurance and where the contract is silent about insurance, the vendee is entitled to the benefit of the proceeds of the vendor's insurance. n459 This is true even if the vendee contributed nothing to the maintenance of the insurance. n460 An early English decision, Rayner v. Preston, n461 took a contrary position. The basis of the decision was that insurance is a personal contract and does not run with the land for the benefit of persons who were not parties to it. As a result, the insured vendor was entitled to the insurance proceeds and the full purchase price from the vendee. n462 The apparent unfairness of allowing the vendor to receive the insurance proceeds and the full purchase price from the vendee for the damaged property was recognized by Parliament in 1922, when it enacted legislation providing that the vendee was entitled to the benefit of the insurance proceeds, absent any agreement to the contrary. n463

The leading American case approving the rule of Rayner v. Preston is Brownell v. Board of Education n464 decided by the New York Court of Appeals in 1925. In approving the rationale of Rayner v. Preston, the court emphasized that the contract of insurance is a personal one and that the insurance covers the insured's interest in the property and not the property itself. n465 The majority of American cases reject the reasoning of Rayner v. Preston and hold that the vendee is entitled to the benefit of the insurance proceeds. n466 The usual rationale given for the majority position is that the vendor holds the legal title to the property as a trustee for the vendee. The insurance proceeds represent the property that has been destroyed. n467 The vendor holds the proceeds as a constructive trustee for the vendee in order to prevent a windfall to the vendor. n468 If the vendor declines to pursue the claim against the insurer, the vendee may compel payment by the insurer to the vendor as constructive trustee for the vendee. n469 The vendee may be required to reimburse the vendor for premiums paid on the policy. n470 If the vendee has sufficient insurance to cover the loss, the vendee may have no right to the benefit of the vendor's insurance. n471

Commentators have praised the majority rule as "more sensible." n472 Many years ago it was argued that the majority rule was in accord with the expectation of the "business public" and that "business usage substitutes the insurance money for the insured property, despite the general rule that the two are not legally connected... ." n473 While the arguments in favor of the majority rule are persuasive, the minority view has some support. A court, in refusing to follow the majority rule, argued that:

> [g]ranting buyer the proceeds of the insurance policy of sellers would result in a windfall to the buyer. It would be a clear case of unjust enrichment, since the buyer would gain the benefits of insurance coverage for which she never contracted or paid... . There is no windfall or unjust enrichment to sellers. Sellers, just as buyers, had an insurable interest in this property. Sellers contracted and paid for fire insurance. When the fire occurred, the sellers received exactly what they contracted and paid for--the proceeds of the fire insurance policy. n474

Of course, the "unjust enrichment" to the vendee may be ameliorated by requiring reimbursement to the vendor of insurance premiums paid.

While the vendee bearing the risk of loss is generally entitled to receive the benefit of the vendor's insurance, the reverse is not true (in the absence of special equities) when the vendor bears the risk and the vendee is insured. n475 This inconsistent treatment of the vendor and the vendee has been justified on both legal and practical, or policy, grounds.

The legal arguments advanced for allowing the uninsured vendee the benefit of the vendor's insurance while denying a reciprocal benefit to the uninsured vendor from the vendee's insurance are unsatisfactory. In both situations, there is an economic loss, an uninsured party to a contract, and another party to that contract who has insurance which covers that party's interest. There does not seem to be a logical basis for distinguishing the two situations so as to rationalize the inconsistent treatment.

Under the majority view, where the vendee bears the risk of loss and the vendor is insured, the vendor's insurer is liable, even though its insured may have suffered no real economic loss because that loss is borne by the vendee. The rationale is that the vendor's insurance is a contract of indemnification. The premiums are computed according to the value of the property and the risk involved without regard to collateral remedies, such as recovery of the full purchase price from a vendee despite a physical injury to the property. As a result, recovery on the vendor's policy is allowed because the vendor has a valuable insurable interest at the time of the casualty, even though the vendee bears the risk of loss between the parties. n476 It appears that the same rationale would support giving the vendor the benefit of the vendee's insurance. Commentators have argued that when the risk of loss is on an uninsured vendor and the vendee is insured, a different situation is presented. n477 In the event of loss, the vendee usually has the option of withdrawing from the transaction or completing it with an abatement of the purchase price. In either case, the insurer may claim that the insured has suffered no indemnifiable loss. n478 When the shoe is on the other foot, however, and the uninsured vendee has the risk of loss, the insured vendor is not forced to withdraw from the transaction and stay with the ruined property but may compel the vendee to take the property through specific performance, or its functional substitute, benefit of the bargain damages. If these remedies can be enforced against a particular vendee, the vendor's insurer could also convincingly argue that no indemnifiable loss occurred.

Commentators have also argued that the insured vendee, entitled to escape the contract or abatement of the purchase price, would have difficulty establishing more than an expectancy loss, such as anticipated profits on resale. The loss of a claimed expectancy interest probably would not be indemnifiable. n479 To establish a loss, the insured vendee would have to show that the insured event left the insured in a worse position than if the event had not occurred. Therefore, the vendee will be unable to prove a loss unless the vendee is allowed to recover the proceeds for the benefit of the vendor. n480 That is precisely the central problem. If the vendee must show that the insured event left the vendee worse off, it would seem to follow that the same requirement should apply to the insured vendor where the vendee has the risk of loss.

The practical and policy considerations for giving the vendee the benefit of the vendor's insurance, while denying a similar benefit to the uninsured vendor with the risk of loss, are more compelling:

> Since the constructive trust theory has been applied to allow the purchaser to reach the insurance > proceeds in the hands of the vendor it might seem to follow, in the interest of symmetry if nothing else, that the purchaser too could be held as a constructive trustee for the benefit of the vendor. The equities are not really parallel, however, since the vendor, having been owner all along and being the apparent bearer of the risk of loss, might be expected to carry insurance for the benefit of all interested parties. The purchaser, on the other hand, is a "Johnny-come-lately" to the property and if he insures at all, he will probably do so solely to protect his own interests. n481

In other types of real estate transactions, a party is not directly entitled to the benefit of another party's insurance proceeds unless the party has a contractual right to them. In these instances, the principle that insurance is a personal contract between the insurer and the insured is generally followed. For example, a mortgage or vendor's lien holder has no right to the proceeds of the owner's insurance unless the owner agreed to carry the insurance for the lienor's benefit or unless a right to the proceeds was provided for in the policy. n482 Mechanics' and judgment lienors have no special claim to the proceeds of the debtors' or owners' insurance. n483

Fire insurance policies frequently contain provisions that cover the mortgagee's interest in the event that the property is damaged or destroyed by fire. Presently, the coverage is almost universally provided by the Standard or Union Mortgage Clause. n484 This Standard Clause provides that loss, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee as its interest may appear and that the mortgagee's right in the insurance proceeds shall not be barred by any act or neglect by the mortgagor. n485 Cases are in conflict about whether a claimant who is not technically a mortgagee, such as a vendor's lienor, is entitled to recover under the clause. n486 Generally, courts have exhibited a propensity to expand the term "mortgagee" to include claimants that do not fit within a narrow definition of the term. n487

Commonly, the mortgagee will acquire the security property through a deed in lieu of foreclosure or by purchase at its own foreclosure sale. If the mortgagor's insurance is not assigned to the mortgagee, the mortgagor should obtain owner's coverage before accepting the ownership of the property. Nevertheless, it is not uncommon for fire or other casualty to damage the property, either before or after the mortgagee acquires it, before the mortgagee is fully insured as the owner of the property. The question then is whether the mortgagee, now the owner, can recover under the Standard Mortgage Clause of the mortgagor's policy.

When the mortgagee acquires the property after the loss, recovery on the Standard Mortgage Clause is limited to the amount of the secured debt, if any, which was not satisfied by the sale or transfer to the mortgagee. If the debt was fully satisfied, the mortgagee is not entitled to any of the policy proceeds. n488 The rationale is that the mortgagee's insurable interest in the property was the lien security at the time of the loss. Consequently, the mortgagee is entitled to recover no more than the amount of the unsatisfied debt at the time of the loss. If the mortgagee takes the damaged property in satisfaction of the debt, the claim of the mortgagee on the policy is reduced by the amount the debt is satisfied. n489 Where the mortgagee purchases at its own foreclosure sale, its right to the insurance proceeds may be limited to the deficiency judgment, if any. n490 If the mortgagee does not obtain a deficiency judgment, it may have no right to the insurance proceeds even if there is an actual deficiency. n491 If the mortgagee takes the property as full satisfaction, its interest in the insurance proceeds terminates. n492

Where the loss occurs after the mortgagee acquires the property, a different situation is presented. Generally, under the Standard Mortgage Clause, the mortgagee's recovery is not limited to the amount of the mortgage debt. Instead, it may extend to the full amount of the loss. n493 The rationale is that the mortgagee's insurable interest at the time of the loss has been increased from a security interest to general ownership through the purchase of the property. n494 Therefore, the mortgagee's recovery is no longer limited by the amount of the debt or deficiency. Where the loss occurs after the mortgagee purchases at the foreclosure sale but before legal title is deeded to the mortgagee, the mortgagee is the equitable owner of the property and, as such, has an owner's insurable interest at the time of the loss. n495 Consequently, the mortgagee's recovery under the Standard Clause is not limited to the amount of the debt or any deficiency. n496

§ 93.09(c) Mortgage Insurance.

A loan policy of title insurance does not insure that the loan secured by the insured mortgage will be paid. The title insurer agrees to indemnify the creditor secured by the mortgage against loss or damage caused by a defect in the title to the insured mortgage covered by the policy. If the defect reduces the value of the security and thereby prevents the creditor from obtaining full satisfaction, a covered loss may have occurred. By contrast, mortgage insurance provides a guarantee that the loan secured by the mortgage will be paid.

The availability of mortgage insurance may induce mortgage lenders to make loans that they would not have otherwise made. Studies and lender experience establish that the risk of default increases with the loan-to-value ratio (i.e., the less the borrower pays down, the greater the chance of default, assuming that the purchase price is equal to the value of the property). As a result, private mortgage lenders generally refuse to make loans that are in excess of eighty percent of the value of the security property unless they are covered by mortgage insurance. If at least part of the loan is covered by mortgage insurance, lenders may make loans with ratios as high as ninety-five or even one hundred percent. Consequently, mortgage insurance enables buyers to purchase real estate with very small or no down payments. In the absence of mortgage insurance, low- or no-down payment real estate buyers might have to buy either on an installment land contract or not at all. n497

Mortgage insurance is issued by government and private insurers. At the federal level, mortgage insurance is issued by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), a division of the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). n498 The Veterans Administration (VA) also guarantees mortgage loans. Strictly speaking, the VA guarantees are not insurance because the VA does not charge insurance premiums, as the FHA does. The VA does charge borrowers fees based on a percentage of the loans. Since these fees are used to finance VA programs, they are very similar to premiums. Practically speaking, the VA guarantee programs are insurance programs and will be treated as such in the discussion which follows.

§ 93.09(c)(1) Federal Mortgage Insurance.

Federal mortgage insurance has greatly impacted the residential mortgage market. n499 In some years, the percentage of federally insured or guaranteed mortgages outstanding on one- to four-unit family homes has considerably exceeded twenty-four percent of all mortgages on such homes. n500

The FHA-insured mortgage was created in 1934. n501 The FHA programs are numerous and the agency's activities, governing statutes, and regulations have frequently been modified. Specific programs have been discontinued, and new ones have been created. Consequently, anyone interested in current programs and specific aspects of them should consult very current sources. n502 While the details of FHA programs have changed frequently, their broad outlines have remained relatively constant. A central purpose of the FHA has been to make housing more attainable by insuring loans with high loan-to-value ratios that the lenders probably would not have made without insurance. Congress intended the FHA to be operated so that revenues received from fees and premiums would support operations with little or no need for a subsidy. n503

Borrowers do not borrow directly from FHA. Instead, they obtain funds from approved private lenders. If the borrower defaults, the lender is usually required to obtain title to the property and convey it to HUD in exchange for payment of the outstanding balance, interest, and certain costs. n504 HUD then normally sells the property, after making necessary repairs, through private real estate agents. n505

As is true of private insurers, the FHA attempts to control its losses by reviewing and refusing to accept certain risks. n506 It examines all applications for FHA insurance under eligibility standards which may apply to the borrower and the security property. n507 Furthermore, the FHA is authorized to insure a loan only if the lender has been approved by HUD "as responsible and able to service the mortgage properly." n508

Since its inception, the operations of FHA have been supported by fees and premiums. The FHA currently charges an up-front fee and annual premiums. n509 For many years, no up-front fee was charged, and the annual premium was one-half of one percent of the outstanding balance. n510 In 1983, the annual premium for most loans was replaced by an up-front charge of 3.8 percent of the initial loan amount for loans with terms in excess of 25 years, with slightly smaller percentages for loans with shorter terms. In 1990, Congress, concerned about the adequacy of the FHA's income to finance its programs, enacted legislation which required HUD to charge both an up-front fee and annual premiums. n511

The Veterans' Administration (VA) program was begun as part of the Serviceman's Readjustment Act of 1944. n512 The Act was intended to facilitate the return to civilian life of the many millions of Americans who had been mobilized into the U.S. military forces during World War II. The statute was also intended to compensate the former soldiers and sailors for the disruption of their careers and lives caused by their service and to demonstrate the appreciation of a grateful nation. The VA home mortgage guarantee program was intended to enable eligible veterans to purchase homes with little or no down payments. Subsequent amendments extended benefits to veterans of the Korean Conflict and those serving after January 31, 1955.

Like the FHA programs, the VA program mainly operates by guaranteeing payment of mortgage loans made by private lenders. n513 But, unlike the FHA programs, the VA program is not insurance because borrowers are not charged premiums. They are, however, charged a "funding fee," which is a small percentage of the amount of the loan. n514 While FHA insurance usually covers the entire loan, a VA loan guaranty only covers a top portion of the loan. n515 The amount of the VA guaranty is determined by a fairly complex set of rules. n516 The maximum amount of the guaranty depends on the size of the loan. For example, in 1993, for loans in excess of $56,250 and not more than $144,000, the maximum guaranty was the lesser of $36,000 or forty percent of the original principal loan. n517 Therefore, the maximum guarantee for a loan of $60,000 was $24,000 (40% of $60,000) and for a loan of $100,000 was $36,000 (the lesser of 40% of $100,000 or $36,000). Even though the coverage is limited to only a part of the loan, the amount is large enough to give the insured lender a comfortable margin of safety.

The VA also reviews the applicant's credit before agreeing to coverage. n518 While FHA loans and those covered by private mortgage insurance normally involve some down payment by the borrower, VA loans typically are made with little or no down payment. In effect, the VA guaranty often serves as a substitute for a down payment by the borrower.

Foreclosure of VA guaranteed mortgages is governed by detailed regulations. n519 The lender may be required to give the VA notice that the borrower is in default n520 and at least 30 days notice of an intention to foreclose. n521 After the VA receives a notice of default, an appraisal of the property will be ordered. The value determined by this appraisal is referred to as the "specified amount." If the lender acquires the property and conveys it to the VA, it will give the lender a credit for the property no greater than the "specified amount," regardless of what the lender actually bid for the property. If the successful bid for the property is less than the "specified amount," the lender's deficiency, if any, will be computed by subtracting that amount, not the bid, from the balance due.

§ 93.09(c)(2) Private Mortgage Insurance.

While the FHA-insured and the VA-guaranteed mortgage loans have been major presences in the residential real estate markets, lenders prefer to make so-called "conventional" loans. Certain FHA and VA practices and requirements are objectionable to mortgage lenders, such as regulations that require certain terms in the contracts with the borrowers and the loan approval process, which may result in substantial delays in making loans. n522 Lenders also dislike the VA requirement that guaranteed loans have to be "assumable" and not subject to acceleration through a Due on Sale Clause upon transfer of the property. Lender dislike of government insurance program requirements and delays contributed to the rapid growth of the modern private mortgage insurance industry since its inception in 1957.

In the late 19th century, title insurance companies, mainly in New York, began issuing mortgage insurance. n523 Mortgage insurance in this initial era of the industry was sold along with the mortgages by the companies to investors. n524 The insurance was issued after the loan was made, not as a condition of the origination of the loan. During the Great Depression, the New York mortgage insurance industry met disaster. In 1933, the state of New York took over most of the companies. A subsequent investigation revealed that the companies were grossly undercapitalized, engaged in deceptive practices, and suffered from conflicts of interest which contributed to unsound underwriting by the companies and questionable lending practices by bank subsidiaries. Instead of implementing reforms suggested by the investigators, the New York Legislature responded to these revelations by outlawing mortgage insurance. n525 Because the mortgage insurance industry had existed almost solely in New York, the industry came to a virtual end.

Revival of the private mortgage insurance industry began in 1957 when a Milwaukee, Wisconsin, lawyer founded the Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corporation. By the mid-1980s, there were approximately 20 companies writing Private Mortgage Insurance (PMI). As the financial debacles of the 1980s unfolded, industry losses mounted, causing a number of companies to cease doing business. After the 1980s, about 12 companies remained. Most mortgage insurance companies belong to an international organization, the Mortgage Insurance Companies of America (MICA), which includes nine American companies and one each from Canada and Australia.

Private Mortgage Insurance (PMI) is similar to VA guarantees in that only a top portion of the loan is insured, generally twenty to twenty-five percent. n526 But, unlike VA coverage, the amount covered is computed on the loan balance as of the time a claim is made, not on the original amount of the loan. n527 Lenders will not normally make loans with loan-to-value ratios greater than eighty percent without mortgage insurance, and purchasers in secondary mortgage markets will not buy loans with ratios in excess of eighty percent that are not insured. While the VA may guarantee a loan with a ratio of one hundred percent, private mortgage insurers will not insure loans with ratios greater than ninety-five percent. Like the FHA, private mortgage insurers charge premiums which may include up-front charges and periodic (usually monthly) payments. The borrower pays these premiums; the original lenders and any assignees from the lenders are the insureds.

Private mortgage insurers will not normally insure loans until they make a master policy contract with a particular lender. The master policy will define the procedures that the lender must follow in making insured loans, actions to be taken in the event of borrower default, and claim procedures. n528 After the master policy contract has been made, the lender is authorized to submit applications for insurance on individual loans. In contrast to the delays of four to six weeks or more involved with FHA and VA approvals, the majority of individual loan applications are accepted or rejected in one business day. n529

In 1993, a Chicago private mortgage insurer announced a program under which approved lenders would be authorized to make insured loans which meet a set of criteria without prior review by the insurer. n530 The announced program is not really a radical departure from actual practice. Before a private mortgage insurer will approve an individual application for insurance, the various risks factors involved, such as the credit-worthiness of the borrower and the quality of the property security, will be assessed. In actual practice, the insurer will rely very heavily on the underwriting of the lender. This reliance is largely responsible for the very rapid processing of most applications.

COMPUTER-ASSISTED RESEARCH

LEXIS: "property insurance"
"mortgage insurance"
"mortgage insurance" and (FHA or "housing administration")
"mortgage insurance" and (HUD or "housing and urban development")
"mortgage insurance" and (veteran/s administration) mortgagor/s "life insurance"
"environmental impairment"

"flood insurance"
"Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corporation"
"Mortgage Insurance Companies of America"

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 448. Other types that should be mentioned are environmental impairment and other liability, federal flood (a special type of property insurance) and mortgagor life insurance. Environmental impairment liability insurance is discussed and compared with title insurance in Robert S. Bozarth, Environmental Liens and Title Insurance, 23 U. Rich. L. Rev. 305, 343-47 (1989). Federal flood insurance is discussed in Powell, Powell on Real Property § 92A.05 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender). Mortgagor life insurance is a form of credit life insurance. See Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law (1988) for a good general discussion of the law of insurance. Standard multi-volume works on the law of insurance include John Alan Appleman, Appleman's Insurance Law and Practice (Rev. ed. by Edward J. & David F. Bander 1987) and George J. Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law (2d ed. by Ronald A. Anderson, 1982).

(n2)Footnote 449. Sometimes liability insurance is combined with property insurance. See Alan R. Miller, Property Insurance Environmental Claims - Physical Loss and Damage to Insured Property, in A.B.A., Tort and Insurance Practice Section, Environmental Claims and Property Insurance Coverage 30, 31 (1989).

(n3)Footnote 450. Third Establishment, Inc. v. 1931 North Park Apts., 417 N.E.2d 167, 173 (Ill. App. 1981).

(n4)Footnote 451. Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law 135 (1988).

(n5)Footnote 452. Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law 135 (1988).

(n6)Footnote 453. Home Ins. Co. v. Mendenhall, 45 N.E. 1078 (Ill. 1897).

(n7)Footnote 454. Prince v. Royal Indem. Co., 541 F.2d 646, 649 (7th Cir. 1976).

(n8)Footnote 455. Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law 18 (1988).

(n9)Footnote 456. See, e.g., English v. Fischer, 660 S.W.2d 521, 522-23 (Tex. 1983); A.B.A., Tort and Insurance Practice Section, the Standard Mortgage Clause: Protecting All Parties (1987).

(n10)Footnote 457. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Real Estate Transactions: Examples and Explanations 51 (1993); Smith v. Buege, 387 S.E.2d 109 (W. Va. 1989).

(n11)Footnote 458. For descriptions and discussions of the different views, see Skelly Oil Co. v. Ashmore, 365 S.W.2d 582 (Mo. 1963); Randy R. Koenders, Annotation, Risk of Loss by Casualty Pending Contract for Conveyance of Real Property--Modern Cases, 85 A.L.R. 4th 233 (1991); Allen P. Fineberg, Risk of Loss in Executory Contracts for the Sale of Real Property, 14 Colum. J. L. & Soc. Prob. 453 (1979). Under the prevailing yet diminishing common-law rule, the risk of loss while the contract is executory is on the vendee if the contract is mutually enforceable, under the theory of equitable conversion. See, e.g., Ridenour v. France, 442 N.E.2d 716 (Ind. App. 1982); Bleckley v. Langston, 143 S.E.2d 671 (Ga. App. 1965). A statute adopted in eleven states, the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act, places the risk of loss on the vendor until the first to occur of a transfer of possession or legal title to the vendee. See D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Real Estate Transactions 47-51 (1993).

(n12)Footnote 459. F.M. English, Annotation, Rights of Vendor and Purchaser, as between Themselves, in Insurance Proceeds, 64 A.L.R. 2d 1402, 1406 (1959).

(n13)Footnote 460. F.M. English, Annotation, Rights of Vendor and Purchaser, as between Themselves, in Insurance Proceeds, 64 A.L.R. 2d 1402, 1406 (1959).

(n14)Footnote 461. 18 Ch. D. 1 (1881).

(n15)Footnote 462. The vendor, however, held the purchase money in trust for the insurer. Castellain v. Preston, 11 Q.B.D. 380 (1883).

(n16)Footnote 463. 12 & 13 Geo. V, ch. 16, § 105 (1922).

(n17)Footnote 464. 146 N.E. 630 (N.Y. 1925).

(n18)Footnote 465. Because the risk of loss was placed on the vendor by the contract, the discussion in Brownell about the rule of Rayner v. Preston is dicta.

(n19)Footnote 466. F.M. English, Annotation, Rights of Vendor and Purchaser, as between Themselves, in Insurance Proceeds, 64 A.L.R. 2d 1402, 1406 (1959).

(n20)Footnote 467. Heinzman v. Howard, 366 N.W.2d 500 (N.D. 1985); Millville Aerie v. Weatherby, 88 A. 847, 848 (N.J. Eq. 1913).

(n21)Footnote 468. Alabama Farm Bur. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Meyers, 516 So. 2d 661, 663 (Ala. App. 1987).

(n22)Footnote 469. Dubin Paper Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 63 A.2d 85 (Pa. 1949).

(n23)Footnote 470. Alabama Farm Bur. Mut. Ins. Serv. v. Nixon, 105 So. 2d 643 (Ala. 1958).

(n24)Footnote 471. Hanson v. Hamnes, 460 N.W.2d 647 (Minn. App. 1990); Allen P. Fineberg, Comment, Risk of Loss in Executory Contracts for the Sale of Real Property, 14 Colum. J.L. & Soc. Probs. 453, 482 (1979).

(n25)Footnote 472. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 198 (3d ed. 1989); see also John E. Cribbet, Insurance and the Executory Contract for the Sale of Real Estate, 51 Ill. B.J. 124 (1962).

(n26)Footnote 473. William R. Vance, Vendee's Claim to Insurance Money Received by Vendor, 34 Yale L.J. 87, 91 (1924).

(n27)Footnote 474. Long v. Keller, 163 Cal. Rptr. 532, 536 (1980). The court affirmed the trial court's judgment that the vendee was entitled to rescind the contract, but was not entitled to share in the insurance proceeds, even though she had contributed $5,795.35 to the insured improvements that were destroyed by a fire. Apparently, the vendors did not appeal the trial court's judgment that the vendee was entitled to a return of her $1,000 down payment. The reviewing court stated that the vendee had the risk of loss and "was not relieved from her duty to perform, nor was she entitled to recover any portion of the price already paid." 163 Cal. Rptr. at 534.

(n28)Footnote 475. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 199-200 (3d ed. 1989). Where the insured vendee bears the risk of loss, the vendor may reach the insurance proceeds in satisfaction of the balance due under the contract. Kindred v. Boalbey, 391 N.E.2d 236 (Ill. App. 1979).

(n29)Footnote 476. Wolf v. Home Ins. Co., 241 A.2d 28, 32 (N.J. Super. 1968).

(n30)Footnote 477. Roger A. Cunningham, et al., the Law of Property 708-09 (1984).

(n31)Footnote 478. Roger A. Cunningham, et al., the Law of Property 708-09 (1984); see Sanford v. Breidenbach, 173 N.E.2d 702 (Ohio App. 1960).

(n32)Footnote 479. Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law 326 (1988).

(n33)Footnote 480. Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law 326 (1988).

(n34)Footnote 481. John E. Cribbet & Corwin W. Johnson, Principles of the Law of Property 199 (3d ed. 1989); see also John E. Cribbet, Insurance and the Executory Contract for the Sale of Real Estate, 51 Ill. B.J. 124 (1962); William R. Vance, Vendee's Claim to Insurance Money Received by Vendor, 34 Yale L.J. 87, 91 (1924).

(n35)Footnote 482. Andrello v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 289 N.Y.S.2d 293 (1968); L.S. Tellier, Annotation, Right of Holder of Mortgage or Lien to Proceeds of Property Insurance Payable to Owner Not Bound to Carry Insurance for Former's Benefit, 9 A.L.R.2d 299 (1950).

(n36)Footnote 483. Oregon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Cornelison, 330 P.2d 161 (Or. 1958); L.S. Tellier, Annotation, Right of Holder of Mortgage or Lien to Proceeds of Property Insurance Payable to Owner Not Bound to Carry Insurance for Former's Benefit, 9 A.L.R.2d 299, 305-07 (1950).

(n37)Footnote 484. James R. Dwyer & Carey S. Barney, Analysis of Standard Mortgage Clause and Selected Provisions of the New York Standard Fire Policy, in A.B.A. Tort and Insurance Practice Section, The Standard Mortgage Clause: Protecting All Parties 1, 3 (1987). For a discussion of other provisions that have been used in the past or that are infrequently used, see Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law § 4.1(B)(2). (1988).

(n38)Footnote 485. James R. Dwyer & Carey S. Barney, Analysis of Standard Mortgage Clause and Selected Provisions of the New York Standard Fire Policy, in A.B.A. Tort and Insurance Practice Section, the Standard Mortgage Clause: Protecting all Parties 1, 2 (1987).

(n39)Footnote 486. James R. Dwyer & Carey S. Barney, Analysis of Standard Mortgage Clause and Selected Provisions of the New York Standard Fire Policy, in A.B.A. Tort and Insurance Practice Section, the Standard Mortgage Clause: Protecting all Parties 7 (1987). Compare General Elec. Credit Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 263 A.2d 448 (Pa. 1970) and Aetna Ins. Co. v. C.I.T. Corp., 74 F.2d 516 (5th Cir. 1934).

(n40)Footnote 487. James R. Dwyer & Carey S. Barney, Analysis of Standard Mortgage Clause and Selected Provisions of the New York Standard Fire Policy, in A.B.A. Tort and Insurance Practice Section, the Standard Mortgage Clause: Protecting All Parties 1, 8-9 (1987).

(n41)Footnote 488. Partel, Inc. v. Harris Trust & Sav. Bank, 437 N.E.2d 1225 (Ill. App. 1982).

(n42)Footnote 489. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Providence Wash. Ins. Group, 530 N.Y.S.2d 390 (390). In the latter case, the court [without citing it] applied the New York statute which limits deficiency judgments to the debt minus the fair market value of the property, or the foreclosure sale price, whichever is higher. See N.Y. Real Prop. Actions Law § 1371 (McKinney). The mortgagee's recovery on the insurance policy was limited to the deficiency as determined under the statute. This was a windfall to the insurer because the actual deficiency was $13,900 more than the deficiency allowed by the New York statute. For a discussion of the case, see Dan D. Kohane, Insurance Law, 40 Syracuse L. Rev. 433, 450 (1989).

(n43)Footnote 490. See Whitestone Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Allstate Ins. Co., 270 N.E.2d 694 (N.Y. 1971).

(n44)Footnote 491. Moke Realty Corp. v. Whitestone Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 370 N.Y.S.2d 377 (1975) aff'd, 363 N.E.2d 587 (N.Y. 1977).

(n45)Footnote 492. 495 Corp. v. New Jersey Ins. Underwriting Ass'n, 430 A.2d 203, 208 (N.J. 1981).

(n46)Footnote 493. Annotation, Right of Mortgagee, Who Acquires Title to Mortgaged Premises in Satisfaction of Mortgage, to Recover, under Fire Insurance Policy Covering Him as "Mortgagee" for Loss or Injury to Property thereafter Damaged or Destroyed by Fire, 19 A.L.R.4th 779, 783-786 (1983).

(n47)Footnote 494. 495 Corp. v. New Jersey Ins. Underwriting Ass'n, 430 A.2d 203, 206 (N.J. 1981).

(n48)Footnote 495. Estate of Brindisi v. State Farm Ins. Co., 564 N.Y.S.2d 985 (1991).

(n49)Footnote 496. Estate of Brindisi v. State Farm Ins. Co., 564 N.Y.S.2d 985 (1991)

(n50)Footnote 497. In most jurisdictions, the position of the installment land contract buyer is less desirable than that of the mortgagor-borrower. Default by the contract buyer may result in a loss of all payments made on the contract in addition to the loss of the land itself. By contrast, the mortgagor has the protection of the equity of redemption and the right to the surplus value of the property after deduction of the debt and the costs of foreclosure.

(n51)Footnote 498. 42 U.S.C. § 3533.

(n52)Footnote 499. Quintin Johnstone. Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493, 520 (1988).

(n53)Footnote 500. Quintin Johnstone, Land Transfers: Process and Processors, 22 Val. U. L. Rev. 493, 520-21 (1988).

(n54)Footnote 501. 12 U.S.C. § 1701 et seq. The FHA is now a division of HUD.

(n55)Footnote 502. A good way to begin is by consulting the available HUD publications, which are available at regional offices of HUD, about the Department's housing programs.

(n56)Footnote 503. The Congressional goal of little or no subsidy has not been consistently achieved. For example, massive defaults in the 1980s required massive subsidies. Sharon Stangenes, Privatize FHA, Professor Urges, Citing Tab for Presidential Towers, Chi. Trib., June 14, 1993, § 4, at 2

(n57)Footnote 504. HUD, Administration of Insured Home Mortgages, HUD Handbook 4330.1 REV-2, ch. 9 (1991).

(n58)Footnote 505. See HUD, How to sell HUD Homes (1991).

(n59)Footnote 506. Because the FHA is part of a federal government program to make housing more affordable, the agency cannot freely use risk review to control its losses. As a government agency, it is susceptible to political pressure to accept risks. This restricted freedom to control exposure by rejecting risks may not be inappropriate. The essence of FHA insurance is to make acceptable to private lenders loans that otherwise might be too risky for those lenders.

(n60)Footnote 507. 12 U.S.C. § 1709.

(n61)Footnote 508. 12 U.S.C. § 1709(b)(1).

(n62)Footnote 509. 24 C.F.R. § 203.259a. Both charges are based on a percentage of the loan or outstanding balance.

(n63)Footnote 510. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Finance Law § 11.2 (2d ed. 1985).

(n64)Footnote 511. This requirement was in the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act of 1990. See 12 U.S.C. § 1709(c)(2). The charges in 1993 were up-front premiums of 2.25 percent of the original loan and annual premiums of .50 or .55 of one percent of the balance. The duration of the annual premium varied with the loan-to-value ratio with longer periods for loans with higher ratios. The annual premium of .55 of one percent was for loans with ratios greater than 95 percent.

(n65)Footnote 512. 58 Stat. § 291. This statute was more commonly known as the "GI Bill of Rights."

(n66)Footnote 513. Eligible veterans who show that private funds are unavailable may be able to obtain direct loans from the VA. 38 U.S.C. § 1811. This rarely occurs.

(n67)Footnote 514. 38 U.S.C. § 3729.

(n68)Footnote 515. This coverage is usually satisfactory to the lender because the covered top portion of the loan and the proceeds from the security property will normally be sufficient to cover most, if not all, of the obligation owed.

(n69)Footnote 516. 38 C.F.R. § 36.4302.

(n70)Footnote 517. 38 C.F.R. § 36.4302.

(n71)Footnote 518. 38 C.F.R. §§ 36.4206, 36.4337.

(n72)Footnote 519. 38 C.F.R. § 36.4315 et seq.

(n73)Footnote 520. 38 C.F.R. § 36.4315.

(n74)Footnote 521. 38 C.F.R. § 36.4317.

(n75)Footnote 522. Diana G. Browne, The Private Mortgage Industry, The Thrift Industry and The Secondary Mortgage Market: Their Interrelationships, 12 Akron L. Rev. 631, 637 (1979).

(n76)Footnote 523. Diana G. Browne, The Private Mortgage Industry, The Thrift Industry And The Secondary Mortgage Market: Their Interrelationships, 12 Akron L. Rev. 631, 633 (1979).

(n77)Footnote 524. Diana G. Browne, The Private Mortgage Industry, The Thrift Industry And The Secondary Mortgage Market: Their Interrelationships, 12 Akron L. Rev. 631, 635 (1979).

(n78)Footnote 525. Diana G. Browne, The Private Mortgage Industry, The Thrift Industry And The Secondary Mortgage Market: Their Interrelationships, 12 Akron L. Rev. 631, 637 (1979).

(n79)Footnote 526. Mortgage Insurance Companies of America, 1992-1993 Factbook & Membership Directory 17 (1992).

(n80)Footnote 527. Mortgage Insurance Companies of America, 1992-1993 Factbook & Membership Directory 17 (1992).

(n81)Footnote 528. Mortgage Insurance Companies of America, 1992-1993 Factbook & Membership Directory 17 (1992).

(n82)Footnote 529. Diana G. Browne, The Private Mortgage Industry, The Thrift Industry And The Secondary Mortgage Market: Their Interrelationships, 12 Akron L. Rev. 631, 640 (1979).

(n83)Footnote 530. Chuck Doherty, New Mortgage Insurance Set: Lender to Pay for and Approve Policy, Milwaukee Sentinel, April 7, 1993, at 1D, cols. 5 & 6.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 93.10

AUTHOR: Professor John L. McCormack School of Law Loyola University Chicago

§ 93.10 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Burke, D. Barlow, Jr. The Law of Title Insurance. Boston: Little, Brown, 1993.

Palomar, Joyce D. Title Insurance Law (1994).

"Title Insurance." Powell on Real Property, ch. 92. (Michael Allan Wolf, Matthew Bender & Co.).

"Private Mortgage Insurance (PMI)." Real Estate Financing, ch. 2E (Matthew Bender & Co.).

Articles

Abiassi, Ginny. "New Coverages Available Through Title Insurance Policies and Endorsements." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 903.

Abiassi, Ginny. "Title Insurance Policies and Endorsements for Residential Real Estate Transactions." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 239.

Bardwell, Marjorie Ramseyer. "What Title Insurance Does Cover - The Big Print." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 171.

Beasley, Oscar H. "Bankruptcy Aspects of Title Insurance Underwriting." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 1007.

Beasley, Oscar H., Paul L. Hammann, and Anne Nelson Lanphar. "A Brave New Title Insurance World." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 973.

Bonita, Joseph C., "An Elizabethan Legacy: Creditor's Rights and Title Insurance," 12 Prob. & Prop. 38 (May/June 1998).

Boyette, David L. "Title Insurance Liability Beyond the Policy." Fla. B.J. Vol. 69 (July-Aug. 1995) 24.

Bozarth, Robert S. "Choosing a Title Insurance Policy." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 15.

Bozarth, Robert S. "Commercial Mortgage Finance Title Insurance Issues and Endorsements, Multi-Site Issues." PLI/Real 441 (1999) 779.

Bradford, James A., "Reserving Rights of Title Insurers in Third Party Actions," 11 Prob. & Prop. 16 (Jan.-Feb. 1997).

Carpi, Janice E. "Ancillary Services and Products Provided by Title Insurance Companies; NAIC Title Insurance Agent Model Act." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 329.

Carpi, Janice E. "Creditor's Rights and the 1992 ALTA Title Insurance Policies." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 313.

Carpi, Janice E. "Financial Considerations in Selecting a Title Insurance Company." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 371.

Coleman, Brian A., "Bar-Related Title Insurance in Utah," 10 Utah B.J. 18 (May 1997).

Faulkner, Richard D. Jr., "The Ten Commandments for Borrower's Title Insurance," 12 Prob. & Prop. 48 (May/June 1998).

Feinstein, Fred I. "Title Insurance: The Role of the Lawyer." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 9.

Flynn, Michael C. and Thomas R. McGrath, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 33 Tort & Ins. L.J. 699 (1998).

Gurren, Jeffrey G. "Lender's Title Insurance for Multi-State Transactions." SD75 ALI-ABA 469 (1999).

Gurren, Jeffrey G. "Maintaining and Enhancing Title Insurance Coverage." SD04 ALI-ABA 141 (1999).

Gurren, Jeffrey G. "Maintaining and Enhancing Title Insurance Coverage." SE50 ALI-ABA 213 (2000).

Hawes, Andrew E., "The Role of the Survey and the Survey Exception in Title Insurance," 42 Advocate (Idaho) 21 (January 1999).

Homburger, Thomas C. "Insurance Overlay on Title Insurance." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 585.

Jennings, Marianne M., "The Evolving Nature of Title Insurance as a Contract: Removing the Notions of Panacea," 25 Real Est. L.J. 301 (1997).

Jennings, Marianne M., "Why the Contract vs. Tort Distinction for Title Insurer Liability Is Important," 25 Real Est. L.J. 301 (1997).

Leeds, Matthew J. "Title Insurance." PLI/Real 440 (1999) 561.

Leeds, Matthew J. "Title Insurance." PLI/NY 48 (1999) 561.

Levy, Jack S. "Title Insurance and the LLC." Prob. & Prop. Vol. 9 (Jan.-Feb. 1995) 17.

McDonald, T. Mary. "Rating the Title Insurers." Prob. & Prop. Vol. 9 (Jan.-Feb. 1995) 10.

McGrath, Thomas R. and Michael C. Patton, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 34 Tort & Ins. L.J. 695 (1999).

Murray, John C. "Limited Liability Companies-Title Insurance and Other Issues." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 487.

Murray, John C. "Title Insurance: The Commercial Lender's Perspective; Exhibits." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 785.

Murray, John C. "Title Insurance Issues in Synthetic Leasing Transactions." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 801.

Palomar, Joyce Dickey, "Limited Liability Companies, Corporations, General Partnerships, Limited Partnerships, Joint Ventures, Trusts -- Who Does the Title Insurance Cover?" 31 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 605 (1997).

Pedowitz, James M. "What Title Insurance Does Not Cover." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 133.

Pasion, Rodney. "Utilizing the Title Insurance Company in Complex Transactions - Expanding Traditional Coverages." PLI/Real 439 (1999) 197.

Patton, Michael C. and Robert W. Sargeant. "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law." 35 Tort & Ins. L.J. 639 (2000).

Pedowitz, James M. "Condominium Unit Title Insurance." 73 St. John's L.Rev. 183 (1999).

Regalia, Edward L. "Handling and Litigation of Claims Relating to Title Insurance." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 627.

Regalia, Edmund L. "Prosecuting and Defending Title Insurance Claims." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 631.

Reinhardt, Joe A. "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," Tort & Ins. L. J. Vol. 31 (1996) 513.

Rifkin, Bernard M. "The Owner's Title Insurance Policy." PLI/Real Vol. 416 (1996) 113.

Rifkin, Bernard M. "Title Insurance." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 219.

Rivin, Jonathan and Thomas J. Stikker, "Title Insurance for Estate Planning Transfers," 12 Prob. & Prop. 15 (May/June 1998).

Simins, Robert A. "Utilizing the Title Insurance Company in Complex Transactions - Expanding Traditional Coverages." PLI/Real 439 (1999) 215.

Stein, Joshua. "Model Title Insurance Instructions for Commercial Mortgage Loan." PLI/Real 441 (1999) 963.

Werner, Raymond J. "Endorsements and Affirmative Coverages for Commercial Title Insurance." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 355.

Wilson, Patricia A. "A Guide to Ethical Issues for Title Insurance Lawyers." PLI/Real 448 (1999) 849.

Woods, Susan E. "Title Insurance Considerations in Construction Disbursing." Claw IL-CLE 17 S-1 (Illinois Handbook Supplement--1999).

Annotations

Annotation, Amount of Recovery, Measure, Extent, or Amount of Recovery on Title Insurance Policy, 60 A.L.R.2d 972.

Annotation, Attorney's Personal Liability for Expenses Incurred in Relation to Services for Client, 66 A.L.R.4th 256.

Annotation, Construction of Clause in Title Insurance Policy Excepting Defects Resulting from the Rights of Parties in Possession, 94 A.L.R. 3d 1188.

Annotation, "Defect in, or Condition of, Adjacent Land or Way as Within Coverage of Title Insurance Policy," 8 A.L.R.4th 1246.

Annotation, Defects Affecting Marketability of Title Within Meaning of Title Insurance Policy, 18 A.L.R. 4th 1311.

Annotation, "Duty of Applicant or His Agent to Disclose Facts Arising or Discovered After Application for Title Insurance," 75 A.L.R. 3d 600.

Annotation, Enforceability of Single Mechanic's Lien Upon Several Parcels Against Less than the Entire Property Liened, 68 A.L.R.3d 1300.

Annotation, Errors and Omissions Policy -- Insurance Agents' and Brokers' Professional Liability Insurance, 55 A.L.R.5th 681.

Annotation, Fraud Predicated on Vendor's Misrepresentation or Concealment of Danger or Possibility of Flooding or Other Unfavorable Water Conditions, 90 A.L.R.3d 568.

Annotation, Insurable Interest in Property of Lessee with Option to Purchase Property, 74 A.L.R. 4th 883.

Annotation, Misrepresentation or Concealment by Insured or Agent Avoiding Liability by Title Insurer, 17 A.L.R. 4th 1077.

Annotation, Necessity and Reasonableness of Vendor's Notice to Vendor of Requisite Time of Performance of Contract After Prior Waiver or Extension of Original Time of Performance, 32 A.L.R.4th 8.

Annotation, "Redlining," Consisting of Denial of Home Loans or Insurance Coverage in Certain Neighborhoods, as Discrimination in Violation of §§ 804 and 805 of Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C.S. §§ 3604, 3605), 73 A.L.R. Fed. 899.

Annotation, Retroactive Effect of Zoning Regulation, in Absence of Saving Clause, on Pending Application for Building Permit, 50 A.L.R.3d 596.

Annotation, Scope and Exemptions of State Deceptive Trade Practice and Consumer Protection Acts, 89 A.L.R.3d 399.

Annotation, Title Examination Activities by Lending Institution, Insurance Company or Title and Abstract Company, as Illegal Practice of Law, 85 A.L.R. 2d 184.

Annotation, Title Insurance Company's Rights in Title Information, 38 A.L.R. 4th 968.

Annotation, Title Insurance: Exclusion of Liability for Defects, Liens, or Encumbrances Created, Suffered, Assumed, or Agreed to by the Insured, 87 A.L.R. 3d 515.

Annotation, Title Insurer's Negligent Failure to Discover and Disclose Defect as Basis for Liability in Tort, 19 A.L.R. 5th 786.

Annotation, Validity and Construction of Insurance Anti-Rebate Statutes, 90 A.L.R.4th 213.

Annotation, Variance Between Offer and Acceptance in Regard to Title as Affecting Consummation of Contract for Sale of Real Property, 16 A.L.R.3d 1424.

Annotation, Waiver by Insured or Insured's Agent of Required Notice of Cancellation of Insurance Policy, 86 A.L.R.4th 886.

Annotation, What Constitutes a Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien Within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 A.L.R.3d 764.

Annotation, What Is An "Insurance Company" under § 831(a)(1) of Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C.S. § 831(a)(1)), or Its Predecessors, Providing for Tax on Insurance Companies Other Than Life or Mutual, 49 A.L.R. Fed. 452.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.01

Supp. to § 93.01 Overview of the Title Insurance Industry.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Barstad v. Stewart Title Guaranty Company, Inc., 39 P.3d 984 (Wash. 2002) (title insurers have no general duty to disclose known or potential title defects when issuing preliminary title commitments); Hess v. Baccarat, 731 N.Y.S.2d 296 (2001) (preliminary title report is merged in the final policy).

Add:

Donald Roth, "Building a House in the Sand: The Intersection of Good Law and Bad Policy in First American Title Insurance Co. v. Combs," 62 Tax Law. 1137 (Summer, 2009) (brief history of title insurance beginning in 1853).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.02

Supp. to § 93.02 Nature of Title Insurance.

First Amendment

§ 93.02(a) Introduction. [Go To Main]

After the word "indefinitely" in line 2, add new note 39.1 n39.1

§ 93.02(b) Contract of Indemnity. [Go To Main]

Add:

GE Capital Mortgage Services, Inc. v. Privetera, 788 A.2d 324 (N.J. Super. 2002) (mortgagee was not a third-party beneficiary of the title insurance contract).

Add:

Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Assocs., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29318 (E.D. Ky. 2010)) (title insurance does not insure that no lien or encumbrance will be found).

Add:

Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Runkel Abstract & Title Co., 610 F. Supp. 2d 973 (W.D. Wis. 2009) (the title agency was liable after damages were suffered by the policy holder since the agency was negligent); Amato v. United Gen. Title Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21266 (E.D. Pa. 2009) (a title insurance company guarantees the correctness of title searches and insures property owners against loss or damage incurred as a result of defects in their titles); Griffin v. Chi. Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26812 (D. Md. 2010) (an insurer has a duty to defend a suit against the insured by a third party, for any claim that is potentially covered under the insurance policy; the potential success of the underlying claim is irrelevant).

Add:

National Mortgage Warehouse, LLC, v. Bankers First Mortgage Co., Inc., 190 F. Supp. 2d 774 (D. Md. 2002) (the insurance underwriter was not liable as a principal for the fraudulent acts of a title agent).

§ 93.02(d) Construction of Title Policies [Go To Main]

Add:

Northern Sec. Ins. Co. v. Doherty, 987 A.2d 253 (Vt. 2009) (if the plain meaning of policy terms is difficult to determine, the resulting ambiguity will be construed in favor of coverage for the insured); James McHugh Constr. Co. v. Zurich Am. Ins. Co., 2010 Ill. App. LEXIS 318 (Ill. App. Ct. 1st Dist. 2010) (if the words in a policy could have more than one reasonable interpretation, the court must consider them ambiguous and interpret them in favor of the insured).

Add:

Szelc v. Stanger, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112911 (D.N.J. 2009) (a title insurance policy whose terms are clear will be enforced as written, but when the meaning of an insurance policy is ambiguous, the ambiguity is construed in favor of the insured and against the insurer); Fleishour v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12905 (E.D. Mo. 2010) (ambiguous policy provisions, along with those that purport to restrict or eliminate coverage, are construed strongly against the insurer); Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 579 F.3d 304 (3d Cir. 2009) ; Jaco Envtl., Inc. v. Am. Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51785 (W.D. Wash. 2009) .

§ 93.02(e) Obligation of Good Faith and Fair Dealing. [Go To Main]

Add:

In re Carter, 553 F.3d 979 (6th Cir. 2009) (action under RESPA anti-kickback and anti-fee-splitting provisions, permitted even without allegation of overcharging).

Robinson v. Fountainhead Title Group Corp., 447 F. Supp. 2d 478 (D. Md. 2006) (title insurer subject to liability for violation of RESPA provisions).

Stewart Title Guaranty Co., v. Hadnot, 101 S.W.3d 642 (Tex. App. 2003) (action for breach of policy accrues when coverage is denied, rather than when loss was sustained); Harms v. Burt, 40 P.3d 329 (Kan. App. 2002) (insurers have no general duty to disclose potential or known title defects at the time they issue a preliminary title commitment).

Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Runkel Abstract & Title Co., 610 F. Supp. 2d 973 (W.D. Wis. 2009) (a company did not act in good faith and forfeited its right to indemnity under state law by failing to give an agency an opportunity to protect its own interests); Stewart Title Co. v. Investors Funding Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46334 (D. Haw. 2010) (insurer sued because it failed to list both properties the insured believed were being protected by their insurance policy).

Add:

Fidelity National Title Insurance Co. v. Matrix Financial Services Corp., 567 S.E.2d 96 (Ga. App. 2002) (bad faith penalities for insurer's refusal to pay the claim).

New note 55.1, at end of fourth sentence: n55.1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 39.1. First Midwest Bank v. Stewart Title Guaranty Company, 823 N.E.2d 168 (Ill. App. 2005) (when a wraparound loan paid of purchase and construction loans, the title insurer's liability under a lender's policy was terminated).

(n2)Footnote 55.1. Archambo v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corp., 646 N.W.2d 170 (Mich. 2002) (the statement in the title insurance policy requiring disclosure of any known lien was not a condition precedent to the policy being in effect).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.03

Supp. to § 93.03 Statement of Coverage.

[Go To Main]

§ 93.03(a) Insuring Clauses. [Go To Main]

§ 93.03(a)(2) Any Defect in or Lien or Encumbrance on Such Title.

Add:

Hanson Business Park, L.P. v. First Nat. Title Ins. Co., 209 S.W.3d 867 (Tex. App. 2006) (flood plain designation was not a defect in the title);

Elysian Investment Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., 129 Cal. Rptr 2d 372 (2002) (a notice of the premises being classified as substandard did not constitute a defect in or lien or encumbrance on the title); Universal Holdings II Limited Partnership v. Overlake Christian Church, 60 P.3d 1254 (Wash. App. 2003) (title insurer liable for loss resulting from erroneous legal description).

Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Assocs., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29318 (E.D. Ky. 2010) (a defect in title occurs when the rights, privileges and powers of property ownership are subject to the claims of others).

Add:

Universal Holdings II Limited Partnership v. Overlake Christian Church, 60 P.3d 1254 (Wash. App. 2003) (insurer liability for erroneous legal description).

Gordon v. Terrace Mortg. Co., 571 F.3d 1342 (11th Cir. 2009) (lack of notary seal on the deed was not sufficient to be a defect because an affidavit filed with the deed had a signature signed by a notary); Fleishour v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12905 (E.D. Mo. 2010) (adverse possession of a portion of the property is deemed a defect in the property title and the insurer is liable); Griffin v. Chi. Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26812 (D. Md. 2010) (mere negligence by the insured is not sufficient to establish a policy exclusion for a defect); Morrison v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45312 (M.D. Pa. 2010) (defect in title occurred when the insurer insured a property not realizing that the property was owned by someone else with the same name and initials, but different middle name); Nielson v. Equitable Title Agency, Inc., 2010 Bankr. LEXIS 837 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2010) (an encumbrance on the property, which prevented purchasers from refinancing, selling, or conveying their home, was deemed a defect in the title and the insurer was liable).

Ray H. Rhone & Denise Rhone v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2010 Ill. App. LEXIS 422 (Ill. App. Ct. 1st Dist. 2010) (an encumbrance may be broader than a lien and may include any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in a third party).

Add:

Frazier v. Citifinancial Corp., LLC, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 8960 (11th Cir. 2010) (bank was given an equitable lien on the property after the borrower refused to repay the mortgage); First Am. Bank v. First Am. Transp. Title Ins. Co., 585 F.3d 833 (5th Cir. 2009) (two ships were sold in foreclosure for the value of necessaries liens).

Add:

Park 100 Investment Group II, LLC v. Ryan, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218 (Cal. App. 2009) (even where a parcel is not landlocked, the lack of access to an easement can have devastating effects).

Add:

Riordan v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, 393 F. Supp. 2d 1100 (D. N.M. 2005) (title policy covered lack of access, but there was no such lack of access as would invoke coverage under the policy).

Uzzle v Nunzie Ct. Homeowners Assn., Inc., 895 N.Y.S.2d 203 (2010) (insured claimed damages because he had no legal right to access the premises).

Add:

A.R.S. § 11-809(G)(1) (in Arizona, legal access is defined as a public right of vehicular ingress and egress between the lots, parcels or fractional interests being created).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.04

Supp. to § 93.04 Exclusions from Coverage.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Nielson v. Equitable Title Agency, Inc., 2010 Bankr. LEXIS 837 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2010) (generally, title insurance coverage extends to existing unsatisfied mortgages, unless one of the following exceptions applies: "(i) the condition was physically observable by an inspection of the premises; (ii) the insured expressly assumed the condition; (iii) the condition resulted from the fraud of the insured; or (iv) the insured had actual, express knowledge of the condition").

Add:

Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 579 F.3d 304 (3d Cir. 2009) (in order to except restrictions from coverage, the insurer, and not the insured, is required to list the actual restriction in such a schedule).

Add:

Kandasha v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2009 Mich. App. LEXIS 1428 (Mich. Ct. App. 2009) (although the condemnation proceedings were available to the public at the time of the policy, the police power exclusion applies because the records were not considered sufficiently "public" to give the insurer adequate notice).

§ 93.04(a) Matters Exclusively Known or Controlled By the Insured [Go To Main]

Add:

Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. IDC Properties, Inc., 547 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 2008) (policy held null and void because of material misrepresentations by the insured).

Add:

Murnan Spring Hill Trust v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 6619 (4th Cir. 2010) (tax liens were excluded from coverage under a title insurance policy because the insured was aware of IRS tax judgments against her when she purchased the property and those judgments automatically became liens on all property held by her); Jerel J. Hill and Jennifer Pugh Stephens, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 44 Tort & Ins. L.J. 745 (2009) (sometimes courts will go beyond the form of a title insurance policy to find for the insurer when the insured failed to disclose information that it had regarding the status of title).

Add:

Kandasha v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2009 Mich. App. LEXIS 1428 (Mich. Ct. App. 2009) (the condemnation proceedings not considered "public records" even though although they were available to the public); Morrison v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45312 (M.D. Pa. 2010) (owner of a property did not have constructive notice that a mortgage was erroneously recorded on his property, because the owner would have no reason to check the property records at random to determine if a mortgage was erroneously recorded); United States v. Buenting, 2009 Bankr. LEXIS 2612 (9th Cir. 2009) (it is irrelevant what the insurer should have or would have done to discover the liens, as the issue is only whether a subsequent purchaser has constructive notice of the tax liens through inspection of the public records).

§ 93.04(b) Defect Resulting in No Loss or Damage [Go To Main]

Add:

BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 963 (8th ed. 2004) (actual loss is a loss resulting from the real and substantial destruction of insured property); First Am. Bank v. First Am. Transp. Title Ins. Co., 585 F.3d 833 (5th Cir. 2009) (consequential damages, losses that do not flow directly and immediately from an injurious act but that result indirectly from the act, are not included in "actual losses")

§ 93.04(c) Defects That Attach or Are Created After the Policy Date. [Go To Main]

Add:

U.S. Bank Nat. Ass'n TR U/A DTD 12/01/98 v. Stewart Title Co., 832 N.Y.S.2d 223 (2007) (defect was covered because it arose before the date of the title insurance policy).

Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Assocs., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29318 (E.D. Ky. 2010) (lack of access to the property, although covered in the policy, was excluded because it occurred by the insured failing to make assessment payments after the date of the policy).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.05

Supp. to § 93.05 Conditions and Stipulations.

[Go To Main]

§ 93.05(a) Definitions. [Go To Main]

§ 93.05(a)(1) Definition of "Insured."

§ 93.05(a)(1)(A) The Meaning of "Insured" in the Loan Policy.

Add:

Lone Star Steakhouse and Saloon, Inc. v. Quaranta, 2003 Ohio App. LEXIS 2957 (No. 02-CA-156, Jun. 18, 2003) (vendors were not intended third-party beneficiaries of the purchaser's title insurance policy).

Add:

See also First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp., 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 801 (Cal. App. 2009) (defined an insured as the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage or a successor in ownership and held that for an entity to meet the definition of an insured in the title insurance policies, there had to be an existing indebtedness between the named borrower and the lender); See generally Jerel L. Hill and Jennifer Pugh Stephens. "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 44 Tort & Ins. L.J. 745 (2009) (general discussion on the recent developments of the term "insured" in title insurance).

Add:

Gray v. First American Title Insurance Co., 2003 Cal. App. LEXIS 403 (No. B158535, Feb. 3, 2003) (claim not covered under a title insurance policy that extended coverage for only so long as the insured owned an interest in the land).

Add:

Carney-Dunphy v. Title Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55418 (D.N.J. 2009) (voluntary lifetime transfers do not occur by operation of law and consequently do not meet the requirements of being insured).

§ 93.05(b) The Duty to Search Title and Report Adverse Matters. [Go To Main]

§ 93.05(b)(1) The Insurer's Duty to Search for and Report Adverse Claims.

Add:

Fleishour v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12905 (E.D. Mo. 2010) (the maximum recoveyr for the loss of damages was limited to the related section on Schedule A).

Add:

First Am. Bank v. First Am. Transp. Title Ins. Co., 585 F.3d 833 (5th Cir. 2009) (the plain language of "actual damages" in title insurance policies does not require restitution for consequential damages).

Add:

Barrington Reinsurance, Ltd. v. Fidelity Natl. Title Ins. Co., 172 P.3d 168 (N.M. App. 2007) (the benefit of the insurer's duty to search and examine title did not run to third parties).

§ 93.05(b)(2) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Implied Contract.

Add:

First Midwest Bank v. Stewart Title Guaranty Company, 843 N.E.2d 327 (Ill. 2006) (the title insurer was held to be not in the business of providing information when it issued a title commitment).

Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Assocs., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29318 (E.D. Ky. 2010) (title insurance does not insure that no lien or encumbrance will be found and an insured's claim must be based on the policy itself rather than on negligence by the insurer).

Add:

Christensen v. Reed, 941 A.2d 333 (Conn. App. 2008) (failure to conduct complete title search of all abutting properties precluded proof that there were no alternative means of access).

Add:

Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Dewrell Sacks, LLP, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109757 (M.D. Tenn. 2009) (the insured's claim must be based in contract, not negligence); First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp., 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 801 (Cal. App. 2009) (in California, title insurance is a contract for indemnity under which the insurer is obligated to indemnify the insured against losses sustained in the event that a specific contingency occurs; accordingly, when the contingency insured against under the policy occurs, the title insurer is not liable to the insured for damages in contract or tort, but rather is obligated to indemnify the insured under the terms of the policy).

Add:

Wallace v. Frontier Bank, 903 So. 2d 792 (Ala. 2004) (title company was not acting as a title examining agent).

§ 93.05(b)(3) Duty to Search and Report Defects: Based on Tort.

§ 93.05(b)(3)(A) Negligent Search and Examination.

Add:

House v. First American Title Co., 883 N.E.2d 197 (Ind. App. 2008) (claim that title search had not revealed two judgment liens against mortgagors).

Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Runkel Abstract & Title Co., 610 F. Supp. 2d 973 (W.D. Wis. 2009) (the title agency was liable for damages suffered by the policy holder since the agency was negligent in not properly searching).

Add:

Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Assn., Inc., 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 659 (Cal. App. 2009) (the reports serve to apprise the prospective insured of the state of title against which the insurer is willing to issue a title insurance policy).

Add:

Fidelity National Title Insurance Co. of N.Y. v. Suburban West Abstractors, 2004 Pa. Super. LEXIS 1243 (No. 2290 EDA 2003, May 24, 2004) (title insurer liable for failing to discover a judgment against the insured's mortgagors).

§ 93.05(b)(3)(B) Negligent Misrepresentation of Title

Add:

Brown & Brown of Tex., Inc. v. Omni Metals, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2338, 60-61 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2010) (the law imposes a duty on the title insurer to know whether a statement made to the seller is true, and it holds the insurer responsible for an affirmative representation that is the "producing cause" of damages to the insured).

§ 93.05(b)(4) Proper Scope of the Insurer's Duty to Search and Report Defects.

Add:

Vorgitch v. Fidelity National Title Insurance Company, 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 4635 (Jan. 23, 2002) (title insurer had no duty to describe an easement as an encumbrance on insureds' property).

§ 93.05(c) The Duty to Defend. [Go To Main]

Add:

LLJBJ Partnership v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 816 N.Y.S.2d 529 (2006) (obligation to defend included payment of insured's attorney fees, costs and expenses in the underlying action).

Ben-Avraham v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corp., 786 N.Y.S.2d 272 (2004) (insurer obligated to tender a defense).

Add:

Kirwan v. Chicago Title Insurance Company, 624 N.W.2d 644 (Neb. 2001) (the insureds' failure to give the insurer notice of a claim of which they were awarded excluded their claim from coverage under the title insurance policy).

Morgan v. Chicago Title Insurance Co., 65 Fed. Appx. 184 (9th Cir. 2003) (a letter from the insureds triggered the titler insurer's duty to defend).

Add:

Chicago Title Insurance Co. v. 100 Investment Limited Partnership, 355 F.3d 759 (4th Cir. 2004) (the title insurer had a duty to defend in a trespass action filed after the policy period but based on actions that occurred within the period).

Decaro v. M. Felix, Inc., 864 N.E.2d 890 (Ill. App. 2007) (the duty to defend did not require the insurer to take an interlocutory appeal from the trial court's denial of a motion to allocate proceeds).

Add:

Travelers Prop. Cas. Co. of Am. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 598 F.3d 257 (6th Cir. 2010) (an insurer is liable in a bad faith action for all damages flowing from its refusal to defend based on mistaken, though good faith, belief that coverage did not extend to the claim).

Add:

Hauck Holdings Columbia SC, LLC v. Target Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28512 (S.D. Ohio 2010) (no duty to defend was found because insured presented no contentions that, if proven true, would invoke coverage); Szelc v. Stanger, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112911 (D.N.J. 2009) (where the policy contained an exclusion for title risks that were created, allowed, or agreed to by the insured or that were known to the insured, there was no duty to defend where the insured knowingly participated in the alleged fraud); But see Travelers Prop. Cas. Co. of Am. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 598 F.3d 257 (6th Cir. 2010) (an insurer has a duty to defend any allegation which potentially, possibly or might come within the coverage terms of the insurance policy).

Add:

Chicago Title Insurance Company v. The Kent School Corporation, 361 F. Supp. 2d 4 (D. Conn. 2005) (duty to defend could not be terminated by the insurer tendering the full amount of its indemnity obligation).

Add:

Jaco Envtl., Inc. v. Am. Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51785 (W.D. Wash. 2009) (if the complaint is ambiguous, it will be liberally construed in favor of triggering the insurer's duty to defend); Morrison v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45312 (M.D. Pa. 2010) (any uncertainties regarding the insurer's duty to defend must be resolved in the insured's favor).

Add:

Schneider v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 844 N.Y.S.2d 657 (2007) (insurer had duty to appeal from a judgment in the neighbor's adverse possession action against the insureds).

§ 93.05(c)(1) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Covered Grounds.

Add:

Chicago Title Insurance Company v. The Kent School Corporation, 361 F. Supp. 2d 4 (D. Conn. 2005) (the title insurer's duty to defend is not relieved by tendering the full amount of the indemnity obligation).

Add:

Spurgeon v. Coan & Elliott, 180 S.W.3d 593 (Tex. App. 2005) (title insurer had no duty to defend its client in other real estate litigation).

§ 93.05(c)(2) The Insurer's Obligation to Defend Non-Covered Grounds

Add:

Quigley v. Travelers Prop. Cas. Ins. Co., 630 F. Supp. 2d 1204 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (an insurer is required to defend against both covered and noncovered claims until the insurer produces undeniable evidence supporting an allocation of a specific portion of the defense costs to a noncovered claim); Cooper Indus. LLC v. Am. Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co., 350 Fed. Appx. 876 (5th Cir. 2009) (if covered and noncovered causes combine to create a harm, the insurer is liable only for the portion of the loss caused solely by the covered cause and the insured bears the burden of showing that a loss is covered); Walton v. First American Title Insurance Company, 844 N.E.2d 143 (Ind. App. 2006) (no duty to defend).

§ 93.05(d) Subrogation [Go To Main]

Add:

Tiffany v. Chevy Chase Bank, F.S.B., 342 Fed. Appx. 303 (9th Cir. 2009) (equitable subrogation); Columbia Cmty. Credit Union v. Chi. Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12624 (W.D. Wash. 2010) .

§ 93.05(e) Arbitration of Claims. [Go To Main]

Add:

Henderson v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, 843 N.E.2d 152 (Ohio 2006) (the insurer was unable to demonstrate that an arbitration clause is a usual and customary term in title insurance policies).

§ 93.05(f) Measurement of Losses Under Title Insurance Policy. [Go To Main]

Add:

GE Capital Mortgage Services v. Privetera, 788 A.2d 324 (N.J. Super. 2002) (the mortgagee was not a third-party beneficiary of this insurance policy).

Add:

Rose Dev. Corp. v. Einhorn, 886 N.Y.S.2d 59 (2009) (if it is a total loss of title, the loss is usually the market value of the property within the policy limit).

Add:

First Internet Bank of Ind. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59673 (S.D. Ind. 2009) (date of resale used).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.06

Supp. to § 93.06 Exceptions.

[Go To Main]

§ 93.06(b) Rights of Parties in Possession [Go To Main]

Add:

Crossman v. Yacubovich, 290 S.W.3d 775 (Mo. Ct. App. 2009) (insurers do not insure every title defect, and exceptions from coverage do not constitute an unfair trade practice or violate public policy).

Add:

Edison v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11608 (E.D. Mo. 2010) .

Add:

Doyle v. Siddo, 865 N.Y.S.2d 126 (2008) (upholding policy provision excepting from coverage all liability incurred by reason of rights of persons in possession of the property).

§ 93.06(c) Encroachments or Other Matters Which Would Be Disclosed by an Accurate Survey and Inspection. [Go To Main]

Add:

Bennett v. Investors Title Ins. Co., 635 S.E.2d 649 (S.C. App. 2006) (policy did not insure against surveying errors).

Add:

Morton v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2009 Fla. App. LEXIS 9453 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 2009) (survey exception did not apply where the insurer overlooked a recorded easement that resulted in the insurer receiving less than they originally anticipated).

Add:

Morton v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2009 Fla. App. LEXIS 9453 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 2009) (survey exception did not apply because notice of defect could have been found in public record).

§ 93.06(f) Taxes or Special Assessments Not Shown as Liens by the Public Records [Go To Main]

Add:

Rhone v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2010 Ill. App. LEXIS 422 (Ill. App. Ct. 1st Dist. 2010) (although the assessment of property taxes was virtually certain, they were not liens at the date of policy and the insurer was not liable).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.07

Supp. to § 93.07 Endorsements

[Go To Main]

Add:

Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 579 F.3d 304 (3d Cir. 2009) (for a specific endorsement to a title insurance policy to be valid, the insurer, and not the insured, must actually list restriction in such a schedule in order to except them).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.08

Supp. to § 93.08 Regulation of Title Insurers.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Alston v. Countrywide Fin. Corp., 585 F.3d 753 (3d Cir. 2009) ; Gerhart v. Beazer Homes Holdings Corp., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24297 (E.D. Cal. 2009) .

Add:

Munoz v. PHH Corp., 659 F. Supp. 2d 1094 (E.D. Cal. 2009) .

§ 93.08(a) Regulation Aimed at Assuring Ability of Insurers to Pay Claims. [Go To Main]

Add:

National Mortgage Warehouse v. Bankers First Mortgage Co, Inc., 190 F. Supp. 2d 774 (D. Md. 2002) (the insurance underwriter was not liable as a principal for the fraudulent acts of the title agent).

Add:

Dolan v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814 (2d Cir. 2010) (new rates must be filed with the state insurance department).

§ 93.08(b) Other Consumer Protection Regulations. [Go To Main]

Add:

Kingsberry v. Chicago Title Ins. Co, 586 F. Supp. 2d 1248 (W.D. Wash. 2008) (rates governed by state insurance statute).

Add:

Roussin v. AARP, Inc., 664 F. Supp. 2d 412 (S.D. N.Y. 2009) (reason for the filed rate doctrine is that agencies are designed for the specific purpose of setting uniform rates and courts are not institutionally well suited to judge the reasonableness of rates); Dolan v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814 (2d Cir. 2010) (filed rate doctrine holds that a filed rate is per se reasonable and unassailable in judicial proceedings because the governing regulatory agency approved the rate).

Add:

Randleman v. Fidelity Nat. Title Ins. Co., 247 F.R.D. 528 (N.D. Ohio 2008) (class action alleging excessive title insurance premiums); Alberton v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co, 247 F.R.D. 469 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (class action alleging overcharges on title insurance); In re Escher, 369 B.R. 862 (E.D. Pa. 2007) (plaintiffs did not establish the title insurance charges were unreasonable).

Lewis v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16516 (D. Idaho 2010) (class action alleging overcharges on title insurance for refinanced mortgages).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.09

Supp. to § 93.09 Other Types of Real Property Insurance.

[Go To Main]

§ 93.09(a) Title Insurance Compared to Some other Types of Real Property Insurance [Go To Main]

Add:

Beckon, Inc. v. AMCO Ins. Co., 620 F. Supp. 2d 996 (E.D. Mo. 2009) (examples of parties having an insurable interest in the property include mortgagor-mortgagee, life tenant-remainderman, lessor-lessee, vendor-vendee, and vendor and optionee).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 93 TITLE INSURANCE

11-93 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 93.10

Supp. to § 93.10 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Articles:

Bales, Richard F. "Title Insurance Records and the Great Chicago Fire." 18 Prob. & Prop. 46 (January/February 2004) .

Beatie, Amy W. and Arthur R. Kleven. "The Devil in the Details: Water Rights and Title Insurance." 7 U. Denv. Water L. Rev. 381 (Spring 2004).

Bidar, Mohammed J., et al., "Problem Solved? Title Insurance Coverage for Real Property Transfers," 17 Ohio Prob. L.J 118 (January/February 2007).

Blyth, John E. "International Title Insurance." 16 Int'l L. Practicum 11 (Spring, 2003).

Bradford, James A. "The Alabama Title Insurance Act of 2001," 63 Ala. Law. 169 (May, 2002).

Bozarth, Robert S. "Organizing Title Insurance for a Multisite Transaction," 15 Prob. & Prop. 43 (May/June, 2001) .

Clemm, Christina. "Title Insurance in Mexico: A Necessary Protection, Duplicative Expense, or Something in Between?" 9 San Diego Int'l L.J. 419 (Spring 2008).

Hammann, Paul L. and John C. Murray, "Creditors' Rights Risk: A Title Insurer's Perspective." 38 J. Marshall L. Rev. 223 (Fall 2004).

Hill, Jerel J. & Stephens, Jennifer Pugh. "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 44 Tort & Ins. L.J. 745 (2009).

Hill, Jerel J. and Jennifer Pugh Stephens, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 44 Tort Trial & Ins. Prac. L.J. 673 (Winter, 2009).

Hill, Jerel J. and Jennifer Pugh Stephens, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 43 Tort Trial & Ins. Prac. L.J. 673 (Spring, 2008).

Hill, Jerel J. and Thomas R. McGrath, "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 40 Tort Trial & Ins. Prac. L.J. 735 (Winter, 2006).

Luberto, Michael L. "Title Insurance for the General Practitioner: Some Insider Tips," 86 Mich. B.J. 28 (November, 2007).

Maddox, Robert R. "Understanding Title Insurance in Alabama," 62 Ala. Law. 374 (November, 2001).

McGaughey, Richard "Stoney". "Title Insurance Policy's Standard Exceptions: Love 'em or Love 'em," 50 Res Gestae 32 (March, 2007).

Murray, John C. "Attorney Malpractice in Real Estate Transactions: Is Title Insurance the Answer?" 42 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 221 (Summer, 2007).

Murray, John C. "Title Insurance Issues in Limited Liability Company Transactions," 15 Prob. & Prop. 43 (May/June 2001) .

Palomar, Joyce. "The 2006 ALTA Title Insurance Policies: What New Protection Do They Give?" 42 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 1 (Spring, 2007).

Quail, Beverly J. "Title Insurance Treatment of Zoning-Related Regulations and the ALTA Zoning Endorsement," 30 Colo. Law. 89 (June, 2001) .

Rieger, Paul. "Evolution to Revolution: Enhanced Title Insurance Protection," 34 Md. B.J. 25 (September/October, 2001).

Robertson, Patricia Quinn. "Kickbacks, RESPA and the Title Insurance Industry: How to Get a Foot in the (Courthouse) Door," 36 Real Est. L.J. 270 (Winter, 2007).

Roth, Donald. "Building a House in the Sand: The Intersection of Good Law and Bad Policy in First American Title Insurance Co. v. Combs," 62 Tax Law. 1137 (Summer, 2009).

Sargeant, Robert W. and Ferel F. Hill. "Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law," 36 Tort & Ins. L.J. 605 (Winter, 2001).

Strickler, Shannon S. "Iowa's Title Guaranty System: Is It Superior to Other States' Commercial Title Insurance?" 51 Drake L. Rev. 385 (2003).

Temkin, Harvey L. "The Value in Protecting the Tenant's Interest: Leasehold Title Insurance," 16 Prob. & Prop. 34 (May/June 2002) .

Walters, Julia A. "Safeguarding Colorado's Water Supply: The New Confluence of Title Insurance and Water Rights Conveyances," 77 U. Colo. L. Rev. 491 (Spring 2006).

Weston, James K. " 'Law-Related Service' and New RESPA Forms," 96 Ill. B.J. 212 (April, 2008).

Wutscher, Ralph T. "Title Insurance 'Overcharge' Cases Under the TILA." 58 Consumer Fin. L.Q. Rep. 325 (Winter 2004).

Add to Annotations:

Annotation, "Exclusive right to sell" and other terms in real-estate broker's contract as excluding owner's right of sale, 88 A.L.R.2d 936.

Annotation, Liability of real-estate broker or agent to principal for concealing or failing to disclose offer, 7 A.L.R.3d 693.

Annotation, Liability of vendor's real-estate broker or agent to purchaser for misrepresentations as to, or nondisclosure of, physical defects of property sold, 8 A.L.R.3d 550.

Annotation, Suspension or revocation of real-estate broker's license on ground of discrimination. 42 A.L.R.3d 1099.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 94.syn

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.syn Synopsis to Chapter 94: CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

§ 94.01 Introduction.

§ 94.02 Key Steps and Documents in a Residential Transaction.

§ 94.02(a) Overview.

§ 94.02(b) Elements of the Transaction and Related Forms.

§ 94.02(b)(1) Listing Agreement.

§ 94.02(b)(2) Purchase-and-Sale Agreement.

§ 94.02(b)(3) Preliminary Title Report and Title Insurance Policy.

§ 94.02(b)(4) Deed.

§ 94.02(b)(5) Escrow Instructions.

§ 94.02(b)(6) Promissory Note.

§ 94.02(b)(7) Mortgage or Deed of Trust.

§ 94.02(b)(7)(i) Parties to a Security Instrument.

§ 94.02(b)(7)(ii) Evidence of Release, Reconveyance, and Satisfaction.

§ 94.03 Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

§ 94.03(a) The Case for Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

§ 94.03(b) The Case Against Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

§ 94.03(c) Conflict Issues Arising from One Attorney Acting for Both Sides.

§ 94.03(d) An Alternative Model in Europe.

§ 94.04 Two Types of Closings.

§ 94.04(a) The New York Style Closing.

§ 94.04(b) The California Closing.

§ 94.05 Preparations for Closing.

§ 94.05(a) An Escrow Agent's Steps to Prepare for Closing.

§ 94.05(b) A Lawyer's Steps to Prepare for Closing.

§ 94.05(c) Tax Considerations Before Closing.

§ 94.05(c)(1) FIRPTA Compliance.

§ 94.05(c)(2) Tax Reporting of the Sale.

§ 94.05(d) Inspections and Inspection Contingencies Before Closing.

§ 94.05(e) The Loan Closing.

§ 94.05(f) The RESPA Forms.

§ 94.05(g) The Closing Statement.

§ 94.06 The Escrow.

§ 94.06(a) History.

§ 94.06(b) Choosing an Escrow Agent.

§ 94.06(c) Escrow Instructions.

§ 94.06(d) When Escrow Malfunctions, Who Is Liable?

§ 94.06(e) Escrow Agent's Duties.

§ 94.06(f) Inconsistencies Between Escrow Instructions and the Purchase-and-Sale Contract.

§ 94.06(g) Delivery.

§ 94.06(g)(1) Delivery Defined and the Impetus for Using Escrows.

§ 94.06(g)(2) Conditional Delivery of Deed to Grantee Becomes a Deed Absolute Free of Conditions.

§ 94.06(g)(3) Conditional Delivery of Deed to Third Party Can't Be Validly Delivered Until Conditions Are Met.

§ 94.06(g)(4) How the Delivery Rule Can Save Sellers from a Devious or Careless Escrow Agent.

§ 94.06(g)(5) The Presumptive Delivery Date in an Escrow Closing.

§ 94.06(g)(6) Escrows and "Relation Back" Theories Determine the Date of Delivery.

§ 94.06(g)(7) The Doctrine of Inurement.

§ 94.07 Aspects of Deeds Especially Pertinent to Conveyancing.

§ 94.07(a) Deed as Evidence of Transfer, Not Title.

§ 94.07(b) Types of Deeds.

§ 94.07(b)(1) General Warranty.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(i) Where They Are Used.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(ii) The Common-Law Warranties.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(iii) The Statutory Short Forms.

§ 94.07(b)(2) Special Warranty Deed and Grant Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(i) The Context of a Grant or Special Warranty Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(ii) Why Grant or Special Warranty Deeds Are Used in Some States.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(iii) When a General Warranty Deed Might Be Used in a Grant Deed State.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(iv) Language to Further Restrict the Grantor's Liability Under a Grant Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(v) Statutory Short Forms for Special Warranty or Grant Deeds.

§ 94.07(b)(3) Quitclaim Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(i) Why Quitclaim Deeds Are Used.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(ii) After-Acquired Property Doesn't Pass by Quitclaim Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(iii) Some Quitclaim Short Form Statutes Imply Obligations on the Part of the Grantor.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(iv) Quitclaim Grantee May Not Be a Bona Fide Purchaser.

§ 94.07(c) Damages for Breach of Title Covenants.

§ 94.07(c)(1) Distinguishing Future from Present Covenants.

§ 94.07(c)(2) Little or No Damage Usually Accompanies Breach of Present Covenants.

§ 94.07(c)(3) Damage for Breach of Future Covenants Can Be Sizeable But Is Usually Limited to the Purchase Price.

§ 94.07(d) Distinctions Between Marketable Title Standard and Deed Covenants for Good Title.

§ 94.07(e) Enforcement by Remote Grantees.

§ 94.07(f) Formalities: Recording, Tax Statements, and Documentary Transfer Tax Information.

§ 94.07(g) Formalities: Acknowledgment.

§ 94.07(h) Curative Acts.

§ 94.07(i) Notaries and Forged Deeds.

§ 94.07(j) Identification of Grantor.

§ 94.07(k) Grantor Competency.

§ 94.07(l) Forged and Void Deeds.

§ 94.07(m) Words of Transfer.

§ 94.07(n) Identification of New Owners (Grantees).

§ 94.07(o) Signature of the Grantor.

§ 94.07(p) Date.

§ 94.07(q) Acceptance.

§ 94.07(r) Covenants, Exceptions and Reservations.

§ 94.07(s) Legal Description of the Property.

§ 94.07(s)(1) Metes and Bounds.

§ 94.07(s)(2) The Government Survey.

§ 94.07(s)(3) Subdivision Maps.

§ 94.08 Surveys.

§ 94.09 Bibliography.

Professor George Lefcoe
The Law Center
University of Southern California

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.01

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.01 Introduction.

The origin of the practice of utilizing a contract of sale during the conveyance process may trace its roots to the English Statute of Uses. The Statute of Uses was relied upon for the creation of common-law executory estates. These executory estates then evolved into fee simple transfers of real property through the contractual instrument.

Another key element to the evolution of the conveyance process was the enaction of the Statute of Frauds. The English Statute of Frauds required that after 1677 deeds for the transfer of real property be in writing. The English Statute of Frauds was later codified as § 40 of the Law of Property Act 1925.

Although real estate conveyancing procedures vary greatly from state to state and even within states, a core of common or equivalent procedures, administered under similar rules of law, can be found in almost all jurisdictions. This chapter describes those with helpful examples from the most common conveyancing situations.

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.02

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.02 Key Steps and Documents in a Residential Transaction.

§ 94.02(a) Overview.

The first part of this chapter provides a brief overview of the sequence and major documents involved in a typical residential property transfer. Customarily, a residential real estate deal begins when the owners decide to sell, and then interview several brokers to find one acceptable to them. Through the Listing Agreement, which is an agency agreement between the seller and the broker, the owners authorize the broker to search for a buyer, and put a sale together.

The broker markets the property to the public by targeting potential buyers through newspaper advertising, "for sale" signs on the premises, and "open house" notices. The broker reaches other brokers by placing information about the property in a multiple listing service (MLS) -- a regional pool of broker listings -- or by holding "broker open houses."

Potential buyers parade through during "open house" day or by appointment. With luck, one of them signs a contract of sale often called a Binder or Deposit Receipt. The buyer may be represented by a second broker, or may be shown the property by the listing broker or a colleague of the listing broker.

After negotiating a deal, the buyer and seller both sign a Purchase and Sale Agreement. This agreement reduces the negotiated terms to a single writing in compliance with the Statute of Fraud's provision that all real estate contracts be in writing.

In some states buyers and sellers take the advice of the American Bar Association (ABA), and see their "attorney before signing any paper in connection with a real estate transaction," n1 before signing a purchase and sale agreement, and maybe even before signing a listing agreement. In some places, buyers and sellers sign contracts before consulting attorneys but include this language: "subject to the approval of the attorneys for the parties within_____days."

The American Bar Association makes its case for attorney involvement by cautioning buyers and sellers that brokers, lenders, or others in the process "may have interests that differ from those of the buyer or seller. Oftentimes they offer well-meaning advice, but they may not be aware of important legal concepts. The only person who is trained in knowing and understanding your legal rights and who is there solely to look after and protect your interests is your real estate attorney." n2

Nonetheless, in many states, including California, attorneys are rarely involved in single-family home transactions as a matter of simple economics. Their time at current billing rates can't be justified in terms of the contribution they might make. When lawyers are involved, it is usually as a favor for special clients or friends, or because the value of the house is so great the parties don't mind paying a few thousand dollars to get the little details right. In California, once the deal is signed, it is most often a broker, not a lawyer, who guides the buyer and seller through to closing.

The broker's commission is usually a percentage of the actual sales price, contingent on making a deal. Very few brokers enjoy the luxury of billing by the hour and those who do mostly represent commercial buyers. Since brokers work on contingent fees, they prefer short, simple contracts and quick closings. They have no incentive to encourage protracted negotiations. Brokers stick pretty much to filling in the blanks on standard printed forms. n3

In California and other western states, the broker typically works with an escrow agent. In these "Western style" closings, the escrow agent acts as a stakeholder and expediter. n4 Besides holding money from the buyer and a deed signed by the seller, the escrow agent processes the sale to closing based on a set of Escrow Instructions signed by buyer and seller. These instructions translate the terms of the contract into a series of tasks the buyer, seller, and their lenders must perform to close the deal. The escrow agent then tracks these tasks to completion. n5 Escrow agents may be employed by banks or title companies, or may be independent.

In "Eastern style" or "New York style" closings within states that don't use escrow agents, the escrow functions may be handled by real estate brokers, lenders, special non-attorney agents, "closers," lawyers, the sellers, or a title company.

To close a sale, someone must prepare several key items:

(1) evidence of seller's title, usually a preliminary title report followed by a title insurance policy;

(2) cash or equivalent from the buyer and new lender in the amount of the agreed purchase price;

(3) prepared and executed loan documents; and

(4) a signed and acknowledged deed from the seller granting title to the buyer;

The deed and any mortgages or deeds of trust should be promptly placed in the public land records. This is notice to the world that title has shifted to the new owner. If outstanding loans were paid off, mortgage satisfactions and reconveyances of deeds of trust from the lender will be recorded. In many states, including California, escrow agents and title insurers see that documents are recorded. In other states lawyers do it.

Upon closing, the seller usually vacates and turns over possession of the house to the buyer. If the buyer requires earlier possession or the seller needs to remain in possession after the closing, the parties should contract specially for it.

Where real estate brokers oversee closings, they are responsible for making sure deeds and mortgages get recorded, and are liable to buyers who suffer losses because the deed conveying title to them was not recorded.

The closing is the juridical moment when title passes from seller to buyer. That moment is usually when each party has done all that the contract specified they do as a condition to closing, and when all other contract contingencies have been met, unless the parties agreed that some items could be cleared post-closing. Typically, the closing occurs only when the buyer has paid the purchase price and the seller has conveyed marketable title, a title free of liens, encumbrances and defects.

Before closing, the seller is responsible for maintaining the property, paying taxes and keeping the property insured. From the very instant title passes to the buyer, the buyer becomes responsible for taxes, insurance, and maintenance. For example, suppose title passes at 10 a.m.; at 10:01 a.m. a hurricane rips the roof off, the damage is the buyer's problem.

§ 94.02(b) Elements of the Transaction and Related Forms.

§ 94.02(b)(1) Listing Agreement.

The first document signed in most home sales is the broker's listing agreement. This establishes an agency agreement between the seller and the real estate broker. The seller designates the broker as the agent to market the property. The agreement is called a "listing" agreement because the broker obtains the right to place the seller's property on the broker's list of properties for sale.

Typically, the agreement calls for the broker to receive as a commission a fixed percentage of the sales price, most commonly 5-7%. n6 The broker could have agreed to a flat fee-- a set price-- to sell the house. Or the broker could have agreed to keep as a commission all of the sales price in excess of an agreed amount. This is called a net listing -- illegal in some states. n7 But almost all listing agreements are for contingent fees. The seller pays the broker out of sales proceeds. No sale, no brokerage fee. Thus, signing the listing agreement is costless for the seller. The seller pays nothing to the broker until there is a sale.

Buyers use brokers, too. But the broker shuttling the buyer from house to house less frequently insists on a written agency agreement. When buyer's broker does, they usually insist on being the buyer's exclusive agent for a time. The buyer's broker is almost always paid by the seller's broker splitting the commission on closing.

Signing the listing agreement is painless for the seller because the seller pays nothing to the broker until a sale closes, and then the broker is paid out of the sale proceeds. n8

§ 94.02(b)(2) Purchase-and-Sale Agreement.

The purchase-and-sale agreement is the sale contract between the seller and the buyer: it specifies that the buyer promises to pay money, and the seller promises to sign the deed and other instruments necessary to convey title. This document often takes the form of a deposit receipt, usually signed first by an eager purchaser as an offer to the seller. Commonly, the seller will "counter" (counteroffer); the buyer may counter the counter and so forth until an agreement is reached. It should incorporate all the negotiated terms and conditions in the purchase/sale. n9

Sensible people put all important deals in writing. Smart brokers insist on it as evidence that they found a "ready, willing and able" buyer, so as to become entitled to their commissions. The Statute of Frauds n10 requires a writing for land sale contracts signed by "the party to be charged." Thus, the seller as well as the buyer will have to sign for each of them to be bound by it. n11 The Statute of Frauds is susceptible to attack in some states through the doctrine of partial performance. n12 In Sutton, an oral lease with an option to buy was entered into by tenants in possession. The tenants put forth a down payment toward the purchase price, increased their monthly rent payment to an amount equivalent to the monthly mortgage payment, reimbursed the owners semi-annually for the property taxes, and completed many improvements to the property. The property appreciated and the owners tried to force the tenants into paying a higher price for the property. The court held that the tenants' continued possession of the property and other actions were sufficiently related to the oral option contract to constitute part performance.

Many buyers, flush with excitement at a Sunday Open House, hand over a check and sign the so-called deposit receipt thinking it is only proof they are seriously interested in the property and a receipt for their check. The short form receipt describes the property, the price, and the parties, and may even set a tentative closing date.

Buyers and sellers alike must exercise caution when obtaining the signature of the other party on the purchase-and-sale agreement. Just as with contracts that are not for the sale of land, an infirm signature may render the transaction meaningless. Parties should confirm that the signing party is the rightful owner or has the power of attorney for the rightful owner of the property. Similarly, if the seller was married when the property was acquired or if a marriage occurred at a later date, the buyer should insist on the spouse either signing the purchase-and-sale agreement or a separate waiver of all rights in the property. Finally, the signing parties must have capacity to contract. Among the factors affecting capacity are whether the person is a minor, of unsound mind, placed under guardianship or a prisoner. If any of these factors are implicated, state law should be consulted in order to assure capacity and thereby an enforceable agreement.

Buyers seldom ask why they have had to sign a receipt for their own deposit. Buyers curious enough to ask may even be reassured by their broker that purchase contract details can be sorted out after the seller accepts the offer, "when we go into escrow." This advice is plainly wrong. The signed pieces of paper are the contract, full and final. Buyers may overlook the clear warning on the document itself that it is more than a deposit receipt. n13 It is an offer to purchase and becomes a binding contract when accepted by the seller!

Many deposit receipt forms do not address the risk of the buyer not being able to obtain financing, absent any contrary agreement with buyer. If the buyer isn't able to get the needed loan, the buyer could be found in breach of contract. Alternately, the buyer can insert language in the deposit receipt making the obligation to purchase contingent on obtaining financing.

Title need not be perfect to complete the transaction (few things are); but to be legally sufficient ("marketable"), the seller's title must satisfy prevailing local practice standards. Defects that make the title unmarketable must be waived by the buyer or cleared by the seller before the deal closes. In many states, brokers are abandoning the use of simple deposit receipt or short-form contracts for long printed forms detailing every aspect of the transaction. These take longer to fill out, and may scare off some potential buyers. But the long form specifies so many aspects of the deal that it reduces the chance of later confusion and conflict. Brokers have an enormous incentive to avoid disputes and collisions, since their commissions are often due only if there is a closing.

Take one example: Say the buyer had the right to review a preliminary title report and make a physical inspection of the property. But the contract did not specify the time within which these tasks were to be completed. The buyer wants six weeks but the seller thinks two weeks is ample. Unless they can agree, the deal might fall apart. Both parties risk their time demands being adjudged "unreasonable" and their being found in breach. But the range of "reasonable" times for performing most tasks is pretty big. A long-form contract typically provides how many days the buyer has to rescind due to title or physical inspection defects. Once these contingency periods expire, the contract locks the buyer into performing unless the buyer made timely objections within time provided.

§ 94.02(b)(3) Preliminary Title Report and Title Insurance Policy.

The buyer will usually have the right to approve title based on a lawyer's opinion or a preliminary title report describing any defects that appear in the public records. A preliminary title report shows whether the purported seller actually owns the house. It will also show any mortgages, easements, liens for unpaid taxes and other encumbrances affecting the title. The title company utilizes its own resources and data base (or one it shares with other firms), public land records and court records to prepare the preliminary report.

On closing, the buyer will usually obtain a policy of title insurance which assures the buyer that the seller is transferring marketable title, subject to specific defects mentioned in the preliminary title report and excluded from coverage in the title policy. A separate policy also assures the buyer's lender that its lien will have the priority agreed upon to secure the loan.

In some states, lawyers examine an "abstract" of title -- a collation of all the documents affecting title -- and then write an opinion summarizing what the lawyer has discovered on reviewing the abstract. If the lawyer opines that title is good, and the lawyer turns out to be wrong, the buyer's recourse against the lawyer depends on whether the lawyer has been negligent. There are dozens of possible "hidden defects" for which lawyers are not held accountable. This has led to buyers relying on title insurance policies promising to reimburse the purchaser for any defect in title that the insurer didn't disclose and exclude from the coverage of the policy. n14

§ 94.02(b)(4) Deed.

The actual transfer is effected by a simple document -- seldom more than half a page -- called a deed, signed by the seller, granting title to the buyer. The deed is the official instrument of conveyance: "X" grants to "Y" certain described property.

Deed formalities vary from state to state. In most states only the grantor needs to sign the deed (although a grantee must be identified). In a few states both grantor and grantee need to sign the deed. In most states deeds do not need to be witnessed, although in a few, Florida among them, witnesses are required. In many states deeds need to be acknowledged and notarized, but are valid between buyer and seller even if they are not acknowledged and notarized. However, in most states, acknowledgement is a condition that must be satisfied for the deed to be accepted by the county recorder and included in the publicly accessible land records of the county. In an acknowledgement, the party signing a document, the grantor in the case of a deed, "acknowledged" to a notary "that he/she/they executed the same in his/her/their authorized capacity(ies)."

Until the deed is recorded, the buyer is at a huge risk because the seller, by first recording a deed to another property, may be able to give that buyer superior title. The outcome depends on the language of the recording acts, the sequence of the transactions, what each purchaser knew about the rights of the competing claimant, and whether the subsequent purchaser paid "valuable consideration." For this reason, only the most naive and gullible buyers will pay good money for an unacknowledged and, hence, unrecordable deed.

§ 94.02(b)(5) Escrow Instructions.

Where lawyers handle closings, the closing lawyer makes a list of things to do based on the contract. Lawyers don't usually prepare formal escrow instructions for transactions they are processing in-house. Even where escrow agents are involved, sometimes they are just given a copy of the contract and told to take care of it. But most clients and escrow agents prefer to see the agents' obligations spelled out and escrow instructions signed by buyer and seller incorporating the terms of the purchase-and-sale agreement into specific, objective instructions for the escrow agent to follow in completing the transaction.

Where escrow agents are involved, signed escrow instructions will incorporate terms of the purchase-and-sale agreement into specific, n15 objective instructions for the escrow agent to follow in completing the transaction.

The escrow agency is a limited one: the agent is charged with implementing the exact conditions both parties contracted for--no more, no less. The escrow agent passes funds to the seller and the deed to the buyer. The escrow agent also prorates taxes and insurance premiums. The escrow agent pays the real estate broker the commission from sale proceeds if the escrow instructions authorize it.

Any instructions requiring subjective decisions on the part of the escrow agent will be rejected. The escrow officer is not a mediator, or a lawyer, or a broker, or a marriage counselor, or a tax advisor--just a skilled expediter. Thus, the escrow agent should avoid offering legal advice to either party. Otherwise, the escrow agent could unwittingly be engaging in the unauthorized practice of law. It is both illegal and bad business practice for escrow officers to give legal advice. It takes time, seldom helps parties to resolve differences, and distracts the escrow officer from the assigned mission.

The "close of escrow" is often defined in the general escrow instructions as the day the deed and any other essential documents are recorded.

Why is a stakeholder so commonly used in real estate sales? Because buyers are asked to come up with a chunk of cash along with their offers to buy. They balk at handing hard cash to a seller they have never met before, whose title may not be verified, and who has yet to keep the other promises in the contract. Hence, an escrow agent, real estate broker, lawyer, or title insurer may be called upon to serve as stakeholder.

For sellers, the use of the escrow agent as stakeholder means a temporary deferral of payment. If a deal-breaking dispute darkens the horizon, the sellers have lost their grip on a big umbrella. The sellers won't be in nearly as strong a bargaining position as when they are holding the buyer's deposit personally. Until both parties consent to the release of the funds in escrow, the sellers won't get any protective cash cover even though the sellers' title to the property will almost always have been clouded by the dispute. n16

In states where escrows or other stakeholders aren't used, sellers often hold the cash, or the sellers' lawyer holds the buyer's down payment in a special trust or escrow account. The parties or their representatives will actually meet to close the deal. Documents such as deeds and mortgages are signed, funds are passed across the table, prorationed figures are agreed upon, and the seller hands a deed to the buyer over a conference table laden with the closing documents.

§ 94.02(b)(6) Promissory Note.

A buyer can finance the purchase in four ways:

(1) by paying the full price in cash;

(2) by taking title subject to any loans already on the property, and paying the difference in cash between those and the purchase price;

(3) by obtaining a new loan either from a lender or from the sellers, usually in the form of a note and deed of trust or mortgage in their favor; or

(4) a combination of (2) and (3).

The buyer, not paying all cash, will probably have to sign a note and a mortgage or deed of trust in favor of the lender. The promissory note is an IOU, a personal promise by the buyer to repay the loan. It states the terms and conditions of the loan, including the principal amount owed, the applicable interest rate, and how it is to be repaid, usually through monthly payments.

§ 94.02(b)(7) Mortgage or Deed of Trust.

Consider why the buyer's note (and IOU) is usually not good enough to induce a lender to extend tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars unsecured for a condominium or home purchase. Even a buyer with a good job may default. The lender wants a security interest in the condo so that, upon default, it can order the property sold to cover the debt.

The mortgage or deed of trust is that security interest--a separate document giving the lender a lien against the subject property until the loan is paid back. This document gives the lender the right to order the property sold at a foreclosure sale in the event the borrower doesn't pay back the loan. The lender credits the foreclosure sale proceeds against what the borrower owes the lender.

Although the lender could combine in a single instrument the affirmative promise to repay with the pledge of security, lenders rarely do that. One reason is that the combined document would not be a negotiable instrument.

Usually the person who signs the note and the person who pledges the security property in a mortgage or deed of trust are one and the same; and the borrower puts up the house as security to repay the loan. But the borrower and the pledgor of the security property need not be the same. For instance, parents or a friend could agree to subject property they own as security for the loan. They would do this by signing a mortgage or deed of trust in favor of the lender. Alternately, they could cosign the note to the lender, in this way becoming personally liable to repay the debt.

Sometimes the seller agrees to finance the sale, taking back a note and deed of trust or mortgage for part of the purchase price. The form of note and security instrument should be agreed as part of the contract of purchase-and-sale.Otherwise, if the buyer and seller later can't reach a consensus on the repayment terms, the deal may fall apart and be unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds.

The buyer who expects to assume or take subject to a loan already in place should ask to see the existing note and mortgage or deed of trust before signing the contract. The informed buyer needs to be sure of the legal right to assume the existing loan, and she also wants to verify its other terms and conditions.

§ 94.02(b)(7)(i) Parties to a Security Instrument.

In a mortgage, is the debtor/property owner the mortgag*ee* or the mortgag*or*? In a deed of trust, is the debtor/property owner, the trust*or*, the trust*ee*, or the beneficiary?

There are two parties to a mortgage. Only the owner of the property can create a valid voluntary lien against it. The property owner (usually also the borrower) is the mortgag*or*, the creator of the security interest. The lender is the mortgag*ee*. The mortgagor holds title to the property subject to the mortgage. n17 In the event the mortgagor defaults on the promissory note to the lender, the mortgagee will initiate a lawsuit to foreclose on the secured property, ending in a judicial foreclosure sale.

There are three parties to a deed of trust. The property owner is the trustor--the creator of the security interest. The lender is the beneficiary. The deed of trust is created for the benefit of the beneficiary. The difference between a mortgage and a deed of trust is that a deed of trust has a third party, the trustee. The trustee (designated by the lender in most states) holds a limited legal title to the property for the purpose of enforcing the lender's security interest. In the event the trustor/borrower defaults on the promissory note, the beneficiary/lender will notify the trustee and instruct the trustee to foreclose. The trustee will then initiate either a judicial foreclosure (just as with a mortgage), or more often, the trustee will hold a private auction sale of the property. A trustee's sale is quicker and cheaper than a judicial foreclosure, but private sales are only allowed in about half the states.

§ 94.02(b)(7)(ii) Evidence of Release, Reconveyance, and Satisfaction.

Unless the buyer agrees to keep the seller's existing loan in place, the seller will be required to pay it off to clear the title. Prior to closing, the lender on a deed of trust will be asked to provide a "beneficiary's" statement or an estoppel letter indicating the exact amount of principal, interest, and pay-off fees, if any, required to satisfy the debt in full. n18 In many cases, the loans will actually be paid off with the buyer's purchase money at the close of the transaction by the title company (or escrow companies in the West).

Once a debt underlying the lien of a mortgage or deed of trust has been paid off, the lien expires automatically, but the debtor must be able to prove payment. The best proof is the lender's signed statement that the debt has been satisfied, coupled with a recordable release of mortgage or reconveyance of a deed of trust.

Once the loan is paid off, the lender must deliver the original note and security instrument (whether mortgage or deed of trust) to the seller, and eliminate the security instrument through reconveyance. A reconveyance is a recordable document that provides notice that the borrower has repaid the debt, and that the lender has released its security interest. A mortgagee can sign its own satisfaction of mortgage. A beneficiary must direct the trustee to reconvey a deed of trust. n19

Loans aren't always paid off just because the property is being transferred. Sometimes they are paid off because the principal has become due. In these cases, the borrower usually will not have the assistance of a title officer, broker, or attorney. When sellers carry back mortgages, they are likely to be just as inexperienced in the mechanics of documenting the payoff as the borrower. Even if the loan is paid off, the security instrument will remain "open" on the public record until the recordation of a satisfaction of mortgage or reconveyance of a deed of trust.

"Open trust deeds [and mortgages] are a very real problem for the home buyer and seller... . Experts estimate that 1 million to 2 million paid-off trust deeds remain unconveyed in California." n20 An open mortgage or deed of trust will not affect the homeowner's enjoyment of the property. But at the time the owner decides to refinance or sell, the owner will have to find the lender to get the lien formally erased of record. Erasing the security instrument may be difficult if many years have passed since the loan was paid off because the lender may have moved, gone out of business, or lost its records.

State and federal regulations add other forms to the list, geared to protecting homebuyers and borrowers. The state and federal requirements can be substantial. For example, sellers may be required to provide buyers with disclosure forms describing the condition of the property. n21 (See a summary of laws requiring sellers to disclose negative background, characteristics, and condition of real property at § 96.20 below.) Federal law requires all lenders to tender to borrowers a "Truth-in-Lending" statement outlining the costs of the loan. n22

This is only a partial list and is subject to change whenever Congress or state legislators meet. Many of these forms are mentioned later.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. American Bar Association, Buying or Selling your Home (prepared by the ABA Standing Committee on Lawyers' Title Guaranty Funds) 2 (1991).

(n2)Footnote 2. American Bar Association, Buying or Selling your Home (prepared by the ABA Standing Committee on Lawyers' Title Guaranty Funds) 1 (1991).

(n3)Footnote 3. Bar associations have challenged this work as the "unauthorized practice of law." Brokers usually win these fights although they can't draft legal documents from scratch, or charge fees for filling in the blanks in standard forms. In some states brokers' forms must contain "see a lawyer" or "this is a legally binding document" warning labels. Cultum v. Heritage House Realtors, Inc., 694 P.2d 630 (Wash. 1985); Chicago Bar Ass'n v. Quinlan & Tyson, Inc., 214 N.E.2d 771 (Ill. 1966); New Jersey State Bar Ass'n v. New Jersey Ass'n of Realtor Boards, 461 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 1983); Pope County Bar Ass'n v. Suggs, 624 S.W.2d 828 (Ark. 1981); State ex rel. Reynolds v. Dinger, 109 N.W.2d 685 (Wis. 1961); Conway-Bogue Realty Inv. Co. v. Denver Bar Ass'n, 312 P.2d 998 (Colo. 1957).

(n4)Footnote 4. M.A. Beasley, Pitfalls in Closing, Real Estate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series, Title Insurance 1-6 (1984). See also Choi v. Manhattan Mortg. Co., 63 F. Supp. 2d 874 (N.D. Ill., 1999) ("Escrow" is created when one party to a transaction delivers a sum to a third party, the escrow agent, for him or her to hold until the performance of any number of conditions and then to deliver it to the other party to the transaction); also see American State Bank v. Adkins, 458 N.W.2d 807 (S.D., 1990) (Escrow account is designed for third-party person to hold property of promisor for delivery to the promisee upon completion of specific conditions); and In re Handy Andy Home Imp. Centers, Inc., 196 B.R.87 (Bkrtcy. N.D. Ill., 1996).

(n5)Footnote 5. Escrow agents are licensed in California and process nearly all home sales in that state. For an instrument to be held in escrow, there must be (1) an agreement regarding the subject matter and delivery of the deposit or instrument (2) a third-party depository; (3) delivery of the funds to a third party conditioned upon the performance of an act or occurrence of some event; and (4) relinquishment by the grantor or depositor. Lennar Northeast Partners Ltd. Parthnership v. Gifaldi, 695 N.Y.S.2d 448 (1999). See also Johnson v. Exclusive Properties Unlimited, 720 A.2d 568 (Me. 1998).

(n6)Footnote 6. Brokers' fees vary considerably from country to country. In Britain and Australia, 2-3%; Japan and Belgium, 3%; France, 5%; Germany, 5-6%; Canada and the U.S., 6%. House Prices, The Economist, Dec. 26-Jan. 8, 1993 at 97.

(n7)Footnote 7. Net listings are generally frowned upon because (a) the seller should receive the highest possible price for her property with the broker being paid in accordance with her ability to obtain that price, and (b) it encourages brokers to use "straws" in order to purchase the property at its net price and resell it later at a handsome profit. Net listings are either prohibited or regulated in Alabama, California, Georgia, Maryland, Michigan, Tennessee, and Utah. Robert William Semenow, Questions and Answers on Real Estate 71 (9th ed. 1978). See, e.g., Ala. Code § 34-27-36(a)(20); Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 24.160(4); Mass. Gen. L. ch. 112, § 87AAA(1); Minn. Stat. § 327B.09(4); S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 36-21A-71(26); Md. Code Ann., Bus. Occ. & Prof. § 17-322(a)(11); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-3062(a)(18); R.I. Gen. Laws § 5-20.5-14(a)(22).

(n8)Footnote 8. Phillips v. Feldott, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1389 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (court interprets the meaning of a listing agreement in which the term governing payment of the commission paid is ambiguous); Torelli v. J.P. Enters., 52 Cal. App. 4th 1250 (1997) (documents other than listing agreement may be held to guarantee commission to broker.)

(n9)Footnote 9. Wainwright v. Boulos, 89 F.3d. 17 (1st Cir. 1996) (Plaintiff's claim that ambiguous Purchase and Sale agreement was ground for nonpayment of commission was overruled).

(n10)Footnote 10. The English Statute of Frauds was codified as Section 40 of the Law of Property Act 1925 and has since been replaced by Section 2 of the Law of Property Act 1989. Most states' statutes of fraud are modeled after the English original.

(n11)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Cal. Civ. Code. § 1550, which requires that agreements for the sale of real property must be in writing and signed by the parties to be bound. See also Johnson v. Maki & Assocs., 682 N.E.2d 1196 (Ill. App. 1997) (escrow agent is under a fiduciary duty to follow escrow instructions).

(n12)Footnote 12. See Sutton v. Warner, 12 Cal. App. 4th 415 (1993).

(n13)Footnote 13. The term "deposit receipt" has a special meaning in Florida where it is used to describe a particular type of purchase contract: "a single payment short term contract under which the seller remains in possession until title is passed to the buyer." Letter to author from Professor Ronald Benton Brown, July 18, 1994.

(n14)Footnote 14. Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 46 Cal. App. 4th 1181 (1996) (Court warns of risk of reliance on preliminary title report without buying title insurance); Tess v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 251 Neb. 501, 557 N.W.2d 696 (1997) (Title Company has tort liability for failure to report a known, but unrecorded lien or covenant).

(n15)Footnote 15. Frangipani v. Boecker, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407 (1998) (the terms of escrow instructions signed after a memorandum agreement shall take precedence over the memorandum agreement if there are any inconsistencies between the escrow instructions and memorandum).

(n16)Footnote 16. For this reason, even in California, there are a few commercial brokerage firms that insist buyers place sizeable sums directly with the seller to assure "good faith" performance. These firms believe this motivates buyers to close the deal. They still use escrow agents to process the closing and handle all the cash in the transactions except for the "good faith" deposit which was given directly to the seller.

(n17)Footnote 17. This is true in "lien" states. In some states, however, the lender, the mortgagee, is said to hold a limited title for security purposes. The practical difference between these two formulations is slight.

(n18)Footnote 18. Why not use plain English and call it a "lender's" statement? Some people do. However, without the use of obscure terminology, what mysteries could real estate professionals claim as their own?

(n19)Footnote 19. In some states the beneficiary is authorized to sign the reconveyance.

(n20)Footnote 20. De Wolfe, Title Matters: The Deed May Not Be Done, Los Angeles Times, Aug. 4, 1991, § K, at 1.

(n21)Footnote 21. See, e.g., California Civil Code § 1102.2 requires sellers to provide buyers with a full disclosure form describing the condition of the property. Under California law, subdividers also must hand to tract homebuyers a "public report" detailing facts about the project, the area, and facilities securing both. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11018.1.

See also Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, ch. 3A, Federal and State-by-State Summary of Broker's Duty to Disclose (Matthew Bender).

(n22)Footnote 22. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601-93r.

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.03

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.03 Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

[Go To Supp]

§ 94.03(a) The Case for Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

Potentially, attorneys could be involved in real estate transactions in four ways:

(1)

(a) negotiating and drafting contracts, or

(b) reviewing drafts brokers have prepared;

(2) presiding over the execution of the contract:

(a) overseeing title matters and property inspections,

(b) making sure deeds, notes and mortgages are properly executed, negotiating and reviewing loan documents,

(c) assisting the buyer to shop, find and perfect financing

(d) making sure funds are good, and recording or making sure all documents that should be recorded are done so promptly;

(3) resolving or litigating disputes.

In many states, nearly every real estate sale is handled by an attorney. "Conveyancing" is a bread-and-butter part of the practice in these states where, not uncommonly, practitioners profit by delegating routine closing tasks to paralegals. In other states, including California, Texas, and most western states, attorneys are rarely involved in single-family home transactions as a matter of simple economics. Their time at current billing rates can't be justified in terms of the contribution they make. Closings are processed by title companies and independent escrow agents instead of by law firms. In these states lending institutions, title insurance companies, and brokerage firms are often represented by corporate counsel, but buyers and sellers are not. When lawyers are involved, it is usually as a favor for special clients or friends, or because the value of the house is so great the parties don't mind paying a few thousand dollars to get little details right. In California, once the deal is signed, it is most often a real estate broker, not a lawyer, who guides the buyer and seller through to a closing. If case disputes arise, brokers hope the buyer and seller have initialled a binding arbitration clause so even then attorneys will not become involved.

Attorneys are deeply involved in most of the east coast (except in New York City and Washington, D.C.) and in much of the midwest and south. Smart clients get their money's worth by consulting their attorneys before signing a binding contract. But in many instances the lawyer becomes involved only after a standard form contract, usually prepared by a Realtors'" Association, is signed. Many clients ignore the advice of the American Bar Association, to see their attorney "before signing any paper in connection with a real estate transaction." n23 In some places, buyers and sellers sign contracts before consulting attorneys but include this language: "subject to the approval of the attorneys for the parties within _____days." n24 These clauses are enforceable. They give either party a way out of the contract for any reason or no reason as long as the withdrawal is preceded by review by a licensed attorney.

The case for lawyer involvement in the routine house closing is that the lawyer's chief rivals, real estate brokers, are ill equipped and poorly motivated to protect the interests of buyers and sellers against each other, lenders and brokers. The real estate broker's commission is usually a percentage of the actual sales price, contingent on making a deal. Very few brokers enjoy the luxury of billing by the hour and those who do mostly represent commercial buyers. Since brokers work on contingent fees, they prefer short, simple contracts and quick closings. They have no incentive to encourage comprehensive negotiations or to warn clients of potential risks in the contracts they are about to sign. Brokers stick pretty much to filling in the blanks on standard printed forms. n25

The American Bar Association makes its case for early and continuous attorney involvement by cautioning that brokers, lenders, or others in the process "may have interests that differ from those of the buyer or seller. Oftentimes they offer well-meaning advice, but they may not be aware of important legal concepts. The only person who is trained in knowing and understanding your legal rights and who is there solely to look after and protect your interests is your real estate attorney." n26

§ 94.03(b) The Case Against Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

Real estate brokers seldom welcome attorney involvement in states where closings are customarily handled without lawyers. Lawyers can be deal killers. n27 Their insistent fine-tuning on behalf of one party may drive the other party away. Their underlining of potential risks may scare their own client out of the deal. Brokers could also point out that billing by the hour rewards lawyers for wasting time defining and allocating risks highly unlikely ever to occur. For a lawyer paid by the hour, the longer it takes to nail down all the details, the higher the fee. Even if the deal breaks apart in disputes over fine points, the lawyer's fee is protected. It isn't contingent on a closing, like the broker's.

Another drawback to lawyer involvement is that during the time it takes lawyers to review and revise documents, buyers and sellers have a chance to rethink their tentative commitments to each other. By refusing to sign the contract when the lawyers finally get it ready, either party can sink the deal. In the United Kingdom, for example, it takes lawyers two to five weeks to come up with a contract ready for signing. n28 Volatile U.K. property markets led to "gazumping" and "gazundering," new words in the real estate lexicon. A buyer got "gazumped" when the seller in a hot market found a buyer who would pay more while still chewing over the fine points of the first offer. A seller got "gazundered" in a soft market when the buyer, following the customary delay in drafting a final contract, insisted on a reduction in the original price -- or threatened to walk. Many British brokers envied their California counterparts who could "seal" a deal within hours of the buyer and seller agreeing to it by having them sign a standard purchase-and-sale agreement, often on a form prepared by the realtor's trade association. n29

Advocates for lawyer involvement see delay as giving the client a chance to step back and take a clear-headed look at the deal. This affords the client, like in much consumer protection law, a "cooling off" period during which the consumer can change his or her mind and rescind without penalty. The case for lawyer involvement was dented by a study of lawyers in Ohio home-buying transactions. It concluded that buyers who used lawyers were no better informed than those who did not. n30 In fact, they were less likely to be satisfied with the deal. n31 Further, they were "just as likely to find after signing a contract that it contain[ed] matters which had not been explained to them or which they did not expect." n32 The case isn't advanced either by the fact that the number of malpractice claims against attorneys arising out of real estate deals is second only to malpractice claims arising out of personal injury suits. n33

Even the A.B.A. Committee on Professionalism has grudgingly acknowledged that while "many real estate closings required the services of a lawyer ... it can no longer be claimed that lawyers have the exclusive possession of the esoteric knowledge required." n34

§ 94.03(c) Conflict Issues Arising from One Attorney Acting for Both Sides.

There are local variations on attorney involvement in those states where attorneys are involved at all. n35 In some states it is common for one attorney to represent both parties. Elsewhere, each is represented by separate counsel. n36

The American Bar Association favors separate counsel so that conflicts of interests between lawyer and client can be avoided and conflicts between purchaser and vendor can be anticipated and clearly resolved. Some courts have recognized a narrow exception to the inevitability of a conflict of interest where both parties are represented by the same lawyer. That exception is when the lawyer acts primarily as a "scrivener," drafting an agreement the parties have already negotiated between themselves. As long as the lawyer follows the parties' instructions and draws up the agreement on the terms already agreed, the lawyer stays out of the conflict of interest stew. n37 When lawyers do more than put their clients' wishes in writing, conflicts of all sorts are inevitable. So the A.B.A. recommends essentially an adversary or advocacy model for real estate closings, with each party represented by separate counsel. The adversary model is supplanted in states where one lawyer represents both parties and where lawyers have been replaced entirely by brokers, escrow agents, and title insurers. These professionals attempt to represent the interests of both parties with a view to making the deal happen.

Within the United States there are several types of arrangements for processing real estate sales. Attorneys are involved in most of the east coast (except in New York City and Washington, D.C.) and in much of the midwest and south. In the west and in Texas, title companies, real estate brokers, and escrow agents shepherd the process, and attorneys are seldom seen in the residential closing. There are many local variations. n38

Lending institutions, title insurance companies, and brokerage firms are often represented by corporate counsel, but buyers and sellers are not. In some parts of the country it is common for one attorney to represent both parties. Elsewhere each is represented by counsel. n39

The buyer may pay for the lender's lawyer but is not legally entitled to rely on that lawyer's opinion regarding the status of the security property's title.

The American Bar Association favors each party being represented by counsel so that potentially conflicting interests can be anticipated and resolved. Where lawyers have been upstaged by brokers, escrow agents, and title insurers in the residential sales transaction, an adversary model is replaced by a cooperative one as these other professionals attempt to represent the interests of all parties with a view to making the deal happen.

One ABA committee points out that each of these professionals has individual interests to consider in addition to those of the buyer and seller. Yet, a study of the role of lawyers in Ohio homebuying transactions concluded that buyers who used lawyers were no better informed than those who did not. n40 In fact they were less likely to be satisfied with the deal. n41 Further, they were "just as likely to find after signing a contract that it contain[ed] matters which had not been explained to them or which they did not expect." n42

§ 94.03(d) An Alternative Model in Europe.

In Europe, property transfers are overseen by specially trained professionals called notaries. In many countries they are lawyers who have completed additional requirements. n43 Notaries public in this country who wield rubber stamps to qualify documents for entry in the public land records are but a pale transplant of their European models. The European notary is a legally trained impartial third party who oversees the transactions process. The notary is obligated to prepare and explain the meaning of legal documents to the parties. The notarial system avoids the potentially costly and deal-threatening aspects of the adversary process while providing a buffer between innocent buyers and sellers and their brokers who could be so anxious to make a deal that they may mislead the parties into making a bad one.

In the course of an author's interview of a successful notary in Barcelona, Spain, it was explained that European property systems derive from Roman law, not the common law. They have no Statute of Frauds. As a result, oral promises for buying and selling land, if they can be proved, are perfectly valid in most European countries. However, such transactions are rare. For one thing, they can't be placed on record, and public records are at least as important in Spain as they are in the United States.

Most European countries, Spain included, have land registration systems, n44 as do most Latin American Countries. n45 In Spain, a land registry (Registro de la Proprieadad) is maintained in each town and district by the Ministry of Justice. They are not mere repositories for documents like our recording offices. The local registador (the registrar) examines each document submitted and determines its authenticity. The registrar copies a document into the public records, then signs it, signifying its authenticity. The registrar won't sign unless it is consistent with the condition of the title appearing in previously recorded documents. Each piece of property is assigned a separate page (finca) in the registry. On that page are details about the property (dimensions in square meters, location, names of owners since the property was first registered, and encumbrances).

People may request copies of the notary's certificates of title confirming the ownership of each new grantee who requests it within the notary's jurisdiction, and they are legally entitled to rely on them. If the notary makes an error, the notrary and the registration system are financially liable for it. There is no title insurance in Spain.

No document, contract, deed, mortgage or other encumbrance can be accepted by the registrar unless it has been signed by a notary. Some documents that affect title, such as purchase and sale contracts, may remain private and need not be recorded. Unless registered, the contract is not binding on third parties, although it is binding on the parties to it. Deeds, however, are "public" documents and must be notarized and registered.

Imagine that a buyer and seller are considering a purchase and sale of a house or apartment. A broker may well have brought them together, and they probably have reached tentative agreement on a deal. The first step may be a pre-contract (Precontrato), which is a statement of intent to enter a contract. n46 It is often accompanied by a deposit (arros or senal). A purchaser who changes his mind after signing a pre-contract that the buyer and seller agreed would be binding forfeits his deposit. A seller who wants to get out of a pre-contract owes the buyer a penalty equal to the deposit. Remember that pre-contracting is optional, however; the parties may proceed directly to the contract stage.

Customarily, the buyer and seller will then go to a notary's office where the details of the agreement are reported to a clerk in the notary's office or to the notary himself. If there was a pre-contract, the details could be gleaned from it. If there wasn't, the notary would ask them about such contract details as financing, the timing of possession and transfer, the allocation of responsibility for paying transfer fees and taxes, and any representation about defects in title. The notary or his clerk works from a checklist of items customarily addressed in well-drafted contracts.

Based on what the parties tell the clerk or notary, a document will be drafted, usually in about a week, called a Compra-Venta (buy-sell). This document will become the document of conveyance once it is signed by the parties and the notary. The notary will verify the signatures of the parties, determine if there are prior liens against the property (by obtaining a certificate of charges from the registrar), and ascertain how the parties expect these liens to be satisfied. When a prior lender is supposed to be paid off out of sale proceeds, the notary will do that, and obtain from the lender a carta de pago (letter of payment).

Once the Compra-Venta is signed and its conditions fulfilled, the notary sees that it is taken to the registrar for authentication and recordation. The notary keeps the original on file, once the registador returns it, for 25 years, and gives the parties copies. The notary's fee is usually about 0.5% of the selling price and is customarily paid by the seller. The buyer pays for additional copies of the documents from the notary and also pays the registration fee, typically another 0.5%.

Lawyers seldom appear with buyers or sellers of individual houses or apartments, and when they do, they contribute little or nothing to the process. Brokers sometimes accompany the parties, but the broker cannot be a notary, and vice-versa. A solid curtain is drawn between those who make a living marketing properties and those who oversee the contracting process. This curtain screens buyers from acting in the heat of the moment, gives them a cooling-off period, and allows review of the contract by someone who isn't quite as close to the situation as the broker.

In Spain, the seller is obligated to pay a steep capital gains tax, and the buyer must pay a large local transfer fee, both calibrated to the price of the property. This provides both of them with a large incentive to understate the true selling price in their formal documents. As a result, the buyer often pays part of the price in cash "under the table." Although professional developers don't play this tax-dodging game, amateur sellers often do. Thus, a notary may observe the parties politely excusing themselves for a few minutes from the final closing session, or the buyer may slip the seller a big stuffed envelope just before the Compra-Venta is signed. In some situations, if the contract price is seen as inordinately low (less than half the property's true market value), an administrative agency has the right to buy the property at the contract price stated on the documents.

Confidence in the notarial system runs so high in Spain and most of Latin America that there is a folk saying, "Notaria Abierto, Juzgado Cerrado"-- When the notary is open the court is closed. The meaning is that by using notaries, property buyers and sellers can avoid court fights. n47

The Spanish notary represents both parties. A U.S. lawyer is forbidden from representing both parties without full disclosure and consent by all of the parties. The lawyer approaching the parties must explain how this might affect the lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of each. n48

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 23. ABA, Buying or Selling Your Home (prepared by the ABA Standing Committee on Lawyer's Title Guaranty funds) 2 (1991).

(n2)Footnote 24. In New Jersey, brokers are required to insert such an "attorney review" clause in their contracts as a way of regulating the unauthorized practice of law by real estate brokers and salespersons. New Jersey Bar of Realtor Boards, 461 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 1983): "The buyer or seller may choose to have an attorney study this contract. If an attorney is consulted, the attorney must complete his or her review ... within a three-day period. This contract will be legally binding at the end of this three-day period unless an attorney for the buyer or seller reviews and disapproves of the contract, and notifies the other party within three days."

(n3)Footnote 25. Bar associations have challenged brokers preparing contracts as the "unauthorized practice of law." Brokers usually win these fights although conceding that they will refrain from drafting legal documents from scratch, or charge fees for filling in the blanks in standard forms. So brokers are not entirely to blame for their sticking to printed forms. Bar associations often insist they do no more on threat of "unauthorized practice" lawsuits. In some states, brokers' forms must contain "see a lawyer" or "this is a legally binding document" warning labels. Cultum v. Heritage House Realtors, Inc., 694 P.2d 630 (Wash. 1985); Chicago Bar Ass'n v. Quinlan & Tyson, Inc., 214 N.E.2d 771 (Ill. 1966); New Jersey State Bar Ass'n v. New Jersey Ass'n of Realtor Bds., 461 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 1983); Pope County. Bar Ass'n v. Suggs, 624 S.W.2d 818 (Ark. 1981); State ex rel. Reynolds v. Dinger, 14 Wis. 2d 193, 109 N.W.2d 685 (Wis. 1961); Conway-Bogue Realty Inv. Co. v. Denver Bar Ass'n, 398 P.2d 998 (Colo. 1957).

(n4)Footnote 26. ABA, Buying or Selling Your Home, at 1.

(n5)Footnote 27. Robert J. Bruss, Using Lawyer Can Kill Real Estate Deal, Los Angeles Times, July 24, 1994 (Real Estate Q & A) at K2. A paralegal trying to sell a house asked a real estate lawyer in her office to review a purchase offer. The lawyer wrote a 16-page counter offer. The buyer rejected it and withdrew. A syndicated real estate columnist, Robert Bruss observed: "Apparently you and your wife consulted a "deal killer" lawyer. He was looking out for your best interests but, in doing so, he killed the sale. Unless the home sale is very complicated, a 16-page counteroffer is unnecessary ... .My fellow attorneys won't like me saying this, but we often cause more problems than we solve or prevent. In your attorney's zeal to look out for you, he went too far and killed the sale by overwhelming the buyer with that massive counteroffer ... .Unfortunately, some attorneys try to justify their fees by creating more paperwork than necessary. In the future, if you want your attorney to review a purchase offer, let him or her know you wish to get your home sold and want the attorney to advise you only on any legally unacceptable clauses. A one-page counteroffer is usually sufficient to change any terms in the original offer that you find unacceptable."

(n6)Footnote 28. Buyers and sellers each retain counsel customarily in England, although occasionally they may contract with the same solicitor to represent both of them or may handle the contract drafting and title review on their own. Without attempting to account for the factors that determine whether lawyers are indispensable parties to a real estate transfer, certain features of the British legal framework do make the involvement of lawyers understandable. There is no title insurance and reviewing title can be an exacting task.

Only since 1990 have land registers been open to the public, so buyers who were not solicitors might have had trouble accessing the record system. Land registration has become compulsory throughout the whole of England and Wales. Unregistered titles must be registered on transfer. Title to unregistered land has to be proven by the seller's title deeds--documentary evidence showing the seller and her predecessors owned the land for a long time (fifteen years, usually). The applicant must submit the title documents, a statutory application form, and a fee. If the registry finds everything in order, it issues an official land certificate. When property already registered is sold, the deed must be sent to the registry so the land certificate can be modified. All this may be overwhelming for the amateur. Not surprisingly, a conveyancing practice is the "bread-and-butter" of many a law firm in England.

(n7)Footnote 29. New Jersey courts have held that provisions giving buyer and seller three days for an attorney to review the contract do allow either party out of the deal for any reason. See, e.g., Kargen v. Kerr, 590 A.2d 255 (N.J. Super. 1991) (holding that the seller could invoke the provision even though notice was late because broker failed to provide buyer's address on the contract as required by New Jersey administrative law).

(n8)Footnote 30. Braunstein and Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 479 (1991).

(n9)Footnote 31. Braunstein and Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 480 (1991).

(n10)Footnote 32. Braunstein and Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 480 (1991).

(n11)Footnote 33. William L. Gates and Sheree L. Swetin, Characteristics of Legal Malpractice: Report of the National Legal Malpractice Data Center, table 1, p.2 (ABA 1989). Personal injury -- plaintiff accounted for 25.1% of claims, real estate for 23.3%. Collection and bankruptcy was next with 10.5%.

(n12)Footnote 34. ABA Comm. on Professionalism, ... in the Spirit of Public Service; a Blueprint for Rekindling of Lawyer Professionalism 52 (1986).

(n13)Footnote 35. Burke, American Conveyancing Practice (1978); Dansby, Survey of Lawyers' Current Role in the Title Insurance Process, Prob. & Prop. 43 (Sept./Oct. 1990).

(n14)Footnote 36. See Comment, One For All is Worth Two in the Bush: Mixing Metaphors Creates Lawyer Conflict of Interest in Residential Real Estate Transactions, 56 U. Cin. L. Rev. 639 (1987).

(n15)Footnote 37. See Beal v. Mars Larsen Ranch Corp. Inc., 586 P.2d 1378, 1384 (Idaho 1978). See also, Annotation, Attorney and Client: Conflict of Interest in Real Estate Closing, 68 A.L.R. 3d 967 (1976).

(n16)Footnote 38. D. Barlow Burke, American Conveyancing Patterns (1978); Bishop Dansby, Survey of Lawyers' Current Role in the Title Insurance Process, Probate and Property 43 (Sept./Oct. 1990).

(n17)Footnote 39. See Comment, One for all is worth two in the bush: mixing metaphors creates lawyer conflict of interest in residential real estate transactions, 56 U. Cin. L. Rev. 639 (1987).

(n18)Footnote 40. Michael Braunstein and Hazel Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 479 (1991).

(n19)Footnote 41. Michael Braunstein and Hazel Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 480 (1991).

(n20)Footnote 42. Michael Braunstein and Hazel Genn, Odd Man Out: Preliminary Findings Concerning the Diminished Role of Lawyers in the Home-Buying Process, 52 Ohio St. L.J. 469, 479 (1991).

(n21)Footnote 43. See,e.g., Paul Karon and D.G. Foulke, Commercial Real Estate Practices and Development in Northwestern Mexico, 2 Ariz. J. of Int'l & Comp. Law 10, 41 (1984).

(n22)Footnote 44. There are excellent descriptions of these. See, e.g., Alejardro M. Garro, The Louisiana Public Records Doctrine and the Civil Law Tradition (Paul M. Hebert Law Center Publications Institute, 1989). The German system was codified in the Civil Code, Burgerliches Gesetzbuch [BGB] arts. 873-902, 926-928 (1896).

(n23)Footnote 45. See, e.g., Boris Kozolchyk, the Mexican Land Registry: A Critical Evaluation, 12 Ariz. L. Rev. 308 (1970); Garro, Recording of Real Estate Transactions in Latin America: A Comparison with the Recording System in the United States, 2 Ariz. J. Int'l & Comp. Law 90 (1984).

(n24)Footnote 46. See Jones & Day, Legal Aspects of Acquiring and Leasing Real Estate in Europe 30-36 (1992).

(n25)Footnote 47. Interview by author with Oscar Salas, President, First American Title Insurance Co., Miami, Florida, 4/28/92.

(n26)Footnote 48. Model Code of Professional Responsibility DR 5-105 (1980).

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.04

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.04 Two Types of Closings.

Like all contracts, the purchase-and-sale agreement is a bundle of promises. Somehow those promises must be geared into performance for a deal to "close" and title to shift from seller to buyer. A real estate contract is said to close on the fulfillment of all its conditions, when the buyer has paid the price and the seller conveys the quality of title promised in the contract. Sometimes the "closing" of escrow is further conditioned on key documents being recorded and title policies being issued according to the buyer's and lender's prior instructions.

§ 94.04(a) The New York Style Closing.

In states where escrows aren't used, this process may be handled directly between buyer and seller, through attorneys, or through title insurers. Where attorneys handle the closing, some local bar associations have adopted and published closing standards and, in such communities, the basic contract agreement may specify that closings will be handled according to these standards. In the New York style closing, all parties actually meet in a conference room. Witnesses and a notary may be standing by. Arrangements are made at the meeting for how delivery of possession is to take place. The closing statement detailing the financial aspects of the deal are reviewed and approved. Documents are reviewed and executed. The buyer hands over the money unless the parties have arranged for the purchaser's attorney to hold the funds until the seller's deed has been recorded. The title insurer insures the buyer's title and rushes to record the deed, trusting the seller not to have signed any prior grants or liens that could be recorded ahead of the buyer's deed or the purchase money lender's mortgage. n49 After the closing, each client is usually sent a final closing financial statement with copies of all the relevant closing documents.

§ 94.04(b) The California Closing.

In the California closing n50 the parties don't have to meet. All documents have been prepared in advance by an attorney or title insurer, executed, and placed into escrow. The seller and lenders, if any, have placed funds with the escrow agent who, hopefully, has placed them into a proper trust account. The escrow agent holds the buyer's funds until the title insurer notifies her that the seller's deed was recorded and there were no prior adverse interests of record. n51 The title insurer is able to do this because by custom all title insurance documents are accepted for recordation first thing in the morning. The title insurer's staff stays up the night before to make sure no prior recorded instruments were recorded the previous day that would cloud the buyer's title. In large transactions the insurers may agree to mid-day special recordings. They are sometimes asked to do this for buyers and lenders when huge fund transfers are involved. Buyers don't want to fund a day early and lose a day's interest on a small fortune overnight. By recording at, say, 2 p.m. the title insurer assumes the risks of an adverse interest having been stealthily recorded earlier in the day. Once the title insurer notifies the escrow agent that documents have been recorded, the escrow agent disburses funds. Later, she mails each party a financial closing statement.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 49. How this trust could be abused is graphically described in an engrossing detective story by former New York lawyer, Stephen Paul Cohen, in Island of Steel (William Morrow & Co. 1988). An unscrupulous property lawyer and two equally depraved real estate developers come close to refinancing a $20,000,000 loan with four new loans totaling $80,000,000 to net a $60,000,000 gain -- less the cost of a couple of murders to make sure the lenders and their title insurers don't get wind of the swindle in time to prevent it. The miscreants thought they could get away with it because recorded documents aren't available for public inspection for a week or more. Thus, lenders must trust borrowers not to double-cross them by having made mortgage loans superior to theirs which are of record, but not yet indexed and accessible at the public recorder's office. Title insurers often insist on sellers signing an indemnity agreement holding the insurer harmless if the seller conveys a second time. Of course, an indemnity from a seller ready to flee or file bankruptcy may not be worth much to the title insurer.

(n2)Footnote 50. Also referred to as a "Western Style Closing."

(n3)Footnote 51. On the use of escrows generally, see John Mann, Escrows -- Their Use and Value, 1949 U. Ill. L. F. 398 (1949) Note, Escrow Agreements, 8 Miami L.Q. 75 (1953). Stokes v. Firestone, 198 B.R. 168 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 1996).

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.05

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.05 Preparations for Closing.

[Go To Supp]

Lawyers and escrow agents prepare for closing by making lists of documents each party owes the other under the contract. It is the seller's obligation (where escrows aren't used) to clear the title and present the buyer with evidence-- an abstract of title and/or a title policy-- showing that the title is free of liens and encumbrances. Part of that documentation could include quitclaim deeds from third parties removing clouds on title arising out of their potential claims.

§ 94.05(a) An Escrow Agent's Steps to Prepare for Closing.

Here are some of the steps commonly taken to process a simple single-family residence sale closing:

- Obtain pertinent information from the parties or from their deeds, title policies, preliminary reports, or the purchase and sale agreement.
- Order a preliminary report on the property.
- Request a pay-off demand from the current lender on the property and order a full reconveyance of the deed of trust, unless the loan is to be assumed and remain a lien against the property.
- Obtain escrow instructions and loan documents from the buyer's new lender... .
- Receive any initial deposits and issue a receipt for funds.
- Prepare all documents (such as deeds, promissory notes, deeds of trust, requests for reconveyance) and obtain signatures of the proper parties.

- Deliver other documents (such as estoppel certificates, rent rolls, certificates of insurance) to the escrow holder.

- Prepare and sign buyer's and seller's escrow instructions.

- Compute prorations.

- Estimate and receive the funds needed to close the escrow.

- Prepare a Uniform Settlement Statement... .

- Order a title insurance policy to reflect the state of title at the time of recording.

- Record all documents requiring recordation. (Escrow instructions commonly provide that this event constitutes close of escrow, i.e., the transfer of record title to the property from seller to buyer.)... .

- Disburse funds and deliver documents (such as the commission to the seller's broker), including the Uniform Settlement Statement, to the respective parties or third parties. n52

In the escrow-administered closing the parties never face each other over a table groaning with unsigned documents, where everyone is given one more chance to rethink the wisdom of the deal. Escrow closings are usually painless affairs. Pieces of paper change hands through the mail or by messenger until finally the purchase price is paid, the necessary deeds of trust funded, the deed has been recorded, and the deal is closed.

§ 94.05(b) A Lawyer's Steps to Prepare for Closing.

In states where lawyers regularly process residential real estate closings, indispensable "how to" guides are often made available by the state bar association. n53

The following illustrative checklist contains typical conditions precedent to closing:

		Due Date	Completed
Conditions Respecting Title
A. Real Property
	1. Order abstract/title commitment	_____	_____
	2. Examine abstract/title commitment	_____	_____
	3. Note title exceptions	_____	_____
	4. Obtain copies of excepted items:
	a. Plats	_____	_____

	b. Restrictions	_____	_____
	c. Mortgages	_____	_____
	d. Leases	_____	_____
	e. Easements	_____	_____
5. Title report to client		_____	_____
6. Note exceptions waived		_____	_____
7. Notice of title objections		_____	_____
8. Curative documents required:
	a. Affidavits	_____	_____
	b. Deeds	_____	_____
	c. Releases	_____	_____
	d. Subordinates	_____	_____
9. Title approved/rejected		_____	_____
B. Personal Property
1. Search names:
	a. Secretary of State	_____	_____
	b. Circuit court	_____	_____
2. Review seller's invoices		_____	_____
3. Verify prior ownership		_____	_____
4. Title approved/rejected		_____	_____

Conditions Respecting Property

A. Survey

1. Order and obtain survey _____ _____ _____ _____

2. Compare legal description with contract and abstract description _____ _____ _____ _____

3. Note encroachments content _____ _____ _____ _____

4. Check certificate _____ _____ _____ _____

5. Survey approved/rejected _____ _____ _____ _____

B. Inspections

1. Order inspections

a. Air conditioning _____ _____ _____ _____

b. Appliances and equipment _____ _____ _____ _____

c. Electrical _____ _____ _____ _____

d. Elevators _____ _____ _____ _____

e. Foundation _____ _____ _____ _____

f. Pest infestation _____ _____ _____ _____

g. Plumbing _____ _____ _____ _____

h. Roof _____ _____ _____ _____

i. Seawall _____ _____ _____ _____

j. Swimming pool _____ _____ _____ _____

	2. Inspections approved	_____ _____	_____ _____
	3. Inspections rejected	_____ _____	_____ _____
	4. Notice to seller of corrections required	_____ _____	_____ _____
	5. Deficiencies completed	_____ _____	_____ _____
Additional Conditions
A. Financing
	1. Obtain mortgage commitment	_____ _____	_____ _____
	2. Commitment acceptable/not acceptable	_____ _____	_____ _____
B. Verify use of the land
	1. Permitted uses	_____ _____	_____ _____
	2. Prohibited uses	_____ _____	_____ _____
	3. Nonconforming uses	_____ _____	_____ _____
	4. Access	_____ _____	_____ _____
	5. Land determined suitable/unsuitable	_____ _____	_____ _____
C. Determine availability of utilities
	1. Water	_____ _____	_____ _____
	2. Sewer	_____ _____	_____ _____
	3. Storm drainage	_____ _____	_____ _____
	4. Electricity	_____ _____	_____ _____
	5. Telephone	_____	_____

		_____	_____
	6. Trash removal	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	7. Utilities available/not available	_____	_____
		_____	_____
D. Permits and licenses required		_____	_____
		_____	_____
	1. Determine required permits and licenses	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	2. Verify validity and transferability of existing Permit and licenses	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	3. Permits and licenses available/not available	_____	_____
		_____	_____
E. Inspection of books and records
	1. Order audit of records	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	2. Inspect rent rolls	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	3. Financial information accepted/not obtained	_____	_____
		_____	_____
F. Approvals required
	1. Corporate resolution	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	2. Court order	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	3. Mortgagee consent	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	4. Landlord approval	_____	_____
		_____	_____
	5. Approvals obtained/not obtained	_____	_____
		_____	_____

Notice Respecting Conditions
A. Notify seller of conditions fulfilled or waived; conditions not fulfilled and not waived	_____ _____	_____ _____
B. Demand closing; demand return of deposits	_____ _____	_____ _____

Here are a few of the typical closing documents that might be required for a commercial transaction:

(1) Deed.

(2) Indemnity agreements called for in the contract of sale.

(3) Insurance policies if they are to be assigned along with evidence the most recent premiums have been paid.

(4) Mortgages or deeds of trust to be executed by the buyer.

(5) Releases of encumbrances, mortgages, and other liens the seller is obligated to remove.

(6) Pest control reports and other required inspections.

(7) Survey.

(8) Leases and a tenant roster.

(9) Tenant estoppel certificate.

(10) Warranties and assignments of them from builders, appliance manufacturers, roofers, plumbers.

(11) Ongoing contracts with managers, trash collectors, exterminator services. n54

Savvy closing lawyers recommend that documents be exchanged in advance of the closing-- the deed, mortgage, note, survey, leases, assignments-- to avoid last minute objections. When escrow agents process closings they should be instructed to obtain the buyer's prior approval of any title-affecting documents. Financial closing statements should be approved by seller and buyer in advance of closing--whether the closing is handled by a title insurer, broker, attorney or escrow agent. Even after the closing, a buyer or seller who detects accounting errors in the closing statement may seek their correction. n55 Accounting statements, being "collateral" to the transfer of title, don't "merge" in the deed. But hunting down the overpaid party after a closing and persuading that party to disgorge is a lot harder than getting things right before the closing.

§ 94.05(c) Tax Considerations Before Closing.

§ 94.05(c)(1) FIRPTA Compliance.

Federal law prompts the necessity of documentation to establish an exemption or meet the withholding requirements of the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act (FIRPTA), n56 modified by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. FIRPTA eliminates a long-standing tax advantage for foreign investors by equalizing tax treatment of foreign and domestic investors in U.S. Real Estate. n57 It requires the buyer to withhold 10% of the sales price as security for the foreign seller's potential tax liability. The buyer becomes potentially liable for the seller's federal capital gains tax on the sale if the seller is a foreign person. The buyer customarily avoids this requirement, and potential liability, by obtaining an affidavit of non-foreign status from the seller, with her name, address and taxpayer identifying number. Under the law the buyer may rely on this affidavit even if it is false in not withholding 10% of the sales price. There are other exemptions as well.

§ 94.05(c)(2) Tax Reporting of the Sale.

The Internal Revenue Code requires brokers to file a return showing the gross sales of transactions in which they are involved. n58 The parties to the deal are entitled to see this statement before the broker submits it to the IRS. It includes the seller's taxpayer identifying number. If the seller refuses to release that number, the broker may have to deduct and withhold 20% of the sales price. n59 The fact that escrow agents supply this statement and many other forms is one more reason why their use is becoming common.

§ 94.05(d) Inspections and Inspection Contingencies Before Closing.

An informed buyer inspects the property at least twice. The buyer goes out early to see if there are encroachments, parties in possession who shouldn't be there, possible easements. Later, just before closing, the buyer makes sure the property is in the same condition as it was and all appliances and mechanical systems (heating, air conditioning, pool equipment) are in good working order. If the buyer observed glitches in the second inspection as the closing date nears, the contract should give the sellers a few days to make things right or reduce the purchase price so the buyer will have funds to correct these final flaws after the closing. The buyer may need a third inspection a day or two before closing to check on the seller's last minute performance of any promises made following the buyer's second visit.

§ 94.05(e) The Loan Closing.

When financing is necessary there will be a parallel closing, a loan closing. The lender will forward the promised proceeds in exchange for a security instrument and note executed by the borrower. The loan closes when the lender funds the loan to the borrower, and in return the lender gets a note signed by the borrower, a recorded deed of trust or mortgage and a title policy insuring the validity of the lender's lien. The lender usually funds the loan to the escrow or to the title company in a sub-escrow account. The loan proceeds are then credited to the buyer's account in order to complete the purchase.

Among the costs a lender typically deducts from the loan payment are:

(1) Interest accruing on the loan from the closing date to the beginning of the period covered by the first regularly scheduled loan payment.

(2) The fee for the lender's title policy.

(3) Loan origination fees, also known as points.

(4) Other closing costs including fees for appraiser, recording the mortgage, and the lender's attorney.

§ 94.05(f) The RESPA Forms.

The closing statement for most residential sale-and-loan closings is one promulgated by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). n60 Federal law requires lenders within three days of a loan application to show the borrower a good faith estimate of likely loan closing (settlement) charges and give the borrower a copy of a HUD booklet, Buying Your Home: Settlement Costs and Helpful Information (Form HUD-398-H(4)).

RESPA also prohibits "any agreement or understanding, oral or otherwise, that business incident to or a part of a settlement service involving a federally related mortgage loan shall be referred to any person." n61

(1) Section 8 of RESPA permits a payment:

(i) To an attorney at law for services actually rendered;

(ii) By a title company to its duly appointed agent for services actually performed in the issuance of a policy of title insurance;

(iii) By a lender to its duly appointed agent or contractor for services actually performed in the origination, processing, or funding of a loan;

(iv) To any person of a bona fide salary or compensation or other payment for goods or facilities actually furnished or for services actually performed; or

(v) Pursuant to cooperative brokerage and referral arrangements or agreements between real estate agents and brokers.

(2) Section 8 of RESPA does not prohibit:

(i). Normal promotional and educational activities that are not conditioned on the referral of business and that do not involve the defraying of expenses that otherwise would be incurred by persons in a position to refer settlement services or business incident thereto;

(ii). An employer's payment to its own employees for any referral activities; or

(iii). Any payment by a borrower for computer loan origination services, so long as disclosure ... is provided the borrower.

(3) The Department may investigate high prices to see if they are the result of a referral fee or a split of a fee. If the payment of a thing of value bears no reasonable relationship to the market value of the goods or services provided, then the excess is not for services or goods actually performed or provided. These facts may be used as evidence of a violation of § 8 and may serve as a basis for a RESPA investigation. High prices standing alone are not proof of a RESPA violation. The value of a referral (i.e., the value of any additional business obtained thereby) is not to be taken into account in determining whether the payment exceeds the reasonable value of such goods, facilities or services. The fact that the transfer of the thing of value does not result in an increase in any charge made by the person giving the thing of value is irrelevant in determining whether the act is prohibited.

(4) Multiple services. When a person in a position to refer settlement service business, such as an attorney, mortgage lender, real estate broker or agent, or developer or builder, receives a payment for providing additional settlement services as part of a real estate transaction, such payment must be for services that are actual, necessary and distinct from the primary services provided by such person. For example, for an attorney of the buyer or seller to receive compensation as a title agent, the attorney must perform core title agent services (for which liability arises) separate from attorney services. Such services include: the evaluation of the title search to determining the insurability of the title, the clearance of underwriting objections, the actual issuance of the policy or policies on behalf of the title insurance company; where customary, issuance of the title commitment, and the conducting of the title search and closing.

(5) Record-keeping. Any documents provided to this section shall be retained for five (5) years from the date of execution. n62

Sarah is buying a house from Gertrude and Harry. The loan balance on Gertrude and Harry's home mortgage is approximately $145,000. The purchase price is $300,000. Sarah has paid $30,000 into escrow before the closing. She plans to pay the rest with a $270,000 loan from a third party lender.

§ 94.05(g) The Closing Statement.

The "bottom line" in a closing is revealed in the closing statements prepared for buyer and seller. It is important for lawyers representing the parties, and the parties to the closing themselves, to anticipate the quite substantial costs involved in closing a real estate sale and to reserve the right to see the closing statement in advance of the closing so there will be no last minute surprises. n63

A homebuyer who agreed to purchase for $300,000 with a loan of $270,000 might naively expect to need $30,000 in cash to close. She will often need quite a bit more -- $40,000 plus.

Much of the shortfall will be attributable to fees related to the loan: credit report, processing fee, origination fee (part of the interest rate), and administration fee. These are all part of the real cost of credit.

"Some of the fees are so vague that even lenders are hard-pressed to define them ... 'administrative fee,' 'trustee fee,' 'financing statement fee,' and 'computer fee.'" n64 Most documents are now drawn up on computers. How much "administration" does a lender really do to process a form note and deed of trust? Turn on the printer, go to the directory and press the "print" key? Lenders may be trying to recoup software costs. One financial executive estimates $75 as a reasonable charge. n65

Consider messenger fees. How many were necessitated because the escrow company was late preparing documents and then had to hire a messenger service to put everything in place on time?

After obtaining loan approval, the buyer should have received an estimate of closing costs (required by the federal Truth-in-Lending laws). Her lender or mortgage broker may have told her the estimates are on the high side so lenders don't risk violating the disclosure requirements of the Truth-in-Lending law. Still, it is not unheard of for lenders to exceed their estimates and present the borrower with a take-it-or-leave-it option at the eleventh hour, knowing the borrower seldom possesses any choices but to pay up or lose the deal. Lenders can be quite inventive in labeling and assessing loan closing costs.

If the buyer is obligated to take out private mortgage insurance, the premium will be added to the sums the buyer needs to pay. The buyer may have to kick in some cash for property tax and insurance payments if her loan requires the lender to collect these in monthly contributions from the borrower. The lender then forwards the insurance premiums and property taxes later when they fall due. On top of this, there may be city or state real estate transfer taxes and recording fees, as well as property tax pro-rations.

The bottom line for the sellers may result in their receiving a much smaller sum than they may have expected, especially if they haven't kept in mind what they owe their real estate broker. Broker's fees take a big bite out of the price the seller receives. There may be local transfer taxes and recording fees as well, possibly a buyer's protection plan insuring the physical condition of the property if the seller agreed to pay for it, the buyer's title insurance premium (in some jurisdictions), and a loan prepayment fee if the sellers are paying off an existing debt as a condition of the sale.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 52. This material is reprinted with permission from California Real Property Sales Transactions, § 13.34, Usual Steps in Escrow, 3d ed (Cal CEB 1998), copyright by the Regents of the University of California.

Note that, in California, "both the timing and the party performing each step may differ between Northern and Southern California...." California Real Property Sales Transactions, § 13.34, Usual Steps in Escrow, 3d ed (Cal CEB 1998), copyright by the Regents of the University of California.

(n2)Footnote 53. See, e.g., Gene Esser, The Closing, Florida Real Property Sales Transactions.

(n3)Footnote 54. A full discussion of these and other closing documents can be found in Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Closings ch. 2 (2d ed. 1987). The complete list from which this excerpt is taken appears in Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 187-88 (9th ed. 1988). See, Joyce Palomar, "The War Between Attorneys and Lay Conveyancers--Empirical Evidence Says 'Cease Fire?'" 31 Conn. L. Rev. 423 (Winter, 1999).

(n4)Footnote 55. Vanderveer v. Gross, 614 N.Y.S.2d 29 (1994).

(n5)Footnote 56. I.R.C. § 1445(b)(2). See Lee F. Holdmann, The New FIRPTA Withholding Rules-- Brokers, Agents, Settlement Officers, Attorneys: Beware!, 12 J. Real Est. Tax'n 261 (1985).

(n6)Footnote 57. See James A. Frechter, Alien Landownership in the United States: A Matter of State Control, 14 Brook. J. Int'l L. 147, 156-57 (1988).

(n7)Footnote 58. I.R.C. § 6045(e). See Gerald F. Stack, Real Estate Reporting Requirements Under the 1986 Internal Revenue Code, 59 N.Y. St. B.J. 24 (Dec. 1989).

(n8)Footnote 59. I.R.C. § 3406(b)(3)(c).

(n9)Footnote 60. HUD's authority comes from the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), 12 U.S.C. § 2601. HUD's form was promulgated at 24 C.F.R. § 3500.7(d).

(n10)Footnote 61. 24 C.F.R. Part 3500.14.

(n11)Footnote 62. 24 C.F.R. Part 3500.14.

(n12)Footnote 63. See Susan I. Teifenblun, Hidden Costs of Buying and Selling Property in New York, N.Y. L.J. (Oct. 9, 1991) 1.

(n13)Footnote 64. Daniel Foster, How Loan Fees Can Really Add Up: Most Borrowers Are Aware of the Big Charges, But a Few Dollars Here, Another Service Charge There and Surprise -- You're Talking Real Money, L.A. Times, Oct. 17, 1993 at K1.

(n14)Footnote 65. Daniel Foster, How Loan Fees Can Really Add Up: Most Borrowers Are Aware of the Big Charges, But a Few Dollars Here, Another Service Charge There and Surprise -- You're Talking Real Money, L.A. Times, Oct. 17, 1993 at K1, quoting Tom Dunlap, President, Jon Douglas Financial.

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.06

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.06 The Escrow.

[Go To Supp]

§ 94.06(a) History.

The origin of escrow services in California dates back nearly a century. n66 Although "escrow agents" have probably been functioning ever since man began exchanging or selling property - and we have seen traces of them in Mexican California - the flowering of "escrow service" in California as distinct from title service, seems to date from the 1890s. The late L. J. Beynon, a former official of Title Insurance and Trust Company, told of the beginnings of escrow service there in these words: "One day in 1895 a man came into the office of the company and left an order for a certificate of title. He said he was obliged to leave town for a few days and asked if the order clerk would take his executed deed, deliver it to the buyer, together with the certificate of title, and collect from him the sum of $1,000.00. This simple transaction was our first escrow." Soon afterward an escrow department was installed. Presently the employment of a title company to hold funds and documents and to see that proper payments and deliveries were made when the condition of the title met requirements, became common practice. n67

§ 94.06(b) Choosing an Escrow Agent.

Selecting an escrow agent is much like selecting any other professional. Spend an hour in a successful escrow office, especially in late December when taxpayers are rushing their deals to beat the new year, and you will be astonished by the volume of work, the diversity of transactions, and the range of competence.

Buyers, sellers, real estate brokers and lenders want an agent whose office is conveniently located to them. Everyone wants an agent who has time and competence to process the deal, financial stability, integrity, and a good track record. They base their selection on their own experiences with agents and advice from other real estate people (attorneys, brokers, lenders, property owners). They may check with the state agency that licenses escrow agents. n68

The party who is going to get stuck with the bill wants the best price. Comparative shopping for price is a good idea. Escrow fees aren't regulated and are negotiable. But there is no sure way to make the price-quality trade-off.

Escrow departments can be found in title companies and many banks. Real estate brokers may handle escrows for their own sales. Attorneys, too, may act as escrow agents n69 but they do so at their peril n70 since they would seldom have the volume of business necessary to keep abreast of industry customs and rules. Further, if the attorney represents only one of the parties in the transaction, the attorney risks conflict of interest problems in trying to serve as an independent escrow agent for both of them. n71

Private, independent escrow firms, usually smaller, were often started by star performers in the escrow departments of these institutions who saw an opportunity to get into a business for themselves and took it. They may be more savvy than some of the agents employed by big title companies and banks. However, few of these small firms have the assets to cover big losses should their employees mess up badly. As a result, clients must sometimes choose between the competence of the independent agent and the solvency of the big institutional escrow department.

It is always comforting to do business with people who have performed well in the past. But be wary of the other party to the transaction designating an escrow firm too friendly to them. Remember, an escrow agent who depends on the other party for repeat business and has to make some close calls in your deal, may call you out. (For this reason real estate developers in California cannot require the use of an escrow in which the developer has a financial interest as a condition to the sale of a single-family house. n72)

For big, complicated commercial transactions some lawyers avoid escrows altogether, or use them only for document processing. They know that the escrow business is based on high volume and quick turnover, agents are often harried, and don't have time for nuance. Few are schooled in the subtleties of law, accounting or real estate. Yet even in the most complicated deals attorneys work with escrow agents because of their skill in coordinating lenders to pay off old loans and fund new ones; computing prorations of property taxes, insurance and rents; ordering title company searches and policies; and making sure deeds and mortgages are neatly executed and perfectly prepared for recordation.

§ 94.06(c) Escrow Instructions.

Since escrow instructions are not a contract for the sale of land, they don't have to be in writing to satisfy the Statue of Frauds. n73 But they almost always are, and consist usually of two parts. One part is special or specific instructions, containing the particulars of the transaction at hand. "Specific" instructions can be drafted from scratch, inserted on a printed form, or could consist of no more than a copy of the underlying contract. Attached to the special instructions will be a set of printed conditions defining the escrow-principal relationship. These are called "general" instructions. n74

All escrow instructions are drafted mainly to keep escrow agents away from hard and controversial choices, and to limit their liability if the parties to the escrow have a falling out.

Instead of the escrow special instructions giving the agent authority to judge whether items excluded from title coverage render title unmarketable, instructions will provide that the escrow agent is to proceed towards closing unless the buyer, unsatisfied with the title report, notifies the agent in writing to halt. A similar approach is taken to inspections of the property, review of leases, and so forth. Some items in the contract may be handled "outside escrow" and the instructions will state that. For example, the contract may specify: "Seller warrants to paint the house." The escrow instructions may provide: "Escrow agent is to take no notice of whether the seller has painted the house. This matter is to be resolved by the parties outside escrow. This is a matter with which escrow is not to be concerned."

If the parties end up at loggerheads, the escrow agent's general instructions allow impounding the funds and bringing both parties into court for a final judgment resolving their differences - at no cost to the escrow agent.

Although lawyers involved in closings often scrutinize with meticulous care the special or specific instructions translating contract terms into performance standards, they tend to overlook the general instructions. In the Appendix, Form 3, we reprinted one escrow firm's "general instructions." Perhaps lawyers assume these printed items aren't negotiable. Maybe they know that horrific language in the general instructions will be unenforceable such as that purporting to inculpate the escrow agent from negligence. n75

A little blue penciling of the general instructions can often help. To offer one small example: Buyer and seller may agree to split escrow costs fifty-fifty. But often the escrow general instructions will make each of them responsible "jointly and severally." If one party reneges the escrow agent can collect the entire fee from the most solvent or available one. Few agents will balk at a lawyer deleting the "jointly and severally liable" provision.

Another example concerns the payment of interest on funds held in escrow. According to the form escrow general instructions, it is clear that funds will be held by the escrow company pending closing. If closing is delayed that period can easily reach three or four months. In California escrow agents, by statute, are required to deposit funds in noninterest-bearing accounts absent contrary instructions. By statute in Maryland, interest earned on escrowed funds and not allocated by the parties is paid into a state housing trust fund for the development of low and moderate income housing. n76 In either state the parties could have specified that the funds be placed in an interest-bearing account for the benefit of the buyer before closing and for the benefit of the seller afterward. A thoughtful buyer or seller will stipulate in the special instructions that funds are to be placed in interest-paying accounts and credited to the buyer before closing and the seller after closing.

General instructions will be the same for buyer, seller, and lender in one escrow. Additionally, buyer and seller, and sometimes lender, often sign separate special or specific instructions since they are each directing escrow to do different but complementary things. n77 This can lead to the agent receiving conflicting instructions.

The contract of sale stipulates that the deal is "subject to purchaser obtaining a satisfactory loan approval within 60 days from the signing of this contract."

The buyer's execution of loan documentation is deemed sufficient evidence of compliance.

If the buyer fails to procure written loan approval the sellers have the option of cancelling by depositing a demand for cancellation into escrow.

If the sellers cancel or the buyer fails to receive written loan approval, the escrow officer rescinds, returns the buyer's funds, and if a dispute arises, is promised indemnity by buyer and seller.

§ 94.06(d) When Escrow Malfunctions, Who Is Liable?

Case law and the Escrow Agent Registration Act require escrow agents to secure a $250,000 fidelty bond that insures against fraudulent acts committed by escrow agents or their employees. n78 In California, all escrow agents are licensed by the state, n79 need a minimum net worth of $50,000, a minimum $25,000 in liquid assets, n80 and must subscribe to the Escrow Agents Fidelity Corporation, n81 an insurance fund. n82 Agents' premiums depend on their potential liabilities. Escrow companies must maintain records, provide audits to and be audited by the Commissioner of Corporations, keep escrow funds in a separate trust account, and obtain fidelity bonds on officers and employees having access to funds.

Escrow agents, like all mortals, sometimes err. On rare occasions escrow companies commingle client funds, sometimes steal them and flee. In states where lawyers carry out the escrow function of closing a title, attorneys have been known to steal funds, too. n83 The buyer's title insurer may be liable when a closing attorney it approved steals escrowed funds. In states where real estate brokers perform escrow functions, defrauded clients may have recourse to a state fund. n84 Sometimes an escrow agent wrongfully conveys the deed signed by the seller to a third party who forges the grantee's name and reconveys to a bona fide purchaser. The story will feature interviews with distraught sellers and buyers whose deals were put on hold for months as state administrators stepped in to sort things out.

Rights Upon Embezzlement of Money in Escrow n85

> The parties' rights when the escrow holder embezzles funds on deposit in escrow or goes into bankruptcy depend on which party has title to the funds. If the conditions of the escrow have not been met because, for instance, the title insurance has not yet been procured, title to the money is still in the buyer and the buyer must suffer the loss. ... [Pagan v. Spencer (1951) 104 Cal. App. 2d 588, 590-592, 232 P.2d 323 ; Shreeves v. Pearson (1924) 194 Cal. 699, 707-711, 230 P. 488.] Even if the deed had been recorded, title to the money and the loss on embezzlement was still with the buyer if the deed was recorded before the seller's conditions had been met and was thus ineffective to pass title to the buyer. ... [Todd v. Vestermark (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 374, 379-380, 302 P.2d 347] If, however, the conditions of the escrow have all been met, title to the money is in the seller and the seller must suffer the loss. ... [Greenzweight v. Title Guar. & Tr. Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 577, 580-582, 36 P.2d 186.] There is an exception to the rule that the loss falls on the party who had title to the embezzled funds. If the negligence of one party caused the loss, that party will bear the loss regardless of who had technical title to the money. This rule was held to be possibly applicable when the buyer's money had been on deposit with the escrow holder for 15 months prior to its bankruptcy due to the seller's delay in prosecuting a quiet title action. ... [Majors v. Butler (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 370, 374-375, 221 P.2d 994.] n86

Observe the subtle gap between how the law characterizes the cash and deed held in escrow and how escrow practice treats these items. According to the letter of the law, the cash belongs to the buyer until closing, and then to the seller thereafter. Vice versa for the deed. Never do both parties own the cash or the title jointly. Yet, if a dispute arises, it won't be settled peaceably without the consent of both parties--as if cash and title were owned in common by them both!

Because of the possibility of escrow agent embezzlement, principals involved in multi-million dollar transactions often balk at the idea of dealing with independent escrow companies. They prefer using the escrow department at one of the large, national title companies. That way they are secure that the company can cover any losses due to their employee's indiscretions.

Alternately, if the parties truly want to use an independent escrow company, there are ways of reducing the risk of loss. For example, prior to opening escrow they may want to examine the escrow company's financial statements or inquire about the size of their bond. They can also arrange for the opening of a sub-escrow at their title company. A sub-escrow typically involves the receiving of loan proceeds from the new lender and the disbursement of payoffs to the past lender(s). Most institutional lenders insist on the use of a sub-escrow, refusing to fund the loan directly to the escrow company regardless of the size of the transaction.

In states where lawyers carry out the escrow function of closing a title, attorneys have been known to steal funds too. n87 The buyer's title insurer may be liable when an attorney is approved to handle the closing and steals the escrow funds.

That is precisely the result of the New Jersey Supreme Court's opinion in Clients' Security Fund of the Bar of N.J. v. Security Title & Guar. Co. n88 An attorney representing the buyer handled the closing. The attorney had been selected from a list of attorneys approved by the buyer's title insurer to effectuate the purchase of title insurance. The buyer paid all cash, part to be used to pay off the seller's existing loan. The attorney absconded with the funds, so the existing lender was never paid off, and its loan remained in place. The buyer recovered only a portion of the loss attributable to his attorney's misappropriation. The attorney was disbarred and went to jail. The buyer, however, was still left with a property subject to a loan when his purchase price was supposed to have gotten him the property free and clear.

In states where title companies approve attorneys as agents, they often make available to lenders a closing protection letter specifically insuring the lender that if the approved attorney makes off with funds intended for the insured lender, the title company will make good on the defalcation. These letters are offered lenders at no additional cost. No such letter was offered the buyer in this case, but the New Jersey Supreme Court implied such coverage anyway, and placed the purchaser's loss on the title insurer.

The rationale for title insurers being held liable when approved attorneys embezzle, is that an agency relationship exists between the attorney and the title insurer. The insurer can control the way attorneys use escrowed funds, and third parties rely on the attorney's apparent authority to act for the title insurer.

The buyer expected title insurance of a fee simple absolute, free of the existing mortgage in exchange for his insurance premium. And that is what the court awarded the buyer--at the insurer's expense. The title insurer was held liable to the defrauded buyer on a finding that the closing attorney acted as an agent to the title insurer. The insurer paid off the mortgage, and was instructed to see that the mortgage lien was released of record. The buyer was left in the position he would have enjoyed had the attorney not absconded. The attorney was criminally convicted, imprisoned and disbarred.

§ 94.06(e) Escrow Agent's Duties.

An escrow agent is supposed to make sure the parties perform according to instructions. The escrow agent who was instructed to take a security instrument before releasing funds is liable for ignoring the instruction, and releasing funds before obtaining the instrument. Similarly, if the terms of the proffered mortgage differ materially from those agreed in the instructions, the agent is liable. If there were no instructions on the terms, the agent needs to get both parties to agree to mortgage terms before closing.

Required to collect money, and presented a check as payment, the agent needs to cash the check promptly. The agent who delays cashing it when the check bounces, becomes liable but only if the check would have cleared had it been cashed on time. n89

The agent is required to disclose, when asked, title defects she knows about but has no duty to search title or otherwise discover defects.

The escrow agent should steer clear of drafting documents or offering legal advice. But when an agent does proffer legal advice, that proves wrong, the agent is fully liable for the consequences of the principal having relied on the agent's bad advice. In one case, buyers of a new house were hesitant to close because they heard there were unpaid subcontractors working on the house. The agent told them not to worry. Unpaid subs were the builder's problem, not theirs. Thus reassured, they closed. The subs filed mechanics' liens. The buyers sued the agent and prevailed against a challenge to their pleadings based on negligence. "Once having undertaken to give advice, the defendant was under an obligation to proceed with a reasonable degree of care." n90

The agent has no duty to discover whether a fraud is being committed in an escrow but may have an obligation to disclose frauds apparent and obvious, or withdraw when she must choose between breaching client confidentiality and failing to disclose a potential fraud.

An example of how sticky this can get: suppose the buyers got a terrific deal and have already contracted to resell, subject to their deal closing with sellers. The buyers got a terrific deal and have already contracted to resell, subject to their deal closing with sellers. They open a second escrow to facilitate the resale, using the same escrow officer. Should an escrow officer owe the seller the duty to disclose the planned resale - especially after the seller has told the escrow agent he thought the sale price was too low?

Duty to Disclose n91

An escrow holder has a fiduciary duty to communicate to the parties to the escrow knowledge that > the escrow holder acquires in the course of its agency with respect to material facts that might affect either party's decision with respect to the transaction, particularly when the escrow holder knows that a party is looking to the escrow holder for protection as to those very facts of which the escrow holder has knowledge. ... [Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 64-65, 227 Cal. Rptr. 785.] However, because an escrow holder's agency is limited to carrying out the escrow instructions, an escrow holder is not required to go beyond the instructions and notify each party of any suspicious fact or circumstance that has come to the escrow holder's attention before or during the escrow that could conceivably affect a party to the escrow, when the fact or circumstance is not related to the party's specific escrow instructions. ... [Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 162-163, 70 Cal. Rptr. 378.] Thus, an escrow holder in an escrow for the sale of land was not held to be under any duty to disclose to the buyer the fact that the seller was purchasing the land from the record owner in the same escrow and reselling it to the buyer at a substantial profit when the buyer's instructions did not include a demand for such information. ... [Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 162-163, 70 Cal. Rptr. 378 ; Blackburn v. McCoy (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 648, 654-655, 36 P.2d 153.] Similarly, a title insurer who has been engaged only to perform basic escrow functions, such as paying out funds, recording documents, and preparing a preliminary title report, and not to perform as an abstractor of title, owes no duty to disclose recorded liens or clouds on title. ... [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat. Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1190, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84.] n92

The agent, in fulfilling a duty to disclose fraud-in-the-escrow, does not have to look outside the immediate escrow and play detective to discover it. Escrow agents are presently liable for making sure everything in the escrow they are overseeing is in good order. If the buyer's check bounces, the agent must inform the seller. If the seller's signature on the deed looks different from the one on the escrow instructions, the agent must say so. Imposing on the escrow agent the duty of keeping a watchful lookout for obvious fraud, as in a double escrow, may be seen as adding little to the escrow agent's present duties.

An Arizona case, Berry v. McLeod, n93 illustrates the nuances of this "fraud-in-the-escrow" exception. In that case an escrow agent was held liable in a "double" escrow. The buyer was a corporation formed by the sellers' real estate broker. The same escrow agent was employed by the broker to oversee a resale of the property from the dummy corporation to the broker. The Arizona court thought the escrow agent should have warned the seller that the broker was buying the property through a dummy corporation. At least one law review commentator agrees with the Arizona holding. n94

A case can be made against the fraud exception embodied in the Arizona rule. The escrow function requires almost machine-like precision, attention to detail, and speed. Escrow agents typically handle 100 escrows at a time. Some believe that the system would work best if escrow agents were required to disclose only information made subject to disclosure by explicit instruction.

In most states the escrow agent is free from liability if the agent (1) complies strictly with the terms of the escrow agreement, (2) maintains confidentiality, and fulfills the instructions with "scrupulous honesty, skill, and diligence." n95 The Arizona Supreme Court went further in Burkons v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., and held an agent liable for failing to report that a buyer was using borrowed funds to make the down payment from a loan secured by a lien superior to the seller's purchase money loan. The buyer was perpetrating a fraud on the seller and the Arizona Supreme Court held that the escrow agent "should have been aware of it." If you are having trouble figuring out what the buyer did that was wrong, think of the escrow agent's situation. The Arizona Supreme Court allows parties to go to trial to prove what "reasonable escrow agents" should know and do when -- with a little digging -- they could unearth a fraud one party to an escrow is committing against another. n96

So far, California courts haven't gone nearly this far. They haven't even required disclosure of "double escrows," even when a real estate broker is buying the seller's property through a "straw" and reselling it to garner a secret profit. n97

However, escrow agents have settled some cases brought against them for failure to disclose double escrows. Los Angeles real estate lawyer, Alan Wayte, gives this example: Partners A and B owned an office building. Partner A ran it and knew more about its true value than Partner B. When they got an offer from Corporation C, Partner A said, "Sell," and Partner B took A's advice. Partner A actually controlled Corporation C, and arranged for C to convey to A in a back-to-back escrow handled simultaneously by the same agent who completed the A + B to C sale. Eventually B learned he had been duped and sued A for fraud and the escrow agent for nondisclosure. The agent settled. So it may be that the Arizona rule needs to be reckoned with in California. n98

§ 94.06(f) Inconsistencies Between Escrow Instructions and the Purchase-and-Sale Contract.

Escrow instructions should coincide perfectly with the underlying contract unless the parties expressly consent in writing to a contract modification. Conflicts, however, between the contract and the escrow instructions are possible, and can become the focus of litigation once the parties have a falling out, and the deal fails to close. There are conflicting common-law rules regarding inconsistencies. One rule is that the contract governs since escrow instructions are designed merely to implement the contract. The other is the well-known rule of contract law that the last agreement in a series usually governs. Almost always, the escrow instructions come later than the contract. Matters are further complicated because escrow instructions frequently specify that the contract is to prevail.

> Inconsistencies [between purchase agreement and escrow instructions] that do occur usually arise because of an error in drafting the instructions, because one party's interpretation of the purchase agreement differs from the other's, or because the parties orally modified the agreement after it was executed. Inconsistencies in the buyer's and the seller's instructions because of a drafting error are usually resolved easily. Inconsistencies because of conflicting interpretations of the agreement may require further negotiation before the transaction can close.
>
> In resolving inconsistencies, the general rule is that, when more than one document between the same parties pertains to the same subject matter, both documents are to be interpreted together to the extent they are not inconsistent. ...
>
> [W]hen the inconsistency results from a provision in the purchase agreement being omitted from the instructions, ... the instructions are held to be merely supplemental to the agreement and both are interpreted together--the agreement controlling when the instructions are silent. ... n99

§ 94.06(g) Delivery.

§ 94.06(g)(1) Delivery Defined and the Impetus for Using Escrows.

A deed becomes effective only on delivery. An undelivered deed can look perfectly valid and be recorded and yet not convey good title. Suppose an unscrupulous grantee grabs an executed deed from the grantor's hands before paying the purchase price. Then the grantee sells to an innocent purchaser. That purchaser is out of luck. The stolen deed wasn't valid because it hadn't been delivered. n100

"Delivery" is a question of fact of the grantor's objective intent, objectively determined. Usually the delivery requires:

> (1) an intent to deliver, and
>
> (2) some evidence of that intent unless the grantor's intent is so clear that it requires no corroborating evidence.

The grantor handing the deed to the grantee is good evidence of intent to deliver, but it is not conclusive. n101 The grantor retaining possession of the deed is presumptive evidence of a lack of intent to deliver. However, in either situation the presumption of physical possession can and occasionally is rebutted by other evidence of the grantor's intent. Winning grantees, lacking actual possession, are sometimes said to have been in constructive possession.

The grantor must intend a present transfer of ownership. So a grantor who gives a deed to the grantee or a third party intending to convey title several months or years in the future hasn't "delivered" the deed. A typical case: mother hands a friend a deed to her house naming her son as grantee with this instruction: "I am giving my son the house when I die. Take this deed and give it to him after my death. Until then I will continue to own the house." There is no delivery here unless the mother can be said to have conveyed a vested remainder subject to her own life estate. n102

You can see the mischief that could result from a failure of delivery. A grantee who holds a seemingly valid deed and records it can easily deceive a bona fide purchaser (BFP). Between the BFP and the grantor, most courts place the loss on the grantor if the deed was delivered "conditionally" to the grantee. n103 But the BFP loses if the grantor never handed the deed to the grantee - if, for instance, the grantee stole it.

> [T]he matter of whether a grantor "intended" delivery is left to the trier of fact. In the case of a "conditional" delivery, if the court wants to find for the grantor, it will cite the rule that a deed delivered to the grantee conditionally is a conveyance absolute - in order to protect innocent third parties from the carelessness of grantors. A court impressed with the hardship this might cause in an individual case could determine a lack of the requisite intent to deliver, and hold the deed void as undelivered. n104

A few states make the presumption of delivery conclusive when the deed is recorded. n105 This helps title insurers by enabling them to insure the validity of deeds once recorded without worrying about whether each deed was, in fact, "delivered."

Even when the deed has not been delivered, if the grantor has put the grantee in a position to deceive their parties, the grantor may have to bear some of the burden of the deception. The grantor's deed may be treated as valid if the grantor "has been negligent, or is estopped to claim a lack of delivery, as against innocent third persons." n106

§ 94.06(g)(2) Conditional Delivery of Deed to Grantee Becomes a Deed Absolute Free of Conditions.

Sometimes sellers hand over deeds to buyers before the buyer has met all the conditions of closing the deal. In California by statute, n107 and in many jurisdictions by common law, n108 a deed that the grantor delivers conditionally to the grantee is conclusively presumed to be delivered and becomes a deed absolute -- unless the conditions are written on the deed itself, and they seldom are. Latent conditions cease to be enforceable as a lien on the property although they may be enforced in a damage action by the grantor against the grantee. If the grantee sells to a BFP, the BFP takes title free of the conditions.

> The no-conditional-delivery rule is not universally accepted. H, a model husband in the eyes of the trial court, was married to W, unpleasant and unfaithful in the opinion of the same trier of fact. H gave W a deed to their house when he left for a military tour, during the war between nationalist and communist forces in China, in 1946, on the condition that she would reconvey to him, if he returned safely. He wasn't sent to China after all, but to Japan, and did return. W refused to give back the deed, and when H sued for its return, she sued for a divorce and for custody of their daughter. The same court which gave custody to H, unusual enough since the wife ordinarily gets custody of younger children, overruled Maryland's conditional delivery rule and compelled the wife to reconvey. Acknowledging the majority rule on conditional deliveries to grantees, the court concluded that this rule was wrong:
>
> "But there is actually no logical reason why a deed should not be held in escrow by the grantee as well as by any other person. The ancient rule is not adapted to present-day conditions and is entirely unnecessary for the protection of the rights of litigants. After all, a conditional delivery is purely a > question of intention, and it is immaterial whether the instrument, pending satisfaction of the condition, is in the hands of the grantor, the grantee, or a third person. After the condition is satisfied, there is an operative conveyance which is considered as having been delivered at the time of the conditional delivery, for the reason that it was then that it was actually delivered, although the ownership does not pass until the satisfaction of the conditions. We, therefore, hold that it is the intention of the grantor of a deed that determines whether the delivery of the deed is absolute or conditional, although the delivery is made by the grantor directly to the grantee." Chillemi v. Chillemi, 197 Md. 257, 264-65, 78 A.2d 750, 753 (1951). n109

Some of the most difficult cases involving the concept of delivery arise not in commercial or residential sales but in the cases where the grantor gives property to a relative or friend conditioned on the grantor's death.

Gifts causa mortis (in contemplation of death) are often invalidated as ineffective testamentary dispositions (wills) for failing to meet the formal requirements of the Statute or Wills or because as wills such gifts are revocable and the grantor's final will is deemed to constitute a revocation. Encouraged by a provision in the Uniform Probate Code which appears to validate conveyances and other acts conditioned on the grantor's death, at least one court has upheld a deed conditioned on the grantor's death by stretching the delivery requirement. n110 The delivery was held effective when a mother intending a property transfer to take place on her death placed deeds naming daughter as grantee in joint safety deposit box. If the court had construed the time of the intended delivery to have been at the grantor's death, the delivery would not have been timely. The property would have passed by will. To avoid this result, the court found that delivery occurred earlier. Other courts are inclined to save such gifts by characterizing them as having conveyed vested remainders subject to life estates in the grantor.

§ 94.06(g)(3) Conditional Delivery of Deed to Third Party Can't Be Validly Delivered Until Conditions Are Met.

The seller who places an executed deed in the hands of an escrow agent is presumed to have delivered the deed because the agent is also receiving it as the buyer's agent. Cautious sellers don't execute deeds much before closing, nor do they turn them over to escrow early. However, the seller's "delivery" of a deed into escrow is conditional; the conditions are whatever the parties instructed the escrow agent to do. n111

This means that a seller who wants to avoid risking any loss of title before the buyer has kept all promises, can't hand the deed directly to the buyer before the buyer fully performs. The seller has to wait until all the conditions of closing are met, or hand the deed--with conditions--to a third party, that is, anyone but the buyer. Hence, the impetus for using escrows. The seller is usually protected when the escrow agent wrongfully delivers or records the deed before all the conditions of escrow have been fulfilled. n112

If met with contradictory conditions, the agent may not proceed by favoring one party over another. The agent must halt the escrow and resolve the controversy before proceeding.

Conditions inserted for the benefit of one party to a deal may be waived by that party. In such a case, the deed is deemed delivered free of conditions. Say the seller is to take back a note and deed of trust for part of the purchase price. The deed of trust is never properly executed because the escrow agent messes up. After closing, the buyer seeks rescission but the seller would rather keep the sale closed even though this means the seller will remain unsecured for the purchase money. The seller prevails if the condition for a security instrument was there for the benefit of the seller alone. In that case, it is the seller's to waive. n113

Even a BFP takes nothing who acquires a deed wrongfully delivered by an escrow agent. There is a minority view -- that since the grantor chose the escrow agent, the grantor should be estopped from denying the escrow agent's apparent authority to convey free of conditions.

Everywhere, the escrow agent who wrongfully delivers or records the deed before all the conditions of escrow have been fulfilled is also liable to the grantor for misfeasance. n114

§ 94.06(g)(4) How the Delivery Rule Can Save Sellers from a Devious or Careless Escrow Agent.

An escrow agent failing to follow instructions regarding the recording of deeds of trust led to the case of Powell v. Goldsmith. n115 The Goldsmiths agreed to sell a condo to an existing mortgage to Rancho Conje Realty (RCR), a corporation wholly owned by John F. McInerney, for $51,500 - $25,000 cash plus a promissory note secured by a second deed of trust on the condo for the balance, $26,500. The Goldsmiths didn't know that the buyer was borrowing $42,000 cash from passive investors--the Powells--to make the purchase and that the Powells thought their $42,000 would be secured by a second deed of trust superior to the Goldsmiths'. The Powells were lured into the deal by the Pyramid Home Loan Corporation (Pyramid).

The Goldsmiths' escrow agent was instructed to record their deed and purchase money deed of trust promptly, but didn't. The Goldsmiths were to have gotten a second deed of trust for $26,500. Instead the agent handed the documents to Pyramid.

The money Pyramid was putting into the deal--$42,000--wouldn't be well secured at all by a THIRD deed of trust as the Pyramid investors, the Powells, were to discover later.

The buyer, RCR, was borrowing twice for the same purchase price--$26,500 from the Goldsmiths, $42,000 from the Powells. Absent a spectacular increase in value, one or the other of these lenders was bound to be disappointed.

Pyramid, acting for the Powells, wanted to assert a second, not a third deed of trust on the condo. So instead of letting the escrow agent record as instructed, Pyramid took possession of the Goldsmiths' deed and their purchase money mortgage and behaved as any unscrupulous trust deed "manufacturer." It recorded the grant deed and its own deed of trust, and for several weeks withheld from record the Goldsmith purchase money deed of trust. In this way Pyramid could show the Powells a lien of record superior under recording act principals to the Goldsmiths'.

Who was the careless escrow agent who handed over these documents without seeing to their timely recordation? Why, someone at RCR Escrow, another corporation wholly owned by McInerney! Need more be said about the importance of a truly neutral escrow agent to the innocent buyer or seller who wants to stay that way?

In the Powell case, the deed was fraudulently obtained by the grantee. Since the conditions of the deed weren't satisfied, the Goldsmith deed was never delivered. Title did not pass to the grantee, but remained with the Goldsmiths. The Goldsmiths' case was strong because they were purchase money mortgagees. "The privity of a purchase money deed of trust over any liens against a buyer is the primary exception to the general rule that deeds of trust obtain their priority by date of creation or date of recordation." n116

The Powell court embraced the generally prevailing rule, that delivery of a deed on conditions to a third party is void until the conditions are fulfilled. Many courts treat a wrongful delivery by an escrow agent as they would a deed stolen directly from the grantor but there is considerable dissent. n117

What about the equally innocent investors, the Powells, who thought they were buying a second deed of trust when, in the end, they would have nothing for their investment funds but a cause of action from the promoter, Pyramid? While there was no evidence Powell or McInerney knew what Pyramid had done in reversing the agreed order of recordation, knowledge of Pyramid's fraudulent scheme "cancels their claim of being bona fide purchasers for value." n118

The facts of Powell v. Goldsmith may discourage your using an escrow agent. After all, the Goldsmiths didn't get a sale and a purchase money second deed of trust. They got a lawsuit, and luckily, a rescission of the sale. The Powells, who also trusted an escrow agent to secure the loan that they were making with a second deed of trust, ended up with no security interest at all, just a lawsuit against a persuasive and unscrupulous second trust deed marketeer. The Powells' agent sold them out. But take heart. Most escrow agents are competent, trustworthy and efficient -- seldom perfect, but who is?

§ 94.06(g)(5) The Presumptive Delivery Date in an Escrow Closing.

At common law, escrow closed and the deed was deemed delivered when the buyer paid the price, and the seller executed a deed and turned it over to the escrow agent. Today, the escrow isn't usually deemed closed until the deed has been recorded, because the buyer specifies in most escrow instructions that closing takes place only when the deed has been filed for record.

§ 94.06(g)(6) Escrows and "Relation Back" Theories Determine the Date of Delivery.

When deeds are delivered to escrow, sometimes courts presume delivery "relates back" to the time the grantor first placed the deed into escrow "in trust" for the purchaser, or back to the time the grantor executed the deed. The "relation back" doctrine is an exception to the rule that title doesn't pass until all the conditions of escrow are met. The doctrine is a legal fiction, usually applied in favor of a buyer to defeat the claims of third parties acquired during escrow who had notice of the buyer's rights. n119

§ 94.06(g)(7) The Doctrine of Inurement.

A title insurance company employee is supposed to record documents from a closing in this sequence:

(i) release of existing loan signed by deed of trust trustee,

(ii) deed from seller to buyer,

(iii) new purchase money deed of trust from buyer as trustor to lender as beneficiary.

On the way to the Hall of Records, the employee is forced to a sudden, jarring stop when a cat darts in front of the car. The documents scatter across the front seat. As a result, the new purchase money deed of trust is recorded first. Thus, at the time the deed of trust is recorded, the buyer doesn't actually own the property the buyer is purporting to convey.

However, the state has a statute like this one which codifies the common-law doctrine of inurement:

California Civil Code § 2930 n120

> Title acquired by the mortgagor subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, inures to the mortgagee as security for the debt in like manner as if acquired before the execution.

Which of these answers is the best concerning the title company's potential liability for the employee's document shuffle?

(a) The new deed of trust is a "wild deed," not in the chain of title, and the title insurance company is liable to the lender not on the terms of the title policy, but for negligently recording the deed of trust.

(b) The new deed of trust is a "wild deed," not in the chain of title and the title company is liable both to the lender and the buyer on their respective policies of title insurance.

(c) Under the doctrine of inurement, codified in California Civil Code § 2930, the new lender obtains a security interest in the borrower's title from the moment she acquires title, even if that moment happens to occur after her conveyance to the lender becomes effective. The title company is therefore liable to no one since no one will be harmed by the messed up recording sequence.

The right answer is (c)--which explains why title companies are enthusiastic advocates for the doctrine of inurement.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 66. Today the terms "escrow" and "escrow agent" have statutory definitions in California. "Escrow" means any transaction wherein one person, for the purpose of effecting the sale, transfer, encumbering, or leasing of real or personal property to another person, delivers any written instrument, money, evidence of title to real or personal property, or other thing of value to a third person to be held by such third person until the happening of a specified event or the performance of a prescribed condition, when it is then to be delivered by such third person to a grantee, grantor, promisee, promisor, obligee, obligor, bailee, bailor, or any agent or employee of any of the latter. Cal. Fin. Code § 17003. "Escrow agent" means any person engaged in the business of receiving escrows for deposit or delivery. Cal. Fin. Code § 17004.

Other California statutes provide for licensing, bar unlicensed persons from acting as escrow agents, set minimum capitalization and accounting standards, and require a state insurance fund to cover client losses if escrow companies fail. Cal. Fin. Code §§ 17000 - 7010. For example, in Johnson v. Exclusive Unlimited, 720 A.2d 568 (Me. 1998), the court held that no particular form of words is necessary to constitute an escrow. Yet in Lennar Northest Partners Ltd. Partnership v. Gifaldi, 695 N.Y.S.2d 448 (1999), the court stated that merely calling an act an escrow does not necessarily make it such. See also Kallas v. Harnen, 709 A.2d 586 (Conn. App. 1998) (where the money was left in the hands of an attorney or agent of one of the parties such money was not delivered in escrow). Under Florida law, a written instrument must be deposited with a third party who agrees to act as an escrow agent and such instrument must embody conditions mutually beneficial to both parties. Dickerson v. Central Florida Radiation Oncology Group, 225 B.R.241 (M.D. Fla. 1998).

(n2)Footnote 67. W.W. Robinson, Land in California 222-23 (University of California Press, 1948, reprinted by Arno Press, 1979).

(n3)Footnote 68. In California, this is the Department of Corporations for escrow agents and the Insurance Commissioner for title companies. California Continuing Eduction of the Bar, california Real Property Sales Transactions § 11:32, at 615 (1981).

(n4)Footnote 69. See Fisk v. Peoples Liberty Bank & Trust Co., 570 S.W.2d 657 (Ky. 1978). See also Calcagno v. Drew, 694 N.Y.S.2d 248 (1999) (Where letters exchanged between attorneys for the buyer and seller of a business, in which the buyer's attorney stated that he would instruct his client to make payments on the note to the attorney's office, to be held in escrow, and the seller's attorney said that he had no objections, a valid escrow agreement was created).

(n5)Footnote 70. Spalding v. Coulson, 2001 Ohio App. LEXIS 2626 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (1998) (Attorneys are not punished for violation of the law or for malpractice when acting in the dual role as escrow agents).

(n6)Footnote 71. Patel v. Gannaway, 726 F.2d 382 (8th Cir. 1984).

(n7)Footnote 72. Cal. Civ. Code § 2995.

(n8)Footnote 73. See Lewis v. Shawnee State Bank, 596 P.2d 116 (Kan. 1974). See also In re D. Jay Hyman Const. Co., 15 B.R.765 (Bkrtcy.D.Md. 1981) (Oral escrow agreements are enforceable); Hills Lone Pine Assoc. v. Texel Land Co., Inc., 572 N.W.2d 256 (Mich. App. 1997) (Escrow agreements, like all other types of contracts, are to be construed to effectuate the intent of the parties involved); Johnson v. Exclusive Properties Unlimited, 720 A.2d 568 (Me.,1998) (The party who asserts the existence of an escrow agreement has the burden of proof, and the burden is met by the preponderance of the evidence); In re Anthony Sicari, Inc., 151 B.R. 60 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (Judicial action can become the surrogate for an escrow agreement in establishing the parties' commitment to create an escrow).

(n9)Footnote 74. Johnson v. Maki & Assocs., 682 N.E.2d 1196 (Ill. App. 1997) (escrow agent fiduciary duty to follow escrow instructions).

(n10)Footnote 75. See, e.g., Banville v. Schmidt, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126 (1974); Akin v. Business Title Corp., 70 Cal. Rptr. 287 (1968). In some states, exculpatory clauses are enforceable. See Lynch v. Santa Fe Nat'l Bank, 627 P.2d 1247 (N.M. 1981).

(n11)Footnote 76. Md. Code Ann., Fin. Inst.§ 13-604.

(n12)Footnote 77. See California Continuing Education of the Bar, california Real Property Sales Transactions § 11:34, at 617 (1981).

(n13)Footnote 78. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. and Transnational Title Ins. Co. v. Gulf Underwriters Ins. Co., 91 Wash.App. 1013 (1998).

(n14)Footnote 79. Cal. Fin. Code § 17200. Bank, title company and real estate brokers acting as escrows are governed by banking, insurance, and real estate regulators. See Comment, The Independent Escrow Agent and the Licensee, 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 289 (1965).

(n15)Footnote 80. Cal. Fin. Code § 17210 (effective July 1, 1993).

(n16)Footnote 81. Cal. Fin. Code § 17312.

(n17)Footnote 82. Cal. Fin. Code §§ 17330-17350.

(n18)Footnote 83. See, e.g., Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993). The attorney was criminally convicted, imprisoned and disbarred. The title insurer was held liable to the defrauded purchaser on a finding that the closing attorney acted as an agent of the title insurer.

(n19)Footnote 84. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.482, establishing the Florida Real Estate Recovery Fund as a separate account in the Professional Regulation Trust Fund. The fund totals $750,000, but each claim is limited to $25,000.

(n20)Footnote 85. California Real Estate Law and Practice § 91.40[2] (Matthew Bender).

(n21)Footnote 86. Footnotes within the text of original have been incorporated above as bracketed material.

(n22)Footnote 87. See, e.g., Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993).

(n23)Footnote 88. 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993).

(N24)Footnote 89. See Burke, Title Insurance, 437-439 (1986).

(n25)Footnote 90. McDonald v. Title Ins. Co. of Oregon, 621 P.2d 654 (Or. 1980).

(n26)Footnote 91. California Real Estate Law and Practice § 91.14 (Matthew Bender).

(n27)Footnote 92. Footnotes within the text of original have been incorporated above as bracketed material.

(n28)Footnote 93. 604 P.2d 610 (Ariz. 1979).

(n29)Footnote 94. Karen Lee Jacobsen, Note, California Escrow Agents: A Duty to Disclose Known Fraud, 17 Pac. L.J. 309 (1985).

(n30)Footnote 95. Burkons v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 798 P.2d 1308, 1312-13 (Ariz. App. 1990).

(n31)Footnote 96. See Robin C. Martindale, Expanding the Duties of Arizona Escrow Agents: Burkons v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 24 Ariz. St. L.J. 821. The article concludes: "The 'reasonable escrow agent' is an impracticable standard." Id. at 837.

(n32)Footnote 97. See also Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 586 P.2d 1317 (Ariz. 1978) (escrow agent had no duty to warn seller deeds of trust were undersecured); Gordon v. New Mexico Title Co., 421 P.2d 433 (N.M. 1966) (no duty to investigate or report unfiled mechanic's liens). Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 888 P.2d 83 (Or. App. 1995) (no duty to inform buyer of not-of-record claim against property prior to closing).

(n33)Footnote 98. The escrow agent may not have been unduly cautious to settle. See, e.g., Manley v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 798 P.2d 1327 (Ariz. App. 1988) (escrow agent liable for not disclosing diversion of construction loan proceeds to non-construction purposes).

(n34)Footnote 99. This material is reprinted with permission from California Real Property Sales Transactions, § 13.47, Resolving Inconsistencies Between Purchase Agreement and Escrow Instructions, 3d ed (Cal CEB 1998), copyright by the Regents of the University of California.

(n35)Footnote 100. Lange v. Wyoming Nat'l Bank, 706 P.2d 659 (Wyo. 1985). Wurzl v. Holloway, 46 Cal. App. 4th 1740 (1996) (fraudulent inducement to deliver deed makes delivery voidable by the court).

(n36)Footnote 101. See Martinez v. Martinez, 678 P.2d 1163 (N.M. 1984), in which parents delivered a deed to their son and daughter-in-law to hold until the kids performed their obligations under a real estate contract. The kids were supposed to make payments on the existing loan. If the kids defaulted, they were required to reconvey title back to parents. The kids did default on the mortgage. Their son was willing to reconvey, but their daughter-in-law was not. Parents sued and got back the title. See also Tzanetatos v. Scott, 659 N.Y.S.2d 438 (1997) (holder of escrow account improperly released funds, despite the buyer's timely notice of objection that was delivered to escrow holder as required by the agreement. The holder could not defend release on basis that notice was defective); Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 707 N.E.2d 756 (Ill. App. 1999) (Escrow agent did not breach a fiduciary duty owed to the owners of a home under construction by failing to conduct proper inspections, failing to procure proper lien waivers, and failing to procure owner's written authorization before releasing funds, because agreement read such inspections, etc., were to be ordered "for the benefit of the lender only").

(n37)Footnote 102. Compare Meairs v. Kruckenberg, 233 P.2d 472 (Kan. 1951) (grantor held to have reserved a life estate) with Johnson v. Johnson, 54 A. 378 (R.I. 1903) (similar facts, but grantor advertised the property for sale during her lifetime, negating inference that she intended to reserve only a life estate).

(n38)Footnote 103. See State by Pai v. Thom, 563 P.2d 982 (Haw. 1977); Bennis v. Alexander, 574 P.2d 450 (Alaska 1978); Herron v. Underwood, 503 N.E.2d 1111 (Ill. App. 1987); N.D. Cent. Code § 47-09-07. Contra, Raim v. Stancel, 339 N.W.2d 621 (Iowa 1983).

(n39)Footnote 104. George Lefcoe, Land Development Law 537 (2d ed. 1974).

(n40)Footnote 105. Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183 § 5.

(n41)Footnote 106. Harry D. Miller & Marvin B. Starr, 2 Calif. Real Est. 2d 571 (1989).

(n42)Footnote 107. "A grant cannot be delivered to the grantee conditionally. Delivery to him, or to his agent as such, is necessarily absolute, and the instrument takes effect thereupon, discharged of any condition on which the deliver was made." Cal. Civ. Code § 1056.

(n43)Footnote 108. Osby v. Reynolds, 103 N.E. 556 (Ill. 1913); Clevenger v. Moore, 259 P. 219 (Okla. 1927); Blakney v. Home Owners' Loan Corp., 135 P.2d 339 (Okla. 1943); Mays v. Shields, 45 S.E. 68 (Ga. 1903).

(n44)Footnote 109. George Lefcoe, Land Development Law 535-36 (2d ed. 1974).

(n45)Footnote 110. See, e.g., In re Estate of O'Brien, 749 P.2d 154 (Wash. 1988).

(n46)Footnote 111. Bixby Ranch Co. v. United States, 35 Fed. Cl. 674 (Fed. Cl.,1996) (Set-aside escrow is generally used to salvage closing of a sale that otherwise would cancel due to discovery of cloud on title).

(n47)Footnote 112. See, e.g., Sanders v. Park Towne, Ltd., 578 P.2d 1131 (Kan. 1978) (when title insurer insured a second mortgage and recorded the second mortgage late, so that it was at best a third, insurer as escrow agent was liable).

(n48)Footnote 113. See Kish v. Bay Counties Title Guar. Co., 62 Cal. Rptr. 494 (1967).

(n49)Footnote 114. See Kish v. Bay Counties Title Guar. Co., 62 Cal. Rptr. 494 (1967).

(n50)Footnote 115. 199 Cal. Rptr. 554 (1984).

(n51)Footnote 116. 199 Cal. Rptr. 554, 557 (Cal. App. 1984).

(n52)Footnote 117. The cases contrary to the rule in the Powell case are collected in 28 Am. Jur. 2d Escrow § 26, at 38 (1966):

> [I]n some jurisdictions the doctrine that an innocent purchaser from a grantee in a deed left in escrow but delivered wrongfully before the condition of the escrow has been performed will be protected has been upheld, in accordance with the maxim that where one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss, and a fortiori in cases where one has misled the other, he who is the cause of that confidence by which the loss has been occasioned ought to bear the loss.

(n53)Footnote 118. 199 Cal. Rptr. 554, 556 (Cal. App. 1984).

(n54)Footnote 119. California Continuing Education of the Bar, California Real Property Sales Transactions § 11:19, at 607-08 (1981).

(n55)Footnote 120. Cal. Civ. Code § 2930.

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.07

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.07 Aspects of Deeds Especially Pertinent to Conveyancing.

[Go To Supp]

§ 94.07(a) Deed as Evidence of Transfer, Not Title.

The deed is only one method of transferring legal title; it isn't the only way. Title can be transferred by will, court decree, intestate succession, and legislative act. Still, transfer by deed is the most common means of conveyance and nearly always what contracting parties contemplate.

Owners don't pass the same deed down one to another in succession. Each owner prepares and executes a new deed for delivery to the grantee. Owners may like saving their deeds, but if a recorded deed is lost an owner can obtain a certified copy from the county recorder's office.

§ 94.07(b) Types of Deeds.

In each state there is usually a statute or custom that dictates the particular form of deed in common use unless the parties contract for a different one. n121

These conventional elements are barely detectable in many standard form deeds. They are overshadowed by requirements imposed by county recorders' offices and taxing authorities. All this tax and recording information has no bearing on the validity of the deed. But its absence could result in the recorder declining to accept the deed for recordation.

The types of deeds are:

(1) general warranty,

(2) special warranty or grant, and

(3) quitclaim.

§ 94.07(b)(1) General Warranty.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(i) Where They Are Used.

In many states, deeds containing the general warranty covenants are the only acceptable form of conveyance. A seller who proposes to convey only by quitclaim risks being looked upon with great suspicion. The purchaser who accepts title by quitclaim risks being denied title insurance and BFP status in a few states. Even where general warranty deeds are commonly used, it is often possible for the grantor to contract only to sign a grant or special warranty deed.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(ii) The Common-Law Warranties.

The general warranty deed contains the broadest warranties, traditionally the following:

(1) Covenant of Seisin. The grantor's promise that the grantor is seised of the land at the time of conveyance means that the grantor has an "absolute, rightful and indefeasible estate in fee simple." n122

In a few states the grantor's covenant of seisin isn't breached if the grantor lacks title and merely holds possession which has not ripened into adverse possession. The buyer would do better in those states to insist on a covenant that the grantor has fee simple title.

If the grantor transfers while an adverse possessor or tenant is in possession, courts differ on whether to hold that the grantor is in breach of the covenant of seisin for lacking possession.

The fact that the grantor's title is subject to an encumbrance like a lease, a mortgage, a tax lien, or an easement doesn't cause her to be in violation of the covenant of seisin. The grantor still has a fee simple title regardless of how encumbered it is.

(2) The Covenant of Right to Convey. This is the grantor's promise that the grantor had the right to convey the property as of the day of the conveyance. If the grantor is in possession wrongfully, this covenant is breached.

If someone holds a power of attorney for the grantor, this covenant is a promise by the holder of the power that it is valid, and gives the holder the right to convey on the grantor's behalf.

(3) The Covenant of Encumbrances. This is the grantor's promise that there are no encumbrances. An encumbrance is any right or interest held by someone other than the grantee or grantor which diminishes the value of the estate but not so much that it leaves the grantee with no title at all. The word encumbrance has no precise meaning but includes security instruments, leases, mechanics' liens, property tax assessment, liens, easements, future interests and covenants running with the land at the time of conveyance, other than those specifically set forth in the deed. By this covenant, the grantor impliedly promises to indemnify the grantee for any loss from the existence of encumbrances not specifically excluded from the grant.

Zoning ordinances are not regarded as encumbrances. Sewer or utility easements are encumbrances. n123

A mortgage is an encumbrance. A paid-off mortgage loan is not an encumbrance even though the lien hasn't been released of record.

If the grantee has agreed to take title subject to some of these encumbrances, the cautious, well-advised grantor lists those encumbrances as exceptions on the face of the deed. A grantee, who saw, could easily have seen, or knew about an encumbrance, could be kept from successfully invoking the covenant against encumbrances depending on the circumstances of the case and the inclinations of the trier of fact (as you would anticipate).

(4) The Covenant of Warranty. This is the grantor's promise to warrant and defend the title of the land against all lawful claims and demands. If the grantor only owns part of the property or a fractional interest in it and had purported to convey it all, the covenant is breached if the grantor refuses or is unable to procure the title promised. If the grantor lacks title to fixtures on the property, that is a breach and the grantor must make good for their lost value if the grantee won't clear title to them.

(5) The Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment. This is the grantor's promise that no one with superior title will disrupt the grantee's title or possession of the property.

The covenant isn't breached just because someone else may possibly be in a position to assert an adverse claim. The grantee must be physically or "constructively" evicted by an adverse claimant asserting a claim of right inconsistent with the warranted title before the covenantor becomes liable. "Constructive" eviction includes: a court order ejecting the present occupant, the holder of superior title demanding that the covenantee vacate the land, or the grantee surrendering possession because she realizes the invalidity of her claim.

(6) The Covenant of Further Assurances. This is the grantor's promise to do anything necessary to perfect title to the grantee. This could include executing documents necessary to perfect the conveyance or assure title. "The covenant is enforceable in equity by a decree of specific performance." n124

As you can see, there is some degree of overlap in the covenants, particularly the covenants of "warranties" and of "quiet enjoyment." As a result, one or more of the covenants may sometimes not be listed in the deed.

§ 94.07(b)(1)(iii) The Statutory Short Forms.

Long ago, grantors used to handwrite these covenants onto the deed. Today, the contents of covenants impliedly contained in deeds are often specified in state statutes.

In some states, a "bargain and sale deed with full covenants" has the same effect as a general warranty deed. n125 In Alaska, n126 Illinois, n127 Kansas, n128 Michigan, n129 and Minnesota, n130 the words convey and warrant make a deed a general warranty deed. The same result is achieved in Maryland, n131 Virginia, n132 and West Virginia n133 by use of the words warrant generally, and in Arkansas, n134 Florida, n135 Kentucky, n136 and North Dakota n137 by the words grant, bargain, and sell.

General warranty deeds don't mean that the seller has good title. Anyone can sign a deed to any property. The general warranty deed just gives the grantee a cause of action against the seller who doesn't own what she purported to sell.

§ 94.07(b)(2) Special Warranty Deed and Grant Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(i) The Context of a Grant or Special Warranty Deed.

The covenants in grant deeds are more or less the same as those contained in special warranty deeds. Grantors of special warranty deeds and grant deeds do not promise that they are the true owner of the property or that they will protect the grantees against all claims of superior or paramount title. They only promise that no title defects have arisen or will arise due to the acts or omissions of the grantor. They promise that no one claiming by, through, or under the grantor will be able to assert a title superior to the covenantee's title. n138

Perhaps the most significant difference between the special warranty deed and grant deed, typically, is that the special warranty often contains a covenant by the grantor to "warrant and defend" the title against any challenges "claiming by, through or under, the grantor." Such a covenant, pertaining as it does to a future event, "runs with the land" for the benefit of subsequent purchasers. Generally, grant deeds lack a covenant of "special warranty." They contain only present covenants. Grant deed covenants are held to be for the benefit of the immediate grantee only -- and do not "run with the land" for the benefit of subsequent purchasers in the chain of title.

In some states, the grant deed is the form of choice and the one the law will imply unless the parties specify some other form of deed. California's grant deed statutes have been on the books since 1872. The seller under a grant deed is not even claiming to own the property being sold. The covenant of seisin is not one of the covenants in a grant deed.

The grantor who signs a grant deed isn't promising good title. If he was the victim of a forgery, so that his deed conveyed nothing to his grantee, he can't be held liable for breach of the covenants of a grant deed. He didn't commit the forgery. His grantor did. He didn't encumber the property. Even if the grantor had forged the deed to himself, there is at least one case holding that he still hasn't breached the implied covenants of the grant deed as long as he hasn't previously tried to convey the forged deed. The grantee may be able to rescind the transaction since the grantee got nothing for her money. But that is the grantee's sole remedy. n139 The grantee has no valid cause of action based on the grant deed implied covenants.

California Civil Code § 1092:

Form of Grant. A grant of and estate in real property may be made in substance as follows:

I, A B grant to C D all that real property situated in (insert name of county) County, State of California, bounded (or described) as follows: (here insert description, or if the land sought to be conveyed has a descriptive name, it may be described by the name, as for instance, "The Norris Ranch.")

Witness my hand this (insert day) day of (insert month), 20_____.

California Civil Code § 1113:

Implied Covenants. From the use of the word "grant" in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed, the following covenants, and none other, on the part of the grantor for himself and his heirs to the grantee, his heirs, and assigns, are implied, unless restrained by express terms contained in such conveyance.

1. That previous to the time of the execution of such conveyance, the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee;

2. That such estate is at the time of the execution of such conveyance free from encumbrances done, made, or suffered by the grantor, or any person claiming under him.

Such covenants may be sued upon in the same manner as if they had been expressly inserted in the conveyance.

The challenge is to figure out what a grant deed does NOT imply. The grantor, clearly enough, is guaranteeing she didn't convey the property to anyone else, and she hasn't "done, made or suffered" any encumbrances on it. "If the grantor has in no way encumbered the title, but later an outstanding title is asserted by some third person, the grantor is not liable." n140

"Suffered" in this context doesn't mean "tolerated." It means "caused to be placed." Consider the case of a property owner not paying property taxes. Eventually, the state will assert a lien against the property for unpaid taxes. It would be incorrect to say that the grantor "created" the lien; the state did. But the grantor "suffered" it to be created by failing to pay. n141 If, however, the present owner paid the taxes but the predecessor didn't, and that is why the lien arose, the owner has no implied obligation to cure it, or any other flaw in title the owner didn't create. We are sure of this because the first paragraph of California Civil Code § 1113 states that the grantor impliedly makes the quoted promises, "and none other." n142

The Arizona legislature has made it easy for grantors and grantees to avoid all the nuances of the "done, made, or suffered" exception to the covenant against encumbrances by specifying that the use of the word conveys implies that (1) the grantor hasn't previously conveyed the property to anyone else, and (2) the estate is free from encumbrances. No ands, ifs, buts; dones, mades, or suffereds. n143

§ 94.07(b)(2)(ii) Why Grant or Special Warranty Deeds Are Used in Some States.

Although they are not prohibited, general warranty deeds are seldom seen in California real estate transactions. Special warranty deeds are also the presumed form of grant in Pennsylvania where title insurance got started. Why are buyers calmed by the custom to accept deeds promising as little as the grantor of a grant or special warranty deed promises? Maybe they just don't know any better. But even sage real estate transactions lawyers buying houses in California or Pennsylvania accept grant deeds as they advance their hard-earned down payments. This is because they, like most California buyers, usually rely on title insurance, not the seller's promises about title.

Why do buyers accept these limited seller warranties? First, people seldom negotiate the terms of the deed. Local custom governs. Second, if the buyer is unhappy with the seller's title, the buyer invokes the seller's contract promise of a marketable or insurable title and refuses to close. Third, buyers usually rely on title insurance, not the seller's promises about title.

There are very few occasions when a seller's warranty is an acceptable substitute for title insurance. Why pay a title insurance premium if you've got a well-heeled seller, and the seller can be persuaded to sign a general warranty deed? Real estate transaction lawyers Lesley Wolf and Alan Wayte offer these explanations: n144

> (1) The seller may have left the jurisdiction or become insolvent by the time title problems eventually surface.
>
> (2) The preliminary title report tells the buyer what to expect and the disclosure aspect of the title insurance function isn't matched by a warranty.
>
> (3) Title insurance isn't very expensive and is the custom in California.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(iii) When a General Warranty Deed Might Be Used in a Grant Deed State.

When might a warranty deed make its infrequent appearance in a California sale? In an odd case, Los Angeles attorney Alan Wayte suggested one of those. To build its light rail line the Los Angeles County Transportation Commission (LACTC) had to acquire rights-of-way from railroad companies in southern California. The LACTC accepted warranty deeds from the railroads without title insurance. LACTC legal advisors believed the railroads had better title records than title companies, and were at least as solvent. The railroads, too, were comfortable warranting the quality of their titles, and were happy to save the costs of title insurance.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(iv) Language to Further Restrict the Grantor's Liability Under a Grant Deed.

A grantor who wants to limit even her limited exposure under a grant deed could add to the description in the deed a disclaimer like this:

> ... subject to any interest in real property the grantor may previously have done, made or suffered, whether those interests are recorded or not, visible or not.

These blanket disclaimers are commonly accepted by buyers in California, which only proves that buyers don't often appreciate the fine points of conveyancing law.

§ 94.07(b)(2)(v) Statutory Short Forms for Special Warranty or Grant Deeds.

Just using that word "grant" will imply the grant deed covenants in California, Idaho, n145 and South Dakota. n146 The same result follows the use of the phrase "grant, bargain and sell" in Missouri n147 and Nevada. n148

Similar statutory language is implied following the use of the phrase "warrant specially" in the District of Columbia, n149 Kentucky, n150 Maryland, n151 Mississippi, n152 Virginia, n153 and West Virginia. n154 The same result is achieved in some states by the use of "bargain and sale deed with covenants against grantor's acts." n155

§ 94.07(b)(3) Quitclaim Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(i) Why Quitclaim Deeds Are Used.

This form of deed is customarily used as an accommodation and not to convey title. By using it, the grantor conveys only her present "right, title and interest" in the property. At common law its use excludes any implication that the grantor has good title, or any title at all. n156 If the grantor owns no title, nothing is transferred. Quite often the release by quitclaim is sought simply to put to rest a dormant or doubtful claim. The quitclaim deed may also be used by sellers who aren't sure of their titles. If the seller turns out to have good title, the grantee of a quitclaim deed gets it.

Co-signers of a grant deed are jointly and severally liable. Even someone who never previously conveyed or encumbered the property, asked to co-sign a grant deed, is better off insisting on signing only a quitclaim. Why? A perfectly innocent grant deed co-signer could end up having to reimburse a grantee for a breach of covenant committed by a co-grantor. n157 Grantors are jointly and severally liable for each other's breaches of grant deed covenants. n158

Husband is selling property. Wife signs the grant deed as an accommodation only and receives no consideration for it. The property is located in a community property state. The husband did not actually own the property he purported to convey. Apparently he had sold it earlier, without the wife's knowledge. The husband dies. The disappointed grantee sues the wife. Held, the wife is jointly and severally liable for husband's breach of the grant deed covenants. n159 The court pointed out: "Appellant [wife] could have protected herself from liability as a codefendant by executing a quitclaim deed." n160

§ 94.07(b)(3)(ii) After-Acquired Property Doesn't Pass by Quitclaim Deed.

Quitclaim and grant deeds differ in their consequences for after-acquired property. What is "after-acquired" property? Say you sell by grant deed a house that you had inherited. Because of deficiencies in probate you didn't actually have good title at the time. Yet a court confirms your title after you sold. Your buyer who took by grant deed gets good title even though you didn't actually acquire or perfect it until after you had conveyed it! A grantee by quitclaim wouldn't. n161 Even someone who never previously conveyed or encumbered the property, asked to co-sign a grant deed, is better off insisting on signing only a quitclaim. Why? A perfectly innocent signatory to a grant deed could end up having to reimburse a grantee for a breach of covenant committed by a co-grantor. n162 Grantors are jointly and severally liable for each other's breaches of grant deed covenants. n163

In some states, quitclaim grantees may not be regarded as bona fide purchasers. n164

§ 94.07(b)(3)(iii) Some Quitclaim Short Form Statutes Imply Obligations on the Part of the Grantor.

Some states have enacted statutes that define the obligation of a grantor who uses a statutory short-form quitclaim deed, and in several states, the statutory short-form quitclaim deed implies covenants or warranties that have the effect of converting the quitclaim into a grant or warranty deed. n165 In South Dakota, the word "quitclaim," used in a conveyance of an interest in real property, implies the same two promises as a grant deed in California. n166 This could surprise a grantor persuaded to sign a quitclaim deed solely as an accommodation to help clear a clouded title. In fact the grantor would be promising a great deal more. Grantors are not required to use the statutory short form.

In jurisdictions where no one can sign a quitclaim deed without justifiable concern about future liability, lawsuits to quiet title may be the only way to clear clouded titles. Say a husband in a community property state wants to sell property that is clearly his separate property. Should his wife agree without running any legal risks? Suppose she had earlier signed a deed of trust at her husband's request. Could she be liable to the quitclaim grantee for the existence of the earlier deed of trust or for failing to disclose it? Would she be liable to the deed of trust beneficiary if the deed of trust prohibited sale of the security property without the beneficiary's consent? Louisiana's statutes added a provision for quitclaim deeds: "A person may transfer to another whatever rights to a thing he may then have, without warranting the existence of any such rights." n167 This is what quitclaim deeds are supposed to do--allow grantors to sign accommodation deeds risk-free. It is important to have a form of deed that grantors may freely use without fear of potential liability, whether they believe they have good title and even if they are pretty sure, or even certain, that they don't.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(iv) Quitclaim Grantee May Not Be a Bona Fide Purchaser.

In some states, but only a few, there is dicta in court opinions that a grantee by quitclaim is presumed by definition not to be a bona fide purchaser. n168 The rationale is that grantees should be suspicious of grantors not willing to warrant the title they purport to sell.

Similar dicta may be found regarding grantees who accept title by special warranty deed where general warranty deeds are the norm. Special warranty deeds, too, come under a cloud of suspicion in a general warranty deed jurisdiction. In a 1945 Missouri case, n169 for instance, the grantee of a special warranty deed was held not to be an innocent purchaser but one placed on inquiry notice. His title was subject to all the disadvantages it had in the hands of his grantor. Perhaps what courts are saying is that when someone accepts a deed from a grantor who makes fewer than normal promises or assurances, that grantee should realize something is wrong, should make inquiry of the grantor and others familiar with the title situation, and may be charged with what a reasonable inquiry under the circumstances would have shown.

§ 94.07(c) Damages for Breach of Title Covenants.

§ 94.07(c)(1) Distinguishing Future from Present Covenants.

The six standard covenants in a warranty deed are divided into two groups historically: present and future covenants. The first three (seisin, right to convey, and encumbrance) are said to be breached, if at all, at the moment the covenant becomes operative, when the deed is "delivered." n170 They are thus called present covenants. The statute of limitations starts running against claims based on present covenants at the moment of the conveyance. n171

The second triad (warrant, quiet enjoyment, further assurance) are said to be breached, if at all, sometime after the covenants become effective, when a third party claims to be the true owner or has the right to occupy the property. n172

§ 94.07(c)(2) Little or No Damage Usually Accompanies Breach of Present Covenants.

At the time present covenants are breached there may be very little or no damage. Usually the party who holds a superior claim has yet to come forward. In this case the grantee isn't damaged yet, and could prove, at most, nominal damage. That is what most courts will award though even these modest sums could prove excessive if the potential adversary never appears or far too small if that adverse claimant actually ousts the grantee eventually.

§ 94.07(c)(3) Damage for Breach of Future Covenants Can Be Sizeable But Is Usually Limited to the Purchase Price.

Breach of the three future covenants usually comes with the appearance of a rival claimant asserting a claim. At that time, if the grantee's right to title or possession proves faulty, the grantor could take a substantial loss. In fact, if the property has appreciated in value since it was acquired, or if valuable improvements were built on the site, the actual loss may greatly exceed what the grantor paid for the property.

Should the grantee be entitled to damages reflecting the benefit of the bargain, and the foreseeable loss incurred because the grantor built on the site, believing the grantor had conveyed good title to it? Or should the claim against the grantor be limited to the amount paid for the deed?

Most courts will award no more than the consideration paid to the covenantor plus interest, or a proportionate share of that consideration if the loss of title is partial. A few courts have awarded the covenantee the benefit of her bargain, the loss in value at the date the dispute is decided, even though that amount greatly exceeds what was paid for the property. n173 In the case where the grantee loses only a portion of the land, at least one court awarded the present value of the missing portion (not to exceed the original purchase price of the entire property). n174 But this is a minority. If the land was conveyed as a gift, courts split on whether the grantee should get: (1) the full present value of the land, since there is no deed price to use as a ceiling in setting the recovery, or (2) nothing since nothing was paid for it. n175

§ 94.07(d) Distinctions Between Marketable Title Standard and Deed Covenants for Good Title.

A contract purchaser before closing has much greater protection under the implied "marketable title" standard than a grantee after closing, relying on a warranty deed for good title.

(1) The purchaser can get rescission and restitution and sometimes specific performance with abatement. The grantee is limited usually to damages, and not even "benefit of the bargain" damages, just the actual cost of clearing the defect up to the price paid for the deed. n176

(2) A "marketable" title is better than a "good" one. Adverse claims which can only be removed by litigation make a title "unmarketable" even if, eventually, they are removed and the title proves good. Suppose there is no evidence on the public records that the grantor's predecessor acquired title to an abandoned railroad easement that bisects the property. The missing deed from the railroad company renders title unmarketable.

If the grantor can produce the deed or the grantee wins a suit to quiet title against the railroad company, the title is good. The grantor owes the grantee nothing on the deed covenants for a good title. The grantee who paid the costs of the suit to quiet title can't recover from the grantor. His obligation was only to convey a good title - and the title turned out to be good. Only if the grantee lost the case could the grantor get reimbursement from the grantor both for the defective title and for the grantor's failure to "warrant and defend."

§ 94.07(e) Enforcement by Remote Grantees.

Suppose that A grants title by warranty deed to B, who later sells to C, who sells to D. A didn't have the right to convey. By the time someone finally shows up with a title superior to A's, D is the owner. Has D, the remote grantee, a good claim against A?

Why doesn't D sue C? Maybe C is hard to locate, dead or insolvent. Maybe C only quitclaimed the property to D.

Anyway, requiring D to sue C to sue B to sue A only complicates the dispute. D has suffered the loss. Time and money can be saved in resolving the dispute by leaving B and C out of it.

The common-law view was based on the distinction between present and future covenants. D could sue on the future covenants if she were in possession at the time they were breached. But she could not sue on the present covenants because they were breached, if at all, at the moment A conveyed to B. A few jurisdictions have seen that while this is technically correct, it is practically foolish, and have allowed D to recover against A on all the covenants. D might also have been able to recover if B had assigned rights under A's present covenants to C and C had assigned them to D.

All courts hold that future covenants "touch and concern" land and run with it to the benefit of covenantees in A's chain of title.

A similar problem arises under statutes of limitations which usually allow enforcement of title covenants for periods running from five to ten years, varying state by state. The statute of limitations on future covenants is generally held to run only from the time the covenantee is actually or constructively evicted. That solves the remote grantee's problem under future covenants.

Most courts have held, though, that the statute of limitations runs on present covenants at the date they first became effective. Thus, the original covenantee and all successors may find themselves out of luck if an adverse claimant appears after the statute has run. They can sue only on the future, not the present covenants. One jurisdiction (Iowa) has ruled that the statute doesn't start to run until the covenantee experiences substantial damage. n177

§ 94.07(f) Formalities: Recording, Tax Statements, and Documentary Transfer Tax Information.

State statutes require a good deal more for a deed to be recorded than the common law requires for a deed to convey valid title from seller to buyer.

Until the deed is recorded, it is potentially voidable. Once the deed has been copied into the public records the recorder will mail it to the buyer. The new owner stands to lose the most from the deed not being recorded and should oversee its recordation. The name of whoever actually handed the deed to the recorder will go in the "recording requested by" blank. Usually that will be the name of the title company.

The recorder stamps the precise time of filing on the deed measured to the minute. That time stamp establishes the priority of the document under the recording act.

In the California grant deed is space for ownership information that the property tax assessor requires. The new owner is obliged by statute to report the details of the transaction to the county tax assessor for a "change of ownership" reassessment. Property tax statements need to be sent to the new owner because if taxes aren't paid, it is the new owner who will suffer.

Documentary transfer tax information is required. The documentary transfer tax is pocketed by state, county, or local governments. n178

Instruments are valid even if the tax hasn't been paid.

Some transactions are exempt from it, such as transfers between spouses dividing marital property.

These details vary from state to state. That is why lawyers preparing a deed for the first time check the form they are using with those who process deeds for recordation regularly--another lawyer, a title company officer, or an escrow agent.

§ 94.07(g) Formalities: Acknowledgment.

Only in a few states is acknowledgement a condition to a deed being valid. n179 The more common sanction for lack of acknowledgement is that the deed cannot be recorded, n180 or if it is, it doesn't impart constructive notice to subsequent purchasers. n181 Few buyers want unrecordable titles so most deeds are recorded. n182 Nonetheless, an unacknowledged deed in most states still conveys title to the grantee even though a grantee has the option of refusing to accept an unacknowledged deed.

An acknowledgment is a declaration made before a public officer, usually a state-licensed notary public, n183 by a person who has signed or witnessed a deed, mortgage or other instrument, that she signed it voluntarily or that she witnessed the grantor signing it. This act is proof that the instrument was properly executed. If the grantor is acting on behalf of some other entity such as a partnership or corporation, (in California at least) acknowledgement is "prima facie evidence that the instrument is the duly authorized act of the entity named in the instrument and shall be conclusive evidence thereof in favor of any good faith purchaser, lessee, or encumbrancer." n184 The officer taking the acknowledgement fills out a certificate of acknowledgement prescribed by state law.

An acknowledgment isn't the same as an affidavit which notaries are also sometimes required to certify. An affidavit is a statement made under oath, in writing, signed by the person making the statement. The notary recites that the affiant took the oath and signed it. "An affidavit is not acceptable as a substitute for an acknowledgement. The two serve different purposes. The acknowledgement merely makes the prima facie showing that the instrument was duly executed. The affidavit or verification goes to the truth of the matters there set forth." n185

§ 94.07(h) Curative Acts.

A curative act is a statute of limitations that sets a time limit for challenging documents because of irregularities in the way they were executed. Typically, curative acts "cure" faulty acknowledgments or instruments not properly sealed.

These laws are particularly important for title companies. Many types of defects aren't apparent on the face of the instrument. How could a title searcher know, for instance, that a notary's license had expired thus invalidating the witnessing of the grantor's acknowledgment? By validating otherwise invalid instruments they immunize title searchers from losses that otherwise might have come their way as a result of defectively executed instruments.

Some curative acts provide that all instruments executed before a certain date are henceforward deemed proper. These types of laws must be reenacted periodically.

Other curative acts read like statutes of limitations, providing that if an instrument is of record for a prescribed time it is conclusively presumed to have been properly executed. n186

§ 94.07(i) Notaries and Forged Deeds.

A notary public is required to take the grantor's acknowledgment in many states. The notary is required to keep a journal of all official acts performed containing the signatures of credible witnesses severing or affirming the identity of the individual or type of document, the serial or identifying number of the document (e.g., the grantor's passport number or driver's license) and the date of issue or expiration of the document. In California, to discourage and detect forgeries, if the document is a deed or deed of trust, "the notary shall require the party signing the document to place his or her right thumbprint in the journal." n187

Given the limited responsibilities of the notary, you wouldn't expect to see the fallout from a forgery scam land on a notary's head. n188 But it did in McDonald v. Plumb. n189 Stanley Scott Singley forged the signature of Elizabeth Esterline to property she owned in Los Angeles County, and deeded the property to Frank Debbas. Debbas then deeded it to innocent buyers, Jack W. and Patricia L. McDonald. A court held the notary of the forged deed liable to the McDonalds, the forgery victim, for their loss.

> ... It seems fundamental to us that the requirement of notarial acknowledgment in real estate transactions as this is calculated to prevent fraud. The failure of the notary in this case to fulfill his duty permitted Singley to defraud the McDonalds. This failure was a basic underlying cause of the loss and, if not the sole proximate cause, at least a proximate cause thereof.
>
> Without citation of authority it is urged by Plumb that the issuance of a policy of title insurance at McDonalds' request indicated a lack of reliance upon the original notarial acknowledgement, thus breaking the chain of causation. This contention is answered to the contrary in Inglewood Park Mausoleum Co. v. Ferguson, ... 9 Cal. App. 2d 217, 49 P.2d 305. While it is true that the McDonalds did not rely directly upon the false acknowledgement in the original deed, direct reliance is not required. On the contrary, indirect reliance is sufficient. In relying upon the record title as of the date of sale, the McDonalds were relying upon the chain of title creating such record title, one link of which was the validity of the deed from Esterline to Debbas. We conclude that the trial court erred in finding and concluding that the false acknowledgment by Plumb was not a proximate cause of the injury to the McDonalds. We find to the contrary. n190

Judge Allport didn't mention it in McDonald v. Plumb, n191 but it can't have helped the notary's case (Glen E. Plumb was the hapless fellow) that the forger-grantor was Stanley Scott Singley and the name he had to have been forging was Elizabeth Esterline. (Unlike Dustin Hoffman's Tootsie, there is nothing in the record of this case to suggest that Stanley Scott Singley was a man who became a better man for having been a woman.)

Following that case, the Legislature clarified the precise proof on which a notary could rely. n192 The notary might "personally know" the signatory but that isn't necessary. "Satisfactory evidence" will do, including an identification card, driver's license, or passport.

An unacknowledged deed isn't supposed to be recordable in most states. The county recorder should not accept it for recordation. But suppose the recorder does file it in the public records anyway. The first taker's title based on an unacknowledged deed is at risk. A subsequent purchaser would not be charged with constructive notice of the earlier defectively acknowledged deed-- if the grantor were bloody-minded enough to make a second conveyance of the same property. The subsequent taker would upset the first taker's title unless the subsequent taker actually knew about the earlier transfer or had failed to pay valuable consideration for the title.

Say the county recorder accepts the faultily acknowledged deed. In many states the defective acknowledgement is deemed cured after it has been of record long enough. California Civil Code § 1207, n193 for instance, cures the instrument "notwithstanding any defect, omission, or informality in the execution, or in the certificate of acknowledgement, or the absence of any such certificate," one year after the instrument has been copied into the proper book of records in the office of any county recorder. If the seller waits long enough to make a second (wrongful) conveyance, the first purchaser of a recorded but defectively executed deed will prevail.

§ 94.07(j) Identification of Grantor.

The names of all current owners of the property should be listed in the deed. If the grantor took the property by a different name, that name must also be mentioned. In a splendid and useful book on how to prepare a deed, Mary Randolph's The Deeds Book, n194 this example is given and its rationale explained:

> If there is a possibility of confusion about someone's name--for example, if the grantor took possession of the property under a different name than she is conveying it by--then all names must be included in the deed. This will make it clear that the different names refer to the same person and avoid the possibility of an apparent gap in the chain of title.

The easiest way to link the name is with "a.k.a." or "also known as." For example, if Maria Smith bought property but has since married and changed her name to Jones, the deed should identify her as "Maria Jones, a.k.a. Maria Smith."

Under California law, if the name under which the grantor took title (the name on the earlier deed which transferred property to the grantor) is not included in the deed, the deed does not give later purchasers notice of the transfer, and the transfer is valid only between the parties and persons who have actual notice of it. That is, later purchasers can't be expected to know about the transfer if it was made under a different name. For example, if Maria Jones neglects to add "a.k.a. Maria Smith" to the deed, years later when a prospective buyer goes to the county recorder's office and looks up "Maria Jones" in the Grantor-Grantee Index, the earlier deed to Maria Smith won't appear.

§ 94.07(k) Grantor Competency.

The grantor must be of legal age, of sound mind, and possessed of the mental capacity to understand the nature of the transaction and its consequences on her rights and interests. When, due to old age, illness, ignorance or weakness, the grantor is incapable of coping with the grantee, the deed may be set aside.

A widower becomes too infirm to care for himself. He hires a nurse who moves in and takes care of him around the clock for three years. The widower grows senile. The nurse prepares a deed of the widower's house to herself and urges him to sign it just before his death. Shortly after the funeral, his children file a suit to show he was too senile to understand what he was doing when he signed the deed. They want the court to set it aside. "Cases of this sort occur by the thousands." n195

§ 94.07(l) Forged and Void Deeds.

A deed with a false signature or one which has been altered after it was signed is forged. It does NOT convey title to a bona fide purchaser. n196 A deed procured by fraud may be either void or voidable depending on the nature of the fraud--the extent to which the grantor contributed by some act or omission to her own undoing. The consequence of a deed being voidable is that a BFP gets good title. The grantor's remedy is only against the person who defrauded her. The consequence of a deed being void is that the BFP gets no title, just like the BFP from a forger.

"Fraud in the inducement" is the prototype of fraud leading only to voidability. This type of fraud occurs when the grantor is given a bad check, false financial statements about the grantee, or other misrepresentations which persuaded the grantor to sign the deed.

"Fraud in the factum" is the prototype of fraud leading to a deed being absolutely void. It is typified by a grantee slipping in a deed while the grantor is signing other documents (leases, mortgages, contracts). It helps a grantor in this situation to be "old, illiterate, disabled, confused." n197 If the grantor is competent and alert, and deals with the grantee at arm's length, the court is more likely to paste the "voidable" label on the deed, protecting the later BFP; it may even call the grantor negligent for his failure to examine more closely the documents he signed." n198

If the grantor understands the deed is being signed, but the contents are misrepresented, this is likely to lead to voidability and not to the deed being void even if the grantor is infirm.

§ 94.07(m) Words of Transfer.

Every deed must contain words of present conveyance. A grantor who writes that the grantor will grant isn't making a present transfer. At most the grantor is promising to convey sometime in the future. This is not what most buyers expect. They want title now.

Depending on the type of deed intended, the operative word of conveyance is "grant," "quitclaim," or "convey and warrant." "Don't get creative," Mary Randolph warns, "It may not hurt in most cases, but it sure doesn't help."

§ 94.07(n) Identification of New Owners (Grantees).

The deed must identify the grantee. If no grantee is identified, the deed is void. It should also specify how he, she, they, or it (a trust, corporation, partnership) is taking title. The grantee must be "legally capable of taking title at the time of the conveyance." n199

A deed to a grantee not living, or to a nonexistent entity, is void. But a deed identifying a living grantee by a name she doesn't ordinarily use, yet chooses for this occasion, is valid. It is usually a mistake to take title in a nickname or an unregistered fictitious name because "chain of title" problems may arise if the grantee later mortgages or sells, using a different name. But deeds to a nonexistent entity are invalid, while deeds to a person or entity described by an existing assumed, fictitious, trade or inaccurate name are valid. The grantee is identified even if identified under an assumed name. Absent an explicit statutory prohibition or proof of fraud, a fictitious name may be used even if it is unregistered. State statutes providing for the registration of fictitious names are, generally, regarded as permissive, not mandatory, designed to protect the user of the name from copycats, not to protect the public from users of assumed names.

§ 94.07(o) Signature of the Grantor.

This sounds straightforward enough, but, remember, all owners need to sign. Those who don't aren't bound. And they need to sign exactly as their names appear in the grantor identification.

Someone with a power of attorney, a recorded written authorization to transfer title, needs to sign her name and the name of the grantor. The landowner must first have executed a valid power of attorney authorizing the attorney in fact to sell.

Even when an attorney in fact prepares a deed, the grantor named in it must be the landowner, not the attorney. The name signed to the deed is also the landowner's. The attorney signs the grantor's name and places her own beneath that. The grantor must be alive on the date of transfer because with the grantor's death all agency agreements (of which powers of attorney are but one example) are presumed to terminate absent express language to the contrary in the authorization. The attorney also needs to be ready to establish that the agency hadn't been revoked or terminated by the grantor before it was exercised. Prudent title insurers asked to insure a deed signed by an "attorney in fact" (as the holder of a power of attorney is called) will require a letter from the property owner verifying the continuing validity of the power of attorney.

Sometimes someone other than the grantor or an attorney in fact signs the landowner's name to it. That doesn't necessarily invalidate the deed as a forgery if the grantee can prove that the grantor authorized or ratified the signature (as by pocketing the purchase money). But a truly forged deed conveys nothing. Never. Well, hardly ever. n200

§ 94.07(p) Date.

The date each person signs should be placed on the deed. Deeds aren't effective except from delivery and delivery is presumed to be the date of signing.

§ 94.07(q) Acceptance.

Most jurisdictions require the grantee to accept the deed as a condition to its becoming effective. n201 Acceptance need not be express. It can be inferred from the grantee taking possession, paying taxes, granting or refusing to grant the property to someone else. An escrow agent is usually deemed authorized to accept the deed for the grantee. Occasionally, grantees resist title by invoking the doctrine of acceptance to avoid tax, tort or toxic clean-up liabilities.

Sometimes the grantor wants to affirm or disclose earlier encumbrances, ones the grantor didn't create, but which the grantor wants the grantee to accept because they are already there. A useful caution in drafting affirmations of interests already of record is for the grantor to make the deed subject to the easement previously reserved. A grantor may be tempted to insert the same exception in the deed as appeared in the deed by which the grantor created the exception. By repeating the exception, the grantor appears to be reserving a new easement for the grantor's own benefit. A grantor who seeks only to affirm the earlier easement, should do that explicitly by identifying it in that deed, conveying "subject to that easement of record at book 1, page 1, in the public records of Blissful County." In one case, a son showed no interest in owning property deeded to him by his father. The son was to assume the property tax and maintenance burdens. Thirteen years after the execution of the deed, oil was discovered on the land. The grantee recorded the deed, started paying taxes, and executed an oil and gas lease on the property. The court, however, held that acceptance had come too late, long after the father had deeded the same property to another son. n202

§ 94.07(r) Covenants, Exceptions and Reservations.

The grantor may have previously granted a utility easement to the gas company, a boundary concession to cure a neighboring owner's building encroachment, a long-term lease to a tenant, or a license to a nearby restaurateur to park employee cars after 6 p.m. Unless the grantor "excepts" or "reserves" these prior interests in the deed, the grantor may be in breach of his grant or warranty deed covenants.

Disclosure alone isn't usually taken as sufficient to remove a warranty, implied or expressed. To be safe the grantor needs to reserve or except the previously conveyed interest on the face of the deed. n203

Deeds are sometimes drafted by attorneys who are uncertain of the difference between an "exception" and a "reservation." n204 The difference between an exception and a reservation is simply this. An exception is a reference to an interest created earlier ("excepting an easement along the north boundary to PacTel in book X, page Y, ..."). A reservation is the creation of a new interest in the grantor or a third party ("reserving for the benefit of the grantor's adjoining parcel and successors in the interest to that parcel, a strip of land 10' running along the boundary between the two properties, as an easement for a common driveway, identified as ... ,").

While deed ambiguities are usually read against the grantor, the opposite is true of exceptions. They are interpreted giving the benefit of the doubt to the grantor. n205

§ 94.07(s) Legal Description of the Property.

Buyers seldom pay much attention to the legal description in the deed by which they acquire title -- unless they ordered a survey and studied the results. They just figure the description in the purchase-and-sale agreement must have been right or someone -- the title insurer, attorney, broker -- would have signaled the problem. They assume the description inscribed in the deed is the same as the one in the contract. The buyer's claim against the seller, even on a warranty deed is based, presumptively, on what is in the deed, a result rationalized as flowing from the doctrine of merger. n206

Clients also assume the description in the deed identifies the property they think they are buying. They could be wrong. Say the yard is fenced. Buyers assume they own everything within the fence. The title described in the deed could be considerably less land than what is inside the fence. Without a surveyor staking the property boundaries and matching them to the legal description, the buyers have no way of knowing for sure what they are getting.

Some descriptions are faulty when matched against the maps or plats to which they refer. A legal description could read: Lot 3 of that certain subdivision known as Happy Acres according to the map or plat on file and recorded in the office of the clerk of the Circuit court of Lee County, Florida, in Plat Book 3, page 42. The description will be useless if the subdivision contains four blocks, A, B, C, and D. Each contains a Lot 3. No surveyor could say for sure which lot 3 was intended. Parol evidence is only admissible to clarify latent ambiguities. n207

Lawyers drafting legal descriptions must advise their clients that there is no guarantee the legal description will convey the exact parcel of land the clients have seen and believe they are buying.

The exact location of the boundaries of the tract described in the deed, the exact acreage contained within those boundaries and the relation of those boundaries to any physical improvements can only be determined by a surveyor. Lawyers should so advise their clients. n208

The purpose of the property description in a contract or deed is to describe precisely the physical location on the ground or, in the case of condominiums, the exact dimensions of airspace being conveyed. "The description delineates a specific piece of land and cannot apply to any other." n209 You can easily see why many ways of describing property for other purposes won't necessarily work in deeds: a street address, "Harry's place on Third Street," "the green house fourth on the left across Maple." n210 Whether a description is sufficient to transfer the property depends on whether a surveyor can locate the property on the ground. The surveyor must be able to make that determination at the effective date of the deed. A deed that provides for the boundaries of the property to be determined by a future survey lacks the requisite timely specificity. n211

To determine whether a description actually describes a specific piece of ground adequately, the surveyor establishes whether the description forms a mathematically closed figure and whether the description reasonably conforms to the physical evidence on the earth's surface. n212

Lawyers and title officers meticulously copy land descriptions from the deed by which the grantor obtained it unless the grantor has recorded a new subdivision map and seeks to convey only part of what he himself acquired. In most states only licensed surveyors may prepare property descriptions. n213

Surveyors usually have the right to enter private property only when they are working for governments, making public surveys. When they are working on private surveys they need the consent of the property owner or are liable as trespassers. They are also liable for cutting trees, breaking fences, and damaging crops in the course of their work.

Surveyors are liable for errors in their surveys, predicated on negligence standards or for breach of contract. "Reasonable" care, not absolute perfection, is the standard.

Most legal land descriptions are by (a) metes and bounds (all the original colonies and a few other states), (b) subdivision map, lot and block number (the most common method for conveying developed sites in urban areas), or (c) government survey (encompassing most of the states west of the original colonies, as a consequence of an act passed by the Continental Congress, May 1785).

§ 94.07(s)(1) Metes and Bounds.

In older portions of the United States nearly all the original land grants were of parcels irregular in shape and bounded by streams, fences, forest and ridge lines. Early land descriptions used these natural and manmade landscape features: "Bounded on the north by Bog Creek ... bounded on the east by a stone wall ... ." n214

As land became more valuable these litigation-inspiring descriptions gave way to descriptions more precisely measuring the lengths and directions (called metes) and the boundaries (bounds) of the property being conveyed. n215 Lengths are measured in feet or chains, and directions in bearings computed from angular measurements. These descriptions read like a walk around the perimeter of the property led by a surveyor who starts the walk at a well-marked point of beginning and, hopefully, ends there as well so that the property description forms a complete self-contained parcel. Landmarks called monuments sometimes mark the corner of the description and can be natural (a tree or river) or artificial (a fence, stake, or plate placed in the ground).

Example:

> beginning at the most southerly corner of the land described in parcel 1 above; thence along the southeasterly line of said land described in said parcel 1, north 18 degrees 20' 32" east 15.00 feet; thence parallel with the northeasterly line of mulholland highway, 100 feet wide south 71 degrees 39' 32" east 88.28 feet; thence south 18 degrees 20' 32" west 5.00 feet; thence southeasterly along a line parallel with and distant northeasterly 10.00 feet, measured at right angles, from said northeasterly line of mulholland highway, to a point in the northwesterly line of the land described in parcel 1 of the deed to grace elizabeth yeaton, recorded april 15, 1948 in book 26942 page 401 official records; thence southeasterly in a direct line to the westerly terminus of the certain course described in said last mentioned parcel 1 as having a bearing of north 87 degrees 1' 50" west a length of 36.00 feet; being a point in said northeasterly line of mulholland highway; thence northwesterly along said northeasterly line to the point of beginning.

§ 94.07(s)(2) The Government Survey.

When the U.S. Government acquired the Northwest Territory (now Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin) the rectangular system of surveys, The Government Survey, got under way in earnest so the government could sell off these lands to repay the Revolutionary War debt.

The Government Survey started with the surveyor selecting a point on a north-south line called a prime or principal meridian. The meridian runs from the north to the south pole along the surface of the earth. At the equator all meridians are parallel. Above and below the equator they converge because the earth is an oblate spheroid, a bit longer than it is wide. n216

Most surveys ignore convergence because it is very slight and only becomes significant in surveys of large areas that must be precise.

Some principal meridians are numbered (the First Principal Meridian which runs north from the mouth of the Great Miami River). Some are named (Tallahassee Meridian, Humboldt, San Bernardino, Mt. Diablo).

The next step in the Government Survey process was to run an east-west line intersecting the principal or prime meridian. This line was called a baseline. The First Principal Meridian longitude is 84 degrees 48' 50" W and the latitude of the baseline is 41 degrees 00' 00" N.

To divide the territory into eventually salable grids, the Government Survey procedure called for guide meridians at 24-mile intervals east and west of the principal meridian and standard parallels at 24-mile intervals north and south of the baseline. n217

Congress required these lands to be further subdivided into areas called townships that would be 6 miles square, each containing 36 sections 1 mile square. Each row, or tier, of townships running east and west is called a range. Each row of townships north and south are identified by the number of townships between it and the baseline.

Townships are divided into 36 tracts called sections. Each is approximately one mile square or 640 acres (not counting for convergence). They are numbered 1 to 36 starting in the northeast corner and proceeding snake-like to the southeast corner.

Sections may be divided into halves, quarters, eighths, and sixteenths (quarter-quarters).

In this system, property is described by designating the section number, township, and principal meridian, e.g., the NE 1/4 of the SE 1/4, Section 20, T. 1 S., R. 3 E. of the San Bernardino Meridian.

The government surveys were far from perfect. Besides errors attributable to the simple instruments available at the time, surveyors had to traverse rugged terrain, and measure across lakes, rivers, and streams. Some human error was inevitable. Different surveying teams often began measuring the same general area at different points. The result was that some sections contained more and some less than 640 acres. So sections were divided into as many 160-acre quarter sections as possible and the deficient sections were designated government lots. Someone acquiring one of these is often getting less than 160 acres. n218

> The importance of these government surveys lies in the principle that the description of land and the location of the section lines and of the section corners as laid out in the government surveys are binding upon all parties concerned. The sections, which were established by the surveys, determined the location, size, and acreage of all property within the section surveyed. The government surveys are conclusive as to the location and acreage even though property rights are established by state law. n219

§ 94.07(s)(3) Subdivision Maps.

As areas become urban they are often subdivided into salable, buildable lots. Mostly real estate developers do this, usually working with civil engineers. These maps must be approved by local government and meet the standards of state Subdivision Map Acts before they can be accepted for recordation in the public land records. Subdivision maps depict the size and shape of lots and number each of them. They specify the location of roads, parks, public open spaces and often utility easements. Once a subdivision map becomes part of the public land records, it can be used as the basis for a legal description. Lots in an officially approved subdivision can be sold by identifying the lot and block number, the name of the subdivision, and the volume and page of the public records where a copy of the map can be found.

Sometimes legal descriptions combine a metes and bounds or recorded subdivision map description with an identification of the site from the government survey.

None of the three types of descriptions described above works well for rights-of-ways or other types of easements. For those "point descriptions" and "centerline descriptions" are often employed.

When the course of a tract of land described by either metes and bounds or point description encounters a property line, right-of-way line, or any other line established by public division of land (section line, township line, monument, property corner, centerline of street or highway, etc.), this information is recited in the description to insure establishment of full intent. The area of the tract described is included at the end of the description.

Many utility installations are constructed within a uniform width right-of-way easement that follows the path of a described centerline. Since the project centerline serves as the centerline of the easement area, an accurately drawn plan of the centerline alignment becomes the basis for this type of description.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 121. In construing deeds, there is a presumption that the grantor of the deed conveys all the grantor has to convey by way of the deed. Terrill v. Tuckness, 985 S.W.2d 97 (Tex. App. 1998).

(n2)Footnote 122. Powell on RealProperty § 81A.06 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender). Stambovsky v. Ackley, 572 N.Y.S.2d 672 (1st Dept. 1991) (vendor could not deliver the premises empty, because of the admitted presence of two ghosts).

(n3)Footnote 123. But see Bianchi v. Lorenz, 701 A.2d 1037 (Vt. 1997) (property in violation of zoning ordinance held to have an encumbrance due to the diminution of value caused).

(n4)Footnote 124. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Transfer, Finance, and Development 83 (3d ed. 1987). For additional material on the six covenants, see Powell on, Real Property § 81A.03 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender); Leonard Levin, Warranties of Title--A Modest Proposal, 29 Vill. L. Rev. 649 (1984).

(n5)Footnote 125. Powell on, Real Property § 81A.03 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

(n6)Footnote 126. Alaska Stat. § 34.15.030.

(n7)Footnote 127. 765 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/9.

(n8)Footnote 128. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 58-2203.

(n9)Footnote 129. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.151.

(n10)Footnote 130. Minn. Stat. Ann. § 507.07.

(n11)Footnote 131. Md. Code Ann., Real Prop. § 2-105.

(n12)Footnote 132. Va. Code Ann. § 55-68.

(n13)Footnote 133. W. Va. Code § 36-4-2.

(n14)Footnote 134. Ark. Code Ann. § 18-12-102.

(n15)Footnote 135. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.02.

(n16)Footnote 136. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 382.030.

(n17)Footnote 137. N.D. Cent. Code §§ 47-10-04, -06.

(n18)Footnote 138. See, e.g., Va. Code § 55-69. A special warranty grantor agrees "...to forever warrant and defend such property unto the grantee, his heirs, and personal representatives and assigns, against the claims and demands of the grantor, and all persons claiming or to claim by, through or under him."

(n19)Footnote 139. Gaffe v. Welk, 189 P. 300 (Cal. 1920) (A, B, and C owned property as tenants-in-common. A forged deeds from B and C to himself. A then purported to sell all the property to D. When D learned the truth, he sued A for breach of the covenants in the grant deed but without offering to rescind. Held, A had not previously conveyed the property to anyone else. So A hadn't breached the implied covenants in a grant deed.).

(n20)Footnote 140. Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 62 (9th ed. 1988).

(n21)Footnote 141. By the same token, the special warranty deed grantor would warrant against the lien because it arose from the grantor's failure to pay the tax.

(n22)Footnote 142. Under a general warranty deed, the grantor would still be liable for the lien because she warrants that the title is free of defects no matter how they may arise.

(n23)Footnote 143. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-435.

(n24)Footnote 144. Lesley Wolf (Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher) & Alan Wayte (Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood), Lecture in Real Estate Transactions, U.S.C. Law Center (Feb. 14, 1992).

(n25)Footnote 145. Idaho Code § 55-612.

(n26)Footnote 146. S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 43-25-10.

(n27)Footnote 147. Mo. Ann. Stat. § 442.420.

(n28)Footnote 148. Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 111.170.

(n29)Footnote 149. D.C. Code Ann. § 45-505.

(n30)Footnote 150. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 382.040.

(n31)Footnote 151. Md. Code Ann., Real Prop. § 2-106.

(n32)Footnote 152. Miss. Code Ann. § 89-1-35.

(n33)Footnote 153. Va. Code Ann. § 55-69.

(n34)Footnote 154. W. Va. Code § 36-4-3.

(n35)Footnote 155. N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 258.

(n36)Footnote 156. Powell on, Real Property § 81A.03 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender). Common law is often codified. See, e.g., Wis. Stat. Ann. § 706.10 (a quitclaim deed passes whatever title the grantor has but "shall not warrant or imply the existence, quantity, or quality of any such interest."). See also Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 47-30f. Other states achieve the same result through statutes providing that "no covenant shall be implied in any conveyance of real estate." Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 565.5; Md. Code Ann., Real Prop. §§ 2-115, 4-202, 4-203; Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 507.16, 507; Alaska Stat. §§ 34-15.080, -15.040.

(n37)Footnote 157. Holzheier v. Hayes, 133 Cal. 456 (1901).

(n38)Footnote 158. Evans v. Faught, 42 Cal. Rptr. 133, 141 (1965).

(n39)Footnote 159. Platner v. Vincent, 229 P. 24 (Cal. 1924).

(n40)Footnote 160. 194 Cal. at 444.

(n41)Footnote 161. The following statute, Cal. Civ. Code § 1106, supports the after-acquired property distinction. The operative word is "grant":

> Subsequently acquired title passes by operation of law. Where a person purports by proper instrument to grant real property in fee simple, and subsequently acquires any title, or claim of title thereto, the same passes by operation of law to the grantee, or his successors.

(n42)Footnote 162. Holzheier v. Hayes, 133 Cal. 456 (1901).

(n43)Footnote 163. Evans v. Faught, 42. Cal. Rptr. 133, 141 (1965). See, e.g, Platner v. Vincent, 194 229 P. 24 (Cal. 1924).

(n44)Footnote 164. See, Indian Harbor, Inc. v. Sea & Pines, Inc., 1987 W.L. 12424 (Del. Super. 1987).

(n45)Footnote 165. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 34-11-17; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 477:28; Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 183, 11.

(n46)Footnote 166. S.D. Codified Laws Ann. § 43-25-11. However, it does not imply the final sentence which begins "Such covenants may be sued upon... ."

(n47)Footnote 167. La. Civ. Code. Ann. art. 2502. See Comment, Does This Piece Fit? A Look at the Common-Law Quitclaim Deed and After-Acquired Title Doctrine in Louisiana's Civil Code, 55 La. L. Rev. 159 (1994).

(n48)Footnote 168. See, e.g., Pankins v. Jackson, 891 S.W.2d 845 (Mo. App. E.D. 1995) (dicta).

(n49)Footnote 169. McAboy v. Packer, 187 S.W.2d 207 (Mo. 1945).

(n50)Footnote 170. Covenant of seisin, covenant of right to convey, and covenant against encumbrances are breached, if at all, at the time of conveyance of real property, while covenants of warranty, quiet enjoyment, and further assurances are breached, if at all, only after the closing. Juanita Valley Bank v. Martin Oil Co., 736 A.2d 650 (Pa. Super. App., 1999).

(n51)Footnote 171. See, e.g., Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-205(1) (reissue 1989), cited in Omega Chem. Co. v. Rogers, 524 N.W.2d 330 (Neb. 1994). Thus it is important to distinguish correctly a present from future covenant. See In re Country World Casinos, Inc., 181 F.3d 1146 (10th Cir. 1999) (environmental contamination was not an "encumbrance" for purposes of the covenant against encumbrances in a warranty deed because of the absence of a specific warranty regarding environmental conditions on the conveyed property).

(n52)Footnote 172. In re Country World Casinos, Inc., 181 F.3d 1146 (10th Cir. 1999).

(n53)Footnote 173. Powell on, Real Property Ch. 81A (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender). The "benefit of the bargain" rule is defended in Groetzinger, Breach of the Warranty Covenants in Deeds and the Allowable Measure of Damages, 17 N.H. B.J. 1 (1975).

(n54)Footnote 174. Gonzales v. Garcia,552 P.2d 468 (N.M. 1976).

(n55)Footnote 175. See Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Transfer, Finance, and Development 211 n.4 (West 3d ed. 1987).

(n56)Footnote 176. But see Fechtner v. Lake County Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 361 N.E.2d 575 (Ill. 1977) (allowing covenantee to recover substantial damages for certain judgment liens even though nothing had been paid for their removal). The Uniform Land Transactions Act would give the grantee a 2-year right of rescission and restitution. ULTA § 2-402.

(n57)Footnote 177. Powell on, Real Property Ch. 81A (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

(n58)Footnote 178. Documentary transfer taxes in the U.S. date back to Revolutionary days when it caused the dumping of British tea into the harbor at Boston. Albert H. Monacelli, Note, The Documentary Stamp Tax and Its Application to Government Instrumentalities, 24 Geo. L.J. 455, 456 (1935). The U.S. government levied a tax on all title transfers, a federal conveyance stamp tax, which was phased out in 1934. 47 Stat. § 725, Part I (1932). State and local governments had imposed stamp or documentary transfer taxes on deeds and mortgages of real property. With the abolition of the federal tax, many more states and local governments began imposing a stamp or documentary transfer tax in its place. Some locally imposed real estate transfer taxes are the lineal descendants of the original stamp duty. See Cohn v. City of Oakland, 272 Cal. Rptr. 714 (1990) (upholding City of Oakland real estate transfer tax of 0.75% to 0.95% against Proposition 13 challenge. Tax held not a "special" tax requiring two-thirds vote because proceeds went into general fund).

(n59)Footnote 179. Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33-401(B); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5301.01.

(n60)Footnote 180. Annotation, Record of Instrument Without Sufficient Acknowledgment as Notice, 59 A.L.R.2d 1299 (1958).

(n61)Footnote 181. See the discussion in Chapter 4, at p. 210, distinguishing patent from latent defects in acknowledgments. In some states, only patently defective acknowledgments result in the document, if recorded, not conveying constructive notice.

(n62)Footnote 182. Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 82-83 (9th ed. 1988).

(n63)Footnote 183. Someone out of the state where the property is located who needs an acknowledgment should examine the state statutes to see what form of acknowledgment is required and who may take it. There is a uniform law on the subject, the Uniform Recognition of Acknowledgments Act, 14 ULA 233 (1990) enacted in sixteen states.

(n64)Footnote 184. Cal. Civ. Code § 1190. The last sentence of § 1190 provides: ' "Duly authorized person,' with respect to a domestic or foreign corporation, includes the president, vice president, secretary, and assistant secretary of the corporation." A revised acknowledgment form appears in Cal. Civ. Code § 1189, in which the grantor acknowledges that he/she/they executed the same in "his/her/their ...authorized capacity(ies) ...and that by his/her/their signature(s) on the instrument the person(s), or the entity upon behalf of which the person(s) acted, executed the instrument."

(n65)Footnote 185. Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 81-82 (9th ed. 1988).

(n66)Footnote 186. See Powell on, Real Property Ch. 82 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).; Paul E. Bayse, Clearing Land Titles § 201, at 463 (2d ed. 1970).

(n67)Footnote 187. Cal. Gov't Code § 8206. If the right thumbprint is not available, the left thumbprint or any available finger will do.

(n68)Footnote 188. California notaries are required to be bonded for a minimum of $10,000, so the bonding company is sometimes the loser and can lose more than $10,000 if it wrongfully denies liability and causes the claimants to incur legal and court costs. See Harris v. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Co., 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 234 (1992).

(n69)Footnote 189. 90 Cal. Rptr. 822 (1970).

(n70)Footnote 190. 90 Cal. Rptr. 822, 825-26 (1970).

(n71)Footnote 191. 90 Cal. Rptr. 822 (1970).

(n72)Footnote 192. Cal. Civ. Code § 1185.

(n73)Footnote 193. California Civil Code § 1207.

(n74)Footnote 194. Mary Randolph, the Deeds Book: How to Transfer Title to California Real Estate 6:15-6:16 (1987).

(n75)Footnote 195. Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 63 (9th ed. 1988).

(n76)Footnote 196. Horton v. Verhelle, 588 N.W.2d 144 (Mich. App.1998) (similar to property owners who cannot lose property rights to innocent purchasers through a forged deed, construction lienholders cannot lose lien rights to innocent homeowners through forged waivers).

(n77)Footnote 197. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Transfer, Finance, and Development 169 (4th ed. 1992).

(n78)Footnote 198. Grant S. Nelson & Dale A. Whitman, Real Estate Transfer, Finance, and Development 169 (4th ed. 1992); United States v. Green, 201 F.3d 251 (3d Cir. 2000) (the Internal Revenue Service could foreclose a lien against property that a husband had transferred to his wife more than 10 years before the foreclosure; the conveyance of residence from husband to wife for inadequate consideration gave rise to presumption of actual fraud, regardless of whether husband was solvent at time).

(n79)Footnote 199. Roeckl v. FDIC, 855 P.2d 1067, 1070 (Ala. 1994).

(n80)Footnote 200. See Marshall v. Hollywood, Inc., 224 So. 2d 743 (Fla. App. 1969) (grantee's title under a forged deed rendered unassailable by statute of limitations and marketable title act).

(n81)Footnote 201. But see Halleck v. Halleck, 337 P.2d 330 (Or. 1959), in which the requirement of acceptance was terminated. See Annotation, What Constitutes Acceptance of Deed by Grantee, 74 A.L.R. 2d 992 (1960).

(n82)Footnote 202. Seibert v. Seibert, 41 N.E.2d 544 (Ill. 1942).

(n83)Footnote 203. At common law, a grantor could not "reserve" an interest in a third party since no words of grant appear in a reservation clause. To confer an incidental interest in a third party at common law, the grantor had to take two steps: (1) reserve the interest from the original deed, and (2) convey the interest reserved from the first deed to designated third parties by a second deed -- utilizing traditional words of conveyance ("grant," "warrant," "convey"). That requirement is often relaxed in favor of fulfilling a grantor's intent to reserve interests in third parties. See, e.g., In the Matter of the Marriage of Ron D. Wade & Katherine Sue Wade, 884 P.2d 736 (Kan. App. 1995).

(n84)Footnote 204. See, e.g., Campbell v. Johnson, 622 N.E.2d 717 (Ohio App. 1993).

(n85)Footnote 205. Cal. Civ. Code § 1069. The "benefit of the doubt" rule saved the rights to methane gas royalties for the grantor's heirs in Cantley v. Hubbard, 623 So. 2d 1079 (Ala. 1994). The other claimants to the methane gas royalties were the heirs of a 1929 grantee to whom the grantor had conveyed in 1929 by warranty deed with "All mineral reserved to the United States." The U.S. had sold the land in 1924 to the grantor, reserving only the coal. The grantor, selling in 1929, should have excepted the coal rights previously retained by the U.S. and reserved all other mineral rights in the grantor. No matter. That is what the court assumed the grantor in 1929 had intended. The court awarded gas royalties to the grantor's heirs and not to the heirs of the 1929 grantee.

But see Bambauer v. Menjoulet, 29 Cal. Rptr. 874 (Cal. App. 1963) (grantors' reservation "in and to all minerals" was held not to include a right to gravel deposits on site because there was no uniform chemical content of gravel deposits, no "constant in the character of commercial gravel by which to identify it as a mineral ...").

See Marshall v. City of Yachats, 973 P.2d 374 (Or. App. 1999) (Where it was inferred that deeds "excepting" an area containing a prescriptive public easement for a walking trail was meant to convey the area subject to encumbrances rather than exclude the area from the conveyance).

(n86)Footnote 206. Barber v. Peringer, 877 P.2d 223 (Wash. 1994).

(n87)Footnote 207. This example comes from C. Michael Jackson, Descriptions, Florida Real Estate Property Sales Transactions § 7.5 at 335 (1994).

(n88)Footnote 208. Florida Real Estate Property Sales Transactions § 7.11 at 240 (1994).

(n89)Footnote 209. Robert Kratovil & Raymond J. Werner, Real Estate Law 44 (9th ed. 1988).

(n90)Footnote 210. For a parade of horrible legal descriptions, see Annotation, Specificity of Description of Premises as Affecting Enforceability of Contract to Convey Property--Modern Cases, 73 A.L.R. 4th 135 (1989). Where one part of the description of a property conveyed by deed is defective, but the context locates the property, the description is good. Bass Pro Outdoor World, L.P. v. Wilson, 965 S.W.2d 890 (Mo. App. 1998). Description clause of a deed may be employed to describe quality as well as dimensions and quantity of the estate conveyed. CSX Transp., Inc. v. Rabold, 691 N.E.2d 1275 (Ind. App. 1998).

(n91)Footnote 211. McMichael Realty & Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Tysinger, 270 S.E.2d 88 (Ga. 1980).

(n92)Footnote 212. Kings Farm v. Concordia Parish Police Jury, 709 So. 2d 953 (La. App.1998) (Courts cannot correct errors in official government surveys. However, courts can locate the lines of surveys on the ground and locate any tract of land in relation to the property in question).

(n93)Footnote 213. See, e.g., Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 8726; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 472.005(b); 15 McKinney's Consol. Laws of New York Annot. N.Y. Law § 72.08 (only surveyors can determine real property boundaries).

(n94)Footnote 214. Raymond E. Davis et al., Surveying: Theory and Practice 582 (McGraw-Hill 5th ed. 1966).

(n95)Footnote 215. In metes and bounds descriptions, the locations of land corners can also be described by a system of coordinates established in 1935 by the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey. Jack B. Evett, Surveying 217 (Prentice-Hall 2d ed. 1991).

(n96)Footnote 216. Raymond E. Davis et al., Surveying: Theory and Practice 2-3, fig. 1-2 (McGraw-Hill 5th ed. 1966).

(n97)Footnote 217. Raymond E. Davis et al., Surveying: Theory and Practice at 601, fig. 23-1 (McGraw-Hill 5th ed. 1966).

(n98)Footnote 218. American Right of Way Association, Principles of Right of Way 72 (1972).

(n99)Footnote 219. Lewis M. Kanner, What You Should Know About Surveys, 5 Prac. Real Est. Law 3, 19 (May 1989).

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.08

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.08 Surveys.

People order surveys for many reasons. There is no universally agreed standard governing what a survey is supposed to show, and how the calculations are to be made although title insurers have promulgated minimum standards for title surveys. n220 Clients must be forewarned to think clearly about their objectives and match their survey contract closely to these goals or risk disappointment when the survey proves inadequate for its intended purpose. n221

A majority of all surveying is associated with construction. n222 In a real estate development project, for instance, surveys may be called for at several times.

(1) The developer needs a survey of the vacant site to learn how much acreage is being acquired, where its boundaries are, whether the property abuts streets, and where utility easements cross the site. The developer wants the surveyor to prepare a map of the site and a written legal description.

(2) Local government will require a survey as a condition to the developer recording a subdivision map.

(3) The developer hires an architect to prepare construction plans. The architect will need to know the precise location of all nearby roads, railroads, utility installations, sewers, adjacent buildings, and the elevation and topography of the site. The resulting map is called a plot plan. n223

(4) During preliminary design, test borings may be made to determine the suitability of the soil to hold the weight of the proposed structure. Holes must be bored at critical points, and the surveyor stakes these.

(5) Later, when construction commences, the construction lender may require confirmation of the size of the site, that easements which interfered with development have actually been relocated, and so on.

(6) Before construction begins, surveyors will be called to stake out the site showing the footprint of the proposed building and to mark the boundaries for foundation work.

(7) If footings are to be placed below ground, surveyors will be asked to inspect and survey them before the foundation is poured. This avoids disputes with neighboring owners who might later claim the footings encroach on their sites.

(8) When the project is completed, the permanent lender will seek an "as built" survey to confirm that the project lies entirely on its own site, to make sure the setbacks, height and bulk of the building conform to zoning and building codes, and so on.

(9) Most buyers and their lenders will order surveys in order to obtain an ALTA Extended Coverage Owner's Policy, without which their title policies will be subject to "any state of facts an accurate survey may show." The survey enables the title insurer to remove the "survey exception."

> The survey exception is usually not removed, however, but replaced with a "survey reading," which, again, excepts from insurance coverage the specific defects which the survey reveals. If the survey shows that the lot doesn't close or that there are overlaps or gores with adjoining properties, or that there are encroachments of improvements or easements, these are simply not insured against (although if there is a sound legal basis for encroachments to remain, the title company can insure them). In addition, there are many things that an accurate survey would show that the policy does not and cannot insure against because they are not deemed to be title defects, such as zoning compliance, setback requirements, utilities, etc.
>
> The decision to eliminate or limit the survey exception is both a legal and economic one. On a lender's policy, the exception is very likely to be taken out because most sophisticated mortgage lenders and their attorneys insist that it be taken out. On owner's policies it often costs more in premiums to have it removed, and many attorneys don't realize its significance. In the event of a loss due to a boundary line mislocation or encroachment, the title company's liability can be limited to the face amount of the policy, which may be far below market value. The owner faces the loss of possession, costs to remove encroachments, etc., which may be far in excess of the insurance coverage. Not only are the title insurer's survey concerns different than a property owner's, but its risk of loss can also be substantially lower.
>
> This can be seen in the wide range of acceptable ways to remove the survey exception: visual "inspections" by title company employees, the notorious "mortgage map," the "location service" provided by Chicago Title (until the execution of a consent decree in April 1986 with the Professional Land Surveyors of Ohio), or affidavits from the current owners that they haven't had a boundary dispute with any of their neighbors within the statutory period for adverse possession. Each of these will remove or limit the survey inspection: None of them could be relied upon in order to erect a fence along a property line. n224

Lawyers can be liable for failing to caution a client to get a survey when one was really called for.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 220. Bernard M. Rifkin, "Land Surveys and the Law of Real Property," Minimum Standard Detail Requirements for ALTA/ACSM Land Title Surveys, in Land Surveys: A Guide for Lawyers 42-48 (American Bar Association 1989).

(n2)Footnote 221. See also, Mitchell A. Williams & Harlan J. Onsrud, What Every Lawyer Should Know About Title Surveys, Land Surveys: A Guide for Lawyers 49 (ABA, Chicago, 1988); Vanessa L. Washington, What You Should Know About Survey Certificates, 9 Practical Real Estate Law. 21 (March 1993).

(n3)Footnote 222. Jack B. Evett, Surveying 183 (Prentice-Hall 2d ed. 1991).

(n4)Footnote 223. See Charles A. Herubin, Principles of Surveying 2-3 (4th ed. 1991).

(n5)Footnote 224. Mitchell G. Williams, A Code for Title Insurer: The 1988 ALTA/ACSM Standards for Title Surveys (unpublished speech, 1989, on file with author).

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES *

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 94.09

AUTHOR: Professor George Lefcoe The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 94.09 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Articles

Brown, Joseph C. Jr. "Comment: The Implied Warranty of Habitability Doctrine in Residential Property Conveyances: Policy-Backed Change Proposals."

Wash. L. Rev. Vol. 62 (Fall 1987) 743.

Annotations

Annotation, Conveyance as Fraudulent Where Made in Contemplation of Possible Liability for Future Tort, 38 A.L.R. 3d 597.

Annotation, Conveyance of Land as Including Mature but Unharvested Crops, 51 A.L.R. 4th 1263.

Annotation, Failure of Vendor to Comply with Statute or Ordinance Requiring Approval or Recording of Plat Prior to Conveyance of Property as Rendering Sale Void or Voidable, 77 A.L.R. 3d 1058.

Annotation, Severance or Termination of Joint Tenancy by Conveyance of Divided Interest Directly to Self, 7 A.L.R. 4th 1268.

Annotation, Validity and Effect of One Spouse's Conveyance to Other Spouse of Interest in Property Held as Estate by the Entireties, 18 A.L.R. 5th 230.

* Parts of this chapter have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 94.03

Supp. to § 94.03 Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings.

[Go To Main]

§ 94.03(b) The Case Against Lawyer Involvement in Residential Closings [Go To Main]

Add:

Bluehaven Funding, LLC, v. First American Title Insurance Co., 594 F.3d 1055 (8th Cir. 2010) (title insurer's agent mishandled escrow accounts and real estate closings); Murray v. Fidellity Nat. Financial, Inc., 594 F.3d 419 (5th Cir. 2010) (title company allegedly overcharged to record documents related to real estate closings; class action status denied); In re Anderson, 685 S.E.2d 711 (Ga. 2009) (disciplinary proceeding against attorney for failing to supervise employees who committed misconduct relating to real estate closings).

Add:

International Electron Devices (USA) LLC v. Menter, Rudin & Trivelpiece, P.C., 898 N.Y.S.2d 388 (2010) (malpractice against attorney alleging failure to conduct thorough environmental investigation prior to commercial real estate closing).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 94.05

Supp. to § 94.05 Preparations for Closing.

[Go To Main]

§ 94.05(a) An Escrow Agent's Steps to Prepare for Closing. [Go To Main]

Add:

Those who supervise closings also need to be alert to the possibility of forgery at the closing. See Keyingham Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nst. Tit. Ins. Co., 680 S.E.2d 442 (Ga. App. 2009) .

§ 94.05(b) A Lawyer's Steps to Prepare for Closing. [Go To Main]

Add:

In the Matter of Lester, 578 S.E.2d 7 (S.C. 2003) (an attorney who failed to be present at the closing while representing a client in the real estate transaction committed misconduct warranting a public reprimand).

§ 94.05(d) Inspections and Inspection Contingencies Before Closing. [Go To Main]

Add new note 59.1 at the end of the subsection: n59.1

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 59.1. Lane v. A.J.M. Oustalet, 2002 Miss. App. LEXIS 323 (No. 2000-CA-01814-COA, Jun. 4, 2002) (no obligation to furnish a closing certificate from a licensed termite company).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 94.06

Supp. to § 94.06 The Escrow.

[Go To Main]

§ 94.06(e) Escrow Agent's Duties. [Go To Main]

Add:

Chen v. Dynasty Escrow, Inc., 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 1930 (No. B144808, Jun. 6, 2002) (escrow holder not required to obtain the purchaser's permission before disbursing the funds to a third party).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 94.07

Supp. to § 94.07 Aspects of Deed Especially Pertinent to Conveyancing.

[Go To Main]

§ 94.07(b) Types of Deeds. [Go To Main]

§ 94.07(b)(3) Quitclaim Deed.

§ 94.07(b)(3)(i) Why Quitclaim Deeds Are Used.

Add:

Des Lacs Valley Land Corp. v. Herzig, 621 N.W.2d 860 (N.D. 2001) (parol evidence not admitted to contradict grant in unambiguous quitclaim deed).

§ 94.07(e) Enforcement by Remote Grantees. [Go To Main]

Add:

Stone v. Jetmar Properties, LLC, 733 N.W.2d 480 (Minn. App. 2007) (a conveyance to a limited liability company that was not in existence at the time of the conveyance was void).

§ 94.07(l) Forged and Void Deeds. [Go To Main]

Add:

Hixon v. Anderson, 317 B.R. 771 (8th Cir. 2004) (deed was forged and ineffective to convey a property interest).

Campbell v. Campbell, 854 N.Y.S.2d 543 (2008) (action to annul conveyance because of confidential relationship between the parties and undue influence).

Add:

Buckley v. Ritchie Knop, Inc., 838 N.Y.S.2d 84 (2007) (action to cancel deed because of fraud in the execution).

Add:

Peggy Rose Revocable Trust v. Eppich, 640 N.W.2d 601 (Minn. 2002) (18-month limit on exercise of arbitration right was not reasonable in view of buyers' claim of fraud); The Florida Bar v. Baker, 810 So. 2d 876 (Fla. 2002) (wife's name forged on real estate sale documents); Prudential Farms of Nassau County v. Morris, 729 N.Y.S.2d 156 (2001) (conveyance of husband's interest in marital residence to wife without consideration was fraudulent); Ford v. Martino, 722 N.Y.S.2d 574 (2001) (transaction made with actual intent to defraud).

§ 94.07(n) Identification of New Owners (Grantees). [Go To Main]

Add:

Preshaz v. Przyziazniuk, 858 N.Y.S.2d 290 (2008) (action to cancel a deed based on grantor's lack of capacity and on the procurement of the conveyance through undue influence).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 94 CONVEYANCING PROCEDURES

11-94 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 94.09

Supp. to § 94.09 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Add to Books:

Lefcoe, George. Real Estate Transactions, Finance and Development (6th ed. 2009).

Add to Articles:

Dawson, Janet Kennedy. "The Role of Laypersons in the Closing of Residential Real Estate Transactions: North Carolina's New Approach," 7 N.C. Banking Inst. 277 (April 2003).

Gravina, Peter J. "The Real Estate Attorney in a Residential Closing." 78 Fla. B. J. 8 (Apr. 2004).

Marsh, Tanya D. and Robert G. Solloway. "Let the Seller Beware: The Slow Demise of Caveat Emptor in Real Property Transactions and Other Recent Developments in Indiana Real Property Law," 38 Ind. L. Rev. 1317 (2005).

Stern, Stephanie. "Temporal Dynamics of Disclosure: The Example of Residential Real Estate Conveyancing," 2005 Utah L. Rev. 57.

Szypszak, Charles. "Public Registries and Private Solutions: An Evolving American Real Estate Conveyance Regime." 24 Whittier L Rev. 663 (Spring 2003).

Walker, Melissa K. "Sharing Their Piece of the Real Estate Pie: An Analysis of the Necessity of Lawyers at Residential Real Estate Closings in the Context of the Adoption of Recent Opinions of the North Carolina State Bar." 26 Campbell L. Rev. 59 (Spring 2004).

Add to Annotations

Annotation, "Effect of unauthorized delivery or fraudulent procurement of escrow on title or interest in property," 54 A.L.R. 1246 .

Annotation, "Duty and liability of escrow holder as affected by time of performance of, or offer to perform, conditions upon which delivery was to be made by him," 107 A.L.R. 948 .

Annotation, "Measure of recovery by vendee under executory contract for purchase of real property where a vendor is unable or refuses to convey," 68 A.L.R. 137 .

Annotation, "Relation back of title or interest embraced in escrow instrument upon final delivery or performance of condition," 117 A.L.R. 69 .

Annotation, " 'Rights and remedies where depositary fails or refuses to deliver instrument or property placed in escrow, notwithstanding performance of conditions of delivery," 95 A.L.R. 293 .

Annotation, "Venue of action to set aside as fraudulent conveyance of real property," 37 A.L.R.2d 568.

Annotation, "Who must bear loss resulting from defaults or peculations of escrow holder," 15 A.L.R.2d 870.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 95.syn

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.syn Synopsis to Chapter 95: REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

§ 95.01 Introduction.

§ 95.02 History of Real Estate Brokerage in the United States.

§ 95.03 Statutes and Regulations Affecting Brokers.

§ 95.03(a) Real Estate Broker Licensing Provisions from a Representative Sample of States.

§ 95.03(a)(1) Who Must and May Be Licensed.

§ 95.03(a)(2) Qualifications for Licensing.

§ 95.03(a)(3) Conduct Affecting License.

§ 95.03(b) Common Issues Under State Licensing Statutes.

§ 95.04 Fiduciary and Other Duties of Brokers.

§ 95.05 Listing Agreements and Commissions.

§ 95.05(a) Listing Agreements.

§ 95.05(b) Commissions.

§ 95.06 Restrictions on Brokers' Activities.

§ 95.06(a) Unauthorized Practice of Law.

§ 95.06(b) Antitrust Violations.

§ 95.06(c) Civil Rights Violations.

§ 95.07 Practical Aspects of Real Estate Brokers' Activities.

§ 95.07(a) Selecting a Broker.

§ 95.07(a)(1) Should Home Sellers Use Brokers?

§ 95.07(a)(2) How Brokers Work.

§ 95.07(a)(3) Finding a Broker.

§ 95.07(a)(4) Should Homebuyers Use Their Own Brokers?

§ 95.07(a)(5) Broker Licensing Requirements.

§ 95.07(b) Listing Agreement: Is a Writing Required?

§ 95.07(b)(1) An Even Split.

§ 95.07(b)(2) Which Group of States Is Correct?

§ 95.07(b)(3) Exceptions to the Writing Requirement.

§ 95.07(b)(3)(i) Finders.

§ 95.07(b)(3)(ii) Equitable Estoppel.

§ 95.07(b)(3)(iii) Fraud.

§ 95.07(b)(4) Seller's Broker May Recover Against Buyer for Unlawful Interference--Even Without a Written Listing Agreement.

§ 95.07(c) Negotiating the Listing Agreement.

§ 95.07(c)(1) Types of Listings: Open Listing, Exclusive Agency, Exclusive Right to Sell.

§ 95.07(c)(2) Amount of Commission.

§ 95.07(c)(3) Length or Term of Listing.

§ 95.07(c)(4) Cancellable Listings.

§ 95.07(c)(5) Defining the Scope of the Broker's Marketing Efforts.

§ 95.07(d) When Do Brokers Earn Their Commissions?

§ 95.07(d)(1) Traditional Rule: Once a "Ready, Willing and Able" Buyer Has Been Produced.

§ 95.07(d)(2) Emerging Rule: No Commission Unless the Deal Closes.

§ 95.07(d)(3) In All States, the Seller Owes the Broker a Commission for "Willful" Breach, But What Is "Willful" May Not Always Be Obvious.

§ 95.07(d)(4) California Lets Sellers Off the Hook for Brokerage Commissions When Deals Are Subject to Conditions That Aren't Met.

§ 95.07(d)(5) Sellers Can Protect Themselves By Contracting That They Won't Be Liable for a Commission Unless the Deal Closes.

§ 95.07(d)(6) Time for Payment Does Not Determine When Right to Payment Has Been Earned.

§ 95.07(e) The Broker's Listing Agreement Provisions to Deter Seller Fraud.

§ 95.07(e)(1) Why Brokers Worry About Sellers Trying to Beat Them Out of Their Commissions.

§ 95.07(e)(2) Extension Clauses as a Way of Discouraging Sellers from Defeating a Broker's Claim to a Commission.

§ 95.07(e)(3) Limits on Seller's Right to Revoke Listing Agreement.

§ 95.07(e)(4) Limitations on Seller's Right to Withdraw Property from Sale.

§ 95.07(e)(5) Are Sellers Obliged to Sell?

§ 95.07(f) Agency Relationships Created by the Listing Agreement.

§ 95.07(f)(1) The Listing Broker Is the Seller's Agent.

§ 95.07(f)(2) Is the Selling Broker the Buyer's Agent or the Seller's Subagent?

§ 95.07(f)(3) In Some States a Broker May Be Agent to Both Buyer and Seller: The Dual Agency.

§ 95.07(f)(4) California's Statutory Approach to Regulating the Broker's Agency Relationship.

§ 95.07(f)(5) The Distinction Between Fiduciary and Negligence-Based Obligations.

§ 95.07(f)(6) The Emergence of the Transaction Broker.

§ 95.07(g) The Listing Broker's Implied Obligations to the Seller.

§ 95.07(g)(1) What A Broker Buying Property from Seller Must Disclose.

§ 95.07(g)(2) The Limits of the Broker's Obligations in Handling Price Negotiations.

§ 95.07(g)(3) The Broker's Duty to Verify Buyer's Creditworthiness.

§ 95.07(h) The Listing Broker's Obligation to Disclose to the Buyer the Condition of the Premises.

§ 95.07(h)(1) Generally.

§ 95.07(h)(2) Real Estate Agents' Disclosure Duties with Respect to Lead-Based Paint Hazards.

§ 95.07(h)(2)(i) Sellers' and Lessors' Disclosure Duties with Respect to Lead-Base Paint Hazards.

§ 95.07(h)(2)(ii) Brokers' Duties to Inform and Ensure Disclosure By Sellers and Lessors.

§ 95.07(i) Sellers May (or May Not) Be Held Responsible for the Misrepresentations of Their Agents.

§ 95.07(j) The Broker's Duty to Third Parties.

§ 95.07(k) Brokers and the Anti-Discrimination Laws.

95.07(k)(1) The Applicable Statutes.

§ 95.07(k)(1)(i) The Federal Fair Housing Act Amendments.

§ 95.07(k)(1)(ii) State Statutes.

§ 95.07(k)(1)(iii) Invidious Discrimination Categories.

§ 95.07(k)(1)(iv) Permissible Discrimination Categories.

§ 95.07(k)(2) Types of Violations.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(i) Advertising.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(ii) Steering and Showings.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(iii) Shielding Sellers Who Discriminate.

§ 95.07(k)(3) Seller Liability for Broker's Acts.

§ 95.07(k)(4) Damages for Violating Anti-Discrimination Laws Can Be Sizable.

§ 95.08 Bibliography.

Professor David A. Thomas n*
J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Professor George Lefcoe n
The Law Center
University of Southern California

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote *.
§§ 95.01 - 95.06

(n2)Footnote **.
§§ 95.07 - 95.09

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.01

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.01 Introduction.

This chapter will provide an overview of the role played by brokers in real estate transactions. While no real estate transaction is dependent upon the participation of a broker as a condition of its legal validity, brokers are enormously important in the function of the real estate market and transactional processes generally. And even though their role is extra-legal with respect to the validity of the transaction itself, legal relationships, rights and liabilities abound in connection with the work of brokers. These will be explored in this chapter. n1

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 1. The role of the broker in real estate transactions is explored further in Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice (Matthew Bender).

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.02

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.02 History of Real Estate Brokerage in the United States.

The emergence of persons who specialized in creating and conducting real estate transactions was a phenomenon of the second half of the 19th century, mostly as a result of massive disposals of public lands. These disposals generated enormous numbers of real estate transactions, prompted mostly by sales of railroad lands and by efforts of land speculators, who obtained large holdings out of the public domain. Colonization of the western half of the country was promoted by, among other things, railroads, whose huge landholdings could be turned into cash which could, in turn, sustain railroad development and bring in new settlers who would be railroad customers. Also, as lands in the public domain were made available for individual settlers, frequently land speculators took up large tracts for later re-sale. In these and other similar settings, the actual promotion and closing of real estate sales was conducted by land agents who had no professional training and achieved their ends with a variety of methods.

While individual real estate specialists were beginning to function during the last half of the 19th century, their organization into business entities--the real estate firms--came about even later, probably early in the 20th century. Today, there are over one million licensed real estate agents, who generate fees and commissions about equal to the total amount of attorney fees generated in the United States each year. Over 100,000 real estate brokerage firms function in the United States today; most of them are single office firms, but a growing minority consists of franchise firms and local offices of large corporations. Many real estate brokers are members of national and state trade associations, and many firms engage in a form of cooperative enterprise known as a multiple listing service.

Multiple listing services [M.L.S.] grew out of local exchanges between real estate firms in the 1920s. The modern multiple listing service has been succinctly described as follows:

> The M.L.S. collects, publishes, and distributes listings; after the transaction is closed, it sends sales price information to its members. To initiate these listings, the M.L.S. generally prescribes the use of a data sheet on the listing which the listing agent can submit along with his or her own listing contract. M.L.S. rules generally require that this sheet be completely filled out.
>
> The completed sheet includes a description of the property and the division of fees proposed for the brokers cooperating on the sale... . The M.L.S., operating as a part of the local brokers' organization or as > a subsidiary corporation [as distinguished from the approximately 40% of M.L.S. that are independent entities], transfers these data to a master list, arranged by neighborhood or street number. The real estate is included in this list of properties on the market until the listing expires or the property is sold. These periodically published lists are in loose-leaf form or in a book, with supplementary sheets published weekly. Some M.L.S.s have computer terminals in member brokers' offices to update their publications.

>
> After the property is sold, M.L.S. regulations usually require that the selling broker notify the M.L.S. of the transaction and the sales price, which is compiled along with similar properties by neighborhood or street and used to appraise or determine the value of "comparable" properties coming onto the market in the future. n2

In addition to M.L.S. arrangements, which are a sort of institutionalized form of cooperative brokering, brokers often enter into other, more ad hoc forms of cooperative brokerage agreements. These arrangements, which are sometimes rather informal, essentially acknowledge that the cooperating brokers are working together to complete a sale of certain property, and they have agreed upon a certain division of the brokerage fee. Cooperative brokers can be characterized as principal and agent, but they are more often viewed as joint venturers.

Another variant of brokerage activity arises when brokers work so closely with real estate developers, investors, financiers, and builders that they are considered joint venturers with these other parties in real estate developments. Such arrangements can expose the brokerage to the full range of liabilities arising out of such business ventures. n3

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 2. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers 1:12 to 1:14 (2d ed. 1992). See also Penne v. Greater Minneapolis Bd. of Realtors, 604 F.2d 1143 (8th Cir. 1979); Note, Arbitrary Exclusion from Multiple Listings: Common Law and Statutory Remedies, 52 Cornell L.Q. 570 (1967). Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman, Real Estate Brokers: Shouldering New Burdens, 11 Prob. & Prop. 14 (May/June, 1997); Annotation, Activities of Real-Estate Agent Or Association As Subject To Federal Antitrust Laws, 44 A.L.R. Fed. 743; Annotation, Application of State Antitrust Laws To Activities Or Practices Of Real-Estate Agents or Associations, 22 A.L.R. 4th 103; Annotation, Validity, Construction, And Effect of Real-Estate Brokers' Multiple-Listing Agreement, 45 A.L.R. 3d 190; Marjorie Ramseyer, Reinsurance And Coinsurance, 416 PLI/Real 415 (Nov. 1996) (exemption for a payment pursuant to cooperative brokerage).

(n2)Footnote 3. See, e.g., Modern Air Conditioning Inc. v. Cinderella Homes, Inc., 596 P.2d 816 (Kan. 1979). See, e.g., Steven A. Loewy, Federal Regulation of Real Estate Brokers, 4 Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. L. of the A.B.A. 29 (Dec. 1990) (discussing areas under federal law where real estate brokers have been held liable);, Imposing Tort Liability on Real Estate Brokers Selling Defective Housing, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 1861 (1986) (discussing tort liability of brokers "for failing to inform buyers about defects that could injure persons or property or about other factors materially affecting the value of property"); Guy P. Wolf and Marianne M. Jennings, Seller/Broker Liability in Multiple Listing Service Real Estate Sales: A Case for Uniform Disclosure, 20 Real Est. L.J. 22-53 (1991). But see Woodhouse v. Re/Max Northwest Realtors, 878 P.2d 464 (Wash. App. 1994) (holding that although a broker is responsible for any subordinate salesperson, the customer does not have a private cause of action against the broker).

Thomas v. Gray Lumber Co., 486 S.E.2d 142 (W. Va. 1997) (summary judgment reversed and case remanded to find whether vendor/broker was in better position to detect defects in workmanship than ordinary purchaser, and whether it was involved in joint venture with construction company which built home); Eads v. Kinstler Agency, Inc., 929 S.W.2d 289 (Mo. App. 1996) (the court held that: (1) the real estate agent's status at time of the injured's car accident was that of independent contractor, and (2) agent and agency were not engaged in joint adventure). But see Gennari v. Weichert Co. Realtors, 691 A.2d 350 (N.J. 1997) (home buyers could not recover in negligence from brokerage firm that marketed builder's shoddy and defective construction, absent expert testimony to establish standard of care in real estate industry); Gennari v. Weichert Co. Realtors, 672 A.2d 1190 (N.J. Super. A.D. 1996).

Marjorie Ramseyer Bardwell, Reinsurance and Coinsurance, 416 PLI/Real 415 (Nov. 1996); Annotation, Construction of Agreement Between Real-Estate Agents to Share Commissions, 71 A.L.R.3d 586.

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.03

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.03 Statutes and Regulations Affecting Brokers.

[Go To Supp]

All states and the District of Columbia statutorily regulate the conduct of real estate brokers by a variety of licensure provisions. In this section the statutory real estate broker licensing provisions from several states are presented as they relate to several standard issues. n4 Also, other issues arising from state regulation of real estate brokers are discussed.

§ 95.03(a) Real Estate Broker Licensing Provisions from a Representative Sample of States.

§ 95.03(a)(1) Who Must and May Be Licensed.

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10131, 10131.1, 10131.2, 10131.3

§ 10131. "Real estate broker."

A real estate broker within the meaning of this part is a person who, for a compensation or in expectation of a compensation, regardless of the form or time of payment, does or negotiates to do one or more of the following acts for another or others:

(a) Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, solicits prospective sellers or purchasers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase, sale or exchange of real property or a business opportunity.

(b) Leases or rents or offers to lease or rent, or places for rent, or solicits listing of places for rent, or solicits for prospective tenants, or negotiates the sale, purchase or exchanges of leases on real property, or on a business opportunity, or collects rents from real property, or improvements thereon, or from business opportunities.

(c) Assists or offers to assist in filing an application for the purchase or lease of, or in locating or entering upon, lands owned by the state or federal government.

(d) Solicits borrowers or lenders for or negotiates loans or collects payments or performs services for borrowers or lenders or note owners in connection with loans secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property or on a business opportunity.

(e) Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, or exchanges or offers to exchange a real property sales contract or a promissory note secured directly or collaterally by a lien on real property or on a business opportunity, and performs services for the holders thereof.

§ 10131.1. Inclusion of person transacting business respecting real property sales contracts or promissory notes.

A real estate broker within the meaning of this part is also a person who engages as a principal in the business of buying from, selling to, or exchanging with the public, real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property, or who makes agreements with the public for the collection of payments or for the performance of services in connection with real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by lines on real property.

As used in this section, "in the business" means any of the following:

(a) The acquisition for resale to the public, and not as an investment, of eight or more real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property during a calendar year.

(b) The sale to or exchange with the public of eight or more real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property during a calendar year. However, no transaction negotiated through a real estate licensee shall be considered in determining whether a person is a real estate broker within the meaning of this section.

As used in this section, "sale," "resale," and "exchange" include every disposition of any interest in a real property sales contract or promissory note secured directly or collaterally by a lien on real property, except the original issuance of a promissory note by a borrower or a real property sales contract by a vendor, either of which is to be secured directly by a lien on real property owned by the borrower or vendor.

§ 10131.2. Inclusion of persons dealing with advance fees for transfer of real property.

A real estate broker within the meaning of this part is also a person who engages in the business of claiming, demanding, charging, receiving, collecting or contracting for the collection of an advance fee in connection with any employment undertaken to promote the sale or lease of real property or of a business opportunity by advance fee listing, advertisement or other offering to sell, lease, exchange or rent property or a business opportunity, or to obtain a loan or loans thereon.

§ 10131.3. Inclusion of person engaged in real estate syndicate security transactions: Excluded Corporate Securities Law licensees.

A real estate broker within the meaning of this part is also a person who, for another or others, for compensation or in expectation of compensation, issues or sells, solicits prospective sellers or purchasers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase, sale, or exchange of securities as specified in Section 25206 of the Corporations Code.

The provisions of this section do not apply to a broker-dealer or agent of a broker-dealer licensed by the Commissioner of Corporations under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Law of 1968.

Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.01

§ 475.01. Definitions.

(1) As used in this part:

(a) "Broker" means a person who, for another, and for a compensation or valuable consideration directly or indirectly paid or promised, expressly or impliedly, or with an intent to collect or receive a compensation or valuable consideration therefor, appraises, auctions, sells, exchanges, buys, rents, or offers, attempts or agrees to appraise, auction or negotiate the sale, exchange, purchase, or rental of business enterprises or business opportunities or any real property or any interest in or concerning the same, including mineral rights or leases, or who advertises or holds out to the public by any oral or printed solicitation or representation that he is engaged in the business of appraising, auctioning, buying, selling, exchanging, leasing, or renting business enterprises or business opportunities or real property of others or interests therein, including mineral rights, or who takes any part in the procuring of sellers, purchasers, lessors, or lessees of business enterprises or business opportunities or the real property of another, or leases, or interest therein, including rights, or who directs or assists in the procuring of prospects or in the negotiation or closing of any transaction which does, or is calculated to, result in a sale, exchange, or leasing thereof, and who receives, expects, or is promised any compensation or valuable consideration, directly or indirectly therefor; and all persons who advertise rental property information or lists. A broker renders a professional service and is a professional within the meaning of 95.11(4)(a). Where the term "appraise" or "appraising" appears in the definition of the term "broker," it specifically excludes those appraisal services which must be performed only by a state-licensed or state-certified appraiser, and those appraisal services which may be performed by a registered appraiser as defined in Part II. The term "broker" also includes any person who is a general partner, officer, or director of a partnership or corporation which acts as a broker. The term "broker" also includes any person or entity who undertakes to list or sell one or more time-share periods per year in one or more time-share plans on behalf of any number of persons, except as provided in 475.011 and 721.20.

Mass. Gen. L. ch. 112, § 87PP

§ 87PP. Definitions

"Real estate broker," hereinafter referred to as broker, any person who for another person and for a fee, commission or other valuable consideration, or with the intention or in the expectation or upon the promise of receiving or collecting a fee, commission or other valuable consideration, does any of the following: --sells, exchanges, purchases, rents or leases, or negotiates, or offers, attempts or agrees to negotiate the sale, exchange, purchase, rental or leasing of any real estate, or lists or offers, attempts or agrees to list any real estate, or buys or offers to buy, sells or offers to sell or otherwise deals in options on real estate, or advertises or holds himself out as engaged in the business of selling, exchanging, purchasing, renting or leasing real estate, or assists or directs in the procuring of prospects or the negotiation or completion of any agreement or transaction which results or is intended to result in the sale, exchange, purchase, leasing or renting of any real estate.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 339.010

§ 339.010. Definitions -- applicability of chapter.

1. A "real estate broker" is any person, copartnership, association or corporation, foreign or domestic who, for another, and for a compensation or valuable consideration, as a whole or partial vocation does, or attempts to do, any or all of the following:

(1) Sells, exchanges, purchases, rents, or leases real estate;

(2) Offers to sell, exchange, purchase, rent or lease real estate;

(3) Negotiates or offers or agrees to negotiate the sale, exchange, purchase, rental or leasing of real estate;

(4) Lists or offers or agrees to negotiate the sale, exchange, purchase, rental or leasing of real estate.

(5) Buys, sells, offers to buy or sell or otherwise deals in options on real estate or improvements thereon;

(6) Advertises or holds himself out as a licensed real estate broker while engaged in the business of buying, selling, exchanging, renting, or leasing real estate;

(7) Assists or directs in the procuring of prospects, calculated to result in the sale, exchange, leasing or rental of real estate;

(8) Assists or directs in the negotiation of any transaction calculated or intended to result in the sale, exchange, leasing or rental of real estate;

(9) Engages in the business of charging an advance fee in connection with any contract whereby he undertakes to promote the sale of real estate through its listing in a publication issued for such purpose intended to be circulated to the general public.

(10) Performs any of the foregoing acts as an employee of, or on behalf of, the owner of real estate, or interest therein, or improvements affixed thereon, for compensation.

§ 95.03(a)(2) Qualifications for Licensing.

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10150.6, 10153, 10153.2, 10153.3

§ 10150.6. Conditions precedent to issuance of original real estate broker's license.

The Real Estate Commissioner shall not grant an original real estate broker's license to any person who has not held a real estate salesman's license for at least two years and qualified for renewal real estate salesman status, within the five-year period immediately prior to the date of his application for the broker's license, and during such time was not actively engaged in the business of real estate salesman, except that an applicant for a real estate broker's license having at least the equivalent of two years' general real estate experience or graduation from a four-year college or university course, which course included specialization in real estate, files a written petition with the Department of Real Estate setting forth his qualifications and experience, and the commissioner approves, he may be issued a real estate broker's license immediately upon passing the examination and satisfying the other requirements of this article.

§ 10153. Ascertainment of qualification by written examination.

In addition to the proof of honesty and truthfulness required of any applicant for a real estate license, the commissioner shall ascertain by written examination that the applicant, and in case of a corporation applicant for a real estate broker's license that each officer, or agent thereof through whom it proposes to act as a real estate licensee, has all of the following:

(a) An appropriate knowledge of the English language, including reading, writing, and spelling and of arithmetical computations common to real estate and business opportunity practices.

(b) An understanding of the principles of real estate and business opportunity conveyancing, the general purposes and general legal effect of agency contracts, deposit receipts, deeds, mortgages, deeds of trust, chattel mortgages, bills of sale, land contracts of sale and leases, and of the principles of business and land economics and appraisals.

(c) A general and fair understanding of the obligations between principal and agent, of the principles of real estate and business opportunity practice and the canons of business ethics pertaining thereto, of the provisions of this part, of Chapter 1 (commencing with Section 11000) of Part 2, and of the regulations of the Real Estate Commissioner as contained in Title 10 of the California Administrative Code.

§ 10153.2. Education requirements.

(a) An applicant to take the examination for an original real estate broker license shall also submit evidence, satisfactory to the commissioner, of successful completion, at an accredited institution, of:

(1) A three-semester unit course, or the quarter equivalent thereof, in each of the following:

(A) Real estate practice.

(B) Legal aspects of real estate.

(C) Real estate appraisal.

(D) Real estate financing.

(E) Real estate economics or accounting.

(2) A three-semester unit course, or the quarter equivalent thereof, in any of the following:

(A) Advanced legal aspects of real estate.

(B) Advanced real estate finance.

(C) Advanced real estate appraisal.

(D) Business law.

(E) Escrows.

(F) Real estate principles.

(G) Property management.

(H) Real estate office administration.

(3) On and after January 1, 1986, an applicant shall submit evidence of successful completion of each of the courses listed in paragraph (1) and any three of the courses listed in paragraph (2).

(b) The commissioner shall waive the requirements of this section for an applicant who is a member of the State Bar of California and shall waive the requirements of this section for an applicant who is a member of the State Bar of California and shall waive the requirements for which an applicant has successfully completed an equivalent course of study as determined under Section 10153.5.

(c) The commissioner shall extend credit under this section for any course completed to satisfy requirements of Section 10153.3 or 10153.4.

§ 10153.3. Completion of course in real estate principles by applicant for salesperson license; Waiver.

In order to take an examination for a real estate salesperson license after January 1, 1986, an applicant shall submit evidence, satisfactory to the commissioner, of successful completion, at an accredited institution, of a three-semester unit course, or the quarter equivalent thereof, in real estate principles.

The commissioner shall waive the requirements of this section for an applicant who is a member of the State Bar of California, or who has completed an equivalent course of study, as determined under Section 10153.5, or who has qualified to take the examination for an original real estate broker license by satisfying the requirements of Section 10153.2.

Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.17

§ 475.17. Qualifications for practice.

(1)

(a) An applicant for licensure who is a natural person must be at least 18 years of age; hold a high school diploma or its equivalent; be honest, truthful, trustworthy, and of good character; and have a good reputation for fair dealing. An applicant for an active broker's license or a salesman's license must be competent and qualified to make real estate transactions and conduct negotiations therefor with safety to investors and to those with whom he may undertake a relationship of trust and confidence. If the applicant has been denied registration or a license or has been disbarred, or his registration or license to practice of conduct any regulated profession, business, or vocation has been revoked or suspended, by this or any other state, any nation, or any possession or district of the United States, or any court or lawful agency thereof, because of any conduct or practices which would have warranted a like result under this chapter, or if the applicant has been guilty of conduct or practices in this state or elsewhere which would have been grounds for revoking or suspending his license under this chapter had the applicant then been registered, the applicant shall be deemed not to be qualified unless, because of lapse of time and subsequent good conduct and reputation, or other reason deemed sufficient, it appears to the commission that the interest of the public and investors will not likely be endangered by the granting of registration.

(b) An application may be disapproved if the applicant has acted or attempted to act, or has held himself out as entitled to act, during the period of 1 year next prior to the filing of the application, as a real estate broker or salesman in the state in violation of this chapter. This paragraph may be deemed to bar any person from licensure who has performed any of the acts or services described in s. 475.01(3), unless exempt pursuant to s. 475.011, during a period of 1 year next preceding the filing of the application, or during the pendency of the application, and until a valid current license has been duly issued to him, regardless of whether the performance of the act or service was done for compensation or valuable consideration.

(2)

(a) In addition to other requirements under this part, the commission may require the satisfactory completion of one or more of the educational courses or equivalent courses conducted, offered, sponsored, prescribed, or approved pursuant to § 475.04, taken at an accredited college, university, or community college, at an area technical center, or at a registered real estate school, as a condition precedent for any person to become licensed or to renew her or his license as a broker, broker-salesperson, or salesperson. The course or courses required for one to become initially licensed shall not exceed a total of 63 classroom hours of 50 minutes each, inclusive of examination, for a salesperson and 72 classroom hours of 50 minutes each, inclusive of examination, for a broker. The satisfactory completion of an examination administered by the accredited college, university, or community college, by the area technical center, or by the registered real estate school shall be the basis for determining satisfactory completion of the course. However, notice of satisfactory completion shall not be issued if the student has absences in excess of 8 classroom hours. Such required course or courses must be made available by correspondence or other suitable means to any person who, by reason of hardship, as defined by rule, cannot attend the place or places where the course is regularly conducted.

(b) A person may not be licensed as a real estate broker unless, in addition to the other requirements of law, the person has held:

1. An active real estate salesperson's license for at least 12 months during the preceding 5 years in the office of one or more real estate brokers licensed in this state or any other state, territory, or jurisdiction of the United States or in any foreign national jurisdiction;

2. A current and valid real estate salesperson's license for at least 12 months during the preceding 5 years in the employ of a governmental agency for a salary and performing the duties authorized in this part for real estate licensees; or

3. A current and valid real estate broker's license for at least 12 months during the preceding 5 years in any other state, territory, or jurisdiction of the United States or in any foreign national jurisdiction. This paragraph does not apply to a person employed as a real estate investigator by the Division of Real Estate, provided the person has been employed as a real estate investigator for at least 24 months. The person must be currently employed as a real estate investigator to sit for the real estate broker's examination and have held a valid and current salesperson's license for at least 12 months.

(c) A person who has been licensed as a real estate salesperson in Florida during the preceding 5 years may not be licensed as a real estate broker unless, in addition to the other requirements of law, she or he has completed the salesperson postlicensure educational requirements, if these requirements have been prescribed by the commission pursuant to paragraph (3)(a).

(3)

(a) The commission may prescribe a postlicensure education requirement in order for a person to maintain a valid salesman's license, which shall not exceed 45 classroom hours of 50 minutes each, inclusive of examination, prior to the first renewal following initial licensure. If prescribed, this shall consist of one or more commission-approved courses which total at least 45 classroom hours on one or more subjects which include, but are not limited to, property management, appraisal, real estate finance, or the economics of real estate management. Required postlicensure courses must be taken at an accredited college, university, community college, area vocational-technical center, or at a registered real estate school or given by a commission-approved sponsor.

(b) Satisfactory completion of the postlicensure requirement is demonstrated by successfully meeting all standards established for the commission-prescribed or commission-approved institution, or school. However, notice of satisfactory completion shall not be issued if the student has absences in excess of 10 percent of the required classroom hours.

(c) The license of any salesman who does not complete the postlicensure education requirement prior to the first renewal following initial licensure shall be considered null and void. Such person wishing to again operate as a real estate salesman must requalify by satisfactorily completing the salesman's prelicensure course and passing the state examination for licensure as a salesman.

(d) A salesman who is required to complete any postlicensure education requirement must complete any postlicensure education requirement in order to be eligible for licensure as a broker.

(4)

(a) The commission may prescribe a postlicensure education requirement in order for a person to maintain a valid broker's license, which shall not exceed 60 classroom hours of 50 minutes each, inclusive of examination, prior to the first renewal following initial licensure. If prescribed, this shall consist of one or more commission-approved courses which total at least 60 classroom hours on one or more subjects which include, but are not limited to, advanced appraisal, advanced property management, real estate marketing, business law, advanced real estate investment analyses, advanced legal aspects, general accounting, real estate economics, syndications, commercial brokerage, feasibility analyses, advanced real estate finance, residential brokerage, or real estate brokerage office operation. Required postlicensure courses must be taken at an accredited college, university, community college, area vocational-technical center, or at a registered real estate school, or be given by a commission-approved sponsor.

(b) Satisfactory completion of the postlicensure requirement is demonstrated by successfully meeting all standards established for the commission /- presatisfactory completion shall not be issued if the student has absences in excess of 10 percent of the required classroom hours.

(c) The license of any broker who does not complete the postlicensure education requirement prior to the first renewal following initial licensure shall be considered null and void. If the licensee wishes to operate as a salesman, he may be issued a salesman's license after providing proof that he has satisfactorily completed the 14-hour continuing education course within the 6 months following expiration of his broker's license. To operate as a broker, he must requalify by satisfactorily completing the broker's prelicensure course and passing the state examination for licensure as a broker.

(5)

(a) The commission may allow an additional 6-month period after the first renewal following initial licensure for completing the postlicensure education courses for salesmen and brokers who cannot, due to individual physical hardship, as defined by rule, complete the courses within the required time.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (4), salesmen and brokers are not required to meet the 14-hour continuing education requirement prior to the first renewal following initial licensure.

(c) The commission shall provide for postlicensure education courses to be made available by correspondence or other suitable means to any person who, by reason of hardship, as defined by rule, cannot attend the place or places where courses are regularly conducted.

(6) The postlicensure education requirements of this section, and the education course requirements for one to become initially licensed, do not apply to any applicant or licensee who has received a 4-year degree in real estate from an accredited institution of higher education.

Mass. Gen. L. ch. 112, § 87SS

§ 87SS. Applicants for license; requisites; attorney at law; examinations; rules and regulations.

No license to engage as a broker or salesman shall be issued to any applicant unless he has complied with all the pertinent provisions of this section and sections eighty-seven TT to eighty-seven DDD, inclusive, and if the applicant is an individual, unless he shall have satisfactorily passed a written examination conducted by the board or an independent testing service designated by the board, and, in the case of an application for a broker's license by an individual resident of the commonwealth, unless he shall have had his principal place of abode within the commonwealth for one year next prior to the issuance of such license; provided, however, that any applicant who is an attorney at law of the commonwealth shall not be required to take such examination or to have had such principal place of abode for such period.

Every individual applicant for a license as a salesman who is required to take an examination therefor shall, as a prerequisite to taking such examination, submit proof satisfactory to the board that he has completed courses in real estate subjects approved by the board, such courses to total twenty-four classroom hours of instruction; provided, however, that applicants having successfully completed a course in real property while enrolled in an accredited law school in the commonwealth may also take such examination. Every individual applicant for a license as a broker who is required to take an examination therefor shall, as a prerequisite to taking such examination, submit proof satisfactory to the board that he has been actively associated with a real estate broker for a period of one year as a real estate salesman and that he has completed additional courses in real estate subjects approved by the board, such courses to total thirty classroom hours of instruction.

Such examination shall be prepared by the board or the designated independent testing service to enable the board to determine the competence of the applicant to transact the business of a broker or a salesman. The board or its designated independent testing service shall conduct such examinations at least six times in each calendar year for salesman's examinations. There shall be no limit placed on the number of applicants who may take the examinations on any examination date. In determining competence the board shall require proof that the applicant has a fair understanding of the principles of real estate practice, real estate agreements and principal and agent relations, of the rudimentary provisions of sections eighty-seven PP to eighty-seven DDD, inclusive. The examination for a salesman's license shall be based upon the same general subject matter as for a broker's license, but shall be more elementary in character.

The board may make, and from time to time alter, amend or repeal rules and regulations for the conduct of such examinations not inconsistent herewith.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 339.040

§ 339.040. Licenses granted to whom -- examination -- qualifications -- fee -- temporary broker's license, when -- renewal, requirements.

1. Licenses shall be granted only to persons who present, and corporations, associations or partnerships whose officers, associates, or partners present, satisfactory proof to the commission that they:

(1) Are persons of good moral character; and

(2) Bear a good reputation for honesty, integrity, and fair dealing; and

(3) Are competent to transact the business of a broker or salesperson in such a manner as to safeguard the interest of the public.

2. In order to determine an applicant's qualifications to receive a license under this chapter, the commission shall hold oral or written examinations at such times and places as the commission may determine.

3. Each applicant for a broker or salesperson license shall be at least eighteen years of age and shall pay the broker examination fee or the salesperson examination fee.

4. Each applicant for a broker license shall be required to have satisfactorily completed the salesperson license examinations prescribed by the commission. For the purposes of this section only, the commission may permit a person who is not associated with a licensed broker to take the salesperson examination.

5. Each application for a broker license shall include a certificate from the applicant's broker or brokers that the applicant has been actively engaged in the real estate business as a licensed salesperson for at least one year immediately preceding the date of application, or in lieu thereof, shall include a certificate from a school accredited by the commission under the provisions of section 229.045 that the applicant has, within six months prior to the date of application, successfully completed the prescribed broker curriculum or broker correspondence course offered by such school. Provided, however, that the commission may waive all or part of the educational requirements set forth above when an applicant presents proof of other educational background or experience acceptable to the commission.

6. Each application for a salesperson license shall include a certificate from a school accredited by the commission under the provisions of section 339.045 that the applicant has within six months prior to the date of application, successfully completed the prescribed broker curriculum or broker correspondence course offered by such school. Provided, however, that the commission may waive all or part of the educational requirements set forth above when an applicant presents proof of other educational background or experience acceptable to the commission.

7. The commission shall require every active broker, salesperson, officer or partner to present upon license renewal evidence that during the two years preceding he has completed twelve hours of real estate instruction in courses approved by the commission. The commission may, by rule and regulation, provide for individual waiver of this requirement.

8. Each entity that provides continuing education required under the provisions of subsection 7 of this section may make available videotapes and audiotapes of instruction courses that the entity conducts. The commission shall by rule set standards for the production of such taped courses, which may include the requirement that individuals purchasing such tapes also purchase an accompanying written study document. The commission shall authorize individuals required to complete instruction under the provisions of this subsection to fulfill such continuing education requirements by utilizing such videotape and audiotape courses. The commission may by regulation require the individual completing such videotape or audiotape course to complete an examination on the contents of the course. Such examination shall be designed to ensure that the licensee displays adequate knowledge of the subject matter of the course, and shall be designed by the entity producing the taped course and approved by the commission.

9. In the event of the death or incapacity of a licensed broker, or of one or more of the licensed partners or officers of a real estate partnership or corporation whereby the affairs of the broker, partnership, or corporation cannot be carried on, the commission may issue, without examination or fee, to the legal representative or representatives of the deceased or incapacitated individual, or to another individual approved by the commission, a temporary broker license which shall authorize such individual to continue for a period to be designated by the commission to transact business for the sole purpose of winding up the affairs of the broker, partnership or corporation under the supervision of the commission.

§ 95.03(a)(3) Conduct Affecting License.

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 10176, 10177

§ 10176. Investigation of actions of licensees; Grounds for suspension of revocation of licenses.

The commissioner may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, investigate the actions of any person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real estate licensee, within this state, and he may temporarily suspend or permanently revoke a real estate license at any time where the licensee, while a real estate licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts within the scope of this chapter has been guilty of any of the following:

(a) Making any substantial misrepresentation.

(b) Making any false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade or induce.

(c) A continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation or making of false promises through real estate agents or salesmen.

(d) Acting for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge or consent of all parties thereto.

(e) Commingling with his own money or property the money or other property of others which is received and held by him.

(f) Claiming, demanding, or receiving a fee, compensation or commission under any exclusive agreement authorizing or employing a licensee to perform any acts set forth in Section 10131 for compensation or commission where such agreement does not contain a definite specified date of final and complete termination.

(g) The claiming or taking by a licensee of any secret or undisclosed amount of compensation, commission or profit or the failure of a licensee to reveal to the employer of such licensee the use of any provision allowing the licensee to buy, or exchange real estate or a business opportunity for compensation or commission, except when such licensee prior to or coincident with election to exercise such option to purchase reveals in writing to the employer the full amount of licensee's profit and obtains the written consent of the employer approving the amount of such profit.

(h) The use by a licensee of any provision allowing the licensee an option to purchase in an agreement authorizing or employing such licensee to see, buy, or exchange real estate or a business opportunity for compensation or commission, except when such licensee prior to or coincident with election to exercise such option to purchase reveals in writing to the employer the full amount of licensee's profit and obtains the written consent of the employer approving the amount of such profit.

(i) Any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character than specified in this section, which constitutes fraud or dishonest dealing.

(j) Obtaining the signature of a prospective purchaser to an agreement which provides that such prospective purchaser shall either transact the purchasing, leasing, renting or exchanging of a business opportunity property through the broker obtaining such signature, or pay a compensation to such broker if such property is purchased, leased, rented or exchanged without the broker first having obtained the written authorization of the owner of the property concerned to offer such property for sale, lease, exchange or rent.

§ 10177. Additional grounds for suspension or revocation of licenses; Grounds for denial of licenses.

The commissioner may suspend or revoke the license of any real estate licensee, or may deny the issuance of a license to an applicant, who has done, or may suspend or revoke the license of, or deny the issuance of a license to, a corporate applicant if an officer, director, or person owning or controlling 10 percent or more of the corporation's stock has done, any of the following:

(a) Procured, or attempted to procure, a real estate license or license renewal, for himself or herself or any salesperson, by fraud, misrepresentation or deceit, or by making any material misstatement of fact in an application for a real estate license, license renewal or reinstatement.

(b) Entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to, or been found guilty of, or been convicted of, a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude, and the time for appeal, irrespective of an order granting probation following that conviction, appeal, suspending the imposition of sentence, or of a subsequent order under Section 1203.4 of the Penal Code allowing that licensee to withdraw his or her plea of guilty and to enter a plea of not guilty, or dismissing the accusation or information.

(c) Knowingly authorized, directed, connived at, or aided in, the publication, advertisement, distribution, or circulation of any material false statement or representation concerning his or her business, or any business opportunity or any land or subdivision (as defined in Chapter 1 (commencing with Section 11000) of Part 2) offered for sale.

(d) Willfully disregarded or violated the Real Estate Law (Part 1 (commencing with Section 10000)) of Chapter 1 (commencing with Section 11000) of Part 2 of the rules and regulations of the commissioner for the administration and enforcement of the Real Estate Law and Chapter 1 (commencing with Section 11000) of Part 2.

(e) Willfully used the term "realtor" or any trade name or insignia of membership in any real estate organization of which the licensee is not a member.

(f) Acted or conducted himself or herself in a manner which would have warranted the denial of his or her application for a real estate license, or has either had a license denied or a license issued by another agency of this state, another state, or the federal government, revoked or suspended for acts which if done by a real estate licensee would be grounds for the suspension or revocation of a California real estate license, if the action of denial, revocation, or suspension by the other agency or entity was taken only after giving the licensee or applicant fair notice of the charges, an opportunity for a hearing, and other due process protections comparable to the Administrative Procedure Act (Chapter 3.5 (commencing with Section 11340), Chapter 4 (commencing with Section 11370), and Chapter 5 (commencing with Section 11500) of Part 1 of Division 3 of Title 2 of the Government Code), and only upon an express finding of a violation of law by the agency or entity.

(g) Demonstrated negligence or incompetence in performing any act for which he or she is required to hold a license.

(h) As a broker licensee, failed to exercise reasonable supervision over the activities of his or her salespersons, or as the officer designated by a corporate broker licensee, failed to exercise reasonable supervision and control of the activities of the corporation for which a real estate license is required.

(i) Has used his or her employment by a governmental agency in a capacity giving access to records, other than public records, in such manner as to violate the confidential nature of the records.

(j) Engaged in any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character than specified in this section, which constitutes fraud or dishonest dealing.

(k) Violated any of the terms conditions, restrictions, and limitations contained in any order granting a restricted license.

(l) Solicited or induced the sale, lease, or the listing for sale or lease, of residential property on the ground, wholly or in part, of loss of value, increase in crime, or decline of the quality of the schools, due to the present or prospective entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of another race, color, religion, ancestry, or national origin.

(m) Violated the Franchise Investment Law Division 5 (commencing with Section 31000) of Title 4 of the Corporations Code) or regulations of the Commissioner of Corporations pertaining thereto.

(n) Violated the Corporations Code or the regulations of the Commissioner of Corporations relating to securities as specified in Section 25206 of the Corporations Code.

(o) Failed to disclose to the buyer of real property in a transaction in which the licensee is an agent for the buyer, the nature and extent of a licensee's direct or indirect ownership interest in that real property. The direct or indirect ownership in the property by a person related to the licensee by blood or marriage, by an entity in which the licensee has an ownership interest, or by any other person with whom the licensee occupies a special relationship shall be disclosed to the buyer.

If a real estate broker that is a corporation has not done any of the foregoing acts, either directly or through its employees, agents, officers, directors, or persons owning or controlling 10 percent or more of the corporation's stock, the commissioner may not deny the issuance of a real estate license to, or suspend or revoke the real estate license of, the corporation, provided that any offending officer, director, or stockholder, who has done any of the foregoing acts individually and not on behalf of the corporation, has been completely disassociated from any affiliation or ownership in the corporation.

Colo. Rev. Stat. § 12-61-113

§ 12-61-113. Investigation -- revocation -- actions against licensee.

(1) The commission, upon its own motion, may, and, upon the complaint in writing of any person, shall, investigate the activities of any licensee or any person who assumes to act in such capacity within the state, and the commission, after the holding of a hearing pursuant to section 12-61-114, has the power to impose an administrative fine not to exceed two thousand five hundred dollars for each separate offense and to censure a licensee, to place the licensee on probation and to set the terms of probation, or to temporarily suspend or permanently revoke a license when the licensee has performed, is performing, or is attempting to perform any of the following acts and is guilty of:

(a) Knowingly making any misrepresentation or knowingly making use of any false or misleading advertising;

(b) Making any promise of a character which influences, persuades, or induces another person when he could not or did not intend to keep such promise;

(c) Knowingly misrepresenting or making false promises through agents, salespersons, advertising, or otherwise;

(c.5) Violating any provision of the "Colorado Consumer Protection Act", article 1 of title 6, C.R.S.;

(d) Acting for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties thereto;

(e) Representing or attempting to represent a real estate broker other than the licensee's employer without the express knowledge and consent of that employer;

(f) In the case of a salesperson or of a broker registered as in the employ of another broker, failing to place, as soon after receipt as is practicably possible, in the custody of that licensed broker-employer any deposit money or other money or fund entrusted to the employee by any person dealing with the employee as the representative of that licensed broker-employer;

(g) Failing to account for or to remit, within a reasonable time, any moneys coming into his possession which belong to others, whether acting as real estate brokers, salespersons, or otherwise, and failing to keep records relative to said moneys, which records shall contain such information as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations of the commission relative thereto and shall be subject to audit by the commission;

(g.5) Converting funds of others, diverting funds of others without proper authorization, commingling funds of others with the broker's own funds, or failing to keep such funds of others in an escrow or a trustee account with some bank or recognized depository in this state, which account may be any type of checking, demand, passbook, or statement account insured by an agency of the United States government, and to so keep records relative to the deposit which contain such information as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations of the commission relative thereto, which records shall be subject to audit by the commission;

(h) Failing to provide the purchaser and seller of real estate with a closing statement of the transaction, containing such information as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations of the commission or failing to provide a signed duplicate copy of the listing contract and the contract of sale or the preliminary agreement to sell to the parties thereto;

(i) Failing to maintain possession, for future use or inspection by an authorized representative of the commission, for a period of seven years, of the documents or records prescribed by the rules and regulations of the commission or to produce such documents or records upon reasonable request by the commission or by authorized representative of the commission;

(j) Paying a commission or valuable consideration for performing any of the functions of a real estate broker or real estate salesperson, as described in this part 1, to any person not licensed under the provisions of this part 1; except that a licensed broker may pay a finder's fee or a share of any commission on a cooperative sale when such a payment is made to a real estate broker licensed in another state or country. If a country does not license real estate brokers, then the payee must be a citizen or resident of said country and represent that the payee is in the business of selling real estate in said country.

(k) Disregarding or violating any provision of this part 1, violating any reasonable rule or regulation promulgated by the commission in the interests of the public and in conformance with the provisions of this part 1; violating any lawful commission orders; or aiding and abetting a violation of any rule, regulation, commission order, or provision of this part 1;

(l) Repealed, L. 89, p. 744, § 25, effective July 1, 1989.

(m) Conviction of, entering a plea of guilty to, or entering a plea of nolo contendere to any crime in article 3 of title 18, C.R.S., in part 4 of article 4 of title 18, C.R.S., or in part 1, 2, 3, or 5 of article 5 of title 18, C.R.S., or any other like crime under Colorado law, federal law, or the laws of other states. A certified copy of the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction of such conviction or other official record indicating that such plea was entered shall be conclusive evidence of such conviction or plea in any hearing under this part 1.

(m.5) Violating or aiding and abetting in the violation of the Colorado or federal fair housing laws;

(m.6) Failing to immediately notify the commission in writing of a conviction, plea, or violation pursuant to paragraph (m) or (m.5) of this subsection (1);

(n) Having demonstrated unworthiness or incompetency to act as a real estate broker or salesperson by conducting business in such a manner as to endanger the interest of the public;

(o) In the case of a broker licensee, failing to exercise reasonable supervision over the activities of licensed employees;

(p) Procuring, or attempting to procure, a real estate broker's license or a real estate salesperson's license or renewing, reinstating, or reactivating, or attempting to renew, reinstate, or reactivate, a real estate broker's license or a real estate salesperson's license by fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit or by making a material misstatement of fact in an application for such license;

(q) Claiming, arranging for, or taking any secret or undisclosed amount of compensation, commission, or profit or failing to reveal to the licensee's principal or employer the full amount of such licensee's compensation, commission, or profit in connection with any acts for which a license is required under this part 1;

(r) Using any provision allowing the licensee an option to purchase in any agreement authorizing or employing such licensee to sell, buy, or exchange real estate for compensation or commission, except when such licensee, prior to or coincident with election to exercise such option to purchase, reveals in writing to the licensee's principal or employer the full amount of the licensee's profit and obtains the written consent of such principal or employer approving the amount of such profit;

(s) Fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, or conversion of trust funds which results in the payment of any claim from the real estate recovery fund, pursuant to part 3 of this article;

(t) Any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character than specified in this subsection (1), which constitutes dishonest dealing;

(u) Repealed, L.86 p. 1217, § 11, effective May 30, 1986.

(v) Having had a real estate broker's or salesperson's, or subdivision developer's license suspended or revoked in any jurisdiction, or having had any disciplinary action taken against the broker, salesperson, or subdivision developer in any other jurisdiction if the broker's, salesperson's or subdivision developer's action would constitute a violation of this subsection (1). A certified copy of the order of disciplinary action shall be prima facie evidence of such disciplinary action.

(w) Failing to keep records documenting proof of completion of the continuing education requirements in accordance with section 12-61-110.5 for a period of seven years from the date of compliance with said section.

(1.5) Every person licensed pursuant to section 12-61-101(2)(j) shall give a prospective tenant a contract or receipt; and such contract or receipt shall include the address and telephone number of the real estate commission in prominent letters and shall state that the regulation of rental location agents is under the purview of the real estate commission.

(2) In the event a firm, partnership, limited liability company, association, or corporation operating under the license of a member, manager, or officer designated and licensed as representative of said firm, partnership, limited liability company, association, or corporation is guilty of any of the foregoing acts, the commission may suspend or revoke the right of the said firm, partnership, limited liability company, association, or corporation to conduct its business under the license of said member, manager, or director, whether or not the designated member, manager, or director had personal knowledge thereof and whether or not the commission suspends or revokes the individual license of said member, manager, or director.

(3) Upon request of the commission, when any real estate broker or salesperson is a party to any suit or proceeding, either civil or criminal, arising out of any transaction involving the sale or exchange of any interest in real property or out of any transaction involving a leasehold interest in the real property and when such broker or salesperson is involved in such transaction in such capacity as a licensed broker or salesperson, it shall be the duty of said broker or salesperson to supply to the commission a copy of the complaint, indictment, information, or other initiating pleading and the case and of the nature and amount of any judgment, verdict, finding, or sentence which may be made, entered, or imposed therein.

(4) This part 1 shall not be construed to relieve any person from civil liability or criminal prosecution under the laws of this state.

(5) Complaints of records in the office of the commission and the results of staff investigations may, in the discretion of the commission, be closed to public inspection, except as provided by court order, during the investigatory period and until dismissed or until notice of hearing and charges are served on a licensee.

(6) When a complaint or an investigation discloses an instance of misconduct which, in the opinion of the commission, does not warrant formal action by the commission but which should not be dismissed as being without merit, the commission may send a letter of admonition by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the licensee against whom a complaint was made and a copy thereof to the person making the complaint, but the letter shall advise the licensee that the licensee has the right to request in writing, within twenty days after proven receipt, that formal disciplinary proceedings be initiated to adjudicate the propriety of the conduct upon which the letter of admonition is based. If such request is timely made, the letter of admonition shall be deemed vacated, and the matter shall be processed by means of formal disciplinary proceedings.

(7) All administrative fines collected pursuant to this section shall be transmitted to the state treasurer, who shall credit the same to the real estate recovery fund established in section 12-61-301.

Fla. Stat. Ann. § 95.03(a)(3)

§ 475.25. Discipline.

(1) The commission may deny an application for licensure, registration, or permit, or renewal thereof; may place a licensee, registrant, or permittee on probation; may suspend a license, registration, or permit for a period not exceeding 10 years; may revoke a license, registration, or permit; may impose an administrative fine not to exceed $1,000 for each count or separate offense; and may issue a reprimand, and any or all of the foregoing, if it finds that the licensee, registrant, permittee, or applicant;

(a) Has violated any provision of s. 475.42 or of s. 455.227(1).

(b) Has been guilty of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, false promises, false pretenses, dishonest dealing by trick, scheme, or device, culpable negligence, or breach of trust in any business transaction in this state or any other state, nation, or territory; has violated a duty imposed upon him by law or by the terms of a listing contract, written, oral, express, or implied, in a real estate transaction; has aided, assisted, or conspired with any other person engaged in any such misconduct and in furtherance thereof; or has performed an overt act in furtherance of such intent, design, or scheme. It is immaterial to the guilt of the licensee that the victim or intended victim of the misconduct has sustained no damage or loss; that the damage or loss has been settled and paid after discovery of the misconduct; or that such victim or intended victim was a customer or a person in confidential relation with the licensee or was an identified member of the general public.

(c) Has advertised property or services in a manner which is fraudulent, false, deceptive, or misleading in form or content.

(d)

1. Has failed to account or deliver to any person, including a licensee under this chapter, at the time which has been agreed upon or is required by law or, in the absence of a fixed time, upon demand of the person entitled to such accounting and delivery, any personal property such as money, fund, deposit, check, draft, abstract of title, mortgage, conveyance, lease, or other document or thing of value, including a share of a real estate commission if a civil judgment relating to the practice of the licensee's profession has been obtained against the licensee and said judgment has not been satisfied in accordance with the terms of the judgment within a reasonable time, or any secret or illegal profit, or any divisible share or portion thereof, which has come into his hands and which is not his property or which he is not in law or equity entitled to retain under the circumstances. However, if the licensee, in good faith, entertains doubt as to what person is entitled to the accounting and delivery of the escrowed property, or if conflicting demands have been made upon him for the escrowed property, which property he still maintains in his escrow or trust account, the licensee shall promptly notify the commission of such doubts or conflicting demands and shall promptly:

a. Request that the commission issue an escrow disbursement order determining who is entitled to the escrowed property;

b. With the consent of all parties, submit the matter to arbitration;

c. By interpleader or otherwise, seek adjudication of the matter by a court; or

d. With the written consent of all parties, submit the matter to mediation. The department may conduct mediation or may contract with public or private entities for mediation services. However, the mediation process must be successfully completed within 90 days following the last demand or the licensee shall promptly employ one of the other escape procedures contained in this section. Payment for mediation will be as agreed to in writing by the parties. The department may adopt rules to implement this section.

If the licensee promptly employs one of the escape procedures contained herein, and if he abides by the order of judgment resulting therefrom, no administrative complaint may be filed against the licensee for failure to account for, deliver, or maintain the escrowed property.

2. Has failed to deposit money in an escrow account when the licensee is the purchaser of real estate under a contract where the contract requires the purchaser to place deposit money in an escrow account to be applied to the purchase price if the sale is consummated.

(e) Has violated any of the provisions of this chapter or any lawful order or rule made or issued under the provisions of this chapter or chapter 455.

(f) Has been convicted or found guilty, regardless of adjudication, of a crime in any jurisdiction which directly relates to the activities of a licensed broker or salesperson, or involves moral turpitude or fraudulent or dishonest dealing. Any plea of nolo contendere shall be considered a conviction for purposes of this paragraph. The records of a conviction certified or authenticated in such form as to be admissible in evidence under the laws of the state shall be admissible as prima facie evidence of such guilt.

(g) Has had a broker's or salesperson's license revoked, suspended, or otherwise acted against, or has had an application for such licensure denied, by the real estate licensing agency of another state, territory, or country.

(h) Has shared a commission with, or paid a fee or other compensation to, a person not properly licensed as a broker, broker-salesperson, or salesperson under the laws of this state, for the referral of real estate business, clients, prospects, or customers, or for any one or more of the services set forth in s. 475.01(1)(c) For the purposes of this section, it is immaterial that the person to whom such payment or compensation is given made the referral or performed the service from within this state or elsewhere; however, a licensed broker of this state may pay a referral fee or share a real estate brokerage commission with a broker licensed or registered under the laws of a foreign state so long as the foreign broker does not violate any law of this state.

(i) Has become temporarily incapacitated from acting as a broker or salesperson with safety to investors or those in a fiduciary relation with him because of drunkenness, use of drugs, or temporary mental derangement; but suspension of a license in such a case shall be only for the period of such incapacity.

(j) Has rendered an opinion that the title to any property sold is good or merchantable, except when correctly based upon a current opinion of a licensed attorney at law, or has failed to advise a prospective purchaser to consult his attorney on the merchantability of the title or to obtain title insurance.

(k) Has failed, if a broker, to immediately place, upon receipt, any money, fund, deposit, check, or draft entrusted to him by any person dealing with him as a broker in escrow with a title company, banking institution, credit union, or savings and loan association located and doing business in this state, or to deposit such funds in a trust or escrow account maintained by him with some bank, credit union, or savings and loan association located and doing business in this state, wherein the funds shall be kept until disbursement thereof is properly authorized; or has failed, if a salesperson, to immediately place with his registered employer any money, fund, deposit, check, or draft entrusted to him by any person dealing with him as agent of his registered employer. The commission shall establish rules to provide for records to be maintained by the broker and the manner in which such deposits shall be made.

(l) Has made or filed a report or records which the licensee knows to be false, has willfully failed to file a report or record required by state or federal law, has willfully impeded or obstructed such filing, or has induced another person to impede or obstruct such filing but such reports or records shall include only those which are signed in the capacity of a licensed broker or salesperson.

(m) Has obtained a license by means of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment.

(n) Is confined in any county jail, post-adjudication; or is confined in any state or federal prison or mental institution; or, through mental disease or deterioration, can no longer safely be entrusted to deal with the public or in a confidential capacity.

(o) Has been found guilty, for a second time, of any misconduct that warrants his suspension or has been found guilty of a course of conduct or practices which show that he is so incompetent, negligent, dishonest, or untruthful that the money, property, transactions, and rights of investors, or those with whom he may sustain a confidential relation, may not safely be entrusted to him.

(p) Has failed to inform the commission in writing within 30 days after pleading guilty or nolo contendere to, or being convicted or found guilty of any felony.

(q) Has failed to give written notice to a party to a sale, exchange, purchase, or lease of real property or any interest in real property, before such party has signed any contractual offer or lease agreement related to the transaction, that he is an agent, employee, independent contractor, or representative of another party in the negotiation of such sale, exchange, purchase, or lease. The commission shall implement this provision by rule.

(r) Has failed in any written listing agreement to include a definite expiration date, description of the property, price and terms, fee or commission, and a proper signature of the principal(s); and has failed to give the principal(s) a legible, signed, true and correct copy of the listing agreement within 24 hours of obtaining the written listing agreement. The written listing agreement shall contain no provision requiring the person signing the listing to notify the broker of the intention to cancel the listing after such definite expiration date.

(s) Has had a registration suspended, revoked, or otherwise acted against in any jurisdiction. The record of the disciplinary action certified or authenticated in such form as to be admissible in evidence under the laws of the state shall be admissible as prima facie evidence of such disciplinary action.

(t) Has violated any standard for the development or communication of a real estate appraisal or other provision of the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice, as defined in § 475.611, as approved and adopted by the Appraisal Standards Board of the Appraisal Foundation, as defined in § 475.611. This paragraph does not apply to a real estate broker or salesperson who, in the ordinary course of business, performs a comparative market analysis. However, in no event may this comparative market analysis be referred to as an appraisal, as defined in § 475.611.

(2) A license may be revoked or canceled if it was issued through the mistake or inadvertence of the commission. Such revocation or cancellation shall not prejudice any subsequent application for licensure filed by the person against whom such action was taken.

(3) The department shall reissue the license of a licensee against whom disciplinary action was taken upon certification by the commission that the licensee has complied with all of the terms and conditions of the final order imposing discipline.

(4) The commission may adopt rules allowing the Director of the Division of Real Estate to grant to a licensee placed on probation additional time within which to complete the terms of probation, but the rules must allow the licensee to appeal any denial to the commission.

Mass. Gen. L. ch. 112, § 87AAA

§ 87AAA. Complaints; investigation by board; revocation or suspension of license; grounds; penalties.

The board may, and upon the verified complaint in writing of an aggrieved person shall, investigate the action of any broker or salesman or any person who attempts to act in such capacity within the commonwealth, and in addition to any grounds herein before enumerated, may suspend, revoke or refuse to renew any license which it has found to have been obtained by false or fraudulent representation. The board may suspend, revoke or refuse to renew any license when the board has found as a fact that the licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any act authorized by his license, has (a) knowingly made any substantial misrepresentation; (b) acted in the dual capacity of broker and undisclosed principal in the same transaction; (c) acted for more than one party to a transaction without the knowledge and consent of all the parties for whom he acts; (d) failed, within a reasonable time, to account for or remit any moneys belonging to others which have come into his possession as a broker or salesman; (e) paid commissions or fees to or divided the same with any person, who, being required to be licensed as a broker or salesman in this or any other state, is not so licensed; (f) accepted, given or charged any undisclosed commission, rebate or profit on expenditures for a principal; (g) induced any party to a contract or lease relating to real estate to break the same when such action is effected for the personal gain of the licensee; (h) commingled the money or other property of his principal with his own; (i) failed to give to both the buyer and seller a copy of the purchase and sale agreement; (j) committed any act expressly prohibited in sections eighty-seven RR to eighty-seven CCC, inclusive; (k) affirmatively solicited for sale, lease, or the listing for sale or lease, of residential property on the grounds of alleged change of value due to the presence or the prospective entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of another race, economic level, religion or ethnic origin or distributes, or causes to be distributed, material or makes statements designated to induce a residential property owner to sell or lease his property due to such change in the neighborhood; or (l) accepted from a prospective seller a net listing, an agreement to sell real estate for a stated price which authorized the broker to keep as commission any amount of money received from the sale of said real estate in excess of the stated price. The board shall, after notice by the Massachusetts commission against discrimination that said commission has made a finding, which finding has become final, that a licensed broker or salesman committed an unlawful practice in violation of chapter one hundred and fifty-one B arising out of or in the course of his occupation as a licensed broker or salesman, shall suspend forthwith the license of said broker or salesman for a period of sixty days, and if the said commission finds that said violation by such licensed broker or salesman occurred within two years of the date of a prior violation of said chapter one hundred and fifty-one B, which finding has been final, it shall so notify the board, and the board shall forthwith suspend the license of such broker or salesman for a period of ninety days. Whoever violates the provisions of clause (k) shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than twenty-five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or both.

No broker shall engage in a sale in the commonwealth of real property located in a land development in another state which is the subject of promotional advertising in the commonwealth unless the owner or developer of such land has submitted to the board full particulars regarding such land and the proposed terms of sale thereof and has deposited with the board such sum as it shall determine, to pay the expense of the investigation hereinafter prescribed. Any broker acting for such owner or developer, and his salesmen, shall comply with such rules, regulations, restrictions and conditions pertaining thereto as the board in its discretion may impose. The board shall investigate such matters and all reasonable expenses incurred by the board in such investigation shall be borne by the owner or developer of the property involved. No broker or salesman shall in any manner refer to the board of registration of real estate brokers and salesmen or to any member or employee thereof, in selling, offering for sale, or advertising or otherwise promoting the sale, mortgage, or lease of any such property, nor make any representation whatsoever that such property has been inspected or approved or otherwise passed upon by said board or by any official, department or employee of the commonwealth. The board may suspend, revoke or refuse to renew any license when it has found that the licensee has failed to comply with the requirement of this paragraph or any part thereof.

The board may also suspend, revoke or refuse to renew any license when it has found that the licensee has been convicted of a criminal offense by a court of competent jurisdiction of this or any other state which demonstrates his lack of good moral character to act as a broker or salesman as the case may be.

The board may reconsider any decision made by it and may reinstate any license which has been suspended and reissue any license which has been revoked.

Any person whose license is suspended or revoked shall also be liable to such other punishment as may be provided by law.

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 339.100

§ 339.100. Investigation of certain practices, procedure -- subpoenas -- formal complaints -- revocation or suspension of licenses -- digest may be published.

1. The commission may, upon its own motion, and shall upon written complaint filed by any person, investigate any business transaction of a person, copartnership or corporation licensed under this chapter. In conducting such investigation, the commission shall have the power to hold an investigatory hearing to determine whether there is a probability that the licensee has performed or attempted to perform any act or practice declared unlawful under this chapter. In conducting such a hearing, the commission shall have the power to issue a subpoena and to compel the production of records and papers bearing on the complaint. The commission shall have the power to issue a subpoena and to any person in this state to come before the subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum issued pursuant to this section shall be served in the same manner as subpoenas in a criminal case. The fees and mileage of witnesses shall be the same as that allowed in the circuit court in civil cases.

2. The commission may cause a complaint to be filed with the administrative hearing commission as provided by law when the commission believes there is a probability that a licensee has performed or attempted to perform any of the following acts:

(1) Failure to maintain and deposit in a special account, separate and apart from his personal or other business accounts, all moneys belonging to others entrusted to him while acting as a real estate broker, or as escrow agent, or as the temporary custodian of the funds of others, until the transaction involved is consummated or terminated, unless all parties having an interest in the funds have agreed otherwise in writing;

(2) Making substantial misrepresentations or false promises or suppression, concealment or omission of material facts in the conduct of his business or pursuing a flagrant and continued course of misrepresentation through agents, salespersons, advertising or otherwise in any transaction;

(3) Failing within a reasonable time to account for or to remit any moneys, valuable documents or other property, coming into his possession, which belongs to others;

(4) Representing to any lender, guaranteeing agency, or any other interested party, either verbally or through the preparation of false documents, an amount in excess of the true and actual sale price of the real estate or terms differing from those actually agreed upon;

(5) Failure to deliver, immediately at the time of signing, a duplicate original of any and all instruments to any party or parties executing the same where the instruments have been prepared by the broker or under his supervision or are within his control, including, but not limited to, the instruments relating to the employment of the broker or to any matter pertaining to the consummation of a lease, listing agreement or the purchase, sale, exchange or lease of property, or any type of real estate transaction in which he may participate as a broker;

(6) Acting for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties for whom he acts, or accepting a commission or valuable consideration for services from more than one party in a real estate transaction without the knowledge of all parties to the transaction;

(7) Paying a commission or valuable consideration to any person for acts or services performed in violation of this chapter;

(8) Guaranteeing or having authorized or permitted any broker or salesperson to guarantee future profits which may result from the resale of real property;

(9) Having been finally adjudicated and been found guilty of the violation of any state or federal statute which governs the sale or rental of real property or the conduct of the real estate business as defined in subsection 1 of section 339.010;

(10) Obtaining a real estate license for himself or anyone else by false or fraudulent representation, fraud or deceit;

(11) Representing a real estate broker other than the broker with whom associated without the express knowledge and consent of that broker, or accepting a commission or valuable consideration for the performance of any of the acts referred to in section 339.010 from any person except the broker with whom associated;

(12) Using prizes, money, gifts or other valuable consideration as inducement to secure customers to purchase, lease, sale or listing; or soliciting, selling or offering for sale real property by offering free lots, or conducting lotteries or contests, or offering prizes for the purpose of influencing a purchaser or prospective purchaser of real property;

(13) Placing a sign on any property offering it for sale or rent without the consent of the owner or his duly authorized agent;

(14) Willfully or repeatedly violating any of the provisions of this chapter or any rule or regulation promulgated hereunder;

(15) Committing any act which would otherwise be grounds for the commission to refuse to issue a license under section 339.040;

(16) Failure to submit all written bona fide offers to a seller when such offers are received prior to the seller accepting an offer in writing and until the broker has knowledge of said acceptance;

(17) Being found guilty in a court of this state, or of any other state, or of the United States, of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud or other like offenses;

(18) Any other conduct which constitutes untrustworthy, improper or fraudulent business dealings, or demonstrated bad faith or gross incompetence.

(19) Disciplinary action against the holder of a license or other right to practice any profession regulated under sections 339.010 to 339.180 granted by another state, territory, federal agency, or country upon grounds for which revocation, suspension, or probation is authorized in this state;

(20) Been found by a court of competent jurisdiction of having used any controlled substance, as defined in chapter 195, RSMo, to the extent that such use impairs a person's ability to perform the work of any profession licensed or regulated by sections 339.010 to 339.180;

(21) Been finally adjudged insane or incompetent by a court of competent jurisdiction;

(22) Assisting or enabling any person to practice or offer to practice any profession licensed or regulated under sections 339.010 to 339.180 who is not registered and currently eligible to practice under sections 339.010 to 339.180;

(23) Use of any advertisement or solicitation which is knowingly false, misleading or deceptive to the general public or persons to whom the advertisement or solicitation is primarily directed.

3. After the filing of such complaint, the proceedings will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of law relating to the administrative hearing commission. A finding of the administrative hearing commissioner that the licensee has performed or attempted to perform one or more of the foregoing acts shall be grounds for the suspension or revocation of his license by the commission, or the placing of the licensee on probation on such terms and conditions as the real estate commission shall deem appropriate.

4. The commission may prepare a digest of the decisions of the administrative hearing commission which concern complaints against licensed brokers or salespersons and cause such digests to be mailed to all licensees periodically. Such digests may also contain reports as to new or changed rules adopted by the commission and other information of significance to licensees.

§ 95.03(b) Common Issues Under State Licensing Statutes.

The holding of a valid license frequently becomes an issue in real estate brokerage activity. While the brokerage itself may be licensed, any transaction that is effected through the additional efforts of an unlicensed salesperson or cooperating broker or some other unlicensed person may be unlawful and will prevent qualifying for the commission. n5 As may be perceived from the statutory provisions quoted in § 95.03(a)(1), states vary widely in identifying parties who need to be licensed or who are permitted to be licensed. At one end of the spectrum are statutes establishing a party as a broker after only one act, n6 while others require a pattern of conduct. n7

States also vary in licensing practices among brokerage firms and individual brokers. Some states require individual licenses for the principals before the brokerage firm itself can be licensed; n8 others license the brokerage but require designation of which principals will be functioning as brokers. n9 Because, in this latter circumstance, the misconduct of an individual broker can endanger the firm license, the trend is toward requiring individual licenses for all functioning brokers. n10 Real estate salespersons are also required to be licensed; a salesperson is one who engages in the same types of activities as a broker but does so under the supervision of a broker. In some states, it is required that an applicant for a broker's license have had prior experience as a salesperson. n11

From the statutory provisions quoted in the preceding subsection, it is also clear that states vary greatly in what kinds of activities require licensing or enable a license to be granted. n12 One common element of these lists of regulated activities, however, is the requirement that the activity be undertaken for some sort of compensation arrangement. Some activities and persons who might come under the statutory definition of parties needing to be licensed are specifically exempted. Exemptions vary widely from state to state, but the range of exemptions has been summarized as follows:

> persons (not otherwise brokers) acting pro se; public officials; banks, trust companies, and insurance companies acting in a fiduciary capacity; attorneys; trustees in bankruptcy; persons selling cemetery lots; and railroads and public utilities. In addition some states exempt auctioneers, although there is a definite split on this; some exempt on-site apartment managers, but some narrow this exemption still further by requiring that the managerial work be performed on an incidental basis. Further, some exempt newspapers and periodicals carrying advertisements for the sale of real property and land developers complying with the provisions of the federal Interstate Land Sales Disclosure Act, or improving real estate with new construction, shopping centers, office buildings or industrial parks. n13

A line of cases has developed over the issue of whether rental agencies that only distribute information need to be licensed. Generally, if any of the following factors are present in the agency's activities, the likelihood that licensing is required increases:

- direct contact with prospective customers,

- a confidential (or a fiduciary) relationship with customers,
- functioning as an intermediary in negotiations,
- drafting of transaction documents,
- receipt of compensation,
- serving the vendor as agent, or
- providing specialized services for individual customers. n14

Persons who act in the capacity of finders (for a fee), are exempt from licensing by statute in a few jurisdictions, but otherwise a finder is usually required to be licensed if the activity is conducted for compensation. n15

It will also be noted from the statutory provisions quoted above that the lists of prohibited conduct are very extensive. In the cases arising from such provisions, the most common complaint is against misrepresentation and false advertising. n16 Under the statutes it may sometimes be necessary to determine if the defendant's conduct was knowing or intentional. n17 In a few states, a judgment for damages against a broker may be satisfied out of a real estate recovery fund. n18 A fund that makes such a payment is subrogated to the claimant's rights against the broker, up to the amount of the payment.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 4. For additional discussion of state licensing requirements for real estate brokers, see Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, ch. 6, Licensing(Matthew Bender).

(n2)Footnote 5. See, e.g., Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art 6573a, § 14(a). Winsor v. Maine Real Estate Comm' n, 695 A.2d 1198 (Me. 1997) (real estate commission concluded that designated broker for real estate agency had violated statute by allowing broker not licensed to work for agency to perform brokerage services); Smith v. Stevens, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 4951 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 1996) (a licensed real estate salesperson was found not to be a licensed broker under the state law, and therefore, he was not entitled to pursue unpaid commissions against the principals).

(n3)Footnote 6. See, e.g., Va. Code Ann. § 54.1-2107.

(n4)Footnote 7. See, Annotation. Who Is Real Estate Agent, Salesman, or Broker Within the Meaning of Statute, 167 A.L.R. 774.

(n5)Footnote 8. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.15.

(n6)Footnote 9. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws. Ann. ch. 112, § 87VV.

(n7)Footnote 10. Annotation Revocation of Broker's License for Violation of Statutes or Regulation Prohibiting Use of Unlicensed Persons in Carrying Out Duties, 68 A.L.R.3d 530. John D. Hastie, Real Estate Acquisition, Development, and Disposition from the Developer's Perspective, SB08 ALI-ABA 1 (Aug. 14, 1996).

(n8)Footnote 11. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 18.85.090(1).

(n9)Footnote 12. Shane L. Goudey, Comment, Too Many Hands in ihe Cookie Jar: The Unauthorized Practice of Law By Real Estate Brokers, 75 Or. L. Rev. 889 (Fall 1996).

(n10)Footnote 13. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers §§ 9:15-9:17 (2d ed. 1992).

(n11)Footnote 14. See, e.g., Brill v. Nevada Real Estate Div. of the Dept. of Commerce, 604 P.2d 113 (Nev. 1979); State v. Rentex, 365 N.E.2d 1274 (Ohio App. 1977); North Carolina Real Estate Licensing Bd. v. Aikens, 228 S.E.2d 493 (N.C. App. 1976); Whitaker v. Arizona Real Estate Bd., 548 P.2d 841 (Ariz. App. 1976).

(n12)Footnote 15. Comment, Recovery of Commissions by Unlicensed Real Estate Brokers, 80 Dick. L. Rev. 500, 502-504 (1976); Annotation Validity, Construction, and Enforcement of Business Opportunities or Finder's Fee Contract, 24 A.L.R.3d 1160. Smith v. Real Estate Agency, 939 P.2d 77 (Or. App. 1997) (commissioner rationally determined that petitioners were equal partners in arranging purchase transaction and, thus, that half of finder's fee represented amount by which one petitioner profited from his unlicensed activities for purposes of determining penalty to be imposed).

(n13)Footnote 16. Robert D. Sack, P. Cameron DeVore, Advertising and Commercial Speech, 462 PLI/Pat 371 (Nov. 1996).

(n14)Footnote 17. See, e.g., Md. Bus. Occ. Code Ann. § 16-322(a)(4).

(n15)Footnote 18. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann . §§ 61-2a-1, et seq.

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.04

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.04 Fiduciary and Other Duties of Brokers.

[Go To Supp]

A broker's fiduciary obligation to the client rests upon an agency relationship and a confidential or fiduciary duty. n19 The three components of this fiduciary obligation are:

- good faith and loyalty,
- use of reasonable care and diligence, and
- disclosure of information pertaining to the transaction. n20

Good faith and loyalty are violated, for example, by the broker making unilateral changes in the listing agreement, n21 engaging in any form of self-dealing (such as by becoming a participant in the transaction), n22 or executing an agreement on behalf of the customer. n23

The duty of reasonable care and due diligence is violated if a broker fails to inform the client of essential information (e.g., not clarifying the terms of a contract) n24 or fails to protect the client's interests (e.g., failing to advise a client to obtain a security interest). n25

The duty of disclosure is violated, for instance, if the broker fails to disclose known comparable sales prices. n26 Brokers have also wrongfully failed to disclose and obtain consent to dual agency relationships with both vendor and purchaser, but such dual agencies are increasingly coming under statutory or professional regulatory prohibition. n27 A dual agency may somewhat inadvertently arise in a property exchange when the broker selects from existing clients' properties an appropriate tract to exchange with the property of the specific client. n28

If the broker provides no services beyond those of finder or intermediary, then the only obligation and appropriate role is to bring the principals together; without further subsequent activity or duty, no further fiduciary duties attach. n29

If a breach of fiduciary duty is shown, the client need not show any damages but will probably be able to deny to the broker payment of the commission and will also be able to recover secret profits. n30

A wronged client may have an alternative cause of action in tort, especially for misrepresentation. While various statements of the elements of this tort have been formulated by the courts, it may generally be said that misrepresentations as to real estate transactions are tortious, if it is established:

(1) that they were made as statements of fact;

(2) that they were untrue and known by the defendant to be untrue;

(3) that they were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to act upon them;

(4) that the plaintiff was in fact induced to act upon them, and

(5) that in so acting he was legally injured. n31

In one jurisdiction, a cause of action in products liability arose when a brokerage firm that was a wholly-owned subsidiary of a developer of a cooperative marketed a defective apartment. n32 This decision has not enjoyed wide acceptance.

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 19. Batson v. Strehlow, 68 Cal. Rptr. 589 (1968). Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman, Real Estate Brokers: Shouldering New Burdens, 11 Prob. & Prop. 14 (May/June, 1997).

(n2)Footnote 20. Vivian Arnold Realty Co. v. McCormick, 506 P.2d 1074 (Ariz. App. 1973). Valentine v. Department of Licensing, 894 P.2d 1352 (Wash. App. 1995) (broker breached fiduciary duty to vendor by distributing real estate contract proceeds before accounts relating to the property were settled).

Jay M. Feinman, Economic Negligence In Residential Real Estate Transactions, 25 Real Est. L.J. 110 (Fall 1996) (the broker has a duty of reasonable care to the buyer to make sure that the information it transmits is accurate); John D. Hastie, Real Estate Acquisition, Development, and Disposition from the Developer's Perspective, SB08 ALI-ABA 1 (Aug. 14, 1996); Katherine A. Pancak, Thomas J. Miceli and C.F. Sirmans, Residential Disclosure Laws: The Further Demise of Caveat Emptor, 24 Real Est. L.J. 291 (Spring 1996); Alan M. Weinberger, Let the Buyer Be Well Informed? -- Doubting The Demise of Caveat Emptor, 55 Md. L. Rev. 387 (1996).

Edmonds v. John L. Scott Real Estate, Inc., 942 P.2d 1072 (Wash. App. 1997); Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (transaction between real estate broker and property owner is presumptively fraudulent, to the extent that, at time of transaction, fiduciary relationship existed between parties and broker appears to benefit from transaction. Real estate broker can rebut presumptively fraudulent nature of transactions between himself and principal from which broker appears to benefit by showing that broker fully disclosed all relevant information to property owner before entering into transaction, paid adequate consideration, and provided principal with competent and independent advice); Olsen v. Vail Assocs. Real Estate, Inc., 935 P.2d 975 (Colo. 1997) (brokers did not breach fiduciary duty to vendors by not revealing that purchaser was negotiating to purchase adjoining property and ultimate sale price of that property). But see H. Glenn Boggs, Real Estate Brokerage and Agency: Florida Contemplates Change, 71 Fla. B.J. 46 (Feb. 1997).

(n3)Footnote 21. Carnell v. Watson, 578 P.2d 308 (Mont. 1978).

(n4)Footnote 22. Lestoque v. M.R. Mansfield Realty, Inc., 536 P.2d 1146 (Colo. App. 1975). See, e.g., BAII Banking Corp. v. UPG, Inc., 985 F.2d 685 (2d Cir. 1993) (New York courts rule that a broker employed by a principal may not engage in a related transaction on his own behalf without full and frank disclosure of his relation to the transaction to his principal).

(n5)Footnote 23. Brezina v. Hill, 277 N.W.2d 224 (Neb. 1979).

(n6)Footnote 24. Wisnieski v. Harms, 199 N.W.2d 405 (Neb. 1972). Goldberg Realty Group v. Weinstein, 669 A.2d 187 (Me. 1996) (broker breached fiduciary duty by failing to disclose a commission agreement to the vendor; commission was forfeited); Smith v. Coldwell Banker Real Estate Services, 122 F. Supp. 2d 267 (D. Conn. 2000) (seller, agent and broker held liable for not providing copy of lead paint report, even though the required disclosure form was provided); Stephanie A. Waxler, Liabilities of Homeowners and Real Estate Brokers for Non-Disclosure in Illinois, 2000 Loy. Consumer L. Rev. 340; Brokers: Liability for Non-Disclosure of Lead Paint, 30 Real Est. L. Rep. 4 (Feb. 2001); Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act of 1992, 42 U.S.C. § 4851 et seq.

(n7)Footnote 25. Banville v. Schmidt, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126 (1974). Romereo v. Hariri, 911 P.2d 85 (Haw. App. 1996) (investor deceived by broker; punitive damages awarded).

(n8)Footnote 26. Moore v. Turner, 71 S.E.2d 342 (W. Va. 1952). Fitzgerald v. Midwest Bldg. Inspection, Inc., 911 S.W.2d 676 (Mo. App. 1995) (broker's failure to disclose violated real estate commission regulation, but by itself did not give rise to a private cause of action).

Nancy Ann Connery, Precontract Considerations, 414 PLI/Real 75 (May 1996); Ann J. Rosenthal, R. Stuart Phillips, Tell It Like It Is -- Sellers' Duties Of Disclosure In Real Estate Transactions Under California Law, 26 Golden Gate U.L. Rev. 473 (Spring, 1996); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Rights And Liabilities As Affected By Failure To Disclose Financial Information Concerning Purchaser, 34 A.L.R.4th 191.

(n9)Footnote 27. See, e.g., Frey v. Fraser Yachts, 29 F.3d 1153 (7th Cir. 1994) (holding that a broker who fails to disclose his dual representation and obtain respective parties' consents forfeits his commission).

(n10)Footnote 28. Buck v. Woodson, 209 S.W. 244 (Tex. Civ. App. 1919). Gryder v. Century 21 Oviedo Realty, Inc., 665 So. 2d 1134 (Fla. App. 1996) (vendor's broker held not to have acted as a dual agent).

J. Clark Pendergrass, Commentary, The Real Estate Consumer's Agency And Disclosure Act: The Case Against Dual Agency, 48 Ala. L. Rev. 277 (Fall 1996).

(n11)Footnote 29. See, Northeast Gen. Corp. v. Wellington Adver., Inc., 624 N.E.2d 129 (N.Y. 1993) (A company hired to introduce a corporation to candidates interested in either acquiring or being acquired by the corporation was a "finder," having no fiduciary-type duties toward the corporation, rather than a "broker" who would have a defined fiduciary duty to act in the best and more involved interest of the principal; a "finder" is required to introduce and bring the parties together, without any obligation or power to negotiate the transaction, while a "broker" performs the same introduction task, and then must ordinarily also bring the parties to agreement).

(n12)Footnote 30. Haymes v. Rogers, 219 P.2d 339 (Ariz. 1950). See, e.g., Hamady v. Trammell Crow Asset Co., 824 F. Supp. 580 (E.D. Va. 1993) (holding that a real estate broker who fails to exercise the highest fidelity towards the principal is barred from recovering a commission); Goldberg Realty Group v. Weinstein, 669 A.2d 187 (Me. 1996) (a real estate broker's breach of fiduciary duty, as agent for seller of real estate, by failing to disclose material information to seller results in forfeiture of commission by broker; information is "material" to transaction if person with degree of business acumen would want that information before proceeding); Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (to the extent that real estate broker and brokerage firm breached their fiduciary duties to property owner by failing to disclose, prior to broker's closing on purchase of property owner's land, that broker had found third party to purchase land, property owner might be entitled to return of commission paid in connection with sale of his property to broker as well as to profit that broker earned upon resale of property to third party). But see Enright v. Jonassen, 931 P.2d 1212 (Idaho 1997) (purchaser of ranch property who had prevailed on breach of fiduciary duty claim against real estate firm and listing agent based on failure to discover and disclose that property was located in floodplain district was not entitled to recover as damages commission paid to firm and agent by vendor of property out of sale proceeds, and had no standing to pursue disgorgement of commission). See also Roy T. Black, Client Liability To Real Estate Brokers: From Contract To Punitive Damages, 25 Real Est. L.J. 78 (Summer 1996).

(n13)Footnote 31. Harper v. Adametz, 113 A.2d 136 (Conn. 1955). Edmonds v. John L. Scott Real Estate, Inc., 942 P.2d 1072 (Wash. App. 1997) (broker engaged in unfair or deceptive practice when, with knowledge that vendors' representations were false, it gave purchaser a property information form indicating that vendors were aware of no existing problem with drainage); Gennari v. Weichert Co. Realtors, 691 A.2d 350 (N.J. 1997) (real estate broker held to have engaged in common-law fraud and violations of the Consumer Fraud Act in knowingly misrepresenting builder's experience and qualifications, and brokerage firm's own misrepresentations under the Consumer Fraud Act, and each was a proximate cause of damages sustained by purchasers of defective housing, which could be apportioned under the Comparative Negligence Act); Williams v. Wells & Bennett Realtors, 52 Cal. App. 4th 857 (Cal. App. 1997) (the duties of a seller's broker included "the affirmative duty to conduct a reasonably competent and diligent inspection of the residential property listed for sale and to disclose to prospective purchasers all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that such an investigation would reveal); Moser v. DeSetta, 816 F. Supp. 1039, 1054 (E.D. Pa. 1991).

James R. Pomeranz, Note, The State of Caveat Emptor In Alaska As It Applies to Real Property, 13 Alaska L. Rev. 237 (Dec. 1996); Annotation, Liability of Vendor Or Real-Estate Broker for Failure to Disclose Information Concerning Off-Site Conditions Affecting Value of Property, 41 A.L.R.5th 157 (1996).

(n14)Footnote 32. Berman v. Watergate West, Inc., 391 A.2d 1351 (D.C. 1978). See, e.g., Note, Imposing Tort Liability on Real Estate Brokers Selling Defective Housing, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 1861 (1986) (discussing tort liability of brokers "for failing to inform buyers about defects that could injure persons or property or about other factors materially affecting the value of property"); Anthony A. Babcock, Case note, Peterson v. Superior Court: What Happened To The Paramount Policy? 28 Pac. L.J. 373 (Winter 1997) (Products liability imposed upon landlords and developers).

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.05

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.05 Listing Agreements and Commissions.

[Go To Supp]

§ 95.05(a) Listing Agreements.

The listing agreement formally establishes the relationship between broker and client, but the incidents and terms of that relationship depend both on the type of listing agreement used and on the extent to which courts are willing to imply terms or interpret matters of ambiguity. n33

Six varieties of listing agreements have been described as follows:

> The first and most informal type of brokerage agreement is an open listing. Under it, the vendor is obligated to pay a brokerage commission only if and when the broker with a listing is the procuring cause in the production of a ready, willing, and able purchaser; ready, willing, and able, that is, to buy on the vendor's terms or, at least, with only an insubstantial deviation from those terms. When a listing agreement is silent as to type it is usually presumed to be an open listing; when the terms of a brokerage agreement are only partially stated, the vendor is liable for the commission as if it were an open listing.
>
> When several brokers have been contacted, the first one to produce this ready, willing, and able purchaser effects a termination of all other agencies... .The owner retains a broad power to terminate all agencies before any broker produces a suitable prospective purchaser... .Were this not the case, the vendor might encounter multiple liability... .
>
> The second type of listing is an exclusive agency contract. Here, the vendor designates a particular broker as "the vendor's exclusive agent" for the specified time the listing is in effect, but the vendor still retains the right to sell the property himself... .
>
> A third type of listing agreement is an exclusive right to sell. This is an exclusive agency agreement with one extra feature: the broker acquires the right to deal for the property in place of the vendor himself; conversely, the vendor loses the right to sell the property himself... .The negation of the owner's right must be clear... .

A fourth kind of brokerage contract is the net listing, when the broker takes his or her commission exclusively from the purchase price received over the vendor's specified price. If the property is sold at the specified price, the broker gets nothing.

As of the mid-1980s, 17 states were reported to forbid net listings by statute. The use of this type of contract is discouraged in other states by regulation of the state real estate commission. Both the statutory prohibition, and certainly the administrative discouragement, of net listings, represent a sound public policy.

A fifth type of listing is the option listing, which is also discouraged by state regulators. The broker acquires an option to buy the property at a specified price, and when the broker exercises the option, his or her profit must be revealed. Indeed, when the contract is made, the broker should disclose all pending offers and other material information he possesses about the property. Otherwise, the fiduciary duty of the broker to the vendor may well be violated... .

A sixth type of brokerage agreement is the use of a multiple listing service. Here, each member broker agrees to refer his listing to all other members of the service and to share commissions on a predetermined basis with any other member who sells the listed property. n34

It is common practice for brokers to submit only some kind of exclusive listing agreement to prospective clients.

It can be said that the typical listing agreement is not mutual as to the term of consideration. The client promises to pay a commission if a buyer is found, but the broker does not promise to find a buyer. If, on the other hand, it is implied in the listing agreement that the broker use best efforts to find a buyer, then the consideration term becomes mutual. The agreement is usually revocable before the broker finds a buyer, although dispute has occurred over whether substantial effort by the broker before revocation amounts to a kind of compensable partial performance.

In addition to an indication of the type of agreement, the standard elements of a listing agreement include an adequate description of the property and the type of interest being sold, the price (possibly including a requirement of a minimum price for the sale), the commission, and the expiration date of the agreement. n35 Other terms may relate to special defects or restrictions in the title of the land being sold, handling of deposits, or damages upon purchaser default.

In most jurisdictions, an owner retains an implied right of revocation, even of an agreement for an exclusive right to sell for a definite period of time, unless the agreement specifically denies that right. n36 To reduce the likelihood of an untimely withdrawal by the owner, a broker may ask the owner to agree to a provision in the listing agreement that guarantees payment of the commission upon a sale that occurs even after withdrawal. Reciprocally, sometimes the inclusion of such a provision also leads to an inferred commitment by the broker to use best or reasonable efforts in finding a buyer. n37

Some listing agreements contain extension clauses intended to protect the broker from a seller who delays selling until after expiration of the listing agreement and then sells to a party already contacted by the broker. These clauses generally require payment of the commission in the event that such a sale occurs, and they have been upheld against challenges of unconscionability and voidness as against public policy. n38

§ 95.05(b) Commissions.

The most significant issue related to commissions is whether the commission is payable even under some circumstances where the actual sale does not take place. According to the majority rule, a broker is entitled to payment of the agreed upon commission if a buyer is presented who is ready, willing, and able to buy according to the seller's terms. n39

Under these circumstances the commission becomes payable when a contract of sale is executed and even if, because of the seller's misconduct, the transaction itself does not occur. n40 Some courts recognize, however, that if the contract contains contingencies--such as obtaining financing--the entitlement to payment of the commission does not arise until the contingencies are satisfactorily resolved. n41 Also, > a broker is not entitled to recover a commission when his or her efforts merely produced one event in a chain of actions which contributed to a sale of the listed real property. These events must be the primary, predominant, efficient, or procuring cause of the transaction or transfer. A procuring cause is one originating a series of events which proceed without a break in continuity. [It] accomplishes the primary objective of [the broker's] employment--the procurement of a ready, willing, and able purchaser for the listed real property. n42

In some procuring cause cases, the awarding of damages is based not on the amount of the commission, but as compensation for services in quantum meruit. n43 A broker's failure to comply with applicable laws and regulations may prevent entitlement to commission. n44

This rule of sometimes leaving a seller liable for payment of the commission even when the purchaser has defaulted in failing to carry out the contract of sale has led to the appearance of a minority rule, deferring commission payment until a closing actually occurs. This position was adopted in the well-known case of Ellsworth Dobbs, Inc. v. Johnson. n45 Under this holding, if a purchaser defaults because of the purchaser's inability to pay or for any other reason beyond the seller's control, the commission has not been earned. This position, and variants of the position relating to different circumstances of culpability between buyer and seller, are being adopted by a growing minority of jurisdictions. n46

In some cases, the defaulting purchaser has left a deposit, which is forfeited upon the default. Quite frequently the deposit is divided equally between the seller and the broker, in lieu of payment of the commission. n47

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 33. See, e.g., Chicago Title Agency of Las Vegas, Inc. v. Schwartz, 851 P.2d 419 (Nev. 1993) (Real estate brokers earn commissions on open listing agreements once they have produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the precise terms, and subsequent default by the purchaser will not limit the broker's right to commission without a specific contract to the contrary); In re Southold Dev. Corp., 173 B.R. 63 (Bankr. N.Y. 1994) (holding that commissions are due when the ready, willing, and able buyers are produced); Southpace Properties v. Acquisition Group, 5 F.3d 502 (11th Cir. 1993) ("If the property is sold or exchanged through the efforts of the broker or if the broker locates a prospect ready, willing, and able to purchase or exchange for the property, or in the event that the property is sold or exchanged while this agreement is in force, by the owner or anyone else, the broker will be entitled to a commission ... ."); IFA, Inc. v. Ellco Leasing Corp., No. 90-C4895, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4376 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (contains two-part test for determining difference between exclusive agency contract and exclusive right to sell).

(n2)Footnote 34. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers§§ 2:13-2:36 (2d ed. 1992). DiSalle Real Estate Co. v. Howell, 1996 690 N.E.2d 25 (Ohio App. 1996) (the court discussed the distinction between "an exclusive agency contract" and "an exclusive right to sell"); Eva Pendley Realty, Inc. v. Bagley, 464 S.E.2d 850 (Ga. App. 1995) (advertising brochure signed by vendors did not create a written listing agreement entitling the broker to a lien for unpaid commission).

Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman, Real Estate Brokers: Shouldering New Burdens, 11 Prob. & Prop. 14 (May/June, 1997); Matthew J. Leeds, Outline, 419 PLI/Real 9 (May 1997); John D. Hastie, Real Estate Acquisition, Development, And Disposition From The Developer's Perspective, SB08 ALI-ABA 1, at 92 (Aug. 14, 1996) (description of several customary contractual arrangements which are entered into between brokers and sellers); Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Real-Estate Brokers' Multiple-Listing Agreement, 45 A.L.R.3d 190.

(n3)Footnote 35. Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Provision in Exclusive Listing Agreement for Payment of Commission on Termination by Owner, 39 A.L.R.3d 1270.

(n4)Footnote 36. See, e.g., Hood v. Gillespie, 230 S.W.2d 997 (Tenn. 1950).

(n5)Footnote 37. See, e.g., Baumgartner v. Meek, 272 P.2d 552 (Cal. App. 1954).

(n6)Footnote 38. See, e.g., Kaye v. Coughlin, 443 S.W.2d 612 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

(n7)Footnote 39. See McGavock v. Woodlief, 61 U.S. (20 How.) 221 (1858). See, e.g., Steven K. Mulliken, When Does the Seller Owe the Broker a Commission? A Discussion of the Law and What It Teaches About Listing Agreements, 132 Mil. L. Rev. 265-87 (1991); Kaplon-Belo Assocs. v. Farrelly, 633 N.Y.S.2d 522 (1995) (default on lease by lessee did not affect broker's right to commission); Century 21 Pinetree Properties, Inc. v. Cason, 469 S.E.2d 458 (Ga. App. 1996) (realty company acting on behalf of vendor could recover its commission from purchaser, in action arising from unconsummated sale of property, under plain language of purchase contract providing that purchasers would pay commission if they failed or refused to perform under contract); In re John Chezik Imports, Inc., 195 B.R. 417 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1996) (under Missouri law, when contract for sale is conditional contract, contract cannot become binding obligation upon parties unless and until all conditions are met and, until such conditions are met, broker has not earned commission because broker has not produced ready, willing and able buyer); Loyola Fed. Sav. Bank v. Hill, 689 A.2d 1268 (Md. App. 1997) (broker's claim for commission was granted because the court found that broker was "procuring cause" of sale to purchaser); Muirloch Realty, Inc. v. Periodical Charter & Leasing, Inc., 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 115 (Ohio App. 10 Dist. 1996) (where there is an exclusive listing contract, if a buyer, who was ready, willing and able to consummate the real estate transaction on appellees' terms, was procured within the period of the listing contract, the brokers are entitled to their commission); Blackstone v. Thalman, 949 S.W.2d 470 (Tex. App. 1997) (holding that prospective purchaser produced by real estate broker was not ready, willing and able to purchase vendor's property, on "any other price and terms acceptable to owner," as required to recover commission under listing agreement. As a matter of law, the phrase "at any other price and terms acceptable to owner," does not include proposed terms conditionally "agreed" to by the owner during negotiations, but never "accepted" by the successful conclusion of an agreement between the parties, i.e., an earnest money contract); Aasheim v. Reum, 277 Mont. 471, 922 P.2d 1167 (1996); Professionals 100 v. Prestige Realty, Inc., 911 P.2d 1358 (Wash. App. 1996) (under "procuring cause of sale" rule, when party is employed to procure purchaser and does procure purchaser to whom sale is eventually made, that party is entitled to commission regardless of who makes sale).

But see Moore and Moore Real Estate v. Aloi, 650 N.Y.S.2d 450 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (broker who worked with unsuccessful bidders was not "procuring cause" of sale of residence, precluding recovery of brokerage commission from vendors, absent agreement on closing date or proof that unsuccessful bidders had financial ability to complete transaction); Cushman & Wakefield, Inc. v. 214 East 49th Street Corp., 639 N.Y.S.2d 1012 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (broker's duty is to bring minds of buyer and seller to agreement on sale, i.e., its terms and rights, and until that is accomplished, no right to commissions accrues; it is not enough simply to open negotiations between parties).

(n8)Footnote 40. See, e.g., Fourth Street Restaurant v. Venture Realty Group, Inc., 533 So. 2d 784 (Fla. App. 1988). DiSalle Real Estate Co. v. Howell, 690 N.E.2d 25 (Ohio App. 1996) (Finding that seller rescinded contract in bad faith in attempt to escape having to pay two separate commissions was supported by evidence that the day after rescinding contract, seller contacted buyer directly to resume negotiations over property without broker's involvement, and that there was no material difference between rescinded contract and executed contract, except that latter contract excluded broker's six percent commission).

(n9)Footnote 41. See, e.g., Shumaker v. Lear, 345 A.2d 249 (Pa. Super. 1975). Schenck v. HJI Assocs., 685 A.2d 481 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996) (In real estate broker's commission agreement drafted in relation to contingent lease, where language of contract and interrelation of its provisions, along with parties' relationship and knowledge of situation, made it clear that broker knew the only way he would receive a commission would be if defendants obtained financing, contractual provision that commission was earned upon signing of agreement did not override provisions that made any commission contingent upon defendant obtaining financing); Asset Realty, Inc. v. Guyuron, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 5620 (Ohio App. 8 Dist., Dec. 12, 1996); Tesco Real Estate, Inc. v. K-Y Residential, Commercial & Indus. Dev. Corp., 1997 Ohio App. LEXIS 2829 (Ohio App. 11 Dist., June 27, 1997).

(n10)Footnote 42. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers §§ 3:45-46-3:48 (2d ed. 1992). Cushman & Wakefield, Inc. v. 214 East 49th Street Corp., 639 N.Y.S.2d 1012 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (Real estate broker failed to establish entitlement to commission in connection with eventual sale of property after broker's exclusive brokerage agreement lapsed, even though agreement entitled broker to commission if property was submitted to purchaser during term of agreement and even though broker had made two contacts with son of eventual purchaser during term of agreement; even if, as broker apparently alleged, purchaser merely acted as alter ego for son in transaction, property was first submitted to son by another party, and there was no evidence of proximate link between broker's two encounters with son and eventual purchase under terms different from those that had been proposed by broker); Coldwell Banker Town & Country Realty of Hastings, Inc. v. Johnson, 544 N.W.2d 360 (Neb. 1996) (Real estate broker was not entitled to a commission on sale of property, where no sale was made during existence of agreement between vendors and broker, sale was the result of work of vendors' attorney, not the result of anything done by broker, and neither list price nor offer obtained by broker was on substantially the same terms as were finally agreed upon).

(n11)Footnote 43. Marta v. Nepa, 385 A.2d 727 (Del. 1978).

(n12)Footnote 44. McDade & Co. v. Friendswood Dev. Co., 911 S.W.2d 541 (Tex. App. 1995).

(n13)Footnote 45. 236 A.2d 843 (N.J. 1967).

(n14)Footnote 46. Annotation. Real-Estate Broker's Right to Recover Commission from Seller Where Sale Fails Because of Seller's Failure to Deliver Good Title/-Modern Cases, 28 A.L.R.4th 1007. See also, D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers §§ 4:1-4:81 (2d ed. 1992). See also Annotation, Modern View As To Right Of Real Estate Broker To Recover Commission From Seller-Principal Where Buyer Defaults Under Valid Contract of Sale, 12 A.L.R.4th 1083.

(n15)Footnote 47. See, e.g., Taylor Real Estate & Ins. Co. v. Greene, 151 So. 2d 397 (Ala. 1963).

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.06

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.06 Restrictions on Brokers' Activities.

[Go To Supp]

§ 95.06(a) Unauthorized Practice of Law.

The issue of whether a broker is improperly engaging in the practice of law is most often joined over the matter of filling in standard form contracts for real estate transactions. Generally, it is held that the broker may indeed fill in the contract forms but may not go so far as to draft a deed or complete forms that are so complex that legal advice is required to understand the consequences of such forms. According to one judicial rationale, filling in the blanks of standard form contracts is acceptable when it is incidental to the broker's business. n48 Countervailing considerations evaluate whether clients and the public generally are adequately protected from mistakes, whether their convenience is adequately served, and whether the courts usually conclude that it is in the public interest, or at least not harmful, to permit brokers to fill in standard forms. n49

If a broker goes beyond filling in terms of a standard form, such as by adding or deleting provisions, or if separate compensation for such services is given, a charge of unauthorized practice of law may succeed. n50 These judicial pronouncements may be adjusted by statute n51 or constitution. n52

§ 95.06(b) Antitrust Violations.

The earlier practice among brokers' groups of publishing and adhering to schedules of uniform prices for services has been held to be illegal price-fixing under the Sherman Act. n53

It has also been held that a requirement to be a member of the National Association of Realtors degrees before obtaining access to a local multiple listing service may be an anti-trust violation as an unreasonable restraint of trade. n54

§ 95.06(c) Civil Rights Violations.

Brokers are prominently featured (and restricted in their discriminatory activities, if any) in the Fair Housing Act of 1968, n55 which prohibits various forms of discrimination in the advertising, selling, and renting of housing. Brokerage activity may also be restrained by the Civil Rights Act of 1866, n56 which prohibits various forms of racial discrimination.

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 48. See, e.g., Duncan & Hill Realty, Inc. v. Department of State, 405 N.Y.S.2d 339, appeal dismissed, 409 N.Y.S.2d 210 (1978). See, e.g., Edward B. Strong, Unauthorized Practice of Law in Real Estate Transactions, 15 J. Legal Prof. 441-45 (1990); Shane L. Goudey, Too Many Hands In The Cookie Jar: The Unauthorized Practice Of Law By Real Estate Brokers, 75 Or. L. Rev. 889 (Fall 1996); R. Randy Lee, The Limited Ability Of Real Estate Brokers To Prepare Contracts, 69 N.Y. St. B.J. 32 (Mar./Apr., 1997); Peter J. Birnbaum, Illinois Real Estate Lawyers And The Battle To Control Residential Closings, 84 Ill. B.J. 132 (Mar. 1996); Elizabeth S. Holmes, What Is The Unauthorized Practice Of Law And How Is It Regulated? 76 Mich. B.J. 580 (June 1997); Michael Braunstein, Structural Change And Inter-Professional Competitive Advantage: An Example Drawn From Residential Real Estate Conveyancing, 62 Mo. L. Rev. 241 (Spring 1997) (The article explains how United States lawyers lost the monopoly they once enjoyed over residential real estate conveyancing and how structural change, whether economic, technological or both, influences the demand for professional, including legal, services); R. Randy Lee, Title Work And The Unauthorized Practice Of Law, 68 N.Y. St. B.J. 16 (Dec. 1996) (discusses the unauthorized practice of law in real estate conveyances in light of legal and ethical responsibilities); Annotation, Grounds for Revocation or Suspension of License of Real-Estate Broker Or Salesperson. 7 A.L.R.5th 474; The War Between Attorneys and Lay Conveyancers - Empirical Evidence Says "Cease Fire! 31 Conn. L. Rev. 423 (Winter 1999).

Perkins v. CTX Mortgage Company, 969 P.2d 93 (Wash. 1999) (a real estate broker is permitted to complete simple printed standardized real estate forms, which forms must be approved by a lawyer, it being understood that these forms shall not be used for other than simple real estate transactions which arise in the usual course of the broker's business and that such forms will be used only in connection with real estate transactions actually handled by such broker as a broker, and then without charge for the simple service of completing the forms); Price v. Stewart, 28 Pa. D. & C.4th 352 (1996) (A woman who enlisted the aid of a non-lawyer broker to prepare deeds conveying two properties to her daughter in exchange for a life estate stated a cause of action for unauthorized practice of law where the broker allegedly omitted the provision for a life estate and where there was no allegation the deeds were incident to another transaction which the broker was entitled to handle). See, Shane L. Goudey, "Too Many Hands in the Cookie Jar: The Unauthorized Practice of Law By Real Estate Brokers," 75 Oregon L. Rev. 889 (Fall 1996).

(n2)Footnote 49. See, Pope County Bar Ass'n v. Suggs, 624 S.W.2d 828 (Ark. 1981).

(n3)Footnote 50. Cornell Assoc. Realty Ltd. v. Shaffer, 619 N.Y.S.2d 822 (1994) (real estate broker and salesperson engaged in the unauthorized practice of law by failing to provide a promised refund in a dual agency situation); but see Herring v. New York State Dep't of State, 92 A.D.2d 720, 461 N.Y.S.2d 114 (1983) (brokers interpreting the relevant statute that allowed them to retain the buyer's commission upon the buyer's default did not constitute the unauthorized practice of law).

(n4)Footnote 51. Utah Code Ann. § 61-2-20.

(n5)Footnote 52. The Arizona Constitution now permits brokers to draft any type of document, without charge, deemed incidental to real estate transactions. Ariz. Const. Art. XXVI.

(n6)Footnote 53. United States v. National Ass'n of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485 (1950). See, e.g., Annotation, Activities of Real-Estate Agent or Association as Subject to Federal Antitrust Laws, 44 A.L.R. 743. Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1474 (N.D. Ohio 1996) (Real estate brokers had not established that competitor with 48 percent market share in one city and 50.6 percent market share in another monopolized market in those cities; no evidence was presented that competitors' market share had increased after they initiated alleged anticompetitive activity and there was no evidence that there were entry barriers to real estate industry).; Annotation, Application of State Antitrust Laws to Activities Or Practices of Real-Estate Agents Or Associations, 22 A.L.R.4th 103; Annotation, Activities Of Real-Estate Agent Or Association As Subject To Federal Antitrust Laws, 44 A.L.R. Fed. 743.

(n7)Footnote 54. Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1991). Bruce D. Greenberg, Gary K. Wolinetz, 25 Years of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, 26 Seton Hall L. Rev. 637, at 652 (1996).

(n8)Footnote 55. 42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq. Case Law Development, Zoning, Housing, Custody, 20 Mental & Physical Disability L. Rep. 375 (May/June 1996) (An Illinois federal court held that the parents of two adult men with developmental disabilities and a real estate broker had standing to sue a condominium association under the Fair Housing Act Amendments (FHAA) for discriminatorily impeding a housing sale to those men); Fair Housing Council of Suburban Philadelphia v. Boyertown Area Times, 945 F. Supp. 826 (E.D. Pa. 1996).

(n9)Footnote 56. 42 U.S.C. § 1982. See also DeKalb Real Estate Bd., Inc. v. Chairman, 372 F. Supp. 748 (N.D. Ga. 1973) (Homeowner-sellers are not subject to the Federal Fair Housing Act rules; however, brokers are subject to the Federal Fair Housing Act and must sell regardless of race); People v. C. Betts Realtors, Inc., 361 N.E.2d 581 (Ill. 1977) (The Illinois statute that forbids buyers from contacting potential seller after the buyer has notice that potential seller is not interested in selling does not violate the constitutional right to free speech); but see Pearson v. Edgar, 965 F. Supp. 1104 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (statute prohibiting real estate brokers from soliciting owner to list or sell the house if owner has provided notice of his desire not to be solicited violated the First Amendment right to free speech); A Requiem for Blockbusting; Law, Economics, and Race-Based Real Estate Speculation 67 Fordham L. Rev. 1145 (1998).

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.07

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.07 Practical Aspects of Real Estate Brokers' Activities.

[Go To Supp]

§ 95.07(a) Selecting a Broker.

§ 95.07(a)(1) Should Home Sellers Use Brokers?

Dollar-conscious sellers must decide whether to deal with a broker or try to market their own houses as "for sale by owner" ("fsbo") to save the broker's commission. n57 For the real estate-wise seller arranging an uncomplicated deal, the savings can be significant. The brokerage commission of 5-7% of the selling price may siphon as much as one-third of the seller's net equity after the seller has paid his mortgage. n58 Still, brokers are involved in eight or nine out of ten home sales in the United States.

The seller who attempts to sell without a broker assumes responsibility for performing the broker's functions. A real estate novice selling without a broker runs the risk of (1) delaying or losing the deal, (2) getting outmaneuvered by a savvy buyer or selling broker, (3) and becoming liable for failure to comply with government regulations concerning closings. Frequently, sellers list with a broker only after being unable to sell the property on their own.

§ 95.07(a)(2) How Brokers Work.

The seller's broker is called the listing broker. A listing broker markets the property by running ads, preparing brochures, holding weekend "open houses," and arranging to show the property to prospects. Brokers are frequently better able to show homes, since sellers are unable to view their homes objectively and negative comments from prospective buyers could easily spark disputes. ("Oh, what hideous wallpaper and those dumb-looking chintz curtains!")

The broker also arranges to list the house in the area-wide Multiple Listing Service (MLS). Brokers who subscribe to the MLS agree to pool their listings and to split commissions between the listing and selling broker. n59 The MLS issues a consolidated book and maintains a computerized database of available listings indexed by price and area. This system allows buyers easily to preview the market and view only houses that meet their criteria and are within their price range.

When a likely buyer is found, the broker puts the deal together, first by getting the buyer to sign an offer (often in the form of a deposit receipt), and then working with the seller to counter until both agree and sign a contract.

Brokers can help buyers and sellers reconcile their disparate price expectations by showing them actual recent sales prices in the neighborhood. Listing brokers may recommend needed repairs and improvements that would make the house easier to sell. They may offer buyers the names of qualified inspectors. Successful brokers work regularly with title insurers, escrow agents and lenders, and are often in a better position than buyers or sellers to appreciate and recommend reliable ones. The real estate broker may serve as an escrow agent, holding the buyer's funds and the seller's deed. n60

The contract will usually have contingencies attached to time frames. A good real estate agent keeps a deal on schedule by making sure the parties open escrow quickly, and that the buyer promptly receives the title report, conducts inspections, fills out loan applications, and so on. The agent has a great incentive to marshal the deal to closing since the agent won't be paid until then.

§ 95.07(a)(3) Finding a Broker.

Finding a good broker takes work. It's easy to see which brokers are active in the neighborhood since "For Sale" and "Sold" signs carry the listing broker's name. n61 Disguised as a buyer, a seller can join the "lookie loos" at an open house to judge the competence of a broker firsthand. A seller should interview two or three brokers to ask about their experience, marketing plan for new listings, and recommendations about cosmetic work to maximize the marketability of the house. n62 The seller should also ask the brokers to recommend a listing price, keeping in mind that the broker isn't promising that the house will sell at that price. The broker who recommends the highest listing price is not necessarily the best. Some brokers lure sellers by pegging their suggested listing price well above current values, only to persuade the seller to reduce the price after the property has lingered on the market for months and the listing has grown stale. The best brokers recommend realistic listing prices based on current market conditions. Finally, the seller should contact client references to ensure that they were satisfied with the service received.

When the seller has selected the broker, the parties agree on terms and often sign a written listing agreement.

§ 95.07(a)(4) Should Homebuyers Use Their Own Brokers?

Prospective buyers must decide whether to rely on the seller's broker alone or seek guidance by latching onto a broker of their own. This may depend on whether the buyer is set on buying a newly built house or expects to canvass the "pre-owned" house market. One consumer publication says buyers "don't need an agent just to drive to a model home" and introduce the buyer to a developer. The agent-less buyer can negotiate the developer out of the fee the developer would otherwise pay to the agent, not necessarily by getting a reduction in the sales price but through "significant upgrades." n63

The buyer's broker is called the "selling" or "cooperating" broker. Prospective buyers must decide whether to rely on the seller's broker alone or seek guidance by latching on to a broker of their own.

Only occasionally will buyers sign written agreements with brokers. When they do, these agreements may be for exclusive representation, hourly fees for services, or "open" commitments to pay the broker for leading the buyer to a deal. Typically, however, the buyer signs no written agency agreement with the broker. The industry relies on the seller's broker (the listing broker) to have put the listing agreement in writing, and to have obtained the seller's written consent for the listing broker to cooperate with other brokers.

A buyer's broker matches MLS offerings to the buyer's needs and ability to pay. The would-be "selling" broker takes buyers from house to house, offers advice, helps negotiate and close the deal--usually for nothing more than a share of a fee the seller is already obligated to pay through the listing agreement. The agent or broker often knows where financing can be found and shepherds buyers to it. Some real estate firms combine real estate and mortgage brokerage services. In their capacity as mortgage brokers they actually raise mortgage capital and make it available to their real estate sales clients. n64

Many prospective buyers shop alone, relying on newspaper ads, "for sale" signs, and word of mouth. Among those who use brokers, few buyers obligate themselves to a single broker as their exclusive agent in finding a house. n65 A small percentage of brokers insist the buyer agree to deal exclusively with that broker as the buyer's representative. Most buyers trudge from broker to broker to see what each will present. Only the broker lucky enough to lead the buyer to the "winning" house gets to split the commission with a "listing" broker working an "exclusive."

In the future, the Internet will probably become a valuable resource for the homebuyer. Currently, companies exist to relay MLS listings over the Internet to potential buyers. The buyer fills out a form specifying her home-shopping needs. The company then simplifies and downloads understandable MLS listings to the consumer's home computer for review. Once the potential buyer sees a property she likes, the broker arranges a showing.

Because the buyer's broker is paid out of the sales proceeds by the listing broker, her services are "free" to the buyer. Occasionally, however, when the buyer and seller wrestle over the last few dollars, especially in a slow market, the listing broker may consent to reduce the commission. This is easier to do when there is only one broker in the deal. A buyer who has enlisted the help of an independent agent must persuade the agent to cut the agent's fee as well.

In the event that two buyers are competing heatedly for the same property, one represented by a broker other than the listing agent, and the other not, the listing agent has a financial incentive to steer the seller towards the unrepresented buyer. If the unrepresented buyer wins the bidding war, the listing broker keeps all the sales commission and doesn't have to share it with a buyer's agent.

Suppose a buyer exploits a broker to the fullest, rejecting deal after deal, finally signing a valid purchase-and-sale agreement and then breaching it. Does the buyer owe her broker a commission independent of what she may owe the seller and the seller's broker as a consequence of breaching the purchase-and-sale contract? Yes. The buyer may be liable to her own broker for the full commission. The buyer's broker is not bound by a liquidated damage clause in the purchase-and-sale agreement. Under these provisions, typically, even the seller's broker can claim no more against the breaching buyer than a share of the liquidated damages retained by the seller -- minus the seller's out-of-pocket costs. In any event, the purchase-and-sale agreement is between the buyer on one hand and the seller and seller's broker on the other hand. The buyer's broker isn't a party to that contract. So the buyer's broker isn't barred from suing the breaching buyer for actual damages. Courts in several states have implied a promise by the buyer running in favor of the buyer's broker to pay a full commission for breaching the purchase contract. The buyer's broker becomes a third-party beneficiary of the buyer's promise made to the seller to buy the property. n66 Some brokerage firms devise procedures to screen out this bias, but no screen is flawless.

§ 95.07(a)(5) Broker Licensing Requirements.

In all states, real estate agents and brokers must acquire and maintain an agent's or broker's license. n67 They can't recover commissions unless they comply. n68 In this section the terms "broker" and "sales agent" are used synonymously, but in the industry they imply distinct licensing standards. n69 In order to obtain an agent's license, state legislatures typically require the applicant to have passed the appropriate exam, be of good standing and reputation, and pay an annual license fee. n70 Brokers' licensing requirements are usually more stringent. For example, California law requires a broker applicant to have obtained at least two years of agent's experience or its equivalent, or a four-year college degree with a real estate emphasis, n71 in addition to taking a much more comprehensive exam.

The constitutionality of broker licensing laws has been challenged and universally upheld. In a landmark opinion, Justice Cardozo explained:

> [t]he Legislature has a wide discretion in determining whether a business or occupation shall be barred to the dishonest or incompetent. Callings, it is said, there are, so inveterate and basic, so elementary and innocent, that they must be left open to all alike, whether virtuous or vicious. If this be assumed, that of broker is not one of them. The intrinsic nature of the business combines with practice and tradition to attest the need of regulation. The real estate broker is brought by his calling into a relation of trust and confidence. Constant are the opportunities by concealment and collusion to extract illicit gains. We know from our judicial records that the opportunities have not been lost. With temptation so aggressive, the dishonest or untrustworthy may not reasonably complain if they are told to stand aside. Less obtrusive, but not negligible, are the perils of incompetence... .The Broker should know his duty. To that end, he should have "a general and fair understanding of the obligation between principal and agent... ." Disloyalty may have its origin in ignorance as well as fraud. He should know, as the Legislature has said ... what is meant by a deed or a lease or a mortgage... . n72 ... We hold that the Legislature acts within its lawful powers when it establishes a system of licenses for real estate brokers with annual renewals. n73

The licensing sections of the California Business and Professions Code, §§ 10130 through 10148, begin with the admonition: "It is unlawful for any person to engage in the business, act in the capacity of, advertise or assume to act as a real estate broker or a real estate salesman within this state without first obtaining a real estate license... ." n74 Violators can be brought by the Commissioner of Real Estate "before any court of competent jurisdiction." n75

The Code forbids suits for brokerage fees without the claimant alleging and proving to be a duly licensed real estate broker or real estate salesman at the time the cause of action arose. n76 An exception, however, is made for an attorney at law rendering legal services to a client. n77 Attorneys are also allowed to collect fees as real estate brokers, but only if they are licensed as brokers and perform brokerage--not legal--services at the time. n78 As a result, many people hold licenses both as brokers and lawyers. They maintain dual licenses and sometimes earn brokerage commissions. Their challenge comes in building and maintaining an impervious wall to separate their legal from their brokerage services.

An attorney purporting to advise a buyer or seller who also stands to benefit from a closing by raking in a broker's commission isn't well-positioned to offer independent legal judgment, since he has so great a stake in the deal closing. The attorney may advise the client to close on terms detrimental to the client just to pocket the commission.

Owners marketing their own property are exempt from broker licensing laws by implication since the purpose of the act is to protect the public against amateurs posing as qualified professionals.

State real estate commissions can suspend or revoke the licenses of salespeople and brokers for misconduct, and brokers are accountable for the behavior of the salespeople who work for them. n79

A broker who has had his or her license revoked, yet still continues to enter listing agreements representing him or herself as a licensed broker, may be guilty of fraud and intentional misrepresentation, possibly liable for punitive damages. n80

Another exception to the "no license, no commission" rule is for finders. People without a broker's license often claim and are able to collect commissions as finders. n81

> A finder is ... a middleman who introduces the parties, supplies the information to one or both about the other and is required to do little else, whereas a broker negotiates on behalf of one of the parties or performs, with the interests of one party and against the interest of the other... .The finder is a person > whose employment is limited to bringing the parties together so that they may negotiate their own contract. n82 ... But any participation, however slight, in the negotiations will bring him within the definition of a broker and require him to be licensed. n83

Many states refuse to distinguish between brokers and finders, not wanting to sanction a big loophole in their brokerage licensing statutes. n84 Other states accept the distinction between a finder and a broker, n85 reasoning that finders, whose duties are limited solely to introducing one party to another, don't need the competence, training, and professionalism required of brokers as long as they don't step over the line by participating in the negotiations, drafting the contract, or closing the deal. n86

§ 95.07(b) Listing Agreement: Is a Writing Required?

§ 95.07(b)(1) An Even Split.

In half the states, brokers' listing agreements need not be in writing. Broker agency agreements are not generally regarded as contracts for the sale of real estate, and so aren't covered by general Statute of Frauds provisions. n87

In half the states, there is a special provision appended to the state's Statute of Frauds requiring brokerage agency agreements to be in writing; a provision in the licensing statutes to that effect; or state administrative regulations requiring listing agreements to be in writing. n88 To satisfy these requirements, the writing must be signed by the broker and the owner, describe the property to be sold, and the amount of the commission. n89 California's Statute of Frauds, for example, has a paragraph covering "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent, broker, or any other person to purchase or sell real estate, or to lease real estate for a longer period than one year ... for compensation or a commission." n90

None of these laws requires a written agreement among brokers to split commissions. A person licensed as both an attorney and a broker brought suit to recover a commission and was met with a defense that he lacked a written listing agreement. He argued that since attorneys don't need written agreements to collect their fees, he could collect his commission as an attorney. The Texas appellate court found the services he had rendered as an attorney incidental to the brokerage services he had performed. He was not exempt from the statute requiring written broker's listing agreements, just for being an attorney. n91

§ 95.07(b)(2) Which Group of States Is Correct?

Should promises to pay brokerage commissions have to be in writing for brokers to enforce them? This sort of question lies behind all Statute of Frauds requirements. The case for written listing agreements, like the case for Statutes of Frauds generally, is based on bringing home to people the seriousness of what they are doing and in clarifying the details of the engagement: the amount of the commission, the property to be sold, at what price, and the type of listing agreement as well as the broker's obligations under it. In addition, a written listing agreement gives the seller evidence that a fiduciary relationship has been created between the seller and broker. One author has put in economic terms the calculation legislators should have been making: "Although the requirement increases the transaction costs associated with the preparation of the writing, a net savings results because the requirement eliminates the costs associated with the fraud, perjury, and misrecollection that otherwise would be prevalent." n92

The writing requirement for listings as well as broker licensing laws has been cynically ascribed to the lobbying efforts of successful brokers as a way of keeping out part-timers, like housewives, out-of-work actors, and moonlighting schoolteachers. Consumers, though, may be grateful. The writing requirement may save some naive homeowners from unwittingly obligating themselves to pay commissions to brokers who try to solicit listings and claim later they got a go-ahead from a homeowner who thought she was just being polite by not saying "no, get lost."

As one commentator explains, "The truism 'talk is cheap' is not necessarily true for an owner/seller talking with a real estate broker... . [O]wners who wish to market property should deal with brokers only pursuant to written agreement." n93

Commercial developers are enthusiastic about the written listing requirement because it cuts down on the flood of unsolicited letters they receive from brokers offering potential development sites who would later claim commissions if the developer bought one of those sites, even if the developer had learned about the site without outside help.

As a written agency agreement may protect sellers against brokers falsely claiming commissions, similarly, the requirement of a written listing agreement may protect brokers against reneging sellers falsely denying what they owe.

An argument often put forward against the writing requirement is that disputes over commissions that would have been avoided by a written listing agreement are rare and don't justify the burden of mountains of paperwork put on everyone. The volume of litigation won't diminish, just the content of the suits. In other words, there are as many disputes likely to arise because a broker neglected to obtain a written listing agreement as there are suits likely to be prevented because the broker did obtain a written listing.

The written listing requirement may also be faulted because once the brokers put their minds to drafting form listing agreements, those contracts are going to be specifically designed to benefit the broker. Sellers will fare far worse on many occasions than they would have under the common law of agency (designed to protect principals) if they are required to sign a form listing designed to protect agents.

§ 95.07(b)(3) Exceptions to the Writing Requirement.

§ 95.07(b)(3)(i) Finders.

The states where brokerage agency agreements must be in writing are split on whether unlicensed "finders" can collect a commission without a written agency contract. n94

In jurisdictions that require brokers and/oor finders to have written listing agreements, those who don't produce signed contracts are unable to recover quantum meruit--for the value of their efforts. n95 For finders, there are four possibilities under state licensing laws and requirements regarding written listing agreements:

(1) some states require neither a license nor a written agreement,

(2) some states require both,

(3) some states require a broker's license but no written listing authorization agreement, and

(4) some states require a written authorization to find but no broker's license. n96

§ 95.07(b)(3)(ii) Equitable Estoppel.

There is a well-established exception to the statute of frauds when one party has partly or completely performed the bargain. A variation of this exception appears in brokers' suits for commissions on oral listings in states requiring that those listings be written.

The exceptions are for fraud or equitable estoppel. The cases arise typically when the client actually buys or sells property with the broker's assistance. The broker claims to have been promised a commission if the deal worked out; the broker performed; the client got the benefit of the transaction, and then refused to pay the broker. The broker asks the court to "equitably estop" the client from denying the promise. n97

§ 95.07(b)(3)(iii) Fraud.

A fraud claim in this setting can be asserted in either of two forms:

(1) the client promised to pay the commission;

(2) the client also promised to put the promise into written form or said it was already in writing, and it wasn't.

Honoring claims for commissions based on fraud or equitable estoppel defeats the writing requirement. Many courts recognize this and aren't sympathetic to the fraud and equitable estoppel exception. For instance, in California, although finders are allowed to present and collect claims based on equitable estoppel theories, n98 brokers are not.

The landmark California case denying brokers the equitable estoppel defense to the Statute of Frauds is Phillippe v. Shapell. n99 A broker, Phillippe, had spent several years trying to locate development sites for a major commercial homebuilder, Shapell. He finally succeeded in identifying a site that Shapell bought nearly two years after Phillippe, himself, had abandoned efforts to conclude the sale. Shapell was also a licensed broker and a successful developer, and refused to pay a commission, contending he had identified the site on his own. The court dismissed the broker's case.

Other state courts have done the same. n100 In Dooley v. Lachut, n101 the broker claimed fraud where the seller refused to sign the listing broker's written commission agreement, stating that he was a man of his word and that the commission would be paid. The seller then sold the property to a buyer the broker had found. The Rhode Island Supreme Court maintained its firm stance against brokers without written agreement:

> Real estate brokers who enter into oral agreements in contravention of clause sixth [which requires the commission agreement to be in writing] of our statute of frauds can expect no assistance from the courts in their effort to extricate themselves from their own folly. If a real estate broker fails to obtain a written contract of employment from his customer, the broker proceeds at the broker's own peril. The plaintiffs' allegations as to the fraud practiced upon them by the defendants are of no avail. To hold otherwise would reopen the floodgates of litigation which were closed when clause sixth became law. n102

§ 95.07(b)(4) Seller's Broker May Recover Against Buyer for Unlawful Interference--Even Without a Written Listing Agreement.

Ironically, a buyer who takes advantage of a broker's efforts may be liable in tort for the commission even if the broker had no enforceable listing agreement and thus no case for a commission against the seller who hired the broker.

Assume, for example, K entered an oral open listing for his farm with broker M. Broker M drove client D to the site, showed him around, told him the price was $30,000, and waited for D's call, promised five or six weeks hence if D was interested. The call never came because D went to K directly and bought the farm for $25,000. "Are you sure no broker showed you to the property?" K asked. "Absolutely sure," lied D, and signed a written statement to that effect. K wouldn't have cut his price $5,000 if he had thought a broker's commission was due.

Soon M learned about the sale. Irked, broker M sued buyer D for the lost commission on the theory that D had unlawfully interfered with M's business, resulting in a deprivation of prospective or potential economic advantage.

Did it matter that M had no written agreement with K, the seller, and hence no contract right to collect a commission directly from K? "Not at all," a New Jersey appellate court decided.

> The circumstance that Kramer's agreement to pay a commission was oral and did not satisfy the Statute of Frauds does not remove the present action in tort against Deppert from the application of the above principles. The Statute of Frauds was enacted for the protection of the party sought to be charged. It is personal and not available to strangers to the agreement. n103

The legal basis for the broker's claim in a case like this is that the buyer tortiously interfered with the broker's prospective advantage. The elements of the tort are:

> 1. An economic relationship either between seller and broker or buyer and broker, with the probability of future economic benefit for the broker. Note the phrase "economic relationship," no binding contract is needed.
>
> 2. The defendant knew the relationship existed.
>
> 3. The defendant intentionally acted to disrupt the relationship.
>
> 4. The defendant succeeded in disrupting the relationship.
>
> 5. The defendant's act proximately caused damage to the plaintiff. n104

Vendors, too, may be liable in tort if they interfere with a listing or selling broker's legitimate efforts to fulfill the terms of their agreement. Remember, the absence of a written listing agreement will foreclose a cause of action in contract when the state requires written listing agreements, but the tort claim door remains wide open, writing or not.

§ 95.07(c) Negotiating the Listing Agreement.

The written listing agreement should contain the following information: "(1) the names of the parties; (2) a description of the property; (3) the sales price, including terms of payment; (4) the amount of compensation; (5) the termination date of the broker's employment; and (6) any additional specific provision, e.g., whether there is an exclusive agency or right to sell." n105

Theoretically, all the provisions of the listing agreement are negotiable. The form listing agreements are prepared by brokerage firms and state Realtors degrees Associations, and thus tend to favor the real estate broker. n106 The homeowner who has never before seen a listing agreement should consider:

> (1) narrowing the search for a broker to two or three, and comparing the terms of their agreements;
>
> (2) keeping in mind that the key deal points are usually the amount of the commission which is negotiable -- within limits -- and a detailed marketing plan;
>
> (3) reading the proposed listing agreement carefully for specific problems the seller might have with it (e.g., the seller plans to renew an existing lease during the listing period and won't want to pay a commission on a short-term lease renewal);
>
> (4) if possible, reviewing the agreement with a friend or advisor familiar with the brokerage business who can suggest which terms are negotiable and which are not;
>
> (5) accepting the reality that large firms may be less flexible in changing the form provisions to minimize the administrative burden of keeping track of what is in each agreement and to avoid favoritism among clients; and

(6) the firm able to offer the most seller-friendly listing agreement may not be the firm best positioned to market the property for the highest price in the shortest time.

§ 95.07(c)(1) Types of Listings: Open Listing, Exclusive Agency, Exclusive Right to Sell.

Listings are divided into three types, n107 based on whether the broker becomes entitled to a commission only if the broker finds a buyer directly, and whether the broker gets paid if the house is sold to a buyer found by another broker or by the seller.

(1) Open Listing. An "open" listing promises a broker a commission only if the broker and the broker alone finds a buyer on terms acceptable to the seller. Under an open listing, the seller may list the property with as many brokers as the seller chooses, and may sell it personally without paying anyone a commission. Only a broker who actually finds a buyer earns a commission on an open listing. For this reason a prudent broker might hesitate to share an open listing except with other brokers who had promised to split their take with the listing broker. To obtain the commission, the broker working on an open listing must establish that she was the "procuring proximate cause" of the contract or sale.

Were you to examine closely all the cases in which sellers dispute brokers' claims to being the "procuring cause" of a sale, you would come away slightly dazed by the crazy quilt of the fact patterns. Introducing the parties is not enough. The consummated deals need to be analyzed closely to determine whether the parties made their deal in spite of the broker's efforts or because of those efforts. The upshot is that even when a broker finds the prospect who ultimately buys the property, the broker on an open listing is not automatically entitled to collect a commission unless and until the broker shepherds the parties into a contract and, in some states, a closing.

Brokers in residential real estate don't think much of open listings. As one lawyer-broker explains: "Most real estate agents will work on open listings only if the potential sales commission is large and it is a rainy day with nothing better to do. Rarely will an agent spend money advertising an open listing, and most multiple listing services will not accept open listings." n108

(2) Exclusive Agency. If the broker becomes the "exclusive agent," then the broker is the seller's only sales representative. The broker gets all or an agreed share of the commission even if another broker is the "procuring cause" of the sale. The broker gets nothing if the owner himself finds a buyer without the broker's help. n109

(3) Exclusive Right to Sell. A broker with the "exclusive right to sell" is assured of being the seller's sole sales agent. If anyone sells the property--another agent or even the seller--the listing broker collects a fee. In such a listing agreement the broker becomes entitled to a commission if "the property is sold" during the term of the listing "by broker, by seller, or by another broker, or through any source." n110 A listing broker who is a member of a multiple listing service agrees to split the commission with any broker who actually finds a buyer, usually 50/50. If the seller finds the buyer, there is usually no split.

The broker wants an "exclusive" for obvious reasons, and some will work only on "exclusives." Most brokers will try to persuade the seller to give them an exclusive by explaining that only exclusives can be listed with the MLS. Not listing the property there means a reduced market, a longer selling time, and possibly a lower sale price for the seller, or no sale at all.

Of course, no law prohibits brokers who obtain open listings from agreeing to split their commissions with the broker who ultimately finds a buyer. That is what often occurs in commercial deals where open listings are common and "exclusives" are rare.

By contrast, home seekers seldom obligate themselves to a single broker as their exclusive agent in finding a house. n111 Some prospective buyers shop alone, relying on newspaper ads, "for sale" signs, and word-of-mouth. Others trudge from broker to broker, to see what each will present. Only the broker lucky enough to lead the buyer to the "winning" house gets to split the commission with the "listing" broker working an "exclusive." In England, listings are generally open. Brokers (estate agents) don't cooperate with each other. The buyer shuffles from one agent to the next, hoping eventually to discover all the properties on offer that might suit the buyer. There are no multiple listing services, no commission splits, and thus little incentive for estate agents to accompany buyers from site to site. They just set up appointments. They don't necessarily conduct negotiations, and their fees are 2-2.5%. In the words of a Californian buying in London: "While this lack of assertiveness may at first seem attractive compared with the aggressiveness of some American Realtors, it soon became frustrating." n112

§ 95.07(c)(2) Amount of Commission.

The listing agreement form invites the seller to negotiate the amount of the commission. This invitation can be seen as a response to an antitrust price-fixing challenge addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court in McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans. n113 The court held that brokers are sufficiently involved in interstate commerce to be subject to Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. n114 Broker efforts to squelch commission discounters continue to be a source of antitrust litigation, n115 and discount brokers become victims "of harassing phone calls, a campaign of false and discrediting rumor and stolen signs ... boycotts and price-fixing." n116 Industry representatives insist: "A 6% commission rate is no longer that prevalent. All kinds of rates are in effect, and the market dictates what they will be." n117 One broker-to-the-wealthy reports that "those buying a home in the $1 million to $5 million range may haggle over price and fees, those buying homes above $5 million are in a different league ... for the mega-rich, price isn't an overriding concern." n118

One option is to have the commission percentage vary, escalating from say 6% to 7%, if the broker achieved a price greater than the vendor and broker anticipated the property would bring. A seller in a hurry could try to spur a quick sale by offering a higher percentage for the broker producing a buyer in 30 days, a reduced percentage for a buyer in 60 days, less still in 90 days. Such arrangements are rare. Maybe this is because the commission is a percentage of the selling price, and sellers believe brokers already have ample incentive to procure a buyer at the highest possible price. Maybe brokers believe the percentage they already achieve is as much as they would be able to negotiate in this sliding scale arrangement. Maybe the complexity of a sliding scale discourages its widespread use. What if a broker was to earn 5% on any sale up to $200,000 and 6% for a sale above $200,000? The seller for $199,000 would owe $2,050 less in commissions than for a sale at $200,000. Maybe sellers feel brokers would discourage buyers from making offers at low prices, even though many sellers might prefer low offers to no offers. (Sellers considering an offer below the listing price could always renegotiate the brokerage fee as a condition to accepting the offer.)

Brokers often negotiate commissions, particularly on "big ticket" properties, if the listing price is realistic and the broker feels confident the property will sell quickly. The listing broker will point out that a below-market fee could discourage other brokers from showing the property. If the listing does not specify the commission price, the broker is entitled to recover the ordinary and usual commission charged in the area.

Once a buyer is hooked, some sellers find it easier to negotiate a commission reduction as they haggle over price. Trying to knock down the fee earlier could discourage the broker from working as hard to sell the house as with a full commission. n119 Sellers try particularly hard to reduce the broker's commission if the buyer isn't represented by a broker because in this case the seller or listing broker does not have to split the commission with anyone.

When determining broker compensation and the commission, note that the average broker in the U.S. earned about $35,000 a year in 1993 and worked 60 hours per week. This is about $11.00 an hour, so $180, or even $90, is well above the average rate.

Traditionally, in jurisdictions where MLS cooperation agreements are the norm, commissions are split. First, the listing broker splits the fee with the buyer's broker, usually 50/50. Then, the broker or sales agent splits that fee with her firm. Remember, the firm pays all or most of the bills. The split between the broker or sales agent and the firm can vary greatly and is typically based on experience in the business; 30/70 (agent/firm) for novice agents and 80/20 or even 90/10 for a very few superstar agents.

In Minnesota, the average commission is 7% of the purchase price, and the customary split is 45% to the buyer's broker, and 55% to the listing broker. To encourage in-house sales, many dual agency companies (discussed later) pay the dual agent, formerly the buyer's agent, a "bonus" that brings the commission to a total of 55% of the purchase price. The company can afford to do this because they are getting a split from both dual agents as opposed to only getting one from the listing broker or the buyer's broker.

To illustrate this, assume the total commission received from the sale is $10,000; the listing broker gets 55% ($5,500) and the buyer's broker gets 45% ($4,500). Two agents or the same agent, acting as dual agent(s) in the same firm with a 60% split, would split with the firm as follows: the dual agent on the seller's side gets his normal 60% ($3,300), the dual agent of the buyer's side also gets $3,300 (this includes a $600 bonus for selling in-house), and the company gets the rest ($3,400). Without this in-house sale, the company would have received a split from only one side, either $2,200 from the listing broker or $1,800 from the buyer's broker. The buyer's broker would only get $2,700.

Clearly, the company and the former buyer's broker (now dual agent) have a monetary incentive to sell "in-house." Most sellers should like this idea because all the agents at the listing company are more motivated to show the seller's house, yet the seller still pays the same commission. As for the buyers, they may be disadvantaged because agents would be less likely to show them houses listed with other companies, but the buyers are free to ask the agent to show them these houses.

The Greater Boston Real Estate Board requires that the listing contract specifically include the fee arrangement. Some may wonder if this disclosure is adequate to the buyer or seller who probably doesn't understand the ramifications of the varying splits.

§ 95.07(c)(3) Length or Term of Listing.

A listing agreement should have a fixed duration to protect sellers from ineffectual or lazy brokers. Brokers, on the other hand, need enough time to sell the property so as to recoup their investment in marketing.

According to a 1983 Federal Trade Commission survey of brokerage contacts, 12.4% specified a listing period of 31-60 days, 55.2% between 61 and 90 days, and 23.5% more than 120 days. n120

Brokers on "exclusives" are required by case law and statute to put a time limit on them or risk having their listings declared invalid or lapsed. n121 In some states, brokers are required "to include a definite expiration date" in the written listing. n122

A well-established Los Angeles firm with numerous brokers and offices throughout the prime housing areas in southern California, has a standard form that contemplates a 180-day exclusive listing period. A more aggressive, small, local firm gives listing sellers the right to revoke on 24 hours' notice, which brings them quite a few listings they would otherwise lose to well-established firms.

§ 95.07(c)(4) Cancellable Listings.

Brokers protest cancellation clauses and many won't accept them. They spend money printing brochures, running newspaper ads, posting signs, conducting open houses. Why should they risk the seller cancelling just as offers are starting to come through? If brokers work hard promoting a property subject to a 30-day cancellation, they could be robbed of the right to pick the fruit off the tree they planted. If the broker holds back, and doesn't expend much effort marketing a property because it has a 30-day cancellation clause, the seller isn't well served. In either case, cancellation clauses are no substitute and could even deter an agreed, aggressive marketing campaign. At any rate, that is the broker's case against 30-day cancellation clauses.

§ 95.07(c)(5) Defining the Scope of the Broker's Marketing Efforts.

Some clients aren't content to rely on a "due diligence" or "best efforts" promise in a listing agreement. They demand to know precisely what steps the broker plans to take in marketing the property and when. Most brokers have no trouble promising to submit the listing to the MLS (although firms hold the listing back a week or two, hoping to sell it "in-house" to a buyer the firm also represents). Brokers will also usually promise to "caravan" the property -- show it to other brokers on their weekly tours of new listings. Will they develop a flyer? Magazines? The knowledgeable seller dealing with an agent for the first time might insist on approving a detailed marketing plan as part of the listing agreement.

§ 95.07(d) When Do Brokers Earn Their Commissions?

§ 95.07(d)(1) Traditional Rule: Once a "Ready, Willing and Able" Buyer Has Been Produced. n123

Many real estate sales contracts are never closed. The rationale is that the broker has produced a "ready, willing and able" purchaser when the buyer and seller strike a deal. Even if the purchaser proves financially incapable of closing, courts in these states reason that the seller should have demanded evidence of financial ability before signing the contract. n124 Most states, before awarding a commission, require a signed formal purchase-and-sale agreement. In a few states, the broker becomes entitled to a commission even before a contract is signed -- when the parties reach a "meeting of the minds." Most reported cases, however, do involve a purchase-and-sale agreement, so courts rarely have need to specify whether a written contract is a necessary predicate to commission recovery. In most of those states, the broker's right to a commission vests when the buyer and seller sign a contract -- not when the sale closes.

Sellers can condition their obligation to pay a commission on the occurrence of a future event --successful completion of the sale or leasing of the property. In many states, if sellers don't include this contingency, they become liable for commission on deals that fall through. n125

§ 95.07(d)(2) Emerging Rule: No Commission Unless the Deal Closes.

Should sellers be liable when the buyer breaches or when the deal fails due to circumstances beyond either party's control? A growing number of state courts have adopted the rule that if the deal fails for any reason other than the seller's willful breach, the broker's commission is forfeited. n126 The rationale behind this view is best explained in Ellsworth Dobbs, Inc. v. Johnson: n127

> The [traditional view] is deficient as an instrument of justice. It permits a broker to satisfy his obligation to the owner simply by tendering a human being ... so long as the owner enters in a sale contract with such person. The implication of the rule is that the owner has the burden of satisfying himself as to the prospective purchaser's ability, financial or otherwise, to complete the transaction. He cannot rely at all on the fact that the purchaser was produced in good faith by the broker as a person willing and able to buy the property... .Such a rule, considered in the context of the real relationship between broker and owner, empties the word 'able' of substantially all of its significant content and imposes an unjust burden on vendors of property. It seems to us that fairness requires that the arrangement between broker and owner be interpreted to mean that the owner hires the broker with the expectation of becoming liable for a commission only in the event a sale of the property is consummated, unless the title does not pass because of the owner's improper or frustrating conduct.

> * * *
>
> In a practical world, the true test of a willing buyer is not met when he signs an agreement to purchase; it is demonstrated at the time of closing of title, and if he unjustifiably refuses or is unable financially to perform then, the broker has not produced a willing buyer. n128

In perhaps 40 states the courts follow a formal rule that the broker is entitled to her commission even if the deal falls through. n129

Even courts in states that formally adhere to the traditional rule often deny brokers their commissions when deals fail. They cite ambiguous provisions in the purchaser-and-sale contract, escrow instructions or other documents to support a conclusion that the parties contracted out of the commission-due-when-buyer-found rule.

Even courts in states that formally adhere to the traditional rule often deny brokers their commissions when deals fail. They cite ambiguous provisions in the purchase-and-sale contract, escrow instructions or other documents to support a conclusion that the parties contracted out of the commission-due-when-buyer-found rule. n130 They determine that the buyer was not financially able to buy the property at any time. So the broker hadn't produced a ready, willing or able buyer after all. n131 They cite minuscule differences between the terms of the purchase offer and the listing agreement to find a noncomplying contract or offer. n132 They find the purchase-and-sale agreement flawed. n133 They find broker misconduct. n134 All in all, even courts in states not actually adopting the "no closing, no commission" rule manage to find ways to deny brokers their commissions on failed deals more than half the time. n135 In sum, the so-called majority rule probably isn't applied a majority of the time because courts perceive it as inexcusably unfair in many cases. The rule is a "default" rule; a rule to be applied only in the absence of a contract provision to the contrary. Many courts and scholars believe the default rule should favor the principal, not the agent. The broker should bear the risk when the broker and seller have not decided in advance whether the broker is to be entitled to a commission should the deal fall through at no fault of the seller. Most sellers are not even aware such a risk exists. Putting on them the burden of anticipating it seems harsh.

Policy Factors to Select Which Rule Governs "When Commission Is Due." Professor Burke defends the majority rule advancing four points in its favor: (1) once a purchase-and-sale contract is signed, the deal is beyond the broker's control; (2) the vendor can sue on the contract if the buyer breaches; (3) the vendor, when the property is put back on the market, can increase the purchase price to recover the commission paid on the failed deal, and (4) "the vendor's income and livelihood are not at stake -- the broker's are." n136

These points can be contested:

(1) Although buyers and sellers may destroy their own deals after signing purchase-and-sale contracts, brokers are supposed to steer the contract to closing. Their responsibilities don't end when the contract is signed. Most brokers accept the fact that it is easier to collect a commission on a completed transaction than on a failed one. If the contract fails through no fault of the vendor, the breach was as much beyond the vendor's control as it was the broker's. On the other hand, if the contract fails because the vendor was at fault, the broker should be able to recover against the vendor.

(2) Professor Burke contends that the vendor can sue the breaching buyer, but so can the brokers -- unless they have explicitly limited their rights by signing a liquidated damage addendum to the purchase-and-sale agreement. There are practical reasons why vendors decide not to sue breaching buyers. One is that litigation outcomes are unpredictable, and if either party seeks specific performance, the seller will not be able to sell the property until the lawsuit is resolved. Even if the vendor wins the suit, the vendor may incur non-reimbursable legal fees and incidental costs.

(3) The vendor cannot "increase the purchase price to recover the commission on the failed deal when the property is put back on the market" because the vendor has no control over market prices. If property values rise enough, the vendor may not be harmed by having to pay the broker a commission in the first deal; but if values fall, paying the first commission will compound the seller's loss.

(4) The broker's first concern as a fiduciary should be fulfilling the client's reasonable expectations, regardless of the fact that brokers make a living off commissions. Most sellers would be surprised by a broker insisting on a commission when the deal fails due to a buyer's breach. Few thoughtful sellers would contract to pay a commission on a failed deal. It is difficult to imagine that brokers would insert an explicit waiver in the listing agreement, even in states where the seller may relinquish his rights to the "no closing, no commission" rule by contract, if the buyer breaches.

In 1975, Massachusetts adopted the "no closing, no commission" rule explicitly as a default rule, inviting brokers to reverse it by contract. One broker made a halting effort to do so. The broker had simply restated the familiar rule that the broker would be entitled to a commission on finding a "ready, willing, and able" buyer. The appellate court ruled that this was insufficient to reverse the default rule which favors the seller in Massachusetts. The broker had failed to make clear that she intended to earn a commission even if the deal fell apart through no fault of the seller. The appellate court appreciated that sellers, "not practiced in the subtleties of real estate sales," would need an explicit warning before they could rightly be deemed on notice of the "commission even if no closing" rule. n137

§ 95.07(d)(3) In All States, the Seller Owes the Broker a Commission for "Willful" Breach, But What Is "Willful" May Not Always Be Obvious.

Sometimes the seller gets stuck with the commission when the buyer backs out because the seller gave the buyer a good reason not to complete the sale. n138 In Dworak v. Michals, n139 the seller exaggerated (misrepresented) the rental income of his apartment house, printing unrealistic rental income projections in the listing material. This misrepresentation gave the buyer a good legal reason not to go through with the deal. After the buyer walked, the seller was held liable to the broker for a commission even though the buyer had canceled the contract.

Sometimes the seller refuses to go through with a sale because of unusual conditions the seller wants to write into the purchase-and-sale agreement but failed to include in the listing agreement. Maybe the seller doesn't want to sell without taking back a big mortgage for the lion's share of the purchase price; or maybe the seller doesn't want to pay the prepayment penalty that will be due on the existing loan. Perhaps the house can't be delivered vacant because the seller recently leased it for two years to a trial lawyer. The seller might insist on keeping the antique light fixture hanging in the bedroom or replacing it with a reproduction. n140 In all these cases the seller must specify her special conditions in the listing agreement. The seller doesn't have to sign a purchase-and-sale agreement without them; however, the seller will owe a commission to the broker who finds a buyer willing to buy on terms consistent with the listing agreement but unwilling to accept these "special" conditions, if they are not specified in the listing agreement.

A seller could even be held liable for willful breach to a broker for a commission when the property is destroyed or damaged during escrow. Under the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (UVPRA), the buyer doesn't have to take the damaged property, and may elect to rescind the contract. If the buyer elects to rescind, the seller may have to pay the broker's commission anyway. n141

Consider the case of a the seller who inherited property and discovered during escrow a serious flaw in the probate process. The seller can't convey marketable title without further litigation--a suit to quiet title, perhaps. Is the breach "willful," triggering liability for a commission even though the deal failed? n142 Probably so if she can't convey a marketable title. The Colorado legislature enacted a law to protect sellers caught in such a bind. n143

A good listing agreement anticipates disputes and avoids them by requiring that the seller warrant ownership of the property, that there be no undisclosed defects in mechanical or electrical systems, that the seller provide a termite report, and that the property isn't involved in a bankruptcy proceeding. Sometimes cautious commercial brokers actually include a detailed purchase-and-sale contract as part of the listing agreement, evidencing the exact terms and conditions the listing seller agrees to accept--or pay the broker a commission for not accepting.

If the broker knew about the title defect before the listing agreement was entered, and had no special reason to believe the seller would be able to clear it, the broker may not be entitled to a commission. n144 For instance, a widow told the broker she only owned a one-third undivided interest in the property but thought she could gain the assent of the other owners. When she couldn't, the deal failed. The broker sued for a commission and lost. The broker's commission was contingent on there being a closing. Since the seller had explained she owned only a part of the property, this put the broker on notice of the potential defect from the start. n145 Similarly, a broker also lost a suit for commission when the contract of purchase-and-sale explicitly gave the seller the right to cancel for not being able to convey good title, and the seller canceled for precisely that reason. n146 But a co-owner who lures the broker to accept a listing by assuring the broker he can and will procure the approval of the other owners, and fails, can become liable to the broker for a commission. n147

When only one spouse signs a listing agreement, the broker may assume the spouse represents the couple, and that both will sign a purchase-and-sale agreement later. Should the other refuse to go along later, the broker will have a cause of action against the listing spouse -- unless the broker knows that the marriage is likely to be terminated.

§ 95.07(d)(4) California Lets Sellers Off the Hook for Brokerage Commissions When Deals Are Subject to Conditions That Aren't Met.

At least one California court adopted a compromise position on the broker's commission entitlement when a deal failed and the seller did not willfully breach. If a contract contains contingencies such as a "subject to financing" or "subject to inspection" clause, the broker earns a commission only if the deal actually closes. But if the contract was "clean" and unconditional, the broker's entitlement vested when the contract was signed, n148 although payment was deferred to closing as a convenience to the seller. Presumably, the "no conditions" deal fails, and the broker is entitled to a commission even in a no-fault or buyer default.

§ 95.07(d)(5) Sellers Can Protect Themselves By Contracting That They Won't Be Liable for a Commission Unless the Deal Closes.

Listing agreements and purchase-and-sale contracts sometimes afford protection from unlimited liability for a commission in the event of a no-fault or buyer default. Listing agreements condition the broker's entitlement on "sale." Purchase-and-sale contracts sometimes limit the seller's liability to splitting with the listing broker any of the buyer's money retained as damages. Sellers often sign these promises without considering whether the sum left them after the split is likely to cover their actual losses in the event of buyer's breach. Sellers also give little thought to the possibility that they may prefer relinquishing their right to keep a down payment in exchange for the buyer's agreeing to free the property of any claims so the seller can put the property back on the market quickly without threat of the buyer suing. Yet, sellers seldom reserve in their listing agreements the right to release a reluctant buyer and return the down payment without liability to the broker. Brokers might be wary of granting sellers this much discretion for fear of side deals between buyer and seller that could undercut the broker's legitimate right to a commission if they defer their closing to a time safely past the listing agreement termination date. Not uncommonly, the broker contracts for the right to a full commission if the parties terminate mutually.

A seller could protect himself from being liable for a commission in the event of a no-fault or buyer default. By including in the listing agreement a statement that no commission will be due in case of a failure to close for any reason other than fraud or bad faith by the seller, the seller would have the right to release a reluctant buyer prior to closing without risking liability to the broker. n149

A clause that protects the seller from a claim for a commission unless the sale closes doesn't necessarily protect the buyer. Generally, the buyer is not liable to the listing broker for a commission unless the buyer agreed to pay it. n150

However, the buyers may be liable to their own brokers if that broker identifies a property meeting the buyer's specifications, the buyer contracts to buy it and then breaches. n151

In a few jurisdictions, the buyer who breaches may be liable to the listing or seller's broker as well if the purchase-and-sale agreement authorized a commission to be paid on closing, as most contracts do. The seller's broker becomes a third-party beneficiary of the purchase-and-sale agreement. A buyer who breaches that agreement also breaches an implied promise to complete the transaction, which would result in the seller's broker or listing broker having the right to be paid from the sale proceeds. n152

§ 95.07(d)(6) Time for Payment Does Not Determine When Right to Payment Has Been Earned.

Absent a provision to the contrary, a broker's commission becomes due and payable when the seller's completes the services promised to be performed. By an express stipulation in the contract of employment, however, the time may be advanced or postponed as the parties see fit. n153 Even in states where the broker becomes entitled to a commission when the buyer and seller sign a contract, payment of the commission is usually deferred until the closing so the seller can pay the broker from sale proceeds.

§ 95.07(e) The Broker's Listing Agreement Provisions to Deter Seller Fraud.

§ 95.07(e)(1) Why Brokers Worry About Sellers Trying to Beat Them Out of Their Commissions.

Brokers worry a lot that sellers will appropriate the value of their work and cheat them out of their commissions. Occasionally, a seller and buyer, the latter located by a broker, will conclude a deal after a decent interval following expiration of the listing agreement. n154

§ 95.07(e)(2) Extension Clauses as a Way of Discouraging Sellers from Defeating a Broker's Claim to a Commission.

Extension clauses provide that the broker is entitled to a commission notwithstanding the expiration of the term of the listing agreement if the property is sold to one with whom the broker, prior to such expiration, negotiated or had some other form of dealing described in the agreement. The purpose of such a clause is to protect the broker by preventing the owner from postponing acceptance until the listing agreement has expired and thereby circumvent the broker's right to compensation for locating a purchaser. The validity and enforceability of extension clauses have been universally upheld. n155

Admittedly, it is wrong for the seller to profit from the broker's work without paying the commission. But it is also wrong for a broker who wasn't able to strike a deal to claim a full commission just for introducing a buyer to the property when it took the efforts of another broker to close the deal.

Disputes arise in extension clauses when the broker's contact with the buyer was minimal and fleeting. Some clauses require the broker to have "negotiated" with the buyer, whereas others require only that the broker have "introduced and interested" the prospect. When the broker provides the seller with a list of prospective buyers and the ultimate buyer's name is on it, the seller is estopped from claiming he didn't know the broker first introduced him to the buyer. If the broker does not present the seller a list with the ultimate buyer's name on it, the seller may seek protection against potential broker claims by asking buyers if they have had contact with a broker. If the buyer says "no," and affirms that in writing, the seller has gone pretty far toward establishing a claim of "innocence." Should the broker later claim a commission on a quantum meruit or unjust enrichment theory, the seller may be in a position to show that she has not been unjustly enriched because she reduced the purchase price to take account of the fact that she believed no commission would be due on the sale. n156 The first broker's claim to a commission on unjust enrichment grounds would also be defeated if the buyers were represented by their own broker, and the seller paid that broker a commission. n157

Disputes may also arise when the seller did not realize there had been contact between broker and buyer. Extension clauses avoid this problem by requiring brokers to give sellers a list of all the people the broker introduced to the property. That is one reason brokers insist that every viewer "sign in" at an open house.

Extension clauses are valid for a specified time (90-180 days is typical), after which the seller may deal freely with prospects the broker had found. Unless the broker can prove that the parties delayed their deal just to avoid the commission, the broker is out of luck if they enter into a contract after the extension period. n158

§ 95.07(e)(3) Limits on Seller's Right to Revoke Listing Agreement.

Courts reach different results in cases where sellers attempt to cancel before the broker has expended any marketing effort and the listing agreement has no cancellation clause. Once the broker begins to market the property, courts hold sellers fully liable for commissions if the broker finds a buyer on exactly the terms of the listing. n159

§ 95.07(e)(4) Limitations on Seller's Right to Withdraw Property from Sale.

Many listing agreements give brokers a right to the full commission if the seller withdraws the property from the market before the broker has found a buyer. Is this a penalty (an excessive sum extracted for breach) or forfeiture? The broker gets a full commission under a withdrawal-from-sale clause even if there was no full-price buyer anywhere in sight, and even though brokers seldom sell as many as half their listings. Full-commission-on-withdrawal clauses have been upheld against forfeiture challenges in California, but not in Oregon unless the broker can show that a sale was imminent or reasonably likely at the listing price when the listing was terminated. n160

California courts have enforced full-commission-on-withdrawal clauses citing various arguments. Some courts declare them not penalties for breach, but contracts for alternate performance as long as the fee for withdrawal does not exceed the full commission. California courts do note a preference for having a withdrawal fee. As for limiting the broker to out-of-pocket expenses up to the point of withdrawal, California courts explain that brokers don't work just to break even. The "benefit of the bargain" is the full commission, and that is what the seller who cancels should pay on withdrawing without justifiable cause.

§ 95.07(e)(5) Are Sellers Obliged to Sell?

A typical form appears to give the broker the right "to sell the property," but it doesn't. The buyer isn't a party to the listing agreement nor even an intended third-party beneficiary of it. The broker has the authority to find a purchaser, but not to execute a sales contract or a deed on the seller's behalf. Only a power of attorney, or a quite explicit form, would be construed to authorize the broker to actually sell the property. n161 The seller isn't required to sell even if the broker manages to locate a prospective buyer "ready, willing and able" to pay the full listing price. Until the seller signs a purchase-and-sale contract, the seller's only duty under the listing agreement is to pay the broker a commission when the broker locates a willing buyer. Thus, a seller who decides not to sell may be out of a commission but not out of a house up to the moment the seller signs the purchase-and-sale agreement. Brokers must be careful to make sure prospective buyers understand that the broker cannot commit the seller to a deal, and that the buyer has no enforceable deal with the seller until all the material terms are put in writing and signed by the seller. The broker who relays a verbal acceptance from seller to buyer, as if there were a done deal, without an appropriate cautionary warning, risks becoming liable to the buyer if the buyer relies on the broker's reassurance, passing up a chance at a good deal on another property, and the seller reneges.

A broker is concerned that a greedy seller may try to avoid a brokerage commission by colluding with a prospective purchaser. Consider the devious seller's options. The seller may withdraw the property from sale or wait for the listing to expire and then enter a contract with the buyer. If the seller has already entered a contract with the buyer, the seller may agree to rescind and sell to the buyer several months later.

§ 95.07(f) Agency Relationships Created by the Listing Agreement.

"The law of agency imposes on the agent the duty of utmost good faith, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in her transactions with her principal." n162 A broker, as an agent, is held to this standard. n163 One of the duties the listing broker owes the seller is a duty to expend reasonable effort to sell the property. Sometimes the seller and broker agree to a marketing strategy, but, more frequently, the details of marketing are left to the broker. The seller who feels not enough is being done must prove that the broker's efforts fell below a "reasonableness" threshold to justify revoking the listing or recovering damages against the broker. As long as the broker expends reasonable effort, she bears no responsibility for the seller's loss. The listing agreement is not a guarantee that there will be a sale on the listing terms. For example, a broker, expending reasonable efforts, is not liable if a financially strapped seller loses the property through foreclosure because the broker failed to find a buyer on time.

The broker must also exercise reasonable skill and care in providing the seller price advice. n164 If the property doesn't sell because it was listed at too high a price, and the market falls before the seller figures this out, the seller may seek to hold the broker accountable for the price the seller could have gotten had the property been properly priced and sold at the outset. Similarly, if the seller receives an offer and is advised by the broker to accept it, does accept, and is soon swamped with back-up offers at prices considerably above the accepted price, the seller may seek to cover the difference between the price she accepted and the price she could have received, claiming the broker should have told her the first offer was too low.

A broker representing a buyer has a duty to make sure the title is as represented -- or to advise the buyer to contact a title insurer or attorney to ascertain whether the seller's title is good, free of liens and encumbrances. n165

The broker owes all others a non-fiduciary "good faith" and "fair dealing" obligation, bounded by tort theories of fraud, misrepresentation, and negligence.

§ 95.07(f)(1) The Listing Broker Is the Seller's Agent.

The listing agreement makes the listing broker an agent of the seller. n166

> There flows from this agency relationship and its accompanying obligation of utmost fidelity and good faith, the legal, ethical, and moral responsibility on the part of the listing broker, as well as his subagents, to exercise reasonable care, skill, and judgment in securing for the principal the best bargain possible; to scrupulously avoid representing any interest antagonistic to that of the principal in transactions involving the principal's listed property, or otherwise self-dealing with that property, without the explicit and fully informed consent of the principal; and to make, in all instances, a full, fair, and timely disclosure to the principal of all facts within the knowledge or coming to the attention of the broker or his subagents which are, or may be, material in connection with the matter for which the broker is employed and which might affect the principal's rights and interests or influence his actions. n167

Notice the mention of the listing broker's subagents. They are included because most written listing agreements authorize the listing broker to employ subagents, usually the buyer's broker.

§ 95.07(f)(2) Is the Selling Broker the Buyer's Agent or the Seller's Subagent?

Majority Rule: The Cooperating Broker is the Subagent of the Seller and of the Listing Broker. The Cooperating Broker Is Not an Agent of the Buyer. In a majority of states, the cooperating broker n168 (the broker first approached by the buyer) is not the buyer's agent. The cooperating broker is considered a subagent of the seller and the listing broker.

The Restatement (Second) of Agency § (1) (1957) defines a subagent as "a person appointed by an agent empowered ... to perform functions undertaken by the agent for the principal, but for whose conduct the agent agrees with the principal to be primarily responsible." The subagent is the agent of both the appointing agent and the principal. n169

Courts most often find that the subagency relationship begins when a listing broker lists a property in an MLS. The act of listing a property in an MLS "constitutes an offer of subagency by the listing broker to other [MLS] members to procure a buyer in exchange for a percentage of the sale commission." n170 "Most courts accept the MLS subagency at face value and do not undertake the more complicated task of assaying what relationship does exist between member brokers." n171 Other courts have elaborated, attributing the subagency relationship to industry custom n172 or the fiduciary relationship that is formed when the seller agrees to pay the selling broker's commission. n173

According to a government survey, over 70% of all buyers surveyed believed that the cooperating broker was acting as their agent. n174 These homebuyers, unaware of the subagency, "[r]eposing confidence and trust in the broker ... are potentially exposed to manipulation and exploitation." n175

Buyers in states following the majority rule are not completely without protection. Although they cannot bring an action for breach of duty, buyers can sue in tort for misrepresentations made by selling brokers. n176 Further, buyers can avoid the majority rule by designating the cooperating broker as their agent in a written agreement. However, courts stress that this intention must be in writing. "The prevailing perception of the broker as an agent of the seller is too firmly imbedded in the real estate business to permit such a finding on the basis of conduct alone." n177

One commentator explains that the > technical issue of subagency often determines the substantive rights of the parties to a lawsuit. An entire cause of action or defense may stand or fall on a finding of subagency. The following contexts in which the issue has arisen demonstrate this dependency: n178

>
> (a) Cooperating broker sues the seller and/or listing broker, claiming wrongful refusal to pay the agreed-upon share of the fee-split. The seller and the listing broker claim the cooperating broker lacks contractual privity, and therefore has no right to the fee. The broker counters by asserting a subagency relationship to the listing broker, entitling the broker to a fee as the procuring cause of sale. n179
>
> (b) The buyer claims the seller and listing broker are responsible for the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact by the cooperating broker, even though the seller and listing broker made full disclosure to the cooperating broker. n180
>
> (c) The seller sues the cooperating broker for breach of fiduciary duty when the cooperating broker fails to give advice to the seller, tells the buyer the lowest price the seller is likely to accept, or informs the buyer of several intangible factors adverse to the seller that do not reach the level of material facts (which give rise to a common-law duty to disclose). n181
>
> (d) The buyer sues the cooperating broker for breach of fiduciary duty, claiming an implied agency relationship existed between them. The cooperating broker asserts subagency to show that he or she was not an agent of the buyer. n182
>
> (e) One party backs out of the sale and the other sues for breach of contract or specific performance. The defendant claims the cooperating broker was an agent of the buyer as well as a subagent of the seller, justifying rescission by either party due to undisclosed dual agency. n183
>
> (f) A real estate broker who was denied access to the MLS argues that the membership requirements violate antitrust laws. The MLS claims its function as a mechanism for the appointment of subagents justifies reasonable access restrictions. n184 The same can be asserted for denying consumer access. n185

Minority Rule: The Cooperating Broker is the Agent of the Buyer. n186 One commentator has illustrated the problem faced by a buyer in a majority rule state:

> Often, the broker has been in the company of the purchaser for many hours and has conducted some fairly confidential interviews with the prospective purchaser. Given such extensive contact with the buyer, and such minimal contact with the seller, the buyer is justified in believing that the agent will do his best to obtain the property for the buyer at the lowest possible price and on the most advantageous terms. Of course, for the agents to attempt to do so is a violation of the agent's duty to the seller. However, it would be unrealistic to expect the buyer to feel that a broker who has worked with him extensively is attempting to obtain the highest possible price for the seller, which, in actuality, is the agent's duty. n187

Some state courts have rejected the majority rule and hold the cooperating broker to be solely and exclusively the agent of the buyer. These courts believe this is more in line with the buyer's expectations.

Courts and some states legislatures have rejected the subagency rule for several reasons:

(1) the MLS serves as a means for exchanging information, not to establish agency relationships; n188

(2) the fact that the commission is split is not indicative of an agency relationship because the brokers could have achieved the same commission distribution acting as independent contractors; n189

(3) the buyer's broker is often working with the buyer to locate a suitable property before the seller lists the property. n190

Even in states where, as a matter of law, the buyer's broker is the buyer's agent exclusively, the broker isn't insulated from the temptation of pushing the buyer into closing a deal quickly and at a sturdy price. After all, the buyer's broker depends for the fee on splitting a commission with the listing broker.

Nor will the buyer's being represented by a broker nominally acting as the buyer's own agent act as a barrier to the buyer later suing the buyer's own broker, the listing broker, and the seller if the buyer is unhappy about the condition of the property or the neighborhood and what the seller and broker didn't tell the buyer.

Characterizing the buyer's broker as the buyer's agent does free that broker to offer independent advice to the buyer.

§ 95.07(f)(3) In Some States a Broker May Be Agent to Both Buyer and Seller: The Dual Agency.

A broker, who collects a fee from anyone other than the broker's principal without prior disclosure, breaches a fiduciary duty. n191 In some states, however, the same firm or broker may represent both the buyer and the seller, as long as they both know and consent to the dual representation. This type of agency is known as a dual agency. In the dual agency, the listing broker becomes the buyer's agent but doesn't collect a separate fee from the buyer. The listing buyer simply keeps the entire commission instead of having to split it with another agent.

The dual agency often arises from the "open houses" that the listing broker stages. At these events the broker meets potential buyers, and the unrepresented buyer may want the listing agent to be a dual agent looking out for his interests no less than those of the seller. The listing broker has a great incentive to represent the buyer as well. Besides not having to split the commission, the listing broker maintains control over the transaction and avoids the hassle of dealing with another broker.

The dual agency, however, does not exist merely because a broker represents both buyers and sellers. The broker must bring the parties together to create a dual agency, by showing the seller's property to the buyer. n192

In response to changes in brokerage relationships, like the emergence of dual agencies, many states have enacted laws requiring that brokers disclose, in writing, the type of agency involved. n193 Some states have very detailed laws, n194 and others just have a vague requirement of disclosure. n195 In the states that have detailed laws, the statutes usually specifically state that the broker may not disclose:

> (1) that the seller will accept a price less than the asking price or listed price, unless otherwise instructed in writing by the seller,
>
> (2) that the buyer will pay a price greater than the price submitted in a written offer to the seller, unless otherwise instructed in writing by the buyer,
>
> (3) the motivation of any party for selling, buying, or leasing a property, unless otherwise instructed in writing by the respective party,
>
> (4) that a seller or buyer will agree to financing terms other than those offered.

Similar to most states, Minnesota, by statute, allows the broker to serve as dual agent, representing seller and buyer in the same transaction, as long as the dual agency is disclosed, and the parties consent in writing. Nonetheless, Edina Realty, Inc., a Minneapolis area firm with about 2000 sales associates, was sued for two hundred ten million dollars in real estate commissions collected from more than twenty thousand clients because "it hadn't adequately disclosed dual-agent relationships." n196 Although ultimately the firm settled for a mere $14 million, the Edina Realty litigation caused an "uproar among brokers." n197 Learning a lesson, the Edina firm no longer represents buyers with its own listings; it only represents the seller.

A dual agency creates significant potential for conflicts of interest. n198 In representing the seller, the broker is supposed to negotiate the highest price with the fewest contingencies, yet in representing the buyer, the broker is supposed to negotiate a low price, and warranties against defects. Despite the heroic efforts of skilled and honest brokers, it isn't easy to be a fiduciary to opposing parties at the same time. One commentator observes: "Imagine hiring a lawyer to represent both the prosecution and the defense in the same case. In short, no man can serve two masters." n199 This may be an overstatement. Opposing parties to a deal aren't necessarily engaged in an adversary proceeding where one party's win is the other's loss. They may both be winners if the deal closes, especially after the contract price and terms are settled and all contingencies have been fulfilled. At that point, it seldom takes two brokers to process the deal through closing.

The National Association of Realtors degrees, studying the potential confusion when one broker represents both parties, concluded in 1986 that a disclosure program may be instituted to eliminate the confusion. Brokers representing both parties must disclose the dual agency and get each party to consent as soon as practicable. n200 Many states implemented this recommendation, and, in those states, the courts hold that a broker's failure to disclose and obtain buyer and seller's consent to a dual agency is a breach of fiduciary duty. As a result, a broker who fails to disclose a dual agency and obtain consent, risks losing her commission even if the parties are unable to show actual damage. n201

The legitimacy of the dual agency has been vigorously challenged. There is no justification for permitting brokers, who are not qualified to explain or understand the legal ramifications of conflicts of interest, to undertake dual agency. n202

Maryann Taormina, a broker-owner of Century 21 Gold Key Realty in Riverdale, New Jersey comments, "If the seller says to us, 'I'm getting transferred, bring us any offer,' I can't disclose that [to a possible buyer] without written permission. In contrast, a buyer's broker who knows that the seller is being transferred is obligated to tell the client." n203

There is one potential advantage to clients in a dual agency. n204 "Because clients receive less service when a firm represents both sides, many in the industry believe consumers ultimately will insist on reducing the commissions real estate agents are paid in those situations." n205

§ 95.07(f)(4) California's Statutory Approach to Regulating the Broker's Agency Relationship.

In 1988, California enacted Civil Code §§ 2373-2382 in order to clarify the rules regarding agency relationships. The Code doesn't choose between the majority and minority views regarding subagency. Instead the statutes invite the parties to select their own agency relationship. n206 Section 2375 offers a model disclosure form that the broker is required to hand buyers and sellers:

> When you enter into a discussion with a real estate agent regarding a real estate transaction, you should from the outset understand what type of agency relationship or representation you wish to have with the agent in the transaction.
>
> Seller's Agent
>
> A Seller's agent under a listing agreement with the Seller acts as the agent for the Seller only. A Seller's agent or a subagent of that agent has the following affirmative obligations:
>
> To the Seller:
>
> (a) A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in dealing with the Seller.
>
> To the Buyer and the Seller:
>
> (a) Diligent exercise of reasonable skill and care in performance of the agent's duties.
>
> (b) A duty of honest and fair dealing and good faith.
>
> (c) A duty to disclose all facts known to the agent materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that are not known to, or within the diligent attention and observation of, the parties.
>
> An agent is not obligated to reveal to either party any confidential information obtained from the other party which does not involve the affirmative duties set forth above.
>
> Buyer's Agent
>
> A selling agent can, with a Buyer's consent, agree to act as agent for the Buyer only. In these situations, the agent is not the Seller's agent, even if by agreement the agent may receive compensation for services rendered, either in full or in part from the Seller. An agent acting only for the Buyer has the following affirmative obligations:
>
> To the Buyer:
>
> (a) A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in dealing with the Buyer.
>
> To the Buyer and the Seller:

(a) Diligent exercise of reasonable skill and care in performance of the agent's duties.

(b) A duty of honest and fair dealing and good faith.

(c) A duty to disclose all facts known to the agent materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that are not known to, or within the diligent attention and observation of, the parties. An agent is not obligated to reveal to either party any confidential information obtained from the other party which does not involve the affirmative duties set forth above.

Agent Representing Both Seller and Buyer

A real estate agent, either acting directly or through one or more associate licensees, can legally be the agent of both the Seller and the Buyer in a transaction, but only with the knowledge and consent of both the Seller and the Buyer.

In a dual agency situation, the agent has the following affirmative obligations to both the Seller and the Buyer:

(a) A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty and loyalty in the dealings with either the Seller or the Buyer.

(b) Other duties to the Seller and the Buyer as stated above in their respective sections.

In representing both Seller and Buyer, the agent may not, without the express permission of the respective party, disclose to the other party that the Seller will accept a price less than the listing price or that the Buyer will pay a price greater than the price offered. Betty Broker obtains a listing on seller's condo, and begins trying to sell it. She knows her job is to reel in the highest price for the seller.

§ 95.07(f)(5) The Distinction Between Fiduciary and Negligence-Based Obligations.

A recent case depicted the difference between the duty of ordinary care a broker owes to the party in the deal who is not her client, and the duty the broker owes her own client. In Salahutdin v. Alcantara & Coldwell Banker, n207 the husband plaintiff was the child of Russian peasants who fled the 1917 Russian Revolution for Korea. He and his wife were born in Korea but despite that fact, were legally regarded as stateless persons there and not allowed to own property. Eventually, they settled in California and bought a home in San Mateo County. When they sold that home and were ready to invest, they decided to buy a property big enough so it could eventually be subdivided into two lots -- one for their son and one for their daughter. They never wanted themselves or their children to be landless again.

They told this to broker David Seigal, who worked with Coldwell Banker when they solicited his help to find them a house in Hillsborough. He explained how subdivision processing worked in Hillsborough, and indicated they would need at least a one-acre site in order to subdivide it. He told them such properties were rare. They promised patience.

Then Mr. Seigal came upon a listing in his own office for a house on "1 acre +." The listing agent was Betty Kruse. She had got the idea the property was one acre or more from the sellers. The property was fenced and the area within the fence was more than one acre. The plaintiffs bought for $274,000. That was in 1979.

Ten years later, their southerly neighbor tore down the old fence and replaced it, moving it northward. The plaintiffs protested that the new fence encroached on their property. A survey was made. The survey revealed that the southerly neighbors were right. The plaintiff's property was smaller than they had been led to believe by the brokers. In fact, it was just short of an acre, .998 acres, and in all probability could not be subdivided.

They sought recourse against Betty Kruse and David Seigal. Betty Kruse was exonerated. Her misrepresentation, based on what the seller had told her, was innocent. California does not penalize brokers for innocent misrepresentation.

Seigal's situation was different. He was a fiduciary. His breach was labeled "constructive fraud." It could as well have been labeled "negligent misrepresentation." This is more a matter of pleadings and trial court conclusions based on the facts than a hard and fast or bright line distinction.

"Constructive fraud" is constructive because there is no actual intent to deceive. The label is affixed when a fiduciary does wrong.

The primary difference between constructive fraud and negligent misrep-resentation is the measure of damage that accompanies each. To some extent -- although case law is in some disarray -- the more serious the infraction, the more unfavorable the measure of damage socked to the defendant.

Two competing measures are: (1) the restitution measure, sometimes called out-of-pocket, calculated to be the amount necessary to put the plaintiffs where they were originally; and (2) benefit of the bargain, what the plaintiffs would have gotten had the representation been true. Here, the plaintiffs' appraiser conceded that the property was worth $925,000 when the "fraud" was discovered. "Out of pocket" the plaintiffs weren't. They bought for $274,000 property now worth over three times as much -- in the opinion of their own appraiser. But there were benefits of the bargain losses. Had it been subdividable, it would have been worth $1,100,000 according to their own appraiser. David Seigal (or his insurer) paid the difference in damages -- $175,000.

The fact that Betty Kruse lost nothing and the misrepresentation cost David Seigal $175,000 shows the difference between fiduciary and non-fiduciary standards, or maybe between innocent and negligent misrepresentation.

§ 95.07(f)(6) The Emergence of the Transaction Broker.

A licensee who facilitates a brokerage transaction between the seller and a buyer is an agent known as a Transaction Broker. Transaction brokers do not affirmatively represent either the buyer or seller as an agent. By statute, they represent the deal, not the parties. No fiduciary duties exist, except for the duty to use skill, care, and diligence and the duty of accounting. n208

By acting as a transaction broker, a broker can reduce liability. The broker is non-representative, merely bringing the parties together, not participating in the negotiation of the deal. The broker is still required, however, to treat the seller and buyer with honesty and fairness, disclosing to all parties all known facts that materially affect the value of the property.

Where a broker is entitled to act as a transaction broker by state statute, the licensee must become a transaction broker at the onset -- with prior written notice to the parties. If the buyer and seller are not given prior written notice, the licensee is deemed to be an agent of either the buyer, the seller, or both. n209 The amount of compensation does not determine whether an agency or transactional brokerage has been created. n210

One Florida real estate firm holds itself out exclusively as a transaction broker. At one time, however, the firm distributed advertisements that the company was acting as the "exclusive agent" of two sellers. This shows that there is still a misunderstanding between real estate agents and brokers as to what the various agency roles entail. n211

§ 95.07(g) The Listing Broker's Implied Obligations to the Seller.

Brokers, like lawyers dealing with their clients, are fiduciaries, and held to "the highest ethical conduct." Some obligations to their clients are enforceable even though not specified in the listing agreement.

§ 95.07(g)(1) What A Broker Buying Property from Seller Must Disclose.

The listing broker has a fiduciary duty to advise sellers what the listing price should be and when they are asking too little. n212 There are some brokers, though, who, like Oscar Wilde, can resist anything but temptation. Brokers are occasionally tempted to buy the client's underpriced property themselves, and maybe resell it. n213 Brokers are legally obligated to disclose these purchases. A broker who decides to sneak a purchase might arrange for a friend, relative, or employee to buy it for her secretly.

Sellers have good grounds for refusing to sell to the listing broker, rescinding on a broker who secretly bought through a "straw," n214 or refusing to pay a commission to a broker when one of the broker's employees buys the property without telling the seller that the buyer works for the brokerage firm. n215

The "Real Estate Q and A" column of the Los Angeles Times carried a letter from a reader who had tried to sell her house for four months with no luck. As the listing was about to expire, her broker brought forward a purchase offer from the broker's brother--at $15,000 below the asking price:

> [B]ecause the house was vacant and we were paying on two mortgages, we decided to accept. The contract provided for a 60-day closing time. Unknown to us, during the 60 days the brother of the agent found another buyer who paid over $10,000 more than we sold the house to the agent's brother. At the closing, we thought it was strange that our deed was to the ultimate buyer, not to the agent's brother. We feel the agent's brother made a quick $10,000 profit at our expense. Do you think we should do anything about this? n216

The following excerpt suggests the answer:

> A broker is under the duty to disclose the name of a prospective purchaser to his principal, at least in response to a request by the principal. However, if an actual sale is consummated, there is a strong tendency, in most circumstances, to regard the commission as having been earned notwithstanding his failure to disclose the purchaser's identity. In some jurisdictions the court may find that the admitted nondisclosure, concealment, or misrepresentation by the broker was not material, or was not harmful or prejudicial in any way to the principal. Nevertheless, in the situation where the broker effects a sale of the vendor's property to his partner, or to a firm in which the broker himself owns an interest, such fact not being revealed to the vendor, or where the property is sold by an employee of the broker without the knowledge of the broker to a nominal purchaser with the intention of a secret resale later at a profit, the cases have usually been resolved in favor of the vendor, and brokers have been denied commissions. n217

Answering the letter in his Los Angeles Times "Real Estate Q and A" column, attorney-broker Robert Bruss replied:

> In most states there is nothing illegal about a double escrow if full disclosure is made to the seller.
>
> However, in your sale, the realty agent had a fiduciary duty to you to disclose all material facts, including the second sale by the agent's brother at a profit of over $10,000. That is called a "secret profit." It was received at your expense by a close relative of the realty agent.
>
> Perhaps it was just a coincidence that a second buyer was found who would pay $10,000 more than you received for the house. I suggest you report the matter to the state real estate commissioner for investigation and possibly revocation of the real estate agent's license. You also might want to sue the parties involved for your $10,000 lost profit. n218

Once the broker resells to an innocent buyer, courts won't set the sale aside. The innocent buyer has done no wrong, and probably paid full price. Yet, only when the property is resold can the seller prove exactly how good a deal the broker got. If the broker's resale occurs long after the first closing, it may reflect a rising market and not a listing price below market. What the seller wants is a constructive trust to be imposed on the broker's illicit gain: a judgment that the broker turn over the profit to the seller. The seller's theory is that if the broker had been truthful and told the seller what the property was worth, the seller would have realized that gain by selling directly to the eventual buyer. The claim of constructive trust is misplaced if the broker's resale occurs long after the first closing because it may reflect a rising market and not a listing price below market.

Anti-double dealing rules protect buyers as well. The buyer may be protected against a broker in a secret double escrow even when the broker is exclusively the seller's agent.

Assume that a listing broker tells a motivated buyer that the seller insists on a purchase price of no less than $100,000 for the property. The broker parlays the buyer's down payment to buy the property at $90,000, and resells it for $100,000 to the buyer in a double escrow. Upon learning of having been duped out of $10,000, the buyer sues the broker. Can the buyer recover even though the listing broker wasn't the buyer's agent? "Yes," ruled the Florida Supreme Court over four decades ago:

> Generally speaking an agent is responsible only to his principal. This, however, is different. The broker in Florida occupies a status under the law with recognized privileges and responsibilities. The broker in this state belongs to a privileged class and enjoys a monopoly to engage in a lucrative business... .The statute requires: "... all applicants who are natural persons shall be competent, honest, truthful, trustworthy, of good character and bear a reputation for fair dealing... ." n219

Notice the quoted language omits the word "fiduciary." The listing broker is not the buyer's agent and owes no fiduciary duty to the buyer. Still, courts find sufficient leeway in the concepts of ordinary due care, good faith and truthfulness to protect the buyer from overpaying when the listing broker is bent on pocketing the overpayment.

The listing broker is also held to a high ethical standard when competing against buyers to purchase the listed property. The broker must deal "firmly and honestly with the prospective buyer." n220 The listing broker, as bidder, has an advantage against all other buyers -- especially if they are not represented by brokers. The listing broker can offer the seller a price minus the brokerage commission. In a case where a fee was 10%, a broker named Palermo made an offer to buy property at $270,000. With no broker's commission, this was equal to the competing buyer's offer at $300,000. If that buyer had bought, the seller would have owed Palermo a commission of $30,000. Palermo and his salesmen took an active role in the negotiations between seller and prospective purchaser Palermo and Palermo Realty Co., Inc. [may well have] violated their duty toward Bush [the competing buyer] by failing to disclose Palermo's interest in buying the subject parcel n221

Palermo was alleged to have used a feasibility study that the rival buyer had prepared. It apparently indicated that the property was a good buy. The buyer's remedy might be damages or a court decree that Palermo convey the property to Bush. Another possibility is to have Palermo hold title as trustee for Bush, liable to account to Bush for all resale profit Palermo might realize.

Seller Not Liable for Commission When Broker Offers to Buy on Terms of Listing Agreement. Suppose the broker offers to buy the property at the full listing price and discloses his status as purchaser. The seller is getting her price in full, and the broker is doing nothing sneaky. But the seller refuses to sell. Has the broker earned a commission then? Probably not.

> To preserve and ensure the fiduciary relationship between broker and seller, a broker may neither purchase from nor sell to his principal unless the principal expressly assents thereto or acquiesces in such a course, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances. n222

Even if the seller agrees to let the broker purchase the property, the broker is not entitled to a commission. Once an agent ceases to represent the principal and becomes a party to the deal, there arises a potential for conflict with the principal, no matter how fair the agent may be in that particular situation. A broker can't legitimately claim a commission in a transaction to which she has become a party because she can no longer represent her principal's interests adequately.

§ 95.07(g)(2) The Limits of the Broker's Obligations in Handling Price Negotiations.

Offers and counter-offers are usually relayed from buyer to buyer's broker to seller's broker to seller and back again with not much "schmoozing." Brokers seldom introduce the parties to each other, perhaps because they fear the parties will not get along and kill the deal or get along so well that they will collude to cheat the broker(s) out of a commission.

Brokers often hear things that would be of great value to the other party and must decide whether relaying what they have learned is in their client's best interest. Confidentiality is required of fiduciaries, but there is an exception when "telling a secret" advances the principal's interests, and the principal never told the broker not to tell. In dual agency situations, the broker's duty to disclose material facts often conflicts with the duty of confidentiality. When studying California's dual agency rules, some believe that the legislature favors disclosure over confidentiality when a choice must be made. Consider the typical examples:

> (1) The sellers are about to file for divorce and agree to sell the house before filing so buyers won't think they are desperate to sell fast -- but they are.
>
> (2) The buyers are a couple, and one of them says she has got to have the house at any price.
>
> (3) Sometimes the seller's broker learns the seller's reservation price -- the lowest price the seller would take -- from a previous negotiation. The price is well below the asking price.
>
> (4) May the seller's broker disclose this information to prospective buyers to keep them from being unduly discouraged by a listing price they deem unacceptable?

> There must be "bad faith" in informing the purchaser that the piece of property may be purchased for less than the listing price. In most cases, the broker is allowed to recover the commission and found not to have breached his duty. [This is] because courts are slow to assume the existence of bad faith on the part of the broker from a mere statement made to the purchaser. n223

Haymes v. Rogers, a case often quoted in real estate transactions casebooks, rejects the majority rule. n224

> One of the propositions of law relied upon by the appellant is as follows: "The law requires that a real estate broker employed to sell land must act in entire good faith and in the interest of his employer, and if he induces the prospective buyer to believe that the property can be bought for less, he thereby fails to discharge that duty and forfeits all his rights to commission and compensation for his work."
>
> There is no doubt that the above proposition of law is correct. A real estate agent owes the duty of utmost good faith and loyalty to his principal. The immediate problem here is whether the above proposition is applicable to the facts in this instance.
>
> The question is, is it a breach of a fiduciary duty and a betrayal of loyalty for a real estate broker to inform a prospective purchaser that a piece of realty may be purchased for less than the list price? We believe that such conduct is a breach of faith and contrary to the interests of his principal, and, therefore, > is a violation of the fiduciary relationship existing between agent and principal which will preclude the agent from receiving a commission therefrom. n225

The undisputed facts were that the broker had obtained a listing for $9,500 on property ultimately sold for $8,500. The listing broker told the purchasers to try an offer of $8,500. The listing broker had also told the sellers that $9,500 was too high, and that repeated efforts to sell at that price had failed.

The dissent argued the listing broker had done nothing wrong.

> Udall, Justice (dissenting).
>
> There is no disagreement between us as to the high standard which the law prescribes must be maintained in dealings between an agent and his principal ... .The difficulty comes in applying the law to the facts of this case.
>
> The great majority of the reported cases denying a brokerage fee involve instances where (1) the agent acts adversely for the purpose of securing a secret profit for himself or otherwise advancing his own welfare at the expense of that of his employer; (2) an agent disclosing the necessitous circumstances of his principal; (3) the agent is guilty of fraud or dishonesty in the transaction of his agency; (4) his conduct is disobedient or constitutes a willful and deliberate breach of his contract of service; or (5) were he to withhold information from his principal which it is his duty to disclose... . n226

Ultimately, the Arizona court left to trial whether the broker had acted in bad faith. Considering Haymes, you may decide the authors should have framed their proposition in the conjunctive. n227

§ 95.07(g)(3) The Broker's Duty to Verify Buyer's Creditworthiness.

Buyers don't usually provide financial statements to brokers or sellers; they provide them to prospective lenders once escrow has opened. The broker's commission usually depends on the broker producing a "ready, willing, and able" buyer. "Able" means financially capable of completing the deal. If the buyer turns out to lack the cash or creditworthiness to complete the deal, does the seller owe the broker a commission anyway?

In most states, no:

> [t]he broker's right to his commission is not defeated by a subsequent default on the customer's part, unless the principal's promise to the broker is expressed to be conditional upon actual performance by the customer, or unless the broker has failed to reveal to the principal facts known to him which would indicate the likelihood of such default, or unless he is guilty of some similar breach of duty to the principal. n228

The seller can reduce the risk of becoming liable to the broker if the buyer breaches for lack of ability to complete the sale by:

> (1) Obtaining a statement from the broker before signing a purchase-and-sale agreement that if the buyer proves financially unable to complete, the broker will waive the commission,
>
> (2) Conditioning the listing broker's entitlement to a commission on the actual deal closing,
>
> (3) Insisting on a credit check before accepting the buyer's offer, or
>
> (4) Making sure the purchase-and-sale contract is conditioned on the buyer proving his creditworthiness > and obtaining the necessary financing or satisfactory loan commitment.

In about a dozen states, though, brokers can't collect on failed deals, particularly when the sale is not consummated because of a purchaser's default due to financial inability. n229 In these jurisdictions courts accept the fact that sellers seldom are in a position to check out the buyer's credit before signing a contract.

Even under the majority rule, the broker must prove the buyer was financially "able" to complete the purchase at the contract date. n230 Further, the broker who conceals or misrepresents facts about the purchaser's wherewithal risks forfeiting the commission and having to pay the seller's damages. n231 This can happen when the broker secretly lends the purchaser the down payment, reports the purchasers have the money to swing the deal when the broker knows they don't, or the buyer requested the deposit check be held in escrow without cashing it, and broker did so without telling the seller. When a seller defers a part of the purchase price, taking back a mortgage or deed of trust, the seller becomes, in effect, a lender, dependent on the buyer's creditworthiness for eventual payment of the purchase price. In this situation, if the buyer supplies the broker with false credit information and the broker makes no effort to verify it, the broker may end up paying off the purchase money loan when the buyer defaults.

That is exactly what happened in Schoenberg v. Romike Properties. n232 The buyer offered a second trust deed on a downtown Los Angeles building he owned as security for a purchase money note. The buyer represented the value of the building to be $895,000, based on an appraisal that he himself had ordered, and the brokers advised the sellers that a security interest on the downtown building would be safer than a security interest on the home being sold. Had either the brokers or the seller made even a cursory investigation, they would have discovered that the building was located in "skid row" and was worth less than $100,000 rather than $895,000. Subsequently, the buyer defaulted and the sellers' security disappeared behind the existing first trust deed. In holding that the brokers and the buyer were liable for fraud and negligence, the court stated:

> [E]ven though, in their ignorance, they may have believed the sale would be to the advantage of [sellers] their gross neglect of their duties as fiduciaries, to act in the utmost good faith and to refrain from the slightest false statement or concealment which would reasonably influence the judgment of their principals rendered them guilty of constructive fraud.
>
> * * *
>
> [The sellers] had a right to rely upon the statements and recommendation that were made to them, and had no duty to make an independent investigation. n233

As it turned out, the buyer had skipped town and never appeared in court, leaving the brokers alone to cover the sellers' losses. On cross-complaint, the broker tried to shift all liability onto the buyer. The court ruled that "the fact that the [brokers] were among [the buyer's] victims cannot affect the rights of [sellers] to compensation for their loss." n234 The buyer's misrepresentation to the brokers fell short of fraud.

§ 95.07(h) The Listing Broker's Obligation to Disclose to the Buyer the Condition of the Premises.

§ 95.07(h)(1) Generally.

A disgruntled buyer who discovers a defect in the property may look to the listing broker to cover the costs of cure. "Until recently, real estate brokers named as defendants in post-transaction, property defect lawsuits shielded themselves behind the common-law doctrine of caveat emptor." n235 That defense still holds up in a few states. But the case law trend is decidedly in the buyer's favor as buyers invoke various tort theories: misrepresentations (intentional, negligent, even innocent in some states) or negligence. Cases holding brokers liable for negligent or intentional misrepresentations are more frequent than cases holding them liable for innocent misrepresentations. Innocent misrepresentations arise in situations where the defect was unforeseeable, maybe even undetectable, and the broker acted in good faith, perhaps relying on the seller's word.

A listing broker (even though representing only the seller) is duty-bound to tell the buyer any facts "materially affecting the value or desirability of the property offered for sale, facts known or accessible only to him [and his principal], and ... not ... within the reach of the diligent attention and observation of the buyer... ." n236

The landmark case of Easton v. Strassburger n237 extended broker liability. n238 The agents inspected the property prior to sale and allegedly saw "red flags" marking soil problems. One or both of the agents involved in the transaction knew the house was built on fill and that erosion problems are common on improperly compacted fill. One of the agents had noticed an uneven floor in the house, a common indicator of soil problems. They kept to themselves what they saw, perhaps on the mistaken view that their only duty was to the seller who had employed them.

The house was later damaged by landslides and the purchasers sued everyone potentially liable, including the listing brokers. The purchase price had been $170,000, but in its damaged condition it might have been worth as little as $20,000, with repair estimates ranging as high as $212,000. Under California's comparative negligence rules, the jury found the agents liable for just 5% of the loss, but they got stuck having to pay all of it because of the doctrine of joint and several liability. The listing broker's loss far exceeded the commission.

The court held that listing brokers have a duty to conduct a reasonable investigation for the benefit of potential buyers. Buyers expect it, reasoned the court, and brokers can easily comply. In its opinion, the court cited the Code of Ethics of the National Association of Realtors degrees, that a broker must not only "avoid concealment of pertinent facts but has an affirmative obligation to discover adverse factors that a reasonably competent and diligent investigation would disclose." n239 The Easton court reproduced this example in footnote 6:

> [6] In fact, one of the examples provided by the Association to explain the operation of Article 9 is analogous to the facts of this case: "Shortly after Realtor A negotiated the sale of a home to Buyer B a complaint came to the Board charging Realtor A with failure to disclose a substantial fact concerning the property. The charge was that the house was not connected to the city sanitary sewage system, but had a septic tank, whereas the buyer claimed he had every reason to believe the house was connected with the sewer line.
>
> In a statement to the Board's Grievance Committee, Buyer B agreed that the subject was not discussed during his various conversations with Realtor A about the house. However, he pointed out that his own independent inquiries had revealed that the street on which the house was located was "sewered" and he had naturally assumed the house was connected. He had since determined that every other house on the street for several blocks in both directions was connected. He stated that Realtor A, in not having disclosed the exceptional situation, had failed to disclose a pertinent fact.
>
> Realtor A's defense in hearing before the Board's Professional Standards Committee was (1) that he did not know this particular house was not connected with the sewer; (2) that in advertising the house he had not represented it as being connected; (3) that at no time, as Buyer B conceded, had he orally stated that the house was connected; that the fact under discussion was not a "pertinent fact" within the meaning of the Code of Ethics.
>
> The Committee determined that the absence of sewer connection in an area where other houses were connected was a substantial and pertinent fact in the transaction; that the absence of any mention of this fact in advertising or oral representation made it no less pertinent; that ascertaining the failure of previous owners to connect with the available sewer line was within Realtor A's obligation under Article 9 of the Code; that he was, therefore, in violation of Article 9. n240

Stunned into action, California's brokers lobbied the legislature for relief. They got very little. California Civil Code §§

2079 to 2079.9 required the broker who has a listing on a one- to four-family dwelling to:

> Conduct a reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of the property offered for sale and to disclose to that prospective purchaser all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that such an investigation would reveal... . n241

The statute mandates only a "diligent visual inspection." This would seem to protect brokers from having to know if the house is served by septic tanks or linked to a sewer system, n242 whether the roof leaks, or the house was built on poorly compacted fill. All of these involve areas normally inaccessible to inspection. n243 The statute specifies the degree of care as what a prudent real estate licensee would exercise, measured by the knowledge, education, and experience required to obtain a license. The broker need not disclose every minor detail--just enough to alert the buyer to protect herself. n244

> Although the broker does not have a responsibility to conduct an independent investigation of latent defects, if the broker volunteers to secure an inspection of the premises by retaining a third-party inspector on behalf of the purchaser, then the broker may be held liable to the purchaser for damages caused by the inspector if the broker is negligent in the selection or retention of that inspector. The broker does not have a duty to conduct a comprehensive inquiry into the inspector's credentials, but the broker should exercise reasonable diligence to discover facts demonstrating clear incompetence for the task at hand. n245

The statute imposes a two-year statute of limitations from the date the buyer takes possession. n246 The statute also contains an admonition that buyers are to protect themselves by exercising reasonable care, diligent attention and observation. n247 The state Real Estate Commissioner administers an indemnity fund to reimburse purchasers whose brokers have failed to fulfill their statutory disclosure obligations.

At least one California court has held that the statutory duty to inspect is an obligation of the listing broker only, not of the buyer's broker; n248 and Alabama courts have rejected outright the notion that either the seller's or the buyer's broker is supposed to inspect the property for the benefit of the buyer. n249

But even in Alabama brokers are held liable for concealing or failing to disclose material facts known to them and not readily discernible by the buyer.

A broker who misrepresents facts about the property and has no reasonable way to know the truth, may be liable for an innocent misrepresentation. n250 Innocent misrepresentations give rise to broker liability in Alaska, District of Columbia, Illinois, Minnesota, South Carolina, Texas, Utah and Wisconsin. Elsewhere, brokers are only liable for intentional or negligent misrepresentations. n251 In other states, brokers are not so fortunate.

The rationale for innocent misrepresentation liability: "Real Estate brokers are licensed professionals, possessing superior knowledge of the realty they sell... .Prospective purchasers recognize this ... and tend to rely ... ." n252

This quote is from the leading case flatly rejecting broker liability for intentional misrepresentations. In that case, a broker relied on the seller's mistaken belief that the boundary was 20 feet from where it actually was and the broker's statement that a fence, corral, cattle run and horse shed were all within the property boundary. They were not. This was a great disappointment to the buyers, who were active 4-H Club members. The Washington Supreme Court exonerated the broker because to do otherwise, to hold brokers accountable for innocent misrepresentations, would be to impose a standard of "strict liability."

The Washington Court reasoned: (1) Strict liability would induce brokers to silence for fear of exposure, thus giving buyers less, rather than more, information. (2) Half the jurisdictions rejecting broker liability for innocent misrepresentations rationalize their results by pointing out that the broker represents the seller. n253 (3) Other professionals are held only to a standard of reasonable prudence. There is no good reason to hold real estate brokers to a higher standard of care than lawyers, physicians, surgeons or chiropractors. (4) Brokers should not be made guarantors of the seller's representations. Buyers can purchase such guarantees from title insurers, casualty insurers, or homeowner warranty programs if they want.

Although much legal writing is premised on the significant distinction between a negligent and an innocent misrepresentation standard, the two sometimes blur into one another. The difficulty of distinguishing innocent from negligent misrepresentations is evident in the above cited Washington case. A dissenting judge thought the broker had been negligent. The judge saw it this way: the seller claimed his erroneous belief about the location of the boundary had been based on an earlier survey. A witness had testified that if there had been any such survey, it would have been made part of the public land records. But no survey had been made. The broker could have discovered this by checking the public records, and was negligent in having failed to do so.

Even in jurisdictions not recognizing innocent misrepresentations, real estate agents expose themselves to considerable liability when making representations to purchasers. Any material misstatements about the property will likely constitute reckless or negligent misrepresentations, and any material nondisclosure of property defects will likely constitute silent misrepresentations. The resulting lawsuits are expensive, time-consuming, and damaging to the agent's reputation.

Therefore, real estate agents engaged in selling must carefully protect themselves from misrepresentation claims. They should disclose to purchasers, in writing, all material defects of which they are aware. Additionally, they should have the seller complete a standard disclosure form, and provide a copy to prospective purchasers. Finally, they should place the responsibility on the purchasers to discover defects by recommending that they hire an independent inspector. These simple preventive measures are easily effected and constitute a minimal expenditure of time and money when compared to the overwhelming consumption of resources that accompanies litigation. n254

§ 95.07(h)(2) Real Estate Agents' Disclosure Duties with Respect to Lead-Based Paint Hazards.

§ 95.07(h)(2)(i) Sellers' and Lessors' Disclosure Duties with Respect to Lead-Base Paint Hazards.

Congress enacted the Residential Lead-Based Paint Reduction Act, which became effective October 28, 1992. n255 The Act required the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to promulgate regulations requiring sellers or lessors of housing constructed before 1978 to disclose to the purchaser or lessee "the presence of any known lead-based paint, or any known lead-based paint hazards, in such housing and provide to the purchaser or lessee any lead hazard evaluation report available to the seller or lessor ... ." n256 Regulations implementing these mandates for pre-1978 housing generally went in effect in 1996. n257 Similar regulations were issued September 15, 1999, for HUD-owned multifamily residential property or a multifamily residential property for which HUD is identified as mortgagee-in-possession. n258 In addition to disclosure, these federal laws also require the seller to provide the purchaser or lessee with a lead hazard information pamphlet; give purchasers a 20-day opportunity to conduct a risk assessment or inspection; and attach specific disclosure and warning language to the sales or leasing contract before the purchaser or lessee is obligated under a contract to purchase or lease. n259

§ 95.07(h)(2)(ii) Brokers' Duties to Inform and Ensure Disclosure By Sellers and Lessors.

The Residential Lead-Based Paint Reduction Act of 1992 also requires brokers (1) to inform sellers and lessors of their obligations under the Act, (2) to inform sellers and lessors that they must certify and acknowledge all disclosures in writing, and (3) to inform sellers that buyers are entitled to conduct an inspection of the premises. Brokers must also ensure that the sellers and lessors they represent have performed their duties under the Act and have otherwise fully complied with the Act. n260 Failure to fulfill these responsibilities can result in fines, criminal penalties, and civil damages. n261

§ 95.07(i) Sellers May (or May Not) Be Held Responsible for the Misrepresentations of Their Agents.

A principal is sometimes liable for the actions of an agent. The broker's authority, as an agent, is limited to finding a buyer for the property. A real estate agent has "at least implied actual authority or apparent authority to make representations concerning the description and characteristics of the property to be sold." n262 A seller, as principal, can be liable for a broker's unauthorized statements.

Sellers are rarely put in direct touch with buyers. Brokers act as intermediaries conveying information from seller to buyer and back again. Conscientious sellers may convey cautions about the property to their brokers, expecting and even insisting that brokers relay those warnings to buyers. If, however, the brokers prove to be poor messengers and don't pass the warnings forward, misled buyers may have recourse against both the broker and the seller -- despite the seller's having come clean to the broker and never intentionally having misled the buyer directly.

This point is illustrated in Friedman v. Kasser. n263 Two couples -- the Friedmans and the Feldmans -- owned a large tract of land, subdivided into three lots. They hired a broker to sell the lots. Everything concerning the sale was left to one of the owners, Leonard Feldman. He met the listing broker at the site and paced off what he assumed were the boundaries of one of the lots, Lot 3. He staked the site and tied pieces of cloth to each stake. Leonard Feldman, however, knew he was not a surveyor, so he admonished the broker that the staking was probably "off a little bit," and that "whoever bought the property should obtain his own survey."

The Kassers bought the property, and the broker never cautioned them that the stakes might be in error. Relying on the stakes as boundary markers, a contractor, whom the Kassers hired, built a house for them.

Later, one of the couples, the Friedmans, decided to buy one of the lots for their own use from their co-partners. As the Friedmans developed their lot, they discovered what they assumed were considerable encroachments by the Kassers: a carport, driveway, and parts of the Kassers' house -- taking into account the township's rule requiring a minimum fifteen foot side yard between new construction and neighboring lines. The couple ordered a survey and found that the Kassers had built on portions of the Friedmans' adjoining lot, a lot the Kassers did not own, relying on Mr. Feldman's erroneous staking.

The Kassers' purchase agreement stipulated that there were no prior representations, and the contract was the "whole agreement" between buyers and sellers. The Kassers did not know the stakes failed to describe the true boundaries, since the broker never told them, so their assent to these provisions wasn't binding. These clauses are like waivers, and waivers are not enforceable unless the party knows what she is waiving and does so intentionally.

The Friedmans filed suit, petitioning the court to order the Kassers to remove the encroaching structures. Instead, to the Friedmans considerable disappointment, the trial court ordered the Friedmans to rectify the boundary error by conveying to the Kassers enough of the Friedmans' lot to make the broker's representations of the boundaries true.

The Friedmans appealed, relying on the proposition that a principal is only liable for his agent's misrepresentations that he knows are false. The court pointed out that this rule only applies in cases of fraud. A principal is not liable for fraud based on an agent's false statements unless the principal knows those statements were false. But this rule was unenforceable here because the Kassers' claim was not based on fraud. It was based on the agency relationship between the Friedmans as sellers and their broker. The Friedmans had some responsibility as principals for their agent's error. "The liability of a principal to third parties for the act of an agent may rest on expressly conveyed authority, implied authority, apparent authority or agency by estoppel." n264 The broker had no express authority because Feldman told the broker to caution the buyers not to rely on his amateur staking effort. Nor was there implied authority, which is the "authority to do all that is proper, usual and necessary in the exercise of the authority actually granted." n265 Since Mr. Feldman had explicitly warned the broker not to represent the stakes as accurate, the broker had no implied authority to do so.

The broker, however, did have apparent authority to represent the boundaries were accurate. The sellers had put the broker in a position where buyers would naturally assume the agent had the right to make those representations on the sellers' behalf. The broker had unequivocally represented to the Kassers that the boundaries were as staked, and they relied on that representation. Given the integration clause in the contract, the court concluded that the Kassers' reliance was reasonable and upheld the ruling by the trial court.

In sum, the Friedmans lost part of the lot they had purchased because their co-owner, Leonard Feldman, staked boundaries in error, and their broker never cautioned the buyers that the stakes may be inaccurate, as Feldman instructed.

The traditional view, challenged by cases like Friedman v. Kasser, is that vendors are protected from their agents' misrepresentations. n266 The courts find it unjust to hold sellers as having authorized statements that their brokers made when the principal didn't even know about it. These courts believe vendors should not be presumed to have meant for their agents to lie and should not be held liable when brokers do lie.

Disclaimers. Sellers often disclaim responsibility for acts or promises of their agents in purchase-and-sale agreements. These disclaimers, however, are not necessarily effective to bar recovery when buyers are found to have justifiably relied on oral representations. In a few states, such disclaimers are void by statute. n267

Seller Recovery Against Broker. When a seller is held liable to a buyer for misdeeds of a broker or agent, there is always a chance the seller will be able to recoup from the broker some of the damages the seller is forced to pay the buyer. This happens in states with comparative equitable indemnity (comparative negligence) statutes. n268

When Owner Is or Is Not Liable for False Property Size and Boundary Information. The Restatement (Second) of Torts Section 552C(1) holds owners accountable for innocent misrepresentations of material facts made to induce others to rely, who do so rely, and suffer pecuniary losses as a result. Not all courts find sellers liable for innocent misrepresentations. Some courts restrict liability to negligent or intentionally misleading statements.

In these states, a broker who mistakenly advertises the property as being bigger than it is won't implicate the seller unless the seller either knows the representation is false, was actually responsible for it in some way, or intentionally or negligently contracted to sell more property than she owned. In Miller v. Sullivan, n269 property was described in an MLS printout as having been measured at 1417 square feet, constituting the heated and cooled area of the house. One year after purchasing the house, the buyers attempted to sell it and discovered that the heated and cooled portion was only 1092 square feet. Approximately 300 square feet -- a garage and utility room -- had been erroneously included in the higher square footage count.

The buyer's cause of action against the seller was dismissed summarily because there was no evidence that the sellers made any fraudulent or negligent representations about the correct square footage of the house, nor had the square footage been incorporated as a condition of the purchase-and-sale agreement. n270 The dismissal was affirmed on appeal.

The case against the broker was sent back to trial to determine "disputed issues of fact bearing upon whether [the broker] was guilty of fraud or negligence in handling the real estate transaction." These issues included whether the square footage figure on MLS printouts is understood in the real estate community to represent heated and cooled areas, and whether the listing agent has a duty to double-check and measure the square footage. n271

Broker liability to third parties has been circumscribed. Brokers are only liable to the parties in the transaction.

In a California case, brokers were not liable for failing to disclose defects that led to third parties being injured when a balcony collapsed. The 36 plaintiffs, suing the broker for personal injury and wrongful death, alleged that a structural engineer had inspected the balcony, discovered defects, told the brokers, and the brokers had either misrepresented or failed to disclose the dangerous condition to the buyers. The court ruled that the brokers, as a matter of law, could not be held liable to parties not involved in the transaction because they are not beneficiaries of the broker services nor the intended beneficiaries of California's disclosure statutes. n272

§ 95.07(j) The Broker's Duty to Third Parties.

There is little question that a real estate broker owes a duty of care to third persons in the transaction, where the broker does not have privity with, or fiduciary duties to, such third person. The question is the extent of that duty that will be imposed on the broker. The basic test in determining the extent of the duty in any particular case, and whether that duty has been breached, is a question of fact which is determined by weighing certain factors, including: (1) the extent that the transaction was intended to affect the third party; (2) the foreseeability of harm; (3) the degree of certainty that the third party suffered injury; (4) the closeness of the connection between the broker's conduct and the injury suffered; (5) the moral blame attached to the broker's conduct; and (6) the policy of preventing future harm. n273

That standard was applied in Norman I. Krug Real Estate Invs., Inc. v. Praszker, n274 and it cost the broker a bundle. An investor, Krug, put money into an apartment house deal at the urging of an entrepreneur, Gilbert. The deal soured and so Gilbert agreed to convert Krug's equity interest into a note and deed of trust secured by the investment property. Gilbert then attempted to sell the property, listing it with Praszker, the broker, who knew about the investor Krug's deed of trust and who also knew Krug hadn't recorded it. Praszker found a potential buyer and informed him about the unrecorded lien. Praszker also warned Krug to protect his security interest by recording before the sale closed. Krug shrugged off the advice and didn't record his deed of trust. But the sale fell through.

The ever persevering Praszker eventually landed a second buyer. This time Praszker kept the Krug lien his little secret. Nor did Praszker repeat his warning to Krug to record the deed of trust before this second sale closed.

The sale was consummated. According to common-law priority rules, the buyer, an innocent purchaser, took title free of Krug's unrecorded security interest. Krug sued Praszker for the money he would have been paid out of the purchase price if his lien had been valid against the purchaser. The court held that Praszker was liable, but only partly. Krug, too, should bear some responsibility for "complete failure to take any sort of action to protect his security... ." Krug's own expert at trial admitted Krug had been "an idiot not to react" the first time. Still, Praszker was stuck with partial liability for Krug's idiocy in not recording--a liability that was reduced by the seller's contributory negligence. This resulted in a previous damage award of $40,000 being reduced to $14,929.60. n275 The implication for brokers is clear enough. As real estate professionals, they have a duty to disclose a known unrecorded lien to a buyer on penalty of liability to the lienor--even though the lienor isn't the broker's client, the buyer, or the seller.

Is the Listing Broker Obligated to Disclose Defects in the Seller's Property to the Buyer?

In most states, brokers who pass forward seemingly reliable information given them by sellers aren't making negligent misrepresentations to buyers, "unless aware the representations are false." n276 However, a broker might be negligently misrepresenting the condition of the roof if the buyer specifically asks about it, indicates some doubt about the seller's story, and the broker reassures the buyer without having made an independent n277 inquiry.

The broker may have a duty to disclose to the buyer that the broker had seen water stains and to advise the buyer to have an inspector pay close attention to whether the leakage problem had really been solved.

§ 95.07(k) Brokers and the Anti-Discrimination Laws. n278

Real estate brokers must keep a watchful eye on anti-discrimination laws. Many laws are aimed to prevent discrimination in the sale or leasing of real property. This section includes an overview of the main laws prohibiting discrimination, a list as to what is an invidious and what is a permissible basis for discrimination, sales activities that give rise to anti-discrimination actions against brokers, and the problems that discriminatory activity by either a broker or a client can visit upon the other.

95.07(k)(1) The Applicable Statutes.

§ 95.07(k)(1)(i) The Federal Fair Housing Act Amendments.

Congress in 1968 enacted the Federal Fair Housing Act (hereafter, the Act): (1) to prohibit discrimination in housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin; and (2) to direct the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to affirmatively advance fair housing in federal housing urban development programs. n279 The Act prohibited refusal to sell, rent, negotiate for the sale or rental of, or otherwise make unavailable or deny, a dwelling to any person because of race, color, religion, or national origin. n280 Twenty years later, the Fair Housing Act Amendments (FHAA) added familial status and handicap to the types of discrimination proscribed. n281 The FHAA also prohibits discriminating against any person or other entity engaged in residential "real estate-related transactions." n282 The FHAA definition of "real estate-related transaction" includes making or purchasing residential loans (discrimination by commercial lenders had been prohibited in the 1968 Act), and "[t]he selling, brokering, [and] appraising of residential real property." n283

In an effort to cut down losses and improve the management of single family mortgages, Congress passed the new Single Family Mortgage Foreclosure Act as part of HUD's appropriation bill. This act provides that single family mortgages, held by HUD in any state, may be foreclosed by commissioners appointed by HUD who will use a nonjudicial power of sale. This is especially significant in states that presently use a judicial foreclosing process. n284

A final rule by HUD streamlined the regulations governing the (1) Section 312 Rehabilitation Loan Program; n285 (2) Rental Rehabilitation Grant Program; and (3) the Urban Homesteading Program. The rule became effective March 25, 1996. n286

§ 95.07(k)(1)(ii) State Statutes.

State governments have followed the federal government in trying to eradicate discrimination in housing. n287 In fact, forty-seven states and the District of Columbia have enacted fair housing laws. n288 Some state statutes go beyond the Fair Housing Act by prohibiting discrimination based on marital status. n289

To avoid having enforcement of these discrimination laws duplicated, when HUD receives a housing discrimination complaint from a state or locality that contains a fair housing law "substantially equivalent" to the federal law, the federal government utilizes state fair housing law administrators. n290 HUD is required to refer the case to the appropriate state or local agency for handling. n291

§ 95.07(k)(1)(iii) Invidious Discrimination Categories.

Listed below are prohibited bases for discrimination under the federal fair housing acts and state fair housing laws.

Race, Color, and National Origin. Despite state and federal regulatory efforts, housing discrimination is widespread in neighborhoods undergoing racial or ethnic change and in presently all-white areas. One study found that minorities were subject to discrimination over one-fourth of the time in such neighborhoods. n292

Some progress has been made. For example, some groups frequently subjected to discrimination, such as African-Americans, have been able to move from inner cities to the suburbs where they find higher quality for a low price, access to better jobs and schools, and the benefit of lower crime rates. n293

A typical example of overt racial discrimination can be seen in the facts leading to Johnson v. Hale. n294 The plaintiffs responded to Hale's advertisement of apartments for rent and were invited by phone to view the available units. When the plaintiffs arrived, Ms. Hale, after seeing that they were African-American, refused to show them the apartments, explaining that her husband would not allow her to rent to "Negro men." n295

Another more recent case of discrimination involved a white family harassing their neighbors, a Puerto Rican family. n296 In this case, after the neighbors sued for racial harassment, the judge ordered the white family to sell its home of 20 years and move. This exemplifies the serious measures courts are willing to take in order to eradicate racial discrimination. As Jeremy Margolis, the lawyer of the Puerto Rican family, says, "It is unprecedented. They are being excised like a cancer on the community." n297

Racial discrimination this blatant is declining. n298 Today, discrimination based on race, color, or national origin is usually more subtle. The African-American or Hispanic applicant may be quoted a higher price, shown a less desirable apartment, put through a more exhaustive application or credit check process, or kept on hold while other applicants are swiftly accepted. n299

Securing probative evidence of subtle discrimination is difficult. The use of "testers" can help. "'Testers' are individuals who, without an intent to rent or purchase a home or apartment, pose as renters or purchasers for the purpose of collecting evidence of unlawful steering practices." They are usually paired Caucasians and African-Americans or paired Caucasians and Hispanics who respond to the same "for rent" or "for sale" ad. n300 Situations where the African-American or Hispanic is told the property has already been sold or rented, while the Caucasian is wooed or treated differently in other respects, provides circumstantial evidence to support an aggrieved person's assertions of discrimination. n301 "Testing plays a vital part in uncovering racist attitudes and discriminatory housing practices that lead to segregated neighborhoods." n302

Religion. The Fair Housing Act prohibits brokers, sellers and lenders from discriminating against potential occupants on the basis of religion. The statute, however, does allow religious organizations to limit the sale, rental or occupancy of dwellings that are owned or operated for reasons other than a commercial purpose to persons of the same religion, as long as membership in such religion is not restricted on account of race, color, or national origin. n303

A claim of religious discrimination was made in Bachman v. St. Monica's Congregation. n304 In Bachman, a Catholic parish decided to sell a house it owned. A Jewish couple made them an offer, and, in response, the parish briefly withdrew the house from the market to see whether any of its own parishioners were interested. No parishioners responded, so the parish put the house back on the market. Soon after, the parish accepted an offer from a Catholic couple who were not members of the parish. The offer from the Catholic couple was for a higher purchase price than the one offered from the Bachmans, but was contingent on financing and the sale of a previous home. The Bachmans claimed that these contingencies made the accepted offer worse for the parish, and the only reason the parish accepted the other couple's offer was because of a discriminatory preference for Catholics over Jews. The Bachmans lost. The jury found that the church was not discriminating when they accepted a contingent offer at a higher price, and the only proven discrimination was taking the house off the market to give the parishioners a chance to bid. On appeal, the court affirmed the decision, noting that the proven discrimination had no causal relation to the Bachmans' loss of the deal because no parishioners had stepped forward to buy during the time the house was taken off the market. n305

Sex. In 1974, Congress added "sex," meaning gender, as a prohibited basis upon which to deny housing to a person. "Sex" discrimination can involve both disparate treatment of the sexes and sexual harassment. n306

Washington attorney, D. Jean Veta, argues that "women seem to be prime candidates" for being quoted and charged higher points and other fees on mortgage applications, especially with mortgage overages, n307 which is a padding on the rate or fee that goes to the loan officer. If true, these loan officers expose their firms to potentially severe civil rights and fair housing penalties. Some argue that this result of higher fees charged to women is due to the fact that women aren't as good at negotiating as men. Is this true or a biased assumption? n308

Most claims of gender discrimination are brought by women, however, men also suffer gender discrimination in real estate transactions. In Baumgardner v. Secretary, United States Dept. of Housing & Urban Dev., n309 the male plaintiff (Holley) responded to a "for rent" sign, advertising a four-bedroom home owned by Baumgardner. Holley talked to Baumgardner, providing information about the rent and estimated utility bills. Baumgardner asked who would be living there. Holley answered the house would be shared by him and three male friends. Baumgardner inquired whether they were students. Holley told Baumgardner all were employed adults. Baumgardner rejected Holley stating, "I'm not interested in renting to males. My past experience has been that males are messy and unclean." Holley filed a claim based on gender discrimination. The judge agreed that Baumgardner had violated the Fair Housing Act by refusing to rent the house based on the fact that the prospective tenants were male. The judgment was upheld on appeal. n310

Familial Status. In 1988, in an effort to insure housing is available for families with children, Congress added "familial status" as a protected class under the statute. n311 Sellers and real estate agents violate federal law if they deny selling to families with children in favor of "adults only" policies. n312

The Act, however, does not preempt density limits imposed by local, state or federal restrictions. n313 Large families or groups of unrelated individuals may be denied housing under "reasonable" government-imposed density controls. n314

Handicap. "Handicap" was also added in 1988 to the anti-discrimination list. A handicapped person is defined as one with "(1) a physical or mental impairment which substantially limits one or more of [a] person's major life activities, (2) a record of having such an impairment, or (3) being regarded as having such an impairment." n315 The Act specifically rejects, as a justification for discrimination against the handicapped, unfounded speculation about the threat to the safety of others or the handicapped themselves that their admission to a project may pose.

Disputes about whether this provision has been violated arise when brokers disclose to prospective buyers that the seller has AIDS. The broker has a common-law duty to disclose to the buyers any material facts regarding the property. The issue then is whether knowledge that the seller has AIDS is a material fact to the buyer. At least sixteen states and the District of Columbia have responded by enacting legislation that protects the broker who fails or refuses to disclose to the buyer that the previous occupant of the sale property was afflicted with or died of AIDS. n316 A Texas statute obligates the broker to tell the truth, but only if the buyer asks directly. n317 Federal courts have held that AIDS is a handicap and discrimination or a failure to disclose could subject the broker to liability under the Fair Housing Act. n318

Marital Status. Unmarried couples are not protected by the Fair Housing Act. They are, however, protected by many state fair housing laws. Under federal law, two other areas may protect unmarried couples. First, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits discrimination on the basis of marital status in credit transactions regarding housing. n319 An example of what is prohibited is how lenders treat a second wage earner's income. If full credit would be given when the loan applicants are married, then full credit must be extended to unmarried applicants with the same wage-earning potential. Second, federal law protects unmarried couples from discrimination in public housing. n320

Nearly all litigants seeking protection as an unmarried cohabitating couple turn to state law. Note, however, that no state statute expressly prohibits discrimination against unmarried couples. Protection is given through judicial interpretation. The courts perform a two-stage analysis. First they ascertain if unmarried couples are impliedly intended to be protected by the state statute. n321 Second, if they are, and the defendants claim to be discriminating for religious reasons, then the court must determine whether the anti-discrimination law can be enforced constitutionally or under federal law and still guarantee individuals the right to the free exercise of religion. This analysis often involves a balancing test. n322

Religious Beliefs and State Law. State statutes that prohibit discrimination based on marital status may be subject to a First Amendment challenge as a violation of the right to practice one's religion when landlords are unable to discriminate in renting apartments to unmarried, cohabitating couples based on religious beliefs. n323 As of December 1995, four states have examined marital status anti-discrimination housing laws in the context of free exercise of religious defense claims. Only Alaska has rejected the defense. n324 The court held that the constitutional right to exercise religion is not absolute. The government has a "transactional interest in preventing acts of discrimination based on irrelevant characteristics" -- including marital status -- that outweigh the landlord's interest. n325

Minnesota's fair housing law expressly prohibits discrimination based on marital status. n326 Despite this fact, a Minnesota landlord rescinded his agreement to rent a house to a single woman upon learning she would be sharing the house with her fiance. The landlord was opposed to the cohabitation of unmarried couples, believing it was morally wrong and created the "appearance of evil." The landlord argued that the couple's interpretation of the fair housing law violated the landlord's right to freely practice his religion, and that it also violated Minnesota's anti-fornication statute which makes sexual intercourse between "any man and a single woman" a misdemeanor. n327 The Minnesota court ruled 4-3 for the landlord based on its interpretation of what the legislature had meant by "marital status" discrimination. n328

A California appellate court reached the same result when landlords, who were devout Roman Catholics, refused to rent to an unmarried couple. The landlords didn't want to aid another person in "a sinful facilitation of impermissible behavior."

The court held that the landlords had a constitutional right to freely exercise their religious beliefs, and that this right outweighs the cohabitating unmarried couple's right under California's fair housing law to be free of discrimination on marital status. n329

Sexual Orientation. The Federal Fair Housing Act does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Some states, however, have modified their fair housing acts to do so. n330 Many localities have also enacted legal protections against housing discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. n331 In jurisdictions without sexual orientation anti-discrimination laws, sellers and brokers may refuse to sell homes or apartments to gay men and lesbians. n332 In jurisdictions with sexual orientation anti-discrimination laws, sellers and landlords may invoke the same "free exercise of religion" defense asserted in the cohabitating unmarried couples cases. No court, it seems, has directly addressed this defense. n333

§ 95.07(k)(1)(iv) Permissible Discrimination Categories.

Income Requirements. Federal courts have concluded that the Fair Housing Act does not preclude owners and brokers from investigating the background, financial ability, and general responsibility of prospective occupants, so long as the owner or broker does not discriminate on any of the bases specified in the Act. n334

Federal courts hold that discrimination based on the potential occupant's income is acceptable as long as it is applied evenly to all groups. For example, in Boyd v. Lefrak Organization, n335 the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that a private landlord's requirement that a rental applicant either have a weekly net income equal to 90% of the monthly rental of the apartment or obtain a co-signer whose weekly net income was 110% of the month's rent did not violate the Act. The court concluded that although such an income requirement has the effect of excluding many public assistance recipients, a large majority of whom are African-American or Puerto Rican, the rule does not violate the Act because it applies evenly to all racial groups. n336

Some state courts concur with federal courts and permit income-based selection. The California Supreme Court upheld the rights of landlords to rent only to tenants who met the landlord's required three-to-one income-to-rent ratio. n337 The rejected applicants were female heads of low-income households whose income consisted solely of public assistance benefits. The California Supreme Courts, admitting that the "objective" financial criteria could result in a barring of most welfare recipients, poor people, or women, have upheld the use of income-to-rent ratios, explaining that the objective ratios actually preclude invidious discrimination because of their very objectivity. For instance, an African-American who meets the income qualifications and is still turned away gives powerful evidence of invidious discrimination.

Many other businesses, including lending institutions and retail and wholesale sellers, are in the position of extending money, goods, or services in exchange for promises to pay or repay in the future. They use minimum income policies, as well as other financial criteria, to make risk-oriented decisions regarding what customers to deal with and on what terms. These businesses, as well as others, could be subjected to legal challenges to their policies based on summary allegations that they had acted "arbitrarily." Plaintiff's approach would require that each business defend its policies as "reasonable" in a trial on the merits. Those trials, like the one plaintiffs propose here, would impose expense and uncertainty on a massive scale with little or no demonstrable benefit to the anti-discrimination policy of the Unruh Act. n338

With this reasoning, the court upheld income-to-rent ratios as reasonably related to default risks, even though there was no trial to determine if empirical evidence supports linking the chance of default with income-to-rent ratios.

Fair Housing Act Exemptions: Owner-Occupied Dwellings. Under § 3603(b), single-family homeowners who own no more than three homes, and owner-occupied dwellings intended for four or fewer families, are exempt from all of the discrimination prohibitions except for advertising, in § 3604. n339 While owners may discriminate on any basis in the sale or rental of their private residence, they may not use a real estate broker and may not advertise their discriminatory intention. n340

The Private Club Exemption. Section 3607 exempts private clubs from the Fair Housing Act. The section states in relevant part:

> Nor shall anything in this subchapter prohibit a private club not in fact open to the public, which as an incident to its primary purpose or purposes provides lodgings which it owns or operates for other than a commercial purpose, from limiting the rental or occupancy of such lodgings to its members or from giving preference to its members. n341

§ 95.07(k)(2) Types of Violations.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(i) Advertising.

The Fair Housing Act makes unlawful certain advertising practices associated with the sale or rental of housing:

> To make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published any notice, statement, or advertisement, with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin, or an intention to make any such preference, limitation, or discrimination. n342
>
> Blatant discrimination in real estate advertising such as "For Rent -- Furnished basement apartment in private white home," has become less common, however, more subtle practices have emerged and been called into question. n343
>
> The language in an advertisement may imply an illegal preference and lead to discriminatory practices. For example, consider this hypothetical inspired by a Los Angeles Times article:

Exclusive bachelor apartment with huge walk-in closet near country clubs. Perfect for students and singles. Quiet neighborhood near biking and jogging trails. Great for active adults and within walking distance to churches, synagogues, and shopping.

This hypothetical advertisement may not intend to state an illegal preference but could risk violating the Fair Housing Act by discriminating in the following ways:

4. Words such as "exclusive" and "near country club" may imply income barriers and discourage those who are not professionals.

5. "Bachelor apartment" may imply a preference for males.

6. The word "bachelor" coupled with "students" and "singles" could discriminate against married people or families.

7. "Quiet neighborhood" and "active adults" may further a no-kids connotation.

8. Mentioning "jogging and biking trails" suggests that those with handicaps are unwelcome, as does use of the term "walking distance," "active adults" and "walk-in" closets.

9. Mentioning "churches and synagogues" might be interpreted as screening out members of other religions, those who do not attend services regularly, or those who do not believe in any religion.

Many brokers and real estate agents in their zeal to market a property have been fined by HUD or their state fair housing agency for inadvertent violations. Compliance is made difficult because HUD and many state agencies have yet to publish a list of "not acceptable" words or phrases. Leonard Lanfranco, Executive Director of the Oregon Newspaper Publisher's Association, puts the problem this way: "It's like if you move to a new town and you're told they have certain motor vehicle laws, but they won't post any signs, and they'll arrest you if you violate them. That's what H.U.D. has done to all of us." n344 On the other hand, Thomas Honore, Director of the Fair Housing Division of H.U.D.'s Los Angeles office, explains, "We demean the law by saying it's just about a list of words. I don't believe in having lists because no list will by its nature be all-inclusive, and you have to look at the context. People are looking for a simple answer to a much more complex issue. It's a long and sad tradition of people assuming that some people are less worthy or less attractive and deserve less of a welcome." n345

The bottom line is that in order to avoid violations of the federal or state fair housing advertising laws, brokers should consult their state newspaper association, state fair housing office, or regional H.U.D. office for guidance when placing advertisements.

Another challenged practice is when only one race of human models is used in advertisements. Whether intended or not, this may convey a message to buyers or renters, not of the same race as the models, that they are unwelcome.

Federal courts have held advertisements for housing, suggesting to the ordinary reader that a particular race is preferred or disfavored, are in violation of the Act. n346 The "ordinary reader" standard was defined in Ragin as "neither the most suspicious nor the most insensitive of our citizenry. Such a reader does not apply a mechanical test to every use of a model of a particular race." n347

The Sixth Circuit has held that, as a matter of law, a single advertisement cannot violate the Act for exclusively using white models, unless the number of models is large and more than select. n348 Also, the publisher of an advertisement using only white models cannot be held to have violated the Act if the advertisement is from a different project or advertisers. A housing complex, on the other hand, that ran advertisements several times a week for a year depicting numerous white models as consumers and black models as doormen or custodial employees had difficulty persuading a trier of fact that the ads did not indicate a racial preference. n349

A showing of a broker or owner's subjective intent to discriminate is not necessary to establish a violation of the Fair Housing Act. n350 The likely effect of the advertisement is sufficient. Evidence of intent to indicate an illegal preference, however, bears on the question of whether the words in fact do so. n351 In 1980, H.U.D. promulgated regulations to "provide guidance" to newspapers and others concerning how to avoid discrimination in real estate advertising. n352 The use of human models is discussed as follows:

> If models are used in display advertising campaigns, the models should be clearly definable as reasonably representing majority and minority groups in the metropolitan area, both sexes, and, when appropriate, families with children. Models, if used, should portray an equal social setting and indicate to the general public that the housing is open to all without regard to race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status or national origin, and is not for the exclusive use of one such group. n353

HUD's comments regarding 24 C.F.R. § 109.30(b):

> The term "reasonably representing" is intended to assure that models will convey a message of general inclusiveness of persons covered by Title VIII, not a literal display of each minoritygroup. For example, the use of two white models, one male and one female, would not convey such inclusiveness. In a small town with no minority groups other than blacks, however, use of two models of different sexes, one white and one black, would "reasonably represent" majority and minority groups of both sexes. n354
>
> Federal courts do not limit the unlawful use of human models to just racial discrimination. All of the classifications listed under § 3406(c) are protected from discrimination in real estate advertising. n355 These complex rules may be one reason for the decline in the use of human models in real estate advertisements.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(ii) Steering and Showings.

Steering is the practice of showing minority clients property only in neighborhoods populated predominantly by minorities. Racial steering is prohibited by the Fair Housing Act, n356 but it occurs regularly. n357

Generally, brokers who treat clients differently because of race may be violating Title VIII; n358 however, what constitutes "steering" is not precisely defined in the Act. Federal courts have provided some guidance. In Village v. Dwivedi n359 the Seventh Circuit exonerated a real estate broker who, in assisting his African-American clients, took the listing book out of their hands whenever the couple looked at listings of suburbs not predominantly black and turned the pages to a suburb that was becoming predominantly black. This conduct was deemed insufficient to support a finding that the broker had engaged in racial steering. n360 On the other hand, when a broker misrepresents that there are no homes available or refuses a customer's explicit request to be shown a house in a neighborhood that the broker wants to reserve for persons of a differing race, that broker is violating the Act. n361

§ 95.07(k)(2)(iii) Shielding Sellers Who Discriminate.

Real estate brokers and agents may be liable for their principals' actions when they perpetuate discrimination in violation of the Act -- even if they are just trying to accommodate their bigoted principals. Under agency law, an agent has no obligation to carry out his principal's order to do an illegal act, and an agent who assists his principal in committing a tort is himself liable as a joint tortfeasor. n362

Brokers can protect themselves from a seller's bigotry by putting a fair housing clause in the listing agreement -- "Real estate is available to any prospective purchaser, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, national origin, or ancestry." The broker should put this "fair housing" clause in all promotional material. As a precaution, brokers may want to read this clause to prospective sellers before accepting listings. If a seller balks, the broker should refuse to take the listing.

Brokers sometimes get themselves into trouble if they hide the fact that the seller rejected the buyers because of race. For example, in Dillon v. AFBIC Dev. Corp., n363 a property owner refused to sell his home to Jean Dillon, after his agent informed him that Ms. Dillon was black. When Ms. Dillon questioned the agent about her rejected offer, the agent lied and told Ms. Dillon that her offer had been rejected because the owner decided to sell it to a member of his family. The court found the agent in violation of the Act, because the agent made misrepresentations to assist the seller in committing a racially motivated refusal to sell the home. In these situations, the agent's own conduct violates the Act. n364 If, on the other hand, an agent truthfully tells prospective buyers that the rejection of an offer was racially motivated, courts have held that the agent did not violate the Act. n365

Brokers may also find themselves in violation of the Act if they provide sellers with racial information about buyers. In Green v. Century 21, n366 the seller of an apartment building received an offer from two financially qualified African-Americans. The owners asked about the race of the buyers, and the agent told them they were black. Thirty minutes later, another agent in the office presented a second offer from a less financially qualified single white female. The second offer was for the same price, but with a lower down payment. With the new offer on the table, the owners rejected the offer from the two African-Americans, despite their superior financial resources. Later, the white buyer could not come up with a large enough earnest money deposit. The sellers rescinded, but still refused to sell to the two African-Americans, who, in turn, brought suit under 42 U.S.C. § 3604. The court found that both the owners and the brokers had violated the Act. n367

The California Attorney General limited a broker's disclosure options under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act: n368

> A real estate broker who furnishes information to an owner concerning the ethnic background of a prospective buyer engages in a discriminatory practice. This is true whether the broker furnished the information voluntarily or at the owner's request. A broker may not voluntarily indicate to the owner the race of a prospective buyer and must decline to provide that information if the owner requests it. n369

§ 95.07(k)(3) Seller Liability for Broker's Acts.

Generally, principals are liable for the actions of their agents done within the scope of their employment. "Scope of employment" defenses, however, are by no means a safe haven for owners. n370 Under the Fair Housing Act, a principal cannot free himself of liability by delegating to an agent a duty to not discriminate. n371 In Walker v. Crigler, n372 an apartment owner issued instructions to his rental agent not to discriminate. Despite these instructions, the rental agent refused to rent an apartment to the plaintiff because she was a woman. The Fourth Circuit held that the owner could not dispose of his duty to prevent sexual discrimination in the renting of his property by simply telling agents not to discriminate. n373 Supervision may be required and, in this case, was minimal. Note, however, that when an owner is found liable for acts of his agent, the owner may seek contribution from the agent. n374

§ 95.07(k)(4) Damages for Violating Anti-Discrimination Laws Can Be Sizable.

Recent federal legislation has expanded the scope of damage remedies and made it easier to get administrative relief from discriminatory housing practices. n375 A Georgetown law professor settled a case against a luxury housing developer for excluding African-Americans from their promotional campaign. The developer settled, without admitting liability, for $325,000, paid to two nonprofit housing organizations. n376 As a result of this and other cases, the National Association of Home Builders warns members not to use human models in their advertisements unless the guidelines provided in a fair housing compliance manual are followed. Many real estate advertisers just avoid using human models altogether. n377

Courts differ as to what types of damages are available in discrimination cases. Some courts allow the victim of discrimination to be awarded compensatory damages. n378 Other courts do not award victims compensatory damages. These courts feel that compensatory damages are meant to make the victim whole, not merely to vindicate rights. Discrimination, a violation of a constitu-tional right, has no real measure of damage and cannot support an award that is more than nominal. n379 Punitive damages are awarded in a discrimination action for acting recklessly or with callous indifference to a prospective client's civil rights. n380

Monetary damages can never fully compensate a victim of discrimination, but, at the very least, they demonstrate that the courts and the nation take these injuries seriously. Damages send a warning to discriminators. n381 Discrepancies exist as to the amount of damages awarded in Federal Fair Housing Act cases. Damages can range anywhere from one dollar to $2.4 million. n382

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 57. A 1979 study on home sales in Canada shows that 25% of all home sales were by owner (in Montreal the figure is 38.9%; in Toronto, 16.4%; and in Vancouver 23.4%). The for-sale-by-owner ratio tracked commission rates, with higher commissions and owner-sales rates going hand-in-hand. "These data suggest a significant substitution of owner services for broker services when commission rates are high. But as [the gatherers of the data] Goldberg and Horwood point out, these data are merely suggestive. Other differences among these three Canadian cities might also account for the variation in their by-owner sales." Stephen W. Salant, For Sale by Owner: When to Use a Broker and How to Price the House, 4 J. Real Est. Fin. & Econ. 157 (1991).

(n2)Footnote 58. E.g.,

Selling price		$100,000
Mortgages (80% loan/value ratio)	-	80,000
Net before closing costs		20,000
Closing costs (2% of gross sales price, includes title insurance, recording, escrows or legal fees)	-	2,000
		18,000
Brokerage commission	-	6,000
Net to seller		$12,000

(n3)Footnote 59. The Ninth Circuit has upheld against antitrust challenge the MLS restricting access to members of the local Board of Realtors degrees. Supermarket of Homes, Inc. v. San Fernando Valley Bd. of Realtors, 786 F.2d 1400 (9th Cir. 1986). The exclusion of part-time workers from MLS access was held a violation of California's antitrust law in Marin County Bd. of Realtors v. Palsson, 549 P.2d 833 (Cal. 1976). See Comment, Exclusion from Real Estate Multiple Listing Services As Antitrust Violations, 14 Cal. West. L. Rev. 298 (1978); Annotation, Validity, Construction & Effect of Real Estate Brokers' Multiple Listing Agreements, 45 A.L.R.3d 190 (1971). Bruce D. Greenberg, Gary K.

Wolinetz, 25 Years Of The New Jersey Antitrust Act, 26 Seton Hall L. Rev. 637 (1996) (Group boycotts under the Act have also arisen in the real estate context).

Re/Max Int'l., Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1474 (N.D. Ohio 1996) (Real estate brokers had not established that competitor with 48 percent market share in one city and 50.6 percent market share in another monopolized market in those cities; no evidence was presented that competitors' market share had increased after they initiated alleged anticompetitive activity and there was no evidence that there were entry barriers to real estate industry); Annotation, Activities of Real-Estate Agent Or Association As Subject to Federal Antitrust Laws, 44 A.L.R. Fed. 743; Annotation, Validity, Construction, And Effect of Real-Estate Brokers' Multiple-Listing Agreement, 45 A.L.R.3d 190.

(n4)Footnote 60. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.25(d).

(n5)Footnote 61. While some localities have tried to ban "for sale" signs from front lawns as unsightly or contributing to neighborhood instability, the U.S. Supreme Court has shielded "for sale" signs under the First Amendment. Linmark Assocs. v. Township of Willingboro, 431 U.S. 85 (1977). P. Cameron DeVore, Robert D. Sack, Advertising And Commercial Speech, 462 PLI/Pat 371, at 862 (Nov. 1996) (regulation prohibiting the posting of "For Sale" sign or requiring a fee before posting the sign is held to be in violation of First Amendment).

See also Pearson v. Edgar, 965 F. Supp. 1104 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (statute prohibiting real estate brokers from soliciting owner to list or sell his home if owner has provided notice of his desire not to be solicited violated First Amendment); Cleveland Area Bd. of Realtors v. City of Euclid, 88 F.3d 382 (6th Cir. 1996) (Organization of real estate brokers brought suit challenging validity of city ordinances regulating the size, number, and placement of signs in residential neighborhoods, as violative of the First Amendment); Americas Homes, Inc. v. Esler, 668 So. 2d 239 (Fla. App. 1996) (Seller of homes sued to enjoin homeowners from posting sign on their property that stated that their property was for sale due to local flooding. The court held that homeowners were exercising their right to free speech).

(n6)Footnote 62. See Robert J. Bruss, Choosing a Good Real Estate Agent, Los Angeles Times, Aug. 27, 1989 (Real Estate Section), at 9.

(n7)Footnote 63. Money Newsline, Q & A, 22 Money, July 1993.

Hagedorn v. Elwyn, 645 N.Y.S.2d 77 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1996) (Essential feature of real estate broker's employment is to bring parties together in amicable frame of mind, with attitude toward each other and toward transaction in hand which permits their working out terms of their agreement).

(n8)Footnote 64. For a description of one firm's program for soliciting mortgage money from investors and lending it to buyers, see Wharton v. Smith, 561 A.2d 1169 (N.J. 1989). In this case the broker diverted funds clients had meant to be invested in real estate mortgages. Bilked investors sought recovery from the state Real Estate Guaranty Fund. Their claim was rebuffed when the court concluded that the fund had been set up to protect real estate brokerage clients -- purchasers and sellers -- only, and not investors in mortgage banks whose principals also happened to be real estate brokers.

(n9)Footnote 65. For helpful ideas for negotiating a buyer's broker agreement, see Marsh, Real Property Transactions 148-67 (1992).

(n10)Footnote 66. See Tanner Assocs. v. Ciraldo, 161 A.2d 725 (N.J. 1960); Chan v. Tsang, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13 (1991) (The breaching buyer was held liable to his own broker for the same commission the broker would have earned had the buyer not breached).

(n11)Footnote 67. Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, Ch. 6, Licensing of Brokers and Salespersons (Matthew Bender).

The Association of Real Estate License Law Officials (ARELLO) publishes an annual Digest of Real Estate License Laws, which can be obtained by telephoning (334-260-2902), or can be ordered from ARELLO's web site: http://www.arello.org/.

Compare Hermitage House Square, L.P. v. England, 929 S.W.2d 356 (Tenn. App. 1996) (Statute prohibiting individual from acting as real estate broker without license only applies when individual is acting for another; when individual is acting on his own behalf, there is no requirement that person acquire real estate license before negotiating conveyance of land).

With Smith v. Real Estate Agency, 939 P.2d 77 (Or. App. 1997) (substantial evidence that petitioner was not partner in purchaser of property when petitioner arranged purchase transaction supported finding that petitioner had engaged in professional real estate activity "for another" within meaning of statute precluding such action without license).

(n12)Footnote 68. Shehab v. Xanadu, Inc., 698 S.W.2d 491 (Tex. Civ. App. 1985). Ashton Gen. P'ship v. Federal Data Corp., 682 A.2d 629 (D.C. App. 1996) (Investment banker that mediated sale of corporation's assets cannot recover real estate broker's commission since he did not possess the real estate license at the time of the transaction); Smith v. Stevens, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 4951 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 1996).

But see Roberts v. Gaskins, 486 S.E.2d 771 (S.C. App. 1997) (To prevent a business broker from enforcing a legal claim to a commission earned from the sale of business assets simply because the business includes real estate would extend the real estate broker licensing provisions beyond their stated definitions and purposes).

Compare Thomas v. Daubs, 684 N.E.2d 1011 (Ill. App. 1997) (that business broker that did not possess real estate broker's license was barred by Real Estate License Act from recovering finder's fee for oral contract for sale of landfill business in which real estate component, which encompassed more than 180 acres, was more than incidental).

(n13)Footnote 69. Brokers are sometimes called "Realtors degrees." That term refers to members of National Association of Realtors degrees, the leading private organization representing brokers and agents.

(n14)Footnote 70. E.g., State v. Spears, 259 P.2d 356, 359 (N.M. 1953) (citing 1951 N.M. Laws Ch. 224, § 9, listing New Mexico's licensing requirements).

(n15)Footnote 71. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10150.6. Occasionally, a broker obtains a license after the seller signs a listing agreement, but before a sale is closed. Under these circumstances, the broker's entitlement may depend on the precise wording of the licensing statute. In California, the broker would prevail under such circumstances since the statute only requires the broker be licensed at the time the cause of action arises.

(n16)Footnote 72. Roman v. Lobe, 152 N.E. 461 (N.Y. 1926).

(n17)Footnote 73. 152 N.E. at 463.

(n18)Footnote 74. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10130.

(n19)Footnote 75. Id. see also Sheetz v. Edmonds, 247 Cal. Rptr. 776 (Cal. App. 1988) (the power of attorney executed to allow a family friend to manage the sale of real property did not exempt the friend from the real estate licensing requirements of California even though the friend managed no other properties).

(n20)Footnote 76. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10136.

(n21)Footnote 77. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10133.

(n22)Footnote 78. In New York, however, an attorney who is not licensed as a real estate broker may act as co-broker with a licensed real estate broker and share the brokerage commission. N.Y. Real Prop. Law § 442(f) ("the provisions of this Article shall not apply to ...attorneys at law").

(n23)Footnote 79. See Dougherty v. Commonwealth State Real Estate Comm'n, 513 A.2d 555 (1986), appeal denied, 527 A.2d 547 (Pa. 1987) (broker's license suspended for one year because of salespersons' failure to mention that property was being sold "as is" and representations of seller guarantees when seller had made no guarantees). Goldsten v. District of Columbia Real Estate Comm'n, 709 A.2d 1178 (D.C. App. 1998) (the court upheld D.C. Code Ann. § 45-1941 which called for the mandatory revocation of a real estate broker's license if the broker had been convicted of a crime involving dishonesty or fraud); Maneri v. New York State Dep't of State, 660 N.Y.S.2d 26 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1997) (Substantial evidence supported revocation of broker's real estate broker's license and his notary public commission based on finding that he was untrustworthy and had engaged in misconduct, where broker had participated in scheme in which several pieces of real property were sold without owners' knowledge or consent, and broker notarized deeds without signatories having appeared before him). Annotation, Grounds for Revocation Or Suspension of License of Real-Estate Broker Or Salesperson, 7 A.L.R. 5th 474.

(n24)Footnote 80. Romero v. Hariri, 911 P.2d 85 (Haw. App. 1996) (holding that the deception of a real estate broker who misrepresented that he was still licensed warranted an award of punitive damages of $1 million).

(n25)Footnote 81. Touhey & Barton v. Anaheim Mem. Hosp., 231 Cal. Rptr. 706 (1986). Thomas v. Daubs, 684 NE.2d 1011 (Ill. App. 1997) (Real Estate License Act does not bar cause of action to collect finder's fee by business broker who does not hold real estate broker's license if real estate component is only incidental to sale of entire business). Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Enforcement of Business Opportunities or "Finder's Fee" Contract, 24 A.L.R. 3rd 1160 (1998).

(n26)Footnote 82. Amerofina, Inc. v. United States Indus., 335 A.2d 448, 451 (Pa. Super. 1975).

(n27)Footnote 83. Evans v. Riverside Int'l Raceway, 47 Cal. Rptr. 187, 193 (1965); see, e.g., D. Barlow Burke, the Law of Real Estate Brokers § 4.5.2, at 212-14 (1982). Lindenstadt v. Staff Bldrs., Inc., 55 Cal. App. 4th 882 (1997) (the rationale for the finder's exception as follows: "One who merely introduces two parties to a real estate transaction, whether or not he solicits those persons, does not need to be as knowledgeable about real estate transactions as a licensed broker, unless, of course, he participates in the negotiations"); Greenlee v. Rainbow Auction/Realty Co., 553 N.W.2d 257 (Wis. App. 1996) (Discussion on the term "Broker").

(n28)Footnote 84. Diversified General Corp. v. White Barn Golf Course, Inc., 584 P.2d 848 (Utah 1978) (the court stated that "[t]he essential feature of a broker's employment is to bring the parties together in an amicable frame of mind, with an attitude toward the transaction in hand which permits their working out the terms of their agreement," and that because "[t]hey may reach agreement without his aid and interference" doesn't mean that the broker has not negotiated the transaction. The court took this position so that Utah's licensing statute would not be a "toothless enactment," allowing unlicensed finders to engage in what they saw as the practice of brokering.); see also, Brakhage v. Georgetown Assocs., 523 P.2d 145 (Colo. App. 1974); First Equity Corp. of Fla. v. Riverside Real Estate Inv. Trust, 307 So. 2d 866 (Fla. App. 1975); Gregory v. Roedenbeck, 174 S.W.2d 585 (Tex. 1943); Baird v. Krancer, 246 N.Y.S. 85 (Sup. Ct. 1930); Corson v. Keane, 72 A.2d 314 (N.J. 1950). Hagedorn v. Elwyn, 645 N.Y.S.2d 77 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (For real estate broker to be entitled to commission, although broker need not be present for actual negotiations, he or she must do more than simply introduce parties, call property in question to attention of potential buyer, or provide that buyer with limited information); Consolidated Realty Group v. Sizzling Platter, Inc., 930 P.2d 268 (Utah App. 1996) (Real estate broker that entered into contract to obtain lease for owner of commercial property was entitled to commission when tenant entered into lease with partnership, one partner of which was owned by the same principal as property owner, where broker arranged meeting that resulted in lease formation); Roberts v. Gaskins, 486 S.E.2d 771 (S.C. App. 1997) (a business broker unlicensed as a real estate broker may enforce a commission contractually earned on the sale of the personal property of a business, irrespective of the form of sale, even though the sale may include real estate; provided, of course, no commission can be based either directly or indirectly on the value of the real property involved); Buck v. Cimino, 658 N.Y.S.2d 676 (N.Y.A.D. 1997) (Real estate broker was "procuring cause" of sale of listed real estate to third party that he informed of property and showed the exterior to, though broker did not participate in any of sales negotiations that resulted in execution of purchase agreement by third party less than two weeks thereafter, where evidence suggested that negotiations between third party and vendors were minimal at best, and where broker was prevented from participating in negotiations by third party's affirmative misrepresentation that she lacked any interest in property when the contrary was clearly true).

But see M.A. Salazar, Inc. v. Levy, 655 N.Y.S.2d 612 (N.Y.A.D. 1997) (Real estate broker failed to establish that he had procured prospective purchaser who agreed to all essential terms customarily encountered in real estate transactions, including closing date, and thus was not entitled to commission, even though broker produced evidence that prospective purchaser and seller had agreed on price).

See also Agawam Realty, Ltd. v. Haggerty, 636 N.Y.S.2d 379 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (To recover real estate brokerage fees stemming from unclosed transaction, plaintiff must establish that he or she has procured prospect who has reached agreement with seller on essential terms and is ready, willing, and able to perform).

Compare Nooney Krombach Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mo., 929 S.W.2d 888 (Mo. App. 1996) (Under terms of agreement between real estate broker and client with regard to sale of client's property, broker did not have to be procuring cause of sale or show that agreement gave it exclusive right to sell in order to recover commission; broker was promised a commission in consideration for its role as client's representative in sale, and broker was not retained to seek out purchasers).

(n29)Footnote 85. Lloyd v. Saffa, 719 P.2d 844 (Okla. App. 1985) overruled by Commodore Home Sys. Inc. v. Citicorp Acceptance Co., 780 P.2d 674 (Okla. 1989). Tyrone v. Kelly, 507 P.2d 65, 69, 72 (Cal. 1973); Bottomley v. Coffin, 399 A.2d 485 (R.I. 1979); White v. Miriam Realty Co., 547 S.W.2d 184 (Mo. App. 1977). but see Tenzer v. Superscope Inc., 702 P.2d 212 (Cal. 1985); Property House v. Kelly 715 P.2d 805 (Haw. 1986); Shinberg v. Bruk, 875 F.2d 973 (1st Cir. 1989); King v. Clifton, 648 S.W.2d 193 (Mo. App. 1983).

(n30)Footnote 86. Don Augustine and Peter Fass, Finder's Fees in Security & Real Estate Transactions, 35 Bus. Law 485, 489 (1980).

(n31)Footnote 87. In a small number of transactions, a broker could lose a commission for want of a written agreement because of the standard provision in most statutes of frauds requiring writing for contracts not to be performed within one year.

Say the client owns a house in a soft sales market and agrees to lease it for two years, giving the tenant the option to buy anytime in the second year of the lease. The option is an agreement that will not be performed within one year. Suppose a broker successfully produces a lessee who enters this lease with option. The broker will be counting on a sales commission when the tenant exercises the option. A commission on the sale would be much larger than the commission on the lease--but the broker's commission entitlement would fail for want of a writing. The landlord's obligation to pay it is contingent on an event that won't take place within one year. N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-701, n.31 (1989), construed in 53 Op. Att'y Gen. (1963).

(n32)Footnote 88. These states with special Statute of Frauds provisions are: Alaska, Arizona, California, Hawaii, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. The states with licensing statute requirements for listing agreements to be in writing are: Connecticut, Minnesota, Nevada, and Texas. The states with administrative requirements are South Carolina, Vermont, and Iowa. J. Clark Pendergrass, The Real Estate Consumer's Agency and Disclosure Act: The Case Against Dual Agency 48 Ala. L. Rev. 277 (Fall 1996) (the Alabama Real Estate Consumer's Agency and Disclosure Act requires that in order to establish an agency relationship there must be a written, bilateral agreement); Perry J. Woodward, Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage: A Tort That Eviscerates The Real Estate Brokers' Statute of Frauds, 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1219 (1996) (A broker may not raise equitable estoppel as a defense to bar Statute of Frauds unless the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct which the broker, charged with knowledge of the statute of frauds, reasonably relies upon); John D. Hastie, Real Estate Acquisition, Development, And Disposition From The Developer's Perspective, SB08 ALI-ABA 1, at 89 (Aug. 14, 1996).

Bowen v. Wyoming Real Estate Com'n, 900 P.2d 1140 (Wyo. 1995) (The commission cannot suspend a real estate broker's license based on the fact that he failed to obtain a written listing agreement before advertising the property involved); Trammell Crow Co. No. 60 v. Harkinson, 944 S.W.2d 631 (Tex. 1997) (Real estate broker's claim for tortious interference with oral commission agreement between broker and landlord, or alternatively for tortious interference with prospective business relation, stated claim for recovery of real estate commission and was thus barred under provision of Real Estate License Act (RELA) prohibiting action for recovery of real estate commission absent written agreement); Texas Builders v. Keller, 928 S.W.2d 479 (Tex. 1996) (Solicitation letter which was sent by landlord owner to real estate broker which stated that owner had 58,333 square feet available for lease at building, which was part of larger building also owned by landlord, did not describe property ultimately leased directly to tenant who was initially shown property by broker with sufficient certainty to satisfy Real Estate Licensing Act, and thus, broker could not sue landlord to recover commission).

But see Fred Ezra Co. v. Pedas, 682 A.2d 173 (D.C. App. 1996) (Real Estate Licensure Act did not bar enforcement of unwritten implied- in-fact contracts to pay commission); R.B. Ventures, Ltd. v. Shane, 112 F.3d 54 (2d Cir. 1997) (Under New York law, real estate broker's oral contract claims against developer for unpaid commissions were not precluded by the Statute of Frauds, as licensed real estate brokers are exempt from Statute's requirement that brokerage commission contracts be in writing to be enforceable); Tower Int'l, Inc. v. Caledonian Airways, Ltd., 969 F. Supp. 135 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (under New York law, quantum meruit or unjust enrichment recovery is not available for services rendered by broker in absence of writing evidencing contractual relationship); M.K.D. Capital Corp. v. Miller, 652 N.Y.S.2d 919 (N.Y. Sup. 1996) (informing purchasers about property and providing materials to assist in preparing offer only before broker became licensed precluded broker from seeking compensation; and equitable estoppel did not apply to require compensation).

(n33)Footnote 89. Marathon Realty Corp. v. Gavin, 398 N.W.2d 689 (Neb. 1987). Proctor v. MacDonald, 689 A.2d 1330 (N.H. 1997) (relationship between brokers and owner subsequent to expiration of original commission agreement incorporated commission schedule contained in original agreement; implied agreement to pay commissions upon lease renewals and extensions did not violate statute of frauds).

Annotation, Admissibility of Oral Agreement as to Specific Time for Performance Where Written Contract is Silent, 85 A.L.R.2d 1269 (1997); Annotation, Admissibility of Oral Agreement Respecting Duration of Employment or Agency Where Written Contract Is Silent, 85 A.L.R.2d 1331 (1997); Annotation, Applicability of Parol Evidence Rule to Written Listing Agreement of Real-Estate Broker, 38 A.L.R.2d 542 (1997). Annotation, Statutory Necessity and Sufficiency of Written Statement as to Amount of Compensation in Broker's Contract to Procure Purchase, Sale, or Exchange of Real Estate, 9 A.L.R.2d 747 (1997). See, Orlando Lucero, "The Nuts and Bolts of Commercial Lease Listing Agreements," 14 Prob. & Prop. 7 (July/August 2000).

(n34)Footnote 90. Cal. Civ. Code § 1624(a)(4).

(n35)Footnote 91. Sherman v. Bruton, 497 S.W.2d 316 (Tex. App. 1973).

(n36)Footnote 92. Michael Braunstein, Remedy, Reason, and the Statute of Frauds: A Critical Economic Analysis, 1989 Utah L. Rev. 383, 385. Annotation, Sufficiency Under Statute of Frauds, of Description or Designation of Property in Real Estate Brokerage Contract, 30 A.L.R.3d 395 (1999).

(n37)Footnote 93. David M. Goldberg, Brokerage Agreements for Commercial Sales and Leases, 17 Real Est. Rev. 86 (Fall 1987).

(n38)Footnote 94. To illustrate the confusion, consider that Vermont, where listing agreements must be in writing to be enforceable, has allowed an unlicensed finder to collect based on his oral contract with a broker to split a commission. Garfano v. Wells, 458 A.2d 1122 (Vt. 1983). Alternately, Iowa, which also requires listing agreements to be in writing, has refused finder's fees based upon oral agreements. Buckingham v. Stille, 379 N.W.2d 30 (Iowa App. 1985); see also Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Enforcement of Business Opportunities or "Finder's Fees" Contracts, 24 A.L.R.3d 1160 (1960).

In 1963, to ensure that the writing requirement for listing agreements applied to finders, the California legislature added to what is now Civil Code § 1624(d) this phrase: "or to procure, introduce or find a purchaser or seller of real estate."

(n39)Footnote 95. E. Allen Farnsworth, Contracts § 6.11, at 453 (2d ed. 1990). In re License of Topik, 761 P.2d 32 (Ut. App. 1988) (The court disciplined a real estate broker for, among other things, offering to pay a finder's fee to an unlicensed person); Thomas v. Daubs, 684 N.E.2d 1011 (Ill. App. 1997) (a business broker that did not possess real estate broker's license was barred by Real Estate License Act from recovering finder's fee for oral contract for sale of landfill business in which real estate component, which encompassed more than 180 acres, was more than incidental); Lindenstadt v. Staff Bldrs., Inc., 55 Cal. App. 4th 882 (Cal. App. 1997) (the purpose of the broker's licensing statute -- the promotion of competency and trust -- is not served by denying Lindenstadt a finder's fee on transactions where he merely introduced the principals (Staff Builders and the acquired entity) to one another, and Staff Builders thereafter negotiated the acquisition); Tower Int'l, Inc. v. Caledonian Airways, Ltd., 969 F. Supp. 135 (E.D. N.Y. 1997) (Under New York law, recovery of finders's fee in quantum meruit under theory of unjust enrichment is precluded by statute in absence of effective written note or memorandum establishing contract for services of broker).

(n40)Footnote 96. Annotation, Broker's Right To Commission on Sales Consummated after Termination of Employment, 27 A.L.R.2d 1348; Annotation, Relative Rights and Liabilities of Vendor and His Broker to Down Payment or Earnest Money Forfeited by Vendee for Default under Real-Estate Contract, 9 A.L.R.2d 495; Perry J. Woodward, Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: A Tort That Eviscerates The Real Estate Brokers' Statute Of Frauds, 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1219 (1996) (A broker may not raise equitable estoppel as a defense to bar Statute of Frauds unless the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct which the broker, charged with knowledge of the statute of frauds, reasonably relies upon); Eric Mills Holmes, Restatement Of Promissory Estoppel, 32 Willamette L. Rev. 263, 443-444, 507-509 (Spring 1996) (Promissory estoppel or equitable estoppel exception to the Statute of Frauds in Oregon and Wyoming).

M.K.D. Capital Corp. v. Miller, 652 N.Y.S.2d 919 (N.Y. Sup. 1996) (Equitable estoppel did not require compensation services rendered before real estate broker became licensed; applying statute of frauds bar did not result in extraordinary and unconscionable injury to broker).

(n41)Footnote 97. Daigle Commercial Group v. St. Laurent, 734 A.2d 667 (Me. 1999) (The seller's promises created an "open" agreement that did not require writing; therefore the broker was entitled to the commission based on promissory estoppel).

(n42)Footnote 98. Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc., 702 P.2d 212 (Cal. 1985). Shortly after joining the board of Superscope, Tenzer learned that unless the company could sell its headquarters building, it would have to file for bankruptcy. The building had been marketed for nearly a year with no offers. Tushinsky, a fellow board member, implored him to find a suitable buyer. The parties agreed that Tenzer was entitled to a 10% finder's fee if he was successful. After Tenzer found a buyer and the sale closed, the board refused to pay the fee. Tenzer sued. The Court concluded that if Tenzer acted as a finder rather than as an unlicensed broker, was able to prove the promise and his reliance on it, as well as Superscope's unjust enrichment, then Superscope should be equitably estopped from denying liability. The case was settled: Tenzer got paid.

(n43)Footnote 99. 743 P.2d 1279 (Cal. 1987) (Distinguishing between Phillippe, who lost, and Tenzer, who won, the California Supreme Court pointed out that brokers, because they were subject to licensing requirements, are presumed to know the law, and should realize written notice is required to claim commissions. For finders, ignorance of the written requirement is pardonable when equitable estoppel can be proved. This distinction between finders and brokers rests on the finder's presumed, rather than actual, knowledge since few people--brokers or finders--are as knowledgeable about real estate as Michael Tenzer, a seasoned and hugely successful southern California real estate developer.)

(n44)Footnote 100. See Weiner v. Hazer, 430 N.W.2d 269 (Neb. 1988) (licensed broker can't recover commission based on equitable estoppel and an oral listing agreement. Broker is presumed to know a listing agreement needs to be written).

(n45)Footnote 101. 234 A.2d 366 (R.I. 1967). Zexter v. Cerrone, 265 A.2d 328 (R.I. 1970) (The Rhode Island Supreme Court applies the same rule to oral agreements between brokers and seller involving leases as to those involving sales).

(n46)Footnote 102. 234 A.2d 366, 368 (R.I. 1967). Of course, in this case the court didn't give fraud the precise and narrow definition California courts have reserved in this context, where fraud means that the seller said he had signed or would sign a written listing agreement, not that he would pay the commission. In California, the promise to pay a commission gives rise to an equitable estoppel claim that only finders, not brokers, can invoke. The more restricted fraud-based claim for a commission ("he said he signed and didn't") is open both to finders and brokers in California. Perry J. Woodward, Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage: A Tort That Eviscerates the Real Estate Brokers' Statute of Frauds, 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1219 (1996) (A broker may not raise equitable estoppel as a defense to bar Statute of Frauds unless the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct which the broker, charged with knowledge of the statute of frauds, reasonably relies upon).

Byblos Corp. v. Salem Farm Realty Trust, 692 A.2d 514 (N.H. 1997) (When certain factors, such as fraud, part performance or other equitable considerations, are present in settlement agreement regarding transfer of interest in land, trial court may dispense with statute of frauds' requirement of written agreement. However, lessee failed to meet burden of establishing basic elements of estoppel).

(n47)Footnote 103. McCue v. Deppert, 91 A.2d 503, 505 (N.J. App. 1952).

(n48)Footnote 104. Buckaloo v. Johnson, 537 P.2d 865 (Cal. 1975); Cushman & Wakefield of N.J., Inc. v. Alexander Summer Co., 295 N.J. Super. 173, 684 A.2d 975 (N.J. Super. A.D. 1996) (original broker had identified premises for lessee and had brought parties together, and second broker who received commission was "interloper"); Torelli v. J.P. Enters., Inc., 52 Cal. App. 4th 1250 (Cal. App. 1997) (Having made an agreement to pay the broker a commission which was memorialized in the counteroffer, the seller could not thereafter, consistent with the implied covenant of good faith, make a deal with the buyer on substantially the same terms as it contemplated in the counteroffer without paying the broker the agreed commission.); South Pacific Enters., Ltd. P'ship v. Cornerstone Realty, Inc., 672 So. 2d 568 (Fla. App. 1996) (Real estate broker was entitled to commission, as procuring cause of sale of real property, even though broker had not introduced vendors to purchasers; broker had played "pivotal role in generating interest in the subject property").

But see, Atlanta Apartment Invs,. Inc. v. New York Life Ins. Co., 469 S.E.2d 831 (Ga. App. 1996) (Absent proof that commission was due, broker had no cause of action for intentional interference with its business relations for inducing vendor not to pay broker real estate commission allegedly due).

See also Trammell Crow Co. No. 60 v. Harkinson, 944 S.W.2d 631 (Tex. 1997) (Real estate broker's claim for tortious interference with oral commission agreement between broker and landlord, or alternatively for tortious interference with prospective business relation, stated claim for recovery of real estate commission and was thus barred under provision of Real Estate License Act (RELA) prohibiting action for recovery of real estate commission absent written agreement).

See also Friendswood Dev. Co. v. McDade & Co., 926 S.W.2d 280 (Tex. 1996) (Party is excused from interfering with another's contract for purposes of tortious interference with contract action if it exercises its own legal rights or good faith claim to colorable legal right, even though that claim ultimately proves to be mistaken).

Compare Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (To the extent that real estate broker and brokerage firm breached their fiduciary duties to property owner by failing to disclose, prior to broker's closing on purchase of property owner's land, that broker had found third party to purchase land, property owner might be entitled to return of commission paid in connection with sale of his property to broker as well as to profit that broker earned upon resale of property to third party).

With Goldberg Realty Group v. Weinstein, 669 A.2d 187 (Me. 1996) (A real estate broker's breach of fiduciary duty, as agent for seller of real estate, by failing to disclose material information to seller results in forfeiture of commission by broker, information is "material" to transaction if person with degree of business acumen would want that information before proceeding); ERA Carico Real Estate Co., Inc. v. Manfredonia, 689 So. 2d 1208 (Fla. App. 3 Dist. 1997) (real estate agents who initially brought property to purchaser's attention were procuring cause of sale, and entitled to commission even if they were not intentionally excluded from sale by vendor and purchaser).

Robert S. Roche, Torts-Tortious Interference with Contract--Plaintiffs Must Prove "Improper Conduct" By The Defendant to Prevail in an Action For Tortious Interference With Contract; Merely Proving Truthful Information Which Is Aimed At Foiling a Contract Is Inadequate: Glass v. Kennedy, 7 Seton Hall J. Sport L. 159, at footnote 78 (1997); Roy T. Black, Client Liability To Real Estate Brokers: From Contract To Punitive Damages, 25 Real Est. L.J. 78, 85 (Summer 1996) (When the buyer and seller collude to deprive the broker, the elements of conspiracy may be present; the cause of action can be characterized as tortious interference with a prospective economic advantage or tortious interference with a contract); Mark P. Gergen, Tortious Interference: How It Is Engulfing Commercial Law, Why This Is Not Entirely Bad, And A Prudential Response, 38 Ariz. L. Rev. 1175 (Winter 1996); Perry J. Woodward, Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage: A Tort That Eviscerates The Real Estate Brokers' Statute of Frauds, 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1219 (1996).

(n49)Footnote 105. Powell on Real Property § 84C.03 (Michael Allan Wolf, ed., Matthew Bender).

(n50)Footnote 106. Richardson v. Afdahl, 313 N.W.2d 457 (S.D.1981) (Where the listing agreement calls for a negotiation of terms, the broker is not entitled to a commission until an agreement on the terms is reached between the buyer and the seller).

(n51)Footnote 107. Some commentators also include a fourth, the net listing. However, net listings have nothing to do with the exclusivity of the listing. They merely describe a type of commission structure in which the broker keeps as she commission everything above a fixed "net" price. D. Barlow Burke, Jr. lists six types of listings. Besides the open, exclusive agency, exclusive right to sell, and net, he describes the option listing -- the broker obtains an option to buy at a specified price and exercises it after locating a buyer. The sixth is the MLS, an exclusive right to sell for the listing broker but an open listing shared by all MLS members among buyers. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., Law of Real Estate Brokers §§ 2:13-2:36 (2d ed. 1992).

(n52)Footnote 108. Robert J. Bruss, Open Listing is Not the Best Route to Go, the Miami Herald, Aug. 7, 1988 (Real Estate Section). There is probably a direct link between the success of brokers in resisting open listings and the existence of multiple listing services. Brokers representing buyers are depending on the seller's listing agreement with the seller for their compensation. If that relationship is weak because the seller's broker has only an open listing, affiliated brokers representing buyers may downplay the listing when they come across it in the listing book.

Following is evidence of the connection between the dominance of "exclusives" in the marketplace and the existence of multiple listing services: in England, where there are no multiple listing services, estate agents (brokers) try valiantly to get exclusives and even offer commission discounts for them, but many sellers use open listings anyway, realizing full well that buyers are likely to shop the offerings at many estate agents' firms before making an offer. In commercial property markets in the United States, where multiple listing services don't figure prominently, open listings are quite common.

(n53)Footnote 109. Dorman Realty & Ins. Co. v. Stalvey, 212 S.E.2d 591, 593 (S.C. 1975) (the court ruled that the "right of an owner to sell his own property is an implicit condition of every contract of agency unless negatived").

(n54)Footnote 110. See Appendix, Exclusive Listing Agreement Form, p. 1, para. 1; see also Flynn v. LaSalle Nat'l Bank, 13 N.E.2d 71 (Ill. 1956); Berven Co. v. Newman, 281 N.W.2d 268 (S.D. 1979). But see OTI Shelf, Inc. v. Schair & Assoc., 517 S.E.2d 542 (Ga. App. 1999) (an exclusive right to sell does not by itself prohibit the owner from selling the property independently of all brokers and avoid incurring liability to the broker for a commission); Annotation, "Exclusive Right to Sell" and other Terms in Real-Estate Broker's Contract as Excluding Owner's Right of Sale, 88 A.L.R.2d 936 (1963).

(n55)Footnote 111. For helpful ideas for negotiating a buyer's broker agreement, see Lucy Allei Marsh, Real Property Transactions 148-67 (1992).

(n56)Footnote 112. A description of the travails of a prospective buyer in London was written by two Californians, Alina Tugen, Don't Get "Gazumped": First-Timers Survive Home-Buying in England, Los Angeles Times, Aug. 28, 1994, at K1, col. 3, col. 6 (Real Estate Section).

Brickell Bayview Real Estate, Inc. v. Cooper, 691 So. 2d 1094 (Fla. App. 1997) (The court denied Fortune's complaint for real estate commissions pursuant to an oral open listing agreement with appellee, Roy Cooper, after it found that a broker other than Fortune was the procuring cause for the sale of Cooper's property); Hagedorn v. Elwyn, 645 N.Y.S.2d 77 (N.Y.A.D. 1996); DiSalle Real Estate Co. v. Howell, 690 N.E.2d 25 (Ohio App. 1996) (an agreement of agency for the sale of property should be construed, if possible, to give the owner himself the right to sell his property without incurring liability for the payment of a commission; as a result, the court found an "exclusive agency" agreement instead of an "exclusive to sell" agreement); Foxfield Realty, Inc. v. Kubala, 678 N.E.2d 1060 (Ill. App. 2 Dist. 1997) (The court held that one seller's quitclaim of her interest in property to another according to marriage dissolution proceeding which ordered division of sellers' assets did not obligate sellers to pay commission to broker under an "exclusive right to sell" agreement); Nicholson v. Myers, 931 S.W.2d 183 (Mo. App. S.D. 1996) (broker, pursuant to an "exclusive right to sell listing agreement" for the sale of a motel, was entitled to receive commission where agreement had been reached during time of listing agreement even though documents were not signed until after listing expired).

Compare with Nooney Krombach Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mo., 929 S.W.2d 888 (Mo. App. 1996) (Under terms of agreement between real estate broker and client with regard to sale of client's property, broker did not have to be procuring cause of sale or show that agreement gave it exclusive right to sell in order to recover commission; broker was promised a commission in consideration for its role as client's representative in sale, and broker was not retained to seek out purchasers).

But see Friendswood Devel. Co. v. McDade & Co., 926 S.W.2d 280 (Tex. 1996) ("Exclusive right to obtain lease" granted to the broker by a lessee, with an exception of certain transactions between the lessee and certain prospective lessors excluded from the contract).

(n57)Footnote 113. 444 U.S. 232 (1980).

(n58)Footnote 114. 15 U.S.C. § 1.

(n59)Footnote 115. See, e.g., Park v. El Paso Bd. of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053 (5th Cir. 1985) (discount broker boycotted; court found no evidence of damage); Owen R. Phillips & Henry N. Buttler, The Law and Economics of Residential Real Estate Markets in Texas: Regulation and Antitrust Implications, 36 Baylor L. Rev. 623 (1987). Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1474 (N.D. Ohio 1996) (Real estate brokers had not established that competitor with 48 percent market share in one city and 50.6 percent market share in another monopolized market in those cities; no evidence was presented that competitors' market share had increased after they initiated alleged anticompetitive activity and there was no evidence that there were entry barriers to real estate industry).

(n60)Footnote 116. Leslie Berger, Discount Real Estate Agent Sues, Alleging She's Been Blacklisted, Los Angeles Times (Valley ed.), Jan. 29, 1990, at B3.

(n61)Footnote 117. Leslie Berger, Discount Real Estate Agent Sues, Alleging She's Been Blacklisted, Los Angeles Times (Valley ed.), Jan. 29, 1990, at B3 (quoting William M. Pfeiffer, Vice President and General Counsel for the California Association of Realtors). Jones v. Best, 950 P.2d 1 (Wash. 1998) (broker was allowed to recover the full amount of the commission despite vendor's arguments that vendor orally refused to accept the purchase price unless the broker lowered his commission); Schettino v. Roizman Dev. Inc., 708 A.2d 446 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1998) (broker seeking commission did not comply with the statute of frauds by providing a writing containing essential terms such as signatures and amount of commission); Kaplon-Belo Assoc. v. Cheng, 685 N.Y.S.2d 768 (1999) (when the listing agreement is silent regarding the specific amount of the commission, the broker is entitled to a commission that is fair and customary for the community); but see Parkway Group Ltd. v. Modell's Sporting Goods, 678 N.Y.S.2d 656 (1998) (brokerage agreement was unenforceable because it lacked amount of commission to be paid, which is an essential term; instead the agreement provided only for a commission to be negotiated in the future); Annotation, Real-Estate Broker's Right to Recover Commission from Seller where Sale Fails because of Seller's Failure to Deliver Good Title-Modern Cases, 28 A.L.R.4th 1007; Annotation, Construction of Agreement Between Real-Estate Agents to Share Commissions, 71 A.L.R.3d 586; Annotation, Construction of Provision in Real-Estate Broker's Listing Contract that Broker Shall Receive Commission on the Sale After Expiration of Listing Period to one with whom Broker has "Negotiated" During Listing Period, 51 A.L.R.3d 1149.

(n62)Footnote 118. June Fletcher, Brokers Will Do Extra Chores for Pricey Sales, Wall St. J., Sept. 22, 1995, at B10.

(n63)Footnote 119. The same principle applies to wage negotiations. It is usually better for a job applicant to wait until chosen before haggling over wages.

(n64)Footnote 120. FTC Los Angeles Regional Office, The Residential Real Estate Brokerage Industry (1983).

(n65)Footnote 121. See Plymouth Port, Inc. v. Smith, 530 N.E.2d 194 (Mass. App. 1988) (exclusive with no termination date valid for a "reasonable time," and four years wasn't reasonable).

(n66)Footnote 122. See Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.25(r). Brian Properties, Inc. v. Burley, 662 N.E.2d 522 (Ill. App. 1996) (Agreement between property owner and broker was determined to be a "listing agreement" and not a "management agreement"; therefore the listing agreement is void based upon the Real Estate License Act for failure to contain an expiration date); Parks v. Morris, 914 S.W.2d 545 (Tenn. App. 1995) (the fact that a real-estate listing was oral and did not have an expiration date did not violate Tennessee law because indefinite contracts are required to be performed within a reasonable time).

(n67)Footnote 123. For additional discussion of the "ready, willing and able" requirement, see Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, ch. 5, The "Ready, Willing and Able" Requirements--Proof of Purchaser's Financial Ability to Consummate the Transaction (Matthew Bender).

(n68)Footnote 124. Bernard Klibanow & Co. v. Shafer, 276 N.E.2d 446 (Ill. App. 1971); but see O'Connor Realty Servs. v. Higgins, 539 N.Y.S.2d 975 (1989) (purchaser who can't finance the acquisition is not able to perform).

Glassberg v. Warshawsky, 638 N.E.2d 749 (Ill. App. 1994) (broker's commission accrues when the broker produces a buyer who is ready, willing, and able to buy, regardless of whether the deal closes); Smith v. Cannell, 723 A.2d 876 (Me. 1999) (broker is not entitled to commission unless the buyer is ready, willing, and able to buy); Annotation, What constitutes financial ability to perform within rule entitling broker to commission for producing ready, willing, and able purchaser of real property, 87 A.L.R.4th 11; Annotation, Modern View as to Right of Real Estate Broker to Recover Commission from Seller-Principal where Buyer Defaults under Valid Contract of Sale, 12 A.L.R.4th 1083. M.K.D. Capital Corp. v. Miller, 652 N.Y.S.2d 919 (1996); B & H Assos. v. Buscemi, 645 N.Y.S.2d 538 (1996); Hagedorn v. Elwyn, 645 N.Y.S.2d 77 (1996).

(n69)Footnote 125. See, e.g., In re Jones, 98 B.R. 399 (Bankr. D. Ill. 1988).

(n70)Footnote 126. The evolution of Massachusetts case law illustrates some of the conflicting positions courts take on this issue. Prior to 1975, Massachusetts courts held that, absent an express stipulation to the contrary, a broker was entitled to a commission upon completion of the services the broker was hired to perform. The success or failure of the deal was irrelevant, so long as failure was not due to any fault of the broker. In Tristam's Landing, Inc. v. Wait, 327 N.E.2d 727 (Mass. 1975), Massachusetts adopted New Jersey's rule that a broker has no right to the commission where the deal failed through no fault of the seller. See Ellsworth Dobbs, Inc. v. Johnson, 236 A.2d 843 (N.J. 1967). The no deal, no commission rule is followed in Oregon, Idaho, Kansas, Massachusetts, and Nebraska. Brown v. Grimm, 481 P.2d 63 (Or. 1971); Winkleman v. Allen, 519 P.2d 1377 (Kan. 1974); Tristam's Landing v. Wait, 327 N.E.2d 727 (Mass. 1975); Dworak v. Michals, 320 N.W.2d 485 (Neb. 1982); Wayne v. Lipsky, 846 P.2d 904 (Idaho 1984). Alabama followed the closing rule long before Dobbs. See Taylor Real Estate & Insurance Co. v. Greene, 151 So. 2d 397 (Ala. 1963). A split of authority has resurfaced in Louisiana law in the period after Dobbs. Compare Puckett v. Broussard, 356 So. 2d 1021 (La. 1977), with Clesi v. Quaglina, 137 So. 2d 500 (La. 1962) and Wendel v. Dixon Real Estate Co., 232 So. 2d 791 (La. 1970). Courts in Alaska and Vermont have praised the closing rule without explicitly adopting it. See Staab v. Messier, 264 A.2d 790 (Vt. 1970); Drake v. Hosley, 713 P.2d 1203 (Alaska 1986).

Torelli v. J.P. Enters., Inc., 52 Cal. App. 4th 1250 (1997) (Having made an agreement to pay the broker a commission which was memorialized in the counteroffer, the seller could not thereafter, consistent with the implied covenant of good faith, make a deal with the buyer on substantially the same terms as it contemplated in the counteroffer without paying the broker the agreed commission).

(n71)Footnote 127. 236 A.2d 843 (1967).

(n72)Footnote 128. 236 A.2d 843, 855 (1967). See also Tristam's Landing, Inc. v. Wait, 327 N.E.2d 727 (Mass. 1975); Strout Realty, Inc. v. Milhous, 689 P.2d 222 (Idaho 1984); Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 12-61-201-12-61-202; Goldblatt Assocs. v. Panva, 587 A.2d 433 (Conn. App. 1991). Schenck v. HJI Assocs., 685 A.2d 481 (N.J. Super. App. 1996) (In real estate broker's commission agreement drafted in relation to contingent lease, where language of contract and interrelation of its provisions, along with parties' relationship and knowledge of situation, made it clear that broker knew only way he would receive a commission would be if defendants obtained financing).

(n73)Footnote 129. See, e.g., Callaway v. Overholt, 796 S.W.2d 828 (Tex. App. 1990) (broker earns commission on an agreement to pay a commission when parties enter a purchase-and-sale agreement). Restatement (Second) of Agency § 445 cmt. d (1985); George J. Seidel, Real Estate Law 159 (1979); Karl B. Holtzschue, Real Estate Contracts 5 (1985) (but see the 1987 Supplement; states that a valid contract is required in New York); California Real Property Sales Transactions § 2.87 (Gordon L. Graham, ed., 2d ed. 1993) (stating the general rule for California). Consolidated Realty Group v. Sizzling Platter, Inc., 930 P.2d 268 (Utah App. 1996) (Real estate broker that entered into contract to obtain lease for owner of commercial property was entitled to commission when tenant entered into lease with partnership, one partner of which was owned by the same principal as property owner, where broker arranged meeting that resulted in lease formation); Century 21 Pinetree Properties, Inc. v. Cason, 469 S.E.2d 458 (Ga. App. 1996) (Realty company acting on behalf of vendor could recover its commission from purchaser, in action arising from unconsummated sale of property, under plain language of purchase contract providing that purchasers would pay commission if they failed or refused to perform under contract).

(n74)Footnote 130. Stewart Title & Trust v. Ordean, 528 F.2d 894 (9th Cir. 1976); Ralph Hochman & Co. v. Fort Stanwix Mfg. Co., 284 F. Supp. 995 (N.D.N.Y. 1967); First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Pardue, 545 F. Supp. 433 (N.D. Tex. 1982); Donaldson v. LeNore, 540 P.2d 671 (Ariz. 1975); Cavanagh v. Schaefer, 545 P.2d 416 (Ariz. 1976); Maslin v. Rucker, 438 P.2d 326 (Ariz. App. 1968); Barrett v. Duzan, 559 P.2d 693 (Ariz. 1976); Kopf v. Milam, 387 P.2d 390 (Cal. 1963); Lawrence Block Co., Inc. v. Palston, 266 P.2d 856 (Cal. 1954), overruled on other grounds by Mattei v. Hopper, 330 P.2d 625 (Cal. 1958); Manzin v. United Bank & Trust Co., 506 A.2d 169 (Conn. App. 1986); Nugent v. Del Vecchio, 415 A.2d 1339 (Conn. 1980); Lindquist v. Burklew, 123 So. 2d 261 (Fla. 1960); Harding Realty, Inc. v. Turnberry Towers Corp., 436 So. 2d 983 (Fla. 1983); Arvida Realty Sales, Inc. v. William R. Tinnerman & Co., 536 So. 2d 1041 (Fla. 1988); Ragsdale v. Smith,138 S.E.2d 916 (Ga. App. 1964); Armstrong v. Lattimore, 296 S.E.2d 188 (Ga. App. 1982); Cooper v. Liberty Nat'l Bank, 75 N.E.2d 759 (Ill. App. 1947); Fox v. Stewart, 414 N.E.2d 881 (Ill. App. 1980); Oldham v. Jones, 136 So. 2d 310 (La. 1961); Chamberlain v. Porter, 562 A.2d 675 (Me. 1989); Wyand v. Patterson Agency, Inc., 319 A.2d 308 (Md. 1974); Prince Georges Props., Inc. v. Rogers, 341 A.2d 804 (Md. 1975); De Franceaux Realty Group, Inc. v. Leeth, 391 A.2d 1209 (Md. 1978); Storch v. Ricker, 471 A.2d 1079 (Md. App. 1984), overruled on other grounds by Lake Short Investors v. Rite Aid Corp., 509 A.2d 727 (Md. 1986); Kostan v. Glasier, 60 N.W.2d 283 (Mich. 1953); Cunningham v. Garber, 104 N.W.2d 746 (Mich. 1960); Hayman Mgt. Co. v. Dura Corp., 206 N.W.2d 754 (Mich. App. 1973); McIntosh v. Frisinger, 507 S.W.2d 419 (Mo. 1974) (share of the earnest money only); Perkinson v. Burford, 623 S.W.2d 30 (Mo. App. 1981) (share of the earnest money only); Diehl & Assocs. v. Houtchens, 567 P.2d 930 (Mont. 1977) (earnest money only) overruled by Ehly v. Cady, 687 P.2d 687 (Mont. 1984); Martin v. Community Gas & Oil Co., 668 P.2d 243 (Mont. 1983); Craig v. Margrave, 446 P.2d 653 (Nev. 1968); DiGregorio v. Marcus, 475 P.2d 97 (Nev. 1970); Ferrara v. Firsching, 533 P.2d 1351 (Nev. 1975); Gingras v. Stark Estates, Inc., 248 A.2d 86 (N.H. 1968); Shumaker v. Lear, 345 A.2d 249 (Pa. Super. 1975); Gartner v. Higgins, 214 A.2d 849 (R.I. 1965); V/oW Realty Sales Agency v. Long Meadows Country Club, Inc., 537 S.W.2d 533 (Tex. 1976); Real Estate Exch. v. Kingston, 420 P.2d 117 (Utah 1966); Mansfield v. Smith, 277 S.W.2d 740 (Wis. 1979).

(n75)Footnote 131. Holland v. Dietz, 595 S.W.2d 931 (Ark. 1980); Potter v. Ridge Realty Corp., 259 A.2d 758 (Conn. Supp. 1969); Wetzel v. De Groot, 86 A.2d 737 (D.C. 1952); Bryan v. Justice, 247 So. 2d 340 (Fla. 1971); Chanton v. Drucker, 299 So. 2d 145 (Fla. 1974); Cabry v. Ionidas, 248 N.E.2d 45 (Ill. App. 1970); Nelson v. Bolton, 391 N.E.2d 182 (Ill. App. 1979); Munson v. Larguier, 50 So. 2d 808 (La. 1951); Nettles v. Vignes, 49 So. 2d 371 (La. 1950); Adams v. Adams, 283 So. 2d 503 (La. 1973); Demarest v. Enna, 472 So. 2d 56 (La. 1985); Hare v. Bauer, 26 N.W.2d 359 (Minn. 1947); Dunn v. Staples, 248 A.2d 635 (N.H. 1968); Trenga Realty v. Wedgewood Homes, Inc., 526 N.Y.S.2d 251 (1988); Goetz v. Anderson, 274 N.W.2d 175 (N.D. 1978); Allied Realty, Inc. v. Boyer, 302 N.W.2d 774 (N.D. 1981); Haugen v. Schatz, 359 N.W.2d 851 (N.D. 1984); Nugent v. Scharff, 476 S.W.2d 414 (Tex. 1971); Staab v. Messier, 264 A.2d 790 (Vt. 1970); Record Realty, Inc. v. Hull, 552 P.2d 191 (Wash. App. 1976). Schenck v. HJI Assocs., 685 A.2d 481 (N.J. Super. App., 1996) (In real estate broker's commission agreement drafted in relation to contingent lease, where language of contract and interrelation of its provisions, along with parties' relationship and knowledge of situation, made it clear that broker knew only way he would receive a commission would be if defendants obtained financing, contractual provision that commission was earned upon signing of agreement did not override provisions that made any commission contingent upon defendant obtaining financing).

(n76)Footnote 132. Richardson v. Kelley Land & Cattle Co., 504 F.2d 30 (8th Cir. 1974); Bishop v. Norell, 353 P.2d 1022 (Ariz. 1960); Diamond v. Haydis, 356P.2d 643 (Ariz. 1960); Trimmer v. Ludtke, 462 P.2d 809 (Ariz. 1969); Dea v. Davy, 309 P.2d 894 (Cal. App.1957); Born v. Koop, 19 Cal. Rptr. 379 (1962); Maldonado v. Linza, 24 Cal. Rptr. 608 (1962); Rylee v. De Fini, 285 P.2d 115 (Cal. App. 1955); Horton-Cavey Realty Co. v. Reese, 527 P.2d 914 (Colo. App. 1974); The Sherman Agency v. Carey, 568 P.2d 75 (Colo. App. 1977); Bernhardt v. Luke, 122 A.2d 124 (Del. 1956); Restifo v. Pastor, 129 A.2d 533 (D.C. 1957); Sikes v. Markham, 41 S.E.2d 828 (Ga. App. 1947); Waring v. John J. Thompson & Co., 46 S.E.2d 364 (Ga. App. 1948); Selton v. Dowling, 54 S.E.2d 763 (Ga. App. 1949); Thornton v. Lewis, 126 S.E.2d 869 (Ga. App. 1962); Clover Realty Co. v. Gouyd, 264 S.E.2d 547 (Ga. App. 1980); Spilky v. McDonald, 236 N.E.2d 907 (Ill. App. 1968); Sharkey v. Snow, 300 N.E.2d 279 (Ill. App. 1973); Rodes v. Preston Corp.,

377 N.E.2d 1190 (Ill. App. 1978); Solomon v. Baron, 462 N.E.2d 756 (Ill. App. 1984); Lindsay Realty Corp. v. Bellina,320 So. 2d 572 (La. 1975); C. J. Brown, Inc. v. Miller, 388 So. 2d 103 (La. 1980); Sterk & Vogel, Inc. v. Kuzee, 54 N.W.2d 219 (Mich. 1952); Adams v. Kerr, 655 S.W.2d 49 (Mo. 1983); Thompson-McClean, Inc. v. Campbell, 134 S.E.2d 671 (N.C. 1964); Pope v. Gerhard Corp., 74 N.E.2d 121 (Ohio 1947); Bayer v. McDade, 610 S.W.2d 171 (Tex. 1980); Hansen v. Snell, 354 P.2d 1070 (Utah 1960); Peter M. Chalik & Assocs. v. Hermes, 201 N.W.2d 514 (Wis. 1972). Mautner-Glick Corp. v. Dime Sav. Bank of Williamsburgh, 647 N.Y.S.2d 782 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (Broker was not entitled to commission in connection with sale of property where neither of conditions contained in brokerage agreement signed by broker's agent, which conditioned entitlement to commission upon execution of assignment agreement was fulfilled as the buyer had elected not to sign agreement); Schwey v. Vara, 674 So. 2d 935 (Fla. App. 1996) (Real estate broker that produced a prospective purchaser for vendors' property was not entitled to a commission after holder of right of first refusal on the property exercised that right and purchased property; contract between vendors and broker provided that contract would be void and that broker would not receive a commission if holder of right of first refusal executed an identical contract).

(n77)Footnote 133. Gatzemeyer v. Vogel, 544 F.2d 988 (8th Cir. 1976); Maricopa Realty & Trust Co. v. V.R.D. Farms, Inc., 460 P.2d 195 (Ariz. App. 1969) overruled by Donaldson v. LeNore, 540 P.2d 671 (Ariz. 1975); Ira Garson Realty Co. v. Brown, 4 Cal. Rptr. 734 (1960); Chapman v. Gilmore, 34 Cal. Rptr. 515 (1963); Billings v. Rexford Park Apts., 52 Cal. Rptr. 914 (1966); Paulsen v. Leadbetter, 72 Cal. Rptr. 819 (1968); Fitzgan v. Burke, 61 A.2d 721 (D.C. 1948); Bryan v. Rusk, 78 S.E.2d 853 (Ga. App. 1953); Kenerly v. Yancey, 241 S.E.2d 28 (Ga. App. 1977); Postal Union Life Ins. Co. v. Hensley, 186 P.2d 802 (Okla. 1947).

(n78)Footnote 134. Pasley v. Barber, 368 P.2d 549 (Alaska 1962); Huttlinger v. Far West Enters., 281 P.2d 554 (Cal. App. 1955); Schoenberg v. Romike Props., 59 Cal. Rptr. 359 (1967); Hensley Ins. Co. v. Echols, 31 So. 2d 625 (Fla. 1947); Zide v. Zenchenko, 101 So. 2d 64 (Fla. 1958); Prall v. Corum, 403 So. 2d 991 (Fla. 1981); Reisman v. Massey, 67 S.E.2d 585 (Ga. App. 1951); United Investors, Inc. v. Tsotsos, 477 N.E.2d 40 (Ill. App. 1985); Dunn v. Kramer, 208 S.W.2d 41 (Ky. 1948); Crabtree v. Board of Trustees, 512 S.W.2d 311 (Ky. 1974); Werner, McShan & Robertson, Inc. v. Bonnette, 160 So. 2d 334 (La. 1964); Perry v. MacArthur, 358 A.2d 385 (Me. 1976); Goss v. Hill, 149 A.2d 10 (Md. 1959); The Lake Co. v. Charles Molan, 131 N.W.2d 734 (Minn. 1964);

Herb Tillman Co., Inc. v. Sissel, 348 S.W.2d 819 (Mo. 1961); Pointer v. Edward L. Kuhs Co., 678 S.W.2d 836 (Mo. 1984); Flaherty v. Hensley, 529 P.2d 1389 (Mont. 1974); McGarry v. McCrone, 118 N.E.2d 195 (Ohio App. 1954); Eastern Okla. Land & Cattle Co. v. Dorris, 549 P.2d 78 (Okla. 1976); Jackson v. Williams, 510 S.W.2d 645 (Tex. 1974); Kingsland Land Corp. v. Lange, 60 S.E.2d 872 (Va. 1950); Hercules v. Robedeaux, 329 N.W.2d 240 (Wis. 1982). Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (To the extent that real estate broker and brokerage firm breached their fiduciary duties to property owner by failing to disclose, prior to broker's closing on purchase of property owner's land, that broker had found third party to purchase land, property owner might be entitled to return of commission paid in connection with sale of his property to broker as well as to profit that broker earned upon resale of property to third party); In re Mehdipour, 202 B.R. 474 (9th Cir. 1996) (Under California law, not all breaches of fiduciary duty based on disclosure violations deprive broker of compensation, and broker will be deprived of his commission only when there is breach of fiduciary duty which involves intentional disloyalty or bad faith. In this case, broker was entitled to payment of compensation as administrative expense); Goldberg Realty Group v. Weinstein, 669 A.2d 187 (Me. 1996) (A real estate broker's breach of fiduciary duty, as agent for seller of real estate, by failing to disclose material information to seller results in forfeiture of commission by broker; information is "material" to transaction if person with degree of business acumen would want that information before proceeding).

(n79)Footnote 135. See, Lance Entrekin, The Commission Recovery Rate for Brokers in Failed Deals 1947-88 (on file with author). The author found that in states with rules allowing commissions on failed deals, the brokers' recovery rate in such cases declined from 55.3% from 1947 to 1967 (Pre-Dobbs) to 39.5% since 1967. Mr. Entrekin relied on cases from the following A.L.R. notes updated by a Lexis search.

Annotation, Brokers' Right to Commission Where Customer Repudiates or Fails to Complete Contract or Promise Which Is Oral or Not Specifically Enforceable, 12 A.L.R.2d 1410 (1950); Annotation, What Deviation in Prospective Vendee's Proposal from Vendor's Terms Precludes Broker from Recovering Commission for Producing a Ready, Willing, and Able Vendee, 18 A.L.R.2d 376 (1951); Annotation, Broker's Return of Deposit to Purchaser as Waiver of Right to Demand Commission from Seller, 69 A.L.R.2d 1224 (1960); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Right to Commission as Affected by Failure or Refusal of Customer (Prospect) to Comply With Valid Contract, 74 A.L.R.2d 437 (1960) but see Annotation, Modern View as to Right of Real Estate Broker to Recover Commission from Seller-Principal where Buyer Defaults Under Valid Contract of Sale, 12 A.L.R.4th 1083; Annotation, Broker's Right to Commission on Sale Rejected by Principal Because of Buyer's Fraud or Misrepresentation, 79 A.L.R.2d 1055 (1961); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Right to Compensation as Affected by Failure or Refusal of Principal's Spouse to Join in Contract of Sale, 10 A.L.R.3d 665 (1966); Annotation, Modern View as to Right of Real Estate Broker to Recover Commission from Seller-Principal Where Buyer Defaults Under Valid Contract of Sale, 12 A.L.R.4th 1083 (1982); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Right to Recover Commission from Seller Where Sale Fails Because of Seller's Failure to Deliver Good Title-Modern Cases, 28 A.L.R.4th 1007 (1984); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Rights and Liabilities as Affected by Failure to Disclose Financial Information Concerning Purchaser, 34 A.L.R.4th 191 (1984); Randy R. Koenders, Annotation, What Constitutes Financial Ability to Perform Within Rule Entitling Broker to Commission for Producing Ready, Willing, and Able Purchaser of Real Property, 87 A.L.R.4th 11 (1991). Matthew J. Leeds, The Residential Real Estate Contract Form, 414 PLI/Real 9 (May 1996). Leadership Real Estate, Inc. v. Harper, 638 A.2d 173 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div. 1993) (Broker has a right to recover commission when vendor acts in bad faith by refusing without legal justification to close title; the vendor impliedly covenants not to do anything that would destroy a broker's commission).

(n80)Footnote 136. D. Barlow Burke, Jr., the Law of Real Estate Brokers 3:69 - 3:71 (2d ed. 1992).

(n81)Footnote 137. Currier v. Kosinski, 506 N.E.2d 895, 897 (Mass. App. 1987).

(n82)Footnote 138. Werner v. Katal Country Club, 650 N.Y.S.2d 866 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (Broker is entitled to recover commission where owner terminates his or her activities in bad faith and as mere device to escape payment of commission); Century 21 Volpe Realty, Inc. v. Kim, 647 N.Y.S.2d 552 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1996) (Real estate broker was entitled to its commission, where vendor, after having entered into valid and enforceable contract with would-be purchaser for sale of property, willfully breached agreement and thus caused failure of transfer of title).

(n83)Footnote 139. Dworak v. Michals, 320 N.W.2d 485 (Neb. 1982).

(n84)Footnote 140. Bernard R. Goldstein, When Does a Real Estate Broker Earn His Commission?, 27 Prac. Law 43 (July 1981) (citing Freeman v. Creelman, 212 P. 56 (1922)). See also Tanenbaum v. Boehm, 95 N.E. 708 (N.Y. 1911).

(n85)Footnote 141. Hecht v. Meller, 296 N.Y.S.2d 561, 244 N.E.2d 77 (1968). In re Tully, 202 B.R. 481 (9th Cir. 1996) (Under California law, broker is entitled to commission, even if escrow does not close, when vendor arbitrarily refuses to proceed with transaction).

(n86)Footnote 142. The general rule is that, absent a stipulation to the contrary, the seller still owes commission to a broker if a broker, acting in good faith, procured a purchaser willing and able to purchase the property on the terms offered by the seller. It is not the broker's fault if the sale fails because of a defect in title of which the broker had no notice. The broker is clearly entitled to a commission where the buyer refused to accept a defective title. Phelps v. Prusch, 23 P. 1111 (Cal. 1890).See also Bennett v. McCabe, 808 F.2d 178 (Cal. Mass. 1st Cir. 1987); Meridian Interests, Inc. v. J. A. Peterson Enterprises, Inc., 693 S.W.2d 179 (Mo. App. 1985); Emerich v. Leviton, 454 N.E.2d 45 (Ill. App. 1983).

(n87)Footnote 143. § 12-61-201, "When entitled to commission," reads as follows: "No real estate agent or broker is entitled to a commission for finding a purchaser who is ready, willing and able to complete the purchase of real estate as proposed by the owner until the same is consummated or is defeated by the refusal or neglect of the owner to consummate the same as agreed upon."

§ 12-61-202, "Objections on account of title," reads as follows: "No real estate agent or broker is entitled to a commission when a proposed purchaser fails or refuses to complete his contract or purchase because of defects in the title of the owner, unless such owner, within a reasonable time, has said defects corrected by legal proceedings or otherwise."

(n88)Footnote 144. Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Right to Recover Commission from Seller When Sale Fails Because of Seller's Failure to Deliver Good Title -- Modern Cases, 2 A.L.R. 4th 1008 (1984).

(n89)Footnote 145. Eastern Oklahoma Land & Cattle Co. v. Dobbs, 549 P.2d 78 (Okla. 1976).

(n90)Footnote 146. Stutzman Realty, Inc. v. Petralia, 554 N.Y.2d 714 (1990); Cardoza v. Moorehouse, 17 Cal. Rptr. 28 (1961).

(n91)Footnote 147. Mayberry v. Davis, 178 N.W.2d 911 (Minn. 1970) (co-tenant liable for commission when other co-tenants refused to join in the sale even though broker knew co-tenant lacked 100% ownership).

(n92)Footnote 148. Cardoza v. Moorehouse, 17 Cal. Rptr. 28 (1961).

(n93)Footnote 149. Sopher v. Martin, 243 A.2d 459 (1997) (broker seeking commission was not entitled to summary judgment because the commission agreement provided that the commission was due at closing).

(n94)Footnote 150. Annotation, Liability of Defaulting Purchaser to Owner's Broker or Auctioneer, 30 A.L.R.3d 1395 (1970).

(n95)Footnote 151. Belk v. Oehlert, 324 So. 2d 668 (Fla. 1975); Wendel v. Dixon Real Estate Co., 232 So. 2d 791 (La. App. 1970), app. den., 236 So. 2d 29 (La. 1970).

(n96)Footnote 152. Chan v. Tsang, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14 (1991). The buyer's broker may recover his share of the full commission and is not limited by any liquidated damage clause in the purchase-and-sale agreement, which typically provides for the broker to get half of what the seller recovers in damages. See Tanner Assocs., Inc. v. Ciraldo, 161 A.2d 725 (N.J. 1960). California courts have extended the right of recovery to the seller's broker or listing broker, and the buyer agreed in the sales contract to pay the commission. However, if the broker and buyer have no preexisting relationship and the buyer isn't obligated to pay the commission in the purchase-and-sale agreement, courts have refused to find an implied promise of payment by the buyer. Century 21 Pinetree Properties, Inc. v. Cason, 469 S.E.2d 458 (Ga. App. 1996) (Realty company acting on behalf of vendor could recover its commission from purchaser, in action arising from unconsummated sale of property, under plain language of purchase contract providing that purchasers would pay commission if they failed or refused to perform under contract).

(n97)Footnote 153. See Ballas v. Lake Weir Light & Water Co., 130 So. 421 (Fla. 1930), and Lincoln Realty Co. v. Garden City Land & Immigration Co., 143 N.W. 230 (Neb. 1913).

(n98)Footnote 154. See, e.g., Snoddy v. Wallace, 625 S.W.2d 81 (Tex. App. 1981). Buyers persuaded the seller to take a reduced purchase price of $2,350,000 for an apartment complex in East Palo Alto the sellers had listed for sale at $2,500,000. The key to the price reduction was the buyers' proposal to delay the sale until after the listing agreement expired. This way the seller could save the 6% commission. The broker found out about the deal and obtained its commission through arbitration since the parties met and decided to defer their closing specifically to avoid the broker's commission.

The buyers had promised to indemnify the seller if the seller got stuck with the commission, but that promise hadn't been put into the purchase and sale agreement. Maybe the parties figured that putting an indemnity clause in the contract would be a red flag to the broker if the broker ever got wind of the deal.

Anyway, after getting socked for the commission, the seller sought the promised reimbursement from the buyers. The buyers refused payment; the seller sued. In court, the buyers prevailed because the commission indemnity provision hadn't been put in the final written sales contract. The court invoked the parol evidence rule, which excludes oral or written evidence to vary or contradict the terms of a written contract. The parties could have put the indemnity provision in the contract. Having failed to do that, the obligation didn't survive the final written contract. EPA Real Estate Partnership v. Hee Duk Kang, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 209 (1992). ERA Carico Real Estate Co., Inc. v. Manfredonia, 689 So. 2d 1208 (Fla. App. 1997) (real estate agents who initially brought property to purchaser's attention were procuring cause of sale, and entitled to commission even if they were not intentionally excluded from sale by vendor and purchaser); Coldwell Banker Town & Country Realty of Hastings, Inc. v. Johnson, 544 N.W.2d 360 (Neb. 1996) (Real estate broker was not entitled to a commission on sale of property, where no sale was made during existence of agreement between vendors and broker, sale was the result of work of vendors' attorney, not the result of anything done by broker, and neither list price nor offer obtained by broker was on substantially the same terms as were finally agreed upon); Nicholson v. Myers, 931 S.W.2d 183 (Mo. App. 1996) (broker, pursuant to an "exclusive right to sell listing agreement" for the sale of a motel, was entitled to receive commission where agreement had been reached during time of listing agreement even though documents were not signed until after listing expired).

(n99)Footnote 155. Mellos v. Silverman, 367 So. 2d 1369 (Ala. 1979).

(n100)Footnote 156. Bear Kaufman Realty v. Spec. Dev., 645 N.E.2d 244 (Ill. App. 1994).

(n101)Footnote 157. See also Mollyann, Inc. v. Demetaides, 614 N.Y.S.2d 437 (N.Y.A.D. 1994) (broker held not entitled to commission when initial offer was rejected, and another broker later negotiated a successful sale to the same purchasers).

(n102)Footnote 158. Century 21 Flavin Realty, Inc. v. Erwin Heirs, Inc., 657 So.2d 108 (La. App. 1995) (broker who negotiated with a purchaser who eventually acquired the property one year after the extension clause expired was not entitled to a commission); Leadership Real Estate, Inc. v. Harper, 638 A.2d 173 (N.J. Super. Ct. Law Div. 1993) (Broker is entitled to commission if a written contract has been executed by the vendor and purchaser before the expiration of the extension clause, even if the sale is not consummated and title is not passed until after the expiration of the extension clause).

(n103)Footnote 159. 20 Cal. Jur. 3d Brokers § 84, at 564-66 (1974) (where broker has expended time and effort to sell the property, the principal cannot terminate the listing agreement without the payment of commissions). Page Roy T. Black, Client Liability to Real Estate Brokers: From Contract To Punitive Damages, 25 Real Est. L.J. 78, at 83 (Summer 1996).

(n104)Footnote 160. Compare Blank v. Borden, 524 P.2d 127 (Cal. 1974), with Wright v. Schutt Constr. Co., 500 P.2d 1045 (Or. 1972). Larson-Hegstrom & Assoc., Inc. v. Jeffries, 701 P.2d 587 (Ariz. App. 1985) (Brokers are universally entitled to commissions when they produce a ready, willing, and able buyer, and the seller then withdraws the property).

(n105)Footnote 161. 10 Cal. Jur. 3d Brokers § 66, at 543-44 (1974) ("The broker's authority under the ordinary employment contract is limited to finding a purchaser. He therefore has no power to enter into a contract of sale on behalf of his principal, in the absence of special authorization."). See also Annotation, Power of Real-Estate Broker to Execute Contract of Sale in Behalf of Principal, 48 A.L.R. 634 (1927).

(n106)Footnote 162. Molly Moore Romero,Theories of Real Estate Broker Liability: Arizona's Emerging

Malpractice Doctrine, 20 Ariz. L. Rev. 767, 774 (1978) (paraphrasing Restatement (Second) of Agency §§ 367 - 77, 379 - 81, 383, 387 - 91, 394 - 95 (1957)).

(n107)Footnote 163. See, e.g., Hassenpflug v. Jones, 323 P.2d 296, 298 (Ariz. 1958); Haymes v. Rogers, 222 P.2d 789, 790 (Ariz. 1950); Batson v. Strehlow, 441 P.2d 101, 109-10 (Cal. 1968); Mersky v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Olympia, Inc., 437 P.2d 897, 899 (Wash. 1968). Wardley Corp. v. Welsh, 962 P.2d 86 (Utah App. 1998) (the evidence supports the finding that a broker was only a finder in this instance and therefore was not an agent of the vendor, because the vendor disclaimed the agency relationship. An agency relationship will not be equitably implied); Olsen v. Vail Assoc. Real Estate, Inc., 935 P.2d 975 (Colo. 1997) (The broker did not breach fiduciary duties to the seller by not disclosing to the seller that the purchaser was acquiring the adjoining property); Holst v. Fireside Realty, Inc., 948 P.2d 858 (Wash. App. 1997) (If either the listing broker or the selling broker expressly or impliedly forms an agency relationship with the buyer, the broker will be held to be the purchaser's agent).

(n108)Footnote 164. James L. Riegelhaupt, Jr., Annotation, Liability to Real Property Purchaser for Negligent Appraisal of Property's Value, 21 A.L.R. 4th 867 (1983).

(n109)Footnote 165. See Wilson v. Hisey, 305 P.2d 686 (Cal. App. 1957).

(n110)Footnote 166. Stortroen v. Beneficial Fin. Co. of Colo., 736 P.2d 391, 396 (Colo. 1987) ("In the context of residential real estate sale transactions, it is a widely accepted rule of agency law that a real estate broker operating under an exclusive listing contract with the seller stands in an agency relationship with the seller."); see, e.g., Marcotte Realty & Auction, Inc. v. Schumacher, 624 P.2d 420 (Kan. 1981). J. Clark Pendergrass, The Real Estate Consumer's Agency And Disclosure Act: The Case Against Dual Agency,48 Ala. L. Rev. 277 (Fall 1996) (Under the Alabama Real Estate Consumer's Agency and Disclosure Act, in the absence of a signed brokerage agreement, a real estate broker is not an agent but rather is a "contract broker" with none of the fiduciary duties). Moore and Co. v. T-A-L-L, Inc., 792 P.2d 794 (Colo. 1990).

(n111)Footnote 167. Mersky v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Olympia, Inc., 437 P.2d 897, 899 (Wash. 1968) (emphasis added).

(n112)Footnote 168. Also referred to as the selling broker.

(n113)Footnote 169. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 5 (1957); note that the court in Mersky held the subagents to exactly the same high standards of duty and responsibility as the listing brokers. Holst v. Fireside Realty, Inc., 948 P.2d 858 (Wash. App. 1997) (subagents are held to the same standards as agents).

(n114)Footnote 170. People ex rel. Woodard v. Colorado Springs Bd. of Realtors, 692 P.2d 1055, 1059 (Colo. 1984) (emphasis added). Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman, Real Estate Brokers: Shouldering New Burdens, 11 Prob. & Prop. 14 (May/June 1997).

(n115)Footnote 171. D. Barlow Burke, The Law of Real Estate Brokers § 1.5, at 10 (1982).

(n116)Footnote 172. Stortroen v. Beneficial Fin. Co. of Colo., 736 P.2d 391, n.2 (Colo. 1987) (citing the Colorado Real Estate Commission's Real Estate Manual, ch. VIII, at 3, which states "[g]enerally [a multiple listing] is an exclusive right to sell listing, with the additional feature that other participating brokers may also sell the property as sub-agents of the listing broker" (emphasis added)).

(n117)Footnote 173. Frisell v. Newman, 429 P.2d 864 (Wash. 1967).

(n118)Footnote 174. FTC Los Angeles Regional Office, the Residential Real Estate Brokerage Industry 83-84 (1983).

(n119)Footnote 175. Barry A. Currier, Finding the Broker's Place in the Typical Residential Real Estate Transaction, 33 U. Fla. L. Rev. 655, 662-63 (1981).

(n120)Footnote 176. See Johnson v. Geer Real Estate Co., 720 P.2d 660 (Kan. 1986) (buyers told broker they didn't want a house served by a septic tank. Seller had told broker the house was on septic tanks; broker forgot. Broker was held liable for negligent failure to observe and pass this information to purchaser). But see Mahler v. Keenan Real Estate Inc., 876 P.2d 609 (Kan. 1994) (After the Johnson case the Kansas legislature overruled Johnson in K.S.A. 1993 Supp. § 58-3034(b), which refuses to give a private right of action for negligent misrepresentation. The court in the present case determined that although the amended statute prohibited an action for negligent or fraudulent misrepresentation, it didn't necessarily preclude other common law suits. An action for negligent misrepresentation as defined in § 552 of the Restatement of Torts does exist in Kansas).

Jay M. Feinman, Economic Negligence In Residential Real Estate Transactions, 25 Real Est. L.J. 110 (Fall 1996) (the broker has a duty of reasonable care to the buyer to make sure that the information it transmits is accurate).

(n121)Footnote 177. Stortroen, 736 P.2d at 400. Nancy Ann Connery, Precontract Considerations, 414 PLI/Real 75 (May 1996) (The buyer's broker must provide the disclosure form to the buyer prior to entering into an agreement to act as the buyer's agent).

(n122)Footnote 178. Mathew M. Collette, Sub-Agency in Residential Real Estate Brokerage; A Proposal to End the Struggle With Reality, 61 S. Cal. L. Rev. 399, 404-06 (1988).

(n123)Footnote 179. See, e.g., Rosenthal v. Art Metal, Inc., 229 A.2d 676 (N.J. Super. 1967), aff'd, 243 A.2d 828 (N.J. 1968), aff'd, 250 A.2d 747 (N.J. 1969).

(n124)Footnote 180. See, e.g., Fennel v. Ross, 711 S.W.2d 793 (Ark. 1986); First Church of the Open Bible v. Cline J. Dunton Realty, Inc., 574 P.2d 1211 (Wash. App. 1978). Fennel v. Ross* citation: but see Continental Assur. Co. v. Cedar Rapids Pediatric Clinic 957 F.2d 588 (8th Cir. 1992) (Holding that Fennel does not necessarily prohibit dual agency in Arkansas); Whitten v. Harold Austin Construction Inc., 935 S.W.2d 579 (Ark. App. 1996) (The court limited the holding in Fennel to "garden variety" MLS cases); Ellis L. Tudzin, Real Property, 49 SMU L. Rev. 1281 (May-June 1996) (Under Texas's Real Estate License Act, neither the party nor the broker is liable for misrepresentations or concealments by a subagent unless they were aware of those statements or concealments).

Enright v. Jonassen, 931 P.2d 1212 (Idaho 1997) (Finding that real estate firm through which ranch property was listed for sale, which acted as both listing and selling agency, and firm's listing agent breached fiduciary duty owed to purchaser of property by failing to determine and to disclose to purchaser that property was in floodplain district was supported by acknowledgement of firm and agent that they did not look at flood insurance maps referred to in county ordinance describing floodplain district).

(n125)Footnote 181. See, e.g., Frisell v. Newman, 429 P.2d 864 (Wash. 1967). William D. Le Moult, The Duty Of Residential Real Estate Brokers And Salespersons To Disclose Property Condition To Buyers, 70 Conn. B.J. 435, 445 (Dec. 1996); J. Clark Pendergrass, The Real Estate Consumer's Agency And Disclosure Act: The Case Against Dual Agency, 48 Ala. L. Rev. 277 (Fall 1996); Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (To the extent that real estate broker and brokerage firm breached their fiduciary duties to property owner by failing to disclose, prior to broker's closing on purchase of property owner's land, that broker had found third party to purchase land, property owner might be entitled to return of commission paid in connection with sale of his property to broker as well as to profit that broker earned upon resale of property to third party); Goldberg Realty Group v. Weinstein, 669 A.2d 187 (Me. 1996) (A real estate broker's breach of fiduciary duty, as agent for seller of real estate, by failing to disclose material information to seller results in forfeiture of commission by broker; information is "material" to transaction if person with degree of business acumen would want that information before proceeding).

Compare Olsen v. Vail Assocs. Real Estate, Inc., 935 P.2d 975 (Colo. 1997) (Real estate brokers did not breach fiduciary duty to vendors by not revealing that purchaser was negotiating to purchase adjoining property and ultimate sale price of that property; only fact of contract for sale of adjoining property and price to be paid under such contract would have been material to vendors' deliberations in their dealings with purchaser, and brokers did not learn of purchase price until after vendors entered into contract with purchaser).

(n126)Footnote 182. See, e.g., Menzel v. Morse, 362 N.W.2d 465, 474-76 (Iowa 1985) (defense unsuccessful).

(n127)Footnote 183. Woodard, Real Estate Groups Draw Clearer Lines for Who Represents Whom, the Christian Science Monitor, Mar. 1, 1985, at 24 (attorneys are using subagency to argue for rescission based on undisclosed dual agency). J. Clark Pendergrass, The Real Estate Consumer's Agency And Disclosure Act: The Case Against Dual Agency, 48 Ala. L. Rev. 277 (Fall 1996).

(n128)Footnote 184. See, e.g., Brown v. Indianapolis Bd. of Realtors, 177 Trade Cas. (CCH) par. 61,435 (S.D. Ind. 1977).

(n129)Footnote 185. See, e.g., Derish v. San Mateo-Burlingame Bd. of Realtors, 186 Cal. Rptr. 390 (1982).

(n130)Footnote 186. Ronald Benton Brown, Real Estate Brokers: Shouldering New Burdens, Prob. & Prop. 14 (May/June, 1997) (41 states have passed statutes that allow a variety of relationships. Brokers can still enter into a traditional agency relationship with a buyer or seller. A selling broker can still be a subagent of the seller, and it is still possible to be a buyers' agent. Now, however, in these states it is also possible to be a dual agent or a non-agent).

(n131)Footnote 187. Molly Moore Romero, Theories of Real Estate Broker Liability: Arizona's Emerging Malpractice Doctrine, 20 Ariz. L. Rev. 767, 772-73 (1978) by the Arizona Board of Regents. Reprinted with permission.

(n132)Footnote 188. Wise v. Dawson, 353 A.2d 207, 209 (Del. Super. 1975).

(n133)Footnote 189. Wise v. Dawson, 353 A.2d 207, 209 (Del. Super. 1975); Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.19 ("the payment of compensation ...is not necessarily determinative of a particular agency relationship").

(n134)Footnote 190. Menzel v. Morse, 362 N.W.2d 465, 475 (Iowa 1985); Mead v. Hummel, 121 P.2d 423, 425 (Ariz. 1942).

(n135)Footnote 191. Kunz v. Warren, 725 P.2d 794 (Colo. App. 1986) (broker was listing broker, and seller said he "would not have gone through with the deal" had he known about the undisclosed commission).

(n136)Footnote 192. Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25, 97 (1995).

(n137)Footnote 193. Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25, 51 (1995).

(n138)Footnote 194.

California Cal. Civ. Code §§ 2079.13 - 2079.24;

Colorado Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 12-61-803;

Florida Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.25;

Georgia Ga. Code Ann. §§ 10-6A-1-14;

Illinois Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 225 para. 455 §§ 38.1-.65;

Indiana Ind. Code §§ 25-34.1-10-1 - 10-16;

Maine Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 32 §§ 13271-13281;

Maryland Md. Code Ann., Real Prop. §§ 17-101 - 614;

Michigan Mich. Comp. Laws §§ 339.2501-2516;

Minnesota Minn. Stat. §§ 82.17-34;

Nebraska Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 76-2401 - 2430;

New York N.Y. Real. Prop. Law § 443;

Oregon Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 696.800-870;

Rhode Island R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 5-20.6-1-8; and Wisconsin Wis. Stat. §§ 452.01-23.

(n139)Footnote 195.

Alabama Ala. Code §§ 34-27-1-11;

Arkansas Ark. Code Ann. §§ 17-35-101 - 17-35-603;

Delaware Del. Code Ann. tit. 24, §§ 2901-2929A;

Louisiana La. Civ. Code §§ 37:1431-37:1468; and

S.D. Codified Laws Ann §§ 36-21A-1-123.

(n140)Footnote 196. Karen Blumenthal, Could Your Broker Be a Double Agent? Wall. St. J., Sept. 3, 1995, at B8.

(n141)Footnote 197. Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25, 44 (1995).

(n142)Footnote 198. See Levine, The Dual Agency Trap, 15 Real Est. Rev. 96 (1986).

(n143)Footnote 199. Victor S. Voinovich, Jr., Agent Cannot Represent Both Buyer and Seller, Real Est. Fin. J. 92, 93 (Summer 1995).

(n144)Footnote 200. 12 Am. Jur. 2d Brokers § 67 at 821; Goldstein v. Department of State, Div. of Licensing, 533 N.Y.S.2d 1002 (N.Y.A.D. 1988) (broker violated fiduciary relationship by representing both parties without prior disclosure and consent).

(n145)Footnote 201. L. Byron Culver & Assoc. v. Jaoudi Indus. & Trading Corp., 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680 (Cal. App. 1992) (broker was denied a commission for failing to disclose that he was representing both buyer and seller. California statutes require written disclosures of dual agency for 1-4 residential units. This, however, was an unimproved site of 33.5 acres, and there is no statute requiring such disclosure in commercial deals. The court denied the broker a commission anyway: "An agent has a fiduciary duty to his principal to disclose all information in the agent's possession relevant to the subject matter of the agency.").

(n146)Footnote 202. Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25 (1995).

(n147)Footnote 203. Karen Blumenthal, Could Your Broker Be a Double Agent?, Wall St. J., Sept. 9, 1995, at B8.

(n148)Footnote 204. Karen Blumenthal, Could Your Broker Be a Double Agent?, Wall St. J., Sept. 9, 1995, at B8.

(n149)Footnote 205. Karen Blumenthal, Could Your Broker Be a Double Agent?, Wall St. J., Sept. 9, 1995, at B8.

(n150)Footnote 206. Cal. Civ. Code § 2375.5.

(n151)Footnote 207. Salahutdin v. Walley of California, Inc., 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463 (App. 1994).

(n152)Footnote 208. Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25, 28 (1995).

(n153)Footnote 209. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 475.25 at 2.

(n154)Footnote 210. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 475.25 at 2.

(n155)Footnote 211. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 475.25; Ronald Benton Brown, Joseph M. Grohman & Manuel R. Valcarcel, Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure, 29 Creighton L. Rev. 25, 97 (1995).

(n156)Footnote 212. Annotation,Real-Estate Broker's or Agent's Misrepresentation to, Failure to Inform, Vendor Regarding Value of Vendor's Real Property, 33 A.L.R 4th 944 (1984). See also Annotation, Liability to Real-Property Purchaser for Negligent Approval of Property's Value, 21 A.L.R.4th 867 (1983).

(n157)Footnote 213. Used car dealers don't get penalized for buying cars low and selling high. Unlike real estate brokers, used car dealers are expected to buy old cars as cheaply as they can. A used car owner can try, of course, to unload the vehicle directly, but used car "brokers" are rare. Most used car dealers own the cars they are selling. Why are used houses and used cars traded so differently, and what does this tell us about the real estate brokerage industry? For possible answers, see Paul M. Anglin and Richard Arnott, Residential Real Estate Brokerage as a Principal-Agent Problem, 4 J. Real Est. Fin. & Econ. 99, 117-118 (1991). These authors rely considerably on earlier work by A.W. Jenkins, Home Sweet Home: Real Estate Brokerage in Canada (Fraser Ins. 1989). In re Sanders, 233 B.R. 168 (Bankr. M.D. Ga. 1999) (Broker failed to disclose an offer to purchase the property. Broker instead purchased property himself and waived the commissions. The sale to the broker netted the sellers more profit than the undisclosed offer would have provided. Nonetheless, sellers are still entitled to sue the broker for failure to disclose the offer, despite the fact that the sellers suffered no damages). Johnson v. Neuville, 595 N.W.2d 100 (Wis. App. 1999) (Broker failed to verify a representation made concerning an access easement, and structured the transaction in a way that would make it difficult for the buyer to verify the easement. Because the broker was negligent, buyer was allowed to sue the broker despite the law which states that brokers cannot be sued for failure to disclose if a qualified third person makes a disclosure); Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc., 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828 (Cal. App. 1998) (A broker can be sued for failing to properly disclose a dual agency status); Annotation, Liability of Vendor's Real-Estate Broker or Agent to Purchaser or Prospect for Misrepresenting or Concealing Offer or Acceptance 55 A.L.R.2d 342 (1957); Letsos v. Century 21-New West Realty, 675 N.E.2d 217 (Ill. App. 1996) (To the extent that real estate broker and brokerage firm breached their fiduciary duties to property owner by failing to disclose, prior to broker's closing on purchase of property owner's land, that broker had found third party to purchase land, property owner might be entitled to return of commission paid in connection with sale of his property to broker as well as to profit that broker earned upon resale of property to third party).

(n158)Footnote 214. Also known as a "straw man" or an "accommodator." A straw is one made to appear the owner of record who actually holds title for another. Ballantine's Dictionary, 1222 (3d ed. 1969).

(n159)Footnote 215. 392 N.W.2d 250 (Minn. Ct. App. 1986).

(n160)Footnote 216. Robert J. Bruss, Double Escrow Created Illegal Secret Profit, Los Angeles Times, Nov. 11, 1990 (Real Estate Section), at K4.

(n161)Footnote 217. Annotation, Duty of Real-Estate Broker to Disclose Identity of Purchaser or Lessee, 2 A.L.R.3d 1119 (1965). The broker is under the duty to disclose the name of a prospective purchaser to his principal, at least in response to a request by the principal. However, if an actual sale is consummated, there is a strong tendency to regard the commission as having been earned notwithstanding the broker's failure to disclose the purchaser's identity, unless the seller had asked for it before closing, and the broker died. But there are some cases in which the court has found that the admitted nondisclosure, concealment, or misrepresentation by the broker was not material, or was not harmful or prejudicial in any way to the principal.

(n162)Footnote 218. Bruss, Double Escrow Created Illegal Secret Profit, Los Angeles Times, Nov. 11, 1990 (Real Estate Section), at K4.

(n163)Footnote 219. Zichlin v. Dill, 25 So. 2d 4 (Fla. 1946).

(n164)Footnote 220. Bush v. Palermo, 443 So. 2d 104 (Fla. App. 1983), reh'g denied.

(n165)Footnote 221. Bush v. Palermo, 443 So. 2d 104, 106 (Fla. App. 1983), reh'g denied.

(n166)Footnote 222. Young v. Field, 548 So. 2d 784, 785 (Fla. 1989).

(n167)Footnote 223. Frederick J. Fisher, Broker Beware: Selling Property Within the Law 54 (Reston Publishing 1981). See also, Annotation, Effect That Property May Be Bought For Less Than Listing Price Is Breach Of Duty That Bars Claim For Commission, 17 A.L.R. 2d 904.

(n168)Footnote 224. Haymes v. Rogers, 219 P.2d 339, rev'd on rehearing, 222 P.2d 789 (Ariz. 1950).

(n169)Footnote 225. 219 P.2d at 340.

(n170)Footnote 226. 219 P.2d at 341-42.

(n171)Footnote 227. For a description of the broker's dilemma, see Arthur Stambler & Jacob A. Stein, The Real Estate Broker--Schizophrenia or Conflict of Interest, 28 J. Bar Ass'n D.C. 16 (1961).

(n172)Footnote 228. Annotation, The seller is estopped from denying the qualifications of a purchaser "with whom he is willing to contract" if the contract is unconditional. Kopf v. Milam, 387 P.2d 390, 393 (Cal. 1963). Modern view as to right of real estate broker to recover commission where buyer defaults under valid contract of sales. 12 A.L.R.4th 1083, 1088 (1982). Asset Realty, Inc. v. Guyuron, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 5620 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 1996) (A person is not "ready, willing and able" to buy when he is dependent upon third parties who are in no way bound to furnish the funds to complete the purchase).

(n173)Footnote 229. Annotation, Modern View as to Right of Real Estate Broker to Recover Commission from Seller Principal Where Buyer Defaults Under Valid Contract of Sale. 12 A.L.R.4th 1083, at 1096.

(n174)Footnote 230. Annotation, What Constitutes Financial Ability to Perform Within Rule Entitling Broker to Commission for Producing Ready, Willing, and Able Purchaser of Real Property, 87 A.L.R.4th 11 (1991).

(n175)Footnote 231. Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Rights and Liabilities as Affected by Failure to Disclose Financial Information Concerning Purchaser, 34 A.L.R.4th 191 (1984). Egan v. Burkhart, 657 N.E.2d 401 (Ind. App. 1995) (Broker's failure to disclose that one broker loaned money to the purchaser to help with the down payment was a material breach of the duty of good faith, because it went to the purchaser's creditworthiness); Garcia v. Unique Realty & Property Management Co., Inc., 424 S.E.2d 14 (Ga. App. 1992) (Seller sued the broker for alleged misrepresentations of the buyer's creditworthiness. The seller could not recover from the broker because the broker's representations were statements of opinions).

(n176)Footnote 232. 59 Cal. Rptr. 359 (1967). But see McDonald v. Century 21 Real Estate Corp., 390 N.W.2d 68 (Wis. Ct. App. 1986) (brokers failed to "pre-qualify" buyer despite provision in listing agreement that they would. Seller and buyer entered contract. Seller began constructing another house, expecting the sale of his present residence to close. Buyer turned out to be financially precarious, and breached. Seller sued broker for failure to pre-qualify buyer. Court held that seller may have had a contract action but no tort suit against brokers for their failure to pre-qualify buyer).

(n177)Footnote 233. 59 Cal. Rptr. at 366.

(n178)Footnote 234. 59 Cal. Rptr. at 366.

(n179)Footnote 235. Jacqueline S. Leung, Caveat Emptor or Caveat Broker?, 23 Real Est. Rev. 91 (1993).

(n180)Footnote 236. Lingsch v. Savage, 29 Cal. Rptr. 201, 204 (1963); see also Ditcharo v. Stepanek, 538 So. 2d 309 (La. App. 1989) (broker owes duty to both parties to relay accurate information about the property); Charles P. Edmonds & Rudolph Lindbeck, How Brokers Can Reduce Vulnerability to Lawsuits, 17 Real Est. Rev. 90 (Spring 1987); Carol R. Goforth, Sales of Structurally Defective Homes: The Potential Liability of Sellers and Real Estate Brokers, 41 Okla. L. Rev. 447 (1988); Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Liability to Purchaser for Misrepresentation or Nondisclosure of Physical Defects in Property Sold, 45 A.L.R. 546 (1986); Craig A. Peterson, Tort Claims by Real Estate Purchasers Against Sellers and Brokers: Current Illinois Statutory Strategies, So. Ill. L. J. 161 (1983). M&D, Inc. v. W.B. McConkey, 585 N.W.2d 33 (Mich. Ct. App. 1998) (Neither the real estate company nor its brokers had a duty to disclose material defects when the purchaser acquired the property under an "as is" agreement); Deckert v. Foster, 495 S.E.2d 656 (Ga. Ct. App. 1998) (Real estate agents were not required to disclose to the purchasers that the property might be subject to erosion and runoff problems unless a proper drainage system was installed, because the purchasers should have been aware of these facts themselves due to the steep grade of the property they acquired); Darrisaw v. Old Colony Realty Co., 501 S.E.2d 187 (W. Va. 1997) (In West Virginia, the broker may be liable if (1) the broker makes material misrepresentations concerning the habitability or fails to disclose defects, (2) which substantially affect the value of the property, (3) of which the broker is aware or should be reasonably aware and the buyer would not be aware after a reasonable inspection, (4) and the misrepresentation or concealment was a substantial factor in inducing the buyer to purchase the property); McEneaney v. Chestnut Hill Realty Corp., 650 N.E.2d 93 (Mass. App. 1995). But see Bando v. Achenbaum, 651 N.Y.S.2d 74 (N.Y.A.D. 1996) (Home purchasers' allegations that vendor, real estate broker, and real estate brokerage corporation failed to disclose extent of termite damage in home failed to support cause of action for fraudulent misrepresentation, given that termite infestation was not peculiarly within knowledge of vendor, purchasers inspected house and knew infestation was ongoing, vendor never told purchasers anything that was untrue, and purchasers signed contract of sale which contained provision pursuant to which purchasers specifically disclaimed reliance on any representations, written or oral, of vendor and his representatives); Haberstick v. Gordon A. Gundaker Real Estate Co., Inc., 921 S.W.2d 104 (Mo. App. 1996) (Representations by agents of real estate sales company to prospective purchasers of lots in subdivision which adjoined land containing hazardous wastes, in response to inquiries about adjoining land, which did not disclose existence of hazardous wastes and told purchasers that adjoining land could not be developed and would remain farmland and that no threat was posed were sufficiently specific to allow recovery by purchasers in fraudulent misrepresentation action against company; representations were misleading representations of existing fact and speculative promises of future action).

Katherine A. Pancak, Thomas J. Miceli and C.F. Sirmans, Residential Disclosure Laws: The Further Demise Of Caveat Emptor, 24 Real Est. L.J. 291 (Spring, 1996); Alan M. Weinberger, Let The Buyer Be Well Informed? -- Doubting The Demise Of Caveat Emptor, 55 Md. L. Rev. 387 (1996). Smith v. Coldwell Banker Real Estate Services, 122 F. Supp. 2d 267 (D. Conn. 2000) (seller, agent and broker held liable for not providing copy of lead paint report, even though the required disclosure form was provided); Stephanie A. Waxler, "Liabilities of Homeowners and Real Estate Brokers for Non-Disclosure in Illinois," 2000 Loy. Consumer L. Rev. 340; "Brokers: Liability for Non-Disclosure of Lead Paint," 30 Real Est. L. Rep. 4 (Feb. 2001); Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act of 1992, 42 U.S.C. § 4851 et seq..

(n181)Footnote 237. 199 Cal. Rptr. 383 (1984). In many states where the listing broker was once held to have no duty to disclose material fact to a prospective purchaser, courts are abandoning the "no duty to non-client defense." In Sawyer Realty v. Jarvis Corp., 432 N.E.2d 849 (Ill. 2d 1982), the brokers were considering the possibility of bidding for the property on their own account even as they assisted the purchasers in preparing an offer. This the court found to have been an actionable wrong: "The primary fiduciary duties that run from the broker to the seller are not undermined by the obligation the broker owes to the prospective buyer. Real estate brokers occupy a position of trust with respect to purchasers with whom they are negotiating." Id. at 851-52. Sawyer requires the selling broker to tell buyer what "material facts" the broker knows. But brokers can rely on seller representations, even negligently made ones, unless the broker knows the representation is false. "...[a] realtor has no duty ...to independently substantiate the representation of a disclosed seller... ." Lyons v. Christ Episcopal Church, 389 N.E.2d 623, 625 (Ill. App. 1979).

(n182)Footnote 238. See Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.12 (In this code section, the California legislature states its intent that Cal. Civ. Code § 2079 - 2079.6 should be construed as the definition of duty of care found to exist by the holding in Easton).

(n183)Footnote 239. Article 9. the National Association of Realtors degrees, Interpretations of the Code of Ethics (7th ed. 1978). See Johnson v. Geer Real Estate Co., 720 P.2d 660 (Kan. 1986) (Broker liable who sold buyer a house on a septic tank when they said they were not interested in a house served by a septic tank only. Broker had relied on sellers' representation that the house was served by city sewers). But see Lyons v. Christ Episcopal Church, 389 N.E.2d 623 (Ill. App. 1970). A broker was held free of negligent misrepresentation who relayed the sellers' assurance to the buyer that the house was hooked up to city sewers when it was not. The buyers recovered the costs of the hookup from the sellers but the broker was exonerated. Brokers have no "duty to independently corroborate" the sellers' representations unless aware the representations are false.

(n184)Footnote 240. 199 Cal. Rptr. at 389.

(n185)Footnote 241. Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.

(n186)Footnote 242. See also Herbert v. Saffell, 877 F.2d 267 (4th Cir. 1989). The broker was held to have no duty to make an independent investigation for hidden defects, in this case, soil conditions precluding use of an ordinary septic tank system. Robinson v. Grossman, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 380 (Cal. App. 1997) (sellers' listing broker and agent had no duty to independently verify or disclaim accuracy of sellers' representations).

Annotation, Construction And Effect of Provision in Contract for Sale of Realty by Which Purchaser Agrees to Take Property "As Is" or in its Existing Conditio n, 8 A.L.R.5th 312, (1992); Annotation, Real-Estate Broker's Power to Bind Principal by Representations as to Character, Condition, Location, Quantity, or Title of Property, 58 A.L.R.2d 10 (1958).

(n187)Footnote 243. "The inspection ...does not [have to] include ...an inspection of areas that are reasonably and normally inaccessible... ." Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.3.

(n188)Footnote 244. The boundaries of § 2079 were tested in Vaill v. Edmonds, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (1991). The court ordered the Commissioner of the California Department of Real Estate to vacate an order revoking Vaill's real estate salesperson's license. The decision overruled the Commissioner's finding that the real estate agent was negligent in failing to disclose to the buyers the occurrence of a neighborhood meeting regarding a potentially hazardous groundwater situation affecting the property. The broker got to keep her license because: (1) the agent had provided the buyer with a 1972 geological report about the property; (2) the buyers obtained their own geological report on the property; (3) the buyers physically inspected the property; (4) the agent and the sellers informed them that the neighbor two homes away had installed and operated a water pump to handle a water problem that had caused a landslide on the neighbor's property in 1971; (5) the sellers informed the buyers that a geological fault ran across the back of the property; and (6) the agent recommended that the buyers discuss the geology with their nephew, a developer who had built several homes in the neighborhood. Rudolph v. Turecek, 658 N.Y.S.2d 769 (N.Y.A.D. 1997) (Purchasers of home, for which it was unlikely that well could be drilled that would provide suitable and adequate water source, failed to prove fraud and negligence on part of real estate agents; agents' only knowledge of defect on property was that existing well had very slow recovery rate, which was fully disclosed to purchasers); Osborne v. Ladner, 691 So. 2d 1245 (La. App. 1997) (Real estate broker did not breach duty owed to purchaser to provide correct information regarding home, and thus, was not liable for termite damage to home under theory of negligent misrepresentation; broker disclosed information she had been given about leaks in stucco to purchaser, and did not have knowledge at time of sale of condition of interior structural problems caused by termite damage or leaking); Helms v. Holland, 478 S.E.2d 513 (N.C. App. 1996) (Purchasers did not have negligent misrepresentation claim against brokers for failing to disclose that county health department disapproved property for use as family care facility in absence of any evidence of brokers' knowledge of such disapproval); Reeves v. Keesler, 921 S.W.2d 16 (Mo. App. 1996) (Real estate agency, real estate sales associate of agency, and manager of agency did not have knowledge that there was problem with septic system and ducts and so did not have duty to disclose problems as required for home purchasers to succeed in action against them on claim of fraudulent concealment, even though prior prospective purchaser had alleged such problems, since allegations were refuted by home vendor and by inspection).

(n189)Footnote 245. Thomson v. McGinnis, 465 S.E.2d 922 (W. Va. 1995) (holding that when a broker retains some control over an inspection, the broker may be liable for the negligent hiring and work of the independent contractor if the broker knew or should have known of the contractor's incompetence).

(n190)Footnote 246. Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.4.

(n191)Footnote 247. Cal. Civ. Code § 2079.5.

(n192)Footnote 248. Murray v. Hayden, 259 Cal. Rptr. 257 (1989).

(n193)Footnote 249. Blackmon v. First Real Estate Corp., 529 So. 2d 955 (Ala. 1988); see also Harrell v. Dodson, 398 So. 2d 272 (Ala. 1981). The buyer's broker, asked about the plumbing, wiring, roof, and foundation, told the buyer that if the house passed the Virginia inspection, and it had, it was OK. Later, after closing, the house cracked, walls bulged, floors buckled, and engineers pronounced settling the cause of the problems. The broker won a directed verdict. The broker's statements about the condition of the property are opinion, not representations of material fact-- in Alabama--so the buyer's broker isn't liable either.

(n194)Footnote 250.

> [T]he plaintiff-purchaser must prove: (1) the broker made a false representation of material fact; (2) the broker knew or should have known that the representation was false; (3) the broker intended that the purchaser rely on the representations; (4) the purchaser reasonably relied on the representation; and (5) the reliance proximately caused injury to the purchaser.

Jacqueline S. Leung, Caveat Emptor or Caveat Broker?, 23 Real Est. Rev. 91, 93 (Summer 1993).

(n195)Footnote 251. The elements of this tort are: (1) the broker owed the purchaser a duty; (2) the broker breached that duty; (3) the purchaser suffered some harm; and (4) the broker's misrepresentation or nondisclosure is the proximate cause of that harm. Because the plaintiff-purchaser who sues under this theory need not show that the broker either had the intent to deceive or had actual knowledge of the falsity of the statement, negligent misrepresentation is frequently raised although it is recognized only in a minority of jurisdictions. Jacqueline S. Leung, Caveat Emptor or Caveat Broker?, 23 Real Est. Rev. 91, 93 (Summer 1993).

(n196)Footnote 252. Hoffman v. Connal, 736 P.2d 242 (Wash. 1987). See also Fossey & Roston, The Brokers' Liability in a Real Estate Transaction: Bad News and Good News for Defense Attorneys, 12 UCLA-Alaska L. Rev. 37, 40 (1982-1983); Bevins v. Ballard, 655 P.2d 757, 763 (Alaska 1982).

(n197)Footnote 253. Citing Note, Realtor Liability for Innocent Misrepresentation and Undiscovered Defects: Balancing the Equities Between Brokers and Buyers, 20 Val. U. L. Rev. 255 (1986).

(n198)Footnote 254. Clarence E. Hagglund, et al., Caveat Misrepresenter: The Real Estate Agent's Liability to the Purchaser, 5 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 381, 403-404 (Spring 1993).

(n199)Footnote 255. 42 U.S.C. §§ 4851-4856.

(n200)Footnote 256. 42 U.S.C. § 4852d(a)(1)(B).

(n201)Footnote 257. 40 C.F.R. § 745.100 et seq.

(n202)Footnote 258. 24 C.F.R. § 35.800 et seq.

(n203)Footnote 259. For a more detailed discussion of these federal requirements, see Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, Ch. 15A, Lead-Based Paint Disclosure (Matthew Bender).

(n204)Footnote 260. 24 C.F.R. § 35.94(a)-(b)(1).

(n205)Footnote 261. For a more detailed discussion of these federal requirements, see Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, Ch. 15A, Lead-Based Paint Disclosure (Matthew Bender).

(n206)Footnote 262. Mahler v. Keenan Real Estate, Inc., 876 P.2d 609 (Kan. 1994) (The Sellers were not held liable for their agent's apparent misrepresentation of the fact that the water being discharged from a pipe in the side of the house came only from the sink, shower, and dishwasher, because there was no evidence that the sellers made this representation to the agent); Outlaw v. McMichael, 397 So. 2d 1009, 1010 (Fla. App. 1981). See generally, Billie J. Ellis, Jr., et al., A Compliance Guide to Land Sales Marketing Regulation, 1992 A.B.A. Sec. Real Prop., Prob. & Tr. L. 96; Katherine A. Pancak, Residential Disclosure Laws: The Further Demise Of Caveat Emptor, 24 Real Est. L.J. 291, 298 (Spring 1996) (Seller's Duty); Leonard A. Bernstein & George F. Magera, Seller Disclosure Laws Gain Popularity, 9 Loy. Consumer L. Rep. 43 (1997); Robert Kwong, Fraud And The Duty To Disclose Off-Site Land Conditions: Actual Knowledge vs. Seller Status, 24 B.C. Envtl. Aff. L. Rev. 897 (Summer, 1997).

(n207)Footnote 263. 481 A.2d 886 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1984).

(n208)Footnote 264. 481 A.2d 886, 890 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1984).

(n209)Footnote 265. 481 A.2d 886, 890 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1984).

(n210)Footnote 266. See, e.g., Hammond v. Matthes, 311 N.W.2d 357 (Mich. App. 1981).

(n211)Footnote 267. See, e.g., Ariz. Rev. Stat. 32-2185.06. "[I]f the transaction involves a lot or parcel offered for present or future residential use, the contract, agreement or lease shall not waive or disclaim liability for prior material representations relied upon by the purchaser made by the seller and such seller's agents concerning the subdivision and lot or parcel involved, and any provision attempting to waive or disclaim liability is void."

(n212)Footnote 268. See, e.g., Baird v. Jones, 21 Cal. App. 4th 684 (1993).

(n213)Footnote 269. 475 So. 2d 1010 (Fla. 1985).

(n214)Footnote 270. 475 So. 2d 1010, 1011 (Fla. 1985).

(n215)Footnote 271. 475 So. 2d 1010, 1012 (Fla. 1985).

(n216)Footnote 272. FSR Brokerage, Inc. v. Los Angeles Superior Court, 35 Cal. App. 4th 69, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 404 (Cal. App. 2 Dist. 1995).

(n217)Footnote 273. Harry D. Miller & Marvin B. Starr, 2 California Real Estate § 3:27 at 157-58 (2d ed. 1989) (footnotes omitted).

(n218)Footnote 274. 220 Cal. App. 3d 35, 269 Cal. Rptr. 228 (1990).

(n219)Footnote 275. Krug appealed again but at an appellate settlement conference, the parties agreed to dismiss the appeal and sought a joint stipulated reversal of the $14,929.60 San Francisco trial court judgment. The Court of Appeal refused the joint stipulated reversal because to do so would deprive the California Real Estate Commissioner of his ability to suspend or revoke broker Praszker's license based on a civil judgment against him. Norman I. Krug Real Estate Investments, Inc. v. Praszker, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532 (1992). Norman I. Krug Real Estate Investments, Inc. v. Praszker, 22 Cal. App. 4th 1814, (Cal. App. 1994).

(n220)Footnote 276. Lyons v. Christ Episcopal Church, 389 N.E.2d 623 (Ill. App. 1979).

(n221)Footnote 277. See Johnson v. Geer Real Estate Co., 720 P.2d 660 (Kan. 1986) (Broker held liable who sold buyers a house on a septic tank when buyers said they weren't interested in seeing any house not served by city sewers. The seller erred in assuring the broker the house was served by city sewers even though it wasn't. The broker was held liable anyway.) but see Mahler v. Keenan Real Estate Inc., 876 P.2d 609 (Kan. 1994) (after the Johnson case the Kansas legislature overruled Johnson in Kan. Stat. Ann. 1993 Supp. § 58-3034(b), which refuses to give a private right of action for negligent misrepresentation against a broker. The court in the present case determined that, although the amended statute prohibited an action for negligent or fraudulent misrepresentation, it did not necessarily preclude other common law actions. An action for negligent misrepresentation as defined in § 552 of the Restatement of Torts does exist in Kansas).

(n222)Footnote 278. The first draft of this section was provided by Paul Roman, research assistant, at U.S.C. Law Center, Fall 1995.

For additional discussion of brokers and anti-discrimination laws, see Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice, Ch. 9, The Broker and Discrimination(Matthew Bender).

(n223)Footnote 279. 42 U.S.C. § 3601 et seq.

(n224)Footnote 280. 42 U.S.C. § 3604.

(n225)Footnote 281. See Pub. L. 100-430. In 1974, Pub. L. 93-383 inserted, "sex" after "religion".

(n226)Footnote 282. 42 U.S.C. § 3605.

(n227)Footnote 283. 42 U.S.C. § 3605. Paula Beck, Fighting Section 8 Discrimination: The Fair Housing Act's

New Frontier, 31 Harv. C.R.-C.L. L. Rev. 155 (Winter, 1996); John V. Picone III, We Have Met The Enemy And They Are Us: Saving HUD From Themselves And Protecting The Viability of the Fair Housing Amendments Act, 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1097 (1996) (The Fair Housing Amendments Act is a valuable tool to combat discrimination. It provides a variety of enforcement options, realistic penalties, and sufficient remedies. However, if HUD continues to abuse its enforcement mechanisms, allowing the Act to bludgeon and stifle legitimate, nonviolent political discourse on important public issues, portions of the Act may be declared unconstitutional).

(n228)Footnote 284. Single Family Mortgage Foreclosure Act, 12 U.S.C. § 3751; see also Nelson A. Diaz, HUD's New Foreclosure Act: Cutting Losses and Improving Business Management, 68 N.Y. L.J. 30 (Jan. 1996).

(n229)Footnote 285. 42 U.S.C. § 5312.

(n230)Footnote 286. 61 Fed. Reg. 7060 at 1.

(n231)Footnote 287. Beside federal and state law, real estate trade associations also prohibit discrimination in the denial of equal professional services. See, e.g., Article 10, Code Of Ethics and Standards Of Practice National Association Of Realtors, January 1, 1995.

(n232)Footnote 288. See Matthew Smith, Comment, The Wages of Living in Sin: Discrimination in Housing Against Unmarried Couples, 25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1055, 1074 n. 78 (1992) (only Arkansas, Mississippi and Wyoming have not enacted fair housing laws).

(n233)Footnote 289. See, e.g., Cal. Gov't Code § 12995(B).

(n234)Footnote 290. See Robert Schwemm, The Future of Fair Housing Litigation, 26 J. Marshall L. Rev. 745, 748 (1993).

(n235)Footnote 291. 42 U.S.C. § 3610(f).

(n236)Footnote 292. Anthony Downs, Strategy for Designing a Fully Comprehensive National Housing Policy for the Federal Government of the United States 12 (1988). See also Note, Affordable Housing, Exclusionary Zoning, and American Apartheid: Using Title VIII to Foster Statewide Integration, 68 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 89 (1993).

(n237)Footnote 293. Johnson & Roseman, SAG Newsletter 11, Ass'n Am. Geographers (June 1990); Margery Austin Turner, Discrimination in Urban Housing Markets: Lessons From Fair Housing Audits, in Discrimination in the Housing and Mortgage Markets (Federal National Mortgage Ass'n 1992) (a lessening of racial isolation in Los Angeles 1980-1990). See also William P. O'Hare & William H. Frey, Booming, Suburban, and Black, 14 Am. Demographics 30, 36 (Sept. 1992) ("Suburban blacks are a fast-growing market segment within a slow-growing country.")

(n238)Footnote 294. 13 F.3d 1351 (9th Cir. 1994).

(n239)Footnote 295. 13 F.3d 1351, 1352 (9th Cir. 1994).

(n240)Footnote 296. Ramos v. Kraft, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 959 (N.D. Ill. 1996). This decision may not be released for publication.

(n241)Footnote 297. Racial Harassment Costs Chicago Family Its House, Wash. Post., Nov. 3, 1994, at A20.

(n242)Footnote 298. See Teresa Coleman Hunter and Gary L. Fisher, Fair Housing Testing -- Uncovering Discriminatory Practices, 28 Creighton L. Rev. 1127, 1129 (1995), quoting United States v. Gilman, 341 F. Supp. 891, 903 (S.D.N.Y. 1972) ("...discrimination is usually covert and often appears in insidious and subtle forms.").

(n243)Footnote 299. See Victoria A. Roberts, With a Handshake and a Smile: The Fight to Eliminate Housing

Discrimination, 27 Mich. L.J. 276 (March 1994).

(n244)Footnote 300. Midpeninsula Citizens for Fair Housing v. Westwood Investors, 221 Cal. App. 3d 1377, (Cal. App. 1990) (California refused to follow the Supreme Court by stating that the standing rule under the California state law had different requirements than the Supreme Court had mentioned in Coleman as applied to the Federal Fair Housing Act. Several other states have refused to follow the standing requirements stated in Coleman by distinguishing the facts of their cases from the facts in Coleman); Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363, 373 (1982), stating that Coleman, the African-American tester, had standing as a tester to sue based on her statutory right to truthful housing information under § 804(d) of the Fair Housing Act, and that she and Willis, the Caucasian tester, had sufficiently alleged injury as individuals based on petitioners depriving them of "the right to the important social, professional, business and economic, political and aesthetic benefits of inter-racial associations that arise from living in integrated communities free from discriminatory housing practices." Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363, 376 (1982).

(n245)Footnote 301. See Austin v. Strauss, 866 F.2d 431 (1989) (unpublished disposition). For full opinion, see Nos. 88-3030 and 88-3048 (6th Cir. 1989) (defendant settled for $15,000 in damages out of court and was ordered to pay approximately $14,000 in attorney's fees).

(n246)Footnote 302. Teresa Coleman Hunter and Gary L. Fisher, Fair Housing Testing -- Uncovering Discriminatory Practices, 28 Creighton L. Rev. 1127, 1141 (1995).

(n247)Footnote 303. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(a).

(n248)Footnote 304. 902 F.2d 1259 (7th Cir. 1990).

(n249)Footnote 305. 902 F.2d 1259, 1261 (7th Cir. 1990); Doane v. National Westminster Bank USA, 938 F. Supp. 149 (E.D.N.Y. 1996); Osborn v. Kellogg, 547 N.W.2d 504 (Neb. App. 1996).

(n250)Footnote 306. Honce v. Vigil, 1 F.3d 1085 (10th Cir. 1993). See also Abrams v. Merlino, 694 F. Supp. 1101 (1988) (sexual harassment of female customers by a real estate broker during provision of services is prohibited by the Fair Housing Act, regardless of whether housing is lost as a result).

(n251)Footnote 307. Kenneth R. Harney, Investigators Target Higher Loan Fees Charged to Women, Minority Applicants, Wash. Post, Sept. 23, 1995, at F01.

(n252)Footnote 308. Kenneth R. Harney, Investigators Target Higher Loan Fees Charged to Women, Minority Applicants, Wash. Post, Sept. 23, 1995, at F01.

(n253)Footnote 309. 960 F.2d 572 (6th Cir. 1992).

(n254)Footnote 310. 960 F.2d 572, 579 (6th Cir. 1992); Krueger v. Cuomo, 115 F.3d 487 (7th Cir. 1997) (Evidence supported award by administrative law judge of $20,000 in emotional distress damages to tenant for landlord's violation of Fair Housing Act provisions relating to sex discrimination by making unwanted sexual advances and attempting to evict tenant when she filed sexual harassment complaint; tenant testified that landlord had grabbed and touched her in front of her children, that landlord came unannounced to her apartment three or four times a week, that he made her feel "real dirty," "like a bad person," and "scared her," and that she concluded she had no alternative but to leave her long sought-for apartment)

(n255)Footnote 311. Senior citizen-only housing is specifically exempt from the Fair Housing Act. See 42 U.S.C. § 3607(b)(1) (stating in relevant part, "[N]or does any provision in this subchapter regarding familial status apply with respect to housing for older persons").

(n256)Footnote 312. See Jennifer Jolly Ryan, A Real Estate Professional's and Attorney's Guide to the Fair Housing Laws Recent Inclusion of Familial Status as a Protected Class, 28 Creighton L. Rev. 1143 (1995). See also Fair Housing Council of Orange County, Inc. v. Ayres, 855 F. Supp. 315 (1994) (holding that a landlord's occupancy restriction of two persons per unit had a disparate impact on families with children and supported a prima facie case of familial status discrimination under the Fair Housing Act; the restriction was facially neutral by treating adults and children similarly, but it excluded a large percentage of families with children from renting apartments); United States v. Lepore, 816 F. Supp. 1011 (M.D. Pa. 1991) (holding that a trailer park owner's policy of limiting the occupancy of the trailers to two people was an unreasonable restriction and a disguised substitute for a previous adults-only policy).

(n257)Footnote 313. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(b)(1).

(n258)Footnote 314. See Elliott v. City of Athens, 960 F.2d 975, cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 376 (11th Cir. 1992) (city zoning ordinance permitting a maximum of four unrelated individuals to occupy a single residence was within the meaning of the occupancy limit exemption to the FHA). But see City of Edmonds v. Washington State Bldg. Code Council, 18 F.3d 802 (9th Cir. 1994) (provision of FHA, exempting from the Act restrictions regarding maximum number of occupants permitted to occupy a dwelling, did not apply to a city zoning ordinance prohibiting five or more unrelated individuals from occupying single-family dwellings).

United States v. Branella, 972 F. Supp. 294 (D.N.J. 1997) (In absence of direct evidence of discriminatory intent, housing discrimination plaintiff must present sufficient evidence that complainant is member of protected class, complainant applied for and was qualified to rent unit in question, she was rejected, and unit remained available after she was rejected, and then burden shifts to defendant who must articulate legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for rejecting prospective tenant, and if such nondiscriminatory reason is profferred, plaintiff must produce evidence to establish that defendant's reason is pretextual); Martin v. Palm Beach Atlantic Ass'n,, 696 So. 2d 919 (Fla. App. 1997) (Although publication of condominium association rules prohibiting occupancy by children under age 12 would constitute facial violation of Fair Housing Act (FHA) section prohibiting statement or advertising indicating illegal preference, limitation, or discrimination, association's contention that it did not demonstrate intent to discriminate could be considered by jury as to issues of damages and their causation); Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246 (9th Cir. 1997) (Family who received Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) benefits stated action against apartment complex owner and manager for discrimination on basis of familial status in violation of Fair Housing Act (FHA), where family alleged they were members of a class protected under the FHA, that owner had policy of refusing to negotiate for sale or rental of units to families receiving AFDC, and that enforcement of policy was prohibited by the FHA); Children's Alliance v. City of Bellevue, 950 F. Supp. 1491 (W.D. Wash. 1997) (city ordinance, imposing additional burdens on staffed group homes for youths, some of whom were generally handicapped, violated both Fair Housing Act (FHA) and Washington Law Against Discrimination by its differential treatment of persons based on familial status and handicap); Simovits v. Chanticleer Condominium Ass'n, 933 F. Supp. 1394 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (Condominium unit owners had standing to sue under Fair Housing Act for condominium association's alleged discrimination in refusing to allow owners to sell condo to buyers with children under age 18 where owners alleged that they lost opportunities to sell their condominium at a higher price because of the "no children" rule and that they suffered financial strain due to additional mortgage payments they incurred as result of the rule); Hernandez v. Ever Fresh Co., 923 F. Supp. 1305 (D. Or. 1996).

(n259)Footnote 315. 42 U.S.C. § 3602(h).

(n260)Footnote 316. See Michael D. Isacco, A Massachusetts Real Estate Broker's Duty to Disclose: The Quandary Presented by AIDS Stigmatized Property, 27 New Eng. L. Rev. 1211, 1224 (Summer 1993).

(n261)Footnote 317. Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. 6573a, §§ 15C-D (1991). For an analysis of the different types of AIDS disclosure statutes and a recommendation for a tighter version more consistent with anti-discrimination laws, see Neville-Ewell, Residential Real Estate Transactions: The AIDS Influence, 5 Hofstra Prop. L.F. 301 (1993).

(n262)Footnote 318. See A.F.A.P.S. v. Regulations & Permits Admin., 740 F. Supp. 95 (D.P.R. 1990) (holding that individuals infected with AIDS were within the definition of handicapped and protected by the provisions of the FHA); Baxter v. City of Belleville, 720 F. Supp. 720 (S.D. Ill. 1989) (holding that Congress intended to include those who are HIV-positive among handicapped persons). But see Bryant Woods Inn, Inc. v. Howard County, Md., 911 F.Supp. 918 (D. Maryland 1996) (Under a "disparate impact" claim under the FHA, the plaintiff challenges a facially neutral law that has the effect of causing discrimination. This court reasoned that a claim of disparate impact does not arise from one isolated incident. The court refused to follow the two previously cited cases because they represent a "clear error of law" by allowing an isolated incident to give rise to a disparate impact claim).

F. Willis Caruso, Fair Housing Modifications and Accommodations in the '90s, 29 J. Marshall L. Rev. 331(Winter 1996); Kelly D. Klimkiewicz, City Of Edmonds v. Oxford House, Inc.: Handicapped Residents Of Group Homes Are Finally Recognized As A Protected Class Under The Fair Housing Act, 6 Widener J. Pub. L. 227 (1996).

United States v. Wagner, 940 F. Supp. 972 (N.D. Tex. 1996) (First Amendment did not protect neighbors' lawsuit to block sale of house for use as group home for mentally retarded children and, therefore, did not preclude recovery against neighbors for violation of Fair Housing Act); Franklin Bldg. Corp. v. City of Ocean City, 946 F. Supp. 1161 (D.N.J. 1996) (Allegations in developer's complaint, that city and individual city defendants discriminated on basis of handicap, based on misperception that potential residents of housing project would be incapable of independent living because of their age, and alleging that developer had suffered economic injury as result of that discrimination, were sufficient to confer standing on developer to seek damages under Fair Housing Amendments Act on its claim that city counsel wrongfully blocked developer's proposed housing project).

(n263)Footnote 319. 15 U.S.C. § 1691.

(n264)Footnote 320. See, e.g., Hann v. Hous. Auth., 70 F. Supp. 605 (E.D. Pa. 1989) (holding that a local housing authority's definition of family was impermissibly restrictive).

(n265)Footnote 321. David Kushner, Free Exercise, Fair Housing and Marital Status -- Alaskan Style, 12 Alaska L. Rev. 335, 338 (1995). "Courts in nine of the twenty-two jurisdictions in which fair housing laws prohibit discrimination on the basis of marital status have determined whether the term 'marital status' protects unmarried couples. The results appear to be nearly evenly split, although some holdings are equivocal. Roughly speaking, courts in Alaska, California, Massachusetts and New Jersey have found 'marital status' to include unmarried couples, whereas courts in Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, New York and Washington have found it does not. Courts in three jurisdictions have found marital status provisions to apply to same-sex roommates."

(n266)Footnote 322. David Kushner, Free Exercise, Fair Housing and Marital Status -- Alaskan Style, 12 Alaska L. Rev. 335, 337 (1995); Rebecca A. Wistner, Cohabitation, Fornication And The Free Exercise Of Religion: Landlords Seeking Religious Exemption From Fair Housing Laws, 46 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 1071 (Summer 1996).

(n267)Footnote 323. See, e.g., Attorney General v. Desilets, 636 N.E.2d 233 (Mass. 1994); Smith v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 395 (1994), rev'd in part, Smith v. Fair Employment & Housing Comm'n., 12 Cal. 4th 1143, (Cal. App. 1996); State v. French, 460 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. 1990); Donahue v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 32 (Cal. App. 1991) (the California Supreme Court dismissed review and depublished the appellate opinion).

(n268)Footnote 324. Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 115 S. Ct. 460 (1994). See also Kushner, 12 Alaska L. Rev. at 335.

(n269)Footnote 325. Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 115 S. Ct. 460 (1994). See also Maureen E. Markey, The Price of Landlord's Free Exercise of Religion: Tenant's Right to Discrimination Free Housing and Privacy, 22 Fort. Urb. L.J. 699, 831 (1995) (labeling the "free exercise" exception a travesty, "an unwarranted exemption," "a mockery not only of the legitimate free exercise exemption, but also of the civil rights laws.")

(n270)Footnote 326. Minn. Stat. § 363.12, Subdiv. 1.

(n271)Footnote 327. Minn. Stat. § 609.34.

(n272)Footnote 328. State v. French, 450 N.W.2d 2 (Minn. 1990), which made note of Anti-Discrimination Law--Marital Status Discrimination, 18 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 563 (1991).

(n273)Footnote 329. Donahue v. Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 32 (Cal. App. 1991). The California Supreme Court dismissed review and depublished the appellate opinion. James C. Geoly and Kevin R. Gustafson, Religious Liberty And Fair Housing: Must A Landlord Rent Against His Conscience? 29 J. Marshall L. Rev. 455 (Winter 1996).

(n274)Footnote 330. See, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. ch. 151B, § 4 which is representative and states in pertinent part "It shall be unlawful for the owner ...licensed real estate broker ...to refuse to rent or lease or sell or negotiate for sale ...because of ...sexual orientation ... ." Wis. Stat. Ann. § 101.22; Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 46a-81e; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 368-1; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 363.03; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 4503; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 105:-4.

(n275)Footnote 331. David B. Cruz, Piety and Prejudice: Free Exercise Exemption From Laws Prohibiting Sexual Orientation Discrimination, 60 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1176, 1181 (1994).

(n276)Footnote 332. David B. Cruz, Piety and Prejudice: Free Exercise Exemption From Laws Prohibiting Sexual Orientation Discrimination, 60 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1176, 1183 (1994). See also Kramarsky v. Stahl Mgmt., 401 N.Y.S.2d 943, 945 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1977) ("Absent a supervening statutory prescription, a landlord is free to do what he wishes with his property and to rent or not rent to any given person at his whim."). See Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 25 §§ 1451-52 (statute does not mention sexual orientation as a protected basis against which landlords and brokers may not discriminate and specifically excludes sexual orientation discrimination as a handicap).

(n277)Footnote 333. David B. Cruz, Piety and Prejudice: Free Exercise Exemption From Laws Prohibiting Sexual Orientation Discrimination, 60 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 1176, 1191 (1994).

(n278)Footnote 334. Baumgardner v. Secretary, United States Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev, 960 F.2d at 579.

(n279)Footnote 335. 509 F.2d 1110, reh'g denied, 517 F.2d 918, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 896 (1975).

(n280)Footnote 336. But see Bronson v. Crestwood Lake Section 1 Holding Corp., 724 F. Supp. 148 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (statistical formulations showing percentage of minority households and non-minority households excluded from apartment building by owner's policy of rejecting holder of Section 8 vouchers and policy of requiring tenants have income three times the amount of rent make prima facie showing of disparate impact on minority tenants); United States v. Reece, 457 F. Supp. 43 (1978) (holding that to prevent an unequal burden on women applicants, apartment owners must consider alimony and child support payments in determining whether a divorced woman would meet the owner's requirements regarding the ability to pay rent).

(n281)Footnote 337. Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV, 805 P.2d 873 (Cal. 1991). See also Baumgardner at 579 (holding that the FHA does not preclude owners and brokers from investigating the background, financial ability, and general responsibility of prospective occupants, so long as the owner or broker does not discriminate on any of the bases specified in the Act).

(n282)Footnote 338. Harris at 887-88. Bean v. Missouri Comm'n on Human Rights, 913 S.W.2d 419 (Mo. App. 1996) (Applicants for rental unit failed to establish prima facie case of racial discrimination in connection with denial of application; although applicants were African-American and thus protected by statute, and applicants made bona fide offer to rent unit, applicants did not meet landlord's legitimate nondiscriminatory criteria for acceptance, in view of lack of nonfamily or other objective references and applicants' lack of sufficient income from local employment, and of the fact that other African-Americans were tenants in complex).

(n283)Footnote 339. Section 3603(b) states in relevant part: Nothing in section 3604 of this title (other than subsection (c)) shall apply to:

(1) any single-family house sold or rented by an owner: provided, That such private individual owner does not own more than three such single-family houses at any one such time; Provided further, That in the case of the sale of any such single-family house by a private individual owner not residing in such house at the time of such sale or who was not the most recent resident of such house prior to such sale, the exemption granted by this subsection shall apply only with respect to one such sale within any twenty-four month period; Provided further, That such bona fide private individual owner does not own any interest in, nor is there owned or reserved on his behalf, under any express or voluntary agreement, title to or any right to all or a portion of the proceeds from the sale or rental of more than three such single-family houses at any one time; Provided further, That after December 31, 1969, the sale or rental of any such single-family house shall be excepted from the application of this subchapter only if such house is sold or rented (A) without the use in any manner of the sales or rental facilities or the sales or rental services of any real estate broker, agent, or salesman, or person, and (B) without the publication, posting or mailing, after notice, of any advertisement or written notice in violation of section 3604(c) of this title; but nothing in this proviso shall prohibit the use of attorneys, escrow agents, abstractors, title companies, and other such professional assistance as necessary to perfect or transfer the title, or

(2) rooms or units in dwellings containing living quarters occupied or intended to be occupied by no more than four families living independently of each other, if the owner actually maintains and occupies one of such living quarters as his residence.

(n284)Footnote 340. See United States v. Hunter, 459 F.2d 205 (4th Cir. 1972) cert. denied, 409 U.S. 934, reh'g denied, 413 U.S. 923 (1975) (a private single-family homeowner or landlord, who is permitted by § 3603(b) to effectuate discriminatory preferences by refusing to sell or rent certain dwellings to a particular racial, religious or ethnic group, is not entitled either as a constitutional right or as a matter of statutory construction to communicate via commercial advertising that intent to discriminate); Singleton v. Gendason, 545 F.2d 1224 (1976) (persons offering a single-family residence for rental were not entitled to the "single-family" exemption when they listed such rentals with a multiple listing service; even though a multiple listing service was not a real estate broker, dealer, or agent, the services it offered fell within the broad category of services embraced in the language "business of renting dwellings").

(n285)Footnote 341. 42 U.S.C. § 3607(a). See United States v. Columbus Country Club, 915 F.2d 877, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1205 (3d Cir. 1990) (Fair Housing Act's private club exemption permitting limitations on "rental or occupancy" of lodgings does not exempt sale of lodgings, even if sale has effect of limiting rental or occupancy of lodgings).

(n286)Footnote 342. 42 U.S.C. § 3604(c).

(n287)Footnote 343. See United States v. Hunter at 215 (advertisements stating that apartments are in a "white home" indicate a racial preference, and, therefore, are prohibited by § 3604(c)). See also Brian Edwards, Hidden Bias: How to Recognize Rental Discrimination, Chicago Tribune, Mar. 19, 1993;Kirsten Lagtree, Fighting Words: Effort to Avoid Housing Discrimination Has Changed the Way Realty Ads Are Written, Los Angeles Times, Feb. 12, 1995 (reprints "not acceptable words" list compiled by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Ass'n aimed to help owners, landlords, realtors and others stay in compliance with the FHA's ban on discriminatory language).

(n288)Footnote 344. Kirsten Lagtree, Fighting Words: Effort to Avoid Housing Discrimination Has Changed the Way Realty Ads Are Written, Los Angeles Times, Feb. 12, 1995, sec. K.

(n289)Footnote 345. Kirsten Lagtree, Fighting Words: Effort to Avoid Housing Discrimination Has Changed the Way Realty Ads Are Written, Los Angeles Times, Feb. 12, 1995, sec. K.

(n290)Footnote 346. See Ragin v. New York Times Co., 923 F.2d 995 (2d Cir. 1991); Spann v. Colonial Village, Inc., 899 F.2d 24 (D.C. Cir. 1990); United States v. Hunter, 459 F.2d 205, 215 (4th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 934, 93 S. Ct. 235 (1972).

(n291)Footnote 347. Ragin v. New York Times Co., 923 F.2d 995, 1002 (2d Cir. 1991).

(n292)Footnote 348. Housing Opportunities Made Equal v. Cincinnati Enquirer, 943 F.2d 644, 648 (6th Cir. 1991).

(n293)Footnote 349. Ragin v. New York Times Co., 923 F.2d 995, 1002 (2d Cir. 1991).

(n294)Footnote 350. See Janick v. HUD, 44 F.3d 553, 556 (7th Cir. 1995); HOME, 943 F.2d at 646; Ragin, 923 F.2d at 1000.

(n295)Footnote 351. See, e.g., Janick v. HUD, 44 F.3d 553, 556 (7th Cir. 1995).

(n296)Footnote 352. 24 C.F.R. Part 109.

(n297)Footnote 353. 24 C.F.R. § 109.30(b).

(n298)Footnote 354. 45 Fed. Reg. 57, 105.

(n299)Footnote 355. See, e.g., Janick v. HUD, 44 F.3d 553 (7th Cir. 1995) (holding that an advertisement containing the words "mature person preferred" may be a violation of the Act).

Peter Engel, The Reading Room: Fairer Housing: Proposals For Improving The Fair Housing Act, 5 J. Affordable Hous. & Community Dev. L. 114 (Winter 1996); Reginald Leamon Robinson, White Cultural Matrix And The Language Of Nonverbal Advertising In Housing Segregation: Toward An Aggregate Theory Of Liability, 25 Cap. U. L. Rev. 101 (1996); P. Cameron DeVore and Robert D. Sack, Advertising And Commercial Speech, 462 PLI/Pat 371, 743 (Nov. 1996).

Martin v. Palm Beach Atlantic Ass'n, 696 So. 2d 919 (Fla. App. 1997) (Publication of condominium association rules prohibiting occupancy by children under age 12 would constitute facial violation of Fair Housing Act section prohibiting statement or advertising indicating illegal preference, limitation, or discrimination); Tyus v. Urban Search Mgmt., 102 F.3d 256 (7th Cir. 1996) (Only when enough "all-whites" ads have run to allow a pattern to emerge is Fair Housing Act violation likely to become apparent); Wilson v. Glenwood Intermountain Properties, Inc., 98 F.3d 590 (10th Cir. 1996) (Fair Housing Act provision that prohibits discriminatory advertisements, but does not expressly state that such advertisements and statements to "any person" are unlawful, does not give all persons an express statutory right to be free from discriminatory advertising); State v. Keding, 553 N.W.2d 305 (Iowa 1996) (Owners' distribution of newsletter to park members fell within scope of housing discrimination provision of Iowa Civil Rights Act that prohibited publication of discriminatory statements by advertisements or "in any other manner"; objective standard is used for determining whether particular statement or advertisement is discriminatory, so as to be in violation of federal Fair Housing Act or housing discrimination provision of Iowa Civil Rights Act; determination must be made as to how "ordinary reader" would interpret publication).

(n300)Footnote 356. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(d).

(n301)Footnote 357. See Heights Community Congress v. Hilltop Realty, Inc., 774 F.2d 135, 139 (6th Cir. 1985). See also 554 Fordham L. Rev. 563; Village of Bellwood v. Dwivedi, 895 F.2d 1521, 1534 (7th Cir. 1990) ("There unquestionably is discrimination in housing against blacks in this country today."). But see Fair Housing Council of Philadelphia v. Montgomery Newspapers, 141 F.3d 71 (3rd Cir. 1998).

(n302)Footnote 358. See Zuch v. Hussey, 394 F. Supp. 1028, 1046 (1975) (holding that the Fair Housing Act bans all racially discriminatory conduct by real estate agents in the sale of housing).

(n303)Footnote 359. 895 F.2d at 1521.

(n304)Footnote 360. 895 F.2d at 1528.

(n305)Footnote 361. 895 F.2d at 1529. Kimberlianne Podlas, A New Sword To Slay The Dragon: Using New York Law To Combat Environmental Racism, 23 Fordham Urb. L.J. 1283, 1303 (Summer 1996); Stephen E. Haydon, A Measure Of Our Progress: Testing For Race Discrimination In Public Accommodations, 44 UCLA L. Rev. 1207 (Apr. 1997).

(n306)Footnote 362. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 411, 343 comment d.

(n307)Footnote 363. 597 F.2d 556 (5th Cir. 1979).

(n308)Footnote 364. See Jeanty v. McKey & Poague Inc., 496 F.2d 1119 (7th Cir. 1974) (agents held liable for giving false reasons for the owner's refusal to lease when the false reasons were subterfuge for racial discrimination).

(n309)Footnote 365. See, e.g., Vargas v. Hampson, 57 Cal. 2d 479 (1962).

(n310)Footnote 366. 740 F.2d 460 (6th Cir. 1984).

(n311)Footnote 367. See Zuch v. Hussey, 394 F. Supp. 1028, 1051, n.11 (E.D. Mich. 1975) (buyer initiating discussions of race may not absolve the real estate broker of liability under the Fair Housing Act).

(n312)Footnote 368. Cal. Gov't Code §§ 12900-12996.

(n313)Footnote 369. 53 Op. Cal. Att'y Gen. 195 (1970).

(n314)Footnote 370. An act, although forbidden or done in a forbidden manner, may be within the scope of employment. Restatement of Agency (Second) § 230 (1958).

(n315)Footnote 371. Chicago v. Matchmaker Real Estate Sales Center, 982 F.2d 1086, 1096 (7th Cir. 1992) (the doctrine of respondeat superior applies in Federal Housing Act claims); Marr v. Rife, 503 F.2d 735 (6th Cir. 1974) ("The discriminatory conduct of an apartment manager or rental agent is, as a general rule, attributable to the owner and property manager of the apartment complex, both under the doctrine of respondeat superior and because the duty to obey the law is non-delegable.").

(n316)Footnote 372. 976 F.2d 900 (4th Cir. 1992).

(n317)Footnote 373. 976 F.2d 900, 915 (4th Cir. 1992).

(n318)Footnote 374. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 317. Corina R. Caplan,The Decline and Recent Revival of Absolute Vicarious Liability Under the Fair Housing Act, 48 Rutgers L. Rev. 581 (Winter 1996).

(n319)Footnote 375. 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-3631.

(n320)Footnote 376. Note, Section 3604(c) of the Fair Housing Act of 1968, as Amended: What Is It and How Is It Changing the Use of Human Models With Real Estate Advertising, 3 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 49, 62 (1989).

(n321)Footnote 377. Note, Section 3604(c) of the Fair Housing Act of 1968, as Amended: What Is It and How Is It Changing the Use of Human Models With Real Estate Advertising, 3 Hofstra Prop. L.J. 49, 64, n. 127 (1989).

(n322)Footnote 378. HUD v. Blackwell, 908 F.2d 864 (11th Cir. 1990) (court upheld an award of compensatory damages for the victim's embarrassment, humiliation, and emotional distress).

(n323)Footnote 379. Memphis Community Sch. Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 308 (1986); Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247 (1978).

(n324)Footnote 380. Portee v. Hastava, 853 F. Supp. 597 (E.D.N.Y. 1994) (court awarded punitive damages against both a real estate agent and the owner of real estate office stating that the principal of a real estate firm has a duty to not act discriminatorily and to insure that his agents do not as well).

(n325)Footnote 381. Kale Williams, Forward-Maximizing Damages in a Fair Housing Case, 26 J. Marshall L. Rev. 1 (1992).

(n326)Footnote 382. Larry R. Rogers & Kelly N. Kalus, From One Dollar to $2.4 Million: Narrowing the Spectrum of Damage Awards in Fair Housing Cases Through Basic Tort Litigation Tactics, 26 J. Marshall L. Rev. 29 (1992).

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS +

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 95.08

AUTHOR: Professor David A. Thomas §§ 95.01 - 95.06 J. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young UniversityProfessor George Lefcoe §§ 95.07 - 95.09 The Law Center University of Southern California

§ 95.08 Bibliography.

[Go To Supp]

Books

Burke, D. Barlow, Jr. Law of Real Estate Brokers. 2d ed. 1992.

Real Estate Brokerage Law and Practice (Matthew Bender).

Articles

Brown, Ronald Benton. "Real Estate Brokerage: Recent Changes in Relationships and a Proposed Cure." Creighton L. Rev. Vol. 29 (1995) 25.

Fain, Constance Frisby. "An Overview of Real Estate Agent or Broker Liability." Real Estate L.J. Vol. 23 (1995) 257.

Gibby, Daniel J. "Brokers Encouraged to Disclose Environmental Conditions Materially Affecting the Value of Residential Property." Fla. B.J. Vol. 69 (March 1995) 52.

Gibby, Daniel J. "Ground Cover(up): Real Estate Brokers Face Higher Duty to Disclose Environmental Hazards." A.B.A. J. Vol. 81 (Apr. 1995) 58.

Isacco, Michael D., Jr. "A Massachusetts Real Estate Broker's Duty to Disclose: The Quandary Presented by AIDS Stigmatized Property." New Eng. L. Rev. Vol. 27 (1993) 1211.

Streiker, Stephen Dean. "Getting Paid Commissions: A New Power Balance Between Real Estate Brokers, Appraisers and Their Clients Under the Missouri Commercial Real Estate Brokers' and State Certified Real Estate Appraisers' Lien Act." U.M.K.C. L. Rev. Vol. 63 (1995) 727.

Temkin, Harvey L. "Advising the Seller of Investment Real Estate."Prac. Real Est. Law. Vol. 11 (1995) 59.

Wolf, Guy P. and Marianne M. Jennings "Seller/Broker Liability in Multiple Listing Service Real Estate Sales: A Case for Uniform Disclosure." Real Est. L.J. Vol. 20 (1993) 22.

Woodward, Perry J. "Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage: A Tort That Eviscerates the Real Estate Brokers' Statute of Frauds." Santa Clara L. Rev. Vol. 36 (1996) 1219.

Annotations

Annotation, "Application of State Antitrust Laws to Activities or Practices of Real Estate Agents or Associations," 22 A.L.R.4th (1983) 103.

Annotation, "Fraud Actions" Right to Recover for Mental or Emotional Distress," 11 A.L.R.5th (1993) 88.

Annotation, "What Constitutes Financial Ability to Perform Within Rule Entitling Broker to Commission for Producing Ready, Willing and Able Purchaser of Real Property," 87 A.L.R.4th (1991) 11.

Annotation, Broker's Liability for Fraud or Misrepresentation Concerning Development or Nondevelopment of Nearby Property, 71 A.L.R. 4th 511.

Annotation, Grounds for Revocation or Suspension of License of Real-Estate Broker or Salesperson, 7 A.L.R. 5th 474.

Annotation, Modern View as to Right of Real Estate Broker to Recover Commission from Seller-Principal Where Buyer Defaults under Valid Contract of Sale, 12 A.L.R. 4th 1083.

Annotation, Real Estate Agents' and Brokers' Professional Liability Insurance, 35 A.L.R. 5th 83.

Annotation, Real-Estate Broker's Liability to Purchaser for Misrepresentation or Nondisclosure of Physical Defects in Property Sold, 46 A.L.R. 4th 546.

Annotation, Real-Estate Broker's or Agent's Misrepresentation to, or Failure to Inform, Vendor Regarding Value of Vendor's Real Property, 33 A.L.R. 4th 944.

Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Right to Recover Commission from Seller Where Sale Fails Because of Seller's Failure to Deliver Good Title--Modern Cases, 28 A.L.R. 4th 1007.

Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Rights and Liabilities as Affecting by Failure to Disclose Agreement to Loan Purchase Money to Purchaser, 17 A.L.R. 4th 788.

Annotation, Real Estate Broker's Rights and Liabilities as Affected by Failure to Disclose Financial Information Concerning Purchaser, 34 A.L.R. 4th 191.

Annotation, Real Estate Brokers: Statute or Regulation Forbidding Use of Prizes, Gifts, or Premiums as Inducement to Secure Customers, 62 A.L.R. 4th 1044.

Annotation, Revocation or Suspension of Real-Estate Broker's License for Conduct Not Connected With Business as a Broker, 22 A.L.R. 4th 136.

Annotation, Right of Attorney, as Such, to Act or Become Licensed to Act as Real-Estate Broker, 23 A.L.R. 4th 230.

Annotation, Right to Private Action Under State Statutes or Regulations Governing Real-Estate Brokers or Salesmen, 28 A.L.R. 4th 199.

Annotation, Transactions Within Public Security or Guaranty Fund Designed to Compensate Those Suffering Damage or Loss on Account of Real-Estate Brokers' Defalcations, 38 A.L.R. 4th 792.

Annotation, Validity and Application of Regulation Prohibiting Licensed Real-Estate Broker from Negotiating Sale or Lease with Owner Known to Have Exclusive Listing Agreement With Another Broker, 17 A.L.R. 4th 763.

Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of Real-Estate Brokers' Multiple-Listing Agreement, 45 A.L.R. 3d 190.

+ §§ 95.07 - 95.09 have been adapted from George Lefcoe, Real Estate Transactions (Michie 1993).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.03

Supp. to § 95.03 Statutes and Regulations Affecting Brokers.

[Go To Main]

Cambas v. Department of Business and Professional Regulation, 6 So. 3d 668 (Fla. App. 2009) (broker who drove under the influence and left the scene of an accident had his license suspended).

Forsalebyowner.com Corp. v. Zinnemann, 347 F. Supp. 2d 868 (E.D. Calif. 2004) (a statute requiring licensing of real estate brokers was not a violation of the First Amendment when applied to the operator of an Internet site that providing listings of available California real estate); Kerley v. Real Estate Agency, 96 P.3d 1211 (Or. 2004) (a broker's license could be revoked for acts of embezzlement he committed before he obtained the license).

§ 95.03(a) Real Estate Broker Licensing Provisions from a Representative Sample of States. [Go To Main]

Add new footnote at end of Florida section: n4.1

§ 95.03(b) Common Issues Under State Licensing Statutes. [Go To Main]

Add:

G. C. Timmis & Company v. Guardian Alarm Company, 635 N.W.2d 370 (Mich. App. 2001) (a firm without a broker's license could not enforce a compensation agreement for actions that fell within the brokers' licensing act); Fieger v. Pitney Bowes Credit Corporation, 251 F.3d 386 (2nd Cir. 2001) (financial adviser engaged in real estate activity for which a real estate broker's license was required). Gibbons v. Bureau of Professional and Occupational Affairs, 921 A.2d 551 (Pa. Commw. 2007) (broker's license can be suspended for failure to supervise employee salespersons).

Add:

Younkin v. Bureau of Professional and Occupation Affairs, State Real Estate Commission, 774 A.2d 1281 (Pa. Commw. 2001) (auctioneer who declared no sale and then sold property later to a non-bidder was held to have brokered the sale of real estate without a license).

FOOTNOTES:
(n3)Footnote 4.1. Schickedanz Bros.-Riviera, Ltd. v. Harris, 800 So.2d 608 (Fla. 2001) (professional services provided by marketing consultant were not real estate sales or brokerage services).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.04

Supp. to § 95.04 Fiduciary and Other Duties of Brokers.

[Go To Main]

Add:

Handy v. Cohen, 2003 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 69 (No. 00-0800, Jan. 21, 2003) (broker's violation of licensing provisions warranted damages equal to four times the amount of illegally collected broker fees).

Darone v. Cary, 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 4993 (Jan. 11, 2002) (a mortgage broker for the purchaser did not owe a fiduciary duty to the vendor).

Mississippi Real Estate Commission v. McCaughan, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS (No. 2003-CC-01153-COA, Nov. 2, 2004, Miss. App. 2004) (broker liable for failure to supervise activities of agents).

Add:

Crawford v. Mintz, 673 S.E.2d 746 (N.C. App. 2009) (action against brokers for negligent misrepresentation that the property was connected to the city sewer system); Sutton v. Ebby Halliday Real Estate, Inc., 279 S.W.3d 418 (Tex. App. 2009) (action against real estate broker for allegedly knowing that the property flooded and allegedly concealing that information).

Handy v. Cohen, 2005 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 709 (Apr. 13, 2005) (a purchase and broker committed fraud by not revealing to the vendor that they operated as related entities); Smith v. Mayes, 851 So.2d 785 (Fla. App. 2003) (action against broker for opening garage door, which injured prospective house buyer). Nichols v. Minnick, 885 N.E.2d 1 (Ind. 2008) (a broker who lent the down payment to the purchaser had the duty to disclose that fact as material information).

Add:

In re Washington, 297 B.R. 662 (S.D. Fla. 2003) (broker acted improperly in forging purported debtor's signature on the bankruptcy petition).

Kirshenbaum v. Fidelity Federal Bank, 941 A.2d 213 (R.I. 2008) (real estate broker obtained a mortgage in his own name in behalf of his clients; mortgagee was required to assign the mortgage to the broker once the debt was paid in full).

Add:

110 Amity Associaties, LLC v. Grubb & Ellis New York, Inc., 875 N.Y.S.2d 64 (2009) (action against brokers for alleged tortious interference with prospective contract).

Portell International Realty, Inc. v. Jacobson, 802 So.2d 431 (Fla. App. 2001) (a broker did not have a duty to return to the clients and tell them that the broker had agreed to reduce the deposit for the broker).

Bilodeau v. Jordan, 2003 Ohio App. LEXIS 1475 (No. C-020496, Mar. 28, 2003) (unsuccessful action against broker for personal injury suffered when a sister of the purchaser visited the house after the purchase agreement had been signed and was injured by the garage door).

Add:

Wong v. Wong, 2003 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5539 (No. A098623, Jun. 6, 2003) (the broker owed no duty to advise the vendor about possibly pursuing a tax-free exchange as part of the real property sale).

Add:

Habeeb v. Ohio Dept. of Commerce, 2004 Ohio App. LEXIS 130 (No. 82784, Jan. 15, 2004) (a broker representing the seller failed to make timely disclosure of his agency to the buyer and the license was suspended).

Add:

Hulse v. First American Title Company of Crook County, 2001 WY 95, 33 P.3d 122 (Wyo. 2001) (any misrepresentation made by the brokerage after the purchase agreement was executed can not be the basis of an actionable fraud); Nu Pointe East v. Bulliard, 2002 La. App. LEXIS 821 (Mar. 13, 2002) (a broker's duties to the vendor terminate on the day of the sale).

Add:

Queens Structure Corp. v. Jay Lawrence Associates, Inc., 758 N.Y.S.2d 664 (2003) (brokers breached fiduciary duty to vendors by entering into a secret agreement with purchasers to obtain a 2% "consulting fee").

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.05

Supp. to § 95.05 Listing Agreements and Commissions.

[Go To Main]

§ 95.05(b) Commissions. [Go To Main]

Add:

Mitchell v. DiMare, 936 So. 2d 1178 (Fla. App. 2006) (commission not owed when no enforceable contract arose between vendor and purchaser).

Trimble v. Wescom, 673 N.W.2d 864 (Neb. 2004) (broker not entitled to commission on a sale not consummated within four months after expiration of the listing agreement). See e.g., Steven G. Walther, Inc. v. Taranto, 791 N.Y.S.2d 803 (2005) (purchasers procured by the broker were ready, willing and able to complete the purchase).

Add:

C.H.E.G., Inc. v. Millenium Bank, 99 Cal. App. 4th 505, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 (2002) (broker's right to a commission is an interest that can be extinguished by a bankruptcy court).

Add:

Korin Group v. Emar Building Corporation, 737 N.Y.S.2d 367 (2002) (it is not necessary in this jurisdiction for the transaction to close for the brokerage to earn its commission); Upper Cape Realty v. Morris, 756 N.E.2d 1193 (Mass. App. 2001) (the broker was entitled to the commission for introducing the buyer to the property).

Add:

Loeb Partners Realty v. Edward A. Sears Associates, 733 N.Y.S.2d 390 (2001) (the broker was not the procuring cause and therefore not entitled to the commission); Venturvest Realty Corporation v. A.K.S.I.P. Corporation, 793 So.2d 1054 (Fla. App. 2001) (the broker was the procuring cause of the sale and was entitled to the commission); Finley v. Amyot, 728 N.Y.S.2d 832 (2001) (the broker was not the procuring cause of the sale).

Add:

The Binswanger Companies v. Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 258 B.R. 608 (Bankr. D. Md. 2001) (broker could not collect commission because some of its employees who performed services did not hold the required license).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.06

Supp. to § 95.06 Restrictions on Brokers' Activities.

[Go To Main]

§ 95.06(b) Commissions [Go To Main]

Add:

Reynolds Properties, Inc. v. Bickelmann, 685 S.E.2d 450 (Ga. App. 2009) (even though the purchase and sale agreement entitled the broker to collect the commission from the nonperforming party, no commission was payable after the parties terminated the agreement and released the purchaser from the obligation to proceed with the purchase).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.07

Supp. to § 95.07 Practical Aspects of Real Estate Brokers' Activities.

[Go To Main]

§ 95.07(b) Listing Agreement: Is a Writing Required? [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(b)(1) An Even Split

Add:

C. Porter Vaughan, Inc. v. DiLorenzo, 689 S.E.2d 656 (Va. 2010) (the contract for the sale of real property was sufficient written evidence of the listing agreement to satisfy the statute of frauds).

§ 95.07(c) Negotiating the Listing Agreement. [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(c)(1) Types of Listings: Open Listing, Exclusive Agency, Exclusive Right to Sell.

Add:

Gretencord v. Cryder, 784 N.E.2d 384 (Ill. App. 2003) (under the listing agreement, the client was required to refer a potential purchaser to the broker).

§ 95.07(c)(3) Length or Term of Listing.

Add:

Levy, Miller, Maretz, LLC v.Vuoso, 797 A.2d 574 (Conn. App. 2002) (broker was entitled to a commission for a lease agreement that was concluded during the broker's term of exclusive right); Nu Pointe East, L.L.C. v. Bulliard, 813 So.2d 545 (La. App. 2002) (the broker's duties to the vendor ended on the date of sale).

§ 95.07(d) When Do Brokers Earn Their Commissions? [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(d)(1) Traditional Rule: Once a "Ready, Willing and Able" Buyer Has Been Produced.

Add:

Norma Reynolds Realty, Inc. v. Miral, 753 N.Y.S.2d 67 (2003) (without a meeting of the minds the broker is not entitled to the commission).

Add:

Fairbourn Commercial, Inc. v. American Housing Partners, Inc., 2003 Ut. App. LEXIS 36 (No. 20020060-CA, Apr. 3, 2003) (closing is not a condition precedent to payment of the commission).

§ 95.07(d)(2) Emerging Rule: No Commission Unless the Deal Closes.

Add:

Korin Group v. Emar Building Corp., 291 A.D.2d 270, 737 N.Y.S.2d 367 (it is not necessary for the transaction to close for the broker to earn the commission); Cal Pac Associates, Inc. v. Coussoulis Development Co., 2002 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 7455 (No. E030902, Aug. 7, 2002) (the seller was not obligated to pay the commission after the buyer defaulted).

§ 95.07(d)(6) Time for Payment Does Not Determine when Right to Payment Has Been Earned.

Add:

Wright v. Shepherd, 2003 Kan. App. LEXIS 299 (No. 89, 343, Apr. 18, 2003) (broker was not entitled to commission for exercise of option, when the exercise occurred after the listing agreement expired).

§ 95.07(f) Agency Relationships Created by the Listing Agreement. [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(f)(3) In Some States a Broker May Be Agent to Both Buyer and Seller: The Dual Agency.

Add:

Thomas v. Namba, 154 Fed. Appx. 673 (9th Cir. 2005) (dual agency permissible under California law).

§ 95.07(h) The Listing Broker's Obligation to Disclose to the Buyer the Condition of the Premises. [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(h)(1) Generally.

Add:

Walker v. Johnson, 278 Ga. App. 806 (Ga. Ct. App. 2006) (No. A05A1871, Ga. App., Mar. 27, 2006) (action against broker seeking damages for drainage problems on the property); Coldwell Banker Whiteside Associates v. Ryan Equity Partners, Ltd., 181 S.W.3d 879 (Tex. App. 2006) (zoning status was not a material defect required to be disclosed by broker).

Berger-Vespa v. Rondack Building Inspectors Inc., 2002 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 3648 (April 11, 2002) (the broker did not negligently misrepresent the condition of the basement).

Cendant Mobility Financial Corp. v. Asuamah, 684 S.E.2d 617 (Ga. 2009) (under doctrine of caveat emptor, the vendor was not liable for a faulty repair; therefore, the broker was also not liable).

Add:

Berger-Vespa v. Rondack Building Inspectors Inc., 740 N.Y.S.2d 504 (2002) (the broker was held to not have negligently misrepresented the condition of the premises).

Svendsen v. Stock, 23 P.3d 455 (Wash. 2001) (the broker's knowledge of a drainage problem was independent of the broker's role in filling out the seller's disclosure form, thus preserving an independent cause of action under the state consumer protection act).

Add:

White v. J.D. Reece Company, 26 P.3d 701 (Kan. App. 2001) (brokers not able to rely on seller's disclosure statement to shield themselves from liability for failure to make full disclosure).

Add:

Boguch v. Landover Corp., 224 P.3d 795 (Wash. App. 2009) (a broker who posted an inaccurate aerial photo of the property was not liable for negligence absent evidence of proximate cause between the inaccurate photo and the alleged damage).

Add:

Throckmartin v. Century 21 Top Realty, 226 P.3d 793 (Wyo. 2010) (brokers required to disclose to prospective purchases only those adverse material facts about the premises actually known to the brokers).

§ 95.07(k) Brokers and the Anti-Discrimination Laws. [Go To Main]

§ 95.07(k)(2) Types of Violations.

§ 95.07(k)(2)(i) Advertising.

At end of subsection, Add new text and footnote 355.1:

A municipal ordinance prohibiting an agent from advertising property without first obtaining a certificate of compliance has been held to violate the First Amendment.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Supp. To CHAPTER 95 REAL ESTATE BROKERS

11-95 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions Supp. to § 95.08

Supp. to § 95.08 Bibliography.

[Go To Main]

Books

Lefcoe, George. Real Estate Transactions, Finance and Development (6th ed. 2009).

Add to articles:

Barondes, Royce de R. and Carlos Slawson, Jr. "Examining Compliance with Fiduciary Duties: A Study of Real Estate Agents," 84 Or. L. Rev. 681 (2005).

Bishop, Harrison K. "The Great Turf War of the New Millennium: Can Banks Engage in Real Estate Brokerage and Management Activities?" 6 N.C. Banking Inst. 391 (April, 2002).

Budzinski, Brett R. "Arguing for the Minority Rule: An Efficient Approach to Real Estate Brokerage Contracts," 82 B.U. L. Rev. 195 (February, 2002).

Burke, Patrick J. "Should Banks Be Permitted to Engage in Real Estate Brokerage and Management Services? How the Current Debate Demonstrates the Inadequacies of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act." 50 Clev. St. L. Rev. 103 (2002-2003).

Councilman, Sephanie. "The Requirement of Statute of Frauds for Real Estate Brokers to Receive Commissions and the Festering Minority View of Equity." 10 Tex. Wesleyan L. Rev. 441 (Spring 2004).

Dallon, Craig W. "Theories of Real Estate Broker Liability and the Effect of the 'As Is' Clause," 54 Fla. L. Rev. 395 (July, 2002).

Geddes, R. Richard. "Real Estate Brokerage and E-Commerce: A Framework for Empirical Analysis," 3 J.L. Econ. & Pol'y 365 (Spring, 2007) .

Havard, Cassandra Jones. " 'Goin' Round in Circles' ... And Letting the Bad Loans Win: When Subprime Lending Fails Borrowers: The Need for Uniform Broker Regulation," 86 Neb. L. Rev. 737 (2008).

Kuney, George W. "What Your Lender and Mortgage Broker Didn't Tell You: A Call for Disclosure of Loss of the Section 580B Anti-Deficiency Protection Upon Refinancing," 4 Hastings Bus. L.J. 209 (Spring 2008).

Lemieux, Jeffrey P. "Bank Real Estate Activities: Present Lending Policy and Proposed Changes Allowing Real Estate Brokerage and Management Services," 20 Ann. Rev. Banking L. 355 (2001).

Lucas, Scott M. "Recovering Lost Real Estate Commissions." 60 Bench & B. Minn. 21 (Sep., 2003).

Muller, Bradford W. "Encouraging Price Competition Among New Jersey's Residential Real Estate Brokers: Reforms to Promote the Growth of Alternative Brokerages and Reduce Transaction Costs," 39 Seton Hall L. Rev. 665 (2009).

Nagalski, Beth. "Ending the Uniformity of Residential Real Estate Brokerage Services," 73 Brooklyn L. Rev. 771 (Winter, 2008).

Plummer, Andrene N. "A Few New Solutions to a Very Old Problem: How the Fair Housing Act Can Be Improved to Deter Discriminatory Conduct by Real Estate Brokers." 47 How. L.J. 163 (Fall 2003).

Prizio, Martha L. "Money for Nothing, Listings for Free: Constitutional Implications of Subjecting 'For-Sale-By-Owner' Websites to Real Estate Broker Licensing Statutes," 41 Suffolk U. L. Rev. 957 (2008).

Robert L. Raper and Andrew J. Vandiver. "Real Estate Broker Liability," 36 N. Ky. L. Rev. 409 (2009).

Vaughn, Jabari M. "Achieving the American Dream: May Financial Holding Companies Engage in Real Estate Brokerage?" 9 N.C. Banking Inst. 443 (April 2005).

Add to Annotations

Annotation, "Exclusive right to sell" and other terms in real-estate broker's contract as excluding owner's right of sale, 88 A.L.R.2d 936 .

Annotation, "Illegality of transaction or proposed transaction as affecting right of real estate broker to commission for promoting it," 85 A.L.R. 274 .

Annotation, Liability of real-estate broker or agent to principal for concealing or failing to disclose offer, 7 A.L.R.3d 693.

Annotation, Liability of vendor's real-estate broker or agent to purchaser for misrepresentations as to, or nondisclosure of, physical defects of property sold, 8 A.L.R.3d 550.

Annotation, "Real-estate broker's right to commission for procuring lease, where lease terminates before contemplated term," 54 A.L.R.3d 1171.

Annotation, "Right of real estate broker to commission under a contract providing for payment of commissions out of purchase price," 20 A.L.R. 289 .

Annotation, "Right of real-estate broker to commission where listing contract is for sale of property and it is subsequently leased to one with whom broker had negotiated," 42 A.L.R.3d 1430.

Annotation, Suspension or revocation of real-estate broker's license on ground of discrimination. 42 A.L.R.3d 1099.

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions 96.syn

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.syn Synopsis to Chapter 96: Vendors and Purchasers

§ 96.01 Introduction to the Chapter.

§ 96.02 Agreements to Sell Realty the Vendor Does Not Yet Own.

§ 96.03 Types of Agreements to Sell Land.

§ 96.03(a) Elements of a Contract of Sale.

§ 96.03(b) Distinctions Between First Calls and Options.

§ 96.03(c) Governing Law and Policy.

§ 96.03(d) Characteristics of the Writing.

§ 96.03(e) Executory Contracts.

§ 96.03(f) Contracts of Sale Connected with Security Interests.

§ 96.04 The "Conditional Sale" Contract.

§ 96.05 The Option.

§ 96.05(a) In General.

§ 96.05(b) Property Rights Created by the Option.

§ 96.05(c) Exercise of the Option.

§ 96.05(d) Termination of the Option.

§ 96.06 Equitable Conversion.

§ 96.06(a) The Theory of Equitable Conversion.

§ 96.06(b) How Equitable Conversion Affects Rights of Vendors and Purchasers.

§ 96.06(b)(1) Changing an Interest from Real Property to Personal Property.

§ 96.06(b)(2) Conveying or Encumbering Title.

§ 96.06(b)(3) Under Eminent Domain.

§ 96.06(b)(4) Right of Possession.

§ 96.06(b)(5) Risk of Loss.

§ 96.06(b)(6) Liability for Taxes and Assessments.

§ 96.06(b)(7) Liability for Injury to Vendees and Third Parties.

§ 96.06(b)(8) Liability for Damage.

§ 96.07 Vendee's Title to Rents and Crops.

§ 96.08 The Offer.

§ 96.09 The Acceptance.

§ 96.10 Consideration for the Contract.

§ 96.11 Terms of the Contract.

§ 96.11(a) Construction of the Contract.

§ 96.11(b) Modification by Mutual Consent.

§ 96.11(c) Reformation of the Sales Contract.

§ 96.11(d) Varying the Written Contract.

§ 96.11(e) Merger of the Contract into the Deed.

§ 96.12 Assignment of the Agreement.

§ 96.13 Time As of the Essence.

§ 96.14 Statute of Frauds Issues.

§ 96.14(a) Applicability of the Statute of Frauds.

§ 96.14(b) The Sufficiency of the Memorandum.

§ 96.14(c) Partial Performance as Taking the Contract Out of the Statute of Frauds.

§ 96.15 Termination of the Agreement.

§ 96.15(a) Rescission of the Contract.

§ 96.15(a)(1) Right of Rescission of the Contract.

§ 96.15(a)(2) Rescission by Mutual Agreement.

§ 96.15(a)(3) Mistake as Ground for Rescission.

§ 96.15(a)(4) Rescission Based on Fraud.

§ 96.15(a)(4)(i) Nondisclosure as Fraud.

§ 96.15(a)(4)(ii) The Doctrine of Caveat Emptor.

§ 96.15(a)(4)(iii) The Extent to Which Representations May Constitute Fraud.

§ 96.15(a)(4)(iv) Particular Misrepresentations That Will Constitute Fraud.

§ 96.15(a)(5) Actions for Rescission.

§ 96.15(b) Forfeiture of the Contract.

§ 96.16 Remedies for Breach of Contract.

§ 96.16(a) Vendor's Action for Purchase Money.

§ 96.16(a)(1) Action for Purchase Money as an Action for Specific Performance.

§ 96.16(a)(2) Actions on Contracts for Installment Payments.

§ 96.16(a)(3) Other Prerequisites to a Right of Action.

§ 96.16(b) Vendee's Right to Recover Down Payments.

§ 96.16(b)(1) When Recovery Is Granted.

§ 96.16(b)(2) When Recovery Is Denied.

§ 96.16(b)(3) Recovery of Payments by Defaulting Party.

§ 96.16(b)(4) Liens Based on Right to Recover Payments.

§ 96.16(c) Measure of Damages in Action for Breach of Contract.

§ 96.16(c)(1) The Variety of Approaches to Measure of Damages.

§ 96.16(c)(2) Prevailing Rules for Measure of Damages.

§ 96.16(c)(3) Liquidated and Exemplary Damages.

§ 96.16(d) The Nature of Specific Performance.

§ 96.16(d)(1) Requisites of an Action for Specific Performance.

§ 96.16(d)(2) Contracts that May Be Specifically Enforced.

§ 96.17 What Is "Merchantable" or "Marketable" Title.

§ 96.17(a) Situations Making Title Unmarketable.

§ 96.17(b) Defense of Inadequate Quantity.

§ 96.17(c) Where Title Depends upon Adverse Possession.

§ 96.17(d) Vendee's Rights When Vendor's Title Is Inadequate.

§ 96.18 Abstracts and Abstracters.

§ 96.19 Title Insurance.

§ 96.20 Summary of Laws Requiring Sellers to Disclose Negative Background, Characteristics, and Condition of the Real Property.

§ 96.20(a) The Evolving Common Law Concerning Disclosures by Sellers.

§ 96.20(a)(1) Seller's Duty to Disclose.

§ 96.20(a)(2) Negligent Misrepresentation.

§ 96.20(a)(3) Fraudulent Concealment.

§ 96.20(a)(4) Latent Defects.

§ 96.20(a)(5) Legal Impairments: Easements, Building Codes, and Ordinance Violations.

§ 96.20(a)(6) Other Intangible Defects and Special Conditions.

§ 96.20(a)(7) Infestation.

§ 96.20(a)(8) Environmental Hazards.

§ 96.20(b) Summary of State Statutes Requiring Disclosures by Sellers.

§ 96.20(c) Federal Disclosure Requirements Concerning Lead-Based Paint Hazards.

§ 96.20(d) Disclosures Required Under Land Sales Full Disclosures Acts.

David A. Thomas
Professor of Law

J. Reuben Clark Law School
Brigham Young University

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.01

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.01 Introduction to the Chapter.

Parties' agreements for transferring interests in realty may generate conflicting applications of property law and contract law. Property law concepts, both in common law and in public policy, traditionally govern the agreement's execution and interpretation and consequences; contract law applies to execution. The most frequent areas of conflict are in the areas of the offer and acceptance, statute of frauds, construction of the contract, time as of the essence, reformation and alteration of the contract, rescission, specific performance, and damages.

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.02

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.02 Agreements to Sell Realty the Vendor Does Not Yet Own.

The courts are divided as to whether public policy prohibits contracts to sell real property interests that the vendor does not own. n1 In some states, n2 and under common law, n3 a sale of realty that the vendor does not own but expects to acquire, a so-called short sale, may be void as against public policy. In other states, such a sale is not contrary to public policy n4 if the contract is undertaken in good faith and the interest is actually tendered at the agreed time. n5

The attitude toward short sales varies widely among the states. Some jurisdictions refuse to recognize short sales of realty. n6 Other states do not favor short sales, but do not require the vendor to have title at the time the contract is executed; instead they require only that title be tendered at the agreed closing time. n7 In still other states, short sales are not recognized only if the vendor concealed the lack of title from the purchaser. n8 Some states ignore the short sales doctrine altogether if the vendor acquires and tenders title by the law day. n9

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 1. Future sales in real estate were upheld. Williams v. Bell, 190 S.E.2d 818 (Ga. Ct. App. 1972). One may contract to sell land he does not own. Callisch v. Farnham, 188 P.2d 775 (Cal. Ct. App. 1948). Nakatsukasa v. Wade, 274 P.2d 918 (Cal. Ct. App. 1954).

(n2)Footnote 2. Bonvillain v. Bodenheimer, 42 So. 273 (La. 1906); Bickham v. Kelley, 110 So. 637 (La. 1926); Fidelity Nat'l Bank of Baton Rouge v. Vuci, 68 So. 2d 781 (La. 1953); Tennet v. Caffery, 113 So. 167 (La. 1927); Abney v. Levy, Kuhn v. Breard, 92 So. 52 (La. 1922).

(n3)Footnote 3. Nance v. Sexton, 203 S.W. 649 (Mo. Ct. App. 1918), modified, Perkinson v. Burford, 623 S.W.2d 30 (Mo. Ct. App. 1981).

(n4)Footnote 4. Godgar v. North Fulton Realty Co., 127 S.E.2d 189 (Ga. Ct. App. 1962). Wood v. Zor, Inc., 154 So. 2d 632 (La. Ct. App. 1963) (may be ratified and enforced by the vendee). Scriven v. Abrams, 236 N.Y.S2d 360 (1962). Breach of short sale gives rise to action for damages. Williams v. Bell, 190 S.E.2d 818 (Ga. Ct. App. 1972). Hawaii recognizes short sales of interest in real property. State Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Kauaian Dev. Co., 445 P.2d 109 (Haw. 1968). Ownership by vendor no necessary for validity of option. Commuter Dev. and Investments, Inc. v. Gramlich, 279 N.W.2d 394 (Neb. 1979). Brown v. Peterson, 233 P. 895 (Ariz. 1925); Armstrong v. Sacramento Valley

Realty Co., 198 P. 217 (Cal. Ct. App 1921); Beck v. Swank, 203 P. 1010 (Cal. Ct. App. 1921); Kunzmann v. Petteys, 221 P. 888 (Colo. 1923); Paynesville Land Co. v. Grabow, 200 N.W. 481 (Minn. 1924); Daly v. Duwane Constr. Co., 106 N.W.2d 631 (Minn. 1960); Hollensteiner v. Anderson, 252 P. 796 (Mont. 1927); Wilson v. Neligh, 193 N.W. 704 (Neb. 1923); Tierney v. Dietsch, 194 N.W. 475 (Neb. 1923); Searles v. Auld, 111 S.E. 785 (S.C. 1922); Busby v. Hamby, 117 S.E. 223 (S.C. 1923); Renner v. Crisman, 127 N.W.2d 717 (S.D. 1964); Drew v. Bowen, 146 A. 254 (Vt. 1929); Finch v. Sprague, 202 P. 257 (Wash. 1921); Lewis v. King, 103 So. 19 (La. 1925); Bickham v. Kelly, 110 So. 637 (La. 1926); Neal v. Cunningham, 1 La. App. 640 (1925).

(n5)Footnote 5. See Ellsworth Dobbs, Inc. v. Johnson: A Re-examination of the Broker-Buyer-Seller Relationship in New Jersey, 23 Rutgers L. Rev. 83 (Fall 1968). See also Conveyancing--The Roles of the Real Estate Broker and the Lawyer in Ordinary Real Estate Transactions--Wherein Lies the Public Interest?, 19 DePaul L. Rev. 319 (Winter 1969). Masters v. Van Wart, 134 A. 539 (Me. 1926); American Nat'l Bank v. Haggerton 250 S.W. 279 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); Schalow v. Schalow, 329 P.2d 592 (Cal. Ct. App. 1958) (An agreement to pay more for land than provided under state statute for loans to veterans was void against public policy.).

(n6)Footnote 6. Short sale is not a nullity and may be enforced by purchaser. Wood v. Zor, Inc., 154 So. 2d 632 (La. Ct. App. 1963). Promise to convey the land to be inherited where the promisor had neither title nor possession of the land at the time the agreement was made is invalid. Wilhoite v. Nelson, 319 So. 2d 265 (Ala. 1975). Lebovitz v. Porter, 252 S.W.2d 144 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1952); Isaacs v. Bokor, 566 S.W.2d 532 (Tenn. 1978); see John C. Payne, The Why, What and How of Uniform Title Standards, 7 Ala. L. Rev. 25 (Fall 1954); Ohio St. B. Assn., Standards of Title Examination, 3 Clev.-Marshall L. Rev. 9 (Spring 1954); Charles Liebert Crum, Five Steps Toward Sounder Record Title, 32 N.D. L. Rev. 223 (Jan. 1956).

(n7)Footnote 7. Hepburn v. Dunlop & Co., 14 U.S. 179 (1816); Chrisman v. Partee, 38 Ark. 31 (1881); Nicolopoolos v. Hill, 117 So. 185 (Ala. 1928); Backman v. Park, 108 P. 686 (Cal. 1910); Gibson v. Brown, 73 N.E. 578 (Ill. 1905); Smith v. Hunter, 89 N.E. 686 (Ill. 1909); Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187 (1873); Gregory v. Christian, 44 N.W. 202 (Minn. 1890); Brown v. Haff, 5 Paige 235 (N.Y. Ch. 1835); Hill v. Doerfler, 47 P.2d 260 (Or. 1935).

(n8)Footnote 8. A sales contract is valid even though the seller does not have title when the contract is executed if he is able to tender deed as required by the contract at the proper time. Madigan v. Beuhr, 260 N.E.2d 431 (Ill. App. Ct. 1970). In absence of bad faith, a vendor who does not have title at time of signing of contract may acquire title before closing date. Jennings v. Realty Developers, Inc., 171 S.E.2d 829 (Va. 1970). Townshend v. Goodfellow, 41 N.W. 1056 (Minn. 1889); Mason v. Madson, 4 P.2d 475 (Mont. 1931) (when fraud is present, rescission applicable only when damages occur).

(n9)Footnote 9. Upholding short sales of real estate. Barkhorn v. Adlib Associates, Inc., 222 F. Supp. 339 (D. Haw. 1963). Wolff v. Cloyne, 106 P. 104 (Cal. 1909); Darrow v. Houlihan, 272 P. 1049 (Cal. 1928); Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407 (1870); Gray v. Smith, 76 F. 525 (C.C.N.D Cal. 1896).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.03

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.03 Types of Agreements to Sell Land.

[Go To Supp]

American law recognizes four basic types of agreements to sell land. Listed in order of the purchaser's increasing interest, these four types may be denominated:

(1) the first call (often referred to as the right of first refusal),

(2) the option,

(3) the executory contract, and

(4) the so-called conditional sales contract.

The first call merely gives the purchaser the first opportunity to purchase if and when the vendor desires to sell, but imposes no duty on the vendor to sell to anyone. The option gives the purchaser the right to purchase within a certain time, for a stated price and under determined terms but imposes no duty of purchase. The executory contract imposes a duty on the vendor to sell and on the purchaser to buy and creates certain legal relationships. The conditional sale is an executed contract to sell with title reserved in the vendor by way of security until the purchase price or a stated portion thereof is paid.

§ 96.03(a) Elements of a Contract of Sale.

A test whether an instrument is a contract of sale or a contract of agency is to determine whether or not each of the parties may require specific performance of the contract for the sale and purchase of the land. n10 A long-time lease is not a sale. n11 Mutuality is essential to the validity of these contracts. n12 There must be mutual assent by vendor and vendee and they must assent to the same thing in the same sense. n13 A contract has this element where all its terms are reduced to writing and the parties have proceeded to carry it into effect although not signed by one of the purchasers. n14

§ 96.03(b) Distinctions Between First Calls and Options.

One who has an option has a right to buy the property, while one who has a "first call" merely has the privilege of first refusal if the owner desires to sell. n15 Another distinction is that options create a property right against the land and are assignable, but first calls are purely personal rights. Thus, a so-called option that is really a first call is a personal right that is not subject to the rule against perpetuities. n16

§ 96.03(c) Governing Law and Policy.

An effective agreement for sale of land requires a grantor capable of conveying, a grantee capable of receiving, an agreement satisfying the statute of frauds, a sufficient consideration and an interest capable of being conveyed. A contract to sell land is based originally on contract law, but when executed it gives rise to definite property rights which are to be interpreted by the property law. n17

The right to convey real estate is clearly one of the paramount incidents of ownership; n18 but the right to alienate property is always dependent upon and defined by law. So long as vested rights are not disturbed, the law may at any time change the tenure upon which the land is held, and may alter the conditions under which it may be alienated and modify the rules of evidence by which the title is to be determined. n19 While the right of alienation of is one of the most important real property rights, and there is a strong public policy in its favor, it may not apply to all types of property interests. Yet the right is broad enough that the vendor may sell such interests as the equitable title, or partial title, or title subject to encumbrance. n20

§ 96.03(d) Characteristics of the Writing.

The parties to a contract for the sale of land typically reduce their agreement to writing, and these agreements are subject to the general rules that govern all contracts. The agreement is sometimes put in the form of a bond for a deed, but it generally takes the form of a simple executory contract whereby the vendor agrees, for a consideration paid or to be paid, to convey the described real property interest to the purchaser. The writing should contain the whole agreement, including the names of the parties, the price to be paid, all stipulations intended to bind the parties, and such a description of the land as will enable anyone acquainted with it to learn the property is intended to be sold, the time when the purchase money must be paid, and the date when the conveyance is to be made. n21 Where these essential details are not covered, but are left to be fixed definitely by a subsequent contract, no binding contract exists. n22

§ 96.03(e) Executory Contracts.

Such a writing usually creates an executory contract, which obligates the vendor to sell and the purchaser to buy. n23 An executory contract of sale exists where there remains something to be done, the performance of which is a condition precedent to the transfer of title to the property. n24 An "executed contract" is one where nothing remains to be done by either party, while an "executory contract" is one where something remains to be done by one or more of the parties. n25 An executory contract in its inception does not become an executed contract until the purchase price has been paid and the owner has delivered his deed conveying the property simultaneously with such payment. n26 The question whether a contract is one or the other has frequently been before the courts. n27 "An executory contract is one in which a party binds himself to do or not to do a particular thing ... * * * A contract executed is one in which the object of the contract is performed; and this, says Blackstone, differs in nothing from a grant." n28 Where the effect of the agreement is concluded or completed at the time the agreement is made, so that no obligation remains outstanding, it is the agreement rather than the contract that is executed. n29

A contract to sell land is usually an executory contract, preliminary to the sale and not the sale itself and also subject to rescission by agreement between the parties. n30 Traditionally, it could be said that the contract for the sale of land is wholly executory until the conveyance is made, the vendor remaining the owner and having the right to convey it free from any claim of the one holding under such prior contract. n31 However, the simplicity of this doctrine has been disturbed by multi-faceted and shifting rules of "equitable conversion," conferring forms of property rights on purchasers under signed and enforceable contracts. While the contract remains executory and no deed has passed, the vendor may mortgage retained rights, although the terms of the mortgage cannot restrict the rights of the purchaser. n32

An executory contract of sale becomes executed when the deed is itself completely executed and title passes. If a transaction is ambiguous as to its status of execution, the issue is determined by the terms of the instrument and the acts of the parties. n33 Under certain peculiar circumstances what appears to be an invalid executed sale may be treated as an executory contract to sell. So some states hold that a deed by a prospective heir to the expected inheritance is a mere but valid contract to sell when and if the expectancy is realized.

§ 96.03(f) Contracts of Sale Connected with Security Interests.

An agreement in form of an executory land contract is treated as a mortgage if made to secure a loan. n34 Before the emergence and dominance of title insurance, agreements for conveyance sometimes took the form of a sealed obligation under penalty on the part of the vendor to convey a good title, in which case the instrument is known as a "bond for a deed" or a "title bond." n35 A "title bond" gives the holder an equitable title, convertible into a legal title, on payment of the consideration. n36 This instrument transfers to the obligee an equitable interest in the premises agreed to be conveyed, which is measured by the amount paid on account of the purchase. The legal title remains in the obligor, in trust for the purchaser, who, upon payment of the entire consideration, acquires the whole equitable interest, and may maintain a suit to compel the specific performance of the contract, if the obligor refuses to keep the covenants. n37 A vendor who has given a bond for title and taken purchase-money notes therefor does not by their hypothecation pass the legal title to the premises to the purchaser. n38 In such case, the bond is considered in the nature of a conveyance to the purchaser, and the land in equity becomes that of the vendee, while the notes constitute a lien on the land in the nature of a mortgage. A transfer of the notes carries with it the lien, which the transferee may enforce in equity. n39 Where a bond is given and notes taken for the purchase price, the vendor has only the interest of a mortgagee in the premises, and the purchaser, in analogy to the mortgagor, is the owner of an equity of redemption which is the beneficial estate, and which is descendible by inheritance, devisable by will, and alienable by deed, precisely as if it were an absolute estate of inheritance at law. n40 Where the obligor, after part payment of the purchase price and possession taken by the obligee, transfers the remainder of the purchase-money notes to a third person for value, and conveys the land to another, such grantee takes with notice of the rights of the obligee in the bond and acquires no rights against the obligee, and a payment by such obligee to the holder of the notes gives the obligee a complete equity in the land, both as against the vendor and the grantee in the deed from him. n41 Where the purchaser has knowledge of imperfections in the title, but takes a bond for a deed, the purchaser waives all right of rescission, and must sue on the bond in case of loss by reason of defective title. n42 The assignee of a bond for title acquires all the rights and equities to which the assignor was entitled thereunder. n43 A vendee, accepting a bond for title containing a power to sell in the vendor in case of nonpayment of the purchase-money notes, is bound by such power although he did not sign the bond. n44 The statutes of some of the states require bonds for title to be executed and recorded with the formalities of deeds, n45 and record is notice to subsequent purchasers and lienors. n46 The effect is to create a mortgage on the land in favor of the vendor to secure the purchase price. n47 The purchaser becomes the equitable owner. n48 The description of the land is sufficient if capable of identification. n49 The bond calls for the conveyance of a good and sufficient title, although there is no express language to this effect in the instrument. n50 The bond may be assigned. n51 Long refusal to make payments may amount to abandonment by the purchaser. n52

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 10. "Bond for title" is a contract to convey. Sanders v. Danley, 267 So. 2d 169 (Ala. 1972). McMillan v. Lorimer, 107 So. 239 (La. 1926); Paschen v. Lovett, 255 S.W. 385 (Tex. Civ. App. 1923); Warren v. La Salle Co. 262 S.W. 527 (Tex. Civ. App. 1924). See Minnesota Land Contract Law in Action, 39 Minn. L. Rev. 93 (1954).

(n2)Footnote 11. Wolley v. Wycoff, 273 P.2d 181 (Utah 1954).

(n3)Footnote 12. Power of attorney authorizing sale of realty did not authorize gift. Creasy v. Henderson, 173 S.E.2d 823 (Va. 1970). Kowal v. Day, 98 Cal. Rptr. 118 (1971); City Builders Fin. Co. v. Stahl, 106 So. 77 (Fla. 1925); Hall v. Wingate, 126 S.E. 796 (Ga. 1924); Atlanta v. DeKalb County, 26 S.E.2d 334 (Ga. 1943); Zaring v. Lavatta, 211 P. 557 (Idaho 1922); McCandless v. Schick, 380 P.2d 893 (Idaho 1963); Kellogg v. Kartte, 154 N.E. 231 (Ill. 1926); Obering v. Swain-Roach Lumber Co., 155 N.E. 712 (Ill. App. Ct. 1927); Kokomo Veterans, Inc. v. Schick, 439 N.E.2d 639 (Ind. Ct. App. 1982) (conditional contract does not lack mutuality); Hughes v. Knapp, 197 P. 862 (Kan. 1921); McGeorge v. White, 174 S.W.2d 532 (Ky. 1943); Sala & Ruthe Realty v. Campbell, 515 P.2d 394 (Nev. 1973); Zilmaur Realty Corp. v. Pinkney, 203 N.Y.S. 715 (1924); Alpert v. G.R.E. Constr. Corp., 215 N.Y.S. 322 (1926); contra Vanzandt v. Heilman, 214 P.2d 864 (N.M. 1950); see Clay v. Callaway, 177 F.2d 741 (5th Cir. 1949); Woolley v. Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., 491 A.2d 1257 (N.J. 1985) (overruled employer immunity from lack of mutuality requirement in Schlenk v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 62 A.2d 380 (N.J. 1948)); see J.W. Thomas, Jr., The Inequity of Mutuality of Remedy, 2 Baylor L. Rev. 54 (1949); Exclusive Sales Rights Given to Real Estate Brokers, 6 DePaul L. Rev. 107 (1956); Bell v. Hagmann, 107 S.E.2d 426 (Va. 1959) (A sales contract permitting vendee, but not vendor, to cancel if the property was not zoned commercial within a year did not create a condition precedent but merely fixed a closing time).

(n4)Footnote 13. Ashurst v Rosser, 153 So. 2d 240 (Ala. 1963). Whelchel v. Waters, 111 S.E. 25 (Ga. 1922).

(n5)Footnote 14. Kellogg v. Kartte, 154 N.E. 231 (Ill. 1926).

(n6)Footnote 15. To exercise a first call, there must be a matching of the original offer; conditions cannot be attacked by the optionee. Coastal Bay Golf Club, Inc. v. Holbein, 231 So. 2d 854 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1970). The offer which the first call holder must meet must be made by one having the financial ability to meet, not a shoestring speculation. Imperial Refineries Corp. v. Morrissey, 119 N.W.2d 872 (Iowa 1963). The right of first refusal gives no interest or title in the land. Sunray DX Oil Co. v. Lewis, 426 S.W.2d 44 (Mo. 1968). See Comment, Exclusive "Right to Sell Contracts," 8 DePaul L. Rev. 100 (1959). Execution of an oil and gas lease was a sale of an interest in land and so violated a first refusal right held by another. Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977). A right of first refusal does not carry over into a holdover tenancy. Nevala v. McKay, 583 P.2d 1065 (Mont. 1978). Sander v. Schwab, 146 N.E. 509 (Ill. 1925); Assoc. Truck Lines v. Baer, 77 N.W.2d 384 (Mich. 1956); Beets v. Tyler, 290 S.W.2d 76 (Mo. 1956) (partially overruled on another point of law); Hayes v. O'Brien, 37 N.E. 73 (Ill. 1894) (A first right to buy in a lease creates an option in the lessee); Cortese v. Connors, 135 N.E.2d 28 (N.Y. 1956) (A first call provision in a lease is not met until the lessee rejects an offer the lessor is willing to accept.).

(n7)Footnote 16. Execution of an oil and gas lease was a sale of an interest in land and so violated a first refusal right held by another. Sanchez v. Dickinson, 551 S.W.2d 481 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977). Campbell v. Campbell, 230 S.W.2d 918 (Ky. 1950).

(n8)Footnote 17. An equitable estate may be assigned. Merrick v. Daehler, 282 N.E.2d 163 (Ill. App. Ct. 1972). Bond for Deed Contracts, 31 La. L. Rev. 587 (1971). See P. Herzog, The Conflict of Laws in Land Transactions: The Borderland Between Contract and Property Matters--A Comparative View, 8 Syracuse L. Rev. 191 (1957).

(n9)Footnote 18. Bicocchi v. Casey-Swasey Co., 42 S.W. 963 (Tex. 1897); see W.S. Miller, Jr., Problems in the Sale and Lease-Back, 4 Ark. L. Rev. 328 (1950).

(n10)Footnote 19. Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U.S. 316 (1890); People ex rel. Deneen v. Simon, 52 N.E. 910 (Ill. 1898); State ex rel. Douglas v. Westfall, 89 N.W. 175 (Minn. 1902).

(n11)Footnote 20. Knapp v. Davidson, 192 N.W. 75 (Wis. 1923).

(n12)Footnote 21. Long v. Needham, 96 P. 731 (Mont. 1908); Der Hagopian v. Eskandarian, 153 A.2d 897 (Pa. 1959) (mental competence to execute contract is presumed).

(n13)Footnote 22. Roberts v. Lebrain, 248 P.2d 810 (Cal. Ct. App. 1952); Federal Land & Securities Co. v. Hatch, 125 N.W. 837 (Iowa 1910).

(n14)Footnote 23. Burmeister v. Council Bluffs Inv. Co., 268 N.W. 188 (Iowa 1936).

(n15)Footnote 24. Peterson v. Moresi, 186 So. 737 (La. 1939).

(n16)Footnote 25. McCutchen v. Klaes, 143 P. 143 (Colo. Ct. App. 1914); Lewis v. Lambros, 194 P. 152 (Mont. 1920).

(n17)Footnote 26. Miller v. Kemp, 160 S.E. 203 (Va. 1931); see Cole v. Haynes, 62 So. 2d 779 (Miss. 1953); Stevahn v. Meidinger, 57 N.W.2d 1 (N.D. 1952); Asher v. Hull, 250 P.2d 866 (Okla. 1952); Seguin v. Maloney-Chambers Lumber Co., 253 P.2d 252 (Or. 1953) (Until vendee has fully performed and deed is delivered, equity treats the contract as executory with the vendor as trustee for the title.).

(n18)Footnote 27. Chapman v. Glassell, 13 Ala. 50 (1848); Atwood v. Cobb, 33 Mass. 227 (1834); Coates v. Cooper, 140 N.W. 120 (Minn. 1913); De Bergere v. Chaves, 93 P. 762 (N.M. 1908); Jackson ex dem. Ludlow v. Myers, 3 Johns. 388 (N.Y. Sup. 1808); Bartlesville Oil & Improvement Co. v. Hill, 121 P. 208 (Okla. 1912); Phillips v. Swank, 13 A. 712 (Pa. 1888); Fritz v. Menges, 36 A. 213 (Pa. 1897); Cross v. Buskirk-Rutledge Lumber Co., 201 S.W. 141 (Tenn. 1918); Dicken v. Cruse, 176 S.W. 655 (Tex. Civ. App. 1915).

(n19)Footnote 28. Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87 (1810).

(n20)Footnote 29. See Morrow v. Southern Express Co., 28 S.E. 998 (Ga. 1897); Long v. Godfrey, 32 S.E.2d 306 (Ga. 1944).

(n21)Footnote 30. Where the words "subject to the loan approval" are used in connection with real estate contracts, the final loan approval is a condition of the obligation. Blakley v. Currence, 361 N.E.2d 921 (Ind. Ct. App. 1977). Watts v. England, 269 S.W. 585 (Ark. 1925). See E. George Rudolph, The Installment Land Contract as a Junior Security, 54 Mich. L. Rev. 929 (1956).

(n22)Footnote 31. Vermont Marble Co., v. Mead, 80 A. 852 (Vt. 1911); Waite v. Stanley, 92 A. 633 (Vt. 1914).

(n23)Footnote 32. Marion Mortg. Co. v. Grennan, 143 So. 761 (Fla. 1932).

(n24)Footnote 33. Jones v. Continental Royalty Co., 115 F.2d 731 (5th Cir. 1941).

(n25)Footnote 34. Minnesota Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Closs, 234 N.W. 872 (Minn. 1931).

(n26)Footnote 35. See Bond for Deed Contracts, 31 La. L. Rev 587 (1971). Vardeman v. Lawson, 17 Tex. 10 (1856).

(n27)Footnote 36. B. P. Jones & Co. v. Cash, 226 S.W. 352 (Ky. 1920); Olive-Sternenberg Lumber Co. v. Gordon, 159 S.W.2d 845 (Tex. 1942); Faddell v. Taylor, 239 S.W. 931 (Tex. Comm'n App. 1922).

(n28)Footnote 37. Clinton v. Miller, 226 P.2d 487 (Mont. 1951); Sievers v. Brown, 56 P. 171 (Or. 1899).

(n29)Footnote 38. Morrison v. Chambers, 30 S.E. 141 (N.C. 1898).

(n30)Footnote 39. Lewis v. Shearer, 59 N.E. 580 (Ill. 1901).

(n31)Footnote 40. Strauss v. White, 51 S.W. 64 (Ark. 1899).

(n32)Footnote 41. Georgia St. Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Faison, 40 S.E. 760 (Ga. 1902). See S. Bldg. & Loan Assn. v.

Page, 33 S.E. 336 (W. Va. 1899).

(n33)Footnote 42. Horne v. Rogers, 35 S.E. 715 (Ga. 1900); Russell v. Handy, 59 S.W. 320 (Ky. 1900); Green v. Finucane, 6 Miss. 542 (1848); Baldridge v. Cook, 27 Tex. 565 (1864); contra Bellows v. Cheek, 20 Ark. 424 (1859).

(n34)Footnote 43. Walker v. Maddox, 31 S.E. 165 (Ga. 1898).

(n35)Footnote 44. Morrison v. Chambers, 30 S.E. 141 (N.C. 1898).

(n36)Footnote 45. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Athens Engr. Co., 110 S.E. 873 (Ga. 1922); Doyle v. Wohlrabe, 66 N.W.2d 757 (Minn. 1954) (Parol evidence showing the fact of delivery and the receipt of the several writings; including time, place, situation of property and parties and other circumstances; may be received to aid in interpreting the provisions of a contract to transfer bond).

(n37)Footnote 46. Brown Loan & Abstract Co. v. Willis, 102 S.E. 814 (Ga. 1920); Hancock v. Gumm, 107 S.E. 872 (Ga. 1921); Pierce v. Dennett, 136 S.E. 440 (Ga. 1927).

(n38)Footnote 47. Fairbairn v. Pofahl, 222 S.W. 16 (Ark. 1920); Robbins v. Fuller, 229 S.W. 8 (Ark. 1921); Crittenden Lumber Co. v. Ward, 284 S.W. 354 (Tenn. 1925).

(n39)Footnote 48. Robbins v. Fuller, 229 S.W. 8 (Ark. 1921); Rosette v. Shelton, 126 S.E. 242 (Ga. 1924) (may sue for trespass); see Curry v. Curry, 182 N.W. 98 (Mich. 1921); Pierce v. Dennett, 136 S.E. 440 (Ga. 1927) (A vendor retains no title after payment of purchase notes.).

(n40)Footnote 49. McKenzie v. Marshall, 119 S.E. 338 (Ga. App. 1923); see Eversole v. Huff, 265 S.W. 797 (Ky. App. 1924).

(n41)Footnote 50. Cudd v. Wood, 89 So. 52 (Ala. 1921); Goldstein v. Ehrlick, 124 A. 761 (N.J. Ch. 1924).

(n42)Footnote 51. Robbins v. Fuller, 229 S.W. 8 (Ark. 1921); Rems v. Habersham Bank, 129 S.E. 89 (Ga. 1925); Few v. Pou, 124 S.E. 372 (Ga. Ct. App. 1924); Neal v. Harber, 134 S.E. 349 (Ga. Ct. App. 1926).

(n43)Footnote 52. Fincher v. Douglas, 128 S.E. 584 (Ga. 1925).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.04

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.04 The "Conditional Sale" Contract.n53

A relatively recent development in real estate transactions is the conditional sale or installment sale contract, which is almost a throwback to the "bargain and sale" practice before the Statute of Uses. n54 Whenever a party desires to purchase land but is unable or unwilling to pay the entire purchase price a problem is presented as to how the seller may secure the payment of the balance of the purchase price. The classic legal answer is the passing of title to the buyer with the seller receiving back a purchase-money mortgage, or a vendor's lien, but highly favored as is the purchase-money mortgage and the vendor's lien in the law, in most states the vendor can realize upon the security in the case of default only after expensive and often protracted legal proceeding. This cost, and the resultant deterioration of the mortgage security during the pendency of the legal action, requires that the seller retain at the consummation of the sale a sufficient margin of equity and charge an interest rate sufficient to protect the investment. This limits in turn the extent to which the buyer can purchase.

The so-called conditional sales contract permits the buyer to enter into possession with a smaller down payment and discharge the balance of the obligation in installments. It also permits the seller to retain the title as security and thus, in case of the buyer's default, be able to terminate the buyer's interest and regain possession at a minimum cost and loss of time. n55

Under such circumstances the courts are faced with the problem as to whether public policy requires that a rapacious seller be prevented from forfeiting the contract upon a minimum default; similarly, in an earlier age, the equity courts stepped in to arrest such exploitation under common-law mortgages. The disadvantage of such equitable intervention is that it will discourage sellers from entering into such arrangements and leave some buyers unable to purchase under more demanding terms.

This problem ultimately is one of public policy. Is it better to give protection to the buyer by protecting the equitable interest against arbitrary forfeiture, if by so doing the creditor's cost of realization on the security is increased. The creditor, for self-protection, must demand a larger down payment and a higher interest rate as well as, where permissible, attorney's fees and court costs. The alternative is to ease credit by enabling the creditor to enforce the security easily and cheaply even though the debtor suffers a hardship.

The conditional sale or land purchase contract differs from the deed and purchase mortgage back in these essentials: when the deed is taken legal title passes and the mortgagee, in lien states, has merely a lien, whereas under the land sale contract the vendee gets only an equitable title until the deed is finally executed. In some states land sales contracts were eligible to be recorded, so that the purchaser was not protected against others subsequently claiming under the vendor unless possession is taken. In each case the buyer assumes the risk of loss and in most, but not all jurisdictions, the buyer must pay taxes.

Where the contract is in installments the vendee cannot defeat the vendor's right to the full interest by accelerating the payments. n56 Provisions in the contract retaining possession in the vendor are valid. n57 A contract to sell land on the installment plan is a contract to sell, not a sale. n58

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 53. Chapter 250, 1968, Acts of Maryland, provides that land installment contracts must recite the total number of periodic payments. Florida does not require witnesses to sales contract. Carroll v. Dougherty, 355 So. 2d 843 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1978). See Clark, Installment Land Contracts in South Dakota, 6 S.D. L. Rev. 248 (Fall 1961); Uhlman & Duke, 1968 Truth and Lending Act, 31 Tex. Bar J. 825 (Oct. 22, 1968). See also Nelson & Whitman, The Installment Land Contract - A National Viewpoint, 1977 BYU L. Rev. 541 (1977); Installment Land Contracts in Missouri Pose Potential Hazards for Lenders, 45 Mo. L. Rev. 528 (Summer 1980). See E. George Rudolph, The Installment Land Contract as a Junior Security, 54 Mich. L. Rev. 929 (1965); James R. Hancock, Installment Contracts for the Purchase of Land in Nebraska, 38 Neb. L. Rev. 953 (1959); J.H. Beuscher, Buying Farms on Installment Land Contracts--A Preface, 1960 Wis. L. Rev. 379 (1960); Jameson v. Wurtz, 396 P.2d 68 (Alaska 1964) (abandonment of property v. abandonment of interest discussed in light of conditional sale contract); Ellis v. Butterfield, 570 P.2d 1334 (Idaho 1977) (Bistline, dissenting) (general description of land sale contracts); Stenehjem v. Kyn Jin Cho, 631 P.2d 482 (Alaska 1981) (limiting of land contract).

(n2)Footnote 54. Statutes 27 Henry VIII., ch. 10; Farmers & Merchants Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 78 N.W. 1054 (Neb. 1899) (discussion of whether the statute of uses is applicable); Smith v. Wright, 779 S.W.2d 177 (Ark. 1989) (purposes of statute of uses); Henderson v. Adams, 48 P. 398 (Utah 1897) (brief history of statute of uses); Chi. Title & Trust Co. v. Mercantile Trust & Sav. Bank, 20 N.E.2d 992 (Ill. App. Ct. 1939) (statute of uses explained in terms of personal and real property).

(n3)Footnote 55. Shelley J. Lashkowitz, Land Purchase Contracts in North Dakota, 36 N.D. L. Rev. 159 (Jan. 1960).

(n4)Footnote 56. Goetz v. Hubbell, 266 N.W. 836 (N.D. 1936); Carpenter v. Winn, 566 P.2d 370 (Colo. Ct. App. 1977) (neither debtor or creditor has right to accelerate payment); Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Promenade Towers Mut. Hous. Co., 581 A.2d 846 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1990) (minority rule that when the agreement is silent, prepayment is permitted); Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Rand & Reed Powers Partn., 972 F. Supp. 1194 (N.D. Iowa 1997) ("perfect tender in time" rule treated).

(n5)Footnote 57. Bentler v. Brynjolfson, 165 N.W. 553 (N.D. 1917); Snipes v. Dexter Gin Co., 116 P.2d 1019 (N.M. 1941) (discussion of ownership of crops absent a lien on the crops in a conditional contract).

(n6)Footnote 58. Ashurst v. Rosser, 153 So. 2d 240 (Ala. 1963). Franzke v. Fergus County, 245 P. 962 (N.D. 1926); Neponsit Holding Corp. v. Ansorge, 214 N.Y.S. 91 (1926); see In re Ghosh, 38 B.R. 600 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 1984) (sale forced upon the debtor by a mortgagee distinguished from the usual buyer/seller relationship in Neponsit). See Frank R. Lacy, The Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act and the Need for a Law-Revision Commission in Oregon, 36 Or. L. Rev. 106 (Dec. 1956); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890) (sale of lands, an agreement to sell lands, and options discussed); Wright Land & Inv. Co. v. Even, 186 P. 681 (Mont. 1919) (sale contingent upon fulfillment of contract terms); Wright v. Bowlus, 205 P. 210 (Mont. 1922) (no sale until conditions are met).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.05

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.05 The Option.

§ 96.05(a) In General.

One who has a legal right but not a duty to buy land or other property holds an option; the option is a contract by which the owner agrees to give another the exclusive right to buy property at a fixed price within a specified time. It is merely an agreement to hold an offer to sell property open for a specified time. The party giving the option parts with the right to sell for a limited time. n59 A "binding option" for the purchase of land is a contract, but it is also an offer which, when accepted, will create another contract. n60 It is described as a unilateral contract signed by one party, the other becoming a party by paying the consideration and accepting the instrument. n61 The purpose of an option is to bind the owner of the land, for a valuable consideration, not to withdraw a specified offer for the sale of the land during a fixed period, thereby obligating the owner to convey the land to another if the other within a specified time accepts the offer and complies with the terms proposed. n62

An option is not an actual or existing contract, but is a continuing offer of a contract. If the offeree decides to exercise the right to demand the conveyance, the offeree must signify that fact to the offeror. n63

The option is not a sale. It is not even an agreement for a sale. At best, it is but a right of election in the party securing that party to exercise a privilege, and only when that privilege has been exercised by acceptance does the option become a contract to sell. n64 The owner parts with the right to sell to another for such time and gives to the optionee the exclusive privilege to buy on the terms set forth in the option. n65 By contrast, a contract of sale imposes upon the vendee an obligation to buy. Unlike the contractual right of first refusal, during its term an option to purchase permits the holder to force a sale even if the subject property is not otherwise on the market. n66 A right of first refusal ripens into an option when the owner elects to sell. n67

An option confers a privilege or right to elect to buy, but it does not impose any obligation to buy. n68 One may contract to sell property and reserve the right or option to repurchase at a fixed price. n69

In determining whether a particular transaction constitutes an option or a completed contract of sale, many difficult questions of interpretation arise. n70 The questions are usually by the intent of the parties. This intent, however, often can only be determined by the legal consequences specified in the contract and which would legally flow from the existence of an option or a contract. Ordinarily an option to purchase or a contract to sell realty may be converted into a contract of sale by the optionee's agreement to pay the purchase price. n71 But this state of contractual relationship may be merely transitory if the optionee tenders the purchase price at the time of giving notice of exercising the option and the vendor promptly delivers the deed.

Whether an instrument in writing agreeing to sell and convey real estate is considered as an absolute conveyance, or an agreement to convey, or an option to purchase, depends not on any particular words but on the intention of the parties to be derived from the instrument itself by a consideration of all its parts; and when that is doubtful, it is to be determined from the circumstances attending it. n72 The rights and obligations arising out of an option to purchase are to be contrasted rather than merely to be compared with the rights and obligations arising out of a contract of sale. n73

There is some difficulty in harmonizing the cases in which questions of this character have arisen. Where the contract did not bind the prospective purchaser, some courts have held the instrument to be an option, n74 while others hold that the fact that the purchaser is not so bound is not conclusive. n75 Some earlier cases hold that such agreements are unenforceable for want of mutuality. n76 These decisions cannot be taken as authority for it is now universally held that when an option is accepted, no other element entering in, it becomes an executory contract for the sale of the property with mutuality of obligation and remedy. n77

In this paragraph are described several miscellaneous rules regarding options in a variety of legal and transactional settings. An option may be given to sell land as well as to buy. n78 The option contract is distinguished from the executory contract of sale in that in the latter case the party is bound unconditionally to pay the purchase price. n79 A provision in a sales contract that if the vendor's title cannot be made good within a specified time the contract shall become void and the initial payment shall be refunded, does not convert the contract into an option contract. n80 A provision in a contract for liquidated damages makes the contract one of sale rather than of option. n81 It has been held that an agreement to sell and convey real estate to another at a future time, at a fixed price, was not a mere option, where the purchaser was put into possession and agreed to commit no waste and to pay taxes, assessments, and interest. n82 A contract authorizing a person to undertake the sale of property for a specified price for a certain commission is a contract of agency and not an option contract. n83 The option contract is not a contract of hire. n84 An option to repurchase may be reserved in a deed. n85 A renewal of a lease containing an option also renews the option. n86 A reasonable time for exercise of the option will be implied, if none is specified. n87

A binding option contract requires a valuable consideration. n88 The option contract is nothing more or less than an offer by one party to remain open usually for a specific time, and such offer may or may not be revoked by the party giving it, if the promise to keep it open has been supported by a consideration. So, it is essential to the continuation of the option for the time specified that it be supported by a valuable consideration. n89 Unless supported by a consideration, the option is considered as a mere offer and may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance. However, on acceptance, the contract becomes binding notwithstanding the lack of consideration. n90 Although a promise by one party without any corresponding promise, consideration, or obligation on the part of the other is voidable, an option contract, although unsupported by consideration, may be accepted before it expires or is withdrawn, and this will obviate the original lack of consideration and make a binding contract so far as that objection is concerned. n91 An oral contract for the sale of land is sufficient as to consideration where it provides that the premises shall be sold to the purchaser for the highest price bid for the same. n92 There is a presumption of consideration for the option; n93 and an option contract supported by a sufficient consideration is valid and enforceable. n94 The option so given may or may not be supported by a sufficient consideration. If it is not so supported, the offer is a mere gratuity which may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance; n95 but if an option unsupported by a consideration is accepted before it expires or is withdrawn, a binding contract is thus formed. n96 As in the case of other contracts, the inadequacy of the consideration given for the option is not sufficient reason for refusing to grant specific performance of the agreement based thereon. n97 If the consideration given be of an appreciable value, the contract will, as a general rule, be upheld. An option given in consideration of one dollar has been held valid. n98 However, the holding in these cases has not gone unchallenged and the consideration of one dollar has been held insufficient. n99 The assumption by the purchaser in the option to purchase of a mortgage on the realty constituted a valid consideration for the option. n100 To set aside a contract for the sale of real estate on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, such inadequacy must be gross. n101 The mere recital of the receipt of a nominal consideration in a simple written contract for an option is held not to preclude proof that the consideration was never paid for the purpose of showing the invalidity of the instrument for want of consideration. n102 At common law an option under seal requires no consideration, for the seal imports a consideration. n103 In case the option given is under seal, the adequacy of the consideration given is immaterial where the common-law rule prevails, since in such jurisdictions want of consideration cannot be set up as a defense to an action in which it is sought to enforce the contract resulting from an acceptance of an option under seal. n104 In certain cases, however, it is held that since a suit for specific performance is an equitable proceeding, want of consideration may be shown even though the option is under seal, as in equity the real consideration may be inquired into since the parties are not concluded by the recitals in the contract, although under seal. n105 An agreement to extend the option requires a consideration, for it is in effect a new option. n106 The consideration must be separate and distinct from the purchase price. n107 In case an option has been given for a valuable consideration and there is a promise to extend the time for the exercise of the option which is not based on any additional or new consideration such agreement is a bare agreement. It is a mere continuing offer to sell at a price previously fixed not based upon any consideration and may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance. The old consideration will not make the promise to extend the option binding. n108

§ 96.05(b) Property Rights Created by the Option.

While an option is sometimes said to give a mere privilege it is more usually thought of as creating unilateral legal relationships, a right in the optionee but no duty to buy and a duty but no right in the optionor to sell. The option contract conveys no title, legal or equitable, to the property; n109 it only confers the right to specific performance. n110

Although an option does not pass to the optionee any interest in the land, a contract of sale does; therefore, an optionee with nothing except the right to elect to buy may, by acceptance of the option, transform the option into a contract of sale and changes from an optionee to a vendee. n111 When an optionee so becomes a vendee, in most jurisdictions, the rights in land arising from the position as vendee are deemed to date from the contract of sale. n112

The optionee, while an optionee, assumes no obligation to the optionor. n113 It has been held that where the building is destroyed before acceptance of the terms of the option, the optionee was not entitled to accept the contract and require the optionors to account for the insurance proceeds. n114

Under the doctrine of relation back, upon exercise of the option the optionee may become the equitable owner as of the date of the option. n115

When land under option is subject to condemnation proceedings, some courts, viewing the optionee as able to convert the option into a property right at the optionee's discretion, hold the optionee entitled to the condemnation award. n116 Other courts hold that parties to an option are absolved from their obligations under the option if the property is wholly or substantially taken by eminent domain. n117

One who buys land with notice of an option takes subject to the option, n118 although the option does not, before acceptance, vest in the optionee any interest, legal or equitable, in the land itself. n119 While an option creates no estate in land it does give rise to an inchoate interest that equity will protect. n120 An optionee is in some cases treated as the owner. n121

§ 96.05(c) Exercise of the Option.

An option to purchase becomes a contract to sell only when the privilege has been exercised by acceptance. n122 Notice by the holder of the option of the election to purchase converts the contract into an executory sales contract. n123 A lease option becomes a sales contract as and when the option is accepted. n124 The cases divide as to whether the exercise of a lease option after death of the optionee relates back to the date of the contract. n125

The privilege to purchase under the option becomes binding only when the option is exercised in strict accordance with the terms of the agreement. n126 An option must be exercised within the time limited and upon the terms specified; n127 acceptance of the option converts the option into a bilateral contract of purchase and sale. n128 To effect a contract of sale capable of specific enforcement, the acceptance of an option must conform with the terms of the offer, and ordinarily must be unequivocal, absolute, and free from any condition. n129 Acceptance can be made only on the terms contained in the option, n130 and an attempt to accept on different terms amounts to a rejection of the option. n131 A substantial compliance with the terms of an option is not sufficient to constitute an acceptance of the offer. n132 The option must be exercised within the time specified, n133 as in all such instruments time is held to be of the essence thereof, n134 since it is a mere offer to sell and vests no estate in the property to be sold; n135 and the rights of a purchaser in a mere option contract cease on his failure to exercise the option within the time, and on the terms prescribed. n136 Where the terms of an option required the optionee to pay a mortgage on the land as a part of the purchase price, the optionee, by agreeing with just one of the optionors, acting for himself alone, to pay the mortgage before maturity and at the time of consummating the sale, was held not to create a new or different contract. n137 The optionor may waive informalities in the method of acceptance. n138

When a contract by its terms gives one of the parties an option to rescind, the exercise of the option terminates the rights of the parties under the contract, and the other party may be bound to restore any consideration received. n139

Where the option relates to a fractional part of a tract, the optionee in the notice of acceptance should designate the part to be taken. n140 The optionee may direct the title to be conveyed to another. n141 Notes given as evidence of payments to be made are not binding where the option is not accepted. n142 It is the duty of one giving an option to maintain the property in the condition it was in when the option was given. n143 The failure to furnish an abstract required by the option has been held an excuse for failure to pay the purchase price at the time specified. n144

This acceptance, if unconditional, constitutes a binding contract and cannot be thereafter repudiated. n145 After acceptance of an option, the validity of the contract thereby created is not affected by the fact that the option originally was without consideration and might have been withdrawn before acceptance. n146 The optionee must notify the vendor of the acceptance within the time specified. n147 The acceptance relates back to the date of the option. n148

Where the terms of the option do not require acceptance to be made in writing, acceptance may be made orally. n149 Where written notice of acceptance is required by the contract, a verbal notice of acceptance is not sufficient. n150

The optionee, to obtain a right to purchase under the option, must accept all the conditions contained in the option. n151 Under an option contract, tender of the purchase price by the vendee is generally necessary to put the vendor in default, but it is unnecessary where the vendor has waived the necessity for tender. n152 A coal lease and option to buy could not be exercised without paying back rents. n153 However, an executory contract arises only when the option is exercised according to its terms. n154 The option cannot be converted into a sale except by acceptance and performance of the conditions expressed in the option to be performed. n155 When all the acts are performed as specified, the contract to convey becomes irrevocable; n156 the acceptance of the option in the manner and within the time specified is sufficient to bind both parties and removes the objection to the enforcement of the agreement for want of consideration. n157 The option, being unilateral, becomes binding only when the party to whom it is given exercises it. n158 If an option to purchase land within a certain time at a certain price is exercised within the time limited, the person to whom it is given, or the person's assignee, may enforce it. n159

The early English rule that in the case of options equitable conversion on exercise of the option related back to the date of the option n160 is no longer the leading rule today. n161 Under what appears the majority rule where an option to purchase is exercised after the death of the optionor the exercise does not relate back to the date of death so the heirs take the proceeds.

§ 96.05(d) Termination of the Option.

The legal relationships arising out of an option are terminated either by the exercise of the option giving rise to a sales contract, by the giving of a deed, or by a surrender or forfeiture of the option. As a general rule, an option supported by a consideration is irrevocable before the expiration of the time agreed upon. n162 If the offer to sell is supported by a sufficient consideration it cannot be withdrawn prior to the expiration of the time specified. n163 Thus, an offeror who has become bound by taking a consideration for the promise to grant a specific time for acceptance or refusal, is powerless to retract the offer. It is a continuing offer until the expiration of the time mentioned, and its acceptance by the other party during that interval completes the contract and exhausts the option. n164 However, an option unsupported by a consideration may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance, if the party to whom it is given has knowledge of such withdrawal prior to acceptance. n165 If the offer by its terms fixes a time within which acceptance must be made, the offer is deemed withdrawn by the expiration of the time, n166 and the same is the case where the option is indeterminate as to time. n167 After the expiration of the time for acceptance, no contract exists which can be breached or enforced by either party. n168 The revocation operates only from the time it is received by the optionor. n169 The intention to abandon must be clearly shown. n170 The parties may contract to waive the provisions for rescission of the contract. n171 An offer by the optionee that departs from the terms of the option as to the time of payment of the purchase price amounts to a rejection of the option, and such option may not be revived by a subsequent unconditional acceptance. n172 Where an option given for a consideration is for a definite time, an extension of the option without consideration is a new agreement and the option is revocable before acceptance. n173 If the option becomes impossible of performance, such as through condemnation of the property, the option terminates and the optionor is not liable to the optionee in damages. n174

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 59. Option is a unilateral obligation. Goldstein v. Allen, 306 F.2d 711 (10th Cir. 1962); Stanley v. Like, 190 N.E.2d 697 (Ct. Common Pleas 1962). Statement "purchaser agrees to buy" created a contract, not an option. In re Gauthier's Estate, 493 P.2d 377 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972). An agreement for sale whereby the purchaser was required to make certain payments periodically, but was entitled to withdraw before the third payment forfeited the earlier payments, was an option. One Twenty Realty Co. v. Baer, 272 A.2d 377 (Md. 1971). See State v. New Jersey Zinc. Co., 193 A.2d 244 (N.J. 1963). See also Christopher, Options to Purchase Real Property in North Carolina, 44 N.C. L. Rev. 63 (1966). Suburban Improvement Co. v. Scott Lumber. Co., 59 F.2d 711 (4th Cir. 1932); Crowe v. Gary St. Bank, 123 F.2d 513 (7th Cir. 1941) (whether an instrument is an option is a matter of law); W. A. Drake, Inc. v. Comm'r Intl. Revenue, 145 F.2d 365 (10th Cir. 1944); In re Kofoed, 46 F. Supp. 118 (E.D. Wash. 1942); Erswell v. Ford, 100 So. 96 (Ala. 1924); Gadsen Homes, Inc. v. Ala. Financery 27 So. 2d 626 (Ala. 1946) (option may be assigned if not prohibited in contract); Wilson v. Spry, 223 S.W. 564 (Ark. 1920); Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942); Alegretti v. Gardner, 241 P. 408 (Cal. Ct. App. 1925); Seeburg v. El Royale Corp., 128 P.2d 362 (Cal. Ct. App. 1942); Skeritt Inv. Co. v. City of Englewood, 248 P. 6 (Colo. 1926); Mitchell v. Espinosa, 243 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1952); Foster v. Newport Nat'l Bank, 113 A. 908 (Del. Super. Ct. 1921); Frissell v. Nichols, 114 So. 431 (Fla. 1927); Mattox v. West, 21 S.E.2d 428 (Ga. 1942); Reeve v. Hicks, 28 S.E.2d 649 (Ga. 1944); Jones v. Vereen, 182 S.E. 627 (Ga. App. 1935); Keogh v. Peck, 147 N.E. 266 (Ill. 1925); Morris v. Goldthorp, 60 N.E.2d 857 (Ill. 1945); Huffer v. Crago, 216 Ill. App. 596 (1920); Keefer v. United Elec. Coal Co., 10 N.E.2d 836 (Ill. App. Ct. 1937); Robbs v. Illinois Rural Rehabilitation Corp., 40 N.E.2d 549 (Ill. App. Ct. 1942); Wilson v. Holub, 210 N.W. 593 (Iowa 1926); Smith v. Balbou, 277 S.W. 286 (Ky. 1925); Kinberger v. Drouet, 90 So. 367 (La. 1922); Glover v. Abney, 106 So. 735 (La. 1926); Morgan v. Forbes, 128 N.E. 792 (Mass. 1920); Bailey v. Grover, 213 N.W. 137 (Mich. 1927); Nu-Way Serv. Stations v. Vandenberg Bros. Oil Co., 278 N.W. 683 (Mich. 1938); Morrison v. Johnson, 181 N.W. 945 (Minn. 1921); Nielson v. Hendrickson, 210 P. 905 (Mont. 1922); Libby Lumber. Co. v. Pacific States Fire Ins. Co., 255 P. 340 (Mont. 1927); Gessleman v. Phillips, 193 N.W. 750 (Neb. 1923); Spitzli v. Guth, 183 N.Y.S. 743 (1920); Farone v. Hall, 220 N.Y.S. 1 (1927); H. C. King Motor Sales Corp. v. Peterson, 201 N.Y.S. 510 (1923); State v. Crum, 292 N.W. 392 (N.D. 1940); Landrum v. Jordan, 220 P. 182 (Okla. 1924); Strong v. Moore, 245 P. 505 (Or. 1922); McHale v. Reilly, 117 A. 912 (Pa. 1922); Branstetter v. Hook, 251 S.W. 257 (Tex. Civ. App. 1923); Chournos v. Evona Inv. Co., 94 P.2d 470 (Utah 1939); Durfee House Furnishing Co. v. Great A. & P. Tea Co., 136 A. 379 (Vt. 1927) (option contract requires acceptance); Ackerman v. Carpenter, 29 A.2d 922 (Vt. 1943); Skeen v. Clinchfield Coal Corp., 119 S.E. 89 (Va. 1923); West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. v. Cooper, 106 S.E. 55 (W. Va. 1921); Vogt v. Ganlisle Holding Co., 15 N.W.2d 91 (Minn. 1944) (In Minnesota an agreement to sell realty at any time up to Dec. 1, 1942 and containing recitals if the "second party" should purchase was an option, not a contract to sell.); Samonds v. Cloninger, 127 S.E. 706 (N.C. 1925) (a continuing offer to sell during entire period); Edwards Lumber. & Land Co. v. Smith, 132 S.E. 593 (N.C. 1926) (A contract for sale on condition that purchaser accept offer on or before a certain day is an option.); see Noel Hauser, Some Aspects of the Law of Option Contracts, 23 Brook. L. Rev. 69 (Dec. 1956).

(n2)Footnote 60. Contract conditioned upon purchaser making down payment by a certain date was a mere option. Parks v. Jacobs, 129 S.E.2d 884 (N.C. 1963). The critical difference between an option and a contract is essentially that the option imposed no binding obligation on the option holder to complete the purchase. State, By Comr. of Transp. v. Baker's Basin Realty Co., 350 A.2d 236 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1975). The difference between an option and a contract is that in an option no one is obligated to buy. Grasman v. Jelsema, 246 N.W.2d 322 (Mich. Ct. App. 1976). Smith v. Tomlin, 1 N.E.2d 297 (Ind. App. 1936); In re Levy's Estate, 8 N.Y.S.2d 858 (1938); Assoc. Truck Lines, Inc. v. Baer, 77 N.W.2d 884 (Mich. 1956) (distinguishing between a first call and an option); see also Beets v. Tyler, 290 S.W.2d 76 (Mo. 1956); Wurdemann v. Hjelm, 102 N.W. 2d 811 (Minn. 1960) (Transaction was lease option and not a contract of purchase where there was no evidence of agreed purchase price other than that contained in the option agreement.); Cortese v. Connors, 135 N.E.2d 28 (N.Y. 1956) (A first call provision is not met until the lessee rejects an offer the lesser is willing to accept.).

(n3)Footnote 61. Keefer v. United Elec. Coal Cos., 10 N.E.2d 836 (Ill. App. Ct. 1937); Robbs v. Illinois Rural Rehabilitation Corp., 40 N.E.2d 549 (Ill. App. Ct. 1942); Sulzberger v. Steinhauer, 209 N.W. 68 (Mich. 1926); Farone v. Hall, 220 N.Y.S. 1 (1927); In re Cardon's Estate, 122 A. 234 (Pa. 1923); Whitworth v. Enitai Lumber. Co., 220 P.2d 328 (Wash. 1950); see Stark v. Bauer Cooperage Co., 3 F.2d 214 (6th Cir. 1926) (signature by optionee does not make a bilateral contract).

(n4)Footnote 62. Colligan v. Smith, 366 S.W.2d 816 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963). An option is not itself a sale but a right to exercise a privilege. Clore v. Frederick, 552 S.W.2d 239 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977). The seller could not reject an option because the description was too vague, if he could personally supply the correct one. Brady v. Fausett, 546 P.2d 246 (Utah 1976). Lively v. Tabor, 107 S.W.2d 62 (Mo. 1937); Ackerman v. Carpenter, 29 A.2d 922 (Vt. 1943).

(n5)Footnote 63. An option is not itself a sale but a right to exercise a privilege. Clore v. Frederick, 552 S.W.2d 239 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977). An option to purchase in a lease is neither a giving of a new lease on a n extension or renewal of the old. Mister Donut v. Kemp. 368 Mass. 220, 330 N.E.2d 810, 89 A.L.R.2d 896. Options are to be construed in favor of the maker. Ferguson v. Phillips, 150 S.E.2d 518 (N.C. 1966). In cases of ambiguity construction as a contract rather than an option is favored. Wood v. Wood, 224 S.E.2d 159 (Va. 1976). Denco, Inc. v. Belk, 97 So. 2d 261 (Fla. 1957) (option to purchase is not affected by the non-claim statute on death of the optionor); Gaskins v. Walz, 97 N.E.2d 798 (Ill. 1951); Rivers v. Oak Lawn Sugar Co., 27 So. 118 (La. 1900); Strong v. Moore, 245 P. 505 (Or. 1922); Sizer v. Clark, 93 N.W. 539 (Wis. 1903).

(n6)Footnote 64. Distinguishing between an option, where upon exercise the owner is required to sell and a pre-emption, where the owner is required to sell and a pre-emption, where the owner need not sell, but if the owner does, must first offer to the holder. Smerchek v. Hamilton, 606 P.2d 491 (Kan. Ct. App. 1980). Hopwood v. McCausland, 94 N.W. 469 (Iowa 1903); Rampton v. Dobson, 136 N.W. 682 (Iowa 1912).

(n7)Footnote 65. Greenspun v. Roos, 48 F. Supp. 281 (E.D.N.Y. 1942); Montgomery v. Waldeck, 2 Alaska 581 (1905); Swift v. Erwin, 148 S.W. 267 (Ark. 1912); Seeburg v. El Royale Corp., 128 P.2d 362 (Cal. Ct. App. 1942); Gard v. Thompson, 123 P. 497 (Idaho 1912); Myers v. J. J. Stone & Son, 102 N.W. 507 (Iowa 1905); Cameron v. Shumway, 113 N.W. 287 (Mich. 1907); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Trogden v. Williams, 56 S.E. 865 (N.C. 1907); Pollock v. Brookover, 53 S.E. 795 (W. Va. 1906).

(n8)Footnote 66. Booker v. Hall, 548 S.E.2d 391 (Ga. App. 2001); Stuart v. D'Ascenz, 22 P.3d 40 (Colo. App. 2000).

(n9)Footnote 67. Riley v. Compeau Homes (Texas), Inc., 808 S.W.2d 184 (Tex. App. 1991).

(n10)Footnote 68. A purported sales contract "permeated with unresolved provisions and contingencies" is an option, not a binding contract. Zwirn v. Gelvan, 268 So. 2d 539 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1972). W. A. Drake, Inc. v. Comm'r Internal Revenue, 145 F.2d 365 (10th Cir. 1944); Stelson v. Haigler, 165 P. 265 (Colo. 1917); Hanscom v. Blanchard, 105 A. 291 (Me. 1918); Fargo v. Wade, 142 P. 830 (Or. 1914); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co. v. B.S. Rhea & Son, 123 F. 9 (6th Cir. 1903); Parks v. Lyons, 64 S.E.2d 123 (S.C. 1951) (An option is nothing more than a continuing offer to sell; but until it is accepted it does not become a contract of sale, for it lacks the element of agreement between the minds of the parties. It is only when there has been an acceptance of a proposal to sell that the vendee becomes in any sense the equitable owner of the subject matter of the option.); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890) ("[The owner] does not sell his land; he does not then agree to sell it, but he does then sell something, viz., the right or privilege to buy at the election, or option, of the other party. The second party gets in proesenti, not lands, or an agreement that he shall have lands, but he does get something of value, that is the right to call for and receive lands if he elects."); Clark v. Am. Developing & Mining Co., 72 P. 978 (Mont. 1903) ('There is a decided distinction between an option to purchase, which may be exercised or not by the prospective purchaser, and an absolute contract of sale, wherein one of the parties agrees to sell and the other to buy certain property, the sale to be completed within an agreed time. In the latter case, of course, the mere lapse of time with a contract unperformed, does not entitle either party to refuse to complete it, and therefore time is not of the essence of the contract. But where the contract is merely an option, generally without consideration, and especially as applied to mining property, of course ...time is of its essence ...') (citation omitted); see Suburban Imp. Co. v. Scott Lumber Co., 59 F.2d 711 (4th Cir. 1932); Libby Lumber Co. v. P. States Fire Ins. Co., 255 P. 340 (Mont. 1927).

(n11)Footnote 69. Real estate broker's agreement held merely an agreement to negotiate and not a binding contract upon acceptance. Devereaux v. Harper, 26 Cal. Rptr. 837 (1962). Option terminates on death.Inglehart v. Jenifer, 371 A.2d 453 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1977). Gearhart v. W. Lumber Co., 90 S.E.2d 10 (Ga. 1955).

(n12)Footnote 70. See John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Behr, 295 N.W. 436 (Iowa 1940).

(n13)Footnote 71. Russell v. Golden Rule Mm. Co., 159 P.2d 776 (Ariz. 1945).

(n14)Footnote 72. An option is sufficiently definite for specific performance if the price can be determined by the court without any new expression of the parties. Stockwell v. Lindeman, 40 Cal. Rptr. 555 (1964). An agreement merely giving a first chance if the owner desires to seel land is too indefinite for specific performance. Rolfs v. Mason, 119 S.E.2d 238 (Va. 1961). It was held a repurchase option not a mortgage where original negotiations were for sale, the buyer paid taxes and the purchase price was not significantly less than the true value. Swallow Ranches, Inc. v. Bidart, 525 F.2d 995 (9th Cir. 1975). Barnes v. Rea, 68 A. 836 (Pa. 1908); McHenry v. Mitchell, 68 A. 729 (Pa. 1908). See Corbin v. Hume-Sinclair Coal Mining Co., 237 S.W.2d 81 (Mo. 1951).

(n15)Footnote 73. A trustee or an executor has no power to give an option even if he has a power to sell. Adler v. Adler, 118 S.E.2d 456 (Ga. 1961). Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922).

(n16)Footnote 74. See Watts v. England, 269 S.W. 585 (Ark. 1925); White v. Bank of Hanford, 83 P. 698 (Cal. 1906); Stelson v. Haigler, 165 P. 265 (Colo. 1917); Hodnett v. Mann, 73 S.E. 1082 (Ga. Ct. App. 1912); Schoonover v. Petcina, 100 N.W. 490 (Iowa 1904); Fields v. Vizard Inv. Co., 182 S.W. 934 (Ky. 1916); Union Sawmill Co. v. Lake Lumber Co., 44 So. 1000 (La. 1907); Hanscom v. Blanchard, 105 A. 291 (Me. 1918); Grabenhorst v. Nicodemus, 42 Md. 236 (1875); Womack v. Coleman, 100 N.W. 9 (Minn. 1904); Dunaway v. Day, 63 S.W. 731 (Mo. 1901); Darr v.

Mummert, 77 N.W. 767 (Neb. 1899); Alston v. Connell, 53 S.E. 292 (N.C. 1906); Scott v. Merrill, 146 P. 99 (Or. 1915); Swank v. Fretts, 59 A. 264 (Pa. 1904); First Fed Sav. & Loan Assn v. Wick, 322 N.W.2d 860 (S.D. 1982); Gira v. Harris, 86 N.W. 624 (S.D. 1901); Runck v. Dimmick, 111 S.W. 779 (Tex. Civ. App. 1908); Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. McDonnell, 73 P. 484 (Wash. 1903); Nelson v. Stephens, 82 N.W. 163 (Wis. 1900).

(n17)Footnote 75. See generally Gutierrez del Arroyo v. Graham, 227 U.S. 181 (1913); Smith v. Post, 138 P. 705 (Cal. 1914); Ellis v. Bryant, 48 S.E. 352 (Ga. 1904); Kessler v. Pruitt, 93 P. 965 (Idaho 1908); Golden v. Lewis, 195 S.W. 144 (Ky. 1917); Whited v. Calhoun, 47 So. 415 (La. 1908); Abel v. Gill, 145 N.W. 637 (Neb. 1914), modified, 147 N.W. 686 (Neb. 1914); Benedict v. Pincus, 84 N.E. 284 (N.Y. 1908); Davis v. Martin, 59 S.E. 700 (N.C. 1907); Heath v. Huffhines, 152 S.W. 176 (Tex. Civ. App. 1912); Roberts v. Braffett, 92 P. 789 (Utah 1907); Wright v. Suydam, 131 P. 239 (Wash. 1913); Monongah Coal & Coke Co. v. Fleming, 26 S.E. 201 (W. Va. 1896).

(n18)Footnote 76. Jenkins v. Locke, 3 App. D.C. 485 (1894); Boucher v. Van Buskirk, 9 Ky. 345 (1820).

(n19)Footnote 77. Smith v. Post, 138 P. 705 (Cal. 1914); Mohr Park Manor Inc. v. Mohr, 424 P.2d 101 (Nev. 1967); Ryland Group Inc. v. Wills, 331 S.E.2d 399 (Va. 1985); Tate v. Wood, 289 S.E.2d 432 (W. Va. 1982).

(n20)Footnote 78. Skeen v. Clinchfield Coal Corp., 119 S.E. 89 (Va. 1923).

(n21)Footnote 79. Le Blanc v. Watson, 13 F.2d 76 (5th Cir. 1926); Watts v. England, 269 S.W. 585 (Ark. 1925); Barney v. Curtis, 218 P. 190 (Idaho 1923); Rooney v. Dayton Hudson Corp., 246 N.W.2d 170 (Minn. 1976); Zitzow v. Diederich, 337 N.W.2d 799 (N.D. 1983); McCreight v. Girardo, 287 P.2d 414 (Or. 1955); Turner v. Hall, 104 S.E. 861 (Va. 1920); Fechner v. Finseth, 179 N.W. 701 (N.D. 1920) (An earnest money contract of sale is not an option.).

(n22)Footnote 80. Ballard v. Friedman, 187 N.W. 518 (Minn. 1922); Cole v. Haynes, 62 S.2d 779 (Miss. 1953).

(n23)Footnote 81. DeFeyter v. Riley, 606 P.2d 453 (Colo. Ct. App. 1979); State by Commr. of Transp. v. Bakers Basin Realty Co., 376 A.2d 1189 (N.J. 1977); Tabor v. Ragle, 526 S.W.2d 670 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975). See Huffhines v. Bourland, 269 S.W. 184 (Tex. Civ. App. 1926).

(n24)Footnote 82. Wilson v. Holub, 210 N.W. 593 (Iowa 1926).

(n25)Footnote 83. Hardesty v. Martin Ebersbach Co., 294 F. 5 (6th Cir. 1923); Gray v. Yarbrough, 215 P. 914 (Cal. Ct. App. 1923); Partee v. People, 20 So. 2d 73 (Miss. 1944). See Greenough v. Willcox, 213 N.W. 175 (Mich. 1927). Cf. Smith v. Blodget, 201 P. 584 (Cal. 1921).

(n26)Footnote 84. Sherlock v. Bradley Polytechnic Instn.,198 N.W. 756 (Wis. 1924).

(n27)Footnote 85. No restraint on alienation permitted in conveyance of a fee simple. An attempted reservation of first call in grantor was invalid. Smith v. Mitchell, 261 S.E.2d 231 (N.C. Ct. App. 1980). Wilkins v. Ferguson, 310 So. 2d 879 (Ala. 1975).

(n28)Footnote 86. Raffensperger v. Van. Kooy, 51 N.W.2d 488 (Wis. 1952).

(n29)Footnote 87. Giving a reasonable time to exercise option to buy where lease is silent. Sid Farber Hempstead Corp. v. Buckley, 317 N.Y.S.2d 30 (1970); Ruff v. Schmeichel, 219 N.W.2d 823 (N.D. 1974). Time if specified of essence in an option. Roberts v. Canning, 455 P.2d 302 (Okla. 1969); Mayer v. Boston Met. Airport, 244 N.E.2d 568 (Mass. 1969). Aspinwall v. Ryan, 226 P.2d 814 (Or. 1951); Fleischman v. Zimmermann, 45 N.W.2d 616 (Wis. 1951).

(n30)Footnote 88. Koplin v. Bennett, 155 So. 2d 568 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1963). Option contemplating a down payment is not binding until payment is made. Caldwell v. Dalaray Mines, Inc., 156 P.2d 52 (Cal. Ct. App. 1945). Option to renew at terms to be agreed upon is enforceable. Moolemar v. Co-Build Companies, Inc., 354 F. Supp. 980 (E.D. Pa. 1973); Cassinari v. Mapes, 542 P.2d 1069 (Nev. 1975); Playmate Club Inc. v. Country Clubs, Inc., 462

S.W.2d 890 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1970); Drees Farming Assn. v. Thompson, 246 N.W.2d 883 (N.D. 1976) (Said to be the modern but still the minority view). Lease containing an option is sufficient consideration for option. Farris v. Interstate Enterprises, Inc., 270 So. 2d 230 (La. Ct. App. 1972). Option signed under seal is valid without consideration. Johnson v. Norton Housing Authority, 375 N.E.2d 1209 (Mass. 1978). One dollar held sufficient consideration for option. Bobo v. Bigbee, 548 P.2d 224 (Okla. 1976). Estero Bay Estates v. Giddens, 14 F.2d 171 (S.D. Fla. 1926); Donahue v. Davis, 68 So. 2d 163 (Fla. 1953); Wolfe v. Deaton, 169 S.E.2d 311 (Ga. 1969); Berryman v. Kmoch, 559 P.2d 790 (Kan. 1977); Ford v. McGregor, 234 S.W.2d 493 (Ky. 1950); Bailey v. Grover, 213 N.W. 137 (Mich. 1927); Morrison v. Johnson, 181 N.W. 945 (Minn. 1921) (one dollar and other valuable consideration sufficient); Normile v. Miller, 326 S.E.2d 11 (N.C. 1985); Am. Handkerchief Corp. v. Frannat Realty Co., 109 A.2d 793 (N.J. 1955); Diamond v. Davis, 38 N.Y.S.2d 103 (1942); Kucera v. Kavan 84 N.W.2d 207 (Neb. 1957); Mohr Park Manor, Inc. v. Mohr, 424 P.2d 101 (Nev. 1967); Aspinwall v. Ryan, 226 P.2d 814 (Or. 1951); Syrovy v. Alpine Resources, Inc., 859 P.2d 51 (Wash. 1993); Bidache, Inc. v. Martin, 899 P.2d 872 (Wyo. 1995); Wayne Woods Land Co. v. Beeman, 178 N.W. 696 (Mich. 1920) (one dollar and other valuable consideration sufficient); Windiate v. Lorman, 211 N.W. 62 (Mich. 1926); Sulzberger v. Steinhauer, 209 N.W. 68 (Mich. 1926) (Consideration may be nominal.); Friedman v. Tappan Dev. Corp., 120 A.2d 633 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1956) (A gratuitous option is revocable until acceptance.); Kelley v. Coldren, 290 S.W.2d 424 (Ark. 1956).

(n31)Footnote 89. Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U.S. 252 (1882); Ford v. McGregor, 234 S.W.2d 493 (Ky. 1950); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Litz v. Goosling, 19 S.W. 527 (Ky. 1892); Gustin v. Union Sch. Dist. of Bay City, 54 N.W. 156 (Mich. 1893); Morrison v. Johnson, 181 N.W. 945 (Minn. 1921); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Hawralty v. Warren, 18 N.J. Eq. 124 (1866); Levin v. Dietz, 87 N.E. 454 (N.Y. 1909); Bryant Timber Co. v. Wilson, 65 S.E. 932 (N.C. 1909); Friendly v. Elwert, 105 P. 404 (Or. 1909) (overruled on different point of law); Cummins v. Beavers, 48 S.E. 891 (Va. 1904); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W. Va. 1888), modified, Randolph v. Koury Corp., 312 S.E.2d 759 (W. Va).

(n32)Footnote 90. Hogan v. Richardson, 266 S.W. 299 (Ark. 1924); Braselton v. Vokal, 200 P. 670 (Cal. Ct. App. 1921); North Confidence Mining & Dev. Co. v. Morrice, 204 P. 851 (Cal. Ct. App. 1922); Morrison v. Johnson, 181 N.W. 945 (Minn. 1921); Hollingsworth v. Bilbo, 51 So. 2d 229 (Miss. 1951); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921); Fitzgerald v. Boyle, 193 P. 1109 (Utah 1920).

(n33)Footnote 91. See Leases and Options, 8 DePaul L. Rev 385 (Spring/Summer 1959). An option to purchase is renewed upon an extension of the lease absent provisions to the contrary. Shuford Dev. Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 449 F.2d 429 (5th Cir. 1971). Smith v. Bangham, 104 P. 689 (Cal. 1909); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. App. 1907); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Bryant Timber Co. v. Wilson, 65 S.E. 932 (N.C. 1909); Carter v. Hook, 83 S.E. 386 (Va. 1914); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 748 (W. Va. 1888), modified, Randolph v. Koury Corp., 312 S.E.2d 759 (W. Va. 1984); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904); see Clark v. Cagle, 82 S.E. 21 (Ga. 1914) (a contract held mutual and not a mere option); Turman v. Smarr, 89 S.E. 214 (Ga. 1916) (Where a lease at a specified annual rental to lessee contained privilege of purchasing at such amount as might be offered by another, the option was supported by general consideration for entire contract and was not unilateral.).

(n34)Footnote 92. Heffernan v. Chester-Cambridge Bank & Trust Co., 27 Del. Co. 578 (Pa. Com. Pl. 1938).

(n35)Footnote 93. Braselton v. Vokal, 200 P. 670 (Cal. Ct. App. 1921).

(n36)Footnote 94. Feisthamel v. Campbell, 205 P. 25 (Cal. Ct. App. 1921); Blaffer v. Gulf Pipe Line Co., 218 S.W. 89 (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) (An option is valid and enforceable although there is no independent consideration if it is a part of a contract supported by sufficient consideration.).

(n37)Footnote 95. Cahaba Coal Co. v. Veitch, 65 So. 75 (Ala. 1914); Raymer v. Hobbs, 146 P. 906 (Cal. Ct. App. 1915); Corbett v. Cronkhite, 87 N.E. 874 (Ill. 1909); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Stamper v. Combs, 176 S.W. 178 (Ky. 1915); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921); Hardy v. Ward, 64 S.E. 171

(N.C. 1909).

(n38)Footnote 96. Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Bryant Timber Co. v. Wilson, 65 S.E. 932 (N.C. 1909).

(n39)Footnote 97. Smith v. Bangham, 104 P. 689 (Cal. 1909).

(n40)Footnote 98. Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942); Smith v. Bangham, 104 P. 689 (Cal. 1909); Lovett v. E. Oil Co., 70 S.E. 707 (W. Va. 1911); Rust v. Fitzhugh, 112 N.W. 508 (Wis. 1907); see Adams v. Peabody Coal Co., 82 N.E. 645 (Ill. 1907).

(n41)Footnote 99. Rude v. Levy, 96 P. 560 (Colo. 1908); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921); Great Western Oil Co. v. Carpenter, 95 S.W. 57 (Tex. Civ. App. 1906).

(n42)Footnote 100. Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942).

(n43)Footnote 101. Wharton v. Meyers, 21 N.E.2d 772 (Ill. 1939).

(n44)Footnote 102. Kay v. Spencer, 213 P. 571 (Wyo. 1923).

(n45)Footnote 103. Lewis v. Bollinger, 187 N.Y.S. 563 (1921); In re Levy's Estate, 8 N.Y.S.2d 858 (1938); Thomason v. Bescher, 97 S.E. 654 (N.C. 1918); Samonds v. Cloninger, 127 S.E. 706 (N.C. 1925); Casto v. Cook, 112 S.E. 502 (W. Va. 1922).

(n46)Footnote 104. Willard v. Tayloe, 75 U.S. 557 (1869); Horgan v. Russell, 140 N.W. 99 (N.D. 1913), modified, Phoenix Iron & Steel v. Wilkoff Co., 253 F. 165 (6th Cir. 1918); Yerkes v. Richards, 26 A. 221 (Pa. 1893); Watkins v. Robertson, 54 S.E. 33 (Va. 1906).

(n47)Footnote 105. No specific performance of an option unless terms are specific or a means is provided for fixing terms definitely. Myers v. Lovetinsky, 189 N.W.2d 571 (Iowa 1971). Rude v. Levy, 96 P. 560 (Colo. 1908); Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co. v. Devine, 116 A. 239 (Conn. 1922); Crandall v. Willig, 46 N.E. 755 (Ill. 1897); Corbett v. Cronkhite, 87 N.E. 874 (Ill. 1909); Graybill v. Braugh, 17 S.E. 558 (Va. 1893), overruled in part, Watkins v. Robertson, 54 S.E. 33 (Va. 1906).

(n48)Footnote 106. A new option does not require new consideration. Wolfe v. Deaton, 169 S.E.2d 311 (Ga. 1969). An option holder is entitled to damages for breach of option though the holder had not exercised his option. Fullington v. M. Penn Phillips Co., 395 P.2d 124 (Or. 1964). Broadwell v. Smith, 108 S.E. 609 (Ga. 1921).

(n49)Footnote 107. Braig v. Frye, 179 N.W. 635 (Iowa 1920); Morrison v. Johnson, 181 N.W. 945 (Minn. 1921).

(n50)Footnote 108. Cummins v. Beavers, 48 S.E. 891 (Va. 1904); see note Harris v. Murphy, 25 S.E. 708 (N.C. 1896).

(n51)Footnote 109. Haney v. Denny, 193 N.E.2d 648 (Ind. Ct. App. 1963). State v. New Jersey Zinc Co., 193 A.2d 244 (N.J. 1963). Harden v. Vermont Dept. of Taxes, 352 A.2d 685 (Vt. 1976). Admitting parol evidence to establish that an option to repurchase was not alienable. Masterson v. Sine, 65 Cal. Rptr. 545 (1968). But admitting presumption that option is fully alienable. Option to purchase conveys no right to property prior to exercise. Coons v. Baird, 265 N.E.2d 727 (Ind. Ct. App. 1970). Lease with option creates no estate. Fourth Nat. Bank in Wichita v. Hill, 314 P.2d 312 (Kan. 1957). Neely v. Sheppard, 196 S.E. 452 (Ga. 1938) (An option to purchase though not an interest in lands was held under the statute within the statute of frauds.); Harwood v. Harwood, 105 N.E.2d 719 (Ill. 1952); Fried v. Barad, 530 N.E.2d 93 (Ill. App. Ct. 1998); Hilker v. Curdes, 133 N.E. 851 (Ind. Ct. App. 1922); Butsch v. Swallow, 134 N.E. 877 (Ind. Ct. App. 1922); Lacey v. Morgan, 282 N.E.2d 344 (Ind. Ct. App. 1972); Roberts v. Armstrong, 231 S.W. 371 (Tex.

Comm'n App. 1921); Knox v. Brown, 277 S.W. 91 (Tex. Comm'n App. 1925); Durfee House Furnishing Co. v. Great A. & P. Tea Co., 136 A. 379 (Vt. 1927); Buchannon v. Billings, 238 A.2d 638 (Vt. 1968); Krupinsky v. Birsky, 278 A.2d 757 (Vt. 1971); McGuirk v. Ward, 55 A.2d 610 (Vt. 1947); W. Va. Pulp & Paper Co. v. Cooper, 106 S.E. 55 (W. Va. 1921); Knight v. Chamberlain, 315 P.2d 273 (Utah 1957) (Minority view that an option to purchase is an interest in realty within the meaning of the statute of frauds.).

(n52)Footnote 110. Ludy v. Zurnwalt, 259 P. 52 (Cal. Ct. App. 1927).

(n53)Footnote 111. An unexercised option to purchase does not create a property right in the realty. Haney v. Denny, 193 N.E. 648 (Ind. Ct. App. 1963). Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore, 73 N.E. 906 (Ind. 1905); Gamble v. Garlock, 133 N.W. 175 (Minn. 1911); Kingsley v. Kressly, 111 P. 385 (Or. 1910); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Herndon v. Armstrong, 38 P.2d 44 (Or. 1934); Rockwell v. Nelson, 970 P.2d 666 (Or. Ct. App. 1998).

(n54)Footnote 112. Caldwell v. Frazier, 68 P. 1076 (Kan. 1902); Gilbert v. Port, 28 Ohio St. 276 (1876); Sprague v. Schotte, 87 P. 1046 (Or. 1906); contra 23 Tracts of Land v. U.S., 177 F.2d 967 (6th Cir. 1949).

(n55)Footnote 113. Options are subject to strict rules of construction against the optionee. Kadansky v. Fickett, 294 N.E.2d 262 (Ill. 1973). Kenyon v. Suburban Realty Corp., 139 N.E. 172 (Mass. 1923).

(n56)Footnote 114. Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Brooks v. Yawkey, 200 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1953) (The optionee could not enforce the option if the land is taken by condemnation before acceptance of the option.); Larson v. Trachsel, 577 P.2d 928 (Or. 1978).

(n57)Footnote 115. 23 Tracts of Land v. U.S., 177 F.2d 967 (6th Cir. 1949); but see Smith v. Loewenstein, 34 N.E. 159 (Ohio 1893) (repudiates Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox Eq. Cas. 167 (1785)).

(n58)Footnote 116. In re Powell's Appeal, 123 A.2d 650 (Pa. 1956); Shaffer v. Flick, 520 A.2d 50 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1987).

(n59)Footnote 117. See Note, Eminent Domain--Options--Rights of Optionee to Compensation in a Condemnation Proceeding When Option Is Exercised After the Taking, 14 Wayne L. Rev. 660 (1968). Brooks v. Yawkey, 200 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1953); J. Levey, Vendor and Purchaser--Requisites and Validity of Contract--Whether or Not an Option to Purchase Becomes a Nullity When the Land is Expropriated Prior to Exercise of the Option, 32 Chi.-Kent L. Rev. 174 (1954).

(n60)Footnote 118. Option to purchase in lease runs with the land. Valley Oil Co. v. Barberian, 183 N.E.2d 109 (Mass. 1962); Guarantee Title & Trust Co. v. Moores, 68 N.E.2d 365; Humble Oil & Ref. Co. v. Lennon, 182 A.2d 306 (R.I. 1962). Connolly v. Des Moines & C. Iowa Ry. Co., 68 N.W.2d 320 (Iowa 1955).

(n61)Footnote 119. Optionee is not an "owner" of land prior to the exercise of the option. Hayward Lbr. & Inv. Co. v. Starley, 12 P.2d 66 (Cal. Ct. App. 1932). An option to purchase is an interest in land under the statute of frauds. Bratt v. Peterson, 143 N.W.2d 538 (Wis. 1966). Reeve v. Hicks, 28 S.E.2d 649 (Ga. 1944); Martin v. Schindley, 442 S.E.2d 239 (Ga. 1994).

(n62)Footnote 120. Lease containing option to purchase creates a contractual right not an interest in land. Gautier v. Laprof, 91 So. 2d 324 (Fla. 1956). Moore v. Kirgan, 250 S.W.2d 759 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952).

(n63)Footnote 121. The holder of an unexercised option has such an interest in the land that he may incur a mechanic's lien thereon which is superior to the purchase money mortgage executed when the option is subsequently executed after the making of the improvements but before the notice of the lien is filed. Sontag v. Abbott, 344 P.2d 961 (Colo. 1959), 58 Mich. L. Rev 1072 (April 1960), Albert S. Eastwood Lumber Co. v. Britto, 155 A. 354 (R.I. 1931); contra Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v. Starley, 12 P.2d 66 (Cal. Ct. App. 1932); Martin-Welch Hardware & Plumbing

Co. v. Moor, 16 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. Ct. App. 1929).

(n64)Footnote 122. The exercise of the option converts it into a contract of sale. Atlantic Richfield Company v. Couture, 344 N.E.2d 917 (Mass. App. Ct. 1976); Indreland v. Martinez, 451 P.2d 92 (Mont. 1968). Smith v. Tomlin, 1 N.E.2d 297 (Ind. Ct. App. 1936).

(n65)Footnote 123. An option becomes a bilateral contract upon acceptance. Bobo v. Bigbee, 548 P.2d 224 (Okla. 1976). An option to purchase in a lease is enforceable against a transferee of the lessor. Zale Corporation v. Decorama, Inc., 470 S.W.2d 406 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971). Merrion v. Scorup-Somerville Cattle Co., 134 F.2d 473 (10th Cir. 1943); Carr v. Rawlings, 123 S.E. 875 (Ga. 1924); Walton's Exec. v. Franks, 228 S.W. 1025 (Ky. 1921); Kenyon v. Suburban Realty Corp., 139 N.E. 172 (Mass. 1923); Ludwig v. Hall, 208 N.W. 436 (Mich. 1926); Galbraith v. Buffalo Vegetable Mktg. Co., 217 N.Y.S. 737 (1926); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); W. Va. Power & Transmission Co. v. Voight, 114 S.E. 138 (W. Va. 1922).

(n66)Footnote 124. Where lease contains an option to purchase, the acceptance of the option terminates the lessor-lessee relationship and substitutes new relationship of vendor and purchaser. Charles Young Constr., Inc. v. Look, 508 F.2d 275 (9th Cir. 1973). Oral acceptance converts option into contract. Steele v. Northup, 143 N.W.2d 302 (Iowa 1966). When the option to purchase is exercised the relationship changes to vendor-vendee from landlord and tenant. Amann v. Frederick, 257 N.W.2d 436 (N.D. 1977). Option need not be exercised in writing. Pleger v. Bouman, 233 N.W.2d 82 (Mich. Ct. App. 1975). Cary v. Kautzman, 53 N.W.2d 99 (N.D. 1952) (The lease was a contract from the beginning when the down payment was initially made.).

(n67)Footnote 125. Walker v. Bradley, 153 N.Y.S. 686 (1915) (relates back).

(n68)Footnote 126. An option contract is not divisible unless so stated. Kastner v. Dalton Dev., Inc., 122 N.W.2d 183 (Minn. 1963). It was held in Draper v. Gochman, 400 S.W.2d 545 (Tex. 1966), that where a tenant had a first option to purchase, if the landlord desired to sell, such option was not exercisable where the land had been sold on foreclosure of a mortgage. Instead, the purchaser at the mortgage sale took the land subject to the lease and also subject to the option to purchase. Breach of lease covenant does not void option to purchase unless lease so provides. Phillips v. Hill,555 P.2d 1043 (Okla. 1976). Crancer v. Lareau, 1 F.2d 117 (8th Cir. 1924); Merrion v. Scorup-Somerville Cattle Co., 134 F.2d 473 (10th Cir. 1943); Asbury v. Cochran, 9 So. 2d 887 (Ala. 1942); Ludy v. Zumwalt, 259 P. 52 (Cal. Ct. App. 1927); Orlando Realty Board Bldg. Corp. v. Hilpert, 113 So. 100 (Fla. 1927); Frissell v. Nichols, 114 So. 431 (Fla. 1927); Gaskins v. Walz, 97 N.E.2d 798 (Ill. 1951); Hilker v. Curdes, 133 N.E. 851 (Ind. 1922); Conn v. Heaps, 216 N.W. 73 (Iowa 1928); Redden v. Bausch, 204 P. 752 (Kan. 1922); Asher v. Roberts, 266 S.W. 1089 (Ky. 1924); Beardslee v. Grindley, 210 N.W. 486 (Mich. 1926); McLear v. Balmat, 186 N.Y.S. 180 (1921); Galbraith v. Buffalo Vegetable Mktg. Co., 217 N.Y.S. 737 (1926); Hudson v. Cozart, 102 S.E. 278 (N.C. 1920); Samonds v. Cloninger, 127 S.E. 706 (N.C. 1925); Landrum v. Jordan, 229 P. 182 (Okla. 1924); Hartman v. Selling, 189 P. 887 (Or. 1920); Grey v. Nickey Bros., 271 F. 249 (5th Cir. 1921) (Acceptance was unequivocal where telegram stated: "Will exercise our option. Mail deed with draft. Answer.").

(n69)Footnote 127. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen, 146 F. 8 (8th Cir. 1906); Greenspun v. Roos, 48 F. Supp. 281 (E.D.N.Y. 1942); Fields & Combs v. Vizard Inv. Co., 182 S.W. 934 (Ky. 1916); Agar v. Streeter, 150 N.W. 160 (Mich. 1914); Kottler v. Martin, 85 S.E.2d 314 (N.C. 1955) (Tender is not essential in exercising an option to buy.).

(n70)Footnote 128. After exercise of option to purchase, tenant's possession is that of vendee. Ruark v. Peterson, 491 P.2d 75 (Colo. Ct. App. 1971). Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. United States, 98 F.2d 609 (4th Cir. 1938); Onekama Realty Co. v. Carothers, 129 P.2d 918 (Ariz. 1942); Taylor v. Hartman, 87 A.2d 785 (Pa. 1952).

(n71)Footnote 129. Kastner v. Dalton Dev., Inc., 122 N.W.2d 183 (Minn. 1963). Where, in a contract, the purchaser is given time to procure loan and, if a loan commitment is not given within 30 days, the contract is void and the escrow deposit returned, this is an option, not a sales contract. White v. Miller, 518 S.W.2d 383 (Tex. Civ. App.

1974). An option requires unqualified, absolute, unconditional, unequivocal, unambiguous and positive acceptance, without reservation, to be effectual. Exercise of option requires strict compliance with its terms. Oshtemo Tp, Kalamazoo Country v. City of Kalamazoo, 257 N.W.2d 260 (Mich. Ct. App. 1977). Merger of lessor into another corporation held not a sale under the terms of a first right of refusal. Torrey Delivery, Inc. v. Chautauqua Truck Sales & Service, Inc., 366 N.Y.S.2d 506 (1975). Hunter Inv., Inc. v. Divine Engr., Inc., 83 N.W.2d 921 (Iowa 1957); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922).

(n72)Footnote 130. Kastner v. Dalton Dev., Inc., 122 N.W.2d 183 (Minn. 1963). An option to purchase given in a will must be exercised within the time provided in the will unless prevented by an act of the optionor. In re Estate of Beaver, 206 N.W.2d 692 (Iowa 1973). Rude v. Levy, 96 P. 560 (Colo. 1908); Harding v. Gibbs, 17 N.E. 60 (Ill. 1888); Louisville & Nashville R.R. Co. v. Gulf of Mexico Land & Improvement Co., 33 So. 845 (Miss. 1903); Fargo v. Wade, 142 P. 830 (Or. 1914); Gambill v. Snow, 189 S.W.2d 33 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945); Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co., 77 P. 758 (Utah 1904); Triplett v. Gudebrod, 79 S.E. 1045 (Va. 1913); Pollock v. Brookover, 53 S.E. 795 (W. Va. 1906); Mueller v. Nortmann, 93 N.W. 538 (Wis. 1903); Raffensperger v. Van Kooy, 51 N.W.2d 488 (Wis. 1952).

(n73)Footnote 131. Roemhild v. Jones, 283 F.2d 70 (8th Cir. 1960) (The court permitted the admission of parol evidence to construe an option provision.); Weadock v. Champe, 160 N.W. 564 (Mich. 1916); Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co., 77 P. 758 (Utah 1904).

(n74)Footnote 132. Failure to strictly comply with terms of option by optionee excused when failure is caused by the acts of the optionor. Colligan v. Smith, 366 S.W.2d 816 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963). Beecher v. Morse, 282 N.W. 226 (Mich. 1938).

(n75)Footnote 133. Time is of the essence in an option to purchase. Evans Products Co. v. Swanger, 363 F. Supp. 808 (E.D. Pa. 1973). If Option carries no time limit, it must be exercised within a reasonable time. United States v. 969.46 Acres of Land, 386 F. Supp 793 (M.D.N.C. 1974). But holding reasonable time for option if none specified. Smith v. Cleveland, 268 So. 2d 14 (Ala. 1972). Time is of essence in option. Steele v. Northup, 143 N.W.2d 302 (Iowa 1966). The exercise of an option to purchase in a lease comes too late if the lease has expired and the lessor was not bound to accept. Kogos v. Lemann, 285 So. 2d 548 (La. Ct. App. 1973). An option which contained no time limit held lost through laches. Lindler v. Adcock, 158 S.E.2d 192 (S.C. 1967). Timely exercise of an option required to prevent forfeiture. Harrison v. Puga, 480 P. 2d 247 (Wash. Ct. App. 1971). Time is of essence in lease option. Conrad Milwaukee Corp. v. Wasilewski, 141 N.W.2d 240 (Wis. 1966). Time is of essence in option. Robinson v. Martel Enterprises, Inc., 337 So. 2d 698 (Miss. 1976). Holding option to purchase could be exercised though lease covenants breached. Lessor had not elected to rescind before option exercised. Summa Corp. v. Richardson, 564 P. 2d 181 (Nev. 1977). Holder of a right of first refusal must meet the exact terms of the offer of a person seeking to buy from the owner and must show bad faith in the owner to recover in specific performance. Weber Meadow-View Corp. v. Wilde, 575 P.2d 1053 (Utah 1978). Time of essence in option. Sports Premium, Inc. v. Kaemmer, 595 P.2d 696 (Colo. Ct. App. 1979). Renewal of lease extends option. Ledford v. Skinner, 328 So. 2d 219 (Fla. Ct. App. 1979). Contra result where lease silent on renewal. Darden v. Riverdale Terminal Corp., 273 N.E.2d 263 (Ill. App. Ct. 1971). Acceptance of rent waived failure to exercise option to renew. Ledford v. Skinner, 328 So. 2d 219 (Fla. Ct. App. 1979). Raymer v. Hobbs, 146 P. 906 (Cal. Ct. App. 1915); Stone v. Powell, 150 N.W. 15 (Iowa 1914); Samuelson v. Palmer, 152 P. 627 (Kan. 1915); Millikan v. Simmons, 93 S.E.2d 59 (N.C. 1956) (An oral agreement to extend the period of an option is valid only if it is entered into before the period expires).

(n76)Footnote 134. Waterman v. Banks, 144 U.S. 394 (1892); Harding v. Gibbs, 17 N.E. 60 (Ill. 1888); Fields & Combs v. Vizard Inv. Co., 182 S.W. 934 (Ky. 1916); Coleman v. Applegarth, 11 A. 284 (Md. 1887); Trogden v. Williams, 56 S.E. 865 (N.C. 1907); Douglass v. Brooks, 87 S.E.2d 258 (N.C. 1955); Kingsley v. Kressly, 118 P. 678 (Or. 1910); Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co., 77 P. 758 (Utah 1904); Dyer v. Duffy, 19 S.E. 540 (W. Va. 1894); Pollock v. Brookover, 53 S.E. 795 (W. Va. 1906); Mueller v. Nortmann, 93 N.W. 538 (Wis. 1903); see White v. Ralph, 154 P.2d 167 (Idaho 1944); Gambill v. Snow 189 S.W.2d 33 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945).

(n77)Footnote 135. Exercise of an option does not require the payment of cash until title examination is completed. Kidd v. Early, 222 S.E.2d 392 (N.C. 1976). Leslie v. Fed. Fin. Co., 92 P.2d 906 (Cal. 1939).

(n78)Footnote 136. Stewart v. Gardner, 153 S.W. 3 (Ky. 1913); Friendly v. Elwert, 112 P. 1085 (Or. 1911); see Anderson v. Riegel, 281 N.W. 915 (Wis. 1938).

(n79)Footnote 137. N. Ill. Coal Corp. v. Cryder, 197 N.E. 750 (Ill. 1935).

(n80)Footnote 138. Loughney v. Quigley, 124 A. 84 (Pa. 1924).

(n81)Footnote 139. Rigsby v. Boon County St. Bank of Lebanon, Ind., 241 S.W. 207 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922).

(n82)Footnote 140. Orlando Realty Board Bldg. Corp. v. Hilpert, 113 So. 100 (Fla. 1927); Alexander Lumber Co. v. Swindlehurst, 32 N.E.2d 637 (Ill. App. Ct. 1941); Sautkulis v. Conklin, 150 N.Y.S.2d 356 (1956) (An option to purchase a portion of the leased premises cannot be specifically enforced against the lessor/vendor and the vendee of the whole.).

(n83)Footnote 141. Bridges v. Shirling, 105 S.E. 862 (Ga. Ct. App. 1921).

(n84)Footnote 142. Gabel v. Riley, 254 P. 329 (Kan. 1927).

(n85)Footnote 143. McCarroll v. Newsham, 278 F. 4 (5th Cir. 1922).

(n86)Footnote 144. Ludwig v. Hall, 208 N.W. 436 (Mich. 1926).

(n87)Footnote 145. An option when accepted dates back to the time of creation. Anthony v. Enzler, 132 Cal. Rptr. 553 (1976). Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen, 146 F. 8 (8th Cir. 1908); Rheingans v. Smith, 119 P. 494 (Cal. 1911); Walter G. Reese Co. v. House, 124 P. 442 (Cal. 1912); Breen v. Mayne, 118 N.W. 441 (Iowa 1908); Murphy Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Pickett v. Boutwell, 125 So. 2d 822 (Miss. 1961) (an option was not enforced which had been obtained by false misrepresentations of the optionee as to the stated facts even though the optionor had not relied upon such statements); McFerran v. Heroux, 269 P.2d 815 (Wash. 1954).

(n88)Footnote 146. McCowen v. Pew, 123 P. 191 (Cal. Ct. App. 1912). The optionor cannot reject the acceptance of the option if the optionor has not withdrawn it before the acceptance. Roy Annett, Inc. v. Kerezsy, 57 N.W.2d 483 (Mich. 1953).

(n89)Footnote 147. Orlando Realty Board Bldg. Corp. v. Hilpert, 113 So. 100 (Fla. 1927); Carr v. Rawlings, 123 S.E. 875 (Ga. 1924); Rowell v. H.L. Harrell Realty Co., 103 S.E. 717 (Ga. Ct. App. 1920); Russell v. Combs, 195 P. 605 (Kan. 1921); Beardslee v. Grindley, 210 N.W. 486 (Mich. 1926); Knox v. Brown, 277 S.W. 619 (Tex. Comm'n App. 1925).

(n90)Footnote 148. Cullen & Vaughn Co. v. Bender Co., 170 N.E. 633 (Ohio 1930).

(n91)Footnote 149. Trogden v. Williams, 56 S.E. 865 (N.C. 1907); Kottler v. Martin, 85 S.E.2d 314 (N.C. 1955); Friendly v. Elwert, 105 P. 404 (Or. 1909); Turner v. McCormick, 49 S.E. 28 (W. Va. 1904).

(n92)Footnote 150. Wheeling, O. & E.R. Co. v. Wheeling Coal R. Co., 119 S.E. 551 (W. Va. 1923).

(n93)Footnote 151. What appears to be the majority opinion that the optionee must first make tender is shown in Miller v. Carmody, 384 P.2d 77 (Colo. 1963); Kritz v. Moon, 163 N.E. 112 (Ind. Ct. App. 1928); Sinclair Ref. co. v. Martin, 270 S.W.2d 576 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1954). An extension which acts as a new option requires new consideration. Wolfe v. Deaton, 169 S.E.2d 311 (Ga. 1969) (distinguishing option and contract). Rolfs v. Mason, 119 S.E.2d 238 (Va. 1961); Morris v. Goldthorp, 60 N.E.2d 857 (Ill. 1945) (Requisite definiteness of price to be paid in event of exercise of option for purchase of property).

(n94)Footnote 152. Kentucky Consumers Oil Co. v. General Bonded Warehousing Corp., 184 S.W.2d 972 (Ky. 1945).

(n95)Footnote 153. Anderson v. United Coal & Coke Co., 227 P.2d 700 (Wyo. 1951).

(n96)Footnote 154. An unexercised option does not effect an equitable conversion so as to enable the optionee to claim the condemnation award. In re Port of New York Auth, 207 N.Y.S.2d 791 (1960), but optionee is entitled to damages for the loss of his interest. In re Governor Mifflin Joint School Authority Petition, 164 A.2d 221 (Pa. 1960). If the option does not specify the mode of acceptance an unqualified manifestation of acceptance is sufficient. Figge v. Clark, 174 N.W.2d 432 (Iowa 1970). Violation of covenant did not prevent exercise of option to purchase. Schlegel v. Hansen, 570 P.2d 292 (Idaho 1977). Option to purchase not affected by lease covenant violations happening after exercise of option. Ford v. Lord, 586 P.2d 270 (Idaho 1978). Lessee's breach of covenant did not prevent exercise of option. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Couture, 344 N.E.2d 917 (Mass. App. Ct. 1976); Phillips v. Hill, 555 P.2d 1043 (Okla. 1976). Asbury v. Cochran, 9 So. 2d 887 (Ala. 1942); Swift v. Erwin, 148 S.W. 267 (Ark. 1912); Myers v. J. J. Stone & Son, 102 N.W. 507 (Iowa 1905); Bras v. Sheffield, 31 P. 306 (Kan. 1892); Associated Truck Lines v. Baer, 77 N.W.2d 384 (Mich. 1956) (distinguishing between an option and a first call); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Barton v. Thaw, 92 A. 312 (Pa. 1914); Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co., 77 P. 758 (Utah 1904); Pollock v. Brookover, 53 S.E. 795 (W. Va. 1906).

(n97)Footnote 155. Briles v. Paulson, 149 P. 169 (Cal. 1915); Barnes v. Rea, 68 A. 836 (Pa. 1908).

(n98)Footnote 156. When the optionor repudiates the option the optionee may bring a suit for damages without first attempting to exercise the option. Fullington v. M. Penn Phillips Co., 395 P.2d 124 (Or. 1964), 50 Iowa L. Rev. 1298 (1965) (minority view). Smith v. Cauthen, 54 So. 844 (Miss. 1911).

(n99)Footnote 157. Smith v. Bangham, 104 P. 689 (Cal. 1909).

(n100)Footnote 158. An option to purchase in a lease becomes a contract of sale when the option is exercised. Schomaker v. Osborne, 58 Cal. Rptr. 827 (1967). Wilkins v. Hardaway, 55 So. 817 (Ala. 1911); Smith v. Bangham, 104 P. 689 (Cal. 1909); Hardy v. Ward, 64 S.E. 171 (N.C. 1909); Winders v. Kenan, 77 S.E. 687 (N.C. 1913).

(n101)Footnote 159. Chesbrough v. Vizard Inv. Co., 160 S.W. 725 (Ky. 1913). See Beecher v. Morse, 282 N.W. 226 (Mich. 1938).

(n102)Footnote 160. Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox 167, 29 Eng. Rep. 1111 (1785).

(n103)Footnote 161. Rockland-Rockport. Lime Co. v. Leary, 97 N.E. 43 (N.Y. 1911); Smith v. Loewenstein, 34 N.E. 159 (Ohio 1893); Durepo v. May, 54 A.2d 15 (R.I. 1947).

(n104)Footnote 162. Johnston v. Guice, 114 So. 409 (Ala. 1927); Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942); Wagner v. McClay, 138 N.E. 164 (Ill. 1923); Walton's Exec. v. Franks, 228 S.W. 1025 (Ky. 1921); Hunter v. Sutton, 205 P. 785 (Nev. 1922); Johnson v. Ford, 245 S.W. 531 (Tenn. 1922). Voluntary relinquishment requires no consideration. Daugherty v. Roasberry, 229 S.W. 924 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921).

(n105)Footnote 163. Marsh v. Lott, 97 P. 163 (Cal. Ct. App. 1908); R. A. C. Realty Co. v. W. O. U. F. Atlanta Realty Corp., 52 S.E.2d 617 (Ga. 1949); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reid, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Tibbs v. Zirkle, 46 S.E. 701 (W. Va. 1904); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W. Va. 1888); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904).

(n106)Footnote 164. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen, 146 F. 8 (8th Cir. 1906).

(n107)Footnote 165. Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942); Walter G. Reese Co. v. House, 124 P. 442 (Cal. 1912); Diggs v. El Royale Corp., 154 P.2d 444 (Cal. Ct. App. 1944); Canty v. Brown, 105 P. 428 (Cal. Ct. App. 1909); Mitchel v. Gray, 97 P. 160 (Cal. Ct. App. 1908); Goodman v. Spurlin, 62 S.E. 1029 (Ga. 1908); Wagner v. McClay, 138 N.E. 164 (Ill. 1923); Barnett v. Lovejoy, 186 N.W. 1 (Iowa 1922); State v. Owen, 19 N.W.2d 491 (Mich. 1945); Bowen v. McCarthy, 48 N.W. 155 (Mich. 1891); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921); Winders v. Kenan, 77 S.E. 687 (N.C. 1913); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Mossie v. Cyrus, 119 P. 485 (Or. 1911); Granger Real Estate Exch. v. Anderson, 145 S.W. 262 (Tex. Civ. App. 1912).

(n108)Footnote 166. Time is of the essence in an option. White v Miller, 518 S.W.2d 383 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Waterman v. Banks, 144 U.S. 394 (1892); Whitworth v. Enitai Lbr. Co., 220 P.2d 328 (Wash. 1950).

(n109)Footnote 167. Lankford v. Holton, 24 S.E.2d 292 (Ga. 1943); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921).

(n110)Footnote 168. Option to purchase did not survive the expiration of an agreed lease term and often the tenant had become a month-to-month tenant. Lazarus v. Flournoy, 280 N.Y.S.2d 745 (1967). McVay v. Swift, 24 F. Supp. 200 (W.D. La. 1938); Michael v. Busby, 162 S.W.2d 662 (Tex. 1942).

(n111)Footnote 169. Wagner v. McClay, 138 N.E. 164 (Ill. 1923).

(n112)Footnote 170. Lankford v. Holton, 24 S.E.2d 292 (Ga. 1943); Macy v. Brown, 158 N. E. 216 (Ill. 1927); Kitching v. Browne, 197 N.Y.S. 441 (1922). See Nielson v. Benedict, 194 N.W. 83 (Iowa 1923); Redden v. Bausch, 204 P. 752 (Kan. 1922).

(n113)Footnote 171. Harvey v. Prest, 113 S. 847 (La. 1927); Holden v. Efficient Craftsman Corp., 138 N.E. 85 (N.Y. 1922). See Hall v. Proctor, 191 N.W. 205 (Mich. 1922).

(n114)Footnote 172. Beaumont v. Prieto, 249 U.S. 554 (1919).

(n115)Footnote 173. See Berg, Long-Term Options and the Rule Against Perpetuities, 37 Cal. L. Rev. 235 (1949). Holding option to purchase could be exercised though lease covenants breached. Lessor had not elected to rescind before option exercised. Summa Corp. v. Richardson, 564 P.2d 181 (Nev. 1977). Gambill v. Snow, 189 S.W.2d 33 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945).

(n116)Footnote 174. Brooks v. Yawkey, 200 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1953).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.06

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.06 Equitable Conversion.

[Go To Supp]

§ 96.06(a) The Theory of Equitable Conversion. n175

The legal cliche, that equity treats that as being done which should be done, is the basis of the theory of equitable conversion. n176 Hence, when the vendee contracts to buy and the vendor to sell, though legal title has not yet passed, in equity the vendee becomes the owner of the land, the vendor of the purchase money. In equity the vendee has a real interest and the vendor a personal interest. n177 Equity treats the executory contract as a conversion, whereby an equitable interest in the land is secured to the purchaser for whom the vendor holds the legal title in trust. n178 This is the doctrine of equitable conversion.

By the doctrine of equitable conversion under an executory contract of sale, the equitable estate, in its entirety, passes immediately to the purchaser at the moment the contract becomes effective and the bare legal title for security purposes remains in the vendor. n179 The purchaser of the land is looked on and treated as the owner thereof, and the vendor, though holding the legal title, holds it as a trustee for the purchaser. n180 The vendee holds the purchase money in trust for the vendor. n181

The vendee in a contract to convey real estate is the equitable owner of the land, n182 but the vendee obtains the equitable title only by such performance that the vendee is in a position to compel specific performance. n183 Some cases state that the vendee is the beneficial owner. n184 Often the parties are spoken of as being trustees for each other and a vendee who has fully performed the vendee's part of the contract becomes the beneficiary of a trust in the legal title which is held for the vendee by the vendor. n185 The legal effect of a title bond or agreement for a deed is sometimes said to be like a deed by the vendor and a mortgage back by the vendee. n186

So long as the contract remains executory, it conveys in law no title to the property. n187 A mere executory contract to sell and convey does not give the prospective purchaser a legal estate in the land. n188 Even the purchaser who takes possession may still not dispute the title of the vendor. n189 In that instance, the contract should provide for possession of the premises pending payment of the purchase price. n190 The vendee acquires no rights under a forged contract of sale. n191 The general rule is that the vendor retains the legal title under the contract and the equitable title goes to the purchaser in possession. n192 The vendor holds the legal title, and all persons must necessarily take notice of it; if the vendee entered into possession, a deed from the vendee would convey only the equitable title. n193

Equitable conversion may come about through provisions for sale in a will, inter vivos contracts to sell, sale under order of court, partnership property, and insurance proceeds. Equitable conversion arises under an executory contract of sale from the date of the contract to the vendee, n194 but does not arise under an option contract before acceptance. n195 It seems to be well settled that a person who takes a conveyance of the legal title to land, with knowledge that the grantor has agreed to sell to another, holds it subject to the equitable estate already vested in such intending purchaser. In some states, such a grantee is treated as a trustee for the first vendee. n196 When a vendor enters into an executory agreement to convey real estate on the payment of the purchase money, the vendor sustains, in substance, the same relation to the vendee as a mortgagee does to a mortgagor, the vendee holding the equity which the vendor may foreclose. n197 When the contract is abandoned, the vendee's equitable title is terminated n198 without the necessity of further transfer. n199

The cases are divided as to whether under court sales the time of conversion occurs on entry of the order n200 or on the date the sale becomes final. n201 Equitable conversion does not come about until the option is converted into an enforceable contract. n202 The American majority rule does not follow the English doctrine. n203 This majority rule does not relate equitable conversion back to the date the option is signed but only to the date it is exercised. n204

Equitable conversion also arises in instances where the testator in a will directs realty to be sold. The cases under such circumstances are not harmonious as to when the realty is in equity converted into personalty and how this is done. It seems clear that where title to the land is devised to the executors as trustees with a positive direction to sell, there occurs an equitable conversion n205 unless the testator has expressed a contrary intent. Usually the conversion takes place as of the death of the testator, even if the direction is to sell thereafter. Some contrary authority holds that the equitable conversion occurs as of the sale date. Equitable conversion by will occurs only where the testator gives or clearly intends a positive direction to sell. n206 Where the executor's power to sell is discretionary, the equitable conversion occurs only upon the sale. n207 Though the will effects an equitable conversion, the widow's rights in the realty are not affected. n208 Equitable conversion ends when default occurs. n209

§ 96.06(b) How Equitable Conversion Affects Rights of Vendors and Purchasers.

The concept of equitable conversion is not carried to its logical conclusion by all courts. n210 Where equitable conversion is accepted, the equitable title is vested from the date of the contract or from the date the vendee takes possession; from that date any increment, advantage, or enhancement to the property inures to the vendee's benefit, and any detriment, depreciation, or loss without the fault of either party must be borne by the vendee. n211

§ 96.06(b)(1) Changing an Interest from Real Property to Personal Property.

Where a mortgage on property of deceased vendor was foreclosed before the sale was consummated and the property was purchased by a vendee at the sheriff's sale, equitable conversion applied to give the purchase money to deceased vendor's administrator as personalty. n212 Under the doctrine of equitable conversion the vendee's interest descends to the heir as realty. n213 Upon death of the vendor, if there is no provision for disposition of the proceeds of the realty such proceeds go to the heir of the vendor, n214 and the executor holds these as trustee for the heir. n215 Where the direction is to sell at some future time, the property remains realty until sale. n216 If the vendor breaches the contract after the vendee's death, the heirs at law of the vendee, not the personal representative of the vendee, are the ones to bring specific performance. n217

In states where personalty is used first to satisfy debts, equitable conversion makes available the purchase money from sale of the realty. n218 Where the will provides that realty shall be sold and the proceeds paid to the beneficiaries as personalty, n219 it does not defeat the interest of the beneficiary in the proceeds. So lacking a special statute, a vendee's interest in realty under a sales contract cannot be touched by a lien of a judgment. n220 The vendee's interest is alienable. n221 Lacking special statutes a creditor's only remedy in reaching an equitable interest in land is by a bill in equity, since equitable interests are not subject to the lien of a judgment at common law. n222

If a judgment lien arises against the vendor after the sales contract has been entered into but before the entire purchase price has been paid the weight of authority permits the lien to attach to the vendor's interest. n223 A judgment lien against the vendor has priority over a subsequent contract of sale of the realty, n224 but the lien does not attach if all of the purchase price has been paid. n225 The vendee takes all the benefits burdened with the inconveniences. n226

§ 96.06(b)(2) Conveying or Encumbering Title.

The vendor can convey n227 or mortgage n228 the title subject to the vendee's rights under the contract. The vendor and vendee have separate insurable interests and the vendee may collect on both policies after acquiring the title. n229

Where joint tenants contract to sell, the cases divide as to whether the doctrine of equitable conversion so severs the joint tenancy as to prevent survivorship in the proceeds. n230 In the absence of statute a contract made by husband and wife to sell real estate ownedby them as joint tenants destroys the joint tenancy in real estate and effects an equitable conversion of it into personalty consisting of a contract for the sale of real estate owned as tenants in common. n231 A contract to buy taken in the name of a husband and wife creates a tenancy by the entireties in equity. n232 If dower is still recognized in the jurisdiction generally, no dower attaches against the vendee where the contract to sell was executed before marriage, n233 and on the death of the vendor the property passes as personalty. n234 Where following a contract of sale a mortgage on the property was foreclosed, it was held equitable conversion occurred and the administrator of the seller took the surplus proceeds of sale. n235 Where the vendor under a contract to sell realty dies, the residuary legatee may obtain the proceeds as personalty, even though the liability of vendee was conditioned upon obtaining financing. n236 The courts are divided as to whether a judgment against a vendor attaches to the balance due the vendee on the purchase price. n237

Insurance proceeds on realty become themselves realty if the insurance is on the fee. n238 Where a life estate exists, the life tenant who insures may under one rule take all of the proceeds, but other cases require the life tenant to hold as trustee for the remainderman. n239

§ 96.06(b)(3) Under Eminent Domain.

The doctrine of equitable conversion applies where the land is subjected to eminent domain after the contract is signed; this results in the vendee being entitled to the award. n240 In some states under the equitable conversion doctrine the interests of vendors as tenants by the entireties are converted into a tenancy in common with respect to executory contracts for the sale of land, unless the vendors intended otherwise. n241

Escape clauses in a contract for land sale do not justify a zoning board regarding rights of purchaser as different from or less than the rights of the legal owner. n242 The execution of a contract for sale of realty revokes a devise of the realty. n243 The cases divide as to whether the vendor's interest is subject to execution. n244 The majority rule makes the vendee's interest subject to execution; n245 it is also subject to a mechanic's lien n246 and it may be mortgaged.

§ 96.06(b)(4) Right of Possession.

Varying consequences ensue in the different jurisdictions out of the creation of the vendor and purchaser relationship, nor are the states consistent in their own thinking as to the rights and liabilities which arise. Thus, even where equitable conversion is the accepted theory, the vendee is not entitled to possession prior to delivery of title unless the contract so stipulates. The vendee's interest is subject to taxation. n247 The vendee in possession is not impeachable for waste unless the security is impaired. n248 Some cases create a fiduciary relationship between the vendor and vendee similar to that of landlord and tenant, so that a vendee is estopped from acquiring and asserting a title adverse to the vendor without rescission of the contract. n249

A vendee has no right of possession before obtaining a deed unless the contract so specifies or the vendor voluntarily permits entry into possession; n250 and where possession is given the to vendee under contract, the possession remains the possession of the vendor while the contract remains executory. n251 Ordinarily, in the absence of an agreement giving right of possession, the purchaser under an executory contract is not entitled to possession, until full performance has occurred. n252 This intent to give the purchaser immediate possession must be expressed in the contract or be plainly inferable from the terms of the contract or the surrounding circumstances. n253 The purchaser's right to actual possession will further depend on existing leases of which the purchaser has notice. n254

Upon the giving of a bond for a deed, providing only for the payment of stipulated sums, the obligee is entitled to possession, n255 and after the obligee has taken possession the obligor cannot oust the obligee until the equitable estate has been divested by foreclosure, and cannot until then maintain an action to quiet title against the obligee. n256 Delivery of possession is normally essential to the transfer of a good title, and the purchaser may reject a title not accompanied by immediate possession unless there be an agreement to the contrary. n257 When possession has been taken and the purchase price paid, that is sufficient to enable the purchaser to obtain specific performance for delivery of the title. n258 A deed passing a present title in fee simple carries the right of immediate possession, use, and enjoyment of the property. n259 A seller is under no obligation to permit buyer to have visitation rights until the buyer performs. n260

§ 96.06(b)(5) Risk of Loss.

While nearly all courts deny the vendee the right to possession until title passes, they show little inconsistency in how they treat the risk of loss to the property in the interim. n261 The purchaser's risk of loss or destruction under the doctrine of equitable conversion is subject to modification by terms of the contract, and a contract may call for conveyance of property in the same condition as existed at the time of execution of the contract. n262

It is competent for a vendor and purchaser to agree as to which of them shall bear the loss in case of accidental injury or destruction of the property before final delivery of the deed; but where the contract contains no such express provision, the authorities are not in agreement as to which party shall bear the loss. The weight of judicial decisions upon the subject support the view that where the loss occurs between the making of the contract and the time for conveyance, and the loss is not the fault of the vendor and the vendor is at the time able to convey, the purchaser must bear the loss. n263 All the decisions agree that the loss should be borne by the owner, but there is some diversity of opinion upon the question as to which party, vendor or purchaser, is to be regarded as the owner. The cases supporting the rule above stated are based upon the theory that equity regards that as done which ought to be done, and that when a valid and enforceable contract for the sale of land has been made, equity will regard the vendor as holding the title for the benefit of the purchaser, and the purchaser as holding the unpaid purchase money for the benefit of the vendor, and that, therefore, the purchaser must be regarded in equity as the real owner. The rule is not applicable unless there is an ability, as well as a willingness, on the part of the vendor to convey, and it has been held that where the vendor cannot make title according to the contract, and the property is damaged, the loss will fall upon the vendor. n264 What has been denominated the minority view on this question holds that where the buildings are damaged or destroyed before the time for performance of the contract, the loss must be borne by the vendor. n265 In stating the principles on which the minority view is based, the Supreme Court of Oregon stated: "In every contract for the conveyance of property, there is an implied condition that the subject matter of the contract shall be in existence when the time for the performance of the contract arrives. That is the contract, the understanding of the parties. If it has ceased to exist when that time arrives, each party is discharged from his contract, the vendor from his contract to convey, the vendee from paying the purchase price." n266 A vendor, while in possession pending delivery of possession to the purchaser, is under a duty to exercise ordinary care to protect the property from fire. n267 Where the covenant is to deliver premises in condition existing at the execution of the contract, the loss prior to delivery is borne by the vendor. n268

The transfer of the equitable estate from the vendor to the purchaser takes place when the contract becomes absolute

according to the conditions expressed in the contract, until which time the property sold remains at the vendor's risk. n269 The vendee in possession may prosecute actions for injury to the premises during this period. n270 The vendee when entitled to possession may require premises to be delivered in good condition. n271 A number of cases have distinguished between law and equity, letting the vendor bear the loss at law, the vendee in equity. n272 There is division, however. n273 The Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act throws the risk of loss back on the vendor until the vendee takes possession or receives title. n274 This rule has been adopted by some courts. n275

The leading rule is that the vendee who bears the risk of loss is entitled to the insurance proceeds. n276 This is variously explained as follows:

(a) the vendor collects the insurance as trustee for the vendee who becomes entitled to the insurance upon completing the contract, n277

(b) the vendee is the beneficial owner of the insurance since it stands in the place of land, n278

(c) the insurance benefits the thing insured, not the insurer, n279 and

(d) the vendee should receive proceeds to avoid unjust enrichment of vendor. n280

The Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Law where adopted n281 has shifted this risk to the vendor in specified circumstances.

It is held that a purchaser in possession under a contract requiring fire insurance for the vendor's benefit, and retaining title in the vendor solely as security, must bear fire loss, and cannot rescind the contract because of such loss, n282 but some cases hold that the vendee is entitled to credit received by the vendor on insurance on buildings destroyed by fire; n283 other cases deny the insurance proceeds to the vendee. n284 A few courts have required the vendor to hold the proceeds of a fire insurance policy in trust for the vendee. n285 Other cases refuse to permit the vendee to claim the insurance proceeds. n286 The parties may, however, directly or indirectly contract that the vendee shall benefit from the insurance. n287 The vendee can by contract require vendee's insurer to pay insurance proceeds to vendor in trust for vendee. n288

Authorities divide on the issue of where risk of loss in condemnation falls. n289 Under the weight of authority in condemnation cases the vendee bears the loss but has an equitable interest in the award. n290

§ 96.06(b)(6) Liability for Taxes and Assessments.

Liability for taxes and assessments may be governed by the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act, where adopted, n291 but may also be governed by contract between the parties. n292 Generally, the party in possession must pay taxes. n293 But where vendor and vendee expressly agree as to the payment of taxes, they will be bound by the agreement. n294 The parties may agree that the vendor shall pay unmatured assessments, and when such an agreement is made the purchaser may recover the amount of the assessment that exists against the land. n295

Ordinarily, in the absence of a stipulation as to the payment of taxes levied on the land prior to the execution of the contract, and which are a lien on the property, the vendor is liable therefor. n296 A vendor was liable under contract for a street assessment not confirmed until after closing of sale. n297 Especially is this true where the contract requires the vendor to give a title free from encumbrances. n298 The vendor is not liable for taxes becoming a lien after time for conveyance. n299 Where the vendor retains possession or right to possession during the interval between the making of the contract and its performance by the purchaser, the general rule is that the vendor must pay the taxes imposed during such interval, n300 but the vendee in possession is usually held liable for taxes assessed after the contract is made, unless there is a provision in the contract to the contrary. n301 If title is to pass on a fixed date and possession or use of the land is not surrendered to the purchaser before that date, taxes becoming a lien after the execution of the contract and before the deed is delivered are chargeable to the purchaser. n302 The vendor of land against which unpaid taxes were outstanding has been held not liable for the payment of such taxes after the conveyance of the land. n303 Where the contract is to convey by quitclaim deed, it would seem that the vendor would not be liable to pay taxes due and payable. n304 A purchaser's covenant to pay taxes runs with the land. n305 Where the purchaser fails to pay taxes that the purchaser has agreed to pay, the vendor may pay the taxes to protect vendor's rights, and include such payment and interest thereon in the debt. n306 The holder of an option who is obligated to pay taxes payable during the existence of the option will be liable for taxes payable during the existence of the option, although the law does not require payment until a date subsequent to the expiration of the option. n307 A contract to convey lots free from encumbrance for paving is held to cover all present and future liens for existing paving at the time of the contract. n308 Generally, the purchaser will be allowed to retain out of the consideration the amount paid on unpaid taxes. n309 Although a purchaser has knowledge that the grantor may be subjected to liability for unpaid personal taxes, the purchaser nevertheless takes the property free from the payment of personal taxes, unless previous to such purchase, personal property taxes had become a lien on such real estate in accordance with the statute. n310 In a case where the grantee took property subject to all existing indebtedness thereon, in part consideration for a conveyance made by the grantee to the grantor, it was held that such grantee was not personally liable for the payment of taxes so as to constitute the amount thereof a debt owing from the grantee to the grantor. n311 Where the contract is silent regarding apportionment of taxes, the taxes are to be apportioned according to the statute. n312

§ 96.06(b)(7) Liability for Injury to Vendees and Third Parties.

According to the general and traditional rule, a vendor of real property, after parting with title and possession, is not liable for subsequent injury to the vendee or to third parties resulting from dangerous conditions existing on the premises at the time of sale. n313 It is the duty of the vendee to inspect the premises before buying under the caveat emptor theory. n314 The purchaser takes the burden of injury from conditions known to the purchaser at the time of entering into the contract. n315 The vendor, after parting with title and possession, is no longer liable for subsequent injuries to the vendee or third persons for conditions on the premises. n316 The doctrine of nonliability of the vendor has been distinguished from the continuing liability of the lessor on the basis of the relationship of landlord and tenant with its privity of title which remains after the lessee takes possession. n317 There is no liability to third persons since the vendor has no control over the premises. n318 The vendor, like the lessor, has no duty to third parties, because the vendor has no control over or the right to repair the premises. n319 This rule, again like that of the lessor, is subject to the concealment exception where the vendor has exclusive knowledge of the latent danger. n320 The cases here are in disagreement as to the exact time the liability shifts as regards third persons. One theory dates it as of the time of sale. n321 Another gives the vendee a reasonable time to obtain notice of and repair the dangerous condition. n322 The majority rule holds the vendor still liable if the vendor has knowledge of the dangerous condition and fails to report it to the vendee. n323

This traditional rule has been much modified by both decision and statute. Decisions are imposing more comprehensive affirmative disclosure requirements on vendors, and statutes in many states require disclosures of specific types of conditions on the land. These matters, which are not related specifically to the context of equitable conversion, are treated in § 96.20 below.

§ 96.06(b)(8) Liability for Damage.

The vendor in possession is not responsible for depreciation due to normal wear and tear, n324 but is responsible to the vendee for damage caused by trespassers n325 and is also liable for fire caused by the vendor's own negligence. n326 The party in possession is responsible for waste. n327 The vendee in possession may sue a third party trespasser in some states. n328 The vendee in possession has been held entitled to recover all damages resulting to the land from trespasses occurring after the vendee became the purchaser. n329 The owner of the equitable title may bring an action for damages to the freehold. n330 The vendor may sue for protection from such waste as impairs the security. n331

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 175. Cox v. RKA Corp., 753 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 2000); In re Estate of Flynn, 606 N.W.2d 104 (N.D. 2000); Poierce v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 548 N.W.2d 551 (Iowa 1966); Equitable title passes in Pennsylvania upon the execution of the contract. Kaufman v. Mellon Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 366 F.2d 326 (3d Cir. 1966). Gift of proceeds of realty directed to be sold by executor is personally under equitable conversion. Keller v. Schobert, 300 N.E.2d 800 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973). See Hermann, The Doctrine of Equitable Conversion: Conversion by Contract, 12 De Paul L. Rev. 1 (Autumn/Winter 1962); Hancock, Equitable Conversion and the Land Taboo in Conflict of Laws, 17 Stan. L. Rev. 1095 (July 1965). See also Church, Equitable Conversion in Wisconsin, 1970 Wis. L. Rev. 404 (1970). Equitable conversion. J. C. Penney Co., Inc, v. Koff, 345 So. 2d 732 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1977); Laurin v. DeCarolis Constr. Co., Inc., 363 N.E.2d 675 (Mass. 1977). Repudiating equitable conversion. Cascade Security Bank v. Butler, 567 P.2d 631 (Wash. 1977), 13 Gonz. L Rev. 571 (1978). Equitable conversion. State By Pai v. Thom, 563 P.2d 982 (Haw. 1977); Beren Corp. v. Spader, 255 N.W.2d 247 (Neb. 1977); Matter of Houton's Estate, 371 A.2d 735 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1977). Equitable conversion. In re Marriage of Harshman, 567 P.2d 667 (Wash. Ct. App. 1977). For the respective interests of the parties to the contract of sale, see the following cases:

Larson v. Metcalf, 207 N.W. 382 (Iowa 1926); Harrington v. Feddersen, 226 N.W. 110 (Iowa 1929); Caltrider v. Caples, 153 A. 445 (Md. 1931); J. J. Newberry Co. v. Shannon, 167 N. E. 292 (Mass. 1929); Summers v. Midland Co., 209 N.W. 323 (Minn. 1926); Benjamin v. Savage, 191 N.W. 408 (Minn. 1923); Thompson Yards v. Bunde, 196 N.W. 312 (N.D. 1923); Sheehan v. McKinstry, 210 P. 167 (Or. 1922); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Hess v. Vinton Colliery Co., 99 A. 218 (Pa. 1916); Dooley v. Stillson, 128 A. 217 (R.I. 1925); See John P. Browne, Student Author, "Land into Money"--The Doctrine of Equitable Conversion as Applied in Michigan, 37 U. Det. L.J. 258 (1960).

(n2)Footnote 176. Holscher v. James, 860 P.2d 646 (Idaho 1993); Equitable title in vendee of contract subject to the performance of specific conditions. Citizens First National Bank v. United States, 254 F. Supp. 766 (E.D. Tex. 1966). Will directing that all property by reduced to cash created an equitable conversion. Lampman v. Sledge, 502 S.W.2d 957 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973). See Hermann, The Doctrine of Equitable Conversion, 12 DePaul L. Rev. 1 (Autumn/Winter 1962). Equitable conversion. J.C. Penney Co., Inc, v. Koff, 345 So. 2d 732 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1977); Laurin v. DeCarolis Constr. Co. Inc., 363 N.E.2d 675 (Mass. 1977). Equitable conversion. Kindred v. Boalbey, 391 N.E.2d 236 (Ill. App. Ct. 1979); Marks v. City of Tucumcari, 595 P.2d 1199 (N.M. 1979); Zent v. Zent, 281 N.W.2d 41 (N.D. 1979). Equitable conversion. Didonato v. Reliance Standard Life Ins. Co., 249 A.2d 327 (Pa. 1969). Rodisch v. Moore, 107 N.E. 108 (Ill. 1914).

(n3)Footnote 177. Holscher v. James, 860 P.2d 646 (Idaho 1993); Larson v. Metcalf, 207 N.W. 382 (Iowa 1926); People's Water Co. of Millville v. City of Millville, 123 A. 747 (N.J. 1924); Keirsey v. Hirsch, 265 P.2d 346 (N.M. 1954) (interest of vendee on his death passes to his heirs); Thomson v. Smith, 63 N.Y. 301 (1875); Leedy v. Ellis County Fair Assn., 110 P.2d 1099 (Okla. 1941); Smith v. Glen Alden Coal Co., 32 A.2d 227 (Pa. 1943); Tremont Co. v. Paasche, 81 So. 2d 489 (Fla. 1955) (The lien of a materialman in privity only with the vendee does not attach to the vendor's interest unless the terms of the sale required the making of the improvements.); Bucher v. Young, 158 N.E. 581 (Ind. Ct. App. 1927) (Equitable conversion operates as of the effective date of the contract.); Olsen v. Ortell, 59 N.W.2d 473 (Wis. 1953) (The vendee not being deceased, wife of the vendor has no dower.).

(n4)Footnote 178. DeShields v. Broadwater, 659 A.2d 300 (Md. 1995); United Bank v. Trout, 480 N.W.2d 742 (N.D. 1992); First Mustang St. Bank v. Garland Bloodworth, Inc., 825 P.2d 254 (Okla. 1991); Sec. St. Bank v. Luebke, 737 P.2d 586 (Or. 1987); Grass v. Ward, 451 S.2d 803 (Ala. 1984). Vendee acquires equitable title when contract becomes binding. Peavey v. United States, 214 F. Supp. 934 (D. Kan. 1963). Balance owed vendor on real estate sales contract passed under vendor's will as realty, not personalty. Rowe v. Newman, 276 So. 2d 412 (Ala. 1972). Vendee holds legal title as trustee as security and has a lien on the equitable estate for the purchase price. Jasper v. Orange Lake Homes, Inc., 151 So. 2d 331 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1963); Payne v. Clark, 187 A.2d 769 (Pa. 1963). Doctrine of equitable ownership arises upon execution of a contract for sale of real estate. Rosewood Corp. v. Fisher, 263 N.E.2d 833 (Ill. 1970). Equitable conversion arising from contract of sale of real estate. Board of Comm'rs. v. Midwest Associates, Inc.,

245 N.E.2d 853 (Ind. Ct. App. 1969). Where the United States government had contracted to sell land on executory contract, the real estate as to the vendor was converted by equitable conversion in to personalty from the date for the execution of the contract. Board of Comm'rs. v. Midwest Associates, Inc., 245 N.E.2d 853 (Ind. Ct. App. 1969). Purchaser gas equitable title. Rural Acceptance Corp. v. Pierce, 298 N.E.2d 499 (Ind. Ct. App. 1973). Where purchasers were in possession under realty contract calling for monthly payments, they were possessed under "equitable" color of title withing the unlawful detainer statute. Olstowlki v. Schreck, 219 A.2d 210 (N.J. Dist. Ct. 1966). Vendee does not have legal title while contract remains executory. Seguin v. Maloney, 253 P.2d 252 (Or. 1953). In Oregon under the "equitable conversion" theory the vendor's interest is treated as personalty. Heider v. Dietz, 380 P.2d 619 (Or. 1963). Equitable conversion arising upon exercise in the contract. Davis v. Rio Rancho Estates, Inc., 410 F. Supp. 1045 (S.D.N.Y. 1976). In Massachusetts, however, the rights of the vendee are contract rather than property rights. Laurin v. DeCarolis Constr. Co., In., 363 N.E.2d 675 (Mass. 1977). Equitable conversion, Century Federal Saving & Loan Assn, of Bridgeton v. Van Glahn, 364 A.2d 558 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1976). Recognizing equitable conversion. Matter of Estate of Houghton, 371 A.2d 735 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1977). Insurance proceeds upon destruction of a dwelling were personalty under equitable conversion. Matter of Estate of McGee, 383 N.E.2d 1012 (Ill. App. Ct. 1978). Mitchell v. White, 14 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1943); Davis v. Williams, 30 So. 488 (Ala. 1901); Newman v. Mountain Park Land Co., 107 S.W. 391 (Ark. 1908); Smith v. Phenix Ins. Co., 27 P. 738 (Cal. 1891); Maddox v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431 (1857); Stevenson v. Loehr, 57 Ill. 509 (1871); Knapp.v. Ellyson Realty Co., 5 N.E.2d 973 (Ind. 1937); Hare v. Chisman, 101 N.E.2d 268 (Ind. 1951); McClellan v. Beatty, 53 N.E.2d 1013 (Ind. App. 1944); Indiana Trust Co. v. Sherer, 180 N.E. 603 (Ind. Ct. App. 1932); Kimberlin v. Templeton, 102 N.E. 160 (Ind. Ct. App. 1913); Henkenberns v. Hauck, 236 S.W.2d 703 (Ky. 1951); Lanibert v. Allard, 136 A. 121 (Me. 1927); William Skinner & Sons Ship-Bldg. & Dry-Dock Co. of Baltimore City v. Houghton, 48 A. 85 (Md. 1900); Lamm v. Armstrong, 104 N.W. 304 (Minn. 1905); Savings Trust Co. of St. Louis v. Skain, 131 S.W.2d 566 (Mo. 1939); Martindell v. Fiduciary Counsel, 30 A.2d 281 (N.J. 1943); Mesich v. Board of Commrs. of McKinley County, 129 P.2d 974 (N.M. 1942); Sewell v. Underhill, 90 N.E. 430 (N.Y. 1910); Fouts v. Foudray, 120 P. 960 (Okla. 1912); Miles v. Hemenway, 111 P. 696 (Or. 1910); Hess v. Vinton Colliery Co., 99 A. 218 (Pa. 1916); City of Garland v. Wentzel, 294 S.W.2d 145 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956) (vendee in a purchase contract acquires an equitable title and can sue in trespass); Means v. Hamlin, 174 S.W.2d 499 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943); Wilkins v. Somerville, 66 A. 893 (Vt. 1907); Krakow v. Wille, 103 N.W. 1121 (Wis. 1905). See Blakely v. McCrory, 274 P.2d 1013 (Okla. 1954) (there is no equitable title in vendee until he performs); Gordon v. Hipwell, [1951] 2 D.L.R. 733. See Richard E. Baston, Jr., Student Author, Passage of Equitable Title in Texas Under an Executory Contract for the Sale of Land, 5 Sw. L.J. 107 (1951); M.M. MacIntyre, Modern Consequences of Earlier Confusion Between a Vendor's Lien and the Interest of a Cestui Que Trust, 30 Can. B. Rev. 1016 (1952).

(n5)Footnote 179. Pierce v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 548 N.W.2d 551 (Iowa 1996); Grass v. Ward, 451 S.2d 803 (Ala. 1984); Hudson v. Hudson, 701 S.2d 13 (Ala. Civ. App. 1997); Buck v. Mcnab, 139 So. 2d 734 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1962); United Accounts, Inc. v. Larson, 12 N.W.2d 628 (Minn. 1943). After contract of sale, only legal title remains in the vendor. Dean v. Pioneer Co-op. Fire Ins. Co., 231 F.2d 18 (5th Cir. 1956); Sanderson v. Sanderson, 109 S.W.2d 744 (Tex. 1937). Upon death of a vendeee the vendee's rights may not be canceled without administration of his estate. Furman v. Sanchez, 523 S.W.2d 253 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975). Equitable conversion becomes effective the date of the execution of contract. Clarence M. Bull, inc, v. Goldman, 353 A.2d 661 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1976). Smith v. Smith, 172 N.E. 32 (Ill. 1930); Barrell v. Britton, 138 N.E. 579 (Mass. 1923) (vendor holds legal title subject to equitable obligation to convey on payment); Petition of S.R.A., Inc., 18 N.W.2d 442 (Minn. 1945).

When a vendor of real estate enters into an executory agreement to convey title on the payment of the purchase money, he sustains, in substance, the same relation to the vendee as a mortgagee does to a mortgagor. Each has a legal title which, in the absence of stipulations for possession, will maintain an action of ejectment. Each can retain his legal title against the other, until the purchase money or mortgage debt is paid, unless he permits the other to remain in undisturbed possession for 20 years. Yet each is at last but a trustee of the legal title for the mortgagor or vendee, if the purchase money or mortgage debt, as the case may be, is paid, or seasonably tendered. The same mutual rights and remedies, legal and equitable, and the same limitation to the right of recovery, obtains in the one relation and in the other. Moses v. Johnson, 7 So. 146 (Ala. 1890); Sweeney v. Bixler, 69 Ala. 539 (1881); Chapman v. Lee, 64 Ala. 483

(1879); Bizzell v. Nix, 60 Ala. 281 (1877); Relfe v. Relfe, 34 Ala. 500 (1859).

(n6)Footnote 180. Cox v. RKA Corp., 753 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 2000). In Kansas title passes when binding contract is signed. Peavey v. United States, 214 F. Supp. 934 (D. Kan. 1963). Mitchell v. White, 14 So. 2d 687 (Ala. 1943).

(n7)Footnote 181. Pierce v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 548 N.W.2d 551 (Iowa 1996); Timberlake v. Heflin, 379 S.E.2d 149 (W. Va. 1989). Risk of loss attaches to the vendee upon the execution of a sale contract for real estate. Skendzel v. Marshall, 301 N.E.2d 641 (Ind. 1973). Conway v. Moore, 160 P.2d 865 (Cal. Ct. App. 1945); Cole v. Haynes, 62 So. 2d 779 (Miss. 1953); Martindell v. Fiduciary Counsel, 30 A.2d 281 (N.J. 1943); Stevahn v. Meidinger, 57 N.W.2d 1 (N.D. 1952); Lea v. Blokland, 257 P. 801 (Or. 1927); Spratt v. Albert M. Greenfield & Co., 124 A. 126 (Pa. 1924); Biddle Concrete Co. v. McOlvin, 111 S.E. 843 (W. Va. 1922). See Taylor v. Groll, 286 N.W. 88 (Mich. 1939). When full purchase price is paid, purchaser's title is complete and deed is not necessary. Anania v. Serenta, 119 A. 554 (Pa. 1923).

(n8)Footnote 182. Stiernagle v. County of Waseca, 511 N.W.2d 4 (Minn. 1994); Rush v. Anestos, 661 P.2d 1229 (Idaho 1983); United Accounts, Inc. v. Larson, 121 N.W.2d 628 (N.D. 1963). Vendee has an equitable interest which can be mortgaged. Lambert Inc. v. Starbrand Sales Corp., 422 F.2d 621 (7th Cir. 1970). Illinois, in Shay v. Penrose, 185 N.E.2d 218 (Ill. 1962), has repudiated its earlier doctrine of Chappell v. McKnight, 108 Ill. 570 (1884), which held there was no equitable conversion until the vendee had completed all of the contract and then specific performance would lie. Equitable title vests in the vendee when the contract is consummated. Skendzel v. Marshall, 301 N.E.2d 641 (Ind. 1973). Vendee can mortgage equity and mortgage can foreclose. Norlin v. Montgomery, 367 P.2d 621 (Wash. 1961). The vendee's equitable title is not affected by a judgement rendered against the vendor after execution of sales contract. Clarence M. Bull, Inc. v. Goldman, 353 A.2d 661 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1976). Where the husband and wife and the husband's mother were vendees under a land sales contract and the mother-in-law deeded her interest to the husband and wife each held and undivided on-half equitable interest. Adamson v. Adamson, 541 P.2d 460 (Or. 1975). Rankin v. Dean, 47 So. 1015 (Ala. 1908); Ehrenstrom v. Phillips, 77 A. 81 (Del. Ch. 1910); Stearns v. Kennedy, 103 N.W. 212 (Minn. 1905); McGregor v. Putney, 71 A. 226 (N.H. 1908); Grider v. Turnbow, 94 P.2d 285 (Or. 1939); Collins v. Creason, 106 P. 445 (Or. 1910); Township of Lower Chichester v. Lower Chichester School Dist., 36 Pa. D. & C. 616 (1940); Mueller v. Novelty Dye Works, 78 N.W.2d 881 (Wis. 1956).

An agreement for making improvements, being a contingency of a sale contract, which was merged with the terms of the deed and had no effect because it was not expressly carried over in the terms of the deed. Dependabilt Homes, Inc. v. Grant Wayne Co., 158 N.E.2d 358 (Ohio 1959). See Rights of a Judgment Creditor Against a Vendor or Vendee Following an Executory Contract for the Sale of Land, 43 Iowa L. Rev. 366 (1958).

(n9)Footnote 183. Butler v. Wilkinson, 740 P.2d 1244 (Utah 1987); Langley v. Norris, 167 S.W.2d 603 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942); Smith v. Jones, 60 P. 1104 (Utah 1900).

The vendor's interest in a contract to sell real estate is not subject to a judgment lien taken against the vendor and docketed after the execution of the land contract. Mueller v. Novelty Dye Works, 78 N.W.2d 881 (Wis. 1956).

(n10)Footnote 184. Est. of Guterman, 476 N.Y.S.2d 1006 (N.Y. Sur. 1984). Contract to convey vests equitable title in the vendee. Monsen, Inc. v. Hasselman, 211 N.E.2d 127 (Ill. App. Ct. 1965). Marion Mtg. Co. v. Grennan, 143 So. 761 (Fla. 1932); Hernandez v. Prieto, 162 S.W.2d 829 (Mo. 1942). See Sidney P. Simpson, Legislative Changes in the Law of Equitable Conversion by Contract, 44 Yale L.J. 754 (1935).

(n11)Footnote 185. Conway v. Moore, 160 P.2d 865 (Cal. Ct. App. 1945).

(n12)Footnote 186. Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U.S. 756 (1885); Moses v. Johnson, 7 So. 146 (Ala. 1890); Richardson v. Wren, 95 P. 124 (Ariz. 1908); Wells v. Francis, 4 P. 49 (Colo. 1884); Willman v. Friedman, 35 P. 37 (Idaho 1893); Bigler v. Jack, 87 N.W. 700 (Iowa 1901); Petition of S.R.A., Inc., 7 N.W.2d 484 (Minn. 1943). See Donn A. Southern,

Student Author, Tort Liability of Vendor of Real Property, 24 Tenn. L. Rev. 1170 (1957); Rights of a Judgment Creditor Against a Vendor or Vendee Following an Executory Contract for the Sale of Land, 43 Iowa L. Rev. 366 (1958).

(n13)Footnote 187. Where vendee is in default, equitable conversion does not prevent partition by vendor. Hartman v. Hartman, 297 N.E.2d 199 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973). Davis v. Williams, 30 So. 488 (Ala. 1901); Lamm v. Armstrong, 104 N.W. 304 (Minn. 1905).

The vendor's interest in the contract to sell real estate is not subject to a judgment lien against the vendor docketed after the execution of the land contract. Mueller v. Novelty Dye Works, 78 N.W.2d 881 (Wis. 1956).

(n14)Footnote 188. In re Booth, 43 B.R. 197 (Bankr. Vt. 1984) (as vendee makes payments on land contract, vendor becomes trustee for him of legal estate and he becomes in equity owner of land to extent of payments made). Equitable conversion does not apply if parties intended otherwise or equitable considerations intervene. Hartman v. Hartman, 297 N.E.2d 199 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973). Young v. Latham, 31 So. 448 (Ala. 1902). See Thomas v. Pullman Trust & Sav. Bank, 20 N.E.2d 832 (Ill. App. Ct. 1939); Louisiana Delta Farms Co. v. Davis, 12 So. 2d 213 (La. 1943); Cady v. Kerr, 118 P.2d 182 (Wash. 1941).

(n15)Footnote 189. Mid-St. Homes, Inc. v. Moore, 460 S.2d 172 (Ala. Civ. App. 1984); Wickwire v. McFadden, 633 P.2d 278 (Alaska 1981); Stansky v. Shermet, 433 N.Y.S.2d 577 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1980) (purchaser of real property who enters into possession pending a contract and who finds that title to the property is defective cannot remain in possession, but must either consummate the contract, taking risk of the defects, or give up possession); Layton v. Hamilton, 107 So. 830 (Ala. 1926); Flint v. Conner, 200 P. 37 (Cal. Ct. App. 1921); Latin-American Bank v. Rogers, 99 So. 546 (Fla. 1924); Consolidated-Progressive Oil Corp. v. Standard Oil Co., 105 So. 36 (La. 1925); Lawrence v. Kennedy, 111 S.E. 142 (W. Va. 1922). See Trembath v. Berner, 148 N.E. 729 (N.Y. 1925).

(n16)Footnote 190. Polczynski v. Nowicki, 198 N.W. 976 (Mich. 1924).

(n17)Footnote 191. Sabawi v. Carpentier, 778 S.2d 1091 (Fla. App. 5th Dist. 2001); Cmmw. Land Title Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 889 S.W.2d 312 (Tex. App. 1994); First Nat'l Bank v. Enriquez, 634 P.2d 1266 (N.M. 1981); Whitney v. Whitney, 235 P. 293 (Or. 1925).

(n18)Footnote 192. In re Est. of Flynn, 606 N.W.2d 104 (N.D. 2000); Wolf Org., Inc. v. Oles, 705 A.2d 40 (Md. App. 1998); Stiernagle v. County of Waseca, 511 N.W.2d 4 (Minn. 1994); Green v. Gustafson, 482 N.W.2d 842 (N.D. 1992); Stapley v. Am. Bathtub Liners, Inc., 785 P.2d 84 (Ariz. App. 1989); Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1 (1909) (an equity decree from a Washington court ordering a husband to convey Nebraska land to wife did not cut off the rights of a third party purchaser); United States v. Sode, 93 F. Supp. 398 (D. Neb. 1950); Boozer v. Blake, 17 So. 2d 152 (Ala. 1944); Willm v. Dedman, 290 S.W. 361 (Ark. 1927); Stromerson v. Averill, 141 P.2d 732 (Cal. 1943); Retsloff v. Smith, 249 P. 886 (Cal. Ct. App. 1926); Orange Cove Water Co. v. Sampson, 248 P. 526 (Cal. Ct. App. 1926); Felt v. Morse, 85 So. 656 (Fla. 1920); Carter v. Johnson, 119 S.E. 22 (Ga. 1923); McClellan v. Beatty, 53 N.E.2d 1013 (Ind. Ct. App. 1944); Duntz v. Ames Cemetery Assn., 186 N.W. 443 (Iowa 1922); O'Brien v. Paulsen, 186 N.W. 440 (Iowa 1922); Durband v. Ney, 191 N.W. 385 (Iowa 1923); Wheeler v. Gahan, 267 S.W. 227 (Ky. 1924); Royal Ins. Co. v. Drury, 132 A. 635 (Md. 1926); Kinsey v. Drury, 126 A. 125 (Md. 1924); Beal v. Attleboro Sav. Bank, 142 N.E. 789 (Mass. 1924); Rosenthal v. Shapiro, 52 N.W.2d 859 (Mich. 1952); Barker v. Klingler, 4 N.W.2d 596 (Mich. 1942); Heppner v. Smith, 213 N.W. 119 (Mich. 1927); Petition of S. R. A., Inc., 18 N.W.2d 442 (Minn. 1945); Mark v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 N.W. 1003 (Minn. 1924); Towers v. Lusby, 175 S. W.2d 921 (Mo. Ct. App. 1943); Wandell v. Johnson, 227 P. 58 (Mont. 1924); Epstein v. Kroopf, 218 N.Y.S. 644 (1926); Hoffman v. Hoffman, 208 N.Y.S. 734 (1925); Persico v. Guernsey, 220 N.Y.S. 689 (1927); Davison v. MacDonald, 209 N.Y.S. 145 (1925); Rochester Yacht Club Co. v. Rochester Boat Works, 212 N.Y.S. 572 (1925); Conners v. Winans, 204 N.Y.S. 142 (1924); In re Kirkwood's Will, 51 N.Y.S.2d 490 (1944); Crawford v. Allen, 127 S.E. 521 (N.C. 1925); Henry S. Grinde Corp. v. Klindworth, 44 N.W.2d 417 (N.D. 1950); Thompson Yards v. Bunde, 196 N.W. 312 (N.D. 1923); Semmler v. Beulah Coal Mining Co., 188 N.W. 310 (N.D. 1922); Ware v. Hall, 243 P. 740 (Okla. 1925); Akers v. Brooks, 229 P. 544 (Okla. 1924); Anania v. Serenta,

119 A. 554 (Pa. 1923); Greenwood v. Maxey, 231 S.W.2d 315 (Tenn. 1950); Mondragon v. Mondragon, 257 S.W. 215 (Tex. 1923); Garland v. Wentzel, 294 S.W.2d 145 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956) (vendee in a purchase contract acquires an equitable title and can sue in trespass); Langley v. Norris, 167 S.W.2d 603 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942); Payne v. Beaumont, 245 S.W. 94 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); Sale v. Swann, 120 S.E. 870 (Va. 1924); Harris v. Halverson, 211 N.W. 295 (Wis. 1926); see the following cases: Capps v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 149 N.E. 247 (Ill. 1925); Page v. Loeffler, 84 So. 194 (La. 1920); Richardson v. Caloavello, 3 La. App. 535 (1926); Cullins v. Elerick, 236 P. 886 (Okla. 1925); Feuchtenberger v. Williamson, Carroll & Saunders, 120 S.E. 257 (Va. 1923); Norman v. Levenhagen, 253 P. 113 (Wash. 1927); In re Kuhn's Estate, 233 P. 293 (Wash. 1925). Equitable title does not pass under undelivered deed where no part of purchase price paid. Helms v. Helms, 108 So. 509 (Ala. 1926). The vendor's title is subject to attachment. Latin-American Bank v. Rogers, 99 So. 546 (Fla. 1924). Purchaser liable for loss occurring between execution and completion of contract. Wheeler v. Gahan, 267 S.W. 227 (Ky. 1924). Purchaser may assign. Miner v. Zweifel, 245 P. 729 (Or. 1926). Equitable title passed though vendor's deed void for defective description. Polk v. Carey, 247 S.W. 568 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922). See Sidney P. Simpson, Legislative Changes in the Law of Equitable Conversion by Contract, 44 Yale L.J. 754 (1935).

(n19)Footnote 193. In re Booth, 43 B.R. 197 (Bankr. Vt. 1984); New York & Cleveland Gas Coal Co. v. Plumer, 96 Pa. 99 (1880).

(n20)Footnote 194. Brooks v. Council of Co-owners, 445 S.E.2d 630 (S.C. 1994). Title does not pass to buyer until contract is completed. Geat American Ins. Co v. Merchants & Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 423 F.2d 1143 (6th Cir. 1970). Grantee in an escrow deed has equitable title. Alworth v. Ellison, 27 S.W.2d 639 (Tex. Civ. App. 1930). Neitch v. Darrough, 145 P.2d 429 (Okla. 1944).

(n21)Footnote 195. Martin v. Schindley, 442 S.E.2d 239 (Ga. 1994); Reeve v. Hicks, 28 S.E.2d 649 (Ga. 1944).

(n22)Footnote 196. Speiss v. Martin, 232 S.W. 615 (Ky. App. 1921).

(n23)Footnote 197. Lamberth v. McDaniel, 506 S.E.2d 295 (N.C. App. 1998); Milbrandt v. Huber, 440 N.W.2d 807 (Wis. App. 1989). Where vendor resorts to strict foreclosure of land contract, defaulting purchaser permitted to redeem only upon payment of entire balance due or purchase price even though contract contained no acceleration clause making whole sum due and payable upon default. Kallenback v. Lake Publications, Inc., 142 N.W.2d 212 (Wis. 1966). Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U.S. 756 (1885); Moses v. Johnson, 7 So. 146 (Ala. 1890).

(n24)Footnote 198. First Mustang St. Bank v. Garland Bloodworth, Inc., 825 P.2d 254 (Okla. 1991); Adair v. Bracken, 745 P.2d 849 (Utah App. 1987); Asher v. Hull, 250 P.2d 866 (Okla. 1952).

(n25)Footnote 199. Evans v. Rancho Royale Hotel Co., 250 P.2d 283 (Cal. Ct. App. 1952).

(n26)Footnote 200. Shaffner v. Briggs, 36 Ind. 55 (1871); Cook v. Todd's Estate, 90 N.W.2d 23 (Iowa 1958); Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297 (1852).

(n27)Footnote 201. Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland. 443 (Md. 1827); Greenough v. Small, 20 A. 553 (Pa. 1890).

(n28)Footnote 202. Masters v. Masters, 156 N.E. 481 (Ill. 1927).

(n29)Footnote 203. Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox 167, 29 Eng. Rep. 1111.

(n30)Footnote 204. Brush Grocery Kart, Inc. v. Sure Fire Market, Inc., 2001 LEXIS 749 (Colo. App. 2001); Eddington v. Turner, 38 A.2d 738 (Del. 1944); Inghram v. Chandler, 161 N.W. 434 (Iowa 1917); Rockland-Rockport Lime Co. v. Leary, 97 N.E. 43 (N.Y. 1911); Smith v. Loewenstein, 34 N.E. 159 (Ohio 1893); In re Bisbee's Estate, 187 N.W. 653 (Wis. 1922).

(n31)Footnote 205. In re Est. of Line, 701 N.E.2d 1028 (Ohio App. 1997); Coe v. Hays, 661 A.2d 220 (Md. App. 1995); In re Marr's Estate, 87 A. 621 (Pa. 1913); State v. American Baptist Home Mission Soc., 123 S.E. 440 (W. Va. 1924).

(n32)Footnote 206. In re Est. of Line, 701 N.E.2d 1028 (Ohio App. 1997); Coe v. Hays, 661 A.2d 220 (Md. App. 1995); Grove v. Willard, 117 N.E. 489 (Ill. 1917); Ducker v. Wear & Boogher Dry Goods Co., 34 N.E. 558 (Ill. 1893); Porter v. Union Trust Co. of Indianapolis, 108 N.E. 117 (Ind. 1915); Greenman v. McVey, 147 N.W. 812 (Minn. 1914); In re Schilling's Will, 237 N.W. 122 (Wis. 1931).

(n33)Footnote 207. Cal. Acad. of Sciences v. County of Fresno, 192 Cal. App.3d 1436 (Cal. App. 5th Dist. 1987) (discretionary authority granted to executors to sell real property did not permit application of equitable conversion doctrine); Ducker v. Wear & Boogher Dry Goods Co., 34 N.E. 558 (Ill. 1893); Rockland-Rockport Lime Co. v. Leary, 97 N.E. 43 (N.Y. 1911); In re Tatham's Estate, 95 A. 520 (Pa. 1915); Ford v. Ford, 33 N.W. 188 (Wis. 1887).

(n34)Footnote 208. Grissom v. Moore, 6 N.E. 629 (Ind. 1886); Geiger v. Bitzer, 88 N.E. 134 (Ohio 1909).

(n35)Footnote 209. Williams v. Haddock, 39 N.E. 825 (N.Y. 1895).

(n36)Footnote 210. See Orville P. Cockerill, Equitable Conversion in California, 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 309 (1913); Harlan F. Stone, Equitable Conversion by Contract, 13 Colum. L. Rev. 369 (1928); C. C. Langdell, Equitable Conversion, 18 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 83, 245 (1904).

(n37)Footnote 211. Pierce v. Farm Bur. Mut. Ins. Co., 548 N.W.2d 551 (Iowa 1996); Guzman v. Acuna, 653 S.W.2d 315 (Tex. App. 4th Dist. 1983); St. Life Ins. Co. v. St. ex rel. Kehn, 135 P.2d 965 (Okla. 1942); Taylor v. Herrin 127 S.W.2d 945 (Tex. Civ.App.1939). See Brooks v. Yawkey, 200 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1953). Flood loss. Torluemke v. Abernathey, 258 P.2d 282 (Kan. 1953) (but requiring possession or steps to take possession to invoke rule).

(n38)Footnote 212. Courtney v. Hanson, 61 A.2d 274 (N.J. Super. 1948).

(n39)Footnote 213. Casino Reinvestment Dev. Auth. v. Atlantic City, 18 N.J. Tax 463 (N.J. Tax 1999); Gay v. Radford, 59 S.E.2d 915 (Ga. 1950).

(n40)Footnote 214. Casino Reinvestment Dev. Auth. v. Atlantic City, 18 N.J. Tax 463 (N.J. Tax 1999); Ingraham v. Chandler, 161 N.W. 434 (Iowa 1917); Kern v. Robertson, 12 P.2d 565 (Mont. 1932); Tazewell v. Smith's Admin., 22 Va. 313 (1823). Contra, giving proceeds to the personal representative. Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. 112 (1850).

(n41)Footnote 215. Casino Reinvestment Dev. Auth. v. Atlantic City, 18 N.J. Tax 463 (N.J. Tax 1999); Newby v. Skinner, 21 N.C. 488 (1836).

(n42)Footnote 216. Greenland v. Waddell, 22 N.E. 367 (N.Y. 1889). But see In re Seifert's Est., 242 A.2d 64 (N.H. 1968) (if will contains positive, unqualified and mandatory direction to sell realty and distribute proceeds, for purposes of distribution under will real property will be treated as personal property even before sale to give effect to intent of testator); Eq. Trust Co. v. Ward, 48 A.2d 519 (Del. Ch. 1946) (a positive and unconditional direction to sell realty on the happening of some future event that must take place will usually be regarded in equity under doctrine of "equitable conversion" as a conversion of the realty into personal property at time of testator's death).

(n43)Footnote 217. Green v. Gustafson, 482 N.W.2d 842 (N.D. 1992); Buck v. Eaman, 18 Ill. 529 (1857). The vendor's heirs hold title as security for the money payable to the personal representative who may force them to convey to the vendee by joining them in an action for specific performance. Butman v. Butman, 72 N.E. 821 (Ill. 1904).

(n44)Footnote 218. Sutherland v. Harrison, 86 Ill. 363 (1877).

(n45)Footnote 219. Sherman v. Flack, 119 N.E. 293 (Ill. 1918); Dickey v. Citizen's St. Bank, 180 N.E. 36 (Ind.

App. 1932); In re Jackson's Est., 252 N.W. 775 (Iowa 1932); Greenman v. McVey, 147 N.W. 812 (Minn. 1914); Chambers v. Preston, 193 S.W. 109 (Tenn. 1917). The vendee in an action for specific performance should join the heirs and the personal representative. Potter v. Ellice, 48 N.Y. 321 (1872).

(n46)Footnote 220. Stiernagle v. County of Waseca, 511 N.W.2d 4 (Minn. 1994); Oaks v. Kendall, 73 P.2d 1255 (Cal.App. 3d Dist. 1937); Cummings v. Duncan, 134 N.W. 712 (N.D. 1912); Bank of Ohio v. Lawrence, 120 N.E.2d 88.

(n47)Footnote 221. Est. of Guterman, 476 N.Y.S.2d 1006 (N.Y. Surr. 1984); Rogers Dev. Co. v. S. Cal. Real Est. Inv. Co., 115 P. 934 (Ohio 1954).

(n48)Footnote 222. Cummings v. Duncan, 134 N.W. 712 (N.D. 1912).

(n49)Footnote 223. Deshields v. Broadwater, 659 A.2d 300 (Md. 1995); Cannefax v. Clement, 786 P.2d 1377 (Utah App. 1990); Sec. St. Bank v. Luebke, 737 P.2d 586 (Or. 1987); Chain O'Mines, Inc. v. Williamson, 72 P.2d 265 (Colo. 1937); Bauermeister v. McDonald, 247 N.W. 424 (Neb. 1932); Coggshall v. Marine Bank Co., 57 N.E. 1086 (Ohio 1900); Reid v. Gorman, 158 N.W. 780 (S.D. 1916); Heoth v. Dodson, 110 P.2d 845 (Wash. 1941). Contra, State Bank v. Sanders, 170 S.W. 86 (Ark. 1914); Gumming v. First Nat'l Bank, 202 N.W. 556 (Iowa 1925); Chisholm. v. Andrews, 57 Miss. 636 (Miss. 1880); Moore v. Byers, 65 N. Car. 240 (N.C. 1871).

(n50)Footnote 224. Monroe v. Lincoln City Employees Credit Union, 279 N.W.2d 866 (Neb. 1979) (judgment against vendor after executing contract for sale but before execution of deed operated as a lien against vendor); In re Buchner, 205 F. 454 (7th Cir. 1913).

(n51)Footnote 225. Thomas v. Kennedy, 24 Iowa 397 (Iowa 1868); Lee v. Wrixon, 79 P. 489 (Wash. 1905).

(n52)Footnote 226. Duvall v. 20th Century Coal Co., Inc., 104 F. Supp. 725 (D. Ky. 1952).

(n53)Footnote 227. Cox v. RKA Corp., 753 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 2000); Smith v. MRCC Partn., 792 S.W.2d 301 (Ark. 1990); Watson v. Chapman, 55 N.W.2d 555 (Iowa 1952). In Ohio the interest of the vendor who retains title as security for the purchase price is assignable. Butcher v. Kagey Lumber Co., 128 N.E.2d 54 (Ohio 1955).

(n54)Footnote 228. Cox v. RKA Corp., 753 A.2d 1112 (N.J. 2000); Smith v. MRCC Partn., 792 S.W.2d 301 (Ark. 1990); Lancaster v. Robinson, 256 S.W.2d 330 (Ark. 1953).

(n55)Footnote 229. DeFoor v. Northbrook Excess & Surplus Ins. Co., 471 N.E.2d 938 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1984); Vogel v. N. Assur. Co., 114 F. Supp. 591 (E.D. Pa. 1953); Insurance - Purchaser Permitted Recovery Under His Own and Vendor's Policy n Excess of Property Value, 102 U. Pa. L. Rev. 677 (1954).

(n56)Footnote 230. Est. of Phillips v. Nyhus, 874 P.2d 154 (Wash. 1994) (joint tenancy not severed by sale); In re Est. of Baker, 78 N.W.2d 863 (Iowa 1956) (joint tenancy severed by sale). See also Matter of Robinson, 791 S.W.2d 844 (Mo. App. 1990) (making of an executory contract of sale by joint tenants does not equitably convert proceeds of sale to one of joint tenancy); Watson v. Watson, 126 N.E.2d 220 (Ill. 1955) (a joint tenancy is not severed by sale of the realty).

(n57)Footnote 231. Matter of Est. of Martinek, 488 N.E.2d 1332 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1986); Buford v. Dahlke, 62 N.W.2d 252 (Neb. 1954); Leland Stuart Beck, Student Author, Real Property: Cotenancy: Effect of a Contract to Convey by Joint Tenants: Buford v. Dahlke, 150 Neb. 39, 62 N.W.2d 252 (1954), 41 Cornell L.Q. 154 (1955).

(n58)Footnote 232. Oscsenda v. Oscsenda, 63 A.2d 897 (N.J. Super. 1949).

(n59)Footnote 233. Matlack v. Arend, 63 A.2d 812 (N.J. Super. 1949).

(n60)Footnote 234. In re Heuer's Est., 85 N.E.2d 857 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1949).

(n61)Footnote 235. Courtney v. Hanson, 65 A.2d 530 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1949).

(n62)Footnote 236. Casino Reinvestment Dev. Auth. v. Atlantic City, 18 N.J. Tax 463 (N.J. Tax 1999); Horton v. Horton, 62 A.2d 503 (N.J. Super. 1949).

(n63)Footnote 237. Lien does not attach, DeShields v. Broadwater, 659 A.2d 300 (Md. 1995). Lien attaches, majority rule. Chain O'Mines, Inc. v. Williamson, 72 P.2d 265 (Colo. 1937); Bauermeister v. McDonald, 247 N.W. 424 (Neb. 1932); Heath v. Dodson, 110 P.2d 845 (Wash. 1941). Contra, State Bank v. Sanders, 170 S.W. 86 (Ark. 1914); Cumming v. First Nat'l Bank, 202 N.W. 556 (Iowa 1925).

(n64)Footnote 238. Chase v. Swayne, 30 S.W. 1049 (Tex. 1895).

(n65)Footnote 239. Green v. Green, 27 S.E. 952 (S.C. 1897).

(n66)Footnote 240. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 681 N.E.2d 625 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1997) (an exercise of eminent domain does not relieve vendee from a duty to pay the purchase price, nor may he recover what he has already paid); Hill v. Doerfler, 47 P.2d 260 (Or. 1935); Rands v. Ewing, 250 P.2d 921 (Or. 1953).

(n67)Footnote 241. Panushka v. Panushka, 349 P.2d 450 (Or. 1960).

(n68)Footnote 242. O'Neill v. Philadelphia Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 120 A.2d 901 (Pa. 1956); Joseph M. Smith, Student Author, Zoning - Non-Conforming Use - Requested Change to Less Undesirable Use, 2 Vill. L. Rev. 140 (1956).

(n69)Footnote 243. In re Bernhard's Est., 112 N.W. 86 (Iowa 1907); Farrar v. Earl of Winterton, 5 Beav. 1, 49 Eng. Rep. 476 (M.R. 1842).

(n70)Footnote 244. Subject to execution. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. v. Holz & Holz, Inc., 129 N.W.2d 330 (Wis. 1964). Not subject to execution. Snow Bros. Hardware Co. v. Ellis, 21 S.W.2d 162 (Ark. 1929); Jones v. Howard, 43 S.W. 635 (Mo. 1897). Subject to execution but payments by vendee take priority. May v. Emerson, 96 P. 454 (Or. 1908).

(n71)Footnote 245. Butler v. Wilkinson, 740 P.2d 1244 (Utah 1987); Evins v. Sandefur-Julian Co., 98 S.W. 677 (Ark. 1906); Joseph v. Donovan, 157 A. 638 (Conn. 1931); Thomassen v. Degoey, 110 N.W. 581 (Iowa 1970); Hook v. N.W. Thresher Co., 98 N.W. 463 (Minn. 1904); Higgins v. McConnell, 29 N.E. 978 (N.Y. 1892); First Nat'l Bank v. Logue, 106 N.E. 21 (Ohio 1914).

(n72)Footnote 246. Westfair Corp. v. Kuelz, 280 N.W.2d 364 (Wis. App. 1979); Seipoid v. Gibbud, 148 A. 328 (Conn. 1930); Fitzhugh v. Smith, 62 Ill. 486 (Ill. 1872).

(n73)Footnote 247. Sherman v. Quinn, 192 P.2d 17 (Cal. 1948).

(n74)Footnote 248. Wood v. Donohue, 736 N.E.2d 556 (Ohio App. 1st Dist. 1999); Miller v. Waddingham, 27 P. 750 (Cal. 1891).

(n75)Footnote 249. Adams v. Smith, 232 S.W.2d 482 (Mo. 1955).

(n76)Footnote 250. Stapley v. Am. Bathtub Liners, Inc., 785 P.2d 84 (Ariz. App. 1989); Chelan County v. Wilson, 744 P.2d 1106 (Wash. App. 1987); Rourke v. Cloud, 398 S.2d 57 (La. App. 3d Cir. 1981); Burnett v. Caldwell, 76 U.S. 290 (1869); Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Imp. Co., 11 S. 695 (Ala. 1892); Mason v. Curro, 41 A.2d 164 (D.C. App. 1945); Nuquist v. Bauscher, 227 P.2d 83 (Idaho 1951); Coleman v. Connolly, 139 Ill. App. 383 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1908); Doe ex dem. Brumfield v. Brown, 7 Blackf. 142 (Ind. 1844); In re Boyle's Est., 134 N.W. 590 (Iowa 1912); Duff v. United States Trust Co., 97 N.E.2d 189 (Mass. 1951); Foley v. Wyeth, 84 Mass. 131 (Mass. 1861); Emmons v. State, 9 N.W.2d 657 (Mich. 1943); Way v. Root, 140 N.W. 577 (Mich. 1913); Teller v. Schulz, 108 N.Y.S. 325 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept.

1908); Sievers v. Brown, 56 P. 171 (Or. 1899); Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. 513 (Pa. 1865); White v. Coates, 137 P.2d 113 (Wash. 1943); Welch v. Hover-Schiffner Co., 75 Wash. 130 (Wash. 1913); N.W. Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 474 (Wis. 1867); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904). See Liability of Vendor of Real Property for Personal Injuries, 44 Minn. L. Rev. 144 (1959).

(n77)Footnote 251. Vatterott v. Kay, 672 S.W.2d 733 (Mo. App. 1984); Burke v. Scharf, 124 N.W. 79 (N.D. 1909). See Stevens v. Fitzpatrick, 118 S.W. 51 (Mo. 1909).

(n78)Footnote 252. Dixon v. O'Connor, 143 N.W.2d 364 (Neb. 1966); Hoover v. Odle, 250 P. 993 (Ariz. 1926); Warfield v. Cotton, 90 S. 374 (La. 1922); Barrell v. Britton, 148 N.E. 134 (Mass. 1925); Emmons v. St. Land Off. Bd., 9 N.W.2d 657 (Mich. 1943); Sanders v. Detlaff, 188 N.W. 446 (Mich. 1922); Stukenholtz v. Parriott, 202 N.W. 873 (Neb. 1925); Hoffman v. Hoffman, 208 N.Y.S. 734 (N.Y. App. Div. 4th Dept. 1925); Milligan Coal Co. v. Polowy, 124 S.E. 674 (W. Va. 1924). See Forrester v. Granberry, 100 S. 551 (Ala. 1924); Lee v. Shide, 288 N.W. 556 (N.D. 1939).

(n79)Footnote 253. Jaycox v. E.M. Harris Bldg. Co., 754 S.W.2d 931 (Mo. App. 1988); Gold v. Phelan, 208 P. 1001 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1922); First Nat'l Bank v. Mont. Emporium Co., 197 P. 994 (Mont. 1921).

(n80)Footnote 254. In re Marriage of Cloney, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 2001); Walker v. Cosgrove, 273 S.W. 450 (Ky. App. 1925). See Norman v. Wengert, 187 N.W. 708 (Minn. 1922).

(n81)Footnote 255. Chomko v. Patmon, 563 A.2d 311 (Conn. App. 1989), cert. denied, 565 A.2d 539 (Conn. 1989) (a bond for deed is "an installment sale contract of real property where the buyer takes possession of the property but does not receive fee simple title of the property until a later date."); Able v. Gunter, 57 S. 464 (Ala. 1912).

(n82)Footnote 256. Phillis v. Gross, 143 N.W. 373 (S.D. 1913). See Valley Camp, W.O.W. v. Bethany Lodge, F. & A.M., 190 S. 833 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1939).

(n83)Footnote 257. Watson v. Calvin, 9 S.W.3d 571 (Ark. App. 2000); Am.-Italian Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Liotta, 189 A. 118 (N.J. 1937).

(n84)Footnote 258. Davis v. Martin Stave Co., 168 S.W. 553 (Ark. 1914). Possession alone is not enough. Weir v. Weir, 122 N.E. 868 (Ill. 1919); Harrison v. Eassom, 176 N.W. 460 (Mich. 1920).

(n85)Footnote 259. Mann v. Mann, 671 N.E.2d 73 (Ill. App. 3d Dist. 1996); McCall v. Morgan, 14 S.2d 374 (Ala. 1943).

(n86)Footnote 260. Glenn v. Price, 86 N.E.2d 542 (Ill. App. 3d Dist. 1949).

(n87)Footnote 261. See generally, Randy R. Koenders, Risk of Loss By Casualty Pending Contract For Conveyance of Real Property--Modern Cases, 85 A.L.R.4th 233 (1991). See Harlan F. Stone, Equitable Conversion by Contract, 13 Colum. L. Rev. 369 (1913); Harry W. Vanneman, Risk of Loss, in Equity, Between the Date of Contract to Sell Real Estate and Transfer of Title, 8 Minn. L. Rev. 127 (1924); Sidney P. Simpson, Legislative Changes in the Law of Equitable Conversion by Contract, 44 Yale L.J. 559, 754 (1935).

(n88)Footnote 262. Coolidge & Sickler, Inc. v. Regn, 80 A.2d 554 (N.J. 1951).

(n89)Footnote 263. Riddle, ex rel. Riddle v. Elk Creek Salers, Ltd., 2001 Mo. App. LEXIS 1408 (Mo. App. 2001); Wood v. Donohue, 736 N.E.2d 556 (Ohio App. 1st Dist. 1999); Munshower v. Martin, 641 S.2d 909 (Fla. App. 3d Dist. 1994); Holsher v. James, 860 P.2d 646 (Idaho 1993); Stapley v. Am. Bathtub Liners, Inc., 785 P.2d 84 (Ariz. App. 1989); Winterchase Townhomes Inc. v.Koether, 387 S.E.2d 361 (Ga. App. 1989); Ala. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Serv., Inc. v. Nixon, 105 S.2d 643 (Ala. 1958); Ross v. Bumstead, 173 P.2d 765 (Ariz. 1946); Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10 (Conn. 1860); Thompson v. Norton, 14 Ind. 187 (Ind. 1860); O'Brien v. Paulsen, 186 N.W. 440 (Iowa 1922);

Davidson v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 32 N.W. 514 (Iowa 1887); Torluemke v. Abernathey, 258 P.2d 282 (Kan. 1953); G.T. Van Bebber, Student Author, Vendor and Purchaser - Modification or Recission of Contract - Injury to Property, 2 U. Kan. City L. Rev. 301 (1954); Martin Grocery Co. v. E. Meng Co., 279 S.W. 661 (Ky. App. 1926); Wheeler v. Gahan, 267 S.W. 227 (Ky. App. 1924); Cottingham v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 14 S.W. 417 (Ky. App. 1890); Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301 (Md. 1869); Libman v. Levenson, 128 N.E. 13 (Mass. 1920); Mahan v. Home Ins. Co., 226 S.W. 593 (Mo. App. 1920); McGinley v. Forrest, 186 N.W. 74 (Neb. 1921); Cropper v. Brown, 74 A. 987 (N.J. Ch. 1909); Coolidge & Sickler, Inc. v. Regn, 80 A.2d 554 (N.J. 1951) (under a contract of sale of realty, purchaser's risk of loss or destruction under the doctrine of equitable conversion is subject to modification by terms of the contract, and the present contract called for conveyance of property in the same condition as existed at the time of execution of the contract); Mesich v. McKinley County Bd of Commrs., 129 P.2d 974 (N.M. 1942); Sewell v. Underhill, 90 N.E. 430 (N.Y. 1910); Persico v. Guernsey, 220 N.Y.S. 689 (N.Y. Sup. 1927), aff'd, 225 N.Y.S. 890 (N.Y. App. Div. 4th Dept. 1927); Farmers Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. E. Car. Warehouse Corp., 117 S.E. 625 (N.C. 1923); Sutton v. Davis, 55 S.E. 844 (N.C. 1906); Gunsch v. Gunsch, 71 N.W.2d 623 (N.D. 1955) (vendee entitled to insurance recovered by vendor); Woodward v. McCollum, 111 N.W. 623 (N.D. 1907); Oak Bldg. & Roofing Co. v. Susor, 166 N.E. 908 (Ohio App. 6th Dist. 1929); Dunn v. Yakish, 61 P. 926 (Okla. Terr. 1900); Spratt v. Albert M. Greenfield & Co., 124 A. 126 (Pa. 1924); Parcell v. Grosser, 1 A. 909 (Pa. 1885); Russell v. Elliott, 186 N.W. 824 (S.D. 1922); Barker v. Smith, 35 Tenn. 289 (Tenn. 1855); N. Tex. Realty & Constr. Co. v. Lary, 136 S.W. 843 (Tex. Civ. App. 1911); Va. Ry. Co. v. Jeffries' Adminstr., 66 S.E. 731 (Va. 1909); Maudru v. Humphreys, 98 S.E. 259 (W. Va. 1919); Wetzler v. Duffy, 47 N.W. 184 (Wis. 1890); Rayner v. Preston, 18 Ch. Div. 1 (Ch. 1879); Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. Jr. 347, 31 Eng. Rep. 1088. See Cavell v. Trichell, 100 S. 249 (La. 1924); Hawkes v. Kehoe, 79 N.E. 766 (Mass. 1907). A vendee under an executory land contract is entitled to recover fire insurance taken out by the vendee, even where the vendor bears the risk of loss. Lampesis v. Travelers Ins. Co. 143 A.2d 104 (N.H. 1958). Where the vendee is required to keep the property insured in the vendor's name, New York requires that the proceeds be applied on the purchase price. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957). The vendor is required to turn over to the vendee fire insurance proceeds only if the contract required the purchaser to insure. The vendee must take the damaged property and pay the full price unless the contract provides otherwise. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957). Under the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Law the risk of loss falls on the vendee only when he has taken possession or title. N.Y. [Real Property Law] § 240-a. Rosenbloom v. Md. Ins. Co., 15 N.Y.S.2d 304 (N.Y. App. Div. 4th Dept. 1939). Contract may place damage on seller. Pellegrino v. Giuliani, 193 N.Y.S. 258 (N.Y. Sup. 1922). The doctrine that risk of loss falls on the vendee has been changed by some statutes. N.Y. Medical College v. 15-21 E. 111th St. Corp., 90 N.Y.S.2d 591 (N.Y. Sup. 1949) (applying statute to judicial sales). See L. Tennent Lee, III & Jerry B. Tucker, Student Authors, Risk of Loss Under an Executory Contract for the Sale of Realty in Alabama, 12 Ala. L. Rev. 379 (1960); Harlan F. Stone, Equitable Conversion by Contract, 13 Colum. L. Rev. 369 (1913).

(n90)Footnote 264. Sharbono v. Darden, 715 P.2d 433 (Mont. 1986); Phillips v. Bacon, 267 S.E.2d 249 (Ga. 1980); Anderson v. Yaworski, 181 A. 205 (Conn. 1935); Capps v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 149 N.E. 247 (Ill. 1925); Durham v. McCready, 151 A. 544 (Me. 1930); Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514 (Mass. 1871); Bissonnette v. Keyes, 64 N.E.2d 926 (Mass. 1946); Kinney v. Hickox, 38 N.W. 816 (Neb. 1888); Lampesis v. Travelers Ins. Co., 143 A.2d 104 (N.H. 1958); Connell v. Sav. Bank, 129 A. 803 (R.I. 1925). Where the contract provided that insurance would be taken out by the vendee in the name of the vendor, the vendor was required to apply to the balance of the contract price the proceeds of a fire policy in the vendor's name, the premiums of which had been paid by the vendee under the contract. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957).

(n91)Footnote 265. Conlin v. Osborn, 120 P. 755 (Cal. 1911); Gould v. Murch, 70 Maine 288 (Me. 1879); Libman v. Levenson, 128 N.E. 13 (Mass. 1920); Hawkes v. Kehoe, 79 N.E. 766 (Mass. 1907); Bautz v. Kuhworth, 1 Mont. 133 (Mont. Terr. 1869); Wilson v. Clark, 60 N.H. 352 (N.H. 1880); Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R.R. Co., 8 P. 544 (Or. 1885).

(n92)Footnote 266. Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R.R. Co., 8 P. 544 (Or. 1885).

(n93)Footnote 267. Osterloh v. Osterloh, 285 N.W. 742 (Wis. 1939).

(n94)Footnote 268. Brownell v. Board of Educ., 146 N.E. 630 (N.Y. 1925). See Rhomberg v. Zapf, 208 N.W. 276 (Iowa 1926).

(n95)Footnote 269. Sposit v. Navratil, 595 N.E.2d 467 (Ohio App. 8th Dist. 1991); C. Com. Oil Co. v. Indian Terr. Illuminating Oil Co., 41 P.2d 683 (Okla. 1935).

(n96)Footnote 270. Alechoff v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp., 257 P. 569 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1927); Mathews v. Silsby Bros., 201 N.W. 94 (Iowa 1924); Matthews v. James Lumber Co., 122 S.E. 480 (N.C. 1924). See S. Lumber Co. v. Edwards, 117 S.E. 252 (Ga. App. 1923).

(n97)Footnote 271. Rhomberg v. Zapf, 208 N.W. 276 (Iowa 1926).

(n98)Footnote 272. First Mustang St. Bank v. Garland Bloodworth, Inc., 825 P.2d 254 (Okla. 1991); Matter of Houghton's Est., 371 A.2d 735 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1977); Lombard v. Chicago Sinai Congregation, 64 Ill. 477 (Ill. 1872) (dictum). Vendee bears the risk in equity. O'Brien v. Paulsen, 186 N.W. 440 (Iowa 1922); Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301 (Md. 1869); Snyder v. Murdock, 51 Mo. 175 (Mo. 1872); Bautz v. Kuhworth, 1 Mont. 133 (Mont. Terr. 1869); McGinley v. Forrest, 186 N.W. 74 (Neb. 1921) (dictum); Persico v. Guernsey, 220 N.Y.S. 689 (N.Y. Sup. 1927), aff'd, 225 N.Y.S. 890 (N.Y. App. Div. 4th Dept. 1927); Sewell v. Underhill, 90 N.E. 430 (N.Y. 1910); Dunn v. Yakish, 61 P. 926 (Okla. Terr. 1900). Vendor bears the risk at law. Ford v. Russell, 128 S. 310 (La. App. 1930); Durham v. McCready, 151 A. 544 (Me. 1930); Hawkes v. Kehoe, 79 N.E. 766 (Mass. 1907); Smith v. McCluskey, 45 Barb. 610 (N.Y. Sup. 1866); Wicks v. Bowman 5 Daly 225 (N.Y.); Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R.R. Co., 8 P. 544 (Or. 1885); Ashford v. Reese, 233 P. 29 (Wash. 1925), rev'd in part on other grounds, Cascade Sec. Bank v. Butler, 567 P.2d 631 (Wash. 1977). See 7 Williston on Contracts, § 928 et seq. (3d. ed. 1963); Who Must Bear Loss Due to Destruction or Deterioration of Real Property Pending Contract for its Conveyance?, 22 A.L.R. 575 (1923); William A. Keener, The Burden of Loss, 1 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1901); Harlan F. Stone, Equitable Conversion by Contract, 13 Colum. L. Rev. 369 (1913); Nelson R. Pirnie, Student Author, Equity: Risk of Loss in Executory Contract for the Sale of Realty, 6 Cornell L.Q. 111 (1920); Risk of Loss After an Executory Contract for the Sale of Real Estate, 23 Harv. L. Rev. 476 (1909); Rights and Liabilities of Parties to an Executory Contract for the Purchase of Real Estate, 12 Iowa L. Rev. 179 (1927); Vendor and Purchaser - Contract to Sell Real Estate - Risk of Loss Pending Conveyance, 6 Minn. L. Rev. 513 (1922); Harry W. Vanneman, Risk of Loss in Equity Between the Date of Contract to Sell Real Estate and Transfer of Title, 8 Minn. L. Rev. 127 (1924); S.D.C., Student Author, Accidental Loss to Real Estate Occurring Between Contract of Sale and Execution of Conveyance, 58 U. Pa. L. Rev. 561 (1910); Morris Karon, Student Author, Vendor and Purchaser - Risk of Loss Under an Executory Contract for Sale of Real Estate, 2 Wis. L. Rev. 174 (1922); Executory Contracts for the Sale of Real Property, Should the Risk of Loss be Upon the Vendee From the Time of Agreement?, 23 Yale L.J. 266 (1914).

(n99)Footnote 273. Loss falls on vendor. Phinizy v. Guernsey, 36 S.E. 796 (Ga. 1900); Gould v. Murch, 70 Maine 288 (Me. 1879); Hawkes v. Kehoe, 79 N.E. 766 (Mass. 1907); Libman v. Levenson, 128 N.E. 13 (Mass. 1920); Kinney v. Hickox, 38 N.W. 816 (Neb. 1888); Wilson v. Clark, 60 N.H. 352 (N.H. 1880); Smith v. McCluskey, 45 Barb. 610 (N.Y. Sup. 1866); Wicks v. Bowman, 5 Daly 225 (N.Y.); Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R.R. Co., 8 P. 544 (Or. 1885); Elmore v. Stephens-Russell Co., 171 P. 763 (Or. 1918); Huguenin v. Courtenay, 21 S.C. 403 (S.C. 1884).

(n100)Footnote 274. See the following statutes: Cal. Civ. Code, § 1662 (Deering); Haw. Rev. Stat., § 203-1 (1955); Mich. Comp. Laws § 565.701-565.703 (1948); N.Y. [Real Property Law] § 240-a; N.C. Gen. Stat., § 39-37-39-39; Or. Rev. Stat. § 93.290; S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1807 (1939); Wis. Stat. § 235.72 (1961).

(n101)Footnote 275. Ware v. Security First Nat'l Bank, 61 P.2d 936 (Cal. 1936); Phinizy v. Guernsey, 36 S.E. 796 (Ga. 1900); Oakes v. Wingfield, 99 S.E.2d 241 (Ga. App. 1957) (otherwise where vendee is in possession); Good v. Jarrard, 76 S.E. 698 (S.C. 1912); Bowdle v. Jencks, 99 N.W. 98 (S.D. 1904); Appleton Elec. Co. v. Rogers, 228 N.W. 505 (Wis. 1930).

(n102)Footnote 276. Guzman v. Acuna, 653 S.W.2d 315 (Tex. App. 4th Dist. 1983); Dolan v. Spencer, 21 P.2d 411 (Colo. 1933) (permitting lessee optionee to take insurance premiums); Nelson Properties v. Denham, 167 S. 35 (Fla. 1936) (permitting lessee-optionee to take insurance premiums); Brady v. Welsh, 204 N.W. 235 (Iowa 1925); Russell v. Elliott, 186 N.W. 824 (S.D. 1922).

(n103)Footnote 277. Pasker v. Harleysville Mut. Ins. Co., 469 A.2d 41 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1983); Guzman v. Acuna, 653 S.W.2d 315 (Tex. App. 4th Dist. 1983); William Skinner & Sons Ship Bldg. & Dry-Dock Co. v. Houghton, 48 A. 85 (Md. 1900).

(n104)Footnote 278. Millville Aerie, No. 1836, Fraternal Order of Eagles v. Weatherby, 88 A. 847 (N.J. Ch. 1913).

(n105)Footnote 279. Dolan v. Spencer, 21 P.2d 411 (Colo. 1933).

"The courts have also announced a rule * * * to the effect that when the language employed in an insurance contract is ambiguous, or when a doubt arises in respect to the application, exceptions to, or limitations of, liability thereunder, they should be interpreted most favorably to the insured, or to the beneficiary or mortgagee to whom the loss is payable as his interest may appear. Such contracts are to be interpreted in the light of the fact that they are drawn by the insurer, and are rarely understood by the insured, to whom every rational indulgence should be given, and in whose favor the policy should be liberally construed. Where the language and terms of a policy are framed and formulated by the insurer, every ambiguity and uncertainty therein should be resolved in favor of the insured.

* * * Policies of title insurance furnish no exception to the general rules of construction." Coast Mut. Bldg.-Loan Assn. v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 57 P.2d 1392 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1936); Marandino v. Laws. Title Ins. Corp., 159 S.E. 181 (Va. 1931).

(n106)Footnote 280. Shaw v. Cramton, 239 N.W. 366 (Mich. 1931) (applying proceeds of insurance to the debt); World Exhibit Corp. v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., 61 N.Y.S.2d 889 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1946) (allowing vendee to have specific performance with abatement of purchase price to extent of insurance proceeds); Gunsch v. Gunsch, 71 N.W.2d 623 (N.D. 1955) (if vendor insures he must apply the proceeds toward the contract price). The lessee with option to buy was entitled to claim credit on the purchase price for the proceeds of fire insurance received by the lessor when the lessee exercised his option. Gard v. Razanskas, 85 N.W.2d 612 (Iowa 1957). If the contract requires vendee to carry fire insurance, the proceeds received by the vendor are applicable on the purchase price, but not if the vendor has on his own account taken out his own insurance. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957). Minority adhering to Rayner v. Preston, 18 Ch. Div. 1 (Ch. 1879) (divided opinion).

(n107)Footnote 281. Under the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act, the risk of loss is in the party in possession at the time of loss. Unif. Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act, 9C U.L.A. 313. Adopted by: Cal. Civ. Code, § 1662 (Deering); Haw. Rev. Stat., § 203-1 (1955); Mich. Comp. Laws § 565.701-565.703 (1948); N.Y. [Real Property Law] § 240-a; N.C. Gen. Stat., § 39-37-39-39; Or. Rev. Stat. § 93.290; S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1807 (1939); Wis. Stat. § 235.72 (1961).

(n108)Footnote 282. Kelly v. Smith, 24 P.2d 471 (Cal. 1933).

(n109)Footnote 283. Hillard v. Franklin, 41 S.W.3d 106 (Tenn. App. 2000) (vendee entitled to have insurance proceeds credited toward the purchase price); Gunsch v. Gunsch, 71 N.W.2d 623 (N.D. 1955). An optionee exercising option after partial loss is entitled to have insurance proceeds applied against purchase price. Dolan v. Spencer, 21 P.2d 411 (Colo. 1933); Williams v. Lilley, 34 A. 765 (Conn. 1895); Nelson Props. v. Denham, 167 S. 35 (Fla. 1936); Gard v. Razanskas, 85 N.W.2d 612 (Iowa 1957); Charles Hoffman, Student Author, Optionee Entitled to Insurance Proceeds On Destroyed Leased Premises When He Exercises the Option After Property is Destroyed, 9 Syracuse L. Rev. 321 (1958); William Skinner & Sons Ship Bldg. & Dry-Dock Co. v. Houghton, 48 A. 85 (Md. 1900). Where the risk of loss falls upon the vendor, either by reason of contract, stipulation or rule of law, his right to the insurance is indisputable.

Phinizy v. Guernsey, 36 S.E. 796 (Ga. 1900); Adams v. N. Am. Ins. Co., 96 N.E. 1094 (Mass. 1912). The vendor holds the insurance in trust for the purchaser. Brady v. Welsh, 204 N.W. 235 (Iowa 1925); Vendor and Purchaser - Insurance - Vendee's Claim to Insurance Money Received by Vendor in Absence of Assignment, 35 Yale L.J. 240 (1925); Russell v. Elliott, 186 N.W. 824 (S.D. 1922); Vendor and Purchaser - Fire Insurance - Right of Vendee to Proceeds of Policy Taken Out By Vendor, 6 Minn. L. Rev. 607 (1922). See Shaw v. Cramton, 239 N.W. 366 (Mich. 1931). Vendor need not credit vendee with purchase price where not required by the contract to insure. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957).

(n110)Footnote 284. Upham v. Lowry, 485 N.Y.S.2d 680 (N.Y. Sup. 1985); Brownell v. Bd. of Educ., 146 N.E. 630 (N.Y. 1925). Modified to give the vendee the proceeds if he had paid the premiums on a policy taken out in the vendor's name. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957); Rudolph v. Parr, Student Author, Vendor's Insurance Applied to Reduce Purchase Price, 9 Syracuse L. Rev. 155 (1957).

(n111)Footnote 285. Guzman v. Acuna, 653 S.W.2d 315 (Tex. App. 4th Dist. 1983)

Vendee permitted to sue insurance company. Vogel v. N. Assur. Co., 114 F. Supp. 591 (E.D. Pa. 1953); Brady v. Welsh, 204 N.W. 235 (Iowa 1925); Dubin Paper Co. v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 63 A.2d 85 (Pa. 1949).

(n112)Footnote 286. Upham v. Lowry, 485 N.Y.S.2d 680 (N.Y. Sup. 1985); Alexander v. Security-First Nat'l Ban, 652 P.2d 735 (Cal. 1936); Brownell v. Bd. of Educ., 146 N.E. 630 (N.Y. 1925).

(n113)Footnote 287. Vendee required to pay premiums under sales contract. Raplee v. Piper, 3 N.Y.2d 179 (N.Y. 1957).

(N114)Footnote 288. Mut. Benefit Ins. Co. v. Goschenhoppen Mut. Ins. Co., 572 A.2d 1275 (Pa. Super. 1990).

Dubin Paper Co. v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 63 A.2d 85 (Pa. 1949).

(n115)Footnote 289. Jelco v. Third Jud. Dist. Ct., 511 P.2d 739 (Utah 1973) (buyer entitled to condemnation proceeds); Lansburgh v. Market St. Ry. Co., 220 P.2d 423 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1950).

(n116)Footnote 290. Reife v. Osmers, 169 N.E. 399 (N.Y. 1929).

(n117)Footnote 291. Cal. Civ. Code, § 1662 (Deering); Haw. Rev. Stat., § 203-1 (1955); Mich. Comp. Laws § 565.701-565.703 (1948); N.Y. [Real Property Law] § 240-a; N.C. Gen. Stat., § 39-37-39-39; Or. Rev. Stat. § 93.290; S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1807 (1939); Wis. Stat. § 235.72 (1961).

(n118)Footnote 292. Homeland Communities, Inc. v. Rahall & Fryer, P.C., 509 S.E.2d 714 (Ga. App. 1998); Machen v. Yost, 296 F. 1008 (D.C. App. 1924); Hamilton v. Coster, 144 N.E. 226 (Mass. 1924); Johnston v. Mohrabacker, 247 P. 389 (Okla. 1926); Grogan v. Lea, 269 S.W. 1070 (Tex. Civ. App. 1925).

(n119)Footnote 293. Millville Aerie, No. 1836, Fraternal Order of Eagles v. Weatherby, 88 A. 847 (N.J. Ch. 1913). See Wolvos v. Meyer, 668 N.E.2d 671 (Ind. 1996) (absent express contrary agreement, seller is responsible for any taxes and other obligations incurred before date of sale).

(n120)Footnote 294. Wolvos v. Meyer, 668 N.E.2d 671 (Ind. 1996); Miranda v. Smyrna Bldg. Corp., 693 N.Y.S.2d 382 (N.Y. City Civ. Ct. 1998); Gibbs v. Peoples Nat'l Bank, 64 N.E. 1060 (Ill. 1902); Carter v. Reaume, 123 N.W. 539 (Mich. 1909); Locander v. Lounsbery, 24 N.J. Eq. 417 (N.J. Ch. 1874); Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Jersey City, 35 A.2d 628 (N.J. Dist. Ct. 1943); Lathers v. Keogh, 17 N.E. 131 (N.Y. 1888); Hudson Coal Co. v. Ogden, 61 A. 902 (Pa. 1905).

(n121)Footnote 295. United Brick & Tile Co. v. Ault, 123 S.W.2d 39 (Mo. 1938). Where vendors by contract assumed liability for assessments made on improvements completed before sale though assessments not yet levied held applicable even though assessments could not be paid off by anticipation of future payments. Morris v. Ehlers, 124 A.2d 776 (Md. 1956).

(n122)Footnote 296. Wis. Town Lot Co. v. Astleford, 222 N.W.2d 285 (Minn. 1974); Helvering v. Johnson County Realty Co., 128 F.2d 716 (8th Cir. 1942); Baker v. Smith, 70 S.E. 239 (Ga. 1911); Clinton v. Shugart, 101 N.W. 785 (Iowa 1904); Hyman v. Fischer, 52 N.Y.S.2d 553 (N.Y. Sup. 1944); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n123)Footnote 297. Tunkel v. Filippone, 66 A.2d 339 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1949).

(n124)Footnote 298. Tippets v. Gifford, 565 P.2d 117 (Wyo. 1977); Hous. Auth. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 309 S.2d 920 (La. App. 3d Cir. 1975); Taylor v. Fitzsimmons, 41 S.W. 263 (Ky. App. 1897); Skinner v. Christie, 29 A. 772 (N.J. Ch. 1894); Mandel v. Hess, 107 N.Y.S. 766 (N.Y. Sup. 1907); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n125)Footnote 299. Tedco Dev. Corp. v. Overland Hills, Inc., 287 N.W.2d 49 (Neb. 1980); Gage v. Leslie, 254 P. 362 (Kan. 1927); Waller v. Lieberman, 183 N.W. 235 (Mich. 1921).

(n126)Footnote 300. Johnson v. McKinnon, 34 S. 272 (Fla. 1903); Nat'l Bank v. Danforth, 7 S.E. 546 (Ga. 1887); Mallory v. Gray, 103 N.W. 1015 (Iowa 1905); Clinton v. Shugart, 101 N.W. 785 (Iowa 1904); Densmore v. Haggerty, 59 Pa. 189 (Pa. 1868).

(n127)Footnote 301. Bradford v. Union Bank, 54 U.S. 57 (1851); Wood v. Deskins, 141 F. 500 (4th Cir. 1905); Vance v. Newman, 80 S.W. 574 (Ark. 1904); Nat'l Bank v. Danforth, 7 S.E. 546 (Ga. 1887); Glancy v. Elliott, 14 Ill. 456 (Ill. 1853); Cole v. Wright, 70 Ind. 179 (Ind. 1880); Lillie v. Case, 6 N.W. 254 (Iowa 1880); Pringle v. Wagnoer, 68 N.W. 423 (Mich. 1896); Fritz v. O'Brien Land Co., 136 N.W. 301 (Minn. 1912); Watson v. Sawyers, 54 Miss. 64 (Miss. 1876); Brown v. Brown, 27 S.W. 552 (Mo. 1894); Cobb v. Bohm, 11 Ohio Dec. Rep. 844, 30 Bull. 142 (1893); Free v. Little, 88 P. 407 (Utah 1907); Angell v. Bashaw, 73 A. 23 (Vt. 1909); Spies v. Butts, 53 S.E. 897 (W. Va. 1906); Hunholz v. Helz, 124 N.W. 257 (Wis. 1910).

(n128)Footnote 302. Mallory v. Gray, 103 N.W. 1015 (Iowa 1905).

(n129)Footnote 303. Boyd v. Brown, 181 A. 142 (N.J. 1935).

(n130)Footnote 304. Headrick v. Wisehart, 41 Ind. 87 (Ind. 1872).

(n131)Footnote 305. Oregon & W. Colonization Co. v. Strang, 260 P. 1002 (Or. 1927).

(n132)Footnote 306. S. Inv. Co. v. Galloway, 90 S. 300 (Ala. 1921); Anderson v. Savage, 139 N.E. 497 (Mass. 1923); Oregon & W. Colonization Co. v. Strang, 260 P. 1002 (Or. 1927); Harris v. Lucca, 133 A. 815 (R.I. 1926). See United States v. Consolidated Elevator Co., 141 F.2d 791 (8th 1944); Highbaugh v. Nolan, 270 S.W. 64 (Ky. App. 1925).

(n133)Footnote 307. Farmers St. Bank v. Neese, 665 N.E.2d 534 (Ill. App. 4th Dist. 1996); Brady v. Fowler, 188 P. 320 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1920).

(n134)Footnote 308. Glenmary Land Co. v. Stewart, 290 S.W. 503 (Ky. App. 1927).

(n135)Footnote 309. Rayburn v. Norton, 243 P. 560 (Or. 1926). See Grogan v. Lea, 269 S.W. 1070 (Tex. Civ. App. 1925).

(n136)Footnote 310. Wolvos v. Meyer, 668 N.E.2d 671 (Ind. 1996); Kan. City Life Ins. Co. v. Gehant, 198 N.E. 703 (Ill. 1935).

(n137)Footnote 311. Coke v. Bargaimes, 116 S.W.2d 904 (Tex. Civ. App. 1938).

(n138)Footnote 312. In re Stenardo, 991 F.2d 1089 (3d Cir. 1993); Moran v. Fifteenth Ward Bldg. & Loan Assn., 25 A.2d 426 (N.J. Ch. 1942).

(n139)Footnote 313. McClenan v. Brancato Iron and Fence Works, 724 N.Y.S.2d 438 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 2001); Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897).

(n140)Footnote 314. Rogers v. Hill, 706 N.E.2d 438 (Ohio App. 4th Dist. 1998); Otto v. Bolton, 1 All. Eng. 960, 2 K.B. 46 (1936).

(n141)Footnote 315. Rogers v. Hill, 706 N.E.2d 438 (Ohio App. 4th Dist. 1998); Norris v. Mitchell, 495 S.E.2d 809 (Va. 1998); Payne v. Smith, 249 S.W. 995 (Ky. App. 1923).

(n142)Footnote 316. Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897).

"It seems to be well settled in this state and other jurisdictions that, absent an express agreement to the contrary, a seller of real estate can not be held liable for defective condition of the premises. Langdon v. Green, 49 Mo. 363; Smith v. Tucker, 151 Tenn. 347, 270 S.W. 66, 41 A. L. R. 830; Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897); Slavitz v. Morris Park Estates, 98 Misc. 314, 162 N.Y.S. 888; Upp v. Darner, 150 Iowa 403, 130 N.W. 409, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 743, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 574." Cornbow v. Kansas City Ground Inv. Co., 218 S.W.2d 539 (Mo. 1949).

(n143)Footnote 317. Smith v. Tucker, 270 S.W. 66 (Tenn. 1925).

(n144)Footnote 318. McClenan v. Brancato Iron and Fence Works, 724 N.Y.S.2d 438 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 2001); Copfer v. Golden, 288 P.2d 90 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1955); Upp v. Darner, 130 N.W. 409 (Iowa 1911); McQuillan v. Clark Thread Co., 172 A. 370 (N.J. Sup. 1934); Slavitz v. Morris Park Ests., 162 N.Y.S. 888 (N.Y. Sup. 1917); Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897).

(n145)Footnote 319. Copfer v. Golden, 288 P.2d 90 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1955); Upp v. Darner, 130 N.W. 409 (Iowa 1911); McQuillan v. Clark Thread Co., 172 A. 370 (N.J. Sup. 1934).

(n146)Footnote 320. Graham v. Claypool, 978 P.2d 298 (Kan. App. 1999); Stanley v. Turtle Mt. Gas & Oil Co., 567 N.W.2d 345 (N.D. 1997); United States v. Inmon, 205 F.2d 681 (5th Cir. 1953); Caporaletti v. A-F Corp., 137 F. Supp. 14 (D. D.C. 1956); Derby v. Pub. Serv. Co., 119 A.2d 335 (N.H. 1955); Kilmer v. White, 171 N.E. 908 (N.Y. 1930); Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897).

(n147)Footnote 321. Stanley v. Turtle Mt. Gas & Oil Co., 567 N.W.2d 345 (N.D. 1997).

Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897). Equitable conversion occurs the moment the contract becomes effective. Pet. of S.R.A., Inc., 18 N.W.2d 442 (Minn. 1945).

(n148)Footnote 322. Westwood Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. National Fuel Gas Distrib. Corp., 737 F. Supp. 1272 (W.D.N.Y. 1990); Pharm v. Lituchy, 27 N.E.2d 811 (N.Y. 1940).

(n149)Footnote 323. Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co., 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1994); Goodrich v. Seamands, 870 P.2d 1061 (Wyo. 1994).

United States v. Inmon, 205 F.2d 681 (5th Cir. 1953); Derby v. Pub. Serv. Co., 119 A.2d 335 (N.H. 1955); Kilmer v. White, 171 N.E. 908 (N.Y. 1930); Palmore v. Morris, Tasker & Co., 37 A. 995 (Pa. 1897). Contra, McIntosh v. Goodwin, 292 S.W.2d 242 (Tenn. App. 1954); Ropeke v. Palmer, 6 Tenn App. 348 (Tenn. App. 1927); Otto v. Bolton, 1 All. Eng. 960, 2 K.B. 46 (1936).

(n150)Footnote 324. Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N.Y. 56 (N.Y. 1884). Under the English rule, the vendor in possession is a "trustee" for the vendee, liable for deterioration by neglect and entitled to credit for expenses of preservation. Phillips v. Silvester, 8 L.R.-Ch. App. 173 (Ch. 1872). See The Vendor's Liability for Permissive Waste, 48 Harv. L. Rev. 821 (1935).

(n151)Footnote 325. Clarke v. Ramuz, 2 Q.B. 456 (1891).

(n152)Footnote 326. Gibson v. Eller, 13 Ind. 124 (Ind. 1859).

(n153)Footnote 327. Moses v. Johnson, 7 S. 146 (Ala. 1890).

(n154)Footnote 328. First Mustang St. Bank v. Garland Bloodworth, Inc., 825 P.2d 254 (Okla. 1991); Williams v. Lynd Tp., 312 N.W.2d 110 (Minn. 1981); Alechoff v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp., 257 P. 569 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1927); Hueston v. Miss. & Rum River Boom Co., 79 N.W. 92 (Minn. 1899); George v. Fisk; 32 N.H. 32 (N.H. 1855); Matthews v. James Lumber Co., 122 S.E. 480 (N.C. 1924); Gotshall v. J. Langdon & Co., 16 Pa. Super. 158 (Pa. Super. 1900); Kateiva v. Snyder, 254 P. 857 (Wash. 1927). But see Foley v. Wyeth, 84 Mass. 131 (Mass. 1861). Contra, if injury is permanent. New Albany v. Lines, 51 N.E. 346 (Ind. App. 1898). In accord if a continuing nuisance. Frazier v. Westerville, 36 N.E.2d 812 (Ohio App. 1941).

(n155)Footnote 329. Lawrenz v. Langford Elec. Co., 288 N.W. 727 (Minn. 1939).

(n156)Footnote 330. Kimsey v. Burgin, 806 S.W.2d 571 (Tex. App. 1991); Garland v. Wentzel, 294 S.W.2d 145 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956).

(n157)Footnote 331. Conners v. Winans, 204 N.Y.S. 142 (N.Y. Sup. 1924).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.07

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.07 Vendee's Title to Rents and Crops.

The cases divide as to whether the vendor or vendee is entitled to the rent accruing prior to the bargain day. n332 As between vendor and purchaser under an executory contract for the sale of land, the purchaser is not, in the absence of a special contract to that effect, entitled to rents of the property between the time of contract execution and deed delivery; the rents belong to the person holding the legal title, in the absence of a contract providing otherwise. n333 It has been held that upon the giving of a bond for a deed, providing only for the payment of stipulated sums, the vendee is entitled to the rents. n334 On the execution of the deed, the accruing rents and rents not due go to the purchaser, n335 including rents from the vendor occupying the premises after the vendor should have conveyed on proper tender made; n336 but the parties may contract to the contrary. n337 Rent which has already accrued at the time of sale is personalty and does not pass to the purchaser. n338 The purchaser will be entitled to the proceeds of a rent note not matured at the time of the conveyance. n339 Prior to conveyance, the rents as a general rule belong to the vendor. n340 A vendee in possession of realty as a tenant holds as vendee without liability for rent after default of vendor in closing the title. n341 The purchaser in possession must account to the vendor for rents during the vendor's occupancy where the contract is abrogated without being consummated. n342 Where a parol contract for the sale and purchase of land is repudiated by either party thereto, the vendor is entitled to rent from the beginning of the purchaser's possession equal to legal interest on the purchase n343 As a general rule, interest is not payable on the purchase price where vendor remains in possession and collects the rents and profits. n344

Where crops have matured and have been severed from the land at the time the contract is entered into, they remain the property of the vendor, n345 but if the vendee is given possession under the contract the vendee is entitled to the unmatured crops on the land at the date of the contract. n346 The right of possession and rents go with the legal title so that rents falling due before title passes belong to the vendor. n347 The vendee is entitled to the rents and profits during the time the vendor delays performing, n348 or has the alternative of having to pay no interest during the delay. n349

FOOTNOTES:
(n1)Footnote 332. Vendor receives. In re Boyle's Est., 134 N.W. 590 (Iowa 1912). Contra, where vendee pays interest. Scott v. Sloan, 84 P. 117 (Kan. 1906); Turner v. Bryant, 137 N.Y.S. 466 (N.Y. App. Div. 3d Dept. 1912).

(n2)Footnote 333. Jackson v. Creek, 94 N.E. 416 (Ind. App. 1911); In re Boyle's Est., 134 N.W. 590 (Iowa 1912);

Tucker v. McLaughlin-Farrar Co., 129 P. 5 (Okla. 1912). Contra, Wilson v. Thompson, 51 S.2d 20 (Ala. 1951); Griffith v. Whittier, 223 P.2d 1062 (Wash. 1950).

(n3)Footnote 334. Able v. Gunter, 57 S. 464 (Ala. 1912).

(n4)Footnote 335. McCall v. Morgan, 14 S.2d 374 (Ala. 1943); Nelson v. Joshel, 137 N.E. 389 (Ill. 1922); Carmouche v. Jung, 102 S. 518 (La. 1925); Lesseigne v. Cedar Grove Realty Co., 91 S. 136 (La. 1922); Nat'l Bank of Comm. v. Lefferdink, 193 N.W. 916 (Neb. 1923); Currie v. Harris, 172 S.W.2d 404 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943); Faircloth v. Flewellen, 130 S.W.2d 1098 (Tex. Civ. App. 1939); Wootton v. Bishop, 257 S.W. 930 (Tex. Civ. App. 1923); Leonard v. Caruthers, 236 S.W. 189 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921), modified, 254 S.W. 779 (Tex. Com. App. 1923).

(n5)Footnote 336. Highbaugh v. Nolan, 270 S.W. 64 (Ky. App. 1925).

(n6)Footnote 337. Davis v. Aydelott, 238 S.W. 1011 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); Cahill v. McCown, 227 P. 502 (Wash. 1924).

(n7)Footnote 338. Becker v. Hwy. Trailer Co., 3 N.W.2d 725 (Wis. 1942); Walther v. Steward, 88 P.2d 475 (Wyo. 1939).

(n8)Footnote 339. Greenwood v. Bennett, 95 S. 159 (Ala. 1922).

(n9)Footnote 340. Mintz v. Tannous, 600 N.E.2d 269 (Ohio App. 1991); Dailey v. Walden; 648 P.2d 258 (Kan. App. 1982); Sachs v. Norton-Wheeler Stave Co., 240 S.W. 16 (Ark. 1922); Nelson v. Joshel, 137 N.E. 389 (Ill. 1922); Luly Stores Co. v. Hartman, 235 Ill. App. 319 (Ill. App. 4th Dist. 1925); Barrell v. Britton, 155 N.E. 193 (Mass. 1927); Bonfils v. Geeslin, 247 P. 673 (Okla. 1926); Peck v. Farmers Nat'l Bank, 243 P. 861 (Wash. 1926). Vendee in possession entitled to. profits. Sale v. Swann, 120 S.E. 870 (Va. 1924).

(n10)Footnote 341. Kemp v. Levy, 205 N.Y.S. 545 (N.Y. Sup. 1924).

(n11)Footnote 342. Dunham v. Phillips, 241 S.W. 361 (Ark. 1922); Ryan v. Shoenberger, 224 Ill. App. 308 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1922). See Hovsepian v. Eskender, 231 P. 364 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1924).

(n12)Footnote 343. Duncan v. Duncan, 83 S.W.2d 485 (Ky. App. 1935).

(n13)Footnote 344. Rambusch v. Burke, 223 N.Y.S. 464 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1927); Nasset v. Houska, 186 N.W. 255 (N.D. 1921); Security Sav. & Trust Co. v. Latta, 247 P. 777 (Or. 1926).

(n14)Footnote 345. Speicher v. Lacy, 115 P. 271 (Okla. 1911).

(n15)Footnote 346. Falk v. Amsberry, 633 P.2d 799 (Or. App. 1981); Speicher v. Lacy, 115 P. 271 (Okla. 1911).

(n16)Footnote 347. Moran v. Fifteenth Ward Bldg. & Loan Assn., 25 A.2d 426 (N.J. Ch. 1942).

(n17)Footnote 348. Gage v. Leslie, 254 P. 362 (Kan. 1927) (less interest plus taxes); McCleneghan v. Powell, 180 N.W. 576 (Neb. 1920); Haffey v. Lynch, 77 N.Y.S. 587 (N.Y. Sup. 1902), aff'd, 85 N.E. 817 (N.Y. 1908); Harper v. Battle, 104 S.E. 658 (N.C. 1920); Sweeney v. Brow, 100 A. 593 (R.I. 1917).

(n18)Footnote 349. Pearce v. Third Ave. Imp. Co., 128 S. 396 (Ala. 1930); Mitchell v. Mutch, 179 N.W. 440 (Iowa 1920); Crockett v. Gray, 18 P. 905 (Kan. 1888); King v. Ruckman, 24 N. J. Eq. 556 (N.J. 1873); Worrall v. Munn, 53 N.Y. 185 (N.Y. 1873).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.08

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.08 The Offer.

[Go To Supp]

The rather complex problems of offer and acceptance are as applicable to real estate sales contracts as to other types of contracts. The offer to sell and the acceptance of the offer make a binding contract between the parties. n350 An offer of terms on the one side and an assent to or acceptance of those terms on the other side, communicated between the parties is the form of every agreement. There must be an offer expressed or implied, and this offer must be accepted according to its tenor before a binding contract is formed. In order to supply this requisite, there must be a meeting of the minds as to the essential elements. n351 The offer is the proffer or proposal of something for acceptance or rejection. n352 A "bid" on real property is a binding offer to make a contract. n353 One who agrees to purchase property under the terms of a listing agreement is making an offer, not accepting the offer. n354

To constitute a valid contract for the sale of real estate, there must be a definite and unconditional offer on the one part, and an absolute acceptance on the other. n355 One who makes an offer has a right to stipulate in the offer any conditions desired, and the acceptance to conclude the agreement must in every respect meet and correspond with the offer. n356 The parties must mutually assent and there must be an intention common to all who are to be bound. n357 Both parties must understand the same thing in the same sense and both parties must be bound or neither. n358 The offer may be withdrawn before acceptance, but, if accepted without conditions, and without varying its terms, and the acceptance is communicated to the other party, without unreasonable delay, neither party can withdraw at pleasure. n359 A distinction is to be made between an offer to sell and an invitation to negotiate. n360 An offer to sell that is not founded upon a consideration may be withdrawn by the offeror at any time before its acceptance. n361

The transaction leading to the consummation of the contract may be conducted by mail, n362 telegraph, n363 or telephone. n364 If the parties exchange letters or telegrams, and a contract is entered into by such means, the contract becomes complete when the latest proposition by one party is accepted by the other party. n365 This happens at the time an unqualified assent to the offer is deposited in the post office properly directed and stamped, n366 unless the offer is so qualified as to require the actual receipt of the letter of acceptance before the agreement is completed. n367 Posting an acceptance of an offer may be sufficient where it can be fairly inferred from the circumstances of the case that the acceptance might be sent by post. In other words, where the circumstances are such that it must have been within the contemplation of the parties that the post was to be or might be used as a means of communicating an acceptance of the offer, then the acceptance by post is justified. In general, when a proposition is sent by mail the sender impliedly authorizes its acceptance through the same means and that such implication arises when the post is used to make the offer and no other mode is suggested. n368 This doctrine, however, is loosely stated. It certainly is somewhat artificial to speak of the person to whom the offer is made as having implied authority of the other party to send the acceptance by post. The offeree needs no authority to transmit the acceptance through any particular channel; the offeree may select any means desired provided it is within the contemplation of the parties and according to the ordinary usages of mankind, the post office no less than any other. Offerees are not required to tender acceptance by the same method used in making the offer, although if any other means of communication is adopted the acceptor uses that means at the acceptor's own risk. n369 The post office is merely an agent to convey communications, not to receive them, and cannot be considered as the only means by which an acceptance may be communicated. n370

An offer by letter to purchase for a specified sum is presumed to be an offer of the amount in cash. n371 Where the offer is conditioned on an amicable adjustment with a tenant, a telegram accepting the offer before the adjustment will not create an enforceable contract. n372 A provision for notice of acceptance by mail is satisfied by the personal delivery of a written notice. n373 The acceptance of an offer by telephone, followed by a letter of confirmation, has been held to be a binding acceptance, and not a new offer, notwithstanding that the offeror requested the offeree to "wire" acceptance at once. n374

Since time is of the essence in an option, any extension of time is a new option and must be in writing. n375 This is not true, however, of sales contract closing dates where time is not of the essence. n376

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 350. Gross v. Regor Fin. Co., 96 F.2d 37 (5th Cir. 1938); Gibson v. Boyd, 172 S.W.2d 928 (Ark. 1943); Wilson v. Spry, 223 S.W. 564 (Ark. 1920); Perkins v. Simmons, 15 S.2d 289 (Fla. 1943); Frissell v. Nichols, 114 S. 431 (Fla. 1927); Walton's Exec. v. Franks, 228 S.W. 1025 (Ky. App. 1921); Fitzgerald v. Hyland, 6 S.2d 321 (La. 1942); Wabst v. Serial Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn., 51 N.Y.S.2d 555 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1944); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); McMahan v. McMahon, 115 S.E. 293 (S.C. 1922); Fickas v. Bowles, 158 S.W.2d 118 (Tex. Civ. App. 1941). The offer to be effective must be a binding offer. Turner v. Snype, 110 S. 109 (La. 1926).

(n2)Footnote 351. Dishinger v. Potter, 2001 Utah App. LEXIS 51 (Utah App. June 28, 2001); Carr v. Duval, 39 U.S. 77 (1840); Loaiza v. Super. Ct., 24 P. 707 (Cal. 1890); Phelps v. Good, 96 P. 216 (Idaho 1908); British-Am. Portland Cement Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co., 164 S.W. 468 (Mo. 1913); Egger v. Nesbit, 27 S.W. 385 (Mo. 1894); MacLaeon v. Lipchitz, 56 N.Y.S.2d 609 (N.Y. Sup. 1945); Davis v. Brigham, 107 P. 961 (Or. 1910); Ballou v. Carter, 137 N.W. 603 (S.D. 1912); Todorovich v. Kinnickinnic Mut. Loan & Bldg. Assn., 298 N.W. 226 (Wis. 1941).

(n3)Footnote 352. Frissell v. Nichols, 114 S. 431 (Fla. 1927).

(n4)Footnote 353. Dalto, Inc. v. Village of Mineola, 681 N.Y.S.2d 312 (1998); GFF Corp. v. Associate Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 130 F.3d 1381 (10th Cir. 1997).

(n5)Footnote 354. Hanes v. Davis, 601 N.E.2d 685 (Ohio Misc. 1992).

(n6)Footnote 355. McCormick v. Bonfils, 60 P. 296 (Okla. Terr. 1900). See Shortridge v. Ghio, 253 S.W.2d 838 (Mo. App. 1952).

(n7)Footnote 356. Fed. Land Bank v. Bridgeforth, 173 S. 66 (Ala. 1937).

(n8)Footnote 357. Mountain Properties, Inc. v. Tyler Hill Realty Corp., 767 A.2d 1096 (Pa. Super. 2001): Perkins v. Simmons, 15 S.2d 289 (Fla. 1943); Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 191 S.W. 439 (Ky. App. 1917).

(n9)Footnote 358. Am. Can Co. v. Agric. Ins. Co., 106 P. 720 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1909).

(n10)Footnote 359. Hendricks. v. Behee, 786 S.W.2d 610 (Mo. App. 1990); Tucker v. Gray, 90 S. 158 (Fla. 1921); Kamenjarin v. Williams, 158 N.E. 568 (Ill. 1927); Turner v. Hall, 104 S.E. 861 (Va. 1920).

(n11)Footnote 360. Blakeslee v. Nelson, 207 N.Y.S. 676 (N.Y. App. Div. 3d Dept. 1925); Patrick v. Kleine, 215 N.Y.S. 305 (N.Y. Sup. 1926).

(n12)Footnote 361. McCutchan v. Iowa State Bank, 5 N.W.2d 813 (Iowa 1942).

(n13)Footnote 362. Farmers Equity Coop. Creamery Assn. v. U.S., 132 F.2d 738 (10th Cir. 1943); Richardson v. Stuberfield, 271 S.W. 345 (Ark. 1925); Harper v. Thurlow, 270 S.W. 607 (Ark. 1925); Carlsen v. Hay, 195 P. 103 (Colo. 1921); Griffin v. Lester, 114 S.E. 87 (Ga. App. 1922); Wagner v. McClay, 138 N.E. 164 (acceptance); Petersen v. Jensen, 177 N.W. 74 (Iowa 1920); Custer v. Royse, 204 P. 995 (Kan. 1922); Morrison v. Mioton, 113 S. 456 (La. 1927); Southport Mill v. Ansley, 106 S. 720 (La. 1926); Carrig v. Earle, 135 N.E. 872 (Mass. 1922); Lawrence v. Rosenberg, 130 N.E. 189 (Mass. 1921); O'Shea v. Smith, 5 N.W.2d 348 (Neb. 1942); Nos. 2 and 4 Roman Ave. v. Goddard, 221 N.Y.S. 284 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1927); Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. American Brick & Clay Mfg. Co., 124 A. 650 (Pa. 1924); Cullen v. Donahue, 121 A. 392 (R.I. 1923). See Henry W. Keyes & Philip J. Lawrence, Passing Papers, 1 Boston B. J. 24 (1957).

(n14)Footnote 363. Grey v. Nickey Bros., 271 F. 249 (5th Cir. 1921); Marti-Matter Co. v. Thomas, 202 P. 703 (Colo. 1921); Lloyd v. Mickelson, 210 N.W. 586 (Minn. 1926); Mitchell v. Morgan, 181 N.W. 958 (S.D. 1921); Craven v. Escajeda, 280 S.W. 225 (Tex. Civ. App. 1926).

(n15)Footnote 364. Barchus v. Johnson, 92 S. 566 (La. 1922).

(n16)Footnote 365. Moore v. Pierson, 6 Iowa 279 (Iowa 1858); Gates v. Dudgeon, 66 N.E. 116 (N.Y. 1903); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n17)Footnote 366. Patrick v. Bowman, 149 U.S. 411 (1893); Kempner v. Cohn, 1 S.W. 869 (Ark. 1886); Moore v. Pierson, 6 Iowa 279 (Iowa 1858); Scottish-Am. Mortg. Co. v. Davis, 74 S.W. 17 (Tex. 1903); Parker v. California State Life Ins. Co., 40 P.2d 175 (Utah 1935); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W.Va. 1888).

(n18)Footnote 367. Cobb v. Dunlevie, 60 S.E. 384 (W.Va. 1908).

(n19)Footnote 368. Scottish-Am. Mortg. Co. v. Davis, 74 S.W. 17 (Tex. 1903).

(n20)Footnote 369. Scottish-Am. Mortg. Co. v. Davis, 74 S.W. 17 (Tex. 1903).

(n21)Footnote 370. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Schultz, 80 F. 337 (4th Cir. 1897); Perry v. Mount Hope Iron Co., 5 A. 632 (R.I. 1886).

(n22)Footnote 371. Lawrence v. Rosenberg, 130 N.E. 189 (Mass. 1921).

(n23)Footnote 372. Polich v. Severson, 216 P. 785 (Mont. 1923).

(n24)Footnote 373. Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. American Brick & Clay Mfg. Co., 124 A. 650 (Pa. 1924).

(n25)Footnote 374. Zimmerman Bros. & Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 N.W. 361 (Wis. 1935).

(n26)Footnote 375. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Willcoxon, 86 S.E.2d 507 (Ga. 1955).

(n27)Footnote 376. Scheer v. Doss, 83 S.E.2d 612 (Ga. 1954).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.09

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.09 The Acceptance.

[Go To Supp]

For an offer to sell or purchase realty to result in a binding contract there must be a valid acceptance. n377 A purported acceptance is a rejection if it is coupled with a condition not contained in the offer. n378 Until the offer is accepted, it is not a pending contract between the parties. n379 If the conduct, declarations or letters of the owner were merely to start negotiations which may subsequently result in a contract or are intended to call forth an offer from the one to whom addressed, acceptance thereof does not consummate a contract. n380 The fact that the parties do intend a subsequent agreement to be made is strong evidence to show that they do not intend the previous negotiations to amount to any proposal or acceptance. n381 The offer must be so complete that its acceptance will form an agreement containing all the terms necessary and intended by the parties, n382 because it is obvious that no agreement arises until its terms are settled, n383 and that an offer which is not complete is merely a step in the negotiations. n384

If one makes a proposition to sell land, with suggestions as to the method of consummation, one cannot withdraw the offer after the purchaser has accepted it and endeavored in good faith to comply with the suggestions made. n385

A verbal acceptance will suffice. n386 In one case, an acceptance was achieved by the filing of a bill for specific performance, with an agreement to purchase land attached, within time limit prescribed by an option, which called for the "delivery of an agreement to purchase." n387

An acceptance of an offer to sell real estate must be unconditional and in absolute agreement with the very terms of the offer; otherwise it is unenforceable. n388 It is well recognized that any change of any material stipulation n389 or imposition of conditions amounts to a rejection of the offer. n390 An offer to purchase which is unconditionally accepted by the person to whom the offer is made constitutes a binding contract, and is not subject to be withdrawn; n391 but the offer must be unconditionally accepted, n392 and free from any provision that would amount to a counteroffer. n393 Where one party makes an offer to purchase, and the owner makes a counteroffer to such party, no contract arises. n394 To constitute a binding contract between the offeror and the owner of the property, there must be a meeting of minds. n395 Where the owner misdescribed land sold to the offeror, causing the offeror to examine other lands than that sold, no meeting of minds arose sufficient to establish a binding contract. n396 If the acceptance attempts to impose additional terms, it is not an acceptance. n397

If, after a nonconforming acceptance, the offeree gives a subsequent acceptance in accordance with the terms of the proposal, the second acceptance is ineffective. The rejection of an offer terminates it, and it is beyond the power of the acceptor to revive the proposal by a subsequent acceptance. n398 An acceptance amounts to a rejection of the offer, if it is made upon the condition that the title be perfect, n399 or that it be acceptable to the purchaser's attorney. n400 However, certain statements in the acceptance may not constitute a conditional acceptance. Thus, where the acceptance states that which the vendor impliedly agreed to do in the offer, such statement does not impose any new condition such as will render the acceptance conditional. n401 In case the acceptance is unconditional in the first instance, a subsequent letter or notice requesting the offerer to attend to incidental matters relative to the closing of the transaction, but which are not required in the offer, will not render the acceptance conditional. n402

Where an offer to sell for a stated sum, part of which was to be paid in cash and the balance secured by a purchase-money mortgage, was accepted with the condition that the balance be secured by a second mortgage, it was held that the condition was a counter offer to sell and operated as a rejection of the original offer. n403

American case law universally affirms that the offer must be accepted unconditionally and unequivocally. The acceptance must be in strict compliance with the terms of the offer. n404 If the terms of the offer are changed or any new ones added by the acceptance, no meeting of the minds and, consequently, no contract arises. n405 The assent must be absolute and final. n406 No unconditional assent occurred, where the prospective purchaser stated that the papers were to pass when the vendor was ready to vacate, and the vendor insisted on immediate payment and execution of the deed. n407 In a case where a written acceptance was required within forty-eight hours, it was held that the mere exhibition of a written acceptance to a clerk of the offerer in his absence within the time limit was not sufficient. n408 Where a written acceptance is required, a verbal acceptance will not suffice. n409 Where purchaser makes an offer and agrees to pay deposit on written acceptance, the posting of the deposit after acceptance was held a condition precedent to completion of the contract. n410 A condition precedent is a condition to be performed before the obligation of the contract commences. n411 The one who makes an offer cannot be bound by a conditional acceptance. n412

Not only must the acceptance be unconditional but it must be identical with the terms of the offer. n413 It must not vary from the proposal either by way of omission, addition, or alteration. If it does, neither party is bound. n414 An acceptance varies from the terms of the offer when it omits certain features of the proposal and assent is given to only part of its terms. n415 Thus, where one party offered to sell all the timber on his land at a certain price and the other responded by offering to buy only that standing on a part of the land, there was no contract. n416 Likewise, if the acceptance adds to or goes beyond the terms proposed, no contract is formed. n417

The doctrine that the acceptance must be unequivocal has been carried in some cases to the extreme. Thus, a resident of California wrote to a resident of Iowa, offering to sell certain land, and added: "Let me hear from you at once." The receiver of the letter telegraphed his acceptance to the offer and added "money at your order at First National Bank here." It was held that as the proposal said nothing about the place where the money was to be paid, it was payable in California, and depositing it in the bank in Iowa was not an unconditional acceptance of the offer. n418 Where a person in Connecticut wrote to a man in Wisconsin offering to sell land for a certain sum, nothing being said about the place of payment or delivery of the deed, a letter was written accepting this proposal, and this was added: "You may make out the deed, leaving the name of the grantee in blank, and forward the same to X or to your agent, if you have one here to be delivered to me on payment." It was held this was no unconditional acceptance. n419 In these latter cases, the courts do not recognize that the reply may go beyond the terms of the proposal without qualifying the acceptance. The addition may be such as fairly to impart a request instead of a condition, n420 or the words inserted may be immaterial, such as where the offer is accepted provided the title is good. n421 An offeror who receives an acceptance which is too late or otherwise defective cannot regard it as valid, but such acceptance constitutes a counteroffer which must in turn be accepted by the original offeror. n422 However, where acceptance by the purchaser of the vendor's counteroffer followed in every essential element the language of the counteroffer, no further assent on the vendor's part was needed to create an enforceable contract of sale. n423

Time is the essence of an option to purchase within a fixed time and the option must be exercised within the time limit. n424 After an offer has been withdrawn, no acceptance of the withdrawn offer will make a binding contract; n425 but before a revocation will be effective it must be brought to the attention of the one to whom the offer was made. n426 A knowledge on the part of the proposed purchaser that the property has been sold to a third person is sufficient notice of the revocation. n427 The offer may or may not specify the time within which it must be accepted. In case the time is fixed by the offeror, it may be accepted at any time before the expiration of that period, provided there is no revocation by the offeror before acceptance. n428 Where no time for acceptance is specified, the law will imply that a reasonable time is intended. n429 A time limit may be waived, and this will occur where the purchase money is accepted after the expiration of the time limit. n430 A 95-day option for the purchase of land providing for ten days to procure an abstract and ten days to examine the abstract was construed to require election to purchase within ninety-five days. n431 In case of an agreement, based on a valuable consideration, to keep the offer open for a specified time, the offer may be accepted within that time, and no revocation can defeat this right of the acceptor. n432 An offer made by telegram specifying no time for an answer requires an answer within a reasonable time, and implies a quick reply by telegram, and it has been held that a reply a week thereafter is too late. n433 An offer made by letter which concludes, "Let me know by return mail," must be accepted by return mail. n434 Also, where an offer contained a stipulation which read, "This is for a wired acceptance on receiving this letter, or no trade," an acceptance wired the day following the receipt of the letter was held insufficient. n435 Should there be nothing to indicate the time within which acceptance must be made, the proposition must be accepted within a reasonable time. n436 As between the parties, an oral acceptance to purchase may be withdrawn any time before the acceptance is included within an executed written instrument. n437

At common law an offer under seal cannot be terminated during the time fixed therein, or, if no time is fixed, within a reasonable time, either by revocation or by the offeror's death or insanity. n438 An offer which is not under seal or given for a consideration may be revoked at any time before acceptance. n439 The burden of proof of such a withdrawal is on the party asserting it. n440 The offer is revoked by death before acceptance, n441 and a revocation also occurs if the offeree actually knows that the offeror has entered into a contract for sale of the property to another. n442 Where time for performance is not of the essence of the contract neither party may rescind without giving a reasonable time for performance. n443 An option to purchase land at a fixed price within a certain time given by the owner without any consideration may be revoked by the optioner at any time before an acceptance thereof has been communicated, n444 and the mere incurring of expenses on the part of the optionee does not constitute such a consideration as will prevent the exercise of this right. n445 This is true even though the option expressly provides that it shall be irrevocable for a certain time, where there is no consideration for the offer or for the agreement not to revoke. n446

Where real estate is sold at an auction, the fall of the auctioner's hammer creates the contract, which can be specifically performed. n447

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 377. Gibson v. Boyd, 172 S.W.2d 928 (Ark. 1943).

(n2)Footnote 378. State v. McClaine, 300 N.E.2d 342 (Ind. 1973); Rahm v. Cummings, 155 N.W. 201 (Minn. 1915).

(n3)Footnote 379. Clark v. Potts, 99 N.E. 364 (Ill. 1912).

(n4)Footnote 380. Brunette v. Vulcan Materials Co., 256 N.E.2d 44 (Ill. App. Ct. 1970); Connell v. Nickey, 167 S.W. 813 (Tex. Civ. App. 1914).

(n5)Footnote 381. Monahan v. Allen, 130 P. 768 (Mont. 1913); Irish v. Pulliam, 48 N.W. 963 (Neb. 1891). Unconditional acceptance of an offer completes the contract though minor details remain to be worked out under language "subject to," Carver v. Britt, 85 S.E.2d 888 (N.C. 1955), but "subject to approval of title by our attorneys" was a counter offer. Richardson v. Greensboro Warehouse & Storage Co., 26 S.E.2d 897 (N.C. 1943).

(n6)Footnote 382. Rahm v. Cummings, 155 N.W. 201 (Minn. 1915); Colleton Realty Co. v. Folk, 67 S.E. 156 (S.C. 1910); Ballou v. Carter, 137 N.W. 608 (S.D. 1912); Donnell v. Currie & Dohoney, 131 S.W. 88 (Tex. Civ. App. 1910); Connell v. Nickey, 167 S.W. 313 (Tex. Civ. App. 1914).

(n7)Footnote 383. Halsell v. Renfrow, 202 U.S. 287 (1906); Wardell v. Williams, 28 N.W. 796 (Mich. 1886).

(n8)Footnote 384. Stagg v. Compton, 81 Ind. 171 (Ind. 1881).

(n9)Footnote 385. McMahan v. McMahon, 115 S.E. 293 (S.C. 1922). A counter offer is a rejection of the offer and the original offer cannot later be accepted without the offerer's consent. Ebline v. Campbell, 121 A.2d 828, 121 A.2d 928 (Md. 1956).

(n10)Footnote 386. Cullen v. Donahue, 121 A. 392 (R.I. 1923); Morris v. Risk, 102 S.E. 725 (W.Va. 1920); Crowley v. Vaughan, 106 S.E. 539 (W.Va. 1921).

(n11)Footnote 387. Shiller v. Lange, 185 N.W. 699 (Mich. 1921); Rashken v. Smith, 210 N.W. 485 (Mich. 1926).

(n12)Footnote 388. Quinn v. Johnston, 122 S.W.2d 266 (Tex. Civ. App. 1938).

(n13)Footnote 389. Fraser v. Jarrett, 112 S.E. 487 (Ga. 1922); Butsch v. Swallow, 134 N.E. 877 (Ind. App. 1922); Foltz v. Evans, 49 N.E.2d 358 (Ind. App. 1943); Goodman v. Delfs, 188 N.W. 809 (Iowa 1922); Wallace v. Bogigian, 194 P. 632 (Kan. 1921); McCullough v. Weller, 290 S.W. 675 (Ky. App. 1927); Brearley v. Schoening, 210 N.W. 588 (Minn. 1926); Crews v. Sullivan, 113 S.E. 865 (Va. 1922).

(n14)Footnote 390. Normile v. Miller, 326 S.E.2d 11 (N.C. 1985); Koplin v. Bennett, 155 S.2d 568 (Fla. App. 1963); Donohue v. Monroe, 250 S.E.2d 571 (Ga. App. 1978); Todorovich v. Kinnickinnic Mut. Loan & Bldg. Assn., 298 N.W. 226 (Wis. 1941); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n15)Footnote 391. Fitzgerald v. Hyland, 6 S.2d 321 (La. 1942); Beach & Clarridge Co. v. American Steam Gauge & Valve Mfg. Co., 94 N.E. 457 (Mass. 1911). There is the waiver of an objection that the offer to purchase was made to a third person where the offer is accepted by the person to whom the offer should have been made in the first instance. Barnett v. Lovejoy, 186 N.W. 1 (Iowa 1922). See Dalton v. Callahan, 119 A. 380 (Me. 1923); Cullen v. Donahue, 121 A. 392 (R.I. 1923).

(n16)Footnote 392. Foltz v. Evans, 49 N.E.2d 358 (Ind. App. 1943); Sennett v. Melville, 122 N.W. 851 (Neb. 1909); Alexanian v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 30 A.2d 651 (Pa. Super. 1943). Letter to vendee constituted revocable offer until accepted. Gale v. Wood, 247 P.2d 67 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1952).

(n17)Footnote 393. Tencza v Hyland, 569 N.Y.S.2d 242 (1991); Flegel v. Dowling, 102 P. 178 (Or. 1909); Alexanian v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 30 A.2d 651 (Pa. Super. 1943). See Dixon v. Fed. Farm Mortg. Corp., 1 S.E.2d 732 (Ga. 1939).

(n18)Footnote 394. McCullough v. Weller, 290 S.W. 675 (Ky. App. 1927); Fowler v. Nunnery, 89 S. 156 (Miss. 1921); Richardson v. Greensboro Warehouse & Storage Co., 26 S.E.2d 897 (N.C. 1943); Harder v. Parkes, 215 P. 609 (Okla. 1923); Shumway v. Kitzman, 134 N.W. 325 (S.D. 1912).

(n19)Footnote 395. Gordon v. Churchill, 148 N.W. 848 (S.D. 1914).

(n20)Footnote 396. Plank v. Maxwell, 136 P. 465 (Colo. App. 1913).

(n21)Footnote 397. Federal Land & Securities Co. v. Hatch, 125 N.W. 837 (Iowa 1910); Antle v. Haas, 251

S.W.2d 290 (Ky. 1952). A contract of purchase "subject to G.I. loan" was conditional upon the obtaining of the loan. Roberts v. Maxwell, 94 S.E.2d 764 (Ga. App. 1956). So also as to a condition of obtaining an F.H.A. loan. Chappas v. Sandefur, 91 S.E.2d 46 (Ga. App. 1955).

(n22)Footnote 398. Egger v. Nesbit, 27 S.W. 385 (Mo. 1894).

(n23)Footnote 399. Corcoran v. White, 7 N.E. 525 (Ill. 1886).

(n24)Footnote 400. Stevens v. Manchester, 714 N.E.2d 956 (Ohio Ct. App. 1998); Hussey v. Home-Payne, 4 App. Cas. 311 (H.L. 1879).

(n25)Footnote 401. Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n26)Footnote 402. Horgan v. Russell, 140 N.W. 99 (N.D. 1913); Western Timber Co. v. Kalama River Lbr. Co., 85 P. 338; Turner v. McCormick, 49 S.E. 28 (W.Va. 1904).

(n27)Footnote 403. Cook v. Mielke, 40 P.2d 301 (Cal. App. 4th Dist. 1935).

(n28)Footnote 404. The rule that the acceptance must be a mirror image of the offer was historically construed to forbid even minor variations. Many modern courts have relaxed the rule, holding that only material differences prevent contract formation. Gresser v. Hotzler, 604 N.W.2d 379 (Minn. Ct. App. 2000). See Ajax Holding Co. v. Heinsbergen, 149 P.2d 189 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1944); Fraser v. Jarrett, 112 S.E. 487 (Ga. 1922); Whelchel v. Waters, 111 S.E. 25 (Ga. 1922); Kaufman v. Young, 122 S.E. 822 (Ga. App. 1924); Quinn v. Daly, 133 N.E. 290 (Ill. 1921); McCutchan v. Iowa State Bank of Fort Madison, 5 N.W.2d 813 (Iowa 1942); Myers v. Smith, 196 N.W. 989 (Iowa 1924); Colorado Inv. Co. v. Grimes, 200 P. 296 (Kan. 1921); Barchus v. Johnson, 92 S. 566 (La. 1922); Robinson v. Johnson, 113 A. 121 (Md. 1921); Lawrence v. Rosenberg, 130 N.E. 189 (Mass. 1921); Bailey v. Grover, 213 N.W. 137 (Mich. 1927); Olson v. Sash, 187 N.W. 346 (Mich. 1922); Chapman v. Lott, 110 S. 793 (Miss. 1927); Smith v. Bertrand, 186 N.W. 83 (Neb. 1921); Muller v. Raskind, 135 A. 682 (N.J. Ch. 1927); Wabst v. Serial Federal Sav. & Loan Assn. of New York City, 51 N.Y.S.2d 555 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1944); Richardson v. Greensboro Warehouse & Storage Co., 26 S.E.2d 897 (N.C. 1943); Steel v. Murphy, 10 Ohio App. 150 (Ohio App. 7th Dist. Belmont Co. 1918); Fry v. Foster, 65 P.2d 1224 (Okla. 1937); Landrum v. Jordan, 229 P. 182 (Okla. 1924); Strong v. Moore, 207 P. 179 (Or. 1922); Ray v. Blue, 173 S.W.2d 258 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943); Quinn v. Johnston, 122 S.W.2d 266 (Tex. Civ. App. 1938); Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. Clark, 126 S.E. 340 (W. Va. 1925); Helmholz v. Greene, 181 N.W. 221 (Wis. 1921). See Lescher v. Baird, 294 S.W. 17 (Ark. 1927).

(n29)Footnote 405. Robbins v. Pacific Eastern Corp., 65 P.2d 42 (Cal. 1937); Richardson v. Greensboro Warehouse & Storage Co., 26 S.E.2d 897 (N.C. 1943). Demand for warranty deed where none mentioned in offer was a rejection and counter offer. Master Laboratories v. Chestnut, 49 N.W.2d 693 (Neb. 1951).

(n30)Footnote 406. Carr v. Duval, 39 U.S. 77 (1840); McGowin Lumber & Export Co. v. R.J. & B.F. Camp Lumber Co., 68 S. 263 (Ala. 1915); Corcoran v. White, 7 N.E. 525 (Ill. 1886); Sawyer v. Brossart, 25 N.W. 876 (Iowa 1885); Wardell v. Williams, 28 N.W. 796 (Mich. 1886); Egger v. Nesbit, 27 S.W. 385 (Mo. 1894); Frahm v. Metcalf, 106 N.W. 227 (Neb. 1905); Raleigh Real Est. Co. v. Moser, 95 S.E. 498 (N.C. 1918); Kennedy v. Gramling, 11 S.E. 1081 (S.C. 1890); Scottish-Am. Mortg. Co. v. Davis, 74 S.W. 17 (Tex. 1903); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W. Va. 1888); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Int. Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908); N.W. Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 474 (Wis. 1867).

(n31)Footnote 407. Hackett v. Ladson, 110 S.E. 232 (Ga. 1922).

(n32)Footnote 408. Brach v. Matteson, 131 N.E. 804 (Ill. 1921).

(n33)Footnote 409. Van Hoosen v. Briscoe, 259 P. 1115 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1927); Wheeling, O. & E.R. Co. v. Wheeling Coal R. Co., 119 S.E. 551 (W. Va. 1923).

(n34)Footnote 410. State ex rel. Bond v. Register of Conveyances, 110 S. 559 (La. 1926).

(n35)Footnote 411. Faulkner v. Otto, 230 S.W. 447 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921).

(n36)Footnote 412. Corcoran v. White, 7 N.E. 525 (Ill. 1886); Sawyer v. Brossart, 25 N.W. 876 (Iowa 1885); Alexanian v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 30 A.2d 651 (Pa. Super. 1943).

(n37)Footnote 413. Sharp v. West, 150 F. 458 (W.D. Ark. 1907); Lacey v. Thomas, 164 F. 623 (D. Or. 1908); Stansbury v. Cooper, 152 P. 948 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1915); Gray v. Lynn, 77 S.E. 156 (Ga. 1913); Foltz v. Evans, 49 N.E.2d 358 (Ind. App. 1943); Knox v. McMurray, 140 N.W. 652 (Iowa 1913); Elmer v. Hart, 46 S. 619 (La. 1908); Bradley v. Haven, 94 N.E. 268 (Mass. 1911); Rahm v. Cummings, 155 N.W. 201 (Minn. 1915); Ross v. Craven, 121 N.W. 451 (Neb. 1909); Sennett v. Melville,122 N.W. 851 (Neb. 1909); Lopeman v. Colburn, 118 N.W. 116 (Neb. 1908); Hall v. Jones, 80 S.E. 228 (N.C. 1913); Atwood v. Rose, 122 P. 929 (Okla. 1912); Lichty v. Daggett, 121 N.W. 862 (S.D. 1909); Moon v. Bollwinkel, 154 P. 939 (Utah 1916); Cram v. Long, 142 N.W. 267 (Wis. 1913); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n38)Footnote 414. Chittum v. Potter, 219 S.E.2d 859 (Va. 1975); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Int. Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n39)Footnote 415. Crabtree v. St. Paul Opera-House Co., 39 F. 746 (D. Minn. 1889). Where the contract is subject to obtaining a mortgage the vendee must make a reasonable attempt to obtain it. In re King's Estate, 130 A.2d 245 (Pa. Super. 1957).

(n40)Footnote 416. Davenport v. Newton, 42 A. 1087 (Vt. 1898).

(n41)Footnote 417. Elmer v. Hart, 46 S. 619 (La. 1908); Rahm v. Cummings, 155 N.W. 201 (Minn. 1915).

(n42)Footnote 418. Sawyer v. Brossart, 25 N.W. 876 (Iowa 1885).

(n43)Footnote 419. Baker v. Holt, 14 N.W. 8 (Wis. 1882).

(n44)Footnote 420. Bushmeyer v. McGarry, 166 S.W. 168 (Ark. 1914).

(n45)Footnote 421. Ryder v. Johnston, 45 S. 181 (Ala. 1907).

(n46)Footnote 422. Wax v. Northwest Seed Co., 64 P.2d 513 (Wash. 1937).

(n47)Footnote 423. Blumenstein v. Wegman, 14 N.Y.S.2d 525 (N.Y. Sup. 1939).

(n48)Footnote 424. Rice Lands & Products Co. v. Blevins, 215 P. 402 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1923); Lloyd v. Mickelson, 210 N.W. 586 (Minn. 1926); Converse v. Jenson, 197 N.W. 490 (Minn. 1924); Brown v. California & Western Land Co., 177 N.W. 774 (Minn. 1920); Douglass v. Brooks, 87 S.E.2d 258 (N.C. 1955); Edwards Lumber & Land Co. v. Smith, 132 S.E. 593 (N.C. 1926); Gambill v. Snow, 189 S.W.2d 33 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945). See Estero Bay Estates v. Giddens, 14 F.2d 171 (S.D. Fla. 1926). For time to be of the essence in a sales contract it must be so specifically provided. Sobczak v. Kotwicki, 79 N.W.2d 471 (Mich. 1956).

(n49)Footnote 425. Abbott v.' 76 Land & Water Co., 53 P. 445 (Cal. 1898); Smith v. Brennan, 28 N.W. 892 (Mich. 1886); McCotter v. City of New York, 35 Barb. 609 (N.Y. Sup. 1861).

(n50)Footnote 426. Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W.Va. 1888); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904).

(n51)Footnote 427. Normile v. Miller, 306 S.E.2d 147 (N.C. Ct. App. 1983); Coleman v. Applegarth, 11 A. 284

(Md. 1887); Hollingshead v. Morris, 137 N.W. 527 (Mich. 1912).

(n52)Footnote 428. Hollingshead v. Morris, 137 N.W. 527 (Mich. 1912); Mossie v. Cyrus, 119 P. 485 (Or. 1911); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W.Va. 1888); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904).

(n53)Footnote 429. Sterngass v. Maisel, 519 N.Y.S.2d 569 (1987); Newman v. Kellogg, 110 S.W.2d 693 (Ark. 1937); Adams v. Pendarvis, 217 Ill. App. 535 (Ill. App. 3d Dist. 1920); Artz v. McCarthy, 199 P. 99 (Kan. 1921); McTernan v. LeTendre, 351 N.E.2d 566 (Mass. App. 1976) (acceptance becomes effective by posting letter on last day of term); Kesterson v. Marsh, 185 N.W. 346 (Neb. 1921); Lean v. Leeds, 114 A. 402 (N.J. 1921); Tobias v. Lynch, 182 N.Y.S. 643 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1920); In re McPherson, 186 N.Y.S. 661 (N.Y.Surrog. 1921); Savage v. Weigel, 219 N.Y.S. 99 (N.Y. Sup. 1926); Gnad v. Herman, 203 N.Y.S. 783 (N.Y. Sup. 1923); Cullen v. Donahue, 121 A. 392 (R.I. 1923).

(n54)Footnote 430. Mattingly v. Mattingly, 122 A. 40 (Md. 1943). See White v. Ralph, 154 P.2d 167 (Idaho 1944).

(n55)Footnote 431. Crolius v. Lorge, 212 N.W. 253 (Wis. 1927). Option lost by laches after seven years. Sandlin v. Weaver, 83 S.E.2d 806 (N.C. 1954).

(n56)Footnote 432. Tibbs v. Zirkle, 46 S.E. 701 (W.Va. 1904); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W.Va. 1888).

(n57)Footnote 433. Thompson v. Burns, 99 P. 111 (Idaho 1908).

(n58)Footnote 434. Ackerman v. Maddux, 143 N.W. 147 (N.D. 1913).

(n59)Footnote 435. Eagle Mill Co. v. Caven, 76 Mo. App. 458 (Mo. App. 1898).

(n60)Footnote 436. Mossie v. Cyrus, 119 P. 485 (Or. 1911); Keible v. Gebhart, 35 Berks (Pa.) 329; Bowen v. Speer, 166 S.W. 1183 (Tex. Civ. App. 1914); Brown Bros. Lumber Co. v. Preston Mill Co., 145 P. 964 (Wash. 1915).

(n61)Footnote 437. Grossman v. Herman, 194 N.E. 694 (N.Y. 1935). Oral acceptance of option is valid. Kottler v. Martin, 85 S.E.2d 314 (N.C. 1955).

(n62)Footnote 438. Chain v. Wilhelm, 84 F.2d 138 (4th Cir. 1936), rev'd in part on other grounds, United States ex rel. Wilhelm v. Chain, 300 U.S. 31 (1937); Lankford v. Holton, 24 S.E.2d 292 (Ga. 1943).

(n63)Footnote 439. Duclos v. Turner, 166 S.W.2d 251 (Ark. 1942); Frissell v. Nichols, 114 S. 431 (Fla. 1927); Dixon v. Fed. Farm Mortg. Corp., 1 S.E.2d 732 (Ga. 1939); Weber v. Hulbert, 225 Ill. App. 321 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1922); McCutchan v. Iowa State Bank, 5 N.W.2d 813 (Iowa 1942); Snell v. Union Sawmill Co., 105 S. 728 (La. 1925); Bancroft v. Martin, 109 S. 859 (Miss. 1926), error overruled, Bancroft v. Martin, 111 S. 434 (Miss. 1927); Cochran v. Taylor, 7 N.E.2d 89 (N.Y. 1937); Fickas v. Bowles, 158 S.W.2d 118 (Tex. Civ. App. 1941); Helmholz v. Greene, 181 N.W. 221 (Wis. 1921).

(n64)Footnote 440. Crowley v. Vaughan, 106 S.E. 539 (W. Va. 1921).

(n65)Footnote 441. Groh v. Calloway, 292 S.W. 65 (Mo. 1927).

(n66)Footnote 442. Bancroft v. Martin, 109 S. 859 (Miss. 1926), error overruled, Bancroft v. Martin, 111 S. 434 (Miss. 1927); Von Knuth v. Ryan, 186 N.W. 81 (Neb. 1921). See Alexander v. Wingett, 206 P. 1088 (Mont. 1922).

(n67)Footnote 443. Nass v. Munzing, 138 A. 922 (N.J. 1927).

(n68)Footnote 444. Brown v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 66 P. 592 (Cal. 1901); Gordon v. Darnell, 5 Colo. 302 (Colo. 1880); Walton's Exec. v. Franks, 228 S.W. 1025 (Ky. App. 1921); Litz v. Goosling, 19 S.W. 527 (Ky. App. 1892), rev'd in part on other grounds, Murphy Thompson & Co. v. Reid, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. 1907); Coleman v. Applegarth, 11 A. 284 (Md. 1887); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Brown v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat'l Bank, 147 P. 537 (Or. 1915); Connor v. Renneker, 25 S. Car. 514 (S.C. 1886).

(n69)Footnote 445. Corbett v. Cronkhite, 87 N.E. 874 (Ill. 1909).

(n70)Footnote 446. Roth v. Moeller, 197 P. 62 (Cal. 1921).

(n71)Footnote 447. Johnson v. Haynes, 532 S.W.2d 561 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1975); Stanley v. Whitmire, 212 S.E.2d 845 (Ga. 1975).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.10

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.10 Consideration for the Contract.

The consideration for the contract is presumptively in cash, in the absence of other provision. n448 To be binding, a contract for the sale of real estate must be based on a sufficient consideration. n449 Even if a real estate contract is reduced to writing and signed by the parties, it is unenforceable unless it shows a consideration of benefit moving to the vendor, or detriment to the purchaser or agreement to purchase the property. n450 Specific performance may be denied by a court of equity if a contract is not fair, reasonable, and based on adequate consideration, but mere inadequacy of consideration does not justify denial of specific performance. n451 Under the Statute of Frauds, price is a necessary element to every enforceable contract for sale of lands. n452 A "valuable consideration" may be something other than the actual payment of money and may consist of acts to be done after the conveyance. n453 Regarding whether the consideration is adequate, the mere showing of some advantage to the purchaser will not warrant a cancellation of the contract. n454

In some states, a statute expressly provides that the consideration need not appear in the memorandum, n455 while in others the statute requires the consideration to appear. n456 Authorities are almost unanimous in holding that the words "for value received" constitute a sufficient showing of the consideration. n457 This seems to be so, both in those states whose statute expressly requires the consideration to be expressed and in those whose courts follow the English case law doctrine requiring the memorandum to contain the consideration for the promise. n458 The consideration may be the payment of money, the performance of some other benefit, or nothing more than the promise to do such stipulated act in the future. n459 A contract provision that the purchaser may pay to any one of multiple sellers is valid and binding. n460

A release of "any and all interest, right, or title" which one party to the contract "may now have or may hereafter have" in certain realty is a good and sufficient consideration for the other party's promise to pay a stated sum for such interest, right, or title. n461 Also, the consideration may consist of the assumption of a mortgage, n462 the performance of services, n463 the payment of the debt of the vendor on the premises, n464 or the cancellation of vendor's note. n465 A promise for a promise is consideration. n466 The consideration may be expressed as the sum of one dollar and other valuable considerations. n467 If the purchaser relinquishes a right to enforce the collection of a note, this is a sufficient consideration to support the vendor's agreement to convey land. n468 A quitclaim deed to land, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is a sufficient consideration to defeat a plea of total failure of consideration. n469

Where the contract is supported by a legal consideration, its validity is not defeated by the fact that there existed between the parties a collateral agreement that is unenforceable. n470 The vendor is ordinarily not entitled to interest on deferred payments unless the contract expressly so provides. n471

An oral contract for the sale of real estate is sufficient as to consideration, where it provides that the real estate shall be sold to the purchaser for the highest price bid for the same. n472 Where consideration is executory and touches the land the doctrine that price is without the statute of frauds cannot be extended to include the broader concept of consideration. n473

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 448. Builders Sand, Inc. v. Turtur, 678 S.W.2d 115 (Tex. App. 1984); Albert v. Pearson, 229 P. 998 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1924) (check cashed); Purgett v. Weinrank, 219 Ill. App. 28 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1920); Nasset v. Houska, 186 N.W. 255 (N.D. 1921). See Kopeyka v. Woodstrom, 137 N.E. 137 (Ill. 1922).

(n2)Footnote 449. English v. Shipley, 234 P. 334 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1925); California. Loaiza v. Superior Court, 24 P. 707 (Cal. 1890); Fly v. Cline, 193 P. 615 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1920); Orange Cove Water Co. v. Sampson, 248 P. 526 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1926); Mutter v. Metzger, 155 N.E. 280 (Ill. 1927); Barnes v. McCartney, 3 La. App. 145 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1925) (worthless automobile insufficient consideration); Bean v. Burbank, 16 Maine 458 (Me. 1840); Pancoast v. Dinsmore, 75 A. 43 (Me. 1909); Bartlett v. Smith, 109 N.W. 260 (Mich. 1906); Estrada v. Hanson, 10 N.W.2d 223 (Minn. 1943); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Cruthis v. Steele, 131 S.E.2d 344 (N.C. 1963) (doubting that "love and affection" were sufficient consideration); Exum v. Lynch, 125 S.E. 15 (N.C. 1924); Dept. of Pub. Assistance v. Kovaes, 46 D. & C. 652 (C.P. Fayette County, Pa. 1942); Botello v. Misener-Collins Co, 469 S.W.2d 793 (Tex. 1971); Latimer v. Holladay, 134 P.2d 183 (Utah 1943); Cummins v. Beavers, 48 S.E. 891 (Va. 1904); Keffer v. Grayson, 76 Va. 517 (Va. 1882); Weaver v. Burr, 8 S.E. 743 (W. Va. 1888). See Derek H. Davis, Student Author, Requirements under the Statute of Frauds for Contract to Convey Real Property, 24 Baylor L. Rev. 406 (1972).

(n3)Footnote 450. Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U.S. 252 (1882); Huffman v. Foreman, 323 N.E.2d 651 (Ind. App. 1975); Bean v. Burbank, 16 Me. 458 (Me. 1840); Warren v. Castello, 19 S.W. 29 (Mo. 1892); Tucker v. Woods, 12 Johns. 190 (N.Y. Sup. 1815); Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 48 S.E. 796 (N.C. 1904); Cummins v. Beavers, 48 S.E. 891 (Va. 1904).

(n4)Footnote 451. Kuntz v. Kuntz, 595 N.W.2d 292 (N.D. 1998); In re Looney, 975 S.W.2d 508 (Mo. Ct. App. 1998); In re Estate of Mihm, 497 A.2d 612 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1985); Harrington v. Harrington, 365 N.W.2d 552 (N.D. 1985); Rossiter v. Vogel, 134 F.2d 908 (2d Cir. 1943); Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432 (Ala. 1856); Shields v. Trammell, 19 Ark. 51 (Ark. 1857); Wilson v. White, 119 P. 895 (Cal. 1911); Winter v. Goebner, 40 P. 570 (Colo. 1895); Maloy v. Boyett, 43 S. 243 (Fla. 1907); Wyche v. Greene, 16 Ga 49 (Ga. 1854); Bear Track Mining Co. v. Clark, 54 P. 1007 (Idaho 1898); Corbett v. Cronkhite, 87 N.E. 874 (Ill. 1909); Wyatt v. Mayfield, 91 Ill. 577 (Ill. 1879); Holland v. Hensley, 4 Iowa 222 (Iowa 1857); Northup v. Standifer, 23 S.W. 348 (Ky. App. 1893); Coleman v. Applegarth, 11 A. 284 (Md. 1887); Stone v. Hackett, 78 Mass. 227 (Mass. 1858); Vasser v. Vasser, 23 Miss. 378 (Miss. 1852); Lipscomb v. Adams, 91 S.W. 1046 (Mo. 1906); Cruthis v. Steele, 131 S.E.2d. 344 (N.C. 1963) (love and affection of parent and child will not support contract to convey realty); Schroeder v. Gemeinder, 10 Nev. 355 (Nev. 1875); Sprague v. Schotte, 87 P. 1046 (Or. 1906); Appeal of Heath, 100 Pa. 1 (Pa. 1882); Williams v. Graves, 26 S.W. 334 (Tex. Civ. App. 1894); Price v. Lloyd, 86 P. 767 (Utah 1906); Graybill v. Braugh, 17 S.E. 558 (Va. 1893); Hanson v. Michelson, 19 Wis. 498 (Wis. 1865).

(n5)Footnote 452. Malone Constr. Co. v. Westbrook, 194 S.E.2d 619 (Ga. App. 1972); Hanlon v. Hayes, 89 N.E.2d 51 (Ill. 1949).

(n6)Footnote 453. Allen v. Mayo, 279 N.W.2d 617 (Neb. 1979); Cowman v. Allen Monuments, Inc., 500 S.W.2d 223 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973); Gage v. Wimberley, 476 S.W.2d 724 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972); Sheldon & Co. v. Emory U., 184

S.E. 401 (Ga. App. 1936).

(n7)Footnote 454. Hardin v. Baynes, 82 S.E.2d 384 (Ga. 1944); Wharton v. Meyers, 21 N.E.2d 772 (Ill. 1939).

(n8)Footnote 455. Dunlap v. Hopkins, 95 F. 231 (7th Cir. 1899) (construing Illinois statute); Edgerton v. Edgerton, 8 Conn. 6 (Conn. 1830); Hiatt v. Hiatt, 28 Ind. 53 (Ind. 1867); Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418 (Mich. 1873); Neibert v. Baghurst, 25 A. 474 (N.J. Ch. 1892).

(n9)Footnote 456. Dillworth v. Holmes Furniture & Vehicle Co., 73 So. 288 (Ala. App. 1916); Catterlin v. Bush, 59 P. 706 (Or. 1900), aff'd 65 P. 1064; Saunders v. Bank of Mecklenburg, 71 S.E. 714 (Va. 1911). See D. Kent Meyers, Real Estate Transactions, Rates and the Uniform Consumer Credit Code, 23 Okla. L. Rev. 263 (1970).

(n10)Footnote 457. Dillworth v. Holmes Furniture & Vehicle Co., 73 So. 288 (Ala. App. 1916); Kuenzie v. Jansen, 130 N.W. 450 (Wis. 1911).

(n11)Footnote 458. Brooks v. Morgan, 1 Del. 123 (Del. Super. 1832); Whitney v. Stearns, 16 Maine 394 (Me. 1839); Edelen v. Gough, 5 Gill 103 (Md. 1847); D.M. Osborne & Co. v. Baker, 25 N.W. 606 (Minn. 1885); Miller v. Cook, 23 N.Y. 495 (N.Y. Sup. 1861); McMorris v. Herndon, 2 Bailey 56 (S.C. App. 1831); Lapham v. Barrett, 1 Vt. 247 (Vt. 1828); Kuenzie v. Jansen, 130 N.W. 450 (Wis. 1911); Dahlman v. Hammel, 45 Wis. 466 (Wis. 1878); Wain v. Warlters, 5 East 10, 102 Eng. Rep. 972 (1804).

(n12)Footnote 459. Peterson Homes, Inc. v. Johnson, 691 So. 2d 563 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997); Atlanta Six Flags Partnership v. Hughes, 381 S.E.2d 605 (Ga. Ct. App. 1989); Guild v. Atchison, T. & S.F.R. Co., 45 P. 82 (Kan. 1896); Kentucky. Murphy Thompson & Co. v. Reid, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. App. 1907); Babcock v. Wilson, 17 Maine 372 (Me. 1840); Curtis v. Blair, 26 Miss. 309 (Miss. 1853); Rodman v. Robinson, 47 S.E. 19 (N.C. 1904); McPherson v. Fargo, 74 N.W. 1057 (S.D. 1898); Cummins v. Beavers, 48 S.E. 891 (Va. 1904); Curtis Land & Loan Co. v. Interior Land Co., 118 N.W. 853 (Wis. 1908).

(n13)Footnote 460. Goodson v. Smith, 243 P.2d 163 (Wyo. 1952).

(n14)Footnote 461. Latimer v. Holladay, 134 P.2d 183 (Utah 1943).

(n15)Footnote 462. Crooke v. Nelson, 191 N.W. 122 (Iowa 1922); Thomas v. Williams, 176 N.W. 968 (Iowa 1920).

(n16)Footnote 463. Bloech v. Hyland Homes Co., 247 P. 761 (Or. 1926); Norton v. Ball, 225 S.W. 581 (Tex. Civ. App. 1920). See Underwood v. Hogg, 261 S.W. 556 (Tex. Civ. App. 1924).

(n17)Footnote 464. Dept. of Pub. Assistance v. Kovacs, 46 D. & C. 652 (C.P. Fayette County, Pa. 1942); Midkiff v. Glass, 123 S.E. 329 (Va. 1924).

(n18)Footnote 465. Hoard v. McFarland, 229 S.W. 687 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921).

(n19)Footnote 466. In re Estate of Mounts, 39 S.W.3d 499 (Mo. Ct. App. 2000); Crowley v. Vaughan, 106 S.E. 539 (W. Va. 1921).

(n20)Footnote 467. Linse v. Zastrow, 207 P. 119 (Mont. 1922); Moller v. Paulivico, 149 N.E. 829 (N.Y. 1925).

(n21)Footnote 468. Woolum v. Sizemore, 102 S.W.2d 323 (Ky. App. 1937). See The Interstate Land Sale Full Disclosure Act, 21 Rutgers L. Rev. 714 (1967).

(n22)Footnote 469. Turpin v. Jackson County, 35 S.E.2d 180 (N.C. 1945).

(n23)Footnote 470. Thomas v. Little, 96 S. 896 (Ala. 1923).

(n24)Footnote 471. Murphy v. Frank P. Miller Corp., 200 N.W. 974 (Mich. 1924).

(n25)Footnote 472. Heffernan v. Chester-Cambridge Bank & Trust Co., 27 Del. Co. (Pa.) 578; Barto v. Hicks, 184 S.E.2d 188 (Ga. App. 1971) (a sales contract based on the purchaser being able to obtain financing at "current prevailing rate" was not too indefinite to be enforceable).

(n26)Footnote 473. Theberge v. Canadian P. Ry. Co., 122 A.2d 848 (Vt. 1956).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.11

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.11 Terms of the Contract.

[Go To Supp]

§ 96.11(a) Construction of the Contract. n474

The intention of the parties must be gathered from the language used or the conduct of the parties or both, n475 and where the conduct of the parties discloses a practical construction, it will be adopted by the court. n476 Basic rules of contract apply to real estate contracts, because they are simply irrevocable and continual offers to sell. n477

The court must give each particular clause of a contract the qualification whose intent is evident from the other parts of the contract. n478 The contract must be construed as a whole, n479 and when several instruments which refer to the same subject matter between the same parties are made as parts of substantially one transaction, they should be considered as one contract and receive the same construction as if their several provisions were in one and the same instrument. n480 The contract, the deed and the purchase-money mortgage should be construed together. n481 Collateral covenants in sales contracts are not merged in subsequent deed. n482

The court cannot make a contract for the parties by construction where none exists. n483 The primary object of all rules of interpretation and construction is to arrive at and give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as expressed in the contract, when not forbidden by law. This applies to contracts for the sale of real estate as well as to other contracts. n484

Real estate contracts are within the rule that a contract is subject to an implied condition that the parties shall be excused in case performance becomes impossible or the purpose of the contract is frustrated before a breach thereof and without the fault of either party, performance becomes impossible or the purpose of the contract is frustrated. An excuse of performance for impossibility or frustration of purpose arises if the parties must have known that the contract could not be fulfilled unless, when the time for performance arrived, some particular thing or condition continued to exist. n485 The agreement should, if possible, be rendered operative, as the parties are supposed to have intended something by their agreement. n486

Construction of the contract is neither needed nor appropriate where the contract is plain and unambiguous. n487 It is only where the meaning of the contract is doubtful or open to more than one construction that the court is required to construe the agreement. n488 When the contract is ambiguous and open to construction, the true end to be reached is to ascertain what the parties intended, and when that intention is found, it prevails over verbal inaccuracies, inapt expressions, and dry words of stipulations. The court should as far as possible place itself in the position of the parties when their minds met upon the terms of the agreement, and then from a consideration of the writing itself, its purpose, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction endeavor to ascertain what they intended and what they agreed to do, that is, upon what sense or meaning of the terms used, their minds actually met. n489 The rule in the Uniform Commercial Code that a contract is not void for indefiniteness if the parties intended to make a contract and a reasonable remedy is available, has been applied to contracts for the sale of realty. n490 An agreement to be attached to a contract for the sale of land should be construed against the purchaser who prepared it, if it be ambiguous or requires judicial interpretation. n491 Thus, a purchase agreement between a subdivision developer and a lot purchaser is construed against the developer as drafter of the doubtful provisions. n492

When the provisions are partly in writing and partly printed and the written and printed parts are inconsistent with each other, the written part is presumed to express the true intention of the parties and will govern the printed matter, for the reason that printed forms are very general in their terms, and are intended for any like occasion, while the written words are considered as having been especially selected by the parties themselves for the particular case. n493 Where there is substantial doubt as to whether the covenants are dependent or independent, they will ordinarily be construed as dependent. n494 A covenant is independent where its performance by one party is not related to the duty of the other party to perform covenants. n495 The court may give consideration to the practical construction placed upon the contract by the parties. n496 All oral negotiations are superseded by a deed and a contemporaneous written contract. n497 Written matter will control printed matter in the contract if they are inconsistent. n498 The contracts are construed with reference to the law of the place where they are made or are to be performed. n499 If a land sale contract provides that the interest rate increases if the statutory limit is raised, that provision applies only as to contracts executed after the rate is raised by statute. n500 The contract may provide for approval of title by the attorney for the vendee, n501 for the furnishing of abstracts, n502 for the expenses of correction of errors, n503 or for the giving of mortgages as part of the purchase price. n504 Where the contract is silent or ambiguous as to the time of payment n505 or the time of conveyance, the law implies a reasonable time. n506

Some courts have held that the term "encumbrance" in stating the "premises are free from encumbrance" means liens on the premises which require the payment of money to discharge them and does not refer to restrictions and easements. n507 The instrument will not become a completed contract while anything essential to close the transaction remains to be done. n508 Where a broker acts for a purchaser, the contract is complete when signed and placed in the hands of the broker. n509 A receipt for earnest money has been held not to be a contract amounting to a sale. n510 The vendor may waive payment on the day specified in the contract, n511 and the same is true as to the time agreed upon to perfect the title. n512 Where a note is accepted as payment the contract is fully performed by the purchasers and they are entitled to their deed whether the note is paid at maturity or not. n513 Where provision is made for alternative methods of settlement with the right of election in the first instance in the purchaser and the purchaser refuses to exercise the right, then the right of election shifts to the seller. n514 Although the contract provides for settlement on or before a fixed date, yet this does not give either party the right to require settlement before the date fixed. n515 Generally, where the contract carries no stipulation for interest, the purchaser is liable for interest only from the time possession begins. n516

A covenant by the vendor in a sales agreement not to compete with the vendee is valid if the time and area limitations are reasonable, n517 and, if some of the limitations are not reasonable, other limitations may be preserved if they are reasonable and severable. n518 The courts are in dispute, however, as to whether the court itself in reformation of the contract can limit the area so as to be reasonable, or whether the court must be able to find such right to limit from the language. n519 If a contract contains conflicting descriptions, the description that will not encroach on adjoining property is the preferred and proper one. n520

§ 96.11(b) Modification by Mutual Consent.

The contract is subject to modification by the parties at any time. n521 "Until consummated by deed, an executory contract of sale is subject to modification by agreement of the parties." n522 A written contract for the sale of real estate may be modified by a subsequent written agreement or by an oral agreement based on a valuable consideration. n523 Where a contract for a deed was in writing, it was held that there could be no subsequent alterations binding on the parties unless the subsequent alterations were in writing or by an executed contract. n524 The prevailing rule is that the parties may contract orally to modify their agreement as respects the manner of performance. n525 Also, a parol modification with respect to the amount or medium of payment of the purchase price has been upheld. n526 A contract may be modified orally, as regards the time of payment, unless to do so would violate the statute of frauds requiring performance within one year. n527

If a contract is modified by agreement of the parties, a new contract comes into existence, n528 into which the original one is merged. While the parties may agree to modify the contract, they ordinarily do not at the same time contemplate the fact that they execute a new contract by their very act of modification. n529 The rule that parol, prior, and contemporaneous stipulations are merged in the written contract n530 is not applicable to subsequent oral agreements. n531 Parties who have the power to make a contract have the power to unmake or modify it regardless of self-imposed limitations, and notwithstanding they insert in their written contract an agreement expressed in the strongest terms prohibiting its alteration except in a particular manner, they may, by a subsequent agreement based upon a sufficient consideration, modify their contract in any manner they choose. n532

The modification may consist in the substitution of a new purchaser, n533 or the extension of the time of payment. n534 It has been held that where there has been partial performance under a parol agreement for the sale of land, such agreement does not become merged in a written one to the extent that it cannot be employed to show acts done or rights acquired under it, the merger going no further than to preclude the establishment of a variance between the two contracts. n535 The burden of proof of modification is on the party relying on an oral modification of the contract. n536 Where fraud induced the original contract, this fraud is not waived by a subsequent modification of the contract. n537 Where the contract is unambiguous and without fraud, all parol negotiations are merged in the written contract. n538 Thus, a bond for a deed which made time of the essence governed the rights of the parties, notwithstanding earlier contracts did not contain such a provision. n539 The conduct of the parties subsequent to the expiration of the date of a modified contract in carrying on negotiations looking toward the completion of their obligations thereunder has been held to show that they intended to keep the modified contract alive. n540 Where the purchaser refused to complete the deal and the parties agreed to reduce the amount to be paid, and which amount was paid, the deed, abstract, and original agreement were delivered to the purchaser; the transaction being thus fully performed would not be declared a nullity for want of consideration. n541

§ 96.11(c) Reformation of the Sales Contract.

A contract for sale of land is like any other contract subject to reformation in equity for fraud or mistake. n542 However, real estate contracts have special features that must be considered in any reformation. Contracts for sale of land create, under the doctrine of equitable conversion, property rights in the real estate in the vendee; and the rights of other persons to the equitable interests of the vendee complicate the rights of the vendor and vendee to change the language of the contract and the property rights that have arisen thereunder. Also, where the rights of bona fide purchasers for value have arisen dependent upon the language of the sales contract, the contract cannot be reformed in conflict with such rights. n543 If the third person has notice of the rights of the parties involved, before the claim of such third party arises, the contract may be reformed as against such third party. n544 An instrument is subject to reformation as against those who cannot claim to be bona fide purchasers for value without notice. n545 Any extension of time must be supported by a writing. n546 A formal written contract cannot be modified by a parol "executory contract." n547 Under the Statute of Frauds, a land contract in writing may be modified orally as regards time of payment unless not to be performed within a year. n548 The vendee's acquiescence in a wrongful repudiation of the contract by the vendor effects a mutual rescission. n549 The vendee's equitable interest may be lost by abandonment. n550

An oral agreement reducing amount of monthly payments and extending time is not binding if there is no consideration, n551 but a contract modifying the former contract, by reducing the purchase price but accelerating payments, was based on a valid consideration where the vendee was in default and the vendor needed money. n552 An agreement to modify specific provisions of a land contract as to interest cannot be implied; contract provisions must be express and openly uttered and avowed. n553 If the old contract is fully rescinded and a new contract is entered into, there is consideration for the new contract though the purchase price is lower. n554 A provision that time shall be of the essence may be waived by conduct of the parties. n555

§ 96.11(d) Varying the Written Contract.

Traditionally, a written contract for the sale of land which is complete in itself and the validity of which is conceded cannot be varied by showing that prior or contemporaneous agreements were made which were not reduced to writing but, in accordance with the understanding of the parties thereto, were to remain in full force and effect. n556 Thus, where a contract to convey land is in writing, parol evidence is not admissible to establish a reservation of growing timber. n557 Extrinsic evidence as to the prices quoted for separate tracts in negotiations preceding their purchase is inadmissible as tending to vary the terms of a written contract of sale which specifies the purchase price as a lump sum. n558 A contract for the purchase of land cannot be shown to be a contract for an easement. n559 When the parties reduce their contract to writing, and there is no fraud or mistake in the words which express it, parol evidence is not admissible to change or modify it. n560 The presumption is that the purchaser executed the contract voluntarily and with full knowledge of its contents. n561 However, the rule forbidding parol evidence contradicting the terms of a written contract does not render inadmissible such evidence to establish fraud and deceit invalidating such a contract. n562 In case of ambiguity, it is permissible to show the negotiations leading up to the contract, and what was said and done then, not for the purpose of incorporating such negotiations or statements in the written agreement, but of reading the words used in the writing in the light of the circumstances of the case. n563 This is upon the principle that the construction of a written document is the ascertainment of the intention of the parties, determined like a question of fact by the natural weight of competent evidence and not by the application of arbitrary rules. The principle just stated does not authorize the use as evidence of matter not proper for consideration in the interpretation of a writing; nor does it abolish the well-established rule that an instrument cannot be contradicted or varied by parol extraneous evidence. n564

Partial performance of an executory contract is a sufficient consideration to support all of its provisions. n565 Where the sale is to several persons, the notice must be given to all the purchasers. n566

There is a presumption that the vendor and purchaser have contracted with reference to applicable principles of law. n567 Extrinsic evidence may be received to fix the locality and boundaries of the land where the description is vague or uncertain. n568 The evidence for this purpose may come from surveyors n569 or other persons who know the location of the property by the description given, n570 or by reference to maps n571 or surveys n572 or other separate documents. n573 The rule as to exactness of description is liberal in favor of sufficiency of description. n574 Also, where, by mutual mistake of the parties, the deed fails to embody the clearly expressed terms of the contract, or does not effect what both parties intended by their contract, a court of equity will reform the deed in accordance with their manifest intention. n575 The statute of frauds is applicable to alterations in the contract. n576 The right to have a prior deed or mortgage reformed cannot prevail as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser for value under an unrecorded deed. n577

§ 96.11(e) Merger of the Contract into the Deed. n578

In accordance with contract law generally, all provisions in the contract are merged n579 into the deed when executed and delivered except those covenants which are deemed to be collateral to the sale. n580 Thus, the deed regulates the rights and liabilities of the parties. n581

Courts have made varied pronouncements on the doctrine of merger in connection with real estate contracts. Contractual provisions not embodied in the deed are superseded and merged only if the parties intended to surrender them. n582 A deed given pursuant to a contract for the sale of realty results in a merger of the contract into the deed, and action cannot thereafter be maintained on the contract. n583 All preliminary negotiations and agreements made prior to the conveyance are merged into the deed, and parol evidence is not admissible to contradict the terms of the conveyance. n584 Oral representations made before the written contract are merged into the contract and parol evidence of those is inadmissible. n585 If the contract mentions certain duties that cannot be performed before or at the closing, those duties outlive the consummation of the sale and are not merged in the deed. n586 If the parties agree that certain contractual acts will be performed after execution of the deed, no merger occurs as to those acts. n587 Therefore, the time in which a contract covenant is to be performed may be an important factor. n588 If the deed constitutes only part of the performance of the contract, the doctrine of merger does not apply to unperformed portions. n589 A contract of sale is merged in a deed only if all terms of the contract are fulfilled by delivery of the deed. n590 If delivery of the deed is intended only as part performance, the doctrine of merger does not apply. n591

Covenants of warranty as to quality and improvements are collateral to the conveyance and are not merged into nor satisfied by the deed. n592 A covenant in the contract is deemed collateral and not merged must not be or appear to be connected with the title, possession, quantity or emblements of the land being sold. n593 Indeed, some courts have held that only the title covenant is necessarily merged in the deed; independent contract provisions relating to possession, quantity and emblements may not be merged. n594

In the absence of fraud or mistake n595 a deed is deemed to be an executed contract modifying the former executory contract of sale. n596 To effect merger by operation of law, estates meet in one and the same person at one and the same time and in one and the same right. n597 No merger occurs if there are outstanding interests. n598

Intention is essential to merger in equity. n599 A collateral agreement is not merged in a deed if evidence shows it was not so intended. n600 Evidence of contradictory earlier agreements cannot be introduced to vary the terms of a deed. n601 The exception to this rule is the case of mortgage agreements. When a deed of conveyance is delivered and accepted as performance of such contract, the contract becomes merged in the deed, and the rights of the parties rest thereafter solely on the deed. n602 There may be cases, however, where a stipulation in a contract, instead of becoming merged in the deed, survives it and confers an independent cause of action. Thus, where, in a contract for the sale and purchase of land, there was a provision that if the purchaser did not build a factory on the land he should reconvey to the vendor. The purchaser took possession, made payment, and obtained a deed but failed to construct a factory in accordance with the terms of the contract. It was held that the provision relating to the construction of the factory was not merged in the deed. n603 The contract of sale is merged in the deed. n604 There is not, however, a merger of collateral and independent agreements. n605 Where a contract of sale contemplates a collateral act such as the erection of a building, the contract is not merged into the subsequent deed. n606 These collateral agreements in a contract to give a deed which do not merge in the deed may be treated as separate covenants on which suit may be brought. n607 If the sales contract is not essential or germane to the deed it is not merged into the deed. n608 Contractual provisions as to the payment of the purchase price are not merged with the deed and may subsequently be shown by evidence extrinsic to the deed. n609

If there is no fraud or mistake, the acceptance of a deed or writing containing provisions in contravention of a prior parol agreement amounts to a modification of the former agreement. n610 Probative evidence may be introduced to show that no merger was intended or that a mistake has occurred. n611 Where, in pursuance of a written contract to convey certain real estate, a deed is executed and delivered which contains stipulations to be performed by the grantee that were not a part of the original contract, the contract is not necessarily merged in said deed. The rights of the parties must be determined by a consideration of both instruments and the surrounding circumstances. n612 Written warranties in the contract are collateral and do not merge in the deed. n613

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 474. Katz v. Brooks, 212 N.E.2d 508 (Ill. App. 1965); Patton v. Graves, 224 A.2d 411 (Md. 1966); See David Levingston, Student Author, Bond for Deed Contracts, 31 La. L. Rev. 587 (1971); Aiken, "Subject to Financing" Clauses in Interim Contracts for Sale of Realty, 43 Mari. L. Rev. 265; see also Elizabeth Hazen Pope, Student Author, Property Law - The North Carolina Association of Realtors Contract of Sale, 51 N.C. L. Rev. 346 (1972).

(n2)Footnote 475. Dunlap v. Lewis, 130 P. 973 (Or. 1913).

(n3)Footnote 476. Stone v. Powell, 150 N.W. 15 (Iowa 1914).

(n4)Footnote 477. Nafstad v. Merchant, 228 N.W.2d 548 (Minn. 1975).

(n5)Footnote 478. Fresno Irrigation Dist. v. Smith, 136 P.2d 382 (Cal. App. 4th Dist. 1943); Emerson v. King, 394 A.2d 51 (N.H. 1978) (upholding provision in sales contract that vendor could reacquire ownership for a sum far below market value).

(n6)Footnote 479. Margaret H. Wayne Trust v. Lipsky, 846 P.2d 904 (Idaho 1993); Magri v. Lee, 470 So. 2d 910 (La. Ct. App. 1985); Victory Bottle Capping Mach. Co. v. O. & J. Mach. Co., 280 F. 753 (1st Cir. 1922); Pima Farms Co. v. McDonald, 244 P. 1022 (Ariz. 1926); Dixon v. Malloy, 160 P.2d 896 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1945); Little v. Kennedy, 260 P. 890 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1927); Chicago Home for Girls v. Carr, 133 N.E. 344 (Ill. 1921); C.A. Andrews Coal Co. v. Board of Directors of Public Schools, 92 S. 303 (La. 1922); C.H. Steinberg & Sons v. Nodaway Drainage Dist. No. 2, 218 S.W. 960 (Mo. App. 1920); Urbis Realty Co. v. Globe Realty Co., 139 N.E. 238 (N.Y. 1923); Frederick Zittel & Sons v. Schwartz, 182 N.Y.S. 638 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1920); Johnson Constr. Co. v. Austin, 215 N.W. 484 (N.D. 1927); Friend v. Southern States Life Ins. Co., 194 P. 204 (Okla. 1920); Johnson v. Homestead-Iron Dyke Mines Co., 193 P. 1036 (Or. 1920); Giddings v. Nefsy, 212 N.W. 507 (S.D. 1927), followed Stock Growers' Bank v. Nefsy, 212 N.W. 512 (S.D. 1927) (separate writings); Willeford v. Wlaker, 499 S.W.2d 190 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973); Newcom v. Ford, 222 S.W. 591 (Tex. Civ. App. 1920); Hunter v. Gulf Production Co., 220 S.W. 168 (Tex. Civ. App. 1919); Riggins v. Post, 172 S.W. 210 (Tex. Civ. App. 1914); Foltz v. Conrad Realty Co., 109 S.E. 463 (Va. 1921); McLaren v. Narrows Land Co., 191 P. 389 (Wash. 1920); Mikusch v. Beeman, 188 P. 780 (Wash. 1920).

(n7)Footnote 480. Philippi Collieries Co. v. Thompson, 163 F. 23 (4th Cir. 1908); Atchison, T. & S.F.R. Co. v. Chicago & W.I.R. Co., 44 N.E. 828 (Ill. 1896); Lechner v. Strauss, 98 N.E. 444 (Ind. App. 1912); Knight v. Dyer, 57 Maine 174 (Me. 1869); Jennings v. Todd, 24 S.W. 148 (Mo. 1893); Bradtfeldt v. Cooke, 40 P. 1 (Or. 1895); Weber v. Rothchild, 15 P. 650 (Or. 1887).

(n8)Footnote 481. Lakeland Realty Co. v. Reese, 46 N.W.2d 696 (N.D. 1951).

(n9)Footnote 482. Re v. Magness Constr. Co., 117 A.2d 78 (Del. Super. 1955) (agreement to make improvements and repairs); Campbell v. Heller, 115 A.2d 644 (N.J. 1955).

(n10)Footnote 483. Palmere v. Curtis, 789 So. 2d 126 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001); Flipps v. CSC Assoc. III, L.L.C., 547 S.E.2d 216 (Va. 2001); R.P. Harris & Co. v. Thomas, 88 S. 51 (Ala. App. 1921); Corey v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 169 S.W.2d 655 (Ark. 1943); Reliable Constr. & Realty Co. v. Waterproofing Service, 34 A.2d 124 (D.C. App. 1943); Windham v. Windham, 11 S.2d 797 (Fla. 1943); Joseph v. Carter, 47 N.E.2d 471 (Ill. 1943); Wilhoit v. Furnish, 174 S.W.2d 515 (Ky. App. 1943); Blanke Bro. Realty Co. v. American Surety Co., 247 S.W. 797 (Mo. 1923); Anderson v. Broad St. Nat'l Bank, 109 A. 205 (N.J. 1920); Tracy Dev. Co. v. Empire Gas & Elec. Co., 189 N.Y.S. 836 (N.Y. 1921); Anthis v. Sullivan Oil & Gas Co., 203 P. 187 (Okla. 1921); Romans v. Shannon, 195 P. 298 (Okla. 1921); Hyland v. Oregon Agric. Co., 225 P. 728 (Or. 1924); Salem King's Products Co. v. Ramp, 196 P. 401 (Or. 1921); Dunlop v. McGehee's Exec., 124 S.E. 199 (Va. App. 1924). May not make new contract when existing contract is unreasonable. McNamer Realty Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 247 P. 166 (Mont. 1926).

(n11)Footnote 484. Atchison, T. & S.F.R. Co. v. Chicago & W.I.R. Co., 44 N.E. 823 (Ill. 1896); Hospital for Women v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar. Co., 11 A.2d 457 (Md. 1940); Atwood v. Cobb, 33 Mass. 227 (Mass. 1834);

Greenwood v. Ligon, 18 Miss. 615 (Miss. 1848); Post v. Weil, 22 N.E. 145 (N.Y. 1889); Tieri v. Orbell, 162 A.2d 248 (Pa. Super. 1960) (provision in a sales agreement that was conditioned upon the purchaser's ability to obtain financing in a stated amount, gave the buyer the right to determine terms of financing he would expect); Kuhl v. Roberson, 289 S.W. 433 (Tex. Civ. App. 1926); Southern Wire & Iron Co. v. Thomas, 256 S.W. 607 (Tex. Civ. App. 1923); Johnson v. Seagull Inv. Co., 237 P. 945 (Utah 1925); Yukon Pocahontas Coal Co. v. Ratliff, 24 S.E.2d 559 (Va. 1943); Adney v. Kraus, 183 N.W. 988 (Wis. 1921). Construed most strongly against person drafting contract. Coates v. Cotteral, 138 A. 756 (Pa. 1927). Construed most strongly against vendor. Felton v. Stacey, 185 N.W. 536 (Wis. 1921).

(n12)Footnote 485. Olbum v. Old Home Manor, Inc., 459 A.2d 757 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1983); Anderson v. Yaworski, 181 A. 205 (Conn. 1935).

(n13)Footnote 486. Atwood v. Cobb, 33 Mass. 227 (Mass. 1834).

(n14)Footnote 487. Geren v. Geren, 29 P.3d 448 (Kan. Ct. App. 2001) Keller v. Bones, 615 N.W.2d 883 (Neb. 2000); Smith Sons Lumber Co. v. Steiner, 85 S. 758 (Ala. 1920); Hughes v. Pacific Wharf & Storage Co., 205 P. 105 (Cal. 1922); Yule v. Miller, 252 P. 733 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1927); Machen v. Yost, 296 F. 1008 (D.C. App. 1924); Sampson v. McRae, 116 S.E. 651 (Ga. App. 1923); John Gabel Mfg. Co. v. Murphy, 62 N.E.2d 401 (Ill. 1945); Olson v. Beer, 220 P. 1021 (Kan. 1923); Buffalo Pressed Steel Co. v. Kirwan, 113 A. 628 (Md. 1921); Schulman v. Cornman, 223 N.Y.S. 19 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1927); Hinton v. Vinson, 104 S.E. 897 (N.C. 1920); Goble v. Bell Oil & Gas Co., 223 P. 371 (Okla. 1924); Platts v. Arney, 278 P.2d 657 (Wash. 1955) (in a contract for the exchange of real estate the defense of uncertainty in the terms is not applicable in an action based upon the contract when performance has made it certain in every respect in which it might have been regarded as uncertain).

(n15)Footnote 488. Coal & Delivery Co., Inc. v. Howard, 265 F. 566 (3d Cir. 1920); Anderson v. Willson, 191 P. 1016 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1920); Gross v. Clark, 113 A. 115 (R.I. 1921); Extraction Resources, Inc. v. Freeman, 555 S.W.2d 156 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977) (issues as to quantum of estate conveyed are construed against the vendor); Texas P. Coal & Oil Co. v. Harris, 230 S.W. 237 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921). Obscure or ambiguous clauses are construed against the vendor. Hudson v. Tilly, 98 S. 265 (La. 1923); Rosenblath v. Marabella, 3 La. App. 584 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1926); Olsen v. Fry, 207 N.W. 803 (Mich. 1926). Parol evidence may be admitted to clear up an ambiguity in a land sales contract. Stokes v. Tutvet, 328 P.2d 1096 (Mont. 1958).

(n16)Footnote 489. Bergeron v. Daspit, 43 S. 894 (La. 1907); Weingart v. Delgado, 16 S.2d 254 (La. 1943), Kelley v. Ellis, 76 N.W.2d 540 (Wis. 1956). Real estate contracts are to be construed most strictly against person who drew the agreement. Hous. Auth. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 309 S.2d 920 (La. App. 3d Cir. 1975); Yelkin v. Yelkin, 229 N.W.2d 59 (Neb. 1975).

(n17)Footnote 490. Rego v. Decker, 482 P.2d 834 (Alaska 1971).

(n18)Footnote 491. Rumas v. Baldwin, 62 P.2d 1345 (Wash. 1936).

(n19)Footnote 492. Butler v. Crescent Land & Dev. Co., Inc., 499 So. 2d 1163 (La. Ct. App. 1986); 731 West Lake Road, Inc. v. Boheen, 397 N.Y.S.2d 507 (N.Y. App. Div. 1977).

(n20)Footnote 493. Modulars by Design, Inc. v. DBJ Dev. Corp., 571 N.Y.S.2d 168 (1991).

Davis v. Lee, 100 P. 752 (Wash. 1909); Gilbert v. Stockman, 44 N.W. 845 (Wis. 1890). See Smith v. Worsham, 552 S.W.2d 367 (Mo. App. 1977) (written or typewritten provisions of contract control over printed provision); Rispo Realty Co. v. Wisniewski, 186 N.E.2d 758 (Ohio App. 1962) (typewritten provisions took precedence over printed terms); Innes v. Webb, 538 S.W.2d 237 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976). Written or typewritten provisions prevail over printed material. Buford v. Dearing, 500 S.W.2d 931 (Ark. 1973); Kern v. Pawlega, 146 N.W.2d 689 (Mich. App. 1966).

(n21)Footnote 494. Davis v. First Nat'l Bank, 229 P. 391 (Ariz. 1924); Monteverde v. Brooke Realty Co., 224 P.

247 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1924); Lunde v. Minch, 136 A. 552 (Conn. 1927); Cobb v. Willrett, 144 N.E. 834 (Ill. 1924); Conners v. Winans, 204 N.Y.S. 142 (N.Y. Sup. 1924); Jones w. Tschetter, 194 N.W. 839 (S.D. 1923). Covenant to improve and covenant to purchase and pay price dependent. Folkerts v. Maysville Land Co., 210 N.W. 231 (Mich. 1926). Covenants to convey and pay purchase money are dependent. Graves v. Chambers, 236 P. 25 (Okla. 1924). Covenants to pay and convey are dependent covenants. Benton v. Davison, 212 N.W. 500 (S.D. 1927).

(n22)Footnote 495. Benjamin v. Savage, 191 N.W. 408 (Minn. 1923); Conners v. Winans, 204 N.Y.S. 142 (N.Y. Sup. 1924). See Walker v. Hewitt, 220 P. 147 (Or. 1923). Covenant to pay note and covenant to convey independent. Gillett v. Cheairs, 243 P. 1112 (Colo. 1926). Covenant to pay installment is independent covenant. Conners v. Winans, 204 N.Y.S. 142 (N.Y. Sup. 1924).

(n23)Footnote 496. Gompert v. Frost, 177 N.W. 71 (Iowa 1920); Rosenblath v. Marabella, 3 La. App. 584 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1926).

(n24)Footnote 497. In re Estate of Rosenbaum, 624, N.W.2d 821 (S.D. 2001); Morehouse v. N. Land Co., 216 P. 792 (Mont. 1923); Kurtz v. Busch, 128 A. 552 (N.J. 1925).

(n25)Footnote 498. Flower v. Coe, 196 N.W. 139 (Neb. 1923); Govier v. Wilson, 195 N.W. 840 (Neb. 1923); Spielvogel v. Veit, 189 N.Y.S. 899 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1921).

(n26)Footnote 499. Brown v. Case, 86 S. 684 (Fla. 1920); Fox v. Corry, 89 S. 410 (La. 1921); Goedhard v. Folstad, 195 N.W. 281 (Minn. 1923).

(n27)Footnote 500. Campbell v. Gawart, 208 N.W.2d 607 (Mich. App. 1973).

(n28)Footnote 501. Quisenberry v. Grant, 104 S. 284 (Ala. App. 1925).

(n29)Footnote 502. Adaian v. Boranian, 211 P. 806 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1922); Sorensen v. Larue, 252 P. 494 (Idaho 1926); Abercrombie v. Stoddard, 228 P. 232 (Idaho 1924); Cobb v. Willrett, 144 N.E. 834 (Ill. 1924); Kincaid v. Dobrinsky, 225 Ill. App. 85 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1922).

(n30)Footnote 503. Haughey v. Heaney, 103 S. 400 (Fla. 1925).

(n31)Footnote 504. Westphal v. Buenger, 154 N.E. 426 (Ill. 1926).

(n32)Footnote 505. Barnes v. Barker, 202 N.W. 430 (Neb. 1925); Nations v. Stone, 217 P. 1031 (Okla. 1923). See Pegg v. Olson, 223 P. 223 (Wyo. 1924).

(n33)Footnote 506. Sisters and Brothers Inv. Group v. Vermont Nat'l Bank, 773 A.2d 264 (Vt. 2001); Jarecki v. Commonwealth of Pa. Unemployment Compensation Fund, 202 B.R. 385 (W.D. Pa. 1995); Wayne v. Butterfield, 210 N.W. 663 (S.D. 1926).

(n34)Footnote 507. Jackson v. Snow, 216 P. 60 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1923). Encumbrance includes a party wall agreement. Bennett v. Sheinwald, 147 N.E. 28 (Mass. 1925). Easements are encumbrances. Ritter v. Hill, 127 A. 455 (Pa. 1925). Restrictions on use of property are encumbrances. Ritter v. Hill, 127 A. 455 (Pa. 1925).

(n35)Footnote 508. Weinhold v. Weinhold, 223 P. 297 (Kan. 1924).

(n36)Footnote 509. Welsh v. Ford, 127 A. 431 (Pa. 1925).

(n37)Footnote 510. Zitzow v. Diederich, 337 N.W.2d 799 (N.D. 1983); Terrebonne v. Cheramie, 92 S. 388 (La. 1922); McCain v. Hicks, 90 S. 506 (La. 1922); Belbird Realty Corp. v. Wolfson, 222 N.Y.S. 659 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1927). See Mann v. Becker, 176 N.W. 765 (Wis. 1920).

(n38)Footnote 511. Dwight v. Parham, 107 S.E. 908 (S.C. 1921).

(n39)Footnote 512. Ginger v. Smith, 196 N.W. 298 (S.D. 1923).

(n40)Footnote 513. Valley Mercantile Co. v. Bailey, 216 P. 789 (Mont. 1923).

(n41)Footnote 514. Bockelman v. Spires, 193 N.W. 334 (Neb. 1923).

(n42)Footnote 515. Loutuff v. Friedenberg, 131 A. 574 (N.J. Ch. 1925).

(n43)Footnote 516. Moore v. Moore, 104 S.E. 266 (W. Va. 1920).

(n44)Footnote 517. Heuer v. Rubin, 61 A.2d 567 (N.J. Ch. 1948); Ward v. Christopherson, 518 S.W.2d 273 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975) (not void as a restraint against alienation).

(n45)Footnote 518. Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 87 U.S. 64 (1873).

(n46)Footnote 519. Can itself limit the language. Foltz v. Struxness, 215 P.2d 133 (Kan. 1950); Whiting Milk Cos. v. O'Connell, 179 N.E. 169 (Mass. 1931). Must find power from the language. Creter v. Creter, 145 A.2d 149 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1958).

(n47)Footnote 520. McCoshum v. Hoselton, 543 P.2d 657 (Or. 1975).

(n48)Footnote 521. Crancer v. Lareau, 1 F.2d 117 (8th Cir. 1924); California Sch. Township v. Kellogg, 33 N.E.2d 363 (Ind. App. 1941); Glenn v. Lowther, 293 S.W. 947 (Ky. App. 1927); Moskow v. Burke, 152 N.E. 321 (Mass. 1926); Buccilli v. Padgen, 204 N.W. 130 (Mich. 1925); Caplan v. Palace Realty Co., 110 A. 584 (N.J. Ch. 1920); Anderson v. Morse, 222 P. 1083 (Or. 1924); Searles v. Auld, 111 S.E. 785 (S.C. 1922); Wright v. Fischer, 148 S.W.2d 49 (Tenn. App. 1940).

(n49)Footnote 522. William James Sons Co. v. Hutchinson, 90 S.E. 1047 (W. Va. 1916).

(n50)Footnote 523. Empire Properties, Inc. v. Equireal, Inc., 674 A.2d 297 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1996); N. Wyo. Land Co. v. Butler, 252 F. 971 (8th Cir. 1918); Hicks v. Revels, 83 S.E. 115 (Ga. 1914); Prairie Dev. Co. v. Leiberg, 98 P. 616 (Idaho 1908); August v. Collins, 214 N.W. 951 (Mich. 1927); Clark v. Dye, 197 N.W. 209 (Minn. 1924); Norris v. Letchworth, 124 S.W. 559 (Mo. App. 1910); Crane v. De Luca, 138 A. 919 (N.J. 1927); Green-Shrier Co. v. State Realty & Mortg. Co., 92 N.E. 98 (N.Y. 1910); Shrut v. Huselton, 116 A. 43 (Pa. 1922); Graboyes v. Kapner, 176 A. 40 (Pa. Super. 1935); Lewis v. Gilmore, 7 Fay. L.J. (Pa.) 211; Langley v. Norris, 173 S.W.2d 454 (Tex. 1943); Hogan v. Swayze, 237 P. 1097 (Utah 1925). A contract to convey implies giving a warranty deed. Ray v. Wooster, 270 S.W.2d 743 (Mo. 1954).

(n51)Footnote 524. Bauer v. Monroe, 158 P.2d 485 (Mont. 1945).

(n52)Footnote 525. Foft v. Page, 245 N.W. 312 (Iowa 1932); Moskow v. Burke, 165 N.E. 416 (Mass. 1929); Osborne v. Eldriedge, 280 P. 497 (Or. 1929); Mollet v. Bloedorn, 275 N.W. 896 (Wis. 1937).

(n53)Footnote 526. McClure v. Wilson, 185 S.W.2d 878 (Mo. App. 1945); Kohoot v. Gurbisz, 139 A. 223 (N.J. 1927); Badger v. Boyd, 65 S.W.2d 601 (Tenn. App. 1933).

(n54)Footnote 527. Vaudreuil Lumber Co. v. Culbert, 263 N.W. 637 (Wis. 1935). The courts reach different results as to oral modification of contracts of sale. Garcia v. Karam, 276 S.W.2d 255 (Ga. 1955) (contract modified); Gulf Oil Corp. v. Willcoxon, 86 S.E.2d 507 (Ga. 1955) (contract not modified).

(n55)Footnote 528. Morrison v. Roberts, 23 S.E.2d 164 (Ga. 1942); Lochwitz v. Pine Tree Mining & Milling Co.,

108 P. 1128 (Utah 1910).

(n56)Footnote 529. See Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 137 P. 21 (Cal. 1913); Wellington Realty Co. v. Gilbert, 131 P. 803 (Colo. App. 1913); Morrison v. Roberts, 23 S.E.2d 164 (Ga. 1942); Kitchener v. Jehlik, 118 P. 1058 (Kan. 1911); Reiff v. Coulter, 92 P. 436 (Wash. 1907).

(n57)Footnote 530. Warren v. Harrison, 139 S.E. 549 (Ga. 1927); Hutchinson v. Coonley, 70 N.E. 686 (Ill. 1904); Darragh v. Knolk, 254 N.W. 22 (Iowa 1934); Brummel v. Clifton Realty Co., 125 A. 905 (Md. 1924); Rocca v. Calabrese, 130 A. 447 (N.J. 1925); Yara Engr. Corp. v. City of Newark, 42 A.2d 632 (N.J. Ch. 1945); Emmanuel v. Hughes, 145 A. 586 (Pa. 1929).

(n58)Footnote 531. Hogan v. Swayze, 237 P. 1097 (Utah 1925).

(n59)Footnote 532. First Nat'l Bank v. Tate, 13 S.W.2d 587 (Ark. 1929); Carman v. Harrah, 170 S.W. 388 (Mo. App. 1914).

(n60)Footnote 533. Rose v. Howell, 284 S.W. 776 (Ark. 1926); Pearson v. Courson, 59 S.E. 907 (Ga. 1907); Johnson v. Smith, 280 S.W. 158 (Tex. 1926). The doctrine of "idem sonans" is now applied in Florida where deed has been recorded for seven years. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 689.19.

(n61)Footnote 534. Valley Planing Mill Co. v. Lena Lumber Co., 272 S.W. 860 (Ark. 1925); Carrig v. Earle, 135 N.E. 872 (Mass. 1922); Colburn v. Keyser, 123 S.E. 430 (W. Va. 1924).

(n62)Footnote 535. Mills v. Matthews, 7 Md. 315 (Md. 1854).

(n63)Footnote 536. Eddy v. Short, 179 N.W. 818 (Iowa 1920).

(n64)Footnote 537. Delta Land & Water Co. v. Perry, 207 P. 393 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1922). See Ball v. Warner, 251 P. 929 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1926). A deed requiring grantee to bear costs of clearing title to land known to be subject to adverse possession was champertous and void. Gregory v. First State Bank, 305 S.W.2d 538 (Ky. 1957).

(n65)Footnote 538. Warren v. Harrison, 139 S.E. 549 (Ga. 1927); South Texas Land Co. v. Sorensen, 202 N.W. 552 (Iowa 1925); Brummel v. Clifton Realty Co., 125 A. 905 (Md. 1924); Shapero v. Picard, 209 N.W. 576 (Mich. 1926); Stepanian v. Moskovitz, 206 N.W. 359 (Mich. 1925); Sovell v. First Nat'l Bank, 209 N.W. 22 (Minn. 1926); Rocca v. Calabrese, 130 A. 447 (N.J. Sup. 1925); Richards v. Cox, 152 N.E. 682 (Ohio App. 1926); Hofheinz v. Wilson, 286 S.W. 958 (Tex. Civ. App. 1926). See Butler v. Ginsburg, 117 S.E. 262 (Ga. App. 1923); Burstein v. Alldis, 208 N.W. 31 (Mich. 1926).

(n66)Footnote 539. Westerman v. Raid, 212 N.W. 134 (Iowa 1927).

(n67)Footnote 540. Schultz v. Union C. Life Ins. Co., 271 N.W. 249 (Minn. 1937).

(n68)Footnote 541. Nordfors v. Knight, 60 P.2d 1115 (Utah 1936).

(n69)Footnote 542. "Before a court of equity will reform a written instrument it must appear that there was a valid agreement, that the written instrument failed to express such agreement, that this failure was due to mistake, and this must all appear by clear and convincing proof." See Morris v. Gilliam, 213 Ky. 763, 281 S. W. 1026; M. P. Bros Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 214 Ky. 560, 283 S. W. 424, Bass v. Hieatt Bros., 215 Ky. 313, 284 S. W. 1076." Ky. Title Co. v. Hail, 292 S.W. 817 (Ky. App. 1927). In a sales contract conditioned on vendee's ability to obtain financing, the court permitted parol evidence to be introduced to clarify the type of financing indicated and permitted return of the purchase money where it could not be obtained. Tieri v. Orbell, 162 A.2d 248 (Pa. Super. 1960).

(n70)Footnote 543. Copeland v. Keller, 129 S. 571 (Ala. 1930); Anderson v. Juanita Coal & Coke Co., 267 P. 400

(Colo. 1928); Fordson Coal Co. v. Potter, 35 S.W.2d 298 (Ky. App. 1931) (reforming boundary line); Heissen v. Bleznak, 149 A. 630 (N.J. Ch. 1930); Lytle v. Hulen, 275 P. 45 (Or. 1929); Billings v. Billings, 287 P. 46 (Wash. 1930).

(n71)Footnote 544. Possession is sufficient notice as to permit reformation against subsequent purchasers or encumbrances. Graham v. Brand, 148 S.E. 84 (Ga. 1929); Pearce v. Osterman, 175 N.E. 416 (Ill. 1931); Russell v. Scarborough, 124 S. 648 (Miss. 1929); Luker v. Moffett, 38 S.W.2d 1037 (Mo. 1931); Deubel v. Dearwester, 172 N.E. 640 (Ohio App. 1930); Robert Oil Corp. v. Jones, 23 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. Civ. App. 1929); Miles v. Craig, 266 P. 182 (Wash. 1928).

(n72)Footnote 545. Alger v. Smith, 948 P.2d 1244 (Or. Ct. App. 1997); Flaspohler v. Hoffman, 652 S.W. 703 (Mo. Ct. App. 1983); Phoenix Chair Co. v. Daniel, 155 S. 363 (Ala. 1934); Beeson v. Byars, 63 S.W.2d 540 (Ark. 1933) (reformed as against one who had not paid full consideration); Graham v. Brand, 148 S.E. 84 (Ga. 1929); Fed. Land Bank v. Kenshalo, 258 Ill. App. 1 (Ill. App. 4th Dist. 1930) (reformed as against judgment creditors); Isaacs v. Wiley, 154 N.E. 512 (Ind. App. 1926); Taylor v. Lindenmann, 235 N.W. 310 (Iowa 1931); Davis v. Bunnell, 225 N.W. 6 (Iowa 1929) (reformed as against judgment creditors); Owens v. Owens, 135 S. 87 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1931); Adams v. Smith, 6 La. App. 187 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1927) (not reformed as against judgment creditors); Stolte v. Krentel, 260 N.W. 127 (Mich. 1935); Elizabethport Banking Co. v. Delmore Realty Co., 173 A. 331 (N.J. Ch. 1934) (reformed as against pre-existing debt security); Burlingham v. Hanrahan, 251 N.Y.S. 55 (N.Y. Sup. 1931); Grossett v. McQueen, 169 S.E. 829 (N.C. 1933) (reformed as against judgment creditors); Deubel v. Dearwester, 172 N.E. 640 (Ohio App. 1930); Miles v. Craig, 266 P. 182 (Wash. 1928).

(n73)Footnote 546. Harrell v. Stumberg, 57 S.2d 692 (La. 1952).

(n74)Footnote 547. Bauer v. Monroe, 158 P.2d 485 (Mont. 1945).

(n75)Footnote 548. Vaudreuil Lumber Co. v. Culbert, 263 N.W. 637 (Wis. 1935).

(n76)Footnote 549. Morrison v. Kandler, 334 P.2d 459 (Or. 1958).

(n77)Footnote 550. Melco Inv. Co. v. Gapp, 105 N.W.2d 907 (Minn. 1960).

(n78)Footnote 551. Singer v. Hoffman Cake Co., 275 N.W. 177 (Mich. 1937).

(n79)Footnote 552. Straley v. Polifronio, 294 N.W. 401 (Mich. 1940).

(n80)Footnote 553. Johnson v. Douglas, 274 N.W. 780 (Mich. 1937).

(n81)Footnote 554. Williams v. Cassidy, 23 N.W.2d 423 (Iowa 1946). No new or additional consideration is necessary to modify an executory earnest money agreement. Becker v. Lagerquist Bros., Inc., 348 P.2d 428 (Wash. 1960).

(n82)Footnote 555. Stitzer v. Dunkin Donuts, Inc., 87 F. Supp. 2d 104 (D. Conn. 2000); Di Giuseppe v. Di Giuseppe, 96 A.2d 874 (Pa. 1953).

(n83)Footnote 556. In re Yates Dev., Inc., 256 F.3d 1285 (11th Cir. 2001); Yellowstone II Dev. Group Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 20 P.3d 755 (Mont. 2001); Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U.S. 252 (1882); Murphy v. Schnell, 93 N.E. 738 (Ill. 1910); Minn. & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Cox, 41 N.W. 24 (Iowa 1988); Bacon v. Leslie, 31 P. 1066 (Kan. 1893); Anthony v. Hudson, 114 S.W. 782 (Ky. App. 1908); Baltimore Perm. Bldg. & Land Soc. v. Smith, 54 Md. 187 (Md. 1880); Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 498 (Md. 1853); Atwood v. Cobb, 33 Mass. 227 (Mass. 1834); Roden v. Williams, 158 N.W. 360 (Neb. 1916); McCornick v. Levy, 106 P. 660 (Utah 1910); Sandstone Brick & Lime Co. v. Lawler, 101 P. 360 (Wash. 1909); Light v. E.M. Grant & Co., 79 S.E. 1011 (W. Va. 1913); Gilbert v. Stockman, 44 N.W. 845 (Wis. 1890). The Uniform Commercial Code does not apply to transfers of realty. Gallegos v. Graff, 508 P.2d 798 (Colo. App. 1973). Extensions of sales contracts must be in writing. Wells v. Spears, 255 S.2d 215 (La. App. 1971). Written or typewritten provisions of contract control over printed provisions. Smith v. Worsham, 552 S.W.2d 367 (Mo. App. 1977).

(n84)Footnote 557. Alexander v. Herndon, 65 S.E. 1048 (S.C. 1909).

(n85)Footnote 558. Halsey v. Minn.-S.C. Land & Timber Co., 177 S.E. 29 (S.C. 1934).

(n86)Footnote 559. Camden & Trenton Ry. Co. v. Adams, 51 A. 24 (N.J. Ch. 1902).

(n87)Footnote 560. Texaco, Inc. v. Newton and Rosa Smith Charitable Trust, 471 So. 2d 877 (La. Ct. App. 1985); Anthony v. Hudson, 114 S.W. 782 (Ky. App. 1908); Thornbury v. Bolt, 116 S.W. 1177 (Ky. App. 1909). Contra, as to parol extensions of time for performance. Williams v. Sanacore, 78 A.2d 91 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1951). The above contra applies only to bilateral contracts. Willow Brook Recreation Ctr., Inc. v. Selle, 233 A.2d 77 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1967).

(n88)Footnote 561. Klee v. Chicago Trust Co., 6 N.E.2d 442 (Ill. 1937).

(n89)Footnote 562. Tyson v. Jones, 63 S.E. 734 (N.C. 1909).

(n90)Footnote 563. Stubblefield v. Farmer, 165 S.W.2d 556 (Ky. App. 1942); McSurley v. Venters, 104 S.W. 365 (Ky. App. 1907).

(n91)Footnote 564. Zehnder v. Michaud, 145 F.2d 713 (8th Cir. 1944); Lancaster & Jefferson Elec. Light Co. v. Jones, 71 A. 871 (N.H. 1909).

(n92)Footnote 565. City of Marshall v. Kalman, 190 N.W. 597 (Minn. 1922).

(n93)Footnote 566. Krost v. Moyer, 207 N.W. 311 (Minn. 1926).

(n94)Footnote 567. Eaton v. Sadler, 110 S. 10 (Ala. 1926).

(n95)Footnote 568. Jacobson v. Gulbransen, 623 N.W.2d 84 (S.D. 2001); Richardson v. Stuberfield, 271 S.W. 345 (Ark. 1925); Lescher v. Baird, 294 S.W. 17 (Ark. 1927); Coleman v. Edgar, 257 P. 452 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1927); LeWitt v. Park Ecclesiastical Soc., 130 A. 387 (Conn. 1925); Petretes v. Atlanta Loan & Trust Co., 131 S.E. 510 (Ga. 1926); Lewis v. Trimble, 106 S.E. 101 (Ga. 1921); Dean v. Turner, 105 S.E. 602 (Ga. 1921); Stroud v. Moore, 104 S.E. 633 (Ga. 1920); Bridges v. Shining, 105 S.E. 862 (Ga. App. 1921); Sulzberger v. Steinhauer, 209 N.W. 68 (Mich. 1926); Green v. Harshaw, 121 S.E. 456 (N.C. 1924); Bloech v. Hyland Homes Co., 247 P. 761 (Or. 1926); In re Frederick's Est., 49 D. & C. 261 (C.P. of Blair County, Pa. 1943); Mitchell v. Morgan, 181 N.W. 958 (S.D. 1921); Baleja v. Henderson, 241 S.W. 1080 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); McElroy v. Danciger, 241 S.W. 1098 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); Smith v. Bailey, 127 S.E. 89 (Va. 1925). Description as "her lands in sections 16 and 17, A. township, S. county, Ill., commonly called the B. farm," held sufficient. Vincent v. McElvain, 136 N.E. 502 (Ill. 1922). If the sale is by acreage and the exact acreage is essential to the contract, the corresponding adjustment as to purchase price occurs when the actual acreage is found to be less than that listed in the contract. Bicknell v. Barnes, 501 S.W.2d 761 (Ark. 1973).

(n96)Footnote 569. Weber v. Adler, 143 N.E. 95 (Ill. 1924); Paynesville Land Co. v. Grabow, 200 N.W. 481 (Minn. 1924); Curlee v. Phelps, 242 S.W. 517 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922).

(n97)Footnote 570. Baker v. Puffer, 132 N.E. 429 (Ill. 1921); Midkiff v. Glass, 123 S.E. 329 (Va. 1924).

(n98)Footnote 571. MTrust Corp. N.A. v. LJH Corp., 837 S.W.2d 250 (Tex. Ct. App. 1992); Martin v. Gulf Coast Orchard & Products Co., 279 F. 8 (5th Cir. 1922); Security Inv. Co. v. Bartram, 202 P. 337 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1921); Stone-Hood Awning Co. v. Zipp, 203 N.Y.S. 691 (N.Y. Sup. 1924).

(n99)Footnote 572. Katzin v. Kruvant, 133 A. 516 (N.J. Ch. 1926).

(n100)Footnote 573. Siegert v Seneca Resources Corp., 28 S.W.3d 680 (Tex. Ct. App. 2000); Bloech v. Hyland Homes Co., 247 P. 761 (Or. 1926).

(n101)Footnote 574. Johnson v. Schimpf, 239 P. 401 (Cal. 1925); Russell v. Ramm, 254 P. 532 (Cal. 1927).

(n102)Footnote 575. Elliott v. Sackett, 108 U.S. 132 (1883).

(n103)Footnote 576. Rucker v. Harrington, 52 Mo. App. 481 (1893) (to be covered to the same extent as the original contract by the statute of frauds, any subsequent change must be in writing).

(n104)Footnote 577. Copeland v. Keller, 129 S. 571 (Ala. 1930); Barlow v. Stevens, 150 S. 245 (Fla. 1933); Carpenter v. Young, 280 Ill. App. 116 (Ill. App. 3d Dist. 1935); Federal Land Bank v. Pace, 48 P.2d 480 (Utah 1935).

(n105)Footnote 578. Merger of contract into the deed. Lovlie v. Plum, 250 N.W.2d 56 (Iowa 1977); Tamm, Inc. v. Pildis, 249 N.W.2d 823 (Iowa 1976). See Allison Dunham, Merger By Deed: Was It Ever Automatic?, 10 Ga. L. Rev. 419 (1976); Smedley & Blunk, Oral Understandings at Variance with Absolute Deeds, 34 Ill. L. Rev. 189.

(n106)Footnote 579. Duncan v. McAdams, 257 S.W.2d 568 (Ark. 1953); Pryor v. Aviola, 301 A.2d 306 (Del. Super. 1973); Bryant v. Turner, 256 S.E.2d 667 (Ga. App. 1979); Slocum v. Bracy, 56 N.W. 826 (Minn. 1893). A sales contract was treated as an equitable mortgage requiring foreclosure with a reasonable time to redeem. Nelson v. Robinson, 336 P.2d 415 (Kan. 1959). "The decided weight of authority and the better reasoning support the view that there cannot be an implied agreement for the occupancy of land, in the face of the express contract that the vendee holds possession under his right to purchase." Carpenter v. U.S., 84 U.S. 489 (1873); Griffith v. Collins, 42 S.E. 748 (Ga. 1902); Quertemious v. Hatfield, 14 S.W. 1096 (Ark. 1890); Brown v. Randolph, 62 S.W. 981 (Tex. Civ. App. 1901). "The right of the vendee to purchase continued after breach by him and until such time as the vendors saw fit to exercise the option given them by the contract to terminate it; so that it cannot be said that the contract to purchase was in full force and effect, and at the same time there was in effect, also, an implied agreement that the vendee should hold as tenant. The action of the parties under this contract completely negatives the idea that either ever intended that their relation should be that of landlord and tenant." Arnold v. Fraser, 117 P. 1064 (Mont. 1911). Prior agreements are merged into the deed, but this does not prevent reformation on grounds of mutual mistake of fact, misrepresentation or fraud. Bicknell v. Barnes, 501 S.W.2d 761 (Ark. 1973). Merger of sales contract in deed is a matter of intention. Ga. Mobile Home Dev. Corp. v. Kuter, 168 S.E.2d 858 (Ga. App. 1969). Prior agreements are generally merged into the deed. Dept. of Transp. v. W. Nat'l Bank, 316 N.E.2d 663 (Ill. App. 1974). Where certain deeds contained no reference to antecedent contracts reserving possession in the vendor, but contained the usual covenant, whereby, under this section, grantees were given, in praesenti, the right to enter, receive the rents and enjoy the premises without interruption and free from encumbrance, as the stipulations in the contracts of sale and the covenants in the deeds were in irreconcilable conflict on the question of possession, the antecedent contracts were merged in the deeds, and the vendees were entitled to possession. Woodson v. Smith, 104 S.E. 794 (Va. 1920), applied in Adams v. Seymour, 61 S.E.2d 23 (Va. 1950). In provisions of contracts for sale, all private negotiations and agreements are merged into the deed. Cullens v. Woodruff, 223 S.E.2d 293 (Ga. App. 1976); Peoples Nat'l Bank v. Nat'l Bank of Comm., 420 P.2d 208 (Wash. 1966). However, collateral contracts are not merged into the deed. Rhenish v. Deunk, 219 N.E.2d 822 (Ohio App. 1963). Acceptance of the deed merges all prior negotiations and terms of the contract into the deed and the deed is determined by the rights of the parties. Reed v. Dudley, 533 P.2d 507 (Colo. App. 1975); Snyder v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 333 N.E.2d 421 (Mass. 1975). Preliminary agreements are merged into the deed. Bennett v. Behring Corp., 466 F. Supp. 689 (S.D. Fla. 1979); Hueg v. Sunburst Farms Mut. Water & Agric. Co., 594 P.2d 538 (Ariz. App. 1979). Contract warranties and representations are lost by merger. Elderkin v. Gaster, 288 A.2d 771 (Pa. 1972).

(n107)Footnote 580. Mason v. Loveless, 24 P.3d 997 (Utah Ct. App. 2001); Waterville Indus., Inc. v. Finance Authority of Me., 758 A.2d 986 (Me. 2000); Maxey v. Quintana, 499 P.2d 356 (N.M. App. 1972); Blake-McFall Co. v.

Wilson, 193 P. 902 (Or. 1920).

(n108)Footnote 581. Richardson v. Hardin, 5 P.3d 393 (Wyo. 2000).

Van Ness v. City of Washington, 29 U.S. 232 (1830); Wing v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Assn., 101 P.2d 1099 (Cal. 1940); Turner v. Cool, 23 Ind. 56 (Ind. 1864), rev'd in part on other grounds, Heavilon v. Heavilon, 29 Ind. 509 (Ind. 1868); Wickersham v. Orr, 9 Iowa 253 (Iowa 1859); Smith v. Smith, 287 N.W. 411 (Mich. 1939); Howes v. Barker, 3 Johns. 506 (N.Y. Sup. 1808); Coleman v. Whittle, 60 S.E. 523 (S.C. 1908); Kansas City Land Co. v. Hill, 11 S.W. 797 (Tenn. 1889); Miller v. Kemp, 160 S.E. 203 (Va. 1931); Davis v. Lee, 100 P. 752 (Wash. 1909).

(n109)Footnote 582. Jensen v. Miller, 570 P.2d 375 (Or. 1977).

(n110)Footnote 583. Sanford v. Breidenbach, 173 N.E.2d 702 (Ohio App. 1960).

(n111)Footnote 584. Dept. of Transp. v. W. Nat'l Bank of Cicero, 347 N.E.2d 161 (Ill. 1976).

(n112)Footnote 585. Lacy v. White, 288 N.E.2d 178 (Ind. App. 1972).

(n113)Footnote 586. Neppl v. Murphy, 736 N.E.2d 1174 (Ill. App. Ct. 2000); Yaksich v. Relocation Realty Serv. Corp., 391 N.Y.S.2d 822 (N.Y. Sup. 1977); Brockport Developers, Inc. v. 47 Ely Corp., 369 N.Y.S.2d 601 (N.Y. Sup. 1975).

(n114)Footnote 587. Carson v. Parks, 233 S.E.2d 857 (Ga. App. 1977).

(n115)Footnote 588. Morris v. Whitcher, 20 N.Y. 41 (N.Y. 1859); Raguso v. Ferreira, 60 N.Y.S.2d 418 (N.Y. Sup. 1946).

(n116)Footnote 589. Reed v. Dudly, 533 P.2d 507 (Colo. App. 1975); Kahn-Reiss, Inc. v. Detroit & N. Sav. & Loan Co., 228 N.W.2d 816 (Mich. App. 1975).

(n117)Footnote 590. Fitzpatrick v. Allied Contracting Co., 182 N.E.2d 183 (Ill. 1962).

(n118)Footnote 591. Knudson v. Weeks, 394 F. Supp. 963 (W.D. Okla. 1975); Carson v. Parks, 233 S.E.2d 857 (Ga. App. 1977); San Joi, Inc. v. Peek, 231 S.E.2d 145 (Ga. App. 1976); Stevens v. Vail Assn., Inc., 472 P.2d 729 (Colo. App. 1970); Meyers v. Antone, 227 A.2d 56 (D.C. App. 1967); Soper v. Stine, 184 S.2d 892 (Fla. App. 1966); Dubois County Mach. Co. v. Blessinger, 274 N.E.2d 279 (Ind. App. 1971); Cullins v. Woodward, 223 S.E.2d 293 (Ga. 1976), rev'd in part on other grounds, Holmes v. Worthey, 282 S.E. 919 (Ga. App. 1981); Stubbs v. Hemmert, 567 P.2d 168 (Utah 1977); Reed v. Dudley, 533 P.2d 507 (Colo. App. 1975).

(n119)Footnote 592. Rouse v. Brooks, 383 N.E.2d 666 (Ill. App. 5th Dist. 1978).

(n120)Footnote 593. Bull v. Willard, 9 Barb. 641 (Steuben Cir., N.Y. 1850).

(n121)Footnote 594. Siebros Fin. Corp. v. Kirman, 249 N.Y.S. 497 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1931).

(n122)Footnote 595. Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 498 (Md. 1853).

(n123)Footnote 596. Miller v. Kemp, 160 S.E. 203 (Va. 1931).

(n124)Footnote 597. Walter J. Dolan Properties v. Vonnegut, 184 S. 757 (Fla. 1938).

(n125)Footnote 598. Nat'l Bank of Com. v. Fountain, 514 P.2d 194 (Wash. App. 1973).

(n126)Footnote 599. Dourountoudakis v. Alesi, 706 N.Y.S.2d 476 (N.Y. App. Div. 2000); Dennett v. Mt. Harvard

Dev. Co, 604 P.2d 699 (Colo. App. 1979) (contract not merged into deed where intent not contrary); PoIk Bond & Mortg. Co. v. Dwiggins, 147 S. 855 (Fla. 1933); Helmer v. Hegidio, 210 S.E.2d 332 (Ga. App. 1974). A sales contract is merged into a deed only where it is reasonable to assume parties intended extinction of their contractual rights. City of N. Bend v. Coos County, 485 P.2d 1226 (Or. 1971). Intent that collateral agreements of the vendor survive the deed must be clearly apparent from the contract where not made a covenant in the deed. Oremus v. Wynhoff, 123 N.W.2d 441 (Wis. 1963). No merger of deed if contrary to the intent of the parties, or where contract provision was not an integral part of the contract to convey. Yaksich v. Relocation Realty Serv. Corp., 391 N.Y.S.2d 822 (N.Y. Sup. 1977).

(n127)Footnote 600. 1455 Washington Ave. Assocs. v. Rose and Kiernan Inc., 687 N.Y.S.2d 791 (N.Y. App. Div. 1999); C & G Candler, Inc. v. Ga. Power Co., 226 S.E.2d 87 (Ga. App. 1976).

(n128)Footnote 601. In Hidden Valley Lake, Inc. v. Kirsey, 348 N.E.2d 674 (Ind. App. 1976); Times v. Shannon, 19 Md. 296 (Md. 1862); Edwards v. Clark, 47 N.W. 112 (Mich. 1890); Cook v. Combs, 39 N.H. 592 (N.H. 1859); Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121 (Vt. 1869); Trout v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 59 S.E. 394 (Va. 1907).

(n129)Footnote 602. Trapp v. Gordon, 7 N.E.2d 869 (Ill. 1937); Slocum v. Bracy, 56 N.W. 826 (Minn. 1893); West. Coast Mfg. & Inv. Co. v. West Coast Improvement Co., 72 P. 455 (Wash. 1903).

(n130)Footnote 603. Doty v. Sandusky Portland Cement Co., 91 N.E. 569 (Ind. App. 1910). See Reynolds v. Wilson, 173 S.E.2d 256 (Ga. App. 1970) (no merger where part of contract is intended to be performed after delivery of the deed).

(n131)Footnote 604. Alger-Sullivan Lumber Co. v. Union Trust Co., 92 S. 254 (Ala. 1922); Fretwell v. Nix, 288 S.W. 8 (Ark. 1926); O'Bar v. Hight, 277 S.W. 533 (Ark. 1925); Mills v. Richmond Co., 206 P. 486 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1922); Thomas v. Dunnean, 225 P. 253 (Colo. 1924); Pierce v. Dennett, 136 S.E. 440 (Ga. 1927) (bond for title); Willingham v. Anderson, 84 S.E.2d 471 (Ga. App. 1954); Wayne Intl. Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Beckner, 134 N.E. 273 (Ind. 1922); Maple v. Truax, 250 S.W. 124 (Ky. App. 1923); Aragona v. Parrella, 91 N.E.2d 778 (Mass. 1950) (preliminary negotiations are merged into a deed); Michelson v. Sherman, 39 N.E.2d 633 (Mass. 1942); New York, N. H. & H. R.R. Co. v. Plimpton, 130 N.E. 498 (Mass. 1921); Weinburgh v. Saier, 6 N.W.2d 921 (Mich. 1942); Bernard v. Schneider, 117 N.W.2d 755 (Minn. 1965); Humble v. St. John, 234 P. 475 (Mont. 1925); Morehouse v. Northern Land Co., 216 P. 792 (Mont. 1923); Duvall v. Stone, 213 P.2d 212 (N.M. 1949) (all preliminary negotiations are merged into a deed); Andrew D. Baird Holding Corp. v. Burns Bros., 204 N.Y.S. 820 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dist. 1924); Rabel v. Downs, 155 N.E. 403 (Ohio App. 1926); Mitchell v. Schmelzer, 132 P.2d 332 (Okla. 1942); Van Hee v. Rickman, 220 P. 143 (Or. 1923); Blake-McFall Co. v. Wilson, 193 P. 902 (Or. 1920); Dobkin v. Landsberg, 116 A. 814 (Pa. 1922); Charleston & W. Carolina Ry. Co. v. Joyce, 99 S.E.2d 187 (S.C. 1957); Johnson v. Ford, 245 S.W. 531 (Tenn. 1922); Minor v. Belk, 360 S.W.2d 477 (Tenn. App. 1962); Michael v. Busby, 162 S.W.2d 662 (Tex. 1942); Whitehead v. Weldon, 264 S.W. 958 (Tex. Civ. App. 1924); Charles v. McClanahan, 108 S.E. 858 (Va. 1921); Woodson v. Smith, 104 S.E. 794 (Va. 1920); Watson-Loy Coal Co. v. Monroe Coal Mining Co., 102 S.E. 485 (W. Va. 1920). See James A. Catalfimo, Student Author, Merger of Land Contract in Deed, 25 Alb. L. Rev. 122 (1961).

(n132)Footnote 605. South Texas Land Co. v. Sorenson, 202 N.W. 552 (Iowa 1925); Goodspeed v. Nichols, 204 N.W. 122 (Mich. 1925); Newmyer v. Williams, 245 S.W. 56 (Mo. App. 1922); Merchants & Traders Developing Co. v. Mercer Realty Co., 123 A. 875 (N.J. 1924). See Swensen v. Union C. Life Ins. Co., 280 N.W. 600 (Iowa 1938). A provision in the purchase contract that the vendor would make certain improvements and convey the land free from liens attaching prior to the date of the contract did not merge into the deed, where because of a reassessment the vendee was obliged to pay increased cost for improvements made. Gawron v. Robert Dev. Corp., 107 N.W.2d 878 (Mich. 1961). Covenants to build or repair in a land sales contract are not merged in the deed. Galvin v. Keen, 135 N.E.2d 769 (Ohio App. 1954). Merger of the contract into the deed is a matter of intention. Killen v. High Point Forest, Inc., 123 S.E.2d 10 (Ga. App. 1961). Where an option paragraph called for a condition after delivery of the warranty deed, the option agreement was not merged into the warranty deed. Kahn-Reiss, Inc. v. Detroit & N.W. Sav. & Loan Assn., 228 N.W.2d 816 (Mich. App. 1975). A contract of sale did not merge into deed, where contract was clear that subsequent deed was intended to merely serve as a vehicle for passing title for the purpose of using the land for the purposes specified in the contract. Land Reclamation, Inc. v. Riverside Corp., 492 P.2d 263 (Or. 1972). Option given to purchase two tracts not merged in deed to optionee of one tract. Scott v. Lester, 251 S.E.2d 257 (Ga. 1978).

(n133)Footnote 606. Re v. Magness Const. Co., 117 A.2d 78 (Del. Super. 1955). Limitation of use of property. Campbell v. Heller, 115 A.2d 644 (N.J. Super. Ch. Div. 1955). Covenant for reservation of fixtures not merged in deed. Brunswick Constr. Co. v. Burden, 101 N.Y.S. 716 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1906). Contract to complete a house not merged in deed. Price v. Woodward-Brown Realty Co., 190 N.Y.S. 561 (N.Y. Sup. 1921), aff'd, 192 N.Y.S. 947 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1922). Contract for completion of grading not merged in deed. Terry v. Raif, 130 N.Y.S.2d 159 (N.Y. Co. Ct. 1954). Agreement in sales contract to pay special assessments was not merged into deed but was collateral. Rhenish v. Deunk, 219 N.E.2d 822 (Ohio App. 1963). Oral promises to repair found to have survived deed. P.B.R. Enter., Inc. v. Perren, 253 S.E.2d 765 (Ga. 1979).

(n134)Footnote 607. Herbert v. Corby, 17 A.2d 541 (N.J. 1940). All prior contemporaneous negotiations or executory agreements, written or oral, leading up to the execution of deed are merged by acceptance of the grantee in absence of fraud or mistake, but independent or collateral agreements are not merged. Dubois County Mach. Co. v. Blessinger, 274 N.E.2d 279 (Ind. App. 1971). Oral warranty as to habitability was a collateral agreement and not merged in deed. City of Gering v. Jones, 122 N.W.2d 503 (Neb. 1963).

(n135)Footnote 608. Shetzen v. C.C. Aycock Realty Co., 92 S.E.2d 114 (Ga. App. 1956), superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Allen v. Bobo, 113 S.E.2d 138 (Ga. 1960).

(n136)Footnote 609. Ludeke v. Sutherland, 87 Ill. 481 (Ill. 1877); Woollen v. Hillen, 9 Gill. 185 (Md. 1850); Cardinal v. Hadley, 33 N.E. 575 (Mass. 1893); Butt v. Smith, 99 N.W. 328 (Wis. 1904).

(n137)Footnote 610. Dawson v. Sears, 110 P.2d 910 (Okla. 1940). In the absence of fraud the description in a contract is merged into the deed. Fields v. Davies, 218 S.E.2d 828 (Ga. 1975). Fraud of vendor's agent prevented merger of contract into deed. Russell v. Hixon, 369 A.2d 192 (N.H. 1977).

(n138)Footnote 611. Rasmussen v. Martin, 223 S.E.2d 663 (Ga. 1976); Miller v. Reynolds, 223 S.E.2d 883 (Va. 1976).

(n139)Footnote 612. Berry v. Cleveland Trust Co., 5 N.E.2d 702 (Ohio App. 1935). A deed of gift cannot be reformed on grounds of mistake. Sorrells v. Smith, 180 S.E.2d 238 (Ga. 1971). But holding a contract was not merged in a deed where the descriptions were different. Rasmussen v. Martin, 223 S.E.2d 663 (Ga. 1976). Contract not merged in deed where deed is only part performance for the contract. Cullens v. Woodruff, 223 S.E.2d 293 (Ga. App. 1976).

(n140)Footnote 613. Rouse v. Brooks, 383 N.E.2d 666 (Ill. App. Ct. 1978); Re v. Magness Const. Co., 117 A.2d 78 (Del. Super. 1955); Cullens v. Woodruff, 223 S.E.2d 293 (Ga. App. 1976) (warranty in a contract for construction and sale of house held not to merge with deed); Greenfield v. Liberty Const. Corp., 81 N.Y.S.2d 550 (N.Y. Sup. 1948); Russ v. Lakeview Dev., 133 N.Y.S.2d 641 (N.Y. City Ct. 1954).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.12

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.12 Assignment of the Agreement.

An "assignment" creates an interest in the property; a "lien" is a charge on the property. n614 The word "assign" is usually, but not always, used in connection with the transfer of a thing in action. It may be used to indicate an act whereby title to property is conveyed by one living person to another. n615 Contracts for sale and options are assignable, n616 unless the contract legally forbids assignment without consent of the other party. n617 A provision prohibiting assignment without the vendor's consent is for the benefit of the vendor only and does not affect the validity of an assignment without consent as between the assignor and the assignee. n618 A provision against alienation of a sales contract without the consent of the other party is unenforceable where the contract has been performed or performance has been tendered. n619 An option to purchase in a lease may be transferred, unless the lessor has relied upon the personal credit of the lessee. n620 Some courts doubt the extent to which the common-law rule against restraints on alienation applies to the vendee's interest in a real estate sales contract. n621

The assignee of the purchaser is entitled to the same rights as the original purchaser, and all the remedies which were open to the assignor for the enforcement of the obligation are available to the assignee. n622 An assignee of a land sales contract may have specific performance n623 and this is so even if there is a covenant against assignment, n624 but if there is a covenant to perform an additional personal service the contract is unassignable. n625 Under the majority view a judgment is a lien upon the purchaser's equitable interest and upon his after-acquired title. n626

A contract to sell or purchase real estate cannot impose liability or confer rights upon a stranger to the agreement. In certain instances, however, one of the parties may substitute, by assignment, a third party as a party to the contract. As the term "assignment" is here used, it signifies the means whereby the interest of one party in a contract is caused to vest in another person who was not an original party thereto. n627 Parties may stipulate that the contract shall not be assigned and such a stipulation will usually be enforced. n628 Thus, a provision in a contract for the conditional sale of real estate to the effect that no assignment of the agreement would be valid without the consent and signature of the vendor has been upheld. n629 A prohibition against assignment of a real estate contract does not apply where the assignee tenders full performance of the contract. n630 An assignment may be valid as between the immediate parties thereto although not binding upon the vendor. n631 A vendor not a party to the assignment is under no duty to tender performance to the assignee, but it is sufficient if performance is tendered to the original purchaser. n632

It has been said that the assignee of a contract for the sale of real estate in which there is neither fraud nor warranty, like the assignor under whom he claims, purchases at his peril. n633 In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, a vendee may assign the written contract of purchase, and the assignee succeeds to all vendee's rights thereunder; n634 such assignee may enforce specific performance of the contract, as against the vendor, upon complying with the terms of such contract. n635 However, the mere assignment by the vendee, although followed by possession, does not by implication impose upon the assignee liability to pay the price agreed to in the contract, although by its terms its obligations are extended to the assignees of the parties. n636 The assignee takes no greater interest than that of the assignor. n637 The assignment by the vendor usually carries with it the obligation of assignor to the purchaser, n638 except in cases where the assignment is only for security. n639 The assignment will not affect the rights and liabilities of the assignor. n640 The vendor will take the benefit of obligations assumed by the assignee of the vendee, although the vendor is not a party to the contract of assignment. n641 The assignee will not be liable on obligations not assumed, n642 but by accepting the assignment and assuming the obligation for the purchase price, even the vendee who does not sign the assignment is liable in equity. n643 The assignment of a purchaser's contract carries no implied warrant that the contract will be performed by the vendor. n644

An assignment of a contract of purchase as security is a mortgage, and when the assignee has completed the payments, and taken a conveyance, the relation of the parties remains the same. n645 The principles of waiver are equally applicable to assignees of vendors. n646 The assignee of a purchaser's contract may rescind for fraud. n647 A provision against assignment in a contract may be waived by the parties thereto. n648 A contract granting an option to purchase real estate, and. binding the owner to convey on stated terms, does not, before acceptance by the optionee, vest in the optionee any estate or interest in the property; but since the vendee has such control of the title that by performance the vendee can compel a conveyance, and so secure the property, the vendee may, before the option expires, lawfully assign it to a third party. n649 The assignee of an optional contract takes subject to the defects which could be asserted against the assignor. n650 Where the option ran to the optionee "and to his heirs and assigns," it was held subject to assignment, notwithstanding it contained a clause that the original optionee was to be the judge as to whether the title was free from defects. n651

Where the contract contemplates a purchase-money mortgage, a covenant against assignment by the vendee may be implied upon the theory the vendor was entitled to look to the credit of the original vendee. n652 A provision forbidding the assignment of the purchaser's interest in an executory land contract is a valid restriction. n653 Part performance by an assignee may be sufficient to entitle the vendor to specific performance against the assignee. n654 A release by the vendor of an assignee of the vendee's interest in a contract of purchase, the assignee having assumed and agreed to perform the terms of the contract, has been held to terminate the liability of an intermediate assignee, who had also agreed to perform the terms of the contract. n655 Where no provision exists against assignment of a conditional sales contract of realty, the vendor must accept the assignee. n656

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 614. Rankin v. Marion Phosphate Co., 12 F.2d 67 (S.D. Fla. 1926) (no interest before performance of conditions); Millsap v. Sparks, 188 P. 135 (Ariz. 1920). See Colley v. Chowchilla Nat'l Bank, 255 P. 188 (Cal. 1927). Mortgage held not a prohibited assignment of an option to repurchase. Rosenthal v. Le May, 72 S.2d 289 (Fla. 1954). An absolute assignment passes the whole interest in the thing assigned, while a mortgage creates only a lien, and a pledge transfers only possession. Thurston v. Buxton, 34 N.E.2d 549 (Ind. 1941).

(n2)Footnote 615. Commercial Discount Co. v. Cowen, 116 P.2d 599 (Cal. 1941).

(n3)Footnote 616. Harris v. Miller, 235 P. 981 (Cal. 1925); Colley v. Chowchilla Nat'l Bank, 255 P. 188 (Cal. 1927); In re Beffa's Estate, 201 P. 616 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1921); Casady v. Scott, 237 P. 415 (Idaho 1924); Davidson v. Dingeldine, 129 N.E. 79 (Ill. 1920); Briley v. Madrid Imp. Co., 122 N.W.2d 824 (Iowa 1963) (use of sales contract by vendor as collateral); Kinser v. McMurray, 181 N.W. 691 (Iowa 1921); Barnard v. Huff, 233 N.W. 213 (Mich. 1930); Cutler v. Lovinger, 180 N.W. 462 (Mich. 1920); Bales v. Hendrickson, 290 S.W. 638 (Mo. App. 1927); Kavanaugh v.

Cohoes Power & Light Corp., 187 N.Y.S. 216 (N.Y. Sup. 1921); Farone v. Hall, 220 N.Y.S. 1 (N.Y. Sup. 1927); Semmler v. Beulah Coal Mining Co., 188 N.W. 310 (N.D. 1922); Butcher v. Kagey Lumber Co., 128 N.E.2d 54 (Ohio 1955); Dobkin v. Landsberg, 116 A. 814 (Pa. 1922); Welling v. Crosland, 123 S.E. 776 (S.C. 1924); Johnson v. Miller, 173 S.W.2d 280 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943). Person with nothing to assign assigns nothing. Jansen v. Clark, 207 N.W. 338 (Iowa 1926). Assignment must be supported by consideration. Beaden v. Bransford Realty Co., 232 S.W. 958 (Tenn. 1921). The interests of both the vendor and purchaser of a land contract are assignable unless the contract provides otherwise. Coraci v. Noack, 212 N.W.2d 164 (Wis. 1973). Vendee's interest in a land sales contract is assignable. Beren Corp. v. Spader, 255 N.W.2d 247 (Neb. 1977).

(n4)Footnote 617. Coles v. Denslow, 270 F. 22 (8th Cir. 1921); Hisser v. Union Sec. Co., 205 N.W. 648 (Iowa 1925); Spilman v. New Rockford Inv. Co., 201 N.W. 691 (N.D. 1924); Raasch v. Goulet, 204 N.W. 838 (N.D. 1925); McLaren v. Narrows Land Co., 191 P. 389 (Wash. 1920); Boyd v. Bondy, 194 P. 393 (Wash. 1920). A provision against assignment is only intended to provide for payment and assignment may be made and the vendee's assignee may have specific performance if he in turn performs. Cheney v. Bilby, 74 F. 52 (8th Cir. 1896); Gunsch v. Gunsch, 71 N.W.2d 623 (N.D. 1955). Optionor cannot question the validity of an assignment of an option. Reynolds v. Earley, 85 S.E.2d 904 (N.C. 1955). An independent contract was not violation of agreement not to assign. Park v. McCoy, 208 P. 1098 (Wash. 1922). No assignment clause in land contract covers mortgages of vendee's interest. Nat'l Lumber Co. v. Goodman, 123 N.W.2d 147 (Mich. 1963).

(n5)Footnote 618. Johnston v. Landucci, 180 P.2d 405 (Cal. 1942); Dopitz v. Oakland, 561 P.2d 441 (Mont. 1977) (vendee's transfer of his interest without the required consent of the vendor is a default not merely a breach.).

(n6)Footnote 619. Riffey v. Schulke, 227 N.W.2d 4 (Neb. 1975).

(n7)Footnote 620. Rosello v. Hayden, 79 S.2d 682 (Fla. 1955).

(n8)Footnote 621. See Hull v. Hostettler, 194 N.W. 996 (Mich. 1923) (restraint on alienation) and § 2015.

(n9)Footnote 622. Homeland Communities, Inc. v. Rahall & Fryer, P.C., 509 S.E.2d 714 (Ga. Ct. App. 1998); Lutz v. Dutmer, 282 N.W. 431 (Mich. 1938); Pelser v. Gingold, 8 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1943). The vendor's assignee must perform the contract. Semmler v. Beulah Coal Mining Co., 188 N.W. 310 (N.D. 1922). The transfer of title by the vendor to a third party does not bind the third party to obligations incurred by the vendor in a contract of sale other than the mere duty to convey upon payment of the purchase price. Kastner v. Dalton Dev., Inc., 122 N.W.2d 183 (Minn. 1963). Use of the words "heirs and assigns" referring to an optionee but not used when referring to the optionor made the rights pass to the personal representative to the optionee, but the optionor's obligation was personal and terminated on his death. Inglehart v. Jenifer, 371 A.2d 453 (Md. App. 1977).

(n10)Footnote 623. Michaud v. Ruch, 545 S.W.2d 703 (Mo. App. 1976).

(n11)Footnote 624. Espadron v. Davis, 52 N.E.2d 716 (Ill. 1944); Gunsch v. Gunsch, 71 N.W.2d 623 (N.D. 1955).

(n12)Footnote 625. Harris v. Clinton, 112 A.2d 885 (Conn. 1955).

(n13)Footnote 626. Contra, Bank of Ohio v. Lawrence, 120 N.E.2d 88 (Ohio 1954).

(n14)Footnote 627. See Moore v. Gariglietti, 81 N.E. 826 (Ill. 1907); Rice v. Gibbs, 50 N.W. 486 (Neb. 1891); Royce v. Carpenter, 66 A. 888 (Vt. 1907). Vendor is not charged with constructive notice of subsequent mortgage of contract purchaser's equity. Mortgagee is required to notify vendor to protect security interest. Kendrick v. Davis, 452 P.2d 222 (Wash. 1969). Assignment by purchasers of a contract of sale of property without written consent of the vendors as required by the contract did not void the contract. Martin v. Baxter, 254 N.W.2d 420 (Neb. 1977).

(n15)Footnote 628. Navin v. New Colonial Hotel, 90 N.E.2d 128 (Ind. 1950); Nat'l Lumber Co. v. Goodman, 123

N.W.2d 147 (Neb. 1977) (nonassignment clause valid); De Vita v. Loprete, 77 A. 536 (N.J. 1910); Lockerby v. Amon, 116 P. 463 (Wash. 1911). Cf., Portuguese-American Bank v. Welles, 242 U.S. 7 (1916).

(n16)Footnote 629. Montgomery v. De Picot, 96 P. 305 (Cal. 1908); Andrew v. Meyerdirck, 40 A. 173 (Md. 1898); Stover v. Bryant & Detwiler Improvement Corp., 45 N.W.2d 364 (Mich. 1951); Lockerby v. Amon, 116 P. 463 (Wash. 1911). Cf. the foregoing eases, Cheney v. Bilby, 74 F. 52 (8th Cir. 1896); Johnson v. Eklund, 75 N.W. 14 (Minn. 1898); Wagner v. Cheney, 20 N.W. 222 (Neb. 1884). An oral stipulation not to transfer property made in open court was not within the statute of frauds. Anders v. Anders, 179 N.Y.S.2d 274 (N.Y. App. Div. 1958). See Daniel Scanlon, Jr., Student Author, Oral Stipulation to Transaction on Real Property Made in Open Court Not Within the Prohibition of the Statute of Frauds, 10 Syracuse L. Rev. 358 (1959).

(n17)Footnote 630. Murray First Thrift & Loan Co. v. Stevenson, 534 P.2d 909 (Utah 1975); Riffey v. Schulke, 227 N.W.2d 4 (Neb. 1975).

(n18)Footnote 631. Sproull v. Miles, 102 S.W. 204 (Ark. 1907); Johnston v. Landucci, 130 P.2d 405 (Cal. App. 4th Dist. 1942). See Montgomery v. De Picot, 96 P. 305 (Cal. 1908) (vendor may be estopped to deny the contract is no assignable).

(n19)Footnote 632. Pierce & Stevenson v. Jones, 147 S. 842 (Fla. 1933).

(n20)Footnote 633. Carrier v. Eastis, 20 S. 595 (Ala. 1896).

(n21)Footnote 634. Perry v. Paschal, 29 S.E. 703 (Ga. 1897); Hooper v. Van Husan, 63 N.W. 522 (Mich. 1895).

(n22)Footnote 635. Goldring v. Sletko Realty, Inc., 494 N.Y.S.2d 56 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1985); Paperchase Partnership v. Bruckner, 693 P.2d 587 (N.M. 1985); Craver v. Spencer, 23 S. 880 (Fla. 1898); In re Sprigg's Est., 20 Erie (Pa.) 80.

(n23)Footnote 636. Lisenby v. Newton, 52 P. 813 (Cal. 1898).

(n24)Footnote 637. Le Porin v. State Exch. Bank, 213 P. 650 (Kan. 1923); Clarke v. Bussard, 189 N.W. 873 (Mich. 1922); Orr v. Allen, 45 N.W.2d 737 (S.D. 1951); Surry v. Baker, 231 P. 791 (Wash. 1925). See Roark v. Citizens Bank, 188 N.W. 337 (Mich. 1922). Takes nothing under forged assignment. Whitney v. Whitney, 235 P. 293 (Or. 1925).

(n25)Footnote 638. Nat'l P. Oil Co. v. Waterson, 193 P. 133 (Cal. 1920); Brady v. Fowler, 188 P. 320 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1920); Andrews v. Mohrenstecher, 128 N.E. 729 (Ill. 1920); Behrendt v. Acocella, 150 N.E. 913 (Ill. 1926) (takes subject to defenses against assignor); McLaren v. Narrows Land Co., 191 P. 389 (Wash. 1920). See Barberich v. Pooshichian, 211 P. 236 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1922). Sale of an apartment building did not transfer to the buyer security deposits made by the tenants. Federated Mortg. Investors v. Am. Sav. & Loan Assn., 121 Cal. Rptr. 137 (Cal. App. 1975). The assignee of a land contract is subject to any defenses which could be asserted against the assignor by the other party. Fajen v. Powless, 561 P.2d 388 (Idaho 1977).

(n26)Footnote 639. Lewis v. Crenshaw, 191 P. 72 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1920); Polokoff v. Vebb, 198 N.W. 194 (Mich. 1924). See Roullard v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 224 P. 449 (Cal. 1924).

(n27)Footnote 640. Bredensteiner v. Oviatt, 210 N.W. 133 (Iowa 1926); Pollard v. Larson, 211 N.W. 998 (Neb. 1927); Kutschinski v. Thonpson, 138 A. 569 (N.J. Ch. 1927).

(n28)Footnote 641. McGregor Subdivision Co. v. Mabie, 191 N.W. 117; Or. & W. Colonization C. v. Strang, 260 P. 1002 (Or. 1927).

(n29)Footnote 642. Meyer v. Droegemueller, 206 N.W. 391 (Minn. 1925); 328 E. Twenty-Sixth St. Realty Co., Inc. v. Kahn, 184 N.Y.S. 95 (N.Y. Sup. 1920).

(n30)Footnote 643. Barnard v. Huff, 233 N.W. 213 (Mich. 1930).

(n31)Footnote 644. Kleinman v. Strassburg, 189 N.Y.S. 633 (N.Y. Sup. 1921). See Ratcliff v. McIlhenny, 102 S. 878 (La. 1925).

(n32)Footnote 645. Hays v. Hall, 4 Port. 374 (Ala. 1837); Smith v. Cremer, 71 Ill. 185 (Ill. 1873); Sibley v. Ross, 50 N.W. 379 (Mich. 1891).

(n33)Footnote 646. Neil v. Kennedy, 149 N.E. 775 (Ill. 1925); Distasio v. Gervazio, 208 N.W. 440 (Mich. 1926).

(n34)Footnote 647. Harris v. Miller, 235 P. 981 (Cal. 1925).

(n35)Footnote 648. Cheney v. Bilby, 74 F. 52 (8th Cir. 1896); Camp v. Wiggins, 34 N.W. 461 (Iowa 1887); Maday v. Roth, 125 N.W. 13 (Mich. 1910). The execution of a deed of trust by the vendee was not a violation of the provision in the contract and that the contract was unassignable. Fincher v. Miles Homes of Mo., Inc., 549 S.W.2d 848 (Mo. 1977). Violation by purchasers of a sale of property without written consent of the vendors as required by the contract did not void the contract. Martin v. Baxter, 254 N.W.2d 420 (Neb. 1977).

(n36)Footnote 649. Simmons v. Zimmerman, 79 P. 451 (Cal. 1904); Krhut v. Phares, 103 P. 117 (Kan. 1909); Roper v. Milbourn, 142 N.W. 792 (Neb. 1913); Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. 112 (Pa. 1850).

(n37)Footnote 650. Nat'l Oil & Pipe Line Co. v. Teel, 68 S.W. 979 (Tex. 1902).

(n38)Footnote 651. Simmons v. Zimmerman, 79 P. 451 (Cal. 1904).

(n39)Footnote 652. Harry's Cadillac-Pontiac Co., Inc. v. Norburn, 51 S.E.2d 916 (N.C. 1949) (contra). See Mortgages-Notice-Vendor and Purchaser-Vendor Not Charged With Constructive Notice of Subsequent Mortgage of Contract Purchasers Equity -Mortgagee Required to Notify Vendor to Protect Security Interest, 45 Wash. L. Rev. 645.

(n40)Footnote 653. Jankowski v. Jankowski, 18 N.W.2d 848 (Mich. 1945).

(n41)Footnote 654. Westervelt v. Ciarletta, 35 A.2d 896 (N.J. Ch. 1944).

(n42)Footnote 655. McCurdy v. Van Os, 287 N.W. 890 (Mich. 1939).

(n43)Footnote 656. Harry's Cadillac-Pontiac Co., Inc. v. Norburn, 51 S.E.2d 916 (N.C. 1949).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.13

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.13 Time As of the Essence.

[Go To Supp]

The legal cliche "time is of the essence of the contract" is particularly applicable to sales of realty. Time may expressly be made the essence of a contract. n657 This may be accomplished by the extension of contracts not having that ingredient, n658 or impliedly where the terms of the contract are such as clearly show an intent to that end, n659 but as a general rule the cases require this intent to be set out expressly in the contract. n660 A provision that time shall be of the essence of a contract to sell land is made for the benefit of the vendor and may be waived by the vendor. n661 Where the parties have made such a stipulation, a court of equity cannot relieve a purchaser who has made default. n662 Time may be made of the essence of a contract to convey, either expressly or by implication arising from the nature of the property, or the avowed objects of the vendor or purchaser. n663 If time is of the essence is not expressly in the contract, performance must be within a reasonable time. n664 An extension of time given by one party does not by itself nullify a stipulation that time is of the essence. n665

Time may have become of the essence of the contract by the rise or depreciation of the value of the premises contracted to be sold. Time may be of the essence of the contract, by reason of the nature of the interest in the property which is to be conveyed. n666 Time may be of the essence of the contract when there is an express stipulation to that effect, and where the contract is executory at the time of the default, no part or no considerable part of the purchase money having been paid. And this is on a very plain principle that the performance by the vendee is a condition precedent to the performance of the contract by the vendor. n667

Where the vendor informed the vendee by letter that he was ready to perform on a certain date, such letter made time of the essence, and the vendor could resell and keep purchase price upon failure of the vendee to perform. n668 Time is of the essence in contracts of sale of realty, at least as respects buyer's action for specific performance. n669 Thus, a stipulation that the balance of the consideration is to be paid by a day named, in default of which the vendee is to forfeit the interest in the land, manifests such an intention, n670 but the intention must clearly appear, or be expressly provided in the contract. n671 Time for the vendor's payment of delinquent taxes may be essential to the right to require counter performance under the contract. n672 Time is usually of vital importance where the subject matter of the contract is one of rapidly fluctuating values. n673 The precise phraseology is not important. The intention of the parties as expressed by the agreement controls on this question. n674 A subsequent tender of the balance due from a judgment creditor of the vendee is of no avail against a stipulation that time should be of the essence of the contract. n675 The vendor does not waive the right to insist upon such a provision by expressing a willingness to assist the vendee to carry out the contract, after the time limit has expired. n676 Time is not of the essence of an absolute contract for the sale of land wherein one of the parties agrees to sell and the other to buy, the sale to be completed within an agreed time. n677

Time is usually of the essence of option contracts. n678 The provision may be waived or temporarily suspended expressly or by implication. n679 This may be done by the acceptance of payments after the time specified, n680 or by the extension of the contract. n681

Parol evidence may be used to show the intent of the parties on this question so long as it does not tend to vary or contradict the terms of the contract. n682

Where under an agreement by the vendor extending the time of payment the vendee made valuable improvements on the land, it was held that the vendor was bound by the extension agreement and that an additional consideration was not required. n683

Contracts to purchase realty come within an exception to the rule that time is not of the essence of an ordinary contract where the character of the property to be purchased renders it liable to fluctuation in value. n684 Since time is not of the essence in a real estate contract, unless expressly made so, a title defect will not prevent specific performance if it can be cured before the decree. n685 Even if time is of the essence in a contract of sale, the delay may be excused if the vendor's contract causes the purchaser to refrain from making the down payment timely. n686

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 657. Davy v. Ogier, 198 P.2d 92 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1948); Lindsey v. Wright, 258 P. 438 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1927); Pitt v. Mallalieu, 192 P.2d 24 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1948); Huckaby v. Northam, 228 P. 717 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1924); Troughton v. Eakle, 208 P. 161 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1922); White v. Greenamyre, 234 P. 164 (Colo. 1925); Felt v. Morse, 85 S. 656 (Fla. 1920); Butler v. Cortner, 246 P. 314 (Idaho 1926); Burns v. Epstein, 109 N.E.2d 774 (Ill. 1953) (where time is not expressly of the essence a reasonable time for performance is presumed); Robnett v. Miller, 135 N.E. 705 (Ill. 1922); Mintle v. Sylvester, 211 N.W. 367 (Iowa 1926); Tobey v. Boagni, 102 S. 515 (La. 1925); Minsky v. Zieve, 152 N.E. 41 (Mass. 1926); Johnson v. Schuchardt, 63 S.W.2d 17 (Mo. 1933); McLaughlin v. Nelson, 202 N.W. 871 (Neb. 1925); Moore v. Markel, 201 N.W. 147 (Neb. 1924); Canepa v. Durham, 198 P.2d 290 (Nev. 1948); Orange Socy. v. Konski, 121 A. 448 (N.J. Ch. 1923); Curtis v. Factory Site Co., 12 Ohio App. 148 (Ohio App. 8th Dist. Cuyahoga Co. 1919); Johnson v. Berns, 209 P. 94 (Or. 1922); Mansfield v. Redding, 112 A. 437 (Pa. 1921); Shields v. Dunlap, 174 S.W.2d 642 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943); Neumann v. Gorak, 11 N.W.2d 155 (Wis. 1943).

(n2)Footnote 658. Isom v. Johnson, 87 S. 543 (Ala. 1920); Marshall v. Gilster, 201 P. 711 (Idaho 1921); Hart v. Turner, 226 P. 282 (Idaho 1924); Reade v. McKenna, 134 A. 371 (N.J. Ch. 1926).

(n3)Footnote 659. Michelsen v. Patterson, 658 S.W.2d 413 (Ark. App. 1983); Lopez v. Bell, 24 Cal. Rptr. 626 (Cal. App. 1962); Matthews v. Gaubler, 49 S.2d 774 (La. App. 1951); Soehnlein v. Pumphrey, 37 A.2d 843 (Md. 1944); Budacz v. Fradkin, 126 A. 220 (Md. 1924); Minsky v. Zieve, 152 N.E. 41 (Mass. 1926); Moskow v. Burke, 152 N.E. 321 (Mass. 1926); Chatalian v. Di Fusco, 139 N.E. 174 (Mass. 1923); Preferred Underwriters v. N.Y., New Haven & Hartford Ry. Co., 137 N.E. 590 (Mass. 1923); Plas v. Aldrich, 213 N.W. 80 (Mich. 1927) (provision for voiding or failure to make payments); Elbom v. Pavsner, 196 N.W. 442 (Mich. 1923); Waller v. Lieberman, 183 N.W. 235 (Mich. 1921); Gaddis v. Mayfield, 239 S.W. 1010 (Tex. Civ. App. 1922); Nicholson v. Whyte, 236 S.W. 770 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921); McDaniel v. Daves, 123 S.E. 663 (Va. 1924).

(n4)Footnote 660. Rankin v. Marion Phosphate Co., 12 F.2d 67 (S.D. Fla. 1926); Forrester v. Granberry, 100 S. 551 (Ala. 1924); Bothe v. Noack, 232 S.W. 606 (Ark. 1921); Lindsey v. Wright, 258 P. 438 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1927);

Flora v. Glover, 193 P. 665 (Colo. 1920); Tex. Co. v. Crown Petroleum Corp., 75 A.2d 499 (Conn. 1950); Foster v. Newport Nat'l Bank, 113 A. 908 (Del. Super. 1921); Minnehaha Groves Co. v. Harper, 105 S. 100 (Fla. 1925); Felt v. Morse, 85 S. 656 (Fla. 1920); Wormward v. Taylor, 221 P.2d 686 (Idaho 1950); Fowler v. Dieleman, 185 N.W. 79 (Iowa 1921); Schmidt v. Martin, 251 S.W. 999 (Ky. App. 1923); Fox v. Doll, 59 S.2d 443 (La. 1952); Robinson v. Johnson, 113 A. 121 (Md. 1921); Dennett v. Norwood Hous. Assn., 135 N.E. 866 (Mass. 1922); Larkin v. Koether, 137 A. 849 (N.J. Ch. 1927); Patterson v. J.D. Loiseaux Lumber Co., 114 A. 336 (N.J. Ch. 1921); Rudy v. Newman, 220 P.2d 489 (N.M. 1950); Schifferdecker v. Busch, 225 N.Y.S. 106 (N.Y. Sup. 1927); Fordham Triangle Realty Co. v. Boyle, 209 N.Y.S. 695 (N.Y. Sup. 1925); Rosenblatt v. Bergen, 195 N.Y.S. 276 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1922); Strasbourger v. Hesu Realty Co., 191 N.Y.S. 133 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 1921); Crawford v. Allen, 127 S.E. 521 (N.C. 1925); O'Brien v. Bradulov, 80 N.E.2d 685 (Ohio App. 1948); Dillard v. Ceaser, 243 P.2d 356 (Okla. 1952); Strain v. Statler, 240 P. 614 (Okla. 1925); Stork v. Felper, 270 N.W.2d 586 (Wis. App. 1978) (time is not of the essence unless so specified); W. Va. Power & Transmission Co. v. Voight, 114 S.E. 138 (W. Va. 1922); Collins v. Thomas, 105 S.E. 897 (W. Va. 1921). In a provision for making down payment by the time the house was under roof, time was not of the essence where not expressly called for. Harris Builders, Inc. v. Kopp, 311 N.E.2d 841 (Ind. App. 1974). Time is not of the essence in sales contract unless specifically made so. Poggioli v. Liebegott, 354 N.Y.S.2d 57 (N.Y. Sup. 1974). See also Eaton v. Harwood, 31 S.E.2d 473 (Ga. 1944).

(n5)Footnote 661. Nelson v. Vick, 462 So. 2d 935 (Ala. Civ. App. 1984); Grider v. Turnbow, 94 P.2d 285 (Or. 1939). Waiver of delay in making contract payments does not constitute waiver of later delays. Ashworth v. Hankins, 452 S.W.2d 838 (Ark. 1970). Even if time is of the essence in a contract it may be extended by agreement or waiver. Smith v. Hues, 540 S.W.2d 485 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

(n6)Footnote 662. Wright v. Burlison, 128 S.W.2d 238 (Ark. 1939); Terrell v. Gregory, 249 S.W.2d 560 (Ark. 1952).

(n7)Footnote 663. Stinson v. Dousman, 61 U.S. 461 (1857); Hays v. Hall, 4 Port. 374 (Ala. 1837); Three Sts. Lumber Co. v. Bowen, 129 S.W. 799 (Ark. 1910);. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 55 P. 713 (Cal. 1898); Nyder v. Champlin, 81 N.E.2d 923 (Ill. 1948); Turn Verein Eiche v. Kionka, 99 N.E. 684 (Ill. 1912); Young v. Daniels, 2 Iowa 126 (Iowa 1955); Rose v. Gilbert, 31 N.W.2d 690 (Mich. 1948); Branch v. Lee, 159 S.W.2d 677 (Mo. 1941); Rossbach v. Micks, 132 N.W. 526 (Neb. 1911); Moore v. Austin, 79 N.Y.S.2d 267 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1948); Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326 (Ohio 1853); Keator v. Ferguson, 107 N.W. 678 (S.D. 1906). See Williams v. Shamrock Oil & Gas Co., 95 S.W.2d 1292 (Tex. Com. App. 1936). Death of vendee did not extend time of performance. Stein v. Bruce, 366 S.W.2d 732 (Mo. App. 1963). Even where time is not of the essence in a contract of sale of realty, it may be made so unilaterally. Drazin v. Am. Oil Co., 395 A.2d 32 (D.C. App. 1978).

(n8)Footnote 664. Augustine v. Chateau Homes, Inc., 324 N.E.2d 633 (Ill. App. 1975); Dowd Grain Co., Inc. v. Pflug, 227 N.W.2d 610 (Neb. 1975); Beck v. Strong, 572 S.W.2d 484 (Mo. App. 1978).

(n9)Footnote 665. Church of God in Christ, Inc. v. Congregation Kehillath Jacob, 332 N.E.2d 918 (Mass. App. 1975).

(n10)Footnote 666. "But it is equally clear that there is a class of cases where time is of the essence of the contract; and where a disregard of the conditions of the contract will deprive a party of relief, both at law and in equity.

"1st. Time may have become of the essence of the contract by the rise or depreciation of the value of the premises contracted to be sold.

"2d. Time may be of the essence of the contract, by reason of the nature of the interest in the property which is to be conveyed. * * *

"3d. Time may be of the essence of the contract when there is an express stipulation to that effect. * * *' " Edgerton v.

Peckham, 11 Paige Ch. 352 (N.Y. Ch. 1844).

"The parties to a contract may by its terms make the time of performance essentially important and its observance in that respect requisite to relief. * * * And when that is not so either of the parties to the contract may, by a reasonable notice to the other party for that purpose, render the time of performance as of the essence of the contract and avail himself of forfeiture on default." Schmidt v. Reed, 30 N.E. 373 (N.Y. 1892). As the purchase of a reversionary interest, see 4 Ves. 492, 1 Sim. & S. 59. Time for performance essential under statute of frauds. David v. Tucker, 244 N.W.2d 197 (Neb. 1976). Time, though not originally of the essence, may be made so unilaterally. Drazin v. Am. Oil Co., 395 A.2d 32 (D.C. App. 1978). See Piland Corp. v. Rea Constr. Co., 672 F. Supp. 244 (E.D. Va. 1987).

(n11)Footnote 667. Dodge v. Galusha, 39 N.W.2d 539 (Neb. 1949); Doctorman v. Schroeder, 114 A. 810 (N.J. 1921); Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige Ch. 352 (N.Y. Ch. 1844).

"The general opinion has always been, that the day fixed was imperative on the parties at law. This was so laid down by Lord Kenyon, and has never been doubted in practice. The contrary rule would lead to endless difficulties. * * * The effect of this rule would be, that the appointment of a day would have no effect, and in every case it must be referred to a jury to consider whether the act was done within a reasonable time. The precise contract of the parties would be avoided, in order to introduce an uncertain rule, which would lead to endless litigation. * * * But equity, which from its peculiar jurisdiction is enabled to examine into the cause of delay in completing a purchase, and to ascertain how far the day named was deemed material by the parties, will in certain cases carry the agreement into execution, notwithstanding that the time appointed be elapsed; for, as Lord Eldon remarks, the title to an estate requires so much clearing and enquiry, that unless substantial objections appear, not merely as to the time, but an alteration of circumstances affecting the value of the thing; or objections arising out of circumstances, not merely as to the time, but the conduct of the parties during the time; unless the objection can be so sustained, many of the cases go the length of establishing, that the objections cannot be maintained. Perhaps there is cause to regret that even equity assumed this power of dispensing with the literal performance of contracts in cases like these." Sugden, Law of Vendors and Purchasers 328-352.(5th ed.).

Stipulation that time was of the essence prevents specific performance though equity will give relief against forfeiture. Steadman v. Drinkle, House of L., 1 App. Cas. 275 (1916).

(n12)Footnote 668. Earlin v. Mors, 63 A.2d 531 (N.J. 1949), rev'd in part, Kutzin v. Pirnie, 591 A.2d 932 (N.J. 1991) (a vendee may recover from his deposit any money in excess of the damages that the vendor actually suffers).

(n13)Footnote 669. Di Cristina v. Weiser, 42 S.2d 868 (La. 1949). Where no time for performance is specified, the court may fix a reasonable time. Whitley v. Patrick, 172 S.E.2d 692 (Ga. 1970). Time is not of the essence of a contract to sell land unless expressed. Hing-Bo Gum v. Nakamura, 549 P.2d 471 (Haw. 1976); Wood v. Wood, 224 S.E.2d 159 (Va. 1976).

(n14)Footnote 670. Fishers Grain Co. v. Sparks, 58 N.E.2d 932 (Ind. 1945); Cadwell v. Smith, 120 N.W. 130 (Neb. 1909).

(n15)Footnote 671. Acosta v. Anderson, 48 S. 260 (Fla. 1909); Burkhalter v. Roach, 82 S.E. 1059 (Ga. 1914); Zempel v. Hughes, 85 N.E. 641 (Ill. 1908); Knipe v. Troika, 141 P. 557 (Kan. 1914); Wiley v. Helen, 112 P. 158 (Kan. 1910); Monroe v. Bailey, 141 S.W. 412 (Ky. App. 1911); Diamond v. Shriver, 80 A. 217 (Md. 1911); Staples v. Mullen, 81 N.E. 877 (Mass. 1907); Davis v. Martin, 59 S.E. 700 (N.C. 1907).

(n16)Footnote 672. J.M. Hamilton Co. v. Battson, 44 P.2d 1064 (Mont. 1935).

(n17)Footnote 673. Isom v. Johnson, 87 S. 543 (Ala. 1920); Thlocco Oil Co. v. Bay St. Oil & Gas Co., 247 P.2d 740 (Okla. 1952); Wilbanks v. Selby, 227 S.W. 371 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921). See Kersch v. Taber, 154 P.2d 934 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1945).

(n18)Footnote 674. Zempel v. Hughes, 85 N.E. 641 (Ill. 1908).

(n19)Footnote 675. Johnson v. Sekor, 101 P. 829 (Wash. 1909).

(n20)Footnote 676. McQuary v. Mo. Land Co., 130 S.W. 335 (Mo. 1910). Failure of the vendor to make a demand on the vendee, either before or after the performance date, waived a clause in the sales contract to the effect that time is of the essence. Berry v. Crawford, 373 S.W.2d 129 (Ark. 1963).

(n21)Footnote 677. Fretwell v. Crisafulli, 185 S.2d 504 (Fla. App. 1966) (time is not of the essence in land sales contracts); A.B.C. Auto Parts, Inc. v. Moran, 268 N.E.2d 844 (Mass. 1971) (in sales contracts a reasonable time for transfer of title is presumed); Solomon v. Shewitz, 152 N.W. 196 (Mich. 1915); Keiter v. Klinger, 57 Dauph. (Pa.) 26.

(n22)Footnote 678. Greenbaum v. Cortez, 644 S.W.2d 510 (Tex. App. 1982); Graham v. Jones, 275 F. 790 (5th Cir. 1921); Wightman v. Hall, 217 P. 580 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1923); Darter v. Schuyler, 190 P. 827 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1920); Winter Park Ranch, Inc. v. Richards, 545 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1975); Mathews v. Kingsley, 100 S.2d 445 (Fla. App. 2d Dist. 1958); Broadwell v. Smith, 108 S.E. 609 (Ga. 1921); McGinnis v. Rogers, 279 A.2d 459 (Md. 1971); Stand. Oil Co. v. Murray, 183 N.W. 55 (Mich. 1921); Loughney v. Quigley, 124 A. 84 (Pa. 1924); Rhodes v. Good, 114 A. 494 (Pa. 1921); Wilbanks v. Selby, 227 S.W. 371 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921). Offer to sell containing words "shall be open for acceptance until midnight" meant midnight on day offer was signed where parties lived in close proximity. Noftsger Real Est., Inc. v. Berwanger, 269 N.E.2d 616 (Ohio App. 1971). Delay of a year in exercising a first call after notice of the owner's desire to sell was too late. Carroll v. Page, 215 S.E.2d 203 (S.C. 1975). Time of reception of exercise of option, not time of mailing, controls. Salminen v. Frankson, 245 N.W.2d 839 (Minn. 1976).

(n23)Footnote 679. Kerr v. Reed, 202 P. 142 (Cal. 1921); Retsloff v. Smith, 249 P. 886 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1926); Adams & McKee Land Co. v. Dugan, 228 P. 681 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1924); Compton v. Weber, 129 N.E. 764 (Ill. 1921); Davies v. Dayton, 131 N.E. 578 (Ill. 1921); Kohenn v. Plantation Baking Co., Inc., 336 N.E.2d 491 (Ill. App. 1975); Crooke v. Nelson, 191 N.W. 122 (Iowa 1922); Cole v. Murphy, 125 A. 40 (Md. 1924); Bammert v. Kenefick, 261 S.W. 78 (Mo. 1924); Schlake v. Healey, 187 N.W. 427 (Neb. 1922); Kobrin v. Drazin, 128 A. 796 (N.J. Ch. 1925); Crawford v. Allen, 127 S.E. 521 (N.C. 1925); Johnson v. Berns, 224 P. 624 (Or. 1924); Brackin v. P.E. Welton Engr. Co., 128 A. 818 (Pa. 1925); Hauert v. Kaufman, 208 N.W. 981 (S.D. 1926); Frank v. E.R. Thomas & Co., 233 P. 626 (Wash. 1925); Collins v. Thomas, 105 S.E. 897 (W. Va. 1921); Buntrock v. Hoffman, 189 N.W. 572 (Wis. 1922). Time of performance of a sales contract is a mere formal defect which may be corrected by payment of the contract balance with interest where the vendor has not been deprived of the general object of a sales agreement. Krentz v. Johnson, 343 N.E.2d 165 (Ill. App. 1976).

(n24)Footnote 680. Retsloff v. Smith, 249 P. 886 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1926); Spring Est. Co. v. Cohen, 204 P. 264 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1921); De Bairos v. Barlin, 190 P. 188 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1920); Leballister v. Morris, 211 P. 851 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1922); Clayton v. Fletcher Sav. & Trust Co., 155 N.E. 539 (Ind. App. 1927); Holman v. Joslin, 204 P. 697 (Kan. 1922); Pangburn v. Sifford, 184 N.W. 512 (Mich. 1921); Scheerer v. Scheerer, 229 S.W. 192 (Mo. 1921); In re Denning's Est., 229 P. 912 (Or. 1924).

(n25)Footnote 681. Williams v. Benton, 227 S.W. 410 (Ark. 1921); Cullumber v. Stahl, 203 N.W. 270 (Iowa 1925); Strauss v. Rabe, 130 A. 920 (N.J. 1925); Wyatt v. Bergen, 130 A. 595 (N.J. Ch. 1924), affd, 130 A. 597 (N.J. 1925); Doctorman v. Schroeder, 114 A. 810 (N.J. 1921); Orange Soc. v. Konski, 121 A. 448 (N.J. Ch. 1923); Offner v. Engelen, 102 N.Y.S.2d 97 (N.Y. Sup. 1951); Glaser v. Eisen Realty Co., 187 N.Y.S. 171 (N.Y. Sup. 1921); Anderson v. Morse, 222 P. 1083 (Or. 1924); Shrut v. Huselton, 116 A. 43 (Pa. 1922); Moter v. Hershey, 205.N.W. 239 (S.D. 1925); Harris County Inv. Co. v. Davis, 230 S.W. 761 (Tex. Civ. App. 1921). See Benton v. Davison, 212 N.W. 500 (S.D. 1927).

(n26)Footnote 682. Johnson v. Schuchardt, 63 S.W.2d 17 (Mo. 1933). See Aiken v. Andrews, 63 S.E.2d 645 (N.C. 1951).

(n27)Footnote 683. Langley v. Norris, 173 S.W.2d 454 (Tex. 1943).

(n28)Footnote 684. Kersch v. Taber, 154 P.2d 934 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1945). See Limpus v. Armstrong, 322 N.E.2d 187 (Mass. App. 1975) (mere specification of a date for closing does not make time of the essence; time is not of the essence in a contract to sell unless specified or implied); Smith v. Warth, 483 S.W.2d 834 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972) (time is not of essence in sales contract unless expressed).

(n29)Footnote 685. Slack v. Mullenix, 66 N.W.2d 99 (Iowa 1954). Giving a buyer a reasonable time to make up a default in an installment on a purchase contract where a payment was not made on time. Lamont v. Evjen, 508 P.2d 532 (Utah 1973).

(n30)Footnote 686. Harris Builders, Inc. v. Kopp, 311 N.E.2d 841 (Ind. App. 1974).

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.14

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.14 Statute of Frauds Issues.

[Go To Supp]

§ 96.14(a) Applicability of the Statute of Frauds. n687

Under the fourth clause in the fourth section of the statute of frauds, a contract relating to the sale of lands, tenements, hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them must be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, or by some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized, n688 and the statute is binding on courts of equity and courts of law. n689 In most states, a verbal promise to devise land is held to be within the statute, n690 but in others it is held not to be within the statute, at least where based on a consideration performed, after it is made and before the death of the promisor. n691 Neither is such oral contract of sale available as a defense to an action in ejectment brought by the vendor. n692 A written offer to purchase, orally accepted, is neither a sale nor a contract of sale, where, by the terms of the offer, it was provided that, if the offeror should fail to sign the necessary papers, the earnest money might be forfeited and the maker released from payment; the terms of the sale as contained in the offer were not then agreed on, and the acceptance was qualified by the statement that subsequently a contract of sale would be entered into. n693

The cliche that the statute of frauds, though not moribund is senescent, is applicable to sales of interests or rights in land. So the statute is intended to prevent fraud, not to be a vehicle of fraud. n694 A parol agreement to convey real estate, which does not create a trust, violates the statute of frauds and is unenforceable. n695 A "contract of sale" of an "interest in or concerning" lands, tenements, hereditaments, includes contracts to convey any portion of the legal or equitable title of all realty whatsoever, such as a contract for the transfer of a preemption, n696 squatter's rights, n697 possessory right, n698 the interest of a vendee under an executory contract, n699 the beneficial interest of a cestui que trust, n700 or, in fact, any equitable interest in realty. n701 The statute protects an equitable estate in land as well as the legal, since equitable estates are more exposed to mischief which the statute was designed to remedy. n702

An "interest" is the broadest term applicable to claims in or on real property, including any right, title, or estate in, or lien thereon. n703 The term "real estate" at common law and in its generally accepted meaning, and as used in the statute of frauds, is synonymous with "real property." n704 An equity in lands is as much within the statute as the legal title, and it is no more competent to convey the one by parol than the other. n705 An oral contract for the exchange of lands is within the statute. n706

An oral promise by an assignee of a contract to sell land to pay the purchase price called for by the contract, which was not due for the period of eight years from the date of the assignment has been held void under the statute of frauds. n707 An oral promise by a parent to convey real estate to his child for a consideration not paid when the child is put in possession of the property is unenforceable. n708 Where consideration is executory and touches the land, the doctrine that price is outside the statute of frauds cannot be extended to include the broader concept of consideration. n709

Because of the statute of frauds, a listing of land with broker and the usual written communications with the broker are not sufficient authority to the broker to bind the owner by a contract of sale. n710 The weight of authority indicates that partnerships to hold or deal in realty need not be founded on a written agreement. n711 The statute of frauds does not apply to agreements between real estate brokers, n712 but does apply to sales at auction. n713

Stipulations made in open court as to transfer of land are not within the statute of frauds. n714 A strong line of authority holds that the vendor has an action of assumpsit for the purchase price based on the promise to pay and this is not within the statute of frauds. n715

To meet the requirements of the statute of frauds a contract to sell realty must show the parties, the subject matter, the promises on both sides, the price and the consideration. n716

The statute of frauds does not apply to a fully executed contract for the sale of real estate. n717 Executory contracts of sale are regarded in equity as executed so far as they concern the interest or estate in the subject matter and as they operate to transfer such interest to the vendee; although the vendor still has the legal title, the vendor holds it in trust for the vendee and the beneficial interest is vested in the vendee. n718

An equity of redemption in realty is within the statute, and can be effectively transferred only by means of an instrument in writing. n719 Options are within the statute of frauds. n720 Since time is of the essence in an option, any extension of time is a new option and must be in writing. n721 This is not true, however, of sales contract closing dates where time is not of the essence. n722 An unexecuted verbal agreement for the conveyance of land, without more, is within the statute and is unenforceable. n723 An oral executory promise to reconvey land if the grantor is not satisfied is void under the statute of frauds. n724

> Where, as is the case here, the owner of land, without making a valid executory contract to convey it, deposits a deed of it with a third person to be delivered to the grantee upon certain terms, he may cancel the instructions given to such third person and recall the deed at any time before the specified terms have been complied with; nor can such deed, invalid as a conveyance for want of delivery, be considered as a memorandum in writing, signed by the owner agreeing to convey the land therein described so as to authorize a decree of specific performance. A deed, which has not been delivered, is not, by its own force and aside from any contract to which it may be related, a sufficient writing to meet the requirements of the statute of frauds. n725

Courts divide as to whether oral express warranties transgress the statute of frauds. n726 The cases are not in accord as to whether an auctioneer can as the vendor's agent sign a memorandum of sale so as to comply with the statute of frauds. n727 The cases are divided as to whether a written contract of sale may be orally rescinded. n728 The courts also reach different results as to oral modification of contracts of sale. n729

§ 96.14(b) The Sufficiency of the Memorandum.

The statute of frauds indicates the necessity of a complete and enforceable contract. n730 By settled rule of law, a note or memorandum of a contract for a sale of land must identify by name or description the parties to the transaction, a seller and a buyer. n731 The memorandum must show an agreement or meeting of the minds of the contracting parties. n732 The date of a contract to convey can be established by parol evidence. n733 Thus a receipt for deposit describing the property, the purchase price and the deposit was sufficient under the statute of frauds. n734 A memorandum which is on its face incomplete and which contemplates a formal contract does not comply with the statute. n735

Where the parties to a sales contract contemplate a written contract, the minds of the parties will not be considered as having fully met until the writing itself is agreed on and executed. n736 No meeting of minds arises where the death of one of the parties occurs before the contract is signed. n737 The character of the instrument is determined by its terms and by its designation. n738 It is well settled that the form of the writing required by the statute is not material. The contract may be evidenced by one writing or more. It may be shown entirely by written correspondence. Whatever form the agreement may assume, if the writing or writings, viewed as a whole, constitute in essence or substance, upon their face, a note or memorandum in writing, subscribed by the party sought to be charged, or the party's agent lawfully authorized in writing, showing who the contracting parties are, the subject matter of the sale, and the consideration, the statute is satisfied. n739 Likewise, the statute is met if the several writings, viewed in the light of the situation and circumstances of the parties at the time they were written, clearly relate to and connect themselves with each other; if, when their contents are adjusted to each other there appears to have been clearly made known the names of the contracting parties, the subject matter of the sale, and the consideration, and if it appears that all this has received the sanction of the subscription of the party sought to be charged, or some person thereunto lawfully authorized in writing, the statute requirement in reference to subscription, as well as all other particulars is met. n740 The modern authorities indicate that the memorandum is sufficient if it contains all the necessary elements n741 even though it contemplates the subsequent execution of a more comprehensive agreement. n742 An enforceable contract for the sale of land exists where the writing definitely and particularly describes the land, acknowledges receipt of payment, and provides for a deed on further payment. n743 The contract must recite the name of the grantee or point out a method by which the grantee may be ascertained. n744 The contract is not invalidated by the failure to specify the rate of interest, the date of possession n745 or the time for payment. n746

In a contract for sale of realty, a definite and certain price is an essential element. n747

Where the contracts are signed in duplicate, the failure to deliver a copy to one of the parties does not prevent enforcement of the contract. n748 A contract to sell need not be acknowledged. n749

It is held by the great weight of authority that, where negotiations relative to the sale of land are conducted through the mails, the contract is completed the moment the proposed purchaser mails a letter addressed to the party offering to sell, accepting the offer, if done within a reasonable time, and before the proposed purchaser receives notice of a withdrawal of the offer to sell. n750 A deed placed in escrow with a third person for delivery on performance by the grantee of a certain condition is not a sufficient memorandum under the statute, where, although it contains the names of the parties, recites the consideration, and describes the property, it does not state the contract or terms of sale. n751

A memorandum of sale of real estate must contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it or furnish means pointing to evidence of identification. n752 It must also state or indicate time and terms of payment. n753 A description is sufficient if the means of identification is supplied, n754 but if there is no description, it cannot be furnished by parol. n755

A contract to convey real estate need not be a formal document, complete in its parts, and signed by both parties. It may be evidenced by an offer by one party and an acceptance thereof by the other, and if the offer is made in proper form and accepted by the party to whom it is made before its withdrawal a valid executory contract of sale results. n756 The obligation is complete when an offer is made by the owner to another at a stated price and such other accepts in accordance with the terms of the offer. n757

The property description in a sales contract, to be adequate, must either be certain in itself or be capable of being reduced to certainty where there is a reference to something extrinsic. n758 The cases divide as to whether an indefinite description can be supplemented by parol evidence that the vendor owned only one piece of property. n759 The majority rule requires in writing either the name of each party or a sufficient description of them so that they can be identified. n760 The statutes differ as to whether the memorandum need be signed only by the party to be charged. n761 The contract must furnish a sufficient identification of the subject matter. n762 The cases disagree as to whether a street number is a sufficient description. n763

§ 96.14(c) Partial Performance as Taking the Contract Out of the Statute of Frauds.

The statute of frauds has been spoken of as being senescent but not moribund. Many courts have expressed a strong dislike to the doctrine as more likely to create than to prevent actual fraud. So equitable doctrines are to be found intruding into the field to prevent a literal application of the statute where injustice would ensue. Two major differences are found in the various statutes of fraud among the states as respects realty. One concerns the question of whether only the party to be charged must sign the instrument or whether both must sign. The other concerns whether the section of the statute which speaks of application to interests in land is applicable or whether the section of the original statute also is applicable, i. e., whether all instruments which create obligations as to land, not to be performed within a stated time, must be in writing.

A major area of relief from a too onerous effect of the statute is found under the theory that, part performance by one of the parties will take the case out from under the statute. n764 Requisite acts of part performance vary with the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances; mere continuance of possession or payment is usually not sufficient. n765 Most states take the position that mere payment of the purchase price does not take a contract to purchase out of the statute since the purchase price can be refunded. These states require a change of position of the party seeking to avoid the statute, such change having come from reliance on the contract and resulting in an injury to him not compensable by monetary payments.

The doctrine of part performance, as taking the transaction out from under the statute of frauds, is well grounded in the law. Part performance could consist of paying the purchase price, taking possession, making improvements, paying charges against the land, or in some manner changing the position of the party relying on the contract. n766 In some cases a taking of possession alone is sufficient part performance. n767 Others require additional acts such as the making of improvements. n768 Almost all cases will sustain part performance if the party has so changed position in reliance upon the agreement that the party is injured thereby and the injury cannot be measured in dollars.

The whole question of the nature of the doctrine that part performance will take an oral contract to sell land out of the statute of frauds can best be described by the word "chaos." The Restatement on Contracts, section 197, would require a combination of payment of part or all of the purchase price plus the making of valuable improvements or a taking or retention of possession, all with the vendor's consent. Among the various states, at least five rather confused theories are discernable: (1) Possession alone is sufficient. The cases here divide as to whether a taking of possession is required or a mere retention of possession is sufficient. Either usually requires a reference to the contract. n769 (2) Possession plus payment is sufficient. (3) Possession plus the making of valuable improvements is sufficient, even though the vendee could be reimbursed for the improvements. In some states there is a further requirement of payment of the purchase price. n770 (4) The vendee must not merely take possession but must make such a change in position that the loss cannot be compensated with money. (5) The doctrine of part performance is denied.

Under one rule part performance is a one-way street. The persons who perform the acts that constitute part performance may avoid the statute, because to hold otherwise would constitute a fraud on that party, but the other party cannot enforce the oral contract merely because the first has partly performed it. n771 The cases also divide as to whether mere delivery of possession is part performance. n772 The leading doctrine requires a taking of possession under the contract, n773 if the sale of a possessory interest is involved, but some cases consider a continuance in possession as sufficient.

Ordinarily, possession by the vendee is an indispensable element of part performance, required to take a parol contract to convey realty out of the statute of frauds, and such possession must be referable exclusively to the contract relied upon. n774 A parol contract to sell is not taken out of the statute of frauds by an entry and making of improvements unless consideration is paid. n775

Those cases which use a taking of possession with reference to the contract differ as to whether a continuance of possession is also partial performance. n776 Others hold that possession plus payment of the purchase price are part performance. n777 Another position holds that taking of possession plus payment in full is part performance only if the parties cannot be restored to their former position. n778 The acts of part performance must be referable to the contract to invoke the doctrine of part performance. n779 An unalterable change in position by the vendee is generally considered to be sufficient part performance. n780 This is particularly true where the monetary injury cannot be measured. n781

To take a case out of the statute of frauds upon the ground of part performance the claimant must establish the contract by clear, unequivocal, and definite testimony, and that the acts claimed to be done thereunder should be equally clear and definite, and referable exclusively to the contract. n782 Detrimental reliance by one party on the oral promises of the other is sufficient to estop the provision from raising the defense of the statute of frauds in a contract to convey lands. n783 In an Iowa case, it was held that evidence that plaintiff moved on land after an alleged oral agreement, made improvements and payments contemplated by the alleged contract, when considered with other circumstances, warranted a decree for the plaintiff in a suit to establish title to the land under the alleged oral contract with the plaintiff's deceased father. n784

Clearly, for acts constituting part performance to take the situation out from under the statute of frauds, they must have been performed with reference to and in reliance on the terms of the agreement. n785 Whether celebration of a marriage is part performance is disputed. n786 The case is taken out of the statute of frauds if the party has changed position to the party's injury in reliance on the oral contract. n787 Under the early rule, immediately after the statute was passed, payment of part of the purchase price was not sufficient part performance to give specific performance. Later this was reversed; still later the amount of the payment determined whether or not it was part performance, but under the modern rule it is not. n788 Under one rule, evidence of part performance must be introduced prior to proving the agreement by parol evidence. n789 The other rule makes the order of evidence discretionary. n790

FOOTNOTES:

(n1)Footnote 687. Watson v. McCabe, 527 F.2d 286 (6th Cir. 1975) (holding that the statute of frauds applies to sale of real estate and holding option); Brown v. Gravelee Lumber Co., 341 S.2d 907 (Miss. 1977) (part performance and expenditure of money in reliance held not sufficient to take sales contract out of the statute of frauds); Mattco, Inc. v. Mandan Radio Assn., Inc., 246 N.W.2d 222 (N.D. 1976) (agreement for preemptive right to purchase property must be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged). See Francis M. Burdick, A Statute for Promoting Fraud, 16 Colum. L. Rev. 273 (1916); George P. Costigan, Jr., Date and Authorship of the Statute of Frauds, 26 Harv. L. Rev. 329 (1913); Hugh Evander Willis, Statute of Frauds--A Legal Anachronism, 3 Ind. L.J. 427, 528 (1928); Crawford D. Hening, Original Drafts of the Statute of Frauds and Their Authors, 61 U. Pa. L. Rev. 283 (1913); Mary C. Cahill, Student Author, Changes Wrought in the Statute of Frauds by the Uniform Commercial Code, 48 Marq. L. Rev. 571 (1965); Restitutionary Right of a Vendee in Default of an Oral Contract for the Sale of Land, 19 Hastings L.J. 1212 (1968); Brendan F. Brown, Statute of Frauds and Land Transactions, 13 Clev-Mar. L.Rev. 205 (1964); Frank Josselson, Student Author, The Ohio Statute of Frauds of Conveyances and Leases of Interests in Real Property, 38 U. Cin. L. Rev. 135 (1969).

(n2)Footnote 688. Donaldson v. Bernstein, 104 F.3d 547 (3d Cir. 1997); Kyle v. Jordan, 71 S. 417 (Ala. 1916) (contract for sale of land); Profile Cotton Mills v. Calhoun Water Co., 66 S. 50 (Ala. 1914) (easements); Moore v. White, 220 P.2d 918 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1950); Lasry v. Lederman, 305 P.2d 663 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1957) (an agreement of joint adventure to purchase realty may arise by parol); Niernberg v. Feld, 283 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1955) (an executory contract involving title to, or interest in, lands may be changed by an agreement resting in parol); Miller v. Murray, 68 S.2d 594 (Fla. 1953) (the statute of frauds is avoided only by payment of consideration, possession by vendee and making of valuable improvements or fraud and these acts must be specifically referable to the contract); Hull v. Maryland Cas. Co., 79 S.2d 517 (Fla. 1955) (an unrecorded deed assigned as security, which consignment was recorded, was held to be incorporated by reference and constituted notice of its own terms as well as of other facts which could be learned by examination of the record); Lyons v. Bass, 34 S.E. 721 (Ga. 1899); Whitelaw v. Brady, 121 N.E.2d 785 (Ill. 1954) (failure to determine amount and time of down payments made continuing offer void under statute of frauds); Wolf v. Parker Holsman Co., 33 N.E.2d 235 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1941); Riffel v. Dieter, 157 P.2d 831 (Kan. 1945); Howton v. Gilpin, 69 S.W. 766 (Ky. App. 1902); Bibi v. Courville, 260 N.E.2d 156 (Mass. 1970) (statute of frauds barred oral agreement for sale of land in absence of fraud or constructive trust); Blood v. Hardy, 15 Maine 61 (Me. 1838); Patterson v. Cunningham, 12 Maine 506 (Me. 1835); Macurda v. Fuller, 114 N.E. 366 (Mass. 1916) (promise to reconvey); Hurley v. Donovan, 64 N.E. 685 (Mass. 1902); Evanoff v. Hall, 17 N.W.2d 724 (Mich. 1945); McCurdy v. Van Os, 287 N.W. 890 (Mich. 1939); Colstad v. Levine, 67 N.W.2d 648 (Minn. 1954) (where the memo describes the real estate by street address it is adequate description to avoid application of statute of frauds); Doyle v. Wohlrabe, 66 N.W.2d 757 (Minn. 1954) (parol evidence showing the fact of delivery and the receipt of the several writings, including time, place, extension of property and parties and other circumstances may be received to aid in interpreting the provisions of a contract to transfer bond); Hicks v. Rupp, 140 P. 97 (Mont. 1914) (for sale of land); Johnson v. Watson, 272 P.2d 580 (Nev. 1954) (a description by street and number, town and state of real estate set out in a memo is sufficient to support an oral agreement to sell); Knox v. Allard, 5 A.2d 716 (N.H. 1939); Glucksman v. Bowers, 52 A. 218 (N.J. Sup. Ct. 1902); Gracie Square Realty Corp. v. Choice Realty Corp., 305 N.Y. 271 (N.Y. 1953) (part performance will not take the contract out of the statute of frauds unless referable to the contract); Suddard v. Lewis, 162 N.Y.S. 493 (N.Y. App. Div. 3d Dept. 1916) (contract to sell); Loft, Inc. v. Glen Ridge Realty Corp., 12 N.Y.S.2d 577 (N.Y. Sup. 1939). A memorandum of contract of sale was incomplete and nonenforceable because it did not state the rates for the proposed purchase money mortgage with the amount of installment payments of principal. Monaco v. Levy, 209 N.Y.S.2d 555 (N.Y. App. Div. 1961). Burkhead v. Farlow, 146 S.E.2d 802 (N.C. 1966) (an oral acceptance of a written offer to sell binds the seller); Peele v. Le Roy, 22 S.E.2d 244 (N.C. 1942); Hughes v. Oberholtzer, 123 N.E.2d 393 (Ohio 1954); Thompson v. Giddings, 276 P.2d 229 (Okla. 1954) (in an oral contract for the sale of an interest in real estate, the memorandum required is sufficient if it identifies the property with such particularity that it cannot be confused with or claimed to apply to, any other property); Alery v. Alery, 277 P.2d 764 (Or. 1954) (mere taking of possession though with vendor's consent and pursuant to alleged contract insufficient to avoid statute of frauds where neither personal services performed or substantial improvements made by alleged vendee); Socy. of Indep. Doukhobors v. Hecker, 162 P. 851 (Or. 1917) (oral assignment of contract for purchase of land); Caples v. Morgan, 160 P. 1154 (Or. 1916) (lease); Havens v. Pearson, 6 A.2d 84 (Pa. 1939); Borie v. Satterthwaite, 37 A. 102 (Pa. 1897); Smith v. Warth, 483 S.W.2d 834 (Tex. 1972) (oral authorization for agent to sign contract held sufficient); Herren v. Hollingsworth, 188 S.W.2d 706 (Tex. Civ. App. 1945); Callan v. Walters, 190 S.W. 829 (Tex. Civ. App. 1916) (easement); Williams v. Muse, 369 S.W.2d 467 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963) (contract to devise); Clegg v. Brannan, 190 S.W. 812 (Tex. Civ. App. 1916) (exchange of land); Georges v. Loutsis, 145 P.2d 901 (Wash. 1944). See King v. Crone, 169 S.W. 238 (Ark. 1914); Scotti v. Bullock, 114 N.E. 674 (Mass. 1917); Walters v. Walters, 90 S.E. 304 (N.C. 1916); Fidelity Nat'l Bank v. Hosea, 160 P. 960 (Wash. 1916). The minority view that a suit to collect the purchase price of an extra sum for sale of land will not lie even though the deed had been recorded where the agreement to pay was subject to the statute of frauds. Williams v. Faile, 118 S.2d 599 (Fla. App. 1960). Earnest money may be recovered where the contract is void under the statute of frauds. Woodruff v. Camp, 112 S.E.2d 831 (Ga. App. 1960). Options are subject to the statute of frauds. Florence v. Rankin-Whitten Realty Co., 114 S.E.2d 70 (Ga. App. 1960). Statute of frauds is not applicable where a grantee seeks to avoid building restrictions contained in the plat of the property purchased, on the ground that it was not signed by the grantee, Doran v. Graham, 195 Ill. App. 65 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1915), nor where one takes title to land under verbal agreement to convey to another on payment of certain sums of money, Henry v. Britt, 197 Ill. App. 167 (Ill. App. 4th Dist. 1915), nor to a parol partition. Moore v. Reid, 186 S.W. 245 (Tex. Civ. App. 1916); Scott v. Watson, 167 S.W. 268 (Tex. Civ. App. 1914). See James M. Ramsey, Student Author, Executed Agreements Under the Statute of Frauds, 4 Ark. L. Rev. 225 (1950); Joseph P. McKeehan, The Statute of Frauds in Pennsylvania, 55 Dick. L. Rev. 96 (1951); Past Performance Estoppel and the California Statute of Frauds, 3 Stan. L. Rev. 281 (1951); Doctrine of Past Performance in Ohio, as applied to Agreements for the Transfer of Interests in Realty, 23 Ci L. Bull. 200.

(n3)Footnote 689. Purcell v. Miner, 71 U.S. 513 (1866); Russell v. Briggs, 59 N.E. 303 (N.Y. 1901); Vick v. Vick, 35 S.E. 257 (N.C. 1900). The statute of frauds does not apply to an agreement by the vendee made to the vendor to assume and agree to pay the mortgage debt and such oral promise can be enforced by the mortgagee. Rosenberg v. Rolling Inn, Inc., 129 A.2d 924 (Md. 1957). Courts of equity may decree a specific performance of parol contracts relating to the sale of lands, where there has been a part performance of the contract. But the ground of relief in such cases is fraud. Lane v. Shackford, 5 N.H. 130 (N.H. 1830); Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. 131 (N.Y. Ch. 1814); Buckmaster v. Harrop, 7 Ves. Jr. 341 (Eng. 1802). See Zeuske v. Zeuske, 103 P. 648 (Or. 1909). Where a real estate broker, in violation of oral agreement to purchase for another, purchased land and took title in the name of a third party, a statute requiring that such agreements shall be void unless in writing, did not preclude equitable relief, since the statute was an extension of statute of frauds and was not intended to be used as an instrumentality of fraud. Harris v. Dunn, 234 P.2d 821 (N.M. 1951). A memorandum reading "price on farm" was not a sufficient description to satisfy the statute of frauds. Prager v. McAdam, 161 A.2d 39 (Pa. 1960). No specific performance of a parol contract to sell realty. Aust v. Beard, 96 S.E.2d 558 (S.C. 1957). Mere breach of a contract within the statute does not give rise to such an equity as will authorize specific performance. Henderson v. Henrie, 71 S.E. 172 (W. Va. 1911).

(n4)Footnote 690. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 187 S.W.2d 282 (Ky. 1945); In re Roberts' Estate, 277 N.W. 549 (Minn. 1938); Daughtry v. Daughtry, 27 S.E.2d 446 (N.C. 1943); Brown v. Golightly, 91 S.E. 869 (S.C. 1917); Henderson v. Davis, 191 S.W. 358 (Tex. Civ. App. 1917). See Gernhert v. Straeffer's Exec., 189 S.W. 1141 (Ky. App. 1916); Lasher v. McDermott, 158 N.Y.S. 708 (N.Y. App. Div. 3d Dept. 1916); McClanahan v. McClanahan, 137 P. 479 (Wash. 1913). An alleged oral contract will not lie in the face of a proper quitclaim deed. Ollig v. Eagles, 78 N.W.2d 553 (Mich. 1956). Contracts for sale of land must be in writing. Reid v. Horne, 187 S.2d 316 (Miss. 1966). Strongest evidence required to establish a contract to devise. Cook v. Cook, 497 P.2d 584 (Wash. 1972).

(n5)Footnote 691. Gordon v. Spellman, 89 S.E. 749 (Ga. 1916); Woods v. Dunn, 159 P. 1158 (Or. 1916). Oral contract to leave will upheld. Luker v. Hyde, 45 S.2d 32 (Ala. 1950); In re Gary's Estate, 211 P.2d 815 (Ariz. 1949); Taylor v. Aulton, 231 S.W.2d 573 (Tenn. 1950). An executory contract involving title to, or interest in, bonds may be rescinded by an agreement resting in parol. Niernberg v. Feld, 283 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1955). A memorandum is necessary to satisfy the Statute of Frauds where real estate is sold at auction. Outpost Cafea, Inc. v. Fairhaven Sav. Bank, 322 N.E.2d 183 (Mass. App. 1975). Oral contract to sell real estate is only voidable, not void. Avinger v. Campbell, 499 S.W.2d 698 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973). To the effect that a valid oral contract for sale of lands may exist until voided by Statute of Frauds properly pleaded. Hewitt v. Hutter, 406 F. Supp. 976 (W.D. Va. 1975). Oral contract to devise or convey is valid if supported by sufficient evidence. McDonald v. Petty, 496 S.W.2d 365 (Ark. 1973).

(n6)Footnote 692. Zeuske v. Zeuske, 103 P. 648 (Or. 1909). It may be otherwise, however, when there has been sufficient performance to take the case out of the statute. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150 (Cal. 1858); Vanduzer v. Christian, 30 Ga. 336 (Ga. 1860); Chandler v. Neil, 26 P. 470 (Kan. 1891); South-Side Town Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Rhodes, 6 P. 278 (Kan. 1885); Holcomb v. Dowell, 15 Kans. 378 (Kan. 1875); Young v. Montgomery, 28 Mo. 604 (Mo. 1859); Ford v. Steele, 48 N.W. 271 (Neb. 1891); Bigler v. Baker, 58 N.W. 1026 (Neb. 1894); Souci v. Ouillette, [1906] 37 N.B.R. 393. Part performance as avoiding statute of frauds. Binz v. Helvetia Fla. Enter., Inc., 104 S.2d 124 (Fla. App. 1958). A receipt for money paid did not comply with statute of frauds as contract for sale of land where there was no description. Suchan v. Swope, 53 A.2d 116 (Pa. 1947).

(n7)Footnote 693. Diamond Cattle Co. v. Clark, 74 P.2d 857 (Wyo. 1937).

(n8)Footnote 694. "No one shall be permitted to found any claim upon his own inequity or take advantage of his own wrong. The statute of frauds was not intended to offer an asylum of escape from that fundamental principle of justice." Imperator Realty Co., Inc. v. Tull, 127 N.E. 268 (N.Y. 1920).

(n9)Footnote 695. Stone v. Fitts, 160 S.W.2d 1013 (Tex. Civ. App. 1942). Parol agreements for sale of land are void under the Statute of Frauds. San-Ann Serv., Inc. v. Bedingfield, 305 S.2d 374 (Ala. 1974); Kronenberger v. Beke, 517 S.W.2d 664 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975). Agreement by purchaser under land contract that it be a loan to the possessor of the premises who would repay the purchaser and take title was not within the Statute of Frauds. McClellan v. Beatty, 55 N.E.2d 327 (Ind. App. 1944). Contract for sale of real estate not in compliance with Statute of Frauds cannot be specifically enforced. Boddy v. Gray, 497 S.W.2d 600 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

(n10)Footnote 696. Lester v. White's Heirs, 44 Ill. 464 (Ill. 1867).

(n11)Footnote 697. Hayes v. Skidmore, 27 Ohio St. 331 (Ohio 1875).

(n12)Footnote 698. East Omaha Land Co. v. Hansen, 90 N.W. 705 (Iowa 1902); Norton v. Webb, 35 Maine 218 (Me. 1853); Boyd v. Paul, 28 S.W. 171 (Mo. 1894); Howard v. Easton, 7 Johns. 205 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1810).

(n13)Footnote 699. Dougherty v. Catlett, 21 N.E. 932 (Ill. 1889); Grunow v. Salter, 76 N.W. 325 (Mich. 1898); Hackett v. Watts, 40 S.W. 113 (Mo. 1897).

(n14)Footnote 700. Richards v. Richards, 75 Mass. 313 (Mass. 1857).

(n15)Footnote 701. Hughes v. Moore, 11 U.S. 176 (1812); Ellis v. Hill, 44 N.E. 858 (Ill. 1896); Cox v. Roberts, 57 N.E. 937 (Ind. App. 1900).

(n16)Footnote 702. Coleman v. Coleman, 61 P.2d 441 (Ariz. 1936).

(n17)Footnote 703. Hatlestad v. Mut. Trust Life Ins. Co., 268 N.W. 665 (Minn. 1936).

(n18)Footnote 704. Dabney v. Edwards, 53 P.2d 962 (Cal. 1935).

(n19)Footnote 705. Morgart v. Smouse, 63 A. 1070 (Md. 1906); Scott v. McFarland, 13 Mass. 309 (Mass. 1816); Connor v. Tippett, 57 Miss. 594 (Miss. 1880); Marble v. Marble, 5 N.H. 374 (N.H. 1831); Kelley v. Stanbery, 13 Ohio 408 (Ohio 1844).

(n20)Footnote 706. Gordon v. Simmons, 124 S.W. 306 (Ky. App. 1910). Statute of frauds applies to auction sales. Polka v. May, 118 A.2d 154 (Pa. 1955).

(n21)Footnote 707. Adron v. Evans, 217 N.W. 397 (S.D. 1927). Payment of purchase price alone is insufficient to take contract out of statute of frauds. Kufta v. Hughson, 134 A.2d 463 (N.J. Super. Ch. Div. 1957).

(n22)Footnote 708. Gray v. McCormick, 663 So. 2d 480 (La. App. 1995); Holland v. Bonner, 218 S.W. 665 (Ark. 1920).

(n23)Footnote 709. Theberge v. Canadian P. Ry. Co., 122 A.2d 848 (Vt. 1956). An undertaking to pay a mortgage is based on consideration independent of the consideration for the deed and need not be in writing. Weiner v. Hroch, 196 N.W.2d 907 (Neb. 1972).

(n24)Footnote 710. Oakes v. Trumbo, 201 P.2d 916 (Okla. 1949).

(n25)Footnote 711. Dayvault v. Baruch Oil Corp., 211 F.2d 335 (10th Cir. 1954); Nelson v. Barnick, 63 N.W.2d 911 (Iowa 1954).

(n26)Footnote 712. Sorenson v. Brice Realty Co., 282 P.2d 1057 (Or. 1955); Polka v. May, 118 A.2d 154 (Pa. 1955). If one broker does not act in that capacity the statute of frauds would apply. Ehler v. Peck, 595 P.2d 1245 (Or. 1979).

(n27)Footnote 713. Polka v. May, 118 A.2d 154 (Pa. 1955).

(n28)Footnote 714. Anders v. Anders, 179 N.Y.S.2d 274 (N.Y. App. Div. 1958).

(n29)Footnote 715. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., Inc. 419 So. 2d 574 (Miss. 1982); Lewis v. Grimes, 30 Ky. 336 (Ky. App. 1832); Root v. Burt, 118 Mass. 521 (Mass. 1875); Birch v. Baker, 90 A. 297 (N.J. 1914).

(n30)Footnote 716. Ray v. Wooster, 270 S.W.2d 743 (Mo. 1954); Irvmor Corp. v. Rodewald, 171 N.E. 747 (N.Y. 1930) (contract must identify the buyer). Where it is intended to purchase subject to a loan, to be enforceable the contract must show: (1) who made the loan, (2) to whom payable, (3) do the semi-annual payments include interest, (4) if not, when and at what rate is the interest payable, (5) by what instrument is the loan evidenced, and (6) who is the present holder of the instrument. Duvall v. Cox, 109 S.E.2d 593 (Ga. 1959). Accurate legal description is essential in the contract. Guenther v. Am.-Tex. Constr. Co., 534 S.W.2d 396 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

(n31)Footnote 717. TLZ Properties v. Kilburn-Young Asst Mgt. Corp., 937 F. Supp. 1573 (M.D. Fla. 1996); Duggar v. Quarterman, 12 S.E.2d 302 (Ga. 1940). In Pennsylvania the Statute of Frauds, as respects real estate sales, does not apply to suits for damages for breach of oral contracts to convey. Rea v. Ford Motor Co., 355 F. Supp. 842 (W.D. Pa. 1971).

(n32)Footnote 718. Martindell v. Fiduciary Counsel, 30 A.2d 281 (N.J. 1943). See State Life Ins. Co. v. State ex rel. Kehn, 135 P.2d 965 (Okla. 1942); Smith v. Glen Alden Coal Co., 32 A.2d 227 (Pa. 1943).

(n33)Footnote 719. Rutland County Nat'l Bank v. Swyer, 35 A.2d 658 (Vt. 1944).

(n34)Footnote 720. Coulter & Smith, Ltd. Russell, 976 P.2d 1218 (Utah App. 1999); McGuirk v. Ward, 55 A.2d 610 (Vt. 1947). "If the original contract was modified and changed by subsequent agreement, the contract as changed became a new contract. * * * The original contract, being for the sale of real estate, was within the statute of frauds; and no action could be maintained upon it, unless it, or some memorandum thereof, was made in writing, signed by the parties. The modified contract, as alleged and attempted to be proved, was equally within the statute." Malken v. Hemming Bros., 73 A. 752 (Conn. 1909).

(n35)Footnote 721. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Willcoxon, 86 S.E.2d 507 (Ga. 1955).

(n36)Footnote 722. Scheer v. Doss, 83 S.E.2d 612 (Ga. 1954).

(n37)Footnote 723. Foy v. Scott, 28 S.E.2d 107 (Ga. 1943); Moore v. Adams, 113 S.E. 383 (Ga. 1922); Seymour v. Nat'l Bldg. & Loan Assn., 42 S.E. 518 (Ga. 1902) (sale of real estate at public outcry by mortgagee); Riffel v. Dieter, 157 P.2d 831 (Kan. 1945); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 187 S.W.2d 282 (Ky. 1945); Weinburgh v. Saier, 6 N.W.2d 921 (Mich. 1942); McLennan v. Boutell, 76 N.W. 75 (Mich. 1898); Jones v. Jones, 63 S.W.2d 146 (Mo. 1933); Irvmor Corp. v. Rodewald, 171 N.E. 747 (N.Y. 1930); Hall v. Fisher, 35 S.E. 425 (N.C. 1900); Mitchell v. Schmelzer, 132 P.2d 332 (Okla. 1942); Cleveland v. Evans, 58 N.W. 8 (S.D. 1894); Collins v. Hall, 174 S.W.2d 50 (Tex. 1943). See Fargusson v. Duluth Improvement Co., 57 N.W. 480 (Minn. 1894); Sav. & Loan Corp. v. Bear, 154 S.E. 587 (Va. 1930); Hoge v. George, 200 P. 96 (Wyo. 1921). In Florida, if an unmarried male vendor be alone involved only the statute of frauds need be satisfied. Zimmerman v. Diedrich, 97 S.2d 120 (Fla. 1957). But if a married woman be involved the statute regarding the conveyance of realty must be satisfied. Petersen v. Brotman, 100 S.2d 821 (Fla. App. 2d Dist. 1958). Florida requires the signature of two witnesses in sales contracts. Wexler v. Griffith, 107 S.2d 147 (Fla. App. 2d Dist. 1958). See Donald Kepner, Part Performance in Relation to Parol Contracts for the Sale of Lands, 35 Minn. L. Rev. 431 (1951).

(n38)Footnote 724. Carter v. Dabbs, 18 S.2d 747 (Miss. 1944).

(n39)Footnote 725. Campbell v. Thomas, 42 Wis. 437 (Wis. 1877), quoted in Kopp v. Reiter, 34 N.E. 942 (Ill. 1893); Main v. Pratt, 114 N.E. 576 (Ill. 1916). See Lewis v. State, 145 S.2d 345 (La. App. 1962) (rule that vendor liable to make delivery is applicable to the state).

(n40)Footnote 726. Void. Kerr v. Parsons, 82 N.E.2d 303 (Ohio App. 1st Dist. 1948). Valid. Stevens v. Milestone, 57 A.2d 292 (Md. 1948); Greenfield v. Liberty Constr. Corp., 81 N.Y.S.2d 550 (N.Y. Sup. 1948) (inconsistent with deed).

(n41)Footnote 727. Denton v. Hicks, 290 S.W.2d 833 (Ky. 1956) (authority implied); Polka v. May, 118 A.2d 154 (Pa. 1955) (no authority).

(n42)Footnote 728. May be orally rescinded (majority rule). Niernberg v. Feld, 283 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1955). May not be orally rescinded but may be estopped to deny validity of oral rescission. Carey v. Coombs, 294 P.2d 62 (Cal. App. 3d Dist. 1956); Pruitt v. Fontana, 300 P.2d 371 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1956). Oral contracts are only voidable by the party to be charged. Comm. Land Corp. v. Stuenkel, 436 S.W.2d 11 (Mo. 1968).

(n43)Footnote 729. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Willcoxon, 86 S.E.2d 507 (Ga. 1955) (contract not modified); Garcia v. Karam, 276 S.W.2d 255 (Tex. 1955) (contract modified). Under statute, an oral agreement to rescind a contract to the sale of realty was valid. Kirby v. Carlstedt, 240 N.E.2d 299 (Ill. App. 1968). Time for performance of written contract for sale of land may be validly modified by parol. Kennedy v. Brady, 204 N.W.2d 779 (Mich. App. 1972).

(n44)Footnote 730. Duvall v. Cox, 109 S.E.2d 593 (Ga. 1959) (to be enforceable the contract must contain all of the essentials of a contract).

(n45)Footnote 731. Zurcher v. Herveat, 605 N.W.2d 329 (Mich. App. 1999); Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U.S. 100 (1878); Mentz v. Newwitter, 25 N.E. 1044 (N.Y. 1890); Ward v. Hasbrouck, 62 N.E. 434 (N.Y. 1902); Irvmore Corp. v. Rodewald, 171 N.E. 747 (N.Y. 1930); Oakes v. Trumbo, 201 P.2d 916 (Okla. 1949). "Received from Charles A. Haas twenty-five dollars as deposit on property Astoria Avenue, property to be three hundred and seventy-six feet frontage on Astoria Avenue and running to a depth of about three hundred feet more or less. Price $25,000, twenty-five thousand dollars, payable as follows: $2500 on signing of contract, $9500 on taking title, and balance first mortgage for five years standing. Contract to be for four months." Irvmore Corp. v. Rodewald, 171 N.E. 747 (N.Y. 1930) (void under statute of frauds).

(n46)Footnote 732. Moore Bros. v. Kirkpatrick, 172 S.W.2d 135 (Tex. Civ. App. 1943). A provision in an otherwise sufficient written contract of sale, that the parties would agree upon the payment of interest and amortization of principal of the purchase money mortgage made the contract void under the statute of frauds. Willmott v. Giarraputo, 184 N.Y.S.2d 97 (N.Y. 1959).

(n47)Footnote 733. Snow v. Corsica Constr. Co., Inc. 329 A.2d 887 (Pa. 1974).

(n48)Footnote 734. Bernstein v. Rosenzweig, 62 A.2d 147 (N.J. Super. App. Div. 1948); Schlusselberg v. Rubin, 465 S.W.2d 226 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971) (right of first refusal held unenforceable as too indefinite in price term).

(n49)Footnote 735. Levine v. Lafayette Bldg. Corp., 148 A. 772 (N.J. 1930). Purported land sale contracts which permit changes, additions, or modification do not give rise to binding legal obligations. La Salle Nat'l Bank v. Intl. Ltd., 263 N.E.2d 506 (Ill. App. 1970). Failure to specify a vendee in a contract for sale of real estate does not void the contract under the statute of frauds if all other essential elements are present. Randazzo v. Kroenke, 127 N.W.2d 880 (Mich. 1964).

(n50)Footnote 736. Buechler v. Olson, 189 N.W. 741 (Iowa 1922); Stallings v. Eypper & Beckmann, Inc., 137 A. 784 (N.J. 1927); Kuskin v. Guttman, 132 A. 922 (N.J. 1926); Bettcher v. Knapp, 120 A. 39 (N.J. 1923); Kuskin v. Guttman, 130 A. 829 (N.J. Ch. 1925). See Poetker v. Dyck, 257 P. 185 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1927). But see Bierman v. Barbieri, 207 N.Y.S. 174 (N.Y. Sup. 1924); Sautter v. Rowland, 131 A. 733 (Pa. 1926). A contract for sale of realty is enforceable though made subject to the execution of a "formal contract." Riley v. Troll, 1 All E.R. 966. See John M. Harrington, Student Author, Mortgages--Consideration and a Valid Debt or Obligation--Are Either or Both Necessary to the Validity of a Mortgage?, 19 S.C. L. Rev. 798 (1967).

(n51)Footnote 737. Groh v. Calloway, 292 S.W. 65 (Mo. 1927).

(n52)Footnote 738. Mahoney v. City and County of San Francisco, 257 P. 49 (Cal. 1927); Kinney v. Schlussel, 239 P. 818 (Or. 1925); Sautter v. Rowland, 131 A. 733 (Pa. 1926). A contract between the parties although entitled "escrow instructions." Tuso v. Green, 229 P. 327 (Cal. 1924).

(n53)Footnote 739. Gray v. Smith, 76 F. 525 (N.D. Cal. 1896), aff'd, 83 F. 824 (9th Cir. 1897); Thompson v. New South Coal Co., 34 S. 31 (Ala. 1903); Jenkins v. Harrison, 66 Ala. 345 (Ala. 1880); Carter v. Shorter, 57 Ala. 253 (Ala. 1876); Allan v. Bemis, 94 N.W. 560 (Iowa 1903); Bell v. Kavy, 43 N.Y.S.2d 934 (N.Y. Sup. 1943). As to agent's signature, see Rolfe v. Johnson, 228 S.W.2d 482 (Ark. 1950); Fowler v. Cornwell, 43 N.W.2d 73 (Mich. 1950); Warren v. Hoch, 96 N.Y.S.2d 832 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1950); Joehl v. Tricarico, 67 N.Y.S.2d 126 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1946); Wyman v. Utech, 40 N.W.2d 378 (Wis. 1949), modified, 42 N.W.2d 603 (Wis. 1950); Basma v. Wacks, 66 T. L. R. 1047, 66 L. Q. Rev. 281 (1950). California is less strict in a contract than in a deed. Johnson v. Schimpf, 239 P. 401 (Okla. 1928); United Truckmen v. Lorentz, 249 P.2d 352 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1952). Contract may incorporate by reference a description in a plat book. Crooke v. Prop. Mgt. Serv., Inc., 110 S.E.2d 677 (Ga. 1959). Sales memorandum held insufficient under statute of frauds for failure to recite terms of payment of purchase money mortgage. Israelson v. Bradley, 139 N.Y.S.2d 107 (N.Y. Sup. 1954). The courts generally apply the same tests to validity of descriptions in contracts to convey as in deeds. Broaddus v. Grout, 258 S.W.2d 308 (Tex. 1953). See Hoover v. Wukasch, 254 S.W.2d 507 (Tex. 1953). An agreement specifying purchase price and property to be sold but contemplating a subsequent purchase contract was not sufficient to avoid the statute of frauds. Hubbell v. Ward, 246 P.2d 468 (Wash. 1955). A written contract for sale of real estate must contain, either by itself or with reference to other writings, names of parties, description of the land, the price, terms and conditions of the sale and must be signed by the party to be charged. Brunette v. Vulcan Materials Co., 256 N.E.2d 44 (Ill. App. 1970).

(n54)Footnote 740. Brooks v. Miller, 30 S.E. 630 (Ga. 1898); Sinclair v. Weber, 104 A.2d 561 (Md. 1954); Mull v. Smith, 94 N.W. 183 (Mich. 1903); Peay v. Seigler, 26 S.E. 885 (S.C. 1897). The payment of the purchase price and the making of improvements by a vendee in a parol contract for the sale of real estate takes the contract out of the statute of frauds. Pembroke v. Logan, 74 S.W. 297 (Ark. 1903). Several integrated instruments may compose the contract. Mehler v. Huston, 57 S.2d 836 (Fla. 1952). Several different contemporaneous writings taken together may constitute a complete agreement under the Statute of Frauds. Whitley v. Patrick, 172 S.E.2d 692 (Ga. 1970). Memorandum sufficient to take the writing out of the Statute of Frauds may consist of several writings. Milkovich v. Orr, 529 P.2d 1382 (Mont. 1975).

(n55)Footnote 741. Ruth v. Crane, 392 F. Supp. 724 (E.D. Pa. 1975); Harrison v. Tinney, 250 S.W.2d 631 (Tex. Civ. App. 1952). As to what are necessary elements, see Donald B. Waltman, The Statute of Frauds as a Defense to Insufficient Real Estate Contracts, 56 Dick. L. Rev. 434 (1952).

(n56)Footnote 742. Sewell v. Dolby, 237 P.2d 366 (Kan. 1951); In re Degenkolb's Est., 113 N.Y.S.2d 880 (N.Y. Surr. King's County 1952).

(n57)Footnote 743. Zurcher v. Herveat, 605 N.W.2d 329 (Mich. App. 1999); Bass v. African Methodist Episcopal Church, 116 S.E. 816 (Ga. 1923). See Dixon v. Clayton, 44 S.2d 76 (Fla. 1950); Hall v. Tircuit, 106 S. 677 (La. 1926); Perlman v. Barton Realty Corp., 97 N.Y.S.2d 699 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Spec. Term. King's County 1950). In an oral contract for the sale of an interest in real estate the memorandum required is sufficient if it identifies the property with such particularity that it cannot be confused with or claimed to apply to any other property. Thompson v. Giddings, 276 P.2d 229 (Okla. 1954).

(n58)Footnote 744. Koob v. Ousley, 240 S.W. 102 (Mo. 1922). But see Warren v. Hoch, 96 N.Y.S.2d 832 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1950).

(n59)Footnote 745. Janiszewski v. Shank, 202 N.W. 949 (Mich. 1925). Contract enforceable even though part of property was later to be selected by agreement of the parties. Calder v. Third Jud. Dist. Ct., 273 P.2d 168 (Utah 1954).

(n60)Footnote 746. Pegg v. Olson, 223 P. 223 (Wyo. 1924).

(n61)Footnote 747. Miller v. Bloomberg, 324 N.E.2d 207 (Ill. App. 1975).

(n62)Footnote 748. George v. Smilansky, 214 N.W. 61 (Mich. 1927).

(n63)Footnote 749. McKenzie v. W. Detroit Land Co., 216 N.W. 438 (Mich. 1927); Mondragon v. Mondragon, 257 S.W. 215 (Tex. 1923); Fallers v. Pring, 257 P. 627 (Wash. 1927), followed in Bugge v. Pring, 257 P. 629 (Wash. 1927).

(n64)Footnote 750. Kempner v. Cohn, 1 S.W. 869 (Ark. 1886); Levy v. Cohen, 4 Ga. 1 (Ga. 1848); Hunt v. Higman, 30 N.W. 769 (Iowa 1886); Lungstrass v. German Ins. Co., 48 Mo. 201 (Mo. 1871); Hallock v. Com. Ins. Co., 26 N.J.L. 268 (N.J. 1857); Scottish-Am. Mortg. Co. v. Davis, 72 S.W. 217 (Tex. Civ. App. 1902).

(n65)Footnote 751. Main v. Pratt, 114 N.E. 576 (Ill. 1916). Delivery of a deed with the grantee in blank accompanied by an oral power to fill in the name of the grantee created a power coupled with an interest which survived the death of the grantor. Womack v. Stegner, 293 S.W.2d 124 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956).

(n66)Footnote 752. Hotze, Kuntzler & Co. v. Erskine, 130 N.E.2d 720 (Ohio App. 1954); Corrado v. Montuori, 139 A. 791 (R.I. 1928). A description in the contract is sufficient if it can be located with the use of surveyor or recorded plats. Alter v. Moellankamp, 179 N.E.2d 4 (Ill. 1962). Wisconsin holds to the "void" not to the "unenforceable" theory of the statute of frauds, so where because of a defective description the sales contract failed to comply with the statute of frauds, a defaulting vendee could recover the down payment subject to vendor's expenses. Stuesser v. Ebel, 120 N.W.2d 679 (Wis. 1963). Test for description of land in contract is whether land can be found by a surveyor. Carlson v. Richardson, 72 Cal. Rptr. 769 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1968). Cannot use extraneous evidence to identify description. Brooks v. Allard, 53 Cal. Rptr. 82 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1966). Description in contract must be as complete as in a deed. Allen v. Youngblood, 200 S.E.2d 758 (Ga. 1973). Statute of frauds violated where boundaries could not be located; extrinsic evidence denied to clarify real estate sales contract. McDaniel v. Silvernail, 346 N.E.2d 382 (Ill. App. 4th Dist. 1976). Can use extrinsic evidence. Sears v. Polan's 5 cent to $ 1.00 Store, 243 A.2d 602 (Md. 1968).

(n67)Footnote 753. Malone Constr. Co., Inc. v. Westbrook, 194 S.E.2d 619 (Ga. App. 1972); Latona v. Shore, 144 N.Y.S.2d 272 (N.Y. Sup. 1955) (held sufficient); Vallone v. Regan, 144 N.Y.S.2d 324 (N.Y. Sup. 1955). Failure to give duration or amount of installment payments of purchase-money mortgage made sales contract inadequate. Montanaro v. Pandolfini, 168 A.2d 550 (Conn. 1961); Monaco v. Levy, 209 N.Y.S.2d 555 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1961). Contract not fatal where closing date was not set. Johnson v. Kelley, 175 N.E.2d 391 (Mass. 1961). Contract failing to state time for payment of annual installments held too indefinite. Bryant v. Clark, 347 S.W.2d 635 (Tex. Civ. App. 1961). Time for performance essential under statute of frauds. David v. Tucker, 244 N.W.2d 197 (Neb. 1976). Contra. Overboe v. Overboe, 160 N.W.2d 650 (N.D. 1968) (statement of time of payment is not essential).

(n68)Footnote 754. McKinley v. Lagae, 24 Cal. Rptr. 454 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1962); Dowd v. Andrews, 134 N.E. 294 (Ind. App. 1922); Corrado v. Montuori, 139 A. 791 (R.I. 1928).

(n69)Footnote 755. Lawrence v. Jones, 864 P.2d 194 (Idaho App. 1993); Bennett v. Fuller, 313 S.E.2d 597 (N.C. App. 1984); Malevich v. Hakola, 278 N.W.2d 541 (Minn. 1970); Guy v. Barnes, 29 Ind. 103 (Ind. 1867). Only party sought to be charged must sign. Smith v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 208 (Ind. 1846); Laythorpe v. Bryant, 2 Bing. (N. C.) 735, 132 Eng. Rep. 283. To comply with the statute both in letter and in spirit, as must be done to maintain the action, it is necessary that all essential elements and terms of the contract be made to appear in writing signed by the party to be charged therewith or by some person thereunto lawfully authorized, in order that no part of the agreement need to be proved by parol evidence. Thurlow v. Perry, 77 A. 641 (Me. 1910). Parol evidence could not supply statutory essential of sales contract. Pollyanna Homes, Inc., v. Berney, 365 P.2d 401 (Cal. 1961).

(n70)Footnote 756. Ryan v. United States, 136 U.S. 68 (1890); Murphy, Thompson & Co. v. Reed, 101 S.W. 964 (Ky. App. 1907); Ide v. Leiser, 24 P. 695 (Mont. 1890); Gates v. Dudgeon, 66 N.E. 116 (N.Y. 1903); Stewart v. Gillett, 139 N.Y.S. 583 (N.Y. Sup. 1913), aff'd. 156 N.Y.S. 1146 (N.Y. Sup. 1913); Bryant Timber Co. v. Wilson, 65 S.E. 932 (N.C. 1909); Yerkes v. Richards, 26 A. 221 (Pa. 1893); Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 77 P. 134 (Wyo. 1904). Main purpose exception to statute of frauds. Cooper Petroleum Co. v. LaGloria Oil & Gas Co., 436 S.W.2d 889 (Tex. 1969).

(n71)Footnote 757. Brady v. Fontenot, 61 S. 838 (La. 1913) (offer made by authorized mandatory of owner).

(n72)Footnote 758. Watts v. Ridenhour, 217 S.E.2d 211 (N.C. App. 1975); Saine v. Clark, 219 S.E.2d 407 (Ga. 1975).

(n73)Footnote 759. Williamson v. Burnett, 345 S.W.2d 80 (Mo. 1961) (parol evidence admitted); Corrado v. Montuori, 139 A. 791 (R.I. 1928) (parol evidence admitted). Contra, Draper v. Hoops, 135 Ill. App. 388 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1907). Description in sales contract was sufficient where vendors owned only one tract in the particular county. Stachnik v. Winkel, 213 N.W.2d 434 (Mich. App. 1973). Contract for acreage out of a tract was void for failure to identify location. Rhodes v. Wilkins, 498 P.2d 311 (N.M. 1972).

(n74)Footnote 760. Kohlbrecher v. Guettermann, 160 N.E. 142 (Ill. 1928); Tobias v. Lynch, 182 N.Y.S. 643 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1920).

(n75)Footnote 761. In Florida a sales contract by a single male vendor need only comply with the statute of frauds, Fla. Stat. § 725.01, which merely requires a sufficient memorandum signed by the party to be charged. Zimmerman v. Diedrich, 97 S.2d 120 (Fla. 1957). But wherever the interest of a married woman in her separate property, sale of homestead, tenancy by entireties and dower are affected, the contract must conform to Fla. Stat. § 689.01, concerning conveyances. This requires witnesses and prevents the application of the doctrine of part performance. Zimmerman v. Diedrich, 97 S.2d 120 (Fla. 1957); Wexler v. Griffith, 107 S.2d 147 (Fla. App. 2d Dist. 1958); Petersen v. Brotman, 100 S.2d 821 (Fla. App. 2d Dist. 1958); Lindgren v. Van Fleet, 101 S.2d 155 (Fla. App. 3d Dist. 1958). It is not necessary to have two witnesses to a contract to convey property unless homestead, separate property of married woman or relinquishment of dower. Con-Dev. of Vero Beach, Inc. v. Casano, 272 S.2d 203 (Fla. App. 1973).

(n76)Footnote 762. Crooke v. Prop. Mgt. Servs., Inc., 110 S.E.2d 677 (Ga. 1959) (description in the contract may incorporate by reference to a plat book record); Carswell v. Roberts, 110 S.E.2d 367 (Ga. 1959) ("S. R. Roberts property bordered by railroad track, state park and field belonging to widow" was an insufficient description not warranting specific performance); Pope v. Middlebrooks, 110 S.E.2d 354 (Ga. 1959) (three acres in the northwest corner of a described 15-acre tract was an insufficient description); Duvall v. Cox, 109 S.E.2d 593 (Ga. 1959) (statute of frauds prevented specific performance of a written contract which merely stated the description of the land); Suchan v. Swope, 53 A.2d 116 (Pa. 1947) (stated purchase price of "61acres more or less" was insufficient to comply with statute of frauds).

(n77)Footnote 763. Parol evidence may not be introduced to validate a contract for sale of realty otherwise void for inadequate description. Martin v. Seigel, 212 P.2d 107 (Wash. 1949). Contra, Sawert v. Lunt, 62 A.2d 34 (Pa. 1948). If the description of the subject matter of the agreement between the parties is so uncertain and indefinite that it cannot be applied exclusively to any specific land, parol evidence cannot be received to complete the description; if the description is definite, though requiring extrinsic evidence to identify the land which it represents, parol evidence may be received for that purpose. Corrado v. Montuori, 139 A. 791 (R.I. 1928).

(n78)Footnote 764. Fideler v. Norton, 30 N.W. 128 (Dakota Terr. 1886), 32 N.W. 57 (Dakota Terr. 1887). Agreements for sale of interest in land within statute of frauds. Pierce v. Murphree, 145 S.2d 207 (Ala. 1962); Miranda v. Miranda, 232 N.Y.S.2d 621 (N.Y. Sup. 1962). Part performance removes a contract of sale from the Statute of Frauds and permits specific performance, even though contract is oral. Pickett v. Paine, 199 S.E.2d 223 (Ga. 1973). Part performance of oral contract to convey. Tew v. Manwaring, 480 P.2d 896 (Idaho 1971). See Stephen L. Beer, Student Author, Oral Land Contract and the Doctrine of Part Performance in Idaho, 8 Idaho L. Rev. 205 (1971). Part performance of contract of sale. Callon v. Callon, 185 N.W.2d 762 (Iowa 1971). Sufficient part performance as to make it inequitable to deny relief will take contract out from under statute of frauds. Alvarez v. Alvarez, 383 P.2d 581 (N.M. 1963). Taking of possession and making improvements was partial performance. Brandhagen v. Burt, 117 N.W.2d 696 (N.D. 1962). Part performance withdrawing contract from statute of frauds. Williams v. Terebinski, 261 N.E.2d 920 (Ohio Com. Pl. 1970). Partial performance by vendee permits action for specific performance if vendee cannot be restored to position he occupied when contract was made. Collett v. DeHaven, 263 N.E.2d 252 (Ohio App. 1970). Past performance of an agreement to convey. Miller v. McCamish, 479 P.2d 919 (Wash. 1971). Part performance by payment of price enables the taking of an oral contract out of the Statute of Frauds. Holmgren Bros., Inc. v. Ballard, 534 P.2d 611 (Utah 1975). To take the transaction out of the Statute of Frauds improvements must be permanent and substantial. Stackhouse v. Cook, 248 S.E.2d 482 (S.C. 1978). See Phillip H. Leonard, Student Author, Equity: Full Performance of Oral Contract to Convey Land and the Statute of Frauds, 16 Okla. L. Rev. 199 (1963). See also Ernest R. Finney, Student Author, The Doctrine of Part Performance in Texas, 1 Tex. Tech. L. Rev. 325 (1970).

(n79)Footnote 765. Perkins v. Owens, 721 N.E.2d 289 (Ind. App. 1999); McMahan Constr. Co. v. Wegehoft Bros. Inc., 354 N.E.2d 278 (Ind. App. 1976).

(n80)Footnote 766. Pearson v. Gardner, 168 N.W. 485 (Mich. 1918). Payment or partial payment alone is not sufficient to constitute partial performance under the Statute of Frauds. McMahan Constr. Co. v. Wegehoft Bros., Inc., 354 N.E.2d 278 (Ind. App. 1976). Earnest money possession and improvements were part performance. Louron Indus., Inc. v. Holman, 502 P.2d 1216 (Wash. App. 1972). See Dallas W. Isom, Student Author, The Doctrine of Part Performance as Applied to Oral Land Contracts in Utah, 9 Utah L. Rev. 91 (1964).

(n81)Footnote 767. Neal v. Neal, 69 Ind. 419 (Ind. 1880).

(n82)Footnote 768. Trilogy Variety Stores, Ltd. v. City Prods. Corp., 523 F. Supp. 691 (S.D. N.Y. 1982); Amato v. U.S., 94 F. Supp. 2d 1081 (D. Idaho 1999); Walter v. Hoffman, 196 N.E. 291 (N.Y. 1935); Erickson v. Wiper, 157 N.W. 592 (N.D. 1916) (oral gift of land could not be rescinded after donee had entered and made substantial improvements). Texas requires payment of consideration, possession by the purchaser and value improvements made by him to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds. Harris v. Potts, 528 S.W.2d 321 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975). Making of improvements and taking of possession by donee took an oral gift of land out of the Statute of Frauds. Suter v. Suter, 546 P.2d 1169 (Idaho 1976).

(n83)Footnote 769. Burns v. McCormick, 135 N.E. 273 (N.Y. 1922); Strandberg v. Lawrence, 216 N.Y.S.2d 973 (N.Y. Sup. 1961) (holding in effect that possession is not essential to part performance of a sales contract); Eugene Pioneer Cemetary Assn. v. Spencer Butte Lodge, 363 P.2d 1083 (Or. 1961) (requiring significant change in possession for part performance).

(n84)Footnote 770. Muir v. Chandler, 113 N.W. 1038 (N.D. 1907). The mere fact that the prospective vendees had surveyed the land and extended time and effort to reduce real estate taxes, assumed possession of the land to repair structures and store materials, and grazed animals on the land was not sufficient to be taken out from under the contract to purchase under the Statute of Frauds. Brunette v. Vulcan Materials Co., 256 N.E.2d 44 (Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1970). Taking possession and making improvements was sufficient part performance. Magnus v. Matthews, 317 N.E.2d 306 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1974). Full payment of purchase price required to take parol contract for sale of land out of Statute of Frauds. Walker v. Walker, 448 S.W.2d 171 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969). Oral contract valid if consideration paid, possession taken, improvements made. Hooks v. Bridgewater, 229 S.W. 1114 (Tex. 1921). See Iowa Land Installment Contracts: Acceptance of Part Payment as Waiver, 55 Iowa L. Rev. 729 (1970).

(n85)Footnote 771. Pearson v. Gardner, 168 N.W. 485 (Mich. 1918); Levine v. Lafayette Bldg. Corp., 142 A. 441 (N.J. Ch. 1928) (the contract need only be signed by the party against whom specific performance is brought).

(n86)Footnote 772. Durham v. Taylor, 29 Ga. 166 (Ga. 1859) (not part performance); Baldridge v. Centgraf, 108 P. 83 (Kan. 1910) (not part performance). Part performance if fraud had induced a change in position. Peek v. Peek, 19 P. 227 (Cal. 1888); Green v. Green, 10 P. 156 (Kan. 1886); Petty v. Petty, 43 Ky. 215 (Ky. App. 1843). Contra, Bradley v. Loveday, 119 A. 147 (Conn. 1922); Riley v. Haworth, 64 N.E. 928 (Ind. App. 1902).

(n87)Footnote 773. Restatement of Contracts § 197. Similarly the sale of an easement requires making use of the easement.. Hay v. Knauth, 62 N.E. 395 (N.Y. 1901). Taking possession and making improvements was sufficient part performance. Magnus v. Matthews, 317 N.E.2d 306 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1974). Massachusetts will enforce, by specific performance, an oral contract for sale of property upon payment of the amount owing on the purchase price. Raynor v. Russell, 231 N.E.2d 563 (Mass. 1967). Parol gift of land become irrevocable when the donee took possession on the strength of the gift and improvements. Barfield v. Hilton, 219 S.E.2d 719 (Ga. 1975).

(n88)Footnote 774. Schmitz v. Schulenburg, 296 N.W. 103 (Wis. 1941).

(n89)Footnote 775. Christopher v. Garrett, 292 S.W.2d 926 (Tex. Civ. App. 1956). Mere possession of land for a long time takes contract out of statute of frauds. Brystranowski v. Blauman, 133 N.E.2d 428 (Ohio App. 1955). Parol gifts of realty upheld where donees had taken possession and made valuable improvements. Wilson v. Mitchell, 299 S.W.2d 406 (Tex. Civ. App. 1957).

(n90)Footnote 776. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 48 N.E.2d 837 (Ind. App. 1943) (mere continuance in possession is not referable to the contract). Taking of possession held insufficient to take oral real estate contract out of the Statute of Frauds. Delfino v. Paul Davies Chevrolet, Inc., 209 N.E.2d 194 (Ohio 1965). Continuance of possession held sufficient to take contract to buy out of the Statute of Frauds. Walter C. Pressing Co. v. Hogan, 133 N.E.2d 419 (Ohio App. 1954). Possession, improvements and rent took contract out of the Statute of Frauds. Boettcher v. Van Lill, 282 A.2d 122 (Md. 1971). Possession and improvements. Cloniger v. Cloniger, 193 S.E.2d 647 (S.C. 1973).

(n91)Footnote 777. Wright v. Raftree, 54 N.E. 998 (Ill. 1899) (all acts of part performance must be accompanied by payment of the purchase price); Jamison v. Dimock, 95 Pa. 52 (Pa. 1880). See Penney v. Norton, 81 S. 666 (Ala. 1919); Jutten v. Deeble, 295 P. 496 (Colo. 1931). Cf. Knoff v. Grace, 190 P. 526 (Colo. 1920). See A.A. Goldstone, Student Author, Statute of Frauds in Colorado, 4 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 29 (1932). Green v. Jones, 76 Maine 563 (Me. 1885); Stark v. Wilder, 36 Vt. 752 (Vt. 1864); Kinchloe v. Bounds, 86 S.E. 110 (Va. 1915); Frede v. Pflugradt, 55 N.W. 159 (Wis. 1893). Mere payment of consideration insufficient to avoid Statute of Frauds. Harris v. Potts, 476 S.W.2d 81 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971). Consideration, possession, and improvements were all needed to take contract out of Statute of Frauds. Hines v. Taylor, 476 S.W.2d 81 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971).

(n92)Footnote 778. Williams v. Carty, 91 N.E. 392 (Mass. 1910).

(n93)Footnote 779. Southern v. Southern, 438 P.2d 925 (Idaho 1968); Lydick v. Holland, 83 Mo. 703 (Mo. 1884); Cooper v. Colson, 58 A. 337 (N.J. 1904); Burns v. McCormick, 135 N.E. 273 (N.Y. 1922).

(n94)Footnote 780. Horner v. McConnell, 63 N.E. 472 (Ind. 1902); Derby v. Derby, 142 N.E. 786 (Mass. 1924).

(n95)Footnote 781. Willis v. Zorger, 101 N.E. 963 (Ill. 1913); Gladville v. McDole, 93 N.E. 86 (Ill. 1910); Jackson v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 57 N.E.2d 946 (Ind. App. 1944); Taylor v. Holyfield, 180 P. 208 (Kan. 1919); Best v. Gralapp, 96 N.W. 641 (Neb. 1903); Danenhauer v. Danenhauer, 148 A. 390 (N.J. Ch. 1930); Johnson v. Johnson, 154 A. 214 (R.I. 1931); Brinton v. Van Cott, 33 P. 218 (Utah Terr. 1893); Cannon v. Cannon, 163 S.E. 405 (Va. 1932); Velikanje v. Dickman, 168 P. 465 (Wash. 1917); Bryson v. McShane, 35 S.E. 848 (W. Va. 1900). See Statute of Frauds - Personal Services as Part Performance of an Oral Contract to Convey Land, 16 Iowa L. Rev. 448 (1931); J.W. Jones, Student Author, Performance of Services as Grounds For Taking an Oral Contract out of the Statute of Frauds, 19 Ky. L.J. 69 (1931).

(n96)Footnote 782. Moore v. Olson, 294 N.W. 305 (Iowa 1940). Acts of part performance must be made in relation to the contract to convey or lease. Moon v. Stone Mt. Meml. Assn., 157 S.E.2d 461 (Ga. 1967). Performance prior to contract is not part performance under Statute of Frauds. Coronet Dev. Co. v. F.S.W., Inc., 142 N.W.2d 499 (Mich. 1966).

(n97)Footnote 783. Placing deed irrevocably in hands of third party to deliver to grantee on grantor's death passed remainder to grantee immediately with life estate retained in grantor. Hilliard v. Hilliard, 39 N.W.2d 624 (Iowa 1949).

(n98)Footnote 784. Blezek v. Blezek, 284 N.W. 180 (Iowa 1939).

(n99)Footnote 785. Gracie Square Realty Corp. v. Choice Realty Corp., 113 N.E.2d 416 (N.Y. 1953); Gary L. Orenstein, Student Author, Enforcement of Oral Contract to Convey Easement, 5 Syracuse L. Rev. 106 (1954). Doctrine of part performance not applicable unless the acts are exclusively referable to the oral contract. Atkinson v. Triplett, 419 P.2d 4 (Or. 1966).

(n100)Footnote 786. Burns v. Garey, 125 A. 467 (Conn. 1924); Van Epps v. Redfield, 36 A. 1011 (Conn. 1897); Scheerer v. Scheerer, 229 S.W. 192 (Mo. 1921); Woolley v. Stewart, 118 N.E. 847 (N.Y. 1918).

(n101)Footnote 787. Brewood v. Cook, 207 F.2d 439 (D.C. Cir. 1953). Payment of all or part consideration, and taking of possession were part performance taking case out of statute of frauds. Cottages, Miami Beach v. Wegman, 57 S.2d 439 (Fla. 1952).

North Carolina still refuses to recognize the part performance doctrine as taking an oral contract to convey lands out of the statute of frauds. Grantham v. Grantham, 171 S.E.2d 331 (N.C. 1933), but will not allow a vendee in default to recover part payments made. Rochlin v. P.S. W. Constr. Co., 67 S.E.2d 464 (N.C. 1951). See Frank E. Kane, Student Author, Part Performance in Ohio, 12 Ohio S. L.J. 452 (1951).

(n102)Footnote 788. Santoro v. Mack, 145 A. 273 (Conn. 1929); Windiate v. Leland, 225 N.W. 620 (Mich. 1929); Townsend v. Fenton, 21 N.W. 726 (Minn. 1884); Garner v. Stubblefield, 5 Tex. 552 (Tex. 1851); Miller v. Lorentz, 19 S.E. 391 (W. Va. 1894).

(n103)Footnote 789. McCallister v. McCallister, 173 N.E. 745 (Ill. 1930).

(n104)Footnote 790. Long v. Duncan, 10 Kan. 294 (1872); Shahan v. Swan, 26 N.E. 222 (Ohio 1891); Barrett v. Schleich, 62 P. 792 (Or. 1900); Hayes v. Hayes, 174 P. 579 (Or. 1918); Nunn v. Fabian, L.R. 1 Ch. 35 (1865).

LexisNexis®

Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

CHAPTER 96 Vendors and Purchasers

11-96 Thompson on Real Property, Thomas Editions § 96.15

AUTHOR: David A. Thomas Professor of LawJ. Reuben Clark Law School Brigham Young University

§ 96.15 Termination of the Agreement.n791

[Go To Supp]

Substantial departure from general contract law concepts has occurred in the area of terminating land sales agreements and the rights of the parties related to those agreements. This variation is caused by differences among the jurisdictions as to the extent to which the contractually expressed rights of the parties should be varied by equitable ideas and by precepts of public policy. The courts are thus faced with a decision between two opposing theories of "have not" relief. Is it better to give a defaulting debtor protection against an aggressive vendor by preventing arbitrary forfeiture? Or should the person proposing to purchase be aided by making available a mode of purchase that will afford a small down payment and "easy monthly installments"? The former is the road of equity, n792 the latter assists the common-law philosophy of free alienation. n793 The latter particularly assists the small home buyer and is of vital importance in modern subdivisions. The alternative proposal is the underwriting of the vendee by government insured mortgages.

Where one party to a land contract defaults, the other has the following possible remedies:

(1) the contract may be avoided or annulled and the parties restored to their original position by true rescission through mutual agreement,

(2) the unilateral right of the other party to treat the default as an offer of rescission, n794

(3) strict foreclosure, quiet title, ejectment and similar actions which terminate the contract and the obligations of further performance, n795

(4) specific performance or actions for damages, n796 and

(5) forfeiture and liquidated damages. n797

Some state statutes permit rescission of vendor-purchaser contracts where breaches by the vendor are so material as to defeat the purchaser's object in making the contract. n798 Jurisdictions disagree as to whether upon default the vendee becomes a tenant at will of the vendor. n799

One method of terminating the vendee's interest is by an action to quiet title. Where the contract specifies a method for terminating the vendee's interest, such method must be followed. n800 The vendor may also have a quiet title judgment against the vendee. n801

Some states have found it advisable to give statutory dignity to the vendee's interest in a land sale contract by preventing absolute and arbitrary forfeiture and providing specific methods for terminating the vendee's rights on default. n802 Other cases treat this type of statute as merely giving an alternative relief to the vendor. Some jurisdictions have rather steadily marched from the early forfeiture concept protecting the vendor to a right of redemption even to a defaulting vendee. n803 And some courts give the vendee a period in which to redeem before affording legal relief to the vendor. n804 Courts' usual reluctance to recognize conditions precedent in contracts has not been rigorously applied in real estate contracts with conditions referring to obtaining financing by the vendee. n805 If the contract is subject to a condition subsequent, the occurrence of the condition terminates the contract. n806

§ 96.15(a) Rescission of the Contract.

§ 96.15(a)(1) Right of Rescission of the Contract.

A contract for sale of realty may be rescinded by agreement of the parties. n807 It may also be rescinded by one of the parties, if the other breaches a material term of the contract. Fraud and mistake are also recognized as grounds for rescission. The power of the court to rescind an executed conveyance is an extraordinary one which should never be lightly exercised. n808

Grounds for rescission of the contract must be substantial. n809 Where the parties to an agreement are ignorant of facts which, if known, would have caused a different contract, the remedy is rescission. n810 The remedy of rescission of a contract is not one of absolute right, but rests in the sound discretion of the court to be exercised in accordance with what is reasonable and just under the particular circumstances. n811 The courts will require more than a mere showing that the performance of the contract may prove advantageous to one party and detrimental to the other. n812 Among other things, the vendee has been held entitled to rescission for undue delay by the vendor in giving the vendee possession of land, n813 for failure of the vendor to level ground by date when possession should be delivered, n814 for the failure of the vendor to procure a first mortgage within the time specified in the contract, n815 for failure of ownership in the vendor, n816 for a repudiation of the contract by the vendor, n817 for inability of the vendor to convey the entire body of land contracted for, n818 and because of the condemnation of the lot for a public purpose before the date of final payment under a conditional sale contract. n819 Upon rescission because the vendor's title has failed, the purchaser ordinarily is not liable for use and occupation. n820

For rescission by the vendee to be appropriate, the vendor must be in default, n821 and the purchaser usually cannot rescind without making tender. n822 Rescission, when applied, must be as to the entire transaction. n823 It is good ground for rescission or cancellation that the instrument is voidable for any reason. n824 When there is a legal reason for rescission, the motive of the party demanding the relief is not subject to inquiry. n825 Mere breach of contract is not of itself alone ground for rescission of a deed. n826 Fraud, accident, and misrepresentation are well-known grounds for equitable intervention and cancellation of a written instrument. n827 Generally, courts of equity have jurisdiction to decree the cancellation of an instrument vitiated by fraud or misrepresentation in its procurement. n828 Thus, where the execution and delivery or acceptance of a written instrument has been induced by fraud, and the defrauded party wishes to rescind the agreement and be relieved from its provisions, the proper remedy is by way of rescission and cancellation. n829 The fact that at the time of contract the vendor was not able to convey good title does not invalidate the contract if the vendor was able to convey good title by the time for completion of the contract. n830

Rescission is an equitable remedy, to be invoked by a court of equity. In the absence of fraud, mistake, trust, cloud on title, multiplicity of suits, necessity for cancellation, or some other independent ground of equitable jurisdiction, a court of equity will not interfere to rescind a contract on the sole ground that the defendant has failed to perform his part of the contract or has broken its warranties or conditions; in such cases, the remedy at law is usually deemed adequate. n831 Reformation is the proper remedy where the instrument, by reason of mistake, fails to express the actual agreement of the parties, but when the minds of both parties have failed to meet upon the same matter, so that no agreement at all has been made, or in some instances where the agreement is different, with respect to its subject matter or terms, from that which was intended, rescission is the proper remedy. n832 So, in order for the court to grant relief by way of rescission, it must generally appear that the contract was procured through fraud, mistake, failure of title or defects in title; or, at least, it must be shown that to deny plaintiff equitable relief will cause an injury for which a court of law cannot adequately compensate the plaintiff. n833 Shortage of the acreage is not ground for rescission; the remedy in that case is an action to recover for the shortage. n834 If the vendor repudiates the contract, the purchaser is relieved from tendering further performance. n835 Any act to ratify the contract, after knowledge of the facts authorizing a rescission, amounts to an affirmance and terminates the right to rescind. n836 A trustee of a bankrupt vendor may disaffirm an executory contract for sale of realty. n837

The right to rescind may be lost by laches. The law requires the injured person to seek a remedy without unreasonable delay after discovering the facts justifying rescission. n838 A person cannot be deprived of his remedy in equity on the ground of laches unless it appears that he had, or ought to have had, knowledge of his rights. Upon discovery of the grounds justifying rescission, the plaintiff must act with reasonable promptness to avoid the imputation of acquiescence, n839 and must act under circumstances consistent with good faith. n840 The period within which the right of rescission must be exercised is to be determined by the facts peculiar to each case. n841 As regards the right of a purchaser to rescind a contract for fraud, the rule as to laches becomes operative only after the purchaser has knowledge of the fraud and then delays taking action. n842 Even a vendee with constructive notice of a title defect still has a right to rescind. n843

The right to sue for rescission may be waived n844 or lost by acts indicating acquiescence in matters justifying rescission. n845 The waiver must be manifested in some unequivocal manner clearly evincing an intention to surrender the right to rescind. n846 It is necessary to waiver that the party have knowledge, actual or constructive, of the right allegedly waived. n847 The right to rescind for fraud is waived where the party having such right, after knowledge of the fraud, accepts any benefit under the contract or does any other act implying intent to abide by or affirm the contract. n848 The right to rescind will be denied if, after discovering the fraud, the plaintiff continues to make payments and to use the property, n849 assigns the contract, n850 leases the property, n851 or accepts a conveyance. n852 An extension of time after default may produce a waiver, n853 as may a purchaser's retention of possession after cause for rescission is known, n854 a purchaser taking possession after the vendor's failure to furnish abstract required by the contract, n855 a purchaser entering into new contracts, n856 a purchaser condoning the fraud by agreements for restitution, n857 and a purchaser tendering performance after accrual of right to rescind. n858

Tender of deed by the vendor is waived where a notice of election of purchasers to rescind is given before the expiration of the time provided. n859 As one cannot acquiesce in the performance of an act of which one is ignorant, so one cannot be said to neglect the prosecution of a remedy when one has no knowledge that one's rights have been invaded, excepting, always, that one's want of knowledge must not be the result of one's own culpable negligence. n860 If the delay is unreasonable, and the adversary party has changed position so that the party cannot be restored to the pre-contract position, rescission will be denied. n861 The defense of laches should be pleaded. n862

"Restoration to status quo," as respects contracts for the sale and purchase of real estate, means the restoration of what was received by the transaction. n863 It is a condition precedent to rescission, n864 for rescission being an equitable remedy, the party seeking such relief must, as a prerequisite, offer to do equity. n865 A party who is in default on payments required to be made by a contract is not entitled to a rescission of the contract. n866 To obtain rescission of a contract for fraud, whether such relief is sought informally or by formal decree in equity, the adversary party must usually be placed in the pre-contract position by the party seeking relief. n867 Thus, the vendor of real estate seeking cancellation of a contract of sale must restore the cash payment if any has been made. n868 As a general rule, in order to dissolve a sale for nonpayment of the purchase price, the situation must be such as to put both parties in the same position as they were before the sale was made; n869 but where the contract contains a forfeiture clause and makes no reference to improvements on the land, the vendor is entitled to stand on the strict terms of the contract without being required to return or tender any part of the purchase money paid, if the purchaser can show a right to terminate the contract and declare a forfeiture. n870 The vendee in possession must restore the property to the vendor or offer to do so. n871 Such vendee cannot claim rescission if, because of the vendee's own conduct, status quo cannot be restored. n872 Also, a vendee of land who has taken possession under contract or conveyance must surrender possession and must reconvey, or at least be ready to do so, if the vendee has already received conveyance. n873

In cases in which whole or part performance has occurreed, rescission is usually the only remedy where the parties can be placed in status quo. n874 If, because of the acts of the adversary party, complete restoration is rendered impossible, a rescission will not be defeated thereby. n875 However, where rescission is sought on grounds other than fraud, a failure to restore the status quo will ordinarily defeat the remedy. n876 Where fraud is charged, restitution is held not necessary to suit for rescission. n877

In the case of mutual rescission, the payments made must be refunded unless otherwise provided in the contract. n878 The vendor risking rescission through suit must return or offer to return to the vendee the purchase money already paid, n879 where no rent or damages have accrued. n880 Where a note is given it should be returned; no recovery can be had on it after rescission, because the consideration has failed. n881

The vendee's assignee cannot have rescission against the vendor for alleged fraudulent misrepresentation to the vendee unless the cause of action was assigned with the contract. n882 If the rescinding purchaser is in possession, the purchaser should offer to restore possession to the vendor. n883

According to some decisions, rescission may be by parol. n884 However, where a contract subject to the statute of frauds is rescinded, the rescission must be in writing. n885

The vendee may rescind for deliberate false representations by the vendor, even if the vendee could have discovered the truth by investigation. n886 A rescission may occur without court action, by agreement of the parties, vendee deeding to the vendor and the vendor taking peaceful possession. n887

Rescission for failure of quantity may be based on innocent n888 as well as fraudulent n889 misrepresentation as long as the purchaser was induced to make the purchase on the strength of the misrepresentation. n890 Where there is a deficiency in quantity the vendee may have an action for rescission, n891 for damages if fraud was an element of the transaction, n892 abatement of purchase price, n893 reformation n894 or breach of seisin. n895 If the vendor breaches the contract the vendee is entitled to a return of the purchase price. n896 Upon a rescission without fault of either party the vendee is entitled to a return of the purchase price. n897 If both are in default neither can rescind without tender. n898 No performance by the vendee until the vendor tenders merchantable title. n899 The position has been taken that conveyance by the grantor to a third person prior to the law day is not anticipatory breach of the contract to convey. n900

The Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act n901 permit the purchaser to sue the vendor or void the contract if the contract has been tainted by an untrue statement of a material fact. n902

A buyer in possession who is rescinding for cause is entitled to the actual value of any improvements made to the property. n903

A wrongful declaration of forfeiture by the vendor entitles the vendee to rescind. n904 Purchasers who rescind upon the vendor's wrongful repudiation are liable to pay the fair rental value for the premises during the time they occupied the land. n905

When a purchaser rescinds, the parties must be restored to their original position, n906 but the courts have disagreed over whether a purchaser rescinding because of title defects may have an optional remedy of purchase price reduction. n907

§ 96.15(a)(2) Rescission by Mutual Agreement.

While a contract for the sale of real estate remains unexecuted, the parties thereto may mutually rescind it, if no rights of third parties intervene. n908 The parties may mutually rescind the contract, n909 but the proof of such rescission must be clear and convincing. n910 A land contract required to be in writing by the statute may not be rescinded by a subsequent oral agreement, n911 but some cases take a contrary view. n912 The rule of the Restatement of the Law is that: "A contract within the statute, whether or not made enforceable by satisfaction of its requirements, may be orally rescinded, unless the prior contract is enforceable and the contract to rescind involves the retransfer of some subject matter which is within the statute." n913 The rescission of a contract for the sale of land may be inferred from the purchaser's failure to take affirmative action to default the vendor within a reasonable time after the vendor's failure to comply with the demand of the purchaser, who has paid the amount due under the contract, to execute a deed as provided by the contract. n914 Rescission of the contract, to be effective, arises out of a mutual agreement or out of acts of the parties from which such agreement may be presumed, and rescission may be effected when there is a breach by one party to the contract and the other party treats such breach as an abandonment of the contract, thereby authorizing the breaching party to disaffirm the contract. n915

Such a rescission may be accomplished by parol. n916 The rule that a written agreement cannot be modified by an oral agreement unless the oral agreement is executed has no application in case of an oral abrogation of a written contract for the sale and purchase of real estate. n917 The mutual oral agreement to cancel a written contract is a sufficient consideration for its abandonment. n918

The minds of the parties must meet before there can be a rescission of a contract by agreement of the parties. n919 Such mutual rescission absolutely abrogates the contract and entitles each party to all benefits the other may have received. n920

The contract may be terminated by abandonment acquiesced in by both parties. n921 Where a contract is abandoned by one party thereto, the other party may treat the contract as at an end, thereby impliedly giving assent to a recission. n922 An agreement by the seller to resell for a purchaser at a higher price was held rescinded by a reconveyance to the seller at the original price without reservation. n923 The title of the purchaser who received a deed and gave a vendor's lien note as security for the purchase price, but who paid nothing for the property and made no improvements thereon, passed back to the vendor when the parties mutually agreed to a rescission of the sale. n924 The purchaser may be ousted by forcible entry and detainer upon failure to surrender the property on rescission. n925

§ 96.15(a)(3) Mistake as Ground for Rescission.

Contracts entered into through mistake bear in many respects a close similarity to those induced by fraud or misrepresentation. The reason contracts are avoided or reformed because of mistake is the same that underlies the avoidance of contracts for fraud: there is no real assent. In reality, it is not the mistake that avoids the agreement, but the want of assent to its terms. n926 In case of mistake, either mutual or unilateral, whereby the minds of the parties did not meet as to all the essential elements of the transaction, so that no real contract was made by them, equity may interpose to rescind and cancel the apparent contract as written. n927 Where there is an actual and honest misunderstanding, or if the language is equivocal, there is no contract because there is no meeting of the minds such as is necessary to perfect a contract. n928 In a sale in gross, equity may rescind for mutual mistake in amount but cannot alter the purchase price.

n929

The vendee is held to have a right of rescission on the ground of mistake as to the vendor's title, n930 price, n931 identity of the land, n932 boundaries, n933 quantity of land, n934 and the existence of water or springs on the land. n935 Discrepancy in acreage made through mistake, without fraud, and not gross, does not ordinarily authorize rescission. n936 Of course, there may be no rescission for discrepancy where the land is sold in gross and not by the acre, n937 unless the deficiency is so great as to warrant an inference of fraud. n938 A vendee may rescind the contract, where, through a mistake in pointing out the boundaries, mutually and honestly made by the parties, the vendee gets about half the quantity of land bargained for and less than half in value, although there was no fraud or intentional misrepresentation and the land was described as so many acres "more or less." n939

As with fraud or misrepresentation, in order to entitle a party to relief from a mistake, it must be material to the transaction and affect its substance, and not merely its incidents. n940 Mistake as to the identity of the subject matter is an error relative to the specific thing. Thus, in an action for the purchase price of land where it appeared that the contract was to buy a lot on one street and there were two streets with that name in the town and the purchaser meant a lot on one of them and the vendor a lot on the other, it was held that their minds did not agree on the subject matter of the sale and there was no contract whereby the purchaser could be bound. n941

As a general rule, a mistake of law, pure and simple, is not sufficient ground for rescission in equity, and it follows that a mistake of this nature, unmixed with matters of fact or any other reason for equitable relief, affords no ground for the rescission or reformation of the contract induced thereby. n942

If the purchaser has been induced to enter into a contract by an intentional misrepresentation, the purchaser may rescind even though the reliance may have been negligent. n943 If, by reason of fraud, accident, or mistake of law on the part of the drafter, the instrument does not fully express the intention of the parties, equity will afford relief. n944 It has been held that want of knowledge on the part of both parties with reference to the terms and conditions of a loan secured by a mortgage which the purchaser assumed and agreed to pay as a part of the purchase price of the property is not such mutual mistake of fact as warrants the rescission of the contract, although the terms of the loan were more onerous than the purchaser conceived them to be. n945 A mistake of law is, in strictness, an erroneous conclusion as to the legal effect of known facts. n946 On the other hand, many cases hold that a vendor or grantor who has parted with the estate or interest under a mistake of law as to the quantity, extent, or even the existence of such interest is entitled to equitable relief. n947 Also, a mutual mistake of law in respect to some fact determining the validity of the title the vendee was to receive has been held sufficient ground for relieving the vendee of the obligation under the contract. n948 Where a mistake of law is induced or accompanied by other special facts giving rise to an independent equity on behalf of the mistaken person, such as inequitable conduct of the other party and undue advantage thereby, equity will interpose its aid n949 Where ignorance of the law exists on one side, and that ignorance is known and taken advantage of by the other party, the mistaken party will be relieved, especially if the mistake was encouraged or induced by representations of the other party. n950 The cases that deny the remedy for mere mistake of law on one side are careful to add the qualification that there must be no improper conduct on the other. n951

The existence of an encumbrance does not justify rescission, but the vendee may require that the encumbrance be satisfied or security given therefor. n952 A buyer could not rely on a seller's affidavit that land was not held as community property. n953

Though recording is not necessary as against the grantor's heirs, it is necessary as against a purchaser from such heirs having no notice of the prior conveyance. n954 A few cases, however, have held that the protection afforded by the registration laws against unrecorded conveyances extends only to purchasers from the grantor himself, and not to purchasers from his heirs or devisees. n955 A purchaser is not estopped from seeking rescission of a contract because the purchaser remained in possession where the purchaser had promptly advised the vendor upon discovering that the vendor's representations concerning lot lines were not true. n956 The vendor selling the property to a third person after breach elects to rescind and so is required to return down payments on purchase price, unless the contract provides for forfeiture. n957 When a purchaser, upon learning that the vendor's title was defective, moved the house to another location and refused to pay the balance of contract, a court held that the purchaser was unable to restore the status quo and therefore could not recover purchase price. n958 A vendee in possession, rescinding for title defects, is entited to hold a lien against the land for the reasonable value of its enhancement by improvements made before vendee knew or should have known of existence of defects, n959 or for the amount of the vendee's expenditures. n960

A mistake that will authorize rescission must be such that the contract would not have been made had the truth been known to the parties. n961 In a Massachusetts case, a deed to husband and wife creating a tenancy by the entirety was reformed to effectuate their intention, as expressed to the scrivener, that the conveyance of the premises was to be such as to give each spouse equal rights under the deed, where in accepting the deed the parties were acting under a mutual mistake as to the legal effect of the language used by the scrivener. n962 Wherever a person is ignorant or mistaken with respect to legal rights or duties, and enters into a transaction, the legal scope and operation of which the person correctly apprehends and understands, equity will grant its relief, defensive or affirmative, treating the mistake as analogous to, if not identical with, mistake of fact. n963 Where the vendor is negligent in not ascertaining facts that could have been ascertained by diligence and that would have prevented the vendor from executing a deed, a court of equity will not provide relief. n964 A vendor's unilateral mistake as to price and terms of the contract is insufficient grounds for rescission. n965

§ 96.15(a)(4) Rescission Based on Fraud. n966

As a general and basic rule, where fraud has occurred in the inducement in a contract for the sale and purchase of land the contract is subject to rescission. It has always been the peculiar province of courts to grant relief against fraud. n967 Fraud, in some form or other, is the most usual ground for invoking the aid of equity to rescind a contract for the sale of real estate. n968 No contract is formed until one party has given an unqualified and unconditional assent to the offer of another; but the offer and acceptance may appear to be complete in every respect, and notwithstanding this the contract be voidable at the option of one of the parties. Chief among the ways by which apparent consent may be induced are fraud and misrepresentation. Fraud as to material matter will vitiate, or render voidable, any contract. n969 Where the vendor fraudulently misrepresents acreage, the vendee has the option of rescinding or paying a proportionately lesser price. n970 "The essential elements of a plea of fraud are (1) false representations, (2) materiality, (3) scienter, (4) intent to deceive, (5) reliance, (6) resulting injury in damage." n971 Fraud is never presumed but must be proved. n972 Nothing but what is plainly injurious to good faith can constitute such a fraud as will form the basis of a rescission. n973

Fraud is something more than mere bad faith; it means proceeding or acting dishonestly, intentionally, and deliberately with a wicked motive, to cheat or deceive one party to a transaction; the fraud results in damage or loss to one party and in the advantage or gain for the other party. n974 Fraud in the consideration will invalidate a contract of purchase. n975 Fraud justifying rescission does not ordinarily include inadequacy of price, improvidence, surprise, or mere hardship. n976

The contract is void for fraud in misrepresenting the contents of the contract to an unlettered purchaser. n977 Many cases hold in effect that if it appears that the vendor has no intention of making an improvement in the vicinity of the land sold, the vendor's representation of intent to make such improvement will constitute a fraud against a purchaser who, as a person of ordinary prudence, relies on the representation and because of the reliance suffers damage. n978

The purchaser is charged with the duty of ordinary caution in the examination of the property. n979 The purchaser has the burden of showing that the purchase was induced by fraud, n980 and this burden is to be sustained by clear and convincing evidence. n981 The fraud may be established by circumstantial evidence, n982 but not by misrepresentations made after the transaction. n983 The purchaser may waive the fraud by ratification with knowledge. n984 The defense of fraudulent inducement in a contract to convey can be waived if after full discovery the party takes steps to affirm the transaction. n985 The contract is rescinded as a whole. n986 The rescission for fraud destroys the contract ab initio and leaves the parties in the same situation as though no contract had been made. n987 The injured person may affirm the contract and sue for damages. n988 One induced to purchase land by fraudulent misrepresentations has an election to either bring an action for the fraud or for breach of the covenants of his deed. n989 The purchaser may elect to affirm the contract, retain the property received under it, and sue the vendor for damages in an action for deceit, and having chosen that course on discovery of the vendor's fraud, the purchaser need not continue performance but may properly withhold payments under the contract in an amount necessary to recoup the damages sustained. n990

The purchaser may either affirm the contract and sue for damages, or disaffirm it, and be reinstated in the position in the purchaser held before the contract was consummated. These remedies, however, are not concurrent, but wholly inconsistent. The adoption of one is the exclusion of the other. The purchaser who desires to rescind must act promptly, and return or offer to return what was received under the contract. The purchaser cannot retain the fruits of the contract awaiting future developments to determine whether it will be more profitable to affirm or disaffirm it. Any delay, especially his remaining in possession of the property received under the contract, and dealing with it as the purchaser's own, will be evidence of intention to abide by the contract. n991 It is a question for the jury to determine whether the purchaser has relied on the misrepresentation. n992

In addition to the remedies above mentioned, the purchaser may, upon discovery of the fraud, rescind the contract absolutely, and sue in an action at law, and recover the consideration given upon the fraudulent contract; and in such a case the purchaser must restore, or offer to restore, whatever was received by virtue of the contract. n993 A purchaser cannot, however, affirm that part of the contract which is advantageous and rescind that part which the purchaser considers disadvantageous. n994 Where a party to a contract is damaged by fraud and deceit, the party may rescind and recover damages or may affirm and recover for the resulting injury, but the remedies are inconsistent. n995 A party defrauded by misrepresentations in procuring a contract, which the party has elected to affirm, may still seek damages in tort for deceit. n996

A bill to rescind will lie where the purchaser has been deprived by false representations by the vendor, who at the time knew of their falsity, and the court has authority to retain jurisdiction of the cause to administer complete justice between the parties and decree a return of the purchase money paid. n997 The party seeking to rescind a contract for fraud or misrepresentation has the burden of establishing that the vendor had knowledge of the false representation. n998 In such a case the purchase money may be recovered although paid to an agent of the vendor who held the legal title to the property in trust for the vendor and with whom the contract was made. n999 The vendee's right of action for fraud cannot be assigned him and does not pass by conveyance to a third person. n1000

The measure of damages for a sale procured by the vendor's fraudulent representations is the difference between the actual value of the property at the time of the purchase and its value if the property had been what it was represented to be. n1001 The vendee may lose the right to sue for the fraud by ratification with full knowledge of the true conditions. n1002 However, a number of courts have adopted the rule that the defrauded party is not entitled to the benefit of the bargain, but only to the amount of "out of pocket" loss, which is the difference between the real value of the property and the amount paid therefor. n1003 Courts of equity have a tendency to permit the grantee to be divested of title by a cancellation of the deed. n1004 So far as the grantor is concerned, it is the well established rule that as between a fraudulent vendor and purchaser the contract is valid. n1005 Some courts invoke the support of equity to save an oral contract of sale and to prevent fraud. n1006

Where the purchaser of realty was induced to purchase it by fraudulent representation and desires a decree rescinding the contract and ordering the cancellation of the instrument of conveyance and return to him of notes or other obligations of debt, the remedy is in equity. n1007

Delay will not bar relief where the complainant has been ignorant of the fraud as to which relief is asked, as the duty to institute suit arises only upon the discovery of the fraud, and a delay of several months in filing the bill after the discovery of the fraud has been held not to bar relief, where the complainant immediately notified the defendant of the intent to sue, and no adverse party is prejudiced by the lapse of time between the discovery of the fraud and the institution of suit. n1008 Where the purchaser promptly notified the vendor upon discovering that the vendor's representations concerning the lot lines were not true, the purchaser was held not estopped from seeking rescission of the contract because the purchaser remained in possession. n1009

The federal Truth in Lending Act is applicable to real estate transactions. n1010 The Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act applies only to unimproved land. n1011 The purchaser must use reasonable care to inspect the premises, even if relying on the seller's misrepresentations. n1012 Where the vendee has offered to rescind and the offer is rejected, the vendee may either abandon the premises or may continue in possession as caretaker for the vendor. n1013

§ 96.15(a)(4)(i) Nondisclosure as Fraud. n1014

Problems of rescission on grounds of fraud turn on the interlacing of three doctrines, actual misrepresentation, improper concealment of knowledge of facts and caveat emptor. If the vendor has knowledge of facts concerning the property which affect it adversely, to what extent is the under a duty to disclose these to the vendee so that nondisclosure constitutes fraud, and how far may the vendor rely on caveat emptor in remaining silent? A purchaser is under no duty to reveal to the vendor a motive in seeking to acquire the property, n1015 but a buyer knowing of oil leasing negotiations has duty to tell seller upon inquiry. n1016

The general theme followed by the courts is that nondisclosure is not an actionable wrong unless there was a duty to speak. n1017 The earlier rule, at least, distinguished mere silence and concealment, n1018 but the vendor may not do anything to conceal or deliberately hide a material fact or defect or to lead the vendee to believe that a certain fact exists, and so to affirm it. n1019 Some cases, however, impose a duty on the vendor to speak where it would be "unconscionable conduct" for the vendor to remain silent. n1020 Other cases do not consider silence even as to concealed conditions as fraud. n1021

One line of authority requires the vendor to speak where the vendor is in possession of knowledge of adverse conditions of which the vendee could not learn even by reasonable investigation. n1022 Failure to disclose defects in amount of the property conveyed has been treated as fraud. n1023 Failure to disclose an unlawful use of the property by the vendor has also been considered fraud. n1024

The vendee on the other hand is not required to disclose any knowledge of facts that cause the vendee to desire to purchase the property. n1025 Even here, however, a minority rule has sometimes found a fiduciary duty on the vendee to disclose, n1026 and it has been said that if the vendee does undertake to disclose the vendee must tell all. n1027 The normal relationship of vendor and purchaser does not invoke a fiduciary concept, n1028 although sometimes the "arms length" doctrine has been invoked to create a fiduciary relationship requiring disclosure. n1029 Where, however, a fiduciary relationship exists apart from the mere vendor-vendee situation, full disclosure is indicated. n1030

§ 96.15(a)(4)(ii) The Doctrine of Caveat Emptor.

The common law wholly denied the doctrine of implied covenants of warranty of fitness to sales of realty. n1031 The doctrine of caveat emptor has been applicable in sales. So generally one who buys property upon which the seller is to construct a house receives no implied warranty of fitness of the property. n1032 One exception to caveat emptor requires the vendor to disclose situations where the vendor has special knowledge not available to the purchaser and the vendor is aware that those facts would be important to the purchaser. n1033

The effect of the doctrine of caveat emptor is that at common law there is no warranty of condition or fitness as respects realty. n1034 This is similar to the lease. Not even a statement of purpose in the contract is a condition under the caveat

